

*He bears the scars of storm
Who stands alone*

THE
Saints Herald

This electronic publication has been made with the express approval of the original copyright holder

VOLUME 95

JANUARY 3, 1948

NUMBER 1

www.LatterDayTruth.org

For This New Year

Dear Lord,
 I do not ask to see into the mist
 And mystery of this new year—
 To see the joys or sorrows that Await me there—
 I only ask that through each
 Golden day I know thy hand
 Is leading me;
 And through each silver night
 I feel thy presence near.

And Lord,
 I do not ask a special blessing
 On my life, except this one—
 That, through the living, I may know
 Some work for thee is done.

—Frances Hartman

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

Spotlight on the News	3
Travelog	4
Signs of the Times	4

ARTICLES:

Doing Something About It, by J. A. Koebler	5
Footprints In the Snow, by Kathryn C. Metz	9
The Unfolding Truth of the Sealed Word, by Bessie Taylor	10
What L. D. S. Believe About the Nature of Man, by Evan A. Fry	12
Letters	9, 15
Worship Suggestions for February, by Emily Easter Dunsdon	16
At Home (a poem), by Louise	18
Onward—Steadfastly, by Pauline Arnsen	18
A Reading Program, by Louise Fordham	19
His Gift to Us, by Betty Lou Clark	20
The Timid Soul, by Sadi Moon	21
Briefs	11, 22
Bulletin Board	22

AUDITORIUM NEWS

Rich Hill, Missouri.—Apostle Arthur A. Oakman reports a very successful series of meetings conducted by Arthur Rock at Rich Hill, in which three persons were baptized, and about twelve more have shown sustained interest. Brother Rock is doing excellent work, and has a promising future in this work.

Baptisms.—For the month of November, baptisms total 203. This makes 3,190 for the eleven months of 1947. The year's record has already exceeded those of thirteen of the last twenty years. This is the best total since 1939. By another comparison, it is the third best total in the last fifteen years.

Apostle W. Wallace Smith reports: "I have now had an opportunity to contact virtually all the branches in the districts which Brother Hield and I cover. There seems to me to be a revival of the spirit of fellowship and good will among the members of the branches. I think this is due to the opportunity that we have had to have one of our full-time missionaries contact these people and give them a new hope that the general church does feel an interest in them. . . . At Chico (California) Russell F. Ralston recently held a series in which four decisions were gained, three baptized, one family united in the church. . . . Before the end of the conference period, we hope to have every branch have a series of meetings, with cottage meetings and priesthood classes, etc.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer reports: "There has been a definite increase in baptisms in several districts in the Michigan and Northern Indiana districts during the year. We have also been stressing the program of strengthening the branches. I attended seven conferences in my field during the months of October and November, and with one exception the attendance and interest were the best I have seen on any schedule; I marveled at the unity and good fellowship revealed in all these gatherings."

Religious Education.—St. Joseph, Missouri, will hold a Zion's League Yuletide Conference under the direction of District President Emery Jennings, having for its theme, "Plan for Marriage." F. M. McDowell will speak on "What Our Church Believes About Marriage."

Changes in dates should be noticed in the announcement of the schedule for Dr. McDowell's addresses in Central Missouri Stake: the date of January 6 for Warrensburg has been changed to January 7; the date of January 16 for Buckner has been changed to January 15.

In October the Central Missouri Stake made a special effort to promote the organization of classes for leadership training. The Department of Religious Education is now receiving, and has been receiving during the recent past, information about a number of these classes, through the Stake Director of Religious Education and Examiner, Clifford J. Long. Some of his reports are beginning to show completed work by some of the groups thus studying. The largest classes organized have been at Atherton, Missouri, with thirty-five members in the largest class.

Spotlight on the News

FRIENDSHIP TRAINS AND THE GOOD SAMARITAN

IN THE MIDST of radio and press reports of confusion and violence in many parts of the world, there were some happy notes as the year 1947 drew to its close. Friendship trains, one growing to several, rolled across the United States, west coast to east coast, collecting foods for the starving nations of Europe. The Marshall Plan has an international political as well as a benevolent aspect. But this friendship train business was not government made and handed down. The enterprise originated in the minds of citizens and immediately secured generous and nation-wide support.

It is not too much to believe that the roots of such a unique offering go back to the teachings of the Man of Nazareth. The parables of Jesus, terse, alive with meaning to peoples of every race, have influenced millions of people. Not the least thought upon has been the parable about "a certain Samaritan"—we give him the title of "The Good Samaritan." While others passed by indifferently, this man came to the aid of the wounded man by the wayside, bound up his hurts, took him to an inn, nursed him with his own hands, and provided food and shelter until the unfortunate one could again stand on his own feet.

THERE IS NEED yet for individual deeds of mercy, but this is an age of organization. There are many organizations doing the work of Good Samaritans: churches, the Red Cross, the Salvation Army, hospitals, nurses, physicians, surgeons, road patrols, ambulance drivers—all these and others using modern equipment and methods.

The Good Samaritan did not have much with which to work: oil and wine for medicine, no sulfa or penicillin, no plasma, no anesthetics—a donkey for an ambulance, a primitive inn in lieu of a hospital. But what he had, he used. He blazed the way. Christ used him to blaze the way. It is the Christian nations who have heeded the parable and developed all these organizations of ministry—neither pagans nor heathen nor atheists pioneered in this modern task of human service.

Today the Good Samaritan does not ride a donkey; he rides an ambulance, a freight car, a steamship, an airplane. Drew Pierson went to France to observe and report on the arrival in Europe of the cargoes of food stuffs. It is interesting to those who live in Jackson County, Missouri, home of the President of the United States and the center place of the gathering of our people, to note that he commented on the fact that Jackson County contributed fourteen carloads of food to the friendship train that came our way, and that, according to his report, each bag of flour carried this message:

From Jackson County, Missouri, in the heart of America, this bag of flour comes to you with greetings and best wishes, whatever your race or nationality. May this flour be received in the same spirit in which it is sent—the brotherhood of all mankind. As that great Teacher of world brotherhood, Jesus of Nazareth, commanded, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye unto them."

AMERICAN BORN NEGRO REPRESENTS UNITED NATIONS IN PALESTINE

ANOTHER NEWS ITEM provocative of thought came at the end of 1947. It announced the selection of a Detroit born American Negro to head the United Nations secretariat staff in Palestine. His job is to supervise the carrying out of the policies of the five-nation committee representing the United Nations in the on-the-spot problem of dividing Palestine between Jew and Arab—a Solomonlike decision to cut asunder the child—or was it the wisdom of a Solomon? What armed forces, if any, will the commission have to back up the decision?

Many Arabs claim descent from Abraham through Ishmael and the "bond woman"—with a liberal admixture of Egyptian blood (Genesis 21). Paul quoted the edict, "the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman" (Galatians 4: 30). The Jews are children of Abraham through the "freewoman," Sarah. But now Ishmael and Judah both claim Palestine as their ancestral home and are locked in bloody conflict.

MANY MEN of many races and diverse colors and languages have lived in Palestine, or sojourned there for a time: prophets and priests, apostles of Jesus or Mohammed, a queen from Ethiopia, kings from Imperial Rome and modern Germany, conquerors, slaves, adventurers, devout pilgrims, curious tourists, a carpenter from Nazareth who turned preacher and, without stenographer, press, telephone, or radio made the whole world hear his sermons.

This strange land has had the good or bad fortune to figure in the news for ages past, since the twelve tribes of Israel led by priests carrying the ark of the covenant of the Lord passed over Jordan dryshod. Where there has been one to report the news and another to listen, the Holy Land has been in the news, even when news traveled by camel caravan or on Bedouin horses and was spoken from man to man. Just local news, perhaps, as when rumor first went out concerning this strange people of twelve tribes, believing in one God, who had crossed the Jordan and claimed the land by divinely attested covenant with heaven. Now the news travels by radio—and the world listens.

(Continued on page 14.)

blue pencil notes

Travelog

The last items in my travels, found in the November 22 Herald rather left me suspended at Washington, D. C.

According to plans and to meet the requirements of my assignments, I left Washington National Airport (Alexandria, Virginia) on Friday evening, October 31, for the West. If schedules had been maintained, I would have arrived at Portland in time to address the priesthood at the Portland conference at 11 o'clock on Saturday, November 1. Due to operation difficulties, I did not reach Portland until afternoon—more than eight hours late and minus much-needed sleep. However, I was quickly domiciled at the home of Brother and Sister W. Wallace Smith, and after a brief relaxation went to the Odd Fellows Hall, Eightieth and Gilsan, where the Saints had gathered to partake of a fine dinner prepared (as usual) by the good women of the church.

Here I met Brother J. L. Verhei, district president, Brother Davey of the Quorum of Twelve, Bishop Monte Lasater, and several hundred of the members of the district (formerly Portland, now called the Oregon District).

Sunday, November 2, was an extremely busy day, with general prayer and church school services, preaching at 11 by myself; a basket lunch at noon; business meeting at 2 p. m.; ordination service at 6 (when seventeen were ordained); and preaching at 8 by Brother Davey. Brother Verhei was unanimously sustained as president of the district. On Monday, Brother and Sister Verhei took us on a journey up the Columbia River to Bonneville Dam.

When I had first known I would have a few days between the Portland conference and assignments in California, I asked Brother Davey to make plans for a visit to Vancouver and Seattle which he did. So, after accompanying Brother and Sister Wallace Smith to Myrtle Point, Oregon, where we stayed at the Jasper Giberson home (both of us preached to the Saints there on Thursday), we returned to Portland on November 7 and I left by train for Vancouver on the next day. Arriving late that night, I was met by Elder Samuel Clark, district president, and his son, and was soon at the Clark home, where I was hospitably cared for during my stay (incidentally, it rained continuously, which I did not mind—I like the rain).

Sunday brought a notable experience. First, I spoke at 11 a. m. at New Westminster, where Brother George E. Miller is pastor. In the afternoon, I addressed the priesthood at Vancouver and occupied the evening hour there. Brother Calvin C. Taylor is pastor. It was a pleasant experience, meeting a few old friends at each place and making many new ones.

Here, the district authorities gave me a treat; on Monday forenoon I left Vancouver and the friendly Saints via the steamer, "Princess Cathleen." I spent an hour in the interesting city of Victoria, and docked at Seattle at 9:30 p. m. where I was met by Pastor Paul Wellington who took me to his home, Sister Wellington in charge.

The next day, in company of Brother R. E. Davey, Brother Wellington, and Bishop Lasater, I looked over the city, and in the evening, I was greeted by an overflow congregation at the Seattle church.

Leaving Seattle Tuesday noon, I arrived in Portland in the evening, and was met at the train by Brother Wallace. That night I spoke at the First Church, of which Elder E. A. Larson is pastor.

Beginning with this meeting, Brother W. Wallace Smith was in association with me during the remainder of my stay on the Pacific coast—an experience to be remembered.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Signs of the Times

Bishop Hans Lilje, Evangelical, in Germany, dealing with the "Modern Man" in a recent article, holds there is a crisis in his affairs. He says, "We live as it were in a spiritual fog. The army marches but it does not know the road. It is—to borrow an example from a great thinker of our time—like a troop marching over a bridge. The fog has enveloped the bridge, and the men cannot see the other side; nevertheless they march on. That typifies the modern attitude of mind. The army marches in any case, lest the uncertainty grow and perhaps even give way to shuddering fear. But it does not outmarch the question behind which sheer panic lies in wait and which therefore must not be asked: Whither are we going?"

Modern man is "soul sick":
"Slowly the dark, formless shadow of nihilism is spreading over the landscape of modern man. But the paralysis of life reaches to deeper levels. Gone is the readiness to live. All Nietzsche's dithyrambs about the joy of living sound in our ears like a cry of ardent longing for something that had already disappeared from Nietzsche's own world. Gone is the readiness to live, the resiliency to life, the awareness of the breadth and richness of the world and the consciousness that it is beautiful and full of adventure."

And he asks, "Can a renewal of life be found at the fountain of faith?" Passivity and resignation born of the terrors of war, have become "all pervading by reason of fatalism and nihilistic thinking."

Christians are pretty late in teaching "all things" whatsoever Jesus commanded. (Matthew 28: 28).

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Subscription Price of The Courier, British Mission Paper

To our many friends in America:

Greetings: We appreciate very much the kindly assistance which our friends in America have given The Courier throughout the years. However, present costs of production will not permit its continuance at the former price of $1.00 to our friends there. Subscription may be entered or renewed at the price of $1.25.

We will appreciate adding many new names to our list, and if those in arrears will also remit, it will be appreciated. With the assistance of the new mission force in Europe, the continued co-operation of the people of the British Mission, and the blessing of our Heavenly Father, we promise you a worth-while production for the coming year.

Thanking you in advance for your support, In Gospel Bonds,

M. A. MCCONLEY

Volume 95

January 3, 1948

Number 1

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.
The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.
Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

Doing Something About It

By Bishop J. A. Koehler

DURING THE DEPRESSION that followed in the wake of the first World War, I heard a mass of men prattling about the bad state of economic affairs. The foremost agitator was saying: "And if the government doesn't do something about it, we will."

When things became less feverish, I said to the bellwether, "Do you mind if I ask a question?" He said, "No, shoot." "My question," I said, "is this: What will you do about it?" His retort was, "Oh, we'll do something about it."

"That may be true," I said. "But what I wish to know specifically is, What is that something? How does it bear upon the nation's economic problem? What can you accomplish through the doing of your something? Where will we be when you get through doing your something?" And as is usually true of those who say, "Oh, we'll do something about it," to that question he did not know the answer.

HISTORIC SOMETHING

In the days of Samuel the prophet, some things were going none too well in Israel. So the people said, "We'll do something about it." And they did. Because their judges were mercenary and recreant, they demanded a king. Israel faced a problem of personality. She did something about it. Instead of exchanging bad men for good, she exchanged good government for bad. She really did do something—a bad something, even a wrong something.

Ever since the history of civilization began to be written, people have been doing "something" about government—which is the business of peoples. A mere mention of that fact is adequate for present purposes. Even in neglecting that business, even in saying, "We won't," even in resigning that business to kings and others, people did "something" about it.

Especially since about the beginning of the seventeenth century, people have been saying, "We'll do something about it." Almost all the peoples of Europe said that. And they did. They really did do something about it.

WITHIN YOUR LIFETIME there has been another surge of doing something about it. Russia did something. France did something. Italy and Germany and Spain and India and Ireland and China and Japan and England and the South American peoples—almost every people has done something about it. Even this nation, this United States of America—particularly during the last two decades—has been doing something about it.

That historic something is the theme of one of Daniel's prophecies; chapter two. "Gold" somethings. "Iron and miry clay" somethings. Almost every imaginable kind of something has been done about it.

Some specific historic somethings have done some temporary good. Some have done some permanent good. They have convinced man that he has capacity to do something about it; and they have made him resolute in his purpose to do something.

But some of the good accomplished through the doing of the historic something—the social-world something, that is—is less permanent than we once thought. Democracy has lost ground. Other turns of events within the last few decades have raised questions about the historic something.

"My people," [as God called them, Exodus 3: 7] more than any other, have occasion to ask, "Specifically, what are the historic somethings people have done? What good may be accomplished through such something-doing? What lessons do they have to teach 'my people'? Are they the somethings that must be done to achieve the Kingdom? to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion?"

Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21, says, by implication, that it is imperative that "my people" should contemplate that something-doing and ask many questions about it. Otherwise, even "my people" may do only something about it.

WE ARE NOT CONCERNED here with the physical-world something-doing of "Science, Invention, and Company," except to remind "my people" that it is impossible to make it a substitute for ethical-world something-doing. For while, in the very nature of things, physical-world somethings and moral-world somethings are complementary, neither can be made to take the place of the other.

Physical-world evil something-doing may bear its fruit immediately. But the historic social-world something did not do that. So, because sentence was not executed speedily, the heart of man—both the collective and the individual man—has been fully set within him to keep on doing evil social-world somethings. It still is, and the outcome is "the calamity." Sentence against evil social-world somethings is being executed with deadly certainty.

"THE" SOMETHING OF "MY PEOPLE"

Since the call of Abram, "My people" have said, "We will do the thing." "We will lay the axe to the root of every evil historic something." "We will promote 'righteousness' and implement 'truth.'" "We will order the government with judgment and establish it with justice" (Isaiah 9: 6, 7). "We will not do a mere 'something' about it; we will do the thing."

But, as the genius of true religion said, no people can do the thing—no people can establish "the Kingdom upon the promised land"—except it is born of "the spirit." Nor can it enter that Kingdom except as it knows "the truth." And those who call themselves "my people" are the best witnesses to that truth. Manifestly, it is because "my people" were not "born of the spirit" that they did not do the thing. They only did "something" (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 1).

Ancient Israel had more to learn than the "new commandment." They had to learn to consider. For zealous something-doing that is "not according to knowledge" may be very disastrous. But "my people doth not consider," said the Prophet Isaiah. So, for lack of caution and of knowledge of the truth, as well as want of the spirit, "my people" were destroyed.

So, as "God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began," modern Israel—another "my people"—said, "We will do something about it." "We will bring forth and establish the cause of Zion."

AND "MY PEOPLE" DID SOMETHING ABOUT IT

In the nineteenth century, Latter Day Saints did something about it at Kirtland, something at Far West, something at Nauvoo, something at Independence.

In the twentieth century, "my people" did something at Lamoni, something at Stewartsville, something at Holden, something at Atherton, something at Independence, too. We even did something about it in the Ozarks—merely something.

In 1909, the Church said that "the conditions surrounding the work . . . require that the bishop be authorized to take such measures as will bring to pass the organization of those who are desirous and willing" to use "the things of this world in the manner designed of God." And we had another surge of doing "something" about it—merely something.

We did something in the form of a coal mine; something in the form of a storehouse; something in the form of a planing mill—we did quite a variety of somethings.

In some instances—as when we organized our "Order of Enoch" in Independence and our Consumer's Co-operative at Atherton—we did our somethings with a free hand; we were not restrained, interdicted, nor hindered by a will that was not our own. In some instances of doing something, there was no contravention; there was not even lukewarmness.

Before you kneel to pray to God and ask Him for some special favor . . .

In other instances, we seem not to have been free from hindrances. At Far West, the seed planted seems to have been smothered by other plants which had been seeded throughout many generations—plants which had rooted themselves deeply. In another instance the plant is said to have been "nipped in the bud." We are not able to judge of those somethings as we are of the somethings in the doing of which we had a free hand.

A SOMETHING-DOING LULL

You may not be able to name all the factors, but for some cause or combination of causes, we came to be less zealous to "do something about it"—that is, the kinds of somethings just mentioned. We said, "We'll do another something, a missionary something"—a something that had to do with quantity, not quality, a something which we had done before. We thought more of church-building and less of what we had supposed was Zion-redeeming. So we did do something about it. Even during the lull, we did something.

SOMETHING-DOING MOTIVES

Motives that operate in "the world" operate also in "the church": fear motives, hope motives, love motives.

The times are ominous. Men of the Church in particular have a feel that "All these [wars] are [only] the beginning of sorrows"—Matthew 24: 8. So, having learned one lesson, we, the Church, set up reserves; we "make hay while the sun shines"; we provide against "a rainy day." That is a something we should do.

But no "people" has ever been able to save itself through doing only that something. There are other somethings, much more momentous, that must be done by "peoples" to escape the "judgments" which are upon the land: "the calamity which should come [which is coming] upon the inhabitants of the earth" (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3). "Uncle Sam," with his hoard of gold, his natural resources, and his economic power, should know that by now. And so should "my people." My people, better than any other, should know that the thing to do is "to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion" (Doctrine and Covenants 6: 3; 10: 2; 11: 3; 12: 3, and ever so many more).

We ought to fear "God." We ought to fear the consequences to the soul of not keeping his commandments. For, if we only "pay tithes of mint" and make "prose-lytes," if we "neglect the weightier matters of the law," nothing can come of it in the end but woe. "Woe unto them," said Jesus, who do only such somethings.

Hope of reward is a motive to something-doing in the Church as surely as in the world. "Loaves and fishes," especially in times of scarcity and insecurity, are inducements to "do something about it."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

No one is to be blamed for hoping to participate in the prosperity of Zion, for that is one of the promised blessings, the natural consequences, of Zion-redeeming (Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5). What we Latter Day Saints may be blamed for is doing only something about it—something that may be done until “Gabriel blows his horn” with no valid grounds of hope of ever getting the thing done.

The third motive is love: love of righteousness and hatred of iniquity. (In this relation, Isaiah 1: 11-13 is highly significant). First righteousness, said Jesus; second, goodness (Matthew 6: 31-34).

“Would that my tongue could utter the thoughts that arise in me” when I observe how unaware men of the Church, who say, “We’ll do something about it,” seem to be of this truth.

My dear fellow Latter Day Saints, crop rotation as such is not “righteousness,” it is only goodness. Soil conservation as such is not “righteousness,” it is only goodness. Many, many things we say “we’ll do about it” are not “righteousness”; some of them are not even goodness.

And what is more, all that “goodness,” if it does not arise from an impulsion to “Kingdom-building” righteousness, in the end comes to nought, as is demonstrated by the fortunes and the state of affairs of the nation that has more of that goodness than a dozen other nations all put together. Goodness may be made the effectual means to the ends of “my people” only through righteousness.

My fellow church men, that physical-world goodness alone is only something; it is not the thing that is of first importance to us. “The Cause!” The “righteousness” of human relations! That is the thing that ought first to engross us. It is our calling, it is our election, it is our duty under God to seek first the righteousness of his “Kingdom.” If we will do that, we shall prosper and the rest. If we will not, we shall not. The goodness of “my people,” as of any people, may be made efficacious, it may be made to promote the welfare of the soul, only through righteousness.

THE TRUE CHURCH

We have argued almost vehemently, about the true Church “in succession.” But we have said little about that which is decisive, because we’ve had little to say. The decisive question is this: “If ye continue in my word then are ye my disciples indeed”; then are ye “my church.” The people that will “bring forth and establish the cause of Zion” will settle that question decisively. And it will not be settled until Zion is redeemed, for the true church in this age is the Zion-redeeming church.

Look around to see whether He has already given you power to get it for yourself.

IF THE CHURCH WON'T

In 1832 (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1), the prophet said, “The time has come.” Now is the time to do something about it. And we did do something—merely something.

In 1948, the people are saying, “the time has come. Something must be done about it.” And the momentous question is: What is that something? What does it have to do with Zion-redeeming? Is it something that in the end will amount to nothing?

More times than you have fingers to count, I have heard Latter Day Saints say, “And if the Church won’t, we will. We’ll do something about it.” And they did do something—merely something.

They gathered. But not to Zion. They bought suburban land; they plotted it; they re-sold it to Latter Day Saints. But they allotted no inheritances. They bought farm land and they either resold it to a Latter Day Saint or—if they did not farm it themselves—they leased it. But they did nothing to redeem the land—that is to say, to bring it back into right relations to peoples and persons. They established this business and that. But not one stewardship did they appoint. (See Doctrine and Covenants 101.) They did something about it—merely something.

ZEAL ACCORDING TO KNOWLEDGE

In 1930, we said, “This year we go forward to Zion. This year we do something about it.”

I said to the pastor of the Stone Church: “John, one of these days people will use their heads as well as their hearts. Young men in particular are going to ask: ‘John, where do we go from here?’ What will your answer be, John?” He said, “Gus, I don’t know. I don’t know where to go from here.” In 1930, we had “a zeal toward God, but not according to [Zion-redeeming] knowledge.”

I “champ at the bit” as others do. I would like to do something about it. I believe it is good to be unsatisfied with things as they are. (I do not say it is good to be malcontented, rebellious against authority and the like.) For we do not go places and do things when we are satisfied. You do not hear people who are satisfied with the present state of church affairs say: “And if the Church won’t, we will. We’ll do something about it.” Do you?

I would crush the spirit of no one. I would not dampen his ardor. For “the zeal of the Lord of Hosts” is not to be “laughed out of court.” But for that zeal there would be no hope of Zion’s redemption. A people must be hot to do that “marvelous work and a wonder.”

I do not question motives, intentions. All I do is question the knowledge and the wisdom of some who say, “We’ll do something about it.” For I am sure that they will hurt themselves if they do their some-things. I only ask, “Do you know what you are about? Have you counted the cost?" and other pertinent questions.

Sometimes I say, "I won't." But when I do, I say it with as much regard for the will of God, as when I say, "I will." And that is true, I believe, of the members of the official family generally.

We are humans, not gods. We make mistakes of judgment, especially in times of emotional rampancy. Let us have a care, therefore; let us use our heads; let us try to make sure that when we say, "We'll do something," our zeal is according to knowledge.

GOOD SOMETHINGS. BAD SOMETHINGS

I was hungry, I said, "I will do something about it." I did. I put some cold milk in a kettle; I added a handful of salt; I poured in some oysters, and I put the whole mess on a stove to cook. I really did something, a bad something, about it.

A mother had a child that was ill. That mother said, "I'll do something about it." She did. She gave it a big dose of camphorated oil. It died. That mother really did something about it; a very, very bad something.

You and I, if we try our hands at many things, are continually doing bad things. Now and then, of course, we also do some good things.

RIGHT SOMETHINGS. WRONG SOMETHINGS

A mother has a child. It has a right to all the care that is requisite to nurture it to manhood. Should that mother say: "A war is on. We need ammunition. I will help to make it"? Should that mother say, "I will do anything whatsoever"? If it is at the risk of the well-being of her child, she elects to do a wrong something. The right "something" that anyone may do is to attend to his "knitting." Mothering is the knitting of a mother. When she says, "I will do that," she says the right something.

The church is a kind of mother. It has conceived—it has conceived the idea of bringing forth and establishing the cause of Zion. Zion is that mother's child. Does not the rule of right and wrong that applies to mothers universally apply also to the mother church? Is it right, or is it wrong, for the mother church to involve herself in so many affairs, somethings, that she has neither time nor strength to nurture her child to manhood? We are the Church. Let us think about that.

FORBIDDEN SOMETHINGS

Wrong somethings are forbidden. So also are bad somethings. (See Doctrine and Covenants 102: 1-3 in particular.) Let us remember that God cannot be commanded. But He can be asked.

--Alfred P. Haake.

not to set our hands to redeem Zion "in mine own way" is both wrong and bad; it is forbidden.

I blame no one for being impatient of procrastination. Procrastination is forbidden. But so also is incaution. I shudder when I hear men of the church say, "Oh, we'll make mistakes all right." For we have already made too many mistakes for lack of caution. Such mistakes are not pardonable. The best men we have make mistakes, but it is forbidden that they should make mistakes through want of caution. (See Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21 in connection with 94: 5 and 102: 1-3, for they forbid us to do incautious somethings.) We, the church, have an only child to nurture; and if we make ourselves the cause of its death through carelessness, the game, so far as we are concerned, may be "up."

When we, the church, elect to do something, we should remember the lesson taught in the Book of Jonah. We are sent to "Nineveh." If we elect to do something instead, if we elect to ship to Tarshish, we invite disaster. We may get ourselves into "a whale of a fix" as the early church did.

We have not done the best that might have been done when we made our "oyster stew." Let us not utterly ruin things by adding more handfuls of "salt."

MY "PEOPLE" MUST DO

Who is the "we" that is elected to "Do something about it"? Who has power? Who has right? Whose business is it to ordain that so and so is the manner in which the affairs of my people—the Zion-redeeming affairs, the community-building affairs—shall be conducted? Who has jurisdiction in the business of the people in "the land of Zion"? Who is the "we" that is competent "to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion"?

Let us glance at the somethings that must be done to bring forth and establish that cause.

(1) The moneys of the people that are to be used for that purpose must be "gathered up."

(2) The land upon which "the city" is to be built must be purchased by "the people" through their agents.

(3) Before the gathering, preparation must be made; there must be economic planning—necessary preliminary planning—for "the people."

(4) Then the gathering. We do not gather ourselves to Zion. Moving to Independence—moving to anywhere—is not gathering to Zion. (See Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12; 48: 2; 57: 1-6; 98: 9, 10, and ever so much more.)

(5) Inheritances must be "allotted" and stewardships "appointed." By whom?

(6) As soon as the business gets under way, storehouse functions must be performed. Who is competent to perform them?

(7) And, in the end, when the gathering of the persons who are to form the "people" has been done, "My Kingdom" must be "organized" upon the promised land; the government must be instituted, formally. Who is the "we" that is competent to perform this body of functions? Is it you? Is it I?

Zion is an enterprise of "a people," and "peoples" do things through their duly constituted authorities. It is "the bishop" and "other officers," agents of "the people," that must do the somethings that will bring forth and establish the cause of Zion—so far, that is, as it is an affair of this people, the people of the church as of today.

No matter who the Zion-redeeming people or church may prove to be, Latter Day Saints, or not, only agents of "the people" are competent to perform functions of "the people"—offices through which to bring to pass its organization as a city or as a community. Only "my people" have a right to ordain the social constitution.

Persons have things to do. Peoples have things to do. For one as for the other, not to do the proper thing is bad. It may be wrong.

If it is true that "the time has come" (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1 and 128: 1), then something ought to be done. Not the bad thing, but the good. Not the wrong thing, but the right. Not the something that amounts to nothing. So, let us have a care when we say, "We'll do something about it."

The Whole Heart

I cannot give but half a heart—
I've tried,
But somehow, something's missing
Here inside.

I cannot give an hour a week
For him,
For then the other busy hours
Seem grim.

It's only when the whole heart's tuned
To hear
That life and love and each new day Seem dear.

—Louise Wrigley

Footprints

In the Snow

A "Between You and Me" feature in the Lamoni Chronicle by the Editor,

KATHRYN C. METZ

Ah, snow is SUCH a tattletale. It spins a yarn about each action that transpires through the night, even to the tiny toe prints left by the chickadee.

In the open patch beyond the apple trees you can read the story of a rabbit that frisked through the night, stopping now and then to rest or to just gaze about before continuing his jaunt toward the northwest. His small cushioned feet left tracks that said he scurried . . . slowed down to a hop . . . and vaulted over a submerged log.

Under the elm trees is a long trail left by a squirrel. Occasionally his furry body brushed the soft surface of the snow as he hesitated long enough to burrow under the whiteness for food. And under the berry bush, a small covey of quail huddled through the night. How do we know? Why the wispy marks left by their wings as they stirred in uneasy slumber say so!

A little clump of snow on the smooth, white surface under the grape arbor announces that a bird rested on the twisted black vine for a second, dislodging a puff of snow.

Down in the hollow the wild black-berry branches stand like slender dancers, poised and waiting for the music, their white ermine costumes drawn close about them.

And who knows, maybe the wily fox wrote an adventure story on the ridge over at the far end of the field.

But we are not the only one abroad to read the story of the first snowfall. A cardinal, his blazing topknot shining like a fragile ornament on a Christmas tree, admires the scene from his high perch and sings his approval of winter wonderland.

As we stood there admiring the works of winter a bluebird alighted from nowhere on the only remaining stalk of corn, not twenty feet away. He peered so inquiringly at us that we imagine he wanted to know where the winter feed board was going to be put . . . and when. Not so with the tough little sparrows. They saw no point in waiting around for an invitation, but hopped down to the doorstep where they looked for crumbs.

Mother's voice inside the warm cozy house brought our reverie to a close . . . "IF you are going to stay out there in the cold," she said, "put something on your head."

On the way home we met others who were enjoying the first snow, too. Three Hawaiian girls were walking up the railroad track to their dormitory . . . singing and holding their faces skyward as if to meet the snowflakes the sooner . . . Three youngsters were playing "fox and the geese" in the school yard, and we counted four hopefuls with their sleds.

Proclaim the Gospel

Jesus said, "This gospel shall be preached in all the world for a witness," and it is inspiring to see a movement in the fulfilling of this word. As missionaries are being sent abroad, there is cause to "lift up our heads and rejoice" in this new evidence that the Lord's work is going forward.

In 1833, when Sidney Rigdon was sent on a journey to proclaim "the gospel of salvation," the Lord said to those remaining at home, "By your prayer of faith with one consent, I will uphold him." In our time there is a great body of Saints who may write for a similar purpose. Will the young people join in the prayer of faith, as well as work for their great goal of money that is needed for the support of missions?

"The prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Only with righteousness can "Zion the beautiful" be made the background for the work of the church in all the world. With God's love and power to uphold our missionaries, if they are supported by a united prayer of faith, he can open doors for the preaching of the word, and can move upon hearts to be open to receive his truth. Those who go to present this truth are offering their lives in his service, and they will go in the name of Jesus, the Christ, the Son of the living God. In the communion service, we witness unto the Father that we are willing to take upon us the name of the "Son and always remember him and keep his commandments." In its full effect, this would make us a righteous people, able to offer the effectual prayer of faith in support of his servants. May we have his help to be faithful to our covenant.

CALLIE B. STEBBINS.

Lamoni, Iowa

The Unfolding Truth of the Sealed Word

BY BESSIE TAYLOR

GOD IN HIS LOVE created the universe and has given to man the highest position of all creatures. From the beginning, He ordained means for our eternal salvation, and down through the ages there has been a progressive movement toward the final redemption of man.

At this stage in the world's history, we find ourselves in the possession of a varied amount of scripture and a secular history which give us much knowledge concerning the progress of man and the eternal truths of nature. We are in an immature stage of development in which we have knowledge and command of the fundamental principles, but the art of application has not yet been mastered. Only as we grow into spiritual maturity will it be possible for us to put into full usage the principles of the gospel we love and cherish.

To the early Hebrews was given the Law of Moses, which today we recognize as only a temporary curriculum. Later, Christ through his personal ministry, enlarged upon the laws and commandments and amplified the interpretation of the statutes.

Today, with the knowledge of the Bible, plus the added knowledge of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, we have a greater vision and comprehension of Divinity than the former peoples of history. But, in the face of our present knowledge, we must admit that we still are lacking a full knowledge and understanding of all things.

We find ourselves in a world torn by sin and warfare, a world full of doubt and fear and hate; a world in which many churches are contending and competing with each other. Even in our own circle of believers of this great Latter Day movement, there are divided factions contending for true succession. When we look about us and see the great tragedy of this division, we wonder how long will we continue to be at variance.

THERE IS ONE SOLUTION to this problem, and only one. The great question of "true succession" and "legitimate authority" has reached such a state with us that there is only one thing which will unite us and make us one. That force will also have a tendency to reach out its appeal to others and bring them into the great sheepfold.

At given times, God in his great judgment, has manifested himself to individuals and commanded them to write; down through the ages, he has again and again manifested himself as he willed. At his direction, the Book of Mormon was written and abridged, sealed up, and brought forth for a purpose. But he has not yet finished his work, for in 2 Nephi 11:143, he says, "Touch not the things which are sealed, for I will bring them forth in mine own due time; for I will shew unto the children of men, that I am able to do mine own work." And again in Ether 1:98-101, "Behold I have written upon these plates the very things which the brother of Jared saw; and there never was greater things made manifest, than that which was made manifest unto the brother of Jared; wherefore, the Lord hath commanded me to write them; and I have written them, and he commanded me that I should seal them up; and he also hath commanded that I should seal up the interpretation thereof; wherefore I have sealed up the interpreters, according to the commandment of the Lord. For the Lord said unto me, They shall not go forth unto the Gentiles until the day that they shall repent of their iniquity, and become clean before the Lord; even as the brother of Jared did, that they may become sanctified in me, then will I manifest unto them the things which the brother of Jared saw, even to the unfolding unto them all my revelations, saith Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of the heavens and of the earth, and all things that in them are."

IT IS A COMMON knowledge among all Latter Day Saints of every faction that Joseph Smith translated only the plates which were unsealed, and that there was a sealed portion which he was commanded not to touch. Is it not obvious that God foresaw the need of bringing forth the additional translations at a later period when we could well profit by the manifestation?

The revealment of the record will establish God's recognition of his faithful, righteous people, and the contents of the revealment will usher in the endowment which we have been promised. Can we not think that this sealed portion attached to the original records was the pure words of Jared's brother's experiences, the account of which was abridged by Moroni as given to us in our present Book of Mormon record? The original records were preserved to come forth at a time when peoples not just individuals were capable of comprehending them.

Can we not in our imagination see the attention that would be placed upon this next revealment by the world with all its rapid powers of communication and transportation? In the face of this coming revelation, can the apostatized Latter Day Saints sit back and vie on the old question of "succession" and "rights"? Will not the honest in heart recognize God's power in continuing his work down through his chosen line?

The coming forth of the sealed record is the answer that will bring a new day into our church experience and will reveal to us all things. It will be a day when our church can stand forth and tell the world. It will be a day when, as stated in Ether 1: 102, "He that will contend against the word of the Lord, let him be accursed; and he that shall deny these things, let him be accursed; for unto them will I shew no greater things, saith Jesus Christ for I am he who speaketh." And verse 105, "But he that believes these things which I have spoken, him will I visit with the manifestations of my spirit; and he shall know and bear record."

IN DUE COURSE OF TIME, after the above sacred record has been published, there will continue to be installments of manifestations which will keep the church body growing and developing unto perfection.

The day will arrive when everyone will have a chance to either deny or accept; perhaps the issue will become as great as it did before the time of His first coming here in America, when the very night all who believed in Christ were to have been put to death had not the great sign of his birth appeared. His second coming will be to a people who have proved themselves worthy of his presence.

World affairs are rapidly shaping themselves for a new era. Cannot we, as Latter Day Saints, expect the big boon of this new era to be the revelation of this precious record preserved down through the ages for our benefit and well-being?

Minutes of Gold

Two or three minutes—two or three hours,
 What do they mean in this life of ours?
 Not very much if but counted as time,
 But minutes of gold and hours sublime
 If only we'll use them once in a while
 To make someone happy—make someone smile.

A minute may dry a little lad's tears,
 An hour sweep aside the trouble of years.
 Minutes of my time may bring to an end
 Hopelessness somewhere, and bring me a friend.

—Author Unknown.

Briefs

Farnworth Branch, Lancashire, England.—Bishop G. L. DeLapp and President F. Henry Edwards visited Farnworth on August 14. On this same date, Elder and Mrs. Fred O. Davies attended services in Farnworth for the last time before their departure for America. A district conference was held on October 25 and 26, beginning at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon with a priesthood meeting directed by Apostle Myron McConley. The business session convened at 6 o'clock. A social was held in the evening, at which time Mrs. McConley, Mrs. Glen Johnson and daughter, Glenda, were introduced. Apostle McConley was in charge of the 10 o'clock prayer service on Sunday, and Seventy Glen Johnson gave the morning sermon. In the afternoon, Brother McConley conducted a class for men, Mrs. McConley, a class for women, and Brother Johnson, a class for young people. The final sermon of the conference was given by Apostle McConley.

Torrington, Wyoming.—An all-day meeting was held on Sunday, November 16, with Edd Anderson of Albin, Wyoming, giving the morning sermon. At the 2 o'clock business session, M. M. Bilyue was re-elected pastor, with L. O. Mitchell and Orva Croft as counselors. Some members drove as far as sixty miles to be present at this meeting.

If you want a full sugar bowl, you must put something into it.

OUR VERY OWN

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints Calendar

This attractive calendar printed in two colors (brown and green) follows the church-wide theme for every month. On each page is a photograph of church significance illustrating this theme. Special dates in Latter Day Saint history are listed by the month and are emphasized on the calendar in green. Our calendar was especially prepared to be used with the Pastor's Handbook for 1948 issued by the First Presidency.

40¢ each 10 to 24 (to one address) 35¢ each
 25 or more (to one address) 30¢ each

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
 Independence, Missouri

What Latter Day Saints Believe

THE PSALMIST of old propounded the question to which men are still trying to find the answer when he wrote, "What is man that thou art mindful of him? And the Son of man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hand; thou hast put all things under his feet." One of the poets has written: "The proper study of mankind is man." But any man who tries to understand even himself is presented with a puzzling problem which sometimes baffles his best efforts at reasoning or explanation.

Like Paul, he finds "For the good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do." He often finds that the thing he is resolved not to do is the very thing which he does do. Even the most highly trained psychiatrist is sometimes puzzled by the actions of the men he studies. Man's physical nature is at the same time the marvel and despair of the medical men who study him from the scientific standpoint. Well may we say with Shakespeare's character, Hamlet, "What a piece of work is a man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals!"

In our brief study of man, I believe it well to start with the study of Jesus Christ. He was like God; he was God; but he was also man and like all men. Paul says in the fourth chapter of Hebrews that he was in all points tempted as are we, and again in the fifth chapter, that he was compassed with infirmity. If we can discover something of the nature of Christ, we shall have an infinite revelation of the nature of God; but at the same time, we shall have a revelation of what man may be and should be at his best.

If you will turn to the twenty-sixth verse of the first chapter of Genesis, you will find God saying, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." Is this merely an editorial we, or is there someone else to whom God is speaking? The answer is not difficult to find if you will turn to the first chapter of the Gospel according to John and read the third verse, noting that the antecedent of the pronoun "him" is the word which we understand to be Christ. "All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." The tenth verse of the same chapter repeats the same idea: "He was in the world and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." We could cite several other passages from Paul's writings to the Corinthians, the Colossians, the Hebrews, and the Ephesians, to make the same point: namely that Christ was the agent through whom God created this world. Apparently then Christ was existent as a distinct, conscious, and active personality long before he found tabernacle in human flesh. Jesus himself gave voice to this idea when he said, "Before Abraham was I am." (John 8: 58.)

This Christ, who was in the beginning with God and who had existed before the foundation of the world, was sent to the world in likeness of sinful flesh (Romans 8: 3). He became like his brethren in all things, as Paul says in the second chapter of Hebrews, "Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels but he took on him the seed of Abraham." His earthly life or existence was the result of a union of the spirit which was in the beginning with God, and the body which had been prepared for him here on earth. (See Hebrews 10: 5.) This complete thought is well expressed in the Book of Mormon in these words, "The Lord Omnipotent who reigneth, who was, and is from all eternity to all eternity, shall come down from heaven among the children of men, and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay."—Mosiah 1: 97. This body which Christ took upon himself was the instrument or the medium through which his spirit, which was his real nature, found expression. But the great difference between Christ and other men, was that in him the flesh became perfectly and completely subject to the spirit, suffering temptation in all things as other men did, and yet not yielding to the enticement of that temptation. The will of the Son (flesh) being swallowed up in the will of the Father.

Christ, the man, also suffered death. His death consisted in a separation of spirit and earthly body. Jesus plainly indicated that this separation was voluntary on his part. He says in the tenth chapter of John, verses 17 and 18: "Therefore doth my Father love me because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." In John 16: 28, he makes an even plainer statement: "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father." In the seventeenth chapter of John he prays that he may be glorified with the glory which he had with God before the world was, and again prays that all his disciples "may be with me where I am,"

About the Nature of Man

BY EVAN A. FRY

indicating that their spirits likewise should depart from the body at some future time, and in a conscious and active state, should be associated with him and his Father in heaven. As Jesus hung upon the cross, his last words were: "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit."

He left his body, the earthly part of him, hanging on the cross, and commended his spirit, the eternal part of him, into the hands of his Heavenly Father. The third chapter of I Peter indicates that while he was absent from the body but quickened by the spirit, he went and preached to the spirits in prison which had been disobedient during the days of Noah (verses 18 to 20). It seems plain, then, that the death of Christ on the cross consisted in a separation of spirit and the body. The body was mortal; the spirit was eternal; and since flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God (I Corinthians 15: 50) it was necessary that the mortal be laid by and later changed by the resurrection in order that it might enter once again into the kingdom of God.

Latter Day Saints believe that in these experiences of Jesus Christ we may find a parallel to the experience which comes to every man. A careful reading of the first two chapters of Genesis will indicate that the spirit of man was created first. Genesis 1: 27 says, "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." But the second chapter of Genesis, verse 5, says, "There was not a man to till the ground." Where was the man who had been created male and female in chapter one? The Inspired Version of the Bible, as corrected by Joseph Smith, makes this question plain in this language: "For I, the Lord God, created all things of which I have spoken spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth." Modern revelation in our Book of Doctrine and Covenants asserts the same idea. Section 90, paragraph 5, says plainly, "Man was also in the beginning with God." This same section says further, that every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning. It was the spiritual creation which was in the likeness of God. Therefore man is like God, and partakes at least partially of God's nature. Spiritually, he is akin to God, and belongs in God's presence. "Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor."

It was through the body that sin and death came into the world. At the time of creation, God placed the immortal spirit in a body formed of ture, composed of body and spirit, the dust of the earth, and this combination produced man, a dual creature, composed of body and spirit, who then became a living soul. Section 90, paragraph 5, from which we have already quoted, says further: "For man is spirit. The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receive a fullness of joy; and when separated, man cannot receive the fullness of joy. The elements are the tabernacle of God; yea, man is the tabernacle of God, even temples; and whatsoever temple is defiled, God shall destroy that temple." This is what happened to our forefather, Adam. His body partook of sin and, that temple being defiled, thereby became subject to God's destruction or death. Because our bodies are all inherited from our forefather, Adam, we are likewise subject to a physical death which destroys the defiled or impure body in which we find residence.

Death, then, is a separation. It may be of two kinds, physical or spiritual. When God warned Adam and Eve against eating of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, he warned, "In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." But after the eating thereof, Adam and Eve both lived for many, many years in the physical body. The death which had been promised to them as a result of their sin, came as a separation from God. They were driven out of the Garden of Eden and could no longer enjoy the presence of their Maker. There was still another kind of death which they must needs suffer, however, and this death likewise was a separation—a separation of spirit and body. If Adam and Eve had been allowed to continue in the Garden of Eden, they might there have eaten of the fruit of the tree of life, against which there was no prohibition. If they had eaten while in a state of separation from God, and thereby become immortal, they would have been forever separated from the God in whose spiritual likeness they had been created and who desired the presence of all his creation with him. The sentence of physical death was therefore an act of love. Because the body had yielded to sin and become corrupt, it had to die. The natural or physical man was an enemy of God. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

In order that man might again come into the presence of God it was necessary for him to lay aside the flesh and blood of his physical body. Physical death, then, is likewise a separation—a separation of body and spirit. The dust again returns to the earth as it was, and the spirit returns to God, who gave it. (Ecclesiastes 12: 7.) After the day of judgment there will come another death, mentioned frequently in the Bible as the "second death," which will be eternal separation from God. The wicked who have refused all overtures of Christ and his ministry on earth and in the spirit world will be cast into the lake of fire. They shall become as if there had been no redemption made, for "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

We can begin to see now the purpose for which Christ came into the world. By his sinless life in the body, and by his perfect control over that body, he made it impossible for that body to be held by death. The devil could have no power over him, and death could not hold him. He came forth in a glorious resurrection; he conquered death, and thereby made possible the resurrection of the bodies of all men and the restoration of those men to the presence of God for judgment. If Christ had not come into the world, there could have been no redemption; and if Christ had not risen from the dead, there could have been no resurrection; but there is a resurrection, therefore, the grave has no victory and the sting of death is swallowed up in Christ. (Mosiah 8: 79-81.)

The Doctrine and Covenants has another thought in this connection which is appropriate at this point. We quote from section 85, paragraph 4: "Through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things . . ." Or, in the words of the Book of Mormon: "His blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned." The atonement of Christ consists in his resurrection, by which it is possible for all men, even though they have partaken of the carnal nature of Adam, to stand in a resurrected body before God, once more united with him, to be judged then according to the works done in the flesh. If found worthy in this judgment, they may remain with him through eternity; if worthy of a lesser glory, they may have eternal life, but not in the presence of God. If utterly wicked and rebellious still, they may be cast into the lake of fire, and blotted out of existence in the second death. But, through the atonement and resurrection of Christ, all men are to have opportunity to be at one with God and to stand in his presence in a resurrected body.

Man, then, is of a dual nature. He is composed of spirit and body; and the body and the spirit form the soul of man. The body is mortal, perishable; the spirit is eternal and akin to God, made in God's image and likeness. It is the spirit which gives intelligence, direction, consciousness, and continuity to the body. That spirit can exist apart from the body. It existed in the beginning; it survives the change of death, carrying with it all the experiences and developments acquired in the body. Reunited with the body, it brings the memory and the fruit of all those actions and experiences had in the body to the day of judgment, when every man is judged according to his works. The memory of each man's deeds will force him to say in that day of judgment that God's judgments are just.

We need not fear, then, the separation of spirit and body. It is only a separation, not an extinction. Through the atonement, spirit and body shall again be united, and become a living soul, as Adam did when spirit was joined to body on the morn of creation. But it shall be a new creation. Never again shall spirit and body be separated after that resurrection, unless our wickedness and rebellion have delivered us into the power of the devil, to be cast with him into the lake of fire in the second death—an eternal separation from God. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens . . . Wherefore we labor, that whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him."

Spotlight on the News

(Continued from page 3.)

In the First World War, near its close, Turkey moved out of the Holy Land as Allenby marched in on foot with his army. Britain accepted a mandate from the League of Nations to govern the land in trust. Britain is weary of the task and proposes to move out; and, after another world war, Palestine is again front-page news. Her problem, pronounced by H. G. Wells as insoluble, has been pondered by the United Nations. A decision was reached—about the only one in which Russia and America have agreed. Palestine is to be divided between Jew and Arab—or shall we say Judah and Ishmael.

In a way, it seems appropriate as well as surprising that in this situation, in which so many races have an interest, a cultured, educated Negro should be trusted by the United Nations with such a task. Here is a man born of an underprivileged people not so long out of slavery, handicapped by color prejudices, who is in a class with Booker T. Washington and George Washington Carver. By sheer native ability and courage and hard work he has made his way through various positions of trust, requiring great administrative ability, to this position as representative of the United Nations in the midst of a time and a situation that claims the attention of the world.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

We wish all Herald readers could read and study an article in The Christian Century of November 19, 1947, on "Palestine and the Jew" by Morris S. Lazaron. The complexities of the present-world situation, with many views and factions among the Jews themselves, and armed conflict with the Arabs (who outnumber the Jews two to one) cannot be gathered fully from the daily press. Mr. Lazaron is a Jew, but apparently has considered the questions without bias.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

An egotist—the man who tells you those things about himself which you intended to tell him about yourself.

LETTERS

God Blesses Those Who Serve Him

God is the giver of all good, and prayer invites his presence to be with us. Last summer, Elder Frank Fry spoke in prophecy, telling us that we were all subject to the power of God, and that, if we could only understand the wonderful things he had in store for us, we would not hesitate to do his work.

The past three years have been difficult ones for us, as we lost our only son on September 25, 1944; he was killed in the jungles of New Guinea. When I hear others thanking God for having brought their loved ones back to them, I feel sad and let down. I should not feel this way, but sometimes it is hard to go on. Perhaps the trouble with many of us is that we become so absorbed with our own problems that we forget to do God's work and thereby lose the spiritual blessings he has in store for us.

I am grateful for the gospel, and I am determined to study so that I shall be able to tell it to others. I pray God's strength will be with me and all others who are in need of it.

LUCY C. KEOWN.

2517 East Grand
Des Moines, Iowa

Discovers Truth of the Word of Wisdom

Nearly three months ago, I became suddenly very ill. Consulting a doctor, I learned that I had developed a serious toxic condition. His first instruction was, "Don't drink any more coffee."

I didn't recover speedily. Instead, after nearly a month's medication, I went to the Sacred Heart Hospital to receive the costly streptomycin drug every three hours, day and night, for a week. I am still not entirely well.

I learned the hard way that it is wise to heed when God speaks and says it is a "word of wisdom" for our physical well-being.

While I was convalescing in the home of a friend, her daughter returned from a distant city where she had gone through a clinic to determine what was causing her stomach distress. The eminent physician told her, "Quit coffee. It creates a nervous stomach, and is generally upsetting to the digestive system."

That made two comments against coffee, and I have read of others.

Yet, I know of many good people who are heavy coffee drinkers and apparently suffer no ill effects. I fear it is only "apparently." Since God's "word of wisdom" is not a command, I cannot condemn as sinners those who partake of the fragrant beverage. There no doubt will be times, in certain circumstances, when I will drink a cup of coffee. But I shall remember that to drink it steadily and heavily is not "wisdom."

Flo Whittemore

An Ounce of Prevention

The deterioration of a soul is much like the deterioration of a house. The purchaser of a new home may be very particular, demanding that everything about the place is just as it should be. But after he has lived there a while, the house becomes a familiar sight that he does not notice how the paint is beginning to wear off. Maybe a rail of the porch comes loose and eventually one of the children decides to make a ball bat of it . . . nobody bothers to notice it. The grass on the lawn disappears so gradually that those who walk across it each day aren't aware of change. And then out-of-town relatives come for a visit. They haven't seen the place since it was bought, and all the changes are immediately visible. "What's happened?" they want to know.

A man's soul is like that, too. So gradual is the disintegration that he doesn't realize he's changing at all. Only those who see him occasionally can tell how much he's slipping. Sometimes, they don't see him soon enough, and his spiritual "house" is beyond repair.

Take inventory today. If you wait until tomorrow, it may be too late to rebuild.

O. A. Manning

970 Springhill Avenue
Mobile, Alabama

(I will appreciate letters from any who care to write.)

A Letter From Holland

(A report to the Presiding Bishopric)

At long last we have arrived in Holland, and say are we ever thrilled! For two long months we had been living out of our suitcases and in the homes of friends, and on November 19, as we walked into the home on Annastraat 2, a strange urge came over me to pause and offer a word of thanks to God for making such a place possible in this land of shortages and need. You, too, Brother DeLapp, certainly deserve our thanks, as well as that of the whole church. I am sure that any member of our church would be proud of this place. It is perfectly suited to our needs as a church in Holland.

Our trunks arrived in good shape, and so we have been busying ourselves with unpacking them during the past few days. (Brother Livingston asked me to inform him regarding the condition of our and Brother Theys' trunks upon arrival, so that he would know when to pay the Judson-Sheldon people. You can tell him, if you please, that they all arrived nicely.) We enjoy equipping the house, and buying furniture for it. We've been very fortunate in finding some good, secondhand furniture very reasonably priced. But, a guilder does not go very far here, and we will be needing many more. Brother Theys is writing you regarding this.

We are very happy here in Holland. The Saints here, too, are very kind and have certainly given us a warm welcome.

We send our best wishes to you, and we earnestly hope that we can do our part in carrying forward the work of the kingdom. May God bless you.

Fraternally yours,

Albert A. Scherer.

The Importance of Love

At a reunion prayer service, we were asked what we felt was the most important factor in spiritual development. Many answers were given. One woman arose and told how the Saviour had appeared to her in a dream and asked, "Do you love me?" She had said, "Yes, Lord, I love you." Then I realized that love was the answer.

The desire to love and be loved is born within us. Many have gone astray because they did not receive love when they needed it most. Often children become jealous because a younger child in the family gets all the attention; consequently, they misbehave in order to be noticed. Many homes are broken because either the husband or wife failed to show sufficient love.

Love leaves no room for selfishness. Love is kindness, patience, consideration. Love finds an excuse for others' mistakes. Love forgives. Love never tries to remember grievances.

Love brought the Saviour to earth to suffer shame, heartache, pain, and sorrow. It heals the sick, raises the dead, and changes hearts from bad to good. It can cure all the evils of mankind. There is nothing greater than love. Mrs. Emma Mortensen

Worship Suggestions for February

Theme for the Month:

QUALITIES FOR JESUS

February 1, 1948

QUALITIES OF LOYALTY

Prelude: Instrumental Solo, "Draw Thou My Soul, O Christ," Saints Hymnal, No. 316.

Call to Worship:

The bread that giveth strength I want to give,
The water pure that bids the thirsty live:
I want to help the fainting day by day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,
The faith to conquer crowding doubts and fears.

Beauty for ashes may I give away:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure running o'er,
And into angry hearts, I want to pour
The answer soft that turneth wrath away;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give to others hope and faith,
I want to do all that the Master saith;
I want to live aright from day to day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.
—Author Unknown.

Suggested Hymns: (From Saints' Hymnal)

"Thou Must Be True Thyself," No. 300.
"O, Jesus, I Have Promised," No. 298.
"Rise Up, O Men of God," No. 209.
"O Jesus, Prince of Life and Truth," No. 303.
"O Reapers of Life's Harvest," No. 387.

Opening Prayer: A prayer of reconsecration may be suitable for this theme.

Suggested Scriptures:

From the Inspired Version: Romans 12: 1-3, inclusive; Matthew 15: 25-30; Romans 8: 35-39; James 1: 21-27; verse 25 is especially good.

Suggested Stories:

"The Toiling of Felix" and "The St. John's Fund," from Worship Programs and Stories for Young People, by Alice A. Bays.

"The Cross of Christ" and "The Lucky Girl," from Seventy-five Stories for the Worship House, by Margaret White Eggleston.

"The Talking Picture" and "What If They Had Quit?" from Christ and the Fine Arts, by Cynthia Pearl Maus.

(Though these stories are written especially for the young people, they may be adapted easily for use with any age group.)

The Bible story of Ruth can be used by a skillful person to carry out the theme of loyalty.

February 8, 1948

QUALITIES OF HONESTY

Prelude: "I Would Be True," No. 294.

Call to Worship:

Psalm 119: 33-40, or the Gettysburg Address might be used.

Quartet: "Oh, for a Closer Walk with God," No. 313.

Suggested Hymns:

"Take Time to be Holy," No. 322.
"Walk in the Light," No. 320.

By EMILY EASTER DUNSDON

February 15, 1948

QUALITIES OF INTEGRITY

Prelude: "Gracious Spirit, Dwell With Me," No. 192.

Call to Worship:

We are all blind until we see
That in the human plan
Nothing is worth the making if
It does not make the man.
Why build these cities glorious
If man unbuilded goes?
In vain we build the work, unless
The builder also grows.
—Edwin Markham.

Suggested Hymns:

"These Things Shall Be," No. 187.
"Look for the Beautiful," No. 209.
"Rise Up, O Men of God," No. 210.
"I Would Be True," No. 294.
"O Jesus, Prince of Life and Truth," No. 303.
"Forward, Be Our Watchword," No. 357.

Suggested Scriptures:

"Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and strengthen the feeble knees; And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed. Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord; Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled."—Hebrews 12: 12-15.
1 Peter 3: 8-13; Matthew 6: 19-24.

Stories: From Seventy-five Stories for the Worship Hour, by Margaret Eggleston:

"The Lucky Girl," "Should He Steal?" "Why He Was Chosen," "Those Obstacles." From Worship Programs and Stories for Young People, by Alice A. Bays, "The Great Stone Face."

Poetry:

INVICTUS

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.
In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.
Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds and shall find me unafraid.
It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll,
I am the master of my fate:
I am the captain of my soul.
—William Ernest Henley.

A HIGH WAY AND A LOW

To every man there openeth
A way, and ways, and a way,
And the high soul climbs the high way,
And the low soul gropes the low;
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.
But to every man there openeth
A high way and a low,
And every man decideth
The way his soul shall go.
—John Oxenham.

"Draw Thou My Soul, O Christ," No. 316.
"O Jesus, Prince of Life and Truth," No. 303.

"Thou Must Be True Thyself," No. 300.
"Yield Not to Temptation," No. 269.
"Father, Lead Me, Day by Day," No. 262.

(Perhaps you can change some of the words in the above songs to fit the theme more closely, for instance, "purity" and "truthfulness" to "honesty.")

Suggested Scriptures:

"Thou, O man of God, flee these things and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; O . . . keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings."—1 Timothy 6: 11, 14, 17, 20.

"In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works; in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you. For the grace of God which bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared; Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world."—Titus 2: 7, 8, 11, 12.

"God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up."—James 4: 6-8, 10.

"Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and lightmindedness, and from all your wicked doings. See that ye love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 37, 38.

Suggested Stories:

Since this is near Abraham Lincoln's birthday, a very impressive lesson in honesty may be drawn from well-known stories of his life. They may be found in most school history or biography books.

"The St. John's Fund" or "The Bishop and the Candlesticks," from Worship Programs and Stories for Young People, by Alice A. Bays.

Poem:

MYSELF

I have to live with myself, and so
I want to be fit for myself to know;
Always to look myself straight in the eye.
I don't want to stand, with the setting sun
And hate myself for the things I've done.
I want to go out with my head erect;
I want to deserve all men's respect;
But here in the struggle for fame and pelf
I want to be able to like myself.
I don't want to look at myself and know
That I'm bluster and bluff and empty-show.
I never can fool myself, and so Whatever happens I want to be Self-respecting and conscience-free.
—Author Unknown.

GOD GIVE US MEN!

God give us men! A time like this demands Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking!
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty, and in private thinking;
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds
Their large professions and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Freedom weeps, Wrong rules the land and waiting Justice sleeps.

—Josiah Gilbert Holland.

February 22, 1948

QUALITIES OF SINCERITY

Prelude: "Just as I Am, Thine Own to Be,"
No. 296.

Call to Worship:

MAKING LIFE WORTH-WHILE
May every soul that touches mine—
Be it the slightest contact—
Get therefrom some good;
Some little grace; one kindly thought;
One aspiration yet unfelt;
One bit of courage
For the darkening sky;
One gleam of faith
To brave the thickening ills of life;
One glimpse of brighter skies
Beyond the gathering mists—
To make life worth-while
And heaven a surer heritage.

—George Eliot.

Suggested Hymns:

From Saints' Hymnal:
"Take My Life, and Let It Be Consecrated,"
No. 307.
"I Would Be True," No. 294.
"Let Us, Brothers, Let Us Gladly," No. 287.
"I'm Pressing on the Upward Way," No.
241.
"Am I Like Driftwood on Some Shore,"
No. 224.
"A Charge to Keep I Have," No. 201.
From Youth Hymnal:
"An Evening Prayer," No. 186.
"Open My Eyes That I May See," No. 200.
"Once to Every Man and Nation," No. 86.
"Have Thine Own Way, Lord," No. 56.

Suggested Scriptures:

The life of Alma, son of Alma, and the four sons of Mosiah. Mosiah 11: 159-181, 200-206.
Also chapter twelve of the Book of Alma;
Psalm 15; Psalm 39: 1; Matthew 13: 3-7, 18-21; Matthew 16: 25-29.

Theme Thoughts:

The life of George Washington, whose birthday we celebrate today, presents many good qualities that may be used for worship thoughts. His life and ministry is a pattern no one should be ashamed to follow. His sincerity in performing tasks he knew were necessary may have saved and preserved this Land of Promise.

Stories:

From Worship Programs and Stories for Young People, by Alice A. Bays: "Glorifying the Commonplace," "A Modern Matriarch,"
"The Pearl of Great Price."

From Christ and the Fine Arts, by Cynthia Pearl Maus: "The Talking Picture," "The Hall of Heroes," "What If They Had Quit?"

Poetry:

A PIECE OF CLAY

I took a piece of plastic clay
And idly fashioned it one day,
And, as my fingers pressed it still,
It moved and yielded to my will.
I came again when days were past—
The bit of clay was hard at last;
The form I gave it, it still bore,
But I could change that form no more.
I took a piece of living clay
And gently formed it day by day,
And moulded with my power and art
A young child's soft and yielding heart.
I came again when years were gone—
It was a man I looked upon;
He still that early impress wore,
And I could change him nevermore.
—Author Unknown.

A PRAYER FOR CHRISTIAN UNITY

O Master of the Galilean Way,
Forgive us for the vows we fail to keep:
Forgive us that we so neglect thy sheep,
So idly waste this shining harvest day!
Forgive us for the stumbling block we lay
Along the paths by which men seek thee!
Sweep
From our small minds the strife that holds thee cheap!
Break thou the bread of life with us, we pray!
What matter if we cannot understand
The mystery of Love that is Divine, Nor pierce the veil! Dear Lord, our faith increase
To know that, since our hands may reach thy hand,
Our lives are made all-powerful, through thine,
To heal a wounded world and bring it peace!
—Molly Anderson Haley.

February 29, 1948

QUALITIES OF FRIENDSHIP

Prelude: "Moonlight Sonata" (Beethoven) or "Song Without Words" (Mendelssohn)
as a violin solo.

Call to Worship:

This is my commandment, That ye love one another as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you.

Suggested Hymns:

From Saints' Hymnal:
"O Jesus, Master, When Today," No. 340.
"The Bread That Giveth Strength," No. 225.
"Is Thy Cruise of Comfort Failing?" No.
345.
"Just As I Am," No. 296.
"I Would Be true," No. 294.
From Youth Hymnal:
"Somebody Cares," No. 154.
"I Need Jesus," No. 152.

Opening Prayer: (May include the poem)

OTHERS

Lord, help me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayers will be for OTHERS.
Help me in all the work I do
To ever be sincere and true
And know that all I do for You Must needs be done for OTHERS.
Let self be crucified and slain
And buried deep, and all in vain
May efforts be to rise again

Unless to live for OTHERS.

And when my work on earth is done,
And my new work in heaven begun
May I forget the crown I've won
While thinking still of OTHERS.
Others, Lord, yes, others,
Let this my motto be;
Help me to live for others
That I may live like thee.

—Charles D. Meigs.

Suggested Scripture:

Luke 10: 31-38 (The Good Samaritan); Matthew 22: 36-38; Proverbs 16: 7; Matthew 25:
36-41.

Picture Interpretations:

Durer's "Praying Hands" from Worship Programs and Stories for Young People, by Alice A. Bays.

"The Hope of the World," by Harold Copping from Christ and the Fine Arts, by Cynthia Pearl Maus.

Stories:

"The Tyranny of Riches," from Christ and the Fine Arts, by Cynthia Pearl Maus.

"Margaret of New Orleans," by St. Augustine, from Worship Programs in the Fine Arts, by Alice A. Bays. Perhaps your local library has a biography of this friend of the orphans —Margaret Haughery.

Poetry:

A SMILE

A smile costs nothing but gives much—
It takes but a moment, but the memory of it usually lasts forever.
None are so rich that can get along without it—
And none so poor but that can be made rich by it.
It enriches those who receive Without making poor those who give—
It creates sunshine in the home,
Fosters good will in business
And is the best antidote for trouble—
And yet it cannot be begged, borrowed or stolen, for it is of no value
Unless it is freely given away.
Some people are too busy to give you a smile—
Give them one of yours—
For the good Lord knows that no one needs a smile so badly
As he or she who has no more smiles left to give.

—Author Unknown.

A GOOD CREED

If any little word of ours
Can make one life the brighter;
If any little song of ours
Can make one heart the lighter;
God help us speak that little word,
And take our bit of singing
And drop it in some lonely vale
To set the echoes ringing.
If any little love of ours
Can make one life the sweeter;
If any little care of ours
Can make one step the fletcher;
If any little help may ease
The burden of another;
God give us love and care and strength
To help along each other.
If any little thought of ours
Can make one life the stronger;
If any cheery smile of ours
Can make its brightness longer;
Then let us speak that thought today,
With tender eyes aglowing,
So God may grant some weary one Shall reap from our glad sowing.

—Author Unknown.

At Home

The snow is high.
It came upon a rushing wind
To lay a down-soft blanket over all.
The great, white, driven flakes pile deeper now
In mounds and drifts and clumps;
The trees make ragged patterns
In silhouette
Against the backdrop of the darkening sky.
The clotheslines are long, icy gar-lands
Dusted with frost-stars.
How lovely is the world,
And clean.

The children will come in from school,
Brimming with merriment, and will fill their hands
And pockets
With sugar cookies still warm from the oven
And then go out to romp
In all this whiteness.

And in my kitchen cupboards there are rows
Of Summer's bounty, stored against a day
Like this.
Sparkling jellies and the wholesomeness
Of tender chicken, vegetables, and such;
While on my stove
Sit four fat loaves of bread, fresh-baked.
My copper teakettle sings as if it knew
That I can sit in wonder at the sight
Of winter's beauty,
Thankful that I need not go out Tonight.

LOUISE.

A forest ranger, telling stories, was asked whether he ever got lost.
"Of course," he replied. "It's only the dubs who never get five miles from camp, who don't get lost sometimes."

Onward—Steadfastly

By Pauline Arnson, Chairman General Council of Women

A STIMULATING PERIOD for Latter Day Saints is inventory time. It may bring some regret for past failures, for opportunities missed, but it also offers a chance to take stock and apply the measuring stick. The twelve months of 1947 are gone, no time left to record good intentions or to do good deeds. There is, however, a second chance for us, and this is good news. We can give thanks for manifold blessings received.

The past year has been a good one for the women of the church. Their work has been recognized because it has been done in a humble, prayerful, and efficient way. The counsel that has been given them by the general officers of the church in Independence, by the apostles in the field, by the district presidents, and the local priesthood has been of great value in directing their efforts.

There is no doubt in my mind that these devoted women want to make the new year one of growth. They want to be active, not just for the sake of being busy, but for the purpose of becoming finer persons and developing their skills for the church.

An axiom to recall is that the best is demanded of us if we are to accomplish anything worth-while. This is the time to work with the vigor that is ours today. Let us look about us for examples of lives well-lived and choose that way for ourselves.

Women have worth-while responsibilities in their homes and church work to challenge them. The routine of caring for the home, the necessity of setting aside time for study, the duties of office work become monotonous unless one has the long view of the work in mind. A home cannot be kept clean and attractive for a family unless the mother is willing to put forth the energy to keep it so. A simple thing is to give thanks for the clean linen cloth that is put upon the table for the evening meal as well as to express appreciation to the Master for the strength that he has given you to launder it.

Women can't grow in the knowledge and doctrine of the church unless they are willing to set aside some time for reading and doing those acts of kindness which produce growth in the soul. Visiting a friend who is ill or who needs a little cheer does as much good for the visitor as to the one who is the recipient of the visit.

There will be no well-conducted monthly meeting in your women's group, no evening service in the church to acquaint the membership with your objectives for the year, no social for fellowship, no bazaar to help build the church, no institute to unify the work, unless you are willing to spend time—at a sacrifice, no doubt—for committee meetings and for planning.

Start the new year with good intentions, and keep them. Each day offers a new opportunity, each month can be a new beginning—but let us take two steps forward and none backward. Some of us run well for a season, but then we give in to the nature which we have nurtured and are discouraged. Usually there are friends who will encourage us, and we start again. This is fortunate, but how much more these friends could do if they could use their time in introducing the gospel to nonmembers.

I have often thought that the Lord must love those children dearly who have qualities of dependability, steadfastness—who are enthusiastic and stable. Let us try to develop these in the coming year and pray for vision and wisdom as we work.

A Reading Program

By Louise Fordham

A HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL PROJECT, which is in its second year of operation by the Lawrence, Kansas, women's department, is a planned program for reading and owning some of the better new books.

Early in the fall, each member is given an opportunity to participate by purchasing one of a suggested list of titles or any other book she may choose to own. During the following nine months of women's department meetings, each participating member reads a different book each month. Books are exchanged at the monthly meetings. After all books have been read, each is returned to the owner for a permanent place in her library.

The original list from which the books are chosen is prepared in September by an appointed book committee. This committee, in its selective search for the better books, reads book reviews in the New York Times and The Saturday Review of Literature, talks to public school and university librarians, browses through book shops, consults bookstore owners, and corresponds with the Herald Publishing House. From all these sources, it sifts and chooses until it can present a wide variety of good books.

If more than nine people wish to participate, the book committee works out a circulating system, after having each member list the purchased book in her preferred order of reading. Following these preferred lists as much as possible, the committee prepares a master circulation sheet which shows the location of each book during each month of the reading season. Such a system does not allow a person to read all of the books rotating in the group, but it does insure that she will be able to read the nine she most wanted to read. A copy of the master circulation sheet is retained by each person, so that she knows what her reading schedule is, as well as that of everyone else.

The seventeen books on our rotating list this season offer a wide variety of subjects. Four of the books are fiction, five are on self-improvement, five are religious books, one is a biography, one covers a general subject, and the last is a book of short stories.

The women appreciate this project because it permits them to read good books which they would probably not have access to otherwise. At the same time, it encourages the building of home libraries which can be worthwhile to the entire family.

The following is a copy of the circulation sheet used by the Lawrence group.

MASTER CIRCULATION SHEET

	Oct.	Nov.	Dec.	Jan.	Feb.	Mar.	Apr.	May
Years of the Locust	15	8	3	4	17	1		11
Mrs. Mike	17	14	11	5	4	6	1	10
Gentlemen's Agreement	2	5	7	12	11	13	17	8
In a Dark Garden	13	4	15	17	2	12	11	6
Time to Be Young	3	12	17	1	7	15	6	4
On Being Fit to Live With	16	7	2	15		5	9	13
Bringing up the Children	9	16	10	13	12	11	4	1
Marriages Are Not Made in Heaven	14	13	16	9	10	7	3
	12	15	6		1	4	5
Personality Unlimited	1		12	8		10		5
Your Carriage, Madam	5	11		6	8		2	7
Sermon on the Mount	4	9	5	10	13	16	15	2
Christ and the Fine Arts	10	17	13	2	15		16	12
The Way	11	10	9	16	5	3	12	15
A Church Member's Manual	8	2			9	17	10	3
Great Women of the Bible			1	4	3	6	8	7
The Lincoln Reader	6	3	1	7	16	9	8	17
Mr. Blanding Builds His Dream House	7	6	8	11	3	2	12	16

KEY TO NUMBERS

- 1—Alma Andes
- 2—Gladys Andes
- 3—Alice Barlow
- 4—Wilma Beers
- 5—Mary Campbell
- 6—Jean Dicker
- 7—Marilyn Edwards
- 8—Louise Fordham
- 9—Margaret Hoecker
- 10—Rosabelle Howard
- 11—Blanche Norris
- 12—Inez Norris
- 13—Ruth Norris
- 14—Ruth Sheehy
- 15—Gladys Six
- 16—Bessie Taylor
- 17—Doretta Taylor

Each woman is assigned a number and given a master sheet so that she will know when she can read her choice.

How to Read

Macaulay read a book so swiftly that he seemed to turn the pages almost without pausing, taking in at one glance all that was in them, and yet carrying away all that was worth remembering. You can cultivate this gift by practice. Force yourself to read more rapidly than feels comfortable. Make a note of how long it takes you to read a page, then try to cut down your time on the next. For practice, read light literature—love stories, mystery stories, anything that carries you so fast that there is no chance to dillydally. Although you will be bothered at first by not grasping the matter you are reading as well as is your wont, disregard this, and it will right itself with practice.

To aid this practice of fast reading, two psychologists, Dr. Goodwin Watson and Dr. Theodore Newcomb, have formulated five simple rules: eliminate whispering, pointing, and movements of the lips and hands; relax your muscles; try to see phrases, sentences, even paragraphs at a glance; do not let your mind wander—if you find yourself thinking of something else, write down a note about it to be taken up later; try to anticipate the author and see whether he is developing the idea as you would expect; then it will seldom be necessary to read every word.—James Bryce.

a home column feature

HIS GIFT TO US

By Betty Lou Clark

OUR GOAL? Zion. This is an old statement with many theories, most of them agreeing if the peg finds its designated hole. In the creation of a Zion condition, we have at least reached the first rung of the ladder. We have the laws; we also have the organization. The authority is within our church, and within our priesthood are capable men. We have the chosen place, and a sufficient number of people. What do we lack? "Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies." (Doctrine and Covenants 140: 5.)

The Lord has sort of thrown it into the lap of each of us individually. He has given us all we need and is now leaving it up to us whether or not we succeed. And why shouldn't we?

We have been trying to figure out methods of living with each other successfully for quite some time. At first, it wasn't so very difficult because we didn't wander very far, and the number of people we came in contact with was relatively few compared to the vastness of our world today. As the centuries passed, this problem of living together has grown, and today the very thought of continuing to live together in hatred raises its head as a monstrous devil. It is apparent that the qualities for a peaceful and happy life are absent in our world as a whole. But there is no reason why this condition should exist. If people had followed some of the basic teachings of past ages, we would not be living in such a chaotic world. Some of the basic qualities for peaceful living have existed for years in many of the religions of the world, Christian and otherwise.

THE TWO GREAT commandments contained in Mark 12: 35, 36 concerning the love of the Lord and our neighbor would, in themselves,

Here Is the Writer . . .

Betty Lou Clark takes care of sales adjustments for the Herald Publishing House, where she has worked since December of 1946. Born and reared in Columbus, Ohio, she moved to Independence just before entering Graceland College in the fall of 1945. Activities? She says, "One of the most enjoyable activities I have found since coming to Independence is playing the violin in the Independence Little Symphony, although, for my own amusement, I prefer the piano. Also, I enjoy reading and writing poetry." She is active in Zion's League work and is a member of the Stone Church congregation.

work miracles. Adding to these such qualities as faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity, the additional commandments given in our three books, the organization of our church according to Christ's teachings, and the authority bestowed on our priesthood, leaves us no excuse for failure.

In one of our smaller branches, there is a member affectionately referred to as "Uncle George" by the entire congregation. He's not a fluent speaker nor a polished gentleman, but "Uncle George" quietly goes about noticing other people's needs and just as quietly seeing that they are filled.

In another group, there is a crippled lady—just a new member. The women of this branch had gathered one afternoon to scrub the floors of the church, and the new member had obligingly joined them—much to their surprise. Most of the ladies were quite concerned about what she could do, or whether they should allow her to help at all, due to her physical condition. Noticing that they were busy talking, she quietly slipped upstairs and started scrubbing. Finally the women reached a conclusion and, turning around, they found that she was gone. Puzzled, they went upstairs; there they saw her busy with pail and brush, a good portion of the task accomplished.

Upon meeting a noted piano teacher, Marie, a promising young musician asked him, "Isn't Miss Bryce one of your students? I think she plays beautifully. How did she ever learn to play as she does?"

Smiling down at her, he answered, "Yes, Miss Bryce has been one of my students for the past eight years and during the last four years has had daily instruction. She has devoted from five to six hours each day to practice. That is the reason she plays so beautifully."

With renewed determination, Marie decided to persist until she accomplished her dream; she, too, would some day be a concert artist.

In the city of Independence there is a family in which love and kindness abound. The family organization is based on Christ's teachings. Here, the children have the highest respect for their parents. Through faith in their teachings, these children have gone into the world with the background of their parents' experiences, and are, consequently, much further advanced in wisdom and knowledge than their associates.

New Horizons

GOD HAS GIVEN US a great gift—the plan for Zion and eternal life. He has given us laws for our physical and spiritual life. In addition, he has given us the choice of accepting or rejecting them. We would not quickly reject material possessions of great value offered by a friend; why then, should we reject this infinitely more valuable gift offered by our greatest friend?

For many years, men have been offering us plans for the perfect state of government. When any new form gains a powerful following, it is challenged or challenges the other existing forms and is usually followed by a “free for all” in which there truly exists no winner—the results being hatred and destruction. After centuries of such battles, we should be ready to place our faith in God. He offers us “peace on earth, good will towards men.” Shall we accept him?

“It Is My Recreation—”

After his lecture in a strange town, a well-known university president was left alone with only an aged janitor for company till train time. “If you don’t mind a modest home,” the janitor suggested, “I’d be proud to have you wait at my place. You might like to see . . . my pictures.” There was an eagerness in the old voice. Not knowing how to refuse, the president accepted. But—“Pictures!” he thought. He visualized a plush-covered album, utter boredom.

The janitor surprised him. The man, who earned his living with bent back, broom and coal shovel, laid out before the school man not family portraits but photographs of trees. Rather wonderful photographs. Composed for beauty, developed with rare skill. A willow tree in a storm; an ancient oak bathed in the magic of sunset; a lone maple at a lane entrance; silver birches in a twinkling fairy dance.

“You do all this—yourself?” exclaimed the astonished guest.

“Yes, it is my recreation.”—R. E. O’Bolger in The Rotarian.

The Trouble-Shooter

The Timid Soul

QUESTION:

I am timid and I find it very difficult to become adjusted to new environments and situations. In college, I feel unwanted and lonely in groups of young people. How can I be well-adjusted like the others about me?

ANSWER:

By Sadi Moon

When we are shy and backward, we are self-conscious. God did not mean for us to be self-conscious, but rather, to forget ourselves and love him and those about us. The self-conscious, shy person is being as selfish as is the person who is brash, bold, and unkind. The energy he spends in feeling the “eyes of the critical world turned in upon him” should be spent in thinking about others.

Another way to look upon shyness is this: God gave us stewardship over our lives, to spend serving others, not in allowing ourselves to entertain feelings of self-pity. It’s almost an affront to God to stand in criticism of ourselves. We’re not to despise ourselves any more than we are to despise anyone else.

These two ideas helped me as much as anything to gather impetus in overcoming shyness. With this realization that I disobeyed a law of God in thinking about myself, I looked then upon the other side of the question. What’s the affirmative thing I can do?

Saying it is easy; doing it the first few times is hard.

Get interested in the other person. Not just one person, but everybody. Think about them, study them. Sit a moment in an active group; choose someone who looks ill at ease, determine what he needs and then go do it for him. I remember the summer after I finished my sophomore year, I went to Nauvoo camp. I had gone the year before, and I felt as if I had been a complete failure. I had wandered around the camp buried under a burden of shyness and loneliness. This year, I resolved it would be different. The first thing I did after plunking down my bags and bedding, was to help someone who was struggling with a mattress. “Here, let me help you; it’s easier with two doing it,” I said. Then we started talking. I asked lots of questions and kept smiling. It set the whole mood of the camp for me, and it was a happy one.

At every opportunity, give, act, smile, forget yourself, and ask questions. A college classroom is a wonderful place. It’s the ideal setting for, “Where are you from? What is your major?” and from then on it’s easy.

If you’re going to give, you’ll feel happier if you have some things you feel you can do well. This is of secondary importance in reality except as an aid to your own morale. You don’t have to sing, play the oboe, or be a wonderful seamstress, but anybody can smile and be a good sport. Poise isn’t going to drop down upon you from the skies.

And don’t hesitate to ask God. He wants to help. He loves you even more than you love yourself. He wants you to fulfill your stewardship. And he will help you.

Portland, Oregon.—Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Smith of Portland, Oregon, celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary by holding open house at the home of their daughter, Mrs. F. B. Schwinchtenberg. Another daughter, Mrs. J. G. Simoni of Troutdale, Oregon, was joint hostess. Two great-granddaughters, Miss Betty Bohall and Mrs. Donald Shook, were in charge of the refreshments. Seventy-one friends and relatives were present for the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith were married in Holton, Kansas, on November 17, 1887. They moved to the west coast in 1902, where their son and three daughters were born. They have been members of the Reorganized Church for forty-four years. Mr. Smith holds the office of deacon, and Mrs. Smith is an active worker in the women's department.

Lamoni, Iowa.—A lumber co-operative has been organized to operate in this city. Its purpose is to make building materials available to members at economical prices. A number of prominent citizens are heading the project, and it is believed that it will enjoy a success similar to that experienced with the creamery co-operative.

Eros, Louisiana.—A harvest festival was sponsored by the Zion's League under the direction of Mrs. Lillian Powell on November 28; a total of $70.69 was cleared on the project. A box supper was held on December 4 which netted $205.

Rich Hill, Missouri.—Elder Arthur J. Rock of Joplin completed a two-weeks' series of illustrated lectures on December 14. The theme of this series was "An Unchangeable God in a Changeable Civilization." Nonmember attendance ran high, and a baptismal service was held on the closing Sunday afternoon. Each Tuesday evening following his sermon, Elder Rock met with the young people for League; all Rich Hill young people were invited to attend these meetings. On the night of December 12, the entire congregation met for fellowship and refreshments at the close of the service. The Rich Hill Saints attribute the success of the meetings to fasting and prayer, which they observed on the Wednesday evening preceding the series.

BULLETIN BOARD

Southern Michigan Women's Institute

Arrangements are being made for an institute to be held on April 6 for the women in Southern Michigan District. Pauline Arnsen, chairman of the General Council of Women, will conduct two classes. In the evening, a banquet will be held for both men and women commemorating the organization of the church. The women of all other districts in Michigan are invited to attend.

NELLIE MOTTASHED,
District Leader.

Books Wanted

R. W. Burley, 477 Magnolia Way, Dinuba, California, wants a Marvelous Work and a Wonder, by Daniel McGregor. Write, stating price and condition of book, before sending.

Ralph W. Moore, 16250 Mansfield, Detroit 27, Michigan, wants to buy a copy of The Instructor and a set of Church Histories. Please write to him, stating price and condition of books, before sending them.

WEDDINGS

Hardie-Johnson

Ila Mae Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Johnson, and Richard Walter Hardie, son of Mrs. W. G. Hardie, were married at the Reorganized Church in Boone, Iowa, on September 28. Elder Guy Johnson, uncle of the bride, performed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Hardie are making their home in Boone.

West-Williams

Marjorie Lucille Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Williams of Escatawpa, Mississippi, and Denzil Jay West, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. West of Independence, Missouri, were married on December 5 at the Enoch Hill Reorganized Church in Independence. The bridegroom's father read the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. West spent their honeymoon in Iowa, which included a brief stay at Graceland where they met. They are making their home in Independence.

Wilcox-Jones

Hazel Jones and Orrin R. Wilcox were married on November 26 at the Reorganized Church in Fairview, Montana, Elder W. R. Hillman officiating. Following a trip to the Black Hills in South Dakota, the couple returned to their home in Fairview. Mr. Wilcox teaches school at Dore, North Dakota.

DEATHS

YARRINGTON.—Kenneth, was born November 6, 1907, at Bentley, Michigan, and died October 17, 1947, at Saginaw, Michigan, after having been struck by an automobile. He lived in Bentley a number of years, later moving to Flint, where he was graduated from the Flint Central High School. He returned to Bentley and on February 27, 1932, was married to Elsie Aileen Burtch. Three children were born to this union; Benjamin, Judy, and Carol. Following this marriage, he moved to Midland where he worked for the Ashman Grocery for four years, then began working at the Dow Chemical Company, where he became a valued employee. At the time of his death, he was a foreman in the instrument department.

Kenneth was a very devoted church member, spending most of his time in service. He was ordained a priest in 1933 and an elder in 1938. He was young people's leader for many years and was always a faithful member in the choir. He devoted much time and effort during the erection of the Midland Church and was the first pastor in the new church. When a full-time man was appointed to this branch, Elder Yarrington was chosen to be the associate pastor and served in that capacity until his death. Funeral services were held in the Midland Church, Elder Byron H. Doty and John W. Banks officiating. Burial was in the Midland cemetery.

DOBSON.—Emma Louisa, was born February 16, 1856 in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, the eldest daughter of John and Rebecca McKim. When she was yet young, the family moved to Deloit, Iowa, and later to Lamoni, Iowa. She was married to Eli Taylor Dobson on March 31, 1878, who preceded her in death in 1903. Sister Dobson moved to Independence, Missouri, from St. Joseph, Missouri, twenty-five years ago and was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church for seventy-five years. She was active in the work of the Campus Shop, being a talented needlewoman, and giving freely of her time.

Her passing is mourned by a son, Blair L. Dobson of Pasadena, California, and a daughter, Mrs. Dana Scott of the home. Another son, Austin M. Dobson, preceded her in death. She also leaves a sister, Mrs. Alice C. McCormick, seven grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. Services were conducted by Glaude Smith, assisted by Donald Lents, at the Roland Speaks Funeral Chapel. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni, Iowa.

NAVE.—Edger William, died November 25, 1947, at the Elkhart General Hospital in Elkhart, Indiana. He was a native of Lexington, Missouri. On October 2, 1936, he married Nora Crabtree; they moved to Elkhart six years ago where he was employed as a fireman for the Weis Manufacturing Company. A member of the Reorganized Church, he attended Mishawaka Branch. Surviving are his wife; three sisters: Mrs. Grace Bell, Mrs. Joseph Thompson, and Maude Nave; and a brother, Elmer Nave, all of Lexington. Services were held at the Westbrook Funeral Home on November 26, Elder Forest E. Myers officiating, after which the body was taken to Lexington for further services and burial.

CURTIS.—Pfc. Kenneth, was born August 12, 1924, in Independence, Missouri, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Curtis. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 11, 1933, and was graduated from William Chrisman High School in 1943. He was a member of the ROTC and was active in Scout work. He entered the service of his country on July 20, 1943, and was assigned to the Third Army in Germany, where he lost his life on November 9, 1944.

Besides his parents, he leaves a brother, Leonard Curtis, Jr., of Grandview, Washington; two sisters: Mrs. Juanita McDermott of Richland, Washington, and Rosemary Curtis of the home. Also surviving are his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Nord of Independence, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted at the Walnut Park Church in Independence on November 29, 1947, Elders Glaude Smith and C. G. Closson officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

STENQUIST.—Emma Mae, was born July 12, 1897, at Coleman, Michigan, and died in Grand Junction, Colorado, on November 26, 1947. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on October 20, 1907, at Coleman. On April 9, 1939, she was married to Fred Stenquist.

Surviving are her husband; her mother; two sons (by a former marriage), Don and Gerald Roberts; a brother, Leo Tessman of Coleman, Michigan; and four sisters: Mrs. Lillian Kline of Three Rivers, Michigan; Mrs. Alice Drake of Nottawa, Michigan; Mrs. Blanch Fisher of Saginaw, Michigan; and Mrs. Edith Nobbs of Coleman. She also leaves three grandchildren. Services were held at the Martin Funeral Home in Grand Junction, Pastor C. B. Wallis and Teacher R. H. Oliver officiating.

WALKER.—Jessie Viola, daughter of John and Elizabeth Sheets, was born near Osceola, Iowa, on August 15, 1875, and died August 31, 1947. She moved to Kansas at the age of eleven. On October 12, 1893, she was married to Ira N. Walker; six children were born to this marriage. Mrs. Walker was a member of the Reorganized Church for forty-eight years.

She leaves her husband, Ira, of Wichita; three daughters: Naomi Underwood and Goldie Lawson of St. Louis, Missouri, and Ethel Ward of Wichita; and two sons: Earl R. of Springfield, Missouri, and Ray I. of Warren, Ohio. One daughter, Leah, died in infancy. Elder D. J. Williams was in charge of the funeral service. Burial was in the Wichita Park Cemetery.

RUSSELL.—Lillias L., daughter of Henry Harrison and Emmaline Jackson Stockton, was born on April 8, 1882, at Dawson, Alabama, and died on November 30, 1947. Her father was a Methodist minister, but, after hearing the Latter Day Saint gospel, she was baptized at a reunion in Manchester, Texas, in 1913. During most of her life, she was isolated from the Reorganized Church, but she helped in other groups. She taught classes in both the Baptist and Christian Churches. For a number of years she was unable to talk, due to the paralyzing effect of a stroke, but she was always cheerful and greeted everyone with a smile. She gratefully received the Communion when taken to her on the first Sunday of the month by a member of the priesthood. Those who knew her loved her and will cherish her in memory.

She leaves a son, Boyd L. Davis of Independence, Missouri; a daughter, Mrs. Nellie Fay Brazier of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; a sister, Mrs. Hattie Thompson of Independence; and five grandchildren. Services were held at the George Carson Funeral Home in Independence, Elders Glaude Smith and William Cowan officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

STRASZACKER.—Pauline Willi, was born February 15, 1864, at Santa Clara, Utah, and passed away at the home of her son on November 30, 1947. As a child, she moved with her parents to Los Angeles, California. On May 5, 1893, she was married to Christian G. Straszacker; one child was born to this union. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on May 21, 1881; throughout her life, she was a loyal member. Mr. Straszacker preceded her in death in January, 1942.

She is survived by her son, Gerhardt; two grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. The funeral was conducted at the Eckermann Parlours in Burbank, John W. Rushton officiating. Interment was in Forest Lawn Cemetery.

BURROUGHS.—Lester, son of Hayes and Nancy Burroughs, was born on June 14, 1855, and died at his home in Zenith on July 4, 1947. In 1881, he was married to Mattie Stoddard; seven children were born to this union. Mrs. Burroughs preceded him in death in 1898. Two years later he was married to Matilda McGowan, who passed away in 1913. Elizabeth Cisne became his wife the following year. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1886 and for over sixty years was a member of the Brush Creek congregation.

He is survived by his wife; four sons: Walter of Xenia, Carl of Zenith, Charles of Fairfield, and Fay of San Francisco; a daughter, Mrs. Mabel Clements of Detroit; two stepsons: J. B. Cisne of Guthrie and C. W. Cisne of Mt. Vernon; twenty-six grandchildren, thirty-seven great-grandchildren, and three great-great-grandchildren. Two daughters, Mrs. Maud Lee and Mrs. Etta Clements, preceded their father in death. Funeral services were conducted at the Brush Creek Church, Pastor Lewis DeSels officiating. Interment was in the Harrell Cemetery.

POTTER.—Anna M., daughter of Ellen and Alexander Richardson, was born October 26, 1867, in Omaha, Nebraska, and died November 5, 1947, at Omaha. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church when a young woman, remaining a faithful member throughout her life. On January 13, 1892, she was married to Otis R. Potter; five children were born to this union. Mr. Potter preceded her in death in 1911.

She is survived by two sons: Ray A. and Otis R.; three daughters: Mrs. Frances Tomaso and Gladys M., all of Omaha, and Mrs. Constance Borders of Dallas, Texas; a sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Agenstein of St. Joseph, Missouri; nine grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren. Services were conducted by Elder John Blackmore at the Haynes-Roeder Funeral Home. Interment was in Hillcrest Cemetery.

CURTIS.—Bell June, was born July 3, 1860, in Indiana, and died on November 26, 1947, at Wichita, where she had made her home since 1937. She was married to Benjamin M. Curtis at Gaylord, Kansas, on July 5, 1878; it was here, also, that she was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1903. Four years later, she and her husband moved to Whitehorse, Oklahoma, and from there to Waldron, Arkansas, in 1914. In 1920, they made their home in Ames, Kansas, where Mr. Curtis died six years later.

Surviving are six sons, five daughters, one stepson, twenty-nine grandchildren, fifty-two great-grandchildren; and eighteen great-great-grandchildren. Services were conducted at the Culbertson Mortuary, Elder D. J. Williams officiating.

SMITH.—Harriett Copeland, was born September 16, 1868, in Logan County, Illinois, and died November 15, 1947, at the home of her daughter in Sheridan, Wyoming. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1883 and was an active member throughout her life. On February 1, 1887, she was married to George Allen; four children were born to this union, one of which preceded her in death. On December 22, 1908, she was married to Asa Hight, who died in 1923. On May 17, 1924, she and William G. Smith were united in marriage. Mr. Smith died on April 3, 1940.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. Gertrude Byrd of Sheridan, and Mrs. Mary C. Jones of Nashville, Arkansas; one son, William Allen of Detroit, Michigan; five grandchildren; fourteen great-grandchildren; and two great-great-grandchildren. Priest Paul Sargent was in charge of the funeral service. Interment was in the Sheridan Municipal Cemetery.

VAN DUSEN.—Bertha Ella Kent, was born January 17, 1877, in Iowa and died December 11, 1947, in St. Joseph, Missouri. She was married to John Q. Kent in 1892, who preceded her in death on April 13, 1939. Mrs. Kent was baptized into the Reorganized Church on March 19, 1898, and was a devoted member the remainder of her life. On March 3, 1946, she was married to Edward Van Dusen, who survives her. She also leaves two daughters: Mrs. William Reiley and Mrs. Ned Romano of St. Joseph; eight sons: Cleo and Norman Kent of St. Joseph; Fermon Kent of Bolckow, Missouri; Lawrence Kent of Hickman Mills, Missouri; Alva, Levett, and Oval Kent of Los Angeles, California; and Arnold Kent of Boulder, Colorado; two sisters: Mrs. Bert Hoyt of Ravenwood, Missouri, and Mrs. Noah Wells of Maryville, Missouri; a brother, Orval Halfhill of Grain Valley, Missouri; seventeen grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in St. Joseph, Elders R. Melvin Russell and A. B. Heinrichs officiating. Interment was in the Guilford, Missouri, cemetery.

GRAY.—Robert William, son of the late William Henry and Mary Ann Gray, was born October 16, 1879, near Mitchell, Ontario, and died December 1, 1947, in the General Hospital at Stratford, Ontario, where he had been a patient since September 10 when he suffered a stroke. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church early in life.

He leaves one brother, Alma, of Mitchell, with whom he made his home; and two sisters: Mrs. Annie Hodgson of London, Ontario, and Mrs. Frank Barker of Bentley, Alberta. Services were conducted at the Lockhart Funeral Chapel, Elder Almer W. Sheehy of London officiating. Interment was in Woodland Cemetery.

GRUBB.—Maggie Beeshly, was born March 4, 1867, in Maryland and died December 8, 1947, in Independence, Missouri. As a young woman, she homesteaded in western North Dakota. Later, she bought property in western Idaho, and on August 23, 1922, she was married to A. C. Patheal, who passed away in 1938. Following her marriage to Mr. Patheal, she united with the Reorganized Church and remained a faithful member throughout her life. Early in 1939, she moved to Independence and on June 12 of that year was married to William Grubb. Patriarch R. V. Hopkins and Elder Amos T. Higdon were in charge of the funeral. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

McROBERTS.—Mary Louise, daughter of Dr. George H. and Elizabeth Jackson, was born June 6, 1868, at Cold Run, California, and died in San Francisco, California, on December 6, 1947. She was married to William G. McRoberts on December 21, 1892; shortly afterwards, they moved to Woodlands, California, where their daughter, Louise, was born. In 1911, Mrs. McRoberts was baptized into the Reorganized Church and remained a faithful member throughout her life. During her last five years, which brought ill health, she was cared for by her daughter. She was visiting at the home of her grandson, Dr. John Harter at the time of her death.

Besides her daughter and grandson, she leaves a great-granddaughter; a sister, Mrs. Alice Litchfield of San Francisco; and a brother, Dr. Julian A. Jackson of Los Angeles, California. Mr. McRoberts died on January 7, 1947. Elders Myron Schall and John W. Rushton officiated at the funeral, which was held in Woodlands, California.

TRUMAN.—Samuel Eldon, son of Joseph and Elizabeth Truman, was born September 30, 1888, at Flagler, Iowa, and died August 13, 1947. On June 7, 1914, he was married to Martha Williams at La Junta, Colorado. He had been a resident of Wichita since 1924 and an employee of the Santa Fe Railroad for twenty-two years. He was a faithful attendant at church services and always made his home available for missionaries. On Sundays, he and his wife held open house for the young people of the community. During his six months of illness, he continued to be cheerful and make friends.

Surviving are his wife; two daughters: Mrs. Charles Shannon of Manhattan, Kansas, and Mrs. Raymond Barr, Jr., of Des Moines, Iowa; four sisters: Mrs. Margaret Skinner, Mrs. W. T. Altman, Mrs. Amelia Ellis, and Mrs. Emma Orman; two brothers: William and Joseph H. Truman; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Broadway Mortuary in Wichita, Pastor D. J. Williams officiating.

* Australian Journey

In Australia they say that President John F. Garver is taking enthusiastically to Australian ways and habits of speech. He has learned to eat holding his fork upside down in his left hand; and on occasion says, "My word!" or "Too right!" When up against a difficult problem, he says, "That will take a bit of doing." He squirmed a bit when he landed and had to fill out a form describing himself as an "alien," but is demonstrating that "we are no longer foreigners and strangers, but fellow citizens with the Saints." In turn, the Australians have received him and Bishop Johnson with the utmost kindness and hospitality.

* The Littlest Worker

Appeals for money come by the dozen, and sometimes the noblest cause will bungle its public relations. When this last appeal appeared in the mail box, I felt a little sour.

"A uniformed worker will call for your donation in a couple of days," said the announcement. "Phooey," I snorted, "I'm not giving!"

Next evening somebody's child—young, small, and thin, but very serious—came to the door, representing the Cause. Apparently, they were as hard up for workers as I was for cash.

"Did you decide to help us?" she asked, as grown up as she could.

It is hard to say "No" to the very young. They are so earnest, and they still believe there is kindness and goodness in the world. We have great need of that faith today.

Nothing reverses more easily than a mean decision. Down I went, scratching the bottom of my resources once more.

"Whatever I may think of the Cause," I murmured, "I'm giving this for the Littlest Worker!"

* Youth

I was making a call on a retired minister, a man noted for his learning and the youthful vigor of his mind. He has kindly included me among his friends.

Let it be admitted (for it is certainly known) that I am plowing deep into my middle years. The bifocals are getting stronger, the biceps weaker, and the bicuspid has long since been sacrificed to various dentists.

When I stood up to go, my friend surprised and delighted me by saying, "It's such a pleasure to have you young people call on us!"

What a diplomat!

* From Bad to Verse

Sonny was laboring on a poem that had to be ready for his English Lit class the next day. He was chewing the end of his pencil, and there was a look of anxiety and frustration on his young face.

"Mom," he said plaintively, "this poem won't come out right."

Mom looked at the paper: "The Wise Men brought frankincense and myrrh, But the little lambs only brought their fur."

Mom smiled. "But, darling, lambs don't have fur. They have wool!"

Sonny made his best appeal. "You fix it, won't you, Mom?"

An hour later, Sonny was playing football with the gang on the back lot.

It was Mom who was chewing the pencil, with a look of anxiety and frustration on her face, still rather young.

Announcing a new series of filmstrips on Christian Courtship

Boy Meets Girl

Why are pickups dangerous? Where can you meet boys and girls of high ideals? Are there places other than the church? Why does an introduction add dignity to a friendship? How do you introduce your date to your parents? How long should a boy know a girl before asking her for a date?

Boy Dates Girl

How important is dating in the lives of young people? What is the purpose of dating? Should a girl date a boy whom she does not want her family to meet? What does going to church together do for a couple's friendship? What are the disadvantages of necking and petting? How can a young person develop clean, wholesome, Christian attitudes about sex?

Boy Marries Girl

Is marriage a career? What are the reasons for our high divorce rate? What are the "best ages to marry"? How can you tell when you are in love? How long should the engagement be? During this period, should the couple check on the cost of living, decide on the matter of religion, and talk over the matter of children? How important is religion in marriage? What does it mean to dedicate a marriage to God?

The Christian Family

What are the characteristics of a Christian home and Christian family life? What are the advantages of running a home democratically? How about the family council plan? Should a parent shield his child from responsibilities? Should children be paid for doing chores around the house? Is a family being Christian if they do not pay tithes? Does a Christian family enjoy life more than a non-Christian family?

EACH FILM WITH DISCUSSION GUIDE

$2.50

Order from VISUAL AIDS DEPARTMENT

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Independence, Missouri

Trail Blazing

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

JANUARY 10, 1948

NUMBER 2

www.LatterDayTruth.org

MARTHA

There must be Marthas plodding through each working hour
 With eyes of harassed glint and faces dour,
 To rock the cradle, bake the bread,
 Lay soothing hands on fevered head
 And mother half the world,
 Nor turn away to rest
 When tiny hands are curled
 Against maternal breast.
 They brush and keep the hearth,
 Do all the homely things
 That keep them chained to earth
 And stifle heart that sings.
 There must be Marthas bearing burdens
 All through life.
 Who weds a Martha, weds a goodly wife.

MARY

There must be Marys making joyous each grey day,
 To teach the world what laughter means and play.
 Bringing song to life on smiling lips,
 Wearing well a heart that gaily trips
 Through life, nor stumbles
 Over heartache. A heart
 That's lifted high, yet humbles
 Itself at each day's start
 And at its close. Someone
 To bring to common things each morn
 A radiance like the sun
 And lighten burdens here for all men born.
 There must be Marys giving laughter
 To the end.
 Who weds a Mary, weds a goodly friend.

—JO SKELTON

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

Ready to Build Zion?	3
Across the Desk	4

ARTICLES:

The Case for God, by Edgar Henry Montross	5
A Call to Rugged Righteousness, by Reed M. Holmes	10
A Tribute to the Memory of R. V. Hopkins, by Elbert A. Smith	11
What L. D. S. Believe About Faith, by Evan A. Fry	12
Letters	15
Food Chats, by B. Mildred Nelson	16
South American Journey, by Frances E. Pearse	18
A New Americanism, by Martha Ford Floro	20
How to Be Crazy and Like It, by Naomi Russell	21
Bulletin Board	22

AUDITORIUM NEWS

Gulf States Institute at Pensacola, Florida.—
 There was an attendance of eighty per cent of the priesthood at the recent institute here, according to the report of Apostle Maurice L. Draper. President F. H. Edwards attended and found a spirit of interest and enthusiasm that promises an outstanding future for the church work in this region. Brother Draper says that the baptismal rate is up in every district in the Southern Mission. Two new groups were organized during the last six months: Pascagoula, Mississippi, with Elder J. L. Barlow as leader, and Flomaton, Alabama, with D. F. Hobbs, Sr., a priest, in charge. Pascagoula had 176 at the organization meeting. Regular attendance at each place will be about fifty. Both groups have strong prospects for the future.

Evangelist Ray Whiting will be in Texas during the months of January to March.

Southern Indiana and the Kentucky-Tennessee Districts have had fifty-seven baptisms since the last General Conference. Missionary A. J. Breckenridge hopes that Southern Indiana will reach a hundred.

Almer W. Sheehy, pastor at London, Ontario, reports that they have baptized thirty-six, have broken the tithing record the second year in succession, and have ordained six younger men and one older man to the priesthood.

Mrs. John C. Stiegel, Director of Religious Education and Examiner for the Rock Island District, recently enrolled a class for credit study and explained: "My husband and I drive the fifty miles to Savanna each Sunday evening to conduct this class, and we find it very enjoyable. The Hanover folk drive ten miles to attend the class." They are studying, "Doctrine and Policies of Our Own Church," and it is hoped that such devotion on the part of both teacher and students will bring lasting joys to them, with their added light being reflected in many areas to many others.

A class at Rock Island, Ill., according to the teacher, Mrs. Ethel Jordan, has worked diligently and faithfully, dispensing with refreshments, dues, and social activities, confining their efforts entirely to study. A Presbyterian friend who has been attending the class is to be baptized soon. She has been superintendent of the Sunday school, teacher of an adult class, and president of the Ladies' Aid, all of the Presbyterian church, but has seen the beauties of the gospel and is happy over what she has found.

John Rogers, the Director of Religious Education and Examiner for the Eastern Michigan District, has just enrolled a class of thirty-two members and comments thus: "Of the thirty-two enrolled, two are nonmembers. Our attendance is much greater than the enrolled number. . . . The local pastors and church school directors are very co-operative, and their attitude and help does much to make this work successful."

Ready to Build Zion?

Abiding Principles

In the current perilous situation of the world, there is a great interest among people of the church in the Gathering, and many have moved and are moving to the area near our church headquarters. A considerable problem is created for church leaders by many of these people who insist that something should be done immediately to establish the social and economic institutions and services of Zion.

It is in times of danger and distress that the demand for action is most insistent. During the depression from 1930 to 1936, there was a similar demand. In the boom times of the late 1920's, there wasn't much interest because people seemed to be doing rather well under secular world conditions.

In both the recent war and in the current so-called conditions of peace, the military danger to the world has kept the interest in Zion alive.

It makes the observer apprehensive to see that for so many people the interest in Zion depends not upon their religious and philosophical principles, but upon their fear of world conditions. Fear is a poor motive at any time, because whatever the coward does is done with one eye over his shoulder and with but half of his mind upon his work; and you know that as soon as his fear is removed, he will cease whatever he is doing and return to his previous preoccupation with his private concerns. Only those who are motivated by abiding principles can be trusted to build Zion.

Conditions Necessary

Those who propose immediate action often quote the words from Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10, "There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion." But as a part and a condition of that statement there is a significant qualification, "were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice." One wonders if this language does not refer to the many Christian denominations of the world, as well as to us.

There is the key factor. People were not ready and obedient in the first decade of the church. They had the material, but they lacked the spiritual quality.

And now, when people inquire about the redemption of Zion, we should ask them, "Are you ready? Are you personally ready? Can you do anything at all? Are you obedient to the admonition of God?"

Lip Service

Important truths are often revealed in little things.

I have been in many prayer meetings where people bathed themselves in tears as they prayed for God to show them something to do to help in the building of Zion. I have heard hundreds testify of their readiness to dedicate all that they have to the work of God's kingdom. I have witnessed these things, and I know them to be true.

And yet in recent weeks I have heard our pastor pleading with his congregation for young women to take up a study of girl's work and to become leaders in Oriole and Girl Scout programs so that the many fine little girls who are growing up may have the leadership that they need for their development. If we are ever to have Zion, these little girls must begin their training now, to become its teachers, its workers, its leaders, and its mothers. Unless we train them, there can be no Zion. And yet our pastor's pleas have gone as if they were unheard. Where are those who so earnestly testify of their dedication and devotion? Unless we can meet the needs of these little girls, we cannot and will not do the work of Zion. For this is now the work of Zion.

A local officer said that he needed help to wrap packages to send away to needy members. Certainly, here is one of the great tasks that needs to be done. Charitable work may not be at the very center of our economic and social program. But unless we can and will meet our responsibilities here, we are not ready for the responsibilities of Zion, regardless of what we may say. Did hundreds flock in to answer the appeal of that officer for help? Were there lines of persons who have been assaulting heaven with their cries for something to do, responding to this call for workers? There were not. A round dozen, a number of them elderly and frail from their years, came in, and had to labor overlong to get the work done.

A member of the priesthood who has been trying to get something done and who faces discouragement in his task, mentioned something about "lip service." And doesn't it make a person wonder at times when he tries to get some real help with some real work? An old hymn says, "We'll sing and we'll shout with the armies of heaven," like the Children of Israel marching after Joshua around the walls of Jericho; but too many of modern Israel begin and end their zeal with the singing and the shouting.

Possibilities

It takes a long time to work out the plans for the building of Zion. But it is a possible task. It can be done. It takes an even longer time to prepare a people who are willing and determined to do the work. This also is a possible task. This, too, can be done.

The plan is impotent without the people. The people are helpless without the plan. They must grow and develop together.

We must have both faith and
(Continued on page 14.)

Editorial

Across the Desk

Alfred and Margot Gerhard Schoepke, of Berlin, Germany, November 13, 1947:

It was with great joy that we again received one of those wonderful packages from you dear people. We desire to express our sincere thanks to all of you who help us so much. Especially do we desire to thank the church officials who have put this work into operation. We are going through a terrible testing time, but we will stay firm and trust to the church. You and all the members who have made this possible, I again express my deepest thanks. May our God in heaven richly bless you all, and may his work soon be triumphant.

With best regards to you and all the members in America.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Grateful for American Help

Extract from a letter written by Gero Harold Goedeke, of Hannover, Germany, to the Leader of Women at Fort Collins, Colorado.

I found your address on the parcel which recently came to my mother. We are so glad to receive a parcel from the members at Fort Collins.

We have our meetings in a half bombed-out schoolroom. It is not easy for members here in Hannover. We have our meeting on Sunday at ten o'clock. Most of the members live outside the town. There are only a few families who have not lost their homes by air raids. We in Hannover have had eighty per cent of our homes destroyed. We have lost everything—home and clothes. Now that you have helped us, we are grateful.

On Sunday we have no trains or busses, and many must come on foot. In winter we cannot make a fire in this meeting room, and it is very cold. It is a hard life here at present.

I was a soldier all during the war and was wounded three times. Many times I lay in hospitals. In 1945, I left an American camp for prisoners of war here in Germany. A year later my brother returned from imprisonment in France. But many of our young brothers have not been heard from in a long time. Most of them are in Russia.

Our best thanks to all the brothers and sisters in Fort Collins.

Needs Church Books

One of our young church leaders is in need of three copies of a book entitled The Life and Ministry of Jesus by F. Henry Edwards. She is willing to buy or borrow these copies and will be glad to pay for purchase copies or return borrowed copies when the course is finished. The need is urgent and immediate. Will those who have copies of the book and who are willing to sell or lend them please write immediately to:

Mrs. Bernice C. Staffeld,
521 S. Cedar Lake Road,
Minneapolis 5, Minnesota.

Wants to Hear From Members

Brother John Harvey, Box 1167, Big Spring, Texas, has recently moved to that area and would like to hear from an officer of the nearest branch or group of church people. He would also like to hear from any members of the church in that area to establish friendly contacts. It is his desire to transfer his membership to the nearest branch.

A Report From Salina, Kansas

The small group of Saints in Salina was greatly encouraged recently when Elder J. D. Shower spent several days preaching and administering to them. During a prayer service, we were spoken to by the Spirit. We were told that we should be faithful in promoting the work of the church in Salina, and that others would be added to the group. We were greatly helped by this; we have no priesthood leadership here but trust our needs will be provided for in the future. Brother Showers has done much good in the Northwestern Kansas District.

I was unable to find our church or the pastor's name in two of our larger cities. We of Salina keep our meeting place (the Y. M. C. A. building) listed each week and have been happily surprised to have out-of-town visitors with us several times. We shall appreciate having our small group remembered in prayer that it may grow and help in the building of the kingdom.

MRS. EDNA F. HENRY.

928 South Santa Fe
Salina, Kansas

Ministers All

*Who seeks for heaven alone to save his soul
May keep the path, but will not reach the goal;
While he who walks in love may wander far,
But God will bring him where the blessed are. —Van Dyke.*

THE CHURCH is not only a divine organization for the perpetuation of abstract truth, but it is also a divinely ordained institution for the expression of truth in worship and in behavior. If this world is to grow better, the Christian people must work harder and more enthusiastically to establish by demonstration the superiority of good over evil. Too often we are lulled into spiritual sleep, believing that what is today exists for the best. We forget that God works through persons, not through machines and impersonal organizations. The Restored Church can be revealed to the people of the world only through the lives of the Saints. The "Word" must become flesh through us.

The broader ministry of every Saint involves living the kind of life and doing the kind of deeds which will be helpful to other folk. The common ministry of every Saint is to utilize his talents, powers, and opportunities for the good of brother, church, and community. It is evident that in the larger sense the goodness of the church can be measured only by the goodness of its members. The history of the church is replete with losses because the Saints have thought that the idealisms of the church were self-realizing. Worthy idealisms are easy to formulate, but the realization of the ideal is much harder to achieve.

The corporate ministry of the church to the world is not performed by the priesthood exclusively; it is the combined ministry of all members. We are all ministers. The message of this church is conveyed to the world in a large measure by and through our lives. We are also ministers to each other in the ministry of neighborliness and sympathetic friendships. Wherever there is a need, wherever there is suffering, wherever there is hunger and thirst for friendship, there lies the field for the ministry of every Saint, be he pastor, priest, or layman.

—John Blackmore in Ray-O-Lite

Volume 95

January 10, 1948

Number 2

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

The Case for GOD

By Edgar Henry Montross

I HAVE NEVER been agnostic; but, for many years during childhood and manhood, I often pondered the question, "Is there really a God, and if so, is it possible in this age to apprehend him through some unquestionable evidence?" To those who may be similarly perplexed, this article is especially addressed.

In those days, I used to speculate about angels and miracles, but could entertain no hope of ever finding assurance from such sources. The internal evidence of the Bible and the fulfillment of prophecy were, also, the subjects of much reflection; but, while I possessed a strong faith, such evidence seemed to lack the element of certainty that my reason demanded. There seemed too much room for coincidence, misapplication, interpolations, and other disturbing factors.

The evidence of God in nature appeared to offer, perhaps, the least likely field for confirmation of all. I was familiar with David's assertion (Psalm 19: 1) that "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork." And, I had read the statements of eminent scientists to the effect that order in the universe gives evidence of a creative mind. The answer was there, all right; but I was unable, in those days, to bring it into the focus of clear realization. The movements and orbits of suns and planets could not be seen like a baseball in flight and, so appeared too abstruse and mysterious to be examined like the wheels of a clock behind which the inquisitive child eventually discovers the mainspring. I was like a tiny ant beside the giant presses of a modern newspaper plant, bewildered by the whirling wheels and unable to comprehend their relation to the engineer in the distant power plant.

I wondered, also, about the statements of writers and poets, such as Emerson, who said, "Nature is so thin a screen, God breaks through at every point." But, still, I could not place my finger on the key to the secret.

At one time, while examining some snowflakes, I was profoundly moved by their marvelous design and uniform structure and felt at that time that I was close to some significant principle, but it still eluded me.

Then came a day when I was in the garden: close to nature, and close to God; evidently, very much closer than I suspected, and in a flash of vivid realization, there was the answer—but, of all places!—in a spider web! Would you like to see it, too, as I did? Well, let's take a little trip into the realm of plain and simple reasoning.

SUPPOSE THAT you, like Robinson Crusoe, were stranded on an uncharted island that at first appeared never to have been touched before by the feet of man; but that you eventually came upon, not a footprint, but what appeared to be the remains of a small campfire that had been extinguished soon after it was started. Instantly you know, beyond any reasonable doubt, that a man has been there before you. The evidence is as clear as a graven stone.

There are a dozen sticks of similar proportions lying in a circular pattern like the spokes of a wheel with the hub burned out, leaving the charred ends all pointing toward a central point. And, how would you know those sticks had been placed by man? Why, because of that geometrical pattern, the wheel-spoke arrangement. It cries out to you emphatically that a mind has been at work, and that it was the mind of a man.

The chances for those sticks to have fallen into that pattern through some force of nature, such as wind or earthquake, are so remote that the very thought is ridiculous; and you know that, while the fire could have been ignited by lightning and extinguished by rain, no one could credit any animal, even of the ape family, with a mind capable of arranging that pattern. You know that, of all the animals that walk the face of the earth, only man has the intelligence to visualize and plan and arrange those sticks for such an obvious reason in such a definite design. Remember that word "design"—it is important.

Did you ever weave a basket, mold a vase, or plant a garden? Did you ever build a suspension bridge? a boat? a bicycle? a picket fence? a trellis? a window box? Could you construct anything, even a stack with the baby's building blocks, without first seeing the "design" within your own mind?

Let us get this one thing settled, once and for all: without a mental picture there can be no construction, no fabrication, no creation, or work of any kind by man; and this, undoubtedly, holds true throughout the animal kingdom. Consequently, when a mental picture materializes into a rail fence, or a brush heap, or a cache of nuts in a hollow tree, or a small heap of stones, or a wasp nest, or such a simple thing as a dug hole, or even a stick stuck in the ground, the "design" readily reveals that it is a product of mind.

Also, we can generally tell quite easily the kind of mind that created the design, whether animal or man; and, in most instances, like a detective, determine the kind of animal or man. Sometimes, we can even identify the individual. Thus, when we examine a honeycomb, we can tell from the peculiarities of its design whether it was fashioned by man, or bee. When we find a dam across a small stream, we can quickly determine whether it is the work of man, or beaver; and even a hole in the ground will have its distinguishing characteristics of design.

ENTER THE SPIDER. Apparently she has dreamed up a very resourceful and admirable creation in that little pin-point brain of hers; for, as she moves busily about, there begins to take shape a "design" that only a keen mind could have conceived. First, the foundation strands across the top, sides, and bottom; then the radial joists that fan out from the center like bicycle spokes; and on this framework she fixes the convolutions of the whorl that completes the structure and, what a structure! Truly, here is a product of mind. Indeed, here is something denoting great sagacity and scientific wisdom: something, forsooth, to challenge the exalted mind of man, himself: a "design" that for sheer genius, might well be credited to the engineers who blueprinted the great Golden Gate Bridge.

As I stood in the garden on that eventful day, contemplating that clever flytrap and wondering how the plan for such a magnificent piece of architecture could emerge from such a microscopic brain, to say nothing of the know-how needed in its construction, there flashed through my mind with startling vividness, like a flaming meteor through the midnight sky, a revealing truth—a truth of far-reaching significance—the "design" of that web did not originate in the mind of that spider.

For thousands of years, incalculable millions of spiders of a given species have been building their flytraps, presumably, in an almost identical pattern. They all came from the same blueprint. When "my spider" stepped from the egg, she was on her own. Her mother did not stay around to instruct her in the fine art of web-spinning. It was not necessary. She inherited the talent.

Through the mysterious process that we call instinct, she was able to duplicate the achievements of her mother, who, in turn, had gained the plan from grandmother; and, so on back from daughter to mother, through ten thousand generations, we can reasonably trace that "design" right back to the Adam and Eve of all spiders.

Now, answer this: Has the brain of the spider deteriorated through those far-strung generations? In other words, did Adam and Eve Spider possess an intelligence superior to their puny-minded twentieth-century great-grandchild: an intelligence approaching that of man? Is it not an unavoidable conclusion that the very first daughter of a spider was dependent upon her parents for the mental blueprint of that web, just like her present-day counterpart? And, does it not unquestionably follow that the first mother spider, herself, was just an ordinary spider like the one in your garden, with just an ordinary spider mind and not a paragon of intelligence capable of planning that intricate structure that embodies the same scientific wisdom needed in the construction of the Brooklyn Bridge? Consequently, was she not just as dependent as her offspring upon another mind for that "design"?

The search for God will fail unless you begin by loving him.

And, another thing—even if the spider, presumably should be the product of evolution, we must conclude that she evolved out of some more primitive type, or lower order that could only have possessed a rudiment of mind, incapable of even her own limited reasoning.

Well, there you have it. If the first spider, or any possible progenitor in a changing order, did not possess a mind capable of inventing that web, as it surely seems we must admit; then, pray tell me, where is the mind that conceived it and televised that "design" to the mind of the spider?

THIS BRINGS US back to the question of identity of the creator through the peculiarities of design in his creation. Accordingly, we glance at any abandoned spider web and instantly name the artisan who fabricated it; but, what is more, we see certain distinguishing characteristics that unmistakably disclose the identity of the Architect who drew up the plans as well—if we are willing to look for them.

And this brings us to another interesting angle of speculation; for, I am obsessed, also, with an idea that the really important purpose behind that flytrap is not the obvious one.

I have never been able to figure out the "why" of a mosquito, unless it be that she was intended solely as a curse; but I am willing to admit that the lifetime job of a spider, apparently, is to rid the world of flies, although there does seem to be an awful lot of flies when compared with the spider population. But, what is vastly more important, I read, also, in that web a purpose that transcends such a menial task as fly-trapping, as the music of the maestro excels the work of the violin-maker, or as "Mona Lisa" surpasses the weave pattern in the canvas on which she is enthroned.

To be specific, I read in that web a purpose that makes the business of fly-catching appear only as a crafty trick aimed at diverting the attention of the unwary observer from the most important feature of a sly magician's act—a magician with a superlatively cunning mind: so cunning as to be able to contrive a device that would hold in plain view a revelation of His silent and invisible self, and, at the same time, furnish concealment, like the puzzle picture with the hidden face, so effective that millions of probing minds might pass it by with unseeing eyes, while a favored few, for reasons of His own, might be readily apprised at any propitious time through that mysterious medium known as "inspiration," by whispering in their consciousness with a voice that says, "Are you looking for me? Here I am, right behind this spider web."

We have a striking example, as you have probably read, of just such a cunning scheme in a monumental work of man, the Great Pyramid of Ghizeh, which learned men have studied with profound amazement and declared to contain overwhelming evidence of intelligent design and purpose that cannot be reasonably credited to the mere mind of man, and when we turn to the Book of Isaiah, in the 19th chapter we read, "In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord; and it shall be for a sign and a witness unto the Lord of hosts."

Wherever we turn in the animal kingdom, we see these "signs and witnesses," which become glaringly conspicuous if we look intently. Consider, for example, the firefly with the built-in flashlight and the cricket with his one-tune fiddle and the moth with her magical radio set—all very handy aids in carrying on their flirtations, but not strictly essential, since many bugs and grasshoppers and butterflies seem to manage their amours quite successfully without such gadgets.

And speaking of butterflies and moths—what about their metamorphosis? They have one, you know, as any good dictionary or encyclopedia will tell you. Well, I ask you: is all that complicated and remarkable procedure from larva to fairy queen necessary when incalculable billions of similar creatures are constantly being produced through the short-cut method used even by their more refined cousins of the bird family, who do quite well with the simple routine of egg to hen to egg to hen, again and again? Does it not seem plausible that the mind capable of inventing such a peculiar and spectacular, but unnecessary, process may have intended it to serve the additional and primary purpose of testifying to His matchless genius and power?

BUT, GETTING back again to the important business of food supply—truly, a vital "purpose," but note the ramifications—take that honeybee, for example, that has unwittingly trapped herself on the inner side of the windowpane. See how she frantically persists in her mad efforts to dash out what little brain she does possess by trying to force herself through an impenetrable wall that she is determined cannot exist; yet, she is smart enough to perceive far in advance the dearth of the long winter months and make elaborate preparations to meet it with surprising sagacity and ingenuity, but without any apparent advance notice; for I have yet to see a bee that could read an almanac, or understand a radio announcer.

You are God's instrument for doing good to his other children. Do you work at it?

Or, observe her first cousin, the mud dauber wasp, who is constantly up to the same silly tricks. Ponder her unique stuccoed Quonset nursery, which she did not learn to build in a trade school, and note the foresight she displays in storing up with her eggs a supply of fresh meat on the hoof, which she craftily preserves in a coma by means of a hypodermic injection, which she did not learn to administer by attending a medical college, so that Junior will have his pabulum ready at hand when he crawls out of the shell.

Throughout the animal world, in overwhelming abundance, we see these peculiar traits and characteristics that furnish insistent evidence of an invisible mastermind using these myriads of vastly inferior minds as mediums for expression of a sovereign intelligence.

Think of the busy beaver, amazingly equipped to cut down trees to build a dam to form a lake to protect a village of mud huts with submerged entrances—a predetermined purpose if there ever was one—surprisingly similar to a man-made citadel surrounded by a moat. Consider, also, the birds that mysteriously migrate and skillfully build nests to receive eggs that they have not seen. Look at the ant colony (as wondrous as the bees') with its amazing political system, having rules and regulations and slave laborers and dairy herds of aphides.

Then, there is that deep-sea monstrosity, whose picture you see in the illustrated magazines, with the lantern dangling in front of her grotesque face to attract the curiosity of the smaller fish and bring her dinner up within reach of those horrible teeth; and the doodlebug with her simple cone-shaped sandtrap; and the trap-door spider; and, what is more astonishing, the extraordinary ability of the chameleon to change its colors at will; and the protective colorings and designs of the many insects and birds and animals, too numerous to relate; and the almost-incredible radar equipment of the bat, that permits it to fly untouched through a blackened room filled with a maze of dangling wires. We could go on and on, through a seemingly endless variety of remarkable abilities and functions, but what's the use? If these signs and proofs are not enough to dispel your doubts and give you an abiding conviction, then you must be skeptical indeed.

MAYBE YOU ARE saying, "After all, those creatures do have minds of their own, and how do I know what conditions and influences they may have passed through since the dawn of time to develop their instincts and functions?" If you feel that you need something still more plausible, let's take a little excursion into the field of flowers and trees and growing things.

As we step into the flower garden, note the symmetry and spacing of those leaves on that fern, how they are set with almost mathematical precision along the stem in a balanced orderly arrangement. Look at this other plant with the leaves staggered along the stem, but, also, with accurate spacing, all having a uniform shape and size according to a definite scheme, which persistently points to a concealed mind that has such complete control that even the growth is miraculously stopped at a given size.

See the color patterns in those pansies and the fanciful designs and colors in those gladioli and iris blossoms, and the extraordinary and exquisite modeling of that columbine, the intricate shape of the snapdragons, and the variety of colors in those zinnias. Everywhere we look, in a hundred ways and a thousand varieties, we see order, arrangement, harmony, beauty, pattern, and "design." It fairly jumps at you and sets up a clamor in your ears, "Design, DESIGN, D-E-S-I-G-N!"

Since the principle of "design" is the stimulus behind our investigation, let us consider it a little more carefully just at this point. Admittedly, there can be design without benefit of mental parentage or contriving. There can be accidental design, such as the patterns of ripples seen in clouds and water and on sand dunes caused by wind; and corrugations in dirt roads caused by wheels; or, icicle formations and the similarly-molded stalactites and stalagmites formed by the chance dripping of mineral-laden water for centuries in the same spot. In such designs there is result, but no purpose. According to definition, "designs" denotes, not only figure and form and pattern; but, also, aim, plan, intent, and purpose. So, when a design clearly shows intent and purpose, such as a row of three, or more trees, intelligence asserts itself as a factor with which we must reckon, and there is no escape. We can, therefore, formulate a rule that "where there is design, with purpose, a mind has been at work."

Now, can you tell me there is no purpose in those flowers, to say nothing of the berrybushes and fruit trees and vegetables in your garden and the waving grain? What about the nectar and pollen that supply the bee with food, and the colors of the blossoms that beckon her to the feast? And, what is more convincing, what about the interdependence of the bee and the fruit trees, or other plants that rely upon her clumsy scampering among the petals for their pollination? Here is multiple design, and still more, if we concede that flowers were intended, also, to delight the aesthetic appreciation of man. Surely, "Every leaf and petal and blade of grass bear the finger-

Remember, God is your father. He may have to spank you as well as love you.

prints of God." Did I read that somewhere, or did it just force itself into my consciousness?

Last summer, while walking through a field overgrown with weeds, I was startled by some needle-like stabs on my ankle and discovered that my clothing was pretty well decorated with some flat, square-shaped seeds having three small sharp spines on one edge, which enabled them to cling tenaciously to anything that brushed against them. This, of course, reminds us of the cockleburs and the dandelion and milkweed seeds, and the many others that are equipped with a variety of curious devices obviously designed to assure their distribution.

Remember our rule: "Where there is design, with purpose, a mind has been at work." Well, the fact that these seeds were equipped to travel shows "purpose" in their design as obvious as an elephant's trunk. Now, note well, all these products of mind and intelligence, and not a brain in sight. Before, we had the brain of the spider to confuse the issue by injecting itself into the picture as a possible explanation of the planning and designing, but a plant has no brain. At least, I have never seen one, or heard of anyone who has.

But, if you are not yet convinced, there is still hope. Let us take a look at a prize exhibit. Here is Dionæa from the marshlands of North Carolina, commonly known as Venus's-flytrap: a plant with an unusual appetite for a meat diet that has managed to think up for herself (as some would have us believe) the design of a unique flytrap and then proceeded to build the strange contraption, like a steel-jawed trap, right into the structure of her own leaves, so that they snap shut and imprison any unlucky insect that happens to touch them. As you probably know, there are other types of carnivorous plants, such as the pitcher plants, but Dionæa will suffice for our purpose.

So, what shall we do with her? How could a dumb plant, without even the semblance of a brain, in response to a predetermined purpose, provide itself with a hair-trigger trap that simply had to be planned and designed by an intelligence of a high order: one, at least, brilliant enough to fashion a fish-hook and bait it and dangle it in the water to catch a Friday dinner?

It just doesn't make sense. It is enough to make one feel like the tourist, who, after being led blindfolded to the rim of Grand Canyon and unmasked, stood for a long moment in silent, open-mouthed amazement and then exclaimed, "It's a crazy lie. There is no such place."

Then, too, isn't it odd that we find ourselves confronted with another vexing flytrap that raises the same provocative questions pertaining to origin, but with a still more perplexing factor? One might easily assume this to be a masterly piece of profound and subtle sarcasm, cleverly arranged by a superbly brilliant mind, which seems to say, "Since you refuse to admit the Mind behind the flytrap of the little animal with the puny and inadequate brain, what are you going to do about the Mind behind this other ingenious flytrap of a mere plant with no brain at all?"

Of course, you can see how very simple it is when we remember our rule: "Where there is design with purpose, a mind has been at work." All we need do is identify the mind, and in this instance, with the field of possibilities narrowed down to one, where is there, now, any chance for doubt?

This should make the case complete; but, still, you may be "from Missouri"—still trying to imagine a concealed mind in a seed or a root or a blossom or a leaf or a stem. Well, so far, our inquiries have been limited to the animal and vegetable kingdoms. Perhaps, we should glance briefly into the mineral kingdom, too, before adjourning the court.

Several years ago, on Put-in Bay Island in Lake Erie, I stood in a magical stalactical cavern, formed of resplendent celestite crystals: a veritable fairy wonderland. It was not, however, the dazzling beauty of the place that excited my awe and wonderment, it was the astounding uniformity and perfection displayed in the "design" of those unnumbered thousands of oddly-shaped strontia crystals.

They are of rectangular form, with a wedged-shaped end, the corners of which are cut with two successive sharp angles, forming ten perfectly smooth and plane faces and ranging from fractional size to eighteen inches long. The most remarkable feature of their structure, however, is the fact that the angle on each face of one crystal is set at precisely the same degree as the corresponding face on all the others, which makes them exact duplicates of each other, except for size.

If you should pick up one of those large crystals lying in a field, you would undoubtedly judge it to be an extraordinarily heavy block of translucent stone, similar to marble, that had been painstakingly shaped by a skilled stonecutter; in fact, it would be difficult to imagine anything formed with a greater degree of perfection.

If one is looking for miracles, there is no need for further search. Here is something more marvelous than a germinating seed; more mystifying than a radio wave; more astounding than an atomic bomb: something to stagger the imagination—an inanimate mineral deposit, which, by no conceivable attribute, could be credited with the possession of a mental process, molding itself into countless identical units of an intricate and precise pattern that just had to be born in a mind.

Hold a cut diamond in your hand and try to imagine those accurately formed facets coming into existence without benefit of mental parentage. That is what you would sense if you held in your hand one of those sharply-molded crystals. There had to be a mind—there just had to be a mind!

Just as surely as the spiders pattern their webs from that one brilliant mental blueprint, just so surely do those unnumbered crystals follow one precise and intelligently conceived "design." And, just as surely as that vegetable flytrap sprang from a mind set on a definite "purpose," just so surely have those crystals conformed to a law, or influence intelligently designed to shape them according to a distinct and precise pattern. If you seek "purpose," there it is. That repeated design is no "accident"—not when there are a million identical repetitions.

Remember, "Where there is design, with purpose, a mind has been

SKYVIEW

Luminous, cumulus clouds on high—
Deep-set and fixed in the dark blue sky, Carved and shaped with meticulous care;

Only my God knows why you're there.

Luminous, cumulus clouds on high—
Pinioned deep in the blue, blue sky,
I wish I could your high throne share
And see the world from way up there.

—Norma Anne Kirkendall

at work." There just had to be a mind.

Need we look further for "signs and witnesses"? Every student of chemistry is familiar with these tell-tale "designs" in all crystals, and the distinctive designs in the atomic structure of all matter. They may be seen at any time by anyone who has a microscope available; and everyone, of course, is familiar with the amazing and exquisite designs in snowflakes and the fernlike patterns of frost on the windowglass. And, now, in this atomic age, the physicists have proved to us that the building blocks of creation are, in reality, minute and marvelously designed solar systems, with tiny controlling suns, about which electronic planets are whirling at incredible speed. Is it not patent, therefore, that a supremely brilliant and dominant mind has established inexorable laws to govern the formation of all these marvels and that they are not mere "accidents of design"?

Are we not forced to agree with such distinguished scientists as Dr. Michael Pupin, who has said that he chooses to believe that the beautiful law and order in our universe are the result of a Divine Directing Intelligence, rather than the outcome of unintelligent haphazard happenings? (American Magazine, September, 1927).

Also, with such a profusion of evidence on every hand, can we not realize the full significance of the statement of the Apostle Paul when he said (Romans 1: 18-20, I. V.): "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men; who love not the truth, but remain in unrighteousness, after that which may be known of God is manifest to them. For God hath revealed unto them the invisible things of him from the creation of the world, which are clearly seen; things which are not seen being understood by the things that are made, through his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse?"

A Call to Rugged Righteousness

By Reed M. Holmes

HE CAME HOME from work. He was tired and wished to relax. Settling into the big overstuffed chair, he picked up the newspaper and breathed a sigh of relief. The sigh was short-lived. The headlines caught his breath. More trouble in Europe, in Palestine, in India. Another strike impending. No solution for housing in sight. A sex crime in his own neighborhood. What was the world coming to? Well, he could still read the antics of Blondie and Dagwood.

Just then his five-year-old daughter burst into the room, desiring to play. Still tired, he reached into a desk drawer, pulled out a jigsaw puzzle map of the world, and encouraged her to put it together. A wry smile was on his face. It would require some doing to get that old world together right! No job for a five-year-old.

Within a few minutes she was back, the map completed. In amazement, he exclaimed, "How did you do it? You don't know anything about the world!" She smilingly replied, "I know, Daddy, but there was a picture of a man on the other side. When I got him together all right, the world was all right, too."

He took her into his arms and held her tight, knowing that she had given the only true answer to the problems of mankind. So simple an answer, yet so profound: "When man is right, the world is right."

The world is what it is because the people in it are what they are. The nation is what it is because the people in it are what they are. The family is what it is because the people in it are what they are. Why kid ourselves? The community is our reflection magnified. National animosities are our animosities and prejudices written large. On the other hand, national faith and integity is the faith and integrity of the people.

Not in the race for atomic power and military might shall the battle for peace be won. Peace must eventually be won on the frontier of the soul, on the battleground of conscience. At long last, mankind—you and I—must realize that right alone, not might, shall bring peace and fraternity to a disheartened world. Peace comes from God and exists wherever men are adjusted to the will of God. Our prayer for peace must, therefore, be strengthened by our endeavor to throw God into our calculations, into personal behavior, into our business and industrial life, into our labor movements, into politics and international affairs.

We have lived to see the day when men of science, faced by the horrendous potentialities of their discoveries, are at last convinced that it is in the realm of the heart and not our ingenuity that the answer is to be found. Confronted by the monster of atomic energy and fearing the outcome of biological warfare, these men of science are now taking the stump to convert man to more peaceful ways.

We hold in our hands the means of destruction, but now, in our fear, we are beginning to realize that it is God who holds the secret of our salvation. The term, salvation, no longer has the musty fragrance of a secluded and priestly ivory tower. It catches up our yearning and our hope. It is death we fear—death with its imminent sting. It is the grave which seems to hold in prospect a certain victory. Salvation has mortal as well as immortal significance for us.

Let the disbeliever, the agnostic, and the self-sufficient hearken to the call of the church. The solution of our problem depends upon the development of Christly qualities of character. If the dignity of personality is to be respected, there must be dignity of personality to respect, and it is the church and the church alone which can reach inside the heart of a man to transform his character and motivations.

When such men as DeNouy and Morrison of science, Toynbee the historian, MacArthur the military leader, and Truman the political leader, unite in their testimony as to the efficacy of the Christian religion, it calls for us to respond to the Christian challenge. The unity of their testimony calls for spiritual reinvigoration, for the type of rugged righteousness which can resist the insidious and sensual temptations of our day. Their plea calls for Christian self-discipline to supplant the self-abandon which is so characteristic of our day.

This calls, in turn, for the church, as the agent of Christ, to become strong in witnessing power. Indeed, our day calls for a restoration of apostolic power, for the prophetic gift to again find expression through the church. When we ponder the magnitude of our problem, we may be sure that our God, our help in ages past, is yet willing to speak through the voice of a prophet. We need the revelation of God's wisdom if we are to find answer to our plight. We need a prophet who can say, "Thus saith the Lord."

When the church thus readies itself to speak with authority for God and his Christ, then will the church be enabled to command respect and will raise up a body of believers who shall be known as Zion because of

(Continued on page 23.)
www.LatterDayTruth.org

A Tribute to the Memory of Patriarch R. V. Hopkins

By ELBERT A. SMITH

ON BEHALF OF the Order of Evangelists and Patriarchs, I wish to render a tribute of respect to the memory of Patriarch Roy V. Hopkins. Thousands of people share with us the sense of personal loss since his ministry came to such a sudden end. This is not just an official gesture of respect. For many years Brother Roy was one of my close friends and associates. Our acquaintance began back in the days in Lamoni when he was active in the service of Graceland College. He served Graceland well in several capacities, as instructor, Dean of Men, coach of the football teams, leader in religious activities, and, in the summer season, field worker for the College. In the last named capacity he traveled widely, making friends and raising money for an institution that was almost literally struggling for existence.

The friendship formed in Lamoni grew even closer after we both were called to labor in Independence. As a member of the Presidency, I had been asked by Frederick M. Smith, President of the Church, to interest myself particularly in some of the church affairs in Independence. Brother Hopkins was under appointment as "Pastor of Independence Stake," with special attention to the Stone Church, which threw upon his shoulders quite a heavy weight of administrative as well as spiritual responsibilities. During those years there were troublesome times in the church, division and discord trying to men's souls. Naturally, we were thrown together much in our church work and shared many duties and responsibilities. Our association went beyond official relationships.

Brother Hopkins was an outdoor man who loved nature. In his younger days he would go into the forest with a minimum of equipment and spend days and nights, sleeping on the ground under the stars at night and roaming the woods by day. So, under the conditions that I have mentioned, his recreation was sought in the environments of nature. On numerous occasions when we could spare some hours or an afternoon, we would throw together the rudiments of a lunch and drive out into the woods to some secluded and favored spot—and he knew most of them around about Independence. We would build a fire in the shelter of a big rock and make ourselves comfortable, even in the wintertime when there was snow upon the ground. After we had tramped the hills for a bit and returned to our camp and had a word of prayer, we would break and eat our bread together. Then we would sit and talk about many intimate, personal matters and church problems, or perhaps we would only sit and think. Close friends are not embarrassed by a period of silence. In fact, such periods are times of greater understanding and communion. Those hours together left a fragrant memory in my mind.

Despite the fact that Brother Hopkins was naturally of great vigor and strength of body, he was of a nervous temperament, and his emotions were easily and deeply stirred. The burdens and harassments of administrative responsibility in the difficult times that I have mentioned eventually broke his health, and for a considerable time he had to be released from all church activities. That was a time very trying to his soul. Eventually, however, he recovered health and was able to return to his beloved work for and in the church. He was ordained a patriarch, April 9, 1938, at the same conference at which I was ordained to the office of Presiding Patriarch, April 10; and so our paths drew close together again in a common field of service. I think that from then on to the time of his death was the most happy period in the life of Brother Hopkins. During that time he rendered an effectual ministry as an evangelist in Independence and in other fields which he was permitted to visit from time to time. He was very able and successful in the various phases of the work of his office. Many people came to him for comfort in times of trouble and sorrow, or, he went to them. Many people, young and old, but especially young people, came to him for counsel in meeting the problems of life. Many came to him for patriarchal blessings; and he was constantly busy in a variety of other duties, preaching and visiting.

He rendered an outstanding service as chaplain in our Sanitarium. Every day he made his rounds to visit the sick. He had his own troubles and periods of despondency, but he never carried them with him into the sickroom. He always came with a message of cheer and comfort, and his very presence seemed to help. He also endeared himself to the class known as the "Fellowship

(Continued on page 15.)

What Latter Day Saints Believe

FOR SEVERAL weeks now we have been speaking to you on the general subject of "What Latter Day Saints Believe." Now we come to what Latter Day Saints call the "first principles" of the gospel, as enumerated in the sixth chapter of Hebrews, verses 1 and 2. If you will turn to those verses and read, you will discover that these first principles are six in number: faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment. For the next several weeks, then, we shall concern ourselves with what Latter Day Saints believe about each of these six "first principles."

Though Paul puts repentance first and faith second, we usually say that faith is the first of these six principles. I believe that the reasons are obvious. Unless a man has faith—unless he believes in God, and in Christ, the Son of God—he has no possible motive for repentance. In actual practice, faith must precede repentance. Hence we say it is the first principle of the gospel of Christ.

Paul defines faith in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews (which by the way, is one of the best dissertations on faith to be found in the Bible) as the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. By way of further definition, we might add that faith is an active, intelligent, affirmative, aggressive, constructive, moving principle, leading men to seek after and do those things which are in harmony with itself. The whole eleventh chapter of Hebrews is a recital of the great deeds done by great men through faith. No one could read that chapter and think for a moment that faith is a passive thing, requiring no intelligence or effort on the part of the believer.

When Jesus said to his disciples, "Have faith in God," it was not merely a suggestion or a request; it was a command. "He that cometh to God must believe that He is [have faith] and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." "Without faith it is impossible to please him." That is why Jesus added a very significant phrase when he promised that men should be rewarded for giving so much as a cup of cold water. It is possible to give a man a cup of cold water simply because it is in your way and you want to get rid of it; or to give it in the hope that its icy cold may give the recipient acute indigestion. One who gave a cup of cold water in that way would have no claim on any reward. So Jesus adds, "If any give so much as a cup of cold water in my name [that is, having faith in me, believing in the principles of my gospel] he shall in no wise lose his reward."

No act is accounted for righteousness unless the doer is motivated by right principles—that is, by faith. The simple act of eating bread and drinking wine has in itself no virtue, no spiritual efficacy, no power to save—if there is no faith. Sometimes we eat bread and wine in places other than the communion of the Lord's Supper, but such an eating is not a sacrament. Sometimes we partake perfunctorily at the Lord's table—without faith—but such a perfunctory act cannot be accounted to us for righteousness. It needs faith to make it efficacious. Similarly, I may fall into a tank of water, or someone may push me under while I am in swimming, but that is not baptism, because it is done without proper motivation—without faith. Even good works, then, may do us more harm than good, unless they are performed with the righteous motivation of faith. Without faith, it is impossible to please him.

The rightful worship of God engages mind and heart, intelligence and will. They that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. Right intention, correct purpose or motive, purity of desire, and a proper object of devotion, are all comprehended in an acceptable, righteous faith.

Faith rests upon three pillars of revelation: the revelation of God in his works; the revelation of God in his written word; and in the day-by-day inspiration and teaching of his Holy Spirit. Faith which is supported by those three forms of revelation is not blind credulity, or willful presumption; it is the result of true and legitimate causes. When a reverent man takes the trouble to observe the works of God's creation in nature carefully, he finds there a basis for his faith in God. When a man studies the Scriptures—the inspired writings of godly men of faith—and compares the laws and principles revealed there with the laws and principles of life and of the natural creation about him, he has another pillar to support his reasonable faith in God. And when a man looks within his own soul, and as a result of his seeking and striving finds there from time to time the personal revelation which comes through the Holy Spirit, he has a third reasonable basis for his faith. Faith in God has a sure foundation.

One of the heresies of the Middle Ages was the belief that a man could be justified by works—especially various acts of penance, alms, pilgrimages, recitation of set prayers, required attendance at church sacraments, payment of tithes, etc. There was a complete ignoring of the principle which we have already set forth—that there is no efficacy in any good work save it be done with the right motive, through faith in God, a love of him, and a true desire to be clean and acceptable before him and to be engaged in doing his will. Men pinned their hope to the deed itself and not to the faith which motivated that deed. It was Martin Luther, I believe, who took the lead in overthrowing this doctrine, when he reasserted the doctrine of justification through faith, and not through deeds: "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any men should boast."—Ephesians 2: 8, 9. "A man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law."—Romans 3: 28.

About Faith

BY EVAN A. FRY

But while this doctrine of justification through faith very much needed to be reasserted in Luther's day, many people since his day have swung as far to that extreme as the people whom Luther was correcting had swung to the other extreme. The religious theory sprang up that faith was all that was necessary, that no good works mattered the least bit, one way or the other. And Latter Day Saints believe that it is just as dangerous a heresy to assert that faith, and faith alone can save, as it is to assert that works and works alone can save.

We have said that faith, to be faith, must be active, dynamic, aggressive, intelligent, moving, constructive, affirmative. Can a man have that kind of faith, without the inevitable consequence of good works following? Suppose that I assert my faith in the principles of good physical health. How will my faith be demonstrated? Certainly by the quality of my living—by my adherence to those laws and principles in which I believe. And if my faith is well-grounded, if the principles in which I believe are correct, the results will become apparent in my good health. Suppose I assert my faith and beliefs in the principles of mathematics. Is mere mental acquiescence or even a verbal affirmation enough, if I go on living my life and making my mathematical decisions on the supposition that two and two makes five, and three times three equals eleven? No, Latter Day Saints believe that faith alone is not enough. Truly, we are justified by faith; but a faith which is worth its salt will not only bring men to Christ, it will keep and sustain them there. It will be an active, guiding principle which will influence every decision, color every act, temper every relationship with God and man. If it is true that we are justified by faith, it is also true that the just shall live by faith, and that faith without works is dead. Christ claims everyone who has faith in him, but they who have faith in him hold to every good thing, and engage in every good work, or their faith is vain, and Christ can no longer own them.

There is no other name given under heaven whereby men may be saved—only the name of Christ. Through his atonement, all men who will may be saved. But any man who wishes that atonement to be efficacious for him must first have faith in God. Then he must humble himself before God, confessing his sin, and asking forgiveness through his faith on Christ the Son of God. If his heart is right, his motives worthy, he will receive the witness of his forgiveness through the Holy Spirit, and peace of mind and conscience. But this is not the end of his faith; it is only the beginning. His faith in Christ must continue; and, as it continues, he will grow in grace and in the knowledge of God. If he forgets his first faith, disobeys God, and does not repent, his faith can no longer justify him; for that faith no longer exists. If he allows his faith to dwindle for lack of nourishment or use until it dies, he cannot be justified by a dead faith. In fact, the punishment of the man who once had faith and then allowed it to die, will be greater than that of the man who, through ignorance or lack of opportunity, never had faith. (See Luke 12:48; II Peter 2: 20-22.) Salvation comes through the atonement to those who put their trust in the Lord, who are diligent in keeping his commandments, and who continue in the faith even to the end of this life. Those whose hearts are changed and whose faith is strong and dynamic enough to keep them to the end of life will be found at the right hand of God, for they are his sons and daughters—made so by their faith on the name of his Son, which in turn has brought forth a fruitage of good works.

There is a very beautiful sermon on faith given by Alma in the Book of Mormon. Alma teaches that faith does not come by signs; for signs bring knowledge, and faith is not knowledge. If a man knows, he needs no longer believe. He knows. Faith leads to knowledge, but it does not begin as knowledge. We hope for things that are not seen—not foolishly, or superstitiously, or apathetically, but with wisdom and judgment and zeal; and faith gives us the assurance that the thing for which we hope is true.

Alma exhorted his hearers to believe on God's word; to awake and rouse their faculties—to experiment, if necessary, by exercising only a small particle of faith. If you can do nothing more, counseled Alma, you can at least desire to believe. If you have this desire, let it work in you, and it will grow into faith, so that you can accept at least a beginning portion of the word of God. The word of God, says Alma, is like a seed. If it is planted in the human breast, it begins to swell. That is a sign of life—a sign that it is a good seed. As it grows, it will enlarge your soul, enlighten your understanding, and expand your mind. This growth will, in turn, increase your faith and make it possible for you to go further with that faith. But this is no time to lay aside your faith, just as you are beginning to be sure that it is alive and growing. When a seed sprouts, you don't go away and leave it; you tend it, nourish it, water it, shield it from harm, until it comes to fruition. So must we do with our faith. If we take no thought for it, neglect it, give it no nourishment, allow it to be destroyed, the good seed which was planted will die—not because it was not a good seed, but because the ground in which it was planted was barren. If we will not nourish the word and enlarge our faith in active, dynamic, aggressive, purposeful living, we can never eat the fruit of the tree of life—for this is the tree which grows within us as the result of our faith. But if we will nourish the word as it begins to grow within us, by faith and great diligence and patience, it will take root and become a tree with a fruit which is most precious, most sweet, most white, and most pure. And he who feasts on this fruit shall never hunger nor thirst.

Faith differs in its degrees of power, but it increases with holy living and spiritual experience leading to spiritual maturity. Faith can become knowledge. It inspires the will, controls the judgment, justifies the work. Without it, no man can please God. Without it, no man can be justified before God. Without it, no man has any claim on the atoning blood of Jesus Christ. But with it, men and women may become the sons and daughters of God and go on in the spirit and example of Christ to perfection.

Ready to Build Zion?

(Continued from page 3.)

works in this matter. An intelligent and informed people, sufficiently united in purpose and determined to live by their principles, can and will do the necessary work.

There are many tasks we must do now. We must meet the challenges and do the work of this day and this hour. If we cannot and will not do this work, we can have no hope of doing the greater work that will be required of us in the future. But we can and must do the work that is given to us now.

L. J. L.

A Flag Set

Adds Dignity to Your Church

Our Church's Flag

- Good Quality Celanese Taffeta
- The Church Seal on Two Sides
- Gold Fringe
- Brass Cross
- Two Piece Brass Screw Joint Pole
8' x 1" in Mahogany Finish
- Heavy Base
- 3' x 5'

Our Nation's Flag

- Good Quality Celanese Taffeta
- The Stars Double Sewed on Two Sides
- Gold Fringe
- Brass Eagle
- Two Piece Brass Screw Joint Pole
8' x 1" in Mahogany Finish
- Heavy Base
- 3' x 5'

$35.00 each

$60.00 a set

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

LETTERS

Grateful for Prayers and Letters

I wish to thank all who prayed for me and those who sent me letters during my illness. My health has improved greatly, and I know your prayers were answered.

Mrs. Leta Herr

1265 East Ninth Street
Des Moines, Iowa

Tell the Gospel Story

Many years ago a sister in the church told of a dream in which she saw the second coming of Christ. I quote from her own words: "I saw the second appearance of Christ. I saw the greatest commotion among the people—my neighbors were all excited and frightened. Several of them were looking at me in the most reproachful manner and many were asking me why I did not tell them of the Restored Gospel." This dream troubled her, so she made up her mind not to miss any opportunity to tell the gospel story.

At a recent round-table discussion at our branch in charge of Zion's League, a playlet was presented, showing a group of young people who seemed to feel that they lacked worth-while opportunities in church work. Further consideration of the question soon revealed numerous opportunities for those willing to do something for Christ and the church.

We, as members of the church, are all faced with the injunction given, "Let him who is warned, warn his neighbor." Most people in our towns and cities have noticed members of the religious sect who call themselves Jehovah's Witnesses standing on street corners, offering for sale various printed booklets and tracts of their belief. These people, in a few short years, have by this method, and house to house visits, distributed and sold publications over the million mark.

A prominent bishop of the Catholic church in a talk to a large gathering of young people said that if the church could persuade her young to make half the effort of the Jehovah's Witnesses in the distribution of Catholic literature, in one year's time thousands of converts would be added to the church.

Daily opportunities present themselves to do something really worth-while in the spreading of the old Jerusalem gospel: a word here and there, a tract or two, the invitation of nonmember friends and neighbors to church. Once the seed has been sown, there will be found fruitage in some honest heart.

I heard a brother testify that he had tried hard to tell the gospel story to others with seemingly no avail. One day a man came to him and said, "I have watched your life for years, and I am convinced that you have lived the gospel as a true member of your faith. I want to be baptized." Little did this brother realize that his life was being watched as a testimony of the gospel.

Can we not live such lives that will be the means of bringing some soul safe into the folds of the kingdom.

ELMER A. KALER, SR.

1614 Hedges Avenue
Independence, Missouri

Letters From the Isolated

I have just received the Thanksgiving issue of the Herald which contained the invitation for all isolated members desiring correspondence to submit their names. I live about eighty miles from the nearest church. There are half a dozen families in this territory, and Elder Vernon Ditton comes twice a year to hold meetings in our homes. I am the only Latter Day Saint in this town. I know well the lonely feeling Mrs. Dunbar speaks of in her letter, and I would enjoy hearing from any members who care to write.

My suggestion to other isolated Saints is that they study the church books, pray often, and try each day to make those with whom they associate as happy as possible. It is easy to drift into indifference when there is no one of your faith near, but isolation is no excuse for losing grip on the ideals for which our church stands.

MRS. DON BALDWIN.

Box 131
Opheim, Montana

I wish to thank all who have written to me. I shall answer as soon as possible. Since my letter appeared in the Herald, we have been visited by the nearest elder and our district president. My parents and brother and sister are attending church as a result of the interest that has been shown us.

I also wish to thank the person who sent us the bundle of Stepping Stones. The address was destroyed before I got to see it.

Mrs. Vernon Dunbar.

Route 1, Box 39
Akron, Colorado

My son, Theodore, and I are isolated members. We are the only two in our family belonging to the church, and we ask the prayers of the Saints for those who have not been baptized. Theodore is eighteen and would like to correspond with other young Latter Day Saints. He was baptized on October 25 by Elder Garfield Billings of Deer Isle.

MRS. WILLIE W. TURNER.
Minturn, Maine

Patriarch R. V. Hopkins

(Continued from page 11.)

Group" with whom he met from week to week. His last act of ministry was to address that group the evening before he died.

Brother A. V. Arnold, of Houston, Secretary of the Order writes me:

It was a terrible shock to us, and I know it was to you also, to learn of Brother Hopkins' passing. I still can hardly realize it is a fact. I don't know his age, but he was always so happy and full of energy, always giving himself in ministry for others, and gave so freely of his very life that he will be greatly missed by the many to whom he endeared himself.

Brother Hopkins was a modest, unassuming man, unpretentious, genuine, a real man without any thin veneer to wear away. He was patient, understanding, kind and wise in his ministry and counsel, and he won a place in the hearts of the Saints, and particularly those of the Order of Evangelists. He was one of the secretaries of the order at the time of his death. He passed away quietly in his sleep. Evidently he had been reading the Saints' Herald, a copy of which lay on the stand at the head of his bed, open at an article entitled, "Open the Windows of Heaven."

How casually we meet a close friend. We talk a moment about the weather or some more important theme and then we drift apart with a wave of the hand and perhaps say, "I'll see you again," but we may never see him again, never in this world. And then we think of many things we wish we had said to him—when it is too late. But we look forward to a time when the promise, "I will see you again," shall be fulfilled in a land where there is no parting.

FOOD CHATS

By B. Mildred Nelson

Instructor in Nutrition Extension Department, Ames, Iowa

WHEN A GROUP of realistic, down-to-earth people like our Bishop DeLapp and Iowa farmers come back from a trip overseas with the reports of need for food that each saw there, there can be little question in our minds that there is a real need. Just how that need may be met best is a problem that involves many situations. Just sit down yourself and try to figure out a solution that won't run into difficulty somewhere along the line. I've tried, and something always pops up to make me wonder how anyone will find the answer.

If the talk of political implications in the food conservation program at home has you disturbed, just remember that there are always people who are willing to sacrifice the good of many for personal and selfish ambitions. Perhaps it reminds us again how important it is for us to assume the responsibility of seeing to it that good men and women fill our political offices.

But in the meantime, let's go along with the program as much as we can and give it a chance. Something has to be done if the peace is to be won. We've invested too much in winning the war to lose the peace now. If everyone co-operates, there is no doubt that much food can be saved and sent to the place where it will do the most good. It will mean sacrificing some of our profits as well as saving our food; but surely it's worth it if those sacrifices will help to bring peace and security back to this earth.

Meatless days have been the rule rather than the exception of late for many. But we haven't been really hungry, have we? It has been the order for many of our fellow men for nearly eight years now. And they have become very hungry—their bodies, their minds, their work, their homes show it!

Jim Russell of the Des Moines Register and Tribune staff reports that the meat ration for each person in England was about twenty-six pounds for last year. Compare that with our more than 150 pounds a year, and it looks pretty small. Then, when you realize that England is sharing with other of our European neighbors who have not that much, it begins to appear that their need is really urgent.

We have plenty of other foods to use in the place of meat and will not be really hungry if we do cut down on the amount we eat considerably more than we have been doing because of high prices. Overseas there is not enough of any kind of food to keep the people from being hungry. Now that a united effort is being made to use what we save to help those who need it, we can feel that our extra effort to save, added to the effort of many others, will make a real contribution toward bringing health, happiness, and even life to thousands who might otherwise starve this winter.

Our efforts to stretch and save our food need not cause us a moment of worry so far as the health of our families is concerned if we remember a few simple rules. Among them are these:

Continue to follow the Basic-Seven Food Guide. The guide itself will give one lots of good ideas for planning with the present food program. Remember that fish, dried peas, nuts, and beans are in group 5 along with meat, poultry, and eggs. Cheese, some other vegetables, and whole grain cereals help furnish the same nutrients.

Switch to whole grain cereals and breadstuffs instead of milled ones. With the B vitamins and minerals that we usually get from meats, eggs, etc., reduced, we need the protection that whole grains give us. It is the best of the proteins, the B vitamins, and the minerals that we mill away when we make white flour and milled corn meal.

Make every bite of food count. Store it properly, cook it properly, serve it attractively and bring all the leftovers back to the table in a new dress so that the family does not tire of them. If we train ourselves to like the flavor of natural foods and whole grain cereals, this experience might be very good for us. Add those to our normal diet instead of the refined ones to which we have become accustomed, and we would add a big margin of safety that most of us need for really buoyant health.

If you still have stale bread that you want to make into a stuffing, put a layer of dressing between two layers of meat loaf mixture before baking. If there is just a little bread, use grated carrots and chopped celery to make the rest of the dressing. If there is no bread, add grated raw potato, skin and all, to the ground meat, or make an oatmeal meat loaf this way: Grind 1 pound of beef and pork. Add 1¼ cups of uncooked rolled oats, 1 egg, 1¼ cups milk, 2 teaspoons salt, 2 tablespoons minced onion, 2 tablespoons minced celery or celery leaves, ¼ cup grated carrots. Mix and bake in a well-greased baking dish in a moderate oven. Serve with tomato sauce if you like.

Make a double batch of corn bread; you'll want some for breakfast tomorrow.

If there's a fisherman in the family, his "catch" this season may go well right now. Or you could enjoy the cornbread, butter, and honey with lots of milk.

To reheat the cornbread, spread

- - - a home column feature - - -

butter or margarine generously over the top. Then pop back into a hot oven for about fifteen minutes. It's toasty and crunchy and good!

Have you ever tried to count up the number of days you have not served eggs or poultry to your family even though nobody said anything about having an eggless, poultryless day? When I started thinking back last week, I began to wonder whether I had been eating enough eggs, considering how much they have to offer in good nutrition. At any rate, I decided that doing without eggs and poultry certainly is no hardship when there are so many other foods to take their place. It just takes a little extra planning.

And planning is the thing that we have known for a long time will help us most, not only in getting the foods that we need but in keeping within the budget, as well. Take time out to sit down and plan your menus for a week. Then make out your market order for those plans. You'll find lots of places where you can do some substituting of low priced foods for higher priced ones, save money by buying in larger quantities than usual, plan to use leftovers for a good meal, and practice other economies that delight the budget and starve the garbage can. And I'll wager it won't be hard to plan without eggs and poultry on Thursdays, either.

There's always meat left over. Slice it for lunch or supper today. Brown it in a little fat and serve it with a hot tomato sauce. Of course, if you'd rather, a cold sliced meat-loaf sandwich is good, too, and takes practically no time at all.

Since our bacon chips are just for flavor (and are chips), just buy bacon ends for them. Diced wieners may be used instead or you can just season generously with drippings.

To say that we should buy wisely now is to repeat the thing that each of us knows. Perhaps a few facts might be helpful, though. To get the most for your money: (1) Buy foods that are in season. Right now there are turnips, parsnips, salsify, sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, squash, onions, and carrots in the vegetable line. Apples hold the lime-light among the fruits, but some grapes are cheaper now than they have been for a long while, and grapefruit and oranges are getting back into the obtainable group. Check grocery ads, too. There may be good "buys" among the canned or frozen foods from time to time.

(2) Select good quality foods. A bargain is no bargain if you have to throw away much of the food that you bought. Sometimes you can manage to make poor quality food quite acceptable, but if the nutritive value isn't there, there's nothing you can do about that. I don't mean that you have to buy expensive packs, top grades of meats, or highly advertised brand names in foods. Quality does not depend upon fancy packing or grading.

Help prevent waste of the fresh vegetables and fruits that you leave on the grocer's shelves. Don't handle them any more than is necessary and don't pinch or bruise them! If foods spoil on the grocer's shelves, they are just as much a loss to the country as a whole as if they spoiled in your refrigerator.

"YOUR HOME IS YOUR CASTLE . . . if properly maintained," says the United States Bureau of Standards which has reprinted a publication called "Care and Repair of the House." This pamphlet discusses little everyday breakdowns which are a constant source of annoyance, and tells you how to mend that crack in the plaster, that doorbell that does not ring, the hard-to-open window, et cetera.

If this pamphlet would be useful to your household, order it from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C. List the catalogue number, which is No. C 13.25:15, and enclose twenty cents for each one you order.

An Afterthought

I baked a cake for Study Club—
(The kind for busy days)
Though I mixed it in ten minutes,
You should have heard the praise!

I taught the class (I mean I tried)—

How well, I'll never know.
I couldn't say that it was good,
For no one told me so.
If praise you want, a simple cake
Brings compliments galore;
While to prepare a lesson well,
Requires an hour or more.
Folks never bother telling if
A lesson's bad or good.
But we need cake and classes both,
To grow the way we should.
If I could learn to do each thing
My Lord would have me do,
Regardless of the praise, I'd have
My cake and eat it, too.

DARLENE BOWDEN.

The Hole in the Doughnut

An old New England sea captain, one Hanson Gregory, gave the modern American doughnut its hole. The date of the great contribution was 1847. The captain was a boy at the time. Watching his mother fry doughnuts, he noticed that the centers of the cakes always seemed doughy, and suggested eliminating this part before the cakes were cooked. Laughingly she followed the suggestion, and the result was so satisfactory that she never went back to the old way. Her method was copied by others until it spread over the whole country.

In an ordinary 100 watt light bulb nearly six million million million electrons flow through the filament in one second of time.—Page 469, Living Prayerfully, by Rogers D. Rush.

South American Journey

(Editor's Note: Dr. and Mrs. Harry Pearse and Dr. and Mrs. Alfred Chaput of Detroit, Michigan, spent an adventurous spring in South America last year. Dr. Pearse is a physician and an elder in Detroit Branch, Dr. Chaput is a dentist. The following excerpts are from letters by Mrs. Pearse describe the journey.)

Hotel Astoria San Salvador

WE BOARDED the plane at Guatemala on Tuesday morning en route for Costa Rica, and before many minutes had passed, the huge propellers brushed space aside and we were off. As we gained altitude, we looked back over the country we were leaving behind to see it take on miniature proportions. Rugged mountains, cobalt skies, and fast-moving fleecy clouds made us realize that nature in the rough is man's greatest challenge. Contrasting this rugged country with the ice and snow we had left at home seemed like a fantasy. By the time the plane landed at San Salvador, everyone was in tropical clothes.

Time passed quickly and before we realized, we were off for San José. Dr. and Mrs. Grillo were at the airport to meet us and take us to their home, where we were to stay. We were royally entertained and had an opportunity to meet some very interesting people, the most outstanding of whom was the President of Costa Rica.

We called on President Picado (we wanted to call him "piscado," which means "fish" in Spanish) and were ushered into a room that was dripping with Louis XV mirrors cornered with gold leaf and crowded with furniture. However, there was one beautiful piece—a Chinese rug. Someone in our party asked the President if his parents were born in Costa Rica, and he said that his mother was Polish and his father Swiss. They were both physicians, and both practiced in Costa Rica. That seems very unusual where women do so little outside of child-bearing. The men run everything, and from all appearances, they should have a little help from their women!

Dr. Grillo is President of the Costa Rican Congress, and a very good friend of President Picado. He shares Harry's profession, and did everything to make our visit pleasant, including a trip to the Punterarnes on the Pacific Ocean. On our way there, we took movies of painted two-wheeled carts, and visited coffee, pineapple, and banana fincas. After lunch, we watched the people from the pavilion.

This day, like all others, came to an end, and it was time to start for home. The drive was through the rugged country over which we had come, but the soft blue haze of twilight gave to all vegetation the same hue. The thatched huts along the road were silhouetted against the sky, while Nature walked quietly along the road that took us back to San José.

Another evening we were dinner guests of the Volios at the Union Club. Senor Volio is president of the Costa Rican Social Security Exchange and owner of a banana plantation at Puerto Limon on the Atlantic side and a dairy farm in the interior. They were most friendly and glad to have news of their daughter, Ligia, who is attending school in Detroit. There were all those little family greetings from Mother and Dad for their mas joven (youngest). This, of course, was all by interpreter where our Spanish broke down.

In the morning we checked out with the police department, as is the custom in some of these countries, just to be sure we had not committed a crime while there. The Grillo and Volio families were there to see us off and presented us with corsages of orchids and boxes of gardenias and roses.

BY FRANCES E. PEARSE

On our flight to Managua the captain and co-pilot came back and talked to us. We were ahead of schedule, so went off course and flew over Ometepe, a volcano on an island in Lake Nicaragua; Harry and Alfred took movies. The twenty-one passengers enjoyed it, too, even though we got a lot of sulphur odor in the plane.

Guatemala

Our friend of former visits, Gilberto Castellano, was at the airport to meet us. After putting bags in and out of the car three times to get them all in, we were off to pick up provisions for our trip to the hinterland; we were delayed half an hour trying to explain in Spanish that we wanted a cheese sandwich in a paper bag for Gilberto. We four cannot understand why anyone could have so much trouble comprehending: "I want una maas cheese sandwich in a paper bolsa."

Provisioned, suitcases unpacked in the middle of the street, clothing exchanged, mail read, bags stored, and we were off in a cloud of dust for Lake Atitlan—and I mean mucho pulvo, as there is no pavement. But did we worry about dust? No! We had on green operating caps and masks. The colors didn't harmonize with our traveling clothes, but colors mean nothing in this country. The people in the villages dashed out to look at us, and no doubt, arguments lasted well into the night and money was bet on what village we represented and what tribe we belonged to.

We crawled over the hills and began on the endless hairpin turns up one mountain and down another, road signs continually warning us of Curva Inversa, Vuelta Agosto (hairpin). It is about seventy miles to Atitlan, and that means a hard three and one-half hour ride with continual blasts on the horn.

The sun went down, and the strange country with its deep bar-ranchos (ravines) looked ghostly. We crossed a small bridge and there, beside a little campfire, guitars were playing. We had definitely left civilization behind us. How far is it now to Atitlan? Forty-five minutes. They always give you the time and not the kilometers. The mountains still towering above us, we rounded a curve at about 7,000 feet and came to a sudden halt; the road was obliterated by a land slide for a distance of 300 yards and rocks lay twenty feet deep across our path. Across the impasse, a few flashlights flickered in the darkness. Here we sat, on a narrow road, in the dark, the wind blowing weirdly, and small clods of earth still dropping onto the road; to the right a towering cliff, to the left, the ravine. As we turned around we were afraid to back up against the inner wall for fear of starting another avalanche, but we made it, and returned safely to Patzun.

Huchuetenango

The morning of our departure for Soloma had arrived, and excitement permeated the otherwise cloistered atmosphere of the mission at Huchuetenango, where Padre Mac had arranged for our stay overnight. We felt honored to share in the beauty and comfort of this unusual house whose occupants were as entertaining as they were charming.

At breakfast that morning, lighted candelabra graced the room with their shadows and added their defiance against the chill Guatemalan dampness. The beautiful table took on added interest with freshly baked muffins, bacon, eggs, cereal, and coffee. Breakfast was called on for a double-duty performance that day because we had to be fortified for the long trip on horseback over the mountains to Padre Mac's mission at Soloma.

Leaving Huchuetenango, we drove through the foothills of the Cuchumontanes Mountains to a small town called Chemal, where the mozos and horses were waiting. A campfire cast its warmth within a considerable radius, for which we were grateful—for although it was then 10 o'clock, the air was not exactly tropical. Our riding clothes, plus sweaters and jackets, were as welcome as the thought of the rest of our clothes and luggage, which the mozos had put in net bags. These bags saved our luggage from wear and tear and facilitated transportation.

Finally the luggage, plus two wooden boxes of groceries and a couple of cosmetic kits, was packed, and we were off. Steadily upward we climbed through alluring country that coaxed our gaze to wander from narrow, cragged trails to distant forests wrenched loose from the soil by blight, and then—as if through a telephoto lens—our eyes were brought back to some strange and beautiful bloom that lured us on our way down the valley where we stopped for lunch.

The altitude at that point was 11,500 feet, and we had a beautiful view for miles around. Lunch was dispatched quickly, and we mounted our horses again, but this time with difficulty; our muscles were sore, but the unwonted spirit of adventure stirred our blood, and we were on our way once more, this time down grade.

There were stretches now that made the horses appear almost in a vertical position, but surefooted they continued on the trail. Why they selected the outermost edge we did not know; perhaps to give us a greater thrill and a better view of the valley which was plainly visible in the uncorrupted atmosphere of early afternoon. A silver stream sparkled in the sunlight as it threaded its way through the valley, occasionally held back by rocks that seemed reluctant to let it pass.

A rest period here gave us new courage, but it was of short duration because when we tried to mount our horses again, our muscles were practically useless. Padre Mac was beginning to worry about us women and kept reassuring us that the mozos would be waiting at the next valley with two chairs which he had made for us to ride in. Each chair had four handles, and one mozo for each handle. But when we reached the valley, there were no mozos in sight, and Padre Mac dashed ahead to see if he could find out what had happened.

In the meantime, we jogged along and kept together fairly well except for Harry, who was always several winding curves behind us; perhaps his horse was gathering memories along the way, because he looked as though he would not be long for this world.

At San Juan Ixcay we caught up with Padre Mac and the chairs, which were not as comfortable as they looked; after riding in them for a short distance, we decided to take to the saddle again. From our point of view, it was better for us to do the grunting and groaning than to listen to the mozos.

At last we reached a hill overlooking Soloma where skyrockets were shot off to let the villagers know we were almost there. Those last few miles seemed almost unbearable after eight hours in the saddle, but we did make it to the bridge. From there Padre Mac insisted we be carried in the chairs into town, where hundreds of natives were awaiting our arrival.

A surge of joy and lightness of spirit came over us as we made our way through the narrow streets of Soloma. The whole village turned out in the most sincere welcome we had ever known; expressions of relief and happiness lighted the faces of these primitive people, and they bowed their heads as we passed for us to touch. These people were truly grateful—the “medicos” had

(Continued on page 23.)

A New Americanism

By MARTHA FORD FLORO

Back in the early days of American history when Thomas Paine was writing, "These are the times that try men's souls . . .," a spirit of national unity was being forged, slowly and painfully. At last, when the Revolution had come to an end, the pioneer people turned their faces westward. Thus the forests were conquered, the land populated. Their independence was won, and strong men and women gave full attention to the backbreaking toil of building a civilization out of the wilderness.

Over a century and a half have elapsed since those early days of American history. Today, in 1948, we live in a completely different America. Ours is a land rich in resources, boasting vast prairies, rugged mountains, good highways, tall buildings, and big industries. It is natural that we should be proud of these things, yet this nationalistic fervor is not enough. We need a re-evaluation of our country in the spirit of our democratic heritage, and the consequent development of a new Americanism.

First, we shall have to admit, if we are honest with ourselves, that the democracy of which Thomas Jefferson was so proud, has become, in too many instances, a mockery. The little people of America have become filled with a spirit of futility and an attitude of I'll-grab-mine-while-the-grabbing-is-good. The power of government is almost completely out of the hands of the rank and file. Public opinion, which is shaped largely by the press, radio, and movies, is controlled by a minority. A classic example is the recent repeal of OPA restriction. Perhaps it is true that a majority of Americans were in favor of such repeal, but is it not also true that many were so convinced by a biased press that such a course would be beneficial to them, the average Mr. and Mrs. America? None of us can help admitting that this legislative step was a betrayal of the general public which now must suffer the consequences of inflation.

With justifiable pride, we can point to our federal constitution. "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal . . ." But how consistent are these ideals with the actual turning of the wheels of justice? A pertinent example of inconsistency here is found in the "Jim Crow" laws of many states and the racial segregation in schools, churches, transportation facilities, etc. And we, as respected churchmen, stand idly by, allowing these ancient holdovers to fairly scream to all the world that, in reality, the American people don't take too seriously these high-sounding phrases about equality and justice.

These are critical times. If we seriously intend to help this, the "promised land," take its place among the other nations of the world in righteousness, we must follow through in such an analysis as this. Discovering where we now stand is the first step, then, with all the divine resources at our command, we must attempt to chart the course for the future.

This new Americanism must be based on the equality of all men. It must assume that our rightful place is one of co-operation and helpfulness to all nations on an equal basis, regardless of color or former status. Freedom of speech must become a common heritage of all, not only of those who agree with us. True maturity enables us to discuss even basic differences in the spirit of friendliness, not retaliation. Anything which builds barriers between people must be eliminated and the general level of culture raised so that all men may associate freely without sense of inferiority. Last, but not

Here Is the Writer . . .

MARTHA FORD FLORO has long been a contributor to the "Herald." She writes both poetry and prose. A graduate of Graceland College, she worked several years as a stenographer at the Auditorium, after which she was married to George Kenneth Floro, also a Graceland and a veteran of World War II. The Floros—Martha, George, and their young son, are making their home in Skokie, Illinois.

least, our loyalty must go beyond the boundaries of our own land until it encompasses the whole world. Then we can truly say with Thomas Paine, "The world is my village."

We who are Latter Day Saints have a heritage well worthy of finding its place in this new Americanism. In the early years of American history, the Restoration Movement sprang up, reaffirming the value of each individual personality as portrayed so vividly in the ministry of Jesus. This background equips us to join the pioneers who are building for this new development in our national thinking.

The logo for "New Horizons" features the words in a large, white, cursive script font against a dark, textured background. A small, stylized illustration of a ship or vessel is positioned above the letter 'o' in "Horizons".

How to Be Crazy And Like It

By NAOMI RUSSELL

We were walking down Main Street in St. George, Utah, looking for a “good place” to eat when we saw a remarkable display of minerals in a small shop window. Having just completed a tour of five national parks which featured similar glass-enclosed displays (all carefully guarded by polite but wary uniformed officers), we automatically stopped and began studying labels. It was then exactly 7:15 p. m.—I remember because I had just looked at my watch and made a mental note that if we were served promptly, we should be able to eat, shower, write cards to the relatives, and get to bed by 9 o'clock. We were concentrating on an arrangement of petrified wood when a Will Rogers replica walked up and said, “’Evenin’, folks, wouldn’t you like to come in and see our little place?”

“We’d love to,” I replied, “but we really haven’t time. We’re on our way to dinner.” I gave my husband a knowing look and whispered, “He probably wants to sell us the place; come on!”

“Won’t take long,” encouraged the man, opening the door for us, “and we have some nice-looking specimens.”

Whereupon my husband walked in saying, “Well, inasmuch as we’ll probably never be here again, we’d better see it while we can.”

Against my better judgment, I followed.

Inside was a fairyland of onyx, agates, ores, crystals, amethyst, and other semi-precious stones. Pointing out his particular pets, our host gave us the name, use, and case history of each. Occasionally he would hesitate and, in an apologetic tone, say, “If Earl—that’s my boy, were here, he could tell you more about it. He’s studied mineralogy. All I know is just what I’ve learned from him.”—And then Earl came in.

The next three hours were the most interesting of our entire visit in the southwest. After showing us the main display room, Young Mr. Olmstead took us to the back of the shop where he described the technique of gem-polishing. We listened like children while he told of his explorations in deserted mines for specimens and spent half an hour in the “dark room” watching the transfiguration of such prosaic minerals as salt and coal under the magic of an ultra-violet light.

“How did you ever happen to get into this business?” I probed, secretly wondering if it might not be a good thing back in the home town.

“It’s been kind of a dream of mine for a long time,” he smiled. “First I read a lot . . . everything I could find on mineralogy . . . then I worked as a mineralogist for the government. After that, I went to college, and when I could see my way clear, I started out here.”

“You really enjoy it, don’t you?” I asked, noticing the almost affectionate way in which he handled each stone.

“Certainly do,” he answered. “I only wish I didn’t have to worry about making a living from it. I’m always a little sad when some collector comes in and buys up a lot of my favorite specimens. Of course, I have to eat . . . but you know what I’d like?”

“A reduction in the high cost of living?” I volunteered.

“That, too,” he laughed, “but what I’d really like is to make this sort of a museum. I don’t want to sell these things—I’d rather just tell people about them.”

“Never gets tired of it,” beamed his father. “Have to boot him out and lock the door or he’d stay here all night if there was anybody around to listen to him.”

I looked at my watch again . . . 10 o'clock! “Which reminds me,” I said, “we were on our way to dinner three hours ago.”

“You’ve been such good listeners,” he smiled, picking up a small quartz crystal from his collection, “here’s something to remember us by.”

We were standing in the doorway taking a final survey and saying good-bye when the older Olmstead noticed several spectators outside the window. “Pardon me,” he said, “there are some other folks out there that might like to see the place,” and he walked over to them.

Young Mr. Olmstead grinned and confided in a low tone, “Dad’s got it, too. He’s been here only a few months, and he can’t stand having anyone pass up the place. I guess we’re kind of crazy, but we certainly do enjoy ourselves.”

“If that’s the case,” I told my husband as we crossed the street, “I wish there were more crazy people.”

“They’re all right,” he agreed.

“It’s good to know there are a few entirely unselfish souls in existence,” I said. “Maybe that’s why they’re such a happy pair. I’d like to write about them sometime . . . it might inspire others to adopt their philosophy.”

“Go to it,” he smiled, opening the door of the restaurant, “we could use a world full of their kind.”

BULLETIN BOARD

Missouri State Minister's Convocation

The Missouri State Minister's Convocation will be held in Warrensburg under the auspices of the Missouri Council of Churches on January 12, 13, and 14. All reservations must be sent to Ward A. Hougas, Box 355, Warrensburg, as soon as possible.

Names and Addresses Wanted

If you have relatives, friends, or former neighbors who have moved from the east, south, middle west, or southwest to the Pacific northwest (Idaho, Washington, Oregon, or British Columbia), Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs, 8747 Phinney Avenue, Seattle, Washington will appreciate your sending him their names and addresses. He suggests the following people be included: members of the church who have not been officially transferred from records elsewhere; nonmember relatives who would appreciate receiving missionary calls; friends who have had contact with the church in other areas, or those who would like the missionary to call on them. Give family name; address (if street and number are unknown, give locality); contact with the church, if any; interests; relationship; any other information that may be helpful in ministering to them. It is suggested that branch secretaries check their records for those who should be transferred to the Northwest.

Attention, Albuquerque Visitors

Members of the Albuquerque mission may be contacted by writing to Mrs. R. N. Winegar, 204 West Castillo Road, Albuquerque, or calling 2-8373.

Books Wanted

Dorn D. Simmons, Route 7, Hillsboro, Ohio, wants a copy of Joseph Smith and His Progenitors. Please write stating price and condition of book before mailing it.

Mrs. Roy Shaffer, 532 Berwick Road, Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, wants to purchase Volume 2 of the Church History.

Ralph W. Moore, 16250 Mansfield, Detroit 27, Michigan, wants to buy a copy of The Instructor and a set of Church Histories. Please write to him, stating price and condition of books, before sending them.

Harold Reid, Box 152, Stuart, Nebraska, needs a copy of John Roth's Gospel Messenger. Write, stating price, before sending the book.

Heralds Wanted

Corra Emerson, 904 South Wayland, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, will appreciate receiving the November and December issues of the Herald for missionary work.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are requested for L. Warren Hill, Box 4, Stewartville, Missouri, that he may regain his health and be able to care for his family.

Prayers are requested for John McCormick, Spring Branch and North Kiger Roads, Independence, Missouri, that his health may be restored so that he will be able to resume his church activities.

Prayers are requested for William Wilson of Sandusky, Michigan, who has an infection in one of his eyes.

Mrs. Alice Skinner requests prayers for her brother-in-law, Ira Skinner of Oklaunion, Texas

Mrs. Floy Holcomb asks prayers for her brother, Harold Baughman of Denison, Iowa, who, was injured in a recent accident, and for her sister, Mrs. Blanche Jackson of Independence, Missouri, who is in poor health.

WEDDINGS

Hamilton-Booth

Roberta Ann Booth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gordon Booth, and David William Hamilton, son of Dr. William Hamilton, were married on December 20 at the Reorganized Church in Detroit, Michigan, High Priest W. Blair McClain officiating. Following a wedding trip to New Orleans, the couple will make their home in Highland Park, Michigan.

Hawks-Teichert

Claire Teichert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leo L. Teichert of Lansing, Michigan, became the bride of Ernest Hawks, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Hawks of Lansing, on September 20 at the Reorganized Church in Lansing. Elder E. R. Carter performed the ceremony.

Premoe-Dudley

Mary Lou Dudley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Dudley, and John Premoe, Jr., son of John Premoe, both of Lansing, Michigan, were married on December 6, the bride's father officiating.

Minear-Minton

Mildred Kathleen Minton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Minton of Independence, Missouri, and Lloyd Cecil Minear, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Minear of Walnut Creek, California, were married on October 3, 1947, at the Reorganized Church in Berkeley, California, Pastor Alma Andrews officiating. They are making their home in Richmond, California.

Spargo-Maloney

Mary (Mollie) Maloney, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Edward Maloney, of Enfield, England, and Edwin Spargo, son of Mrs. E. J. Spargo and the late Joseph Spargo of Vancouver, British Columbia, were married on December 6 at the Reorganized Church in Vancouver, Elders Calvin Taylor and George Miller officiating. Following a wedding trip to Victoria, they will make their home in Vancouver.

Hutchinson-Bronson

Barbara Beverly Bronson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Burr Bronson of Warrensburg, Missouri, and L. G. Hutchinson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Hutchinson of Post Oak, Missouri, were married on November 26 at the Market Street Reorganized Church in Warrensburg. Stake President Ward A. Hougas read the double-ring ceremony.

Heath-Ballinger

Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Ballinger of Grain Valley, Missouri, announce the marriage of their daughter, Virginia Mae, to Mac Heath, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clive Heath of Oak Grove, Missouri. The wedding took place on December 24 at the Blue Springs Reorganized Church. Elder Harold Constance officiating. The couple will make their home in Oak Grove.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Sterrett announce the birth of a son, Thomas Gordon, born December 13 at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Sterrett is the former Jeanne Voltmann of Lincoln Park, Michigan.

Mr. and Mrs. William Newton of Lansing, Michigan, announce the birth of a daughter, Katherine Annette, born October 8. Mrs. Newton is the former Audrey Fiscus.

A daughter, Catherine Karen, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Donald Engler of Lansing, Michigan, on October 6. Mrs. Engler was formerly Genivive Toms.

A son, Kenneth Leo, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Skinner of Lansing, Michigan, on November 8. Mrs. Skinner is the former Audentia Sherman.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Wallace of Lansing, Michigan, announce the birth of a son, Daryl Paul, born November 21. Mrs. Wallace was formerly Marion James.

A daughter, Leona Jean, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Bennett, Jr., of Lansing, Michigan, on October 5. Mrs. Bennett, before her marriage, was Hazel Vanecour.

Mr. and Mrs. William C. McCune of New Kensington, Pennsylvania, announce the birth of a son, William Gary, born December 20.

A son, Michael Larry, was born on December 18 to Mr. and Mrs. Everett Anderson of Rich Hill, Missouri.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Rogers of Creston, Iowa, announce the birth of a son, Allen Ray, born December 8.

Mr. and Mrs. Larry Updike announce the birth of a daughter, Carol Jean, born November 26 at the Independence Sanitarium.

A daughter, Wilma Ann was born to Mr. and Mrs. Aden Shimmel of Mansfield, Missouri, on October 5. She was blessed December 7 at Mansfield by Elders J. W. Davis and D. A. Fuller. Mrs. Shimmel is the former Dessie Hosler of Roseville, Michigan.

A son, James Alva, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Alva Shimmel of Mansfield, Missouri, on October 27. He was blessed December 7 at Mansfield by Elders J. W. Davis and D. A. Fuller. Mrs. Shimmel is the former Vida Hosler of Roseville, Michigan.

DEATHS

BENNETT.—Steven Henry, son of the late Steven and Alvina Bennett, was born at Arthur, Ontario, on January 6, 1878, and died at Mount Forest on November 4, 1947. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on October 31, 1879, at Luther, Ontario, by S. W. Tomlinson.

He is survived by five sisters: Mrs. Louis Sharer, Fergus, Ontario; Mrs. Ostrander, Brampton, Ontario; Mrs. Davidson and Mrs. Charles Walton, Guelph, Ontario; and Mrs. James Costigan of Georgetown; and two brothers: William of Glen Williams, Ontario, and Ace of Toronto. Elder Arthur Dunn was in charge of the funeral service. Burial was in the Greenfield Cemetery.

GOSS.—Kansas Harrington, was born May 15, 1875, in Arkansas and died October 4, 1947, in Oklahoma. Early in life, she moved with her parents to the Indian Territory, which later became eastern Oklahoma. Here she married S. L. Goss on March 10, 1895. When she heard the story of the Restoration, she was baptized; her membership was always in the Fanshawe, Oklahoma, Branch. "Aunt Kansas," as she was affectionately known, was a good neighbor and loved by all who knew her. Until illness made it impossible for her to do so, she walked the mile from her home to church to attend services. Elder I. E. Fitzwater officiated at the funeral, which was held at Fanshawe.

EVANS.—Jesse Raymond, son of Bernie A. and Margie Evans of Brewton, Alabama, was born June 25, 1900, and died November 25, 1946. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 5, 1917, and remained a faithful member until his death. He spent fifteen years in the Army and was privileged to travel over the states and to the Hawaiian Islands, where he was a co-worker with Brother Waller. On December 20, 1935, he was married to Laurene Sellers of Georgiana, Alabama; three children were born to them.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Lucretia and Rita; a son, Jack; his father and stepmother; four sisters: Bertie Sheiler, San Antonio, Texas; Leona Franklin, Wallace, Alabama; Nola Hicks, Pensacola, Florida; and Inez Sumler, Charleston, South Carolina; and three brothers: Hosie and Marvin of Wallace, and George of Augusta, Georgia. High Priest A. D. McCall conducted the funeral at the home in Brewton. Burial was in the Handbury Cemetery.

SUTTON.—Clara E., was born January 28, 1869, and died October 26, 1947. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on July 30, 1899. Surviving is her husband, William Sutton. Elder John Luce officiated at the funeral.

WRANCHER.—Elizabeth Jane, daughter of the late John and Matilda Johnston, was born September 1, 1871, in Lambton County, Ontario, and died suddenly on October 21, 1947, at her home in Bothwell, Ontario. She was married to Ambrose Wrancher on April 30, 1890, and united with the Reorganized Church in October, 1898. Mr. Wrancher preceded her in death.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. Milton Beaul and Mrs. Harland Smith of Bothwell; two sisters: Mrs. Anna Haggith of Newbery, Ontario, and Mrs. Harry Frumveller of Port Huron, Michigan; three brothers: John of Stratton, Ontario; William of Mission City, British Columbia; and George of Detroit, Michigan; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the church, Elder Almer Sheehy of London and Elder W. R. Leverton officiating. Interment was in the Bothwell cemetery.

HARP.—Zelta Fern Braybrooks, was born April 13, 1883, at Lawrence, Michigan, and died at her home in Lamoni, Iowa, on December 4, 1947. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at an early age, and was married to Edward G. Harp on October 23, 1901. Three of the seven children born to them died in infancy.

Surviving are her husband; three daughters: Mrs. Emma Tappich of New York City; Mrs. Verna Ellis of Ann Arbor, Michigan; and Mrs. Velva Smith of Lamoni; a son, John W. Harp of Pesbasteri, Washington; ten grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the March Chapel in Lamoni, Elders Arthur Lane and David Gamet officiating. Interment was in the Rose Hill Cemetery.

WINGROVE.—Freeman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Wingrove, was born in Walsingham, Ontario, on February 22, 1887, and died December 12, 1947, in Aylmer, Ontario. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on September 25, 1911. He is survived by his wife; his parents; a son, Raymond; a brother, Calvin; and a sister: Mrs. Ted Swyer. The Reverend Fred Helps conducted the funeral service.

HENDERSHOTT.—Leroy, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Hendershott, was born in Alma, Michigan, in 1886 and died December 13, 1947, in Detroit, Michigan. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in February 1932. He is survived by his wife and son, Raymond, of Detroit; a brother, Norman, of Windsor, Ontario; and a sister, Pearl, of London, Ontario. The Reverend M. G. Cook was in charge of the funeral service. Burial was in the St. Thomas Cemetery.

BURKHARDT.—Mynnie Lois, daughter of Louis and Mina Ebinger, was born in Los Angeles, California. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church when a child, remaining a faithful member throughout life. On December 8, 1898, she was married to Adolph Burkhardt; one son was born to this union. Until illness overtook her, she was an active worker in the Central Los Angeles Branch; for many years, she was a teacher in the church school, serving as superintendent part of the time. She passed away on the evening of December 16, following an extended illness. She leaves her husband; a son, Gerald of Tarzana, California; three brothers: Arnold, Louis, and Irwen; a sister, Mrs. Stella Hughes, all of Los Angeles. Funeral services were held at the Wee Kirk O' the Heather in Forest Lawn Cemetery, Glendale, California, John W. Rushton officiating.

VANDER WAL.—Jennie Duterman, was born near Marion, Michigan, on January 12, 1907, and died at her home in Marion on October 25, 1947, following a long illness. She was married in October, 1940, to Sidney C. Vander Wal, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 8, 1944.

She is survived by her husband; three sisters: Mrs. Ralph Vander Wal and Mrs. Kenneth Crozier of Marion; and Mrs. Gilson of Grand Rapids, Michigan; five brothers: William of McBain, Michigan; Alma and Neil of Grand Rapids; Garret of Lowell, Michigan; and Herman of Sheldon, Iowa. Elder B. H. Doty was in charge of the funeral. Interment was in the Vogel Center Cemetery.

SCOFIELD.—Myrtle May, daughter of David T. and Henrietta Poe, was born August 1, 1874, in Indianapolis, Indiana, and died December 8, 1947, at her home in Rich Hill, Missouri, following an illness of over a year. At the age of eighteen, she was married to Charles W. Scofield at Woodbine, Iowa; four sons were born to this union. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on January 12, 1896, remaining a faithful member throughout her life.

Surviving are her husband and three sons: Iyvl Floyd of Larkspur, California; Coy Williams and Jesse Nyle of Rich Hill; four sisters; a brother; and several grandchildren. One son, Percy Linn, preceded her in death. Elders John Deller and Arlie Allen were in charge of the funeral, which was held at the Reorganized Church in Rich Hill. Burial was at Independence, Missouri.

DAWSON.—Nina Adeane Hopkins, affectionately known as Sister Dena, was born December 28, 1876, and died December 13, 1947. She was the daughter of Julia H. and Benjamin Hopkins. On September 20, 1891, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church and remained a faithful worker throughout her life. On March 11, 1908, she was married to Charles W. Dawson; two children were born to this marriage. A son, Leu Wallace, died in infancy.

She is survived by her husband; a daughter, Mary Virginia of Davenport, Iowa; a brother, Bert Hopkins of Princeville, Illinois; and three sisters: Mrs. Agnes Beardley of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Maude Dawson of Kingston, Missouri; and Mrs. Bessie Forquer of Dahinda, Illinois. Another brother, Patriarch R. V. Hopkins, died exactly one week after her death. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Dahinda, Elder J. O. Dutton officiating. Burial was in the Dahinda cemetery.

GRITZKA.—Donna Jean, daughter of Mrs. Margie Stack, was born April 23, 1943, and died December 6, 1947, of pneumonia at a hospital in Little Rock, Arkansas, where she had been taken for an operation. Services were conducted at the Texarkana Funeral Home, Pastor Harold B. Schultz officiating. Burial was in the State Line Cemetery.

SIMONS.—Reuben Andrew, was born July 31, 1876, at Protection, New York, and died at his home near Norwood, Missouri, on August 26, 1947, after a long illness. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on December 11, 1905, at West Branch, Michigan, where he was ordained a deacon on November 14, 1914. In 1906, he was married to Emma Heminway; two children were born to them. About twenty years ago, he moved to the farm near Norwood where he spent the remainder of his life. Although isolated from the church, he continued steadfast in the faith, and on his deathbed requested "a real Latter Day Saint funeral sermon." The service was held in the Happy Ridge Baptist Church, Elder J. W. Davis of Ava, Missouri, officiating. Burial was in the Baptist cemetery near his home.

Rugged Righteousness

(Continued from page 10.)

their faith and integrity. If the people of the earth are to believe the testimony of the church, they must find in the life of its adherents the type and prophecy of the kingdom of God—a communion of individuals alert to the needs of the day and acting under the impulsion and direction of the spirit of the living God.

Then shall there be an ensign of peace lifted up for the world to see, that ensign being the life of the people themselves, living in response to God.

Our Father in heaven knows we have need of peace, but he has placed in operation an inexorable law. We must "seek first the kingdom of God, and establish his righteousness." Then shall peace be added unto us.

Our call is one to rugged righteousness, the kind which can stand firm in the face of fear and temptation, knowing well that right shall eventually triumph, and peace and good will shall reign upon the earth.

South American Journey

(Continued from page 19.)

come at last; the padre's promise had been fulfilled.

Much preparation had gone into this welcome, for they wanted to celebrate the arrival of the white people who had come to help them. Fireworks lighted up the late afternoon sky and marimbas played with a primitive rhythm. Small children threaded their way quietly through the crowds, determined to let nothing of interest escape them. Knowing that the merrymaking would continue for some time, Padre Mac whisked us through the door of the Convento where the separation gave us temporary privacy.

The padre's plans had been carried out, and the trip had been everything he had said it would be—"rugged." The excitement that had started us on our journey that morning had been transferred to the natives to finish. The rhythm of the marimbas could be heard late into the night; then, as if in answer to the inner rhythm of sleep, the people left for their homes—happy in the thought that the padre's promise had come true.

(To be continued.)

(This first feature is reprinted from the Detroit Women's City Club Magazine.)

available again

Apostasy, Reformation, and Restoration

By J. A. KOEHLER

10 for $1.00

25 for $2.00

50 for $3.75

100 for $6.75

Herald Publishing House
Independence, Missouri

Attention, Leaguers--

Want to

- Put a feather in your cap?
- Look sharp?
- Swell your "Missions Abroad" fund?

HERE'S HOW

Buy Zion's League T-shirts in lots of 6, sell them to fellow-leaguers. You'll each want at least one. These washable shirts are grand for League parties, all sports events. The navy blue League emblem designed by Rena Ricker of Chicago District's Zion's League stands out on the white T-shirt and really looks distinctive. Buy one and you'll want another!

JUNIOR SIZES (24 to 32)

Small Medium
Large

REGULAR SIZES (34 to 40)

Small
Medium
Large

Sold in lots of 6 (assorted sizes). Be sure to state Junior or Regular and the size of each class.

YOU PAY US $12 a doz. SELL FOR $1.50 ea. or $18 a doz.

You make 50¢ each or $6 a dozen.

SEE HOW EASY IT IS!

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

*And there by hill and stream,
Long ages old,
The trees lay bare their bosoms
To the winter's cold.*

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

JANUARY 17, 1948

NUMBER 3

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Say--

Folks tell me this is a man's world.
Is that true?
Seems to me, my days are run
The way the women want 'em!

Mother makes me comb my hair
And keep clean,
When everybody knows you can have a lot more fun
If you're dirty.

And she says I can't bring any worms into the house.
Not any at all—
Not even those nice, fat, fuzzy ones.
And I can't step in puddles,
And I can't hammer on the furniture.
I wonder why.

And all the things she tells me
About how things work,
And what things are,
And why things happen—
I wonder if she really knows!

LOUISE

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

Willing and Wanting	3
Across the Desk	4

ARTICLES:

Save Us, Lord, or We Perish, by Apostle E. J. Gleazer	5
The Book of Life (a poem), by Ernest André	8
Challenges, by Norma Anne Kirkendall	9
Temperance Work	11
Conversion of George Gould	11
What L. D. S. Believe About Repentance, by Evan A. Fry	12
Friendly Visiting, by Mrs. C. G. Mesley	14
South American Journey, by Frances E. Pearse	17
The Mississippi, by Doris F. Miller	19
Building the Kingdom—in January, 1948, by Bishop L. Wayne Updike	20
Letters	22
Bulletin Board	23

AUDITORIUM NEWS

* THE JOINT COUNCIL has just appointed Donald V. Lents as Chaplain of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital to take the place of the late R. V. Hopkins, who occupied that position for many years.

★

* DR. JOSEPH LUFF, long a minister of the church and the first head of the Independence Sanitarium, passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. E. B. Dooley, of Independence, at 11:40, Tuesday night. He was one of the great preachers of the church, a missionary, the author of many written works, and was greatly loved by the people.

★

* THE QUORUMS OF TWELVE AND SEVENTY have been meeting at Central Church in Kansas City, giving special attention to missionary work and related subjects.

★

* MOBILE, ALABAMA, Branch has added thirty to its membership by baptism this year, including a number entering at a recent meeting.

★

* COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, Branch had a fine report to make in a letter from Elder V. D. Ruch, pastor, who says it is the first time he has baptized sixty people in one year. Attendance is increasing. The building fund has been increased by $32,630.41, making a total of cash on hand of $56,153.57. The annual Christmas dinner and bazaar netted $1,315. Says Brother Ruch: "We start the new year with a great deal of optimism and enthusiasm, believing that the good work will continue."

★

* HONOLULU, T. H., reports that on Sunday, December 28, seven new members were baptized, which brought the baptismal total for the islands to thirty-two. This is the highest number for several years. Five others have already requested baptism for early 1948.

★

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC has just received the deed to the church property recently acquired for missionary use in Rotterdam, Holland. Bishop G. L. DeLapp believes that it is the first property held by the church in that country; at least, it is the first of which he has any record. The deed was sent in the original Dutch, notarized, and with an English translation, a very gracious courtesy by Her Majesty's Government!

★

Writing Letters. Whenever you write a letter, be sure you put your name, address, and the date on it. It is not enough to have these items on the envelope, or on the manuscript you send. The envelope is usually discarded to save space; the manuscript is put in a stock available for publication use; and the letter goes to the files. . . . This Christmas we received a number of beautiful greeting cards from friends, some of them without addresses. We wrote to thank those whose addresses we knew, but even so, some have been sent back to us marked "Unknown." Apparently these friends have moved on, not telling the postmaster where. If you didn't hear from us, this may be the reason.

Willing and Wanting

THERE ARE TIMES in every life when a person is asked, even directed, to do something that runs against his grain. His judgment, however mistaken, is against it. His feelings are against it. So he exclaims, "I won't do it! I won't. I won't!" Then various pressures begin to build up against him. He sees what his refusal may mean to the organization, in the frustrating of purposes and the disruption of plans.

Trouble is something that can never be confined. Whenever you make it, you can be sure that it will hurt far more people than those you intend to check. It hurts the innocent, those who have helped you heretofore, those that you don't want to hurt.

In view of all this, if he is a wise man, he will see his mistake and change his mind. He will see factors in the situation that had not come to his attention before. He will observe that he had not considered everything in its proper relation. Happy is the man who, making such discoveries, is fortunate enough not to be stubborn.

It is best in all such situations, of course, not to think about saving face, nor about personal prestige, but about what is right and best. And how much better everything turns out to be if one says, "All right. I see my mistake. I'll do it!"

THE CONSIDERATIONS above may seem personal and trivial. In a sense they are. They have nothing to do with the wars that threaten the safety of the world, and they do not come to the attention of the great ones of the earth. And yet . . .

A great deal of human misery is made by the little insignificant wars that occur at home, among families and friends, in churches, in schools, and other small groups. Look at your last fuss at home or the current fight that is going on in your branch or a trouble that may even be carried up to a district conference. Chances are that back of it all was somebody being stubborn, refusing to change his mind or make any concessions or to admit he was wrong. Analyze it honestly and without prejudice, and you will probably find something like that in it. And unless someone is willing to back up, change his mind, and ask forgiveness, the trouble he has made will eventually take up the time of some of the highest officers of the church, keeping them from doing more important work.

PRICES HAVE been bothering you. They have been bothering me a lot, too. I resent it, every time I see a markup on a price tag. My sales resistance stiffens. My supply of brotherly love runs low and turns a little acid, I'm afraid.

Very unwillingly, very reluctantly, the Board of Publication and the management have been forced to recognize that an increase in the price of our Herald is inevitable, unless they consent to have it subsidized out of the tithes of the people, and divert so much money from the missionary and other tasks of the church. Some of you may feel like saying, "I won't pay it. I won't!" And then when you have thought it over, you will see that the church work must go on, and that the Herald is an essential part of your working equipment.

Look! We need you. You! Don't drop us now. The church needs you. Try to understand the situation. Read the statement from the management on this page. And we all hope that you will stay with us. L. J. L.

Increase In Saints' Herald Subscription Price

Effective, March 1, 1948, the subscription price of the Saints' Herald will be $3.50 per year in the United States and its possessions, $3.75 in Canada, and $4.50 in all other countries. The present price is $2.50 per year in the United States. The higher rate for other countries is because of additional postage.

Like costs in other lines of business, the expenses of your church publishing house have mounted tremendously since the war. The price of paper increases almost every month. For example, we pay $2.50 today for the same amount of paper that cost us $1.00 in 1941.

Labor costs are up. So are the prices of all other services and supplies required in magazine production. It is entirely possible that they have not yet reached the top.

Those of us at your church publishing house believe in low prices. We have made every effort to maintain a low price on your official church publication—so much so that for almost two years the subscription price has been less than the actual cost of production. However, with continued increases in cost, we have found that we cannot carry on without additional revenue. The new subscription price has been set only after a thorough canvass of the entire situation by all members of the Board of Publication, the First Presidency, and the Presiding Bishopric; and it is with the recommendation of this group that the new rate becomes effective March 1. This rate is substantially lower than most religious magazines in America today. There are two or three representing the very largest denominations of the country which continue to maintain a still lower price than ours. However, when it is understood that these magazines go to millions of subscribers, where ours goes to but a few thousand, the difference in production cost is understandable.

It will be our effort to furnish our readers with the very highest quality reading material pertaining to the church, its beliefs and activities. We feel that you will understand our situation, and we truly look forward to a continuation of the splendid relationship which has existed between publisher and reader.

Across the Desk

Administering the Sacrament

SEVERAL QUESTIONS concerning the manner of administering the sacrament have come to the Presidency in recent weeks. The first of these came from Brother Draper's field and had to do with the spiritual significance of the bread and wine. From the reply made, we excerpt the following:

The spiritual significance of the emblems lies in the purpose to which they are consecrated during the service. For this reason any of the mechanics involved in preparation, including the breaking of the bread and the pouring of the wine are not part of the administration, except when performed as part of the ceremony after the actual sacramental service is in process. To interpret otherwise would open the way to endless discussions concerning the production of the raw materials, processing, marketing, etc. We should be guided by the Doctrine and Covenants statement to use wine of our own make, which implies that we should be sure of the purity of both bread and wine. Otherwise, however, the administration actually consists of those acts performed after the service has been called to order by the presiding minister.

In light of the foregoing and of the nature of the sacramental prayer, it would appear that the emblems have no particular spiritual significance before the beginning of the service or after the benediction has been offered except, of course, where they are reserved for service to the sick. In this event, such service to the sick may reasonably be regarded as part of the major service. The emblems should be handled in such a way as to keep them scrupulously clean before the serving. The residue may be consumed or discarded. For the sake of sanitation, unused wine should not be returned to the original container to be used later, and obviously the bread cannot be so handled. The use to which left-over bread and wine may be put after the service should not reflect an undignified attitude toward them.

In many of our branches, some of the sacramental emblems are taken to those who are sick or who are otherwise prevented from attending the service. The question has arisen as to whether these emblems should be reconsecrated in the presence of the shut-ins, or whether they may be administered without any such ceremonial approach.

It is evident that the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper should be conducted with fitting dignity whatever the surrounding circumstances. This certainly prohibits taking the consecrated emblems to the sick person and handing them to him as one might hand a morsel of food. There should be prayer and, if possible, a brief statement seeking to recreate the spirit of the earlier service from which the emblems have been brought. Most certainly those partaking should understand the nature of the ordinance. It is vital, for example, that the communicant shall be worthy to partake. There may be occasions when those administering the emblems will deem it wise to conduct a miniature service in which the prayers of blessing shall be used. But there is no requirement that emblems which have once been consecrated shall be reconsecrated because those now participating were not present when the prayers of blessing were offered. If such a position should be taken, we would have to require that all persons partaking of the sacrament be present throughout the entire service. This is eminently desirable, but it cannot be held as a requirement of the law.

We have long depended on Elder A. B. Phillips for assistance in analyzing such questions as the foregoing. In reply to a query submitted to him in this connection, Brother Phillips recently wrote:

Concerning your letter on taking the sacramental emblems to the sick from branch sacrament meetings, I have examined various historical volumes, but find little in them or our church standard books on that point. As the distinctive nature of our faith tends to lessen the importance of customs in other churches, either Catholic or Protestant, I have mostly sought primitive or post-apostolic references, the most definite of which appear to be those of Justin Martyr and Mosheim.

In the Oxford edition of Justin's work, page 51 states that those who administer the emblems to the people present after the prayers are concluded, "carry them to those who are absent." A similar statement couched in different phrasing is found on page 52. In Murdock's translation of Mosheim, 1881 edition, Book 1, Century II, Part II, chapter IV, page 137, states that portions of the consecrated bread and wine "were commonly sent to the absent and the sick, in testimony of fraternal affection towards them." I find nothing more detailed in any other work.

While these statements do not say it specifically, the inference seems to be that no further ceremonials were performed when taking the emblems to the sick, so far as a reconsecration is concerned. My conclusions are based largely on a comparative analysis. For instance, we consecrate oil but once, though used at widely different times. Paul blessed handkerchiefs and sent to sick persons at a distance. The purpose of the dedication seems to be the chief thing to consider. The prayer of blessing provides: "bless and sanctify this bread (wine) to the souls of all those who partake (drink)." The sick are served as a function of the sacramental service on each separate occasion as soon as practicable on the assumption that they would be present if they could. This includes a social meaning to the sick as being of the brotherhood and in the New Covenant, hence participating with them though unable to attend the meeting. I can see no logical reason to assume that the prayers of blessing become void to sick absentees, and to reconsecrate in cases where the emblems are taken to them direct from the service of consecration would to me strike a discordant note, in view of the language of the prayer of consecration.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Volume 95

January 17, 1948

Number 3

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

Save Us, Lord, or We Perish

Sermon given at the organization conference of the Northern and Western Michigan Districts held at East Jordan, Michigan, Sunday, October 5, 1947. Scripture, Matthew 8: 25. Reported by Bessie Brown.

By Apostle E. J. Gleazer

WE ARE LIVING in a world that is not too pleasant to think about. We may like to forget what the wickedness of men has brought to pass in the world. So far as the earth is concerned, it is still the good earth. The testimony of God made manifest in his creation suggests to us that he could be glorified in our behavior even as he is glorified in the beauty of nature around us. But we would not be the children of God if we closed our eyes to the actual conditions that prevail all over the world at this time.

We may be inclined to say that possibly twenty-five years ago we did not vision such a world; and yet that is not exactly the truth, for we had the warnings of both the ancient and modern prophets even then. We were told then, as we were fifty years ago, of the necessity of building the kingdom of God, because earthly governments were to come to naught. As we quoted some of those prophecies, we wondered, "How can these things be?" The last twenty-five years have remarkably revealed how these prophecies could come to pass. Not a nation is externally safe or internally stable today. Every nation is being shaken, and only the nation that is built on righteous foundations can endure. I hope that we shall be able to put some of these foundations under this nation, for God had a purpose in its coming forth, and he is still concerned in its mission to the rest of the world.

You can hardly realize what is transpiring on the earth, because you have not lived abroad. We can appreciate why certain soldiers returning to this country got down and kissed the soil when they came off the ships, and why people who come here as visitors do not wish to return home to Europe or Asia or Africa.

I WISH we could realize how fortunate we are to be permitted to live in America; but, if we do not sense that privilege, we must be made conscious of the responsibility that is ours by virtue of our residence here—a responsibility not equaled anywhere else in the world now. As a nation, we have not sensed that responsibility. As members of the church, and as citizens of these United States, we have not yet sensed our responsibility to the rest of the world.

There was a time that some of us thought politically we could live within our own borders and "let the rest of the world go by." We were going to build ourselves a place of refuge in the hills. I often thought I would like to find a little island somewhere, but I don't know where that island is today! Of course, in my heart of hearts, I just couldn't withdraw to a little island so long as I have a responsibility to my fellow men, but there is no such thing as escape anywhere today.

THE LAST WAR revealed, possibly more than the First World War, that when the earth was in trouble, even the remote corners of the United States were invaded, and our sons and daughters were called into service. Many of those poor souls had nothing to do with the controversy that was raging. It was not of their choice. They were not responsible for the world that was on fire, and, cruel as it may seem, those of us who are responsible for the kind of a world in which we live are not usually required to do the fighting.

But we didn't escape the penalty. Our homes were invaded. Our loved ones were taken from us, and while many were permitted to return, something happened to them that changed their lives. They are not the same. The world is not the same. Those of us who remained at home are not the same, and we shall never be the same again, regardless of what we attempt to do.

We assured these young men and women that while war was terrible, a victory to us would mean the preservation of the democratic way of life. Some of these folks today are questioning whether or not the so-called democratic way of life was worth preserving. Some of them with some of us are wondering if our government has the same interest in them today that it professed to have when it required their services to defend it from the enemy beyond our shores. And when it is suggested that the government attempt to do something for these young men and women, it is immediately challenged by commercial interests which insist that the government must not interfere with business, for men and organizations must make profits regardless of the price that people have to pay in being denied places to live and even means of transportation.

If that were all we had to worry about, maybe we could blink our eyes to it and say, "Let's go on."

OUT OF THE GOODNESS of the hearts and minds of a great many people representing the various nations of the earth (for there are many good people in other lands than our own), there is an attempt being made to meet these problems. I wish it were possible for some of us to know some of the people at Lake Success, New York, representing the various governments in the United Nations.

We may not like everything said there. We are disturbed because, in this democratic nation that guarantees the right of free speech, Russians may get up and tell the United Nations Assembly what they think of the United States. There are some people in this country who would like to expel them from the United States. We can't do that and believe in freedom of speech at the same time. Inasmuch as we have invited the United Nations to establish headquarters in the United States, and inasmuch as we have no jurisdiction as a nation over what happens there, we can't close them up if we want to, unless we say, "We will no longer permit the United Nations to have headquarters here."

We can't deny freedom of speech, and I don't think we want to. If the Russians are telling the truth, we ought to know it, and we had better do something about it. If not, we can prove the charges untrue. I am not making any plea for Russia, except to say that there is a controversy going on to determine which way of life shall prevail on the earth. Are we going to try to determine it by resorting to arms? As surely as we do, we shall speed the annihilation of men and nations.

RACIAL HATREDS have been developed or intensified since the war. There is a clash of commercial interests, not only in the States but in the world. I often wonder if the United States or Great Britain or Russia would be concerned in Iran if it were not for the precious oil that flows beneath that soil. The two largest concerns in the world owning interests in Arabia now are American and British, not Russian. Can you blame Russia? The spirit of commercialism is just as prevalent in our land as it is in lands abroad, and as long as men or nations put material interests first, we shall have wars and everything that is associated with war.

Racial conflicts occur on a broad scale. Take India. Some people in this country said, "If Great Britain would only get out of India, all would be well." But did peace come to India with the withdrawal of Britain? It did not. There has been a dreadful slaughter of Hindus and Moslems since British forces left.

.....
LET US RETURN home. Consider the high cost of living in these United States.

We have a problem in these United States for which it is difficult to find an answer. First of all, they tell us we have got to help to feed Europe and some other parts of the world. "If we don't, we shall have Approaching storms give a brief warning in advance. Can we read the danger signs?

Communism; and in order not to have Communism, we had better feed those people." Our government projects, such as the Marshall plan, do not appear to grow out of a love for men and women in other countries who need food, and they know it. We are not fooling them. They know it is not out of our love. It is almost in the form of a bribe, to win a race as to who will control these nations. Private aid, however, is of a different character.

It reminds me of what happened to our church in Jerusalem. We had certain people come to that mission house and join our church, and we all felt good about it. Then we found out that some of these people belonged to four or five missions. They joined our church so they could get something from us. They also joined the Episcopalians so they could get something from them, and they were drawing from several different sources. That is how religious they were. We thought we were making converts. That is about the way some of these nations are reacting today. They will take whatever we will send to them as a nation, but they will also take what other nations send, and they will play one nation against another.

Have you found a solution, or have you heard of a solution offered for this problem? President Truman has selected one of the most outstanding men of America, Charles Luckman, to head an organization to save food for these people. He met with the brewers recently. That amused me a bit, how he would have to sit down and counsel with the brewers and say, "Now, gentlemen, for the sake of this world, and to prevent the spread of Communism, can't you get along with a little less grain? In other words, let's cut down the amount of beer."

They have already gone to the distillers, and they say they have enough whisky to keep us from getting thirsty as long as we live. So don't get excited, you are not going to be upset. But think of it! In the world in which we are living, with men and women, boys and girls dying for the want of food, eating roots and herbs in order to live, we have to go to individuals in this land, blessed above all other lands, and say, "Gentlemen, use less grain for whisky use less grain for beer, that we might be able to send more abroad." How can the God of heaven withhold his anger in such a situation?

We are doing something else. We are making a plea now that the rest of us eat less in the United States, that we might send more abroad; and then, to make that work, because you can't trust enough of us to accept the idea, they threaten us that we may have to go back to rationing, and then you know what happens? I hope none of you are guilty, but recently in certain parts of the United States a run was made on the stores for groceries, and automobile tires, and what not, because people were afraid this voluntary program couldn't work. They reasoned, "If we are going to be rationed again, as long as we don't have a pull with the ration board, we had better hide it while the hiding is good." And if this nation becomes panicky and goes into hoarding, the Lord himself only knows what is going to happen to us.

That is the world in which you and I live. Are you concerned? I am touching the automobile proposition, but I know some people who seem to speak with authority, who tell us that certain persons are deliberately withholding from the market the basic materials out of which automobiles are manufactured, for purposes that will, in the long run, serve their selfish interests. That may be difficult to prove, but it is being published just the same. In all seriousness, there is manipulation in this and other markets.

Are you watching what is going on in Chicago in the grain market? Some of those men never saw grain growing in a field. Yet they are buying wheat. For what purpose? To make dollars! And every time they play that market, they are adding to the misery of God's children throughout the world.

RECALL HOW Jesus, wanting to be alone for a time, put his disciples in a boat and went out on the Sea of Galilee to escape the crowd. He was tired and worn, and he went to sleep. As he slept, a terrific storm came up on that sea. The disciples were so frightened that they woke the Master, saying, "Save us, Lord, or we perish!" You know what happened. He rebuked the wind and the waves, and there was a calm. "And he said unto them, Where is your faith?"

"Save us, Lord,"—did you see where I put the emphasis?—"Save us, Lord, or we perish." There is no salvation outside of what God has tried to bring to pass through Jesus Christ. There is no salvation anywhere else.

We are in the midst of a terrific storm. There is no part of this earth that is free from it. There has never been a storm like the one that is over this whole world today. It is universal. There is no human power that is capable of rebuking it. There is not a voice on this earth that can stay the waves of the tempest. Yet how many people out of our millions, even in this land, realize the truth of the words that I have just uttered? How many people do you suppose have seriously gone to God and asked him to do something?

How many people have gone and awakened the Lord? But you don't need to awaken him; the reverse is true today. It is we who are asleep, not Jesus Christ. We are asleep in the greatest storm that the world has ever known. The intensity of that storm has not yet made itself manifest. We are seeing the storm as our aviators were able to see the hurricane days before it approached the Florida coast. They knew something of the potential power of that storm.

God has given every creature an instinct for protection and self-preservation. Only man dreams and does nothing.

IF THERE ARE ANY people in this world that ought to be able to see storms before they reach our land or our world, it is Latter Day Saints. But if Latter Day Saints see this storm approaching, they are either unmindful of its intensity, or they are expecting it to pass around them. There is no earthly power that is capable of stilling this storm.

I wonder if I can hear the members of this church sincerely crying out from the depths of their souls, "Save us, Lord, or we perish"? Where are you going to find salvation? In some places, we are spending so much of our time and substance (I am speaking generally now and not of any individual) in other activities that we are not capable of producing the means to protect us from this storm. Our interests are elsewhere. Can a Latter Day Saint's interest be elsewhere with this great danger approaching? "Save us, Lord, or we perish!" There is no human aid sufficient for the hour.

I could multiply prophecy after prophecy to prove that point. But that was the voice of the angel that opened up this work. Take the preface of the Book of Covenants. Would you need any more than the Lord's preface to bear out what I am saying right now? Yet too many of us are indifferent to the hour.

I am reminded of the words of the inspired Peter, also at a time of controversy, at a time when forces were united against the work of God, but Peter came through victorious. He feared no man, so in making this defense after the cripple had been healed at the beautiful gate of the temple, Peter went on to say:

Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole. This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.—Acts 4: 10, 11.

These people had put aside the only power that was capable of saving them as a nation.

I am wondering to what extent we are ignoring the cornerstone today, the only stone that is to become the head of the corner.

Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4: 12.

That is my message: "Save us, Lord, or we perish!" There is no mistake about that. There is no other name given under heaven whereby we can be saved. But don't let us play with those who tell us that to say it is all we have to do: "Name the name of Jesus Christ and you will be saved." It means more than that. We have got to accept Christ for all he represents, take him at his word, yield full and complete obedience to his gospel and to the laws of his kingdom.

WE WERE TOLD a hundred years ago that Zion could be realized even then if the people who called themselves after his name had obeyed his commandments. But they didn't. We are told that Zion cannot be built up, the city of righteousness cannot be realized, unless we observe the law of the celestial kingdom, and that applies to Latter Day Saints as well as it applies to any one else. Mere membership in this church does not guarantee righteousness. To carry on a church organization does not guarantee righteousness. The church should assist us in keeping the law of the celestial kingdom. Only as we observe the laws of God's kingdom can we become a saved people, and the only way we can save the world is by bringing it into harmony with the laws of the celestial kingdom.

I would to God that we had at least one community, somewhere on this earth, where we had a sufficient number of people observing the law of the celestial kingdom collectively that we could hold it up as a challenge to Russia or any other nation that says, "This is the way of life." That we could hold it up as an example to the government of the United States and say, in all righteousness, as good citizens, as those of us who know that God raised up righteous men to draft the Constitution of this land, as men who know that God has had an interest in the land shadowing with wings, "We offer to you a sample of right living."

You don't have to fear Russia or any other nation if men and women can live like this, because Russians and Germans and Chinese and Japanese desire that kind of freedom, that kind of life—Christian democracy in the true sense of the term; and democracy that is not Christian is not a true democracy. I had more light five or six years ago when I gave a series of sermons on Christian democracy than I realized at the time. If you saved any of the Heralds in which they appeared, go back and read them, and you will see that you could say of some of those statements, "Verily, thus saith the Spirit," because much of that has been realized. I do not say that to boast, but to thank God for the manifestation of his Spirit on that occasion. A democracy that is not Christian is not a true democracy, and only a Christian democracy can survive the hour.

"Save us, Lord, or we perish." As we consider those words, let us avail ourselves of the saving power that is resident in the gospel of Jesus Christ, Refuge from danger is no longer a personal matter. It is as a church, a nation, and a world we must be saved.

and let us become conscious of the men and women, the boys and girls, who live in our community who do not yet possess that saving power.

I am sorry to state that our people for some reason have lost the spirit that formerly prompted men in local capacity to tell the story of the saving power of Jesus Christ. Our branches have lost, in too many places, that burning urge to do something about it.

I, too, am a convert to this work. The interest of some men in my soul made it possible for me to come in contact with the gospel of Jesus Christ. They were God's instruments. It was not through a sermon but through men who took time out from their work to tell me the story of the Restoration. I owe it to them, and I owe it to my God, and I owe it to my fellow men to pass that story on to as many people as I can.

When I was critically ill a few years ago, I was not afraid to die, but as I had opportunity for meditation, do you know what my chief concern was? "Have I accomplished in my time all that God wanted me to accomplish?" That is the fear I had in my heart—that I hadn't accomplished all God wanted me to in the years which were mine, and I try to pledge myself today because of this world's need and because of the goodness of God, I want to give more in service and make that service more effectual than ever before. May God help you to move under this spirit is my prayer.

The Book of Life

*I pondered o'er the Book of Life
And found on every page
A never-ending tale of strife
That runs from age to age.*

*I heard the clash of hostile bands,
Saw empires rise and fall;
And felt the drift of desert sands
That settled over all.*

*Tyrants held sway—a ruthless band:
The wisest were at fault
As hunger and oppression fanned
The embers of revolt.*

*And in another Book I read
Of One whose sacrifice
Of self, accepted, would have led
The world to Paradise.*

*But few were found who understood,
And fewer still who dared
To tread the path—The multitude Regarded not, nor cared.*

*And as I pictured in my mind
Mankind's impending doom
I looked across the creek—to find
The peach trees were in bloom.*

ERNEST ANDRE

www.LatterDayTruth.org

CHALLENGES

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

I RECENTLY visited the Will Rogers Shrine at Claremore, Oklahoma—one of the finest state memorials I have ever seen. This man, whose life is honored thus, was beloved nationally and world wide. His beginning was humble, but he possessed that quality of humanism and simple wit which endeared him to every man. I can remember distinctly where I was when I heard the news of his untimely death. I sat on the porch of the old hotel at Kirtland at reunion time, and I likewise remember the void I personally felt; although I had never been closer to the man than his newspaper columns and his movies.

Another reunion time found me at Colorado Springs, and I rejoiced in the beauty of the mountainside shrine for Will Rogers there. As long as such monuments endure, that man lives. He was loved and wielded great influence for good, but in another generation he will have disappeared except for those shrines.

Thus is the marvel of Jesus Christ—with humble beginning, the quality of humanity and of great understanding. Few visible monuments remain, so why has his memory thus not only lasted but grown in grandeur? The answer lies in the divineness of his life—in the message of truth he taught—in the quality of love that he expressed and imbued in others.

I love to tramp about in the woods, and this was the most primeval of my experience. The floor was carpeted with the leaves of many years, and vines and briars hindered our course. Fallen logs were obstacles and spider web strands brushed our faces. Yet there was pleasure in our progress into the heart of this forest.

Here the tall, aged trees loomed high above, and I felt they reached into the sky and were surely close to God. We explored the woods from every angle and left bedraggled but satisfied.

A few hours later, we viewed that same wooded plot from above via airplane—another of our enthusiasms. Now the woods seemed only an irregular green plot, on the same level as the surrounding land. Even the hilltop faded into contour lines. The trees no longer reached heavenward—for now I looked down upon them and their magnitude was lost. It depended upon the vantage of view.

And thus our spirits and our hopes rise and descend. There are times when we are high in spiritual altitude, and then another time we must look upward for our help.

Daily I receive checks from business firms—and the majority of these demand and receive discounts of varying amounts. The merchandise received was of full value, yet discount is requested.

Some folks even want a discount on their religious experiences. They wish full measure of the blessings and the richness of the spirit, yet are not willing to pay the full price of such beneficial transactions. These are the ones who feel that "salvation is free" and that God gave his Son with no obligation on our part. Yet those who sacrifice for others and for God find that no discount comes, but a bonus of blessings always follows such a personal payment.

We were returning from a youth conference and stopped for a noon-day meal. As usual, the restaurant had a juke box, and we looked to see the tunes it played. Still filled with the spirit of that excellent meeting, Mary said, "I wonder if they have 'Consecration'?" We laughed and spent our nickel on a popular air. And yet, I wondered then why a hymn could not make the "hit parade."

Fred Waring recently gave a program in our town, handicapped by the misrouting of the baggage car containing all the instruments, music, and costumes. Showman that he is, with borrowed instruments, in sports clothes, on a bare stage, the Pennsylvanians and the glee club gave an excellent program, largely of requests. Waring said that on the list of most popular requests for his orchestra there are always two or more hymns. Our own audience demanded "Ave Maria" and "The Lord's Prayer."

I wonder what would happen if they placed a good recording of "In the Garden" on a juke box in New York, or of "The Old, Old Path" in Kansas City?

The paper situation is still very bad. Publications must yet suffer priorities for their supply. I, myself, await publication of my book, due to paper shortage. Yet, monthly pulp magazines flood the market. Note these sales figures for the month of September, 1947: nine million love and adventure magazines, seven and one-half million true confessions, three million detective, eleven million movie magazines, and twenty-five million comic books. It is a question whether the public actually prefers this trash or the latent advertising has done the selling job.

Whatever the answer, it is evident that worthless reading material is flooding the homes of America, influencing minds of impressionable youth and gullible adults.

I recently reread, for the dozenth or so time, my favorite—Les Misérables—the story of a man who was haunted all his life because hunger once drove him to steal a loaf of bread. Bread is important to life. Satan even tempted Christ and challenged him to turn the stones to bread. God gave manna to his children in the wilderness. This bread satisfies a physical need—hunger—a driving force of all humanity.

It would be well if the spiritual make-up of the soul had provision for a hungering for the truth as strong as the basic physical hunger. There would be no question then—all men would be searching for the most soul-satisfying answer, truth.

The Good Earth

One of the outstanding blessings of Providence is the restorative, healing power inherent in all living things. All of us know of incidents of the will to live when death seemed the easier course. Wounded prisoners of war survived almost impossible conditions because of a will to live.

This restorative power is evidenced in various ways. There's a saying: "Time is a great healer" in respect to wounds of the spirit. And amazing it is, occasionally, to note how brief a time is required.

Recently I had occasion to walk over "our bit of inheritance." Land that was poor, badly scarred by erosion, and bare of vegetation, when we undertook four years ago to wrest our inheritance from this part of the man-made "wasteland of Zion," shows amazing recuperation. Gullies have healed until some no longer exist, a few have only a small "sore spot" left, and none are now noticeably eroding. Where two years ago some of the former barren earth produced scanty vegetation of ankle depth, a heavy growth from knee to hip depth now covers the ground. Four years have accomplished some of the healing we expected to require many years. Nature goes so much more than half way to meet man's efforts to heal or create.

—Enid S. DeBarthe,
in "The Lamoni Stake Record."

There is a wealth of unexpressed love in the world. It is one of the chief causes of sorrow evoked by death: what might have been said or might have been done that never can be said or done.—Arthur Hopkins in Ladies' Home Journal.

Prophetic Warnings

IN MODERN REVELATION

By ELBERT A. SMITH

25¢ each

10 for $2.50

25 for $4.75

50 for $8.50

100 for $15.00

for children

Jesus and His Friends

By MARY ALICE JONES

Again and again Miss Jones has proved her insight into what children like and need and this book is no exception. Here she shows the boy Jesus to be a friendly considerate individual who grew into a great teacher. A book which every child will treasure always.

$1.25

Order from your Book Steward or from

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

Temperance Work

Sister Effie Hield of Independence, Missouri, (mother of Apostle C. R. Hield) known and beloved for her stalwart character, her many activities and devotion to the church during her long life, assumed a new role of service on December 31.

Sister Hield is county director of the radio department of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Jackson County, Missouri, and through her efforts secured the facilities of radio station KIMO in Independence to broadcast a program she had prepared, sponsored by the organization.

Following a few well-chosen introductory remarks concerning the objectives of the W. C. T. U., Sister Hield introduced the speakers, who were representatives of three foreign delegates to the International Convention of the W. C. T. U. held in May in Asbury Park, New Jersey.

One delegate was Mrs. Chitamber from India, whose husband was the first native Methodist Bishop in India. She told of the persistent work of the Union and cited the progress that had been made. Mrs. Chitamber was represented by Mrs. George Renied, president of the Jackson 60 organization.

Mrs. Pearl Hsu, delegate from China, was represented by Miss Enoi Foo, a nurse at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. Mrs. Hsu was at one time principal of the largest Christian high school in her country. Mrs. W. B. Schlosv from Plumstead Cape, South Africa, came by boat and plane to the convention. She was represented by Mrs. Juanita Patton (colored). Mrs. Schlosv gave an excellent address on how temperance work is carried on in South Africa and its success there.

The only way to hold a man down in a ditch is to get down in the ditch with him.—Booker T. Washington.

The Conversion of George Luther Gould

He was a good man, although he didn't bother much about God or read the Bible or go to church after he became too old to be taken there by his parents. He saw to it that his children went—but seldom went himself, except to hear some noted preacher or to a Christmas program or special Easter sermon.

Then one day when he was fifty years old he became very sick and lay bedfast for many weeks. As he began to recover, a friend put a Bible in his hand and told him to read it, that it would help to pass the time away.

"Well," he said, "if I am going to read this book, I shall begin at the beginning so I will know what it is all about." And he did. Before he was half way through, he wanted to serve God. He was a man who read much, and he knew that many of the prophecies had been and were being fulfilled. For example, a shipment of Muscat grape cuttings had been sent at that time from the vineyards of California to replenish the wasted ones of Palestine, thus fulfilling the prophecy of Isaiah 17:10 that the land would be reset with strange slips.

He read on, and, when finished, he set about trying to find a church similar to the one Jesus established. But his search was vain, though he studied through many creeds. One thing he decided he could do, however—he could be baptized. So he sought out a minister who taught baptism by immersion, stating frankly, however, that he did not want to be enrolled as a member of that congregation. After the ceremony, he walked home in his wet clothes, not going to the church then or at any future time.

Diligently he continued to study and pray for direction. The Bible was his constant companion and uppermost subject of most of his conversation. He kept one lying on the table beside his place at meals.

One day, as he was reading the fifty-second chapter of Isaiah which says, "Spend not your money for that which is not bread," he glanced at his pipe and tobacco box. Reading on, he paused again in the fifty-eighth chapter at the words, "Deal thy bread to the hungry . . . clothe the naked." And near the close of the same chapter, "Turn thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day." For some time he sat meditating, then addressing the Lord, he said, "Lord, I have never turned the hungry from my door, and I have clothed the naked whenever I found them or had opportunity and could do so. I will keep the old Israelitish Sabbath until you tell me to do otherwise, though I know Christians are to keep the first day of the week as a Sabbath. But Lord," and he laid his pipe on the table, "I can't do this. You will have to help me if I spend no more money for tobacco. It has too great a hold on me now."

The desire for tobacco was taken completely away from him. Several weeks later he was congratulating himself on the ease with which he had been able to give it up and said to himself, "All a man has to do is to make up his mind and it isn't so hard." At once, the old craving returned with redoubled force. He sweated and prayed, asking God why he was afflicted so suddenly. Then slowly it dawned upon him that he himself was to blame. He had admitted that he couldn't of himself stop the habit, yet he had forgotten to give God the credit when it was taken away. He was glorying in his own strength. He humbled himself in earnest prayer and asked for forgiveness, and God once more removed the desire. It taught him that man, of himself, is nothing and from thenceforth he gave God thanks for every blessing.

Still he couldn't find the church of his desire. One day he decided that if he couldn't join God's church, he would go to the land of His earthly habitation and visit the places where he had walked and talked.

This he did, taking with him five members of his household. And, strangely enough, there in far-off Palestine he found news of the old church, restored in its entirety and entrusted to the care of the Latter Day Saints. He wrote back at once to the church headquarters and asked where he should go to be baptized by one having authority. The Conference of 1910 was convening at the time, and two elders were delegated to go to Palestine to baptize this man and his family. They didn't arrive until November, and my father—for so he was—died in July. He was buried with my husband in the American Missionary Burial Ground near Jerusalem.

—Florence Gould Carr.

915 East Elm, Apt. 207
Springfield, Missouri

What Latter Day Saints Believe

WE REACHED THE POINT in our last discussion of what Latter Day Saints believe, where we began a consideration of the "first principles" of the gospel as they are outlined by Paul in the sixth chapter of Hebrews. Following the discussion of Faith, we now take up the second principle, Repentance.

Repentance grows out of faith in God—a God who loves his children and wants them to respect and love each other—a God who wants his children to be with him in his household. When any man truly feels the presence of God, or the Spirit of God, he is humbled and made ashamed of his own unworthiness to approach to a personality of such perfection and power and goodness. Isaiah was certainly not a bad man, as men go. He must have had a great deal of inherent worth and integrity, or God would not have chosen him for the prophetic work he did. But when Isaiah had his vision of God sitting on the throne, surrounded by the seraphim, he wrote: "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." When men come thus into contact with Divinity, they are prompted to repent of those things which have kept them from being one with God, and one with their fellow men, and to remedy those things which have caused God's other children pain or suffering or loss. It is because men have faith in God, because they want to get right with him, because they value his love for them that they repent. According to Paul, in his letter to the Romans, "the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance."

The note of repentance runs through almost every Scripture ever written. Adam had to repent after his first sin in the Garden of Eden. Noah preached repentance to his generation. Every Old Testament prophet sounded the same note of repentance. John the Baptist, as he declared the coming of the Messiah, preached, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Jesus began his preaching with the same note: "Repent ye, and believe the gospel." Peter and the others of the eleven continued this preaching after Jesus' Ascension, as he stood boldly in the midst of those who had crucified Jesus, and on the day of Pentecost declared, "Repent and be baptized every one of you." And John the Revelator closes the Bible with the same cry of repentance. Joseph Smith, the nineteenth century prophet, reiterated it with the instruction to "Say nothing but repentance unto this generation."

REPENTANCE IS NOT something which we may do or not, according to our whim. In the presence of Divinity, as we have said, all men are convicted of sin. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."—Romans 3: 23. When a group of just average people came to Jesus to ask why a special judgment had been meted out to certain Galileans who had been killed by Pilate, and by others on whom the tower of Siloam fell, Jesus warned them, "except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." And the apostles continued this note of universality and urgency, when they declared, "God commanded all men everywhere to repent."—Acts 17: 30.

Some people have the very mistaken notion that repentance is only being sorry for what you have done. That kind of repentance is sometimes forced upon us, as we find the consequences of our deeds catching up with us and bringing us punishment, sorrow, and tribulation. Sometimes it is forced upon us by the realization of what our sin has done to someone we love, or someone who loves us. Sorrow at being caught, whether by the minions of the law, or by pure force of circumstances, is a long way from being true repentance, though it may lead to it. Paul's second letter to the Corinthians, chapter 7, verses 9 and 10, makes clear the difference: "Godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of: but the sorrow of the world worketh death." Worldly sorrow—the sorrow of being caught does not last, it does not bring repentance, it does not bring forgiveness, and because it brings none of these, it leads the sinner on into more sin until it brings death. Godly sorrow worketh repentance, which brings forgiveness and salvation, not to be repented of.

Godly sorrow brings with it a loathing for sin, a realization of how it harms others, and brings sorrow to our Heavenly Father. The essence of godly sorrow and the repentance which it brings is discontent with self. Salvation is not for those who are content and self-satisfied, but for those who see themselves as God must see them, and who are dissatisfied with what they see. James compares the sinner with a man who looks into a glass. The man with only worldly sorrow looks, and goes his way, forgetting what manner of man he is, neglecting to be a doer as well as a hearer of the word. But the man who looks and beholds what is displeasing, and then proceeds to do something about it, is he who looks into the perfect law of liberty; and the doing of God's will through repentance will lead to perfect liberty.

A GLANCE INTO the glass of the perfect law of liberty that shows us ourselves with a dirty face, morally speaking, should spur us to do something about it. If it shows us that we are weak, or enslaved by habit, our condition demands action. We must be doers of the word and not hearers only. Doing God's word demands repentance and baptism for the remission of sin, which will be followed by the Holy Ghost as a witness of forgiveness, and as an abiding comforter. A look at ourselves as we really are will bring to the man anxious to be a doer of the word, a desire for at-one-ment with God, and with fellow man. There is no need for despair after seeing ourselves in this glass; for if it shows us as we are, in all our weakness and depravity, it also shows us as we may become, if we will do according to the perfect law of liberty, and set ourselves free.

About Repentance

BY EVAN A. FRY

Repentance is more than sorrow for sin. It is more even than godly sorrow. It is more than merely stopping sinning. It is more than dropping or changing a habit or two. Few people really achieve it because it costs so much. Suppose that a man has acquired a fortune by outright theft. If he simply stops stealing, and feels sorrow for the stealing he has done in the past, is he repentant if he keeps all the money he has stolen and continues to enjoy the fruits of his sinning? If a man gives false witness and sends another to prison or to execution, would he be truly repentant if he simply expressed sorrow for his sin, and left the innocent victim in prison, or left his wife and family to starve? If a drunken driver kills the father and breadwinner of a family, is it enough for him to express his sorrow and swear off drinking?

Sin is always the result of an attitude of rebellion—a desire to have our own way regardless of the cost to others or of the pain and sorrow we bring to them and to God. When we entertain such an attitude of rebellion towards the Lord of the universe, it is not enough simply to quit fighting him and adopt a policy of neutrality or watchful waiting to see what will happen. There may be neutrality among nations; but there is no neutrality in the war between good and evil—between God and Satan. He that is not with me is against me. If we would be truly repentant, our forsaking of rebellion must be followed by an active enlistment on the side of right. Unless such enlistment follows, our repentance is futile and ineffective.

Sorrow may be the first step in repentance, but it is only a part of the total process. There must be sorrow for the consequences of sin to others and to God, as well as a sorrow at getting caught. Then there must be a restitution, if restitution be possible. The law of Moses, found in Leviticus 6: 1-5, required the restoration of any money or property got by dishonest means, plus one fifth more. Zacchaeus, when he became convicted of sin, offered to give half of his goods to the poor, and to restore to any he had wronged fourfold. The thief must restore his booty; the false witness must correct his testimony and undo its consequences; the scandalmonger must do his best to recall the scandal he has spread. If complete restitution is impossible, the repentant man will still seek to make things as nearly right as he can humanly do with those he has wronged. God cannot forgive us, and we are not required to forgive those of our fellow men who wrong us, unless those who are at fault bring forth fruits meet for repentance and prove their repentant spirit by making restitution (Luke 17: 4).

THERE IS ONE MORE phase of repentance which we need to mention. It is caught up in this brief phrase from Isaiah: "Cease to do evil; learn to do well" (1: 16). Paul suggests the same idea when he says, "Overcome evil with good" (Romans 12: 21). When evil is cast out, good must be brought in to fill the empty space. Jesus illustrated this principle with the parable of the wicked spirits. When one was cast out from a man, he scouted around and found seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and returning to the man and finding his house empty, swept, and garnished, unoccupied by any good, they all eight entered in; and the last state of that man was worse than the first. The man who forgets to complete his repentance with enlistment on the side of right, and filling of his life with good, will invariably find the former sins returning to take up their place, with seven other devils worse than they.

What is the attitude of our Heavenly Father towards those who repent? Jesus has given us a parable of father love towards the sinner, in the story of the prodigal son. When the prodigal left, his father did not cast him off. His love for him did not stop when the boy rebelled and left home. The father abhorred the boy's manner of life; suffered with him in spirit, longed for his presence, left the latchstring out so that he could return any time he wished. He was not angry. He did not have to be placated or appeased. He kept perpetual vigil and watched for the boy, and when he saw him coming a long way off, he ran to meet him, and welcomed him again as one of the family. There could be no reconciliation—no at-one-ment—until the boy "came to himself" and voluntarily returned to his father, asking his forgiveness. His inheritance was gone, and could not be reclaimed. The wasted years were gone, never to return. But he could make a fresh start from where he was, and his father could rejoice that his son which was once dead to him through rebellion and sin, had re-

(Continued on page 23.)

Friendly Visiting

By Mrs. C. G. Mesley

FRIENDLY VISITING is one of the most needed, one of the most beneficial, and one of the most delicately skillful of all the activities of the department of women.

All work in this church demands the very best of which we are capable, but if there is any office in the department that requires a careful study of human nature and the laws of God, it is that of the friendly visitor, for it has to do with human beings—with the intricate and subtle workings of their minds—with their emotions—with their environments—and with their reactions to those environments.

It follows, then, that this work calls for the highest form of courage, wisdom, tact, patience, winsomeness, together with a thorough knowledge of the laws of God and their application to human living.

Apparently complicating further the approach of this study is the realization that the friendly visitor is called upon to be a friend to all. It is easy to be kindly disposed and helpful toward those with whom we have much in common—those we feel are kindred spirits. It is not always as easy to reach out in sympathy and understanding helpfulness to those whose way of life differs from our own or whose characters or ways of thinking or manner of expression are unlike ours. But the friendly visitor is called upon to help all to remove those obstacles and interferences which prevent us from attaining the spiritual eminence of which we are rightly capable.

Friendly visiting can be a beautiful service—richly rewarding, dealing as it does with people living under normal or sometimes under most trying and delicate conditions.

What the Friendly Visitor Is Not

Because the sincere friendly visitor approaches her work with humility, she recognizes her own limitations. She is the first to insist that she is not a trained social worker. This profession demands years of highly specialized training and supervised experience in giving help. The friendly visitor does not claim this background. She is not a trained psychologist. Although she recognizes and accepts the help that a knowledge of this study can give, she knows that in most cases she is not an authority in this field and wisely refrains from posing as such.

The friendly visitor is not a doctor. There are times when most of us are tempted to prescribe our own pet remedy for various ills. This is permissible when we are dealing with some minor everyday situations and offer the benefit of our experience as suggestions only, but never with the authority of a trained medical man.

Certainly the friendly visitor does not consider herself an ordained minister. In our church we have members of the priesthood whose province it is to care for the needy. While the women's worker co-operates closely with these brethren, she by no means assumes the rights of the deacon or the bishop.

What the Friendly Visitor Is

The friendly visitor is just what her name proclaims her to be; first, friendly—coming humbly and winsomely to help. A good motto for her might be "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly."

Secondly, she is a visitor. She is on the outside looking in until, having won the confidence of those concerned and demonstrated her worth, members of the family take her into their lives. She is there primarily by the courtesy of the family rather than by any personal merit, and she tactfully recognizes the sacred rights of that home.

Her authority or office in the department does not give her any authority in the home. This she must earn by personal worth and winsome persuasion.

What Are the Qualifications of the Friendly Visitor?

It appears that some qualifications are fundamental while others are highly desirable and can be acquired. Under the first classification would come a genuine love for people and deep concern for their happiness. Many people love their fellows to a degree. They grieve over their misfortunes and weep with them over their sorrows, but they do not love them deeply enough to be so concerned about these conditions that they will do all in their power to remove them. They will weep over Jerusalem with our Lord, but they cannot go down and die for Jerusalem with him. This is what genuine discipleship demands.

The friendly visitor will not be content merely to sympathize but will do all in her power to help those in need to overcome the conditions hampering their development and keeping them from becoming the people they could be. Allied with this deep concern will be an abiding faith in the message of the church—that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation.

These requirements are basic. There is no substitute for them.

The following qualifications are not listed in order of importance, nor is it to be expected that any one person possesses them all. Rather they represent an ideal toward which all workers should be constantly striving.

The friendly visitor should know something of man's universal needs.

These for brevity we class under four captions: man's need for work, play, love, and worship. By this is meant man's need for satisfying and interesting occupation; for refreshment through relaxation that is truly "recreative"; for deep and abiding affection and the ability to express affection wisely; for an outlet for devotion and for a growing fellowship with God.

The lack of these things, or undue emphasis on any one phase to the exclusion of others makes for an unbalanced life which is neither wise nor efficient.

It is very true that there are times when material relief such as food, rest, and clothing may be the immediate necessity, but unless the friendly visitor can lead her people toward a more wholesomely balanced life, this material relief continued over a time can rob people of their self-reliance and self-respect. Give the immediate relief by all means, but do not be content merely with that; try to help the needy themselves to better their conditions, working always with the close cooperation of branch officers.

It will be noticed that these four headings are described as needs. All humanity needs these four blessings—many of us do not particularly want them. Some of us want fame, riches, beauty, talents, specialized abilities, or an easy time of it generally. We may be too lethargic or too comfortable or too tired or too wretched to want anything but peace at any price, but underneath all this inertia, or hidden beneath the hardening shell of our routines, to be our best selves, we need these four great blessings.

Much discussion might center round this affirmation; for our present purpose, all that need be said is that the friendly visitor should see herself—and help others to see—the sacredness of work and love; the need for and the accessibility of the spirit of play and worship; that play and art can be woven into the fabric of life until drudgery is reduced to a minimum; that through work we can see the sacredness of material things and that affection can be disciplined by consecration to worthy ends. She needs to see life whole and help others to see it as a beautiful mosaic composed of the interplay of worthy elements.

The friendly visitor should have a knowledge of the teachings of the church; she should know the immediate program, the present time emphasis, and all the availabilities. She should be familiar with such texts as The Bible in Everyday Living, Fundamentals, Men Nearest the Master, and Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants, and with material in such publications as the Herald, quarterlies, department material, Guide-Lines, et cetera, so that on occasion she can recommend helps to meet adequately various needs.

The various agencies through which the church endeavors to inform and encourage its members should be a matter of primary concern to the friendly visitor—the church school in the local branch and what it is offering; the preaching service, who is preaching and what his subject is; prayer meeting, time, place, and an invitation to attend; for adults: conventions, reunions, conferences, retreats, and their purposes; for children: Cub, Scout, Blue Bird, Oriole, and Zion's League meetings—who is in charge, where the meeting is held, and who belongs.

Along with this knowledge, the friendly visitor must have an affirmative conviction of the fundamental truths of the gospel and be loyal to the ideals of the church. Too often we have our own ideas about the working program of the church, and these ideas do not always coincide with the interpretation of the church program as given by the general officials. She should avoid giving rise to doubts, gossip, or lack of appreciation. She must take an affirmative spirit with her.

The friendly visitor should be observant and alert. To see what is around her, to recognize signs of unhappiness, fatigue, nervous strain, grief, joy, the half-hidden longing to be used in service, is of genuine worth. She should study the group as individuals, making it a point to think of their good points first. Then study the group as a whole. Is it friendly, co-operative, indifferent, smug, just plain lazy?

She should be studious and thoughtful, that she may not only see but interpret wisely what she sees. This leaves no place for snap judgment nor prejudices.

She should be optimistic—believe the best always, even in the face of difficulties and trying circumstances, endeavoring to be patient with slower people and tolerant of other's opinions.

The friendly visitor should be exemplary. This does not mean perfect, but it does mean worthy of imitation—serving as a pattern. She should be above reproach. People in the public eye often are subject to unjust criticism. Occasionally bad things are said about them. But they should never be said truthfully about the friendly visitor. She should conduct herself so that her reputation runs hand in hand with her good character. She should not worry about it unduly—to the point that her conduct becomes strained and unnatural—but she should be consistently working toward a fine spiritual development and gracious personality.

The friendly visitor should be diligent. It is interesting to note how often, in the early days of the Restoration, the Lord urged his people to be diligent. Again and again this word occurs in the revelations given the early church. Certainly if the friendly visitor is to accomplish, even approximately, the task she has set herself, she must be diligent. This means she must be a wise steward over her own and other people's time. This same Heavenly Father exhorted us not to sleep longer than is necessary, and the friendly visitor must be on the job early in the day if she is to take care of her responsibilities successfully. She must learn to cut corners, to use all labor-saving devices and equipment, and to enlist the willing co-operation of her family, all without loss of efficiency—which in itself is no light task.

- - - a home column feature - - -

The friendly visitor should be tactful. There is no place anywhere in life for the brutally frank opinion, least of all in work of this character. She must remember her title—friendly visitor. She should watch carefully the time of her visits and their duration. She should overestimate, rather than underestimate the value of the other person's point of view, standing firmly but never arrogantly for her convictions. Well-based and profound convictions are part of every Christian's equipment. All of us have personal testimonies of the goodness of God to us, and to remain silent when these testimonies would be helpful is not becoming. Telling of these experiences in quiet sincerity and humility profoundly affects hearers, but the listeners may have had such experiences, too, and the telling of them will be mutually strengthening.

The friendly visitor must be trustworthy. It is doubtful whether this attribute can be stressed too strongly. Those to whom the privilege of entering the sanctity of the home is extended, must keep sacred all that they see and hear there except under justifiable circumstances. Only under the most rare and extreme conditions should occurrences be mentioned—never in casual conversation.

Furthermore, the friendly visitor should endeavor constantly to keep near to God in prayer and meditation and self-discipline for wisdom and guidance.

Preparation for the Visit

The friendly visitor's personality should be one of her greatest assets. She takes it with her wherever she goes. What a fortunate thing it is that this force, this magnetic something is not handed down to her ready made but is something she can set herself to acquire. This magic quality can be developed just as any other art or skill, and nowhere will she find a better place to develop it than in the service of others. "For their sakes I sanctify myself" is the watchword of many Christian workers. This means it is not something assumed from the outside but rather the outward sign of an inward grace—the outward expression of an inner life radiating Christian virtues and joyous Christian living.

Before visiting a family, she should find out as much about it as possible, sticking to facts rather than forming opinions or judgments, determining what service she can most successfully offer each member of the family. She should spend some time in thinking how she can help them physically, mentally, socially, and spiritually—praying for each member, considering his particular need, and seeking guidance in supplying that need.

Personal appearance has a decided effect on the home. The friendly visitor should be as attractive as possible, emphasizing good grooming rather than adherence to prevailing styles.

Making a Successful Visit

I think it is Apostle McConley who says that the first requirement in paying a good visit is to get started. If you are a friendly visitor, don't procrastinate. Do it today, this week—not next week or next month.

It is sometimes assumed that the only place in which to pay a visit is in the family home. This is true in the majority of cases, but there are times when another approach is preferable. Where an individual is concerned, why not invite her to town for lunch with you, or maybe to lunch in your own home? How about having a group into your home for a friendly evening—providing quiet games for the children, a hymn sing for adults, a brief talk about your work and what you would like to do, and simple refreshments? These approaches have worked, serving to break down shyness and prepare the way for a visit in the individual homes.

When you feel that a home visit would be acceptable, make an appointment whenever possible. Always choose the time of your visit with wisdom, avoiding chore time and busy times of the day.

The question, "Whom shall I visit?" sometimes is asked. Our reply is, "Everyone, but especially the sick, the shut-ins, the elderly, the overburdened, the bereaved, newcomers, the indifferent, the careless."

When it comes to the actual visit, try to be a good listener as well as a good speaker. Don't allow yourself to monopolize the conversation. Sometimes the kindest thing you can do for a person is to let her talk.

Always be affirmative. You are representing the greatest thing in the world, the gospel of Jesus Christ—the love of God for all mankind. Let your whole attitude and your message be a credit to the church you represent. Give faith in God and his promises, hope in the ultimate triumph of truth and goodness and in the realization of Zion.

Be watchful of the length of your visit. Don't let it get out of hand. Be brief and, when you are through, go home; don't hang around and risk undoing the good you may have done. And of course, avoid formality. Be spontaneous and friendly.

I have never yet met a person possessing all of these highly desirable characteristics, have you? This is an ideal—a goal toward which you and I are striving—toward which we are bending all our powers of body and mind and spirit. It is an endeavor which, sincerely and consistently pursued, is richly rewarding to all concerned.

South American Journey

PART II

BY FRANCES E. PEARSE

Soloma

THE VILLAGE of Soloma nestles in a valley—a green fertile valley of jagged skyline, with a clear, cold mountain stream rushing through. The main street wanders down from the mountains over the stream and under an old covered bridge.

There are lovely colors in this valley—the white of the rose that grows in wild profusion along the steep banks of the street, the soft pink cloud of the peach tree in bloom against the green carpet of the valley, and overhead the ever-lovely cerulean blue of the Guatemalan sky.

The houses lining the street are for the most part adobe with thatched roofs, although some are carelessly put together of wide boards or small saplings. There are no chimneys—the smoke from the fire built in one corner of the room on the floor lazily finds its way through the openings under the roof. The one large room houses the whole family, perhaps a pig and chickens, and always a dog—a mangy, nondescript, and none too friendly dog.

The population is composed of Ladinos, the mixed bloods, and the Indians, who in this territory are descendants of the Mayas. Most of the Indians live on small farms; only a few are in town.

The Ladinos do not as a rule wear a native costume but clothing made of a cheap imported cotton material—ill-fitting to be sure. The costume of the Soloma Indian is not as colorful as those in some of the villages, but distinctive nevertheless. Over their cotton trousers and shirts, the men wear a black woolen blanketlike coat without sleeves. It is very wide and is sewed up under the arms, so that it falls loosely over their shoulders. Little boys costumes are identical to those of their fathers. The sandals and hats belong to the men. The sandal consists of a sole of leather with a strap between the first and second toes, and is tied around the ankle with a thong. On the road, one sees men carrying their sandals as they walk over the rough, rockstrewn paths; perhaps they save them for wear in the villages. The hat is of deplorable looking straw, but must be very necesario, as one never sees a native man without it.

The woman's costume is a white buipile (blouse) worn long and loose below the knee, trimmed at the shoulder line with a series of narrow embroidered ruffles. It covers a cotton skirt, varying in shades of blue depending on the age of the material. A fold of material worn on their heads serves as a wrap, a protection against the sun, market basket, and even for carrying the baby.

There is always a baby—slung over the mother's back or an older sister's back while she is at play. The little girl's dress is like her mother's—perhaps we copied our mother-daughter styles from them.

Their language, as in all these villages, stems from the Mayan, but each village has its own dialect.

The street leads to the plaza, a fenced-in green square in the center of town, where, without too much care, roses, calla lilies, and other flowers grow. And then it leads to the church—an old church that has withstood many earthquakes. Padre Mac pointed out some of the huge cross beams which have been split and the doors which won't quite close, but it still stands and, as all of these churches built so many years ago, is a monument to its builders.

Next to the church is the convento, some rooms finished and some in the process of being built. Building in Soloma is necessarily slow. Padre Mac has to do his buying in Guatemala City, send the supplies to Huehuetenango by bus or truck, and from there to Soloma by pack horse or mozo. It takes courage and patience—a great deal of both—to get things done here.

Needless to say, we slept the sleep of the exhausted on Tuesday night, but were awakened early Wednesday by old Martin ringing the church bells in the patio back of the house. The bells, three of them, are hung on a wooden framework, because to hang them high in the church in this country would be to invite destruction in a quake. So, like a huge alarm each morning the bells awakened us.

We did not spring from our beds, but slowly and painfully arose and dressed, wondering just how we could get down that spiral stairway whose risers were fourteen or fifteen inches high—typical of mistakes of carpentry in this country. But we made it and managed to have breakfast ready by the time Padre Mac was finished with the Ash Wednesday services. We ran out into the patio occasionally to get warm in the morning sun. Now we know why all the Indians stand sleepily around first thing in the morning—they are cold. At an altitude of 8,000 feet, Soloma is cold in the morning and evening, but the sun during the day is tropically hot.

Our first day up there was a busy one, so busy that we had no time to think of how lame and sore we were (except when we tried to sit down). The word that a medico and dentisto were coming to Soloma had spread like wildfire through the village and surrounding country, and long before we were up, the sick, the lame, and the blind were outside the dispensa door. Most of these people had never seen a doctor or dentist, and their only help is the gracious loving care given them by their Padrecito.

Alfred and Harry worked with Padre Mac in his dispensa that day—they must have seen over a hundred people—and every day until we left. They found a great deal of tuberculosis, bronchitis, different types of eye infections, an alarming percentage of blindness, worms in both children and adults, and a great many infections in the feet and hands due to the lack of cleanliness. These people have not the first idea of cleanliness or sanitation and some of them live in unbelievable filth. Most of the children are rachitic, and the babies all seem to have body sores and rashes due, of course, to this same lack of applied soap and water. Tooth decay is prevalent; most of them have never heard of dental hygiene, and a diet consisting mainly of beans and tortillas does not produce good teeth. So teeth were pulled in goodly numbers—the Padre taking lessons in extractions from Alfred—much to the amusement of the onlookers. Unless some one kept close watch, each time the dispensa door opened, a few onlookers slipped in. The windows were filled with faces all day—faces that were interesting in their expressions of emotions of fear and amusement.

Of course we had the same audience at the dining room windows each meal if we forgot to pull the curtains. Occasionally when we were brushing our teeth or washing our hands, we looked up to see a face grinning at us from the bathroom door. Crazy Americanos—whatever it was they did with that little brush to their teeth!

We decided these people had never seen the sign, "No spitting," and the men named different ones who came in "Circle Spitters." For as they knelt on the floor waiting their turn to be seen, they literally spit a circle around themselves. It seems to be the custom, and to say that something is the custom is to justify it fully.

Many of the patients came with an egg or two to give the medico and dentisto in appreciation of their services.

Most of the babies were undernourished—which is something of an understatement, for we saw several that were actually starving. We were reminded of the pictures in our magazines and papers of the starving babies in Europe. One brought in by an older woman—it had been deserted by its mother—appeared to be a very undernourished four- or five-month-old child. On questioning the woman, we found it was about eighteen months old—she explained she had no food for it. We gave it warm milk (made from the powdered mixture) a little at a time from a spoon. Poor starving little thing objected in a weak, plaintive cry. We thought it could not live, but gave the woman milk enough to feed it every hour until she could return next day.

Few, if any of these children ever have milk, except what Padre Mac gives them twice a week, and this was the day! Helene and I were given the task of mixing ten gallons of powdered milk. It was hard work, but the shy smiles and Gracias, Senora of the 200 children as they filed past the table in orderly fashion more than repaid us for our efforts.

Before we realized it, the day had gone, and it was time to get our dinner ready—during the morning we had put away the supplies that had been brought in the day before (Padre Mac tells us he still can't find things in his cupboards), so we thought we could manage a dinner.

Since he will be reading this letter, perhaps we had better not complain too bitterly about that stove in the kitchen, which was (or seemed to be) blocks from the dining room. We shall just tell you that someone had built the chimney too low and the smoke came out the doors, the lids, and even the oven instead of going up the chimney. All our good intentions to bake him pies, cakes, and bread were gone, as it were, with the smoke!

Thanks to the numerous and sundry characters who roamed the patio and wandered in and out of the kitchen for stoking that stove when we called down from the balcony—Es estufa muy caliente? Thank goodness, too, for that two burner gasoline stove even though we were afraid the thing might blow up any minute.

After dinner, five weary people climbed the stairway again to get ready for the reception which the town was holding that night.

The classroom next to the dispensa was crowded when we entered. We were ushered up to the front to sit behind a table on which were arranged the flags of Guatemala and the United States. Everyone in the village had come to see the show and the Americanos, and they crowded in around the four walls behind us and in front of us, leaned in the windows and filled the doorways, so that we were very conscious of that ever-present Mayan odor.

But what a show! There was a welcoming speech, given with many gesticulations and in a very dramatic manner; songs and poems by the children, and several little plays in which they were coached by the schoolteacher. These were enjoyed not only by the Americanos, but by the proud parents as well. There was a boxing match between two little boys with their sleeves and pant legs rolled up, one of whom was introduced as Joe Louis. Padre Mac was surprised when they brought out his choice red bath rug as a mat for the boxing match. They had forgotten to ask his permission to use it.

We laughed (we hoped always at the right time), applauded, and perhaps shed a few tears as we realized how long and how hard they had worked on this welcome for us.

Padre Mac made our "thank you" speech for us, and we left the room, saying Buenas noches and smiling our appreciation for their efforts.

We had music under our window that night too, not the marimba or church bells, but the town quartet. Sleepily we listened and loved their songs!

Thursday was our first chance to see Soloma.

Three of us started out, and soon had a retinue of a dozen or more children, with others joining in as we passed each house. The word must have gone around that we were out walking, because at each doorway the family was out to greet us. The men were camera hunting as usual, and the children made it a field day for them. One cute little fellow with a round face topped with his father's cast-off straw hat and an unintentional midriff where his shirt and trousers failed to meet had all cameras turned on him. We walked to the bridge where we watched three shepherds coming down from the hills with their black sheep. As we turned toward the church, the sun had gone out of the valley and the fog was creeping in on soft, white feet, bringing with it the cool of evening.

On Friday we visited San Eulalia, another of the villages in Padre Mac's parish. After breakfast we packed our lunches, filled our thermos bottles with water and coffee, and Mariano was there with the horses. Riding through the village in early morning, we were greeted at each doorstep by the children and their parents; the dogs barked their Buenos dias too. A short way out of the village we met a group of people from San Eulalia—they told the Padre they were coming to see the medicos—but would wait in Soloma until tomorrow. They had walked all yesterday and slept where the night caught up with them on the roadside.

When we say it is nineteen miles from Soloma to San Eulalia, it sounds like a short distance. But these are narrow mountain trails that require the same slow, cautious gait of the horses as on the trip from Huehuetenango. There are breath-taking views of lovely valleys from mountaintops, and cool rushing streams where our horses stopped to drink, and over them all the blue of the sky with its white powder-puff clouds.

About noon we climbed a steep path into the village, circled the church, and rode into the market where we left our horses. One of the men who met us (the village baker) offered his home as a place for us to eat our lunch. It was a one-room house, but had a floor and was clean, so we accepted his kind offer. Several others rushed in with a large table they had borrowed, and the senora covered it with a clean, white cloth—then they left the house politely while we ate lunch. The crowds began to gather outside the door—the curious and the patients for the medicos. As soon as we had finished, they filed in with their troubles, and the men spent about two hours extracting teeth and prescribing treatments.

Some of the villagers had promised the Padre to do their native dances so that the men might photograph them, but when the time came, they were nowhere to be found. These people are very superstitious about having their pictures taken, so we felt they had decided against it. We started on the road for home, and as we neared Soloma, the sun was hiding behind the mountains and the clouds were surging up the valley. The horses were eager to get home, and when Padre Mac's horse started off on a gallop down the last stretch of road, ours followed suit. Surprised, we tightened the reins and cried "Whoa-whoa," bringing the villagers to their doors and the dogs out to bark at the horses heels, which only spurred them on. Fortunately, we all arrived at the church, still on our horses. By this time we were getting so accustomed to riding that we could spend all day in the saddle and still be able to sit down comfortably to eat our dinner.

(To be continued.)

The Mississippi

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER is like a woman. It has many moods, and it is hard to read and understand. Springtime finds it turbulent and muddy with many long, heavy, swelling waves. Debris, the collection of a wintertime's disuse, now floats on its surface. It is caught on the banks and tree roots, around the ferry landing and bridges, and all that escapes is captured at the dam.

In summer it is more peaceful and is often as blue as the sky above it. Its glassy smoothness reflects the shore and is broken only by the cumbersome barges that ply its surface. The long summer evening is the perfect time to watch it, to make its acquaintance, to smell its perfume, and to listen to its heart.

The Mississippi is very undependable in autumn. Sometimes it is smooth, a remnant of summer, with a few bright colored leaves floating lazily on the surface. At other times it will whip itself into an angry froth and lash at the shore as if to show its anger at the approaching winter's imprisonment.

During the cold months, the river has the appearance of being dead. It is buried under a sheet of ice and a blanket of snow that has designs blown in by the wind. But if you get close to the Mississippi or lift part of its cover you can hear and see that it is the same. It is only imprisoned, not dead, and it is muttering to itself and dreaming of new courses to run and new moods to display. Womanlike, it is never quiet for long and always has the last word.

DORIS F. MILLER.

Building the Kingdom

- In January, 1948

AT THIS TIME OF YEAR the mind of every truly converted Latter Day Saint turns toward making a stewardship accounting for the year just passed. Many devoted members fail to comply with this part of the law. They give various reasons. But filing a tithing statement is really a very simple matter. It pays well, too, in terms of spiritual returns and plays no small part in establishing the kingdom in the hearts of men and in any community situation.

Here are seven steps that must be taken in filing your first tithing statement.

1. Obtain tithing statement blanks from your local solicitor or bishop, or from the Presiding Bishopric's office.
2. List your possessions at reasonable present value. Seek counsel from any source you choose to determine what each possession is worth, but remember, this is your accounting.
3. List your debts in the spaces provided.
4. Find the net worth subject to tithing by subtraction as indicated on the tithing blank.
5. If you do not have the necessary information (your tithing receipts) to fill in line R, ask your local solicitor, or write to the Presiding Bishopric for a statement of your payments.
6. Compute the tithe according to the steps on the tithing blank.
7. Give the completed statement to your solicitor or local bishop, or mail it to the Presiding Bishopric in care of the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

IF A FIRST TITHING STATEMENT has already been filed you will need to know how to file an annual tithing statement this year. These seven steps should be taken:

1. Obtain tithing statement blanks from your local solicitor or bishop, or from the Presiding Bishopric's office.
2. List your income and expenses for the year in the spaces provided on the blank. (The proce-

Here Is the Writer . . .

L. Wayne Updike is a native of Black River Falls, Wisconsin. After high school, he attended Graceland College and the University of Wisconsin. His first general church appointment was as missionary to the Southeastern Illinois District, where he served during 1942 and '43. On May 7, 1944, he was assigned to Kansas City Stake as bishop, which position he still holds. He and Mrs. Updike, the former Mary Malcor, and their two children, Lee and Vicki, make their home at 2046 East Gregory in Kansas City.

cedure is somewhat different for those using the farm type tithing blanks.) If your records are incomplete, remember that a good estimate is better than no accounting.

3. If you have last year's report, you will need it to fill in line S. If not, you may get this information from the Presiding Bishopric.

By Bishop L. Wayne Updike

4. Line U will require that you total your tithing receipts for the year to see how much you have paid. If you do not have all of them, ask your solicitor for a statement of your payments. Such a statement will also be sent to you from the Presiding Bishopric's office this year if you have paid tithes during 1947, and if your address is still the same as the one shown on your last tithing receipt.
5. Line Z is a simple problem in subtraction.
6. Give the completed statement to your local solicitor or your local bishop or agent, or mail it to the Presiding Bishop, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.
7. Tell someone else how simple and satisfying compliance with the law of accounting really is once you decide to comply.

IN THE PROCESS of making your accounting a number of questions will undoubtedly arise. Some years ago the Presiding Bishopric, anticipating such questions, prepared a booklet known as The Handbook of the Financial Law so that every member would be able to obtain readily, much of the information he desires. Here are some typical questions, together with the answer to each.

Q.—For what is tithing used?

A.—Tithing is used primarily for financing the Lord's work such as expense of missionary work, supporting missionaries' families and those engaged in general church work, maintaining general church office. It may also be used for the benefit of the poor and needy. It has been commanded to be used in the building of the temple.

New Horizons

Q.—Who should pay tithing?

A.—Everyone who has a net worth (an increase). We came into the world with nothing. Whatever we have accumulated is increase, and is subject to the law of tithing.

Q.—Should children pay tithing?

A.—Yes. Teach them to observe the law of God early in life, and they will find joy in honoring the law throughout their lives. Their tithing may not amount to much in dollars and cents, but it will be a means of building character and spirituality. They may pay tithing on such things as gifts, toys, allowance and savings. Teach them to make an accounting using the Junior Record Book put out by the church.

Q.—I have contributed to local branch expenses, Sunday school, Christmas offerings, assisted missionaries who were passing through, etc., until my gifts have amounted to one tenth of my increase. Would this exempt me from paying tithing?

A.—No. One tenth of the increase belongs to God and he has appointed his servants as agents to receive and distribute the same. The tithe should be paid on one tenth of the increase. Then these other items may be paid from the nine tenths.

Q.—We are building a church. I donate $50 to the church. Do I owe tithing on the $50?

A.—Yes. The tithe comes before the offering. When you give money away be sure it is all yours. As a steward, it is to your interest to use the nine tenths in a manner that will be approved by God.

Q.—Should a person pay tithing on gifts received?

A.—That would depend on circumstances. If the present is something that adds to the net worth, it should be tithed. However, there may be exceptions.

Q.—Should I pay tithes to the church, or is it all right to use them for charitable purpose?

A.—The tithe is the Lord's, and as such, the law states just where it should go—to the Presiding Bishop to be used for the spreading of the gospel. No one has the right to divert the tithe to other uses. In doing so, they are taking what does not belong to them.

Q.—If one is buying a home on the installment plan, does he owe any tithe until he is entirely out of debt?

A.—Yes. Every dollar he pays on the principal adds to his equity in the

SNOWFLAKES

Like petals from thousands of flowers,
Snowflakes fill the winter air—
God's gift from the sky to beautify
A world grown old and bare.

Like soft, white hands on a withered brow,

They cling to each twig and leaf—
A lovely sight is a land of white
With the sleepy world beneath.

—Iva Merrill

property and represents increase. The tithe is one tenth of the increase.

Q.—Suppose a member goes to college or takes a mail course in engineering, law, etc., for which he has paid $150. How should he figure the tithe thereon, and where would it be listed on the inventory blank?

A.—We have advised that higher education, that is, that obtained for specific vocational purposes after leaving high school, should be tithed. In the first place, it is above the average standard of living at the present time, and optional with the individual whether he shall spend his funds for intellectual tools with which to earn his living, or whether he spend his savings for the tools used by a carpenter, a plumber or a farmer. With reference to listing it on the inventory, we suggest it be listed in the column with your assets. Just specify "Higher Education" and carry forward the amount expended. If you are making out the tithing report form when you list only the income and deduct the necessary living expenses, it will not be necessary to list the amount spent for education, as you automatically pay tithing if you do not list it.

RECENTLY A NEW QUESTION has been arising. The GI who is taking advantage of the educational opportunity offered by the United States Government says, "Uncle Sam is paying for my education. Should I pay tithes on that? If so, how much? I never know how much the school is collecting from the government for my expenses."

The benefits of such education accrue to the GI and constitute a form of increase just as if he were paying for it himself. Usually the cost can be obtained from the school. If board and room are included in this figure, their cost should be deducted, since these items are not to be tithed. If the school does not furnish this information, one should estimate the cost of his education as accurately as possible. Looking in the college catalogue to find the cost of tuition and the fee for each course will help in arriving at an estimate. The cost of textbooks can be determined without much difficulty by a visit to a bookstore.

The procedure in stewardship accounting is simple and direct. With so many people concerned about the building of the kingdom, there should be literally thousands, especially young people who make their financial accountings this year. You should be one of them. As your view of the task grows broader, you will see other tasks for other days, but this is building the kingdom—in January, 1948.

CRESTON, IOWA.—Four children from Creston were baptized at Lamoni on Sunday, December 14, by Elder A. D. Blair, pastor of Creston Branch. The confirmation service was held on December 21.

SAN LEANDRO, CALIFORNIA.—Elder Charles Mottashed was elected pastor for the coming year at the annual business meeting in October. Plans for the new church have been discussed and a building committee elected. The lot has already been purchased, and construction will begin as soon as funds are available. A bazaar was sponsored by the women's department to raise money for the fund. Shirley Gene, daughter of Paul and Ethel Stanfield, and Jeanette Marie, daughter of Mark and Cathie MacDougall, were blessed recently. Nancy Koestner, a member of San Leandro Mission, died in November. The funeral was held in Santa Rosa, Elder Russell Ralston officiating.

JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI.—George White, youngest son of Mrs. Louisa White, was killed in an airplane crash in Vermont. He leaves his wife, Mary, and a five-year-old daughter, Hazel Ann, of Cambridge, Massachusetts. Gary Lee, son of Grace and Nelson Carey, was blessed by Elders A. H. Wintermeyer and J. F. Brown. The Careys are nonmembers.

LEE'S SUMMIT, MISSOURI.—The women's department made a sizeable profit from the stand which it sponsored during the Lee's Summit Fair. Both the Junior and Senior Leagues hold early morning prayer services on the first Sunday of each month. On October 5, they held a joint communion service. Stephen, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Walsh, and Marilyn Sue, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Alley, were blessed recently.

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO.—The women's department held its annual bazaar on November 20. Through such projects, the women are raising money to purchase an electric organ for the church. Recently, they equipped the choir loft with new chairs.

BATES CITY, MISSOURI.—Several members of the Bates City congregation attended the first convention of the Council of Churches in Lafayette County held on December 2. This meeting was held at Higginville, Missouri.

Tribute to "Uncle Ed"

I am wondering how many of the Saints are missing out on the weekly visit of the Herald. Surely every member should have access to it. The many good things I read in it help me to see the importance of being an active worker for the great cause which has been entrusted to us.

The picture of "Uncle Ed" in the December 27 issue brought memories of the days when he was a missionary in West Virginia. He held services in the chapel called Nauvoo and stayed at the Dobbs home, which was a five-minute walk from the church. Uncle Ed was always busy. When he wasn't preaching, he helped with the chores on the farm, picked berries, and mowed the lawn. On these occasions, he wore a large-brimmed straw hat. He arose early each morning so that he could read his Bible and study the church books before breakfast. Through his visits, he endeared himself to all of us.

DIORA LYDICK.

Moundsville, West Virginia

The Plains of Peace

I had a vision on December 7, 1947, in which I was engaged with others in making a level plain of very fertile, beautiful land, on which the pure in heart should live and prosper in righteousness as did the ancient Nephites on this goodly land. Among those I saw and with whom I labored, were people I know, who are saying good things, who love righteousness and peace, and who are advocating the program of Zion in loving kindness and helpfulness. I saw these plains of peace on earth and good will toward men beginning to take form and find place in word and deed, for people's hearts were attuned to God's love. I saw many of the elderly Saints, the splendid thinkers among the Zion's League, and children, who love everybody.

I have never seen such fertile fields for labor, where people were so happy and eager to work and so willing to help one another. This is our hope for Zion the beautiful which beckons us on, foretold by all the prophets. I was shown love conquering hate, selfishness, and kindred evils. I saw that we should pray more, that love should abound, and that all our Zion program will go forward under the endowment of God's power to bring it to pass. I saw the implements we were using to make smooth the rough places and remove every obstacle ahead of us for Zion and the plains of peace, signifying our powers and God-given talents to overcome evil with good. Those implements include loving-kindness, prayer, and living the high points in the law of the Lord of peace on earth and good will toward men. Our public and private speech and our lives preach the greatest sermons, and should be guarded always.

After a lifetime of service in the ministry, I pray God to bless all the men of today, as I send greetings to the whole church. I have related my experience to encourage every man, woman, and child who will use their God-given gifts and talents and humbly work for the Master. A great time is ahead of us this new year and in the years to come. May the Lord give us all a clearer vision, more love for God and his work than ever before in our lives, and a greater endowment to the men of the ministry to promote the cause of Zion.

HUBERT CASE.

316 West Kansas Street
Independence, Missouri

Appreciates Letters

I want to thank my many friends who remembered me in their prayers and sent letters to me during my illness. I am truly on the road to recovery, and this was the happiest Christmas I have ever had. I have been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 29, 1947.

MRS. E. B. JAMES.

112 McMillian Street
Evergreen, Alabama

Letter from the Isolated

I am an isolated member, living alone. My husband died last May, and my eight children are all married. I also have two sons dead. The nearest church is about forty miles from here, so all I can do is read the church books, pray, and live as clean a life as I know how. Please pray for me.

MRS. L. L. JORDAN, SR.

103 Jackson Avenue

Wynne, Arkansas

Address of an Isolated Member

Mrs. Bertha Phelps

Palisade, Nebraska

Grateful for Prayers

James Lacy, 1611 Indiana Street, Bloomington, Illinois, expresses his gratitude to all who remembered him in prayer and with cards and letters during his recent illness.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Sam and Laura Patten of Stillwater, Oklahoma, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on October 19. Both are members of the Reorganized Church, Mrs. Patten being baptized in 1904 and Mr. Patten in 1907. Their five children were present to help them celebrate the occasion.

BULLETIN BOARD

P. S.

Chatham District Women's Institute

The second annual women's institute of Chatham District will be held in the Wallaceburg, Ontario, church on January 15. The day's activities will include a fellowship service at 10 a.m.; classwork at 11; potluck luncheon at noon; and classwork from 2 to 3:30 p.m. District President J. A. Pray will be in charge of the 10 o'clock service. Mrs. Ruth Simons of Flint, Michigan, is to be guest speaker.

Northwestern Ohio Priesthood Institute

The Northwestern Ohio District Priesthood Institute will be held at Toledo on January 16, 17, and 18, with President F. Henry Edwards and Apostle D. Blair Jensen as guest speakers. A fellowship dinner will be served at 7 o'clock on Friday evening to priesthood members and their wives.

Missionary Material for Germany

Anyone having complete sets of old quarterlies is urged to send them to Seventy Eugene A. Theys, Avenue Concordia and Annastraat, Rotterdam, Holland. He is trying to prepare a library of church school material which can be adapted to the needs of the German mission. Bundles must be securely packed and tied to stand overseas shipment. Your assistance in this work will be greatly appreciated.

Wants to Contact Members

Bert A. Bankester, A.M.M.I. Service Test, N.A.T.C., Patuxent River, Maryland, wants to contact members in Washington, D. C., or Patuxent River, so that he can locate the nearest church.

Change of Address

Technical Sergeant Seth O. Osborn, formerly of Fort Wayne, Michigan, and Fort Sheridan, Illinois, is now located in Tokyo, Japan, with the Army of Occupation. Mrs. Osborn and Seth, Jr., will join him soon. The Saints may contact him at this address:

T/Sgt. Seth O. Osborn, RA 6826904
Sec. 2, Det. A, Tokyo 2 M Depot
A.P.O. 181, c/o Postmaster
San Francisco, California

Mr. and Mrs. Luther S. Troyer
213 Drew Street
Paw Paw, Michigan

Books Wanted

John Walker, 70 Mill Street, Guelph, Ontario, wants a copy of Stebbins' Great Book of Mormon Lectures, originally published in Lamoni in 1901.

Ruth Holman, 501 North Pleasant, Independence, Missouri, needs several copies of Carlyle Kueffer's Stories of Our Hymns.

Alice Wilhite, 5945 Ten Mile Road, Centerline, Michigan, wants a copy of McGregor's Marvelous Work and A Wonder.

A copy of The Old Jerusalem Gospel, by Joseph Luff, and of The Fall of Babylon, by W. J. Haworth, will be needed by Hubert T. Weston, Colony No. 2, Westminster Hospital, London, Ontario, Canada.

Requests for Prayers

Mrs. George Standard, Box 75, Quincy, Ohio, asks for prayers that her health may be restored. She is an isolated member and has been bedfast for fourteen weeks.

Mrs. Burl Sopher, Route 1, Boscobel, Wisconsin, asks the prayers of the Saints. Unless divinely healed, she is to undergo a spinal operation in the near future.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Betty Boek of Baldwin Park, California, by her uncle, Z. B. Hogue of Sperry, Oklahoma.

Births

A daughter, Jeannette Rene, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Beldin of Lamoni, Iowa, on September 29. Mrs. Beldin is the former Kathryn Norman.

A son, Brian William, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Kent of Toronto, Ontario, on September 29.

A daughter, Lynda Kay, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Doyle Miller of Colorado Springs, Colorado, on October 30. She was blessed by Elder J. D. Curtis and C. D. Liggett.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mitchell of Portland, Oregon, announce the birth of a son, Mark Alan, born December 18. Mrs. Mitchell, the former Elaine Larson, is a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, class of 1945.

A daughter, Linda Kay, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Paul Mauldin of Flint, Michigan, on March 16, 1947. She was blessed by Elders James McBride and Benjamin McGeachy at Clio, Michigan, on October 5. Mrs. Mauldin is the former Olive Surbrook.

WEDDINGS

Adams-Sackman

Clara Lee Sackman of Silex, Missouri, and William Adams of Whiteside, Missouri, were married at the Reorganized Church in St. Charles, Missouri, on December 21, Elder F. F. O'Bryan officiating. They are making their home in Whiteside.

Thomas-Smart

Bonnie Lou Smart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Smart, and Floyd Thomas, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Thomas, both of Independence, Missouri, were married December 21 at the Liberty Street Church in Independence, Pastor Howard Timm officiating. The groom is a student at Missouri University.

Sinclair-Ballantyne

Carlotta Alice Ballantyne of Independence Missouri, daughter of Mrs. John Ballantyne of Page, Nebraska, and Clarence Bruce Sinclair, son of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Sinclair of Independence, were married December 23 at the Englewood Church. Elder Evan Fry read the double-ring ceremony. The bride is a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium; the groom is a predoctoral student at the University of Kansas City.

Beringer-Belshe

Wilma Belshe and George Beringer were married December 20 at the bride's home in Independence, Missouri. Elder Odess L. Athey read the service.

What Latter Day Saints Believe About Repentance

(Continued from page 13.)

turned to life and love and family fellowship. So God is always ready and eager to welcome the sinner, who will forsake his rebellion, come to himself, and return unto his Father's house. There is more joy in heaven when such an one returns, than over many righteous men who need no repentance.

* Gifts

At our annual Herald Christmas dinner, my fellow employees gave me a very beautiful gift, an album of records of organ music by Charles M. Courboin, organist at St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York City. This is so lovely a collection I wish everyone who loves sacred music could have a set of it. It contains Mozart's "Ave Verum," Arcadelt's "Ave Maria"—which is worthy to take its place beside compositions of the same name by Schubert and Bach-Gounod; and a number of great hymns. As I listen to these records over and over again, I ask myself why they are so different from many other organ recordings. And I conclude Mr. Courboin has made his arrangements in a spirit of medieval simplicity and severity, gaining power by understating his themes rather than over-elaborating them. He plays his organ, not as if it were a Hollywood orchestra, but as if it were the voice of the Good Shepherd, calling his people home. And isn't that the spirit in which church music should be played?

This last Christmas had threatened to be a very lonely and unhappy one. How can one enjoy Christmas by himself? But I had forgotten the great kindness of friends and neighbors. There was a family whose son was not able to get home for Christmas dinner, and it was my privilege to take his place at the dinner table. It was a day full of happiness, pleasant conversation, music, and fraternal good will. . . . And the night before, our group elder and his wife, representing the neighborhood, had knocked at the door, bearing tokens of friendship. There was a fine book of records of Christmas Carols, and a recording of Tschaiakowsky's First Piano Concerto, with Horowitz at the piano and the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. . . . And in those days other things came in, fruit cakes, boxes of homemade candy, fruit, invitations.

As lovely as such things are in themselves, even more wonderful is the spirit of love and kindness of the people who think of giving them. . . . Did I hear somebody complaining about "When are we going to build Zion?" Dear Friends, I am living very happily in Zion now, surrounded by some of the finest people in the world.

* A Coke, Coming Up

During the recent world war, to be a sergeant gave a man very little prestige. But a Cook was a Person of Importance. Not among the Brass, of course. But certainly influential.

One of our lads in the European Theatre happened to be both. As a Cook, he overcame all the handicaps of being a sergeant. He was the only man in his outfit, located in wet Bavaria, who didn't drink beer, at the very least. He was faithful to his religion, and he made no compromise of his principles. Gradually he became a kind of father confessor to the boys. He brought them in from their drunks and took care of them till aching heads and sick tummies were well again. They loved and respected him.

One night he was on his way to town and met his boys, many of them tipsy, with a captain trying to keep them under reasonable control. They insisted that he go to town with them. He couldn't escape from them when they entered a tavern. He was worried what might happen next—that they might set before him.

The captain took charge. "Thirty-nine beers," he barked, "and a Coca-Cola!"

The barmaid laughed, but the captain shut her up. "Don't you laugh at him. He's ——— okay!"

Let the lesson of this man's life sink into your mind: no matter where you are, it is possible to live as a Christian.

Mary A. Burlington
1510½ Jules
St. Joseph, Missouri

92867
18
h

Every family wants

A REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINT

CALENDAR

This attractive calendar printed in two colors (brown and green) follows the church-wide theme for every month. On each page is a photograph of church significance illustrating this theme. Special dates in Latter Day Saint history are listed by the month and are emphasized on the calendar in green. Our calendar was especially prepared to be used with the Pastor's Handbook for 1948 issued by the First Presidency. 40¢ each—10 to 24 (to one address) 35¢ each—25 or more (to one address) 30¢ each

 Beginning March 1*

the subscription rate of the Saints' Herald will be:

$3.50 per year to the United States

$3.75 per year to Canada

$4.50 per year to Foreign Countries

*See article on the Editorial page

Effective with the Third Quarter, there will be a number of price changes on quarterly materials.

These price changes will appear on the next church school order blank which will be sent to church school workers in February.

Photo by W. F. Gold
Youbou, British Columbia

Lane's End

THE Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

JANUARY 24, 1948

NUMBER 4

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Last Chapter

AUDITORIUM NEWS

I ask no prophecy of things to come.
 Perhaps the watching hour is now
 —Perhaps a thousand years away.
 I do not ask the day
 Nor cry to heaven for a sign
 Of what eternity will bring.
 But help me, God, to use
 Whatever time is left Unselfishly.
 Direct my eyes to see each human need,
 And let no littleness
 Be in my heart.
 When I have learned to truly serve
 My fellow man,
 I'll know you, God,
 And at the end of time
 We'll meet as friends.

—Naomi Russell

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:
The Principle of Life	3
Across the Desk.....	4
What Is an "Advocate"?	4
OFFICIAL:
Alaska	4
Farm Opportunity	4
ARTICLES:
The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, by Apostle Roscoe E. Davey.....	5
The Cripple, by Ted Linder.....	8
Minute Musings, by Norma Anne Kirkendall.....	9
And God So Loved, by Howard F. Miller.....	10
Recipe for a Happy '48, by Katherine C. Metz.....	11
Thank You, God (a poem), by Louise.....	11
What L. D. S. Believe About Baptism, by Evan A. Fry.....	12
Letters	14
Briefs	14
Report on Missions Abroad Project, by F. M. McDowell.....	15
The Difficult Years, by Margaret W. Gibson.....	16
"And Having Ears, Hear Not," by Barbara McFarlane.....	20
South American Journey, Part III, by Frances E. Pearse.....	18
Some Facts on Fasting, by C. B. Hartshorn.....	21
Bulletin Board	23

* The Twelve and Seventy

The Joint Council of Twelve and Seventy had a very successful series of educational and inspirational meetings at Central Church in Kansas City from January 3 to 9. There was an intensive program bearing upon the various aspects of evangelism, with a study of aids and objectives. Immediately at the close, the men went to their fields to begin the work of the new year.

A feature of the convention was a surprise birthday party for Apostle Paul M. Hanson, President of the Twelve, given by the women of Central Church. There was a turkey, a cake with one candle and a question mark. Brother Hanson responded with a beautiful testimony concerning his early missionary experience.

Many of the papers read at the convention will be made available for publication.

* Pastoral Appointments

Effective February 8, when he returns to the city, Brother Fred O. Davies (who comes here from his home in England) will have the pastoral responsibility of the Walnut Park and Gudgeon Park congregations, and of the new Golden Acres area in and near Independence. Brother Davies first came from England as a student at Graceland, then returned home for a number of years to serve the church in the British Isles and the European Mission.

Donald Lents, who has done a fine work at Walnut Park will now devote full time to his appointment as Chaplain of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. A part of this work is serving as pastor of the nurses, conducting the morning devotionals.

* Portsmouth, Virginia

This is our only church in the state. It is a new building, built by our own people. Besides the members, there is an average of ten visitors each Sunday.

This church is strategically located for young men at the Navy center to go to church. It is located at Griffin and Rodman Avenue, Portsmouth. The pastor is William J. Davies, whose home is at 3208 Duke Street.

* Rochester, New York

Our congregation here is moving into a church building which, according to present plans, will probably be purchased from another group. It is at Lill and Flowers Streets.

* Baptisms

President Edwards totaled reports indicating there were at least 283 baptisms in December. With more reports to come, it is possible the figure may reach near three hundred. This is the largest December figure since 1929, and takes fourth place in the record during twenty years.

* Central Illinois District

District President Arthur Henson reports: "We have just closed the year for 1947 with forty-five baptisms, which is the highest since I began to preside over the district. Our tithes and offerings were $12,355, which constitutes another high."

* Berkeley, California

Apostle W. Wallace Smith recently visited here and found that the pastor, Alma Andrews, had added thirty-six persons to the membership by baptism.

The Principle of Life

MANY GOOD REPORTS have come to headquarters from general church appointees concerning the work and devotion of Dr. E. V. Shute, a busy physician and surgeon of London, Ontario. He has risen to a position of eminence in his profession, and is regarded as an authority in certain lines of medical work by his fellow doctors. In addition to all this, he does a great deal of volunteer church work. He comes from a family which gives to the church a number of such examples of achievement and devotion.

What can explain such a career? A single sentence from a recent letter written by him seems to furnish the key and explanation:

I am not accustomed to let the church's work take second place to anything, and I don't intend to change that order in my life.

For a busy man, with so great a burden of professional responsibility, that statement means a great deal.

EVERY LETTER has something autobiographical in it, whether the writer so intends or not. A person's education, culture, and background are often revealed in a few short paragraphs. Even if a man says nothing in a few carefully chosen sentences, that, too, is a revelation of himself. Men of character are fully aware of the importance of written statements, and of their influence on others.

The church is offered a great deal of service that is temporary, tentative, and conditional. People will testify that they are ready to give their lives for the church, and that they would rather die than leave it. Perhaps they mean to be sincere. But sometimes those who talk this way one day will be found running wild and free the next.

But on the other hand, there are examples among our membership of people who make a quiet statement of faith, and ten years later they will be found still working in fulfillment of a promise made to God. Such promises are built upon principles.

EVERY PERSON who makes anything of life at all must carry a certain number of obligations, some of them rather heavy. We must take care of business or professional duties. We must support our companions and homes; we must nurture our children. Then some of us are fortunate enough to find God, and to realize what an important role religion plays in our life; and in return for his protection and care, we make certain agreements and promises. Our spiritual obligations are at least as important as any other kind. Because of their intangible character, we can more easily forget or neglect them, but not without consequences. We can't neglect God without losing something.

I was remembering, the other day, a fine woman who used to walk up the hill to Stone Church to play a little foot-powered organ for the overflow services. Making this sacrifice, she missed the happiness of attending the larger meetings, but she found satisfaction in the work. Nobody else knew what it cost her to walk up the hill; she had heart trouble, and she did not complain. One Sunday she was missing from her place, and in a short while she had passed to the Beyond where she would never be troubled with a weak heart again. She left behind her a fine son and a daughter, who are continuing in the church work until this day. She never wrote anything, but her life was an example of a great principle.

ALL OF US need some one or more great abiding principles at the center of our lives. People who do not have them are swayed and pulled this way and that by whatever current of thought or feeling happens to catch them. They have no goal, no direction for progress. They are often victims of circumstances, the creatures of temporary conditions. Principles provide stability and anchorage.

It is good to formulate the principles of your life when you are at your best in all respects: physically, intellectually, morally, spiritually. Surrounded by the best of friends and conditions, in times of inspiration, we can reach up for the most noble and enduring levels of life. Once such principles are accepted and determined, they should be maintained. It is best never to change your plans or principles when you are weak, tired, discouraged, or low in spirit. At such times terrible mistakes are made, and some of the best things in life are lost. It is wise sometimes to say, "I must not change my plans or principles now. I am too weak. I might give up, and I would regret it later. I will wait until I am strong before I reconsider these things." So, making decisions and establishing principles of life only when we are strong, we can be sure of making the best of our opportunities.

I have seen students quit their educations in moments of discouragement and regret it forever afterward. I have known young people to let moral principles go by in moments of temptation or weakness and to carry the marks of shame and humiliation with them for years. I have known married couples to break up their homes in times of anger, and bitterly mourn for their folly after the damage was done.

These sorrows and troubles all could be prevented by establishing certain principles of life in the best times of strength and inspiration, and then refusing to change them in times of weakness and trouble.

The gospel gives us principles of life, which can prove to be our eternal salvation.

L. J. L.

Editorial

Across the Desk

WE ARE VERY pleased to share a letter just received by Bishop DeLapp from Elder John Smolney, who was in charge of our work in Germany until the recent appointment of Elder Eugene A. Theys. Here is Brother Smolney's letter:

Gross Raschen, Germany.

Dear Brother DeLapp:

I hope that you arrived safely in America again after the good work you have done here. I am sure you receive a lot of letters of thanksgiving for all the church is doing for our people, which causes great joy among all of us. I myself desire to express my sincere thanks for myself and all the members here. Dear brother Bishop, we are surely proud that you have kept your word, and your esteem in the eyes of the people here is indeed great that you not only have talked, but also put into action your promises. You surely have sown good seed, and we are sure that when the missionaries come, it will bear fruit, for it seems when people are in dire need, they seek more for God than when they live under prosperity. While we just met for but a few minutes, I surely look up to you as a man of honor. I only desire to be worthy of the confidence you have in our people. I also desire to express our thanks to the Presidency, who have seen to it that such action has been taken.

The Apostles who visited Germany in former days will be able to testify of the pleasant conditions under which we used to live; but now we are a very poor people indeed, and have become beggars—of which we are ashamed. The worst of it is that when we look into the future there doesn't seem to be much hope for any betterment.

The church is really doing a lot for its members here in Germany, and we only hope that we are worthy of all that love expressed to us. So in the name of our branch here, I express my deepest gratitude for all your help. Whenever we ask grace on the food, we are remembering you who are the giver of all those wonderful things. May God richly bless you and may he guide the church in our sincere prayer.

Many who live in the land of America can share in the ministry so well described by Brother Smolney in the letter. All can help by sending clothing to the Campus Shop, 406 South Pleasant Street, Independence. The clothing should be clean and in good repair, and a size tag should be attached to each garment. It should be indicated by the sender that the material is for overseas shipment.

Our membership can also definitely help in this matter by giving liberally to the Oblation Fund. Inasmuch as this work is being systematically handled, and on the basis of requests received from individuals in Europe to headquarters through the proper local administrative channels, practically all shipments are being made from Independence. Individuals or branches desiring to send packages direct can obtain names from the office of the Presiding Bishopric; but in these instances, such individuals or groups should stand all the cost of articles and foodstuffs sent, including postage. At the present time, we are making a survey of the needs of our people in Europe; and, consequently, we will not be in a position to furnish names to individuals or branches until this survey is completed. We should have all the information we desire in approximately thirty days.

We would like to keep the program centralized as much as possible. We, therefore, urge all individuals or groups who are now sending packages to our church people in Germany, Holland, and other European countries, to register with the Presiding Bishopric's office. Please give us the name and address of the person to whom you are sending packages, and send us a report of the contents of each package as it is mailed.

F. HENRY EDWARDS

OFFICIAL

Alaska

We are desirous of learning the names and addresses of all church members living in Alaska. Will those who know of such please write, giving us all available information? Perhaps members there who see this request may, by a little inquiry, get information about others.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Farm Opportunity

One of our members has made inquiry about a Latter Day Saint family to operate a 120-acre farm located fifty miles north of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The owner desires a young couple interested in the church to work this place on a 50-50 basis. Any young couple interested and living in an area where such a move would be feasible may get in touch with the Presiding Bishopric for further information.

G. L. DELAPP.

What Is an "Advocate"?

From current press reports we learn that a prominent member of the Alberta Parliament has been excommunicated by the Mormon Church. Here is the item:

LETHBRIDGE, ALTA., Dec. 27 (AP)—The Lethbridge Herald says John H. Blackmore has been excommunicated by the Latter Day Saints church on charges of teaching and advocating the doctrine of plural marriage—charges he denied.

Blackmore has served in Parliament since 1935 as a member of the Social Credit party. The Herald says he appeared before a church court at Cardston, Alta. It quotes him as saying:

"I maintain that I have merely discussed and defended the doctrine of plural marriages as a Biblical principle, not as a present-day practice."

We are led to inquire whether the Mormon Church could not be "indicted" on the same count. Webster says an
(Continued on page 9.)

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

January 24, 1948

Number 4

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse

• BY APOSTLE ROSCOE E. DAVEY

We have therefore a more sure knowledge of the word of prophecy, to which word of prophecy ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light which shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts; knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scriptures is given of any private will of man, for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.—II Peter 1: 19, 20 (Inspired Version.)

IT WOULD HAVE been difficult for the Apostle Peter to have given greater emphasis to the outstanding importance of Bible prophecy than is here stated. In this day of doubt and uncertainty, with all the conflicting preachments as to the teachings of the gospel of Christ and the way of salvation, one most certainly needs something to guide him in his search for truth and to give him convictions about it, when he has found it. A common expression heard today—"With all the conflicting and contradictory teachings found in the world today, how can we be sure what is really true, or where to look to find the truth of the gospel?" Indeed, this is a time in which prophecy and its fulfillment is most urgently needed, as a light that shines in a dark place, to guide in a search for truth.

Among the many prophecies that can be studied with profit is the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, based upon the sixth chapter of the Book of Revelation.

And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts say, Come and see, and I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering; and to conquer.

And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see. And there went out another horse that was red; and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another; and there was given unto him a great sword.

And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse, and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine.

And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see. And I looked, and behold a pale horse; and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him.

And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with the sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.

And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellowservants also and their brethren that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as a sackcloth of hair; and the moon became as blood; . . . For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?—Revelation 6: 1-17.

As with other prophecies, this one has been interpreted in various ways, and different applications have been made of it. Ibanez, the Spanish writer, in his book, The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, endeavors to apply all four horsemen to various phases of World War I. Others have said that the first horseman represents the establishment of the gospel by Christ in his personal ministry. Still others say this first horseman finds its fulfillment in the conquests by Mussolini and Japan, in relatively recent days.

To be sure of the interpretation of this prophecy, one must be sure that the prophecy with all its symbols and all Scripture bearing upon the matter are in perfect agreement with the facts of history.

THE FIRST IMPORTANT step in the interpretation of this prophecy is to discover the approximate time in history when the beginning of its fulfillment is to take place. The wording of the prophecy leaves no doubt that it finds its culmination in the second coming of Christ.

To help in this, turn to Revelation 4: 1; "And after this I looked, and behold, a door was opened into heaven; and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will show you things which must be hereafter." This is followed by the apocalyptic prophecies of the rest of the Book of Revelation. The fulfillment of all these prophecies must take place after the time of John on the Isle of Patmos, which was approximately sixty years after Christ had completed his personal ministry and had ascended to his Father in heaven. It becomes evident from this that the first horseman cannot represent the personal ministry of Christ, or any event taking place before the time of John on the Isle of Patmos. "I will show you things that must be hereafter."

THE NEXT IMPORTANT step to take is to identify the horse and his rider. To do this, consideration must be given to all of the symbols involved.

And I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering and to conquer.

The color of this horse is white. For ages white has been associated with two qualities, righteousness and peace. Certainly white could not be a symbol of conquest by a war of blood and carnage, based on a lust for power, which is the very antithesis of righteousness and peace. "Your sins shall be white as snow."—Isaiah 1: 18. "Many shall be purified and made white."—Daniel 12: 10. "And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints."—Revelation 19: 8. For ages, even in times of war, white has been associated with peace. Enemy fire is withheld when someone or a group approaches under a white flag. How, then, could the white of this horse be associated with unrighteousness, war, and human misery?

The rider has a bow in his hand, which does indicate war; but he has no arrow, and it is the arrow that kills—that would indicate a war of blood and death. The arrow is absent. This horseman is to be engaged in a bloodless war, a war for righteousness and peace, conquering and to conquer.

Upon his head is a crown, which for ages has been a symbol of authority. By the authority of the crown, there is to be in evidence the fact that this rider, when he goes forth, has the authority invested in him to perform his mission.

Who or what can this rider be? Is there any indication in Scripture as to his name? Further information is found in Revelation 19: 11-13: "And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him is called Faithful and True, and in righteousness doth he judge and make war; his eyes as a flame of fire; and he had on his head many crowns; and a name written that no man knew, but himself. And he is clothed with a vesture dipped in blood, and his name is called The Word of God."

Here again is the rider upon the white horse, who in righteousness is to judge and make war. The many crowns indicating that his authority is to be diffused among or placed upon many. And the name of the rider is The Word of God. So, at some time in history, after the time of John on the Isle of Patmos, the word of God is again to go forth upon the earth. In the Inspired Version of the Scriptures, John 1: 1, is found "And the gospel was the word." So the first horse and his rider represent the restoration of the gospel of Christ, the Word of God, upon the earth, and it is to go forth conquering and to conquer, to wage a warfare in righteousness for the accomplishment of God's purposes.

In this fact, all the symbols and descriptions of the prophecy find logical and complete fulfillment, the white of the horse, the bow without the arrow, the crown of authority upon the rider's head, to go forth conquering and to conquer, to wage a war in righteousness until he reigns whose right it is to reign.

The next question to which the correct answer must be found is: At what time in the history of the world, after the time of John on the Isle of Patmos, according to Bible prophecy is the word of God to go forth?

Christ himself gives something with which we can start in the search for the answer to this question. In the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, Christ tells his apostles about the signs that were to indicate the near approach of his second coming—wars and rumors of wars, nations rising against nations, etc.; in the fourteenth verse, he said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."

Two things are here emphasized: first, "the gospel of the kingdom" is to become lost to the world, so completely that it is not to be found anywhere in any nation, for otherwise it would be impossible for it to be preached to all the world, to all nations as a witness of the second coming of Christ. For Christ was here giving the signs that would evidence or witness the near approach of this event. If the gospel of the kingdom had continued on down through the centuries in just one nation, it could not be preached to that nation as a witness of the coming of the end.

THE CONDITIONS THAT prevailed through the Dark Ages, plus many other Bible prophecies, establish beyond doubt that this part of Christ's prophecy was fulfilled. The people were to transgress the law, change the ordinances, and break the everlasting covenant (Isaiah 24: 4-6). There was to be a famine in the land, not for bread, but for the hearing of the words of the Lord, and people would run to and fro, seeking for it and would not be able to find it (Amos 8: 11, 12). There was to be a falling away from the truth (I Thessalonians 2: 1-3), for the people would be turned from the truth to fables (II Timothy 4: 1-4), the church was to be driven into the wilderness, there to remain for twelve hundred and sixty prophetic days or years (Revelation 12: 1-6).

The second fact Christ clearly establishes is that this gospel of his,

the gospel of the kingdom, was to be re-established upon the earth in the last days—a comparatively short time before his second coming. The Apostle Peter said the same thing while talking to the crowd that had gathered when he and John healed the lame man at the gate “Beautiful” at the temple. “Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you, whom ye have crucified; whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution [restoration—R.E.D.] of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.”—Acts 3: 19-21. Christ had come, taught the way of life, was crucified, and had ascended into heaven, where he must remain until there has been a restitution, or restoration of all the things the prophets had prophesied. The implication is clear that this restitution was to take place shortly before Christ’s second coming.

SO OUTSTANDING AN event as the restoration of the gospel of Christ, the gospel of the kingdom in the last days, as is here so clearly shown, surely justifies the statement of Peter—that we shall do well to give heed to the words of prophecy.

How was so marvelous an event as this to be ushered in? How was the everlasting gospel, the gospel of the kingdom to be brought back to the earth? The answer to this question is found in Revelation 14: 6, 7: “And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him: for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the fountains of water.”

An angel is to fly through the midst of heaven to bring back to earth the everlasting gospel, that it might be preached to all nations. Is it to be wondered at that so great an event as this should be ushered in by the coming of an angel? Throughout Bible times, God always used angels when he sought to minister to man; angels ate at the table of Abraham; Jacob wrestled with an angel on the bank of the river; an angel visited Mary, the mother of Jesus; an angel delivered Peter out of prison; angels ministered to John on the Isle of Patmos. From Genesis to Revelation, angels are used. And, says the prophet, Malachi, “For I am the Lord, I change not” (Malachi 3: 6). How could such an outstanding event as the restoration of the gospel of Christ take place without the coming of an angel.

FROM THESE PROPHECIES, we learn that the gospel of the kingdom was to disappear, the church was to go into the wilderness of apostasy, the word of God was to be taken from the earth, and spiritual darkness was to reign. In the latter days, shortly before the second coming of Christ, this gospel of the kingdom was to be restored to earth again, brought by an angel, and to be preached as a witness to all nations.

Many other prophecies point to the fact of the restoration of the gospel and church in the latter day. In Daniel 2: 27-45, is found the dream of King Nebuchadnezzar and the interpretation given to it by Daniel. First, he tells the king that God is revealing what shall be in the latter days. So this whole prophecy of the image and its fulfillment down through the centuries was to point to one outstanding event, the smiting of the image when it was all complete at one and the same time by the stone that was to be cut without hands out of the mountain. The four sections of the image represent four great kingdoms that were to rise up on the earth, the first of which was Babylon, the Head of Gold, then to follow in succession, Media-Persia, Greece, and Rome, and Rome to be divided into its lesser kingdoms. The stone was to smite at the time in history when the image was complete, for the iron, the brass, the silver, and the gold were to be broken to pieces together. The prophecy says that this stone represents the setting up of the kingdom of God by divine intervention, not by just human hands. History bears witness that the only time all these kingdoms were represented upon the face of the earth at the same time was from 1829 to 1848. It was in 1829 that Greece, one of the sections of this image, gained its independence from Turkey, following a four-year war of independence. All the other sections of the image had taken their place in the re-establishment of the image, which first came into existence one section at a time and then passed into oblivion. This places quite accurately the time when we can look for the kingdom of God to be set up, 1829-48—“In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. For as much as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter; and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure.”—Daniel 2:44, 45.

IN STRIKING FULFILLMENT of these prophecies, this church came into existence in 1830 as the result of divine intervention. Of all the church founders since the beginning of the Reformation, the only one who was bold enough to announce to the world that an angel had come, and, as a result, the gospel in all its fullness was being established, was the young man, Joseph Smith, who

(Continued on page 14.)

The Cripple

BY TED LINDER

POWERFUL, BUT NOW very weary arms pulled a useless pair of legs up over the last step of the synagogue and continued down the corridor toward a group of men gathered at the far end.

David, son of Josephus, was a fair lad of fifteen years or more. Crippled since birth, he hopelessly dragged his leather padded legs, in which there was no feeling. Hopelessly? It had been hopeless until just the other day when he had heard of the great healer—the Christ—who was doing marvelous miracles in Jerusalem. He had only heard; he had no proof of these things, yet he had believed with all his heart. He had believed to such an extent that he had traveled the fifteen weary miles to Jerusalem in this manner in order to see the Saviour.

He put forth his hand and touched the leg of one of the men. As the man turned, David said, "Tell me, where can I find Jesus of Nazareth?"

The men stopped talking.

"Jesus of Nazareth!" one exclaimed. "Fear has made his feet as the wings of a bird. We have nothing to do with Jesus of Nazareth."

"But—but they told me I would find him here," David cried.

"He is a teacher of foolishness. He breaks the laws of Moses. He is a usurper," said another.

"But I must find him," cried the boy. "He can heal me."

"Begone with you, beggar," belittled a big, red-faced man. "We said we have nothing to do with this Jesus of Nazareth."

DAVID FELT LIKE crying as he turned away and dragged himself down the corridor to the doorway. He did not go out into the bright sunlight, however, but stretched himself on the cool, smooth stones of the synagogue's floor. His mind was in a whirl; he did not know what to do. Was it true that the man in whom he had put all his hopes and dreams was a coward and a preacher of foolishness? But he must be the Christ, for all scriptures pointed to him. Those who had seen him and understood his words had given good report of him.

In desperation, David beat his clenched hands on the smooth floor of the corridor. "O God of Moses and of Jacob, I must find him. I believe. I believe," he cried to himself.

One of the men passed him. "Beggar," he said, "you'll never find your Jesus here. He has long since hid himself in some desert spot, where no one can find him; for when I last saw him, he was cringing with fear."

A sob was the only answer he received in response. The man laughed and went on. Time passed. People who went into the synagogue passed by the crippled boy with hardly a glance at him. A rich man passed and tossed a coin to him, which remained untouched. Finally, he aroused himself, twisted his body, and pulled himself to a sitting position. There were other places, he thought, why give up at the first one!

THROWING HIMSELF forward again, he hurried down the steps and onto the street. The thoroughfare was filled with people. Every nationality was represented and every class, also. The bright colors of the rich mingled with the tattered, dull garments of the poor. A soldier scattered pedestrians as he charged his horse through the crowd. A magician attracted a lot of attention at one spot; a merchant shouted his wares at another. The street was full of life, but David noticed none of this, because he looked for a single man whose every word attracted a crowd of listeners to believe or to mock—a man with kindness shining from his eyes; a man who lifted the downtrodden and healed the sick. That was the description given to him of the Christ.

Thus he moved on, inquiring of this person and of that one, but no one could help him. Finally he found himself back in the synagogue, where he had started his search. A crowd was still there. The red-faced man was leading the discussion as David lurched forward.

"Well, beggar, did you see him?" he asked the boy.

"I shall find him," answered David, for in him had been born a surety of this Jesus, regardless of his disappointment.

The man laughed; the others turned to watch. Seeing he had an audience, he decided to goad the boy on.

"Do you expect this Jesus to heal you? Have you no intelligence? Don't you know enough to go to a physician?"

"I have faith," answered David.

"Faith, ha!" jeered the man. Turning for approval, he went on. "What good is your faith? Has it found the coward? Yea, lad, he'll never show his face in the synagogue again, for we have shown him up for the winebibber and false prophet he is."

"I shall wait," said David.

"Wait then," roared the red-faced man, "but if he should dare show his face in here, I shall personally drive him out."

"And if I could stand on my feet, I would defend him," cried David. As he said these words, he felt a tingling sensation in his feet. Startled, he looked down at his legs. A muscle quivered. He bent one knee by itself, then the other. With a shout he jumped to his feet. "Jesus, the Christ is here." He looked wildly around at the amazed faces—none of these were the Christ. But down the hall strode a lone figure. When David saw him, he ran to him and threw himself on the floor, clasping Jesus' legs in gratitude.

"My son," Jesus said. "I heard your cry from afar off. Your faith has made you whole."

"My Master, they spoke evil of you, but I knew they were wrong," David cried.

"They?" Jesus asked.

"Yes, th—," David looked all around, but the accusers were gone, and he was alone with the Christ.

What Is an "Advocate"?

(Continued from page 4.)

advocate is (among other definitions) one who "defends, vindicates, or espouses any cause or argument."

We find that every book of Doctrine and Covenants published and issued by the Mormons includes in its entirety the alleged revelation on what they call "the eternity of the marriage covenant"—polygamy to everybody else. A casual reading of this section (132) discloses that the practice of plural marriage is mandatory as a righteous principle.

Why pick on a humble member who does nothing more—not even as much—to "advocate" polygamy than does the Mormon Church itself?

A prominent minister of the Utah faith recently wrote, in answer to a direct question, that there has been no "repudiation of plural marriage"; but, when President Woodruff issued his famous "Manifesto," the practice was discontinued. Practice of what? The entering into of new plural alliances or all cohabitation with plural wives?

The fact is that the "Manifesto" was so impoverished of words it practically said nothing. There was no prohibition—simply an advising: President Woodruff declared his "intention to submit" to the federal law (which forbade the cohabitation) "and to use my influence with the members of the church over which" he presided "to have them do likewise"!

The interpretation put on this by the Mormons limited it to new plural alliances. The subterfuge is glaringly apparent.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

In the foothills of the Himalayas, among the Khonds of North India, one hears the prayer: "Oh, Lord, we know not what is good for us. Thou knowest what it is. For it we pray."—Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, The Meaning of Prayer.

Minute Musings

By NORMA ANNE KIRKENDALL

YOUNG GREGG WAS supposed to learn the Twenty-third Psalm, and the whole family had taken a hand in drilling him on it. Finally father became disgusted and decided to settle the matter once and for all. He called Gregg to him. "Now just why can't you learn it?" he asked.

"It's silly," Gregg replied.

"Silly, what do you mean?" his father asked, amazed.

"Well—just listen—'my cup runneth over'—who in the world wants his cup to run over? That's silly."

And I believe Gregg had something there. When one lives a sincere and Christlike life, there comes to him a fullness of joy and satisfaction which cannot be measured. Thus, one may have a "cup that overfloweth." Yet, the best attitude would be that of sharing with one's neighbors and so expanding one's own personality so that it now takes more to fill that "cup."

I agree with Gregg that a cup running over is a bit silly, as it seems to express waste. I'd rather have my blessings in an even measure and know that my neighbor has the same, than to have an overflowing heart and know of a neighbor's lack.

A LITTLE NEGRO BOY stood wistfully watching the balloon man at the circus. There were balloons of every description—tiny, and huge, and all colors. Suddenly a red one broke loose and floated away into the sky, higher and higher, until the small black boy finally lost sight of it.

He frowned and ventured a question, "If a white balloon broke away, would it go so high?" The vender smiled and answered affirmatively. More thought—and then, "If a yellow one broke loose, would it go so high?" Once more the answer was nodded. Deep thought—and the lad timidly queried, "And suppose a black one got away, would it fly so high?" The balloon man was impatient, and snapped his reply, "It isn't the color—it's the stuff inside that makes it rise."

George Washington Carver would have been a great scientist, no matter what his color. Paul Robeson and Marian Anderson can sing with color of skin of little importance to the quality of their voices. Lena Horne is beautiful, though ebon. Booker T. Washington was a great educator. Color could not stop them from rising. It was what was inside them that determined their destiny.

FAME AND NAME are elusive things.

A man may work for decades to achieve a spectacular rise in fortune, which one stock market transaction can erase. A great statue may crumble and a building be laid low by one reverberation of the earth's crust. There is no permanency of material memorials.

There is only one way for a name or fame to live—in the hearts of men. A Frenchman labored well (for the love of science and humanity)—"Not bronze statues, but the caps of milk bottles are the fragile records of the deathless gratitude of millions for PASTEUR-ized food."

If I could feel that my philosophy or a bit of enthusiasm for living had been transplanted into the hearts of my readers, then I would be content. Now I know that only man's spirit is the permanent thing of this earth.

When an oyster gets an irritating grain of sand in its shell, it grows a pearl around it, turning irritation into iridescence.—E. Stanley Jones, in Victorious Living.

And God So Loved

BY HOWARD F. MILLER

“DO YOU BELIEVE a loving God would kill his own?”

The question took me back several years to my early youth and to the great obstacles I encountered in attempting to understand God's love for man.

Prominent in my mind for years were two drawings by Gustav Dore. One, “The Flight of Lot,” showed Lot and his two daughters fleeing Sodom and Gomorrah, resolutely going forward into the dark—a mountain cave for their home. Lot's wife stood, as a pillar of salt, looking backward to the unclean things of Sodom, as an inferno swallowed the remaining thousands of inhabitants. This, at the command of God. The other drawing showed the last visible portion of land—perhaps the peak of some high mountain—just before it was submerged by the rising waters of the Deluge. A tiger sat there holding a cub in her mouth, trusting that temporary safety. A few children cringed beside the animal; one, a tiny babe trying to reach his mother, who exhausted, was slipping into the flood. But the striking thing in that picture was the father using his last strength to reach up and push the baby as high as he could before he, too, should go down. It was as though he cried, “Lord, if I cannot live, save my child!”

I found the artist's interpretation of God's dealing with his people shocking. How could God know of these things and allow misery to go unrelieved? Did he really love his people?

THE ANSWER TO THESE questions came years later. I found myself, during the depression years, learning bee-keeping in the desert country of the southwest. As my instructor adjusted my veil, he gave me my first lesson. “Learn to love them,” he told me.

My mind had no time to respond. Just then I was stung twice on the top of my head. Strong doubts arose as to my ability to ever feel anything but a passing affection for them.

But I did learn. As I watched them gather nectar and pollen, I grew to understand, with a deep love, the intricate organization of their colonies, their unfailing industry and ambition, and the tender care they gave their young. I watched batteries of workers appear at all openings into the hive on hot days, busily fanning their wings to cool the interior. I became acquainted with the by-products of a bee's industry; wax fashioned into mathematically perfect, drop-size receptacles for storing honey; pollen pushed off their feet into special chambers; tiny white larvae carefully fed and brought to maturity; new queens brought into being through some mysterious sense of group consent that the old one was growing weak.

At times, it became necessary to move them away from a place where food had given out, and into new territory and fresh bloom. As we protected and helped them with their work, it seemed easy to feel partnership with God. I had found myself, more than once, kneeling in the apiary and thanking God for this stewardship and the new understanding of the statement in Genesis: “Let us make man in our own image, and give him dominion over the things on the earth.”

THERE IS AN EARTHLY element at work among the cities of bees, just as deadly as infested Sodom and Gomorrah. It is called foul brood. Worker-bees pick up the germ by visiting an infected colony, feed it to the young larvae, and the damage is done. The larvae decay. Bees going out from that colony carry the disease as far as they fly. It is a disease unto death for the bees, and there is no cure.

Control consists of total destruction of the affected colony. We had to do this for our bees. We waited until nightfall so all the workers would be home; then, we moved out all the colonies marked for destruction. We put them in a hole that was dug deep enough so none could crawl up the bank and out. We then set fire to them.

As I witnessed the flames consuming them, I felt a lump in my throat, and I realized that I truly had learned to love them. Could I have saved the young, if I had tried? No, for even they were diseased. Spare them, and all would be lost.

So I understood Sodom and Gomorrah and the Flood. “God so loved” that those who became ripened in iniquity had to be destroyed, in order for righteous man to fulfill his purpose and have life eternal.

Intimation of Immortality

A veteran nurse (quoted in The American Magazine): It has always seemed to me a major tragedy that so many people go through life haunted by the fear of death—only to find when it comes that it's as natural as life itself. For very few are afraid to die when they get to the very end. In all my experience only one seemed to feel any terror—a woman who had done her sister a wrong which it was too late to right.

Something strange and beautiful happens to men and women when they come to the end of the road. All fear, all horror disappears. I have often watched a look of happy wonder dawn in their eyes when they realized this was true. It is all part of the goodness of nature and, I believe, of the illimitable goodness of God.

Recipe for a Happy '48

A "Between You and Me" feature in the Lamoni Chronicle by the editor, Kathryn C. Metz.

In order to help you make '48 a better year, we are passing on a recipe for a Happy New Year that was furnished by a thoughtful friend, F. M. Herring.

Fin picked it up out of "The Gem Box," and it originally appeared in "Magazine Digest." From here on out, the recipe is on its own, when quoted or reprinted.

Are you ready?

"Take twelve fine, full-grown months—see that these are free from old memories of bitterness, rancor, hate, and jealousy. Cleanse them completely from every clinging spite; pick off all specks of pettiness and littleness—in short, see that these months are freed from all the past—have them as fresh and clean as when they first came from the great storehouse of time.

"Cut these months into thirty or thirty-one equal parts. This batch will keep for one year. Do not attempt to make up the whole batch at one time. (So many people spoil the entire lot this way.) Prepare one day at a time as follows:

"Into each day put twelve parts of faith, eleven of patience, ten of courage, nine of work (some people omit this ingredient and spoil the flavor of the rest), eight parts of hope, seven of fidelity, six of liberality, five of kindness, four of rest (leaving this out is like leaving the oil out of the salad), three parts of prayer, two of meditation and one well-selected resolution.

"Then put in about a tablespoon of good spirits, a dash of fun, a pinch of folly, a jigger of laughter, a sprinkling of play and a heaping cupful of good humor.

"Cook thoroughly in a fervent heat, garnish with a few smiles and a sprig of joy, then serve with quietness, unselfishness, and cheerfulness. A happy year is a certainty."

Thank You, God

For every opportunity
To use my mind and hands for thee,
For things thou hast for me to do,
For strength thou lendest to me, too.

For every chance to thus prepare
For thy great work; and do my share
To serve thee in my humble way,
And know thy closeness day by day.

A life without thy love is bleak,
While service brings the peace I seek.
And following in thy selfless ways
Gives deeper meaning to my days.

Louise

THE FIRST AMERICANS: A Pictorial Version of the Book of Mormon pictured especially for children by Henry Anderson.

This interesting and unusual book is the story of the Book of Mormon in cartoon pictures beginning with Lehi's leaving Jerusalem and closing with the finishing of the records by Ether. The cover of the book is in full color. The book itself is black and white and may be used as a color book, as well as a storybook. Something every child will treasure.

50¢ each

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

What Latter Day Saints Believe

WE NOW COME to a consideration of the third of the six first principles of the gospel. Having previously told you what Latter Day Saints believe about faith and repentance, we shall now discuss what Latter Day Saints believe about baptism.

Like all other subjects, the matter of baptism might be approached from a number of different angles—scriptural, historical, social, doctrinal. In the limited space at our disposal, we could not do justice to even one of these aspects, so our survey must necessarily be brief and somewhat sketchy, if we touch upon them all.

What is the necessity of baptism? We answer first that John the Baptist, who came to prepare the way for Christ, commanded it as a preparation for that coming. When Jesus was ready to enter upon his ministry, he taught it by personal example, being baptized of John in the River Jordan. During his ministry, Jesus taught and practiced the ritual of baptism, for the first verses of the fourth chapter of John state that Jesus baptized more disciples than John. In answer to the questions of Nicodemus, Jesus taught, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5. At the close of his earthly ministry, Jesus commanded his disciples: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Matthew 28: 19.

The apostles and the New Testament Church taught and practiced the ordinance or rite of baptism. This is a fact so obvious to anyone familiar with the Book of Acts that it scarcely needs any argument, but we mention a few outstanding examples. On the day of Pentecost, after Peter's stirring sermon to some of the very Jews who had been instrumental in crucifying Jesus, he said, "Repent and be baptized everyone of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."—Acts 2: 38. And the record continues, "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized, and the same day there added unto them about three thousand souls."—Verse 41. After an open vision to convince him that the gospel was to go to the Gentiles as well as the Jews, Peter sought out Cornelius; after hearing and seeing how the Holy Ghost had led Cornelius to Christ, Peter exclaimed, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized?"—Acts 10: 47. After his conversion, Paul was baptized by Ananias (Acts 9: 18). In the sixteenth chapter of Acts is the story of the conversion and baptism of Lydia and her household, and the conversion and baptism of the jailer and his household after an earthquake had freed Paul and Silas. There are many more instances of baptism recounted in the Book of Acts, but these should suffice to make our point, that the apostles and the New Testament church did teach and practice it.

NOW LET US CONSIDER for a moment the purposes to be achieved by this rite of baptism. First, it serves to define what is, and what is not the church. How do you know whether a man is a member of the Masonic order, or the Elks, or the Communist Party, or the Chamber of Commerce? No doubt all of these organizations have some principles of tenets with which you and I could both agree, and perhaps several others upon which we might differ quite radically. Would a simple belief in one principle of Communism make me a Communist? Would occasional attendance at a Chamber of Commerce meeting make me a member of the organization? Would a knowledge of the Masonic burial ritual make me a Mason? The answer to each of these questions is obviously, "No." Each organization sets up its own rules for membership—for discriminating between those who belong and those who do not. Nearly every organization requires some sort of formal and authoritative initiation ceremony, which serves to make final and official the act of the candidate in coming into membership. Baptism is such a ceremony of initiation into the church, the body of Christ.

Baptism is the final and official act which changes our allegiance and our loyalty, centering them henceforth on the kingdom of God. No kingdom can be promoted and expanded and built up by foreigners whose final allegiance is with some other nation or kingdom. No kingdom of God can be built by men whose allegiance and loyalties are still on the side of evil. As we stated last week in our sermon on repentance, it is not enough to foreswear allegiance to evil and try to remain neutral. A man who foreswore allegiance to the country of his birth without becoming naturalized in another, would be a man without a country. A man who forsakes evil must enlist under the banner of the kingdom of God, and become a citizen of that kingdom, or he has no country. Furthermore, when he joins his strength with the strength of others engaged in similar endeavor, and activated by similar motives, his strength is multiplied, and that which he could not have done alone becomes possible to him by reason of his enlistment. One purpose of baptism is to change men's allegiance.

With this shift of allegiance and loyalty, this enlistment by a definite, public act, there comes forgiveness for past sins and errors and omissions. The naturalized citizen is free from the ties of his old allegiance. Old things are put away. With the new allegiance in force, the bondage to sin and the consequences of old sin, are canceled. That is why the apostles so frequently coupled the idea of baptism and the forgiveness of sin, or the washing away of sin. Baptism is for the remission of sins.

About Baptism

BY EVAN A. FRY

THERE ARE THREE necessary and essential requirements for a valid baptism: first, a qualified candidate; second, water; third, authority. To be qualified, a candidate must first have been taught so that he understands the purpose and significance of his act. That is why Jesus commanded his apostles to go and teach all nations. The teaching must come first. It will presumably engender faith in God and a desire for repentance and release from sin. When a candidate has been taught, has placed his faith in God and in the atonement of Christ, and has truly repented of all his sins and made his decision to enlist on the side of right, he is ready for baptism. For this reason, Latter Day Saints believe that baptism should be administered only to persons of sufficient maturity that they are capable of being taught, of repenting, of making choices, and deciding for themselves where they want to place their allegiance.

Second, because the very word baptize means to immerse, rather than to pour or to sprinkle, a valid baptism requires water—sufficient water for the immersion of the candidate. John 3: 23 records that John the Baptist baptized in Aenon, near Salim, because there was much water there. Philip and the eunuch could not attend to the ordinances of baptism until they came to “a certain water,” a roadside stream or pool. There is not a single New Testament record of a baptism being performed in a house. Always the candidate was taken outside to a place where water was available—even at the hour of midnight, as in the case of the jailer whom Paul baptized.

Third is the question of authority, which we have already covered more fully in a former article. Here let us merely state that no official act which is legally binding on another is of any value unless the one so acting has authority. One who administers the rite of baptism must be under the authority of God so to do, or God is not bound.

WHAT IS THE significance of baptism? The very form of the ordinance suggests two significances in addition to those already mentioned or implied. It signifies a death, burial, and resurrection; and it signifies a new birth. When a man is plunged beneath the water, it is a symbol of washing and cleansing; but it is also the symbol of the burial of the old man with his sins and lusts, and a resurrection of a new man who is now alive in Christ. There is also the symbolism of Christ’s death and burial and his resurrection. Paul says in the sixth chapter of Romans: “Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we should walk in newness of life” (verses 3 and 4). And in Colossians, 2: 12, Paul repeats: “Buried with him in baptism, wherein ye also are risen with him.”

Baptism also signifies a new birth. In the third chapter of Galatians, Paul speaks of the law which was a schoolmaster to bring Israel to Christ, and concludes, “For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.” Jesus in his interview with Nicodemus spoke at length of the new birth and concluded, “Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.”—John 3: 5.

Almost daily we encounter the need for and the use of symbols in the ordinary, as well as the extraordinary activities of life. We sew a few scraps of cloth together, and it becomes a flag which men will die to protect. We take a diamond, and by the simple act of placing it on the finger of a certain girl make it the symbol of our faith and hopes and promises. We take a little gold, shape it into a ring, and place it under the engagement ring, and it assumes a sentimental value out of all proportion to its intrinsic value. Who can tell what is the true meaning and significance of the symbol of the cross? Baptism is a symbol—a symbol of forgiveness, of cleansing, of new birth, of death and resurrection.

At important times in our lives we also feel the need of underlining and dignifying what might otherwise be purely ordinary occasions with some kind of meaningful ceremony. Men have devised countless ceremonies—ceremonies of marriage, or naturalization, of graduation, of inauguration, of installation, of initiation, of memorial. We lay cornerstones, and cut tapes to open new bridges, and turn over a spade full of earth at the start of a new building. Baptism is such a ceremony. It answers the need for some such ceremony to announce publicly, and mark officially the entrance upon a new kind of life.

PERHAPS SOME CYNICS will ask, “How does baptism forgive sin?” The answer is that sometimes it doesn’t if the heart of the candidate is not right. The change is within, not without. We might ask another question to answer the first:

"How does the formality of an oath and the judge's signature on an official document make a citizen out of an alien?" Sometimes they don't. The change must first have taken place in the mind and heart of the candidate. But it still takes the official oath and signature to make a man a citizen. Citizenship is incomplete without them; and the official ceremony does serve to give legal notice to the public that henceforth this man is no longer an alien, but a citizen. How do a few words and a prayer from a minister make a man and woman husband and wife? In some respects, they don't; they cannot. But a man and woman are not legally married unless they do go through some such ceremony in which they recognize the social significance of what they are doing and promise to assume the social responsibilities which go with the married state.

So, in conclusion, let us say that baptism has a social value. It is the official act of the kingdom and church of God receiving a new citizen into fellowship. The change must be within the candidate. Baptism alone cannot effect it. But without baptism, as without naturalization, citizenship is incomplete, and there is no social recognition or participation in the change which has taken place within.

And now, why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.

The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse

(Continued from page 7).

startled the world and brought upon himself and his followers the most bitter persecution by saying that God had spoken again, and that, as a result of the coming of an angel, the gospel in all its fullness and power was being re-established upon the earth. The first horseman—the restoration of the gospel of Christ.

(To be continued.)

LETTERS

From a Saint in Holland

I take my pen to write my testimony of my experience since I became a Latter Day Saint. I am twenty-six years old, and I was baptized when I was eight. All the time of my life, God has blessed me in many ways. My testimony is that God lives, and that he will help his children in their needs. I am married since April 10, 1947; my wife is a member, too. We are glad to serve our Heavenly Father. Very, very often we think about the members in America, and our desire is to be with you in the country of Joseph.

L. HERINGA.

Koningslaan
Zwaagwesteinde Fr.
Holland

Missionary Contacts in Germany

If you have friends or relatives living in Germany who are possible missionary prospects, please send me their names, addresses, and any other information which may be helpful in getting acquainted with them. We would like to know as much as possible about these people, so that we can index their names and call on them as time and travel will permit.

EUGENE A. THEYS.

Avenue Concordia and Annastraat
Rotterdam, Holland

Asks Prayers for Sorrowing Parents

I would like to suggest that the Saints pray for the parents of the children who were killed recently in the train-sled accident in Ohio. Although these people may not be members, they certainly deserve our united prayers. It may help, also, to send them cards or letters. The driver of the tractor is Jesse Wyse; the parents of the four children who were killed are Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Grieser of Archbold, Ohio.

Maud Davis

Glencoe, Oklahoma

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.—On December 7, Pearl Peregoy and Cheryl Ann Bender were baptized by Elder Blaine Bender. The confirmation service was held on December 21, Seventy George Njeim and Elder Bender officiating.

Briefs

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—

The choir is holding regular rehearsals; recently robes were bought for all the members, adding to the beauty and dignity of the services. The Live Wire Class is concentrating on missionary work and helping the unfortunate of the community. League projects include worship services and wholesome recreation, which has attracted many nonmembers. The women's department and adult class have sponsored numerous activities throughout the year to raise money for the branch budget.

KLAMATH FALLS, OREGON.—

A mission has been organized in Klamath Falls under the leadership of Ted Schuld. The organization meeting took place on December 14, at which time District President Jack Verhei and Elder Miles Whiting were present. Services are held in the Shasta school building.

NELSONVILLE, OHIO.—

The women's department held its annual Christmas party on December 9. Following the dinner, a program was presented which featured special music and the story of how Christmas is celebrated in other countries. The party ended with an exchange of gifts.

SHERRILL, NEW YORK.—

The Saints of Sherrill were saddened by the death of Margaret Galliher, who died on November 25. She was a teacher in the women's department and will be greatly missed. William Huffman, another loyal worker, passed away in December.

LONE STAR, ALABAMA.—

A Christmas play, "Follow the King," was presented on the evening of December 24 by the young people. Music was provided by the choir. The Leaguers met on the following Friday night to elect officers for the first six months of 1948.

TUNNEL HILL, ILLINOIS.—

At the business meeting held on December 21, Ray Webb was elected to succeed C. H. Simmons as pastor. Elder Simmons, who had served in this capacity for twenty-five years, moved to another city several months ago. A series of meetings were conducted by Missionary William Guthrie from December 21 to January 4.

Report on Missions Abroad Project

By F. M. McDowell

Reported to Presiding Bishop on or before November 30, 1947, $2,670.11.

$25,000.00
by October 1, 1948.

$20,000.00
by April 11-18, 1948
Restoration Festival

$2,670.11
by November 30, 1947 (amount reported to office of Presiding Bishop).

THE MISSIONS ABROAD PROJECT was officially approved by the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, and the Quorum of Twelve only upon and after the urgent solicitation of the committee of the General Zion's League Council, which met in April, 1947. This council later unanimously approved the project. It is, therefore, a task (an opportunity) which lies at the door of Zion's League officers and members throughout the church. This is a Zion's League Project—the largest and the best and the most significant ever undertaken by our young people. The hour has struck for action.

The books of the Presiding Bishopric indicate that on November 30, 1947, the following districts or stakes were represented as a whole, or funds were sent in by one or more of the branches in said districts:

Independence, Missouri; Lamoni, Iowa; Gulf States; Arizona; Northern California; Southern California; Eastern Colorado; Idaho; Central Illinois; Nauvoo, Illinois; Southern Indiana; Northwestern Iowa; Southwestern Iowa; Southwestern Kansas; Maine; Central Michigan; Northern Michigan; Southern Michigan; Flint-Port Huron, Michigan; Minnesota; Rich Hill, Missouri; St. Louis, Missouri; Western Montana; Northeastern Nebraska; Southern Nebraska; New York; North Dakota; Northwestern Ohio; Western Oklahoma; Southwestern Texas; Oregon; Seattle, Washington; Spokane, Washington; West Virginia; Alberta, Canada; Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario; Northern Saskatchewan; and Southern Saskatchewan.

A few of the Leagues reporting in this way have made a most commendable showing. Among these we note Independence (city-wide); Sacramento, California; Hagerman, Idaho; Pisgah, Iowa; Woodbine, Iowa; Dow City, Iowa; Jonesport, Maine; Alto, Michigan; Fargo, North Dakota; Portland, Oregon; and Alberta District. Several others have done very well indeed. Others are just off to a good start.

A vast majority, however, had not reported funds to the Presiding Bishopric office by November 30, 1947.

A total of $2,670.11 from branches and districts reporting is an encouraging showing. It represents, however, only a beginning. Much more than that has undoubtedly been raised, but reports have been slow coming in. We suggest, therefore:

1. That all districts and branches which have not already launched this program get busy at once.
2. That districts and branches which have made a commendable beginning make plans to follow through at once.
3. That all funds received through the activities of the Zion's League for this project be turned over immediately to the local or district representative of the bishop's office, and that such representatives report promptly to the Presiding Bishopric all funds received.

Remember, the goal which was set by the young people themselves was $25,000.00. This goal must be reached or exceeded on or before October 1, 1948.

The church-wide Restoration Festival, which has been set for the week of April 11-18, provides a most splendid opportunity for a climax in this Missions Abroad Project. A goal of $20,000.00 by that time has been suggested. The combined efforts of Zion's Leagues throughout the church can and will do the job. The hour has struck for action. Come on—let's get going!

available again

Apostasy, Reformation, and Restoration

By J. A. KOEHLER

10 for $1.00

25 for $2.00

50 for $3.75

100 for $6.75

Herald Publishing House
Independence, Missouri

The Difficult Years

By MARGARET W. GIBSON

THESE IS NO greater responsibility than that of rearing children through infancy, childhood, and "the difficult years," to maturity. The happiness of caring for the young, sharing their confidences, and directing their growing spirits cannot be put into words. Nor can the heartaches caused when they turn away in unwise and dangerous paths—be put into words either.

There is a saying, common among mothers, "When they are little, they step upon our feet. When they are older, they step upon our hearts." And sometimes they do. But they don't mean to. In their rapid growth, they stumble over more than just us and their own hands and feet. They fall over life. The difficult years—those years from twelve to maturity, are a problem for them as well as for us.

We mothers face them with prayer—but it takes more than prayer alone. We are to blame for some of our troubles and for theirs, too.

An adolescent desperately desires to be "popular with the gang." It is the age when he would rather be asked to join a High School Club than almost anything in the world. Nine out of ten aren't asked, and they are heartbroken about it. In most cases, they suffer partly because they feel they have "let their parents down."

Parents can ease the tension by tactfully mentioning how unimportant these things are, rather than how important. I know of a mother who stressed the fact to her daughter that she expected her to make one of the two clubs in high school. The child was high strung, nervous, ill at ease. She didn't make a club and, as a result of her mother's attitude, nearly had a nervous breakdown.

What do such things matter? Nothing at all, or less than nothing. It does matter that one's child is happy, well-balanced, and unselfish, and that he feels secure and loved. Mothers can help most of all, but it can't be done overnight.

IF A HOME is open to the children of the neighborhood from the time one's family is small, there will be little trouble during the difficult years. The same gang that made mud pies in the back yard when the youngsters were four, and popped corn in the kitchen when they were nine, will drink pop, drape themselves over the easy chairs, and raid the icebox during the "terrible teens." The mother who has read Pinocchio to the eight-year-olds will find the sixteen-year-olds of the neighborhood talking over their deeper problems with her. At first, they may talk them over in her presence, but soon they discuss them with her.

Young people can be and often are arrogant to the point of distraction, but their attitude often changes from arrogance to humility. We have to hold ourselves in check when they tell us that they don't belong to the "gay nineties." A grin will sometimes tide us over those spots. In a few years, they'll come back with, "What a brat I was when I was a kid!"

They have to learn to stand on their feet and, in the process, they think they "know it all." They don't, of course, but neither did we. By and large, if we are honest with ourselves, we must, pretty often, admit that we receive from our teen-agers about what we gave, at their age, to our own parents.

There may come a time when our youngsters will go to other mothers or to an older boy or girl for advice. This may hurt, but it is natural. They don't very often go to someone whose ideals are too different from our own—if our friends are people of similar standards, and if their circle of friends has made our home a rendezvous.

Among our friends, ideals for teen-agers, and for any other "agers" for that matter, are about the same. While our sons and daughters may discuss things with Mary and Bill's folks, Mary and Bill are discussing the same problems with us. Parents can see some problems coming up, and can get together on them before they become acute.

That is one great advantage Latter Day Saint mothers have—we think the same way on many vital issues. If Mary's mother believes the same as I do, my daughter gets pretty sound advice, and the idea gradually penetrates that maybe I'm not so old-fashioned after all.

WE DON'T AGREE with those who blame all juvenile delinquency upon parents. Some very fine persons have been heartbroken by their children. But parents are responsible for most juvenile delinquency. If a mother values new furniture so much that she goes out to earn it and is not at home when her children need her, she is asking for trouble.

If our homes are too orderly for the teen-agers to be welcome, they'll go somewhere else, and may God pity us if they go to the wrong places. It really takes less money in the long run to keep an inviting refrigerator for youngsters, than it does to continually furnish money for gasoline, movies, and other entertainment. Of course, all their fun won't be in homes. They go to shows, parties and high school activities. But a surprising amount of their time will be spent in somebody's house.

A wise mother won't be present too much. Her part can be done beforehand. A chocolate cake, some apples, some driftwood powder for the fireplace, some good magazines—and pretty soon there will be boys sprawled over the floors, and girls in jeans on the chairs. Bedlam will break loose, but happy the mother who, sitting sedately in another room, hears the call, "Hey, Beautiful, we want you to come out and settle a highly scientific problem!"

SOMETIMES, PERFECTLY well-meaning parents long to have their homes a gathering place for their children's friends, but those friends stay away. A mother once was grieved at this and scolded her children because they "weren't liked." She was quite unaware of the fact that she, herself, was the cause. She gossiped to her children's friends about each other, and they all decided to just stay away, as they themselves didn't want to be victims of her tongue. When asked why they didn't go to Ted's house, they said, "Ted would be all right if it weren't for his mother. She's lost him every friend he had." And it was true.

Parents must keep confidences. If they don't, that ends the faith of their children in them.

There come times when we are almost at our wit's end to know what to do. We never dreamed that Johnny would do the thing he did. Probably poor Johnny, up in his room, didn't dream he'd do it either, and he feels terrible about it. Because he does, he's about as approachable as a chestnut burr. This is definitely a time to be careful. The wrong word can break a child's future, and ours too. This is, by all means, a time to pray earnestly and tread carefully.

ONE MOTHER petitioned, "Lord, this situation is absolutely beyond me. You've got to tell me what to do, because I don't know. How can I get to his heart?"

As she knelt there, in utter subjection, the words came to her over and over again. "Go upstairs and kiss him goodnight! Go upstairs and kiss him goodnight." For years she had felt that he didn't want her to show him much affection. He was a young man, now. But she went upstairs and knocked on the door.

"What di' you want?" he muttered.

"I just want to kiss you good-night," she replied as she turned the doorknob.

In a moment, the weeping boy flung his arms about her, and a torrent of bottled-up emotions found ease in tears. Then he talked, face to face, of the things that were in his heart.

How she might have helped him all along if she had only known!

Somehow, "Don't do that. It isn't nice," or "It isn't wise," doesn't go very far with young people. There are plenty of honest-to-goodness examples that we can point out—the unfortunate girl who held herself too cheaply—the boy who "could take it or leave it alone"—the child that died because someone drove too fast. And in our own lives, there are examples which have taught us some lessons the hard way, too.

WE PARENTS OWE OUR children adequate sex information, but this will do them no good unless we have given and continue to give them a strong spiritual background and a sense of the presence of God in their lives. Sex information alone cannot save them. Never, in all history, has sex information been so freely and widely distributed, and never has there been so much immorality. To sit back smugly and say, "I've taught my children the facts, I've done my duty," is to fool ourselves. Knowledge is excellent, but unless it is coupled with character and self-control, it isn't enough. We need the help of God Almighty to live decently through these days.

There are times when we must be firm. In the long run, our children respect us when we are firm in those things which we know and they know are right and wise for them.

Let us not forget that these are the years when our boys and girls "dream dreams and see visions." Nothing is impossible to them. Their plans are beautiful beyond beauty. They really want to scale the utmost heights. We can show those heights—if not always to our own, to someone else's children.

A certain young man was known about town as a "necker." Talking to him didn't seem to do much good; the people who advised him were old fogys and not "modern." One day a woman told him a story—a true one about people he knew, and a little incident of transcendent idealism that was beautiful in their courtship. When she happened to look up, the tears were rolling down his face. "That's the way I'd like it to be," he said.

We must be what we want our children to be. They may think we're old-fashioned, but they want us, with all their souls, to be good and true and honorable. When a child's parents let him down, he has nowhere to turn for human strength.

A SCHOOLTEACHER who loved her pupils was amazed at some of the things her high school boys told her. How those youngsters worried about their parents! "My dad can't go on this way. It's breaking my mother's heart. I've begged her to leave him before her mind and health crack!"

"Do you pray about it?" she asked gently.

"All the time," he answered desperately.

He was failing in his schoolwork. Why shouldn't he? His world was crumbling under him.

Two brothers in high school were good pals but of different ages. They had friends in their own age groups and chummed with them. Both were rather shy, but brilliant students. One evening, headlines in the local paper said that their father was being

(Continued on page 22.)

- - - a home column feature - - -

South American Journey

PART III

BY FRANCES E. PEARSE

Soloma

ON SATURDAY, the men went to call on the mayor. Having been in town three days and not having been visited by the mayor was unusual, but there was a little matter of his having three trees cut down in front of the church one day while the padre was away, without getting permission. So he may have been in doubt about his welcome.

After some discussion about the call being good diplomacy, the men set off down the street and entered the patio in which the mayor's office is situated. Once in the patio, which was filled with numerous nondescript characters, there was no turning back, although they were a bit disconcerted to find the mayor had five other visitors. Padre Mac seemed a little concerned as to who these men might be and the purpose of their visit. Nothing daunted him though, and he and Harry and Alfred marched directly in the office and the delegation stood. Did I say an office! This was a small dingy room with two open doorways, no windows, and the furniture consisted of a rickety table and several broken chairs.

The delegation looked smartly dressed in khaki uniforms. The mayor was unshaven, unkempt, and dressed in clothes that were several sizes too small, a dirty shirt, unbuttoned collar, and tie awry. Padre Mac introduced his guests, and there was the usual shaking of hands and patting of backs, as the mayor looked over his new visitors with sharp, distrustful eyes.

After a little discussion in Spanish and English, the men found the other visitors were medical students from the University in Guatemala

City; they were also teachers. Naturally the talk turned to the possibilities of establishing a government dispensary and health center, also possible sites for a landing field. The medical students seemed interested in what Padre Mac was doing for these people.

They left the mayor, feeling they had made a good impression and apparently he was pleased as was evidenced in his coming to the dispensary the next day to have Alfred pull some teeth.

That evening, the students came to talk with Padre Mac and the doctors about conditions they found. We felt perhaps they wouldn't be too keen about the service, as one said—"It's dirt and fleas, and nothing to eat but beans and tortillas and tortillas and beans!"

SUNDAY IS MARKET day in Soloma, so there was a large number of people in the church, not only from the village, but from other villages and the surrounding country. Men in their black blanket coats and women with babies bobbing up and down in a shawl on their backs, small children who ran in and out all through the services, some sitting on the benches and others kneeling on the dirt floor beside flower petals and lighted candles in the Indian custom. They were interested in the Americanos, and many glanced shyly at us all during the service. There can be no denying the deep sincerity of the Indians' faith, whether it follows accepted forms or not.

Padre Mac's pisoti came to church also. If you should wonder about the pisoti, he is a small animal belonging to the anteater family and somewhat resembles our racoon. He peeked in through the side door, then bolted across the floor, nipping a toe and heel here and there, and then, much to everyone's amusement, he climbed up one of the altars and pushed all the flowers on the floor before Oscar could catch him and put him out. But he did want to come to church, for we soon saw him scampering across the floor again and climbing another altar before Oscar had him by the back of his neck. He presents a shy, laughable pose when he puts his front paws up across his eyes as though he were hiding.

After church, Helene and I went to the market with Fernando's (the carpenter's) wife, while the men saw their patients again. For there were some who had come many, weary miles not only to worship and trade, but to see the medicos that day.

The market was interesting, as are all Guatemalan markets, not only for its display of produce and handicraft, but because it is the big event in the Indian's life—the Indian Society. We threaded our way behind Fernando's wife, stopping to buy bananas and oranges from the coast, avacados from Lake Atitlan (two cents for the large ones), a head of cabbage, some onions from Solala, and a few tiny potatoes that looked as though they had been dug too soon. All of these purchases Fernando's wife carried in a flat basket on her head. We stopped to ask the name of different fruits and vegetables, but we were not nearly as curious about their produce as they were about the senoras coming to their market!

Late that afternoon, we walked to what Padre Mac pleases to call his "driving range." Out through the patio in back of the home, down a long hill, and over a bridge, we walked to a large, level field where some boys were playing soccer. It's a nice driving range with the mountains for a background and the soccer uprights serving as a yardage marker.

We have roofing bees on the farms here, but in Soloma they have thatching parties. On that walk, we saw a dozen or more men thatching the roof of an adobe hut. When we returned, they were almost through, and the men bewailed the fact they had left their cameras at home.

THAT EVENING we made plans for the morrow. We were to leave early, and that meant the bags must be ready for the mozos, and breakfast and a lunch had to be packed bright and early. It seemed as though we had just gone to sleep when Alfred and the padre were outside our windows singing—"Oh, what a beautiful morning!" We were sleepy and much too cold to get up—but it was a "must." In the middle of dressing, a voice said, "And now the lights go out." We decided someone was being facetious much too early in the morning, but no—the dynamo had putt-putted to a stop and had to be coaxed to run again.

Breakfast over, lunch ready, mozos on the trail, Mariano waiting with our horses, and the mayor ready to send up the rockets so everyone would know we were leaving, we put on our jackets and our gay scarves that were gifts from Padre Mac, took our whips and were on our horses ready for the long trip over the hills and through the valleys to Toquia.

When, whoosh—bang—the mayor lighted the rockets! We had to hold our horses, and we decided he must be sleepy, too, for the rockets instead of going upward traced a crazy course much too close to the thatched roofs. Anyone that wasn't already up would be after that!

With many adios and a few tears, we were off down the road to the covered bridge and the blue-misted highland. The children followed along up the rocky path in their bare feet, looking cold and forlorn, but they would not turn back until we were at the top of the hill. Again, there were adios and our eyes filled with tears as we watched them going down the hill, turning often to wave their last goodbys.

We took one long look at Padre Mac's Green Valley with the river like a silver ribbon threading its way through the green fields, then wandering off to another valley, smoke curling out from under the eaves of the huts, and the cross on the church beautifully white in the morning sun. We turned our horses, and in a few moments Soloma was gone. We were leaving the valley and starting homeward to our own world—a world that still seemed far away.

IT WAS A LOVELY day—warm sun, blue sky, and the time passed all too quickly. We came to San Juan Ixcoy—the village where the mozos met us with the chairs—then to the little stream where we had washed our feet. Harry and Alfred arrived at the top of the mountain first and, from a vantage point, were waiting with their cameras to photograph the rest of us as we came around the last of the curves. We chose a spot overlooking the valley to enjoy our lunch and, when we were through, mounted our horses and were on our way again—singing and talking together.

In some of the valleys the fog crept in, but we left it behind as we made our way to the heights again—then dismounted and led the horses down the steep grades for it was much faster than riding. Soon we were on the last peak and ready to start the downgrade to Chemal, Harry and Alfred still ahead. Padre Mac saw them just as they were taking the wrong trail down to the valley—a trail that would have led them to a point a great distance from where Gilberto and the car were to be waiting. So he shouted to them, and we saw them turn on the right trail. We hurried the horses, for it was raining a little, and soon we were back at the spot where so short a time ago we had started on our adventure. I'm sure it was with some regret in each heart that our time with Padre Mac had been so short.

The mozos were there with our luggage. It's amazing the time they make coming over those trails with such a load on their backs. Of course, they do not follow the trail—they have their own short cuts.

There were fires burning in the little hut, and we stepped close to them to dry off a little before walking up to the car. We had smiled when Padre Mac warned us that a car would never look so good to us, but now we realized he spoke the truth. We climbed in, sank down in the seats with a sigh and said, "What luxury!" Soon everything was ready, and we were off down the road at what seemed a terrific pace after having ridden the horses. Before we realized it, we were driving up to the door of Father Allie's mission in Huehuetenango. We needn't tell you how wonderful those hot showers were.

WE DROVE BACK TO Chiantla to Father Homrocky's for dinner and an evening of good talk and laughter. We were all relaxed to the point that one of us sitting upright in a chair dropped off into a sound sleep. In spite of the laughter and fun and good friendship, in each of our minds was the ever-present thought—tonight we step out from our looking glass back into a world of time and reality. Tomorrow we have goodbys to say to these men, and we did not agree with the phrase, "Parting is such sweet sorrow."

We said goodnight to Father Homrocky and were on our way in the rain and darkness to Huehuetenango and a short visit with Father Allie, Brother Felix, and Father Connor.

And then to bed—knowing that all too soon morning would come.

END.

Nature seems to welcome those triumphs which are won over her by obedience to her laws.

"And Having Ears, Hear Not"

BY BARBARA McFARLANE

AND THE LORD said to Joseph Smith, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." The keynote of the Restoration Movement was voiced in these words. A challenge was sounded, too—a challenge to truly "hear him." And today, 157 years after the initial message to the founder of our church, those words are still ringing—holding up the only hope for a fast-decaying world. "This is my beloved Son, hear him."

We, as young people, are privileged to stand on the threshold of a new year, perhaps one of the most significant years in the history of the world. The decisions made in the U. N., the policies toward Russia, the prejudices formed in 1948 may determine global history for many decades. This year, we must answer the summons of Tennyson, "Come, my friends, 'tis not too late to seek a newer world; for my purpose holds to sail beyond the sunset." A large task, you say, this seeking of a newer world. Yes, but we cannot, we must not shirk our duty; too much is depending on us.

Most of us have received good educations, but we are not finished. Even if our plans do not include higher schooling, we must not stop obtaining knowledge. Our minds must be continually alert if we would keep abreast of the times, and hardening of the intellect is sure death. Aim high. We may not reach our El Dorado, for, as the city of gold was always just over the next mountain, so should our goals be just a little beyond our grasp. Robert Louis Stevenson believed "To travel hopefully is a better thing than to arrive, and the true success is to labor."

Above all, we must be humble, cognizant of the higher power that moves in us and in the universe.

We have been concerned with man, the individual, but in the small world of today, a complete picture must include man, the aggregate. We are living in an atomic age, an era that offers us little in security but gives us this tremendous power. The times challenge us to determine the course we will follow, for men must live together if they would live at all.

"Control of the atomic bomb will not keep the peace of the world. The heart and mind of man must be educated." These words came from an experienced man who had seen the inhuman cruelty of a nation of educated minds. He spoke after living under the rule of the Japanese in the Philippine Islands. We spent $2,000,000,000 in the United States alone to perfect this weapon of destruction, and now the same effort must be put into educating the peoples of the world for the greater responsibility that is theirs. We can teach the physics of atomic power, but unless we impart the philosophy, our efforts are in vain. As we have the mind within our grasp, so also have we the heart if we are only willing to recognize it.

True, many people of the world are labeled Christian, but they are Christian in name only. So steeped in selfishness and hate is the structure of universal society that their ears have never been opened to that message of love. "The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not."

Young people, standing at the incipency of a new year, we must open our ears to the philosophy of Him whose message was "Peace on earth, good will toward men." His is the only way to establish the "New Heaven and the New Earth wherein may dwell righteousness." We must lift our ears from the whisperings of cupidity, hate, and selfishness to the message of the Restoration; we must accept its challenge in the light of love and world-wide brotherhood. And if we choose the illuminated way, we are promised "That as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God."

His Majesty's Loyal Opposition

The British seem to have learned the secret of safeguarding true Democracy. According to the Manchester Guardian, the House of Commons proposes to give the leader of "His Majesty's Loyal Opposition" a salary of £2000 a year. To understand what this means, imagine the Republican majority of the House of Representatives putting through a bill giving an official salary to the Democratic floor leader. Why is the proposal made? Obviously, says the Guardian, the leader of the Opposition has "very important duties." He must oppose the Government's plans. That takes research, secretarial assistance, piles up mailing expenses. Therefore the Conservatives, to make sure they will be efficiently opposed—and both sides of all important questions thoroughly presented—finance the opposers.

New Horizons

The Trouble-Shooter

Some Facts on Fasting

Question:

A nonmember friend has asked me what it means to fast. Should one abstain from all food and drink during a designated period of time? What results can be expected of fasting?

Answer: By C. B. Hartshorn

This question has two aspects: definition and results. It is a serious and important subject. Serious, because it talks about putting restraints on appetites and self-indulgence. Important, because an understanding of it carries potentialities of great blessings.

People should consider more the results to be obtained and debate less upon the terms and varieties of fasts. This shift in viewpoint might bring a great spiritual advance throughout the church.

We will reverse the usual order and discuss the result aspect first. Much of our religion involves subjective values. What goes on inside ourselves is highly important. This may sound individualistic and selfish, but it is not so intended. The strength of the whole is determined by the strength of its several parts.

WE EXPECT THESE RESULTS

From fasting we have a right to expect a sense of personal mastery; the sublimation of the material, physical, and temporal aspects of life to the spiritual and eternal. Paul saw our day when men should be "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." Physical indulgence can easily become idolatrous. One writer of school textbooks said of adult Americans, "They are digging their graves with their teeth." To fast for one meal and then eat twice as much the next would only be "a form of godliness," without any sense of personal mastery over the flesh.

Another result which can be expected is physical vigor and health. Not that abstinence from food guarantees health. Unwise fasting might even impair it. The Oriental idea of asceticism (bodily punishment) is not supported by Christian Scriptures. Paul said, "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection."—I Corinthians 9: 27. Daniel and the three Hebrew boys who declined the king's meat and wine had the same idea. They were "fairer and fatter in flesh" at the end of their ten-day test. The Word of Wisdom (Section 86) counsels us to avoid some things and use others sparingly. It was "given for a principle with promise." The promise made contains assurances of health, strength, and wisdom.

Another result we expect by observing the command to fast and pray is spiritual enlightenment, a quality of spirit denied to those who do not make the effort to bring their bodies under control. In support of this proposition, we could introduce testimony and history (Scripture). If you want to know the beneficial results of fasting, enter into it with a determined purpose and prayer. All it costs is sincerity and sacrifice or self-denial. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."—Matthew 16: 25. Here is a challenge without heroics. The way of the cross is the way of the Ascension to the Father, but it is also the way of self-discipline.

Among the many experiences recorded in the Scriptures is this concerning the sons of Mosiah: "They had given themselves to much prayer, and fasting, therefore they had the spirit of prophecy and revelation, and when they taught, they taught with power and authority, even as with the power and authority of God."—Alma 12: 5. This is so clear and direct as to need no comment. It is not an isolated experience but can be duplicated among both former and Latter Day Saints.

WHAT IS FASTING?

Some help has also been asked in defining the term. Particularly, the questioner wishes to know if one should fix a period during which to abstain from all food and drink. That surely would be fasting. To abstain from some foods for a period would also be acceptable fasting. It should be voluntary and an expression of one's devotion to come within the meaning of the term. The dictionary, as well as the Scriptures, supports this answer. Daniel said he "ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth" for three weeks of his fasting (Daniel 10: 2-14). More recently the Lord has said that on the Lord's day, "Let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer."—Section 59: 3.

Let us observe caution here. "The letter killeth but the spirit giveth life." Our partial fasts may easily become so formal as to be mockery. Jesus condemned as hypocritical certain practices so that persons "may appear unto men to fast" (Matthew 6: 17).

Many of the notable fasts of record are described as cases of totally abstaining from food and drink. (See Exodus 34: 28; Esther 4: 16; Luke 4: 2.) Our blessings in spiritual things are much like the things we buy—worth just about what we pay for them. There is no bargain counter for spiritual things. The results we get from fasting, prayer, service, and worship depend on sincerity, persistence, and on sacrificial devotion.

We are fond of quoting James 1: 5, "if any man lack wisdom . . ." but seldom do we mention verses 6 and 7. As a concluding thought let us notice these: "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." Some happy experiences come to us for the asking. If we would enjoy some of the deeper and richer things of the kingdom, let us remind ourselves of Jesus' reply to the seventies who wanted to know why they lacked power: "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."

The Difficult Years

(Continued from page 17.)

brought to court, accused of theft by his employer. The two boys, shy anyway, were pitiably so after that. They avoided their friends and devoted themselves to their books. They hardly looked at anyone. They waited for each other after classes and went home together. The father was cleared of the charge later, but during those few days, the family suffered agony of spirit.

Adolescence is a wonderful time of life, but it's a dangerous time. It is a time which, taken rightly, can lead to endless happiness. Or it can bring misery and heartbreak. It depends almost entirely upon us parents:

Let us be true, for there are those who trust us,

Let us be pure, for there are those who care!

Let us be humble, for we know our weakness;

Let us be brave, for there is much to dare!

Announcement

A New Pamphlet for Women's Classes

The General Department of Women is pleased to announce that a new pamphlet, Through Days of Preparation, by Mrs. T. W. Bath, women's leader of the Spring River District, is now available. Sister Bath has given much time and thought to the preparation of these lessons. The women of the church are familiar with her two previous works, True Values in Life Today and Leadership for Women's Work and will welcome a new one of equal merit.

The pamphlet includes six lessons, but the writer suggests that each one be divided into two or three parts. The lesson subjects are: "The Golden Now," "The Hand of Mother," "Truer Parenthood," "Better Children," "Happier Homes," and "Purer Society."

Address orders to the General Department of Women, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and your copies will be mailed promptly. The price of each pamphlet is 35c.

It is only when the cold season comes that we know the pine and cypress to be evergreens.—Chinese proverb, quoted by Norma Ann Kirkendall.

PRICE CHANGES

Effective with the Third Quarter, there will be a number of price changes on quarterly materials.

These price changes will appear on the next church school order blank which will be sent to church school workers in February.

●
Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

P. S.

* Campus Stuff

We have a loyal Graceland alumnus on our Herald Staff. This year he has a lovely daughter attending there. Expenses have sent him out in search of extra jobs. "I'm working her way through college," he explains.

On her side, the girl is enjoying herself in a fine way, especially Dr. Cheville's class in Religion. "Dad," she wrote home with a recent appeal for extra funds, "you'd ought to get a load of this stuff. I'm saving all my class notes for you!" The father, who is an elder with a fine record of volunteer church service, finds his daughter's concern for his spiritual condition highly entertaining. "Probably she's right. No doubt I do need some more of it!"

* Politesse

Put this one down in your Dale Carnegie book: Never try to joke with a man about his own work or occupation. It is deadly serious to him. Treat it humorously, and you lose friends and make people difficult to live with.

If you must have a joke, let it be about yourself. That kind always goes over best anyway. The great comedian, Eddie Cantor, has become wealthy and famous by turning all his jokes against himself. He is the butt of every jibe in his shows, the dumb victim of every trick, the weakling who always gets the worst of it. It is hard on the ego, but how it pays!

* How Are Your PR?

Everybody has PR. This is no popular disease. It simply means "Public Relations"—the way you get along with your fellow men.

When men are elevated to positions of responsibility and trust, and when many persons seek them, they are often worn and tired, and must take short ways to deal with people, get rid of bores, and accomplish some work. They must be careful not to become impatient, gruff, or rude. A mediocre man may be grouchy; a truly big man will be gentle and patient.

A noted preacher called our office by phone. We had observed a deterioration of his manners in recent months. This time it was a little worse. The switchboard operator had tears in her eyes as she closed the key at the end of the conversation. "Was that really Brother —?" she asked. Regrettably I admitted it was. "I can never take his sermons seriously again. He was very cruel," was her concluding statement. This brother doesn't know it, but he has already undermined the power of his ministry with many humble people. He may awake too late and find it gone.

There is only one way to keep our PR in good condition: that is to love the people, without pretense and without limit. All the manners in the world will fail without that love, for the true feelings always show through the veneer. If you depend on manners, you must police yourself at ten thousand points. It is all solved by a single vigilance—love. "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love." No, not in this work nor in any other good work. The secret of PR is love.

We're in a friendly place . . . folks come in to get warm and to get two nickels for a dime so they can feed the hungry parking meters outside. New friends and old drop in from out of town . . . people come in to see our plant and they come in just to pass the time of day. We like to have them and feel that this is all a very nice part of being the church publishing house. We like to extend the spirit of brotherly love which exists through our offices and production plant to include all the fine people who come to see us too.

BULLETIN BOARD

Old Books Available

Journals of History , full set, bound, two years in a volume, 18 years in all.....	60.00
Tullidge, Life of Joseph the Prophet	25.00
Journal of Discourses , by B. Y. and others.....	20.00
Millennial Star , volume 7.....	15.00
Divine Authority , by Orson Pratt.....	15.00
Whitmer's Address (reprint).....	5.00
Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism , D. H. Bays.....	5.00
Evening and Morning Star (first publication of the church).....	5.00
Songs, Poems, Notes, and Correspondence , R. C. Evans.....	4.00
Why I Left the Latter Day Saint Church (paper), R. C. Evans.....	.50
Presidency and Priesthood , W. H. Kelley.....	4.00
Ruins Revisited , Walker.....	3.00
Higher Powers of Man , by F. M. Smith.....	2.50
Memoirs of W. W. Blair	2.00
Hedges' Elements of Logic , 1831 (basic book of rules).....	2.00
Wesleyan Song Book , words only. (This book contains old songs, often quoted "Almighty God of Love, Set Up the Attracting Sign," and "Summon Whom Thou Dost Approve as Messengers Divine").....	2.00
Smucker's History of the Mormons	3.00
Mormon Delusion , Montgomery.....	3.00
Lamb's Golden Bible	3.00
Mormonism Exposed , by Kirby.....	3.00
Mormonism Exposed , by Hancock.....	3.00
Women of Mormonism , by Forseth.....	2.00
Beadle's History and Crimes of Mormonism (needs re-binding).....	2.00
Christian System	2.50
Christian Baptist	3.00
Rice-Campbell Debate	3.00
Men of Yesterday	2.50
Grafton's Life of Campbell	2.50
Living Oracles	1.50

Most of these books are in fairly good condition. Anyone interested in any of them may send cash to S. S. Smith, 1011 South Main Street, Independence, Missouri, and the books will be mailed, post paid, at the listed price.

Books Wanted

Mrs. C. Wedderstrand, 1623 South Thirtieth Street, Kansas City 3, Kansas, wants to purchase copies of Daniel Macgregor's Marvelous Work and a Wonder and J. S. Roth's The Gospel Messenger.

The Southern Magazine Agency, 410 Magnolia Avenue, Orlando, Florida, wishes to purchase a copy of Kelley's Presidency and Priesthood and the Foscutt-Shinn Discussion.

Wants Church Publications for Missionary Use

Jessie M. Bailey, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, will welcome Stepping Stones and Heralds for November and December, 1947, and tracts for use in missionary work.

New York-Philadelphia District Conference

The New York-Philadelphia District Conference will be held January 31 and February 1 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (corner of Howard and Ontario Streets). Apostles D. T. Williams, C. G. Mesley, and G. G. Lewis will be present. On Saturday, a prayer service will be held at 4 p.m. and preaching at 7:30. Sunday's activities will include a priesthood meeting at 8:45 a.m.; preaching at 9:45; Communion at 11; a business meeting at 2:30 p.m.; and preaching at 7.

THOMAS M. CARR,
District President.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Gesner Garber that she may be healed of a mastoid infection.

Mrs. Chauncey Werner, 3709 Pennsylvania Street, Gary, Indiana, requests prayers that, if it is God's will, she may be healed of arthritis and a heart ailment.

Prayers are requested for Kelly Simmons of Anadarko, Oklahoma, who is suffering from a heart ailment.

Mrs. W. C. Hester, 125 South Twelfth Street, Frederick, Oklahoma, asks the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed of the heart ailment from which she is suffering.

WEDDINGS

Greer-Hedden

Beryl G. Hedden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Thompson of Independence, Missouri, and F. J. Greer of Sacramento, California, were married in Sacramento on December 7. They will make their home in Sacramento.

Conoley-Howard

Lorna Adele Howard, daughter of Mrs. R. J. Frang, Sr., of Willoughby, Ohio, and Robert M. Conoley, son of Mrs. Pearl Conoley Jones of Independence, Missouri, were married December 28 at Kirtland Temple. Elder Raymond Ashenhurst, Temple pastor, performed the double-ring ceremony. The bride was graduated last spring from Graceland College. The groom, who served four years as a Marine in the South Pacific, is a sophomore at Graceland. They are making their home in Lamoni, Iowa.

Stewart-Howard

Mrs. Audrey Howard of Independence, Missouri, announces the marriage of her daughter, Frances, to Robert M. Stewart, son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Stewart, also of Independence. The ceremony was performed by Elder Evan Fry on December 28 at the Stone Church. They are making their home in Independence. Mrs. Stewart is a former employee of the Herald Publishing House.

BIRTHS

A daughter, Carolyn Mae, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Wallace L. McGoon of Saratoga, Wyoming, on January 8. Mrs. McGoon is the former Joyce Haggard of Paradise, California.

A daughter, Karen Kay, was born on December 17 to Mr. and Mrs. LeRoy Hancock of Sedalia, Missouri. She was blessed on January 11 by Elders Ward Hougas and Nelson Pugh. Mrs. Hancock was formerly Elsie Wiggins.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Rosenow of Kawnee, Illinois, announce the birth of a daughter, Pamela Jean, born December 11. Mrs. Rosenow, the former Allene Burchett, is a Graceland graduate, class of 1942.

A son, Michael Dean, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Reiff of Independence, Missouri, on October 18.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilmer Peterson of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, Stephen Kemper, born December 30 at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Peterson is the former LaWedna Seaton.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Moore of Carroll, Iowa, announce the birth of a daughter, Jeanne Mary, born November 3. Mrs. Moore, the former Evelyn Wolfe, is a Graceland graduate, class of 1942.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Laughlin of Augusta, Georgia, announce the birth of a son, Jack Mick, born December 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Keith D. Zimmerman of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Nancy Sue, born November 17.

Mrs. Zimmerman is the former Mary Louise Barnes.

A daughter, Patricia Dianne, was born on November 30 to Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Frey.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ouston of Vancouver, British Columbia, announce the birth of a daughter, Fern Camile, born at the General Hospital on November 2.

DEATHS

GALLIHER.—Margaret, daughter of Judson and Zetta Montgomery, was born June 18, 1907, at Niagara Falls, New York, and died November 25, 1947. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 17, 1917, and remained a faithful member throughout her life. Surviving are her husband, Charles R. Galliher, and a son, Charles, Jr. She will be missed not only by her family but by her many friends and the Saints of the Sherrill, New York, congregation.

HUGHES.—James M., was born March 14, 1888, near Franklin, Tennessee, where he remained until he was sixteen years old, when he went to Illinois. In 1905, he moved to Kansas and worked as a Bible salesman for four years. At the age of twenty-one, he homesteaded north of Lamar, Colorado; later he established a cleaning business in Lamar. In 1911, he was married to Edith Odell; four children were born to this union. In 1913, he became a farmer, then returned to his business in Lamar in 1917, where he remained until his retirement in 1944. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1914, remaining a faithful member until his death. (Date and place of death not given.)

He is survived by his wife; a son, Joseph W.; and two daughters: Louise Hughes and Mrs. Betty McIlhenry. The funeral was held at the Kirkpatrick-Duggan Chapel, Elder E. P. Darnell giving the sermon. Burial was in Fairmount Cemetery.

O'DELL.—William Robert, was born February 5, 1860, at Clinch River, Virginia, the son of John and Lucy O'Dell. He taught school in his native state for sixteen years, where he was converted to the Reorganized Church. Soon after his baptism, he was ordained an elder and sent, under appointment, to minister to the Saints in Virginia, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. He served as a missionary until 1904, when he went into business in Holden, Missouri. He was married to Mary Osner in 1885; ten children were born to this marriage, four of whom preceded their father in death. He died on December 3, 1947, at Lamar, Colorado.

Surviving are three daughters: Edith Hughes of Lamar; Amy Taylor, San Diego, California; and Hattie Hovlid, Ponca City, Oklahoma; and three sons: Gomer of Lamar; Arthur and Robert of San Francisco, California. The funeral service was held at Holden, Elder E. P. Darnell officiating.

TAYLOR.—Edythe, daughter of the late O. O. and Margaret Rowan Atwood, was born on March 19, 1887, at Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, and died on January 2, 1948, at DuBois, Pennsylvania. She was married to James R. Taylor in 1907. One son was born to this union. She was a member of the Reorganized Church throughout most of her life.

Besides her husband, she leaves her son, James, of DuBois; her mother; and three sisters: Mrs. Carrie Dyke of DuBois; Mrs. Bertha Shank of Kirtland, Ohio; and Mrs. Jessie Glick of Baltimore, Maryland. Services were conducted in the Taylor home, Elder Earl Brennan officiating. Interment was in the Morningside Cemetery in DuBois.

WILLIAMS.—Edwin James, 100 years old, died at his home near Post Oak, Missouri, on December 14. He was a retired carpenter and the oldest resident of Johnson County. He was born in Friendship, New York, one of nine children; all except a brother, who was killed in the Civil War, reached the age of ninety-five or more. The family homesteaded in Wisconsin shortly before the war. Mr. Williams moved by covered wagon to Stewartsville, Missouri, in 1899, and to Johnson County a few years later.

He is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Luther Ryan of Post Oak, and Mrs. Alma Downing of Warrensburg, Missouri; a son, Everett Williams of Kansas City, Missouri; three grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Post Oak, Elders W. S. Macrae and E. P. Darnell officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery in Independence, Missouri. His wife, the former Eva Hare, preceded him in death in 1939.

Let Us Worship...

CHRIS B. HARTSHORN

$1.50

Here is a manual of helps, interpretations and plans for leaders of worship, ministers, department leaders, parents, and all who assist in worship services or seek to understand the spirit of worship. This invaluable book is written by our own Editor of Church School Literature and is especially for use in the services of our own churches.

PROPHETIC WARNINGS IN MODERN REVELATION

by Elbert A. Smith

This tract by "Brother Elbert" is a reissue, with certain revisions, of this pamphlet which was printed several years ago. However, the material presented here is still timely and important.

25¢ each

10 for $2.50

50 for $8.50

25 for $4.75

100 for $15.00

BEGINNING MARCH 1

the subscription rate of the Saints' Herald will be:

$3.50 per year to the United States

$3.75 per year to Canada

$4.50 per year to Foreign Countries

Order from your Book Steward or from

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

Photo by Clifford Carver

Kelley Hall

GRACELAND COLLEGE, LAMONI, IOWA

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

JANUARY 31, 1948

NUMBER 5

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Kelley Hall

A New Name at Graceland

Add a new name to the list of persons honored by structures on the Graceland College campus—Bishop E. L. Kelley. The newest building on the campus, located south and east of Zimmermann Hall, has been christened Kelley Hall. The announcement was made by President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., following approval of the Graceland Board of Trustees.

Bishop Kelley was an ardent defender of the college during the early years of this century when, owing to the indebtedness of the college and for other reasons, many members of the church thought that Graceland should be disbanded. In the General Conference of 1904, a resolution passed to close Graceland. The vote was 851 to 826.

On May 12, 1904, the Bishopric of the church and the trustees of the college, F. M. Smith, F. B. Blair, and J. W. Wight, met in the rooms of the Herald Publishing House. As Roy Cheville reports it in "Through the West Door": "They were to take under advisement the carrying out of the conference resolution. It was apparent that they were not ready to give in so easily. First, they billed the action illegal since there was not due notice given that such legislation would be taken up. They held that a sixty day published notice was required. Therefore, the resolution would have to be interpreted as merely expressing the sentiment of the conference, not as a legally instituted mandate. The board of trustees decided to go ahead with arrangements for the next college year and also to try to wipe out the college debt."

The college opened, and Bishop Kelley was called upon to be the chief spokesman and champion for the action of the joint committee of Bishopric and trustees. The following year, the conference voted to continue the college.

Kelley Hall will be used as a classroom building and will house faculty offices. Of frame construction, the building is so arranged that a brick veneer may be applied later. Materials for the building were obtained from Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Missouri.

"Even as Bishop Kelley stepped in with the board of trustees to help the college in a period of real emergency, so does this building meet a real college need in time of emergency," President Gleazer stated in commenting on the board's action. "It is our hope that the building in its architecture and in its function will serve for many years as a worthy memorial to the champion of Graceland whose name it bears."

R. Edwin Browne.

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

The Mission of the Church	3
Across the Desk	4

ARTICLES:

Let Your Light Shine, by Paul M. Hanson	5
Conscience Pricks, by Norma Anne Kirkendall	6
The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, by Roscoe E. Davey	7
Help for the Asking, by Charles A. Davies	10
Little Enemies of Happiness, by Leonard J. Lea	11
What L. D. S. Believe About the Baptism of the Holy Spirit, by Evan A. Fry	12
Fortified, by Grace L. Krabl	14
Our College and Missions Abroad, by Roy A. Cheville	15
Silver Anniversary for Miss Copeland, by Grace Pennell Tousley	17
Food Chats, by B. Mildred Nelson	18
Travelog, by Israel A. Smith	19
Peace at Any Price? by Lloyd E. Cleveland	20
A House Divided, by Bishop J. Stanley Kelley	21
Bulletin Board	22

AUDITORIUM NEWS

* Des Moines District

President Israel A. Smith, Apostle D. T. Williams, and Bishop Henry W. Livingston recently visited our First Church at Des Moines. The sermon by President Smith was very well received, and the people enjoyed meeting these leading church officers.

Stephen Robinson, bishop of the district, reported tithes and offerings totaling $28,642.70 for 1947. This exceeded the 1946 figure by about three thousand dollars.

★

* European Mission

A telegram from Apostle M. A. McConley says: "Holland this week end. Into Germany January 27. Address care of Religious Affairs, OMGUS, Berlin." Missionary Eugene Theys will accompany Brother McConley on this trip.

★

* Hawaii

Waller Memorial Chapel, in honor of the late Evangelist Gilbert J. Waller, will be built upon Makiki property. This project has been approved by the general church, and a sum of $7,000 allocated to help with it. A finance committee and building committee have been elected. Tentative plans call for raising a total of $50,000 for this development. Apostle Charles R. Hield was in the Islands and in touch with this effort during his stay from last October until December 11.

★

* Bishop G. L. DeLapp was recently named as one of fourteen leaders to form a commission to write a new charter for Jackson County. The nominations were made by a group of judges.

★

* Independence, Missouri

The best record for all time in baptisms was enjoyed here during the year 1947. The total was 259. Elder Charles Graham, in charge of this area as assistant to the First Presidency, believes that this record is a result of the good work done by local elders and priests, and the able missionary leadership of Elder W. E. Wakeman.

★

* Dayton, Ohio

Floyd Rockwell, president of the Southern Ohio District, informs us that last year Apostle Jensen gave this church the following goals: to increase baptisms, 25%; attendance, 10%; tithepayers, 10%; and 10% increase in sum of tithes and offerings. The first two goals have been substantially passed already. Local elders and priests are doing more missionary work than ever before. One elder set a goal of ten baptisms for himself, and already has eight.

★

* Port Huron, Michigan

Seven persons were recently baptized in this branch, all but one of them young married people in their late twenties or early thirties. In two cases homes were united in the church, and four others brought in complete family units.

The Mission of the Church

We must never forget the mission of the church. We must never be diverted from it by lesser considerations and objectives. "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness" (Matthew 6: 38, Inspired Version) was the commandment of Jesus, and we have never had any commandment to supersede it. God's social purpose is explicit or implied in all the greater prophetic Scriptures.

A sense of mission inspires in every new religious group a feeling of exclusiveness, a conviction of possessing a mandate for the accomplishment of a special work. This generally leads to isolationism for the group and, unfortunately, a failure to co-operate with others in projects for the general good.

Dangers

As the group continues its life, it is presented with appeals for help and co-operation with other good organizations in the community life. It must respond to these appeals and help, or resign itself to a role of little significance in community affairs. It not only contributes little good to the community life: it plays the parasite, receiving many benefits from the community for which it does not pay. And the parasite is the least admirable of all living creatures, whether it is an organism or an organization. This is the danger of isolation.

At the other extreme, accommodation can go so far that the religious group loses its sense of mission. With that gone, it has no real excuse for existence.

The only real reason for the existence of our church is its obligation to fulfill its mission of building the kingdom of God. If we lose that, we are just another church, and we had better resign in favor of others who have accumulated larger followings for the doing of nothing.

We must keep in mind that large numbers of our membership have become identified with our church because of its mission, and that if it ever should become apparent that the church had abandoned its mission, they would almost immediately be lost and seek affiliation elsewhere.

Defining Our Mission

What is involved in the mission of building the kingdom of God? We need to see the full range and all the implications.

Nothing can be built properly without suitable building material. There is only one kind of building material appropriate for the kingdom of God, and that is redeemed and regenerated individual human lives. The principles of the gospel have been given us to accomplish that redemption and regeneration. Fire must be applied to bricks to convert them from lumps of dried mud into building units that will resist moisture, frost, and heat. The transforming power of the gospel of salvation must be applied to individual lives to convert them from carnal nature into fit material for the kingdom. There is no social or economic plan, however perfect, that can bypass this essential step.

Following that must come all the intermediate steps of Christian family life, education, professional activity, community life, etc.

At the same time, none of these preliminary steps is an end in itself. It is fruitless if it does not lead to the kingdom of God, which is the eternal purpose.

Once moral and spiritual regeneration have begun, the building of the kingdom of God involves a complicated structure of social and economic organization. The present problems of society rest upon imperfect organization and inadequate institutions, as well as upon personal human failures. The solution of those problems can be found only in matching our organization with moral and spiritual progress.

The Magnitude of the Task

It seems to some of us that much impatience with the slowness of human progress is a result of failure to understand the difficulty and complexity of the task. Problems of planning and organization, of the raising of revenue and the assurance of continued financial support, and of the application of the means to the accomplishment of the purposes, are all very great. They call for almost superhuman wisdom in leadership, and for almost superhuman loyalty and fidelity in the followers. And even with these, great uncertainties must be overcome.

At the same time, if we were not impatient, no progress would ever be made. Failure to plan and failure to act, as a lack of faith and enterprise, would keep us forever where we are, dreaming dreams and doing nothing about them, singing of the kingdom of God, and taking no step to move toward it or to build it. Our impatience must be of a kind that overlooks no necessary step in preparation, no essential safeguard against failure and disaster.

In the midst of all the things that we do as a part of our current life, we must never lose sight of our mission, which has its setting in the future. As we co-operate with every good endeavor in community and civic life, let us keep ever in mind that we must do more than this, remembering the solemn adjuration of Jesus, "Seek ye first."

L. J. L.

Editorial

Church-wide Houses of Worship Survey

All members of the church will be interested in the survey of our local houses of worship being made by the Presiding Bishopric as of January 1, 1948. This project meets with our whole-hearted approval, and we urge all branch presidents and pastors to whom the questionnaires are being mailed to give them careful and prompt attention.

It has been over eighteen years since such a survey has been made, and during that time it is known generally that a large number of improvements have been made to our local church buildings; the records of the Bishopric are, therefore, considerably out of date. This survey has been delayed on account of war conditions and shortage of personnel, but we are now in a position to undertake the task.

The success of the project will depend upon the co-operation given by the local branch officers in providing the information requested on the questionnaires and returning them promptly. Careful consideration has been given to the matter of preparing the questionnaire so as to make this a comprehensive and scientific survey, and it is urged that all points be answered as accurately as possible. The results of the survey will be presented by the Presiding Bishopric in subsequent issues of the Herald and in the report to the coming General Conference.

Across the Desk

Brother John W. Rushton writes:

"I was shocked to learn of the sudden death of Brother Guy P. Levitt of San Jose the day following Thanksgiving. I have just confirmed the report by President McDonald of the Northern California District. He was distressed after eating Thanksgiving dinner and next day not feeling so well was on his way to the bedroom from the kitchen when he was stricken.

"It may be you have learned of this sad event. You will recall Brother Levitt for some years was a Seventy and, I believe, for some time was one of the seven presidents.

"He was a friendly man and carried himself with dignity and poise. For some years he served as president of the Northern California District.

"Recently he had taken up the profession of chiropractic and with his wife, who also was a doctor of chiropractic, had an excellent practice in San Jose, where they resided.

"Brother Levitt gave assistance to the church work in San Jose, and his services were appreciated."

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Letter From Rotterdam, Holland

December 6, 1947

Dear Brother DeLapp:

We received your letter with the pictures some weeks ago and were glad to hear from you.

Two weeks ago we received a letter from the women of Stone Church informing us that they had sent us a Christmas box. We are glad we can report to you that we received the box in good condition. The food-stuffs contained in it will be very helpful along with our rations.

With regard to the work in the branch, we have had the privilege of meeting Brother and Sister Scherer and Brother and Sister Theys. We are sure that with their help the work will grow. Within some weeks they will have settled their business.

This week we expect the first tract in Dutch from the printer. This will be a happy day for us. Many in the branch are waiting for the moment that they can assist in missionary work. We look to the future with confidence. We hope to prove that we appreciate the help the church has given us. The church made the first steps in helping us. Now it is our task to do more than we have before.

I had the privilege of accompanying Brother Scherer to Friesland three weeks ago. We trust that perhaps in a half year he will be able to speak Dutch. He has set this goal for himself.

Brother DeLapp, this year is ending very soon; and we wish you and your family a very happy Christmas. Our prayers are for you, that our Lord may continue to bless you in the work of the church.

Jac M. DeWild.

Letter From Poland

During the past year, the Saints in Poland received several packages with clothing and food from the Saints in America. Most of them came to my address. Although I have sent individual letters of thanks to some, it is impossible for me to write to each person who contributed, so I take this means of thanking all who have helped us. Were not these clothes and shoes sent, we would have remained naked and barefooted this winter. Still we are in need of many things, especially shoes for men; but we are content with what we have received.

May the Lord bless the good Saints for all their gifts to us is our prayer.

For the Saints in Poland,
by John Stebel.

Czarnylas
P. O. W., Ostrow
Poland

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

January 31, 1948

Number 5

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

Let Your Light Shine

BY APOSTLE PAUL M. HANSON

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST is committed to a program of aggressive evangelism. The pursuing of such a course is enjoined by the Lord in the following command given in one of his personal appearances to his apostles following his resurrection:

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 18-20.

Mark records that he commanded them: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—16: 15.

It is conspicuously noticeable that the ministry of the Saviour to his disciples after his resurrection was a continuation in kind of his ministry before his crucifixion. Until the time of his death, he preached the gospel and was engaged in building up the kingdom of God; and, after he arose from the dead, he showed himself alive to his apostles by many infallible proofs, "being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God."—Acts 1: 3.

As all power in heaven and in earth belongs to Jesus, one may be assured that the eternal forces are in support of efforts to influence the lives of men through the gospel.

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST leads men to know God, thus providing for humanity a beginning from which to start and an end toward which to move. Then how important is the carrying forward of the work entrusted to the church! Whoever joins with the Saviour of the world in his work is in a winning cause.

The church, with Christ at its head, is indeed a marvelous instrument through which to accomplish the preaching of the gospel and establishing his kingdom among men.

In addition to the commission to the apostles to preach the gospel and teach all nations, Jesus said to his disciples: "I give unto you to be the light of the world; a city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Behold, do men light a candle and put it under a bushel? Nay, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light to all that are in the house. Therefore, let your light so shine before this world, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."—Matthew 5: 16-18 (Inspired Version).

This indicates the membership of the church may constitute a powerful evangelistic force as well as those in the ministerial ranks. Just as ordained ministers should safeguard their calling from anything that would interfere with its expression in behalf of the church and world, so all others, being members of the "body of Christ," should keep in mind the counsel of the Saviour: "Abide in me." To each one it is given to be the "light of the world." This is especially important to remember when considering possible problems arising from mixed marriages.

MISSIONARY WORK—where does it begin and end?

We feel in our hearts, and the times call for it, that the work of God in which we are engaged must be carried to greater heights.

Refreshing to the soul is this announcement made in latter days by the Lord to the church:

Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth.—Doctrine and Covenants 65: 1.

One entering through the door of baptism into covenant relationship with God experiences inexpressible joy, reflected into the soul is effulgent glory resulting in a consciousness of intimate divine relationship; the Holy Spirit is recognized bearing witness of the action taken, having heaven's pleasing approval. This was my experience in being accepted into the church—entering formally into covenant relationship with Christ.

Such an all-embracing and enriching experience, beyond the power of words to express adequately, should not be allowed to be dimmed by time, the cares of business, or anything else whatsoever. Many children of Latter Day Saint parentage are lost to the church because special blessings and rich spiritual experiences received by the parents have not been related to them. Such experiences are not given of God for the moment, but are freighted with significant meaning, often for life.

And they can be revived and lived over at our discretion—so wonderful is the gift of memory.

WE ARE LIVING in the noontime of God's readiness to bless. In such a marvelous universe as we are in and are a part of, only a little thought should be sufficient to remind us that it is not enough simply to know about God. This is life eternal, said Jesus, to know the "true God, and Jesus Christ." Such knowledge is available to all. It is not enough merely to speak the word God. To the true Christian, He is the most real of all experiences.

For those who may feel something fine has departed from their lives, rapid headway toward recovery can be made in seeking a private retreat and communing on the matter with their Heavenly Father. Alone there, they can appropriately speak from the heart words uttered by King David of Israel: "Restore to me the joy of thy salvation." Without such a possession, there can be no evangelism. With such, there follows an instinctive loyalty to the work of Christ. A word is spoken here, and a few words there, and deeds are performed, the results of which have far-reaching effects in influencing lives toward Christ.

The call of the Lord to missionary work is to all:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

Bringing Up Father

When I was a boy of fourteen, my father was so ignorant I could hardly stand to have the old man around. But when I got to be twenty-one, I was astonished at how much he had learned in seven years.—Mark Twain.

Conscience Pricks

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

RESOLUTIONS ARE TOO often forgotten, and merely saying, "I am going to do something," or "I shall refrain from this activity" rarely changes the life of the individual making the resolution. What is really needed is a personal and social revolution. And so—this year I now set down those things which I will do to change my life—and by having put them in print, all year this printed page shall serve as a conscience prick at every violation.

1. Never considering myself a perpetual grumbler, I have gone along with the usual verbal gripes and personal complaints. I don't care for the menu in my favorite restaurant, but in England there is no choice on the menu; in other countries there is no menu, for there is no food. Maybe I have a cold, but with enough remedies and a handful of tissues I can soon forget it; by drinking more orange juice and taking more vitamins, I can prevent further such irritations. Yet there are countries where malnutrition and absolute lack of medical facilities or adequate food values have forced constant illness and weakness. Therefore, I have no room for complaint due to food problems or minor physical aches. Thus, during 1948, I shall keep my mouth firmly closed against utterances of petty gripes or dislikes.

2. Everywhere one hears propaganda about inflation, rising prices, and low wages. One hears of lacks and things which cannot be afforded. It is true that often we cannot afford to live in the style which we followed when money was easy to get. But, we can get fuel for our homes, warm clothes for our bodies, and plenty of food. We do have many luxuries. We have not been compelled to quit using our automobiles or to turn in our savings to the government. These are the conditions of other lands. Therefore, I shall count my blessings daily, actually enumerating them, and be thankful orally and mentally.

3. My church doors are open wide. My church is spending its monies to spread physical and spiritual relief to those whose plight has caused this new year's revolution in my life. Therefore, all-out support of my church is an all-out pledge to better these conditions that have troubled me.

4. There must be no waste—for the garments or the food which I discard might actually save a life against starvation or the rigorous cold. The pennies I can save by refraining from the purchase of unnecessary food luxuries, for instance, may be used for postage to transport these usable things to their new destination.

5. Prayer is still the most effective means by which alleviation of ills may be procured. I know that when men unite in a common, fervent, intelligent prayer, God does not deny his children their requests. Therefore, I must pray as never before—in thanksgiving and in petition.

These are the conscience pricks I shall experience during the coming year. Will you join in them with me?

Prayer

"Do you believe in prayer?" a friend of mine once asked his Negro servant.

"Yas, sir, boss," was the quick reply.

"Do you say your prayers every day?"

"Yas, sir, boss, I certainly does."

"Well, Joe, does God answer all your prayers?"

"Yas, sir, boss. He answers one way or another."—Thomas J. Watson in This Week.

The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse

• BY APOSTLE ROSCOE E. DAVEY

[CONTINUED FROM LAST ISSUE]

THE IDENTIFYING of the First Horseman of the Apocalypse as the Restoration of the fullness of the Gospel of Christ in these latter days gives us our bearings in identifying the remaining three horsemen, especially as to time, for the prophecy gives us to understand they are to go forth, one following the other.

And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see. And there went out another horse that was red; and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another; and there was given unto him a great sword.—Revelation 6: 3, 4.

Here is the scriptural statement of the second horseman. The color of the horse is red, and the rider has a great sword in his hand, and power is to be given to the rider to take peace from the earth. All of these are in perfect agreement, and undoubtedly represents the going forth of the spirit of unrestricted warfare upon the face of the earth. Notice especially that this rider is to have power to take peace from the earth.

In taking the first step in the interpretation of this horse and his rider, let us turn to a statement coming from the young prophet that God raised up in these latter days and through whom the gospel and the church were restored, in fulfillment of the first horseman:

And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons, and am willing that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his dominion.—Doctrine and Covenants 1:6.

This revelation from God was given by the prophetic founder of the church on November 1, 1831. The first horseman had just gone forth, and now we are told, in 1831, that the time was near at hand when peace should be taken from the earth—one of the specific things that was to be accomplished by the second horseman. And power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth. In the light of this statement, we will be justified in looking for the second horseman to go forth not so very long after the first horseman.

A LITTLE OVER A year after the revelation just quoted, this young prophet gave a most interesting and amazing prophecy. Nowhere can a prophecy be found that is stated in such positive, definite terms as this prophecy, or is as definitely fulfilled. We quote the first part of this prophecy, given to the world as a sort of Christmas present on December 25, 1832:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning with the rebellion of South Carolina, which will eventually terminate in the death and misery of many souls. The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations beginning at that place; for behold the southern states will be divided against the northern states, and the southern states will call upon other nations, even the nation of Great Britain as it is called, and they will also call upon other nations in order to defend themselves against other nations, and thus war shall be poured out upon all nations.

This positively stated prophecy was given twenty-nine years before its amazing fulfillment began. Who knew, who could have known, that when the Civil War started it would begin with the rebellion of South Carolina—and so long before it happened? A man, who was a member of the church in these early days, left the church and denounced Joseph Smith as a false prophet because he had given this prophecy, and then because of one of the many compromises between the North and the South, it looked as though this possible war had been averted. He just became impatient and jumped too soon.

It is an established fact of history that when the Civil War started, the first shot of that war was fired by the troops of the rebellious state of South Carolina when they opened fire upon Fort Sumpter, in Charleston Harbor, in the month of April, 1861.

According to this prophecy, the southern states were to call upon Great Britain for help, which history clearly established they did. Great Britain responded to that call, and, among other things, built three ships of war—the “Alabama,” the “Florida,” and the “Shennandoah,” for the South. The latter two were soon sunk, but the “Alabama” continued throughout most of the war to raid the shipping of the North, sinking more tonnage to the bottom of the ocean than any other one raiding vessel before or since (over eighty-five thousand tons). This ship was eventually sunk off the coast of France near Cherbourg by the “Kearsarge.” This was in June, 1864. When the final settlements of the Civil War were made, England paid $15,500,000.00 in gold into the coffers of the United States Government for the damage that had resulted by her helping the South.

BUT NOW WE COME to the most important part of this prophecy, as far as the second horseman of the Apocalypse is concerned. Great Britain was to call upon other nations, in order to defend herself against other nations, and thus war was to be poured out upon all nations. In the first of the prophecy, it had also stated, "The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations, beginning at that place." "That place" was the rebellion of South Carolina and the start of the Civil War. Here is to be the beginning of a special degree of warfare among the nations until all nations should be involved.

Before 1861, although there had always been war, there were extended periods of peace, but since 1861 there has been hardly a year that has not seen war in some quarter of the globe, involving one or more of the principal nations of the world. And it grows worse as time passes. The school of history of Harvard University, a few years ago published to the world the surprising statement that several times as many men were killed in war during the first twenty-five years of this century than all the other 2,000 years of the Christian era put together.

The second horse and his rider, who was to have power given to him to take peace from the earth, went forth with the outbreak of the Civil War, and the world has known no peace since. Even though World War II is officially over, fighting continues in China, and internal strife is tearing the vitals out of India. It is rather difficult today to find people who basically believe that the present world leaders will be able to eliminate war.

IN THE SCRIPTURAL description of the third horseman there appears at first glance to be a contradiction between the color of the horse and the pair of balances the rider is carrying, a paradox.

And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hands.—Revelation 6:5.

The color of the horse is black, which has always symbolized trouble, hardship, or tragedy. Whenever a cartoonist wishes to portray the approach of trouble or tragedy he pictures a dark, cloud rolling over the horizon. But the rider has a pair of balances in his hands. These balances evidently represent fair measure, justice, equity. Webster's New Standard Dictionary gives this definition of balances: "An instrument for determining the weight of bodies; a pair of scales; equilibrium; equality; an equality between two sides of an account." Inside or over the entrances of many of our court houses throughout the land there can be found a statue representing justice, a woman blindfolded, with a sword in one hand and a pair of balances in the other, signifying that justice would be meted out without fear or favor.

How is the color of the horse, which is black, to be harmonized with the pair of balances? What movement among men, of international importance, fulfills this seeming contradiction?

The first horseman went forth in 1830, the second in 1861. It is true the prophecy does not state that these horsemen are to come forth, following each other at definite intervals, but it might not be amiss to let something like this give us our first bearings. What movement or development reaches the place where it begins to have a great deal of influence among the nations about 1890-96? Let us take a look at the developments of organized labor—unionism.

In England, such organization was a criminal offense until 1867, when, by a ruling of the Court of the Queen's Bench, it was held to be not criminal but illegal, for it was held to be in restraint of trade. It was not until 1871 that, by the Trade Union Act, it received its first legal status. By 1896, unionism had grown until there were 1,487,562 members. Income from dues that year were some over $8,000,000.00, with expenditures of over $6,000,000.00, and an accumulated surplus of over $10,000,000.00. These facts are from the Fifth and Final Report of the Royal Commission on Labor, page 146.

In the United States, unionism was a criminal offense until 1850, when it was given some legal standing; but even that was not at all secure. But even with what unionism had thus gained, it began to develop. The earliest organizations to gain any strength were the International Association of Workmen, in 1864; the National Labor Union, in 1866; and the Knights of Labor, in 1869, which reached a place of great power by the early 1890's when it began to assert considerable influence in national affairs. The panic of the late 1890's broke its back, but with the turn of the twentieth century, unionism came back stronger than ever under the American Federation of Labor. (See Funk and Wagnall's New Standard Encyclopedia of Universal Knowledge, Volume 42, page 487.) It was around 1890-96 that unionism began to assert a strength in the principal nations of the world. Since then, it has shaken nations to their very foundations, sometimes forcing the resignations of cabinets and governments, as the recent development in France evidences.

NOW, AS TO THE meeting of the specifications of this horse and his rider, the rider is carrying a pair of balances in his hands. What has always been the banner under which unionism has waged its warfare against capital? "Give us a fair return for our labor; give us a fair return for our part in production." A plea for justice and equity. Although in recent years there has been evidence that, in some instances, radical elements have gained control of union leadership; some of the results of that leadership are to be condemned, and at times are condemned by labor itself. Nevertheless, the fact remains that in its struggle for the emancipation of the laboring masses, the plea for justice and equity has been well justified. It is interesting to notice that oftentimes the pair of balances appears in the insignias of various labor organizations.

Every economist recognizes that there has been justification for this "battle standard" of organized labor (in spite of its occasional abuse by questionable leadership) and that, in every country where unionism has been strong enough to wield a telling influence, the lot of the laboring man has been greatly improved and the standards of living have been raised until in many places the common man lives on a standard not attained by dignitaries or the favored few in the countries where there has been no organized labor.

"The rider that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hands." So far we find that the developments of organized labor meet this specification completely. But the color of the horse is black!

"With the development of the larger unions, trouble began to ferment, resulting in serious outbreaks. The first serious strike was on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad in 1877. The next serious strike was at the Carnegie Steel Works at Pittsburgh in 1892. Between 1880 and 1905 there were 40,000 strikes and lockouts, affecting 9,000,000 men."

One does not follow the history of the struggles between Labor and Capital very far until one discovers trouble, hardship, and tragedy: The soft coal strike in Colorado shortly after the turn of the twentieth century, in which men and some women and children were shot by the state militia before the strike was ended. "Bloody Herrin" in Illinois, where on one occasion some fifty men—strikebreakers—were herded together outside the city limits, then told to run for it; all fifty-some-odd were shot down as they attempted to make their escape. The strike of the hard-coal miners back in the days when there was no federal relief or means provided to assist those who were forced out of their jobs, which not alone caused a great deal of suffering among the miner's families, but tens of thousands of others where the bread winner was forced into idleness when factory after factory had to close down for the need of coal. Similar experiences have occurred in every country where unionism has developed. These few mentioned are only a few of the many occasions of trouble and difficulty and tragedy that have happened and promise yet to happen in this great economic struggle. Yes, the color of the horse is black!

AND WHAT ARE THE prospects for the future? William Allen White, former journalist of the State of Kansas, in his writings dealing with this problem makes the observation that eventually there will come a death struggle between these two great forces, Labor and Capital, and says, "When that time comes, God pity this country." We are painfully aware of the dire threat to our whole economy that was evidenced in the strikes and threats to strike in our major industries of but a short time ago. One needs only to imagine the results if all means of transportation, in and out of our great cities, were to be suddenly stopped by a joint strike of all employed in our transportation systems. Inside of forty-eight hours there would be tragedy, babies starving for want of milk, food rapidly disappearing from store shelves, etc. Indeed, the color of the horse is black, in spite of the fact that the rider has a pair of balances in his hands.

And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the fourth beast say, Come and see. And I looked, and behold a pale horse and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over a fourth part of the earth, to kill with the sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.—Revelation 6: 7, 8.

A PALE HORSE—sickness, starvation, and death, and power given to the riders, Death and Hell, over a fourth part of the earth. This horse and his two riders representing an outstanding development of war, so important and destructive, that the spirit of war evidenced by the second horseman could not completely cover it. It was to be something new in war among nations—a total war. World War I and II, the most disastrous of all time by far, meet the requirements of this fourth horse and his riders. It has been recognized by all that these two were one and the same war, World War II being only a continuation of World War I. When the French war leader, Clemenceau, bade farewell to his troops as they were mustered out of service at the close of World War I, he said to them, "Today you lay down your arms, twenty years from now your sons will take them up again."

If one would care to try an interesting experiment, just cut out adhesive tape and cover the nations on a globe map of the world that were engulfed in these two great wars. It will be discovered that just about as near one fourth of the earth is covered as it would be possible to divide it. These riders were to have power over a fourth part of the earth.

And they were to kill with the sword, and with hunger, etc. During and after World War I, and especially during and after World War II, death by means other than that caused by the actual fighting has been most appalling. The hundreds of thousands put to death in concentration camps, the vast numbers who died of starvation as slave laborers, the countless numbers who have and are yet dying of starvation, surely death and hell that follows with him is here most abundantly manifested. This horse and his riders were not only to kill with the sword—those killed in actual fighting—but also by means of hunger and death.

And quite literally does hell follow. While the last war was being fought, there were a lot of high-sounding ideals expressed as to what would happen when once the war was won. But our beautiful dreams have been dashed to pieces, and instead of world peace, we find the nations in most serious disagreement, the plague of war still hanging over our heads. With the threat of the atom bomb, long range bombers that can strike any part of the globe, the guided rocket missile, and other means of destruction, certainly hell follows after. Men's hearts are failing them as they look upon the things coming upon the earth.

THUS WE SEE the striking fulfillment of the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, the restoration of the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the church in all its completeness go forth waging a warfare in righteousness for the accomplishment of God's purposes on the earth—the first major step of which is the building of the kingdom of God. This is to serve as a witness to all nations and to provide a means of escape and deliverance from the ultimate devastation that shall sweep the earth. The second horse and rider—the going forth of an unrelenting warfare, the taking of peace from the earth. The third horseman—the developments of organized labor and industrial and economic warfare. The fourth horse and his rider, death, with hell following after—World Wars I and II and their aftermath, the final conclusion of which is yet to be seen.

God is never taken by surprise. Knowing the ultimate developments on the earth in the last days, he sends forth the first horse and his rider that Christ and his way of life, his redemptive power, his saving grace might in a very concrete and understandable way be made manifest to mankind. Again might we repeat the statement of the Apostle Peter. We shall do well to take heed to the words of prophecy, and in doing so, discover the truths of the restoration, save ourselves and, through the building of the kingdom of God on earth, ultimately save the nations. For prophecy says that by means of the revelation of God in and through the kingdom, the nations shall say, "Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths . . . and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."—Micah 4: 2, 3.

Again, "But firstly, let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject unto her laws."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 9.

WHAT A GLORIOUS future awaits the church as it moves forward in its conquest of righteousness, as the First Horseman of the Apocalypse—the conquering of all nations by a righteous witness of the ways of God—until there shall reign, as the angels sang on the night Christ was born—"Peace on earth, good will to men."

Help for the Asking

By CHAS. A. DAVIES

I am of a worrying disposition. I find myself in a perpetual state of anxiety. I worry over details and minor happenings, over the children, the housekeeping. People tell me, "Don't worry," but that is easier said than done. Can you help me to "stop worrying"?

Worry is one of the serious handicaps of modern life. We have not yet adapted ourselves to the faster tempo of modern living. Yours is not an isolated case, but you are one of the few that seek help. Most just go on with their pastime. Yes, I think a few points should help; that is, if you will seriously apply them.

Firstly:—

See that your physical condition is sound. Physical debility opens the gate to all sorts of mental concern. How long since you had a medical checkup? Anyway, it is reassuring to find that one is organically sound and healthy. First eliminate the possibility of this cause of lowered resistance to strains. Check.

Secondly:—

Fatigue is the great ally of worry. If you are not fatigued unduly because of some physical condition, check your hours of rest and sleep. Are you overdoing it unnecessarily? If you are, sane expenditure of energy is indicated. When overtired, a vicious circle is established. More worry, more fatigue; more fatigue, easier to worry more. Earlier to bed. Considered expenditure of energy. Check.

Thirdly:—

Examine your slant on life. Some call it your philosophy. I presume you accept Jesus, the Master, as the Wise Counselor. Remember he said: "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow"—Again he said: "Not one sparrow falls without my Father's kindly note." "Are ye not worth more than many sparrows?"—"Who by worrying can add one cubit to his stature?"—In this matter, "FAITH IS THE ANSWER."

Try these three further points in stopping worry.

1. Limit your mental load. Ninety per cent of worries never materialize. Examine a "worry" in this light and keep the rest of your energy for the ten per cent. After all, you are not responsible for everything. Analyze the worry. If it proves real, face up to it. If responsible, act. If there is nothing that can be done, discard it.
2. Spread your load. Live one hour, one day at a time. Don't expect to handle all in one day. God has been at work longer than you. Time alters many things. Remember your children: Were you as capable as they at handling your life when you were their age? You managed to get through, why should they not also?
3. Share your worries. A trouble shared is a trouble halved. Don't carry it all yourself. Prayer and confession are available to you through the gospel. Pray and confess, do your part and leave the matter in the hands of God.

If the points above do not help, and they should for an average case of worry, I would suggest you share your problem with an understanding minister or doctor. There are points where personal advice alone is helpful. Do not let worry pass to an abnormal state. Many modern physical complaints have their roots in undispersed worry and anxiety.—The Standard, Australia.

LITTLE ENEMIES of Happiness

By Leonard J. Lea

YOU AND I and all of us—little people, big people, important officials, and obscure persons—have public relations problems. Most of us need to know how to get along better with other people. The corporations can afford to hire experts to iron out difficulties, explain away misunderstandings, settle troubles, and get favorable newspaper and radio publicity. But individuals like us have to get along by ourselves. There is nobody to help us. And sometimes we don't do so well, do we?

For example, there is a man I admire that I wish I could talk to a few minutes to explain something I said. It keeps worrying me. But I never get a chance to speak to him. I'm sure he doesn't like me, and he has good reason. If I only had a chance! . . . And there is an old friend who has been rather cool to me since a certain unfortunate thing happened, but I couldn't help it. And every time I think of it, I am very uncomfortable and unhappy. All of you know what I mean. You have had such experiences, too. Why?

I HAVE BEEN thinking lately of some people I know. They aren't getting married soon. Not because they are sour on marriage, nor because they hate people. They are really fine persons, normal in their desire for homes and happiness, but little faults have crept up on them. They are unaware of these faults, and so are unable to correct them. And the faults drive their friends away. I call them the "Little Enemies of Happiness." Would you like to know what some of them are?

Number one case is a young woman, educated, attractive, kind, pleasant, and generous. She would make somebody an excellent companion. Yet she seems doomed to spend her life alone. Why? It is her laughter. If she could hear a recording of it, she would surely change it. But I doubt this will ever occur to her. When she begins to laugh, it is like a snort; then it works down to subterranean roars and gurglings that sound like trouble with the plumbing in the basement. Being of a genial temperament, she laughs often. In all other respects she is wonderful—but her laughter is intolerable. This is the "Little Enemy" of her happiness.

Number two case is a young man. He has a fair education, but is no genius. However, he is rather opinionated, and he is likely to shout down and humiliate anybody who differs with him. He thinks that when he states an opinion, nobody should say anything to the contrary, even if he is wrong. He is especially inclined to be overbearing in conversation with young women friends. As scarce as eligible men are, none of the young women can stand him very long. He is always right, and he wins all the arguments, but he spends many evenings alone. It is doubtful if anybody can help him without using a club.

Number three case is another young woman. She is an interrupter. She and her mother have kept her father in a state of perpetual silence for years. He is never allowed to speak. The minute he begins, they interrupt him. He never gets beyond the verb or the preposition at the very best. Even if they agree with him, they don't allow him to say it; they just snatch the sentence away from him and say it themselves. Trouble is, they treat other people that way, too. Not being able to leave, the father subsided into a state of invalidism. The young men have all fled. Now isn't it a terrible thing to be a talker and have nobody to talk to?

Number four case is a man. He takes no interest in anything. He is negative on all subjects. He is disillusioned on everything. There is no subject you can introduce about which he cannot find something to criticize. He can work up a snarl or a sneer for anything or anybody. He has made the mistake of sneering at relatives of persons present, without knowing it. That lost him more friends. Since he likes nobody but himself, it seems that few people like him.

Number five case is another girl. Her trouble is her sense of humor. The joke is always on somebody else. It may be a silly, shallow, irrelevant joke, but if it will draw a laugh, it satisfies her. It never occurs to her that this kind of humor could bore her friends. In her serious moments she is thoughtful, expresses herself well, even eloquently at times. She has good thoughts, and she is kind to needy people in many practical ways. Many people are grateful to her and love her. But intimate friends find it hard to stand her particular brand of humor. She could be much more popular if she never laughed, never cracked a joke. She loves children, but she will probably spend the rest of her life being kind to other people's children, and buying presents for them.

IF WE COULD ONLY know how we sound to other people! If we could only know how we look to them! How we would reform. Certainly the new machines that record our voices on wire or tape and let us play them back should help millions of us to improve our speech and social conduct. Perhaps it will become a better world because of this one factor.

These are only a few of the Little
(Continued on page 22.)

What Latter Day Saints Believe

IN OUR LAST THREE sermons, we discussed three of the "first principles" of the gospel as they are enumerated by Paul in the sixth chapter of Hebrews—faith, repentance, and baptism in water. But Paul's list gives "baptism" in the plural, making it "baptisms." This third principle is then followed by the fourth, the "laying on of hands."

There are several functions of the "laying on of hands." Others will be discussed in later sermons of this series, such as the gift of healing, the blessing of infants, and the giving of patriarchal blessings to more mature persons who are members of the church. The laying on of hands is also imposed in the ordinance of ordination, which we have already touched upon in our sermon on authority. These uses of the laying on of hands are necessarily limited to those having specific need. But every member of the church must necessarily receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, or for the baptism of the Spirit. Therefore, it is in this connection that we wish to discuss it now.

We quoted to you last week the words of Jesus to Nicodemus: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John the Baptist promised those he baptized, "I indeed have baptized you with water; but he [Christ] shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost." Jesus commanded his disciples to tarry in Jerusalem until they were endowed with power from on high, "For John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence."—Acts 1: 5. Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost promised, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." There are, then, two baptisms by which men gain entrance into the church and kingdom of God; the baptism of water, which we discussed last week, and the baptism of the Holy Spirit, which comes after baptism in water for the remission of sins, and which is bestowed by the laying on of hands.

The eighth chapter of Acts tells of the successful preaching of the gospel in Samaria by Philip. But in spite of the fact that Philip's preaching had met with such success, none of his converts received the Holy Ghost. Therefore, the apostles at Jerusalem sent Peter and John, and verse 17 says, "Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." A similar incident is recorded in the nineteenth chapter of Acts. Paul found at Ephesus a number of converts who had been baptized by someone, but when he asked them whether they had received the Holy Ghost, they said, "We haven't even heard of it." Then Paul rebaptized them in the name of Jesus, "And when Paul had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues and prophesied."—Verse 6.

NOW, IF WE GRANT that the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and the gift of the Holy Ghost were promised to those who had faith, repented, and were baptized in water; and that this baptism or gift was conferred by the laying on of hands, we still might inquire as to its purposes. What is the necessity for a baptism of the Holy Spirit? What may be expected from one who has truly received the gift of the Holy Ghost? What is its function in the lives of those who have taken upon them the name of Christ?

In general terms, we might answer that the Holy Spirit does for the church, the "body of Christ," what the spirit or personality of a man does in the physical body. The body without the spirit is dead. It is the spirit in the physical body which gives it character and personality—which gives it life, continuity, strength, unity, and direction. It is the means by which a man is enabled to say "I am," to know that he exists as a personality. All these, and perhaps other functions of the spirit in the physical body have their parallels in the functionings and purposes of the Holy Spirit in the body of Christ.

FIRST, LET US CONSIDER how the Spirit gives life to the body. When food enters the physical body it is dead, inert, lifeless. Through a certain mystical and incomprehensible process, it is transformed through digestion and assimilation into body cells. Somewhere, somehow, it crosses a mystic line, and becomes no more extraneous, lifeless food, but live body. It is endowed with life. In this living state it begins to function as a part of the body, to accept directions and controls from the spirit that rules the body. It helps to strengthen, sustain, and defend the body, and in return receives protection and strength from the body. In parallel manner, the baptism of the Holy Spirit is our seal of adoption into the body of Christ. We know that we are no more dead in trespasses and sins, but alive in him. "If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Romans 8: 9. "That Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God."—Romans 8: 16. By the Spirit of Christ, we are given the earnest of our inheritance (Ephesians 1: 13, 14). We are sealed unto the day of redemption (Ephesians 4: 30). By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body (I Corinthians 12: 13). The baptism of the Holy Spirit makes us alive in Christ, and certifies to us and to the world that now we live in him.

About the Baptism of the Holy Spirit

BY EVAN A. FRY

THE SECOND PURPOSE or function of the Holy Spirit is to give continuity to the body of Christ. Here again, let us draw a parallel with the physical body in which we dwell. Old cells are continually dying, and being replaced with new. Physiologists tell us that every cell in our body is changed not less than every seven years. No cell in your body today was there seven years ago. Yet you are the same person, subject to the decisions and contracts made two or three times seven years ago. It is the spirit within the body which gives it personality and continuity. Similarly the church is constantly losing its members by death, and adding new ones by baptism. If each member in turn becomes subject to the personality or Spirit which enlivens and directs the church (the body of Christ), it will have continuity without changeability or variability. Under the Holy Spirit, the church should continue from age to age with the same mind, the same will, the same organizational structure, the same officers, the same functions, the same ordinances and sacraments, and the same purposes. Hence, the obvious necessity of having each new cell or member in turn baptized and enlivened with the Holy Spirit which gives life and continuity to the church of Christ.

THE THIRD PURPOSE or function of the Holy Spirit which we shall notice is that of giving strength or "comfort" to the body of Christ. One who does not know the etymology of the word "comfort" can gain a completely erroneous impression from the fourteenth chapter of John, which contains Jesus' promise to send his disciples "another Comforter," the Spirit of Truth, which was to teach them all things, bring all things unto their remembrance, and guide them into all truth. Today we think of comfort as solace in affliction or sorrow, or perhaps as idle ease. In the days when our King James translation was written, it meant something quite different. "Comfort" comes to the English language through the French from two Latin words, con, meaning "with," plus forte, meaning "great strength or power." The Holy Comforter, then, is one that strengthens much, or gives great power. This is the meaning behind Christ's instruction to the disciples to tarry in Jerusalem until they were endowed with power from on high (Luke 24: 49). This promise is again recalled in Acts 1: 8: "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," and in Simon's request that the apostles give him this power (Acts 8: 19). The Comforter, then, is not to give solace in affliction and sorrow but to give power—to strengthen much.

THE FOURTH PURPOSE or function of the Holy Spirit, which is given with the laying on of hands as a second baptism, is to bring unity to the body of Christ. The church, or body of Christ, is composed of people of all races, all nations, all degrees of civilization and education, all ages. These members have varying tastes, ambitions, ideals, concepts. If they are to function as a unit, or as a living organism, there must be one directing Spirit—not many. By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body (I Corinthians 12: 13). "One Lord, one faith, one baptism" (Ephesians 4: 4). As in the human body, the spirit co-ordinates and unifies the several organs, cells, members, and functions so that they all work with and for each other, so in the body of Christ, his Spirit brings about a unity of faith, hope, doctrine, ordinances, endeavor, and love of the members for each other.

THE FIFTH PURPOSE of the Holy Spirit is to give guidance, direction, and instruction to the church, the body of Christ, both individually and collectively. Jesus promised in John 16: 13, "He shall guide you into all truth" and in John 14: 26, "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance." When this Spirit abides in a member of the body of Christ, it enables him to seek out new truth; it helps him interpret correctly the Scriptures which have already been written. It directs him in time of doubt or perplexity. Especially does it direct those who have the burden and responsibility of the church, pointing out the men who are to be ordained as it pointed out Barnabas and Saul (Acts 13: 2), telling them where to go, as Paul was directed to Macedonia and to several other mission fields, and as Peter was sent to Cornelius and the Gentiles, inspiring them in preaching and exhorting, warning them of impending events, as Paul was warned of his imprisonment and death in Rome, and enabling them to discern the hearts of men as the apostles discerned the hearts of Ananias and Sapphira.

THE SIXTH PURPOSE of the Holy Spirit, and in many ways the most important, is to testify of Christ. Paul says, "No man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost."—I Corinthians 12: 13. Jesus promised, "When the Comforter is come, . . . he shall testify of me."—John 15: 26. Under that Spirit, Peter acknowledged to Jesus, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God."—Matthew 16: 16. As the spirit in the human body brings a consciousness of existence, of selfhood, and the ability to say "I am," so the Holy Spirit dwelling in us enables us to know the body of which we are a part, and to know we are a part of the personality or Spirit which permeates that body. By this Spirit we know we are Christ's, and that Jesus is the Christ, the ever-living and resurrected Son of the Eternal Father.

THE SEVENTH PURPOSE of the Holy Spirit is to indicate by certain signs that there is life in the body. In the human body, there are certain signs which indicate life—movement, pulse, respiration, reflex action in muscles, speech, etc. If none of these signs is present, the body is dead. If the Spirit of Christ dwells in the church, certain signs of life will be manifested: "These signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; and they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." If the Spirit of Christ is in the church, life will be indicated by certain spiritual gifts as enumerated by Paul in the twelfth chapter of I Corinthians. If none of these signs follow, and if none of these gifts of the Spirit appear, then there is no Holy Spirit present, and the body is dead.

PERHAPS THERE ARE other purposes of the Holy Spirit, and other reasons we could plead for the necessity of the baptism of the Holy Spirit for every member who seeks entrance into the kingdom of God, or the body of Christ; but these seven should suffice for now. One last thought, and we have finished. The baptism of the Holy Spirit and the gift of the abiding Comforter cannot in the very nature of things be bestowed indiscriminately. The world cannot receive the Comforter, any more than your body can receive my spirit. Christ's Spirit dwells only in the "body of Christ," a body which is composed of men and women who have been changed by faith, repentance, and baptism, and turned into the kind of people who can receive of the Spirit of Christ. That Spirit dwells not in unholy temples. A sin-soaked body, dedicated to evil, cannot receive or contain the Holy Spirit any more than a wooden wire will receive and conduct electricity. Even those who have once received the Comforter must be constantly alert lest they grieve the Holy Spirit of God and cause it to depart. When it does, we are no more members of the body of Christ: we are dead.

May this Holy Comforter be yours to discover and enjoy, and may it guide you into all truth until you become truly a living member in the body of Christ, with all the blessings which such a relationship can bring, is our prayer.

Fortified

By Grace L. Krahl

If gift-giving at Christmas time has its problems, so also has gift-receiving. The latter was my experience this yuletide.

Whether from habit in sending or my extreme fondness for chocolates known to my family and certain friends, I usually have one or two boxes of chocolates to tempt a non-resistant liking.

This year it was important that such sweets should be avoided, because of a severe cold for one thing, and on general principles that confection should be indulged in with considerable moderation, anyway.

For once I would be resolute: determined, firm, bold, tenacious (Thesaurus). But after such fortification, strangely enough no chocolates were added to the gifts that came. With a sigh of insincere relief, I said I would not have that temptation to deal with, and my rather lofty resolves would not be tested.

But I was too hasty. Before Christmas Eve had passed, a little boy with laughing eyes presented me with a package of chocolates. I accepted them, of course, with smiles and thank yous, for I loved the little giver—and to be polite, I sampled two or three and exclaimed on their goodness. Alone with the chocolates, my sampling continued until I desperately wrapped the package securely in two papers, mounted a chair, and placed them on a high shelf in a far corner, alighting with the air of a conqueror—even if it was by a second-rate method. There they remained unmolested for several days.

But one day it occurred to me that a high shelf was not a very good place for chocolates—the higher the shelf the higher the temperature; perhaps they would soften, perhaps melt. I had better put them somewhere else. So again I scaled the height, and, with a long reach, retrieved the abandoned chocolates. I really should have a look at them . . . no, a look would be dangerous to my recently-won conquest. So with speed I hastened to the refrigerator and deposited them in seclusion for some future, prudent use.

Perhaps cold storage is a good place to put temptations if we keep them there.

All this is to suggest that we should give more serious thought to our little overindulgences from which we may feel no immediate discomfort. If any project needs a long-range program, it is a health-building plan for old age. Why should there be so much sickness among our people, when we have a heaven-sent guide to instruct us for soundness and vigor of body and mind? Have we made the Word of Wisdom so controversial that we don't know where we are? Pardon the preaching.

There is a dish of crumbs in the snow outside my window to show the birds my interest in their welfare, but none have come to partake. I wonder if they prefer chocolates!

We cannot command nature except by obeying her.—Bacon's Novum Organum.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Our College AND MISSIONS ABROAD

BY ROY CHEVILLE

GRACELAND IS joining in the church-wide youth program of world-wide missions. This is no mushroom interest. It began in the fall of 1945 when contacts with the Dutch Saints were resumed. That Christmas, boxes of clothing and personal supplies were mailed to Europe. Letters began to come and go across the Atlantic. The General Conference of 1947 gave new impetus. The League program summoned young people of the church to join in two endeavors: (1) the raising of $25,000 by youth for furthering "Missions Abroad," and, (2) the celebration of the Restoration by Leaguers all around the world this coming April. So last summer, when the year's program took shape, the missionary interest was written into it with marked emphasis. The coming April Festival will be one part of a year-long concern.

A Benedictory Service

The Wednesday night of the first week of college will ever stand out as a mountain of inspiration. The four couples assigned to the European mission came to the campus as they were en route to their new fields. Each spoke in testimony: Frank and Zeta Fry, Glen and Alice Johnson, Albert and Twyla Scherer, and Gene and Alma Theys. That night more than 500 young Latter Day Saints pledged to "keep the home fires burning." With organ and trumpeters, they filled the building with the stirring call to missions, "Heralds of Christ, Who Bear the King's Commands." It was a dramatic moment when these four couples, given the hand of fellowship by the president of our college, went down the center aisle as the congregation sang "God Be With You." Such a beginning to the year must have high follow-up activities.

Out From Home-coming

The reunion of alumni and friends was more than a gala festivity. It centered about the world-wide mission of this small college in the heart of America. The early Sunday morning service sent out tokens of this international fellowship of the Graceland. To Norway went a letter of fraternity, to Holland a carton of clothing, to England an autographed book, to Hawaii a picture of the tower. To Japan went a box of soap, dishes, etc., to Peter Chosokabi. Two months before home-coming, a letter had come from "Peter Choso," whose place of residence had become unknown. He was the student who in 1912 had given the name "Acacia" to our year-book. That morning's prayer of benediction blended these far away friends into that circle of fellowship.

That same morning, Bishop G. L. DeLapp brought in graphic portrayal the condition of Saints in Britain, Scandinavia, Germany, and Holland. Again the barriers of distance and language were temporarily overcome.

A Thanksgiving Offering

On Thanksgiving Sunday morning, the climax of the service was the reception of the Thanksgiving offering to the youth fund for missions abroad.

Committees of faculty and students have been working for three months on making contact with five fields outside America. Each will bring the conditions and the calls of the countries. These are the five:

1. Scandinavia. Velma Ruch, who lived there while her parents were missionaries, is chief interpreter. A chorus will sing hymns of the church in the Norwegian language.

2. Hawaii. A company of Hawaiian students with E. J. Gleazer and Ray Zinser brings the picture of this mission in the Pacific.

3. Australasia. Andy Scott of New Zealand and Don Swain, Gordon Mesley, and the Judds of Australia will work with W. S. Gould.

4. Britain. Three English girls, students at the college will share with Tess Morgan in planning the service. Fred Davies, recently arrived from the British Mission, will bring firsthand material.

5. Germany and Holland. Thelma Sintz is assembling greetings and news from those in the field. Henry Schaffer will be invited to speak of his native land.

Then on February 22, E. J. Gleazer, Jr., will bring the concluding sermon, "Our Message to the World of 1948," and the second offering for the mission fund will be taken.

Looking Toward April

Leagues throughout the church will be holding anniversary festivals between April 4 and 18. Here is Graceland's schedule:

Sunday, April 4—9:00, Meditation Chapel, "If Any Lack Wisdom."

10:30, Anniversary Service, "Our Heritage in the Restoration." 2:00, Zionics Club, "One Center Place; Many Peoples." 4:00, Volunteers' Club, "Branches Around the World."

Wednesday, April 7—7:00, Fellowship, "These Are My Brothers of the World."

Thursday, April 8—10:45, Assembly, "A World Flight in Forty Minutes."

Saturday, April 10—7:30, Festival Banquet, "One World, One Word."

Sunday, April 11—9:00, Meditation Chapel, "Hear Ye Him!" 10:30, Service of Lord's Supper.

Wednesday, April 14—7:30, Fellowship, "These Things We Share."

The Thrill of Joining With

This year alert students at Graceland are pushing back the boundaries of their souls. Those who will can live with gospel friends from—states of the United States, from Canada, from Hawaii, from England, from New Zealand, from Australia. These are on the campus. But this is not all. Through these activities relative to missions abroad, the circle is pushed farther to include Holland, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Norway. This is bringing in some money to the church coffers. It is extending aid to needy Saints. Most of all it is causing something to happen in us. We are seeing these youth of other lands as our brothers in Christ. The call of that Christ shall be reheard in the April youth festival. It is still a simple salutation, "Hear Ye Him!"

The Judgment of Solomon

Paul Kruger, President of the Transvaal, once decided a dispute between two brothers about an inheritance of land in South Africa thus: "Let one brother divide the land, and let the other have first choice."—Sarah Gertrude Millin, Cecil Rhodes (Harper).

Price Changes Effective March 1

The following price changes of our own materials are effective March 1.

	From	To
Angel Message Tract Book—cloth	$ 1.00	$ 1.25
Angel Message Tract Book—paper	.50	.75
Book of Mormon—cloth	1.50	1.75
Book of Mormon—limp leather	4.00	4.50
Book of Mormon—flexible leather	5.00	5.50
The Church School, Its Organization, and Administration	.50	.60
Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants	2.00	2.25
	5 for 1.65	5 for 2.00
Compendium	1.75	2.00
Doctrinal References	.25	.35*
Does It Make Any Difference?	.50	.60
Enduring Word	2.00	2.25
	5 for 1.65	5 for 2.00
Exploring the Church	.50	.60
The First Americans	.50	.60
God Our Help	1.75	2.00
Improving Teaching—Children's Division	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Young People's Division	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Junior High Division	.50	.60
Inspired Version of the Bible—cloth	4.25	4.50
Inspired Version of the Bible limp leather	6.75	7.00
with thumb index.	7.75	8.00
Inspired Version of the Bible flexible leather	9.25	9.50
with thumb index	10.25	10.50
Inspired Version of the Bible—de luxe	10.75	11.00
with thumb index	11.75	12.00
Junior Church Manual	.50	.60
L.D.S. and Changing Relationship to the Social Order	.50	.60
Let Us Worship	1.50	2.00
On Memory's Beam	2.50	3.00
Oriole Girl's Handbook	.35	.50
Restoration: A Study in Prophecy	1.75	2.00
	5 for 1.50	5 for 1.85
The Scouting Program	.35	.50
That Problem of Leadership	.50	.60
Through the West Door	2.00	2.50
Zion's League Annual	2.00	2.50

*no quantity price

Beginning March 1

the subscription rate of the Saints' Herald will be:

$3.50 per year to the United States
 $3.75 per year to Canada
 $4.50 per year to Foreign Countries

Left to right: Dr. R. F. Gard, president of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital staff; Miss Gertrude Copeland, superintendent; Mrs. Henry C. Smith (back to camera); Mrs. Israel A. Smith; President Israel A. Smith; and Henry C. Smith, architect who designed the new Sanitarium.

Silver Anniversary for Miss Copeland

Superintendent of Independence Sanitarium and Hospital
 Celebrates Twenty-five Years of Service
 Adapted from reports by Grace Pennell Tousley

TO SHOW APPRECIATION for the twenty-five years of service which Miss Gertrude E. Copeland, R. N., has given the church and community as superintendent of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, the board of directors, medical staff, and Nurses' Alumni Association of that institution gave a reception in her honor on Sunday, January 4, from 4 to 6 p. m. in the lounge in Nurses' Home.

To make the reception truly representative of the community, in spite of limitations of time and space, it was necessary to make it an invitational affair. Accordingly, invitations were sent to persons who officially represent organized groups, such as ministers of all denominations locally established, and officers of local service clubs, labor, educational, business, professional, and governmental groups, as well as to Miss Copeland's friends.

It was probably the memory of that bitterly cold morning of January 3, 1923, when she arrived in Independence to take over the direction of the Sanitarium, which prompted Miss Copeland to predict a blizzard for the day of the reception. The blizzard came all right, but a few days ahead of the reception, so that by Sunday the streets were fairly clear, the sun shone, and the temperature had moderated.

The more than 500 guests found summer in the lounge, for friends had sent flowers, brilliant and fragrant, in abundance. Congratulatory letters and telegrams continued to come in during the reception and were added to the large collection already mounted on a screen in the library. A letter from Mrs. Harry S. Truman occupied the place of honor on the screen.

MISS COPELAND WAS GRADUATED from the Hahne-mann College and Hospital School of Nursing in 1916. In July, 1917, she went into service at Camp Meade, Maryland, and from there to France, where she served at Base Hospital 48 in Mars Surallier. Upon her return to America, she served as superintendent of the hospital and nurses at Wyoming Valley Homeopathic Hospital at Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, and in the same capacities at the Medical and Surgical Hospital in Reading, Pennsylvania.

Coming to the Independence Sanitarium in 1923, she served both as superintendent of the hospital and as director of nurses until June, 1943. The increased patient load necessitated a relinquishment of the duties as director of nurses, which position was filled by Miss Nelle Morgan, R. N.

During the twenty-five years of Miss Copeland's administration, the new seven-story and basement hospital building has been completed. There are now 188 hospital personnel, seventy-two student nurses, and a daily average of 129 patients. Dr. R. F. Gard is president of the medical staff, which is composed of thirty-one physicians and surgeons. In addition to the School of Nursing, there has been added a school for X ray and laboratory technicians.

Miss Copeland has a paid-up lifetime membership in the American Hospital Association. She is also a member of the Missouri Hospital Association, the Kansas City Area Hospital Council, and the American Nurses' Association. She is the only hospital superintendent in the Council, with the exception of Mr. Smiley of St. Luke's Hospital in Kansas City, who has been with one institution for twenty-five years.

Food Chats

By B. MILDRED NELSON, Instructor in Nutrition Extension Department, Ames, Iowa

DO YOU KNOW that the average American could stop eating for a full day each week and still eat as much as he ate before the war? Maybe you couldn't. It may be that you were among those fortunate ones who had everything they wanted to eat, and so did not change eating habits much when money and employment became more plentiful. But there were many persons in the United States who didn't have! The fact that many of those persons now do have enough to eat, and that many of us have enough and to spare, has made the difference.

Even though you do not eat much more than you did before the war, chances are you have changed the kind of foods you eat, to some extent, right along with the rest of us. Generally speaking, we eat more meat, milk, cheese, eggs, fruits, margarine, and green and yellow vegetables than we did; but we eat fewer cereals, butter, and potatoes.

Now, to produce the meat, milk, and eggs, it takes grain or cereals that could be used more efficiently as human food. Right now the lives of our fellow men depend upon that grain. For that reason we are asked to change the kinds of foods we eat once more, this time temporarily. We can increase the amount of fruits and vegetables—especially potatoes and root vegetables which are plentiful right now—and at the same time substitute them and other cereals for wheat when possible. They will take the place of some of the foods that use grain inefficiently. The menu today has been planned to do just this, and with it no one needs to go hungry.

YOU HAD NOT forgotten about "Meatless Tuesday" had you?

You know, before the war we were eating an average of 2.4 pounds of meat a week. This year we are averaging about 3 pounds a week, and that is a lot of meat! With a demand like that, it is no wonder that prices have gone sky high! And as long as people are willing to pay high prices for choice meats, there is a great temptation to get that high-priced meat on the market, even if it does take extra grain. To grow three pounds of beef, it takes about thirty-six pounds of wheat, they tell us; and if its "finishing" the animal, it takes more.

The question is, "Can we afford to do it?" That may look like a silly question, when we know that to do it may bring bigger prices for the live stock we sell. But what have we gained if, in turn, we must allocate more money for national defense—if, in turn, we have to send our sons and daughters again to fight a war? We cannot forget that food helped win the war. Now we must give it a chance to help win the peace.

We've had meatless Tuesday enough now to be quite accustomed to it, if we weren't already. And it isn't so bad, is it? It becomes much easier to "take" when we know that for every serving of beef that we save, someone who might otherwise starve, may get ten times the number of calories in grain that we would have eaten in that meat. In other words, if our meat would have given us 300 calories, the grain that would have been used to produce that beef could have supplied about 3,000 calories for someone. In places where the ration stands at 1,550 calories per day, that is nearly a two day's food supply. Of course, it isn't that simple, but figures do give some idea of what we are doing for others when we really observe this day.

CAN WE AFFORD to eat all we want or to make all the money we can, when we know that to do so may mean the difference between life and death, not only for the starving peoples of the world, but for us as well? The little you save on meatless Tuesday may seem very small. Multiply that by 140 millions or so, though, and see what it could amount to if every person in the United States really observed this day.

As we think back over the food we have had for the week, I'll venture a guess that no one of us feels that she has done all that she could to save food!

When we decrease our use of animal products, we must choose wisely the foods that we use in their stead. We know that whole grain cereals will much more completely satisfy our needs than highly milled ones. Right now, we have a good supply of some of our best root vegetables to use, sweet potatoes, white potatoes, carrots, onions, and many others. We still see to it that we get the milk we need in so far as possible. Our legumes, especially soybeans, stand us in good stead.

And we have not, as a whole, cut down our consumption of poultry and meats to anything like the minimum amount recommended for a good diet. In fact, to do that would mean that we have more than two days a week without either meat or poultry. If we keep the rest of our menus well-balanced with good quality food, we have nothing to fear so far as our health is concerned.

Of course, there are some who should not decrease their food intake. Pregnant and nursing mothers and very young children must have the best food possible to meet their body needs. Some of our own peo-

- - - a home column feature - - -

Travelog

(Pacific Coast Journey Continued)

Early in October, arrangements were made for me to visit several points in the Pacific Mission in company with W. Wallace Smith of the Quorum of Twelve. So after my Portland, Oregon, visit, we proceeded to Sacramento on November 15. My diary discloses that we were both domiciled at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Laurence McDonald, district president.

Here we met with the Saints from various places, a youth's convention being in progress in charge of district authorities. We shared ministry with Evangelist Dawson, Bishop Burdick, Brother McDonald, and Brother Wallace on Sunday. On Monday, the McDonalds took us to Berkeley, where I was billeted at the home of Elder and Sister Alma C. Andrews, pastor.

Tuesday we visited San Francisco, had luncheon with Sister Christiana Waller, saw some of the notable places of the city, and dined with Brother and Sister Edward W. Nelson. Sister Christiana Waller and Sister Nelson are daughters of Brother Gilbert Waller, lately deceased and well-beloved patriarch.

Wednesday we spoke to a large audience in the Berkeley Church and with Brother Andrews visited various proposed church sites in San Leandro. Thursday we again visited San Francisco, meeting a cousin, Doctor Herbert S.

ple have never had enough to eat, but that isn't true of many of us here.

NOW IS THE TIME for some of us who are overweight to regain health, as well as beauty, that we may have lost. It seems that overweight is a contributing factor in many of the diseases that bring about suffering and early death. Extra layers of fat impair the action of our heart and other vital organs.

Only when we are sure that we have wasted absolutely nothing, that our families are well fed on foods that are not costly in grain, that we have reduced our use of grain-costly foods in line with the food and feed conservation program, that we have lost some of our excess flesh, if need be, can we be sure that we have done all that we can to help win the peace.

Salisbury of San Rafael, a grand-nephew of the Prophet Joseph Smith. We enjoyed a fine fish dinner at "Fisherman's Wharf," and rode the famous cable cars of San Francisco.

Friday we were driven by Brother Andrews to San Jose. During the day we visited with Pastor Elbert D. Guilbert, having dinner at his home. We also visited former missionary, Dr. Guy P. Levitt, and his wife. We have been pained within recent days to learn of Doctor Levitt's sudden demise, a contingency little dreamed when we talked with him on November 21.

That night Brother Wallace and I again shared the hour at church, after which refreshments were served. I was pleased to meet here two of my wife's nephews, Brethren Earl and Leigh Traxler, sons of Brother and Sister Moroni Traxler of Lamoni, who came from Palo Alto and Hamilton Field to attend the service.

Saturday morning found us on the long journey from San Jose to Los Angeles, Brother Andrews having returned to Berkeley from San Jose the night before. We were met by District President Lewis J. Ostertag and Elder G. E. Tickemyer, pastor of the Central Church. After dining with the Ostertags, Brother Wallace was invited to the Tickemyer home. I remained the guest of Brother and Sister Ostertag, who contributed much to the enjoyment of my visit in the Los Angeles area.

The time at Los Angeles was well scheduled: I spoke at the morning service at Central, and Brother Wallace occupied at the evening service. We broke bread at the Tickemyer home, finding all—including Garry and David—in good health.

Monday night we were at Pasadena with Blaine Bender, pastor; Tuesday night at East Los Angeles, Elder Virgie Lum, pastor; Wednesday night at Long Beach, J. P. Davis, pastor. During this week we enjoyed the hospitality of Brother and Sister F. A. Cool and Brother and Sister Al Nunamaker of Temple City; also Brother and Sister J. P. Davis of Long Beach. On Thanksgiving Day, we had a fine dinner at the home of Brother and Sister Blaine Bender. Here Brother Bender gave us the treat of telephone calls to our homes—something we especially appreciated.

After this very busy week, we said good-by, temporarily, to Los Angeles and, in company with Brother Ostertag, went to San Diego. Here we were met by Brother W. D. Gillen, a boyhood friend, and Pastor Peter S. Whalley and his hospitable wife. Staying at their home—a visit we greatly enjoyed—gave us an opportunity to get better acquainted with these good people.

Here, we again spoke to a well-filled church, and on Saturday morning, we retraced our course to Los Angeles.

For some months we had been helping to perfect arrangements with Pastor Carl F. Ruoff for a dedication on November 30 at Compton. At the initial service at 9:45, Brother Wallace talked on "Flags and Our Idealism." Both church and national flags, gifts of the young people of the branch, were dedicated at this time. District President Ostertag gave the prayer. I spoke at the 11 o'clock service.

We had dinner at the Ruoff's, Brother John W. Rushton being with us. At 2:45 in the afternoon, we returned to the church for a program of dedication. Pastor Ruoff gave a history of the branch, after which the deed was presented to Bishop David Carmichael. The rest of the service consisted of a violin solo by Sister Erleta Covalt, scripture reading by Apostle Smith, a vocal solo by Sister Kathalee Bowser, my sermon of dedication, and a dedicatory prayer by Brother Rushton. The 4:30 priesthood meeting, at which I spoke briefly, marked the close of my activities on the coast. Brother Wallace remained to address the congregation at the evening service. Sister Ostertag took me to the station, where I boarded a train direct to Kansas City and home, which I had not seen for five weeks.

Here I found affairs well under control by my associate, Brother Edwards—whose able services I am glad to acknowledge—and others of our office force.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

now available
Doctrine and Covenants
in cloth binding
$1.50

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

Peace at Any Price?

WE WANT PEACE. One hundred forty million strong, less perhaps a handful of selfish warmongers, we Americans share the dread of most of the rest of the world that we may soon be plunged into an atom bomb war which will leave our civilization a radioactive mass of rubble.

After pooling their mass intelligence to produce the atom bomb, our scientists now worry because the average citizen apparently doesn't sense the frightful possibilities inherent in letting world history work itself out as has been done in the past. Some optimistic souls have predicted that men will not dare fight again because at last we have had placed in our unwilling hands the means of race-suicide. Yes, we want peace. But what kind of price are we willing to pay for it? Because, like all desirable good things, peace must be obtained at a price. No amount of idealistic mumbo-jumbo or Oxford-accented oratory can camouflage for long the desperate need we have for some straight thinking and quick acting. An intelligent and informed citizenry will follow brave leaders they feel they can trust, but only so long as those leaders demonstrate their ability in action.

Ideals are certainly of paramount importance today, but they must be coupled with affirmative action to be of real worth. Jesus, our supreme model, was not one who went about mouthing platitudes and looking piously into the sky when a real problem came within his reach. He was a man of action—affirmative action.

Just prior to World War II, I remember hearing a few well-meaning persons declare themselves extreme pacifists. They would not fight even if America were invaded, so they said. Yet when the critical hour came, there they were in the thick of it. We enjoy the blessings of this fine land today because the ideals and yearnings of our fathers included enough spunk and fire to make them fight for certain freedoms they held dear. If we today tamely submit to the forces of evil, be they moral or physical, we pay a heavy penalty in suffering. Our God may not be a god of battles, yet in no

Here Is the Writer . . .

Lloyd Cleveland was born on a farm in southeastern Missouri. He attended high school in Kennett, graduating in 1933. At Graceland, where he met his wife—the former Lurline Davis—he was editor of the "Tower" in 1937-38. He received his Bachelor's Degree in education at Butler University in Indianapolis and is now teaching in Aurora, Illinois. He is an elder and is serving as pastor of the Elgin, Illinois, mission.

instance that I recall has he advised us to meekly lay our heads on the chopping block and wait for the executioner's ax.

There is a current trend toward self-abnegation and self-criticism in America. Perhaps we need this. Truly, we have demonstrated some woeful characteristics of selfishness, complacency, and "technological drunkenness" as a Herald writer of my acquaintance recently put it. Yet, while we direly need an expanded social awareness, and even more urgently an individual and national repentance for our worship of material things and our catering to selfish appetites, let us not lose sight of the greatnesses of our country in playing up its weaknesses.

By Lloyd E. Cleveland

The world situation today demands thoughtful consideration on the part of all of us if we are to survive physically, economically, religiously, and otherwise weather the successive shocks of total war, inflation, ideological warfare, and, in all probability, future depression. We must ask ourselves not whether we should assist those less fortunate than we, but rather how far we can go with such help without ourselves joining the ranks of the unfortunate.

It is, admittedly, rather difficult for the average citizen to make heads or tails of the complex international situation as it unfolds from day to day. Even the so-called experts on international affairs fail to agree on the course which the United States should chart in today's turbulent political and economic waters. If we are to become intelligent and thoughtful observers, capable of analyzing problems with any degree of accuracy, we must be willing to spend considerable time in studying good periodicals and in listening to informative radio programs or round-table discussions of current problems in which all sides are presented. If such study is coupled with knowledge which comes through earnest study of our own literature, we will not likely be narrow or prejudiced in our opinions.

We speak largely in terms of billions of dollars today. These huge sums mean little until we interpret them in terms of our natural resources and raw materials. These billions must underwrite the willingness of Americans to share their wealth long enough to alleviate immediate suffering and help prevent future distress abroad. I believe we are agreed on this policy. One point on which we do not all agree is to whom our help should go. The Chinese? Perhaps. But here we must be careful. We could easily bankrupt ourselves trying to feed a population four times our own, or any considerable part of that population. (Why can't they stop fighting and feed themselves?) The French and Italians? Yes, but only so long as it takes them to get their own wheels of industry moving. The Russians? Instinctively we draw back from this suggestion. Our feeling for the Russian peasant is a kindly one, but the Russian peasant does not rule Russia today. According to their own statements, the men who rule in the Kremlin today are implacable foes of our democratic way of life and are dedicated to overthrowing and controlling the rest of the world according to their own ideas. Could we freely worship the God of our Fathers under their control? Yet in our heart we know if the Russian peasant was starving, Americans would wish to send help.

The big problem for most of us, or at least those of us who are not isolationists, is to sift enough real, understandable facts from the biased, propaganda-slanted, and otherwise distorted news reports of the day to help us take an informed and intelligent stand on international affairs. If we fail to take a stand, we automatically take one anyway—we unwittingly align ourselves with the great masses of “sheep” who follow the many unscrupulous bellwethers that seek to lead us.

For most of us, peace is utterly desirable, yet the vicious and debased elements in world governments constantly plot new terrors. Today it is a “cold war.” Tomorrow? Tomorrow is uncertain, yet to every studious Latter Day Saint comes the realization that to fear the future, with the promise of Zion haunting us with its glorious possibilities, is deadening. Fear can make weaklings of us when strength is demanded. Fear saps the life-giving energies which build and replaces them with craven impulses to “wait a while,” to go slowly—so slowly no movement is perceptible—to let someone else lead out and bear the brunt of the fight. Fear is what many of the wisest spiritual leaders of the faithful in an earlier day cautioned against. Let us then be cautious and wise and prayerful, but never fearful.

Today, man struggles in a net of his own weaving, hoping to cure his ills with makeshift remedies. In his own wisdom, he created the League of Nations and its recent counterpart, the United Nations Organization. With characteristic selfishness and lack of foresight, he abandoned the noble principles set forth in the one and bids fair to give a repeat performance with the second. The League did not fail. Men failed the League, and a noble experiment in human relations died a-borning. Now it appears that world peace, as prophesied in the Scriptures, will be achieved only by the coming of Jesus Christ and the ushering in of the millennium. In numerous instances we are commanded to work in and for peace. Paul, in Romans 8: 6, says, “To be spiritually minded is life and peace.” Let us then keep our spiritual balance and work everlastingly to build the only type of society in which we can hope for true peace—the kingdom of God.

The Trouble-Shooter

A House Divided

Question:

My husband is a nonmember and does not believe in paying tithing. I work and have always tithed the things which I purchase from my income, but that covers only a part of the so-called luxuries that we, as a family, enjoy. Should I pay tithing for both of us, or is it justifiable for me to continue to consider our incomes and expenditures as separate accounts?

Answer:

By Bishop J. Stanley Kelley

Since you have a separate income obtained through your own work, this should be on a tithable basis. You “tithed the things which you purchase from your income” but say nothing about tithing the amount that is saved. This should be tithed also.

The “so-called” luxuries purchased from your own income are tithed, according to your statement. If you are working for the sole purpose of obtaining luxuries and all of your wages are spent this way, your husband is giving assistance to the tithe paying by furnishing all the necessary living expenses. Part of the development of the individual member under the church law comes from trying to determine fairly what things are luxuries and what are luxuries “so-called.”

This brings up the whole question of the separate income of the working wife and how it should be used. If it is necessary for the wife to work to make up a deficit in the living expenses of the family, then these expenditures—items of necessity—are not subject to tithing. If the reason for working is to assist in the purchase of the home or to add to the family investments in other ways, the separate income of the church member is tithable.

There are a number of reasons why husbands and wives both work outside the home, but in all such cases it should be mutually agreeable. If such is not the case, the family difficulties have already begun before the question of tithable income arises. Then the church obligations and the question of tithable income, objectionable to the husband, would only intensify disagreement. It has always been considered inadvisable to insist on paying tithing to the church whenever this is the basis of family quarrels.

Should the wife continue to work if she is needed in the home? This is another question, of course, and need not be answered here. It might be well to add that in home-building the accepted principle is that the wife should be in the home. If she spends her time at home, there is a slightly different problem of the wife (member) paying tithing on part of the income. The underlying principle is the same, however, as the wife is entitled to share the income.

There have been cases in which wives have handled the problem diplomatically and well in the home where the husband has been a nonmember. A number of cases have occurred in which the husband objected to tithing of any amount. By patient work without making "issues," wives have won them to recognize the value of the financial law of the church and in many cases, their husbands have become members.

A woman member of the church, with separate income, is subject to the financial law as well as a man who is a member. The nonmember husband is not subject to the law of the church. His share of the income is not tithable.

Yes, the wife should pay tithing on her part of the income, with proper necessary living deductions (on a basis agreed upon) but should only pay tithing for her nonmember husband with his full knowledge and consent.

Little Enemies of Happiness

(Continued from page 11.)

Enemies of Happiness. There are thousands of others. You may have a few. I have a great many. Everybody has some. Wouldn't it be wonderful if we could all help each other to get rid of them? But then, that would hurt more feelings, too. And you know how unpopular people can become for saying what they think!

But maybe you can help yourself. What is there in your speech or conduct that seems silly to other people? What drives them away, and makes you unpopular? Analyze yourself, look at yourself honestly in the mirror. If possible, get a recording of your voice. It may help you to "win friends and influence people," instead of driving them away and making them angry.

BULLETIN BOARD

Oregon Youth Convention

A youth convention will be held at the Woodburn, Oregon, church on February 14 and 15. Saturday's program, under the direction of Missionary James Reneau, will consist of recreation and services by and for young people, beginning at 2 p.m. Sunday's activities will include a prayer service at 8:30 a.m.; a sermon by Elder Reneau at 11; a basket dinner at noon (please bring a dish for your family); afternoon classwork with President J. L. Verhei and other district leaders teaching; and a closing sermon by Samuel Morris.

All young people and their leaders are urged to attend.

SAMUEL MORRIS,

District Young People's Leader.

Michigan Women's Institute

The Southern Michigan District Women's Institute will be held on April 6 at the Women's City Club in Lansing, Michigan. Registration will begin at 9 a.m. From 10 to 11, District President E. R. Carter will conduct a fellowship service. From 11 to 12 and 2 to 3 p.m., Pauline Arnson, chairman of the General Council of Women, will be in charge of class work. A brief reconsecration service will conclude the afternoon's activities. A banquet for both men and women will be held at 6:30 p.m., in celebration of the 118th anniversary of the church. A sandwich luncheon will be served at noon. Women of the surrounding districts are invited to attend.

NELLIE MOTTASHED,

District Leader.

Rich Hill District Women's Meeting

The district regional women's meeting will be conducted at the Rich Hill Church on Thursday, February 5. The first service will begin at 10 a.m.

MRS. MABEL MARTIN,

District Leader.

Southern New England District Schedule

February 14-15: Priesthood institute at Boston, Massachusetts. Apostle D. T. Williams, C. George Mesley, and George G. Lewis will be present. Priesthood members should arrive by 2 p.m. Saturday. Everyone is invited to attend the Sunday services.

February 28-29: Youth convention at Attleboro, Massachusetts.

July 6-16: Annual vacation church school at Onset, Massachusetts.

July 17-25: Annual Onset Reunion. Reservations should be made with Mrs. Audrey Hardy, 27 Hancock Street, Lexington, Massachusetts.

JAMES W. BARTON,

District Secretary.

Request for Administration

Mrs. Izzetta Hancock, a patient at the Middle River Sanatorium, Hawthorne, Wisconsin, would like to contact any missionary or elder in that vicinity. She also wishes to be remembered in prayer by the Saints.

Wishes to Contact Members

John I. Hacker, Printers' School, N. A. T. C., Memphis, Tennessee, would like to contact any members in Memphis. As yet, he has been unable to locate the church there.

Books Wanted

Franklyn Weddle, Director of Music for the church, would like to secure a copy of Carlyle Kueffer's Story of Our Hymns for the music department library. Address correspondence to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Books Wanted

A copy of the Utah Concordance of the Book of Mormon by Reynolds is needed by the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Ralph Dett, Route 1, Swift Road, Lombard, Illinois (a nonmember patient in the state hospital at Elgin, Illinois), requests the prayers of the Saints that, if it be God's will, his health may be restored.

Prayers are requested for Roberta Huffman of Elmwood, Nebraska, who has been ill for a long time.

Murray O. Shedd of Hammond, Indiana, asks the prayers of the Saints that he may be healed of a lingering illness if it is God's will.

Prayers are requested for Elder Robert Luce of Mt. Morris, Michigan, who underwent a serious operation on January 13 and is still in a critical condition.

Prayers are requested for James Druery of Ingham, Nebraska, who has a broken back, and Ray C. Pumroy of Cozad, Nebraska, who has lost his sight because of a brain tumor.

WEDDINGS

Hall-Madsen

Wilma Jean Madsen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Madsen of Longview, Washington, and Don Hall, also of Longview, were married December 26 at the home of Elder and Mrs. Miles Whiting, Elder Whiting officiating. They will make their home in Longview.

Petree-Haralson

Shirley J. Haralson and John C. Petree were united in marriage on January 10 at the Reorganized Church in Aurora, Illinois, Elder Harold Carpenter officiating. They will make their home in Aurora.

Carpenter-Black

Carla M. Black of Washington, D. C., and Rodney D. Carpenter of Vancouver, Washington, were married at the home of Elder and Mrs. Harold Carpenter, Elder Carpenter officiating. They are making their home in Vancouver.

Graham-Julius

Jayne J. Julius, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Julius, and Darel Graham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Graham, both of Cherokee, Iowa, were married on December 2. Elder Clifford Cole performed the ceremony.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Snow of Pleasanton, Kansas, announce the birth of a daughter, Connie Cheryl, on January 4. Mrs. Snow is the former Dorothy Springer.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Purgahn of St. Charles, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Barbara Ann, born December 26. Mrs. Purgahn is the former Thelma Jane Hunter.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Litzinger of St. Louis, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, William Joseph, born December 16. Mrs. Litzinger is the former Charlene Portis.

A daughter, Connie Ruth, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ivan T. Preslar of Florence, Texas, on October 28. Mrs. Preslar is the former Rachel Spiller.

Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Ellison of Sterling, Michigan, announce the birth of a son, Jeffrey Zane, born January 1, at the Standish Hospital. Mrs. Ellison is the former Katie Moffett.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Meihls of Sterling, Michigan, announce the birth of a daughter, Karen Sue, born January 12 at the Standish Hospital. Mrs. Meihls is the former Mable Fisk.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Ford of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, announce the birth of a son, Benson James, born December 8. Mrs. Ford was formerly Marabeth Martin.

A daughter, Sharon Elizabeth, was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Bishop of Stratford, Ontario, on August 25. She was blessed December 21 by Elder Howard Schlotzhauer.

A son, Edward Kim, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Scorgie of Stratford, Ontario, on August 30. He was blessed on January 4 by Elder Russell Atkins.

A daughter, Dale Clarice, was born on October 3 to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Schlotzhauer of Stratford, Ontario. She was blessed by Elder William Loney on January 4.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Schlotzhauer of Stratford, Ontario, announce the birth of a son, Barry David, born November 24. He was blessed on January 4 by Elder Henry Schlotzhauer.

DEATHS

DELINÉ.—Louisa Ross Kelley, affectionately known as "Aunt Lou," was born October 4, 1866, at Wabash Ontario, and died November 6, 1947. In 1895, she was married to Isaac W. Kelley; both were baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1907. She spent her entire life in Wabash. Mr. Kelley preceded her in death ten years ago.

She is survived by her husband, William Deline of Thamesville, Ontario; her son, Dr. Noble H. Kelley; and a grandson. Funeral services were conducted by Bishop John Dent and Elder Wesley Badder. Burial was at Thamesville, Ontario.

FREERS.—Alice Mabel, daughter of the late Charles G. and Mary Effie Dykes, was born January 29, 1887, in Persia, Iowa, and died suddenly after suffering a cerebral hemorrhage at her home in Muscatine, Iowa, on January 7, 1948. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on July 9, 1899, and was active in the work throughout her life. She served as branch recorder for many years, as well as helping in various other departments. She was married to Harry Reeves Freers on November 28, 1907; seven children were born to them. Mr. Freers passed away twenty-five years ago.

Surviving are four daughters: Mrs. Alice Zahniser, Mrs. Philip Roth, Mrs. Walter Schmidt, and Mrs. Ray Church, all of Muscatine; a son, Charles Henry of Iowa City, Iowa; two sisters: Mrs. William Gray of Davenport, Iowa, and Mrs. Elmer Beitz of Muscatine; and thirteen grandchildren. A son, Albert Harry, and a daughter, Margaret Birdie, preceded her in death. The funeral was held in Davenport, Elder W. W. Richards officiating. Burial was in Greenwood Cemetery in Muscatine.

DAVIS.—Ella, widow of the late George Davis and daughter of Elder George Shupe, died at the home of her son in Concordia, Kansas, at the age of eighty-three years. The body was brought to Blue Rapids, Kansas, where she had spent almost all of her life. She was baptized at eight years of age and had lived seventy-five years a faithful member of the Reorganized Church. Surviving are her children: Lee Brasher of Blue Rapids; Mrs. Hugh Campton and Ralph Davis of Concordia; Mrs. Arch Watters of Pikeview, Colorado; Mrs. Ernest Hill of Colorado Springs, Colorado; Mrs. Carl Nelson and William Davis of Rawlins, Wyoming. Funeral services were conducted from the church in Blue Rapids by Frank G. Hedrick on November 4, 1947. Burial was in Prospect Hill Cemetery.

GURWELL.—Julia Louise Freyer, was born at Stratford, Connecticut, on November 26, 1866, and died November 25, 1947, in Genoa, Colorado. On July 9, 1890, she was married to E. P. Owen; five daughters were born to this union, all of whom survive. In 1910, they moved to Flagler, Colorado, and in 1914, to Genoa. Mr. Owen died in 1932. On May 15, 1941, she was married to A. L. Gurwell, and on June 8 of that year was baptized into the Reorganized Church. She leaves to mourn her departure a host of relatives and friends.

SARTWELL.—Ammon B., son of the late Bert and Eva Moser Sartwell, was born July 23, 1918, and died November 3, 1947, in Savanna, Illinois, where he had always made his home. During World War II, he served five years in the Navy. He was a member of Savanna Branch and held the office of priest. He is survived by his wife, the former Ruth Dannels; three daughters: Joyce, Renee, and Rebecca; two sisters: Mrs. George Sharrar of Rock Island, Illinois, and Mrs. Robert Seeley of Los Angeles, California; three brothers: Gerald of Savanna; Home of Independence, Missouri; and Stanley of Los Angeles. Elder Victor Witte officiated at the funeral service. Burial was in the Savanna cemetery.

SHAVER.—Lois Mary, daughter of Erie James and Sophia Amelia Moore, was born at Pleasanton, Iowa, on November 19, 1868, and died on January 8, 1948, at the Independence Sanitarium. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on August 4, 1878, and in 1891 was married to John Henry Shaeffer, who later changed his name to Shaver. Of the four children born to this union, two daughters, Bernice and Irma, preceded their mother in death. Mr. Shaver passed away in 1900. While returning from the funeral of her husband, Mrs. Shaver learned of the death of her mother. With no one to turn to, she was forced to make a living for herself and the children; at first she sold products from house to house, then she converted the front room of her home into a grocery store. Later, she purchased a larger store where the present Speaks Funeral Home stands. After the children were grown, she sold the building and grounds to the church and retired from business. Most of the rest of her life was spent with her daughter, Leila Gibson. Although she was unable to attend services the last few years, she was a consistent reader of the Herald and other church publications. Her one thought was ever to be of help to others.

She leaves her daughter Leila Gibson, who lives near Independence; a son, Gerald, of California; a brother, M. M. Moore of Independence; six grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Speaks Funeral Home, Elders Mark Siegfried and Glaude Smith officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

RANDOLPH.—Jennie Elizabeth, daughter of Moses and Charlotte Johnson, was born near Russellville, Illinois, on July 9, 1864, and passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. James D. Fudge, in St. Louis, Missouri, on January 4, 1948. She was married on April 23, 1885, to Martin Randolph; six children were born to them. On January 31, 1892, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church; although isolated from the church most of her life, she remained true to its teachings. Her husband and a son, Gomer, preceded her in death.

Surviving are three daughters: Violet and Cleo of St. Louis, and Bertha of Yale, Illinois; a stepdaughter, whom she reared from childhood, Mrs. Ollie Wilkins; a son, Otto of Kansas City, Missouri; two sisters: Mrs. Ella Miller of Murdock, Illinois, and Mrs. Rosa Biggs of Palestine, Illinois; two grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Funeral services were held in the Congregational Church, Evangelist Arthur Gage of Indianapolis officiating. Burial was in the family lot adjacent to the church.

AYERS.—Verna June, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Perry, was born on June 25, 1932, at Nampa, Idaho, and died from injuries received in an automobile accident on January 3, 1948. She was baptized on December 15, 1946, into the Reorganized Church, and on September 20, 1947, was married to James Ayers at Idaho City, Idaho.

Besides her husband and parents, she leaves two sisters: Mrs. John Thompson of Boise, Idaho, and Darlene Perry; and two brothers: Myrl of the Navy, stationed in Seattle, Washington, and Gayle. Services were held at the Church of Christ in Meridian, Idaho, Elder Cecil Gilmore officiating.

ROBINSON.—Sarah Jane, daughter of Richard and Fanny Sherwood Amer, was born in Utah on November 16, 1854, and died at the home of her daughter in Inman, Nebraska, on December 20, 1947. In 1880, she moved with her parents to Stockton, California, and on August 28, 1867, she became a member of the Reorganized Church, being baptized by Alexander Smith. On December 1, 1874, she was married to Samuel B. Robinson, whose mother was a descendant of Parley P. Pratt; six children were born to this union. On March 27, 1909, she and her husband and two youngest children moved to Independence, Missouri, where Mr. Robinson passed away eight years later. She continued to live in Independence until 1938, when she made her home with her daughter.

Surviving are one son, Joseph Robinson of Albany, New York; a daughter, Mrs. Sadie Conger of Inman; twenty grandchildren; and sixteen great-grandchildren. Three sons, Samuel, Arrin, and George, and one daughter, Belle, preceded their mother in death. Funeral services were held at the church in Inman, Pastor Joseph Coon officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Bishop James F. Keir was in charge of the service held at the Stahl Funeral Home in Independence.

SHERMAN.—George F., was born July 9, 1879, in Sanilac County, Michigan, and died December 21, 1947, in San Diego, California. He was an elder and served as pastor of the San Diego Branch for some time. He leaves his wife, Ruth Bell; a daughter, Zadie McCarty; a brother, Will Sherman; and a sister, Ida Bigler. Elder Peter S. Whalley was in charge of the funeral service.

P. S.

* Writers

We have greatly appreciated the work of a number of new writers recently received. Some of the articles are of excellent quality, and will be presented to our readers in the near future. We trust they will enjoy these features as much as we have. These may have come as a result in part of an invitation to writers published in a recent issue of our paper. If so, we are very well pleased with the results. Certainly the response has been generous, and the willingness of our members to help is very encouraging. Writing is one of the important services that any qualified member may render to the church, and brings its own rewards and spiritual satisfactions. We are glad that so many people who desire to write now have taken training and have had general educational advantages which enable them to do a high quality of work.

Editorial experience tends to show us that God has distributed talents for service far and wide, and that he has built democracy into the life of his church by this means. To get the fully rounded talent and service for the building of his kingdom, we must have the contributions of many people. A dictatorship starves itself by restricting freedom of expression; a democracy flourishes by encouraging it, and our church also shares in the use of this principle. It is very probable that God has given you a talent and a contribution unlike that given to anybody else. If you keep quiet, you withhold one of your Heavenly Father's blessings intended for the world. Why should you rob us of what he clearly intended for us? Remember who gave it to you, and remember that you are responsible to pass it on.

* Prayers

In a certain official home two young sons are being conducted through the routine of evening prayers. Recently, Small Fry prayed for the safe return of friends who were out of town. Next morning, Big Brother thought it a good idea, and prayed likewise for the safety of some of his friends who were away. Small Fry could not repress himself, and chirped, "They're home, Bub!" . . . The parents nearly broke up the meeting with laughter.

* Louisettes

Today I had chicken pie for lunch, and this is what I thought:

Togetherness is what counts. Alone I can do nothing. Together, we can do all.

and

Three of the most beautiful words in the English language are Give, Help, and Share.

* Temper

Under hard strain and stress, trial and difficulty, the best of people may occasionally give way to a bit of temper. If they are humble and wise, they will be sorry, and try not to make the mistake again. And they will make amends as far as possible.

When such times come, let the rest of us forgive. For the times come when we, too, are tried, and make our mistakes. And then we shall also need forgiveness. Let us forgive that we may be forgiven.

Good people may have times of temper, but when they regain control, they come out right in the end. We need not fear them. The people to be feared are those who become angry and come out wrong or mean.

EASTER PROGRAM MATERIAL

The Answer of the Cross

A Pageant for Easter Week

By Marie Graham

Seven characters find the "seven last words of Christ" an adequate solution to their varied troubles. Price 10¢ each.

PAGEANTS AND PLAYS

The Risen Lord

By Walter Russell Bowie

Two scenes, 17 men, 2 women, reader, and angel. This pageant of the Easter story is designed to be given in the church itself, the text read by the minister or some appointed person. Price, 25¢

The Broken Seal

By Edward T. Kirkley

In eight scenes, the resurrection story as recorded in the Scriptures is told simply and effectively. Full instructions for presentation. Eight women, 15 men. Time, 45 minutes. Price, 10¢

The Way of Life

By Martha Bayly

One act, 2 men, 3 women, and a group of young people. The story of one of the Roman soldiers who cast lots for Jesus' clothes at the foot of the cross and the subsequent effect of the event on his life and that of his two sisters. Play. Price, 30¢; $3 a dozen.

PROGRAMS

Easter Program Builder No. 1

This builder contains recitations, exercises, readings, choral, and musical readings, playlets and songs which have been carefully classified into 6 sections. Departmental supervisors will welcome this grouping plan. Price, 35¢

Standard Easter Book No. 2

A 48-page program book offering "The Broken Seal" pageant, recitations for all ages, short playlets, drills, acrostics, exercises, etc. The program committee will find here complete programs worked out and ready to produce, or can build its own program from the variety of material provided. Price, 30¢

Eureka Easter Recitations No. 4

By Mattie B. Shannon

Program material for kindergartners, primaries, juniors, and junior highs. Pantomimes, plays, songs, and special features. Price, 25¢

An Easter Morning Praise Service

Easter morning sunrise praise service completely arranged, simple, and impressive. Price, 10¢

Light on the Hills

Complete service materials for church school needs, including responsive readings, songs, recitations, and acrostics. Price, 10¢

Wonderful Morning

An Easter service for the church school, songs, recitations, etc. Price, 10¢

Easter Bells

Contains original songs, recitations, etc., arranged in a service form for the church school. Price, 10¢

Glorious Easter

Songs, readings, recitations, and exercises for the church school hour. Price, 10¢ Quantity prices on the above 4 service programs: $1 a dozen.

CANTATAS

Radiant Morning

For mixed voices, simple yet qualitative music that can be easily worked up by the small or inexperienced group of singers. Has dignity and real beauty. Price 40¢

The Living Redeemer

This cantata provides for a narrator whose reading supplies the desired continuity. It is not beyond the ability of the average volunteer choir but will require more rehearsal time than others of its type. With song and story this cantata builds upon the dramatic events leading to the crucifixion, concluding with the thrilling choral number, "Immanuel Victorious." Price, 40¢

The First Easter

An effective instrumental prelude and choral number precedes the story which alternates with vocal selections through the cantata. The reading of the story may be omitted at the option of the director. Price, 20¢

The Victorious Christ

In song and story, this tuneful cantata portrays the occurrences of the resurrection and is not difficult nor lengthy—only 8 vocal numbers in all consisting of solos, duets, quartets, and four-part chorus numbers, yet it conveys a complete Easter message. Price, 20¢ $2 a dozen.

Immanuel Victorious

An Easter cantata for women's voices plus a narrator. Beautiful in its simplicity. Price, 20¢

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Palmer-Lappine Studio

Apostle
M. A. McConley

IN CHARGE OF THE
EUROPEAN MISSION

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

FEBRUARY 7, 1948

NUMBER 6

www.LatterDayTruth.org

A Mission of Love

AUDITORIUM NEWS

In the original Quorum of Twelve selected by Jesus, there was one, John, whose distinguishing trait was so marked that he became known by the descriptive title, "The Beloved." If, as we believe, he was also the author of the Gospel that bears his name, and of the Epistles similarly designated, he was the principal exponent of "The First and Great Commandment," which Jesus quoted from the earliest law of Israel, "Thou shalt love."

As much as any member in the present-day Quorum of Twelve, Brother McConley bears the mantle of "John the Beloved." It is the theme of his life and service in the church.

In his last sermon at Stone Church in Independence before he departed to take up the work of the European Mission, Brother McConley testified: "When I first met with the Saints in Honolulu, I was new in my ministry, and I sat before people of many races for the first time. I was afraid and bewildered, not because I distrusted them, but because I might not be able to measure up to the needs of the task. I prayed to God, 'O Lord, how can I help these people?' And he answered me, 'You can love them.' So from that time I loved them and tried to serve them, and they loved me. It solved all problems. It is in the spirit of love that I go upon this mission to Europe."

It is enough to know about Brother McConley that he goes about his mission working under the Great Commandment, "Thou shalt love." Statistics and biographical data are unnecessary, if not irrelevant. Brother McConley is "The Apostle of Love." He would not say this of himself. But we can say it for him.

L. L.

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

Good Baptismal Increase.....	3
Across the Desk.....	4

ARTICLES:

The Cottage Meeting, by Apostle Maurice L. Draper	5
"To Every Man That Asketh," by Reed M. Holmes	7
Don't Leave It All Up to God, by Naomi Russell	10
Water and Health.....	11
What L. D. S. Believe About the Resurrection, by Evan A. Fry	12
Help Available, by Addie C. Van Syoc	15
Sharing, by Frances Hartman	15
Life's Expanding Horizons, by Emily Inouye	16
A Tribute to Scoutmasters, by Mrs. Arthur B. Taylor	17
Stretching the Dollar, by Lulu Carmichael	17
Worship Suggestions for March, by Bernice Bonham	18
Practice What We Preach, by Warren H. Chelline	20
I'm All Thrilled About the Restoration Festival, by Sadi Anka Moon	21
Bulletin Board	23

* PRESIDENT F. HENRY EDWARDS has gone to visit Los Angeles and other points on the west coast in the interests of church work.

* APOSTLE R. E. DAVEY reports that Arthur F. Gibbs has been doing very successful missionary work at a number of centers during the past months. At present he is in British Columbia making preparations for missionary work there. James Reneau, a new appointee, is assisting him in the field.

* APOSTLE D. BLAIR JENSEN has collected information on baptisms in the Great Lakes Mission and sent them to the workers in his field. During the year 1947, the following district totals are noted: Ohio—Kirtland, 59; Northwest, 21; Southern, 63; Youngstown, 21; Pennsylvania—Pittsburgh, 26; West Virginia, 16; Ontario—Chatham, 56; London, 37; Owen Sound, 40; Toronto, 45; Sault Ste. Marie, 23; unorganized area, 1. Total, 408.

* EASTERN COLORADO DISTRICT held a church school institute at Denver, on January 24 and 25. Despite snow and bad roads, there was a good attendance, some coming as far as 200 miles. Dr. F. M. McDowell found good interest in the work.

* UNIVERSITY OF IOWA members of the church have enjoyed for nearly twelve years the friendship and leadership of Dr. H. V. Meredith and his wife, who have made their home a center and meeting place for our students there. Acting under Dr. Meredith's encouragement and direction, Dale Ballantyne has done fine work as president of the group. They have had classwork every Sunday and preaching services or discussions. Students have shown marked interest and devotion to the church, and without exception have a high standing in university circles.

Dr. Walter Daykin of the University School of Commerce is instructor to 1,200 students and responds to repeated calls to participate in the settlement of labor disputes throughout the country. He is a recognized authority in labor relations. He also finds time to give personal counsel to our young people and participate actively in church services.

This report is brought in by Dr. F. M. McDowell, who recently visited the group in behalf of the church.

P. S.

* A New Word

During the Civil War, people had what they called the "grapevine telegraph"—a secret means of communication that often circumvented the censorship. It survives in our time as "the grapevine"—any whispered, off-the-record, or secret source of information.

An Independence matron has derived a new term from it, "the gripevine"—to indicate secret and indirect opposition or obstruction.

Are you ever guilty of giving someone encouragement to his face, and then complaining or opposing him when his back is turned? If so, you are on the "gripevine."

* YOU can make all the rest of the world look upside down if you are willing to stand on your head, as Father William did in the "Alice in Wonderland" story.

A Good Baptismal Increase

Last year was a good year for baptisms. It was fourth best in the last twenty. In 1929, we won 4,665 new members. In 1930, we won 4,202. In 1939, we won 3,540. And in 1947, we won 3,489.

By analyzing the figures available, one can make many interesting comparisons. For example, we won 30.5 per cent more in 1947 than in the preceding year. If we keep up this rate of increase, as we surely ought to do, we shall pass the 1930 figure and come quite close to the twenty year record made in 1929.

But figures are really quite inadequate to indicate the full significance of our baptismal gains. To do this well, we must tell of homes united in the gospel, of children beginning to fulfill the fondest hopes of their parents, and of new-found friends rejoicing in "joy unspeakable and full of glory." Or, to turn to the other side of the picture, we must enter into the prayers and plans and sacrifices of thousands of our most devoted Saints, who have together made this banner year possible. Or, yet again, to look into the beyond, we must estimate the joy in heaven over thousands of sinners who have repented, and the still greater joy to come as we and they enter more fully into our inheritance.

The members of the Quorum of Twelve are charged with special responsibility in connection with our baptismal increase. They and their immediate associates, the Seventies, are special witnesses for the Lord Jesus Christ. These brethren have done well and merit the thanks of the church. But the splendid results obtained would have been quite impossible without the fervent and able ministry of hundreds of the local priesthood. We are becoming more and more movingly aware of our debt to these who "labor as circumstances permit," and who win so many out of the sheer joy of testimony.

Looking ahead into 1948, I find myself hoping that this coming year will be known for the marked increase in the number and effectiveness of our local missionaries. It can be; and if it is, the results will be richly rewarding in many ways. Souls will be saved, branches will be reinvigorated, the church will be strengthened, our resources will be multiplied, and the kingdom will be advanced.

Let us make 1948 the best baptismal year we have ever known: best in the number participating, best in the quality of our testimony, best in the wisdom of our procedures, and best in the results gained. And if this is to be so, let us remember that it must also be best in the quality of our devotion in order that it may be best in the measure of our endowment.

F. HENRY EDWARDS

ACCENT ON AGE. We have been through a considerable period of time in which both industrial and military leaders have placed an "Accent on Youth." It is good to give encouragement to the young people, but it would be well to do so without underrating older people. An article by Ross L. Holman in the December Kiwanis Magazine summarizes a number of scientific investigations and industrial surveys in which older employees have shown up remarkably well, and in numbers of cases superior to their younger competitors.

War pilots have been kept under the age of twenty-seven, but commercial lines are now finding older men as good under all flying conditions, one line having over a hundred men above forty-five. Older men, they say, stand high altitudes better. And as for thinking, Dr. Martin Gumpert, author of You Are Younger Than You Think, says, "Mental maturity is usually not reached before the age of 40, but it increases slowly until 60, and at 80 is about the same as it was at 35. A normal person has his best mental period between forty and 70."

Our church was begun by young men. But from the very first, older men have given splendid service. And in present-day church work we find a great need for both young and old, all doing good work according to their capacities, training, and devotion. The pattern of cooperation set by Paul and Timothy has been repeated at many times and in many places, for the strengthening of the church and the blessing of the people.

THE VOICE is a mirror of the personality. In its tones one finds echoes of the prevailing moods and feelings of the speaker. The cultivation of a good voice must begin with a cultivation of mind and spirit. Any improvement will be mechanical and artificial unless the soul itself is changed for the better. If there is anything hidden and shameful, selfish, mean, or bad in a character, the voice will manage somehow to reveal it to those who listen with discrimination and understanding. And if there is something good, noble, kindly, and beautiful in a person, his voice will make it known to those who know how to listen.

How strongly and immediately the voice affects us. If a speaker is nervous, how soon his voice communicates his agitation to us. If he is calm and happy, how soon we share his confidence and serenity. His voice tells us what is behind his words and ideas.

Christ's insistence upon the heart and soul of men and women was and is basically sound. No changes are permanent or valid unless they are changes in mind and spirit. Whether you wish to make a good teacher or preacher, a parent, or a leader, you must begin with the soul. All other things will follow.

L. L.

Editorial

Across the Desk

A Letter From Holland

From Elder C. W. Oorschot, Zwagerbusch, Kollumerzwaag, Fr., Holland:

"It has been a long time ago I wrote you, in which I told you some activities of the Friesland Branch. In the same letter, I asked your attention for and about Holland, because we were working here in difficult conditions; we didn't possess books, no full time appointees, etc., and you promised me by your return letter that you would take it at hand. At this time, I'll thank you from the bottom of my heart that you took it at hand. Some time ago we had the pleasure to meet Brothers Edwards and DeLapp to investigate the field in Europe and to buy some housing for the appointed young men. About a month ago, Brother Scherer, the appointed Seventy, visited Friesland and we could see the work that was done by the General Church. This letter is only to thank you, brother, that you answered our calling, 'Come over and help us.' Many times I'm looking at your photo and the same thoughts are coming into my mind, 'Thank you, Brother.' We hope with the help of Brother Scherer to go onward in this beautiful work, and may God bless this young brother.

"Since March 20 I have been unable to be active in the church except a few times, for instance one time I was the interpreter for Brother Scherer. I had a car accident and it broke my leg. I was in the hospital for four months. I'm getting around now, but am very weak; it seems that it will take a long time to recover at all.

"I suppose it will take some time that Brother Scherer will preach in Dutch, but he is talking some Dutch, and if he'll study well, he will be able to talk with us in our own tongue not long hereafter."

Canada

Sister Edith F. Allish, Box 21, White Horse, Yukon Territory, writes:

"We are far away from church privileges. There is the English Church and Gospel Mission. Mr. Lee heads the mission and does quite a work among the Indians. He has some army barracks and houses, feeds and clothes some forty-six Indian children, and teaches their school. I have been up to some of their prayer services on Wednesday evenings in the home of Mr. Lee. I stress the six principles and have aroused a great deal of discussion. Sometimes we go to church, but we generally have services at home, sing our hymns and read the Scriptures. We tell the gospel story all we can. There are many evils here as elsewhere, but because this is a small place, one sees more of the wrongs.

"We have a store, The Allish's Fur and Gift Shop. People like to come in and visit with us and buy. Through the summer, the tourists come, and we meet people from all over. The Army is still here, both Canadian and American; jet planes whiz over the houses and sound like cracking thunder.

"We had a nice letter from Brother Yager. He knew us in Edmonton, and we hear from the Vancouver Saints. My son and daughter-in-law saw and heard you when you were in Vancouver; they know how well we would like to have been there. We know quite a few of the Toronto Saints; I surely do miss them: 'The friends that most cheer us on life's rugged road are the friends of our Master, the children of God.' This is the first time I have been isolated, and no truer words could have been written.

"May you be blessed in the great task and work before you."

Change of Heart

Pastor R. H. Atkinson of Nauvoo, Illinois, sends us a clipping from a local paper showing that on Friday, January 11, 1878, Joseph Smith, Jr., had addressed an assemblage at the City Hall of Nauvoo "in response to an invitation by citizens who asked that headquarters for the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints be established in Nauvoo."

This recalls to our mind something which the late President Joseph Smith told in his memoirs, calling attention to the fact that when he assumed the presidency of the church a mass meeting was held to protest against any attempt to re-establish the church at Nauvoo. Between then (1860) and 1878, the citizens of Nauvoo had quite a change of heart indeed.

Increase in Price of Herald

As much as we regret the necessity of an increase in the price of the Herald, we probably agree, all of us, that it is in line with the advance in price of everything else. All magazines have increased their rates, and newspapers have been forced to do so. Where this inflation will end no one knows; but it avails nothing to "kick against the pricks." Let us keep up our department of publicity, the Herald and other publications.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

February 7, 1948

Number 6

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

The Cottage Meeting

By Apostle Maurice L. Draper

THOSE MISSIONARIES who have become skilled in the "cottage meeting" method have demonstrated that it is highly effective in the pursuit of our evangelical task. It is an efficient approach, both from the standpoint of the number of friends of the church contacted in a given time, and in the percentage of baptismal decisions obtained. Its efficiency is the result of a number of factors, which can be much more adequately controlled here than in the public preaching series. This does not imply that the preaching series may not have an important place in evangelism, but the cottage meeting method does have some advantage in the specific aim of selecting, converting and baptizing prospective church members. The factors involved and the resulting advantages available in successful cottage meetings are the objectives of this discussion.

1. Selection of prospects. There are several fruitful sources of names of friends of the church. Friends of members: every member has several friends who ought to become members of the church. Do not try to include every friend of every member on the prospect list. Efforts scattered too widely fail from lack of power at any one point. Ask each member to select two names, keeping in mind the questions, "Which ones will strengthen the church by accepting membership?" and "Which ones are most likely to respond now?" Of course, we want to convert them all, but we can't do it all at once. Hence, we must screen our "suspect" list in order to find the most promising prospects. This process is continuous. Attending nonmembers: have department heads and church school teachers list the names and addresses of attending friends. This should add some of the most promising prospects to the list. Branch records: there should be listed on the branch membership record many families which are incomplete so far as church membership is concerned. Children of baptismal age whose interests should be tied into church school—Orioles, Boy Scouts, and Zion's League, offer a fruitful field of labor. Husbands, wives, parents, and many in-laws will swell the growing list of good people who ought to know the gospel.

It is axiomatic that the more of these friends we baptize, the more prospects there will be as we reach out after the friends, relatives, and neighbors of these new members.

2. Advertising methods. It is widely agreed that the best advertising is personal. This is especially true in this kind of work, where the relations between the missionary and his prospects are personal and informal. Except for those who are actually to attend the cottage meetings, the advertising ought to be stimulating and designed to support the total program rather than point up a specific meeting. Since cottage meeting activity should be tied into the public services of the church, the advertising should be pointed in that direction. For this purpose, personal letters by the pastor and bulletins of the public services could be mailed to members and friends. Other mediums, such as newspaper notices, radio announcements, and bulletin boards, should be part of the regular publicity program of the branch. For the attendants at the cottage meetings, tracts and books help to develop and maintain the interest necessary to sustained attention. The tracts should be related to the subject being discussed on the occasion it is handed to the friend. One missionary emphasizes the value of books like The Call At Evening and urges that they be given, not loaned. He also states, "The best advertising is the minister himself. The first impression is vital. If they can feel at the very first you are interested in them and their needs, they are bound to respond. Never leave the impression you are there to convert them. You are there only to help. . . . We must be sincere and honest in our observations. Avoid controversial questions. Try to understand their problems and never embarrass them. Give them credit for what they believe and never belittle that belief. Conduct yourself toward them as though they were your personal friends." Do this, and your people will be eager for the next meeting.

3. Type of Service. Do not transplant a church service into the home. The only exception to this is in the case of a regularly-organized group of members who have no public meeting place. In such a case, the regular order of worship will be used. But in cottage meetings—NO!

The offering of prayer is left to the discretion of the minister. Some missionaries who do this work very successfully do not offer a vocal prayer until they have been in the home two or three times. The singing of hymns is undesirable. Some folks are not anxious to advertise to their neighbors that a religious service is going on in their home, especially at first. The order of service, if it can be said that a cottage meeting has an order of service, is most informal. Greetings, enough easy conversation to "break the ice," and the presentation of the message—that is all. Let the people talk. Encourage them to ask questions about the subject. If they wander or introduce a controversy, do not argue, but return to the subject. The answering of a question in a cottage may clear up an ambiguous point more effectively than half a dozen sermons, and much more quickly. The sermon is to inspire, to move to action, to witness. The cottage meeting is to instruct, to educate, to train people in the principles of the gospel.

4. Who shall attend? Only the church member who is most intimate with the friends of the church, and those friends whom they invite. Under no circumstances should other members be allowed to attend. Even when the finest relationships exist between the prospects and many church members, the missionary just cannot get the job done with other members there. This is no reflection on any member or group of members. It is simply a fact in the situation which must be faced. The larger the group, the more unwieldy it is. The more people there are, the more scattered and undivided the attention will be. This is fatal, when the object of the cottage meeting is to center the attention of two or three people on the one subject chosen for the meeting.

Even a large number of nonmembers is not desirable. Keep the group to a minimum for the sake of the value to be gained in intimate, personal attention. It is better to have a larger number of meetings than to have several meetings of large attendance.

5. Subject matter. Two lists of subjects, arranged in order of presentation, have been used with excellent results. The first is as follows:

- a. American Archæology. No reference to the Book of Mormon.
- b. Stick of Joseph. Keep it constructive.
- c. The Church That Jesus Built. No mention of the Reorganized Church. Keep this in the New Testament.
- d. What became of that church? The historical facts, supported by prophesy, of the Apostasy—still no mention of the Restoration.
- e. The Restoration.—This is the critical meeting. This must be constructive. Do not criticise other religions or churches. Try the method of "building a better house" without unfavorable comparisons. Let the people see for themselves.
- f. From here on, be guided by the needs which become apparent. Use the principles, Zion, authority, but keep them constructive. Save "Life after death" for the night needed to obtain the decision. Or it might save a meeting series in which interest is failing.

Another suggested arrangement of subjects is:

- a. American Archæology. This is intended to "open the door" and to stimulate interest. The ministry of Christ in Ancient America is made the strong point of this presentation. The Book of Mormon is not mentioned.
- b. The Life of Christ. The building of the church is the center of this message. Note, however, that it is the New Testament Church that is under consideration, not the Restoration.
- c. The Apostasy. History and prophesy.
- d. The Restoration. Again it is the Church of Jesus Christ that is restored. This is to be emphasized, rather than Latter Day Saints.

The missionary who uses this lineup has only four cottage meetings. Subjects not used in the cottage meetings are used as sermon subjects at the church. In this way the principles, authority, Zion, life after death, and other subjects may be introduced, and cottage meeting attendants are urged to attend the church services.

6. Teaching Aids. Visual aids are available and have been found to be invaluable in cottage meeting work. Projectors should not have bright illumination for small rooms. The S. V. E. models which use 100 or 150 watt lamps are very satisfactory, and small beaded screens up to 40 inches square are large enough. Officially approved slides and filmstrips are being produced by the church and may be obtained at the Herald Publishing House. The set "I Will Build My Church" may be used as indicated in the suggested subject arrangements noted above, and Kodachrome slides on the life of Christ can be used to supplement it and other subjects. They, too, are obtainable from the Herald Publishing House. Other subjects are now in production. They include materials on baptism, laying on of hands, life after death, and the sacraments of the church. With each of these will be available an illustrated manual, copies of which may be used as tracts.

Flannelgraphs are also available on the life of Christ and other Bible stories which can be used to illustrate missionary messages. The missionary may buy these already colored, or may color the black and white pictures himself. Commercial sets may be used when suitable, or any subject can be made up by an artistically inclined missionary or young people's group. It is expected that some of these materials will also be examined and approved by the church for official distribu-

(Continued on page 22.)

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"To Every Man That Asketh"

Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer with meekness and fear to every man that asketh of you a reason for the hope that is in you.—1 Peter 3: 15.

"WHY SHOULD WE occupy our minds with thoughts of any church? Why, particularly, should we give lodging space to thoughts of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints?" These are questions which, in consequence of our evangelistic goals and efforts, we must be prepared to answer.

We believe the Lord has always moved in such a way as to seek to reclaim, or redeem, mankind. When he gave us our agency, our right of personal choice, he knew we were in for a time of it—but he made us as we are that he might have something more than puppets or mechanical men to people the earth. He could have made us like bottles or a duck-billed platypus if he had wanted, but what companionship would there be for him in a platypus? He wants men and women who can assimilate the knowledge of his creation, who can temper their free agency with wisdom and order their lives with intelligence.

He has always sought our welfare, persistently tempting us upward by every means at his disposal but never violating our right of personal choice. (If the kingdom of God seems slow in coming, remember that it awaits our voluntary response to the will of God.)

Through the medium of the church, he calls for repentance. He calls us to be cleansed of impurities. He calls for us to be immersed in purposes other than those which carry the penalty of death and unhappiness.

Through the church, he calls us to be immersed in such purposes as characterized the Man of Galilee.

These and these alone are the purposes and the kind of character, which herald a day of peace and good will among men.

In what institution do we find the prime motivation to be the process of redemption—of lifting men and woman and children to higher levels of life? It is the church. Indeed, what institution but the church can reach into the heart and soul of men to bring forth the fundamental change of heart and character which is needed?

THEN, TOO, let us emphasize our need to perpetuate the best of our heritage and to improve upon it. This is not only the part of wisdom; it is our obligation. Our heritage is grounded in the faith of our fathers. Our debt of gratitude can best be paid by extending that faith and the moral attitudes and habits which issue from it. Our vaunted personal independence does not extend so far as to neglect this responsibility. We ought to look well to the faith of our father's children, in order that the faith of our children shall be secure.

Furthermore, it is a well-established fact that higher standards of morality and fidelity are to be found in the ranks of church membership. The church throws the standard of rightness into our calculations.

We need to Christianize our institutions—a project which can only be achieved as men are Christianized. Such Christianizing will occur in greater frequency as these men fraternize within the fellowship of the church.

Every search for solutions to the perplexing problems of our day—problems which frighten us and make us yearn for security—ends with maddening insistence in the heart of man. Our hearts must be right. They must be characterized by trustworthiness and integrity and fraternity if atomic energy et al. are to lose their peril. Our deepest and most significant problem is that of conversion—not of material, but of men.

By Reed M. Holmes

Against the backdrop of world conditions and our own human needs, therefore, we see the Church of Jesus Christ laboring with mankind to usher in a brighter day. Church membership and eager participation are worthy of our consideration.

BUT WHAT CHURCH of the many should claim my allegiance? Does it make any real difference which church I join?

Some of our spineless and apathetic religionists will say, "It makes no difference. Join any church, especially the one nearest home." Others, full of spine, but quite as thoughtless, will insist that their church is the only church even though its history is replete with abuses.

So many churches—and each one determined that it is most representative of the Church of Jesus Christ. No wonder non-Christians are confused and sometimes disgusted. Yet, there must be one which more adequately represents Christ than any other.

In our search for that right one, let's look first at points of similarity among the churches. Many of the churches hold to the ancient creeds, the Apostle's Creed, the Nicene Creed, etc. It must be admitted that much of these ancient creeds needs to be understood and perpetuated, not violated. It may be that we shall find points of similarity between Latter Day Saintism and other churches in this area in which some will least expect to find similarity.

For illustration of this common ground, let us look at "A Modern Affirmation" which is a rephrasing of the historic creeds by the Methodist Church:

We believe in God the Father, infinite in wisdom, power and love, whose mercy is over all his works, and whose will is ever directed to his children's good.

We believe in Jesus Christ, Son of God and Son of man, the gift of the Father's unfailing grace, and ground of our hope, and the promise of our deliverance from sin and death.

We believe in the Holy Spirit as the divine presence in our lives, whereby we are kept in perpetual remembrance of the truth of Christ, and find strength and help in time of need.

We believe that this faith should manifest itself in the service of love as set forth in the example of our blessed Lord, to the end that the kingdom of God may come upon the earth.

The Latter Day Saint has no quarrel with such a statement of belief. It fades with his own. He might, however, suggest that added insight on these points of doctrine is desirable. For instance, he would say that the phrase regarding belief in God which says, "whose will is ever directed to his children's good" is indication of the willingness of God to continually reveal himself—a fact denied by many churches.

But, there are similarities — among other churches, and between these other churches and Latter Day Saintism. What then, are the differences? Are there any beliefs held by Latter Day Saintism which are distinctive and unique? What are the reasons why one should become a Latter Day Saint in preference to other denominations?

IMAGINE A LATTER DAY SAINT torn from his moorings and finding harbor in any one of the other churches of our day. To be sure, he would be aware of certain points of similarity. But what would he miss? These may point the way to some of the reasons why one should entertain thoughts of becoming a Latter Day Saint, in addition to the orthodox beliefs already stated. These, at least, are elements which have been missed as Latter Day Saints have moved to communities where there was no branch of their own church:

1. The idea of the restoration of church and priesthood. This position is unique among the churches of our day. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is neither Catholic nor Protestant. Believing in the fact of the apostasy, the falling away from the original doctrines and practices of the church, and believing that authority to represent God was thus lost, the

There is a solution for every problem in human relationships, if you are really determined to find it.

Latter Day Saint holds that Divinity held the right to restore the church and the priesthood, and did so in accordance with prophecy at the beginning of the industrial-scientific age.

2. The dream of Zion, objectified in stewardships. It is inherent in the belief of the Restoration that to seek the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth is the chief business of the church, first in the lives of its communicants and then, together, in communities to be called Zion. The church actually seeks to gather qualified individuals and families into communities which shall be the type and prophecy of the kingdom of God, an ensign and standard of peace and fraternity to the world. Stewardship is the way of life subscribed to, each steward being one who accepts life and property as a trust, who labors to secure necessities and "just wants" for his family, and who is willing to consecrate his surplus to the raising of community standards (providing for the poor, granting of equal vocational and educational opportunities, etc.) The incentive is the welfare of the community in recognition that herein is the best guarantee of personal security and family solidarity and happiness.

3. The anticipation of prophecy and the prophetic office. The church believes that if our Heavenly Father ever spoke to his children, he will continue to speak, being unchangeable and still a Father of love. Accordingly, revelation is expected and provision is made for the prophet in the functional structure of the church. We testify, too, to the presence of the prophetic spirit in preaching, teaching, and the written word.

4. Finding himself in the fellowship of another church, the Latter Day Saint would miss the divine designation and authority of priesthood. No man takes this honor unto himself, nor from the hand of any other except there be the function of the prophetic spirit declaring the divine will and authorizing the individual to act for Christ. How can the spirit of prophecy be present in the pulpits of our day when from many of those pulpits we hear denials of the divinity of Jesus Christ? The testimony that Jesus is the Christ is the very spirit of prophecy; it is this testimony which has been most vibrant in the history of the Restoration and the predominant element in the biographies of her leaders. Authority to represent Christ is contingent upon this testimony and upon the voice of God speaking unmistakably through the church to the individual. Authority to represent the kingdom of God is no more to be assumed by an individual without sanction than is authority to represent the kingdoms of this world.

5. A Latter Day Saint would miss the unique, complete, and functional organization of the church. His study of the New Testament has familiarized him with the offices of the priesthood, which were present in the time of Christ and the disciples. He has seen that apostles, seventies, and others—unfamiliar terms in our ears today—are as needful now as then, along with the more familiar offices of elder and deacon, etc. And he finds no provision either in designation or function for some of our current ecclesiastics, and certainly no precedent for the supremacy of the bishops as practiced in some quarters. He would be dismayed by the dismantling of the church through the years and would yearn for the feeling of completeness in the restored church of Jesus Christ.

6. He would yearn, too, for a marvelous book—the Book of Mormon. He would miss its assuring testimony of the divinity of Jesus Christ. The story of the book is of the yearning of the Ancient Americans for the Messiah who was first to come to the land of their ancestors in Palestine and then, following crucifixion, was to come to them. It is the almost incredible testimony of this book that the great white leader, the legendary ruler, Quetzalcoatl, was none other than the resurrected Christ. In a day when it is popular and smart to doubt the miraculous, the strange, and the unusual, the Book of Mormon stands as a strong, second witness to the divinity of Jesus Christ. This is its primary function—to convince the Jew and the Gentile that Jesus is the Son of the Living God and therefore rightful sovereign of our lives.

7. He would miss the presence and the understanding of the spiritual gifts which are inherent in the Restoration, from the major gifts of wisdom and faith to the minor gifts of healing and tongues. Each has been given expression often and currently in the life of the Restoration Movement.

8. The Latter Day Saint would find a sense of fraternity in another Communion, but he would miss the depth and warmth of fellowship which has become typical of his own church. That warmth has often been remarked upon by others. It undoubtedly stems from the sharing of the dream of Zion and so much else; and, we believe, it stems most fully from the presence of the Holy Spirit. That warmth of fellowship is at once the presence and the prophecy of peace.

These distinctives correspond with the best of the Christian tradition as recorded in the New Testament. They differ from other churches of our day but fadge with the doctrines and practices of the early Christian Church.

The Restoration, initiated in the beginning of the industrial-scientific age, is pertinent to our needs. The Lord was anticipating our atomic age and moved to bring prophetic insight and interpretation. Latter

If you begin with love, you will meet many friends. If you begin with hate, you will find enemies.

Day Saintism reminds us of God's remedy for the problems of mankind, and then implements that remedy with the Zionite enterprise. The restoration of the Church of Jesus Christ is deserving of our allegiance.

I SHOULD LIKE to add a word of personal testimony. I joined the church by virtue of parental influence. I find no cause for regret in that, but I am grateful for this heritage of faith. However, through the years I have felt justified in searching for reasons of my own. I could not remain in the ministry of the church if it meant a sacrifice of intellectual honesty. I have, therefore, sought for a knowledge of the truthfulness of this church. That search has been rewarded. Faith I may have absorbed from others. Knowledge has resulted from the personal quest.

I find certain satisfactions in belonging to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Among them are these:

1. In the knowledge which has come to me through the church that there are some durable values, some things which are stable and eternal . . . that in this world of shifting sand my life may be undergirded by a Rock.

2. I find comforting assurance in the knowledge that God is, that he is my Father, and that eventually he will bring his children into a condition of fraternity. When my mind was first awakened to the magnitude of the universe, my childish concept of God shrank in fear, but further consideration brought me to realize that the God of the universe is also the God of the minute. I saw him as still creating, still working with nature and with man. I came to see that he is dependable, and that his predictions of eventual fraternity among men are therefore certain.

3. I find satisfaction in the fellowship of the Saints, a fellowship made meaningful by the sharing of mutual ideals. Here I am now aware, are to be found the true riches of life.

4. I like the ring of the church's Scriptures, not alone in the Holy Bible but from these other books which represent the continuing revelation of God, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. Note these passages, for example:

Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

Believe in God; believe that he is, and that he created all things, both in heaven and in earth; Believe that he has all wisdom, and all power, both in heaven and in earth; Believe that man doth not comprehend all things which the Lord can comprehend. And again: Believe that ye must repent of your sins and forsake them, and humble yourselves before God; and ask in sincerity of heart that he would forgive you: And now, if you believe all these things, see that ye do them.—Book of Mormon, page 220.

And here is one from the Book of Mormon that latches on to the mind and heart, and somehow answers our yearning to know the better way. Here, in essence, is the secret of fraternity, a commentary on an era of peace:

Alma commanded that the people of the church should impart of their substance, every one according to that which he had; If he have more abundantly, he should impart more abundantly; and he that had but little, but little should be required; and to him that had not should be given. And thus they should impart of their substance, of their own free will and good desires towards God . . . and this he said unto them, having been commanded of God; And they did walk uprightly before God, imparting to one another, both temporally and spiritually, according to their needs and their wants.

Then, I like the challenge of these:

The glory of God is intelligence. If ye will awake and arouse your faculties, and experiment upon my words, then will ye know.

There is no groveling, self-effacing dependence upon the interpretation of a clergy robed in black. These quotations do not sound like a God who is satisfied with a set of rituals. Rather, they sound like a God who desires us to know our limitations and to take steps to push those limitations back. "I give you the power to become the sons of God." "Rise from the dust and be men."

In the Restoration, religion becomes an elegant thing—a challenging, dynamic, pulsating reality, concerned with the kind of rugged, yet tender righteousness which shall change us and our world into the kingdom of God.

Don't Leave It All Up to God

By Naomi Russell

It was back in the days of "Now I lay me" that I began tacking P. S.'s on my nocturnal prayers. The first I can remember was, "And P. S., Lord, don't let Mamma or Daddy die, and don't let me get 'F' on my arithmetic." Part of that postscript was justifiable, and the Almighty has taken good care of both my parents through the years. The arithmetic was a struggle, and although I never quite hit the fifth letter of the grading scale, my faith wavered often. Had I been willing to work a little harder myself instead of dumping my problems in God's lap and hoping for the best, the result would have been much better.

The P. S. habit stuck, although my fear of long addition and becoming an orphan soon passed. I began, then to petition for such things as a pair of roller skates and a promotion from the "B" to the "A" class in singing. That was partially a just request, too. The roller skates arrived on my tenth birthday, but I didn't make the "A" class until I began concentrating on my singing—and my teacher. I doubt that my vocal cords received any heavenly administrations, but the spirit did move me to ask Miss E. why I couldn't sit up on the front row with the good singers. "Open your mouth so I can hear you when you sing," she said, "and pay close attention to my directions." I didn't have to pray for a promotion after that. I had found a more logical way to satisfy my ego.

My prayer postscripts in high school were largely for recognition. I have never quite been able to figure out whether such supplications are acceptable at divine headquarters or not. But I can testify that when I was willing to work for any of the coveted honors, I usually made the grade. After all, why should God see to it that I got to play on the first basketball team or write the senior class will if I could do it by myself?

High school over, I prayed to be shown what career I should choose, where I should attend college, and whom I should marry. Granted, any young person can use some help in deciding these matters, but I doubt that the answers have ever been flashed in neon from the heavenly throne. Which, I suppose, is about what I expected. It would have been unfortunate if the answers had come and, upon examination, I had found they were not at all what I wanted. If God had revealed that I should learn all about chickens so that someday I would make a good wife for a Leghorn rancher, I would have been about as happy with my prospect of the future as Betty McDonald. Instead, he left it pretty much up to me; things have worked out beautifully, and I have no complaints to make about those unanswered prayers.

A few months ago, I added a new P. S. after the "Amen." It was to "please bless those poor people over in Europe and keep them from freezing or starving." I hadn't repeated it over three times before I realized just how ineffectual such a request would be unless I had the decency to back it up with a little effort on my part. It isn't for God or the Red Cross (or the Marshall Plan) to care for the Europeans . . . it's the individual duty of everyone who is able to help. The gift loses its spirit when it comes out of taxes or is solicited by a uniformed worker.

With that thought, I apologized to the Good Hearer of all prayers and added, "But, P. S., don't let me forget to save part of my weekly income for the oblation." So far, my memory has not failed me, and I have the pleasant satisfaction of knowing that I am doing my part—not just asking God to do his.

Water and Health

THOSE WHO have been through experiences of sickness and disease know how important it is for the patient to give intelligent co-operation in following strictly the instructions of the doctor, if a return to health is sincerely desired. One of the instructions a doctor repeats often to many patients is, "Drink plenty of water." He does not mean that one should drink excessive amounts. Six to eight glasses a day is a common recommendation. Yet many people are going to doctors because they fail to heed this simple instruction. As a result they suffer many discomforts and ills in which lack of water in the system is either a primary or a secondary cause.

Many of us do not drink enough water because it is hard and gives a feeling of discomfort to the stomach, or because it tastes unpleasant. If we could all have a good supply of fine, clean water, we would like it, and would not have to be advised to drink plenty of it. Drinking good water is a pleasure and a comfort as long as the body needs it. Mountain water and pure rain water are among the most pleasant beverages in the world. But so many of our greater cities have supplies of water that are hard or unpalatable. So we postpone the next drink of water until thirst forces us to it. Then we do not drink enough, and the body suffers.

The body operates upon food, air, and water. The internal cleansing of the body, the elimination of poisons and wastes, depends upon the presence of sufficient water in the system. When it is short, the poisons are retained and the ailments begin to appear. If health is to be maintained, there must be a sufficient supply of water given to the body every day. It should be clean water.

When one looks at the rivers from which city water supplies are taken, and considers the sewage and industrial contamination that are poured into those same rivers above the source of city supply, it seems incredible that such material could be made fit for human consumption. In many cases it is not.

City authorities assert that the bacteria count is reduced to a "safe" percentage. Is there any safety with disease bacteria? We are informed that colds and influenza are caused, not by bacteria, but by a nonfiltrable virus so small its presence and strength cannot be calculated. When whole communities get colds and influenza at the same time it is reasonable to suppose that the populace is sharing some common source of infection. Food is sterilized, air is said to destroy infection, and close contact of many people is rather limited. These are unsatisfactory explanations for the spread of the disease. Only an unsterilized water supply remains as a probable source of infection.

Nature is kind to many people in providing their bodies with internal means of protection, for the destruction of bacteria. Some of us are not so fortunate, and are victims of every epidemic of cold and influenza that comes along.

My own experience is interesting. I used to have frequent colds, and always got the influenza when others did. Suspecting the water supply, I boiled the drinking water and let it cool. I made it a point not to drink any unboiled water. From that time I enjoyed great freedom from colds and flu. The only times since then that I have ever had either of these afflictions have been times when thirst has caused me to drink unboiled water in a restaurant. Every time I do it, I can count on a cold in three days. My last attack of flu, with a stubborn virus infection, came after taking a glass of unboiled water. To meet my problem, I drink plenty of water in the morning before leaving home. If I must have water during the day I drink pop, as the carbonated liquid is made sterile by the gas, which passes from the body without causing harm. Or one can boil a bit of water with a small electrical appliance.

Sufferers from sinus trouble may observe that much of their pain is caused by a shortage of water in the body. Many a sinus clog can be relieved by drinking three or four glasses of water. The liquid enables the body to move the phlegm out, making the uncomfortable nasal douche unnecessary in many cases. Pains originating in allergy—muscular cramps, asthmatic constriction of breathing passages, stomach discomfort, and certain disturbances of the nervous system—can be greatly helped by drinking enough water. Elimination of body wastes is made much easier by the use of enough water, making cathartics unnecessary. If the body has enough water, it has a better chance to carry on its work.

Boiling drinking water also drives off chlorine gas, and tends to settle some of the hardness, making it less uncomfortable on the stomach. Tea and coffee are not good for the body, but if one must choose between a boiled beverage and a glass of contaminated water, he may find the hot drinks less dangerous. And he can always let them cool to a safe drinking temperature. The heat, if we take the language of the text literally, is the dangerous factor.

Popular prejudices are amusing. Some persons passionately oppose the idea that there is danger of contamination and infection in city water. They would rather have colds and flu than boil it. Stubbornness and stupidity will make people oppose what is for their own good.

(Continued on page 15.)

What Latter Day Saints Believe

IN OUR EXAMINATION of what Latter Day Saints believe, we have devoted the last four sermons to a discussion of the "first principles" of the gospel as outlined by Paul in the sixth chapter of Hebrews. These principles are faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, the resurrection, and the eternal judgment. It is our privilege now to bring you some thoughts on what Latter Day Saints believe about the resurrection.

All Christian creeds include some statement of belief in the resurrection of the body and the life everlasting. As we have already seen, Paul includes the resurrection in his list of "first principles" of the gospel. Since the resurrection of your body and mine depends on the central fact of Christ's bodily resurrection, and since Jesus' claim to divinity and Messiahship also hinges on the fact of his resurrection, I believe we may very well say that this doctrine of the resurrection is the supremely important teaching of Christianity. Nowhere is the importance of a belief in the resurrection better set out than in Paul's first letter to the Corinthians, the fifteenth chapter: "And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept."

In common with all other Christians, we Latter Day Saints therefore believe in the historicity of the resurrection of Christ, and in the promise of a resurrection in which all men shall likewise have spirit joined with an immortal body, which shall then enjoy life everlasting. A full discussion of all the reasons why we believe in the historicity of Christ's resurrection would be impossible in the limited space at our disposal, but perhaps we may take time to suggest a few of them in outline form.

No mortal man has ever been known to have risen from the dead by his own power, save Jesus Christ, though several have laid claim to immortality only to be proved imposters. There was no doubt of Jesus' death. He was crucified by professional Roman executioners, who knew their business and who gave him an extra spear-thrust in the side to make absolutely certain of death before he was taken down from the cross. Because he had predicted that he would rise from the dead on the third day, the chief priests saw that extra precautions were taken to make sure that the body would not be spirited away. He was buried in a sealed tomb with a heavy stone—requiring the efforts of several men to move—placed over the door. And standing guard outside were Roman soldiers, whose lives would be forfeited according to the rules of the Roman army if they were careless or derelict in their duty. Knowing that Jesus was dead, and seeing how closely and securely his tomb was guarded, the disciples gave up the last vestiges of hope and returned to their old pursuits. It was Peter, I believe, who said, "I go a-fishing."

Then on the third day, which was the first day of the week, women came to the tomb bearing spices with which to embalm the body of Jesus and found the stone rolled away, the tomb empty. There had been no fight; the guards bore no signs of violence, and it is inconceivable that those guards who faced the death penalty if they allowed the body to be removed should have given up without a fight, if, as they said, the disciples had come and stolen the body. Their story that the theft occurred while they slept would not have been admitted in any court of law, because no man can testify to what happens while he is asleep. Rolling away the huge stone and carrying away a dead body is not exactly a quiet operation, nor one which could have been done by one or two men in stealth. And suppose that the disciples had stolen the body? What could they hope to do with it? The absence of a body is no proof of a resurrection. There was no successor who could have been set up in Jesus' place as a king over the Jews. Only the presence of a resurrected body could prove a resurrection. And furthermore, the fact that the guards received no punishment for a malfeasance usually punished by death is pretty good proof that there was collusion and political connivance among them and the chief priests, who paid a large sum of money to have the story spread about the disciples stealing the body while the guards slept.

The resurrection of Jesus was attested to by a large number of witnesses, including Mary Magdalene, Mary, the mother of James, Cleopas and his companion, the eleven apostles, and the "500 brethren" who are mentioned but not named by Paul in I Corinthians 15: 6. This firsthand witness or testimony of the fact that Jesus truly lived is the only thing that could account for the change which came over the beaten and discouraged apostles, sending them out into all the world as flaming evangelists.

The resurrection of the body is a scriptural teaching. It is found in both the Old and New Testaments. Job testified, "Though skinworms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Daniel wrote that many who sleep in the dust shall

About the Resurrection

BY EVAN A. FRY

awake, some to the resurrection of everlasting life, and some to everlasting shame. And there is hardly a page of the New Testament which does not contain some allusion to the resurrection. Latter Day Saints accept this Bible testimony; but we believe ourselves more fortunate than most Christian peoples in that we have an added testimony to supplement and confirm the testimony of the Bible. We can add to the testimony of the apostles and of Paul (who saw Christ as one born out of his time), the testimony of the Book of Mormon prophets, who gave an account of Christ's visit to the American continent after his resurrection. We can read that the people here saw him, examined the prints of the nails in his hands and the wound in his side, ". . . and did see with their eyes, and did feel with their hands, and did know of a surety, and did bear record, that it was he of whom it was written by the prophets should come." And we may also turn to our compilation of modern revelations and read the testimony of Joseph Smith: "And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

Latter Day Saints believe in a literal bodily resurrection. The Book of Mormon says (Alma 19: 58), "The soul shall be restored to the body, and the body to the soul; yea, and every limb and joint shall be restored to its body; yea, even a hair of the head shall not be lost, but all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame." We do not quibble about what materials will go into that resurrected body, or where God finds them. Where God gets them or how he combines them in a new body is of small importance. Surely it is no greater thing to restore a body and give it life after it has died and decayed, than it is to create a body and give it life in the beginning. Nor is it inconceivable that he who fashioned the body in the first place so that our friends and loved ones recognize its characteristics, can likewise fashion our new body so that we shall know each other, even as we are known. We are told that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. We know not what we shall be, but when our Saviour appears, we know that we shall be like him, with a resurrected, perfect, immortal body. Paul indicates in the fifteenth chapter of I Corinthians (verses 39-42) that there may be several kinds of bodies, each assigned to certain degrees of glory, according to its nature. We are willing to leave that mystery to God.

We believe that the resurrection of the body is reasonable and necessary for another reason. This earthly life is lived by spirit and body together. The law of God is for the whole man—not for the body alone or the spirit alone. The spirit makes the decisions, and the body carries them out. It is fair and fitting and proper then, that the reward or punishment of man should be given to body and spirit together, for together they have earned that reward or punishment. Each without the other is lacking. The revelations of Joseph Smith teach that "the elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy; and when separated, man cannot receive a fullness of joy."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5. And again, ". . . through the redemption which is made for you is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

Since the resurrection of all other men is made possible by the resurrection of Christ, he came forth first—"the firstfruits of them that sleep" (I Corinthians 15: 20). The power of death to hold men was broken by this first resurrection, but all Scripture plainly teaches that when Christ returns to earth to set up his kingdom, "the dead in Christ shall rise first" (I Thessalonians 4: 16). "Christ the firstfruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming."—I Corinthians 15: 23. Jesus, speaking to his disciples said, ". . . the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 28, 29. John the Revelator saw in vision a first resurrection of those who had not worshiped the beast, and added, "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."—Revelation 20: 5. The Book of Mormon, and the revelations to Joseph Smith also bear out this teaching that there shall be two resurrections; first, of those who are Christ's at his coming, and second, of those whose wickedness does not entitle them to that first resurrection.

Those who have a part in the first resurrection (and Latter Day Saints believe that those will include the heathen nations and those who died in ignorance of the law but received the gospel and accepted Christ in the spirit world) will live and reign with Christ on the earth a thousand years. During this time of the millennium, Satan will be bound so that he can no longer tempt men. Children will still be born, and will grow to maturity (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10). Men will die, but not in the sense that we use that word and understand it now; for they shall not sleep in the dust, but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye (I Corinthians 15: 51). Isaiah says (65: 20) that this change will come when men reach the age of 100 years. The wicked, or those who are not Christ's at his coming, will continue to dwell on the earth, but when the time of their change comes, they will be accursed, instead of blessed with an immortal body.

During this millennial reign, the resurrected heathen peoples will have further opportunity to learn and grow and develop, according to their choices made after opportunity has been extended in the spirit world. Then at the close of the millennium, Satan will be loosed for a little season, that again there might be opportunity for these heathen nations to choose right or wrong, and that the children who have grown up without sin during the millennium might also have the opportunity of choosing, as have we, in the midst of temptation.

After the millennium comes the second resurrection, in which all the rebellious and wicked men of earth, who "received not the gospel of Christ, neither the testimony of Jesus; . . . who deny not the Holy Spirit" shall be restored to their bodies, and in those bodies brought to judgment for the deeds done in the flesh. Every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall then confess that Jesus is the Christ, as he sits on his throne to judge all nations. Satan and his powers of darkness shall be overthrown and cast into the lake of fire with all those who are still in rebellion against God.

It is not within the province of this particular subject for us to discuss the nature or degree of reward or punishment given to various classes of men in this last judgment. We are saving that for next week, when we shall consider the sixth of Paul's "first principles," the eternal judgment.

Summarizing our conclusions, we believe that Christ arose from the dead; we believe that all men will be restored again to a physical body, so that body and spirit, inseparably united, may stand together before God for reward or punishment. We believe that such a literal bodily resurrection is taught by both Old and New Testaments, and corroborated by the Book of Mormon and the book of Doctrine and Covenants. We believe that the belief in the resurrection of the body is reasonable and logical and not outside the power of the God of creation. We believe that the dead in Christ shall arise first, including those who accepted him in the spirit world after having had no opportunity to hear of Christ in this life. We believe that the wicked shall not come forth until the second resurrection, after the thousand years are ended.

Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they shall rest from their labors, and their works do follow them, and they shall have part in the first resurrection.

Price Changes Effective March 1

	From	To
Angel Message Tract Book—cloth	$ 1.00	$ 1.25
Angel Message Tract Book—paper	.50	.75
Book of Mormon—cloth	1.50	1.75
Book of Mormon—limp leather	4.00	4.50
Book of Mormon—flexible leather	5.00	5.50
Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants	2.00	2.25
	5 for 1.65	5 for 2.00
Compendium	1.75	2.00
Doctrinal References	.25	.35*
Does It Make Any Difference?	.50	.60
Enduring Word	2.00	2.25
	5 for 1.65	5 for 2.00
The First Americans	.50	.60
God Our Help	1.75	2.00
Inspired Version of the Bible—cloth	4.25	4.50
Inspired Version of the Bible
limp leather	6.75	7.00
with thumb index	7.75	8.00
Inspired Version of the Bible
flexible leather	9.25	9.50
with thumb index	10.25	10.50
Inspired Version of the Bible—de luxe	10.75	11.00
with thumb index	11.75	12.00
Let Us Worship	1.50	2.00
On Memory's Beam	2.50	3.00
Oriole Girl's Handbook	.35	.50
Restoration: A Study in Prophecy	1.75	2.00
	5 for 1.50	5 for 1.85
The Scouting Program	.35	.50
Through the West Door	2.00	2.50
Zion's League Annual	2.00	2.50

Beginning March 1

the Saints' Herald will be:

$3.50 per year to the United States

$3.75 per year to Canada

$4.50 per year to Foreign Countries

Help Available

IF THE WORDS "help available" had the personal appeal to the leaders of nations in times of confusion and perplexity that "help wanted" has to the unfortunate in times of unemployment and depression, the year 1948 might have made its advent into a far different world than the one in which it found us. If, nearly two thousand years ago, the Hebrew nation had appropriated the help extended to it, the Master of men would not have wept over the beloved city and uttered the plaintive cry, "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem."

The new year comes to a troubled world in confusion, apprehension, and uncertainty—a world that has lost its bearings and sense of direction. . . .

Recently the chaplain of Congress made one of the shortest of recorded public prayers. He asked God to have mercy upon the men in Congress and concluded with that. If only he had read two proverbs from the wisest of earthly sovereigns, King Solomon, found in Proverbs 3: 5, 6: "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart and lean not unto thine own understanding." "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." The very words of God might in the beginning of the session have thrown some light upon the proceedings.

There is a heartening instance in the history of the beginnings of the United States that verifies the statement that God will direct and help when humble acknowledgment of need is made. When the early statesmen met in the Constitutional Convention for the purpose of drafting the fundamental law of this free people, their discussions and deliberations extended week after week with little progress until, it is said, James Madison addressed the assembly in these words: "Gentlemen of the convention, this matter is in the hands of God." Then they proceeded in the work of writing what the English statesman, Gladstone, said was the noblest document ever struck off by the pen of man.

BY ADDIE C. VAN SYOC

We note the proverb states, "In all thy ways acknowledge him." The application is all-inclusive and cares for our every need.

Latter Day Saints know well the story of the perplexed young Joseph as to his church affiliation, and how in his confused state, the Scripture James 1: 5 was brought to his attention. When he read, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him," he at once appropriated the help afforded. In humility, he made this Scripture his prayer, with the result that he was instructed to join none of the existing churches. Later, he was used of God to re-establish the church of the latter days upon the earth.

Not only are direction and help available to the leaders of men, but to the humblest of God's creations who acknowledge a need of his help. How much heartache and failure, lost time and effort could be avoided by committing one's way unto him who is so supremely able and so graciously waiting and ever ready to help at the faintest call.

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."—Psalm 46: 1.

Water and Health

(Continued from page 11.)

Nobody was ever hurt by boiling his drinking water, and many have been helped by it. It isn't a cure-all. But there are situations in which it has helped, and the practice is reasonable and harmless.

L. J. L.

Sharing

By Frances Hartman

IT IS A THRILL to share with great movements like the Friendship Train, which we know will bring relief to millions of suffering people. This is good, but our highest aim today should be to share with even a greater movement—the movement of Christ. We should share our time, our talents, and our possessions for the upbuilding of his cause.

In order to share intelligently and rightly, it is good to take an inventory of the gifts we can lay at the feet of the Master. Let us ask ourselves these questions:

1. What can I share?
2. How much will my contribution profit?
3. Are the materials I use for building durable and strong? Will they help to build righteousness, peace, wisdom, and understanding into human temples for Christ?

The train that travels for the Master isn't a new train, but it is still gathering cars. More and more people are learning what a joy it is to share in the Lord's cause, ever building beautiful, worth-while, and clean lives for Christ.

Asks Help for Friend

The small group of Saints here at Seminole have been greatly encouraged by recent visits of priesthood members. We were spoken to in prophecy and told that we would be blessed if we remained faithful. These are critical times, and there is much for us to do if we would not disappoint our God.

I have a friend, Mrs. Hillman Yourley, 1155 North Coast Bend, Laguna Beach, California, who needs the prayers of the Saints. If there are any members in that vicinity, I am sure the Yourleys would appreciate a visit from them.

MRS. OLLIE OLIVER.

53277 Second Street
Seminole, Oklahoma

Life's Expanding Horizons

THE CANDLELIGHT is still bright in our memories of the celebration of a life that gave a new horizon to a darkened world. This was a new era—the Christian era, which burst forth like a beautiful dawn, forming a new horizon of a bright, new day. This light has never faded nor grown dim, but has penetrated down through the halls of time and still twinkles in the glow of every yule log, reflecting its radiance in the sparkling eyes of girls and boys whose thoughts fill the world with hope for “peace on earth, good will toward all men.”

How fitting that coupled with this celebration is the celebration of a new year—a new year filled with possibilities of many new and interesting horizons. Not a jumbled mass of them, but three hundred and sixty-five days in which to seek new mental, physical, and spiritual horizons. Our lives are influenced by these horizons. Whether we look at the same ones every day or seek after and find new ones depends entirely upon our progress.

Our mental horizons are influenced by the books we read, the things we select from the daily papers, the radio programs we listen to, and the movies we attend. We are commanded in Doctrine and Covenants 87:5, to become acquainted with all good books. Read the editorial page first in the daily papers for a change, then the current events, and—if time permits—the few good comic strips. Balance all of this with daily reading from one of the Three Standard Books of the church or some recommended home study by the General Department of Women or Department of Religious Education. When looking for musical or radio entertainment, select cultural music and educational programs. When choosing a movie, refer to the “Parent-Teachers” approved list, or choose one with a moral or a good travelogue.

The road we travel governs our physical horizon. The very thing that makes travel interesting is the ever-changing experiences. Travel on a ship at sea is very monotonous, especially at midday. One can see only a vast expanse of water and sky. The horizon is the same all around and the view is limited to nine miles in any one direction. Always a welcome change is the sunset. Travel on land is much different. We took a trip through the west this summer. The sky was completely overcast, and it was pouring rain. The weather report for the next state was sunshine and blue sky. We drove faster than usual through the storm area, and what a welcome sight we saw ahead of us—a new horizon! There was an abrupt end to the storm clouds, and the beginning of clear, blue skies and bright sunshine flooding the country side.

On another occasion, we visited the Ozarks. We stopped at a beautiful little village nestled close to a blue lake with emerald green hills for a backdrop. We were told in the village about an old castle named “Tanka” that lay in ruins on the top of the highest peak of the Ozark mountain range a few miles away and decided to drive to the site. As we ascended, we caught fleeting glances of scenic beauty through the forest of trees that fringed both sides of the winding road, but not until we had reached the last bend and were finally at the very top of the climb did we see the castle ruins and the surrounding mountain peaks that framed an awe-inspiring horizon. To the left of us was a rambling old lookout tower. We climbed the fifty steps to the top and, from this higher elevation, our horizon was broadened to include mountain peaks far beyond the ones we saw from the level of the ruins. In the valley below, we could see a beautiful little pool, moss fringed, which resembled a fairy's looking glass as it lay placidly reflecting the mountains. We descended into this little valley, and found our horizon was only as broad as the miniature valley was wide. What a struggle we had to again ascend the heights from which we had so easily descended.

BY EMILY INOUYE

Mental and physical horizons govern our spiritual horizons. Looking back over our past life or dwelling upon our mistakes keep us in the valley or under dark clouds. Through spiritual progress only do we see new spiritual horizons. The Lord pointed out to Nicodemus, the rich young ruler, a new spiritual horizon for his life. Paul pleaded with the saints at Corinth to look for new horizons for their lives. God makes that same plea today to us through his prophet.

New horizons for our lives in 1948 will be found in the continual progressive climb toward Zion building goals. God has told us through his prophet (as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 140:5) that Zion conditions are no farther away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of his people justifies. May the words of the well known hymn, “I'm Pressing on the Upward Way,” become a prayer throughout the new year, and may it help us find new horizons for our lives.

a home column feature

A Tribute to Scoutmasters

(Whenever an organization desires to know public opinion, it takes a poll. So, when I was asked to pay a tribute to the Scoutmasters, I decided to take a poll of the mothers of Scouts. The opinions expressed in this tribute are theirs. They appreciate this opportunity to say "Thank You.")

WHEN WE SEND our twelve-year old sons to the first scout meeting, you accept them as men-to-be. We send them to you as children; in our mother hearts, they are still babies. The first home tie is broken, our word and advice are no longer the law. It is their first regular night out, and the plan of the Scoutmaster and fellow scouts will take precedence over any plan the family has.

When the first overnight hike is arranged, we plan with outward enthusiasm, but are filled with inward misgivings. We want a Scoutmaster who not only is responsible for the mental and physical development of his troop, but one who will watch over our children, see that they do not overeat, or grow too tired; one who will watch lest the exuberance of freedom may cause them to grow careless of the sharp axes and knives attached to their belts so proudly as they hastened to their meeting place; one who will curb their youthful enthusiasm when the magic flames of the campfire play in the wind. And when the shades of evening fall, and we cannot tuck the fellows in their beds, then most of all we want a Scoutmaster who will take care of our children and replace the blankets that their restless feet kick off during the night.

When they return to us tired, dirty, and happy, we discern amid excited chatter concerning their manly accomplishments that the Scoutmaster has been kind, considerate, and watchful. Maternal objections are overcome, and a new family era has entered the home. Every member is affected by the "Scouting way."

Scoutmasters, we thank you when we are informed as to the what, who, where, and how of scouting.

The years pass rapidly while our sons advance from Tenderfoot to Second, First, Star, Life, and coveted Eagle Scouts. Our requirement for a Scoutmaster has changed. Those scouts of ours should now be tucking in the blanket about other Tenderfoot, but they need a Scoutmaster who will inspire leadership, good morals, wholesome companionship, and a reverence for God in them.

That is asking a great deal from one man, but you have met the challenge, and we, the mothers, give you our heartfelt thanks. Guided by infinite patience and understanding by a Scoutmaster whom they first respected and later learned to love, our sons have learned to live, work, and play with others—to do their share, to stay by until the job is done, to be mindful and considerate of others, to explore new fields, to worship the Maker of this great universe.

You have kept their feet on the ground, but you have lifted their eyes to the sky.

We, the mothers, thank you!

Stretching the Dollar

Yes, the dollar bill has shrunk!

From all appearances it is the same old bill—the color, the shape, the size, the printing on front and back. But isn't George Washington looking a bit grimmer? From the face of the one dollar bill, he has calmly observed us spend wisely or foolishly—always proud that the bill has great value.

Now, even George has to admit that his people do not get as much for their money as in years past. A portion must go to Uncle Sam, who protected and saved the country from destruction—another portion for national and community improvement. Then, when that bill is presented in payment for family needs (and all those needs have doubled in price) it looks like thirty-five cents. It has definitely shrunk!

The task of Mrs. Homemaker, who spends the major portion of the income, is to stretch the dollar bill until it covers the family needs.

How can it be done? How are you doing it? Will you write and let us know? Address, The General Department of Women, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This is the way one woman stretched her dollar:

Recently she wore, for the first time, a very smart hat. It was a veiled, winter white felt with an attractive feather pom-pom. After being showered with compliments by her friends, she confided that she had seen the hat in a store for $12.50, but couldn't afford to pay that much. She shopped around until she found a simple white hat for $2.50 and wired goose feathers together for the pom-pom, saving herself $10.00.

—LULU CARMICHAEL

Words are the most potent drug used by mankind.—Kipling.

Worship Suggestions for March

Theme for the Month: RESURRECTION
(The Inspired Version used in all instances.)

MARCH 7

Theme: RESURRECTION FROM DEAD WORKS.

Prelude: "Hark, the Voice of Jesus Calling," Saints' Hymnal, No. 344.

Call to Worship:

"Although a man should be baptized a hundred times, it availeth him nothing; for you can not enter in at the straight gate by the law of Moses, neither by your dead works; for it is because of your dead works, that I have caused this last covenant, and this church to be built up unto me; even as in days of old. Wherefore, enter ye in at the gate, as I have commanded, and seek not to counsel your God."—Doctrine and Covenants 20: 1. "And say unto this people, choose ye this day to serve the Lord God who made you."—Genesis 6: 35.

Hymn: "Hark, the Voice of Jesus Calling," Saints Hymnal, No. 344.

Prayer: (For guidance and knowledge.)

Scripture Reading:

"Therefore not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, Of the doctrine of baptisms, of laying on of hands, and of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. And we will go on unto perfection if God permit."—Hebrews 6: 1-3.

Poem:

I ask no heaven till earth be Thine;
No glory crown while work of mine
Remaineth here.

When earth shall shine among the stars,
Her sins wiped out, her captives free,
Her voice a music unto thee,
For crown, more work give thou to me,
Lord, here am I.

—Author Unknown.

Talk: Based upon the conversion of the son of Alma, the high priest, and the four sons of Mosiah, the king and a high priest (Mosiah 11: 159-207; 12: 1-13).

The son of Alma and the three sons of Mosiah repented from their dead works. Whereas they had been destroying the church, they now became alive. We, as individuals, must live to be resurrected from our dead works, and become alive by doing God's work, such as filing our inventories, paying tithing, studying, and telling the gospel story to our neighbor.

Hymn: "O Lord, Around Thine Altar Now," Saints' Hymnal, No. 74 (verses 3, 4, 5).

Commission:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, This is my gospel; and ye know the things that ye must do in my church; for the works which ye have seen me do, that shall ye also do; For that which ye have seen me do, even that shall ye do; therefore if ye do these things, blessed are ye, for ye shall be lifted up at the last day."

Benediction.

MARCH 14

Theme: IN SERVICE THERE IS LIFE.

Prelude: "Hark, the Voice of Jesus Calling," Saints' Hymnal, No. 344.

Call to Worship:

"I heard the voice of the Lord saying, whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me."—Isaiah 6: 8.

Hymn: "Hark, the Voice of Jesus Calling," Saints' Hymnal, No. 344.

Prayer: Ask God to strengthen our desires and to help us to prepare for work in his service.

Poem in Response:

O Lord, who knowest every need of mine,
Help me to bear each cross and not repine;
Grant me fresh courage every day,
Help me to do my work always Without complaint.

—Author Unknown.

Hymn: "Send Me Forth, O Blessed Master!" Saints' Hymnal, No. 214, or "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," Saints' Hymnal, No. 213.

Talk:

IN SERVICE THERE IS LIFE

Brother Burton had been appointed to Australia. This, Sister Burton said, was a great trial to her even though she had seen previously in a dream that Brother Burton would go to Australia and that she would accompany him. She says,

"After turning our faces homeward from Nova Scotia, my thoughts were so occupied with home and the children (which had been left in America) and the enjoyment of settling down again for a while, that even the delay for conference was a trifle tedious. Therefore, when the appointment was made known to me, it was like a shock of a ship that had come in contact with a rock and suddenly brought to a quivering standstill for a few moments; and then came the reaction of tears of sorrow and disappointment followed by a calm indifference for a few days . . . soon the conflict commenced between conflicting duties; that to my husband on the one side and our children on the other. Which of those was I to separate myself from?

BY BERNICE BONHAM

"It was a hard position to choose between, and it seemed at times as if my heart was being drawn asunder. I could not bear the thought of such a long separation from my husband. . . . On the other hand, parental duty, as well as love, forbade the thought of leaving the children; especially the girls; they were just the age when they most needed a mother's care, and were already very weary of being separated from us. . . . I hoped after we got home my duty would be made plainer. How tedious to me were the many delays we encountered on our trip homeward. Every day that kept me away from them was a loss. . . ."

(It was at last decided to take the two girls with them to Australia, leaving their son, as he was not dependent upon them for support. To do this, they would have to sell their home to pay passage and expenses. It did not enter either their heads or hearts to give up the mission. Then came the struggle as to whether it was right to leave their son alone with no one to care for him if he became ill.)

"It seemed so like turning him adrift in the world . . . what a dreadful thought it would be, if in our zeal to save others we neglected and lost our own!

"And again, was it right for us to sell our little home? Money in hand soon slipped away; and if we were spared to fulfill our mission and return again, what then? . . . I believe He requires his people to exercise wisdom; and when they do not, they usually have to suffer the consequence. So if we had a home, and unwisely let it slip from us, could we reasonably expect God to provide us with another? Such thoughts as these continually revolved in my mind, hedging up the way on all sides . . . my faith was dormant. I was left to my own strength, and that was weakness.

"One memorable night, being alone, I was sorrowing and weeping in mental anguish, and fairly clutching the bedclothes for support . . . and cried out, 'O God, help me!' . . . I learned that night what many another child has

MARCH 21

Theme: ETERNAL QUALITIES
Prelude: "Come Ye Apart," Saints' Hymnal, No. 108.

Call to Worship:
 Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

Hymn: "Come Ye Apart," Saints' Hymnal, No. 108.

Prayer: To help us to discover those qualities that are eternal.

Hymn: "O For a Closer Walk With God," Saints' Hymnal, No. 313.

Talk:
 "Remember, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence. Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you."—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 2.

These are the eternal qualities we must acquire. We cannot have patience one day and not the next; we must have it each day until it is as much a part of us as any part of our body. Jesus was patient not once but always with a people that did not understand his purpose and work. It is only as we become like him that we shall achieve eternal life.

Jesus said, "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!" He was not impatient or angry, but he knew their hearts were not right, and they could not be resurrected and live in the presence of the Father as they were.

Faith becomes an eternal quality as one obeys and the words of Jesus, believing them to be true. It is only after one moves forward to study or pray or observe the law that this faith becomes knowledge. When we have perfect knowledge, we will be able to come into the presence of the Master.

Our faith cannot be like a flickering light that does little good. It must burn brightly and steadily whatever the cost.

Another eternal quality is knowledge. "For now we see through a glass, darkly, but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known."—I Corinthians 13: 12.

That which we receive here we will take into the hereafter. Then should not that which we read, study, and know, be that which will help us to live with him? It is such qualities as these that we each must build into our lives if we would be resurrected and live in his presence.

Meditation: If Suddenly Upon the Street," Saints' Hymnal, No. 216. (Read softly as music is played.)

Hymn: "I Know That My Redeemer Lives," Saints' Hymnal, No. 256.

Benediction.

MARCH 28

Theme: CHRIST LIVES (Easter).
Prelude: "Yes, the Redeemer Rose," Saints' Hymnal, No. 167.

Call to Worship:

learned, that no amount of tears or prayers will induce the Father to swerve one iota from the already given term. . . . 'All things are bought with a price.' I could only groan, 'Lord, help me to bear the price! . . .'

She asked the Father why it was necessary to go so far and if they could not tell the gospel there. She was answered, "Where would you have been had not Christ left his Father's glory and come to this world to seek and save those who knew him not? . . . Lord, give me strength, and I will follow, but oh, my son, my only son! How hard it is to leave him alone, knowing he will suffer so much loneliness.

"I freely gave my Son to suffer and to die."

"Forgive me, Father, I will do right.' But I wondered why, in this, my need, I did not receive that power and influence of that spirit that would be so comforting. . . . All night my cry had been, 'Let the cup pass,' but when I arose in the morning, after a few hours' sleep, it was with the solemn feeling of, 'Thy will be done.' I had passed the Gethsemane of my missionary life, and arose strengthened, and no longer withheld my consent to the sale of the place. Then preparations commenced in earnest."—Beatrice Witherspoon, pages 262-269.

So it is with us, if we would have life, we must serve others. We may not be asked to leave loved ones and go to distant shores as a missionary, but each one is asked to live and serve where he is. Will you refuse Him or say with Sister Burton, "Thy will be done," and go forth to teach a church school class, lead the choir, keep the church clean and warm, or tell your neighbor about the gospel?

Poem:

Lord,
 Not that daily tasks may lighter be,
 But that my way to thee I'll clearer see.

Not for wealth to squander on vain things,
 But treasures that in heaven, glory brings.

Not for friends that flatter or cajole,
 But friends, that hurting, purify my soul.

Not for health to walk the broad by-ways,
 But strength to do thy gracious will always.

Lord,
 May thy word not fall on shallow ground,
 But in my daily life much fruit be found.
 —Gladys Slemons.

Hymn: "Take My Life, and Let It Be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee," Saints' Hymnal, No. 307.

Commission:

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."—I Corinthians 15: 58.

Benediction.

"Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"—John 11: 25, 26.

Hymn: "Lift Your Glad Voices in Triumph on High," Saints' Hymnal, No. 165.

Prayer: (Petitioning God to help us to know him better and what he requires of us.)

Poem:

Can you talk to Him in secret
 In the daily tasks you do,
 And then yearn to grow more like him
 In the lives you build anew?

'Now we pray thee, gracious Master,
 Send thy spirit day by day,
 That our lights will shine more brightly
 For the friends of life's highway.
 —Ruby Strand.

Scripture: Matthew 28: 1-5, 15-19.

Solo: "I Know That My Redeemer Lives," Saints' Hymnal, No. 169.

Talk: Based on the Easter story—Luke 24: 12-34, ending with something similar to the following:

The unfinished work of the Master is committed into our hands. We know only that the Master has risen, as we live to prove it to the world. As two of the disciples walked to Emmaus, Jesus joined them, but their minds were darkened from misunderstanding. It was only as they shared with Jesus and he blessed the bread that they recognized him. It is only as we share our knowledge of Jesus with our neighbors that the world will know Christ has truly risen and lives today. That is the work he has commissioned us to do.

Hymn: "I Know That My Redeemer Lives," Saints' Hymnal, No. 256.

Commission:

"And now I would commend you to seek this Jesus of whom the prophets and apostles have written, that the grace of God the Father, and also the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost, which beareth record of them, may be, and abide in you for ever. Amen."—Ether 5: 41.
Poem Prayer, ending with a few words of benediction that our lives may show he lives today:

A living faith I seek to know,
 O God, a faith to help me grow;
 A hope that earthly foe shan't dim
 As I shall seek to learn of him
 Who died, yet LIVES and LOVES us so.

O Lord, I pray that as I go
 Along life's pathway here below,
 I'll strive to keep my lamp in trim,
 Undimmed by ever-passing whim.
 O Lord, with hope my soul's aglow,
 A living faith.
 —Camilla Collins.

February is missionary emphasis month. Although New Horizons was primarily designed to serve as an outlet for layman expression, it now gives space to some of the younger appointees. We believe you will be interested in what they have as objectives and how you can assist them in the work.

New

Practice What We Preach

By WARREN H. CHELLINE

ABSOLUTELY THE WORST thing that can be said of any minister is, "He doesn't practice what he preaches." We early realize the value of personal appeal in our ministry and how our message will fall flat without it, so we never allow ourselves to go about wearing rumpled suits or soiled shirts, because a sloppy person cannot preach effectively about the orderliness of the kingdom. Neither do we act gloomy or unduly fearful if we hope adequately to reflect the joy and satisfaction of the gospel. The reasons are the same in other fields: the ship's captain who nervously chews his fingernails during a storm, or the nurse who anxiously runs through the hospital corridor can never instill confidence in those who look to them for help. So, to the young people of the church who often ask what they can do to help the missionaries, our answer is this: "Practice what we preach." Of course we shall be doing our best to practice it too, but we'll need you to help us.

YOU CAN PRACTICE what we preach by grooming yourself so that we can have an attractive young person to point out as representative of our church. By endeavoring to take personal pride in your neatness, you can be one of our best missionary tracts. I have a nice red-checked hunting shirt and a fringed suede jacket that are just right for reunion campfires, but if I wore an outfit like that into the pulpit, no one would pay any attention to my sermon, would they? And you can further organize yourself to the advantage of the missionary work by filing your inventory, taking care of your money and possessions, and getting into the tithing habit. It may not seem important to you when you are only dealing with quarters and dimes, but you really can help us if you are a good steward. The unorganized people, who flutter around helplessly, are slowing us down in our missionary work. They are ill-informed about the church and nearly everything else; they call undue attention to themselves through their lack of harmony, and are never prepared to offer effective service. Many times these poor, flustered people are the ones by whom our prospects are frightened away. So please, if you really want to help us, organize yourselves. We have been preaching it for a long time, but we need more Latter Day Saints to practice it.

WE WOULD also like you to practice being an optimist. To do this, you need not be unrealistic and wear rose-colored glasses. There is a great deal to be cheerful about, and nobody admires a grouch. The Heavenly Father created us that we might have joy, and all the prophets—especially the Lord Jesus—have tried to help us find it. It is important that we recognize the great progress our church is making; we need not brag about it, nor rest on our laurels, but neither need we minimize the fact that we are taking steps forward in Zion. So many times Zion's League panel discussions degenerate to raillery at the alleged mistakes of the older generation. That stuff never goes over, and you will be hurting our evangelistic drives every time you slip into it. You can practice what we preach, then, by being cheerful. You needn't be offensively clownish to get the point across; just let the joy of the restored gospel shine naturally out through your personality, and your help will be immeasurable.

Here Is the Writer

Warren Chelline was born and reared in New England. After graduation from Cranston High School, he attended Brown University, where he majored in English Literature. For the past five years, he has been under general church appointment—first as a missionary, and now as pastor of the Windsor, Ontario, Branch. He is twenty-four years old and single—"Something of a phenomenon among appointees," he comments. His present ambitions (in addition to continuing his ministerial career) are: (1) to grow a decent-looking mustache, (2) to live in a house with a fireplace, and (3) to write lots of worth-while articles for the "Herald."

Horizons

AND WHILE WE are thinking of how you can help, how about deciding to develop some of those special abilities we are always preaching about? We could use a few more ushers, musicians, landscape gardeners, handymen, and secretaries in our branches. Where can we find some scouts, guide leaders, tenors for our choirs, and publicity agents? We need experts in these many fields—not just mediocre hands, but well-trained workers—people who are prompted basically by devotion to Christ. When you sing or play at a church worship service, don't concertize; we would rather have you go flat than "perform." Do you see the kind of specialist we need? We need those who are led first of all by the loving desire to serve the Master, and led strongly, yet secondarily, by the art or craft of their talent. Throw away the old slogan, "Art for the sake of art," and substitute, "Art for the sake of the kingdom of God." You will discover that your talent won't suffer; it will glow much brighter, and your pastor and all the missionaries will number you among their choicest assets.

MISSIONARY'S PROSPECT can detect selfishness a mile away, and it frightens him off like poison. Are you scaring people away by being selfish? So-called "discrimination" for unsound reasons is gagging us when we try to preach the gospel to certain racial and cultural groups, because we fear that you may not be unselfish to our converts if they happen to be Negro, Mexican, Oriental, red-headed, double-

(Continued on page 23.)

I'm All Thrilled About the Restoration Festival

OUR NEXT BIG CHURCH-WIDE EVENT is the Restoration Festival. This, in my mind, is one of the most exciting things the young people of our church have entered into in recent years. It is their own vigorous way of expressing gratitude and joy for the restoring of Christ's church to our day.

This week of worship and festivity, celebrated for the first time this year, is between April 11 and 18. So close to the birthday of our church, no better time could be chosen than spring for a day or two days or seven days of joyous activity.

During last General Conference, members of the General Zion's League Council agreed that it would create an opportunity for happy experiences in worship, sacrifice, recreation, drama, festivity, and all the other available mediums, so they chose to set aside one week of the year for a church-wide Restoration Festival. This would be an annual event, in which would be presented all the beauty and pageantry that the young people could pack into seven days.

Some branches are small, but they can each have at least one event. A gracious dinner, perhaps, at which may be read a message from our patriarch, Elbert A. Smith—a dinner to which the Christ is invited. Simplicity is the keynote of this meal; sacrifice and worship, the theme. All the youth can share in this festival dinner with thanksgiving for the church of Christ and a spirit of dedication to act as a united people and as expert workmen.

Other larger branches might have a whole week of activity, with a myriad of events and a program of delightful experiences: a party, a festival of music or drama, a night of home ministry, a special early Sunday morning Communion service to which each Leaguer might bring a white envelope with his own gift, culminating a week of personal sacrifice; exhibits of hobbies, service projects, and every other form of group endeavor that a lively Zion's League could imagine can fill the festival week.

I'm thrilled about it. Our Leagues in Independence are planning already. Graceland is going to make it a big week. Every Zion's League in the church will want to do its best to make this a happy occasion—with the ultimate site in mind that this commemorates the restoration of the gospel of Christ, a program of inspired service to our fellows.

—Sadi Anka Moon

The Cottage Meeting

(Continued from page 6.)

tion in addition to the slides now being provided. The use of some aids such as these increase the effectiveness of missionary teaching in cottage meetings to a marked degree.

7. Obtaining decisions. Decisions must be worked for. While it is true that we ought not to baptize persons who are unprepared, it is our job to see that they are prepared and baptized. As one writer puts it, "You 'urge' them to go to college, to take liver pills, to buy a home, to join a service club—why not 'urge' them into the best thing in the world—the kingdom of God?"

In order to do this effectively, a number of things must be kept in mind. The missionary is introducing them to God. He desires them to see Christ as he sees Him. A decision to give themselves to Christ through His church commits them to a new way of life. This has tremendous implications. To help them in facing the issue, the missionary needs to think "through" them. He must see through their eyes and feel through their hearts. He must help them see that they are not merely joining a church, but identifying themselves with Christ.

If the decision is not made this time, keep the door open for later efforts. Prepare the way for another to follow you by leaving them as good friends. Many of our prospects will be not only good friends but good church members if we perform this labor of love.

THESE SEVEN FACTORS are pretty much the same both in branches and in new openings. In new openings, there will be fewer sources of prospect names at first, and there will be no public services to tie to, but the rest of the program is pretty much as in branches. As soon as possible in new openings, public services ought to be organized. In branches, local workers will add to the missionary force, while in new openings, the missionary must start from scratch. As he develops his program, however, he will find the new opening growing rapidly into a group with increasing resources and facilities and a widening field of labor.

In the effective use of cottage meetings, there must be planning, and the plans must be worked. In branches, the priesthood should be called together and informed of the program. One member of the local ministry should accompany the missionary in each cottage meeting series, and should follow through the entire series. This will instruct him in the method and will help to tie the new members into the local congregation. If local priesthood members are carrying on the program, they should go in pairs and one should be in charge. He should take the lead, present the lesson material, and call on the other man for assistance as he may feel led. If there are differences in understanding about some matter, never discuss them in the presence of non-members. All differences, however significant or profound the issue may be, should be adjusted privately. If a wrong impression is left with the prospects through an error by the minister, he can correct it later himself to much better advantage than if his partner tries to do it at the time.

Set the time for the meeting in accordance with the needs of the friends. Make it at the same time every week if possible, so an uninterrupted schedule may be followed here and in other homes. It may be possible to have meetings in two homes each night, one at 7 and another at 9.

The minister should organize the whole program with respect to the question, "What do I wish to accomplish with this family?" On this basis, he can set the time, arrange the subject matter, choose his priesthood assistant, plan the nature of the meeting, and point toward the decision. Having laid the plan, he must work it. No plan is any good unless it is worked.

The importance of prayer cannot be overstressed. If the missionary and the church members will pray earnestly, the ministry of the Spirit to both the missionary and the church friends will pave the way for the spoken and visualized message. Prayer will quicken the spirit of discernment and lay the foundation for a fellowship which is, after all, the "tie that binds." Using techniques which are appropriate and in the spirit of witnessing, missionaries (both appointees and local ministers) can use the cottage meeting as a continuing fruitful activity which will bring Christ into the souls of men and the souls of men to Christ.

NOTE: The writer gratefully acknowledges the assistance of Elders Ward A. Hougas and James C. Daugherty in gathering material for this article.

Church School Leadership Series Price changes, March 1.

	From	To
The Church School, Its Organization, and Administration	.50	.60
Exploring the Church	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Children's Division	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Young People's Division	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Junior High Division	.50	.60
Junior Church Manual	.50	.60
L.D.S. and Changing Relationship to the Social Order	.50	.60
That Problem of Leadership	.50	.60

BULLETIN BOARD

Oregon District Youth Convention

A convention for the young people of Oregon District will be held at the Woodburn church on February 14 and 15. Zion's Leaguers, young married people, youth leaders, district officers and pastors are invited to attend. Apostles D. Blair Jensen and W. Wallace Smith will be present. The schedule is as follows: Saturday—prayer service at 8:30 a.m., classwork until noon, recreation in the afternoon, and an evening service at 7; Sunday—prayer service at 8:30, classwork, sermon by Apostle Jensen at 11, and a sermon by Apostle Smith at 3 p.m. Basket lunches will be served by the women's department on both Saturday and Sunday. Out-of-town visitors who plan to spend Saturday night in Woodburn should contact George E. Omans, 825 North Sixth Street, Woodburn.

J. L. VERHEL,
District President.

Notice to Gold Star Parents

I am planning to be in Margraten, Holland, this spring. If any parents having sons buried there would like to have me visit the graves, I shall be glad to do so. I shall also appreciate receiving the names and addresses (and any additional information) of friends and relatives of American church members in Holland.

ALBERT A. SCHERER.

Mission Headquarters
Annastraat 2
Rotterdam, Holland

Change of Address

Donald V. Lents
313 East South Avenue
Independence, Missouri

Mr. and Mrs. Russell F. Ralston
180 Dakota Street
San Francisco, California

Books Wanted

J. D. Anderson (president of Kansas City Stake), 1318 East Thirtieth, Kansas City, Missouri, needs a copy of General Conference Resolutions (1852-1915) and its supplement (1915-1922). Please write stating price and condition of books before sending them.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are requested for Mrs. D. C. Stafford, 1306 Bennington, Kansas City, Missouri, who is bedfast with a severe nerve ailment.

Prayers are requested for Edna Peterson of Thermopolis, Wyoming, who has been bedfast for the past sixteen months. At present, she is in the sanitarium at Boulder, Colorado. If there are any saints in that area, she will appreciate their contacting her.

Mrs. Herbert Beard, Rural Route 1, Thorn-ton, Indiana, asks prayers for her six-year-old niece, Emily Ann Hornocker, that she may be healed of anemia and rheumatic fever.

Prayers are requested for C. W. Fisher of Davidson, Oklahoma, by Mrs. Fisher.

Prayers are requested for Harry Dauster, a nonmember, who is seriously ill in Bell Memorial Hospital in Kansas City, Kansas.

WEDDINGS

Hinkle-Braden

Katherine Braden, daughter of Mrs. Nellie Hinkle, and Charles Elden Anderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Anderson of Independence, Kansas, were married at the Reorganized Church at Joplin, Missouri, on January 25. Elder Arthur J. Rock read the double-ring service. The couple will make their home at Pittsburg, Kansas, where Mr. Anderson is completing his senior year at the Kansas State Teachers College.

Morse-Maxwell

Lillian Maxwell, daughter of Mrs. L. P. Maxwell of Dallas, Texas, and Bonard E. Morse, son of Mrs. Etta Morse of Council Bluffs, Iowa, were married on December 28 at the Reorganized Church in Dallas. Dr. Preston Wheeler of Austin read the double-ring ceremony.

Pement-Craver

Bonita Craver, daughter of Mary Z. Craver of Kankakee, Illinois, and Norman D. Pement, son of Mrs. Pearl Pement of Manteno, Illinois, were married on December 30 at the First Methodist Church in Kankakee, the Reverend Morgan Williams and Elder Earl D. Rogers officiating. The couple are making their home in Lamoni, where Norman is a student at Graceland.

ENGAGEMENT

Wicks-Broun

Mrs. Esther K. Broun announces the engagement of her daughter, Pegge LaVelle, of Dallas, Texas, to Henry F. Wicks, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Wicks of Dallas. The wedding will take place on February 14 at the Reorganized Church in Dallas.

BIRTHS

A daughter, Sylvia Sue, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Pratt of Columbia, Missouri, on October 29 at the Noyes Hospital. She was blessed on December 19 by Patriarch R. V. Hopkins. Mrs. Pratt is the former Fern Updyke; Mr. Pratt is a student at the University of Missouri. Both attended Graceland in 1945-46.

A daughter, Betty Ann, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Kendrick Moseley of Prichard, Alabama, on August 8. She was blessed on December 28 at McKenzie, Alabama, by Elders Heamon Salter and Raymond Sharp. Mrs. Moseley is the former Betty Lou Odom.

A daughter, Sharon Nadine, was born to Mr. and Mrs. James Gray of St. Marys, Ohio, on July 31. She was blessed on January 11 by Elders Robert Galusha, Walter Wirebaugh, and Alvin Wadsworth.

A son, George Henry, Jr., was born to Mr. and Mrs. George H. Herzog of St. Marys, Ohio, on October 12. He was blessed by Elders Walter Wirebaugh, Alvin Wadsworth, and Robert Galusha on January 11. Mrs. Herzog is the former Lily Felver.

DEATHS

KERR.—Mary Kate, was born in Wansborough, Tennessee, in 1871, and died on January 14, 1948, at Roscoe, California. In 1896, she was married to Gustavus Kerr, who died in 1922. She was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church for thirty-three years, twenty-five of which were spent in Long Beach Branch.

She is survived by a son, Shely T.; a stepson, Jesse W., both of Long Beach; three sisters: Mrs. L. E. Shepard of Yuma, Arizona; Mrs. Lula Allen of Fruitland, Texas; and Mrs. Della Walters of Los Gatos, California; and three grandchildren. A daughter, Ruby, preceded her in death. Funeral services were held at Mottel's Mortuary in Long Beach, Elder Louis J. Ostertag officiating. Interment was in the Rose Hill Memorial Park at Whittier, California.

EASTWOOD.—Walter J., was born August 29, 1882, and died suddenly at his home in Stratford, Ontario, on December 18, 1947. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 30, 1891, and in 1907 was married to Edith Smith, who survives him. In 1915, he was ordained a teacher and in 1916, a priest; he was a devoted church worker, and his home was always open to missionaries. He will be greatly missed in Stratford congregation where he served as counselor to several branch presidents, was a teacher in the church school, and solicitor for twenty-one years. Two sons, David and Alexander, preceded him in death. Funeral services were held in the Stratford Church, Evangelist W. I. Fligg and Elder Howard Schlotzhauer officiating.

MORANT.—Jessie, daughter of J. C. and Lillian M. Richards, was born December 25, 1882, at Farragut, Iowa, and died on January 20, 1948, at the St. Mary Hospital in North Platte, Nebraska. In 1899, she was married to George S. Morant; three children were born to them. Two of the children, Richard and Georgia, died in infancy; the other, Mabel Morant Waltermath, died in 1932. Mr. Morant passed away in March, 1904.

She was baptized into the Reorganized Church as a child; she remained a diligent student of the doctrine and workers in the church throughout her life. Following the death of her husband, she attended Graceland College and the University of Iowa. She leaves a sister, Mrs. F. M. Lansing of Hershey, Nebraska; a brother, J. S. Richards of North Platte; and two grandsons. Funeral services were conducted by Seventy Albert Loving. Burial was in the North Platte cemetery.

Practice What We Preach

(Continued from page 21.)

chinned, or something or other. You can be a real help to us if you will only share this gospel with every-one! The postman who brings you your mail, the waitress who brings you your soup, the porter who brings you your suitcase—they are all looking to you to bring them your church. While it may sometimes be indiscreet to distribute religious tracts to all the people you meet, it is never poor taste to distribute kindness and consideration. The tracts can come later.

WHEN ELDER SHEPHERD and Elder Traveler step into the pulpit next time, they will see you in the congregation. What they see will be an eager, talented young person who has just asked, "What can I do to help you in your work?" Do not be too surprised when they reply, "Practice what we preach." You see, I know Elder Shepherd—he's your pastor; and I know Elder Traveler pretty well, too—he's the missionary who swung his suitcase off the bus in your town for a few weeks' visit. These devoted men are doing their best, augmented by God's Spirit, to preach what is sound and inspiring and challenging. They are doing their best to win souls to the cause of Christ, and they are trying to reflect his ministry by making their lives exemplary. But they need your help, too. I can speak for them, and for all of us who ever assume the preaching role, when I admonish you to "practice what we preach."

Mary A. Burlington
1510½ Jules
St. Joseph, Missouri

92867
18
h

For Your Information

This seal is your assurance of church approved visual aids. It is the official seal of the Advisory Committee on Visual Education and is used to indicate materials that have been reviewed and approved by the committee and the First Presidency. The Visual Education Dept. of the Herald Publishing House regularly stocks only the material that has had this approval. Individual slides and some materials for which there is very little demand have not been reviewed and are not stocked but we can get them for you on special order. Let us know your needs. We shall be glad to help you in any way possible.

Visual Aids Department
Herald Publishing House

Book of Mormon

(until March 1)

$1.50 cloth

$4.00 limp leather

$5.00 flexible leather

now available

Doctrine and Covenants

in cloth binding

$1.50

SORRY: There are no more Church Calendars available.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Missionary
F. Edward Butterworth

SEVENTY

Palmer-Lappine Studio

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

FEBRUARY 14, 1948

NUMBER 7

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Into All the World"

AUDITORIUM NEWS

F. Edward Butterworth is a representative of a young generation of church men and women who, in obedience to the divine call, are literally obeying the Great Commission, "Go ye into all the world" to preach the gospel of Christ. He and his wife, Lilly Raye, were in the Society Islands for a considerable time, with headquarters at Papeete. Brother Butterworth traveled among the islands on small ships, encountering sometimes stormy seas and having many experiences, as did other missionaries of the church before him.

Returning to the United States for a time to prepare for further service, Brother and Sister Butterworth now have a young son, Gary Edward, born October 11.

Brother Butterworth is doing missionary work here while he is gathering materials and information as he prepares to return to the Islands. He has great sincerity, deep spiritual strength, and a genuine love of the people.

In this splendid young family, and in many others like them who have gone abroad on other missions, as well as those who have begun their ministry in Australia, Canada, England, continental Europe, and the Islands, the church may well find reason to be proud and happy. It is our part to support them with our faith and prayers, and in the material things they need to carry on the work.

* BISHOP G. L. DeLAPP informs us that the Houses of Worship Survey questionnaires are now being sent out. Some have already been completed and returned, about a dozen in all. Others are expected soon. This is the first such survey in about eighteen years, and it is an effort to bring the records up to date on our houses of worship, to show our resources correctly.

* PRESIDENT F. HENRY EDWARDS, Bishop Henry Livingston, and Apostle Blair Jensen are spending some time on the west coast, engaged in the church survey in that area. Brother Jensen writes from Los Angeles: "Our survey is going nicely. President Edwards was delayed thirteen hours getting here on account of a train wreck ahead of him. Natives say it is cold here—we find it warm."

* THE FIRST PRESIDENCY report that Brother Tom Worth is spending the month of February in Texas, ministering to branches and groups there. Those who know him are confident he will do much good. Evangelist Ray Whiting is also in Texas, doing successful work in the Rio Grande Valley and at Mission.

* APOSTLE ARTHUR A. OAKMAN, interviewed recently on baptismal gains in the Central States Mission, reported a five per cent gain in Central Illinois. St. Louis also made a five per cent gain with twenty-nine baptisms in 1947. Missionary James Daugherty baptized thirty-five persons last year. The East Central States Mission gained 280 in baptisms in the first eight months of 1947, an increase of two per cent over a previous similar period in 1946. William Patterson, in the three-month period ending November 30, baptized thirty-six in the Rich Hill and Spring River district. In general, there is an upward trend everywhere, with excellent results in Central Illinois and the St. Louis area.

There is a new mission at Danville, Illinois, under the leadership of O. C. Henson.

There was a very fine experience in an institute held at Columbia, Missouri, with Dr. John Blumenschein as speaker. Evangelist R. V. Hopkins also ministered to students and members there, not very long before he passed away. The institute was held in December.

* ALMER SHEEHY, at London, Ontario, baptized five children and one adult on January 25.

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

The World As of Today	3
Across the Desk	4

ARTICLES:

"I Am Not Ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," by E. J. Gleazer, Jr.	5
The Hand of God, by F. Edward Butterworth	7
Is Death the End? by James Daugherty	8
The Vigil (a poem), by Louise Wrigley	9
Funeral Sermon of Dr. Joseph Luft, by Apostle Arthur Oakman	10
What L. D. S. Believe About Eternal Judgment, by Evan A. Fry	13
New Church School Literature, by Chris B. Hartshorn	15
All Things to Me Are Spiritual, by Evan A. Fry	16
Better Food for Less Money, by B. Mildred Nelson	17
My Valentine (a poem), by Martha Ford Floro	18
Proper Care and Treatment of Husbands, by Marguerite Baker	19
A New Commandment, by Jack Conway	20
"Let them go two by two," by Jessie Heide	21
Briefs	22
Bulletin Board	23

P. S.

* THE EDITOR looked at the muddy snow on his heels. He was apparently displeased. "Somebody is always tracking something into my office," he said, "and I have my suspicions who does it!"

* Snow
Snow in the sky, snow in the sky,
Wrapping the earth in your silvery gown,
What is it like to purify air
And top a whole city with sparkling crown?

Snow on the ground, snow on the ground,
Reflecting the sun on each drifted crest,
Why must you melt in wintery dreams
Before the whole city has learned how to rest?

—Frances Hartman.

The World As of Today

IN YEARS GONE BY WHEN our Latter Day Saint missionaries preached about "the signs of the times" and warned of events to come, their sermons were shrugged off as the utterances of "religious fanatics." We were told that things were to continue as they had always been—except on an ascending scale. Civilization was to go on and on triumphantly into an era of lasting peace and security. Peter had written of such wishful thinking scoffers: "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers . . . saying, Where is the promise of his coming? For since the prophets fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation."

Presently thoughtful students of world conditions and trends, educators, and others began to sound warnings. They, too, were scoffed at and called "calamity howlers" and "prophets of doom." But today, military men, statesmen, politicians (as distinguished from statesmen), scientists, educators, ministers, news commentators, and the man on the street vie with each other in warnings that civilization is approaching the brink of disaster.

Recently in her column, Dorothy Thompson had this pen picture of things as of today, "in a mad world":

What is the picture of the world but of violence unrestrained? Now it takes this form, now that. In its mildest it consists of words—words that bludgeon, demean, wound, carry swords; of strikes refusing arbitration or reason; of deliberative assemblies dissolving into sordid brawls.

Beyond these, class wars, race wars, religious wars—the accounts of them springing each morning from the newspapers to chill the day with premonition, the spiritual despair, which is the curse upon modern man. For it is literally true that man has lost his moorings, is off balance and directionless, and he knows it. There is no polar star of spiritual authority . . . and the fear of war is compounded by the awful knowledge that there is nothing that men will not do in war: unchain the cohesions of the universe; reduce civilization to ashes; carry populations into slavery; drive men, women, and children from homes and farms to confine them behind barbed wire; blot out organic life with bacteria; route a race through gas chambers to crematoria. Being without focus, unrestrained from a magnetic center, the world picture is of insanity, in its precise meaning.—Kansas City Times, January 24, 1948.

THE PICTURE seems dark. Yet, it is in accord with the words of the modern prophet: "Peace shall be taken from the earth."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4. "And in that day shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4. "All things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them: for fear shall come upon all people."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25.

Dorothy Thompson says that, as of today, "the world picture is of insanity"—a world gone mad. How about those who have believed and been warned and have considered the warning? Paul said: "God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."—II Timothy 1: 7. God does not baptize with the spirit of fear and hate and madness; that is the work of an evil power. We are to cherish love and be of a sound mind. Of all people, we should keep our heads and our hearts. We should endeavor to think straight, under divine guidance, and discipline our emotions. Remember, "Now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." We should have faith in God, hope based on the promises and prophecies, and charity toward our fellow man. In the midst of all the world confusion and turmoil, there is a reservoir of human goodness; many though confused and stumbling groping for the wall, nevertheless long for peace, law, and order, justice with liberty.

The early missionaries who preached on the signs of the times gave a true picture of the pattern of things to come in the world as of today. Their message was also that of Christ and the apostles. Since they were so right and the world was so wrong, our faith should be strengthened rather than weakened. We should trust in the balance of their message; the more earnestly believe as they did in God and Christ and the gospel, and in the promises of salvation and the final triumph of righteousness on earth with justice under the perfect law of liberty.

WE WILL DO WELL to heed the commandments to cry repentance to the world, to prosecute the missionary work at home and abroad, to stand in holy places, to live righteous lives. Christ himself said:

And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for the day of your redemption draweth nigh.—Luke-21: 27, I. V.

And what I say unto one, I say unto all, Watch ye therefore, and pray always, and keep my commandments, that ye may be counted worthy to escape all these things which shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man when he shall come clothed in the glory of his Father.—Luke 21: 36, I. V.

All these things were to come to pass following the restoration of the gospel by angelic administration and in the hour of God's judgment:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

blue pencil notes

Across the Desk

From Elder E. Guy Hammond of Akron, Ohio:

"The enclosed clipping from the Cleveland Plain Dealer reflects the activities of the Utah people in reference to old records of titles, etc., relating to the church in the days of Kirtland."

Chardon, Ohio, January 15.—The Mormon Genealogical Society of Utah has ordered microfilming of all records in Geauga County from 1795-1850.

During this period, when Lake County was a part of Geauga County, Mormonism flourished in near-by Kirtland. A monument to the sect before the Mormons traveled west, is the historic Kirtland Temple, now the property of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The work of microfilming all deeds, mortgages, probate records, and marriage books, as well as tax duplicates, is proceeding in the basement of the courthouse and will take several weeks to complete.

Howard Simms, in charge here, said he has found the record books in good condition for their age, and commented on the unusual "copperplate" handwriting of Thomas Paine, recorder, and the fine handwriting of Ralph Cowles, county auditor in 1883.

The original film of these records being made for the Utah church will be stored in the vaults of the Eastman Kodak Company in Rochester. One copy will go to Utah and a third copy will be presented to Geauga County.

County Commissioner Thomas L. White today expressed appreciation for the gift to the county of the films of all the 1795-1850 records. "As this much of the records is a gift, we thought we might as well have the remainder of the records from 1850 to date filmed," he said. "We have often worried about our valuable records in case of fire in the courthouse. Now we feel much safer, as a copy of the record films will be stored in the courthouse and another stored elsewhere. This gift has saved us much expense as we can have the balance of the years filmed from 1850 at an estimated cost of $1,600 for the entire records.

"The cost is three-and-a-half cents for exposure of two book pages. When the company first came to photograph the records for the Mormon Society, they went to Lake County, but found only copies there of the original records in Geauga County."

The pictures will disclose many interesting and historic documents. One of them will be the marriage license of Brigham Young and Mary Ann Angel, on file in the Geauga County Probate Court.

Kirtland Temple

The Hammond Times is published by the Hammond Organ Company. In its issue for December, it shows, among other churches, the Kirtland Temple, a remarkable night view of that sacred edifice, as also a picture of Brother T. Evan Thomas at the Temple organ. We quote the comments of the magazine:

Perhaps one of the most interesting settings for Christmas services will be the Kirtland Temple, Willoughby, Ohio. The Kirtland Temple, owned by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints with world headquarters at Independence, Missouri, is one hundred and eleven years old. Joseph Smith, Jr., of Manchester and Palmyra, New York, was the founder, and today Israel A. Smith, grandson of the founder, is the president of the church, which has world headquarters at Independence, Missouri. Minister of the Temple is John W. Banks.

The Temple is little changed from the day it was built. Situated on a beautiful highland, its tower dominates the quiet little village of Kirtland. It is visited by thousands of tourists every year. Played by T. Evan Thomas, the organ is heard every Sunday morning and evening at the regular worship services and it is often played softly on Sunday afternoon as visitors are conducted on tours through the edifice.

From Elder Jack A. Pray, Chatham, Ontario:

The recent visit of Apostle Jensen and Bishop Livingston was very much appreciated. On Sunday afternoon they lectured to a representative group of men from our district. Apostle Jensen's work here is of the highest caliber, and his ministry is very effective.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Vatican State?

The following press item indicates there is a growing opposition to maintaining an envoy to the Vatican:

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.(AP)—Five Protestant clergymen today announced the formation of an organization to be known as Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State and invited Jews to join them in attaining their aims.

They said they are concerned about the continued presence of a United States ambassador at the Vatican and various aspects of public financial aid for parochial schools. They added they have no purpose of criticizing or opposing "the teaching or internal practices of the Roman Catholic church or any other."

A "manifesto" outlining the organization's goals was issued by Dr. Charles Clayton Morrison, former editor of the Christian Century; Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist church; Dr. John A. Mackay, president of the Princeton Theological Seminary; Dr. Louie D. Newton of the Southern Baptist convention, and Dr. Edwin McNeill Poteat, president of Colgate-Rochester divinity school.

National headquarters will be established here with Dr. Poteat as president.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Kansas City Stake Organization in Church Survey

In the Kansas City Star of Sunday, January 4, appears an article by the Star's church editor, Mary Hobbs, reporting the activities of various churches of the city. A very good section is devoted to the work of our Kansas City Stake organization. We quote as follows:

As a result of steady work in pastoral and evangelical work, substantial gains have been made in attendance by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, J. D. Anderson, president of the Kansas City Stake, which includes ten congregations in this area, said stewardship needs were emphasized in January and the number filing tithing statements increased to an all-time high here. It was an increase of 19 per cent over 1946.

In spite of the unrest and rising prices, contributions toward local expenses matched 1946 almost to the dollar, he said.

Total average attendance for church schools of the stake, he added, was up 11 per cent in 1947, and the morning pulpit service showed an increase of 12 per cent over 1946 and of 18 per cent over five years in spite of a decrease in total enrollment.

In 1947, several state-wide activities were promoted. Plans for 1948 include nearly all of these activities with the addition of a family camp for one week. An evangelistic campaign and series of such services at each congregation also are planned.

Someone says that the churches should go down into sixteen hundred years of "ecclesiastical wreckage and rubbish" and find the real "religion of Jesus." We believe we have it; but not out of rubbish.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

February 14, 1948

Number 7

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

"I Am Not Ashamed of the Gospel of Christ"

OR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST

By E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

PRESIDENT, GRACELAND COLLEGE

ANY MINISTER has undoubtedly experienced the distressing signals of acute sermonitis—when the exhortation to brotherhood, the call to Zion-building, the stern admonition to mend our ways, or the treatise on calamitous world events seems not to satisfy the congregation nor the speaker and both feel as hungry as before. The prescription for remedy of the malady is not complex or obscure. It was declared by Paul in words that breathed life and fire: "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Desiccation plagues the sermon when testimony disappears. Any ministry from the pulpit of the Church of Jesus Christ is supported and made effective through the sincere testimony of the one who would minister.

With that statement as prelude, may I make application. It is for the gospel that I am thankful, and for the church which is the instrument of proclamation.

The Privilege of Struggle

I am grateful for a church whose mansions are not yet complete—whose work has not approached finality nor can afford the luxury of retrospection. We are engaged not in memorializing the past, but in building the present—not in dedicating mausoleums of religious philosophy, but in erecting tabernacles for life. The working drawings and the specifications may not be furnished with our call to the project. How much easier it is to assemble a newly purchased stove if the directions are there, and the pieces are numbered and all pieces can be found. How much more difficult if we would receive only the command to build with perhaps a brief explanation of the principles of thermodynamics. Add to this the further complication when the materials of which the stove is to be assembled must be prepared. Include another factor as you invite in your friends for their interpretation and suggestions. "Seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion" doesn't include the directions to detailed procedure. The principles—the requirements—are set forth, but there remains the hard work of building. And it is hard work. There exists the possibility of growth and the danger of conflict of ideas within the framework of an organization whose message must evolve continually toward current application.

For several years I functioned as a pastor in one of America's largest cities. No directions had come with the assignment as to the best way of preaching the gospel in that kind of a situation. The work was dif-icult, and progress was slow in appearing; but the people who worked at the problems found their muscles were growing stronger, their minds more alert, and their hands showed the calluses of achievement.

In 1943, several of us were given the charge of occupying positions of responsibility in Lamoni Stake. In order to determine our direction, many questions cried for answers. What is the purpose of stake organization? How is a stake meant to function? If a stake is a support to Zion, what is Zion besides the pure in heart? What does it look like in terms of our experience? Hours led into days and days into months of hard study and the give and take of good exploration. The area of study grew wider until one day the leading officers of the church were invited to share in the principles tentatively adopted; for an entire day, many years of experience were pooled in defining the purpose and function of the stake. Not always was the way easy. Men vigorously defended their points of view. Sometimes an impasse seemed reached. But I'm grateful for a church that offers the glorious privilege of matching all of a man's powers against problems that demand his best.

The Blessing of Fellowship

I am thankful for a fellowship that is as real as family ties. My memory barely extends to the coal-mining town of Archbald, Pennsylvania. The first impressions made upon my mind as a very small child came from good neighbors, members of the branch. They were our brothers and sisters in the gospel—sharers of the material necessities of life and participants with us in the spirit and program of the church. Another vivid picture comes to mind as I remember the time when my father's pastoral responsibilities took him to the Southern New England District, and we shared a duplex house with Bishop and Mrs. E. L. Traver. No father and mother could have been more considerate and gracious toward children of their own than they were toward the pastor's family. From that time on, memory's pages are filled with names and friendly faces—Independence, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Seattle, Lamoni, Denver, Detroit; mention any locality in the country and a brother or sister in gospel bonds comes to mind.

In our home, we experienced the dignity and kindness of Paul M. Hanson, the graciousness and courtesy of John W. Rushton, the sincerity and vigor of Frederick M. Smith, the good humor of John Sheehy, and the contributed qualities of many other ministers for Christ. If the statement has truth, "that I am a part of all that I have met," then surely the tapestry of experience is a rich one.

Not always is the fellowship without valleys of concern and disappointment. In associating with men, we learn of their humanity and find that even heroes sometimes have feet of clay. But maturing experience helps one to appreciate a man for his qualities and to understand him for his weaknesses. We learn to examine the road over which the fault has passed. The closer the fellowship, the greater the danger of losing sight of the real stature of a man behind the mists of what we may term his shortcomings. And it is refreshing to note that the man we think is stubborn usually won't let us have our own way.

I'm thankful beyond measure for the thousands of persons in this church fellowship who have contributed to whatever strength my life holds.

Membership in a Minority

I am thankful to be a member of what might be called a minority group. At times, this has caused some concern. When introduced as a pastor, I have often found it necessary to launch into a description of the doctrine of the church, differentiate it from the Mormon Church, prove that Joseph Smith was not a polygamist, and explain why I am a member. Last summer, a committee in a world-famous university hesitated in admitting me to doctorate candidacy for a few weeks because of the fear that my religious background had made me narrow and dogmatic. A minority group must keep defending itself, must continually give reason for its existence, so there is an enthusiasm and an aggressiveness not found in the complacency and well-established dignity of larger movements. A minority group is a deviant or departure, from the normal, the common, the accepted. Until the kingdom of God becomes a reality on earth, I pray that I shall continue to be one in a minority group.

There are dangers encountered as well as values found by such groups. For many years, the smug concept of the chosen people arrested my concern. My sympathies included only those of the church and all others were apparently doomed. Growing experience has brought growing revelation that God is no respecter of persons.

"A Man's Reach Should Exceed His Grasp"

I'm thankful that I am a member of a church with great goals, above all, the audacious one of attempting to build a new society, of evangelizing the world. Great goals make great men if the goals are rightly defined. But frustration and discouragement may come if they are beyond reach. We need the satisfaction of achievement—great goals interpreted in terms of more immediate objectives within stretching reach.

Few Members—Much Work

Occasionally I have been very conscious of the smallness of our membership, but I'm thankful for the values inherent in a small group. As long as I can remember, there has been opportunity for participation in the church. The Christmas play in Boston Branch, a junior deacon in Independence, young people's work—I have never wanted for something to do, and there has been pressure toward growth. Many times the conviction has come that better work would be possible with more time for preparation. It is not easy to forget the uncomfortable moments and unpleasant experiences—a pounding heart, nervous stomach, sleepless nights, pastoral duties, preaching, stake presidency, the college. Transfers of responsibility have been many and rapid, because we have been limited in available men; but it is true that participation has required some growth. Our small membership forces us to move out in evangelization. We can't consolidate our forces as the primary objective. To survive, we must grow. To grow, we must participate.

"The Word Standeth Sure"

I'm thankful for a message which squares with truth. It has not been necessary to retract fundamental and significant religious beliefs with the process of the years and learning. Rather they have taken clearer form as time and experience have come. There is much growing yet to be done, but in university work, time after time there has come that flash

(Continued on page 22.)

The Hand of God

By F. EDWARD BUTTERWORTH

FOR SEVERAL HOURS we had been enjoying a steadily increasing north wind which cleared and cooled the humid atmosphere of the tropical island. It was not until we had finished our noon meal that the storm struck.

We noted an abrupt increase in the velocity of the wind. It rose until it reached an alarming peak. Rotten limbs were crashing down—natives with fear-filled faces were scurrying for shelter. We particularly noticed the Saints living just outside the sea wall near the surf. They were fleeing toward the church, dragging all sorts of paraphernalia after them. Their meager belongings were wildly flung in a common heap in the assembly building.

The coconut palms, crescent bent by the pressure of the cyclonic wind, were vibrating violently. Missiles were flying everywhere. We made our way to the church and found the rear room filled with screaming children. We attempted to quiet them, but our voices were drowned out by the noise of the storm.

I leaned into the cutting wind and made my way toward the seaside, making sure that I was clear of all trees likely to be uprooted. Because of the terrific pressure of the wind, the house near the seashore was greatly endangered. The occupants had fled when they felt the rear of the house rise from its foundation. But at that moment, a large tree—some four feet in circumference—toppled over on the house, as by angelic assistance, without denting the tin roof or splintering one board. The house was saved, being pinned securely to the earth by this giant hand. Two natives were astride the tree, chopping with long knives, attempting to relieve the pressure on the weak structure. Roofs were being blown off other small buildings near by.

The gale was blowing determinedly with an even pressure. There was no let-up. Small wind-driven leaves became missiles with a most painful sting.

I FINALLY PUSHED to the edge of our property near the seashore, and found a young priest, Rehi a Haoa, watching intently the churning sea and the rolling black clouds. After securing myself to keep from being blown away, my first thought was to importune the Throne of Grace. It was impossible for audible prayers to be heard because of the confusion of the storm. It was impossible to look directly into the wind and open my eyes, so I held my sun helmet before my face to deflect the wind. It was then that I noticed the peculiar color of the sky and the churning wind clouds. It was then that I fully appreciated the verse of Scripture, "Watch and pray."

I turned to see how the Saints were reacting and noticed that most of them were gone. One brother, Pioi, was fleeing toward the church with the wind in his favor. We heard a cracking noise and looked up to see a large limb wrenched from a tree just above where we were standing and blown a 100 feet or so to strike only a short distance from the runner. Coconuts and debris were raining down on every hand. The trembling palm leaves shivering under the terrific pressure of the cyclonic wind seemed to bespeak the inner emotions of us all, yet there was a feeling of confidence magnified greatly as we continued to quietly importune the Heavenly Father.

The angry sea was at its limit before charging in upon us, yet we stood firm, awaiting some definite sign of relief or disaster.

BROTHER SORENSEN joined me at the seashore and it was then that we felt a brief calm, for the wind changed from the north to a north-easterly direction. The church which faces north, is on the tip of the island surrounded by sea on two sides and a river on the other—a perfect target for a tornado. We could see it coming straight toward us, but after the calm of a few seconds, it was as if the hand of God reversed the wind, which broke with a fury never before experienced in this tropical mission. However, it was now in our favor. The changing gale dispelled the lowering rain clouds and exposed to our view the dark funnel swirling furiously against its opposing winds. Luckily, this elemental wrestling match occurred about a mile outside the reef. Had it been inside the reef, the pressure of the tornado on the lagoon would have driven the sea over the island as it did in the year 1906, destroying homes, church, and lives.

We saw the storm being carried on the wings of mercy in a direction void of inhabited islands. We felt the after suction; we saw the sea rise as the pressure of the tornado was relieved. It rippled gently to where we were standing as if to say, "It is finished. All is well."

The wind dropped to a deathlike calm. Excited natives gathered in groups and chattered nervously over the strange outcome. They had been steeled for certain destruction.

THE STURDY passenger boat—"Hiro," was outside the reef in the rough waters, searching for three small fishing boats which failed to return before the storm. One small schooner tied to the wharf capsized inside the lagoon.

We are living witnesses of the power of God over the tempests. We are also witnesses of the power of prayer to quiet the tempests of the soul. We shall ever be grateful to our Heavenly Father for protecting his Saints in the island mission, of Tahiti.

Is Death the End?

By James Daugherty

PADEREWSKI, at the age of seventy-eight, gave a remarkable concert as thousands of people listened. Many said, "Isn't it too bad that a life of such skill must perish and not be transferred to someone else? Those trained fingers and co-ordinating muscles, responding to the musician's mind, will turn to dust and no longer be able to make music unsurpassed." One remarked, "The music dies, and the hands cease to move, but must the musician die also?" The same question perhaps, was in the mind of Job when he asked, "If a man dies shall he live again?" What happens when life's journey reaches its end? Is it all over, or is it only the commencement time? Is it the journey's end or only the end of one phase of the journey?

Longfellow said, "Dust thou art, to dust returneth." Apparently he was referring to the body and not the spirit of man. For once man has loved and formed friendships, thought and developed a memory, learned to foresee and to co-ordinate ideas, can we say at death, "dust to dust," and just bury him? Man is more than a biological organism. Even though the earth eventually claims the body, it cannot claim the spirit.

Some fourteen years ago, I was buried under several tons of frozen dirt. As I began to feel the intense pressure upon my broken body, I suddenly realized that the earth had the power to destroy or claim my body, but only God could claim my spirit.

Time and again I have been reassured of this truth, especially when I have watched at the bedside of a friend as death gradually entered to claim the mortal body. Even though the body was diseased or broken, the spirit fought on for control and possession. As death became the victor over temporal life, peace and quietness prevailed, leaving the thought that God was in his heaven and all was well.

THE THOUGHT HAS often come to me that when the spirit departs from the flesh, it must give an account to God for its stewardship while on earth. I have often wondered if the spirit was not happy when it answered to God, "I did not default in my responsibility to the body which you entrusted to me."

There is more than one death. Christ said, "Fear not them who are able to kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." You cannot kill a soul as you kill flesh, nor can you feed and build a soul as you would feed and build a human body. If the spirit in man dies, it does not die the same as the body does. The spirit of man is more than a passing phase of his physical nature. When virtues, ideals, friendships, and beliefs perish, this is the second death.

We have all seen people who are practically dead in healthy bodies, and others who live triumphantly in broken and diseased bodies. Their faith in God gives them hope that death is not final, but only a beginning of a new life. If God can live without a body (and we are told that man is created in his image*), is it not reasonable for man to believe he can also live without a body?

IN OUR EARTHLY associations, on the higher levels of fellowship, we do not love our friends' bodies; instead, we love them for their personalities, goodness, character, and unseen inward qualities. Paul apparently felt this when he said, "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Faith in God gives us this hope of a new life. Cannot the Creator provide that we shall live, not only in the mind of our friends and loved ones, but also in the world of spiritual personalities and in the mind of God? It is not logical to believe that life exists beyond the grave and the celestial virtues shall never die, but be used for a high and noble cause?

The people who build within their lives these virtues are not satisfied to remain impotent; they endeavor to assist in God's great plan for a kingdom. If we strive to become godlike, we shall never drift beyond his love and care because the mind has become more than a brain, love more than a heart, and the soul more than a physical house. This self which can remember the past, anticipate the future and bring them together into the present, is something more than physical parts and cannot be destroyed by death.

STRANGE AS LIFE is, it would be odd and also cruel for man to be put here to build a fine life during a span of years, and to have all that he became dashed into endless oblivion. If this be the case, the impulse to build good lives is useless, and our highest hopes for our loved ones and ourselves would be as nothing to merciless laws and forces.

Life is contrary to such a belief. Does not all life seem to have a fixed purpose? Within itself, it has the power to fulfill its creation. Life dies only when it is out of harmony with the forces about it.

We trust God to give us food, light, air, water, families, friends, and to meet every physical need. Can we not trust him to give us life that shall conquer death? This kind of trust makes a big difference to all of us in our living here and now. If the teachings of Jesus Christ are trustworthy, our instincts sound, and nature true, we are now becoming what we are to be hereafter, and the record stands. In this light, the structure of the soul has lasting significance, and the course of our soul is being determined here and now. Ella Wheeler Wilcox says, "'Tis the set of the soul that determines the goal, and not the calm or the strife."

*Image, in this term, means creative intelligence, love, and spiritual faculties.

If, then, the grave is the end of it all, what does it matter how we live? Why not store up great treasures, regardless of the cost to our fellow men? Why not make cheating and stealing a part of our way of life? Why not drink and be merry? Why not drift instead of climb?—Why not? Because we believe that what we become in this life will be measured back to us in the life to come. Even though we are not sure this is true, it has influenced the human mind and serves as an unwritten law for society.

NATURE TELLS US THE true story of life every day. For instance, an acorn falls to the ground among some leaves. It seems to be just mere chemical matter, but with the warmth of the sun penetrating into its very depth, it has the power to reproduce and become alive. It grows into a tree, which in a few hundred years will be fulfilling its purpose, and in turn bear other trees. The acorn itself could not look ahead a hundred years or even a day and plan its development. Someone with great foresight planned it.

A bluebird, hatched from an egg, seeks food for nourishment. The infant bird didn't plan to paint its feathers blue or warble sweet melodies. Nor did it ever plan to grow wings or reproduce its kind. But Someone planned it.

Is not the human mind far more significant than an acorn or a bluebird? Shall not the same One who planned for the trees and the birds plan even more for man? We are living in a world that teems with life and not a world that is dead. Does not our hope of triumphant life finally depend upon our faith in a wise and kind God?

Death cannot be the end of all life. It is only the beginning of a fuller, richer, and more beautiful life. It is becoming godlike and being worthy of fellowship with the godly.

A man putting on immortality is more than a man clothing his body. He is building a deathless soul. Having attained such a life in God's world, man learns to look at death with a singing heart.

"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory."

The Vigil

The weary hours creep,
While anxious eyes are riveted
Upon the clean, white bed,
Where spirit fights
To keep its human home.

Death's angel hovers close,
Yet time and time again
Is held away
By silent pleadings
That this life be spared.

He is so young—
And precious, too,
To those who wait in terror
Through the night.
And quiet tears are shed
And prayers are said—
In anguished supplication they arise.
The cries
Of souls about to be bereaved
Are deep
And sad to hear.

And then, as faintest wisps of dawn
Break through,
There springs a hope anew
And Life has won
For, wan and spent,
He lies, new vigor pulsing in his veins—
Safe anchored here on earth
By bonds of love.

LOUISE WRIGLEY.

THE FUNERAL SERMON OF

Dr. Joseph Luff

By APOSTLE ARTHUR OAKMAN

DR. JOSEPH LUFF was born in Toronto, Canada, on October 31, 1852, and died on January 6, 1948. On May 24, 1873, he was married to Janet Parker, who preceded him in death on January 7, 1942, almost six years to the hour from the time he departed this life.

As a young man, he entered the Methodist Church and became a minister—sincere, humble, and ever seeking the truth. He united with the Reorganized Church on May 22, 1876, being converted by the preaching of John J. Cornish, who baptized and confirmed him.

His career as a minister of the church began the same year when, on August 8, he was ordained to the office of elder. A few years later, on April 13, 1887, he was ordained to the office of apostle and served in the Quorum of Twelve with illustrious distinction until released to take charge of the Independence Sanitarium in April, 1909.

He took up the study of medicine while under appointment as a traveling missionary—a work which took him through half the United States and to Canada. Graduating in 1901 from medical school, he became a practitioner; many hundreds of people sought his advice and counsel, which was offered to them on an extremely high plane, both spiritually and physically.

Dr. and Mrs. Luff came to Independence in November, 1879. He manifested great faith in the re-establishment of the work here and served on the building committee of the Stone Church as chairman fifty years ago. He was always vigorous in his insistence that the church should be large and commodious, much larger, in fact, than many at the time thought wise. How abundantly his vision and faith have been justified.

DR. LUFF WAS an author, writing books and tracts for the times on gospel themes which are today models of literary excellence. He was a poet. He was a seer. He was a prophet. I give you as an example of his prophetic genius, a paragraph from the communication which he received in Independence in March, 1907:

“Dig ye deep into the mountains which centuries have formed and into which my providences are interwoven, and bring forth the witnesses of my forgetfulness or the testimonies of my failure. Reveal unto me wherein the generations have made frail the texture of my ordinances or dissolved the integrity of my promises. Speak! and I will hearken unto you! Declare! and I will give audience! Who hath been able to stand in the way of my accomplishment, or hath put fetters upon my hands? Are not cities and nations and villages but as pebbles in my hands? For, behold, on yesterday their magnitude was thine amazement, and tomorrow thou shalt ask: ‘Where are they,’ and shalt declare, ‘Surely the Lord’s hand is in this thing.’

“Remember, therefore, that I change not, neither in my power nor my purpose, and what I have designed I will execute, and naught shall stay my hand, and my heritage shall not fail.”

ANOTHER BEAUTIFUL passage is from a communication which was delivered to him on June 12, 1923—a communication which contains excellent advice for young men of the ministry:

“The Lord shall proceed as of old, and your wise men and your noble ones shall scarce be considered. His messengers shall bear his image—they shall be clothed with the power of his might and their tongues shall be as a flame of fire. Their beauty shall be the excellence of his adornment, for unto this end have they been permitted to suffer in the days of their preparation, that the marks of his body might be upon them. These shall go forth with all of his chosen and shall achieve as has been written, and their conquest shall be in the glory of his power, for in them shall he be revealed, and before this revelation shall the thousands of earth prostrate themselves, and at this beholding shall they cry out unto him. The speech of these shall subdue and through the utterance of these shall many be quickened. The polish of your chosen words which have lulled them to slumber and the expressions of your preparation, together with the manner of your modeling by which ye have thought to allure shall be as the dust with which the foolish maiden hath sought to make her face beautiful, and shall cease to persuade. Men shall seek life and these cannot supply.

"Blessed in that hour shall he be who hath made the word of the Lord his study and in that hath found contentment, for his face shall shine with the glory of its fulfillment, and his feet shall be beautiful in the light of its vindication. His lips and his tongue shall minister as in the stead of his Master, and in these shall the heavens have delight. Their words shall mean accomplishment, for upon them shall the heavens wait and their eloquence shall be as the noise of the Holy Ghost. They shall not be known by the name given them of their fathers, but as the messengers of God, for in them shall he be discerned and his shall be the glory of their success."

AS FOR HIS abilities as a poet—can I say more than quote to you one stanza from the song, "Admonition":

Love ye me and love all people.
Love as I have loved you.
This your calling, this my purpose;
Thus be my disciples true.
Then in this exalted station
Your companion I will be.
Every promise of my Scriptures
Shall be verified in thee.

Such sentiments as these could proceed only from a mind and a heart ennobled and imbued as it climbed the rugged mountains of adversity to the land of clear vision in the spirit of the Master.

This kind of work constitutes even today a call to repentance and leaves an imperishable impression we have portrayed by the services of this illustrious son of the Reorganization. We shall be singing his "Song of Admonition" when the Master comes to make up His jewels.

WHAT SHALL I SAY, therefore, in relation to the brother as a church man? I dare quote a writing of his which reveals at once his intimate association with the great prophet, Joseph Smith, the father of our present president and prophet, his intimate association with this man and others under whose ministry the Reorganization grew from a mere 163 in 1860 to some 77,000 in 1914 when Joseph Smith lay down his work. I quote from Dr. Luff:

"Perhaps no now living man was more closely associated and intimate with our late President Joseph Smith than myself. Certainly no man ever loved him more. Yet no man, perhaps, ever more openly and earnestly opposed him than did I, when we differed on matters under legislation. In most instances he proved to be right in his convictions and contentions, but not in all, and I well remember his appearance before the Twelve one morning and saying as he stood before us: 'Brethren, I have come to offer my apology to you. I am now convinced that you are right.' I could scarcely refrain from embracing and kissing him at that moment. He looked so noble to my eyes.

"As he was lying upon what proved to be his deathbed, surrounded by quite a number, he turned to me and said: 'We haven't always agreed, Joseph, have we? We've had some pretty strong contentions—you and Brethren Lambert and Caffall and Kelley and He man and others of the Twelve and I.'

"When I acquiesced, he added: 'Well, Joseph, I never loved any of you less because of it. I knew you all and that I could trust you anywhere, and that the work as well as myself was always safe in your hands. They were all noble men.'

"To this I answered: 'Brother Joseph, no man was ever bigger in my estimation than you, and I couldn't love any man more than I have you; but there was one thing that was always bigger than you and that was the church, and when that got between us, you couldn't see me, and I couldn't see you.'

"Stretching forth his hand and seizing mine, he replied: 'That's it exactly. I couldn't have said it so nicely; but there is one thing I want to say to you, Joseph, and that is that you men saw the situation at that time better than I did; and as I said to you once before, Joseph, some men have been apprehensive concerning you because of your disagreement with me and because of their opinion of your attitude, and have predicted your apostasy; but, Joseph, you will never trail the flag. I feel certain of that.'"

And how true the words of President Joseph Smith proved to be.

PREACHER, TEACHER, WRITER, poet, prophet, medical man—all these were his gifts, and more. What made them valuable? He had the testimony of Jesus. It was in him as a burning and a shining light, which grew brighter and brighter through the thinning veil of the flesh as his years mounted. Although released from the Quorum of Twelve in 1909, he rightly maintained the conviction that he was still an apostle and amply was his conviction sustained as his testimony down the years remained in unshaken fervor.

His family, children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, those who knew and loved him best of all among those of us who dwell in this vale of soul-making, all speak of him with reverent affection. As a father in Israel, he had no superior.

Dr. Luff is survived by two daughters: Mrs. E. B. Dooley and Mrs. William Bullard; two sons: J. J. Luff and A. C. Luff, all of Independence; a sister, Mrs. Mattie Smellie of Toronto, Canada; eleven grandchildren; and nineteen great-grandchildren.

*Mark the perfect man
And behold the upright,
For the end of that man is peace.*

When our friends pass away we feel the loss as the place they filled in our lives is left vacant. We remember the good thoughts, the acts of kindness, the happiness they gave us. And as we think of the God who gave them to us, we understand how he revealed his goodness through them.

What Latter Day Saints Believe

It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment.—Hebrews 9: 27.

THE PRINCIPLE OF eternal judgment is the last of the six “first principles” enumerated by Paul in the sixth chapter of Hebrews. It is a principle which runs through every action we perform in this life, for in the strictest sense, we are judged here and now by every act that we do, however trivial. Each motion, each thought leaves its impress upon our physical and spiritual fiber, which will remain there eternally. We ourselves are the record of what our lives have been.

The principle of judgment has always been in the world, and it always will be. It is an inescapable part of every law, both physical and spiritual, for each law carries with it the punishment for its violation. If I allow my finger to come in contact with fire—deliberately or accidentally—I am burned. If I eat too much, I get fat. If I skimp on sleep, my health suffers. If I treat you as an enemy, you become my enemy. If I ignore God, I lose his presence. If I don't protect my car radiator from freezing, I ruin it and perhaps crack the engine block. But let us note in passing something which we wish to speak of at more length later: namely, that judgment has its positive or good side, as well as its negative or unpleasant side. It brings rewards as well as punishments. If I live by the laws which govern fire and heat, it warns me but does not burn me. If I live by the laws of diet, my health is benefited. If I get a reasonable amount of sleep, my mind and body are invigorated. If I treat people as friends, I have friends. If I cultivate the presence of God, I have God. And if I fill my car radiator with anti-freeze, I don't need to worry any more about cold weather.

ETERNAL JUDGMENT IS God's judgment—the judgment which attaches to his eternal laws. God is endless and eternal; therefore, his judgments are endless and eternal. We cannot escape them in time or eternity. But judgment, as we know it in this life, is often incomplete. We can point out many instances of sin, which by our human standards go unpunished, when the strong and the predatory and the cruel oppress the weak, when the clever commit crimes and somehow escape punishment through legal loopholes or bribery and corruption, when the perpetrators of some crimes are never even discovered, let alone brought to justice. Of course, we need have no fears that some form of judgment has not already made itself felt or stamped itself upon that criminal's character and conscience. But that still does not obviate the necessity for a final reckoning when all the inequalities of this life are balanced, when the hidden deeds and thoughts of men are brought to light, when the arrogant, the proud, and the powerful, who have used their power sinfully, are punished by one who is all-powerful, all-wise, and all-just, and when wickedness shall be destroyed in the triumph of righteousness and good. Without such a day of judgment, this life would be a senseless and stupid and cynically cruel existence from which to escape as soon as possible.

Reason demands such a day of judgment. The Scriptures promise that it shall be. The Psalmist David promised (96: 13), “He cometh to judge the earth; he shall judge the world with righteousness.” The wise preacher of Ecclesiastes wrote (12: 14), “God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil.” Job wrote, “The wicked is reserved to the day of destruction, they shall be brought forth to the day of thy wrath” (21: 30). Jesus promised, “There is nothing hid which shall not be manifested” (Mark 4: 22), and, “The Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.”—Matthew 16: 27. Paul and Peter and John and Jude and all of the apostles and New Testament writers give us promise of a final day of judgment, which shall be universal, inevitable, just, impartial, and unerring. “Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.”—Galatians 6: 7. “Every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it; because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.”—I Corinthians 3: 13. No man, not even the angels in heaven, knows just when that day is coming (Mark 13: 32), but the teachings of Judaism, of Christianity, and of all the major world religions join in promising us that there will be a final day of judgment.

AS CHRISTIAN PEOPLE, we believe that on the final day of judgment, Christ will be our judge, acting under his commission from the Father. Jesus said to his disciples, “For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son.”—John 5: 22. Peter, preaching to Cornelius, the first Gentile convert to the Christian church, said: “And he [Jesus] commanded us to preach unto the people and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead.”—Acts 10: 42. Not only is Jesus the Christ to be our judge, but he is to be the standard by which we are judged, since he is our perfect example and the one through whom we receive forgiveness and redemption and restoration of spirit to body in the resurrection.

About Eternal Judgment

BY EVAN A. FRY

We are not left completely in the dark as to what shall be the rules or principles governing the judgment. We know that Christ will be the standard or example. We know that one of the rules or principles of judgment will be that men are judged according to their works—according to the deeds done in the body. Isaiah (4: 10, 11) warns that men shall eat the fruit of their doings, whether good or evil, and (59: 18) that according to their deeds He will repay. Jeremiah says the Lord gives to every man according to his ways and according to the fruit of his doings. Paul wrote to the Romans (2: 6) that God would render to every man according to his deeds; and to the Corinthians (I Corinthians 3: 8) that every man shall receive his own reward, according to his own labor. And again in the second Corinthian letter (5: 10) Paul wrote, "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." John's picture of the last judgment in the twentieth chapter of Revelation depicts the dead being judged according to their works. There are many other Scriptures we could bring to support this point, but I believe all peoples are agreed that the works done in the body will determine our status in the day of judgment.

THERE IS ANOTHER principle of judgment which we wish to examine, particularly because many Christian people have ignored it in formulating their theology. That is that judgment is to be tempered to men according to the degree of their opportunity and responsibility. In this day of universal education, abundant newspapers, books, magazines, and super-abundant radio communication, the law takes the position that ignorance of law is no excuse for its violation. And yet we instinctively recognize that men cannot be held responsible for obeying a law which has never been proclaimed or published or broadcast. Even the traffic codes of our cities are so written that you cannot be held responsible for failure to stop at an arterial highway unless there is a stop sign there to inform you that a stop is required. God is not going to be less wise in his judgments than the men who write our traffic laws. He is going to take into account whether or not men had opportunity to know the law, when judgment is passed upon them.

There are ample Scriptures to support this principle. Luke reports these words of Jesus in the twelfth chapter, verses forty-seven and forty-eight. "And that servant which knew his lord's will and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required; and to whom men have committed much of him will they ask the more." That principle is reiterated many times—in Isaiah's parable of the vineyard which had such great care bestowed upon it only to produce wild grapes; (Isaiah 5: 1-6) in Jesus' parable of the talents; in the parable of the fig tree which received much special care but failed to produce fruit (Luke 13: 6-9), and in the story of the widow's mite. To whom much is given, of him is much expected, and proportionately less is expected of him who has received less. Jesus said that it would be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment than for Chorazin and Bethsaida, where he had done many mighty works without bringing the people to repentance. He instructed his disciples, if they were completely rejected in any city, to shake off the dust of their feet as a testimony against that city, and added, "It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city."—Matthew 10: 15.

AS A COROLLARY of this last principle, we may also lay down another: namely, that men are to be judged according to what is written in the books of the law which they possess. A careful reading of the second chapter of Romans, beginning with the twelfth verse, will disclose this principle. Paul says that "as many as have sinned without law, [that is, shall die without a knowledge of the law of Moses] and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law." Then he goes on to lay down the principle that the Gentiles shall be judged by the law which is in their hearts. The twentieth chapter of Revelation gives us a picture of the dead being judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. The Book of Mormon adds an interesting and—I believe—a logical thought here; namely, that out of such books as they have, according to the opportunity they have in each case, all the nations of earth are to be judged. Certainly a savage who had never learned to read and who had never heard of the Bible could not be justly judged by what is written in the Bible. He will be judged by the degree of his obedience to the best that he knows.

NOW WE WISH to examine at a little more length a principle previously mentioned—that the judgment has its positive as well as its negative side. We should not allow ourselves to think of the judgment exclusively in terms of punishment. If it be true that whosoever offends one of Christ's little ones would be better off with a millstone around his neck and thrown into the midst of the sea, it is also true that he who gives so much as a cup of cold water in Christ's name shall in no wise lose his reward. In the parable of the ten virgins, the five wise virgins were rewarded with the bridegroom's presence; the five foolish were punished by banishment. In the parable of the talents, one man was punished by losing his talent, but two more were rewarded with increased responsibility for which their acts had fitted them. If Jesus says to those who failed to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick and imprisoned, "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity," he also says to those who did do these things, "Come ye blessed of my Father; inherit the kingdom prepared for you." If the tares are gathered in bundles to be burned, the wheat is also gathered into the safety of the barn.

If men are to be rewarded or punished according to their works; and if the degree of their opportunity is also to be considered, it is inevitable that there shall be differences or degrees of reward or punishment. Many stupidities have been preached in the name of Christianity as a result of failure to recognize that simple but indisputable truth. Many people believe only in heaven or hell, with no gradations of punishment or reward and no middle ground. A police court judge does a better job of judging than that. He doesn't jail the petty offender for life and let a vicious murderer go because he calls the judge a good fellow. He judges men according to their works and according to the degree of guilt. In our schools, we reward students in the same way—according to their works. In fact, I think we might draw a pretty close parallel between the system of grading in our schools and God's method of judgment—insofar as it is revealed to us.

WHEN I WENT TO SCHOOL, all students were divided into two groups—those who failed and those who passed. If you failed, you had to take the work over again until you learned it sufficiently well to go on to the next step. But not all who passed received the same grade or the same reward. A student might be ranked as excellent, superior, medium, or inferior. If a student sought entrance to a university after high school, he could not get in with inferior grades, because there simply would have been no point in his trying to understand university work. There were some university courses which he could not take unless he had an average of superior grades, for the same reason.

Now let us draw our parallels. All men can be divided into two groups—saved and lost. Men will be saved according to whether or not they accepted Christ as their Saviour, or—as John puts it in Revelation 20: 15—according to whether or not their names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life. Latter Day Saints believe that millions of people, who because of their geographical location or the time of their existence (all of which is ordered by God) were denied any knowledge of Christ and his gospel, will have opportunity to hear and to accept in the spirit world and thereby have their names enrolled in the Lamb's Book of Life. Those who do accept Christ, whether here or hereafter—and even some of the wicked who accept him after punishment and correction and teaching—will be saved. Those who reject him, after every overture of God to them has failed, will be lost and will suffer the second death. In their resurrected, immortal state, unable to die physically, they will be banished from the presence of God and Christ and left in outer darkness to be tormented by the thought of what they might have been and the anguish of their own unrepented sin.

But those who are saved will not all be saved to the same degree of reward or glory. They can't be, if every man is to be rewarded according to his works. Jesus said, "In my father's house [or household] are many mansions." Paul said in the fifteenth chapter of I Corinthians, "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead." Those who have earned a grade of excellent and proved their ability to use and enjoy the finest and highest things will be given celestial bodies in a celestial glory. Those who are superior, but not excellent, may have a terrestrial glory; and still others who are not worthy or capable of enjoying either a celestial or a terrestrial glory may be rewarded with a terrestrial glory.

THE PURPOSE OF judgment is the conservation of good. In order to conserve good, wickedness must be destroyed—by punishment and repentance if possible; if not, by the banishment of the second death, when the devil and his angels will be cast into the lake of fire, where, with a perfect knowledge of their guilt and their uncleanness, they must meditate throughout eternity on what might have been. In the day of judgment, regardless of what our lot shall be, every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that Christ is Lord and that his judgments are just. That we may all stand together with the sheep of his pasture in that day is my prayer.

Beginning March 1

the Saints' Herald will be:

$3.50 per year to the United States
$3.75 per year to Canada
$4.50 per year to Foreign Countries

NEW Church School
LITERATURE

REQUESTS ARE BEING received with some regularity for information regarding vacation church school and reunion manuals for 1948. This material is now well under way, and we expect to have it ready for mailing about April 1.

The theme for this year is "Treasuring God's Word." The objective of the course is to help the pupil to appreciate and better understand the Scriptures through which God has spoken to us. There will be separate manuals for the kindergarten, primary, junior, and junior high age children. These will be supplemented by a leader's handbook. These will follow the general plan of the 1947 material.

A prebaptismal manual is also under the process of preparation now. We hope to have this ready about April 1. This is planned as a seven-week's course to be taught by the pastor to children eight to eleven years old. In some branches, the pastor may wish to assign the class to another member of the priesthood. The course will have study materials for the pupils and teaching helps for the pastor. If the course is started on April 25, it can be completed the Sunday before Children's Day.

We recognize the risk of announcing the distribution of such printed materials with all the difficult problems yet to be faced. Nevertheless, we think the church should know of these plans now so that those concerned can anticipate their program better. More definite statements will be made in these columns when we can see more clearly the way ahead.

CHRIS B. HARTSHORN, Editor of Church School Literature

The family that worships together is never really divided.

Price Changes Effective March 1

	From	To
Angel Message Tract Book—cloth	$ 1.00	$ 1.25
Angel Message Tract Book—paper	.50	.75
Book of Mormon—cloth	1.50	1.75
Book of Mormon—limp leather	4.00	4.50
Book of Mormon—flexible leather	5.00	5.50
Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants	2.00	2.25
	5 for 1.65	5 for 2.00
Compendium	1.75	2.00
Doctrinal References	.25	.35*
Does It Make Any Difference?	.50	.60
Enduring Word	2.00	2.25
	5 for 1.65	5 for 2.00
The First Americans	.50	.60
God Our Help	1.75	2.00
Inspired Version of the Bible—cloth	4.25	4.50
Inspired Version of the Bible
limp leather	6.75	7.00
with thumb index	7.75	8.00
Inspired Version of the Bible
flexible leather	9.25	9.50
with thumb index	10.25	10.50
Inspired Version of the Bible—de luxe	10.75	11.00
with thumb index	11.75	12.00
Let Us Worship	1.50	2.00
On Memory's Beam	2.50	3.00
Oriole Girl's Handbook	.35	.50
Restoration: A Study in Prophecy	1.75	2.00
	5 for 1.50	5 for 1.85
The Scouting Program	.35	.50
Through the West Door	2.00	2.50
Zion's League Annual	2.00	2.50

*no quantity price

Church School Leadership Series
Price changes, March 1.

	From	To
The Church School, Its Organization, and Administration	.50	.60
Exploring the Church	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Children's Division	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Young People's Division	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Junior High Division	.50	.60
Junior Church Manual	.50	.60
L.D.S. and Changing Relationship to the Social Order	.50	.60
That Problem of Leadership	.50	.60

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

All Things to Me Are Spiritual

By Evan A. Fry

THERE SEEMS TO be an ineradicable tendency among people who call themselves religious, to divide life into watertight compartments—to say that this activity is secular and that religious; or to say that this thing or activity is temporal, and that another is spiritual. It has been said over and over again that life cannot be compartmentalized, that life cannot be divided into the spiritual and temporal; yet some people insist on trying to do the impossible and making this arbitrary division.

Man is a dual creature, composed of body and spirit. But if you begin to dissect a man to find out where the body ends and the spirit begins, you soon discover that you cannot divide a man into body and spirit without killing him. The careful observer can find a thousand and one illustrations of a principle which is no longer disputed—that mind or spirit has far-reaching effects on the physical body, and that, in turn, the condition of the physical body has equally far-reaching effects on the mind or spirit. These two modes of life cannot be separated. They belong together; they function together; they interact, each upon the other.

God said to the church in 1830 (Doctrine and Covenants 28:9), "All things unto me are spiritual; and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal . . . my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual." Yet some of us still cling to the idea that studying the Bible or the Book of Mormon is "spiritual," or religious, and that studying dietetics, or cooking, or home nursing, or interior decorating, or other subjects which would help preserve the health and well-being and morale of the family is not spiritual, but temporal.

If it is impossible to separate the spiritual from the temporal, then I believe we will be safe in stating that it is not the activity itself which determines its classification as spiritual or temporal, but the attitude of mind in which the activity is performed. It is not the gift itself which determines whether or not it is a spiritual or a temporal gift, but the use and purpose to which that gift is put. Whenever a man or woman receives a gift or enters upon an activity with a sense of his vital relationship to the whole purpose of God and the church (which is the body of Christ), his gift or activity thereby is consecrated; it becomes spiritual.

MANY PEOPLE HAVE the notion that Paul's list of "spiritual gifts" in the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians is a complete and exclusive list. Nowhere does Paul say that it is. On the contrary, he says, "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man [not just those who exercise the gift of prophecy or tongues] to profit withal." The central thought of this chapter is that in the body—and similarly in the body of Christ—there are many members, each with a specialized and differentiated gift or function. No single member of this body can afford to lose its sense of relationship with the body. "If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?" Neither can any single member of that body afford to disparage the importance of any other member with its gift and function. "The eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee." Just as the functions of every cell in the physical body are directed by the spirit which permeates that body, so the functions of every member of the "body of Christ" should be directed by the Spirit of Christ. And whenever that member performs his function under the direction of that Spirit he is exercising his spiritual gift regardless of what that gift may be. The Doctrine and Covenants (46:5) says, ". . . all have not every gift given unto them; for there are many gifts, and to every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God." Can the woman who exercises a gift of teaching or cooking or sewing say, "Because I have not the gift of prophecy, I am not of the body"? Or has the man who exercises the gift of prophecy any right to say that the one who exercises other gifts is not needed in the church or that his gifts are not as truly spiritual as the gift of prophecy?

THERE IS A TENDENCY in the church to covet earnestly the gifts given to another and to neglect the gifts given to ourselves in the thought that they are not spiritual. Because a few have sneered at the gifts of prophecy and tongues, some who should have been cultivating those gifts have preferred to exercise the gifts of wisdom and knowledge. Because some have envied the spectacular nature of certain kinds of gifts they have sought after them, and neglected the less spectacular gifts which God has given them.

God has commanded us, "Seek ye earnestly the best gifts" (Doctrine and Covenants 46:4), and Paul closes his chapter on spiritual gifts with the command "Covet earnestly the best gifts." What are the "best gifts"? The best gift for me is the gift which God has given me. So far as I am concerned the gift he has given you is second best, though it may be best for you. The gift God has given me is my spiritual gift, if I recognize it as God's gift, and a spiritual stewardship to be improved and used for the edification of the body of Christ (I Corinthians 14: 12).

- - - a home column feature - - -

This is the way taught by Paul in the twelfth chapter of his first Corinthian letter—the way of differentiation and specialization of function, each member of the body coveting, improving, and using his own gift, and making it spiritual by his attitude towards it and his use of it. Examine with me the closing verses of that chapter: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? Are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?" (We pause to note here that the King James version gives no answer to these rhetorical questions, but continues) "But covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way."

Let us note the important difference in the rendering of the Inspired Version. After these rhetorical questions, the answer is given: "I say unto you Nay; for I have shown unto you a more excellent way; therefore covet earnestly the best gifts." Paul has shown the more excellent way in the preceding chapter—the way of differentiated function, and diversity of gifts according to function, each member exercising his own particular spiritual gift in the niche assigned him in the body of Christ. Therefore, because "I have shown unto you this

Better Food for Less Money

ONE OF THE BEST ways I know to be sure that you get the right kinds of food on the table every day and still stay within your budget is to do the planning before you buy. I know it's quite a job, and I thought it was a little silly, too, until I had to do it for a few months. But once it is done, what a satisfaction it is to know each day just what is needed to be done for the next! There is no worry about whether there will be enough money to do it—that's all figured out. There's no question as to whether Mary will go into a nervous tantrum or faint at school for want of B vitamins, for they are there in planned foods every day. And what's more, when we get ready to make a pineapple pie for dinner, there's no question as to who will run to town to get the pineapple. It was brought in last Friday when we shopped, along with everything else we needed for the week—with the exception of a few of the most perishable foods.

Even one trip to the storage cellar does the job of several. We save a space in the kitchen for canned goods and potatoes. Then when the week's plans are made, enough is brought up at one time to keep us going for the week—with some extra in case of special company for which we haven't planned.

It is work, and it takes time, but we save that time over and over again during the week—no extra more excellent way," covet earnestly the best gifts—the gifts given to you to use and improve and develop. "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8. All gifts are spiritual if we recognize them as gifts from God; if we accept them as our stewardship, and if we "labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all."

By B. MILDRED NELSON

Instructor in Nutrition Extension Department, Ames, Iowa

trips to town, no extra trips to the cellar or locker, meals planned with a minimum of work (extra breakfast applesauce becomes a double recipe applesauce cake which serves for three desserts—one plain, one frosted, and one with a fruit sauce, spaced through the week so the family doesn't tire of applesauce cake). If you haven't tried it, just sit down and see how it goes.

PLANNING MEALS before you buy is like planning your wardrobe before you go to town to get a new dress. Have you ever "fallen in love" with a dress on the spur of the moment, went in and bought it, paid a neat bit of money for it, and then got it home to hang in the closet because there is nothing to wear with it and no money left for more? I have! Or maybe you looked over your wardrobe carefully and found that your black faille skirt could be combined with last year's white blouse, and all it would take to make it look just like the $30 dress in the window would be a new sash in melon and green with a dagger pin to fasten it. You bought the materials for the sash and still had $25 left for other dresses.

It's the same sort of thing when you plan meals. The ham looks wonderful, so you buy it and the pineapple and cherries for a sauce; then you suddenly realize that your grocery bill has gotten completely out of hand. So you get cold feet and buy half as many fresh vegetables as you know you'll need to help keep things in balance.

THIS IS HOW it works when you plan ahead. Ham with pineapple-cherry sauce would be wonderful for Wednesday. Let's see—

That will cost 90c for the ham, 25c for the cherries, 30c for the pineapple (and I'd use about half the fruit)—that's $1.17 for the four of us, or approximately 30c apiece. By the time I get vegetables and a dessert, it will be a pretty expensive meal.

We like cured smoked tongue nearly as well as we like ham. That would be 49c a pound, and we could use a raisin sauce at 15c a pound (I'd use about ¼ pound)—that's 53c for the four of us, or only 13c apiece. Less than half the cost of the first meal. I can buy a bunch of broccoli, half dozen oranges, and a quart of milk for that extra money, and have a much better meal in the long run.

If we do decide to have ham, we'll use candied apple rings with it instead of pineapple-cherry sauce and plan to snip enough off one or two slices to make a ham salad for Thursday's lunch. Anyway you figure it, it can really mean better food for less money—just what we ordered for the new year.

WHETHER YOU SIT down to plan meals day by day or do it in a general fashion "in your head," don't forget the leftovers. We frequently plan to cook enough potatoes for two meals and enough cake for lunch tomorrow. We don't forget the planned leftovers. It's the leftovers which just accumulate that often are the gremlins in our food budget. If we put them back on the table as they are, the family politely ignores them, so we put them away and forget them until they are spoiled, and it doesn't hurt our sense of economy to throw them away (or we argue ourselves into believing the dog needs them anyway).

The much better procedure is to organize them in our refrigerators or other storage places, each in its own tightly covered container. Then plan somewhere along the line to use them.

For cooked vegetables, there can be a scalloped vegetable dish, a stew, or soup that will take care of odds and ends and extra juices. Or maybe they can be used in a succotash or molded vegetable salad. If it's corn, there are fritters and cakes. We can combine leftover corn with leftover mashed potatoes, chips of bacon, an egg, a little flour and seasoning to make delicious fried potato cakes. Leftover green beans make a tasty salad with chopped onions and a tart French dressing. Pea-cheese- and pickle salad is a favorite at our house.

For the odds and ends of fresh vegetables and fruits, there are any number of good tossed salad combinations or molded ones. Often there are bits of cheese, fish, leftover meats, or even hard-cooked eggs to go with them in a chef's salad that is a good part of a light meal in itself.

The extra cereals, including rice and bread, may go into dressings, meat loaves, breakfast dishes (as fried mush or French toast) or puddings. We can use stale bread for a delightful confection when we are caught with company and no refreshments. Cut it into fingerlike strips, roll it in sweetened condensed milk, then in shredded coconut, and toast in a hot oven or under the broiler. It's the next thing to macaroons and much less expensive!

Bring back the leftovers, but always in disguise. They'll lift the budget from the doldrums, save food that would otherwise be wasted, and make you the family's favorite cook—as if you aren't already!

To My Valentine

You know full well, dear Valentine, the things I want to say, Because you came into my life one other lover's day.

The crowded moments of our life have known both work and care,

But in our humble home the glow of peace is everywhere.

Love's laughter is the music echoed by two little feet.

Contentment filters through the roof, contentment deep and sweet.

*On this fond day, dear Valentine, my thoughts are full of you,
And happiness made possible because our love is true;*

Whatever insecurities may at our path be hurled,

We three will stand together, strong, and laughing at the world.

—Martha Ford Floro

The Proper Care and Treatment of Husbands

AS LATTER DAY SAINTS, we believe in a Zionite condition, not only among peoples and nations but in our homes. After all, how can we seek to establish the kingdom of God on earth if we do not first set our homes in order as pertaining to temporal demands and requisites as well as to the spiritual phase of our everyday existence?

We cannot send our children into the world inspired and equipped to inspire those with whom they come in contact if our lives as parents—as husband and wife—are not exemplary in our relations to them, to the world about us and, most important, to each other.

Psychologists agree on this issue—that children who come from unhappy homes are in some way unhappy playfellows, students, and workers. Tragically, they derive inhibitions that without fail settle into inferiority complexes, which very frequently are carried with them throughout their entire lives. This more often than not leaves these children without real friends. They are either too shy and submissive, or their repression takes the form of self-centered arrogance and flaunted egotism. A child thus handicapped must always be the center of attraction and the leader in every activity, or he is desperately unhappy and is about as popular with his contemporaries as a venturesome civet cat.

What to do about a condition that leads to such drastic opposites? To begin with, the marriage vows as recognized and used by this church and other churches in the land and the world at large are evenly divided between the man and the woman who enter this sacred covenant. They are each required to love and honor the other. This would make marriage an equal proposition.

The man, however, has a slight edge; he is given the lead. Woman was created to be “an helpmeet” for him. It is his duty as husband and father to set his house in order so that he and his family may be better qualified to fulfill the purpose of their creation. This does not mean that his duty and work is more important than his wife's. Frequently, the woman is gifted so that through her understanding and assistance, she is able to make a much better man of her husband than he would have become through his own initiative. Still, she should not set herself up as his rival. She cannot compete with him for fame without endangering their marriage. She must either back up and build up her husband, thereby insuring her marital happiness, or sacrifice it on the altar of self-glory.

By MARGUERITE BAKER

Many women are compelled by circumstances to assume the roll of breadwinners. They fulfill real needs in the emergencies that make these demands upon their versatility, and they do an excellent job of it. This is only part of the meaning of being a true helpmeet. “For richer, for poorer; in sickness or in health,” and the required promise, “You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other and from all others during your lives” entails a vast category of contingencies and emergencies that may arise on the fluctuating sea of matrimony. It is woman's duty to arise to whatever crises may confront her husband and her children, to answer the challenge with courage and fortitude, and to consecrate her life and talents to God through idealistic service to her husband, her church, and her home. She will then be instrumental in bringing one family unit into the kingdom and will have perfected her own life so that she can serve the church more adequately.

Some men are endowed with stronger spiritual qualities or have grown to a higher spiritual stature. In either case, they are the pillar of strength in their homes, church, and community. A woman blessed with this type of husband may be justly proud. Her lot in life is greatly simplified.

Some years ago an article in one of the popular women's magazines bore the caption, “The Proper Care and Feeding of Husbands.” We women who belong to the Reorganized Church might change one word of that title to read, “The Proper Care and Treatment of Husbands,” and write volumes about it.

Marriage to the wise woman means interest and encouragement in her husband's work and spiritual life, compassion and sympathy for his dark moments, full co-operation at all times, and a heart full of love. She needs to provide an artistic and a spiritual atmosphere in the home and make him the integral part about which their home life pivots.

“And they twain shall be one flesh” means literally that they shall be one in purpose as God and Christ are one in purpose and as we are one with them when we live in harmony with divine commandments. When the marriage state of our people reaches this peak of perfection, we will have traveled a long way toward the building of Christ's kingdom on earth.

Asks for Correspondence

I will appreciate having the Saints in and around Roswell, New Mexico, write to me.

O. D. HENSON.

317 East Sixth
Roswell, New Mexico

A New Commandment

FOR OVER A YEAR, I have had the opportunity to spend some of my time in the homes of people, sharing with them the knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ. This sharing has been carried on in family meetings. In the informal atmosphere of the home, we discussed together—with the aid of colored slides—the type of church Christ established to carry forward his gospel, the principles of his gospel, the apostasy, and the restoration of the true gospel in its fullness, with its authority on earth to represent God, and the organization to carry the gospel to “all the world.”

One evening, I was in the home of a young couple with whom we had shared this story of the church. They were interested in our church and had attended many of our services. As we talked, the young woman said, “You know, when I attend my church, the sermons and lessons always carry the message to do as the Master has done. Christ is set before us as the example for our daily lives. At your church, they always seem to stress that one should live righteously in order to go to Zion, or tell of the mission of the church and what it must accomplish.” There was a hush. Like a flash, I understood something which I should have known long before. All the things I had been saying were true, but my point of emphasis was wrong. Christ had said, “A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another.” That commandment, in itself, was not new. The Old Testament was filled with such admonition. The newness of that commandment was in the words which followed: “Even as I have loved you, that you also love one another.” From that moment on, I knew I would never again present the story of the gospel in the old way. The Christlike life and the opportunity to share that life with others would now be first in my thinking. Never would I say,

Here Is the Writer . . .

Jack Conway, whose home town is Minneapolis, is a graduate of the University of Minnesota. During the war, he was a lieutenant in the Navy; he served as navigator on an LST, NROTC navigation instructor at Northwestern University, and instructor at the midshipman's school in Fort Schuyler, New York. After receiving his discharge, he expected to return to the Bell Telephone Company, where he had worked for a year preceding his enlistment, but a series of unusual incidents led to his becoming a general church appointee instead. His first assignment was in Independence, after which he was appointed missionary to the Des Moines-Nauvoo Districts. He and his wife, the former Bette Mallams, have a year-and-a-half old daughter, Kathleen.

“Live Christlike lives that you may go to Zion,” but rather, “Live Christlike lives that Zion may be.”

BY DEVELOPING THOSE qualities of life which Christ demonstrated, we might “become partakers of the divine nature.” As Peter said, “For this very reason make every effort to supplement your faith with virtue, and virtue with knowledge, and knowledge with self-control, and self-control with steadfastness, and steadfastness with godliness, and godliness with brotherly affection, and brotherly affection with love. For, if these things are yours and abound, they keep you from being ineffective or unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.”—II Peter 1: 5-8, Revised Standard Version. Here, then, is a way in which we cannot fail to be fruitful in sharing the gospel.

By Jack Conway

In the latter-day revelation of Doctrine and Covenants (4: 2), those same qualities of life of which Peter wrote are outlined for those who “have desires to serve God.” To possess these qualities of life, we must plant them in our lives as seed sown in fertile ground. We must desire to possess them, not half-heartedly, but eagerly. As we feel a bit of love toward our brother, we must cherish and nurture it that it may grow, plucking out the weeds of jealousy, distrust, and selfishness. As we feel a bit of faith that God does live and is able to bless and help us, we must let nothing separate us from that flicker of eternal life. We must read, pray, and associate with that which shall kindle the spark we possess. Thus, each of these qualities of life may be developed within us until, one by one, we may possess them all.

Did you ever say to a child, “You must love your playmate,” and feel that your command had established that desired love within the child? It simply cannot be! The very God who made us cannot force us to have those Christlike qualities of life any more than you can force your child to possess them. First there must be an example, then the desire to emulate that example. As children, we must open our lives to the example Christ set. We must recognize there is a better way to live and make a conscious effort to follow that better way.

DO YOU WANT TO assist in sharing this gospel with others? The first rule of salesmanship is to sell ourselves—our personality, sincerity, belief in what we possess. Just as we must go through the door to gain entrance into our homes, so must we sell ourselves to others if we would share the gospel with them. Peter knew that. He said, in essence, that we cannot fail to be fruitful for Christ if we develop the qualities of life which Christ had. By possessing them, Christ will be in us, even as the Father was in him. The matter of allegiance to you, as an individual, will not even enter in, for even as you pass through the door into your home, so will the love and allegiance of those to whom you teach the gospel shift to the Giver of that joy which comes from a knowledge of Christ and the life he lived.

My testimony is that this is not just another church telling the story of its own gospel, but this church is the very movement of God with the children of the earth; if they will, all may rejoice in a knowledge of the truth. But, be you Latter Day Saint or of any other religious belief, God cannot make of you what you will not become. If you desire to assist in the work of the Master, "present your bodies as a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God."

MY DESIRE for the years ahead is that I may be a servant in the house of my Father—to assist in his work. Now that I understand more clearly the fullness of the gospel with all its offices of ministry as outlined in the New Testament, the plan of salvation, and the building of the kingdom as the actual answer to the problems of the world, I see all this as a means to an end—the end being that in you and me and in all mankind there might abide the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Seeing this as I do, there is revealed to me that

"Let them go two by two"

---one of them being a pilot

By Jessie Heide

I RECENTLY PICKED UP an old issue of the Herald in which Lily Oakman reported, among other events, the following item from Enfield, England: "An unexpected and welcome visitor during July was Elder Lawrence Brockway of Ann Arbor, Michigan, who flew from Canada in the short space of twelve hours." That sentence partially replaces my fear of the atomic bomb with a fear of God. God surely must be disappointed when he sees that we have accomplished so little when he has given us so much with which to work.

What has been done once can be done many, many times. A number of our priesthood members fly planes either in their daily work or for pleasure and could spend part time—or full time—carrying the gospel to the ends of the earth in a matter of a few hours. I do not know how much money such projects would cost, and I do not understand planes well enough to know which types would be suitable. I frequently find my ignorance of aircraft keenly embarrassing when conversing with children—even quite young children.

"LET THEM GO TWO BY TWO"—one of them being a pilot. When they go, what will they take with them? The gospel, of course. But how? What tangible thing do we have to present? The Three Standard Books—or have we?

I cannot find the quotation just now, but I have read one about God's wanting "many cultures" in Zion. We can take our literature to the United States and her territories and the British Empire—the English speaking world. We haven't even done very well at that yet. We could also take the gospel to the Scandinavian countries, Germany, Holland, and perhaps a few other small regions. But aren't we more or less lost in a fog when we contemplate reaching Asia, Africa, and Latin America? Even if we which I must do and desire to be if I shall assist in his work and share it with others. Strangely though, we must possess a measure of the "end" that these means to the end might fulfill the purpose of their creation.

You can best share this gospel with others by being what it teaches.

had our books translated into those languages, who would help the people to understand them? Most of us are not fluent even in English, and so few of us bother to learn any other language. It was quite the thing for the old-time missionaries to rely on God to put words into their mouths, and many times their faith was marvelously rewarded. But they did not have the chances that we have to learn. In these days we have no right to ask God to compensate for our slothfulness in the same manner that he did in those early days.

IN THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS 64: 8, we read: "Zion shall flourish . . . and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven." Only today I heard a report on the radio that the Catholic convents and schools in Japan, as well as Protestant institutions in that country, are turning away native candidates and converts because of insufficient personnel and equipment—especially personnel.

What are we doing in Japan? I read in the periodicals and newspapers and hear over the radio much to indicate that the American economic frontier in the near future will be with Latin America, which, of course, will present many opportunities for us there. Are we able to take our chances? Are we ready to incorporate their culture into our Zion project? Are we willing to adjust our ways to theirs, or are we going to continue to be so bound by our petty ideas that we cannot let them be happy in Zion?

During the late war we heard a lot about "those who keep them flying," "those behind the lines," "those who do the little, important jobs," and "unsung heroes"; everyone understood his inestimable value. There is today—there always has been and always will be—a need for such people. Perhaps you can find something of that nature to do. People have done everything from visiting the sick to leading a branch in their spare time. Just try even an hour each day for a while, devoting it to some one, small project as wisely as you can. The need is so great that if any person should try to spread over a wide territory, he probably wouldn't do the church in general much good, although he probably could accomplish a great deal of self-help.

There is a tremendous amount of energy going into pastimes which are no more than just that—pastimes. Going to too many movies, reading too many books and magazines, listening to too many radio programs, spending too much time just "lolling around"—all of which are harmless forms of recreation and necessary to most people's happiness, but they can become wasteful both in time and money.

I am convinced that, as a collective group, we are missing innumerable opportunities to present the gospel over the radio, particularly over the small, community stations which are springing up all over the nation. We are losing out because nobody bothers to make the effort. And short wave radio! Isn't it thrilling even to imagine for a minute what could be accomplished by a very few persons with the personal contact of a short wave radio set?

Some fine work has been done with amateur movie equipment, but it strikes me that a finished, professional movie would be more effective. Is anything too expensive or too much trouble to spread the happy news of the Prince of Peace these days?

What I started out to say is, the transportation and communication are ready for us any time we want to use them.

Has Traveling Church Library

I wish to thank all who prayed for me some time ago when I requested prayers. I have received much strength. I am still trying to start a mission here in McPherson, although there are only three Latter Day Saints in the county. I now have a traveling library of church publications including thirty Angel Message tracts, nine copies of the Solid Rock, nine of The Call at Evening, three of The Old Jerusalem Gospel, and others. Pray for me that this missionary attempt will prove successful.

GEORGE H. ROBERSON.

610 South Maple
McPherson, Kansas

Briefs

BURBANK, CALIFORNIA. — Wylene Hughes was baptized on December 14 by Elder R. C. Chambers. Elders Herbert Blakeman and R. C. Chambers officiated at the confirmation.

EROS, LOUISIANA. — Elder T. B. Sharp conducted a series of meetings in Eros from December 28 to January 3. Attendance was good despite the unfavorable weather.

IOWA CITY, IOWA.—Meetings are being held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms of the Iowa Memorial Union. There are approximately fifty members in the group, and weekly attendance averages twenty to twenty-five. Dale Ballantyne is president; Dr. Vos Meredith and Dr. Walter Daykin are counselors. The present course of study is Comparative Religions; Cecil Ettinger is in charge.

OILTON, OKLAHOMA. — Elder William Hayden conducted a two-weeks' series of meetings late in December. At the close of the series, he baptized Mrs. Monte Sanders and her daughter, Janice. Oilton congregation has gained three new members and paid the debt on the church.

JACKSON, MICHIGAN. — Officers were elected on January 29 to serve during the coming year. Robert Smith of Lansing is pastor; John Cox and Edward Cotton are counselors. The building fund continues to grow, and it is hoped a new church may soon be built.

BAKER, OREGON.—A new mission has been organized with Elder Harry S. Fry as pastor. District President J. L. Verhei, who was in charge of organization, spent three days in Baker, visiting with the Saints and preaching.

PORTSMOUTH, VIRGINIA. — On December 7, the Saints met for the first time in their new church home at the corner of Rodman Avenue and Griffin Street in Westhaven. This building represents the result of years of saving and two years of hard work by the men of the branch. During the war, the servicemen who attended meetings in Portsmouth contributed generously to the fund. Lyle Steede of Ladysmith, Wisconsin, remained in Portsmouth two weeks after receiving his discharge to help lay the foundation for the new church. At the December Communion service, Carolyn Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Jenkins, and Helen Virginia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Shattuck, were blessed.

"I Am Not Ashamed of the Gospel of Christ"

(Continued from page 6.)

of insight bearing witness to the truth of the Restoration message. Since my field has been the social sciences—and the church for more than a century has emphasized the importance of social relationships—the experience of classroom truth uniting with religious truth has been a frequent one.

Comradeship of the Spirit

I'm grateful probably most of all for the comradeship of the Spirit of God. As I have been humble, it has stimulated me to efforts beyond the normal. It has melted my heart when routine and self-concern have dulled sensitivity to human need. Out in the fields under a blue sky, looking into the stars at night, in the sickroom, in the sacraments of the church, He has been very near. I can understand Paul in his testimony, for I, too, am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ nor of the church called to reveal the power of God unto salvation. My life has felt its saving touch.

Isolated Saints Invite Visitors

There are ten of us Saints living in Lehigh Valley in eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey. We meet every second Friday and hold a monthly Communion service. Since we are fifty miles from the nearest branch (Philadelphia), we extend an invitation to any of the Saints who may be passing through this area to contact us. We live along U. S. Highway 22, eighty miles east of Harrisburg, and U. S. Highway 309, fifty miles north of Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Edwards
648 Main Street
Egypt, Pennsylvania

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Reitz
229 South St. Cloud Street
Allentown, Pennsylvania

Mr. and Mrs. Val Fish
307 New Jersey Avenue
Shimer Manor
Phillipsburg, New Jersey

Doris Bair
c/o Postmaster
Egypt, Pennsylvania

www.LatterDayTruth.org

BULLETIN BOARD

Northwestern Ohio Women's Institute

The women of Northwestern Ohio District will hold a one-day institute at Bradner, Ohio, on February 19. A full day of work, devotion, study, and music has been planned, beginning at 9:30 a.m. Missionary Lloyd Adams will be the afternoon speaker. All reservations for the dinner ($1.00 per plate) should be made with Mrs. Mary French, Bradner, Ohio.

RUTH SMITH, Secretary.

Southern Indiana Priesthood Institute

The Southern Indiana Priesthood Institute will be held in New Albany, Indiana (515 East Tenth Street), on February 21 and 22. The theme is "Be Ye Converted."

CHESTER METCALF,
District President.

Central Oklahoma District Conference

The Central Oklahoma District Conference will be held on March 12, 13, and 14 at Tulsa. Apostle D. T. Williams, High Priest L. W. Kohlman, and Elder W. C. Haden are to be in attendance. All reports should be sent to B. A. Howard, 806 Northwest Eleventh, Oklahoma City 6, Oklahoma. Reservations for housing during the conference may be made with L. W. Kohlman, 1150 North Elwood, Tulsa 6, Oklahoma. Meals will be served at the church at nominal cost.

ONALEA BAILEY,
District Secretary.

Notice to Oregon State College Students

Services will be held for students of the Oregon State College in Corvallis as soon as a suitable meeting place can be located. Interested students, or parents of students, are urged to contact Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Wertick, 730 South Tenth Street, Corvallis; Mr. and Mrs. Carlyle Cole, 2121 Monroe Street, Corvallis; or J. L. Verhei, 3824 Southeast Grant Court, Portland.

Attention, Kentucky and Tennessee Members

I recently lost my home by fire and with it all records and correspondence from the isolated Saints in this district. I must again obtain the names and addresses of these nonresident members before I can continue my service as nonresident pastor. Your co-operation will be greatly appreciated.

O. S. CALDWELL.

617 North Poplar Street
Paris, Tennessee

Silver Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Constance, 3035 California Street, Omaha, Nebraska, will hold open house at their home on Sunday, February 15, from 3 to 5 p.m., in honor of their silver wedding anniversary. No invitations have been issued.

Quarterlies Wanted

Several copies of the quarterly, Evangelism and the Teaching, by F. M. McDowell, are needed by the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. This quarterly last appeared in July-September, 1945, as a part of a year's course for older young people entitled "Our Call to Evangelism." The quarterly number is Q634C. Ten cents will be paid for each quarterly that is complete and in good condition.

F. M. McDOWELL.

Books Wanted

Mrs. R. H. Smith, 1614 Walnut Drive, Cedar Falls, Iowa, is soliciting for copies of Cheville's

The Bible in Every Day Living to be used by a study group. Please contact her if you are willing to sell or lend your copy.

Volumes I, II, III, and IV of the Church History are needed by J. L. Verhei, 3824 Southeast Grant Court, Portland, Oregon.

Flannelgraph Figures Needed

Mrs. Dan C. Babbitt, Grayling, Michigan, needs the flannelgraph characters of The Call at Evening for use in Zion's League work.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Lucy Rushton, Box 15, Springhill Mines, Nova Scotia, requests prayers for her son, Clarence, that he may regain his health.

Mrs. W. H. Hickman, Route 2, Point Pleasant, West Virginia, asks the prayers of the Saints for her health, that she might be healed of a nervous affliction, and for her mother, who is suffering with a broken hip. She will also appreciate letters from any who care to write.

Mrs. Sue Ice, Route 7, Box 71, Spokane 12, Washington, requests prayers for her granddaughter, Mrs. June Williams, who is a patient in the Arroyo del Valle Sanitorium at Livermore, California.

Arthur H. Dammon, Strong Memorial Hospital, Rochester, New York, asks the prayers of the Saints that he may speedily recover from a broken hip. He also requests prayers for a fellow patient, who has a similar fracture.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Nellie Schools by her mother, Mrs. Iva Light of Lebanon, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Schools, who has a serious heart ailment, is the mother of two children.

ENGAGEMENTS

Crabb-Jones

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar R. Jones of Denver, Colorado, announce the engagement of their daughter, Elinor, to S/Sgt. Arthur C. Crabb, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Crabb of Sagle, Idaho. The wedding will take place this summer.

WEDDINGS

Hewitt-Dean

Jeanette Mary Deane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Deane of Kansas City, Missouri, and Paul Johnson Hewitt, also of Kansas City, were married at Central Church on October 25, Elder Dan Sorden officiating. They are residing in Kansas City.

Allen-Williams

Helen Williams, daughter of Mrs. Bertha Williams of Kingsville, Missouri, and Merlin Allen, son of Mrs. Alice Allen of Independence, Missouri, were married at the Liberty Street Church in Independence on October 3, Elder Roy Martin, uncle of the bride, read the double-ring ceremony.

Hubble-Pratt

Charlotte Ann Pratt of Independence, Missouri, and William Preston Hubble of Hartshorne, Oklahoma, were married on December 3 at the home of Elder Hubert Case in Independence, Elder Case officiating. They are residing in Hartshorne, where Mr. Hubble is pastor of the Reorganized Church.

DEATHS

THURMAN.—Henry J., was born in Illinois on November 25, 1860, and died on January 11, 1948, in Webb City, Missouri. As a child, he moved with his parents to Iowa. On November 6, 1879, he was married to Matilda Ellen Lyons; seven children were born to them. Both he and his wife were baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1900.

He is survived by a son, Jesse, of Lorimar, Iowa, and three daughters: Mrs. Edna Owen, Redwood City, California; Mrs. Laura Karlstrom, Independence, Missouri; and Mrs. Emma Gilmore, Lewiston, Montana. Mrs. Thurman died on February 18, 1939.

PETERSON.—Fred A., son of Peter and Phoebe Overbey Peterson, was born at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and died November 27, 1947, at Dallas, Texas. He moved to Independence, Missouri, as a boy with his parents, where he later was a partner with his father and brothers in the coal and feed business. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of eleven; in 1910, he was ordained a teacher, and in 1940, a priest, which office he held at the time of his passing. Brother Peterson was a kindly man, loved by all who knew him, both in and out of the church.

He is survived by his wife, Nancy; two brothers: Bert E. and Edmund O. Peterson; and a sister, Mrs. W. A. Stevenson, all of Independence. Elders H. E. Davenport and Linden Wheeler officiated at the funeral service. Interment was at Bristol, Tennessee, the former home of Mrs. Peterson.

STAWPERT.—Joseph, was born in Atchison, Kansas, on September 26, 1864. He was employed, until retirement, in the offices of the Missouri Pacific Railway in Atchison and St. Louis. Fifteen years ago he returned to Atchison, residing at the home of his sister-in-law, where he died on November 10, 1947. He was an extensive reader and spent much of his time in the public library. He was baptized in his youth into the Reorganized Church and was a faithful member until death. He never married. Funeral services were conducted from the Harouff-Buis Chapel, Frank G. Hedrick officiating. Burial was in Mt. Vernon Cemetery, Atchison.

MATTISON.—Bessie Cook, was born November 9, 1887, at Underwood, Iowa, and died at Long Beach, California, on January 23, 1948, of a heart attack. Most of her life was spent in Council Bluffs, Iowa, but last May, she and her husband moved to Long Beach. She was married to Charles Mattison in 1907, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 5, 1920. She loved the church and was a faithful member until her death.

She is survived by her husband; three daughters: Mrs. Glenn Shane and Mrs. Stanley Jarvis of Long Beach, and Mrs. Clifford Johns of Omaha, Nebraska; a stepmother, Mrs. Jane Cook of Long Beach; one sister, Mrs. Flossie O'Donald of Council Bluffs; and five grandchildren. A funeral service was held at Long Beach on January 25, after which her body was shipped to Council Bluffs, where a second funeral was held at the church on January 31, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in Walnut Hill Cemetery in Council Bluffs.

GREEN.—Laura Bell, daughter of Edmund L. and Catherine Bishop Kelley, was born at Kirtland, Ohio, and died January 28, 1948, in Independence, Missouri. After graduation from Graceland, she studied music at the conservatory in Leipzig, Germany. Upon her return to America, she continued her musical studies under Sir Carl and Mrs. Busch in Kansas City. She was then appointed as head of the department of music at Graceland, where she served for some time. In addition to her activities in the field of music, she was a member of the Mother's Club of the Independence Sanitarium and the Delta Tau Delta and Delta Gamma college sororities. She was married on August 16, 1916, to Dr. John R. Green; five children were born to this marriage. Mrs. Green was a devoted wife and mother, but her interest was also extended to those outside the family circle.

She is survived by her husband; a son, Lt. John Richard Green, a physician at the Naval Hospital in Oakland, California; four daughters: Mrs. Louise Grenawalt, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Virginia Rasse, Boston, Massachusetts; Katherine and Mary of the home; four brothers: Edmund L., of Hardin, Montana; Richard C., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; David E., Kansas City, Missouri; and J. Stanley Kelley, Independence, Missouri; two sisters: Mrs. Jeannette V. Craig, Independence, and Mrs. Ruth Lichtenwalter, Short Hills, New Jersey; and three grandchildren. Services were conducted at the Carson Funeral Chapel, Elders L. F. P. Curry and Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in the Green family vault at Mound Grove Cemetery.

MILLER.—Ezra David, son of Calvin and Paradine Miller, was born January 7, 1879, in Illinois, and died January 17, 1948, in Delavan, Kansas. With his parents and twin sister, Etta, he moved to Kansas in 1900. On April 17, 1926, he was married to Edith McGoon; one son was born to this marriage. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since November 23, 1947.

Besides his wife and son, William, he leaves three children by a former marriage: Beatrice Remlinger, Iola, Kansas; Thelma Bumbly, Long Island, New York; and Bernard Miller, Smolan, Kansas; a brother, George, of Topeka, Kansas; two sisters: Elizabeth Raigen of Oregon and Lucy Carpenter of Wichita, Kansas; and three grandchildren.

EASTER PROGRAM MATERIAL

The Answer of the Cross

A Pageant for Easter Week

By Marie Graham

Seven characters find the "seven last words of Christ" an adequate solution to their varied troubles. Price 10¢ each.

PAGEANTS AND PLAYS

The Risen Lord

By Walter Russell Bowie

Two scenes, 17 men, 2 women, reader, and angel. This pageant of the Easter story is designed to be given in the church itself, the text read by the minister or some appointed person. Price, 25¢

The Broken Seal

By Edward T. Kirkley

In eight scenes, the resurrection story as recorded in the Scriptures is told simply and effectively. Full instructions for presentation. Eight women, 15 men. Time, 45 minutes. Price, 10¢

The Way of Life

By Martha Bayly

One act, 2 men, 3 women, and a group of young people. The story of one of the Roman soldiers who cast lots for Jesus' clothes at the foot of the cross and the subsequent effect of the event on his life and that of his two sisters. Play. Price, 30¢; $3 a dozen.

PROGRAMS

Easter Program Builder No. 1

This builder contains recitations, exercises, readings, choral, and musical readings, playlets and songs which have been carefully classified into 6 sections. Departmental supervisors will welcome this grouping plan. Price, 35¢

Standard Easter Book No. 2

A 48-page program book offering "The Broken Seal" pageant, recitations for all ages, short playlets, drills, acrostics, exercises, etc. The program committee will find here complete programs worked out and ready to produce, or can build its own program from the variety of material provided. Price, 30¢

Eureka Easter Recitations No. 4

By Mattie B. Shannon

Program material for kindergartners, primaries, juniors, and junior highs. Pantomimes, plays, songs, and special features. Price, 25¢

An Easter Morning Praise Service

Easter morning sunrise praise service completely arranged, simple, and impressive. Price, 10¢

Light on the Hills

Complete service materials for church school needs, including responsive readings, songs, recitations, and acrostics. Price, 10¢

Wonderful Morning

An Easter service for the church school, songs, recitations, etc. Price, 10¢

Easter Bells

Contains original songs, recitations, etc., arranged in a service form for the church school. Price, 10¢

Glorious Easter

Songs, readings, recitations, and exercises for the church school hour. Price, 10¢ Quantity prices on the above 4 service programs: $1 a dozen.

CANTATAS

Radiant Morning

For mixed voices, simple yet qualitative music that can be easily worked up by the small or inexperienced group of singers. Has dignity and real beauty. Price 40¢

The Living Redeemer

This cantata provides for a narrator whose reading supplies the desired continuity. It is not beyond the ability of the average volunteer choir but will require more rehearsal time than others of its type. With song and story this cantata builds upon the dramatic events leading to the crucifixion, concluding with the thrilling choral number, "Immanuel Victorious." Price, 40¢

The First Easter

An effective instrumental prelude and choral number precedes the story which alternates with vocal selections through the cantata. The reading of the story may be omitted at the option of the director. Price, 20¢

The Victorious Christ

In song and story, this tuneful cantata portrays the occurrences of the resurrection and is not difficult nor lengthy—only 8 vocal numbers in all consisting of solos, duets, quartets, and four-part chorus numbers, yet it conveys a complete Easter message. Price, 20¢ $2 a dozen.

Immanuel Victorious

An Easter cantata for women's voices plus a narrator. Beautiful in its simplicity. Price, 20¢

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Palmer-Lappine Studio

“And Preach the Gospel”

Z. Z. Renfroe,
President of Seventy

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

FEBRUARY 21, 1948

NUMBER 8

www.LatterDayTruth.org

President of Seventy

AUDITORIUM NEWS

“And preach the gospel” is the keynote of the life of a seventy. It is his creed, his ambition, his way of expressing in his own life the love of God for the children of earth. The seventy is a recruiting officer for the Army of the Lord. He works at his task as Paul did, “in season, out of season.” With him, all subjects of discussion lead to religion, all paths lead to heaven.

Z. Z. Renfroe is representative of a group of men who stand at the head of the seventies of the church. They are, as listed in the last General Conference appointments: E. Y. Hunker (president), Z. Z. Renfroe, Harold I. Velt, Percy E. Farrow, Glen H. Johnson, and George A. Njeim. They work under the direction of the Quorum of Twelve. Two men who are now apostles came from the group of presidents of seventy: Roscoe E. Davey and Maurice L. Draper.

The rebuilding of the ranks of the seventies is one of the great tasks and opportunities of this generation of church members. The training of men, the gathering of funds to support and maintain them, and all the church work and organization to make their efforts effective, must go forward in our time. Then we can see them literally obey the Great Commission, “Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel.”

* PRESIDENT J. F. GARVER and Bishop Walter N. Johnson are due to reach the U. S. mainland on their return journey from Australia by March 15, according to information lately received. They have not been able to go to Tahiti as they had hoped, but will have a stop at Honolulu.

* APOSTLE MAURICE L. DRAPER reports that Pensacola, Florida, had twenty-six baptisms for the year 1947, an increase of 7.2 per cent in the membership of 361. Brother Draper's itinerary includes the Southwestern Texas district conference at San Antonio, February 14 and 15. Then he will go to Florida, stopping at Mobile, Tampa, and Orlando for missionary work.

* LAMONI STAKE NEWS informs us that Harold A. Tabor has been named as a counselor to the stake president, Robert Farnham; John P. Lane will be a new member of the stake high council.

* APOSTLE ARTHUR A. OAKMAN has been scheduled for a visit at Lamoni, then to continue to Chicago and St. Louis successively.

* DES MOINES, IOWA, has twenty-seven persons enrolled in training classes for leadership and instruction, which meet at regular intervals under the direction of Sister Florence Freberg, according to the Department of Religious Education.

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

A Golden Reed.....	3
Travelog	4
Church Programs Now on KFRM.....	4
Calls to Service.....	4

ARTICLES:

Musings of a Presiding Bishop, by G. L. DeLapp.....	5
1948—A Year for Action, by Lloyd E. Cleveland.....	7
The Silent Week, by Kathryn C. Metz.....	8
A Handshake by Air.....	8
The First Battalion, by Joseph Richard Meloan.....	9
What L. D. S. Believe About the Bible, by Evan A. Fry.....	12
The Cost of Alcohol, by Vida M. Fletcher.....	15
Feminine Influence in Foreign Lands, by Grace L. Krabl.....	16
Food Reminiscences, by Elbert A. Smith.....	17
Let's Be Young, by Ella Lambkin.....	17
Letters	18
Passport to Heaven, by Biloine Whiting.....	20
Bulletin Board	23

Canadian Customs

The Herald Publishing House has recently been experiencing some difficulty in getting church literature through the Canadian Customs. It will be recalled that a similar difficulty was experienced several years ago, but that after correspondence with the proper authorities, arrangements were made whereby materials published or manufactured by us could enter Canada free. In recent weeks we have been particularly concerned over the refusal of entrance of Income and Expense Record Books. The entire matter is again being canvassed with the customs officials at Ottawa and we hope to have favorable information within the next few weeks.

A Golden Reed

"And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city."
—Revelation 21: 15.

READING THE CHAPTER in which the above statement is found, one reflects that the golden reed was adequate to measure only the physical proportions of the Holy City. It could not reach beyond material signs of wealth. When the spiritual conditions of the city were described, the golden reed was useless—it was not mentioned. For these other values, vision and understanding were required, and John wrote, "I saw."

Today there are people who have nothing as a basis for the judgment of values but a golden reed, or (as another version puts it) a "measuring rod." And when they are confronted with the spiritual values of life, miss them entirely or have nothing by which to estimate them. Love, happiness, gratitude, kindness, peace, purity—all these and a thousand other qualities are beyond the measurement of the golden reed, and they are more important to the welfare of people than anything the golden reed can measure.

What a pity it is that our civilization gives the predominance of its attention to the measurements of the golden reed, when there are millions suffering because they do not know enough about the other values?

Do not forget that the golden reed is important. Otherwise, why would it be used to measure in the Holy City? But let us remember, even in church work, that it is not the measure of all things.

THE MARKET KEPT rising, spiraling slowly and steadily upward, carrying inflation with it, like a bird of prey soaring gradually out of sight. Then it faltered, dropped like a plane in a downdraft, caught itself, dropped again, and paused a while. There was no crash, only a warning to the nation that the upward ascent could not continue forever. We must keep in mind that the market is concerned with more than commodities. Human welfare, human existence, life, and death depend in some measure upon the movements of the market. Because of it, somewhere in the world, people may eat or go hungry, live or die.

The newspaper quotes a government official as saying that the changes in the market are due to the speculations of "thousands of small investors." Once again, despite warnings, the spirit of speculation, the desire to get something for nothing, to reap without planting, to eat without labor, endangers us. Some of us never learn. One man is reported to have made $200,000 in "selling short" in the wheat market. He did not plant. He did not harvest. He simply gambled. If he had misjudged, he could have lost that much or more.

Those who live by labor resent the fact that some men are permitted, under our economy, to win and lose fortunes "playing the market." Yet every citizen who buys a home and later sells it at a profit is in the same sense "playing the market"—the same kind of market. Every honest merchant runs a risk of losses as well as opportunity of gains. We may not think of it, but a free market is one of the indispensable factors of our total freedom. Destroy the free market, and you destroy freedom. The world waits for a solution of this problem.

And there is a sense in which he who takes a risk in owning commodities, over ever so long or short a period of time, performs a service. It is a finely drawn line, but it is there.

The peak of the market is something that interests everybody. Every speculator desires to know when prices will reach the highest point, so that he can squeeze every last possible penny of profit out of it. He wants to take all the gains and give all the losses to somebody else. And often his greed betrays him into waiting too long and taking all the losses himself.

THERE ARE OTHER PEAKS for us to consider. When the reed of gold has taken its measurements and finished its work, there are the other intangible values to be taken into account. Human beings, like markets, begin at the bottom, make a slow and steady upward climb in value, reach a peak of usefulness, and then decline. Some reach a small peak early and never go beyond it. Some climb a succession of peaks, making grander achievements each time and going ever higher than before. And some, alas, never climb at all. They remain at the bottom and never experience a fall. The peaks are things they see in the distance, if at all, through the mists of space.

I was talking to a minister friend recently about how much time people give to the making of money, how much life is ground to bits to gain it, how many minds crack in worrying about it. Then he said, "In all the years I have been conducting funeral services, no relative has ever asked me to mention how much money the deceased person made. They ask me to mention good personal qualities, service to the church, examples of kindness and generosity, but never money. Nobody ever seems to be proud of it."

That gives us something to think about.

Yet the golden reed has enormous usefulness. Somebody signs a check, and a widow's suffering is eased, an education for some young person is assured, a church is built, a missionary is sent to foreign fields, a home is erected, and a thousand

(Continued on page 19.)

Editorial

Church Programs Now on KFRM

During last December, officials of KMBC reported to the church officers that increasing pressure was being brought to bear on them to force them to make available another half-hour of church time for commercial purposes, and signified their desire to proceed under the terms of the contract drawn up in the summer of 1946 (see page 740, Saints' Herald, Volume 93, number 32, August 10, 1946) to cancel this half-hour and make stipulated payment therefore to the church. The half-hour in question was at 4:30 on Sunday afternoon. As an alternative, they offered to give us in exchange a half hour of time from 11:00 to 11:30 a.m. on Sunday over the new station KFRM, which was opened on December 7 at Concordia, Kansas. At this time, the Stone Church Choir would be broadcast simultaneously over the two stations, KMBC and KFRM.

The whole question was discussed at length by those concerned. It was felt that the church could not meet competitively the type of program by which this Sunday afternoon half-hour was surrounded, without the expenditure of much more money than we deemed wise to spend at this time, and that this half-hour was not winning the good will for the church that it should. If we allowed the complete cancellation of this time, we would only be withdrawing farther from the radio picture, with no possibility of a future return. On the other hand, if we accepted—even on a temporary basis—an additional half-hour of time on KFRM in lieu of the Sunday afternoon time on KMBC, we would at least partially hold our position, with a possibility of resuming the relinquished time at some future date. We would also be utilizing the best possible radio material, the Stone Church Choir and organ, and we would be reaching an audience never before reached by programs on KMBC.

Effective with the first Sunday in January, therefore, the Stone Church Choir has been heard direct from the choir loft of the church at 11:00 a.m. each Sunday, not only on KMBC, but also on KFRM, which is under the control of KMBC, and which is programmed from the Pickwick Hotel studios in Kansas City. A short sermon by Elder Dan Sorden from the studio completes the program.

KFRM, which operates on 550 kilocycles and a power of 5,000 watts, daytime only, can be heard over practically all of Kansas, in Oklahoma, Eastern Colorado, the Texas panhandle, and southwestern Nebraska. We suggest that Saints having relatives or interested friends in this territory call their attention to this weekly broadcast at 11:00 a.m. each Sunday on KFRM, and that Saints in this territory make it a point to listen. It is believed these broadcasts may help prepare the way for further missionary work in this territory.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
Israel A. Smith.

Travelog

On January 10, Apostle D. T. Williams and I boarded the well-known "Rocket" for Des Moines. It was scheduled to deliver us at our destination at 1 p.m.; but schedules go in the discard when trains derail; a freight wreck just out of Kansas City delayed us. We reached the Iowa capital at 6 p.m.

However, we spent the time in pleasant chat. Doughty James Daugherty was aboard, and time does not drag with James about. He left us at Chariton.

We were met by Bishop Stephen Robinson and District President Ralph Wicker, and were soon in the midst of Des Moines District and branch officials, their counselors and wives. A number of people were at the church, where a fine repast was served by the women of the Des Moines Branch. Speeches were made by Brother Williams and myself; Bishop Robinson gave a report of the financial progress of the district, which showed a gain in receipts of more than $3,000 over 1946.

Brother Williams went to the Wicker home, and I was taken to Brother Robinson's for the night. Stephen and I are of the same profession, and I always enjoy the fine hospitality of the Robinson home. The children are rapidly growing up, the two older girls being in Graceland.

Sunday, January 11, was Des Moines District "Financial Day," and it was well filled with activity. Brother Williams was in charge of an early prayer service, and Brother Robinson took charge of the 11 o'clock service, when I addressed the Saints. The choir provided appropriate music under the able leadership of Wilbur Chandler.

During this meeting, a collection of inventories was made, the Saints of the district responding nobly to the call from their officials.

Bishop Henry L. Livingston had joined us in the morning, and at 2:30 p.m., he addressed the Saints. Brother Myron Wood, bishop's counselor, was in charge. Having responded to the need of the day, I started home at 5 p.m., leaving Brother Williams to speak at an evening meeting with Pastor Herbert Scott in charge. Brother Scott, lately transferred from Denver, has taken over the work left by Brother Frank Fry and is carrying on "in stride."

Iowa is a great state in many ways, and notably in the quality of its citizenry.

Israel A. Smith.

Calls to Service

No higher honor can come to a man than a call to serve his fellow man. When a call to civic duty comes from those who constitute the judiciary of a political subdivision of the state, it should receive our attention.

Several months ago, a movement was begun in Jackson County, Missouri, to secure a better form of government for the county. The new Missouri Constitution, which was approved in 1945 and became effective in 1946, has a provision whereby counties of this size can establish their own form of government. The writer, who served as a delegate in the Constitutional Convention of 1943-1944, identified himself with a small group in making the initial proposal. His colleague in the convention from the fifth senatorial district, General E. M. Stayton, also

(Continued on page 22.)

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

February 21, 1948

Number 8

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

Musings of a Presiding Bishop

A train of thoughts, and a load of problems

By G. L. DeLapp

I HAD TO HURRY to catch the train that morning, stopping at the office on my way to the station to check up on one or two things before leaving. Sometimes it is a relief to leave the office to take one of the trips frequently demanding my attention; but more often such trips only add to the problems that are already engaging attention and occupying desk space.

My colleagues were both away—Bishop Johnson in Australia, Bishop Livingston in Michigan. It had required continuous effort to keep all desks clear, and this had been done, but clear only of current correspondence; the greater problems were being left untouched. I was tired, and I knew that when I returned the desks would be piled high with work again.

The Rock Island from Kansas City to Minneapolis afforded one of those occasions so infrequent since the beginning of the war, when I could find a double seat unoccupied. As I was not particularly interested in talking with anyone, I was glad to relax comfortably in that seat and spend the time with my own thoughts.

IT WAS ALMOST twenty years since I had left Minneapolis to go into church work, and now I was headed toward my old home; not that I hadn't been back several times during the interval, but this was, after all, a milestone; and naturally my mind passed over the many things that had transpired. I remembered the enthusiasm with which I had faced the opportunity for participation in the work of the church—the assurance which had been given that my stay in Lamoni Stake (to which I had been assigned as Bishop) would be reasonably permanent. I recalled the establishment of the home, the receptiveness of the people in Lamoni and the stake to me, my wife and baby (our first daughter was just five weeks old then), the making of new friends, the enjoyment I had in my ministry and in the organization of some of the economic phases of the work of the bishopric. All of this seemed many, many years away.

My mind turned to the move to Independence and my work in the Presiding Bishopric, the problems faced in this new responsibility—the response made by the membership of the church as a whole to the solution of those problems—and I could not help thinking of the relationship of all to the attainment of the objectives of the church. Were those objectives toward which we had worked some twenty years ago any closer to our view than they were at that time? Were we making progress? Is Zion any more of a reality?

A LECTURE ON Russia heard just a few days before, relating to the great events which are transpiring in our present-day world, came to mind. I remembered that the speaker had said, in approximately these words: "For those who read history and have the ability to interpret from that which has happened, the trends show evidence of divine guidance in pointing men to a great destiny, the building of a better world." These are probably not his exact words, but the thought he expressed made me think at the time he uttered them of the statement made by Moroni in the Book of Mormon, "The eternal purposes of the Lord shall roll on until all of his promises shall be fulfilled."

Compared with the eternal purposes of God, a period of twenty years seems quite insignificant, and one's personal problems likewise are of little moment—a good thought when one gets to feeling sorry for himself—when the problems of life and the problems of the church loom up in such magnitude as to bring a feeling of hopelessness. Somehow I felt that way as I looked back over the past, with seemingly so little accomplished in comparison with the tremendous problems facing us. I kept thinking of these problems as I looked out the window and saw coming into view as the train sped along, farm after farm, some with good improvements, others not so good; some where erosion had carved great gullies into the sides of the hills, where the topsoil had worn thin.

THIS REMINDED ME of our own agricultural program. It reminded me of the commandment given to the church to purchase land, to colonize our people, to establish the kingdom. Those words sound good as one repeats them to himself, but the problems of land use and the management of land require trained personnel and long-time programming. The development of related projects necessary for the support of any community that might be established calls for canning factories, mills, packing plants—organization and management—the need for more land—farmers willing to adopt methods to handle the soil scientifically—animal husbandry. Some little progress has been made, but just when progress seems to be realized, the problems of conflicting personalities and human relationships are added to the problems of capital and management.

It is good to have a little time to think. I have found that there is an art of thinking; likewise there is an art of sleeping. Some people seem to have the latter art; they can relax and in a short period of time feel fresh and ready to go again. It must be a wonderful gift. The art of thinking is even more important. That fundamentally is the purpose of education—to train one to think. It would have been profitable to spend years in college. I would like to have spent more time at Graceland. . . .

GRACELAND! That brings up a problem. It needs a new dormitory, among many other things. Building costs are terrific. To build or not to build, that is the question. Then there is the problem of personnel and faculty pensions, equitable adjustments in allowances, and a host of related problems—which reminds me, I suggested to the president of the college that he have a committee from the faculty study the pension problem; I wonder what progress has been made.

The problem of building also brings up the question of completion of the Sanitarium. Building costs are out of reason, practically prohibitive, except where the need is imperative. The operating rooms need to be moved from the first floor up to the fifth floor to provide more space for administrative needs. If and when we complete the seventh floor, we must provide storage space and workrooms. Lots of problems in connection with the hospital—personnel—social security.

Many of our branches are developing building projects . . . the $300,000 appropriated is not adequate . . . too many branches seem to want blank checks. They are unable to foresee terrific costs of building, or possibility of decline in income. This presents problems of considerable magnitude. However, one can't help feeling sympathetic to their needs . . . many branches are without adequate facilities . . . but we should apportion funds for the best interests of all, if we can.

THE AUDITORIUM also needs to be completed. Present building conditions indicate we have to think in terms of hundreds of thousands of dollars. We should approach the task to get more utility. Acoustical treatment is necessary; however, we still have the job of making it weatherproof.

The maintenance costs of the Auditorium have been mounting, too. Such a large building requires constant supervision. I had hoped we could develop a crew which could do much of the work, so that we would have someone working at it constantly. This has been true only in part. Well, it needs further consideration. Our office personnel has also increased. Which reminds me that we have been hopeful of working out some pension plan. The same thing applies to the Herald Publishing House employees—Social Security helps some. If we only had more time to give to such problems, more trained personnel. . . .

WE NEED TO define more explicitly the principles of stewardship. Some people wonder why we have not solved the problem of inheritances. This problem needs to be attacked . . . but why don't more people see the relationship between competency in vocation or profession to stewardship and inheritances?

That brings up the question of "Elders' Expenses" and "Family Allowances" . . . the problem of equity . . . treating everyone with equity is a problem. I wish I were a Solomon. It's a great responsibility to be accountable for just dealings with people in all the various ramifications of bishopric work.

That question of accountability! Is justice based upon equal distribution of temporal benefits without proper accountability for services rendered? Are we making progress in this study? It seems that it is basic to the establishment of Zion.

ZION BRINGS up the question of the Gathering. Some progress is being made in counseling and locating people, but the problem of community building still is largely unsolved. Can it be accomplished without greater numerical strength? without greater participation on the part of our members? without greater financial support? Such a small percentage of members renders an annual accounting. If I did not know our people, I would think this evidenced a lack of interest, but they are good people, for the most part, and want to comply with the law. We probably are pretty weak in contacting and instructing them.

That makes me think of the work of the Aaronic priesthood. If the Aaronic priesthood were properly instructed and functioning as teachers and in home visiting, our people would understand the law. . . .

Well, there are many things that need to be done. I wish I could tell of all the things I thought about on that trip to Minneapolis, but I'm still thinking.

It is a good thing that we think in terms of the eternal purposes of God. We need to make our contribution, to do what we can, and work with all our might, but remember, "The eternal purposes of the Lord shall roll on until all his promises shall be fulfilled."

1948—A Year For Action

By Lloyd E. Cleveland

ONE WHO HAS A mental "finger" on the pulse of the church today cannot help noting increased strength in the heartbeat and a quickening of the rhythm as the weeks and months go by. Changes are occurring; many of them small, no doubt, but changes which are heartening to those who have tugged valiantly at their loads through the years while the towers of Zion glittered on the distant horizon. Little things—an improved quarterly, more down-to-earth articles in the Herald, a more optimistic approach to many of our problems; some things not so little, such as an increased missionary program and an accelerated yet careful gathering movement. These are as the first few drops which herald the refreshing rain.

The towers of Zion begin to show with increasing clarity, and we say to ourselves that it is time we had the theory well enough in mind and heart to begin our actual approach to the task of deploying our forces to best advantage in all the phases of our movement. We tire suddenly of prophets of gloom as we remember the scriptural admonition, "Fear not, little flock," and as our faith is bolstered by seeing hundreds of capable Zion-minded people as we journey hither and yon. We realize with soberness, of course, that as a church we have not yet learned to channel all this willing talent into the most productive courses so that all our human strength is linked to the Divine in a mighty crusade for kingdom-building.

We hear with consternation that many of our number are not as yet converted to all phases of keeping the law, and we are often made sad as we see the lack of understanding and wisdom on the part of many who bear the name Saint. This, despite our knowledge that Jesus said on one occasion the kingdom was like a net cast into the sea. We would win all men, and especially all Saints, to a thoroughgoing application of the principles of Zion living.

ZION WILL BE BUILT. Of that we are confident. But by whom and when? We children of the Atomic Age, who dwell in the shadow of destruction, feel these questions welling up inside us, and we ask ourselves, "Is the activity of this day contributing in any measureable quantity to a program of building Zion today? Or are we lulling ourselves into a semi-hypnotic state of false assurance with an endless round of meetings and talkings?" Sometimes it may hurt our pride, our ego, or our complacent belief in our own superiority to admit our inadequacy, and in a new attitude of humility and contriteness ask God for a portion of his great wisdom to help us set ourselves once more on the upward path. But hurt or not, such an admittance may be necessary—not once, but many times as we tread the forward path.

There is a story of a man of "action" who jumped upon his horse and galloped madly off in all directions. My remembrance of the story may be somewhat inaccurate, but it presents a vivid picture of what we humans sometimes attempt to do. The type of action which we plan in 1948 should be just that—carefully planned. Then we should follow the plan unhesitatingly. Fear never won a battle. Our individual and collective courage will triumph over seemingly insurmountable obstacles if we will but believe and do some intelligent work.

In my perhaps inadequate concept, building Zion is not meant to be an endless chain of glory hallelujah and sweet roses. We may be pricked on a thorn now and then. Some very earthy earth must be displaced if we lay our foundation below the "frost level." All the faith in the church will not set the storehouse in motion nor establish one stewardship without some "blood, sweat, and tears."

WE JUST CAN'T afford to shrug our shoulders and quote "the love of many shall wax cold" as we see thousands who are starving for the wonderful sustenance of Zion turn away in bitter disappointment because we have failed to move out—with what knowledge we do have and the faith that God will help—and do something concrete about our plan.

What is something concrete? Well, good brother or sister, have you filed your inventory and paid your tithing? Have you kept pace with the church's program for religious education? Have you dedicated and consecrated all your talent and possessions to the Master's cause? Have you done something about our evangelistic program for winning new souls? If your answer is "yes," and if there are enough "yes" answers, then nothing can stop us. I'm sure the general officers of the church, the Bishopric in particular, have some concrete suggestions for Saints of your caliber.

The year, 1948, must be one of planned, intelligent action on the part of every sincere Latter Day Saint. World events are pushing us. Why wait to be pushed? Let us lead out in action in 1948!

The Silent Week

A Between You and Me Feature from the "Lamoni Chronicle" by the Editor,

KATHRYN C. METZ

WHAT this weary world needs is a chance to practice the art of silence. In a land where days are set aside for observing this and that, it might be well to add one more, a day—yes, even a week of silence. A period when no speeches would be made, no politicians saying anything, no remarks from the Communists, a period during which no newspapers would be published and no radio programs heard. And, maybe not even a sermon preached.

Don't laugh—I'm serious. One of our greatest troubles is that we talk too much. We raise such a din that even God cannot get a word in edgewise. Commentators shriek from the radio, Stalin shouts from the headlines, crime reports color the atmosphere, and idle conversation fills every nook and crevice of our minds.

People need to get away from the rush of life, to relax in a quiet place. Even Jesus found it necessary at intervals to remove himself from the clatter of the world and . . . "rest awhile." And David once advised . . . "commune with our own heart . . . and be still." Then, there is the stirring command, "Be still, and know that I am God."

Benjamin Franklin, who lived in a comparatively quiet day, dryly remarked upon one occasion, "None preaches better than the ant, and she says nothing."

Silence has its values in other ways than providing us a chance to give ourselves opportunity to think. Silence covers up our folly, keeps secrets, avoids disputes, and prevents hurt feelings. In short, it conceals many imperfections and shortcomings, if we but realized it.

Yes, we make too much noise. We talk too much. The sun makes no noise; you cannot hear spring arrive; the mechanism that turns the earth on its axis cannot be heard, and even the birds are silent except when they sing. Only man is noisy. He talks, talks, talks, and to no avail because ideas do not find birth in talk . . . only in thought. As Carlyle puts it, "In silence, great things fashion themselves."

Emerson was another advocate of silence and peace. "Let us be silent that we may hear the whispers of the gods," he said. And Zeno, who had his choice of all virtues, selected silence, "for by it," he said, "I hear other men's imperfections and conceal my own."

Yes, a period of silence, when we could empty our minds of rag-bag thought and rearrange our notions to make room for fresh, new ideas, would be a boon to mankind.

Let's see. We probably won't have room for another "week" in February. Already the calendar says we have, (1) Boy Scout Week, (2) National Heart Week, (3) National Drama Week, (4) National Cherry Week, (5) National Sew and Save Week, (6) Brotherhood Week, and Leap Year Day.

Well, maybe next month.

A Handshake By Air

THE THRILL OF A Latter Day Saint handshake in far-off and unexpected places cannot be described, but those who have had the experience know how it grips the heart. Meeting an isolated Latter Day Saint by means of amateur radio can give the same thrill.

The operator of amateur radio station WOFTD made a "general call" to all amateurs, and was about to give up when out of the static and interference came a weak reply. It was another amateur radio station on the eastern coast, located in Dover, New Hampshire, calling. The listening operator thought, "No use in trying to reply to this fellow, he's too weak—too covered with interference from other amateur radio stations. It would only end in an incomplete conversation." Despite this thought, WOFTD called the station in Dover. The reply from this station, W1ENY in Dover, was almost completely covered. Only scattered words came through the many amateur signals around him. One word in particular, however, came through, and for some reason took on real meaning. The word was "headquarters."

Though he had been able to hear only a few words of the total message, Clarence (Bud) Resch, Jr., operator of WOFTD, was almost certain that the word "headquarters" had something to do with the church and so expressed himself to the other operator in Dover. Then the voice of Carl Frost, W1ENY came through clear and distinct for the reply. Bud's hunch had been right; the word "headquarters" had referred to the headquarters of the church, and Frost's voice was filled with emotion as he told how privileged he felt at being able to talk to the "center place." He was deeply grateful for this "privilege," as he expressed it, and more than a little surprised that out of a jumble of sounds and static two Latter Day Saints had been able to tune their instruments together and feel that heart-warming thrill of fraternity speeding along the airways with the signals.

Right there the vista opened. Why not a net, or club, of R. L. D. S. amateurs? It had been talked of before. Here was proof of the feasibility of such a project. What could be nicer than a "handshake by air" between brothers and sisters of the church? Conversations would be far above and beyond those normally experienced in the realm of amateur radio. There are thousands and thousands of amateur stations and amateur operators in the United States, its possessions, and foreign countries. Why not a world-wide amateur radio net made up of church amateurs? Church interested amateurs, too! When this idea was presented to Frost, he was all for it and expressed his desire to be a part of such an organization.

For four consecutive days, contacts were scheduled and maintained between Carl and Bud. Plans for the get-together of Latter Day Saint amateur radio operators developed rapidly. "Get-together," that is, by way of radio communication.

Would you be interested in joining a network of radio amateurs composed of church members and those interested in the church? Or do you know an amateur who might be interested? Then please show this article to such amateurs, and write to Evan Fry, Church Radio Director, in care of the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, giving your name, address, and call letters—or those of your interested friend. A form will be sent you to fill out and return, which will give the church a complete picture of your interest, your equipment, and your standing, after which plans can be made for some sort of organization and activity, and perhaps some meetings at the next General Conference.

The First Battalion

By Joseph Richard Meloan

“IF I COULD ONLY be a missionary, I would do a great work for God!” Have you heard this said before? No doubt most of us lay members have at least thought it. But, for some reason, we’re not missionaries. Perhaps God has a different work for us to do.

Did it ever occur to you that you contact many people no missionary will ever meet? Haven’t you known some really good person who doesn’t attend your church—or any church at all?

Two thoughts should have come to your mind at this point. First: “He’s a good guy, why can’t I approach him on religion? How do I know for sure he never thinks of God and a way of life? Perhaps he has problems right now that require divine assistance and would welcome a discussion of them but believes much the same about me as I do him.”

The second point concerns approach. Obviously we must give this real consideration. For help, we may well go to the principles of business and the field of selling, for the fundamental is the same.

MANY THINGS FAIL to sell because of the wrong approach. I might make several illustrations . . . one of the Latter Day Saint who made the right approach. Traveling on the train one day, he found that his companion was a Catholic. Anxious to further the spreading of the gospel, he considered how to approach this person of so dissimilar a belief. The impulsive way was wrong, so he did not start a violent argument laden with accusations or read the riot act out of Ku Klux Klan attack literature. Instead, he began comparing the ways in which the two churches were alike. . . . “You believe in this . . . so do we.” A friendly discussion ensued with the Catholic gaining much knowledge of our church and carrying away something to think about which may bear fruit later.

Our second illustration has to do with the now familiar Jehovah Witnesses standing on the street corners, holding their magazines in their hands. (And I much admire their courage and sincere effort. Representatives of other churches might well be shamed for the lack of theirs.) I’ve watched these workers in their attempt to intercept theater crowds on the streets of Dallas, and while I see here the eternal picture of pleasure-loving masses brushing by the words of Christ as they have done through the ages, yet here is an example of the wrong approach. Ask any salesman. But before letting this go, please note that they have obeyed the first vital principal of selling . . . they have gone directly to where the prospects are.

Our radio missionary, Evan Fry, once stated in a broadcast that while it may be sufficient to witness the gospel to the people of the nations, before being disgusted with their nonacceptance and shaking the dust from our feet, we must be very certain we have witnessed the gospel to each person in the way he could understand it and have a fair chance to accept it!

NOW FOR OUR approach. Any salesman knows that it’s really “tough” to approach a prospect “cold” or make a “cold canvass.” Even in direct selling . . . house to house . . . the Fuller brush man greets you cheerily and offers you a free brush as a gift. While you are happily responding to such generosity, he sticks his foot in the door. Once inside he makes a “flash” . . . he opens his case and magically spreads a wonderful lot of brushes over your carpet. By now you are not only impressed but heavily involved. You can’t just ask the man to pick all that stuff up right away—and besides, it’s more interesting than doing the dishes. The important thing is that he is no longer the stranger at the door. So he gets to tell his story, and maybe you order. If you don’t . . . he still has done a lot of advertising for the company . . . and you may order later. Now get this point: the salesman probably asked you for the names of five or more neighbors who might be interested, may have even promised you something if they were, and you probably obliged.

Now we have learned a cardinal principal of selling applied to missionary work. Don’t meet your prospect “cold” . . . if you can help it. The illustration given shows that even in direct selling—which is the “coldest” form of doing business—the approach is carefully worked out. Even attention getters must be used with reason.

WE MUST APPROACH people in the the right way. Particularly with a thing as magnificent as the gospel of Jesus Christ. Let’s not cheapen it in our desire to tell the story. The author, as much as he believes that costly church buildings are too often “whited sepulchres” and the money might be better spent for functional buildings plus productive enterprises, must admit our beautiful cathedrals do inspire respect for God more than the thousands of churches springing up everywhere in America in habitations and surroundings that belie the dignity of the gospel.

It is self-evident that we cannot trip people on the street and tell them the gospel; the approach can be made in better and more resultful ways. Nor would I have you lose the thought first expressed in this article . . . that no matter who you are in the church you can be an effective missionary. Here is how.

DID YOU EVER BUY a name list? Chances not. But if you have ever shown interest in buying anything by mail (or otherwise) you are in somebody's "name list" and your name is worth money and is being sold! If you are a "good" name, you and people like you are worth about seven dollars a thousand. Not much you think, but don't let that quotation fool you.

A large insurance company says, "that where there are people, there is money; and where there is money, you must find prospects." Let us simply say that where there are people, there are prospects for the word of God. Everyone would like to know where he is going, what will happen to him, what he can do about it. There probably has never been a period of greater insecurity coupled with a period in which our leaders of state knew less about what to do. Perhaps God has knowingly prepared a condition which is progressively intensifying in that direction to make it ideal for your missionary effort. Yes, the conditions are right. A principle of business is thus attained. The mood is established. "Thrust in your sickles and reap" for indeed the harvest is white.

NOW, WHERE ARE OUR prospects? Too many sermons and talks incite us to action, then leave us up in the air. That's where I hope to be different.

Let's go to work. If Mr. Jones next door is thinking of buying a washing machine or new electric range and you know it, any salesman in his right mind will pay you for his name as a "hot" prospect. And the same is true for other products. The brush man who wanted the name of five other ladies not only wanted prospects but an entree to get in their door . . . "Mrs. Brown referred me to you . . ." No cold approach now; it's on a friendship basis.

How do some companies get prospects? They believe in the "law of averages." If they mail out 5,000 circulars, they will get a certain response. This is one principle. For instance, a house-to-house salesman doing it the "hard way" (which is comparable to mass advertising not specifically directed to certain names) knows that as he goes down the street the more people who say, "No," the closer he is getting to one who will say "yes"—granting he has a good proposition. And you have a good proposition!

So let's talk to all people and, like a good salesman, watch for a chance to open the subject. If you are careful, you can do it skillfully. Right now it's as easy as talking about the weather to mention the election, then world conditions, and then, "What are your plans, Smith, for the future?" If you can't work the economics of Zion and then the spiritual qualities of a people necessary to its establishment into that conversation, you'd better stay home and listen to Bob Hope.

Remember "mood." A good approach will not be effective if we choose the wrong time. Like the young swain wooing his maid, you should instinctively know when is the proper time and condition to pop the question. Let's learn about people while we're learning. All of us are character analysts to a degree, if only by observation. Spend some time now and then in studying psychology or just standing around observing people.

PERHAPS WE DON'T know a prospect when we see one, and—being new to selling—we are unlike the door-to-door salesman; we get discouraged after the first few do not accept, and we are self-conscious about approaching people. The cure for the first is a knowledge of the law of averages. The second is to free yourself from the handicap of all inhibited people by becoming so interested in others and the result you hope to achieve that you "lose your self" in the cause. You are a soldier of Christ, commissioned to attain an objective, in the first battalion, attacking the unknown.

If this gives you the driving power—and here we are not concerned with the power of money, but the power of God—then you are getting the missionary spirit. Once, while soliciting children to be photographed, I was told by a fellow worker who noticed a small child playing in a yard, "Look Joe, there's a five dollar bill out in that yard." So I lost my hesitation about knocking on the door, because I could plainly see a five dollar bill—and I needed a five dollar bill! As a result of this mercenary but plain motive, the mother probably still treasures the portrait I took which otherwise might never have been taken. Develop motives that you can see and understand—and the motives for telling the gospel are the best in the world.

LEST YOU BECOME discouraged please note that a company is happy if it receives six per cent replies on a mailing of 1,000 circulars. Have you spoken to a thousand people about the gospel?

Perhaps you don't have to. Perhaps by now you have some idea of how valuable a prospect is to a business. You may even have thought of dozens of people you know who, in the light of the above, are very good prospects. You may even guiltily know some very "hot" prospects you let get away. You can see that six people who have shown any interest whatsoever are worth a hundred who have not thus far shown evidence. Are you working on these six? Are you "following them up" as a company would do . . . with a number of calls or subsequent mailings? Is your presentation as good as possible?

Remember this illustration: A man opens a business on a busy boulevard. He has a good product or service to offer and he puts up a sign. Thousands of people go by. Few if any come in perhaps for months. He may be discouraged—but if he knows business, he will hold on, because the principle of “repetition” in advertising is taking place. Many people are reading that sign. Some, more than he thinks, are intending to stop and buy some day. Like the drip, drip, drip of the water that wears away the stone (in this case, sales resistance) the sign is working, but if he is not courageous, he will give up and close his business just when it would have become a success.

SO PUT UP YOUR SIGN you in action as a Latter Day Saint! Keep talking and doing. This kind of repetition will not only impress prospects—it will do something wonderful for you.

Summarizing, let's understand these points: Different from most products, the gospel has everyone for a prospect; but some are more ready to receive it than others. Therefore, while spreading the word generally, let's not fail to concentrate on our best prospects and make every effort to close the sale. Don't ever let a really interested person drift away. In sales work, this is criminal. For you it is sinful. Compile your own name list. These names are profitable to God. Actually write down the name and address of every person you see or meet that you think might be at all interested. You may have two lists—one a general list, and the other a real prospect list. It wouldn't hurt to card file and classify these as a salesman does.

And here is your challenge to the unknown. You will soon have a list of people, some of whom are undoubtedly souls God particularly wants for some purpose—and I believe if you are prayerful, you will have divine guidance here. I know a woman in Dallas who, in her selling days, constantly prayed that she would be directed to the right people. Her prayers were answered—often in miraculous ways—and she was able to finance her son's college education and pay her own expenses. This is not only an example of selling but the way anyone who believes in God should live.

YOUR NAME LIST need not be confined only to those people you see or meet. It should include anybody you would like to see share the virtues and rewards of this gospel with you. If you like Bing Crosby, Lew Ayres, Greer Garson, or Ingrid Bergman whose characterizations or life may show a keen understanding of things inseparable from the gospel, write them a letter and send them some information. Remember Bing could sing “Consecration” as well as he does “Silent Night,” and Henry Fonda could do an effective job of playing “Oliver Cowdery.”

And don't forget the leading men of the world. When President Truman took office in those perilous days (and they are no less so now), I wrote him a letter telling him that some of us Latter Day Saints in his home town were praying for him and I got a sincere reply. Many columnists, statesmen, and leaders have never heard of our church or our world program. Let's don't keep it a secret. They are in an excellent position to tell others. Don't assume someone else will do the job or that these people are difficult to reach. They are more likely to give you consideration than your neighbor.

INVEST A FEW DOLLARS in your campaign for God. Buy some tracts or copies of the Herald and mail them to the prospects on your list. For those you know, select some special piece of literature you think would interest them. Also note that some issues of the Herald contain missionary articles.

Make it a habit to continue accumulating names and following them up as your time and pocketbook afford. You will be paving the way for “the approach,” if not by you, by the church or some other member.

It is also true that many people are better reached in this impersonal manner than if you went to them directly. It prepares the path in a tested way. The practices of business may well be used here. On a certain day, a post card tells your prospect, “A representative of our church will call on you; we hope you will be in.” Organized campaigns may be worked out using maps of the city (this is done by several churches) put colored pins in the map where your prospects are located. Move these or change colors on them as they are developed. Co-operate with your local ministers. Don't forget the principle of repetition, but at the same time don't make yourself a nuisance use some common sense. Many radio stations for instance, won't accept a commercial announcement unless it is contracted for at least a month's daily use. They know it takes at least that long for it to show results.

REMEMBER THAT THE man who is definitely not interested today may be your best prospect tomorrow and don't forget that God is on your side and is working with people too. You are one of his direct agents doing part of the job. Some of these people are going to have to get an awful jolt to become your prospects, but many are getting it. If you don't believe it, read your daily papers. Depression, war, and personal tragedy put a lot of people on speaking terms with God or anyone who represents him.

We are “selling the Gospel,” a real product designed for the good of humanity. And just as the light, gas, oil, and coal companies furnish you the power to operate your modern conveniences which give you a more abundant life, so you can help to bring the power of God from heaven to his children on earth.

What Latter Day Saints Believe

ONCE READ a story about a man who was quite satisfied with his Bible and much opposed to any new translations thereof. He expressed his attitude in these words: "If the King James Bible was good enough for Peter, James, and Paul, it's good enough for me."

Are you satisfied with your Bible? That may seem to be a shocking question to some who regard the King James Bible as the very word of God, inspired and infallible in every word, letter, punctuation mark, and verse division. There are still a great many people who so regard the Bible—particularly the King James version—although with the growth of Bible scholarship and Bible criticism, and with the development of the many new and modernized versions, the general attitude towards the infallibility of the Bible has been changed.

The fact is (and all Bible students, if they know anything at all about the origin of our Bible, will have to admit it) that the King James version of the Bible, although one of the best versions we have in English, is still imperfect. All Bibles are. It is impossible that they should be otherwise, when you consider how the various translations have come to us. People have never been quite satisfied with the current translations of the Bible and have forever been trying to make a newer and better translation. A new one came off the press within this past year, and the end is not yet. If there were any translation of the Bible anywhere which was perfect and infallible today, it would still be necessary to revise it two or three hundred years from now, because, with the inevitable language changes which occur in that length of time, our posterity would not be able to read it intelligently.

LET US LOOK BRIEFLY at some of the reasons why perfection and infallibility in the Bible are absolutely impossible, even if you grant infallibility (which they never claimed for themselves) to the original authors.

In the first place, there is not in existence today a single "original" manuscript of the Bible—that is, one in the handwriting of the author. The oldest manuscripts for the Old Testament date from the second century A. D., and the oldest for the New Testament date from the third century A. D. The manuscripts we have are copies—no one knows how many times removed from the original, and we have absolutely no way of knowing exactly what the originals were.

Second, if you have ever studied language, you know that it is constantly undergoing change. Old words become obsolete and are dropped from current use. New words are added. Dozens of new words, for instance, were added to our dictionaries by the last war. Grammatical usage changes. Spelling changes. The King James translation was completed in 1611; Shakespeare died in 1616. If you were to try to read either Shakespeare or the King James Bible in the original, you would have considerable trouble over the obsolete words, quaint spellings, and archaic phraseology employed three centuries ago. As a matter of fact, the King James Bibles we read today are very much revised by the publishers. If they were not so modernized, we could not read them.

While we are considering this problem of language, we should note that the New Testament was not written in classical Greek, nor in the "Biblical Greek" which had been employed in the earliest translations of the Old Testament from the Hebrew, nor even in the literary Greek of New Testament times. The New Testament was written in the common Greek of everyday life and contains 900 words, or one sixth of its vocabulary, which are not found at all in classical Greek dictionaries. Can you see the problems of correctly translating these 900 words almost 2,000 years after they were written?

THE THIRD REASON why infallibility is impossible in any Biblical translation is the frequent impossibility of a literal translation. Meaning often has to be determined by the context, and then opinions of translators may differ. As an example, consider our simple three-letter English word bar. It can be either a noun or a verb. My dictionary lists twenty-one meanings for the noun, and eleven for the verb. Would that present any difficulty to a foreign scholar, three hundred years or more from now, trying to translate English into some other tongue?

Fourth, we might group together roughly what may be termed mechanical difficulties in getting a literally correct and infallible translation of the Bible. Until the fifth century A. D., Hebrew manuscripts were written without the accent marks which are used today, without vowels, and without divisions between the words. Since parchment was very expensive, no space was left between lines, and very small margins were permitted. If a copyist omitted something or made an error, there was no room in which to correct it, and since old manuscripts, when worn, were destroyed and only the new ones saved, an error might be perpetuated for generation after generation.

Fifth, because human and fallible men chose the books that make up our canon of Scripture, and because the Bible in its present form dates

About the Bible

BY EVAN A. FRY

from about the fifth century, there is no possible way of being sure that all the books of our Bible are of divine inspiration, or that all books which were divinely inspired have been included in today's versions.

The fifty-four scholars who worked for nearly three years on the King James translation of the Bible never claimed infallibility for their work, as so many people try to claim for them today. Their contemporaries were far from regarding them as infallible. Men rose up to ask, "Has the church been deceived in the past? If our Bible was true in the past, is it not true now? Why do we need to mend it or improve it?" They loudly decried the presumption of the translators in "tampering with the word of God." But these scholars, who made no claim to inspiration or infallibility in their work, worked faithfully at their appointed task; their purpose being to make the Bible so understandable that even the simplest could read it. They acknowledged their debt to previous translators and, although they translated from the Hebrew and Greek, made full use of other translations for comparison. If they had regarded their work as final and infallible, they would have allowed only one interpretation to any word or passage; but these translators made liberal use of marginal notes, suggesting several possible renderings or meanings for doubtful passages. The King James Bible was the work of scholars—not prophets; though scholars and prophets have this in common, that neither one ever claims to have the final and infallible word about anything.

NOW, PERHAPS, YOU are wondering what all this has to do with what Latter Day Saints believe about the Bible. We believe in the infallibility of such inspiration as there is contained in the Bible, but not all of the Bible is pure inspiration. Some of it is pagan poetry (for example, the Song of Solomon); some of it is history, pure and simple; some is genealogy, like the first chapter of Matthew; some of it is private opinion, as Paul admits in part of his comments on marriage. (See I Corinthians 7: 6.) The Bible is a library of books on many different subjects, not all of equal value; not all of equal inspiration. To believe in the infallibility of every word and comma and verse division is foolish and superstitious, for as we have already pointed out, there was no punctuation at all in the early Hebrew manuscripts, and the first English version to separate the Bible into chapters and verses was the Geneva Bible published in 1560.

Well over a hundred years ago, Joseph Smith formulated an epitome of faith which was published in a contemporary Chicago newspaper, and which—in substantially the same form—is used as a concise statement of Latter Day Saint belief to this day. His statement regarding our belief in the Bible is as follows:

We believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God, insofar as it is translated correctly. We believe that the canon of scripture is not full, but that God, by his Spirit, will continue to reveal his word to man until the end of time.

Notice particularly the wording of that statement. "We believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God, insofar as it is translated correctly." This expresses our belief in the inspiration of Scripture, but leaves the way open for corrections, revisions, and new translations. We are at the same time relieved of the onerous and impossible task of defending some of the all-too-obvious mistakes, misprints, and omissions which have occurred in the best of Bibles. We do not think it necessary to accept the mistakes and contradictions of the Bible along with the truths. In moral principles, in prescribing the means of salvation, in witnessing to Christ as the Saviour and Redeemer of mankind, the Bible is unsurpassed. The wonder is not that it has so many mistakes, but that it has so few, considering the difficulties through which it has gone to reach us. We believe that the Bible should be the standard by which we conduct our lives, exercise our faith, organize and function as a church. It should furnish the basis for our teaching, and any teaching that contradicts the plain teaching of Scripture is, to say the least, suspect.

LIKE MOST CHRISTIAN peoples, Latter Day Saints use the King James translation, especially for convenience when we are comparing notes with our friends of other denominations. You may have noted that all my references during this current series of sermons have been to the King James version, unless otherwise specified. But the King James version is not the last word. Sometimes it is profitable to compare the Revised, the American Revised, the Weymouth, Moffat, and Goodspeed translations in the hope of getting a broader basis for our understanding.

Latter Day Saints, however, are unique among all Christian denominations in their use of what is known as the Inspired Version. Note that we do not call it a translation. It is the work of Joseph Smith, begun in the summer of 1830 and completed on July 2, 1833. Because of unsettled conditions and persecutions, which made it necessary for the Saints to move several times in the ensuing years, the book was not published until 1867, long after his death. We do not claim infallibility even for the Inspired Version, but we do think it is a far superior version. Acting under the same spirit and inspiration which moved the original authors, Joseph Smith took the King James version and boldly (some people say presumptuously) corrected it. He was not a scholar; at the time he did the work, he did not know much of Greek or Hebrew. But a verse by verse comparison will show that many of his corrections have been anticipations of corrections made in the Revised and other versions published since his day. We have not time to mention even a few of the many hundreds of changes—some major and some minor. The great fundamental Bible truths remain unchanged in the Inspired Version. I do not think you would find anything in it that would do violence to your conscience or to your Christian faith, but you would be satisfied many times when the King James version had left you puzzled and dissatisfied. One author, not a member of our church, commented: "This much, at least, may be said of the changed readings found in the Bible of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints: its author had the courage deliberately to alter the text and make it say clearly what many Bible students succeed in getting by theological legerdemain."—P. M. Simms, The Bible From the Beginning, page 145.

LATTER DAY SAINTS do not believe that the Bible is a static or a finished book. We believe in an open canon of scripture. We believe that new translations of Scripture from time to time will be necessary to keep the language of the Bible up to date and to reveal new light on old truth as further information becomes available in the field of Bible research and scholarship. We do not believe that John's curse against those who add to the words of "this book" meant the Bible at all, because John never knew the Bible. Some scholars even assert that John's Gospel was written after his release from Patmos; and, if so, John violated his own injunction—if it applied to the Bible. Further, the New Testament canon was not ratified until the third council of Carthage in A. D. 397, long after John was dead. In the next two articles, we plan to dwell more at length on our belief in books of Scripture other than the Bible and on our belief in an open canon of scripture. We invite you to read them and, meanwhile, to prove all things and hold fast to that which is good.

Life of Christ Slides

by ELSIE ANNA WOOD

This set of 50 slides is generally considered to be the finest collection of pictures on the life of Christ available from one artist. Elsie Anna Wood has been a resident of the Holy Land for many years and has an intimate knowledge of the manners and customs of the people, which have changed little since the time of Christ. Each picture was painted with a deep understanding of the background against which the particular event took place, giving a feeling of authenticity seldom equaled in paintings by the Old Masters. It is this authentic quality that makes this set usable in so many teaching situations. Individual slides can be used in picture-centered worship services. Certain groups of a seasonal nature can be used for worship services at the appropriate time. Other groups or individual slides can be used to visualize church school lessons. The accompanying script was prepared by Eveline Burgess under the direction of the Advisory Committee on Visual Education.

- | | |
|---|---------|
| Set of 50 slides bound in glass with copy of script | $30.00 |
| Set of 50 slides in Eastman readymounts with script | $25.00 |

Visual Aids Department

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Independence, Missouri

The Cost of Alcohol

By VIDA M. FLETCHER

DURING THE PAST YEAR, Americans spent the appalling sum of nearly eight billion dollars for alcoholic beverages. Since the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, we have spent nearly fifty-two billions on them. But when we start counting the cost of this expensive nonessential, the initial cost is but the beginning of the total cost.

The drinker suffers in health, so his doctor and medical bills are increased. His efficiency is impaired, so his value as an employee is lowered. If this trend continues downward, his salary is lowered, or he may lose his job; then his family suffers want. He may commit crimes while under the influence of liquor. When this happens, he becomes a ward of the state and increases the tax burden which is necessary to maintain police and prisons. His family suffers not only financially, but spiritually and socially. If he drives a car after drinking, he becomes a safety hazard to all traffic on the highway, endangering his own and many other lives.

If these things happened only occasionally, there might be some reason for the unconcern manifested by many people. When at least thirty per cent of all accidents and crimes are caused either directly or indirectly by drinking—when divorces have gone up fifty to three hundred per cent because of drinking—when our hospitals are receiving a continual line of traffic victims—when our prisons, houses of correction, and insane asylums are filled to overflowing because of drink, the alert Christian surely will not be guilty of side-stepping the issue any longer.

THE INSTANCES LISTED are the usual peacetime occurrences; now let us consider the cost in war. Do you remember when our boys in Italy, Germany, and the Pacific Islands were crying, "Why don't you send us the supplies we need to fight with?" Those supplies were waiting while untold tons of beer and other liquors were carried to the men at the front over heavily-burdened emergency transportation lines. How many months shorter the war might have been, and how many thousands of young Americans might have come home sound and whole instead of lying in graves far from home or in hospital beds because the liquor traffic was more concerned with making drinkers of them than in winning the war!

A mother wrote recently, "They took my boy to war and sent me home a drunkard." How many thousands of men came home drunkards from this war because the traffic saw to it that Army camps were well supplied with drinks? Don't blame the fellows too much; they were supplied beer when they wanted water. The water was denied them in many cases, or else it was warm and unpalatable, while the beer was cold. If you know a young alcoholic who was in service, do not despise him for his weakness. Help him to get away from the associates who tempt him, and let him know he has friends who care. His downfall was deliberately planned by those who wanted to profit by his degradation.

It would be interesting if we could know just how much pressure the liquor and tobacco interests are bringing to bear on the universal military training bill now pending.

In wartime, how many military secrets escaped lips of men who had had just enough alcohol to impair their judgment? Self-control is lacking when alcohol gets into the brain. In conversation with a college girl recently, I was surprised to hear her say that she could see no reason for concern about the liquor traffic. Obviously, she had never been in contact with drinking people. Perhaps the young man she might have loved and married is dead or a patient in some hospital because a military secret was betrayed, or because the supplies he needed remained in a stock pile somewhere, while the transports were loaded with liquor.

WHAT ABOUT THE EFFECT of the liquor traffic on the world food supply? Someone has estimated that if the foods wasted in alcoholic beverages had been fed to the people who needed food, there would be no starvation. A radio speaker recently stated that there is such a small percentage of our American grain used for liquors, it really doesn't amount to much. We would ask, "Is five and one-quarter million tons of grains and grain products a small item—not to mention the thousands of tons of fruits, sugars, and syrups used in addition to the grains?"

Here is an example of the attitude of the liquor manufacturers taken from Bulletin 437 of the Small Brewers Committee, issued October 24, 1947: "At a recent meeting of the Luckman Committee in Washington, the Big Brewer from Missouri was asked, 'If the need were real in Europe, if people were starving, would you not cut your production to some extent?' The answer of the Big Brewer from Missouri was, 'Not by a barrel, not by a . . . barrel.'"

From the statistics furnished for the first four months of the present fiscal year (July 1, 1947, to November 1, 1947) we learn that the brewers used 191,455 tons of corn, wheat, and grain by-products compared to 92,000 tons in the same period of 1946. The distillers in the same period used 57,665 tons of grain products in 1947, compared to 84 tons in 1946. Note that this covers only four months time in each year. So much for the solicitude of the liquor manufacturers for the famine stricken!

WHAT IS ALCOHOL COSTING at the peace tables of the world? Many people have noted with concern the newspaper accounts of the great quantities of liquors that are shipped in for the use of the delegates. Is it any wonder that we hear much more of discord than we do of peace, when that which impairs good judgment, arouses evil passions, debases character, and fathers corrupt politics flows so freely among the world's diplomats? Under existing conditions, it is actually possible for a statesman to make commitments in diplomatic conferences without compensating guarantees, which could loose the world to free men for generations to come. All that has been accomplished by the death of millions of patriotic men can be lost in one hour of drinking around a conference table.

Who can count the cost of alcohol—what terms could show the value of the lost character, the broken homes, the destitute and delinquent children, the political corruption, the death toll on our highways? How long will we permit this exploitation of our citizens and our resources?

We are always complaining that our days are few, and acting as though there would be no end to them.—Seneca.

Feminine Influence in Foreign Lands

By GRACE L. KRAHL

AT THE WORLD CONVENTION of the Women's Christian Temperance Union held in Asbury Park, New Jersey, three foreign delegates — Mrs. Schlosz of South Africa, Mrs. Chitamber of India, and Mrs. Hsu of China—gave interesting addresses, from which we present the following excerpts.

Mrs. Chitamber: "The eyes of the world are on India as never before. The British government has been a blessing to her in many ways. But gradually the spirit of independence grew in India. Much credit for this awakening is due to the missionary enterprise. From thousands of mission schools, hospitals, dispensaries, and churches came the good tidings of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world. The Christian message makes us realize the value of every human soul. As a result, our legislators—many of whom have been under Christian influence—outlawed child marriage and untouchability. We gratefully acknowledge the strong stand of Mahatma Gandhi and other native leaders, both Mohammedan and Hindu, for total abstinence and prohibition.

"The government has prohibition for the entire country as its goal. In every province, plans are afoot to introduce prohibition with the view of bringing all India under prohibition within five years. Provinces are autonomous, so the plans differ somewhat. The W. C. T. U. of India published the truth about all habit-forming drugs, including alcohol, opium, and tobacco. The use of liquor has increased tremendously among boys and girls alike since the war. Our greatest problem in India rises from imported liquor, native intoxicants, hemp, drugs, and opium."

The year, 1947, was the sixtieth anniversary of the W. C. T. U. in India. "It has not been easy, but we thank God for his help and guidance, for we see, on all sides, signs of victory ahead."

Mrs. Schlosz: "South Africa is a country with many problems because of its mixed races and large native population. One of its greatest problems is the drink evil. After many requests, the department of education has now made scientific temperance teaching compulsory in the primary schools.

"Posters are displayed wherever possible, and a new contract has just been completed for the display of over eighty posters in railway stations throughout the Union and Rhodesia.

"Essay competitions report widespread entries of a high standard with many native students from the training colleges taking part. Women folk in South Africa are protesting against their municipalities establishing beer halls. The tot system is an evil the women are trying to eradicate. Each tot contains half a pint of liquor and three tots are given daily on many farms as part payment to the laborers.

"Annual grape festivals are held in March, during which time schools and institutions are supplied with grapes to use as food, at a greatly reduced price, to prevent them from going to the wineries.

"Other women's organizations cooperate with us so as to make this an outstanding event of the year. Members of the W. C. T. U. have formed committees to produce attractive fruit drinks to provide the liquid refreshments for weddings and other social functions. Along with teaching scientific truths about alcohol, they supply activities for the children. Annual singing competitions are held and trophies awarded to the winners."

Mrs. Hsu: "Alcoholism is not the same pressing problem in China as it is in many other countries; there are other phases of intemperance which deserve our whole-hearted attention. Some of these are gambling, especially Mah Jong, the wrong use of leisure time by non-productive women, and illiteracy.

"The use of opium has been greatly reduced by the consistent and effective suppressive measures undertaken by our central government. Many violaters have been executed by the government after failing to obey repeated warnings against the evil habit.

"Public opinion, especially among the young people, is one hundred per cent against the use of the drug. This has aided the government in its suppressive program.

"As an organization, the W. C. T. U. has been engaged in prevention more than reform. We try to prevent evil habits from being contracted before they have become firmly entrenched in the lives of the disillusioned, the insecure, and the disheartened. War-torn homes and homeless children offer another touching problem. Vocational guidance centers have been organized, and young women trained to staff them. Mrs. Herman Lin, executive secretary of the W. C. T. U. in China, has toiled unceasingly in behalf of these centers and the 'war-phonages'—so named by Madame Chang Kai-shek.

"To wipe out illiteracy and its three companion vices—poverty, lack of co-operation, and disease—is the aim of the women of this organization in China."

a home column feature

Food Reminiscences

WHEN I WAS A BOY on the farm, the menu was quite different from that of today. Most of the food was processed and cooked at home. Some of the dishes that I enjoyed most would not be available at all now. For example: fried young prairie chicken with potatoes and thick cream gravy was a delectable dish; also, baked wild goose with dressing. Our staple articles of diet were bread and butter, meat and potatoes, eggs, cottage cheese, and milk. There were not enough fresh vegetables and fresh fruits to balance the diet, especially in the wintertime. I was old enough so that I remember very vividly the first peach I ever tasted, the first cultivated grapes, and the first banana.

My mother was a good cook. The doughnuts that she took hot and crisp and brown from the kettle were something to remember. When she took two loaves of home-baked bread from the oven and broke them apart, there was a fragrance that filled the kitchen, and a slice of that bread, well-buttered with home-churned butter, was a treat. Baker's bread has never been satisfactory to me. I wonder if it would be more work to bake bread than it is to prepare some of the elaborate side dishes we have today. Another old-time product of the kitchen she called Indian bread. It was made of corn meal, and I presume sorghum or molasses, and was baked in an old iron kettle. It had a wonderful flavor and a wonderful fragrance, although it was almost necessary to resort to a hatchet to cut the crust. And, of course, we had a great variety of pies and cakes. The farm table, when there was company or at threshing time and Christmas, may well be said to have groaned beneath the weight of good food.

I BELIEVE the homekeepers of today do a wonderful job, many of them, and serve a better balanced diet than was available in those days; and probably they arrange it more tastefully and artistically. There are available the year around, fresh fruits and vegetables. I fear, however, that some of our foods, especially flour, baker's bread, and cereals have most of the life processed out of them before they ever reach the kitchen and dining room.

By ELBERT A. SMITH

My wife is an excellent cook. I never had occasion to remind her of the way my mother used to cook. She serves a number of my favorite dishes among them a meat pie of roasted beef, well ground and seasoned, covered with rice, and served with a thick tomato sauce. Then, in these days of shortages of fats and conservation of flour, she serves a pumpkin pie, made without crust and baked in a casserole. It goes very well, indeed, as I never cared too much for the pie crust anyway.

As I remember it, most of the women of those earlier days who were good cooks did not follow a cookbook; they had their own recipes. When you inquired how a certain dish was put together, they would say, "Oh, I just made it up out of my head." And it is true, too, that some of the cooks of that day who made things up out of their heads should have had better heads and some training in domestic science. I rather marvel today at the way girls, comparatively young, get married and surprise everyone with the job they do as homemakers and cooks, and the job they do in taking care of their babies and training them.

* * *

Sister Smith's Recipes—

RICE-MEAT CASSEROLE

Use leftover meat; grind and mix with gravy from meat. Season as desired. In a greased casserole, put a layer of cooked rice, a layer of meat gravy mixture, then a layer of rice and meat, being sure to have the gravy meat mixture on top. Bake in oven until thoroughly cooked. (About thirty to forty-five minutes.) Serve with tomato sauce, which is made like white sauce, substituting tomato for the milk.

* * *

PUMPKIN PIE WITHOUT CRUST

In co-operating with the government to save fat, one can bake pumpkin pie mixture in a pie tin or shallow casserole. Any pumpkin pie recipe may be used.

LET'S BE YOUNG

I WAS SITTING in the beauty parlor getting my hair combed. A young girl stood in the booth with us, talking to the operator. They were talking about some social gathering. The girl said, "We had a good time, but I wish that old man wouldn't insist upon running with our crowd."

"Can't you get rid of him?" the operator asked genially.

"No, we can't," the girl complained. "You wouldn't think an old man like that would want to go around with our crowd, would you?"

"How old is this old man?" There was a bit of suspicion in the operator's question.

Nothing but irritation registered with the high school miss. "He must be twenty-five," she said seriously.

In some of our branches where there are not many young people, it seems wise for those of the older group to play around with them, but don't fool yourselves! With the really young, you are the old folks.

Thinking of this girl and her definition of age, it has occurred to me that the only way to stay young is to progress into the advanced group as soon as it is time to go. In that way, you're always the young person. Isn't it worth trying?

Ella Lambkin.

LETTERS

The Law of the Lord Is Perfect

I believe that much of our trouble in the past—lack of unity in the priesthood, and consequently among the members—is a direct result of our not obeying God's law given to the church in 1830. For one example, we read in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 5: "And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom." In the eighth verse, we read: "And again, verily I say unto you, That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same." So it is very clear that the observance of the law of God, as revealed to the church by the spirit of revelation, is very important.

Now to a basic law, Doctrine and Covenants 122: 1, 2: "My servants have been harsh one with another; and some have not been sufficiently willing to hear those whose duty it is to teach the revelations which my church has already received. Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstandings and confusion among the members. The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time." This makes it clear to whom we should appeal when there is any lack of understanding by anyone belonging to the church.

Let us take a look at the Word of Wisdom, Doctrine and Covenants 86: 3: "And all Saints who will remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them." Wonderful promises, both physical and spiritual, if it means anything at all; and it certainly is far reaching to those who will put it to a test.

Some months after the Word of Wisdom was given, the Lord spoke again in Doctrine and Covenants 95: 4: "Behold, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with many who are in the church at Kirtland, for they do not forsake their sins, and their wicked ways, the pride of their hearts, and their covetousness, and all their detestable things, and observe the words of wisdom and eternal life which I have given unto them. Verily I say unto you, that I, the Lord, will chasten them and will do whatsoever I list, if they do not repent and observe all things whatsoever I have said unto them." This applies just as strongly to us today in the redemption of Zion, as in 1833. I am thankful that we have three generations of the First Presidency that agree in explaining the Word of Wisdom; I hope we shall never have one that will disagree. I wish now to quote from an article by one who was a member of the presidency when he expounded the Word of Wisdom. In the Herald for April 1, 1914, Elbert A. Smith stated: "We have been asked the following question: 'Does the term hot drinks appearing in the Word of Wisdom refer to tea and coffee?' There is no doubt in our mind that the term hot drinks was intended to include tea and coffee. True, the words tea and coffee do not appear, yet they are covered by the general term. In a similar way, whisky and brandy are not especially named, yet their use is discouraged under the clause which refers to strong drinks."

In a sermon given at Nauvoo in May, 1842, Hyrum Smith, who at that time was Presiding Patriarch, said, "And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly; there are many who wonder what this can mean; whether it refers to tea and coffee or not. I say it does refer to tea and coffee."—Times and Seasons, Volume 3, page 800. Hyrum Smith was in an excellent position to know the understanding that the church had of the meaning of this revelation at the time when it was given. So far as we know, his interpretation was never challenged by the early church or by any quorum or leader of the church. It was consistent with the action of the church in Missouri in discouraging the sale of tea and coffee in the community. The following is from the minutes of a general assembly of the church, November 7, 1837: "The congregation, after a few remarks from Sidney Rigdon, unanimously voted not to support stores and shops selling spirituous liquors, tea, coffee and tobacco" (Church History, Volume 2, page 120). President Joseph Smith, who was "to teach those revelations which you have received," is on record as follows: "Tea and coffee are not named in the word, but they are included in the sentence, 'Hot drinks are not for the body or belly.'" (Saints' Herald, Volume 49, page 1170).

So far as we are aware, no quorum or leading church officer in the Reorganization has ever challenged this decision of President Joseph Smith. While he is not presented as an infallible authority—for we know of none such among the membership—he is by virtue of his office, calling, experience, and personal qualifications as good an authority as we know on such a matter of interpretation.

One more. There lived for several years, at the home of Elder W. A. McDowell, a good sister of the church known as "Auntie Hicks." She was fifteen years old at the time the Word of Wisdom was given. When Joseph was asked to explain the meaning of "hot drinks," she said she heard him say: "Brethren, what are we drinking for hot drinks?" and they replied, "Tea and coffee." He answered, "That is what it means."

The only reason I know of why anyone would try to teach the Word of Wisdom to mean otherwise is because he likes to drink what God has said we should not.

JASPER O. DUTTON.
Galva, Illinois

Faith of Our Fathers

In his story of early ministerial experiences published in the Autumn Leaves many years ago, Elder Alexander Hale Smith tells of his journey to the western mission. Quoting from his writings, "I had gone twice before on short missions, but now I was required to go a long way from home, seventeen hundred—nearly two thousand miles." This was in the year 1866; there were no fast streamliners or planes as today, and the trip meant a long, hazardous journey of three months by horse and wagon. He started out without purse or scrip and only one coat, according to the belief at that time, leaving loved ones behind to face the uncertain dangers of the hills and plains. It took great faith, a faith entirely reliant upon a God who would provide.

Many were the hardships of the missionaries of the early Reorganized Church. Some laid down their lives in far-off lands, giving all to the furtherance of the gospel story. To these men we owe the privilege of enjoying such a wonderful heritage.

When my father, Elder John Kaler, a member of the first quorum of seventy, arrived in Australia, he faced similar conditions as did the early pioneers, Brethren Rodger and Wandell—vast distances to be covered in a strange land. There were then some railroads; but the Australian membership was small, and money for transportation was not always available. There was work to be done, the gospel message to be preached, isolated Saints and branches to be ministered to. Father many times made his journey on foot, sleeping at night on the large circular barks that fell from the trees of the tropical forests, lulled to sleep by the cries of the native cockatoo. Privation and hunger? Yes, but no complaint; he was happy to be about his Father's business.

Such are the oft-told stories of the pioneer missionaries, who suffered severe persecutions even as late as the early 1900's, when mobs threw stones and rotten eggs and would have done great bodily harm if the protecting hand of God had not intervened. With strong, abiding faith in the Restored Gospel, they continued to work for God's kingdom here on earth.

Today, in foreign fields, we find young missionaries and their families inspired by the same zeal and hope of Zion. This new type of pioneering has just as great dangers, persecutions, and privations, as they go out to preach unto the world the hope of peace, good will to mankind.

"Faith of our Fathers," let us arise—we who are behind the battle lines, and find in loyal, active service the fulfillment of the dreams and sacrifices of our fathers.

ELMER A. KALER, SR.

1614 Hedges Avenue
Independence, Missouri

In Favor of Co-operatives

I enjoyed the item in a recent Herald about the co-operative lumber company being organized in Lamoni. There are many co-operatives here in northeastern Montana. Most of them began when people had very little money—during the depression and drought years. With no crops and no income to buy feed for their livestock, the farmers were almost destitute. However, they were quick to grasp the idea of buying essentials through a co-operative system. Since everyone was hard up and had to save every penny possible, these co-operatives grew rapidly. Two things were accomplished: first, all items were placed in the hands of the consumers at a price that was no higher than the prevailing prices charged for similar items sold in other places. At the end of the fiscal year, there was a refund paid to all the patrons based on the amount of business each had done. This has amounted to as much as thirteen per cent in our oil station, which handles gasoline, oil, tires, and light hardware. Second, it built up competition to the extent that many hard-to-get items were available at a price much lower than ever before. This means the patron receives more for his money.

I consider a co-operative a service, not a money-making scheme. I believe there should be many such business places started in and around the center place. People who understand the mechanics of co-operative buying and selling have already learned a lot about our Zionian plan, even though they know nothing about the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. The co-operative business is paving the way for many people so that when the time comes, they will understand the principles of living and working together.

AUGUST J. HENTZ.

Hinsdale, Montana

An Interesting Discovery

In a book on Russia, I recently discovered a map with the name, Maya River Landing. West of that was a city called Maya.

Also, a little south of the center were the "brown people." Josephus, the Jewish historian, says, "Shem, who had the priesthood, was a brown man; Japhet, the red man; Ham, the black man."

In A. B. Phillips' book, Helps to Bible Study (page 284), Shem is called the brown man.

They also have their "runners," who run only three miles, while the Book of Mormon runners ran six miles.

One of our elders, a well-read man, said when the ten tribes were dispersed, some of them went to Russia.

Perhaps, then, in spite of the adverse criticism of the Russians, no doubt some of it deserved, they may "have something up their sleeve."

KATHERINE GOODWIN.

Lee's Summit, Missouri

Appreciates Being Remembered

I wish to thank everyone who remembered me in prayer during my recent illness. I am grateful, too, for the many cards and letters I received. I shall be happy to continue hearing from my friends in the church.

HUGHIE C. JOHNSON.

615 Poplar Street
Murray, Kentucky

Editorial

(Continued from page 3.)

other things are done for the world's need. True, the check is not all. Back of it is work and saving, often thrift and sacrifice.

The golden reed has a limited range of movement and usefulness. In the hands of a good man, it can bring great benefits. In the hands of a bad or selfish man, it can do great harm. In the hands of a good people, it can lay the foundations of the kingdom of God.

L. J. L.

For Missions Abroad Fund

Total reported to Presiding Bishop on December 31, 1947—$3,311.97.

Goal

$25,000.00

by October 1, 1948

$20,000.00

by April 11-18, 1948
Restoration Festival

$3,311.97

by December 31, 1947

(amount reported to the office of Presiding Bishop).

Stakes and districts reporting funds during December were: Central Missouri Stake, Kansas City Stake, Lamoni Stake, Gulf States Mission, Arizona, Northern California, Central Illinois, Chicago, Northwestern Iowa, Maine, Eastern Michigan, New York, Western Oklahoma, Central Texas.

Passport to Heaven

BY BILOINE WHITING

ST. PETER STOOD AT THE GATE of heaven reviewing the applicants for admission to the city. It was still early in the morning—so early, in fact, that the heavenly mists had not yet rolled away from the high towers of the gate. Yet, in spite of the hour, the milky way was jammed with candidates clamoring for admittance.

"Must be another war on earth," mumbled Peter. "Wonder if mortals realize what a traffic jam they cause up here every time they drop a bomb?"

He polished his eye glasses with the tip of his robe and, clearing his throat, shouted in a monotonous voice, "All those wishing to enter here must relate one incident of God's goodness to them." Pausing no longer than to take a breath, he continued, "Didn't 'spect anyone to be ready. Be back at 15:30 o'clock."

The mob, which had clamored in a hundred tongues when Peter had first appeared, now lapsed into silence. All one could hear was the music of the spheres, the hiss of a comet blazing past, and the discordant din from a planet called earth—an insignificant ball almost invisible from heaven.

"I knew I needn't have gotten up so early," grumbled Peter, turning back toward the gate. "But I can't convince Michael of anything. Mortals nowadays never think that God does anything for them—they're so self-sufficient—wonder what they think we're up here for? Well, at least I can sleep a few hours before anyone will think of something." The great door had swung open just enough for St. Peter to slip back into heaven when a feminine voice called after him.

"Peter, O St. Peter, wait up a minute."

A look of irritation crossed his countenance, but he paused in heaven's doorway to see who was delaying his morning nap. Far down the milky way, jammed between some Chinese and a planeload of British pilots, were two men and a woman. Catching Peter's eye, the woman waved her handkerchief.

"God has been good to us, Peter, let us tell our story. Why, love and God got us into The Church."

"Oh, he got you into The Church, did he? . . . I s'pose you're Catholics, then, or else Buddhists," said Peter, standing on his other foot.

"No, no, we're not," called out one of the men, shoving his way through the crowd. "But I'm sure you've heard of us. We're Latter Day Saints—Reorganized Saints, that is, and we have our minister with us to verify."

"Well, why didn't you say what you were in the first place," interrupted Peter. "You folks come along here so rarely that you're quite a curiosity—because of your small numbers, of course. Get on up here, let's see what you look like."

The three candidates pushed through the fringes of the mob and mounted the first step to stand self-consciously before St. Peter. His foot still held open the Gate, and the winds, stirring among the spheres, whistled and blustered about the door.

"If you'd take your foot out of the door," ventured the woman timidly, "I've two children of my own, and I know how drafty it gets if the doors are held open. I'd hate to be responsible for a cold floor in heaven."

Scowling at having to be reminded of his duty, St. Peter shut the door and sat down on the top step. "You needn't tell me where you're from," he said, "no one but a New England housekeeper would be that pernickety. Now what're your names?"

The three looked at each other to select a spokesman, and the man in the center spoke up. "I'm Bert Young, from Stoneport, Maine, and this is my wife Grace. This other man is Elder George Oliver of Prominence, Rhode Island."

Peter nodded shortly. "Pleased to meet you. Now what's this story that's keeping me from my nap? If you all have the same tale, it better be pretty good to get three of you into heaven."

Bert cleared his throat. "Well, it all began back when I was courting Grace. I was in love with her, and she felt the same way about me. We would have had no problems except that I was determined not to marry anyone who wasn't a Latter Day Saint, and Grace was about as equally set on marrying only a Catholic."

"You see, St. Peter," broke in Grace, "I was reared a Catholic and couldn't see living with a man who didn't believe as I did on so important an item as religion."

"That was diplomatically put," said Peter with his first smile of the morning. "Well, go on, Bert."

"When I realized how I felt about Grace, I became very worried about her religion. A Latter Day Saint married to a Catholic might have trouble, so I decided to pray about it. I spent many nights asking God what I should do, and I finally decided to take her to our church at the first opportunity."

"Just a moment," interrupted Peter, "first you prayed, and then you acted on your best judgment. Remarkable—remarkable. You Latter Day Saints believe in setting the stage for your miracles. Well, go on, go on."

"I believe it was around Christmas time in 1939 when I was transferred to Prominence to work for the post office. Grace came to visit her relatives in Bristol (that's near Prominence, St. Peter), so I figured that this was the time to take her to church. Prominence had a fine branch, and I prayed most earnestly that she would be favorably impressed with my people."

"Now this is where I came in," spoke up Elder Oliver for the first time. "About a week before all this took place, I woke from sleep bathed in tears with the words of a sermon on my mind. I knew that our Heavenly Father had given me a spiritual experience, and it was made known to me that after preaching this sermon, three young ladies would be baptized into God's church. I arose from my bed and started to write. As I took up my pencil, the whole manifestation came back to me, even to the exact words, almost faster than I could write it down. When I read over what I had written, I realized that it was a missionary sermon, while most of my former sermons had been of a pastoral nature. Early the next morning, I phoned to our Prominence branch pastor, and told him of my experience. We decided that I should preach my sermon on the following Sunday. In the meantime, we called together all of our available members of the Prominence branch priesthood to try to contact as many nonmembers as possible and invite them to the next Sunday evening service. On that night, I preached the sermon as best I could."

"And were the three young women there?" asked Peter eagerly, resting his elbows on his knees and his chin in his hands.

"Yes, as I preached I looked over the congregation, and I saw three young women who seemed particularly interested. Among them was Mrs. Young."

"You see, St. Peter," said Bert, "I knew nothing about Elder Oliver's experience. Only by chance, I thought, did I ask Grace to attend church that Sunday evening with me."

"When I had finished the sermon," continued Elder Oliver, "I went to the door to shake hands with the congregation as was my custom, when Mrs. Young came up to me. She told me how my sermon had impressed her, and she asked me for my scriptural references. Now I had them all with me, but somehow I felt moved to ask her to come back Wednesday evening and I would give them all to her then."

St. Peter turned to Grace. "And how did this inspired sermon affect you, Grace?"

"Oh, Peter, I hardly know how to describe it. When Elder Oliver started preaching, I found that, much against my will, I seemed to be floating in space and was conscious of nothing but his voice and what he was telling me. I don't believe I moved a muscle during the whole sermon. The music sung by the choir that night seemed heavenly—and I know inspiring—but yet I could feel myself fighting against believing what I had heard. After church, I was particularly impressed with the friendliness of the Saints. I was too impressed with what had been said in the sermon to talk to Bert much. He seemed to understand, for when he left me that evening, he gave me a copy of the Call at Evening to read. When I retired, I took the book to bed with me and read a few chapters before falling asleep. I had been asleep much of the night, I believe, when I was awakened by a bright light in my room. I was frightened, but as I gazed at the light, a personage robed in white appeared before me. He smiled and said, 'I am the angel Moroni; choose wisely for there is but one way.' When he left, I found myself sobbing uncontrollably, but I knew without a doubt which was the right way, and that I had been visited by an angel of the Lord."

"One question, please," asked St. Peter softly. "Had you ever heard of the angel Moroni?"

"No, he had not been mentioned in the sermon, nor had Bert ever referred to him. In April, I went with Bert to Maine to meet his parents, and on April 6, 1940, I was baptized in Indian River. Although ice encrusted the banks of the river, the water seemed warm to me."

Grace finished her story, and Peter looked inquiringly at Elder Oliver.

"Yes, we did baptize the other women mentioned in my dream."

New Horizons

For a long time St. Peter sat with his chin in his hands on the top step to heaven. Finally, gathering his long robe about his legs, he stood up.

"Do we get into heaven, Peter? Will you open the gate?" asked Grace.

As if for answer, the great golden hinges began to creak, and slowly the gate opened—not just a little crack for Peter to slip through—it swung open so wide that the stars seemed small and the milky way like a trail of ants. The music of the spheres swelled to a crescendo as the great gate opened, and when a clap of thunder had rolled over the threshold, St. Peter ushered them forward.

"Welcome to heaven," he boomed, straightening the folds of his robe. "To those the Lord smiles upon, we extend the greeting of Saints."

EDITOR'S NOTE: Just thought you'd like to know that the story of the Young's conversion is a true one. The heavenly setting is, of course, pure fantasy.

Calls to Service

(Continued from page 4.)

Mayor Roger T. Sermon of Independence and Judge William J. Randall of the county court, supported the movement. Statements from the Kansas City Times of January 20, 1948, give briefly the result of the proposal.

A representative commission of seven Democrats and seven Republicans to frame a proposed charter for Jackson County was chosen yesterday by secret ballot at a meeting of circuit court and probate judges at the courthouse. The commission includes two women.

The names of the persons selected for the charter-writing task were announced by Judge Brown Harris, chairman of the group, after the judges had reduced a master list of recommendations from seventy-two to fourteen.

A DRAFT IN A YEAR.

Under the Missouri constitution the commission must draft a proposed charter for submission to the electorate of Jackson County within one year.

* * *

The ten circuit court judges and Judge Leslie A. Welch of the probate court signed the order certifying that the freeholders had been appointed by a majority vote. Although a simple majority, six of eleven votes, was necessary to elect a person to the commission, it was learned that most of the fourteen members received nine or more votes.

"We feel this is a strong commission," Judge Harris said at the close of the meeting in his chambers. "I don't think we could improve on it. We've picked the most capable we could find from the names of more than 200 persons who were considered. We have some persons on the commission who will take interest in the county institutions."

"I was a little surprised that we completed it this afternoon. After the second round of voting there were very few differences."

OTHERS PLEASSED WITH GROUP.

Judge John R. James of the Independence division of the circuit court and other members of the group expressed satisfaction with the appointed commission.

"I think we ended up in pretty nice shape," Judge James said.

The master list of seventy-two names which the judges considered was reduced to seventeen on the first round of balloting.

The appointment of the commission was the third step in the procedure toward framing a charter and submitting it to the voters.

There was some uncertainty as to the next step in the organization procedure. The judges generally were of the opinion that the members of the commission would have to meet on their own call to select a chairman and whatever other officers are required, before proceeding with commission work.

Discussion of the opportunity to modernize the county government by drafting a home rule charter began late in 1945. A committee of nine civic leaders, headed by Maj. Gen. E. M. Stayton, retired, of Independence, was appointed last July to establish a county-wide charter organization.

The committee was named by Kearney Wornall, then president of the Chamber of Commerce, who was given that assignment by a unanimous vote at a rally in the Little Theater.

NAME DRIVE IS STARTED

In a few weeks a score of civic organizations lent their weight to the movement and under the direction of Johns, general chairman, an organization to obtain the required number of signatures was formed. The drive began in November for the signatures of 20 per cent of the last total vote for governor in the county. Mayor Roger T. Sermon of Independence directed the drive in Jackson County outside Kansas City.

After being checked by the Kansas City and Jackson County election boards, the petitions, bearing the signatures of 68,234 voters, were presented to the county court. The county court certified the petitions to the circuit and probate judges December 17.

The commission was appointed at the second meeting held by the jurists. The 60-day period allowed the jurists under the state constitution for the selection of the members would have expired February 15.

We are very much pleased and take both organizational and personal pride in the fact that these ten circuit judges and the probate judge have selected Presiding Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp as one of the fourteen freeholders to make a draft of the charter to be submitted to the voters of the county. The complete list of the commission, taken from the Kansas City Times (January 20, 1948) is as follows:

DEMOCRATS

G. LESLIE DELAPP, Blue Springs road, Independence, presiding bishop of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

ROBERT B. FIZZELL, 621 Westover road, a lawyer and retiring president of the Lawyers' association.

MRS. HENRY I. EAGER, 615 West Sixty-seventh street terrace, former chairman of the Democratic Women's city committee, who also was a vice-chairman of the Citizens Bond committee.

TERENCE M. O'BRIEN, 7328 Jefferson street, a lawyer and president of the Kansas City Bar association.

VINCENT J. O'FLAHERTY, JR., 912 West Thirty-fourth street, former president of the Real Estate Board and a partner in O'Flaherty-Norman company realtors.

JOHN W. OLIVER, 848 West Fifty-seventh street, a lawyer who was active in the anti-machine Citizens party.

DR. EDGAR A. HOLT, 11007 East Fifty-seventh street, professor of American history at the University of Kansas City.

REPUBLICANS

GEORGE W. MEYER, 5330 Oak street, a lawyer and former state representative from the eighth district.

ELLIOT NORQUIST, 703 East Forty-seventh street, a lawyer and a veteran of World War II.

MRS. REDING PUTMAN, 800 West Fifty-eighth street terrace, a member of the Jackson County board of visitors, active in Girl Scouts, the P.-T. A., and child care and other welfare projects.

RICHARD S. RIGHTER, 805 West Fifty-first street, a lawyer who was a delegate at large to the constitutional convention of 1944. He served as chairman of the judicial committee.

BERNARD T. HURWITZ, 1250 West Sixty-first street terrace, a lawyer.

DELOS C. JOHNS, 648 West Sixty-eighth street terrace, a lawyer, vice-president and general counsel of the Kansas City Federal Reserve bank and an associate general chairman of the Citizens Bond committee.

C. C. BUNDSCHU, 820 West Waldo avenue, Independence dry goods merchant.

As a personal acquaintance of most of these citizens, we predict that the people of Jackson County will be given the opportunity to secure for themselves and posterity a form of government immeasurably better than the one under which the county has operated since Missouri became a state in 1820.

Israel A. Smith.

now available

Doctrine and Covenants

in cloth binding

$1.50

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Independence, Missouri

BULLETIN BOARD

Change of Address

Mr. and Mrs. John T. Conway
316 Fifty-ninth Street
Des Moines, Iowa

Joseph E. Baldwin
3732 West Dickens Avenue
Chicago 47, Illinois
Telephone, Dickens 7637
(home)

4416 West Gladys Avenue
Chicago 24, Illinois
Telephone, Mansfield 5343
(office)

Books Wanted

Doris Oakman, 1538 North Main, Independence, Missouri, would like to buy a copy of the Saints' Harp. Please send information of condition of the copy and price requested to her before mailing the book.

Stanley Johnson, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, would like to obtain a copy of Edward's Priesthood Manual and Missionary Sermon Outlines.

A copy of The Battle-Axe of Jehovah is wanted by Hubert T. Weston, Colony 2, Westminster Hospital, London, Ontario.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Mary J. Miller, 33 Simpson Avenue, DeBois, Pennsylvania, requests prayers for her sister, Mrs. Sarah E. Nelson, who is suffering from a nervous breakdown. Mrs. Miller also asks prayers for herself, that she may be healed of arthritis.

Prayers are requested for Heber F. Colvin, a patient in Elks Hospital Tucson, Arizona, by his aunt, Mrs. A. F. Puckett, Route 4, Peebles, Ohio. Brother Colvin, formerly associate pastor of Tucson Branch, is anxious to regain his health so that he can continue with his work in the church.

WEDDINGS

Richardson-Carpenter

Kathryn Carpenter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Carpenter of Detroit, Michigan, and Ted C. Richardson, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Richardson of Port Hope, Michigan, were married on December 27. Evangelist George H. Booth performed the ceremony.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Scott of Des Moines, Iowa, announce the birth of a daughter, Rosemary, born January 29. Mr. Scott is pastor of the Des Moines Branch.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Schmidt of Berwyn, Illinois, announce the birth of a daughter, Lawrel Elizabeth, born December 7. Mrs. Schmidt is the former Judith McCaig.

A daughter, Marilyn Ann, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd F. Rippey of Helena, Missouri, on January 11 at the Missouri Methodist Hospital in St. Joseph. Mrs. Rippey is the former Dorothy Baughman.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard B. Lewis of Providence, Rhode Island, announce the birth of a daughter, Donna, born January 17. Mrs. Lewis is the former Muriel Colbourn.

A son, Kenneth Charles, was born on January 8 to Mr. and Mrs. Raymond W. Whorf of Providence, Rhode Island. Mrs. Whorf is the former Dorothea Cockcroft.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Hinderks of Stewartsville, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Sandra Kay, born January 15. Mrs. Hinderks was formerly Velma Hampton.

A son, Craig William, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Orville Short of Moline, Illinois, on December 28.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Elias of Donora, Pennsylvania, announce the birth of a daughter, Cherie Adele, born October 21. Mrs. Elias was formerly Shirley Johnson.

A daughter, Laurie Kathlyne, was born on January 10 to Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Erwin of Lamoni, Iowa. Mrs. Erwin is the former Bessie Robinson.

Dr. and Mrs. Paul Harrington announce the birth of a son, Richard Eugene, born October 12. He was blessed on November 30 by his grandfather, Elder Joseph Harrington, at the Grandview Church in Kansas City, Kansas.

A son, Robert Wayne, was born on November 29 to Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Bingham of Houston, Texas.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Mabry Holland of Houston, Texas, announce the birth of a daughter, Carol Lynn, born January 8.

A daughter, Marjorie, was born on January 11 to Mr. and Mrs. Richard Davies of Houston, Texas.

A son, Cecil Roy, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Covington of Houston, Texas, on January 24.

A daughter, Candace Diane, was born on August 20 to Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Cochran of Independence, Missouri. She was blessed on December 21 by Elders Charles Graham and Glaude Smith. Mrs. Cochran is the former Marjorie Sintz.

Mr. and Mrs. David R. Grayum of Houston, Texas, announce the birth of a daughter, Linda Jane, born October 2.

A son, Kerry Peyton, was born on October 6 to Mr. and Mrs. Ben Oliver of Houston, Texas.

A daughter, Sherry Lynn, was born on October 7 to Mr. and Mrs. Ogle Baker of Houston, Texas.

Mr. and Mrs. Billie J. Crossland of Houston, Texas, announce the birth of a son, Dennis Wayne, born October 8.

DEATHS

FISH.—Howard Raymond, was born April 5, 1895, at Webster, Pennsylvania, and died in December, 1947. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on April 10, 1932. At the time of his death, he was serving as justice of the peace; he was also supervisor of the local steel mill.

He is survived by his wife, Veva; a son, Henry, of Detroit, Michigan; a stepson, Charles Brandon, of the home; a stepdaughter, Mrs. William Hickman of St. Petersburg, Florida; and five grandchildren. Elders Clarence Winship and James M. Hough were in charge of the funeral services. Interment was in Fells Cemetery.

BEHANNA.—George Home, was born August 17, 1875, at West Columbia, Donora, Pennsylvania, and died January 13, 1948, at his home on Waddell Avenue. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 21, 1926.

He leaves his wife, Louise; four sons: Clarence, Clyde, Ralph, and Vernon; a daughter, Mrs. George Hilty; one brother, Harvey Behanna; and a sister, Mrs. Vernon Brooks. The funeral was held in Donora, Elder James P. Marsh officiating. Interment was in the Monongahela cemetery.

REED.—Annie E., was born May 23, 1865, at White Water, Wisconsin, and died at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on January 30, 1948. At the age of twelve, she moved with her parents to Council Bluffs, remaining in Pottawattamie County the rest of her life. In 1887, she was married to Allen Reed; ten children were born to this union. Mr. Reed and three of the children preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for about fifty years.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Alice Graybill and Mrs. Ida Slack of Council Bluffs, and Mrs. Blanck Martin of Shelby, Iowa; four sons: Wesley of Weston, Iowa; Andrew of Sioux City, Iowa; George and Wilber of Council Bluffs; thirty-five grandchildren; nineteen great-grandchildren; and one great-great-grandchild. Services were held at the Woodring Funeral Home, Elder V. D. Ruch in charge. Burial was in the Neola, Iowa, cemetery.

PARKER.—James C., was born January 23, 1886, at McKenzie, Alabama, and died September 2, 1947, following a heart attack. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 19, 1905, and was married to Annie Odum on December 28, 1911.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Julia Dour and Lula Parker; two sons: James and John Parker; three sisters: Mrs. Lula Odum, Mrs. Mae Patrick, and Mrs. Jeanie Booker; and four grandchildren. Elder Joseph W. Breshears officiated at the funeral service. Burial was in the Pleasant Hill Cemetery.

ESSLIN.—Elizabeth Jane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ebenezer Curry, was born near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and died on December 30, 1947, at Lake City, Missouri. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on September 4, 1887. A year later she was married to Charles M. Esslin, who, with a son, Joseph L., preceded her in death. Five years after their marriage, they moved to Lee's Summit, Missouri, from the East. Following the death of her husband, Mrs. Esslin made her home at Lake City.

She is survived by her daughter, Mrs. May Price, and son, Charles Edwin of the home; a brother, Lemuel Curry of Kirtland, Ohio; one grandchild; and five great-grandchildren. Services were conducted at the church at Mt. Washington, Elders W. F. Boinger and C. Ed. Miller officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

COOPER.—King, was born at Marsville, Ontario, in 1866, and died January 16, 1947. He had been a resident of Guelph, Acton, and Cedar Valley, Ontario, for the past sixty years. Until his recent retirement, he was a contractor and farmer. A devoted member of the Reorganized Church, he served as pastor for twenty-three years and was largely responsible for the building of the Mitchell Street Church. His first wife, the former Annie Brain, a daughter, Mrs. Ralph Swackhammer, and a son, Lloyd, preceded him in death. He was married to Caroline Thaler in 1944.

Besides his wife, he leaves two daughters: Mrs. William Scorgie of Stratford and Mrs. N. W. Simmons of Guelph; a sister, Mrs. Margaret St. John of Utica, New York; nine grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders A. Dunn and J. Shields. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

ROGERS.—Pvt. Marion S., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Rogers, was born March 18, 1921, in Butler, Missouri, and was fatally injured in the Battle of the Hedgerow near St. Lo, France, on July 29, 1944. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in his early youth and proved to be a faithful member. On January 18, 1944, he was married to Betty June Gray of Mexico, Missouri, who was responsible for having his body returned to the States for burial. The funeral was held on February 5, 1948, at the Booth Funeral Home in Butler, Elder Leroy Beckham officiating. Interment was in the Oak Hill Cemetery.

Besides his wife and parents, he is survived by four brothers: John of Richmond, Missouri; Kenneth, Ray, and Glenn of Butler; and one sister, Mrs. Martha Ezell of St. Louis, Missouri.

LEWIS.—Daisy Elversia, wife of John D. Lewis of Kirtland, Ohio, died December 19, 1947, at Lake County Memorial Hospital following a brief illness. She was born on May 19, 1886, at Kirtland, where she had spent her entire life except for three years in Independence, Missouri. She served as a church school teacher and president of the women's department in Kirtland Branch; she was also president of the Parent-Teacher Association and chairman of the Kirtland Red Cross Chapter for ten years.

She is survived by her husband; two sons: David Milton of Kirtland and Myron H. of Columbus, Ohio; a daughter, Mrs. William J. Meyer of Kirtland; two grandchildren; and two brothers, Clifford A. and O. S. McFarland of Kirtland. Funeral services were held at the Temple, Elders Earl R. Curry and George Lindsay officiating. Burial was in the Kirtland Temple Cemetery.

CONDIT.—Mary Ann, was born at River Sioux, Iowa, and died in Independence, Missouri, on January 22, 1948, at the age of seventy-eight. She was married to David S. Condit on March 20, 1887; nine children were born to this union, seven of which died in infancy and one in young manhood. Mr. Condit passed away in 1947.

Surviving are one daughter, Mrs. Gladys Reynolds, of Independence; three grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren.

MORE STORIES FOR JUNIOR WORSHIP

by ALICE GREER KELSEY

Here is a brand new worship book designed just for juniors. These thirty-one stories are fresh in plot, swift-moving, and easy to understand. There are some stories from Greece and Puerto Rico, where the author spent some time, a section for "special day" stories, and a group based on incidents and characters in the Book of Acts, which use children of junior age. Only $1.50

COMMUNION PRAYER CARDS

These small cards are made to fit easily into one hand. The blessing for the wine is printed on one side, and the blessing for the bread is printed on the other.

5¢ each

3 for 15¢

5 for 20¢

10 for 30¢

25 for 65¢

50 for $1.25

100 for $2.00

SERMON STORIES OF FAITH AND HOPE

by WILLIAM L. STIDGER

From close observation of the lives of the "Great" and from the everyday activities of "just folks" has come this collection of sermon stories. Each is brief, easy to read, and easy to use. Dr. Stidger writes as a reporter, passing on to the reader things which he has felt and seen and heard. $1.50

RELIGIOUS RADIO • What to Do and How

by EVERETT C. PARKER, ELINOR INMAN, and ROSS SNYDER

This is the first complete, authoritative guide to religious radio. The authors, each an authority in the field, treat every phase of radio in the service of the church. Method, technique, and philosophy are joined in a clear and cogent style that makes every point readily understandable. $3.00

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

"Called to be an Apostle"

Paul M. Hanson
President of the Quorum of Twelve

Palmer-Lappine Studio

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

FEBRUARY 28, 1948

NUMBER 9

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The Missionary Work

AUDITORIUM NEWS

It is appropriate that we should present, at the climax of our month of emphasis on missionary work, the picture of Apostle Paul M. Hanson on the front cover of this issue.

Apostle Hanson is the senior member of the Quorum of Twelve and the president of that body. He is the oldest in point of years of service. He has traveled around the world, and has probably been in as many different countries as any man representing the church today. He is one of our most able scholars in research, and has particularly distinguished himself in the field of American archaeology. For years he has been one of the ablest exponents of the gospel and defenders of the church.

The chief responsibility for the missionary work in all the world rests upon the members of the Quorum of Twelve. They travel far and almost continuously. They are engaged in the supervision of administrative work in many ways, and they carry great responsibility.

The expansion of our missionary work, under the direction of the Presidency, will be accomplished under the leadership of the Quorum of Twelve.

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

The Abundant Life	3
Across the Desk	4

ARTICLES:

Tributes to Beauty of "The Messiah" Broadcast	4
The Church Upon This Rock, by A. B. Phillips	5
Brother X Goes to Work	6
A Little Sermon on Feet, by Elbert A. Smith	7
This Day, by Geraldine Wyatt	8
One of Us, by Ruby Tinkham	9
Christ in the Schoolroom, by Russell Tooze	10
Forgiveness, by Ruthann Sager	11
What L. D. S. Believe About the Book of Mormon, by Evan A. Fry	12
Out of Darkness Into Light, by Glaude A. Smith	14
The Church Beautiful, by Bishop C. A. Skinner	15
A Leisure Hour . . . for What? by Louise Wrigley	16
The Stranger, by Marie Gosline	17
Letters	18
The Satisfied Customer, by Philip Moore	20
Nothing Gained, by Larry Marlowe	21
Briefs	22
Bulletin Board	22

* RESTORATION FESTIVAL WEEK

The church-wide Zion's League organization will celebrate Restoration Festival Week from April 11 to 18. Part of the materials is presented in this issue, and remaining features will appear in our March 13 issue. Among the latter will be the message to be read, "Witnesses for the Restoration," by our Presiding Patriarch, Elbert A. Smith.

* INDEPENDENCE

Saints of Independence raised an all-time record amount of $185,898.02 for church purposes in 1947 according to the financial report of Bishop J. S. Kelley to the Conference in Zion. This was an increase of more than $4,500.00 over the totals for the year 1946.

These funds are allocated as follows: $126,111.95 for general church purposes, of which $8,443.59 was oblation for relief purposes. The sum of $59,786.07 was contributed for local operating and building funds for the various church congregations in Zion.

According to a recent report of C. V. Graham, Supervisor of City of Zion, total church membership in Zion for 1947 was 9,028, or an increase of 435. Total baptisms, 264. Our average total attendance of all our congregations for the morning preaching services was 2,982. Average total attendance evening preaching, 1,385. Average attendance church school, 2,693. The South Chrysler congregation was organized during the year, making a total of thirteen congregations.

* ST. LOUIS - TULSA

Bishop G. L. DeLapp was in St. Louis, Missouri, on February 8, speaking to the adult classes at the church school hour, and addressing the congregation on "Stewardship" at eleven. In the evening he spoke about conditions in Europe. Brother Frank McDonald is pastor at St. Louis, and is doing a fine work, with excellent spirit and co-operation among the members.

Bishop DeLapp was in Tulsa, Oklahoma, on the fifteenth, speaking at the morning hour on "Our Missions Abroad," and in the evening on "The Relationship of Accounting to the Attainment of our Church Objectives." It was financial day at Tulsa. Brother Leslie Kohlman is pastor there and accomplishing a good work.

The Abundant Life

I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.—Jesus, in St. John 10:10.

YOU CAN SEE listed among the radio programs one entitled, "Life Can Be Beautiful." I have often thought I would like to listen to it, because I believe in it as a principle of living, and I have found it to be true. But I have been so busy discovering the beauty of life for myself, I have not had time to listen to the program.

Life is beautiful to those who accept its rich gifts with gratitude, who seek every good experience they have time to explore, who try to learn all that comes within their reach, who appreciate the goodness and kindness they find in neighbors and friends, and who try to love God and their fellow men. Life itself is a wonderful adventure.

One can learn to find beauty in the bare arms of the winter trees, the complex variety of yellows, browns, and grays, of the trunks and limbs, and the lacy patterns of the smaller twigs and branches against the sky. One can find beauty in the winter landscape as well as in the bright, fresh green of spring and the red and gold of autumn. One can find beauty, too, in the silhouette of an old building against a setting sun. There is beauty everywhere, if we know how to find it. And the appreciation of this beauty is a part of the abundant life that Jesus promised us. It is there for the taking, and it will cost us nothing at all.

HOW DOES ONE GO about to find the abundant life?

I think one begins by loving God, and thanking him for all his good gifts and mercies and blessings. No life is worth more than an animal existence without gratitude. Gratitude is a result of the power of mind and spirit to understand, to appreciate, to know. Simply feeding the body, keeping it warm, well, and comfortable, and pampering its appetites is not enough for a life. Any beast of the field or forest can do that. It is as the mind becomes active that appreciation and gratitude may grow, and it is at that point that happiness begins. One begins to be happy by regarding life as an adventure, with many pleasant experiences in it.

I think one enjoys the abundant life by loving his fellow men, not just in masses, but as persons, individuals, neighbors, working associates, and friends. The social careerist who loves humanity but dislikes individuals is just a misanthropist in disguise. The love of people must be based upon a true affection for specific persons, and especially those who are near and seen every day.

I think one finds the abundant life in good books and magazines, in keeping up with the news of the world, in being informed on the developments of science, scholarship, and literature. A good city library, and a modest investment of cash in good books are keys to the abundant life.

I think one finds the abundant life in good music, in attending concerts and seeing the players, in hearing the best music on the radio, or in playing his own recordings of symphonies, operas, good songs, light classics, and other things.

I think that one finds the abundant life in going to church, in worshipping God, and finding spiritual strength in company with his neighbors and friends.

I think, as I see my friends at work, that they find the abundant life in giving unselfish service to the world, in doing good in their own communities, in helping with church work, in leading and guiding boys and girls. Wherever you see a busy man or woman, you are probably seeing a happy person, if the burdens are not too great.

Make a list of all the unhappy people you know—the pessimists, the gloomsters, the despairers, the hopeless ones. Then notice what they are doing. Chances are, they are doing nothing, or at the most not very much. They sit, but they do not see the beauty of the world. They watch life going by, but they take little part in it. Now make a list of the happy people you know. They are all busy, aren't they?

FOR MOST OF US, Zion is at the center of our thoughts and dreams about the abundant life. We think of a people skilled in the sciences and industries, producing goods for the use and enjoyment of all. We think of a people happy in work, study, religion, and home life. We think of a people organized so that all have sufficient and none are exploited, so that everybody who can work will have the chance, and so that nobody plays the idler, nor lives by the sweat of other men's brows. We think of a people who hold high the standards of culture and education, for the increase of human welfare and happiness. We think of a people who live honorably, sanely, cleanly, and morally. We think of a people who have homes that are beautiful without extravagance or waste, adequate for all needs, equipped with the spiritual as well as the physical essentials of welfare and happiness.

The full realization of the abundant life, of course, cannot be reached by persons working alone. They must work in association, co-operate, share the labor and the fruits of labor with others. And above all, they need the motivation and the hope of a great religious faith, as they look to the future and to the eternal life.

L. J. L.

Editorial

Across the Desk

From Elder J. R. Taylor, 175 Beaumont Street, Hamilton, N.S.W., Australia:

Quite recently we had the fine experience of sharing the companionship and ministry of your deputies, President J. F. Garver and Bishop W. N. Johnson. We all enjoyed their stay with us and regret that they could not stay longer. They left to go farther north with the expectation that if it could possibly be arranged, they would come back to us for another visit before returning to Independence.

In order that the editors may catch items which would be of interest to Herald readers, we will be pleased to have copies of district and branch bulletins mailed to The Editors, Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

It has just come to our attention that Brother Ward A. Hougas, president of the Central Missouri Stake, living at Warrensburg, Missouri, has been selected president of the Ministerial Association of that city. Our congratulations, Brother Hougas.

Report From Holland

The First Presidency has received information that permits have been obtained for Apostle M. A. McConley and Seventy Eugene Theys to enter Germany. A recent letter from Brother Theys contains this interesting information:

"German correspondence is keeping me pretty close to my desk. Every day I find a stack of it awaiting me, and by the time I have it translated and answered, another stack has accumulated. I plan to preach my first sermon in Germany in that language. I might just as well start now as later.

"Mickey [his son] is catching on to the Dutch language quite rapidly. Alma [his wife] is studying, too, and seems to be doing very well. I find I can do a fair job of reading the Dutch paper.

"Holland is a lovely country, and we enjoy it very much."

Official Notice

In the interest of obviating possible misunderstanding, our members will please be advised that literature circulated by Pauline Hancock, H. Irvin Luke, and Andrew L. Parker, all of Independence, Missouri, does not receive the endorsement of the church.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Tributes to Beauty of "The Messiah" Broadcast

The following is a list of quotations from letters received regarding the broadcast over the Columbia Broadcasting System, originating at KMBC, Kansas City, of "The Messiah," on December 25, 1947, 10:30-11:30 CST.

It came through beautifully . . . the finest broadcast of "The Messiah" I have ever heard on the air. The choruses were inspiring and the Philharmonic Orchestra accompaniment was grand. It was truly a wonderful background to the chorus. Mrs. Mader was finer than ever, and the bass soloist was great in his rendition of "Why Do the Nations So Furiously Rage Together?"

MRS. FRANCES WHITE NORRIS,
Sheffield, Illinois

I heard your Christmas broadcast and enjoyed it, via the station in Kansas City.

F. C. PUTNEY,
Camp Hill, Pennsylvania

We enjoyed the rendition of "The Messiah" as it came from Kansas City on Christmas night. The choruses and solos were very good, indeed the whole rendition left very little to be desired, unless it might be more of the same. The nearest station from which it came clearly was WCAU, Philadelphia . . . also came very clearly from WCBS, New York. . . . You are to be complimented for a very fine piece of work.

ARTHUR H. DUROSE,
Flint, Michigan

We got a splendid reception over station WCBS, New York, and we feel that it came as a fitting climax to all the Christmas radio programs throughout our nation. We have heard this beautiful oratorio many times, but feel this performance was the best ever.

MR. AND MRS. BENJAMIN L. CARTER,
Stonington, Maine

I have just finished listening to your broadcast of Handel's "The Messiah," and I should like you to know that I have never heard such beautiful music in my life. I have heard and sung "The Messiah" many times, but never before has it affected my emotions as well as my musical senses. May I thank you for and congratulate you upon a magnificent and inspiring performance.

ANNA DILLARD McLAREN,
Shumaker, Arkansas

We listened to the broadcast of Handel's "The Messiah" tonight. It was most beautiful. In fact, we hear it each year, and think this was the most beautiful of all. It was given so expressively, and it stirred our hearts. Thank you so much for making our Christmas complete.

MR. AND MRS. CARL F. DAVIS,
HELEN DAVIS,
MRS. JULIA WHITSELL,
Crown Point, Indiana

We've just heard the broadcast of "The Messiah" and while the whole thing is still fresh in my mind, I want to write you a short note telling you how much I enjoyed the broadcast. The soloists were all good, but I particularly enjoyed the contralto soloist . . . My thanks to you for an enjoyable hour.

FERNE S. LIPP,
Denver, Colorado

"The Messiah" was outstanding in every respect. The orchestra did a splendid job as well as the chorus and soloists. It was most inspiring.

WALTER H. BLOCH,
Flint, Michigan

Congratulations on the very gratifying rendition of "The Messiah" last evening. It would be impossible for me to try to adequately express the satisfaction that was ours as we listened.

WILLIAM GRAVES,
Lamoni, Iowa

Have just listened to the broadcast of "The Messiah" and find it hard to express in words the beauty of that performance. It was an inspirational experience that I shall not soon forget. Thank you, for one of the finest gifts I have received this Christmas.

BETTY ANN MOSIER,
Independence, Missouri

The choruses were fine, particularly "Since by Man," which sent out goose bumps with its power and sustained build-up. Congratulations on your good work.

EDITH BROCKWAY,
Akron, Ohio

My thanks to you and to your fellow musicians for your magnificent accompaniment of the Messiah Choir on the night of December 25. That rendering of the sacred cantata was my biggest treat this Christmas. Every good wish to all of you for 1948 and always.

JOHN F. STUBBS,
Toronto, Canada

I offer my congratulations to you for your splendid work.

ROBERT R. CLARKE,
Fort Worth, Texas

"The Messiah" came through very clearly. We certainly enjoyed the finished rendition of the oratorio. The orchestra added a great deal to our listening pleasure. . . . It seemed a fitting climax to the day.

MR. AND MRS. W. C. PORTER,
Dixfield, Maine

We want to write you of our appreciation for the splendid "Messiah" broadcast we were privileged to hear on Christmas night . . . over a Philadelphia station, WCAU. The chorus sounded magnificent. The "Surely He Hath Borne Our Grievs" was especially thrilling.
(Continued on page 14.)

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

February 28, 1948

Number 9

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri. Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

The Church Upon This Rock

By A. B. Phillips

GR^{EAT} SPIRITUAL LEADERS have noted the singular fact that words uttered by Jesus often reveal greater significance and power after much meditation. The text in Matthew 16: 17-19 of the Inspired Version appears to exemplify this truth, becoming a living reality to the born-again Christian and proving, as Jesus said: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." No separate part is enough, for all parts combine to show its full atmosphere and meaning. Following "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus then declared: "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter; and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

The Roman Catholics believe "this rock" is Peter. Various others think it refers to Peter's confession, to God's revelation, or to Jesus himself as the Christ. These views serve to emphasize the fact that printed and spoken words are but imperfect symbols of thoughts, concepts, and deep, living truth. That these words of Jesus are such is shown by the spiritual significance of the terms "rock" and "church." Also, the Greek text often holds implications not fully conveyed by the words used in translating it, as meanings not specifically stated are at times implied from the context or from the atmosphere of a preceding relative text. In some cases, this is highly important.

"Rock" Used as a Symbol

As frequently used in the Bible, the word "rock" is rich in symbolism. It is first used in Genesis 7: 59 (Inspired Version) to represent the Lord in his mission as the Messiah: "Blessed is he through whose seed Messiah shall come; for he saith, I am Messiah, the King of Zion, the Rock of heaven, which is broad as eternity; and whoso cometh in at the gate, and climbeth up by me shall never fall."

Thus it may be seen that the "rock" is not so much a personal as a qualitative symbol, both in this and in various other texts. Its essential meaning as usually applied is that of a secure and impregnable foundation or refuge. Note the words of David, II Samuel 22: 2, 3: "The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; the God of my rock; in him will I trust; he is my shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high tower, and my refuge, my saviour." (Also see Psalm 18: 2).

Jeshurun, symbolic name of Israel, in Deuteronomy 32: 15 is warned because "he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the rock of his salvation." Its spiritual meaning is specifically noted in I Corinthians 10: 4 of those baptized unto Moses: "And did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ."

So, in Matthew 7: 34, Jesus likens those who hear and live by his teachings "unto a wise man, who built his house upon a rock," against which the destructive forces of wind and storm beat in vain. This aspect of the symbolism is strikingly similar to that of Matthew 16: 19, where the Greek word for "rock" is petra, of which Dr. Moffatt says: "English fails to bring out the play on the Greek word of 'rock.'" It means a mass of rock, and is distinguished from Petros, the Greek for Peter, which means a stone or piece of rock. Dr. Weymouth states that petra, "being feminine, would be manifestly unsuitable as the name of a man." But applied qualitatively rather than in a personal sense, its feminine character is significantly appropriate in the Greek manner of expression.

Its Spiritual and Qualitative Meaning

The Inspired Version in John 1: 42 points out the spiritual significance of Petros in the words to Peter: "Thou shalt be called Cephas, which is, by interpretation, a seer, or a stone." Cephas is a Syriac word of Chaldaic origin, which in Greek is Petros. This shows that Christ gave the name to Peter to signify seership or divine revelation, which was outstandingly manifested when God revealed to him Christ in his office of Messiah, Son of God, and Saviour of the world. These qualities, not in the abstract but in divine revelation, were all symbolized by Jesus in the term "this rock," upon which his church should be built. As will be further noted, it is a divinely established unity of abiding relationship between man and God, the inner sanctuary, Holy of Holies, where the elect are one with God through their new birth and regeneration. So the church is informed: "Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; . . . whosoever is of my church, and endureth of my church to the end, him will I establish upon my Rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against him."—Doctrine and Covenants 3: 16, 17.

Both terms, "this rock" and "my Rock," thus emphasize the qualitative sense in which Jesus Christ, the Saviour-Messiah, refers to his divine mission as Redeemer of mankind. This is further shown by the remarkable circumstances that Jesus specifically applied to his notable declaration that, not by man but by revelation from God, his Messiahship-Sonship was known to Peter the seer; while by revelation from God, Jesus knew Peter whom he had been directed to choose as having the qualities of a seer or stone, a piece of rock, one of the called-out or elect, in the building of His church.

How the Church Qualifies

The true meaning of the word "church" as used by Jesus is not only important but is essential to clear understanding of how the church is established on "this rock." It is a translation of the Greek ekklesia, literally meaning the called out. Ekklesia is from a compound of ek or ex (denoting origin, from whence, or out) and a derivative of kaleo, to call or call forth. Kaleo is akin to the base of keleuo, to hail, order, or command. As used by Jesus, the ekklesia (church) would include one or a number of persons called out of the world of sin to receive his message and become his disciples. By centuries of changing custom and usage, it appears that the meaning of "church" as used by Jesus has to some extent become obscured and is commonly applied in a much broader and looser sense today.

The ekklesia are therefore those who enter into a divinely established fellowship with Christ, and this relationship is sealed with the seal of adoption into the family of God by the promised Holy Spirit (see II Corinthians 1: 22; Ephesians 1: 13; 4: 30) "unto the day of redemption." A careful study of texts previously noted will help to show why these compose the true church established "upon this rock," and why against such the gates of hell shall not prevail.

The Revelation of Christ

To Peter, Christ was revealed both in his character and office. It became clear that, as he had proclaimed, Christ was "the way, the truth, and the life." He was the living embodiment of life in its supreme and eternal reality. To be in Christ was to be in union with him as "the way, the truth, and the life." And if you are in Christ, you know the mystery of his mission as explained by Paul: "which is Christ in you, the hope of glory" (Colossians 1: 27). In order for the church to be established "upon this rock," the church must be in Christ, and Christ must be in the church. In name alone is far from sufficient, for the real meaning of Christ is the way of life that conquers sin and death. You can never know Christ until he is divinely revealed as the living power within you. "Upon this rock" of Christ revealed in your life, the living "way, the truth, and the life" you, the church, must be built to conquer the evil powers of hell.

This is the way of repentance and redemption from sin, the truth of the new birth, the life that has no sting of death; all of which are comprehended in the gospel that Paul declares "is the power of God unto salvation." As having this meaning, we may note the advice: "Build upon my rock, which is my gospel" (Doctrine and Covenants 10: 11).

It is evident that the unity of meaning in "my rock" and "my gospel" centers in them as the divine Way of Life. God's power operates in the disciple who builds his life upon it, and he becomes a regenerated soul, an adopted son of God. His qualities become transformed and sublimated as he partakes of the divine nature, and thus he, the true ekklesia or church, is built upon the eternal and impregnable rock, against which the "gates of hell" cannot prevail. That, I believe, is the sublime and spiritual meaning of this remarkable text.

Brother X Goes to Work

I saw Brother X the other day. For some time I had missed him from Big Church and thought he was slipping. It was only when I was asked to preach at Little Church that I found him.

Brother X grew up and learned the church work in a small congregation. Then, when business opportunity called him to the city where he could attend services at Big Church, he went. For a time he enjoyed leaning back and letting others do the work, but one day he awoke to the fact that his spiritual joints were becoming stiff and his religious muscles lacked exercise. Big Church offered him no opportunity to work. It didn't need him. Then he discovered dozens of others like himself, sleeping their time away in comfortable seats, just waiting for the end to come.

"It is a pity," said Brother X, "that a man should die so long before they bury him." So he looked around. Not far away, he discovered Little Church. It was so much like his home branch that he loved it. The people were friendly, but not well organized. They were short of help. They needed him.

Once more Brother X is busy and laden with responsibility. "You know," he says, "it's great to be wanted!"—From The Standard, Australia.

A Little Sermon on Feet - By Elbert A. Smith

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace.—Isaiah 52:7.

Having your feet shod with the gospel of the preparation of peace.—Ephesians 6:15.

RECENTLY I HEARD a person remark, "Feet always seem to be the most unattractive portion of the human body." The statement appeared to have a general application, and probably in many cases, it is an understatement. But the remark started me to thinking, and I recalled a statement made by Paul when he was comparing the church and its many members to the human body. Among other things he said: "And those members which we think to be the less honorable, upon these we bestow the more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness."—I Corinthians 12: 23.

Human feet—the most lowly part of our anatomy, and the critic said the most unattractive—have had the responsibility and the honor to carry the human race down the road of time until now, through dust and mud, over rocks and thorns, across mountains and deserts, through tropical heat and Arctic cold. To be sure, in this supersonic age we ride on wheels or fly on wings a great deal. Yet we would be surprised to know how many miles per day are traversed on foot by housewives about their work, waitresses, nurses, farmers, postmen, miners, office workers, and children as they hop, skip, and jump their way to maturity and fallen arches.

Man stands erect, unlike the four-footed beasts. The Creator gave him two feet to stand on and the power to stand straight with dignity, to look on life with level eyes, and—if he will—to look up into heaven. It is very reverent betimes to kneel to God in prayer. It may be very reverent at times to stand erect on our two feet and look up in prayer to the God who made us men and gave us power to walk and the right to choose the paths in which our feet shall go. Jesus one time said: "When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any."—Mark 11: 25.

HUMAN FEET SERVE humanity. They bring the nurse down the long hospital corridor to our bedside. They bring the doctor to us on his rounds. They bring the postman down the hill and up the terrace to our door with the letter we have waited for. They serve us on farms, in mines, shops, and factories—and in the church. They walked the floor with us when we were babies and will carry us down the church aisle and out the door the last time we go to church. They walked into Gethsemane and up Calvary. They carried the risen Christ up out of the tomb, and with them, he walked the road to Emmaus with two of the disciples. His feet shall stand again upon the Mount of Olives at the last day. Beauty is sometimes in the eye of the beholder. So one wrote:

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!—Isaiah 52: 7.

On an occasion after nightfall, Jesus, desiring to teach a lesson of humility and service, girded himself with a towel and took a basin of water and washed his disciples' feet. They had sweated and trailed through the dust of dirt roads, were chafed by crude sandals, burned by the sun, perhaps stub-toed, caloused, but they had faithfully carried the disciples along the road that He had elected to travel. Upon them, He bestowed the "more abundant honor."

Now, brethren, in conclusion; Paul argued that the church of Christ is the body of Christ. All the members are interdependent and interrelated. The eye cannot say to the hand, "I have no need of thee." Nor the head to the feet, "I have no need of thee." Even the lowly and humble church members are given responsibility in which if they serve sacrificially and faithfully, they may merit the "more abundant honor." The word of the Lord one time came through his servant: "There is no one of that spirit so humble or in so obscure a place that he or she shall be forgotten of our Lord."

And yet one more thing: in these days of world-wide strife there may be little we can do to promote world peace—but that little we should do within ourselves and in the radius of our influence. Paul admonishes us to put on the "whole armor of God" from head to foot, that we may "be able to withstand in the evil day." This not to fight against flesh and blood but against iniquity and for righteousness. And he adds: "Having your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." Our feet should walk in the ways of peace in our own homes and in our own congregations. That our influence may be a "preparation for the gospel of peace," let us avoid contention; be very slow to take offense, be quick to forgive, refuse to brood over grievances real or fancied. Let us be careful to avoid giving offense, which means that we shall be considerate of others, their rights and feelings, and if we have without intent given offense, be not above apology. Remember, "He hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation." Let your feet be "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace."

blue pencil notes

THIS DAY

By Geraldine Wyatt

“I JUST DON’T KNOW what things are coming to,” a very anxious woman complained to me the other day. Though strangers, we had been discussing both national and international affairs. And out of her deep concern had come her plaint.

With anxiety rampant, it is no wonder great numbers of people are worried. The radio and newspapers not only carry current eyewitness accounts of world-wide natural disasters, stories of battles, hatreds, and expected wars, but they also are the means of propagating predictions of economic collapse and ruin of every kind. Thus the picture of chaos becomes very vivid with: “Men’s hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.”

The real tragedy is that people become so terrorized by the outlook of the future, they neglect to live in the today. And it is the action, the living, and the fear of today which shapes the tomorrows.

From time to time, I have been called upon to teach knitting. Any person who has looked at knitting instructions knows how complicated and impossible of fulfilling these directions appear, with abbreviations and numbers all garbled together in an apparent unintelligible mass. I always admonish a beginner not to worry over them as a whole, but to follow each step as it comes. Almost miraculously, it seems, the pattern then becomes simple.

LIFE IS VERY MUCH the same. Looking into the future, it sometimes appears very bleak and impossible. But each day lived to the fullest changes the future for us into just a continuation of today.

Christ said, “Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the

* * * * *
* Author of “The Dawn of Peace,” and * * numerous contributions to both juvenile * * and adult publications, a faithful worker *
* in an Independence congregation, Mrs. *
* Wyatt has added to her achievements by *
* placing a novel with a national publisher, *
* soon to appear under the title, “Buffalo *
* Gold.” *
* * * * *

morrow shall take thought for the things of itself.” And in the prayer he gave us as an example, he prays, “Give us this day—”

One of the most amazing concepts of the intellect of God ever written is in Einstein’s Cosmic Religion. This famous scientist tells of hours he spent contemplating and wondering about God, and of how the orderliness of science proves a Creator of vast intellect. But, because of God’s greatness, Einstein could not believe He was any more interested in people than we are in the stones of the earth.

Personally, I have pondered considerably over why God is so interested in individuals. Why are we helped? Why are our prayers answered? Why, when we pray over our work, is it of higher quality? Is it because we are put on our best mettle? Or is it because we become aligned with the immeasurable force of God’s creative power? And honestly, I do not think the cause at all matters, since the effect is much more important. Undoubtedly there are laws and combinations of laws concerning prayer about which we are totally ignorant.

Since this is not an analytical article proving the why of God’s love and help, we will only repeat with Rousseau: “Above the logic of the head is the feeling in the heart.” And with Pascal: “The heart has reasons of its own, which the head can never understand.”

The important fact is that we recognize our heritage as God’s children, complying with his laws, seeking and accepting his proffered help, heeding the admonition: “Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man.”

I IN THE BOOK OF MORMON we find a very gripping story about Alma and his band of followers who fled into the wilderness from the persecution of King Noah. Here they established a righteous city, where they lived in peace and security until discovered by Amulon and the Lamanites, by whom Alma and his people were then harassed.

This righteous group called upon God for help. Amulon ordered them to cease praying, with the threat of death for any caught by the guards calling upon God. “And Alma and his people did not raise their voices to the Lord their God, but did pour out their hearts to him: and he did know the thoughts of their hearts.”

God not only strengthened them so that they could bear their burdens with ease, but he delivered them from bondage.

Like Alma and his followers, we need never face any trial alone. If we live according to God’s laws, we have the right to ask for his help.

“Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid,” to me are the most beautiful words in the Bible. I began my sophomore year in high school on my own. I had no home, no financial help. I attended classes of mornings and clerked in a downtown store afternoons and Saturdays.

With having to buy schoolbooks and supplies, clothing, pay room rent and three carfares a day, there was very little left for food. Two very inexpensive, but usually satisfying meals a day were a good average. Attending church cost another two precious dimes for carfare. Most of the time I went anyway, although quite often I spent the sermon period figuring finances, until I would become so anxious I did not know how to keep going. Then I would remember the last half of the sixth chapter of Matthew, and the fourteenth chapter of John. I would sit quietly in the pew and repeat these verses over and over to myself from memory: "Let not your heart be troubled:—" By the time the benediction was pronounced, I had courage to face the new week.

ONE OF US

By Ruby Tinkham

TO WASTE ENERGY on fear seems rather shameful. Especially is this true, since like any other emotion it can evoke the same feeling in others.

After all, our tomorrows can only be what our todays have created. If we accept Christ's proffer: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you," then the future will be free of fear. Yes, even though the world be full of doubt and grave imaginings, which naturally bring about grave happenings, man can have the sure, abiding peace of God.

It is the heritage Christ gives us for this day.

Christian Evidence

A generation ago Charles Bradlaugh, an atheist, challenged Hugh Price Hughes, a godly minister, to debate with him the truth of the Christian faith. The challenge was immediately accepted in these words: "The courts, as a rule, in rendering their verdicts, do not rely solely upon the arguments of the lawyers on either side. They carefully scrutinize the evidence offered by those who have firsthand knowledge of the facts. I will bring with me to the debate one hundred men and women who have been saved from lives of sin by the Gospel of Christ. They will give their evidence and you will be allowed to cross-examine them. I will ask that you bring with you one hundred men and women who have been similarly helped by the gospel of infidelity which you preach." The debate was abandoned. The agnostic had no evidence. The Christian had evidence.—H. T. Kerr, in the Elim Evangel.

MAYBE YOU ARE one of the little people—a truck driver or mechanic or salesman. Or maybe you're a housewife with three children to cook and wash and iron for, or a beauty operator or a stenographer. Maybe you ask yourself, "Where do I fit in the kingdom of God? What can I do?"

I have no special talents. I can't write a beautiful poem. I can't compose a soul-stirring hymn. (To be frank, I can barely carry a tune.) I read articles in the Herald, and the clarity and understanding with which the authors present their views astound me. I feel small and insignificant and slightly moronic. So I call myself one of the little people.

Did you ever try to pray and not know what to say? No beseeching now! No begging! No compromising! No promises in exchange for blessings! No asking for help that you don't actually need! I get up and know that I am a failure even at praying. There's no glorious singing in my heart; only confusion. That's what it is to be a little person.

OTHER PEOPLE HAVE the surety that the Book of Mormon is true. How many times have you been told, "If you'll only read it with the desire to know, God will make it known to you." So I desire to know! I sink my teeth into it, and I wade through it determinedly, word for word, missing nothing. For sheer drama, I have found nothing to equal it. It held me shivering at times and then made me want to cry. In my heart I appealed to God, "Please, dear Lord, give us another Shakespeare to immortalize our Book of Mormon."

Did I do anything with my newly found knowledge? No! Why? Because when I tried to talk about the beauty and emotional impact (discounting its historical significance)

I found in the Book of Mormon, my friends began to get restless and drop their heads as if they felt sorry for me. If I persisted (thinking it my duty, of course), they changed the subject or quickly agreed with me, so I would change it. It doesn't take much of that to cut you back to size. So there I am, just a little person again.

AND YET, in my neighborhood a farmer was seriously injured during harvest time. All the little people got together and brought in his entire corn crop from the field to the barn in two days. There was no talk about "what I believe" or "What church do you belong to?" Just, "There's a job to be done—let's do it." It was a grand feeling and lasted for quite a while, and it made me wonder about Zion. Right then I was glad to be one of the little people.

Writing

It takes courage to write—for after all, we seek human approbation and people are, for the most part, blunt and quick to find fault. Yet, once the idea is born, we think it's not worth writing but we put it down anyway. Then we are timid about showing it to anyone until someone sees it by accident and applauds it. This encourages us, however mistakenly. Next, at the insistence of someone else we entrust it, with trembling hands, to the United States mail and the judgment of an editor. We never forget the stamped, return envelope because we really couldn't bear to think of our manuscript languishing in an editorial wastebasket, however poor it might have been.

Then we wait an interminable length of time during which we suffer the tortures known only to writers. If we get only a rejection slip, we are righteously indignant. If it is accepted, no one is more surprised than we.—L. W.

Christ in the Schoolroom

A teacher's observations on education and religion

TODAY WE HEAR A lot about education. Everybody seems anxious to become educated. Thousands of discharged servicemen have enrolled in colleges, universities, business and vocational schools throughout the United States under the GI Bill of Rights. Thousands more of our young men and women are attending higher institutions of learning on their own initiative, scholarships, and subsistence from home. The great desire of our people to become educated is forcing the campuses of secondary schools, colleges, and universities to expand as never before in the history of our American educational system. Millions are marching through the halls of learning and will continue to do so. The year 1950 may bring a decrease in scholastic enrollment, but the figures will remain far above prewar statistics.

What type of education are these millions of Americans seeking? We may venture that their interests will be varied because of individual differences. A glance through any college catalog will reveal departments of knowledge in every academic field known to the human race. Mental and physical interests can be adequately satisfied by the modern educational curriculum. After the completion of a required number of hours (quarter or semester) of course work and a stipulated residence requirement, students are graduated from the colleges and universities of this country. This routine process is thought of as becoming educated. Our young and old are seeking an education in all of the arts and sciences. Every year, armies of students wearing caps and gowns parade around college campuses throughout the United States to let the world know that they have received degrees and are now educated.

TOO BAD THESE graduates are allowed to go out into the world unaware of their actual standing as measured by professional and business ethics. They are not educated; they are only slightly trained in the art of learning how to become educated. The serious educational process begins when the university graduates brush shoulders with society in an attempt to keep their date with the world. The correction of another erroneous conception in the thinking of scholars is that true education is founded upon religious principles and prepares one for a more abundant life through service, but does not necessarily guarantee a fabulous income. Many learned men and women have died penniless.

Becoming educated seems to be pretty much of a self-centered matter these days. The professor's permanent record thermometer has but three indicators which determine the student's grades, namely: facts, figures, and physical ability (of course the mercury is frequently forced up or down by likes and dislikes). Therefore, in the academic world, people are inclined to rely upon their own intellect for scholastic achievement. And, as they gain knowledge, they become more and more defiant when challenged to prove their kinship. These poor creatures are ignorant of the precepts of God; they are a law unto themselves. Isn't it wonderful that we have an understanding Saviour?

TODAY, GOD is seldom mentioned in the classrooms of our schools. We are told that education and religion do not go together in the curriculum. We are told that edu-

BY RUSSELL TOOZE

*An instructor in the Richard Henry Dana, Jr., High School
San Diego, California*

cation belongs in the schools and taught everything except Christ. Is religion in the churches. Pupils are it any wonder the penitentiaries and corrective institutions are filled to capacity? Is it strange that we have corrupt politics and business? How can there be anything but war, war, and more war? The teachings of Jesus Christ is the only solution to the problem. The Twenty-third Psalm should be hung in every classroom in America (elementary, secondary, and college) and over it should be inscribed in large gold letters, "THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD." Every man, woman, and child in the schools of this nation should be required to learn this spiritual literary gem and recite it in unison every morning before academic work begins.

Religion has a very definite place in education. Reference to Graceland College is sufficient to prove this contention. God lives at Graceland; Graceland students live for God. Too bad all institutions of learning aren't like this grand Alma Mater. They (educators, politicians, and some clergymen) say education and religion do not go together, but such folk never knew Graceland. And I'm not sure they want to, because they might have to carry out a general house-cleaning program. They should give serious thought to the admonition given in Daniel 12: 4, 10, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased . . . Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." Christ will have to be exemplified in the lives of our leaders (local, state, and national) before religion can be convincingly introduced into the schools. Perhaps now is a good time for everybody to become aware of the fact that Jesus lives in 1948 if the atomic war which is predicted for 1953 is to be prevented.

RELIGION IS NOT JUST a Sunday cloak. It must be a specific factor constantly motivating the personality of every human being if our modern world is to have a more abundant life. What is wrong with reading a Bible lesson to each class before the day's work begins? And what is so inconsistent about having the teacher or a student offer a prayer following the Scripture reading each day? We pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States every morning (at least we do in California) in our public schools. What is so harmful about pledging allegiance to God? This procedure certainly would not create a conflict of religious beliefs. Opponents of religious training and practices in the schools of this country cannot cite a single instance where conflict has resulted if the religious education plan was given a fair trial under competent leadership.

There are altogether too many ungodly men and women on our educational faculties today. President Truman's commission on higher education gives hazy recognition to this fact by saying, "Greater emphasis must be placed upon ethical ideals." True followers of Jesus Christ should staff our schools; as Ralph McDonald, Executive Secretary, Department of Higher Education, NEA, says, "The hand of the teacher is the one in the dyke of civilization. The raw product with which we deal is the human being, with its potentialities for good or evil, for fullness of living or emptiness of existence. What we mold is civilization." The Master Teacher taught according to the dictates of the Spirit of God. Present-day pedagogues could profit much by following his example.

If parents would practice saying the Lord's Prayer (2 Nephi 14: 11, 12) and reading the Scriptures (II Timothy 3: 16, 17; Psalm 19: 7) in the home, students would not be embarrassed at the sight of the Bible or astonished at the mention of the sacred name of our Lord. It would be safe to assume that at least ninety per cent of the instructional staff in the United States (which numbers 864,547) would blush to speak His name before their students or coworkers.

AS LATTER DAY SAINTS, we are obligated to warn the nation (if not the world) of the deplorable spiritual condition existing in the institutions of learning throughout the length and breadth of this land. We must call upon the government of the United States to appoint a commission to investigate this serious problem. Meanwhile, let us pray unceasingly until the Spirit of the Lord comes down from heaven and rests upon every person associated in any way with education. Then, when the school bells ring in the morning, signifying that it is time to begin work, we shall hear one great chorus all over America saying, "THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."

Forgiveness

By Ruthann Sager

IF WE ARE TO enjoy life, we must learn forgiveness. Many people have become embittered and despondent because they have neglected to forgive.

Jesus taught his disciples to seek forgiveness. He asserted his power to forgive and proclaimed he had come to seek and save the lost.

Most of us have experienced the wretchedness we have felt within ourselves, when we have had misunderstandings with someone. Yet, when we have forgiven or have asked forgiveness, the burden was lifted from our hearts.

When Jesus began his ministry, he exhorted his hearers to repent, which is the response of man to the appeal of God. Without repentance, we cannot enjoy the blessedness of his forgiveness.

When the prodigal acknowledged his folly and need, he said, "I will arise and go to my father." He repented. The prodigal's welcome illustrates God's readiness to forgive and restore. This matter of forgiveness lies at the bottom of all our joy.

DO WE ALWAYS forgive when others seek forgiveness? Do we always ask forgiveness of others? Christ forgave and asked God to forgive even as he was nailed to the cross. If God looked only on the products of life and nations and people today, he would probably be tempted to give up the world as a bad job. But he offers forgiveness of sin and redemption from evil habits. "For thus saith the Lord . . . Seek ye me, and ye shall live." —Amos 5: 4.

We must keep striving, learning, and working. We must try to help others so that they may have a chance to know and love God. We must support by way of inviting hearers who need the gospel, and by prayer, and by financial aid. Those who cannot teach or preach must make it possible for others to spread the gospel story. We will win friends for the church only when we live such examples that we become magnets to draw people to God. Our lives will have to be such that other people will spontaneously believe in our religion.

To acknowledge God means more than to recognize him in general terms as the Lord of the earth. It means to trust him with our whole hearts—to have faith in him and serve him, to look to him for guidance each day. If our feet are to be directed in the paths of peace and safety, we must acknowledge him in all our ways.

What Latter Day Saints Believe

LAST WEEK WE TOLD of our belief in the Bible. We asserted our belief in the inspiration of the Bible, but not in its infallibility in its present form. We asserted our belief in its testimony that Jesus is the Christ. We asserted our faith in its teachings as our guide in matters of faith, morals, church organization, function, and practice, and our instructor in the means of salvation. But, in conclusion, we also asserted our belief in an open canon of scripture, and in the more fundamental fact that the Bible does not contain all of the inspired word of God. That brings us, now, to a consideration of what Latter Day Saints believe about the Book of Mormon.

What is the place of the Book of Mormon? Why do Latter Day Saints believe in it? Why is not the Bible enough? What proofs can be presented to indicate that the Book of Mormon is worthy of a place beside the Bible as a sacred record? What do Latter Day Saints believe about it? Many volumes have been written about the Book of Mormon, but we shall try to condense our beliefs into this one short article.

Latter Day Saints believe that the Bible prophetically foretells the migration of certain peoples to the American continent, their writing of sacred records, and the coming forth of those records at an appointed time to stand as a witness beside the Bible. In other and plainer words, Bible prophecy foretells the Book of Mormon. Let us examine first the forty-ninth chapter of Genesis, which tells how Jacob called his twelve sons about him for a last blessing. Jacob says (verse one), "Gather yourselves together that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days." Jacob's prophecy, then, had to do with the descendants of his twelve sons. Some of the blessings are only one short verse; others, two or three verses in the Biblical account. The longest blessing, and the one most fruitful in promise, is the blessing to Joseph, his youngest son. In it, Joseph and his posterity are characterized as a "fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall," indicating that Joseph's posterity shall cross the barrier of waters and settle in a new land. In verse twenty-five are enumerated the blessings of that land; and in verse twenty-six is given the location—"Unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills." Starting from Egypt, where this blessing was given, the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills" would be the American continent on the other side of the world, which was promised to Joseph and his seed for an inheritance.

Now turn with us to the thirty-third chapter of Deuteronomy, in which Moses pronounces certain blessings upon the twelve tribes of Israel. Israel has been led forth from Egypt and is about to enter the promised land of Canaan, while Moses sits on a mount overlooking the land and delivers his final prophetic blessing. Read from the thirteenth to the seventeenth verses of this chapter for a description of the blessing. Compare them with the known size and resources of Palestine, remembering that the descendants of Joseph through Ephraim and Manasseh received only a portion of that land as an inheritance; you will readily see that Moses is not speaking of Palestine. Compare those resources with the known size and resources of America and refer again to Jacob's promise; the conclusion is inescapable. Joseph's land is the land of America.

The twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah is cited by Latter Day Saints as foretelling the appearance of the Book of Mormon. Two great cities or civilizations are discussed in this chapter. The first is Ariel, or Jerusalem, for which distress and heaviness and sorrow are promised. The second is another civilization which shall be to me (God) as Ariel, which shall be brought down, and which shall speak low out of the dust. The Scriptures of the Jews from Jerusalem have been known to the world since their composition. They have never whispered low out of the dust. But the sacred writings of the American continent were hidden in the ground and in due time were brought forth as a "sealed book" (see verse eleven). Read the remainder of the chapter, and you will see that the coming forth of this book was to be shortly followed by a marvelous work and a wonder and by the return of fertility to Palestine. The coming forth of the Book of Mormon was followed by the restoration of the gospel and the establishing of Christ's church in its original purity of doctrine and perfection or organization; and it was also shortly followed by a return of the former and latter rains to the land of Palestine. And here we might also mention the prophecies of Ezekiel concerning portions of Israel which were to cross the sea (Ezekiel 27: 16, 17; 17:1-10), and Isaiah's prophecy in the eighteenth chapter of the land lying "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia."

Latter Day Saints believe that the Book of Mormon fulfills the requirements of Jesus' statement in John 10: 16: "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also must I bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." These "other sheep" could not have been the Gentiles for Jesus said, "I am not sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Since there were only remnants of

About the Book of Mormon

BY EVAN A. FRY

the two tribes of Israel remaining in Palestine during Jesus' day, it seems obvious that he was referring to some of the lost and scattered remnants of Israel as the "other sheep" who should also hear his voice. The Book of Mormon teaches that those "other sheep" were the prehistoric inhabitants of America, who were of the house of Israel through Joseph of Egypt and that Christ visited them here after his ascension.

Latter Day Saints believe the Book of Mormon because the central figure of that book from cover to cover is Jesus Christ. The early Book of Mormon prophets prophesied of him and bore witness that he should be the Messiah who was promised to their fathers. The people of Book of Mormon times learned to expect him. They received signs of his birth, of his death, and of his resurrection. After his ascension, he visited the people of the American continent, taught them his gospel, established his church, chose twelve disciples as he had in the Holy Land, and instituted the Lord's Supper, baptism, healing of the sick, and so forth. This we believe is reasonable, inasmuch as God made of one blood all nations, determined the times before appointed and the bounds of their habitation; and inasmuch as God sent his only begotten Son to save the world—not just a minute portion of the old world—we believe, furthermore, that although the Bible is an undeniably strong witness to the divinity of Jesus Christ, the Book of Mormon adds another strong testimony to that same truth, in keeping with the ancient Biblical principle that "in the mouths of two or three witnesses shall all things be established." We point also to the declared purpose of the book, as printed in the preface prepared by Moroni, who was the final compiler of the several histories that went into the complete book: ". . . to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations."

Latter Day Saints believe in the Book of Mormon because its doctrines not only agree with the doctrines of the Bible, but they greatly clarify and explain them. All Christian people believe the Bible and accept it as their final authority in matters of faith, doctrine, and practice. Yet, we have literally hundreds of Christian denominations, with almost complete disunity about such simple doctrines as baptism, original sin, atonement, life after death, the nature of God and Christ, and spiritual gifts. If the Bible can be the source of such confusion and disunity, either there is something wrong with those who interpret the Bible, or there is something quite confusing about the Bible, which needs to be clarified. For those who will accept it, the Book of Mormon will go a long way toward bringing unity of faith and doctrine among those who believe in the Bible. The Book of Mormon teaches the same high plane of morality as does the Bible—particularly the New Testament. It counsels honesty, sobriety, chastity and integrity in the marriage relation, loyalty to governments that guarantee men's freedom, industry, thrift, love of neighbor as of self, co-operative economic and social action—in short, it commends all the virtues which the Bible commends, and condemns all the vices which the Bible condemns. Truth must agree with itself and with other truth in whatever time it appears. The record of God's dealing with the people of the American continent agrees in moral and spiritual tone with the record of his dealings with the people of the old world.

Latter Day Saints believe that the Book of Mormon is a valuable book for use in converting the Jews, as well as the descendants of the ancient peoples of America, to a belief in Christ. The New Testament, with its testimony of Christ, has been in existence for nearly two thousand years, but the Jews who have been converted to Christianity through the Bible are negligible in quantity. Of course, the same might be said as yet of the Book of Mormon; but that book is only 117 years old, and Latter Day Saints believe that it will yet be the means of convincing great numbers of the House of Israel that Jesus is the Christ. It will be the principal means of approach to the great multitudes of American natives in Central and South America, who will welcome this history of their ancestors, and who will find it in agreement with their own national and tribal legends and histories.

That suggests, at this point, a mention of our belief concerning the archaeological, historical, ethnological, and anthropological evidences of the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon. We believe that the Book of Mormon is unique in that it is the only book that can satisfactorily explain American origins. It was delivered to the printer in 1829, before there were any works on American archaeology printed and available in America. It contained some statements which were hailed as ludicrous and impossible; but as archaeological discoveries have increased, fact after fact which is stated in the Book of Mormon has been verified. The Book of Mormon explains why in America there are remains of two great civilizations or cultures, of which the older is the greater or higher. It explains why the centers of these two ancient cultures were in Central and South America. It explains the means by which these two great civilizations rose and the things which contributed to their downfall. It explains why so much of Hebraic and Egyptian influence is found in these ancient ruins on the other side of the world from Palestine and Egypt. It explains what no other book can explain—something which the world's best historians and archaeologists have tried unsuccessfully to explain for the past hundred years—the reason for the widespread use of the cross in ancient American building and ornamentation, and for the almost universal traditions among all native American races of a bearded white god who appeared out of the east, taught them religion and culture and arts and skills and sciences, and then departed in the direction from which he had come, promising some day to return to them.

Before you dismiss the Book of Mormon as a cheap fraud upon credulous, simple people, you will do well to examine the book itself, and all the reasons which we have so briefly given for our belief in it. Check our reasons with the known facts. Compare the Book of Mormon with the Bible. Study the Bible prophecies concerning it. Pray as you study, that your mind might be open to truth, and on guard against error or deceit. If you do this, the Book of Mormon contains the promise that God by his Holy Spirit will bear witness to the truthfulness of it, so that those who really desire to know, may know. We invite you to claim that promise and to join us in the inspiration and beauty and enjoyment which are to be found in the Book of Mormon.

An "If" for Latter Day Saints

If you're a Saint who sits and waits
For better days to come,
And feel there's nothing you can do,
Or that your work is done,
That the task of building Zion
Is for someone else to do,
Then, my friend, you must get busy,
For Zion waits for you!
—Darlene Bowden.

Tributes to Beauty of "The Messiah" Broadcast

(Continued from page 4.)

ing. The soloists were excellent, their voices clear as bells. It was good to hear Garland's voice again; Van Deursen, who is a newcomer to us, did an admirable job. The ladies' voices left nothing to be desired.

FRANK AND MARIE SHANK.
Chicago, Illinois

Will you please accept for yourself and convey to your choir my sincere thanks for the glorious rendering of the sacred cantata on the night of December 25 heard here over CFRB. Born of a musical family, I have heard Handel's masterpieces in many places under varying conditions throughout half a century; at times have sung them. I do not recall ever having enjoyed "The Messiah" more than last Thursday night; it was my biggest treat this Christmas.

JOHN R. STUBBS.
Toronto, Canada

It came over the air perfectly here in Philadelphia. The choir is out of this world! And it was certainly inspiring to me to hear Mrs. Mader. She has such a beautiful voice. Thank you for a thrilling experience.

EDNA STONE.
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

May I congratulate you for what I consider a perfect offering of "The Messiah." . . . "Worthy Is the Lamb" was outstanding, a cappella "Since by Man Came Death" perfect in pitch, symphony absolutely accurate as any accompanist could possibly be. The choir portrayed such excellent balance, and how precise you were! If I were to adjudicate your choir, I'd give a perfect rating. The soloists were likewise outstanding—particularly the contralto.

RACHEL LATIMORE MEYER.
Tucson, Arizona

I listened to "The Messiah" on Christmas night—it was grand. The entrances, runs, solos, in fact everything was most commendable.

ANNIE VINCENT.
Independence, Missouri

We listened to "The Messiah" over station WCAU, Philadelphia . . . was a grand piece of work.

MYRTLE BOECKMAN.
Dayton, Ohio

We enjoyed the broadcast of "The Messiah"—it came in so plain and clear . . . never heard anything like it . . . it sounded as if it was coming from another world.

MR. AND MRS. R. R. WALTER.
Elkhart, Indiana

The blend of the chorus and diction was very beautiful. Josephine Mader was excellent, so was Garland Tickemyer—in fact, it all was splendid. . . . Wish we could hear them more often.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES W. HARRIS.
Brooklyn, New York

"We heard it from the CBS station in Omaha . . . it was as nearly a perfect performance as I've ever dreamed possible, and you are surely to be congratulated on it.

LOIS MOORE.
Mead, Washington

I wish to express my thanks and deep appreciation for "The Messiah" broadcast over radio station CFRB, Toronto. Coming at such a late hour here, it was a very fitting climax to a beautiful Christmas day.

J. F. STEWART.
Toronto, Canada

I heard your rendition of "The Messiah" on Christmas night, and I want to say it is the best presentation I have ever listened to. Your diction came over the air very well as a group, and your solo voices were marvelous. I certainly was glad I stayed up until that late hour to hear this. I was well repaid.

GEORGE STERTZER.
Columbus, Ohio

We picked up "The Messiah" through KRLD at Dallas, and it was truly wonderful. Seems to me it was better than ever before.

MRS. DARRELL.
Colorado Springs, Colorado

Out of Darkness Into Light

It was a great thing in the eyes of the early apostles of Jesus for someone to hear the gospel and become a covenant follower of the Christ. "The very angels long to get a glimpse of this," said the Apostle Peter. Again he said, "But ye are a chosen generation . . . that ye should show forth the praises of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."

The Apostle Paul likewise rejoices in the great blessings of God when he writes to the Colossians of "Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light: who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son."

These men wanted to pass on the light that had come to them. It was a great treasure to be shared, especially with those they loved. Of Andrew, the brother of Peter, it is said that after John the Baptist had told him of Jesus, "He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the Messiah." He first wanted his own brother to hear the good news.

This eagerness to share the glad tidings with others was also manifested among the ones who received the restored gospel in the early days of the Restoration Movement. The desire that sons and daughters and other loved ones might receive the gospel caused the work to grow rapidly and spread afar. We quote from the Story of the Church to show how the gospel was carried to one Canadian community in 1833:

"In the month of September, one Freeman Nickerson who had a large and prosperous farm in the town of Dayton, Cattaraugus County, New York, consisting of two hundred acres on Conewango Creek, took a journey to Kirtland with his wife. There had been preaching in his home for some time, and at length he and his wife were baptized. They had two sons working in Canada. They were good boys, and came home very frequently and divided all their earnings with their parents, and although they had tried to explain the gospel to these sons, they had not been very successful. Their purpose in coming to Kirtland was to take the prophet to Canada to convert their sons! And that is exactly what they did."

Because of the interest of those parents in the welfare of their children, the work was started in that area.

God would have us, now, take an interest first and very earnestly, in making the gospel effective in the lives of those whom we love most dearly because of family ties. He says to us in latter-day revelation that parents who are members of the church should "teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." He also urges that they be so taught that they shall be ready and "shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands." In the eyes of God it is a great thing that children shall be taught to obey the gospel in their early years.

How great is the meaning of this command to you—everyone of you? Does it have in it consequences of life or death for the children of the church, as to whether or not they are taught? Are we passing on to them treasures of everlasting life, as we think of teaching them the gospel?

Andrew first went and told his beloved brother Peter! Perhaps this should always be the beginning of our evangelistic efforts.—Glaude A. Smith, in Stone Church Bulletin, February 15, 1948.

Wants to Contact Members

I should like to locate the nearest branch or mission of the church, and I shall also appreciate hearing from any members in this area.

MRS. OTIS BAKER.
112 West Mable Street
Odessa, Texas

Requests Letters for Friend

Mrs. John Graham, Route 1, Fort Scott, Kansas, asks that anyone who is interested in consoling a bereaved widow write to Mrs. H. A. Brooner, Charles Street, Route 1, Fort Scott, Kansas. Mr. Brooner died recently of a heart attack.

Attractive Landscaping for a Small Church

The Church Beautiful

By BISHOP C. A. SKINNER

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork.
FROM THE ABOVE QUOTATION from Psalms, we infer the Lord must have an appreciation for the beautiful. The beauty of nature, the work of his hands confirms this thought. The mountains, the valleys, and plains all reflect the master mind of the great Creator. God showed interest in beauty when he gave instructions with reference to the building of the first house of worship, the tabernacle in the wilderness, as also with subsequent temples. There is no doubt that the Lord appreciates a well-planned and well-kept church building.

Too many of our houses of worship have been neglected; rather than being places of which we are proud, they are cause for shame. The church is judged by the quality and appearance of its plants.

The thought in presenting this article is to stimulate interest and pride in the appearance of our church buildings and lawns.

For centuries, architecture, painting, and sculpture have been classified among the fine arts. For years, landscape architecture has been considered on the same plane, for really it is an art of building; therefore, some of the techniques used by architects and engineers are employed by the landscape specialist. The ability to arrange land and objects upon it so as to present the most pleasing effect is a real art and is in harmony with the thought expressed by the Lord as revealed in section 59: 4, 5 of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"The fullness of the earth is yours; . . . yea all things which cometh from the earth in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye and gladden the heart; . . . And it pleaseth God that he has given all these things unto man for unto this end were they made."

Can we not get enjoyment and pleasure from placing, in an artistic manner, shrubs around the church, trees in the yards and along the streets, and roses on the trellis? Let every branch join in making its church home more beautiful and attractive.

A member who is interested in seeing us beautify our church yards and lawns has offered the following prizes to the branch that produces the most attractive landscaping.

- First—One leather bound Inspired Version
- One leather bound Book of Mormon
- One leather bound Doctrine and Covenants
- Second—One leather bound Book of Mormon
- Third—One leather bound Doctrine and Covenants

The contest will end October 1, 1948.

This might be a good project for Zion's League, or for some church school class. Mail pictures of your church to "Church Beautiful Contest," Herald Publishing House. Competent people will be selected to act as judges.

The above picture may give you an idea of what can be worked out, even for small places.

A Leisure Hour . . . for What?

BY LOUISE WRIGLEY

THE FIRST THING that catches my eye in a bookshop is the "Hobby Section." The bright book jackets pull me like a magnet. Inside the covers of these books, I find unfolding a whole new world of adventure . . . an adventure in achievement and contentment.

Hobbies are such fun! Lots of people haven't yet discovered it. Have you? Psychologists say that hobbies enable us to "let off steam," and "get away from it all." Yes, they help take our minds off our troubles and ourselves. They give us something constructive to do with our hands, our minds, and our time. We don't care what the high-sounding terms are—we only know that we lose ourselves in something fascinating, and the busy, happy hours fly. Our back muscles ease up—our leg muscles unknot—our facial muscles loosen into a smile. Yes, we're relaxing.

What will do this for you? How can you choose a hobby? There are as many different kinds of hobbies as there are people. What some like, others care nothing for. We can choose anything we like and make it a hobby. That is its peculiar appeal—that it may be as personal and individual as we care to make it.

HOBBYISTS HAVE SAID that you don't always pick out a hobby with a cold, calculating eye. You just think long enough about something you'd like to do, and the first think you know, you're doing it. When it has irrevocably attached itself to you, it becomes (sometimes to your surprise) your hobby.

The days of considering stamp collecting and coin collecting as the standard hobbies are over. For some they still retain their old appeal, but many new and exciting hobbies have been "discovered" and acknowledged. Now, anything from tying fishing flies to planning cruises abroad for travel-hungry friends makes an absorbing leisure-hour pastime.

In addition, public libraries all over the country are beginning to be veritable treasure houses of information on crafts, sciences, model-buildings, and many other unrelated subjects, all selected as possible hobby material. So you needn't bumble along in the dark. If there is something which especially interests you, chances are you can find a fairly good source of information readily available. There are magazines, too, which are published solely for the enjoyment of those who like to keep up with what others are doing in the hobby world.

POPULAR PASTIMES ARE leathercraft, silvercraft, woodworking, and photography. Coppercraft is gaining popularity, and forming the gleaming metal into useful and decorative items is fascinating. Painting glass and china rewards one with an array of delicately beautiful pieces for display. Making good book friends through reading is a highly satisfying hobby. Restoring furniture and antiques is absorbing work in which skill is attained only by careful attention to detail. Stenciling with textile paints produces amazing results for the amateur. Party planning, sewing, quilting, and travel are all stimulating in their own manner.

Irma Rombauer started collecting recipes when her children asked for "what Mother used to make." This collecting tided her over a period of loneliness and grew into an unusual cookbook. It was just a hobby with her, but now her book is on the shelves of almost every leading bookshop in the country.

Model-building and "railroading" appeal to men. Some, defying tradition, knit, crochet, and tat unbelievably beautiful things.

Some people's hobbies are making other people happy. Some find joy in a garden. Some collect folk songs. Some circulate magazines to shut-ins.

MRS. LUCY GOODE McDOWELL has found an unusual interest which is providing an educational opportunity. She collects prints of Madonnas. This hobby, which has come to mean more than just collecting to her, started when Dr. McDowell went to Europe in 1930. He visited twelve different countries and many galleries where some of the world's finest art was hung. He sent back post cards and other sizes of pictures which were copies of the gallery collections. Somehow or other, they seemed to be predominantly Madonnas.

Mrs. McDowell had been collecting all sorts of pictures since 1920 as she painted and was using this collection for art studies. Then the idea occurred to her, "Why not collect Madonnas!"

She says that this interest "just grew." Along with her Madonnas, she continued to gather religious pictures of all types. She has been called upon many times to furnish these pictures for worship services in the Independence churches and is very gracious about lending them. Of pictures of Christ, she says it is interesting to note that no matter how crude or primitive the picture, should it feature his face, it is immediately recognizable—which testifies to the distinctiveness of the face.

- - - a home column feature - - -

The likeness of Christ has been perpetuated in gold, silver, brass, copper, stone, iron, glass, clay (pottery) and wood—each a part of the earth itself. Mrs. McDowell even discovered a lady who has executed the Last Supper in lace.

THERE ARE OVER 400 prints in this unusual group, most of them colored prints. She does not go out to seek new Madonnas but clips them from magazines and newspapers as they are printed. The newspaper prints are merely for reference. She tries then to get duplicates in color or black and white. She has a few etchings and some very fine black and white prints.

Two genuine Currier and Ives Madonnas are a valued part of Mrs. McDowell's collection, and she is looking forward to adding a genuine Wedgwood Madonna to the rest soon.

In addition, she is building a library of reference books about her chosen subject. Some contain only chapters, some are wholly concerned with her subject matter, all are informative and interesting reading. Mrs. McDowell is primarily looking toward the knowledge and history of these Madonnas, the country in which they originated, how they came to be painted, and the legends surrounding them.

At present she is very much intrigued with learning more about two or three Ikons, one of which is supposed to be on the island of Malta where St. Paul was wrecked. This Ikon is said to be in a cathedral which has been built to the memory of St. Paul. Another, called The Miraculous Ikon, is reportedly in an old monastery in the vicinity of Cyprus, high in the mountains. It has made the monastery famous all over the Greek Orthodox Church. These three are said to have been painted by St. Luke. The location

The Stranger

By Marie Gosline

And they are as the angels of God, and if they shall pray unto the Father in the name of Jesus, they can shew themselves unto whatsoever man it seemeth them good.—3 Nephi 13:42.

IT WAS NEARLY TIME FOR prayer meeting, the first to be held in the new church. There was still much to be done and few willing hands to do it. The dedication services were just three days away, and it seemed to Sister Mary as she sat alone in the rear of the church that it would be impossible to have it ready by Sunday. If only she were not so tired—so tired and so discouraged! In her mind, she reviewed the struggle which she and a few others had made to build that church. It had been a trial the whole way along. First, the carpenters had become dissatisfied and were on the verge of quitting. Then, the plumbing fixtures were late in arriving. Finally, the electrician failed to appear. This afternoon the church was to be cleaned, but no one came save seventy-year-old Sister Mary. Others had promised . . . promised, and that was all. So few hands to do so much! Now, before prayer service, the chairs at the back of the church must be placed in straight rows. But she was too tired to do it. She prayed, "God, why is it so hard? Why must I do everything alone?" But it was growing late, and soon the crowd would be coming. "Alone," she whispered to herself as she arose and started to arrange the chairs.

She picked up one chair and set it in its place. She picked up another. Then she heard footsteps coming up the front stairway. She turned to look and, walking toward her as though on a cloud, was a young man, his black hair shining in the light. Sister Mary thought, "Here is a stranger. I must speak to him." So she said, "Hello." He looked at her steadily and without smiling asked, "You do not know me?" All at once the verses from the Book of Mormon came to her . . . "And behold they will be among the Gentiles, and the Gentiles knoweth them not. They will also be among the Jews, and the Jews shall know them not."

After the stranger had spoken, he helped arrange the chairs, moving from one to another with hardly a sound. Peace and a warm spirit filled the room. So touched by the spirit was Sister Mary she could do nothing but stand and watch. Then suddenly he went out the front door and was gone.

"Did you pass someone on the stairs?" asked Sister Mary of the good woman who was first to arrive.

"Could it have been . . . an angel?" she whispered.

"Hush," said Sister Mary. "Hush!"

of the third is not known.

When Mrs. McDowell travels, her souvenirs are usually Madonnas. She feels that they have added materially to her life and to her appreciation of beautiful things. As she puts it, "I have found so many lovely things, they help to keep me thinking along lovely lines."

From time to time we hope to bring you reports on hobbies from our people all over the nation. If you are keeping something interesting under your hat, won't you share it with us? Just give us all the information you can, and send it to the Women's Department, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

LETTERS

I Married Outside the Church

I married outside the church. My wife joined shortly afterward. Our children were raised in the church, and at one time did splendid church work, holding and working in several district and local offices. Later on in life, I married a fine lady who was not a member of our church. Now to obey the gospel law includes tithing, offerings, and consecration. How much harder and almost impossible to obey this important part when one's companion requires her share for her church, or objects to the law of tithing. Man was formed from the dust of the earth, but woman was formed of something better—"out of the body of man," spiritually more than physically. To be married successfully means more to a Latter Day Saint than to those of other denominations. There is a body and soul in man, and how can a son or daughter of God unite with a body and soul of the sons of man and successfully perform the work he is called to do in redeeming Zion?

We have a daughter fifteen years old, seemingly with very little religious inclination. I would like very much to send her to Graceland.

Many times I have sensed the feelings of our prophet when he said, "It rejoices my soul that I am no longer to be alone in the world."

Read Genesis, chapter viii. The synopsis states: "The sons of God transgress by taking wives of the daughters of men"; third verse: "And the Lord said unto Noah, the daughters of thy sons have sold themselves, for behold mine anger is kindled against the sons of men, for they will not hearken unto my voice." This chapter goes on to say that Noah prophesied and taught the gospel as it was in the beginning. Those of Noah's, Moses' and Joseph's time were taught the same. Why? Because as God told Moses: "Not because you are numerous, because you are few, but because you are a chosen people about to enter the promised land." So it is with us today. Moses dwelt forty years on the border because his generation was unprepared to enter. How long will our generation tarry on the border of health, wealth, and plenty or all the blessings promised to the chosen people who obey all the commandments? Think of the time and cost in bringing this one commandment down to our time. Can we rely on the advice of the ages, or do we still have to learn by our own experiences—many times too late for our own good or the good of our cause. I know there are exceptions but there are exceptions to almost all rules. I hope to see our teachers and leaders more diligent in teaching this law.

(Author's name withheld)

God Speaks

While in Toledo on a business trip some twenty-eight years ago, I was in a large store, standing in line to be waited on when God spoke to me saying, "Go to Brother M." I knew there was such a man in that city, but not wanting to miss my turn, I waited. Again I heard the voice, and I decided I would go after business hours. In a few minutes, the words were repeated with great power, so I left at once. When I reached the house, Mrs. M. came to the door. She said that her husband was at General Conference, but she asked me to come in. I wondered why I had been sent until I noticed a girl who appeared to be in pain. Mrs. M. explained that her daughter had been in a severe accident and would have to have part of her hand amputated. The doctor wanted to operate immediately, but the girl asked for administration first. By the next day, her hand was almost entirely healed.

Again, several years ago, God spoke to me in my office. I was busy, and the brother I was told to see lived several miles away. When I heard the words, "You go to Brother C.," the second time, I left my work and went to his home. This brother was dying; he said, "It is too late; there is no hope," but I administered to him anyway. During the administration, I felt a power surging through my arms. Afterwards, I said, "Brother C., I feel that your voice will again be heard among the Saints." This was verified in less than thirty days.

I know God speaks and is a God of miracles. Let us all be humble and have faith in the Omnipotent Father.

Dover, Ohio

A. B. KLAR.

From a Lonely Member

It has been worth the price of a year's subscription to the Herald to read "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." So few seem to understand that we are living in perilous times.

I am isolated and would be glad to hear from any Herald readers my age; I am seventy-six. My son was buried six weeks ago. I am lonely and need your prayers.

Box 232

BERTHA PHILLIPS.

McArthur, Ohio

"Light of Life" Program in the Boston Area

Mrs. Myron C. Fisher, Jr., of Lexington, Massachusetts, under the direction of Reed Holmes, district president, supervises the "Light of Life" work in the Boston area. A recent letter enclosed applications certifying completed work for eight award certificates, one each for the first and second awards and six for the third award. Two mother-daughter teams are enrolled: Mrs. Fisher and her daughters, Carolyn and Kay-Frances, of the Girl Scout organization of Lexington, Massachusetts; and Mrs. Edward L. Traver, Jr., and her daughter, Sandra Jeanne, of the 4-H organization of Derry, New Hampshire. The "Light of Life" program is the religious award program for the girls of our church participating in the various activity programs: Girl Scout, Oriole Girl, 4-H Club, Camp Fire Girl, and others.

Sends Greetings to Friends

I am thankful to have the Herald coming to my home each week, and I take this means of sending greetings to all the Saints I have learned to love. I especially enjoy reading their testimonies. I had a serious operation recently, but God was with me and I knew no fear. That he may bless suffering humanity everywhere is my prayer.

G. F. Walling

233 West Second Avenue
Denver, Colorado

From an Isolated Member

There are eight in our family. Four of us have been members of the Reorganized Church since 1943, but inasmuch as the nearest branch is at Memphis, we are isolated from church privileges. We will appreciate hearing from Saints in other parts of the state or elsewhere. Please pray for us.

Mrs. Mary Wray

Route 1

Gates, Tennessee

Letter From England

To Sisters Dorothy Bryson, Carolyn Larson, and all the women of Portland, Oregon, Branch, we send thanks for the parcels which were safely delivered here just before Christmas. An even amount was distributed to each home. We cannot express the happiness which was registered in the faces of our Saints as they received these gifts. We also wish to express our appreciation to Sister Thelma Cline and the women of Cincinnati, Ohio, for their parcels. We pray that they may be blessed and that their joy will be full.

To Brother Paul Goodrich, pastor of the Grand Island, Nebraska, congregation, we send word that the church here in Warrington, which he used to visit, is being repaired and redecorated.

May our united efforts on both sides of the Atlantic be such that the establishment of Zion will be a reality in the near future.

G. O. Lampard

"Cumorah"
25 Dorothea Street
Orford,
Warrington,
Lancashire, England

A Blessing From God

For the past two months, we have had a water shortage in Santa Barbara. Because of this, it was necessary to ration water, except for domestic use, to conserve our storage supply. No lawns, flowers, shrubbery, or trees could be watered; all plant life was so neglected that dust began to fly from the yards. One man used a plane to shoot dry ice into the clouds; an Indian Chief was imported from Oregon as a "rain-maker," but no rain fell. Church people resorted to prayer in hopes of bringing an end to the dry spell. Suddenly, the sky filled with black clouds, and two inches of rain fell within twenty-four hours. It was a relief in many ways. Although we now have little more reserve than before, the grass and trees have been revived. It was a real blessing, and it came from God.

C. J. Lant

1717 Thomas Avenue
Santa Barbara, California

Letters of Appreciation

Mrs. L. L. Jordan, Wynne, Arkansas; Ethel Sheppard, 203 West Church Street, Lexington, Tennessee; and Mrs. George Standard, Box 75, Quincy, Ohio, express their appreciation for the cards and letters they have received from Herald readers. They are also grateful for having been remembered in prayer by the Saints.

Grateful for Letters

I want to thank all who remembered me with prayers, cards, and letters. I have been truly blessed, and my health is much improved.

Mrs. Burl Sopher

Route 1
Boscobel, Wisconsin

Murder in a Laboratory

Lady Nicotine apprehended in death of a mouse and a fish. The mouse and the fish couldn't help themselves, but you can. Why be a mouse? Or a fish?

Smoking's Something to Think About

This new filmstrip promises excellent aid to parents and church school workers in the campaign against the rapidly increasing tobacco habit among younger school children. In a dramatic way, this series of still pictures, each carrying its own explanatory title, shows how some young people enter a laboratory and by conducting their own experiments show the destructive power of tobacco.

S. F. Filmstrip $2.50 ea.

Life of Christ Slides

by ELSIE ANNA WOOD

This set of 50 slides is generally considered to be the finest collection of pictures on the life of Christ available from one artist. Elsie Anna Wood has been a resident of the Holy Land for many years and has an intimate knowledge of the manners and customs of the people, which have changed little since the time of Christ. Each picture was painted with a deep understanding of the background against which the particular event took place, giving a feeling of authenticity seldom equaled in paintings by the Old Masters. It is this authentic quality that makes this set usable in so many teaching situations. Individual slides can be used in picture-centered worship services. Certain groups of a seasonal nature can be used for worship services at the appropriate time. Other groups or individual slides can be used to visualize church school lessons. The accompanying script was prepared by Eveline Burgess under the direction of the Advisory Committee on Visual Education.

Set of 50 slides bound in glass with copy of script $30.00

Set of 50 slides in Eastman readymounts with script $25.00

Visual Aids Department

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Independence, Missouri

The Satisfied Customer

By Philip Moore

DO YOU WANT TO HELP the missionaries of the church? Do you want to make it possible for them to have greater results? If you do, become a satisfied customer.

In the business world of today, the very best advertisement is one that cries, "I tried it; it's wonderful; you try it, too." Every day we hear and see the personal endorsement of the nation's products. "Try Fresh Skin Soap if your marriage is going on the rocks. Connie LaFemme, the famous movie actress, is never without her cake of Fresh Skin." And so, because a million American women think Connie LaFemme is beautiful and charming, they too try this new soap. In their rush to be beautiful, they may forget this pretty starlet has had her own romance or romances go on the ash heap. The satisfied customer has sold them. The radio, the magazine, the newspaper, the billboards that line our highways and all other avenues to reach the eyes and ears of a customer nation bombard us with the personal testimony of a customer satisfied by any and all commodities.

The advertising agencies of the nation depend upon the "satisfied customer" to do a big percentage of their advertising. It is as natural as can be to tell others of the things that you like. As soon as a young mother is home from the hospital with her new charge, she receives from her friends and neighbors a multitude of suggestions on the ways and means of keeping the baby happy. Some of these suggestions may be the kind our advertising tycoons want, for they endorse certain commercial products. Other ideas may be the endorsements of ways of life, ways of eating, various schedules, and the values or disadvantages of rocking the child to sleep.

At the same time, her husband may be getting the neighbor's newest idea on a different way to land a rainbow trout or plant his summer's garden. Whatever it is we learn or discover for ourselves, we want to help our friends by letting them in on the secret.

SIMILARLY, THE MOST effective witness of the gospel's worth is a satisfied customer—one who himself has experienced the redemptive power of the Spirit of God in his life. However, this individual finds that he cannot give his verbal testimony and allow it to stand alone, for the world demands that it be supported by evidence in his life that his testimony is true. We cannot honestly believe that all the movie stars, athletes, debutantes and such, actually use all the products they endorse. They have the advantage of distance, for very few of the gullible purchasers actually see these people prove or disprove their endorsement. They take it for granted that way out in Hollywood a certain star does use that toilet soap. However, when we are trying to persuade our neighbors to believe our concepts of the gospel, they will look to see what our attitudes have done in our lives. If I tell my neighbor that I believe the best public relations are found in kindly dealings with my acquaintances, he won't take much stock in what I say if he sees me do anything to harm my associates. In the same way, if I tell my friend that the only way to enjoy a really full life is to live by God's laws and follow in his Son's footsteps, he isn't going to be very impressed unless he can see the results of such behavior in my life.

TOO, OUR COMMERCIAL advertisers, for all their ballyhoo, deal only with things that are superficial and temporal. It doesn't make a great deal of difference if one does change from one breakfast food to

Here Is the Writer . . .

Seventy Phillip Moore, a native of Kansas City, Missouri, has been under general church appointment for several years and is now serving as pastor of the Spokane, Washington, Branch. He is a graduate of Graceland College and has represented the church in the southern and northwestern missions. At present, he and his wife, the former Lois Lambert, and their young son, Bobby, are making their home in Mead, Washington, near Spokane.

another, or if he goes ahead eating "Wheaties" every morning. That isn't going to cause him to make any sacrifice or change his mode of living. Regardless of which cereal he eats, he can still go on using the same amount of sugar and milk or follow any other individual like or dislike.

On the other hand, in this matter of testifying to the advantages of a godlike life, it does require—for those choosing to abide by the gospel laws—a complete change of life; unless they can actually see in us the regeneration, which only the Spirit of Christ can work, our job of per-

New Horizons

Nothing Gained

By Larry Marlowe

suasion is increased. If one desires to test commercial advertisements, he need do nothing more than visit his nearest store and try just one box. It is a simple thing to try a new dentifrice and then switch back to the old one if not satisfied. But to ask a man to give up perhaps his favorite form of recreation, to change his allegiances, his life, and in some cases to face the disapproval of friends and family for the sake of that which seems intangible, means a change in his life that can never more be totally forgotten. The advertising our lives give this gospel plan must be great enough to prove that the prospective member will actually receive benefits and happiness greater than he now knows and experiences every day. Any step into the unknown takes courage and faith, so we must instill these friends with such faith in the way of life we live that they have the courage to follow after God and Christ.

It would be easy if people would simply listen to what we say and take our words at their face value, but no matter how hard we wish for such acceptance, those about us pay a great deal of attention to what we do. One of the old adages, "Our actions speak louder than our words," surely is true. Therefore, we should bring our lives to a standard of excellence which will show to the world that our oral testimonies are backed up by everyday living which proves we are indeed satisfied customers — satisfied with the "power of God unto salvation" as we follow after Christ.

THE IMPORTANCE OF OUR living example can never be minimized. During the war, a certain young man was inducted into the armed forces. Many of his new acquaintances in his barracks were the worldly type so apparent and numerous today. Each night before retiring he would kneel in prayer by his bunk and silently commune with his Heavenly Father. The first night a shoe was thrown at him. Loud guffaws reached his ears. For several nights following, the same treatment continued. Gradually the fun poked at him decreased until eventually he was able to draw others into his prayer circle.

Sometimes we try to excuse ourselves and our worldliness by saying that we must do as our friends do to maintain their friendship if we expect to draw them up with us. In other words, we want to sink to the other fellow's level and excuse ourselves by saying that we will remain strong enough to finally pull him up to our former status. If two men were hunting in the wilds of Africa and one fell into a pit such as the natives dig for animal traps, would the other jump in also in order to rescue him? That would be foolish, for then both would be doomed. The wise person would keep his senses about him and stay up on his own level so that he would be in a position to aid his friend and eventually pull him to safety. It is no different in our lives. Only by remaining free of the traps and snares of our modern world will we be in a position or have the ability to effect any rescues at all. We must remain humbly between our friends and help lift them up to God.

IT GOES WITHOUT saying that we cannot sell a product we ourselves have not tried and proved to be valuable. No man today could put on the market a mixture of drugs and sell it as a cure for cancer unless he has made exhaustive tests and experiments and proved that it will work. No one would have any faith in the value of his product otherwise. If he could prove that he had a cure for cancer and could give examples of the way he had treated and cured patients with his method, the peoples of the world would flock to his door, for they need and are seeking such an answer to this great problem.

Likewise, a godly life will not keep quiet, for it is much too important a thing to the world today. Even more people seek after a life of abundance and spiritual satisfaction than after any one other thing

No matter who you are or where you live, you've probably heard someone say, "I just stayed home today and took life easy." He sat around and didn't do a thing—he accomplished nothing. In so doing, he let time slip by which will never return.

In school days, you heard the teacher ask Johnny what he was doing. His, "Oh, nothing," always invited the return, "That's what I was afraid of." All of us, when asked what we have done to reach our goal, have many times replied, "Nothing."

I once heard a story about a centipede that started on a long journey. He walked for hours and hours, and then his feet began to hurt. Stopping to rest, he thought, "This will never do. If I am going to reach my destination and win the prize, I must not stop at all." On and on he traveled until his feet hurt so much he began to cry. One foot struck a pebble, and the pain was so great he had to lift the injured foot from the ground. "Why didn't I think of this before?" he mused. After that, he lifted every other foot and traveled along on fifty at a time in-

in the world. The way of God, as delivered to us in this day, is the only thing that will make possible the fulfillment of all for which men were created. Each of us in our lives can show the power of redemption if we fully respond to the flow of the spirit. When we do, we will be satisfied customers to such an extent that we will not be able to keep still about the gospel. We will be filled with such love for the gospel that we will seek out souls for God. Those people, as they hear our oral testimony and see that we are satisfied customers, will be able to understand the value of God's plan of life and salvation.

stead of a hundred. Finally, he began to slow down, and his steps became shorter and shorter. He became so tired that he had to quit and rest for three whole days before he could continue. "By walking as I have," he sighed, "I was more comfortable for a short while, but in the long run, I lost the prize."

Many times we hurry on in this fast moving world without once thinking of what we are doing to gain the prize. If one of us stumbles, it throws that much more of the load on the others. If one stops, the rest are slowed down.

How our Father in heaven must grieve when he sees us fall short of our goals because of lack of preparation, because of stubbornness, or because we did not pray for help and guidance. All of us have made mistakes, but now that we've made them, let us try hard to compensate for them.

Remember: Nothing gained is something lost.

... NEW

Oriole Monitor's Manual

Prepared by Department of Religious Education Training Course and Program Helps

$1.00

Beginning March 1

the Saints' Herald will be:

$3.50 per year to the United States
$3.75 per year to Canada
$4.50 per year to Foreign Countries

Herald Publishing House
103 South Osage
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Briefs

IOWA CITY, IOWA.—Dr. F. M. McDowell was present from January 16 to January 18. The high point of his ministry was at the Communion-fellowship service held on Sunday morning. A study is being made of programs designed to meet the needs of college groups. Students at the University of Iowa, their families, and a few permanent residents comprise the group of nearly fifty members which attend services in Iowa City. Dale Ballantyne was re-elected president for the second semester of the school year.

BUTLER, MISSOURI. — Lots have been purchased for the building of a new church. In order to raise money, the women have been serving lunches at sales and holding rummage sales. The men, too, are helping to increase the fund. The choir will unite with other churches in Butler to present a musical service on Easter Sunday.

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA.—W. E. Haden presented a series of sermons from January 19 to 24. He visited with the Saints and administered to those who were sick. He also conducted a series of meetings at Anadarko.

SINKING SPRING, OHIO. — The annual birthday party, held in the church basement, proved to be a financial as well as a social success. Missionary Merle Guthrie held a two weeks' series of services recently, and Norma Anne Kirkendall presented an illustrated lecture. Larry James, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Loyal Rhoads, was blessed by Elders Caroll Rhoads and Heber Woods. Elder Rhoads has been elected to serve as pastor for the coming year.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—The Women's Department of Stone Church honored President Israel A. Smith's birthday by giving him two beautiful gifts. Following a special service, at which President Smith was guest speaker, a reception was held at the Women's Center across from Stone Church. A large floral arrangement was presented by the Daughters of Zion for the occasion. Since Mrs. Smith was unable to attend the reception, the president was given an artistically decorated cake to take home.

ESCATAWPA, MISSISSIPPI.—Seven new members were baptized and confirmed on Sunday, February 8. They are Hubert Hunt, Mildred Hunt, Hubert Hunt, Jr., Huey Graham, Fay Graham, Barbara Bossage, and Mary Frances Rogers.

BULLETIN BOARD

Attention, Western Los Angeles Members

Elders Garland Tickemyer, William Meador, and Glenn Davis are planning to organize a prayer and study group in Western Los Angeles. This area includes the U. S. Veteran's Hospital and Home, Westwood, Brentwood, Pacific Palisades, Malabu, Beverly Hills, and Santa Monica Canyon. If you are interested, or have friends in this vicinity that may be interested, please contact William Meador, 3734 Muirfield Road, Los Angeles, Telephone Axminster 29371, or Lucy Worcester, 422 Arizona Avenue, Santa Monica, Telephone 4-3902.

Minnesota District Conference

The Minnesota District Conference will be held in Minneapolis on April 2, 3, and 4. Apostle Roscoe Davey and Seventy Percy Farrow are to be in attendance. Visitors should write to Vernon Lundeen (Minneapolis pastor), 4337 West Broadway, Robbinsdale, Minnesota, before March 20 so that accommodations for sleeping may be provided. Meals will be served at the church.

Priesthood Study Outlines Needed

Ten Priesthood Study Outlines are needed for church school use in the priesthood study class at Stone Church. These outlines cover the material presented at the appointees' institute held in Independence August 27 to September 17, 1946. If you will sell or lend your copy, we shall greatly appreciate it. Do not send until advised, but let us know at once.

C. W. CLARK.

1021 South Park Street
Independence, Missouri
Telephone 751-J

"Heralds" For Sale

James D. Bales, Harding College, Searcy, Arkansas, has fifty bound volumes of the Saints' Herald which he will sell for $10 a volume. All are dated before 1925. Those interested may write for exact dates.

Books Wanted

Mrs. Peggy Elliott, 1206 West Maple, wants a copy of The Fourth Relaford. Please write stating price and condition of book before sending it.

Address Wanted

A church member by the name of Sam Addams is requested to get in touch with the Editors, giving his mailing address so that information can be forwarded to him.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Mary Davis, Estella, Oklahoma, asks prayers for herself and her son-in-law, Mark Davis.

Lucy Worcester, 422 Arizona Avenue, Santa Monica, California, requests prayers for her son, Herbert Worcester, and for Mary Jane Brownrigg, who is a patient at the United States Hospital in Phoenix, Arizona.

Prayers are requested for a young mother (no name given) of three children. She is isolated from church privileges and is in very poor health.

Mrs. Ethel Sheppard, 203 West Church Street, Lexington, Tennessee, asks the continued prayers of the Saints that she may regain her health.

Mrs. Vernon Levenson of Lamoni, Iowa, requests prayers for her mother, Mrs. Earl E. Anderson, who is seriously ill in the Decatur County Hospital at Leon, Iowa.

Prayers are requested for a member who is in need of physical and spiritual blessings.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard R. Bebout announce the birth of a daughter, Judy Ann, born December 10. Mrs. Bebout is the former Corlas Prine of Independence, Missouri.

A daughter, Deanna Lynne, was born on November 27 to Mr. and Mrs. Edward Epling of Roseville, California. Mrs. Epling was formerly Lillian Kerger of Pisgah, Iowa. Both parents are Graceland graduates.

A son, Richard Glen, was born on January 28 to Mr. and Mrs. Richard Marolf of Goodland, Kansas. He was blessed on February 8 by Elder J. R. Graybill. Mrs. Marolf is the former O'Ellia Been.

Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Holcomb of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Dana Sue, born January 3 at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Holcomb, the former Relma June Teague, attended Graceland in 1944-45.

DEATHS

MAPES.—Amy Ellen, daughter of Mary and Elza Landrum, was born at Jackson, Ohio, on December 21, 1874, and died January 4, 1948. She was married to Arthur Mapes on June 4, 1893; twelve children were born to this union, two of whom preceded her in death. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on February 25, 1892, and served her Saviour faithfully for fifty-five years. An affectionate wife, a loving mother, and a kind neighbor, she will be greatly missed by all who knew her.

Besides her husband, she leaves ten children: Mrs. Stephen Radcliffe, Mrs. Marshall Willis, Orville, Carmel, Edwin, Kimbal, Zendon, and Arden, all of Jackson, and Mrs. Allerd Smith and Fondon of Dayton, Ohio; thirty-one grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren. T. R. Beatty and Kenneth Kriebel were in charge of the funeral service.

FINKEN.—Pauline Arndt, was born on March 16, 1868, in Carroll Township, Ohio, and died October 4, 1947, in Oak Harbor, Ohio. She was married to Daniel Finken on July 31, 1885, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church early in life. She was among the first members of Oak Harbor Branch.

Besides her husband, she leaves six sons: Everret of Valley Center, Michigan; Milton, Ralph, Leonard, Gilbert, and Stillman of Oak Harbor; three daughters: Mrs. Nida Wadsworth of Port Clinton, Ohio; Mrs. Nancy Ryder and Mrs. Nettie Brough of Oak Harbor; thirty-seven grandchildren, and several great-grandchildren. Two sons, Martin and Scot, preceded her in death. Funeral services were held in the church at Oak Harbor, Elders Walter Wirebaugh and Alvin Wadsworth officiating. Burial was in Rusha Cemetery.

SALES.—Centhelia Ellen, daughter of Squire and Eliza Lines, was born April 7, 1864, at Wabash, Indiana, and died February 3, 1948, at the Community Hospital in Imperial, Nebraska, following a year's illness. She was married to Edwin Sales on December 24, 1880; six children were born to this marriage. Two of them, Lillie and Adalaska, died in infancy. As a young woman, Mrs. Sales united with the Methodist Church, but after hearing of the Restored Gospel, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church, of which she remained a member for forty-two years. Mr. Sales preceded her in death in 1923.

She is survived by a son, Roy; three daughters: Mrs. Sylvia Goddard of Imperial, Nebraska; Mrs. Mary Smith and Mrs. Pearl Smith of Champion, Nebraska; three brothers; twenty-one grandchildren; forty-one great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild. Elder Steve Bullard was in charge of the funeral. Burial was in the Champion Cemetery.

HILL.—Melissa, was born December 25, 1890, at Conway, Arkansas, and died September 30, 1947, at Tulsa, Oklahoma, where she had gone for medical treatment. She was married to Henry C. Hill on May 5, 1910. A long-time resident of Bartlesville, Oklahoma, she had been a member of the Reorganized Church for twenty-four years.

She is survived by five daughters: Mrs. Jerry Willis of California; Mrs. Ralph Vanway of Tulsa; Mrs. Ralph Wynne of Texas; Mrs. Frances Brown and Miss Imogene Hill of the home in Bartlesville; two sisters: Mrs. Mike Hall and Mrs. Pat Ernst of Bartlesville; four brothers: Arch Saylor of Bartlesville; Joe and Othea Saylor of California; and Doc Saylor of Oklahoma. Mr. Hill passed away on November 29, 1947. Services were held at the Neekamp Funeral Home, L. W. Kohlman officiating. Interment was in Memorial Park at Tulsa.

Kenneth Yarrington

Inevitably associated with the church and all that it stands for is the name of Kenneth Yarrington. This was true when he lived, for he identified himself consistently with the church and the spiritual needs of the Saints in Midland, Michigan. Kenneth's childhood was spent in Bentley, Michigan, where he was born. He was graduated from the Flint Central High School and later was married to Elsie Arleen Burch of Bentley. Shortly following his marriage, he moved to Midland and for four years was employed at the Ashman Grocery. Subsequently, he became a valued employee of the Dow Chemical Company. While in this employ he made steady advancement, increasing his service to the company until he worked as technician foreman of the instrument department. He was well-known, liked, and respected in the community.

Kenneth was ordained a priest soon after he established his home in Midland, and in 1938, he was ordained an elder. Through the years, he worked himself into the very hearts of the Saints. He served as supervisor of the young people. They often assembled at his home for their meetings, as it was always open to them. After having expended time and energy in helping build the distinctive new church edifice in Midland, he became its first pastor. When a general church appointee was sent to Midland and elected pastor, Kenneth was selected and unanimously sustained as the associate. In a most admirable way he supported and upheld his successor without reservation. From that time (1943) until his recent accidental death, he served in this capacity.

His most remarkable quality of character was his loyalty and faithfulness to the church and his never-failing presence at all services. He dedicated his more than ordinary talents to the church. He sang in the choir and was frequently soloist at services. His prayers were always spiritually elevating when heard at the midweek service, on Sundays, or during administration in the homes of Saints. Invariably, he was one of the first to bear his testimony at prayer service, thus preparing the way for others.

He was never heard speaking deprecatorily of another person. His spirit of love for the Saints and his fellow men was contagious and inspiring. He sought his brother out and in so doing found God and his own soul. His co-operation with his fellow workers was wholehearted, intelligent, and congenial. In a word, he was loyal to the highest he knew. His church and all that it stands for was literally placed first. He is missed by his family, his church, and the community, but the memory of his goodness, devotion, and love shall live in the hearts of the people continually and inspire like qualities in them.—JOHN W. BANKS, Pastor, Midland, Michigan.

CARLSON.—Carl Joseph, was born October 5, 1874, at Gilmore City, Iowa, and died January 31, 1948, at Duluth, Minnesota. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church early in life. His wife, the former Arminta Martin, preceded him in death in 1916.

Surviving are two daughters: Adah Carlson, Barnum, Minnesota, and Mrs. Opal Bradley, Detroit Lakes, Minnesota; three sisters: Mrs. W. O. Eckley, Dickens, Iowa; Mrs. J. B. Snyder, Seattle, Washington; and Mrs. A. H. Dathé of Barnum; and two brothers: William A. and Arthur J. Carlson of Three Forks, Montana. Funeral services were held in Duluth, Elder James Thomas officiating. Burial was in the family lot at Barnum.

SABIN.—Lila Jean, was born May 31, 1930, and died February 8, 1948. She was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church and was truly concerned over the welfare of others her age. Although for several weeks she felt death imminent, she remained cheerful until the end.

She is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Sabin; three sisters: Mrs. Betty Simms, Mrs. Dorothy Chafin, and Nancy Sabin; and two brothers: Donald and Warren. Another brother, Sgt. Herbert Sabin, preceded her in death. Funeral services were held at East Lawn Chapel, Evangelist William Dawson and Elder Myron Schall officiating. Interment was in East Lawn Cemetery.

MILLER.—Ezra David, was born January 7, 1879, in Illinois, and died January 17, 1948, in Delavan, Kansas. With his parents and twin sister, Etta, he moved to Kansas in the fall of 1879. On April 17, 1926, he married Edith McGoon; one son was born to this marriage. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since November 23, 1947.

HILL.—Henry Colly, was born September 20, 1884, at Italy, Texas, and died November 29, 1947, at his home in Bartlesville, Oklahoma, after an illness of five years. He was the son of the late Jesse King Hill, prominent rancher and statesman, and Martha C. Hill. He attended school at the Indian Mission near Skiatook, and the Oklahoma A. & M. College at Stillwater. He served as State Game Ranger, was active in the Isaak Walton League, and had been a member of the Reorganized Church for nearly fifty-five years. On May 5, 1910, he was married to Melissa Saylor, who preceded him in death on September 30, 1947.

Surviving are five daughters: Mrs. Jerry Willis of California; Mrs. Ralph Vanway of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Mrs. Ralph Wynne of Texas; Mrs. Frances Brown and Miss Imogene Hill of the home; three brothers: E. A. Hill of Muskogee, Oklahoma; D. H. Hill of Tulsa; and Lt. Col. J. L. Hill of San Francisco, California; one sister, Mrs. Jessie Elam of Tulsa; and three grandchildren. Services were held at the Neekamp Funeral Home, L. W. Kohlman officiating. Interment was in Memorial Park at Tulsa.

WEDDINGS

Larkins-Parker

Bonnie Lucille Parker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Parker of Akron, Colorado, and James B. Larkins, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Larkins of Bogard, Missouri, were married on February 8 at the Reorganized Church in Fort Morgan, Colorado. Elder W. A. Reynolds performed the ceremony.

Brandon-Arnott

Wanda Arnott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Arnott of Owendale, Michigan, became the bride of Robert B. Brandon, son of Mrs. Fred Brandon of Bad Axe, Michigan, on January 31 at the Reorganized Church in Owendale, Elder Frank Sheuffelt officiating. They are making their home in Pigeon, Michigan.

Walker-Shuart

Allene Shuart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Grayden Shuart of Bad Axe, Michigan, and Harry William Walker, son of Harry Walker of Ubyly, Michigan, were married on October 4 at the home of Elder Silas Parker in Owendale, Michigan. Elder Parker performed the double riting ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Walker are residing near Ubyly.

OUR AMERICAN GOVERNMENT: The Answers to 1,001 Questions on How It Works

BY THE HON. WRIGHT PATMAN, M. C.

This new book covers 1,001 questions about our American government. The sixteen illustrations and questions about democracy and its American sources, political Americana, the constitution, the congress, executive departments, independent offices, agencies, and establishments, the judiciary, and the states give us a complete picture of our federal and state governments. The complete index makes finding the information needed very easy. Paper bound $1.50

PSYCHOLOGY FOR PASTOR AND PEOPLE

BY JOHN SUTHERLAND BONNELL

This is a book of specific aid to the counselor and of inspirational benefit to one in need of counsel. Included is a section in the appendix on instructions in the constructive use of the Bible in solving personal problems and another section which contains a sample sermon illustrating how insights gained through counseling may be utilized in preaching. $2.50

FIVE-MINUTE STORIES FROM THE BIBLE

BY E. JERRY WALKER

These stories are from the Bible—fifteen from the Old Testament, twenty from the New Testament. They are skillfully, clearly, and interestingly told for boys and girls from eight to fourteen. They stress significant truth and cardinal traits of character. $1.25

WHAT SHALL I PREACH?

BY GEORGE BROWN THOMAS

This arrangement of 2,200 significant Bible texts with suggestive sermon topics offers both stimulus and guidance to the preacher who must ask the recurring question, "What Shall I Preach?"

Here is a real aid to the busy minister—a tool for saving time and worry often wasted in indecision over sermon topics. An extensive subject index serves a double purpose. First, if the preacher feels his people need a sermon on a certain subject, he may find the chosen subject in its alphabetical place in the index and select the most appropriate of the several texts and topics referred to. Second, after the text and the theme have been chosen, the index may guide the minister to supplementary and illustrative scripture passages bearing on the same theme. $2.50

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

The Good Shepherd

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

MARCH 6, 1948

NUMBER 10

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Etude

AUDITORIUM NEWS

*They are not always wise
Who walk the ways of wisdom.
They are not always best
Who hold themselves apart.
Better to be a little happy human
And risk a little breakage
Of the heart.*

* * * * *

*He who would be happy,
Let him dream a dream;
But one in which his heart
May find content:
For him no restless longing.*

*He who would be happiest Dreams his dream alone:
. . . . A starward striving,
And a thing apart
For he whom a dream hath possessed
Knows no more yearning.*

JO SKELTON

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

On a Note of Gratitude	3
Across the Desk	4
The Second Mile	11

ARTICLES:

Priesthood Authority	5
Church-wide Restoration Festival Week Challenges, by Norma Anne Kirkendall	8
Is Your Husband a Member of the Church, by Marie Gosline	10
My Share of Life (a poem), by Leola Lalone Sheppard	11
What L. D. S. Believe About Modern Revelation, by Evan A. Fry	12
Letters	15
Worship Suggestions for April, by Ruby Strand	16
Missing the Mark, by Kathryn C. Metz	17
Program Planning, by Mrs. Robert Farnham	18
Home Management for the Veteran in College, by Mary Louise Wolfe	19
Love Finds the Way, by Arthur J. Rock	20
How Important Is Faith, by Z. Z. Renfro	21
Bulletin Board	23

* EUROPE

Eugene Theys writes from Switzerland, where he has made contact with members there. He reports strong faith and missionary interest among members interviewed and will contact others as opportunity permits. An effort will be made to develop the work at Basle.

German tracts and reference books will be printed in Switzerland. Translations will probably be made from standard works in English.

Dutch tracts, translated from English works and printed in Holland, are to be sent to relatives and friends there by contacting Albert Scherer, Avenue Concordia and Annastraat, Rotterdam, Holland.

* BAPTISMS

January baptisms, always low on account of the weather, reached a high point of 139 this year, the second best in the 1940's, and the fourth best in twenty years. The 1947 mark was 156. It is hoped that we surpass the record of that year in 1948.

* CHURCH SURVEYS

President F. Henry Edwards is back at his desk after participating in a survey of the church work in California, Oregon, and Washington, in company with Bishop H. L. Livingston, Apostle D. B. Jensen, and Charles R. Hield. Brother Hield remained for additional work at San Francisco, Salt Lake City, and Grand Junction, Colorado. Apostles W. Wallace Smith and Roscoe Davey participated in the survey and will remain in their fields until the Joint Council meetings in April. Bishop Livingston is back at his office.

The Presidency have received word from Apostles D. T. Williams, G. G. Lewis, and C. G. Mesley about the completion of their survey of church work in the Atlantic seacoast and eastern states.

Surveys have also gone well under Apostles Paul M. Hanson, E. J. Gleazer, and Maurice L. Draper. All officials contacted there are happy over the widespread missionary revival throughout the churches and the very excellent opportunities opening in many places. In the metropolitan centers of Detroit, Flint, and Port Huron there have been large crowds, surpassing former attendance records. Apostle Gleazer will be in Michigan preaching, meeting with reunion committees, etc., then will visit Northern Indiana District in company with Luther Troyer.

* DETROIT, MICHIGAN

Next big event for this area of the church work will be the Young People's Convention for the combined Detroit-Windsor and Flint-Port Huron Districts. Visiting leaders will be President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., of Graceland College, and Carl Mesle of Independence.

* DES MOINES, IOWA, had a district Zion's League institute February 21 and 22, ably directed and promoted by Harry Myers, young people's leader. The theme was "Building Homes of Tomorrow Today." Topics discussed included "Being the Right Person," "Associating With the Right Persons," and "Choosing the Right Persons." Dr. F. M. McDowell took a leading part in discussions and reports large attendance from all parts of the district.

Dr. McDowell and John Darling spent February 23 at Graceland College, interviewing faculty members and students on summer camps and other projects.

On a Note of Gratitude

TO THE STUDENT of literature, titles of books and plays come in types and styles. Some original creator produces something new, and the world likes and admires it, so that less original folk are soon paying it the tribute of imitation. Then it becomes commonplace, people overdo it, and everybody drops it. Meanwhile, the genius is producing something new to be imitated again.

In our editorial work, we find that some of our best writers of articles and stories dislike to concern themselves with titles, and ask us to furnish them. What a joy it is to participate, even in so small a way, by providing a title for some good piece of writing. And others, alas, begin with excellent titles but lose their way before they reach the end of their work.

When Norman Corwin wrote On a Note of Triumph, he created not only a new literary form for the radio, but also a new kind of title. How it struck the imagination. All the hope and joy of a world liberated from fear and pain is gathered up into that one phrase. Since the notes of resounding joy have died away in the first months of peace, the nations of the world have descended from the mountain peak of victory to the dreary waste of another "valley of dry bones." But this does not lessen the importance of the liberation that the phrase "On a Note of Triumph" celebrates.

Let it be admitted here that we are practicing a certain kind of imitation, but it seems a worthy gesture to pattern after something that is good. And further, it seems necessary to begin at this point to indicate a different direction, a different purpose.

CONSIDER THE PHRASE, "On a Note of Triumph." Certainly it is pleasant to be on the winning side. But when we see the tragic faces, the suffering bodies, the ruined homes and lands of the vanquished, we realize that something terrible has happened in this war to all of us—to victor as well as vanquished. Something precious has been lost. It appears now that we have not been wise in gloating, nor realistic, nor charitable. "Triumph" is hardly the word for our times, for our deeds. There is no triumph. We paid a heavy price for victory. The vanquished paid a heavy price, too, for something they never received. That they ought never to have it, does not return to them what they have paid. They have been defrauded. And in our relationships with them since the cessation of combat, we have sacrificed and lost even more. There is not now any reason left for exultation. Side by side, victor and vanquished gaze in distress at a world they have all but ruined.

At first, we accepted gladly the theme of triumph. Now, in the times of cooler judgment, we recoil from it. If our journey in the times of peace is not to be "On a Note of Triumph," what is the true note to be?

As many times before, once again we find a key in the Scriptures. Paul wrote to the Thessalonians (I, 5: 18), "In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

At first we resent it. Thankful for what? For sons sacrificed in the slaughter of war? For resources exhausted in consuming and profitless conflict? For hatreds and fears multiplied? For broken covenants and shattered faith in world relationships? No, not for these things. Not for what is lost, but for what remains.

Let us consider the alternative, "On a Note of Gratitude." We can be thankful that the war, like a raging fire, a terrible destroyer, has ceased before it consumed everything—the world, and the people who live in it. We are thankful for the people who are left. For the chance now of beginning to plan and build a new and better world. Thankful that God's blessing has preserved so much for us. Thankful that there is still hope, still a possibility of escaping failure and catastrophe. Thankful that we find in ourselves and in all people something good on which world peace and friendly relationships can once more be built.

ABOVE ALL, we are thankful for the great plan that can bring about our salvation, and for our opportunity to carry the message of that plan to the world. And each one of us may be thankful for his own chance to participate in the work of establishing that working plan in the world.

Wherever our missionaries go in the world, they find suffering, need, problems, and trouble. But they also find kindness and goodness in the hearts of the people. They find minds searching endlessly for a way out of the dilemma into which we have fallen. And they find that saving grace of the whole human family—hope. The missionaries find the people willing to forgive, willing to try again for the good way of life, willing to learn, willing to work. It is to the work of our foreign missions, and to the world wide evangel.

Those who have found their lives in ruins have looked up from black despair to find the sun shining in the heavens, and to learn that the treasures of God's goodness were not exhausted. He has other things for those who wait, work, and trust. We find friends we had not known, resources we had forgotten, strength renewed, faith restored. Can we do less than take up the tasks of life again, filling hearts and minds with the words of a new theme, "On a Note of Gratitude"?

L. J. L.

Editorial

Across the Desk

Sister Clifford Dallyn, Ribstone, Alberta:

Dear Brother Smith: I know you are a very busy man and, believe me, we do appreciate all your writings in the Herald and the great responsibility you have in being the president of our church. But still we ask for one thing more. We are way up here in Alberta, and we haven't got to know you yet except through the Herald and from talking to our missionaries.

We have a little district paper, the District Leader. Perhaps you have seen one. It is edited by Sister M. A. Hanna of 2208-14 A Street, Southwest, Calgary, Alberta.

Sister Hanna, a woman of sixty-eight, who serves as district women's department leader, wanted to do something especially for shut-in and isolated Saints. Then the idea of a district paper came to her. She wrote to the different women's leaders and asked their advice and help. The first paper was sent out in February three years ago. She has educated herself largely through reading, study, prayer, practice, and the dictionary. She learned how to type after she got the idea of the paper.

The pastor in Calgary works in a printing shop, and he prints the paper for her. Some of the stenographers (who are church members) used to type the stencils for her, but she tells me she does nearly all that herself now. She also writes hundreds of letters, asking people to contribute articles to the paper. It has been a big job for her, but she has been faithful to it, and we all look forward to receiving our paper each month. Last summer at the district conference it became the district paper rather than just the women's department paper with District President Elgin Clark working with Sister Hanna.

Because I am one of her helpers, every once in a while she gives me a special job to do; this time it was to write to you and ask you to contribute an article, testimony, or experience, to the District Leader.

God bless you every day.

W. J. Breshears, president of Gulf States District:

The ministry of President Edwards and Apostle Draper was appreciated by our men. High Priests A. D. McCall, Franklin Steiner, and Elder A. Orlin Crownover, who are associated with me in the district presidency, also gave efficient ministry. . . .

In a letter on December 26, I reported sixty-nine baptisms for the Gulf States District for 1947. This did not include the Mobile report which has raised the total to ninety-nine, Mobile having reported thirty.

During the eight months that I have been in the district, new groups have been formed at Flomaton, Alabama; Pascagoula and Ocean Springs, Mississippi. One new branch has been organized at Evergreen, Alabama. There were twenty-six persons baptized as a result of a series of meetings I conducted.

Brother M. H. Siegfried, Independence, Missouri:

Recently there appeared in the Herald a short statement about a building at Graceland being named "Kelley Hall," with a very brief description of the building. . . . I am convinced the building is entirely inadequate for such a memorial.

Brother Wm. H. Gunlock, Independence, Missouri:

In 1926, at Trenton, Missouri, a number of young graduates from high school came to my place with their diplomas, saying, "Now we have our diplomas, what can we do? Our business men use their own children in business and don't need us. All we can do is to go to some city and try to find work." With little money, it is hard for a young man, and how much harder for a young woman.

The first question asked of them is, "What can you do?" Having had no experience, what chance have they? Many are ashamed to return home admitting failure, so we lose them. They are the ones who need help the most.

We have seven children, on an average, all doing well. But not one of them is raising food or is in a position to be safe in case of a long depression, which I am sure will come. Had I been a good farmer, some of our children might have become farmers, and today had land to come to in time of need. Also, our children would not be scattered as they are today. In unity there is strength.

Years ago our church leaders said that we were losing many of our young because we did not have the amusements and recreation for them. That has been wonderfully improved. . . . Will we lose them now because we have nothing for them to do? Helping our young learn something useful during vacation will help solve the juvenile court problem and also the divorce problem.

Kon-tiki

We have been interested in the story of "Kon-Tiki," an adventure by Thor Heyerdahl and associates who launched a raft of balsa logs off the coast of Peru and were driven by trade winds and currents westward over 4,000 miles to Raroia, one of the Tahitian group of islands. Caught first by the Humboldt Current, it later traveled the South Equatorial currents to its destination.

In Life, a map of ocean currents was shown in connection with this experience, and it is noteworthy that the North Equatorial Current is shown. It runs westward from Central America. The "equatorial counter-current," however, runs almost due east between the South Current and the North Current (both westward).

If the "Kon-Tiki" (meaning Inca Sun God) could thus travel westward, it is entirely logical that floating craft could come from the Indian Ocean to Central America.

Our attention to "Kon-Tiki" was first called by Brother Calvin Sears, New Haven, Connecticut, who supplied us with almost monthly press items during the time it was making the long journey.

ISRAEL A. SMITH

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

March 6, 1948

Number 10

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $3.50 per year and $1.75 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $3.75 per year and $1.90 for six months; other countries, $4.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

Priesthood Authority

By Apostle W. Wallace Smith

MUCH HAS BEEN written, and much more will be written before the end of time, regarding the various phases of priesthood. It will be our endeavor to set forth herewith some of the things that have come to our attention through the years, regarding priesthood authority. I might say, at the outset, that we believe in a divine priesthood representing God, having its authority through Jesus Christ—a priesthood restored in these latter days by God through John the Baptist and Peter, James, and John, “. . . the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James and John.”—Church History, Volume 1, page 36. It is upon this premise we approach the subject.

We believe there are two orders of priesthood, the Aaronic, or lesser, and the Melchisedec, which is the greater—the one being after the order of Aaron, having to do with the material things of the kingdom and the other after the order of Melchisedec, having to do with the spiritual things of the kingdom. So far in our church organization, the bishops are high priests acting in the office of bishop. Ordinarily, the bishop is the head of the Aaronic priesthood, and we are of the opinion that in the event there does appear a literal descendant of Aaron, he will have charge over the material things of the kingdom, acting without council.

It is not inconceivable that such a thing will happen in the latter days. We look around us and observe the signs of the times—prophecy being fulfilled, and Palestine (at least in part) being restored to the Jews. Surely we will not accept the teachings of Jesus Christ, acknowledge him as our Saviour and deny the power and authority by which he was sent. That would be like accepting an ambassador from England, but at the same time denying that there was an England. This we cannot do, because we know full well “there will always be an England.”

THE PURPOSE OF the Melchisedec priesthood can be stated in a very few words. From there, one can go on and say a great deal pertinent to the subject. The purpose, power, and authority of this higher priesthood is to hold the keys to all the spiritual blessings of the church, and to administer in spiritual things. We note that this does not include just some of the spiritual things of the kingdom but all the spiritual blessings of the kingdom. Perhaps no one officer will have the task of taking care of all of these things at one time. However, the office will, and it is the office which has been restored, and will not be taken from this earth.

In the beginning, the Melchisedec priesthood was called the holy priesthood after the order of the “Sons of God.” Later, to avoid repetition of the term “God” so often, it was called after one mighty in the spiritual strength of his Heavenly Father, and one who “was such a great high priest.” We can trace, if necessary, the transmission of the Melchisedec order from Abel to Noah and by the “Sons of God” by him across the flood where it remained while they were faithful (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2). Since that time, we have looked to their descendants for the transmission of this holy power, even the acquiring and spreading of the power of the Holy Ghost unto all mankind. This can be accomplished, because in this priesthood is held the keys to the spiritual blessings of the church.

We are concerned with the right or authority of this priesthood to function in these latter days. We believe that unless one is called of God and ordained by those having authority to do so, he cannot call himself a representative of God. A man cannot set himself or other men up as truly representing God unless through some medium he has had contact with God. Even Jesus Christ did not choose himself, or arbitrarily assume the office he held, but was called to it by God. “And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be an high priest, but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, today have I begotten thee.”—Hebrews 5: 4, 5.

During Christ’s time, according to St. John, “Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruit.”—John 15: 16. Also, “Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you; as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them, and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained” —John 20: 21-23. Why should we feel that we could do otherwise than to follow the example of our Master in this, as well as in other things pertaining to the kingdom?

I do not think we would hesitate to ascribe to Jesus the right to convey the authority of the Father to these, his disciples. We must recognize the authority of those who, through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, and by the word of God revealed to them that they were to be ordained to the higher or Melchisedec order of priesthood.

WE WOULD NOT CARE TO assert, contrary to the writings of Historian Heman C. Smith, that Joseph and Oliver were actually ordained by Peter, James, and John. "Some have supposed that they received two ordinations; one under the hands of Peter, James, and John, and one by each other; but it is scarcely supposable that they would fail to mention so important an item. There is no historical evidence of such an event. Nor is there evidence that Peter, James, and John were present, either when the instruction was given to ordain or when the ordination actually took place."—Church History, Volume I, pages 64, 65. We would, however, go so far as to say that inasmuch as ordain means to set in order, to arrange according to rule, to regulate, to set, to establish, that these men did receive their ordination from Peter, James, and John since it was their responsibility to see that the church was set in order, and that, "this priesthood was then conferred on each other by the will and commandment of God." Joseph and Oliver agree as to the fact that they were commanded of God to ordain each other, also to the fact that they did so ordain.

A noteworthy part of our church policy is likewise here established when, even though the Lord had commanded that Joseph and Oliver be ordained to this high and responsible position, he recognizes the right of the people and shows no inclination to force upon them a man not endorsed by them. This gives rise to the church rule of "common consent." We cannot refrain from inserting the apophthegm, "The rule of common consent can so easily degenerate, through apathy on the part of the membership, into the rule of common assent." In a case of this kind, it is a matter of just dealing, and surely here is justice being done. As God grants us the privilege of ratifying his choice, is it not disrespectful on our part to disregard him and refuse to seek and obtain his consent before we select and ordain? When we have done so, and place our hands upon the head of our brother, we feel that he then has the power of authority. He has been called, commissioned, ordained and set apart to represent God. He has his credentials as an authorized representative. He is responsible both to his Heavenly Father and to his church.

THROUGH THIS HUMBLE, yet noble beginning, the Melchisedec priesthood was restored in this latter dispensation of time; a priesthood beyond that of Aaron and one which carries with it the authority of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Even as in the ministry of Christ, when he instituted priesthood as a part of the system to carry on the work of the church, we have priesthood in our midst. What we do with it is an individual matter. After being called and ordained, we cannot repudiate nor divest ourselves of the responsibility to God and our fellow men, which was placed upon us by our acceptance of this divine and holy calling, by the mere act of voluntarily relinquishing our license. Responsibility for wishing to do so cannot be put upon another by simply stating that our views on a matter differ from those of our brother, and unless ours are accepted, we will refuse to function in our priestly office. Justification for such an act cannot come from within ourselves. Such a matter would have to be adjudicated.

The holding of this priesthood gives men the right to stand in the stead of God and act as the spiritual instructor to those of the body of the church who make up the great potential as an influence for good in the lives of humanity. While it gives them this right, it also imposes tremendous responsibility. The blessings of the priesthood are not confined to those who hold the priesthood but are likewise available to all who accept their ministry and respond to it. As members of the priesthood place their lives in harmony with the teachings of Jesus Christ and the will of God by placing their hands in his for guidance, so can the lay members receive direction through their ministry. This priesthood holds the right of presidency and has to do with the direction in the affairs of the church. The right to act for God depends on humility, love, and the recognition of the divine nature and purpose of God. No one can truly represent God who does not believe He still lives and reveals himself to his people.

Through the working of the Melchisedec priesthood, which holds the keys to all the spiritual blessings of the church, we can expect to receive such gifts as wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, working of miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, and interpretation of tongues. To what extent we shall receive these blessings depends upon us, each individually. As we were told at our last General Conference in the communication from the president, "Zionic conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies; . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 140: 5.

The best results from our efforts depend not only upon us, but also upon how we co-ordinate our efforts and our knowledge with that of our brother. I may have one gift, you another. Separately they are good and have a specific use, but put together they may have a different use, perhaps an even greater use than that which could be rendered separately. Hydrogen and oxygen each have specific uses. Mixed together in the right proportions, they form another highly useful material, water. Sometimes this is a conscious blending, sometimes accidental. We are often amazed at the results of the unintended ministry of our lives. It is said of Livingstone by one of his followers, "He made me a Christian, and he never knew he was doing it." The impact of our lives upon people and situations is like national advertising—it is hard to measure, but the results prove its value.

SO FAR WE HAVE treated in a more or less general way, priesthood authority with an emphasis upon the Melchisedec order. Of only slightly less importance in the general functioning of the total scheme of the church is the "lesser," or Aaronic priesthood, including the Levitical priesthood. This is called the priesthood of Aaron because it was conferred upon Aaron and his seed, throughout all their generations. The office of Aaronic priesthood did not originate with Aaron. Likewise, in these latter days, it did not originate with Joseph Smith, but was conferred upon him by a heavenly messenger. He did not create it, but rather he was prepared to accept and occupy in it. The office was ready and waiting for an occupant much the same as it is today.

While we speak about this priesthood being the second or lesser priesthood, it is, in the matter of divine authority, on a par with the higher or Melchisedec priesthood. As far as the authority from God to act in his stead is concerned, there can be no difference. God commanded that Aaron be ordained: "And the Lord confirmed a priesthood also upon Aaron and his seed throughout all their generations, which priesthood also continueth and abideth forever, with the priesthood which is after the holiest order of God." The children of Israel did not heed the commands of God and as a result, the higher order of priesthood was removed from their midst, but the Aaronic was continued. In these last days, we find it being restored by God through the instrumentality of John the Baptist, to a people chosen for a specific purpose—that the authority of the priesthood should be among men on earth as it was in the beginning. For an exact account of the incidents pertaining to the restoration of this priesthood, we find no better words than those of Joseph Smith himself as recorded in Volume I, page 34, of the Church History: "While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light and having laid hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us 'Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins, and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.' He said this priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands, for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; . . . the messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist in the the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us."

ALL THAT HAS been said about the responsibility, opportunity, and authority of the Melchisedec priesthood can be said about the Aaronic, which "administers the gospel of preparation; repentance, baptism for remission of sins, and tithing."—A Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants, page 187. It is not our purpose to outline in detail the specific duties of the "carnal commandments." We are more concerned in this article about the authority than we are about the duties.

We feel that because the mission of John and Christ was not completed while they were here upon earth and because the Melchisedec priesthood was lost in the days of Moses and was not restored until Christ came to earth, and because all priesthood authority was lost from the face of the earth during the dark ages, it was necessary for this priesthood to again be restored, a factor which is necessary in the salvation of mankind. Inasmuch as no ministry is effective without authority, and inasmuch as this authority has not been granted to another, we further feel that we as Reorganized Latter Day Saints do offer to the world a type of salvation "peculiar" to us. We thank God that we can say, because of our peculiar beliefs, that we owe the authority of our priesthood to God, not to man or any set of men.

Great truths are like basic elements. Seldom do we discover a new element, yet science is continually making a new application of the old elements as well as combinations of them. While we may not have uncovered any new truths, we hope we may have reaffirmed some of our old ones in such a way as to help.

Soul's Choice

Three things there are
Which man desires:
Health, wealth and immortality.

Health is only kept by constant vigilance,
Wealth is quicker lost than gained,
And only a man's free soul can choose Immortality. —Louise Wrigley

Church-Wide Restoration Festival Week

April 11 - 18, 1948

PROGRAM SUGGESTIONS FOR ZION'S LEAGUE -- PART I

Prepared by the Department of Religious Education

What Is It All About?

DURING THE General Conference of April, 1947, 175 delegates and representatives from 63 states and districts and four missions abroad met daily in what is known as the General Zion's League Council.

The intelligent consecration of these young people and their leaders was most marked. They evidenced throughout a determination to:

- (1) put the church and its welfare first in all of their considerations,
- (2) increasingly make the church their church in very deed,
- (3) Learn of its divine mission and prepare to receive a personal witness of it,
- (4) share without reserve in its difficult and accumulating tasks and burdens, and
- (5) individually and collectively join in world evangelism and kingdom building.

In harmony with this spirit and purpose, they waited upon the general officers of the church, asked for and received a task "worthy of their mettle"—the raising of a $25,000 Missions Abroad Fund. They are now well on their way to that worthy goal.

But, as suggested above, our young people were not content with this. To them all was in vain unless there could be born or perhaps reborn in each individual a compelling witness of the very spirit, genius, and eternal verities of the restored gospel.

The Restoration Festival

How was this to be accomplished? Fertile and alert minds were not long in mapping out at least one promising answer. Why not ask the youth of the church to join annually in the observance of the "Restoration Festival."

Something of the nature and purpose of this celebration has been set forth in Zion's League Annual, No. 1, from which we quote the following:

1. An occasion for cultivating oneness among Latter Day Saint youth all over the world, "that they all may be one."
2. The climaxing of a project to raise $25,000 by the youth for our world-wide missionary endeavor, in the belief that we sense unity when we work together for a common purpose.
3. The celebration of "the vision of 1820" when Joseph Smith, a lad of League age, went to the grove to seek guidance and sensed his first commission to prophetic work.
4. Climaxing of seven months' study and laboratory work before the festival week.
5. Re-emphasis of the centrality of Christ in the Restoration Movement under the caption, "Hear Ye Him!"

In Accord With the "Pastor's Handbook 1948"

The celebration of a church-wide Restoration Festival week is in complete harmony with the program provided by the First Presidency for use of pastors throughout the church in the form of The Pastor's Handbook 1948.

The theme suggested in the Hand- book for April, 1948, is "The Fundamentals of the Restoration." We quote in part from the Handbook: "During this month you will wish to make special efforts to inform your people concerning our faith in God who speaks to men of every generation, our confidence that he calls men to serve in his ministry today, our peculiar joy in the Scriptures, our experience of the spiritual gifts, our grateful appreciation of the principles of the gospel, and similar fundamentals of Restoration testimony."

Acting under this instruction and in harmony with this spirit and purpose, each branch may well provide a unified support to its young people as they plan for and conduct commemorative services, activities, and programs during the week of April 11-18. We feel that there is no better way in which the pastor may comply with the instruction of the First Presidency and meet his obligations as shepherd of the young people than by supporting them wholeheartedly in a few of the many projects herein suggested.

Month of April for Zion's League

This month:

We join all other youth of the church in a world-wide fellowship.

We think through the significance of the vision of 1820.

We relive the days of the Restoration and rededicate our lives.

We commemorate the Restoration with a Restoration Festival which will include:

Worship—A service woven around the first vision.

Study—A play reviewing the sig-

www.LatterDayTruth.org

nificant feature of the Restoration.

An essay contest.

Recreation—A Restoration Banquet.

A Palmyra Party.

Service—Activities in World Fellowship.

See pages 120-137 of Zion's League Annual for suggestions.

April in Church History

April 3, 1836—Remarkable vision of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, Kirtland Temple.

April 6, 1830—Church organized at the farm of Peter Whitmer, Sr., Fayette, New York, with six members.

April 6, 1841—Cornerstone for temple at Nauvoo was laid. This was pursuant to revelation of January 19, 1841.

April 6, 1860—Joseph Smith III, acknowledged and ordained as president of high priesthood. High council also reorganized and seventy and presidents of seventy ordained; also presiding bishops.

April 6, 1882—General Conference met in Independence, Missouri, first time for fifty years.

April 6, 1883. General Conference met in Kirtland Temple, in Ohio, first time in forty-five years.

April 7, 1946—Ordination of President Israel A. Smith.

April 8, 1853—Seven men ordained to Quorum of Twelve in Reorganization.

April 26, 1832—Joseph Smith, Jr., was acknowledged president of high priesthood in Independence, Missouri.

April, 1891—General Sunday School Association organized by direction of General Conference.

April, 1893—General organization of Zion's Religio Literary Society for young people by a committee of General Conference.

About April, 1893—General organization of Daughters of Zion. There was a local Daughters of Zion organized 1879, Providence, Rhode Island. Mite societies for benefit of poor and the church existed from early days of Reorganization. This organization later changed its name to Women's Auxiliary for Social Service, then to Women's Department.

April, 1903—The grandson of David Whitmer delivered to Joseph Smith III, and others of the church, the Book of Mormon manuscript, John Whitmer's Manuscript History, copy of Book of Mormon characters taken by Martin Harris to New York, and a few sheets of early revelation.

April, 1916—The former Independence Stake divided into Independence, Kansas City, and Holden Stakes.

April Conference, 1927, held in lower Auditorium.

April, 1930—Centennial Conference of church held in Auditorium.

Events for the Week—

These Could Be Done:

Sermons:

Suggested themes from The Pastor's Handbook, 1948; for additional sermon themes, see pages 88, 89, and for missionary topics, see pages 90 and 91.

1. The Marvellous Work and a Wonder, Isaiah 29: 14.
2. The Restoration Today, Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3-6.
3. God's Wonderful Ways and Purposes, Psalm 139: 1-14.
4. Our God Is Able, Daniel 3: 13-27.
5. God Who Giveth to All, James 1: 5.
6. In God We Trust, Psalm 129: 1-14.
7. Exceeding Great and Precious Promises, II Peter 1: 4.
8. The Unchangeable God, Alma 5: 75.
9. The Inheritance of the Saints, Colossians 1: 12.
10. For All Men, Everywhere, Acts 17: 30.

Sunday Night Branch Service Sponsored by the League:

Suggested Panel Discussion: "The Fundamentals of the Restoration."

First Speaker: "Why did the Restoration Occur?"

Second Speaker: "Why are the statements of the 'three witnesses' important to us?"

Third Speaker: "What is unique about our church?"

Fourth Speaker: "How may we reflect the spirit of the Restoration?"

Summary: "The meaning of the Restoration for us today."

Zion's League Meeting:

Suggested quiz program on church history based on Exploring the Church by Elbert A. Smith.

1. Did Christ organize a church? Page 5.
2. Why was the Restoration a necessity? Page 8.
3. Make a brief statement as to the difference between the terms: Apostasy, Reformation, and Restoration. Pages 9-13.
4. What did the Roman emperor, Constantine, have to do with Christianity? Page 10.
5. What caused the apostasy? Pages 10, 11.
6. Had this condition of apostasy been foretold? Page 11.
7. How do both the Old and the New Testaments foretell the apostasy? Page 11.
8. Why did the great reformers feel that a Reformation was necessary? Page 12.
9. Name at least three of these great reformers. Pages 12, 13.
10. What is our position when we compare our church with those of Catholic and Protestant faiths? Page 13.
11. How did the Restoration Movement differ from all other movements? Page 13.
12. Describe the first great religious
(Continued on page 22.)

Challenges

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

—1.—

I HAD ALWAYS wanted a pair of cowboy boots, so last summer below the border I had myself fitted in a fine pair. Since then I have worn them on hikes, horseback riding, and in the snow. They are the most comfortable footwear I have ever had. If it were not for the fact that when I wear them everyone stares at me, I would wear them all the time. I must admit that the public opinion against my wearing them keeps me from having the utmost foot comfort.

Maybe that's the reason why we often fail to do certain things which would better the conditions of our own souls and of our church. We are afraid to do too much that is conspicuous. We're too afraid of being a "peculiar people."

I go street shopping—wearing my boots—and I hear remarks and catch the glances of others. This is not always in criticism, for often I have heard them complimented, but I am conspicuous. Now comes a question of values—the welfare and comfort of my feet or caring whether people stare at me. The same would be true of those other experiences. It becomes a matter of values, whether it is more important to continue in a virtue or activity or to care more for the notice of the crowd.

—2.—

PERSONALLY, I CANNOT appreciate the bloop-bleep of a lot of the so-called popular music of today. My own collection of records is slowly growing with the music that lasts—the music that I appreciate more every time I hear it. Recently, through a new source, I have been able to obtain several excellent foreign recordings of the classics as performed by symphonies and artists of other countries. Some of these are familiar things and the orchestration and interpretation differ little from that of our own best musicians. Again I realize that music is indeed a universal language.

There are other things which are universal in appeal, as well. A smile is never misinterpreted, no matter what the language. Nor need the language be a barrier. Janke writes to me in Dutch, a Catholic priest translates her letters for me. I write to her in English, and her fiance does the translating over there. Yet we have common interests in the church and those extra persons who must necessarily intervene have little effect on our correspondence. Truly the message of Jesus Christ, as brought forth by him, and unchanged in these latter days, is universal, recognizing no barriers of language, race, or geography.

—3.—

THE MASTER OF ceremonies of a popular radio program asked his listeners to ballot on those things of most value which they would like to give to the world at the last Christmas season. Over seventy thousand people voted and their choices in order of preference were as follows: peace, understanding, faith, love, God, happiness, contentment, tolerance, health, and friendship.

If seventy thousand people have really deep convictions about wanting these things for the world, then we may expect 1948 to bring great strides for their accomplishment. That number of people banded together can be a formidable army.

And just think how strong the army of the Lord would be if all the members of the church would band together for the accomplishment of a set purpose, whatever the purpose might be stated. Surely if that purpose were the program of the church, we would bring to the world all of the qualities of a full life as balloted upon by this radio audience. There are others thinking about these things just as strongly as we are, but somewhere the necessary leadership is lacking, and most people continue doing nothing but thinking and balloting.

—4.—

THE RECIPE ON THE box assured me that only one unbeaten egg, a couple drops of vanilla, and a half cup of milk were needed. I beat up the mixture well, and in a few minutes a lovely dozen cupcakes came out of the oven. Baking is no task when such prepared mixtures are used. No matter what you want—biscuits, cakes, gingerbread, pies, fudge, hot chocolate, mashed potatoes, or soup—just add a little water and pop in or on the stove and you're a good cook. Yes, the product is usually good, but so far I have not tasted any of these things which can compare to the product of a good cook who uses her own ingredients and her own favorite recipe.

Even religion has become synthesized to a great degree, and many people cry for more such nut-shell religion. All the quarterlies, lesson helps, and daily readings in the world are superfluous if they do not stem from and contribute to good, old-fashioned, honest study of the standard books. All the printed worship programs, poems, drama, and music for our services are overage unless they contribute to the soul's contemplation of God and a determination for greater service. There will never be a pill one can swallow on a Sunday morning which will give him salvation. Christ's way of life was a full-time job, and thus it is intended to be.

BACK IN DEPRESSION days many families found it necessary to rely on government aid for their subsistence. I know of a family that received its allowance of flour. Two days later, a visitor called and found that none of the flour was left. The mother had baked all of it up into pumpkin pies and the members of that family had made themselves ill, gorging on the pies. Two days later, they were hungry.

The reunions, conferences, and special meetings often are consumed in this way. Instead of serving as stimuli for an extended period, the spiritual experiences of these meetings are often exhausted in intensive enthusiasm immediately after such meetings, but soon the real purpose of the gathering has been forgotten or lost.

After all, a continued diet (spiritual or physical) is more important than a lot of pumpkin pie eaten in one day.

The Second Mile

SOME PEOPLE ARE wonderful. They never expect something for nothing. They don't take advantage. They pay full fare and full price. And when they think a mistake has been made in their favor, they return to make restitution. Believe it or not, there are people like that. And the happy part of it is, some of them are church members.

Take this example. The Management announced that on a certain date the subscription price of the Herald would go up. That means that for a certain time, some subscribers will enjoy reduced rates.

Then consider this fine letter from Bethia M. Law, 210 Austin Street, New Bedford, Massachusetts:

"Enclosed is a dollar that I happily send to add to my subscription of a few months ago. It doesn't seem fair that I should have the privilege of the good things in the Herald nine tenths of this year for $2.50 just because my renewal was so late in the fall of 1947. Previous to the announcement that the subscription would be increased, I came to realize that in many instances a single copy was worth the full subscription price to me. . . . There are few issues of the Herald which rate anything less than a subscriber's hearty appreciation for its helpful, thought-provoking material."

So our contributors can take a bow, and know that their hard work to make the Herald a success is appreciated. THE EDITORS

Is Your Husband a Member of the Church?

BY MARIE GOSLINE

WHEN I AM ASKED, "Is your husband a member of the church?" I like to remember three women. None of their husbands belonged to the church, yet they started a branch, built and paid for a church and later a parsonage. Blood (almost), sweat (of course), and tears (many of them), made that branch grow until now it has well over two hundred members. I know what women can do who have determination, grit, and a vision. These women were looking for no excuse to be idle. They were looking for no easy way out. They were not afraid to work. You see, I know something about what those women went through to clear those buildings of debt, for I was reared in that village church.

I know what prayer, zeal, and labor did. I know what these three accomplished who set their goal and never lost sight of it, whatever their husbands were. Come to think of it, one was a gambler! I know of what sort of stuff these women were made. I know, because one of them was my mother. It is not easy for me to forget all the cookies she baked, packed in a basket lined with a clean, white cloth, and sent my little brother out to sell to help pay for that church.

When someone asks me, "Is your husband a member of the church?" I like to remember three women—women of character and courage, and women who were strong in the faith.

At first, many years ago, there was just a Sunday school held in a hall downtown. I, with my brothers, must have marched miles in that hall to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers!" which my sister played with one finger on the old organ, her feet barely reaching the pedals. Then, at last, enough money was gathered together to buy an older church, sadly neglected, at the outskirts of the village. Finally, oh, wonderful day, a lot was purchased and a church was built. Then the adjoining lot was bought and a parsonage constructed.

My Share of Life

Count not my age by years, and say,
 "She is too young to die today."
 But count my age in hours spent
 In happiness and deep content.
 And when you've counted, you will know
 I've had my share, and I must go.

LEOLA LALONE SHEPPARD

(As a young mother of Pittsburg, Kansas, the author was informed by physicians that she had an incurable malady and would die. Facing eternal life, she served her family and the church to the end, finding time to write such verse as this.)

What Latter Day Saints Believe

REVELATION IS AT THE heart of all religious experience. Men in all ages have sought to know God and in varying degrees have found him in nature, in the lives of other men, in their own hearts, and in the writings of prophets and holy men. Revelation is the end of all religious experience; for if men live sinlessly and worthily on earth, they may come into the presence of God and have a full revelation of his love, his power, and his glory. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."—John 17: 3. Revelation will continue to come so long as men need to know that Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God. Flesh and blood cannot reveal this truth to us. I cannot tell you; you cannot tell me in such a way that we have a sure testimony. Such knowledge requires a revelation from the Father in heaven. Paul wrote to the Corinthians: "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, except he has the Spirit of God."—I Corinthians 2: 11. As long as men need a testimony that Jesus is the Christ, just that long will they need revelation, for "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."—Revelation 19: 10.

Revelation is not static. It does not come to us exactly as it came to our fathers, nor as it came to Abraham, Moses, or Peter. Revelation goes forward as men grow in capacity to receive and to understand and to apply and use it. Even a casual perusal of the Bible will establish that principle. Revelation came to the several Bible writers on different planes of intellectuality and spirituality, as men rose from the lower to the higher. The revelation of God through Christ was quite a different revelation than the revelation of God on Mount Sinai. That is not to say that it was not the same God revealed on each occasion or that the new truth revealed contradicted or negated the old. It only supplemented it, as men had grown in capacity to apprehend. The God revealed through the scientific approach to nature in Galileo's day was quite a different God from the God of the atomic age; yet the difference lay only in the ability of men to see and to comprehend. God was the same.

IT HAS OFTEN BEEN said that Christ was the ultimate and final revelation of God, and too often those who have made that statement have implied by it that there could be no more revelation after Christ. But as we have already pointed out, who can know Christ? Who can comprehend the full and ultimate revelation of God which he gave in his life? Who has yet apprehended even all his teachings? Even with Christ, the ultimate in revelation of God to men, there is need in each new generation of a completely new revelation, not denying or displacing the revelation of the past, but supplementing it in the light of modern needs. Even Jesus himself, after three years of close association with his disciples, recognized that he had not revealed to them even a fraction of that which might have been revealed; and he said to them, "I have many things to tell you, but ye cannot bear them now." He promised that when the Comforter was come, he should guide them into all truth—revealing to them as they had need and as they developed capacity to comprehend.

One difficulty of revelation is illustrated by the limited capacity of children to comprehend. Take your little son or daughter on your lap and try to tell him in words that his childish mind can understand just how much you love him. Immediately you are confronted by two insurmountable difficulties; first, the lack of a vocabulary of words which will express at all the thing you feel; and second, the lack of capacity in the child to understand the full implications of parental love for a child. So God's revelation to us has always been marred—and always will be marred—by the dullness of men's perception and by the inadequacy of words to convey sublime thought.

But the fact that revelation is a difficult process and can never be perfect so long as man remains mortal does not keep God from using the processes of revelation to show himself to men any more than the inadequacy of words, and the lack of capacity in your child will keep you from telling him that you love him. Being the kind of person he is, God must be unchangeable, impartial, willing to treat all his children in all ages alike. If he revealed himself to Adam, Moses, Abraham, Peter, James, John, and Paul, he can and will reveal himself to you and me today if we develop the worthiness to receive and the capacity to receive, which must precede all revelation. We are commanded that man shall live by every word which proceedeth (present tense) out of the mouth of God and not alone by that which proceeded from his mouth in the past.

ALL REVELATION depends ultimately on God. He reveals himself as he will and when he will. But much of revelation depends also on us. God has revealed himself in the beauties of nature, for example, but not all men can see him there. God seeks to reveal himself also in the mysteries of science,

About Modern Revelation

BY EVAN A. FRY

but he is discernible there only to the man who has trained himself to the ways of science and who has sought to find God there. God seeks to reveal himself in the changed and reconciled lives of other men, but the scoffer cannot see him there. God seeks to reveal himself to us within our own spirits, but the man who has not repented of his sin which separates him from God, and who is not reconciled to the God-nature within himself, can receive no such revelation. God has revealed himself, and still does from time to time, by inspiration, by vision, by dream, by the gifts of discernment, tongues, and interpretation of tongues. But none of these avenues of revelation are open to the man who is not reconciled to God and whose capacity for receiving and understanding remains undeveloped.

Do we need revelation today? I believe that a little thought will convince you that we need it even more today than at any time in the world's history. As civilization has progressed and life has become more complex, we are confronted by problems which were totally unknown to our simple and oftentimes primitive ancestors whose horizons were limited and whose lives were not complicated by a multiplicity of gadgets and inventions which could be used either to bless or to exterminate mankind. As the radio, the printing press, and the airplane have shrunk the size of the world to a neighborhood, the need for intelligent control of the forces which man's genius has unleashed has become more and more apparent. If the people of Moses' day or of Jesus' day needed revelation, certainly we need it even more today. Who but God can show us the way to world peace? Who but God can direct men in their efforts to live according to the laws of his kingdom? Who but God can interpret for us in the light of modern world problems and present world needs, the laws and principles which he has already revealed to us? Who but God can give us the wisdom or the capacity or the insight to see all the implications and ramifications of the revelation he has given in the past? In any event, we need revelation today.

But some would say, "We have all the revelation we need, finished and complete for all time between the covers of the Bible." Latter Day Saints believe that the Bible is necessary and essential and basic to the Christian faith and belief, that it contains rules and principles and methods of attaining to salvation. But they do not believe that it contains all of God's revelation, or that men will never need any other revelation.

IN THE FIRST place, the Bible does not contain all the sacred books that have been written. A great many of them—no one ever will know just how many—have been lost. Some were rejected by the various councils which met to select from many possibilities the books and epistles which would go to make up the full canon of scripture. The King James translation alone mentions at least nineteen sacred books which are not included in our present canon of scripture. The Bible simply does not contain all of God's revelation to men.

Second, the Bible, as we have it today, cannot be the final arbiter in cases of doubt as to religious observance, because there are many differences in creditable Biblical manuscripts. If one creditable manuscript reads one way and another one equally creditable reads in some other way, which one is right? Which one is revelation, and which one is not? Only modern revelation, geared to today's needs and given in keeping with the capacities of today's men, can resolve these difficulties.

Third, there are almost countless variations in translations of the Bible. It is the work of prophets to write scriptures, but not to translate them into other languages. That is the work of scholars, and scholars sometimes honestly disagree as to the exact wording or phraseology to be used in making a translation. Does that fact not point to a need for modern revelation?

Fourth, the hundreds of sects and denominations in existence today all point to the Bible as their final authority. Yet there are seemingly irreconcilable differences of doctrine and belief existing between many of these denominations. Two denominations can take the same verse of scripture and get diametrically opposite doctrinal interpretations out of it. Which one is right? It is impossible that both should be. Then does not this fact point also to the need for modern revelation, which can interpret afresh for each generation the basic doctrines of Christ? Such interpretation is essential to the unity and vitality of the church. One of the insurmountable obstacles to church unity has been the refusal of most churches to accept present-day authority in the sense that the Roman Catholic church accept it or on the other hand to accept the necessity for modern revelation, direct from God, to clarify and unify and modernize old doctrinal concepts.

Fifth, the record of old revelation is always insufficient for today's needs. It is not enough that a wife should read over her husband's old love letters occasionally. She wants to be told today that he loves her; she wants some demonstration of affection in the present tense. The record of past revelation and past experiences with God is not sufficient for men and women of today. The Bible is the word of God, but it is not the last word. Rather it is the embryonic word, or the seed, which, when planted in the hearts and lives of men and nourished by a continuing process of revelation, will grow and expand and develop.

And sixth, we would remind you that all ancient revelation was once modern. Men have always been more willing to reverence past revelation than to seek for revelation in the present. It has always been the habit of men to reverence the prophets sent to their remote ancestors and to garnish their tombs with flowers and wreaths; but to ignore and ridicule and kill the prophets who were with them in the flesh. We do not need a revelation that Christ was. We need a revelation that Christ is—a revelation that will expand and grow and increase as we increase in capacity to understand and appreciate and apprehend the truth which God has promised shall be revealed to men who seek him, line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, until the end of time.

IT IS MUCH easier to live by a dead, static, recorded formula than it is to live daily so that we are worthy of an always fresh and living new revelation of God, in terms of our new capacities, new and modern needs, and our growing understanding. God does not reveal himself to lazy or indifferent or sinful men, but to those who seek him with clean hearts and pure motives, eager to use the revelation they receive for the furthering of his purposes and the building of his kingdom.

Next week we plan to tell you how Latter Day Saints believe in implementing revelation by providing within the structure of their church the means of receiving inspiration from God for the instruction, exhortation, and regulation of his church. We invite you to read the next sermon in this series, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Modern Scripture."

Price Changes Effective March 1

	From	To
Angel Message Tract Book—cloth	$ 1.00	$ 1.25
Angel Message Tract Book—paper	.50	.75
Book of Mormon—cloth	1.50	1.75
Book of Mormon—limp leather	4.00	4.50
Book of Mormon—flexible leather	5.00	5.50
Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants	2.00	2.25
	5 for 1.65	5 for 2.00
Compendium	1.75	2.00
Doctrinal References	.25	.35*
Does It Make Any Difference?	.50	.60
Enduring Word	2.00	2.25
	5 for 1.65	5 for 2.00
The First Americans	.50	.60
God Our Help	1.75	2.00
Inspired Version of the Bible—cloth	4.25	4.50
Inspired Version of the Bible
limp leather	6.75	7.00
with thumb index	7.75	8.00
Inspired Version of the Bible
flexible leather	9.25	9.50
with thumb index	10.25	10.50
Inspired Version of the Bible—de luxe	10.75	11.00
with thumb index	11.75	12.00
Let Us Worship	1.50	2.00
On Memory's Beam	2.50	3.00
Oriole Girl's Handbook	.35	.50
Restoration: A Study in Prophecy	1.75	2.00
	5 for 1.50	5 for 1.85
The Scouting Program	.35	.50
Through the West Door	2.00	2.50
Zion's League Annual	2.00	2.50

*no quantity price

Church School Leadership Series Price changes, March 1.

	From	To
The Church School, Its Organization, and Administration	.50	.60
Exploring the Church	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Children's Division	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Young People's Division	.50	.60
Improving Teaching—Junior High Division	.50	.60
Junior Church Manual	.50	.60
L.D.S. and Changing Relationship to the Social Order	.50	.60
That Problem of Leadership	.50	.60

Herald Publishing House
Independence, Missouri

LETTERS

To a Great Man

The sad news of the passing of Patriarch R. V. Hopkins, which reached us this week, and the moving tribute by Patriarch Elbert A. Smith in the Saints' Herald, brought to us the sweet memories of one of the many friendships we made during our stay in the Center Place last year.

We first met Brother Hopkins at the Fellowship Group prayer service in the basement of the Stone Church, a few days before General Conference convened. His warm welcome and gracious introduction touched our hearts beyond words.

On the several occasions that we were privileged to be in his company, we were made aware of his close living to God. He was truly a patriarch and a father; the church and those who were dearest to him are left with the sweet fragrance of the life of one who loved and was loved.

Our only regret is that we were not permitted to share more of the rich ministry which he so unselfishly gave to the church.

Truly a fitting end would be such as the Psalmist expressed: "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

A. T. TRAPP.

17 Honyatt Road
Gloucester, England

The Goodness of God

I can truly say that God is good and that he hears his servants' prayers. Not many months ago, my daughter was so near death the doctors said there was no hope for her. However, I called for the elders to come and administer to her. Today, she is well and able to work. I pray that I may find a way to repay Him for his goodness.

Millie Lance.

Kennett, Missouri

Report From Rosedale, British Columbia

The past year was one of accomplishment for the Saints of Chilliwack Branch. Half the church roof was re-shingled, and the lot adjoining the church grounds was purchased so that the building can be enlarged at a future date. In order to raise money, members of the Zion's League planted beans on the new lot. This project cleared $117.79 for the fund. Fifty dollars were donated by the women's department. Another improvement to the church was the replacing of transparent window panes with obscure glass.

The British Columbia District Children's Convention was held in Rosedale in July. Apostle Roscoe Davey was a welcome visitor, and Missionary Arthur Gibbs will be present the latter part of February. There were six baptisms and three men called to the priesthood during the year.

Ray Carter

Rosedale, British Columbia

In Appreciation of a Friendly Visitor

Under the leadership of Minnie Fiscus, friendly visitor for our branch, the women have done a wonderful work caring for the sick and needy. Since I have benefited by this ministry, I would be most ungrateful not to express my gratitude for it. Because of a heart ailment, I have been under an oxygen tent for the past four months. The doctors admit there is nothing they can do for me except to keep me as comfortable as possible. I have received many blessings through administration and have been made to feel that my work on earth is not complete. I therefore ask the prayers of the Saints everywhere that, if God so wills, my body may be healed and I may be made strong enough to serve him here on the earth.

I shall appreciate receiving letters from any who care to write.

MRS. MARTHA LUCE.

124 East Dwight
Lansing, Michigan

Asks Prayers of Members

I am isolated from church privileges and have been most of the time since I was baptized in 1915. I am still confident, however, that this is not just another church. One day as I was meditating, I began to question whether or not it differed much from the other churches and a voice whispered, "What about the Book of Mormon." I had read the book and knew it was true, and I thanked God for reminding me of this blessing. I used to walk a mile and a half to church, and one night as I started for prayer service, fear came upon me in the darkness. I prayed as I walked, and God replaced the fear with peace. Surely, he is mindful of his children.

Please pray for me and my non-member husband.

Mrs. Amelia LaBonte

Lake Leelanau, Michigan

No Furlough Granted

The past year has called for greater effort, a more intensive output of energy than ever before. Our hours are full of living.

In Eastern Oregon, where I labored for six months, as well as in Eastern Montana and Western North Dakota, there is a call for workers in God's vineyard.

Elder V. W. Ditton, president of Eastern Montana District, spends much time in visiting and preaching throughout the vast distances of his field. Such a territory could use half a dozen young ministers to the financial and spiritual advantage of the district, as well as the whole church.

The local ministry can do much to meet this need as well as in assisting the Saints to "go on to perfection."

We met with the Saints of Bantry at the Jerome Wager home. I enjoyed much liberty in telling again the "glad tidings." These people will have a branch here again soon if they let their light shine. What a vast field lies before us. It is a field yet almost untouched.

"Whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might and reap while the day lasts."—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 2.

There is no time for rest. Joy and peace are to be found only in service.

ORRIN R. WILCOX.

Wallowa, Oregon

From a Ninety-year-old Member

I wish to thank all who remembered me on my ninetieth birthday with letters, cards, and gifts. I appreciate these very much. Several have asked me the secret of my long life and good health; I believe it is because I observe the Word of Wisdom. I have not touched tea or coffee for over fifty-one years, neither do I use alcoholic or carbonated beverages. I have cooked cereal for breakfast, a light lunch, and a warm evening meal. I have not eaten beef or pork for forty years. Also, I retire and arise early.

It is my testimony that all who observe the Word of Wisdom will have better health and will need little medical care.

J. M. MCCONNAUGHY.

57 Elmwood Street
Barberton, Ohio

Note of Thanks

I wish to thank all who remembered my husband, Ezra Miller, in prayer and those who sent cards and letters to him while he was ill. EDITH L. MILLER.
Delavan, Kansas

Worship Suggestions for April

By RUBY STRAND

Theme for the Month:

THE GOOD SHEPHERD

APRIL 4, 1948: FEED MY SHEEP

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, No. 288.

Call to Worship:

"Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young."—Isaiah 40: 10, 11.

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, No. 288, stanzas 1, 2, 3, 5.

Prayer:

Asking that we become better acquainted with the Good Shepherd as we worship together.

Scripture Reading:

"So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs. He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my sheep. He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? And he saith unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep."—John 21: 15-17.

Thoughts for Meditation:

When Jesus called his disciples to him that early morning for their last breakfast together, he did so with a great purpose in mind. It is important for us to appreciate that purpose. We are his disciples today . . . his under-shepherds . . . and the commission he gave to Peter is the same commission he gives to all who have pledged themselves through baptism to serve him. There is joy in that service and there is peace. There is also a challenge . . . the challenge to prepare ourselves through daily study and prayer and saintly application of his teachings. Then are we fitting ourselves to feed his lambs and sheep the kind of food that will help them to develop strong, spiritual lives. May his spirit bless us in our efforts.

Poem:

FEED MY SHEEP

With blessings unmeasured upon you to heap,
The Good Shepherd tenderly holds forth his hand,

His voice softly echoes this gentle command, "Feed my sheep."

No longer in pathways of sin need you weep,

The bread of my Spirit I'm waiting to give,

And by my rich graces you ever shall live, "Feed my sheep."

For you are my shepherds, oh! rise from your sleep,

Go search for my lambs, bring them safe home to me.

That here in my arms they full glory may see, "Feed my sheep."

—Phillis Moore.

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, No. 216.

Benediction

APRIL 11, 1948: HE LEADETH ME

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, No. 264.

Call to Worship:

(This is a prayer. Ask congregation to stand with bowed heads.)

A PRAYER TO THE SHEPHERD

Jesus, thou art ever near,

The shepherd of thy sheep;

Be with us each hour this day,

Thy loving watch to keep.

Help us, Lord, to worship thee,

As here we sing and pray.

Send thy spirit now to bless

And guide us on our way.

—Camilla Collins.

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, No. 263.

Theme Appreciation:

In the hymn we just sang, the tender, shepherding qualities and character of Jesus are emphasized. Not only was the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem of Judea proclaimed by humble shepherds, but He compared himself to the shepherd of the sheep. It isn't strange that Jesus said, "I am the Good Shepherd; the good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep" (John 10: 11), for he knew the ways of a shepherd. His ancestors followed that vocation. Also, having grown up in the hill country, his knowledge was firsthand. He had seen the love in the lives of good shepherds. He had seen their patience. He knew something of the lonely lives they led, and yet he had seen their joy with their flock. No greater challenge could he accept than to be a good shepherd. No greater challenge can we accept than to follow a leadership such as his. May we hear the call of the Good Shepherd. May he lead us in service.

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, No. 272.

Benediction

APRIL 18, 1948: THE NINETY AND NINE

Setting: Use the picture, "The Lost Sheep," by Soord, with an arrangement of flowers or lighted candles.

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, No. 232.

Call to Worship:

Good Shepherd, loving Shepherd kind,
We see that now the lost you find.

And yes, we know that it is true

For many times we come to you

When we are sad and very low;

And then it is, your face doth glow

With love and tenderness divine,

And now you say, "Come, child of mine;

Though briars prick and thorns may tear

I'll help you climb this mountain bare,

Come, clasp my hand! be lifted up!

And at my table daily sup."

Then as we place our hands in thine,

We reach with ease the steep incline.

—Camilla Collins.

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, No. 232.

Scripture Reading:

"And he spake this parable unto them, saying, What man of you having a hundred sheep, if he lose one, doth not leave the ninety and nine, and go into the wilderness after that which is lost, until he find it? And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing. And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbors, and saith unto them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost. I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance."—Luke 15: 3-7.

The Message:

Nowhere is there a more vivid presentation of Luke's story of the lost sheep that was just read than in the picture before you. Doctor Bailey says: "The trouble with most of the good shepherds is that they are good for nothing. The theme has been handled over and over again, and usually one sees the figure of a pretty man holding a lamb in his bosom. No real shepherd ever wore elegant draperies that adorn their artists' models. . . . When you come upon a real shepherd in the shepherds' country, something is apt to grip your heart and throat. Shepherding is a man's job! You see the rough jacket made of fleece turned wool side out; the bare, bronzed bosom; the scratched bare legs; rough shoes of rawhide; the great club of oak with its knot on the end, heavy enough to fell a bear; the high-stepping stride and the muscles like steel that endure the tramps over rocky country, the fearless eye that can face danger alone; and you often see a lamb in the strong arms. Such a person Jesus had in mind when he said, 'I am the Good Shepherd.'—From Christ and the Fine Arts, by Maus. It is that kind of shepherd that we see depicted before us . . . one that does not say, "I told you so," when his sheep find themselves in precarious situations. Perhaps there was a lacking of humility, or too much ego, or ignorance of the dangers about. Whatever the cause, we find the sheep clinging helplessly to the edge of nothing, it seems, hungry and cold and apparently forgotten. And then the good shepherd appears, to which Jesus likened himself, seeking to save that which is lost and ready to die. In this picture, we find the spirit of Jesus' teaching. No soul is beyond the outreach of Christ's shepherding love. As we let our hearts rest upon this picture, we—the sinners—feel his love. We cannot help but respond to that love, and sense why he could say, "Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost."

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, No. 288
Benediction

APRIL 25, 1948: FOR HIS NAME'S SAKE

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, No. 242.

Call to Worship:

"I am the Good Shepherd (and the stone of Israel; he that buildeth upon this rock shall never fall), and the day cometh that you shall hear my voice and see me, and know that I am. Watch, therefore, that ye may be ready. Even so. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 8.

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, No. 242.

Prayer:

Asking that we might more deeply appreciate the love of our Shepherd and be led in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

Scripture Reading: Psalm 23.

Theme Appreciation:

Can we say with the Psalmist David, "The Lord is my shepherd"? Have we established personal relationship with him? Only then can we say it truthfully. Does he lead us in paths of righteousness for his name's sake? Brother Elbert A. Smith has said, "The saints of God are bought with a price. They are no longer free to do whatever extravagant fancy may urge. Their actions reflect credit or discredit upon the Master and upon the cause for which he died. It is their duty to walk in paths of righteousness 'for his name's sake.' . . . When the world sends us a gilded invitation to attend its continuous vaudeville, let us write across the face of that invitation the third verse of the Twenty-third Psalm and say no, 'for his name's sake.' " When we are able to live the message of this beautiful Psalm, we shall see the towers of Zion taking shape and find pasture therein with the Good Shepherd and his sheep.

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, No. 298.

Benediction

Two Men and a Casket

A light outlook on a dark thought

By J. RICHARD MELOAN

Two Latter Day Saints were standing over the casket of a nonmember friend. The first remarked to his brother, "Did anyone ever tell him about the church and the way to heaven?"

"No, I don't think anybody ever did," replied the other.

"He's likely to be pretty mad about it when he finds out, don't you think?" queried the first brother, a little alarmed.

"Yes, he'll wonder why none of us ever told him. You don't think he'll tell on us, do you?" asked the other.

"Well, I dunno. But it'll probably get out one way or another. Y'know, I forgot to tell Smith about it . . . he got killed in such a hurry the other day. I figured he would be around for a while, healthy chap too . . . I was gonna tell him."

"Maybe we better start telling these guys," joined the other. "We don't want too many of them gettin' up there. It might not be safe for us to go."

And they dropped the lid on the coffin and departed.

Book of Mormon Stories in Zion's Hope

This series will end with the May 2 issue. We are planning to start some church history stories by various authors. If you would like to use these stories in primary worship services, church school classes, or for the home bedtime story, please note and get your subscription to Zion's Hope in by March 31. Single copy, per year, in United States $1.00; in Canada $1.25; in other countries $1.50. Five or more in one package (by the quarter), in United States, 20c each; in Canada, 25c.

Missing the Mark

A Between You and Me Feature from the "Lamoni Chronicle" by the Editor,

KATHRYN C. METZ

ONCE upon a time there was a young man who found a $5 bill on the sidewalk. From that day on he never lifted his eyes when walking along the street. In the course of a few years he accumulated 1,504 bobby pins, 19,056 buttons, 12 cents, a bent back, poor eyesight, and a mean disposition. He was ignorant of the glory of the sunshine, never experienced the joy of exchanging a smile with his neighbor, and missed the sight of pink apple blossoms against the blue sky.

* * * *

And then there was the mother who took pride in the spotless appearance of her kitchen. It was too much trouble to invite the neighborhood youngsters in to pop corn or to make sandwiches and cocoa after the game. It took too much time to teach her daughter tricks of cake making or how to roll out a pie with quick, light hands. And then one day she realized her kitchen was much too spotless. By that time the children were happy enough at the neighbor's house or down town drinking a Coke at the drugstore.

* * * *

"Someday," was the promise he kept making to himself. "Someday, I'm going to read good books. Someday, I'm going to travel," he kept promising himself. But he continued to live in a shallow world, bounded on the north by a desire for money, on the south by a craving for power, on the west by a yearning for recognition, and on the east for possession. By the time he gained his desires, his health was gone and his eyesight impaired. He didn't have a memory to keep him company, he couldn't recall a beautiful thought from a good book, and he couldn't imagine the wonders of nature. He was a poor man, despite his wealth.

* * * *

"Oh, sure," the bright, ambitious youth said, "I intend to serve my church . . . but later. Right now I want a little carefree fun. I want a few things for myself before I start doing for others." Time passed. He lost certain things of true value as he sampled first one pleasure and then another. Finally only a vague memory of his intent to serve lingered in his heart, and his beautiful dream went wandering through the world, the victim of earthly pleasures.

* * * *

He studied hard. He learned the name of every star, the whys and wherefors of science; he could name the rulers of the ancient world and explain Mendel's Law. He was familiar with the sayings of Socrates, the religion of the Moslems, and the writings of Milton. Somehow he was so busy gaining important knowledge that he neglected to learn the simple things, like the meaning of compassion, or brotherhood, or service. And then he complained because of the stumbling feet of his fellow men. He didn't realize that he held the torch too high, forcing them to walk in darkness.

Program Planning

By Mrs. Robert Farnham, Lamoni, Iowa

TO PLAN A SUCCESSFUL program for women, one must first have an over-all view of the tasks set before the women of the church.

The privilege of building Zionie homes is ours to enjoy. This is the task—if we wish to call it such—the church has entrusted to our care; this our goal.

At first thought, this seems such a large task that we ask ourselves “Where shall we begin?” The answer: begin at the starting point.

When we learn to swim, the instructor does not fling us out into the middle of the pool at the first lesson and say, “You wish to swim? Well, swim!” Although our ultimate aim is to be able to swim, we can’t do it in one lesson; we must break down the larger goal into smaller goals with the perfect ideal always in mind. We must learn a few strokes at a time and, if we are wise, we will know that we cannot accomplish the desired results in a few months. It is more difficult for some than others; but if we are patient, we will succeed.

As it is with swimming so it is with building Zionie homes. We must learn one stroke at a time. We’ll take the long-range view, then with wisdom and patience, we will tackle the job and win. We’ll make mistakes, acknowledge them and profit by them. Our mistakes will serve as steppingstones to a greater understanding of our task.

AS LEADERS, we feel that we know to some extent the needs of the women in our group. This does not come as a gift with the majority of votes in our favor at our annual business meeting, nor does becoming a leader guarantee us psychic insight. No, since that day, these women and their needs are ever on our minds. We have been humble and have petitioned our Heavenly Father many times in their behalf that they, as well as we might be directed in building his kingdom.

Sometimes we have not had the desired response from our group but have been “bopped” on the head, so to speak. It has made us stagger a few times, but we refuse to allow it to trouble us. As babies we did not mature in a day, nor is spiritual and mental maturity quickly gained. Knowing this, we go along for the time being with the current and use it to our advantage, making it work for us instead of fighting it.

IN DESIGNING A PROGRAM for women, we must first consider their background and experiences. Are they rural or urban? Is the group large enough that it can be broken down into smaller or “interest groups”? There should be a special group for the young married women. They need to feel the kinship of others their age and to be able to discuss freely the problems of young marrieds. There should also be a group for the older women, whose children have reached the adolescent stage. The problems they face are very different from those of their younger sisters. Then the women who have passed that stage in their lives and wish to relax, study, and do the things they started to do in college, but could not finish because from the time their children were born, they were ever on the alert to keep them fed, clothed, and out of mischief.

And don’t forget the grandmothers. They are tired, and their active days are past. Many have been leaders in their younger years and have studied diligently, but now their interests are along different lines. A group to fit their needs is certainly advisable.

Working girls should be remembered, too. Many of them would like to take part in women’s work, but are unable to because of the time of meeting. Evening meetings will solve this problem.

Now for the group that is not so large and is composed of women of all ages and experiences. We must bring to them a varied program that will meet the needs of all. We know that understanding deepens with experience, so in this group we must build up a feeling of tolerance and love. The study and activities chosen should be desirable to all.

IN PLANNING A program for any group, keep in mind the necessity of building a four-square program. First, there is a spiritual need—a need to worship and grow closer to God. We can experience this in our devotions at the beginning of meetings. This should be short if the lesson study which is to follow is of a religious nature, and longer if the study is secular. Whether it be five minutes or fifteen, this time should be spent in bringing to the group a better understanding of God and his purpose in relation to his children.

Second is the need to grow culturally. We should have at each meeting some appreciation and expression of music. This could be in the form of special numbers; or a few minutes each meeting could be devoted to music appreciation. A portion of the time could be spent in studying art, home decoration, furnishings, or personality development. There is a great deal of fine material from which to choose in this line.

— — — a home column feature — — —

Third, we must not neglect mental development. The church offers us a great variety of books to choose from. Religious books, books of a secular nature, books on psychology, mental health, budgeting, and books that deal with our beliefs as Latter Day Saints.

Fourth, social life must not be neglected in our meetings. We are a gregarious people; if we neglect to satisfy this social need in our women's groups, they will seek and find it elsewhere. Let's give our church functions the best. Let's plan our refreshments as carefully as if we were giving a party in our own home. Have you ever heard, "Oh, it's just a church group, a drink and a wafer is enough"? Let's go "all out" when planning for a church meeting—it pays dividends. Bring some beauty into the lives that are drab and filled with drudgery. In planning refreshments, make them as attractive as possible. We can meet this need of fellowship in other ways. Plan a covered dish luncheon, a May breakfast, a Christmas tea, or a book review with a tea following. These functions meet more than just a social need; they may also serve as a missionary or money-making project, or as a family get-together night.

However, through it all we must remember, if the group exists only for itself, it has failed its purpose.

The church is the vine that gives to us its branches and life, we, in return, must give back to the church our loyalty, our efforts, and consecrated lives to sustain it. We must not only participate in person by attending the church services but we must participate in spirit. In doing this and in obeying God's commandments, we insure our lives and the life of the church.

Let us create a desire to be a real part of the church family.

Home Management for the Veteran in College

BY MARY LOUISE WOLFE

THE ANSWER TO MAKING YOUR INCOME cover your expenses is a budget. Mere mention of the word to many veterans and their wives is distasteful and conjures up visions of penny-pinching and doing without many of the things you would like to have. With experience, you will find a budget to have exactly the opposite effect.

Now there are two types of budgets, theoretical and practical. Some budgets work in theory but not in practice; therefore, the adoption of the practical method. This, in one sense, is a trial and error method. First you must figure your income—say for one month; then classify your expenditures, such as rent (which is stable), food, cleaning, care, amusement, and miscellaneous expenditures. Figure your rent and utilities first, because they must be paid or your service will be discontinued. Then divide your income to cover your other needs, always with an allowance for savings, be it ever so small. And don't forget to set aside something for fun. This type of budgeting makes an allowance for amusement, which is very definitely necessary, particularly where your family life is on a schedule as it must be when a veteran is in college.

Here is an example of the trial and error method I mentioned. Perhaps this week you made too large an allowance for food, so next week cut it down a little and, after several weeks, your allotment to each heading will level off and you will know exactly how much money it takes you to live per week. Let us use the weekly basis, because you will find, I believe, that a week is easier to plan for and keep track of than a month. I think you will find the booklet, Tithing and Family Budget, a convenient way to keep your family finances and your tithing record clearly before you.

A CONVENIENT WAY to keep your money straight is the envelope method; one envelope for food, one for utilities, one for amusement, etc. This removes the temptation to "borrow" a dollar from utilities to put in food. Now we come to the question of money left over at the end of the week. For example, you didn't have to buy any staples this week, so you have $2.50 left in food envelope. You can do one of two things, either go ahead and buy the staples a little at a time as you go along, spreading them over a month; or put aside the money left this week and the money you have next week and buy your staples all at once.

At the present time, your two greatest allotments will probably be food and shelter. The rent is something you can't economize on; however, with planned buying, you can serve well-balanced meals for a good deal less than you can with haphazard buying. With a definite food allowance, you learn to cut corners, to make it stretch—and it can be fun. Don't be a slave to a budget, make the budget serve you; with time and use, it serves you better and better.

After you have set up your budget and you are satisfied it covers your needs, ask yourself these questions:

1. Does it reveal the cost of living for the family group? If not, and you can't see where the total income goes, then your budget is faulty and you had better try again.
2. Is it psychologically sound in that it allows for justice to all members of the family?
3. Have you made an allowance for savings? This is part of your long-time planning.
4. Is the budget easy to operate and convenient? This is important because a complicated method will soon be cast aside as more trouble than it is worth.

If your answer is yes to the above questions, then you have a sound basis on which to start operating your home on a budget plan.

LET US LOOK for a moment at the advantages of a budget. Money cannot buy happiness, but the way a family manages its money has a great deal to do with happiness. It can make all the difference between feeling confusion and failure; and a sense of accomplishment and success. Money management is a planned and orderly way to live which means smoother and more successful living. No income is large enough to have everything we want. Everyday we are forced to make choices which determine the standard on which we will live. The test of success is not how much you bought or the amount of money spent but the stability and security of the family. We cannot buy contentment with the money left over after the bills are paid, it must be part of day by day living. Add a plan to a wish, and you have a budget.

Love Finds The Way

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.—John 13: 35.

PERHAPS ONE OF the greatest examples of love for a brother is illustrated in the parable of the man who fell among thieves. His benefactor expressed a love that was not duplicated by the men of higher social standing, the priest and the Levite. The Samaritan, though despised by his neighbors, proved this love he had for all mankind. He didn't have to tell anyone he loved his neighbor; his action has lived for two thousand years as a testimony of his overt act.

Basic in this work called missionary endeavor is our love for our fellow man. Not an "I'll love you if you'll think as I do," or "Endure all my idiosyncrasies, and it will be easy for me to love you," but a deep and abiding conviction that we do love all humankind because we have seen the way of life eternal.

The greatest missionary was the Son of God, who used simple methods, lived as a humble example before all people, and left us with an eternal pattern to follow. We look to him for the way to lead others into an everlasting covenant with the Father of us all.

Many are the methods taught in the schools of learning, wide are the experiences of the "front-line missionaries," and great is the advice of the seasoned worker, but basically we go back to the assumption that all effort stems from the great love we have for people—a love that impels us to share our knowledge of God and Christ with them, that they, too, may be the recipients of whatever good thing God has in store for those who obey him.

By Arthur J. Rock

I AM ASSUMING THAT love is the only motive that causes us to carry the gospel plan to anyone. From this one impelling force, I draw these statements concerning the gaining of souls for the kingdom of God. In the Bible (Mark 10: 19, Inspired Version, and Mark 10: 21, King James Version) we are told: "Then Jesus, beholding him, loved him, and said unto him . . ."

It is when we have been touched by the Spirit of God and Christ, when this great love manifested by our elder brother takes hold of our being, that our hearts burn within us with the realization of this all-consuming direction from above. Once this is planted in our heart and soul and mind, we have the great urge to share it with all those about us. We are then emissaries for this plan of salvation, and our responsibility is not taken from us until we have discharged fully our duty of warning our neighbor.

Each one of us must fulfill his duty, whether in mart, or home, or full-time ministry. Our soul ever cries out for deliverance that is found only in full consecration to the plan of the Christ, who said, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me."—John 7: 16, Inspired Version and King James Version.

Our soul needs full expression after our mind has freed it from all binding thought of prejudice.

BECAUSE THE "new member" has so recently experienced the joy of completely surrendering to the will of God, he shows more concern for his friends and associates who do not yet know of such happiness. At this point in his life he is confronted more and more with the question, "What can I do, and how shall I begin my work?" From personal experience, I soon learned

Here Is the Writer

Arthur Rock has been under appointment two years, beginning his work with the radio department and continuing as an appointee to the Spring River District, Joplin and vicinity objective. He attended the State Teacher's College of Montana, the University of Montana, and the University of Washington, coming into general church work with five and a half years of teaching and three years of army life.

Mrs. Rock is the former Virginia Ann Williams and was an employee of the Herald Publishing House at the time of her marriage. They have two children, Judith Ann, age five, and David, age two.

that this thought no longer haunts the mind if we give way completely to every little task that is ours to do—the task that aids in the building of the kingdom of God here upon earth. The beginning is sometimes a very simple matter and something quite personal with each one. Our own accomplishments, interests, training, background, heartfelt desires—in fact everything that goes to make up a person who has any interest in God and Christ—affects what we do about this great desire to take part in the building and the plan of God. Because it is personal with an individual, each begins his work in quite a different way. Some teach, some preach, some visit, others bake pies for the bazaar or a neighbor, others care for the traveling ministry, and still others do the thousand and one little things that go to make up the whole plan. We cannot look to the accomplishments of others and consider our efforts a failure. We must only look to the person we could be and say, "That is my goal."

THOSE WHO FEEL strongly they should bring another to the way of Christ must do something about it immediately. Each day of procrastination allows that love of service to mankind to grow cold. Find a place to work. Tell someone you are eager to serve. Go to the leaders of your branch, and tell them frankly what you want to do. They may know just the place where you can serve or direct your efforts along lines you thought were not possible. That one directing force may start you on the path that leads to God, the way that may bring another to an understanding of the gospel plan.

To share what we have is real growth. Though we may not have of worldly goods, we can share the more plain and simple things with all those we contact. A desire to serve God and bring others to an understanding of his ways and the teachings of the Christ is important. It may not be the first service we offer. We may not even realize for some time we are interested. Only after some experience that opens the floodgates of love and allows us to see our potentialities do we realize the real desire we have to serve God with all the love of which we are capable.

Once we have this desire and the way is opened in our thinking to real service, opportunities arise daily where we can share this love with our friends, who then become friends to the cause of Christ. The task of winning friends to the way of the Lord may not be an easy one. It calls for perseverance, knowledge, wisdom, patience, understanding, and above all, love for this new found brother.

We find ourselves, we have the great desire to serve, we befriend another, we learn to love him because we have a great desire that he should be won unreservedly to the cause of Christ. Though our methods may be very simple, our results can be lasting, and the satisfaction of seeing one's friend brought to an understanding of what he can be in the light of what he is now humbles us to the place where God can use us as tools in his work.

PERHAPS YOU ARE like the young man who went into the service of his country, knowing he would return to serve God. His assurance was so great that nothing could prevent him from preparing for this task ahead. You may be the young person who plays the piano or organ each Sunday and any other time you are asked. You may be the "good listener" when the local priesthood expounds the gospel. Perhaps you have a heritage of forefathers who served God in this Latter Day Work and gave all they had. Whatever your background, your experience, your aims, hopes, or desires, you have a place to fill, and now is the time to quietly go about preparing yourself to bring another to a real understanding of the gospel plan. Ask the worker in any group and you will find the answer to be, "I found my work by doing. I loved my brother and God. I brought a soul nearer to God by allowing his Spirit to work through me."

The Trouble-Shooter

How Important Is Faith?

QUESTION: How important is faith? Isn't wisdom the greatest gift? If we believe in faith as most important, doesn't that release us from further responsibility in seeking knowledge? I personally do not think so, but I see good Saints who seem to feel that faith is all that is necessary—knowledge and wisdom and intelligence are not important.

ANSWER: By Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe

In considering the question before us of the major gifts of the gospel, it is our purpose to show the relationship of the gifts of intelligence, wisdom, faith, and knowledge to each other and their relationship to the souls of men, whom God hath placed in this probationary state to work out their own soul's salvation.

Let us first consider intelligence. In a revelation given to Joseph Smith in Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4, 6, we find: "The glory of God is intelligence or in other words light and truth." All truth is independent in the sphere in which God has placed it, to act for itself—as all intelligence also; otherwise, there is no existence. The Lord speaking through the Prophet in this same section defines truth as a "knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they are to come." Then God expects man, to whom intelligence is given, to step out in this vast universe and discover truth. In this quest for truth, man shall not only seek for the laws governing nature, but he shall seek to find the law that governs the soul. He will search the revelations God gave to the prophets of the former-day saints to find the law of truth they obeyed that reflected spiritual power which manifests itself in infinite justice, mercy, grace, and goodness, as well as love, wisdom, faith, and knowledge. With faith in God, he will obey the same law of truth, believing he shall be endowed with the same spiritual power.

In the Inspired Version, Hebrews 11: 1 states: "Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Notice that the word "assurance" is used instead of "substance," as is used in the King James Version. Assurance is more consistent with the latter clause in the passage which says, "The evidence of things not seen"—not the substance itself, for that would amount to knowledge, or the actual possession of the object hoped for. This assurance of things hoped for must come through some evidence either of a character which can be demonstrated in a tangible manner, or through some impression which gives an assurance to the mind of the individual possessing it, even if to no other. This faith prompts to action all intelligent beings. Without the assurance of man reaping benefits through accepting the Christ, he would not render obedience to the gospel law.

On the day of Pentecost, as is recorded in Acts 2, the multitude never would have appealed to the apostle to know what they should do to be saved unless they believed in God and his Son, Jesus Christ, whom they had thought to be an imposter and, according to Peter, had crucified him. Neither would they have believed in the authority of those apostles of Christ to teach and administer in the ordinances of the gospel of Christ. This faith was based upon the evidence presented by Peter, that Jesus is the Christ, and sealed upon their hearts by the Spirit of God, and not by the wisdom or the ability of man. The result of this faith was obedience to the law, and a knowledge of the truth for themselves. Thus we find that through the intelligence of the multitude, and through wisdom of choice, they had faith, the assurance of things hoped for, and through repentance and baptism they received remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit, which brought a knowledge that Jesus is the Son of God. This faith of the multitude, who heard Peter preach, was not a perfect knowledge, but after obedience to the law they had a perfect knowledge that Jesus is the Christ, and the faith of the obedient on that point became dormant, for they received knowledge and faith ceased.

Would this be the end of faith? No. This would strengthen their faith in spiritual gifts to be obtained through the Holy Spirit.

The first three gifts mentioned by Paul (I Corinthians 12) we believe are major gifts. They are gifts of wisdom, knowledge, and faith. The other gifts were healing, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues. These gifts, when sought for by faith, would increase our wisdom and enlarge our knowledge. These gifts should stimulate the obedient to the task of the church, which is to feed the hungry, visit the sick, comfort those that mourn, love God with all your heart, might, mind and strength, and your neighbor as yourself.

These gifts should cause man to have faith in the financial law of the church, and to help him see that in keeping the temporal law, he can become a good steward over his house, working with faith and wisdom and intelligence that the social program of the church may bring a knowledge of God's law to a world filled with greed.

Thus we see there is a close relationship between intelligence, faith, wisdom and knowledge. The glory of God is intelligence or light and truth. Without faith, it is impossible to please God, for as we keep the eternal laws and receive spiritual power, our faith increases.

Jesus says that life eternal depends upon our knowing God and Jesus Christ. Knowledge is the beginning of wisdom. Wisdom is knowledge applied to its best ends.

Restoration Festival Week

(Continued from page 9.)

- experience of Joseph Smith. Pages 14, 15.
13. What was the keynote of the revelation? Page 15.
 14. State briefly the angel's message to Joseph Smith in September, 1823, relating to the Book of Mormon plates. Pages 16, 17.
 15. What was the name of the angel who told Joseph Smith about the book written on the plates? Page 17.
 16. State briefly the facts concerning Joseph's first visit to the hill where the sacred things were hidden. Page 17.
 17. What was the name given the church at the time of its organization in 1830? Page 22.
 18. Tell why each of the following dates in church history is important:
 - December 23, 1805.
 - April 6, 1830.
 - June 27, 1844.
 - April 6, 1860.
 - December 10, 1914.
 - May 5, 1915.
 - March 16, 1946.
 - April 7, 1946.

—Pages 94-97.

See page 137 of Zion's League An- nual for additional suggestions.

(Note: Further helps will be given in next week's Herald.)

Restoration Festival

Notice to those who are planning the programs: Records are available containing the message of Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, "Witnesses of the Restoration," with the beautiful music of the Stone Church choir and organ. Brother Elbert delivers the message himself, and this record will have historical importance for members of the church in the future. It will be much more effective than renditions by local persons. For those who do not have record playing equipment, the address will be published in our issue of March 27.

For Your Restoration Festival Celebration

"The Angel Message"

By MRS. LEA BLACK

A radio play requiring thirty minutes for presentation.

May be given as a radio program, or in imitation of one, or as a stage presentation.

A limited number of copies available free of charge.

Four free copies will be sent to any branch upon request.

Order from:

DEPARTMENT OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION
The Auditorium
Independence, Mo.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

BULLETIN BOARD

Anniversary Institute and Banquet

The one hundred and eighteenth anniversary of the church will be celebrated by the women's department of the Southern Michigan District at the Womens Club, Lansing, Michigan, on April 6. Registration, 9 a.m.; fellowship service, 10; classes, 11 a.m. and 2 p.m., Mrs. Pauline Arnson, chairman of the General Council of Women, instructing; banquet, 6:30 p.m. for men and women ($1.75 per plate), Pauline Arnson, guest of honor, Elder A. W. Sheehy, speaker. Reservations for the banquet must be made before April 1 with Mrs. Glen Foster, 732 North Washington Street, Lansing, Michigan. The billeting committee is under the direction of Mrs. Everitt Berndt, 1205 Rundle Avenue, Lansing, Michigan. All women of the Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio Districts are invited to participate.

NELLIE MOTTASHED,
Women's Leader.

Detroit Zion's League Convention

The fifth annual Zion's League Convention of the Detroit-Windsor and Flint-Port Huron Districts will be held in Detroit on March 12, 13, and 14. Guest ministers are to be Apostle E. J. Gleazer, President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., of Graceland, and Youth Supervisor F. Carl Mesle. A banquet will be held on Friday evening at 7:15 in the Barlum Hotel for $1.65 a plate. Saturday's and Sunday's activities include class-work, fellowship, and worship. For banquet and billeting reservations, write Jack Owen, 1665 Inverness, Detroit 21, Michigan.

W. BLAIR MCCLAIN,
Detroit-Windsor District President.

Books Wanted

Rita M. Wells, 5830 Enright, St. Louis, Missouri, wishes to purchase all four volumes of the Church History. Please write stating cost and condition of books before mailing.

Kirtland District Conference

The Kirtland District Conference will be held at Kirtland on April 4 for the election of district officers. Apostle Blair Jensen is expected to be present. On Saturday evening, April 2, the Zion's League will initiate Restoration Festival Week with entertainment, fellowship, and refreshments.

J. F. WILDERMUTH,
District President.

Michigan Women's Institute

The Southern Michigan District Women's Institute will be held on April 6 at the Women's City Club in Lansing, Michigan. Registration will begin at 9 a.m. From 10 to 11, President E. R. Carter will conduct a fellowship service. From 11 to 12 and 2 to 3 p.m., Pauline Arnson, chairman of the General Council of Women, will be in charge of class work. A brief reconsecration service will conclude the afternoon's activities. A banquet for both men and women will be held at 6:30 p.m. in celebration of the 118th anniversary of the church. Apostle E. J. Gleazer is to be the speaker at this time. A sandwich luncheon will be served at noon. Women of the surrounding districts are invited to attend.

NELLIE MOTTASHED,
District Leader.

Books for Sale

Melvin T. Fowler, 6347 South Ellis, Chicago 37, Illinois, has all five volumes of Bancroft's Native Races of the Pacific States for sale. These books have Morocco leather binding, gilt edge, and are in excellent condition. They are of especial interest to Book of Mormon students.

Southwestern Kansas Conference

The conference of the Southwestern Kansas District will be held March 13 and 14 at Wichita, 1650 South Water Street. District reports will be read and officers elected on Saturday evening. Apostle D. T. Williams is to be present. The first session will convene at 2:30 Saturday afternoon.

ROBERT E. WILSON,
District Secretary.

Wants to Contact Members

The nearest branch of our church is at Portsmouth, which is over 200 miles from here. I will appreciate having any of the Saints near Austinville contact me.

FRANCES DECK O'NEILL, Austinville, Virginia

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Anna Ward of Hannah, Wyoming, that she may not lose her leg. She has had osteomyelitis for many years.

Brother Benito Maliwat, 1014 West Linden, Independence, Missouri, has just undergone a third operation on his hand, and thanks all who have prayed for him. Still suffering, he needs and asks continued prayers. He would be happy to hear from friends.

WEDDINGS

Whitehurst-Meek

Wilma Meek, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Meek, and John Whitehurst were married on January 31 at the home of the bride's parents, Elder H. M. Scott officiating. They will make their home in West Des Moines.

McCallum-Morley

Illa Morley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Morley of Elkton, Michigan, and Olson McCallum, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank McCallum of Owendale, Michigan, were married February 14 at the Reorganized Church in Owendale. Elder John Rogers read the service. The couple will make their home in the Thumb.

Walker-Callahan

Cynthia E. Callahan of Oakland, California, and Lt. Kenneth M. Walker, Hickam Field, Hawaii (formerly of Uby, Michigan), were married on January 9 at the Reorganized Church in Honolulu, Elder Howard Miller officiating. They are making their home in Honolulu.

Simpson-Kitchen

Audrey Evelyn Kitchen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Kitchen, and Frederick Myron Simpson, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Simpson, were married February 7 at the Reorganized Church in Buffalo, New York. Elder Simpson performed the double-ring ceremony. The couple will live in Buffalo.

Nelson-Adams

Arladine Adams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Adams of Bolckow, Missouri, and Norman Nelson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alma Nelson of Guilford, Missouri, were married February 20 at the Reorganized Church in Guilford. The bride's father read the double-ring ceremony. Arladine is a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium. The couple will make their home in Lamoni, Iowa, where Norman is attending Graceland.

Sprankle-Humphrey

Mary Humphrey and William Sprankle, both of Hartshorne, Oklahoma, were married February 19 at the Reorganized Church in Haileyville. Elder Fitzwater performed the ceremony, assisted by Pastor W. P. Hubble. The Sprankles will live in Hartshorne.

P. S.

* MONEY is something you pay more and more of, for less and less.

Shoe shines, for example. Time was when you could get a good one for a nickel. The boys apologized when they raised to a dime. It is a sign of the times that they have not apologized for raising to a quarter.

Haircuts are a dollar now. You can still remember when they were twenty-five cents. Once when I had forgotten to see my barber too long, a friend said to me, "You're either going to have to get a haircut or a violin." Wandering minstrels traditionally let their hair grow long, but the modern philharmonic player is as trim as anybody. However, I have been thinking of that violin again lately. Maybe if I carried one I could get by a while longer.

The candy bar today appears boldly in the old jumbo-size wrapper, but when you get to the bar inside, it is a shrunken dwarf. Either that, or it costs more. Manufacturers are spending more on advertising adjectives, less on nutrition. Maybe that is good for what's wrong with the American figure. And what drooly words they use. On one wrapper I read in a long list of ingredients, "Cream of Golden Maize." That, Dear Friends and Gentle Hearts, means yellow corn meal. What a euphemism—what an imagination! And the other ingredients—have you considered "lecithin"? It's in most bars today. How do you feel when you know that you are eating a "complex, waxy, crystallizable phospholipide"? Sounds as if it could give you indigestion, or an ulcer. But it isn't so bad—it's made of egg yolk and soy bean oil. Think of the good old times when candy was made of sugar!

Prices aren't what they used to be. But then, neither is money. The dollar bill was a sturdy thing that reminded you of a small dish towel. They devaluated it, then made it smaller, presumably to help the ladies, who don't have pockets. If this keeps on our dollar could shrink to the size and importance of a canceled postage stamp. . . . But however it is debased, people keep struggling and wearing themselves out to get as many dollars as possible.

* "YOU must be willing to be hurt, if you care about anything."—Sarah.

LATE WINTER

Crystals wreath my windowpane,
Frosty lace doth winter bring;
But oh! to see green leaves again
And feel the gentle breath of Spring.

Morning star and waning moon
Dimly gleam on snowy lane;
I dream of apple trees in bloom
'Mid slanting, silvery April rain.

—Frances M. Mills.

The Herald Publishing House is happy to announce the beginning of a new service to our church and church members. The church has purchased fine recording equipment, and we are going to distribute the records which they make. We shall call these STONE CHURCH RECORDINGS. Our first is a recording of Brother Elbert A. Smith's message to the young people to be used at their "Restoration Festival" banquet in April. This Restoration Message was given to him under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Every church and church family will want this sermonette given in "Brother Elbert's" own voice and words.

Witnesses for The Restoration:

A Message to the Youth of the Church

from

ELBERT A. SMITH
Presiding Patriarch

with

The Stone Church Choir

under the direction of

PAUL CRAIG

singing

"The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning"

12 inch vinylite (unbreakable) record

$2.50

ORDER THROUGH YOUR BOOK STEWARD OR DIRECT FROM

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

Christ the Healer

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

MARCH 13, 1948

NUMBER 11

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Faith

My love is gone, and I stand alone
 In wind and sun, and my heart is stone.
 But flowers bloom, and the world is gay;
 All life goes merrily on its way.
 My love is gone like a sailing star,
 Traveling the road to a land afar.
 I stand in anguish and cry his name;
 The empty echo comes back again.
 Then gently, as softly falling snow,
 Comes an inward voice, "God wills it so."
 "God wills it so, and in heaven's name,
 The loved one you seek will come again.
 Have courage, my child." I lift my head
 Feeling a power around me spread.
 Then I breathe a prayer and understand—
 The God who took him will hold my hand.

WINIFRED MILNER

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

Our Spiritual Foundation	3
Across the Desk	4

ARTICLES:

European Relief	4
Revelation and Reason, by Apostle Arthur A. Oakman	5
Church-wide Restoration Festival Week—Part II	9
People Are Pictures, by Joseph Richard Meloan	11
What L. D. S. Believe About Modern Scripture, by Evan A. Fry	12
An Inspired Message From an Inspired Leader, by F. M. McDowell	14
The Bright Side of Religion, by Naomi Russell	15
Food for Thought, by B. Mildred Nelson	16
The Minister Comes to Dinner, by Warren H. Chelline	18
Letters	19
A Tree of Faith, by Robert Anderson	20
What About Pacifism, by Dr. Roy Cheville	21
Bulletin Board	23

AUDITORIUM NEWS

* VANCOUVER, B. C.

Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs is reported by Apostle Roscoe Davey to have finished a missionary effort in the area of Vancouver and New Westminster Branches and the Kitsalina mission, which began on January 18. Local forces in all three places did some very fine preparatory work and supported the effort throughout. This, with the fine work of Brother Gibbs, brought successful results. Six were baptized on February 20, (children and adults); and on February 24, twelve adults were baptized—eighteen altogether. A number of family circles were completed. Samuel Smith, a great-grandson of Hyrum Smith, was among those uniting with the church. The work here has been advanced, and the people are very happy with the results.

* WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA

Merle P. Guthrie, missionary to Southern Ohio, Pittsburgh, and West Virginia, reports to Apostle D. Blair Jensen on a successful missionary effort at Wellsburg, in which local priesthood gave fine co-operation and took the initiative in preparatory work. "Baptisms include one excellent young couple, two young men high school graduates, two girls in high school, two mothers and their children, and several other children. Some of the children were from nonmember homes." Brethren Guthrie and Zonker made lists of prospects that offer opportunities for future missionary work.

* TRAVELING HOMEWARD

A cable from Howard F. Miller to the Presidency indicates that President J. F. Garver and Bishop Walter Johnson arrived in Honolulu on February 26, "both looking fine." They arrived from Australia by plane. They were expected to reach San Francisco about March 9.

Attention, Canadian Book Stewards and Pastors

Under date of February 24, 1948, we have been advised by the Customs and Excise Division of the Canadian Department of National Revenue that effective immediately our stewardship account books will be allowed importation into Canada under general permit number FEC-120. This general permit should include all three of the books in this series: "The Family Income and Expense Record Book," "The Youth Income and Expense Record Book," and "My Stewardship," the record book for children. If your local collector should raise any question, please refer him to File Number 4185-34 at the National Revenue office in Ottawa.

Our Spiritual Foundation

*"All things . . . are spiritual."—
Doctrine and Covenants 28:9.*

A NUMBER OF FRIENDS have noticed with approval the column by Dorothy Thompson that appeared in the Kansas City Times on March 1. A few selections from her comments provide a starting point for a period of careful thinking:

The dominant philosophy of our world is that the prime goal of society is to create a high material standard of living, measured by the amount and distribution of consumers' goods. Some months ago . . . gave expression to this idea in justifying the suppression of personal freedom in . . . The attempt to lift the mass while repressing individual aspiration and intimidating nonconformist minds, cannot possibly be "progressive." It must, of necessity, lead to stagnation. . . . Bureaucratic collectivism, by rendering impotent the very instruments of progress, invariably become poorer, not richer, in all that makes a civilization great and prosperous. . . . The problems of Europe—and America—will not, I think, be solved until our civilization forming minds have discovered a more satisfactory reason for living than to be consumers of goods.

"Life," said one of my friends, "needs to be lifted above the economic level." In that brief statement I think he stated the essence of the whole proposition.

There is no worse regimentation, no more wretched tyranny than a concept or an economic and social order that gives absolute primacy to the materialistic life. A bushel of wheat may be indispensable to the life of a man, but if you make the man subservient to the wheat, you destroy what makes him a man, and thereby abolish any good reason for bothering with the wheat.

Every political philosophy in the world at the present time is searching for the pattern of the future world. The old institutions, the old social practices and economic principles, have produced certain benefits; but they are inadequate because they still permit so much inequality, suffering, and injustice. Every government and social order is being observed and tested by the populations of the world. Those that are weighed in the balance and found wanting will, eventually, be discarded or changed. Those that meet the human need will have a chance to survive. Democracy faces its test in the great world laboratory as truly as dictatorship does. The survivor should be the one that produces the best results.

THERE ARE TWO major philosophies extant in the world today. One says that our waste and extravagance, our inefficiency and want come from the excesses of individual freedom; therefore we must regulate the individual and require him to do the work we expect of him. He cannot be permitted to plan his own life; we must plan it for him.

The other philosophy says that all the inventions, all the art and beauty, all the great contributions of civilization, all our progress has begun with free individuals who first thought, then planned, then led the people in the great improvements of life. Individualism has produced many excesses and inefficiencies but we cannot abolish freedom without limiting or destroying our power to improve. In practice, we have found a certain number of restraints necessary, at the same time leaving individuals free.

Only in a democracy, only under conditions of freedom (subject of course to a just and uniform set of protective laws) can civilizations rise to their greatest height by inviting and benefiting by the best contribution every individual is able to make. The curse of a dictatorship is that only one man, placed at the top, dares to have an idea. All the rest must obey, even when they know it is wrong.

ZION, THE PLAN of Christian community life, is founded upon the democratic principle of common consent. It is based upon the idea that the people have a right to speak to their leaders and to require them to listen and consider. There is no more important passage in the Doctrine and Covenants than section twenty-five, in which we read, "And all things shall be done by common consent in the church." The principle is also recognized in other sections.

Regimentation and tyranny have always made human life subordinate to property values. It cheapens the spirit, exalts power and material things.

When you give any intelligent human being his freedom, he first seeks to satisfy his hunger and other necessities, as any healthy animal will. Immediately after that, he begins to seek nonmaterial satisfactions: love, companionship, beauty, truth, and an understanding of God. He seeks them in his own way and according to his own hungers and desires. Suppress his freedom, and you take all these good things from him and rob him of his power to enjoy his life.

The leaders of the church today stand upon the basic principles of the church that were given by divine revelation and accepted by the common consent of the people. During more than a hundred years of history, those principles have been tested and have been found good. Under pressure of temporary circumstances, some other principles have been considered, but experience has shown how sound the foundation of the church is under all conditions. Today, the church is strengthening its foundations in a democratic way, extending its missionary work, giving power to the branches, working ever more effectively in all departments.

L. J. L.

Editorial

Across the Desk

Elder Harry J. Simons, Flint, Michigan:

On January 11 we had our annual branch financial observance day, at which we stressed the financial law. Brother Joseph Muir, district bishop's agent, was with us and preached at one of the churches. I preached at the other church in the morning. It was a cold, slippery, snowy day, but the response was not bad. We received statements from about seventy people and over $800 in tithing.

On January 18, Apostles Hanson, Gleazer, and Draper were in this area in connection with their survey assignment and were available as speakers in our Flint churches as well as in several of the neighboring branches. A fine response was given to their ministry.

Elder Herbert M. Scott, pastor at Des Moines, Iowa:

Concerning our District Youth Convention held here in Des Moines last week end with Dr. Floyd McDowell as our guest, by officers who have served in the district for a long time and by Brother McDowell, it was thought to be the finest youth gathering we have had. Approximately a hundred and twenty-five young people assembled in addition to other district visitors for the conference. Brother McDowell used as his theme, "Building homes for tomorrow, today." It was a marvelous experience for our young people and for the older ones too. In the afternoon devotional, many expressed their appreciation for the help they had received.

A banquet was held on Saturday night with about one hundred young people present; it was served by our Des Moines women's department. Brother McDowell spoke during the evening. On Sunday morning, he conducted the youth class, preached at 10:50, conducted the afternoon class and the devotional. In the evening he went with me to Runnells, Iowa, where he delivered another inspirational sermon.

Here in the branch, Elder N. V. Anderson completed a series of Sunday night missionary sermons using his charts and graphs. The sermons were all greatly appreciated, and the Sunday night crowd continued to grow to the point of real activity.

To see what is right, and not to do it, is want of courage.—Confucius.

European Relief

FROM ALL INDICATIONS, our European relief program will have to continue for an indefinite period. It also appears that our help to the people in Europe will have to be on a larger scale in the near future. We are, therefore, suggesting that all individuals, groups, or branches who feel able to do so, register with the Presiding Bishopric for the adoption of one or more of these needy families.

We have recently completed a survey of the needs of many of our people in Europe, and we are in a position to furnish specific food and clothing needs as well as clothing sizes for each family.

We are asking the sponsors in each case to assume the cost of all articles and foodstuffs sent, as well as the necessary postage. The postage rate is fourteen cents per pound. We will also want a report each time a package is mailed, so that our records will at all times reflect the total amount that has been shipped to each family. The mailings should be made for an indefinite length of time; however, in most instances one well-packed box per month will be sufficient for one family.

We have the names of several families on file at the present time awaiting sponsors, and more requests for aid are being received each day. We are hoping the number of responses to our suggestion will exceed the number of names we have on file at present, so that as additional requests are received from Europe we will have groups or branches waiting to take care of their needs.

Those who do not participate in the adoption program may continue to send used clothing to the Campus Shop, 406 South Pleasant Street, Independence, Missouri. The clothing sent there should be clean and in good repair, and there should be a size tag attached to each garment. Some of the most needed garments are as follows: Shirts, suits, socks, and underwear for men; dresses, coats, hose, and underwear for women; dresses, underwear, and stockings for girls of all ages; and suits, stockings, and underwear for boys of all ages. During the past year, 40,000 pounds of clothing and 2,648 pairs of shoes were processed by the Campus Shop for European relief purposes.

We are asking that all persons or groups who obtained names from us prior to December, 1947, and are mailing packages to these families regularly, write us immediately (if this has not already been done) giving us the names of these families and how many packages have been sent thus far to each. Please note that this is only required of those who are mailing packages on a regular basis.

Bishop H. W. Cackler is supervising this program, and all communications regarding it should be sent to the office of the Presiding Bishopric marked for his attention.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DeLapp.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

March 13, 1948

Number 11

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $3.50 per year and $1.75 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $3.75 per year and $1.90 for six months; other countries, $4.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

Revelation and Reason

Introduction

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

(The last of four articles in the field of apologetics.)

IN PREVIOUS ISSUES of the Herald, three articles have appeared under the general title, "The Bases of a Reasonable Faith." This is the last in the series. The reader is reminded that no claim is made on the part of the writer to originality. He has tried to gain a point of view that represents the accumulated wisdom of many minds which have been at work over a period of a hundred years. He has tried to make it his point of view. In some places in these articles, he will be found not quite articulate. The choice of words, in other places, could be much better than it is. The emphases and relative balance of parts has left something to be desired. But the writer feels that along some such lines as presented herewith, and herein but roughly indicated, exists the possibility of ministerial unity and intellectual renown for the church. Our fraternity should be one of intelligence; and indeed, it will be if "glory" be added to our priestly efforts.

Many people are impatient with philosophy and philosophizing. They do not know what philosophy really is. Others are impatient with theology. They do not know that theology is still the "Queen of the Sciences." Still others have no use for what they term "mysticism." These latter not comprehending what the gifts of the spirit are, mistakenly confuse a certain type of emotionalism with the views that are conveyed in the intuitive faculties of mankind. Mind, as well as will, and heart—along with the mind and will—must be "one," or men are not "whole." Too much thought tends to stagnation. Too much emotion is enervating. Too much overt action and unguided will mean the ditch. The words of the poet are here apropos:

Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell,
That mind and soul, according well,
May make one music—as before.
—Tennyson.

What the Prophets Taught About God and Man

GOD IS A PERSON

"Few would hesitate to describe Judaism as a religion with a personal God," admitted Mr. Clement Webb. The most casual reading of the Old Testament will convey the conviction that the Hebrew people conceived their Jehovah as a person. So far as they were concerned, truth, beauty, and goodness could not be understood unless transmitted through persons. True, there are some passages about wisdom, in which the writer almost descends to pantheism, but such passages are rare and cannot seriously be entertained in isolation from the total impact of the whole Judaic point of view. The Greeks thought of the Deity more as an object of intellectual contemplation than did the Hebrews, to whom he was a Person to be loved and sought after—someone who willed and wanted, who sought and desired to be sought after. The Psalms are full of allegorical references to the Shepherd and the sheep, and Isaiah refers to Christ as a Suffering Servant, whose travail is finally to be glorified by the personal action of his Overlord. Particular people are objects of his special care, and specific acts are done by God in times of stress to vindicate his supremacy. In the Old Testament, there is an overwhelming sense that the most significant figure in the entire history covered is Jehovah.

He it is who starts out with high hopes for his creation. He suffers reverses at the hand of his creature—man. Again and again he starts afresh and with each new beginning reaffirms his hope. Love, anger, exaltation, pleading, and sedulous education on his part are revealed in the story of his doings. The record is the record of the doings of a person. The Old Testament is a reverent biography of God—as yet, of course, uncompleted.

HE IS THE CREATOR

The brighter burned the prophetic fire, the clearer the light shed on the profound distinction between creature and Creator. Any confusion about this entertained here on earth or any tendency to think Jehovah "such a one" as man himself was met with sharp rebuke. "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are my ways yours, saith the Lord." For the prophets, idolatry consisted of this: that man should fail to recognize the gulf between creature and Creator and so confuse the two, thus finding sanctions for corrupt morality.

Philosophy and pantheism might make some sort of terms with idolatry by reasoning that "since God is in all things" the tendency to see Him in "this, that or the other" is based upon a "perfectly sound psychological principle" and is to be defended. God and nature being thus confused, confused also are the moral values. So philosophy and pantheism are restive and rebellious under the denunciation of the prophets. For, to them, however true it may be that Deity is everywhere—"in all things and through all things"—and whatever grades of creation expressing levels of divine genius there may be, the first thought of God must always be as ONE DISTINCT and apart from his creation. He is transcendent. Certainly there are differences in the modes and grade of various creations, and there are many kingdoms, but these varieties and their distinctions are as nothing compared with the absolute distinction rightly to be made between God and the works of his hands. God is present everywhere, but unconfused.

Here is the secret of prophetic denunciation of human pride and the ground for claiming humility in man. Man is not a part of God as the pantheists suppose. He is a creature created by God. Whatever man achieves in his own rightful sphere in fulfilling the ends of his own creation, he achieves only as he maintains harmonious relations with his Creator. And the maintaining of those relations, while desired from above, rests ultimately in the hands of man here below as he essays to follow the dictates of his own will.

There is a gulf that separates creature from Creator.

This gulf cannot be bridged alone by man taking to himself that which rightly belongs to God. The bridge must be built—indeed it has been built—so that the chasm might be crossed. It has been built by the Creator. But men are free to ignore it if they choose to do so.

The differentiation between philosophy and the prophetic faith reaches, at this point, an aversion. For if man is, as philosophy indicates, part of the universal reason or "oversoul," and if his limitations are but temporary hindrances destined ultimately to be banished by his own efforts, then pride becomes him and humility is groveling. Time is thus the only instrument of salvation. But if, on the other hand, as the prophets teach, man is absolutely dependent upon his Creator, moment by moment, not being able to draw a single breath—as the hymn has it, "unless Thou givest me power"—humility is not only necessary but a triumphant grace, as it appears in the eighth Psalm.

When I consider thy heavens,
The work of thy fingers,
The moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained,

What is man that thou art mindful of him?
And the son of man, that thou visitest him?

For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels,
And hast crowned him with glory and honour.

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name
In all the earth!

Thus to the prophets God is present in all things, but above them and unconfused. He exists in his own proper person prior to and apart from creation. He is spiritual and not subject to temporal limitations of time and space and bodily sanctuary.

God Is Sovereign, Absolute and Omnipotent

There are frequently recurring passages in the Bible which proclaim God as Almighty—powerful in and through all things. He creates light and darkness, good and evil. All is of him. To every being there is a law given which is the law of its being. This law executes itself. It is alive. It is vibrant. It preserves the obedient and destroys those disobedient. It is inexorable and incorruptible. It is given by the Creator to each existence, and the law thus given is the ground of divine supremacy. Men and nations can rebel, if they deem it wise, and go against it. But if they do, the will of God operative in this the law of their own existence exacts the penalty. This does not mean that God is arbitrary. It means that there is no other way to have any creation at all. The alternative is chaos, beyond conception, because conception is impossible without meaning, and meaning cannot exist in chaos. Meaning requires cosmos as the ground of its existence. A cosmos needs laws, bounds and metes, etc., in order to be. Thus, all things are of God and are by him. His will reigns supreme. While he is not personally the doer of all that is done, he is certainly a party to it. He must take the final responsibility. In the end he must be vindicated. In a great Day of Judgment, he will come into his own.

From him these laws of life derive their powers and are inseparably connected with his great purpose and work in and through all to bring that purpose to pass. But he is not able to do anything. He cannot find a shorter distance between two points than a straight line, nor make two adjacent mountains without a valley between. He cannot go against the law of his own being and is limited therefore by the agency graciously bestowed in man. The self-limitation is his pleasure and constitutes also the basis for our ultimate joy. Subject as men are to vanity, in the hope of some larger good, they are, nevertheless, liable to the misery vanity always brings when it subdues and brings disillusionment.

The Creator cannot have a man unless he gives him the power, temporarily at least, to disorder the whole world. The writer once heard a remarkable declaration of truth and faith by Apostle Paul

M. Hanson, President of the Twelve, when asked about the value of agency. "I would sooner be a man with my agency," he stated, "with all that means for good or ill, than I would be a marionette without it." This is in line with ancient prophetic declarations. And, in spite of what men actually have done in blindness and willful transgression to disorder creation. Eventually God will have his way.

This type of sustaining faith was not "thought up." It was received from above as part of a divine teaching. It came from such utterances as "Thus saith the Lord."

God Is Moral Perfection

The pagans contemporary with the Hebrews had the idea that the spirits or gods with whom they had to do were irrational and arbitrary. These cruel beings were liable at any time, and without apparent reason, to punish and vex their particular nation. There is a passage in Exodus (19: 22-24) and another in II Samuel (6: 8) where Jehovah is represented in something of the same light, "breaking out" upon the chosen people. But under the later guidance of the prophets, this earlier unworthy exposition of the divine action was purged of all blatant physical expression and implication. For them, the fear of the Lord was not frightening. It was the beginning of wisdom. Awe in divine presence was a reasonable requirement and a logical duty laid on the creature. For them, also, the chosen people were just as amenable to the laws of life as were other peoples. Sin was punished always and everywhere. Jehovah will not overlook the sin of Israel. Thus there is an emphasis on justice and impartiality. But equal with these aspects of Divinity, and later seeming to overshadow them, was a recognition of God's great love. The best of human affection and longing is taken up into the prophetic movement and surpassed in an attempt to convey to Israel a conviction not only of Holiness but of Love.

Can a woman forget her sucking child that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee.—Isaiah 49: 15.

This conception of divine love reached its fullest expression in the life and ministry of Jesus Christ. His victory over death was the victory of love. And the whole process of education about the nature and purpose of the Creator which had been going on for centuries in Israel reached its summation in the immortal words of St. John, "God is love." Earlier and sterner aspects of the divine nature are thus eventually seen to be but an expression of jealousy on the part of Jehovah as he sees men wasting their substance and ruining themselves on that which cannot profit.

There are difficulties in accepting this dictum, "God is love." H. G. Wells would say "Bah!" and call the priesthood "consecrated riff-raff," and refuse to accept them as equals. It is the most difficult of the dogmas of the church. Ask the average church-goer if he believes that the "word was made flesh," and he will probably tell you he does, although he does not know what it means. But ask him if he accepts the dictum that "God is love," and the chances are he will shake his head and say he wished he could be sure. And—his answer is understandable. There is so much senseless injustice and purposeless pain in the world that belief in a benevolent purpose in God and creation must rest pretty well upon personal experience.

Man Has His Agency

One great question glares at us. If God is love, and responsible for the existence and destiny of all that is, how can we account for all the misery that besets suffering humanity? How can we believe in a father who is almighty? For numberless souls this question remains unanswerable. It is too stupendous. For thinking people, who must have a rational religion, one of two alternatives only is possible. The first ridicules the whole Bible point of view. The other accepts the prophetic doctrine of agency in man to account for the sin and evil existing in creation.

We are not here concerned with the ridicule. We will let that pass by. But we must briefly dwell upon the Bible doctrine of agency. According thereto, all the misery in the world comes from lawlessness. Men are rebellious. They sin. Some of them choose to do so knowing they sin. Others sin ignorantly. Sinning, men bring upon themselves unhappiness and misery and evil consequence upon lawful operations.

"How, then," is asked, "does God create evil?"

The answer is relatively simple. The evil which befalls a wicked man is sent in the course of nature by the operation of law. The bacteria which preys upon a corrupt body with intent to destroy that body, is, therefore, a lawful agent in the preservation of creation. It seems to be, many times, a rather gruesome process. But the alternative is chaos. The evil which descends upon wicked men and nations, is actually a creation of God.

The law may ignorantly be broken. It may be transgressed willfully. Remedial measures are much easier to apply when ignorance lies at the root of sin than when one sins willfully, since, in the latter instance, the weight of a rebellious will is added to the sin. Thus the ignorant transgressor, although his way be hard, is "beaten with few stripes." But he who with malice aforethought goes against the law of his being is beaten with many stripes. He may, indeed, be beyond redemption and will certainly be so if he persists in his rebellion. The Bible doctrine claims that Deity is attempting something stupendous, something couched in the "glory of the Lord" to be revealed. The central figure in the attempt is man, a created being, called to holiness and rationality. To be rational, this creature, man, had to be capable of both good and evil. Choosing to sin and be evil, he has disordered the whole world. Even the earth itself, inanimate nature, has "become defiled under the inhabitants thereof," and the whole scheme in creation appears frustrated and is certainly threatened. But in spite of the misery and woe entailed in sin, God stands in the shadows—as it were in the background—and from his holy habitation is working and reworking his creation, the while allowing operative man's agency.

This question is asked frequently, "If God knows today what I am to do tomorrow, how is my agency anything else but a sham?" This question vexes many people. Now there is plenty of evidence in the Bible to support the position that the divine foreknowledge is limitless. But it is not possible to "prove" from scripture that the deity can predict how each man will act in each situation confronting him. In fact, the reverse is true, if we refer for a moment to modern revelation. The statement is made relative to the anticipated conduct of Martin Harris, "Wherefore, I forsee, that IF my servant Martin Harris . . ." And again, in the case of James Covill, there is nothing to support the contention that God knew he would turn away from his calling. Quite the reverse.

God may be able to predict how each individual man may act in every circumstance. But, again, he may not be able to. And it does not really matter whether he is able to, or whether he is not able to. It is conceivable that an expert chess player may know every move or combinations of moves in the game. Upon his prior knowledge, which we may consider perfect in this sphere, he predicts that any or all opponents will certainly lose to him. If their knowledge is incomplete he may with safety make such a prediction. But how each individual opponent will play, he may not know, nor does he need to know. The course of each game may be shrouded in mystery while the end is sure. Thus perfect knowledge is always foreknowledge. May we not then, reverently, suppose that any or all who oppose the Creator are foredoomed? No matter how a wicked man plays the game of life, he cannot win. Hitlerism and all who played that way were foreordained to destruction.

Agency in man is surely limited. It is not absolute in the sense that he can choose his way of life and the rewards he wants also. But limited as agency most certainly is, is it not very, very real—and, withal, precious? We may affirm to be strictly accurate that there is no such thing as "free agency." There is "agency" and there is "free will." But man is free only to choose the way he wants to go. He has nothing to say about the condition in which the path he chooses ends. These ends are fixed at the end of the way he chooses. If he desires certain ends, then he is free to choose only that road in which those ends he desires are come by. Consequences are fixed in courses of conduct.

The Final Triumph of God's Kingdom

And, growing out of the inter-action of divine supremacy with the agency of man, the prophets affirm the final triumph of divine purpose. There is to be a day of judgment. Wickedness, although seeming to be temporarily successful, is doomed. Upon the certainty of God's moral supremacy, dooms are pronounced upon men and nations, who are proceeding counter to righteousness. Upon the whole, have not the predictions of these prophets received remarkable fulfillment? Where is Babylon? What has become of Greece and Rome? In what respect and degree can physical violence and external force ever claim immortality?

There is, then, A DAY. That day is appointed. That day begins a new world. It will come surely and, viewed from the eternities, swiftly.

But the most significant thing about the "Day of the Lord and the World to Come" is the spirit which it breathes in comfort and sustaining consolation to those who labor in this "vale of soul-making." David sensed something of the keen injustices apparent in life. Even then, "man's inhumanity to man made countless thousands mourn." David felt his feet slipping when he considered how the wicked seemed to flourish while the righteous "went to the wall." But he overcame his temptation with the thought, "There is nothing I desire, O Lord, in comparison of thee." Let the wicked have his short season of blatant indulgence. The wicked were still poor and the rich on a dunghill. God himself is the guarantor and the consolation of those who believe in the final triumph of righteousness. For the prophets, this breath-taking conviction is the legitimate ground of the rightful claim by Jehovah for man's fidelity to him. "O taste and see how gracious the Lord is. Blessed is the man that trusteth in him."

In the earlier reaches of Hebrew history, men expected redress here for the wrongs done them. As the course of time revealed the fact that in many instances wrong done here is never here redressed, they felt that God had another sphere in which he came into his own. This required the doctrine of life after death and a future existence and grew out of the consciousness of God's moral nature. It did not come, we again and again remind the reader, out of a process of logical thought. It came as a gradual dawning into consciousness as men reflected upon the "wild and irregular" scene of this world in relation to what they felt about the nature and purpose of the Creator.

Revelation and Modern Knowledge

We have made a very scant but withal a very true analysis of the Bible doctrine. The point of view evolved gradually under the process of divine education and went on under the inspired utterances of the prophets. It was not the outcome of the unassisted reason of a coterie of men gifted—as the Greeks were gifted in their heyday—with a propensity for philosophy. This point of view stemmed from the impact of the divine mind upon the race, the result of a "Word of God" delivered to men. It was given not to satisfy curiosity but to guide men's lives. They were told: "Thus thou shalt do," "Thus thou shalt not do," "Do this and survive, or, do the other and sink into oblivion."

While all this is true, and while we hold firmly to the conviction that the prophetic religion was not thought up on earth, it certainly contains proposition after proposition about the nature of God and of his relation to the world, which can be translated into propositions for the intellect. Thus it furnished fresh material for philosophy and found itself capable of absorbing all that men had legitimately thought about the cosmos and man's place in it. It furnishes fresh material of the social sciences also—material not otherwise nor anywhere else found. It is wanton to say that revelation is not, in the long run, able to commend itself to and to guide human reason. It is surely just as wanton to hold that the reason of mankind unassisted by direct revelation can, in and of itself, achieve a point of view concurrent with the fitness of things.

Because the religion of the prophets was revealed, and because revelation is not beyond being commended to reason, it is desirable, so far as our limited space will permit, to bring these intellectual propositions which stem from the prophetic faith, and place them alongside some of the truths learned in other spheres of life. A lot has been said about the conflict between science and religion. We do not hear much about that any more. A good job, too, for there is no real conflict. Science will never deny truth. And the truths of religion are just as valid as the truths of science. Of course, in our thinking, we may have to suspend judgment at times. But this is not because there is no congruity in the truth. It is simply that we do not know the truth sufficiently well to make reconciliation in our problems. The universe agrees with itself in every part, and the reason in man is an offspring of the divine reason and continually sustained thereby. God simply awaits the disposition to emerge in man which will enable Him to reason with his creatures. "Come, let us reason together."

Revelation is significant, moreover, not because it can be found true by the light which is thrown upon it by the reason of intelligent men, but rather by virtue of the light which it gives in and of itself to guide and enlighten the reason. By what it is able to give, and not by which it is able to absorb, does the Word of God lay pressing claim upon our reason and upon our conscience.

It is only in his light that we shall see light.

Science and Creation

Is there any conflict between science and the religion of the Bible? Can evolution be squared with the Biblical account of creation? Is there anything in the realm of science that can conclusively deny the inward conviction of freedom? These are momentous questions indeed.

But increasingly from the scientific side there is a growing reluctance to pronounce upon the matter of origins. Materialism is, for many learned men, definitely in the discard. But there still remains in the minds of many people the conflict created by the great antiquity assigned in the scientific view to the material universe, over against the apparent instantaneous action of a personal God.

But what does the sacred writer say in Genesis? "In the beginning . . . God . . ." Can any man, scientific or otherwise, get beyond the beginning—whenever that was?

Archbishop Ussher said that it was "A. D. 4004"—at—or—about five o'clock in the evening. But nobody believes that now. The good bishop was very unscientific and missed it by a good few moons. The book itself sets no time before the "beginning." What else could he say? Suppose we know or could know that the earth was created seven billions of light years ago at ten past four in the morning. What could that mean? It would mean precisely nothing other than it all happened a long time ago—"once upon a time" as they say in the fairy stories. Can a more sensible beginning be conceived than "in the beginning"?

When the race was younger than it now is and the mind of man in a rather more immature state, allegory and even illusion were doubtless used to center the attention on the central figure in the universe—God himself. This creation business—that was his work. He did it. Further, it is not significant that this conviction of the creative activity of God lies at the heart of the message even yet to be uttered by the Restoration Angel when he makes his final appearance? He is yet to invite men to "Worship him who made . . ." The Bible was not given to teach us science. It is the story of God's purpose for men. Herschel, the astronomer, scanned the sky through his telescope and said he found no trace of God. Doubtless he was astronomically correct, so far as he was concerned. For without the revelation of God within man, there is no basis for recognition of Him around man. It was to place within the inward parts of our nature the knowledge of God as Creator that the Genesis story was told. As has been aptly stated elsewhere: "the scientific account of creation was written by God on the crust of the earth and men are slowly spelling it out; but the religious account of creation is written in the first chapter of Genesis in letters that all can read."

Thus, the Biblical account strikes down animism and polytheism with their debasing systems of immorality and centers the hearts of men in one person—God who made. And, again very significantly, here is the doctrine of divine ownership of temporalities which lies at the base of our own doctrine of stewardship.

Again, it is just as miraculous for the Almighty to beget, make, or generate (you choose the word) one single cell of life, and then superintend its growth and development into all the myriad forms in which the spirit of life is now cast, as it is suddenly and upon an instant to speak them all into glorious existence. If evolution be a true approximation of what actually happened, then it has been the object of a jealous superintendence by Divinity. Time is simply a condition of our perceiving minds, as is space also. To the Infinite and to the Eternal, the past is as the future—present before him.

(Continued on page 22.)
www.LatterDayTruth.org

Church-Wide Restoration Festival Week

April 11 - 18, 1948

PROGRAM SUGGESTIONS FOR ZION'S LEAGUE -- PART II

Prepared by the Department of Religious Education

Dramatic Presentation

JOSEPH, THE PROPHET

(Scene I from the arrangement by Edith Swain Brockway, from the radio script, "The American Prophet," by Alice M. Burgess.)

CAST OF CHARACTERS

Joseph Smith, the prophet.

Lucy Smith, the mother.

Reverend Simmons, a prominent minister.

SCENE: The Smith home in the spring of 1820, early morning.

Joseph, a boy of fifteen, comes in from outside with armload of wood just as Mother Smith comes in from left.

Mother: Well! My son Joseph is very ambitious this morning. Has your father come to the house yet? He planned to bring in those logs from the shed if he had time.

Joseph: I was just talking to him. He said he would be coming in soon. It seems rather chilly out, and I thought you might like a good cheery fire to start off the day.

Mother: Thank you, Joseph! (Notices Joseph's studied expression.) Is there something troubling you?

Joseph (coming over to left where she is): Mother, even though you sincerely believe all that the ministers said last night—can you understand my not wanting to join with them and worship as they do?

Mother: Why do you say such things? There is no doubt in my mind as to their sincerity—surely there couldn't be a great deal wrong with their wanting us to be saved and giving ourselves to Jesus. You don't doubt them, do you? Alvin and Hyrum were convinced, and I am satisfied.

Joseph: Yes, I know. But there seems to me an absence of the true spirit of Christ in their principles and creeds. Mother, something has happened which convinces me that I am not wrong in disagreeing with what the elders preach.

Mother: I would like to hear it, son.

Joseph: Would you like to sit here by the fire? It will be more comfortable. (Mother sits by fire.)

Mother: Draw up that stool there. (Joseph sits at left of her on stool.)

Joseph: Last night when I came home from the meeting, my mind was terribly upset. Much that I had learned when you read to me from the Bible seemed to be in conflict with what the ministers said. One declared his church was of God. Then another advocated the same supremacy of his church. Mother, I began to wonder, myself, if God really had a church or even meant that there should be one.

Mother: But you know in your heart that there is one.

Joseph: I couldn't come to any definite conclusion. Since I was greatly disturbed, I decided to read what God said about it, and as I looked through the pages, the first chapter of James drew my attention. All of a sudden, a strange sense of conviction and truth came to me as I read the words—"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

Mother: How could God instruct you, outside of what has already been written? Did you read what came after that passage to find the answer to your lack of wisdom?

Joseph (Rises and moves across center as he speaks): I didn't need to read any more, Mother. That is the reason why I was up early this morning: I decided the only way to find out anything was to ask God. I went to the grove where the great trees spread their leaves to catch the morning sun, and, truly, as I walked along, I never realized before how beautifully God had created growing things, the sky above, and the light of the sun to warm us. I could almost reach up and touch heaven—

(Knock is heard at center door.)

Mother: Who can that be, coming so early in the morning? (Rises.) Perhaps John Greenwood needs some help with his spring plowing. (She opens door to admit Reverend Simmons.)

Reverend Simmons: Well, good morning, Sister Smith. Sorry to disturb you, but I thought I'd drop in on my way to town. Good morning, my boy—

Mother: I'm so glad you did, Reverend Simmons. Joseph and I were discussing something you would be interested in, I am sure. Won't you sit here by the fire? Here, I'll take your coat and hat. (Takes coat and hat.)

Reverend Simmons: Yes, yes. Thank you, thank you very much. (Sits himself.) I am well pleased with the progress we are making, Sister Smith. It cheers my heart and warms my soul to see how the lost sheep of the world are answering to the call and accepting the cause of Christ. Indeed, it does. And nothing seemed finer than to see you and your children come to the altar, Sister Smith. I know your souls are saved from the fiery darts of the adversary and the peace of Christ will be with you. What was it you mentioned to me when I came in?

Mother: Joseph seemed to be concerned about . . .

Joseph: I'm glad you came when you did, Reverend Simmons. I was telling Mother an experience I had this morning. I knew you would understand, for you have always helped me when I couldn't see a problem clearly.

Reverend Simmons: Of course, of course. I am only too delighted to have your confidence. I do hope you have come to a decision at last. How we have wrestled with the evil one for your soul. You will never regret taking this step, joining the flock and being saved from the eternal fires of hell; then meeting your Saviour face to face.

Joseph: That isn't exactly what I wanted to tell you. My decision is made, but it is not the one that you expected.

Reverend Simmons: A decision, and not what I had expected? How could there be any other? Ah, how mightily do the forces of evil fight for the human soul!

Joseph: You already know I have been undecided about joining any church. I wanted to be sure. This morning I went to the grove below the field and knelt down in the sun by a great elm tree to ask God which church I was to join. I had a deep conviction that it was the only thing to do.

Reverend Simmons: Truly, truly God will guide men if they will only give heed to the word as preached by those who hear his call. Through the Comforter, he will guide you when you have acknowledged him before the world.

Joseph: I know now that God will speak to man—from out of heaven. He did this morning—to me, and that is what I wanted to tell you. I had never prayed aloud before in my life, but I was sincere and wanted very much to know what I was to do. As soon as I started to pray, a thick darkness gathered around me. I had never experienced this feeling before, and I was frightened. I couldn't even speak, and I knew if God didn't protect me from this evil force, I might even die. It required a great deal of effort to pray. But as I struggled to free myself from this awful darkness, I saw a pillar of light, much brighter than the sun at midday, exactly over my head; and it came down gradually until it was all around me. That terrible feeling was gone, and I seemed lifted up, free, and my heart was bursting with joy—

Mother: But what did it mean, Joseph? It is hard for me to believe—

Joseph: Wait, Mother, until I finish. Then you will understand. Within this brilliant light were two personages who stood above me in the air, their features and forms similar to each other. One called me by name and, pointing to the other, said, "This is my Beloved Son, hear him."

Reverend Simmons: And what wisdom did you receive from this—vision of yours?

Joseph: That is what I wanted to share with you, Reverend Simmons. In answer to my prayer I learned that all these religious denominations were teaching incorrect doctrines, that their creeds, being formed by man, were not acceptable to God, and that none of these churches were acknowledged in heaven as the true church and kingdom of Christ. And, sir, this seemed wonderful to me. I was promised that the fullness of the gospel as Jesus taught it would some day be given to me, and that it would soon be restored just as it was, here in this country.

Reverend Simmons: And do you actually believe, Joseph, that God spoke to you? Rather, if you saw or heard anything, it is from the Devil. He is only trying to prevent you from joining the church. Surely you know, my poor lad, that God does not speak to man today. There are no such things as revelations or visions and have not been since the days of the apostles—and furthermore shall never again be on this earth.

Joseph: But I did see a vision, a light more glorious than I had ever seen before; and God did speak to me—I heard his voice. I know it was not an evil force.

Mother: It is hard to believe, but don't you think, Reverend Simmons, that God could speak to my son?

Reverend Simmons: Now, now, the best thing to do is to forget the whole affair. You will not be believed, and you will only bring ridicule upon yourself. Why, if God could speak to man, do you think he would choose an unknown, unschooled farm lad as young as you? The whole thing is ridiculous, ridiculous and wicked—to set yourself up to tell your betters what is right or wrong.

Joseph: I'm sorry I disturbed you, sir. I'll not trouble you any more with what I have seen. But, before God, these things I told you are true! Though I be hated and ridiculed, I can never deny them. I have seen a heavenly vision—I have heard a voice speaking to me—"This is my Beloved Son, hear him." I must follow that voice, and if I am able, bear witness of the vision and of its truth.

(Curtain. Quartet sings "Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken," Saints' Hymnal, No. 205.)

See page 125 of Zion's League Annual for a complete pageant, "The Light of the World."

SPECIAL PRAYER SERVICES

Suggested themes:

1. "Faith of Our Fathers."
2. "Follow Me."
3. "Go Into All the World."
4. "The Old, Old Path."
5. "I Shall Be About the Master's Business."
6. "The Whole, Wide World for Jesus."
7. "Blest Be the Tie That Binds."

See page 92 of The Pastor's Handbook, 1948, for additional suggestions.

FESTIVAL BANQUET

Program suggestions:

Theme—"One World, One Word."

Music—See suggested numbers for Festival Concert, also page 122 of Zion's League Annual.

A Message to Youth of the Church—"Witnesses for the Restoration," by Brother Elbert A. Smith. (See this Herald for the message. Order the recording from the Herald Publishing House.)

Talks—"For Latter Day Saints, 'One World' Means . . ." "To Latter Day Saints, 'One Word' Means . . ."

Review of local activities and contributions made during the year to the Zion's League Mission Abroad Fund.

"This we shall do before October 1, 1948, towards the support of the Zion's League Missions Abroad Fund."

Prayer Thoughts—Our heritage in the Restoration.

These are my brothers of the world.
These things we share.

SACRIFICE SERVICE FOR MISSIONS ABROAD FUND

Suggested themes:

1. "We, Too, Will Go."
2. "Sowing the World for the Harvest of Peace."
3. "The Whole, Wide World for Jesus."
4. "We've a Story to Tell."
5. "These Things We Share."
6. "With My Substance I Will Honor."
7. "In Christ There Is no East nor West."

WORSHIP SERVICES

Suggested themes:

1. "Hear Ye Him!"
2. "Blessed Are They Who Shall Seek to Bring Forth My Zion."
3. "Be Humble and Full of Love."
4. "We Press Forward With Steadfastness in Christ."
5. "I Am the Light of the World."
6. "Let This Mind Be in You."
7. "Our Father Which Art in Heaven."
8. "Ask the Father in My Name, in Faith Believing."
9. "If Any Man Lack Wisdom."

OTHER IDEAS FOR FESTIVAL WEEK

Zion's League Annual Number One contains seventy suggestions for Festival Week. (See page 122.) Our youth leaders and officers will find a wealth of stimulating and practical ideas for use in planning the activities of the week. We have selected as illustrative only a few of these, while urging League officers to consult the Annual before perfecting their plans.

Music:

1. An evening with Latter Day Saint hymns in story, tableaux, and drama.
2. "Hymns of the Nations," a service of congregational, choral, instrumental, and solo interpretations of the hymns of the world; for examples, "A Mighty Fortress," from Germany, and "Our God, Our Help," from England.
3. "The Message of the Church in Song," hymns with interpretative continuity reading. For example: "Book of Mormon, Hid for Ages," "I Saw a Mighty Angel Fly."

Drama:

1. Tableaux depicting scenes of the rise of the Restoration, closing with scene of world call for today.
2. Radio program, "Personalities of Power," script of character sketches of men and women who made the church, with dramatic scenes from their lives.
3. "The Word of Ancient America to Us." Setting, a large Book of Mormon, seven or eight feet high, out of which step characters of the book to depict what is in it.

Panels and Discussions:

1. Question Box concerning the rise of the church with questions answered by a board of experts.

2. Panel, "If God Were to Speak to Joseph Smith Today."

3. Interview by youth of outstanding church men and women on topics of their insight and experience. Timely topics: "Confirming Experiences Along the Way," "How I Came to Be a Latter Day Saint," "Those Early Years of the Reorganization."

Worship:

1. Sunrise Service in a wooded setting with the theme, "Today's Youth in the Grove." (Modern re-enactment of Palmyra.)

2. Candlelight vespers, "The Light of the Gospel Into All the World."

3. Procession of Lights. From a central altar candle, lights are carried to all parts of the room, until there is a circle of "lights around the world."

4. Galilean service, with a rustic altar. Theme, "God of the Open Air."

Dinners:

1. An Around-the-World Dinner with courses in countries where the gospel has been preached.

2. Potluck Supper in which each dish of food brought represents a country, for examples, "fish and chips" for Britain, pineapple salad for Hawaii.

3. Dinner with tables representing places of church history, such as Kirtland Temple, Graceland College, Nauvoo.

Socials:

1. A "Palmyra Party" with costumes of 1820-1840.

2. An "International Party," using games from several countries of the world.

3. A world-fellowship tea with table decorated with figurines representing countries where the church is located, around one of the church on which a lighted torch to the nations is mounted.

4. A reception honoring pioneers of the branch, pointing toward continued frontier work for modern church youth.

Outings and Sports:

1. Pilgrimage to available places of significance in church history.

2. Hike with picnic supper and campfire, re-enacting the visit of Oliver Cowdery to the American Indians.

Contests:

1. Extemporaneous speaking contest, with entrants drawing from a list of six

www.LatterDayTruth.org

titles, posted sometime in advance. Prizes:
Books of the church.

2. Essay Contest. Winning essays read at a program of festival week. Prizes:
Pictures of church scenes.

World Fellowship:

1. A service of letter-sending and letter-receiving from Leagues about the church.

2. Dispatch of gifts to youth in war-devastated areas, including books autographed by League members.

3. Adoption of a European family by the local League with a program describing the family, exhibiting pictures, and reading letters.

Branch Service:

1. "Restoration Day," a clean-up project for the local church premises.

2. Presentation of a picture, motto plaque, church flag, or other gift as the central feature of the program.

3. "Tract Night" in which Leaguers distribute tracts such as "Faith of Our Fathers" in the neighborhood of the church, meeting for devotionals before going and returning for fellowship.

General Services:

1. Memorial Service, with placement of wreaths at an altar memorializing the founders of the Restoration.

2. "Panel of Preachers," involving the younger members of the priesthood of the branch. Typical topics: "It Began With Youth," "The Restoration Speaks Today."

3. Testimonial Meeting, "If I Have the Spirit of 1820."

Miscellaneous:

1. Hobby exhibit with "The Gospel, My Chief Hobby," as central feature.

2. Parents' Night. Theme song: "Faith of Our Fathers."

Who Knows?

Who knows what a butterfly may be,
Or a nameless yearning?

Who knows what a lovely dawn may hold

In yon pale sky burning?

Who knows what delightful tales are told

By the whispering birches,
Or what heights may be attained
By a heart which searches.

—Louise

People Are Pictures

By JOSEPH RICHARD MELOAN

THE EDITOR of the local newspaper stopped at my photo shop recently to leave some films to be developed. He had just purchased the finest camera available to take pictures for his publication. However, these particular photographs were closer to his heart, for he had taken the camera home to photograph his family. I developed the film, but no images appeared; it was entirely blank. Investigation showed that he had forgotten to remove the dust-protecting cap from his lens.

Photographs are like the judgment day. Everything the photographer does wrong or right will show in the finished print. It is there as a permanent testimony of what happened. It is not even a mute testimony, for to the expert it fairly shouts. He can tell in an instant that you were out of focus, moved the camera, fogged the film, or over or underexposed the picture. He knows in making the enlargement whether you chose the right contrast of paper, what your judgment was of the negative and the print as it developed. Anyone can look at the finished picture and see tiny white spots on it from the dust or particles on the negative—the little things that prevent its perfection. Every mistake is there . . . visible to the beholder. And if it comes up for judgment in the salon, it will decide whether you made a good composition or not. The subject matter chosen will tell something about the artist. Even the expression he chose to capture will tell what he wanted. And the judges will decide if he has chosen the right viewpoint.

WE WILL ALL want to go to the movies some day . . . about judgment time . . . to see our friends on the screen. What kind of lives did they really live? . . . It should all be there. But I have a hunch the billing of this many-feature show will not indicate who is going to be chosen for exposure on any particular night, and thinking it might be us, we will probably not attend.

Some people are like the editor's fine camera. They are an excellent instrument. They have all the talents and abilities to do wonderful things. But the instrument must be capable of being used. Perhaps they haven't taken "the cap off the lens" . . . they are not yet attuned with God so he can use them. Others have failed to choose the right viewpoint . . . to look at things with an eye single to his glory. Or they are trying to serve him, but their efforts do not yet add up to a "good composition." They are making pictures, and their record is not blank, but neither is it beautiful. And for those who have done well, there are often little things like the dust spots that, once eliminated, suddenly enable them to reach heights of grandeur.

And like the photographer who chooses to click the shutter at some exact moment, or the artist who renders his interpretation of the subject material, so we constantly choose and by our choices reveal what we are. And those who stumble along in the most fundamental things can, by their experiences, learn and grow as they see their mistakes. Yes, each effect has had a cause. All that we do becomes a result. And, like a perfect product, we must be careful each step of the way to arrive at perfection. We are not different from the pictures. We can even attain technical excellence and fail to achieve greatness. But to those who catch the divine spark of inspiration and make their lives glow with His presence will come the opportunity to be on display in the halls of many mansions like a great masterpiece of art which inspires and brings joy to others.

What Latter Day Saints Believe

LAST WEEK WE asserted our belief in modern and continuing revelation. We stated that we believed that such revelation had been promised by Christ; that it is needed today; and that it will continue as men grow in capacity, appreciation, and understanding, and in their worthiness to receive. We asserted our belief in the necessity for revelation to give each believer a witness or testimony that Jesus is the Christ. Now we go one step further and assert our belief in the need for modern revelation in order that we may have a continuation of modern scripture.

Most churches believe in modern revelation. All good Christians believe that God will direct them, if they pray for that direction, and many people of many churches can bear testimony that such direction has come to them in real life situations. Many people of many churches can bear witness that they have received a living and sure testimony that Jesus is the Christ. Many people of many churches can bear testimony that they have been inspired, encouraged, strengthened, instructed by a power higher than their own when they have been in dire need. Why, then, do Latter Day Saints claim to be unique in their belief in modern revelation?

Perhaps one reason is that other churches have very frequently shied away from the use of the term "revelation." They admit the possibility of God's direction; they pray for their pastors that God may lead and direct them; they pray for personal guidance; they pray for their friends and loved ones. In many churches, the pastoral prayer on Sunday morning regularly remembers the needs of the President of the United States, and all with him in authority, asking that God will lead and direct and inspire them to conduct the affairs of nations according to his will. But a good many people are timorous about labeling the process by which this guidance comes as revelation.

LATTER DAY SAINTS believe in all the kinds of revelation which have been enumerated. But we also go one step further. We include within the church structure or organization the means of receiving revelation. We believe in implementing inspiration through chosen officers of the priesthood. We believe in providing institutions, means, and regulations for the expression of revelation to the church. In this, so far as I know, we are unique and different. Other churches believe that revelation and inspiration are diffused throughout the membership and available to anyone in time of need. So do we. But other churches do not provide officers and functions which are authorized to speak in the name of God to the church at large. They have no officer whose official duty it is to inquire of the Lord and bring back his instruction to the church. Although they believe that God may inspire the words of a minister as he preaches his Sunday sermon, most churches would never for a moment consider that the words uttered in the pulpit by inspiration were worthy of being called scripture. Latter Day Saints are unique in that they do have the officers and the facilities in their church for receiving, accepting, and publishing to the church the word of God to the church, which then carries all the weight of modern scripture to our people. To put this same thought into other and more specific words, Latter Day Saints have a prophet through whom revelation may come, which is included in our open canon of modern scripture.

What is a prophet? The word prophet comes from two Greek words meaning "to speak for." A prophet is one who speaks for another—usually for God. In this sense, Aaron was a prophet to Moses, who was slow of speech; for Aaron spoke in Moses' name. (See Exodus 7: 1.) Usually, however, we think of a prophet as one inspired by God to speak in his name. Today's churches are willing to admit that men may be inspired by God, but not to admit that under that inspiration they are authorized to speak in God's name as prophets.

AFTER A MARVELOUS discourse on differentiation of function in the church, in which he compares the church to the body with its multitudinous functions, Paul says in I Corinthians 12: 28, "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets . . ." In the fourth chapter of Ephesians, Paul again mentions the body of Christ and adds, "And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers: For the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ; That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine . . ." Prophets were set in the church and were to remain there to regulate the church, to expound and interpret doctrine, and to bring about unity of the faith until all in the church arrived at perfection and the fullness of the measure of the stature of Christ.

One of the older editions of Cruden's Concordance has two very interesting sentences in the explanatory article under the heading

About Modern Scripture

BY EVAN A. FRY

"prophets," from which we quote: "The most usual way by which God communicated himself to the prophets was by inspiration, which consisted in illuminating the mind of the prophet and exciting his will to proclaim what the Lord dictated to him from within. It is in this sense that all the authors of the canonical books of scripture, both of the Old and New Testaments, are acknowledged as prophets."

Are there then no men today who are receiving inspiration or illumination of mind so that their will is excited to proclaim or to write what the Lord dictates to them from within? And if there are such men today, why are not their writings or their utterances worthy of being preserved and counted as modern scriptures for the guidance of the modern church? Is not any man who speaks or writes truly under the inspiration of God and in the name of God, speaking or writing scripture?

WE CAN POINT out a great many needs for such revelation, which is to be counted as modern scripture. Instruction from Deity with regard to church policy and major line of procedure; interpretations of doctrine; words of exhortation and instruction; warning and foretelling of the future; bearing witness to a personal conviction that Jesus is the Christ; and perhaps most important of all, the interpretation of old truth in the light of present day needs—all these are functions of the modern prophets, whose words are then worthy of being recorded in the open canon of modern scripture. As a church, we believe that all calls to the ministry must come through this spirit of revelation, acting in the ministry which preside over the various geographical divisions of the church. Such administrative and presiding officials are also entitled to receive divine help and wisdom and discernment in making their administrative decision, or regulating any of the affairs of the church, though in the case of decisions of only momentary importance, of course, there would be no attempt to make such inspiration—either vocal or written—into modern scripture.

If you have been following our line of reasoning, you are now no doubt wondering how we select our modern scriptures. Suppose that our prophet has inquired of the Lord, and received an answer setting some church policy, choosing someone to fill a vacancy in one of the church quorums, or expounding a clearer interpretation than was had before on some moot point of doctrine. How does that become scripture? Generally speaking, by the same process by which the present canon of scripture contained in your Bible was selected. Remember that you do not have all of the sacred writings of ancient Christian times or of Old Testament times by any means. Several were rejected as unworthy of inclusion in the canon, but may be obtained elsewhere. At least nineteen books which are specifically mentioned in the text of the King James Bible are completely lost.

HOW WAS OUR PRESENT canon selected? Various church councils were called together. Each writing was examined and evaluated for truthfulness, for inspiration, for agreement with previously revealed truth. Our modern scriptures are scrutinized in the same way. They are presented first to the ministry of the church assembled in their various quorums; and if these quorums approve, they are sent on to the General Conference of the church, where the delegates of the membership have the right of passing upon them. Such documents are examined for light, wisdom, inspiration, truth, and agreement with already accepted truth. God cannot contradict himself; truth always agrees with itself wherever and whenever found. Not all documents submitted are accepted as worthy of being modern scripture, but if they pass the scrutiny and the prayerful consideration of the ministry and the people, they are ordered published as modern scripture. This modern scripture is contained in our Book of Doctrine and Covenants, which includes the revelations of Joseph Smith, the founder of the church; and of his son and successor, also named Joseph Smith; and of his two grandsons, Frederick Madison Smith, who died in 1946, and Israel A. Smith, the present president and prophet of the church.

Is this not unscriptural, to add to the word of God? Is it not presumptive? Do not the closing verses of the Book of Revelation pronounce a curse upon anyone who adds to the Bible? No, John did pronounce a curse on any man who should add to the words of "this book," but the book to which he referred was the book of "this prophecy" or the Book of Revelation. The Bible as we have it now was not compiled or ratified as a canon of scripture until 300 years after John wrote his Revelation, or in the year A. D. 397 at the third council of Carthage. So John could not have been referring to the Bible when he wrote of "this book." Furthermore, there is nowhere in the Bible any injunction against God adding to the words of his scripture. There is nowhere any statement which says that he is ever to cease adding to his word until Christ shall come.

God never closed the canon of scripture. Men closed it in A. D. 397. If God did not again reveal his word to his church, it was not because he did not want to or try to, but because the church which closed the canon of scriptures refused to hear any more of the word of God and taught that God would never speak again because he had said all there was to say between the covers of the sixty-six books of the Bible.

John's injunction against adding to the word of God is the last of five or six similar injunctions in the Bible, the first one of which is found in Deuteronomy 4: 2. If the men of Moses' day had interpreted that injunction as modern men interpret the injunction of John in the closing verses of Revelation, all our Bibles would end today with the fourth chapter of Deuteronomy.

And here is another interesting point. There is utter disagreement among Bible scholars about the respective dates when John's Gospel and the Book of Revelation were written. But at least some eminent scholars believe that John himself violated his own injunction (if such it were) against adding to the words of the Bible. From the historical article on the Gospel of St. John, found in the Self-pronouncing Sunday School Teachers' Combination Bible, I quote: "Written at Ephesus, after St. John's release from the Isle of Patmos, about A. D. 97, this gospel completed the canon of scripture." Now those words again—"This gospel [not the Book of Revelation] completed the canon of scripture." Revelation was written on Patmos; the gospel was written at Ephesus after his release from Patmos. This is corroborated by E. B. Sanford's Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge; we quote in part from his article on the Gospel of St. John: "This Gospel would appear to have been written at Ephesus . . . Its date must be long after the writing of the other gospels, and toward the end of the first century. It is one of the latest books of the New Testament—much later than the Revelation. . . ."

(Continued on page 18.)

An Inspired Message From An Inspired Leader

WHEN the General Zion's League Council, meeting in April, 1947, suggested that the youth of the church throughout the world unite annually in celebrating what was to be known as "The Restoration Festival," it specified that the first essential to the success of such a project would be a simple, brief, and well-written story of the origin and genius of the Restoration Movement. This story was to be made available for presentation to Zion's League gatherings everywhere as a central feature of the festival celebration not only in 1948 but annually thereafter. And who should be asked to write that story? Instantly and pervasively our thoughts centered in one man, the father of the church, Patriarch Elbert A. Smith.

Naturally we expected the best, but we did not anticipate two additional developments which have thrilled our very souls.

First: In the preparation of his message to the youth of the church, Brother Elbert was remarkably blessed. The account of his experience will be found both in the "Saint's Herald" and in a special recording which has been made.

Second: This message has now been made available in record form in Brother Elbert's own voice and words against the background of "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning" sung by the Stone Church choir under the direction of Paul Craig.

Again, we say, we expected much, but there is now available much more than we ever have hoped for. Here it is. An inspired classic for your League, recorded for your home, for your library. A classic to become, as the years pass, perhaps your most cherished possession.

From the first it has been the thought of the young people that this message should be used, perhaps as a reading, in a suitable setting as part of some service planned for festival week. Since this message will appear in the "Saint's Herald," it will be available for use in that way wherever desired.

We are especially enthusiastic however that we may now announce that this inspired message from an inspired leader is available in record form. This means that at your festival banquet or at some other especially planned service of worship, communion, or dedication, you will be permitted to hear the voice of the father of the church speaking directly to you.

Never before have we known the youth of the church to be so sincerely united. Never have we seen our young people more determined to make the church their church in very deed. Never have we known them to be more anxious that there shall be kindled in their own souls those convictions which characterize the restoration gospel. Never have we known them to be so desirous of carrying their full share of the work and responsibilities of the church. These desires and determinations, we verily believe, ascended to God as one most sincere and earnest prayer.

And this prayer has now been answered. Answered through the pen of one whose life's span reaches back to those who were instrumental under God in restoring the gospel in latter days and forward to those who would now, with their souls set on fire with the spirit and genius of that gospel, tell it and live it in a most critical age.

Order your record now. We cannot commend it too highly. It contains a most historic and prophetic word. Reproduce that word again and again until it lives within you so warmly, so vitally that your soul can no longer contain it. Until, as the young people of a century ago, you are compelled to go out to tell it to the nations of the world.—F. M. McDowell

The Bright Side of Religion

YOUR RELIGION is only as good as the application you are making of it. By that I mean you can brand all Latter Day Saints as a pathetic lot, or you can make the Restored Gospel sound even better than the Townsend Plan it's all up to you. If it'll help, I'll give you some case histories.

Consider the example set by Brother Z. He prided himself on being a student of scripture, and he could quote accurately from all Three Books. He attended every meeting on Sunday, and through the week he distributed tithing receipts for the bishop. He was a well-meaning man, and he tried hard to be a follower of the true way. He didn't smoke, drink (not even coffee substitutes) or swear. He had an idea of what Zion would be like, if and when the Saints ever got around to building it. "The pure in heart," he said, "that's what Zion will be, the pure in heart." And Brother Z. did his best to keep pure.

He lived for thirty-seven years in a neighborhood of good people, but he never really got to know them. He couldn't see that taking his family on a picnic with the folks across the street had anything to do with building the Holy City. When the neighbors came to call, he'd tell them about the terrible state the world was in and how God's wrath would be poured out upon the unrighteous. Small wonder they always found some excuse to leave early. In all of his seventy-five years, Brother Z. failed to convert one person to the church. His children were baptized promptly when they were eight, but they weren't really converted. In fact, after they grew up, they didn't even bother to go to church. Sister Z., a patient and long-suffering woman, was a true wife throughout fifty-one years of wedded life. She had long ago accepted the preachments of her husband as something near holy, and she loved, honored, and obeyed his every word. She was pure in heart, too, but she never learned to call her soul her own.

NOW CONSIDER THE case of Brother R. He is a deacon, one of the friendliest deacons his branch has ever had. He figures his job includes more than just showing late-comers to a seat and passing the collection plate. He stands by the door and shakes hands with people after the service. He makes it a special point to speak to newcomers and invite them back again. At home, he plays baseball with his son and his neighbors' sons, and he takes the boys fishing. When he asked them if they'd like to go on a League picnic, they said, "Sure." And when he asked them if they'd like to come to Sunday school with him, they said, "Sure," again.

Brother R. isn't a carpenter by trade, but when a young fellow who works with him decided to build a house for his bride, Brother R. volunteered to help. He asked some of the other Saints to stop and visit the project one evening, and before they left, they caught the spirit and were helping, too. It was while they were putting in the kitchen cabinets that the young man and Brother R. first talked about religion. "You know," he said, "I've never gone to church much. Oh, I believe there's a God, all right but I can't see that just sitting through a sermon every Sunday morning is going to get anybody any nearer heaven."

"It won't," Brother R. assured him, "unless a man's religion offers him a way of life that is superior to anything else in the world, and unless it gives him something big to work for, he might as well go to a movie as to church." Then he explained the Zion plan. Next Sunday, the two men went to church together—and they still do.

By NAOMI RUSSELL

Sister R. has a couple of conversions to her credit, too. When the people two doors down moved in, she got acquainted by offering some of her prize tulip bulbs for their walk. Later, they had Sunday dinner together and then went to a concert at the church. Now the folks two doors down have asked to be baptized—which makes a total of seven converts for Brother and Sister R.

WHAT KIND OF treatment are you giving your religion? Are you a "jot and tittler," or are you going all out to make the Restored Gospel look like the most practical way to promote brotherly love the world has ever known? Religion in a book isn't very effective—you have to lift it out and put it to work. You have to show people that it's done something for you. —And you won't get far by just observing the "Thou Shalt Not's"; the church needs men and women of action. If you are busy doing good, there won't be any time for sinning.

The pity is that there are so many Brother Z's, who have never caught the vision of our purpose. It takes a lot of people like the R's to outweigh the damage they do the church by their unfortunate example. If they could learn, first of all, to be happy—to see the beauty of Zion instead of the smoldering fires of hell, the rest would be easy. Religion can be pleasant. It isn't so much a matter of "warning your neighbor" as helping him. If you scare him, he won't come back. If you show him the hope of a better world through the gospel, he may decide to try it for himself.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

WHEN PRICES OF FOODS go up so high that a family making $2,000 a year (and there were more than one third of the people in the United States making that or less in 1946) is spending forty-five per cent of its income to feed a family of four or seventy-five per cent to feed a family of seven, we become more cost-conscious than ever. That was true last July. By now, much more is being spent. Food costs from five to ten per cent more. With food conservation always before us, we think of real values more frequently, too.

The women of two Iowa counties recently asked for a lesson on choosing the family food, with emphasis on the real value of foods in relation to their cost. We found a number of interesting things about prepared mixes and other foods, including the fact that in some cases you can buy a mix for less than you can make the food; the only catch is when you start eating it. Sometimes you don't enjoy it as much, because it isn't made of the same ingredients—or at least not of the same quality ingredients—that you might use. And sometimes the recipes on the box call for so many extra ingredients that your costs goes way up before you serve it.

You can always tell, though, just what is in a prepared food mixture. The Food and Drug Act requires that the ingredients be printed on the package or can, and that they be listed in the order of their comparative weights. When you find a chicken soup mixture that has the chicken listed after the salt, you know there can't be much chicken in it—although, of course, it is dried chicken; and a little dried chicken goes a long way. An ordinary chicken is sixty-six per cent water. In other words, a teaspoonful of dried chicken in a soup mix really was once about a tablespoonful of chicken. We found baked beans and pork with the pork listed after the seasoning, too. When you buy prepared foods, it pays to read the labels.

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER MENU—

Baked Beans
Buttered Broccoli or Greens
Parsley Potatoes
Head Lettuce Salad
French Dressing
Boston Brown Bread
Butter
Pecan Pumpkin, Squash, or Sweet
Potato Pie
Milk

Even though once in a while you find a prepared food mix that costs less than your own, that isn't generally true. We took the lunch or supper menu that is given and did some figuring. In our figuring we used a devil's food cake with fudge frosting instead of the pie and cut up some wieners into our baked beans. You can find baked beans and wieners in a can, or you can bake your own. Broccoli you could raise and freeze, get it fresh from the stores now, or buy it frozen. You can even buy potatoes in the jar, and French dressing may be made as good as that you buy. Boston brown bread comes from a can or right out of your oven. And the cake and frosting may each be found on the grocery shelves in the form of a mix.

When you count it all up, you'll find that you can save money, though, by spending a little extra time in your kitchen. In fact, for this meal you can save from one third to one half of the cost of the meal by baking your own beans with wieners, cleaning fresh broccoli, peeling potatoes from the store (you'll save more if you raised them), shaking your own French dressing, mixing your own brown bread, cake, and frosting.

By B. MILDRED NELSON,
Instructor in Nutrition Extension Department, Ames, Iowa.

Your saving in cash—not counting time, according to our figures, will run about fifteen cents per person. If you have a family of five, that's seventy-five cents; for eight, it's $1.25 for one meal. And we found our home cooking, especially baked beans, brown bread, and fudge frosting so very much better, that we decided it was worth it to spend the extra time in the kitchen and use the $1.25 for other things. We saved fuel too, by cooking our beans in a pressure saucepan until they were just tender, then finishing their baking right along with the cake while the oven was hot.

You know your circumstances, how valuable your time is, your own cooking ability, and your family tastes, and will want to make your own decision. But if you're having food budget troubles, sit down and do some figuring before you decide which time-saving, ready-prepared foods and mixes to use.

WHEN YOU DECIDE what canned foods to purchase from the grocer's shelves, you have a real problem. Almost all of them are in tin and you can't see them. Descriptive labels help some. They can, if they will, tell you what's in the can, the size of the food, the style of the pack, what the food may be used for, how much is there, something of the quality, and such.

A few things are required by law.

Many more are desirable. The law requires that all the food be wholesome, meet a minimum standard of quality, and fill the can. If it does not, it must be labeled below standard in fill or in quality, whichever the case may be, and state why. It can still be good food and may just suit your purposes. If you want to make an apricot purée for an ice, then apricots that come at a decidedly reduced price, because blemished or undersized fruit has been used, may suit your purposes just as well and save a lot of money. It might be wise to try one can to see whether it suits you before you buy several.

Canned peas are a food in which you find wide variations in prices. We opened cans of peas priced from twelve cents to thirty-eight cents for a number two can the other day. There were five "tasters," and all voted for the twelve cent peas for good flavor, appearance, and serving quality. The others were all smaller peas, the more expensive being immature and quite flavorless. There was no appreciable difference in color, and, strangely the more expensive peas had the tougher skins. All were overcooked. When we drained and weighed them, we found that frozen peas with their delightful color and pleasing flavor would give us as many peas for the same price as the expensive canned ones gave.

With respect to food value, the smaller, more immature, succulent vegetables generally contain more vitamin C. However, as the vegetable matures, the amount of minerals and vitamins A, B1 and others increase. After the food is canned, the amounts of vitamin C and B1 (along with a few others) do decrease in storage. Even frozen foods lose vitamins, especially when stored above zero degrees.

So when you decide to buy canned vegetables, it might be wise to select several brands from a wide price range. Keep a record on your kitchen bulletin board of the quality inside each can. Then you can return to buy the one that suits you best at the price you can best afford to pay. You may choose one for soups, another for salads, and still a third for serving as a vegetable (just as you choose several grades of apples); but don't blindly "eeny, meeny" out a can of peas from the more expensive, thinking you are saving money in the long run by getting quality peas. It doesn't work that way.

WE'VE BEEN NOTICING the apples that are on the market these days often carry a huge sign, "U. S. No. 1." Then, when we get all set to buy them, we find they aren't really very extra 'specially nice. Did you know that "U. S. No. 1" is the third grade from the top for apples? It stands for the average run of the apple crop. "Fancy" and "Choice" are above it, and what's more, "U. S. No. 2" is the very bottom. "U. S. commercial" comes between "U. S. No. 1" and "U. S. No. 2." Slightly confusing, but it's good to know!

Now, "U. S. No. 1" should be a good apple for cooking purposes, even for baking. In fact, if it's sauce you're making, "U. S. No. 2" might be the best buy. Just remember there are cores to come out; and apples with really spoiled portions to be thrown away may not be much of a bargain. But it would be foolish to pay a premium price for "U. S. Fancy" or maybe even choice apples just to cut them up and run them through a sieve or mill for sauce. For eating raw or for some salads, choice or fancy might be just the thing you want. Every grade has its place in your food plan. Know for what you want to use your apples before you buy; then buy accordingly.

You'll be better satisfied, too, if you look fresh foods over before you buy them. An apple that was "U. S. No. 1" when it came from the orchard, may be far from it now. That's one reason more fresh foods aren't graded. It would take a huge staff to keep up with the grade from the time it was shipped until you buy it. When you choose fresh foods, choose wisely. It's pretty much up to you.

THE DRYING OF fruits does have an effect upon their nutritive value; much of the vitamin C and some of the thiamin are destroyed. The rest of the nutrients are pretty well preserved. Since our fruit is not generally rich in thiamin (B1) anyway, we don't worry about the amount of it that is destroyed. Now, when grapefruit, orange, and lemons are relatively inexpensive, broccoli is available, cauliflower and cabbage are on the market in quantities, and tomatoes are in our storage cellars, we have many places from which to make up for any lack of vitamin C that might be in our dried fruit. With a vitamin C rich food each day, we can use lots of dried fruits for the other food values, vitamins and minerals, and to take the place of desserts that are costly in grains.

If you're interested in comparing costs, a pound of fresh apples, for example, will make one and one-half cups of sauce. A pound of dried apples produces eight to ten cups of sauce. A pound of fresh apricots gives two and one half cups of cooked fruit. The same weight of dried apricots yields three and one half cups. Canned fruit is a little harder to compare. A number two can contains about two and one half cups of both liquid and solids and has a net weight of eighteen to twenty-four ounces. A number two and one half can contains about three and one half cups and has a net weight of twenty-six to thirty-five ounces. How much of that is syrup depends upon the pack, but usually at least one third of it is. In other words, there may be about twelve ounces to one pound of fruit comparable to fresh fruit in a number two can and one pound to twenty-three ounces of it in a number two and one half can. There may be much less. Check on it, sometime.

The Minister Comes to Dinner

By WARREN H. CHELLINE

IT IS AN IMPORTANT occasion for most members of the household when the minister comes to dinner. The snowiest linen, the best china and silverware (including the butter knife) are used. Junior is scrubbed pink and given detailed instructions concerning behavior, Mother arranges cut flowers in the living room and asks Dad please not to doff his suit coat. These dinner invitations are important occasions for the minister, too. Aside from the good cooking and warm hospitality, his visits in the homes of the Saints have profound spiritual worth, for, without them, his pastoral and missionary ministry cannot be complete.

Hosts, to commence the advice, please consider your guest's background. If he is a traveling missionary who is in your town for a two-weeks' series, chances are his schedule is full in "eating out" as well as in preaching. Likewise, much of the food he has been getting has been heavy and quite rich. Don't feel too bad if he refuses extra helpings. He certainly would go right on eating if he could, but he has to have a lot of breath for his preaching later on.

It is true that, due to much practice, most missionaries have huge capacities for good food. (I remember that I had three complete Thanksgiving dinners in 1943 and stopped in at an ice cream parlor for a chocolate float on the way back from the last one!) But don't overestimate these men; they probably suffer more from indigestion than any other one thing. They are under a constant nervous tension, and their eating schedules are anything but regular. Thus, they will appreciate simple, well-balanced menus with plenty of fruits and fresh vegetables.

IF YOUR DINNER guest is an unmarried city pastor—a species fast becoming extinct, I hear—he has been eating in restaurants so much that the promise of a home-cooked meal has brought him to your home with a sparkle in his eye. (Those breaded veal cutlets on the Blue Plate Special can get mighty monotonous, day after day.) But here again, the best formula is to keep the menu simple and wholesome. Especially try to avoid serving those tricky desserts that skid off the plate when pressure is applied off center. They are a menace, and a few experiences with them may develop a phobia.

Above all, don't get upset when little things go wrong. Suppose the roast is burned, smilingly admit that it is "well done" and then enjoy it. It's better that way. What if Dad does upset his goblet while carving? The minister is probably even less adept in wielding a carving knife and will be fully in sympathy. And never fear, he has observed little children rubbing mashed potatoes into their hair many, many times before. Just relax, and enjoy your meal; that is what your guest is going to do.

THE MINISTER APPRECIATES this visit in your home, primarily, because it is his best way to get acquainted with you. He can come to know you in your own environment and find out how better to aid in your spiritual development. And may I emphasize, once and for all time, that it isn't necessary to remain home from church in order to prepare the minister's dinner. He would much rather have you serve him peanut butter sandwiches and be at the service. Remember that the most important feature is neither the food nor the table setting, but the sincere, genuinely happy hospitality of your family.

Do not be timid about inviting your minister home for a meal. Be assured that, whether it is a feast or a snack, he will enjoy himself immensely, and you "shall in no wise lose your reward."

What Latter Day Saints Believe About Modern Scripture

(Continued from page 14.)

BECAUSE WE BELIEVE that men today need revelation and guidance and instruction and exhortation and counsel from God as much as men in the past—or perhaps even more, and because we believe that God is unchangeable and impartial and as able and willing to speak to men today as he ever was in the past, Latter Day Saints keep the canon of scripture open and will continue to provide the implementation through which other chapters may be added to that open canon from time to time as men prove their worthiness to receive and the church has need.

Corrections

A few mistakes have been found in the small book, A Church Member's Manual. E. E. Smith, pastor of the Port Huron Branch calls attention to one on page 25, where the reference to Doctrine and Covenants 46: 23 should be 22: 23. It is desirable to obtain all corrections and suggestions for changes or improvements before a new edition is made. We will appreciate hearing from readers about this matter.—Editors.

LETTERS

Zionic-Built Homes

About nine years ago, Brother and Sister Frank Lacey moved to Ontario, California, and were in need of a home. Several men of Ontario Branch worked together on the house until it was completed. Four years later, they helped build the Clyde Roberts' home. The idea stuck, and since then they have assisted in the construction of four other houses. This is not a chore; the men enjoy working together, and the women often provide potluck dinner for their carpenter husbands. In addition to serving meals, they paint and hang paper. Because of this spirit of co-operation, two young men have been converted to the gospel.

Not only individuals benefit from this plan; the men are now planning to add to the church as soon as funds are available. We of Ontario believe this is a step forward on the way to Zion.

Mary Ritchie.

Ontario, California

Observations of a Mother

Recently I was forced to spend two months in bed after falling and injuring my back. During that time, I had a chance to do a lot of thinking. I was wondering what Latter Day Saint parents could do to help spread the gospel, and the thought came to me that parents are missionaries. If we observe the family altar and teach our children to pray, we are building leaders for the future. We should surround them with good books and teach them the hymns of the Restored Gospel. Since they are apt to copy what we do and say, we must guard our actions and speech. In this way, they help us to build better lives, too.

I want to thank those who came to visit me while I was bedfast. Some brought food and flowers, for which I am also grateful. Their friendliness helped me to bear my suffering. That God may be with us and bless us is my prayer.

Mrs. J. H. Thomas

Route 3
Lamoni, Iowa

Forms Home Worship Group

For the first ten years of our married life, we were isolated from church privileges. Then, in 1931, I read in The Ensign that George H. Wixom was serving as a missionary in Texas; I wrote to him, and on his way from a series of meetings in Portales, New Mexico, he stopped to preach in Lamesa. He wrote an account of his visit in The Ensign, and others in the vicinity began to correspond with me. A few years later, Z. Z. Renfroe preached in our home for a week. Still other families became interested, and now we have a lively group which meets every first and third Sunday. Some members drive over 100 miles to attend these meetings.

I have written this in the hope that it may encourage other isolated Saints to organize similar groups.

MRS. E. C. RIEBOLD.

Box 145
Lamesa, Texas

Distributes Tracts and Church Papers

I wish to thank all who have sent tracts and church papers to me for distribution. I place them where I believe they will be read and pray that those who are looking for the true gospel may see them. I am grateful, too, for the prayers that were offered in my behalf and for the cards and letters I received. My eye is somewhat better, but is not completely healed. However, I have faith, if God so wills, that it shall be.

I pray for the prophet of the church that he may be granted health and wisdom to guide us through this time of doubt and confusion.

Jessie M. Bailey.

Box 6, Sioux Falls,
South Dakota

Asks for Continued Prayers

We thank all who remembered us in prayer when the request was printed in the Herald last year. Our health is improving, but we still need the prayers of the Saints for a complete recovery.

MR. AND MRS. JOSEPH MCGUIRE.
2219 North 27th Street
Tacoma 3, Washington

Report From Poplar Bluff, Missouri

Although there are only a few Saints here, we hold regular Sunday services, song practice on Wednesday nights, and prayer meeting on Thursday evenings in the homes. Several nonmember families are becoming interested. I was baptized about ten months ago, and each day my faith grows stronger. We ask the Saints of other congregations to pray that we may continue to promote the work here and someday have a church to worship in. We especially ask prayers for Brother Robert Dortch who has been bedfast for a year. He has been greatly blessed by administration but still needs the united prayers of God's people.

Mrs. Gladys Miller

1416 Spring Street
Poplar Bluff, Missouri

Receives Heralds

I wish to express my appreciation to all who responded to my request for Heralds and for the many fine letters and cards I received. I am sure much good will be accomplished through them.

Cora Emerson.

904 South Wayland
Sioux Falls, South Dakota

A Testimony of Healing

I receive much good from reading the testimonies in the Herald. I have just passed my eighty-first birthday and have been a member of the church for forty-eight years. During this time, I have been blessed more than I can tell. Through administration I was spared a serious operation and my husband, who is eighty-six, has been healed of cancer. We find much comfort in the fact that our children have been brought up in the church. We hope that not just our family but all young men and women may be workers for this great cause.

We send greetings to our friends in Miami, Florida, and ask that the Saints everywhere will remember us in prayer.

MRS. JOHN YOUNG.

LaMoure, North Dakota

From an Isolated Member

I have been a member of the church for thirty-two years, but now I am isolated. I hope it will be possible for us to someday have other members near us so that we can do more for God's work.

I am in poor health and will appreciate having the Saints pray for me. I would like to receive letters from any who care to write.

MRS. ELVENAH MILLER.

R. F. D. 2
Huntsville, Ohio

Tribute to Ward Hougas

The young people of Central Missouri Stake are fortunate in having Ward A. Hougas as their leader. He is sincerely interested in their spiritual development and has a great love for them. Through him, I have come to see God's plan for us more clearly, and I am deeply grateful for his ministry. MRS. JUNE HOY.

Holden, Missouri

A Tree of Faith

By ROBERT ANDERSON

SOMEWHERE, YEARS AGO, when our church was in the process of organization, the local outposts of our faith came to be called branches. The more one thinks about this fact, the clearer becomes its relation to the life and existence of our religious pattern. Is it not an apt analogy to think of our church organization and our relation to it in terms of a growing plant?

To begin, let us compare the administrative offices of our church to the trunk and roots of a tree. Just as the roots furnish a tree with stability and food, so do the Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, and the High Councils of the church furnish the foundation, the stability, and the spiritual food upon which the rest of the church depends. Just as a tree must sink its roots firmly and deeply to secure life-giving water and food, so must our church ordain men who can give the firmness and depth of personal conviction and devotion to the cause they have chosen to serve. We have as evidence the testimonies of six young men who on April 6, 1830, planted the seed of faith and conviction that grew rapidly into a giant in its age, and that even through the stress of storm and severe pruning was rooted firmly enough in fertile soil to grow again.

But whoever saw a tree consisting merely of roots and a trunk? Biologists tell us how important the leaves and branches, even the smallest twigs, are to the well-being of the entire tree. Our districts and our branches, then, correspond to the limbs and branches of a tree, while all of us as members are twigs and leaves upon the branches. As each leaf of a tree seems so insignificant and unimportant to the life of the tree as a whole, perhaps it also seems to the individual member that he is insignificant and unimportant. Only when we realize the relative importance of each leaf, each twig, each branch, and limb to the tree does the relative importance of each member, branch, district, and stake become significant to the body of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. In the life of the giant Sequoia, each leaf performs a vital part in the manufacture of food for the entire tree, so also does our church depend upon the performance of every member to nurture the body as a whole. Our church is founded upon the principle of individual worth and accomplishment; moreover, it relies upon that principle for its growth and perpetuation just as the roots of the tree depend upon the leaves to manufacture part of their food supply.

IN ANOTHER way, also, our church may be compared to a tree—that is in the way of growth; and perhaps we might learn some lessons in organization from our leafy example. When most trees grow, they increase in size by becoming larger in diameter each season and by forming new branches whenever the tree is capable of supporting and feeding them. In years of drought or in poor climatic conditions, trees grow but little. How often that has been the case with us. As the tree depends upon sunlight and rain, so we depend upon the spiritual wisdom and understanding of a power beyond our control—a power that, as the sunlight, may be cut off from us by clouds of many shapes and sorts. Without the life-giving rays of God's Holy Spirit, even the fertile soil of human relations will not enable us to make the growth we are expected to make, either in expanding our circumference to parts of the world where our missionaries have not yet gone or in feeding the branches already standing.

It therefore remains the duty of each part of the branch to maintain the process of growth and manufacture food, not allowing a thick coating of dust to collect upon ourselves, shutting off the rays of light and power. We have all seen the leaves of a tree after a period of dry weather and noticed how they become coated with dust that destroys their glossy, healthy appearance. And we have noticed, too, the change in their appearance when a brisk breeze and cooling shower rejuvenated them. What a change was brought by a little activity. A student at a Graceland fellowship meeting, speaking of his home branch, mentioned how complacent the people were, how self-satisfied they seemed to be gathering the dust of inactivity, how they were losing their sheen and gloss. Another student mentioned that his branch was swept with a swirl of activities which often clashed and carried some of the twigs away with it, just as a summer whirlwind sweeps through a tree, picking up leaves that have become loosened from the branch. Still other students told of branches that struck a balance: of happy church homes where every twig was happily functioning in its place, where every twig was firmly attached to its source of food, and where the branch was growing and spreading. A student from a far-away-land mentioned how the branches that are spread farthest from the main trunk are nonetheless dependent upon the body as a whole for a portion of their food.

New Horizons

IT IS MAINLY OUR missionaries and traveling priesthood members who carry this life-giving food from the roots and trunk to the tips of the most distant branches, but they alone cannot do the job. They need the help of the branch along which they can conduct the food and, when pushing out into the unexplored, they must as the new bud of a tree have a solid foundation upon which to build. They must have back of them a tree that is solid to the core and from the roots to the tip of the longest branch. A tree of faith and conviction that stands unbowed in the strongest storm and shelters with loving arms the human beings who seek protection from the storm.

The Trouble-Shooter

What About Pacifism?

QUESTION: I am critical of pacifism and, at the same time, I am sympathetic with its activities. The church tends to give me a world view, rather than a narrow, nationalistic one. It emphasizes the importance and worth of all human personality. In the light of my training and my high regard for the ethics of Jesus of Nazareth, I am not at all sure of the assumption that I should have participated in the fighting of the last war, or that I should participate in the event of a future war. What are the basic issues involved, and how should this problem be approached?

ANSWER: By Dr. Roy Cheville

THIS QUESTION, very well phrased, is considered by scores of thinking young Latter Day Saints. Let's look at the nature of the question. First of all, a youth that phrases problems in this manner does not expect a yes-no reply. Mature minds see that the most baffling questions are those in which the sides do not sharpen up with the right on one side and wrong on the other. If such were the case, our choosing would be quite easy. A given situation, however, is a complex of both. So we have to analyze and try to ascertain which of several possible lines of procedure will take us farthest in the direction of the chosen goals. In a war, for instance, no one side has a premium on all goodness, with the other side one hundred per cent devilish. So-called Christian nations have corruption and selfishness working against their high-sounding aims. So choosing to participate in war or refraining from it is not a simple yes-no decision.

You Can Build on These

When a questioner and responder come together, the two will do well to discover what they agree upon.

We need to start from common foundation. Your question discloses four starting principles:

1. The world-view of the church.
2. The worth of every person.
3. The normative teaching of Jesus.
4. The goal of a social order of universal peace.

Any youth who holds to these has the basis for sound decision-making. These are fundamental. Let's interpret these to mean that our church has a mission in achieving these. This implies that the youth who affiliates with this church of ours sees his personal responsibility in promoting their realization. Here is a youth who is trying to find out whether lining up with a possible war will promote these goals.

Each Situation Has to Be Met

The leading counselor in social relations never gave closed answers. He imagined a parable and expected his hearers to discover the principle at the heart of it. This principle was to be applied to specific situations. He was bucking religious leaders who wanted cut-and-dried answers. Today, this Jesus would be no more likely to tell our youth what specific course to take. He would again declare the nature of the kingdom to be established and expect each to decide. This procedure does seem somewhat annoying, but it does push youth to grow through making decisions.

War can hardly be lumped off as a single something. There are wars and wars. No two are alike. We can agree that the entire procedure is a devilish business. Sherman's ascription, "War is hell" has never been refuted. Yet, in wartime we see some of the most admiration-challenging examples of heroism, sacrifice, loyalty to high ideals. I know of no text that brings this out better than the Book of Mormon. There were foul wars such as that ending in the Battle of Cumorah. There were also wars of defense and championship of the right; notable among these was the crusade led by Captain Moroni with his famous standard (page 469).

Is eating good or bad? One replies, "That depends." Is singing for the general welfare? It may help up things socially undesirable. Is reading the Scriptures good? One mother discovered she was leaving her family to eat cold meals while she read of Alma and Helaman. Each experience must be interpreted in the light of the total social picture. For this reason it is unwise to lay down flat decisions apart from the immediate problem. Even God has to work with men on their present level as he tries to pull them to a higher plane.

Most of us do not think too well when a crisis breaks. We do not have time then to think through where we ought to be going. The well-planned life has a foundation of habits and ideals. These operate when a storm comes. The big task of a Latter Day Saint is to clarify such principles as those set forth in the question. The application will have to be made when the occasion arises. Every League ought to be working on questions of this kind.

The Big Question

Here it is: What am I doing to build a world order in which war will be outmoded? How can we iron out tensions that bring on fighting? How can we get men to want a society in which every person will be respected as a son of God? I believe that the youth who throws his energies into such projects will have clearness increase as he goes ahead. Nor is it too much that the Father of all men can open the way to permit him to serve humanity without having to result to bloodshed.

Revelation and Reason

(Continued from page 8.)

There is no reason to be disturbed by the apparent conflict. After all, evolution is still a theory, and may undergo modification later on. Other theories have gone down the intellectual sink and been washed away. Maybe the same fate will befall evolution.

Genesis indicates a Creator who created the visible universe, and that visible universe reached its end in man. A modern philosopher uses language dangerously similar.

"I see," says Bergson, "in the whole evolution of life in our planet, a crossing of matter by creative consciousness, an effort to set free by force of ingenuity and invention—something which in the animal still remains imprisoned and is only released when we reach man."

The sacred writer of Genesis saw the Spirit of God move upon the face of the deep, and God said, "Let there be light." The scientific writer of today promulgates the same gospel, the gospel of Light. Sir James Jeans states that "the whole story of the creation can adequately be summed up in the six words of Genesis, 'God said, Let there be light!'" The discrepancies between Genesis and modern thought is apparent rather than real.

Free Will

With respect to the question of free will, however, another series of problems is raised. Free will is something which we experience from within. It is a condition of selfhood. Regardless of observed process in chemistry and physics, much more can be known accurately about the nature of matter as man analyses himself. For, in himself, man is inside the visible order looking out of it, not looking in upon it. In himself, he is conscious of real freedom. The fact that he deliberates between two courses of action and finally excludes one and chooses the other does not alter the fact that he could have chosen differently. There is now discovered to be what seems an element of indeterminism in the material universe which makes adequate room for the action of free wills. This discovery has, strangely and significantly enough, more or less coincided with the disclosure of atomic fissure. Once someone has acted after deliberation, the energy stored in the body has been used in the course of action. A choice is made. The deed is done. It is not the province of science to affirm that the energy could not have been discharged in another course of conduct. And it cannot deny this possibility. For science observes results. It cannot observe results that might have been. They can be observed in the imagination of men as courses of conduct are weighed and their particular outcomes evaluated.

If I am conscious of anything, I am conscious of the fact that when I choose evil or toy with the second best, remorse dogs my spirit. REMORSE! What would men give to be free from it? Yet they cannot be free from it if they sin. How remorse plays havoc with the mind and blights the happiness of men and tears the spirit into shreds! "REMORSE IS SIMPLY A DARKER NAME FOR FREE WILL"—Illingworth. But when I choose the good, out of considerable travail in temptation, the conviction that I might have chosen otherwise and did not adds to my joy. I rejoice in my salvation from the lower, the lesser, and the evil. And my rejoicing comes from the innate conviction of my absolute freedom. Thank God for it!

This I know from within. And it squares with the Bible account of the nature of man. Take away the conviction that I am really free and you quench within me the springs of moral effort. For it is upon the conviction of his freedom that, under God, a man can stand up and be a man.

"I know that amidst all the forces, physical and social, acting upon me, I am largely a self-determining being, responsible for the making of my own soul."—Charles Gore, Reconstruction, page 143.

So, then, the religion of the prophets and of Christ does no violence to what men elsewhere have discovered to be traces of the Creator. What natural religion lacks, revelation supplies. What science observes, Christ explains. And in nothing is this so gloriously manifest than in the destiny of the whole physical universe revealed in the resurrected body of Jesus Christ, our Lord.

But that is quite another story. Perhaps, at some future writing, we shall tackle that one!

Bible religion is rational through and through. We have not been given the spirit of fear, but of a "sound mind." No one need be ashamed of it. Only let him study to show himself approved unto God, a workman, that needeth not to be (made) ashamed.

Receives a Blessing

Mary Humphery Sprinkle of Harts-horne, Oklahoma, thanks all who remembered her in prayer and sent cards or letters. She has been blessed as a result.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

BULLETIN BOARD

Northwestern Ohio District Conference

The Northwestern Ohio District Conference will be held at Toledo, Ohio, on March 13 and 14 in the church at 2526 Lawrence Avenue. The business meeting is scheduled for 3 p.m. Saturday afternoon; a Zion's League program will be presented at 6:30. Sunday's activities include a prayer service at 9 a.m.; a sermon by Apostle Blair Jensen at 10:45; a song service at 1:30 p.m.; and preaching at 2. The conference will be in charge of District President Alvin Wadsworth and Apostle Jensen.

Oregon District Conference

The Oregon District Conference will be held in Portland on March 26 and 27. The first meeting will be held at 8 p.m., Friday, at which time Communion will be served to members of the priesthood and their wives at Central Church, Seventeenth and Belmont. Saturday's activities will include an early morning fellowship, classes, basket lunch at noon, a business meeting at 2 p.m. for the election of General Conference delegates, and a sermon by Apostle Roscoe Davey at 7:30. These services will be held at First Church, Seventy-sixth and Irving. Those in charge of the conference are Apostle Davey, District President J. L. Verhei, Bishop Monte Lasater, and Missionary James Reneau. The conference will end Saturday evening, and members will return to their own congregations for Easter services.

J. L. VERHEI.

Wants to Locate Members in New Hampshire and Maine

Services are being held at the homes of Edward Traver, Jr., Derry Village, New Hampshire (near Manchester), and Carl W. Frost, Jr., 384 Central Avenue, Dover, New Hampshire (near Portsmouth). We should like to have the names of all members and friends of the church living in southeastern New Hampshire or southwestern Maine. Send this information to Reed M. Holmes, 9 Alpine Street, Cambridge 38, Massachusetts.

Books Wanted

Lucy Nelson Worcester, 422 Arizona Avenue, Santa Monica, California, would like to hear from anyone having a copy of Luff's The Old Jerusalem Gospel for sale.

Life Magazine Wanted

Mrs. A. V. Webb, 1404 South Seventeenth Avenue, Maywood, Illinois, needs a copy of the May 27, 1946, Life magazine for use in visual aid work. It contains an article on alcohol which she wants to use.

Books Wanted

The choir of the Walnut Park Church of Independence would like to obtain a number of copies of Zion's Praises. Church members who are willing to part with them, please write to Fred O. Davies, Pastor, Walnut Park Church, Pearl and Alton, Independence, Missouri.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. W. E. Jacoby, 120 Hinton Avenue, Moberly, Missouri, requests prayers for her daughter, Daisee, who is suffering from a nervous disorder, and an aunt, Mrs. Lizzie Crafton of Mulberry, Kansas, who is in the University of Kansas Hospital for treatment of cancer.

ENGAGEMENT

Dennis-Johnsen

Mr. and Mrs. Louis N. Johnsen of Mansfield, Washington, announce the engagement of their daughter, Lena Mae, to Harry A. Dennis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur I. Dennis of Hagerman, Idaho. Miss Johnsen is a sophomore at Graceland. Mr. Dennis, a graduate of Graceland, is attending Drake University in Des Moines.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. E. Merle Harford of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, Donald Merle, born February 28. Mrs. Harford is the former Rachel Peck.

A son, Charles John Darwin, was born on February 13 to Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Cronkrite of Meifort, Saskatchewan.

A son, Dennis Mervin, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Mervin Vick of Knob Noster, Missouri, on February 13 at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Vick is the former Elaine Bugbee.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Norman of Knob Noster, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, William Guy, born February 22. Mrs. Norman is the former Wanda Price.

Mr. and Mrs. John Abbe of Owendale, Michigan, announce the birth of a son, David John, born January 10.

A son, Roger Lee, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Andrews of Owendale, Michigan, on December 20.

A daughter, Janet Lynne, was born to Mr. and Mrs. James Stamos of Des Moines, Iowa, on January 4. Mrs. Stamos is the former Maxine Montgomery.

Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Brown of Des Moines, Iowa, announce the birth of a son, Christopher Stanley, born February 9. Mrs. Brown was formerly Georgia Robinson of Clinton, Iowa.

A daughter, Candy Susan, was born on February 1 to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Morgan of Des Moines, Iowa. Mrs. Morgan is the former Mary Lou Fox.

Dr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Johnson of Des Moines, Iowa, announce the birth of a daughter, Candace Lynn, born February 17.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert M. Scott announce the birth of a daughter, Anita Ruth, born January 30 in Des Moines, Iowa. Mrs. Scott is the former Rosemary McComb of Tulsa. Mr. Scott is pastor at Des Moines.

DEATHS

WALLING.—David S., was born November 9, 1881, at Glenwood, Iowa, and died February 24, 1948, at the Veterans' Hospital in Lincoln, Nebraska, after a lingering illness. He had lived in the vicinity of Council Bluffs most of his life. He served his country during the Spanish American War and later enlisted in the regular army for three years. He was past commander of the Louis A. Wegner Post, Camp Number Eighteen, of the Spanish War Veterans. On January 14, 1894, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church, and on August 10, 1914, was married to Effie Sandage at Lamoni, Iowa. Seven children were born to this marriage, three of whom preceded their father in death.

He leaves his wife; two sons: David H. and Leonard J.; two daughters: Mrs. Naomi Steiber and Malinda Walling, all of Council Bluffs; four brothers: Garrett of Denver, Colorado; Alma of Glenwood, Iowa; Benjamin of Vancouver, Washington; and Guy of Lamoni; two sisters: Mrs. Mary Trusler of Omaha, Nebraska, and Mrs. Lydia Bergren of Berryville, Arkansas; and nine grandchildren. Services were held at the Woodring Funeral Home, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in Memorial Cemetery in Council Bluffs.

McDONALD.—John Arthur, was born November 12, 1874, in Noble Township, Ohio, and died February 15, 1948. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since January 2, 1921.

Surviving are his wife, Louise Moser McDonald; four children: Harold of Astoria, Oregon; Raymond and Mrs. Lloyd Deitsch of St. Marys, Ohio; and Lester of Lima, Ohio; a stepson, Amos Moser of Fostoria, Ohio; nineteen grandchildren; five great-grandchildren; and two sisters: Mrs. William Henchen and Mrs. William Burd of St. Marys. Elder Alvin Wadsworth was in charge of the funeral. Interment was in the Elmgrove Cemetery.

Briefs

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA.—A special service was held on February 8 at which $4,000 were donated to the church building fund. Other contributions were pledged. This branch, consisting of thirty-two members, plans to build a new church in the summer.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—Dr. F. M. McDowell conducted classes at the Chicagoland School of Religion from February 12 to 15. This school has been conducted each Thursday evening for two hours in the Y. M. C. A. since January 15. Other instructors than Dr. McDowell were Ed Ford, Thomas Beil, and Raymond Troyer. Supervising the school were Joseph Baldwin, district president, and Hattie K. Bell, district director of religious education. Worship and vesper services for the school were planned by Mrs. Lydia Wight, Hattie Bell, and associates.

MARLIN, TEXAS.—Dedication services for the new church were held on December 7. Present for the occasion were President F. Henry Edwards, Apostle Maurice Draper, Bishop C. M. Mitchel, and District President Earl Moore. Approximately 200 persons attended these services. The annual election was held on January 4; Elder J. R. Allen was sustained as pastor.

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.—Jimmy and Larry, the young sons of Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Cavin of San Gabriel, and Gladys, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Buak of Watsonville, were baptized on the evening of January 18. Pastor Blaine Bender and Priest Ray Bridenbecker officiated. The confirmation service was held at 11 o'clock on January 25. Elders Paul Moore, Harry Waylett, and Blaine Bender officiating. On the evening of February 15, B. F. Logan of South Pasadena and M. S. Kristovich of Alhambra were baptized by Brother Bender. They were confirmed on the morning of February 22 by District President Louis Ostertag and Elders Waylett and Bender.

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—Nineteen converts were baptized at the close of a series of meetings conducted by Missionary Merle Guthrie. He was assisted at the confirmation service by Elders R. E. Rodgers, S. M. Zonker, O. Melcher, W. Allen, and Henry Winship.

Mary A. Burlington
1510½ Jules
St. Joseph, Missouri

92867
18
h

The Herald Publishing House is happy to announce the beginning of a new service to our church and church members. The church has purchased fine recording equipment, and we are going to distribute the records which they make. We shall call these STONE CHURCH RECORDINGS. Our first is a recording of Brother Elbert A. Smith's message to the young people to be used during their "Restoration Festival" in April. Every church and church family will want this sermonette given in "Brother Elbert's" own voice and words.

Witnesses for The Restoration:

A Message to the Youth of the Church

from

ELBERT A. SMITH
Presiding Patriarch

with

The Stone Church Choir

under the direction of

PAUL CRAIG

singing

"The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning"

12 inch vinylite (unbreakable) record

$2.50

ORDER THROUGH YOUR BOOK STEWARD OR DIRECT FROM

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

The Triumphal Entry

THE Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

MARCH 20, 1948

NUMBER 12

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Nurse's Credo

Think not that I am martyred in serving you.
 Indeed, you serve me:
 Through the avenues of your pain,
 I travel deeper into the heart of life;
 In the listening to your fears,
 I learn to marvel at your frenzied love of life;
 With your humor, you lift me
 And make play of what once was work;
 In your very death, you enrich me with the wonder of eternity;
 As you try me,
 You demand a patience I must in the hour conceive;
 In your gratitude,
 I experience a warm, flooding love of humanity;
 In your decay, you tantalize me with gossamer-veiled truth;
 Always in your waxing strength you comfort me
 And for a transient moment I embrace a greater plan;
 Viewing your pathos, I accept the dignity of sorrow,
 And when you meet anguish with valor I see God.

—NETTIE ALFORD

AUDITORIUM NEWS

* SANITARIUM

At the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital on March 1 was held for the first time a "Senior Black Band Service" in which the nurses receive the privilege of wearing the black band on their caps to identify them as experienced nurses. The fine poem on this page was written by a student nurse, Nettie Alford, and was read as a part of the program.

* RADIO

The church has filed an application for a license for radio broadcasting on a standard frequency, under the authority of the action of the last General Conference. The application will come up for a hearing on March 26.

* GRACELAND COLLEGE

Religious Emphasis Week this year brought President F. Henry Edwards, and his sister, Mrs. C. G. Mesley, as guest speakers and counselors. A heavy schedule was organized to permit as much personal contact with the student body as possible, with lectures, dinner table groups, personal interviews, etc. "Gifts That Edify" was the general theme. A rich experience is reported, with a fine response from the students. President Edwards returned to headquarters Sunday evening, March 7.

* FAR WEST STAKE

The annual conference, March 5-7, had as visitors Apostle C. G. Mesley, Dr. Charles F. Grabske, and Elder John Darling. While the Friday evening program was canceled on account of the severity of the weather, Saturday and Sunday activities went on as scheduled, with classwork, Zion's League meetings, and the regular business session.

* SURVEY IN THE EAST

Spending six weeks together, Apostles D. T. Williams, C. G. Mesley, and G. G. Lewis conducted a survey of church work and missionary possibilities in major eastern cities—Washington, Philadelphia, the New York area, Boston; Buffalo and Niagara Falls, New York, also visiting other places. Brother Lewis reports an improved understanding of local problems and possibilities, and more definite plans for future development.

* ESCATAWPA, MISS.

W. J. Breshears, president of Gulf States District, reports to the First Presidency:

From February 1 to 8, I conducted a missionary series at Escatawpa, Mississippi, which resulted in seven baptisms. Although the weather on the closing Sunday was chilly and disagreeable, we had the privilege of leading a man, his wife, their thirteen-year-old son, and four other children, ranging in age from eight to thirteen, into the baptismal waters. It was a very beautiful service, and the same good spirit that existed throughout the series was present as an added witness to the truth that we had sought to proclaim.

* ALBIA, IOWA

Evangelist John R. Grice, writing of his work at Albia, Iowa, says:

There is a fine little group here, in need of a church building. Meeting in the home of Isaac Allison, our attendance averaged forty-six. . . . Four were baptized and confirmed, and two babies blessed. It has been a busy ten days of services, out for one or two meals each day, and ten patriarchal blessings besides. Two family circles were completed.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

March 20, 1948

Number 12

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $3.50 per year and $1.75 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $3.75 per year and $1.90 for six months; other countries, $4.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

It Could Have Been Different! 3

ARTICLES:

Protestants and Others Unite in Church-State Separation	4
The Purpose of Agency, by Bishop G. L. DeLapp	5
Festivals and Traditions of Easter, by Winifred Milner	8
Ammon, Son of Mosiah, by Dr. E. V. Shute	10
What L. D. S. Believe About the Apostasy, by Evan A. Fry	12
Counsel to the Ministry, by Wesley W. Richards	15
Pre-eminence, a poem, by Pliney A. Wiley	15
What Price Zion, by Audentia Anderson	16
Songs of the Restoration	18
You Can Be Dishonest, by Ruth Midgorden Goodwin	20
Man Must Work, by Kathryn Meiz	21
Letters	22
Bulletin Board	23

It Could Have Been Different!

JAN MASARYK, patriot and foreign minister of Czechoslovakia, son of the scholar-president, Thomas G. Masaryk who led that country through the years of its founding and organization, is dead. Official reports say that he committed suicide by jumping from a window. Some observers outside the country are inclined to doubt it. Either way, he has given his life in protest against the betrayal of his country and the loss of its freedom. . . . It could have been different. The present situation is no solution to the problems of Czechoslovakia. It simply means that another generation of people will have to learn what a mistake they have made, and will have to take up the struggle for liberty which has occupied the hearts and minds of so many generations of Czech people.

NEWSPAPER HEADLINES say, "Peace Hope Ebbs." The bright expectations of peace and co-operation held before the world through the United Nations Organization are fading rapidly. It reminds us of the long, wearying months during the "war of nerves" before Hitler invaded Poland, and of those other trying months before the tragedy at Pearl Harbor. The nations still want peace, but they want it in their own way, and their separate ways are irreconcilable. The great powers today are trying to build two very different kinds of world. Neither side will give up, neither will compromise. . . . It could have been different. There is enough for all of us in the world, if we could be satisfied with reasonable conditions, let others work out their destiny, and be permitted to work out our destiny. The present conditions are no solution to our problems. Perhaps we shall see the sufferings and sacrifices of another war—only the future can determine that; but we can see that we are on the same kind of path that has led to other wars. This is not good. It delays for at least another generation the hope that men can find peace and plenty in this world which is their home.

MILLIONS OF PEOPLE. "Millions now living shall never die," was the slogan of a crusading group of church people. It is true, because souls are immortal. But we are living in a world of spiritual death, and our Australian members changed the slogan to express another truth, "Millions now dying have never lived." Sin, suffering, fear, and want of faith are condemning untold millions of people to a living death. People do not know God, they do not believe in eternal life, and because they think they are related only to the animals, they live like animals, expecting nothing beyond the grave. . . . This, too, could have been different. And it could yet be different. We can tell the gospel story, of the gift of God's love and of the hope of eternal life, to redeem a despairing world.

CHRISTIANITY lost something in the long ages when it concentrated all its attention upon the other world. It lost touch with the problems and sufferings of men in this world, and to that extent it lost its usefulness. Gradually church leaders saw their mistake, and turned their attention from the future to the present. They developed the "social gospel," and in doing so changed from a God-centered religion to a man-centered one. They shifted their attention from the soul to the body of man. They tried to save his physical life without bothering to give him eternal life. Both people and the church have lost heavily in this change. . . . It could have been different. Eternal life without a chance to live here is a structure without foundation; a materialistic religion without eternal life is a foundation with no superstructure. The great religious faith that has been committed to us, and that must be carried to the world, should provide for the temporal needs of the body in Zionic, Christian community life; and at the same time, it must provide for the needs of the spirit in the eternal life with God. To a materialistic world, and to those who understand only a materialistic gospel, we must present a new understanding of Paul's statement, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."—I Corinthians 15: 19. Even in a pagan world, some men have been able to obtain great material abundance. It has never given them happiness. Those who have found happiness have been men and women who have found a way of relating their lives to God, and to the eternal way of life.

OUR CHURCH has a great opportunity today, an opportunity that imposes a great burden of work and dedication, but one which also offers great rewards. The first task is to save men and women from a life of thoughtlessness and sin and to return them to God so that they may have the hope of eternal life. The next is to organize them and their activities here in this world, building Zion and the Christian community life, for the maximum of physical and social welfare, self-expression, development, and service. We are citizens of two worlds; our bodies belong to the earth and our spirits belong to God. The full gospel unifies and enlarges both aspects of our life.

L. J. L.

Editorial

Protestants and Others Unite in Church-State Separation

January 12, 1948, bids fair to become a historic date in the history of the United States, for on that date the newspapers of the country carried a Manifesto calling upon "Protestants and Other Americans United for the Separation of Church and State" to join in a great, nation-wide crusade to save the First Amendment to the Constitution. Briefly, there was carried a threefold program: (a) to teach; (b) to seek redress; (c) to prevent further encroachments upon this constitutional principle.

The teaching process is to bring to the attention of the public the constitutional basis upon which religious liberty rests and has been guaranteed. The redress to be sought will be a revision of the Supreme Court decisions which upheld state legislation, in 1930 providing free textbooks for parochial schools (State of Louisiana), and in February, 1947, upholding free bus transportation for children attending parochial schools in New Jersey. The third item is to prevent, if possible, any and all further encroachments that would breach the wall between State and Church.

The Manifesto was signed by the Committee consisting of five persons whose names carry nation-wide influence among Protestants. They are: John A. Mackay, President of Princeton Theological Seminary; Edwin McNeill Poteat, President of Colgate-Rochester Divinity School; G. Bromley Oxnam, Bishop of the Methodist Church, New York Area; Louie D. Newton, President of Southern Baptist Convention; Charles Clayton Morrison, former Editor of The Christian Century. The president of the organization is Edwin McNeill Poteat; the Vice Presidents are Charles Clayton Morrison, G. Bromley Oxnam, and John A. Mackay. The treasurer is E. H. DeGroot, Jr., and the recording secretary is J. M. Dawson, Executive Secretary, Public Relations, Baptists of the United States.

"Protestants and Other Americans United" specifically states that it does not concern itself with "the religious teaching, the forms of worship or the ecclesiastical organization of the many churches in our country." It adds that it is no part of its purpose to propagandize the Protestant faith on the one hand or to oppose the Roman Catholic Church as regards its teaching or internal practices. The maintenance of the separation of Church and State under the American form of Government is their aim.

Conceding this much, the Manifesto declares that the existing situation cannot be properly dealt with except by frankly taking account of "the specific sources from which violations of the First Amendment originate." But the organization's undertaking is not primarily toward these sources, but rather toward those agencies of government—local, state and federal—which weakly yield to their demands. The Manifesto militantly proclaims that all public officials—Congressmen, members of state legislatures, executive and judiciary agencies of government—all must be warned in no uncertain terms that "they are playing with fire when they play into the hands of any church which seeks, at any point however marginal, to breach the wall that sharply separates Church and State in this country."

Furthermore, the Manifesto points out that "the internal differences which distinguish one church from another have no place on the political level. Their consideration belongs in the open forum which the Constitution has provided for freedom of conscience and the free exchange of opinion."

The Manifesto points out that "Protestants and Other Americans United" came into being to defend this "open forum of religious liberty against its vitiation by law or the administration of law." The churches for whom the new organization speaks ask the same liberty for other groups that they demand for their own, "they are content to take their place in the open forum of our free society and to flourish or perish by the inherent strength or weakness of their faith. This is cultural and spiritual democracy."

The Manifesto pulls no punches, as when, for instance, it states: "A powerful church, unaccustomed in its own history and tradition to the American ideal of separation of Church and State, but flourishing under the religious liberty provided by our form of government, and emboldened by the wide diffusion of a false conception of tolerance, has committed itself in authoritative declarations and by positive acts to a policy plainly subversive of religious liberty as guaranteed by the Constitution."

Dealing with the Roman Catholic Church and its parochial schools, the Manifesto hits the bull's eye with this observation: "One of the long-range purposes of this church is to secure total support for its extensive system of parochial schools from the public treasury. Its strategy in furtherance of this purpose is to fracture the constitutional principle at one point after another where the action can be minimized as trivial or disguised as falling within some other category than that of its ultimate intent. It has begun by demanding that certain marginal services such as bus transportation, free lunches, free textbooks, etc., for its parochial school pupils be financed by public funds raised by taxation for the public schools."

The Manifesto points out that this same Roman Catholic Church now demands, on an even bolder scale, millions of dollars from the Federal Government for the aid of parochial schools. One bill completely yields to the churches' demands (the Aiken bill), while the Taft bill (S.472) is "a disguised evasion of the issue." It is made clear that the effect of state-supported church schools would be to disrupt our public school system. To divide state-supported education into sectarian school systems "would divide American society itself into hostile sectarian camps, intensify sectarian intolerance, and thrust a religious issue permanently into the political arena from which our Constitution was designed to exclude it. Next to the Constitution itself, our public school system has been our strongest bulwark against the development of religious intolerance in our political life."

All good citizens should let the members of Congress know that they oppose such bills as the above (Taft bill—S. 472).

The question of a presidential ambassador at the Vatican is deplored as another violation of constitutional principles and another breach in the wall separating Church and State.

The new organization needs $100,000. The treasurer is E. H. DeGroot, Jr., 924 Colorado Building, Washington 5, D. C., who is now prepared to receive contributions.—S. W., in Scottish Rite News Bulletin.

I do not believe in a fate that falls on men however they act; but I do believe in a fate that falls on them unless they act.—G. K. Chesterton.

The Purpose of Agency

A sermon by Bishop G. L. DeLapp

Given at Stone Church on Sunday morning, January 25, 1948.

The Lord said unto Enoch, Behold these your brethren; they are the workmanship of my own hands, and I gave unto them their knowledge, in the day I created them; and in the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7.

IN DAYS SUCH as we are experiencing, it seems to me that there should be a re-evaluation of some of the fundamental principles to which we have given our time and attention as we have pursued our course in the attainment of the goals of the church. Last week on three successive mornings as I listened to the newscasts, there was a monotony—a rather depressing monotony of similarity in the news: Trouble in Jerusalem and India; airplane crashes abroad and in the United States; train wrecks; murder trials. Knowing that this goes on day after day, week after week, I couldn't help wondering what the future holds for us.

If we were to listen only to the news of the day, life would scarcely be worth the living; but we find also interspersed in it other items which are probably of greater importance. We find evidence of scientific development in many different fields of an ever-increasing understanding on the part of man of the world in which he lives and of the universe of which this world is a part.

I often wonder why it is that we emphasize these discordant notes to such an extent and fail to see the constructive things which build faith and hope in the hearts of men everywhere. I presume the answer lies in the fact that we are so human we feel our own troubles most keenly; and things of divine nature for which we seek lie so deep within our souls that we do not talk about them quite as glibly as we do about matters that affect us physically from day to day.

As we look about us and see what is going on in the world, I like to think of our need of making a little closer contact with Divinity, that in the outreach of the soul we might somehow reach the forces which are in operation in the universe, seeking to build righteousness. In our outreach, if we could make divine contact, we would find our hearts uplifted and our understanding broadened as new horizons come into view.

It is possible, in spite of all the trials and perplexities of life today, to find some assurance of better times ahead. Despite the economic and political turmoil on every hand, despite the breakdown of morale and morals, I can relate myself through the processes of orientation of experience to the divine work to which our church has been called and commissioned—to the task of building the kingdom.

I should like to do that—if we can think about some of the things that point toward better days, if we can recognize our relationship to life as we experience it.

CERTAIN OBJECTIVES are before us for attainment. Some of them are quite general in nature and have not been clearly defined by us, either as a church or individually. This objective which we call the building of the kingdom—the establishment of Zion—is general in its character, and becomes real to us only when we are able to relate it to ourselves individually and to relate our thinking and acts of every day to the attainment of more specific objectives—which, in the final analysis, must consist of character development within ourselves. When we can relate what we are thinking and doing to the attainment of common objectives, such as the building of the kingdom and world evangelization, we find within ourselves a better understanding of our general objectives, and we are also able to understand our relationship to their attainment.

These objectives, I think, are twofold. Some involve the eternal processes which arise out of the nature of the creation, the creation of the world and of man. It is only when we understand more clearly the purpose of our creation that we can comprehend our responsibility relative to the physical creation. And then there are objectives which arise out of the nature of man in the use he makes of God's physical creation, the utilitarian processes of character development.

The Lord stated: "And I, God, created man in my own image; in the image of mine Only Begotten I created him, . . . to have dominion over the fish of the sea and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."—Genesis 1: 29, 30. Here we have a statement of the purpose of the creation of man. And, in the following words, we have the statement of the purpose of the creation of the earth: "I the Lord stretched out the heavens and builded the earth as a very handiwork, and all things therein are mine."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2. Thus we find purpose in the creation of man; it is that of having dominion over all that God has created. Yet, there is a qualifying statement to set forth the relationship of God and man; it is that God created the heavens and built the earth as "a very handiwork" and the statement of ownership that "all things therein are mine."

There is also this additional statement relative to God's purpose in man that we find recorded in John 3: 16, 17, Inspired Version: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." And one more scriptural statement relative to the divine purpose: "For this is my work and my glory to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23.

THUS THERE ARE these divine processes made manifest through utilitarian employment of God's physical creation to bring to pass the growth and development of man, and to develop him to that point where he can assume his responsibility in management of those things which have been created by God for his use here upon the earth.

These utilitarian processes having to do with man's development are, in my opinion, highly important, for we can talk about the divine purposes, and hope of the eternal life that God has given to man, but if we overlook for one moment our responsibility in the management of temporal possessions in relationship to the achievement of that eternal life, we have missed one of the most important points relative to our own existence here upon the earth; we have overlooked the very process by which man can become the Son of God.

"For it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. For he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father."—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1. "And . . . behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I the Lord hath appointed or shall hereafter appoint unto any man." Here we have the principles of stewardship and ownership, emphasizing that God is the owner, that man is the steward, and God requires of every man an acknowledgment, first of all, of the fact that God is owner and man is steward.

This has special significance for Latter Day Saints, because the Restoration Movement in which we believe was established upon the premise that God reveals himself in these latter days; not that God was but that God is, and that in the revelations which came to the church there was imposed upon the church and its members particular responsibility relative to the rest of the world to which the church was to minister. Because God had revealed his mind to us, there was imposed upon us a responsibility greater, I think, than that placed upon any other organization in the world today.

In John 9: 41 we find this statement: "Jesus said unto them, If ye were blind, ye should have no sin; but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth." The revelation of the divine mind is a most remarkable experience to those who have some understanding of what has been revealed, but just so often as God reveals his mind, there is imposed upon those to whom that revelation comes a new responsibility to their fellow men. When we think of the church as the organ through which God shall reveal himself to a needy humanity, when we think of the church as the agency through which God is to express himself—the medium through which the kingdom of God is to be built—we think of the tremendous responsibility which is imposed upon us. That responsibility would be beyond the ability of mortal man to assume were it not for the fact that God recognized us as rather weak human beings and outlined for us the course of procedure which would enable us to gain strength day by day as we march forward in the task of building the kingdom.

THE ACHIEVEMENT OF both the eternal and utilitarian purposes comes through the exercise of the agency that is God-given, which purpose is set forth in my text. It is interesting to note in the restoration of the gospel that as additional light came it kept imposing upon man, almost with every revelation, a greater responsibility relative to the manner in which he was to exercise the agency which God gave back in the Garden of Eden.

I want to call your attention to the difference in the text of the King James and the Inspired Version. First, let us read from the King James: "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Here is a rather dogmatic statement—a commandment: "thou shalt not eat." There is no question of choice. Now let me read from the Inspired Version the same thought as we find it in Genesis 2: 19-22 inclusive: "And I, the Lord God, commanded the man, saying, of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it." Were it to stop there, it would be almost identical with the King James, but it goes on, "Nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee." God gave agency to man—the right to choose for himself, "for it is given unto thee." "But remember" [by way of admonition] "that I forbid it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

Here is a revelation of the divine mind relative to the way that man should function. God revealed the principles of life that would guide man insofar as his eternal life was concerned in the development of it; and then he has added to that from time to time the admonitions and the instruction relative to the daily life that man shall live here upon the earth.

God even gave to Satan his agency—the right to contend against Him, the right to try to conquer the world. We find recorded in Genesis 3:4: “Wherefore, because that Satan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him; and also that I should give unto him mine own power; by the power of mine Only Begotten I caused that he should be cast down, and he became Satan.” God didn’t destroy him. “I gave unto them their knowledge, in the day I created them; and in the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency.”

Our progress both in the eternal realm and in the attainment of the practical earthly goals is determined by the manner in which we exercise the right of agency. The laws have been clearly defined. Any person who wishes to read them can do so. He can turn to Section 101 where the statement of the ownership of God and the responsibility of man is made—that God is owner; that man is steward; that every man has the responsibility of caring for his fellow men and of developing a new way of life that will give to every man the opportunity to exercise his agency.

These divine laws are available for our consideration. Every man is a steward, but the acceptance of that stewardship responsibility is not for me to decide for the other man; the acceptance of that stewardship responsibility is for that man to decide for himself, as it is my responsibility to decide for myself. And so every steward has the responsibility of accepting stewardship or of failing to accept it.

IT ISN’T TOO IMPORTANT to me personally, whether people file their financial statements or not. The law says that every man shall render an accounting. The important thing is that which happens in the mind and soul of a man when he looks about him, inventories his resources, and in that inventory turns his face toward God and says: “God, you are the owner; I am the steward.” That is the important thing. Whether the individual does that or not is for him to decide.

There have been some in the church who have taken the position that unless a man pays tithing he is not eligible for membership in the church. Whenever it becomes compulsory that people pay tithing, we no longer have the right of the exercise of agency. So far as I am concerned, I will never be a party to any legislation within our church which would make it compulsory as a basis of membership for a man to pay tithing.

The law is specific. The application of the law insofar as the individual is concerned must in the final analysis be within the individual himself, for God is concerned about what happens in the heart and soul of the individual. He pointed out that there is a relationship between the attainment of the objective Zion and the payment of tithing; but unless a man can see clearly the relationship between the payment of tithing and the attainment of a more perfect world, he would not understand the divine meaning. God seeks to penetrate the mind that there might come understanding of the divine purpose; when tithing is paid, it should be the voluntary act of the individual because he understands clearly those divine processes which look toward the building of a new and better world. Tithing without that sort of understanding back of it is but money and of little worth.

THE BUILDING of the kingdom has been set for us as the objective of a people believing in God, but whether or not the individual chooses to build the kingdom, whether or not he chooses to participate in that sort of endeavor must be left to him. Just so surely as man shall enjoy the blessings which compliance with the law brings, both here and in eternity, so will the lack of compliance bring unhappiness, both here and hereafter. I think the law states that rather clearly.

Through the proper exercise of the God-given right of agency, man has the potential power to become a son of God. He must, first of all, choose so to become; as he does so, he becomes joint heir with Jesus Christ. This is hard for me to understand. I can’t see how God could be so generous to man—that he would give his Son to us. When Christ came down and lived with men, God gave him the right of agency also, and he exercised that right, I think, in a most dramatic yet quiet way. When Satan showed Him the wonders of the world and said, “If you will follow me you can have power over men” Jesus exercised his right of agency, turned away from all that had been pictured to him, and set his face toward the cross. Upon that cross, he lifted his face to God and said, “Not my will, but thy will be done.” It is difficult for mortal man to comprehend God in the fullest sense and appreciate the significance of the promise to become his son and joint heirs with Jesus Christ.

The God-given agency which is ours determines the extent to which we develop character. It determines the extent to which we mold our own lives into careers of service to suffering humanity. I am thankful for the fact that God gave us the right of agency. In these days when men would impose their will upon other men; when those in places of responsibility say that other individuals do not have the right to think or to act, it is well for us to keep in mind that God gave to us the right of individual choice. The limitations that circumscribe us are the limitations which we impose upon ourselves in the very nature and evolution of civil law and, hav-

(Continued on page 14.)

Festivals and Traditions of Easter

The Movable Feasts

ALONG WITH EASTER, we have what are called the movable feasts of Eastertide.

Shrove Tuesday originated in Italy, and many of its ancient usages continue to exist in Latin countries. It is still celebrated in many parts of England as "Pancake Day." People confess their sins, are shriven, and after the ringing of a bell known as the pancake bell, merry-making begins. They engage in friendly rivalry, tossing pancakes in a pan, and eating as many as possible.

In America, the pre-Lenten carnival takes the form of a Mardi Gras festival adapted from those of Rome and France. In New Orleans, the Mardi Gras has been observed since 1858. There is a magnificent pageant procession with floats, costumed marchers, mummery, a king with ceremonies to honor him and his retinue, throngs of spectators, a grand ball, and many other features continuing through all of Shrovetide. Celebrations are held with some regularity in Shreveport, Louisiana; Pensacola, Florida; Mobile, Alabama, and the province of Quebec, Canada.

Lent is a fast of forty days, not including Sundays, beginning with Ash Wednesday and ending with the Saturday preceding Easter. The word "Lent" is probably derived from the Anglo-Saxon Lencten, meaning spring. Lent always occurs in the spring season of the year.

The first day of Lent is called Ash Wednesday, and is so named from the ceremony of putting ashes on the head as a sign of penitence and as a reminder that man is dust. The ashes are obtained by burning palm branches that have been consecrated on Palm Sunday of the year previous. This custom was probably introduced by Gregory the Great.

MOTHERING SUNDAY is the name given in England to mid-Lent, so called from the old custom of the faithful attending the church (in which they were baptized and brought up) on mid-Lent Sunday and offering gifts on the altar. It was also expected of youths and maidens away from home, that they would return on that day and meet under their parents' roof. They often brought a present which frequently took the form of "simnel cakes."

Holy Week is the week before Easter, beginning with Palm Sunday. It commemorates the suffering and death of Christ and is the great week of the Christian year.

Palm Sunday celebrates Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem and the strewing of palm branches in the way of the multitude.

Maundy Thursday commemorates the washing of the feet of the twelve apostles by Christ, the agony of Christ in Gethsemane, the betrayal and the arrest of Christ.

Good Friday, the sixth day of Holy Week, commemorates the crucifixion of Christ and is the saddest day of the Christian year.

Easter Even is the whole day of twenty-four hours between Good Friday and Easter Day; it is devoted to the contemplation of Christ under the power of death.

Easter Day is the festival of Christ's resurrection—the most joyous day of the Christian year and the foremost in dignity. Easter has this pre-eminence not only because all the other festivals are derived from and regulated by it, but it commemorates the great historical fact and fundamental truth upon which the whole structure of Christian religion rests.

Whitsunday commemorates the descent of the Holy Spirit on the infant church at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, which fell on the fiftieth day after the resurrection of

By WINIFRED MILNER

Christ. Whitsunday is intimately associated with Jewish Pentecost, not only chronologically but historically, through events recorded in Acts 2, but also in its inner significance as being a feast of thanksgiving for the first fruits of the spirit. The day seems to have been observed from the very beginning, having been engrafted on the day of Pentecost.

These are not all the movable feasts—there are others which would make interesting historical reading.

The Cross

IN THE TIME OF Constantine, the cross was publicly adopted as Christianity's sign. Today there are hundreds of types of crosses, each characteristic of a people's culture. On no single object has more artistry been lavished; endless variations have been wrought—on the Roman cross, the Byzantine, the crusader crosses, the Russian, the Greek, and those of knighthood. Nations display it in their flags. It has influenced architecture; most of the great cathedrals of Europe have cruciform ground plans, as do many churches built today. War has taken it for badges of valor; poets and writers have written and sung about it. Humanity has named it the sign of mercy. What had been a sign of guilt and shame became glorified—the symbol of death transmuted by faith into an emblem of Christian living.

The Holy Shroud

THE CITY OF Turin, Italy, claims to have the Holy Shroud in which Jesus was wrapped when he was laid in the tomb. The possessors of the shroud make the amazing claim that the image of Christ is imprinted in the cloth, which makes it a lasting memorial of Christ's crucifixion and resurrection.

The shroud is fourteen feet long and three and one-half feet wide. Christ had been laid in the tomb on one half of the sheet, and the other half was drawn over his head and down to his feet. Vapors and bloodstains from the body imprinted the image.

A report made by the French Academy of Science has this to say about the purported claim: "A human corpse, under the conditions described in the Gospels could produce an image like that on the shroud. The vapors that formed the shroud stains were caused by the fermentation of urea—a substance profuse in sweat caused by fever and pain. These vapors acted on the mixture of myrrh and aloes, about a hundred-pound weight, placed within the shroud, according to Jewish custom, and this caused the brown stains."

The image imprint was not discovered until the year 1898 when a young photographer named Pia asked permission to photograph the shroud for a record. He took the picture, and when he lifted the dark glass of his negative out of the developing bath he was startled to see a photographic likeness of the image of Christ.

The shroud photo reveals a mass of welts, wounds and bruises, five hundred by actual count. It shows, too, that the nails were not driven through the palms of the hands but through the wrists where the bone structure would support the hanging weight of the body. There is an imprint of the sole of one foot on the shroud cloth, indicating that the right foot of Christ was placed over the left foot, and one nail driven through both. The spear thrust in the side is visible, the bruised nose where Christ was struck by a servant of the high priests, wounds from the crown of thorns, and shoulder wounds where the weighted cross pushed down are among the many injuries plainly visible on the cloth.

The Holy Coat of Treves

THE ANCIENT CITY of Treves on the Moselle is remarkable for possessing among its cathedral treasures the coat reputed to have been worn by Christ at his death.

The coat was the gift of the famed Empress Helena, mother of Constantine the Great. In her day, Treves was the capitol of Belgic Gaul and the residence of the later Roman emperors. It is recorded that she converted her palace into the cathedral and endowed it with this treasure—the seamless coat of the Saviour. That it was a treasure to the cathedral and the city is apparent from the records of great pilgrimages performed at intervals during the middle ages, when this coat was exhibited. Pilgrims offered money to the shrine, and the town was enriched by their general expenditure. Unlike other famed relics, the coat was exhibited sparingly. The church generally displayed its relics at intervals of a few years, but the holy coat was seen only once in a century, and then put away by the chief authorities of the cathedral.

In 1841, Murray's Hand Book for Travelers states that the coat had been walled up in the cathedral by priests' attendants, but in 1844 the archbishop, Arnoldi, announced a centennial jubilee at which the holy coat was exhibited. It produced a great effect, and Treves exhibited such scenes as would appear to belong to the fourteenth, rather than the nineteenth century.

Pilgrims came from all quarters, many in large bands preceded by banners and marshaled by their village priests. It was impossible to lodge the great mass of these footsore travelers and they slept on inn stairs and on the streets with their wallets for their pillows. By the first dawn, they took up their post at the cathedral doors; and long before these were opened, a line of many hundreds was added. Sometimes the line was more than a mile in length, and it required nearly three hours to reach the high altar where the coat was placed. The heat, dust, and fatigue, were too much for many who fainted by the way, yet hour after hour a dense throng passed around the interior of the cathedral, made their oblation, and retired.

The coat is a loose garment with wide sleeves, very simple in form, of coarse material, entirely without seam or decoration. It measures from the extremity of each sleeve five feet five inches. The length from collar to the lowermost edge is five feet two inches. In parts it is tender or threadbare, and some few stains upon it are reputed to be those of Christ's blood.

Easter Monologue

*Time: Many years after the resurrection
Thomas tells of seeing the Lord.*

Yes Andrew tried to tell me good old Andrew but I just couldn't believe. Then Phillip, Peter, John and the others and finally Mary Magdalene. Truly her face was divine as she spoke his words, "Touch me not, for I have not yet ascended to my Father in heaven." She, too, went away disappointed, saddened!

After eight long days, again his disciples assembled in that upper room. This time there were eleven of us. We made the door sure. I myself saw that it was properly bolted. Then, without a sound, he stood before us crying, "Peace be unto you." I arose to my feet, and at once the Master spoke, "Thomas." I answered, "yea," and he said, "Thomas, reach forth thy finger and behold my hands." Why it was as if he had looked into my doubting mind, into my very soul. "Reach hither thy hand," he smiled as he parted his robe, "and thrust thy hand into my side." I did as the Master bade, and then I fell worshipping at his feet. "Thomas," he spoke kindly, "be not faithless but believing."

"My Lord and my God" I cried those words as if begging his forgiveness.

Then the Master spoke gently on. "Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen and yet believed." I arose a new man and, lo, these many years I have testified that Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God, and that believing we may have life through his name.

CAMILLA COLLINS

Ammon, Son of Mosiah

EVERY PERSON NEEDS and finds a hero or many of them. All in us that tends upward looks to an ideal from childhood on—our fathers and mothers, our minister, our doctor, our athletic friends, our easy speakers or raconteurs. Some of you may have read Stevenson on the British Admirals or Carlyle on Heroes and Hero Worship. And books of heroes are fine books to set before old and young alike. The Book of Mormon is such a book.

Anyone talking on the Book of Mormon could choose one of its many unique aspects—its archaeology, its geography (so thrillingly checked by the recent voyage of a Peruvian balsa, the “Kon-Tiki” from Peru to Polynesia), its theology, its literature, or its heroes, for it has all these. But let us now consider its heroes.

What is a hero? He is an exalted man, whether exalted in suffering or in powers of mind or body, or in ambition or courage or genius or insight. Not only is he exalted, but he uses his superiority to noble ends. He is an Achilles no longer at ease or sulking. He is not selfish or contemptible, nor does he act for immediate advantages only. He sees farther, and he can go farther towards his objectives. Doesn't Latter Day Saintism need heroes? Never more! How many are there here? We may find out before we die.

Now in this parade of noble men the Book of Mormon leads past our reviewing stand, whom shall we select for a brief discussion? I am biased toward the daring brother of Jared, Jacob the eloquent teacher and theologian, the undoubtable missionary Alma, Samuel—the Stephen of his day, and Mormon, the great general. But perhaps the most useful figure I could choose,

An address given at a Young Peoples' Convention in Chatham, Ontario.

By Dr. E. V. Shute

because his traits resemble so closely those we need, is Ammon, son of Mosiah.

AMMON'S STORY is given in the Books of Mosiah and Alma, and I do not intend to summarize it here. Perhaps I can point out certain lessons in that biography, however, for Ammon was a real hero. Read about him in Mosiah 11 and in Alma 12, et seq. He was the eldest son of the king. Whatever education could provide or example could stimulate, he was offered. He was prepared best, like the great Frenchman, Albert Schweitzer of Senegal, or Moses of Egypt. What value has preparedness? It can be mobilized quickly in the face of need—not for help sometime but help now. It provides versatility, for almost anyone aimed at a specific goal tends to narrow his front in order to break through faster. But the man prepared for everything can turn his thrust to encounter resistance from any quarter. So many young Saints seem to feel that since a call to priesthood is uncertain, why prepare for it? But how can preparation for such a potential role be wasted? Is any young man the worse for mastering his language or a foreign language or acquiring skill in presenting his views or developing a useful platform technique or forcing his personality into winning and acceptable molds or for acquiring a specialized and minute knowledge of his Bible and cognate books and the masterpieces of literature? To ask that question brings the answer. Whether it be business or law or medicine or banking which eventually claims him, that answer must be the same. At the same time, preparedness implies a specialism oriented by the best foresight one is capable of. Ammon had all these aspects of education in his quiver, as the event showed. He had the broad basis, the readiness, the versatility, and the special approach. Let us be able to say, “Here am I: send me,” no matter when or where the call comes.

Ammon misused his opportunities, but was eventually converted. Then he and his brothers recanted publicly and went out to preach everywhere, undoing their old wrongs. In what a lovely way the great book tells what they did! “They did publish peace; they did publish good tidings of good, and they did declare unto the people that the Lord reigneth.” He preached the “gospel”—an Anglo-Saxon derivative coming from “God spil,” the good story or good news, and also the source of our phrase “good spell.” The gospel news throws a good spell on its attentive listeners.

BRAVE MEN ADMIT mistakes, can be convinced of a better way, and will then translate the new mind into action. I'm weary of passive believers—those who cannot be distinguished in a crowd, who do what others do for no reason than that, who are easily led to smoke or drink or commit adultery because others do, who are a drag on our wheels, who give little, do less, and then complain of “the church's failure”! Remember the contemptuous condemnation of Jesus for these: “Because ye are lukewarm, I will spew ye out of my mouth.” In a vinous country, it was a token of friendliness to accept a drink, and the height of insult to accept it only to spit it out at the host. At least Ammon was not of that company.

He went among the soviet of his time—the most savage and fanatical haters, as did our old Canadian Jesuit martyrs—though only with his father's permission did he forsake the kingdom of this world. Everything was done in order and with respect to proper authority. He was one of that small group of men who can see no giants on the other side. How I admire the Caleb type! Courage is almost our greatest need as Saints—unless it is perspective. But we need persistent, not momentary, bravery. When we hear our weaker brethren say timidly that we “can't afford” missionaries, church expenses, or proper church sites, remember we can't afford anything less. The penalties of our neglect and myopia are too heavy.

CHAPTER 12, verse two, of our lesson in Alma gives us much food for thought. Ammon had informed power. Jesus and Paul self-communed and sought God privately before they embarked on their missionary tours. Information should precede teaching. Why should God empower ignorant sloth? Such searching for truth takes time—all our lives, in fact. So many of my patients come to me with the problem of lazy minds—time on their hands, money in their pockets, but empty brains and hearts. The church can do without lazy minds—those who are listeners only, hearers not doers, those who are afraid of innovations, the mere newspaper readers. In our congregations, too, we have those with “itching ears” who want to hear and rehear “first principles” and never anything more difficult and nearer God. “Arise and shine.” What is your candle power?

Ammon was persistent. He taught fourteen years in enforced exile. He had a big job and met it with a big sacrifice. It takes time to be holy and do holy things. But what spirit he and his brothers brought to their duties! As verse eleven says touchingly of the brethren when they parted—“trusting in the Lord, that they should meet again at the close of their harvest.”

This king's son began his missionary career as a servant shepherd! No task was small to him if it served God's ends. How small the best of us are and how minute our ablest performances! Too many of us want to be apostles at once, and are apt to scorn the office of deacon or teacher.

Ammon could fight when forced to it. With his sling, he held the wells for his flocks (verse 31) and killed and wounded the bandits who opposed him. The Lord expects us to help ourselves and to be prepared for combat. He, too, knows that his is no easy service. (Read Doctrine and Covenants 58:6 in this connection.)

Ammon was offered everything a king had—and asked only for a chance to preach to him. What a sense of values! We live in a time of dissolving values—money, buildings, bridges, fleets, boundaries, truths long-treasured. Many beliefs of our fathers in our day dwindle or vanish. What stands? Only the eternal and great and simple things—the things of God. Zion may be inhabited largely by those who flee there empty-handed. Shall we be empty-headed as well?

His sincerity appears in verse eighty-nine of our story. What is your word worth?

Almost the last mention of him is as high priest of the Land of Ammon—the peaceable people in the land of Jershon, surrounded and protected by a ring of Nephites. He made just one last missionary journey into the land of the dissenting Zoramites, for he did not grow weary of well-doing.

Now this is not meant to be just another study of a good, bold, and faithful servant of God. It is nothing if not an exhortation to you in your day and place to rise and follow in such footsteps. Enthusiasm may often go out of date in our periodically disillusioned world—but youth is rarely and then only briefly disillusioned. It can still be stirred by heroes. Therefore youth can accomplish great things, for the citadels of evil fall only to the brave and unwearied.

Remember Alan Housman's great poem, “The Sage to the Young Man”?

Others, or ever thou,
To scale those heights were sworn,
And some achieved, but now
They never see the morn.

O youth that wilt attain,
On, for thine hour is short.
It may be thou shalt gain
The hell-defended fort.

Radiant Witnesses

We do not please God more by eating bitter aloes than by eating honey. A cloudy, rainy day is not more heavenly than a day of sunshine. A funeral march is not so much like the music of angels as the songs of birds on a May morning. There is no more religion in the gaunt, naked forest in winter than in the laughing blossoms of the spring and the rich ripe fruits of autumn. It was not the pleasant things in the world that came from the devil and the dreary things from God! It was “sin brought death into the world and all our woe.” As the sin vanishes, the woe will vanish, too. God himself dwells in the light of joy and purity. Instead of becoming more like him as we become miserable and all the glory of life is extinguished, we grow more god-like as our blessedness becomes complete. The great Christian graces are radiant with happiness. Faith, hope, charity—there is no sadness in these. If penitence makes the heart sad, it belongs to the sinner, not the saint. As we become more saintly, we have less sin to sorrow over.—
R. W. Dale, D. D.

Napoleon once remarked (and he certainly knew what he was talking about): “The only conquests which are permanent, and leave no regrets, are our conquests over ourselves.”

What Latter Day Saints Believe

IN COMMON WITH ALL of the protestant world and with many of the best Catholic historians as well, Latter Day Saints believe that the church founded by Christ and further established by his apostles did not long remain as he had expected and commanded it to be. To put it quite plainly, and we hope inoffensively, the church went into apostasy. A great many men both within and without the church recognized the change and tried to do something about it. Councils of the church met at more or less regular intervals to deal with new heresies that sprang up and to revise creeds and catechisms. A few great and far-seeing men within the church saw the need for reform in certain fields but were usually forced to break away from the church when they were unsuccessful in pressing their reforms within the church.

Apostasy is not a new thing nor an unusual thing. In fact, it is almost always present in some degree or some form. Ancient Israel was constantly going into apostasy by reverting to idol worship, and most of the prophetic literature of the Old Testament is by way of warning and rebuke for those apostasies. There was apostasy in the New Testament church in the time of the apostles—so much so that most of them expressly and explicitly warned the church against false doctrines and false teachers. There was a great apostasy which made necessary the Reformation, but even that was not the end; reformers have been arising ever since to reform the reformed and to branch off into new sects that label all others apostate.

CHRIST AND THE APOSTLES warned the people against apostasy which would enter and work insidiously within the church. Jesus indicated as much by his parable of the wheat and tares sown in the same field. Peter said in his second epistle (2: 1-3) that false teachers should bring damnable heresies into the church, even denying the Lord that brought them and making merchandise of the people. Jude thought it important to warn the people to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." Paul's writings are full of warnings of apostasy. To the elders at Ephesus, he said (Acts 20: 29, 30): "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." In his second letter to Timothy, he warned of perilous times to come and of a time when the church would not endure sound doctrine, but be turned unto fables (II Timothy 3: 1, also 4: 3, 4). To the Galatians he wrote (Galatians 1: 6), "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ, unto another gospel," and continued with a curse against any who should preach any other gospel than the one he had brought. First Timothy 1: 19, 20 mentions two men specifically who were preaching heresy. Second Timothy 2: 18, 19 tells of certain men who already in Paul's day were denying the resurrection of Christ. If apostasy were already so well under way in the days of the apostles, certainly we do not need to be surprised to find it working its iniquity still more openly and violently after they were gone.

HOW DOES APOSTASY begin? How can we distinguish apostasy and legitimate change or progress or improvement? That should not be too difficult to do, at least from a distance. If the new belief or new method or new ordinance or sacrament or ritual increases spiritual power—if it brings with it added light and truth, more freedom for men, a more abundant life and greater spiritual and temporal blessings from God, certainly it is not apostasy. But if the change darkens men's minds, deprives them of their liberty and their dignity as human souls, and results in the elimination of many of the blessings which the old way brought, we had better stick to the tried and proved way. Any housewife would be silly to change a cake recipe which had given satisfaction for generations just so she could use a new recipe which made the cake fall flat every time. When we abide by laws—whether they be chemical or physical or electrical or spiritual, results will follow. That is the promise of a dependable and unchanging God with us. But if we neglect or violate those laws, God is not bound to give us the result for which we are seeking.

If you want a brief scripture lesson on the sequence of apostasy, turn to the twenty-fourth chapter of Isaiah and read the fifth verse: "The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant." First, through carelessness or willfulness, men break God's law. Then, attempting to excuse themselves, they say that the law was wrong in the first place and should be changed. Then they change the ordinance. And by such change, they break the covenant which God has made with them to produce results if his law is followed. In those three simple steps is the process of apostasy completed—transgressing the law, changing the ordinances, and breaking the covenant.

WHAT WAS LOST in the apostasy? We have listed seven major

About the Apostasy

BY EVAN A. FRY

things. There may be more. These seven are serious enough to demand your consideration.

First, simplicity and purity of doctrine were lost in the apostasy. In addition to men within the church who arose to deny the divinity of Christ and his resurrection, there were brought into the church in the days of its political acceptance, new members from many heathen religions. Many of these sects managed to infiltrate some of their doctrines and theories into the Christian Church. When the Christian Church became the state church and its popularity increased, people were converted so rapidly (often at the point of the sword) that there was no time or opportunity for assimilation of indoctrination. Pagan beliefs, doctrines, forms, ceremonies were accepted into the Christian Church in order to keep the new converts happy and contented until the original simplicity and purity of Christ's teachings were lost in a fog of speculation. Church council after church council was called to try to settle the issues presented by these happenings but never succeeded in coming to a final solution.

The second thing which Latter Day Saints believe was lost in the apostasy was simplicity and perfection in church organization. In the very early church, men were called of God through one already having authority, as was Aaron (Hebrews 5:4). There was a simple, functional organization, operating without glory or pre-eminence or ostentatious display of power. That organization included apostles, prophets, teachers, bishops, elders, priests, deacons, pastors—who were set in the church to remain there until we all come to the fullness of the measure of the stature of Christ. But the church forgot this simplicity and perfection. Its members began to claim power to rule worldly kingdoms. Church offices were filled by political expediency, or even openly bought and sold. Church officials began to ape the manners, the arrogance, the ostentatious dress of royalty, and to call church offices after the terms of a feudal aristocracy. Priestcraft took the place of priesthood, and oppression and greed took the place of humble and unstinting service.

THE THIRD THING we believe was lost in the apostasy was humility. Unrepentant sinners are rebellious—not humble. They are cocksure and opinionated and dictatorial, rather than open minded. When the early Christian Church became all-powerful, beginning with the conversion of Constantine, she began to be proud and opinionated. She demanded the right to regulate the thinking, the teaching, the reading, and the government of the people. The persecuted became the persecutor, and the power of the state and the edge of the sword were oftentimes invoked to force conversion and suppress heresy. The church in many instances demanded immunity from civil law for its clergy. At the time of the Reformation, various authorities have estimated that the church owned from a fifth to a third of all the land in Europe and held it tax free. That meant the people who owned the remainder paid all the expenses of government and their tithe to the church in addition. With the coming of political power and financial opulence, humility disappeared from the church.

The fourth thing which Latter Day Saints believe was lost in the apostasy was simplicity and authenticity of ordinances and sacraments in the church. A simple memorial meal became entangled with the doctrine of transubstantiation. Baptism by immersion—that beautiful symbol of death to sin, burial of the old man, and a resurrection in the likeness of Christ to newness of life, was changed to sprinkling for the convenience of the nobility who didn't want to get wet, or to expedite the baptism of the multitude converted by force or political expediency. The simple ordinance of taking up children in the arms of the minister and blessing them as Christ did was changed into infant baptism to save those innocents from the fires of hell. The anointing with oil and laying on of hands of the elders which James commanded in the church as a means of raising up the sick was relegated to the use of those about to die. Ordination—once a simple setting apart by the laying on of hands became a matter of crowning and enthronement.

The fifth thing lost in the apostasy was morality or righteousness—both personal and corporate. There was an utter disregard for personal rights and liberties and dignities. Sin was something which could be made right with the church, rather than with God and the one sinned against. If one were foresighted enough, he could make his peace with the church before the sin as well as after. Several church edicts against concubinage among the clergy went almost unheeded. Anselm is particularly noteworthy for his efforts in this direction in England during the eleventh century. The use of penances, alms, prayers, and indulgences in expiation for sin grew into the church as real spirituality and morality were more and more crowded out of it.

ANOTHER THING WAS lost in the apostasy. This is the sixth in our list. Because the church had transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, and broken the everlasting covenant, the signs no longer followed the believer. There was

Counsel to the Ministry

A message given at a gathering of priesthood members in Rock Island, Illinois, on December 14, 1947. Prepared for publication at the request of Apostle Arthur A. Oakman.

Brethren of the Ministry:

YOU WILL COME to a better appreciation and concept of the purpose of priesthood when you read sections nine, eleven, forty-six, 120, and 122 of the Doctrine and Covenants. Your mind will open to the glory, the power, and the excellency of ministry. You will know the part you have to perform and its relationship to the sum total.

This institute has been characterized by the fine spirit of fellowship. Again, in this Communion service composed entirely of men of the priesthood, there is in evidence the "tie that binds." That this is pleasing to the Heavenly Father can be discerned by the presence of divine fellowship, light, and inspiration. The spirit of inspiration quickens your intelligence, enabling you to see clearly the purpose and work of your particular calling.

By your ordination, there is opened to you a door to perform a special service, which calls forth the devotion and consecration of talents heretofore undiscerned. You are called into a service and ministry—a fellowship with Christ Jesus, the Lord. The purpose of this ministry is laid deep in the very nature of God, and a successful ministry by his servants can only be maintained and carried forward on that basis.

Therefore, remember to cultivate the Christian graces that qualify you for this special service. Seek to live so that the gifts entrusted to each of you may bring honor and glory to God, and the purpose for which they are given be realized. Your Heavenly Father does not repent that you are endowed with gifts and callings; nor are these gifts given for personal honor and exaltation, but rather that God may be glorified and exalted through the spiritual growth and development of his people. In this shall be manifest the excellency of revelation, and through this revelation of God as seen in the lives of his people there shall come to you the confirmation of the divinity of your calling.

By WESLEY W. RICHARDS

Strive to appreciate more and more your responsibilities, as well as to discipline yourselves in relationship with those of your brethren who are called to give expression to their gifts and talents for the work involved in the ministry of service.

SEK NOT TO PERFORM ministry where you have not been called. This can only result in vexation of spirit to you and confusion among the Saints. In the men of the priesthood, the Saints look for examples and leadership; they accept the men of the ministry as such. It is wisdom that each man should give heed to the counsel given by an apostle of old to one of the ministry: "Be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity."

As you continue in humility, working together, take counsel of each other; you will find the way opening to the area and field of ministry wherein you can best serve and find in that service the joy of ministry well-performed. You will be directed to the work you are given to perform.

Continue to walk toward the light. As the artist readjusts his position constantly lest the shadow of his person mar the work on the canvas, so is one of the ministry required to do. Let not the shadows of your own personality mar the effectiveness of your service. "Face the light and let the shadows fall behind." Then "your counsel will be made effectual by your example." Constant readjustments are made necessary, both by the growth of the work and the number of men coming to the ministry.

Your calling is as shepherds to "feed the flock"—to give spiritual food that generates strength, vitality, hope, and conviction. You are to be with and strengthen the Saints against all forces that disturb their faith. Do not dissipate your energy in channels not commensurate with your calling. You are not called to spread doubt or confusion in the minds of the Saints nor give them the food that causes hunger and weakness of faith. Therefore, let your voice be heard among the Saints bringing courage and comfort and sustaining power.

The field is white indeed and ready to harvest. The opportunity for service is great. Everywhere you can find demands for ministry. The Lord has set before each of you an open door—a door that will open wide to an ever-enlarging ministry. Therefore, organize your life. Discipline yourself for the demands of the hour. Enter and occupy and find rest to your soul.

Pre-eminence

By Pliny A. Wiley

There is a faith, a faith sublime,
Of Bethlehem and Galilee,
Outlasting all the storms of time
And sorrows of Gethsemane.

There is a hope, a hope supreme,
Transcending Calvary and the tomb.

It sees the glory and the gleam
Of Resurrection lilies' bloom.

There is a love, a love divine,
Surpassing every love of earth.
The cross of Christ is still its sign
And symbol since our Saviour's birth.

There is a name, a matchless
name,
A name all other names above.
Our Lord Christ Jesus we proclaim,
In all his faith and hope and love.

What Price ZION?

By Audentia Anderson

MY LIFE has been marked with few outstanding experiences that could be termed supernatural or beyond the range of simple explanation. However, there have been a few, and, of these, two were connected with the work of the women's department. From them, I caught a vision of the importance of women in the effort to establish Zion—that divine commission which sets our church apart from all others.

It was on a night during General Conference, some twenty-five or thirty years ago, as I lay awake, contemplating the work of the department, my mind was penetrated by such a clear understanding of its possibilities that I was thrilled from head to foot. For a half hour, I was bathed in that marvelous spirit, while vision after vision of the various avenues of service were unfolded to me. I saw how the training of children must begin in babyhood, indeed even before birth—which meant our young women should be educated not only for motherhood as pertains to the physical care of children but also in their spiritual development. I saw how, to become good mothers, they should themselves be well taught and trained, and this meant courses of study for parents of adolescents and younger girls. I saw how much depended upon good health, which meant studies in nutrition, home economics, intelligent homemaking and the careful use of income. The avenues of work waiting to be done by our women seemed endless, and I was all eager to see these goals successfully reached.

At that time I was not an officer in the women's department, except that for years I edited the columns in the Herald devoted to women's activities. While I did not retain in memory all that was shown me in that vision, there was enough (accompanied always by an echo of the thrilling spirit experienced at the time) to cause me to accept the burden of superintending the Department of Women when, a few days later, I was requested by President Frederick M. Smith to do so. In the years which followed, some of the things I had seen that night materialized. Qualified women wrote articles and study courses on child care, home management, foods and nutrition, social purity, friendly visiting, budgeting and economics, and health. Women all over the church were aroused to the dignity of their position and its relationship to the cause of Zion, and we felt a definite impetus was given in that direction.

AS I HAVE SAID, it was impossible for me to retain the fullness of the vision I had that night of the work of women. For half an hour, I thrilled to the ministry of the Spirit and its wonderful outpourings of enlightenment. Nor was it possible for me in the days of effort which followed to set in operation one tenth of the possibilities which were then shown to me, but I am grateful that out of the beginnings that were made, there has developed the vital and useful organization which today is carrying on its inspirational ministry among the women of our Zionminded church. The God of life and love gives freely of his help when needed, and the humblest of us can be assured of direction and wisdom if we but listen and obey.

However, the price of Zion is not trivial. It is no easy matter to overcome the weaknesses of our own nature nor is it a light thing to divest ourselves of all self-interest and to truly "walk in the steps of the Saviour." We get so concerned with material things, with comfort of body and mind, that we do not go out to find the ones who need us and the help we could offer. We fail to drive out the unlovely spirits of envy, or pride, or faultfinding. We forget to recount often enough the "fruits of the spirit" as enumerated by one of old. And by just so much each time, we delay the coming of the kingdom. We push Zion into the background or shrug it off with the thought that "when somebody makes it go, then we'll see what we can do." It is going to take the aroused and active interest of every church member in every Latter Day Saint home to purify his or her own little corner of that kingdom, beginning at the innermost core. Can we go through a rigid questionnaire of our own selves, our own secret desires, our pet faults, and frailties, our grievances, and bitterness? Can we search, with utter honesty, and find that our hearts are filled only with love and its attributes—quick forgiveness, tender benevolences, trust and confidence in fellow men?

WHAT PRICE ZION? Indeed, a desirable thing is worth the price it costs; and if, in our self-examination, we find that we have evaluated Zion too cheaply, let us shake ourselves awake to the truth that it can never, never materialize in all its glory along such restricted lines as we may have measured out for it.

- - - a home column feature - - -

That the women of the church can, through humility, study, and faithful effort, be given a vision of their part in the plan of God for the saving of his people in the latter days is the yearning desire of the leaders of our department. I am deeply grateful for the impetus they constantly give the work by their devoted, intelligent, and energetic labors. It is good that the torches we older women tried in years past to carry aloft have fallen into the hands of vigorous, valiant women who today carry them high and shining. They ever plan for conference and reunion demonstrations that help women put into effect many inspirational efforts in their branches. They provide study material to help others qualify and work; they are available for counsel at all times, and one does well to heed their words of wisdom and strive hard to manifest in her own character the principles of our latter day gospel of good will.

BEFORE CLOSING, I SHALL attempt to describe an experience I had some years ago—one that early fired my zeal for the advancement and development of women's work. It left a very deep impression upon me, which has been with me vividly throughout the years.

It occurred during the conference in Lamoni at which Fred M. startled the assembly at its opening session by tendering his resignation as president of the church. For a week this move was debated, and feeling and consternation ran high. Bewilderment, anxiety, and uncertainty prevailed, and I personally was deeply concerned even to the point of writing him a long letter, asking why. (I did not receive an answer, however, until days after the following occurrence.)

I was lying awake one night, turning over in my mind the matter which had been a subject of earnest prayer before I retired; and again I prayed that God would guide his people. Suddenly, while still awake—or so it seemed—I found myself

Introducing the Author

Mrs. Benjamin Anderson, "Audie" to her friends, is known throughout the church as a gifted, devoted member. She has many talents; outstanding are her literary and musical abilities. She has been a constant contributor to the pages of the "Herald," and for several years edited THE HOME COLUMN for the Women's Department. The book, "Ancestry and Posterity of Joseph Smith and Emma Hale," is perhaps her outstanding literary contribution.

Musical by nature and by training, she has supported all the musical movements of the church. During her residence in Independence, she was leader of the Stone Church Choir.

The melody of the Latter Day Saint hymn, "The Old, Old Path," was composed by Sister Anderson.

For several years she was Superintendent of the General Department of Women and today is a valuable member of the General Council of Women to which she was appointed by her brother, the late President Frederick M. Smith.

By her support and encouragement, she constantly endears herself to persons who have had less experience. She is a gracious hostess, devoted wife, and the mother of a fine family; she typifies the best in womanhood.

seated with a group of other women in a close semi-circle; all of us were busy working on a garment that was spread over our laps. We were happy as we worked, but we seemed imbued with a spirit of haste.

All at once, as in the swift changes of a dream, we were no longer seated, but were upon our knees, yet still working hurriedly at the heavy embroidery with which we were embellishing the beautiful white satin robe. Now, however, instead of resting upon our laps, the garment was upon the shoulders of a man whose figure it enveloped. Wonderingly, my gaze traveled upward to see who was the wearer, and I saw that it was my brother, Fred M.!

With that discovery, a wave of spiritual light swept over me, and the meaning of the vision thrilled through me. Not only was I comforted with the assurance that when the debate before the Conference ended, Fred M. would still be president of the church, but also I sensed clearly that he represented the body of the church on earth, and that the pure white garment upon his shoulders was the robe of righteousness the church should wear before it would be worthy to receive the coming Christ. I saw clearly, too, that it was the women who were putting the finishing touches to the transcendently lovely garment; and I thrilled to the realization that the reason for our haste was that the cry had gone forth, "Behold! The bridegroom cometh!"

For Zion must increase in beauty and holiness; her borders must be enlarged; her stakes must be strengthened; yea, verily I say unto you, Zion must arise and put on her beautiful garments!

And Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom.

A large order? Truly, WHAT PRICE ZION!

Songs of the Restoration

For use in connection with Church-wide Restoration Festival Week

Tentative Song Service Outline:

Hymn, No. 408 "I Have Found the Glorious Gospel"

Story of Hymn, No. 407

Hymn, No. 407 "Hark, Ye Mortals, Hark, Be Still"—Congregation

Story of Hymn, No. 411

Hymn, No. 411 "The Morning Breaks, the Shadows Flee"—Congregation

Story of Hymn, No. 412

Hymn, No. 412 "I Saw a Mighty Angel"—Choir

Story of Hymn, No. 413

Hymn, No. 413 "When Earth in Bondage Long Had Lain"—Congregation

Story of Hymn, No. 414

Hymn, No. 414 "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning"

Other Hymns of the Restoration:

Hymn, No. 406 "Blest Angels, We Greet You With Gladness"

Hymn, No. 409 "Almighty God of Love"

Hymn, No. 410 "'Tis a Glorious Thing To Be in the Light"

Hymn, No. 415 "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet"

Hymn, No. 416 "We Limit Not the Truth of God"

Hymn, No. 417 "Ye Wandering Nations Now Give Ear"

STORY OF "HARK, YE MORTALS, HARK, BE STILL" (Hymn, No. 407.)

Oh, how I love thy law! It is my meditation all the day. These were not only the sentiments of David of old, but also the ruling power within the youthful heart of Parley P. Pratt. Being of a studious mind and having an innate love for righteousness, he persistently studied the Bible. In so doing, he was conscious of the divine leadings of the Spirit into the mysteries of the kingdom of God. As a result, he was ever searching for the restoration of the ancient gospel plan with its divine authority, the apostolic office, and for the gospel in its purity with its ordinances unchanged. For several years his search continued. Quoting from his autobiography: "At the commencement of 1830, I felt drawn out in an extraordinary manner to search the prophets, and to pray for an understanding of the same. My prayers were soon answered, even beyond my expectations; the prophecies of the holy prophets were opened to my view; I began to understand the things which were coming on the earth—the restoration of Israel, the coming of the Messiah, and the glory that should follow." With the revelation of these beautiful truths, he became deeply conscious and concerned regarding the truthfulness of the prophet's statement, "darkness covereth the earth, and gross darkness the minds of the people." Because of his convictions, he felt constrained to devote his time in enlightening his fellow men and in warning them to prepare for the coming of the Lord. "He leads us on" was ever the beckoning onward urge in the heart of Parley Pratt.

Eventually his travels, in preaching those things which he had learned, led him back to his native state of New York. While preparing to fill a preaching appointment, he stopped at the home of an "old Baptist deacon." It was at this home Parley Pratt first learned of the Book of Mormon and of Joseph Smith. With eagerness he read this "strange" book. Here in his hands was the very "record which reveals the antiquities of the 'New World' back to the remotest ages, and which unfolds the destiny of its people and the world for all time to come; that book which contains the fullness of the gospel of a crucified and risen Redeemer;—that book which reveals a lost remnant of Joseph, and which was the principal means, in the hands of God, of directing the entire course of my future life!" He bore this testimony, "As I read, the Spirit of the Lord was upon me, and I knew and comprehended that the book was true, as plainly and manifestly as a man comprehends and knows that he exists. My joy was now full, as it were, and I rejoiced sufficiently to more than pay for all the sorrows, sacrifices, and toils of my life."

He went to the Smith home at Palmyra and visited with Hyrum. On his trip home, he stopped from time to time along the roadside and while resting continued to read the Book of Mormon which Hyrum Smith had given him. As he read the beautiful narrative of the visit of Christ to this continent and other truths which had escaped the corruptions of man, he rejoiced over the discoveries therein.

He esteemed the book, or the information contained in it, more than all the riches of the world, declaring, "Yes, I verily believe that I would not at that time have exchanged the knowledge I then possessed, for the legal title to all the beautiful farms, houses, villages, and property which passed in review before me, on my journey through one of the most flourishing settlements of Western New York." We are most fortunate to have in our possession the lovely poetry which in a moment of exaltation he was able to pen and which has become a part of our hymnology.

STORY OF "THE MORNING BREAKS, THE SHADOWS FLEE"
(Hymn, No. 411.)

THIS HYMN was not inspired under any very unusual circumstances but reflects the quiet outpouring of a heart that was filled with admiration and love for the Book of Mormon and its marvelous revelations of the antiquities of the New World—a history that went "back to the remotest ages, and which unfolded the destiny of its people and the world for all time to come; that book which contains the fullness of the gospel of a crucified and risen Redeemer." With the perusal of this secular and religious history, Parley P. Pratt began vaguely to comprehend the prophecies of the holy prophets, to appreciate the things which were coming on the earth, the meaning of the restoration of Israel, and the coming of the Messiah and the glory that should follow. To his great joy he "found that Jesus Christ, in his glorified resurrected body, had appeared to the remnant of Joseph on the continent of America, soon after his resurrection and ascension into heaven; and that through his personal ministry in these countries, his gospel was revealed and written in countries and among nations entirely unknown to the Jewish apostles. Thus revealed, written, handed down, and preserved, till revealed in this age by the angels of God, it had of course escaped corruptions . . . and been preserved in purity." As he read, the Spirit of God was upon him, and he knew that the book was true as plainly and manifestly as a man comprehends and knows that he exists. He said, "This discovery greatly enlarged my heart and filled my soul with joy and gladness. I esteemed the book, or the information contained in it, more than all the riches of the world." Truly, he thought, "The angels sang with the spirit and with the understanding when they declared, 'We bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.'"

Early on a summer morning, Parley P. Pratt strolled down to Seneca Lake, a beautiful and transparent sheet of water in western New York, where he was to be baptized, and there in happy meditation and anticipation he rather absent-mindedly scribbled this lovely hymn, the words of which are so fitly chosen as to tell a long story in a few short stanzas.

STORY OF "I SAW A MIGHTY ANGEL FLY" (Hymn, No. 412.)

JOHAN THE REVELATOR tells us (Revelation 14:6, 7): "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."

The hour of his judgment is come, but the angel was bringing the gospel for the beginning of the kingdom that should fill the whole earth. In the midst of predictions of judgment, the consequences of wickedness on the earth, the preaching of the everlasting gospel is foretold—the same gospel of peace as that of which the angels sang at the Saviour's birth, when they proclaimed the message of peace and good will and joy to all people.

The hymn, "I Saw a Mighty Angel Fly," chooses this wondrous announcement as its theme. The mighty angel, as the messenger of God, bears to earth the gospel truth, free from the errors of the past, and the hymn sings of the rejoicing it brings with added cause in this age, because it means that "The great Redeemer's near." When asked concerning his coming and the end of the world, Jesus said (Matthew 24:14), "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

The cry is to all people in all parts of the world to attend, "Fear God, and worship him who made the heavens, the earth, the sea." We are counseled "to fear," but rising above the fear of calamity we may join with our late President Smith in the thought, "I fear but that I may not gain a place beside my noblest Friend." His hymn continues, "I love—but ah, the sweet refrain, 'On thee, my Saviour, I depend.'" This thought runs through all our worship and our praise. The gospel brings us to depend upon the One through whose life and death we are redeemed. And so with joy we sing, "Fear him on whom your sins are laid, Who died to make you free."

It is a matter of regret that credit cannot be given the author of this fine, old Latter Day Saint hymn. That it appears first in the 1840 European edition of the Saints' Hymnal published in England is all we can learn, but its application to the restoration of the gospel in fulfillment of prophecy is unquestioned.

These words have always been associated with the tune, "Geneva," which is one of the rare survivals of the old "canon" musical method, the parts coming in one after another with identical notes. With its glory of harmony, it is always delightful when well performed.

STORY OF "WHEN EARTH IN BONDAGE LONG HAD LAIN"

(Hymn, No. 413.)

OF THE MYRIADS of human beings who fit across the stage of life, few ever become really eminent. Comparatively few concentrate and develop their energies that the product thereof may be used for the betterment and enjoyment of mankind.

Parley P. Pratt so succeeded in developing and dedicating his many talents to the service of God that his name is indelibly linked with the history of the church. His hymns are loved and will always be sung because, as only a poet can, he has been able to put into words the feelings and sentiments of an army of followers. His poems have stood the test of time.

This beautiful hymn not only expresses the experiences of the composer, but also the experience of many who sing it. It has that familiar ring of the spirit of the latter day work which finds a response in the heart of a Saint and tends to awaken his first love toward the church.

From youth up Parley P. Pratt had searched the Scriptures and had become familiar with some of the requirements of a subject in God's kingdom. In his search for this organization upon earth, he was sorely tried and disappointed, for all around him there was apparently religious confusion. It is little wonder his honest heart recognized that

When earth in bondage long had lain,
And darkness o'er the nations reigned,
And all man's precepts prove in vain,
A perfect system to obtain.

Being a man of strong convictions and sensing his responsibilities for the sins of the world, intensified by a longing for truth as taught in the days of Christ, he wandered unsatisfied among the various sects and eventually became identified with the new movement as taught by Sidney Rigdon. He became a disciple of this new religion and endured many hardships, making sacrifices that he might go to the eastern states on a mission for this organization. Undoubtedly the Lord was guiding this searcher for truth as his preaching appointments were made in about the same neighborhood where Joseph Smith resided. Parley P. Pratt soon learned of the Book of Mormon, of the prophet, and of the teaching of the restored gospel. His soul was filled with rejoicing. After long years of waiting, he found this beautiful truth which outshone his fondest anticipation. Little wonder his poetic nature was touched and found expression in giving to the church this hymn of praise and thanksgiving! Note the happy ring to it. It is a beautiful story of the restored gospel, set to music that seems peculiarly in harmony. The chorus sounds like a great announcement to the world.

A voice commissioned from on high!
Hark! Hark! It is the angel's cry,
Descending from the throne of light,
His garments shining clear and white!

The Tune

The Reverend George Coles was born in Stewbley, England, January 2, 1792. He died in New York City, May 1, 1858. He was editor of the "New York Advocate" and the "Sunday School Advocate" for several years. He composed the tune "Duane Street" in 1835. This tune, associated with the words, "When Earth in Bondage Long had Lain," proclaims the restoration message with no uncertain sound.

STORY OF "THE SPIRIT OF GOD LIKE A FIRE IS BURNING"

(Hymn, No. 414.)

THE GREAT ZIONIC pattern continued in its weaving, the winter of 1836 being another high peak in its progress. The second stage of development was about to be completed—that of finishing and dedicating the Temple at Kirtland.

Work on it was being rushed with
(Continued on page 22.)

You Can Be Dishonest---

FROM THE TIME our mothers caught us buying bubble gum with the change from the grocery money, we've all had dinned at us from home, school, and church the dishonesty of lying and cheating.

I remember vividly a time when I insisted to Mother that there was no change left after paying the shoe repair man. I had spent the full dime on all-day suckers, little paraffin bottles filled with colored sugar water, and licorice ropes. My parents cautiously sweated out three or four days with me before I broke down and confessed.

But telling lies and cheating are not the only forms of dishonesty. Unfortunately, they are often the only ones legally recognized. There are other forms more dangerous and insidious. One of these is the half-truth—where you tell a person something, and what you say is true, but you leave him with the wrong impression. Maybe the world's first example was the serpent's speech to Eve in the Garden of Eden. Truly Eve and husband Adam would know right and wrong, but the serpent didn't warn them of the consequences for eating the fruit of the Tree of Life.

One of the favorite propaganda devices of the national advertisers is the half-truth. "Chemical detergents are hard on your clothes. Use pure soap," states one soap advertiser, neglecting to mention that pure soap, too, is harmful to clothing.

"Camels never hurt my throat," comments a Big Name, setting at ease the minds of many smokers. It's frequently true that the reason Camels don't hurt his throat or cut a certain athlete's wind or various other things is because the Big Name never smokes them.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF DISHONESTY is reflected by the people who live "just within the law." Like mountain goats—except for a lesser degree of integrity than the goat has—they lean over the edge of the cliff but don't quite fall over. Almost everyone remembers the story of Al Capone, on whom the law could never pin the murder penalty, but who finally got sent up for income tax evasion. An example on the positive side is our own church. We could have declared bankruptcy and left to our creditors the Auditorium and probably other property equally useless to them. But the men of the church, not knowing exactly how the tremendous debt could be paid, dealt honorably and "faced the music" for their initial mistake in borrowing. Now the debt is retired.

and Never Tell a Lie

By RUTH MIDGORDEN GOODWIN

There's a third example to mention. You can find it anywhere in the story of Jesus' life—the living "according to the law" of the type practiced by the Pharisees. You will recall the many times Jesus rebuked the famed teachers of Jerusalem for their hypocrisy in living to the letter of the law and refusing to acknowledge the spirit in which it was given.

At one time during Christ's ministry, the scribes and Pharisees accused the disciples of transgressing "the tradition of the elders" by eating bread before washing their hands. And that, by the way, was quite a ritual with the Jews, requiring running water that had not been used for any other purpose and a necessary three plunges of the hands in the water.

But Jesus caught them up on a sin of their own. By working around the problem in a smooth way—declaring something that might have been useful to his parents as a consecrated gift to God—a Pharisee could squirm out of providing for his mother and father, even though the Mosaic law stated clearly, "Honor thy father and thy mother." The Pharisees had nullified the effect of the original law. And Jesus called them to account for honoring him with their words but rejecting him in their hearts by their thoughts and actions.

"Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man," he told the multitude to illustrate the remarks about the unwashed hands, "but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth the man." In case you are in need of the same explanation Peter got, the Master answered, "Do ye not yet understand, that whatsoever entereth in at the mouth goeth into the belly, and is cast into the draught? But those things which proceed out of the mouth, come forth from the heart; and they defile the man. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies. These are things which defile a man. But to eat with unwashed hands defileth not a man."

IF YOU'RE WONDERING WHY I've taken all this printers ink and paper to explain types of dishonesty other than lying and cheating, the best answer is a quotation from F. Henry Edwards' Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants: "As the spiritual standards of the church become more and more elevated, many forms of dishonesty which now are ignored will be discountenanced by the Saints as sharp business practice."

Can any member of the family be honest and neglect his share of household responsibility, whether it's earning the living or taking his turn at dishwashing?

Whether you're in the Center Place or in a branch such as mine, you will see the dishonesty of many Saints in their business, in their church duties, and in their family life. I choose to think that most of the cases I know are ignorance of the higher law of Christ that we learn by studying and by contact with people who live it truthfully, not forgetting prayer and revelation. But I know some who find the present legal way of regarding dishonesty more profitable to themselves and are unwilling to make the sacrifice entailed in elevating their own spiritual standards.

I have not written all this just to be writing. I feel there is an urgency not to be toyed with in understanding the full meaning of the "honest in heart." Can an honest man speculate on the grain market, even though he doesn't obtain information from inside the administrative ranks? Can an honest employer reap more than a certain percentage of profit each year without robbing his employees, even though they have a living wage or better? Can an honest student in a university detect faults in his college administration or method of teaching and not try to remedy them, even though he's graduating the next semester—so why bother? Can an honest priesthood member act only when he is called upon for something? Can an honest church member believe in his heart that he "gets enough" out of the Sunday morning sermon and does not need the church school or midweek prayer service, Can any member of the family be honest and neglect his share of household responsibility, whether it's earning the living or taking his turn at dishwashing?

Don't sigh at this sermon. I'm of the guilty. But we must learn. The world is not now functioning on honesty, and we can see what is happening to it—and to us. I'm not a gloom prophet nor a war-monger, but it doesn't take more than average intelligence to see that we have to remedy our present situation. God isn't going to drop Zion in our laps, because Zion is an evolutionary process which depends on our own building speed, as co-partners with God. As young people, our minds have not yet settled into the fearful lethargy I see in so many people of middle and older age. The combination of open mind and open heart in church youth could accomplish wonders. It's up to you and me to show whether we will or not.

MAN MUST WORK

That is as certain as the return of the birds in the spring and as sure as the dawn. Then why not do it with gladness instead of grumbling? Why not look upon work as part of the universal plan instead of a curse and misfortune?

Somewhere, in this wonderful nation of ours, there has grown up a concept that a minimum amount of job effort is worth a maximum amount of pay and the theory makes a lot of people unhappy. They approach their jobs with a handicap that robs their daily toil of satisfaction, pride and pleasure. I just happen to belong to the old school that believes all knowledge is empty save when accompanied by work, and all work is empty save when there is pride. A man who plows the soil must look upon the furrow as a thing of black, shining beauty; the farmer who sows the wheat visions the bread that will feed man's hunger; the man who teaches children hears the echo of his own voice in the halls of justice, church pulpits, and avenues of commerce.

Everyone who has a job is important to earth's fulfillment. The wind does not ignore the lowly blade of grass to sing to the giant oak, and the man on the board of directors does not outrank the workman in stained clothing . . . providing the workman is happy.

And finally, if you are not happy in your work, then for goodness sake, change jobs. You are in the wrong field. Let the sweat of your brow ease the mistake . . . and seek another avenue of service.—Kathryn Metz.

New Horizons

New Courses Available

1948 Vacation and Reunion Church School Manuals

TREASURING GOD'S WORD

In accordance with the announcement in the Herald of February 14, these Manuals are now ready for mailing. They are entirely new in content—new songs, lesson stories, handcraft, and worship material. The handcraft and music as well as the lessons are in the Manuals only. The worship materials are in the Leaders' Handbook except for the kindergarten grade. Their worship materials will be found in the Kindergarten Manual.

The prices have been kept at the same figure as last year's materials:

Leaders' Handbook	$1.00
Junior High Manual75
Junior Manual75
Primary Manual50
Kindergarten Manual50

Your principal, junior pastor, and all supervisors will each need a copy of the Leaders' Handbook. The principal, supervisor, teachers, and assistant teachers will each need a copy of the Manuals. The Manuals contain a list of handcraft supplies needed in each course. The Handbook has a master list showing the amount needed for each twenty pupils.

Those wanting different materials for reunions than will be used in some of the branches may wish to order the course, Behold the Light of the World. These Manuals are also available. The prices are the same.

CHRIS B. HARTSHORN,
Editor of Church School
Literature

Songs of the Restoration

(Continued from page 19.)

all possible speed. The upper part was finished and already being used for the meetings of the various quorums, as well as housing the printing plant and the school for the elders.

One of the Twelve was superintending the painting of the lower room; the women were busy making the veil. When this work was done, the Temple would be dedicated, and March 27, 1836, was the date set for this "solemn assembly."

Business and committee meetings were in session, getting ready to care for the dedicatory services and to handle the crowds that were coming from far and near, that "all things might be done decently and in order" in the house of the Lord.

Under the leadership of the First Presidency, the detail work pertaining to the various quorums was rapidly being completed. As members of the priesthood continued to work in harmony, their meetings proved to be veritable pentecostal showers. "The visions of heaven were opened to them also. Some of them saw the face of the Saviour, and others were ministered unto by holy angels and the spirit of prophecy and revelation was poured out in a mighty power; and loud hosannas, and glory to God in the highest saluted the heavens, for we all communed with the heavenly host." Of this, Joseph Smith wrote, "Having set all the quorums in order, I returned to my house, being weary with continual anxiety and labor in putting all authorities in order, and striving to purify them for the solemn assembly, according to the commandment of the Lord."

Sunday morning came, and the usual services were held in the schoolhouse. Joseph Smith and W. W. Phelps arrived early that they might have a season of undisturbed religious meditation. This meeting proved to be a memorable one of which Joseph Smith wrote: "President Rigdon then arose and observed, that instead of preaching, the time would be occupied by the Presidency and the Twelve, in speaking each in turn, until they had all spoken. The Lord poured out His Spirit upon us, and the congregation was soon overwhelmed in tears, and some of our hearts were too full for utterance. The gift of tongues came on us also, like the rushing of the mighty wind, and my soul was filled with the glory of God." W. W. Phelps was deeply touched, and his emotions found vent in the following stanza which he scribbled on the back of an envelope:

The Spirit of God like a fire is burning;
The latter-day glory begins to come forth;
The visions and blessings of old are returning;
The angels are coming to visit the earth.

This he gave to Mr. Davis, who had been appointed chorister for the dedicatory services. Quick to sense the remarkable purity of its spiritual expression and the real spirit of adoration in the lovely poem, he taught it to the choir, and it was beautifully rendered as a special anthem at the time of dedication. Because W. W. Phelps responded to the prompting of the Spirit to write, his efforts were blessed. This poem has become one of the most stirring hymns of the church.

Wants Letters

My wife has been dead for some time, and I am alone. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints and will appreciate their writing to me.

—J. P. Weddle

1012 West Broadway
Henryetta, Oklahoma

Wants to Contact Members of Whiting Family

Mrs. May Whiting Berry, 302 South Pleasant Street, Independence, Missouri, is a granddaughter of Elisha Whiting, who was a member of the church in the early days. She is a member of the Utah Church and would be pleased to get in touch with members of the Whiting family in the Reorganized Church.

Helped By Prayers

I have been greatly helped by the prayers of the Saints and so has my fellow mate. We hope our friends will continue to remember us and pray for our complete recovery.

Arthur H. Dammon

Strong Memorial Hospital
260 Crittenden Boulevard
Rochester, New York

Note of Thanks

Elder Arthur Davenport and children thank their many friends who sent sympathy cards and letters following the death of Mrs. Davenport, who died February 4. She was seventy-seven years old. The fifty-seven years of her married life were spent at Soldier's Grove, Wisconsin.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

BULLETIN BOARD

Anniversary Institute and Banquet

The one hundred and eighteenth anniversary of the church will be celebrated by the women's department of the Southern Michigan District at the Women's Club, Lansing, Michigan, on April 6. Registration, 9 a.m.; fellowship service, 10; and classes, 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.; Lydia Wight of Chicago, former editor of church school literature, will be the instructor. A banquet, for both men and women, will be held at 6:30 in the evening ($1.75 per plate), Lydia Wight, guest of honor, Elder A. W. Sheehy, speaker. Reservations for the banquet must be made before April 1 with Mrs. Glen Foster, 732 North Washington Street, Lansing, Michigan. The billing committee is under the direction of Mrs. Everitt Berndt, 1205 Rundle Avenue, Lansing. All women of the Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio Districts are invited to participate.

NELLIE MOTTASHED,
Women's Leader.

Attention, Southeastern Los Angeles Saints

A new congregation, known as the Southeastern Los Angeles Mission, held its first morning and evening services on Sunday, March 7, in the Women's Club Building at 10022 South California in South Gate, California. The area of the mission includes Huntington Park, South Gate, Maywood, Vernon, Graham, Watts, and Bell. Members of the church having relatives or friends in this vicinity are invited to notify the mission pastor, Al Knowlton, 1219 West 105th Street, Los Angeles, or Garland E. Tickemyer, 1333 West Forty-second, Los Angeles 37, California (Telephone AX 7286). Elder Tickemyer is pastor of the sponsoring church.

Wants to Contact New York City Youth

We should like to contact and minister to all young people working, attending school, or residing in New York City. If you have children, relatives, or friends in the metropolitan area, please send their names, addresses, and other descriptive information to Charles T. Harris, 2850 Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn 29, New York.

Book Wanted

William Richard, 216 Edgar Avenue, Steubenville, Ohio, wants to secure a copy of the book, Sin and Society, by E. A. Ross.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Lillian Boggress, Route 2, Murray, Kentucky, requests prayers that she may have her health restored and be able to do her work, both at home and at church, again.

Mrs. LeRoy Ormsbee requests prayers for her aunt, Beatrice Morgan of Onaway, who is a patient in the Cheboygan, Michigan, Hospital.

WEDDINGS

Burns-Green

Ruth Irene Green and Rodney Malcolm Burns, both of Jackson, Ohio, were married on February 8 at the Reorganized Church in Limerick, Ohio. Pastor Millard F. Weese read the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Burns are making their home near Limerick.

Gaston-Browning

Mary Beth Browning, daughter of Mrs. P. Sciffer of Pittsburg, Kansas, and Clifford Earl Gaston, son of Mr. and Mrs. V. G. Gaston of Miami, Oklahoma, were married February 5 at the Reorganized Church in Miami. Elder B. F. Kyser, uncle of the groom, performed the ceremony. The young couple are making their home in Pittsburg.

Krebill-Smith

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Smith of Blue Springs,

Missouri, announce the marriage of their daughter, Genevieve Ione of Denver, Colorado, to Melvin W. Krebill, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Krebill of Loveland, Colorado. The wedding took place December 21 at the Reorganized Church in Denver, Elder Merle Howard officiating.

Russell-Andrew

June Andrew, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Andrew of Independence, Missouri, and Maurice Alexander Russell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Russell of Washburn, Maine, were married December 27 at the Stone Church in Independence. Pastor Glaude A. Smith read the double-ring ceremony. Both bride and groom are graduates of Graceland College.

They are living in Orono, Maine, where Mr. Russell is attending the University of Maine.

Weaver-Webb

Mrs. Elizabeth Webb and Elder John O. Weaver, both of Brown City, Michigan, were married February 14 at the parsonage in Melvin, Michigan, Elder H. E. C. Muir officiating.

Sloan-Deuser

Betty Jean Deuser, daughter of Mrs. Bernice Deuser, and Dale L. Sloan were married February 20 at the Central Church in Kansas City, Missouri. Pastor J. C. Stuart read the double-ring ceremony. A reception was held at the church immediately after the wedding.

Immortal Story of Easter

*Majestic, Impressive
Worship Services*

WITH

CHURCH-CRAFT BIBLE SLIDES

Plan and present this year your most glorious, inspiring Easter program. In scenes of incomparable beauty, Church-Craft Bible Slides portray, in natural color, the pathos and joy of Christ's suffering, resurrection and ascension. Here, in a complete Program Guide furnished with each set of Bible Slides, is outlined an entire worship service with text, suggested readings and hymns. Forceful and effective, Church-Craft Bible Slides will thrill and inspire both young and old with the immortal story of Easter.

The Easter Story

A complete worship service of 34 stirring scenes and 4 beautiful hymnslides. Beginning with the Crucifixion on Good Friday, the story of Easter is completely re-enacted in magical color from Easter morning through Christ's first appearances, ending with His ascension.

Easter In The Holy Land

Entirely new. 27 full color scenes photographed in natural color during Church-Craft's 1947 Palestine Expedition. An interesting series of beautiful "on location" pictures for a truly different Easter story. Included are three selected hymnslides.

Ask Your Dealer For Beautiful Descriptive Folder or write direct

Church-Craft Bible Slides and Hymnslides are sealed in 2" x 2" protective binders and may be used in any standard slide projector.

Visual Aids Department

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

Mary A. Burlington
1510½ Jules
St. Joseph, Missouri

92867
18
h

Easter worship for all the family

Six Stories from the Bible

Taken directly from the Scriptures, here are beautiful, reverently produced Bible stories in a musical setting that you will want to hear over and over again. The stories are of the two major events of the Christian year: our Saviour's birth and his Passion and Resurrection.

Authentic and approved, the stories follow the text itself, based on the new Revised Standard Version. In modern language, the careful listener will note that in this translation some phrases have been altered from the earlier King James Version. For instance, "swaddling clothes" becomes "swaddling cloths."

Easy to understand, the Scriptures come alive with a professional dramatic cast and music played by the Spire Symphonette.

SIDE 1: A Saviour is Born	SIDE 4. Gethsemane
SIDE 2: Wise Men Came	SIDE 5: The Empty Tomb
SIDE 3: Flight into Egypt	SIDE 6: Lo, I Am With You

$5.45

Album of 3 records. These records are made of Vinylite (nonbreakable) material.

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

*Christ Appears to Mary Magdalene
at the Tomb*

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

MARCH 27, 1948

NUMBER 13

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Mary

I met a woman going up a hill,
 Feet bleeding
 Where stones had torn them.
 In her eyes,
 A suffering, a sorrow borne with patience,
 And a smile sadder than weeping:
 "The road is steep," she said.

I met a woman going up a hill,
 Cloak shining
 Where mud had crusted into gold.
 In her eyes,
 A weariness, a loss of all but hope,
 And a smile sadder than weeping:
 "The way is hard," she said.

I met a woman going up a hill,
 Head lifted,
 The only light in all that darkness
 In her eyes:
 Courage, a gentleness, and faith,
 And a smile sadder than weeping.
 "The path is dark," she said.

I met a woman going up a hill,
 Feet bleeding
 Where stones had torn them.
 In her eyes,
 The condemnation and the hope of man,
 And a smile sadder than weeping:
 "Thorns, too, are sharp," she said.

JO SKELTON

AUDITORIUM NEWS

* DES MOINES

The church survey was conducted by Apostles D. T. Williams, Arthur A. Oakman, and Paul M. Hanson. Church officers are gratified with the results of the survey, and report excellent Sunday meetings.

* HOUSTON, TEXAS

Missionary Tom Worth writes in a late report: Sunday, February 29, brought to a close my three weeks' ministry in Houston, Texas. My stay there was most enjoyable and fully occupied. . . . I had the privilege of baptizing six persons there, each of whom will make a real contribution to the work—four adults and two children. Much of the credit for these six converts is due to the local priesthood, and a special word of commendation is merited by the pastor, Brother Charles W. Fischer.

* RETURNED HOME

President J. F. Garver and Bishop Walter N. Johnson arrived at headquarters on March 15, after a prolonged journey across the Pacific to Hawaii, and Australia. President Garver was immediately occupied in conferences with his fellow officers upon his return and was kept very busy. Bishop Johnson was available for a few minutes of visiting, and reports, "We were treated very well indeed, and greatly enjoyed visiting with our people, renewing old friendships, seeing the young folk who have grown up, and noting all the many changes that have occurred." Brother Johnson admits with a smile that he has gained "about fifteen pounds," and looks all the better for it, along with a healthy sun tan. These church officers were able to visit most of the branches. They flew from Sydney on the east coast, via Melbourne, to Perth in West Australia, a distance of about 2300 miles. The rate of growth in membership is comparable with that in the U. S. A. The two visitors enjoyed their stay at the Tiona reunion, and living at a young people's camp at Marysville, Victoria, about sixty miles from Melbourne.

* CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE

Presidents Israel A. Smith and F. Henry Edwards, with Bishops G. L. DeLapp and H. L. Livingston, recently visited Warrensburg, Missouri, headquarters of this stake, to consider the remodeling of the church property recently purchased there for the use of the congregation. On the return journey, they visited the church property at Holden, Missouri, and inspected the fine work of remodeling that has been carried out there. A new basement has been made, and the upper rooms have been given a fine refinish. At Pleasant Hill they visited a fine residence property that has been acquired for church use there.

Apostle C. G. Mesley transmits a report from Ward A. Hougas, stake president, that from 1944 to 1948 there has been an increase in the number of active congregations from thirteen to twenty. The average attendance at morning services in all congregations is up 500 in this period. From 1945 to 1947 there have been 228 baptisms.

* EUROPE

Apostle M. A. McConley visited the British Zone in Germany and was provided with an official car, and driver, throughout his entire stay. He reports that the first church tracts have been printed in the German language at Basle, Switzerland.

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

The Shadow of the Cross	3
Across the Desk	4

ARTICLES:

Easter Is a Promise, by Ruby Tinkham	4
Expendables, by Apostle Charles R. Hield	5
Our Stewardship, by Bishop C. A. Skinner	8
From the Cross, by Norma Anne Kirkendall	9
Witnesses for the Restoration, by Patriarch Elbert A. Smith	10
Independence Zion's Leaguers Plan Restoration Festival, by F. Carl Meste	11
From the Apostasy to the Restoration, by Evan A. Fry	12
Prayer, by Wana Black McDole	15
Glimpses of Easter History, by Winifred Mihler	16
Why the Principles? by Merle Gutbrie	19
Consider the Lily, by Alice Crossan	20
Briefs	22
Bulletin Board	22

The Shadow of the Cross

Not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect. For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God.—I Corinthians 1: 17, 18.

But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Galatians 6: 14.

AT THIS SEASON of the year, more than any other, the shadow of the Cross of Christ falls athwart the world. This annual reminder of his sacrifice for us and our redemption brings a renewed awareness of our need and of the divine love.

The Cross is the sign of Christ. It belongs to him. It is recognized by all who bend the knee to him and carry his love in their hearts. It is not the property of any one church, people, or organization. Because it was the simplest and most obvious mark or symbol a man could make, it was known and used in early times, even in prehistoric eras, by pagan peoples for a variety of meanings. That its form should also suggest the figure of a man with outstretched arms, and give the pattern for inflicting an agonizing death upon him, is a mark of the revolting character of all the cruelty of our race. But that it should also be transformed by divine grace into a symbol of redeeming love is a sign of the illimitable power of God to turn the hearts of men from the carnality of the world to the spiritual purity of heaven.

The use of the Cross as the symbol of Christ has transcended all other employments and supplanted all other significance. Nearly two thousand years of association have identified it with Christ. All other uses have lesser value. Many Christian peoples use it in their symbolism and ritual. None can claim an exclusive right to it. It belongs to all who have accepted His name.

Today the Cross of Christ falls upon the world. Men may be unaware of it or ignore it, but they walk under that shadow whenever and wherever they deal with other human beings in matters of power, government, authority, and influence. And they are judged every day by what is back of that shadow.

In their time, many shadows have fallen upon the world: of the sword of the invader, the torch of the incendiary, the raven of death, the star and crescent, the eagle, the swastika, the hammer and sickle, and many another political emblem. The Cross of Christ has outlived and outlasted many a symbol of power, from the days of the Roman eagle to the present time; and it will outlast them all.

No matter where we turn, we cannot escape the Cross. It is a part of the greatest experience in a series of great events in the life of Jesus, from the trial that looked forward to it, to the resurrection that looked back to it. The words of St. Paul place it at the center of his philosophy and his hope. And for all who live today, it is a symbol of hope, or we have no hope at all. All that man can promise us, as the end and reward of our strivings, our sufferings and sacrifices, is futility and dissolution. It is through the triumph of the Cross that God offers us eternal life.

The Cross of Christ is our cross. Jesus said to his disciples, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."—Matthew 16: 24. That cross must be Christ's cross, his work, his purpose, his kingdom.

The Cross is not an empty, unattached figure. It is the symbol of the life of Christ which, in its essential character, was a prophecy of the kingdom of God. It presented to the world way of life designed to provide welfare, peace, happiness, and eternal life for people of the world who had known misery, want, insecurity, and death.

The signs of conquest, of political power of grandeur and wealth that have thrown their shadows across the world have never produced peace or happiness. They do not now, and it seems fair to assume that they never can and never will. As long as we look to them for the good things of life, we will be disappointed and betrayed. They will not and cannot deliver the benefits they advertise and promise. They have given false hope, and they end in despair.

Only in the Cross of Christ can we find hope and eternal life. Only in his kingdom can we find the good life of mind, spirit, and human welfare. Only in the preaching of the gospel of his kingdom can we find the means and the power that will turn men's hearts to the right that will save them.

Can we let our vision range so far that we see beyond the shadow of the Cross the glory of the kingdom of God? Unless we do, the Cross has no significance, no purpose. Its sacrifice is without benefit, its suffering is in vain.

At this Easter season, let us keep in mind the total significance of the Cross. As its shadow falls across our way, wherever we are in all the world, let us remember that it is like a hand, pointing upward to God, reminding us of his kingdom.

There are the shadows of many crosses upon the world today: of famine, suffering, disease, loss of loved ones, and fear. Of all of them, there is only one that can bring relief and hope—that is the Cross of Christ. It is the invitation of divine love and mercy to the whole wide world to look up for salvation.

L. J. L.

Editorial

Pastor Stresses Need for Church of Tomorrow

Need for a "church of tomorrow" to match technological advances was voiced by Reverend Garland E. Tickeymyer in his sermon, "The World of Tomorrow," at Central Congregation, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"The world of tomorrow will be built upon a foundation that is cemented with the blood of millions of today and yesterday who have sacrificed their lives because the steering gear—the standards of right conduct—have not kept pace with technological progress," said the pastor.

"For the first time in history, the instruments of destruction have become as powerful as the ferocity of those who use them. To control them with ill-defined and sometimes contradictory concepts of right and wrong is as dangerous as to turn a high-powered airliner over to a pilot wielding a bull whip and shouting 'Gee' and 'Haw.'"

"Great nations of tomorrow will probably be those lying along the air trade routes of the world: England, Germany, Russia, Japan, and the United States. These nations combine geographic position with an even more important factor—the will to be great.

"The progressive church of tomorrow will not impose upon the superstitious fears of the people. That period in which people could be scared into a semblance of goodness through dread of a devil with horns and a forked tail and a red-hot pitchfork is about gone.

"The church of tomorrow must deal with problems of recreation, premarital counseling, and social betterment; but above all, it must be a spiritual sanctuary where the Spirit of God can penetrate the crust of selfishness and nurture the innate goodness in the souls of all men."

—Los Angeles Times.

Within Calling Distance

A story is told of two men, the elder of whom was urging upon the younger the claim of Christian work and encouraging him to follow the call of the Lord. The younger answered with an excuse that had a familiar ring, "But I have never felt any compelling call to give my life in that way." "Are you sure you are within calling distance?" was the somewhat disquieting reply.—Choice Gleanings.

Easter Is a Promise

By RUBY TINKHAM

I WAS WAITING MY TURN in the store when I overheard the following conversation between the two women ahead of me. One said, "Have you bought your new Easter outfit yet?" The other, busy counting change, frowned and replied, "Well, no, I'm not buying a new outfit this year. I think I'll settle for a new hat and shoes to go with my last year's suit."

Early the next morning, while hanging out the wash, I asked my neighbor, "Does Easter mean anything special to you this year, Mrs. Lane?" She set her basket down and straightened up with a sigh, "I wish there weren't any such things as holidays. It's my turn to have the whole family here for dinner and I know they are expecting me to bake a ham this year—and we just can't afford it, that's all!"

Several evenings later I visited a friend and asked her, "Betty, does Easter mean anything special to you?" She looked at me closely and replied quietly, "You really mean that, don't you?" When I smiled assent, she dropped her head and then continued, "When I was at home it meant a great deal. My mother and father always observed Lent and each of us made special sacrifices. On Easter morning, we always attended the sunrise service together. But you know how my husband feels about church services, so I doubt if I shall even get to go on Easter morning."

Throughout the following week, I thought about each of the three answers I had received. One concerned food, one clothing, and one shelter.

These are the three essential things in life, and yet in each answer there was something lacking. What was the quality I was seeking and where would I find it?

There was one person I hadn't asked yet, because the human mind has a tendency to limit itself to what it can see and hear now.

Suppose I should say, "Tell me, Mary Magdalene, what does Easter mean to you?"

Would she tell me about the expensive costume she had so carefully planned for that first Easter Day?

Would I be bored with the elaborate details of the sumptuous feast she had prepared days in advance for her friends?

Would I have to listen while she explained that she was restrained from visiting His tomb on that early Easter morning?

No, her face would light up and her eyes would shine with radiance like that of the stars, and I would be lifted and carried away with her on the wings of memory.

First, I would have to hear again all the preceding events, because a wonderful story must be told in its entirety, so that it leads up gradually to the final crowning achievement.

We would linger at the cross, because she would have to stop and suffer again the agony and despair of that long ago day. She would paint a picture of tragedy and anguish, so I might share with her the supreme glory later on.

I would listen enrapt as she related how God shook the heavens and earth in retaliating fury at these people who were so blind.

Then her voice would lift and I would feel the power and glory of eternal truth enfolding me, because this woman, in faith on that first Easter morning, discovered a great and enlightening truth!

When she saw the stone rolled away and the tomb empty, she would weep. Looking inside, she would see two angels and, turning to leave, encounter a man whom she supposes to be a gardener. There would be no doubt in her mind when He spoke, and she fell at his feet crying, "Master!"

This is the answer Mary would give me. And you can believe me, it is the very answer I've been seeking!

THE SAINTS' HERALD

March 27, 1948

Number 13

Volume 95

Editors: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Granum, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

He that taketh not his cross and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.—Matthew 10: 33.

THERE IS SOMETHING about Easter that always appeals to people. It is generally a beautiful season of the year, with the trees beginning to leaf out and the flowers beginning to bloom. In our homes, most of us enjoy hiding colored eggs, then next morning we watch the happiness of our children as they search through the house to find the spots where the eggs are concealed. Most parents have had the experience of purchasing little baby chicks—some of them with their feathers dyed—or bringing home a baby rabbit for their children.

Easter, to Christians, means more than flowers, baby chicks, and bunnies. It is an anniversary of a great victory. Easter would have been a most appropriate day for the war to have closed. Then, we could also celebrate Christ's resurrection, because Easter is a day when we celebrate the overthrow of force. Easter, to Christians, should be one of the greatest days of all history, because on the Resurrection morn, God proved that force was not to rule the world. Hatred and greed, while they may seem victorious for a moment, do not rule for long. Lies and falsehoods have no lasting value. It is love and not hate which will rule the world.

Expendables

By Apostle Charles R. Hield

GOOD FRIDAY must have been a dark and discouraging day for the followers of the Christ in Palestine. Their hope that Jesus would be king of an earthly realm disappeared. Their Lord and Master had been crucified, and his body had been placed in a tomb. During the war, millions of people endured suffering almost as great as Christ on the cross. Our civilization remains stunned, confused, discouraged, and disillusioned, much as were the saints after the crucifixion. As those early Christians were left doubting, so many today are wondering if Christianity is all that they had hoped it to be.

The followers of the Christ, sad and disheartened, went back to their homes. Some of them returned to their former occupation as fishermen. It looked as if evil and death were the victors. However, as soon as the news of the resurrection of their Lord reached their ears, there seemed to course through their veins a new vitality. Now they were not afraid of anything. Even though the civil authorities imprisoned and beat some of the apostles, they rejoiced greatly in the fact of the resurrection. Some of them saw their resurrected Master in person, and they went out under that impulsion to change the history of the world. Peter, the denier, became Peter, the rock. The enemies of eternal truths thought that they could defeat the Christ. They bound him with ropes. A court condemned him. He was beaten thirty-nine lashes and finally hung upon the cross. A large stone was rolled in front of his tomb, and the place was sealed with wax. Soldiers with spears were stationed in front of the sepulcher. But in spite of all the force that the enemies of Christ used, they could not hold him.

The angel of the Lord descended from heaven and came and rolled back the stone from the door and sat upon it.—Matthew 28:2.

I PREFER TO THINK of the cross without the crucified Lord hanging upon it. On this Easter day, thousands of churches will have back of their altars a beautiful white cross. A bare cross exemplifies the victory of Christ over the force and power of his enemies. On Easter, we might even symbolize the resurrection by an empty tomb, for death could not hold this Master of Life. He again walked the earth without his crown of thorns. He did wear the scars of his suffering, but he walked forth a victor. Suppose Christ's church, after Pentecost in the first century, had accepted the fact of the resurrection as complacently as do our modern churches. What would have happened? There would have been no message for the world.

In the resurrection, we have a demonstration proving that the love of God is stronger than the hate of his enemies. God rules the universe. In the resurrection, we have an example of the power available to the followers of Christ.

Woodrow Wilson, after the First World War said, "Our civilization cannot survive materially unless it is redeemed spiritually." President Harry Truman following the Second World War, said, "We cannot stand another global war. We can't ever have another war unless it is a total war, and that means the end of our civilization as we have known it."

We have witnessed right on the stage before our eyes the first act of a great world tragedy. Life is not a farce, as so many people think; it is not even a comedy. Thousands of people are living today as if they expected life to furnish them one continual round of pleasure. There is considerable difference between a farce and a tragedy. In a farce, the actor generally gets into some absurd predicament. He may get drunk and by mistake enter the wrong apartment. His blunders create a great deal of hilarity. In the movies some comedian, while looking at a beautiful girl, will run into a tree or trip over a dog. If the scene is laid inside a house, he will collide with another person or stumble over a stool. He may accidentally fall downstairs, or into a tub of water. A tragedy is much different, however. In this type of presentation, one sees the slow, unrelenting development of the plot to its tragic end. The habits, the personality traits, the attitudes or choices of some individual drag him relentlessly to commit suicide or to kill his enemy. Typical of tragedies are the plays of Shakespeare, such as Hamlet and Macbeth. There are many modern novels of tragedy. The book, later made into a movie, entitled, Leave Her to Heaven is an example. The plot portrays a jealous wife. She cannot bear that her husband pay the least bit of attention to anyone else. She even resents the presence of a young crippled brother-in-law in the home. Finally she takes him out in the lake to swim and allows him to drown, refusing to heed his cries for aid. She next becomes fearful that her unborn child may win a share of her husband's affection. So, according to plan, she falls down a long flight of stairs. The tumble causes her child to be born prematurely and die. She next becomes jealous of her own sister. In order to eliminate this threat, she poisons herself, leaving clues which she hopes will lead to the conviction and death of her sister. That is a tragedy. All through the book and the movie, one senses the inexorable hand of death. There seems to be nothing that anyone can do to save the wife. Her jealousy borders on insanity. She becomes more and more entangled, and slowly but surely she brings misery, suffering, and death, not only to others but to herself.

SO, THROUGH the 1930's, our civilization slowly but surely moved toward war. There seemed to be nothing we could do to stop it. War was not caused by Pearl Harbor or Hitler. It was caused by inner habits, passions, and wrong thinking. Our civilization is not like a farce, it did not slip on a banana peel. The world cannot get up, brush itself off, and laugh. Civilization is a set of rules and principles. It is promises, disciplines, customs, institutions, controls, aptitudes, choices, etc. We have been breaking our own rules. We are ignoring our own customs. The words which we say when we face the flag and pledge allegiance to it have meant little to us. Selfishness rules many hearts, and the test seems to be, "Can we get away with it?" Easter comes to us with renewed vigor and says that the rule of selfishness—the rule of force and crime—the rule of dishonesty, greed, and power—the rule of pleasure-seekers, when they control, cause death, suffering, and crucifixion. On Easter, Christians should be reassured, knowing that the power of God and his eternal laws cannot be defeated.

We have just fought a great civil war to determine whether we shall have a world of freedom and good will, or whether we shall divide up into power-mad groups with selfish goals. Living as we live, we shall always have wars. There will be no peace and harmony in the world until people realize that Christianity is not something that we can take or leave with impunity. One cannot be indifferent to truth and knowledge and justice.

IN THE CRUCIFIXION and resurrection of the Christ, we have a demonstration of the extent to which a member of the family of God will go in his love for us. The cross is not a bloody sacrifice to appease an angry God. It shows us how a member of the family of God lives when he meets error and sin. The resurrection also proves to us the victories which we may have by living that quality of life. Christ had to choose as we have to choose between life at its best—life victorious, fearless, and courageous—and the way of the world with its greed, selfishness, pride, egotism, and self-sufficiency.

Easter should reaffirm for us a great principle. Easter should assure the soldier, the farmer, the storekeeper, the great industrialist as well as the laboring man, that the world is governed by God. It should give courage to the discouraged and downhearted. It should reaffirm to all of us the fact that there is a powerful, all-ruling design. There is a chance for growth and development. We have a destiny. In our reconstruction period we need not be disheartened, for the laws of the universe are on the side of those who are doing God's will. With courage and determination, Christians may step forward. Though the world may seem dark at times, if we put our trust in God and his principles, we will be victorious.

MANY OF US have read the book, They Were Expendable, and perhaps have seen the movie of the same name. It does not deal primarily with replaceable materials such as cannons, guns, and tanks. It deals with the expendability of human lives, which are not replaceable. The story deals with a group of men on PT boats. These men were expected to go out in their frail little craft and face almost certain death in order to stop several large ships of the Japanese fleet. This they did, and many of them lost their lives. That is not the only place, of course, where our troops fought courageously. Others stormed Monastery Hill at Salerno in Italy. The Marines attacked the shores of Tarawa and Okinawa. Thousands of our men knew they were expendable. Our civilization today honors them, for they went to their death hoping, thereby, to protect the sacredness and the freedom of their homes and nation.

The Christ was also conscious of being expendable. He often spoke of his approaching death. That is the magnificent thing about his life. He was willing to go through suffering and crucifixion, hoping that his death would be an example to all ages of the quality of kingdom-of-God-living. This type of sacrifice is what is called in literature, a "tragedy of character." There is a struggle against evil individuals or evil forces; a fight ensues; and temporarily evil is victorious. The hero may be killed. Yet as the play ends, we know that the sacrifice has not been in vain. The future will be more peaceful. All will have more freedom and an opportunity to develop and grow as they wish.

THE ELEVEN FAITHFUL apostles remaining after the crucifixion of Christ also were expendable. The Christians of the first century likewise considered their lives expendable. Many of them died in the religious persecutions. The great religious leaders of the world in all ages have considered themselves expendable. Many modern missionaries in Africa, India, and China devote their lives to the spreading of Christianity. Nor is expendability limited only to ministers of religion; Thomas Edison, George Washington Carver, Madame Curie, and others in the field of invention and medicine also have devoted their talents to making the lives of others healthier, better, and more worth living.

We all have admired the skill, discipline, and training of the Marines. Generally they were the fellows who hit the beaches first and cleared out the enemy. Their losses were very heavy. Christians could well use their motto: "The difficult we do immediately; the impossible takes a little longer."

Christianity on Easter should feel the power of the resurrection. Present-day Christians should feel a destiny, as did the first century Christians, upon hearing the news.

There are many stories of heroism which came out of the war. One of the finest, I think, was of Charles B. Woodson from Parkville, Missouri. Wounded in both legs, he crawled out over the shell-pocked battlefield to give a drink of water to a wounded companion. During this deed of mercy, however, he was shot in the head. The bullet severed his optic nerves, and he must remain blind for the rest of his life. There is a story of another GI who, upon hearing the cries of a wounded friend in an exposed foxhole, rushed out, grabbed him, and carried him back to safety. The rescuer in this case, also was hit by a bullet. His pal, though rescued, was so badly wounded that he finally died. In the hospital, the young hero was asked if he thought that his sacrifice was worth-while. The reply of the gallant young soldier was that he certainly did think it was worth-while, because, when he reached the foxhole in which his friend was trying to hide, the fellow threw his arms about him and exclaimed through his tears, "I knew you would come!"

ON EASTER, many people rejoice, believing that because Jesus died, we shall live. That is not the main feature of the resurrection. He would have us understand that because he lived, we shall live. He urges us not to be afraid, he has overcome the world. If we remain faithful, nothing can overcome us; no door can be shut against our will.

Christians, because of the victory of Easter, should now have the courage to take the offensive anew. The only salvation for the world is a people who will expend themselves for society. That is a fact of history.

Our veterans back from the battle fronts fail to find, many times, a definite challenge in Christianity. This Easter we need to continue the battle of love against sin. There is only one good war, and that is the war against evil, hate, greed, indifference, fear, poverty, and selfishness. Christians need something to challenge them. They need a battle to fight. In peace times, we must find a moral equivalent for war, and that moral equivalent can be found in the struggle to bring to pass the brotherhood of man upon this earth.

I have often wondered why the Christ, praying in the garden of Gethsemane, should have asked that the cup be taken away from him. One time in Rome, I went with others to see the Colosseum and descended into the underground dungeons where the early Christians were imprisoned. We visited the catacombs. The first century Christians, many of them, may have suffered more physical pain than did the Christ. Some were boiled in oil, others were thrown to the lions, others tied to the horns of bulls. Some were fastened to huge stone balls. These balls then were pushed by elephants until the victim was crushed under their weight. Others were tied to posts, covered with tar and pitch and set afire in order to illumine the gardens of Nero. Others were crucified, but they went to the cross singing hymns. One can but wonder at the agony of the Christ as he faced the cross and its suffering. Christ had more on his heart than most Christian martyrs. He did not fear the cross. He had done nothing of which to be ashamed. The Christ, however, had on his heart and mind the souls and the lives of millions of his creations. He loved them as no one else has ever loved them. He grieved over their rebellion. He saw souls who persisted in clinging to evil ways; people to whom he had offered an inheritance in eternity, but who would not accept it. His grief was more than mere physical pain.

ON EASTER, WE should find new strength and new confidence, being sure of the ultimate victory of righteousness. The kingdom of God waits until a group of people know that Christ lives. Because he lives, we can live and conquer the forces of wrong living. This call to victorious, sacrificial living is the greatest issue before the world. Christ said: "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross, and follow me."—Mark 8: 34.

Following Christ is also knowing how to live as a courageous member of the kingdom of God. So many misconceptions of life are working their deadly effects upon civilization. Are they to win? Is there nothing we can do about it? Now that the war is over, are we, too, going back to our fishing, or are we willing to continue the fight? Can we not have the conviction that the early day saints had as they met their resurrected Lord and Master and knew that he had conquered death and evil? God is always on the side of life, not death. The Son said, "He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."—Matthew 10: 39.

Some Christians are like a top. One wraps a string tightly around it, then, holding one end of the cord, the top is thrown to the floor. It spins rapidly for a short time, but soon it begins to wobble and finally falls on its side and runs over to some corner of the room and lies there motionless. There are lots of things that may cause people's lives to spin. But only the task of building the kingdom of God, where people are caught up in a great cause, can bring us perpetual motion.

WE ARE IN THE throes of a reconstruction period, seeking to formulate world peace through a United Nations Organization. The days have been dark, but on this Easter there should come a new life, a new courage, a new power, a new determination into the lives, hearts, and homes of all Christian peoples. Christ proved the powers of heaven cannot be defeated. The symbolism of bare trees budding out and baby chicks hatching from eggs has always reminded us of the resurrection. Yet Easter is more than that, to the followers of the Christ, it is a day of great joy. Easter should be a sort of spiritual Fourth of July, for on this day Christ proved to the world that man could have freedom and liberty if he wanted them. Death, sin, and evil were vanquished. God grants his followers the power to throw off the bondage of wrong living. In the resurrection, Christ proved the superiority of kingdom-living over worldly-living. We need not have poverty, we need not have wars, we need not have depressions and recessions. We need not have conflict between capital and labor. We should rejoice, for Christ shows the way to overcome these faults!

At another place the Master said, ". . . the son of man came not to be ministered unto but to minister."—Mark 10: 45. Speaking about giving up his life he said, "No one taketh it away from me, but I lay it down of myself."—John 10: 18.

These two passages have a message for us on Easter. If we earn eternal life, we too, must minister to other people, rather than insisting that we be ministered unto. No one forced the Christ to go to the cross. No one took his life away from him. He laid it down of himself. It was the culminating act of his ministry. That is the challenge of this holiday season.

Easter and the resurrection is a day set aside to celebrate the victory of Christ. It is not our victory. We have done nothing to make this day memorable. We have not been the heroes. Our victories must be in the future. Are we afraid? We need not be. Once a year we are reminded by the celebration of this day that nothing can defeat God. Christ the Victor calls us to build a new world. With God's help, we can win as Christ did.

Our Stewardship

By Bishop C. A. Skinner

THE PARABLE recorded in Luke 16: 2 tells a story of a man who was not true to his stewardship. Not only had he failed to take advantage of the opportunities offered, he had also wasted the goods that had been entrusted to him. Then he was called upon to face the situation and asked this searching question: "How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship."

What about our stewardship? Are we dealing squarely with God? Have we made our accounting to the Bishop? Have we paid to the Lord his share? It does not matter so much what share of our money we give to God—that's our business, but it does matter how much of God's money we keep for ourselves, for that's God's business. We cannot indefinitely put off the accounting to God of our stewardship and the paying to him his share if we expect to build character now.

None are exempt from the stewardship law. Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9 states: "Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property." And again, the Lord said in section 118: 4: "Let no man deceive himself, that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me."

We have an opportunity to become a partner with God in the greatest business in the world. Shall we take advantage of that opportunity, or shall we rob God and cheat ourselves out of the true riches by refusing to deal squarely with God and failing to account for our stewardship?

When threatened by any radical social philosophy that stifles the initiative of men, or seeks to punish or destroy those who oppose it, or resorts to lies to accomplish its purposes, keep in mind that the element of defeat is always present in such a philosophy, and that it will eventually fail.—Bishop James F. Keir.

From the Cross

He saved others; himself he cannot save.—Matthew 27: 42.

SOMEWHERE I SAW a picture, unusual and poignant. At first it was a bit hard to understand the perspective, but as I looked at it, I became lifted up to a vantage view, higher than those portrayed, yet strangely a part of the scene. In the distance were rolling, black clouds whose gloom affected the whole scene and whose ominous foreboding made one realize that grief and fear were there. Beyond those clouds were almost invisible tints of a brighter sky—a tiny hope of a clearing horizon.

In the foreground were several knots of humanity, and their attitudes and clothing gave the key to the reason for this picture. Here were soldiers, taunts still upon their lips. Next stood churchmen in fancy robes, some with smirks of satisfaction and others with condemning frowns. Aside were women whose tears were those of honest grief, and scattered about were other persons whose faces ran a gamut of unbelief and lack of understanding to complete bewilderment.

This was the view from the cross. No cross is visible and one can see only through the eyes of Jesus to understand the scene.

Today, also, there are lowering clouds of warmongering and economic and religious revolutions. Fear and insecurity are begot by such. The peoples of the world have banded together for every conceivable purpose, some of which are directly opposed to the abundant life for all men. Once more, it is necessary to lift oneself above the scene and view this situation through the eyes of the gospel of Christ. For if a man stays down among the crowd, he is buffeted by all these diverse movements, and it is hard to keep the gleams of the hope of eternal life within view. Contamination is avoided when one sees the world "from the Cross."

MOCKINGLY, THEY said that He had saved others, but himself he could not save. Their statement was based upon truths, but—as partial truth can do—they so perverted the truth by their own desires that they forgot his whole purpose. The multitudes had witnessed Christ when he fulfilled the needs of hunger, physical distress, and mental anguish. There were many human testimonies of his power to cure and revitalize.

There was no need to refer to the miracles, nor to enumerate the specific instances of unusual occurrences. All of those who stood below that cross had felt his influence in some form. Some had been close to him, and they were those whose tears of love reflected the deep emotion of a personal loss. Yet even these had misunderstood and had not been big enough spiritually to understand his words when he told them that he would die, yet live again. There were others who had been close to him and felt his power of mind and spirit. They undoubtedly believed wholeheartedly, yet without the necessary insight, that he was the Son of God. Still they were absent from Golgotha. Most of them were carrying on their daily round of duties or were on their way home after the festive Passover period. These are the people who could have stood by the cross, but did not.

What if Christ, there upon the cross, suddenly had shown a spectacular display of physical, super-human strength. In the temple, during the episode of clearing out the money-changers, no man dared lay a hand upon him. They understood the truth of his righteous wrath and silently abetted him by mere inactivity in rebuttal. In all probability, a phenomenal burst of physical strength would have so startled the assembled Roman guard that Christ could have disappeared through the crowd with little difficulty and with no needed divine intervention for that escape. But that was not the plan. Little would have been accomplished by such a phenomena. Possibly a few people would have been moved to investigate more thoroughly the man who could accomplish this, but Christ did not will his presence on the cross for only a few souls.

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

THE MOST IMPORTANT reason why Christ chose to ignore the taunts of the scorners was that it was not his own will, but the purpose of God, his father, that he should die thus. When the great scission came in heaven, Jesus declared himself not only willing but ready to go to earth to bring about man's salvation and to do it by the will of his father. "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done," was his prayer in Gethsemane. At all times, Christ submerged his own personal life to the best advantage of spreading his Father's will. Thus he kept the divine purpose as the real purpose of his life.

Escape as an exhibit of cowardice is a human trait. One who had such a divine impulse and such unwavering adherence to his purpose could not consider the use of his God-given power to escape even extreme bodily or mental discomfort. Crucifixion was the common form of death penalty at that time, but it was not the most painful. Christ

(Continued on page 22.)

Witnesses for the Restoration

(The substance of the following message was unfolded to me during the night of January 5, 1948, accompanied by a great degree of the spirit of light and truth and testimony.)

THE RESTORATION MOVEMENT began quietly like the low, soft, opening tones of a symphonic orchestra. Perhaps there was the song of a bird, the rustle of leaves in the breeze, and certainly the voice of prayer. This was a young man at prayer, scarcely more than a lad, but he represented the spirit of youth always questioning life and the eternal verities which give meaning to life. His soul had been troubled within him; his mind had been confused by the conflicting counsels of men, but he had read in the Bible a commandment with promise, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God . . . and it shall be given him." There was no time limit to the promise. He took it at face value; and so that morning, early in the spring of 1820, he was at prayer in the forest. Soon there shone down upon him a light brighter than the noonday sun, and in the light were two personages, glorious beyond description, one of whom, indicating the other, said, "Joseph, this is my beloved Son, hear him." That was the keynote of the Restoration Movement, "Hear Him!"

It is said in the Bible that "the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy." That hour a prophet stood upon earth again—with a message. The Christ who said, "I will build my church," was still speaking and still at work.

Soon there came upon the scene also the spirit of opposition, representing the intolerance of crystallized theology, saying, "Your vision is of the Devil, for God speaks no more. All revelation ceased with the apostles." The rebuttal (summarized) that the young Prophet gave to the world was: "He is a God of the living and not of the dead. I have heard his voice; I have seen his light; I beheld a vision, and, though they slay me, I can never deny that which I saw and heard."

By Patriarch Elbert A. Smith

The beginning of the Restoration Movement had not the terrors of Sinai nor the sorrows of Calvary, but this young man and those who accepted his message were to know terrors and sorrows. They were to hear again the voice of Jesus, saying, "They hated me without a cause. The servant is not above his Lord. When they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another." The testimony of the testators was to be sealed with blood.

AS THE RESTORATION MOVEMENT unfolded, there came the experiences at Cumorah. The plates of the Book of Mormon were revealed to the Prophet by the hands of an angel. They came into his possession and were translated and published, together with the testimony of three reputable witnesses addressed to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, declaring: "We, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates . . . we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bear record that these things are true." There was also the testimony of eight other witnesses who saw and handled the plates and beheld the engravings thereon.

While the Book of Mormon was in process of translation, Joseph

Smith and his scribe, Oliver Cowdery, repaired again to the forest to pray. While they were thus praying, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and, having laid his hands upon them, he ordained them saying, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of the Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron." Subsequently, they received also the Melchisedec priesthood. This was to be an authoritative ministry: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

FINALLY THE DAY to organize the church arrived, April 6, 1830. The young Prophet and five young associates met at the home of Peter Whitmer, in Fayette, New York, and in obedience to a commandment from heaven proceeded to organize the church. They followed no pattern then existing on earth. This was not reformation; this was Restoration!

The rise of the church of Christ in these last days . . . it being regularly organized . . . by the will and commandments of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1.

Thus, after the long apostasy, the church began to come forth out of the wilderness and was restored in its original organic form, including apostles and prophets. It was restored with all the gifts and spiritual blessings, the doctrines, ordinances, and sacraments of the old Jerusalem Church. It comes to us, bearing in its hands the three witnesses of the written Word: the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants—the last named representing the still open canon of scripture—unique and unlike anything else in the modern religious world, open to receive from time to time the revelations of God. These three books agree in one.

In the beginning of the Restoration, then, one voice was heard in prayer, and then in testimony. But the voice behind the veil from time to time called others. It was heard calling Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, Martin Harris, Hyrum Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Emma Smith, and many others, and so they came, one by one, saying, "Here am I, Lord, send me."

THE VOICE IS STILL calling, calling your name and my name—and others in many lands. Presently it will call the names of those not now born. God and Christ and the Holy Spirit are still at work in the world.

We cannot judge the scope of the Restoration Movement by the numerical strength of the church at any given time. The kingdom of God cometh not with observation. The kingdom of heaven is like a seed planted in the ground; it is like yeast hidden in three measures of meal; it is like a "pebble that has dropped in the water and the waves circle round with the shock." But in the beginning of the Restoration, God started in motion many powerful forces, world wide, perhaps unobserved by us, to bring to pass all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began. His work will go on though thrones topple and nations are destroyed, until the world is ready for the coming of the Son of Man.

This is our witness, as it is written: "By these things we know there is a God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting, the same unchangeable God."—Doctrine and Covenants 17:

4. We rejoice in the prophetic testimony of the Prophet concerning Christ, "And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is

Independence Zion's Leaguers Plan Their Restoration Festival

By F. CARL MESLE

IN HARMONY with the Church-wide Zion's League program to commemorate the founding of the church through the Restoration Festival in April of this year, the Zion's Leagues of Independence have outlined their program and are working to make this one of the major events of the year.

Two objectives are in the minds of the City-wide Zion's League leaders as they prepare the details of the festival. They are (1) to recapture the spirit of the founders of our church, and (2) to encourage our youth to apply that same spirit to present day tasks.

Under the general supervision of the City-wide Zion's League Service Committee, and with the co-operation of all Leagues, the following program has been outlined:

1. On Sunday evening, April 11, there is to be a city-wide worship service at the Englewood Church under the direction of the worship committee, which will establish the theme for the week by means of pageantry featuring high lights of the Restoration.

2. On Monday evening, there will be held at the Stone Church the City-wide Zion's League Spring Music Festival, featuring hymns of the Restoration. This service is being planned by the study committee and will include some of the best musical talent in Independence.

3. Tuesday will feature an international party to be held in the lower Auditorium where games and ac-the Only Begotten of the Father."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

This is our witness and our testimony, that the Restoration Movement is of God. Like our fathers and mothers before us, we have made covenant with him—and our covenant we shall keep.

tivities of the many lands to which the gospel has been taken will be enjoyed. The recreation committee is responsible for this party.

4. On Wednesday evening, each League is to hold its own prayer service in accordance with the program of the local congregation. On this night, the Leagues are to take account of the money they have raised toward the Missions Abroad Fund.

5. On Friday evening, in the Laurel Club dining room in the Auditorium, the service committee is planning a city-wide dinner with table decorations consisting of models of historical places in church history. As a climax to the dinner, the Leagues will present to the bishop in Zion the funds they have earned towards their Missions Abroad objectives.

6. On Sunday evening, the services in each congregation are to be in charge of their respective Leagues.

The City-wide Zion's League Council agreed in early February to attempt to raise $1,000 by April 16 to apply toward the goal of $2,500 for the Missions Abroad Fund. This $1,000 is to be shared by each League on the suggested basis of two and one-half dollars per member. Since most of the Leagues already have made heavy commitments to their local congregations to help in the raising of building funds, organ funds, etc., each has been left to decide its own particular share. This is being done to encourage a steady effort rather than unusual projects which might upset local income or discourage young people from their responsibilities to "keep the law."

At the present time $650 have been raised toward the goal of
(Continued on page 14.)

From the Apostasy

IN LAST WEEK'S article, we outlined our beliefs in an apostasy in which, over a period of several centuries, the church of Christ departed from the original teachings of her Master insofar that she lost the authority to speak or act for Christ. She lost the original simplicity and purity of doctrine, ordinance, and sacraments; she lost her humility; she lost the simplicity and perfection of organization; she lost the signs that had been promised in confirmation of the faith of believers.

The majority of the Christian world is divided between two ideas of ecclesiastical authority. The first idea is that Christ established a church and placed his authority within it, which authority has continued in unbroken succession to the present day. The second idea is that, because of apostasy, the church had to be reformed by those who protested against the abuses of apostasy. Latter Day Saints adhere to a third idea—an idea which is still quite new and startling to some people—the idea of restoration. It was not a new idea—it was a very old one. Jesus proclaimed it in his parables of the new patch on an old garment and new wine in old bottles. If he had been content to reform the Pharisees or any other of the perfectly smooth-working sects of his time, the story of Christianity would have been quite a different one. A process of reformation could not restore authority to a dead church or bring it to spiritual life after the apostasy was complete. The only course open for God was a course of restoration.

LATTER DAY SAINTS believe that Biblical prophecy foretells this process of restoration. Obviously within the scope of this sermon we cannot go too thoroughly into this aspect of the question. But the prophecies of a latter-day restoration are found in three principal places in your Bible, if you care to study them. First, read Daniel's description of King Nebuchadnezzar's dream in the second chapter of Daniel. In this dream, Nebuchadnezzar saw an image with head of gold, breast of silver, belly and thighs of brass, legs of iron, and feet of part iron and part clay. Then he saw a stone cut out of the mountain without hands, which smote the image upon the feet and broke them in pieces; but the stone became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.

Any Bible student, or even any history student, can interpret this dream. It is a prophecy of history that was to follow Daniel's time. Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom, was the head of gold—the pinnacle of world power. That kingdom was succeeded by the Medes and Persians, who were the breast and arms of silver—an inferior kingdom. Following that, the Greeks under Alexander the Great conquered the world; they were the belly and thighs of brass. The Greeks were in turn overthrown by the Romans—the legs of iron. Then the Roman Empire was divided, first into the two parts represented by the two legs of iron and later into ten kingdoms represented by the ten toes of mingled iron and clay. The promise given through Daniel was that "in the days of these kings"—the ten kings of kingdoms which grew out of the Roman Empire—"shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."—Daniel 2: 44.

A companion prophecy is the vision of the four beasts, found in the seventh chapter of Daniel, which follows the same general pattern. The first beast represents Babylon; the second, Media-Persia; the third, Greece; the fourth, Rome. As the image had ten toes to indicate the division of the Roman empire into ten kingdoms, so the fourth beast had ten horns, which Daniel says (7: 24), "were ten kings that should arise."

The third source of prophecies concerning the Restoration is to be found in the twelfth chapter of the Book of Revelation. Here is described John's vision of a woman representing the church—a woman clothed with the sun, or the power of the Melchisedec priesthood; with the moon representing the twelve apostles. The woman, being in travail, gave birth to a man-child—the kingdom of God—"which should rule all nations with a rod of iron"; and the man-child was caught up to God to save him from the fury of a great red dragon which would devour him. The woman, also in danger, fled into the wilderness where she remained 1,260 days or, as verse fourteen characterizes it, "for a time, and times, and half a time." The same phrase is repeated in Daniel 12: 7.

NOW LET US SEE whether there is any basis for a computation of how long this apostasy was to continue—how long the woman was to remain in the wilderness—how long before the stone should be cut out of the mountain, which would break in pieces all nations. In prophetic utterance, one day often stands for one year. The seventh and eighth chapters of Genesis indicate that the ancient year consisted of 360 days. If a "time" is a year of 360 days, each day the equivalent of a year, then a "time, times, and the dividing of a time" would be three and a half such years of the
www.LatterDayTruth.org

to the Restoration

BY EVAN A. FRY

"1260 days" of Revelation 12:6. The date usually given for the final downfall of the Roman Empire which made possible the absolute power of the papacy and the church is A. D. 570—the date of the Lombard conquest. Add 1260 to 570 and you arrive at the date 1830, which is what Latter Day Saints claim as the date of the Restoration. Is that only coincidence?

Strangely enough, Restoration is foretold in another prophecy—a familiar one to Latter Day Saints. Revelation 14: 6 reads: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." Note that it was not to be a new gospel, but the same old gospel which had once been preached—the everlasting gospel. But note, too, that if it had been available on earth, there would have been no necessity for an angel to bring it again from heaven. It had been lost in the apostasy; it was to be restored by angelic ministry in the latter days. As the stone, which was cut out of the mountain without hands, was to grow and fill the whole earth, so this gospel was to be preached to every nation and kindred and tongue and people.

WHAT DO LATTER DAY SAINTS claim about this business of Restoration? In broad outline, the story is very simple, though it might be embellished with many related facts. In the year 1820, Joseph Smith, who was then in his fifteenth year, found himself faced with a problem which he could not solve alone. The several churches of Manchester, New York, had united in a great revival service. Young Joseph had attended and had felt the need of doing something about his salvation. Part of his family leaned toward one denomination, part toward another. Young Joseph did not know which he should join and his indecision was heightened by the unchristian bickering among the several denominations as to who should have the lion's share of the converts. While the different sects had co-operated willingly enough during the revival, they now seemed bent on proving each other wrong.

It is small wonder that a boy not yet fifteen and completely inexperienced in religious matters should be confused by such differences of opinion in his elders. While he was laboring under these difficulties, he read one day from the first chapter of James and the fifth verse: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." He resolved to test this promise. Certainly he lacked wisdom. His family was divided. The ministers, who should have been able to help him, were divided. If ever a man needed help, he did. He repaired to the woods and presented his problem in a simple, straightforward, boyish prayer.

As he prayed, a pillar of light appeared directly over his head, which descended until it rested directly upon him. Above him in this shaft of light, he discerned two personages. One spoke, calling him by name, then turned to the other and said, "This is my beloved Son; hear him." Joseph again put the question which had brought him to this secluded spot, desiring to know which of the sects was right and which he should join. The answer astonished him as much as it astonished the world when he announced it later: "Join none of them, for they are all wrong, and their creeds are an abomination in my sight."

THIS WAS THE beginning of God's work of restoration. It was also the beginning of a work of persecution against Joseph Smith which has continued even to this day; for, strangely enough, the several sects which had been busily engaged in trying to prove each other wrong, united at once to persecute a fourteen-year-old boy who came back from the woods to say that a heavenly personage had told him they were all wrong. On the night of September 21, 1823, some three years later, the angel Moroni appeared to young Joseph and told him of the record of Ancient America which was written on golden plates and buried in a hill near by. Not until four years later was he permitted to begin translation of the plates with the help of his wife, Emma Smith, and two young men, Martin Harris and Oliver Cowdery.

As the translation of the Book of Mormon progressed, they came to a passage concerning baptism for the remission of sins. In an attempt to find out exactly what was required of them, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery again repaired to the woods to pray. While they prayed, another messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, laid his hands on them, and conferred upon them the priesthood of Aaron, which carries with it the authority to baptize for the remission of sins. The messenger said he was John the Baptist and was acting under the direction of the apostles, Peter, James, and John, who would shortly provide for the conferring of the higher or Melchisedec priesthood.

ON TUESDAY, April 6, 1830, according to a revelation given some months before, six baptized members met in Fayette, New York, and formally organized the new church according to the laws of the state and nation. Instructions had also been received about the organization of the church with a quorum of twelve apostles and specified officers such as elders, priests, teachers, deacons, bishops, etc. The Melchisedec priesthood was also received. The Lord's Supper was instituted and instructions given for administering this ordinance in the new church. With this simple beginning was begun the Restoration—not by the hand of man, but by the hand of an angel flying through the midst of heaven as predicted in Revelation 14:6. The stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, as Daniel had seen in vision. The time was exactly 1,260 years from the time when the secular power of the Roman Empire fell to the Lombards in A. D. 570.

Let us note briefly what was restored in the Restoration. Authority of priesthood was restored by angelic ministry. Original simplicity of church organization was restored by divine instruction. Revelation, coupled with the Book of Mormon, brought clarification to many points of doctrine which had been corrupted and distorted during the apostasy. The simple, meaningful ordinances and sacraments of the primitive Christian church were restored. The signs again followed the believer; spiritual gifts again blessed the church. Not reformation, but Restoration had established the church of Christ again in the last days, no more to be taken from the earth until the end of time.

Their Restoration Festival

(Continued from page 11.)

$2,500 accepted by representatives of the Leagues of Independence. With $1,000 more assured by April, this will put Independence within striking distance by Conference time in October.

The enthusiasm for the Restoration Festival and the Missions Abroad Fund runs high and is particularly encouraging when one realizes that many of the Leagues had already set high objectives toward their local building funds, including one of a thousand dollars to be raised by a single League. To tackle more on top of that has required considerable courage and will take wise planning and hard work.

A New Church School Course

FOR THE BAPTISMAL CLASS

A new seven-week's course for children eight to eleven years old is now ready for mailing. The course carries the title, "This is Jesus' Church, a pre-baptismal manual." The price is thirty-five cents a copy. Each pupil, as well as the instructor, should have a manual.

Orders should be placed promptly so that the course may be started on or before Sunday, April 25, if you plan to finish before Children's Day, June 13. In most places, the children who are candidates for baptism will be taken from their regular classes and taught by the pastor or his assistant during this period. The manuals will serve the pupils as a handy reference source for several years to come.

"Teaching Helps" will be found at the end of each lesson. A short answer quiz follows these helps. The children are to fill in the blanks and grade themselves on each lesson. An "answer sheet" will be inclosed with your order for the instructor's use.

Chris B. Hartshorn,
Editor of Church School
Literature

Book of Mormon Stories in Zion's Hope

This series will end with the May 2 issue. We are planning to start some church history stories by various authors. If you would like to use these stories in primary worship services, church school classes, or for the home bedtime story, please note and get your subscription to Zion's Hope in by March 31. Single copy, per year, in United States $1.00; in Canada $1.25; in other countries $1.50. Five or more in one package (by the quarter), in United States, 20c each; in Canada, 25c.

Briefs

WABASH, ONTARIO.—Seventy Harold I. Velt, who conducted a series of meetings in Wabash last November, returned for several days in January. Through his ministry, several nonmembers have become interested in the church. Elder J. A. Pray was the speaker on the evening of February 29. Elder James Kelley of Chatham has also been a recent speaker. The church building is being remodeled, both members and nonmembers assisting with the work. Attendance at all services is large.

WOODBURN, OREGON.—Missionary Jim Reneau held a week's series of meetings beginning January 18. His ministry was greatly appreciated by the Saints of the mission there.

FT. MADISON, IOWA.—Tribute was paid to retiring pastor W. H. Gunn and his wife, Cloda, on Sunday, February 15. District President Harold D. Smith presented to the branch an account of the service given by these two in the past forty years. Tribute was then paid them by members of the branch who recalled particular incidents of their ministry. Pastor Melvin E. Francis presented the gifts, with E. R. Wright reading the words of acceptance. Climaxing the service, Mrs. Donna Weddle sang a song, which she had written especially for the occasion.

ESCATAWPA, MISSISSIPPI.—The semi-annual district conference of the Gulf States District was held at Escatawpa on February 13, 14, and 15 in the school. On Friday evening, the Zion's Leagues of Mobile, Pensacola, and Escatawpa presented one-act plays. Saturday's activities included a fellowship service, classes for all age groups, a forum discussion, departmental conferences, and a sermon by District President W. J. Breshears. A fish supper was served in the evening. Sunday began with a fellowship service, followed by classwork, a sermon by Evangelist A. D. McCall, and the business session. Major items included the presentation of reports, the adopting of a $4,000 annual budget for administrative and missionary expenses, and the approving of calls to the priesthood. Those to be ordained are Van Jernigan, elder; A. J. Sullivan, Paul Booker, A. V. Peavy, Rudolph Williams, and Gordan McPherson, priests, A. A. Odom and G. W. Miniard, teachers; James Parker and Norman Brooks, deacons.

Prayer -- By Wana Black McDole

THOUGHTFUL PEOPLE everywhere are asking, "What happens when we pray? Does it make any difference whether we pray or not? Is prayer actually a communion with God, or is it a ritual which has been handed down to us? How can we get a sense of the presence of God?"

It makes a tremendous difference in a man's mental health whether he has faith in a personal God or not. Faith provides a strong arm to lean on when he meets life's severest trials.

In Doctrine and Covenants is recorded this experience of Joseph Smith, Jr.: "After praying . . . by the power of the Spirit our eyes were opened and our understandings were enlightened, so as to see and understand the things of God . . . and the record which we bear is the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Son. . . . This is the testimony . . . which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God."

A few outstanding men in every age have tapped sources of power far beyond human understanding. Through them has come to us warmth and understanding and a real desire to serve. These few have been a great power for good; through them, the world has been leavened with a peace and calm which gives balance and stability to the many conflicts that try men's souls. They renew our faith in prayer and inspire us to find their sources of power. If man can find such power through prayer, he will pray.

IN THE EARLY days of the church, there was no doubt in the minds of the Saints. They worshiped a living God, and a living Christ, who was their redeemer. When they were commanded "to establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, of learning, . . . a house of order, a house of God . . . that your salutations may be in the name of the Lord," they engaged with all their might and strength and energies to build Kirtland Temple.

At the dedication service, the Prophet prayed, "Accept this house, the workmanship of the hands of us, thy servants, which thou didst command us to build . . . for thou knowest we have done this through great tribulation and out of our poverty we have given of our substance to build a house in thy name, that the Son of man might have a place to manifest himself to his people."

History tells us that on that day of dedication the Saints enjoyed a Pentecost like that of Biblical times. Here the ministry in particular received the promised endowment of power and moved out into missions to convert a hundred thousand people in the space of a few short years. The entire world was stirred by the story they told and the power that accompanied the telling.

In the years following, men died for the cause, children ran barefoot through the snow as they followed the wagons moving from place to place because of persecution. There was no wavering, for they talked with God and their hearts were born anew with strength for the task.

PRAYER CAN BRING to us a source of power we have not tapped before. Quiet meditation gives opportunity to bring out and lay in view all of the difficulties and stresses. There is a peace of mind which comes from prayer. It is not a means of dodging our troubles but of laying them out and seeing how small they are in the total picture.

When we begin to love others as a father loves his son, we will pour out all our resources to help and strengthen those about us. As we lose ourselves in others and our resources are exhausted, we will become keenly aware of the need for a power greater than our own to help in the efforts to serve men. When we reach this point where problems are so great we don't know where to turn—we learn to pray.

Only a very small percentage of men have actually felt his presence, because only a small percentage have opened their hearts in love and humility and understanding to others. Just as our sense organs acknowledge only a small amount of the physical stimuli around us, so our hearts are barely open to the spiritual values of the universe. We do not often take time to see the beauty in a sunset or to notice the perfection of line and texture in the petal of a flower or the leaf of a tree. Nor do we hear the small sounds of earth and experience unhurried pleasure in the company of small children. We are caught in the whirl of a restless speed—a hurrying always to catch up with things and events that threaten to pass us by.

THERE ARE MANY kinds of prayers. Some are much like the conversation we hear—thoughtless, selfish, pious, or simply pointless.

Prayer can be a source of mental peace. Suppose someone hurts us or fails to recognize our importance—we are angry. How small it seems when we lay it out in prayer. It is as a molehill after we have looked toward the mountains. Prayer gives us courage to set aside the petty things and look with understanding and love toward the problems of others about us.

When Christ prayed in Gethsemane, he gained a mastery of fear as he said, "Thy will, not mine be done."

Prayer can bring to the worshiper a new faith in life. He not only can hope that Zion will be a reality, he can gain a reasonable evidence

(Continued on page 18.)

Glimpses of Easter History

WID YOU EVER wonder where Easter got its name, why we have Easter eggs, rabbits, and hot-cross buns? Were you ever curious about old Easter customs and celebrations?

The term "Easter" was first used when Christianity was introduced among the Saxons and is traced to Eostre, a Saxon goddess whose festival was celebrated annually in the spring.

We associate Easter with the observance of Sunday, the first day of the week, instead of the Jewish Sabbath, the last day of the week (the day on which God rested from the work of his creation). It was the first day of the week that the women found the tomb empty, and the day became known as The Lord's Day. Gradually it was on this day, and not on the Sabbath, that Christians met together for the breaking of bread and giving thanks.

The first day of the week was also a pagan day for worshiping the sun. In A. D. 321 Constantine issued an edict enacting that magistrates, city people, and artisans were to rest on "the venerable day of the sun." When Christianity triumphed over paganism, the practice of abstinence from labor continued on the Lord's Day.

There is no indication of the observance of Easter in the new Testament, or in the writings of the apostles. The Eastern Christians continued to observe the Jewish festivals but with a new spirit added to the old ways. There was a new conception in the feast of the Passover—it was Christ as the true Paschal Lamb, the first fruits from the dead.

ALTHOUGH THE observance of Easter was at a very early period in the practice of the Christian Church, a serious difference as to the day for its observance soon arose between Christians of Jewish and those of Gentile descent, which led to a long and bitter quarrel. The point at issue was when the paschal feast was to be reckoned as ending. With the Jewish Christians, whose leading thought was the death of Christ as the Paschal Lamb, the feast ended at the same time as the feast of the Passover—the fourteenth day of the first Jewish month. But the western churches celebrated it on the Sunday after the fourteenth, holding that it was the commemoration of the resurrection of Jesus. Constantine referred the dispute to the Council of Niceae in the year 325, and the council decided in favor of the western observance. This settled one point, Easter was to be held on a Sunday and not on a certain day of the month or moon. But even as late as 1582 when the Gregorian calendar was introduced, the date of Easter was still an unsettled question. Should it continue to be movable, or should a fixed Sunday after March 21 be adopted? It was decided that Easter should be the first Sunday after the paschal full moon, which happens on or next after the 21st of March, and if the full moon happens upon a Sunday, Easter is the Sunday after.

EVEN BEFORE the first Easter, the egg was a sacred emblem. It was a symbol of germinating life of early spring, celebrating spring's return.

By Winifred Milner

Count de Gelebin in his Religious History of the Calendar informs us that the custom of giving eggs at Easter is to be traced to the theology and philosophy of the Egyptians, Persians, Gauls, Greeks, and Romans, among all of whom an egg was the emblem of the universe, the work of supreme Divinity.

Eggs were held by the Egyptians as sacred emblems of the renovation of mankind after the Deluge. The Jews decorated and used them on their tables in the feast of the Passover.

In public places in Italy, Spain, and Provence, people make sport with eggs. In Mesopotamia on Easter, and for forty days after, the children buy themselves as many eggs as they can and stain them bright red in memory of the blood of Christ. Some tinge them green and yellow. Then this game is played: they strike their eggs one against the other, and the egg that first breaks is won by the owner of the egg that struck it. Immediately another egg is pitted against the winning egg, and so they go on, until the last remaining egg wins all the others.

In Cumberland and Westmoreland, England, eggs are tinged with the juice of herbs, broomflowers, etc. Boys play with them in the fields, rolling them up and down, or throw them like colored balls into the air.

In the year 1805, King Edward I communicated to the Society of Antiquaries this item from the expenses of his household accounts: "For Easter Sunday—four hundred and fifty eggs, eighteen pence, to be covered with leaf-gold and afterward distributed to the royal household." How many eggs would eighteen pence buy now?

In Italy, on Easter Eve and Easter Day, the heads of families send chargers full of hard eggs to the church to get them blessed and sprinkled with holy water. They believe the blessed eggs have the virtue of sanctifying the entrails of the body, and they are the first nourishment taken by the people after the abstinence of Lent.

— — — a home column feature — — —

In Russia, Easter Day was formerly set apart for visiting. Families went to each other's houses and announced themselves by saying, "Jesus Christ is risen." The answer was, "He is risen indeed." The people then embraced, gave each other Easter eggs, and drank together. It was also the custom in Russia that every man and woman give an egg to the priest of the parish on Easter morning.

The Easter hare, like the Easter egg, has always been an emblem of fertility. Before the days when Christ was a boy, children believed in the hare that laid colored eggs. They hunted for nests during the spring festivals or found colored eggs in gardens.

IN MEXICO, South America, Spain, and Portugal, Holy Saturday is the day especially devoted to Judas. His effigy, made as hideous as possible, is placed upon funeral poles and burned with immense glee. He is flogged, hanged, and maltreated in ways without number. In the city of Mexico, such hatred is particularly picturesque and violent. On Good Friday morning, booths are erected in all parts of the city where grotesque Judases are sold by dozens, scores, and hundreds.

On the morning of Holy Saturday, ropes stretch from house to house along the streets. From every rope a Judas hangs. These are filled with straw and gunpowder. They are everywhere, black and ugly, hated and cursed in vivid Spanish.

But a few minutes before twelve comes a sudden hush, a rent of stillness in the blare of noise. The crowd stands listening for the signal of noon from the bell of the cathedral. The Judases swing to and fro in the sunshine, passive, unconcerned. Then the signal comes booming over the city. On the instant, frenzy smites the town. Every luckless Judas is cut down by yelling people who cast them headlong into flames. They explode with dreadful noise and much vile smelling smoke. This is the soul of Judas falling to the hell he has merited.

A superstition regarding bread baked on Good Friday appears to have existed from an early period. Bread so baked was kept by a family all through the ensuing year under the belief that a few gratings of it in water would prove a remedy for any ailment. We see a memorial in this ancient superstition in the use of what are called hot-cross buns. The custom of eating them is believed to be traced to a pagan custom of worshiping the Queen of Heaven with cakes—a custom to be found alike in China and ancient Mexico. In Egypt, the cakes were horned to resemble the sacred heifer and called bons.

Poor Robin's Almanack, 1733, has this little rhyme:

Good Friday comes this month, the old woman runs,
With one or two a-penny hot-cross
buns,
Whose virtue is if you believe what's said,
They'll not grow mouldy like the common bread.

Chelsea, England, was a great place for bun eaters in the early days, boasting two royal bun houses. Each house had a neat wooden piazza where crowds of people assembled to scramble for a chance of purchasing royal hot-cross Chelsea buns. Several hundreds of squares of black tins, with dozens of hot buns on each tin were disposed of from a little after six in the morning until after the same period in the evening of Good Friday.

IN THE BALKANS, the Easter celebration is longer and more festive than Christmas. It is awaited during the long winter months and prepared for by a rigid fast of forty days, when not only meat but all food that comes from animals is for-bidden to the faithful. Children born during the pre-Easter Lent are almost inevitably condemned to death from starvation, for their mothers could not damn their own souls and those of the sucklings by eating meat and drinking milk.

Pagan customs and rites are deeply rooted among the peasant people of the Balkans. In the twentieth century, as in ancient times, their whole life is ruled by beliefs in invisible good and evil spirits that inhabit the earth, water, and air, who penetrate houses, bewitch cattle and trees, fertilize the earth, or—if they wish—ruin harvests. During the days that precede Easter, souls of the dead flock back to earth in long processions, float around their former homes, creep into their old beds, and influence the actions of the living. These souls must be looked after lest they should get angry with relatives and descendants and leave a curse upon them.

An ancient custom requires that special food be cooked for the dead on Good Thursday, called "Black Thursday." The food of the dead named caliva in Rumania, consists of wheat, nuts, and honey. The caliva is brought to the graves of the dead where the pagan ceremony merges with religious rites. The village priests visit graveyards on Black Thursday, going from tomb to tomb, saying prayers for the peace of immortal souls and pouring wine on graves. The wine penetrates the soil. Its flavor is supposed to reach the dead. But it is also a sacrifice to the spirits of earth which begin to live anew in the spring.

Princess Marthe Bibesco, who has studied Rumanian customs and superstitions, in her book, Isvor, tells of a legend whose origin is lost in the trail of centuries. It is a legend of the Rocemans, who are said to be mysterious beings dwelling in a far-away land surrounded by pagans on the shores of the sea where all rivers flow. These Rocemans are believed to be kept in jail, gazing at the water through the bars of their cells and singing hymns. The egg shells reach their country after a trip of two weeks, and when the poor prisoners see them they know that Christ is risen. The memory of the Rocemans is so strong in the minds of the Rumanian peasants that they celebrate the Easter of the Rocemans two weeks after their own Easter.

IN AMERICA, the churches of all denominations celebrate Easter with ceremony, but this has not always been true. At first only Catholic Churches observed Easter in this way. Maryland and Louisiana were settled by Catholics, and they were the first states to commemorate Christ's resurrection with church festivals. The New England States were the last to acknowledge Easter as a holiday.

Sunrise services have become a prominent feature of an American Easter. One of the first towns in America to have an Easter sunrise service was Bethlehem, Pennsylvania.

In Honolulu, Hawaii, every year an impressive Easter sunrise service is held at the Punch Bowl, a volcanic crater which stands passive now overlooking the city.

A most beautiful Easter morning service in our church is one that takes place in Independence in the Floral Hills burial grounds on Blue Ridge. It takes the form of an Easter pageant entitled The Resurrection and is produced each year with a full set of characters, a chorus, and a public address system. The program begins at 7 o'clock on Easter morning and lasts about an hour. For a number of years, the Wahdemna Choral Society furnished the music for the pageant. Other Independence singers and artists have participated. There is usually a short sermonet on "Easter" by some outstanding church man. John Rushton, George Mesley, and F. Henry Edwards have sometimes been the speakers. The sermonet comes before the pageant to introduce it.

Last Easter, about 30,000 people were in attendance, and the service seems to grow more popular each year. The Resurrection was written by a gifted lady in the church whose time and talents were consecrated unselfishly during her short life. About fifteen years ago, the church dramatic club, which carries the name White Masque players, wanted to present an Easter service. Mrs. June Lea was a member of this organization at the time, and was thoroughly experienced in dramatic work and pageantry. She was requested to produce the pageant for use in the Easter service in co-operation with the management of Floral Hills Cemetery. Her eyes saw with vision, and the pageant lives.

So we have Easter—a promise that life is immortal—that friends we have loved and lost awhile we shall see again. It is a promise that had its beginning more than nineteen hundred years ago, when the angel of the Lord spoke from a sepulcher in a Jerusalem garden, "He is not here, for he is risen."

Magazine Hi-spots

We should like to call your attention to an article in Hygeia, the health magazine, for December 1947, entitled "Worry—the Cancer of Our Lives." Following surgery and X-ray treatments for cancer, the writer of the article was advised that her recovery was "up to her, and above all, not to worry." She describes the family situations which arose to cause "worry," and how she met those situations. She learned to attain a calm outlook on life and found increased happiness and health.

In the same issue of Hygeia is an interesting article on "My Escape From Tobacco."

Plutarch's LIVES tells the story of a man who boasted that he had no enemies. "But," said the philosopher Clio, "have you a friend?"

Prayer

(Continued from page 15.)

that it will become a reality; then, with clarity of vision, he can act and fit his own contribution into the whole.

Reason alone cannot work—for reasoning the right way to live does not mean a man will live up to it. He must tap a strength beyond his own. A drunkard may reason that his way is wrong, yet he continues in it. A gossip may see the hurt a story has caused and reason that it is not good—yet the next day she forgets.

Emotional appeal alone fails to change people, for as soon as the moment under which it took place passes, the emotion is gone and many times the resolution is, also.

As we grow in prayer, we grow in strength and wholesomeness of personality, we begin to gain a spiritual insight into the nature of the universe and to see some of the solutions to life's problems.

The disciples saw prayer at work in the life of Christ as he was able to surmount the temptations around him, to deal with difficult situations, to restrain himself in the face of disaster, and finally to pray, "Father forgive them for they know not what they do."

Feeling this power he had—and their lack of it—they asked of him, "Master, teach us to pray."

Goodness conditions usefulness. A grimy hand may do a gracious deed, but a bad heart cannot. What a man says and what a man is must stand together—must consist. His life can ruin his lips or fill them with power. It is what men see that gives value to what we say. Being comes before saying or doing. Well may we pray, "Search me, O God! Reveal me to myself. Cleanse me from secret faults, that those who are acquainted with me, who know my downsittings and my up-rising, may not see in me the evil way that gives the lie to my words." —Babcock.

Why the Principles? - By Merle Guthrie

I AM A LATTER DAY SAINT. But why? And there is an even more important question, since I was baptized when a boy—why have I remained a Latter Day Saint? Sometimes I stop short when I realize that I may have remained a member of The Church from very unworthy motives. It may have been that I just didn't give the subject any thought, and so stayed as a matter of course. Perhaps, since I had always heard of Joseph Smith and the Restoration, my subconscious reasoning went something like this: "This is Christ's Church and I am lucky to be a member"; or, "There was an apostasy; therefore there had to be a restoration." Or maybe I wanted to be sure to have the efficacy of the church ordinances—being baptized by one having authority, I was sure of celestial glory if I stayed in the church.

Do you ever allow yourself to get by so easily? If so, ask yourself some serious questions. What was the Apostasy, and why was the Restoration necessary? What gives efficacy to the ordinances? These are broad questions, but let us hint at their answers by asking more. Is God so unmindful of his billions of created souls that he restored his church and now calls a few thousand lucky individuals into it, giving them special blessings, and leaving the remainder to their fates? Is he going to provide Zion, a haven of safety and rest for these few, and leave the others to suffer?

I believe that we, by our attitudes, have all too often been answering these questions in the affirmative. That is why I say I may have remained in the Church from unworthy motives. It seems to me that Latter Day Saints have dangerously approached the attitude which is the fundamental error of historic Christianity and Judaism. We have tended to think of the fundamental principles of the gospel, including the sacraments of the church, as God-appeasers instead of character-building principles of life. We have tended to think that submission to the ordinances automatically qualifies us for God's special blessings.

JESUS SAID, "Have faith in God" —"Believe also in me"—"Ye must be born again"—not "because tonight you may die," but because "the kingdom of heaven is at hand." What is the difference here? Why did he command to believe, repent, be baptized, and receive the Holy Spirit? For the answers to these questions, let us again look at his teachings. He said, "I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which sent me," and therein is the key to his character and his sinlessness—he was completely selfless. Just as unselfishness is the basis of Christlike character, so is selfishness or self-centeredness the basis of all sin. And therein again lies the basic error of historic Christianity—the Apostasy. The gospel of Jesus Christ, the selfless One, was turned into a gospel of selfishness. In the beginning, it was taught that "the principles" should be applied in one's life so that he would develop Christlike character and become a seeker of the kingdom of God. But it came to be taught that one must submit to certain ordinances so that he would gain favor with God and be saved.

Thus we see the necessity of the Restoration. It was necessary to hear Jesus Christ and learn to say with him, "I seek not mine own will, but the will of God." God is intensely interested in all people, and the call of his Son through the Restored Church is the call to greater service; it was not meant that we should be lulled to sleep because he "paid it all." It is a call to build Zion, the kingdom of God on earth, that "laboratory of righteousness," that ensign to the nations from which the call of the gospel of Jesus Christ shall go forth to all the world.

TO ACCOMPLISH this, we must be aware of the fatal, selfish error of historic Christianity. We must realize that to be a member of the Church of Jesus Christ is a privilege only when we avail ourselves of the opportunity for service. We must remember that the fundamental principles of the gospel, even though the ordinances are administered by one having authority will save us only as we make them principles of life and allow them to develop within us that character through which God, by his grace, can save us. In other words, if we believe, repent, are baptized, and receive the laying on of hands only to appease a demanding God, we fail. But if we realize that the first step toward greater service is to believe in the program of the One who asks such service—that it is necessary to conform our will to his will, that we need publicly to enlist in his cause, and that we must have the guidance of his Spirit in our efforts, then we shall assure the success of the Restoration Movement and justify our church membership. Independence Zion's Leaguers Plan

Resurrection

I shall not weep to see the sun go down;
In its last rays I see the forecast of the dawn.

I shall not mourn when autumn fills the land;
Nor say that all is death 'neath winter's
hand;

The earth but sleeps through dark and cold;
My hope is in the promise spring doth hold.

—Frances M. Mills

Consider the Lily

By Alice Crossan

"God," she was saying, "I've asked you lots of times, and you must have been too busy to help me. But now I just have to have a flower on my Easter Lily."

THE FIRST TIME Ann saw the lily, it was nothing more than a dry, grayish-brown bulb. Mrs. Vickerson, who lived next door and raised Easter lilies for florists all over the United States, had given it to Cathy, who was fond of flowers.

"Plant it in a flower pot," she had instructed, placing it in the small hand, "and if you'll remember not to water it too often, you should have a nice lily for Easter Sunday."

Cathy had scurried home with the bulb, excitedly demanding a pot for it and a place for it in the sun.

Ann had taken the bulb and turned it over and over in her hands. Cathy, watching her mother curiously, had piped, "Auntie Vickerson says it's a Creole bulb. What's a Creole bulb, Mommy? She says this one will grow into a beautiful lily and have flowers on it for Easter Sunday."

"I'm not an authority on lilies," Ann had responded without much interest. "Auntie Vickerson knows about things like that—so ask her. But she's right about the flower. If you'll take good care of it, Cathy, this ugly little bulb will grow into a lovely flower."

Now that was quite a pretty saying, she reflected bitterly as soon as the words were out of her mouth. Such a nice thought! I really ought to write it down. Ugly things have a habit of becoming beautiful if they are tended faithfully. But no—she was not going to take a lesson from a lily bulb. That was too much. She was not going to tell herself parables, because in her heart she knew that nothing beautiful would ever grow out of her life again—the desolate, I-walk-alone life she had endured for more than a year since Bob and little Boots had gone out of it.

"Time is the only thing that can really help, Ann," they had told her—trite, perhaps, but nevertheless kindly. "Your life isn't over; you're still a young woman with years before you. And you have Cathy to think of." It was something like telling a life prisoner that he had never looked so healthy. Small comfort, but Ann had thanked them and continued to walk alone.

PEOPLE MEANT TO be kind, she realized that. They had done a great deal for her from that first anguished hour of knowing that Bob and little Bruce would not come back. But the real trouble was that they did not understand at all. They did not know that the agony under her calm mask grew like a cancer on her very soul. Instead of making things easier as time went on, the memories of Bob only made life without him more unbearable. She remembered the day she had found his old paint clothes downstairs. She had cried over the smeared shoes with their knotted laces and their funny, turned-up toes. One glance at them and she was seeing him again painting her kitchen cupboards the last time they had done spring house cleaning. He should be walking in his shoes still. He had been too young to die—only thirty-three years old. Bitterness choked her.

And the time she had opened the family Bible that had been given to them for a wedding present to find Bob's beloved and familiar writing scawled across some verse they had once disagreed upon.

And the numberless times she had awakened at night, ready to die of loneliness and grief, only to find him gone—forever gone—and herself alone in a room to which he would never return.

These things her friends and neighbors did not suspect. By day, she might stoically disguise the ache that was now constant in her heart; but with the coming of darkness, there was no longer any reason to pretend, and all the old hurt returned to torture her so that no night had passed since Bob's death that her tears did not fall despairingly onto her pillow. She had not mourned so much for little Boots. He had been a part of her life for only three years. She had loved them both, her husband and her little son, but she had not needed Bruce as she needed Bob.

And why had not God been satisfied to take only one? Why had he taken Bob, too, when without him there was no reason to go on living? In her heart, month by futile month, she had built up resentment toward the judgments of God, himself—she had built with such thoroughness and firmness that there was no room left in her heart for faith or hope.

SHE LOOKED contemplatively at the bulb. Surely it held no visible promise of future beauty. Yet, if it were put into the earth . . .

“Take it, Cathy,” she had said sharply.

“Mommy, I want a flower pot for it. Help me find one,” pleaded the little girl.

They found a pot for it, planted it, and Cathy began watching over it tenderly, day after day. It took a long time coming up. But when at last the first green spear appeared, Cathy showed no surprise. It simply had not occurred to her that the lily might not grow.

Weeks passed. Under the lavish care she gave it, the lily thrived and grew. And just before Easter week, when Auntie Vickerson dropped in to ask for plants to use at the Sunday service, she had declared that it was really large enough now to have buds.

Cathy watched for these buds. Many times each day she looked the plant over carefully to see if one had appeared. Her first thought after school was the lily. So absorbed was she in producing a flower that Ann, in spite of pretended indifference, found her own interest growing. It would be a shame if the lily did not bloom for Easter when the child had her heart so set upon it, she told herself. But immediately Cathy’s mother had shrugged. It might as well be now as later, for some time Cathy must learn disappointment. She must realize that she could not always have everything she wished for.

Three days before Easter the plant had not put forth a single bud. Ann, although she did not say so to the child, knew it could not bloom in time. She was very practical about the whole thing. She even knew what she would say to comfort Cathy when the flower did not come. But Cathy did not give up hope. At night she included the lily in her prayers. At this, Ann smiled, and nothing more.

A STEALTHY movement in the dining room awakened Ann the night before Easter Sunday. At first, frightened, she had simply remained in her bed. Then, after listening in panic for a few minutes, she realized that the muffled sounds she could hear above the pounding of her own heart were being made by Cathy, who must have climbed out of bed and was in the dining room where all the plants were kept, looking at the lily. Ann slid out of bed and went to the door. In the moonlight, Cathy looked like a plump cherub in her long white nightdress. But Cathy did not look like Bob. Cathy looked like her Aunt Lois. Little Bruce had been the one who resembled his father.

Ann saw that the child’s fingers caressed the plant. She would have called to her, since her feet were bare and the uncovered floor was cold, but before she could speak, Cathy had begun a conversation of her own.

“God,” she was saying, “I’ve asked you lots of times, and you must have been too busy to help me. But now I just have to have a flower on my Easter lily. You see, when Auntie Vickerson first gave it to me, I thought I would get a flower on it and then give it to Mommy for Easter to make her happy. But nothing makes her happy any more, because you took Daddy and little Bruce away from us. Mommy must have loved them best of anything.

Better than me—better than you, too, I think. And so if you’ll let a flower come tonight, I’ll take the lily tomorrow and put it on their graves. And then maybe Mommy will be happy about that.”

Ann’s face was buried in her pillow when Cathy returned to her own small bed, but she was shedding no tears. This night she was thinking of someone besides herself and of something more urgent than her own grief. She saw that in failing Cathy, she had also been failing Bob, and the great need she felt to do something for him was satisfied. Why, taking care of Cathy was doing something for him—just as surely as cooking his meals, washing his clothes, or writing weekly letters to his mother.

She thought of Cathy, nine years old. Cathy, who had suffered, too, in a way no adult understands, and who had lost not only father and brother but mother as well, yet had kept faith.

Before the first Easter Sunday, faith such as hers bore mortals step by step across the sea. Children are born with it—older disciples must either preserve or acquire it. Whatever her other losses had been, Ann understood now that losing her power to believe had been her greatest loss.

She could not see the fragile flower on the lily, neither could she see the reason why Bob had been taken away. But that did not mean that on some tomorrow she might not see the blossom or understand God’s reason and know that it was good.

And so, when they awoke on Easter morning, neither the woman nor the child was much surprised to see the dainty white flower fully opened before the sunlit window.

BULLETIN BOARD

Silver Lake Reunion

The Pacific Northwest—Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, and northern Idaho—will hold its annual reunion on the Silver Lake reunion grounds near Everett, Washington, July 30 to August 8. President Israel A. Smith, Apostle Roscoe E. Davey, and other general church officers will be present. Additional grounds have been purchased for camping.

This information is for the benefit of those who wish to schedule their vacations for that date. Pastors and district leaders are urged to make the announcement for those who do not take the Herald.

J. L. VERHEI,
Program Committee.

Idaho-Utah District Restoration Festival

The Idaho-Utah District Restoration Festival week will be observed April 9 to 11 in Boise. J. L. Verhei, president of the Portland District, will be guest speaker. For information concerning the Saturday evening banquet and for tickets, contact Virginia Haas, 408 Idaho Street, Boise, Idaho.

Chatham District Spring Conference

The spring conference of Chatham District will be held in Chatham, Grand Avenue and James Street, on April 3 and 4. The schedule of services is as follows: Saturday, 3 p.m., business meeting for election of General Conference delegates; 7:30 p.m., entertainment; Sunday, 9:30 a.m., prayer service; 11 a.m., sermon by Leonard Lea; 2:30 p.m., classes for men and women, and a meeting for church school directors. The Sunday noon meal will be served by the Chatham women's department.

PEARL CANNIFF,
Secretary.

Celebrate Sixtieth Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Paul J. Brose of Kansas City, Kansas, observed their sixtieth wedding anniversary on March 20. They have lived in Kansas City for fifty years and are active members of the Grandview congregation. Mr. Brose is eighty-two, Mrs. Brose, seventy-nine; both came from Germany in 1888. They have four children: Carl Brose and Mrs. Alma Warren of Kansas City; Fred G. Brose of Wichita, Kansas; and Mrs. Martha Oldfather of McAllen, Texas; three grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. For the past thirty-seven years they have made their home at 20 South Eleventh Street.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Fannie Miller, Tiburon, California, requests prayers that she be healed of her affliction.

Sarah Hoerning, 722 North Liberty, Independence, Missouri, asks the prayers of the Saints that she might be healed of a nervous condition. She has been deaf for many years.

Mrs. Pearl Brett of Mascotte, Florida, asks the prayers of the Saints for her husband who has been ill for the past four months. He is seventy-two years old and apparently cannot be helped by medical aid.

Benito Maliwat, 1014 West Linden, Independence, Missouri, asks for continued prayers that his hand may be healed. He will be happy to hear from his friends.

Prayers are requested for Frank O. Honz of Logan, Iowa, who is a patient at the I. C. R. Hospital in Chicago.

Mrs. Della Loof of Lyons, Michigan, asks the prayers of the Saints for her mother, Mrs.

Laura Smith, 715 Emily Avenue, Lansing, Michigan, who suffered a heart attack on January 16 and will have to remain in bed for at least a year. She is the wife of the pastor of the Jackson, Michigan, congregation and isolated members in that area; because of her illness, she is unable to assist him in his work. She will appreciate hearing from her church friends.

DEATHS

DAVIS.—Roy P., was born February 20, 1884, at Minto, North Dakota, and died September 3, 1947, at his home in Everett, Washington, after a short illness. He was baptized June 23, 1914, by his brother, the late E. R. Davis, at Glentena, Montana. Later, he moved with his family to Washington, where, on February 25, 1923, he was ordained a priest.

He is survived by his wife, Edith; a son, Leroy Davis; three daughters: Audrey Anderson, Lavina Weeks, and Mazel Davis; two brothers, Clair and Benjamin Davis; and six grandchildren. A son, Orlo Reese, preceded him in death. Elders George Brundage and Elliott Gilberts were in charge of the funeral service. Burial was in Cypress Lawn Cemetery.

McKENZIE.—James, was born on January 25, 1862, in Blenheim, Ontario, and died January 30, 1948, at Independence, Missouri. In 1884, he was married to Emily Jane Pelton, and both were baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1888. He moved to Independence in 1921 and for a number of years operated a grocery store on East Fifteenth Street.

He is survived by his wife; four daughters: Mrs. Lavern Niles of Mackinaw City, Michigan; Mrs. C. C. Moore of Denver, Colorado; Mrs. Ralph A. Harder of the home, and Mrs. D. S. McNamara of Arnolds Park, Iowa; one son, Jack McKenzie of the home; eighteen grandchildren; twenty-three great-grandchildren; and one great-great-grandchild. Elders Richard Weaver and C. Ed. Miller officiated at the funeral. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

(Continued on page 24.)

From the Cross

(Continued from page 9.)

claimed no distinction in manner of death nor in the severity of his suffering. In these latter days, many people have suffered far greater physical pain and have survived. Yet the very ignominy and commonness of the method of his death was characteristic of the way of Christ. The Romans, at the instigation of the temple gang, would insist on the method of crucifixion if for no other reason than that he should die in the same way as did thieves and murderers.

Christ had no happiness in his death, although there was a personal satisfaction that he was fulfilling the will of his father. A man of human caliber would not want to see his mother or his close friends suffer. Even a man of predominately divine qualities would not purposely or even knowingly bring mental anguish to those he loved and by whom he was loved. But once more—the real purpose of the crucifixion must pre-empt place above all other thoughts.

AND SO CHRIST LOOKED down from the cross. He understood human psychology, so well that he safely could have predicted the future movements and reactions of his disciples. He knew which men would go fishing and which would still cling to the promise of the Master that he would return. He could have uttered a few words to assure their future allegiance and to demonstrate his ability at mind reading. But he knew that this would not be the most effective means of cementing their loyalty, for his veiled hints and numerous allusions to this event had been lost on these earth-minded men.

Have you ever contemplated what might have happened in the lives of some of the Biblical characters if they had not heard the message of Christ? Peter probably would have remained a Galilean fisherman, concerned with nets and catches. Others would have been tax-collectors, farmers, tentmakers, or vagabonds. They were ordinary individuals who needed the spark of zeal and divine guidance to change them into religious men. A glance at any one of these individual lives would suffice to prove that Christ could so change men's lives that their entire purpose became altered.

Thus the taunts contained a great and basic truth. Christ did save others, nor did his physical death stop this process. Through the following centuries, the divine philosophy and purpose of the life of Jesus Christ has worked among men to evoke change—to save mankind.

Since salvation is a personal and ever-pertinent problem for every individual, the original purpose of Christ's death must be reiterated often. That purpose and that death become just as vital today as at the original moment. This, then, is the only real excuse for the observance of Easter or the passion period. Today Christ looks down from the cross with the same appeal and the same concern—and ours is the decision to join the scoffers or to stand with him above the crowd.

ZION'S LEAGUERS!

Young Men and Women of Our Church!

Here is a message for you!

NOW --in your own home--

You Can Hear Our Brother Elbert Tell His Wonderful Restoration Story!

Witnesses For The Restoration

written and narrated by Brother Elbert A. Smith—recorded on unbreakable Vinylite—background music by the Stone Church choir

Now, no matter where you are—Chicago or Melbourne, Lamoni or Silver Springs, you can hear our Brother Elbert A. Smith tell his beautiful story of the Restoration. From your own phonograph, this record—WITNESSES FOR THE RESTORATION—will bring you his powerful testimony, and a striking challenge to church youth everywhere.

Written and narrated by Brother Smith against the stirring background music of our Stone Church choir, this record is filled with inspiration and spirit. His is a prophetic and historic word—a testimony for our church that should become a part of everyone of us.

RECORDED
both sides

You must hear this message . . . it is directed especially to the youth of the church but every member will want to hear it. Told in his own words, it is Brother Smith's story of the Restoration Movement. It is a dignified and superb presentation.

Send for your record soon—hear this wonderful story over and over again. All you need to do is clip the coupon below and send direct to Stone Church Recordings, Herald House, Independence, Mo. Send check or money order—or if you prefer, we will charge your account and bill you later. You must order soon—the supply is limited.

MUSIC by the Stone Church Choir under the direction of Paul Craig—musical theme—"The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning."

UNBREAKABLE Vinylite plastic records. These records are pressed from red Vinylite and are unbreakable. Recording was done in the church's own studio in the Stone Church—records were manufactured by Muzak Corporation of America in New York.

LEAGUERS—You'll want to use this record at some special worship service. It will provide an ideal theme for prayer meetings, retreats, Zion's League banquets.

WITNESSES FOR THE RESTORATION is an inspiring word from an inspiring leader to the youth of the church.

Order now!

Send me _____ copies of Brother Elbert A. Smith's "Witnesses For the Restoration" at $2.50 each.

I am enclosing check or money order (.....)

Please charge my account and bill (.....)

Name.....

Address.....

City..... Zone..... State.....

Stone Church Recordings

HERALD HOUSE • INDEPENDENCE, MO.

Clip This Coupon!

GARLAND.—Telitha Elizabeth Lee Morris, was born June 1, 1866, and died February 16, 1948, at Murray, Kentucky. She was first married to James Morris; one daughter, Mrs. Myrtle Smith, and a son, William G. Morris, were born to this marriage. Later, she was married to Joseph Garland, a member of the Reorganized Church. Through his influence and the ministry of Elder J. M. Nunley, she was converted to the Latter Day Gospel, being baptized in 1916. Besides her children, she leaves two grandchildren and one great-grandchild. The Reverend Loyd Wilson officiated at the funeral. Burial was in Barnette Cemetery.

CRONNOBLE.—Alice Allen, was born February 17, 1870, at Cold Springs, Wisconsin, and died March 1, 1948, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lloyd L. Frost in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, where she had been living for several months. She was married to Abner A. De Zotell in November, 1887; Mr. De Zotell died in 1908. She was then married to Frank Cronnoble on March 7, 1910. Since 1911, she had resided in Sioux Falls. She was a member of the Reorganized Church.

PERKINS.—W. O., was born July 20, 1866, at Des Moines, Iowa, and died February 29, 1948, at McAlester, Oklahoma. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Elder J. B. Wildermuth in 1899. T. E. Fitzwater was in charge of the funeral service. Burial was in the Fanshawe, Oklahoma, cemetery.

RILEY.—Nora Shearer, was born November 22, 1869, at Little Sioux, Iowa, and died at the home of her daughter in Omaha, Nebraska, following a brief illness. (Date of death not given.) She was baptized into the Reorganized Church as a young girl. In 1887, she was married to Zenos H. Riley at Little Sioux. For the past fifty-five years, she had been a resident of Omaha.

She leaves one daughter, Mrs. Hazel McKirahan; two sons: C. Y. and Ward B. Riley; and a sister, Mrs. Mabel Lewis, all of Omaha; five grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren. Elders John Blackmore and Carl Self were in charge of the funeral service. Interment was in West Lawn Cemetery in Omaha.

BELDIN.—Jeanette Rene, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Beldin of Lamoni, Iowa, died February 13, 1948, at the age of four months and twenty days. Besides her parents, she leaves a sister, Janice Kaye. Services were held at the Marsh Funeral Chapel, Elders Arthur Lane and Robert Farnham officiating. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery.

WHEELING.—Verda Olds, died January 29, 1948, at Port Arthur, Texas, at the age of forty-two. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1942, being baptized at Miami, Oklahoma. She is survived by her husband, Cubert Wheeling, and a daughter, Mrs. John Ward of Port Arthur.

TREVEY.—James Edward, son of David A. and Mary Elizabeth Trevey, was born in Rockbridge County, Virginia, on January 12, 1870, and died February 19, 1948, at Independence, Missouri, following a stroke. With his family, he moved to western Texas when he was twelve years old, where he remained until 1900. Going then to Oklahoma, he became a telegraph lineman for the Rock Island Railroad, remaining with the company for thirty-seven years. He retired as a division lineman in 1938. On July 26, 1905, he was married to Alice Kramer, a school teacher of Beacon, Iowa. On February 3, 1909, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Waureka, Oklahoma; he was ordained a deacon at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in 1922. Following his retirement, he and his wife spent three years traveling in the United States, then purchased a home in Independence. Here he was active in church work and was employed as a caretaker at the Auditorium. He was a lover of flowers and often contributed them for church services. He was a member of the Men's Club and the Mr. Herman Lodge of the Masonic fraternity at Cedar Rapids. Funeral services were held at the Stone Church, Elders Claude Smith and Hubert Case officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

FAIRBROTHER.—Ernest W., son of David and Mary Fairbrother, was born December 8, 1869, at Green Bay, Wisconsin, and died February 8, 1948, at San Diego, California. He had been in ill health for the last ten years. Making his home in Bantry, North Dakota, in 1889, he married Rose Wager, to whom seven children were born. Mrs. Fairbrother preceded him in death on October 13, 1921. On April 11, 1942, he married Mary Decker at San Diego. He was a member of the Reorganized Church. He is survived by his wife; three sons;

Mary A. Burlington
1510½ Jules
St. Joseph, Missouri

92867
18
h

Fraser E., David C. of Bantry, and Dr. William Fairbrother of Inglewood, California; four daughters: Mrs. K. M. Blakeslee of Erie, Pennsylvania; Mrs. C. E. Hartman and Mrs. E. D. Hodges of San Diego, California; and Mrs. E. H. Andrews of Inglewood. Funeral services were conducted at Bantry, Elder C. F. Young officiating.

SCHRUNK.—Mabel E., daughter of Robert and Mary Gull, was born March 1, 1879, in Colesburg, Iowa, and died at her home in Atkinson, Nebraska, on February 18, 1948, following a long illness. She was married to John F. Schrunk on February 13, 1901. Two of the fourteen children born to them died in infancy. Mrs. Schrunk united with the Reorganized Church in 1912, remaining a faithful member until her passing. She was loved for her sympathetic consideration and understanding of others and for her cheery smile. She leaves her husband; eight daughters: Ina Roth, Lusetta Alton, Ruth Andrus, and Lois Ries of Atkinson; Ida Boles of Chadwick, Missouri; Ethel Rzeozotarski of Emmet, Nebraska; Mabel Banks of Elgin, Nebraska; and Pearl Moore of Albion, Nebraska; four sons: Francis and John of Lincoln, Nebraska; Earl of Ewing, Nebraska; and Ralph of Pine Bluffs, Wyoming; her mother, Mary Gull of Colesburg, Iowa; five sisters: Mrs. Jess Walters, Mrs. Frank Bush, Mrs. Mamie Bush, and Mrs. Herbert Olson, all of Iowa, and Mrs. Matt Kirschbaum of Pavillion; three brothers: Arthur, Harry, and John, also of Iowa; and twenty-nine grandchildren. Services were conducted at the Methodist Church in Atkinson, Seventy A. L. Loving and Elder Harold Reid officiating. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery in Atkinson.

Videograph

... the finest in

FLANNEL BACKGROUNDS

You'll find these flannel backgrounds make visual teaching a pleasure and a success. Videograph gives you the following features:

1. Bible-land accuracy
2. Brilliant; rich colors
3. Heavy flannel of soft fine texture
4. Superb art work
5. 12 different scenes for all Bible stories

The size is the standard 24 x 36 inches

$3.95 each

Scenes

- 901 • Temple
- 902 • Outdoor
- 903 • Room Interior
- 904 • Grassy Slope
- 905 • Village
- 906 • Seascape
- 907 • Mt. Sinai
- 908 • Night
- 909 • Village Street
- 910 • Christmas
- 911 • Easter
- 912 • General Outdoor

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Independence, Missouri

Photo by Annando Kramer

Empty Clouds and the Thirsty Land

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

APRIL 3, 1948

NUMBER 14

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Psalm 1948

Of whom shall we be afraid?
 Though rulers cast atomic shadows on tomorrow's day,
 Thou, Master of men and matter,
 will illumine our way.

Oh, God, we fear such earthly foes—the uncertain might and motives of rumored enemies;
 the gluttony of dictatorial birds of prey;
 undefined disasters brewing in social and economic mistrials.

These man-created dangers distress and dismay.

But Thy voice has silenced thundering tempests and whispered softly in our ear;
 Thy hand has spanned creation's outposts and reached down to still our fear.

Of whom shall we be afraid?

ALETA RUNKLE

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:
"Fraternally Yours"	3
Across the Desk	4
OFFICIAL:
Appointment of Bishop's Agent in Holland	4
ARTICLES:
Send Me Forth, by Arthur J. Rock	5
Face the Truth, by Ruth Selzer	6
Kingdom-Builders in the Making, by Verda E. Bryant	7
History of the Blue Bird Flag	9
What I Expect of My Religion, by Ruby Tinkham	10
My Friend Time, by Evangelist Ray Whiting	11
The Seventy Present Sources of Sermon Materials, by Maurice L. Draper	12
Letters	14
Worship Suggestions for May, by Sadi Anka Moon	16
How Mother Can Help Her Prekindergarten Child, by Lena Wells Jones	18
The Joy of Garden-making, by Addie C. Van Syoc	19
The Tolling Bells, by Melvin L. Fowler	20
Briefs	22
Bulletin Board	23

AUDITORIUM NEWS

* DESK NUMBER ONE

It was good, the other day, to be permitted a few minutes' interview with the First Presidency, gathered about the number one desk of the church. President Israel A. Smith, with a manuscript before him, looked well and strong; Brother J. F. Garver was still pink from his exposure to Australian sunshine; and Brother F. H. Edwards reflected the mood of his survey trip to the West Coast. All three were smiling, and it was easy to ask, "What are you talking about?" The response was unanimous, "Plans for the next General Conference!" . . . It will be next fall, you know, and we hope you can come.

* SURVEY TRIPS

A survey group including President F. H. Edwards, Bishop H. L. Livingston, and Apostles C. R. Hield, E. J. Gleazer, and W. Wallace Smith, will visit and report on Denver, Colorado, and vicinity. Tulsa and neighboring territory will be visited by some members of this group and Apostle D. T. Williams. This will be accomplished in time to permit members of the quorums to return to Independence in time for the spring sessions of the Joint Council in April.

* PRESIDENT ISREAL A. SMITH will make visits, with Apostle Gleazer, to Michigan and Indiana, including the dedication of a church at Fort Wayne on April 25, and Detroit, Port Huron, Midland, and Flint during some days following. The Kalamazoo church will be visited May 1 and 2. President Smith will make contacts with our large membership in five different districts of the church, and also visit college and university groups of Ann Arbor and Lansing at the latter place.

* PRIESTHOOD INSTITUTE

President F. H. Edwards and Bishop G. L. DeLapp are to be the visiting general church officials at a priesthood institute for Michigan and Northern Indiana, at Detroit, May 7 to 9.

* COUNCIL BLUFFS

V. D. Ruch, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, reports: On the twenty-fifth, another baptismal service was held here; I baptized five people from Council Bluffs, and Elder M. A. Smith baptized seven from the Crescent Branch. . . . Counting the fourteen we baptized in January, this makes a total of nineteen for the branch this year. . . . At a special business meeting on Monday, February 9, the branch voted to buy a new Baldwin electric organ, which will cost about $3,000. We have $760 in our organ fund. Two of the brethren are giving $500 each. This leaves us a little less than $1,300 more to raise. The organ is ordered and a down payment made. We expect delivery about May 1.

* TULSA

L. W. Kohlman at Tulsa, Oklahoma, writes in his report for February: Success blessed our efforts on Sunday, February 22, when we officially organized a new group of Saints here. Five adults and one child were baptized on this day, and the work is off to a good start. It is planned to give supplemental help to this group from Tulsa. We shared in eleven baptisms this month—six at Muskogee, four at Tulsa, and one at Skiatook.

"Fraternally Yours"

MOST RELIGIOUS GROUPS have their characteristic salutations and greetings. Often they are adopted from the custom of some loved leader, who has instituted them. In the days of "Brother Joseph," first president of the Reorganization, many letters were concluded with the words, "Yours in Gospel Bonds." When the groups of church people were small and had to meet opposition everywhere, the bonds of loyalty and affection that held them together were very strong and deeply appreciated. To see them mentioned in letters brought a feeling of warmth and fellowship. Despite the scattered condition of the membership, they were very much aware of those bonds.

The passing of the years brought changes, and among them, with the accession of President Frederick M. Smith, son of Joseph, to office, there was a new emphasis on the Gathering. It found its place in the thinking and speech of the people, and "Brother Fred M." epitomized it in the closing salutation of his letters, "Fraternally yours." Its meaning, "brotherly," fitted the need of the time, and pointed to the spirit of cooperation called for in laying the foundations for building Zion, which was the great hope of his life. It appears that President Smith made a permanent contribution to our letter writing, for many of us continue to use the phrase. There is nothing that can quite take its place. Greetings used by some other religious groups seem a bit effusive and overladen to us—at any rate they are not ours. More popular greetings are somewhat on the cold and secular order. "Fraternally Yours" just fits, and helps to preserve a happy memory of the leader who made it current. And after all, what could be finer than the brotherly spirit it reflects?

DURING HOLY WEEK, Apostle C. G. Mesley delivered a fine series of sermons at Stone Church, Independence. Though some evenings were stormy, the meetings were splendidly attended. On Thursday evening, "Maundy Thursday"—to use its real name, as Brother Mesley reminded us, we celebrated the institution of the Lord's Supper. In Scripture readings by the pastor, Glaude Smith, and in a beautiful message by Apostle Mesley, the story of the first Lord's Supper was presented, with its significance for us today. Though a storm threatened that evening and broke heavily during the service, every seat was filled, and the people reverently enjoyed a fine experience together.

It would be hard to remember any time in the history of the church here when meetings have been generally better attended, when we have had any finer congregations of people, or when there was a better and more hopeful spirit. Truly it is a joy to have a part in the church work here today, and to have the privilege of contributing to it in some small way.

Interchurch co-operation, too, has brought the most friendly and happy state of affairs. It was always encouraged by our leading church officers, and they have made large contributions of time and energy to civic and interchurch work, which now appears to be a wise investment, as well as a Christian service. As one-time head of the Ministerial Alliance, Pastor G. E. Tickemyer brought a fine development of interchurch co-operation, and in the same position Pastor Glaude Smith has made excellent further progress. Two of our pastors participated in the talks of a three-hour Good Friday service on "The Seven Last Words of Christ," at the First Methodist Church. Our Children's Choir sang at a special service for children at the Christian Church. Very friendly attitudes characterize all the work, and many who are not members are learning about the church in attending our services. There is indeed a fine fraternity in the relationships of most of the Christian groups at work here in Independence. Furthermore, reports of the activities of our church people everywhere else indicate increased cooperation with ministerial organizations, better public relations, better newspaper publicity, wider recognition of the contribution the church and its people have to make to city and community life.

TO REMEMBER always the distinctive character, the unique mission, the special contributions of the church, is our task. No other people have the same understanding of "this gospel of the kingdom" that ours have. If our church were ever to lose its purpose and mission, the cause of Christ would suffer a reversal and a loss of hope almost irreparable. A new beginning would have to be made. The responsibility resting upon us is tremendous, and we are yet very far from having met it.

But in our warfare against the paganism, wickedness and corruption of the world, the selfishness of humanity, the evils of great powers, it is good and wise for us to recognize that we have strong allies and powerful friends in other church groups and organizations. We have much more in common with them than with the pagan world. While our evangelism must be directed to the winning of the souls of men and women wherever we find them, we can help most in the betterment of the world by converting people from sin, agnosticism, and paganism. We can contribute more in helping to increase the total size of the Chris-

(Continued on page 22.)

Editorial

Across the Desk

Randall Hulse, pastor of the Pontiac, Michigan, congregation, writes: "The adult class number two has accomplished its project—the raising of $100 for relief work on the European Continent. This was made possible by the sponsoring of a supper at the church plus personal contributions by the members of the class.

"Enclosed you will find the money. We shall appreciate having some mention of this accomplishment appear in the Herald—not for any personal or group glory, but because it may inspire other classes to set similar goals."

Push the Missionary Work!

The following statements are selected from a letter sent to pastors and high councilmen of Central Missouri Stake by President Ward A. Hougas. Most of the branches in the stake have registered gains in attendance ranging from 25 to 143 per cent.

"We should be able to increase the number of our congregations continuously. Five years from now, we could easily have thirty if each high councilman and pastor will accept the challenge of expansion. The fear that many possess is seldom justified. Some pastors still feel they should give all their time and attention to 'feeding the flock.' The truth is that when any congregation becomes interested in fostering another mission, it does more toward feeding the flock. Instantly the prayer meetings take on new spiritual life. No longer do members have to go back fifty years for a testimony. Preaching takes on new, up-to-the-minute life. Membership begins to grow.

"What are you doing about it? In your territory, what are you planning? Every congregation should be working on some new opening. Use the young adults, the Zion's League, the extra priesthood members, the older adults. Let us reach out and begin to form some new centers.

"In nearly every congregation there are a few families who live at a distance from the place of meeting. Look to them first. Perhaps their homes should be used as focal points. Perhaps there is a school house or an unused church. You don't need half a hundred people to begin. In any situation where you can get two or three families together, begin!

"Look around. What can you do to help? Our progress during the next five years will be slow indeed if we are content to stay just where we are. It is your major responsibility. Our record for the past four years has been fine. Let's expand it now and really show growth in the months and years ahead of us.

Radio Operator in Elko, Nevada, Hopes to Communicate With Other Members

Apostle W. Wallace Smith writes: "I am visiting today in the home of Brother and Sister Marvin L. Small, Box 69, 789 Carlin Court Street, Elko, Nevada. They are the only members in this town of about 5,000 population. They are isolated after being converted to the gospel some four years ago by Brother and Sister Arthur Gibbs. First contact was while en route to Honolulu, and later contact by the Gibbs in Honolulu. They were baptized last June by Elder Herbert Blakeman, pastor of the Lennox, California, branch. They have three children: Gerry, Arthur, and Helen; the latter is three weeks old. Brother Small is a radio operator for the C. A. A. field

OFFICIAL

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent in Holland

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Brother Anton Compier, Rosemarijnstraat 44, Rotterdam, Holland, as bishop's agent of Holland, succeeding Brother Casper Kaat.

We take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation to Brother Kaat for the years of service that he has rendered the church in this office, and ask that the Saints continue their support to Brother Compier.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
G. L. DeLapp.

Approved by The First Presidency

here in Elko. He is also a 'ham' operator, and hopes to be able to communicate with some other amateur operators of the church."

May we suggest that friendly letters would help these isolated members?

Correction

On page 204 of the February 28 issue of the Herald near the bottom of column three is a quotation from John 10: 16, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold . . ." Following this is a sentence which reads, "These 'other sheep' could not have been the Gentiles, for Jesus said, 'I am not sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.'" This last quotation is completely reversed in meaning by the omission of the word "but." It should read, "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Evan A. Fry.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

April 3, 1948

Number 14

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards, ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $3.50 per year and $1.75 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $3.75 per year and $1.90 for six months; other countries, $4.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

Send Me Forth

I beseech you therefore . . . that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. . . . Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me.—Romans 12: 1; Isaiah 6: 8.

THERE IS A STORY about a soldier in the Civil War, who took along his kit of watchmaker's tools. While in camp, he did considerable business. One day, when the order came in to strike the tents and prepare for battle, he looked around his tent in dismay and exclaimed, "Why, I can't possibly go; I have twelve watches to repair, which I have promised by Saturday night!" That man had forgotten what he enlisted for. He had come into the army to serve his country, and then when he was called upon to go into battle, he could think only of the extra work that hindered his call to service.

How many of us are so burdened with the extra activities we think are important that when God calls us to service, we say we cannot go because the jobs at hand keep us? I have begun to realize what it means to leave all these little tasks which once seemed so important and begin to do the most important thing in life—serving the Master. Life has always seemed very complicated with detailed work so filling my days and nights that I had not the time to spend in full service to my Lord. Now the time has come when I must choose between the lesser things and the more important. The choice has been made and, like the song, I say, "Send me forth, O blessed Master! Here am I, send me!"

WHEN WE MAKE such a statement, what do we have in mind? For what have we enlisted? Do we want it made known publicly that we are enlisted in God's great work only to again resume our thousand and one little private enterprises? We all have our own reasons for enlisting in such a cause. Though it seems we all have different ways of expressing our desires to serve, the goals and aims are the same. I like to think that we have enlisted in the cause of building the kingdom of God on earth, where it can be of help in promulgating and furthering the work of Christ and his Father. If we have enlisted that we might help in the establishment of the kingdom, then the work which lies ahead of us cannot be hindered by other things that may enter into our lives.

There are days of preparation when we stay in the tents, as did the soldier. Those days are filled with study and preparation so that when the call comes to put on the armor, we may be ready to meet the foe. We must lay aside everything that would hinder our progress, never forgetting the goal we have in mind and striving to reach it at any cost. The fight against the forces of evil is not an easy one. We may think that all is quiet and the evil forces have gone elsewhere to work their foul deeds, but in the hour we are caught off guard is when they strike hardest.

THERE ARE MANY of us who soon forget the blessing of God and how, in our hour of trial, he was near and aided us in carrying the load or provided for us in our time of need. The children of Israel furnish us with a good example. They had ample opportunity to test God's goodness at the time of the crossing of the Red Sea; but as they continued their journey through the wilderness, fed by daily supplies of manna, they began to crave meat. They complained and begged and pleaded with Moses. They forgot

By Arthur J. Rock

God's works and waited not for his counsel. When the quails came in response to their demand, they gorged themselves until they could eat no more. Then a plague broke out and some died. They had received what they wanted and decided they didn't really need it after all. They failed to look ahead to their ultimate goal and the possibility of being led out of bondage and being brought to a land where they could pursue a happy way of living in keeping with God's laws.

How like the ancient Israelites we become, complaining because we do not have meat, although the lighter food is sufficient to nourish us. We lose sight of the ultimate goal and the opportunity to be of service to our Lord. We hinder his work when we could aid in the development of souls hungering for even the manna from heaven. We burden ourselves with the little cares of life, letting the big problems go unsolved. We tend to substitute less important activities for the most important. We don't give of our best to the Master even when we say, "Here am I, send me." We make a promise and soon forget the responsibility which accompanies that promise of our service to God and his Son. We don't give of the best to the Master; we give only the second best. We flatter ourselves that we are in God's work, asking his blessings upon it and thinking he has failed us when he doesn't bless our second best efforts.

IF WE WOULD be valiant soldiers of Christ, we must be ever mindful of the word given to us in Luke 17 concerning the coming of Christ.

and the gathering of the Saints. We must keep in mind Christ's second coming when the Son of Man is revealed. "In that day, the disciple, who shall be on the housetop, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away; and he who is in the field, let him likewise not return back. Whosoever shall seek to save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life, shall preserve it. I tell you, in that night there shall be two in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left. Two shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. And they answered and said unto him, Where Lord, shall they be taken? And he said unto them, Wheresoever the body is gathered; or, in other words, whithersoever the saints are gathered."

That is a challenge to us to be valiant soldiers, never faltering in our endeavor to bring to pass God's will. In a poem from one of our army service bulletins we find "The Christian Soldier" expressed in these lines:

Passionately fierce the voice of God is pleading,
Pleading with men to arm them for fight;
See how those hands, majestically bleeding,
Call us to rout the armies of the night.

Not to the work of sordid, selfish saving
Of our own souls to dwell with him on high,
But to the soldier's splendid selfless braving,
Eager to fight for righteousness and die.

Peace does not mean the end of all our striving,
Joy does not mean the drying of all our tears,
Peace is the power that comes to souls arriving
Up to the light where God himself appears.

—Author unknown.

Face the Truth

By Ruth Selzer

*There was once an old sailor my grandfather knew
Who had so many things which he wanted to do
That, whenever he thought it was time to begin,
He couldn't because of the state he was in.*

DOES NOT THAT little bit of poetic nonsense pretty well describe the world today? Fears, anxieties, rumblings of war, indifference, and confusion are tossing it about. Difficult days in the world at large make more tragic the lives we are trying to live. Each of us sees so many things to be done; yet we are handicapped by the state we are in. Whatever the situation and however disheartening it may be, it is a great hour when man tackles himself as the real problem. No mood may be his master. The more depressing the time, the more need of people who can maintain their morale in spite of it; and in confronting the world, they do not forget to confront themselves. Many today blame their troubles on the sad state of the world, whereas the real problem lies within them.

One must remember that some tasks are so important they must be done whether he feels like doing them or not. Great servants of mankind have passed through torments and discouragements in loyalty to their chosen purpose, like Jesus in Gethsemane.

All this calls for deep resources of character. Not people governed by moods or acting like puppets on a string. In any state of affairs, the decisive element is not so much the situation itself as the person who stands up to meet it and the way he handles it. Man must tackle himself, not merely blame circumstances. Running away, hiding behind someone else or refusing to dance to the music we have "fiddled" for ourselves will never straighten out the state we are in. "As all the water in the seven seas cannot swamp a ship unless it gets inside the ship, so all the despondency we face cannot swamp our spirits unless we let it in."

TRUE, WE HAVE our depressed moments and variable moods, but to make something worth-while out of them is wisdom. Allowing low moods to possess us instead of saying "This too shall pass" is granting them a power they need never have.

To each is given the ability to master himself, to govern his moods, to sail his ship of state. No power outside himself, no person outside himself can change his state of affairs unless he so permits. We can identify ourselves with confidence rather than fear, with hopefulness rather than anxiety, with peace rather than confusion, and get on with some of the good works the world is so much in need of.

Live by great convictions, read good books, work for noble purposes—such a philosophy will eliminate the need of despondency cures. Have some sense of inner power which will send you into each day's tasks certain that what you ought to do, you will, and what you must endure, you can.

In England, I am always struck by the initiative of the individual in all classes. I know a number of London men who go once a week to visit prisoners, talk with them, become friendly, and look after them merely as friends when their terms are over. We here in America would more likely organize a "Prison Visiting Society," have a board of directors raise funds, and employ a social worker to do the job.—James Truslow Adams in The Rotarian.

Kingdom-Builders in the Making

By VERDA E. BRYANT

This article may be used as source material for sermons to be delivered on Blue Bird-Oriole Sunday, April 25.

BLUE BIRD-ORIOLE WEEK will be celebrated in Independence April 19 to 25. The purpose is to interest the parents, the various departments of the church, and the townspeople in girls' work, to give the girls a week for celebration and fun, and to help them better appreciate their organization.

The approach of Blue Bird-Oriole Week has raised the question as to whether or not our church members understand what the Blue Birds and Orioles really are—their purposes, aims, possibilities, and accomplishments. To those who understand the programs of these two organizations, there is no room for doubt as to their value to the girls, their families, the local branches, and the churches as a whole.

Both the Blue Birds and the Orioles are under the direction of the First Presidency of the church, administered through the Department of Religious Education and particularly by the Girls Headquarters Committee. The Blue Bird program is planned for girls between the ages of seven and ten; the Orioles for girls between eleven and sixteen. The purpose of the two organizations is the same—to tie our girls closer to the church. The major objectives of the church, to which we wish to tie our girls more closely, are to evangelize the world and to Zionize the church. The Blue Birds and Orioles can go far in helping to accomplish these all-important objectives.

Through these church-sponsored organizations, girls who do not belong to our church may hear its message. They are brought into our services through participation as groups. They hear and become acquainted with our ministers. Oftentimes the desire is created within them to become members. Thus the Blue Birds and Orioles can help to evangelize the world, for there can be no disputing the fact that children tend to gravitate to the place from which their leadership comes.

Latter Day Saint girls can be more readily kept interested in the church by the girls' program. Active participation in the Blue Bird Band or the Oriole Circle satisfies the desires of girls for friendships, recreation, and self-improvement, all the while keeping these outside activities church-centered. And there is no mistaking it—children will find outside activities regardless of how well equipped their home and school life may be.

The requirements for advancement in both organizations are such that Zionie ideals are built into the lives of the girls. The spiritual side of life is made more appealing and interesting. A desire is created for high aim and purposeful living. In order to fulfill requirements, the girls must know history of the church, its doctrine, and the Book of Mormon—taught through various activities rather than through intense study such as is done in the church school—and they develop the desire and ability to participate actively, intelligently, and efficiently in the work of the church.

Through participation in the girls' program, the future homemakers of the church learn skills and develop aptitudes in homemaking which might otherwise lack appeal for them. It is more fun to cook, to sew, and to beautify the home when there is group motivation. Girls enrich their personalities, attain poise and personal charm, and develop strong, healthy, beautiful bodies. They learn habits of efficiency, co-operation, thoughtfulness, and sharing. They learn to know and love the out-of-doors and how to plan and organize recreation that is not "store-bought." Thus the Blue Birds and Orioles can help in the objective to Zionize the church.

THE EFFECTIVENESS of the Blue Bird and Oriole programs depends upon two major factors—parental co-operation and effective leadership.

There are many ways in which parents can help make the program more effective for their girls.

First: They can urge regular attendance. By careful planning and rearranging schedules in the home, most of the Blue Bird and Oriole activities can be worked in without sacrificing too much home life. There is nothing more discouraging to a girl than to have a piano lesson the afternoon her group has planned a picnic or to have an appointment with the doctor or for a permanent the day of her meeting.

Second: Parents can stimulate interest and encourage participation in the activities of the group. A common attitude of some parents is that Blue Bird and Oriole work is not very important—that their girls may belong if they wish, but if things don't go right or duties get difficult it is all right for them to quit. Decisions are too often left entirely to the girls without any parental guidance, and many parents do not encourage loyalty to the organization. Little do these parents realize that they are thus building a tendency to consider all church work in this same light, with a lack of sense of duty and loyalty. In later years, if things become difficult, someone offends them or events fail to run smoothly, a laxity in participation in church work will tend to follow because of similar experiences of their youth in Blue Birds or Orioles. A positive attitude on the part of parents will help train their girls to accept trials, disappointments, rebuffs, and discouragements in their future work and try to rise above them.

Third: Parents can spur their girls toward perfection and show an active interest in their progress. Parents often feel it is easier to do the work themselves than to help guide blundering hands. Children must start sometime to work things out for themselves, and a few words of encouragement or honest praise for effort and achievement will stimulate them toward better accomplishments.

Fourth: Parents can see that dues are promptly paid. No organization can function without money. The payment of the small dues will give the leader a working fund for incidental expenses and handcraft supplies. It is unfair to expect a leader to give unstintingly of her time and to dig down deep into her pockets for money to carry on as well. If a girl cannot pay dues, however, she is still welcome in the band or circle; but when at all possible, she should pay her own way.

Fifth: Parents can grant permission to use the home for various activities and offer their services for training the girls in specialized fields. One leader cannot hope to be efficient in all fields covered by the Blue Bird and Oriole programs; when a mother can help out in specific areas, it is a great help to the leader and the girls.

THE SECOND MAJOR factor which determines the effectiveness of the girls program is leadership—trained, efficient, consecrated leadership. At first thought, it might seem that this is more important than the co-operation of parents, but after careful consideration, it becomes apparent that if there is adequate parental co-operation, good leadership will naturally follow; too, there will be less of the discouragements which cause leaders to quit.

Leaders are needed—urgently needed. Someone has suggested that a concentrated drive should be made to get every Latter Day Saint girl to join the Blue Birds or Orioles. To those familiar with the problem, the best way to achieve such a goal would be to make a concentrated drive for leaders; experience has shown that where leadership is adequate, where the girls are happy and active, where the work is thriving, the girls will conduct their own drive and bring their friends.

Prospective leaders often hesitate to take on the task. The job seems to loom over their heads as one of a Herculean nature. What has the program to offer which will help dispel this cloud?

The Department of Religious Education offers training courses in both Blue Bird and Oriole leadership. These may be taken either in classwork or by correspondence. In Independence, training classes in both fields have been held in the fall of each year, and it is contemplated that hereafter they shall be held in the spring also. In these classes, problems are discussed, programs worked out, and ideas and suggestions for activities shared. In the last Blue Bird leadership training class, a mimeographed booklet of about sixty pages was prepared from ideas, suggestions, programs, and stories contributed by the various students. This booklet is available to anyone and may be obtained by contacting the writer.

In Independence, there is the Blue Bird Leaders' Band and the Oriole Monitors' Workshop. These organizations are composed of those actively interested and engaged in the work. At the monthly meetings, further training is obtained, special needs are discussed, helps in various fields are given, and correlation of the work of various circles is maintained; this fellowship of people working in the same field stimulates and strengthens. While such opportunity is not available to those outside the Independence area, many leaders would welcome an opportunity to correspond with others in like work throughout the church.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COUNCIL is the governing body of Independence Blue Birds and Orioles. It is composed of the girls' director from each congregation, representatives of the Blue Bird Leaders' Band, and the Oriole Monitors' Workshop, the appointed city-wide leaders, and the personnel of various committees. This council meets once a month. Through this organization, leadership training is arranged, new bands and circles are organized, a library for leaders has been formed, funds for various functions are raised, and the Blue Bird Oriole Week has been planned. It is the hope of the Independence workers that their influence might be felt throughout the church, and that they might pass the fruits of their co-operation on to others in outlying branches.

There is a satisfaction which comes from leading children—a feeling of accomplishment even in the face of discouragements. When you have caught the vision of the girls' program and its relationship to the total church program, there is something about the work that drives you steadily onward, that demands the best there is in you, that refuses to let you give up as you strive to use your talents and energies in the effort to help make the girls of the church kingdom-builders.

Will you put your shoulder to the wheel and bend your efforts to help further the work of the Blue Birds and Orioles throughout the church?

I like to see a man proud of the place in which he lives. I like to see a man live so that his place will be proud of him.—Abraham Lincoln.

The Leader Says---

NO ONE WILL ever know how very much it has meant to me to be a Blue Bird leader. When asked to serve, I felt utterly incapable at first. I had never worked with children of this age group, and I was afraid; but the request came in answer to prayer, and I couldn't refuse.

I had been in the church such a short time—about six months—and from the day I was baptized, I had prayed for divine guidance into some field of service. I felt that I had to make up for all of the selfish years that had gone before.

So I went into this Blue Bird work completely on faith, feeling it was God's guidance that had placed me there. I studied, but I also dived in and worked blindly, trusting always in God's help. And he has helped, I know. I hope what I have done has drawn my little Blue Birds closer to him—it certainly has drawn me closer. It has also opened new interests for me, helped me to make new friends, and given me the satisfaction and joy that only service can bring. I am thankful from the bottom of my heart for the privilege of serving God through his little girls.

Mrs. Helen Elledge,
Rainbow Band, Stone Church

The Girls Say---

IN BLUE BIRDS we learn to have fellowship with other people, so that when we grow up after finishing Blue Birds and Orioles we may have the knowledge to teach our children to obey the laws and serve God and to be good stewards because we were good Blue Birds. May God always bless the leaders and people of the Blue Bird organization.

Gail Woodstock, age 9,
Tiona Band, Stone Church

AN ORIOLE is a girl who has put her heart and work into being

History of the Blue Bird Flag

THE IDEA which led to the present Blue Bird flag originated in the fall of 1946 with Mrs. William T. O'Neil, a member of the Blue Bird Leader's Band of Independence.

In November of that year, a request went out from the Girls Headquarters Committee to all Blue Bird workers for a design to be used on the flag. Several suggestions were submitted, but the design accepted in February, 1947, was one drawn at the direction of Mrs. O'Neil, a Blue Bird leader in the Walnut Park congregation, by Mrs. William Mengel, girl's director of the Gudgell Park congregation.

In the face of the postwar shortages, the search for just the right materials for the flag was successfully conducted by Mrs. Floyd Smith, another Blue Bird leader at Walnut Park. Two three-by-five foot flags were then made ready for painting by their designer. The tedious work of painting the emblems on the white taffeta of which the flags were made was then begun under the skilled hands of Mrs. Mengel and Mrs. C. E. Martin, Sr., a grandmother of two Independence Blue Birds.

These two beautiful flags were completed April 10, 1947, and made their first appearance at the General Conference two days later when helpful to others and to her church. She finds joy and happiness in her work and play, and worships with the girls of her church. The Oriole program was organized in 1915; the first Oriole Circle was in Independence, Missouri. We have their traditions to carry. The name, "Oriole" was chosen because of the characteristics and habits of the oriole. This, too, is our goal. Orioles may not only observe the activi-about one hundred and fifty Blue Birds of Independence sang. Since then, the flags have been used at both congregational and city-wide activities by members of the Independence Blue Bird Leaders Band.

These flags will make several appearances in Independence as part of the activities of the Blue Bird-Oriole Week.

The emblem, eighteen inches in diameter, is painted on the upper corner of the flag near the flag staff. The colors of the bird are, of course, blue on the back and wings with an orange breast. The lettering is in black, as are the circles. The field is white.

As used by the Blue Bird Leaders Band, the flag belongs to all congregations in the center place so has only the words, "Independence, Missouri," on the lower right-hand side away from the staff. As flags are made up for the use of local branches, the name of the church or congregation will also appear—opposite the emblem.

ties of the church, but may earn honor badges, ranks, and pins. They may also enjoy such things as parties, hikes, and camping. I am proud to be an Oriole, and I am sure that every girl who has taken part in the organization has a right to feel the same way.

Margaret Rowe, age 15,
Gobici Circle, Stone Church

What I Expect of My Religion

By Ruby Tinkham

WHAT DO I expect my religion to do for me? For years I have blundered around, wasting my time and energy, futilely seeking some overnight miraculous solution to this question. Many times I have given up (more often than I care to admit) but I always come back to it again and again. Why?

I question other people of like faith who seem satisfied with their lives; they smile and say, "You're young yet—you'll have to study and learn things for yourself." But I am not young because I am tired—and I know why I am tired—it's because I suffer from the constant sense of failure!

Have you ever attended a Communion service that left you feeling as if you had the faith and courage to face all your problems and lick them outright? It's precious, and you hold on to it tenaciously, making a resolution never to let it go. Then what happens? Maybe you forgot to light the oven before you left and there's no meat for dinner! The children sulk and pout because they're hungry, and even your husband puts in a few disparaging remarks about Sunday being the only day in the week he gets a decent meal. You feel resentment mounting, and you fight it hard. You pray silently, "Please, God, don't let me lose this wonderful feeling I've gained. Please don't leave me all alone—I need your help." Sometimes you win—sometimes you lose.

This, then, is what I expect my religion to do—to build within me an inner core of strength that will be adequate to meet each day's needs!

HOW MANY TIMES after hearing a fine sermon have you asked yourself thoughtfully, "How can I increase my usefulness to my church? Where is there a need I may fill?"

Our branch is small and there are never enough teachers, so I took an adult class. I knew there were others with more church school experience and religious education, but I had already declared myself open to opportunity. This was my first step forward. How I wish I might relate the achievements and accomplishments of that class during this past year. But I can't!

I never stood once in front of that class without first asking God for help. I read and studied like mad to bring in outside material that would stimulate my students' thinking and make them feel the urgency of building Zion now. There were times when I felt as if we were making progress, and other times when I felt as if we were still standing in the same old place—waiting!

This then is what I expect my religion to do—to help me discover what my talents are and show me how I may use them successfully in building the kingdom!

IF YOU HAVE ever lived in a small community where there are only a handful of Latter Day Saints and several other larger denominations, you must have faced a problem similar to this. About three times during the school year, your daughter comes home in tears, throws herself on the bed, and sobs, "Oh, Mother, I hate that teacher—and all those kids. They called us Mormons and made fun of us. I hate them, and I'm never going back!"

You put your arms around her and try to explain that they just don't understand the difference—that they are only ignorant. But all the time your mind is taking you back to your own childhood, and your memories are just as painful as hers. You reach back through your own years of experience, hoping to find something that will comfort her, but you find nothing to ease her suffering.

The first thing you feel is anger and a quick desire to retaliate—fast! This is followed by a cooling-off period that develops into a kind of cold determination—the kind that would force your opponents to listen to the truth whether they liked it or not. Gradually you return to normal, but this kind of an emotional foray leaves you feeling ashamed. You try to remember that Christ taught to forgive not seven times but seventy times seven.

I have often wondered if the Master, in his great wisdom, were not fully aware that man's curiosity would solve the problem of "How many times shall I forgive?" About the third or fourth time, man is going to be concerned with "Why is this sin being committed? What is causing this thing to happen again?" This leads me to the conclusion that I must not only forgive my brother, but I must also find out why he has committed his sin and complete my forgiveness by helping him overcome his weakness. Then I have traveled the road the whole way, and I need never look back with regret or sorrow thinking, "Oh, I wish I had done otherwise!"

This then, is what I expect my religion to do—to make me sensitive to the needs of other people that I may grasp every available opportunity to help!

Am I expecting too much?

Necessity is the plea for every infringement of human freedom. It is the argument of tyrants; it is the creed of slaves.—William Pitt, the elder.

My Friend Time

By Evangelist Ray Whiting

TIME IS FLEETING; years are passing; I am growing old. This new year is well on its way. What will happen before the end? Many things, but only what man or men plan and set in operation. The future is always determined by the present. What we do now is revealed in personal, family, business, national, and world events later.

It has been said that "time is the stuff life is made of," but I think time is the stuff life is made in. It is the medium we live in like the air about us. Like water to a fish, it is a medium of motion. Time does not pass but is static like the sea. It is we who pass as fish in the water, leaving the water to remain.

There are those who dread time and are ashamed of their age. Why? Age is not just the passing of years—it is the sum of one's experiences. It is the accumulation of life's joys and sorrows, which together deepen and broaden and sanctify our existence. Time takes nothing away from us unless it be the follies of youth. It does not take youth away. I still have mine and live it over again and again. It adds to us the wisdom of the ages, if we will let it; and it multiplies life's sweet memories. It increases our possibilities. It is a preserver of all the rich experiences of life.

Time does not take our friends away from us. It only makes them dearer, more valuable. In time, a child becomes more than an adult. My own curly-top baby became a school child, and my high school graduate, my Graceland girl; now she is my university daughter. Time does not separate loved ones, it brings them closer together, binding them tighter and tighter with new and stronger bands.

TIME IS NOT an enemy—a cruel old man with a scythe. It is our friend, our liberator. It heals wounds, dims unpleasant memories, makes brighter the blessings and experiences of life. Time is the stuff life is made in—a medium of motion. We can go where we will in it; forward or backward, up or down, to success or failure.

After all, it is life, not time, that is important. Life is determined not by length of years but by quality and depth of experience. Jesus said, "Blessed are they who shall believe on me"—not blessed are they who live a long time. The greatest, most profound fact of all history is Christ and his message. Nowhere else is there found such depth and such distance. To really believe in him, one must also believe in God. God pervades the element of time as salt pervades the ocean.

If people in this time of world crisis, mass hunger, and a growing war tension, would only believe in him who said, "Love your enemies; bless and curse not; blessed are the peacemakers and the pure in heart," how blessed they and the world would be! Life would be full of hope and joy and peace. If we believed in him, we could not help loving him, and if we loved him, we would keep his commandments. If we of this church would only believe, love, and obey him, how blessed we would be, and what a blessing we might be to the whole world. First of all, we would be laborers together with God; we would have our kingdom example; we would be a city on a hill—the salt of the earth, the light of the world, an ensign to the nations, a standard to the people. What a richness of life! What unfathomable depths! It has been said, "If love doesn't win, the atomic bomb will." Time is the element we move in. We can go where we will.

WE HAVE HEARD a lot of talk about freedom—the four freedoms. But again, the important thing is not freedom but obedience. Freedom must never be the end; it must be the result. Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth," and through obedience to truth, freedom is the result. Considering the statement, "Freedom as an end may become libertinism and anarchy"; one wonders if the world is not using its freedom to this end. We have such freedom today—freedom to destroy, to waste, to get drunk, to kill, to disregard both God and man. Freedom to those who are in bondage to themselves is a curse. Many were the slaves who were more free than their masters.

The world condition is serious. Men's hearts are failing them. We have a sick earth; yet "Blessed are they who believe in me,"—and come down into the depth of humility and be baptized in his name; for they shall be visited with fire and the Holy Ghost, and shall receive a remission of their sins. On such, the world has little power. Their faith does not rest in man but in God. Such people do not fear the future nor seek a way of escape but face the storm with courage because their faith is deep in the ocean of God's power and love.

Let us, as we move through this friendly element of time, take a lesson from our fishermen off the coast of Maine. They take their bearings not from some moving object on the shore or a fleeting car on a highway, but from an immovable boulder or one of the "everlasting hills" near by. Let us, I repeat, get our bearings, not from the changing, fugacious things of this world, but from the eternal and everlasting things of God. Time to such will be a kindly thing, and life a blessed experience.

The Seventy Present —

Sources of Sermon Materials

By Maurice L. Draper

AN INSPIRATIONAL sermon may be the means by which a wayward person is directed to the good life. It may be that he is converted to the gospel, or at least encouraged to live better than before. It is, therefore, of great importance that sermons be of the highest possible quality, based on the best possible understanding of the needs of the people who hear them. This requires a careful and continuing study of social movements and a constant evaluation of our own concepts in terms of the present needs, with reference to eternal principles.

Because our philosophy attempts to place Latter Day Saint ministers in immediate touch with divine powers and purposes, they should be the most powerful preachers of our times. In practice, however, we use much material prepared by secular intellectuals; and to the extent that we become content with this product, we lessen our efforts by prayer, meditation, and study of the Scriptures to reach the height of mental clarity through divine inspiration. Let it be emphasized that the basic source of sermon material is communion with God and a mind attuned to revelation by the Holy Spirit. We must beware of worshiping modern theological ghosts and pursuing religious art mirages. Flowery discussions about imponderables or beautiful commentaries on emotional experiences do little more than exercise the vocabulary of the speaker and produce an occasional tear from a listener.

JESUS CHRIST is the central point of divine revelation. Therefore, a minister who is in touch with Divinity will naturally build his sermons around the Master. We have been commanded to preach the gospel as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, in which we find that the central testimony in all ages is redemption through Christ, the Holy One of Israel.

Sermon sources include the Scriptures—the Three Standard Books—good books of a general nature, periodicals, and life itself. Of all these, the Scriptures take precedence, as they deal with life as it has been interpreted by men of sound mind and inspired outlook. They become, by virtue of their authority tested by time and later revelation, a textbook of right living. They contain the plan of the kingdom of God revealed in broad principles and interpreted by the experiences of those who have been imbued with the kingdom spirit. This is especially true of Jesus, whose message had the kingdom at its core. The real life stories in the Scriptures underscore the laws of morality, spirituality, and social righteousness. Note the intelligent emotion in the stories of the conversion of Alma, the prophetic appeal of Samuel the Lamanite prophet, and the great characters of the Old Testament.

By interpreting the messages of the Scriptures against the social background of the time, points of emphasis are revealed and the eternal hope of the kingdom of God is found, even in Old Testament experiences. It is well to note the kingdom theme as it runs through revelation in all ages.

SOME SCRIPTURE is more acceptable to the public than others. The Bible, for instance, is widely accepted. The Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, however, need to be used carefully as authoritative sources for nonmembers. It would be wise to refrain from implying the truthfulness of a given quotation merely because it is from one of these books. The fact that a statement is in the Bible is sufficient authority for many people who are not willing to grant such authority to the Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants. Therefore, it may be necessary to indicate even the self-evident truths that are stated in the pages of these books. Do not, however, refrain from using them as sources. In many respects they outrank the Bible in clarity of expression and, when humbly and cautiously used, may serve to convict the hearer of the authenticity of the books themselves.

The varying interpretations of divine revelation in the lives of the men who made "covenants" with God are fruitful. Note the following: the Zionic interpretation of the covenant with Enoch; the opposite order of materialism as represented by Cain and his successors; the rainbow covenant with Noah in which he sensed the persistence of God in saving men, come what may; "the chosen people" covenant with Abraham, and its enlargement in Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph; the forceful leadership of Joseph, which designated him even in the eyes of Pharaoh as a "revealer of secret things,"—a prophet, seer and revelator. The Mosaic covenant demonstrates God's patience in revealing his will in terms of specific detail so that the spiritually immature Israelites could understand.

The Zionic, "chosen people"
www.LatterDayTruth.org

theme was enlarged further in the lives of Lehi, Nephi, and those of the Nephite colony. The Old Testament prophets — Elijah, Hosea, Amos, and others—provide colorful characters who can help us interpret the gospel in terms of actual human experience. The prophets of the restoration, Ezekiel and Daniel, used symbolism which is amazing in scope and objective. But to understand them, one must have reference to the Abrahamic covenant of human service which was continued in the prophetic ministry of the Hebrew nation and leaders.

What was the background against which John the Baptist labored? Of whom did he bear witness? Was he a false witness? Did he seek to please the public, high or low, or to challenge the people of his time to a new life? Let the testimony of martyrs like Stephen, apostles like Paul, and the seers of all ages provide us with testimony for building our sermons around the ministry of Jesus. Let us see that the Bible reveals the nature of God through human instrumentality. It is not an abstract revelation detached from human life; it actually came about through human experience.

IN ADDITION TO the Scriptures, good books which stimulate our zeal for the kingdom are helpful. Writers like Fosdick, E. Stanley Jones, Farrar, and Chappel offer stimulating commentaries on the kingdom of God. Good fiction may supply descriptive situations for illustrating the principles of the gospel. Jesus created his own in the parables to prove his point. Illustrations may be drawn from poetry, drama, and biography, more as incidental material than as basic sources. The productions of our own writers—text and reference books, quarterlies, Herald articles, hymns, and tracts—are all sources of sermon ideas and illustrations. Periodicals keep us up to date with respect to the passing parade of our own time, and supply many examples of life situations which inspire sermons.

One writer, referring not only to the sources indicated above but to personal observations and awareness of life, comments, "Sermon material is so abundant that a man without it has only himself to blame." This statement underscores the importance of alertness to life as it is lived.

While memory, particularly when stimulated by divine inspiration, will be of great assistance in collecting information for sermons, it is suggested that a filing case be kept in which clippings, quotations, and references may be preserved for future study. By such a procedure, many sermon ideas and much illustrative material may be preserved until needed; classify it according to subject matter or source. But filing is only the first step. To become sermon material, the information must be taken out and absorbed through study and meditation.

WHATEVER THE SOURCE of our materials, the message should be clothed in terminology which truly represents the idea in mind. For many centuries, Christianity has been developing and using a vast and picturesque religious vocabulary. But during the passing decades, words and thought forms are molded into new meanings, and no longer represent their original ideas. Compare, for instance, the common definition of the word salvation with the Latter Day Saint concept. Or note the looseness of the use of the word baptism to include sprinkling and pouring water, rather than its original immersion concept. Let us beware of the careless use of such terms. Perhaps even in them are ideas for sermons. While we may lose some of the distinctiveness of the Restoration message by carelessly adopting speech forms of other religious groups, we can point up our message by choosing words which are themselves distinctive of our message.

From books, magazines, newspapers, radio, personal experiences, and the Scriptures, ideas for preaching the gospel crowd each other for recognition. But they can be realized, evaluated, and used to advantage in advancing the kingdom by men whose fundamental source of sermon material is prophetic—that is, grounded in personal experience with God. Let that be our guiding principle, and our sermons will reveal the light and life of the kingdom of God.

A New Church School Course

FOR THE BAPTISMAL CLASS

A new seven-week's course for children eight to eleven years old is now ready for mailing. The course carries the title, "This is Jesus' Church, a pre-baptismal manual." The price is thirty-five cents a copy. Each pupil, as well as the instructor, should have a manual.

Orders should be placed promptly so that the course may be started on or before Sunday, April 25, if you plan to finish before Children's Day, June 13. In most places, the children who are candidates for baptism will be taken from their regular classes and taught by the pastor or his assistant during this period. The manuals will serve the pupils as a handy reference source for several years to come.

"Teaching Helps" will be found at the end of each lesson. A short answer quiz follows these helps. The children are to fill in the blanks and grade themselves on each lesson. An "answer sheet" will be inclosed with your order for the instructor's use.

Chris B. Hartshorn,
Editor of Church School
Literature

Creative Activities

By Rebecca Rice

A manual of handwork and things to do, in accord with today's best teaching practices. This book demonstrates effective use of various types of handwork, creative writing, dramatization, exhibits and related activities in Sunday, weekday, and vacation church schools. $3.50

LETTERS

The Power of Prayer

One Sunday morning on my way to the little Methodist church on Seventh Street and University Avenue, Berkeley, California, I was surprised to see a gospel tent just across from the church. I reported the tent to my people, who were not churchgoers, and was startled to hear them mention "Mormons." They said a man named Knight had invited them to the tent to hear Elder Hiram Holt preach, and they intended to go. They went, and were finally baptized; but I was not particularly interested—in fact, I was rather ashamed of the whole affair.

Months later, returning home from school, I heard my mother call from the parlor; going there, I found a very scholarly-looking man playing the organ. Turning on the stool to face me as I entered, he was introduced by my mother: "Charles, I want you to meet Brother Mark H. Forscutt." We shook hands, and he said, "Charles, it will give me great pleasure to baptize you one of these days." I made no answer, but in my heart I said, "NOT ME."

These things happened to me in my early "teens." I must admit that the religious revivals I had witnessed, in which men and women often appeared to lose their good judgment, had made so deep an impression on me that anything of a proselyting nature was repulsive, and I avoided it.

A period of two years passed, and try as I might to get away from the continual talk of neighbors and friends in our home, I was surfeited with quotations from the Bible which appeared irrelevant to me. Of course, I knew that miracles and healings and raising the dead and the feeding five thousand with only five loaves and two fishes did happen when Jesus came to the world to establish his kingdom; but that was all over, and there was no need of such things now.

Finally I began to contest some of their interpretations of the Scriptures and challenge them to show me any person now living who had seen a miracle or healing or had a prophetic dream. A few gave testimony along these lines; but I did not feel very sure about it, and it did not give me very much help to come to a decision relative to baptism in water. This doctrine of being "buried with Christ in baptism" after repenting of sin appeared much more reasonable to me than the baptism of sprinkling which I received as an infant. In addition, I was having trouble with certain texts: "If any man would do his will, he should know of the doctrine;" "Lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world;" "The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul and the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."

Could it really be that Latter Day Saints had more glad tidings than other people? That last text found its mark. I was simple and wanted to be wise. I had faith in a Creator whose works were before my eyes day and night; I would repent and try to live a better life and accept baptism "to wash away my sins, calling on the name of the Lord." I would seek wisdom from the Almighty with all my heart and test David's promise that "the testimony of the Lord is sure."

Mark H. Forscutt baptized me in the Alameda Baths and confirmed me in the home of Sister Curry in Alameda, California. So far as I knew, he was not expected to remain in the vicinity, as he had a large mission field to cover, and I would not see him again for months or years.

The first and greatest ambition of my heart was to be worthy of "the testimony of the Lord." I settled into this simple prayer: "O Lord, are you pleased with what I have done?" (Ten words—no more, no less.) I never failed to pray "In the evening and morning and at noon," so great was my thirst for the "living waters." I might add that there were more prayers than three a day and some fasting. Days passed, and no answer came. A week passed, and still there was no answer. At the end of two weeks, I was weary. Three weeks went by, and then a letter from Elder Forscutt in San Francisco came to the Berkeley representative, telling that he with Bishop Parkin, Elder Saxe, and others of the San Francisco Branch would be in Berkeley at the home of Brother Morris the following Sunday morning to organize a branch. All this was a great surprise to me. I continued my prayer, the prayer that was known only to me and my God. The simple prayer of ten words that any boy might ask. Four weeks is a long time to continue the same prayer many times each day.

Sunday morning found about twenty-five persons in the Morris home. San Francisco, Oakland, and Berkeley were represented. After a hymn and prayer, Elder Forscutt arose and made the following statement: "Last night in San Francisco, I prayed that the Almighty would reveal to me what I should tell you people in Berkeley, and the Spirit of the Lord spoke to me saying, 'Take paper and pencil and write.' This is what I have written: 'Say unto my servant, Charles H. Wright, that I am well pleased with what he has done.' [My ten word interrogation changed into a ten word affirmation.] 'It is my will that he should be ordained to the office of deacon.'"

May I humbly state that the power of his spirit, by which this testimony came to me fifty years ago, still moves me to tears and thanks today. "The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." This was my first contact and blessing, but not the last. It is written, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." I would encourage our young people, before their "teens," in their "teens" and after their "teens," to "Seek the Lord while he may be found." Seattle, Wash. Charles H. Wright.

Faith to Be Healed

Recently two people who have been administered to many times asked me, "Why can't we be healed as others are?"

I advised them to try to find out, so they started reading. One sister let her Bible fall open, and read the first thing that greeted her eyes, Hebrews, chapters 10, 11, and 12. She read with tears of joy, and phoned the other sister who also read the same way. Then came another test. She opened the Doctrine and Covenants in the same way and section 95 greeted her eyes. She read the first paragraph the same as she had the three chapters in the Bible. Now they and some others have read the Doctrine and Covenants nearly through, and with eagerness they go on.

Here is an object lesson for many of our people who do not understand. They are like these two. They should be reading, tempering their lives with love, faith, hope, and charity as the law of the Lord requires, that they may be acceptable to our God in his service.

Our sick are being healed in many more instances than a few years ago, as nearly all our elders attest.

In a talk to the nurses at the Sanitarium, I was asked the question, "Why are not all these sick people healed?" I gave Paul's answer as one reason, "Some have faith to be healed and some have faith to heal." Not all of the elders have the gift of healing, and not all people have faith to be healed. That is why Jesus often said, "According to your faith be it unto you." So if we expect results let us do our part. Pray more, live closer to the requirements in keeping God's laws, and our hopes shall be more fully realized.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

In all your reading, do not neglect to read 3 Nephi 8: 1-22, and the story of the sons of Mosiah and Alma, pages 86 to 388. There are many others. Also take your Doctrine and Covenants and read all the references on "Faith."

After fasting and prayer by all the Saints on one small island in the South Seas, Brother L. R. Devore, one of our very humble but gifted missionaries, laid his hands on the head of a leper, anointed him, and by his faith and their faith he was cleansed and made well. Many others could be cited where terrible illnesses have been healed.

An Indian woman was operated on, and the doctors said she could not live two weeks. They sewed up the wound and did not take the cancer out. Dr. Messenger told me to get the elders and administer, which I did; for I had baptized the lady and her husband. A month later I met the woman on the street, and she said, "Look here, Brother Case! I have no pain since you administered to me." That was nearly thirty years ago, and she is living yet.

Hubert Case.

316 W. Kansas Street
Independence, Missouri

Darliene Ruoff to Japan

I am writing in regard to my daughter, Darliene, who sailed for Japan on February 10. She landed eighteen days later and is now working as secretary in the labor division of the military government. She is twenty-four years old, and is greatly interested in music. While a member of the First Reorganized Church in St. Joseph, she sang in the choir and was frequently soloist. Before going to Japan, she was a government employee in Kansas City, Missouri. During this time, she studied at the conservatory of music in Kansas City. She was a member of Stone Church Choir, Clematis Chorus, Radio Choir, Messiah Chorus and the Independence Music Club. She also sang with a quartet each Thursday at 6:45 a.m. on the Morning Devotions broadcast, as well as the Vesper Hour and 10:15 program. For those who may want to write, her address is Military Government Section, Headquarters Eighth Army, A.P.O. 343, c/o Postmaster, San Francisco, California.

Mrs. George Ruoff.

2506 South Eighteenth Street
St. Joseph, Missouri

If we wish to make a new world we have the material ready. The first one was made out of chaos.—Robert Quillen.

Voice of Warning

by

Parley P. Pratt

Here is this old gospel tract revised and reprinted.

75c each

10 or more to one address 60¢ each

THE CHURCH SPEAKS To Its Junior Members

A Guide to Church Fellowship and Baptismal Certificate

By John F. Sheehy

This lovely, little booklet contains a baptismal certificate, as well as information on membership in our church, prayer, study, administration to the sick, wrongdoing and forgiveness, the fundamental principles of the gospel and life, tithing, and a small section on preparing for service in the church, for children planning to be baptized.

10c each

10 for 90c

25 for $2.25

50 for $4

100 for $7.50

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

Worship Suggestions For May

THEME FOR THE MONTH:
THE DIVINITY OF LOVE

MAY 2, 1948
LOVE IS PURITY

Call to Worship:

Come unto the Lord with thanksgiving and offer unto him thy life, thy talents, thy all.
O Holy Spirit, keep us pure,
Grant us thy strength when sins allure,
Our bodies are thy temple, Lord;
Be thou in thought and act adored.

Hymns:

I Would Be True, No. 294
O Jesus, I Have Promised, No. 298
Thou Must Be True Thyself, No. 300
Blest Are the Pure in Heart, No. 308

Poem:

Not to scatter bread and gold,
Goods and raiment bought and sold;
But to hold fast his simple sense
And speak the speech of innocence;
And with hand and body and blood,
To make his bosom counsel good.
He that feeds men serveth few;
He serves all who dares be true.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Scripture:

"Unto the pure, let all things be pure; but unto them who are defiled and unbelieving, nothing is pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled. They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate."—Titus 1: 15, 16.

Talk:

Zion is made of the pure in heart. Unless we are clean within ourselves, nothing else can be clean. Therefore, even though we have a perfect social order in structure, if we are not men and women of perfection, the order will fail as far as we are concerned as miserably as if it were of a lesser plan.

Purity is simplicity. The love of a child for his pet is untarnished by any ulterior desires. Thus must our love for each other be pure concern for the salvation of the people around us.

Purity is goodness. A clean mind, a healthy body, and a heart that yearns to know God might be said to constitute goodness. The last qualification, yearning to know God, demands of people more than just not doing bad. Being harmless is not being righteous. It is said that Jesus went about doing good. So many of us are content just to go about. Purity is not living in a vacuum: it is righteous creativeness.

Christ warned against anger. The Mosaic standard allowed repayment for maltreatment. But the requirements of the law of Christ called for a humanity that is disciplined to hold within itself the pure love that Christ had for mankind. In the face of persecution his faith in God was fortified by a great love for those to whom he ministered. This love was undiluted by any desire for personal gain or revenge. When we say that love is purity, we refer to a love of this kind.

MAY 9, 1948
LOVE IS SERVICE

Call to Worship:

I thank thee, Lord, for lavish love
On me bestowed,
Enough to share with loveless folk
To ease their load:
Thy love to me I ill could spare,
Yet dearer is thy love I share.
—Robert Davis.

Hymns:

A Charge to Keep I Have, No. 201
The Bread That Giveth Strength I Want to Give, No. 225
Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life, No. 350

Poem:

When thy heart with joy o'erflowing,
Sings a thankful prayer,
In thy joy, oh, let thy brother
With thee share.

When the harvest sheaves ingathered,
Fill thy barns with store,
To thy God and to thy brother
Give the more.

If thy soul, with power uplifted,
Yearns for glorious deed,
Give thy strength to serve thy brother
In his need.

Share with him thy bread of blessing,
Sorrow's burden share;
When thy heart enfolds a brother,
God is there.
—Theodore Chickering Williams.

Scripture:

"I say that I would that ye should do alms unto the poor; but take heed that ye do not your alms before men to be seen of them; otherwise ye have no reward of your Father who is in heaven."—3 Nephi 5: 93, pages 638, 639.
"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the vices of the world."—James 1: 27.

Talk:

Service is one of the easiest virtues for us to understand, but one of the hardest for us to practice. With our minds it is easy to learn that Christ taught we must serve our fellow men, but we haven't learned it with our hearts. Service involves several things.

It demands ability. A trained nurse is better able to minister to a sick person than a stenographer is. Thus if we are to minister to spiritual needs, we must be trained to understand spiritual needs. A formal education helps, but this without love and concern and the enlightenment of God is empty of benefit. Constant observation is a prerequisite. We cannot learn about people with our eyes closed. It demands a warm heart. No matter how we look at it, love must be expressed in service, and service must be accompanied with love. We see many organizations which seek to do good. We study about groups of people who have tried to build Utopias and failed. God has told us the reason for this is that they don't do it in the spirit of love. God shows us there is no other way to attain peace and happiness except by the plan he has given us; and one of the most important characteristics of this is loving, and showing our love by service.

By Sadi Anka Moon

One of the greatest services we can offer others is sincere concern for their well-being. The man who has plenty of material blessings may still be very miserable. To that man, service can be performed by one or several who are willing to talk to him, comfort his sorrows, and help him gain a new outlook on life. That's the kind of service we all must be prepared to give.

MAY 16, 1948

LOVE IS GRACIOUSNESS

Call to Worship:

"Behold, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God . . . for God is love. . . . Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."

Scripture:

Read 2 Nephi 8: 5-27, the story of Jesus' ministry to the Nephites and their children.

Reading:

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes:
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown;
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above this scepter'd sway,—
It is enthroned in the heart of kings,
It is an attribute of God himself;
And earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice.
Though justice be thy plea, consider this—
That in the course of justice none of us
Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy;
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy.
—Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice.

Hymns:

Gracious Spirit, Dwell With Me, No. 192
Breathe on Me, Breath of God, No. 191
Come, Gracious Spirit, No. 194, 1, 2, and 3 stanzas

Talk:

Some people you look upon as being gracious. They are the people who make you feel at ease. Can't you imagine that Jesus was that kind of person? So genuine and full of compassion for people that they followed him about just to listen to him—little children included.

That quality of graciousness is a quality of Christ, and one for which all his followers should seek. You can think of many righteous people who really make you feel uncomfortable. They aren't the ones you turn to in time of trouble. There are others who flash immediately into your mind when you need advice or help, and you go to them for inspiration.

What makes a person gracious? First, one is assured of his concern. Second, there is the knowledge that this person is willing and able to help. And third, his judgment will be kindly. You get little strength from someone who shames you as you speak. God was so gracious that he was merciful to men by giving them a plan of redeeming themselves from their fallen state. Otherwise, by the law of justice alone, there would have been only death.

Jesus tells us always to be forgiving, and to reserve judgment. God says, "I will judge whom I will but of you it is required to forgive all people."

Have you ever seen someone in authority do something that you didn't understand—your pastor, for example? Your first tendency was to criticize. But when you learned what was behind his action, you found he had good reason. The gracious person learns to reserve judgment. He is forgiving for wrongs done him and so full of love that he wants always to understand. If you see something that you know is wrong, if you are gracious, you will remove yourself quietly and gently from the situation. The gracious person stops not to loudly criticize. Prayers are the tool of the gracious one.

MAY 23, 1948

LOVE IS LONG-SUFFERING

Call to Worship:

Teach us to love each other, Lord,
As we are loved by thee;
None who are truly born of God
Can live in enmity.
—Thomas Cotterill.

Hymns:

O Love That Wilt Not Let Me Go, No. 285
Yield Not to Temptation, No. 269
O Lord of Light, and Love, and Power, No. 299
Walk in the Light, No. 320

Poem:

When I am through, my travel done,
I want to think I left behind
An easier trail for men to find;
A stronger bridge, a smoother road
To bear some other fellow's load;
That someone's path will better be,
When I am gone, because of me.
—Douglas Malloch.

Scripture:

"The trying of your patience worketh patience. But let patience have its perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. Blessed is the man that resisteth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."—James 1: 3-8, 12.

Talk:

Loving God is having confidence in him. We should be able to do this with ease, remembering how God has been patient with us for so long; and we surely aren't as dependable as God. He started with Adam, and mankind since that time slowly has sought to have a better understanding of God. How patient God has been, waiting for men to wake up to their potentialities. God's waiting has not been a passive quality. In every life that has touched this earth, the Spirit of God has sought to find residence, to be the abiding guide. Those human beings who have accepted it have found blessings, the blessings God has promised if we obey him.

If we would follow the teachings of Christ, we will find that patience on our parts is necessary, too. According to the laws of God, due maturation is required to make a newly-adapted quality stick. That is why repentance is in some ways a process rather than a finished act. We may recognize in ourselves a bad habit. We are sorry for this and seek to remove it from our lives. Most often it does not happen overnight, but some time is required. You can see, then, why patience is naturally a part of the workings of God's laws.

When we pray for a blessing, sometimes the answer comes suddenly, but more often that blessing comes as we exercise virtue. If that exercise is a slowly moving process, then the blessings will come in proportion to our readiness for them.

It is because of God's love that he made it thus. To gain salvation, we must be the kind of people who can understand it and appreciate it. Such people do not grow in the twinkling of an eye. That does not sanction procrastination but gives due time for the natural working of the laws of God.

MAY 30, 1948

LOVE IS CHARITABLE

Call to Worship:

"Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. No man hath seen God at any time, except them who believe. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his spirit."

Scripture:

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."—John 3: 16, 17.

Hymns:

Let us, Brothers, Let Us Gladly, No. 287
Come, Tell the Story of His Love, No. 286
When All Thy Mercies, O My God, No. 289

Poem:

The bread that giveth strength I want to give,
The water pure that bids the thirsty live;
I want to help the fainting day by day:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,
The faith to conquer crowding doubts and fears;
Beauty for ashes may I give away:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure, running o'er,
And into angry hearts I want to pour
The answer soft that turneth wrath away:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give to others hope and faith;
I want to do all that the Master saith;
I want to live aright from day to day:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.
—Ellen H. Underwood.

Talk:

If you have knowledge of all things, and if you have faith that will accomplish the impossible, still you have nothing if you don't love people, Paul says. If love is charitable, what are the marks of a charitable person?

He is open-minded and understanding. Where differences persist, he seeks to understand. Where evil lies, he loves the man while he hates the sin. He doesn't turn aside in final judgment but seeks to help the erring one find a brighter outlook.

His heart is full of affection. Many people love Christ with their heads, but few with their hearts. Loving Christ means we also love people about us. That does not mean taking everyone into your confidences as your closest friend: it means seeking to help with a warm heart accompanying, when there is need—whether that need is material or spiritual.

He gives of himself: his service, his smile, his time, his talent, his material possessions.

He is humble. Very little does he talk of the kindnesses he performs. Christ warns us that if we proclaim our own good deeds we, in that act, receive our payment.

He is prayerful. He prays for help for those who need, and prays for wisdom that his own aid will be in accordance with God's will.

He is patient. He knows that the purpose of God is not performed suddenly. He won't give up when he sees those he tries to help faltering or long remaining with second best choices.

His faith is strong. He keeps in mind that he is working for God and what happens to himself is not important, but only what he can do to further God's purpose in the lives of those he touches.

Growth in a Branch

Our training classes have certainly done much for our branch in every field. Being made conscious of our weaknesses has inspired those who will study and, through their influence, the whole trend of the branch life has been stimulated toward improvement.

The Zion's League Annual has literally put our young people on their feet. They respond beautifully to its program and have made a fine contribution to the educational endeavor of the branch. They have suddenly graduated from "just young people" to a definite threat to the laurels so dearly guarded by some of the aged. We are fortunate in having wise, capable, consecrated supervisors and sympathetic pastoral service to control the competition thus formed.

—Mrs. Leora Gussman
West Branch, Michigan

Since we are admonished to "study all good books," it seems that there might be another beatitude to read something like this: "Blessed are they who seek mental companionship, for they shall find spiritual companionship also."

How Mother Can Help Her Prekindergarten Child

By LENA WELLS JONES

IS YOUR JOHNNY nearing the age of three? If so, then perhaps you are looking forward to the time when he can be left at the prekindergarten class while you attend an adult class.

In the first place, we hope you don't regard it as just a place to leave him for the church school hour. Prekindergarten classes are prepared to give him a happy introduction to church school where he'll find friends with which he can work, play, and share good times. He should enjoy being there and realize that church is a happy and good place to be. In playing, singing, through stories, and finger-plays, he will learn to take his place with other children who are learning to live in a Christian way—as children see it.

Secondly, we hope you will not expect too much and be disappointed on that first Sunday. We hope Johnny doesn't cling to your skirts, cry, and refuse to let you leave him. Will you be surprised, disgusted, or nonplussed if it doesn't work out as you wished? Johnny may be upset, you will be upset, and nothing will work out as you had planned. Did you plan? Perhaps you did, but what about Johnny—did you prepare him in any way other than getting him a new suit or new shoes? It will likely be his first experience in a group of strange children, a strange room with grown people he has never seen in charge. It could be quite terrifying to him if he has not had time to get used to the idea.

You say there is a difference in children. "My Mary is very timid." Yes, Mary may be timid or shy; but she could acquire a feeling of security in staying at church school without mother, if she had been prepared for it in advance.

CHILDREN two-and-a half to three years old are capable of doing many things for themselves. The feeling that "They are babies such a little while" causes many mothers to do things for children long after they are able to do for themselves. We note that children with a baby brother or younger sister have acquired that independent feeling and usually have no trouble staying at church school without their mothers. Mary hears mother say to someone, "Mary puts on her coat and bonnet by herself now. When she is three, she's going to church school." Johnny hears, "Johnny picks up all his toys and puts them away so nicely. You know, he is nearly old enough to go to church school," or, "Johnny went to the barber shop today to have his hair cut. Just three more Sundays and he is going to church school." In other words, by training them to do things for themselves, a feeling of independence is instilled in children so that staying at church school without mother will be another step in growing, another triumph in being "big enough" to do things in the wonderful world they are learning so much about.

Every time Johnny passes the church, his parents might say, "That is our church—soon you will be old enough to go to church school there." Be sure to take him to see the prekindergarten room, explaining that on Sunday boys and girls will be there with Mrs. J. and Mrs. B. to play with them. Then he should meet Mrs. J. and Mrs. B. Mother may ask one of them for a simple finger-play and a song used at church school for Johnny to learn at home. When he goes, he'll find something familiar and can participate in the group activities.

PERHAPS A VISIT a Sunday or two ahead to see the children in action will help. It is well for parents to stay the first Sunday if the child seems to feel strange. All prekindergarten teachers are glad to have mothers stay if necessary. But I know all workers will agree with me that most children advance as members of the group and adjust themselves quicker when parents are not present. However, if a child seems too unhappy, his mother should stay. The feeling of loss or insecurity when left in a strange situation is real suffering to a small child; this is something not realized by many adults. When Mother does leave, the one in charge should always know where she will be so Mary or Johnny may be assured she can be reached. I have noticed that some children seem to fear that their parents will forget to return for them. Mother might leave her gloves in Mary's coat pocket, or Daddy could leave his hat hung near Johnny's for several Sundays until they find that their parents always come for them.

There isn't a mother who doesn't know it is wise to thus condition the child's mind. However, in this world of hurry, events and dates have a way of creeping up on us. We find, too, that Mary and Johnny have grown so fast that all at once we realize they are three and old enough to enter their first church school class. We want the first Sunday to make a lasting impression and be a help in days to come. Let's prepare Johnny and Mary for this new vital experience in such a way that they will feel secure, happy, and a part of the group; with such preparation they will realize that church is a happy and satisfying place to be.

a home column feature

The Joy of Garden-making

By Addie C. Van Syoc

A BRILLIANTLY illustrated seed catalog just arrived, reminding me that seedtime is on its way and that very soon the earth will be throbbing with new life. The recent thaw, releasing the frost from the ground, the closing of the large cracks caused by earlier hard freezes, the drenching rain, and the balmy breezes bring back to a winter-tired world the assurance that yet warmer weather will be arriving to start sap flowing and buds swelling in the process of nature's annual resurrection. The hibernating creatures are aroused to the realization that the long rest is over, and my emotional temperature rises as I experience what is commonly called "spring fever."

All garden lovers are familiar with the joyous expectancy associated with the contemplation of making a garden. They know so well that, just as a violinist longs for his fiddle and bow, they yearn for the rake and hoe.

Why is gardening so fascinating and appealing?

The answer is hard to put into words. It must be experienced to be fully understood; it brings an indefinable something that is difficult to analyze since it gives satisfaction to body, mind, and spirit.

Garden tools can be used with ease if one is properly taught. Instead of gardening being a back-breaking experience as some think, it can really strengthen muscles, tone up the nervous system, and aid the digestive and respiratory organs.

AS FOR MENTAL satisfaction, I know of no better place than the quiet of the garden for constructive meditation. When my three sons were in the service and my mind was full of maternal concern for their safety and welfare, I found relief in working in my victory garden. When at that time, also, I was taking a course by correspondence at the State University, I would first read over my assignment, then as I picked strawberries or hoed vegetables, I would mentally review the lesson as I worked quietly and unmolested. The work was almost play, and my grades were satisfactory at the end of the course. Fresh air and sunshine, along with pleasurable exercise, are conducive of the best mental accomplishment.

The most satisfying joy of all, it seems to me, is the spiritual uplift, for this garden-making experience is a partnership undertaking—a partnership between the gardener and the Creator of all life. One prepares the soil and plants the seed which the Other created "to bear fruit after its kind." One cultivates and cares for the plants, but without the sunshine and the moisture which the Other alone can supply, his labor is futile and disappointing.

To see springing, side by side, from the black soil, little green plants that will yield the white icicle radish, the blood-red beet, the yellow pumpkin, and the speckled bean is both wonderful and marvelous. What a wealth of color and variety of flavor the family garden supplies!

Yes, gardening is a partnership—a world-wide co-operative with far-reaching beneficence.

Magazine Hi-Spots

CALLING ATTENTION to an article on Russian Women and Children in Soviet Russia in the February issue of the Ladies Home Journal.

HYGEIA, the Health Magazine for February, has an interesting article, "America's Long-Forgotten Children," on children with heart disease.

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, March issue, has an article on "New Ways to Teach Piano."

WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION for March has an informative article on "Reformatory Conditions, Is This Reform?"

STRETCHING THE DOLLAR

By Mrs. C. C. Peterson

This soap recipe has been one of my household stand-bys for several years. During the war when soaps were very scarce, we used this and found it economical and easy to make.

COLD WATER SOAP

- 1 can Lewis Lye
- 3 pints cold water
- ½ cup ammonia
- 2 tablespoons powdered borax
- 5 pounds clarified fat

Pour one can lye into three pints cold water (using a 5 or 10 gallon stone crock). Let cool to luke warm (the lye makes the water very hot), add ammonia and borax, and stir until dissolved. Then slowly pour clarified fat (which has been heated to same temperature as lye mixture) into lye mixture stirring continuously with a long-handled wooden spoon or paddle, keeping hand covered with cloth or paper bag. Continue to stir until the consistency of honey. Then pour into waxpaper lined shoe boxes to mold. After 24 hours cut into bars and let stand six weeks before using. (Cut down center of box lengthwise and one inch thickness crosswise to make the bars.)

To clarify fat, melt and pour through strainer to discard any sediment. Then add about two times the amount of water as fat and boil thoroughly. Strain through several thicknesses of cheesecloth placed over strainer, and set away to cool. When fat is cold, remove the solid cake from the liquid. Discard the impurities in the bottom of the cake. If this process is repeated several times, a cake of clean fat may be obtained and the soap will be whiter.

The Tolling Bells - By Melvin L. Fowler

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 22, was Brotherhood Sunday. This day has been set aside by the National Council of Christians and Jews; supporting the declaration are ministers and laymen, civic leaders, government officials, and countless hundreds of citizens throughout the United States.

It seems strange that it should be necessary for us to set apart special times to commemorate and work toward that which seems so logical and basic. Yet thousands are dying and suffering throughout the world because the brotherhood of man is not practiced. Religion and race have torn asunder a country that holds a substantial portion of the world's peoples. In India, blood flows because brotherhood is not tolerated or accepted. In the very land where Christ himself lived, men are now fighting and arming for even more conflict because man has not been able to accept as brother those of different creeds. And in our own land of America, the lines of class and caste restrict the freedom of individuals from achieving that which is their God-given heritage. Yes, we need to set aside time to remember that the brotherhood of man is not yet achieved but looms on the distant horizon of hope and ideals.

In 1690, an English cleric by the name of John Donne preached a sermon that has since become famous for a certain phrase it contained. The sermon was preached at Ash Wednesday services and dealt primarily with death, but it is indeed significant for our consideration of the oneness of all mankind that is implied in the fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man concepts.

*Now this bell tolling softly for another,
Says to me, Thou must die.*

Perchance he for whom this bell tolls may be so ill, as he knows not it tolls for him; and perchance I may think myself so much better than I am, as that those who are about me, and see my state, may have caused it to toll for me, and I know not that. The church is catholic universal, so are all her actions; all that she does belongs to all . . . All mankind is of one author, and is one volume; when one man dies, a chapter is not torn out of that book, but translated into a better language; and every chapter must be so translated; God employs several translators, some pieces are translated by age, some by sickness, some by war, some by justice; but God's hand is in every translation; . . . No man is an island, entire of itself; every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main; if a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe is the less, as if a promontory were, as well as if a manor of thy friends or of thine own were; any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; It tolls for thee.

Perhaps the distress and grief that our present social order knows is a tolling bell. Of a surety, it does not toll for someone else whom we see as a bigot and an oppressor, but rather it tolls for us; for truly we are "involved in [all] mankind."

THE TEACHINGS of brotherhood are the basic tenets upon which Christianity is built. Writings of the New Testament are filled with instructions, admonitions, and pleas to brotherhood. These sayings are so well known as to have become almost trite—and let it be remembered that trite means "used so often as to have lost interest." The second great commandment was stated as "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"; and when a scribe recognized this fundamental aspect of Christ's interpretation of the laws of Israel, he was told, "Thou art not far from the kingdom."—Mark 12: 36-39, I. V. Perhaps one of the best known of Christ's teachings of brotherhood is the parable of the Good Samaritan, the significance and meaning of which have been familiar to all of us from childhood. To me, the most powerful experience relating to this basic concept is the experience of Peter on the house top in Joppa. Now Peter was apparently much opposed to preaching and ministering to the Gentiles of his day.

He might be called the typical "racial supremacist" of his time. This opposition to the Gentiles lasted until God showed to him in a vision the principles of brotherhood in a very dramatic way. Peter then went about his ministry in a different attitude and with the statement that "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons."—Acts 10: 34.

Modern science corroborates the teachings of basic Christianity with the testimony of facts and critical analysis for which it has become famed. Many men of science have studied this problem and have come to rather definite conclusions. The findings indicate that there is not in existence today any group of people anywhere that has any basis for claim to superiority over other groups. There are differences between groups in stature, in skin color, in hair texture, and in other physical characteristics, but these are found to be differences of degree rather than kind. Within any given group there is a wide variation of differences as to specific abilities and intellect, but these differences have the same distribution in any group of mankind—black, yellow, or white—Jew, German, or American. The differences that appear to exist among groups are not indications of differing group ability but rather indications of differing group opportunity. Given equal opportunity, there is no reason to doubt that all groups of men would demonstrate equal achievement.

BROTHERHOOD HAS BEEN taught for at least 2,000 years and now is established as basic by Christian teachings upheld by the testimony of scientific investigation. What, then, is the status of brotherhood in our day? We have already mentioned the general problems of conflict throughout the world because of intolerance and inequality, but what about home, our own cities, our own back yards? Basic in the constitution of our country is the principle of brotherhood—the right of every man to equal opportunity. That is the theory of our society; here are some facts:

In the past twenty-five years, 445 individuals have lost their lives to lynching mobs. The lynchers have seldom been apprehended and, when apprehended, are released with the sanction of approval put upon their actions. In our country, people are excluded from chosen professions because of their racial or religious background. It is a well-known fact that in many of our colleges and universities (most of which are supported by public funds, both state and federal), quotas are established that restrict the number of Negroes, Jews, other minority groups, and Catholics from enrolling in any sizable number, thus very effectively barring individuals from professions and education on a basis other than ability. Because of "restrictive covenants" in our large cities, Negroes, Mexicans, Italians, Armenians, and other ethnic groups are forced to live in only certain sections of the city. These sections are overcrowded and hazardous—the breeders of disease, distrust, and crime. In the city of Chicago, there are sections where more than 75,000 people are living jammed in one square mile of dirt and filth. In these "restrictive covenants," a person is not branded undesirable because he is unclean or immoral; the sole basis for judgment is racial and ethnical background.

Do these facts speak of any semblance of brotherhood to us who boast so glibly of the "land of the free" and of our great democracy? No, they are as a "tolling bell" ringing the death knell for our society. Unless we do achieve this basic brotherhood that guarantees to all freedom of opportunity which allows each man his God-given right to develop to his fullest stature, our social order is doomed; and the signs of the times indicate that our present path is one which leads us onward to destruction.

WHAT CAN BE done to achieve brotherhood? First of all, there are definite attitudes and basic outlooks that we must guard against if we are striving for brotherhood. These are (1) generalizations and (2) just plain hysteria. The whole basis of intolerance is that of generalizations. Because a man is a Negro, it is said to follow that he has such and such undesirable characteristics both of personality and physical attributes. Because a man is Jewish, he is thought to be just naturally a money grabber, etc. These stereotypes are the common generalizations that stultify the thinking of men in America today and resist the achievement of brotherhood. The second point, that of hysteria, is very well demonstrated by a near race riot that occurred in a large city just this past summer. Eight Negro families were moved into a veteran housing project by the authorities whose sole basis of selection was the need of the veteran and his family. Immediately large mobs collected, and the police were called out in force because the people became hysterical over the situation. It was said that all the property in the area would lose its value, no white woman would be safe on the streets, and "if you let one 'nigger' in you'll soon be surrounded by them." Hysteria was rampant, and there was some stoning of automobiles and a great deal of confusion among the people who had collected and were milling around the streets. Many "good" citizens thought seriously of selling their property and moving. After a time, however, all quieted down and peace of mind returned—but not without a great loss to brotherhood and security. We must guard against making generalizations and avoid hysteria in dealing with all men.

THE REVEREND H. RICHARD RASMUSSEN, now minister of an all-student Inter-Racial Church at Purdue University, postulates the following five items as essential to brotherhood. These are positive factors that can guide us all in our search for brotherhood:

(1) Just plain common sense. We are, as white peoples, out-numbered on this planet about two to one by the colored peoples of the world who have felt the oppression of "white supremacy." All of these peoples are rapidly developing and could soon compete with us on equal terms politically and economically. What, then, if we continue to try and oppress them?

(2) We must have understanding, not prejudice. For instance, prejudice says that Jews are mean and tricky and subtly seeking ways to control the money of the world. On the other hand, understanding tells us that Brandies, Spinoza, Einstein, and Christ were and are Jewish but none of them have ever been accused justly of being mean, tricky, and unscrupulous.

(3) We must see men as individuals. As has been pointed out, we cannot make generalizations about a man because of his racial background. Our best criterion by which to judge any man is his individual personality and abilities—none of these are linked to race.

(4) Fraternity is an essential point. It is surprising what a revealing thing it is to associate with people of different races and creeds. I have heard many people express honest amazement after having contacted a person or group of persons of different racial, religious, or ethnical background. Through fraternity, we find that the problems of humanity are much the same wherever man is found, despite overt differences of custom and skin color.

(5) Finally, the prime factor in the achievement of brotherhood is to put good will into all of our relationships. Reverend Rasmussen closes his analysis with this statement:

What would happen if around the world men were to pour good will into life's difficult situations? How the divisions between nations would begin to heal; how the prejudices between races would begin to disappear; how the chasm between classes would be bridged! Aye, it is in the power of good will to build brotherliness. "Be therefore all-inclusive in your good will, even as your Heavenly Father includes all."

THERE HAS been presented here an analysis of the meaning of brotherhood, both as an ideal and as it exists in our social order today. An attempt has been made to show some paths that might inspire us to correct these many evils which are crying out to each of us in bitter terms, and urging us to strive toward the brotherhood of man. The condemnation of our present system of inequality and heartbreak is not to be heaped upon any single group or occurrence. It should however challenge each of us to "send not to know for whom the bell tolls; It tolls for thee."

"Fraternally Yours"

(Continued from page 3.)

tian fellowship than in simply rearranging it. However, there is only one church possessing a full comprehension of the meaning and purpose of the kingdom of God.

We lift our eyes and enlarge our horizons to include all those who work for good in the world, for we are admonished "ye should observe to uphold . . . good and wise men" (Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2). In a background of righteous, orderly society among good Christian people, we have a much greater chance of building the kingdom of God, and of recruiting those who are to build it, than we would in a population wholly unsympathetic. It is good to remember that Nineveh awaited the ministry of Jonah for its redemption, and that he wasted his time at Tarshish.

L. J. L.

Consider the Children,

HOW THEY GROW

By Elizabeth Manwell and Sophis Fahs

Parent's Magazine says "an amazing combination of common sense, insight and experience—which is tantamount to saying it has everything An especially good book for fathers—who are seldom mentioned and never left out."

$2

Briefs

RICH HILL, MISSOURI.—Linda Kay, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Tillery, and Michael Larry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Anderson, were blessed on Sunday, March 7. Elders Arlie D. Allen, Frank W. Mills, and John D. Deller officiated.

AUSTRALIA.—After visiting Sydney and Newcastle, President John Garver and Bishop Walter Johnson ministered to the Saints in Queensland, lecturing in Brisbane and Murwillumbah. Then they conducted a priesthood institute for all general church appointees in Sydney, going from there to the Tiona Reunion. The reunion had a record attendance of 755, with visitors from all states in Australia. Activities included classwork for each age group, junior church school for the children, prayer services, preaching, a priesthood Communion and breakfast, Christmas worship, a flag service, New Year's vesper service, sunset reflections and story hour, and evensong. Four new members were baptized on Sunday, December 28, in the Green Cathedral, Bishop Johnson officiating.

From Tiona, President Garver and Bishop Johnson flew to Victoria, spending several days at the Marysville Reunion before leaving for a brief but intensive ministry in Southern and Western Australia. On their return to Victoria, where special priesthood and week-end services were held, they were met by Missions President Herman Peisker and Patriarch Dickinson and taken to visit Euroa, Shepparton, and the Federal Capital City of Canberra.

After a final three weeks of ministry in Sydney and Newcastle, each was presented an Australian opal in memory of his visit; and on Wednesday evening, February 17, forty Saints gathered at the airport to bid them farewell.

The visit of President Garver and Bishop Johnson is considered a milestone in the history of the Australian Mission. It has strengthened the ties of brotherhood and helped to unite the Saints of all lands in a common purpose—the establishment of Zion.

MISHAWAKA, INDIANA.—The women of Northern Indiana District held their second annual institute at Castle Manor in Merrifield Park, Mishawaka. Guest lecturer was Ena Slasor of Detroit, Michigan. S. M. Nichols and F. E. Myers of the district presidency were in charge of the worship service. The theme of the institute was "Witnessing for Him."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

BULLETIN BOARD

Rock Island District Reunion Cancelled

The undersigned, in consultation with the district presidency and the district bishop's agent, has given attention to the matters touching the 1948 reunion.

This consultation is in line with the district conference action, which made the reunion committee responsible. The grounds at Aledo are not available this year. This fact, together with the close proximity of the General Conference in October, led to the conclusion that it would be wise to cancel the reunion this year. Steps will be taken, however, to secure suitable grounds for reunion activities as soon as possible; and, although no reunion will be held this year, we trust that next year the activities can be resumed.

It was thought wise to schedule a young people's fellowship some time in the summer, and consultation is being had with Dr. McDowell in relationship to this. If plans can be consummated, time, place, and schedule will be placed in the hands of branch presidents in plenty of time for adequate preparation for the activity.

ARTHUR A. OAKMAN,
Minister in Charge.

Books Wanted

Mable D. Jordan, 709 Nellsville Road, Houghton Lake, Michigan, would like to purchase six Zion's Praises (good condition) for use at church. Please state price and condition of books before mailing.

W. E. Williams, 815 Seventeenth Street, Rock Island, Illinois, needs a copy of F. Henry Edwards' Missionary Sermon Outlines. Please state price and condition of book before mailing.

Perry Hiles, Bates City, Missouri, wishes to purchase A Manual of the Priesthood by Charles Derry and A Marvelous Work and A Wonder by Daniel McGregor.

Roy W. Smith, 425 Waltham Street, Hammond, Indiana, would like to hear from anyone having a copy of Square Blocks for sale.

Park of the Pines Reunion

The annual Park of the Pines Reunion will be held August 6 to 15. This information is given for those who wish to schedule their vacations for the reunion.

ALLEN SCHREUR,
For the Reunion Committee.

Idaho District Spring Festival

A spring festival for the young people of Idaho District will be held in Boise on April 10 and 11. There will be a party on Friday evening, April 9. Elder J. L. Verhei of Portland is to be the guest speaker. Those desiring accommodations may write to Cecil Gilmore, 612 Franklin, Boise, Idaho.

SILAS CONDIT,
District President.

Nebraska-Iowa Youth Camp

The annual Nebraska-Iowa Youth Camp will be held at Camp Sheldon near Columbus, Nebraska, for five days beginning on Friday afternoon, August 20. The cost for each camper is $10.50 (including meals and cabin). The age limits are twelve to twenty-five.

Young people anywhere in the church are invited to attend. The campground is outstanding, with swimming and boating facilities as well as equipment for all kinds of games. Theme of the camp is, "The Excellency of Our Church." For further information, write to John Blackmore, 911 North Thirty-sixth Street, Omaha, Nebraska, or V. D. Ruch, 217 Tenth Avenue, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Spring River-Rich Hill Religious Education Institute

The annual Religious Education Institute of the Spring River and Rich Hill Districts will be held at the church in Pittsburg, Kansas (517 West Forrest Street), April 9 to 11. Registration will begin at 7:30 p.m. Friday; the institute will close at noon, Sunday. John Darling and Thelona Stevens, of the Department of Religious Education, and district officers will direct and instruct. Accommodations will be provided by the Pittsburg members.

WILLIAM PATTERSON,
District President.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Lillie Holmes and Emily Sumner of Breckenridge, Missouri, ask the continued prayers of the Saints. They are grateful to all who remembered them in prayer following their last request.

Mrs. L. D. Dyke, Seiling, Oklahoma, requests prayers that she may regain her health; she is suffering with arthritis.

Mrs. Marvin Murphy of Omaha, Nebraska, who is in the Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Kearney, Nebraska, asks for prayers. She is to be operated on April 15 for the removal of several ribs.

Mrs. William A. Stoddard, Route 1, Box 113 C. A., North Platte, Nebraska, asks the prayers of the Saints for her husband that his health may be restored.

WEDDINGS

King-Lowry

Joanne Lowry, daughter of Mrs. Lila Lowry of Denver, Colorado, and Noel J. King, also of Denver, were married March 2 at the Reorganized Church in Denver. Priest Maurice Spillman performed the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. King are making their home in Coos Bay, Oregon.

Stirrett-Skinner

Ellen Skinner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Skinner, and Robert Stirrett were married on February 24 at the Chapel of Roses in Pasadena, California.

Pederson-Rambo

Donna Jean Rambo, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Curtis Rambo, Jr. of Wyoming, Minnesota, and Morris Edward Pederson were married on March 7 at the Reorganized Church in Minneapolis. Elder Vernon E. Lundeen officiating. They are making their home in St. Paul, Minnesota, where Mr. Pederson is employed by the Western Electric Company.

Short-Duffey

Geraldine Duffey and June A. Short, both of Independence, Missouri, were married on March 13 at the Englewood Church. President Israel A. Smith read the double-ring ceremony.

BIRTHS

A son, Leif Peter, was born on March 12 to Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Larsen of Independence, Missouri. Mrs. Larsen is the daughter of the late President F. M. Smith.

A son, Roy, was born on March 6 to Mr. and Mrs. Nat Muzumdar of Chicago, Illinois. Mrs. Muzumdar is the former Fae Murdock.

Mr. and Mrs. John William Caswell of Knoxville, Iowa, announce the arrival of a daughter, Marie Ann, born February 20. Mrs. Caswell is the former Norma Kresin of Detroit.

Mr. and Mrs. Thurston R. Schoff of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Cynthia Dawn, born February 28. Mrs. Schoff is the former Olive Peterson.

Mr. and Mrs. Ned L. Jacobson of Lamoni, Iowa, announce the birth of a daughter, Mary Linda, born February 3. Mrs. Jacobson is the former Jewell Banks of Warrensburg, Missouri. Mr. Jacobson is an instructor at Graceland.

A son, Roger Michael, was born on March 4 to Betty and Herbert Saunders of Rosemead, California.

A daughter, Charlene Rae, was born on March 8 to Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Shank of Chicago, Illinois. Mrs. Shank is the former Marie Barmaun of Independence.

Mr. and Mrs. William T. Crabb of Kidder, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, James William, born February 28. Mrs. Crabb was formerly Martha Hartman of Hummelstown, Pennsylvania.

A son, David James, was born on February 6 to Mr. and Mrs. Otto Flegel of Britannia Bay, Ontario, at the Ottawa Civic Hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Diggel of Ottawa, Ontario, announce the birth of a son, Marshal Bennet, born February 14 at the Ottawa Civic Hospital. Mrs. Diggel is the former Mary Elisabeth of Windsor.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth M. Sevy of Warrensburg, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, Kenneth Warren, born February 22. Mrs. Sevy was formerly Levona Gard.

A son, Thomas Edward, was born on November 19 to Mr. and Mrs. Tom Rastle of Pasadena, California. Mrs. Rastle is the former Marilyn Briedenbecker.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wayne Mink of Memphis, Tennessee, announce the birth of a son, Michael Wayne, born February 24. Mrs. Mink is the former Frances Van Nieuwenhuyze.

Mr. and Mrs. John Thomton of Missoula, Montana, announce the birth of a daughter, Linda Jean, born February 29. Mrs. Thomton is the former Donna Jean Selzer of Seattle. Mr. Thomton is a student at Montana State University. Both parents attended Graceland.

A daughter, Danielle Marie, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Daniel M. Belcher of Independence, Missouri, on February 16. Mrs. Belcher is the former Florence Marie Burgess.

A daughter, Joan Marie, was born on October 29 to Captain and Mrs. Emerson L. Armstrong of Des Moines, Iowa. Mrs. Armstrong was formerly Marie Belcher.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard F. Lade of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Cherylene Winsome, born March 3. Mrs. Lade is the former Viola Cheilaine.

A son, Charles Walter, was born to Lieutenant Colonel and Mrs. Walter A. Kneise of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on December 12. Mrs. Kneise is the former Winifred Jones.

DEATHS

TAYLOR.—John Edward, was born May 1, 1873, in Hazel Dell Township, and spent his entire life, with the exception of a few years in Nebraska, in Pottawattamie County, Iowa. He passed away at the Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on February 14, 1948, after an illness of eight days. On September 21, 1932, he was married to Mrs. Kate Shadden, and on April 5, 1940, was baptized into the Reorganized Church.

He leaves his wife; a stepdaughter, Hazel May Frandsen of Colorado Springs, Colorado; two sisters: Mrs. Sarah Williams of Stockton, California, and Mrs. Florence May of Des Moines, Iowa; nine step-grandchildren, and seven step-great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Woodring Funeral Home, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in Hazel Dell Cemetery.

HORNE.—Earl Franklin, was born in 1883 at Waterloo, Iowa, and died February 17, 1948, at Independence, Missouri. He had been a resident of Independence since 1929, when he and his family moved from Minnesota. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of ten and remained a devoted member throughout his life. He was ordained a deacon on March 30, 1940, at Stone Church, which office he held until his death.

He was married to Charlotte Emily Barker on May 3, 1905, at Prairie, Minnesota; nine children were born to this union. One son preceded him in death. The other children all live in Independence. Other survivors include his mother, Mrs. Ida L. Horne; three sisters; and one brother. Services were conducted at the Speaks Funeral Home, Elders Lester Whiting and Lyndon Wagener officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Mary A. Burlington
1510½ Jules
St. Joseph, Missouri

92867
18
h

For a Latter Day Saint Background We Offer

STORY OF THE CHURCH

By INEZ SMITH DAVIS

Fourth Edition

Here is the new and revised edition of THE STORY OF THE CHURCH, dramatic, filled with real people in living situations. It begins with the account of the experiences of Joseph Smith, the organization of the church in 1830, all of the intervening story between, and up to and including the modern day history of the church, and the story of Israel A. Smith as our President.

$4

FUNDAMENTALS

By F. HENRY EDWARDS

This is a brief statement of some of the fundamental beliefs of the doctrine and organization of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It is a book intended for study that the richer values of our faith may help some of the people to "know the church."

$2.25

5 or more to 1 address $2 each—Do not order before April 15

Order From Your Book Steward or

Herald Publishing House

Independence, Missouri

Photo by Eric Wahleen

Song of Spring

Washington

THE Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

APRIL 10, 1948

NUMBER 15

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Somnolence

The Sunday morning sermon stretched across Long minutes as the preacher talked—
 And though he had a message fine to give,
 He did not startle me with shouting,
 Nor did he sweep me from myself
 With oratory.
 And so I did not try too hard
 To follow him,
 But sat and gathered wool.

And all at once I thought, "My leg's asleep."
 I moved it gingerly about
 Until it tingled with returning life
 And was again a feeling, living part
 Of my anatomy.

And then I wondered solemnly
 At how it had been heavy, helpless—
 Useless in its torpid state.
 And I could not help but know
 My soul had drawn itself apart
 And had been sleeping, too!

—LOUISE WRIGLEY

AUDITORIUM NEWS

* SOUTHERN MISSION. Apostle Maurice L. Draper covered 6,500 miles in a six weeks' circle tour of the mission. A conference of Southwestern Texas at San Antonio approved the purchase of a reunion ground in collaboration with the Central Texas District. . . . A series at Mobile brought three baptisms, one of them a fine man Brother Draper has been hoping to baptize for three years. . . . A survey for missionary opportunities at Orlando, Florida, brought contact with seventy-five of the finest people there. Tampa also enjoyed an excellent series of services, with capacity crowds. Great possibilities are found at both places. . . . The tour included Alabama, Tennessee, and Arkansas. Earl Grigg is the new pastor at Memphis, where a beautiful new church is near completion. This branch is the result of years of labor by Brother and Sister J. Adelbert Withee and their associates. All church ordinances can be performed without moving pulpit or other church furniture, a result of special planning and built-in features. . . . Miami, Florida, is moving ahead on a beautiful church building of medium size. . . . McKenzie, Alabama, also has a fine new church building to seat 250. . . . Missionary Tom Worth brought the largest attendance ever experienced by the church at Houston for his series there. Several were baptized. . . . Birmingham group now has a hall for its meetings. Attendance has sharply increased as a result. . . . The missionary and district president, Joseph Breshears, has baptized a number of persons at Escatawpa and Pascagoula, Mississippi. . . . The Gulf States Mission in general offers bright possibilities for missionary growth.

* 20,000 LETTERS have been mailed from the Auditorium to those who paid tithing during the year 1947, according to Bishop Walter N. Johnson. The statements cover only remittances made during 1947. Many members have written letters of appreciation for this service, since it is an aid to checking of personal accounts. The members of the Presiding Bishopric are gratified at the good response received from members.

* GERMANY. The official total of 1947 baptisms was 134. Several more have taken place in 1948.

* DETROIT PRIESTHOOD INSTITUTE. A change in the date for the Detroit priesthood institute is announced in the "Herald" of April 3, page 2. The new date is May 14 to 16. President F. H. Edwards and Bishop G. L. DeLapp will participate in activities.

* WICHITA, KANSAS, under the leadership of the pastor, D. J. Williams, is doing very well, with a membership of 350, and a growing building fund on hand. Brother Williams has been enjoying improved health in recent times.

* YOUTH CONFERENCE
 Galesburg, Illinois, held a youth conference March 20 and 21, under the general theme, "Building Our Tomorrows Today." A full program with excellent participation was enjoyed, with Dr. F. M. McDowell of the Department of Religious Education leading the discussion. The branch, under the leadership of its pastor, Ambrose King, has made excellent improvements and decoration. The conference was well attended, and received fine support from District President W. W. Richards and Victor Witte, pastor Tri-Cities.

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

Children's Day Preparation	3
Concerning the Children	3
Civil Marriages	4
Across the Desk	4

OFFICIAL:

No Baptisms Before Eighth Birthday	4
------------------------------------	---

ARTICLES:

"This Church Have I Established," by Apostle E. J. Gleazer	5
The Call of Spring, by Kathryn C. Metz	8
Brothers All, by Gladys Gould	9
Speak Peace, by Francis M. Mills	10
Improving Our Methods of Publicity, by Virgil J. Billings	12
A Girl Scout Leader Speaks, by Amy Stoker	16
Food for Thought, by B. Mildred Nelson	17
Stretching the Dollar, by Mrs. C. B. Freeman	17
Letters	19
Suffer Little Children, by Elaine Carson	20
Bulletin Board	22

Children's Day Preparation

CHILDREN'S DAY this year will be celebrated on June 13. Already many branches have organized prebaptismal training classes, and other classes are now in process of organization. This is a most important ministry.

Prebaptismal classes are not an adequate substitute for the instruction which all our children should receive at home. Nor are they an adequate substitute for regular church school training. But prebaptismal classes do provide an opportunity to bring into focus much that has been done in the home or in the church school, and to give specific, personal instruction leading to understanding and warm-hearted decisions for Christ and his church.

Leadership for these classes is of primary importance and may rightfully command the deepest devotion and the finest talent available. Comradeships begun or strengthened in prebaptismal classes can be carried forward with profit to all who participate, and can lead into rich personal ministry through the years.

Most of the members of these classes will be secured from the church school. Others will be enlisted elsewhere, as in the homes of Saints who are not regular attendants at church. But whenever children with inadequate preparation are included, they should be given special help. Indeed, although as many as possible should be enrolled in these classes, it is of major importance that students be given maximum personal attention. In large branches, the classes may have to be divided with this in view. In small branches, single students will be welcome and given the full attention of the teacher since personal ministry is so important.

The primary purpose of prebaptismal classes is to secure baptismal decisions based on the highest understanding and devotion possible at the age level. But care should be taken that no undue pressure is exerted, resulting in uninformed or superficial decisions. Classes justify themselves when they prepare the way, even though some children are not yet won. Students who do not decide in time to be baptized on Children's Day should be carried on the hearts of the pastor and the teacher and may thus be won a little later.

We are fortunate this year that an excellent prebaptismal manual is now available and can be secured at the Herald House for thirty-five cents. This manual contemplates seven weeks of preparation. This is about a minimum. Any branch in which the classes are started too late to get in the full seven weeks' course before June 13 should postpone the date of Children's Day.

F. HENRY EDWARDS

Concerning the Children

JESUS SAID, "Suffer little children and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Too many people misinterpret the first verb. In this passage it does not mean to make them suffer. It means to allow or permit. The last ten years have brought terrible experiences to uncounted numbers of the world's children. One of the major needs of our age is to restore the rights of children, and to protect them. Even in America we need not congratulate ourselves that we are doing well. Here we break up their homes, rob them of peace and security, expose them to immoral movies, throw liquor and tobacco into their way wherever they turn, and tolerate conditions calculated to exploit and ruin them. There are many hazards for childhood in the United States today.

This last Sunday it was my pleasure to assist in the blessing of a beautiful baby boy. My pastor, who gave the blessing, later chided me in fun for the awkward way I held him. He was crying a little when we took him, but our ceremony had not gone far before he quieted down and appeared at peace. As I looked down at him, I loved him and hoped he would not feel afraid in our strange arms. I believe that children can feel love, even before they can talk or understand, and I have observed that little folk will often respond to such love, even though not a word may be spoken nor a gesture made.

Children have a great need of love. It is the food of the spirit, as important to them as sustenance, clothing, and shelter for their little bodies. It is one of the tragedies of life that a rich America will give so many of them abundant supplies of physical necessities and deny them love.

A little family, a mother and her children, were left alone in a cruel way. Young as they were, the little ones had the feeling that they were unwanted and rejected. Into their lives came a young man who also had a misfortune that might have left him bitter and lonely. Marrying the mother, he took the children to his heart and loved them as his own. They love him, and once more their lives are filled with sunshine and happiness. To see them all together is one of the most inspiring sights to be found anywhere. A child's need of love was never more clearly demonstrated. A man's need of children to love was never more positively exemplified. People need children, or their world is incomplete.

It is one of the great opportunities of the church to foster the love of children, to plead their cause, and to bring the gospel of salvation into their lives, so that they might grow up to normal, happy, useful citizenship.

L. J. L.

Editorial

Civil Marriages

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

SECTION 111 OF OUR basic law, Doctrine and Covenants, is a resolution which was adopted unanimously by a solemn assembly of the church held in Kirtland, Ohio, on August 17, 1835. We have the right to assume that this resolution was an interpretation by the church of the principles of "Christian" marriage as set forth in the Bible and in the Doctrine and Covenants. There has been some speculation as to why it was adopted; we indulge in the presumption of regularity and accept that it was endorsed for the precise reason given (see paragraph four) that unjust and wrongful charges had been made against the church, among which were those of fornication and polygamy. Early in the 1850's, an English (Utah Mormon) protagonist of polygamy, in a futile attempt to thrust Divinity into the doctrine just then "proclaimed" in Utah, said in a Mormon official organ that the Saints during the earlier years of the church had been charged wrongfully with its practice—a strong denial on behalf of the church during the period from 1830 to 1852. It was evidently a movement then, to disabuse the public mind that W. W. Phelps brought this resolution (Section 111) before the legislative body for adoption and declaration of belief.

Christian marriage was always a doctrine of pure Latter Day Saintism and always will be. When or if a different rule is adopted, the church will become an apostate body.

It is significant that this resolution begins as follows—

According to the custom of all civilized nations, marriage is regulated by laws and ceremonies.

Accordingly the church, like all Christian bodies, has favored solemn-nization of marriages at public meetings and always, of course, by one of the priesthood. But the law very carefully provided "not even prohibiting those persons who are desirous to get married, of being married by other authority."

There are some countries where the law provides that the ceremony shall be conducted by some civil officials. It has recently been called to our attention that this is the case in some of the European countries. We have advised our representatives there to conform strictly to the civil law, of course; but in order to give additional church sanction, to follow with a service in which church priesthood has part. We could not and do not hold that the contracting parties are not fully and completely married by the civil ceremony, but there being no conflict between them, the parties receive likewise the sanction of the church, marriage being both a civil contract and a sacrament.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Across the Desk

From Elder M. A. Smith, Crescent, Iowa:

We baptized Jesse Edwin Pitt of Missouri Valley and his brother, Perry Pitt of Crescent, Iowa, together with five others in the Council Bluffs font on Wednesday, February 25. The confirmation service was held Sunday, February 29, in the Crescent church at 11 o'clock. The district presidency was present to assist, and the service was impressive.

Perry Pitt is a cripple for life, made so by the war. He walks with great difficulty, using special crutches. As an officer in the U. S. Army, while leading his men in the battle of Italy, he was wounded and nearly all of his company killed. He had to lie on the field for hours until nightfall before being res-

OFFICIAL

No Baptisms Before Eighth Birthday

Because of many inquiries which have been received, we wish to call attention to the very positive terms of our church law, according to which children under eight years of age are not eligible for baptism. (See General Conference Resolution Number 552, adopted April 15, 1904.)

This conference action is an interpretation of the fundamental law in Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

Children who are prepared for baptism in prebaptismal class and elsewhere, but who have not attained their eighth birthday by Children's Day should be baptized in special services occurring after they are eight or, if thought wise by the pastor, the date of Children's Day might be postponed for a short time so as to accommodate them.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

cued. A Catholic priest came and asked if he had a message to be carried back to his people. He replied, "I will carry my own message back if I can get a little help." Through the long weary months of suffering in the hospitals, he never forgot that statement he made on the battlefield. It was while lying out on the field, he made his decision to be baptized when he came back.

His grandfather, Sidney Pitt of Logan, Iowa, was president of the Northwest Iowa District for years and did much missionary work in that area.

If we put off repentance another day, we have a day more to repent of, and a day less to repent in.—Mason.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

April 10, 1948

Number 15

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

“This Church Have I Established”

By Apostle E. J. Gleazer

A sermon given at Stone church,
Independence, Sunday, February
15, 1948

Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; and all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets; the weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow-man, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world; that faith also might increase in the earth; that mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers.

Behold, I am God, and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding; and inasmuch as they erred it might be made known; and inasmuch as they sought wisdom they might be instructed; and inasmuch as they sinned they might be chastened, that they might repent; and inasmuch as they were humble, they might be made strong, and blessed from on high, and receive knowledge from time to time; and after having received the record of the Nephites, yea, even my servant Joseph Smith, jr., might have power to translate, through the mercy of God, by the power of God, the Book of Mormon; and also those to whom these commandments were given might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity, and out of darkness, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually; for I the Lord can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven; and he that repents not, from him shall be taken even the light which he has received, for my Spirit shall not always strive with man, saith the Lord of Hosts.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4, 5.

IF THERE WAS ever a time in which hope should be stimulated within the human heart, it is now. With other nations we have endured many trials and tribulations. We came through a terrible war, and many still have the scars of that conflict. One did not need to participate on the actual battlefield to be wounded in that struggle. If we could look forward with the assurance that this world has learned its lesson, then possibly we could close our eyes to the past and even rejoice in the fact that our sacrifices had not been made in vain. However, all of this cannot be realized, for the hearts of men are still unchanged. But the fight for righteousness has not been lost; the same Lord, who had the power to come forth out of the tomb after he had been crucified by wicked men and had been dead for three days, shall yet bring to pass the resurrection of men and women, who, being dead in sin, shall manifest in the flesh the righteousness of Jesus Christ.

At this time of year we are preparing to celebrate an event that happened 118 years ago. Six men, in harmony with the instruction received from God, met in a very humble chamber, where they organized under divine direction the church we represent. I believe I can anticipate upon your part a greater appreciation of that event this year than in the years which have passed, for as conditions become worse in the world—as efforts of men in their attempt to save the situation seem to be in vain—it seems we must sense what God was attempting to do when he brought forth this church.

In the thirty-second section of the Book of Covenants, second paragraph, is this statement, which I accept as the word of God:

And verily, verily I say unto you, that THIS CHURCH have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth, even as many as will believe in me, and hearken unto my voice.

The statement, “This church have I established,” is the subject I have selected to discuss. I am wondering if those words mean to you what they mean to me. They are significant. Here is the statement of God: “This church [your church] have I established.”

Has God established his church? If he has, what was his purpose? I want to go back to an examination of the fourth and fifth paragraphs of the first section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

The Lord said, “I have called upon my servant, Joseph Smith.” Do you believe that? Be careful, now, in what you admit, for if you profess that you accept this, you may be asked why you are not doing more about it.

“I, the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant, Joseph Smith.”

THAT IS A POSITIVE TRUTH. I do not need to discuss the calamities on the earth. I hope, however, that you will permit your mind to go back over the past 118 years and try to recall the conditions that existed in the world in 1830. Observe how, from that day to this, our social life has become more and more complex in every sense—in industry and even in government.

The men who were raised up by Almighty God to bring into existence the Constitution of these United States, had hoped that government would become less and less complex and that greater freedom would be exercised by individuals. And yet we are living in a time when the freedom of man is practically lost sight of in every nation under heaven. Challenge that statement if you will, but we know something of the restrictions that are imposed in this land, even by that political body which used to claim to be the people's party. I am not advocating that these restrictions should be removed, for I am convinced that men, even in America, are not capable of exercising their agency as God intended they should.

The Lord was aware of the conditions that would prevail. He knew something about what would be in the hearts of our fellow men; he knew the conflicts that would result, for within everyone of us, regardless of nationality, is the inborn desire to be free. Still, we have not yet become capable of exercising the very freedom for which we yearn. And there will be misunderstandings, internal strife, and war until man becomes free in the fullest sense of the term.

So, knowing what was coming despite all the promises that the world seemed to manifest in material progress by new light coming into the world—even the matter of bringing forth new inventions which would liberate us from industrial slavery—the Lord saw that, despite this type of liberation, man would be in a worse predicament than he was in the handcraft stage. For in those days, he had little business with his fellow men. He was more or less self-dependent. God not only knew the calamity that was coming upon the earth, but he spoke of it. This is something distinctive. The people I represent were a minority group which dared to say over 100 years ago, "God has spoken." How many believe that today?

THE PERSECUTION of the young prophet and his close associates grew out of prejudice and opposition to the claim that God, the Father and the Son, had been revealed to these humble individuals. God has spoken. It was necessary that God should speak, if mankind were to be spared the consequence of the tribulations that were coming upon the earth.

We find, furthermore, that God gave some commandments. You might ask yourself the question, "Didn't we have the commandments previous to this time?" Evidently men were not observing them. There was a great deal of contention in those days as to which commandment was important and which was unimportant—which was essential to salvation and which was not. Some of us can recall an age of debate even in our church regarding the importance of commandments. God gave commandments because he knew there could be no salvation unless individuals yielded obedience to them. His commandments are nothing more or less than the laws of life. We cannot live even here and violate the commandments of God. We may think we are alive, but we may be like the woman whom Paul referred to when he said, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth."

The Lord instructed this infant church to proclaim these commandments to the world. I wish Latter Day Saints could go back in vision to the time these instructions were given. We think we are called upon to do some impossible tasks today, but consider the limitations of the church after its organization when the Lord said, "You are to proclaim these commandments." Please note the instruction. These commandments were to be proclaimed "that it might be fulfilled which was written by the prophets, the weak things of the earth should come forward and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Saviour of the world."

Frankly speaking, even some institutions which call themselves after the name of Jesus Christ have been teaching everything except the commandments of God. Where has the voice of inspiration been heard? To what extent have the people obeyed it when they have heard it? Even today, in the midst of tribulation, is the voice of God recognized? The only way it can be truly recognized is for those who profess to hear it, to make it effective in our lives. There are a great many Latter Day Saints, who consider it a fact that the church is too weak in its present condition to accomplish its divine purpose.

That every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Saviour of the world; that faith also might increase in the earth; that mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers.

Hear this—"before kings and rulers." I am bringing to you the word of the one eternal God who not only said, "This church have I established," but went on to indicate his purpose in establishing this church. Here are some of the assignments that were given by God himself.

DO I NEED TO ASK you if we have carried out these assignments? You know the answer. If we had carried out these assignments, kings and rulers would have some indication of the purpose of God in this last dispensation of time. If we had carried out these assignments we would have more than a small missionary group in a few European countries today; we would be carrying this message into every nation with power and conviction.

I took heart, with many of you, when we decided to send our appointees abroad, a little company of four—four devoted men and their companions—to carry to the nations of Europe the knowledge of what God is attempting to bring to pass in these last days. Some thought it was impossible to spare these four. What is wrong? Has God failed us? Has he required the impossible from this organization? I think not. The responsibility for any failure rests with us. Certainly we have not as yet revealed to the people of the United States that God speaks from heaven.

If I understand the purpose of God—if I understand the purposes revealed in the coming forth of this church—we were to receive light and direction so that his purpose in all the affairs of men might be realized upon the earth. I believe in present-day revelation. If there were ever a time when any people stood in need of light regarding present conditions—as well as those which are yet to come—and what the church must do to preserve its people, that time is now.

I WONDER HOW many of us would accept direction, if the direction were forthcoming. To what extent are we sharing the commandments—the commandments of life—with our friends and neighbors? It is true that this year we made some headway in the matter of baptisms; it is one of the four best years we have had. But don't let us become too enthusiastic over that, for instead of baptizing a few thousand, we should have multiplied by tens of thousands.

To what extent have we been heard in the legislative halls of this land or abroad? To what extent has the counsel of our leaders been sought by kings or rulers? I thought of that little man, Gandhi, and the power he exercised. We hear it said that we must have material resources before we can build Zion; we are too poor, too unprepared, and too few in number. Gandhi was an educated man, but he did not rely on what Oxford did for him; he did not rely on material resources. He had a personality that moved millions to make decisions, and the mighty Empire of Great Britain respected his power—this little man in a loincloth. I thought, "My God, My God! What about those of us who claim to have been called from above, who claim to be sent forth to speak in the name of Jehovah? What authority—real authority, moral authority—are we exercising with the leaders of this earth?"

AS A YOUNG missionary, I used to call attention to the fact that the unchangeable God had only one means of salvation. It is the only power given at any time, or that ever shall be given, to bring man into the right relationship with God and thus make it possible for us to be in right relationship with each other. If we believe that, what are we doing about it? Too many of us are looking elsewhere for salvation. Only we would not call it salvation. We are hoping that another election will change our leaders in Washington. Some of us are pinning our hopes on the United Nations; looking here and there like those who have not the faith, failing to realize that there is no hope for salvation outside of the church of which Jesus said, "This church have I organized, or established," and called out of the wilderness; called out of an unorganized state. Why don't we do more about this? I have tried to ask myself the question, and I have been persuaded that one thing which has handicapped us and taken away the spirit of the pioneer, even in a religious movement, is the fact that too many of us are willing to believe this is just another church.

Don't shake your heads—it is one thing to shake your heads and something else to reveal in practice whether you believe that statement or not. If we believe otherwise, our practice will indicate it. This is not just another church! I have observed that because of the recognition which has come to us from other churches some of our number have rejoiced.

WE MUST BEWARE of the danger of becoming just another church. What will it do to us? What will it do to our sons and daughters? What will it do to the young people? Some of them ask, "What difference does it make whether we are members of this church or some other church?" This is a distinctive work, and I am stressing its distinctiveness, not overlooking the good work of other organizations. I am doing it because, until we realize that this is a distinctive movement, we are not going to exercise very much power in our evangelistic program. What incentive do we have to offer to the people of the world? Are they as good as they might be if they possessed the fullness of the gospel? They may be, but if so, they are more faithful in applying what truths they have than we have been.

Speaking of this church the Lord said it was the only church upon the face of the earth with which he was well pleased. Will you find me some statement to the contrary? I cannot find any. Some of us with false modesty hardly mention this statement. I consider myself a better friend of the individual who has membership in another church by revealing my convictions and insisting on what God said than by hiding the truth. I know of a surety that God sent his servants forth to conceal nothing, to preach the fullness of the gospel, to set up the standard. I know that the standard which was set up would determine the type of people attracted to that standard.

I thank God for the humble people in Philadelphia who told me we did not have as much truth in the church I belonged to as there is in this church. They made me angry, but I am glad they did it; if they had not told me the truth, I would not be in this church today. I recall that their testimony was supplemented by the Spirit of God, for the first visit I made there—the first service I attended in that little church—was when they were bringing the Religio to a close one Sunday night. They used that familiar hymn, "He Leadeth Me." I had heard that hymn many times before I came into contact with these people. I was not a Latter Day Saint at the time, but this is the information which was given to me from a divine source: "These are my people; I lead this people." What can I do with a testimony like that? This is not just another church. This church is the church of which God said, "This church have I established." He found it necessary to establish it. If the purpose that brought it forth has not been realized, we should dare to ask ourselves the question, "Why?" I think we should give more concern to that than to some of the things which have concerned us.

I READ THAT THE young people of the "center place" are going to work to raise money for missions abroad. If we could share with these young people the conviction that God has spoken in these last days and has brought this church into being in order to bring to pass the establishment of his kingdom, thus sending forth manifestations of righteousness to the nations, we would not have to beg them to raise a sum of money. They would have a desire to bring into being a society where they were so involved in which they would give of themselves without reservation; and through them the testimony that God has spoken and shall continue to speak would be manifested in this dispensation of time.

When I think of the need that the world has for the contribution which this church and only this church is capable of making, my heart is sad. When are we going to stop playing church? When are we going to dare to do? When are we going to sense that the greatest event following the ascension of our blessed Lord was the manifestation of the Father and Son to Joseph Smith and their commissioning him to bring forth an institution that would reveal the living Christ, thus testifying of the power of Christ's resurrection in the lives of men today?

The words of a hymn written by David H. Smith come to me. It is the second stanza of Number 53:

We thank the Lord that we have lived to see
The good he bringeth in this latter day;
Our earnest prayers to him shall ever be,
To keep our feet within the narrow way,
For we have walked in darkness
hitherto,
And had but just a little ray of light;
But now the blessings fall as morning
dew;
And truth is shining as the morning bright.

How many can say with us today, "We have walked in darkness hitherto, but truth is shining as the morning bright"?

WHEN I THINK of the light that we as a body can manifest to the sons and daughters of men, I have to say, "O Lord, how long, how long until we shall respond to the power of that Spirit and move forward in bringing forth the light of thy kingdom?"

In the thirty-second section of the Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph two, we have these significant words:

"This church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth."

There is abundant evidence that the Lord has established this church, and I testify to you that he is also at work gathering together his elect from the four parts of the earth. The turning and overturn-

The Call of Spring

A "Between You and Me" Feature From the "Lamoni Chronicle" by the editor,

KATHRYN C. METZ

The best performance of the year is about to take place in this weary old world of ours and the advance agents of the colorful pageant are already publicizing the event.

There is an indefinable something in the air these days; the wind, although still cold, is less sharp, and the days are noticeably longer. Sap is rising in the tree trunks; the willows are turning a promising yellow; and the pussy-willow buds are dressed in gray satin.

Thank heaven for Spring!

It isn't just a season or a date on the calendar. It's a prophecy. It foretells the rebirth of nature and by promising that the bare and lifeless trees will yet produce a harvest, it demonstrates the resurrection. The flat seed, the asparagus in the bed, the daffodil and crocus all give testimony to the promise that . . . "it shall come to pass."

Ah, but Solomon said it far better than we possibly can . . . "For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come and the voice of the turtle is heard in the land."

But that isn't everything! All sorts of little things are happening under the mulch in the timber. The snowdrops are stirring with new impulses after a dormant winter; the violets are making preparation for their debut; and the wild plum tree branches are swelling with unseen life, waiting for a chance to burst into bloom.

Yes, and the dandelions are marshaling their forces.

A general invitation to witness Spring's performance is issued by the sun and carried on the wings of every little breeze. So put aside that book and let the morning paper stay on the chair. The clanking of sabers cannot be stopped by reading the headlines; the Russians will hardly be able to take over another country before tomorrow, and Congress can handle things for a day.

Grab a coat and hie yourself outside to witness this performance of Spring.

ing of the nations will make possible this gathering. I plead with you to identify yourself more fully with the spirit of this movement, so that together with the Lord we will witness the fulfillment of his purpose in bringing to pass the establishment of his church in these last days.

BROTHERS ALL

By Gladys Gould

“GOD . . . HATH MADE of one blood all nations of men . . . to dwell on all the face of the earth”¹ as brothers, since he gave his fatherhood to all. In this belief, I have been confirmed by my limited experiences with different races. In my country school-teaching days, I taught in communities which were entirely Scandinavian, or German, or Finnish; there I learned some of the customs of people whose ways were quite foreign to mine, while in their homes I came to appreciate their real worth.

On my one trip through the Rocky Mountains to Salt Lake City, I had been reveling in the grandeur of the scenery; in my thoughts, I had been connecting this upheaval of earth with the Book of Mormon story. Naturally, I watched with special interest a group of Indians who boarded the train. Two Indian boys in their teens were in the seat across the aisle from me. I wondered what this majestic country we were passing through meant to them. The train had been climbing steadily higher and higher until the August air had taken on the chill of winter. We were nearing the summit of the range, and the sunset illumined the mountain peaks and sky. The eyes of the Indian boys were on this wonder as they began to sing—so softly that only those nearest could hear it above the rumble of the train. That low, plaintive chant continued for some time. It stirred me until I felt at one with them; when they stopped singing one of the boys looked my way, and I said impulsively, “I love your singing. Won’t you sing some more?” Whether he understood my words or not, I do not know. He did not answer, nor did he sing again. The long look he gave me was not unfriendly—it was a look akin to that in the eyes of a magnificent collie to whom you have made your first friendly overtures. It seemed to say, “You cannot come into my holy of holies.” Yet I felt that I had.

THERE ARE OCCASIONS when we feel the strength of this brotherly tie; but as inhabitants of Joseph’s Land, the most prosperous and blessed people of the world, how little we are stirred by the needs of others! Does hungry Europe disturb us as we sit down to our well-spread boards? Right here at our side, our black brothers and red brothers continue their pleas for justice, and daily we note the inequality in the white race among our neighbors—even our brothers in the faith—some of them barely existing in a land of plenty while we “eat, drink, and are merry.” Are we doing anything about it, or are we just washing our hands of the responsibility of the call to brotherhood? Have we only a shining ideal which we hold aloft and worship from afar?

We have visioned a community in which every man is at work at his chosen task—a task into which he can put his heart, find satisfaction, and give service for the good of all. Here each household will be satisfied with its just wants and needs, eager to give its surplus to the common treasury in order that from this treasury, justice shall flow, and there will be no homes of luxury beside homes of want; no neglected children or old folks huddled into garages and basements; no man who must force himself to a task beyond his strength; no neglected sick ones without means for proper care; no person starved mentally without opportunity to study and develop.

We hope for a city in which all barriers of nationality, wealth, position, and education have been swept aside, where men and women are these words into our hearts and lives, valued because they love the Lord and his ways enough to obey his commands and honor his wishes. Each loves his neighbor with his possessions, his time, and his strength; each serves without envy or distrust; and the least gifted one may have equal opportunity with others to give his best. Forbearance of each other’s faults and weaknesses and a readiness to be the “servant of all” will create homes of love and harmony in a community of good will, where the great goal is to find the truth and live it.

It is such a treasured ideal, and it is up so high above us! How can we bring it to earth and keep it in our midst?

IN SEARCHING for the answer, certain oft-quoted words take on new meaning:

. . . . no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.²

Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called.³

. . . . it is a day of sacrifice⁴—organize yourselves⁵—sanctify yourselves that your minds become single to God.⁶

. . . . this is the way that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints; that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low.⁷

. . . . thou shalt lay aside the things of this world and seek for those of a better.⁸

. . . . it is incumbent upon the saints to so conduct themselves . . . as to be in the world but not of it, living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of all men, using the things of this world in the manner designed of God, that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord.⁹

. . . . purify your hearts before me, and then go ye into all the world, and preach my gospel unto every creature who has not received it.¹⁰

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.¹¹

(Continued on page 23.)

Speak Peace

BY FRANCES M. MILLS

THE SUN SHONE BRIGHT and hot on the oval plain between the mountains and the sea. Cultivated fields filled every available part of the delta formed where the frothing river flung itself over the last precipice in its journey down the high mountains, and suddenly at sea level, paused in a great, dark pool at the base of the falls. Then, its hurry over, it spread out leisurely in many winding fingers, feeling its way through the heavy black silt to the sea.

There was a border of white sand, and here and there a sand dune, looking yet more desolate for its fringe of rough grass and stunted palms. Beyond this narrow desert rim lay the fertile fields, stretching back to the very foot of the precipice itself. At either end of the oval plain, foothills came down to the sea, and the fields ran up the gentle slopes terraced one above another like giant stairsteps. Over all this the sun shone brightly, and the brisk sea breezes blew—but nowhere was there peace among the inhabitants of the land called Bountiful. Strife had seized them here and there, and spreading like a plague, had infested every broad plain and deep valley, leaping mountains and rivers as the wind. Before it, boundaries melted away and old hates flamed anew. Harsh words were followed by bloodshed, and death walked in the Land Bountiful.

Here in the oval plain, on its sanded rim, men had fought while the sun rose overhead; and still they fought when the light fell strong on the western slope of the great mountains. The battle was moving slowly inland now as the dark invaders gave way, little by little, before the small band of gallant defenders. Over the dunes they retreated and into the fertile fields. Suddenly they broke ranks and fled.

Shouting triumphantly, the victors followed their panic-stricken enemies, trampling the young crops, and leaping the drainage ditches in their headlong dash. The injured and the slow of foot fell behind and were overtaken and cut down. Some threw down their weapons and ran with but one thought—escape. None took time to fit an arrow to his bowstring. All resistance was gone. Now and again one fell, as the jubilant victors shot often and well at their retreating foes, and the green fields were dotted with the dark forms of the fallen enemy.

Nahor ran with his triumphant comrades, gaining imperceptibly on them and on the enemy. Though weary with battle so short a time before, he found new energy in the nearness of complete victory. His strong young legs were slowly carrying him into the lead. Before him, retreated his foes; intent only on overtaking or pursuing them, he failed to notice the crafty withdrawal of a small group from the main body. These warriors with their captain had recovered from the momentary panic of flight, and now cunningly prepared a trap for their pursuers. These few turned slightly aside, and as they passed a fringe of trees beside a tiny streamlet, they darted in, concealing themselves in the thick undergrowth. Moments later, as Nahor and his comrades neared the grove, a stream of arrows, carefully aimed, flew out to meet them.

NAHOR AWOKE from deep darkness with a throbbing pain in his head. He opened his eyes, and shut them quickly again, blinded by the glare of the sun shining full in his face. He dozed a while, half conscious, and when again his eyes opened slightly, it was not to the fierce brilliance of the sun. Its burning heat was no longer on his face. He lay in shadow. As his eyes opened farther, he saw the figure of a man sitting beside him, shielding him. Nahor blinked, dazzled by the bright blue sky and white clouds. Slowly his vision cleared, his eyes accustomed themselves to the strong light, and he saw plainly the face bending over him. There was a faint smile on the lips and in the eyes, and Nahor started to smile in response—then his expression froze, and he shrank away. The man beside him was one of the dark-skinned people, his enemies!

"Fear not, O man of Nephi." The man's quiet gaze had not wavered.

"Thou art a Lamanite!" Nahor spoke slowly, hesitantly. The man nodded. His smile was gone, and in its place was an expression of sober contemplation.

"Thou art my enemy!" Nahor's voice sank to a hoarse whisper as he drew himself still farther away.

"And so thou fearest me? I have not hurt thee."

"Why dost thou stay—to take me captive or kill me?" Then scornfully, "Or dost thou sit like a vulture and wait for thy prey to die?" Nahor spoke, not in answer, but pursuing his own hazy reasoning. And then, in sudden apprehension, "Or has the battle turned and gone against my comrades?"

"Nay, there is no battle; there is nought but flight for my people. Yonder, by the little hills they go, thy comrades in hot pursuit. Mine," he looked across the fields, "lie there, in great numbers. Not many there will reach the sheltering hills."

He spoke sadly, but Nahor—his young heart still full of battle-hate—heard only the words that told of victory for his people. In his eagerness he tried to rise and watch the wild scene rapidly growing fainter. He made but one move, then groaned and put his hands to his head. There was blood there, and a deep gash from his forehead back almost to the crown of his head. He closed his eyes and lay still, waiting for the pain to diminish. Presently he heard his companion moving and thought, "Now it comes." He steeled himself for the expected blow, too weak and ill to defend himself. Instead, a cool damp cloth was laid upon his forehead and the blood gently wiped away. He looked up into the calm face of the Lamanite.

"Lie still and rest. Thy hurt is deep."

Nahor looked at him wonderingly. Within his heart the battle-hate was dying out.

"I have lain here helpless before thee, and yet thou hast not tried to kill me!"

"Kill thee? With what—my bare hands?" He spread them out, huge and gnarled, a match for his vast frame. "Nay, I have no weapons. Mine I lost when first we took to flight, and thy sword lies far yonder, flung from thy hand in thy fall. Oh, lad! I have no wish to kill thee. Why thinkest thou on that?"

"Thou art mine enemy." Stubbornly Nahor's reasoning returned to his first waking thoughts.

"Must it ever be so?" The huge man asked, almost bitterly. "Because one has skin that is light, another dark, must we ever seek to kill one another? Why?"

"Our fathers fought, and their fathers before them, even for many generations back."

"Yea, but the cause?"

"That I know not, nor how it started. That was long ago. But this I know—this day ye came down against us, even across our borders. We are a peaceful people. What cause had ye for war?" Nahor spoke belligerently.

"Thou hast fought and known not why? Dost thou know not that months ago thy chief men claimed three broad valleys, yea, and all the hills about, saying they first were Nephite land, long ago, and shouldst be returned, peacefully or by war."

"Mere words! I speak of deeds!"

"Mere words ofttimes lead to deeds of violence and war. Thinkest thou we took kindly to those words? That we, who had lived there for many generations, would strike no blow to remain in freedom? We armed at once, and the Nephite warriors cried aloud in all the land, "Ho! Arise! The Lamanites prepare for war. Arm ye! Arm ye!"

"Yea, thou speakest truth," Nahor replied, humbly, beginning to see how one thing may be made to grow out of another in the hands of crafty men. He looked back on the days of feverish preparation they had undergone, and remembered how each one wondered when and where the first shock of battle would come. For a time it had seemed the thing would pass away in peace, until one dark morning border patrols had clashed, each claiming the other had crossed the border. Dawn found both armies joined in battle that rolled down the green hills and swept across the fields. Then, three days later in a gallant, desperate stand, the Nephites turned the tide of battle. Now, as the sun was setting in the sea, the brief but furious war dwindled and died in the foothills along the border where it had started. Begun in greed, pursued in the spirit of mischief and cunning, ended in impotency, it left nothing but hatred and grief—and the dead.

NAHOR LAY STILL, thinking hard, realizing for the first time the worthless cause for which he had fought and bled. The giant Lamanite beside him was silent too, sensing the struggle and awakening in the youth's mind.

"Yon red sky is like all the blood that was spilt this day. Even the heavens mock us!" He spoke more to himself than to his silent companion.

"Nay, lad," the Lamanite spoke after a pause, "if thou dost take an omen from the sky, look now." The fiery red had faded into mauve and lavender and, near the place where the sun had set, was gold shot through with streaks of iridescent green. Overhead the little, floating clouds were palest pink and white against a sky fast growing dark.

"So cometh peace after conflict," he finished softly.

"Yea, but see how fast it turns to gray, like ashes. So also cometh grief for the dead."

Slowly and painfully he rolled over, and with help sat up. The relief from the heat of the sun eased the ache in his head, and he looked around, then back at the Lamanite.

"Why didst thou remain when all thy comrades fled? Thou art not wounded."

"Nay, but when I leaped this little stream here my foot turned upon a stone, and ere I could recover my breath from the fall thou didst fall upon me. So I lay still until all thy comrades passed, knowing well they would kill me if I moved. When I would have arisen and followed after them, I found this foot would not bear my weight." He threw off the cloak that covered it. Nahor saw that the foot and ankle were swollen and discolored.

THE BRIEF TROPICAL TWILIGHT vanished, and deep darkness lay upon the plain. Flickering lights, at first far away, then slowly spreading farther apart and growing larger, hovered above the surface of the level ground like giant fireflies. Nahor saw and spoke in a low-erred tone.

"Look yonder!"

The huge man turned, watched the ghostly scene, then muttered beneath his breath, "Human wolves that rob the dead and murder the wounded. Whence they come I know not, yet after every battle they appear, as if out of the ground, with their torches and sacks to carry away their loot, and daggers to kill thee if thou so much as moveth to look upon them. Fiends!" He shook his fist at them as they moved slowly about, then stopped and after a few moments moved on again. Gradually they were working toward the sea, and nearer the place where Nahor and the Lamanite sat.

"And if we pass them on the street by day we think them honest men."

"Yea, but let us arm ourselves. I fear more these plunderers by night than all the foes who come against me in battle by day."

"We two are wounded and unarmed, and they are many. How can we hope to stand against them?"

"We shall be well prepared ere they come." He was moving, gathering his vast bulk into a low crouch. Now he arose on one knee, paused, and slowly straightened, towering over Nahor. Carefully he set the injured foot upon the ground—one step, another, and another. Though limping sorely, he walked away. Presently he stooped and picked up some object that gleamed dimly in the starlight. He looked about on the ground, moving in first one direction and then another, stooping now and then to pick up things that looked like sticks. Then, bending over one of the fallen, he loosed the dead man's hand from the long, slender object it held so tightly. Now the Lamanite was coming back, and Nahor saw he moved more quickly, not limping so much. In his hands were a sword and arrows and a bow. He came and stood before the youth, holding out the shining blade.

"Thy sword," he said simply. Nahor hesitated.

"Am I not thy prisoner?"

The huge man laughed shortly.

"As like as that I am thy prisoner. Here, take it, lad. The war is over between us. Thinkest thou I stayed only because I could not walk with ease?" He laughed again. "Why, lad, I could have been halfway to the low hills ere now. Nay, I stayed because—I like thy face. Thou hast the look of an honest man. Give me thy hand, and let me hear thee say there no more shall be war between us."

Their hands joined.

"There no more shall be war between us," Nahor repeated solemnly, adding, "Peace be with us both, so say I, Nahor, son of Kib."

"And I, Zoram, the Lamanite. Now, take thy sword."

Nahor received it gladly. It was his own and had been his father's before him.

"Now, lad," said Zoram, a man of action, "if thou canst walk, let us hide ourselves beneath yon trees, for so they shall not come upon us unaware, nor be so apt to see us and make trouble. See, the moon is rising. Soon 'twill make this plain seem light as day."

He helped Nahor to his feet, carefully supporting him, and waited patiently while the youth fought back the pain and faintness that swept over him.

"I am ready." His tone was firm with determination, in spite of his weakness. They went very slowly, for Nahor found every movement added to the agony of his wound. Neither spoke, intent only upon finding firm footing along the narrow strip of unplowed ground between the growing crops and the little streamlet. Nahor paused frequently, and Zoram did not hurry him. Once, while thus they rested, Zoram spoke:

"Canst stand alone for a moment?"

"Yea."

Zoram knelt upon the bank, and reaching down, drew up a spear that had lain half in, half out of the water.

"This will be of double use," he said. "A staff to walk with now, and a weapon if need be."

Again they moved toward the sheltering trees. Nahor was breathing hard and leaning ever more heavily on Zoram. Within the dimness of the grove they stopped, and Nahor, with a sigh almost like a groan, sank to the ground.

"Thou art faint, lad?"

"Yea, and weary—I have never been so weary," he answered, his words coming slowly and scarcely audible. "All the world goes madly around, and mine eyes are full of jumping lights."

"Then rest and sleep, for we are safe here."

(Continued on page 18.)

The Seventy Present— Improving Our Methods of Publicity

By Virgil J. Billings

THIS IS A DAY of widespread enlightenment and understanding. Man comprehends the movements of the universe and is conversant with many of the scientific laws governing life. When it comes to a knowledge of the divine laws of life that could bring peace and happiness to humanity—or in other words the program of our church—the world is largely ignorant. To many people, the church is considered as an antiquated institution which makes its strong appeal to women and children and holds only the hope of a happy status in some future existence. Our church is regarded as just another religious organization. People are not informed of the program of transformation into the experience of Zionism living.

The great commission, “go ye into all the world and preach this gospel to every creature,” states the vital importance of society’s being informed of the full truth and program of salvation as offered by the Restored Church of Jesus Christ. It isn’t enough to have faith and hope that some day the public will understand. That some day may be too late. The need is ever present in life. We have the real answer to the perplexing problems of modern society and the solution to economic chaos. We must see that the world begins to comprehend our message.

Before the fine art of publicity was developed in the commercial world, the producer and merchant were engaged in the business of supplying the normal needs and desires of the human family. They were bounded by man’s necessities and meager knowledge of things within his reach. Through persuasive publicity, the luxuries of the yesterdays have become necessities today. As a church, we have a product to sell—the building of the kingdom of God. To sway public opinion in our favor, as much effective publicity is needed to sell the Zion-building plan as the product of any firm. We too often establish our place of business, then sit back and wait for customers to find us.

THE CHURCH is an offensive movement and, as such, it must compete with some 1,200 religious organizations proclaiming a program of salvation. More than that, it must compete with hundreds of other forces and organizations that are spending thousands of dollars in swaying public opinion in their direction and selling products of destruction. It is regrettable that, while secondary or even things of inferior values are being kept to the foreground in the business world today, the greatest business—that which holds the power to transform men and nations—is allowed to languish for the need of better publicity. We should place the public mind in a receptive condition for our goods and endeavor to create a favorable atmosphere for our product. This can be done through effective methods of publicity. It is a proved fact that a good product will be accepted if proper publicity is used in informing the public. One of the greatest needs we have in the presentation of our message and in the improvement of our missionary work is the development of better methods of publicity.

The proclamation of our message to the nonbeliever is listed under the program of evangelism. Much of our method of evangelism centers around the activities of the seventy and the missionary elder—this is especially true in conducting the missionary series of services. In missionary work, the seventy is second only to the apostle. Much of the seventy’s responsibility is directing specific missionary activities so that definite results may be obtained—rather than just preaching a series of sermons for an extended period of time. This is not minimizing the preaching message. But behind the preached word, we must depend upon other means of conveying to the world the program of the church. By virtue of this position, the seventy is responsible for a publicity campaign in connection with the program of evangelism. As such he should furnish creative leadership, lead in the formation of policies, advise workers, and build procedures. It is his job to point out what should be done in publicity objectives, suggest means for accomplishing these goals, stimulate interest in the program, and delegate details to responsible persons. At times he must appraise the results, then suggest new techniques and procedures that will bring about desired results.

IT IS THE PURPOSE of publicity to create favorable opinion toward the product. It should be kept in mind that society is ever changing and that the means of influencing and communicating with society have also changed. So often as God’s representatives we allow ourselves to be content with old-time methods of publicity and to ignore the new techniques. Often when we fail to create a good attendance and interest, we turn to worn-out excuses to console ourselves with failure. Many times we are discouraged when, after advertising and conducting our series in a rather formal way, we fail to arouse attention. Should we not accept such failure as a challenge to think through the problem again and make our appeal more attractive and effective at the next opportunity? Improving our methods of publicity will not answer all the problems confronting the proclamation of the message and make another series successful. But much depends upon the organization of a publicity campaign in arousing new interest for a series. When publicity is rightly used and intelligently directed, it greatly aids in creating an interest in the program, helps in securing support, and assists in building good will. The constant dropping of the water of publicity gradually wears away the stone of indifference and places the public mind in a condition of acceptance.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

SOME DEFINITE RESEARCH has been made during the past year to observe effectiveness of publicity. Perhaps some of the results are not due to the program of publicity alone; but we do find that where lots of good publicity is used, attendance at a series of meetings is greatly increased. From records we present the following data.

Branch No. 1—The regular series of services advertised through local branch announcements and letting people provide own publicity, brought an average attendance of eighteen with an average of two nonmembers. Then a program of intensive publicity brought an average attendance of forty-one members and seventeen nonmembers. There was a total of fifty-seven nonmembers that attended the series.

Branch No. 2—The regular series of services had an average attendance of thirty-seven with an average of two nonmembers. After a publicity campaign, the average attendance was ninety with an average of seventeen nonmembers.

Branch No. 3—At the regular series, the average attendance was fourteen with no nonmembers. After a publicity campaign, the average attendance was forty-two with an average of seven nonmembers.

Branch No. 4—At the regular series of services, the average attendance was forty-five with a few nonmembers. After a publicity campaign, average attendance was one hundred ten with an average attendance of thirty-four nonmembers. There were a total of seventy-six nonmembers who attended the services.

These same statistics have been true in a number of other places where such a survey has been made.

Let's analyze the situation in Branch No. 4 to see the publicity methods used and results acquired. The size of the town where the church is located is about 500 population. Approximately half of the members live in town and the other half in the near-by farming area. There are three other churches in the community, with our church holding the minority in membership. Our membership is 104. The average attendance is thirty-five at the morning service and forty at the evening service. This branch had not missed a year for several years in having some special missionary series. However, in the past series, very little publicity had been used. Result—the average attendance over a period of years was only slightly better than the attendance at the regular Sunday evening services. Three months in advance of the anticipated series, the missionary made a visit to the branch for the purpose of organization. At that time a general branch survey was made, and a series of meetings was outlined in which definite publicity methods and objectives were set up. These publicity methods were as follows:

1. Use of posters: The first poster announcing the special services was put on the bulletin board two months in advance of the series of meetings. A new poster was put up every two weeks. This was a project of the Zion's League.

2. Newspaper publicity: Two weeks before the series of meetings, a display ad appeared to arouse community attention. The week before the series, a news article and display ad appeared. Each week during the series another display ad was put in the paper along with a short news item of the series.

3. Circular letters: A week before the series, mimeographed letters were sent to all members of the branch, enlisting their support and trying to impress upon them the responsibility of the church membership in a series of meetings. Two printed announcements were included with each letter—one for the member's reference and one to be passed on to a friend. One hundred fifty mimeographed letters were sent to all prospects, suspects, business people, and others in the community. These letters went out over the signature of the pastor.

4. Invitations or dodgers: Printed announcements were provided. Besides sending these in the above-mentioned letters, a canvassing committee was organized. During the week before the series, every home in the town was called upon and a leaflet left with a personal invitation to attend.

5. Send-off service: The Sunday before the series was to start, a "send-off service" was held at the regular Sunday morning service. The members were urged to give their best support to the meetings. They were asked to fast and pray during the series. At this service, special prayers were offered for spiritual help and guidance during the activity. It should be remembered that our publicity must be under-girded with spiritual power, for we are not just selling a product—we are trying to get people to enlist in the cause of Christ.

The results of these efforts were shown in the series. The first night there were eighty-seven present. Average attendance during the first week was ninety-one with an average of twenty-four nonmembers. The Sunday night of the second week there were 130 present, and an average of one hundred twenty-nine for the second week. The total average for the series was 110 with an average of thirty-four nonmembers. There were seventy-seven different nonmembers who attended the series. Forty of these nonmembers attended three or more services. This attendance was also helped by an average of eleven from the near-by branches. Carefully and prayerfully planned publicity for missionary series brings gratifying results that would never have been attained through haphazard or mediocre methods.

IT IS NOT our purpose in this presentation to go into detail on improving or making up materials. That will be discussed in another feature. However, the use of materials will also be included in the following suggestions and helps in improving publicity methods.

1. Contact the local branch in regard to a publicity campaign at least two months in advance of the series. It would be well if this could be done by the missionary in person. By all means, don't wait until the series is to start before the publicity begins. It also proves better if the missionary can spend a few days in the branch before the series is to start. He can then give personal attention to putting a climax on the big drive just before the services begin.

2. Survey the branch and community. What means and materials are available that will best suit the community? What materials have been used? What type of publicity is being used by other religious organizations in the presentation of their evangelistic campaigns? We need to discover what mistakes have been made and why; what will better these poor conditions, and where successes have been made. When we have done this, we are in a position to build for stable, future progress for our church movement.

3. Encourage the branch to raise publicity funds. Several congregations now are including such a fund in their regular branch budgets. The extent of a publicity campaign will be determined by the amount of money available. "It costs to advertise." There are some things that can be done with very little expenditure. These methods should be utilized. Don't go beyond the people's means of support.

4. The antiquated thought that in presenting a sermon, God will do it all and there is no need of preparation might also be applied to the ineffectiveness of some of our publicity campaigns. Decide and plan a definite campaign. Make your publicity methods and materials up-to-date and of such a nature that they will attract and hold the attention of the public. People's wants, desires, and activities are different. Everyone we meet has his own set of desires and preferences. Only in ministering to these needs can we hope to influence him. A campaign should be desirable, attainable, definite, understandable, and continuous. Many programs fail because no one aspect gets much attention. Be careful not to overorganize. Too many methods can be attempted and none of them be effective. It is better to select a few and do them well rather than attempting too many methods.

5. Enlist support: Arrange your publicity campaign so that every member has a definite working assignment. Don't overload the willing few. Everyone has some personal contribution that he can make and will feel a measure of responsibility if his task brings about some real achievements. This increases as he witnesses strangers becoming interested. Enthusiasm is also generated among the members when they participate. An active participant will enjoy the program. The time a missionary spends in the branch before the series starts can be made most effective in helping to stimulate active participation in the publicity campaign. Plans are of more value when the membership has a consciousness of them. No matter how well the preparatory work has been progressing, there will be a number more who will willingly and enthusiastically volunteer for participation after some personal ministry by the missionary. Support of the members should be enlisted because of the spiritual blessings that attend those who participate, and because more effective results are had by reason of more thorough campaigning.

6. Assist in creating favorable public opinion. The keen, analytical, well-versed, and spiritual missionary will also be alert to opportunities in creating a serviceable public opinion toward the church and its program. This is especially true in creating an interest in our evangelistic campaign. Before we can expect nonmembers to attend our missionary activities, we must see that they are contacted. The attitude that is developed by the public toward our movement will determine the success or failure of our missionary effort. In helping to create such an opinion, it is well for a missionary to make himself available to community activities—perhaps being a speaker at a social club of businessmen, school activity or community program, reviewing a worth-while book, visiting shut-ins, or hospital patients. It must be remembered, however, that such should be done with the spirit of service rather than just as advertising. Sincere ministry to people's needs proves to be one of the greatest forces in creating a favorable opinion toward the church and placing it before the public. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven" is the admonition of Christ to us. Many times we go about our business of missionary work in such a quiet way that our light is "hid under the bushel." We just hope that people will search until they find the glorious light of the gospel. If we are to be recipients of the warm-hearted friendship of the community—which is the basis of conversion—we must allow our light to shine in such a way that favorable good will is created and our community activities become a means of publicity. This, then, will be one of our most powerful means of causing the “prejudiced” nonmember to develop a friendly attitude toward our movement. Through word and deed we acquaint people with the gospel way of life.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

7. Encourage the development of good press relationship. The newspaper is still one of the strongest forces in developing public opinion and directing the trend of the public mind. This is especially true in the small community where the weekly paper is considered the local informer. The editor is attempting to reflect the life of the community. As such, he wants news, not disguised propaganda. He desires stories that are significant, unusual, timely, accurate, newsworthy, of local and human interest. Don't expect too much space. It is the news that's read which is of value, not what is printed. We should use some paid advertising. Enough such advertising should be used to be fair with the newspaper policy and be profitable to us. We should not expect all free space, even if we have a story the editors are glad to have. We should realize that there is a difference between a publicity seeker and one who informs the newspaper of newsworthy events of his church.

8. Be alert to publicity methods that will best suit the community, making use of suitable materials.

IN SUMMING UP, let us say that all publicity methods should be positive, affirmative, sincere, and attractive. We should desire the maximum results for our hours of toil and money spent in missionary endeavor. A solemn obligation rests upon us to win as many souls for Christ as is possible. “Search diligently and spare not” is the word of the Lord to us.

For a Latter Day Saint Background-- We Offer:

THE STORY OF THE CHURCH

By INEZ SMITH DAVIS

Fourth Edition

Here is the new and revised edition of THE STORY OF THE CHURCH, dramatic, filled with real people in living situations. It begins with the account of the experiences of Joseph Smith, the organization of the church in 1830, all of the intervening story between, and up to and including the modern day history of the church, and the story of Israel A. Smith as our President.

$4

FUNDAMENTALS

By F. HENRY EDWARDS

This is a brief statement of some of the fundamental beliefs of the doctrine and organization of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It is a book intended for study that the richer values of our faith may help some of the people to “know the church.”

$2.25

5 or more to 1 address $2 each—Do not order before April 15

Herald Publishing House
Independence, Missouri

A Girl Scout Leader Speaks

BY AMY STOKER

The author is leader of Girl Scout Troop Number Forty-five in Salt Lake City, Utah. After reading the article, "A Tribute to Scoutmasters," in a recent issue of the "Herald," she was impressed to write in behalf of Girl Scouting from a leader's viewpoint.

I FIND THAT being a leader of Girl Scouts is a rich experience indeed. No pecuniary payment could equal the satisfaction I have gained from it. It has meant meeting new friends, finding new interests and skills, and above all, a growing friendship with the girls in my troop. Nothing is more satisfying than watching the girls develop physically, mentally, and spiritually. The Girl Scout program embraces a broad field of activity, and the girls have ample opportunity to develop themselves. They learn to create with their hands, to develop healthy bodies through outdoor activities, to have tolerance and consideration for others, to respect their country and revere God. It is all together an experience for which I am deeply grateful.

No job worth doing is without its occasional discouragements and hard work. The fact that leaders have overcome these obstacles and become national directors and executives proves that the program is worth-while and that discouragements are far outweighed by successes.

From a small beginning of twelve girls who met on March 12, 1912, in Savannah, Georgia, with Juliette Low to discuss scouting for girls, the organization has grown to 1,250,000. It is gratifying to see that so many girls are eager to participate in this program, which requires of all its members this promise:

On my honor, I will try: To do my duty to God and my country,

*To help other people at all times,
To obey the Girl Scout Laws.*

Keeping this promise would make each girl a better member of her own faith, a better citizen of her country, a better member of her family and community.

MANY MOTHERS like myself have become leaders of troops to make it possible for their girls to have Scouting. Others who have no girls of their own have given devotedly of their time and talent to make it possible for the daughters of other women to have the opportunities offered by scouting. One woman in our city—a doctor's wife and mother of one son—has recently been elected to the state Hall of Fame for her untiring efforts as a leader of a Brownie Scout Troop for fifteen years. Many of her summers were completely devoted to directing the summer camp at the Girl Scouts own "Mountain Dell" camp house located in the near-by mountains. The camp accommodated fourteen girls each week. Lucky, indeed, were those girls who were privileged to have a week or more at camp under her direction. Here they were introduced to nature study, campfire song fests, and the fine art of learning to share work and play.

This good woman is just one leader of approximately 7,500 in scouting. Sixty per cent of these leaders are housewives; twenty per cent are teachers, ten per cent office workers, and ten per cent from other professions. The story told by these figures is gratifying when one realizes that troop leadership is volunteer work.

A RECENT DISTRICT meeting was attended by a national officer. When an expression of gratitude was offered to the visitor for giving time to attend the meeting, she replied that she was the one who was grateful—that if it were not for the leaders and district women who were giving their time and efforts, her work would be impossible. She was the one who felt humble.

When I was a girl of scout age, the magazine advertisements of camps, all long distances from our small town, were read with no little degree of longing that I might go to camp myself. Remembering this, it gives me great pleasure as I work with a unit of twenty-four girls at a day camp in a local park or escort my troop to "Mountain Dell" for a week end. One could not ask for a richer experience than scouting with girls. Perhaps through my efforts, some girl with childhood longings for camp life can realize the fulfillment of her dreams.

* * * * *

While the Oriole and Blue Bird programs are the officially approved programs for the girls of the church, we know there are many branches where our church girls attend Girl Scout troops or are members of one of the other national organizations for girls. These girls are participating in good programs, and we desire to express our appreciation to those women who so untiringly and unselfishly give of their time and talents for the leadership of girls. We are happy to share this leader's message with readers of the Herald.—General Department of Women.

— — — a home column feature — — —

Food for Thought

By B. MILDRED NELSON

Instructor in Nutrition, Extension Department, Ames, Iowa

THE WOMAN WHO can cook a good meal out of little has always been the one who could keep her family happiest. The food is good, the budget is balanced. Almost anyone can set an attractive table when there is lots of food, and it is cheap compared to the income. In times such as these however, it takes a wise homemaker to do it. Her "know-how," her skill, and her ability mean real money to the family and good food to those who need it most.

The wise homemaker now is the one who makes the most of everything, who can stretch half a pound of ground beef to satisfy the whole family. She is the one who sees to it that not a bite of food goes to waste; her family enjoys every meal.

In case you have run out of ideas for using up scraps of stale bread, muffins, cakes, etc., here are a few suggestions made by the Associated Retail Bakers of America.

Bread which is no longer "fresh" may be converted into French toast, cinnamon toast, hot milk toast.

Pulled bread: Tear shreds of dried bread from slice. Toast these shreds in oven and serve with milk as you would other dry cereals. The inside of rolls, muffins, or biscuits can also be used for this.

Cake which has lost its freshness can be served with sauces such as vanilla cream, orange, and lemon. Fix in advance so as to allow the sauce to saturate the cake.

Cut dried cake or nut bread into fingers for lining serving dishes for tapioca puddings, etc. These fingers are placed around inside—Charlotte Russe effect.

Pound and loaf cakes which have become dry may be sliced and toasted.

A delicious treat is fried pound cake. The cake is sliced and fried in buttered skillet, using slow heat. Brown both sides and serve with jelly.

WHAT ARE YOUR children having for lunch at school today? If they carry lunches, there is probably a thick cheese, meat, or egg sandwich, perhaps a peanut butter sandwich, some carrot strips, maybe, a big red apple (or a baked one left from yesterday's dinner), some oatmeal cookies, and a thermos of cold milk or hot cream soup. Or maybe they'll be getting a complete lunch prepared at school. No wonder they have those chubby knees, bright eyes, and rosy cheeks!

You're probably planning right now to have some delicious tidbit on hand for that time after four when they'll come bounding home "starved to death." It's hard to stop them soon enough to leave an appetite for dinner—or is it? We wonder where they put all that food!

But if you were a mother in a town in Germany, do you know what your child would have for lunch? You would probably have so little to feed him that you would send him to school not so much to get an education as to get lunch. He could go to school only half a day. There he would get a ladle of thin soup. Not enough, it's true, but better than you could give him. And while he was gone, you'd be spending your time trying to find enough food to give him something when he came home. You might steal it or you might fight with other women to sweep up droppings left on the street by horses so that you might have something to trade to farmers for food.

How do I know? Our Iowa farmers came back and told the story—and I believe them!

STRETCHING THE DOLLAR

By Mrs. C. B. Freeman

I NOTICED the article in a recent Herald, asking for methods of stretching the dollar. As I am very much interested in this question, I will list some of the ways and means I have practiced.

By "knowing how," much poverty can be averted. The old saying, "Willful waste makes woeful want," is often true of the housewife. There is a little paragraph in The Story of the Church which says the Latter Day Saint women could prepare a tasty meal with much less than their Gentile neighbors. This I believe should be aimed at in our day when there is such need of stretching the dollar.

Food values should be studied. Rich foods are not needed to nourish the body, so we should find ways to prepare vegetables and simple foods which are so healthful. I believe I can illustrate this best by telling of the experience of my daughter. My daughter, who lives on a farm, has four children. Three of these are in school; and in the past three years, they have not missed a day. They are rugged and strong. Their food is plain—milk, butter, cream (not rationed), cereals, whole wheat homemade bread, vegetables (raw and cooked), and corn bread usually once each day. They eat meat sparingly—pork, beef, wild game, chicken, and fish. She must buy much of the fresh fruit they eat, but she sees that they have it daily. I believe by raising these strong children and practicing strict economy, she is stretching the dollar.

Mothers and young women should be able to sew. Many dollars are saved by making garments from empty feed sacks and by restyling clothes. Here the Saints may share together as a family. If one child outgrows a garment, it is shared. Why should anything go to waste in a Zion community?

Before I married, I studied dressmaking, and my husband had quite a little knowledge of shoe cobbling. I was quite thrilled when my girls in high school received so many compliments on their clothes. Handwork, crocheting, embroidering, and tating add inexpensive touches of beauty.

The knowledge of simple insecticides to save our gardens is another dollar-stretcher. Use of ashes with a dash of turpentine for the aphid that destroys cucumber and other vines, lime for cabbage worms, tin cans open over plants for cut worms, and Black Leaf Forty spray for leaf hoppers. With these inexpensive practices, we always have a

(Continued on page 22.)

Speak Peace

(Continued from page 11.)

WHEN NEXT NAHOR OPENED HIS EYES, he saw the full moon high overhead and knew that it was midnight. All about him were noises of the night. Insect voices throbbed and pulsed and trembled, some high and piercing, some low and slow like a heartbeat. They trilled from the treetops and from the ground. Now and again some nightbird sang, slowly and sweetly, one long note oft repeated and followed by intervals of silence. He lay still in dreamy contemplation, scarcely remembering where he was and how he came there. Dimly the scenes of the day began floating before his mind's eye, and presently he turned and looked about him for the Lamanite.

"Zoram? Art here?"

"Yea, I am here. Dost wish something? A cool drink?"

"I would thank thee much for one." He drank deeply from the Lamanite's helmet filled with the clear, cold water of the little stream near by. Then half shyly he spoke. "I thought perhaps thou hadst gone to join thine own people."

"Not till I see thee safe."

"Thou art most kind. I have been thinking, Zoram. War is not all evil."

"I have seen no good in it. What findest thou?"

"Today I have found some truth by which to judge this maze. Thou gavest me the key. I remember well the day thy lands were claimed, and how many said it would but bring trouble to covet that which was another's. But time made them forget; and when the cry arose that thy people armed for war, we saw not the crafty purpose, but armed speedily and thought of nought else. All the talk was of battles and glorious victories and the heroes of old. Many there were, the young—and I am one—who had ne'er seen a war, for peace had long been with us. But the old ones stirred us up and fired our imaginations with tales of heroic deeds. So we met the day of evil. Ah, Zoram, would that all in thy land and mine would join hands and take the oath we took today. I have no heart for war."

"Nor I. Thou hast learned a lesson in this evil day and gleaned wisdom from it. Harken not to the precepts of man, but keep thine ears open and thy heart pure to receive the word of the Lord, whether he speak through the prophets or by a voice within thee that no other may hear."

"I have heard there are many voices that speak to the heart of man, both good and evil. How may I know if it be the voice of the Lord?" asked Nahor.

"If it would have thee hurt or kill or rob thy neighbor, or seek that which is not thine own—heed it not. But if a voice shall speak to thee of peace and love for thy neighbor—listen with thy soul, for the Master speaks."

"'Tis strange—thou speakest of peace, and yet I found thee in the midst of battle."

"Many there are who will fight for peace, but have no love for war. He who truly loves his country will fight to save it. Thou art such a one, thyself," answered Zoram.

"Thou speakest truly. And that is the strangest part of all this mad day—that thou, who art a Lamanite, should speak of peace and love and show great kindness to a Nephite. I had thought thy people a warlike race, bloodthirsty and cruel."

"Yea, we are, lad, most of us." The Lamanite's deep voice, which had rung with conviction in the glad message he brought, now sank low as though in shame. He turned his face away until the moonlight no longer fell full upon it, and the broken shadows of the leaves hid his expression of grief and remorse. Nahor spoke quietly, yet eagerly.

"Tell me, Zoram—how camest thou to believe thus? Thy priests teach sorcery and war and priestcraft, not the word of Jesus Christ."

"When I was young—younger even than thou art, Nahor, I was ever quick to take up the sword against anyone for any cause, for the thrill of battle, and the glory and the plunder that come to the victorious. But one day I fell, sorely wounded, and while I lay as one dead, I heard a voice saying, as though far from me, 'Cease contending. Love thou Me.' And I asked, 'Who art thou that I should love thee?' and the voice came again, much nearer and stronger: 'I am thy Brother, love thou Me.'

"I felt as though I were being lifted up; my heart swelled with heavenly joy, and I answered, 'Yea, Master,' for now I knew he who spoke to me was the Lord Jesus who showed himself to thy people and mine long years ago. Then I felt my unworthiness; all my sins, and the blood I had shed became too great to bear, and I said, 'I am not worthy, Lord. How may I love Thee?'"

"The clear voice came quickly, 'Speak peace, and love thy fellow men.' Slowly the feeling passed of being lifted up, and the voice came no more, yet the gladness in my heart has never gone away."

THE SIMPLE, FERVENT TESTIMONY warmed and soothed the troubled heart of the young Nephite. He looked into the rugged face, touched gently by the moonlight, and seemed to see a glow there from some divine source. He marveled and would have spoken, but found no words. Nor did Zoram speak but sat silent, gazing into the shadowy foliage above them. Weakness and weariness overcame the youth—he dozed and woke to see the ever-watchful Zoram bending over him, then smiled and slept again. When he awoke with a start it was to see the dawn, and his guardian standing at the edge of the grove waving his cloak to and fro upon the end of a spear. The Lamanite cupped his hands to his mouth and drew a deep breath.

"Ho! Over here—over here!" he shouted. A faint answer was borne to him on the gentle land breeze. Nahor started up in alarm.

"Zoram! Whom callest thou?"

"Ah, lad, art awake? Be not alarmed." The giant came to him, limping heavily. "These are thine own people, come to aid the wounded and bury the dead. They will care for thee." He put his cloak around his shoulders, and, laying the spear with the bow and arrows, knelt beside Nahor. "I will take thee to the edge of the fields away from these bushes that they may find thee more easily."

Nahor felt himself lifted bodily and set upon his feet, though his head swam so he could scarcely see. Then his vision cleared, and he saw the slender trunks of the trees waving heavy fronds against the pale sky, and at their bases, the ferns and dense undergrowth which had sheltered them throughout the night. Slowly they moved into the open, and now he saw those to whom Zoram had called. Scattered over the broad fields, some singly, some in pairs, men were bending over the fallen, some bearing away heavy burdens toward the Nephite camp at the foot of the northern hills.

Nahor sat down, his back against a tree. Zoram waved his cloak again, and presently two figures detached themselves from a small group and started across the fields toward the grove. They bore an empty litter between them.

"'Tis well. Soon thou wilt be safe, lad." The Lamanite paused, his earnest gaze fixed on Nahor's face. "Thou didst say, 'War is not all evil'—in the main I disagree with thee, and yet a battle brought thee to me, and in thee I feel I have found a friend. I would we had met in happier times"

"Thou art, indeed, a friend to me," replied Nahor sincerely. "Canst forgive me for the way I spoke to thee and thought harsh things of thee when first we met? Truly, Zoram, I meant them not—it was the battle—the fighting. I know not what had turned my head. I never felt that way before. There was nought around me but hate and spilt blood, death and noise and the maddening heat of the sun, then the sting of my wound—the first I ever felt. Zoram, I know not how it was, but all the world seemed awry, and I spoke not my own heart, but the evil that the war had wrought in me."

"Yea, lad, I understand. How well I know that feeling." His gaze was far away—his mind tured time back to his own youth and the mad years when he had sown and cared nought for the harvest. "How well I know . . ." he repeated, slowly and softly. Then starting from his reverie, he gathered up the bow and arrows and the spear.

"Thy countrymen are drawing nearer and soon will be near enough to see I am not fair of skin as thou art."

"They will not harm thee—for that I give my word. Stay, at least until thy foot is strong."

Smiling, Zoram shook his head. Nahor continued his pleading:

"Thou hast said the war is over—there is nought to fear, and I would keep thee by me as a friend and hear more of thy message of love and peace. Stay with me, Zoram. Remain here in a gentler, more prosperous land, and speak thy words of peace for all to hear."

"Nay, lad. My work lies not here, but among my own people. Thou hast many to preach and teach, and many do heed, but in my land there is none save I who speak peace. Though few listen and seldom heed, I cannot find it in my heart to forsake them, for the time may yet come when I shall do a good work among them. Though my words seem lost, as seeds cast upon barren ground, yet always do I hope to see them bloom and bear fruit."

His voice was deeply serious. Nahor could feel the eagerness of his longing to bring his people again to ways of peace and brotherhood. His deep-set eyes glowed with the light of hope as he raised them to the hills that separated him from his homeland. Nahor, sensing the urgent call he felt, ceased to plead. A long moment, and Zoram's eyes came back to rest on his young friend. Smiling, he held out his hand.

"I will see thee again, my friend, as soon as ever I may return to this fair land." Then reverently, "God keep thee and bless thee and lead thee safely through all thy days. Farewell!"

"Farewell, Zoram. If thou needs must go, may the Lord Jesus Christ go with thee all the way, till thou findest peace."

Their eyes held in a gaze of complete understanding. Suddenly Zoram was gone, slipping silently, in spite of his huge stature, through the ferns and undergrowth into the sheltering grove. Beyond the trees, he struck out across the fields toward the low hills where the precipice ended and the land fell away gently to the sea. After he had gone a way laboriously—for his injured foot was stiff and sore—he turned and looked back. The Nephites bearing a litter between them were going away from the grove in another direction. Suddenly, upon an impulse, he raised his spear above his head, its shining tip flashing in the first rays of the sun. His rugged, lined, and deeply serious face lighted with a smile as he saw an answering gesture of farewell from the man on the stretcher. The glow of that smile of warm friendship was still on his features, its light still in the deep-set eyes, as Zoram the Lamanite turned his steps again to his homeland, his face to the sunrise.

The fair, oval plain glistened and shimmered in the sun; the dawn mists faded swiftly and vanished, as do dreams upon awaking. Blue was the sky overhead, and blue the sea behind him, and fresh and cool upon his face came the breeze from the far, unknown heights of the great, snow-clad mountains looming into the sky beyond the hills and valleys of his own country. He gazed upon the scene and was glad. Though his lips moved not, in his heart he was praying:

"Day after night; light after darkness; truth after fear; love after hate; peace after war. Thy will be done, Lord Jesus. Amen."

LETTERS

Christiana Salyards III

Tuesday, March 30, was the birthday of Sister Christiana Salyards, who has given so many years of service to the church in the writing of quarterlies and books for our church school curriculum. Thousands of church members owe a great deal of their knowledge of the Bible and the church to her writings. Now she is ill in the Sanitarium at Independence. Her companion, R. S. Salyards, Sr., passed away some time ago. Many people will remember her and wish to send cards to her.

The Good Shepherd

On the cover of a recent Herald is the picture of Jesus carrying a little lamb in his arms with other sheep following him. This picture reminded me of my childhood, when I would look at such a scene and wonder why the sheep followed so well. I thought, "He must be very kind to them. They do not fear him." Since then, I have come to see that he is the good shepherd of people, too. Perhaps he wishes we would follow as well as the sheep. If we would love and follow him, he would lead us into green pastures where we would want for nothing. His love for us was so great that he gave his life to redeem us. What have we done for him?

Christ is constantly calling us, through his priesthood, to feast on the spiritual food he has in store for us. Many times we pass by the gates of this better life into darkness and are overtaken by the evil one. When we make such a wrong choice we no longer have the strong arm of God's Holy Spirit to lean on during the storms of life. When we have the Holy Spirit, we will enjoy the gifts of the spirit; and at the end of our journey, our souls shall find eternal life.

H. F. Hawkins.

Route 3, Box 211

Kennett, Missouri

Fifty-Seventh Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Allen were honored on their fifty-seventh wedding anniversary by members of the El Dorado, Kansas, congregation. Elder D. J. Williams gave a sermon titled, "Today and Looking Forward," and Reta McClaren read two poems, "On Mother's Wedding Day" and "For the Woman I Married." Mrs. Bill Maxwell sang "Through the Years," after which Mr. and Mrs. Allen repeated their vows with Elder Williams officiating. A basket dinner was served following the ceremony. On the honored guests' table was a three-tiered wedding cake baked by Mrs. Charles Hudson. More than sixty persons attended the celebration.

All the Good in the World

In the beginning, God created—and he declared that it was good. In our present condition, it seems that there should be room for all of the good in the world. There are men and women of good will in every walk of life, and there are men and women of ill will in the same avenues. We ourselves must choose which we will become. We can cultivate the association and companionship of men and books that stimulate thoughts of good will, or we can do the opposite. The cultivation of one brings peace of mind and serenity; the other brings loneliness and discontent. To know Christ, we must walk with him and study him—learn his ways, his character, his personality. Always remember that the follower of Christ is never complete but ever in the making.

C. J. Lant.

1717 Thomas Avenue
Santa Barbara, California

Suffer Little Children

By Elaine Carson

IT IS UNLIKELY that there exists a person who hasn't said, "It's a great life," or that the individual next to him hasn't invariably uttered, "If you don't weaken," and that someone else hasn't completed these philosophic ponderings with the question: "But who wants to be strong?"

I know of a man who wanted to be strong. He had run away from home when a mere boy, had come west with the earlier settlers, slaved for one farmer and then another, and by sheer hard labor and stick-to-it-iveness had carved out for himself a reasonably secure financial setup with a section of land, buildings, and a great deal of stock. In a sense, he was strong, and he had power; but in my life, I've never known a man so poor.

I knocked on the door of his house one cold day in February, and his six-year-old daughter let me in. Accustomed as I am to seeing hardship and degradation, I was shocked. Three little children, as wild as March hares, stared at me. Their long hair, matted and infested with lice, hadn't been washed, combed, or cut for months. Their clothes, ragged, ill-fitting, pinned or tied on, were sticky, smelly, and stiff from dirt. They yelled at one another, or kicked, if the occasion required. Once in a while an oath would roll off their childish tongues with an ease that would have done justice to Barnacle Bill. The Public Health Nurse with me swallowed hard and said: "My God, Elaine," as she parted one child's hair to examine his scalp. For a brief second the youngster stood still and then booted the nurse on the shin. In painful provocation she muttered, "Why you little . . ." "Careful there, Jean," I warned, "Remember, of such are the kingdom."

She looked at me with a puzzled expression, wondered what I was talking about, but knew it was supposed to be funny and laughed off her anger.

THE HOUSE WAS AS dirty as the children—or maybe more so. The cupboards, doors open, were filled with everything from binder twine to moldy potatoes. Mice apparently held a perpetual field day in every nook and corner, irrespective of the efforts of cockroaches and other insects to make their presence felt and of spiders to veil the disorder. Many people use coal pails as "catchalls" for floor sweepings, scrap paper, wood chips, and possibly one or two lumps of coal. This family, in a sense, proved to be no exception to the rule. There was no pail, of course, only a litter of everything on the floor about the heater.

The kitchen was even worse than the living room.

The six-year-old was washing the dishes in a grimy pan partially filled with cold water and filmed with gray, curdled grease. She dried them on what appeared to be a flour sack; but it was so dirty, it was impossible to read the printing. An iron frying pan was on the stove, half filled with a concoction of rice, while a kettle of potatoes soaked in the water they were boiled in "until Daddy comes home to pour them." That's enough about the house—suffice it to say that anything not described was just as bad!

Eventually the father came home and I experienced a minimum of difficulty in presenting an object lesson on the results of neglecting his children: the pediculosis, the filth, the skin rash caused by lack of soap and water and diet deficiency, the danger of fire. But he was a poor man—he had never read, he had never learned, he was hopelessly helpless. He had wanted to be strong, and his blind determination, the unsatiable god at whose feet he laid many hours of exhaustive labor with his stock and fields—at whose feet he laid the profits of many "long-ended" bargains with his neighbors—at whose feet he laid "savings" in cheap, inadequate foods for his children, had now blessed him with the result of his labor. It robbed him first of his wife, her death being caused by overwork and malnutrition; now it was robbing him of his children, temporarily, to be cleaned up, and permanently, if he couldn't guarantee to society a better standard of living.

AFTER THE NURSE and I had given the children the scrubbing of a lifetime and dressed them in new clothes, they seemed almost normal. What is more, a transformation took place in their attitude toward us. The boy of three, as he wondered at the newness of a clean skin and looked down at his new overalls, said in appreciation,

"I like womans."

The girls, four and six, were somewhat more hesitant in their overtures, but Helen, her large eyes almost pleading, asked,

"Do you like me?"

"I like all little boys and girls," I said, and she was mollified at the generalization.

On the way into town in a typical prairie cutter, horse-drawn and rough, we sang songs to the children and reviewed our nursery rhymes. We were surprised and embarrassed at how much we had forgotten about Mother Goose and her family. Our little charges had never heard of them however and our minds were alert enough to "fill in" where memory failed. This delightful initiative boomeranged when the youngsters commanded "Say it again!" We said it again, but were not consistent with the "fillers-in," and we received swift and accusing reprimands that we were "wrong, stupid!" When we arrived in town, I left Jean in charge and headed straight for the book shop. My faulty memory had got me into enough scrapes, and I came out armed with an authoritative supply of fairy stories.

New Horizons

JEAN HELPED US on to the train, and from then on I was "it." At first, we read and reread the stories of "The Three Bears," "Puss-in-Boots," and the "Three Little Kittens," until I could intone every growl from Pappy Bear, whine every whimper from Baby Bear, and I was almost to the point of turning white with Goldilocks as she wakened with fright. Certainly I felt the same urge to jump out of the window and run as fast and as far as my short, little legs could carry me. The three little kittens lost and found, soiled and washed their mittens so often I thought surely that Mother Kitten would either run out of pie or go bankrupt with the rising cost of living. It could be that hero-like Puss-in-Boots was helping her. At any rate, I believe I shall never again forget my nursery rhymes.

Eventually their attention turned to other fields, and I breathed a sigh of relief, but only for a second. From fairy stories to theology is quite a jump, and although the basic principle that "Jesus made everything," seemed in order, even that got me into trouble.

"Why did Jesus make horses?" was the first query.

"To help farmers put in their crops, and to take people from one place to another," was my reply.

"Why did he make tractors then?"

"Farms are big now-a-days, and it is too hard for the horses to do all that work," was what I thought to be quite a good answer.

"Well, why did he make cars?"

This was my first encounter with a six-year-old logician, and I was stymied. I believed the best way out was to quite frankly admit I did not know all the answers. My frankness, however, didn't engender for me all the respect such an admission is supposed to, because the next question was an almost despising:

"Why don't you?"

I think I just passed out then. At any rate there was silence for the space of thirty seconds, and the relief was so wonderful, I was surprised to be in heaven. The next question brought me back to reality, however.

"How do babies grow?"

"The same as you do—they have food, and it makes their bodies grow."

"Where do they grow before their mothers get them?" and before I had time to even start on an answer, she asked again:

"Does Jesus make them in heaven and bring them down in an aeroplane?"

I gulped! This was a new theory, I was sure, and if these youngsters didn't know nursery rhymes, certainly

As I looked at these children—so neglected and yet so trusting, so longing for love and security—I could only say as Jesus said, "of such is the kingdom of heaven."

they had other ideas. The conductor, just then, announced our station, and for the first time in my life, I looked upon scarves and mittens, overshoes and ski-suits as blessings in disguise.

The hotel room was the next maze of wonderment. They ran rampant—the water faucet had an amazing effect on their thirst, and if one of them as much as glanced at the tumbler, they all made a dash for it. Another item of intrigue was the electric bed lamp. The lights were flashing on and off at such a rate, I was almost inclined to think the management had installed a flicker switch.

At long last I had them tucked into bed, and after a series of violent outbursts of kicking and slapping were quelled, they settled down. I was about to go to sleep when Helen, almost crying, said:

"Mummy, sing us a story?"

The "mummy" salutation was a little unexpected, but I again narrated the tragedy of the "Three Bears." Long before Goldilocks made her dramatic leap for safety, however, all three were fast asleep.

IT WAS THE END of a long, hard day, but I could sleep only for a few minutes at a time, and then waken fitfully to see if all was well with my charges. Their regular breathing assured me of this, however, and as I could see the outline of their little faces, in the light of the moon, casting its wide, white beam across the room, my heart filled with compassion for them. The same intelligence, the same personalities, the same potential good as was existent within these three, could and had made mighty contributions to society in the lives of others; and, as that contribution was made, the person grew and matured in the richness of a sense of accomplishment. Jesus taught, "The kingdom is within you," and I knew that with me this night were the makings of builders for the kingdom; but I also knew that it was not within my power to guarantee that that would happen.

I knew it, because it takes many years to build "builders." It takes a vision of what a builder is. It takes the richness of good, clean, and enervating environment. It takes a knowledge of the gospel and a deep enduring conviction that Jesus is the Son of God. It takes parental love—sacrificial, forgiving, and perpetually evident. As I looked at these children—so neglected and yet so trusting, so longing for love and security—I could only say as Jesus said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," and my prayer was, "Father, forgive us, a society, which would guarantee them good food and good raiment, but which could not, or at least has not given them the opportunity to grow straight and strong in the knowledge of their Saviour." But even as I made that prayer, there dawned on me also the sure knowledge that as society was cheating these three, society herself was being cheated of the potentially powerful contribution of intelligent citizens, and I had to add with Stephen, the martyr, "For we know not what we do!"

Stretching the Dollar

(Continued from page 17.)

harvest sufficient for the need of our family.

Then there are the simple laws of health. Drinking the water that we should and seeing that our children do, also. The knowledge of herbs often helps us keep health. First aid for cuts and scratches is also beneficial in this business of stretching the dollar. And there is the economy in the use of fuels and light.

I mentioned the use of cream and butter. There are farmers who sell all their cream and buy oleo, and hardly keep enough whole milk needed for their families. The same is true of eggs. This is not economy in my judgment. Stretching the dollar builds for tomorrow as well as for today.

BULLETIN BOARD

Mission Priesthood Institute

The Mission Priesthood Institute will be held in Detroit, Michigan, on May 14, 15, and 16. The first session will begin on Friday evening at 7 o'clock. President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp are to be in charge, with Elders McClain, Simons, Banks, and Chelline discussing special topics.

This is an opportunity for all priesthood members in Michigan, Northern Indiana, and the three Canadian branches to receive instruction and inspiration in their various offices. For housing accommodations, contact Blair McClain, 359 Louise Avenue, Highland Park, Michigan.

E. J. GLEAZER.

Pittsburgh District Conference

The Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, District Conference will be held at the church in Pittsburgh, Tonapah and Realty Avenues, on Sunday, April 25. Apostle D. Blair Jensen is to be present. Activities of the day include a 9:30 prayer service; preaching at 11; lunch at noon; and a business meeting for the election of district officers at 2 o'clock.

HENRY M. WINSHIP,
District President.

West Virginia District Meeting

The spring conference for the West Virginia District will be held in Parkersburg, West Virginia, on May 1 and 2, at the church (corner of Twenty-fifth Street and Murdock Avenue). Theme of the conference is "Witnessing for Jesus." Apostle D. Blair Jensen is to be the guest speaker. The first service will be at 7 p.m. on Saturday. Sunday's meetings will include a 9:30 a.m. prayer service, preaching at 10:45, and a business session at 2 p.m. for the election of General Conference delegates. Dinner will be served at the church Sunday noon.

MAY R. GRIFFIN,
District Secretary.

Invitation to Tri-State Musicians

The Tri-State Band Festival will be held in Enid, Oklahoma, on April 15, 16, and 17. The members of the Enid Branch will provide accommodations for any Latter Day Saint musicians attending the festival. Arrangements may be made by writing Mrs. W. J. Saunier, 1132 East Main, Enid, Oklahoma.

Books Wanted

Alice M. Longstreth, 3079½ Donner Way, Sacramento, California, wishes to purchase the September, 1917, issue of the Journal of History. State price and condition before mailing.

Andy Scott, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, needs a copy of F. M. Smith's The Higher Powers of Man. Please write stating price and condition of book before sending.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are requested for Alice Hussung, 1032 West Waldo, Independence, Missouri, by her husband, William. Sister Hussung has been paralyzed for eight years, and for the past two years has been unable to speak. Letters will be much appreciated.

Prayers are requested for Edna Elswick Hotze of Carson, Iowa, who has been ill for many months. Letters of encouragement would be much appreciated; however, she will not be able to answer them.

Mrs. Rose Shields, Rural Route 4, Wiarnton, Ontario, asks prayers for herself, that she may be healed of arthritis; her daughter, Mabel Farrow, who is in poor health; her son, Elbert Farrow, who is suffering from a nervous condition; and a young girl, Stephanie Duggan of Owen Sound, who has had rheumatic fever for over a year.

ENGAGEMENTS

Cooper-Hughes

Mr. and Mrs. Errol Hughes of Compton, California, announce the engagement of their daughter, Irene Marie, to George C. Cooper, son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Cooper also of Compton. No date has been set for the wedding.

Lasater-Smith

Mr. and Mrs. Darrell G. Smith of Seattle, Washington, announce the engagement of their daughter, Marilyn, to Glenn R. Lasater, son of Mr. and Mrs. Monte E. Lasater, also of Seattle.

WEDDINGS

Hackly-Hughes

Louise M. Hughes, daughter of Edith Hughes of Lamar, Colorado, and A. C. Hackly, Jr., were married in the Reorganized Church at Denver, Colorado, on February 28. Elder Merle Howard performed the double-ring ceremony. Mrs. Hackly attended Graceland in 1941. The couple will live in Denver.

Smith-Agar

Esther Agar and Dean Wayne Smith were married December 28 at the Reorganized Church in Seattle, Washington, Pastor Paul Wellington performing the ceremony. The bride is a graduate of Graceland; the groom is continuing his education after six and a half years' service in the Navy.

BIRTHS

A daughter, Susan Kay, was born December 2 to Mr. and Mrs. Elbert K. Kendall of Seattle, Washington. Mrs. Kendall was formerly Pauline Smith of Nauvoo, Illinois.

Mr. and Mrs. Jerry F. Krubert of Belvidere, Illinois, announce the birth of a daughter, Mary Augusta, born February 8. She was blessed on Easter Sunday. Mrs. Krubert is the former Ruby Lovell.

A daughter, Lynda Lou, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd E. Laudie on February 28. Mrs. Laudie is the former Helen Swain.

Mr. and Mrs. George Frasca of Noroton Heights, Connecticut, announce the birth of a son, Robert George, born March 9. Mrs. Frasca is the former Christine Higginbotham of Phoenix, Arizona.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Deller of Kansas City, Kansas, announce the birth of a daughter, Deberta Ann, born at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Deller is the former Almata Sandage.

DEATHS

NINEMIRE.—Lawrence Arthur, was born August 21, 1890, at Civil Bend, Missouri, and died March 11, 1948, at Springfield, Missouri. On February 3, 1915, he was married to Mayme Sparby; five children were born to this marriage. In 1921, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church. In the spring of 1934, he and his family moved to a farm near Springfield, where he met with a serious accident which left him a cripple until his death. He is survived by his wife, Mayme; two sons: Wayne LeRoy of Napa, California, and Ivan L. of Springfield; two daughters: Re Vay of the home and Mrs. Irene Israel of Springfield; two sisters; and three grandchildren. A son, Myron Eugene, preceded him in death in 1919. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Springfield, Francis M. Bishop officiating. Burial was in Mount Comfort Cemetery.

BARNHARDT.—Royden A., son of David and Alberta Barnhardt, was born August 31, 1882, at Low Banks, Ontario, and died at Independence, Missouri, (date of death not given). On November 25, 1903, he was married to Tessie Schweger at Low Banks; four children were born to this union. On December 30, 1906, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church; in 1908, he was ordained a teacher; in 1914, a priest; and in 1919, an elder. He became associate pastor of Englewood Church in November, 1947, and served in this capacity until his death. As a young man, he entered the building materials and contracting business; leaving Canada in 1920, he moved to Missouri, working first at Ather-ton and then Independence. For the past several years, he was employed by Montgomery Ward in Kansas City as a building materials salesman.

Besides his wife, he leaves two daughters: Evelyn High of Richland, Washington, and Betheen Gould of St. Joseph, Missouri; two sons: Carlyle of Independence, and Cyril of Decatur, Illinois; a sister, Mrs. Jessie Furry of Port Colburne, Ontario; and ten grandchildren. J. H. Yager was in charge of the funeral service, assisted by Stephen Black, pastor of the Englewood Church. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

GRAYBILL.—Anna Rebecca, daughter of George and Amanda Guill, was born April 9, 1879, at Mankato, Kansas, and died at the home of her daughter in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on March 10, 1948, following several months of illness. She was married to Willis Meredith Graybill on March 25, 1895; eight children were born to this marriage. Mr. Graybill and two sons preceded her in death. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on February 25, 1914, and remained a faithful member throughout her life. Four of her sons hold the priesthood, and all of her children belong to the church. In her later years, she cared for two motherless girls.

She is survived by six children: Vivian W. Graybill, Kansas City, Missouri; George Graybill, Atherton, Missouri; Amos D. Graybill, Mrs. P. H. Petersen, Mrs. C. E. Fryer, and Mrs. Brooks Richie, all of Council Bluffs; two sisters: Mrs. J. W. Moore, Council Bluffs, and Mrs. Mary Young, Girard, Ohio; seven brothers: William of Lamar, Colorado; Bud, Ed, and Tom, all of Decatur, Nebraska; Hal of Harlan, Iowa; Creston of Winslow, Washington; and Orville of Vasalia, California; and twenty-three grandchildren. Services were held at the Meyer Funeral Home in Council Bluffs, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Burial was in the Hazel Dell Cemetery near Council Bluffs.

HANSEN.—Kate Anderson, was born April 1, 1866, in Malmo, Sweden, and died January 7, 1948, in Independence, Missouri, where she had lived since 1918. She came to America when she was eighteen making her home at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Here she met and married Jacob Hansen in 1887; eleven children were born to this union, ten of whom survive. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1890 by Elder H. N. Hansen. During her life, she resided at Weston, Iowa; Bedison and Knob Noster, Missouri; and finally Independence. Her husband died on November 3, 1928; and a son, Paul A. Hansen, died in 1903.

Surviving are four sons: James J. Barnard, Missouri; Thomas J. Graham, Missouri; Harry A. Independence; and Heman H. Quincy, Illinois; six daughters: Mrs. Hulda R. Hufford, Winfield, Kansas; Lillie Hansen, Mrs. Ida C. Grimes, Mrs. Mary A. Barnhard, and Mrs. Florence M. Grabske, all of Independence; and Mrs. Kate L. Frederickson, Peoria, Illinois. She also leaves a sister, Mrs. Ida McClellan, Council Bluffs, Iowa; twenty grandchildren; and twelve great-grandchildren.

DAVIS.—Wanda Wanita, daughter of John and Alice Willis, was born at Farmington, Iowa, on May 29, 1903, and died at Fort Madison, Iowa, on March 4, 1948. She was married to Cecil W. Davis on June 4, 1922—this marriage being the first performed in the Fort Madison Reorganized Church. She had been a member of the church since June 13, 1915.

Surviving are her husband; a son, Kenneth; and a daughter, Mrs. Jeannie Horn of Fort Madison; a brother, Dale, of Cleveland, Ohio; a sister, Mrs. Thelma Murphy of Fort Madison; her stepmother, Mrs. John Willis of Farmington; and her grandmother, Amelia Gelatt of Burlington, Iowa. Her father preceded her in death last year. Funeral services were held at the church in Fort Madison, Elders W. H. Gunn and M. E. Francis officiating. Burial was in Green Glade Cemetery at Farmington.

LAW.—Isabel, died March 8, 1947, at the age of fifty-six. She had been in ill health for some time, having lost her sight about five years ago. Three weeks before her death, she suffered a stroke. Born in England, she came to the United States as a girl; for forty-four years she made her home in New Bedford, Massachusetts, where her husband, Abram Law, served as pastor of the Reorganized Church for many years. Despite her blindness, she was thoughtful of others and assisted her husband in numerous ways. By memorizing telephone numbers, she was able to keep in touch with those outside her home.

Besides her husband, she leaves a daughter, Mrs. Pilkington of New Bedford. Funeral services were conducted by Bishop D. O. Chesworth.

BALLARD.—Arthur William, son of Misell and Sarah Ballard, was born in Colfax County, Nebraska, on February 18, 1875, and died February 13, 1948, at Behren's Research Hospital in Los Angeles, California, following a severe illness. On October 20, 1897, he was married to Lottie Lightfoot; one child was born to this union. He joined the Reorganized Church in 1896 after listening to the famous Williams-Savage debate. Leaving Omaha, the family moved to El Paso, Texas, and then to Los Angeles, where Mr. Ballard operated a jewelry store. Until a short time ago, he continued in business and enjoyed good health. He was active in church work, ministering as an elder in the Southern California District.

He is survived by his wife; a son, Arthur V.; a brother, Roy, and three grandchildren. The funeral was held at the Wee Kirk o' the Heather in Forest Lawn, John W. Rushton and Garland Tickemyer officiating.

PETERSON.—Frank, was born February 5, 1869, in Denmark and died February 19, 1948, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he had lived since coming to the States sixty-two years ago. He was married to Anna Marie Jensen in 1891; eight children were born to this marriage, one daughter dying in infancy. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on September 30, 1923.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: Mrs. Harry Olson and Mrs. Irving Nixon of Council Bluffs, and Emma of the home; four sons: Fred of Newton, Kansas; Walter and Ernest of Council Bluffs; and Edward of Omaha, Nebraska; seventeen grandchildren; and thirteen great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Cutler Funeral Home, Elders Nels P. Johnson and V. D. Ruch in charge. Interment was in Hazel Dell Cemetery near Council Bluffs.

MOORE.—Anna Isabelle Wordyard, was born at Charleston, Illinois, on September 17, 1886, and died February 29, 1948, at the home of her son in Corpus Christi, Texas. She was married to Byron R. Moore at Charleston on September 14, 1910, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church soon after.

She is survived by her husband; four sons: L. Glen of Corpus Christi; Charles Armond of Eldorado Springs, Missouri; Byron R. of Harlingen, Texas; and Clarence Ray of the U. S. Army, San Diego, California; and three daughters: Mrs. Alice L. Trafton, San Diego; Mrs. Edith Shindler, Ft. Scott, Kansas; and Annabelle Hoffman, Eldorado Springs. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Knob Noster, Missouri, Elder R. E. Burgess officiating. Burial was in the city cemetery.

FARLEY.—Hannah, daughter of James and Sarah Marsh Robinson, was born August 30, 1870, at Kewanee, Illinois, and died February 16, 1948, at her home in East Los Angeles, California, following a long illness. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of twelve and served the church as a Sunday school teacher and worker in the women's department. On July 11, 1892, she was married to James Farley at Jericho, Iowa; six children were born to this marriage. After leaving Iowa, the family moved to Arizona, and then to Los Angeles. Mr. Farley passed away fifteen months ago, and a son, Joseph, died at General Conference last April.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Sarah Bender and Mrs. Bessie Williams of Los Angeles; Mrs. Ethel Taring of Escondido, California; two sons: James of Orange, California, and Wallace of Independence; a brother, James Robinson of Melcher, Iowa; twenty-three grandchildren; and nine great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the new church in East Los Angeles, Elders V. Lum and John W. Rushton officiating. Burial was in Rosehill Cemetery.

NOLIN.—Eva Elenore, was born in Au Sable, Michigan, on March 27, 1898, and died February 19, 1948, at the Hurley Hospital in Flint, Michigan. She attended school in Flint and was employed in a printing office when she married Frank Nolin in 1917. Two years later, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church. She was active in the music department and women's work.

Surviving are her husband, Frank; a daughter, Clara of the home; two sisters: Mrs. Doris Leismser of Petoskey, Michigan, and Mrs. Chris Leifler of Flint. Funeral services were conducted at the Newell Street Church, Elders H. J. Simons and A. H. DuRose officiating. Burial was in the Davison Cemetery.

SMITH.—Grace McNamara, was born July 24, 1864, in Chemung, New York, and died October 19, 1947, at Flint, Michigan, following a brief illness. She was a member of the Reorganized Church and the Gold Star Mothers of Port Huron. She had been a citizen of Flint for the past thirty-five years.

She is survived by six sons: Lewis, Ferny, and George McNamara, all of Flint; Deway McNamara of Des Moines, Iowa; Leland and John McNamara of Kalamazoo, Michigan; three daughters: Mrs. Nellie Burch of Chau-vin, Alberta; Mrs. Pearl Herbst of Independence, Missouri; and Mrs. Cecil Blasdel of Kalamazoo; twenty-six grandchildren; and thirty-two great-grandchildren. The funeral was held in the Reorganized Church in Flint, Elder Harry J. Simons officiating. Burial was in Grace Lawn Cemetery.

Reunion Schedule-1948

E. Montana	Jun. 19-Jun. 27	Fairview, Mont.
Texas	Jun. 25-July 4	Bandera, Texas
Owen Sound & Toronto	Jun. 26-July 4	Port Elgin, Ont.
New York & Philadelphia	July 3-July 11	Deer Park
Southwest Kansas	July 3-July 11	Arkansas City, Kansas
Gulf States	July 9-July 17	Brewton, Ala.
W. Colorado	July 10-July 11	Delta, Colorado
Central Missouri	July 10-July 18	Odesa, Missouri
Alberta	July 16-July 26
Zion	July 17-July 25	Gardner Lake
Nauvoo So. New England	July 17-July 25	Nauvoo, Illinois
Northern California	July 17-July 25	Onset, Mass. Asilomar, Monterey, California
Flint-Pt. Huron-Detroit	July 24-Aug. 1	Blue Water, Michigan
Kentucky & Tennessee	July 25-Aug. 1	Paris, Tennessee
Northwest	July 30-Aug. 8	Silver Lake, Washington
Chatham-London Cen. & So. Michigan	July 30-Aug. 8	Erie Beach, Ontario, Canada
Mo. Valley	July 31-Aug. 8	Liahona Park
Maine	July 31-Aug. 8	Woodbine, Iowa
So. California	July 31-Aug. 8	Brooksville, Me. Pacific Palisades
Reunion of the Ozarks No. & West.	Aug. 1-Aug. 8	Racine, Missouri
Michigan	Aug. 5-Aug. 15	Park of the Pines
Kirtland	Aug. 6-Aug. 15	Kirtland, Ohio
Oklahoma	Aug. 7-Aug. 15	Pawnee, Okla.
W. Montana	Aug. 7-Aug. 15	Race Track, Montana
Arizona	Aug. 8-Aug. 15	Prescott, Arizona
Arkansas & Louisiana	Aug. 9-Aug. 15	Clear Fork Cp., Hot Spgs., Ark.
Wisconsin & Minnesota	Aug. 9-Aug. 16	Chetek, Wisc.
Far West	Aug. 12-Aug. 22	Stewartsville, Missouri
So. Indiana	Aug. 13-Aug. 22
Eastern Michigan	Aug. 14-Aug. 22	Cash, Michigan
Idaho	Aug. 14-Aug. 21	Hagerman, Idaho
Des Moines	Aug. 15-Aug. 21	Guthrie Center, Iowa
Lamoni	Aug. 15-Aug. 22	Lamoni, Iowa
S. E. Illinois	Aug. 20-Aug. 29	Brush Creek, Ill.
Eastern Colorado	Aug. 20-Aug. 29	Colorado Springs Colorado

Brothers All

(Continued from page 9.)

When enough of us have written these words into our hearts and lives, then shall our city be lifted up and its light shine forth to include all nations and the outcasts of earth, until there will be no enemies to feed, no suffering ones with whom to share. The whole world will be living as brothers.

- 1—Acts 17: 26
- 2—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4
- 3—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 17
- 4—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5
- 5—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 20
- 6—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 18
- 7—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2
- 8—Doctrine and Covenants 24: 3
- 9—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 8
- 10—Doctrine and Covenants 105: 11
- 11—John 13: 35

Vacation and Reunion Church School Materials

Theme: Treasuring God's Word

For Leaders

This second LEADERS' HANDBOOK and the departmental manuals have been written by a group of experienced L. D. S. workers. This handbook contains complete suggestions and instructions for setting up the vacation and reunion church school and for planning it and carrying it out. $1

The Department of Religious Education offers a leadership training course for those persons wishing to become accredited teachers for vacation and reunion church school. Registration fee of 25¢ is sent to the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium. The booklet purchased at Herald House is 25¢

For Teachers

The KINDERGARTEN MANUAL is prepared for both teachers and parents. A complete program is given for each of the ten days of the vacation or reunion church school periods including stories, handwork, and music. 50¢

The PRIMARY MANUAL contains ten complete lessons for vacation and reunion church school. These lessons suggest games and stories, offer picture appreciation, singing, and subjects for group discussion. 50¢

The JUNIOR MANUAL in its ten complete lessons teaches reverencing the written word of God through faith and study and working together, prayer, sharing, and responsiveness. Scripture lessons, class discussion, games, picture appreciation, handwork, and special music are suggested. 75¢

THE JUNIOR HIGH MANUAL teaches the importance of the written word of God. Suggestions for music, choral readings, discussion topics, handwork, and games are offered. 75¢

Supplies

Order from your Book Steward
or from

Herald Publishing House
Independence, Missouri

Supplies listed in the manual can be purchased from the Herald Publishing House or in your own town.

Daily Record Card 15¢ dozen
Award Certificate 15¢ dozen
Attendance Card 10¢ dozen

Wilderness Road

Photo by Eric Wahleen

THE
Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

APRIL 17, 1948

NUMBER 16

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Second Mile

Why do we fear—
Spend half our lives
In loneliness and pain?
Have we no dreams,
No flame-lit depths,
No kingdoms yet to gain?
If we have tasted deep
And drunk of life,
How easy is the rest!
No shame can hold
The souls of those
Who fully give their best,
And, giving freely,
Seize each chance
To give the more.
Who treads the second mile,
How close to God
His earth-bound heart must soar.

JO SKELTON

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

War Takes Them Young	3
Prayer by President F. M. Smith	4

ARTICLES:

From a Mission Abroad	4
The Deity of Jesus, by Apostle D. T. Williams	5
Let Your Child Be Baptized, by Garland Tickemyer	8
Dealing Squarely With God, by Bishop C. A. Skinner	9
The Blue Birds and Orioles Speak	10
The Seventy Present—for Missionary Series, by Donald E. Harvey	12
Taking God at His Word, by Nettie C. Lake	14
Translating Nature's Beauty Into Lives, by Mrs. J. Harry Paxton	16
Food Reminiscences, by Lois Smith Larson	17
Gifts of the Everlasting Gospel, by Patriarch F. A. Smith	18
Gratitude, by Marie Gosline	19
Report on Missions Abroad Fund	19
"My Once Blind Eyes Are Open," by Betty L. Sanford	20
Bulletin Board	23

AUDITORIUM NEWS

JOHN DARLING, THELONA STEVENS, and BLANCHE GREEN of the Department of Religious Education, conducted classes at the Spring River-Rich Hill District church school institute held at Pittsburg, Kansas, on April 9, 10, and 11.

A CHURCH SCHOOL INSTITUTE was held in Lamoni on April 11, 12, and 13 with Dr. F. M. McDowell as instructor. Theme of the institute was "Our Church School Advances at Its Growing Edge." Three two-hour sessions were devoted to discussing the sub-topics: "Effective Witnessing," "Home-School Co-operation," and "Trained Leadership." The institute ended with a Communion service on Tuesday evening.

Dr. McDowell was present also at the Restoration Festival World Fellowship Banquet held at the college on Saturday evening, April 10, and the midweek fellowship on April 14.

BAPTISMS reported for January, February, and March, 1948, total 468. This is five short of last year's record, but it is nevertheless a good showing. This is the fourth best total in the past ten years, and the monthly total of 239 for March is the third best March in twenty years.

Among the encouraging reports received for the month were those from Council Bluffs, Iowa, where twenty-two were baptized; Wellsburg, West Virginia, where there were nineteen baptisms; and New Westminster, British Columbia, where there are eleven new members. In Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, three adults and one child were baptized, completing three family circles. The baptismal service was held at the close of a series of meetings conducted by Elder William Patterson.

* DELTA, COLORADO, is building a new church, now nearing completion. Apostle W. Wallace Smith preached in a home there, since the building is not yet ready for use.

* TULSA, OKLAHOMA, receives a survey group April 2 to 5, consisting of Apostles D. T. Williams, E. J. Gleazer, and Wallace Smith, who will return to Independence for the sessions of the Joint Council when this visit is completed.

* DENVER, COLORADO, was host to a survey group on Easter Sunday. A new church building was packed for the occasion. President F. H. Edwards was the speaker at the 11 a.m. service. Bishop H. L. Livingston spoke at 9:30, and Apostle E. J. Gleazer at 7:30 in the evening. Apostles C. R. Hield and W. Wallace Smith took part in the survey.

* McALLEN, TEXAS. Evangelist Ray Whiting sends news that twelve persons have been baptized by the pastor, Elder Browder. Others have given their names for baptism.

War Takes Them Young

MY FRIEND had on a short, blue denim apron, a printer's brass pica rule in his left hand, a score of linotype slugs gripped firmly in his right. It hasn't been so very long, as lives go, since he had a grenade in his left hand and a rifle in his right, alert to do his duty and to defend his life against an unseen foe in a foreign land. He is married now, and lives with a lovely young wife in a home he is finishing himself. He saw years of service in Alaskan snows and fogs, in tropical heat and discomfort, and on hostile European shores. Perhaps all the time he was away, he dreamed of something like this at home. He feels better, he says, in ordinary work clothing than he did in heavy battle dress. "It's so stiff and heavy," he explains, "and you can't relax in it."

Beyond the daily friendly greetings, he hasn't often said much about his thoughts, but he was thinking anyway. Yesterday he spoke.

"I'd like to write an editorial some day," he said, "about all this war talk. A lot of those who are making it don't know much about it. You don't know the meaning of death until you see men die. You don't know what it is to lose, until you've lost. You don't know what war is, until you've been in it. I wonder, what would happen if the people who make the wars had to go into battle in the front lines? . . . Maybe they'd call it off—maybe there wouldn't be any war at all."

He looked down for a moment as he kicked a dropped slug out of the aisle. Then he went on:

"I don't suppose it would really be possible at all. They'd find some way out of it. But I think it would be a good thing if the leaders of industry—the people who profit by international trade, in commercial goods as well as materials of war—had to go into training and fight in the Army as captains and lieutenants leading the men, facing physical danger with them. Wherever I've been, I've seen many signs of great American trade before the war, and promises of commercial expansion after it. And very often trouble develops that threatens both property and trade. Then financiers, industrial and commercial leaders run to the government and call for the Army to protect their stuff. Young men are called to risk their lives for boxes of goods, warehouses, ships, and profits. Maybe if these rich and powerful men had to go out there with guns and help defend the property, they wouldn't be so anxious to fight over every little thing . . . Oh, I know they couldn't make the older men fight; they wouldn't do it. Only the young are strong enough to stand the strain, and I suppose they ought to do it. But I wish there were some way out of it, so that we could prevent war."

OUR GREAT TROUBLE is that war is so easy to start. Any nation can do it. A dictator-ridden nation can go to war very easily because one man decides it; the people who must do the fighting and the dying have nothing to say about it. A democracy has to be worked up to a fighting pitch, with crisis after crisis, danger after danger, threat after threat.

Peace is so hard to maintain. Everybody—all nations—must be in favor of it. If there is a single exception, one belligerent party can make the others go to war, unwilling though they may be. That will be true until an international political, economic, and military organization can be made so strong that the peaceful nations will be more powerful than any single government. If all of them could be formed into a unity of determination, we could have such a protection now. The United Nations cannot muster that power under present conditions. We know from past experience that regardless of what the nations promise, when a crisis comes they will wriggle out of their commitments somehow, twisting words and phrases to mean something they never were intended to mean, so that the reality of aggression goes unchecked, and international cooperation is merely a façade with nothing but paper behind it.

And when invading armies break through the sham protection of treaties and covenants, it is individual nations again that have to bear the brunt of the attack—as France, the Netherlands, and Great Britain have had to do in two World Wars, holding the battle lines until the more distant democracies can mobilize for war and get there with help. Chronically, we begin our wars with too little, and we get there almost too late.

WHAT HAS CHRIST to offer as a defense against war? Anything but the naked breast of humanity against the invader's spear? Anything but the bodies of sons to cushion the blows of the sword, to serve as a target for the machine gun? Anything but the soft flesh of women and little children to receive the terrible blast and the scorching heat of the atom bomb?

It is the business of other organizations and governments to organize the physical defense against war. So far, that has not been successful. After endless effort, the peril is greater today than ever before. It is the business of the church, as the expression of the will of Christ, to organize the spiritual, the intellectual and cultural weapons against war. These weapons have not yet been tried in full force. The spirits and the wills of mankind everywhere must be converted until the evil of war is conquered within the human soul. There is the first and great battlefield. When Christ wins his victory there, the guns will rust with disuse, the powder will mold in the magazines, and the mighty atom will be harnessed to the wheels of industry for the benefit of man.

Editorial

L. J. L.

Prayer by President F. M. Smith

An occasion long to be remembered by me was the visit of President F. M. Smith to the Missouri Constitutional Convention, of which I was a member. He was invited to make the morning prayer. I believe our readers will be pleased to read what he said, to note the range and scope of his pleading, and so we here reproduce the first page of the Journal for that day:

ONE HUNDRED THIRTY-SIXTH DAY—
FRIDAY, MAY 5, 1944

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

President Blake in the Chair.

Prayer by Dr. Frederick M. Smith:

Gracious and Eternal Heavenly Father, this group of men selected by the citizens of Missouri to do one of the monumental pieces of work looking into the future, pause before their Convention begins this morning to give Thee adoration and homage and to acknowledge Thy Holy Name and to beseech Thee that Thou wilt vouchsafe Thy divine and sustaining presence here this morning, that the approach that is made to the problems to be solved will be so broad and so consonant with Thy will that that which is best for the future of our state will be done.

We pray that personal prejudices, local provincialisms may be laid aside and that we may be given that vision without which the people perish, that shall cause us to look forward to the welfare of those who come after us, preserving their interest, their prosperity, and their social welfare. We pray that we may be led by Thee; that we may be so sustained by Thy spirit that such encouragement will be given that we shall be willing to stand the lash that might be put upon our shoulders by those who cannot see where we are going, and that we may be able, because of Thy sustaining grace, to lay that foundation for the future structure of law of the state that shall guarantee peace, happiness and prosperity to the people of one of the great states of the Union. And for whatever good we shall be able to accomplish in fraternity because of the mellowing association of Thy spirit, to Thee and Thy Name we give all honor and glory, now and always. Amen.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

From a Mission Abroad

The following is a copy of a letter received by the Department of Religious Education from the president of the Enfield, England, Zion's League:

It is a long while since we have been in communication with headquarters, and we thought maybe you would like to hear how we are getting along.

First of all, I would like to say how happy we are to know that a League Annual has been published and is now available. We have placed an order for this and are eagerly awaiting its arrival, for we feel sure it will be helpful to us. We have greatly benefited by using the League Handbook, and we also find the worship outlines in the Saints' Herald most helpful.

Our League in Enfield is a small group compared with many of those in America; our regular attendance averages fifteen. On special occasions, we muster more; but the fifteen members are very consistent both in attendance and interest.

The Missions Abroad Project, which began last General Conference, was hailed with great enthusiasm; and although to you we are "a mission abroad," we talked the matter over and agreed that it would be a fine thing if we too could participate in this project. Because of our country's economic condition, we are somewhat limited, but we carefully considered ways and means whereby we could raise funds, and we set ourselves the goal of £25. This we thought would require quite a deal of work and sacrifice; however, we have surprised ourselves with the eager response the various activities have received and, as a result, we are happy to say we have raised £30. In view of this, we have raised our goal to £50. There are various ways by which we are raising this sum. We each have a sacrifice offering; we have held socials with side shows and other attractions. Just before Christmas, we all went carol singing in the district around the church and received a warm response as we called at each house and left an invitation to our Christmas services. The men served a dinner at a social evening a few weeks ago which netted £6-10-0 for the fund. By selling 500 perfume cards, we made over £2 profit; this is also an advertisement for the League.

We trust this will give you a little idea of what we are doing regarding this project, and we sincerely hope to reach our target before October.

It was interesting to read in a recent Herald of the various League groups participating in this project. We feel privileged to be working with them in a unified endeavor.

Yours very sincerely,

Rose Worth, President, Enfield Zion's League.

156 The Avenue
Highams Park
London. E. 4.
England

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

April 17, 1948

Number 16

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $2.50 per year and $1.25 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $2.75 per year and $1.40 for six months; other countries, $3.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

The Deity of Jesus

By Apostle D. T. Williams

Jesus asked his disciples, Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

He saith unto them, But who say ye that I am?

And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God.

And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 16: 13-17.

PART I

THE ABOVE is perhaps the most dramatic human testimony we have of the deity of Jesus. Still, while it comes to us through human channels, it carries with it the divine sanction. Here the Father's testimony concerning his Only Begotten Son is crystalized in human experience and voiced through our human mechanism. This is but one of the many avenues, as we shall see, through which God confirms to us the divine personality of his Son and our Saviour.

As introduction to the book of John's testimony, we have the direct revelation of the Father of Light to his Son's pre-existence, his creatorship, and his saviourhood. This is the record:

In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, And the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, And the Son was of God.

The same was in the beginning with God.

All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made.

In him was the gospel, and the gospel was the life, and the life was the light of men.—John 1: 1-4, Inspired Version.

In these vital statements we have a foundation for the presentation of what matter we wish here to introduce and for those points of reasoning on which we desire to elaborate.

A Son by Divine Appointment

God gave an otherwise despairing humanity hope for eternity in the gift of his Son, Jesus Christ. Because he loved his creature—man—the Father on high was willing to make what sacrifice was necessary to redeem fallen humanity from the results of sin; without exaggeration it could be said, "God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life."

Here is set forth God's voluntary gift of his Son to save the world. But this was not alone a voluntary act on the part of the Father who "so loved" his children. To be both moral and affectionate, such a program of sacrifice must go forward only with the full consent of the one whose life was to be forfeited as a ransom for many. Thus it could also have been said, "the Son so loved the world that he gave himself that the world through him might be saved."

This is to say that the Son's sacrifice for humanity must be also a voluntary decision; otherwise, the Father would be taking away the right of free choice from one of his children—his Son—to guarantee the free agency of all others. While such an exchange may seem to be a good bargain from the viewpoint of the preponderance of numbers on one side as against the other, the principle of freedom would be abused as much on one side as on the other. This could not possibly be allowed, for God will never be found to be against himself and thus deny his own divinity.

That such freedom as is desired could come only through one who is himself free is as much a truism as it is to say that only a righteous man, or being, could induce righteousness on the part of others. In confirmation of this, we quote a verification from the letter of Paul to the Galatians:

But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law,

To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.

And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba Father.

Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.

This is liberty through freedom! We become sons of God through the generosity of God's Son.

An heir of God is an heir of liberty, and since Christ made us free, we are free indeed. The sacrifice of the son, then, on the altar of liberty was a sacrifice made out of the free agency which he, himself, had exercised in the courts of glory, and which rights and privileges he and his divine Father wished to confirm upon all the children of earth, who would, through this earthly life, prove themselves worthy to receive.

God Testifies of the Deity of Jesus

For our present purpose, it would be impractical to quote all the passages of Scripture in which God confirms the deity of his Son. However, we shall set forth a few of these in order to keep the record balanced and to note God's concern for his people.

Upon the occasion of Mary's conception, Joseph was advised by the angel from glory, "Fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. She shall bring forth a son and thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." And again the angel admonishes that in keeping with a previous word of prophecy: "They shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us."

Such also was the essence of the announcement to Mary of the advent of her illustrious son, but the angel added even more when he said:

He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. . . . He shall be called the Son of God. —Luke 1: 32, 33, 35.

Some men have seen fit to deny this testimony because it confirms too completely the doctrine of the virgin birth of our Lord. In this connection I would like to quote a statement accredited to Doctor Howard A. Kelley, now deceased, of John Hopkins University. He contends:

The virgin birth is a fact fully established by competent testimony and abundant collateral evidence, believed by men through all ages as a necessary factor in their salvation, viewed with wonder by angels in heaven and acknowledged by the Father.

The above statement as well as the one following were quoted by Doctor Walter A. Maier, of Concordia Seminary, Saint Louis, Missouri, in a sermon entitled, "God Sent His Son." The second quotation is one which should carry weight with medical men as well as with laymen the world over. It is reputed to be a statement by Doctor D. M. Blair, professor of anatomy at the University of Glasgow, and runs as follows:

Has it ever struck you that the only circumstantial account of the virgin birth of our Lord is found in the one gospel written by a medical man? Luke, [the physician] goes into extraordinary detail. It is as though his professional instincts were aroused and he said to himself, "Here is a marvelous thing."

Thus those who have walked the roads of science come forward to confirm the testimony of revelation.

If men with this type of experience can accept the miraculous entrance of God's Son into this world, it should not be too hard for those of us who have been born again and who know the miracle of spiritual rebirth to believe the testimony of the angel of the Annunciation. If this Jesus was to be the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, the King of Kings, it would seem only fitting that his entrance into his tremendous responsibility should be heralded by some such marvelous and dramatic event as this which has been so graphically described by the angels and the prophets.

Running all through Christ's earthly experience, as a golden thread of glory, was this constant confirmation by his Father of the deity of his Son. It is not surprising, therefore, that at his baptism, the divine voice from on high should break through the clamor of the crowd on the banks of the Jordan to say to Jesus: "Thou art my Beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased."—Luke 3: 22. And again from the cloud of transfiguration: "This is my Beloved Son, hear him."

These are only a few out of scores of passages which might be quoted or cited from the Scriptures to testify to God's acceptance of Jesus of Nazareth as his Only Begotten Son. We now pass on to the evidence of his reception by men of our common humanity.

Men Testify of Christ's Deity

See John the Baptist straightening up his weary shoulders from his innumerable immersions in the waters of the Jordan to observe the approach of his cousin, Jesus of Nazareth, and listen to his electrifying declaration concerning this stranger among the multitude. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."—John 1: 29. This startling announcement must have galvanized those present into a state of stony attention.

Those Jews witnessing this must have believed, as did their nation, in the coming of a national Messiah who would save their country from the strangle hold of imperialism, which had first been imposed upon them by the Greeks and which was now gripping them from hated Rome, the seat of imperialistic world power. These people, if they understood, must have looked upon this wonder-man of Nazareth walking in their midst as those who were beholding an unrealistic vision. Here were prophecy and history on parade. Did they comprehend what they saw? Did they rightly interpret this testimony of John?

Just the day before, a commission had come down from Jerusalem authorized by the Pharisees to interview John with the purpose of finding out whether or not this strange man addicted to camel's hair for clothing, and locusts and honey for food was making any claims for himself as the Messiah. "Who art thou?" they questioned. "I am not the Christ," was John's ready response. "Why?" came back the prying question. "Why baptizest thou then if thou be not that Christ?"

These inquisitors were born just one day too soon. Had they delayed their visit twenty-four hours, they might have heard John's dramatic declaration, "Behold the Lamb of God." However, this is not to say that what they would have heard with their ears would have been channeled to their hearts.

The questions they propounded and the manner in which they were put did not seem to indicate open-mindedness. Rather, there was evident an obdurate and adamant austerity betokening a cold and selfish ecclesiasticism. These were church men, priests and Levites sent down by the Jews. It was evident from this kind of a start that whoever came proclaiming himself as the Messiah would not have an easy time—not if these men were to receive him.

The Messiahship of the Master, however, was not always to be greeted with such cynicism as met here. The instant and wholesome response of Nathanael to the Master's bid for his loyalty is one of the refreshing bits of testimony filling the New Testament with light, life, and power. In one of those rare moments of personal enthusiasm which makes possible an effectual piece of missionary work, John says:

Philip findeth Nathanael and saith unto him, We have found him of whom Moses . . . did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.

And Nathanael said unto him, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?

Philip saith unto him, Come and see.

As Nathanael approached, Jesus said of this man whom he had not before known, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile." Nathanael inquired, "Whence knowest thou me?" "Before Philip called thee," said Jesus, "when thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee."

Then came the rush of spiritual enlightenment and the invigorating response: "Rabbi, thou art the son of God; thou art the King of Israel." Is it any wonder that from the heart of Jesus there should leap forth full recognition of this humble confession of faith as he gave Nathanael a divine promise of complete participation in the developing kingdom in these words: "Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man."—John 1: 45, 51.

These which we have mentioned have been individual confessions of his deity. Now let us turn to a limited group recognition of this divine relationship to the Father of light. The young prophet, Joseph Smith, was but twenty-seven years of age when he and Sidney Rigdon received one of the most inspiring testimonies of the deity of Jesus Christ it has been our good fortune to peruse. In language sublime and uplifting, the description of what they beheld upon this memorable occasion strikes home to our heart with a sense of its sincerity and transcendent beauty:

By the power of the spirit our eyes were opened and our understandings were enlightened, so as to see and understand the things of God; even those things which were in the beginning before the world was, which were ordained of the Father, through his Only Begotten Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, even from the beginning, of whom we bear record, and the record which we bear is the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Son, whom we saw and with whom we conversed in the heavenly vision . . . While we meditated upon these things, the Lord touched the eyes of our understandings, and they were opened, and the glory of the Lord shone around about; and we beheld the glory of the Son on the right hand of the Father, and received of his fullness; and saw the holy angels, and they who are sanctified before his throne, worshipping God and the Lamb who worship him forever and ever. And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father, that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

The profundity and sincerity of this testimony carries the conviction of spiritual power. There is in it a sense of godly dominion over the minds and hearts of men when men prepare themselves by complete consecration to open the door for the Stranger of Galilee. "Behold I stand at the door and knock. If any man will open the door I will come in unto him and will sup with him and he with me." This is no fable to be consumed in satisfying our idle curiosity. It is rather a challenge demanding the very best within us in order that we might, as others have, enter the Holy of Holies of God's revelation to receive the soul-satisfying truth, the testimony of Christ's sonship with his Father.

So, it can be said that people who have contacted Divinity bow in humble adoration before the throne of this "Son of God" who condescended for our sakes to become the "Son of Man." We cast our garlands at his feet and, with the throng of celestial beings, we crown him Lord of all.

Text for Better Sermons

Sermons are often criticized for their lack of spiritual quality. Yet do we not expect too much of our ministers? If we valued a fine sermon for what it is—a creative effort on a par with a fine essay or lecture—we would no longer expect a minister to produce one every Sunday.

A much better plan would be for the churches to allow, encourage or even require that their preachers deliver the best sermons of other preachers, as well as their own best and most inspired ones.

How much better, if after the hymn-singing which congregations like so much, the minister should say, "I will now give you Phillips Brooks' interpretation of faith as expressed in such and such a chapter and verse," or, "I shall give you today a comparison between Jonathan Edwards' and Harry Fosdick's ideas of personal religion."

What if the church organist were required to play only music of his own composition? Are not the cases parallel to a great extent?

Then, from time to time, the minister could give his own interpretation of a certain subject, and everyone would know that this sermon had been born out of weeks of subconscious thought and compelling interest.—N. Y. Herald Tribune.

Let Your Child Be Baptized

By Garland Tickemyer

THE CHURCH OF TOMORROW is the child of today. No other form of ministry will bring such immediate, such large, and lasting results as work directed toward conserving our normal increase and converting children of non-member parents to our faith.

WHY CONCENTRATE UPON THE YOUTH?

A. "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it."—Proverbs 22: 6.

The importance of indoctrinating the children has long been recognized by the Catholic Church. Many years ago, St. Francis Xavier went through the streets of Goa ringing a bell, entreating parents and householders to send their children and slaves to be instructed. It was he who said, "Give me the children until they are seven and anyone can take them afterwards." After centuries of experimentation, the school is still the principal missionary arm of the Catholic Church. Its effectiveness is indicated in the results of a recent survey in the state of Maryland which revealed that of the young people whose parents are Roman Catholic, ninety-three per cent are members of some church and seventy-five per cent attend church once a week. Of the young people whose parents are Protestant, sixty-nine per cent are members of some church and thirty-nine per cent attend once a week.

One of the first steps of a modern totalitarian government is to saturate the minds of its children with the principles of its ideologies. It was to the youth of Germany that Adolph Hitler made his appeal, and this same principle is being used in other countries today.

Aggressively missionary from the beginning, our church fathers recognized the importance of early training of youth. Although the best of their church schools might not measure up to the standards of today, they did an excellent job of instilling the principles of Latter Day Saintism in their children. It is from the generation of children of the early days of the Reorganization that most of our present church leaders have been called.

B. It is God's will. God and Christ command that the child be led to them. "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish."—Matthew 18: 14. The children whom the disciples tried to keep from the Master were very young, but he rebuked those who would keep them away. Read Matthew 19: 13-15.

C. An eight-year-old child is old enough to be baptized. Despite the fact that the Doctrine and Covenants commands that children be baptized when eight years old, some good people, who feel they didn't know enough about the church when they were baptized, contend that a child doesn't know enough to make a decision when he is eight years old. If this is true—and unfortunately it is in some cases—the responsibility rests upon the parents; for a child who is old enough to know, love, and be loyal to his parents is old enough to love Christ and be loyal to him.

Children's Day will come this year on Sunday, June 13. In this connection we are reprinting the article on this page from the "Priesthood Journal" for January, 1941.

When a child reaches eight years of age in a Latter Day Saint home without having gained an appreciation of the church that would lead him to desire to dedicate his life to Christ, the parents of the child have failed and the priesthood must share the responsibility for that failure.

D. The best contribution is made by those baptized at an early age. The records reveal that a majority of our active members and leaders in the church today were baptized before they were fifteen. If the Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and the Quorum of Twelve may be used as a criterion, the evidence is conclusive that early baptism is a good thing as is indicated by the following:

Average age at time of baptism

Presidency	Twelve
Quorum of Twelve	Eleven
Presiding Bishopric	Eleven

E. It is comparatively easy to lead children to Christ. All of us know how difficult it is to convert an adult sinner; some are learning how. comparatively easy it is to lead children to Christ and forestall the necessity for rescue work later on. That children respond more readily to the missionary appeal is evident from the fact that although our major emphasis in the past has been toward the conversion of nonmember adults, fifty-four and eight tenths per cent of those baptized have been under fifteen years of age. If an equal amount of money, time and labor had been put into efforts to lead children to Christ, the results would have been far greater.

F. Every year decreases the probability of a child's uniting with the church. Apostle Oakman tells the story of a gardener who taught an object lesson to a friend who told him that he didn't want his child to unite with the church until he was of age. Almost without comment his friend took him into the garden and showed him two garden beds. One was a bed of young roses, beautifully chosen. "That is a bed of beautiful roses," said the man. "Yes," replied the gardener. "It must have required lots of hard work and careful cultivation," said the friend. "It did," he replied, "but look over here—here is a real garden." "But that bed is a mass of weeds," said the man, perplexed. "How is that a garden?" "That," said the gardener, thoughtfully, "is the kind of garden you would make of the church. These weeds are mature, they cannot be changed nor can this bed be weeded without being turned over and replanted."

Pause in fearful contemplation of the fact that the passing of each year decreases the probability of that child in your home or in your congregation uniting with the church. As he matures physically, his habits, his thoughts, and his way of life are becoming fixed. The realization that he doesn't belong, that he's different, will cause him to permit the weed-seeds of other interests to take root and eventually to crowd Christ out of his life.

The Value of a Smile

Is illustrated by the newspaper story of a boy who had been struck by the broken end of a live wire, which touched one side of his face, burning and paralyzing it. In court the boy's lawyer asked the little fellow to turn toward the jury and smile. He tried. One side of his face smiled, but the injured side just puckered up in a pitiful contortion. The jury took 12 minutes to award the boy $20,000. The amount was thus certified as the legal value of a smile.—From Between You and Me.

*How is it that I hear this of thee?
Give an account of thy stewardship. —
Luke 16: 2.*

Dealing Squarely With God

By Bishop C. A. Skinner

A STEWARD IS "a person entrusted with the management of estates or affairs not his own." Whether we realize it or not, we are all stewards; for we are entrusted with our lives, our behavior, our powers, our talents, our character, our possessions. We should consider these things as a loan or a trust, for absolute ownership remains with God. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof." We are only custodians for the present time. As stewards, we are required according to the law of God to render an accounting and pay to God his share of the increase. It is a privilege and an opportunity to be the Lord's steward. It is also an obligation.

We know of no record which indicates that Jesus was interested in money so far as it concerned him personally. He may have earned wages as a carpenter, but the Scriptures make no mention of it. We are sure it would have been contrary to his nature to charge for healing the sick, and we can hardly conceive of his accepting pay for teaching people a better way of life. Yet he seemed to be interested in money and possessions for of the twenty-nine parables recorded, thirteen are concerned with this subject.

Jesus did not question the right to have possessions; he probably was not so much concerned that the young Jew had "great possessions" as he was troubled because the possessions had the rich young Jew. It was the wrong attitude that he wished to correct.

THE QUESTION that interested the Master was how people acquired their possessions and what they did with them. He knew that dealing squarely with God, accounting to him for their stewardship, and paying the tithe due the Lord would provide the means for financing the kingdom, and would bring spiritual blessings to the individual.

Like the rich fool (Luke 12: 20), many lack vision and fail to see the spiritual and moral benefits that might be theirs to enjoy as a result of compliance with God's plan. "The greatest poverty that could come to us would be the result of robbing our spiritual life in order to gratify the physical." In the words of the Master, "What profiteth it a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

After hearing the financial law explained in the Presiding Bishop's office, a member paid several thousand dollars' tithing. As he left, he said, "I am happy as a result of what I have done." What a contrast to the young Jew who went away sorrowful because he was blind to the opportunity that was his.

Not only does the accounting to God and paying the tithe fulfill a law, but the very act of sharing brings a real joy and happiness—a more abundant life.

After making a gift to a worthy cause, the late William Allen White, sage of Emporia, Kansas, was asked by a friend what motivated his generosity. His answer was: "There are three kicks in connection with money; first, the kick that comes in making it; second, the kick that comes in having it; third, the kick that comes in giving it away, and the third kick is the best."

The following description of the Dead Sea confirms the philosophy of William Allen White: "I looked upon a sea and lo, 'twas dead, although by Hermon's snows and Jordan fed. How came a fate so dire? The tale's soon told. All that it got it kept and fast did hold. All tributary streams found here their grave, because that sea received but never gave. Oh, sea, that's dead! teach me to know and feel that selfish grasp and greed my doom will seal. And help me, Lord, myself to give, that I may others bless and like Thee live."

WHY THE LAW of the tithe? The organization of the church and state are comparable: both have officers; both have members or subjects; both have duties to perform; both are confronted with great expense in order to perform those duties. Each organization has its specific way of raising funds to meet expenses. The state levies taxes on her subjects in proportion to their income and possessions, and they pay them; if they do not, their property is sold by the authorities and the owners lose title. In order to meet the expenses of conducting the work of building the kingdom, the Lord requires a tithe of his people in proportion to their possessions and income; they pay if they so choose.

Whether families have produced inmates for state institutions—such as homes for the blind, the deaf, reformatories, and penitentiaries—they are taxed to help support these institutions. Whether or not families have children in school, they pay taxes to help support the schools. This is proper and right; they owe that much to society. Whether or not we are attending church, we are receiving directly or indirectly spiritual and moral benefits; and we should be glad for the opportunity to contribute to the support of the church.

The law of the tithe is not new. It did not first come with the Restoration Movement but is as old as the gospel. Abraham complied with it. Jacob vowed to God that he would pay to him the tenth, and a thousand years later the Lord through his Prophet Malachi reproves the Israelites for failing to observe this divine law.

Many of the laws and ceremonies were abrogated with the fulfilling of the law of Moses, but not so with the financial law; it came down through the ages as did some of the other laws. Christ sanctioned it in his day, and the Lord had much to say about it through the Latter Day Prophet.

IF THERE WERE NOT a legal aspect to the financial law, there are moral and spiritual values that come as a result of compliance with a divine plan. God and Christ will mean more to us when we share our material possessions with them and with our fellow men. Soul growth comes as a result of compliance with divine laws, just as physical growth comes as a result of compliance with physical laws. Of course, certain spiritual heights may be reached by obeying only the first principles of the gospel; but if we hope to reach the maximum possibilities, we must obey the whole law—the celestial law of God.

Not How Much

By Bishop C. A. Skinner

When Christ instructed his disciples to feed the tired and hungry multitude that had followed them for many hours, they were surprised at his statement and advised that they did not have food enough for such a throng. But they found a few small loaves and a few small fishes, and Christ blessed that small amount of food and fed the thousands. So it is not a matter of how much or how little our contribution may be, when it is dedicated to the cause of Christ, it can help provide spiritual food for thousands who are starving for it. The story of the widow's mite confirms the truthfulness of this statement. Her gift, seemingly insignificant, drew commendation from the Saviour, and that story has come down through the ages.

The Blue Birds and Orioles Speak

A church-centered activity program for OUR girls. Blue Birds for girls seven through ten; Orioles for girls eleven through sixteen.

IN PREPARATION for Blue Bird-Oriole Week, a check was made as to the status quo of these organizations in Independence. The review shows that in all thirteen of the local congregations there are Blue Birds, and the Orioles are represented in eleven. There are 240 Blue Birds in twenty-six bands; 160 Orioles in seventeen circles; and ninety women working in the capacity of leaders, coleaders, girls' directors, and other supervisory positions.

To help prepare the girls for Blue Bird-Oriole Week, attention has been directed in the bands and circles to the value of the organizations to the girls themselves. A request was made for the girls and their leaders to write their thoughts on what participation in the church's girls' program has meant to them. Forty-five Orioles, forty-six Blue Birds, and eight leaders responded with their written testimonies. The reading of these 99 statements leaves no room for doubt as to the worth of the program. A few of these testimonies, or chosen fragments, have been selected for the benefit of Herald readers.

ORIOLES:

I am an Oriole because I like the life, the fun, and the religious training my Oriole group gives me. I like to be with my monitor and the girls of my church. Their understanding and clean thinking have helped me in taking an active part within my group and church. I understand the problems of my home more clearly and know there are things I can do to help build my life for the future.—Louann Mitchell, H. L. S. Circle, Englewood.

I like to be an Oriole because it ties in with everything I do. It means friendship and companionship with all the girls. Orioles enjoy the kind of fun which I know is clean and wholesome; and I know that my parents and my church approve of it.—Barbara Bryant, Orinzi Circle, Stone Church.

If I had never become an Oriole, I would not have learned the many things necessary for happy and healthful living.—Angela M. Heide, Orciesta Circle, East Independence.

Being an Oriole means having something to do for others and something to do for myself. I learn more about God. I learn more about nature. I have fun in my circle with other Orioles.—Wanda Jo Cogan, Towasi Circle, Stone Church.

I belong to Orioles because I believe it can teach me how to be a better person and a better church worker.—Helen Busch, Beca Circle, South Crystals.

In Orioles, we learn friendship, cooperation, and unselfishness. The devotions in our circle meetings help improve our minds and, together with reading the books of the church, will help us to be able to tell the gospel story to other people.—Kay Oesser, Woodland Junior Circle, Walnut Park.

I like to be an Oriole because while there are other girls as nice as Orioles, there's not an Oriole that isn't a nice girl.—Erlene Willoughby, Ssenippah Circle, Walnut Park

I like Orioles because it helps me develop physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually; and I enjoy the association of such fine church girls and their leaders.—Nancy Flanders, Orinzi Circle, Stone Church.

Orioles helps me prepare for my life ahead.—Betty Argo, Gobici Circle, Stone Church.

Orioles helps us to be in closer touch with God. It helps us to learn to share and gives us religious educational opportunities. It is nice to be able to page at the Sanitarium.—Donna Teague, Woodland Junior Circle, Walnut Park.

I am an Oriole because I believe that throughout my life it will help me to keep my standards high.—Mary Gunzel, Woodland Junior Circle, Walnut Park.

I think earning money for camp is the most fun in Orioles. We also learn many things. In our various activities, we learn things that will help us when we are older in choosing a vocation.—Winola Hart, Custodes Ignis Circle, Stone Church.

BLUE BIRDS

I like Blue Birds because I get to know more girls, I like to see my friends from other schools, and I like the Blue Bird leaders. We do many nice things in handcraft and learn about God.—Kay Pinson, Tiona Band, Stone Church.

I like to be a Blue Bird because we learn a lot of things. We try to make others happy and learn how to get along with people. We learn about God and the people in the Bible, and Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. We do work at home for our mothers.—Lois Hurshman, Wakiye Band, Walnut Park.

I like to go to Blue Birds. One summer day I was feeling very low because I had nothing to do. My girl friend told me about Blue Birds, so I went and I have been going ever since. I wish everyone could come and be a Blue Bird.—Martha Bradley, Bouquet Band, Stone Church.

In Blue Birds we learn to be kind to others, and to do things the way Jesus wants us to do them.—Myma June Olson, East Independence Blue Birds.

Blue Birds helps me to be a better girl.—Florene D. Heide, East Independence Blue Birds.

I like to be a Blue Bird because we learn to make useful and nice things. I like to be with girls my own age in group meetings and on parties, as well as in church school and public school. I like the songs we learn to sing. I like to work on my requirements so I can earn my feathers.—Betty Jane Bohonsky, Wakiye Band, Walnut Park.

In Blue Birds we learn about God and his works. We learn to do things with our hands. We learn to do what we are told. We get wisdom. We learn to obey God's commandments. We make better friends. We learn to play together without fighting.—June Carol Smith, Tiona Band, Stone Church.

I am new in Blue Birds, but I like it.—Elizabeth Caldwell, Queen Band, Stone Church.

I like Blue Birds because I learn how to do things. We draw pictures, learn to be happy, and to be kind.—Elsie Schaeffer, Jewel Band, Stone Church.

I like the stories we have in Blue Birds. We have worship time and playtime. I like to sew and read. We study about Jesus and the church, and have parties and lots of fun. I love to be a Blue Bird.—Mary Kay Smith, Wakiye Band, Walnut Park.

I like to be a Blue Bird because we learn about Jesus and do helpful things for other people.—Karen Elliott, Bouquet Band, Stone Church.

THE LEADERS

My task in Orioles means to me that at last I have come of age in my church service. From childhood on up, I have always had one or more tasks in the church; but never before have I served where I felt that my innate abilities, my training, and my experience had so well fitted me for the task. With Orioles, I feel that I belong. I enjoy doing what the girls are required to do, as well as the other activities they enjoy. I love the girls with all my heart; and it is a joy to serve those you love.

Girls' work means to me the joy of seeing beautiful characteristics grow in the personalities and lives of girls. Knowing that these girls of today will be the sweethearts, wives, and mothers of tomorrow, I feel that I am helping build the kingdom.

Service in this field brings the contentment of knowing that I'm working in the place where God wants me to work, and I shall never be happy elsewhere. —Vida Kraus, Girls' Director, Stone Church.

God has been good to me—every day of my life. He has blessed me with health; with opportunities for and the satisfactions of study; with all the needs (if not wants) of life; with true friends both in and outside the church, and—most precious—with a way of life, the results of which are sure in so far as responses are made to that way.

The only way appreciation can be shown for these and many additional blessings is through service to others.

While searching for my particular area of service, I accepted a staff job at the first Oriole girls' camp—teaching boating and archery, and supervising the swimming instruction and recreational activities. Participation in these sports brought the girls more fun than religious instruction perhaps, but there were many opportunities to teach Christ's way through these.

Maybe that was not to be my final work, but the recreational area was the place where I was best qualified to serve at the time. I prayed then as I do now that God would use my few talents to the fullest of my abilities, and that I would try to accept my responsibility of becoming increasingly better qualified to serve.

That first year I learned to love the Oriole girls. They were all good girls, surprisingly easy to work with, appreciative of efforts in their behalf, responsive to suggestions. It was a pleasure to work with them. The results were immediately evident. This is one of the greatest satisfactions of girls' work.

Work with the Blue Bird girls, which came a little later in my life, has been as interesting and satisfying as that with the Orioles.

I believe in the programs. They are church-centered, home-centered, girl-centered. They supplement the work of the church and the home in helping the girls build worthy lives. The work and the play of the programs are balanced. There are opportunities to learn of the church and serve it, to acquire and practice the homemaking skills, to learn to love nature and the out-of-doors, to build healthful bodies through recreation, education, and habit formation, to acquire skills through craft work, and other interesting activities.

The results of the programs are evident in the lives of the girls. If we guide them through Blue Bird and Oriole work, through their first rank requirements, we will not need to worry about the qualities of their future lives. We believe the parents and pastor of any first rank builder girl will agree with this statement.

I serve girls, selfishly, then, because of the satisfactions it brings me. This is proof of the truism, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Samuel said, serve God "in truth with all your heart; for consider how great things he hath done for you." Unselfishly, then, it is my desire to serve Him in any way that I may because of what he has done for me. I am very thankful that this way has seemed to be through girls' work. It has been good to say to the girls of our church, "Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord." —Edna Easter, Director of Girls' Work.

I am a young mother with three children, ages seven and five years, and five months. I have been a Blue Bird leader since the fall of 1943. I am very thankful to God that I have not had to miss many meetings with my Blue Birds. My greatest desire is to help bring Christ more fully into the lives of each of these girls and to help them prepare for the task of being better mothers for our church of tomorrow.

The only way I have been able to carry on has been when I listened to that still, small voice reminding me not to forget to start my day with prayer, and to continue praying throughout the day. I have been able to run and not be weary; but when I have forgotten to ask God's assistance, I have been able only to walk and at the close of the day, I have found myself very weary. Through my work with the Blue Bird girls, I have learned more about this Restored Gospel than I ever knew existed. —Mrs. William T. O'Neil, Wakiye Band, Walnut Park Church.

Naturally, girls' work means a great deal to me, because that is the church activity in which I am most engaged.

The first contact I had with girls' work was with Blue Birds and next as monitor for the Orioles. After acting in this capacity about four years, I received a call through the pastor to girls' work. This seemed rather a large appointment for me, but I was willing to go ahead and serve the Lord to the best of my ability. I realized that if I tried to live for Christ and do my part for him, he would in turn bless and sustain me in this work. In organizing the girls' work in Zion, I realize that I have had the support of my Heavenly Father in times of stress and trial, and that he through his kind thoughtfulness has given me the assistance of many good people working in his church.

My desire is to continue in the work of Christ and do whatever I can to hold the interest of the girls in church work during the formative period of their lives—Clara Thomas, City-Wide Girls' Director.

As a monitor, I enjoy being an Oriole because it sharpens my humor bone, keeps me mentally alert, and spiritually awake. —Alberta Davis, Orinzi Circle, Stone Church.

Report on El Dorado, Kansas, Mission

Nearly a year ago we began reconverting a used school building into a church. Now it is fixed comfortably and has a full basement. Since establishing this new church home, we have had Brother Oscar Case with us to conduct a series of services. The spiritual guidance he gave us was greatly appreciated. We also celebrated the fiftieth wedding anniversary of Brother and Sister Charles Merrill and the fifty-seventh anniversary of Brother and Sister W. L. Allen. We have thirty-six members in our group, and attendance averages thirty-four. We shall be glad to call on any members or interested non-members living near here if we are sent their names and addresses.

MRS. ARLIE KNOLLENBERG.

517 Benton
El Dorado, Kansas

Receives Strength From Herald Letters

The Herald is one of my life's pleasures. I enjoy all of it, but I turn first to the letters. Illness has kept me at home the past three months, so, since we can't attend church, we read the testimonies in the Herald and have our own prayer service.

Lately I have suffered much with my hands, and I earnestly ask the prayers of the Saints everywhere that, if it be God's will, my health may be restored. I want to continue my work on the book of testimonies and spiritual experiences. I am hoping those who promised last General Conference to share their experiences will send them to me soon.

The greatest blessing in my fifty-one years of church membership came last December 3 when my companion was baptized. We both need your prayers, and we try to remember all in ours.

Daisy Bowen Brown
Lee's Summit, Missouri

The Seventy Present— Organizing Sermons and Sermon Material

THE MISSIONARY SERIES has long proved its worth. While other methods for carrying on missionary endeavors have been found necessary and helpful, none have successfully fulfilled the need for a series of missionary sermons preached by a qualified minister, endowed with the conviction and spirit of his calling.

While the sermons are only one phase of the work necessary to make the meetings a success, the whole series is built around the missionary's preaching. Therefore it is of paramount importance that sermons be organized through prayer, study, and experience to meet the needs of those seeking for inner strength. Such strength can come only through devotion to the kingdom way of life, which has its birth in the message of this church. The missionary through his sermons, can speak with spiritual guidance to the innermost souls of men and become a Columbus, discovering for them the long-dreamed-of passage to new life with Christ.

The purpose of the series of sermons is to clinch the missionary work done by the local branch before the missionary arrives by helping to baptize the prospects, reclaim the inactive members, and encourage the active ones to become better qualified as saints of God. It is through these sermons that the missionary has the potential power to turn on the spiritual dynamo geared to the needs of all men who are groping to tap this source of strength.

Most people care little whether or not the sermons are well-organized by the help of prayer, experience, and study, but they like the results. The unorganized series of sermons is like a ship without a rudder, a builder without a blueprint, an automobile going down hill without a driver. Just because a series of sermons is organized is no reason why it should become dry and without spiritual direction. Rather, the organization can become the trellis upon which the missionary climbs for divine guidance.

IN THIS DISCUSSION, we shall deal not so much with the content of the sermons as with their organization. They should be designed to reach the members and nonmembers where they are and guide them to full acceptance and application of the kingdom way of life. For the minister fulfills his purpose only to the extent that he ministers to the needs of people. It usually helps to ask these questions before gathering material for a series of sermons:

1. Are the people who will attend acquainted with the church and its teachings?
2. Is this the first series to be held in the community?
3. What preparation has been made by the officers and members of the branch for the series?
4. Has a prospect list been developed?
5. Do the members need to be revived first?
6. What is the dominant religious belief in the community?

"No matter what topic, theme, or material is presented, it must touch the lives of individuals to be effective."¹

Attitude Toward People

The attitude of the missionary toward the people to whom he is to speak is of utmost importance. Whether he is working with people in Iowa, Kentucky, or Boston, he must consider them all as potential converts to the right way of life. Every honest means should be put to use to get the confidence of the people, become acquainted with their way of life and their attitude toward the church. "An apostle recently entering a city for his first brief visit expressed a desire to spend some time in the business district so he could feel the pulse of the community. A knowledge of the basic industries, elements of community pride, and the dominant or religious composition of the area will aid the missionary in preparing his sermons. The alert minister will study the geography, history, and current civic problems of the town. He will choose topics and illustrations that will hold the interest of the people and contribute to their needs."² He must appeal to them where they are and not where he wishes they were. He will also want to visit in the homes. "There is no substitute for systematic home visitation."³ This may be common sense to some. It is necessary to good preaching, because it is in the home where the minister gets acquainted with people and their problems.

"Sometimes a few moments with an atlas, which may be found in every public library, will provide interesting and valuable data. The divorce rate, juvenile delinquency, and suicide rates or the small number of churches may give an index of the lack of Christian education. The size of the community will provide general information. In the large city, people are generally lonely. They need fellowship and the feeling that God is personally interested in them."⁴ People in the small town may respond more quickly to the kingdom call as they see the possibility of the application of Christ's organization, ordinances, and virtues in their town.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

For Missionary Series

Listing Sermon Topics

The missionary is at a disadvantage if he doesn't have some knowledge of the type of community in which he is to hold a series when listing the sermon topics for advertising purposes. If such is the case, it is necessary to use topics that can be adapted to the congregation as the sermons progress; yet care should be taken that the topics are not so general that they lose their appeal. Nor should the practice be made of advertising one subject and then speaking on another, or worse yet, give the sermon one topic and talk about everything but what the missionary advertised he would discuss. This usually gives the congregation the feeling that the speaker doesn't know what he is doing or where he is going.

The Sermon

In preparing the sermon, the minister should be himself and not try to copy the methods of someone else in outlining and presenting his message. He should have an understanding of the basic truths concerning the Church and Christ, who is the center of our beliefs. No series can be successful unless the missionary establishes in the minds of those in his congregation our belief in Christ, his church, and its task of building the kingdom. You can't give something you don't have yourself. On the other hand, there is the danger of the missionary having a deep appreciation of the beliefs of the church but forgetting that people who are hearing about the church for the first time cannot be expected to grasp in a few sermons what it took him ten or twelve years to learn. A first grade instructor doesn't try to teach her children college algebra, although she may have a good understanding of it herself.

Delivering the Sermons

It is wise to begin the series with sermons that are not controversial, using only material basic to our belief. Once confidence has been established, the missionary may feel free to explain the Restoration and the Book of Mormon, building the truths concerning the church in the minds of the people step by step. The more affirmative the preaching, the more effective the sermon will be. Most individuals don't mind listening to what we believe, even if they don't agree with us—but they don't like to be insulted.

"The length of the sermon should be determined as nearly as possible by the reaction of the congregation. When people seem restless, it is time to bring the sermon to a close."⁵ It is always better to have people leave wishing you had continued for a while than have them wish that you had closed ten or fifteen minutes sooner.

Enough evidence should be presented to clinch the points to be put across, yet one should not cover so much material that the sermon becomes accumulated knowledge without continuity of thought. It has been found most satisfactory to have the sermon complete within itself, yet having some relationship to the sermon preached the night before and the one to be preached the following night. Some of our missionaries have made it a practice to re-emphasize the high points of the preceding sermon at the beginning of each talk.

Issues that have nothing to do with converting individuals to Christ and his church have no place in missionary sermons. I doubt that many people will be converted by sermons concerning the people who are going to come down out of the North or about how long it will be before the lost plates will be given back to the church. The missionary has so little time in one place that every minute in the pulpit should be spent telling the message of the Restored Church and what it can do for people. Along with this thought, it should be emphasized that care must be taken in both preaching and visiting not to ride on pet peeves about something the missionary may think is wrong with the general church—even if the peeves are justified. Such talk only confuses people and defeats the purpose to which the missionary has dedicated his life. I can think of nothing more important than witnessing for Christ. All material foreign to his message should be left out.

The Use of Scripture

Scripture should be quoted with a definite purpose in mind. The use of too much Scripture can become confusing and uninteresting. The amount of Scripture used will be determined by the method of preaching used by the missionary. Certainly his sermon should be well grounded on Scripture, depending on it as an authority that is seldom questioned. When Scripture is used, it should be rehearsed first, so there will be no stumbling or hesitation. It is well to memorize quotations most commonly used. This gives more freedom in speaking and makes the message more interesting to the congregation.

While it is true that some have overused personal experiences in preaching, testimonies concerning the truthfulness of this church are valuable to good and effective missionary preaching. They should be original, if the speaker claims them as such. Honesty and sincerity are "musts." It is, however, at times good wisdom to tell about the experiences others have had, as well as to relate parables. The greatest teacher and preacher of all times enhanced his ministry by the telling of parables.

Outlining Sermons

We should not be afraid to outline our sermons. Certainly we can increase our preaching power by careful planning while we are alone with God. The outline need not take away God's opportunity to inspire our delivery—rather it can increase it. If one is bothered by the statement of Jesus when he sent his disciples out without purse or scrip, it might be well for him to read Luke 22: 36, 37. "When I sent you out without purse and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing. Then said he unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip."

Good sermons do not come out of thin air at a minute's notice. They come as a result of devotion to God and his children, plus prayer, study, experience, and hard work. The same can be said about the missionary series. It is easy for the minister to use some outlines over and over again until those listening get the impression that they are "canned." I heard it said that one missionary used the same outlines for thirty years, the only change being that he shouted in a different place. To stop using notes without further study does not right the situation at all, even though it may seem to for a time. It just helps the sermons become ineffective that much faster. It is true, however, that basic truths must be repeated again and again, but this can be done without impairing the quality or inspiration of the sermons. The best way to keep sermons alive is for the speaker to keep the people, their needs, their way of life, their hopes, and their desires in mind. John Nicholls Booth expressed the soul of the matter when he said, "Were sermons but the loud stereotyped appeal of a political figure, the cold recitation of impersonal data by a corporation executive or the entertaining monologue of a public Falstaff, the problem of preparation would be diminished."⁶ But we are witnesses for Christ, and if we are going to be able to feed a spiritually hungry humanity, our preaching must be dedicated. And again I quote Mr. Booth: "The truths of the spirit have not been reserved for the aristocracy of mind or money. Indeed, the bestowal of these worldly riches upon a few creates, in part, the chasm which must be bridged for the many. Out of this inequality has grown the sense of injustice, of hopelessness, of moral disproportion, which must be rectified."⁷

If we are to do this, we must be so devoted to the cause of Zion and to saving the souls of those who will build it that we shall not save on time, energy, or study. We shall develop every skill possible to organize our series of sermons so that we speak to the innermost soul of men and acquaint them with the living Christ and his kingdom way of life.

⁶Ernest Ledsworth.

⁷*Ibid.*

⁸*Ibid.*

⁹*Ibid.*

¹⁰Z. Z. Renfroe.

¹¹John Nicholls Booth, "The Quest for Preaching Power."

¹²*Ibid.*

The only worth-while wage of any of us is the joy of work and the preservation of some of its fruits for ourselves and those upon whom we would bestow them. This real wage, beyond the dream of avarice, is within the grasp of man anywhere in the world today except for the non-producers of the state.—Robert R. Young, in Enemies of Production, from the Atlantic Monthly of November, 1946.

Taking God at His Word

By NETTIE C. LAKE

WE WOULD BE SAVED many disappointments, heartaches, and sorrows if we would take God's work for what it says. The Prophet Jeremiah declared: "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Man in his limitations cannot see far enough ahead to know what is best. His judgments are too shallow, his desires too local.

David, the Psalmist, admonishes: "Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass." What more could we wish or expect than by commitment to rest assured that God will bring to realization all that is best in us? But have we learned the secret of committing our way to God? How shall we do this to insure the satisfaction that all will be well in eternity?

The only solution is simply to do it! It takes faith to say, "I have committed my way to the Lord by letting loose of all that concerns me and mine, and I believe that he is making all things work for my good. It may not always seem best, but I will trust where I cannot understand." This is where faith plays an essential part.

Faith looks beyond the mountains and sees the hand that can lay them low as they rise to obstruct our onward march to the kingdom. Like Moses of old, we can "endure as seeing him who is invisible." God assures us that he is with us all the time and will guide us into all truth. Where we derive this benefit, we must believe what he says is an actual fact and thus appropriate his power for our needs.

How it would lighten the load and ease the pain if the afflicted could realize that "our light affliction which is but a moment, worketh for us as a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Trials have their ministry if we accept them as God's messengers to lead us to heights of everlasting bliss where all mysteries are made plain, where hope finds full fruition, and where our souls are turned to love.

Men Called Him Master

By Elwyn Allen Smith

This book meets the need for a Bible story that tells of real people. Older people and young people both will find this an absorbing dramatic story that makes real the meaning of Christianity. For junior high age. $2

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Training for Happiness

By ELIZABETH TEAL

IN THE BOOK OF MORMON we are told, "Man is that he might have joy." If joy were a commodity, there is not a good parent anywhere who would not make any necessary sacrifice to assure his child a full and joyous life. But joy is not a material thing and cannot be bought or sold. Joy and sorrow come not from material possessions but from our associations with people. It is a by-product of right living with others.

Since this ability to live with others is so important all through life, the sooner a child acquires it, the better off he will be. It should, of course, be taught first in the home. Here the child should learn to take his place as a member of the family group. The teaching of the home, however, can and should be supplemented by the teaching of the church school, where the child learns to play with others, to share with others, and to work with others. The group in the church school will be larger than in the home, and he will be associated with other children of his own age. He will also be helped by children somewhat older than himself, and it will not be long before he will want to be the one who does the helping, taking under his wing a smaller child who attends church school for the first time.

Parents who wait until their child starts school at the age of six before giving him the opportunity of group participation have wasted some of the best years of his life, so far as learning to live with others is concerned. Let's take advantages of this opportunity to provide group work and play for our small children by bringing them to church school where they will learn how to work together and play together under the supervision of teachers who are capable of guiding small children and who are thoroughly consecrated to their task. This will lay the right foundation for the later social contacts of the child.

Thine Is the Glory

By Florence M. Taylor

This book has been written to interpret the Lord's Prayer to children, in order that they may use it with growing understanding. The full color drawings bring out the meaning of the words in relation to the child's own daily life. For first, second, and third grade children. 65c

Revised Tract

AN OPEN LETTER

By ELBERT A. SMITH

10 for 50c
25 for $1.15

50 for $2.25
100 for $4.00

Voice of Warning

by

Parley P. Pratt

Here is this old gospel tract revised and reprinted.

75c each

10 or more to one address 60¢ each

THE CHURCH SPEAKS To Its Junior Members

A Guide to Church Fellowship and Baptismal Certificate

By John F. Sheehy

This lovely, little booklet contains a baptismal certificate, as well as information on membership in our church, prayer, study, administration to the sick, wrongdoing and forgiveness, the fundamental principles of the gospel and life, tithing, and a small section on preparing for service in the church, for children planning to be baptized.

10c each

10 for 90c
50 for $4

25 for $2.25
100 for $7.50

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

Translating Nature's Beauty Into Lives

By Mrs. J. Harry Paxton

AS I VIEW the work of the women's department and sense its great responsibility, I am thrilled with the beauty and magnitude of its opportunities. Over and over again I think of the two quotations in the Scriptures which are especially applicable to women's work: "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly"—John 10: 10; and "Behold I have set before thee an open door and no man can shut it."—Revelation 3: 8.

God created the family circle. He said until death it shall not be broken. He created the first home which was in a garden. All the beauties of nature were there. He said, "Let there be light" and the sun in all its splendor broke through the clouds and revealed the blue of the sky. Perhaps, in the twilight of evening, this first family sat on the banks of the river that flowed through the garden to watch the glory of the sunset and the moon rising to make a silver path across the water. This is a picture of family life and home at its best, with all the beauty that God in his love prepared for his earthly children.

FIRST IN IMPORTANCE to us is a critical examination of self. Are we beauty blind? So many of the best things in life are free and can be shared by rich and poor; yet too often we pass them by. Do we pause in our mad rush to glance at a glorious sunset, or stop at the crest of a hill to see a panorama of woods and hills and rivers, an expanse of desert sand with purple sage and mist and mountains in the distance, or watch a gurgling brook in some cool shady spot?

Automobiles have opened a wider area of travel for most of us, but I have never known a place where there was not a score of beauty spots that could be reached by local busses, trolley cars, or walking. In past summers, we have packed a small lunch basket and taken it to church with us; riding to the end of a streetcar line, we would walk miles along a road to some shaded sanctuary to eat our lunch and rest until the shadows were long and the air cool and sweet. Our bodies would be tired, but our minds were rested and our vision clearer. We had learned something of nature and been close to God.

If we were to stop here, perhaps we would not gain much that would carry us through life today; but I believe that the loving Father gave us an inborn appreciation for all these things. Living among the sordid and unlovely, we will want to weave into our own lives, into the lives of our family, into the work of our church and community, the beautiful arts and graces that are also all around us.

God gave us the wild rose, but

God with man's help gave us the gorgeous roses that we can all have in our gardens. God could have made the rose as it is today; but in all phases of living, he has left some of the tasks for us to complete. He gave us appreciation, but what we appreciate is a matter of cultivation.

AT THE LAMONI REUNION last summer, Bishop Walter Johnson presented many new thoughts on the stewardship of our lives. He said we will have to give a final accounting of all aspects of our time, talents, and influence on our entire circle of acquaintances in life—not just on our immediate family circle.

With this thought in mind, let us start where we are. First, become beauty-conscious. We must clear the cobwebs out of our minds, so that we are alert to beauty everywhere. Happiness in our homes is what we are all longing for, and beauty is the keynote to happiness,

A Thumbnail Sketch of the Author

Mrs. J. Harry Paxton has been a member of the Council of Women since 1936 and is one of the most enthusiastic workers. She takes an active interest in women throughout the church and spends part of her summers at reunions supervising women's work and classes. She was Kansas City Stake Supervisor for some years and has devoted most of her life to women's work.

She is not active in church work alone, but in community projects as well.

She loves beauty and has made her home beautiful largely by the work of her own hands. She knits, crochets, raises lovely flowers and plants, and collects teapots and quaint old pitchers.

The keynote of her life is her desire to help other women use the ability God has given them.

— — — a home column feature — — —

serenity, order, balanced lives, and sharing. A family who clears up a drab back yard, builds a pool, plants a tree or shrubbery and watches it grow has formed a bond of beauty which time cannot erase. Good music and inspirational programs on the radio should be shared. Songs that are learned and sung by the family in the home are never forgotten. Children, if allowed to help set and decorate a table will be more easily taught good table manners. Copies of good pictures can be bought for a small price—learn the story of them and study their coloring. The family should be given its share in keeping the home neat and orderly, with mother as supervisor and the others co-workers. "No drones in our beehive" is a good motto.

Let us take this love of beauty into our church life. Instill in the minds of children—our own and others—thankfulness to God for the beauty which he has given us. Share our experiences and helps with the other women in the church and community.

It is our job, through the lessons we have learned from the beauty and order of nature, to lead the way to a happier life; in the association of beauty-loving people, we experience the highest type of joy and satisfaction that comes to our earthly lives.

I believe it is woman's blessed privilege and God-given responsibility to weave these threads of gold, this love and appreciation of beauty, into what would otherwise be a drab existence.

As leaders and workers throughout church, let us humbly assume our responsibility and strive to bring a keener appreciation of beauty into lives of those with whom we daily associate.

Gather facts from many, wherever and however you can; but accept conclusions from few.

Where all think alike, no one thinks very much.—Walter Lippman.

Food Reminiscences

MY FATHER, President Frederick M. Smith, was a home-loving man. He was what used to be called "a good provider," for he not only liked to eat, but he liked to shop for nice things and bring them home to his family. He liked to entertain and thoroughly enjoyed having guests sit down to a good dinner and eat heartily.

Father was also a good cook. While he could set out a tasty meal as a whole, he had a few specialties he did extremely well. One of these was "Norwegian stew." Why that particular name, no one ever knew. He said it was called that in his old home, Liberty Hall, Lamoni—probably because his mother, who made it frequently, was Norwegian. It is not a Scandinavian dish. The chief ingredient of this stew (which is not really a stew either) is a four or five-inch-thick piece of round beef of the best quality. This is seared on both sides in butter and set back, while a quarter to a half pound of butter is browned in a very large kettle. When the butter is melted, two or three cups of flour are worked into it and stirred constantly until the flour is a rich, dark brown (not burned). Next, about three quarts of boiling water are added and blended until a smooth gravy is bubbling; the meat and juices are slipped into this gravy and the kettle is covered and set over a very low heat for several hours. The stew should be stirred occasionally to keep it from sticking and salt added toward the last of the cooking period. It is not a dish that can be hurried; and the more it is warmed over, the better the flavor becomes.

Father was fond of pancakes and little sausages. I don't know whether it was because of his strength in beating them or his patience and skill in frying them, but his hot cakes were always remarkably light and fluffy—and they were always man-sized.

By Lois Smith Larson

HE WAS VERY fond of lamb, and one of his favorite meals became our standard Sunday dinner. It was composed of leg of lamb with mint sauce or jelly, mashed potatoes, brown gravy, a cooked green vegetable, a simple salad, and a light dessert such as fruit Jello or lemon sponge with whipped cream.

Contrary to the usual notion that men do not care for salads, father was very fond of them. One of his best liked combinations was lettuce, cottage cheese, pineapple, and dressing. He also liked shrimp salad.

A real Scandinavian custom which our family has long observed is that of "afternoon coffee." It is a restful break in the day's activities when the family comes together for milk and cookies or a warm drink and some light sweet, such as butter-rolls or cinnamon toast. Father's favorite cake was a plain two-egg layer cake, put together with jelly instead of filling, and dusted with powdered sugar.

Probably it was because he had to travel so much in his work and attend so many formal banquets, but father often remarked that he always enjoyed bread and milk at home better than the finest of food elsewhere.

Salute the Women!

Easter gave me a new appreciation of devout women. Jesus chose twelve men, but they were not on Calvary—save John. But there were ". . . many women beholding afar off, which followed Jesus . . ."

Came Sunday and the two Marys "early in the morning." In our branches today women are still on the job early and late.

A Mere Man.

Gifts of the Everlasting Gospel

By PATRIARCH FREDERICK A. SMITH

AS A FATHER to the church, I would like to see the gifts more perfectly understood that the Saints might enjoy the benefits and blessings they are designed to bring to the church. Moroni 10: 18 tells us if the time ever comes when we do not have them, it is because of unbelief. We do not want to become careless, doubtful, or indifferent to the privileges and blessings which the Lord has provided for our assistance and spiritual, intellectual, and moral development. We should utilize all the means God has put within our reach, and these gifts are some of the things he has given for that purpose.

When the gospel was first restored in the latter days, these gifts were manifest in abundance. Why not now? Are they not just as necessary now as then? We need all the help we can get in this time of confusion. We use the gift of healing very often because of our physical need. Why not the others for our spiritual needs? Some may abuse the use of the gifts and bring in false spirits or let the adversary deceive them, but that is not a just reason for doing away with the whole system. God has made provision for that; the officer in charge should have the spirit of discernment to protect the Saints against deception. "Wherefore, beware, lest ye are deceived, and that ye may not be deceived, seek ye earnestly the best gifts, always remembering for what they are given; for verily I say unto you, They are given for the benefit of those who love me and keep all my commandments and him that seeketh so to do, that all may be benefited, that seeketh or that asketh of me, that asketh and not for a sign that he may consume it upon his lusts."—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 4. In the seventh paragraph, "and unto such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church, and to be elders unto the church, are to have it given unto them to discern all those gifts, lest there shall be any among you professing and yet be not of God." In the fifth paragraph, "for all have not every gift given unto them; for there are many gifts, and to every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God; to some it is given one, and to some is given another, that all may be profited thereby; to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world; to others it is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life, if they continue faithful." This revelation was approved by a General Conference as being of God; it all relates to the gifts and their benefits, purpose, and administration.

IN THE BIBLE the gifts are recognized also. John 1: 6-33 states that Jesus received the Holy Ghost and taught them all through his ministry and those who received them were blessed. Naming them in Mark 16: 13-21, he said: "These signs shall follow them that believe."

In John 14: 16, we have the promise of the Holy Ghost, and in verse twenty-six we have one of the manifestations of the working of the Holy Ghost. John 15: 26 contains the testimony of Jesus that gives us a testimony for ourselves of the truth. John 16: 12-15 gives us evidence of the work of the Holy Ghost. In I Corinthians 12: 1, the Apostle Paul tells the Saints that he would not have them ignorant of spiritual things; and after some instruction, he refers to nine gifts to be given by the same spirit. In Chapter fourteen, verses 1-4, we are told to "follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy. For he that speaketh in another tongue speaketh not unto men, but unto God; for no man understandeth him; howbeit in the spirit he speaketh mysteries. But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort." Let us look at the meaning of edification: (1) a building up in a moral or religious sense, (2) rising up in knowledge, (3) mental improvement or progress, and (4) instruction. These things are in perfect line with what we must do to qualify ourselves for an inheritance in Zion.

We discover that these gifts have a big purpose in building up the spirituality of the church; they are to bring comfort, assurance, advice, direction, healing, encouragement, and cheer. They help us to maintain our faith and integrity in our struggle against the fog of confusion and conflicting opinions, strife, doubts and fears that surround us. Let us arise and utilize all the helps and means God has so kindly put within our reach. May we do so to the best of our ability and in this way hasten the day of Zion's redemption.

I HAVE SEEN some prayer meetings depressed and almost ruined by too much admonition to be brief; requests for three-minute talks while the officer in charge used ten minutes trying to show how it could be done. Many of our priesthood, especially, find it difficult to be limited to such a short time. The elder in charge should remember that he is working with humble, earnest people who are faithful in attending these services; some are not experienced in public speaking and cannot express themselves in three minutes' time. The fear of being called down is embarrassing to them. Many of the timid ones have a very fine testimony to give and the minister in charge should bear with them and encourage them. These services require patience and kindly consideration on the part of the presiding elder. If one should make a mistake in the service, instead of calling him down publicly, it is much better to wait until later and talk kindly with him about his mistake. This will avoid hard feelings and embarrassment.

There is that possibility of the Evil One trying to deceive the Saints. Men and women may let their enthusiasm run away with them at times, but the Lord has made provision for this condition. Men of good judgment and wisdom, who have the spirit for this important work, should preside over prayer services.

Do we really believe all the gospel as taught by our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, or do we believe just that part which suits our individual purpose? To build up the Saints morally and spiritually, we must teach them to live by every word of God and all the teachings of Jesus Christ. This is the way that leads to Zion and eternal life.

Asks for Correspondence

I am an isolated member and would appreciate receiving letters from other Latter Day Saints.

Cecil Llewellyn Collins
Route 4, Port Perry
Ontario, Canada

Note of Thanks

I wish to thank all who remembered me with cards and letters. They have been a great help. I find it impossible to answer each personally, so I take this opportunity of expressing my gratitude.

MRS. H. A. BROONER.
Route 1
Fort Scott, Kansas

Gratitude

By MARIE GOSLINE

SHOWING ONE'S gratitude is a mark of refinement, whether it be to the Heavenly Father or to the grocer boy down at the corner. Uncultured, unrefined people do not usually show gratitude.

I remember a certain branch in one of our large cities. Because of its location in the industrial section of the city, it drew many of the working class. These people had little or no education. They were, in the most part, rough and uncultured, but they were honest and hard-working individuals. When the depression came, it left many of them jobless, homeless, and hungry. Now a certain woman in the branch who was in a position to secure food and household equipment at little or no cost, turned her basement into a storeroom. From here she doled out food, clothing, and furniture. She found living quarters for some. With others, she filled her home. Because of her good management and generous heart, many little children were fed and clothed, when they might have gone otherwise.

BUT DURING THE WAR and after, when these same people were "in the money" they did not remember the hand that lifted them. They completely forgot what it means to be poor. A few of them—far too few, find themselves in church on Sundays. Those who do come often brush by this woman in the aisle without even a "good morning," nor do they inquire if she has a way home. Somewhere I read that "gratitude is a flower of rare cultivation." How true that is!

"Thanks so much!" said with a smile can mean a lot in these busy days when there is nothing so sadly lacking as gratitude. And don't forget the pastor waiting at the church door. Think of something, be it ever so little, you enjoyed about the service and tell him.

In the small branch where I was reared, there was no regular pastor for a long time. The congregation had been practiced on and practiced on, first by one young man, then another—all learning to preach. Sometimes we thought God had forgotten to "feed his lambs" in a certain pasture. On this particular Sunday, the speaker had preached for almost an hour, he had covered much ground, but for the life of me I could not tell that he had made a single point. As I made my way down the aisle to the front door, I was wondering what good thing I could sincerely say about that sermon. I felt that the speaker could use a few words of encouragement.

Directly ahead of me was a little, white-haired lady—frail, but the backbone of the congregation. "I'll just ditto what she says," I thought, "and I'll be safe." Just then she stepped gaily up in front of the young boy, looked him squarely in the face, and with a twinkle in her eye, she said, "Thanks so much! You surely are improving, Son!"

The King Nobody Wanted

By Norman F. Langford

This book is the life of Christ for the juniors of this generation. Christ's life has been reconstructed so vividly that the young reader sees the events taking place before his eyes. Many lovely illustrations. Boys and Girls 9 to 15. $2.50

The Song of Our Syrian Guest

By William Allen Knight

This inspiring little volume with its famous interpretation of the Twenty-Third Psalm was recently included in the list of ten best sellers for the last fifty years. A new, gift edition $1

Another Story Please!

By Vivian Pomeroy

Here is a most attractive-looking children's book. Mothers of youngsters will welcome this book for the child who wants one more story (they're all very short—average, 4 pages) before the lights go out. $1.75

Report on Missions Abroad Fund

Total reported to Presiding Bishop on February 29, 1948
$4,459.05.

Goal
$25,000.00
by October 1, 1948

$4,459.05 by February 29, 1948 (amount reported to the office of Presiding Bishop).

Stakes and districts reporting funds during January and February were: Independence, Gulf States, Arizona, Arkansas and Louisiana, Nauvoo, Des Moines, Northwestern Kansas, South Central Michigan, Minnesota, St. Louis, Spring River, New York, North Dakota, Kirtland, Northwestern Ohio, Central Oklahoma, Seattle, West Virginia, Central Missouri, Northern California, Southern California, Northeastern Illinois, Chicago, Northwestern Iowa, South New England, South Central Michigan, Detroit-Windsor, Pittsburg, Kansas.

"My Once Blind Eyes Are Open"

By BETTY L. SANFORD

THE STILLNESS OF the night was upon him. Above, in the vastness of sky, blinked hundreds of stars and a moon that was full and round. He whistled a little as he walked along the quiet city street, his arms swinging in time with the rhythm of his song. He had no cares, no burdens, and no disappointments to mar the cheerfulness of his mood. Easy-going Pete Conroy had never had a worry in his life. If things didn't come Pete's way, then Pete went their way. If Pete wanted something he couldn't have, he got over wanting it—just like that. He gave nothing, and he asked nothing; he considered himself a pretty lucky guy. "No strings attached to me," he always bragged, and people had learned to accept him as he was. Besides, Pete was good at playing rummy and was always "flush" when the drinks were being handed out. He had an odd sense of humor, sort of quiet, but along in there pitching. People didn't expect anything spectacular from him, and he never gave them anything. He never lectured or forced decisions upon anyone; just went on day after day following the promptings of his own mind and his own desires.

He smiled a little to himself now as he walked along, and dug one of his hands down into the pocket of his trousers, searching for a cigarette. His mother didn't approve, but that was all right. He'd done it for so long now that she was accustomed to it. Mom sure had some screwy ideas sometimes, but she was "true blue."

He found the cigarette and a match and stopped a moment in the shadows of a street lamp to light it. He started to move on. It was then he noticed the small boy standing directly in front of him, blocking his path. The lad was thin and with the biggest eyes Pete had ever looked into. His hair was parted and combed neatly as if he had just been cleaned up for a party. He was looking squarely into Pete's face, and his lips were set in a determined way as he spoke, "I like you."

Pete stared down unbelievably at the strange character who had spoken.

"Wh-what?" he stammered.

The repetition of his first statement came clearer and contained more conviction. "I like you," the boy said.

Pete gulped, "You don't even know me," he challenged.

"I like you," came the stubborn reply.

Pete was baffled. For a moment he was torn between two strong conflicting desires; one was just to move on and ignore the boy (for he had more important things to do) and the other was to stay and see what was meant by this strange behavior. Pete, being Pete, didn't wonder long. He just couldn't be bothered. So he smiled at the lad and said, "Well, I like you too," and walked on.

HOURS LATER, OVER a glass of beer, the whole strange incident came back to him. He started to tell the fellows about it but something held him back, and he changed his story and told another one almost before he realized what he was doing. He felt odd. He didn't quite know what was the matter or why he should worry about anything as silly as what had happened tonight; but for the first time in his life something was bothering him, and he didn't like it.

The next morning his mother was strangely silent as Pete sat drinking his breakfast coffee, but as usual the fact that anything was amiss didn't penetrate into the consciousness of his brain. He never worried about what the other fellow was thinking.

"Pete, where were you last night?"

Pete groaned inwardly. "Over to Tim's playing cards. Why?"

"Nothing. I just wondered. Last night was prayer service night, you know."

This time he smiled. His smile was his passport to anything he wanted to accomplish. Only this morning it didn't work.

"Sometimes I wonder if you ever really think with those brains that are up there in your head," his mother said.

He grinned again. "Why, sure, I think, Mom. What makes you say I don't?"

"People who think can understand another person's feelings. When you do understand and know how others feel, you're not so uncaring about how much you hurt them."

"Mom!" Pete stared at her aghast, but she turned her back to him and said quite naturally, "Finish your breakfast, Son, it's getting late."

Again Pete felt the tug of something intangible on the doors to his mind. For the second time in two days, something had happened he didn't understand. Something was demanding special attention of him, and he didn't want to be bothered figuring it out. Mom was wonderful, but sometimes she talked in riddles. It was like her concept of religion. Sure Pete believed in God, and he believed that a person should be as good as he knew how to be—but that didn't include going to church every Sunday and every Wednesday night. There was nothing wrong with the way he lived, and he was satisfied. Yet—if he was really hurting his mother—

Angrily he arose from his chair and stalked from the kitchen. If he started wondering about things he didn't understand, anything might happen.

HE COULD HARDLY wait for evening to come. Somehow he had a feeling that if he'd go back to the same street corner, he'd find the little fellow he had met the night before. It was an unusual thing for Pete to do. He wasn't in the habit of putting himself out so much. As he walked along the street, he kept asking himself what he would say if he did meet the boy. Several times he started to retreat, but once Pete made up his mind definitely about something, it took a lot to sway his decision.

He waited for two hours and felt for the first time since he could remember the impatience and fear that others feel so often. Finally he gave up and headed for home. It was his first experience with real disappointment.

Later, lying in bed, Pete stared vacantly into the darkness around him. Was something the matter with him? Was he thoughtless as his mother had hinted? Was he really happy with the life he led? Why should his mother accuse him of not thinking seriously?

Perspiration stood out on his forehead. He rolled over and jabbed his pillow with clenched fists. "Damn it. What started all this anyway?" he questioned himself. "For twenty-three years I move along with nothing to worry or disturb me, and then all of a sudden everything goes topsy-turvy because of a strange little kid on a strange street who says he likes me. Come to think of it, though, that's the first time anyone ever told me that. I have to find that kid," Pete told himself before he finally drifted off to sleep.

HE FOUND BENNY several days later. He had scoured the neighborhood diligently for a sign of the little fellow and had asked about him of everyone he met. All the time he was looking, he kept pushing back thoughts which refused to stay concealed. Why was he going to all this trouble? What did he hope to find out? How silly he was to chase around after a six- or seven-year-old kid who probably wouldn't even remember who he was.

He discovered Benny sitting cross-legged on the ground watching a big building being constructed on the opposite corner. The boy smiled as he approached.

"Hello."

Pete had never cared for kids, but he found himself smiling back at this one.

"Hi," he said casually, as if he had just been passing by. "Haven't I seen you somewhere before?" It sounded foolish even to his own ears.

The boy grinned and shook his head. Pete felt his face turning red. "What am I doing here anyway?" he asked himself. This isn't like me." He floundered about trying to find something to say.

"New building, huh?"

"It's a new church," he said with eyes shining.

The boy shook his head again.

"New house?"

The head nodded from left to right emphatically. "It's a new church," he said with eyes shining.

"Oh," Pete felt foolish again.

"My name's Benny, what's yours?"

"Pete."

"I like you."

There it was again! Hearing the words said aloud sent a new feeling through Pete Conroy. One he had never known before.

"Why?" he asked. His heart nearly stopped beating as he waited for the answer.

"I don't know," said Benny. "I just do."

Pete felt awful. This didn't make sense.

"How do you know you like me when you've never seen me but once before?" he argued.

The small face bore a frown. "I don't know, . . . why do you like people?"

"Why—I—well, I like them because—" Why did he like them? or did he? The fellows he ran around with; the girls he dated; the people he met at parties. Why did he like them?

"I guess I don't know either," he told Benny.

"Mom says you like people because they're just like you."

Just like you! The words crept in under the cracks of the closed door to his mind, and they washed out all over the floor of his brain. Just like you! Were all people just like him? Were the kids he ran around with like him? Did they all feel the same way he did about things? No, the answer was definitely no. He had no standards by which he lived as did his mother. He had no goal in sight as did his father. He had no interest in those around him as did this little fellow here before him.

New Horizons

His head was spinning. He was all confused. He remembered his mother's words: "People who really think can understand another person's feelings; and when you do understand and when you know how another person feels, you're not so uncaring about how much you hurt them." Did he really think? When he walked along the street, did his mind ever busy itself with what was going on about him—or did he just let his thoughts drift? In his whole twenty-three years had he ever done one single thing that was worthwhile?

Benny was eyeing him curiously. "Does that mean I like you because you're like me, Pete?"

Pete gave a start. Benny like him? The thought was appalling. How could any one person have let this many years go by without realizing how shallow and selfish he really was? Would Benny live as long as he had and then make this same discovery? He looked down at the little boy and felt an emotion so unfamiliar to him that he didn't recognize it as humility.

"You're sure you like me, Benny?"

The child's expression was answer enough. Pete was convinced. "Your mother, Benny—what does your mother say about your smoking or drinking when you grow up?" He had to know. He had to see whether or not they, too, were something that he should not do. If there were actually people besides his own mother who felt that way, maybe it was worth looking into.

Benny stood up. His head came just above Pete's waist. There was a proud lift to his shoulders when he said, "My mother says I'm going to be a preacher when I grow up." As if that answered everything.

Pete felt uneasy. "And do you like the idea, Benny, of being a preacher?"

Benny smiled. "I'm gonna be a good preacher," he said with eyes shining.

IT WAS LATE when Pete opened the back door and slipped into the warmth of the small kitchen. A light was still burning in the living room, and for a moment he felt reluctant to go in. His folks never waited up for him because they had learned long ago that where he went and what he did was always his business unless he chose to tell them of his own accord. It was his dad, sitting in the overstuffed chair in the corner, who looked up as he entered the room.

"Anything wrong, Pete?"

Pete was surprised and a little annoyed. He had had a lot on his mind today and had learned some amazing things about himself, but he wasn't ready to talk about them with anyone—especially his dad.

"No, nothing's wrong, Dad. Why?"

His father seemed embarrassed. Pete felt uncomfortable. Usually he wasn't concerned about what Dad thought. They had always sort of understood each other; went places together and all, but had never talked much.

"Pete, your mother thinks I should talk to you."

Pete sank down on the couch, and his face remained unreadable. One could never tell what Pete was thinking. His Dad cleared his throat.

"Pete, you're a man. You've been on your own for a long time now. You've never caused your mother or me even a little bit of trouble since the day you graduated from high school, but your mother's been worrying about you for a long time."

He stopped and looked at his son. They had had a lot of fun together, he and Pete, and personally he'd always liked his oldest son the best. He'd always felt there was real character in Pete that would someday show up. Sometimes he wished desperately that he had set a better example for his children to follow. He wished now that he knew what Pete was thinking.

Pete, returning his father's gaze, was the first to waver. He saw questioning in his dad's eyes, and he dreaded it because after all he had learned this day, he knew what that questioning meant. How could he have been so blind so long?

"Pete, I want you to go to church with your mother, Sunday."

Pete bolted. He straightened up on the couch, his face set in stubborn lines. Forgotten were the wonderful things he had discovered. Forgotten was Benny and his dad and his mother. Once again he was Pete Conroy—"with no strings attached."

"Sorry, Dad, but I can't."

"You can't—or won't?"

Pete shrugged his shoulders. The answer was evident.

His dad's face became expressionless too, only his lips betrayed him. They were determined and set.

"Pete, you're a selfish, ungrateful, narrow-minded son. You're set in your ways and cold when it comes to the desires of others. There's not a spark of warmth anywhere in your body. If I knew how to pierce that mask of unconcern you wear, I'd do it, but I guess that's where I've failed to be a real father. Of all my faults, you never once have seen me deliberately do the things which hurt those who trusted in me. I don't know where you get it, but I do know this: if you're ever going to amount to anything, you'd better get busy right now."

Pete sat motionless for a long time after his father had gone. Suddenly he dropped his head into trembling hands and felt tears sliding down through his fingers. He no longer cared about being free. He no longer cared about Pete Conroy at all. Instead, he thought of all the kind, wonderful people he knew. People who had found something in life that was bigger than themselves. He thought about the fellows he knew—their witless humor, their mooching, and their loafing. Was there any loyalty or real friendship in any one of them? And what of himself? Had he ever shown loyalty to anything or any person? Even to himself?

WAVES OF SHAME and humility drenched his soul as he sat there. What was left? How could he be any different? How could he make up for the many years he had wasted? His mother had tried to show him; she had tried to teach him; but he hadn't allowed himself to listen. He had been afraid of the things which life had to offer.

"Pete," his mother was smiling down at him as if he were a child again. She looked deeply into the face of her eldest son and saw there for the first time a thirst for knowledge that she herself had so desired many years before. She dropped to her knees on the floor beside him and drew his trembling hands into her own.

"There are many things we do not understand in this world, Pete, but there is a way in which questions we ask may be answered. There was once a kind and wonderful man who said, 'Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you.' It's never too late to begin if you really want to learn."

Pete looked at his mother and in his mind he saw again the glow he had seen on Benny's face when he said, "I'm going to be a good preacher." Pete had no idea how to begin or where he was going to start, but he knew he was going to try. Benny already had a seven-year start on him, and if he was ever going to be like Benny he'd better get busy now!

"What time does church start Sunday morning, Mom?"

It has happened a thousand times in history that the course of events has been turned by the action of one energetic man.

BULLETIN BOARD

Southern California District Reunion

The Southern California District will hold its annual reunion at the Presbyterian Conference Grounds, Pacific Palisades, near Santa Monica, from Saturday, July 31, to Sunday, August 8, inclusive. Reservations for tent houses and meals should be made with The Manager, Presbyterian Conference Grounds, Temescal Canyon, Rural Route 1, Pacific Palisades, California. All reservations must be made by July 20, and a deposit of $2.50 for the tent house should be included with the reservation. Apostles Charles R. Field and W. Wallace Smith will be present.

LOUIS J. OSTERTAG,
District President

Oregon District Convention

The women of Oregon District will meet at the Central East Side Church in Portland (Southeast Seventeenth and Belmont), on Saturday and Sunday, May 8 and 9. The first service will be an early morning fellowship. Mrs. Royce Chapman, district women's leader, will be in charge.

On Sunday, also, members of the Aaronic priesthood throughout the district will meet for all-day services under the leadership of Bishop Monte E. Lasater and Elder Paul Fishel. Their first meeting will be an early prayer service. Bishop Lasater and Elder Fishel will be the morning and evening speakers. All members of the district presidency are expected to attend.

J. L. VERHEL,
Oregon District President.

Wants to Contact Members

Robert W. Bunch, 3301 Holliday Avenue, Wichita Falls, Texas, wishes to contact other Saints in or near Wichita Falls.

Books Wanted

Mrs. R. L. Hays, 137 East Elm, Independence, Missouri, wants Volumes I, II, and IV of Church History. State price and condition of books before mailing.

Ava E. Wildermuth, 102 South Fuller, Independence, Missouri (telephone 6566-R), needs a copy of Beatrice Witherspoon for use in children's work. Please write or call stating price and condition of book before sending it.

ENGAGEMENTS

Nies-Carswell

Mr. and Mrs. Allan A. Carswell of Kansas City, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Betty Jean, to Richard A. Nies of Norfolk, Nebraska.

Gehri-Clough

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Clough of Willoughby, Ohio, announce the engagement of their daughter, Lois, to Eugene P. Gehri, also of Willoughby. Miss Clough is a graduate of Graceland College, class of 1946. The wedding will take place in August.

WEDDINGS

Glauner-Hooper

Opalee Rita Hooper and Hugh Dallas Glauner were married February 15 in Sacramento, California, Elder Myron E. Schall officiating.

Howard-Winn

Lila Vanell Winn, daughter of Mrs. William Simmonds, and Marvin Howard were married January 16 at Sacramento, California. District President Laurence A. MacDonald performed the ceremony.

Stella-Smith

Ruth Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Smith of Albia, Iowa, and Melvin Stella, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Cannady of Oelwein, Iowa, were married July 10, 1947, at the Methodist parsonage in Manchester. Pastor Charles E. Mason performed the ceremony.

Cates-Brannon

Jennie Mae Brannon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Brannon of Fanshawe, Oklahoma, and Leeman Cates of the United States Marine Corps, stationed at McAlester, Oklahoma, were married February 20 at the home of the bride's brother, Garnett Brannon. Elder T. E. Fitzwater read the double-ring ceremony. Mrs. Cates attended Northeastern and Oklahoma A. and M. Colleges. The couple are living in McAlester.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Chapman of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, Floyd Lee, Jr., on March 26. Mrs. Chapman is the former Audrey Zion. Mr. Chapman is a Graceland graduate.

Mr. and Mrs. Evert McFarlane of Oelwein, Iowa, announce the birth of a son, Douglas Evert, born March 17. Mrs. McFarlane is the former Beth Troester.

A daughter, Linda Mae, was born on March 18 to Mr. and Mrs. Roger Gillespie of Oelwein, Iowa. Mrs. Gillespie was formerly Verda Powers.

A son, John Thomas, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Jack Conway of Des Moines, Iowa, on March 21. Mrs. Conway is the former Bette Mallams of Kansas City, Missouri.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard L. Derenzy of Flint, Michigan, announce the birth of a son, Marc David, born January 8 at Hurley Hospital. Mrs. Derenzy is the former Betty Lou Barker.

A daughter, Nancy Ilene, was born on March 10 to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Beckner of Oelwein, Iowa. Mrs. Beckner was formerly Pearl McFarlane.

Reunion Schedule-1948

E. Montana	Jun. 19-Jun. 27	Fairview, Mont.
Texas	Jun. 25-July 4	Bandera, Texas
Owen Sound & Toronto	Jun. 26-July 4	Port Elgin, Ont.
New York & Philadelphia	July 3-July 11	Deer Park
Southwest Kansas	July 3-July 11	Arkansas City, Kansas
Gulf States	July 9-July 18	Brewton, Ala.
W. Colorado Central	July 10-July 11	Delta, Colorado
Missouri	July 10-July 18	Odessa, Missouri
Alberta	July 16-July 26
Zion	July 17-July 25	Gardner Lake
Nauvoo So. New England	July 17-July 25	Nauvoo, Illinois
Northern California	July 17-July 25	Onset, Mass.
Flint-Pt. Huron-Detroit-Windsor	July 24-Aug. 1	Asilomar, Monterey, California
Kentucky & Tennessee Northwest	July 25-Aug. 1	Blue Water, Michigan
Chatham-London Cen. & So. Michigan	July 30-Aug. 8	Paris, Tennessee
Mo. Valley	July 31-Aug. 8	Silver Lake, Washington
Maine	July 31-Aug. 8	Erie Beach, Ontario, Canada
So. California	July 31-Aug. 8	Liahona Park
Reunion of the Ozarks No. & West. Michigan	Aug. 1-Aug. 8	Woodbine, Iowa
Kirtland	Aug. 5-Aug. 15	Brooksville, Me.
Oklahoma	Aug. 6-Aug. 15	Pacific Palisades
W. Montana	Aug. 7-Aug. 15	Racine, Missouri
Arizona	Aug. 7-Aug. 15	Park of the Pines
Arkansas & Louisiana	Aug. 8-Aug. 15	Kirtland, Ohio
Wisconsin & Minnesota Far West	Aug. 9-Aug. 15	Pawnee, Okla.
So. Indiana Eastern	Aug. 9-Aug. 16	Race Track, Montana
Michigan	Aug. 12-Aug. 22	Prescott, Arizona
Idaho	Aug. 13-Aug. 22	Clear Fork Cp., Hot Spgs., Ark.
Des Moines	Aug. 14-Aug. 22	Chetek, Wisc.
Lamoni	Aug. 14-Aug. 22	Stewartsville, Missouri
S. E. Illinois Eastern	Aug. 15-Aug. 21	Cash, Michigan
Colorado	Aug. 15-Aug. 21	Hagerman, Idaho
		Guthrie Center, Iowa
		Lamoni, Iowa
		Brush Creek, Ill.
		Colorado Springs, Colorado

Mary A. Burlington
1510½ Jules
St. Joseph, Missouri

92867
18
h

Vacation and Reunion Church School Materials

Theme: Treasuring God's Word

For Leaders

This second LEADERS' HANDBOOK and the departmental manuals have been written by a group of experienced L. D. S. workers. This handbook contains complete suggestions and instructions for setting up the vacation and reunion church school and for planning it and carrying it out. $1.

The Department of Religious Education offers a leadership training course for those persons wishing to become accredited teachers for vacation and reunion church school. Registration fee of 25¢ is sent to the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium. The booklet purchased at Herald House is 25¢

For Teachers

The KINDERGARTEN MANUAL is prepared for both teachers and parents. A complete program is given for each of the ten days of the vacation or reunion church school periods including stories, handwork, and music. 50¢

The PRIMARY MANUAL contains ten complete lessons for vacation and reunion church school. These lessons suggest games and stories, offer picture appreciation, singing, and subjects for group discussion. 50¢

The JUNIOR MANUAL in its ten complete lessons teaches reverencing the written word of God through faith and study and working together, prayer, sharing, and responsiveness. Scripture lessons, class discussion, games, picture appreciation, handwork, and special music are suggested. 75¢

THE JUNIOR HIGH MANUAL teaches the importance of the written word of God. Suggestions for music, choral readings, discussion topics, handwork, and games are offered. 75¢

Supplies

Order from your Book Steward
or from

Herald Publishing House
Independence, Missouri

Supplies listed in the manual can be purchased from the Herald Publishing House or in your own town.

Daily Record Card 15¢ dozen
Award Certificate 15¢ dozen
Attendance Card 10¢ dozen

Photo by W. W. Belcher.

Cherry Blossoms

Washington State Capitol

THE Saints Herald

VOLUME 95

APRIL 24, 1948

NUMBER 17

www.LatterDayTruth.org

God Waits

When little grievances seem large
 And days are heavy with the bickering
 Of many restless souls,
 God sorrows for his people
 Who are small
 And lacking in divinity of mind and heart.

But when the famine spreads his ruthless grasp O'er all the ravished land
 And fingers out the trembling and the weak,
 The strong, the brave in heart,
 And marks them all
 With his thin hand of death;
 Then God rejoices in the new found unity
 Of all his peoples everywhere.

For in the torment of their bitter need,
 All races—every color, every creed—
 Join hearts to pray.

And when, united, they can follow Him,
 Heed well his voice and seek his gentle grace,
 Then only can he bless
 And prosper them.

—LOUISE WRIGLEY

IN THIS ISSUE

EDITORIAL:

Canadian Journey	3
Across the Desk	4

ARTICLES:

The Deity of Jesus, Part Two, by Apostle D. T. Williams	5
Faith in God, by Seventy Glen H. Johnson	8
Helping Youth Grow, by Mrs. Glenn A. Scott	9
"After This Manner Shall Ye Pray," by Arthur H. DuRose	10
Treating Lightly Our Stewardship, by Bishop C. A. Skinner	11
A Spiritually Empowered Missionary Ministry, by Joseph H. Yager	12
Camping Has a Place, by Edna Easter	16
Home Management for the Veteran in College, by Marye Louise Wolfe	17
The Right Key, by Ruby Tinkham	18
Of Such Is the Kingdom, by Winifred Milner	19
"And Power Was Given Unto Them," by Barbara McFarlane	20
Briefs	22
Bulletin Board	23

AUDITORIUM NEWS

PURSUANT TO GENERAL CONFERENCE ACTION in April, 1947, we secured legal and engineering advice, and on February 27 filed an application with the Federal Communications Commission for a permit to operate a radio station on a wave band of 1380 kilocycles.

On April 1, the Commission began hearings at Kansas City and Independence on our application and on that of the Kansas City Broadcasting Company, a corporation formed by Reverend Wendell Zimmerman of Kansas City and associates, both applications asking for the same wave length.

The hearings continued from day to day under the direction of a Mr. Bond, examiner for the Commission, and both applicants were represented by Washington attorneys, our counsel being Mr. Corwin Lockwood of the law firm of Hogan and Hartson. Mr. Barron, counsel for the Commission, appeared on its behalf, and the hearings closed late on Wednesday, April 7.

We are advised that hearings on the engineering or technical questions involved will be held at Washington beginning on May 12, and that no decision is likely to be made for several months.

Israel A. Smith.

THE JOINT COUNCIL, which was originally scheduled to convene on April 6, held its first session on April 8. This two-day delay was due to the radio hearing. Members of the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve were present at the opening session. On April 9, eleven of the Quorum of Twelve assembled in council, the absent member being Apostle M. A. McConley of the European Mission. The first meeting of the entire council was held on Monday, April 12.

LEONARD LEA, managing editor of the HERALD, left Independence on April 2 for a two-weeks' lecture tour in eastern Canada. His itinerary includes the Chatham, Toronto, London, and Owen Sound Districts.

ELDER JAMES MENZIES baptized fifteen persons at the close of a series of meetings in Taylorsville, Illinois. Other gains include eight new members baptized by William Guthrie, five by Joseph Baldwin, and four by Arthur Rock.

Canadian Journey

To anyone who has seen the Detroit station, no description is necessary. And to those who have not seen it, no description is adequate. There was a refreshing tidiness about the C.P.R. train that stood waiting to carry us through the black tube under the river, and out into the sunlit prairies of Ontario. Immigration officers take an intimate interest in your birthplace and in your present intentions, and the alert customs men can tell as much from your face as your baggage. They smile as they pass on, and you relax as you feel officially welcomed to Canada.

It is a good land that you see through the train window. There is rich dark loam in these level fields, still too wet to work, and a soft fuzz of green grass is appearing everywhere, brightening the gray-brown color of the land. Tree buds are fattening, too, with a promise of leaves to come. Towns are farther apart up here, but they are good ones when you come to them, with sturdy structures to give protection against the long cold months of the northern winter. And on the outskirts there are usually large areas where new homes are being erected—whole streets of them—a great many of brick.

A pleasant train conductor can make a whole trip seem better, and this one did. When you are entering a city as a stranger, he is really the first one to make you feel welcome. On arrival at Chatham, Brother Jack Pray was at the foot of the steps to offer a cordial greeting, transportation, and every hospitality. His young daughter, Mary Sharon, a favorite of church officers and missionaries, was also on the reception committee, and soon made a friend of herself.

The Chatham church is a neat white building at the intersection of Grand and James Streets, giving it a prominent place on a triangular lot. It is very neat and pleasant on the inside. The district conference was meeting there on April 3 and 4, and the visitors gathered for dinner in the basement following the Saturday afternoon business session. In the evening there were words of welcome and greeting, with educational and entertaining films on various subjects of interest. The operator and machine were furnished free of charge by the Chatham Junior Chamber of Commerce, a very worthy community service. Bishop John C. Dent and Evangelist Ben Hewitt, both of Toronto, visited and assisted in the services.

The Sunday morning prayer service was generously attended, and many were the prayers and testimonies under the good spirit that was present. Here was gathered a fine body of people, some of them but recently baptized as members of the church. Many from this district have moved to church headquarters, and the hearts of the people have followed their friends and members of families to Independence, where they are making a good contribution. At the preaching service, the auditorium was filled, and excellent attention was given to the message. There are people of quality and character here, and they have a great work to do, with splendid possibilities, as the opportunity is afforded them. In recent times many of them have awakened to a deeper sense of personal responsibility for service, and the good they can do has hardly any limit.

On Sunday afternoon, a fine body of priesthood, both young and old, gathered in the lower auditorium for a period of talk and discussion on problems of leadership and service, responding excellently in the time given for an open forum. Among those who gathered were Evangelist John Shields, now officially retired, but still as active as his years permit; William Leverton, pastor at Bothwell; Robert Brown, a district counselor, pastor at Merlin and formerly a missionary in the Society Islands; Wesley Badder, pastor at Wabash; and James Kelley, district counselor, and a trustee of the reunion grounds at Erie Beach. Evangelist R. H. Jones and Brother J. V. Dent of Chatham gave fine support in the conference. At the same time, there was a women's meeting in the upper auditorium, where a full program was enjoyed.

With fine hospitality, excellent meals were served all during the conference, up to Sunday evening, and places to stay were provided for the visitors. Conference adjourned in fraternal good will. It was a pleasure to meet so many there that it would have taken much travel to see in their home congregations.

For Sunday evening, there was a very pleasant twenty-five mile ride to Wabash, where there is a sturdy brick church just recently lifted to provide space for a commodious basement beneath it to be used for the usual class and entertainment purposes. This is a stronghold of two prominent church families, who bear the well-known names of Taylor and Badder. Brother Wesley Badder, the pastor, is a merchant, and gives his services to the church. There are many fine children and young people attending the church, and a number of fine conversions culminated in baptisms under the ministry of Seventy Harold I. Velt. A long period of friendly visiting is a pleasant feature after the meeting at Wabash. And there was a pleasant gathering after that at the home of the pastor for more visiting and refreshments.

Under the encouragement of A-

Editorial

postle Blair Jensen, whose thoughtfulness provided the happy opportunity for this present visit, many general church men have been able to come and visit with and minister to the people. President Israel A. Smith has been here twice. Apostles W. Wallace Smith, E. J. Gleazer, and Arthur A. Oakman have been greatly appreciated.

Brother Jack Pray, pastor at Chatham, maintains as far as possible with his work in the district, a friendly relationship with the Ministerial Association of Chatham, which meets at the city Y.M.C.A. building. Here there was an opportunity to meet some other ministers of the city, and Reverend Pitts, vice president, extended an invitation for a few words of greeting, a gesture that was appreciated.

Among the pleasant experiences was a trip with Brother Jack Pray and family to the reunion grounds at Erie Beach. Buildings and properties that have been under church ownership and operation are in good condition; those lately acquired will take considerable work. The waves rolled ceaselessly upon the sandy beach, and we could look far across the water through sunshine and mists towards the United States. Across these waters, two friendly peoples look to each other for help and co-operation in peace as well as in war.

It is one of the great privileges of life to be with good people, and life is enriched as we are permitted to meet more of them. Ideas and inspiring thoughts are shared, experiences exchanged, and problems all are better understood as we talk to people from different places. Certainly it is a contribution to the life of an editor to have this fine experience. And so, looking forward with pleasant anticipation of the rest of this Canadian journey, I close this chapter.

L. J. L.

Across the Desk

From V. D. Ruch, pastor of the Council Bluffs congregation, comes this letter, dated April 2:

The month of March was characterized by large attendance, especially on Palm and Easter Sundays. In fact, we had to hold two identical services on both of those days to accommodate the crowd. We anticipated this and arranged for the two meetings in the forenoon—one at 8:30 and the other at 11 o'clock—with church school in-between. On Palm Sunday, we had two comfortably filled houses, but on Easter, even two services did not take care of all the people. About thirty had to sit in the little annex at the rear of the church and listen to the service over a loud speaker. I have arranged for two services again this next Sunday when we will serve the Lord's Supper. It may be that we will do this from now on, as the 11 o'clock service is always crowded to capacity.

Our third baptismal service of the year was held Easter Sunday afternoon. We baptized two young married women, whose husbands are already members, and an eighteen-year-old boy. These three candidates make a total of twenty-two baptisms this calendar year.

Our annual building fund dinner is scheduled for Friday evening, April 9. About 400 people are expected to attend. The dinner will be held in the Armory Building. This event should add several thousand dollars to our building fund.

From a letter from Brother M. A. McConley, we excerpt the following, which we feel sure will be of interest to the Saints:

We were present yesterday when a package for the pastor at Braunsweig was opened. No Christmas package was ever opened by a ten-year-old boy with more expectancy and enthusiasm. The onlookers' faces lighted up as the various things came out—the sugar made them smile from ear to ear; the soap brought a generous recognition; and the can of Crisco made them ever so happy. I wish that Bishop Cackler, the Presiding Bishopric, and Brother Holmes and his staff of workers could see what we saw.

Many people we have visited told us they would not have been here but for the relief food packages. The branch president here at Braunsweig is a new man by reason of them, in comparison to what he was when I saw him in April, 1947. The seventeen-year-old daughter of the bishop's agent here at Braunsweig, who was sick and pale, has so improved in health that I hardly knew her. If the people who pay in oblation could receive personally the thanks enthusiastically given by the German Saints, they would all want to double their contribution next communion Sunday.

F. H. E.

Correction

A number of readers are writing to us concerning an error in the Church Member's Manual. On page 79 there is a reference to II Peter 5: 11. As there is no such passage in the Bible, this should be changed to read, I Peter 5: 11. We thank the readers who have written to us about this mistake.

Within Calling Distance

A story is told of two men, the elder of whom was urging upon the younger the claim of Christian work and encouraging him to follow the call of the Lord. The younger answered with an excuse that had a familiar ring, "But I have never felt any compelling call to give my life in that way." "Are you sure you are within calling distance?" was the somewhat disquieting reply.—Choice Gleanings.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

April 24, 1948

Number 17

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards.

ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $3.50 per year and $1.75 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $3.75 per year and $1.90 for six months; other countries, $4.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

The Deity of Jesus Part Two

Christ's Testimony of Himself

By Apostle D. T. Williams

CHRISt'S PLEA, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me," should be accepted by us as indicating a deep and abiding faith of the Son of God in his own mission and ministry. We have seen how man, out of the fervency of his faith, has borne testimony of the sonship of Jesus; now let us see what abounding confidence this Jesus has in his own divinity.

If you or I bore testimony of our own goodness, it might, with full justification, be said that we were godless boasters. However, the case of Christ bearing witness of his relationship with his Father in heaven is quite a different thing. In us there is sin. We have often erred and come short of the glory of God. But in Christ there was no rebellion against God's grace. In him there was no sin and no resulting sense of guilt. There was, therefore, no repugnance in his inner being when he "thought it not robbery to be equal with God" (Philippians 2: 6).

How naturally these words seem to flow from the lips of Christ: "I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me"—John 8: 42. Again he enlightens us with his deep sense of responsibility and honor as he says: "All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent him."—John 5:23.

In full recognition of his own deity, Christ at no time denied men the right to worship him. Soon after he had fed the five thousand as recorded in Matthew, the fourteenth chapter, he walked on the water to the ship of his disciples, which was in considerable distress; and to their satisfaction and for their comfort, he stilled the storm, thus displaying his command over nature. The record adds: "They that were in the ship came and worshipped him, saying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God."—Matthew 14: 24-33. Jesus did not deny them this privilege.

HAD JESUS been a mere human with an appreciation of the situation, he would have suffered a deep sense of embarrassment and would have admonished them to reserve their worship for one deserving of it. Such was the case when Cornelius fell at the feet of Peter to worship him. "Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man."—Acts 10: 25, 26. After this manner also did Paul and Barnabas conduct themselves when the priest of Jupiter brought oxen and garlands to sacrifice to them with the people. When the apostles heard of this, "They rent their clothes, and ran in among the people crying out: Sirs, why do ye do these things? We also are men of like passions with you."

Why did not Peter and Paul follow the example of the Master in this thing and accept the worship of their fellows? The answer, of course, is self-evident. They had no right to accept adulation and worship from others of God's creatures. They were embarrassed and troubled in soul when this sort of thing transpired. Why was not Christ likewise chagrined when his followers bowed the knee in his presence as to a deity deserving of their adoration? There is only one answer to this—in him dwelt the consciousness of his godship. There are those who accept the supremacy of his manhood but who deny his own recognized relationship to Divinity. They will say that he was and is the greatest pattern of perfection which mankind can find in all human history; but, in the next breath, they will deny his right to receive the worship of men by denying his sonship to God.

Naturally there is a searching of mind when one is confronted with such a phenomenon as this. Here is a man, according to this assumption, so good and so flawless that he can well be the pattern of perfection for untold millions of his fellow beings on earth in all ages, but whose estimate of himself must be deflated about ninety per cent.

What kind of an evaluation is this? Christ is either good or bad, right or wrong, honest or dishonest. If he is good, right, and honest, but is not the Son of God as he professed, what sort of dilemma does he find himself in? Of course Christ is in no dilemma, but those who profess to believe in his ideal life, yet reject him for what he represents himself to be, place themselves in a most unenviable position.

IF CHRIST is not what he claims—the Son of God—he is unfaithful, untrue, and unholy. If Christ is not what he claims, he becomes in the eyes of men a faker, a charlatan, or a fanatic. His position loses all honor and respect. An honest God would reject him and condemn his hypocrisy.

Therefore, it becomes evident that one cannot lay a false claim to being a god and at the same time retain a favorable moral estimate in the eyes of honorable people. He is either a god as he professes and is worthy of adoration and worship, or he is just an unholy or misled person seeking what is not his by any right accorded a human being. This reasoning, then, if correct, put on Jesus the stamp of either Divinity or deviltry. There is no half-way house in this journey. Christ is very God of very God, or he is the most crass of all deceivers or is himself most grossly deceived.

Which explanation are we to accept? It is clear that those who believe in the divinity of Jesus of Nazareth are in the most favorable position to argue their case, while those who accept only his humanity and still claim for him a supremacy in morality are in a state of perplexity. Those who believe in his deity can with enthusiasm continue to sing:

All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all.

His Deity in Sinlessness

CHRIST'S OWN ASSERTION of his sinlessness is also evidence of his oneness with God. Pay heed to these colorful words in which there is no sign of hypocrisy: "The Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him."—John 8: 29. No mere human being who ever lived on earth could lay claim to such perfection as that magnified in the life of this lowly carpenter from the hills of Nazareth. "I do always those things that please him." What moral balance, what spiritual poise, what godly grace is included in this exalted confession.

Between the covers of the Bible, we have the biographies of some of the greatest souls endowed with the richest lives it is our privilege to contact. But when this is all said, each life sinks into some essence of sin or misbehavior. None fully comes up to the pattern of perfection set in the life and conduct of our Lord. What other person, even among the prophets of God or the ambassadors of Christ, can lay honest claim to this sentiment of sinlessness? Can Peter or Paul or any of their contemporaries? Can Timothy or Titus or any of the succeeding generation? There was trouble in the church, even in that far-off and "holy day." Not all things ran smoothly even among the most elevated personnel of the apostolic function. In this connection we see the words, shall we say, of "holy wrath," emanating from the heated pen of the apostle to the Gentiles as he exclaimed of Peter, "I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed."—Galatians 2: 11. Who was right in this ecclesiastical controversy? Who was wrong?

There is evidently no middle of the way. If Peter was to blame, as Paul had so heatedly asserted, then Peter was wrong. If Peter was not to blame, after all, then Paul was to blame for blaming him. So no matter which end of the controversy we champion, there is evidence of error in one or two of the greatest heroes of the New Testament. Two great stalwarts of truth find themselves at odds, and at least one of them carries the controversy to the weak saints of Galatia in a letter, which it seems should have been nothing other than a communication of revelation and power to lift up the weary head.

THE ONLY CONCLUSION we can reach in the situation is that Christ alone can lay claim to sinlessness. If the best and the greatest among his chief ambassadors, as were these, cannot measure up to the standard of sinlessness and Divinity, then there is every reason to accept their own decision that Jesus alone is worthy of the praise, honor, and worship due the Son of heaven. With Paul, we, too, can sing the praise of this "Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."—I Corinthians 1: 30.

Sinlessness, then, becomes an evidence of Deity. Jesus alone of all earth's children can carry this eternal distinction with grace and composure. All others who have tried it have appeared ridiculous, both to their own contemporaries and to all succeeding generations. So it was that Jesus could face the Jews of his day, saying, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" Perhaps the summing up of this phrase of our subject could well be done in the words of Pilate, "What evil hath he done?" and now the famous conclusion, "I find no fault in him."

This has been the verdict of men throughout the ages: "We find no fault in him." Which reminds us of the classic assertion credited to Napoleon Bonaparte: "I know men, and Jesus Christ is not a man." The fact is, the duality of his nature made him both man and God; man because of his temporal nature, God because of his spiritual essence—the Son of man and the Son of God, "Emmanuel," or "God with us."

His Deity Witnessed in His Leadership

NO DOUBT a large volume could be written on this one subject alone, but we must be satisfied with a few words and phrases setting forth the power and majesty of this inspired commander of God's unconquerable host. The prophetic designation of his benign leadership is pictured for us in two graphic verses from the poetic prophet of Israel, Isaiah:

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.

Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this.—Isaiah 9: 6, 7.

Earthly kingdoms rise and fall, nations both small and great develop and disintegrate. Dynasties are born and bred and are devoured of their own degradations and distracts. Civilizations rear their temples to useful commerce and to greedy commercialism. Lust runs skyward its towers of Babylonish corruption. And all this at last to perish in the devouring fires of Gomorrah with "the dust filled apples of Sodom" on men's lips as the dessert for their Satanic banquet.

Thus end the kingdoms of this world of whom Satan is god. Thus does Babylon perish in the fire, smoke, and fumes of ultimate destruction. But not so the kingdom of our God and his Christ. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." His is to be the last universal kingdom. But its supremacy shall be established "with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever."

HERE AT LAST is brought to light the only real and wholly legitimate universal kingdom in all the history of the world—one which, to allow Daniel, the prophet, to phrase it, "shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and shall stand forever."—Daniel 2: 44. A kingdom cannot be truly universal until it rules over all mankind and for all time.

When Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world," he was not meaning to say that it will have nothing to do with this earth. What he sought to convey was the fact that his kingdom would not partake of the death-dealing elements and evils of these worldly kingdoms. His government would not be erected on the rotten foundations of political and economic corruption which buttressed in vain the perishable and perishing nations of our world.

His kingdom was to be "established with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever." How is this tremendous work to be done? The answer is again found in Isaiah's refreshing revelation: "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Here, then, is set forth the need of this divine leader who is born as a mere child but who comes into his deity as the "Wonderful," "Counsellor," "The mighty God," "The everlasting Father," "The Prince of Peace."

After these many centuries of human trial and error, men at last must humbly acknowledge their utter incompetence to rule themselves on the simple strength of their own mentality; they must come before God to confess that the prophet of the lamentation was right when he complained: "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps."—Jeremiah 10: 23.

So long as God acknowledges the agency of man—his right to act without coercion—so long must God await man's readiness to receive this divine leadership which he has to offer in the person of his Only Begotten Son. But God thought so well of his children—good, bad, and indifferent—that he sent them guidance in the meridian of time, hoping that they would hear the voice of the Good Shepherd directing them away from the dangerous mountain precipices and the ravenous wolves. "He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

This effort on the part of God and Christ to save humanity from all its unnecessary fears and woes was not initiated on the spur of the moment. It was not a partial panacea prepared out of undue haste to meet an unexpected emergency. Quite to the contrary, this as yet distant exigency was foreknown to the Father and his loyal Son ages in advance; together they planned to meet the black debacle of human confusion at a time and in a manner which, while it would bring to pass the desired end, would do so while still honoring mankind's divine gift of freedom—human agency.

What a campaign this has been! And now we are nearing the conclusion. Satan has utilized all the tricks in his voluminous and well-filled bag of sorcery, witchcraft, and enchantment. But now he sees his end approaching, and in desperation, he determines to scorch the earth with all the instruments of his devilish devising: the death-dealing machines of war and resultant famine, the chill of death with no fuel to temper the unkind winds of winter and adversity, the world suffering—not only from these but from other malignant enemies of physical comforts and safety. And what is even worse, Lucifer waving his alluring wand of deception entices poor deluded men to all sorts of immoralities with the hope that in these they will find that something which will satisfy their spiritual longing for divine affection, which after all can be satisfied only in God.

