WHAT I FAIL TO COMPREHEND is that because some, including myself, have refused to believe that "hot drinks" means tea and coffee, regardless of whether they are heated, we are at once held to be in opposition to alleged interpretations of various leaders of the past. I can concede that tea and coffee and any other hot drink may be included in the words, hot drinks; but I cannot agree that "hot drinks" mean tea and coffee or any other liquid capable of being drunk regardless of the presence or absence of heat. And I stand on my statement that there is no occasion for an interpretation. I cannot simulate. I am not going to camouflage my position on a point. I cannot concede a grossly illogical thing. I prefer that our people, both young and old, stand on their God-given right to interpret for themselves two simple words, the plain meaning of which is known to every school child in accordance with the accepted meaning of those words, though of course no private interpretation can be binding on others.

Some things that were obviously assumed are undoubtedly responsible for this confusion. Tea and coffee, always "brewed" or "made" by application of heat, were no doubt quite universally taken into the body while still more or less heated. So tea and coffee were generally considered in those early years as belonging to the category of hot drinks.

But what about the present practice of drinking tea and coffee while cold? This was never thought of in the 1830's. Who, then, will hold that iced tea or iced coffee can possibly come under the ban of "hot drinks"! Such an idea is absurd in the extreme.

Now, since this unwarranted assumption on the part of some who have attempted to "interpret" has obviously been one of the factors causing confusion, why continue an obvious fallacy in our conclusions or inferences? Just as the Saints in 1837 indicated a desire to cleave to the "literal reading," I refuse to read into this Word of Wisdom what is not found in its "literal reading."

Please do not accuse me of not endorsing Section 86. As stated, I firmly believe it contains good counsel and advice. I as firmly believe that the benefits promised will be realized by those who observe it and that they who do not observe it will not receive the benefits promised, though they will not be punished or penalized for failure or refusal to comply.

I am convinced that tea and coffee are harmful and injurious because of their constituent elements, and those who share in such conviction have overlooked and do mainly now overlook their most valid objection, in my opinion, which is that they are, generally speaking, strong drinks. (Though I concede they might be so diluted that the term strong could hardly be applied.)

With this argument there is a double phase: Tea and coffee, if hot, are taboo by the plain, simple, and unequivocal terms of the Word; and even if not hot or heated, they are or may be "strong" drinks.

Let us not do violence to the language used by reading into this section what is not in it. And let our friends who hold otherwise than some of us, please be charitable enough not to believe, because we refuse to read into it something not there, that we are against its plain and simple provision.

Note of Thanks

I am not able to answer all the letters I received following my request for prayers in the Herald. I do appreciate them, however, and if I recover I plan to be baptized. I will be in a cast until August 23, and I still suffer much. Please continue to pray for me.

Wants Help

I plan to enter Washington University this fall and would like to contact anyone in Saint Louis, Missouri, who could help me find suitable housing. I would especially like to hear from Eldon Dickens who was my Graceland roommate in 1941.

From an Isolated Member

I am an isolated Latter Day Saint and a shut-in. Since I cannot go to church, I read the Herald and get much good from it. I especially enjoy reading the letters.

The Lord is good to me and helps me from day to day. I will be eighty years old next January.

Concerning Ishmael - By William Worth, Sr.

NOTE: From a letter to the Herald by Sister Hilda Harper of Urmston, near Manchester, England, we received the question, "Would it be possible for one of the priesthood to give us an article on the territory the Arabs will occupy? Isaac, when blessing Esau, after finding out the deception of Jacob, gave him certain places, I know. Where are his descendants to dwell?"

Brother William Worth, Sr., of Independence, has made a study of the prophecies concerning Israel and Judah and related matters, and we have asked him to give the answer, which we are glad to present herewith.—EDITORS.

YOU MUST DISTINGUISH between the descendants of Ishmael and Esau. The pure Arabs claim Shem, son of Noah, as their ancestor. Bedouin Arabs trace their descent from Ishmael. There is really no difference; the Bedouins just did not trace so far back.

But Esau was the progenitor of the Turk. The one little book of Obadiah has his history and destiny from first to last.

Concerning Ishmael, the Arab, I cannot find any promise of future blessings for his seed at the end of the age.

To console Hagar, the mother of Ishmael, the angel promised that the child should be a wild man, with his hand against every man, and every man's hand against him. He should dwell in the midst of all his brethren (see Genesis 16: 11, and another promise in 21: 18). Neither of these promises are very enviable.

From the first he displayed his characteristics, making the life of the much younger "Only Son" of Abraham, Isaac, unbearable; and Hagar, the handmaid, irritated Sarah.

It was the Ishmaelites who bought Joseph and sold him into slavery in Egypt, nearly bringing to an end all the promises made to Abraham concerning his seed.

Yet God works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform, and that grave crisis was the very means of opening the way for the growth and development of the seed of Abraham. We read that in later years almost all the birthright blessing was conferred upon Joseph and his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh.

The only other outstanding blessing, "the sceptre," was conferred upon Judah and for a limited period of time.

TODAY THE JEWS are seeking to claim the land which went with the birthright blessings to Joseph. Also they are assuming the name of "Israel" instead of calling themselves Judah-ites, from which tribe they claim descent.

Their move is premature and fraught with great disaster, as foretold so clearly in Zechariah 14: 1-3.

Not until the Jews (or Judah) unite themselves with Israel can they hope for peace and safety. Jeremiah 3: 18 and Ezekiel 37: 15 are two outstanding Scriptures foretelling the uniting of "the two families" (Jeremiah 33: 24). When reading Ezekiel 37, lay aside for the time being the interpretation placed upon it for so many years, and with an open mind let the Scripture speak for itself, saying what it means, and meaning what it says.

This little reference regarding modern Judah is a diversion from our subject, though the claim of the Arab to the land of Palestine is equally futile.

The last mention of the Arab I have come across is in Jeremiah 25, verse 15. God gives to Jeremiah a wine cup filled with the "fury of the Almighty." And among the nations who have to drink of that bitter cup are (verse 24), "all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert."

Doctrine and Covenants 1: 6 speaks of a dividing of the inhabitants of the earth into two camps, "The Devil shall have power over his own dominion, and the Lord shall have power over his Saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world."

Our Savior, speaking in Matthew 13: 24-30, then verses 36-43, describes that same event in more minute detail.

At this point, before continuing this article, read and ponder on these two Scriptures.

The vision or parable of Jeremiah's carrying the wine cup of fury to the nations was predicting this same event. Notice verses 32 and 33 of chapter 25. Jeremiah 23: 20 says, "The anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have executed, and till he have performed the thoughts of his heart; in the latter days we shall consider it perfectly."

NOW ANSWER THIS QUESTION: At the time of the judgment of the nations (Matthew 25: 31-46), on which side do you expect the Arabs to be, with the sheep or the goats?

The conception and birth of the illegitimate child, Ishmael, was not the important point in the life of Abraham; it was lack of faith on the part of Sarah, the apparent impossibility of a son, from two, "as good as dead" (Hebrews 11: 12).

It was the subterfuge of Satan himself, a device to frustrate the purpose of God. The call of Abraham and the creation of the nation of Israel was God's scheme for the redemption of mankind. "An elect nation" (Isaiah 45: 4); "dear as the apple of his eye, and graven on his hands" (Isaiah 49: 16; Zechariah 2: 8)—a nation called to be his witness, his servant, and finally to rule with him on his footstool (Isaiah 60).

God made that covenant to Abraham seven times, in whole or in part—twice again repeated to Isaac, "his son . . . in whom his seed should be called"; twice again to Jacob, who prevailed with God and was named Israel, meaning "ruling with" or "a prince with God."

Let us ponder the comment of the Schofield Reference Bible upon this subject (see page 19): "Henceforth, in Scripture record, humanity must be thought of as a vast stream from which God, in the call of Abram and the creation of the nation Israel, has but drawn off a slender rill, through which he may at last purify the great river itself."

Israel is called to be a witness to the unity of God in the midst of universal idolatry (Deuteronomy 6: 4; Isaiah 43: 10-12) to illustrate the blessedness of serving the true God (Deuteronomy 33: 26-29), to receive and preserve the divine revelations (Romans 3: 1, 2; Deuteronomy 4: 5-8), and to produce the Messiah (Genesis 3: 15; 21: 12; 28: 10-14; 49: 10; Samuel 7: 16; Isaiah 4: 3, 4; Matthew 1: 1).

IN PONDERING on the thought of the seeds of Abraham being "a slender rill," my mind flashed to Isaiah 46, verses 1-3, in which troublous times are spoken of; yet "there is a river, the streams thereof shall make glad the City of God, the Holy place of the tabernacles of the most high. God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved. God shall help her, and that right early." "Blest river of salvation, pursue thine onward way, flow thou to every nation, nor in thy richness stay; stay not till all the lowly triumphant reach their homes; stay not till all the holy proclaim, 'The Lord Is Come.'"—Saints' Hymnal, No. 385.

We in these the latter days are proclaiming the angel's message; God is setting his hand the second time to gather together his dispersed Israel (Isaiah 11: 11; Jeremiah 16: 14, 15; 23: 8). The Book of Mormon, pages 658 to 666, is rich on this point.

The hymns of the early Restorationists are vibrant in anticipation of the glorious events: "The morning breaks, the shadows flee" (No. 411), "Yes, we trust the day is breaking" (No. 395), "Almighty God of love, set up the attracting sign" (No. 409), "Come, O thou King of kings" (No. 179), "Ye wondering nations, now give ear unto the angel's cry" (No. 417).

Our hymns alone proclaim the whole story.

Choice Above All Other Lands - Part I

By Bessie Taylor

Latter Day Saints have been telling the world for over a century that Zion is to be established in a favored land. To many this may have sounded like the boasting of home folk. Our readers should be interested in the abundance of facts brought out in the following article supporting our claims. Mrs. Taylor has done much patient research to get quotable scientific data.
—EDITOR.

And the Lord would not suffer that they should stop beyond the sea in the wilderness, but he would that they should come forth even unto the land of promise which was choice above all other lands, which the Lord God had preserved for a righteous people.—Ether 1: 29.

THE LAND to which the early Jaredites and people of Lehi came is frequently referred to in the Book of Mormon as "the promised land—the land choice above all other lands," and one that only the righteous may enjoy in peace. The Western Hemisphere is greatly blessed in many ways, especially North America. A little study reveals the many blessings we have that are superior to all other lands.

The study of any land begins with the basic idea—the concept of natural environment. We are usually most aware of our social environment, but beyond and outside it there is the much larger natural environment. This affects man more than his social surroundings but in a different way. Natural environment includes a great many things—all the agents, forces, processes, and material resources of the world of nature. These all may be classified into a number of categories, foremost of which are: weather and climate, land forms, minerals, and rocks, soils, natural vegetation and animal life, surface and underground waters. It is in these fundamental elements that the geographer finds North America surpassing all other lands.

WEATHER AND CLIMATE

Weather and climate is said to be the measuring stick of human society. Its influence is most significant. Its importance has necessitated the establishment of a weather bureau. The three great divisions of climate are the torrid, temperate, and frigid zones. The temperate is the only dynamic zone. The polar zones are too severe and limit production, while the tropics are too warm and interfere with both human metabolism, and animal and plant life.

In the tropic zones all the body processes must necessarily slow down. The human body as a machine is only 18 to 21 per cent efficient. It is necessary to liberate three to four degrees of heat units from the body in order to produce one degree of energy. In the tropics, heat is liberated with more difficulty and therefore there is less energy. Hot weather produces a difference in tempo. In Panama it takes two years to produce a 200 pound hog, while in Missouri or Kansas, it can be done in six months. Moreover, the Panama pig will never exceed 200 pounds. At least one half of the race dies before maturity. The mortality rate is far greater in the tropics due to parasites and poor diet.

The temperate climates are varied according to moisture, wind, air pressure, and temperature. North America has the greatest variety of climate of the world, and her heart land is of a most ideal quality. Glen T. Trewartha in Climates of the World points out that this rich heart land, beginning in central Kansas and extending north and south from three to five hundred miles and on out eastward to the Atlantic coast is choice above all others. Its nearest equal are the limited areas of the marine west coast climates which are located in our own northwest, southern Chile, England and eastern Europe, southern Australia and New Zealand.

This humid mid-continental climate of the United States, with its long summers and adequate moisture of from thirty-five to fifty inches per year, is duplicated in only two other areas of the world. One is in central China and Japan, and the other in the Balkans and southwestern Russia. These are both inferior to ours because their heaviest rains come after the growing season.

This extraordinary climate is due to many factors. Our mountain arrangement makes it possible for the north polar air and the warm gulf air to intermix. This creates pressure as is evidenced by our cyclones, which are peculiar to our country, but nevertheless this cyclonic weather is a great creator of energy. White and Renner in Human Geography point out that this area exceeds in agriculture and industry, and leads all others put together in the number of patents the government issues each year. Enterprising leaders are here produced for every field. This fact is true not only because of the stimulating climate, but also because of the rich vitamin content of the food produced.

LAND FORMS

The physiographic features of a country are the result of both constructional and destructional forces. Constructional forces are the forces within the earth's bosom such as the heaving and doming of mountains. The destructional forces are those due to wind, waves, glaciers, and streams; these are continuously eroding and depositing. The character of any landscape or country therefore depends upon its underground structure and the external destructive forces.

America is by far the most blessed in her arrangement of land forms. No other land has such an extensive plain area. The mountain arrangement is ideal. All other continents have mountain ranges that run east and west, which interfere with the world wind system. The prevailing winds of both the northern and southern temperate zones are the westerlies. Our Rocky Mountain regions, graduated in size from the low coastal ranges to the high Rockies, regulate the course of the wind. The cold polar air condenses the moist gulf air, and the precipitation is more or less evenly distributed over the whole country; it is especially so over the area where the three meet—eastern Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, and on out toward the coast.

MINERALS AND ROCKS

A. K. Lobeck in the Panorama of Physiographic Types classifies rocks into two categories; sedimentary and crystalline. Sedimentary rocks are derived from the wearing down and destruction of the crystalline rocks taking the form of sandstones, limestones, and shales. Minerals, which are the result of organic fossilization, such as coal and oil, are found in the regions where this wearing down process has been active. The metallic minerals, except iron, aluminum, lead, and zinc, are found in the mountainous crystalline areas, and are the result of heat and pressure which were exerted when the mountains were made.

Our whole earth is underlaid with a crystalline formation. The sedimentary formation is superimposed, a result of the destructive forces of nature. The only evidence we see of this crystalline formation is in the folding, doming, and faulting of mountains and high plateaus. Here the great underground forces sometimes break through to the surface as active volcanoes, or they may slowly push up wrinkles, folds, or circular domes. Again, through faulting, great blocks may be hoisted, leaving exposed stratified layers of the earth.

The more we study the structures of the earth, the more obvious becomes the superiority of North America. Mineral resources are a very distinguishing factor. According to the Kollmorgan statistics, North America has 68½ per cent of the world's coal supply, 50 per cent of which is in the center of the United States and Appalachian areas while 17 per cent is in Asia; 10½ per cent in Europe; 2½ per cent in Australia and New Zealand; and 1 per cent in Africa and South America. There is no coal anywhere in the tropics due to the climate which is adverse to coal formation.

Coal is power, and a great factor in our progress. The use of coal has made possible our great industrial development. The harnessing of this energy is far more convenient than slave labor. One horsepower is equal to fifteen slaves. Three fourths of the peoples of the world are untouched by the benefits of this great power. Dr. Kollmorgan points out that, on the average, we here in the United States enjoy the equivalent of the services of 153 slaves for each inhabitant. England, forty-five; France, thirty-five; Italy, twenty-five; and Russia, eleven. The United States, in terms of horsepower has one half of the producing capacity of the whole earth. Is it any wonder we are a rich nation? Is our wealth due to our superior brain power and ambition? What do we owe those countries that have the unproductive climates, the dearth of mineral resources, and the absence of education?

We are blessed not only in our supply of minerals—coal in particular—but also in their quality and location. We have the best quality of coal, and it is close to the surface and easily mined. It is also close to our iron mines. In Europe, especially, the coal is down very, very deep—mostly under the Atlantic ocean. It is located many miles from the iron sources. This is also true with the oil deposits of the world except in America. Where the oil is, there is no other corresponding minerals. America is fortunate in having this great natural storehouse (California alone has fifty-eight varieties of minerals) strategically located in relation to efficient industrialization.

SOILS

White and Renner in Human Geography, page 394, says:

The part played by soil in human ecology is undeniably important though probably surpassed by climate and geographical location as affecting human affairs . . . soil is practically unknown scientifically to the majority of people.

Soil may be defined nontechnically as the unconsolidated covering of the earth's surface which is capable of supporting life. It is derived from two sources: the weathering of rocks and the accumulation of organic material. An examination of the soil blanket reveals striking differences in character and depth and productivity from place to place. These varieties are due both to their origins and the manner in which they were formed. Fertility depends upon texture, structure, aeration, and age. Soils contain three constituents: insoluble mineral matter, soluble mineral matter, and organic matter. The usefulness of soils varies according to certain aspects of their physical environment as the climate above and the drainage below.

Only 30 per cent of the surface of the earth is land, only one third of which is tillable, and 60 per cent of the world's population lives on 9 per cent of the land. Why such grouping? It is natural for man to live where nature has endowed most. Not over one fourth of the surface of the earth gets enough rain for agriculture, although irrigation has made some areas available. North America with her nine million square miles has by far the greatest amount of tillable and productive land. Many of our arid regions have developed irrigation.

The soils of the United States are capable of producing a great variety, but nowhere does the soil compare to the rich prairie grass lands of the central United States, except in the three small areas located in central Texas, central Alabama, and the river valleys of Idaho, Washington, and Oregon. The red and yellow soils in the southern states receive

1949 Ministerial Institute at Independence, Missouri

A MINISTERIAL INSTITUTE for full-time ministers of the Reorganized Church was held May 3 to 13 inclusive in the Auditorium under the direction of F. Henry Edwards of the First Presidency. Fifty-six men from the midwest and south, exclusive of the staff, participated in the eleven-day institute.

Associated with President F. Henry Edwards as staff members were Apostles D. T. Williams, E. J. Gleazer, Sr., W. Wallace Smith, and Reed Holmes, together with Bishops G. L. DeLapp, Henry Livingston, and Walter Johnson.

Two other ministerial institutes were conducted simultaneously by the church at Detroit, Michigan, and Berkeley, California. The Detroit institute included men from Michigan, Ontario, and the East and was under the supervision of Apostle Arthur Oakman with Apostles Maurice Draper and Percy Farrow associated in staff capacities. The Berkeley institute for ministers in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific coast areas was conducted by Apostles George Mesley and Charles Hield. Associated with them was F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Training for the church.

The daily sessions in Independence were held in the choir room of the Auditorium at 9:00 o'clock each morning and continued until 9:00 o'clock or later each evening. The ministers were served lunch each noon in the Auditorium dining room by the Laurel Club. The latter parts of the afternoons were devoted to recreational activities in the Auditorium gymnasium and on the Campus under the supervision of Carl Mesle.

The three ministerial institutes provided instruction and offered opportunities for exchange of experiences in the fields of theology and administration for all full-time ministers of the church in the United States and Canada. Included in the number of men outside the United States who were unable to participate were Apostles Paul Hanson (then in Peru), Roscoe Davey in Australia, and Blair Jensen in Europe.

The fifty-six men participating in the Independence Institute were:

J. D. Anderson, Kansas City, Missouri; T. A. Beck, Warrensburg, Missouri; Willard C. Becker, Stewartville, Missouri; Stephen A. Black, Independence, Missouri; John Blackmore, Joplin, Missouri; John W. Blackstock, Chariton, Iowa; Lloyd L. Bland, Independence, Missouri; W. J. Breshears, Pensacola, Florida; H. W. Cackler, Independence, Missouri; N. Ray Carmichael, Independence, Missouri; Clifford A. Cole, Woodbine, Iowa; Sylvester R. Coleman, Flora, Illinois; A. Orlin Crownover, Mobile, Alabama.

John R. Darling, Independence, Missouri; Fred O. Davies, Independence, Missouri.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Does the Reorganized Church believe in baptism for the dead?

ANSWER:

The church has declared by vote in General Conference that baptism for the dead is a question concerning which the Reorganization has received no commandment, and that it is not binding upon the church under these circumstances. This leaves the matter subject to whatever future instructions, if any, the Lord may see fit to give. In the early church a provisional right to perform the ceremony was later canceled, the provisions not having been complied with. Since then the Lord has never restored the privilege.

QUESTION:

Were the Samaritans a political or a religious people?

ANSWER:

At first, or at least as early as history reveals, the Samaritans included those tribes which came under the rulership of Jeroboam in central Palestine on both sides of the Jordan. They comprised the revolting tribes of Israel who departed from the king of Judah. Jeroboam built various cities in what was called Samaria and set up idolatrous altars in Bethel and Dan in order to prevent his people from going up to Jerusalem for worship. But in spite of this, many were inclined to worship at Jerusalem instead of at the places provided. Some time later Omri, then king of Israel, built the city of Samaria, in which his son established the worship of Baal.

In the course of time, many of various tribes again came under the dominance of the kingdom of Judah. About 721 B.C. the remnant of the ten tribes remaining under Samaritan rule were taken captive by Shalmaneser the Assyrian and carried to Assyria. Thus the cities of Samaria became desolate until Assyrians were sent to repopulate them.

It will be seen that now the Samaritans were no longer Israel but were at least largely of heathen descent and developed a strange mixture of Jewish and heathen religion. To them came Manasseh, a man of priestly lineage who had been expelled from Jerusalem by Nehemiah for a mixed marriage, and he increased the hatred existing between them and the people of Judah and Jerusalem. The Jews declared that the Samaritan copy of the books of Moses was corrupted, while the Samaritans held it to be more ancient and perfect than that of the Jews. This hatred was increased by Samaritan claims to Jewish blood.

QUESTION:

What is the Mosaic law?

ANSWER:

This term is applied to the law God gave to Moses at Mount Sinai. It includes the Ten Commandments and the ceremonies which were associated with them and formed a part of the divine code. The entire code, including its ceremonies, was termed "the law," and its strict observance was enjoined upon the Hebrews. This was the law Moses received during the forty days on the mount, and which he in turn gave to the people for their government. It constituted a covenant with God, the tenor of which was in the Ten Commandments (Exodus 34: 27, 28), but the details of which are found in Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy.

QUESTION:

Is the "rose of Sharon" mentioned in the Bible? If so, what was it?

ANSWER:

Only in the Song of Solomon (2: 1) is the rose of Sharon mentioned. The rose is mentioned in one other place, Isaiah 35: 1, but both are from the same Hebrew term and may probably refer to the narcissus, which grows fragrantly in the plain of Sharon, or to the crocus, the root of the word meaning a bulb. Translators differ as to its precise identity, and some think it may be the rose of Jericho, known as the resurrection plant. The term is rendered "lily" in the Septuagint, Leeser, and Douay versions; but "meadow saffron or narcissus" by Young, and "autumn crocus" in the Revised Version margin.

tory, Jesus of Nazareth, said; "Take heed and beware of covetousness for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth."

LATTER DAY SAINTS have talked, sung, and prayed for the building of the kingdom and rightly so, for that was the divine message to the boy prophet. But we cannot think of the kingdom without stewardship. We don't think of stewardship without consideration of the three "t's"—time, talent, and tithing. As we contemplate our immediate task, more of our membership should be converted to those old-fashioned words which Jesus used, and to which reference has already been made; namely, steward and stewardship.

This development should be parallel to our missionary emphasis for those who do not have fellowship with us. We definitely need to increase our 1949 budget of $854,000 for world evangelism and will to the extent that we live as "stewards for Christ."

Letter From Australia

My wife and I wish to express our most sincere appreciation for the new Herald publication, Daily Bread. It should be in the home of all members as an aid to daily worship. It is a privilege to have something of this kind written by our own church writers and based on our Three Standard Books.

Note of Thanks

We wish to thank all who remembered us in prayer following the tornado which destroyed our home and injured us on May 21. We are grateful, too, for the flowers, letters, cards, and financial aid we received. We are especially appreciative for the contributions from our friends in Englewood, Independence, Nevada, and Bernie, Missouri, and for the ministry of the elder from Marion, Illinois. Although our earthly possessions were destroyed, our faith has been made stronger. We have received wonderful blessings, and our prayer is that others in need may likewise be blessed. We ask the Saints to pray with us that in God's own due time we may have a branch here.

Look for the Beautiful - By Mrs. John Blackstock

*O God, maker of all minds,
Give my mind understanding
Train my ears to hear thy voice,
My eyes to find thy beauty,
My tongue to speak thy truth,
My heart to love all life,
My will to achieve thy purposes through Christ.*

MY MIND keeps returning to the song, "Look for the Beautiful." In looking for the beautiful, we do not have time to see things that are not beautiful. This will help us to be better material for kingdom building.

Think of the beautiful. In thinking of the beautiful, our minds will be receptive to the Spirit of Christ.

Talk of the beautiful. In talking of the beautiful, we will help spread the gospel story.

Live for the beautiful. When I think of living for the beautiful, I think of Sister Parley Batten—"Aunt Lizzy" to all of us. Her life has truly been beautiful—one worthy to pattern ours after. She was always the first to call on the sick, and she didn't go empty-handed. She carried her specialty, a pie. She brought comfort and cheer to many homes.

I see flowers, a sunset, trees with new leaves and colorful blossoms in the springtime, and a fresh world after a rain. I hear the birds' wake-up song in the early morning and frogs croaking at night.

Two years ago, when we were going to Michigan, we passed through a town that had a beautiful road with trees arched together at the top. Driving slowly through it made one feel that he was driving through a green cathedral. Someone who loved beauty planted those trees and, with the help of God, created this beauty spot for travelers to pass through.

Experiences like this bring us close to God, and make us think of things that are eternal.

WE TALK, sing, and pray about Zion the beautiful. We forget sometimes that Zion is to be made up of people, homes, streets, alleys, business houses, farms, factories, highways, roads, automobiles, trains, trucks, airplanes, ships, and houses of worship. The list is limitless. How can these commonplace things become beautiful? How can the ordinary things we see on every hand possess qualities which charm and delight the senses?

Many humble homes, even homes with threadbare furnishings can have beauty. The same is true of churches. Elaborate churches are not always buildings that inspire.

Where then shall we find beauty? It is an illusive thing. We must search for it. In our quest for it, we will become aware of the fact sooner or later that first it must be found in ourselves. One who is ugly and mean is not charmed easily. On the other hand, we know people who have so developed themselves that their entire surrounding will take on new meaning.

It would seem then that we must develop certain traits of character such as patience, faith, godliness, self-restraint, love, and helpfulness. In fact we must possess the fruits of the Spirit.

We are incapable of doing this alone. There is in each of us so much of the base, the carnal, so much ugliness and lust that we must have some strengthening and stabilizing power to help us. Good men and women can help, but for the most part this help must come from God.

IF WE ARE RIGHT in assuming that beauty is first, last, and always a condition of the hearts and minds of people, we must find guidance for the emotions of the heart in our quest for it. This is accomplished only when the minds of men are guided aright. There is only one teacher who can furnish that guidance—Jesus Christ. He who knew beauty to its very depth said, "Come follow me."

If we faithfully do this, we will find ourselves in a growing experience of intimate relationship with God, the creator of all beauty. If we are to follow him—if we are truly looking for beauty, we must select for ourselves environments in which he is most apt to be found.

Only those who are worthy will find true beauty in this world. For he that is not worthy will not pay the price. It is a pathway of joy, and yet it is studded with sorrow. For our lives to become beautiful, we must dethrone self and crown him king whose right it is to reign.

When we have those attributes that appeal to others, our search for beauty will have ended. In the day that the church of Jesus Christ shall have numbers of such people, Zion shall be a dream no longer.

In this poem the thoughts expressed show us a way to forget self and to find the beauty of serving Christ.

WHAT CHRIST SAID

I said, "Let me walk in the fields."
He said, "No, walk in the town."
I said, "There are no flowers there."
He said, "No flowers but a crown."

I said, "But the skies are black;
There is nothing but noise and din."
And he wept as he sent me back;
"There is more," he said; "There is sin."

I said, "But the air is thick,
And fogs are veiling the sun."
He answered, "Yet souls are sick
And souls in the dark undone."

The Weaker Sex

By Margaret Gibson

WE WONDER, sometimes, why women are referred to as the "weaker" sex. They frequently work more hours during the day. They must be teachers, housekeepers, nurses, seamstresses, and financial wizards all in one. They bear children in suffering and rejoice that they are so blessed.

Consider quiet, self-effacing Emma Smith. She endured what few women have ever been called upon to endure. Poverty and suffering were hers without measure. Joseph at least knew that his family was usually safe. Emma never knew that Joseph was safe; she was aware of the fact he was frequently in danger. But there she was—steady, quiet, patient, and true—a rock in his troubled sea, a song in the frequent dark. What would he have done without her?

Joseph's earthly mission ended in 1844, but Emma's didn't. She first had to help hide her husband's body from those who would sell it for money. Then she went back into a half-deserted city with her children and reared them among strangers. She had to watch her former neighbors depart from Nauvoo, and—what must have been infinitely worse—to learn later that many of them had gone into transgression. She had to see the name and reputation of her martyred husband slandered and misjudged throughout all the remaining years of her life.

But there were compensations. When the boys, puzzled and heart-sick over the false accusations made against their father, came to her for the truth, Emma could tell them with an honesty which was self-evident that the stories told against him were false. She had her husband's letters from Missouri, from Illinois, and even from jail which proved him to be innocent of evil and far away from the spot where he was claimed to be by evil-doers. And she would call in the boys' stepfather, Major Bidamon, and ask him to tell them what he knew of their father, Joseph. The Major's calm assurance that their father had been honest and morally clean was most reassuring, for the men had been well acquainted. "And furthermore," the Major would add, "your mother's character is of such a standard that if your father had been a polygamist, she wouldn't have lived in the same house with him for five minutes."

EMMA TOLD HER CHILDREN the story of the true gospel probably as no other person then living on earth could have told it, for she had gone with her young husband in a spring wagon one night to the Hill Cumorah and held the lantern while he pried up the heavy stones and removed the plates of the Book of Mormon and other plates, the Urim and Thummim, the Liahona, and the sword of Laban from the ancient box.

Emma's testimony was that she knew her husband was inspired when he was translating the plates, for even after a pause of an hour or more, he would start in right where he left off and continue, never repeating or contradicting himself. No wonder that young Joseph, fatherless at twelve, could become the next president of the church! He knew that the gospel was true. He knew it because his father and mother knew it and lived and died for it.

What marvel that young Alexander, years later, could start out on a missionary journey with twenty-five cents in his pocket and return to lay that twenty-five cents on the table and start out afresh on his journey, penniless but serene in the confidence that God would direct and care for him. Alexander hadn't seen very much of his father, but his mother kept him alive in the memory of the children.

And little David, who was born five months after his father's death, was taught to have the kind of faith that gave us the challenge, "Let us shake off the coals from our garments and arise in the strength of the Lord."

Women are not of the priesthood, but they can lead men into the priesthood. They can so live that they bless the priesthood with encouragement, strength, understanding, and patience. In their hours of anguish, men of God cling to the gentle steadfastness of their wives and stand fast.

"Emma," wrote Joseph, ill and imprisoned, "My faithful, unchangeable Emma!"

Future Features in the "Herald"

"The Meaning of Priesthood," is interestingly discussed by J. E. Baldwin, in the August 1 issue. The term "priesthood" has little meaning for most Protestants; what does it mean to you? The power of the priesthood is coextensive with the power of righteousness.

You will want to read "That Question of Brotherly Love and Reconciliation," by Elbert A. Smith in August 8 "Herald." It has a practical, human interest slant which brings Jesus' teachings nearer to people's hearts.

I said, "I shall miss the light,
And friends will miss me, they say."
He answered, "Choose to-night
If I am to miss you, or they."

I plead for time to be given.
He said, "Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your Guide."

I cast one look at the fields,
Then set my face to the town;
He said, "My child, do you yield?
Will you leave the flowers for the crown?"

Then into his hand went mine,
And into my heart came he;
And I walk in a light divine
The path I had feared to see.

—GEORGE MACDONALD.

Evan Fry - Radio Minister

FOR A MAN who writes and presents a sermon five days a week and writes script for two other radio programs a week, Radio Minister Evan Fry is a calm person. Every week, Tuesday through Saturday, he arrives at 6:25 a.m. in the radio room of the Stone Church, where he presents a sermon on the Morning Devotions program, which radio listeners hear from stations KMBC of Kansas City, Missouri, and KFRM, over the border in Kansas. Sunday is a day of rest. He doesn't read a sermon on that day—but he does write the script for the 11:00 o'clock radio service plus the script for Organ Vespers, which is broadcast over KFRM in the early evening.

Brother Fry's desk is in the center of a room in the southwest corner of the Auditorium. On his neat desk are several pieces of white paper all the same size. These contain the "germs" for future sermons. He picks up ideas for sermons as he reads the Scriptures. He puts each idea on a three-by-five-inch piece of paper along with the Scriptural reference. Then he keeps it on his desk for a few days, adding notes and further ideas as they come to him. He slips these notes in with a pack of similar ones in the top left-hand drawer of his desk. Then his subconscious mind goes to work for him. This neat little file is his seedbed for full-blown sermons. Whenever he needs an idea, he ruffles through his notes and there—maybe a week old, maybe five years old—is an idea that strikes home. Brother Fry says it usually takes very little energy to evolve sermons from these incubated notes.

One of his favorite Scriptures is found in Doctrine and Covenants 83:14: "Treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour that portion that shall be meted unto every man." "That really works for me," he says. "It's sound psychology as well as good Scripture."

"Illustrations make a sermon," says our radio minister. "A good idea might be lost to a listener, but tie it up with an illustration—some mental picture familiar to the hearer—and he'll never forget it." Brother Fry is an observing man. He reads a lot and is always storing up ideas. "I never know," he says, "when I might use something." He is never without something to jot notes on.

HIS FILES are something to behold. On every subject that he has used from "Agency" to "Zion," he has a folder. In it is a copy of each sermon already preached on the subject; also clippings, notes, and any other helps. Under "Utopias," he has the notes from reading done in preparation for the master's thesis he never got written, "Ideal Social States in English Literature." And behind that lies the story of Brother Fry's education.

He is the product of an excellent Reorganized Latter Day Saint heritage. His father is Charles Fry, one of the hymn writers of our church. Son Evan spent much of his childhood moving from place to place with his missionary parents, but it undoubtedly helped to give him a part of the ease he displays wherever he goes. He went to high school in Independence, Missouri, and then he spent two years at Kansas City Junior College. He went for a third year to Graceland and liked it so well that he stayed on for a fourth year of extra work and enough training to merit him a teacher's certificate. He received his B.A. with a major in English from the University of Kansas at Lawrence in 1926. He taught school in Rochester, Minnesota, for two years, and then came back to Lawrence where he took courses and taught at the university, working toward his master's degree.

It was while he was thus occupied that the General Church asked him to come to Independence in 1930 to work on the hymnbook. While he was in the Center Place, the professor under whom he was working on his master's thesis in the university died, and Evan got busy with the "new" Saints' Hymnal—thus the unfinished thesis on "Ideal Social States in English Literature."

Brother Fry's career became even more varied from that time forward. After finishing with the technical work he was called to do with the hymnal, he drifted into work on the church's radio programs. He worked on a weekly salary at that time, and when the church, during the depression, had to reduce its staff, Brother Fry was one who was released. Then for nine years and nine months he worked in radio stations in Kansas. The church brought him back to work in Independence on June 8, 1940, where he has just observed a ninth-year anniversary.

BECAUSE OF HIS RADIO WORK, Evan Fry has become known far and near. He preaches a large number of funeral sermons because he is the only minister known by many people who don't go to church. A number of the funeral sermons he preaches are those of nonchurch members.

Every week the requests for his radio sermons come in to the number of 103, 137, 88, 108, 125, etc. These requests are classified according to days and places. The largest number, of course, comes from Independence, then Missouri, Kansas, and other states in that order. They are checked to determine which came from church members and which do not. Those from nonmembers are listed, and Elder Stephen Black, recently added to the radio department, spends two or three days a week visiting these people. On one day he may go to St. Joseph, Missouri, take a local man with him, and make calls on those who have written to Brother Fry. In this way, follow-up missionary work is done. On another day, Brother Black may visit some other section of country.

Five to eight copies of his sermons must be typed. One goes to the station in advance, one to the organist, one to his secretary for stencil and filing, one to the announcer, and Brother Fry keeps one. On Sundays the control man and the second announcer each have one, and on Communion Sunday the eighth one is needed for the choir director, Paul Craig, since the choir sings in the studio.

Brother Fry's sermons do not die when they are mimeographed and mailed. A copy of each sermon is placed in a chronological file. Without much effort, he can find what sermon he preached on any day since June 10, 1940, when his first one went out on the air. Then, too, his sermons occasionally appear in written form in the Herald, and some are abridged for Daily Bread use.

EVAN FRY is a prompt man. Years of radio work have given him a talent for timing his arrival just right for any appointment. "I'm not one to get there early and wait for everyone else to arrive." He received quite a reputation when he worked for a Wichita station. It was his job to sign the station on the air in the morning. He drove to town, a distance of two and one half miles, parked his car a half block from the station, walked to the building, went up six floors, walked into the studio, sat down behind the microphone, signed the station on the air, and then went to hang up his hat. Fortunately, Brother Fry says he never had a flat tire.

NOT ONLY is he a popular funeral minister, but also a popular wedding minister, and he is so in demand as a speaker among Independence congregations that he finally had to ask the local officers to limit his engagements to once a month. "Even at that," he said, "I find myself preaching Sunday sermons some place usually three times a month." There is a limit to how much a man can do, and Brother Fry is one who can verify that, for a too-heavy schedule has worn him down on occasions in the past.

Besides his church work, he expresses his major interests as being his family and music. He plays the organ and sings in the Stone Church choir when he can. When he was a small boy, he loved to watch Ralph Smith play the Stone Church organ, and he soon began taking piano lessons from this good man. It was in 1930 that he first took organ lessons from a conservatory in Kansas City. He found it necessary to understand organ to be able to do first-class radio work.

On August 20, 1932, he married Dorothy Eden. They have three daughters: Celia, a freshman in high school, who did very well for herself as a pianist at the Missouri state music contest this year; Margaret Ann, nine; and Evelyn Ruth, almost five. In his household of "women," Evan Fry is a happy man.

On November 15, 1936, he was called to the office of high priest by George Mesley, at that time president of Kansas City Stake, and ordained by J. F. Garver. He held a place on the Stake High Council. While he was teaching and going to school at Lawrence, Kansas, he drove to Kansas City to direct the Central Church choir every week end. During 1930, he trained Kansas City Stake choirs to sing the Gresty oratorio for General Conference.

From about 1937 to 1939, he was pastor of Grandview congregation in Kansas City, Kansas.—SADI ANKA MOON.

From a Reader of "Daily Bread"

To say I enjoy Daily Bread is hardly sufficient. I had often wished our church had such an inspirational publication which could be carried in one's purse. It makes "handy" reading and contains many wonderful thoughts.

HAMILTON, ONTARIO.—On Children's Day, two members were added to the church, Valerie Whittaker and Myrna Justason. These young members are graduates of the pre-baptismal class taught by Pastor F. Eldon Oliver. The baptisms were performed by Elder F. J. Boyd. The confirmation service took place at 11:00 a.m. in the church.

The annual branch business meeting was held on Tuesday evening, June 14. The following officers were elected: pastor, Elder F. Eldon Oliver; associates, F. Howard Gilliam and F. J. Boyd; church school director, Elder U. E. Essery; junior school director, Austin E. Essery; young people's supervisor, L. W. Hill; women's department leader, Gertrude McAninch. The finance committee was authorized to purchase and install a suitable oil heating system to replace the coal furnace now in use. The pastor reports that a fine missionary spirit is working among the members, as they make special preparation for a series in October.

SALEM, OREGON.—Blessed on Children's Day were Ralph Wayne Moore and Arthur Lee Moore, formerly of Breckenridge, Missouri, now living in Salem. Officiating were Elders Charles H. Asher and F. E. Hammel.—Reported by Mrs. CONNIE STREETER.

JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA.—The Jacksonville group announces regular Sunday services at 10:30 a.m. at the home of Joseph Enge, 2104 Water Street (Telephone 2-2181). All services are in charge of Priests Joseph Enge and Robert Weber. Communion is held the first Sunday of every month.

June 26 was the annual group meeting. At this time the group tithed 100 per cent which was very gratifying to the members. Evie Sellers of McKenzie, Alabama, was a guest at this meeting and delivered an inspiring talk to the members.

On Mother's Day, Joan Frances Enge was baptized. About thirty-five members and friends attended the ceremony.

Anyone passing through Jacksonville on Sundays is welcome to attend. The Saints are eager to contact anyone known to live around Jacksonville. Letters will reach either priest at above address.

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—An evening baptismal service was held in Pittsburgh on June 5. Gladys Omohundro, Alice Windhager, and George Windhager were baptized by Elder Merle Guthrie. The confirmation service was held June 8.

The Pittsburgh Zion's League dedicated their Baldwin electronic organ, Sunday evening, June 12. Donald Ross, Jr., gave the dedication address.

Other improvements recently made in the church have been an asphalt tile floor in the basement and landscaping of the lawn.

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.—The Pensacola Branch conducted the first summer vacation church school in its history from June 6 to 17, which all concerned declared to be successful in every detail. Eighty-two were enrolled, including a number of nonmember friends of the vicinity, with an average attendance of sixty-six. The theme was "Stepping Stones to Zion," and the organization as suggested in the Manual was adapted to the local situation as nearly as possible. The division of classes was as follows: One kindergarten, two primary, one junior, and one junior high. The school was opened with a preparation day including a parade in the neighborhood of the church and through Brownsville business district, a suburb of Pensacola. The school closed with an achievement program at the church on Friday evening, June 17. Evelyn Breshears was the principal, being assisted by fourteen teachers and helpers.

Elder H. M. Cooper has resigned as pastor of the Pensacola Branch, and Elder Bruce Jones has succeeded him.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—This district held its first youth camp at Barton Flats in June. There were forty-five young people, ages fourteen to eighteen, and ten staff members. Members of the staff included Garland Tickemyer, Royce Foster, Russell Ralston, Jack Van Eaton, Arthur Hawkes, Ann Jasper, Ava Carmichael, Lucy Engel, and Frank Hanna.

CLEAR LAKE, INDIANA.—Services were held at the Clear Lake church on the evenings of May 15 to 19 by Evangelist E. R. Carter of Lansing, Michigan. On June 12 he assisted with the baptisms of six candidates in an afternoon service. The confirmations were cared for in the evening. All services of the branch have a number of nonmembers attending and showing interest. The women's department has contributed $140 to the organ fund. The Zion's League which meets monthly has an average attendance of twenty-five.

FOREST GROVE, OREGON.—On June 12, Children's Day, eight children were baptized at the First Church in Portland, Oregon, with R. E. Anderson, pastor of the Forest Grove Branch, officiating. The following were baptized: Lionel Nunn, Lila Nunn, Clyde Nunn, Sharon Wick, Richard Anderson, Gerald Anderson, Lorana Wolfard, Carmen Whiting.

The following Sunday, June 19, the confirmation services for these candidates were held at the Grange Hall, Forest Grove, Oregon, with Pastor R. E. Anderson and his assistant, H. L. Bosshardt, officiating.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.—During the month of June there were fourteen baptized in Columbus. Two adults were baptized in the West Mission, and two adults were baptized as the direct result of the work of Missionary Loyd Adams in a number of cottage meetings the first two weeks of June.—Reported by PASTOR JOHN E. BOOTH.

HOOD RIVER, OREGON.—This branch enjoyed a special service Friday evening, June 17, when Evangelist J. F. Curtis of Spokane, Washington, was the speaker. The following Sunday, Brother Curtis, District President J. L. Verhei of Portland, and Elder Miles Whiting of Longview, Washington, presided over an impressive service during which four new members, Helen Ekker, Stella Bransky, and Anna Kerwin of Hood River, and Coliste Minor of Dalles Port, Washington, were baptized by Pastor Harry A. Howell. The confirmation service was held in the evening. Following the morning services, a picnic lunch was served and a grand feeling of fellowship was enjoyed by those present.

Pastor Howell also wishes to report that the church building was been much improved and made beautiful through the hard work and cooperation of the Saints. The floors were sanded, carpet purchased, and the exterior painted.—Reported by ELAINE GOLLEHON.

TUCSON, ARIZONA.—Elder Herbert A. Lynn held a successful series of missionary meetings May 15 to 27, after which two were baptized. On Monday evening, June 20, eight children were baptized. The confirmations were on Sunday, June 26.

History - A Witness for God

By Donald Savage

BEFORE ME LIES a large, modern Book of World History. Between the heavy, red covers, its authors have attempted to describe a portion of the actions and decisions of the race in its struggle to subdue the earth. This drama covers the past six or 7,000 years.

I am thankful for the diligence of those relatively few men whose efforts allow us to glimpse something of our fellow beings' past attempts at civilization. If it were not for the patience of historians in all ages, we would know little of what happened before our time. However, it is unfortunate for mankind that the writing of such material and the keeping of such records is left to so few men. The authors of these texts and records are necessarily interpreters of the past. Almost universally they mistakenly interpret religion as a developed fancy or theory which has power to change the courses of men and nations only insofar as men allow it to shape their actions. Thus our modern textbooks utterly disregard the fact that the hand of God has molded the ever-increasing vessel of history from the beginning.

Evidences of this guiding power are not obscure suppositions. They are logical facts open for everyone who will "harken" to see and understand.

Man Begins to Worship

The theory of evolution is used today to explain the presence of life upon the earth. I do not know what degree of truth (if any) underlies the idea. Perhaps much of it did function to bring forth the creatures of the earth. But of this we can be certain: the humans and animals we know are not the result of blind chance or coincidence. Whether they came to exist via evolution or direct creation makes little difference. The important thing to know is that they were created by a mighty hand whose ultimate aim was something higher than to populate this particular speck of the universe.

Man apparently began life six or 7,000 years ago in the basic manner which we live today. This type of living began when he first looked up from the ground and experienced the ability to make choices through his own agency. Then, by the process of trial and error, he learned to know what things he must and must not do to live a more comfortable life. We can imagine how laborious and confused his thoughts must have been, having little past experience upon which to draw for comparison.

Here Is the Writer

Donald Savage, a native of Wilber, Nebraska, received his Bachelor of Science degree in mechanical engineering from the University of Nebraska in June of this year. During the war he was employed by Consolidated Aircraft in San Diego and Martin Aircraft in Omaha. At present he is working with the Nebraska Department of Roads as a roadbed engineer. He holds the office of priest in the church and is especially interested in archaeology and ancient history. Since 1946 he has worked with the young people in Lincoln congregation, serving at various times as Zion's League teacher and youth supervisor. He and Mrs. Savage, the former Joyce Odell Ahrens, celebrated their first wedding anniversary on June 26.

Here is a curious and significant thing. From his earliest beginning, man was possessor of the most magnificent thought ever conceived. He began to recognize that he was not intellectually alone in the universe, but that all about him a hand infinitely greater than his own was working. This almighty power he called God. Before man grasped even the most simple of physical principles about him, he believed in God.

How could the unexperienced mind arrive at such a marvelous concept thousands of years before it recognized the most elementary of physical laws? Why should it expend energy on such a deep thought when the urgent and pressing needs were to secure food, clothing, and shelter? We today cannot begin to comprehend God. With the experience of the ages at our fingertips, we have not improved upon the original concept of God. How did our ancestors achieve this lofty thought?

I believe there can be but one answer. Man did not conceive the idea by himself. The original belief was not founded upon blind probing or experimentation. It came as direct knowledge when God revealed himself to the first man.

Carrying the point a bit further, let us suppose that through some very unusual accident this forefather of ours did just stumble onto the idea of God. How, in the centuries of trials and errors, did the belief survive? In the millions of experimental graspings, those things which proved to be unfruitful were abandoned. Man early learned that he could not eat bark, therefore he stopped trying to do so. He soon learned that to throw stones at a fish the way he captured a rabbit was useless, so he found another method. He was not long in learning that standing before his dwelling place no food in his hands, therefore he ceased to so stand. Would he not have stopped worshipping God also if he had received no comfort or satisfaction in the practice?

Again there can be but one answer. The worship of God had tangible results. The Master touched men with his power in the beginning and continued to influence them throughout the generations. His words taught them the peaceable things of life and encouraged them to continue in the path he designated toward the reward he promised.

The Law of Worship

No practice, other than the endeavor to obtain food, clothing, and shelter, has been more universal among families and nations than the worship of a supreme being. History assures us that virtually all peoples have had in their minds the lofty concept of a higher power than themselves. Whether it was Osiris of the Egyptians, Zeus of the Greeks, the Vedas of India, or Quetzalcoatl of the Aztecs makes little difference. Though their worship was distorted, the fact remains that somewhere, sometime, they or their fathers had contact with God and remembered the experience. Though many of them drifted away from the original teachings and practices, few of them ceased to make some sort of an attempt at continuance of worship. This testimony stands for a witness forever.

To the families and nations who did not pollute his ordinances, God continued to speak. To the degree that they sought for greater light, he granted them light. As a result we now possess the Bible, Book of Mormon, Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and Church History, plus the promise that more Scripture will come forth in due time. No part of these Holy Records has ever been successfully refuted.

This is interesting when viewed in the light of the principles found in a modern study of physics. The science of physics is nothing more than the statement of a collection of laws which have been proved through the experiences and observations of men. Individual principles began as theories—unproved ideas which seemed to explain natural occurrences. As the years went by, the theories were observed to satisfy all new experience and to be in such harmony with previously accepted laws that they in turn came to be known as laws. These laws actually existed from the beginning, it was only through man's recognition of them that they were named as such. Some of the universally accepted laws are:

Boyle's Law of Pressure (1680), Coulomb's Law of Magnetic Force (1780), Galileo's Laws of Falling Bodies (1690), Newton's Laws of Gravitation (1700), and Hooke's Law of Springs (1680).

These men suggested their ideas to the world, and everyday dealings and experience proved them to be true, entirely changeless. These principles are not the proclamations of men; they are eternal forces in the universe.

But there is one principle far older than any of them—a theory that has always stood the closest scrutiny from the most critical of men and experience. This theory is the necessity of worship of the Supreme Being. The "laws" of Newton and Galileo have stood the test of centuries, but the proved theory of worship has stood the test of millenniums. With each new human experience, with the events unfolding as the years slip quietly by, and with every new lifting of the archaeologists spade, its truth is further verified. Is not the necessity of worship of God a law in every sense of the word? Can the railings of men, the snubbing of historians, or the denial of Satan change or nullify this most-proved of laws? They can not. Law was not created by human minds, neither was it written by human hands. Though all else fail, the laws of God can never deviate from their harmony with eternity.

The Necessity of True Worship

Up to this point one all-important aspect of our subject has not been much stressed. This is the necessity for true or pure worship. Adulterated worship loses its effectiveness as the adulteration increases. Eventually only a dead form remains, and the Spirit of God has departed completely.

Our previous premise was that man worshiped in the beginning because the practice brought him tangible results—because his prayers had visible answers. Had they not, he would have ceased to worship.

Christendom today is in quite a different position. The biblical accounts of the Hebrews and early Christians have convinced many that worship is a necessity, and they do perform a sort of ritual. But this is done without ever expecting those tangible receipts of acceptance experienced by biblical peoples. And biblical history, if none other, demonstrates the fruitlessness of worship without faith. In this carelessness, men commit a dreadful sin. They not only cheat their own souls, but also mislead others who are seeking Christ.

The gifts of the gospel (tongues, prophecy, healing, etc.) were not and are not signs following the believer only when he desires that they should follow. First, the true believer desires they follow for a confirmation in his own mind that he is striving in the right path. And second, when these signs do not follow the one who professes to believe, we can rest assured that he is not keeping all of the commandments. To the true and humble seeker, they act as signposts by which he can recognize Christ's church. The plan and purpose of God is to bring about the eternal joy of man. This can be accomplished only when men obey all of God's commandments. He who declares any less than complete obedience to all commandments does not know the Christ.

And now behold I say unto you, that the right way is to believe in Christ, and deny him not; and Christ is the Holy One of Israel: wherefore ye must bow down before him, and worship him with all your might, mind and strength, and your whole soul, and if ye do this, ye shall in no wise be cast out.—II Nephi 11: 55, 56.

too much rain; this leaches the soil, drenches the lime and phosphates off or down into the subsoils, and allows an accumulation of iron and mineral acids. The gray-brown forest soils of the east are lacking in humus, as also are the gray pod-sols of the north. The gray and brown arid soils of the west are rich in lime and alkali, but lack iron and minerals because they do not get enough rain. The black chernozem and prairie soils of the Central States are the best on earth. Here is an equalization of acid, alkali, and humus. Here the rainfall is most abundant during the growing season, yet steady throughout the year. Here the five to seven months growing season permits the harvest of substantial crops. The winter months not only kill off parasites, but also serve to motivate us to lay ahead. These two seasons promote greater activity.

BIRTHS

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Harold A. Decker of Crosswell, Michigan, on July 1, 1949. He has been named David Learmont.

A son, Michael David, was born on April 15 to Mr. and Mrs. David W. Gordon of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. Mrs. Gordon is the former Rosalie B. Hunt of Bellingham, Washington.

DEATHS

FAULKINGHAM.—Charlotte Althea Beal, was born October 31, 1881, at Beals, Maine, and died June 7, 1949, at her home in Jonesport, Maine. She was united in marriage to Maurice Beal in 1895. On October 19, 1908, her husband died, and in the year 1910 she married Nathaniel Faulkingham. She was a good mother to twelve children, one of whom preceded her in death and to three step-children, one of whom preceded her in death. In 1912 she was baptized into the Reorganized Church in which she was a faithful and loyal member until her death. Before moving to Jonesport, Mrs. Faulkingham lived at Beals for many years, and there she will long be remembered for her kindness and willingness to help the sick and others in need. She is survived by four sons: Maurice Beal, Harvey, Orville, and John Faulkingham; seven daughters: Mrs. Greta Lenfestey, Mrs. Hattie Woodward, Mrs. Charlotte Burke, Mrs. Etelka Faulkingham, Mrs. Genevieve Lamson, Mrs. Winona Bubar, and Mrs. Marie Beal; two stepsons: Luther and Ira Faulkingham; and three brothers: Charles Henry, Nehemia, and Napoleon Beal.

Funeral services were conducted by Elder Donald E. Harvey of Jonesport in the Reformed Baptist Church at Beals. Interment was in the cemetery at Beals.

ADAMS.—Mary Jacobs, was born on November 10, 1875, at Pearsall, Texas, and died June 9, 1949, at her home in Pearsall, Texas. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church and was a faithful member throughout her life. She was married to William A. Adams, October 9, 1894, and to this union eight children were born, five of whom survive.

Surviving are two sons: Cecil Adams of Pearsall and Luther Adams of Hebronville; three daughters: Mrs. Alfred Malone and Mrs. Sid Simpson of Pearsall and Mrs. Theodore Dorow of Houston; two step-daughters: Mrs. Lula Forester Wright of San Antonio and Mrs. Jim McWhorter of Pearsall; ten grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Pearsall Methodist Church, Elder Joseph L. Berry officiating. Interment was in the Pearsall cemetery.

KEMP.—James F. was born September 13, 1892, at Trinidad, Colorado, and died May 20, 1949, at his home in Springfield, Missouri. His family lived in Colorado until 1911, when they moved to Springfield, Missouri. He was a member of the Reorganized Church, having been baptized at Delta, Colorado, when thirteen years old. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1923. He was also a Master Mason. His first occupation in Springfield was with the Martin Music Company. Later he became affiliated with the Herts Stores and continued with that firm for the last twenty-nine years of his life.

He is survived by his wife, Mary; a daughter Mrs. Mary Frances Fuhrman of Roseville, California; a son, James, who is a missionary in Hilo, Hawaii; a step-daughter, Mrs. R. A. Powers, and a step-son, Lawrence H. O'Donnell, both of Springfield; a brother, Emory Kemp of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; and three granddaughters, one of which was born to his son James and his wife in Hawaii two days after his death. Funeral services were conducted by Elder F. M. Bishop, pastor of the Reorganized Church in Springfield, Missouri. Interment was in the Greenlawn Cemetery at Springfield.

THEYS.—Frank Albert, son of Frank and Jennie Theys, was born May 28, 1886, in Spring Valley, Illinois, and died June 29, 1949, at the Independence Sanitarium following a heart attack. He was married to Zella Elizabeth Cummings; three children were born to them. One son, Frank Albert, Jr., preceded him in death. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on March 17, 1929, at Mulberry, Kansas.

He is survived by his wife, Zella, of the home; a daughter, Miss Flora Theys, also of the home; a son, Seventy Eugene A. Theys of Rotterdam, Holland; two brothers: Edward Theys of Armour, Kansas, and August Theys of St. David, Illinois; two sisters: Mrs. Anne Cimoto of Seattle, Washington, and Mrs. Elsie Peroglio of Girard, Kansas; and two grandchildren. Services were conducted by Elders William Bath and Glaude A. Smith at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LANHAM.—Susan Lavenia daughter of William S. and Lydia Ann McMullin, was born June 20, 1870, at Woodfield, Ohio, and died July 1, 1949, at the Independence Sanitarium. She moved to Independence in 1876 and was one of the pioneers of the church in this city. On July 5, 1888, she was married to Francis Marion Lanham; eleven children were born to them. Mr. Lanham, one son, and one daughter preceded her in death. She attended the old Brick Church in Independence and was baptized on July 10, 1887. Throughout her active life she served in the women's department, working in her later years at the Campus Shop. From November, 1948, until her death, she made her home at Rest Haven.

Surviving are six sons: Elmer and Paul of Independence; Raymond F. of Indianapolis, Indiana; John R. of Kansas City, Missouri; Marion F. of Kearney, Missouri; and Charles H. of San Francisco, California; three daughters: Mrs. I. V. LaRue of Old Ocean, Texas; Mrs. H. D. McDonald of Louisville, Kentucky; and Mrs. Robert W. Cox of Detroit, Michigan; nine grandchildren; two great-grandchildren; and a sister, Mrs. L. A. Haldeman of Los Angeles, California. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Funeral Chapel, Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

FLANDERS.—LeRoy Franklin, was born April 15, 1885, and died July 5, 1949, at Odessa, Missouri. He was baptized on September 14, 1897, by Elder John Terry at Maysville, Missouri, and confirmed by Elder J. T. Kinnaman and J. W. White. He was married on December 25, 1905.

Surviving are his wife, Matilda Elvira of the home in Odessa; a daughter, Mrs. Marvin Adams of Ft. Worth, Texas; and two brothers: C. M. Flanders of Kansas City, Missouri, and Louis Flanders of Denver, Colorado. Elder Landsberg conducted the funeral service. Burial was in the Odessa cemetery.

INGERSOLL.—Carrie E., was born December 19, 1877, in Grand Manon, New Brunswick, and died January 30, 1949, at South Addison, Maine. She was married to Herbert Ingersoll on November 16, 1898, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on November 20, 1900.

She is survived by her husband; four children: Alma Thompson, Carrie Francis, Herbert and George Ingersoll; nine grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Almer Sheehy at the Reynolds Chapel. Burial was in the Winthrop cemetery.

 THE ORGAN-GRINDER

You may remember the affair ("Good Intentions," P. S. of June 13) of the paper weight. Now it has arrived. Viola, who has a kind heart and a gift shop in Portland, sent it. It is a glass globe, with a ceramic organ-grinder and his small simian companion perched astride his instrument, inside. When you shake it, a snow-storm swirls around the pair like a miniature blizzard, duration thirty seconds. In their tiny world they symbolize many things: the hunger of the body for food, the yearning of the spirit for beauty; the fondness of man for a pet animal, the loyalty of the beast to his master; and their sharing of peril together when storms blow bitterly around them.

My paper weight brings back memories of a happy poem by Alfred Noyes, "The Organ-Grinder," which begins with the lines:

There's a barrel-organ caroling across a golden street,

In the City when the sun sinks low,
And the music's not immortal, but the world has made it sweet,
And fulfilled it with the sunset glow. . . .

Reflecting the changing moods of the organ, the poem says:

And now it's marching onward through the realms of old romance,
And trolling out a fond familiar tune,
And now it's roaring cannon down to fight the King of France,
And now it's prattling softly to the moon.

Read all of that poem some day, and let it fill your heart up to the brim. The organ-grinder evokes memories of childhood, with swart mustachioed men and red-jacketed monkeys scrabbling for pennies in the dust, and a strong touch of nostalgia with them. . . . The snowstorm is a cool sight for the imagination on a hot summer day.

 CIVILIZATION WEIGHS EIGHT POUNDS

As you dress for church or Sunday school, sir, you may consider yourself a civilized man and a Christian gentleman. Tell us now, How civilized are you?

Weigh yourself at home on the bathroom scale just after your morning shower. There you stand, a net two hundred pounds of flesh and bone, with hardly any difference between you and your Stone Age ancestors. Except for a shave and a haircut, you may be as primitive and barbaric as the earliest man in the world.

Then you dress and weigh again. Gross weight, 208, including clothes, shoes, coins, keys, pencils, identifications, and common pocket junk. What does civilization weigh? The scale says eight pounds, a scant 4 per cent. Now, sir, How civilized are you? . . . Eight pounds to civilize a man; but only four to civilize a woman!

 ARRANGEMENT

There is nothing exclusive about writing. Every typewriter has the same letters, and the dictionary makes the same words available to everybody. It is simply a matter of arranging them. . . . There is nothing exclusive about painting. Anybody can buy the same colors, the same kind of canvas. It is simply a matter of arrangement. . . . There is nothing exclusive about a happy, successful life. We all have the same elements to live with. It is only a matter of arranging them. For the basis of life essentially is an agreement of the soul with God.

Here is hour after hour of fascinating diversion for children of every age, and parents, too. These wonderful lifelike full color pictures seem so real it's easy to imagine a magic carpet has actually whisked you away to one enchanted spot after another. Every Stori-View combines the marvels of 3-dimension color photography with a story that tells all about every beautiful subject or scene. There are views of America's most famous natural wonders and foreign ones everyone hopes to see. There are scenes depicting the best known Bible stories and startling pictures of many strange and surprising animals and flowers. Stori-Views and the Stori-Viewer are perfect for turning periods of dull teaching into exciting adventure. They make ideal gifts for growing, curious boys and girls. Stori-Views are appreciated, inexpensive and sturdy.

Stori-Viewer

Reunion Joys

News & Notes

OUR COVER PICTURE brings the thought of reunions, common to all parts of the church, into focus. As this issue of the Herald reaches you, the season is at its height. The Tiona Reunion (cover picture of the Australasian issue) is always held at Christmas time. But regardless of time or place, reunions have done good things for our people.

An expression frequently heard from reunion-goers each year is, "This is the best reunion we have ever had." Now it is possible for each one to be successively better than the last, but it is more likely that other factors enter into the judging. Our most recent experience has ministered to our immediate needs, therefore these satisfactions loom larger than any others. Fortunately, memory is short and present enjoyment carries a larger and more brilliant halo.

The old "camp meetings" of a generation or two ago had their glories, but they overemphasized the importance of the "meetin's" and failed to minister to the social nature of men. The living together, the union of kindred spirits, the recreation, the participation in classes and worship projects of a reunion go far beyond the emotional stress of the camp meeting type. It is too bad that such things as tending crops, attendant costs, and vacation schedules should make it impossible for some to attend who need the reunion experience most.

Introducing...

GEORGE BAIER (page 5) was born May 22, 1904, at Nurnberg, Germany, where he was graduated from high school in 1921. He continued college work in his home town from 1921 to 1924, majoring in languages and economics. He took graduate work in London, majoring in advertising and economics in 1927.

In 1928 he was married to Emmy Braun in London, England. They have one daughter fourteen years old.

Brother Baier was in the advertising and marketing business in Nurnberg from 1921 to 1926. For the next thirteen years he was so employed in London; and from 1939 to 1944 he followed this business in Berlin. During 1944 and 1945 he was interpreter for the German army. In 1946 he returned to Nurnberg, and from that date on has been in the advertising business there.

He was baptized in 1948, and has recently been ordained an elder. He is now pastor of our church in Nurnberg.

HUBERT CASE (page 8) last wrote for the Herald in the issue of April 9, in which issue he was introduced.

JOSEPH E. BALDWIN (page 6) was born January 31, 1917, at Oak Lawn, Illinois. He was graduated from high school in Pensacola, Florida, in 1935, and from Graceland College in 1937. He received his bachelor's degree from the University of Kentucky in 1942, majoring in business administration and economics.

Brother Baldwin was on a two-year missionary appointment term following his graduation from Graceland. He then worked for two years as auditor for a distributing company. After his graduation from the university, he was employed by a telephone company until he went under appointment again in April, 1942, to the Southern States Mission. In 1943 he was sent to Portland (Oregon) District; in 1944 he was ordained a seventy and sent as a missionary to Chicago where he labored until October of 1948. He was ordained a high priest in April, 1947. At last General Conference he was ordained a bishop and appointed to the Ontario (Canada) District.

He married Lanita Fern Seaton on June 4, 1943. They have two children: Charles Stanley, 4, and Kenneth Neal, 1.

Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley Dies

After several weeks' illness at the Sanitarium, Brother Gunsolley was called to his eternal rest this morning, July 25, at the age of 87. He served as faculty member or officer of Graceland College for forty years.

Kansas District Reunion Closes

The Kansas District Reunion closed July 10, having an average daily attendance of between eighty-five and ninety. Apostle Reed M. Holmes, director of the reunion, reports that it was a "good reunion." There was present an excellent spirit of co-operation and responsiveness to the message of the reunion, "Witness for Christ." Apostle Holmes was assisted by District President Elbert A. Schmidt and his counselors, Clyde Shannon and Myron LaPointe, all of Wichita. There were classes for all age groups, with various forms of recreation. A textile painting class for women was taught by Mrs. Beulah Fitzgerald and Mrs. W. B. Kelley of Arkansas City. Children's activities were under the general supervision of Mrs. Myron LaPointe. A short program and handcraft exhibit was given Saturday evening. Myron LaPointe instructed the Men's Class. His theme was "Each One Win One." Elder J. D. Anderson taught the women's class, and Apostle Holmes taught the Zion's League class. Bishop Earl Higdon from Far West Stake taught a general class on the subject, "Our Stewardships of Evangelism." Mrs. Lindon Robinson of Wichita was the music director. Boy Scout Troop 25 of the Wichita Branch camped at reunion. One of the high points of their week was an overnight hike, during which they saw some deer.

June Baptisms

President Edwards reports that there were 554 baptisms so far recorded at the office of statistics for the month of June. Of this number, 296 were counted as Children's Day baptisms. There were seven sets of twins baptized, and five sets blessed.

"Nomi" Russell Makes Extended Trip

Mrs. Naomi Russell, assistant to the managing editor of the Herald, and editor of New Horizons, known at the Herald House as "Nomi" returns August 1 from a three weeks' trip through the northwest with her husband, Orrin, and their two children, June and Ronnie, a camera and a yen now satisfied, to see some of the "regions 'round about."

New Churches in Hawaii

The General Church has authorized the purchase of a quonset church in a suburb of Hilo, Hawaii, by the Waitkea Kai congregation. This group is four miles from the church in Hilo. The congregation is comprised of about eighty young Japanese who became members of the church through the instruction of Latter Day Saint teachers in the schools. Most of these young people are between the ages of fourteen and eighteen. This year they gave up their youth camp, so that the money might be used for the new church. James Kemp is the missionary at Hilo.

Apostle Charles Hield reports the Kalihi congregation in Honolulu, Oahu, Hawaii, has bought a fine piece of ground and is moving its church from its former location to the new plot. A new church building is also being planned, to make a total of three buildings on the church plot. This fast-growing congregation is made up of young people, mostly married with families, between the ages of twenty and thirty-five. It is the second church in Honolulu. Missionary Howard F. Miller is pastor in Honolulu.

Two Prophecies Concerning “The Elect Lady” Fulfilled

Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, in his sermon at the Stone Church on the “Three Books” on Sunday, July 17, called attention to a prophecy given in 1830, found in Doctrine and Covenants 42, when Joseph was instructed as to the revision of the Scriptures:

Thou shalt ask, and my Scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety.

The Lord did not see fit to intrust the Scriptures as he had “appointed” into the hands of those men who attempted to lead Israel astray; but this priceless work was intrusted to Emma Smith, the Elect Lady. To this trust she was faithful, refusing to deliver to the agents of Brigham Young the manuscript or the Bible used by the prophet, Joseph Smith, in this work which he said was a “branch” of his “calling.” All honor to her memory!

And does it not speak volumes that she was given this sacred trusteeship? If those leaders who went West in the 1840’s were the “Lord’s annointed,” as they claimed they were, but which has been disputed with emphasis, why were they denied the privilege of guarding these possessions! The answer is not hard to find.

In section 24 of the Doctrine and Covenants, this promise was given to the prophet’s wife: “I will preserve thy life, and thou shalt receive an inheritance in Zion.”

Nauvoo was designated as a part of Zion, and Emma did have an inheritance, living there to the end of her long life and dying there. This “inheritance” passed on to her children, men passionately devoted to the church, and in time it has passed into the ownership and possession of the church.

Her life truly was preserved, in spite of that fraudulent document by which Utah, by allegiance to its terms, substituted a “new covenant” for the gospel in its purity, in which Emma would be “damned” if she did not accede to its unholy provisions. Contrast that false prophecy and its failure of fulfillment as respects Emma with the fate of Brigham Young and associates who were “moved out of their place” in Zion, who turned their backs on the Center Place and the “regions round about”; they even tried to sell the Nauvoo Temple before it was destroyed by fire, giving evidence of the small reverence and regard they had for that unfinished temple.

I commend a reading by all the Saints of Patriarch Ray Whiting’s article in a recent Herald (July 11, 1949) on the subject, “Why I am a ‘Reorganite.’”

In honoring those valiant souls who helped in the Restoration and who kept the faith, let us not forget the one person directly and solely responsible for saving to this church one of the three books—a “three-fold cord is not easily broken,” recalling Elbert’s recent sermon, and a favorite saying of the late President Joseph Smith.

Oscar W. Okerlind Dies

O. W. Okerlind died on Saturday, July 16, 1949, at the Sanitarium. He was a good and faithful man. We shall miss him, but whenever we think of him, we shall be enriched by memories of his unpretentious but steadfast testimony.

Brother Okerlind was a member of the First Quorum of Seventy from the time of his ordination in 1910 until he was relieved of further specific responsibility through his superannuation at the General Conference of 1946. He was therefore one of a noble and notable company much of whose service was given in the days when the church was but ill-equipped to provide for the families of ministers under appointment. Yet he not only served on an extended mission to Sweden, but he returned there for a similar long mission when he and his wife and his daughters knew full well what it meant as he consented to so serve.

The church is rich in many ways.

Not the least significant of these is her memories of great and good witnesses who have borne their testimony honestly and fearlessly and at a sacrifice. I have a feeling that when the great day of resurrection and reunion shall come, O. W. Okerlind, with Glauud Rodger, Charles Wesley Wandell, Rees Jenkins, Joseph Burton, Duncan Campbell, T. C. Kelley, and men of their stamp will be among the happiest and the richest of those present as they greet and are greeted by others who were won through their missionary service.

The passing of a good man is a time for soberness, but it is not a time for unhappiness. In such men the church has registered her victory. In them, at least, we have made our contribution to the kingdom in its eternal aspect, and that contribution is now safe from any assault.

College Student's Conference

A College Students' Conference will be held at the Stone Church in Independence on September 8, 9, and 10. The conference is called under the title "Experiments in Living" and will provide discussion of the problems of vocational choices and training for college students in relation to the purpose and program of the church. The program includes round-table sessions, devotions, inspirational talks, and tours and exhibits concerning the Center Place and its historical background. There will be many opportunities for informal counseling with general church officers, and it is earnestly expected that an increased understanding and devotion among all participants will point toward a solution of some of the difficult problems confronting the church.

The conference is intended primarily for church members who were enrolled in college last spring or will be this fall. Other persons especially interested will be welcomed. A detailed announcement including the daily program and information regarding housing and meals during the conference will appear in an early issue of the Herald, and will be mailed together with a report of the committee on Ministry to College People to all student members and to all others who send an inquiry to L. O. Brockway, Chemistry Department, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan.

UNDERWOOD, IOWA

I HAD THE PRIVILEGE of attending the special services held at the Underwood, Iowa, church on Sunday, June 12.

En route to Council Bluffs on Saturday, I had the pleasure of visiting with Seventy Harold Velt on his way to Dunlap.

I was met at "the Bluffs" and taken through a wonderful agricultural region to the small town of Underwood by Elder David Carlile, pastor.

Here our energetic Saints have entirely remodeled their old building, for Underwood is one of the oldest branches in Western Iowa. The present building is quite complete, almost wholly new in appearance, with ample room for a growing congregation.

The branch historian has sent us an account of the special services, which is as follows:

Sunday, June 12, 1949, was a memorable day for the North Star Branch at Underwood, Iowa, for it was then that the remodeled church was first opened officially by an all-day service.

This was the culmination of an ambition of long standing to have a church building which could accommodate the growing congregation as well as provide a suitable gathering place for social affairs, dinners, banquets, etc.

Over a period of years, all efforts had been made toward that goal and it was with pardonable pride that the Saints opened their building for inspection.

At the 9:45 a.m. devotional service, inspirational testimonies were given, bearing out the theme, "In the house of the Lord our God I will seek thy Spirit." District President Peter H. Heuermann presided at this portion of the program. Pastor Dave Carlile read the history of the North Star Branch which was organized in 1860, mentioning those descendants of the pioneers who were present.

The high light of the day came during the 11:00 o'clock service, when President Israel A. Smith gave a most interesting and informative talk on the authenticity of the Book of Mormon.

A basket dinner followed and friends renewed acquaintance with those they had not seen for many years.

In the afternoon, the Cecilian Singers of Council Bluffs entertained with an hour-long concert.

Out-of-town visitors were present from Lamoni, Independence, Manning, Council Bluffs, Tabor, and Avoca.

Here I met new friends and some old ones; among them were Brother and Sister Israel Carlile, Orris A. Currie, and several members of the Harding family of Council Bluffs.

Brother Carlile took me to the Burlington station at Council Bluffs, and at 9:00 o'clock I was back in Kansas City.

How We Found the Church

By GEORGE G. BAIER

THERE ARE OCCASIONS in everyone's life when he feels the presence of Divinity very strongly. As long as one lives uneventfully along accustomed lines, the danger of being easily satisfied exists. Most people do no actual wrong and behave quite decently generally, yet they pay too much attention to materialistic aims and often neglect ethical qualities.

I do not think I ever intentionally harmed anybody. I believed in God, but I seemed to get along quite well without going too deeply into the religious side of life.

The war and its aftermath created situations in which many people suddenly realized the inadequacy of human nature. When man-made destruction was let loose upon humanity and individuals felt their helplessness, many in such moments prayed to their Heavenly Father. I realize that events which looked blackest to me in those days were the most fortunate turning points in my life. I began to think of such basic problems as, Where does guilt commence? Where does it end? Is the human mind not presumptuous in attempting to analyze destiny? Clearly, the future would be decided by the kind of seed sown into the tired hearts of millions after disillusion, hardship, and horror. In danger and nearness of death I had felt God's guiding hand, and I had gained the conviction that only true religion could solve those problems which puzzle the world; yet I seemed to wait without doing anything about it.

Then, on a wet, cold Sunday morning in January, 1948, while my family and I were having a belated breakfast, there was a ring at our front door. When we went to answer it, we saw a little middle-aged woman standing there, who looked very tired and worn out. She asked timidly for "an interpreter." She said that two American missionaries had come to visit the Nürnberg Branch of their church and needed an interpreter, as none of the members of the group could understand English. She had been going through the whole town in search of one, but, its being Sunday morning, she had found all offices closed. At last somebody had given her our address, and there she was, imploring us to come and help them.

This was somewhat of a quandary to us for several reasons. First of all, neither my wife nor I had ever interpreted a sermon, and this appeared a difficult matter. Second, we had all been looking forward to a nice, quiet Sunday at home after the week's toil. I thought I would not be able to do it, so I refused. But my wife was more confident. This is her story:

SOMETHING seemed to urge me: "Go, do it!" And in spite of all reasoning, this inward voice would not be silenced. So I went.

I got to the little meeting place long after the service had started. It was a small congregation, and the surroundings were unimpressive. But what I heard soon touched me so that I forgot my surroundings and my qualms about making mistakes in translating. I promised to be back for the afternoon service, and when service was over, I had a long talk with the two missionaries—Apostle Myron McConley and Seventy Eugene Theys. The next day my husband came too, and before we parted from these ministers that night, we had agreed to translate one of the church tracts during our spare time. Brother Theys had given us his own personal copies of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants for this purpose.

SO WE SET TO WORK, and the more we read and studied, the more we were convinced that this was what we had unconsciously been looking for. Brother Theys provided us from time to time with more material for translation. I do believe now that he was less concerned about getting the work done than he was about making us go right into every detail of the church's teachings.

We were impressed with the simplicity, the straightforwardness, the sincerity of the principles. But even so, we still had doubts. When Brother Theys again came to Nürnberg in May, we plied him with endless questions. The answers he gave us stilled our doubts. So on May 13 he deferred his departure from Nürnberg for a day because we felt we were ready for baptism. It was a bright, sunny day when Brother Theys called for us in his car. We drove out to the little place in the neighborhood of Nürnberg, where Nürnberg Latter Day Saint baptisms take place. The ceremony will be a lasting memory for both of us. The serenity of it all, the countryside, the flowing river, the wonderful words he spoke, the Saints gathered around us in a circle, and the climax—the baptism itself. We felt

The Meaning of Priesthood

IF WE ARE TO FUNCTION in the priesthood to the best of our ability, we must understand what priesthood means. The following definitions may be helpful:

1. Priesthood, as I understand it, means the right, the authority, the divine commission to represent God and administer in the ordinances of the gospel.

2. A member of the priesthood is a person set apart for the performance of sacrifice and other offices and ceremonies of religion. (Buck Theological Dictionary, page 369.)

3. According to the Old Testament, those called to the priesthood fulfilled a threefold function. They presented the sacrifices of the people to God, they inquired his will, and they were the guardians and keepers of the law. (F. H. Edwards in Fundamentals, page 61.)

4. Authority is essential to the successful carrying out of every scheme devised among men, either for their good or evil, to benefit or to injure. Priesthood is but another name for authority and should mean an intervening power. The priesthood signifies a body of men rightfully holding power to administer in the name of Jesus Christ for the conferring of spiritual blessings upon people. (Priesthood Journal, January, 1938, page 14.)

5. Office in the church of Christ is not conferred to distinguish or increase the importance of the person on whom it is conferred, but to accomplish certain results designed in the institution and establishment of the church. All officers in the church come properly under the head of the Melchisedec or the Aaronic priesthood. (Ibid., April, 1938, page 63.)

THE DEVELOPMENT OF PRIESTHOOD

Men are called to the ministry because there is a need among the people from whom they were called.

The ministry they perform should fill this need, for without it there would be no call.

We are not devoting ourselves here to some narrow concept of ministry. Ours is a profession which calls for more than the lesser ministries that on occasion are required in the day-to-day life of a people. Ours is a profession having its roots deep down in the life of our people, with a view to molding them and leading them in clear thinking, in righteous living, in capability to achieve, and in achieving the full purpose of the Restoration. It has a view to leading them in physical, moral, intellectual, cultural, and spiritual life toward Christlike character. It is a proselyting force carrying the gospel to every nation and people, and in every tongue. (Pastor's Manual, page 30.)

It is the task for each man who has been called upon to bear the responsibilities of priesthood to apply himself in prayer, to meditate, to study, to observe, and to do such as he may be permitted in active ministry toward the development of powers of serving both the Saints and the cause. (Ibid., page 30.)

If one becomes proficient as a minister to his people, he must study his work in the matter of its practical application. He must study methods and apply them, whether in preaching, teaching, or visiting. He must qualify for a practicable service to the people. One becomes most proficient in service to others as he gives himself at his best in service to them. (Ibid., page 32.)

Basic in the development of priesthood is the development of character:

1. One must be a good man.
 - a. There is no substitute for righteousness.
 - b. The effectual minister is right at heart; therefore, he is right in thought and deed—a potent force among his people.
2. One must be sincere.
 - a. For his own best efforts and for

By JOSEPH E. BALDWIN

- best appeal to his constituency.
- b. He is genuinely for his people and his cause.
3. One must have convictions—
 - a. About God and his purpose in human experience.
 - b. About man's worth-whileness and his potentiality.
 - c. About the church and agency.
 - d. About the Restoration Movement.
 4. One must be susceptible to the Christian emotions.
 - a. He must hate sin for what it is and what it does to his people.
 - b. He must love righteousness for what it is.
 5. One must be master of himself if he leads others.

Character is vital to a man's ministry; without it, he will fail. (Ibid., page 33.)

THE FUNCTION OF PRIESTHOOD

To understand the function of priesthood, we must understand the importance and place of it in God's work. Paul said, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers."—I Corinthians 12: 28. We have learned that whenever God does anything, there is always an important purpose behind it. In finding out his purpose in priesthood, we shall be made able to understand its significance and meaning. (Priesthood Journal, October, 1943, page 27.)

In latter-day revelation, Jesus says:

And this greater priesthood [Melchisedec] administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God. Therefore, in the ordinances thereof, the power of godliness is manifest; and without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh; for without this, no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live.

Continuing, he says that the lesser priesthood (Aaronic). "holdeth the key of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel, which gospel is the gospel of repentance and baptism, and the remission of sins." (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4, 3.)

God has chosen priesthood as the only means of administering the gospel that the power of godliness and salvation might be manifest to man.

Priesthood is of vital importance to us. It is important that we understand its meaning, and it is more important that the men who hold offices in the ministry function as God intended, for the salvation of the human race depends upon it.

Priesthood responsibility deserves serious consideration. To be a representative of the eternal God and minister the ordinances of the kingdom is indeed a high and holy calling. It is responsibility rather than honor that we should consider when accepting calls to the priesthood.

Priesthood is a permanent calling: "Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever." — Ecclesiastes 3: 14. In speaking of one who accepts the priesthood, Jesus says that he accepts an "oath and covenant of my Father which he cannot break, neither can it be moved; but whosoever breaketh this covenant, after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor the world to come."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 6. There can be no turning back after one accepts the oath and covenant of the priesthood without forfeiting his right to salvation, and that price is too great to pay. On the other hand, there is a beautiful part to the nature of the everlasting covenant: so long as men function in the priesthood in the way God intends, he has pledged salvation to those to whom they minister.

God has also placed upon those of the ministry the tremendous responsibility of watching over and feeding the flock. Jesus emphasized the importance of this task when he asked Peter, "Lovest thou me?" And when Peter answered, "Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee," Jesus said, "Feed my sheep." Three times this question was repeated. If such were true in Peter's case, then it is likewise true in the case of every minister of Christ. A minister's love for God can be measured only by a willingness to feed the people God loves and has entrusted to the shepherd's care. Priesthood, then, means above all other things a passion and love for the souls of men. It was God's great love for men that made salvation possible, and if his servants fail in love, they fail in everything. Because of his great love for men, the man who truly accepts his priesthood is willing to lay his life on the altar of service that these men might live. (Priesthood Journal, October, 1943, pages 27-33.)

OURS IS A MINISTRY based on an authority broader than the legal right of the call to serve. It is a ministry requiring also the moral right to serve in the stead of and to speak for God; it is the authority of righteousness; it is the authority of sincerity. But it is also the authority of devotion, of clear vision, of sound judgment, and the wise and just administration of affairs in the kingdom of God.

Ours is a ministry calling for understanding, consideration, wholeheartedness—a manhood yet to be fully attained in this dispensation. Ours it is, therefore, to grow a priestly man of worthiness and of capability to lead the Saints in growing life, even to Zion, and back again into the world in moving testimony of the grace of the gospel to save.

Offers Room for Missionaries

Any of the priesthood who may come to Freesoil, Michigan, are invited at any time to have the use of my apartment there. We at Freesoil are left with only one priesthood member who lives in Scottsville, a neighboring town. His work makes it difficult to carry regular church responsibility.

I have been a reader of the Herald for many years, and could not do without such a help in my daily life. Everything in it is food for the soul. My companion died in March, and I am alone, yet I feel that God is good to me.

A Letter From Germany

Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Brooks of Lamoni, Iowa, have been sending boxes of food to a Latter Day Saint family, the Karl Schreibers, in Germany. In addition to their two sons, the Schreibers have taken a girl from Berlin into their home because they receive extra food from America. Excerpts from their most recent letter, translated by Joe Bergman of Graceland College, follow:

Dear Friends,

Thank you most sincerely for your letters. It pleases us much that you have received our pictures. We are indebted to you for the health of our children and to the brothers and sisters in America for what has been done for us here. Express to our prophet our special thanks. May God give him health and keep him for a president very long. You must be happy to have him in your midst. We are more or less isolated here. There are many Catholics, but they do not understand our way of thinking.

What kind of life we live here you cannot imagine. Everywhere we are opposed because of our belief, but we do not become discouraged because the day of our suffering will soon pass.

I am thirty-nine years old and so is my wife. As I am an invalid and unemployed, life is very tiresome at times. Our sons are eight and ten. The girl is twelve. She is not so well as our boys. In Berlin there is very great distress, so many children have come to our community. The girl will have in our home a second home and, God willing, she also will be healthy soon.

With joy we understand that you are sending us another package. May our Father in heaven reward you for what you are doing for us.

Building on the Rock - By Hubert Case

IN THE CLIMAX of his masterful Sermon on the Mount, as recorded in Matthew 7: 24-27, Jesus gave the parable about building one's house on the rock so that it would withstand all the storms of life. Those who do not keep the commandments are building their houses on the sand. Their houses will fall, because they cannot withstand the storms of life. In sixty years of intensive work for the Master, I have learned that these teachings of our Savior are true and worth more than all the teachings of men; while those who want their own way had better consider Isaiah 55:8: "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord."

I have used this illustration in talking with the Utah people, especially their missionaries, to get them to see the value of the teachings of Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1-3, showing who has followed God's way and his law as to the successor to Joseph the Martyr, for Joseph Smith III was appointed by his father, and Frederick M. Smith by his father, according to the law. The Lord said in the first two paragraphs of this passage, which he gave to be a law to the church, in order that its members might not be deceived that we may know any revelations and commandments given through other channels are not of the Lord. This infallible rule must stand.

I was once told of a Utah elder in Mounds, Oklahoma, who operated a lumber yard, so I went to see him. He was a fine man and said he was glad to meet me—the first elder representing this church he had ever met. He requested that I keep quiet while he told me why he was a Mormon, which I did. His last statement was, "I can't see where you fellows come in."

I replied, "That is my job." I just read him the following:

O hearken, ye elders of my church, and give ear to the words which I shall speak unto you: for, behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me.

But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed.— Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1, 2.

AS SOON as I finished reading this, I said there was never any man who claimed that Joseph Smith appointed and blessed him for this purpose except his son, Joseph. I told him that my people witnessed that blessing given before the congregation in Nauvoo. My grandparents were baptized by Oliver Cowdery near Independence on his first missionary trip there. They were with the Saints who were driven out of Jackson and Clay Counties and the state of Missouri. My grandfather worked with Joseph Smith for two years. He saw Joseph bless his son to be his successor just before he was killed and heard him say, "If anyone asks who my successor is, here he is with you today." I heard my grandfather tell this many times. He died at the Saints' Home in Lamoni at the age of 97. I concluded, "Can you see now where we come in?" He asked if that were in his Doctrine and Covenants, and I said, "Yes, the same section number, and the same identical wording." His reply was, "According to that we are as bad off as my hired man would be if I fired him." I said, "That is exactly where you stand." Then I cited Doctrine and Covenants 107: 18, wherein the Lord said,

... and as I said unto Abraham concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, In thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed.

And the Lord has said, "No one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love."— Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4. God has settled this question of lineal priesthood once and for all time in Section 43, and made it a fundamental law, for paragraph three says that the elders should counsel together on all things pertaining to Joseph's successor and the running of the church according to the law:

And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church how to act upon the points of my law and commandments, which I have given; and thus ye shall become instructed in the law of my church.—Ibid., 43: 3.

I HAVE ANSWERED the Utah people everywhere I have gone with these quotations which will stand any test. Let us appreciate what the Lord has given in these commandments and instructions, as well as the rest of his law, and be law-abiding citizens.

Here is one more beautiful reference:

And the Redeemer shall come to Zion and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; my Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever.— Isaiah 59: 20, 21.

Here, in effect, is a summing up

Denver Builds a Church - By Golde R. Bell

ON THE FIRST SUNDAY MORNING in April, 1949, we of Denver Branch held official opening services in our new church building at East Fifth Avenue and Marion Street in Denver, marking, we hope, a real quickening of growth and expansion of our work in this region.

Moving into this new home and looking forward to the opportunities and enjoyment to be afforded by the enlarged and increased facilities, we also take a look backward over the course of events that have brought us to this point.

Several still are among us who recall that tenth day of November, 1889, when fourteen charter members met for organization as a branch in the living room of the Otto W. Westland home at 1119 Cherokee Street. It still stands within a stone's throw of the United States Mint and the Municipal Building.

That organization was the direct result of the efforts of Apostle James Caffall, missionary-in-charge; James Kemp, missionary; and E. F. Shupe, teacher, who, for many months prior, had combined their efforts to locate and bring together the few scattered families of the church in this territory. Walking was the principal means of travel in those early days, and direct contact or very slow mail the principal means of communication. All of which means that this task consumed much more of time and effort than most of us today can fully appreciate.

Members present at that first meeting were: Otto A. Westland, priest; his wife, Martha Westland; and his son and daughter, Ellen and Fred Westland; Walter Menzies, teacher, and his wife, Catherine Menzies; Benjamin J. Spruce (ordained a deacon at that meeting) and his wife, Rosa Spruce; Lois A. DeWitt; Mary Jamison; Mary Lewis; E. F. Shupe (ordained an elder at that meeting) and his two sons, Leo and Homer Shupe.

Still living in Denver are Benjamin and Rosa Spruce, both now incapacitated by age and unable to attend services, Homer and Leo Shupe; the latter is branch treasurer at present.

Of the ten enrolled as charter members (but who did not attend the organization meeting) only Sister Ella L. Brannan survives. She served for many years as church school director, and, now in her eighties, she is still an active member. Her long years of devotion and faithful service, her regular attendance, and lively interest combine to make her an inspiration to all.

THE MEETING PLACES of Denver Branch have been several. For the first few months, all services were held in private homes. Then, Euclid Hall, the Masonic Lodge room in a building on Fourteenth Street opposite the old Denver City Hall, was rented for Sunday services, and, later, for Wednesday evening prayer meetings.

Still later, services were held in G. A. R. Hall. Here it was that Denver Branch was visited by Apostle T. W. Smith on his return from the South Sea Island Mission, and also by Joseph Luff, Alexander H. Smith, and "Young Joseph" Smith.

Subsequently, our church home was University Hall (now the Keith Building) at Fourteenth and Arapahoe Streets, then in a hall on the top floor of the old Charles Building at Fifteenth and Curtis Streets. Other meeting places were a little German Lutheran Church at Twenty-sixth and Lawrence Streets, a store-room at 2444 Washington Street, the First Reformed Church near Twenty-fifth and Ogden Street, and, finally, the little church at Twenty-second and Arapahoe. This served as our church home for several years prior to and during construction of our own church building at Logan Street and Speer Boulevard, which was first occupied in 1909.

For nearly forty years this little Tudor-Gothic building housed the meetings of Denver congregation—forty years of good times and bad; forty years of work; forty years with their full quota of sorrows, joys, disappointments, and achievements; but withal forty years of steady growth and appreciation. If we could get the "old-timers" together, and they were in a mood for reminiscing, they could tell interesting stories of that period during which the branch grew from a few families to several hundred members, and during which Denver grew from a sprawling, western metropolis into a great city.

BUT TIME MOVES ON, and we come to the new church at East Fifth Avenue and Marion adjoining the Country Club district of Denver. This building was made necessary by the sure and steady growth of our church due largely to the dauntless devotion, unending efforts, and inspiration of such leaders as E. F. Shupe, who served as pastor for many years, and E. J. Williams, his successor, who served as pastor for thirteen years.

Many could be mentioned who have contributed to the development of Denver Branch, but to these two goes a special tribute. They kept the branch alive and growing in both times of ease and times of stress. They gave generously of their time and effort to the church while conducting their own businesses. It was the work of these two, more than of any others, that brought us to the point where the services of a full-time pastor under general church appointment became necessary. Theirs was a heavy task and sometimes a thankless one, but it was willingly, gladly, and thoroughly done.

These men were followed successively by Glaude A. Smith, Arthur E. Stoft, Herbert M. Scott, and Merle E. Howard, general church appointees, each of whom contributed much to the successful forwarding of the work in Denver. It was during the tenure of Merle E. Howard that our new church was built and officially opened.

The first services were held on April 3, 1949, with President Israel A. Smith, Apostle Reed M. Holmes, and District President Houston Hobart in charge.

THE NEW CHURCH BUILDING, planned by Earl Morris, Denver architect, and erected by Bellamy and Williams, contractors, is of Twentieth Century design. It is constructed of concrete, steel, and brick throughout, and is practically fire-proof. Its distinguishing characteristics are its over-all harmony and simplicity of design, and the air of spaciousness throughout. Every area has been carefully planned for free circulation and for multiple use.

The main auditorium, distinctive for its uninterrupted, flowing lines, will seat about three hundred, including the choir. The baptismal font is recessed into the center of the front wall of the main auditorium on a level with the choir area and is to be enclosed with velvet draperies. It is entered from a rear vestibule, which also leads to dressing rooms on the lower floor.

A unique feature is the provision for ample indirect light by the use of louvred clerestory windows which eliminate all glare and its attendant discomfort. All artificial lighting is fluorescent.

The exterior is of red brick. The interior is of pinkish-buff brick except for the two walls of the partition separating the foyer from the main auditorium, which are of hard plaster on metal lath, painted in a harmonizing but darker tone to give an illusion of greater depth.

Decoration has been limited to the velvet draperies enclosing the font and to interior plantings of large texture just inside the main entrance beside the steps leading to the foyer and on both sides of the front of the main auditorium, which give a living atmosphere to the interior. Pews are of elm, and the Communion tables and pulpit are of white oak, all in hand-rubbed light finish.

We shall always hold a feeling of deepest gratitude toward the architect and builders whose vision and skill have brought this structure to completion, as well as toward every member of the congregation whose devotion and sacrifices have provided the inspiration to achieve and the means with which to build.

Some very fine gifts received at the time of our church opening were a large electric refrigerator and the wherewithal to pay for the draperies for the font, both from H. E. Bellamy and Warren Williams (son of E. J. Williams), erectors of the building, and a Baldwin grand piano, the gift of Miss Helen Bonfils, owner and executive of The Denver Post. These add immeasurably to the beauty and the usefulness of the new building.

And now, to our new church home, comes Ward A. Hougas, who already "belongs" to Denver Branch. We welcome him and trust that under his capable leadership we may continue to build our church.

A New Book for the Missionary Sermon Studies

By F. Henry Edwards

Here are helpful foundation materials for fifty sermon topics chosen from among the fundamental doctrinal themes of our church faith and theology. They do not in any sense prescribe the character of the sermon nor limit the preacher. They make available to him, in most convenient form, the kind of texts and leading thoughts that he will need. This new revised edition is improved in many ways.

Choice Above All Other Lands - Part II

THE FAUNA AND FLORA

BY BESSIE TAYLOR

THE BIOTIC FACTORS, vegetable and animal life, are determined generally by the climates, but the specific types are controlled by local factors. Plants group themselves according to their environment into what is termed "climax vegetation." For instance, we say the tropical zone begins where the palm trees appear. The limit beyond their existence is another zone. Practically all soils are adapted to some kind of vegetation. In the scanty populated areas of the earth, the natural vegetation is perhaps the most obvious element of the environment.

The forest is an association of tree plants which occur under a wide range of climatic conditions, but in general are limited to areas whose midsummer temperatures average fifty degrees or above. Rainfall must be in ratio to the heat and evaporation. The forests are fundamental to man's welfare. It is amazing to count up the products that trees make available.

The long grasses that grow in the monsoon tropics and subtropics do support life, but are lacking in vitamins and other necessary elements. Their coarseness prohibits efficient digestion. It is the grasses and cereals of the temperate zones which produce the basis of our food supply.

John E. Weaver, in Plant Ecology, page 460, says:

America best exemplifies this floral form over her great prairies. The railway, the steel plow, and coal have enabled man to conquer the prairies, and they have become the great granaries of the world. . . . The commercial significance of the grassland areas of the world is probably even greater than that of the forests. Whole civilizations have been built on grass as a primary resource. A large percentage of livestock, wool, hides, and other pastoral products which enter trade are creations of the natural vegetation of the world's grassland regions.

ANIMAL LIFE

All human life, in a certain measure, is adjusted to plant and animal life. This relation is very obvious in the uncivilized areas of the earth. Man is the dominant animal organism, although his supremacy is contested by insects and rodents. The native animal life of the world is extremely varied as to size, structure, and appearance. Animals, like plants, depend upon their natural environment, but animals are more fortunate in that they can move about.

Hunting and fishing are perhaps mankind's oldest occupations. They are the mainstays of pioneers. But in the settled regions of the world, the domestic animals play a greater part. Of all the numerous varieties of animals, only a few are regarded beneficial or necessary. South America has found the llama the best, because it can supply "power," clothing, and food. The desert lands have adopted the camel, while in most lands the horse and cow are found superior. Poultry and sheep are widely distributed. America has a big share of fine stock animals.

Only one other place in the world can produce as good a beefsteak as America; that is Argentina. Dr. Kollmorgan points out that this fact is due to both climatical and food factors. He says that while a steer can be made to weigh a thousand pounds in one and a half to two years in Kansas or Missouri, it will take four to five years in Venezuela. As a result, the steak is tough. These runts are the result of the slow tempo of the tropics. The problem of liberating heat from the animal body, and eating grass with little strength and low vitamin power, make animal production a losing business in the tropical countries.

The American way of life is greatly enriched because of domestic animals. These thrive in this country, not alone because we know how to raise them, but because we live in a country where we can afford to have them. Many lands are so overpopulated they cannot afford to feed domestic animals. Two thirds of the world's peoples have an inadequate food supply. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the United States owes her health to the protein production of her animals as well as to the vitamins and elements she derives from her good soils.

THE WATERS

One of the basic factors for biological existence is water. With a range of only 180 degrees, beyond which is either ice or vapor, water is one of the basic climatic elements. No country, for whatever else it may have, can exist long without an adequate water supply.

Water occurs on the surface and in the ground at various depths. The humid regions in many cases have too much rain; the arid regions have a deficiency, and water is very precious. The water table, formed from the water of the upper surface which has gradually seeped downward, is a deep-lying zone of gravitational water which saturates the ground and fills the pores of the subsoil. This water table fluctuates with the rain and man-made causes. This water table can do its most effective work in a soil that is heavy enough to retain moisture and has an accumulation of humus. Humus cannot develop in the tropics nor in the cold climates, but only where the rainfall is moderate and the weather is temperate. Again this brings us to the obvious conclusion that one of the best watered districts in the world is the center of the United States.

The permanency of a water supply seems to be under the direct control of a higher power in the universe than man can explain. The weather factories of the world are often eccentric and unpredictable. W. C. Lowdermilk, in Man Made Deserts, Vol. 8, says:

It has been pointed out that for the most part arid and tropical lands are empty lands. Yet according to archaeologists, the Sahara, Mesopotamia, and Arabia once teemed with human life—lands whose every drop of water and every sign of vegetation are now fought for by small numbers of fierce nomads who eke out a precarious existence. In the Sahara are found ruins of cities and towns, temples, aqueducts, arches, monoliths, monuments, implements, and unearthed cut trees.

Why are these areas, which once supported so many people, now barren and largely deserted? There is no simple answer, of course, but cannot Latter Day Saints guess from the Scriptures, such as sections 22 and 36 in the Doctrine and Covenants, the nature of these causes? Does not this great fact behoove us to live righteously and unselfishly? Should we not be thankful for our blessed land and water supply?

Our great water bodies not only supply the land with moisture but also serve to equalize temperature. The circulation of the water from the steamy tropics to the ices of the Polar North have a great influence upon temperature. The southern coast of Alaska is as warm as Washington, D. C. Below 700 fathoms, the water everywhere is less than forty degrees. It is a theory that this cold floor is caused by the creeping of the polar waters toward the equator. The warm ocean currents moving poleward along the west coasts of continents, and the cool currents moving equatorward along the east sides tend to equalize temperature.

The United States is very fortunate in the arrangements of her location among the great water bodies. The warm currents are friendly to our western coast, while the severity of the cold currents is neutralized by the westerlies that keep the worst effects from our shores. Should our world wind system be reversed, our weather would be much more severe. The Gulf of Mexico is the source of most of our rainfall in the central United States, while Mexico stands as a bar or block to the states north of her.

Our great oceans are not only weather producers, but also highways. Hallbeck in American People, says that one of the determining factors in early American progress was the fact that America was isolated so far from Europe and had a chance to develop her own powers and resources. Today these oceans are not such big barriers, but nevertheless they have tended to keep off invasions. The United States is again highly favored by its location in relation to other peoples.

IN SUMMARY, may we say, not boastfully but humbly, that the United States is the greatest nation in the world. She has few adverse physical conditions, but favorable climates, land forms, soils, minerals, and natural resources. The next question is, How can we help the world? So many blessings we take for granted are unheard of in most parts of the world.

As we take this world view, is it any wonder that God has ordained Zion to be the center of his kingdom, and that righteousness is the price we must pay for citizenship?

Two Good Books – By Louise P. Sheldon

I SHOULD LIKE TO CALL the attention of Herald readers to two excellent books that present much of the archaeological evidence which has come to light in recent years. I refer to Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans by Apostle Paul M. Hanson and America's Lost Civilizations by Harold I. Velt, one of the Presidents of Seventy. They are most attractive books from every angle, both as to the authors' and the printers' work. When you start reading them, you will not stop until you have finished, and then there will be a prayer of thanksgiving in your heart for the testimony the remains of the past afford.

It would be fine for young people to get together in groups to read and discuss these books in connection with the Book of Mormon.

In the Herald for July 4, 1949, under the heading, "News and Notes," we read the following:

"A Dr. Walfoord, M. D., and his wife are much interested and are bringing others out through reading America's Lost Civilizations." By circulating these books, we all can do missionary work.

THE BOOK OF MORMON is not just an incident in Restoration Work. It ushered in this latter day period of the Christian Era. The translation of the ancient record necessitated a seer, and God found one in a simple farm lad, Joseph Smith. Fourteen years after he gave the world this book and established the church, he suffered a martyr's death. But he had been instrumental in God's hands, planting the cornerstone of the work that is designed to prepare the way for the second coming of Christ.

The Book of Mormon is the greatest revelation that has come to man since the advent of Jesus Christ and the compilation of the New Testament. Much that was new in the teachings of the Restoration in the 1830's has become infiltrated in the religious thought and teachings of the present time. The Book of Mormon stands as a monument that cannot be copied or imitated; it is matched in spiritual power only by the Bible. Year by year the ruins of the past are being discovered, and each discovery adds testimony to the integrity of the Book of Mormon. No other book fits them or explains them. Theories are advanced, but none dare to assume to be more than speculation or opinion.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Is it right for Latter Day Saints to allow their boys to play ball on a Sunday and shoot toy guns?

ANSWER:

In these modern times sports have reached a degree of prominence among the people exceeding that of ancient Greece, and their appeal to the youth of the land is very great. By law and custom Sunday is observed as a day of rest from routine toil, though its sacredness as the "Lord's Day" is largely overlooked, inasmuch that it is increasingly being devoted to sports and other forms of pleasure, making it more and more difficult for the youth of the church to avoid being drawn into them.

Arbitrarily forbidding our children to attend or participate in Sabbath sports will not meet the requirements of the case, and may do harm to ourselves and the youth, since such arbitrary action may become an infringement upon their inherent right of free moral agency, with a tendency to arouse resentment and rebellion in them, followed by a willful abandonment to do the very thing we wish them not to do.

Children usually respond sooner or later to a sense of right against wrong, of truth against error, and are generally disposed to consider and regard the will of God. But this they cannot do unless from their earliest years they have been taught by wise precept and godly example to know the truth, and to understand the will of God. If this has been done, then when the vexing exigencies arise, persuasion becomes more effectual in keeping the youth within the bounds of the better way.

Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2, 3, sets forth the exemplary life the Lord requires of his Saints, including a careful and devoted observance of the Sabbath, whereby the day is given to the worship of God, making of adjustments of any wrongs or misunderstandings with God and man, while avoiding all unnecessary labors of a secular nature. It is a day for the offering to God of our sacraments and oblations. In Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4, the Lord specifically charges parents with the responsibility of teaching their children the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ, baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost, and "they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." In this connection he also again charges the Saints to "observe the Sabbath day and keep it holy."

Home teaching from early childhood, whereby the high ideals of the gospel and the knowledge of God are established in the minds of growing children, constitutes the best preparation for their meeting the problems and temptations of life.

As to forbidding the use of toy guns, that seems to be more a matter of judgment and wisdom than of right and wrong. Disposition, environment, and other factors need to be considered.

QUESTION:

1. Did Saul actually converse with Samuel on his visit to the witch at Endor?
2. If so, why do you consider the Lord would permit the witch to be effective, when the other agencies failed Saul? (i. e., "neither by dreams, nor by urim, nor by prophets")

ANSWER:

According to I Samuel 28: 11, I. V. Saul did not ask the witch of Endor to bring up Samuel but to bring up the words of Samuel: "Then said the woman, the word of whom shall I bring up unto thee? And he said, bring me up the word of Samuel."

There is nothing in either the King James Version or the Inspired Version to indicate that Saul saw Samuel, although verse 13 states that Saul perceived that it was Samuel. Perception is a mental process, not necessarily accompanied by a visual support.

The witch of Endor, however, claimed to have seen Samuel, verse 13: "and saw his words coming out of the earth." Witchcraft was considered a baneful influence and was forbidden. (See Deuteronomy 18: 10-12.)

While the witch correctly forecast a future event, that does not indicate that she was aided by the Spirit of God. The woman's claim to having seen Samuel is not corroborated, neither did she claim that her prediction was from a divine source.

Men reasoning from cause to effect, and by weighing all the factors may be able to arrive at proper conclusions and often can predict the future quite accurately.

Personally I do not think that the Lord had anything to do with the prediction of the witch of Endor. The Devil is cunning. His purpose always is to deceive, and sometimes he may resort to telling the truth to lure his unsuspecting victims on.

QUESTION:

When a candidate is baptized, and a little of the forehead fails to go under the water, is the baptism valid?

ANSWER:

This question has resulted on a few occasions when the minister, who was more conscious of the sacramental nature of the ordinance than of the mechanics, inadvertently failed to immerse the candidate totally. The question also has arisen when one's foot may have come to the surface of the water while his head is being immersed; when the long hair of a lady may float on the water while her head is actually a few inches below the surface; or when an excited candidate may raise a finger out of the water during the immersion.

Those who notice and object to these incidents are not finding fault with the sacrament, but with the mechanics attending the ordinance. While it is imperative that we unequivocally adhere to the belief in immersion, we must not become lost to the sense and purpose of the sacrament.

If the one who witnesses such an incident had been standing or seated where he could not see clearly, he would have regarded the candidate as having been properly baptized. In all probability the minister did not notice anything wrong, the candidate was unaware of any mechanical inaccuracy, and God, who knows the heart, must regard the person as having been baptized.

Despite the foregoing, the law directs our belief in total immersion. It must be the intention of the ministers of this church to comply with the letter of the law. Most of the mistakes in the past have been made by men not thoroughly familiar with or poised in administering the sacraments. It is an aim of the church to strive continually for a more proficient ministry.

I LEARN OF JESUS

SEPTEMBER 4, 1949

Theme: I SIT AT HIS FEET

Prelude

Scripture:

I waited patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry. And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise, unto our God; many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the Lord. Blessed is that man that maketh the Lord his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies. Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderful works which thou hast done. I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart.—Psalm 40: 1, 3, 4, 8.

Hymn: "I Have Found the Glorious Gospel," Saints' Hymnal, No. 408, stanzas 1 and 2.

Poem:

My little taper of desire
I fain would light at thy great fire;
And where the grander flames are wrought,
Oh, kindly Savior, quench it not.

My little cup of faith I bring
To fill at the eternal spring;
With many vessels lifted up,
O Jesus, take this little cup.

And deign, O Lord of Love, to see
The humble gift I offer thee;
Thou who love's pure essence art,
Accept the treasure of my heart.

Story-Talk: I SIT AT HIS FEET

This is the present-day experience of a Latter Day Saint woman who has learned that at the feet of the Master she can find her greatest happiness:

Sister Alice Bronson lives as an isolated Saint on a farm in one of the prairie states of the great plains. When she was young, she married a handsome neighbor boy, and together they built their home. At that time, Alice, though a member, didn't think the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church would mean so much to her. John Bronson didn't hold much to any kind of religion. Alice and John had four children, all of whom grew up and are now married. A daughter, Ruth, her husband, son, and daughter live on a farm near Ruth's parents. William and Phillip with their families are scattered. Helen and her family are in California—ah, now Helen is the one who started her mother thinking. Suddenly Alice Bronson became aware that Helen was becoming interested in a strong religion of the world. Helen's questions left poor Alice confused. She knew the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church was right, but she wasn't able to answer why.

She was frantic. Why hadn't she studied more when she was young? Why hadn't she taught her children to pray? Why hadn't she kept in contact with the church? There was no branch closer than a hundred miles, and she hadn't attended since the children were little, but why hadn't she seen to it that they got to church then? Oh, if she had only done differently! Maybe it wasn't too late yet to help some of her children to sit at the Master's feet. Perhaps it wasn't too late for her to seek him herself. To whom could she turn?

She remembered that the husband of a cousin in Iowa was a member of the priesthood. She wrote to him. Elder Bill Thomas answered her letter and sent it on to his daughter, Jane, who lived in Independence. Jane Thomas, the daughter, wrote to Alice Bronson and sent tracts and books from the Herald House. These arrived just before the snows came and isolated Alice and John Bronson for the winter.

The letter Alice then wrote to Jane in Independence was beautiful to read. It didn't come until March when the road was cleared and Alice's mail could get out. She wrote:

"Dear Jane:

"I've been studying and studying. The more I study, the more I want to. I yearn for the lost years in which I wasn't sitting at the feet of the Master to learn of him. I've sent some books and tracts that I've read to Ruth and her husband. I'm eager to know what she thinks of them. And here's a check. Please have some Books of Mormon sent to me. If I'm going to do anything for the church, I want to do it now. I have some friends I want to tell the gospel to. It's such a joy to study. I've never been happier."

It was a short letter, but many letters followed. Ruth, Alice's daughter, started to write to Jane. In a few months Ruth and her husband and eight-year-old daughter all wanted to be baptized and were planning to make a trip to a branch for the occasion.

Even those who are late in their conversion can come to Christ; even those who are far distant can study and pray and teach their children. The Lord supports his children where they have need of him. He is always near by to offer his hand. Let us ever be ready to sit at his feet, where the greatest joy is found.

Solo or Duet: "Come, Tell the Story of His Love," Saints' Hymnal, No. 286.

Prayer: That we may want to sit at the Master's feet and learn of him.

Hymn: "Come, Learn of the Meek and Lowly," Saints' Hymnal, No. 258.

Theme: I SEEK HIS GUIDANCE

Prelude

Scripture: Mormon 4: 90-93

Hymn: "We Would See Jesus," Saints' Hymnal, No. 155, stanzas 3, 4, 5

Poem:

I groped in mists of darkness
Along the narrow way,
I cried, "Oh Jesus, guide me,
Help me not to go astray."

And as I stood despairing,
God sent a friend to me,
Who led me through the shadows
Till now a light I see.

So as I travel onward,
With God's own light to guide,
I very humbly thank him,
For friendships which abide.

And often as I journey,
I look to him and pray,
"To some soul yet in trouble Let me bring peace some day."
—Laura Barrington.

Story-Talk: I SEEK HIS GUIDANCE

My wife was a member of a popular church. I had drifted from one church to another in an effort to find the right one. In each I had found a little more that fit in with the teachings of the Bible. One night I hurt my wife's feelings as I was showing where her belief was wrong, pointing out some things in the Bible. "I can't help it," I said as I went to bed. "I didn't write the Bible."

That night I had a dream I didn't understand. The next day at the mill, I mentioned the dream to a fellow worker.

"Tell it to me," he said, "and I'll give you the interpretation of it."

This was the dream: My wife and I were in a large body of water full of cakes of ice. I stood on a large cake of ice that held me just on the surface of the water. My wife also was standing on an ice cake, but she was sinking. I begged her to come on my ice cake, but she said, "If I come on with you, we will both go down together." Then a big ice cake came our way, and as we were trying to get on it, I awoke.

My fellow worker was inspired to give this interpretation: The ice cake that I was on was the church to which I belonged, and the large cake of ice was the church of Jesus Christ. He said that if I would join this church, my wife would join also.

"Where is this church of Jesus Christ? Aren't all of the churches a part of his church?" I asked. It never had dawned on me that men would take honor on themselves to try to imitate the true church of Jesus Christ. My friend then told me the gospel story and the story of the Restoration, the story of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Enthusiasm for this new teaching thrilled me so that soon after hearing the first sermon I joined. Only a few weeks later another elder came to preach to us. My wife gave permission that he might preach in our home. Instead of having supper with us, the elder said he was going up on the mountainside to pray. This impressed my wife so much that tears rolled down her cheeks as she told me about it. I asked her if she would kneel down and ask the Lord about the matter. She did so, and asked that if the church this man represented was God's church, and if she were worthy to be a member of it, that when he preached that night, the Lord would illuminate the room as the noonday sun.

This happened. Both she and my brother saw it, and in those days of oil lamps that was indeed a miracle. She was so happy to be counted worthy, she wept tears of joy. Soon afterwards she too became a member of the church. Our cup was full! My seeking to find the right church had given the Lord opportunity to guide us to him.

This true experience of two of our church members who had been seeking the guidance of God demonstrates how the Lord can guide the honest in heart to his footstool. Ask, and it shall be given. There is only one answer that honest, seeking people can find, and that is the Lord and his church.

Solo: "Trust and Obey," Zion's Praises, No. 4, stanzas 1, 3, 5.

Prayer: That we may yearn to find the Christ. That we may seek him with sincerity and honesty and be willing to be guided by his spirit.

Hymn: "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say," Saints' Hymnal, No. 331.

SEPTEMBER 18, 1949

Theme: I SEE MY TASK

Prelude

Scripture:

Doctrine and Covenants 85: 22. Also, All are admonished to qualify themselves in spirit by ministry and by witnessing for Christ.—Doctrine and Covenants 141: 4.

Hymn: "Is Thy Cruse of Comfort Failing?" Saints' Hymnal, No. 345.

Poem:

Dare to do right, dare to be true!
You have a work that no other can do;
Do it so bravely, so kindly, so well,
Angels will hasten the story to tell.

Dare to do right, dare to be true!
Other men's failures can never save you;
Stand by your conscience, your honor, your faith;
Stand like a hero and battle till death.

Dare to do right, dare to be true!
God who created you cares for you, too;
Treasures the tears that his striving ones shed,
Counts and protects ev'ry hair of your head.

Dare to do right, dare to be true!
Keep the great judgment day always in view;
Look at your work as you'll look at it then—
Scanned by Jehovah, and angels, and men.

Story-Talk: I SEE MY TASK

My grandfather was a God-fearing person. He was a sincere man; a preacher in another church. He taught my mother and me of God. When I was yet small, we moved away, and soon after my grandfather died. Shortly after, my parents separated, and I went to live with my mother. I received many persecutions as I was growing up, but my mother stood by me as a good companion. She encouraged my search for God and taught me of her love for him, as my grandfather had taught her.

When I grew up I married a young man who had been reared in the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church. My mother died soon after my marriage, and I began to think of my father. I joined the church and was very happy with it. My heart went out to my father, for since I had found the church, I wanted all my family to have the joy of knowing the gospel, too.

I thought of the ache that must be in my father's heart because of his neglect of his family.

I prayed that my father and the other members of my family might see that this was Jesus' church on earth. One day I heard that my father was ill; I felt I must go and tell him I had forgiven him and that I loved him, so I traveled 2,000 miles to a city where he and one of my sisters lived.

While visiting there, I went to Communion service in our own church. I took my father and sister with me. While in the service, the pastor arose and spoke to me under the spirit of inspiration and said, "Sister, inasmuch as you prove faithful, your wish shall be granted. Thy people shall be gathered even as in a basket."

And true to the Lord's promise, as the years passed almost all my family came into the church. My father died believing but not being baptized. Two sisters and their families joined the church.—A true experience.

This woman saw her task. After she had found happiness, she wanted to share it. She allowed the spirit of witnessing to lead her to perform her task.

Solo or Small Group: "Lead, Kindly Light," Saints' Hymnal, No. 265, or "My Task."

Prayer: That we may be moved to share this gospel with others. Ask that the way may open for us to bring its happiness into their lives.

Hymn: "Men of God, Go Take Your Stations," Saints' Hymnal, No. 389.

SEPTEMBER 25, 1949

Theme: I STRIVE TO SERVE HIM

Prelude

Scripture:

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my Scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues. If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16, 8.

Hymn: "Lead On, O King Eternal," Saints' Hymnal, No. 181.

Poem:

Who answers Christ's insistent call
Must give himself, his life, his all,
Without one backward look.
Who sets his hand unto the plow,
And glances back with anxious brow,
His calling hath mistook.
Christ claims him wholly for his own;
He must be Christ's and Christ's alone.

Story-Talk:

I had planned to go to the district conference held at Alpena, which was twenty-one miles away. I had to drive a horse, and therefore it was necessary for me to start on Friday. As I was going past my neighbor's home, he came out and stopped me at the gate.

"Where are you going?" he asked.

"To Alpena to district conference," I answered.

"You can't go," he said.

"Why?" and my gaze followed his pointing finger. Across the bay of Hubbard Lake I could see some smoke.

"That's the threshing machine," he said. "They are coming to my place to thresh and will be at your place this afternoon."

I wanted to go to district conference. I felt it was part of the Lord's work, and that I should be there to take my responsibility as a voting member, if nothing else. So I prayed silently: "Lord, what shall I do?" An answer came in my consciousness that I should go to conference.

"I guess I'll go on to the conference," I answered my neighbor. "I'll take the chance of the threshing machine coming." I didn't know what he thought.

The conference over, I started home Sunday evening and got home late that night in plenty of time to help thresh on Monday. The steam engine on the threshing machine had broken. By the time it was fixed, I was home ready to help.

Some people have asked me if I thought God broke that wheel for my sake. I don't know whether he did or not, or whether he just knew it was going to break; but this I do know, he told me to go to the conference, so I did. We are told in the Scriptures that faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. God gave me the assurance that I should go. When I got home, I received the evidence. If I had not gone, I never could have received the evidence. It would have been faith without works.

This true experience of one of the Saints shows that God is mindful of his children if they are mindful of him. This man wanted to share in the work of the church and asked the Lord what he should do at a time of decision. Then he had the faith to go ahead and act according to his best wisdom and knowledge. That is all God asks of us. We are to strive to serve him. He asks no more.

Receives a Blessing

I have always read and enjoyed the letters in the Herald which tell of blessings others have received. Now that I have one of my own to relate, I hope it may help those who read it.

Early in March, this year, X rays showed that I had a spot on my lung, and the doctor advised having the lung collapsed immediately. I was reluctant to consent to the operation and suggested I try bed-rest before submitting to surgery. On March 14, I went to bed, and my mother came to care for my family. I received administration often, and now I am well on the road to recovery. The last test proved negative.

I have not the slightest doubt that I was healed through administration and the use of consecrated oil. I am sincerely thankful for this blessing and when I am able, I shall try to do everything I can to help in God's work. I am grateful, too, for the prayers of my friends and loved ones.

Friendly Visiting - By MABEL DAVEY

WE HAVE in our organization one officer we call the friendly visitor. She is a very important person, and should be selected with great care and foresight. Much depends on her in the ultimate success of the whole work of the women in the church. Friendly visiting develops contacts, makes friends for the church, inspires enthusiasm, creates interest, and does a host of good things for the well-being of the group. Today we are interested in friendly visiting, both as an office and just as visiting.

The late President Frederick M. Smith, in an article for the Saints' Herald, had this to say in regard to our visiting women:

In order to learn what is most needed by our homemakers, contacts must be made. This suggests visiting, and friendly visiting is one of the lines along which the women of the church can make one of the best contributions toward helping the priesthood in their work. So before the women lies a fine opportunity to assist greatly in the general plan of visiting, and shall I say saintly visiting, of their own.

In the light of this admonition, I think we might well have as our goal: Every Latter Day Saint woman a friendly visitor in the truest sense of the word. I think I can safely say such visiting will be approved by the priesthood. We will accomplish our task of evangelizing the world much sooner if we can enthuse our women with the idea of becoming friendly visitors. It is not an easy task we have set, but nothing worth-while is easy. It is a great undertaking, but very soul-satisfying to the individual who tries.

WHY VISIT? We are a missionary church. One of our apostles made this statement, "The purpose of God in bringing this church into existence was that the souls of men might be brought to repentance." More than two thirds of our converts tell us that one of the reasons for their becoming interested in the church was that some Latter Day Saint was interested in them. Many people are lonely, and loneliness offers a fine opportunity for service.

August

August is sometimes called the royal month, named for the Emperor Augustus, one of the greatest rulers. Purple and gold are its colors; everywhere there are purple asters, golden rod, and fields slowly turning yellow in the sun. Wonder if Augustus knew it was going to be this hot when he selected it? One must keep busy to enjoy August. Vacations, reunions, even county and state fairs abound. If you are attending one or all, you may be able to forget the weather. If even this fails, just remember your friends at home who are canning in the hot kitchen.

Seems that Mother Nature has to turn the heat a little higher in order to produce the choicest flavors in her vast garden. Are tomatoes ever lovelier, corn ever sweeter, peaches ever peachier than on the hottest August day?

If flavors are to be captured, canning must be done on these same days. If through the heat and steam you reach the state of complete nervous and physical exhaustion and suddenly have visions of rows and rows of jewel-colored jars of jelly, jams, and pickles, be calm—you are not delirious.

If it were not for August, how could we ever know the complete enjoyment of a swim, a light evening breeze, a refreshing fruit drink? Yes, August fits into the plan, and it's necessary.

By Lula Carmichael

One Independence woman told me this experience: She had a new neighbor, but because of sickness and worry in her own family, the weeks and months went by without their becoming acquainted. Finally, over the backyard fence one day, her neighbor said, "My son went away to college this fall, and you know I think I have missed him more than when he went away to war. We lived in another community then where I knew everybody; we had lots of friends there, and the time passed swiftly. People don't visit much in this town. I have been very lonely here." To minister to a lonely person requires that we have a genuine love for people. The world was lonely, and God so loved the world that he gave his only Son for us.

It should not be necessary for me to remind you of the value of prayer in our visiting. It will be well for us if we will but heed the admonition and command of God to pray always. The blessings promised if we will do this are necessary in all our work, for he says, "And I will pour out my Spirit upon you, and great shall be your blessing."—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 6.

Visiting is an art. One person has said that being able to listen is more than half the art. It is harder to listen than it is to talk. To make friends of our neighbors means that we must listen more than we talk. And as we listen and talk and listen, we must be tolerant. We must remember that our neighbor has beliefs just as we do. If someone attacks our faith, we are inclined to build a barrier.

MAKE YOUR VISITS at the opportune time—when they are needed. I moved into a house once that was sadly in need of cleaning. Early in the morning of the very first day, I heard a knock on my door. My next-door neighbor told me that although she could not help me with the cleaning because she worked, in case I did not have the gas connected and was in need of hot water, she was leaving her back door unlocked so we could have all we needed. An opportune time for a pail of hot water would not have been at 4:00 o'clock on a Sunday afternoon or even the next day. Something happened in my heart toward that woman, and we were friends for the time we lived there.

You know as well as I know that if I had not been well grounded in my own faith and had I been hunting for a convenient church home for my family, I would have gone with her, for she was a good worker in her church and a good Samaritan to us.

Be wise in your use of other people's time. A woman doing the weekly wash does not want to stop unnecessarily to visit with her next-door neighbor. Make your visit timely and don't stay too long.

Obey the old adage, "Do not put off till tomorrow what you can do today." Tomorrow may be too late, and you may pass up a golden opportunity to tell your neighbor of the love of Christ. If you fail, perhaps there will be one soul less in the kingdom of God.

In my reunion classes of a year ago, I tried to stress the work of the women in the missionary program of the church. This year in making the rounds of the same reunions, one sister told me she went home determined to put into practice some of the things I had said we could and should do. She visited her neighbor and asked permission to take the children to church school the next Sunday. Imagine her chagrin when she learned that only very recently this good neighbor had been approached by another denomination, and the children had enrolled in another school.

IF I WERE TO INSIST on one hard and fast rule, I think I would make it, "Do Not Argue." A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still. Christ said, "And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain."—Matthew 5:43. I do not think that means we must always agree, but we can be more patient and more understanding. People need more leading and less pushing. Very few, if any, converts are won by arguments, yet we must be so converted ourselves, so enthusiastic, and have such a deep conviction that there will be no need for argument.

Select someone who especially interests you and then keep at it. We are an impatient people, and we tend to let go too soon. Sometimes it takes years and years of patient, continued effort to bring results. I know of one man who did not join the church until after his good companion had passed on to the other side, yet it was through her lifetime of effort that he came to know of the gospel and understand it. If any interest is shown, be it ever so small, study your prospects and learn in what way you can reach them best.

Friendly visiting in its true sense is not an easy job for a lazy person. It takes work and preparation. You can readily see why foresight is required in choosing friendly visitors, and why President Smith urged a systematic organization. We could go on indefinitely with the do's and don'ts of visiting, but I would like to close with this one particular note: In all your visiting be enthusiastic yet tempered with wisdom, and you will do much toward evangelizing the world. It is a challenge and one to which we are all called. You will be a help to members of the priesthood and open the way for their work. We are not to take the place of priesthood, nor is it our calling to indoctrinate especially, but we are called to make friends. And through that friendship we can pave the way for those called and ordained of God for that purpose.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

July magazines are all full of excellent recipes for summer foods, and because there are so many good suggestions, we will not list any certain ones—just take any magazine for refreshing menus. Mental health also seems to be a favorite topic for July, and there are some excellent articles on other subjects.

"Democracy at Work," American Home, tells of an actual experiment in co-operation between Negro and white, Catholic and Jew, Italian and Chinese (and a few others) in apartment houses in Los Angeles, owned, managed, and tenanted by students at the Art Center School.

"Death Takes No Vacation," American Home, should cause anyone who reads it to be more careful; if so, perhaps some of the usual vacation tragedies may be prevented.

"When Children Are Really Bad," Woman's Home Companion, is a compelling article about the children whom experts call psychopathic personalities, and what can or cannot be done about them.

"You'll Wear Ribbons," Woman's Companion, is for the frivolous side of

The Secret of a Happy Marriage

by ROY A. BURKHART

This is a gift book. It is also a guidebook. The thoughtfulness with which information and counsel have been selected, the care with which all the many questions of marriage are covered, and the warmth and beauty in which it is presented—all make this a rare book to give and to receive. Included, too, is a certificate of marriage.

your nature—good ideas for prettying up your summer dresses.

"How to Tell the Story of Birth," Parents' Magazine, is a most practical aid for mothers and contains excellent pictures that may be used in answering children's questions.

"When Should You Let Them Have the Car?" Good Housekeeping, may stir up some family arguments, but it gives the subject a good airing. It is a problem that concerns many families.

"Overweight Children," Good Housekeeping, is a very important discussion of a problem that is not even recognized many times. Dr. Bruch covers the physical, mental, and emotional aspects of the condition.

"Making Marriage Work," the monthly feature of the Ladies' Home Journal, discusses the question of second marriages and also the neurotic personality.

"Jimmy John," Ladies' Home Journal book condensation, is an absorbing, true account of a family who doubled their own family of three children by taking in other children who had no home. It was written by the mother of the family.

"Should Your Children Have Pets?" Ladies' Home Journal, is a sound, "middle-of-the-road" discussion of this question by Dr. Herman N. Bundesen.

"Take a Tip From Summer," Family Circle, is an excellent resumé of methods of duplicating the satisfaction of beach play right at home. You will find excellent suggestions for summer activities for all the children.

of all the other references on lineal priesthood, and an appeal to Utah and all who have been in transgression believing such doctrines as the Adam-God theory, polygamy, marrying for eternity, or violating section 43. In Luke 20: 35, 36, Jesus answered the question, "Whose wife shall she be?" by saying:

The children of this world neither marry nor are given in marriage: But they that shall be accounted worthy to attain that world, through resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage. Neither can they die any more; for they are equal to the angels and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection.

that peace at last had entered our hearts which had been battered and torn by the trials of the years past. The service conducted by Brother Theys on the evening of our confirmation still enhanced that feeling. When he drove us home afterwards, we could not decide to go immediately to our house. We sat in the car, pouring out our hearts. When we did part, we had pledged ourselves to the task set us; and we felt, in return, that we no longer were alone—we were part of that great community of God's children.

There was—and still is—plenty of work to do for all who are willing to work in the Nürnberg group which was begun in 1935. When the war came, all contacts with church headquarters were interrupted. This fact, and conditions in Germany generally, caused it to become inactive. When Apostle McConley and Brother Theys came to Nürnberg for the first time, they found themselves confronted with a huge task. But Brother Theys, our mission president, has worked wonders already. He has won everybody's heart, and his visits are now the outstanding events in Latter Day Saints' lives. The fact that new material is obtainable now in German has given a tremendous uplift to church life in general, and it certainly has helped much to clarify questions of doctrine. The practical assistance given by the church has been a very wonderful thing, too. It not only has alleviated many existing needs in Germany, but has set a fine example of applied brotherly love. We feel that our church is one of the best media for bringing about understanding among the peoples of this world by teaching them to be good stewards in their homes, good citizens in their countries and their church.

It has taken us long to find the way, but we recognize now that we first had to be denied comfort and face want, to go from safety to danger and to lose all earthly things, in order to gain spiritually and find peace in our souls. Our prayer is that this inner tranquillity may bring us strength to pass on to others.

Daugherty, district president, I have been able to partially gratify this desire.

I left for Milwaukee on Saturday, June 18, and when my train arrived at Milwaukee at 10:30 a. m. Sunday, I was met by Elder Daugherty and Sister Smith's nephew, Arden Grenawalt, formerly of Independence. Soon I was at our Milwaukee church, where I addressed a fairly large congregation. Elder Frank Mussell, pastor, was out of the city, and his counselor, Elder Roy Hunt, was in charge. Brother Terrell Cochran assisted.

Elder Daugherty had exacted a promise from me to the effect that I should deal with the Book of Mormon at each place we visited on this trip.

We were to leave for Beloit at 3 p. m. In the meantime, with Brethren Ed. Ford, Hunt, Daugherty, and Grenawalt, we enjoyed a fine dinner at a leading hotel. Later we visited the manufacturing plant, where Brother Ford is an executive, and the home of Brother Grenawalt and family, which consists of Mrs. Grenawalt, a former Independence girl, and four fine children.

Our auto party to Beloit included Brother Ford, Engineer Daugherty, and myself. We were met upon arrival by Elder Clyde Funk, pastor, who lives at Edgerton, and Evangelist Harry Wasson. After the evening meal I was privileged to speak to the Saints of Beloit and surrounding area. Brother Wasson and Brother Ford assisted. Though the hour was somewhat late after we had greeted the Saints at the close of the meeting, Brother Daugherty, Brother Ford, and I then drove to Madison where we stayed at a hotel that night. Brother Ford desired to get back to Milwaukee and his family, but a strike by bus drivers delayed his leaving until morning. I was very happy indeed to have this experience with Brother Ford, as I have known his parents for many years.

Thus one very busy day passed, and I found myself in the beautiful capital of Wisconsin.

Monday was spent in recuperating and seeing some of this fine city. We went out to Stoughton for dinner at the home of Brother Fred Moore, who is pastor at Madison. Brother Moore is superintendent of a large trailer company, which is the successor, I understand, of the company that for a great many years made the well-known "Stoughton" wagon before the days of self-propelled vehicles.

The night was hot, but I again spoke, the church being comfortably filled. Brother Moore sang a vocal solo. In the stand were Brethren Daugherty, Robert Brigham, and Floyd Griswold.

I had an unusual experience here and altogether a happy one: Alice Moore, the daughter of Brother Moore, had been given a Light of Life award, and I made the presentation. She had not been apprised of it beforehand, and it was a happy surprise to her.

Here, as at other points, members from other places were present in spite of the extreme heat. Refreshments were served by the women of the group.

Brother Daugherty and I left Madison on Tuesday afternoon and went to Sparta, where he lives. Here I had the pleasure of meeting Sister Daugherty, the two fine Daugherty children, his mother, who lives at Joplin, and a sister from St. Louis.

Our service this day was at Soldiers Grove, a few miles from Sparta. It was originally called Wheatville. Here we had a splendid audience, meeting the descendants of many old-time Saints: the Davenports, Maybees, and others whose names escape me.

Brother Daugherty presided, assisted by Brethren George Noble, pastor at Lancaster, and Phillip Davenport, pastor. The two Sheffields, Howard and Hadley, supplied special music.

The next day after a fine dinner at Daugherty's, we went in separate cars to LaCrosse. Here, by appointment, we met Brethren Lenox, McCormac, Scafe, Fitzsimmons, and Hearne and had dinner at the Linker Hotel.

The church was well-filled, Brother Miles H. Lenox, pastor, Brethren Fitzsimmons, Hearne, Isaac Brockman and Brother Daugherty being in the stand with me.

After the service we drove back to Sparta, taking a midnight train for Chicago en route to Independence.

Thus closed an eventful half week at five centers. Brother Daugherty generally presided and always introduced me to our groups. He is an energetic district president with a passion for missionary work and baptisms. I greatly appreciated laboring with him. The Saints love him, and he has a reputation for good fellowship. The work under his care is flourishing, as specially shown in the very large increase in the tithes and offerings from the district.

Friday morning (June 24) found me again at home—and a few hours later I was on my way, driving with Sister Smith en route to Nauvoo for memorial services on Sunday, June 26.

BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND.—On May 21 and 22, the priesthood of the Midland and Southern Districts met for an institute at the church headquarters in Birmingham, where Apostle D. Blair Jensen, District President Frank A. Fry, Bishop A. T. Trapp, and Seventies Glen H. Johnson, Tom Worth, and E. S. Rowe, instructed classes. The final service of the institute was a prayer and fellowship service. The theme of the institute was "The Minister."—Reported by EDGAR S. HOLMES.

MARLETTE, MICHIGAN.—The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Lambert, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jay Westover, both families from Marlette, Michigan, and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Dale of Flint, Michigan, were blessed on Easter Sunday at the Junaita Branch by the grandfather of the three children, Elder Elliott Gernell, pastor of the Junaita Branch. Cloyd Gilbert Ramsey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Truman Ramsey, was baptized on June 19 in the Marlette church.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.—Diane Lewis, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Lewis of Providence, Rhode Island, was blessed at the Providence Branch on Children's Day, June 12. Elders George F. Robley and Edmund M. Brown officiated.

Fifty people attended a musical sponsored by the Loyal Workers of the Providence Branch at the home of Mrs. Grace Garth of Cranston, June 14, at 8:15 p.m. This group is organized for cultural and social purposes, as well as making a contribution to the welfare of the branch. After the musical program, refreshments were served.—Reported by JEANNE M. HALLGREEN.

AURORA, ILLINOIS.—After many years of meeting in private homes and in halls, the Saints of the Aurora Branch have recently acquired a fine little church building of their own. Purchase of the building was made possible through the sacrifice of many individuals and the extension of the loan by the general church. Local members feel that the hand of God was present in the acquisition of the building, since other church groups in this city bid considerably higher for the property than did our own group.

Much credit for the present condition of the Aurora Branch must be given to those who have lived and toiled there through the years to make the branch grow. Elder Clement Malcor, for many years the local pastor, especially deserves much of the credit. More recently, Elder A. J. Settles added his contribution. Elder Lloyd Cleveland is the present pastor, having come to Aurora in the past two years.

Aurora Saints have been fortunate also in having many fine visiting speakers in recent weeks. Sermons by President Israel A. Smith, Evangelists Ray Whiting, John R. Grice, and Henry Castings have been much enjoyed.

God's Writ of Service ~ By BEVERLY GRANT

THE HUSTLE BUSTLE of activity was quite usual for a Monday morning in our office. I was busy opening mail, sorting letters to be filed, and talking over the events of the week end with Peg, who is secretary to the other lawyer sharing our office space. The rustle of newspaper told me my boss was in and was probably thumbing through the world news to get to Joe Palooka.

Into these comparatively serene surroundings a few moments later walked—I should say hobbled—the most pitiful sight I have seen in a long while. It wasn't just the fact that this young man had one leg in a cast, a bandage around his head, and a long gash, still not completely healed, visible on the side of his once-handsome face; it was the bewildered, unbelieving look in his eyes that was most disturbing. I tried not to show just how disturbing his appearance was as I inquired if I could be of assistance. He stood before my desk with hunched shoulders, as if to hide himself as much as possible, and asked to see my employer, Mr. C. After the formalities of taking his name and announcing his arrival, he was shown into Mr. C.'s office and the door closed. Having worked in this legal office for almost four years, I was quite certain our client had been in either an accident or a fight. As the buzz of conversation continued in the other office, I grew curious to know just what had occurred—why such an expression of shock and horror was on the young man's face?

Half an hour passed and then the stooped figure slowly left the office, looking neither right nor left. Shortly the buzzer sounded, and I was glad as I gathered up my pencil and notebook, for soon my curiosity would be satisfied—but the facts as dictated for our office records made me neither glad nor satisfied.

MR. T. (our client), his brother, and his best friend with their two girl friends had spent Saturday evening in a roadhouse on the outskirts of town. They had danced and talked, and had too much to drink, and were proceeding home along Riverside Drive, which is a narrow, winding, dimly-lit roadway. The car in which the party was traveling was being driven by our client, but it belonged to his boy friend. All were in merry spirits, laughing and singing, and perhaps our client was showing off, displaying how he Golden Rule in church school? Did he have a young people's supervisor to turn to for advice and encouragement as he was "growing up"? Did he have the friendship and companionship of Christian young people? Did he have the example of priesthood members after which to pattern his life? Did he have congenial, loving parents who were always ready to lend a helping hand over the stumbling blocks ever present in a young person's life? Somehow I knew he had none of these anchors in his life, and my heart went out in pity to him.

Beverly Grant, age twenty-two, was born and reared in Windsor, Ontario. Since her graduation from Lowe Commercial High School she has worked as a legal secretary. She serves her home branch as secretary and church school teacher and is active in League work.

In addition to this, she is captain of a company of Girl Guides. "God's Writ of Service" is her first "Herald" contribution, but she has written for "Stepping Stones" for several years.

could handle his friend's car. Suddenly the car lurched as it struck a rut in the pavement, careened over the shoulder for some distance, uprooting shrubbery in its path, struck a tree, and flipped headlong, coming to rest upside down with its wheels still spinning. Mr. T. and the two girls in the car were injured not too seriously—our client's brother and best friend both were killed. Now I understood the expression of shock and horror on his face—his bewildered; unbelieving eyes.

I returned to my desk and sat with my elbows propped on the carriage of my typewriter and found myself wondering what type of homelife our client had. What church, if any, did he attend? Had he memorized the Ten Commandments and the

SO OFTEN we as Latter Day Saint young people possess these anchors (opportunities) and many more, but we fail to use them. We flounder around in the storm of growing up, not realizing that we have but to throw out the anchor (make use of our opportunities) and, when the storm is past, we can chart our course to God.

However, to realize that we are fortunate enough to possess these opportunities, and even to be thankful for them, is not enough. We must use them; we must grow through them. If we are looking inward always during this process, we are not functioning as God would have us. Does a rose bud and bloom because it knows that is the proper thing to do? Does it feel satisfied just to have gone through the proper process? I think it would rather wither and die if it did not bring happiness to others through its beauty and fragrance. Through the beauty of the gospel in our lives, we should bring happiness, encouragement, and direction to those about us. Particularly should we be concerned about other young people.

IN A COURT ACTION when a writ of summons is served upon you, you are *demand*ed to make answer to this writ, or judgment will automatically be signed against you. God has served a writ upon each of us by giving us life. His writ asks for service—service in whatever field we are equipped, or in which we can become equipped, to serve. His writ differs from a legal writ in that he does not demand; he gently asks and prompts us, but we may or may not make answer as we choose. However, if we choose to ignore God's writ, perhaps not in this life but in the life to come, judgment will be signed against us. If a legal judgment is entered against our name, we have the opportunity to satisfy the judgment by payment to the plaintiff. Will we be able to satisfy God's judgment in the next life? Not unless we make answer to his writ while here on this earth. If we do not live a life of useful service to his church and his people, we cannot liquidate his judgment in the world to come.

How can we be certain an unfavorable judgment will not be entered against us when this life is done? One positive way is by being concerned about the young people of our day. Perhaps by our service to youth through scouting, Guide work, League and church school work we can keep those about us from finding themselves in the heartbreaking position our client was in.

I am reminded of a few lines of a very beautiful poem—"Act, act in the living present, heart within and God o'erhead." Let us use these lines as a motto to chart our course and guide our friends to become a more Zionite generation in God's sight.

Future Features of the Herald

You will want to read "A Visit to Book of Mormon Lands," by Roy E. Weldon; "Living Witnesses," a Campus Sermon by President F. Henry Edwards; and "Our Motives for Gathering," by Bishop L. Wayne Updike in the August 15 issue. They are interesting and well worth reading.

The Good Gifts

By MARILYN WOODS

HAVE YOU EVER HEARD small children refuse a piece of candy, a toy, an ice-cream cone, or some such item that they really wanted just because they were angry at the giver or perhaps just angry? I have. They do it, seemingly, because they think it hurts someone else. They think it is a way to show those "grownups" that they'll have their own way whether or no. Yes, children often refuse to receive something that would make them happy because they are angry.

But have you thought that we adults behave similarly at times? Which of us hasn't refused by our actions some good that God offers us. Our motives might even be just a little like that of pouting children.

If you don't fall into one of the following pictures or a similar situation, you will undoubtedly be able to think of someone you know who does. You dislike the way Brother or Sister So-And-So has been doing, so you just won't go to church—and you miss many a blessing. Or perhaps you secretly think God is letting too many people live happily and prosperously who you think don't deserve it, so you pout and refuse to place yourself in the way of God's blessing. Again, you may be disappointed at some unanswered prayer: result—you won't pray any more, and you lose the rich companionship of that spiritual communion with the Infinite Being.

Others may have outgrown these childish obstacles to happiness but have encountered a less easily dislodged stumbling block—the lack of will power, spiritual stamina, call it what you will, required to discipline oneself and keep up the constant effort necessary for a rich, spiritual life. And we don't mean just the type of life that consists of always "attending meeting" and constantly being on bended knee or deep in meditation and Scripture reading. A proper proportion of all these is indispensable to the type of life we are trying to describe, but too much of any or all of these activities would crowd out the other vital ingredients of this abundant living. For the person who grows in contact with the Divine, prays for strength to do; he goes to church to give as well as receive; he thinks and reads to be able to act wisely.

MORE IS REQUIRED of a person who lives close to God while mingling daily in the world of affairs than of one who draws apart (either mentally or physically) from all disturbing elements. More is required of the man or woman who is concerned about converting others than of one who is content with personal salvation. More is required of one who must help to bring peace to a struggling world than of the visionless person who is happy because he has inner peace in the hope of "another world" where the sinning, erring, dirty mass of unconverted humanity won't be there to bother him—more is required of such in labor, in thought, in love, in heartache, in dogged determination, and in faith. Yes, more is required, and more is offered—more in satisfaction, in fellowship with God, and in love and respect of those few other rare people who dare have vision, who dare believe in the purposes of God, who dare believe in man as well as God.

Much is offered to us. Will we accept the good gift?

Preparation

There's a faint and distant murmur that is coming from afar.

As it rises, hear its message: "Start preparing where you are."

It surges like a sea tide over all the restless land

And it whispers, "Oh, be ready, be steady where you stand."

Its volume swells the louder and on every listening ear

Falls the thundering crescendo, "The time is nearly here."

Every heart has felt its pressure, every mind its urgency:

"Study now in preparation for the time that is to be."

There must be no slothful laggards—everyone must do his part

And stand ready, mind receptive, with an educated heart.

LOUISE WRIGLEY.

DEATHS

PENNELLS.—George Wayland, oldest son of Elmer and Ellen Pennell, was born at Galland's Grove in Shelby County, Iowa, on December 19, 1901, and died at the intersection of 71 By-Pass and Kentucky Road near Independence, Missouri, as the result of a high-way accident, Saturday, July 9, 1949.

He was baptized at Independence on September 14, 1914, by C. J. Hunt and confirmed by C. J. Hunt and George Harrington. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ruth Bryant Pennell of the home in Kansas City, Missouri; his mother, Mrs. Ellen Pennell; two sisters: Mrs. Gladys Myers, Kansas City, Missouri, and Mrs. Grace Tousley, Independence, Missouri; three brothers: John E. Pennell and Wayne E. Rogers of Independence, and Darwin Pennell, Kansas City, Missouri.

At the time of his death he was vice-president of the Weeks Construction Company of Kansas City, Kansas.

PINKERTON.—William, son of William and Jane Pinkerton, was born December 27, 1878, at Hamilton, Scotland, and died at a hospital in Belvidere, Illinois on July 8, 1949, after an illness of several months. He was educated in Scotland and came to America on March 4, 1907. He lived at DeKalb, Illinois, about one year and then moved to Belvidere, where he resided until his death. He was married to Minnie Agnes Michael on June 21, 1911, at Madison, Wisconsin. He united with the Reorganized Church at Glasgow, Scotland, in 1902, through the missionary efforts of Apostle John W. Rushton. He served many years as pastor of the Belvidere Branch.

Surviving, besides his wife, are two sons, Earl and Robert of Belvidere, and two daughters, Dorothy J. Pinkerton of Janesville, Wisconsin, and Mrs. Mina Mae Manley of Cherry Valley, Illinois. He is also survived by three grandchildren.

Funeral services were held at Belvidere, Elders Lloyd L. Hadley of River Forest, Illinois, and Charles C. Simpson of Rockford, Illinois, officiating.

PETERS.—Rhoda E., was born in Will County, Illinois, January 17, 1869, and died at Hutchinson, Kansas, September 22, 1948. T. Comer Turpen was the officiating minister. The service was from Elliott and Gard Chapel, Hutchinson, Kansas, September 24, 1948. The interment was at Memorial Park Cemetery, Hutchinson, Kansas.

SHED.—Lida Gilbertson, was born in Norway, June 16, 1878, and died at St. Margaret's Hospital in Hammond, Indiana, May 20, 1949. She came to this country while a child, making the trip from Norway to Minnesota alone, her parents and other members of her family having preceded her. She was baptized in February, 1915. She married Murray Owen Shed in June, 1915. They lived in Wisconsin for several years and moved to Hammond, Indiana, in 1923 where she has lived since that time. She was a kind and faithful Saint and was loved by all who knew her. Her husband preceded her in death in February, 1948.

She leaves to mourn her passing, two daughters: Mrs. Mildred Mair of Hammond, Indiana, with whom she made her home; and Mrs. Violet Stevens of Los Angeles, California; a son, Arnold Gilbertson of Hammond; two sisters; three brothers; twelve grandchildren; and seven great-grandchildren.

SHED.—Murray Owen, was born January 16, 1867, at York, Iowa, and died February 19, 1948, at Hammond, Indiana. He was baptized and confirmed at Frankfort, Wisconsin, May 21, 1899, by A. V. Closson. On July 19, 1899, he was ordained a priest by A. V. Closson and S. E. Livingston and held that office at the time of his death. He married Mrs. Lida Gilbertson in June, 1915. They moved to Hammond, Indiana, in 1923. He was a kind and loving husband and father to his stepchildren. He left to mourn his wife; two stepdaughters, Mrs. Mildred Mair of Hammond, and Mrs. Violet Stevens of Los Angeles, California; one stepson, Arnold Gilbertson of Hammond; two sisters, Mrs. Mercy Perkins of Durand, Wisconsin, and Mrs. Mary Lee of Independence, Missouri; and one brother, Manley, of Independence, Missouri.

ANDES.—Granville D., was born at Nashville, Missouri, on December 2, 1898, and died May 15, 1949, in an automobile accident near Wallowa, Oregon. He was the son of Benjamin D. and Margaret Davir Andes. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 16, 1907, at Pittsburg, Kansas. On June 15, 1919, he was married to Olive Mae Petersen at Far West, Missouri. For twenty-four years he worked in the oil fields of Kansas and Texas. He was ordained into the Aaronic priesthood on November 19, 1934, at Breckenridge, Texas. In 1943 he moved with his family to Independence, Missouri.

He is survived by his wife; three sons: Bruce, Robert, and Raymond; two daughters: Mrs. Ethel Lester and Mrs. Betty Jean Bailes; and two grandchildren. One son preceded him in death; as did his stepmother, three half-sisters and one half-brother, all of Independence. Burial was at Mound Grove Cemetery.

CARROW.—Louis A., died June 5, 1949, at the age of sixty-nine years. He had been a faithful member of the Reorganized Church since 1902, when he was baptized by Elder J. L. Lancaster. He and Mrs. Carrow were vacationing with Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Leslie of Joplin, Missouri, when on June 1 he had a stroke while they were in Atlanta, Georgia. Besides his wife, he leaves five daughters; twelve grandchildren; a brother, Ray Carrow; and a sister, Mrs. Mayme Green.

NELSON.—John Norman, was born April 1, 1883 in Norway, and died July 4, 1949, in San Francisco, California. He was a member of the Reorganized Church. He was the father of four sons: Howard, Chester, Walter, and Lorentz; three daughters: Mrs. Serene Charnes, Mrs. Ruth Baird, and Mrs. Isabelle Brumbaugh. Also left to mourn are three sisters: Mrs. Tillie Folkema, Mason City, Iowa; Mrs. Julia Hunter, Duluth, Minnesota; and Mrs. Marie Reid, San Leandro, California; three brothers: Rudolph, Richmond, California; Morris, Troy, Montana; and Lorentz, Smithville, Missouri.

Funeral services were held at the Ashley and McMullen Chapel in San Francisco, California, with Elder Lewis H. Adams officiating. Interment was in Cypress Law Memorial Park in San Francisco.

DOHERTY.—Addie, was born April 8, 1864, at Omaha, Nebraska, and died May 31, 1949, at La Veta, Colorado. In 1891 she was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Valley, Nebraska. She was married to Elijah Doherty in 1892 at Waterloo, Iowa. For the past twenty-two years she has lived in the vicinity of La Veta, where she made her home with a cousin, Bryan Palmer.

She is survived by seven cousins. Funeral services were at the Methodist Church in La Veta. C. Houston Hobart, Colorado Springs, was in charge, assisted by C. H. Hatfield, La Veta. Interment was in the La Veta cemetery.

BALLANTYNE.—David Frederick, son of Robert and Marinda Minear Ballantyne, was born August 29, 1875, at Soldier, Iowa, and died June 17, 1949. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 2, 1887, and remained a faithful member throughout the rest of his life. His mother, father, three brothers, and sister preceded him in death.

He is survived by a brother, John W. Ballantyne of Lexington, Oklahoma, and a sister, Rachel M. Ballantyne of Charter Oak, Iowa. Services were held at Charter Oak by Elder Clifford Cole. Interment was in the Willow Township Cemetery.

FITZWATER.—Thomas Edward, was born November 15, 1877, at Cainsville, Missouri, and died on May 30, 1949. As a child he moved with his parents to Oklahoma where he was baptized into the Reorganized Church on May 2, 1897. Three years later he married Elva Lee Mauley; nine children were born to them; two died in infancy. On December 28, 1901, he was ordained to the office of deacon. In 1906, he moved to Montana where he was ordained a priest on July 9, 1911. On October 6 of the following year he was ordained to the office of elder and entered into missionary work. His wife Elva died in August, 1925, and on March 5, 1927, he was married to Flora Linkhart of Mounds, Oklahoma, who provided a mother's care for his seven children and was a faithful helper to him in his church work. Ten years from the date of their marriage she was laid to rest near her old home near Mounds, Oklahoma. On September 11, 1940, he married Margaret Chaffin who was an army nurse during World War I. She was active in many fields of service in the church including the Campus Shop. She preceded him in death on July 16, 1942. In spite of his sorrows, he remained steadfast in the faith, serving forty-eight years in the priesthood.

Surviving are three sons: Alma A. of Liberal, Kansas; Harold N. of Lamar, Nebraska; and Andrew Jewel of Napa, California; four daughters: Ruby Ellen Eckard of Kansas City, Missouri; Gladys McDowell of Jefferson City, Missouri; Esther Rundell of Gering, Nebraska; and Hazel Flynn of Kennewick, Washington; nineteen grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. JUERGENS.—George, son of Jurgen E. and Geske Juergens was born on August 28, 1869, in Ostfriesland, Germany, and died May 9, 1949, at St. Anthony Hospital in Carroll, Iowa. He came to the United States with his parents when he was six years old, and the family moved as far west as the rails would take them, settling on a farm five miles north of Glidden, where Mr. Juergens lived the rest of his life. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 20, 1896, was ordained a teacher in 1900 and an elder in 1911. On November 6, 1895, he was married to Mary Catherine Letze. Five years later they built the farm home in which they lived for forty-nine years. Seven of their nine children were born there.

He is survived by his wife; two sons: Arthur L. and Leslie A., both of Carroll; four daughters: Mrs. John Irving of Mount Ayr, Iowa; Mrs. Albert Clark of Los Angeles, California; Mrs. Raymond McNabb of Klamath Falls, Oregon; and Mrs. Ralph Smith of Independence, Missouri. Orville, Dean, and Ruth preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Presbyterian Church in Glidden. Elder Clifford Cole officiating. Burial was in the Glidden West Lawn Cemetery.

POWERS.—Lettie Fern, daughter of Herman and Ida Tabbut, was born March 9, 1898, at Cormorant, Minnesota, and died June 5, 1949, at Los Angeles, California, following a stroke. She united with the Reorganized Church on June 4, 1904. In 1909, the family moved to Seattle, Washington, where she was married to Wilford Powers on July 4, 1917; four children were born to them. In 1941, the family moved to Los Angeles, where Brother Powers functioned as an elder, and Sister Powers became a key worker in women's activities, children's department, and served as choir mother. In 1948, she assisted her husband in the organization of the Vermont Heights congregation of which he was pastor.

She is survived by her husband; one son, Terry W. Powers of North Bend, Washington; three daughters: Ellen R. Snow of Mt. Vernon, Washington; Charlotte M. Olson of Inverness, California; and Ester G. Martin of Lynnwood, California; seven grandchildren; one brother; and seven sisters.

RUNKLE.—Alice, was born at Little Sioux, Iowa, on March 15, 1895, and died on June 16, 1949, in Tucson, Arizona, following a long illness. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at an early age and remained a faithful member throughout life. In her youth she attended Graceland College and was active in music and dramatics until her health failed.

She is survived by her husband, Miles Runkle; and three daughters: Mrs. Helen Beal of Kingston, Missouri; Mrs. Masile Blixt and Mickie Jaree Runkle of Tucson.

HAMMON.—Earl Elwood, was born March 22, 1885, at Fort Meade, South Dakota, and died June 24, 1949, at a hospital in Rapid City, South Dakota, following a long illness. He was married to Rena L. Hodges on December 24, 1912. From 1915 to 1923 he was foreman of a sheep ranch near Wamblee, South Dakota, and from 1923 to 1947, he worked for the state park board and highway commission in the Black Hills. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on November 28, 1948.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: June Hammon, Mrs. C. J. Tisdale, and Mrs. Norman Walton, all of Rapid City; five sisters: Mrs. E. F. Gronert and Mrs. R. E. Pierce of Rapid City; Mrs. E. E. Williams of Sturgis, South Dakota; Mrs. John Early of Chadron, Nebraska; and Mrs. Mitchell Turner of San Antonio, Texas; and three grandchildren. Services were conducted by Elders E. C. Judson and George Mefferd at the Hobart Funeral Home. Burial was in the Mountain View Cemetery.

JONES.—John C., son of George and Hannah Baldwin Jones, was born November 13, 1892, at Sharon, Pennsylvania, and died at his home in Sharon on April 22, 1949. He was married on June 8, 1918, to Mae Martin; two children were born to them. Brother Jones served faithfully in his home branch as solicitor for sixteen years, assistant pastor, and pastor for eight years preceding his death. He had been ill since last August when he underwent a cranial operation. For the past twenty-eight years he was an employee of the Sharon post office.

He is survived by his wife; a son, Roy Paul Jones of Warren, Ohio; and a daughter, Mrs. David Sheehy of the home; three sisters: Mrs. Jannie Thomas of Cleveland, Ohio; Mrs. Emma Ryhal and Mrs. Mildred Rosaker of Sharon; a brother, Richard Jones of Warren; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the L. Trevor Semple Funeral Home by Elder John F. Sheehy of Toronto, Ontario. Interment was in Oakwood Cemetery.

DAVIS.—Jane, was born April 14, 1850, at Onawa, Iowa, and died July 9, 1949, in a hospital at Clarinda, Iowa, where she had been a resident since last March. Previous to that time she had made her home in Mondamin, Iowa, with a granddaughter, Mrs. Otto Nelson, for several years. She had come to Mondamin when a small child and lived the remainder of her life in that vicinity.

She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on February 21, 1895. On October 19, 1897, she was married to William E. Davis, Civil War veteran, who died in 1907. Four children were born to the couple and three of them died in infancy. A daughter, Mrs. Maggie Hammer, died February 1, 1947.

Mrs. Davis is survived by six grandchildren; eighteen great-grandchildren; and seven great-great-grandchildren.

Services were directed by Bolton-Cranston Funeral Home at the Mondamin Methodist Church, with Elder Mark Hutchinson of Pisgah, Iowa, officiating. Interment was in the Magnolia, Iowa, cemetery.

NICHOL.—Daniel Albert, was born August 18, 1876, and died May 6, 1949. He was baptized on March 26, 1916, in Ottawa, Ontario, and was one of the first members of that branch. He is survived by his wife, Margaret Lytle McGill. Funeral services were held at the Hulse and Playfair Parlor, Elder A. E. Caldwell and Priest O. Fiegel officiating.

P.S.

* WOMEN WRITERS

Somebody's suppressed Casper heard lamenting recently the increase in the number of women writers. In his opinion the masculine dominance has been slipping too fast lately, and restrictions should be imposed.

But Casper really has nothing to worry about. A man's mind is just as good as a woman's, if he will use it. Sometimes he won't, which is his own fault.

Nobody has ever been able to distinguish between masculine and feminine in the great world of ideas. Marie Curie worked as an equal beside her husband Pierre. Men and women will always accomplish more as co-laborers than as competitors. Women often work harder, which may be due to glands, but nature did not make them superior. Do not be afraid of them, please, gentlemen!

Some of our finest writing is done by splendid women who love the church and are devoted to its work. Nobody should try to deprive them of any opportunity to use their rich and worthy talents in God's service.

Contrary to the usual impression, men do more talking, in public, than women do. They preach, teach, address, and sometimes just gab. And what do the women do? They have a lot of time to think. Then they go home and write, and often the product is very good. Many an article or story that carried a man's name was ghosted by a secretary or a stenographer or even a busy wife!

And so, Casper, be tranquil, as the French say. There is nothing to fear. Take the names off most articles, and you couldn't tell whether a woman or a man wrote them. Besides, the feminine viewpoint, if there is such a thing, might do you good.

* THE LITTLE TABLE

Some years ago, I wanted a little typewriter table. I had a design in mind, and nothing on the market was quite like it. I found some old scrap lumber and put one together. There was no sanding, and the hammer marks showed. "It will be good enough for me," I thought. The design was practical, and I got other material and made better tables. This first experimental model was pushed aside and forgotten. . . . Time passed, and it reappeared, to be used by other people. I was ashamed I had not done a better job. What was good enough for me seemed too ugly for others to have to use. . . . Whenever you make anything, do as good a job as possible. You cannot know how long it will serve, who will use it, nor when it may accuse you of inferior workmanship.

* CHILDREN IN CHURCH

Every adult person ought to accustom himself to the presence of children, to the sounds that they make, and the things that they do. Children are a normal part of society. They have every right to be present that adults have. People who cannot stand the presence of children are immature and undeveloped.

Of course parents should try to train their children not to break things, and not to tear to pieces whatever house they happen to be in. Some parents fail in this duty, and so neglect to prepare their children for normal social life.

Children are God's gift to put life into a dull world. Wherever they are, we should welcome them, and be happy for their bright smiles and happy ways.

On Memory's Beam

by Elbert A. Smith

Here is a book that helps all to see, not only Brother Elbert's life, but a period in the development of the church, through his eyes, and with his kindness and comprehension. His autobiography first appeared in the Saints' Herald. It is presented now in book form, for many wish to read it again and have it in their own library, and young people are growing up and new members are joining the church who have not had access to the periodical. This book will take its place in the permanent literature of the church.

News & Notes

O. W. OKERLIND DIES

Oscar William Okerlind died at the Independence Sanitarium after an emergency operation Saturday, July 16. Brother Okerlind has had a long ministry in the church. He was called into the mission field in 1906 and served until superannuation in the General Conference of 1946. He served for two extended appointments in Sweden, as well as in fields of Utah, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Idaho, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba, Colorado, Wyoming, Minnesota, and Wisconsin.

ACTIVE IN CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE

Apostle E. J. Gleazer reports that Missionary John Puckett has baptized forty-five members into the church during the first six months of this year, largely through the results of his own missionary activity in this stake.

VISITOR FROM ENGLAND

Saints in Independence on Sunday evening, July 17, were pleased to welcome on the rostrum of the Campus pulpit, Brother Robert Schofield of Manchester, England. Brother Schofield assisted in the service, while President F. Henry Edwards preached the sermon. Fred O. Davies, pastor of Walnut Park and Guggell Park congregations, introduced Brother Schofield to the congregation of about 2,500. Brother Schofield is visiting the United States with his wife as the culmination of life-long plans and took occasion to spend a week in Independence. He is the brother of John Schofield who for many years was president of Birmingham District in England.

CHURCH PURCHASES PROPERTY IN INDEPENDENCE

A beautiful two and a half story frame and brick home at 1504 West Truman Road was acquired recently by the church. It is a large mansion across the street north and east of the Independence Sanitarium. Bishop G. L. DeLapp said that the purchase was made with the view of serving the growing needs of the church in the care for the aged, and also as an adjunct to the hospital to provide various accommodations for personnel. The tract includes about five acres of land.

OZARK REUNION

On the week end of July 24, the Ozark Reunion opened at the grounds near Racine, Missouri. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was present for the entire week, where he was associated with Spring River District President John Blackmore, Rich Hill District President Don Kyser, Bishop Leslie Kohlman from Independence, and Herbert Lively, pastor of Kansas City Central Church. Mrs. Tom Bath of Pittsburg, Kansas, instructed the women during the week.

ODESSA REUNION

Reunion for Central Missouri Stake opened here on Sunday, July 17, with a larger number of campers than in previous years, according to the report of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who was present on the first Sunday to present the morning sermon and to participate in the prayer service. The reunion was organized under Stake President Harry Simons and Bishop Willard Becker, assisted by Missionary John Puckett. Emery Jennings, president of Far West Stake, preached the evening series of sermons. Apostle Gleazer and Missionary Albert Scherer returned on Thursday. Mrs. Harry Simons presented classes for the women.

In this issue tribute is paid to many devoted members in Colorado and Michigan who made possible two houses of worship. Behind every church building the church owns, there are similar stories of pioneer efforts in cottage meetings, rented halls, and inadequate chapels. All of these served as steppingstones to the better appointed and more permanent churches of today.

"Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." Unity and inspiration usually result when every member is laboring together to erect a church home. We do not work alone, nor for our own glory in such projects; we are workers together with God. Like Nehemiah in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem, we are filled with the consciousness that we are "doing a great work, so that I [we] cannot come down." It is too bad for some branches that they ever stop building. "There is no limit to the amount of good one can do if he does not care who gets the credit." You who have rolled up your sleeves on a building project or to decorate or renovate your church; tasks where your part is lost in the total result, know they also have spiritual values. Those who thus shared in the group effort got genuine satisfactions from the formal "consecration" or "dedication" of that which they had helped to create and beautify which others could not get. We are all called to work "with an eye single to the glory of God."

W. BLAIR McCLAIN (page 5) discusses "Brotherly Love" and "Reconciliation." He was born in Paris, Tennessee, August 22, 1911, and was baptized and confirmed by his father, W. L. McClain, August, 1920.

In 1931 he was graduated from William Chrisman High School in Independence, Missouri. The same year he married Gwendolyn Coon. They have three boys: Kenneth Blair, 17; Daryl La Rue, 16; Alan Dayl, 9.

After being graduated from high school, Brother McClain farmed two years. In 1933 the family moved to town, and then he worked for the Butler Manufacturing Company, rising to the position of manager of the purchasing department before he went under appointment in 1946.

His hobbies are photography and athletics. He was a member of the Independence Men's Club and of the Kansas City Chamber of Commerce.

Brother McClain was ordained a deacon in 1939, a priest in 1940, an elder in 1942, and a high priest at the General Conference of 1946. He had served as pastor of the Independence Second Branch for about two years before he began his present assignment.

ARTHUR A. OAKMAN (page 9) wrote for the Herald issues of April 16 and April 2. His introduction may be found in the latter issue.

MERVA (BRADSHAW) BIRD (page 11) was born near Bellingham, Washington, December 6, 1920. She was baptized at Seattle in 1929.

On March 29, 1942, she married Ivan Bird, who holds the office of priest. They have four children: Ivan Lee, 5½; Diana, 4; Robert, 3; Gerald, 1.

Sister Bird was valedictorian of the Licking (Missouri) High School in 1939. She received a scholarship to Southwest Missouri State Teachers College at Springfield, Missouri, which she attended from 1939 to 1942.

Her hobbies are collecting rocks and Indian relics. She also likes to design and sew clothing. She is a member of the Havenwood Co-operative Development Association, a church group near North Kansas City.

The Heat and Burden of the Day

“To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven.” — Ecclesiastes 3: 1.

WHY MUST PEOPLE GO TO CHURCH in hot weather? That is a question much in need of exploration, because so many of them do not. A hot day can cut the size of the congregation almost as sharply as a cold one. The minister up in front wonders as seriously about the question as anybody, as he strives to preserve his dignity in the midst of perspiration. There is an answer to the question, undoubtedly, and if we struggle along, we shall come to it presently.

It was very warm in our church last Communion Sunday. All the windows were open and the people scattered around, sitting as far apart as they could, just to put as much distance as possible between their too-warm bodies. Anything that radiated even a little heat added to the misery. Men in the pews had their coats off, and women fanned themselves with quarterlies, hymnals (which could be redesigned with this in mind), and battered cardboard fans donated by hopeful local institutions. There was a general look of patient resignation and exhaustion on most faces. It must have taken a heroic sense of duty to get many of the folk out of their homes to church.

FOR THE MEN IN CHARGE of the service, there was a fan concealed under the communion table, oscillating in a wide arc and delivering a comforting stream of air; but still they sweltered in their coats, kept on in respect to the place and the occasion.

To the scriptural minded, stray passages came limping in fragments out of a wilted memory, like the dreadful prophecy of St. John in which “men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God.” We have heard tired men swearing in the sun on a torrid day, and it was pitiful to hear. Then Peter threatened that “the elements shall melt with fervent heat.” In such weather, a few more quotes like that could “go to the head” and do harm; so only one more. Jesus told a parable in which some of the workers complained of discrimination against those “which have borne the burden and heat of the day.”

That last one is a meaningful phrase, and as the minister’s eye roams over his congregation on a hot summer morning, he thinks that they, too, are bearing “the heat and burden of the day.”

RETURNING FROM such detours and digressions which, under the baleful eye of the sun, may be excused in part, we come once again to our main question: Why must people go to church in hot weather? Or in very cold weather? Or during rains or heavy snows? Or any kind of extreme? There are many answers, the following being among them:

1. Every person of character and achievement does something he doesn’t like because he knows it is good for him. He studies when he would rather play. He works when he would rather rest. He listens despite an inclination to talk. He goes to church when it would take much less effort to remain at home. The man or woman who stays home on Sunday is ruled by the body; those who go to church are “led by the spirit.”

2. Whoever sinks down in pure physical comfort reverts to the beast which is a part of his inheritance.

He denies the spirit which is the eternal part of his personality. He pays tribute only to the dust of the earth, to which his body must return; he denies homage to God, to whom his impoverished and starving soul must sometime go for judgment.

3. There must be continuity in life. We eat and sleep every day. We do not halt the necessary operations of life because it is hot or cold. We cannot quit work for any slight disinclination. All really effective organizations operate on regular schedule, regardless of temperature and human frailty. They say the devil never takes a vacation, and why should the church be shut while hell is still open? You can’t run religion like a winter resort, with all the customers going north in the spring.

The kingdom of God can never be built by the chicken-hearted who are afraid of the weather. Those who stay at home for the thermometer may find themselves like the foolish virgins, standing in the dark, with no oil for their lamps, outside the locked doors of the house of the Bridegroom.

THE BASIC REASON for all church attendance is, of course, our constant need of contact with the Spirit of God, and of fellowship with other people who are also seeking him. Whatever we do, we can do it better in groups than we can alone. This applies to our spiritual life and development as it does to other aspects of our life—economic, educational, and social. Regardless of the “heat and burden of the day” the needs and hungers of the soul should be satisfied by regular attendance at church.

Across the Desk

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Robert S. Farnham, Lamoni Stake President:

I want to express to you my feeling about the splendid administration of Yopeca Camp by Brother Carl Mesle. I think that his administration was one of the best that I have ever had the opportunity to observe in any of my camp experiences. While it is true that he had an excellent staff to assist him (not commenting on the Farnhams' work), he still had plenty of vexing problems to face. He shows considerable ability in the leading of young people and has an excellent way of meeting problems that arise and handling them with the least amount of friction. He certainly worked hard, and the careful thought he gave to questions which arose contributed in no small measure to the success of the camp.

Some very interesting material for this section has lately been received from our missionaries in Society Islands Mission.

The following is from Elder F. Edward Butterworth in charge:

I hardly know how to begin this letter, I am so thrilled with the contact we made with the Governor of the Colony just a few days ago. But first I wish to express our appreciation for your interest in Tahiti. It brings us closer to headquarters than we have been before. The Mervins speak of you and your good wife quite often. You can't imagine how much good their trip to America has done for this mission.

The new Governor is a delegate of France to the United Nations and has represented France in that capacity in America, Britain, and Russia. His wife is the daughter of the present French National Minister. His speech of acceptance as Governor of the Tahitian Republic was to be one of the most notable events in the history of Tahiti. It was in respect to this speech that Brother Breckenridge and I were approached by the local authorities. We were invited to the Governor's mansion to record the speech for later transcription over the local radio station.

This is the first time in the history of our mission here in Tahiti that an alien minister has been invited to the private reception of city and colonial officials in the Governor's mansion where each individual is personally introduced to the Governor. In past years we were merely a part of the general reception for the public.

Two hours after the new Governor arrived in the Colony, a police escort arrived at the mission headquarters to escort us to the Governor's mansion. We, however, were already en route in our lovely Station Wagon. The officials of the colony were already assembled in front of the mansion house when we arrived. With two policemen carrying our tape recorder and equipment we passed through the milling officials and entered the living room of the Governor's Mansion, where we immediately set up our equipment for registering the speech of the new Governor.

As soon as we were set to go, both the old and new Governors with aides in flashing uniforms approached us for the formal introductions. We responded in the quality of French which we acquired in the United States and were well received. We later learned that he speaks English, French, and Russian. The Governor asked us if we were ready to record. We informed him that we were, whereupon he immediately signaled the guards to "fait entrer les officiels." Aside from the new Governor we were the center of attraction since it was our first appearance at such a gathering, and since our tape recorder is the only one on the Island.

We almost burst with pride as we listened to our recording being played back over the local radio station for the whole of French Oceania. Please thank Russell Resch for getting such an excellent microphone for us. It certainly looked professional sitting in the center of the Government headquarters of French Oceania, and seemed to blend with the colorful braided uniforms. I can never thank him enough for teaching me how to hook up the machine for transmitting through his local equipment. No one here knew how to do it since it is the first tape recorder to come to Tahiti. Although I had never done it before, I remembered how Russell did it, and several minutes before the hour scheduled for the broadcast we had the machine ready to go.

As soon as the broadcast was over, the phone in the radio station rang. It was the chief radio engineer who was with the Governor during the broadcast. He conveyed the Governor's compliments and his own as well.

We have made a contact that may change our whole outlook so far as the French Government and the Church are concerned. We are awaiting the opportune time to approach the Governor about the matter of discrimination of which you spoke in your last letter. We are rather of the opinion that he will receive us favorably since this experience.

Apostle Matthew Cowley will return to Tahiti next month for the dedication of their new building. There is no doubt about it; their building will be the finest one in Tahiti. Still we have the most picturesque spot in Tahiti. I have begun to inform the natives here in the yard that we intend to move all the houses out of the yard. There is bound to be some unfavorable reaction to this move, but it must be done sometime so I accept the responsibility. If I'm crucified for it, I can always return to America and continue my ministry. I intend to lay a good foundation for my successor. If this had been done years ago we would be miles ahead today. It is rumored that forty new missionaries have been assigned to Tahiti by the Mormon Church. Their church was wavering in Tahiti so they are making an all-out effort to build it up again. They are bound to have a measure of success. Thanks to you and to the church officials we are now better equipped to meet them.

Your very appearance here would do more for us than all the wealth of the Mormon Church. Please consider that very carefully. You are very much in demand in America, too, but remember that the only mission called a difficult mission in the Doctrine and Covenants is the Tahitian mission. We are also one of the oldest missions in the church, if not the oldest, started in 1843.

In a later letter:

The members of the church are waiting eagerly for your reply about a trip to Tahiti. I think it is imperative that you come. There are some problems here that cannot be handled by us alone. These problems involve us and the Mormon church. It is reported that Apostle Cowley is to approach the Governor about the difference in the two faiths upon his return this fall. He informed his people upon his last visit that we are deceiving the people with the year 1830 on our sign in front of the church. He said the Reorganized church was not organized until 1860, therefore we have no right to the year 1830. We, of course, are able to answer this silly charge without difficulty, but our station in respect to his is humble indeed. He has bulged the local treasury with Salt Lake dollars, bought a 1949 mechanically operated garbage disposal truck for the city, and a thousand other things. We cannot compete with them along those lines. The reason they are so hurt now is due to the fact that we are able to hold our own members by telling them the truth about our own church. They hate to think that it is costing them so much money without the results they had anticipated.

The Question of Brotherly Love and Reconciliation

By ELBERT A. SMITH

An address given by the presiding patriarch, Elbert A. Smith, before the Priesthood Institute, Independence, Missouri, at the worship period on May 6, 1949.

Now abideth faith, hope, and charity, but the greatest of these is charity. The Book of Mormon makes love and charity rather synonymous. "Charity is the pure love of God." We might read the text that I have just quoted: "Now abideth faith, hope, and love, but the greatest of these is love." I am not thinking of the emotional bubbling up of good will that we feel during a fine prayer meeting or communion service or during a reunion. Those experiences are lovely in their time and place, but they do not mean anything unless they carry over into our lives. I am thinking of that love which "endureth all things, beareth all things, and hopeth all things"—which endures and expresses itself day by day and month by month throughout life.

A small boy of my acquaintance came home from Sunday school where the lesson had been on love. He was full of the subject and burst in upon the family with his chest swelled up and declared, "I love everybody in the whole world—some I do, and some I don't." Probably many of us adults—even in the ministry—could make that confession of faith. Theoretically we love everybody—but some we do, and some we don't. It is true that some men make it difficult for us to work with them and love them. However, I believe that in most cases we can break down the "iron curtain" if we have the necessary patience, tolerance, wisdom, and strength of character.

The Apostle Paul was a master at saying a great deal in a few words. Perhaps he never put more into a few words than when he wrote, "We are laborers together with God." Breaking that down into parts we might read it: we are workers; we are workers together; we are workers together with God. I believe that you are all minded to be workers. I think that you desire to work with God. I wish to stress particularly the statement, "We are workers together." I have seen so many branches and districts and occasionally the general church disturbed and to a degree disrupted when the ministry could not or would not work together. On the other hand, I have seen the joy and the strength that come when we learn to work together in peace. So I would exhort you most earnestly to give great attention to the task of learning to work together. Remember, I pray you, the divine statement, "He has given us the ministry of reconciliation." If we are to work together successfully under the blessing of heaven, we must have brotherly love.

BROTHERLY LOVE between brethren is not like the love between a man and a woman which the French call "the grand passion," but it may become a grand passion. It is based fundamentally on good will. Good will is not something that either we have or do not have and can do nothing about. It can be acquired, and it can be cultivated. It may develop to that level where a man will "lay down his life for his friend." Jesus called us friends and gave his life for us. We may not be required to give our lives for our friends to the extent that we shall die for them, but we are required to give our lives for them and with them in the service of working together and with God.

Sometimes the gospel of reconciliation may be difficult to obey, but when we obey it wholeheartedly, it works. I will give you two testimonials from my own experience. I knew two men very well. Both of them were friends I esteemed highly, but they had a very poor opinion of each other. Their backgrounds were entirely different. Their temperaments and mannerisms were different. Their opinions on church matters, particularly during the time when the church was divided, differed. In almost everything they seemed to be poles apart. They irritated each other; they seemed to be poison to each other. One of these men was in administrative work; the other was pastor of a large congregation. One time I visited the pastor, who was my close friend. He took me to his home for the week end. Together we ate, slept, planned the services for Sunday, and carried them through. We had a splendid time. As I was leaving, this pastor said, "Brother Elbert, have you any requests to make or any suggestions to offer?" I said, "Yes, I wish you would invite the man in charge of this field to spend a week end with you and treat him exactly as you have treated me." He looked disturbed for a moment but said, "I will do so." And he wrote the letter of invitation and mailed it before I left his office. Then I had a little session with the administrative officer. The plan worked. The pastor was as good as his word. He treated the administrative officer as he had treated me. I think it was the beginning of a better understanding between them. Coming to understand each other, they came to like each other. Over the years they developed a fine respect and admiration for each other and became very good friends. I rejoiced in that result.

The ministry of reconciliation brings joy to our souls and peace to the church. Remember you are yourselves to become reconciled to your brethren, and you are to be peacemakers, helping others to become reconciled one to another when necessary. "Blessed are the peacemakers; they shall be called the children of God."

THE OTHER INCIDENT involved a member of the Quorum of Twelve and myself when I was in the Presidency. This good man, returning to Independence from his field, seemed to be disturbed over some conditions and reports that had reached him. I was the only member of the Presidency in the office, and he came to me day by day for several days with his complaints. Finally one morning I myself got out "on the wrong side of the bed," figuratively speaking, and we two had a few words. The words were not many, but they were too many and spoken in too much heat. The apostle seized his hat and went away to his own office. I turned to my desk and tried to work, but I seemed to hear a voice say, "When thou bringest thy gift to the altar, and rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee, go first and make thy peace with thy brother, and then come and bring thy gift to the altar." I had a debate with myself on the proposition, "Resolved, that I am right, and he is wrong, and there is nothing I can do about it." I lost the debate. I went over to the office of the Twelve and found the apostle at his desk and said to him, "Brother, I am not here to say that you were altogether right, and I was altogether wrong, but I am here to ask your forgiveness for my losing my temper." He sprang to his feet, reached out his hand and said, "Brother Elbert, I was on the point of going over to ask you to forgive me." I believe that usually when we will go more than half way something like that will be the result. My testimony is that the gospel of reconciliation will work when we take it seriously and permit it to work.

A New Church Opens at

Royal Oak, Michigan

SUNDAY AFTERNOON February 27, marked the culmination of many months of planning and hard work on the part of the members of the Detroit Branch. Last October 3, on the opening day of General Conference, the ground-breaking ceremony was conducted which started our building project on the new Royal Oak Church.

The new building is located on North Main Street just north of Crooks Road in Royal Oak, Michigan. The lot has 120 foot frontage and is 100 feet deep. The building is 26 by 69 feet with an office wing on the east side of the chancel and an entrance foyer 17 by 20 feet, making an ell on the north end of the building.

The lower auditorium is designed especially to accommodate junior church facilities, featuring a chancel, lectern, altar, and pulpit. The main floor is concrete over steel floor joists which eliminates posts from the lower auditorium. The rest rooms and lounges are under the main foyer entrance. The furnace room also incorporates kitchen facilities for the women's department. Classrooms are to be provided by special drapes at a later date. The beginners department has a special room of its own under the pastor's study.

The main auditorium features a beautiful chancel with pulpit, lectern, altar, and communion table, with space for a choir. Immediately behind the altar and elevated where the congregation can see, is a beautiful baptistry finished in light blue tile. When not in use the deep wine drapes covering the window arch are used for a decorative background for a worship center. The pastor's study, east of the chancel, serves as an excellent place for administration to the sick and as an assembly room for the ministers and choir prior to the processional.

Ample closet space is provided for storage. The deacons have a closet of their own which makes their work much more dignified. The foyer is closed off from the main auditorium by means of folding doors and may be used as an overflow facility for special service.

The seating capacity of the main auditorium is approximately 165 plus the overflow facility of approximately fifty more. Immediately in front of the front seats is a panel rail which closes the seating area and separates the chancel from the nave. The building is lighted by hanging, indirect fixtures. A Hammond electric organ was installed before the building was opened.

The exterior of the building is brick veneer over cinder block with slate colored asphalt shingle roof.

The service of consecration was in charge of W. Blair McClain, Branch President, assisted by his counselors, Elder E. V. Osborn, Elder C. T. Heaviland, and congregational pastor, Elder Rigby Leighton.

The processional hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy," was sung with the congregation standing. Following the call to worship an octet sang "Build Thee More Stately Mansions," by Andrews. The invocation was given by Elder E. V. Osborn followed by an organ response. The scripture lesson, I Kings 8: 56-61, was read by Elder C. T. Heaviland. Prefatory remarks and introduction of Apostle Arthur A. Oakman were given by Elder W. Blair McClain. Donna Lee Mitchell then sang, "Bless This House." Apostle Oakman presented President Israel A. Smith, who gave the principal sermon of consecration.

The sermon was followed by the taking of an offering for the building fund. Bishop Carlson gave the remarks, and Elder S. C. Sharer gave the offering prayer.

Acknowledgments were made to Apostle Jensen, Apostle Gleazer, and Bishop Chesworth for their good work leading up to this moment. Mayor William Hayword of Royal Oak was in attendance and spoke a voice of welcome to our people, followed by Elder Harold McAllister, the previous Royal Oak pastor, and Elder Rigby Leighton, the present pastor. Evangelist George Booth expressed his pleasure in the acquisition of this building.

The consecration prayer was given by Apostle Arthur A. Oakman as one of the high lights of the service.

The closing hymn was "Now Thank We All Our God," followed

Consecration Sermon

By ISRAEL A. SMITH

Given February 27, 1949, at Royal Oak, Michigan

APOSTLE OAKMAN, President McClain, Pastor Leighton, Mayor Hayward, Saints of the Detroit area. It is indeed a pleasure for me to be here and a distinct privilege to have a part in this opening service of the church here in Royal Oak. I trust I may bring at least a small offering to the altar.

"Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it. Except the Lord keep the city the watchman walketh but in vain."—Psalm 127: 1. This is a favorite text for use on occasions of this kind. I come to join with you in extending our blessings on this church and the faithful Saints who will worship herein.

Altars are as ancient, almost, as man himself. I can visualize some primitive man who, noting the manifestations of nature, the recurrence of the seasons, the revolutions of the stars and the sun and the moon, must have conceived the idea that there is a universal God, a Creator of all he saw around him. We have reason to believe that the gospel of salvation was preached to many of the ancient worthies, as far back as Abraham and even back into Adam's time.

The first reference that I find with respect to altars is in Genesis 8, when Noah builded an altar unto the Lord and offered burnt offerings. We read with considerable interest of Abraham and Abimilech at the time Abraham perfected his agreement with that king whereby he could run his herds and his flocks in certain areas: the record says that Abraham planted a grove and called upon the name of the Lord.

We are led to ask what kind of ancient altars these were, and we find these instructions given to Moses in an early day.

An altar of earth shalt thou make unto me . . . and in all places where I record my name I will come unto thee and I will bless thee. And if thou wilt make an altar of stone thou shalt not build it of hewn stone, for if thou lift up thy tool upon it thou hast polluted it.—Exodus 20: 24, 25.

This indicates that the Lord recognized the labor of one's hands, the sacrifice of manual labor. I have always noticed with a great deal of interest this promise that wherever God would write his name, there he would be; without that name being written on the altar, the altar would be without effect.

Solomon in his notable prayer at the dedication of that wonderful temple prayed that, "All thy people of the earth may know thy name to fear thee as do thy people Israel and that they may know this house which we have builded is called by that name." That is the important thing. There is another interesting story of early day worthies in the account of Isaac and Rebecca going down into Beersheba. It is a simple story, but very significant.

And he went up from thence to Beersheba and the Lord appeared unto him the same night and said, I am the God of Abraham, thy father, fear not, for I am with thee and will bless thee and multiply thy seed for my servant Abraham's sake. And he [Isaac] builded an altar there and called upon the name of the Lord, and pitched his tent there, and there Isaac's servants digged a well.—Genesis 26: 23-25.

Here were three things set forth, an altar, a tent or residence, and something that would serve the community. The first was an obligation primarily of Isaac himself: even before he provided a place for his romantic wife, he erected an altar and called upon the name of the Lord. That is every man's obligation and duty. Second, he pitched his tent there, providing a domicile for his wife, which is a primary duty of every man; and the third thing was a duty to society, and that could be performed by his servants. And the record says, "Isaac's servants digged a well."

Strange as it may seem, there were races of people in those early days who built structures of stone that have crumbled into dust in the centuries; but here is a simple story of a God-fearing man who made a record, and that record comes down to the peoples through the centuries and for all time.

It is and was a far cry from those crude altars erected by Abraham and by Isaac and others to the altars that we see about us in our modern churches. As I said in the beginning, it is an extreme pleasure for me to be here in this well-appointed, suitable, and appropriate shrine. It undoubtedly is a time of great rejoicing, especially with you whose sacrifices have made this possible. The building is complete and represents your labors. My pleasure is nothing compared with the emotions which flood the hearts and minds of you who have helped bring this about.

A noted scholar once said that "Architecture is the art which so disposes and adorns the edifices of man for whatsoever use that the sight of them contributes to his mental health, power, and pleasure," and we would add spiritual power. And may we not testify today that that has been done here? What is architecture? An ornamental table or fluted column tends to make a structure architecture. A building can be made of four walls and a roof and yet not be architecture. It is just a structure, and architecture is something that is added to bring something more than a place to occupy, to bring the aesthetic to the minds of those who worship here.

Ruskin in his Seven Lamps of Architecture said, and I think he was dealing with fundamentals:

I do not want a marble church for every village. Nay, I do not want marble churches at all for their own sake, but for the sake of the spirit that would build them.

Is that not what makes this building sacred to you? And he goes on,

The church has no need of visible splendor; its power is independent of them; its purity is in some degree opposed to them. The simplicity of a pastoral sanctuary [that is, the fields and the woods] is lovelier than the majesty of an urban city temple, and it may be more than questioned whether to the people such majesty has ever been the source of any increase in piety, but to the builders it has been.

So it is here with you in Royal Oak and must ever be. "It is not the church we want, but the sacrifice; not the emotion of admiration, but the act of adoration; not the gift, but the giver." These last are the words of John Rushton.

Yes, it is a far cry from those simple altars of many centuries ago to the marvelous structures that are in the world today, such as St. Peter's in Rome, St. Paul's in London, and the third largest cathedral in the world, that of St. John the Divine in New York City. This structure has been fifty years in the building. It was planned as far back as 100 years ago. The plans have been changed at least three times. Twenty millions of dollars and more have been expended, and it will probably require ten millions more to finish it. It is a city block long and as wide as the widest boulevard. A massive pile, a veritable mountain of stone, with its transept, choirs, altars, 124 foot ceilings, 98 foot columns, immense round dome, round roof, and with many $50,000 stained glass windows. Worshipers are a tenth of a mile from the minister. I do not decry what these men of wealth have done, but I wonder if all that magnificence brings one any closer to God.

It does increase the emotion of admiration. Elihu Root says, "Build that great temple, that cathedral as a contribution of America to the spiritual life of mankind, and thereby help save our souls." That would be a consummation devoutly to be wished, of course.

I walked into St. John's some years ago. It is a marvelous structure. I thought it was a little cold, and I was reminded of a little poem by Helen Welsheimer:

"In New York Cathedral," she said, "I tried to pray, but the gold carved ceiling got in my way; so I came outside where a white star's fire burned on the tip of the slimmest spire of the famous shrine, and I said a prayer that I couldn't find when I knelt in there."

What a contrast with the altar of Moses when he said the Lord had commanded him "to build an altar of earth and thou shalt sacrifice thereon, thy burnt offerings and thy peace offerings and thy sheep and thy oxen, in all places where I record my name I will come unto thee and I will bless thee."

And in the case of all of these structures, we cannot but ask the question, Is His name written there? Have they builded with the Lord? They build in vain if they do not build with the Lord. Let the millionaires stand in awe, for at least it may emphasize man's insignificance.

Yes, I have seen St. John's—cold, massive, canyonlike. I would not belittle what men have done, but I am much more impressed by what God and man have done, say at Hoover Dam, where men's servants after a fashion have digged a well. Isaac's servants digged a well; something in the service of humanity and mankind. I do not envy the largest of those men of wealth. Money paid out of excess cannot be sacrifice. Ruskin, in The First Fruits, comes to my mind again. He suggests that in the case of Abel, his sacrifice was acceptable unto the Lord because he gave to the Lord of his first fruits.

I should like the spirit among all our people to be what I am sure it is here. I find a prose poem in Exodus, after Moses had told Israel what would be required of them, that is worth reading:

And all the congregation of the children of Israel departed from the presence of Moses and they came, everyone whose heart stirred him up and everyone whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the Lord's offerings to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation, and for all his service, and for all the holy garments. And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, and brought bracelets, and earrings, and rings and tablets, all jewels of gold; and every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the Lord. And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands and brought that which they had spun, both of blue and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine linen . . . The children of Israel brought a willing offering unto the Lord, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring for all manner of work, which the Lord had commanded to be made by the hand of Moses.—Exodus 35: 20-22, 25, 29.

These offerings required the heart. You remember Solomon prayed for a "heart of understanding." Not something as a result of pressure or compulsion, but free and willing gifts, offerings representing the sacrifices of the people. I am sure that is what has taken place here. This structure has been built because of the willing hearts of you people of the Detroit area and your free-will offerings. Here, in the years gone by, have faithful Abrahams established a well of faith through sacrifice; and later Isaacs have come along to build on what they had built in those earlier years.

Some of the willinghearted who have had a part in this work have undoubtedly passed on. I have been in many places among our congregations where they were many years in the building. You folks have been more fortunate. How happy would they be who have gone on if they could see what you see and what we see and hear today. Perhaps, indeed, they do know.

Yes, by every standard set by the Lord, I would say, this is a fit shrine. God was in the burning bush. Jesus went into the desert for spiritual power. Abraham planted trees and called upon the name of the Lord. Isaac built an earthen altar and Noah an altar without tools. Sacrifice! Sacrifices.

In reading about Abraham planting a tree and calling upon the name of the Lord, I am reminded of Bryant's beautiful forest hymn and wonder if that isn't where he got his inspiration, and from this I wish to quote:

The groves were God's first temples
Ere man learned to hew the shaft
And lay the Architrave
And spread the roof upon them;
Ere he framed the lofty vault to gather
And roll back the sound of anthems,
There in the darkening wood, amidst the cool and the silence,
He knelt down and offered to the Mighty his solemn thanks and supplication.

Let us attend the prayer of this simple and pure child of God:

Father, thy hand hath reared these venerable columns. Thou didst rear this verdant roof. Thou didst look upon the naked earth and forthwith rose all these fair ranks of trees. They and thy son budded and shook their green leaves in the breeze and shot toward heaven. The century-living crow, whose birth was in their tops, grew old and died among their branches, till at last they stood and now they stand, massive and tall and dark, fit shrine for humble worshiper to hold communion with his Maker.

May we not reflect here today, as did this simple-hearted man: "Here are seen no traces of man's pomp or pride. No silks rustle; no jewels shine. No en-

Prayer of Dedication

By ARTHUR A. OAKMAN

Given at the dedication of the church at Royal Oak, Michigan.

O God, the Eternal Father, we stand reverently in thy presence, upon this hallowed ground, and in this sacred spot to present ourselves before thee in this house which has been builded by thy people. We feel that thou dost look down in mercy and in compassion, in love and in approval upon what is here represented, and we believe, with all our hearts that thou wilt be pleased to take up thine abode in this place in the days that are to come.

We come before thee conscious of our sins and our limitations. We know that in our flesh there dwells no good thing, and that all we have and all we are, and all that we ever hope to be in righteousness shall be made possible by thy forgiving grace. We come, therefore, to bring ourselves into this house of worship and unto this altar, to offer ourselves, our sinful selves, to ask thee, O God, of power and grace, and of truth, that thou wouldst recognize our coming and touch us with the presence of thy Spirit. May our hearts be cheered and our burdens of sin rolled away. May the eyes of the blind be opened and the tongue of the dumb sing. May the altar here presented, which has been designed to give beauty and grace to the ordinances of thy house, ordinances which thou hast designed, for our salvation, be a place of blessing. Young people will come here to be married. When they come may they go forth again to build homes centered in the kingdom of God amongst men with a touch and a sense of thy blessing. Some will come here to pray. May they find their burdens lightened as they do so because here shall dwell the consciousness of thy presence. Some shall come to the altar to receive the Communion of the Lord's Supper and when they do, may they receive it in remembrance of thee. Some shall enter into the watery grave here displayed, to make a covenant to serve thee through good and evil report. May minister and candidate alike be blessed, uplifted, and strengthened by the fact that thou dost dwell here by the presence of thy Spirit.

And from this spot in which we stand shall go forth the preaching of thy word, O God, in the name of Jesus Christ thy Son, we pray that those who enter this pulpit shall be disposed to preach nothing but the truth; that the opinions and philosophies of men may be used only with wisdom and discretion as they shall make luminous the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, our Lord. And we pray that when they stand thus to deliver themselves that the promise shall be fulfilled which thou hast made, yea, that their utterances shall be scripture to thy church; shall be the power of God unto salvation because they are indited by the Spirit. Yea, hear our prayer in this, for it is only through thy word that thy people can be sanctified, and that thy word can be heard and received only under the commission which comes from thee by men of probity and of uprightness who yield themselves willingly to the direction of thy Spirit.

Bless the readers who stand behind the lectern. May thy spirit be with them too. Bless the musicians, for the ministry of music is as wings to the spirit.

And we pray especially for the children who shall meet in the lower auditorium. We feel that if our Lord were here, the first place he would go would be to them. May those who worship in the auditorium beneath this one find a place of sanctity and of beauty; the homes of thy people strengthened as a result, and little children taught the gospel as is pleasing in thy sight.

And from the deacon who waits at the door to the minister who preaches thy word, may the great peace of thy Spirit prevail. We ask thee for thy servant who presides over this group, that thou bless him as he desires to serve thee and thy people, and grant that, to the gifts which are already manifest in his personality, shall be added the grace of thy spirit and the peace and the experience which comes with the years.

May this house be a house where people bear one another's burdens, and where the law of Christ is thus fulfilled. We pray that those who go out of this place shall not consume selfishly upon themselves that which they shall here receive. As they come here for bread of life, may they take it to others who are hungering for it, some of whom are in this city, those who have rights here because they are thy sheep who need to hear thy voice through the preaching of the gospel.

To all these purposes, and many more, is this house consecrated. May the vision of Zion be distilled through this house of worship into the homes of thy people. And may this vision so knit and unite those homes and bring discipline into the members of each family that perchance here there might be prepared rich gifts to be sent up for the building of Zion. Unless this purpose is also set within this shrine, it shall fall short of that which thou dost desire.

And, therefore, in the name of Jesus Christ we ask thee to accept this prayer and answer it according to thy will. May peace and blessing abide in this house from this time forward. May every impulse to do good which is inspired of thee which cometh here, find fruitage in the lives of thy people who are before thee, O God, upon whom thou dost look with the eye of love and affection. In the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

A few weeks later I preached in a little branch at a distance on the subject of forgiveness and reconciliation. At the close of my sermon a man came to me and said, "Brother Elbert, the trouble is that in Independence you have two laws; there is one law for you big fellows, but you have another law for us little fellows out here in the sticks. You tell us to forgive and be reconciled." So I told him this little story that I have just told you, and I said it was never a question, "Were we too big to come under the law?" The question was, "Were we big enough?" In this matter there is only one law for the priesthood, and that is the law of love.

There is a tradition that when John the beloved was very old the young men would carry him into the church in his chair and seat him before the congregation and always he would lift up his hand and deliver this one admonition: "Little children, love one another." When we love the brethren, we can work with them, and we can be workers together with God.

Fort Collins, Colorado, Branch

THE FORT COLLINS BRANCH was organized on October 8, 1916, by Apostle James Kelley. At the time of the organization, there were twenty-six members, seven of whom are still on the roll. Many persons have come and gone since that time. The present enrollment is 169.

From the time of the organization of the branch until the first property was purchased in February, 1925, services were held in four different rented buildings. District President Bruce E. Brown advised and assisted in the purchasing and fitting of the first property. This building was poorly located and lacked needed facilities, but was used until May, 1940, when, under the leadership of the Pastor K. G. Broliar, it was sold, and the people began looking forward to the establishment of a new church home.

For sometime, morning services were held in the chapel of a local mortuary, and later in a community center where all services were conducted.

Apostle Clyde Ellis approved the purchase of a large lot in a splendid location just two blocks from the post office and the main artery of travel through the town. Building on this lot was begun November 1, 1941. It was made ready for the first services, even though unfinished, on March 22, 1942. Borrowed chairs and temporary lighting were used. The branch continued to add facilities until the building was completed, and formal opening services were held June 27, 1943.

The building is forty-eight feet long and thirty feet wide with a full basement which, at present, is cross-curtained for classwork. In addition to the lower auditorium, the basement contains rest rooms, storerooms, the kitchen and gas heating plant. The upper floor contains an auditorium which seats 150 persons, two classrooms, a vestibule, and a baptismal font which is situated under a large oval-topped window in the front of the church. On a raised platform behind the rostrum and in front of the font, there is space for the choir.

The building, of cinder block faced with light tapestry brick, was designed and its construction supervised by Brother Terrill S. Moore. Many of the Saints and several nonmembers contributed labor amounting to hundreds of dollars. Among the donors of labor was Brother L. C. Reneau, who, although past seventy, worked every day the building was under construction, and nursed the large yard into a beautiful green lawn. He cared for the grounds for the following two years.

All stages of planning, financing, and constructing were under general church approval. Twenty-five hundred dollars was the maximum indebtedness. This was cleared, and the building was dedicated on June 24, 1945. President Israel A. Smith delivered the dedicatory address.

Fort Collins is a beautiful little city with a population of 22,000, situated at the foot of the Rocky Mountains at the gateway to famed Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park, about midway between Denver, Colorado, and Cheyenne, Wyoming. It is the county seat and home of the Colorado A and M College.

New Purchase in Independence

It is with a great deal of pleasure that the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric write to make acknowledgment to the Church of our appreciation of a memorial gift recently made to the Church by Sister Estella White, widow of Brother Mark S. White. This gift was the purchase price of the property located on Truman Road directly across the street from our Sanitarium and Hospital. The tract includes about five acres, which provides considerable space for future development. The beautiful two and a half story frame and brick home was built in 1915. It is a property that has long been desired by the General Church officials, but the time and conditions have never seemed opportune to purchase it.

The property is being designated as a memorial to Brother and Sister White, and a bronze marker will be appropriately placed. The growing needs of the church for the care of our aged and convalescents make this a most acceptable gift at this time, and we believe that the property makes a fitting memorial to a couple who, through a period of a lifetime, have given consistent support to the work of the Church.

Some Thoughts on Kingdom-building

By MERVA BIRD

IS IT TRUE that our people are awakening at last? Zion—the hope and dream that has beckoned us on and inspired us for over a century—is it finally to become a reality? All through the church there is an increased restlessness due to the realization that indeed the time is growing short. The voice of warning is sounded not only from our pulpits, but over the air waves, in the newspaper, and wherever people meet. We are faced with the knowledge that Zion is the only answer to the world's social and economic crises, and with that knowledge comes the tremendous responsibility of showing to the world the Zionitic way of life.

Man has tried every solution that could be devised, but all have failed to the extent that they ignored divine law and the basic elements of Christian living. Force can't possibly prevail for long, and that type of society which has to rely on force for its survival is destined to fail, as has been demonstrated over and over again in the history of mankind. Only the plan of God and a people united in their efforts to live that plan can triumph in the long run. Yet why has that plan been ignored for so long while men beat their plowshares into swords and watch their loved ones suffer or die as the price exacted by Mars?

The wisdom of even wise men seems to have perished, while they grope vainly for solutions to the many perplexing and tragic problems of the day. Has our church with its divine origin and purpose been hiding its light under a bushel? The peoples of the world are crying out for that light, and Satan ravages the races. Ours is a missionary church with a commission direct from God. Not one of us can afford to be complacent about our task a single day of our lives. We can have a part in the great adventure of the ages if we overcome the Sunday-to-Sunday lethargy binding us and respond to the words of the hymn:

Rise up, O men of God!
Have done with lesser things;
Give heart and soul and mind and strength
To serve the King of kings.

The task wasn't meant for weaklings.

The editorial in the September 18 issue of the 1948 Herald points out that the two schools of thought on the realization of Zion, while seemingly opposed at times, actually aim at a single goal. I would go one step further and say that those who are concerned with gathering according to the commandments given in the Doctrine and Covenants cannot even consider organization in the truly Zionitic sense without realizing that personal development is basic to effective organization. On the other hand one of the most important results to be derived from a Zionitic community is the increasingly higher quality of life and personal development possible. The two ideas cannot be divorced.

The Lord knew our human frailties when he repeatedly admonished the Saints to gather. He surely didn't expect us to wait until each and every member became pure in heart before we even began to obey this command. However, an unrighteous people are not going to be automatically transformed into Saints merely as a result of gathering. The realization of the ideal of Zion has to be an evolutionary process, and to ignore any phase of divine instruction is to fail in the fulfillment of Zion.

We are told through the spirit of prophecy that Zion is as near or as far away as the spiritual condition of the Saints justifies. We must prepare and educate ourselves in order to develop human building material for the kingdom. But how?

MODERN EDUCATORS say that we learn by doing. The child does not learn to read merely by being told how over and over. He must be given the tools for learning and use them himself—with the proper guidance of course. He will make mistakes, but the important thing is that he is learning through doing. Likewise, I might be told each step in detail in the process of crocheting. I might even watch another who is crocheting with facility. But I still haven't learned to crochet until I take the hook and thread in my own hands and actually work myself.

The same principle applies to every learning situation. Does it not apply to kingdom-building? We know that a child does not learn social behavior by living alone; neither can we. It takes doing to learn to live together.

The well-known story of the bundle of sticks might be used to illustrate what happens to a group—any group that strives wholeheartedly toward a common goal. Singly, the strength of each is hardly felt, but by banding together, group strength is multiplied tremendously and truly effective service can be rendered. Consecrated people sharing the ideals and aims of Zion and working together as a community to serve God can certainly be more effective in their personal development and missionary effort than the same individuals scattered throughout a city. The Lord and Zion await a people united. What are we waiting for?

THIS QUESTION is frequently heard among young people who have matured during the war and post-war years. They are eager to be about their Father's business and to see their dreams of Zion become a reality. Eager and willing as they are, they need guidance to point the way. The years pass all too quickly, and their youthful enthusiasms and energies are often dissipated in good but purposeless endeavor. Sometimes they are lost to the church entirely. They want to be doing now.

The world is waiting for a demonstration of the principles we so glibly preach. How much more effective our missionary program would be if we could point to a community and say, "See—this is how it works!"

Why don't we have Zion now? It is easy to reply that we are not ready—our lives are far from perfect. Our relationships are not on a Christlike basis. We are not keeping the celestial law, even in the matter of tithing. We are losing our young people. One could go on and on—the list is long and incriminating.

On the other side of the ledger we have God's command to gather (Doctrine and Covenants 57; 100: 5; 128: 5) and his promise of divine assistance when we prayerfully seek to obey his commands.

Reason tells us that if we are going to improve our way of living and rear our children as we are divinely commanded, our task would be much easier and more successful if we were living in a community of people with the same Zionic ideals.

Under no circumstances are we advocating mass movement to the land designated as Zion. The chaos and confusion that would result from such a step would in no way resemble our dream of Zion; it would, in fact, defeat our very purpose. The Lord has said that preparation must be made, and this preparation is essential.

BUT WHAT IS TO PREVENT a small group of like-minded people from banding together in a community project for the good of all? What is to keep them from putting into practice the principles of love, brotherly kindness, and sharing?

Why not even buy a piece of land on a co-operative basis and divide it up into homesites?

In a few instances, groups of Latter Day Saints seeking to put into actuality the principles preached since the beginning of the Restoration Movement have sought to take the initial steps in group enterprise. Having caught a glimpse of the possibilities of Zionic living, they have set their hands to the plow and their faces toward the inspiring goal to which God has called his people. Their continued growth and progress will be in direct proportion to the degree to which they are united, humble, and prayerful in seeking to do the will of the Heavenly Father in these momentous days.

The First Drink — By Edgar Pillsbury

HOW MANY TIMES have you been asked to have a drink of intoxicating liquor and, on refusing it, have the offerer say, "You don't know what you're missing," or, "It won't hurt you," or "Have one just to be sociable"?

Have you ever stopped to consider that many drunkards took their first drink for one of these reasons, then ended up walking the streets as miserable specimens of humanity?

These people didn't intend to become alcoholics—far from it. They didn't think it could happen to them. They didn't consider the fact that liquor could cause them to lose their friends, position, family, and wealth, nor did they count on becoming slaves to the drinking habit. All this had been more than they had bargained for.

Yet, suddenly, they found themselves in the appalling grip of old man booze—apparently unable to do anything about it but watch themselves go down hill to utter destruction. The sad part of it is that few are ever able to redeem themselves, and sadder still, they can never salvage the time they lost in drinking.

Some are not satisfied in ruining their own lives and the lives of their loved ones but go on to commit vile deeds while under the influence of liquor; then, for their acts, they are banished from society.

Many convicts would not be in penal servitude today had they never taken the first drink. They could readily tell you that committing murder, robbery, and other vices was far out of their sight and mind when they accepted the first drink.

This is presented in the hope that it may bring renewed courage, inspiration, and determination to many church members—also that it may indicate at least one line of action for enterprising groups that are ready to move forward. It must be pointed out that these group experiments are, of necessity, incomplete. They are in no way sponsored by the general church, as it cannot be held responsible for their success or failure. They are in their infancy and have to learn many things by trial and error method; they are subject to criticism and are targets for the adversary; they have small financial resources and many discouragements—but they are trying!

How these forgotten individuals would gladly turn back time, if it were possible, and undo the crimes they did while under the influence of liquor! Had these addicts refused the first drink, how much farther the human race may have advanced in the fields of science, medicine, and literature!

Much has been lost because of the first drink which they were too weak to refuse.

THE LOSS to the world because of drink can never be tabulated. What if Edison, Pasteur, Lincoln, Madam Curie, Thomas Jefferson, and other world leaders had been drunkards? How much longer America might have gone undiscovered if Columbus had been an alcoholic! If Dickens, Scott, and Shakespeare had been drunkards, we would have been deprived of much inspiring literature. Had Gainsborough and his contemporaries been drunkards, we would never have received the great works of art produced by their prolific brushes. Think of the fine music that would never have been written had the masters drowned their inspiration in alcohol.

Brilliant careers have come to abrupt ends because people were too weak to refuse the first drink.

The cost of liquor is high. Those who drink pay for it with their health, their reputation, their self-respect. Finally it becomes their master, and its grip grows tighter daily.

The first drink is the one drink we can all refuse. The second may be too late.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Is there any rule against using the table which serves as a Communion table in front of the pulpit for other purposes such as a worship center?

ANSWER:

There is apparently no rule or law restricting the use of the Communion table to that purpose only. There is a tendency in some of our congregations to keep one table for the sole purpose of serving Communion. Where the chancel of the church is conveniently designed, and where the facilities are adequate, this practice might be observed with good effect.

Certainly we would not want to use the Communion table for anything that is inconsistent with its central purpose. It seems that we would be justified in using the table, if necessary, for other purposes of worship. We are led to believe, however, that the greatest appreciation for the Communion service has often resulted in those congregations which used the table only for the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. It is well, also, for our members to accept as a part of their stewardship, in which they may enhance their worship experiences, the care of the linens and the preparation of the emblems for the Communion service.

Questions relative to the use of the Communion table in your branch should be referred to the pastor.

QUESTION:

Does the Bible say that the scattered Jews shall be gathered back to Palestine?

ANSWER:

Several prophecies of Scripture foretell the gathering of the Jews, though there is some difference of opinion concerning which texts refer to a gathering prior to our time, as there was a gathering prior to the Christian Era of a portion of those which had been scattered in the days of the Babylonian captivity and before then. Certain prophecies are quite clear, however, and are generally understood to refer to the period we call "the latter days." Typical of these is the following:

They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea . . . and he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.—Isaiah 11: 9, 12.

Among the prophets who predicted the return of the Jews, or of Israel, a term which has two applications, may be mentioned Jeremiah (23: 7, 8; 31: 7-9; 33: 7), Ezekiel (36: 24-28), Hosea (1: 11), Amos (9: 13-15), and Zechariah (2: 1-5; 8: 7, 8).

Originally the name Israel was given to Jacob by the Lord himself, and his posterity were known as Israelites; but with the separation of Judah from the rest of the tribes, the other tribes came to be known as the tribes of Israel, as distinguished from Judah and Levi, the latter holding the rights of Levitical priesthood. This distinction is found in some of the prophecies; for instance, the one which is here quoted. However, in the course of centuries all were more and more often referred to as the Jews.

QUESTION:

The duties of a priest are in part as follows: "He is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties."—Doctrine and Covenants 17:10.

Why then are priests asked to pass the emblems when there is a sufficient number of elders present and unemployed to do this?

ANSWER:

The reference cited has to do with the priest taking the lead in meetings when there is no elder present. It is clearly a prerogative of a priest to administer the Communion. Section 17: 22 reads: "It is expedient that the church meet together often to partake of bread and wine in remembrance of the Lord Jesus; and the elder or priest shall administer it."

Whether a priest or an elder should be called upon to pass the bread and wine would seem to be left to the discretion of the presiding elder.

Section 17: 9: "The elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost."

There is a maxim of law that says: that which is not specifically prohibited is permissible.

JAMES F. KEIR.

QUESTION:

Should the names of persons be kept on the church records who never attend our services, say that all churches are the same, work in, and have joined other churches?

ANSWER:

Many of us have faced the problems indicated in this question. One bad feature, though not the worst, is that we may have a poor attendance record in ratio to our "book membership." The worst part is that these persons are denying themselves and their families the rights and privileges of fellowship with the body of Christ.

While we heartily disapprove of such an attitude on the part of these people, it usually is not wise to remove them from our membership unless they are bringing reproach upon the church. The law specifically states what we may and should do in cases where members desire to withdraw their membership, and also where unchristianlike conduct is charged. On October 7, 1948, the General Conference passed a resolution permitting the transfer, by approval of the First Presidency, of members desiring to unite with another church. Members desiring such transfer must make application in writing and must be free from unchristianlike conduct. When such a transfer is effected, the person's name is placed "in a special 'withdrawn' file." Those against whom charges are or should be placed are dealt with in prescribed channels of church court procedure.

When a person is living a life that is up to standard, and desires to retain membership in the church, it seems that we should not dispossess him against his will. We should not uphold him in his statement that all churches are the same. We should seek to win this person back to the fold and cause him to see what he is missing in denying himself the fellowship of the church.

Jeremiah A. Gunsolley

By LEONARD J. LEA

"He, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God."—Acts 7: 55.

IN HIS EARLY LIFE, he had a hard training, so that he might be strong in the times of trial that were to come upon him. He learned to walk alone, and he did not falter when others weakened and fell by the way. God gave him a light so that he could see the path when others were lost in darkness. He counted the cost of service, and when it was time he paid on life's terms, and uttered no complaint.

Jeremiah A. Gunsolley was one of a family of thirteen children born to Noah and Mary Elizabeth (Tyrrell) Gunsolley in Delaware County, Iowa. His birth date was July 9, 1862. In that farming country conditions were not easy, and the family shared the common lot of hard work and frugality, sacrifice, and hope for better things. He continued his work on the farm and with neighbors, especially during summers, until he was twenty-two.

PREPARATION FOR SERVICE

Early in his teens his mind turned to thoughts of education, and he formed the desire to be a teacher. His instructors observed his intelligence and industry, and encouraged him to continue his study. Taking teacher's institute work, he passed the county examination and received his certificate. After this he taught in winter terms, returning to farm work as his students did when their help was needed. He studied two years at Western Normal College and Institute and received his Bachelor of Science and Accounting degrees in July, 1888.

In March, 1889, he went to Lamoni, Iowa, as superintendent of the public school work, and continued in this responsibility until May, 1894. In July of that year, he went to Salem, Massachusetts, to take charge of a business college, and remained until 1895.

During his teens, he was hungry for something to read, but conditions did not provide the money to satisfy his wants. He came upon a copy of the Book of Mormon. It was old and worn, the covers had been torn off, and the title page was missing. He read it with steadily increasing interest. He had a spiritual experience which confirmed in his mind the truth of the book. From that faith he never afterward deviated. That led him to a contact with the church, and on October 7, 1884, he was baptized with some other members of his family.

CHURCH WORK

During his service as school superintendent in Lamoni, he was active in church work. He was ordained a priest on June 5, 1892. In that same year, church leaders saw the need of a young people's organization, and he was a member of the committee appointed to draw up the plans. The meetings were held at his home. They resulted in the formation of the Zion's Religious-Literary Society, and he was its first president, serving from 1894 to 1916.

He was also active in Sunday school work. At various times, he served as pastor: at Lamoni; at Duluth, Minnesota; St. Joseph, Missouri; and at Cleveland, Ohio. He also served for a time as a missionary for the church.

As a writer, he made an impressive list of contributions to the Saints' Herald, and to the young people's monthly magazine, Autumn Leaves. His careful thought, his strength of character, and his abiding faith are apparent in all his writings. He was Secretary of the Board of Publication in 1901-1902.

In his preaching, Brother Gunsolley was a methodical and careful exponent of the beliefs of the church. He spoke with power and conviction, and inspiration was often evident in his pulpit work.

Other ordinations followed his ordination as a priest: elder, February 23, 1896; high priest, April 19, 1900; evangelist, April 19, 1925. He was superannuated on April 7, 1934.

It was characteristic of his nature and of his ideal of duty to continue serving as long as strength of body made it possible. His latter years were times of quiet peace, though his health declined and limited his activities.

THE GRACELAND COLLEGE YEARS

In 1895, Graceland College opened its doors under the auspices of the church. Its first quarters were on the second floor of the France Building in the business section of Lamoni. Brother Gunsolley was a member of the first faculty of three persons. He served from the beginning until June, 1926, with the exception of a two-year interval, 1901-1903. He was a member of the Board of Trustees from 1900 to 1911.

In his Graceland years he served as instructor, principal of the commercial school, acting president for two periods, treasurer, and business manager. At different times he taught bookkeeping and accounting, commercial arithmetic, spelling, commercial law, English and business correspondence, commercial geography, banking and credits, shorthand and typing. He was also a skilled teacher of penmanship.

More than this, he stood for education when many in the church were opposed to it. He traveled to raise money to help the college keep its doors open. He befriended poor students and made it possible for them to continue their education when otherwise they would have been forced to quit. He gave needed encouragement to them when their hearts and funds were low.

It would not be possible to remember, let alone record, his many services. He shares with an illus-

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—The Minneapolis Star of July 2 published a picture of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint vacation church school. Pastor Vernon E. Lundeen reports that ours was the only school which had its picture in the paper. This was the first year for the school and there were fifty-four boys and girls enrolled. The average attendance was forty-four, with twenty-four in perfect attendance. Mrs. Bernice Staffeld was the director. The picture in the Star portrays three primary children telling and enacting by flannelgraph the story of the Good Samaritan.

PROVO, UTAH.—The Women's Department of Provo, Utah, sponsored a lawn social on June 30 at the parsonage. A large group assembled, including Apostle and Mrs. Wallace Smith and Elder and Mrs. Russell Ralston and family. Homemade ice cream, cakes, and candies were sold and proceeds went to the women's department.—Reported by MRS. ELOISE M. LUCAS.

BROOKINGS, OREGON.—The group was organized into a mission on July 3 at a meeting at Myrtle Point. Saints from southwestern Oregon and northern California form the congregation. The organization took place under the direction of District President J. L. Verhei. Elder Joe Elkins will act as pastor, Mrs. Marjorie Moore as church school director, Arthur Moore as treasurer, and Mrs. Vivian Cummins as secretary. Meetings will be held the first Sunday of each month.

Any Saints living in or around Brookings or in northern California are invited to contact the group. Address Mrs. Vivian Cummins, Box 186, Crescent City, California, for information.

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILLINOIS.—In a business meeting on June 24, the reorganization of the Lansdowne Branch was recommended by Apostle E. J. Gleazer and District President C. L. Archibald. Elder Charles Fletcher was elected pastor; Orville Anderson, church school director; William Hanlen, treasurer, and Jessie W. Hilleir, clerk. The officers were installed at a candlelight service on the evening of July 3.

BAYOU LA BATRE, ALABAMA.—District Missionary W. J. Breshears conducted a series of meetings from June 19 to 28, which resulted in the following being baptized: Frank Deakle and son Burton, Calvin Gazzier, Harvey Nelson, Mrs. Lena Powell, Mrs. Margaret Tillman, Elizabeth Tillman, Shirley Gazzier, Joseph Elwood, John Edward Ladnier, and Gussie Seamon.

Bayou La Batre group is a mission of the Mobile Branch and is situated twenty-seven miles south of Mobile in the village of Bayou Le Batre whose chief industry is fishing. Elder Oscar Tillman is the group pastor, and he is assisted by his two sons—Alma, who holds the office of priest, and Delbert, who is a teacher—and Robert Pendarvis, deacon. Emery Powell, a member, recently gave a lot to the church upon which the Saints are planning to build a church home in the near future.

MISSION, ILLINOIS.—Mission Branch held its first vacation church school this year during the week, June 6 through 10. There were forty-two children enrolled. Mrs. Cora Anderson served as leader of the school and was assisted by Blanche Mulvaney, Susie Lowe, and Grace Hayer.

MOBILE, ALABAMA.—High Priest Jack A. Pray, who was assigned to the Gulf States District with Mobile as his objective at the recent Joint-Council session was installed as pastor of the Mobile Branch by District President W. J. Breshears on Sunday, July 3. A combined installation and Communion service had been arranged and was well attended by the Saints of the Mobile area. Brother Breshears introduced Brother Pray as the new pastor, and Brother Pray made a statement of acceptance. High Priest Franklin Steiner represented the congregation in pledging their support to the ministry and leadership of the new pastor. Following this, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was served at a very impressive service. Brother and Sister Pray were then introduced to each member present as they left the building.

Brother Pray succeeds High Priest A. Orlin Crownover as pastor of the Mobile Branch, Brother Crownover having been transferred to Independence, Missouri.

MUSKEGON, MICHIGAN.—Elder E. R. Carter of Lansing, Michigan, conducted a series of meetings in this branch during the first week of June. His theme was "Builders Together With God." A new baptismal font has been installed by the branch men's club. At a rally day service, January 30, the font was dedicated. Nine people were baptized on that day. Seventy Virgil Billings and Missionary Warren Chelline held a series of meetings from February 27 to March 20. Four more new members were baptized during these services.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—On June 12, the services of the branch were centered around the children. At a beautiful baptismal service, nine children were received into the church: Karen Dyson, Howard Muir, Brian Dibb, Kenneth Hollins, Barry Shute, Judith Timbrell, Joyce Kennedy, Ann Moore, and Carol Greenside. The confirmation service was conducted on June 19. Barry Shute was confirmed on Sunday morning, June 26, by Elder C. E. Muir, assisted by Dr. E. V. Shute.

BOISE, IDAHO.—Eleven were baptized in the Boise font during May. Five were from Nampa Mission, one from Baker, Oregon, and five from Boise.

NAUVOO DISTRICT.—The Fort Madison, Iowa, and Nauvoo, Illinois, branch choirs recently rehearsed "Other Sheep I Have," the Book of Mormon cantata by Louise Hills Lewis, for presentation by the combined groups on the last Sunday of the Nauvoo District Reunion, held July 24 to July 31 at Nauvoo, Illinois. The combined group is composed of twenty-eight members. Brother E. R. Wright of Fort Madison was the director, and Mrs. Shirley S. Howard was assistant director and pianist. Although the majority of this group was made up of untrained voices, they were aware of the circumstances under which the cantata was written and felt the same presence at each of their rehearsals. Printed programs carrying the libretto in its entirety were given to those attending that they might be taken home and used as missionary material.—Reported by MRS. LEWIS L. HOWARD.

HUMBER BAY, ONTARIO.—On Children's Day, June 12, three children were baptized at the 9:45 service: Elizabeth Stroud, Robert Trimmm, and Raymond Brown. In March the branch enjoyed a few days' visit from Missionary Louis Zonker. His ministry to the young people was especially appreciated. The Humber Bay church is a community center. Twice monthly the doors of the church building are opened to the Child Health Clinic, and also to the Red Cross.—Reported by MABEL WHITWORTH.

CULBERTSON, MONTANA.—On Sunday, May 8, at 11:00 a.m., five families of Saints met at the home of Brother and Sister B. W. Finnicum to organize a church school. Priest Thomas Finnicum was in charge. He was elected superintendent and Gene McCracken, assistant. There are three classes: an adult class, studying the Book of Mormon; a junior class, and a primary class. There were three juniors, five primaries, three cradle roll, and eight adults. The following Sunday four more were present.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.—The twelve-day series of meetings which Evangelist Ray Whiting conducted in Springfield came to a close June 17. There was a fine spirit present during these services which brought a spiritual uplift to the people. Brother Whiting gave about twenty patriarchal blessings while he was there. On Children's Day, June 12, five children were baptized. The following Thursday evening, one child and eight adults were baptized. Two were baptized May 29, making a total of sixteen in three weeks. These baptisms united six families in membership in the church. On Friday evening, Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elder Donald Kyser attended the service on their way to Kennett, Missouri. Brother Kyser gave the invocation, Apostle Gleazer delivered the message, and Evangelist Whiting closed the service with a spiritual benediction upon the series.

The vacation church school was very successful. About one third of the children attending were from homes of nonmembers.

HOME AND FAMILY

He was united in marriage with May Cornelia Fisher on March 19, 1890. To them three children were born: Harold, Lucy (Glick) (deceased), and Marjorie (Anway). At a time when Marjorie was stricken with paralysis, another tragedy came, the death of the mother on December 12, 1903. The vacant place in the home was filled by marriage, on September 19, 1905, to Martha F. Wight, whose husband had passed away sometime previously. She had a son, Dean. To this marriage two children were born: Cecil, and Dorothy (Stoft). Brother Gunsolley was a faithful, kindly, and considerate husband and father.

There may have been some whose lives shone with a more brilliant light, but there have been none who kept their light more faithfully and constantly burning.

Let's Tackle Our Job

By MRS. WILLARD PHELPS

We, the mothers of the church, have a big job. Had every mother since 1833 done her bit to train up her child in the way he should go, we would be much nearer Zion. We would be a bigger and better church. Bigger because our natural increase really totals up more rapidly than the work of conversion. It takes weeks, months, yes, even years, for a priest or elder to prepare a dozen people for baptism, but if two or three mothers would join together to teach their little families the principles to which every child is entitled, a dozen children would be saved for the church.

When a mother does not do everything in her power to retain her "natural increase" (her family) for Christ and his church, she is defeating the work of the plan of God. We would also be a better church when we, as mothers, are instructing our little ones, because we are learning more and more. Our faith is increased as we teach them that faith is so necessary. We do keep the laws better as we show them that "The law of the wise is a fountain of life."—Proverbs 13: 14.

It bothered me, as a child, that our church did not have women preachers, for Webster's Collegiate Dictionary says a minister is a servant, attendant, or agent. Isn't every mother just that? The number of mothers of the church far exceeds the teachers, priests, and elders. Then, truly, if we would all do our bit, and each one work just a little harder toward establishing a Zion home, we could double the number of yearly baptisms. Are we mothers serving God in the capacity he has set for us?

Our responsibility is to see that those intrusted to our care increase "in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man" (Luke 2: 52). Our first job is to live a good example, for by examples we teach our little ones much. We keep them in school, clean, well fed, and give them the things that "keeping up with the Joneses" requires of us. But do we allow them to go in the closet with us when we shut the door and pray to our Father? Then we need to see this side of our life; to be taught again those things which we were taught as youngsters, but which today because of the rush, hustle, hurry of each hour are neglected.

We are to be a peculiar people, "zealous of good works" (Titus 2: 15), showing in everyday living that "happy is that people, whose God is the Lord" (Psalm 144: 15).

If each mother would do her share at home, our money could be spent "teaching all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Mark 28: 20). God's work could go forward. The head of the church feels its responsibility to us first. But if each of us mothers would do our bit, instruct our own little ones better, more elders could be released from work at home and sent to other fields. Let us assist in this great work—we are not called to be priests or elders; but mothers, each with a job that only we can do.

As mothers of a chosen people in a chosen land, we should assume our responsibility.

First, by each being a better person. Each person, mother, father, sister, brother, wife, husband, man, or woman should strive to be a better person. Mothers can be "an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity" (I Timothy 4: 12).

Second, by being a better wife. "Who-soever findeth a wife findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favor of the Lord."—Proverbs 18: 22. But are we "a good thing" for our husbands? Most husbands are busy men and must meet the world daily. "A prudent wife is from the Lord" (Proverbs 19: 14). Are we prudent wives? Webster says "prudent" is wise, practical, sensible, adapting means to ends, not extravagant. We are the wives in the church. These virtues need to be cultivated. Let us be helpmeets. If your husband is an elder, priest, or teacher, lighten his load, and help in his work. If he is a member, but holds no "called" office, help him to "Study to shew [himself] approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."—II Timothy 2: 15. Christ may have a job for him. If he is not a member of the church, he needs a good example, and his wife is closest to him. Remember "the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife" (I Corinthians 7: 14). Being a wife is a big job.

Third, by being better mothers, helping our children and our neighbor's children to be ready for their heritage. Jesus said, "Let the children first be filled." (Mark 8: 27). The Old Testament instructed the Israelites to "teach their children." (Deuteronomy 4: 10). Proverbs 20: 11 shows that we must set a good example for "Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure and whether it be right." Being a good mother is a huge task, but we, mothers of a chosen people, with the help of God, can do it. Give "your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Romans 12: 1). Let us not overdo this to the detriment of our family, but study and use what we learn with wisdom. "He that begetteth a wise child shall have joy of him" (Proverbs 23: 23). We should help our children, and those of the neighborhood to use the talents which God has given them and be "handmaids of the Lord."

And fourth, by being better neighbors, sister-in-laws, daughter-in-laws, and sisters of the church. Mothers, our task is before us. God needs us. Let us help "every one his neighbor; and every one say to his brother, be of good courage" (Isaiah 41: 6). Let us start Zion living in our own homes, on the street, when we meet our neighbor, or our mother-in-law. If she is not a member, let her see in us the reason for uniting with Christ's church. No other group could do more to further his work than we, sisters and mothers of the church.

A DEVOTIONAL

"Let Your Light so Shine"

By Mrs. E. L. Sheppard

Scripture: John 8: 12; Matthew 5: 16-18.

When Jesus was here on earth, he made some exceedingly important statements. He said, concerning himself, that he was the "light of the world." Surely this is true when we consider that life and light follow the preaching of the gospel. But he also said that we are lights in the world.

We cannot shine for God unless we contact Christ and the needy world—one hand in God's hand for strength, and one hand grasping our neighbor's hand to lift him out of darkness.

The peoples of the world today are looking for a practical demonstration of Christianity. They are not so much concerned about what we believe as about what we are doing for the uplift of humanity. "What you do speaks so loud, I can't hear what you say."

Glaude A. Smith tells a story of a young American teacher in a Japanese government school. This young man gave his word that he would not mention Christ or Christianity to his students. He kept his promise; but his pure life and his constant spirit of kindness caused his students to seek for his secret of happy living. After some months, a large group of the boys he taught gave themselves to the Christ whom they knew he followed. Some of these boys became Christian ministers.

My Poem Center - By Edith Odom

I HAVE A POEM CENTER in my big comfortable farm kitchen. The name of my center is "The Commonplace Glorified." The name is printed in black letters on a piece of white paper and arranged in a semi-circle at the top. This name is not original with me. I found it in an article written by Brother John Sheehy and published in the Herald. As soon as I saw the article, I said, "That's it."

In many kitchens in the south the walls and ceiling are made of smooth, wide planks painted, and for my poem center I have used a two-foot panel between the doors and keep clippings and poems which I like unusually well and which my friends send me. This panel is located in a prominent place in my large typical farm kitchen, which is our family, year-round, living room. We do our informal entertaining there. Besides the regular equipment, my kitchen is equipped with good windows, radio, record-player, sewing machine, and a large table. This, with a few quick changes, becomes a playroom for the young people where they make candy, pop corn and use the radio or record player. Books and magazines are also available and fresh, and potted flowers add beauty and enjoyment all the year round.

I have not created this poem center alone. My family has assisted in making this a family worship center also. There is a little shelf underneath the bulletin board which was made by my son out of handmade cedar. This shelf holds

I have had many happy experiences when telling someone to what church I belonged. Some of them exclaim, "Oh, I know so and so—he belongs to your church," and then they say something nice about him. The other day my daughter told me of a conversation she had with a young man in one of her classes at the university. He made the remark that he "knew one man in this town that certainly lived his religion." She asked him who it was, and he replied, "Oh, you wouldn't know him. He runs a small business on North Main. His name is Shannon." The strange and interesting thing about this conversation was that Brother Shannon is our Kansas District President.

my plants and a monthly copy of The Daily Bread. The year's subscription was presented to me by my husband. He seemed to think it was necessary to complete the setting. My daughters sent me attractive decals for trimming and bordering the panel and the little potted plant for the shelf under the poems. I change these around at different times to keep the scene from becoming monotonous.

I have collected the poems which I use in my center over many years, and also my family have contributed, as they are always on the lookout for poems they think I will enjoy. Some are humorous, some in forms of advice for the younger generation, some words of comfort and consolation. There are also poems which I call my "Mary and Martha" poems and especially written for mothers and housewives. All of these are put up with Scotch tape, so I can take them down and replace them with others when I desire. But a few "musts" remain all the time, as friends and family come back to read these.

One of my favorite poems is "A Housewife's Prayer." In this poem she prays for grace to do the daily, commonplace tasks. I enjoy sharing these poems with my friends. I keep extra printed copies of all to hand out whenever there is a request. This is my best project and especially since it has become my family worship center. We have our family worship each morning in our kitchen before breakfast, and The Daily Bread is the book we use. One gives the story, the other reads the suggested Scripture, and another offers the prayer. Often poems or extracts from them are mentioned in the family worship. This has become an important part of our family life.

Wouldn't you like to start a poem center in your kitchen?

Get Out of My Way

Tired and weary with care oppressed,
Longing for a moment's rest,
To the little ones, hindering with their play,
I sharply said, "Get out of my way,"
But a soft voice whispered, "There'll be a day
When the babies will be out of your way to stay."

And it set me thinking, how all too soon
These babies would make a "way" of their own,
And I in a dreary, lonely home
With no little tots to wash and comb,
Would oh, so sadly, rue the day,
When the babies got out of my way to stay.

No little faces to be kissed and caressed,
No heads to cuddle on mamma's breast,
No little wills to train aright,
No one to put to sleep at night,
No little lips to teach to pray,
For the babies would be out of my way to stay.

So mothers, let's have a care, how we say
To the little ones, "Get out of my way."
For of loneliness we may have a share;
So let us breathe this fervent prayer—
May there be many a long, long day,
Ere the babies are out of our way to stay.

(This poem was published in Autumn Leaves in August, 1900, in the department "Our Girls." No author's name given. Sent in by Mrs. Effie Hield, 110 North River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri, March 21, 1949.)

It is folly to claim exemption from duty, and at the same time expect the reward of service.—Joseph Luff.

by the benediction by Elder C. T. Heaviland.

A recessional hymn, "Lord of Light and Love and Power," was sung by the congregation as the ministers went to the door.

A capacity crowd of 541 packed the upper and lower auditoriums. The overflow attendance was served by a public address system in the lower auditorium.

The music was under the direction of Mrs. Verna Gustavus with Mrs. Geraldine Baird as the organist.

The first regular sermon was preached by Apostle Arthur A. Oakman the same evening as the beginning of his missionary series through the following week.

A wonderful manifestation of the Spirit was evidenced throughout the day and following week, which has started a new congregation on its way in good form. We thank President Smith and Apostle Oakman for their sincere ministry which will no doubt be a lasting memory to the good people of the Detroit Branch.

Letters

I, too, want to express my gratitude for the timely and helpful material contributed to Daily Bread by various authors. I also think the album of hymns by the Stone Church choir is truly great and inspiring. I hope the choir will someday record "One Day When Fell the Spirit's Whisper."

For several years, one of the more popular churches has been publishing a series of Bible lessons to be studied at home. Questions are mailed with the study material. When these are checked and graded, they are returned to the correspondent. There are twenty-six lessons in each course. I would appreciate being able to get such a series on our Three Standard Books. This would be most helpful for isolated members who are unable to attend church often. Even those who attend regularly could receive help from such a course.

I am able to hear the Sunday broadcast, which makes my state of isolation less lonely.

Since I can meet with the Saints only two or three times a year, all published material, recordings, and broadcasts pertaining to the church are greatly appreciated.

Asks for Prayers

I noticed that several unusually old members were mentioned in recent Heralds, and I wondered how many other elderly Saints there are in the church. I have just celebrated my eighty-fifth birthday and will soon have belonged to the Reorganized Church seventy-four years. I have never regretted my baptism, and I am thankful to my Heavenly Father for the blessings he has bestowed upon me.

I suffered a heart attack on May 9 and was greatly helped by administration, but I still need your prayers. Please pray for me.

Daily Bread Plus Daily Living

The new church publication, Daily Bread, is indeed a valuable aid in the Latter Day Saint home, as are the many fine writings in the Herald. After every family has had the opportunity to study both of them, there is the matter of daily living—the matter of expressing those teachings by precept and example in the community.

It has been said, and rightfully so, that too long and too often individual members have left the spreading of the gospel to the missionary alone. Actually that work should go on every day of the week throughout the year.

Before a missionary visits a locality, there is usually some faithful member or members there endeavoring to establish the work. Some years ago, while traveling in the New England states, I was impressed by the picturesqueness of the country. Everywhere I could see stone fences made by the owners of the land. They had carried the stones that they gathered when clearing their land, preparing it for the planting of beautiful orchards, small pastures, and fields.

"As it is written in the book of the prophet Esaias, . . . saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight."—Luke 3: 4. If all as members spent time in clearing the way and making the paths straight, when the missionary came, there would be both members and nonmembers to hear him. When he has gone to another part of the vineyard to plant good seed, those left behind would continue to care for and tend the vineyard in their locality. One plants, another waters, and God alone gives the increase.

Some take the immediate view and expect to see people flock to the church, while others take the long view and are willing to be patient and wait with the Lord.

Our church work has been going on for over 100 years. During this time the fields have been cleared for the planting by good families who paved the way for missionaries to come into their community. They have made friends with their neighbors, and whenever opportunity presented itself, they have shed the light of the gospel in their pathway by lending books and sharing Heralds.

In some instances, twenty-five, fifty, even seventy-five years or more of effort have been made before the present conditions were enjoyed. Truly, education is a slow process, but it is the only sound way to build. Balloon corps construction is poor construction, and much of it will have to be torn down and rebuilt. Boom towns spring up around oil fields, flourish for a period, then dwindle to almost nothing. A branch built in this way usually meets with the same success.

We cannot rush into the presence of God, neither can we rush thinking men and women into an acceptance of the gospel and expect their membership to be substantial.

In Memory

As I look back in retrospect over my twenty-five years of membership in this church, one of my dearest memories is that of my first teacher, Mary Fowler.

"Mother" Fowler, as she was lovingly called by many, was the founder of the Philadelphia Laurel Club and its teacher until her death. Since that time club members have met, studied, and to the best of their abilities carried out her teachings.

To member or nonmember, her life was an example of a true follower of the Master. She was humble, full of love, never too weary to listen, eager and pleased when the opportunity presented itself to tell the story of the church. Her experiences were many and varied, as were her trials.

Sister Fowler joined the church at an early age. Even when persecutions made it hard to stand firm, she never faltered. Her life is an outstanding testimony of the truth of this church. Her husband and brother were also staunch supporters of the Restoration Movement. Even in face of death they preached this gospel.

She was the mother of ten children, some of whom died when quite young. Two of her sons were in an explosion. One was killed instantly and the other, his life hanging on very slender threads, was taken to the hospital. Brother Walter Smith, then pastor of the Philadelphia Branch, was summoned to administer to the boy. The surgeon reported to Brother Smith that the lad's back was broken, his eyes were blown out and his eardrums had burst. In fact, it was the doctor's opinion that it would be a blessing if he died. However, Sister Fowler knelt and prayed to God, "Thou hast taken one unto thyself, but please give me my other son whole in body and mind, that I may bear with courage the heavy cross laid upon me." A messenger stood by her and she heard the words, "Thy son shall be made whole." That son, Brother Robert Fowler, is alive today—a living testimony to a mother's great faith.

Another outstanding testimony is cited. The doctor told her loved ones she had galloping consumption. Elders Walter Smith, John Zimmermann, Sr., Daniel Shaw, and Patriarch Archibald Angus administered to her. In her own words, "I was healed, and I heard a voice speak, saying, 'With a long life shall I satisfy you.'" True to that promise, her life was a full one. She lived to be eighty years old.

Laurel Club members still think of her and her wonderful teachings. She repeatedly said that life is not always sunshine, that the reward is not only for the swift and the strong, but for those that endure to the end. As we pay her this small tribute, we still hear her say, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."

Enjoys Herald

We sincerely enjoy the Herald and want to keep it with us. Arthur Gibbs has just finished a two weeks' series of illustrated Bible lectures in Everett following Bible school. A wonderful missionary spirit exists among these people. The first week after I arrived I was asked to go out and "ring doorbells." When I looked puzzled, they hastened to explain that I should call on folks and invite them to our meetings, answer questions about the gospel, etc. I thoroughly enjoyed doing this. It is good for the soul to review the gospel story to those who know it not.

Missionary Sermon Studies

By F. HENRY EDWARDS

Here are helpful foundation materials for fifty sermon topics chosen from among the fundamental doctrinal themes of our church faith and theology. They do not in any sense prescribe the character of the sermon nor limit the preacher. They make available to him, in most convenient form, the kind of texts and leading thoughts that he will need. In the field, away from home and library, the missionary will find this book a real help.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Is God Concerned? - By CARL MESLE

WHEN TRAGEDY STRIKES, in the swiftness of a second or with torturing delay, and good people or good causes are injured or killed, there are no doubt times when the best of us join the ranks of the skeptics and agnostics to ask, "Is God concerned?"

As a boy I shared treasured experiences with one particular friend. We were in the same class in school, but our real friendship began when we joined the same scout troop. We hiked, camped, played, and fought together. We prepared our hunter's stew together to pass our cooking requirements and ate it out of the same kettle. We built our lean-to together for pioneering merit badges, made our rustic beds in the same pup tent for camping merit badges, slept in the same beautiful valley and were awakened by the bubbling of the stream near by.

Bill was clean-cut, wholesome, and stimulating, with the promise of a bright future. Our paths separated in college, but I followed his career as he entered the army, rose to the rank of captain in the infantry, and crossed to Europe with the Third Army. Then suddenly the blow fell. Bill's life was snuffed out in the fighting around Aachen, Germany. As I tried to write some word of comfort to his mother, and as I thought of his bereaved young wife and child, I couldn't keep the inevitable thought, "Is God concerned?" out of my mind.

Such tragedies are repeated as the result of war, accidents, crime, and sickness every hour. Usually they happen to people who are only names in the newspaper, but sometimes it comes close home.

WHERE KNOWLEDGE of God and his purposes is vague or immature, it is easy to understand a person's doubt and his cry, "If there were a God, he wouldn't let such things happen." Those who have secured a mature understanding of his plan know that God is concerned. His interest and love of mankind are made apparent in many ways to all who make the effort to see them.

First, he has given men dominion over the earth with all its secrets and treasures. He has placed in our human make-up the intelligence to unlock those secrets, the skill to put them to use, and the soul to see that they are used for a good purpose. With his gift of free agency, we have the choice, as individuals and as nations, to make the best use of our abilities or to make the worst use of them.

Who causes wars? Certainly not God. "Well," the skeptic says, "if God is so all-powerful, why doesn't he keep men from getting into such trouble?" If our decisions were made up above and arbitrarily handed down, we would no longer be free agents. God is not interested in producing human puppets. He uses his influence and persuasion to lead us to proper choices, but he doesn't make decisions for us.

When we have war, it isn't because God isn't concerned but because someone here on earth doesn't care.

Even we in America have shared guilt in this. In the '30's when it was becoming apparent to scholars and statesmen that war would descend upon us unless vigorous steps were taken to avoid it, too many of us said, "Let the other nations have their wars. That's no concern of ours." So when Mussolini sent his legions into Ethiopia and the League of Nations attempted to curb his ambitions, we in America supplied a share of his needs. As the red cloud of war swept over Europe, it was inevitable that it should touch our lives—and we paid in blood for our lack of vision and the misuse of our free agency. The real tragedy, perhaps, was the fact that the loved ones of those who tried to prevent war perished along with those of the indifferent.

Like a disobedient child who burns his finger on a hot stove, we have learned through bitter pain a lesson which God, through the sacrifice of his Son, tried to teach us in a simpler way. Now we are aroused. We have formed the United Nations to combat forces which bring about war and are actually fighting a battle of our own to see that war does not come again. This is good, but we have had to learn the hard way.

THE COMMON PLEA of those in distress is often, "But how could I have known?" Sometimes consequences are simply beyond our present range of vision, but more often we have failed to heed the warning signs posted along life's pathway. When we misuse our agency, we usually receive some simple warning—a headache, fatigue, a traffic ticket, or the still small voice of conscience. Do we heed the warning, go to the root of our trouble and take corrective actions, or do we smother the warning signs with aspirin for our headaches, with stimulants for fatigue, with denials of guilt to the traffic officer, or with alcohol, and bluff to our conscience until we become callous to the warnings, dull to the real responsibilities, and unable to avoid the tragedies which loom before us?

One man will curse God for permitting a loved one to die of cancer, but another will devote his life to studying the causes and cure of cancer that others may not suffer from it. Which man is acting in harmony with the divine plan?

WE ARE GOD'S CREATION. To deny this is to place ourselves in the position of the student whose answer to his professor's questions about the origin of life and our complicated universe was always, "Oh, it just happened." One day the wise professor took this student to a planetarium where they witnessed the exhibition of the features of the heavens. After the impressive demonstration, the student showed a keen interest in the intricate features of the projector which had thrown the meaningful pinpoints of light upon the circular dome. Off guard, he asked the professor, "Who made this amazing instrument?" The professor was ready and replied, quite casually, "Oh, no one, it just happened."

God created us with a plan in mind. The essence of that plan is that we should build, with his help, the best possible world, and in the building develop the richest possible personality. He is concerned that we fit ourselves into that plan.

Where shall we look for the pattern of this rich personality? Christ said, "I am the way, the truth, and the light." Of him it was said, "And the word was made flesh." The theory became reality as Christ demonstrated it among men. Even in giving us a pattern of individual perfection, God showed his deep concern for human welfare. John tells us, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

PERSONALITIES are not developed in isolation. They are produced by "rubbing shoulders" with others. The highest and finest personalities are achieved in association with good people working together in challenging and worthy tasks. To this end Christ built his church on earth that men might find kindred associates with whom to work in the accomplishment of his purpose.

Just as it is impossible to have persons without society, so it seems improbable that God, having given a pattern for individuals, would have failed to provide a plan for society. We believe that the kingdom of God is to be built on earth and that as part of the restoration of his church in the latter day, he provided a plan for the ideal society as an extension of his plan for all mankind, exactly as Christ's life presented a living example to individuals. We call it Zion and strive for its perfection.

Fourth of July Puppy

By Alice Zion Buckley

THE TIRED LITTLE PUPPY was plodding along the highway on the busiest day of the summer season—the Fourth of July. Straight down the center of the road he traveled, looking neither to left nor right. Cars whizzing by affected him in no way at all. Only now and then when a car slammed on its brakes to avoid hitting him did he swerve a little to get out of its way.

The friendly motorcycle cop tried over and over again to guide him off the highway out of the path of danger and into the quieter parking lanes. Nearly every motorist who saw the little dog and the accompanying officer slowed down a little to see what was happening. When we came along the puppy was directly in front of our car so my husband stopped. The officer came to our car window and said, "Poor little fellow—I've followed him for miles and can't get him off this busy highway. Some picnic group has either lost him or ditched him intentionally. He's going home down the only path he knows, and he's letting nothing stop him. I'm going along as far as I can to see that he doesn't come to any harm."

The little dog had gone back to the middle of the road so we went on our way home. We were heart-sick for the pup who, tired and foot-sore, was going home too. We were secretly a little ashamed of ourselves. How often when we try to get a certain job done we let everything distract us! And if the way looked the least bit lonely or dangerous, we changed our minds and looked for an easier task to do for God. The Fourth of July puppy taught me a much-needed lesson. If you keep to your path, often someone will come along to help you. Even in the darkest hour the path is there, and the end of the job is ahead if only you persevere.

vious eyes encounter. No fantastic carvings show the boast of our vain race to change the form of thy fair works, but Thou, O God, art here." And here is a prayer, a plea which all who worship here may well follow when he prayed: "Be it ours to meditate, in these calm shades, Thy milder majesty, and to the beautiful order of Thy works learn to conform the order of our lives." Ah, that is our task and our duty, to conform the order of our lives to the beautiful order of God's will.

There is a gem of a story told about Zerubbabel: He had been one who had first stirred the ground in an attempt to build a temple. They were driven off by their enemies for a while, they left the Holy Land, the land of promise; but later on, with a friendly king in control, they were asked to come back, and Zechariah, who had come into power in the meantime, asked Zerubbabel, who had turned the first soil for this temple, to place the capstone on the building. He said, "The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house, his hands will finish it." Now this is a beautiful analogy to the church of the first born. Jesus, of the royal house of David, rejected by the builders, became the headstone of the corner. Yes, in that temple, as here at Royal Oak, Christ is the foundation, the walls, the superstructure, the all of our spiritual existence.

The Prophet Joseph Smith, in his prayer of dedication of the Kirtland Temple, to which reference was made by Apostle Oakman, closed his plea by praying that it would be a "house of prayer, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God. That your incomings may be in the name of the Lord, that your outgoings may be in the name of the Lord; that all your salutations may be in the name of the Lord, with uplifted hands unto the most high."

You of Royal Oak and the Detroit area and your children and their children of the latest generations will call on the name of the Lord here and receive his blessing. The house of God stands before us in its spiritual power and majesty. It is a strong house where the children of the covenant may come and gain spiritual strength and help. It is built upon the Rock and will withstand the assaults of the adversary. The psalmist said, "strength and beauty are his sanctuary." Adopting the words of Zechariah we would say, "The hands of Jesus laid the [spiritual] foundation of

Webb-Hunt

Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Hunt of Bellingham, Washington, announce the engagement of their daughter, Dallas Elaine, to Ray Vern Webb, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Webb of Inglewood, California. Both attended Graceland College, graduating in 1947 and 1948. The wedding will take place in September.

Baughman-Anderson

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Anderson of Forest Grove, Oregon, announce the engagement of their daughter, Nettie Mae, to Alma Baughman of Dow City, Iowa, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elvin Baughman. Both were students at Graceland College this past year.

this house, his hands will finish it." It stands as another witness for Christ.

Little we can do here today beyond the formal consecration of this church, because it has been already dedicated to the worship of God by the toil and the tears, the struggles and sacrifices of the Saints of God; and as every requirement has been arranged, we bless and consecrate it to the worship of the Lord, for those of the present, and indeed, unto the latest generation of mankind. And in closing may I read something from Grace Noll Crowell dedicated to altars:

Let thy blessing rest upon this church,
O Lord,

Out from the byroads, out from our care filled days we come,

An earnest throng, to hear thy words,
To offer thee our sincere heartfelt praise,

We come to seek Thy steadfast guiding power,

We come to lay our burdens at Thy feet—

We seek the calming quiet of this hour
Away from the clamoring throng, the crowded street.

Let Thy blessing rest upon this church, we pray,

Upon a people in their vital need;
Be thou our Helper, be our guide and stay,

Be our wine, the bread on which we feed.

Lord God, for every church in every land,

We crave a blessing from Thy mighty hand.

WEDDINGS

Upson-Martin

Jeanette Martin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Martin of Tulsa, Oklahoma, became the bride of Benny Upson, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Fletcher-Routledge

Dorothy Elizabeth Routledge, daughter of William Routledge and the late Mrs. Routledge, was married to Thomas Henry Fletcher, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Fletcher (formerly of England), on July 9, 1949, at the Reorganized Church in Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario. Pastor G. A. Edwards performed the double-ring ceremony. The reception was held at the home of the bride.

Willets-Jackel

Betty Ruth Jackel of Edinburg, Texas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Jackel, was married to Louis Edward Willets of Mission, Texas, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Willets, on June 25, at the Reorganized Church at Alamo. The bride's brother, R. Wayne Jackel, officiated. The couple will live at Mission, Texas.

Routledge-Hudson

Mrs. Ethel Hudson and Mr. William Routledge of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, were married on June 11, 1949, at the Reorganized Church. Pastor G. A. Edwards performed the ceremony. The reception was held at their home for Saints and friends.

BIRTHS

A son, Richard George, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Chester Edwards on May 16, 1949, at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario.

Mr. and Mrs. Denzil J. West of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Gaye Dawne, on July 21, 1949. Mr. and Mrs. West met at Graceland College during the 1946-1947 term. Before her marriage, Mrs. West was Miss Marjorie Williams of Escatawpa, Mississippi.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald L. Few of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, announce the birth of a son, Donald Brent, born July 8. The baby is the great-grandson of the late Elder Louis Gendron and Dora Gendron.

A daughter, Cynthia, was born on May 2, 1949, to Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Kennedy of Monongahela, Pennsylvania.

A daughter, Kathleen Gayle, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Dixon L. Kepley of Independence, Missouri, on April 24, 1949. She was blessed July 24 by her grandfather, Elder Gomer R. Wells.

DEATHS

TAYLOR.—Warner James, was born April 5, 1896, at Thamesville, Ontario, and died May 19, 1949, in Windsor, Ontario. He lived on a farm near Wabash until he came to Windsor in 1921. At his sudden death, he was superintendent of maintenance for the Windsor Daily Star. He was married to Annie Burcheott in 1920, who survives him. He leaves two daughters, Mrs. T. J. Bearl of Port Elgin, and Mrs. Bryce Grant of Windsor; one grandchild, Lorna Maxine Earl; four brothers: Lorenza of Thamesville and Charles of Barwick, Ontario; John of Independence, Missouri; and Alfred of Shenandoah, Iowa; two sisters: Mrs. Gordon Stanley of Dresden and Mrs. Alfred Blakely of Thamesville, Ontario.

He was baptized into the Reorganized Church upon reaching accountability, wherein he was an active member until death. He was a priest, church school superintendent, and men's teacher during his years of service. His funeral was conducted by Elder James Pycock, assisted by Elder William Garnier. His remains were interred in Green Lawn Memorial Park.

NEWMAN.—George, was born September 15, 1878, in Sanfield Township, Manitoulin Island, Ontario. He died June 21, 1949, in Windsor, Ontario, after a long illness. He left Manitoulin Island about thirty years ago, and then lived in Espanola; then for the past twenty-two years in Windsor. He was married to Eleanor McDonald who survives him. Also surviving are his four sons: Robert A., Leonard M., Leslie R., and William J.; eight grandchildren, all of Windsor; a brother, Joseph, Manitoulin Island; and two sisters: Mrs. Margaret Thomas and Mrs. Sadie Caruthers of Alberta.

An accident when a boy left him a cripple most of his life, yet he became proficient as a carpenter, as well as other occupations. He was baptized April 8, 1909, and although unable to travel easily, he was a regular attendant at all available church services. He was in the choir, was a priest, and a teacher of the men's class in the church school. His knowledge of the textbooks of the church qualified him for his official duties. Funeral services were conducted by Elder James Pycock, assisted by Elder William Beacon. He was buried in Windsor Grove Cemetery.

OKERLIND.—Oscar William, was born at Gnesta, Sweden, June 6, 1876, the fourteenth child of Carl Peter and Anna Maria Okerlind. He was educated in Lutheran schools and for a time was a member of the Lutheran Church, but in 1895, he heard the message of the Restoration as presented by some Mormon elders and was baptized by them. Shortly afterward he accepted an appointment and served as a missionary elder for about three years.

Brother Okerlind came to the United States in August, 1900, located at Murray, Utah, and in February, 1902, he was married to Anna S. Lundquist in the Salt Lake Temple. Shortly after his marriage, Brother and Sister Okerlind were sought out by elders of the Reorganization and after careful investigation were baptized by Elder Swen Swenson, February 12, 1904.

Brother Okerlind was ordained an elder September, 1905, after a remarkable spiritual experience, and a year later was called into the mission field. In addition to two extended appointments in Sweden, Brother Okerlind's fields included Utah, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Idaho, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba, Colorado, Wyoming, Minnesota, and Wisconsin. He served as a member of the First Quorum of Seventy from January, 1910, until he was superannuated in the General Conference of 1946. Since that time he has labored as his health would permit and has borne a faithful testimony. Brother and Sister Okerlind moved to Independence immediately after his first appointment. Here their three daughters have grown to womanhood and carried on his tradition of service.

Brother Okerlind died at the Sanitarium after an emergency operation Saturday, July 16. He is survived by his wife, Anna Sophia, and his daughters Elizabeth, Sadie, and Mary. There are also two sisters living in Utah and three sisters and two brothers in Sweden.

Brother Okerlind has had a long, honorable, and distinguished ministry. In his passing the church and the community loses a good man, but his record ever remains as an inspiring example of devoted service.

The funeral service was held at Speaks' Funeral Home on July 19. L. F. P. Curry preached the sermon, and President F. Henry Edwards gave the prayer. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HENNING.—Laura L. Gamble, daughter of Robert and Margaret Wallace Gamble, was born on February 14, 1881, in Deishow, West Virginia, and died July 7, 1949, at her home in Charleroi, Pennsylvania. She was a member of the Reorganized Church and went to church at Lock No. 4, North Charleroi, Pennsylvania.

Besides her husband, N. W. Henning, she leaves two daughters: Mrs. Ralph Piper and Mrs. Earl Blevins; one son, Frederick Maxon; one stepson, James W. Henning; two brothers: Walter and George Gamble of Morgantown, West Virginia; three sisters: Mrs. Anna Martin, Mrs. Emma Ashcroft, and Mrs. Elizabeth Schipik; six grandchildren; and nine great-grandchildren.

Funeral services were conducted by Elders Henry and Clarence Winship. Interment was in Monongahela cemetery.

BLY.—Mary Jane Walker, was born in Green County, Indiana, May 1, 1864, the daughter of Ransom and Rebecca Walker, and died July 23, 1949, at the Nowata, Oklahoma, Hospital. Her parents moved to Missouri when she was four years old and later the family settled in Jewell County, Kansas, where she grew to womanhood. She was married to Alired J. Bly, April 22, 1884. They moved to Oklahoma in 1897, establishing their home in Nowata in 1919. In March, 1893, she and her companion were baptized into the Reorganized Church. They were active in Nowata Branch where Elder Bly was president on several occasions. He died in 1944, six days after they had celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary. Mrs. Bly had been in poor health for several years, the last few years being an invalid. She was the mother of eight children, five daughters and three sons.

She is survived by four daughters: Mrs. Delcie Hershey, Hammond, Indiana; Mrs. Goldia Anderson, Tulsa, Oklahoma; Mrs. Mida Grant, Nowata, Oklahoma; and Mrs. Vida Davis, Aluwee, Oklahoma; seven grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren; one brother, Ira N. Walker, Wichita, Kansas; two sisters: Mrs. Alice Austin, Burr Oak, Kansas; and Mrs. Martha Foster, Harper, Kansas. The funeral was conducted at the Nowata Funeral Chapel in charge of Elder Victor Witte of Tulsa, Oklahoma, assisted by Branch President E. R. Coldren of Nowata Branch. Burial was in the Nowata cemetery.

P.S.

 HOT WEATHER

Perhaps, as you have sweltered in your Sunday best with other faithful members of your congregation, you have noticed the weather. So? Very well, let's commiserate each other with some lamentation. I'll go first. . . . Here in Hometown we have been having Weather. Yes, capital "W." In kitchen terms, we have been steeped in it. We simmer. We fry. We are marinated in humidity. Today, we roast. . . . We live by fans. There is one blowing its hot breath, like a small angry dragon, upon P. S. now. But that is better than stifling. We eat by fans. We sleep under them. They invade our dreams, and last night one got mixed up in a favorite nightmare.

Heat reminds one of what Grandma said one afternoon many years ago, "I don't like the weather. There's too much of it!"

"Heat, ma'am!" I said; "it was so dreadful here, that I found there was nothing left for it but to take off my flesh and sit in my bones."

There we depart from reality and from reason. It seems like a comfortable idea, if one could only do it. In costumes we try conflicting theories: ventilating to remove body heat, or insulating ourselves against the sun's heat. But we carry our blankets of fat with us night and day.

The best defense against the heat is not to worry about it. Be moderate. A cool glass of lemonade, a good book, and something to do are best. Go to church as usual, see your friends, smile. That will get you by on the hottest days.

 HOSPITALITY NOTE

In these hot-weather days, refrigerators are going at full capacity, barely able to make enough ice cubes for family needs. At social affairs, the hostess may run short of ice. So, when she is entertaining intimate friends informally, she is apt to end her invitation on a gay note, "And bring your ice cubes!" You know what she means; so you wrap your cubes in newspapers for insulation, refill your trays, and make your way to the party with a package under your arm.

This will take care of the body. Now, if there were only something equally effective to keep mind and spirit, and the usual difficult temper, cool on the way to church. When the heat is bothering and you feel annoyed, ask yourself, "Have I remembered my ice cubes?"

 CONFESSIONS

In your testimonies, be careful that you do not make a vice of your confessions. Be careful that you do not boast of your sins. God knows all about them and is disgusted. Be sure of that.

* WIT is a weapon that must be used with care, and there are those who were never equipped by nature to understand it. It is like a gun that carries a large powder charge and a small bullet; it shoots with a great velocity and a terrific recoil, that may do more damage to the shoulder of the hunter than to the target, and it sometimes explodes in his hands.

 QUIP

You have heard of the intelligent gentleman who had "method in his madness." Most of us aren't like that. We just have "madness in our methods."

GERALDINE WYATT wrote "Dawn of Peace" for Herald House back in 1938. Last year a large Eastern publisher issued a teen-age book written by Mrs. Wyatt called "Buffalo Gold." This is her second teen-age book to be published. Mrs. Wyatt and her husband, who is an attorney, and their daughter live here in Independence. She has written many articles for the "Saints' Herald" and has done some editing on a booklet to be soon issued by the Department of Religious Education.

"WRONGHAND" is the story of 16-year-old Todd Parish. When his father did not return from the Civil War, the care and support of his frail mother, his brothers and sisters, fell upon him. The family had nothing but 2500 Texas Longhorns and a little worthless Confederate money. Todd realized their only hope lay in his driving the cattle up the Chisholm Trail to Abilene and selling them for ready cash. This is an action-packed story of cowboys and cattle and Indians told in the best tradition of the ever popular Western. A really fine story, splendidly told. $2.50

Seeing Trees Walk

Jesus anointed the eyes of the blind man and asked him if he could see anything. His reply has left us curious, "I see men as trees walking." His vision was still distorted, but it indicated progress. He could see once more. Whereas he was blind, now he could see a little.

Men see what they look for and according as their eyes have been trained. A woman is said to have congratulated Dr. Samuel Johnson because he "had left the filthy words out of" his new dictionary. He then observed dryly, "So you have been looking for them, have you?"

Elder Harry Passman used to tell the story of an orchardist who invited a friend to see a choice apple tree which was loaded with beautiful fruit. The owner told of the care of the tree and the excellent quality of its apples. His friend looked all around the tree and finally exclaimed, "Say, there is a rotten one way up there near the top."

Jeremiah condemned as foolish those "which have eyes and see not." To some extent we are all foolish, for we exhibit blind spots in our range of vision. Perhaps the man who said, "We see a thing as we are, not as it is," expressed a real truth. Come to think of it, life is wonderful, people are fine folk, and the church is growing better. Don't tell me I am seeing trees walk either.

Introducing...

ROY EUGENE WELDON (page 7) was born in Lafayette, California, December 3, 1899, and was baptized at Irvington, California, in July of 1912.

On May 22, 1927, he married Lillian Pottorff. They have three sons: Clair, 20; Lynn, 18; Ward, 13.

Brother Weldon operates a bee farm at Warrensburg, Missouri; he also has one in Iowa. However, his major interest is in the church and Book of Mormon archæology. He has made three trips to Latin America to further his knowledge of this subject. In 1941, in 1945, and in 1949, he made intensive tours of archæological areas.

Brother Weldon was ordained a priest in 1927, an elder in 1935, and a high priest in 1945. He is a member of the Central Missouri Stake high council, of the Society for Archæological Research, and of the Indian Welfare Committee.

L. WAYNE UPDIKE (page 10) has had previous articles in the issues of July 25, May 7, and April 30. He was introduced at the earliest date.

WARDELL E. HINDERKS (page 14) was born June 8, 1918, at Stewartville, Missouri, where he was graduated from high school in 1936. He attended Graceland College from 1937 to 1939, and Purdue University in 1946 and 1947, where he was graduated with honors, receiving the degree of bachelor of science in business.

Brother Hinderks served from 1941 to 1946 with the United States Army Air Forces. At the time of his discharge he was lieutenant colonel. Following this service he took insurance training in Chicago and now operates his own business in Kansas City, Missouri.

He is adult leader for the Kansas City Stake, teaches a church school class, and is intensely interested in sports and music.

RUBY STRAND (page 17) has been contributing to church literature for several years. She was graduated from Joy (Illinois) High School in 1918, and attended the state normal university one year and four summers at Normal, Illinois.

In 1923 she was married to Henry T. Strand. They live in Creston, Iowa.

Sister Strand taught school for six years in Illinois and again for a short period in Iowa during the war.

Her high school medal from an oratorical contest is now her husband's watch fob. Her hobbies are writing and teaching, especially in the children's field.

News & Notes

CHELLINE INSTALLED

According to a clipping received by the First Presidency, the "Port Huron Times Herald" carries an article and pictures concerning the installation of Elder Warren Chelline as pastor of the Port Huron, Michigan, Branch. Elder Chelline succeeds Elder E. E. Smith who served since November 18, 1946. Elder Smith has been assigned to the Chatham District, Chatham, objective. Apostle Arthur A. Oakman presided at the installation service on June 19.

THE WARNING HELPED

Elder Garland Tickemyer had a call from the family that has been posing as members of our church and getting money from the Saints on the Pacific coast. Same old story: on their way to a new location; car broke down and took all their funds; eight children.

"I went out and looked at the children, and without your warning, I'm afraid I would have given them the last dollar I had in my pocket. He gave me his name as Charles G. Woods."

BAPTISMS AT DeKALB

A report of Lloyd L. Hadley, president of the Northeastern Illinois District, shows that six people were baptized in the DeKalb, Illinois, Branch on Sunday, June 12. There were four adults and two children.

REPORTS OF MISSIONARY WORK

Luther Troyer reports that in the Northern Indiana District there have been thirty-six baptisms since the first of the year. Of the thirty-six he baptized thirty-five; twelve were in Detroit, Michigan.

Apostle Arthur Oakman reports that Evangelist E. R. Carter has been doing missionary work in Northern Indiana with excellent success.

James Daugherty began a six weeks' series of missionary meetings at Fort William, Ontario, on July 17.

FROM CHARITON, IOWA

From a recent report of Elder John W. Blackstock at Chariton, Iowa, comes the following interesting news paragraph: "We go along quite well with our vacation church school. We baptized eight on June 12, two of whom were mothers, two were from Corydon, Iowa, and two were from Lucas, Iowa."

NEW ADDRESS

Glaude Smith, pastor of Stone Church, and his wife moved into a new house on July 15 at the address of 419 North River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri. This is the first house that Brother and Sister Smith have lived in since his work in Independence, having always before made their home in an apartment.

CHURCH EXTENSION IN ALVA, OKLAHOMA

Elder Paul Lee, pastor at Alva, Oklahoma, Branch, was in Independence, Missouri, on July 23, according to Apostle Reed Holmes. He secured approval for the purchase of a frame school building to be moved to the site of the present church. Other additions will be made, increasing the church school facilities. When completed, the whole plant will be stuccoed. There are twenty-five children in this branch under six years of age. The missionary spirit is very much alive among all the members, Brother Holmes says, and these added facilities, for children and young people especially, are most welcome.

Help Wanted: Witnesses

Thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. — Ananias to Saul, Acts 22: 15.

IF MORE CHURCHES would put a "Help Wanted" sign on their bulletin boards, new members and new strength might be drawn into the congregation. It would be interesting for some enterprising pastor to try it, or to run an advertisement in the paper. Tact would be required, or the consequences could be difficult.

Yet the call of the gospel has erected a great "Help Wanted" sign whose shadow falls across the world. Jesus made his appeal to the Rich Young Man, "Come and follow me." He said to Peter and Andrew, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." He recruited his workers with a "Help Wanted" call.

People are always looking for something to do. They would like it to be interesting; and, if they are the right kind, they want it to be good and useful. Even in their sports they like to think that they are relaxing, or strengthening the body, or stimulating the glands. There is work for them in the church as witnesses for Christ.

THERE WAS A GREAT NEED of witnesses in the early church. The resurrected Christ said to eleven of the disciples, "Ye are witnesses." When Ananias came to Saul to deliver him from his blindness by divine command, one of his first statements was, "Thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard." The great work of Paul was to be a witness for Christ. Peter, brought before the high priest and commanded to cease preaching, declared, "We are his witnesses," and would not be still.

The great work of the first apostles of the church was witnessing for Christ. Despite persecution, the early saints witnessed for him in heathen lands where the idolatrous worship of many gods was practiced. In their humble and often secret meeting places, they proclaimed a gospel of power that was to win its way and overcome its adversaries in all the lands where the message was taken. In their little meetings among themselves they bore witness of Christ. And wherever they found an attentive ear, they told the story that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

There was one great work in the church of the early days: it was witnessing for Christ.

ARE YOU LOOKING for something to do? Have you considered the service you can render in witnessing for Christ? Have you seen the great "Help Wanted" sign of the gospel?

Testimonies in the prayer meetings are very revealing. "God has been good to me" is the theme, in many forms, of those who have been serving as witnesses and workers. "I want to dedicate my life to Christ" is the theme of those who have just seen the door to service opening. There is a pathetic note of frustration in another kind of testimony, "I want to serve the Lord, but I don't know what he wants me to do."

There is one line of service that is open to every member in the church, trained or untrained, rich or poor, humble or proud. They can all work as witnesses for Christ. Here is a line of service that will never be overcrowded. In other fields the church needs skilled and able workers. But many who come are not trained for special work. Yet every desire to serve should find an outlet and be channeled into some useful effort. Witnessing is for all of us.

WHERE CAN YOU GO TO WORK? First, in the meetings of the Saints, among those who have already heard part of the story and wait to hear more of it. You can tell what God has done for you and of what Christ has meant to you. It is a good work, strengthening the Saints, and you will have a sympathetic hearing.

You have been in prayer meetings that have moved slowly, where time was lost because no one answered the invitation to pray or to testify. That is your opportunity to serve. That is when and where you are needed. No matter how humble you are, no matter how difficult it may be for you to speak, you can say a few good words for the Lord Jesus, giving strength to others, and receiving strength yourself as a compensation for your effort.

Bear your testimony frequently to the Saints, and the day will come when you will feel strong enough, and will have the opportunity of being a witness for Christ to those who do not know him. The prayer meeting is your training ground in Christian testimony.

The prayer meeting has a number of advantages: there is no stiff, prepared program; all can participate, all can have a chance. How many young men have been called into a greater ministry through their growth and activity in the prayer meetings. How many have learned to speak and pray there. How many young women, searching for God's direction, have found their life work, and sometimes their companions, there. How many able servants of the Lord have progressed in ability and service, from prayer to testimony, to teaching and preaching, from humble beginnings in the prayer meetings.

There is a place for you to serve, witnessing for Christ.

MEMORIAL TO THE MARTYRS

Hardly had I reached Independence from my Wisconsin travels when it was necessary to leave for Nauvoo, where I was scheduled to make an address at the Memorial services for the Martyrs. Elder David J. Williams, president of the Nauvoo District, had made plans for Sunday, June 26, its being the Sabbath nearest to the anniversary of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, which choice has been our custom for many years.

Sister Smith accompanied me, going by automobile. We arrived Saturday afternoon in the midst of a heat wave. In addition, the May flies were in evidence, millions of them. These pests do not harm those who live along the rivers but do make the average person nervous, to say the least. Since returning I have definitely established what they are. The common name, as suggested, is May fly, though they are erroneously called by some Willow flies. The scientific name is Ephemera which Webster's Dictionary describes as follows:

An order of slender, delicate insects, the May flies, ephemeral flies, or shad flies, with membranous, net-veined wings;—so named from the shortness of their adult life (which is only a few hours or days) They have short antennae, large forewings, small hind wings (or none at all), and two or three slender filaments at the end of the body, and are peculiar in molting once after assuming the winged form In the adult state they eat nothing. The adults sometimes appear in immense swarms.

If the shortness of life is due to their failure to eat—well, anyway, we are glad they are short-lived.

We were domiciled at the Mansion House, and my readers may imagine my emotions to be protected by the same walls and the same lares and penates that gave security to my paternal grandparents.

Sunday began with clouds and a gentle rain, which threatened the success of our program; but by noon the sun broke through, and the afternoon was ideal.

At two the tabernacle was comfortably filled. District President Williams presided. Local Pastor Atkinson offered prayer. A picked choir sang, "Fulfillment," after which I spoke about the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, then we marched in procession to the site of the graves.

Here the choir sang, "The Unknown Grave," which was written by my uncle, David H. Smith, who was born in the Mansion House, and Elder Cecil Ettinger spoke briefly and appropriately about the Martyrs. "Where the Two Martyrs Lay," by H. S. Dille, was sung.

Sister Nina G. Smith, my good wife, laid a wreath at the grave of the Prophet, and Sister Mary Dean Hancock, a granddaughter of Catherine Smith Salisbury, who was the youngest sister of the Prophet, placed a wreath on Patriarch Hyrum's tomb, and her daughter, Roma Dean Smith, laid the floral offerings at the grave of Emma Smith.

A memorial prayer was offered by Elder Ettinger, the choir sang, "Hark, Ye Mortals," and benediction was pronounced by Elder Orvil T. Miller, pastor at Montrose, Iowa.

Members were in attendance from many different places, and there was a splendid fellowship in evidence.

The grounds, under the efficient care of Elder John Williams, are beautiful and very well kept.

The guides were busy entertaining visitors, and altogether the day was a full one.

Among those present were Elder and Mrs. Alex Klein and daughter, Patricia, of Independence.

At the request of Pastor Atkinson, I spoke at the local church at eleven o'clock, assisted by Elder Klein.

While there Sister Smith and I partook of the hospitality of Brother and Sister Ettinger, Brother and Sister Arnold Ourth, Brother and Sister Harold D. Smith, Brother and Sister John Williams, and Brother and Sister Clyde Fusselman. Red raspberries were abundant—enough said.

Sister Smith and I returned on Monday, June 27, arriving safely in the evening, somewhat weary but happy in the recollection of recent events.

Across the Desk

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

NOT SO LONG AGO we received a letter from Elder Wayne E. Simmons, writing on behalf of himself and wife, Verneil, which told a story I have longed to picture in words adequate to convey the glamour and heart interest I have felt in reading it.

Brother and Sister Simmons formerly had spent a year in governmental and educational work in Costa Rica. Wayne had been ordained an elder at Mobile, while he and family were en route to that country.

While in Costa Rica their son, Neil, reached the age of eight and was baptized. But let this good father tell the story. Here it is from his pen, written from Washington while en route again to Caracas, Costa Rica:

We had spent many hours in explanation of why a boy must wait until he is eight before he can be baptized. Neil's birthday came in the middle of the week, and at last Sunday morning came—the day when he was to enter the kingdom. Like all mornings in Costa Rica, the weather was flawless—cool, fleecy clouds contrasting with the clear blue of the skies—truly the Lord's Day. The river valley we chose for Neil's baptism was a welter of color, with its higher, incredibly green, uptilted fields, then lower brown patches studded by dark coffee trees and flowering shrubs, merging into thickets of lush foliage that led one's eye down to the foaming river. The water tumbled over great rounded boulders and patches of gleaming white sand, tumultuous and capricious as it changed from a welter of gleaming foam to the dark green of quiet pools. It was toward one of these pools that the little baptismal party made their descent, climbing down the oxcart trail to the river's edge. What thoughts passed through our minds as we approached the beautiful spot! Who could say if this might not be the scene of other baptisms, performed so long ago. Perhaps these were the waters of Mormon where Alma baptized Helam.

Our party consisted of the Baptist minister and his family, members of the American school faculty with whom I labored, and English-speaking members of the Baptist congregation in San Jose, together with my wife and little five-year-old boy, Gareth. Mr. Hughes, at my request, opened the service with prayer, asking the Lord to give his Spirit to those who saw and heard what should be performed in their midst, and to bless the ministry of the ordinance. The Lord truly did this. After singing "Just As I Am" with the little group, I opened the Bible and read passages in the gospels and in Paul's letters, intending to deliver a baptismal charge to Neil. Instead, I found direction to widen my spoken thoughts in teaching the meaning of baptism to those who clustered around me. When I had finished, I saw our circle had grown to include interested Costa Ricans who had left their fishing near by, like Galileans of another day, to watch and listen. I am certain they knew no English, but I

Campus sermon, June 19, 1949

By F. HENRY EDWARDS

Scripture Reading: Hebrews 11: 1 to 12: 2.

Text: "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us."

I CAN THINK of no better Scripture than that which we have just read as a point of departure at this time. Its essential message is closely related to our current general church emphasis; and if we will take it to heart, I am sure that the theme will minister to the fundamental spiritual needs of our community.

The wise and experienced writer of the Hebrew letter is here concerned with the deepest needs of his generation. He recalls the great spiritual heroes of history: Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses. These, he said, wrought mightily through faith. It was their glory to live for a cause whose major fruition and justification lay beyond their times.

Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.—Hebrews 12: 1, 2.

AN ETERNAL PURPOSE

The picture here given us is of great men and women at work on an enterprise which lasts as long as time, which justifies itself in each generation, but which always points forward—an enterprise which has about it the aura of eternity. The great cloud of witnesses who encompass us speaks to our souls with the authority of truth in action. As we think on their deeds, we acknowledge in our hearts that they are real heroes. By their own lives they witness to the glory of faith in God's everlasting purpose.

But we look to One who is greater than any or all of the heroes of the Mosaic dispensation. We look to "the author and finisher" of faith; the guarantor of all sound and hopeful confidence. We look to the One who is in himself the final justification of righteousness, to the One who "witnessed a good confession before Pilate"; and, "looking unto Jesus," we are invited to take our places in the line of living heroes.

If this letter were being written today, it would contain other names, possibly Peter, John, Stephen, Timothy, Dorcas, Lois, Luther, Fox, Wesley, and Joseph Smith. But this would not change its essential message. The affirmation and invitation would still be: "All these wrought by faith . . . wherefore let us run with patience the race which is set before us, looking unto Jesus. . . ."

THE LIFE OF FAITH AND TESTIMONY

As we have already seen, the apostle here gives us the picture of an age-long purpose in which we are invited to co-operate. The Scriptures admonish us to be "always ready to give a reason for the hope that is within us" and to use all our interim opportunities testifying for Jesus just as Philip did between Azotus and Caesarea. But here the concern of the writer is with the sweep of our life purpose, the dominant conviction and attitude which allies us with the great witnesses of all time and which must undergird our specific testimonies. Just as his lifelong sympathy and compassion explain Lincoln's pardon of the erring son of a widowed mother, so our soul-searching sense of being chosen to live and to testify must explain and give power to our specific acts of witness. That is why the admonition says "run with patience" and reminds us that Jesus "endured the cross." At the back of the mind of the great apostle must have been an echo of the dictum of Jesus himself, "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."

BEHOLD THE LAMB OF GOD

What, then, are the keynotes of our testimony which are to be given in deed and in word, and which make us worthy of our calling?

There comes to mind, first, the great declaration of John uttered when Jesus went to him for baptism: "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." John, Paul, and all the prophets and seers have known that sin is the ultimate problem. That is why our Scripture pleads with us to "lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us." But the same Scripture reminds us to keep our eyes on Jesus in whom the solution of the problem is to be found. The "author and finisher of our faith" met the challenge of sin in his own person and vanquished it. This is illustrated in the account of the temptations. Behind that temptation to make bread from stones in order to satisfy his hunger, or to cast himself from the pinnacle of the temple in order to test God's care, or to take to himself the kingdoms of this world and the glory of them, lay the key problem of the moral use of power. When Jesus refused to yield to the temptation to satisfy his human wants at the expense of his divine calling, he attacked sin in its characteristic form.

All through history men have been the victims of besetting sins, which, despite their many variations, originated in some form of selfishness. From the beginning, men of power have demanded special consideration, have been lifted up in pride, and — being satisfied — have forgotten the needs of others. Yet only men of ability, strength, wisdom, resourcefulness, and self-discipline can wring the riches from the earth which are our inheritance and so build within themselves the qualities which rightly become the "lords of creation." So, some solution of the problem of power which shall be morally justifiable is needed. And John, with truly prophetic insight, initiates the testimony which has now become ours: "Behold, the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Sin is defeated by sacrifice of the wisest and the best for righteousness' sake. "Let him that would be greatest among you be the servant of all."

RIGHTEOUSNESS IS THE FUNDAMENTAL GOOD

The second point in our witness is that righteousness is the fundamental good. There is a Supreme Court in the moral realm. Its presiding officer is Righteousness. Associated with him are Truth, Faith, Mercy, Wisdom, Justice, Temperance, Virtue, and Brotherly Kindness. These never grow old. Before this court all human authority and power are placed in judgment; here all our acts are approved or condemned.

The qualities of character which are approved before the Supreme Court in the moral realm are—in the last analysis—wholly independent of human judgment. They are right, no matter what men say or do. These basic qualities of character are demonstrated, in part, by the great cloud of witnesses who march before our mental vision when we think seriously and earnestly of the nature of truth in action. And they are fully demonstrated in the life of the Lord Jesus, our Captain, and our Exemplar.

Furthermore, despite the practical disavowal of these virtues which occurs among us time after time, they have a beauty and a vitality all their own. These qualities of spiritual character are among "the things that are not," which God has chosen "to bring to naught the things that are." They are gradually transforming our world despite the seemingly regnant selfishness. They are standing the test of time and will stand the test of eternity. We believe this and to a degree we have testified of it, but we need to bear witness with patience and persistence which we have not yet achieved. It may help us to remember that the Greek word which is here translated "witness" was so influenced by the sacrificial testimony of the early Christians that by the second century its meaning had changed so as to mean the witnesses who were faithful to death; hence, the martyrs.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

A further element in our testimony is that the only just and enduring social order is the kingdom of God. This has been the common faith of our great spiritual leaders. Now it is being more and more confidently affirmed by lesser men as a result of their study. No civilization has ever survived because of its military, financial, or scientific strength. Always civilizations have endured by virtue of the less conspicuous, spiritual riches. Those which have failed to survive have all died from internal causes. Babylon, Egypt, Rome, all were the victims of their own spiritual disorders.

Every genuine social advance in our history has been an extension of the principle of brotherly kindness. Every improvement in the common man's lot—his hours of work, his wages, his leisure time, his resources, his health, his education, his franchise, his right to be free from adverse discrimination on account of race or color—all of these owe more than we realize to the vision and sacrifice of men and women who have caught a glimpse of the kingdom of God. But none of these gains are stable until the society which enjoys them has a deep feeling that they embody rights and are not merely concessions; that they are dictated by justice, not by expediency; that they have to do with the essential dignity of man, not merely with the conditions of labor.

The only just social order, the only social order which can endure for time and eternity, must have its foundation in character. That was why Jesus called the rich farmer a fool. This man was not foolish when he pulled down his inadequate barns to build greater ones, but he was a fool in failing to realize that there is a future from which we cannot escape, that the riches which equip us for this inescapable future lie within and cannot be stored up in barns. They belong to us by right of our own personal endowment by Divinity. It is for this reason that the only socio-spiritual order which can endure is the kingdom of God. This is the only order of life whose roots are in the very natures of men who have been born again, and who have grown in grace and power, and who live and serve under the creative ministry of the Spirit of God.

THE FUTURE IS IN THE HANDS OF GOD

Our witness, joining that of the great cloud of witnesses who have gone before, states further that the future is in the hands of God. This is an unprovable thing of which all

A Visit to Book of Mormon Lands

in Central and South America

By ROY E. WELDON

MY RECENT JOURNEY to South America was a trip of a lifetime. It has long been my ambition to set foot on all the principal sites of Book of Mormon importance in the Western Hemisphere. This ambition was recently realized when my good traveling companion, Francis Anderson, of Holden, Missouri, and I set foot on the ruins of Tiahuanaco, Bolivia (altitude, 12,406 feet). My affection for and intense interest in all that pertains to the Book of Mormon has led me from the Hill Cumorah (northernmost shrine of the Book of Mormon) to the far-flung reaches of the Andes mountains in Bolivia.

I feel intensely grateful that the ebb and flow of life's circumstances have permitted me to enjoy such an experience. I owe a great debt of gratitude to my family and especially to my wife for her co-operation and kindness in making the trip possible. The cost of a trip such as this cuts heavily into the family budget. The money spent on such a journey could have been otherwise expended in home improvements and family benefits.

I also owe a debt of gratitude to my genial traveling companion and assistant, Brother Francis Anderson. Without his aid and presence I would never have dared to undertake such a hazardous trip into so many remote places in Latin America. We set foot on thirteen Latin American countries and traveled a total of approximately 15,200 miles—6,890 miles by air, 3,369 miles by railroad, 4,067 miles by bus, and 880 miles by banana boat, not to mention the miles on horseback, muleback, cayuga, on foot, and—most unforgettable of all—the one mile across the turbulent, flood-swollen Macara River on the line between Ecuador and Peru on a pumpkin (Por Poto). We have Kodachromes to prove the authenticity of the pumpkin episode.

Needless to say, the experiences of such a journey would make a book. I kept a record of the trip by air-mail letters to my wife. There were forty-four such letters, most of them quite lengthy. In this report to readers of the Herald, I propose to limit myself briefly to impressions and observations connected with the work of the Society for Archaeological Research and the Indian Welfare Committee.

For me the Book of Mormon has two tenses: The past tense (archæology and the secret of Ancient America), and the future tense (Zion, Lamanites, One mighty and strong, and the secret of future America).

ARCHAEOLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS

After having viewed the best that Prehistoric America has to offer (pyramids, temples, palaces, hieroglyphics, stelæ, dazzling gold and silver jewelry, etc.), I have no hesitation in saying that the one thing which impressed me beyond all else was the staircase farms of the highlands of Peru. One authority has called them the greatest monument of ancient man in the world. All the other works of prehistoric man in the Western Hemisphere pale into insignificance before the prodigious accomplishments of the ancient people of Peru.

We make much ado over the pyramid at Cholula (covering forty-three acres) and the Pyramid of the Sun at Teotihuacan (covering twelve acres).

The great pyramids of Mexico can scarcely compare with entire mountains that have been terraced with excellently built stone retaining walls, all connected with stairways, roads, and intricate systems of aqueducts for irrigation. Francis and I spent seven and one half hours hiking over mountain trails at Ollantaytambo, Peru, taking pictures of the staircase farms. The farther we walked back into the mountain fastnesses, the farther the staircase farms stretched toward the horizon. There appeared to be no end to them.

The truth of the matter is that the terraces literally extend over hundreds of square miles. We spent two days traveling around the western and southern side of Lake Titicaca (in cargo trucks) between Puno, Peru, and La Paz, Bolivia. The hills and mountains were terraced except where the altitude was too high for vegetation.

The pressure of population on food supply must have been very great. The religious and moral background that originally gave birth to such a high social order must have had its roots in the Holy Scriptures and the loving watch care of the Shepherd of Israel.

I firmly believe that Moses' prophecy about Joseph's Land (America) being blessed "for the chief things put forth by the sun" has primary application to the agriculture of Ancient Peru. It is here that the southern sun first shone on the plant propagations of New World Burbanks. It is here that more plants were domesticated than in any other part of the world. O. F. Cook of the United States Department of Agriculture estimates the number to be as high as eighty different species. Among them are such priceless items as corn, tomatoes, and potatoes. It has been said that the potato alone, Peru's gift to mankind, has enriched the world more than all the gold taken by the Spaniards. (See National Geographic Magazine, May, 1916.) Book of Mormon claims of great activity and development in the field of agriculture are abundantly vindicated in the staircase farms of Peru.

And we began to till the ground, yea, even with all manner of seeds, with seeds of corn, and of wheat and of barley, and with neas, and with sheum, and with seeds of all manner of fruits; and we did begin to multiply and prosper in the land.—Mosiah 6: 12.

The staircase farms are one of the twin wonders of the Andes. The other is stone-masonry. The two go together. It is to be expected that such a high development in agriculture should be accompanied by high accomplishments in other fields. The cutting, moving, and fitting of such immense stones as are found at Sacsahuaman, Ollantaytambo, and Tiahuanaco are indeed astonishing. No one seems to know how the ancient people accomplished such feats.

There is much discussion about what is Inca and what is pre-Inca. Inasmuch as the Incas of the days of Pizarro had neither the tools nor the "know-how" to accomplish such feats, it would seem that this work should be accredited to another race (pre-Inca). The Book of Mormon says elephants and machinery were used (Ether 4: 20-22; Jarom 1: 19). I was greatly impressed when I saw fossil remains of elephants in the museum of Tiahuanaco at La Paz, Bolivia. There are also fossil bones of elephants, mastodons, and other giant extinct beasts in the museum at the University of Guayaquil in Ecuador.

It is a long jump from the massive to the minute—from huge 200 ton monolithic stones to gold beads and other works in metallurgy, so fine that modern man cannot account for it without the use of microscopes.

At Esmeraldas, Ecuador, we visited the private museum of Señor Carlos Mercado, where we saw and photographed the fine workmanship in metallurgy of the ancient Manabi's. Among the collection were specimens of gold and silver plating.

The greatest metallurgical display we saw was in the dazzling museum of gold in the Bank of the Republic at Bogota, Columbia. We had not anticipated such a wonderful collection of jewelry and all manner of gold artifacts. We were generously given permission to take pictures. However, we had only one roll of Kodachrome (twenty exposures) left and it had been rewound in the camera. We were afraid that it was not good. A tour of the camera shops in Bogota failed to yield so much as one single roll. In previous museums we usually used five exposures at various readings to assure one good picture. To add to our difficulties, the museum was situated beneath the bank vaults and entirely lighted by artificial light. It seems nothing short of a divine blessing that every exposure we took in the "Museum of Gold" should turn out all the way from usable to very good.

Among the exhibits is a showcase array of scroll after scroll of thin gold sheets such as Joseph Smith describes the Book of Mormon plates. These scrolls are in rolls; while in the background may be seen individual specimens inscribed with various glyphs and designs.

While we were in Ecuador and Peru (Quito and Lima), I received three letters from that grand old man of Book of Mormon archæology, C. Ed. Miller. I think few people appreciate the contribution Brother Miller has made in this field. He pioneered the use of slides in church work, and I deeply appreciate the long and valuable service Brother C. Ed. Miller has rendered to the church in the field of slides and the Book of Mormon. In passing I would also like to pay tribute to the work and life of Sister Inez Kinney. It is perhaps unfortunate that our society is so constituted that it must remain for future historians to search out, recognize, and evaluate the contributions made by such consecrated and humble servants of the Lord as Inez Kinney.

To resume my account, Brother Miller wrote urging me to visit and search out the facts pertaining to the high hill north of Manta, Ecuador. The Book of Mormon indicates that courts of justice were on the tops of high hills. Nehor (arch-criminal) was executed (Alma 1: 22, 23) on the top of the hill Manti. Manti is also the name of a city and district on the sea (Pacific) in the southwestern part of the province of Zarahemla (Book of Mormon, pages 362, 300, 458, 459, 460, 510, 522, 523). It is more than a little significant that there should be a modern city of Manta on the seashore, north of which is a high hill; and on the top of this hill were found large stone chairs and a large stone table. Although the name Manta has a Spanish meaning (blanket), I was assured by the venerable residents of Manta, including the ex-governor of the Province of Manabi, that the origin of the name was Indian, and that it is a word having a meaning connected with the sea. I was able to verify reports of various authors of the existence on the top of the hill (near Manta) of large stone chairs and a large stone table.

The large stone seats may have relationship to the animal-headed throne tablets of Palenque. I have several photographs of the seats which I believe are worthy of careful study. Some authorities have called the seats on top of the hill at Manta, "Inca seats of justice." The hill at Manta is comparable to the Inca amphitheater and seats of justice at Krenko, high above the city of Cuzco. There are similar seats or thrones, so called, situated on high hills or promontories at Ollantaytambo, Peru, Copacabana, Bolivia, and other places. This appears to be an ancient Hebrew custom. Christ himself was taken to the top of a hill (Golgotha) to be crucified.

It is interesting to note that the discovery at Manta, Ecuador, harmonizes with the official church maps (Report of Committee on American Archaeology, page 66). It is also worthy of notice that great cities with walls surrounding them (Chan-Chan, Cuzco, etc.) and mighty fortifications and military installations as described in detail as being constructed by Moroni, the great military genius of Book of Mormon times are most apparent in Peru rather than in Mexico and Central America.

While climbing the hill at Manta, Ecuador, I had one of the major experiences and testimonies of my life. I plan to write this experience at a later date.

LAMANITE OBSERVATIONS

To some, archæology is the valley of dry bones—dry, dusty, and musty. There may be dry bones and dusty artifacts in connection with the past tense of the Book of Mormon, but there are no dry bones connected with the Book of Mormon's future tense. The bones of thirty million Lamanites in Latin America are not only covered with flesh and sinew, but if we are to believe the Book of Mormon itself, they loom large in the future potentialities of the Restoration Movement.

WHAT IS THE BOOK OF MORMON

The Book of Mormon is a direct product of the love and concern of ancient prophets and holy men toward the Lamanites. This book is called "The testimony of their [Lamanites] Fathers" (see Doctrine and Covenants 2: 6). The book is literally permeated with evidence that it was written primarily to the Lamanites. The Book of Mormon is a "Restoration" book designed to restore the Lamanites to a knowledge of Christ. The last words of Mormon are as follows:

And these things are written, that we may rid our garments of the blood of our brethren who have dwindled in unbelief.

And behold, these things which we have desired concerning our brethren, yea, even their restoration to the knowledge of Christ, is according to the prayers of all the saints who have dwelt in the land.

And may the Lord Jesus Christ grant that their prayers may be answered according to their faith; and may God the Father remember the covenant which he hath made with the house of Israel; and may he bless them for ever, through faith on the name of Jesus Christ.—Mormon 4: 101-103.

The Book of Mormon is called the "Fullness of the Gospel." It is my firm belief that the angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to those who dwell on the earth (Revelation 14: 6, 7), was none other than Moroni and that the gospel he brought was the "fullness of the gospel," the Book of Mormon. (See Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2; 17: 2; 12: 5; 110: 20; 2: 6.) It is also my firm belief that the primary purpose of the coming of Moroni to Joseph Smith was that the Book of Mormon might be carried to the Lamanites, a goal not yet achieved. We have already quoted the last words of Moroni. We now quote from the last chapter and last words of Moroni—the angel of Revelation 14: 6, 7:

Now I, Moroni, write somewhat as seemeth me good; and I write unto my brethren the Lamanites, and I would that they should know that more than four hundred and twenty years have passed away, since the sign was given of the coming of Christ.—Moroni 10: 1.

How could Moroni write to the Lamanites unless someone would carry his words (the Book of Mormon) to them?

GENTILES TO CARRY BOOK OF MORMON TO THE LAMANITES

The Book of Mormon is replete with evidence that the prophets and holy men who wrote it expected the Gentiles to carry it to the Lamanites.

And now, the thing which our father meaneth concerning the grafting in of the natural branches through the fullness of the Gentiles, is that in the latter days, when our seed shall have dwindled in unbelief . . . then shall the fullness of the gospel of the Messiah come unto the Gentiles, and from the Gentiles unto the remnant of our seed . . .

And he meaneth that it will not come to pass, until after they are scattered by the Gentiles;

And he meaneth that it shall come by way of the Gentiles, that the Lord may show his power unto the Gentiles . . . —I Nephi 4: 16, 26, 27.

And it is by faith that my fathers have obtained the promise that these things should come unto their brethren through the Gentiles; therefore the Lord hath commanded me, yea, even Jesus Christ.—Ether 5: 22.

Now these things are written unto the remnant of the House of Jacob . . . and they are to be hid up unto the Lord, that they may come forth in his own due time . . .

And also that the seed of this people may more fully believe his Gospel, which shall go forth unto them from the Gentiles.—Mormon 2: 39-43.

... And after our seed is scattered, the Lord God will proceed to do a marvelous work among the Gentiles, which shall be of great worth unto our seed . . . —I Nephi 7: 17.

The flyleaf of the Book of Mormon says:

Wherefore, it is an abridgment of the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites; written to the Lamanites, . . . and also to Jew and Gentile . . . to come forth by way of the Gentile . . .

Obviously, as yet the Book of Mormon has not become of great worth to the Lamanites, neither will it be until someone carries it to them.

Thirty million Lamanites dwell in Latin America. Comparatively speaking, a mere handful of Lamanites (350,000) dwell in the United States.

The church has done little work in recent years with the Indians in the United States, and no work has ever been attempted with the Lamanites in Latin America.

It seems very obvious that if we take the Book of Mormon at face value, a great unfinished task of the Restoration Movement lies waiting south of the Rio Grande.

According to both the Book of Mormon and modern revelation, the carrying of the "testimony of their fathers" to the Lamanites is fraught with immense and soul-stirring possibilities. The endowment in rich degree is promised (See Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3-5; I Nephi 7: 21-25; III Nephi 9: 57-59; 10: 1-4; 9: 91-93).

The Lamanites are promised a major role in the building of the New Jerusalem, Zion (III Nephi 10: 1-4; Ether 6: 1-8). It has also been surmised that the "One mighty and strong" (Doctrine and Covenants 100: 3) may be a Lamanite.

WHO WILL CARRY THE BOOK OF MORMON TO THE INDIANS?

This is a major problem. It was earnestly discussed at our last General Conference. There is an apparent shortage of man power. We lack men to take effective care of our present holdings. We cannot afford to take men away from valuable positions of ministry and allow entire congregations to wilt on the vine. Why rob Peter to pay Paul? Why expand our ministry into new countries at the expense of the church work in our own country? In the face of these facts, it is difficult for even the most ardent supporters of the Lamanite cause to quarrel with the administration for its reticence to consider investing men and money in Latin America.

Before my recent trip to South America, this situation appeared to me to be a hopeless impasse. It is estimated that by 1970 the United States will have a population of 175 million. In addition, there will be an entire new generation that has never heard our message. It appears that the responsibilities of future ministry in our own country will increase rather than decrease. It seemed to me, therefore, that prospects of discharging our great obligation to the Book of Mormon and the Lamanite cause was dim and remote until my recent trip to Latin America.

In a series of remarkable experiences in the inspiring and sheltering presence of the mighty Andes Mountains in Peru, Ecuador, and Colombia, there has opened up to me a solution to this problem.

By General Conference enactment, the Indian Welfare Committee is to offer its findings and recommendations to the next General Conference (1950) for action. In view of these facts, it seems entirely fitting and proper that a brief outline of my observations and impressions should be presented.

Light on the solution to the Latin American Lamanite problem started with a very remarkable experience in Lima. Brother Anderson and I had just arrived in Lima, Peru. We had just stepped out of the office building on the square of San Martin, which houses the American Consulate. As we walked along in the crowd thumbing through the mail from home, I turned to my companion and said, "Here is a letter from Ward Hougas." It so happened that Brother Paul M. Hanson, also just arrived in Lima, was passing by within earshot and heard the words Ward Hougas. It was a happy meeting. Brother Hanson's immediate comment was, "This is providential." Subsequent experiences have convinced me that Brother Hanson was right.

On the evening before our departure by plane for Cuzco, by the generous invitation of Brother Hanson, we were his guests at dinner. We dined in an open-air restaurant which fronts on the sidewalks of the Square of San Martin. The leisurely dinner and the discussion of matters of deep mutual interest amid the strange surroundings of a great Latin American city we had all long dreamed of visiting was a delightful and memorable experience.

During the course of the evening, we discussed the plight of the Lamanites in Latin America and future problems of church work among them. Cognizance was taken of the widening interest of Latin Americans in the pre-Columbian civilizations. The fact was also mentioned that one of the government guides in Mexico City had acquaintance with and had made reference to Brother Hanson's Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans. It was at this time that the idea first came like a flash of light to me that Brother Hanson's book would make an ideal companion book to the Book of Mormon, to be distributed through leading bookstores, government guides, and libraries in South America.

FIRSTLY TO THE RICH, LEARNED, WISE, AND NOBLE

According to Doctrine and Covenants 58: 3, the gospel is to go first to the rich, learned, wise, and noble. These classes of people in Latin America have a deep and widening interest in the mysterious races and civilizations that occupied their country before the arrival of the Spaniards.

Everywhere I was asked why I was traveling in Latin America. My response of archaeologia was usually the signal for a more or less lengthy discussion—and all this despite my obvious inabilities in the use of the Spanish language.

We were deeply impressed with the evidence of the great interest in things pre-Columbian when we arrived in Bogota, Colombia. A great, modern airport has been built about two miles out from the city limits of Bogota. A great two-lane boulevard has been constructed from the airport to the city limits. Between the two boulevards and on each side, lawn grass and young trees have been planted. All along this magnificent boulevard at various intervals, the government has set up numerous specimens of the mysterious monoliths and statues recently excavated at San Augustin in Southern Colombia. The first objects that meet the eye of the curious voyager to Bogota, Colombia, are the mysterious artifacts of a prehistoric race. We were still more impressed when we visited the National Museum in Bogota and saw the fine, new, expansive building being constructed to house the archaeological treasures of Colombia.

I am deeply impressed that the time is ripe to capitalize on the rapidly mounting interest in all things prehistoric in Latin America. The Book of Mormon and Brother Hanson's book, Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans, can both be distributed throughout Latin America as books of history and archaeology which deal with the prehistoric civilizations of Ancient America. For the purpose of distribution among the learned, cultured people of Latin America, Brother Hanson's book is a masterpiece. I think the church is fortunate to have a book at hand so admirably adapted to the purpose.

I was also impressed with the innumerable salesmen who throng the cities of South America, selling everything imaginable. Swarms of boys in the streets want to polish your shoes, show you where the post office is, or render you some other service. I talked at length with a New

Our Motives for Gathering

By L. WAYNE UMPIKE

ONE OF THE PERENNIALS in the philosophy-gardens of Latter Day Saints is the idea of the Gathering. In church schools, at reunions, at priesthood institutes—in fact, wherever the gospel brings people together—the subject of the Gathering is discussed. In such situations it grows as a volunteer. Nobody planted it except God. But once it sprouts in a conversation, it grows and flourishes with amazing rapidity; usually it just “takes over.”

Why? Is it simply because the philosophy of the Gathering was written into the Restoration story by Divinity? That may be reason enough, but that's not the real reason. If it were, our conversation would just as quickly turn to the subject of the Crucifixion, or repentance, or a testimony of Christ. These also were written into the Restoration philosophy by Divinity. But they have no charms for us to compare with the attraction of “the Gathering.” “Here,” we say, “is a subject that I know something about. Now we are in my field.” And the conversation “picks up” immediately.

Now that we have brought this subject to your mind, let us suppose that you have been given opportunity to say everything you wanted to about it. Let us suppose further that other folks listened to you this time instead of concentrating so hard on what they wanted to say that they didn't even hear you. Now that you have expressed yourself, let's take another look at the Gathering. What really has happened? Something has happened, you know, in the past few years. Brother Charles Graham asked the congregation at the Zion-Kansas City Stake reunion in 1948 how many had “gathered” from other places. A great majority of those present raised their hands. Some analysis, therefore, is appropriate.

If we can be completely frank with ourselves, a consummation devoutly to be wished for but rarely achieved, we must admit that many of us have gathered to the central places without complying with the law. This does not refer simply to the laws which require that one's economic situation shall be prepared before he gathers to the central areas, and that he shall have his removal approved by officials of the church. These phases of the law are important, but many of us have gathered unlawfully, even though these specific steps have been carefully followed.

THE FUNDAMENTAL LAW of the Gathering has to do with one's motives for gathering. The day may come, as it has been promised in the Scriptures, when it shall be necessary for men to gather in order that they avoid strife and bloodshed, but that day has not yet arrived. At no time up to now has flight been a lawful purpose for gathering to the land of Zion.

Some have gathered merely as a matter of convenience. It has been in their thinking for some years that the day would come when they would live in or not far from the Center Place, and since economic conditions have made it possible for the move, the Gathering has taken place for such as these. Observation discloses that many of these who have come merely for convenience are now majorly occupied as bystanders. Their principal interest in the building of Zion is to watch and see what others are going to do. Then, if it appears to be successful, undoubtedly they, too, will be glad to help with the development. Meantime, being at the scene of action largely by fortuitous circumstances, they feel somewhat committed to the task of personally assisting in building Zion.

Some have come for another reason, mainly that they might have fellowship with church people. Particularly has this been true of those who have wanted their children to meet other church young people. This is a proper motive so far as the responsibility toward the children is concerned. But even this motive, laudable as it appears on the surface, is not lawful from the standpoint of Zion itself.

THE BUILDING OF ZION awaits people whose entire incentive is an opportunity to serve. No other motive is acceptable. The Gathering is a divine movement, a process by which those who have both the ability and the inclination to make some worth-while contribution to the building of a new society are to be gathered together for the working out of the problems involved therein. Success depends upon the willingness to sacrifice and forego personal benefit. It is easy to gather a multitude if you feed them loaves and fishes, and many there are whose vision of Zion encompasses only a sharing in its joys. It is difficult, however, to gather a crew to do a hard job. There are always plenty of “sidewalk engineers” who are ready with advice and counsel, giving the impression that they know how the job should be done, but never lending a hand.

people with whom to build his Zion? Undoubtedly he will take note of those who have brought their all, both in ability and devotion, and have made it available to assist in the task. Many of these, in fact, most of these, are already to be found among the Saints now actively engaged in the great cause. He will also take note of the many equally devoted and equally capable who have remained in the various branches of the church believing that there they could be most helpful. Regardless of one's location, he is to be commended if that location is chosen on the basis of whether it is the place in which he can do the most for the kingdom.

THE GATHERING is not, like the weather, something that we can't do anything about. Rather it is a divine movement, a process by which those who have submerged their own interests in the cause of Zion can band together to do the Lord's work. To participate in this work requires something far more important than a change of geographical location. It requires that all who would be helpful shall do some or all of these specific things:

1. Become actively engaged in the work of the church in one of its local branches. If it isn't the one nearest you, search your own soul for the explanation. Building the kingdom is primarily a social and spiritual matter, to be implemented by economics as spiritual preparation is made. To neglect your spiritual health automatically erases your usefulness.

2. Become an active participant in community affairs, lending the weight of your personality to the endeavor to bring a Christian influence to bear in civic affairs. God prepared a free nation in which to plant the Restoration. He referred to this finest government in the world as a "mountain." It is from the "top of the mountain" that the stone is to be cut which shall eventually fill the whole earth. Let those who would establish that their "gathering" was lawful from the standpoint of motive seek to give their local communities the most Christian government on the face of the earth.

3. Become concerned about the quality and steadiness of your personal devotions. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of"—but let prayers for personal qualification be answered in part by hard work on personal habits and abilities. "Let no man think of himself more highly than he ought to think."—Romans 12: 3. "No one can assist except he shall be humble. . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

4. Become actively engaged in the task of improving the Christian spirit of your own home. It can't be done quickly, for "it takes a heap o' livin' in a house to make it home," but it must be done. Spend sufficient time and effort with your family to mount solidly the diamonds of joy, peace, and purpose in settings of love, faith, and understanding.

5. Become a keeper of the law, particularly in spirit. Let the attitude of Christian brotherhood be evident in harmonious neighborhood relationships. Let the genuineness of your desire to be of service be manifest by keeping current your stewardship accounting and by making prompt response to all other personal obligations.

6. "Make every move count" in your economic affairs toward the end that your inheritance may be worked out. Only when this is done can you be in a position to help develop those aspects of economic Zion which are to be done, not alone but together. Let every expenditure of time, energy, or money be tested in the light of its contribution to your movement toward a position in which you can be helpful. "First shall come the rich and the learned, the wise and the noble . . . then shall the poor, the lame, and the blind, and the deaf." If you have gathered to assist, become the type of person the Lord has designated to be the advance guard.

Yes, it is interesting to notice how often the subject of the Gathering is discussed. It is well that it means so much to us. But let its implications and its divine purpose be remembered. The cause of Zion is advanced as men step forth to give and to serve. Those who believe in the Gathering should note well the rule of eligibility — "and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work."—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1. "Let him that laboreth . . . labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

Something to Do

Whenever I hear of a Children's Day service I always remember little Billy. The children in the small church school had rehearsed for weeks. All had carefully learned their poems and songs—all, that is, but Billy. He wanted no part of it.

Now Billy was the grandson of two missionaries. His father was a member of the priesthood. One would think with that background he at least would sing one little song, or say one little line. Children's Day came, and instead of Billy's sitting with the other children, he sat between his father and mother. Poem after poem was recited, and song after song was sung while Billy listened and watched with great attention. Finally it was too much for him, and in a lull between the last two songs everyone in the small church heard Billy ask, "Daddy, isn't there something I can do? Just some little thing?"

In the building of Zion, will I say after the last note has been sung, the last nail driven, "Father, isn't there something I can do? Just some little thing? Or, like Billy, will I wait too long?

—MARIE GOSLINE.

Nauvoo, June 27, 1949

By GLEN CARGYLE

IT WAS A WARM DAY. The spruce and fir trees were laden with thousands of willow bugs which are sometimes erroneously called Mormon flies. The wreaths on the graves of Joseph, Hyrum, and Emma added a touch of colorful artistry to the beautifully shaded grave enclosure. On that fateful day 105 years previous the martyrdom occurred.

On this day, like every other day of the year, the historic church properties were visited by people throughout the world, including nonbelievers, believers, and apostates of the restored gospel. Even though these visitors may have conflicting thoughts regarding the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission, nearly all of them leave the grounds, realizing that he was a man of vision—a great civic planner and spiritual leader who was always concerned with the welfare of his people.

Even though the Prophet was not yet thirty-nine at his death, he built up the cities of Kirtland, Ohio; and Nauvoo, Illinois; translated the Book of Mormon, made corrections in the Old and New Testament by inspiration; and established the first free educational system from kindergarten to university at Nauvoo. He was a Prophet who knew when the end was near. When he went to Carthage, Illinois, two or three days previous to his assassination, he said: "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter; but I am calm as the summer's morning; I have a conscience void of offense, toward God, and toward all men—I shall die innocent, and it shall yet be said of me, he was murdered in cold blood." All these things were mentioned during the memorial services during the afternoon of June 26, 1949.

Every year on the Sunday nearest June 27, memorial services are held in commemoration of the death of Hyrum and Joseph Smith. This year June 27 fell on Monday, consequently the services were held the day previous. In the auditorium not too far distant from the graves, an address was given by President Israel A. Smith concerning the vindications of the early revelations given the church through Joseph Smith, his grandfather.

Earlier in the day President Smith delivered a scholarly dissertation concerning evidences within the Book of Mormon which indicate the divinity of the book, pointing to the fact that Joseph Smith could not have written the book himself. After hearing the sermon, some expressed the opinion that if divine authenticity is affixed to the Book of Mormon, certainly the remainder of the work restored by Joseph Smith is true and divine. This seemed to be the trend of reasoning which aided in strengthening the belief of the Saints. According to those who heard Brother Smith's sermon, it paved the way for a more consecrated effort on their part, in the affairs of the church.

The story of burial and reinterment of the bodies was described by Cecil Ettinger, church appointee, who is guide in charge of the church-owned properties at Nauvoo. Roma Dean Smith, grandniece of Joseph Smith, placed a wreath on Emma's grave. A wreath was placed on Hyrum's grave by his grandniece, Mary Dean Hancock. Nina G. Smith, the wife of Joseph's grandson, Israel A. Smith, placed a wreath on Joseph's grave.

Public and official records show that the two martyrs were innocent of any crimes and were confined in jail only by the conspiracy of traitors and wicked men. Their innocent blood on the floor of the Carthage jail is a symbol of a seal affixed to the cause they fostered, the gospel of Jesus Christ. The ideals these men preached are being perpetuated today by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Two Hundred Mormons Hold Conference in Nauvoo

By GLEN CARGYLE

MANY PEOPLE find it interesting to observe the beliefs and practices of other religious organizations. During my guide duties at Nauvoo, I have the opportunity to talk to hundreds of people of various churches during the time the tour is conducted through the church properties. During early July I attended a four-day conference of 200 Mormons and made a few observations which I thought might be of interest to Herald readers.

All of the missionaries addressed each other by the title "Elder." They introduced themselves by their priesthood office. Even the most intimate friends addressed each other as "Elder." It seemed apparent the priesthood office was held in esteem as a symbol of rank and prestige.

Contrasted with this constant use of the priesthood office are the many incidents in which President Israel Smith introduced himself during a brief stay in Nauvoo several weeks previous. He thrust out his hand and said, "My name is Smith—what's your name?"

During the Communion service which was held on the Joseph Smith properties near the graves, several interesting observations were made. The emblems were served to the congregation and then to the priesthood. I was somewhat startled to see this, since I wondered why the priesthood would expect the congregation to partake from them since they had not evidenced their own worthiness by partaking first themselves.

Of course water was used instead of wine. The Mormons always use water. The word water is substituted in the prayer which precedes the passing of the emblems.

A Mormon apostle and an official in the Northern States Mission gave talks, both of which contained jokes. A lengthy dissertation was given on the necessity for making sacrifices for the cause of the church. He continued by giving a vivid recent experience in which he was obliged to eat fly soup and a cup of milk in which a lizard was in the bottom. All of this took place at the Communion service.

"Amen" was uttered by the congregation after each speaker completed. Some have said this custom originated in the Mormon church with Brigham Young. He was a Methodist before becoming a Latter Day Saint. The use of "Amen" by the congregation was a characteristic of the early Methodist church.

At the close of these sessions, I was glad I follow the teachings of the original church as taught by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

am not certain they did not sense the spirit of the occasion, for they tiptoed even closer to witness the immersion ordinance.

I waded in and found suitable depth for the baptism, then I returned to the bank and led Neil in. As I spoke the words, "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ"—I felt the surge of divine authority within me, and I knew the Spirit that shall speed the return of authorized gospel ordinances to the land of Lehi's seed. After we had changed clothing, Neil and I accompanied the little group to the shade of a big old Spanish oak tree on the side of the hill; here was the spot for the ordinance of the baptism of the Spirit. An upturned stone served as a seat for Neil—the rest sat on the short-cropped sod and formed an attentive audience as I read the beautifully clear stories from Acts 8 and 19. Then followed the imposition of my hands on Neil's head, and a prayer in which Neil and I were made to know that I was truly ministering in the Lord's stead. After the ordinance, the group was dismissed with a prayer of benediction, and we started back up the roads that led to concrete highways, cars and busses, and all the complex problems of twentieth century living.

The trip back was marked by awed comment and question by the Baptist minister and others of the group: "Never have I witnessed a service so beautiful as that! . . . Why don't we have the ordinance of the laying on of hands in our church? I wish that my baptism had been like that. . . ." and I found myself desiring with greater intensity of heart than ever before that the ministry of the Great and Marvelous Work might soon begin in that land. "Behold, the field is white . . . thrust in your sickle and reap."

Wherewithal Shall They Be Fed?

By GRACE L. KRAHL

WHEN THE MULTITUDE had been with Jesus in the wilderness until the day was far spent and they were weary and hungry, the disciples came to him saying, "Whence shall we buy bread that these may eat?" Jesus said, "Give ye them to eat." And they answered, "We have but five loaves and two fishes, and what is that among so many?" Then Jesus, directing the disciples to have the people seated in companies upon the grass, took the scant supply of food, and looking up to heaven, blessed and brake it and gave to the disciples, and the disciples to the people. All ate and were filled.

A few years ago, a multitude of soldiers returned from the world's battlefronts, and this same question was asked, "Wherewithal shall they be fed?"—not only physically, but socially, economically, and spiritually. It was discussed in the press, over the radio, in magazines, and in the pulpit, for there was deep concern as to how the soldiers would make their adjustments to civilian life again. Some said, "It will be difficult—they are changed." Others said, "No, they are just the same as when they went away. They make the same responses they always have made." Still others asked, "Will they look upon religion as they always have?"

Then an army chaplain told of a soldier who came to him one day and said, "I have heard preaching all my life, but I have never yet heard preaching explained." This same chaplain declared, "It is not true, the saying, 'There are no atheists in fox holes.'"

Since soldiers have heard preaching all their lives, and preaching has not been clear nor understandable—there obviously must be a reason for it—either the preacher was not inspired or the hearer was lacking in spiritual perception.

What then would these soldiers look for in religion that would be convincing and satisfying? In my opinion it would be preaching demonstrated. This will speak louder than sermons to a group of unsettled minds on the subject of religion. To see people dealing justly with one another, loving mercy, and walking humbly with their God is the greatest "explanation" of preaching anyone could ask. This brings us face to face with the fact that there are those who will be converted to the gospel by what they see rather than by what they hear.

Zion is the exposition of our preaching. Shall we not then be alert to the imperative and consistent demands upon us by those who would be heirs of salvation?

Preaching there must be—it is a divine command, but the conduct of the laity must be the "explanation" of preaching.

What an Active Young Adult Group Can Do in Your Branch

SPEAKING THROUGH the prophet of our church at the last General Conference, God admonished us: "The hastening time us upon us; the period until the next General Conference, as already provided, must be one of unusual preparation for my church as an organization."

The branch has within it many splendid organizations through which it seeks to make its membership more effective. It has a Zion's League which is doing a wonderful job with the teen-age group. The ladies have a very efficient organization through which they can channel their efforts. These alone however, leave us with a very definite gap. Nothing has been done to harness the vast energies of the young adult age group, the young married couples from twenty-five to forty years old.

This is the age group that founded our church, this is the age group from which comes our source of leadership now and in the immediate future, and unless the children of these young adults become Latter Day Saints our church will be greatly crippled in the years to come. Surely we must have a well-planned program for this age group so that we can capture their lives and talents to make this period of "unusual preparation" more effective. We may liken the branches without an active young adult organization to a prize fighter trying to win a championship bout with one hand tied behind him, this hand being the young adult age group. Surely God wants us to fight evil with both hands if we are to accomplish his purposes.

It has been my pleasure to assist in the organization of a young adult group in Kansas City Stake nearly a year ago. At the first meeting only nine or ten were present, but we knew that it was from little acorns that big oak trees grew. It was at this meeting that we elected our officers and planning committee. This committee was composed of the following: pastor, president, secretary-treasurer, program, projects, food, publicity, and nursery. This committee met in between the regular meeting and planned the programs as necessary. A long-range program was initiated at the beginning of the year, and the general theme selected for our activities was "Better Homes and Better Children."

In order to find out the interests of the group, we circulated a Young Adult Interest Indicator. It was also decided that the regular monthly meetings would be of a social, service, and educational nature, and that we leave the religious and worship portion of the program to be taken care of in our church school class. The reason for keeping our worship and religious activities separate was that we felt by doing so our people would feel more free to invite their friends and neighbors to these young adult meetings regardless of the visitor's religious beliefs. Then after finding out that we were a congenial people and our standards were high, we hoped they would attend our church school class and there find out more about our church and its teachings.

To keep the interest high, we attempted to obtain outside speakers who were "tops" in their field, such as: child psychologists, lawyers, musicians, and others. Often the question period following the lectures would be the high point of the evening. During the summer months many enjoyed the softball games, watermelon feeds, and good old-fashioned picnics in place of a speaker.

Perhaps no other age group liked to eat any better than the young adults, so we always had refreshments. Some evenings all came early and had a potluck supper. Other times it was just cookies and punch after the meeting. By providing a competent "sitter" more couples were able to attend. The publicity committee saw to it that everyone in the group was contacted either by telephone or mail shortly before any activity.

The projects' committee accomplished much good during the past year. They were in charge of renovating a building next door for the use of our church school class, nursery, and other branch activities. An ice cream social, chili supper, and white elephant sale were held, with the proceeds going to the building fund. At Thanksgiving and Christmas time baskets of food were given to the less fortunate families. A nursery committee did a wonderful job in providing a preschool nursery during the 11 o'clock hour of the church service. They also were commissioned to find "sitters" for the regular meetings, thus freeing young parents to participate regularly.

This program worked out wonderfully well for us and had a direct reflection on the increase of attendance at our church school class. Now it is not unusual to see from forty to fifty at our regular young adult meetings, and we expect to grow larger this coming year.

Yes, if we are to comply with the word of the Lord to us to make "unusual preparation" in the near future, we cannot fail to overlook the tremendous possibilities hidden in this young adult age group.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

What is the beast, its mark and image, as mentioned in the Book of Revelation?

ANSWER:

The several references to the beast, with the image and mark (see Revelation 13: 16, 17; 14: 9; 15: 2; 16: 2; 19: 20; 20: 4), considered all together with their contexts, seem to point to a great political power which will be operative in the world in the last days. Revelation 14: 9 shows God's dealings with this beast and its image after the angel restores the gospel, and after Babylon has fallen. The gospel has been restored, but Babylon has not yet fallen, though signs indicate the approach of that day, from which we gather that in all probability we are in the time of the uprising of that beast or nation.

From John's description of this beast with its ruler, or image, in the several texts listed above, we are able to note the following: It is to perform great wonders, even to calling down fire from heaven. It deceives the people who dwell upon the earth. It compels all the people to accept its mark of identity in their foreheads, or hands, without which they might neither sell nor buy. It requires the earth and those who dwell therein to worship the first beast and the image, and those who refuse are to be killed. The extent of the power and dominion of this beast and its ruler is to be world-wide, except for those whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life. Dictatorship over the people in political, commercial, and religious affairs is to be absolute. It survives the fall of Babylon only itself to be destroyed later. The first angel (of the seven) pours out his vial of judgment upon the earth, so that a "noisome and grievous sore fell upon the men" bearing the mark, and who worshiped the image. Those who receive the mark of the beast are to suffer the wrath of God. The end of the beast is to come when, with kings and armies, the people are gathered to make war with Him who sits upon the white horse, whose name is "The Word of God."

And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet [the image] that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshiped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. And the remnant were slain.—Revelation 19: 20.

The mark of the beast is probably some sign officially adopted and put upon persons and goods, indicating the right of persons to buy and sell, and authorization for goods to be sold.

QUESTION:

When will the Saints stop eating meat, or will the lamb and the lion lie down together and the Saints still be eating meat?

ANSWER:

The church has never taken the position that we should not eat meat. On the contrary, Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3 reads, "And whoso forbiddeth to abstain from meats, that man should not eat the same, is not ordained of God; for, behold the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance."

Again, Section 86: 2 reads, "Yea, flesh also of beasts and of fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine."

This latter instruction was given not as a commandment but as reflecting wisdom.

QUESTION:

I have a class of fourteen-year-olds, and on Temperance Sunday the question was asked, "If we advocate temperance, why did Jesus perform the miracle of changing water into wine?"

ANSWER:

Our belief in temperance is not confined to the teachings of Christ as given in the New Testament writings. It is also based on the teachings of Christ as refined in the disclosure of his will in our day.

There will be no attempt here to claim and say that wine was grape juice or "lemonade," and was not fermented as a few temperance men have attempted. (See Life of Jesus Christ, by Beecher.) Christ indulged in the harmless social merriments of his day, but there can be no doubt on which side Christ would be if he were to come here and view the evils of alcohol. In fact, we believe he gave us his will on the subject (Doctrine and Covenants 26: 1; 86: 1; 119: 3).

Some may look at the teachings of Christ to us and the miracle at Cana as contradictory. There is no contradiction. God revealed his will to Moses but did so with due regard for the nomadic and spiritually undeveloped people whom Moses must lead. That same God revealed himself through his Son, Jesus Christ, and laid greater demands on his people. The revelation was not changed, but it was refined.

GEORGE A. NJEIM.

QUESTION:

Was the Mosaic law temporal? If so, explain Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.

ANSWER:

The word temporal as used here is defined, "pertaining to this life." As both the Mosaic and the Christian laws concern conduct in this life to some extent, they are to that extent temporal when they relate to what is known as temporal affairs. But this is true only in a subordinate sense, and as a term of convenience, for God gave them in order to produce spiritual results—righteousness and eternal life.

For this reason, laws that we call temporal, because primarily concerned with things of this life, may be spiritual to God because of the spiritual ends they accomplish. The word temporal is to us a term of convenience to distinguish things of this life from those of the next, but to God they are inseparable from the spiritual ends to be reached, temporal things being the divinely appointed means of development toward spiritual life and immortality. It is in this sense that the text mentioned says: "All things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.

This evidently means that things known to us as temporal have a spiritual design to God. It is in this sense that the law of Moses, termed by Paul "a schoolmaster," had a spiritual aim, though much of it concerned temporal things which had ceased to be in force at the time Paul declared, "We are no longer under a schoolmaster" (Galatians 3: 25).

We Labor for Zion Through Study

TO LATTER DAY SAINT WOMEN God has entrusted the responsibility of helping to build Zion in our day. Zion is not an assemblage of a mass of people but the assemblage of godly homes. It is the chief responsibility of the mothers of the church to establish these godly homes. We have within our grasp the greatest opportunity for good in the world. We have the ability to study so that we may teach the laws of God to our children—the laws that will build Zion. Therefore, let us study to show ourselves approved, for without study we are unprepared to build Zion homes.

Women cannot be builders unless they first learn how. We must begin with ourselves.

Both the ancient and modern Scriptures impress the followers of Christ to cultivate the mind. In Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36, we are commanded to “seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study and also by faith.” In section 87: 5, “Study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books.” We know this includes our church books written by church members, and the Three Books; for if we build Zion aright we must study them often. It also includes courses written on health and nutrition, which are so important to the welfare of our families. There are courses written by internationally recognized experts in their various fields. They discuss present-day problems that every Latter Day Saint family has to meet and solve in the process of building Zion homes. They are recommended for our study and are believed to be included in the admonition given in the Doctrine and Covenants.

It seems, then, that Zion cannot be established by an ignorant people. It is the task for an enlightened and wise and learned people. If the outline in Section 85 is followed diligently by the Saints, then indeed we must be a highly cultured people.

We have been commanded to study. We can make time for our study and prayer period in our home. We must think and pray while we study, for each individual interprets according to past understanding. In Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3, we are commanded to study and then pray to know if it is right.

It is important that we gather every kind of useful information that we may hand on to our children the very best we can. God has made this promise to those who study: “Treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour that portion that shall be meted unto every man.”—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 14.

At a women’s meeting in Detroit I heard Sister Crinsi say that a hundred years from now it won’t matter if the pantry doesn’t get cleaned today or if we don’t take time to wash the curtains. But it will matter a hundred years from now if we don’t study and build our faith and knowledge of God.

Jesus said, “Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful; and Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her.”

Let us, too, choose that good part which shall not be taken away from us, that part which will be important to us a hundred years from now.

The church will suffer if the women don’t do something about their own spiritual and mental growth. How are we to help in this great work unless we study? We must study diligently, for unless we know God we cannot teach him to our children; then we will have failed in our responsibility in this wonderful work. We want to measure up to the high calling that is ours.

May each one of us, as stewards of God, search the Scriptures diligently, with prayer and fasting to know the word of God, that with the knowledge obtained through study we may do our part in the building of Zion.

“They Be Good”

By Alice Zion Buckley

My three-year-old son came into ping his hands and saying, “Naughty my bedroom the other morning slap-hands, I’ll make you mind.” Then he looked up to see if I noticed what he was doing and repeated the slapping.

I asked, “What did the naughty hands do?”

I had explained before that when naughty hands disobeyed they had to be punished, and that since they couldn’t be taken off and put back on at will when my little boy’s hands were punished all of his body suffered too. Content with my explanation he went away saying to his hands, “They be good. They be good.”

I thought how like hands members of families or church groups are. When one person gets into mischief or stirs up any trouble the entire family or church group is punished. In loss of service, hard feelings, and wasted time, the whole body of the group is affected. I found myself promising like my son, “I be good, I be good.”

Gwen - the Teacher

By RUBY STRAND

SHE IS JUST A TINY PERSON, this delightful friend of mine whom I shall call Gwen, small and dainty and graceful in her movements, reminding one of an exquisite piece of Dresden. Gwen isn't fragile, however; she can put out a day's work along with the strongest of us; that is, when she is well and free from the disease which at intervals takes possession of her body and sends her to bed. Sometimes for weeks she is compelled to spend much of her time there. It is not this affliction, though, that rules my friend's life. She bears with it, and eventually with God's help she whips it, temporarily at least, and this is commendable, but the virtue which takes the foreground is the enthusiasm she has for the work of the kingdom.

Gwen loves her church, she loves her class of little people, and she loves her Master. To sit in her class and observe her in her ministry, bringing those little ones to the feet of the Christ, is a challenge to all who call themselves teachers. Each step of the way as the lesson develops—stories, songs, games, prayers, handcraft, picture appreciation, all the avenues she uses—Jesus is lifted up before them and his spirit bears witness of his smiling presence. And how joyously she teaches! Not as if it were a heavy burden; rather she looks upon it as an opportunity to contribute to the character building of his children, and blessings come in abundance. This enthusiasm for God's work is the biggest thing in my friend's life.

She is constantly preparing herself through prayer and fasting and study to give a richer service. The Three Standard Books of the church are her guide and her staff. Therein she finds what the Heavenly Father desires his children to be fed; then, with the help of quarterlies, methods, and various tools, she goes to work. This preparation is not some last-minute job taken care of late on Saturday night. It's something she thinks and prays upon all week, works toward, and blends into a beautiful piece of art to be shared with her class on Sunday morning. And the children are growing in love, in unselfishness, in their prayer life, and in many virtues which are Zion-building in nature.

As always, there are times of let-down, days when she wonders if she put over the heart of the lesson. It is always encouraging, then, when an appreciative parent bears testimony to her of little Johnnie's having shared in the home or having prayed that he might help Jesus build Zion. Then the teacher's cup runs over. She knows God has heard her prayers, and a feeling of humility causes her to pledge herself anew.

It is with gratitude to God that I am permitted to call this wisp of a woman my friend. It is a privilege to visit with her on the subject dearest to our hearts—the leading of childhood to God. When we get together time speeds rapidly by. We discuss this ever present need for a knowledge of God and his Son.

One such conversation stands out particularly. "How true it is," we decided, "that we cannot make Jesus live for children unless he first lives for us." And then she added, "And how tragic it is that for years and years we may call ourselves teachers without even having realized we do not know him." Gwen's growth has been of recent years, she declares; and she never ceases to thank God for the day there came to her the personal testimony that Jesus lives today. No wonder her enthusiasm knows no bounds. No wonder it is a thing of beauty and that she desires above all else to share her new found Friend with others. And no wonder that I, in humility, cannot do else but thank God for Gwen.

Letters

From a Friend of "Young" Joseph

(NOTE: This letter was received by Elder W. Blair McClain of Highland Park, Michigan, from James W. Leighton. Brother McClain sent it on to the Herald for publication because of its historical interest.)

When President Israel Smith was here I told him that I had known his father quite well. I had many heart-to-heart talks with "Young" Joseph and gained much understanding of the work and meaning of the Restoration in my conversations with him.

I well recall the evening of February 12, 1898, when we, the Saints of Toronto Branch, gathered at our meeting house to welcome a wedding party. In a little town about sixty miles from Toronto, a small but very dignified wedding had taken place, and the bride and groom had promised they would meet with us as soon as the ceremony was over. As we sat around the big wood-burning stove, we wondered how long we would have to wait and hoped that they would arrive safely, for it was a very cold night. Finally someone opened the door and said, "Here they come."

The first to enter the room was our beloved president, Joseph Smith. He was followed by his bride, the former Ada Rachel Clark. She was accompanied by her sister, Alice Clark, bridesmaid, who later became Mrs. Archie McClain. Also present in the party were Thomas Seaton, groomsmen, Mrs. Seaton, and Elder R. C. Evans, the officiating minister. After greetings were exchanged and congratulations expressed, our pastor, Elder Thomas Jeffries, called us to order and presided over one of the most inspiring prayer services I have ever attended. It was wonderful to sit there in the presence of Brother Joseph and listen to his humble testimony. Sister Ada also gave a fine contribution to the service.

I have often thought of that meeting and the powerful conviction of truth that came to me there. I learned much about the latter-day gospel during that visit of President Joseph Smith. As I recall the experience, there comes to me a picture of some of the Saints who were there that night—Brother and Sister Charles Hattey and their daughter, Bertha; Brother and Sister Joseph Gillis; Brother James Clark; Brother James McNeal; Brother and Sister Henry Osborn; and Sisters Ella Blair, Milly Perrin, and Mary Jackson. The others' names escape my memory at the present.

I was baptized by R. C. Evans on January 12, 1897. I left Toronto and came to Detroit two years before his trouble but was in Toronto on the day he was buried. Joseph Luff later told me that in vision R. C. told him he was ready to confess and seek forgiveness when he was cut off from the church.

Wants to Contact Members in Baton Rouge, Louisiana

I have lived in New Orleans for seven months and have met a few Saints there. Now I am going to move to Baton Rouge. If anyone knows of members (or a branch) near there, I shall appreciate receiving their names and addresses.

SOUTHEASTERN AND CENTRAL ILLINOIS DISTRICTS.—The young people of these districts enjoyed a week-end retreat held at Brush Creek Reunion grounds, July 2, 3, and 4.

The general church appointees serving on the staff were James Menzies, Central and St. Louis Districts; Herbert Lively, Kansas City, Missouri; and Sylvester R. Coleman, Southeastern Illinois District. Others assisting with the camp program were Arthur Henson, president of Central District, and O. C. Henson, Jr., of Decatur, Illinois. Patriarch O. C. Henson of Decatur was in attendance at the closing sessions.

The curriculum included morning devotions, prayer services, preaching services, classwork, workshops, evensongs, and supervised recreation. There was a fine spirit present throughout the retreat, and the young people are looking forward to a similar experience next year.

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.—Lyle Woodstock directed a successful youth camp at Nauvoo this year with sixty-five campers plus the staff. Among the staff members were Bishop and Mrs. Lewis Landsberg of Lamoni Stake, Kathryn Tabor, Mary Hill, Doris Woodstock, Clifford Cole, Irl Chandler, Cecil Ettinger, Leonard and Gladys Hendricks, and Alice Adams.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—The second baptismal service in the short history of this small mission was held on June 19, 1949, at Middletown, Ohio, with Elder Claude Barker officiating, assisted by Elders Jacob Halb and Everett L. Smith.

The confirmation service was held in the evening in Cincinnati at the Sinton Hotel. The confirmations were a part of a vesper service, "We Open Now the Door," by the young people, which gave a beautiful setting for the sacred ordinance. Those baptized and confirmed were Mrs. W. H. Skinner and her daughter, Mrs. Juanita Hawley, and Mrs. Bertha Sheffer. This brings the total of new members in this place to seven for this year.—Reported by THELMA CLINE.

MISHAWAKA, INDIANA.—On Sunday, July 10, fourteen persons were baptized. The service was held at a beautiful spot on Bogol Creek. The officiating minister was John M. Drader. Elders J. W. McKnight, C. F. Hoxie, and Forest E. Myers officiated at the confirmation service. Four adults, six young people, and four children comprised the candidates, most of whom were brought into the church through the work of Brother John M. Drader. Forest Myers is the pastor of this branch, which is composed of Saints from Elkhart, South Bend, and Mishawaka, in the Northern Indiana District.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—Plans for the Aaronic priesthood school of 1949 and 1950 are nearing completion, Bishop Harold Cackler has announced. September 6 sees the opening of the first quarter of the year. All members of the Aaronic priesthood meet each Tuesday evening for six weeks, then have a six-weeks' interim before resuming the studies. Each class session is two hours in length. The men meet in quorums in the buildings in the vicinity of the Stone Church. The first series of class studies will be concerning the financial law for all quorums. The second period will be the study of the respective manuals for deacons, teachers, and priests which will be ready by that time. The third period will be in quorums.

The deacons will study ministry in the house of worship, the teachers will study the ministry of reclamation, and the priests will study evangelism in the home.

Linda Diane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Newcom of Independence, was blessed by Elders Charles V. Graham and Glaude Smith at the Stone Church the morning of July 3. Mrs. Newcom is the former Barbara Trowbridge.

Pastoral Supervisor C. V. Graham reports that there were seventy-nine baptisms in Independence during the month of June. A total of 179 baptisms is recorded for the first six months of the year as against 164 for the same period in 1948.

Three baskets of tropical flowers were used on the rostrum of the Stone Church on Sunday morning, July 17, and again on the rostrum of the Campus in the evening. They were flown from Honolulu in memory of George DeTray, by his daughter, Mrs. Henry Inouye. The flowers included Bird of Paradise, Red Ginger, Anaethenia, and Scorpion orchids. After the services on Sunday, the flowers were distributed to homes and church institutions throughout Independence by courtesy of Mrs. George DeTray.

The class of Book of Mormon studies taught by Mrs. Thelma Stevens each Monday night in the Stone Church has kept up a regular attendance of between 100 and 140 since last October. During the summer months attendance has increased by the addition of young people home from college.

FLORA, ILLINOIS.—Members of this branch of the Southeastern Illinois District officially opened their beautiful new church home Sunday morning, June 26. The day began with a 9:30 prayer service in charge of Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Pastor Sylvester R. Coleman, assisted by Elders Ed Colvin, Harry Henson, and W. W. Brown. Apostle Gleazer preached at 11:00 o'clock, speaking on "True Worship," admonishing the Saints to live their religion, rather than merely to act it. A basket dinner was enjoyed at noon. In the afternoon two meetings were held, Brother Gleazer speaking at the priesthood meeting and Brother Coleman addressing the district women's meeting. Apostle Gleazer spoke again in the evening, using as his subject, "America, the Land of Promise."

Visitors from throughout the district joined the Saints of Flora, who have grown in membership from a small beginning of thirty in 1942.

GARDNER LAKE, EXCELSIOR SPRINGS, MISSOURI.—A total of 155 Oriole girls and their friends enjoyed two one-week camps; eighty-five the first week and seventy the second week. Most of the girls were from Independence, Missouri, but there were circles attending also from Dow City, and Des Moines, Iowa. There were sixteen staff members and nine monitors. A total of 167 Blue Bird girls enjoyed three overnight camps during the week following the Oriole camps. Also present were twenty Blue Bird leaders and sixteen staff members. Leaders' camp was held all day on Sunday, July 10. Outstanding in all camps was the contribution made by Rex Conyers. Brother Conyers is a biology teacher at St. Louis during the school year and has received many honors in the field of science and nature. He prepared extensive displays and led many fascinating excursions for the girls and their leaders in a study of the nature of Gardner Lake area, observing and enumerating birds, flowers, trees, and insects. He laid nature trails, showed insect collections, helped make leaf prints, plaster casts, and bird lists. Electric buzz boards were used to help learn the birds.

Also, during the first Oriole camp, four senior life saving badges were awarded, and eight junior life saving badges. Edna Easter was the director of all the camps and instructor in swimming and boating.

MILL SPRING, MISSOURI.—On June 26, an all-day meeting was held at the school building at Mill Spring. The branch held a business meeting and preaching services. Over three hundred were present. The meeting was in charge of District President J. A. Philipps of Kennett, Missouri. Elder W. A. Kuntz of Ellington, Missouri, was installed as pastor. Among his duties is that of selecting speakers for the church services. The women's group has been organized with Opal Nelson as leader. Elders Philipps has given much of his time in the past year to the work in Mill Spring. This branch was well-established about fifteen years ago, but has ceased to function during this time.

LENNOX, CALIFORNIA.—Since the conclusion of the missionary meetings held by Seventy George Njeim, the following eleven people have been baptized: James and Nora Lantry, Kathryn Woods, Bina Marie Pearson, Lewella and Perry Snyder, Carol Knuckles, Bina Foltz, O. H. Birch, Darling June, Marylyn Knuckles.

The women's department, aided by members of the Zion's League, produced the play, "Little Women," as a building fund project. It was an all-woman version of Louisa M. Alcott's classic and was enthusiastically received. Proceeds from a matinee performance went to the Youth Camp fund. A special performance was also given at Central Los Angeles Branch as a benefit for the Burbank Branch's new church building.

This department also sponsored a "tea" for all women of the Metropolitan Los Angeles District. Before the opening of the meeting, District President Garland Tickemyer met with the women's leaders to select a district woman's leader. Mrs. Hazel Gregg of Long Beach was chosen.

Seventy-six pupils were enrolled in the vacation church school this year with twenty teachers and helpers. This is the greatest number Lennox has had, and special out-door "classrooms" had to be fashioned to accommodate them. Sixty-eight finished the course and received certificates on achievement night.

On July 17, a Junior Zion's League was formed. Officers selected were: David Holms, president; Janice Slater, vice-president; Nancy Woods, secretary; and Jack Reeves, treasurer.

Thirteen members of the Lennox Zion's League attended the Youth Camp sponsored by the Southern California and Metropolitan Los Angeles districts.

The following children have been blessed recently: Carol Lorraine DeHart, Thomas Edward Birch, Robert Wallace Root, Ellen Marie Pearson, Christopher James Pruet, Nora Nadine Jones, and Joseph McDowell.—Reported by HARRIET GLAZE.

FAIRVIEW, MONTANA.—The Montana District Reunion was held June 26 through July 3 at the church in Fairview. Members of the staff included Seventy E. Y. Hunker of Independence, Missouri; Seventy Arthur Gibbs of Portland, Oregon; Seventy and Mrs. Philip Moore of Spokane, Washington; and Evangelist J. F. Curtis from Spokane.

Each day began with a prayer service, which was followed by classes centering around the theme, "Witnessing for Christ." Children's work was in charge of Mrs. Donian Hillman. Following the business meeting on Saturday afternoon, four candidates were baptized by Pastor John Arthur Reynolds.

true worshipers are sure. It is the present substance of things hoped for, the present stable evidence of things which are not yet seen. This apocalyptic hope is part of the example of the Lord Jesus, who "for the joy that was set before him endured the cross." It was the background and the substance of the "great and precious promises" by which the early saints lived true to their faith. It is our guarantee of victory.

Many years ago I heard Apostle James A. Gillen preach a very moving sermon in London, England, and even today I can remember his clear and convincing declaration that sin has at its heart the seed of its own destruction, while righteousness has at its heart the unquenchable glory of eternity. These things are so because God is and because God guarantees the power of righteousness in his own person.

WE CANNOT BUT SPEAK

These convictions stirred the men and women of the first Christian generations to the very depths of their being. Peter and John were entirely typical of the early saints where they told the leaders of the Sanhedrin, "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard."

Just as ignorance calls insistently to the teacher, and sickness calls urgently to the doctor, and degradation calls with compelling voice to the social worker, and need lays its obligation on the philanthropist; so, also, the spiritual sickness of humanity sends out its demands to every man whose faith has fed his spirit and who knows the secrets of the truly saintly life.

An earlier generation had a great horror that persons whom they might have reached should die without Christ. This horror was a major, cleansing, moral force. We of this generation need to sense anew how awful a thing it is to be rich as modern man has been made, and yet to live and die without a sense of the purpose of our endowment, without a sense of our true destiny, without God and without hope in the world. That this truly awful loss may be avoided, let us speak forth in deed and word the great things which we know and most surely believe.

GERALDINE WYATT wrote "Dawn of Peace" for Herald House back in 1938. Last year a large eastern publisher issued a teen-age book written by Mrs. Wyatt called "Buffalo Gold." This is her second teen-age book to be published. Mrs. Wyatt and her husband, who is an attorney, and their daughter live here in Independence. She has written many articles for the "Saints' Herald" and has done some editing on a booklet soon to be issued by the Department of Priesthood Education.

"WRONGHAND" is the story of 16-year-old Todd Parrish. When his father did not return from the Civil War, the care and support of his frail mother, his brothers and sisters, fell upon him. The family had nothing but 2500 Texas Longhorns and a little worthless Confederate money. Todd realized their only hope lay in his driving the cattle up the Chisholm Trail to Abilene and selling them for ready cash. This is an action-packed story of cowboys and cattle and Indians told in the best tradition of the ever popular Western. A really fine story, splendidly told.

Borrow Not Tomorrow's Tears

By LOUISE WRIGLEY

EVERY DAY is a new horizon, yet there are comparatively few of us who realize it. In seeking a livelihood in the same old way, in performing the same old household tasks, in seeing and associating with the same people, we completely miss the change and adventure that is offered with each fresh twenty-four hours.

How is this so? Surely God saw that, as human beings, we would desire change, that we would not be content with the same routine forever. Perhaps that is why he ordained that we should not be able to see too far ahead into the future, but that we should have to make adjustments as new situations arose. Probably for the sake of the worriers and the wonderers, he considered also that the strain of many problems to be faced would be too great if we knew about all of them at once. And perhaps he knew, too, that, taken in a big lump, our happiness to come would either overwhelm us or be callously disregarded. So it seems that his plan was more than wise to spread out events and happenings over the years to keep us interested and alert.

After a while many of us cease to count our blessings. Perhaps we are even tired of the sameness of that. Our eyes become blinded to the little miracles that happen all around us, while we look searchingly over the distant horizon for magnificent things to come. We fail to realize that, while our horizons are ahead of us, in a sense they are with us, too. And it seems significant that they are never behind us.

CAN YOU BRING BACK TOMORROW that which has happened today? No, of course not. Hours are irretrievable. Moods and emotions are of short duration. We cannot bring back the bloom in yesterday's rose or the quick laughter of childhood remembered. And yet we hurry breathlessly past these things in search of something which is infinitely more intangible and which we seem to consider more worth-while. Thus are wasted some of God's loveliest works, some of his most precious treasures. Surely he must sorrow for all the opportunities we miss, for all the things we cast so heedlessly aside because we are not educated to know their value.

If we could just find a balance in which we not only look toward the time to come, realizing its importance in God's scheme, but also give each new day its full and measured value, filling it with every good thing, extracting from it both pleasure and spiritual profit, we would indeed approach the state of mind which God has intended we should be able to attain. It would seem that appreciation of simple things is easy, but perhaps it is so easy that we feel it is altogether a waste of time to bother. We get ourselves tied up with phobias and psychoses and nerves and emotional jags from the pace at which we live, when the plan Christ offered for our pattern is right here before us, rich and fulfilling in its entirety, and infinitely more restful and satisfying than the pattern to which we ourselves conform.

In "growing up" it seems a shame that so many of us grow away from nature, from God, from using our intelligence, into a monotonous existence of eating, sleeping, and earning a living. When we are children, we question, we learn, we are eager to see and feel and hear new, strange, exciting things. Then we turn into adults, and in turning grow dull, listless, and sightless in the things vital to the spirit of man. Often we grow lazy, or else we are consumed by a restless, driving, uncaring ambition that gains us only material wealth and at the same time the active dislike of our associates, our friends, and even our families.

WHY IS IT that when a person gains unusual spiritual serenity and strength of personality he draws others to him? Why should his attainment be so unusual? Probably his mind was no keener than ours, his opportunities no greater. The essential difference lies in his personal effort. Yet we envy his success and wish we could be like him, never stopping to realize that all we have to do is start. His is not an unattainable gift, but we must be interested enough to work to duplicate it if we really want it. Things will not fall into our laps. Even talents must be used and cared for and trained, for without our directing them they never go any place in particular. God meant for us to work for things so that we would have an appreciation for them when we did get them. Things that are too easily come by are most often valueless in our eyes.

While it would be most foolish to assume that the only thing which matters is today, still God will surely grant us time enough to gather the good things he has scattered down our road while we are journeying toward our goal. While we cannot afford to be deterred from our established aim nor waste time in dallying with useless trivia, still he must have known that we would often need encouragement. In his goodness and wisdom he has provided small snatches of beauty and light to keep us from wandering away into darkness and despair. If he had not meant for us to enjoy a spectacular sunset, he would have left the sky colorless. If he had not meant for us to seek the association of other people of like minds and faith, he would have set each of us alone. He did not create the earth and all its glories for his own pleasure but as a beautiful setting in which his children might better be able to achieve that serenity and singleness of purpose which God wants us to have and is trying to help us attain.

THE PESSIMISTS would have us believe that things are rapidly getting worse and worse. If that is so, adding unhappiness to unhappiness is certainly not going to solve the situation. Perhaps a word of sincere cheer would be so astonishing as to startle the world into working harder for what it desires. At least we, in our separate walks of life, can keep working with willing hearts, keeping in mind always that we must build into each new day every good thing we possibly can to bring about a better and a more desirable condition in our own lives.

When the day of judgment comes, surely there will be none among the chosen of God who are lacking in appreciation, who have failed to note and enjoy the handiwork of God, who have denied either comfort or understanding to any brother.

Whoever said, "Borrow not tomorrow's tears," might well have meant that it will not do one bit of good to cry about what we think may happen tomorrow or next week. We can better spend these new days which we know to be precious in preparing ourselves for the kingdom of God by sincerely and truly appreciating all the wonderful things which have already been given to us, knowing that this is the only way we can prove to God that we are worthy of the blessings which are yet to come.

We Sat on the Deck

By Arthur F. Gibbs

THE DECK WAS THE ONLY PLACE we had to sit besides on the bed. It was a crowded wartime ship headed for Hawaii. There was nothing to do but talk, and what better could one talk about than the gospel?

The Smalls sat at our table in the dining hall. They were a clean young couple, recently married, headed for work in Hawaii. They were friendly. They appealed to us because their habits were good, and they were about our age. He was a little cynical about religion, but cordial. She was like a "sister" in the church. We talked, just waiting for an opportunity to bear our testimony.

We weren't getting very far until we struck the thing they were interested in—archaeology. Then we began telling them of the Book of Mormon.

We had some pictures of ancient Central American ruins, so we sat on the deck, looked at the pictures, and talked about God's dealings with the ancient Americans.

We got off the ship in Honolulu not knowing we would ever see these people again. But God has strange ways. While in Honolulu, the Smalls came to see us, but we were out. We had gone to another island—Hawaii—but when we returned a few weeks later, we found a note on our door.

We are now stationed in Hilo, and we're looking for a place to live. Sorry you weren't home. We've got a room at Kapalani and Haili Streets.—The Smalls.

They were just two blocks from us, so we went to see them and invited them to church.

IN THEIR FELLOWSHIP with the Hilo Saints, the Smalls saw the gospel at work. They were soon reading books about the church. After Mrs. Small's baby was born, she began helping us in our religious education work in the public schools and proved an excellent teacher. Their baby was blessed on Easter.

Soon they were to return to the States. They came to live with us for a few weeks while they were waiting for their boat. When they left, they were subscribers to the Herald, owners of the Book of Mormon, a Doctrine and Covenants, an Inspired Version, and A Call at Evening.

They read about the gospel and church for two years. They were isolated, so they attended other churches and talked about the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

Three years after we sat on the deck, they flew 600 miles from Elko, Nevada, to Lennox, California, to be baptized. So far as I know, they are the only Saints in Elko, but they know the gospel and are telling the story of it to their friends.

Take advantage of each opportunity you have to sow the seed of salvation. It will give you great satisfaction, it will bring happiness to others, it will pay dividends for the kingdom.

For the Priesthood

These booklets have been prepared to take the place of the old Priesthood Manual which has been out of print for many years.

PROCEDURES IN PRESENTING CALLS TO THE MINISTRY by Lorne White

"Called of God as was Aaron" might be taken as the theme of this book, for this is the foundation of our whole concept of priesthood and ministerial leadership. How calls are to be recognized, safeguarded, and acted upon is carefully discussed and considered in this volume which summarizes the best that has been written upon this subject by our people. Paper binding.

MINISTRY TO THE ERRING AND CHURCH COURT PROCEDURE by Bishop L. Wayne Updike

This booklet is designed for those persons who must serve in church courts in ministering to the erring, with a statement of court procedure adopted by the General Conference of 1932 and some further pertinent actions of the conference of that year. Paper binding.

THE PRAYER MEETING

This is for leaders and directors of prayer meetings and contains practical suggestions based on experience in how to conduct a thoughtful and inspiring prayer meeting. Plans for themes, for the organization of the meeting, suggested Scripture readings, and hymns are all here in this paper bound booklet.

PREACHING MINISTRY by Lorne White

A book for preachers of all ages, from the young man just beginning his service to the mature and experienced minister who has been at it a long time. Thoroughly Latter Day Saint in viewpoint, it recognizes the place and function of inspiration and divine guidance, and at the same time suggests a wise program of study and practical preparation. Paper binding.

York exporter who has agents for distributing Congoleum throughout South America. The sale and distribution of two very interesting books on the history and origin of prehistoric civilizations in Latin America seems entirely practical and feasible.

This plan has a number of distinct advantages. The business of selling and distributing the books would apparently require neither men nor money from the general church. There should be little or no opposition to the plan on that score.

This plan would also avoid and postpone arousing and coming to grips with the vested religious interests of Latin America.

I have a great deal of faith in the Book of Mormon doing its own missionary work once it reaches the people to whom it was originally written.

Once the Book of Mormon and a good companion book like Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans get into extensive distribution in Latin America, I believe the way will open for further steps to be taken.

There seems to be only one serious hurdle to be negotiated before this plan can be carried out. The Book of Mormon and Brother Hanson's book will have to be translated into the Spanish language. The carrying out of such a project will require an appropriation of money and official action by the general church. Needless to say, the appropriation of money and initiation of such a project would require the backing and sympathetic support of all who are interested in opening up the work in our great sister continent to the south of us.

(NOTE.—The author will be glad to receive criticisms, comments, or suggestions on the plan above advanced to open up our work in South America. His address is R. F. D. 5, Warrensburg, Missouri.)

The camp will be divided into three age groups. All young people between the ages of twelve and twenty-four are invited to attend and enjoy swimming and other sports in this, one of Iowa's most beautiful campgrounds. In addition to local workers, John Darling, Edna Easter, Mr. and Mrs. Rex Conyers, Mrs. Lenora Woodstock, and others from church headquarters are to serve as leaders.

HERBERT M. SCOTT,
Associate Camp Director.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Leslie Crowley of Addison, Maine, requests prayers for her daughter, Madelaine, who is suffering with diabetes insipidus.

Prayers are requested for Ina Rodman of Blue Jacket, Oklahoma, by her mother, Mrs. Iva Arms.

ENGAGEMENTS

Ellis-Allen

Mr. and Mrs. I. R. Allen of Eldorado, Kansas, announce the engagement of their daughter, Collene, to Bruce Ellis, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Ellis of Alto, Michigan. The wedding will take place on August 28. Collene, a graduate of Graceland, will return to the college this fall to work in an office there, and Bruce will be a sophomore.

WEDDINGS

Van Nieuwenhuize-Shipman

Dr. and Mrs. Frank L. Shipman of Lamoni, Iowa, announce the marriage of their daughter, Leah Ne'Momi, to Keith Marvin Van Nieuwenhuize, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Van Nieuwenhuize of Memphis, Tennessee. The double-ring ceremony took place at the Graceland College Chapel in Lamoni on June 24, Pastor Robert S. Farnham officiating. The groom is a graduate of Graceland, and the bride attended one year. They are making their home in Memphis.

BIRTHS

A son, Nathan Hale, was born on July 19 to Mr. and Mrs. Mel Jones of Grand Forks, North Dakota. Mrs. Jones is the former Alice Mathews.

A son, David Eugene, was born on July 16 at the Independence Sanitarium to Mr. and Mrs. Darrell E. Knight of Independence, Missouri.

A son, James Clifford, was born on July 20 to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Tucker of Yosemite, California. Before her marriage, Mrs. Tucker was Evelyn Buschlen of Glendale, California.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth E. Savage of Manson, Washington, announce the birth of a son, Gregory Stephen, born July 20. Mrs. Savage is the former Virginia Lee Chandler. Both parents were graduated from Graceland College in 1948.

DEATHS

WEBBERLEY.—Louis Robert, youngest son of W. A. and Theadochia (Ferre) Webberley, was born April 4, 1912, and died in the Vancouver Memorial Hospital, Vancouver, Washington, on July 15, 1949. He was baptized a member of the church October 17, 1926. He married Eunice Elizabeth Brown, November 27, 1936. He was the father of three sons: Gerald, 12; Robert, 7; and Allen, 6. Besides his wife and sons, he leaves behind five brothers: Fred, A. L., Edward, Edgar, and Ernest, all of Camas, Washington, and a sister, Mary M. Williams of Battle Ground, Washington.

Funeral services were held from the Stoller Funeral Chapel, Camas, July 18, 1949, Elder Mark Yoeman officiating. Vault interment was in the Fern Prairie Cemetery.

BERLIN.—Virginia Grace, daughter of Charles and Sadie Johnson, was born on February 9, 1918, in Minneapolis, Minnesota, and died on July 9, 1949. She lived her entire life in Minneapolis. On February 10, 1926, at the age of eight years and one day she was baptized and confirmed a member of the Reorganized Church. She was united in marriage with Gaylord R. Berlin, November 25, 1937. To this union were born two daughters, Arlene Joy and Judith Kathleen.

She is survived by her husband, Gaylord R.; two daughters, Ariene and Judith; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Johnson of Independence, Missouri; four sisters: Mrs. Victor Fisher of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Wesley Elvin of Minneapolis; Mrs. James Denio of Pueblo, Colorado; Mrs. Wendell Kelley of Manhattan, Kansas; and two brothers: Weston Johnson of Minneapolis, and Elbert Johnson of Independence, Missouri.

McKEAGE.—Sylvia M., daughter of DeWitt and Lucy King, was born on June 4, 1893, at Wullin, Michigan, and died on July 30, 1949, at the Independence Sanitarium. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 10, 1916, at Grand Rapids, Michigan, and on April 22, 1920, was married to Roy McKeage. Three sons were born to them. In August, 1946, they moved to Independence. Sister McKeage was coauthor with C. B. Woodstock of a series of Book of Mormon quarterlies. She also wrote several plays and assisted in vocation church school work.

She is survived by her husband, Roy; three sons: LeRoy of the home; Harold and William of Grand Rapids; her mother, Lucy King of the home; and a brother, Lester King of Grand Rapids. Funeral services were held at the Walnut Park Church in Independence, Pastor F. O. Davies officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LOGSDON.—Albert Russell, son of Alva and Margaret Lewis Logsdon, was born at Chester, West Virginia, on May 5, 1906, and died July 24, 1949, near Independence, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 14, 1914, at Kirtland, Ohio. During World War II he served three and one half years as an Army instructor in photography at Long Beach, California, and was a commercial photographer until recently.

He is survived by a son, Robert Lewis Logsdon of the United States Navy, stationed near Japan; his father and mother; a brother, David Logsdon of Chanute, Kansas; and two sisters: Mrs. Martha L. Pendleton of Kansas City, Missouri; and Mrs. Gertrude Allen of Independence. Funeral services were held July 27 at the George C. Carson Chapel, Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HAWLEY.—Francis Aaron, son of John and Sylvia Hawley, was born June 10, 1875, at Dow City, Iowa, and died July 17, 1949, at his home in Richards, Missouri, after twelve years of illness. He moved with his parents to Missouri when he was thirteen and except for eleven years remained a resident of that state the rest of his life. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 18, 1883, and was ordained an elder on August 2, 1914. He served as pastor of the Ft. Scott (Kansas) Branch for a number of years and was an active worker in the church as long as his health permitted. On November 15, 1896, he was married to Clara Ann Thomas; six children were born to them. He and Mrs. Hawley celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1946.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: Helen Booker of Independence, Missouri; Delpha Wilkinson of Sioux City, Iowa; and Clara Haas of Richards, Missouri; two sons: Harold Thomas of Osborn, Missouri, and Francis Hale of Richards; two sisters: Mrs. Lucy Gates and Mrs. Carrie Powell of Ravenwood, Missouri; and eight grandchildren. One daughter, Hazel LaJune, preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Kountz Chapel in Fort Scott, Kansas. Dale Crown, pastor of Ft. Scott Branch, and C. C.

Martin officiated. Interment was in the family lot in Deerfield Cemetery.

BINKLEY.—Idabelle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morehead Hauenstein, was born October 8, 1875, in Allen County, Ohio, and died July 16, 1949, in Fremont, Indiana, at the home of her son, Richard. On March 10, 1900, she was married to William Binkley; ten children were born to them. Two daughters, Hazel and Cora, and one son, Elmer, preceded her in death. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on June 17, 1917, and was always a regular attendant at services. Her husband died on December 10, 1945.

Surviving are six sons: Richard and Carl of Fremont; Ray of Lima, Ohio; Joseph of Lansing, Michigan; George of Angola; and Clair of Nevada Mills; a daughter, Iva Jones of Wolcottville; thirty-five grandchildren; sixteen great-grandchildren; and one brother, William Hauenstein of Detroit, Michigan. Funeral services were held at the Clear Lake Reorganized Church near Fremont, Elder E. R. Carter officiating. Interment was in the Teeters Cemetery.

FOSTER.—Mary Esther, daughter of Ezra A. and Mary Nash Bogue, was born in Mason County, near Scottsville, Michigan, November 3, 1866, and died July 8, 1949. In 1900 she was married to Martin H. Foster; one child was born to them. By a previous marriage one daughter and one son was born. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church when a young woman by Elder W. D. Ellis. She remained a loyal member the rest of her life. Mr. Foster and one son preceded her in death.

She is survived by one son, Glenn H. of Lansing, Michigan; a daughter, Eva Nicosia of Grand Haven, Michigan; four grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Priest Klieber Hill officiated at the funeral services which were held at the Stephens Funeral Home in Scottsville. Interment was in the Fountain Cemetery.

 THE ART OF CONVERSATION

It is said of a famous Nineteenth Century American editor that he had a sign hung over his desk, "Be Brief." This was an admonition to himself as much as to the many visitors who came to his office. It is a good rule—it is the number one rule for good conversation.

Most of us talk too fast and too long while saying too little. Time is precious, and we ought to save it. The world is in a hurry and will not listen long for us to come to the point. Some of us never get to the point and lose the audience; or having got to the point, we hang onto it too long.

You never learn anything while you are talking. You must listen to do that. The art of conversation consists in knowing when to talk and when to listen.

I once visited in a fine congregation where I had not been before. The people were very friendly and talked readily. I listened with interest and appreciation. One man there was very quiet. I wanted to hear him speak, but never got the chance. After a while he disappeared. Later I learned that he was a famous doctor I had wanted to meet. Today I can remember very little of what the others said, but I will never forget the doctor's silence. I still would like a chance for a quiet conversation, to hear what he would have to say.

While others are talking, listen. At the same time, condense what you wish to say and put it in good form. Then when some ardent speaker (who may be enthusiastically saying nothing at great length) pauses for breath, put in what you have to say. Then stop. Let your statement be punctuated by a silence, the most emphatic of all literary devices. Let it soak in. Then the other speaker will have regained his breath, and will rush on, like the merry-go-round, in his neat but unprogressive circle.

 THE FLAVOR OF LIFE

A bit of fine practical philosophy from our reader, Bertha Moren of Soap Lake, Washington:

"I have learned to love people in their old clothes, only to love them more in their Sunday best. Seeing the bitter side of some things that I have encountered, I have found myself breathing a very reverent prayer of thanksgiving as I have turned to the finer things that abound this day. I have sensed the thrill of a child's loving hands upon my face, appreciating the fact that I have aided him in the way of life. I have at times walked through the still morning air to a job that I disliked—the hours, the type of toil, the pain I saw around me—and in that cool, clear air I have felt the Master so near that I know he stood beside me. I am glad for the bitter, that I may better understand and value the sweet."

 A LIMIT TO PROGRESS

The Thursday Afternoon Crocheting and Macaroni Club recently came around to a discussion of atomic energy and what it would do for kitchens.

"Don't tell me about any new machines or gadgets," said Esmeralda Pettinville, who can read but doesn't like to. "I can't manage the ones I have. The automatic toaster jumps at me and spits fire. The radio has so many knobs on it I can't remember which one turns it on and off. I caught my hand in the electric mixer and had to call the doctor. The dishwasher broke three of my best cups. Now Bill has a television set and won't let me touch it. So I just gave him notice; if he brings home anything with atoms in it, I'm going to pack my suitcase and go back to Mama!"

I have just received and read the two new tracts you sent: "Joseph Smith Tells His Own Story" and "Church Membership Is Important." I believe I have read every tract put out by our church since 1914 and have used thousands in missionary endeavor.

I believe these two tracts are among the best I have ever seen. Already I have noticed, that upon reading them, one immediately desires to have others read them, so you may expect large orders for these tracts once they become known.

I wish there were some way that we might impress our people everywhere to read them right away, order more, then put them into immediate circulation among friends and neighbors. I hope you will print them in large numbers so they will not soon be out of print. They are powerful.

Best of Wishes,

The Art of Hypocrisy

NO LONGER is it a compliment to say a man is "a big hypocrite." Once the word meant an actor on the stage who made you think he was some other person. I somewhat agree with Shakespeare, "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players." Of course, most of us are just little—actors. Whether heroes or villains depends on who's talking and circumstances.

There are some despicable hypocrites because they pretend to be our friends but actually they want to use us for selfish ends. You cannot believe a word they say nor trust their promises. On the other hand many are hypocrites because of character weaknesses and intense circumstances. They are much better on promises than performances, but their intentions are good. Their hypocrisy is a compliment to a superior way which they see but are too weak, lazy, or selfish to attain. La Rochefoucauld has said, "Hypocrisy is the homage vice pays to virtue."

Now, let us get down a little deeper into the inner recesses of our real selves. There seems to be no pretty way to say it, but to put it into cold print may help even a dozen people—yes, even you. Many of us testify, "I love this church," but our service and loyalty belie our words. Our love is for the build-up some job or public service gives to our ego. Often we piously exhort, "We Latter Day Saints must be the best of whatever we are." Lofty sentiments, these! Yet how many pay the price to achieve a status of leadership in our vocations? When we criticize others' faults, do we not intend to convey the impression, "Of course I'd never do such a thing!" As a matter of fact we recognize most easily those sins with which we have had some experience. Well, maybe you don't, but I do.

Introducing...

BLANCHE (EDWARDS) MESLEY (page 16) has been an outstanding women's leader in England, where she was born, as well as in Australia and America. She was educated in the University of Birmingham and became a teacher in the intermediate schools, especially qualified in the field of storytelling.

She came to America in May, 1923, and was appointed as leader of the General Department of Women. In 1926 she returned to her homeland for a visit with her parents, but returned in February of 1927 and married C. George Mesley on May 27 of that year. She has been closely associated with the work of her husband since the time of his appointment to Kansas City Stake in 1930 and after his ordination to the apostleship in April of 1938, when she went with him to Australia and gave fine support to his mission work by building up the activities of the Department of Women and Religious Education on that continent. They returned to the United States in the summer of 1946 and have since made their home in Independence.

Sister Mesley has been a member of the General Council of Women since its organization in 1934, and is much in demand as a speaker at gatherings throughout the church and even by nonmember groups of the Independence and Kansas City vicinity.

Her first contribution to the Herald of record dates from 1918. Her last article was in the Australian issue of July 18. She has been a frequent contributor between these dates.

The Mesleys have one son, Gordon, 20.

G. LESLIE DeLAPP (page 5) last contributed for the Herald on May 21, 1949, and his introduction appeared in that issue.

FREDERIC WILLIAM ROBERTS (page 10) was born in Providence, Rhode Island, December 7, 1876. He was baptized in Cranston, Rhode Island, in 1894. On September 21, 1904, he married Edith M. Perry.

In 1924 Brother Roberts was a special student in Brown University. During his young manhood he worked as bookkeeper and salesman. From 1912 to 1942 he was a dairy farmer. Since then he has devoted his entire time to the ministry.

He was ordained a priest in 1902, an elder in 1909, a high priest and patriarch in 1938.

Brother and Sister Roberts are now making their home on the reunion grounds at Onset.

EMMA (SMITH) KENNEDY (page 12) last wrote for us in the issue of June 27, at which time she was introduced in this column.

News & Notes

JOHN BLACKMORE

Brother John Blackmore, assigned to Spring River District and Joplin, Missouri, became acutely ill two days after completing his reunion work, and on August 3 was taken to a Joplin hospital and placed in an oxygen tent, suffering from a severe attack of asthma. On August 11 he was brought by air-conditioned train to the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, where the best possible care is being given to him. He is resting more comfortably now, and will soon receive tests for allergy under the direction of specialists. It is hoped that a course of treatment will be found that will give him relief.

MANAGING EDITOR TRAVELS

Elder Chris Hartshorn, managing editor of Herald publications, is spending twelve days in traveling, most of which is to the various reunions near the Center Place. Included in his itinerary, made with the company of Mrs. Hartshorn, are the Stewartville, Lamoni, Des Moines, and Brush Creek reunions. He left August 12 with plans to return to his desk at the Herald House on August 24.

OKLAHOMA STATE REUNION

One of the high lights of the reunion which included Western and Central Oklahoma Districts was the youth work directed by Victor Witte. An attempt was made to tie their work with the theme of evangelism. On Tuesday morning during reunion the young people went into Wilburton, the little town five miles from the reunion grounds, and invited all the people in the neighborhood of the church to come to the evening preaching services, thus giving some real experience in house-to-house calls. On Wednesday evening some one hundred young people re-enforced by about 150 other campers went to town, where they serenaded the town in the middle of the street, singing some folk songs and hymns. They were very well received. The editor of the local newspaper invited them to visit him in his office and gave them the best of publicity.

On Saturday morning the young people delivered invitations, which they had written themselves, over the entire town. The invitations were to a series of missionary meetings to begin on Sunday evening in the Wilburton Branch. Elder William Haden was to be the speaker.

The last project of the young people was to purchase and pay for a large picture of the "Lord's Supper," 28 by 45 inches, and the purple drape to go with it, which they presented to the Wilburton Branch. The church home of this branch has been redecorated with new pews and pulpit of oak. The picture was presented at the Sunday morning Communion service, thus setting the tone for the gathering.

Apostle Holmes states that there were three times the attendance of regular registered campers that had been expected. While 160 were planned for, the number reached 485. Elder William Haden was in charge of planning for the reunion. Apostle Holmes assisted. Besides these brethren and Elder Witte, other members of the reunion staff included Bishop Lewis Landsberg of Lamoni Stake, Mrs. V. D. Ruch of Council Bluffs, Iowa, Ralph Wilt, president of the Western Oklahoma District, Patriarch Henry Castings from Des Moines, Iowa, Mrs. E. F. Yarrington in charge of the children, Raymond Eubanks and Orville Dollins, business managers. Apostle Holmes reports that all the campers received rich, spiritual blessings, and to him it was a very outstanding reunion.

And Now, Meet Jesus!

Words of Life

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

—John the Baptist, introducing Jesus, John 1: 29.

Introducing Jesus

GOD DID NOT SEND his Son alone into the world, nor require him to present his own credentials. When the proper time came, at the moment that Jesus received baptism of John, God himself appeared and made the introduction, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matthew 3: 17).

This was similar to the introduction given Jesus by the Heavenly Father in the latter days when Joseph Smith prayed and received an experience that was to initiate the restoration of the gospel. Joseph "saw two personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description" and heard the message which one of them gave concerning the other, "This is my beloved Son, hear him."

It was with the knowledge of God's first introduction of Jesus that John the Baptist saw Jesus coming, and made his own introduction, a beautiful tribute, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Jesus was introduced to the world. He has been introduced since then many times. Saint Paul, recounting the number of persons who had seen the resurrected Lord, included himself among them, "And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time" (I Corinthians 15: 8).

Have You Met Him?

As his works and his nature began to be known more widely among men, there were multitudes that sought to meet Jesus. Even foreigners heard of him, and John records (12: 20, 21) that some of the Greeks came to find him, saying to Philip, "Sir, we would see Jesus." The Pharisees, recognizing their defeat, admitted to themselves, "Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? The whole world is gone after him."

Untold numbers of people have sought Jesus, and found him. And with him, they found their way to eternal life. Great numbers in our own time have yet to seek and find him. Have you met Jesus?

The Lamb of God

In calling Jesus the "Lamb of God," John was referring to the great prophecy of the "Suffering Servant" of Isaiah 53, "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter," and "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows."

In the sacrifice of Christ there is much that we do not understand and can never understand, no matter what we may pretend. We can understand the mother who gives her life in bringing her child to birth; even so, Jesus gave his life to bring to us the birth of immortality.

The Great Mission

The great purpose of God in sending his Son was indicated in the words of John, "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Jesus came into a world in which sin was destroying both the bodies and souls of men and women. Sin was the terrible destroyer. He came as the Great Physician to take that destroyer out of their lives, and to release them from its power. As far as they would follow him, that far he could make them free.

He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives . . . to set at liberty them that are bruised.—Luke 4: 18.

Sin the Destroyer

In our mission to "preach repentance" to the world, perhaps we have not so much need to rebuke and condemn them, as to proclaim the truth that sin is destroying them, body and soul, as Paul declared, "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6: 23.

We need not read our newspapers long nor listen to our radios often without discovering that "the wages of sin is death." Death touches the drunken driver and his victims upon the highways. Death touches the drinking man and woman in the taverns through poisoning, shooting, and accident. Death touches the souls of those who violate their marriage covenants in iniquity—death reaches them first with unhappiness and trouble, and finally destruction. It is more painful for a soul to die than for a body.

Christ the Redeemer

By taking away the sin of the world and putting righteousness in its place, Christ prepares the souls of men and women for the coming of the Spirit of God into their lives. This is the message, this is the opportunity, that we must preach to the world.

"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

An American will travel to Washington to meet the president. A British subject will go to London to meet the king. How far will you go to meet Jesus? He is quite near.

If you haven't met Jesus—if you haven't been introduced to him—if you have friends who need to meet him—it is the time to do something about it. And you can do it now.

Tithing Statements

The Presiding Bishops bring us a report on tithing statements for the first six months of the current year which should be of much interest to the members. Note the gratifying increase in the number filed. Their complete report follows.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

REPORT ON TITHING STATEMENTS First Six Months, 1949

The count of tithing statements received from church members in United States, Canada, and Hawaii for the first six months of 1949 reveals a substantial increase over the number received for the corresponding period last year. The total stands at 10,184 as compared with 8,434 for the first six months of 1948 and 8,063 for the same period of 1947. The total statements received in 1948 was 10,329 or 8.7 per cent of membership. This good increase makes us hopeful that the church shall exceed 10 per cent of enrolled membership filing tithing statements during 1949.

Notable gains have been made in Independence, Central Missouri Stake, and Lamoni Stake. Lamoni Stake has led the way in this important aspect of church activity for the past two years with over 17 per cent of membership filing statements last year. Kansas City Stake and Far West Stake were in second and third position in that order with over 16 per cent of membership filing tithing statements.

Last year seven districts exceeded 12 per cent of membership filing statements and five of these districts—Rich Hill, Northern California, Kirtland, Maine and Southern New England—continue to show gains in the number filing during the first six months of this year. Other districts leading the way are Spring River, Youngstown, Oregon, Spokane, Des Moines, and Northern Indiana. A number of other districts have already exceeded the total statements filed in 1948 and will show significant increases when compared with last year.

In view of recent financial studies indicating the necessity for more widespread compliance with the financial law if the church is to continue to expand its activities, the above report will be interesting and encouraging to all church members. The goal of 25 per cent of enrolled membership complying with the financial law is within the reach of the church, and every achievement in that direction will assist in both the missionary and Zionic aspects of our church endeavors. We are encouraged by this increase in the number of church members complying with the financial law and commend this law to all as the basic plan for financing the work of the church and at the same time developing stewardship attitudes and practices with regard to our material possessions.

Respectfully submitted,
THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By W. N. Johnson.

Travelogs

I was, perforce of an emergency, compelled to cancel at almost the "eleventh hour," my contemplated and scheduled visit to the Brewton (Alabama) Reunion, to which I had looked forward with eagerness. Brother Breshears, district president, was in our office today, and I have tentatively agreed with him that I shall visit the Saints of his district early in December.

I was able to attend the Bandera Reunion (both Texas Districts) according to plans. Leaving Kansas City on the M. K. T. Railroad at 9:35 on Thursday night, July 21, I was met at San Antonio twenty-one hours later by two of the local brethren.

I spent the night at the home of Brother and Sister Perry Duke and was hospitably entertained by this good couple. They have two fine daughters, Rosemary and Patricia.

On Saturday morning, Sister Duke and Patricia drove me to Bandera where I found everybody busy in "readying" the grounds for the session. Apostle W. Wallace Smith and wife had arrived the day before, also Bishop D. O. Chesworth, his wife, and son Don. Brother Z. Z. Renfroe was more than busy in meeting the Saints and locating them on their respective lots.

The property here, acquired rather recently, is very well laid out and proves to be a splendid place for reunions and camps. Running through the property is the Medina River, providing an ideal swimming pool.

Here I met many new friends and quite a few old ones. Patriarch Arnold was in attendance, also David S. Palmer and H. E. Winegar, old-time missionaries, and their wives. Brother and Sister Albert J. Banta, old friends from Lamoni, and Brother and Sister Earl Moore. Brother Moore was the first person I ever ordained, and it is a source of much gratification to note his sustained interest in the cause.

Brother J. E. Wilder, president of Southwestern Texas District, and wife were in attendance, and their location was a place of much entertainment. He was re-elected president at this reunion.

Brother C. W. Tischer was present also, and was elected president of the Central Texas District, replacing Brother Earl Moore who has faithfully served in recent years.

Here I met many Wheelers, old as well as young in the priesthood, four of the younger members—sons of Preston Wheeler—holding the priesthood, and three of them serving as pastors.

Space does not allow me to recall by name many other very worthy Latter Day Saints.

On Sunday, after I had occupied in the large and well-built tabernacle, Elder Joseph L. Berry drove me to San Antonio, where we officially greeted Brother Carl Mesle and escorted him back to Bandera. Carl, with his usual vigor, had taken over the young people within minutes after our arrival, and there was an unusually large attendance of them—a good omen for the success of the work. Carl and I shared the same room at the "missionary house."

On Monday it rained. However, after addressing the Zion's Leaguers, the women, with Sister W. Wallace Smith in charge, and a group of the priesthood, I was taken back to San Antonio by Sister Duke in time to leave at 2:00 p.m. via Braniff plane, arriving safely at Kansas City before 8:00 o'clock. By 9:00 I was home—a little tired, but feeling highly repaid for the time and distance involved in meeting a very fine body of Latter Day Saints.

Brother Wallace, as missionary in charge, soon marshaled his administrative forces, and before I left the affairs of the "camp of Israel" appeared to be running very smoothly indeed. The meeting being a two-district session, he had the able assistance of Brethren Wilder, Tischer, and Moore.

Bandera, six miles from the reunion grounds, is where Lyman Wight settled his colony in the 1840's. As a pioneer he wrote his name in large letters in this section of Texas. I was told that one son, Henry Wight, very aged, is living near Bandera, and that a daughter is residing at San Antonio. I should like to have met them if time had permitted. It is related that Joseph Smith once said that Lyman Wight was the bravest man he ever knew.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

A Measurement of Progress

By G. LESLIE DeLAPP

Based on a sermon, October 10, 1948 at General Conference

... let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion. . . . (Doctrine and Covenants 98:4.)

THIS SCRIPTURE, familiar to every Latter Day Saint, is the vision of the New Jerusalem, God's Holy City, which lies beyond this present earth upon which we live. And it is toward this city that Christian people have looked down through the centuries of time as that Eternal City in which men are to find association with God. In this city are to be found perfection and complete happiness. Here men will be free from trouble and sorrow. Here is to be found neither pain nor death. It is to be the consummation of God's great work among the peoples of earth.

In this revelation, measurement of the city is made to indicate the extent to which God has made preparation for his children. This city, however, as we who believe in the Restoration Movement know, is eternal in character, but distinct from that New Jerusalem which is to be built here upon the earth as a result of the sacrifices and labor of those who accept the challenge to build a new world in this generation.

The city which man is to build in conjunction with God is also foretold in revelation. I read from section 36 of Doctrine and Covenants:

... and the day shall come that the earth shall rest, but before that day, shall the heavens be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; and the heavens shall shake, and also the earth; and great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven; and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of my Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men; and righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a new Jerusalem.

And another paragraph:

And the Lord said unto Enoch, Then shall you and all your city meet them there, and we will receive them into our bosom, and they shall see us, and we will fall upon their necks, and they shall fall upon our necks, and we will kiss each other, and there shall be my abode, and it shall be Zion which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made; and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest.

And from another revelation, which we know as Section 11,

Now as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion.

IT IS DIFFICULT to measure progress in kingdom-building, but one must do so in the refining of the goals which constitute a Zion condition. The church has been commissioned to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ unto all the world. Zion development is in direct ratio to the accomplishment of this goal, and there must be recognition that the preaching of the gospel is vital to our success in the establishment of Zion. Specific goals have been given us as a church, against which our progress can be measured. Some of these are briefly outlined in Section 42 where the church was commissioned, first Ye shall go forth baptizing with water, saying, Repent ye, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

And from this place ye shall go forth into the regions westward; and inasmuch as ye shall find them that will receive you, ye shall build up my church in every region, until the time shall come when it shall be revealed unto you from on high, when the city of the New Jerusalem shall be prepared, that ye may be gathered in one, that ye may be my people, and I will be your God.

There is evidence of the Divine commission to consummate the gathering of God's people, and in this same revelation are other goals:

... Thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support. . . .

... Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property. . . .

... The residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship. . . .

As a church, and as officers of the church, we have, from time to time, tried to define intermediate goals, the accomplishment of which would bring all of us closer to the general objectives set forth in these revelations. One of the intermediate goals which has been reached is that of the elimination of debt. This has resulted in a stride toward the attainment of the broader goals of the church; for in its attainment not only has there been the elimination of debt, but also of the hazards which have always faced us in trying to maintain an active and an aggressive program of missionary endeavor.

I have been interested in reviewing some of the matters which were considered by me beginning in 1940 when additional responsibility was imposed upon me; this in an effort to appraise the progress that had been made. At that time I stated there were certain emphases which were necessary for the church to consider. The first of these was to declare the divinity of Jesus Christ. This is, has been, and must always be the foremost responsibility of those who profess to believe in this Restoration Movement.

What might happen if our church were to use the potential power resident within it, to declare that Jesus Christ is the Risen Lord and that through him only men might find peace and good will. Surely the impact would be felt throughout the world.

It may be difficult to measure the progress made by the church in this connection at any given time, but if progress is to be made, it will be in proportion to our bearing testimony of our belief that Christ is the Son of God. One cannot help expressing concern as to the extent to which this has been done in recent years. Have we, as a priesthood, as lay members of the church, both general and local, taken measure of our individual contribution in this respect? This is a day of measurement, and measurement has value only as the yardstick is applied to us individually.

WE OF THE BISHOPRIC have assumed certain responsibilities in carrying on educational work with the Aaronic priesthood. One might anticipate that our emphasis would be mainly upon those phases of education which have to do with the work of the bishopric; however, the approach is being made to that unit which in our opinion is the unit of greatest importance—the home, the Latter Day Saint home, the Latter Day Saint family. So in the curriculum being developed are to be found courses on The Latter Day Saint Family, The Church and the Home Working Together, The Minister as Counselor, Ministering in the Home, and related courses. These courses are to cover a three-year period, and it is our hope that from the corps of workers engaged in this project there will be developed basic courses which can be taught to the members of the Aaronic priesthood throughout the entire church. We believe that it is a step in the right direction, and we believe further that it will enable our local priesthood to more efficiently bear testimony of the divinity of Jesus Christ. It is our opinion that real progress can be made only as we give direction to this work, not only on a temporary basis but as a continuous program which will train and qualify the members of this priesthood for greater ministry.

Education is a slow process, but we know that it can be accelerated as individuals apply themselves and seek the help of God. Despite the fact that we have been engaged some three years in this work of education, and our progress has been slow, there is evidence of real values being obtained, and the hope for the future is most encouraging.

THE PRESIDENCY has called attention to the principles and the goals of the church endeavor. These were listed in the report of the Presidency to this General Conference. They are comprehensive and cover practically the whole scope of our endeavor. Undoubtedly, specific goals will be set through the process of administrative direction to set the course of the church as a whole. The principles of effective evangelization and financial administration have been placed before the church at various times; and in the field of evangelism responsibility has been placed not only upon the ministerial personnel, but upon every member of the church, with special responsibility placed upon those who are the officers, both local and general, of the church.

Our church has looked toward distant missions, and efforts have been made to establish centers in lands where we have heretofore ministered only in a nominal manner.

But new areas of work are being undertaken, the course of the church is set, and new responsibilities are being assumed. Principles of financial administration have also been called to the attention of the membership of the church, and it has been pointed out that the purpose of financial contributions and the administration of such is to make possible the achievement of spiritual objectives of the church. If this were not so, there would be no purpose in financial administration, for the great and eternal purpose of the church is to build one spiritually.

Here, again, there is given to every member of the church the opportunity to share in the work of evangelism and the establishment of Zion through compliance or obedience to the temporal law. Emphasis has been made on the principle of the annual accounting, yet a comparison of figures for the year 1947 with those of the year 1940 does not show the marked improvement that we desire. The total number of contributors for 1940 was approximately 27,000; the total number of contributors for 1947 was 29,314, or 25.4 per cent of our total enrollment, with the total number of those filing financial statements amounting to 9,230, or 7.99 per cent of our total enrollment.

Now here indeed is a fact which lends itself to measurement, and the figures indicate that there is room for improvement in this field. We have faced some difficulties in certain areas where special projects have taken precedence over the steadfast obedience to the command of God through the financial law. In such instances we have sought to be helpful, but not always with the success that we would desire.

IN PERIODS SUCH AS WE are passing through, there is a tendency for greater expenditures on the part of all of us. Scrutiny of these expenditures, together with repression of unnecessary wants, is essential to our continued welfare; and we state this despite the apparent evidence of prosperity that seems to exist round about us. We believe that this should be emphasized and re-emphasized throughout the church, that the scrutiny of our expenditures should be constant, and that there should be the repression of unnecessary wants. We feel that this is essential to our continued success.

AS WE LOOK BACK to the beginning of the last war, we find an emphasis was made on the need for creating an economic foundation upon which we could build, and we have witnessed this foundation in its process. The broad goals of the church to which we were looking at that time are still ahead of us—the storehouse, its organization, the gathering of surpluses, and the distribution of surpluses. These can be realized only as a result of participation in the planned program to which reference has been made, and in which and for which we must continue to work. There must continue to be a consciousness on the part of every individual member of the church that these broad objectives of world evangelization, the broad objectives which are inherent within our Zion program, can be realized only to the extent that there comes to the individual a personal conviction that he has specific responsibility to make an accounting, and that accounting is not primarily to ascertain one's financial obligation to the church, but to recognize that the principle of stewardship is divine, and that real growth and progress for the individual and the church can come through such participation.

If we apply the measuring stick to our progress of recent years, there is, without question, substantial evidence of growth. The church has become more unified, the general objectives are still before us, but the breakdown of those objectives has come to have special significance to each of us; and there is a part which each one of us can play individually, looking toward the attainment of our broader goals. As long as there is a person who has not heard the message of the Restoration, there is work for us to do. As long as there are individuals in the church who lack understanding of its policies, of its program of evangelization, of its program of finances; there is a work for each one of us, either to learn or to teach. As long as less than these 8 per cent of our membership acknowledge their stewardship responsibility through the accounting, there is work to be done. As long as less than 8 per cent recognize that this is a divine command, there is work for every person within the church.

IN THE EARLY YEARS of the depression, major emphasis was made upon the need for keeping the law. As a result of compliance upon the part of those who heeded this appeal, the church has made great progress. The financial goals ahead of us are still great. If we are to figure in terms of present cost, we can no longer think of the completion of the Auditorium for an additional million dollars, nor the completion of other projects for the cost originally estimated. If we are to think in terms of evangelization, of carrying the gospel to missions abroad, of establishing ourselves in branches and districts, we can no longer think in terms of budgets approximating those of recent years, nor approximating that which has been approved by this General Conference. We must raise our sights if we are to think in terms of the development of an educational institution, or of a health center; and we must recognize that these will involve the expenditure of thousands and thousands of dollars.

This is not to be considered as encouraging immediate steps in the direction of increasing our expenditures, for in the administration of our financial policy we have been conservative and shall continue to be conservative; but the accomplishment of the great goals of the church will necessarily impose greater financial burdens upon us, and we must prepare through the strengthening of our membership, through the teaching of the law, through the development of personnel, to assume greater responsibilities than we have ever met in the years which are past.

AS WE FACE THESE responsibilities, we do so with the knowledge that we have certain resources with which to work, resources far beyond those possessed by those six men, Joseph Smith and his associates, who moved out under the inspiration of God to organize the Church of Jesus Christ in these latter days; for they possessed neither wealth nor man power. Let us summarize briefly a few of the resources at the command of the church to fulfill its divine mission: first, a spiritual heritage coming to us because of the sacrificial devotion and faith of those who have preceded us.

In this connection, I wish to bear a personal testimony. Yesterday I received a letter of congratulation for the good financial progress made by our church from a high officer of one of the large banks of Kansas City. He has had intimate knowledge of our financial status beginning in 1931. Some time back, my two associates and I had the pleasure of having lunch with him. He told them of his pleasure that our church had so successfully overcome what seemed to him to be an almost insurmountable obstacle. He went on to say that back in 1931 he did not think it could be done, and, further, he did not think that Bishop DeLapp knew how it was to be done. I told him at that time that there was just one thing I knew that he could not have known—I knew our people; I knew the value being placed upon this spiritual heritage; I knew what our people would do to preserve that heritage. And my belief and my faith were justified and will continue to be justified.

IN ADDITION TO THAT spiritual heritage which is the greatest of all of the resources we have, we have others. Complying with the com-

Mongolians and the Lamanites

By H. I. LETCHWORTH

IN THE LIGHT of present world knowledge, we cannot blame people too much if they are unable to properly digest the works of Joseph Smith. However, if world knowledge were general so that all wisdom were collectively at hand, we would then be in the light of truth, and our problems would be simple ones.

It is quite impossible for any of us to collect to ourselves much of the world's knowledge, so the best we can do is to pass on what little we have. The enlightenment we have received teaches us the need of a restoration of all things. We feel and see this when we observe Christian churches gathering their diversified view in such as the World Council of Churches. This is a living witness to the fact that people are not quite satisfied with things as they are.

In reading the sacred pages of the Bible, we see the prophecies moving toward their fulfillment and know that its words are sure. We read the Book of Mormon and see it teaching and fulfilling the word of God in much the same way. We read the works of archaeologists and find them uncovering facts that verify the teachings of both of these books. Then we find a church that claims to be a restoration—basing its teachings upon the foundation of Christ and preaching the principles of his kingdom in its fullness—insisting that there is but one way and none other, whereby men might be saved. Here we find a people who, having once been touched by this doctrine, cannot be shaken in their belief that Christ is reaching out and gathering his own into the fold. In the new light received from these teachings, we see hitherto misunderstood biblical sayings unfolded and made plain before us. These things light up our pathway, and having observed, we are convinced that all of these things are but evidences.

THE GREATEST TROUBLE seems to be prejudice. It is this mantle which clouds our minds and holds us in a grip of darkness. Were it not for this, our knowledge of God and his world would be much greater than it is. Prejudice in the minds of men caused some of the truths to be left out of the Bible—some added—some changed. Add to this the mistakes which have come about during the various translations, and we find ourselves at a disadvantage in our search for truth. It was prejudice, for instance, when the Catholic priests burned huge piles of written works of the people of ancient America at the time of the conquest of Mexico. They destroyed most of the greatest works, saying, "The Devil must have in some manner supplied them with a spurious edition of the Bible," because they found the Indian religion so much like their own. Consequently, without the Book of Mormon in our possession, our knowledge of their history and religion would be vague.

Perhaps it is because of prejudice that archaeologists teach that the early people of Mexico, Central and South America, came from Asia by way of the Bering Strait. If we are to believe this story, we must accept the fact that they came through and ignored the natural wealth, fertility, and beauty of a land decidedly ideal for a colony, all the way from Alaska through sunny California. Ignoring this, they would have had to travel over many miles of desolate land lacking in food and water, inhabited by rattlesnakes and cacti, and containing impassible, rugged mountain ranges, to the area in which we found them—a distance of some 2,500 miles. If we plant a seed in fertile ground, it will grow and flourish there, not in some far distant place. So we arrive at the logical conclusion that these people grew and flourished in the place where they first landed by way of the sea, where they lived and died, and where we find their remnant.

IF WE have an accurate picture of a specified race of people, it is essential first that we trace their source, going back into the cradle of all creation. Since we wish to know something about the people of Mexico, Central and South America, we begin from these places and trace them back to their departing point. Then delving farther into their ancestry, we get a clue as to why they conducted their lives in the manner they did; why they worshiped certain gods and followed given patterns in their habits and customs, and why they were so advanced in the arts and sciences. The answer appears to be quite a simple one, but we must search diligently, without guile or prejudice. We enter into ancient Babylonia, Egypt, and Jerusalem about 4000 B. C. Here in Babylonia the foundation of early technical knowledge was cradled. It was here that man began knocking on the doors of his own creations—the nursery of ancient wisdom and knowledge. These people were the fathers of the House of Israel. They worshiped the sun and the moon. Sippar was a city dedicated to the sun, Ur to the moon god, and Cutha to the god of the dead and of the underworld. It is not strange then that we find these people of the Americas likewise worshiping the sun and the moon; nor that we can discover in their art the god they dedicated to the dead and to the underworld. It is difficult to tell to which race they belonged, but much research points to a mixture of people.

The religious institutions were chiefly responsible for the great development of Babylonia. Priests were the teachers of youth and the promoters of learning and research. They controlled the schools, workshops, and observatories connected with their temples. These temples were as imposing as royal palaces and much more numerous. It is not strange then that we find priests following a pattern given to them by their Babylonian fathers, who were the ancestors of the Jaredites, Nephites, and Mulekites. Their culture was great in religion and science. Their art in silverware, books, and learning was far beyond anything most of us can comprehend. From one of the rulers of Entemena, about 3000 B. C., there has been preserved a beautiful silver vase, sufficient in itself to prove a high attainment in the arts. They built pyramids, we know, because many of them still stand to mute testimony of that fact.

THE TOWER OF BABEL was itself in the form of a pyramid, and it was not completely destroyed at the time of its fall—having been rebuilt and completed by Nebuchadnezzar, and in his inscriptions he gives us an account of it. The bottom stage was 300 feet square and 120 feet high. Above this were six other stages that diminished in size toward the top. Its total height was 325 feet, having upon its top an altar and was called the House of the Foundations of Heaven and Earth. It seems to have been built of adobe brick, and since the fall of Babylon has served as a brick quarry for the entire surrounding countryside, with nothing remaining but a hole in the ground some 300 feet square. It was inside the walls of the city of Babylon on the Euphrates River.

The Babylonians were people who built cities of no mean size, with many evidences of an orderly life. Religion and war were the chief interests insofar as their meager inscriptions testify. By this discourse on ancient Babylonia, Egypt, and Jerusalem, we wish to show that the people of ancient America were contemporaneous with them and that their lives were influenced by the blood, habits, and customs of their Babylonian fathers. About 1475 B. C. in Egypt, Thothmes the Third was in power. Under his rule fifteen campaigns were conducted into Asia. His later years were peaceful ones. Horses and chariots were imported from Asia; Asiatic wives, gods, and customs became fashionable. Rameses the Second came into power in 1292 B. C. He spent most of his reign in beautifying and strengthening his kingdom. To carry out his designs, he used conquered nations, among which were the Hebrew people; during the Asiatic invasions, their lot was a grievous one. It was not until 445 B. C., after the Book of Mormon people had left Palestine, that Nehemiah issued an edict that foreign marriages must cease among the Israelites. It is a well-known fact that Manasseh and Ephraim were born of an Egyptian mother and that Lehi was a descendant of Manasseh.

IN THE LIGHT of this knowledge of their fathers, it appears very probable that the Asiatic influence might have been brought with them. We know that these people did come to the Americas, for we have the records of the colonies that came, as well as the recorded word of those who remained behind. Josephus states,

After the confusion of tongues they were dispersed abroad and went out by colonies everywhere; and each colony took possession of that land which they did light upon, and unto which God did guide them; and they did fill the inland and maritime countries. There were some also who passed over the sea in ships and inhabited the islands. God commanded them to send colonies abroad for a thorough colonizing of the earth.—Antiquities of the Jews, Book I, Chapter 5, page 40.

This corresponds with Jeremiah 16: 13, "Therefore will I cast you out of this land and into a land which you know not, neither ye nor your fathers, and there shall you serve other gods day and night where I will not show you favor." He was speaking to a people who were to be cast out of Jerusalem. That they were cast out and did go into idolatry, and in so doing lost favor with God, we know to be a fact, for we have their recorded word. These records show that the Asiatic influence was planted among these people before their departure for the Americas. Also we have records which tend to prove that continued contact was made with the Mongolians after the arrival of the Book of Mormon people. We have the story of the Chinese princess who had been sold into slavery among the Indians, and we conclude if one Mongolian was sold into slavery, there must have been others. That they had ships, we know, for the Book of Mormon refers to them as "Hagoth's Ships." As another witness, we have the words of Pizarro who, while cruising the coast of Peru, came upon a native craft which he described as "having the appearance of the European Caravel." We therefore assume that if they had ships, they must have touched foreign ports. We know that they did have commerce with Cuba, and we think it must be more than likely that they touched also the coasts of China.

To say that the people of ancient America are of Mongolian extract would be like saying because of a little pepper in our potatoes that the potatoes came from Ceylon.

Future Features of the "Herald"

"Lifesavers," a sermon by Apostle Charles R. Hield, will appear in the issue of August 29. "The Church and Its College Youth" is a message from the Committee on Ministry to College People by Harley A. Morris in the same issue.

Another Campus sermon, "Hear Ye Him," by Apostle Reed M. Holmes will be printed in the issue of September 5. "Many voices are clamoring for our attention," says Brother Holmes, "but our business is to know Christ's voice and not follow strangers."

A District Bishop in Action

By Frederic W. Roberts

Patriarch, Southern New England District

IF YOU WOULD LIKE TO KNOW what strenuous work means, go with Bishop Donald O. Chesworth on one of his trips in the Maine District. It was my privilege to accompany him on a trip in eastern Maine this spring. Brother Chesworth is a bishop in action, awake and alert in every way he can serve the church. His great concern is temporalities, and he likes to tell the story of the Restoration, which he regards as basic in his work. Always kind and thoughtful of others, he is heartily received by his many friends.

On Monday morning, April 11, at 7 o'clock, we left Fall River, Massachusetts, by automobile. After a full day's journey we arrived at Jonesport, Maine, our first stop. With brief greetings we went a short distance by boat to Beals Island where Brother Chesworth preached that night. The pastor of our group there is Elder Farrell L. Lenfesty. We remained over night with the pastor's parents, Brother and Sister Charles M. Lenfesty; later we made several visits on the island in the homes of the Saints.

In the afternoon we drove to Machias and met Elder Willis Foss, pastor of the Kennebec Church. Brother Chesworth spoke there in the evening. We dined with Brother and Sister Virgil Foss, and lodged at the home of Sister Mabel Hall.

The next day our course was almost directly north into Aroostook County, the famous potato raising country. Presque Isle, Washburn, and Caribou are towns in the heart of this area. Caribou is a shipping center for potatoes. Brother Chesworth had never been in this northern section and was eager to visit the Saints there.

We arrived at Washburn at 6 p.m. Brother Henry Russell was waiting for us. He invited us to have dinner with the Rotary Club. There were approximately 100 men present; most of them were Yankees and sons of the early settlers. The next day we went with Brother and Sister Russell in their car to visit points of interest still farther north, and crossed over the St. Johns River, the Canadian boundary line at that point. It is a rugged country, peculiar to itself, with angry waterfalls, deep gorges, and blue sky.

ON OUR RETURN HOME, we visited the Norton family, consisting of Mr. Ralph Norton and his two sisters, both outstanding Latter Day Saint women. This is a typical farm home. Mr. Norton is a potato grower. They served a wonderful supper and proved to us the fame of the Green Mountain potato. These folk rarely have the privilege of meeting with our people in public worship. Before the time of departure we all stood while a prayer of gratitude and blessing was offered. A presence of holy quiet enclosed us, and we all felt a spiritual uplift. Such buoyancy of spirit is worth more than all efforts can repay.

We returned to the Russells again for the night. Our stay there was very enjoyable. Brother Russell is a Christian gentleman; he is also an aggressive businessman and has the finest equipped grocery store in town. Moreover, he has a keen interest in the objectives of the church. His son Maurice is a business associate and a Graceland graduate. He expressed his ideas in respect to some church problems, which were encouraging.

Friday we were on our way back to Jonesport. We found Brother Newman Wilson decorating the church for the Easter services. Brother Newman is a man of many trades: fisherman, mechanic, and preacher. He is pastor emeritus and now president of the Maine District.

Here we met Brother Donald Harvey, a seventy, serving in the Maine District. We also met Brother Alade M. Pelletier, a young man with the missionary spirit. The Lord is raising up men, true to promise.

Friday night, our last night, we stayed at Grey's Lodge, the home of Brother Chester Grey. He arose early Saturday morning to give us a good start homeward.

This six-day trip was a great experience for us, and we enjoyed it immensely. We believe good was accomplished for the cause, judging from responses all along the way.

Let every man say a good word for Bishop Chesworth. He is giving his best. He is of no small capacity. His energy in action is an example of strenuous work.

Instruction for New Members

ON APRIL 6, Evangelist J. J. Ledsworth completed a series of thirteen cottage missionary meetings by baptizing twenty-one persons into the church at Port Huron, Michigan.

Brother Ledsworth reports:

During these meetings I had the privilege of blessing seven children.

These services were in the nature of round-table discussions, and the "Busy Man's Tract" was used throughout the series, starting with tract Number One. I passed out a tract to each person at the close of each meeting for him to study until the next meeting, and that tract would then be used as the basis of the discussion. The meetings were held on Tuesday and Friday evenings. The reason for two services each week was that those who attended might not forget the things we talked about from one service to the next. These were two-hour periods.

The discussion and questions for the first hour were based on the "Busy Man's Tract," and the next hour was open for any questions that the class members might have in their minds. Usually they had plenty of them. The one thing I tried to do was to impress upon the minds of the class from the very first meeting the importance of attending church school and preaching each Sunday morning if possible, that they would have the habit formed of attending church services before becoming members of the church. The plan worked.

Following the baptismal service and confirmation, our pastor, Brother Smith, and I conducted another series of classes, using the Church Member's Manual as our text for ten classes. This proved to be very beneficial to each one.

I feel sure that each one got something from those classes that he perhaps would not have received for quite some time. Before we finished with the ten classes several asked for inventory blanks; they wanted to make out their tithing statements. I taught them the way we operated our branch financially before they were baptized; and after they were baptized, each family took a pack of envelopes and began paying into the branch.

I am sure that if there could be a class provided for newly baptized members using something similar to this manual, we would be able to save many more to the church than we have been doing. They would know much more about the church than they do otherwise.

In this group there were nine family units completed. The ages are as follows: five in the ages ten to fifteen; three in the ages fifteen to twenty; thirteen of ages twenty to thirty-six.

O. W. Parker Retires

O. W. PARKER might well be known among church members as patriarch of the business end of the Herald Publishing House. On August 19 of this year he celebrated his fortieth anniversary of faithful service in that church institution by retiring from active service. Forty years is a long time to watch the Herald and its sister publications make their regular appearance for the edification of the Saints.

Forty years ago last December—that would be 1908—Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Parker moved to Lamoni, Iowa, at that time the church headquarters, from a little town southeast of there, known as Pleasanton, Iowa. In August of the following year, Brother Parker entered the employ of the Herald Publishing House in the new brick building just north of the high school. He became a bookkeeper. Bishop Albert Carmichael was business manager then and Elbert A. Smith was editing the Herald. Two years before, the Herald Publishing House had burned to the ground. This new building, made of red brick, and very sturdy, housed the printing institution until the publishing house followed church headquarters to Independence in the year 1921.

Lamoni was a pleasant town in which to make their home. These two young people were church members, and like all Saints they wanted to be with others of like belief.

Offie (his real name is Theophilus, but he doesn't remember ever being called by that) Parker remembers hearing his mother tell how her folks, the Reeses, stopped at St. Louis on their way from Wales to Utah. His grandfather, Abram Reese, had been an elder in the early church in Wales. Knowing nothing of the innovations, they joined a colony to go to Utah. Somehow they discovered in St. Louis that they were not being led in this venture by the original organization, so they decided to stay in St. Louis, where his grandfather Reese became a member of the Reorganization. It was there that Offie's mother grew up and married his father, a native of England.

It was in St. Louis that Offie was born on December 12, 1875. And when he was seven years old he went to Pleasanton, Iowa, with his grandparents, the Reeses, and his mother, Suzanna Parker. They wanted to be near the headquarters of the church, which were in Lamoni, and thus settled in this little town near-by.

When he finished school in Pleasanton, Offie went to Stanberry, Missouri, and graduated in a business course from Stanberry College. After his graduation he worked in Pleasanton in the general store of his stepfather, Mr. James Early, and for several years as telegrapher for the K. and W. Railroad.

In 1902 Offie married one of his schoolmates, Bessie Ethel Leeper, a beautiful and lovely girl, devoted to the church, and the woman who has been his faithful companion throughout his life.

About as soon as Brother Parker went to work at the publishing house, he was thrust into the position to learn almost every job in the business office. Bishop Carmichael had to travel much of the time, so Offie Parker took over.

Since that time he has been the solid rock, the steadying rod to the business office. Business managers have come and gone on, each in turn taught by Offie Parker. And when there was no business manager, Mr. Parker did that. Through the years he has worked with such fine men as Granville Trowbridge, Roy Redfield, Ward Hougas, J. A. Koehler, Fred Blair, James F. Keir, and most recently, Kenneth L. Graham.

Since 1930, O. W. Parker has been the treasurer and production manager. He has been in charge of scheduling and overseeing all production in the composing room, press room, and bindery, and the ordering of paper, ink, and binding supplies. Anything needed in producing Herald publications, Mr. Parker was the man who did the getting.

Offie and Bessie have four children: Monte, who followed in his father's footsteps in the publishing industry, being employed in Independence by a printing company as a compositor; Paul, who also lives in Independence; Camilla, who has two grown sons; and Windsor, who lives in Canyon, Texas.

The Parker family moved to Independence in 1921 when the Herald Publishing House moved from Lamoni to the Center Place. The church shipped by railroad the printing equipment and the household goods belonging to employees who chose to transfer from Lamoni to Independence. The Parkers participated in this plan as did several other families, including Edward Moore, Victor Gunsolley, Earl Hall, Wilbur Paul, and Estella Wight.

The Living Jesus

By EMMA SMITH KENNEDY

I believe the strong appeal to our young should be the living Jesus. He is the active, pulsatory Jesus who can and does step to our side and lend help in labor or in the quiet hour of repose. He can help the man digging ditches for better streets or new homes, or the worker who climbs high in the air to weld a steel girder. Again his kindness may be extended to the housewife or mother when duty keeps her tied in the sickroom and in the strain of housekeeping. Even the slender youth seeking employment needs this living Savior. Christ is not dead, not nailed to a cross, not standing before Pilate waiting to be turned over to the angry mob.

Our youth can use a live Christ, a real help in time of need. He is near in the struggles of life or in times of pleasure or when the tempter stands close to urge a wrong step.

I am weary of seeing the picture of this living Jesus on the cross or wearing a crown of thorns on his brow. I used to love the thorn tree with its sweet, white blossoms, but that crown of thorns has turned a thing of beauty into a hateful sight. Pictures depicting suffering on a sad face bring me a weak, helpless feeling. One should feel strength when he looks upon the picture of the Savior of the world.

Some years ago a new studio opened in Kansas City, Missouri. The drapings were lovely; there were rich curtains at the door of each booth; the passageways from one booth to the other were quiet. I was enjoying the beauty of the building and the adornment of the walls, when I noticed a mother and two little children. The boy was about six; the girl about three. The children ran ahead of their mother. The lad reached the next doorway first. As he parted the heavy curtains, I saw his fingers grip the folds of tapestry and heard him cry, "Oh, Mama!"

The mother hurried to him just as he sank to the floor. She lifted him to a couch near by, put her hand on his head, and spoke calmly. Then she hurried to find his sister. As the mother parted the curtain, she, too, stopped, then went in. She saw what had startled the lad. In front stood a life-size picture of an ugly cross, and on it hung Jesus. His arms were outstretched, his hands bleeding; and the bowed head was crowned with thorns, and down the agonized face and out of the pierced feet flowed red blood.

I came in just as the mother knelt by the little girl and said, "What are you doing, dear?" The little one, who was kneeling, rose, holding her dress skirt in her hand. She looked up at her mother as she explained, "Oh, I is wiping the blood off poor Jesus' feet." Tears were running down the little face.

I thought then, "How awful that little children must be subjected to such!" As I look back on that scene, I think now how much more winning it would have been had those children opened that curtain on Christ with a little lamb in his arms.

WE ARE THROUGH with the sad part of Jesus' life. No doubt he would want to be remembered as having joy and strength. The life we should learn about is of Jesus made anew in the new flesh, perfected by suffering. Though the prints of the wounds may be visible, there is no sight of suffering or bleeding, because Jesus finished his assignment and is now alive working among the people who will hear him calling, not through agony but through victory. He has drunk of the cup and arisen conqueror over the grave and death.

The living Christ would not want any to be shocked by his agony and surely not the lowly, the humble, nor the tender-souled child. The knowledge that Jesus is with me gives strength, courage, and joy. The terrible things going on in the world today do not shock or disturb me. Yet, born of the flesh as I am, fear and sorrow and pain all around, I can't be calm and fearless unless I know my Savior is near my side. Storms have no fright nor does heavy labor leave me weary and downhearted. He is there to lift my soul, to warn of danger, to give full assurance. His Holy Spirit will rule as I listen to his voice in the silence of night or in the busy byways I tread by day.

Our young people who have seen so much woe, destruction, and sorrow need no thorny crown or ugly cross. They need Christ's life of kindness and love to make their paths brighter. They see death in every form. Wherever they go they find danger. Let's give them more of the peace Jesus brought with him—a peace that can live with them day by day, bringing a faith to lift to higher planes of living here and now.

The Love of God - By MABEL SMITH

HOW WONDERFUL is this love of God which we so often take for granted. There is so much he gives. God does not treat each of us alike. His love is fitted to each human need and capacity.

We walk with God if we live prayerfully, thoughtfully, and dutifully. Walking with God is the secret of spiritual victory. He who lives close to God can conquer evil within and without.

The mercies of God do not come to us entirely because we deserve them, but because of God's "great goodness." Our hope is for the continuance of the gifts and necessities of life which are bestowed upon us by his loving kindness.

People need spiritual help always. If we are disturbed in mind, let us humble ourselves before God, a God who understands and forgives our weaknesses. Kneeling in humility before him, we rise in power. Truly, more things are gained by prayer than anyone dreams of.

Let us take more seriously our stewardship of prayer. By prayer spiritual forces are released. By prayer, barriers of prejudice are broken down. By prayer Christian hearts are united in brotherly love. Prayer can even bring into being a united and Christian world. When everything else fails, the love of God still reigns over us.

True religion is the response of oneself to the love of God who first loved us. It is giving of oneself to God without any qualifications. Persons of such a faith are not concerned about success or reward, but in service to our Lord we are genuinely happy and peaceful.

How much happier we would be if we would say, "God, I have three houses but I need only one. You take two and use them to bring light and love and life to thy needy children."

Jesus knew why he was sent to earth. His mission was to bear witness to the purpose of life. He wants us to live in accord with that purpose, sharing in the work of the Heavenly Father, and preparing ourselves for the glorious destiny that awaits us.

PRAYER: O God, help us to see ourselves as thou seest us. Then grant us the wisdom and courage to remake ourselves with thy help into something resembling thine own image. Amen.

Thomas W. Chatburn

(See Front Cover)

"One of the best-known missionaries of the church" was the tribute that Heman C. Smith paid to him in the Journal of History. An editorial writer of the Saints' Herald named him among the "prominent ministers" present at a general conference. And the late President Frederick M. Smith, in a reminiscent mood one time, mentioned with pleasure the "Jots by the Wayside" that Brother Chatburn had written for the Herald.

The reader today who traces Brother Chatburn through the pages of our history and periodicals gathers, along with his information, a sense of loss in not having known this friendly, interesting, dynamic servant of the church. Yet it is quite possible, even in the pages of cold print, to feel something of the warmth of his personality and the charm of his presence. He wrote a letter of kindly but sincere protest at the neglect of the scene of tragedy at Haun's Mill. He expressed his faith in an article on "The Resurrection." He warned of the danger of the encroachments from Rome. But, best loved of his writings were his reports of missionary activities in the field—his "Jots by the Wayside." His love of the beauty of plains, woods, and hills, his pleasure in meeting and talking to people, his zest for the work of the church, his courage in meeting opponents in debate, and his kindness in settling troubles in congregations are all reflected in these pleasant and vivacious epistles.

He was born at Lancaster, England, on March 22, 1841, according to an editorial tribute after his death. He was the son of Judge Jonas W. Chatburn, and came with his parents, while still a boy, to America. He grew up in western Iowa, and served in the 29th Infantry of that state in the Civil War during 1864 and 1865, being demobilized in New Orleans. After the war he was sheriff of Shelby County, Iowa.

Brother Chatburn joined the church in February, 1870. He was ordained an elder July 28, 1874; a seventy April 14, 1892, and a high priest April 16, 1907. Church news often listed him as president of the district in which he was appointed to labor.

Older church records were not complete, but a Herald editor noted that he and his wife celebrated their fiftieth anniversary on Christmas Day, 1913. Seven children blessed their home and grew up to give valued services to the church, numbers of the grandchildren following in their steps. Brother Chatburn died October 2, 1915.

Missionary work still has its trials and discomforts, but sometimes airliners, cooled Pullmans, and motor cars can help. In those older days, the missionary was lucky to have the soot and cinders of a day coach; at other times he rode horseback, sat in an open wagon, or even walked mile after weary mile on dusty roads to his appointments. Those who did it were valiant men, and they left brave families behind them at home. Far from loved ones, they bore their testimonies and declared the gospel in words of cheer and courage. Such a man was Thomas W. Chatburn.

When the Parkers came to Independence, they moved to the fine big house at 622 South Chrysler where they live today. Mr. and Mrs. Parker, the ever gracious host and hostess, still welcome here their visitors with the cheer and kindness of true Saints in Zion.

Mr. Parker recalls that the Herald House moved into the present location immediately upon coming to Independence. The rambling old Armory building had been decorated and rejuvenated. Before the Herald

House took over, it was used as Army training quarters. The front section of the building had been used for offices, and the southeast section had been used as a stable for horses.

During the forty years Offie Parker has presided at his desk in this church service institution, not one issue of the Herald has been missed. This cheerful man with the twinkle in his eye and the "good word" for everyone has figured costs on some 2,000 issues of the Herald and now leaves his desk reluctantly, for in forty years a man can form warm attachments for his work. But now he and Sister Parker can enjoy their mutual companionship and peacefully preside over their home in Zion.

Mary Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bert J. Williams of Toronto.

Mary was selected from all Toronto girls of the "Girls in Training" to be honored by having her picture in this year's Manual as the representative girl of the "Girls in Training" organization. This is a Canadian national organization of the Canadian Council of Churches, and is sponsored by the National Girls Work Board. The purpose of the organization is "to seek truth, to know God, and with his help to become the girl God wants her to be."

A Dynamic Church — By KARL SCHOEPEKE

I AM A YOUNG MAN and like my church very much. We belong to a living, dynamic church. In the past the following points attracted my consideration. Because we honor a dynamic and democratic church, I take the liberty to write.

PIONEERS IN OUR CHURCH

We revere the great pioneers, especially Joseph Smith, Jr., and his followers. From 1830-1844 the church reached the membership of 200,000 i. e., an increase for one year of about 14,000 members on the average. We must consider that at this time there were no autos, no radios, and no telephones; on the other side, the leaders and the members of the church suffered from many hardships and persecutions. All the unpleasant things did not cause the presidency, the quorums, and the members to leave the church; on the contrary, they became stronger and stronger in their creed. Most of them were devoted to the church and gave all their talents and financial contributions for the cause of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I personally admire the family of Joseph Smith very much. The reason is to be found in the fact that Joseph Smith founded the church according to the instructions and commandments of God. If the boy Joseph had not accepted the divine call, other persons and I would not have found grace in the eyes of the Heavenly Father. Joseph Smith, Jr., was a diligent and capable leader. I respect Joseph Smith II because he did not go to the Mormons and won the processes (in the courts) against them. Emma Smith assisted her husband Joseph until his martyrdom. After his death she instructed and educated her children in the true faith of Jesus Christ. Frederick M. Smith was a constant president and promoted education for the membership of our church. Our present President, Israel A. Smith, must also be respected, for he accepted the divine call to do the duties as a president of the true church.

The pioneers gave us a great example. We wish to emulate them. The German poet, Goethe, says: "The person who makes endeavor, this person can be redeemed."

AN ANCIENT OR A MODERN CHURCH?

The history of our church and the present situation demand learning and insight above all else. For all times the church doctrines contained in the Three Standard Books must be our constant guides. Insofar as we have love and enthusiasm for the cause of the kingdom of God, the enthusiasm and faith of our church fathers and mothers, we will accomplish all our tasks. If we see church office only as a "profession" rather than a holy, enduring task throughout life we will be failures.

OUR IMPORTANT TASK

Our urgent need and task was and is to do and to support missionary work. Zion can be redeemed only if this task will be fully accomplished. The missionaries must be reliable men who cling fast to their duties and creed, especially if they come into persecution and disappointment. It is useful for a missionary to speak two or several languages. (See Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.) It seems advisable to introduce and to instruct missionaries by well-experienced church officers before they enter their office.

THE WINNING OF THE YOUTH FOR THE CHURCH

This theme has fundamental meaning for our church and seems to be endless. I will point out only one side of this problem. In the world and probably in our church there is the intention to bring men in leading positions when they are of middle age or older. Youth, however, needs stimulus and praise, commendation.

Our system of recommendation of our church is good but can also be bad. In the human life and feeling, sympathy and antipathy, favor and disfavor, envy and joy, play a great part. I do not believe that true church officers will be impressed by these feelings or prepossession. Nevertheless, members of the presidency of our church must have the right to ask God for direction in dubious and important cases and be responsible for decisions.

By F. HENRY EDWARDS

Here are helpful foundation materials for fifty sermon topics chosen from among the fundamental doctrinal themes of our church faith and theology. They do not in any sense prescribe the character of the sermon nor limit the preacher. They make available to him, in most convenient form, the kind of texts and leading thoughts that he will need. This new revised edition is improved in many ways.

The Question Method

WHEN THE ANNOUNCEMENT of the restoration of "Question Time" to the Herald was made, Elder James E. Bishop wrote us, expressing appreciation of this decision. We are quoting from his letter below, as we believe that our "Question Time" readers will be interested in several points he makes in this letter; particularly where he points out that a large proportion of the New Testament concerns itself with questions and answers. He also points out the wisdom of using a panel, so that men of various training and experience can give the church their best thinking on subjects at issue.

I read with interest your plan to revive a question department in the Herald. I dismissed it from my mind, anticipating reading the first installment. Later, however, I mulled it over and thought of many things. Among them was the experience of preaching on the Town Hall Square in Leeds, England, under the tutorship of the late Brother Thomas Taylor. The price to be paid for addressing the public was the endurance of a question period, which was more in the nature of being cross-questioned, rather than hearing an honest question put for desired information.

Of necessity the answer had to be spontaneous, unrehearsed, and extemporaneous. To have time to deal with a question, to bring what there may be in it obscure or apparent, the light and shadow of the background permits a little play of art and the avoidance of dogmatism in which the answer is suggested before its statement in a cogent and logical manner.

An apt, pertinent question is an expression on the first level of purposeful thinking. That and the possible solution is a manifestation of functional intelligence. The extent of its human interest and service to society determines it to be that quality of intelligence which is the glory of God. For this reason, all great teachers have made prolific use of the question as a fundamental method of imparting knowledge.

The New Testament has questions and answers on nearly every page, ranging from the divine imperative, "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" to the human query, "How can a man be born again?" If questions and answers were deleted from the New Testament, nearly 90 per cent of its human appeal and divine disclosure would be lost. In its essence, such a method of teaching is basically democratic.

It is no wonder that the Saints' Herald, as well as other publications, uses a question and answer department. For Latter Day Saints with their unique message and unusual history, questions and answers have an important place.

The revival of the department permits its being based on a broad foundation. It would appear impossible for one mind to answer all the questions that may arise in the church, for the interests of its members range from simple questions of faith to the glories of the eternal world, from the fall of man to his redemption from historical incidents to trends in modern times, from matters of the remote past to recent archaeological discoveries. Such matters and more involve history, general science, theology, law, philosophy, ethics, and logic.

Many publications cater to the questioning mood, which, when honestly used, is only a method of inquiry and is a manifestation of that important instinct of curiosity. A leading woman's journal employed the late Dr. Lyman Abbott many years ago to answer questions, and more recently Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is doing the job. But the purpose of the editors of the Herald to have a staff of experienced churchmen to do the work should be more effective than leaving it to one mind.

As well as published answers, information is given to those who desire personal help.

It should be understood that the material is the property of the church. In the course of time, there may accumulate a rich harvest of thought that can be gone over advantageously in several respects.

Does Our Church Need a School of Theology?

By Harry A. Dennis

A department of opinion for debatable topics on which the editors do not take sides either for or against the writers. Other viewpoints will be welcomed.

Our church has always been a pioneer in the field of education. Its early history indicates very clearly the attention that was given to the establishment of schools. Advanced education has always been encouraged by the administration of the church; yet today as a church we have one two-year institution of higher learning. Graceland College has made and is making an outstanding contribution to the church in the field of liberal education, but there is limited knowledge to be gained in the field of religion. It would seem as if there is a need for an institution of higher learning where students could engage in a critical, historical, and psychological study of religion and religious ideas—an institution where our own church philosophy and practices would be analyzed and evaluated.

In December of 1832 and again in March of 1833 revelations were received commanding the organization to establish "A School of the Prophets," in which intensive study might qualify the ministry in a broader way and to a greater degree. This school actually existed for a time, and among the things that were taught were theology, religion, and Hebrew. This bit of history seems quite significant because it clearly indicates that God saw need for a well-prepared and educated ministry and that school was where this process could best take place.

Can the church expect members of the priesthood to become qualified to a great degree by tutoring themselves or being tutored by others who are one chapter ahead in the textbook? It seems quite obvious that the best and most effective learning takes place within institutions where there are competent instructors and adequate facilities for research and investigation. Without a doubt this is available to us in numerous institutions throughout our country, yet we must remember that ours is a distinctive religion and that we cannot study the Book of Mormon or the Doctrine and Covenants at any of these institutions. Many people say that we are too narrow in our religious thinking now, but it would seem that in a school of theology where there was an objective and subjective approach to religion this problem would take care of itself.

Does our church need a school of theology? What do you think?

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

(1) To what extent did God use the transgression of Adam and Eve to unfold his plan upon earth? (2) Would they have had children had they not transgressed? (3) Are the suppositions of Adam and Eve (Genesis 4:10, 11) based upon knowledge of the true situation? (4) Had they not been able to have children while yet in the garden, before transgression, would that have nullified God's plan? (5) Does it not require the two forces (good and evil) to freely permit man's use of free agency?

ANSWER:

(1) The divine purpose relating to the human race was determined in the mind of God before the foundation of the world; the plan of redemption was laid, which had in view the "fall of man" with all of its resultant conditions, including the spiritual and physical death, the coming of Christ into the world as its Redeemer, and the Resurrection (See Ether 1:77; Genesis 5:43; I Peter 1:19, 20; Mosiah 2:11; Alma 9:42, 49; and others). This reveals the foreknowledge of God, and the fact of his purposeful setting of things in Eden, whereby his far-reaching plan would begin to operate as originally designed. Adam and Eve were placed there in a state of innocence, not knowing how to distinguish between right and wrong, truth and error, having no experience, so that their judgment was as yet undeveloped. God had given them their agency, or free will, but as yet they could not appreciate it, nor had they learned how to use it. God had also permitted to come into that garden Satan, the fallen angel, who set up a deceptive plan in opposition to that of God, under circumstances which were to result in the transgression of the man and woman.

Concerning these things, Lehi said (and he spoke under divine inspiration), "Behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things." A consistent conclusion is that the events of Eden came about in accordance with the wise provisions of the Creator, who was bringing to pass the things which were essential to the development and perfection of man. Without the fall, it is said that man "never should have known good and evil," which would have been a distinct loss to him (Genesis 4:11).

Outside of Eden the Lord revealed himself and his plan of redemption to Adam, saying, "I am the Only Begotten of the Father from the beginning, henceforth and for ever; that as thou hast fallen, thou mayest be redeemed, and all mankind, even as many as will" (Ibid., 4:9). Adam, filled with the Holy Spirit, prophesied, saying, "Blessed be the name of God, for because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again, in the flesh I shall see God." The Lord had turned the transgression into a means of joy and redemption. Adam's eyes were opened, and he gained a needful knowledge which otherwise he could not have had. Out of the Edenic events came the unfolding of the great plan of human development, redemption, and eternal happiness, through Christ the Redeemer.

(2) No. Eve said, "Were it not for our transgression, we should never have had seed." Lehi held that if our first parents had remained in the garden of Eden, "they would have had no children" (II Nephi 1:113). There is no explanation or reason given, though we must conclude that God so ordained it for some good reason known to himself.

(3) The statements in these verses were evidently uttered from personal knowledge gained through the Holy Spirit, and were the mind of the Spirit, for it is said that "In that day, the Holy Ghost fell upon Adam," insomuch that the words which he spoke were prophetic words. Eve, also, who was present and heard all these things, must have shared in the divine blessings and expressed her mind with a heart overflowing with joy. What is spoken under the power of the Spirit is the mind of the Lord (Doctrine and Covenants 68:1).

(4) As suggested in the answer to question two, it was not God's purpose that children should be born in Eden. The time was not yet ripe, nor the setting adapted for their coming. So the lack of children in Eden in no degree frustrated God's purpose. Should we say, on the other hand, that if children had been born there it would have frustrated God's purpose, we would merely be assuming an impossibility, for what God wills shall not be, cannot be. What God brought about in Eden was according to his will, and every step had its necessary place in the working out of his eternal purposes. "All things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things."

(5) Yes. The principle of free agency can operate only upon the basis of freedom of choice between two opposites. Where there is no choice there is no agency, and where there is no agency there is no self-expression, no self-action, and under such a condition there could be no independence of being, no development, in fact no life (see Doctrine and Covenants 90:5). Lehi says that without the opposition essential to free choice man must have remained as dead, having no life (II Nephi 1:84). The Lord, in the passage just referred to in Doctrine and Covenants, holds that without the freedom of independent action there is no existence.

QUESTION:

Who were the scribes mentioned in the Bible?

ANSWER:

The Old Testament mentions two classes of scribes, or at least scribes who filled very different positions. One was a copyist of the sacred law, and perhaps at one time filled secretarial positions. The other appears to have performed certain military functions. From the time of Hezekiah, the scribes were a class of men who by training were learned in the law, and who were therefore considered the best interpreters of the law. Several centuries before Christ they had evolved an elaborate system for transcribing the sacred word. Every word, and even every letter, was counted, notations being made on each page.

In the time of Christ, the scribes had taken such liberties with the interpretation of the text that the Savior rebuked them for their temerity. At this time they had become eminent as teachers among the Jews, some of them being members of the powerful Sanhedrin. Because of their position and supposed learning, they were accorded the chief seats of honor at various functions and became a haughty and overbearing class of people. Their training for the position probably began at about the age of thirteen years and consisted largely of the quiz method of instruction.

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—At a district conference held in North Charleroi on July 9 and 10, the following recommendations for priesthood ordinations were made and approved: Norman Bernauer and Donald Ross, Jr., to the office of priest; and John Ross to the office of deacon, ordinations to be held later. Sunday's activities included a fellowship service at 9:30, a sermon at 11:00 by Seventy Merle Guthrie, a round table discussion at 2:00, followed by a musical service at 2:45.

A retreat was held by the district Zion's League, July 17 and 18, at the farm of Donald R. Ross. On Saturday afternoon, Seventy Merle Guthrie talked to the young men on "Preparation for the Priesthood," and Mrs. Cleona Guthrie talked to the young women on "Building Zion's Homes." The rest of the afternoon was used for recreation and in the evening there was a hay ride and campfire service. Sunday morning began with a fellowship service followed by talks, a song service, and preaching by Brother Guthrie. In the afternoon there were three more talks. The theme, "Youth Prepares for Zion," was carried throughout the retreat.—Reported by DOROTHY RAISBECK.

DENVER, COLORADO.—The Denver congregation recently enjoyed a subscription dinner at $5 per plate. Pastor Ward A. Hougas gave the address, and the local musicians offered a very fine supporting program. Over $700 was received from the effort. On July 9, another benefit dinner was enjoyed. A Chuck-Wagon Dinner was staged at Silver Craigs, the mountain summer home of Brother and Sister Edwin Fishburn. A large crowd turned out for the afternoon and evening in this most beautiful mountain canyon, twenty-five miles from Denver. Brother Fishburn is a movie enthusiast, and entertainment of all kinds ran riot. The net proceeds were very satisfactory. During the month of June, the morning services were broadcast from the church over radio station KFEL-FM. Pastor Hougas did the preaching. Response from radio listeners was very satisfactory and complimentary. More time is assured us in the near future.

GARDNER LAKE, MISSOURI.—The Zion Reunion was held July 17 to 24 inclusive with an average of 450 campers on the grounds. Seven hundred and fifty attended each Sunday. Members of the staff included C. V. Graham, pastoral supervisor in Independence; Glaude Smith, Carl Mesle, A. E. Stoft, and D. B. Sorden. There were twenty-five children's workers who cared for about 140 children each day. These workers have met once a month since last reunion to plan and prepare for this year. During reunion they met for a daily prayer service at 6:00 each morning. Four baptisms were held at the close of the week.

FLINT, MICHIGAN.—The Midland, Michigan, choir gave a concert at the Newell Street Church on May 22, and their pastor, Elder John Banks, was the evening speaker.

A farewell party was given in honor of Elder and Mrs. Harry Simons and family by both congregations of the Flint Branch in the lower auditorium of the Newell Street church on June 8, after the Wednesday night prayer service. About 175 attended. Brother and Sister Simons left the next day for their new field at Warrensburg, Missouri.

A reception for the new pastor, R. Melvin Russell, and family was given on June 15 at the Newell Street Church. Refreshments were served by the women's department.

On Children's Day, June 12, the following young people and children from the Newell Street congregation were baptized: Richard James Swift, Judy Rae, Patricia Jayne, and Joyce Irene Nickerson, James Austin Hough, Janet Ellen Horton, Harold Loyd Terrian, David Lyll Skinner, Stephen Duane Vanderkarr, Shelia Kay Rich, Gordon Homer Tower, Mary Nadine Hoover, Lee Alfred Weston, and Jacqueline Alice Peters. From the Baltimore Boulevard congregation the following were baptized: Larry Dean Wiltse, Carol Ann Henderson, Lewis Eugene Henderson, Marlene Jean Morningstar, and James Thad Vuncannon. All were confirmed on the following Wednesday evening.

The following children have been blessed during May and June: Stephen John Arthur, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Bennetts; Gilbert Gene, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Francis; Kay Louise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Foster Langdon; Harold Wendell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wiltse; Kathleen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Osborn; Roberta Claire, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Spencer; and Charles Kimbal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Swift.—Reported by ETTA YOUNG.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO.—Patriarch John R. Grice held a successful series of meetings from June 5 through June 19. Though the weather was extremely hot, attendance increased each evening.

On Saturday evening, a baptismal service was held at the Ottawa River. Six were baptized, two adults and four children. These newly baptized members were confirmed on the following Sunday morning by Brother Grice, Elders A. E. Caldwell and Wilfred Shute. A prayer service followed. Brother Grice gave ten patriarchal blessings during his stay in Ottawa.—Reported by GRACE LAMADELEINE.

SASKATOON, SASKATCHEWAN.—The Saskatchewan Reunion, under the leadership of District Missionary E. A. Ledsworth, was held in Saskatoon, July 9 to 17. Seventy E. Y. Hunker was instructor for the men, Sister Inez Vest taught the women, and Elder Elwin Vest was leader for the Zion's League. District Church School Director Erma Ward was in charge of all activities for the juniors. Bible study, music appreciation, and handwork occupied each forenoon. In the afternoon, the children played in the neighborhood paddling pool and playground center under supervision.

The reunion theme, stressed in sermons, classes, prayer services, and music was, "Witness for Christ." A fine spirit of consecration was in evidence throughout the reunion.

Called to the office of priest were Myron Cornish, Ambrose Skinner, Kenneth Fisher, and Peter Harder. Rudolph Cornish was called to the office of teacher, and William Hall to the office of deacon. Ordinations were assigned to be cared for in their home branches.

Five children were baptized in the font of the Saskatoon church by Elder W. J. Cornish: Helen Greig, Lily Mae Twombly, Marvin and Irvine Lester and Raymond Hodgins. Confirmations were later cared for.

Officers elected for the coming year by the North Saskatchewan District were: president, Elder E. A. Ledsworth, with Elders E. L. Bowerman and J. A. Gendron as assistants; secretary, Mrs. J. A. Gendron; treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Beckman; church school director, Mrs. E. A. Ward; Zion's League leader, Howard Fisher; director of music, Mrs. C. E. Diggle; nonresident pastor, Elder W. J. Cornish; publicity, Elder G. A. Jordan; corresponding secretary, Amy Powell; women's leader, Dora Carter.—Reported by LOTTIE CLARK DIGGLE.

LANGWITH, ENGLAND.—The King's Birthday Honours included the award of the British Empire Medal (Civil Division) to Mr. J. Holmes, The Chalet, The Drive, Langwith, as an appreciation of his services to the Coal Industry. Brother Holmes has been a mining contractor for over thirty-seven years. He is a counselor to Bishop Trapp of England.

GRAVELLY HILL, ENGLAND.—Women from all branches of the Southern District of the English Mission met at the Gravelly Hill chapel on June 18 and 19. District Women's Leader Gertrude Allen was in charge. Doctor Roy A. Cheville, visiting in Europe from Graceland College, was the evening speaker on Saturday and Sunday evenings. On Sunday morning a prayer service was held under the direction of Pastor Musslow and District President Frank Fry. A synopsis of the activities of each branch was given by representatives on Sunday afternoon. Music was arranged by Mrs. Nellie Schofield. The women were urged to study and to work systematically.

An unusual feature of the rally was that of the catering. This was undertaken by a group of branch men under the supervision of Frank Arrowsmith. Junior boys acted as waiters. No ladies were permitted to enter the kitchen.

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.—On July 3, during the morning service at the Pasadena Branch, Richard Frederick Davis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick M. Davis, was blessed, Elders Warren K. McElwain and Charles Skinner officiating.

GULF STATES DISTRICT.—An average of one hundred women attended the classes led by Mrs. W. Wallace Smith at the Gulf States District Annual Reunion held July 8-17 at Brewton, Alabama. The booklet, Each One Win One, by Apostle D. T. Williams, was used as a basis for the discussions. This theme was adopted by the women for their year's work.

Other contributions to the reunion by the district women's department, led by Mrs. Lula Jernigan, were the floral arrangements for each day and the meals served in the reunion dining room. Mrs. Martha Alford was chairman of the decoration committee and Mrs. Eunice Sellers was supervisor of the dining room.

The project for the year 1948-49 was the erection of a nursery for the reunion grounds. At a cost of $600 this nursery, which is valued at $1,000, was made possible through donations both in material and labor. One of the objectives for the ensuing year is the completion of a memorial quilt which will have embroidered on it the names of all persons attending the 1949 reunion, such quilt to be sold or possibly given to the missionary cabin.

For the past several reunions, the district women have conducted a bazaar on the grounds with needlework, children's clothing, etc. For the reunion of 1950 it is planned to add home-canned foods, notions, and other articles.

A contribution to the reunion which added much to its success was that of the music department, directed by Mrs. Heien McCall. She was assisted by Mrs. Alice Chesworth, Mrs. Anna Mae Lavinghouze, and others in presenting appropriate and beautiful music programs for each service.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—The July 21 issue of one of the local newspapers held in the "50 YEARS AGO—1899" column the following: "A reunion of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints opened at Ramona Park here. Tents were erected by those who intended to remain over the entire period of the two-week reunion."

An Enlarging Concept of God

By BLANCHE MESLEY

I WANT to talk about a greater understanding of the mind and will and purpose of God, and by way of background, introduction, and illustration, point to the spectacular advance in material things. When you think for a minute of some of the vast strides in the scientific field, if you think about some of the tremendous advances in chemistry in these last hundred years, almost unbelievable things have been accomplished. It is a modern miracle that plastics can be made of casein. Think about food and all that goes into our daily diet. We are very much indebted to our scientists. Think of the tremendous advantages in the field of dyeing and how it affects our home life and the clothes that we wear.

Consider the field of medicine. Some of our modern ideas of medicine are wonderful. And how thankful we should be, not only for American, but for all scientists of this generation, and for sulfa, penicillin, and other drugs whereby millions of people, otherwise condemned to death, need not die. It is rather overpowering, the strides that have been made in the field of medicine.

Take the field of surgery. I went to see Brother Carmichael at the Sanitarium, and imagine my astonishment to see him in a wheel chair. His eyes twinkled, as they so often do, as he told me, "They sawed off a little here and scraped off a little there and stuck in a bit of metal and screwed me together and here I am." Sitting up in a wheel chair with a broken bone in his hip!

Think of the cornea operation, whereby people will their eyes to blind people, so that when they die their eyes can be transferred to the sightless. It is marvelous. It is uncanny, just as radar is uncanny. I still don't understand it. It is magic. And I am filled with astonishment every time I see an airplane go over, weighing thousands of pounds, and yet that airplane keeps up in the air and keeps navigating. Just think what happened this last week! A plane took off from Newfoundland and landed in Britain without a human finger touching the mechanism.

The end is not yet, for day after day we read of new discoveries that are being performed by these miracle men of science.

Yet the great need for mankind is not for more advanced scientific data. The great need is not for quicker transportation, nor more commerce, nor greater industrialization. We could go on right through all these fields. Man's need is not for material advancement. Man's great need, his paramount need, is for God and what God alone can do for mankind—God who will give purpose to all this scientific discovery; who will give stability to our lives; who will give courage to our lives and help us to see the beauty and worth of it all. This is man's great need.

If man's understanding of God, if man's commitment to the will and purpose of God, had kept pace with his scientific developments, how different this world would be. At the general conference I quoted the words of an English scientist. This is what was said twenty-six years ago when he was lecturing to the London Society of Science and Chemistry. You might find it difficult to believe if I just told you, so I am going to read his own words:

Today (1923) science has reached a point from which it is possible to look out on a world full of energy and power, compared with which, gas and steam and electricity are like the toys of a child's nursery. We are on the threshold of knowledge which will enable us to rid humanity of four fifths of the diseases that scourge it; to lift from its shoulders the crushing burden of its toil; to wrest from the earth riches beyond the dreams of avarice; to make of the world something like the garden of Eden.

This man was a hard-thinking, cool-headed scientist; and yet here is the vision that man holds out as a possibility in this world. If we could remove four fifths of its diseases, if we could remove the sordid struggle for existence, we could release man for the more spiritual aspects of his life. So much of our time is consumed in making a living, and so little time for the building of the kingdom. We have within our grasp to give to the world power beside which gas and electricity will be as toys in a child's nursery. If our knowledge and concept of God had kept pace with these scientific discoveries, what a different world this would be. Science has taken these powers and given us famine where there was plenty; given us war where there was peace; given us sorrow and bereavement where there were joy and happiness and companionship. Man's concept of God has not kept pace with his material growth. Some of our international treaties would be utterly impossible, some of our national enactments would be repudiated with shame, if our concept of God measured up with our understanding and use of scientific data. And so I ask, What is your concept of God? What is your understanding of God? All too often our idea is inadequate to the task that we are facing. We speak of the God of our fathers, but I don't think this vision is sufficient for our job today. In the present-day problems and present-day situations and present-day pressing needs, our great need is for an understanding of God equal to our heavy demands.

Let's look down through the ages and see if we do measure up. Think of the Israelites. Their understanding of God far outstepped the surrounding tribes. Some of their neighbors had so many idols that even a cat was worshiped. There were more gods in Egypt than you could shake a stick at. But Moses taught, "The Lord our God is one God." What a tremendous advance over the gods of Egypt.

Now let's jump to New Testament times and think about Peter. His idea of God was very, very circumscribed. He thought of God as just a God of the Hebrews. How very hard for him to realize that he was God of the Gentiles, too.

Only a few years ago this happened in this great and glorious country, in this land that is called the land of the free. Marian Anderson was denied the right to sing at Constitution Hall, not because she is not a noble woman—because she is; she was denied simply because the color of her skin is different from yours and mine. The Hebrews worshiped a racial God. It took a special vision to break down Peter's prejudices. Has our concept of God changed very much when a prominent group of people treat an accomplished Negro that way?

I frequently ride on the bus, and more times than I can tell I have seen people stand up rather than sit beside a Negro. The God that we worship loved the whole world. You remember the phrase in the gospel of John: "God so loved the WORLD." No "ifs" or "ands" or "buts" about that. Paul told us many years ago, "God has made of one blood all nations." You and I have accepted that as an Eastern metaphor, and we come along today and discover that chemically there is no difference between a Negro's blood and mine. God has made of one blood all nations to dwell upon the earth. But how about our having the courage to go out and live it? We cannot preach the gospel if we have racial prejudices.

But I am only an individual, you say, and a mighty small one. An individual counts tremendously because individuals group together and make cities. We are called of God to do a big work. The opinion, the conviction, the conduct of the individual matter tremendously. Don't ever fool yourself into thinking that you don't amount to anything. God loves you individually, too. And whether or not we like it, we are going to be held responsible for what the Lord put into our hands to do. It matters tremendously what Christian people as groups believe about God. We realize there are many people who look to Christians for guidance and leadership, especially in time of crisis. And do you know whose concept of God is the most important in the whole world? Latter Day Saint concept is the most important in the world, and I will tell you why. Because Latter Day Saints have pledged themselves to the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth. We have committed ourselves to it. As members of this church we commit ourselves to the establishment of the kingdom of GOD on earth; not the kingdom of Art, nor the kingdom of Music, not the kingdom of National Prestige, nor the kingdom of Science, nor the kingdom of Culture, that some of our people give their time and allegiance to. These have their place; but believe me, their place is not primary. "Seek ye first to establish the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and the concept and the understanding and the commitment of Latter Day Saints to the will and purpose of God is of highest importance to themselves, to their church, and to the world. A wise man once said that the nation marches forward on the feet of its little children. This church marches forward on your feet and mine, and if we go on laggard feet how the building of the kingdom lags. It matters tremendously to you, to your church, to your nation, and to a world that is hungry for an adequate concept of God. Don't ever think it doesn't matter what your idea of God is. It matters.

Now in one article, what can we say about God? Very little. Very little can be said in such limited time about God, but I would like to draw your thinking to two aspects of God that always move me very deeply. Both have to do with beginnings. The first is in the Old Testament and the other in the New. In the beginning God created the world, or the earth, or whatever you like to call it—God the Creator, at work making order out of chaos, bringing light where there was darkness, peace where there was strife. I don't care what you read or in what language you read it, you never will find anything more inspiring than that account of the creation of this world.

One of the grandest parts of that story is that God's work of creation has not stopped. It is still going ahead. We are called to be laborers with God. This great God who created the earth and sky and all that is in them asks you and me to be laborers with him.

In the world around us we see what man can do touched by the finger of His genius: the Edisons, the Burbanks, the Beethovens, and all the long list of worthy people, still working with God in the creative business. You and I see God at work in the lives of people, making new men out of old—in the lives of Paul and Peter. Think back in your own experience and see how God the Creator has been working in your life and in the lives of friends, neighbors, and church people.

I am deeply grateful for some of the experiences that I have had in this gospel: when I have seen sick people healed; when I have heard people sing in unknown tongues by the Spirit of God—a beautiful thing; when I have witnessed the giving of the spirit of prophecy. Sober things, all of them, not to be taken lightly. Yet, precious as these experiences are, my greatest testimony to the divinity of this work is the power of God to change lives. You and I have seen this creative genius of God working in the lives of our everyday people. We have seen quick-tempered people become patient; mean become noble; arrogant people become humble. Still working in this world, this God of majesty and power and glory says to you and to me: "Let us be laborers together—you and me." We could go on and on about this creative genius of God. I want you to do the thinking and applying.

I would like to turn your attention to the second aspect of God that is recorded in the beginning of the Lord's Prayer: "Our Father who art in heaven." Nobody but Jesus himself could give us that marvelous prayer. All that is best in fatherhood is gathered up. All that is best in human fatherhood, OUR Father. And once again we have this racial question entering in. Here we see fatherhood at its best. An unchangeable God. A God on whom I can rely. Not here today and gone tomorrow. Seed time and harvest shall not fail. This God of ours is an unchangeable God. Fatherhood at its best. This Father is capable of deep and abiding affection. Jesus, who knew the Father better than anyone else, gives us the wonderful story of the prodigal son who went out and spent all he had in riotous living—the modern phrase would be "wine, women, and song"—and when he came back to his father, his father ran to meet him. A deep and abiding love.

You and I are not likely to spend our money in riotous living. We are not likely to waste our lives as did the younger of the two sons. But the chances are that we are very much like the elder son. He was narrow minded, and I expect there are people in this congregation who are narrow minded. He was arrogant; he had always done right. He was utterly incapable of rejoicing over another's happiness. Instead of rejoicing when his younger brother came back, he went off in a pout. Have you ever done that yourself? But here is this elder brother guilty of some of these obnoxious sins of the spirit. And yet, do you know what his father said to him? "All that I have is thine." There is an abiding love for you. When I know I have been mean and arrogant and have envied other people and have been utterly incapable of rejoicing over others' good fortune, I have marveled how the Lord could look at me and love me. But there is this deep and abiding love of God. No matter how foolish and stupid and utterly unworthy, he still says, "All that I have is yours; try to be a worthy daughter or son."

As we grow older we lack two things, I think. We lack somebody who is brave enough to discipline us. As we are children growing up, our good parents discipline us one way or another. But here I am a grown woman, and I have no mother or father to discipline me. All sorts of nasty bumps of character show up, and no one tells me how hateful they are. But the Lord will discipline me if I will let him. Sometimes he will discipline me in a prayer meeting, and nobody knows that he has laid the rod on my shoulder. Sometimes in the advice or the frank opinion of a friend. And pray God you and I will always be wise enough to take it and not resent it. You and I need that discipline.

I am afraid of getting old. Everybody is so nice to an old lady! They'll give you the most comfortable chair in the house, and if your legs are rather short, somebody will put a footstool in front of you. And if that is not comfortable, someone else gives you a cushion for your back. People are so nice. If you're on a bus, they will let you sit down while they stand up—some of the time—if you are a nice old lady. Then we become as soft as jellyfish! But to the end of our days the good Lord will discipline us if we will let him. We need that discipline.

Another thing we miss as we grow older is a sense of protection. It is so lovely to have a mother and father to turn to. When life gives us a rough bit of road, we can run home and find understanding and sympathy. As we grow older we can't do that. People are coming to us; and Jesus, who knew God better than anybody, said the very hairs of your head are numbered. Not one

A Faith for Tomorrow — By JOHN C. THOMAN

THE DINNER APPOINTMENT had been made two weeks before the strike was called, and when the day arrived Superintendent Jones left the labor conference for the home of Rudolph, his crane operator, knowing that he would be expected.

He was tired and felt some misgiving, but he found the neat frame cottage at last and entered the yard. Nicky Rudolph, his friend, met him in the doorway with a wide smile and a hearty handclasp. "Glad you came, Boss," he said. "I thought maybe . . ." Before he could finish his wife appeared, was proudly introduced, and taking Mr. Jones' hat ushered him into their neat little sitting room at the front of the house.

"Like Nicky, I am glad you've come, Mr. Jones. Supper will be on the table in a little while. Please make yourself at home here while I go back to the kitchen."

Stephen Jones smiled at Nick and seated himself as his host bustled about picking up newspapers from the floor. Finally he too sat down.

Both men were deeply conscious of something ironic in their present situation. Nick spoke first, and he carefully avoided the subject of the day's negotiations with the labor leaders. He knew that if they had been successful he would already have heard the good news. "Well, Boss," he said somewhat uncertainly, "how are things at the plant?" He was trying to speak casually, but beneath his words there was the feeling of much left unsaid. As he replied, Mr. Jones was equally careful. "Not too bad, Nick. We are keeping a few plant watchmen and a full crew of firemen to watch the banked furnaces. When you walk through the plant it isn't too crowded—except with unfilled orders. Nick, to tell the truth, in our conferences with the stewards, we aren't getting anywhere at all." He paused for a moment. "Honestly, Nick, what do you say? Have you any suggestions?" Nick shook his head silently and then spoke, "No suggestions, Boss."

AT THIS MOMENT Mrs. Rudolph interrupted to say dinner was ready. Mr. Jones learned in the next few moments that dinner was an event in the Rudolph home. To begin with the room to which he was led by his hostess was graciously lighted with candles that were placed at either end of the long table. And there were flowers too from the back yard garden. The table was set with service for ten and the children, who now stood behind their chairs, showed mute evidence of having been scrubbed well for the occasion. After their parents and Mr. Jones were seated, they scrambled into their places at a signal from their mother.

Mr. Jones was soon trying to get acquainted with a six-year-old young lady named Rita when he noticed an expectant silence had fallen over the little group. He realized that Mrs. Rudolph, whom he could just see at the far end of the table, was looking at him somewhat anxiously. She was speaking to him but her eyes were fixed upon her husband's face. "Mr. Jones," she said earnestly, "we have so much to be thankful for, so to God my Nicky gives thanks each meal. If you permit, we do that now." Mr. Jones was trying to word a fittingly gracious reply when Rita on his right piped up, "And, Mama, we hold hands while Papa prays," she said. "Always we hold hands."

Mrs. Rudolph smiled and nodded, and Mr. Jones felt the small hand of Rita close about his own, even as Nick's hand grasped his other firmly. He stole a glance around the table; what he saw was an unbroken chain apparently established by this remarkable family custom.

SLOWLY, SILENTLY, as the heads bowed, Nick still holding his boss' hand began his prayer of thanks: "For life, for food, for protection from unseen dangers. . . ." The prayer was brief and sincere, but Stephen Jones had time to think of Barbara, his wife, and her club work, and his two daughters and son whom he seldom saw these days. He thought of his father whose efforts had built the plant which was now his responsibility, his life, and his stewardship. Unbidden, his mind called back the events and scenes of the last few days—the wrangling, the bitterness, the sickening sense of defeat and frustration. He could see again the circle of grim-faced union stewards on the other side of the table not a single one of whom had seemed to him tolerant or fair ten days now and still no nearer an agreement than in the first hour. Stewards they were called, one to each department of his father's plant, and they, too, had a stewardship—a responsibility to stockholders, to partners, to his father, and to himself. The prayer was suddenly over, and Mrs. Rudolph broke the silence. "Please, Mr. Jones, you must feel at home Nicky, pass Mr. Jones the chicken and potatoes."

Stephen Jones felt the little hand of Rita still warm around his own, and as he ate, his thoughts continued to dwell upon his problems of the morrow. Somehow the stewards would have to be dealt with. If only there could be added to their numbers one more man who could give him confidence in their point of view. He turned and looked at his host with a new understanding and a new respect. Somehow he knew that tomorrow's problems would be solved in the spirit of this new fellowship.

Home and Happiness

By MARIE GOSLINE

MAKING A HOME and making a marriage work are both great adventures. They are adventures which must be worked at every day. Love, laughter, and purpose in life must go into every home. Happiness in marriage has little to do with possessions. It depends entirely upon becoming well-adjusted mentally to the conditions which surround us. It depends entirely upon our "making hay" with what we have. People who are mentally mature, people who are emotionally well-balanced, people who—like our grandparents—have learned to adjust themselves to situations as they exist are not crowding the divorce courts today.

Happiness in the home has little to do with geography. One cannot always choose a spot and say, "Here—this is where I sit for the rest of my life." Once I met an oil man's wife who told me she had been moved eight times in three months! The place is of little consequence. All that matters is one's mental attitude. You can make a living hell out of a palatial home on Long Island or a heaven out of a tiny shack in Garden Center.

I know of one Latter Day Saint home in which the parents and children have learned to make the best with what they have. This home may not sound ideal to you—perhaps it isn't ideal—but here, while the dishes go unwashed and the beds unmade, half a dozen children are living in a happy, wholesome atmosphere. That is the most important thing after all. When these children grow up and think of home, they won't remember it as a free-for-all where there was continual bickering and quarreling. They won't remember a scolding mother and an irritable father. They will remember only that here in this spot called home was happiness—the two words to them will be synonymous.

WHEN I THINK of homes, the happiness in them, and what they mean to people, my thoughts always go to a little estate in the wilderness—just a garden and a log cabin called "Ben-My-Chree." We had gone nearly 100 miles north of Skagway, Alaska, on a tiny train which ran parallel to the old Klondike trail of '98. Finally we reached Carcross, just south of Whitehorse, where we boarded a river boat. It carried us up a branch of the Yukon across Lake Bennett and Lake Tagish. Here, at the far end of Lake Tagish, a wharf about a half-mile long jutted out. Our boat tied up to it, and through a cool, soft rain we made our way to the end of the wharf. There, bounded on one side by the lake, and on the other three sides by snow-covered mountains and glaciers, was the little garden. Flowers were blooming in profusion, vegetables were growing, and there was warmth and cheer in a little log cabin.

This quaint hut had been built and the garden planted by a couple from England. These two people worked side by side and found that marriage was nothing but a great adventure. The man had come in '97; his wife followed him over the long trail in '98—on foot! Only two people in that cold, quiet north, but they had learned to "make hay" with what they had. Only two people, but they put all the culture and refinement they had known into this little log hut with the Union Jack and Stars and Stripes on its walls.

All at once I realized why these two people who had lived in this vastness for so long had found the secret of happiness. They had stayed in love with living. They had become mentally adjusted to their surroundings. Just as I started to leave the cabin I noticed a little slip of paper pinned to the wall. To myself I read the verses of "God is love, His mercy brightens." Here was one home in which love, laughter, and purpose in life were the forces which held it together.

Our Spending

It has been said that last year we spent:

- 15 billions for crime.
- 12 billions for national defense.
- 10 billions for liquor.
- 7 billions for foreign relief.
- 7 billions for automobiles.
- 7 billions for recreation.
- 4 billions for public education.
- 2 billions for cosmetics.
- 2 billions for chewing gum.
- 1½ billions for religion and public welfare.

New Horizons

mandment given by the early leaders of the church, they moved westward in response to that command and established branches until today we have established ourselves in over 800 branches of the church, with organized stakes and districts set up to provide efficient ministry to our membership and to serve as nuclei for the work of evangelization and Zion organization. We have as resources, general and local officers, and quorums of the church which were sustained by the conference; we have an appointee list of full-time men under appointment of more than 140; we have strengthened our financial position in the setting up of a bulwark of reserves which has made possible the sending of men to missions abroad, with the assurance that the church will give sustained support to their endeavors, and which assures a continuous program, as well, of assistance to the worthy poor; we have a standing ministry of the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods growing in the power of ministry.

All of these and others constitute our resources, not the least of which is the membership of the church, for in the final analysis the membership is the church. These resources, real and potential, are greater than any of those possessed by the church in its beginning, and with all these real and potential resources, we ask the question, Dare we shrink from the task which is ours? Let us rather look forward to the building of the New Jerusalem, looking forward in faith, but in that looking, though we may be conscious of the verity of the promise of that city which lies beyond, recognize that as we look on past into those things which are eternal, there are these practical problems toward which we must face today—the practical problems of building a new society, a Zion, a Zion which is to be built here upon the earth, and which demands our constant, our consistent attention, our faith, our devotion, and our sacrifices. May we then look forward with hope and anticipation, squaring our shoulders, and with faces toward God, assume the responsibilities of the present and of the immediate future, and proceed with the building of our city, Zion, that there may be given a ministry to a world in distress, and look for light and power and guidance from on high.

sparrow falls but what the Father knows. Do you know that when we are treading a rough road, God does know all about it? One of my most treasured memories is the feel of my father's hand. His hands were unusually soft. He had a corn where he pushed his plane, but that was the only rough spot on his hands. I remember time and time again we used to take long walks together. I would slip my little hand in Dad's big one, and cold nights it was warm and soft and protecting and comforting and strengthening, and there was that sense of security. I was in Australia when he died, and the first thing that struck my heart was: I can never slip my hand in his again, for that sense of security and strength and comfort. That happens to all of us, of course. But God our Father never fails us. No matter how old we may live to be he will be there, and if only we will let him he will take our hand in his and lead us over the rough spots. You know he will.

Our Father is a God of justice, incorruptible, who sees fairly and judges wisely, and yet he is a God of endless mercy. That doesn't mean he is soft. He is not soft. You can't fool God. But he knows, too, some of the difficulties against which you work. Against the queerness of your bad disposition; against all the circumstances which surround us. He knows the temptations which beset you. He is a God of infinite mercy. He knows why we stumble, but he helps us to get up again. We could go on and on about the love of our Heavenly Father. Was there ever a more beautiful phrase—"Our Father who art in heaven"?

I think I mentioned this before. In every language there are words that sort of give strength to the way and the circumstance under which they are used. I am very fond of the Twenty-third Psalm: "The Lord is my Shepherd. I shall not want." In the French version they say: "The Eternal One is my Shepherd." Our Father. Not soft. Not looking on sin with the least degree of allowance, but ever-loving with a deep and abiding love, capable of great mercy and great tenderness.

We are talking about the greatness of God—of this God whom we worship. When we might have such a wonderful understanding of God, when we might, you and I, tie up our puny strength and our circumscribed lives to his will and his purpose, don't you think it is foolish that we are content with anything less? Called to be Saints of God. Called to be co-laborers, having pledged ourselves to build his kingdom, why don't you and I put aside the things that do so easily beset us and press towards the mark of our high calling, the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth?

CHAMBERS.—Frederick J., was born April 22, 1870, and died July 27, 1949, at Toronto, Ontario. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 29, 1907, and remained a faithful member until death. He held the office of teacher. Mrs. Chambers preceded him in death eleven years ago.

Surviving are two sons: Edward of Niagara Falls, New York; and Fred, Jr., of Toronto; two daughters: Jean and Mrs. Reg. Parker, both of the home; a brother, Edward, of Beamville, Ontario; four sisters: Mrs. Lena Perry of Macon, Georgia; Mrs. Elizabeth Fel of Lindsey; Mrs. Flora Jewell and Mrs. Clara Hicks of Toronto; eight grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Elders John F. Sheehy and B. H. Hewitt conducted the funeral service. Burial was in Toronto.

CRAWFORD.—Eugene James, Sr., son of James Clark and Sarah Alice Hanely Crawford, was born January 1, 1882, in LeMayne, Ohio, and died June 16, 1949, in the Escambia General Hospital at Pensacola, Florida. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 5, 1941, and remained a faithful member the rest of his life.

He is survived by his wife, Carrie Rudd Crawford; six sons: Floyd Clark, Joseph Ralph, Warren Richard, and John Leslie of Pensacola; Alvin Lee and Eugene James, Jr., of Antwerp, Ohio; six daughters: Mrs. Ellen Adele Dungan, Mrs. Sarah Grace Jackson, and Miss Winona Crawford of Pensacola; Mrs. Hazel Mae Duckworth of Huttonsville, West Virginia; Mrs. Doris Irene Martin of Haines, Alaska; and Mrs. Bessie Rosemary Byrd of Amarillo, Texas; three sisters: Mrs. Mary Erter of Antwerp; Mrs. Lucy Hughes of Hillsdale, Michigan; and Mrs. Ada Goshorn of Ft. Wayne, Indiana; and fifteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church, Elders Heman Cooper and James Cooper officiating. Interment was in the Bayview Memorial Park.

WEBSTER.—Daniel Mack, was born on April 3, 1949, at Painesville, Ohio, and died June 10, 1949, in Painesville. He was blessed by Pastor Harry Freeman and Elder Raymond Ashenurst on April 24 at the Painesville Reorganized Church. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Webster, his paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Mack Daniel Webster; his maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Merle Wilcox; and two brothers: Darryl and David.

BECK.—Dorothy Mildred, daughter of Richard Lee and Clara Grace Anderson, was born September 27, 1905, near Blair, Nebraska, and died July 10, 1949, at the Independence Sanitarium. Following the death of her mother, as a child she made her home in Independence with her grandmother, Mrs. Lovina McEvers. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on February 4, 1915, and was graduated from William Chrisman High School in Independence in 1923. On July 15, 1925, she married John Henry Beck. At the time of her death she was employed as a stenographer at The Auditorium.

She is survived by two daughters: Miss Joyce Lee Beck and Miss Grace Ellen Beck, and a son, Donald Quincy Beck, all of the home; three brothers: Dale Anderson, Wellington, Missouri; Kenneth Anderson, Casper, Wyoming; and Darrell Anderson, Buckner, Missouri; and two sisters: Mrs. L. B. Crull and Mrs. W. R. Crull of Independence. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Glaude A. Smith and R. L. McFarlane at the Speaks Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LETTINGTON.—William Thomas, son of Edward and Elizabeth Lettington, was born in Bromley, England, on January 26, 1885, and died near Indianola, Iowa, on July 15, 1949. He came to the United States when he was twenty and was united in marriage to Ollie Bell Byers two years later on December 8, 1907. Nine children were born to them. Both he and his wife were baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1907 and remained faithful members since that day. At the time of his death he was employed by the Green Colonial Furnace Company in Des Moines, Iowa.

He is survived by his wife; five sons: Russell, Chester, William A., Clyde, and Dean of Des Moines; four daughters: May Browning of Monroe, Iowa; Wilma Halterman of Indianola, Iowa; Thelma Nyswonger of Gladstone, Oregon; and Ruth Ritchey of West Linn, Oregon; a brother, Walter Lettington of Indianola; a sister, Rose Woodward of Kent, England; and twelve grandchildren.  BATTLE OF THE BOTTLE

From the cradle to the grave, life for some people is a battle with a bottle. In infancy, it's milk or formula. In the middle years, it's pop, or something stronger. In old age, it's medicine. Some folk never escape the struggle.

 AN OBITUARY

Member, John Poor.—Born into the kingdom of God at his baptism. Nurtured in the faith by his pastor and by the Saints. Was offered opportunities for service but declined them under the plea that he was not ready, that he had much to learn. Because he did not serve, he lost interest in the gospel and forgot to pray. He listened to gossip and participated in unjust criticism of other members. Then his attendance at church declined, and after a while he seldom came. He was enticed by worldly pleasure and a love of money to neglect his spiritual development, and a long illness of the soul set in, from which he never recovered. He died spiritually when he withdrew his name from the books of the church. No funeral services have been held because of no visible corpse to be buried, but interment of the soul will take place following Judgment Day, probably in hell.

 TRANSPORTATION

Big H's car was having an operation, so he rode a bike. "It was much easier at fifteen than it is at fifty," he said. "So much more to push; so much less to push it with."

 SONG OF THE PHARISEE

"The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are."—Luke 18:11.

A happy man, the Pharisee.
"I'm very pleased," he said, "with me.
I'm never wrong, I'm always right,
Because I'm Nordic, male, and white.
Thank God I was no woman born,
Not poor, nor colored, held in scorn.
I'm proud of my exterior,
A recognized superior.
Of everything I am a critic,
Religion, culture, things politic,
Writing, art, and music, too,
All that may come in my purview.
Forsooth, I ne'er do anything
That could a word of censure bring.
I never preach, I never pray,
I never have a word to say
Except to stand and criticize
What others do, what others prize.
If you would ever perfect be,
Become, like me, a Pharisee!"

 BOOK SALES

Mary Katherine Hastings, well known to many church people for her work in the Herald Book Shop, has returned from two southern reunions with a fine experience of service in the distribution of church and educational literature. She was at the Texas Reunion at Bandera, and at the Gulf States Reunion at Brewton, Alabama. In both places people purchased generously at the book store, and missionaries are gratified that books have gone into homes in a volume not possible where they had to order by mail. Being able to see and handle the books, and to purchase them immediately, has helped the people. Sister Hastings reports splendid experiences in sermons, prayer meetings, and personal contacts at both reunions.

OUR OWN SLIDE SET

The Gift of the Holy Spirit
by the
Laying on of Hands

This slide set has been carefully edited and prepared to aid persons in making a clear explanation of the fourth principle of our gospel. It shows, too, how our church conforms to the church structure, doctrine, and government set forth in the New Testament.

The slides depict each way that the Gift of the Holy Spirit is received through the laying on of hands—confirmation of newly baptized members, ordination of the priesthood, the blessing of children, and the administration of the sick.

Leonard Lea has written the manual which is provided without charge (one copy) with each slide set.

Last Call for Graceland

With the opening of Graceland's fifty-fifth year only days away, there is still room for several more last-minute applicants for admission.

New students are scheduled to arrive on September 8. Up until that date Graceland will receive applications.

Here is the procedure for the last-minute applicant:

1. Write, wire, phone, or see R. Edwin Browne at Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, stating your intention to enroll.
2. He will send you (or hand you) the necessary application papers, which are to be filled out and returned to him immediately.
3. Contact your high school principal and ask him to send your transcript of credits to Graceland College immediately.
4. As soon as Graceland has received your completed application papers and your transcript, you will receive immediate notification of action by the Student Selection Committee—by letter, wire, or phone.
5. If accepted, you will come to Graceland and begin the greatest year of your life.

This year, most persons who have applied for admission to Graceland have been accepted. If you have waited to apply for admission, this is the year and now is the time.

Introducing...

CHARLES R. HIELD (page 5) was born August 11, 1896, at Janesville, Wisconsin. After being graduated from high school at Janesville, he finished two years in Graceland and later received B.A. and M.A. degrees from the University of Wisconsin.

He became superintendent of schools in Pleasanton, Iowa, in 1918, but his teaching career was interrupted by Army service in the first World War. In 1922-23 he became an instructor in Spanish at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

On August 7, 1923, he married Nita Maud Vandell at Pleasanton, Iowa. That fall he became superintendent of schools at Moorhead, Iowa, where he remained for four years.

From 1927 to 1938 he was instructor in Spanish at New York University in New York City. At that time he was called to the apostleship and has been in charge of the following missions in turn: Eastern, Southern, Northwestern, and now the Southwestern. His present assignment covers Western Colorado to California, and Hawaii.

The Hields have two children living: Lois Evelyn, 18; Charles Robert, 16. A daughter, Shirley Jean, died June 7, 1941.

BETH LOUIE (SKANK) DAVIS (page 12) lives in Henderson, Iowa. She was married to Alva G. Davis in 1920, and has been a widow since 1942.

Her hobbies are writing, crocheting, and cooking. She is president of the Community Library Club, is historian for the Southwest Iowa District, and teaches a church school class. Her nearest branch is Carson, Iowa, but no transportation is available, so she feels quite isolated. She is telephone operator for the Henderson Telephone Company.

JENNIE ZELMA ELLIOTT (page 8) was born April 30 1890. She lives in the Catherine Hale Home in Kansas City, Missouri, and was educated at the Illinois School for the Blind, Jacksonville, Illinois.

She was baptized March 27, 1948, and is a member of Central Church, also a member of the Woman's Club. Her hobby is writing, and she types her own articles. She says: "I feel the need of the books of the church in Braille. I would like to read them myself, and other Braille-reading members of the church feel the same. I have had little or no sight since I was four years old." A previous article entitled "Christmas Reverie" appeared in the Herald of December 25, 1948.

News & Notes

NEW PERSONNEL

Mrs. Sarah Van Fleet Hoss, after her recent marriage, has taken leave of her duties in the Department of Religious Education. Apostle Reed Holmes announces that Miss Connie Strick, who is active in the Spring Branch congregation, assumed the work on July 25 done by Mrs. Hoss.

NAUVOO REUNION

Apostle D. T. Williams reports a good reunion at Nauvoo, Illinois, on the banks of the Mississippi River in July. Among the members of the staff, besides Apostle Williams, were Elder D. J. Williams, who made arrangements, Elder Cecil Ettinger, Patriarch Ray Whiting, Bishop L. Wayne Updike, Mrs. Arvilla Propst (in charge of children), and Miss B. Mildred Nelson from Ames, Iowa, who taught a class on nutrition with emphasis on the Word of Wisdom. One feature of particular interest to the children was an improvised wading pool made from 2x10" boards and canvas.

WORK ON AUDITORIUM

The Presiding Bishopric announced that work on The Auditorium is resumed under the direction of Architects Bloomgarten and Frohwerk of Kansas City. Work began the week of August 1 with Weeks Construction Company as contractors. Delay has been encountered in beginning this work because of difficulty in procuring stone, but that has been obtained now. Phil Weeks, of the contracting company, has been in Bedford, Indiana, to supervise the cutting of the Bedford limestone to the exact shape and size to fit on the curved walls. This permanent stone is being put on the outside walls of the structure that rises from the flat roof to the dome.

All of the stones will be cut individually to conform to the curve of the sides of the dome, this being an expensive and exacting job. The limestone is four inches thick and will be placed on the outside of twelve inches of new bricks. Where the present large side windows are situated, glass brick will be used. Prism glass will be used which will reflect the light up and will give indirect lighting from all of these windows. The glass block with recessing around the windows will make a panel effect which should add considerable beauty to the building. There will be a new top to the wall so that water can be carried off more easily. No work is being done immediately on the dome.

The flat deck of the roof will be built up with a concrete slab over it two and one half inches thick. It is hoped that the construction will be completed by Christmas.

WEDDLE ON CLINIC STAFF

Music Director Franklyn S. Weddle was on the staff of the Jenkins Music Company Materials Clinic held in Kansas City, Missouri, beginning August 8. This clinic is for music teachers from the Middle West who come and read over new material for their high school and grade school music groups. Brother Weddle, because of reunion appointments, took only one day of work, on August 8, when he went over mixed chorus, a cappella and madrigal music with the visiting teachers.

MISSIONARY WORK IN MUSKOGEE

Apostle Reed Holmes reports that the little mission of Muskogee in Oklahoma, ever alert to missionary opportunities, has started a mission church school in a little community outside of town. There are about twenty in average attendance. Two Aaronic priesthood members are taking responsibility over this group, which is a demonstration of the use of the church school as an evangelistic agency.

Learn of Him

“Come to me, all of you who toil and are burdened, and I will give you rest. Let my yoke be put upon you, and learn from me, for I am gentle and humble-minded, and your hearts will find rest, for the yoke I offer you is a kindly one, and the load I ask you to bear is light.” —Matthew 11: 29, 30. Goodspeed Translation.

Pastoral Theme

Our pastoral theme for the month of September, “Learn of Him,” finds special enrichment in the fine modern version of the Scripture quoted above. There is a derivative quality in the preposition “of” that also means “from,” so there is nothing essentially different, except in the clarification of the text. It is good for us to learn “of” or about Jesus, as this is usually understood. It is even more important that we should learn “from” him by listening to his message.

In the Bible commentaries much is published about Jesus. One can spend a great deal of time on that theme without ever considering for a moment the obligation to learn “from” him the great message he brought concerning the kingdom of God. Gathering information about Jesus is an apparently innocent way of avoiding compliance with his message.

Learning “from” Jesus inevitably leads to the heart of his message, his mission concerning the kingdom of God. The very first preaching he did called the people to “Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand” (Matthew 4: 17). His message of personal responsibility, of stewardship, of social consciousness, reveals different aspects of that one theme which is the golden thread of all his ministry, a thread that ran through the work of the greater prophets. It turns our thoughts toward Zion today.

The Promises

The promises of Jesus are as true as they are beautiful. The invitation to the weary laborer offers rest. How many times, tired and discouraged, we have gone down upon our knees to get up again and go on. It is miraculously possible, under many conditions and in many situations, to be relieved of fatigue to a very remarkable degree, and to continue the task that has been too hard to do.

Jesus knew that the rest which can come to the mind and spirit is more important in some ways than the rest required by the body. Anybody can lie down and have physical rest, unless there has been some major emotional disturbance. There can be no real rest without peace and tranquility. (Continued on page 22.)

COLLEGE STUDENTS' CONFERENCE

THE COLLEGE STUDENTS' CONFERENCE announced by the First Presidency in the August 1 issue of the “Herald” will be held at Stone Church in Independence for three days beginning September 8. All college students, church officers, and other members especially interested in problems confronting college people are urged to attend. The discussion topics (listed below) center around an understanding of the church's program and the finding of a definite personal relation to the objectives of the church. Representatives are expected from most of the larger campus groups, and there will be opportunity for exchanging ideas between different groups, for meeting and counseling with the general church officers, for viewing the heritage of the church represented in the Center Place, and for finding out what the church can mean in the lives of modern people.

Advance registration and requests for housing should be sent to Miss Marian Davis, Secretary of Reservations, College Students' Conference, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. Please give the time and date of your arrival, your Independence address if you arrange to stay with friends, or the number and names of your party for whom housing is required. Housing will be provided for $1.00 a night or less. All visitors will pay a $1.00 registration fee. A group dinner will be served at the Auditorium on Friday night; other meals may be taken at local restaurants.

Across the Desk

Brother Howard F. Miller writes from Honolulu, Hawaii:

We have been quite busy arranging our first Hawaiian Reunion at Camp Erdman. At first we thought it would be necessary to call it off because of the strike, but we finally decided to go through with it. Our registration is such that our camp is filled to its capacity of about 100 for the week end, with eighty-five attending the whole week. I am sending you under separate cover a program for your perusal.

Yesterday we had a joint prayer service with a capacity crowd of 195 at Makiki. It was one of the most outstanding prayer services we have enjoyed since coming to the islands. It was one of those meetings in which not one minute was wasted. The quality of the testimonies was quite outstanding. Everyone was very much encouraged by this and it has laid a very good foundation for the reunion.

Sister Mervin and her daughter, Dede, and her granddaughter are still here, but they will be leaving on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 for Tahiti. . . . They have both recovered remarkably well and one might say they are back to normal, except Sister Mervin must watch her diet. We have enjoyed having them with us very much. The differences in language have not been difficult, because Dede knew enough English and Sister Miller knew enough French to smooth out the rough spots. They are spending this coming week at the reunion. We shall hate to see them go back to the islands when the time comes.

From Apostle Reed M. Holmes, August 10, 1949:

An excellent spirit was manifest in the reunion at Wilburton, Oklahoma. All who assisted in the reunion are to be commended on their preparation and spirit of helpfulness. I believe one reason for the success of the reunion was that the large group came with the spirit of repentance and eagerness to witness. The attendance was triple that of the preceding year.

One of the outstanding features of the reunion was the youth work, which proved to be an experiment in public relations and evangelism in the near-by town of Wilburton. Young people pushed doorbells twice during the week and serenaded the town with street singing in which they were joined by others of the reunion. I presume there was a total of 250 at our sidewalk serenade. The young people gave a large and beautiful picture to the Wilburton Branch to further missionary work. All in all it was a good experience and was richly blessed by the Spirit of God.

B. Robert Harvey of Boyne City, Michigan, sends the following letter from Peter T. Chosokabe of Matuyama, Japan, for publication in the Herald. Peter attended Graceland in 1917-18-19 and was responsible for naming the Acacia. In his letter he pays tribute to J. A. Gunsolley (written previous to his death) for whom he holds great admiration.

I've heard recently from Brother J. A. Gunsolley, president of the college in my days at Graceland, who is now residing in Independence, Missouri, and is eighty-seven years old. I picked up a phrase from his letter—"So long as I can be of any use to God's people' and church, I shall try to not have lived in vain"—and bowed to this beautiful will of his. Then I brushed it on a piece of paper and pasted it on the wall of my humble shack, solemnly vowing to do my best to follow in his step.

In looking over my past, I find the most to regret and the least to pride. I envy the noble life Brother Gunsolley has led through many winters and summers to the present. In education I always advocate character first, then health, then learning. In this respect I admire the principle of education in the United States.

We are happy and content here. The want of some foods does not interfere with our present life much. I will be pleased to hear how things are going on The Hill. I hope some day one of you will come to our country with the gospel. Without Christianity there can never be a healthy recuperation in Japan.

Kindly remember me to Dayle Bethel, Denzil West, and others.

Lifesavers

A sermon given at Enoch Hill Church in Independence, Missouri

By CHARLES R. HIELD

Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus.—Philippians 2: 5.

The church is admonished again that joint responsibility is laid on all. Properly and equally borne, this responsibility will insure success, the consummation will be glorious, and all will share in that glory.—Doctrine and Covenants 141: 8.

WHEN WE REALLY CATCH THE VISION of the Christ, we become concerned over the lives of people. We want to do all we can to assist in saving lives. The Apostle Paul seemed to have sensed that in the Scripture which I have just read. Pleading with the people of his time, he tried to get them to understand the thing which was on the heart and mind of the Christ, so he said, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

Today I challenge you to think what was on the mind and on the heart of the Christ! Why did he come down here? What was his job? Did he do it well or not? What was the goal of his life? What is our goal? By a little meditating on our part (and it's always good for us to reason things through), we learn that the entire effort of the Christ was devoted to saving lives. He is called the Savior. Although it is not spelled exactly as we spell it when we use the term "lifesaver," it conveys the same idea. Christ is interested in saving lives, even more so than the lifesaver on a beach or at a swimming pool. He has a very definite responsibility, and that responsibility is to try to win people to his Father's way of life.

Yet he leaves us our own volition. He will not force us. How would you like his task? How would you like to assume the responsibility which the Christ assumed? He asks us to work with him at that same task. Before he left the earth he said, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." Are we as faithful to our commission as Christ was to his?

The Scriptures tell us Satan offered, in the councils in heaven, to come to the earth and teach mankind eternal laws. God's laws, if obeyed, will develop a society of righteous people living together in peace, joy, and harmony. Through brotherhood we may obtain mental, physical, and spiritual health. Satan's plan, however, was to take man's agency away from him. (See Genesis 3: 1-4, Inspired Version.) That is, he wouldn't allow us to choose—he wouldn't permit us to exercise our free will. He wouldn't let us make up our minds, and we would be like slaves. That is about what Hitler planned to do with the Greek people. It is being done today with some nations. People are taught to obey the leaders without question. Otherwise they lose their jobs, their food cards, their homes, and they are placed in work camps. They learn to respond like a trained dog or a trained seal. With a gesture, a motion, a command, or a crack of the whip they are coerced into obedience. That was Satan's plan, and he guaranteed that he wouldn't lose one. When our earthly probation was over, we would all be brought back, obedient to the law. No one would steal, no one would be selfish, no one would be immoral, no one would hurt anybody else. We would, however, have no mind of our own, no individuality, no free will.

I once saw some wax figures in Madam Tussaud's Wax Museum in London, England. They have wax dummies of many of the great men and women of the world, even some presidents of the United States. I became so interested in this exhibit that I lingered after closing time and almost got locked in for the night. I doubt that it would have been a pleasant experience, remaining with those musty objects, even though they did resemble Cromwell, Cleopatra, Napoleon, et cetera. It is true each one was dressed differently. Some were tall, and some were short. Each had a different facial expression, but they had no personality which could respond with love, loyalty, and friendship. If Satan had been permitted to take away our agency, we would be much like those wax figures. Wouldn't that be interesting for God to have a bunch of dummies like that around him in the hereafter?

God can make people different, but that's not the primary job he is interested in. He is interested in us as persons of free will. He is interested in our personality and character. He wants each of us to come back to him upon death a trained, throbbing, pulsating personality—an individual who challenges his friendship; one with whom he will like to associate; one with whom he will like to talk and work. He would like to be able to depend upon us. How are we coming? Is God satisfied with our present development? Millions of people reject God and his plan of redemption, thinking that their intelligence is superior to his. The decision of God working through his church is to give man his agency. This right of choice will never be taken away from us.

A MOTHER came to me during the last war at the time of the Battle of the Bulge. The Germans weren't taking any prisoners. They didn't have time to take prisoners. They killed any captive that fell into their hands. Out of the anguish of her heart, well understandable to us, she cried, "Brother Hield, why doesn't God stop the war? Can't he stop it?" What would you say? I replied, "Yes, God can stop the war, but I don't think he will, for if he stops the war, he would take man's agency away from him and force him to do things against his will."

He is not going to do that. We can kill as long as we think that is the intelligent way to live. I don't think God will ever take our agency away from us even in eternity. The Scripture tells us that at one time a third of the angels in heaven revolted against God. A third of the hosts of heaven, once associated with God and Christ, listened to the advice of Satan, and there was war in heaven. (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 10.) These angels had the right to choose, didn't they? They had the right to make up their own minds and to follow the leadership of anybody they wanted to. I don't think we will ever lose our agency even in the eternity.

Some people seem to think there'll be no sin in heaven because, by force, God will shut it out; that somehow the great Father in heaven will bring down a mythical iron curtain and shut sin out. I don't think so. Don't misunderstand me—there'll not be any sin in heaven, but I don't think it will be because God through his power shuts it out. The people who get into heaven—into celestial glory—will be too intelligent to sin. There will be no desire to sin. Sinning is stupid. Christ could have sinned, could he not? He could have stolen, could have been immoral, could have killed somebody. He could have been selfish, as millions of us are, thinking only of himself and his pleasures. Why not? He was too intelligent! He knew that life can be lived successfully only by the right use of agency and the intelligence of eternal law. Religion is learning that truth!

GOD CALLS us to care about life as Christ cares. We Latter Day Saints are called to be a "chosen people," not because God loves us any more than anybody else. He loves all people. He calls us, I think, because he wants us under the direction of Christ, through his church, to be lifesavers in this generation.

A lifesaver on the beach near Santa Monica, California, once explained his job. It was most interesting, yet sometimes very exacting and dangerous. A lifesaver must try to rescue the drowning, whether they wish to be rescued or not. His responsibility is to try to rescue people from danger, whether they're good looking or homely, whether they're tall and scrawny or short and fat, whether they're stupid or bright. Sometimes the swimmers are drunk, too daring, or don't know their own strength. Whatever the case, the lifeguard is trained to serve them all.

Are you interested in people that way? Christ is interested in saving life and developing godlike personalities. To him we are all of supreme worth. Today many people are drowning spiritually. Their spiritual lives are in danger.

We are told by the prophet in the Book of Mormon that after death the righteous spirits go to paradise (Alma 19: 43-47). The spirits of the wicked—those who, exercising their agency, have not accepted God —are taken to the pit, or the prison house, which is also called "hell." (We should, however, realize that hell is controlled by God and Christ, and that the doorkeeper or the warden is not Satan. Satan is here on this earth, Revelation 12: 4). In spite of Dante and his Divine Comedy, God controls hell. It is a prison house—a penitentiary, a school, a reformatory—in which people are given the opportunity of learning the truth of God's laws.

I imagine hell has pretty good teachers, because Christ went there to teach. Christ said (Doctrine and Covenants 141: 1) that Apostle George Lewis "has been taken for mine own purposes." We miss Brother Lewis in the Quorum of Twelve, but it may be that he is needed on the other side to teach in that reformatory. He was a fine teacher here! It's too bad that so many people may have to go there because they missed the way here—or knowing, did not care! Can it be that some are lost spiritually for the lack of a responsible lifesaver? We are informed that in eternity we shall have a "bright recollection" of our earthly mistakes (Alma 8: 101). What a thing it will be to appear some day at the judgment bar of God and be told that as a lifesaver we were negligent and careless in our job here on this life!

I know of a carpenter who fell off a scaffolding and dislocated his hip. He was taken to a hospital and his bones reset and put in a cast. The hipbone was not placed in the socket where it should have been by the surgeon, but higher up, and now one leg is shorter than the other one, and the man must walk with a limp. Because of the stupidity, or the ignorance, or the carelessness of a doctor that man will be a cripple all the rest of his life. We think that is bad, yet many people go through this life and will enter into eternity, some to go to the prison house, because people like us Latter Day Saints, who should help them and who should be good, trained, spiritual surgeons, have been careless or have not cared. What a sense of responsibility should be ours as we realize that because of our ignorance or indifference some people may go into eternity spiritually crippled!

GOD WHO MADE US created us to be interested in other people's lives, whether we realize it or not. Last spring, as my boy Charles was spading the garden he turned up a nest of five baby rabbits. I was most interested in what he would do with them. The parent rabbits had been eating our lettuce and nipping off our little string-bean sprouts as soon as they came up, and we didn't have a kindly feeling toward them. He could have taken each little bunny by the back legs and dashed its brains out against a steel post in the garden. But he didn't. They didn't have their eyes open yet. They were still little, fluffy things. He brought a box from the house and put the little bunnies, nest and all, into it. He fed them warm milk with a medicine dropper until they could eat grass and dandelions. Finally we took them up to Gardner Lake and let them go. I'm glad he took them that far away from home.

What causes us to be interested in saving life? Or do you like to torture things? That's what Hitler taught the German youth. Those boys were instructed to torture angleworms, then cats and dogs, and finally some of the Jewish boys. Soon they became hardened to seeing blood and suffering.

We were born to be interested in life. Not so long ago in San Diego, I was riding along with Brother Peter Whalley in his car in a residential area. We were going along about twenty-five miles an hour. There were several cars parked along the road and some little children playing on the walks and lawns. Suddenly a little puppy dog, a wobbly-legged little fellow about two or three weeks old, ran out into the street between two cars. Peter jammed on the brakes, and I tried to help by pushing on the floor boards. The mothers on the porches and most of the children screamed. Instinctively we crouched and raised our arms before our faces, expecting to hear the thud of that little dog's body against a tire. One little boy, standing over behind the tree, put his hands over his eyes and peeked out, expecting to see his dog dead. I don't know how yet, but the puppy walked right in between the wheels of the car and came out unharmed on the other side. We were deeply concerned, and we trembled even after we saw the dog was unharmed. What is there in our nervous systems that causes us to act that way? We are interested in life, unless we suppress it. A good follower of the Christ doesn't suppress it but cultivates it.

I'M INTERESTED in Jesus as he talks about this love for people and his desire that we too share this concern. One time he told a story of a man who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho. Remember? He fell in among some thieves, who robbed him and beat him up. They stripped him of his clothing and left him unconscious beside the road. A priest and a Levite came along and saw him and went by on the other side of the road. They were not sufficiently interested in his physical life to care whether he died or not. I don't think we would do that today, would we? Suppose you were traveling along the road in your car, from Independence to Kansas City, and you should see a little girl that had been hit by another car—let's say a "hit-and-run driver." There she lies on the pavement, unconscious, her face and clothes all dirty, her head cut, and bleeding from the mouth and nose. What would you do? Swerve your car so as not to hit the body and go by on the other side of the road? Would you say to yourself, "It is none of my business; I'm on the way to church and do not care to stop?" You would probably notify the police, or call an ambulance and a doctor or even take her to a hospital yourself. Christ, in this story, is talking about people who are not interested in life. So often we pass along the highways of life and see people who have been spiritually wounded, and we don't care. Are we interested only in physical life?

I challenge you to think which is more important, physical or spiritual life. I was deeply concerned when some of our boys were killed during the war. Considerable comfort comes to me, however, when I know that the boy was a good church member or a member of the priesthood who had been true to his call. I can see how God would be much concerned over the death of his Son. Yet the Son did come back to the Father, didn't he? He didn't lose any character or personality in his struggle on the earth. His father probably was more proud of him after he came back than he was before he went to earth. Obviously God knew he'd do just what he did. Are we as concerned, as Christ is, about life?

I spoke at general conference and challenged the people there to think what their plan is in life. Most of our plans, I presume, are for this year, next year, or five years or ten years from now. Where are you going to be then? Please do not misunderstand me. I don't think we should be negligent in taking care of our families, but it's probably more important for us to plan where our child will be and where we will be 150 years from now! We shall be dead, that is certain. After death where shall we be—in paradise in peace or in that reformatory, being taught?

Nor should we be thinking only of ourselves. We are concerned about the physical health of those we love, aren't we? One part of my mission is the interesting state of Arizona. It gets very hot sometimes in that state—and very dry. The thermometer registers 115 to 120 in the summer time in Phoenix, Tucson, and down around Las Vegas. Most of the people who live there like it hot like that. People move from Zion to Arizona, not because they want to move out of Zion but because they have arthritis, asthma,

The Road to Light -

By JENNIE Z. ELLIOTT

AS YOU READ that beautiful ninth chapter of Saint John's Gospel, wherein it tells how Jesus made the beggar who had been born blind to see, do you ever stop to wonder why this blind man had to beg?

For all those many centuries before Jesus' coming upon earth, and for still other centuries after his coming, and even in those non-Christian lands where his gospel has not yet reached, society had considered the blind of no intellectual, social, or economic worth. And so, because his parents were poor, Bartimeus had need to beg for his daily bread.

And now, let us walk together that long, long road of the centuries that leads from darkness to light.

Our earliest record of trying to teach finger reading to the blind dates back to the fourth century of the Christian Era in Egypt, when some philanthropic soul conceived the idea of cutting the letters of the Egyptian alphabet out of blocks of wood. Another 1,200 years passed before a second attempt to teach finger reading was made by a Spaniard who carved the letters right into solid wooden blocks. From then on, there seems always to have been interested people who were ever thinking up and trying out new and different ways of teaching the blind to read by touch.

It was in the year 1785 that Valentin Haüy opened his school for blind boys, the Institution Nationale, in Paris. According to the Reader's Digest for December, 1948, Haüy used crude letters made from bent twigs or cut from cloth to teach reading to his pupils. Other accounts say that he used movable metal type.

One day, in 1823, one of Haüy's boys was idly fingering a card which he had picked up. He was overjoyed when he could read what the card said. Investigating, Haüy found that the type had left a deep imprint upon the card. This gave him an idea. Immediately he began experimenting with movable type and before long was printing books in embossed Roman letters.

It was Louis Braille who developed the system now generally used. He, like some others of the world's great, was born in 1809; his birthplace, the little French village of Coupvray. When he was three years old, he was playing one day in his father's saddle-making shop and, as children will, grabbed two of the awls and started running with them. He stumbled and fell. The awls went into his eyes. Before long he was totally blind. How heartbroken his parents must have been, for how could they know that, because of this accident, the day would come when the world's blind would rise up to call their son's name blessed?

In 1819, when he was ten, Louis' family sent him to Paris to Valentin Haüy's Institution Nationale. There he learned to read; first from letters made of twigs, afterward from huge, cloth-lettered books.

As he grew older, his thirst for knowledge made him more and more dissatisfied and impatient with this slow, tedious way of learning. So he vowed that, someday, he'd better the condition of his fellow blind.

That day came sooner than he dreamed. Just by chance, he heard of a French army captain who had worked out a system of raised dots and dashes to be used in sending night messages. This gave young Braille an idea. If soldiers could use their fingers to read these dots and dashes after dark, why couldn't blind people learn to read raised dots? So, after a talk with the captain, fifteen-year-old Louis Braille went to work.

Five years later, (1829) he introduced to the world's blind the dot system of notation that bears his name. Braille's was the first of the touch systems that could be written as well as read. However, his method was not officially adopted by Haüy's school until 1855. Louis Braille died in 1852 at the age of forty-three from overwork.

It was in 1860 that Braille had its American premier in the Missouri School for the Blind at St. Louis.

There are now several Braille printing houses scattered throughout this country. The largest, and best known, is the American Printing House for the Blind at Louisville, Kentucky.

Braille literature is both bulky and expensive, for instance, it requires twenty large volumes to reproduce the entire Braille Bible. And it costs thirty-six dollars to print it. It costs another eighteen dollars to print a ten-volume Braille Bible concordance. A seemingly large Braille library may, in reality, be but one or two books.

Because few blind people could otherwise afford a Bible, the American Bible Society provides the entire Bible in Braille for six dollars. The concordance may be bought for three dollars.

Since few blind people can, or even care to, own the books they read, they borrow them, postage free, from a Braille library. Besides the Department for the Blind in the Library of Congress, there is a free circulating library connected with each of our forty-eight state schools for the blind, and with the Territorial School for the Blind in Hawaii. Then, too, many city libraries have Braille sections.

It was the Seventh-Day Adventist people who, about fifty years ago, first saw the need of a monthly religious magazine in embossed type. In more recent years the Jewish people, the Catholics, and many of the Protestant churches have brought out their own denominational literature

The Church and Its College Youth

By HARLEY A. MORRIS

For the Committee on Ministry to College People

EACH YEAR increasingly large numbers of church young people are heeding the admonition to "study to show thyself approved" by entering colleges and universities throughout the country. In the majority of cases these youths have come to feel a personal responsibility toward the Zion of the church. In seeking advanced training, they express a desire to make a contribution toward that goal. It is interesting to note that the nearly one thousand students currently in college are enrolled for training in more than a hundred different trades and professions. In the majority of cases, the basis on which they have selected their fields of specialization has been twofold: (1) some consideration of their talents in that direction; and (2) with a feeling that training in that field would equip them for making a contribution to the church. The church has come to respect these young people for the sincerity of their purpose.

in Braille. Some of these are Braille editions of regular publications, while others are special magazines. Most of these magazines are published in one of the printing houses for the blind, although a few churches do have their own printing plants.

I believe that every Braille-reading Christian, whatever be his faith, should have the privilege and joy of reading his own church literature for himself. Yet, at Easter, 1948, when I came into the church all eager to learn its ways and to know its teachings, all I could find in Braille was the Utah version of the Book of Mormon. Should not we, the Braille-reading members of the Reorganized Church, have the great privilege and joy of reading not only the Bible but also the Doctrine and Covenants for ourselves?

That is why I have asked you to walk again with me that long road of the ages that has led the world's blind out of the darkness of ignorance into the light of knowledge, so that they can say with Bartimeus of old, "Whereas we were blind, now we see."

The editors are anxious to know the approximate number of blind church members or friends who would be interested in distinctive Latter Day Saint literature in Braille. Several months ago a sister in Denver organized a project to transcribe the Book of Mormon into Braille. She has others, including several nonmembers, assisting her in the project. We are wondering if another group would be willing to undertake the transcribing of our Doctrine and Covenants into Braille as a service to our blind members and their friends. We will be glad to hear from those interested in such a project.

versities throughout the country. In the majority of cases these youths have come to feel a personal responsibility toward the Zion of the church. In seeking advanced training, they express a desire to make a contribution toward that goal. It is interesting to note that the nearly one thousand students currently in college are enrolled for training in more than a hundred different trades and professions. In the majority of cases, the basis on which they have selected their fields of specialization has been twofold: (1) some consideration of their talents in that direction; and (2) with a feeling that training in that field would equip them for making a contribution to the church. The church has come to respect these young people for the sincerity of their purpose.

In many ways the young person who launches upon a four- to six-year college course is committing an act of supreme faith. He is pledging these important years of his life squarely behind his belief in the church and its objectives. True, there are benefits derived from college training not directly related to religious endeavor, but to a surprisingly large number of our young people, these are of secondary importance. It is this fact that places upon the church a special responsibility. For the church that inspired in its rising generation the idealism common to us must protect that generation against unnecessary disappointment. The company that publishes a travel folder and sells a ticket is morally obligated to bring its patron to the promised destination. And yet this analogy is not strictly true, because the church is not something separate and distinct from its youth, but rather a complex social institution that includes youth as an important component. While the church—as an institution—is obligated to progress toward its promised goal, youth—as a part of the church—shares in the responsibility for such progress. The church, ministering to youth, is in turn ministered to by youth.

LATTER DAY SAINT COLLEGE STUDENTS face orientation problems unique to their environment. Specifically, these problems grow out of the fact that the graduate schools selected for training beyond Graceland's junior college level are frequently located where there are few members and no organized services; that under the pressure of acquiring maximum training in a minimum of time, habits of worship are crowded out; that the student is frequently exposed to atheistic and anti-Christian indoctrination. All too often the result is a loss of spiritual growth on a parallel with the intellectual development and a substitution of other goals in place of the high resolves that were the original motivation. A net loss to the church has been the result.

For years individual church leaders have been aware that the solution of these problems required ministry of a more-or-less specialized order, but the pressure of the general ministry sharply restricted the amount of work that could be done with campus groups. Finally, in 1946, a movement grew up among the students and church men and women on various university faculties aimed at working out a program of ministry that would meet these special needs. Their nucleus of a program found a ready acceptance by farsighted church leaders, and when no general church man could be spared to head up the program, a committee of professional men and women were pressed into service, and the program was launched.

DURING THE INTERVENING YEARS, an effort has been made to organize the larger campus groups for regular services and to establish contact with all church youth in college. To date there are more or less regular services on about a dozen different campuses; a quarterly bulletin is issued also for college youth, and through it and by direct visit and correspondence, the committee maintains contact with several hundred isolated individuals. In addition, special institutes built around topics of student interest have been held at various universities, and speakers with both religious and professional backgrounds have been made available to the groups. At most of these one or more general church officers have been present to render valuable ministry.

Still another type of ministry has been the annual conference for college people held each year since 1947. To these have come representative students from twenty or more universities, eager to find ways of tying their group and individual lives into the general work of the church, and so insure that their activities will contribute to the common goal. From September 8 to 11, the third such annual conference is scheduled to meet at Independence. Planning the conference has been the joint responsibility of general church officials and the committee of professional people who actively direct the program. The tentative program calls for a group of round-table discussions of questions concerning the student's relationship to the church, and his responsibility for fitting his vocation into the broad task of kingdom-building.

Independence, Missouri - A Musical Democracy

By MRS. CHARLES NICKSON

From News Letter of the American Symphony Orchestra League, Inc.

A SERIES OF CONCERTS by the Independence Symphony Orchestra, guest artists, a performance of The Messiah, a multiple piano concert, interest in a cultural arts center—and freedom from financial worries—is the amazing story of the Community Music Association of Independence, Missouri.

It all started when Mr. Franklyn S. Weddle was invited to speak at the regular meeting of the Kiwanis Club on March 13, 1945. Drawing on his experience in Flint, Michigan, Mr. Weddle described what could be done in a musical way by a community which was determined to raise its musical and cultural standards. After the meeting a dozen men crowded around demanding to know more about how to proceed with some sort of musical organization for Independence. The result was a letter on Chamber of Commerce stationery, addressed to all service clubs, inviting them to send a representative to a preliminary meeting to discuss such an organization.

This meeting was held, with representatives from Kiwanis, Rotary, Lions, and the Chamber of Commerce. From this group, invitations were sent to some twenty-five groups, organizations, and clubs, asking them to send a representative to an organization meeting, for the purpose of setting up the Community Music Association of Independence. The purpose of the organization was to plan for the cultural and musical development of Independence by fostering musical education among youth; by sponsoring community music in the form of chorus, band and orchestra; by sponsoring the appearance of outside professional groups and soloists at appropriate times; and by sponsoring the annual May Festival of Music. It was declared that the widest possible latitude should be employed in selecting the membership and perfecting the organization of the Community Music Association, so that it should truly be a community project embracing all classes, races, and creeds; all clubs and all organizations; and all individuals interested in the development of music and the other fine arts in the community. It was decided that there would be no membership dues or fees, so that students and adults, rich or poor, might participate on an equal basis.

LATE IN 1944, Mr. Weddle had recruited a small orchestra to accompany the Messiah Choir of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in its twenty-eighth annual Christmas rendition of Handel's The Messiah. This orchestra had twenty-six members—several of them recruited from professional ranks in Kansas City. This group formed the nucleus for the orchestra which participated in the second annual May Festival—the first such festival under the sponsorship of the Community Music Association. Many of the people in the orchestra had not been playing for some time, but were eager and willing to practice so that Independence might have an orchestra of its own.

On October 10, 1945, the Community Music Association was formally organized. A constitution and bylaws were adopted. Each club and organization was invited to name a representative to a board of directors, which also included six members elected "at large" by the annual meeting of the association. An executive committee was established consisting of president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and the musical director—Mr. Franklyn S. Weddle—plus three elected (board) members.

At the opening of the 1945-46 season, the orchestra was officially named, "The Independence Little Symphony." The schedule consisted of only three concerts, plus the accompaniment of the twenty-ninth annual Messiah presentation by the Messiah Choir. The orchestra's roster by this time had grown to thirty-eight members. That year saw the inauguration of a "Church Choir Festival" as a regular part of the May Festival, in which adult choirs and youth choirs of most of the Independence churches participated. A "Hymn Sing," by the combined choirs and congregation, was a part of this concert. Other concerts in this 1946 May Festival were given by the Independence Music Club and the public school music departments.

THE 1946-47 SEASON marked the beginning of the official co-operation of the Independence Ministerial Alliance in the Church Music Festival, which was again a part of the annual May Festival. This year the festival was spread over a longer period, consisting of a concert by the elementary schools, the Church Music Festival, the Junior and Senior High School Concert, the Independence Music Club Concert, and the concert by the "Little Symphony"—now grown to forty-four members. Other activities of the orchestra that season included again the accompaniments for the annual Messiah rendition, and two concerts in addition to the May Festival concert already mentioned which featured no guest artist. There were two concerts assisted by guest artists; one featuring Miss Barbara Schrier, pianist, and the second with Mr. David Van Factor, flutist, as soloist.

By the fall of 1947, the Community Music Association was beginning to get in its stride. During December a financial drive, coming on the heels of the Community Chest, Red Cross, and other appeals for funds, raised $1,200 to guarantee the expenses of the coming season. The first activities of the Community Music Association had been met out of Mr. Weddle's bank account, with the expenses of the later concerts being met by a free-will offering at the concerts, cash donations from interested individuals of the community, and other helps such as the friends paying for the printing of programs in return for a single advertising credit line.

With the financial backing assured, the Community Music Association launched out into two new fields. First, it planned a piano recital by Percy Grainger. This did not quite break even financially but did have a good effect on the musical morale of the community, which, over a long period of time, had come to depend musically on Kansas City, Missouri, just to the west. Second, the multiple piano concert was given on a Sunday afternoon (all previous concerts had been offered at night) and interested a new type of listener. This concert featured a piano-duo (mother and daughter), a piano quartet (very finished), and an eight-piano ensemble. There was not even standing room, and the players received an ovation. The Community Music Association felt that it had partly arrived.

ORCHESTRA CONCERTS for the 1947-48 season were very successful and included as guest artists two violinists, a pianist, and a baritone. Again the Messiah accompaniment, and the May Festival, with the addition of a grade school concert, were presented. At the close of the season the orchestra was invited to play a special concert for the Kansas City Guild of Music and Fine Arts Teachers, in Kansas City.

With the opening of the 1948-49 season, the orchestra dropped the name of "Little Symphony" and became the "Independence Symphony Orchestra," with sixty members. This season has seen a marked improvement in the playing of the orchestra and an added interest on the part of each member. The first concert of this season included Mr. Whitney Tustin, solo oboist with the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra as the soloist. Also a local guest conductor was asked to assist at this concert. Plans for the other three orchestra concerts included as guest artists Mr. John Ehrlich, cellist, Miss Doris Ann Harding, pianist, and Mr. Richard Smith (a local boy and also a member of the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra), trumpet soloist. Again this year the plans have included a Multiple Piano Concert, particition in the Messiah, and the annual May Festival Week. The Community Music Association co-operated with a local club in bringing the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra to Independence to play a concert for school children. It was necessary to have this concert on a very large scale, with 5,500 children all together at one time. [Accordingly it was held in the R. L. D. S. Auditorium.] The response was perfect, and the attention far beyond anyone's fondest hope.

At the beginning of this current season, the Community Music Association was worried about the financial drive, and plans were in the making when a most fortunate and unbelievable thing happened. One of the "Independence boys," who had been away for a number of years, returned—a millionaire with very wonderful ideas about Independence and its cultural needs. He liked the way in which the Community Music Association was functioning and asked if he could establish a memorial for his mother by financing the concerts. The association has found it most satisfactory to just think about music and know that the money is there for the operation of the program.

THE PLANS have been kept simple, adding just a little to the previous year's plans, thus keeping the organization on a steadily growing basis. The concerts are now known as memorial concerts and are free to the public. It is pleasant to see mothers and fathers with their children at a concert, to see a boy and his date, to see elderly people, to see the well-groomed and the most simply groomed people all listening to music. The concerts have a "homeness" which is commendable. There is a feel of appreciation and pride in each concert.

The orchestra this year has been able to purchase a bassoon of its own out of the budget. The Community Music Association has the assurance of money for operation each year

A Way of Service

By BETH L. DAVIS

WHEN YOU visit the Campus Shop in Independence, Missouri, you will find a group of consecrated women who have found a way to serve; some are still serving even after they have passed their four-score and ten. One of these sisters was ninety-one in March. It is very seldom the Campus workers meet without her. "But what can she do?" some will ask. Her work is very necessary; she unravels old sweaters and rewinds the yarn to be used in the making of woolen garments. Like many of the Campus workers, she is never satisfied with what she accomplishes in the day at the shop, so she often takes an armload home with her to do during the week.

Another sister who is eighty-eight years old has braided 113 rugs which sell from $2.50 to $4.50. Still another has tacked 1,700 balls of rags ready for the looms to make into rugs.

Then there is the worker who took the best parts of men's white shirts and made over one hundred baby dresses. These have all gone overseas, along with 50,000 pounds of clothing and food and over 20,000 pairs of shoes, to the needy in other lands. All clothing has been cleaned, pressed, mended, and sized, while the shoes have all been sewed, reheelled, and soled when needed.

This is only part of the work that goes on in the Campus Shop. Many hours are spent in washing, cleaning, pressing, ripping, cutting, and sewing, for every inch of usable materials is utilized. Where the entire garment is not in condition to be used as it is, the best parts are taken and recut for smaller garments. Other pieces are used for quilt and comfort blocks, while the smaller and less desirable pieces go into the making of ton department, nor the hats, jewelry, or fancywork. Then there is the bedding, quilts and comforts. This project alone occupies at least three rooms. Many such articles as this could be written to cover the work of the Campus Shop and volumes more to cover its needs.

I haven't even mentioned the but-

I HAVE VISITED the Campus Shop only once, as I live several hundred miles from the Center Place. But I have become keenly interested in its needs through correspondence with one of the Campus workers.

It seems the present needs may be divided into three groups:

First—it needs more help. Surely there are at least another hundred women within driving distance of the Campus Shop who can spare at least four or five hours a week to help. Or, if you live hundreds, even thousands, of miles from Independence, you can piece quilt tops. Mother and I have received cut blocks and thread with the instructions—"All you need do is set the blocks together according to the sample block sent with the pieces." This is something the older members can do, too. Those of you who are unable to stand on your feet or get around to do much local project work, but whose eyes, hands, and desires still long to do something for the work of the Master, can serve in this way.

A second need is for finished products. Here is a way in which every class—including the junior age—can help. All members of the church may assist wherever they are. This is especially true of the smaller branches. In many of our city congregations, the women are kept busy fulfilling local needs. But they, too, may be able to find time to complete at least one project to help lift the burden from the faithful few at the Campus Shop. One group of fifteen sisters met at the Central Church in Kansas City on a very cold, stormy day in January and tied and bound six comforts. So some of the busy groups are sensing the great need of the Campus Shop and finding time to do something about it.

The third is for materials. Few are the homes that do not annually carry out badly worn or outgrown garments and destroy them. Please do not burn or throw away old sweaters or outgrown clothing of any kind, even when you consider them beyond repair. The Campus workers will salvage much from them. But be sure all articles are clean. Hours of time for these workers will thus be saved and the work on a garment or comfort for some needy person speeded up. Shoes of all kinds for men, women, and children are needed. If the leather has not deteriorated, they can be repaired to give much service.

Why should we let a group of less than two hundred faithful workers carry the burden? The church needs many, many more faithful, conscientious workers like these sisters at the Campus Shop. Perhaps some in your branch will want to help out. What are YOU going to do?

Undernourished

By C. J. Lant

We often read of children who are undernourished. There is too much neglect on the part of parents and society at large. But there are things other than food which children and adults alike may hunger for. Two of these are love and human kindness which all of us might bestow.

When a mother dies, a child may go through life starved for maternal love and care. To be robbed in this way is indeed tragic. Years of lonely searching may follow in an attempt to find some of the love and understanding missed because of the death of the mother.

God may be hard to find until we suddenly are made to realize the good about us in all mankind; then we are filled, because in finding one we find both.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

If we had sufficient faith and diligently tried to keep all the commandments, would we be able to rely entirely upon healing through administration and personal prayer, rather than resorting to medical treatment?

ANSWER:

There is no doubt that the gift of healing ought to be more in evidence in the church than it now is. On the whole, members of the church are not as worthy as they should be and have not the faith in the gift of healing that they should have. Some have attached too little significance to administration. This ordinance should be sacramental in nature and effect. There is no question that many blessings and benefits are available to the people who live worthy of the gift of healing.

We must not, however, regard our relationship with our Heavenly Father too lightly. God is still higher than we are, and we are still subject to his majesty and power. Though he loves us and desires to help us, he is not at our command. It was not intended in the total purpose of his creation that he should hurry to our rescue every time we want him.

God lets us do a great many things for ourselves; otherwise we would not be free. Often we are sick as a result of our poor choices, and our Heavenly Father leaves us to the operation of normal recuperative forces.

We also need to remember that our Father has honored the medical profession (Doctrine and Covenants 127: 2; 129: 2) and has used God-fearing doctors many times to bless his people. It is not amiss to believe that, even in this manner, the gift of healing is exercised. It has been said that hospitals were once regarded as the place people go to die, but that they now go there to get well. A recent survey shows that our church institution, the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, has one of the lowest mortality rates in the United States. When men use their intelligence and skill in saving the lives of their fellow men, it surely must be that they are working with the Creator in compliance with the laws of healing.

Despite the foregoing, we would continue to defend the theorem stated in the first paragraph. Many blessings are available for our people who have been denying themselves by their lack of faith and worthiness. When man has done all he can do for himself, he should feel that he can turn to his Creator and receive a blessing in harmony with the Father's will.

QUESTION:

Jesus told the Twelve (Matthew 10: 20, I. V.): "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come." Is there any record that Jesus returned to the twelve as here promised after his ascension?

ANSWER:

We know of no historical record showing that Jesus returned to his disciples at any time during their lifetime, except his appearances after his resurrection, which in no way fit the coming mentioned in the question.

While Palestine was the home of the Jews, it is well to remember that there were other groups of Israel in other parts of the earth (the Book of Mormon mentions four), of which Jesus spoke, saying, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold." These groups also have their cities, which must also be reached. Jesus, but not the apostles of that day, visited these other groups as he said he would (John 10: 16) and as the Book of Mormon says he did (III Nephi 7: 14-26). The ministry of his servants, the apostles in succession, would eventually be to all portions of Israel.

The instruction given by Jesus to his disciples in this chapter shows, upon careful examination, that it applied to more than the immediate apostles to whom he was talking. It was given also to their successors at the time this ministry would be fulfilled, for some of the things of which he spoke were not fulfilled in their days, but await the latter days. Many prophecies speak of Israel's restoration in the latter days, which will be effected by the Lord sending his authorized servants to them with the gospel, and gathering them in. It is then that all Israel will be saved, as Paul says (Romans 11: 23-28).

The coming of the Lord referred to may possibly be that mentioned by him in Luke 12: 38-55, I. V., when in latter days he will come to his servants who wait for their Lord, and will minister to them in a private way. He "will come forth and serve them," presumably in preparation for their last great work in the harvest field.

CHARLES FRY.

QUESTION:

Has the Holy Ghost a form like God and Jesus, or is it an influence, a power that comes from God and Jesus?

ANSWER:

We believe in God, the eternal Father, in Jesus Christ, his Son, and in the Holy Ghost. Of the many Scriptures which might be quoted in this connection, we note only: "Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal, without end."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 5.

There seems to be no question but that the Holy Ghost is divine (Matthew 28: 19; Acts 5: 3, 4; etc.). There also seems to be no doubt, according to the Scripture, that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are distinct from one another (John 15: 26; 16: 13, 14; John 17: 1, 8, 18, 23). The Father is the creator and ruler of the universe. The Son is our redeemer, who became man for the purpose of our redemption. The Holy Ghost is the executive of the Godhead, who applies to each believing soul the benefits of redemption. Distinctions within the Godhead are possibly better understood as diversities of divine operations rather than as differences in the divine nature.

The Holy Ghost is a person in the sense that he works by personal activities on persons. Paul, for example, evidently regarded the Spirit as possessing the essential powers of personality. He mentions the mind, or thoughts, of the Spirit (Romans 8:27); he says that the Spirit distributes spiritual gifts as he (the Spirit) wills (I Corinthians 12: 11). In similar fashion the Apostle Peter represents the Holy Ghost as being lied to by Ananias (Acts 5: 3). A being with a mind, moral sensibility, and will is not just an impersonal influence or power.

Yet, despite the foregoing, we cannot say simply, "Yes, the Holy Ghost has a form like God and Jesus." Nor is it enough to say that the Holy Ghost is a person, for the term "person" is not understood by all of us as having the same meaning. But we are safe when he recognize that the Holy Ghost is God in action, bearing witness of the Father and of the Son, carrying forward the work of Divinity among men, seeking our co-operation in our own creative development, and enlightening and empowering and encouraging us always as his present work in building the kingdom.

rheumatism, and so forth. They are most miserable in any other climate. Some delegates from Phoenix had to leave general conference. They were here two or three days and then it rained. Remember? They just could not stand the damp, cool weather. They left general conference much against their wishes and went back to the heat of Arizona. They like Arizona, and we would, too, if we were afflicted with arthritis.

A man will leave his job or sell his business, as one of the farmers did in Zion, and move to Arizona. And it is not only from Zion that they go—they go to Arizona from all over the United States. A husband will move out there because his wife is ill. Would you move, would you sell your farm, would you dispose of your business and try to get another business out in Arizona for the sake of the health of your wife? Suppose it's your child—your boy or girl. In some families the father and mother enjoy good health, but their son or daughter runs a risk of dying where they are, so they move south out of love for the child. Would you do that to improve your own health or that of some one in your family? Hundreds and thousands of people are doing so. Yet I challenge you to think carefully now—is physical health more valuable and of more concern to you than spiritual health?

Twenty out of every one hundred of our people don't care enough about their spiritual health to be in a location where they can go to church. They move away from church privileges and don't seem to care about sacrificing to insure spiritual health! The thing which Christ is concerned about is the quality of our spiritual souls, our personalities. We can see the physical characteristics of those about us, but Christ can look at us and know the kind of spiritual personalities we are. And he's concerned about our development.

That's what is on the mind of Christ! I challenge you to have upon your heart and mind the welfare of other people.

IN A FIRE in a Kansas City home recently, a mother was able to save her baby. She was alone at the time, her husband being in the hospital. Two of the older children, however, were burned to death. The papers told how the fire officials had to restrain the mother physically to keep her from rushing back through the flaming corridor in an attempt to save her other children. Had she done so she, too, would have lost her life. What causes mothers to risk their lives like that? Would you do that for your child? Would you do it for a stranger?

Suppose a fire should break out next door to your home. You know the mother is away. Perhaps the children started the fire playing with matches upstairs in their room. You know there are two or three children up there—perhaps a baby in a crib. Would you not rush up there, even at some risk to your own life? Would you be too concerned if you should singe some of your hair or get some of your skin burned if you saved a child's life? We would expect such heroism from almost everyone.

The Christ in a superlative degree had that deep concern for life. He was interested in physical life and healed people from their physical ailments, but he was primarily interested in the quality of their soul, their personality. I challenge you to have on your heart and mind the thing which was on the heart and the mind of the Christ. That is his call today. "All are called" to seek the welfare of others.

We should be interested in spiritual safety as well as physical safety, shouldn't we? As a member of the Traveling High Council, I frequently travel by train. Every time the train stops to change crews, to check the wheels, or take on more water, a little blue and white metal sign is hung on the rear coach. In big white letters it reads "Safety First." We all have noticed the big transcontinental trucks that carry, written in big words above the driver's cabin, the same motto, "Safety First." The transportation companies are interested in saving physical life.

In West Virginia I went into the factory where the famous "Wheeling Brand" metal products are made—pails, ash cans, oilcans, etc. The employee, holding a long sheet of steel, guides it through a stamping mill. Down comes a big punch and rapidly cuts out the bottom of an oilcan or some other part. In the past many of the employees got their fingers too close. There is hardly one of the older workers who has not lost from one finger to a whole hand. Now safety signs are placed in the factory. Furthermore, someone has invented a little gadget for the machine that knocks any fingers out of the way before the punch descends. Just interested in fingers! Christ is interested in fingers, too, but he is more interested in the whole spiritual soul.

In Memphis I visited the huge new veterans' hospital with Brother Van Nieuwenhuyze, one of the contractors. There were thousands of patients there—war casualties. Some had their eyes out, or an ear, jaw, or arm gone. There was one basket case—a fellow who lost both arms and both legs. Our government rightly spends millions of dollars in order to help rehabilitate these men. Think of all the hospitals in our land, including our own Sanitarium. It's a good thing to be interested in physical life. God is interested in physical life, and we should be too. But like him, we should also be interested in spiritual life. Think of the millions of people who daily are being wounded spiritually by the booby traps of our civilization. We, as Latter Day Saints, are called to be concerned about all phases of life.

I WAS THRILLED to contact some university young people of the church in Chicago not long ago and about seventy-five young men and women of our church attending Kansas University at Lawrence. One meets the same type of student at the universities in Berkeley and Los Angeles. They are interested in becoming expert lifesavers—not beach guards, of course; they're interested in becoming skilled in some profession. Some wish to become doctors; others, lawyers, teachers, merchants, etc. But more fundamental today, they are also interested in getting knowledge in order to better save people's souls. I was thrilled with that attitude. It is spreading throughout the church. So many seek knowledge only to better feed their physical bodies. Are we using our talents, strength, and power only to get food and nourishment and clothe ourselves? Shame on us if we are. Christ organized his church to save lives, and he calls us to have the same urge he has. I hope this call bothers our people, bothers them until they join wholeheartedly with the Christ to develop righteous lives.

We are called to be a light to the world. In Maine the lighthouses are on the big islands off the coast where there is danger. They don't put the lighthouse back thirty-five or forty miles on the mainland in a national park among the gardens where there is little risk to life. God calls us to be lighthouses—to be a city set upon a hill.

I repeat, we are interested in life whether we realize it or not. One time I was preaching at an all-day meeting in Wisconsin, and I noticed a small girl walking around on an old, open, stone well curb, where there was a windlass and an old oaken bucket. She lost her balance and fell over against the windlass, the handle rocking back and forth. Several screamed, while others rushed to her rescue. What causes such reactions? Why are we all concerned? Our hearts jump right up in our throats, and we tremble for five or ten minutes afterward. Instinctively God has made us concerned about saving life. God calls Latter Day Saints to be as equally concerned, if not more so, over spiritual life. Don't we care what happens to people? Are we unconcerned if they go to the prison house?

Some people will not get celestial glory who have had the opportunity in this life and have refused it; that is made very clear to us in the seventy-sixth section of our Doctrine and Covenants. Those who have had an opportunity to help Christ in this life and refused to do so may merit only terrestrial glory. They have not been "valiant." Will some people get an inferior glory because they don't care? Will we get celestial glory if we don't care?

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN LIFE? Are you interested in the spiritual welfare of your neighbors next door? Are you interested in their boy? Are you interested in young people and newly married couples? Are you sufficiently interested in your own children? How much money are you willing to spend to bring them eternal truths? How much time do you give to secure spiritual quality in your children? Are you spending more time and more money to take care of them physically than you are to feed and clothe them spiritually?

God calls us all to be lifesavers for this generation. We have it built into our nervous systems. In accepting baptism we pledge ourselves to assist the Christ. The Holy Spirit calls us to be concerned over the souls of other people in our area. There are hundreds and thousands of them within our reach. Must they go through life spiritually crippled and maybe be sent to the penitentiary of God to study and relearn the rules of life because we have not cared?

Do you care? I think you do. I hope our people can get the vision of the Christ. I hope we can see more clearly the purposes of God. I shall read that passage of Scripture again; it is as good today as it was in the time of the Apostle Paul, who wrote it to the saints at Philippi: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Again I challenge you to think, What is in the mind and the heart of Jesus? It should be in our hearts and our minds also.

base up

TRI-PURPOSE

For 2" x 2" slides, single and double-frame filmstrips

New duo-threadin . . . fast "push-in-style" or conventional . . . smooth film advance, forward or backward . . . without tearing or scratching of film . . . these are but a few of the many features of this outstanding new projector.

An improved optical system with all elements coated has resulted in a 40% increase in illumination. All elements are easily accessible in their individual mounts. Changing from slides to filmstrips or vice versa can be accomplished quickly as filmstrip masks and aperture glasses are a single self-contained unit. The wide, sturdy base of the new projector prevents tipping.

Complete with semi-automatic slide changer, coated 5" S. V. E. Anastigmat lens and attractive two-tone lift-off case, the "Instructor" 300 is being introduced at $90.00.

IN MARCH, 1947, when the West College Zion's League was organized, there was no church in which to hold meetings and no money with which to build one. This served as a challenge to the small group of young people and their leaders, Mr. and Mrs. Oval Webster. Their first project was a series of movies shown in the Little Theater of Stone Church. The next was a paper drive which brought in $94.95. The 1947 General Conference box lunch sales netted almost an even $100. Most of this money was applied to the building fund for the new West College Street Church, which is now nearing completion. Ice cream socials by summer and chili suppers by winter, with many groups working together, have brought the fund to its present $25,000 mark.

Not all activities have pointed toward making money, however. Picnics, swimming parties, and fellowship services have brought the members of the group together in the type of comradeship which leads the way to Zion's living. Thanksgiving and Christmas mean sharing, and each year since their organization the West College Leaguers have taken baskets of food to the needy in their neighborhood. Frequently before their regular meetings begin they visit some shut-in who is unable to attend church. On these occasions they present a short worship service for the one who is confined to his home. They also assist other Leagues in various projects.

When work on the new church began, masculine members of the League rolled up their sleeves and helped with the manual labor. This has meant the saving of many hard-to-get dollars, and it has given the workers a lot of satisfaction. As one of them put it, "When I leave the church after working on it, I feel as though I'm leaving a part of myself there."

Members of the West College League invite visitors to drive by the new church and look it over. When it stands completed, they extend the invitation to Saints everywhere to worship with them in the sanctuary they have helped build.

BUCHANAN, MICHIGAN.—Mrs. Hattie K. Bell of Chicago, representing the Department of Religious Education, recently taught in an interdenominational training school at Buchanan, Michigan. She taught the teachers and gave demonstration work with children in the field of junior church. In a July 31 report, she said the training work was successful and she was highly complimented for her efforts. Apostle Reed Holmes and Elder John Darling of the Department of Religious Education feel that the church was well represented in this endeavor on the part of Sister Bell.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—Members of the Omaha Branch voted recently to organize a mission in South Omaha, to be located between 26th and 27th on "D" Street. This will care for some fifty Latter Day Saint families south of Center Street. The building at that location is available, and the members of the Omaha Branch are in the process of organization to finance the matter. A soliciting committee of five members has been set up, and the present drive is for $4,000. Elder Charles Neff is the pastor in Omaha. It is noted that there are 120 Protestant families within a two-block area around the church, so the missionary opportunities are excellent.

ELDORADO, KANSAS.—Diana Kay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Briggs, was blessed on Sunday night, June 28, 1949, by Elders Myron LaPointe and J. J. Wilson. Mrs. Briggs was formerly Delroise Carroll.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—On the week end of July 27, forty-one young people from St. Louis, Missouri, made the trip by bus to Independence, where they were entertained by the Stone Church senior and teen-age Zion's Leagues. Saturday afternoon was spent in recreation on the Campus grounds. Also included in the day's events were tours through The Auditorium, the Sanitarium, and other institutions of the church. Sunday they were visitors at Stone Church.

Elder Fred O. Davies, pastor of Walnut Park and Gudgell Park congregations, presented a series of missionary sermons on the lawn of the Slover Park church in northern Independence during the week of August 1. Members of the other congregations were invited, and the average attendance each evening was about two hundred, with many nonmembers included. Music was furnished by members of the Slover Park congregation. Two such missionary endeavors for each month are planned to take place in each of the fifteen congregations in the city.

Excellent work is being done on the Campus recreational grounds. Lee Hart, supervisor and caretaker of the grounds and recreational facilities, is kept well-occupied by the numbers of Independence young people, both church members and their friends, who are using the tennis courts, the soft-ball diamond, the volley-ball courts and croquet grounds. The newest sport added is that of archery with capable instructors. The Men's Club is sponsoring the building and furnishing the materials through the donations of its members, for a new building on the Campus grounds, a combination canteen and storage room for the expensive equipment used on the grounds. The footings for the foundation are in and the work is being done rapidly by volunteer labor. Next in the offing is intensive work on a miniature golf course and an additional tennis court. Carl Mesle, as church youth director for the city of Independence, is overseeing and directing this fine contribution to the welfare of young people.

Myron Reed Schall

Coach, boxer, inventor, minister

MYRON REED SCHALL, pastor of the Sacramento (California) Branch, is a man of many talents. For the past nine years, he has served the University of California, College of Agriculture, located at Davis, California, as boxing coach. Before that, for ten years, he was a member of the physical education staff at Stanford University, where he helped to develop many of the university's fine boxing teams. He came to the Sacramento Elks Club from Stanford as physical director and instructed physical education classes, with stress placed on swimming and boxing. He remained at the Elks Club for nearly three years. His career in athletics began during World War I while he was serving in the Navy. He became middleweight boxing champion of the U.S.S. "Pocahontas," losing but one bout in fourteen months. On June 6, 1942, he shattered the world's endurance punching bag record by punishing the leather continuously for nine hours and five minutes at a tempo of 144 blows per minute.

These feats are by no means the most important accomplishments in his life, however. His interest in religion is much deeper than his interest in sports. He puts it this way: "I have a feeling of long standing that God has an investment in me. Feeling this as strongly as I do, I must be active in his service." He was baptized in the Rio Grande River near the little town of Del Norte, Colorado, on July 14, 1904. J. F. Curtis, traveling alone, baptized and confirmed him on the same day, with his mother as an only witness. His first ordination was to the office of priest on November 19, 1933, at Berkeley, California. On August 8, 1934, he was ordained an elder and elected president of the San Jose (California) Branch at the same meeting. Arthur Oakman officiated at both ordinations. On October 12, 1942, he was elected president of the Sacramento (California) Branch, which position he still holds. He served as director of religious education for Northern California District for a number of years. Following his resignation, Mrs. Schall was elected and still serves in that office.

OF HIS WIFE, Pastor Schall says, "She was the first person I ever baptized. She was graduated from Greeley State Teachers' College in Colorado and taught for eleven years before I signed her up for life. We were married while I was a freshman at Stanford, and we had two children before I received my A.B."

There are three children now. Celia May, a graduate of Graceland and Sacramento State College, is continuing her studies in speech and English towards her Master's Degree. She is president of the Northern California Graceland Alumni Association, editor of the Sacramento Branch News Sheet, and coeditor of the Southwest Mission Zion's Leaguer. Myron Reed, Jr., has been in the Naval Air corps for five years. He is an ensign and a plane commander in the Naval Air Service. He plans to leave the service soon and enter a university where he will study chemical engineering. Lawrence Roderick (Rod) has just completed his first year at Graceland and plans to become a photographer. He was ordained to the office of deacon just before entering college last fall.

In his spare time, Pastor Schall "invents." He has patents on a striking bag swivel, an abdominal board (referred to as the "sadist's delight" by his Cal-Aggie boxers), and a "down indicator" for football games. Graceland was one of the first institutions to use it.

He gives a great deal to life and derives a tremendous satisfaction from the giving. His best gift, he will tell you, is eulogized in this verse by Ella Wheeler Wilcox:

I gave a beggar from my scanty store
Of hard-earned gold. He spent the shining ore
And came again, and yet again, still cold
And hungry as before.

I gave the Christ, and through that Christ of mine
He found himself—a man, supreme, divine,
Fed, clothed, and crowned with blessings manifold,
And now he begs no more.

—"The True Gift," from Masterpieces of Religious Verse.

Future Features of the "Herald"

The "Herald" of September 26 will be devoted to special articles about our church historical properties at Nauvoo, Illinois, and Kirtland, Ohio. From historical sources, selected materials will be presented which have been long out of print and not available to many readers. A number of beautiful new pictures taken by Harold D. Smith of Nauvoo will be used. This issue will also carry an editorial by President Israel A. Smith, announcing a contest for designs for permanent markers for our church historical properties.

Let's Take Our Children to Church

By BERT EMBLETON

SOME PEOPLE think that small children should not be taken to church. They consider it to be too hard for them to keep quiet, that they cannot enjoy the service, and that the service would be spoiled for the parents and others near by. If small children are taken to church, then we must seek to overcome all these difficulties.

Should we keep children at home? Many have tried this. They usually find that as a child gets older he is even more difficult to handle if he has not been used to attending. No love of church has been developed in the child, and the parents necessarily have attended less. Visitors come to the home at church time, and gradually the link with church is broken. This is the tragic story of many of our former members now lost to the work.

The word of God is always a good guide. We have the example of infants being brought to the Master. The disciples rebuked them, but Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." In fairness to the disciples, we should note that they had not yet received of "that power from on high." When Jesus visited the people on the American continent, he spoke many wonderful things. He offered a prayer to his Father which was "so marvelous that it cannot be written." After that he blessed their little ones, and the heavens opened, and angels descended and ministered to these children. Suppose they had stayed at home with them? (See Book of Mormon, Nephi 8: 17-27, page 649.)

Our responsibilities to our children are clearly defined in latter-day revelation. (See Doctrine and Covenants 55: 2.)

in the other extreme. They seem to think that children should be allowed to wander around the church building like the "sacred cows of India." They bang on the piano, slam doors, run up and down the aisles, disarrange cupboards, spill things, and are generally destructive. (This applies to some adults too!) These two extremes are, fortunately, the exception. The general view and practice of our people is to take children to all services whenever possible from the time they are babies.

FIRST, a word to you parents who have the responsibility of caring for small children in church. There is no doubt whatever that a child's environment helps to determine the kind of adult he will be (Proverbs 22: 6). Therefore you should want your child to have a happy home life from the very beginning. Your attitude toward others also affects your children so you need to do all you can to make your little ones happy in church. In consideration of others you must try to prevent disturbances. This requires great patience, perseverance, love, and careful planning. Let your child have a drink, candy, gum, or cookies; let him look at books or draw pictures. Do all you can to keep him happy and yet minimize disturbances. As the child grows up, talk to him about church conduct, but never nag. At Communion service, you might take along a little "treat" to off-set the "left-out feeling" when the emblems are served. Always point to the day when your child can partake. Be especially careful that no unhappy incident occurs here.

When a baby cries, take it out of the place of meeting immediately unless there is no other room to go to than the one in which the service is being held, and severe weather prevents going outdoors. Try to avoid spanking, but don't pamper either. When a child is taken out of church, the experience must not be so pleasant as to encourage bad behavior.

Above all, plan, pray, and prepare for your children at church. Take quiet toys and avoid crinkly paper wrappings. No two children are quite the same, so you will need to find out what is best for yours. During times of prayer, keep your eyes open, for here truly you must "watch and pray."

The day will come when you must gradually wean your children from all these amusements in church. Eating, drawing, reading, and the like must cease. At the end of each service, be sure to clean up all the scraps of paper, crumbs, etc. Soon the children can be taught to do this. If you take each step gradually, you will see the results and be thankful. However, there will be times when, in spite of all your efforts, you will be embarrassed and humiliated. You will be crushed by a remark or look from someone who is disturbed. This may be quite unintentional. You will go home resolved never to bring your little ones again.

Here we have the concrete evidence that the Spirit of God works with his people. As you see your children develop a love for Jesus and his church, comfort will come to you. As their thoughts and actions become church-centered, as you see them learning of the gospel, you will rejoice. Then before the next church meeting you will prepare again for the struggle.

AND NOW A WORD to those who do not have the care of little ones in church. If you come to church with a desire to serve, here indeed you can do much. A kind word, or a smile will work wonders. You can help by making room for parents with little children so they may sit near the exit. Above all, be sympathetic. Remember, the parents of small children are tired. Sunday morning is not a leisurely time for them. They arise at least as early as on week days. They must wash, feed, and dress their energetic children and see that they don't get dirty again, in addition to making their own preparations. After carrying a baby or traveling by bus, street car, or automobile, they probably arrive at church weary. Try to make their hour or so at church as pleasant as possible.

TO THOSE who minister to the little ones, I suggest a place be provided where parents can take small children when they cry. Church school classes for all ages help. Even a very small child should be instructed as well as entertained.

Junior church in its proper function is another asset. By proper function I mean that children should not lose the opportunity to witness and have part in the ordinances of the church. And may I say a word about sermons? When there are small children in the congregation, think of them when making preparation. Speak to them, too. It will help the whole service.

Adults must set a good example at all times. So many of the incorrect things we see children do are those things they copy from us. I am not trying to set up any "rules of conduct" but am attempting to make helpful suggestions. With the love of the Master in your heart, be patient with the children who are not yet old enough to understand.

In conclusion I say this to the children. As you grow up, try to help your parents. Giving you the opportunity to "grow up in the church" has been a hard task. If you respond and show them you love Jesus, the church, and them, they will be happy over what they have done for you. Learn to think of others.

Together let us labor in love "till we in the unity of the faith all come to the knowledge of the Son of God."

Convert Your Companion

By CHARLES EDGAR WARD

When you marry outside the church, should you convert your companion before or after the wedding? . . . The author brings a simple, persuasive answer to this question. Will it work in all cases?

BOB was from a Latter Day Saint home. He was grounded in the principles of the gospel. He faced the facts of life with clear eyes. He had seen more than one marriage where the husband went to one church and the wife to another only to end up by neither going to any church.

He had the desire of all normal young people. He wanted to establish a home, but his desire went further than that: He wanted a Latter Day Saint home. He had always said, "I will marry a Latter Day Saint girl."

Then Bob met Mary. She was everything he had always pictured in his ideal girl, but she was not a member of the church.

Bob went into conference with himself. That night the pastor had spoken from the text, "Lovest thou me, more than these?" It was a problem. Was he required to sacrifice that which seemed at the time to contain his life's happiness? Being a true Saint, he "took it to the Lord in prayer."

NOT LONG AFTER THIS, as he was preparing his church school lesson, his eyes fell on Luke 22:32, "But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail thee not, and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren."

Those four words—"when thou art converted"—seemed to be an answer to his problem. He asked himself, "If I am converted, why cannot I convert her?" His heart was light—it was just a matter of salesmanship. He had sold himself to her; now he must sell his church.

Bob started his selling campaign the following Sunday afternoon. He casually suggested that they go to church in the evening. He saw that she met the pastor and a representative group of the congregation. He saw that she came away with a good impression.

One evening in conversation with Mary's parents, he mentioned the "Word of Wisdom" as a teaching of the church and attributed his own good health to a life-long adherence to it.

Later he brought the pastor to Mary's house—not as a missionary searching for converts, but as a friend he wished to know his other friends. All the time, Bob was bringing to the attention of the family the truth and beauty of the everlasting gospel. He did not preach; he practiced. He did not argue; he demonstrated.

Such a good impression was made upon Mary's folks that the pastor was able to hold several cottage meetings for round-table discussion at the home.

Months later Mary asked for baptism, knowing what she was doing. She was truly converted. She did not join Bob's church only because she loved him but because she loved Christ.

Then Bob's dream came true. He married a Latter Day Saint girl, and established a Latter Day Saint home.

The time to convert is before the wedding. After marriage there are plenty of adjustments to make without trying to change religious opinions.

Where Are the Men?

By LLOYD E. CLEVELAND

Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

THERE WAS A DAY when, as a nation, we were said to be protected by “iron men and wooden ships.” In that day, men of courage and resourcefulness measured up to the responsibility of building a new type of society. It was truly a hazardous venture, and the iron men of that time would ill-fit the organized, often semi-regimented routine of modern living. Today we fashion our ships of iron, but what has happened to the souls of the men who man them?

We speak, of course, in figurative language. It is not our purpose to impugn the courage of any man, but rather to bemoan the false gods of materialism and technology which sap the spiritual lifeblood of any people who forget God. Almost lost in the babble of today’s voices are the few who warn of danger and destruction, protesting that our brave new world is neither brave nor new. Our great need, say these few, is for good men and women, not technological advancement. Our greatest failure is our inability to produce such persons in large enough numbers. And this brings the problem right home to our own doorstep. Have we neglected our mission as a church? Have we a formula for filling this need?

ONE LATTER DAY SAINT leader has said that our primary purpose is “to bring the gospel of Christ into the lives of men and the lives of men into the kingdom of God.” If this purpose is to be accomplished, we must have men—iron men—who are willing not only to rise in prayer meetings all over the land and say they are dedicated to the service of the Master but to prove themselves in the thick of battle. Where are these men?

Recent general conferences have been notable from the standpoint of advanced classwork, capable direction, and the determination to go forward, but time after time many of us have asked ourselves and others, “Where are the men?” as we surveyed the valiant but small group on the rostrum.

Yes, where are the quorums of Seventy who should be witnessing, the complete district organizations, the flood of alert “local” men? Where, too, are those lay members who have “studied to show themselves approved” and who keep their “growing edge” sharp so that they can evangelize their immediate friends and neighbors?

Look around you. Then take a good look at yourself in the mirror. Are you one of the men (or women), or are you just another church member wandering loosely about looking for Zion? Would you be startled if it suddenly appeared, ready-made and with all the latest conveniences? Ah, if it only could be! But all the wishing in the world will not make it so—not unless that wishing is a prelude to action.

IN RECENT YEARS I have talked to a great many young men engaged in various types of work. If our conversation veered around to church work, as it often did, these trained and talented persons almost invariably evinced a deep concern for the progress of the church and a willingness to give their time and abilities if called upon. Yet for some reason, in spite of our great need for full-time men, these individuals are not chosen. Why?

Perhaps we can find the answer if we are not afraid to critically evaluate our actions, both as members of a general church and of a local congregation. Since we are units of both, owing allegiance to both and working for the advancement of both at the same time, it is often pointed out that the general church should not weaken the local branches of that church by drawing away men whose contribution is of great value locally. Again, if a person fills an important position in the business world, he may be told that it would be unwise for him to give up that position, on the assumption that his value to the program of the church is greater here than it would be in full-time church work. It is possible that this reasoning is sound in some cases and not in others. In any case, if the individual concerned is thoroughly imbued with the ideal of service he may and should continue to labor wherever openings develop. To assume that every such talented individual should automatically be ordained and set apart for general or even local church work would indeed be unwise. Still, pleadingly, we cry, "Lord, if not these, where are the men?"

AT THIS POINT we may have to reorient our thinking. We may, in humility, be forced to admit to ourselves that while our human judgment would sanction and even expect the setting apart of more and more men, we should accede prayerfully to the will of God as expressed through his chosen servants. We should pray for the men God has already chosen as laborers in his vineyard and support them in every possible way. One important point to be remembered is in connection with the term "humility." By this term, which appears so frequently in our literature and thinking, we do not imply a blind and unreasoning obedience to any cause nor the total submergence of personality of the individual member. All of us treasure the God-given right to differ from the opinions of others. Yet Jesus desires that we be one, even as he and his Father are one. This does imply humility and love, and the blending of personalities in such a way that the objectives of this, Jesus' church, may be attained.

Where are the men? They are all around you in every walk of life. Some are ready now. Some are preparing. Some will never respond to the call because of cloudy vision which blinds them to life's realities and flatters them into choosing inferior substitute goals of achievement.

Personally speaking, I grew up with the admonition, "Get thy spindle and distaff ready, and God will give thee flax," ringing in my ears. A wise admonition, indeed. Wherever I turn my hand now I find more "flax" than I can care for.

THIS LITTLE GEM from a clipping will bear mulling over: "Nothing is particularly hard if divided into small jobs." Are you the person for one of those jobs?

Choosing men to handle the affairs of God here upon the earth is a grave responsibility. In the early days of the Restoration a stern rebuke came to those in administrative authority concerning the ordination of men "called but not chosen" (Doctrine and Covenants 92: 1). Let us search ourselves. If we think we are qualified to serve in some respect, let us kneel in the same sincere attitude exemplified by young Joseph Smith and ask God to open the way for us. As much as Jesus needs workers today, the answer will not be long in coming if we have truly prepared ourselves.

One thing we should try to avoid. Let's not, in football parlance, become side-line quarterbacks. It's very easy and much more comfortable to be a spectator and yell instructions and insults from the bleachers, but if we expect any of the glory we'd better get our equipment on and get into the game. This is the eleventh hour. Daily we see the fulfillment of revelation. Millions who are yet in darkness wait to hear their first gospel sermon from men authorized of God and his Son, Jesus Christ. Are you willing to let those who seek but cannot find by themselves die for want of a man—a man such as you could be with a little more effort and prayer? Where is that zeal, that devotion of yesteryear which would not let men rest until they told the story? Pray God that it might flame anew in our hearts and find abundant flower in our lives as we march forth—not in dozens, nor yet hundreds, but in thousands, to do battle for souls in the ceaseless conflict between the forces of good and evil.

Behold, the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God; yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God; therefore, if you will ask of me, you shall receive; if you will knock, it shall be opened unto you.—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 2.

Devotions of the Heart

CHURCH-GOING is an established habit, recognized for its value in reminding us of spiritual needs and blessings. By going to church one may renew his spirit through participation in a planned service, calculated to turn the mind into channels of peace and deeper thought.

But there are devotions of the heart too . . . those precious moments during the week when we close our minds to the world around us and seek a quiet interlude with our loving and sympathetic Master. Whether we be riding a crowded bus, or in a busy office, or in the fields, or at home where duty clamors for our attention, these moments of withdrawal for devotion provide an oasis for our souls. They offer a renewed contact with the source of our strength. They bring a needed tranquillity . . . and an answer to problems which may seem too much for us. We find in these moments real release from tension, a "second wind" of hope and faith, a new belief in the goodness and purpose of Life.

Let us enter into these devotions of the heart often. They are the most sincere form of worship, the most satisfying complement to our everyday living. —LOUISE WRIGLEY with a yearly increase allotted for future operation. It is the plan of the Independence Community Music Association to go on with the orchestra concerts, including guest artists, co-operation on the Messiah, the May Festival, and perhaps the multiple piano concert. The association knows that from now on some of the concerts will be presented by some of the best musical talent in the entire country, and all of this will be free to the citizens of Independence. The interest is keen, the challenge is great, the determination is to improve the community through cultural interests. The hope is for a steady, thoughtful, and well-planned growth.

The latest development in the activities of the association has been the arousing of interest among the people of Independence in a cultural or arts center. There is no (civic) auditorium in which to have concerts, plays, opera, or lectures. It has been necessary to use a very poor setup, but now there are well-formed plans for the establishment of a community center for Independence. A committee has been formed and has sent to each organization and club a request for assistance in making plans for such a center. The response has been excellent, so it is the hope of the Community Music Association that some day a concert may be held in a very lovely concert hall. "Truly from dreams a wonderful reality may occur, and it is our hope to keep the idea of music education, participation of all, simplicity, a true presentation of the arts, accompanied by deepest appreciation for our many blessings."

quillity. His promise, in the words of the King James version, is, "Ye shall find rest unto your souls." Goodspeed translates it, "Your hearts shall find rest." Interpret these any way you wish, the ultimate effect is the same. With the intellect and emotions at peace, the body can rest.

It isn't the work we do that wears us out and breaks us down, sending some to the doctor, some to the hospital, and some to the asylum. It is the worry, the fear, the tension, the dislike of some people, and the hatred of others—the fighting and clashing of wills—that shortens our years and makes miserable the little time we have. The program of Jesus,

"Learn from me," is a cure for all that. It is his prescription of rest for the heart and soul that will set us free from pain and trouble.

The Easy Yoke

Modern Christians may find a stumbling block in the expression, "My yoke is easy." Who wants to be harnessed like an ox, even for eternal glory? Many people in the time of Jesus were too poor to own beasts of burden. Wheeled vehicles were scarce, and roads on which they could be used were few. If a man needed anything transported, he might have to carry it himself. The yoke was a convenience that saved the arms and let a burden rest comfortably on the shoulders, if not too heavy. The yoke was a common experience and a commoner sight in those days. Compared with all other yokes, that which Jesus placed upon the people was light and easily borne, for it was regulated by love and mercy.

It is not a case of wearing the yoke of Jesus, or none at all. Some people wear the yoke of business, which can be so heavy it wears the heart out and shortens life. Some wear the yoke of professional service, which exacts its toll. Some people have destroyed their lives wearing the yoke of indulgence and pleasure. And then, of course, there are the victims who wear the yoke of sin.

The yoke of sin—to consider it for a few moments—is merciless. It takes no consideration of the suffering or death of the victim; it clings to him to the end of his life. The unhappiness and sorrow it brings to many, to the innocent relatives as well as the offenders, is immeasurable.

All life carries with it a servitude of some kind. We cannot avoid it. All we can do is to make a choice. Fortunate and happy are those who choose the yoke of Christ, which is weighted and adjusted by infinite love and kindness.

Learn of Jesus. Learn from him. He is the kindly, considerate master. His yoke is adjusted to our shoulders, not to carry his burdens, but to help us carry our own. —L. J. L.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are requested for Mary E. Boyce, a patient at the Alberta Provincial Mental Hospital, and for the members of her family who need strength, courage, and wisdom during this time.

Mrs. George Smith of Knoxville, Iowa, asks the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed and become useful in God's work.

Prayers are requested for Cora Emerson of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, who is severely afflicted.

Mrs. W. A. Simmons of Spearman, Texas, asks the Saints to pray that the people in the community may overcome their prejudice toward the church. She would like for them to become interested in the work.

Mrs. Rose Sodersten of Clearwater, Nebraska, asks the Saints to pray that she may soon be able to meet with other church members often and be of service to those about her.

ENGAGEMENTS

Lusha-Cooper

Mr. and Mrs. Marion F. Cooper of Chicago, Illinois, announce the engagement of their daughter, Barbara Janice, to Donald Lusha also of Chicago, son of Mr. and Mrs. K. D. Lusha. Both attended Graceland College last year, from which Donald was graduated in June, and to which Janice will return this fall.

WEDDINGS

Williams-Buck

Ella May Buck, daughter of Mrs. Lois Cline of Merwin, Missouri, and Joseph David Williams, son of Elder and Mrs. David N. Williams of Kewanee, Illinois, were married July 31 at the Walnut Park Reorganized Church in Independence, Missouri, the groom's father officiating. Both Mr. and Mrs. Williams attended Graceland College. They are making their home in Independence.

Treadway-Corbin

Mary L. Corbin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Corbin of Randall, Illinois, and John Treadway, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. John Treadway, Sr., were married at the Galesburg (Illinois) Reorganized Church on August 7, Elder Ambrose King officiating. They are honeymooning in Canada.

BIRTHS

A daughter, Pamela Jane, was born on March 22 to Mr. and Mrs. Pearl Philbrook of Springfield, Massachusetts.

Mr. and Mrs. William G. Searles of Racine, Wisconsin, announce the birth of a son, Jeffrey Paul, born July 18. Mrs. Searles is the former Darline Lafferty.

A son, Jerry Wayne, was born on April 22 to Mr. and Mrs. Claude E. Hendricks of Henderson, Illinois.

DEATHS

CARSON.—Ada, was born June 3, 1871, at Springfield, Missouri, and died July 7, 1949, at Pensacola, Florida. She was reared in Oklahoma by a foster mother. Her first marriage was to the Reverend Kenneth Wickliffe, a Baptist minister; seven children were born to them, five of which preceded her in death. Following the death of her first husband, she was married to John Taylor; one son was born to this union. Mr. Taylor also died, and she married J. P. Carson, a member of the Reorganized Church. She was baptized and confirmed on December 5, 1915, at Pittsburg, Kansas. At the time of her death, she and her husband were helping to organize a mission at Pensacola.

She is survived by her husband, J. P. Carson; two sons: Thomas Wickliffe of American Falls, Idaho, and Archie D. Taylor of Houston, Texas; one daughter, Mrs. Rachel Baldrige of Chanute, Kansas; nine grandchildren; and seven great-grandchildren. Burial was in the Elmwood Cemetery in Chanute.

BLOUNT.—Dr. Stephen Landon, was born at San Augustine, Texas, on March 9, 1873, the eldest son of Thomas William and Mary Elizabeth Rather Blount. He was graduated from Texas A. and M. College in 1896, and in 1898 from the University of Pennsylvania with a degree in veterinary medicine. He practiced in West Virginia, South Africa (during the Boer War), Texas, and Illinois. In 1930 he was married to Betty Carson of St. Louis, Missouri, and moved to a farm near Blythedale, Missouri, later making their home in Bethany, Missouri. He died at the age of seventy-six.

Besides his wife, he leaves a son, Clinton W. Blount of New York City; two daughters: Mrs. Eugenia Bauer of St. Louis, and Mrs. Pearl Moore of Delavan, Wisconsin; two brothers: Frank and Thomas Blount of San Augustine, and a sister, Mrs. Emma Johnson of Hot Springs, Arkansas. Funeral services were held at the Wheeler Mortuary, Elder Moroni Traxler officiating. Burial was in the Pythian Cemetery.

SMITH.—Verlie Ethel Jeffrey, was born July 1, 1905, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and died unexpectedly on July 30, 1949. She spent most of her life in Council Bluffs until seven years ago when she went east, residing at Washington, D. C., and Greenbelt, Maryland. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1913 and was active in the choir, Music Club, and Temple Builders organization.

She is survived by her husband, O. A. Smith; three daughters: Mrs. Herbert Faulkner, Jerrie and Vicki, all of Greenbelt; her parents, Mr and Mrs. Thomas Jeffrey of Council Bluffs; and a brother, Ralph Jeffrey of Omaha, Nebraska. Funeral services were held at the Woodring Mortuary in Council Bluffs, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Burial was in Cedar Lawn Cemetery, Council Bluffs.

 WANTED

This editor needs a place for the disposal of things that are near the end of their usefulness, good but not quite good enough. An eraser nearly worn out. A pencil almost too short. Half a bottle of pills for which the disease has been forgotten. A typewriter ribbon gone dry, but with no holes punched in it. It could be reinked if one only knew how. A small knife with one blade broken, one dull. Odd pieces of scratch paper for something that will probably never be written. A nice collection of blotters, some of them pre-war. A clock that used to keep pretty fair time, but nobody knows how to fix it. A fan that runs when the mood is upon it. Economy forbids junking them, efficiency forbids using them. What should one do?

This reminds one of the story of the man who was dying. He wasn't good enough to go to heaven, nor bad enough to go to hell, so they just let him get well and sent him back to earth to see what he would do next.

 DOGS

Dogs know more about "How to Win Friends and Influence People" than people do. Even Dale Carnegie could learn something from them.

Have you ever watched a dog looking for new friends? He is the world's best ambassador of good will. He offers love and companionship in return for a little food and care. He flags you down with his tail, puts on the most ingratiating manners, and smiles in his doggy way. You must be tough to resist his salesmanship in favor of dogs.

A small abandoned waif slipped into the shop while the door was swinging shut. In ten minutes she had begged a breakfast, made friends with everybody, had a sack bed arranged, and began a nap. Returned to the street, she cried at the door in a shrill, pathetic, off-key, quavery soprano. Big H. found a home for her with a lad over in Bronzeville, and she accepted gratefully.

People could learn a lot from dogs, if they only would.

 OFFICE

We didn't know until last Friday that Big H., our Chief Expediter, the Man Who Can Do Everything, has an office. It is in the broom closet under the stair. He has no chair because he never has time to sit down. No desk, because he writes standing up. "A file is a place where people lose things," he says, "so I just use boxes." One of them contains an unclassified assortment of brads, twine, electric plugs, screws, washers, tape, and 2,431 other things. "I find them by the touch system," he said, fumbling in the depths for a tack. It came out, sticking in the end of his finger. "Works perfectly," he said, removing it carefully. . . . Price lists are tacked to the door; also bills, receipts, and accounts of the employees' canteen, which he manages. . . . Does something break? He repairs it. Does a gadget refuse to work? He persuades it. Is your "Herald" a little late getting to the post office? He comes quick to help. He even keeps a big special comforting smile for hurt feelings. His is the office that helps all the other offices get their work done.

"The Sacrament"

ON THE FIRST SUNDAY of September many Latter Day Saints will say, "I attended the Sacrament meeting." Now more and more of us know that this church observes several sacraments, and it is in order to ask which one was being administered. The Communion, or Lord's Supper, is the sacrament most commonly suggested to the mind when the term is loosely used. But it could be the blessing of a child, ordination, or it might be that of marriage.

The church has never officially acted to declare which of its rites and ceremonies are sacraments and which do not have sacramental value, however there is no doubt but that we could have agreement on seven of them. Then why should we carelessly refer to one as "The sacrament"? The answer seems to be that the distinction has not been clearly kept by our writers and teachers. Scriptural support for the restricted use of this general term can be found even in the Scriptures. Therefore, it is not a matter of right but of clearness. Let's say what we mean and what all others will understand. The simplest statement of the fact is to say, "I attended the Communion service."

Introducing...

REED M. HOLMES (page 5) was born in Mansfield, Washington, June 17, 1917. He was graduated from high school at Cœur d'Alene, Idaho, in 1934; from Graceland College in 1937; and from the University of Iowa in 1939. He has done graduate work at the University of Seattle and with the Boston University School of Theology.

Brother Holmes has been under General Church appointment since June, 1940, and has served in the Columbia District, Southern Ohio, and the Atlantic States Mission. Immediately prior to his call as a member of the Quorum of Twelve in 1948, he was president of Southern New England District and pastor of Boston Branch. He is now serving as Director of Religious Education and editor of Guide-Lines, as well as missionary supervisor of Eastern Colorado, Kansas, and Oklahoma.

On August 4, 1943, he married Dorothy Lois Carter at Columbus, Ohio. They have three children: David, 5; Carol Louise, 3; and Joy Ellen, 2.

Brother Holmes' special interests are evangelism, public relations, religious education, and effective priesthood administration.

PAUL A. WELLINGTON (page 8) was born in Mapleton, Kansas, April 15, 1919. He was graduated from high school at Fulton, Kansas, in 1937, and received his B.S. in commercial education from the Kansas State Teachers College at Pittsburg, Kansas, in 1946. He is now living in Seattle, Washington.

Brother Wellington was married to Fay Young, April 25, 1943. They have one child: Linda Anne, aged 5.

Before serving 3½ years in the army, he taught school one year. Soon after his return from service, he went under General Conference appointment. He was ordained a priest in 1938, an elder in 1943. His present mission is Seattle District, with Seattle as an objective.

His hobbies are radio and photography.

RUBY TINKHAM (page 10) last wrote for us in the issue of April 16, 1949, and was introduced to our readers at that time.

From 1928 to 1943 he was a professional photographer in New London, Connecticut; from 1944 to 1946 he managed the Elko Photo Products of Kansas City; at the present time he is photostat operator.

Brother Rondomanski has written several musical compositions and had them published. He has played in concerts and with orchestras for many years. At the present time he is a member of the Independence Symphony Orchestra and other local musical organizations.

Brother Rondomanski makes his home in Independence, Missouri, with his wife, Blanche; his daughter, Shirley, 17, and his son, Timothy, 16.

News & Notes

BANDERA, TEXAS, REUNION

Apostle W. Wallace Smith reports a fine reunion was held at Bandera, Texas, the week of July 24. It was a joint gathering of Southwest Texas and Central Texas Districts. Two hundred and seventy-five campers were registered for full attendance. Sundays brought a total of 404 and 365, respectively. Nine baptisms climaxed the week's worship.

President Israel A. Smith was present for the first week end. Other members of the staff included Apostle Smith; Mrs. Rosamond Smith, who taught a women's class; Bishop D. O. Chesworth; Mrs. Alice Chesworth, who was in charge of music; Seventy Z. Z. Renfro; and Elder Carl Mesle, in charge of young people.

BAPTISMS FOR JULY

Total baptisms reported in July for the church as a whole amount to 647. This is the largest number since July, 1929, when the total for July was 786. The total number for the year thus far is 2,587, the largest in twenty-five years with the single exception of 1930 which at the end of July had a total of 2,625. Children's Day baptisms reported in July are 405.

APOSTLE HIELD IN INTERNATIONAL MAGAZINE

In the September 1, 1949, issue of the "Pemex Travel Club Bulletin," published by "Petroleos Mexicanos" at Mexico City, Mexico, there is an illustrated article on Palenque by Apostle Charles R. Hield. Included among the pictures is a photograph of the Temple of the Cross, the Temple of the Sun, and a picture of the author beside the interior plaza of the palace at Palenque, which is really the ruin of a magnificent Mayan city. In the article Apostle Hield tells of his travels there and of the people he meets, with information concerning the archaeological features of the ancient city.

BUSY WEEK END FOR DeLAPP

Bishop G. L. DeLapp drove to Lamoni, Iowa, Saturday morning, August 15, to officiate at the funeral of Joseph C. Danielson, long a business and community leader in that city. On Sunday morning he went to Stewartsville, Missouri, to deliver the 11 o'clock address at Far West Reunion. Sunday evening he was speaker at the campus service in Independence.

BAPTISMS IN ST. LOUIS

In a letter dated August 2, Frank McDonald, pastor of the St. Louis, Missouri, Branch, says: "At our baptismal service in June, seven children and three adults were baptized. One of the adults completed another family circle; the other two adults—a husband and wife—brought a new circle into the light of the gospel. We have several prospects for another baptismal service in September."

BAPTISMS IN NORTHERN INDIANA

Luther Troyer reports that in the Northern Indiana District there have been fifty-two baptisms since the first of the year. Of the fifty-two, he baptized eight—seven of them in Detroit.

The Gospel of Work

“Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work.”

—Exodus 20: 9.

Labor Day

On Monday, September 5, the nation pays its respect to those who work. Union labor is responsible for the recognition that is given on this day and largely figures in the ceremonies, public meetings, and parades with which the event is commemorated. But, by courtesy, we remember all who work, and honor them on this day.

Some years ago a thoughtful young contributor wrote an article for us entitled, “The Dignity of all Labor.” That is a good thought for this time. There is dignity and honor in all useful and productive labor.

The Fourth Commandment

It is a curious combination that includes the “Law of Work” with the fourth commandment, concerning the keeping of the Sabbath. Since it was forbidden on the Sabbath, work makes a negative entry into the Ten Commandments. We have given disproportionate attention to “not working” on the Sabbath.

Does it appear necessary, in view of the well-known laziness of the human race, that we should give so much attention to the negative part of the commandment? Too many people are obeying that part already.

The really important part of the “Law of Work,” from the viewpoint of life and economics, is this: “Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work.” God tells us to get busy and do something; it is time to go to work. When our most remote ancestor was expelled from Eden for mismanagement of his responsibility, he was told, “In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground.”

God Works

God himself believed and practiced the “Law of Work.” His Son worked also. Jesus said, “My Father worketh hitherto, and I work” (John 5: 17). Goodspeed translates it, “My Father is still at work, and I work too.” That agrees with latter-day revelation, in which the Lord said, “There is no end to my works” (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23).

The Scriptures record only one time in all eternity when the Lord took a vacation (Genesis 2: 2). A rest must have been needed after the prodigious work of making the world in six days. It was on that day that the Lord made the human race, and it must have been a tedious chore. So many people, monotonously alike, and complaining from the moment they began to draw breath. A rest was in order.

The Principle of Rest

God knew that his people would need rest. He prescribed rest for them each night, and to this he added one day in seven. Sometimes, when the work is hard and the weather is hot, six days can seem as long as eternity.

Jesus recognized that many people are overworked, that they are tired and need a chance to rest and recuperate. To them he said, “Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.”—Matthew 11: 28.

The Reward of Labor

In the parable of the vineyard (Matthew 20: 1-15), Jesus indicated what he would have done in case of a labor dispute. There was no collective bargaining then, no provision for government to interfere. Under circumstances like that today there would have been a strike, and half the crop of grapes would have dried on the vines before a new contract could have been written. Modern improvements can always make things a little worse for us. Jesus asked those men the question, “Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own?” Today many an employer is asking himself that question, and the government’s answer to him is, “no!”

Injustices of the past, on both sides, have still to be remedied. It is a little hard to comprehend some strikes today; but one should not judge except on a basis of a complete knowledge of the circumstances. Hardships are now being suffered by the people, due to excessive costs of materials and excessive demands for wages. We cannot see where this will end, but we may presume that it will not be good.

The Good Workman

One of our good men, who served in the war, building for destruction, showed a fine house plan. Now he is building for peace. We went out to see the house he had built from plan. It was a thing of beauty—practical, substantial, and useful. As a creative and competent artist, as well as an artisan, he had approached his task with the best tools, materials, and skills that could be employed. That house, with many others like it, is helping to realize the dream of “Zion the beautiful,” which beckons our people on.

In honoring labor on this holiday, we think of those men who are studying to show themselves approved, workmen who need not be ashamed (to paraphrase Paul). There is dignity in all good and competent labor. There is honor in honest effort. There is respect in thorough preparation. One writer said, “There is nothing wrong with this country that work will not cure.”

Across the Desk

THOSE ATTENDING the Southern California Reunion set aside August 3, 1949, to pay tribute to a member of their district whom the whole church has reason to remember with appreciation. At the request of the First Presidency, Elder John W. Rushton read their greetings and paid his personal tribute in behalf of the Los Angeles Metropolitan and Southern California Districts. These tributes follow:

Dear Doctor:

Here, today this group represents the many, many friends throughout the church world to whom, as counselor, minister, and physician, you have ministered with understanding, sympathy, healing skill, rare devotion, and unflinching sacrifice. Since 1915—at least to the members of the church in the two districts of which this reunion consists—you and your dear wife, Ida May ministered to the bodies, minds, and souls, through all conditions with tender and efficient skill, and by your Christian personality gave comfort, encouragement, and healing so that you are enshrined in their hearts and minds. They wish you to know now of the affectionate esteem in which you are held and join unreservedly in the fine tribute which the members of the First Presidency have requested to be read at this time on their behalf:

Dr. A. W. Teel
Los Angeles, California

Dear Brother Teel:

The Presidency joins your many friends in extending congratulations and good wishes on this occasion in your honor and express appreciation of the contribution you have made to the church at large, and to its members in many places, over the long years you have been active in your dual professions of physician and minister.

For the faithful and efficient service rendered this organization in official capacity as physician to the church, we acknowledge our indebtedness, ever mindful of your conscientious effort to impart information to the membership through church publications and in public address. Through these ministrations you have established yourself in the hearts of the people and rendered a service which will long be held in grateful remembrance.

But from those whose privilege it has been to know you personally and to benefit from your wise counsel and skillful treatment in times of physical and spiritual distress will come the greatest meed of praise and gratitude. Such have realized that your kindly helpfulness has been lighted by the gracious Spirit of the Master, whose hand is ever extended to the unfortunate and afflicted.

We have shared with you the great loss and sorrow which has recently come into your life through the passing of your good and gracious companion, who was ever a partner in your good works.

In behalf of the General Church, the Presidency extends saintly greetings, and the earnest wish and prayer that your days of strength may be lengthened and that the blessing of health and joy of service may be yours until:

"He who bade thee rise and work Bids thee now lie down again."

The First Presidency
(Signed) I. A. Smith.
F. Henry Edwards.

SINCE YOU WERE GRADUATED from Keokuk Medical College and became an alumnus of the Iowa State University, many honors have come to you which are chronicled in the "Red Book of the American Specialists in Eye, Ear, Nose, and Throat." In addition to being a Fellow of the American Medical Association, you were appointed by the late Governor Hadley of Missouri to be a member of the visiting staff, in which capacity you visited all the state institutions. For several years you were elected to be coroner of Clarke County, Missouri; also, you were honored in being elected to the State Legislature at Jefferson City, Missouri, which position you relinquished when Mrs. Teel and you decided to make your home in California.

Besides the many and exacting duties of private practice, you found time to respond to the call of the University of Southern California and of the University of California at Los Angeles for lecture work. You also contributed for a number of years articles on diseases, diagnosis, pathology, and hygiene to the Herald, popularizing expert and professional information in this wide field.

We remember with appreciation also the ministerial work which you have given ungrudgingly as elder and later as high priest. For some years you served as assistant pastor and afterwards as pastor of the Central Church of Los Angeles through a critical period of transition.

In 1917 when our country was engaged in war and the call came for medical men to go into the battle zone, you enlisted and for over two years served patriotically your country in time of need. Among other services you were Ophthalmologist in the Inter-Allied Commission and treated many of the Russian prisoners of war in Germany.

IN OCTOBER of 1928, you responded to the call of the church, and until 1947 served as Church Physician. You became a familiar figure teaching in the large classes at General Conference, among which yours had the reputation of being the largest of such gatherings. Here you became still more widely known and revered.

When you began your professional career, the country doctor's life was an heroic epic. It is portrayed vividly in such classic writings as Ian MacLaren's "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," and Dr. Hertzler's "Life of a Country Doctor." Many of us recall the suggestive painting of Sir Luke Fildes "The Crisis," in which the doctor's devotion to human need in times of suffering is so beautifully portrayed. This is the classification in which your early life can be placed.

At this point we pay tribute to Hear Ye Him

Based on a sermon

By APOSTLE REED HOLMES

THERE IS A PARK in Boston where anything can happen and usually does. In the early days of America, witch hunters used to dunk their so-called witches there. Men were placed in the pillory for minor offenses. They were subject to the jeers and taunting of those who were good or at least hadn't been caught in their evil. Down through the years, Boston Common, like Times Square, has developed a reputation for soapbox orators. Almost any Sunday afternoon you will find the followers of various religious denominations and political parties competing for your attention. Mostly these are radicals pleading for your sympathy.

One Sunday afternoon a year ago we strolled by, tasting this speech and that, and came across one of the fellow travelers of Communism. He was rambling on, radically condemning this nation for what it had done and had not done. All of a sudden a little man, evidently of English extraction, stuck his nose almost into the face of the speaker and said, "Mister, do you believe in God?" The Communist paused, then stammered his way through a denial of God, still pleading for followers.

There are many voices which clamor for our attention. These voices have learned to speak intimately to us. They use every appeal to get close to our hearts and minds. They use every enticement to coax us in the way they want us to go, even in the selling of shaving cream and in the advertising of movies. Words and pictures appeal to our lower motives. Our nation is more noted for its cheesecake than for its convictions.

Men and women have grown accustomed to selling themselves short in order that they might give testimonials. Even prominent people who have won public esteem by making good sell themselves for a mess of pottage. One of the most disgusting advertisements of our day shows self-styled men of distinction debasing themselves in the sale of liquor. These add their voices to all others who seek our allegiance and plead for our support to their particular cause. We are tempted on every side by money, by low moral standards, by prestige. As individuals we need to be alert to the true nature of the voices which beckon to us.

There are voices clamoring for the attention of our families, too. You and I who have children know that one of the most regrettable things about our national life is the emphasis placed upon pleasure. Every enticement is used by those who have pleasure for sale to speak to the emotions of youth and adults. They make us a pleasure-seeking crowd. We have even come to measure life and happiness by the standard of pleasure. We are more apt to ask, "Is it fun?" than, "Is it worth while?" The prevalence of these appeals makes our children so accustomed to evil that they give in to evil as a matter of course. The family is tempted by voices which would divide and conquer. The family must be on the alert to the quality of the voices which call for our loyalty.

OUR NATION, along with other nations, is spoken to with intimacy by various ones who want to change the pattern of our life. One of the great historians, Arnold Toynbee, has said that our day is much like this—we stand between two blaring loud speakers which compete for our attention. Each one proclaims a way to use our resources and to fashion our life. Many doubt that we shall be able to exercise enough intelligence and determination to choose the better way. And because there is so much doubt that mankind shall choose the right way, we are confronted with fear on every hand. We are not so afraid of the blasting of the A-bomb as we are of the inability of men to use atomic energy wisely. Our fear rises out of our doubt that we shall have the resolution of soul to be the kind of people we ought to be.

Toynbee longs to hear a still, small voice which can penetrate above these blaring loud speakers. We need a still, small voice and yet a voice which can speak with authority, intelligence, and power. The people of the world long to hear a voice which can speak peace above the cry of all those who speak of war.

Many voices have pleaded for the attention of men down through the ages. There was the persuading voice of Machiavelli. Many men have responded and allowed their lives to be fashioned by his purposes. He was one of those who claimed that "might makes right," that the "end justifies the means." He preached the glory of war, the justification of dishonesty, the right of men to plunder and kill to achieve authority. His voice still haunts us as we hear its echo in the voices of others like Hitler. With eloquent and raucous voice, Hitler stood up to thrill the multitude. He proclaimed the millennium was at hand and had the audacity to declare himself the savior of the German people. Millions cheered him on. He could claim them as his own. They hearkened to his voice.

There was Mussolini, another echo of Machiavelli, self-styled savior of Italy. He was another of the Caesars who down through the corridors of time appealed to men. There are thousands of husky voices, squeaking voices, and voices smooth as syrup, appealing to all nations of the world to follow their pattern. The genius of Karl Marx and his followers is that they have detected the injustices of capitalism and have turned the normal bitterness of the victims of injustice to their own cruel and selfish ends. As a nation we need to be alert to the nature of the voices which appeal to us.

HOW MANY TIMES we listen to voices that have no power to help and to save us! Everybody seems to have an answer, whether you have a cold or falling hair. Nearly everyone has a choice prescription. The road of life is strewn with wrecked lives who have heeded the wrong voices.

One of the great values of the Book of Mormon is that it records realistically the story of the ancient Americans. The writers of the Book of Mormon just as faithfully recorded tragedy as they recorded prosperity. The supreme tragedy of the Book of Mormon is that on too many occasions the people listened to voices which sounded good but which took them on the road to ruin. There was Corihor, for instance. He was protected by the democratic law of freedom of speech and religion. He took advantage of the good situation and began "to preach unto the people that there should be no Christ." He said, "Oh, ye that are bound down under a foolish and a vain hope, why do ye yoke yourselves with such foolish things? Why do ye look for a Christ for no man can know of anything which is to come. Behold these things which ye call prophecies . . . they are foolish traditions of your fathers. How do ye know of their surety?" Corihor said with an emotional pitch to his voice that their beliefs were the effect of a frenzied mind. He said, "This derangement of minds comes because of the tradition of your fathers which leads you into a belief of things which are not so."

There were many who listened to Corihor and his type through the years of Nephite history, and because they listened to these men instead of the prophets, their nation was lost. The final author of the Book of Mormon engraved his heartfelt plea, "Come unto Christ and be perfected in him." This man had seen the slaughter of his people because they had hearkened to the wrong voices—the voices which seemed all right but which destroyed them.

TODAY men use the same appeals Corihor used. They pooh-pooh the idea that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. Like the radical in Boston Common, they even deny there is a God. These men say to us that the traditions and faith of our fathers are wrong. They tell us that we are people of a frenzied mind. The tragedy of the Book of Mormon story could very well be duplicated in our history. Speaking of our land, the prophets of the Book of Mormon said, "Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage and from captivity and from all other nations under heaven if they will serve the God of the land who is Jesus Christ." This conditional promise applies to our nation as well as all others in the Americas.

Let us understand, then, that our chief danger is not from military invasion. Our chief danger is in our willingness to listen to the wrong voices and to heed the wrong counsel. We are in danger because we have allowed our convictions to become weakened. Even the motto on our coinage, "In God We Trust," comes close to being a mockery. To the extent that our belief in God is weakened and our lives are no longer characterized by our belief in Jesus Christ, to that extent are we in danger.

We ought to heed the counsel of the Book of Mormon prophet, "Come unto Christ." And when we come into his presence, we shall do well to listen to what he has to say. From the mouth of God himself came the finest advice ever given to man. That advice and counsel came dramatically at the time of the baptism of Jesus, at the time of his appearance among the Nephites, and in the midst of the first great spiritual experience of Joseph Smith. Our Heavenly Father, mindful of our needs and desiring our welfare, said, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." Among all the voices which clamor for our attention, the voice which can do the most for us is that voice which was authorized to speak as the Son of God. It is the voice of Christ which can speak peace to our minds and to our world. It is the only voice which can still the tempest.

I am growing more fond of the story of Jesus in the boat when he was awakened because of the fear of his disciples in the midst of the storm. I marvel at the great composure of him who rested while others were afraid. There may be some who doubt the fact that Jesus stilled the waves of the sea when he spoke, but whether you believe that the storm was stopped or not, you cannot deny this fact—when Jesus spoke, the tempest that was in the hearts of his disciples was stilled. They were given courage to go their way unafraid. You may be sure that the voice of Jesus is the only voice which can still the tempest and calm the fears in our hearts today.

LET US VISIT some of the places where men have heard the voice of Jesus. First of all, let us walk down to the shore of the Sea of Galilee. A group of men are busy, engaged in their craft. They are fishermen bronzed by the sun. There is good-natured banter back and forth. Another bronzed young man of vigor and determination with a light in his eye and purpose in his voice comes striding along the shore. There is something about him that goes deep into the hearts of these fishermen. When he talks with them, their souls are stirred. The gestures of his bronzed arms lend significance to the invitation of his voice. His eyes demand decision. The young men go with him when he says, "Follow me." There were other voices pleading for the attention of these young fishermen, but they very wisely gave heed to the voice of Christ. The time came when they followed him to the mountaintop. Life was beginning to seem uncertain to them. There was no guarantee of food or clothing or shelter. They were lonesome for home. They were a bit weary of well-doing. They said, "Master, it is a bit hard to follow thee when all about us our friends have a sure place to sleep and have opportunity to lay by for a rainy day. Our competitors are taking over our business. If this project of yours should fail, we would be without means of livelihood. There are some things we need and feel we have a right to have." They were growing restless and impatient. The Master replied, "Your Father knows you have need of all these things. But so does everyone have need of these things. Now they are shared by only a few. Some day, some place, somebody must set up a witness that all mankind may have these things and have them in abundance if they seek first the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness. I have called you to be the righteous. You are to bear this testimony that when men seek first the kingdom of God, then shall all men everywhere have according to their needs and just wants."

We hear him as he passed by, teaching his disciples, meeting the questioning of the scribes, and healing the sick. In our moments of solemn reflection, we know that what he said was and is right. Out of the pages of the Bible come the words of Jesus encouraging us to live a life that shall be fruitful of peace, good will, health, and happiness, fruitful of hope and assurance. The people of the world are hungry for the voice of one who, backed by the authority of his own life, can say, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." When this voice has been hearkened to and tried, it has never failed us, but those voices which plead for us to follow in paths that are opposite to Christ have failed every time.

A YOUNG MAN was bombarded with voices—voices religious. He was puzzled. He didn't know which way to turn. Within the churches called Christian, there were voices that were out of harmony with each other. Then a still, small voice spoke to him saying, "If ye lack wisdom, ask of God." He did, and the voice answered and said, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." That voice might have continued to say, "He is the way. He has the answer. He is right. The others are wrong. He is right because he gives you my wisdom. He speaks my mind. His voice is my voice." The young man found answer to his pleading. That young man was Joseph Smith.

The problems which prompted his prayer to God are still problems for men. What about the division of Christianity? Which church is right? Which shall I join? Where will I find Christ?

In a recent issue of Look magazine a most revealing article was featured. It is entitled "Why Protestants Need to Wake Up." The author says:

Organized religion in America today is headed toward self-destruction. In their . . . feuds the 250 denominations and sects seem determined to pull what is left of our social structure down around their heads. Never in the history of our nation have religious tensions been more acute. . . . As more and more people turn to the churches for guidance, many of the clergy are making themselves and religion ridiculous. . . . Organized religion as we now know it is perhaps being weighed in the scales of humanity for the last time. Our churches have become the expression of class distinction and racial segregation, yet it is their Christian mission to make us all brothers of one another. . . . During the war none of the traditional church reached down among the neglected, illiterate and impoverished persons flocking to our war centers to earn a living wage for the first time. This was because our Protestant clergy does not even speak a language that the disinherited millions can understand.

TODAY, as much as in the day of Joseph Smith, people need to experience the voice of Christ calling the churches back to his mission. Every voice that is raised to appeal to men and women and to youth, especially, should be checked as to its basic harmony with the voice of Christ. Those who have the responsibility for speaking the voice of Christ in a troubled world must represent him well. Our world needs to hear the voice of love as it comes from the lips of Jesus Christ. Our world needs to be recalled to the purpose of God. It needs to hear the message of repentance. Our world needs to hear the good news of the kingdom of God.

It is the business of the church as it speaks and acts for Christ to set up the prophecy of the kingdom of God. For more than 1,000 years, the world has waited to hear once again that the kingdom of God is a possibility on the earth. We are sick of war and violence. The church has been restored that it might set up a demonstration, a pattern of the kingdom, yet we of the church wait and the fundamental qualities of the kingdom have not yet been achieved in our lives. We speak falteringly of the kingdom because we do not yet have the authority of it written into the way we live. The people of the world want to hear the good news that the way of Christ is workable. They want to see it in the life of the people of Christ. They want a visual demonstration that the way of God can be established in the life of men. They will never believe it as long as they

As a Man Thinketh - By PAUL A. WELLINGTON

For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he.
—Proverbs 23: 7.

DO YOU EVER WONDER what people are thinking? Do you ever become concerned about it?

"Oh, but that's none of my business!" you say.

Isn't it? Isn't it your business to be concerned if your house is robbed, or if your neighbor leaves town with your wife, or if the boy next door throws rocks through your windows?

Yes, it is your business what other people think. It is especially true when this "thinking" results in actions which affect you.

And what about your own thinking? Are you concerned with the thoughts that enter your mind? Are you concerned with the results of your thinking? If you believe that a man should have two wives—and your wife disagrees, there's friction. And if you believe there should be eight children in your home when she wants only one, there's an unhappy marital relationship.

Perhaps that's an extreme sample of what "thinking" can do to your family, business, school, social, and moral life.

Undoubtedly, two different types of children grow up in homes where there is such a divergence of opinions as: "What was good enough for me is good enough for my children" against "I had so little; I want my child to have everything—no hard work as I had to do."

Disagreement is sure to occur in business if the unionist thinks, "The capitalist is trying to enslave us," or if the businessman thinks, "The union is trying to ruin my business."

In school, failure is the end result of such thinking as: "My formal education is a sure path to an easy job," or "Dad is paying the bill for me to have fun at college—I'll settle down later," or "I can buy the test for $1, so why study?"

If a person feels "They're a bunch of snobs," or "They aren't my equal," his social relationships will be strained. Only by believing "People want to be my friends" will he gain and hold friends.

There's a difference in those persons who live by such varying moral codes as, "Confess your sins—then do what you please next week" and "Your good and evil works shall judge you."

As we become more aware of the part our thinking plays in our lives, we realize the need of developing the right kind of thinking if we would live righteously.

HOW SHALL WE THINK RIGHT?

There is a verse in the Bible (Luke 2: 52) which holds the key to this problem that confronts us daily. It reads: "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." The life of Jesus illustrated the principle of growth as being a part of the process whereby he gained "favor with God and man."

So it is with us. Never at any time in our life do we reach the point where we have "arrived." If we do, we die—physically, mentally, and spiritually. And we lose "favor with God and man."

Let us apply this principle to our thinking and state a rule to guide us: Never let your thinking become stagnant!! Before we can think right, we must think. The mind must not be closed by the feeling that one knows all the answers.

NEVER LET YOUR THINKING BECOME STAGNANT

This basic principle has many aspects. Let us consider a few of them in order that we might have a greater insight in making application of them to our daily lives:

1. Realize you can be sincerely wrong. Hitler was undoubtedly sincere in many of his beliefs. Stalin and other Russian leaders are probably sincere in many of their beliefs. Yet, they can be wrong. We, too, can be sincere in what we think and believe, but, in spite of our sincerity, we can be wrong!

2. Don't limit your vision by prejudice. The people in Columbus' day believed the world was flat—and their vision was limited. Many people today limit themselves by refusing social or business relationships because of prejudice toward race, color, or creed. The Jews once thought of their God as a "God of the Jews only"—and lost the vision of a God who was no respecter of persons. Some people are prejudiced toward a particular religious denomination because "this church was good enough for mother, so it's good enough for me." They lose the vision that could be theirs if they would only think for themselves.

3. Accept truth added to truth. If someone makes a better mousetrap, let's use it! If someone develops a "squirtless" grapefruit, let's buy it! If someone can bring us a greater vision of a just and loving God, let's accept it!

4. But test its validity! Basic principles matter tremendously in determining truth. An engineer doesn't accept the idea of a new-fangled bridge without checking carefully the principles of construction involved. A purchaser of grapefruit doesn't accept the "squirtless" specimen if he discovers some other important characteristic, such as the flavor, has deteriorated. So also in moral and spiritual truth we must examine carefully all aspects of new truth before we accept it. We must be broad minded. Sturdy principles have deep roots in deep soil: we must dig deep if we would find them.

5. Be willing to drop misconceptions. We usually think of misconceptions existing primarily among children who have not experienced as much as adults. We laugh at the child who thought his Sunday school teacher said "Jesus' twelve bicycles" instead of "Jesus' twelve disciples," but we adults are also as full of misconceptions. One popular religious misconception of the day is that all you have to do to be saved is to accept Christ as your personal savior. This sounds good but leads to great complications of reasoning. With this conception, you can eliminate a just God. For instance, if a morally good but non-Christian woman is murdered, she is not saved according to this theory because she has not accepted Christ. Some would say she goes to hell for ever and ever. The murderer is convicted and sentenced to death, but accepts Christ before death and is saved. Some say he would live with Christ and "mingle with the angels" forever. Thus, the justness of God ceases to be! Admitting that Christ is our savior is important, but conceiving what he is is more important. We must expand our view of the intelligence of God to be at least compatible with our own intelligence.

6. Make your beliefs realities. A lawyer who came to Jesus began a sentence in the way millions of us do in framing alibis: "But he, desiring to justify himself, said" We frequently pretend we believe, rather than actually believing. We try to make our beliefs real by covering them up with alibis and excuses. What we need mixed with our beliefs is "an outward sign of an inward grace." "Faith without works is dead."

7. Allow the Spirit of God to guide you into all truth. Paul says: "To will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not." We realize that of ourselves we cannot achieve truth. Alcoholics Anonymous members use this principle as a means of conditioning themselves to call upon a power greater than their own for help. Many great spiritual leaders of the ages have depended upon this same source for the unfolding of truth. This need of partnership between God and man was experienced by Oliver Cowdery as he was assisting in translating the Book of Mormon. God told him of the way he could receive this knowledge of truth and assist in the translating:

Behold . . . you have supposed that I would give it unto you, when you took no thought, save it was to ask me; but, behold, I say unto you, that you must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me if it be right, and if it is right, I will cause that your bosom shall burn within you; but if it be not right, you shall have no such feelings, but you shall have a stupor of thought.

And the admonition applies to all people: Think it through—with the Spirit of God to guide you into all truth.

DEATH—OR LIFE ETERNAL

How we think is important to us and to our neighbors and friends. Thinking can bring us death, or it can bring us eternal life. Paul, writing to the Roman saints, said: "For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."

We can choose life or death by the way we think.

have to read about it in a book. But when the people of the church can speak of the kingdom and have their words backed by the authority of the kingdom life, then shall more of the people of the world respond to the challenge of Christ.

We should like to call up the multitudes of those who have been maimed by war, pockmarked by immorality, bruised by greed and carelessness, and have them march before us as a visual demonstration that heeding the voices of the anti-Christ yields nothing but unhappiness. These could testify to the stupidity of the way we have lived. They would testify to the folly of war, of crime, of adultery, of dissipation. They would say that they did not intend to live in this way, but that they were enticed by the voices of those who led them to their ruin. I feel sure they would say to us that there is a famine in our land—a famine of hearing the word of the Lord.

But let's not stop here. Let's call up the host of those who have followed the way of the Lord, who have heeded the voice of Christ. They, too, might say that we have a famine in our land—a famine of hearing the word of the Lord—but they would testify that the happiness of eternal life, the absence of regret and remorse, the experience of goodness, and the fellowship of righteous people are abundant and worth while. These would urge us to listen to the voice of the Man of Galilee. He understands our pain because he has suffered pain. He knows our temptations because he has met temptation. He knows our fear for he has seen us afraid. And out of his knowledge of our suffering, he would speak those words which alone can save us:

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and you shall find rest unto your souls. Seek first to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you. If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, you shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you.

We want to hear that voice which speaks the truth. We know it is truth, not falsehood, which makes us free of littleness, immorality, and war. Truth promotes life. Let us realize, then, that life and truth come through Jesus Christ.

To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice.

The Grain of Faith - By RUBY TINKHAM

SAM STEVAS has the finest farm in the state of Ohio. His corn has the fattest ears, his cows give the richest milk, and his hens lay the biggest eggs. If you ask Sam how it happened, his eyes will twinkle, and a big grin will spread all over his homely face; then he'll reach up with a hard, calloused hand and remove his old brown corduroy cap and start ruffling his tufts of bristling red hair. Into his faded overall pocket will go the other hand, and you will see him caressing a little box.

Fifteen years ago Sam opened his front door on a cold, stormy night in December and saw a stranger standing there. There was nothing unusual about this, for strangers often made the wrong turn at Beggar's Corners and ended up at Sam's house. He gave the stranger a good meal and a warm bed for the night.

In the morning, the stranger was up and ready to leave when Sam came downstairs. He held out his hand to Sam and in it lay the little box.

"Sam, here is a gift from my boss. It is very rare and very valuable. It will bring you all the good things you want from life."

Sam seized the little box eagerly and opened it, only to step back in startled surprise. Inside the box lay a small grain of something that resembled sand.

The man smiled and continued quietly, "Sam, what you see there is a grain of faith. It is the most marvelous ingredient ever discovered. It will mix with anything. It is so powerful it will move mountains or stop the sun in its course. It will bring you anything you desire."

Sam's mind rapidly conjured up visions of the new tractor he needed so much, a larger silo, and some really fine purebred Jerseys.

The stranger watched affectionately as the wonder and excitement grew on Sam's face, and then he continued gravely, "In order to use this grain of faith, you must do two things. First, you must love the great man who gave it to you; and second, you must love your fellow man. Can you do that, Sam?"

Still a little bewildered, Sam nodded assent, and the stranger left.

ALL THROUGH THE YEARS that followed, Sam never forgot what the stranger had told him. He always checked with himself to make sure he obeyed the two rules before he got the little box out. Then he would sit down and talk his problem over with his friend and make his request.

Once he thought it had failed. He had asked for his favorite Jersey, Bessie, to win first prize at the state fair, for he had wanted to hang that blue ribbon inside the cab of his new truck where all the members of the dairy association could see it. When she lost, he was discouraged, and he determined to take it up with the head man—until he talked with the kid that won.

The boy was as enthusiastic about farming as Sam had been twenty years ago, and that first prize meant he would go to college in the fall. Sam was amazed to hear a seventeen-year-old talk about important things like soil conservation, contour farming, and artificial insemination. Suddenly Sam realized it was going to work out all right. The boy would get the schooling he had always wanted, and Sam would keep Bessie another year.

The little box is worn and shiny now from so much use, and Sam will grin proudly when he exhibits it at the end of his story.

Funny thing, though, Sam swears the little grain inside is ten times larger now than it was when the stranger first gave it to him.

ABOUT TWELVE MILES down the road from Sam is another farmer, Jake Lados. Jake is a wiry little man with shrewd eyes and a sharp tongue for bargaining, and he had a guest the same night Sam had his.

Jake was expecting something from the stranger for his hospitality, and his beady little eyes showed acute disappointment when the stranger handed him the small box. His disappointment turned to anger when he saw the speck of dirt inside.

"So you want to play jokes on old Jake, do you? Make a fool out of him! Well, get out of here, Mister, and don't ever come back!"

The stranger tried patiently to explain what the grain of faith could do, but Jake would not listen, and he kept ordering the stranger to leave immediately. Then Jake flung the box angrily into a drawer.

Try to tell him how to run his business! Why he—Jake Lados—was the smartest farmer in the whole southeastern district. Who had any better beef than he? Who raised any finer corn or had any bigger barns? Love your neighbor, huh!

But the depression came and then the drought. Jake saw fine shoots of tender green corn turn a sickly yellow. He saw his beef stand in line for a drink of muddy, slimy water. He watched his barns empty slowly of life-giving feed, and felt his stomach turn sick with agonizing despair.

Then he thought of the little box. It was supposed to perform miracles. It was magic. It would save him.

He rushed into the house with sweat streaming down his face unnoticed; his legs trembled at the thought of its being gone or lost. It had to be there. He searched frantically and his nervous fingers dropped it.

Then he stopped, horrified and incredulous: He had forgotten the rules on how to use it!

The New Louisville Church Building

By W. H. BURWELL

THE LOUISVILLE CONGREGATION had outgrown its facilities and planned either to enlarge the church being used or build a new one. For over two years the building committee, with S. M. Stacy as chairman, was busy, trying to draft plans which could be financed by the branch.

Seemingly every possibility had been canvassed without any prospect of building when Pastor James B. Welch saw a "For Sale" sign on the old powerhouse which formerly supplied power for the streetcar service. This building was on a large corner lot in a fine residential section of the city. Although it was rather dilapidated, Pastor Welch saw the possibility of its being converted into a suitable house of worship and immediately obtained an option on the property for $10,150.

With the approval of Maurice L. Draper, the apostle in charge, and General Church officers, the branch decided to purchase the property with the $10,163 on hand. Money from the old property, which was eventually sold for $9,500, was used for remodeling.

The architect who was engaged to draw up plans for converting the powerhouse into a church building generously donated a large percentage of his work.

President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop Henry L. Livingston inspected the property in the interest of the General Church and recommended a substantial loan for assisting the branch in building.

AFTER THE PLANS were completed and approved, they were submitted to various contractors for bids. The hearts of the building committee members sank in despair as the bids were presented. The first bid was for $39,975; the last bid for $23,762. Acceptance of this bid meant the branch would have to raise over $10,000 in cash during the period of construction. With faith that the means would be available, the members accepted this task and on March 27, 1949, less than ten months after its first being considered—the building was officially opened. The total cost was approximately $35,000, all of which has been paid except the loan from the General Church.

Much hard work was done by the members of the church who constructed the solid mahogany pews, laid the floor covering, painted the basement, finished the woodwork on the rostrum, equipped the kitchen, and made tables for serving meals.

Opening day presented the first opportunity of stopping for a few moments to appreciate the results of their efforts. It seemed miraculous that so much had been accomplished in so short a time, and it would be hard to convince any member of the branch that the Lord had not had a hand in the work. Saints from every branch in the district, from adjacent districts, and friends in the neighborhood assembled for the opening service. The auditorium, designed to seat 384, was filled to capacity; about 450 were present.

After appropriate expression of appreciation by the pastor for the work of the architect, contractor, and building committee, President Israel A. Smith gave a splendid discourse on the basic events of the Restoration. Following the dinner, which was served by the women's department, Bishop H. L. Livingston addressed the audience. The day's activities were brought to a close with an instructive sermon by Apostle Wallace W. Smith.

Missionary J. H. Yager followed opening day with a two week's series of sermons. His energetic labors and realistic approach in presenting the gospel won many friends to the church; ten converts were baptized, and many others were challenged to give serious thought to accepting the gospel.

The Saints of Louisville are happy that another phase of branch life had been accomplished and are eagerly looking forward to improving facilities in order that they may better serve the church and community.

As Pastor Welch puts it, "We intend to keep on using the building as a transformer station—a transformer for people!"

Church Raffles

A magistrate in Hamilton, New Zealand, recently fined a man and his daughter fifty-five pounds (two hundred dollars) for selling tickets in an automobile raffle organized as a Roman Catholic charity. According to the Ansgar Lutheran of August 8, the magistrate said: "Lotteries of this kind are an encouragement to people to spend beyond their means. The fact that the proceeds of the raffle were for church purposes was no mitigation of the offense." Commenting on the defense plea that the raffles for church purposes have been an established custom for many years, the magistrate said: "I am very sorry if that is so."

This type of money raising is practiced by the same group in Independence and other American cities, though state and local laws usually are against such practices. Tolerant enforcement officials let it get by.

It seems to be well understood in our church that such methods of raising local funds are considered unethical. We are wondering however, if our members are not giving encouragement to such illegal schemes by buying raffle tickets. Perhaps there is a need to develop a stronger consciousness among our membership against this evil.

Approaching the Upper Heights of Music in Worship

By ZYGMUND RONDONANSKI

THERE SHOULD NEVER be any question as to the place of music in the church. It should be given our most devoted attention as we seek to amplify its effective use in the religious service. A glorious musical service in an exalted spirit of cooperation is very important in the growing role of church life.

All religions have sought the inspiration of music to enhance the divine spirit. Men of different faiths have turned to music to give them spiritual uplift.

In preparing the hearts of the people for worship, music should be rightly chosen and thoughtfully played.

There are different types of music performed in the church services, but the most recognized and understood by the average congregation is the hymn.

To improve upon the grand old hymns we know, and to learn new ones that we ought to know, we should plan for a congregational rehearsal before a service. As the plan is carried out more and more, new and beautiful hymns will be added that might otherwise have been overlooked. Too many good hymns are neglected, and too often we find the congregation unfamiliar with a hymn chosen for some particular service. This is a very sad situation indeed and could be avoided if all members would cooperate in showing their desire and interest in working to improve upon the performance of our hymns in the service. Each person taking part should try to memorize or at least be familiar enough with the words to convey a clear meaning. It does make a difference in our emotions and feelings if we are familiar with the music we are singing.

While sitting with a group of our people in church one morning, about fifteen minutes before the service, I listened to the organist play some preludes that were in every way suited for the occasion, but I could hear whispering going on, and there were just a few listening to what was being played. I noticed a tremendous difference, however, when the organist played a selection that was familiar. Gradually the whispering and noise ceased, there was a different atmosphere; everybody seemed to be listening. Throughout the group a faint humming could be heard.

Even though there is a great difference in the singing ability of congregations, much can be done to assure adequate singing of the hymns. The first and most important step to be taken into consideration is gauging the tempo.

BACK IN THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY, the sacred hymns were chorales emanating from the Cantus Firmus which was made up of long notes of the preceding centuries. The earliest form of choral music (meaning music in which everybody can take part) dates back to the sixteenth century, when Martin Luther composed hymns for his church. Before his time the text was in Latin, but he put the words of prayer and praise into choral singing.

There seems to be a slight difference, however, in a chorale and a hymn. According to the rules of strict four-part writing, the chorale demands a change of harmony upon each accented beat, whereas the hymn is not so restricted. This would make the melody of the chorale more stately and dignified, stronger and weightier, and slower in tempo. The chorale proved to be the nucleus of Protestant church music in regard to hymns. From this we may safely determine that the majority of hymns should be taken at a moderate tempo.

Hymn tunes generally fall into two classes of rhythm: the vigorous, energetic type, and the gentle, soothing variety. We realize that some hymns demand a march tempo which, of course, could be used for processional and recessional purposes. There is a place for the bright music of praise, but we should choose that place with a knowledge of its effect.

The music of the church should show recognition of being different from any other form. A selection, for instance, which the mind associates with the theater, should not be used in a service of worship.

Some consider a fairly fast tempo essential in hymn playing. In this they are mistaken. A satisfactory rhythm can be obtained in slower music and life as well. To sing the music too slowly gives a depressing effect, yet it is to be remembered that most members of the congregation have untrained voices. Too rapid a tempo puts them at a disadvantage, spoils the effect of the old hymns we love to sing, and detracts from the reverent attitude desirable in the church.

It takes discernment to avoid playing too slowly, so that the singing will not drag, and still not play fast enough to mar the singing.

IN MASSED SINGING, particularly in slow tempo, care should be taken with the accents. The carrying over without delay from the end of one measure into the first beat of the next prevents stagnation. The important beat being constantly delayed interferes with the rhythm considerably.

It would be well for our people to try to do for the church what the Welsh people do for their community. The splendid and large

QUESTION:

Is it true that while there has been much controversy about specific incidents, the whole issue of difference in religion between us and others can be summed up in the one thing—current revelation, God speaking to the church, declaring his will in its present doings?

Having committed ourselves to be guided by current revelation and all past Scripture, The Three Books, would it be consistent for any of us in a secret lodge to kiss the Bible and vow in the name of God that the Holy Bible (alone) shall choirs that are numerous among the Welsh miners are credited as one of the best examples of choral work, because these people train in a national school of music called the Eisteddfod.

Our music leaders of the church have a burdensome duty to perform and need co-operation and support from all members.

To accomplish the tasks that are set before us, to grow and enrich our goal toward the building of Zion, we must all make every effort to do our part. We should not make our congregational singing merely a "filler in" in the service without meaning or benefit. A singing congregation is a powerful influence for the bringing of a peaceful atmosphere. We should all learn to live in the music we are singing.

If we would come to the realization that music is very important to the service and would not use it as a matter of routine, then we should more quickly be on our way to the upper heights of music* in worship.

With such excellent material to choose from and with the ways and means by which to convey it, we can make music in the church an achievement as yet unrealized.

govern us as a rule and guide for our faith and practice?

Is it consistent with Christ's teachings, "swear not at all," for any of us with others in secret to swear before Almighty God that we are willing to be killed if we at any time in any manner divulge any of the secrets of our lodge?

Is it wise for any of us to join any organization that may sanction things contrary to our gospel in order for us to get a better stand-in in society or in business?

ANSWER:

The question of differences between us and other religions certainly is not "summed up in the one thing, current revelation, God speaking to the church." There are other religions that believe in current revelation such as Bahaism, but this church and Bahaism are as far apart as the two poles. The Adventist movement owes its existence to what is termed the revelation of God to Mrs. White, but between our church and the Adventist movement there exists a gulf of differences. If the difference between us and other religions that believe in current revelation is great, then the difference between us and those that do not believe in current revelation is even greater.

Behind the three questions listed here there is an implied one which we cannot help but infer—the church's attitude towards secret societies. The answer to this question can be found in the wise writings of Joseph Smith as found in Church History, Volume 3, page 676. He states:

All we wish to write about them is this. We know nothing in the gospel making them necessary: nor do we know of any authorized by the church. There is nothing enjoined in any of them that is noble, kind, and good, that is not enjoined in the gospel covenant.

The answer taken by the church is as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this body, this church has no right to subvert the liberties of its members by prohibiting their membership with what is known as "secret societies," unless such society shall first be condemned by either a decision of the General Assembly of the church, or by the law of the land.—Church History, Volume 4, page 102.

We doubt that anyone is required by any secret society oath to so interpret his vow, "the Holy Bible [alone] shall govern us as a rule and guide for our faith and practice," that he shall follow no other guide at all. He can follow no conflicting guide. The Bible must be the guide by which other guides are judged. In this sense, the vow would be permissible since accepting the guidance of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants is fully consistent with accepting that of the Bible.

Also, since the church does not "subvert the liberties of its members by prohibiting their joining secret societies," the answer to the question is left to the member himself. Christ never forced anyone to do his will, and for the weak ones he always prayed (Luke 22: 31, 32). It will be inconsistent for an individual with a high degree of faith to take such a vow without making his belief in continued revelation known to the lodge. If the lodge accepts the individual after his beliefs have been plainly stated, and he takes the vow as worded in the question, the writer sees no inconsistency. The vow will then have been qualified by the explanation given by the individual.

The question of swearing is not lumped up in the one statement, "swear not." The swearing that is profane has no place in the teachings of Christ. But the swearing that involves oath-taking or covenant-making is not entirely out. Baptism is a covenant and an oath. The oath, however, that involves murder and secrecy is inconsistent with the teachings of Christ. He wanted his disciples to be like a city that is built on a hill—nothing hidden. The works of darkness were condemned by him.

The answer to the third question is quite obvious. Anything that sanctions things contrary to the gospel is unwise for us to join regardless of financial loss or loss of personal prestige. The Saints are to "abstain from all appearance of evil (I Thessalonians 5: 22), and hold to "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things" (Philippians 4: 8).

Worship Suggestions for October

Theme for the Month: JESUS IS CALLING

OCTOBER 2, 1949

Theme: JESUS IS CALLING TODAY

Worship Center: Picture, "The Light of the World," Holman Hunt.

Prelude: "Behold the Savior at Your Door," S. H., No. 328.

Call to Worship:

Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in and sup with him, and he with me.

Solo: "Oh, Jesus, Thou Art Standing Outside the Fast Closed Door," Episcopal Church Hymnal, No. 132.

Prayer: That we may hear the knock and open the door.

Talk:

What does it mean to have Jesus come in and sup with us? On our part, it means a sincere invitation to him to enter and abide in our hearts and lives. Something happened when Jesus entered into the homes of his friends.

Take Zaccheus, the publican, for one example. (Read Luke 19: 1-10, Inspired Version.) And there were Mary and Martha of Bethany. (Read Luke 10: 39-43, Inspired Version.)

What happened when Jesus invited his friends to dine with him? (John 21: 4-19, Inspired Version.)

Hymn: "Jesus, My Shepherd," S. H., No. 272.

Challenge (or charge to standing congregation): "I gave my life for thee; what wilt thou give for me?"

Hymn: "Thou Didst Leave Thy Kingly Crown," S. H., 154.

OCTOBER 9, 1949

Theme: JESUS IS CALLING HIS SAINTS

Worship Center: The same as for October 2.

Prelude: "Awake, Ye Saints of God, Awake!" S. H., No. 204.

Call to Worship:

Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner; but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God; Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but ac-ording to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began.—II Timothy 1: 8, 9.

Hymn: "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," S. H., No. 350.

Prayer:

That we may sense the world's need of the gospel and of the church, and that we, through obedience to its laws, may enable the church to meet the needs of the world.

Poem for Meditation:

"They have taken away my Lord!"
And sorrowing civilization
Treading her suffering way
Past the graves of her children,
Mourns, "And I know not where they have laid him."

Ye who are called by my name, awake from your slumber.

In ye would I walk! In ye would I go forth to meet her.

Weeping, she waits in the garden.

Thy step on the gravel—my voice—than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of both joints and marrow; therefore, give heed unto my words. Behold the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God; yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God; therefore, if you will ask of me you shall receive, if you will knock it shall be opened unto you. . . . Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion: seek not for riches but for wisdom; and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich. Behold, he that hath eternal life is rich.—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 1-3.

Hymn: "Oh, Reapers of Life's Harvest," S. H., No. 387, second and third stanzas.

Challenge (Congregation standing):

Say not ye there are yet four months, then cometh harvest. Behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest. And he who reapeth, receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal; that both he who soweth, and he who reapeth, may rejoice together.—John 3: 37, 38.

Hymn: "Oh, Reapers of Life's Harvest," S. H., No. 387, fourth stanza.

Theme: JESUS IS CALLING THE WORLD

Worship Center: Picture, Tom Curr's "All of Us," or Stemler's "Christ and the Children of the World."

Prelude: "The Whole, Wide World for Jesus," S. H., No. 391.

Call to Worship:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel unto all nations. . . . Of a truth, I perceive that God is no respecter of persons.

Hymn: The same as for the prelude.

Prayer: That we may love equally the people of all nations, creeds, and colors.

Scripture Reading: Acts 10: 1-35, Inspired Version preferred.

Solo: "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," S. H., No. 401.

Theme Talk:

for the conversion of 14,000 persons. It seems an impossible task until we realize that the powers of heaven are with us. Our tithes will help send missionaries who will convert many. Our church school teachings may draw many into the church. We may bring friends and acquaintances to meetings, and we may buy and distribute tracts and Heralds widely. We should live as examples of the truth, and also should pray that all mankind may see and accept the light of the gospel. This we know: no word of truth spoken for God returns to him void. Then let us be and speak and write and teach. Angels will open doors for us as we go out in his name. "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

Hymn: "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," S. H., No. 292.

OCTOBER 30, 1949

Theme: JESUS CALLS US TO SERVICE

Worship Center: Sallman's "In His Presence."

Prelude: "Take My Life," S. H., No. 307.

Call to Worship:

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord! Lord! shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

Hymn: "Work for the Night is Coming," S. H., No. 222.

Prayer: That we may serve where we are needed in our own branches.

Scripture Reading: John 13: 1-17.

Hymn: "Take My Life," S. H., No. 307.

Theme Talk:

We look for Zion, but until we build it through service, it cannot become a reality. It will be a place of workers—people who have served where they could in their home branches. Zion will not materialize suddenly, simply because men and women, in fear of things to come, flock into its borders. Those who have been idle in their home branches, who have failed to share the labor, who have not paid their tithing when they could will not become Zion's timber simply by the process of changing their locations.

Baptism is only a doorway into the church and into a life of active devotion to the cause of Christ. It is not salvation in itself. Conversion means turning from a self-centered to a God-centered life. It means that we shall hereafter be concerned about the things that concerned him and labor at the tasks which occupied him.

Hymn: "A Charge to Keep I Have," S. H., No. 201.

Solo: "This Is My Task." (This may be purchased from any good music store.)

ON THE OCCASION of our annual district youth conference, I visited the Kirtland Temple this summer for the first time. The temple met my expectations completely although not in exactly the manner I had anticipated. It is unquestionably an architectural triumph for its time, adhering to no one particular style. The work was accomplished by unskilled men, but a beautiful story of their love for God and their patience is revealed in the intricate carvings on the windows, pulpits, and tall pillars. Every window has been made with a different design.

But it wasn't the architecture that impressed me most. This temple was built for God, according to his own instructions, over a hundred years ago. The thing I love most about it is that it is still a temple to God. When we entered the lower auditorium, we were instantly surrounded by an atmosphere of reverence and worship. There was no one talking loudly, nor did there seem to be any whispering. People chose their places quietly and did not change seats during the service.

When the organist began the prelude, there was complete silence in the congregation. There was a feeling of spiritual meditation that could not be mistaken as we sat there watching the sunlight filter through the leaves of the trees outside and then through the wavy pioneer glass panels of the Gothic windows. It seemed that God was very close.

This type of experience has been denied in many of our local branches for lack of consideration and thoughtfulness. So often we fail to realize that when the organist or pianist begins the prelude the service has begun. Sometimes the congregation doesn't become reverent and quiet until after the prayer has been offered and the Scripture read.

It would be a wonderful thing to feel that God is close to us and pleased with us in all our services, but he does not choose to enter a place of clamor and confusion. Only if we prepare for his presence can we hope to have such an experience.

Friendly Neighborliness

By MRS. HAROLD I. VELT

WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?" was among the vital questions asked of Jesus. The lawyer who asked it was perhaps seeking to justify himself in discriminating between people who might be considered of one's own class or station in life and others below one's social level.

Jesus answered with the parable of the Good Samaritan—a parable simple to the understanding, yet profound in its implication that wherever one is found to be in need, there is one's neighbor; and conversely, he who helps the needy is neighbor to the one helped.

There are individuals in every community who are probably more needy and lonely than those about them realize. This world has many problems and disappointments which at times leave people feeling friendless and cold. A personal interest in their welfare by someone not related and apparently under no obligation to them is something of inestimable value. Often there may be thus created a bond of affection that otherwise would never have been known. To love and be loved is truly the greatest happiness of existence.

People moving into the community from other states and countries where conditions and customs are different often need help in getting adjusted. This affords a splendid opportunity to get acquainted and to develop an interest in the church.

It is one thing to be concerned about those who make up your world and another thing to adequately express that concern in quiet acts of thoughtfulness which cheer and revivify.

Remembering a birthday, an anniversary, or the graduation of a friend may mean much. Or it may be the tucking of a handkerchief of a neighbor's favorite color in a little note. It may be a dish of cookies, some fruit, flowers, or vegetables from your garden. It may be a favorite recipe, or a humorous reading, cartoon, or poem, or a Herald article, tract, or book. A toy or book will brighten the heart of a sick or crippled child. A hundred other things may be done to express your regard for your neighbor. Make an art of

"Thirty days hath September" has been true since old Roman days. How could we ever figure out the days of the rest of the months without September?

Probably no month is filled with greater family emotion. Summer is over, vacation ended, and the school bell rings.

For the first time the baby leaves home—only for a half day, but it's the first step toward the final break. It's hard to give up these tiny tots, but life never stands still nor turns back, so we gently loosen the tiny, clinging hands.

A short time and high school—then college and such a definite break!

Pride, hope, fear, anxiety and sincere prayers follow each child regardless of age. Fortunate is the one who is prepared to fully appreciate and make the most of each step as it comes.

Yes, summer with its fun, its work, its variety of activities is over. It has been good, but hasn't it been hectic!!

remembering by jotting down on a calendar or notebook the things you want to do. The simple little things to gladden the heart are of more worth than the most expensive of gifts, so do not wait to do something "big."

It has been said that our greatest crime against our fellow men is not cruelty but indifference. Friendly helpfulness may be given not only in times of accident, sickness, distress, and sorrow but also in times of festivity such as weddings, anniversaries, showers, birthday parties, or the arrival of a new baby. There are numerous ways the spirit of neighborliness may be expressed. Of course we should be discreet and quick to discern when our presence would be an intrusion.

Learning to be friendly

In "the pursuit of happiness" (one of our inalienable rights), it should be remembered that friendly people are always happier than others. I personally know a number of women of different nationalities who seem always to be happy. It does one good to know them. They act friendly and are gracious to all persons, regardless of station, color, or class. Why are they happy? Because through the Spirit of the Master they have love for people. They do not speak unkindly of others; they are well adjusted to life, feel no undue fear, jealousy, or envy. This is their secret of happiness. They like people as individuals. The man who collects the garbage is as much a personality to them as the banker, the minister, or the highest officer of the community. They have learned the art of being friendly, which makes them happy. They know that the person, not the rank, is what counts with God. Prayer Philosophy

THE SIXTH CHAPTER of Matthew, verse nine, of the Inspired Version of the Bible reads:

By EDITH G. BEGGS

Therefore after this manner shall ye pray, saying,

Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name.
Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven.
Give us this day, our daily bread.
And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us.
And suffer us not to be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil.
For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever, Amen.

In this manner we were taught to pray by the greatest teacher of all time. After this manner pray ye, "Our Father . . ." How all embracing this is! Not just your family and mine, but all humanity. Not just your church and mine, but all churches, for surely anywhere man bows his head and honestly and reverently prays this prayer, God will hear and bless him for it. Let us not pray as the man did who said, "God bless me, my son John, his wife and my wife, us four and no more, Amen," or do as the so-called Christian in the following illustration:

A beggar cold and hungry knocked on the door of a comfortable dwelling one night and asked the pious gentleman who answered it for something to eat. "Come in, come in!" said his host. He ushered the beggar into a magnificently furnished room, in the center of which stood a table groaning under its weight of good food. Choosing a crust of bread, he gave it to the beggar; but as the poor chap made ready to devour it, the host exclaimed, "No! You must first give thanks to God." "But I do not know how," said the beggar. "Then repeat what I say," commanded the man of the house. On the first words, "Our Father," the beggar hesitated in astonishment. When asked why he did not proceed with the prayer, he questioned, "Did you say 'Our Father'?" The righteous one replied, "Yes, why do you ask?" "My Father, and yours?" continued the beggar. The other replied somewhat impatiently, "Yes, of course." "Then," said the beggar, "you and I are brothers!" and with a hungry look at the bountiful table, he asked, "Aren't you ashamed to give this crust to me?"

PRAYING IS our means of approaching the Heavenly Father. Our prayers need not be wordy, but they should always be sincere.

Long, flowery speeches to the Almighty, no matter how earnest, do not receive any priority or culminate in any greater favor than does the simple cry, "Help me, Father," backed by faith and the latter by works.

In fact, prayer need not be words at all. It may be a thought, a deed, or a song—anything that lifts our souls from the sordid things of life to the throne of grace.

The language of prayer, no matter in what tongue or kingdom, or clime it is spoken, is universal when directed to the one and only God. He who knows man's every thought and sees his every deed, also hears his every prayer, whatever his nationality or color.

With God there are no foreigners, and no man needs an interpreter. Prayer is a compass when we do not know our way. It is an anchor when seas are stormy. It is a line of communication between us and God, ready for any emergency, but needed all the time. Keep the line busy. Keep it connected.

and the work one does are not of first importance.

Actions speak louder than words. Better than sermons have been the lives of friendly neighbors.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

August magazines are a mixture of summer-fall—with food for hot weather and clothes for fall. Other subject matter is equally as varied but interesting and stimulating.

For a heart-warming, true tale read "Our 'International Family,'" Reader's Digest. It strikes a blow at racial intolerance.

Heavier, thought-stimulating reading, whether you agree with it or not, is "Will the North Atlantic Pact Bring Peace?" Reader's Digest.

Another article with which you may not agree, "We're on the Road to Bankruptcy," American Magazine, is also good reading and should help you to form an opinion of a vital issue of today's government.

"What Would You Do in an Accident?" McCall's—well, do you know what you should do?

"Hope for the Homely Girl," McCall's, is "doctor's orders for a good life—and a gay one."

Food catches the attention with the color illustration and the recipes in "Quick Breads for Summer," Family Circle.

"What Goes on Here," Woman's Day, is a discussion of President Truman's Point Four, first mentioned in his inaugural address, which is of considerable importance in American foreign policy and international relations.

"Don't Let the Experts Run You," Woman's Day, is just what you need if you have read so many authorities that your confidence in yourself as a mother is wavering. It will restore some of your faith in your own judgment.

Everyone should read "Can You Say You're Sorry?" Good Housekeeping. Learning to say it and mean it can make life better.

The arts, crafts, and hobbies section of American Home is particularly good this month, starting off with "Every Man, Woman, and Child Needs a Hobby." Suggestions and patterns are given for varied crafts in several different articles.

Letters

Gift of Peace

Recently I came to Kenmore, New York, from Detroit, Michigan, where I had been employed, because I was no longer able to keep working. Here I have made my home with my daughter, Dorothy McKenzie. A thorough physical examination revealed that I must enter the hospital for a major operation.

I asked for administration at the New York District conference. Very naturally I wondered if I should survive the operation. In my administration I was given no promise of recovery, but in God's own great wisdom, he gave me a greater blessing than I asked. I was given the assurance that I was in God's hands, and his will for me would be accomplished. A great peace entered my soul and all fear of the surgeon's knife and the subsequent suffering was removed. This stayed with me until the operation was performed a week later.

I entered the Millard Fillmore Hospital in Buffalo, May 22. When the operation was over, I suffered a great deal, but also was able to sleep between hard spells of suffering. Doctors and nurses told me that my recovery was remarkable and that I was a good patient.

Now after six weeks, although I am not able to work, my doctor assures me that I am making satisfactory recovery and I must be patient, as it will take time.

God seemed to rule even in the financial aspects of this ordeal, and while the expense was great I am blessed. Even the hospitalization service paid more than I expected, and I have been able to take care of all this without having to borrow money. I am so grateful to God for this blessing.

Since God has seen fit to spare the life of his handmaiden, there must be something for me to do for him. My prayer is that I may find my work for him and do it as God wants it done. There is no greater blessing than the joy of work well done for the Master.

Recipes Wanted

The young women's circle in our Long Beach Branch is endeavoring to publish a cookbook as one of the projects to raise money for a new church building. We are in need of tried and tested recipes of all kinds. If you have any in your files we might use, we would appreciate having them. Also include your name and address so that we can publish them along with each recipe.

Divine Help

A strange thing happened to me today. I was out calling on nonmembers, who live nine miles west of here and three miles south.

I came to a place where four men were standing about a threshing machine, and there I stopped my motorbike beside the highway. The machine slipped, and both it and I partly slid down a four-foot embankment to the field where the men were. I walked the rest of the way down and began to talk to two of the young men, who listened to my message about Christ and the church, and accepted some tracts.

This done I tried to mount the embankment with the motorbike but could not do it. I made another attempt and the bike rolled up to the highway by itself. I had hold of the handlebars, but I was not pushing it. I found that I could walk up the incline to the road easily.

I feel sure that an angel of the Lord was accompanying me while I was on the Lord's errand, and that it was the angel that drew me and the vehicle up to the highway.

I bow my head in gratitude and love to our Heavenly Father.

Can Now Walk

I have received a wonderful blessing, and I wish to thank all of the Saints who remembered me in their prayers. I appreciated the lovely cards and letters which I received in answer to my request for prayers. I received a brace in the latter part of July, and I can get around without the aid of crutches at the present time, to the astonishment of the doctor. He predicted that I will be able to walk without the brace in four months.

Blessings in Disguise

An age-old belief is that anyone afflicted is cursed of God. Some may feel this way when illness overtakes them, but they should not. My life decries such a belief.

My first blessing came in 1930—the year I was born. I was a "blue baby" and declared dead by the family doctor. My parents, however, refused to give me up. They and Nora Hardin, all church members, worked over me and prayed that I be given life. This helped to anchor both Nora and my parents to the faith.

Although I lived, I was anemic and a bleeder. When I was three years old, I bled for twelve hours. Only after administration did the bleeding stop. Through God's mercy and great kindness both of these afflictions were removed.

Other incidents of healing have taken place in my life. I have never had good health, but I consider this a blessing since it has been largely responsible for my believing in the church. Because medical doctors have been unable to help me many times, I have become more dependent upon God for help. This dependence has brought me closer to him.

We often complain of the troubles that come to us, but frequently they are blessings in disguise.

God Was There

It had been a long, hot day. There was much stock to put out, plenty of customers, and all in all a day full of the labors of a clerk. I slipped quietly home, hoping the neighbors would not see or hear me, because I wanted to rest in the cool quiet of my house. I closed the door behind me and lay down on the couch. I was tired, lonely, and homesick. I prayed a rather disconnected prayer for strength and courage, and a prayer of thankfulness for past blessings. After all, most of my life had been good Slowly I realized He was there in the cool comfort of the walls I call home.

Tribute to T. E. Fitzwater

Many men who reach the age of seventy are content to take a well-deserved rest or are forced by ill health to give up an active life. Others, especially those of the ministry, who are fired by their faith and convictions, work with zeal until their closing hours. Such a man was Thomas E. Fitzwater who ministered to the Saints in Fanshawe, Oklahoma, until his death on May 30 of this year. He had visited Fanshawe many times and had baptized several converts, but did not make his home here until 1946. He was elected pastor of the branch in October of that year. Because of his sterling qualities, he was admired not only by members of the congregation but also by the townspeople. Through his endeavors, many came to have a much higher opinion of the church.

Brother Fitzwater spent his days in friendly visiting, distributing tracts and other church literature, conducting cottage meetings, and doing hard, physical labor for the church. A carpenter by trade, he built his home and also helped others. Through his influence, a member donated a tract of timber to the Fanshawe Branch. At the time of his death, Brother Fitzwater was planning to cut this timber and haul it to the pulpwood market, with the proceeds going to the branch for repairs on the church.

He was most happy when he could be working for the church. He often went to Independence to make recordings of services to be used in the local church and in the homes. The closing days of his life were spent in telling other patients in the hospital about the church.

The people of Fanshawe miss him, but will long be inspired by his life of service. Elder Jewel Jackson, who has also given many years of service to the church, is taking his place as pastor.

Wants to Contact Saints in Provo, Utah

Not long ago I read in the Herald about the special blessing that went with Brother Ammon White in his work as a patriarch. I received my patriarchal blessing from him and have derived much comfort from it. Although I am isolated, I hope and pray that the time will soon come when I can again worship with people of my own faith. It has been twelve years since I was able to, and many times the trials and temptations seem more than I can bear. Please pray for me and my children.

I would like to contact the members in Provo, Utah. That is the branch nearest to us.

Helped by Administration

Following the birth of my daughter, Joyce Darlene, on July 30, I returned home from the hospital. A short time later I developed a severe pain which the doctor diagnosed as a kidney infection. There was no room for me in the hospital, so I returned home with some medicine the doctor prescribed, but the pain continued to increase. As it grew worse, my husband called Elder E. L. Loyd to come and administer to me. I received a wonderful blessing and am able to do my work now. God is doing all he can to show people that he still lives and is ready to bestow his richest blessings if they will but believe in him and live so that he can bless them. Let us remember to thank him for his kindness.

ODESSA, MISSOURI.—The Central Missouri Stake Reunion opened Saturday night, July 16, with the singing of "Christ for the World We Sing." Elder S. E. Mifflin was in charge. Stake Missionary John Puckett of Independence was the speaker, his theme being "Witnessing for Him."

The reunion theme was "Witness for Him," with a sub-theme each day for all the services—"Hear Ye Him," "Obey Ye Him," "Suffer for Him," "Walk With Him," "Minister With Him," "Be Sanctified With Him," "Grow in His Grace," and "Come, Build My Zion."

The general prayer services were in charge of the new stake president, Harry J. Simons, and assisted by the new stake bishop, Willard C. Becker, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Elder Albert Scherer, Elder E. E. Jennings, president of Far West Stake, and other members of the priesthood within the stake. The Lord spoke through his servants on Saturday and Sunday mornings, giving encouragement to strive to do his will and admonishing the Saints to witness to the world that they are his people, to be a light that shall penetrate unbelief, fear, hatred, and despair.

The general class was taught by Elder E. E. Jennings and Elder Harry J. Simons, stressing the theme. The men's class was in charge of Stake Bishop Willard C. Becker. The women were privileged to have Mrs. Harry J. Simons as their teacher. Elder John Puckett taught the Leaguers. Brethren Clifford Long, Clair Weldon, Lynn Weldon, and a number of good teachers had charge of the children's activities.

Lakeside Reveries at 7:20, in charge of Mrs. Ora Hansen, contributed many good thoughts in poetry, story, and song—reminding one of Jesus' teaching by the Sea of Galilee.

The music was under the capable leadership of Mrs. Metta Anderson. Nearly every group from the stake provided special numbers for the services. The Warrensburg adults directed by Mrs. Willard C. Becker, the children's choir directed by Mrs. C. J. Long, and the reunion choir directed by Mrs. Metta Anderson made their various contributions. An outstanding number was the cantata, "Behold, It Is Written," by Louise Hills Lewis, presented by the Holden choir.

Sometime previous to the reunion, a play contest was sponsored among the Zion's Leagues by Stake League Director Paul Landsberg. At reunion the Holden League presented "The Prodigal Son," and Oak Grove presented "Joseph, the Prophet." Both plays were excellent and fitted in with the reunion theme.

A high spot in the reunion activities was the inspiring sermons given by Brother E. E. Jennings. Each evening his topic was the theme for the day, and everyone who heard him felt the challenge to work harder on the Lord's work.—Reported by LOUISE LOVELAND.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The following officers were elected for the term beginning October 1 at the First Chicago Branch: Elbert Chandler, branch president; Eleanor Chandler, director of religious education; Robert M. Pawley, book steward; and Lawrence E. Johnson, secretary.

GULF STATES DISTRICT.—The Gulf States District Reunion closed on Sunday, July 17, having 287 campers and a total registration of 600. The estimated attendance for Sunday, July 10, was 1,000, with approximately 1,300 on the closing Sunday. An excellent spirit of co-operation and responsiveness to the theme, "Witness for Christ," prevailed. Apostle W. Wallace Smith was in charge, being assisted by District President W. J. Breshears. Classes and recreation were provided for all age groups. General classes and classes for men and young people were taught by Apostle Smith, Bishop D. O. Chesworth, W. J. Breshears, and Jack A. Pray. Mrs. Rosamond B. Smith taught the women's class, and Mrs. Evelyn Breshears directed the children's division. The theme for men, women, and young people was "Each One Win One," and for the children, "Stepping Stones to Zion." Mrs. Alice K. Chesworth directed the reunion choir, assisted by Mrs. Helon McCall, the district director of music, and the evensong. One of the high points of the week was a trip to "Bonnie Beach" swimming pool, where 108 swimmers enjoyed a full afternoon of recreation. A business conference was conducted on each Saturday afternoon.

Eleven men have recently been ordained to the priesthood in the Gulf States District. Three to the office of elder, four as priests, one teacher, and three deacons. Their names and local branches are as follows: Gordon C. Gibson, Escatawpa, Mississippi, elder; David Turner Givins, Ocean Springs-Biloxi, Mississippi, group, elder; Clarence Lee Langham, Brewton, Alabama, elder; William Oscar Harper, Atmore-Flomaton, Alabama, group, priest; Elias B. Sherman and Calvin LeRoy Barnes of Escatawpa, Mississippi, priests; Morris R. Taunton, Belleview, Florida, group, priest; Daniel A. McQueen, Escatawpa, Mississippi, teacher; Johnie L. Rogers, Escatawpa, Mississippi, deacon; Joseph G. Arguelles, Ocean Springs-Biloxi, Mississippi, group, deacon; Donald L. McMullan, Vancleave, Mississippi, deacon.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—At the invitation of the Stockton Branch, the choir gave a repeat performance of the Easter cantata, "He That Liveth," in that city on the evening of May 1. Pastor Myron Schall gave the sermonette.

Children's Day activities began with a baptismal service at 9:45 a.m. in charge of the pastor. Brother Albert Burdick baptized Raymond Leslie Westlake, David Glen Garrison, Darryl Robert MacDonald, and Gerrie Elizabeth Cline. The children of the church school and their teachers gave a program at eleven o'clock, followed by a confirmation service presided over by the pastor. Confirmations were by Evangelist W. H. Dawson, Bishop E. C. Burdick, and Elder Laurence MacDonald. Also at this service Steven Mark, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Honeychurch, and Henry Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Burcher, were blessed. On May 1, James Alan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Burdick, was blessed by his grandfather, Bishop E. C. Burdick, assisted by W. H. Dawson. On May 29, Phyllis Ann Jensen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Jensen of Roseville, California, was blessed by Elders Myron Schall and Cecil Jacks.

The Zion's League gave a church carnival on June 17, donating part of the proceeds to the district League project of raising money for new reunion grounds. The League recreation committee sponsored an all-church swim party and picnic on the campus of the University of California College of Agriculture at Davis, California, on June 25. Two other activities that combined recreation and worship were conducted by the League in July. At the first one on July 9 and 10, they entertained young people from Stockton; on July 23 and 24, League members from Modesto were their guests. Saturday's activities included baseball and swimming, while on Sunday they began with an early morning breakfast and devotional service.—LENA SWANEY, Reporter.

MOBILE, ALABAMA.—High Priest Jack A. Pray was installed as pastor of the Mobile Branch at an installation service held July 3, 1949. Elder Pray replaces Elder A. Orlin Crownover. The Gulf States district president, High Priest W. J. Breshears, introduced the new pastor who accepted the responsibility. Elder Franklin Steiner represented the congregation in an acceptance and pledge of devotion.

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILLINOIS.—Jacqueline Marie, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold O. Good, was blessed July 17, 1949, by Elders C. E. Smith and W. C. Car.

Judith Porter was baptized by Elder Charles Fletcher and confirmed by Elders Charles Fletcher and C. E. Smith on July 24.—Reported by VIDA HAULEN.

Home-front Evangelism

MY MIDDLE-AGED FRIEND, who has been a member of the church for eight years, looked a bit grim when she told me why it took her twenty years to decide to join.

"My husband was a member when we were married, and I went to his church because he wanted me to learn about his religion and join him in it. The people of his branch knew that I was a non-member, yet I have sat many times in a church school class and listened to the teacher not only criticize and deride other churches, but say that anyone who marries outside the church is making a great mistake. Is it any wonder that it took me twenty years before I dared to join a church where nonmembers who had come to learn about the religion were treated like that?"

What a wonderful job of home-front evangelism that teacher and class performed on my friend! And before you are too quick to say that such a situation would happen only seldom, stop and think how many thoughtless discussions you have witnessed in a church school class when strangers to our religion might have been present. You might even stop to think how many such discussions you have contributed to.

Let's consider this business of marrying outside the church. All of us must admit that there are many fine, high-minded, idealistic, good-living people outside the Latter Day Saint Church. Why should we not love and marry them? And, since they are of that high caliber, they are the best recruits for our membership. As a most potent type of evangelism, it seems to me marriage with one outside the church should not be overlooked. It would bring good, intelligent people into close contact with us, and, if we perform our job of home-front evangelism as we should, the church would be immeasurably helped by the addition of those people to our membership. My friend was one of these, but it was no thanks to the members of the branch where she was that she joined her husband's church. It was rather in spite of them than because of them.

What makes us act this way? What makes us feel that we are so much better than other churches?—And don't try to tell me that we don't. I have sat in church and listened to sermons that did not say a thing except that our church has so much that other churches lack. Nothing constructive there. I have sat in reunion testimony services and listened to one after another get up and extol the things that our church has that other churches do not have—gifts of the spirit, authority, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants. Does the fact that we possess these things give us the right to lord it over the rest of the religious world? I don't think so. And I will go so far as to say that if we go on feeling superior and acting in an overbearing way toward our fellow Christians, what we do have will be taken away from us. Any gift that we as a church enjoy, comes from God and can be taken from us if we do not use it as he intended that we should.

OF COURSE I BELIEVE we are unique in the things we possess, and I am impressed by the very fact that we do possess them. But over and above that, I am impressed by the responsibility such possessions bring to us. Because we have more knowledge and are closer to God than other churches, our responsibilities to the world are greater than those of any other church. We have more to live up to. We have more work to do. We have more evangelism to accomplish. A higher plane of living is possible to us because we have the blueprint. Our sin is greater if we do not live up to our high knowledge than is the sin of those who do not have the blueprint and so cannot be expected to live up to it.

Our ministers and evangelists cannot do the job alone. They alone cannot overcome a bad impression which some bigoted member made when a stranger came to learn about our church. They cannot enter a home and erase the bad impression which quarreling parents, who claim to be Christians, make on children's minds. More than one of my friends at the university have told me that they first became estranged from the whole idea of religion because, if what they had seen in their homes or what they had seen in their home churches was a good example of Christianity, they wanted none of it. The over-all ideals and many doctrines of a church may be as high and godly as ours, but if the example shown in the homes of our members and in the branches is not high, godly outsiders will not be impressed.

THE GREATEST PROBLEM we have to face today is the problem of members who say, "We are the chosen people. We have the authority. We have the gifts of God," and then leave it there and look down their noses at other churches which do not lay claim to such high possessions. These people should read the first chapter of Amos and find what happened to Israel when the chosen people began to get too big for their shoes and stopped being worthy of any shoes at all. We are the chosen people only when we choose to act like it. We can afford to be generous, tolerant, kindly, and gentle with those who are not as fortunate as we. More than that, it is our duty to be generous, tolerant, and helpful to them instead of deriding them. And more than that, we are failing in our responsibility to God if we do not use his gifts to us to serve the world.

In talking to some of the ministers of our church, I have come to feel that our religion presents the most intelligent and realistic approach to Christianity and the whole business of living. Any intelligent, thinking person would have to accept our church on the basis of reason alone. But religion is not all reason. There must be a tremendous emotional satisfaction as well. There can be no emotional satisfaction in a church where individual members are overbearing, bigoted, and narrow minded. Many fine people are lost to us every year, both those who are members and those who might have been converted, because the lack of harmony and tolerance in individual members has driven them away.

Evangelists cannot do all the missionary work for us. We are responsible for the example of our religion in action which we present every day, every hour. Humility, tolerance, and generosity on the part of us as individuals in our daily lives will do more to bring people into this church than any number of sermons from a pulpit.

On Being Liked

As I was walking along the strand at the beach one day, I passed a man and his young son. As I did so, I noticed the wistful expression on the little boy's face and heard him ask, "Daddy, do you like me?" The man reached down, patted the little boy on the head and said, "Of course, Son, I like you!"

What any one of us would give just to be liked! The happiest child in school is always the most popular one. The most successful business man is the one who is thought well of by his fellow workers. And this popularity cannot be purchased with fifty cents at the corner bar. It takes something much harder to come by. It takes a genuine friendly interest in one's neighbor. It takes a kindly disposition. It takes personality—"that outward glow of a light within." And above all, it takes a genuine love for one's fellow being.

Youth Looks Forward to Its Civic Responsibilities

By DAVID LEONARD

THE SUN APPEARS on the distant horizon and arouses a sluggish world from slumber. The day dawns anew, crisp and clear, bringing life again to those things which have been still while mankind has rested. This is a typical dawn. I have no doubt that the sun will the dawn discloses a situation very similar to the one we faced then. Because of the scourge of war, we are in the same condition economically and politically that we were over two decades ago. Yet we are fifty years ahead scientifically.

Here Is the Writer

Dave Leonard is one of the busiest young men in Independence, Missouri. Since his parents moved here nine years ago, he has made himself well known in the oratorical field. The accompanying article is the speech that won third place at San Francisco in the Optimist International Oratorical Contest held in June. Dave is vice-president of the student council at William Chrisman High School, president of the Spanish Club, and a member of the National Forensic League, holding the highest degree possible in that organization. He is active in the Stone Church Teenage Zion's League also.

As a representative of youth, a heavy responsibility rests on my shoulders, for it is up to each young person to determine and plan what kind of world the dawn will reveal a quarter of a century from now. It is in our power, by preparing for our civic responsibilities, to build a new world. It is our free agency to choose whether or not the instrument of peace is kept in stride with the instrument of science. It is up to us to decide how to build and then to do the building. These are the responsibilities which face us.

Can and will youth be able to shoulder such a task as this? I give you a definite, affirmative answer. The young men and women of today will accomplish their purpose if they are given a chance and if they are supplied the necessary leadership. I plead with you to provide my generation with greater educational opportunities, to use your abilities as leaders to aid in training us for the type of citizenship for which the war-sick world is so desperately crying. We look forward to our responsibilities because we know it is up to us to make sure there is no recurrence of what has happened before. We look forward to ending this terrible quarter-century cycle by preparing and keeping the instrument of peace in accordance with the instrument of science. If we live up to our responsibilities, the sun will no longer dawn on scenes of chaos, but rather it will shine on an era of peace between peoples in which men are treated as human beings, not animals, and democracy will be the outpost of freedom for the world.

rise any differently twenty-five years from now than it arose twenty-five years ago, because the only thing that changes is the world upon which the sun rises. I have no doubt that the world the sun looks upon now is much different from the world it saw twenty-five years ago. And I have no further doubt that the world the sun will see twenty-five years hence will be entirely different. The dawn a quarter of a century ago found the world struggling to maintain sanity and become normal again after emerging from the throes of a terrible conflict. People were beginning to have a desire to look to the future and prepare for their responsibilities. But enough people didn't understand, enough didn't realize the necessity of preparing, enough didn't learn the value of a human life, for today the years of faithful service given by your dear wife who, as your assistant, often accompanied you to your office so that you could accommodate working people who had to be at their work at an early hour. Sometimes your day began as early as 5 o'clock in the morning and continued until after 7:00 in the evening. Your work made unremitting demands, and no call was made for your services to which you did not respond with cheerfulness and even at personal cost.

We remember too that it was the testimony and devoted life of Sister Teel which brought you into the church and made your services available to us.

Today we are reminded of the intimate relationship which exists between the profession so honorably represented by you and the ministry of the church. Wherever the emissaries of the gospel have gone, schools and hospitals have been the accompaniments. From the days of the infant church, the "beloved physician," St. Luke, has had many noble followers. Now in our own day, we honor such men as Dr. David Livingstone and Dr. Albert Schweitzer, who have brought their talents and rare gifts in science, art, theology, and medicine to the service of their Master, and to which select company you and many others belong.

IN HONORING YOU, we honor the profession to which you belong. We join in thanking God for the ministry of a "fellow servant" and reverently acknowledge that he has wonderfully blessed your skill and ministry as the beloved physician of countless numbers.

In conclusion, we note your name "Ambrose" derives from the Greek and means "that which is divine and immortal." Truly you are immortalized in the hearts and lives of many

CAMPBELL.—T/Sgt. Willard A., son of Mr. and Mrs. James Campbell, was born on July 2, 1924, at Olivia, Minnesota. He was baptized at Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, on his eighth birthday by Elder John Sheehy. Entering the Army Air Corps in 1942, he was sent overseas in May, 1944, and went on his final mission from Italy to France on July 24, 1944. Captured German records reveal that the plane to which he was assigned crashed in a field of mines near Fos sur Mer, France. Three of the crew members bailed out and were captured. In the absence of any information indicating the survival of Sergeant Campbell, the records of the Department of the Army show that he is dead.

He is survived by his parents of Independence; and three brothers: Richard and Robert of the University of Kansas, and James of Independence.

DANIELSON.—Bertha, daughter of Thomas and Ann Danielson, was born November 15, 1878, near Marseilles, Illinois, and died July 1, 1949, at Ryburn-King Hospital in Ottawa, Illinois. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since her youth. She is survived by one brother, William Danielson. Funeral services were conducted at the Seals Mortuary in Marseilles by Elders I. E. Turner and Robert Anderson. Interment was in the Oakwood Memorial Park at Ottawa.

HEXDOL.—Kenneth Marvin, son of Andrew and Pearl Thorson Hexdol, was born March 24, 1931, at Morris, Illinois, and drowned on May 8, 1949, at Morris. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 3, 1943, and was a senior at the Morris High School.

He is survived by his parents and two sisters: Yvonne and Cheryl. Funeral services were held at Mission Church near Marseilles. Elder David E. Dowker of Detroit officiated, assisted by Reverend Stoa and Reverend Thorson. Interment was in Section Cemetery near the church.

RAW.—Patrick J., son of James and Anna Raw, was born at Lingo, Missouri, on March 14, 1881, and died at St. Luke's Hospital in Kansas City, Missouri, on July 30, 1949, after suffering a heart attack earlier in the day at his home in Kansas City. He was married to Elizabeth Ann Evans on January 9, 1901, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 25, 1903. On February 4, 1906, he was ordained a priest, which office he held the remainder of his life. For thirty-nine years he operated a grocery store in Kansas City, retiring from business two years ago. He was a past-president of the Retail Grocers' Association and a member of the board of directors of that organization for more than fifteen years.

He is survived by his wife; a son, Frank J. Raw of Kansas City; a daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Floynd of Lonejack, Missouri; two brothers: Edward Raw of Waverly, Missouri, and Charles Raw, with the Army in Texas; two sisters: Mrs. Elizabeth Eckenroed of Kansas City, and Mrs. Pauline Campbell of St. Louis, Missouri; four grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Central Reorganized Church in Kansas City, Evangelist H. A. Higgins officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery in Independence.

PRETTYMAN.—Catherine Ruth, daughter of James and Catherine Cannon, was born May 21, 1848, in Ohio, and died August 10, 1949, at the home of her daughter, Rebecca A. Bills, in Independence, Missouri. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in her youth and was married in 1864 to Charles W. Prettyman, who served the church many years as a missionary. While her husband was in the mission field, Sister Prettyman operated a hotel at Comstock, Nebraska. Her husband preceded her in death in 1925; they had been married fifty-six years. Since 1939 she made her home with her children and, until a week before her death, enjoyed comparatively good health. She celebrated her one-hundred-first birthday on May 21.

Surviving are five daughters: Mrs. Bills of Independence; Mrs. Allie Arnold of Broken Bow, Nebraska; Mrs. Hettie Brandt of Curtis, Nebraska; Mrs. Della Bangs of Kennedy, Nebraska; and Mrs. Jessie Dunbar of Sacramento, California; two sons: Zenis of Henry, Nebraska, and Lige of Sacramento; twenty-seven grandchildren; eight great-grandchildren; and one great-great-grandchild. A son, Fred, died last year at Seattle. Funeral services were held at the Speaks Mortuary in Independence. Elders Perry Hiles and Leonard Lea officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LEWIS.—Carrie M., daughter of Lars and Ann Lewis, was born August 11, 1864, at Marseilles, Illinois, and died February 24, 1949, at her home in Stewartville, Missouri. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at an early age and was an active member until her death. She will be long remembered for her thoughtfulness and kind deeds. Funeral services were held at the Lyon Mortuary, Elders Willard Becker and Gordon Hidy officiating.

COLE.—Joseph G., son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cole, was born near Birmingham, England, on November 12, 1861, and died August 7, 1949, at Henderson, Illinois. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on May 18, 1879, was ordained a deacon on December 17, 1881, a priest on March 23, 1884, and an elder on June 3, 1914. He served as a pastor of the Peoria (Illinois) Branch for a number of years. He was a great lover of music and directed the Rock Island District choir; in his younger years, he played a trombone and belonged to several bands in England and the United States. He was married to Elizabeth Tyler in England on March 24, 1883, and came to America immediately after the wedding, locating in St. Louis, Missouri, until 1902, then moving to Peoria, Illinois. In 1935, they moved to Henderson, where he spent the rest of his life. On March 7 of this year he fell and broke his hip; he never recovered from the accident.

He is survived by a son, Claude, and a daughter, Amy Hendricks, both of Henderson; eleven grandchildren; and fourteen great-grandchildren. His wife, a son, and daughter preceded him in death. Services were held at the Lindberg-First Funeral Home in Galesburg, Illinois, Elders Ambrose King and J. O. Dutton officiating.

 NOTE IN THE MAIL

A paragraph in a letter from a friendly reader comes nearer to explaining the purpose of this column than anything we have seen. Louise writes:

"It's odd, isn't it, how many small things life is made of, including the perhaps seemingly unimportant 'just-in-fun' things which ease us more smoothly and smilingly from day to day. I think we too often lose sight of them in trying to be earnest and full of effort and diligent . . . don't you?"

A sense of humor is a buffer against life's bruises and hurts. It is a friendly companion when you are alone. It is an unguent for headache. It is a prophylactic against infection with the "blues." It helps you to understand and forgive your erring friends more easily; it lets you smile at their foibles and still love them. Best of all, it keeps you from thinking you are more important than you are, and it gives you the saving power to laugh at yourself, which makes you more charitable with other people.

Wit can make trouble because it carries a sting. But good humor sometimes carries a key that will unlock closed doors—doors that cannot be opened by force or logic or argument.

For all of its serious purpose, a church and church people often need the kindly service of a sense of humor to lubricate the friction that develops in the machinery of human relations.

 SHOP NOTES

You have heard of "Old Faithful," the geyser that helps make Yellowstone Park famous. It goes off regularly, about every hour. . . . Here in the shop, we have a drinking fountain that goes off every time you touch it. On first try, it gives you a dribble; on the second, a shower. Shop folks call it, "Old Faceful." (Visitors, be careful!)

 BOOKS

This screed, friends and countrymen, is a complaint and a suggestion on the subject of books.

The last time you bought a book (and how long ago was that, my friend?) you saw how prominently it displayed the names of the author and publisher. But was there any place for your name? Oh, plenty of blank pages, to be sure. But no printed invitation to write your name. And we like to write our names, don't we? We try out all new pens, pencils, and typewriters with them. Why, just for good psychology, publishers ought to put such a place in a book. More people would buy books if they had special places for the owner's name. For, once you buy a book, you have more to do with that copy than anybody else; more than the author and publisher, who by this time are all done with it.

And here's something else, thrown in free. If the publisher would add, in a prominent place, a few unkind remarks about people who borrow books and don't return them, it ought to help. A choice selection of imprecations and maledictions for the habitual offender, and a curse on the fortunes and posterity of the determined book thief would be appreciated.

Well, all of this may be like rain in the ocean, as usual with good suggestions. But someday a smart publisher is going to wake up and discover this all by himself, and then all the other publishers will, like Stevenson's "sedulous ape," copy him.

Zion's League

Annual III

"We Explore Our Stewardship"

This paper-bound book contains a complete year's program for your church's League. It is divided into eleven sections—July and August are combined—with specific suggestions and helps for each week's program. Each of the sections has worship, study, recreation, and service material in it. It is well illustrated and clearly written. Every officer and supervisor of each League will need to have this Annual.

A Camel Caravan by the Sea of Galilee

Cover Picture—The Camel Caravan Northbound

A SUMMER MORNING sunburst here glorifies the historic Plain of Ahma hard by the famous Horns of Hattin, or traditional Mount of the Beatitudes, where it is believed Christ stood when he gave to the world one of his greatest sermons on the heights above blue Galilee. In the picture a storm is threatening on the sea below. This is the ancient route of the caravans passing between the Valley of Jezreel on the south and the foothills of the Lebanons on the north on their way to Damascus and the East. Eleven camels are shown crossing the Plain of Ahma.

Called of God

IN HARMONY with the program initiated by the leading quorums of the church, the Herald is to give a missionary emphasis between the dates of September 15 and November 15. We like to tell about people and things we love. The measure of our faith and devotion to Christ's kingdom on earth is our missionary mindedness. Many of us have rekindled the fire of our first love in the gospel through our reunion experiences this summer, and we are just waiting for opportunities. Usually, however, opportunities to win one for Christ are made by you, they do not come labeled nor with handles attached.

Every member of this church has a divine call to missionary endeavor. "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." "Whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God." Perhaps you cannot preach but you can talk and warn and serve. Hyrum Smith was told, immediately after the foregoing, that "You need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called" (Doctrine and Covenants 10: 2, 8). Obviously there are two kinds of "calls." One is general and one specific. "Whosoever" includes all those who have a desire to do good. Do not wait for a specific call to priesthood and ordination to tell your neighbor and fellow worker of the hope we have in Christ and his earthly kingdom. We are engaged in a great work today and must be about the business of building the walls of Zion.

Introducing...

EDMUND J. GLEAZER (page 5) was born in Belfast, Ireland, March 23, 1895. He was baptized February 4, 1912, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, by W. W. Smith.

In October of 1915, he married Jane Laurie. The Gleazers have three children: Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., who went under general church appointment in 1938 and now is beginning his fourth year as president of Graceland College; Eleanor Jane, who is Mrs. Ralph Whiting; and Ruth Ann, who is Mrs. Gordon A. Wood.

During the years 1921 to 1923, Brother Gleazer studied social science as a special student at Harvard University. He has held the priesthood since April 25, 1917, at which time he was ordained an elder. In 1918 he was ordained to the office of seventy; in 1922 he entered the apostolic quorum.

Apostle Gleazer has given many years of missionary service to the church. At present his assignment is to labor in Zion, besides four districts in Missouri, two districts in Illinois, and Lamoni Stake. Among his hobbies he lists fellowship and travel.

VERDA E. BRYANT (page 9) wrote "A Shorthand Supplement" in the issue of April 23, 1949, and was introduced then.

MARK H. SIEGFRIED (page 14) wrote on "The Irvingites" in the Herald of June 13, 1949, and was introduced at that time.

News & Notes

HERALD MANAGER COMPLETES TRIP

Kenneth L. Graham returned August 12 from Silver Lake Reunion where he represented the Herald House as book representative. On the way out he stopped for a short time in Salt Lake City, and on the return trip he visited the home town of his mother, Mrs. Lena Graham, at Minot, North Dakota.

CANADIAN INSTITUTES

Elders E. Y. Hunker and John Darling are completing plans for church school institutes to be held in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, Canada, during the month of October.

YOUTH AWARDS

The Department of Religious Education reports that Stanley Zahniser of Muscatine, Iowa, a Boy Scout, has recently completed the program set forth by this church for the God and Country award.

Two Oriole girls, Alice Moore, Stoughton, Wisconsin; and Yvonne Rhyan, Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, have completed the Light of Life program and have received their final awards in this program for girls of the church. Five Girl Scouts of the Boston, Massachusetts, area have recently completed this program also. They are Ruth Beverage, Doris Davis, Carolyn Fisher, Kay-Frances Fisher, and their leader, Mrs. Kay S. Fisher. These five received their final award at the Onset reunion this year.

MCDOWELL SPENDS SUMMER IN WEST

On June 15, Dr. F. M. McDowell left Independence to go to the Montana Youth Camp at Elston, near Deer Lodge. The setting was deep in the evergreens. He says that two days before the camp opened there was six inches of snow.

After the youth camp, he spent three days at Brother Harvey Eliason's cabin in the mountains by a beautiful lake near Deer Lodge with Brother and Sister Elvin Vest and family.

From there Brother McDowell went to the third annual youth camp at Deception Pass, and then a few days were spent with Bishop Monte Lasater. This was followed by a two-day youth retreat of the British Columbia District at Caltus Lake. He was in Vancouver a week, where special services were held at the Vancouver church and the New Westminster church as well as a district priesthood institute at New Westminster.

He spent a few days with Brother and Sister L. R. White, the city manager of Burlington, Washington, and then a few days with Lauren and Wana McDole, thence to Silver Lake Reunion for one week. His pleasure was expressed at the large number of priesthood which attended the reunion and shared in the activities. He went next to Hagerman, Idaho, for the Idaho and Utah Districts' reunion, the largest and best ever held there. The week end of August 20 and 21, he spent time with the Aaronic priesthood of Independence at Gardner Lake, and on the week end of August 27 and 28, he met with the priesthood of the Utah District at Salt Lake City. This last trip was made with the company of Mrs. McDowell and Mrs. McDowell's mother, Mrs. Carrie Goode, who for many years had looked forward to traveling again the trail from Omaha to Salt Lake which she had made when a young girl in a wagon train.

The Hope of the World

“Our fundamental principles remain always the same, even though they may temporarily be obscured or dimmed by the mist of misspent efforts. In God we still trust, and Christianity still shines as the hope of the world.”

—President Frederick M. Smith in a message to the General Conference of 1932.

THOSE WHO SAT in the Auditorium in 1932 listening to the address to the General Conference could hardly have understood its full significance as we can now. Since that time, much of the world as we knew it then has been destroyed; but the truth of the message has endured. Despite the changing world, the fundamental principles of life, of the gospel, and of the universe remain the same. They are obscured, as President Smith said, by “the mist of misspent efforts.” We trust in God, because our trust in so many other things has been shaken or betrayed. “The wisdom of their wise men” has perished, and “the understanding of their prudent men” has been hidden (Isaiah 29: 14). God is all we have left to trust. Christianity is still the hope of the world because men’s plans are able to survive only as they conform to its purpose. All that goes contrary to Christianity eventually perishes.

A SINGLE WORD, uncertainty, overshadowed the world at the time President Smith spoke. It overshadows us now. Our perplexities have changed, it is true. The great enemy now—in America at least—is not “want” but “fear.” A new kind of economics has been tried which threatens our economic life, and we wait to see the outcome. A new kind of political theory is being tried which may destroy our political freedom. Experiments have been made, too, in reviving old pagan and pre-Christian concepts of ethics and morality. All these things have been tried in defiance of the “fundamental principles” that have been so long accepted by the civilized world. We wait to see the outcome, always with interest, often with doubt, sometimes with apprehension.

And besides, as most of us have observed, there is the atomic bomb. We do not know what we are going to do with it; we do not know what it is going to do to us. We are afraid. We wait.

THERE IS A PAUSE—an ominous dramatic caesura—in the affairs of men.

Some years ago we were driving across country, and saw rising in the peaceful summer sky—an exquisite cerulean blue that day—cumulus clouds like mountainous castles, a majestic and awesome picture before us. When they had reached their maximum height, there was a long pause in which it seemed that nothing at all was happening. All creation, all eternity seemed paused in a dreadful waiting. Then there was a flash of lightning out of the depth of the clouds, and a long roll of thunder, rallentando, echoing away into vast distances, ending in a whisper. With this overture, our cloud castle was torn by a violent upheaval, a black funnel raced out of its depths and across the plain, and the next hour left a memory of natural fury that time cannot erase. For some reason now, that long pause seems the most memorable part of the day’s experience.

Perhaps, at some future time, a historian will look back at our day and call it “The Pause.” It would be an apt term. Whether it is ever so named or not, this moment in history is such a pause. The storm may pass by us; it could tear us to pieces.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES—what did President Smith have in mind when he spoke those words? We have all heard of them; we ought to know them; we often forget them; we need to be reminded of them many times. Ways of presenting them vary greatly. These would certainly be among them:

1. There is the principle of the Holy Family. You may never have heard the term used in this way, and it may surprise you now. We are the family of God. “O Lord, thou art our Father,” said Isaiah (64: 8). “God our Father,” said Paul (Romans 1: 7). “All ye are brethren,” said Jesus (Matthew 23: 8). This is world-wide fraternity.

2. There is the principle of stewardship, mentioned often in the Scriptures. Jesus commended the “faithful and wise steward” (Luke 12: 42). Universal responsibility is found in this principle.

3. The principle of our mission was given to us in the words, “Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness” (Matthew 6: 33). God’s people have a duty and an opportunity to build and demonstrate the philosophy and the pattern of Christian life—Christian community life. That pattern must be built up progressively. It must begin with the individual, helping him to establish Christian home life, the foundation unit of the kingdom of God. An association of Christian homes leads to Christian community life, whose ultimate objective is a Christian nation and a Christian world.

That is the “hope of the world”—the shadow of Christ falling upon it, touching the life of every individual, and influencing every human relationship, from the smallest home unit to the largest international association. We can do something about it, beginning with ourselves here and now, and eventually reaching all men. L. J. L.

Sanitarium Day

The Presidency and Bishopric express their appreciation for the fine response by the church to the needs of the Sanitarium. Herald editors are in receipt of the following from Sisters Gertrude E. Copeland, Superintendent, and Nelle Morgan, Director of Nursing:

We are grateful to each and everyone within the width and breadth of the land who helped make the "Independence Sanitarium Day" a real success this year, and we are grateful to those in the smallest to the largest branches who put forth unusual efforts to make this day a success. The offerings have now totaled the sum of $12,430.87.

We thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

From Apostle D. T. Williams,
August 22, 1949:

The last Saturday night of the Woodbine Reunion will go down in the history of the United Reunion Association as the day when it was given birth. You already have been made acquainted with much of the preliminary work which started one and a half to two years ago to bring to pass an association of four districts—Northwestern Iowa, Southwestern Iowa, Northeastern Nebraska, and Southern Nebraska Districts—for reunion work. We had no difficulty at all in the meeting to consummate this organization. The reunion committee is composed of the four district presidents and the four bishop's agents, including Bishop Adams of the Northwestern Iowa District. Added to these as members of the committee are the apostle in charge; the secretary, who is elected as being outside the above number. Brother Charles Neff was elected in this latter connection. The presidency of the reunion is composed of the apostle in charge and one chosen from the reunion committee to act as his associate. Brother Clifford Cole is serving in this capacity.

We are in serious quest of a permanent reunion ground. A special committee has been appointed to look for some location which might be of advantage to us as a reunion site.

Apostle P. E. Farrow, August 24, 1949, writes:

I was present at four reunions and one youth camp, which were all of the gatherings of this summer in my field.

All of these were outstanding in quality so that I can readily testify that this is the best summer I have ever experienced at reunions. I am hopeful that this will result in a more enlightened and deeply spiritual ministry with greater gains throughout the whole field from the stimulation those who attended have received.

From Elder Blair McClain, Detroit, Michigan, comes a brief statement about the Blue Water Reunion, which is much like the reports coming from all our reunion gatherings:

Those who attended the entire period of the Blue Water Reunion heard the frequent remark, "This is undoubtedly the finest reunion I have ever attended." The spirit of fraternity and brotherly love made all reluctant to leave the grounds when final dismissal was given at 3:30 p. m. Sunday, August 7.

The theme, "Witness for Christ," was the same theme used throughout the entire church. Everyone in attendance received testimony of Christ and the burning desire to witness for him. As usual, the early morning prayer meetings and preaching services were the outstanding spiritual uplifts of the reunion.

Blue Water again confirmed the tradition, "This is a young people's reunion." Approximately 200 young people between the ages of twelve and twenty-five were in attendance throughout the entire period. The early morning prayer services and classes for young people were an inspiration to be long remembered by them.

Beginning at 7:00 a. m. with devotions conducted by Elder Eldon Osborn and continuing throughout the day to the close of evening prayer by Brother Carl Hicks, the day was full of fellowship and the power of God's Spirit. Those who worked in the kitchen and dining hall, those who took care of the physical needs of the grounds and equipment; the ministry of a competent nurse; the men's, women's, and general classes—all testified that the fellowship of Zion was something to be longed for, prayed for, and worked for.

We look forward to the reunion of 1950 and trust that the stimulus gained thus far may carry us through with accelerated activities in the great cause of witnessing for Christ and the building of his kingdom.

In a letter of August 18 from District President Howard F. Miller, we received a report of the first Hawaiian reunion held August 8-14 at Camp Erdman, Mokuleia, Oahu, T. H. We quote from his letter as follows:

From the start of our first assembly at Camp Erdman on Monday, August 8, our services throughout the week were of the highest type. We had almost perfect attendance to all our classes and prayer services. Our closing prayer service on Sunday, August 14, lasted an hour and fifteen minutes with thirteen prayers and fifty-two testimonies.

He reported that they had ninety campers with a Sunday attendance of 126. Three people were baptized including a Japanese girl who was a former member of the Utah church. She will begin her training at the Sanitarium in the near future.

Elder Eugene A. Theys on August 23 wrote from Rotterdam, Holland:

I will be leaving Rotterdam the first week of September to go through the Holland Mission. It will be my first opportunity since taking over Brother Scherer's work here in June.

Our latest report from the Department of Statistics shows that we now have 1,229 members in the German Mission, and I have sent another twenty-three baptismal statistics in today, so at the rate we are going, we should have 1,300 by December 31.

On my last trip into Germany, we organized three more fine mission groups, one at Winzer (which is in Bavaria), one in Mulheim Ruhr, and the other in Stuttgart. These last two places are the kind of cities we must get our work started in. I believe that within the next few years we will be able to open several more groups in the Ruhr Valley, the industrial area of Germany.

A Church for These Times

A sermon delivered at Graceland College on January 23, 1949

By E. J. GLEAZER, SR.

IF THERE IS ANYTHING this world needs today, it is, in my humble opinion a church for these times.

Now I'm speaking not as a member or minister in this church when I make this statement. Of course, as a representative of the church, I would remind you that we have a church for these times. I never have believed that any more than I believe it this hour. I could not be a disciple—one who accepts the Restoration Movement, knowing what God has wrought—and come to any other conclusion.

I've made a study through the years, regarding the attempts of other organizations to bring to pass righteousness on the earth. By way of contrast, I am in a position to say that we do have a church for these times. My message has to do with the theme of evangelism and an evangelistic church. Every day we live suggests to us the need for such an institution. It is evident that our civilization is doomed to a miserable end unless some improvement can be made. We have observed the various efforts that have been put forth all over the world by individuals and nations, and in some instances by a combination or an association of nations, to save the situation. Yet I have to say that little has been accomplished which offers any hope of a peaceful, righteous world. We cannot have a peaceful world unless those of us who dwell in it are righteous. I would not have any of you think that I am out of sympathy with the efforts of good men and women in our land and other lands who are giving of themselves and their substance to establish what they call a lasting peace. But there can be no lasting peace unless we succeed in bringing men and nations into a right relationship. And while

I pay tribute to the devotion of many of these people, some of whom are actually giving their lives, still I know from that which has been prophesied and from what we can observe that although their efforts may be sincere, they shall come to naught.

THE PROBLEM is not just a social problem or an economic problem or even a political problem; the whole difficulty is in man himself. Now it depends upon what school of thought we are following as to how we describe this problem which is confronting the world. Those who are interested in establishing the righteous peace that we referred to see it as a political problem; they also sense something of a social significance. As you're observing, there's great contrast going on daily between the so-called "democratic way of life" and this Russian exponent that is commonly referred to as a "Communistic way of life."

I have heard individuals recently challenge the use of the word Communist as it applies to that which is transpiring in Russia today. However, it is a controlled economy which means a government of dictatorship. But you may have observed that to a certain extent, we too have a controlled economy. And in some respects, we also have individuals who attempt to dictate our way of life. I am not referring to the chief magistrate of the United States; I mean those individuals who, if they had the authority, would take away our freedom in this land today. These people are not always found in the legislative assemblies of our states or nation. Some of them may be found as prominent individuals of such groups as the Manufacturers Association, and some of them are influentially engaged in various labor organizations.

As I observe the contest now going on regarding the economic form by which we shall conduct our affairs, I see the relationship that this has to earthly governments. To be frank with you, I can see no success for either group, and I merely mention the two extremes. There are other forms both political and economic that are being advanced by certain advocates in various parts of the world. I don't know why it is men and women whom we have every reason to regard as intelligent do not seem to sense that it is not a matter of what type of government we have, nor is it a matter essentially as to the form of our economic organization; but basic to any security, something must transpire to change the hearts and the minds of the people who compose our society.

I haven't said anything regarding the great contribution that is made by the educators of the world, through which they're attempting to help society, but some of the most outstanding people we have in this field are calling our attention to the fact that they're doing all that they can, but it is not enough.

I WAS IMPRESSED recently while reading an article in which Mr. Dewey, the unsuccessful candidate for the presidency of the United States, pointed out that the greatest scarcity in our land is not automobiles or for various other commodities but what he termed the old fashioned faith of our forebears. As a member of this church I am in accord with his statement, but we could go further than that. The old fashioned faith—even the devotion of our fathers—is not sufficient for this hour. We must go beyond that, and in the absence of that which I'm advocating this morning, with Mr. Dewey, I do wish for that old fashioned devotion they had for worth-while values.

Most of you are members of this church; if you're not, I hope your association here will convince you that you should be. Let me remind you, as members of this church that when we talk about problems, the real problem is the result of what man is himself—or shall I say that problems grow out of the fact that man is not what his Creator intended him to be? It is quite evident that most people are unaware of the existence of God. Possibly more than anything else the attitude which contributes most to the unfortunate situations we find in the world today is the lack of an awareness upon the part of individuals that God is God.

I'm not satisfied when someone attempts to give a definition of Deity. Whether you've learned it or not, we've got a little contest within our own church now, discussions in various centers by individuals regarding the Godhead. Some of our members are challenging the idea held forth in our article in belief of a trinity in insisting that there's only one God. I'm afraid that the time we're devoting in such arguments is delaying the regeneration necessary in your life and mine to bring to pass our righteousness. Thirty years ago I could have told you all about God—I wouldn't attempt to define him this morning. I know I couldn't and I don't believe that I've yet met anyone else in the church or out of the church capable of giving a definition.

In speaking today regarding the lack of the awareness of God, I'm not concerned in the matter of a definition. I'm not concerned merely in some lip service that says, "Yes, I believe," or "I'm a believer." I'm concerned with the individual's being conscious within himself of a power greater than he is, of a Supreme Being, a Creator, and that mankind has some relation to him. I believe the world problem which is a result of man himself grows not only out of the fact of his unawareness of God, but also out of the fact that man has not sensed God has purpose in him.

We have members of our church who could be compared to the people Paul addressed on Mars' Hill when he said that God was unknown to them. These people thought they were going to play safe. They were very superstitious. They were going to make sure that they did not ignore any gods, so they believed in a plurality of gods. They had a statue, or an image, and it had this inscription upon it, "To the Unknown God." There's just too many people even in our church today who have such a relationship, who are in touch with the same God who revealed himself to Joseph Smith. They had a remote God that is of no value in helping men qualify to meet the conditions that prevail in our world today.

I THINK THE PROBLEM in man grows out of the fact that he has not sensed his dependency on this Supreme Being. There's a Scripture that reads something like this: "It is not within man that liveth to direct his own steps." How many people even in the United States of America are conscious of this truth? And has it occurred to you that out of our membership there are few who daily acknowledge the fact that it's not within us to direct our own steps? Not many of us take advantage of what this church offers, indicating that we consider ourselves capable of directing our own steps. Such may be true of those who go through the formality of having daily prayer, and there are many of us who do not even make that effort. The problem in man also grows out of the fact that he has no regard for the law of God. It's a strange thing how we will acknowledge the rule of law in practically every other realm but in ourselves. We attempt to build our civilization disregarding the law of God.

I think man finds himself in the predicament he's in today because he has not acknowledged the power of the Spirit. There are various institutions in our land and elsewhere loudly proclaiming what they call God's Spirit. But what they attribute to that spirit is ridiculous. Yet some of us go to the other extreme, because of the fact that people act so strangely and attribute it to the power of the spirit, we assume that there is no place in our life for that which has been referred to as the Spirit of God. There are many remarkable statements in the good Book to which we could refer, but I'm thinking especially of one that reads like this, "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding." There is a spirit in us, and we must sense this fact if we are to answer the purpose of our creation. If we're to save our own civilization, we must sense our dependency on the power of this Spirit.

WE ARE IN our present predicament because we've failed to recognize the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Here are two phrases that we play with—two phrases that fall frequently from our lips, but few of us grasp the significance of either one. Even presidents seem to sense their responsibility as the rulers of our land. They attend church, they still utilize the Bible upon which they take their oath, and they incorporate into their various addresses certain scriptural texts. They play up the theme about the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and it's true not only of our chief magistrates but also of some of the politicians when they run for office.

I made a reference a little while ago to certain organizations of men. How many of these organizations who talk brotherhood, sense fatherhood? I'm reminding you that we will never have brotherhood until we first sense our relationship to a common Father. But even these terms of brotherhood in most instances are merely empty phrases, they do not carry over in the world.

I think I've observed through the years that a good husband doesn't have to continue to tell his wife that he loves her. I believe many of you who are not yet wives but who have hopes of becoming such will already agree with me that the young men of your choice don't have constantly to breathe into your ears the fact that they love you. Their love will be revealed in their concern for your welfare, and in that which they do to make you happy. I make the same application regarding the brotherhood of man.

Whether or not we are converts to this idea of brotherhood will be revealed not in what we say or sing but in what we do. Of course this also applies to any profession we might make regarding the fatherhood of God. Man has yet to realize not only the possibility of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, but that there can be brought to pass on this earth such conditions that in our everyday affairs we will demonstrate this brotherhood and fatherhood.

I wonder how many people in our own church believe this today. I've heard a few folks insinuate that this might have been brought to pass a hundred years ago, but conditions are different now, and they doubt that we ever shall have a Zion or kingdom relationship. All Zion is in reality a manifestation in daily behavior of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. This church was established by God to save man from the conditions that threaten his existence on the earth. I hesitate to speak so plainly because I know there are a great many people who resent some of us on the basis that we are the Jeremiahs—calamity-howlers—of this generation.

But as the very foundations of society are being shaken, I think someone ought to proclaim what is transpiring that is destructive to the welfare of man and society and not stop there, but go on to point out the possibility and the actuality of the establishment of the kingdom of God.

CAN YOU THINK of a clearer statement describing what is transpiring today than "They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3. That's what is wrong with us as a people and as a world.

I rather marvel how this statement touches upon the provisions of this message. First, the Lord is attempting to bring to our attention the need of recognizing him. We have forsaken him, we have strayed from the ordinances, we have broken the everlasting covenant. No people would be guilty of this if they were aware of God. Man is in his deplorable predicament because he has failed to sense his dependency upon the law of God. The Lord says, "They have strayed from mine ordinances and have broken mine everlasting covenants; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness." Then you have the prediction of what's going to happen to these people "whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon." They shall fall as did Babylon. And the Lord goes on to say, "I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth"—not the vengeance of God, as so many people have suggested from time to time, but the calamity that would come as a consequence of man's own sin which he brings upon himself—"called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave unto him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world." There is the way out. That is why this church must be evangelical. We have a message for the nation. We are called of Almighty God to make known to man the seriousness of his predicament, so he can make his adjustment to Almighty God. We're called upon individually and as an institution to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord. We're called upon to make known to the people of this world what God has brought to pass in these last days. We're charged individually and as a church to keep the commandments which are the laws of life as also are the inhabitants of this earth. "And all this that it might be fulfilled which was written by the prophets. The weak things of the earth shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4.

But man should not counsel his fellow man, trusting in the arm of flesh alone. God wills "that every man might speak in the name of the Lord, even the Savior of the world." I see significance in that statement which I've never noticed in this connection before. What about international relationships? You talk about racial strikes; you talk about the matter of color. Man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh but speak in the name of God, the Lord, even to save the world. If we could do this and do it in spirit and truth, we would not have a racial problem; we would not have a social problem. If we could accept these words and make them work, we would have the brotherhood of man and all that it promises to bring to pass—"that faith might also increase in the earth."

OUTSIDE OF THIS GOSPEL, what do you see today that suggests to any of us the possibilities of faith increasing in the earth? I've had men and women and boys and girls tell me they have contemplated suicide. If such be true in what we are to term "the household of God," what do you suppose the situation is in the midst of people who know not the gospel?

I'VE HAD YOUNG MEN come to me and inquire regarding the future, "Is it worth the effort?" I ask you this morning, outside of this church and what it promises, is there anything on this earth that challenges you on today? I listened carefully to a radio broadcast recently, regarding certain political situations in Europe and South America. Attention was called to the fact that under the leadership of Montgomery, the military forces of five different countries in Europe are consolidating to create an army of a million men. The whole purpose of that endeavor is to insure the peace of a portion of western Europe. You've heard plenty regarding our own budget in the United States and how the larger portion of this budget is necessary for military purposes. We're going to preserve our democracy and save our way of life by being prepared for what? To fight?

Then I'm reminded of a simple statement in the word of God which reads something like this, "They that live by the sword shall perish by the sword." And another one, I think it is in Deuteronomy somewhere, "Woe unto them that go down into Egypt for help." It looks as if Egypt might have to go to Israel for help now, but there was a time when that was the reverse. The Scriptures, and I've mentioned only two texts, indicate over and over again that there's no help, no security in anything that man is able to bring to pass through military or economic might. Sensing its resources, the United States is attempting, under the leadership of President Truman, to so improve economic life throughout the world that our way of life will not be challenged by dictatorships or for any other reason. And yet, any intelligent American who takes time out to think, knowing something of the resources of our nation and our skills as a people, will admit with certain statesmen who have already spoken that we do not have sufficient resources in the United States to attempt any such a program.

AS I SEE THE PICTURE TODAY, there is no hope for our nation or any other nation outside the plan that God has revealed. So far as I am aware, we as a church are the only people who have been called by God to share this plan with the nations of this earth.

Personally I do not think we have even started our work. I have never seen a more favorable opportunity for a church than that which confronts us today. My concern is whether or not we're ready for this hour. Are we consecrated sufficiently to pay the price? I assure you, and some of you will live long enough to see the fulfillment of my statement that you're going to have to give your life for one cause or another. You can't save it. My admonition is to give your life where it is going to count most. And I sincerely say that you should consider yourselves fortunate that your feet have been directed in that path wherein you found this church. If you will rise up as sons and daughters of Almighty God, you shall yet bring to this nation and the nations of the world what no other people are capable of providing.

We're made very conscious of our lack of numerical strength, but some of the greatest movements recorded in history came from individuals who lived in humble surroundings. From time to time we are able to visualize what our active, present membership in this church could accomplish if we would only move as a united people under God's Spirit. To become an evangelistic church, we must do more than proclaim the message; we must live the message. I have every confidence that the prophetic words which indicated that the time would come when the nations of this earth would be constrained to acknowledge the kingdom of Zion is indeed the kingdom of our God and his Christ shall be realized.

I'm not permitting the wickedness man has brought to pass on this earth to eclipse my vision of Jesus Christ or the possibilities of the rise of his kingdom. There isn't anything transpiring today that God did not know of before hand—"Knowing the calamity that was coming upon the earth, I called upon my servant Joseph Smith and others." Knowing that calamity, he has called upon us. We have not, as an institution, become the evangelistic force that some of us have every reason to believe we should become. Individually, we must be awakened. Individually, we must become aware of the divinity of this movement, our dependency upon God and upon his laws and upon the power of his spirit. We must not lose sight of the actual possibility of becoming a brotherhood in the sense of the term. While some of us have been spending days and years contemplating economic or social forms that would make Zion a reality, I pray God that we may sense the necessity of the change that must take place within us referred to by some as the process of regeneration. This was mentioned by Jesus Christ when he talked to Nicodemus about being born again.

As we utilize our gospel to bring to pass this transformation within us, we can't help becoming evangelistic as individuals and as an institution. If under the burning influence of this spirit and because we have learned of him, we shall carry this message into the lives of others, sharing with them in this great evangel, we shall demonstrate to this world that God has spoken, that his commandments are sure, and that his kingdom shall become a reality.

Leaven for the Lump - By VERDA BRYANT

HOW MANY TIMES have you looked upon a group of youngsters in the church and said to yourself, "Behold, the church of tomorrow!"

Yet I should like to know where I can find the Scripture (which we as a church seem to follow almost as gospel law) which says that this "church of tomorrow" will take form in the twinkling of an eye on some future inaugural day when the old folks give up the reigns and turn them over to the young people.

We complain that the church is losing its young people, and certainly statistics show we are not retaining our natural increase. Many have offered suggested solutions to this problem, and I should like to be numbered among these who think they have an answer.

I believe the keynote to the solution has been struck by the leaders of the church in their acknowledgment of the work of the youth and their assigning them to greater responsibilities for the general church. All of us are happy to see our young families taking missionary responsibilities both in this country and overseas, and there is little doubt that their youth and zeal will reap rich rewards.

The solution to our problem of holding our young people lies in every member's finding early in his church life an opportunity for service commensurate with his age and abilities, and then growing ever onward and forward in his work.

Someone has said that religion is like a bank—you can't get anything out of it until you have put something into it. Yet many of our people have never been given an opportunity to put much into their religion. There is work for all to do, but the task is to give each an opportunity to do that for which he is qualified or is willing to qualify. Opportunities for service must be given even to the youngest of our children. They, too, must find their niches and grow from there.

ONE TEACHER complained to me recently that for twelve years she had to arrive at church school ahead of time and arrange the little chairs for her department. I suggested that she assign the job to some of her children for short periods of time, and that this might help bind them closer to the church by feeling they are needed. She said they would forget or show up late or get under her feet and that it would be more bother than to do it herself. In this attitude lies one answer as to why just a few of the people do all the work in the church.

Of course the youngsters might get under a teacher's feet, they might forget, and she would have to be prepared to do it anyway: but with the proper encouragement, a little night-before reminder and much patience, a new worker for the church might be started on the way to successful service.

Did you ever see a girl who didn't love to bring flowers for a worship center? An avenue of service might be opened for someone to share her garden with others in this manner. There are dozens of small jobs that can become an important work for Jesus if properly suggested, encouraged, and carried out. The distributing of hymnbooks and church papers, counting the offerings, marking the roll book, and after-class cleanup are only a few suggestions.

One word of caution—the same person should not be used all of the time just because he can do it a little better than the others. Some of the most troublesome youngsters can be brought into line easily by being made to feel they are responsible for a certain task. We must remember that when we use our young people and children, we are not primarily interested in seeking perfection; rather we are more interested in what is happening to the person.

The small child's work should gradually grow into the young person's work. Singing in the chorus, playing the piano for church school, teaching the tiny tots, helping in the nursery, serving as secretary, and preparing worship centers or worship services will gradually develop the ability to do greater work.

Young people's groups should be encouraged to present a full evening's service. Thanksgiving, Christmas, Easter, and other memorial days present excellent opportunities for young folks to develop along these lines. Then there is one thing for the older generation to remember—when the young people put on a program, everyone should be there to observe and take part. It is disheartening to present a good program and have only a handful of people in attendance. This lack of interest on the part of the older members generates in young people the feeling that their work is not important. Their efforts should receive the whole-hearted response of the entire congregation.

ONE GROUP COMPLAINED that it had but one pianist who was beginning to resent being "chained" to her post Sunday after Sunday, year in and year out. All the others capable of filling the job were too timid or reserved and hesitated even to substitute. Someone suggested that several of the young people be allowed to play between the church school hour and the church service. By taking turns and playing pieces with which they were familiar, they lost their reticence and soon that congregation had a whole corps of pianists.

Recently I attended a branch away from Independence where teen-age boys acted as ushers. We were met at the door with sincere, happy smiles and ushered to our seats in a manner that made us really glad to be there. These young men felt the importance and responsibility of their task and performed their duty with a dignity and reverence which older men, long accustomed to the routine, could never have given it.

Yet there are many who raise their eyebrows at such procedure. Why is the ordained office of deacon immediately associated with ushering and taking the offering? There is no Scripture which says these jobs require the services of ordained men. True, the deacons are "appointed to watch over the church," but the same passage continues to say they are also "to be standing ministers unto the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 83:22). Are janitor work and ushering the answer to the command "to watch over the church"? Doctrine and Covenants 107:46 further tells us that deacons are "for helps and for governments, for the work of the ministry, and for the perfecting of my saints."

Still our deacons go on supposedly fulfilling their duty by ushering people to their seats and taking the offering every Sunday, year after year.

DURING VACATION CHURCH SCHOOL at Stone Church, four Oriole girls worked in the primary department. Their duties were to distribute supplies, run errands, take the roll, assist in games and handcraft, and fill in wherever needed. Even with such a list of duties, they found much time when they were not actually working, and they made notebooks for themselves like the youngsters were making (and, whether they realized it or not, they were learning many things they had not known before). They called themselves the "1/4 W—3/4 P's," meaning, they explained, "one-fourth work—three-fourths play."

They minimized their work to me one day when I was offering them my appreciation. They didn't feel that what they were doing was really important. Someone had made the remark that they were merely putting in their time to get their "Light of Life" hours. I immediately assured them that without their help I would be like the proverbial "chicken with its head cut off," and that their ready service freed my mind for more important details. They relieved me of all the routine work, the supplies were promptly delivered to the nine classes without even a reminder on my part, and the roll was carefully and accurately taken.

Though this is really another story, it does deserve a place in this treatise. These fourteen-year old girls devised the cleverest and quickest way of taking the roll I have ever seen. Each child had an enrollment card on which there was space to check each time he was present. (It would have been easier to merely have marked the days absent, but the system wasn't set up that way.) The girls clipped these cards together by classes. Then, instead of making roll sheets for each teacher to check each child present as is usually done, the girls made up sheets with the days of the week marked on them and thumbtacked one in each classroom. As soon as the class met, the teacher counted noses and if the proper number was there she merely marked "all here" opposite the date. If one was absent she wrote the name of the absentee. With a single glance the girls found out who was absent in each class and all others were automatically checked present. This negative manner of taking the roll speeded it up considerably, especially when consideration is given to the fact that we never had more than three absent in any one day out of our seventy-six enrollees. And some folks will tell you that youngsters don't have any constructive ideas to offer!

WE SHOULD RECOGNIZE that each person, regardless of age, needs a little corner in which to work, and that unless he finds an avenue of service NOW, his interest may wane, and perhaps the next opportunity will come too late. He must be made to feel that the service he has rendered has been a help, and that it was important. We know, of course, that every job from the least to the greatest is important in the sight of God if it is done with a willing hand, a happy heart, and to the best of one's ability.

Someone said recently that until we take the big "I" out of our personalities we will never have Zion. However, in my opinion, it is the big "I" that is going to build Zion. What can "I" do to serve my God? What can "I" say to help spread the gospel message? What can "I" give of myself for others? What can "I" be to witness to others what the gospel has done for me? "I" am important in the work of the Lord—not that "I" may collect to myself, but that "I" may build for others.

It is inherent in the make-up of human nature that each feel important, receive recognition, and become something through his own personality. People need to be needed. The hardest blow that can come to some is to feel he is not needed. We know each person is important, that the Lord needs one and all in his work, yet we should recognize that no one is so important that the Lord cannot get along without him.

My observation is that although we know how badly the Lord needs each of us, we as church members go on year after year hindering others from finding their places because of our individual attitudes toward the work we do for the church.

We often go by extremes in our church—either we do or we don't. There seems to be no half-way point with Latter Day Saints. Either we take our responsibility seriously or we consider it of little import. Either we give everything we have to our work and jealously guard any rights we think are ours because of our position, or we expect it is everybody's duty as well as our own. Either we are challenged by unexpected difficulties, or we fizzle out when the going gets tough. Either a job is done by someone who has done it for ten, fifteen, twenty-five years, or it is tossed around like a juggler's ball with a new person elected for the work each year and often with someone's having to fill an unexpired term.

Many times we marvel appreciatively at one who has stuck by a task in the church for a quarter of a century. Sister Martha has skillfully taught the primaries for fifteen years. Sister Ellen has sung all the important solos for twenty years. Brother Alvin has been the bishop's agent for twenty-five years, and dear old Brother George has been an usher for thirty years, never missing a Sunday.

Then comes the time when age, health, or other responsibilities necessitate their resigning, or death takes them from our midst. They are honored because of their loyal devotion over the long period of years, and much ado is made of how they started from nothing and built to the point they have attained.

RECENTLY THERE WAS HEADLINED in our local newspaper the story of a woman (not of our denomination) who had resigned her teaching position in the beginner's department of her church school after twenty-five years of continuous service.

At the risk of being misunderstood, I must say that somehow such acclaim strikes me in much the same manner as if I were to read the screaming headline, "James Jones resigns after serving his company for fifty years as an office boy." I immediately want to know why he has been only office boy for fifty years.

I want to know why Brother George has remained an usher for thirty years and wonder how many young boys might have gained their first real experience in church service as ushers had Brother George gone on to a greater work for the Lord.

I wonder how many talented young singers have sought and found opportunity for expression in churches other than our own because, "Of course, Sister Ellen must sing this solo." How much service of young business geniuses has the church been deprived of because Brother Alvin monopolized his job as bishop's agent for twenty-five years?

It may be a revelation to watch Sister Martha handle the primary department, the children may be enthralled by her teaching—but how many potential young teachers have been robbed of a chance by her dogged devotion to her work?

Don't get me wrong! I am strong for loyalty to the church and to one's particular responsibility; but this of which I am thinking goes far beyond a mere loyalty and obstinate devotion to one's work. It goes beyond being wedded to one's job in the church and reaches out to a greater appreciation of the whole work for Christ.

In almost every instance these loyal, devoted workers have built up their job to the point they have reached by hard work, by the trial and error method, by sheer determination and stick-to-itiveness. I, along with others, want to shake their hands and congratulate them on their good work. I want to be among the first to show my appreciation, because I know the kind of odds many have had to work under; but I would also like to inspire them on to an all important work which these people alone can do.

WHAT HAPPENS when one of these loyal, devoted workers is suddenly removed from the list? The branch staggers; there is a hole in the organization, and the work of the Lord is impeded. Someone else has to try to take over, and he usually must start from the bottom, learn by the same trial and error methods used by his predecessor, and have almost super-human devotion. Most likely he will so acutely feel his inadequacy in comparison to the previous worker that he will give up in despair. Then comes the round of juggling until the work so painstakingly built up over the years is completely torn down. How can such calamities be prevented?

Each worker should consider his job in the church as a steppingstone in his own progress toward greater service for God, but he should also consider that he himself is a steppingstone in the evolution of his job. There is no job created for any one person, and no person is created for any specific job.

I recognize that circumstances, localities, and the positions themselves must be taken into consideration when I make the following statement: but, generally speaking, everyone who has had the same responsibility for ten or more years should consider the possibility that he may have monopolized the job too long.

I hasten to add that I am not recommending a wholesale resignation of these workers who have proved themselves, but rather I would recommend they shift responsibilities so that they become, rather than the loaf, the leaven for the lump.

For the good of the work of the Master, every person who has any responsibility whatsoever in the church should have an understudy—someone who is in training to take over that particular responsibility at some future time. That apprentice should become thoroughly familiar with details and relieve the one in charge of much of the work as he progresses, thus giving the proved worker opportunity to go forward in further service.

I KNOW that we cling to our loyal workers who have proved themselves because we are not sure what some new worker will do, but it is the people who are shoved into a job for which they are not prepared who become discouraged and quit. Those who are properly trained before taking over full responsibility seldom disappoint us.

Then there should come the time when one of these loyal workers would stand up in business meeting and make a statement like this: "I nominate Mabel Allen for the position I have occupied for seven years. She has worked with me for many months and knows the routine well. I think she should be given an opportunity to express her abilities in this work." Probably many others may also have felt that Mabel should do the work but would hesitate making the suggestion for fear of hurting the one who has occupied that position for so long.

Then when elected, Mabel should be allowed to try her own wings. Her predecessor should stand by always ready to give counsel—when asked for—and to lend a helping hand when needed, or to slip back into the position if some unexpected emergency arises; but otherwise, it is hands off! Of course Mabel won't do it the same way—she may do it better!

And what of the one who has been relieved of a responsibility she has held for so long? She can go on and on. There is no top in the work of the Lord. She can teach others to follow in her footsteps or do district work. With her background and experience she can create her own new job—we can all think of dozens of jobs that could be created if only there were man power enough.

In the business world a worker often hesitates to show everything he knows to another for fear that person may get his job; but in the work of the church we should be afraid someone won't get our job!

LET US EXAMINE and see how this idea would work in actual practice. For example, let us take the case of Sister Martha, who handles the primary children so beautifully. She looks over the young girls of the branch and mentally chooses several potential apprentices. She suggests to one that perhaps the children tire of her stories and would this young girl come in and tell a story to the children a week from Sunday? After several such attempts among the girls, Sister Martha has probably narrowed the field of possibilities down to two or three. She might then suggest that on a particular Sunday a few weeks hence something more is needed than the quarterly offers. Does one of these girls have any ideas? Could one of them check at the library and see if something better could be found? After several weeks of this type of approach, undoubtedly Sister Martha will have found the girl she thinks best. Could Anne please work with her as her assistant for the next few months? Gradually Anne learns the routine of the primary department and takes more and more of the responsibility and contributes several good ideas for the improvement of the work. It may take a year or two, but under the guiding hand of Sister Martha, who recognizes that Anne's training is just as important as the teaching of the primary children, another real worker has been added to the roll.

Anne may be a little surprised when the request comes for her to assume the responsibility of the department, but after the shock has worn off, she will begin to get dozens of ideas and be filled with the desire to accept. That is the way the Spirit of God works with people.

Then what happens to Sister Martha when Anne takes over? Now she truly can become the "leaven for the lump." If she is the kind of person I think she is, she will gather around her a group of potential young teachers and pass on to them the tricks of her trade—the little things that work and those that won't work in reaching the children. She will cite examples of unusual behavior in children and tell how she coped with them. She will prepare a dozen or more to be good teachers, and the church will be stronger because these young people have found their niches. Had Sister Martha clung to her job in the primary department, these young people might still be floating around aimlessly like so many gas-filled balloons on strings in the hands of the circus barker.

I REALIZE that such procedure could not be followed with all positions in the church and in all locations, but I would like to recommend to anyone who has held the same position of responsibility in the church over a long period of years that he ask himself the following questions:

Do I feel that my work is really important in the building of the kingdom of God?

Am I constantly challenged by my work?

While We Dream of Zion

By GEORGE M. DOUBLEDEE

ALL IS QUIET around me this evening as I write. An accumulation of mail from the past few days has just been read, and the desire to write from a happy heart has prevailed upon me and won. The children—Johnnie, age six; Lois, four; and Melvin, a little more than a year old—are in bed. From the very absence of noise, I would say they, too, are dreaming of something more beautiful than the hard facts of life.

While outwardly it is quiet, except for the washing of the dinner dishes by my wife, Juanda, there still rings in my ears the whine of the cylinder of our combined harvester, as the Waukesha power unit dutifully turns the wheels in threshing the last of the year's oil bean crop. Memory takes a step backward to find me still in the field at the close of a day of labor. Man and machine are working side by side to bring into American homes one of the most wholesome and nutritious crops grown by the farmer today from which vegetable oil and many other important products are made.

As the tractor crawls along, dust follows me on the wind, mingling with perspiration and lubricating grease on my face and hands, giving me a strange, half-human appearance. There are weeds in the bean rows, and the combine groans under a load it was not made to bear.

The tractor lights are turned on as darkness overtakes me; there are a few rows left, and we will keep working to finish the job this evening. The tractor maintains its steady drone, lights illuminating the field ahead, and the laboring machine behind me, whose flashing sickle cuts beans and weeds alike, sends the matted mixture to the racing cylinder, thence to be separated on the rattle screens.

There is a sting in the air as night settles, giving the remaining rows a colorful glitter. Frost falls down my back from the spinning reel as it pushes the ripened grain from the sickle back into the whirling mechanism, and I slide the zipper fastener on my work jacket all the way up.

It has been a long day, and a hard one. Tired muscles long to relax, and internal pangs reiterate the claims of hunger. An irritating fuzz from the bean stems has got into my underclothing, causing a sharp itching, and a savage desire to scratch.

THIS EVENING, as always, there goes before me a vision of Zion's beauty, a picture of God's purposes accomplished by the faithful and chosen engaged in sincere, prayerful labor. This is a goal that will not be reached without effort—not a gift, free by the grace of God. It will come through sacrifice to reward those who have the wisdom and foresight to look beyond the ugly dirt and exhausting labor to the beautiful view of new social and spiritual conditions.

From my earliest childhood I have been called a dreamer. I have always loved the beautiful things of life—"The feel of the better grade of cloth," as one individual put it. Yet I know that denim changes to serge, and serge to gabardine only by concentrated, directed effort, not by observation or dreaming. The best things of life must be earned. Prize possessions usually cost the most, not always in dollars and cents, but in prolonged, determined effort. The most valued cannot be purchased at all, but come through the grace of God, to those who have made covenant with him by sacrifice. The soul of man has a price or exchange value.

ICAST MY LOT with the reorganization fourteen years ago, more than eight of which have been spent in the ministry. I have listened often to the beautiful accounts of a redeemed Zion and the joys to be gained in that blessed condition; but no one has bothered much about the other side of the picture—the labor, sweat, and sacrifice to bring it into being. Many are eager to do praiseworthy work; few are willing to work at the most essential tasks, if their efforts are to go unnoticed or have little chance of gaining favorable comment. If the job at hand requires "common labor" and even a small amount of perspiration, it either goes begging or remains undone.

Perhaps I am too new in this work to warrant notice, or perhaps I have strange ideas, but you may put this prediction down in your book of remembrance, if you will. There will be plenty of sweat and aching muscles and many tired bodies "this side of Zion." Those who shall be commissioned captains to serve in her glory will have earned their places by sincere concern, hard labor, and a continuous prayer of consecration. Those who depend on "birthright," or inheritance may be foolish virgins. For those who labor to bring to pass the purposes of God, there will be work shirts on the line holding the edge on the white ones to the tune of about six to one!

Many were the questions and remarks I received about my contemplated move to the "regions round about." How was I preparing to fit into the vision of Zion? What could I do for it that thousands could not do at least as well? With so many of the priesthood there, would I have an opportunity for advancement along ministerial lines? I love to work for Christ, and this last question in particular caused me serious thought.

SHORTLY AFTER ARRIVING in Missouri, I received the consent of James C. Daugherty, then pastor of the Medoc Branch, to open a mission at a little Union Sunday School in Galesburg, Missouri, five miles away. Here I filled a morning preaching engagement each week for more than two years. Then William Patterson, our district president, placed me in charge of a group of Saints in Scammon, Kansas, some twenty-five miles west of our farm. God certainly prospered us while we were laboring there. A total of fifteen were baptized in three years. It has been a "hard row to hoe" to get others of the ministry to help in this little mission because of its isolated position in the district and the limited size of its congregation. Sometimes I marvel at the patience of the people in listening to the same speaker, month after month, with me in charge and only myself to assist! I'm far from convinced that we have too many in the priesthood here. It appears to me that if the Lord had made each of us in the ministry twins, we could use twice as many more!

AS ALL GREAT ENDS have humble beginnings, let us come down out of the clouds of dreamland, and look about a bit. The good earth is the safest place for the foundation for any structure. Agriculture is the backbone of every sound, enduring, organized economy in existence! If we are to build, let us start with the foundation. Can we base Zion on anything more solid or enduring than the life-sustaining fruit of the earth? Are the children of God educated in sufficient number in the art of producing that fruit for all to have sufficient nourishment in Zion? Will not this work be one of the foremost timbers of the temple?

One of the first thoughts of all who arrive in Zion will be, "When do we eat?" Will it be wise to depend on the people of the nation in times of calamity to feed us? When we must "flee to Zion for safety," will we be able to walk into waiting houses and orderly, well-organized stores in which to buy our provisions? "But they are to have all that arranged." Just who is this "third person plural"?

Perhaps I may be pessimistic, but I came here in answer to an undeniable urge to prepare to help feed church people. I came to see just how much I could put into the vision of Zion, not how much I could get out of it.

I'm not advocating that all members rush back with their faith in God, and what they have in their pockets expecting divine assistance to erase all error on the grounds of misinformation. I was reared in this line of work, so many of the whys and wherefores came to me naturally as I grew to manhood. Experience is a hard teacher, and many times an expensive one, so do not be deceived by the idea that all Saints are exempt from the law of averages. Our cows are no more likely to bear twin calves than one belonging to a nonmember neighbor. There is much more to this business than may appear on the surface. Farming a few years ago with beasts of burden, and in this enlightened age of precision and high speed machines, are very different matters.

Let us all pray earnestly the Father will call enough into this work that should the time come upon us "as a thief in the night" there will be sufficient nourishment to keep away the pangs of hunger until others can be schooled and enough be produced for all. He could feed us on manna as he did the children of Israel but do you not think we have had sufficient time and warning? Let us be quick to remember the admonition, "Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom . . . and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be by the things which they suffer." Let us pray we may have the wisdom and foresight to learn well our lessons in unity and love, that hardships and suffering will not be our bed-partners as we bring Zion from dreamland into reality.

While we dream of Zion—and dream we will—let each of us do so constructively.

Lambs of the Fold—By Bessie Kanneman

*I think when I read that sweet story of old,
When Jesus was here among men,
How he called little children as lambs to his fold,
I should like to have been with them then.*

THIS AFTERNOON I attended a baptismal service at the Stone Church at which sixteen "lambs" entered the kingdom of God through the portals of baptism. This is as God designed that man should enter his kingdom. Sixteen lambs offered themselves to God to be laborers with him in the building of his kingdom here upon earth.

They did not go with lagging or faltering steps, but with the buoyant, sprightly step of eager youth setting out on a new adventure in life—and it is a new adventure to them, the adventure of feeling the directing influence of the Spirit of God in all of their daily activities, and of knowing they have a closer relationship with their Heavenly Father. It is the adventure of waking in the morning with the feeling that new responsibilities have been placed upon their shoulders—responsibilities which, when rightly understood, will cause them to grow in wisdom and grace and knowledge before God and men.

How alert and full of life they were! Instructions had been given by the one in charge that they should be led by a parent or the one who brought them there up to the steps of the baptismal font to the hands of the one who should baptize them. But without exception the children led the parents. They were so eager to enter into this new covenant they could hardly wait to get into the water. I particularly noticed the look of trust and confidence on the face of each little one as he placed his hand in the hand of the officiating minister. I pray that trust and confidence may never grow dim as the years go by.

MANY TIMES I have wished a wire recorder could be used so that certain spiritual and inspiring testimonies or talks could be recorded and sent out for others to hear. Such was the case this afternoon as I listened to the heartfelt and inspiring talk given to the children and parents in regard to the responsibilities and blessings placed upon the members of the church—the responsibilities of the parents in the rearing and teaching their little ones the kingdom way of life, and the added responsibilities of the little ones in their daily life before their schoolmates, their duty to God and the church. Nor was the talk for the parents alone, but for every adult man or woman who daily walks before these little ones.

An army of youth born and reared in Christian homes where the love of God and one's fellow men are the rule rather than the exception, was the picture brought to our mind as we looked over the congregation and saw the young men and women who previously had made their covenants with God. He has always called young people to step forward and offer their services in his behalf. Those who are older in years and "sot in their ways," are not easily persuaded to venture out into new and untried fields. But youth likes the challenge of being given a bold, adventure-some task.

Samuel was a very small child when Hannah took him to the temple. He walked uprightly before the Lord all the days of his life and became a prophet of the Lord. Daniel was a very young man when he was chosen to be in attendance before the king; because of the purity of his heart and his righteousness, he found favor in the sight of God.

Not all young people are venturesome though; some lack imagination and the quality to go forth to conquer new fields. It is not the task of every man to walk at the head of the parade, nor to be the leader of the orchestra. To some God gave one talent, to others he gave more, but to each is given some task to perform. All do not recognize their opportunity when it comes their way, consequently they lose the reward they would have received.

I WAS IMPRESSED as I watched those eager little ones sitting on the edge of their seats waiting to be called, with how pitifully few in number was this army of the Lord as compared to what it could be had we who already have made a covenant in baptism lived closer to that covenant instead of trying to serve God and mammon at the same time. God has repeatedly told us we cannot do this; we will love the one and hate the other. We must have faith enough in the promises of our Savior to believe him when he says, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." The material things of this world that can be destroyed by time and the chemical changes in the atmosphere are not worth sacrificing the building of the kingdom of God for. The life of the kingdom is indestructible; it is eternal.

Preserved in Safety - By M. H. SIEGFRIED

THE HISTORY of our church is replete with adventure, love, disappointment, success, and turbulence. Withal we have a history, too little of which has been written, and much of what has been written too little read.

An instance of this is The Inspired Translation, as we often refer to it. In reality, it is not a translation at all, but a revision or correction of the "King James Translation." Just what is the brief history of how the manuscript was made and "preserved in safety" from 1830 to 1867 when it was first published?

Joseph Smith, with Oliver Cowdery acting as scribe, was translating the Book of Mormon plates when he discovered some differences between the quotations therein and those in the Bible. While thus engaged, Joseph was told to translate or correct the version of the Bible then commonly in use. Hence, in June, 1830, one year after the copyright for the Book of Mormon was secured and about the same time it was published, the Inspired Version had its beginning.

What became of the manuscript? It was never delivered to Jackson County, Missouri, for the reason the mob tore down and destroyed the printing establishment there in the autumn of 1833. The manuscript was kept by Joseph Smith in Kirtland until his arrival in Far West in the early part of the year 1838. James Mulholland (for whom Mulholland Street in Nauvoo is named) was the private secretary of Joseph Smith at this time. To him was committed the keeping of the important papers and church documents when the Prophet was so unlawfully, unjustly, and unfairly thrown into jail by Governor Boggs in November, 1838.

Mulholland was fearful the mob at Far West might find these papers and destroy them. He hid them from time to time and from place to place.

Strange things occur in perilous times and in active lives. This faithful secretary had married Sarah, the youngest sister of Ann Scott to whom he committed the keeping of the manuscript of the Inspired Version, for the reason he thought the mob less likely to attack her than him. The story of Ann Scott was published in Autumn Leaves, Volume 4, page 18. From this we quote:

They also searched other houses of the Saints, including that of President Joseph Smith, who at the time was confined in Liberty Jail. Joseph's confinement in prison, coupled with the ruthless invasions of the mob, caused his scribe, Elder James Mulholland, to seek a place of safety for important church papers in his possession. Among the papers in Mulholland's keeping was the manuscript of the Inspired Translation of the Bible, the revelation on the rebellion, etc., etc. Brother Mulholland requested me to take charge of these papers, as he thought they would be more secure with me, because I was a woman, and the mob would not be likely to search my person. Immediately on taking possession of the papers, I made two cotton bags of sufficient size to contain them, sewing a band around the top ends of sufficient length to button around my waist and I carried those papers on my person in the daytime, when the mob was round, and slept with them under my pillow at night. I cannot remember now the exact length of time I had those papers in my possession; but I gave them to sister Emma Smith, the prophet's wife, on the evening of her departure for Commerce.

Emma Smith, having received the manuscript, carried it in like manner across the state of Missouri over the icy Mississippi. She "preserved" this manuscript "in safety" as Doctrine and Covenants 42:15 said would be done. How she did it, God alone knows; but she did, turning it over to a committee of the Reorganization in 1866 for publication. God bless her sainted memory for the safety she provided until she found those who could be trusted to publish it as her martyred husband had left it.

And so we have the Holy Scriptures. A fair comparison of this version with other versions will, we believe, convince anyone that a good work was done.

Missionary Sermon Studies

By F. HENRY EDWARDS

Here are helpful foundation materials for fifty sermon topics chosen from among the fundamental doctrinal themes of our church faith and theology. They do not in any sense prescribe the character of the sermon nor limit the preacher. They make available to him, in most convenient form, the kind of texts and leading thoughts that he will need. This new revised edition is improved in many ways.

HERALD HOUSE

Briefs

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.—Seventeen new members have been baptized in Springfield Branch. Evangelist Ray Whiting recently conducted a series of meetings, and Arthur Starks held cottage meetings at the homes of several Saints and three nonmembers. All three asked for baptism. The service was held at Swann Creek on July 21 with confirmations at the church on July 24. Elder W. J. Breshears, former pastor of Springfield, spent several weeks visiting here, giving two sermons on Sunday, August 14. On August 12, the Fifty-Fifty Class held a covered-dish supper at the church. Following the supper, religious experiences were related and Pastor F. M. Bishop gave a short talk. The Westport Mission group meets every Thursday evening for a prayer service and devotional in the homes of various members. An all-day picnic will be held on Labor Day. Proceeds will go to the Westport Mission fund. Seventy Saints from Springfield attended the Reunion of the Ozarks.

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.—The annual branch business meeting was held on June 29, and the following officers were elected: Robert Carr, pastor; Alma Mehlich, secretary; Hobart Rogers, treasurer; Garrett Jones, church school director; Lily Vitek, music director; David Mehlich, librarian; and Lillian Carr, publicity agent. Installation services were held on Sunday, July 10.

Arthur Starks, district church school director, and Paul Frisbie, district young people's director, visited the branch on June 5. Following the Communion service, dinner was served by the women's group, after which the two men conducted classes for Zion's League and church school workers. The Leaguers sponsored an outing on Sunday afternoon, June 26. Twenty-two young people attended.

William Guthrie, president of New York District and missionary to New York and Philadelphia, gave an illustrated lecture on the life of Christ on Sunday evening, July 10.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—At the annual branch business meeting, held August 17, Elder John Schrunk was elected pastor to succeed his brother, Elder Francis Schrunk. Other officers elected are: E. P. Oehring, church school director; Mrs. George Weller, adult supervisor and historian; L. A. Rife, young people's leader; Mrs. Francis Schrunk, children's supervisor; Miss Veva Allen, church school secretary; Mrs. Clarence Cheasebro, branch secretary; Dave Krahl, treasurer; Vinton Wight, custodian; Mrs. A. M. Pfanmiller, music director; and Mrs. Norman Fulton, publicity director. Apostle D. T. Williams was present at the meeting.

At a meeting August 21, the branch approved the appointment of Elders Laurence A. Rife and Francis T. Schrunk as counselors to the pastor. —VINTON WIGHT, Reporter.

DOW CITY, IOWA.—Seven adults and three children have been baptized in this branch since April 25. A building and repair fund has been established by the Dow City Branch. Mrs. M. A. Pearsall was appointed treasurer; Fanchon Quick, E. R. Butterworth, and Paul Argotsinger are a committee to solicit funds. Dale Argotsinger will return to Graceland as a sophomore next month, and Alma Baughman, Graceland graduate of 1949, will enroll at the University of Iowa at Iowa City this fall. Several members of the branch camped at the Missouri Valley Reunion held at Woodbine, August 6 to 14, while others made trips by car during the week.

The Flora, Illinois, Church

By Velda Morefield

AMONG THE NEWEST CONGREGATIONS in Flora, the Reorganized Church was first started in 1942 when a group of thirty members with a pioneer spirit began meeting in homes for prayer services. Later, the Star Cafe building on East North Avenue was rented, and a church school was organized in October, 1943. The first missionary series was conducted by Elder Wayne Updike, at which time several were baptized.

Later the group moved to Kitley Hall downtown. It was while meetings were being held here that a branch was officially organized on June 15, 1945, with Elder Ed. Colvin as pastor. Mr. Colvin served the church as pastor until October, 1948.

Not long after the branch was organized, the members raised enough money to start the erection of a church edifice. The corner lot on South Locust and East Washington Streets was purchased and the building begun.

The cornerstone laying service was held June 29, 1947, with Apostle Arthur A. Oakman of Independence, Missouri, officiating. Several participated in the activities of the day, including the Reverend Robbins of Decatur, Illinois, Mayor Leo R. Allen, Rex W. Dale, principal of the Flora High School, and others who gave a fine program of music.

AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of October, 1948, Elder Sylvester R. Coleman was appointed to serve as pastor of Flora Branch and president of the Southeastern Illinois District.

The work on the church edifice continued slowly but steadily, until the members were able to hold services in the main auditorium. Although all the work was not yet completed, the congregation decided it would be well to have an opening day so that others could see the church which they sacrificed so much to build.

The formal opening was held on Sunday, June 26. It began with a prayer service at 9:30 and an address by apostle E. J. Gleazer at 11:00 o'clock. A basket dinner and fellowship followed, after which Apostle Gleazer spoke to the priesthood while Pastor Sylvester Coleman addressed the women's group. Brother Gleazer spoke again at the evening hour. Special solo numbers were provided at the morning services by Mrs. Grace Henson of Taylorville; Mrs. Mildred Fehrenbacher sang at the women's meeting in the afternoon and again in the evening. All the meetings were well attended and a fine spirit prevailed throughout the day.

The Quest for Knowledge

By MAY ELLIOTT

MANY PEOPLE hesitate on the brink of obedience to some gospel principle with the thought, "Now if I could only know that the gospel is true!"

The promise is that we shall know, if we do his will. In most cases, obedience must come first. Signs are not usually given to induce belief; instead they "follow them that believe."

A fifteen-year-old boy who had been in the habit of paying his tithing acquired a better paying, after-school job. His debt to the church for the few months past totaled twenty-five dollars.

"Twenty-five bucks!" he exclaimed, "I sure wish I knew whether or not this church is true. I hate to pay out that much without knowing. It wasn't so hard when it was only a dime."

His mother told him, "Pay the tithing first and doubt afterward if you want to."

"Then I'd have a big investment in it—I'd want to believe," laughed the boy. "I'd somehow like to remain neutral until I knew for sure."

"If you don't pay your tithing, soon likely you will find yourself wanting to disbelieve. It's hard to keep the mind neutral; and the gospel is so replete with blessings for one's life that to want to believe is an asset."

According to the Scriptures, to want to believe is the way to sow the seed of great faith. If we obey, we will want to believe, and sometimes one receives not only great faith but knowledge through obedience.

It Comes by Study

Most of us in this day are convinced that we should study "all good books," but so often other good books take up most of our time and energy to the neglect of our church books.

A few years ago I knew a young man newly enlisted in the armed services who was deeply concerned over the subject of religion. He had received some disillusionments and was enamored with some Buddhist ideas. He had also studied many books on Mohammedanism. He felt sometimes that nirvana would be the ideal state of the soul. He had been baptized at the age of eight, but we found that he had not even read the Doctrine and Covenants for himself nor had he studied the Book of Mormon. We suggested that he consider the gold on his own doorstep, and he did begin to delve into the Three Books, aided by the writings of Edwards, Cheville, Elbert A. Smith, and other able church men. He also spent much time in prayer, and his efforts bore fruit. A year later he accepted a call to an office in the priesthood and was ordained. He received the blessing of faith, found happiness in service and had mental satisfaction and stability.

More testimonies are needed as and if one grows with the passing years. For with additional mental growth, a person looks at life from a fresh viewpoint and re-evaluates his former experiences; his spiritual life must keep pace. One can never say with complete truth that he knows what the books teach, for a man can study them a lifetime, and each application of mind to the Scriptures will bring new truths which he has not before seen.

It Comes by Prayer and Fasting

Moses fasted and prayed much. Daniel went without pleasant bread for three weeks. Enos, wanting to have assurance that his sins were forgiven, cried to the Lord all day in a lonely wood, and in the darkness of night he kept crying until the answer came. Alma once said that he had fasted and prayed much that he might know for certain that Jesus was the Christ and that his message was true.

According to the Book of Mormon, we should pray for our daily physical needs and means of livelihood, including the crops of the fields, and for our families and the welfare of our neighbors. But how many of us think to include in our supplication that we may grow in faith, understanding, and other spiritual graces? There is power in prayer.

Is Any Price too Great?

Almost any Latter Day Saint will say he believes in the final establishment of our socio-economic system which is the foundation of Zion. The highest spiritual development and good for the group and the individual cannot be realized until our fundamental Zion laws stressing equality are in force. Yet many are not sure that it can be done soon. "Sure, it could be," says one, "but the coming generation will have to do it." We've had our day—the younger generation must take over."

I've lived long enough to see and studied enough books to know that the younger generation is almost invariably conditioned by the preceding one. If we have Zion soon, some generation must repent in toto; the old as well as the young must shoulder the responsibilities and pull together, having charity for each other at all times. It might as well be our generation. Looking out upon a world where such destructive forces seem waiting to disintegrate our very lives, perhaps we should say, "It had better be our generation."

Having read many stories of the struggles of scientific men who have achieved, I sometimes wonder if we do not become too easily discouraged. Perhaps we are unwilling to pay the price we need to pay. If you saw the movie or read the book about Madame Curie, you will have a mental picture of her long series of attempts and failures, of hundreds upon hundreds of boiling pitchblende retorts, and at the end of the years of toil, study, and tears that little brown stain. But this stain added so much to scientific thought, revolutionized certain fields of medicine, and ushered in our present scientific age. Terrible as is the threat of misused power, it can become wonderful in hands clean and consecrated to the good of humanity.

Men will toil long, ignoring discouragements and backsets for economic stability and riches. In a memorable story in the Autumn Leaves some years ago, Katherine Keck spoke of a miner who worked alone and of the rock he had picked at, perhaps for years, in search of ore that would pay. Men risk their very lives for wealth.

What price are we paying today for faith and knowledge which make our lives fit to work for Zion? Just how great is our desire for Zion? Do we desire it because we are afraid and want safety for ourselves, or have we sensed something even higher and more beautiful than personal safety? Have we seen the world's great need today, and how much greater that need may be tomorrow? Do we realize that God has chosen us that his word may become flesh in us? Has a sense of mission burned deeply enough into our conscience?

To be sure, Zion will be a place of safety. A certain amount of security is necessary to the working out of the complete plan. But just being in Zion will not insure even personal safety. So many forget, or have not read the books and do not know, that the judgments are to begin at the house of the

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Jesus states (Matthew 11:11), "Among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist; notwithstanding, he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he." Explain this statement.

ANSWER:

The answer hinges on who is least in the kingdom of heaven. The greatness of John above previous prophets is affirmed. But another is mentioned, who is at the same time both the least and the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. We do not see how such a description can apply to any other than Christ himself, notwithstanding it may be difficult for us to think of him as the least. He admittedly is the greatest.

While Jesus taught his disciples that "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant," he made himself an example in that respect, "For even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." He walked the humble walks of life, spurning the honors of men and the glories of this world; he received not the riches of the people though he gave far greater values to them. Several times he fed from his own hand the hungry multitude. He died poor and was buried in another's tomb.

In teaching the saints the nature of true service, Paul pointed to Christ as the perfect example, saying, "But made himself

Lord and will fall upon those who have claimed to be Saints but whom God shall have found wanting.

Obedience to the law brings faith, knowledge, peace, and even material blessings to individuals. Group adherence can bring even more of the promises to fulfillment. We have a definite, workable, social plan which can stand us in good stead in time of depression or other trouble. When it is in operation, it might conceivably teach some much-needed lessons to the new world which is trying to rise from the rubble of the old. But before we can maintain such a society, we individually must cleanse our hearts, repent of our sins, and become aflame with the love of God and a burning sense of the mission with which we are entrusted.

of no reputation, and took on him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men." The Weymouth version puts it, "He stripped himself of his glory, and took on him the nature of a bondservant." The conditions of his voluntary humiliation and servitude are described in Isaiah 53 and Mosiah 8, where-in he submitted himself to the will of men that he might serve them to their uplift and redemption. Christ's mission was to give, not to receive; to serve, not to dominate. He made himself the servant of all, the bearer of other men's sins, even to the extent of dying in their behalf, and becoming the "least in the kingdom of heaven." He descended beneath all things that he might rise above all things.

QUESTION:

Are we justified in holding sales of suppers, ice cream, soft drinks, books, etc., on Sundays for financing other church activities?

Are we justified in sponsoring public church picnics on the Lord's Day, participating in the usual games of such occasions? How can we reconcile these to Doctrine and Covenants 59: 3?

ANSWER:

Both of these questions may be answered as one. Doctrine and Covenants 119: 7 suggests that the Lord's Day is a day of rest, a day of worship; that we should refrain from unnecessary work, but to let nothing go to waste nor neglect necessary work.

The church has never legislated on this particular phase of Sabbath activities, but the 1923 General Conference adopted the following:

The church approves the traditions, laws, and customs by which the Lord's Day is held in esteem, and looks with disfavor upon any movement or activity which, under church patronage, may tend to lessen respect for the sacredness of this divine institution.—Priesthood Journal, Volume 4, Number 2.

In 1892 the following was adopted:

That which is immoral in its tendency, or which will in any way interfere with the performance of duty as presented to us in the sacred word, or which tends to prevent us from rising to that high standard of thought and action to which all the Saints of God should aspire, should be excluded from entertainments held in different branches of the church.

That which is harmless and pure in its character and tendency may safely be admitted. Entertainments held for laudable purposes, when of a proper kind, are not only permissible but commendable, but all should so live as to enjoy that measure of the spirit of truth which will prevent them from indulging in that which would lead them away from God.

Care should be exercised in choosing Sunday recreational activities that the work of God may not be brought into reproach nor the divine purpose of the day be held in light esteem by his children. Upon such occasions, the effect of our conduct upon the young should not be lost sight of.

QUESTION:

Please explain how the office of Seventy arose, and how many it included.

ANSWER:

It is recognized that Israel was used by God as a type of his people to come, and many significant rites and truths were contained in the Mosaic laws and ordinances. Hence the fact that Jacob had twelve sons is found in after ages to have great spiritual and in some respects prophetic meaning. They later had twelve pillars, twelve loaves of showbread, twelve stones, twelve cakes of flour, twelve gates in the New Jerusalem, and twelve men, all of which represented either the twelve sons of Jacob or the twelve tribes of Israel. The twelve apostles of Jesus apparently were chosen in recognition of this established symbolism, as his leading representatives.

The seventy elders of New Testament times may also be traced to a similar symbolism. It was "out of the loins of Jacob" that seventy souls were reckoned of those who went down into Egypt (Exodus 1: 5). Afterward God commanded the "princes" of Israel, "heads of the house of their fathers, who were the princes of the tribes," to make certain offerings, including a "silver bowl of seventy shekels" for each prince (Numbers 7: 13). It was "seventy of the elders of Israel" that Moses took with him when he went to meet God in the mount. There were still seventy "ancients" (seniors) of Israel in Ezekiel's day, but they had become backsliders (Ezekiel 8: 9-12). The Jews trace the Sanhedrin (seventy men), the leading religious council of the Jewish people, to the Mosaic period.

The seventy of Christ's day are mentioned only in the tenth chapter of Luke. They were chosen after the twelve were appointed, none of the twelve being of their number, as the record states "other" seventy, that is, different from the twelve, were appointed. The Greek term indicates that seventy persons composed this early church council of elders, as twelve composed the apostolic council.

“Ask and Ye Shall Receive”

By Betty Sanford Tripp

SUSAN LAY staring unseeingly out of her bedroom window. It was a beautiful night—she knew, for she could feel the cool summer breeze upon her cheeks and feel it whispering through her hair. But Susan's heart was so troubled within her that she was not conscious of the beauty around her. It was strange that one so young in years could feel such a burden resting upon her, but Susan was beset by fears that would not leave her. “What if she had to live alone all her life? What if she would never find someone to love her? Life would be so barren and empty?” Her parents were kind people and good, but they laughed at her apprehension. “You're still young, Susy,” they'd say, and Susan would feel foolish and ridiculous, but she could not banish the thoughts from her mind. She alone felt the weight of it upon her heart. Older people became so accustomed to their families and their happiness that they took them for granted. They seemed to forget the loneliness and frustration that surround young people. There's no set time for growing up and falling in love, and Susan had reached the crucial period in her life when questions must be answered and decisions made for the future. She had endeavored to be happy, and she had been until the last year, when she felt there was something missing in her friendships and in her dating. It had been only recently that the thoughts of living alone, of never being loved or wanted had begun to disturb her.

“I don't believe I've even begun to live yet, Sally,” she'd tell her friend, who would only shake her head and puzzle over the change in her.

“You don't want to get married already do you, Susy?”

“I don't know,” Susan would reply. “But I think if I had a home to take care of and a husband to cook and sew for, I'd feel as if I was accomplishing something. I'd feel that I was doing something that mattered. It wouldn't be so hard to take disappointments if there was someone to share them with; do you think so, Sally?”

“That part might be all right, but I'm not looking forward to cleaning, scrubbing, washing, and ironing for a husband and a half dozen kids. I'm going to beauty school and earn some money.”

Susan would sigh and walk away troubled, wondering if maybe Sally wasn't right to be planning a career, but the thought of living alone or in an apartment with girls all her life persistently haunted her.

A SUDDEN FLASH of lightning across the sky caused Susan to glance up quickly at the heavens, but all was calm. There were no signs of a storm that she could see—just the beautiful stars twinkling down at her and the sweet smell of fresh air. She rested her head on the window sill and gazed dreamily into the night. Maybe life was waiting just around the corner for her. Maybe this was just the prelude before the actual beginning, for surely God knew of her longings and—or did he know? Was it possible that he was so busy healing old Mr. Tobbin's arthritis and Grandma Parry's bad cough that he hadn't had time to look in upon her? Susan slipped to her knees on the floor beside the bed and bowed her head as she had been taught to do in childhood. “Dear God,” she whispered, “I know you're awfully busy right now, but I have a favor I'd like to ask of you.” Suddenly Susan was hesitant. What if God, too, thought she was too young? What if God thought she was worrying needlessly? But no, in the Bible it said he was concerned over even the smallest of sparrows that fell to the earth. He wouldn't laugh at her or make fun of her. He'd understand that she was lonely and distressed. “I wanted to ask you, dear Father, if you would help me. If you would send me someone who would love me. I will promise to make him a good wife. I'll try hard to make a Zion home for him and our children. I will work harder for you and dedicate my life and my home and my family to you.” She stopped a moment and then added, “But if you think I'm too young, Father, and you think there is something else I'm better fitted to do, will you please help me to know what it is?”

LIFE WENT ON much the same. Susan was able to find part-time work in a drugstore, making milk shakes and sodas, and although she was not satisfied, she felt it was better than factory work and she was not qualified for an office. Some days were brighter than others, and she found herself actually enjoying waiting on customers and exchanging conversations across the counter, but too often she asked herself if her heart would ever be in work of this sort. “If I were married,” she'd think, “I'd be at home now, baking a pie or shining woodwork or washing windows." And during every day she would watch and wait for some answer to her prayers, for she repeated her petition every night to the One she knew could help her find her life's work.

Then it was August and time for reunion. Susan and her family always looked forward every year to this week when they met together with church people from all over the district and were taught and instructed by men and women who had given their lives in service in the church.

There were very few young people there when Susan, Jim, and their parents arrived that first Sunday morning. And what few were there planned to return home that night. Susan was disappointed, but glad that her one closest friend, Sally, was remaining for the week.

SITTING ON THE COOL GRASS, listening intently to Elder Johnson, Susan felt that maybe it was a good thing there weren't many young people this year, or she wouldn't have concentrated so completely on the services and would have missed many of the fine things she had been hearing. Suddenly the whole impact of what Brother Johnson was saying impressed itself upon her: "Every person in this church, yes, and in the world, too, should have two goals in life—a short-range goal and a long-range goal. And a Latter Day Saint's long-range goal should be to build lives and character as much like that of the Master as is possible. It should be to serve God and Christ and this church in whatever capacity you are capable. There are many ways in which you can attain the qualities of godliness and give service to your church. Your short-range goal should be your stepping-stone. It won't be many years before you young people will be deciding your futures. Whatever you select to do, should it be becoming a doctor, a lawyer, a laborer, a farmer, a stenographer, or a housewife, determine that your occupation is going to be a help in your achievement of this long-range goal."

Susan felt a warm glow about her heart. He had included the housewife. He felt that the housewife had just as much opportunity to serve God and the church as did the stenographer. "Oh, dear God," she whispered within her heart, "I'll do a good job, I promise."

"Hello, Susy."

"Why, hello, Dick, I didn't know you were here."

"Just got in this morning. Had to work till last night. My vacation just started. Where's Jim?"

"He couldn't get away from his job, but he'll be over this evening probably."

"I don't see any young people around. Where are they—all out in the boats?"

Susan shook her head. "We're all that's here, our age," she explained. "Everyone's working, I guess. Oh, Dick, this is Sally Porter. She's one of my closest friends. Sally, Dick Jannings."

"Hi, Sally."

"Hi, Dick."

"Well, guess I'll run along. See ya'."

"My goodness, Susan, where did he come from?" Sally wanted to know as they moved toward the refreshment tent which had been their destination before Dick stopped them.

Susan smiled. "Now, Sally, you said you weren't interested in boys."

"He's not a boy. He's a man."

Susan laughed and put her arm about her friend as they walked up to the tent and ordered ice cream bars.

IT WAS A GOOD REUNION. Brother Johnson's classes were excellent, and Susan felt she was learning so much she'd never be able to hold it all. In the afternoon Susan and Sally joined the younger young people in boating and playing tennis or badminton. Susan also enjoyed the company of Dick Jannings who sat beside her sometimes during the classes.

It was Mrs. Charles to whom Susan found her way most often. Mrs. Charles was a young mother with two lively boys who were forever getting into mischief. She was a happy, cheerful person, and her husband was a tall, young man, who treated his wife as if they had been married only a month. It was during one of Susan's talks with Mrs. Charles that she first realized other people were as interested in young people's problems as the young people themselves. Mrs. Charles also told her how she had met her husband.

"I have never approved of 'pick-ups,'" she said, "but one afternoon when I was with a cousin, two boys came by in a car and offered us a ride. My cousin hopped into the car before I was able to stop her, and as I was visiting her and didn't know the city where she lived, there was nothing for me to do but get in the car, too. I was scared to death. The car was a coupé, and as my cousin had scooted into the seat next to the driver, I was forced to sit on the other fellow's lap. I didn't even look at him. I was rigid and quiet and held myself just as straight and stiff as I could. The wind was blowing in a broken window and I shivered a little. The boy reached up very gently and buttoned my coat collar; when I looked down into his face, I saw that he was just as embarrassed and uncomfortable as I was. I saw something else, too, for I went home and told my mother that I had met the man I was going to marry. I did six months later. Ordinarily, Susan, real love doesn't happen that way. All girls want it to be exciting like that. They want it to happen all in a minute with just one look! But most of the time it doesn't. Be sure, Susan. Pray about it beforehand, then when the right one comes along, you'll know.

New Horizons

Spirituality in the Home

By MRS. EDWARD W. NELSON

WHEN WE THINK OF HOME, we visualize a place where a father, mother, and children live together.

To women is given the privilege and responsibility of making a house into a home, and to the women of the church is given the special task of making a Zion home—a place where God's Spirit may abide and where Christ can visit and feel welcome.

Such a home must be built on the foundation of love—love for God and his righteousness and mutual love of parents and children.

A house, no matter how beautifully designed, built, or furnished, is not a home unless love dwells within it and a spirit of warmth, mutuality, and peace prevades it.

To the mother, the homemaker, is given the chief responsibility of keeping the light in a home bright and burning through dark days as well as sunny days; she can only be equal to it through a deep faith in God. We are told to seek for the best gifts of which faith and love are precious treasures, for these are gifts of God. They are acquired by prayer and grow through the experiences of the years. Such a commitment seems difficult when we view the world about us, its modern trend and complex demands on our time and thoughts.

We have been told to put first things first and, as Emma Smith was instructed, to "set aside the things of this world and seek for the things of a better." How much we have need of that instruction now in our speed-mad world as we try to put into a day or week an eternity of living.

Time is a precious gift and should be budgeted wisely. How can one cover all the seemingly necessary activities each day brings and yet have time for the important work of studying and learning how to develop spiritually? Surely a "must" in every home is a worship hour; this "God's hour" should be the most important part of the day.

Stanley Jones in Abundant Living writes, "Turn to God, have a special time for prayer, so get needed resources for each day." If there are small children, the time thus spent should not be so long as to weary them; it should be bright and cheerful with each one taking part by choosing the hymn or Bible reading or sometimes offering the prayer. The father might mention something the family should be especially grateful for that day in the way of a blessing received or to ask forgiveness for some wrong done. Varying the procedure adds to the interest. Everything should be done in a reverent spirit. The most convenient hour should be arranged according to the activities of the family.

FOR STUDY we have been admonished to "read all good books." First there are the Three Standard Books in which we find God's communication: in the Bible to the Hebrews and Christians; in the Book of Mormon to the original inhabitants of America; and in the Doctrine and Covenants to the people and church of today. These books should be easily accessible, and everyone taught to realize they are precious because of the word they contain. They are to be used frequently in learning God's laws and the blessings to be received from him. As the Psalmist David has said, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." There should be no reason for stumbling or losing one's way in the dark when we have this light to brighten and cheer us on our pathway.

I hope a story I heard may never be true of a Latter Day Saint home: A little boy picked up a dusty Bible in his home one day and asked his mother, "Is this God's book?" "Certainly," replied his mother. "Well, I think we had better send it back to God—we don't use it here."

The greatest and most authentic textbook on personality is still the Bible.

THE SMALL COURTESIES of life smooth its pathway and constitute the lubricant of the home machinery. The parents' example has more power for good than all the words of teaching. Children are mimics and copy from what they see and hear. Would we have courteous, thoughtful children? Then we must be courteous and considerate at all times. Just as a pianist masters his instrument through constant practice, so character is formed by continually doing those things which are right and pleasing in God's sight.

The home atmosphere should be a happy, pleasant one, where bickerings, loud talking, and boisterous laughing are unknown. There is much goodness and beauty in the world to keep our conversation uplifting and enjoyable especially at mealtimes. Our homes should be given to hospitality, where children feel free to bring their friends, for the influence of a spiritual home cannot be overestimated. Its memory is carried as a beacon in the hearts and minds of those who have dwelt in it, and its hallowed influence draws those back again wherever they roam, for peace, beauty, and "the tie that binds their hearts in Christian love" are there.

The Home Column

Cheerfulness Versus Clutter

By LOUISE WRIGLEY

WE HAD BEEN in the new house only one day when it happened! The deluge of neighborhood children began. Big ones, little ones, middle-sized ones—they all came to inspect us. And the four- and five- and six-year-olds stayed to play with Johnny, our own “past-fiver.”

This was all very nice and sociable except there were so many children, and they came every single day, and stayed all day long! Even on sunny days the roomy basement seemed to fascinate them. Though I thought it fine that they should play there, within a week they had broken virtually every toy John had, nearly ruined some furniture which I stored in a far corner, and had driven me almost out of my mind with their constant “I want this” or “I want that” or “Johnny, ask your mother for”

By the end of the second week I had spanked Johnny twice in one day—an unheard of procedure in our home (which only made him belligerent and more disobedient)—and had scarcely spoken a civil word to my husband, who is a very nice person. On the ragged edge of my nerve, I thought wildly of refusing to answer the door when they came to play or of calling every mother in the block to tell them to please keep their darlings (I use the term loosely) at home.

Still, I knew in my heart that neither of these was the solution. I like children. I like to have them around me. More important, I couldn't alienate Johnny's friends any more than I would let him push mine around. When one of the little girls came to me asking for a needle, I gently suggested she ask her own mother. Her wide-eyed answer was, “Oh, no, I couldn't bother her. She's too busy!” All right, if all the other mothers were too busy, it was up to me to be on hand and at the same time protect myself from nervous prostration.

There was another thing I noticed. The children were quite destructive and didn't even seem to realize that they were. They had evidently never been taught respect for either their own toys or anybody else's. I decided then that they needed guidance, not punishment. Their own mothers, while charming ladies and good neighbors, couldn't “be bothered” with childish questions or behavior. Lots of adults are like that. Well, if I were going to have to supervise the whole neighborhood, I might as well do it with good grace.

THE NEXT MORNING found neglected ironing in the basket. What I was doing was more important, because it would insure fewer interruptions when I did start to iron. I combed through my stack of magazines, discarding all I could. Our closet yielded old shoes, a few old clothes, several empty boxes, a half roll of wallpaper, and a beat-up hat. Our dresser gave up some gloves I must have been saving for something, a torn bandana, and other odds and ends which came as a complete surprise to me. The package of construction paper and the paste came off the front closet shelf, and I found a pair of old scissors. Odd buttons, scraps of material from the sewing drawer, short lengths of bright colored yarn from all over the house I gathered things I had been collecting—or which had been collecting by themselves. I put them all into a large wooden box and took them to the basement.

Johnny helped enthusiastically when I explained to him that this would be our “clutter box.” Into it would go things we didn't need upstairs but which might be fun to play with. There would be plenty for everybody to have something different, but the one rule was that things must be laid nicely back in the box to keep them in good shape. Otherwise they would have to be thrown away and that would diminish the number of things to go around.

When the morning callers began to arrive, I held my breath. Johnny explained this new source of something to play with, and I backed him up with a reminder about how they were to be used. In two minutes everyone had something out of the box, and all were having a grand time. In addition to riding the “trike” and wagon, playing with the cars, trucks, and books, this was something else. Of course they had squabbles at first. It was no magic formula. Still, it was amazing how soon they recognized that there was plenty for all and lots of different things too. They made their own rule: “If you break anything, you'll have to go home.” This was a natural, spontaneous group rule—their punishment—not mine.

The first few days they put the things away before they left under penalty of not being able to come again. Once the habit was established however, they picked things up matter-of-factly. They still disagree over possession sometimes, but usually the others say, “Kirby had that first,” or “Here, take something else.” They are fair and adequate judges for each other and are learning to make their own adjustments because they have been given the opportunity.

At the same time, they know I am here if they need me.

The nicest part of all is that the novelty hasn't worn off. I try to add something different every little while, which isn't hard, since all of us have things in drawers and closets which really should be cleaned out now and then.

I felt really complimented the other day when I heard Johnny remark outside the front door, “My mommy's never too busy. Come in and let her fix it.”

THE REST of the week went by in a jumble of happy hours. Boat rides with Dick Jannings, campfires in the evenings when more young people arrived, and beautiful days and nights for camping. The prayer services inspired, comforted, and converted. The classes were filled with the spirit of truth and right. The speakers were outstanding. Susan had hoped secretly in her heart that she would meet Mr. “Right” here at reunion, but somehow she was not disappointed that she had not, for she felt every day that she was being drawn closer to a new adventure in her life.

The last night before reunion ended, Susan knelt down by her cot in the tent and breathed her thanks to God for the blessings he had bestowed upon her, asking him once more to remember her petition for guidance. The next morning in an early prayer service for young people, she stood on her feet and thanked God publicly for his watch care upon them during the week.

Just before the preaching service began, Dick and Susan sat on the bank, waiting for the time when they would go back into the building. They talked about the things they had learned during the week and how wonderful it would be if people could keep this spirit with them all the time instead of just while they were together at reunions. And then quite suddenly Dick reached over and took Susan’s hand and asked her if he might take her home after the services. Susan looked up at him startled. She saw a smiling, tanned face, friendly gray eyes, and broad shoulders—broad enough to carry her problems around. As she stared at him unbelievably, something warm crept into her heart, and she seemed to hear Mrs. Charles saying, “They want it all to happen in just one minute with just one look!” And then Susan knew. She knew God had answered her prayers.

OUR OWN SLIDE SET

The Gift of the Holy Spirit

by the

Laying on of Hands

This slide set has been carefully edited and prepared to aid persons in making a clear explanation of the fourth principle of our gospel. It shows, too, how our church conforms to the church structure, doctrine, and government set forth in the New Testament.

The slides depict each way that the Gift of the Holy Spirit is received through the laying on of hands—confirmation of newly baptized members, ordination of the priesthood, the blessing of children, and the administration of the sick.

Leonard Lea has written the manual which is provided without charge (one copy) with each slide set.

West Virginia District Conference

The annual West Virginia District Conference will be held September 24 and 25 at Moundsville. The first session is scheduled for 7:30 Saturday evening, at which time Seventy Merle Guthrie will speak. Sunday's activities include a fellowship service at 9:30 a.m.; a sermon at 11 by Evangelist John R. Grice; and the business session at 2:30 p.m., at which the annual reports will be read and district officers elected. Report should be sent immediately to Mrs. May R. Griffin, 2001 Nineteenth Street, Parkersburg, West Virginia.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Ernest B. Blett who is blind.

Nancy Cheatham, Route 2, Ava, Illinois, requests prayers for her daughter, Mrs. Eva Blue, who is to undergo a serious operation; for her son, Ezra Cheatham, who fell thirty-five feet and hurt his back; for all of her children and also for herself.

Each morning at 10 a.m., a group of elders administer to Mrs. Aileen Wood who is suffering with arteriosclerosis. The Saints are asked to join them in prayer at this time each day.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Agnes Reed, 2 Oakridge Street, Greenville, Michigan, who suffered a stroke on August 7.

ENGAGEMENTS

Higdon-McFarlane

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. McFarlane of Independence, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Barbara, to William T. Higdon, son of Bishop and Mrs. Earl T. Higdon of Osborn, Missouri. Both are members of Graceland's class of '49.

Schmoll-Phelps

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Phelps of Holden, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, June, to Ernest Schmoll, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Schmoll of Pleasant Hill, Missouri.

Cox-Briggs

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Briggs of Independence, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Lorraine, to Norman Cox, son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Cox, Sr., of Cleveland, Ohio.

WEDDINGS

Barns-Beauchene

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Beauchene of Jefferson, South Dakota, announce the marriage of their daughter, Faye, to Harold Barns, son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Barns of Stevens, South Dakota. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents on August 21, Elder Charles Smith officiating.

Nagel-Moon

Sadi Anka Moon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willard C. Moon of Lamoni, Iowa, and Harley W. J. Nagel, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Nagel of Independence, Missouri, were married August 26 at the Stone Church in Independence. Apostle Arthur A. Oakman officiated at the double-ring ceremony. They are making their home in Independence.

Kohlhof-Rook

Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Rook of Sioux City, Iowa, announce the marriage of their daughter, Avis, to Kenneth Kohlhof, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Kohlhof of Sioux City. The wedding took place in the Reorganized Church on August 21, Elder George Vandel officiating.

Mills-McAlister

Donna Flo McAlister, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Homer McAlister, and Westle Mills, son of Elder and Mrs. Frank W. Mills, were married at the Reorganized Church in Rich Hill, Missouri, on June 2. The groom's father, assisted by Elder John Deller, officiated. The bride attended Graceland in 1942. They are making their home in Warrensburg, Missouri.

Burgess-Atkinson

Betty Jane Atkinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Atkinson of La Porte, Indiana, and Wayne Burgess, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Burgess of Knob Noster, Missouri, were married August 13 at the Methodist Church in La Porte by the Reverend Clyde H. Lininger. Both attended Indiana University, and the groom received his Master's Degree there in June.

Brady-Gregory

Joan Gregory of San Francisco, California, daughter of Mrs. Nell Klohn, and Elmon Ray Brady, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Brady of Santa Rosa, California, were married August 21 at the Reorganized Church in Santa Rosa. Elder Hyrum Crownover, uncle of the groom, officiated. They are making their home in San Francisco where Mr. Brady is employed by American Air Lines.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas L. Carlson of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, William Paul, born July 9. Mrs. Carlson is the former Phyllis Laird of Portland, Oregon.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond L. Gunn of Fort Madison, Iowa, announce the birth of a son, Russell Jay, born July 28. Mrs. Gunn is the former Alice Folkes of Enfield, England. Both parents are Graceland graduates, class of '48.

A daughter, Linda Sue, was born on June 3 to Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Plumb of Redmond, Washington, formerly of Sacramento, California.

A son, John Thomas, was born on August 12 to Mr. and Mrs. Ward C. Booth of Belleville, Illinois. Mrs. Booth is the former Virginia Mae Ferguson.

DEATHS

ASHMEAD.—Gertrude Alberta, daughter of L. W. and Ada Newcombe, was born January 7, 1911, in Somerville, Massachusetts, and died August 12, 1949, in Edmonton Hospital of a sudden heart attack. With her parents she went to Onoway, Alberta, in 1914, where she grew to womanhood. She was baptized there at the age of nine. She entered Graceland College in the fall of 1929 and returned to Onoway in 1932. In May, 1939, she was married to Clarence Ashmead; six children were born to them.

She is survived by her husband; four sons: a daughter; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Newcombe of Stony Plain, Alberta; and a sister, Mrs. H. E. Pollock of Edson. One daughter died in infancy. Elder William Osler was in charge of the funeral service. Burial was in Heatherdown, Alberta.

Leaven for the Lump

Does my work demand the best that is in me?

Do I have new ideas, or am I re-using the old ones until they have become trite?

Do I attack each task with vigor and enthusiasm?

Do I experience the spiritual drive that makes me refuse to accept defeat?

Do I wake up each morning feeling "it is good to be alive" with a renewed urge to carry on my work?

Do I feel God's Spirit to be with me, inspiring me ever onward?

Is my work drawing me constantly closer to God?

Does my work open avenues of greater service?

Have I made every effort to share with others my knowledge and experience?

Would I be willing to carry on for Christ if my job were suddenly taken from me?

If you have been forced to answer honestly very many of these questions in the negative, it should sound a warning note to you that perhaps you are in a rut and are not growing in the kingdom of God.

May all accept this challenge to become "leaven for the lump" so that we may go ever onward in the work of the Lord and hasten the accomplishment of the great task set before us—the building of the kingdom of God on earth.

"Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?"—I Corinthians 5:6.

 IMMORTAL SEEDS

The scientist may tell you that the only immortality he knows is to be found in the life germ of a seed, either in plants or animals. It is true that the mystery of life is hidden in the tiny heart of a seed, however small it may be.

William Jennings Bryan made a famous lecture on "Immortality," in which he mentioned the finding of some grains of wheat in an ancient Egyptian tomb. Using that wheat as an illustration of immortality, he said—if memory is correct—that if it had been planted, instead of being hidden away, the grain descended from it would feed "the teeming millions of the world." That poetic phrase was impressive.

For some reason, people thought that some of the seed from that Egyptian tomb had been planted, and that it had grown. This would seem a miraculous power of survival for the germ of life. We have sought for years for the origin of that story.

"Stepping Stones" for July 10 carried an item about the finding of some ancient corn in a cave in New Mexico. In response to it, P. J. Wilson, of Grannis, Arkansas, relates the following in a letter:

"We have some corn which was found last year in a cave in New Mexico. Two men from here were working in a silver mine, and while exploring in the many caves there they found this corn. . . . The corn was brought here and was planted. Out of the seeds planted there are now nine stalks of corn. . . . The foliage is the same as other corn. Description of the ears and grains given in "Stepping Stones" is exactly like this corn. Each grain (kernel) has a covering of chaff. It is different from any kind of corn that we have seen. The men who found the corn are reliable men."

Any account of the planting and growth of ancient grains, under scientific control, would be of interest, and we would appreciate hearing on the subject from any readers who can cite references to reliable magazines and books. Accounts in some types of publications cannot always be trusted. The tests should be made under carefully controlled conditions. Any tests made by agricultural experiment stations would be of interest.

 MEMORIES

After a while it becomes embarrassing to be able to remember things so far back—things that happened when other people were still little bitty folks, or still in heaven. It makes you feel like ancient history. We used to think a good memory was an advantage. But now it seems that one can remember too much, and too long.

 MEN, WOMEN, AND CHILDREN

The success of church work requires that there should be the fullest sympathy, understanding, and appreciation among all groups of members and workers. As their problems differ, it is occasionally necessary to remind the people of the harmony that is necessary. The "Book of Mormon" makes a fine statement on the equality of the sexes in the field of inspiration:

"God is merciful unto all who believe on his name He imparteth his word by angels, unto men; yea, not only men, but women also. Now this is not all: little children do have words given unto them many times, which confound the wise and learned."—Alma 16: 145, 146.

Many Voices

SOME OTHERWISE INTELLIGENT PEOPLE crack up and are placed in mental hospitals because they hear voices when no one is talking. The spiritualists attend seances where their "mediums" are supposed to be attuned to many voices and relay their "messages" to impressionable relatives and friends. The Lord told Israel, "The soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits . . . I will set my face against . . . and he will be cut off from among his people."—Leviticus 20: 6.

Notice how easy it is to start a conversation about weather, sports, accidents, and scandal; but when the talk is directed towards spiritual uplift, it soon lapses into a monologue. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." When your overflow is along religious lines, it must be poured out with tact, discretion, and subtily.

"For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."—II Timothy 4: 3, 4.

When Jesus answered the disciples' question as to the sign of his coming and the end of the world, he included this, "If any man shall say unto you, Lo! here is Christ, believe him not." Few men have actually been so naive as to claim to be Christ since Jerusalem's fall. However, many have in effect said, "Follow me, I will save the world." Social panaceas from "$200 a month at sixty" to the confiscation of private property for community welfare are distracting voices that are all too common. The only voice that Latter Day Saints should seek is the one which has said, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness." Hear ye Him!

Introducing...

MAURICE L. DRAPER (page 5) has written other articles this year and was introduced in the issue of May 21.

MRS. S. C. BETHEL (page 9) wrote for the issue of April 23, 1949, and was introduced at that time.

EMMA M. PHILLIPS (page 12) has been a frequent contributor to church periodicals. Her work appears in Zion's Hope, Stepping Stones, and Daily Bread, as well as the Saints' Herald.

She was born in Michigan, where she first became interested in the church by attending a Book of Mormon class taught by Elder William Patterson. Her interest led her to read the Three Books completely through. Her class experience, together with divine direction, caused her to unite with the church in 1931.

She was graduated from Port Huron High School in 1931. After completing one year of junior college, she took a year of work at the Port Huron Business College, and has done some extension work in the field of writing.

On February 11, 1942, she married Nephi C. Phillips in Toronto, Ontario. They moved to Independence in 1947, and Brother Phillips expects to become an American citizen in the near future. Both have been very active in church school work. For a number of years Sister Phillips has acted as leader of a Blue Bird band.

LOUISE SCOTT WRIGLEY (page 13) was introduced in the Herald of June 6, 1949.

MARGARET L. (FLICKNER) MAYMON (page 16) was born at Edwardsville, Indiana, and was a charter member of the New Albany (Indiana) Branch.

On June 9, 1929, she married George Maymon, a schoolteacher and member of the church. A few months after their marriage, Brother Maymon interested her in the church, and she became the type of member who believes in working out her salvation. She has taught in the church school, led the junior choir, and is active in the women's department. She has prepared and directed special programs for the church, such as Easter, Thanksgiving, Children's Day, and Christmas, frequently writing her own script.

News & Notes

SANITARIUM ADDS X-RAY SERVICES

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital board of trustees, administrators, and Drs. John F. Bowser and James E. McConchie, radiologists, have been working for several months planning for expanding equipment and services to take care of the increased demands on the X-ray department by the many patients who receive treatment at the hospital. The latest type Keleket diagnostic equipment has been ordered installed in the Department of Radiology. When the installation is complete late in September, the total cost will be approximately $14,000. The department will have the following rooms: one room for deep therapy and four rooms for diagnostic work, which includes one room for gastrointestinal work, one room for genitourinary work, one room for fracture work and one room for general radiography.

APOSTLE SMITH REPORTS REUNION ACTIVITY

Apostle and Mrs. W. Wallace Smith stopped in Independence for a few days on the way to their home in Portland, Oregon, after their reunion season. They have been at Brewton, Alabama; Bandera, Texas; Paris, Tennessee; and Hot Springs, Arkansas. Brother Smith reports that some excellent improvement has been made on the grounds at Bandera. A new dining hall has been erected, a pump house, showers, a missionary cabin, and several other cabins, and fifteen to twenty permanent platforms for tents.

Sister Smith accompanied him to all the reunions and taught the women's classes. There were more people at each reunion than there had been in past years and excellent unity and a desire to grow was prevalent. A total of twenty-three baptisms were held at the various reunions.

Bishop and Mrs. D. O. Chesworth were with the Smiths at most of the reunions and as a result a considerable increase in the number of financial statements filed was noted.

REUNION AT BRUSH CREEK

Bishop Leslie Kohlman reports that the reunion at Brush Creek, Illinois, was a fine experience, proving to be unifying for the people of the area. He commented on the activity of the young people who shared in all services including the general prayer service and the general classwork. A new dining hall has been built, providing much-needed facilities. Brother Kohlman was accompanied by his family at the reunion. Other workers and their families included Apostle and Mrs. E. J. Gleazer, Elder and Mrs. Sylvester Coleman, and Elder and Mrs. James E. Menzies.

E. Y. HUNKER AT HOME IN INDEPENDENCE

President of Seventies, E. Y. Hunker is in Independence visiting his family and attending to church matters after a busy reunion season.

His first appointment for the summer was at Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, the first, full-scale reunion held in that district for years. The success of the reunion exceeded expectations and Brother Hunker says he was aided by such people as Elder and Mrs. John Blackstock, missionary in Lamoni Stake; and by Glen Johnston, from Independence, Missouri, who led youth activities.

The Fairview, Montana, reunion was the largest ever had there. Workers included Elder

The Saving of Souls

I exhort therefore . . . that prayers be made for all men; for this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.—I Timothy 2: 1-4.

How to Win One

This is what happened recently in the life of one of our young men—just one experience of many that he has had. He loves church work, he is a natural missionary, and he is actively engaged in the work of one of our missions near headquarters. Besides this he has just finished acquiring his bachelor's degree at college, and is going on for his master's degree. On top of all that he was recently married and now has the help of a very fine wife.

Near his mission there was a family that belonged to another church. One member of this family, a lad in his teens, was suffering from an incurable ailment. His people were rather prejudiced against our church. In a spirit of sympathy our young brother went to inquire about the sick lad, stayed to visit with him, and after that went regularly to read to him. The lad enjoyed this very much, and the family appreciated it. Despite good medical care, the lad died. The parents asked our brother to preach the funeral sermon. Then they became interested in the church, and the pastor of that group visited them and discussed the gospel with them. Some members of the family have been baptized and others are likely to join in time.

Our young brother loves people. He is very kind and friendly. He believes in the gospel, and he knows it is so good for others that they all need it. He is a hard worker and a diligent student. What he has done is not too difficult for others to do, if they will. Anybody can be friendly. Anybody can visit the sick and perform little services out of the kindness of his heart.

The whole case could have been lost by a lot of unwise argument at the wrong time. Our brother preferred simply to meet human need with love and service. Then, when the time came to explain the gospel, he was prepared to do it.

Many more of us could go and do likewise.

The Return to God

You will find this splendid piece of wisdom in The Confessions of St. Augustine (I, 28):

I was carried away to vanities, and went out from thy presence, O my God. . . . For it is not by our feet, or in change of place, that men leave thee, or return unto thee. . . . In darkened affections is the true distance from thy face.

Through the prayers of his splendid mother, and the ceaseless search of God for his soul, St. Augustine eventually forsook his sins and became converted.

On another occasion he wrote, "I stood with my back to the light." When we do that we walk in darkness, for our own shadow falls upon the path we tread. When we turn to God we face the light, and we can see clearly where we are going.

It may be a trite observation to state that every road goes in two directions: one is away and the other toward the goal. There is no benefit in being on the right road if one is traveling in the wrong direction.

There is only one important question: "Do you love God?" If you do, you will turn toward him; if you do not, you will turn away.

Perhaps the great futility of our times is the number of rather good people who are earnestly trying to be Christians with utterly no idea of what it is to love God. All their talk is about whether God loves them. That should be accepted as an article of faith, a basic proposition. For God does love us. Most good parents love their children. But there are children who have not learned to love their parents. Some of them do not learn until too late. Let those who wish to be Christians concentrate upon loving God.

Love will bring us back to God. St. Augustine was right in understanding that affection is the factor of greatest importance.

Jesus understood this better than anyone. He proclaimed the Law of Love. "Thou shalt love," he said.

Be Patient

In the work of saving souls it is wise to work diligently, but to be patient in waiting for results.

Jesus said in the Parable of the Sower (Luke 8: 15), "bring forth fruit with patience." The farmer tills the soil and plants the seed. Then he works at other tasks while he waits for the rain and sun to bring his harvest to maturity. The good fruit of the gospel cannot be reaped without that patience.

Sometimes we present all the Scriptures concerning the faith, then expect an immediate conversion. We are surprised and disappointed if it does not happen. The mind has been convinced but the heart has not been won. Time passes, and we think the cause is lost, but this is reckoning without the undying love and enduring patience of God. People need a personal testimony, an experience with God, to bring them in. We must wait for that.

Though we may have closed a case as a failure, God holds it open for an ultimate victory. Sometimes it is years before the harvest of some single slow-moving soul takes place. We must remember that this harvest is not for a short earthly season; it is for eternity. L. J. L.

Official

Pastors and District Presidents

Many district and branch conferences and business meetings are held at this time of the year, and many new district and branch officers are selected. It is important that the office of the First Presidency shall have the complete and up-to-date list of district and branch presidents and mission pastors and their addresses at the earliest possible date.

The new Pastor's Handbook is now ready for mailing, and we are very anxious that copies shall reach everyone holding pastoral responsibility without undue delay. We will appreciate the co-operation of the presiding officer of every district, branch, and mission in personally sending to our office in the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, the name of his district, branch or mission, together with his mailing address.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. Henry Edwards.

Across the Desk

Elder Charles D. Neff, Omaha, September 6, 1949:

My first reunion experience was certainly a happy and fruitful one. As you know, I was on the staff at the Missouri Valley Reunion at Woodbine. If my first impression is a lasting one, I shall always be a promoter of these affairs.

I have been thinking that one of the finest public relations jobs we could do would be that of letting the public know about our reunions. Many, many churches, as well as other social and civic organizations are looking for a successful plan of family camping. We have it, plus many more aspects which are indeed appealing. Is it out of the question to find someone of ability in the church to "make the reunion circuit" next year, taking pictures, and gathering information for a feature article? I feel certain that many publications as well as news-gathering organizations would see in such a presentation a great opportunity for readership. In fact, if the church cannot afford such a venture, we possibly could sell the idea to some magazine or newspaper that would be happy to get the story. However, I believe it a better plan to do it ourselves.

We probably could not get our message into such an article directly, but we could let the country know the story behind our reunions, plus the fact that we have always had a successful formula for family camping. Certainly it would build prestige. And by covering all reunions, interest would be coast-to-coast rather than localized.

Perhaps a similar approach has been previously considered. If not, I honestly believe, as a result of my experience (limited though it is) in the public relations field, that we could do a fine piece of promotion through the medium suggested above.

Elder James C. Phillips on August 25 wrote:

The Cash [Michigan] Reunion is history for another year. We had 233 campers and roomers on and near the grounds for the week and nearly 1,000 the last Sunday.

Especial mention should be given Elder Blair McClain for his leadership and wise counsel to the people. Our prayer services led by him were very inspirational and of a good quality, and our people were strengthened by them. Bishop Beck rendered a fine ministry to the young people and adults in his two classes. He reports that approximately twenty-five inventories were made out during the week. Elder Virgil Billings was well received, and his sermons were a great challenge to the people to build the kingdom. One could not help noting the unity and fellowship which existed among the people.

The leadership given the reunions by the general church was the most outstanding factor contributing to their success. Knowing that throughout the entire church the people would be testifying to their desire to "Witness for Christ" has had a profound bearing on them as well as inspiration for the teachers in their classwork. It seems when we drop our provincialism and look at the work of the church and the building of the kingdom from a more centralized direction for the whole church to participate in, such as this reunion theme, a greater challenge comes to the people and a greater desire to go forward together.

Apostle Oakman's presence on the last week end was of a great help to our people. He spoke of about the largest crowd that has assembled on the grounds, and his message was well received. This reunion has helped our people, and they have been richly blessed. Many have expressed their renewed desire to go home and work much harder than before. To me it has been a great success.

and Mrs. Philip Moore, Elder Arthur Gibbs, Patriarch J. F. Curtis, and Elder V. W. Ditton, district president, who worked to make arrangements and assured that the attendance would be successful. Special missionary emphasis was made, with Brother Gibbs' preaching the missionary sermons each night. The church at Fairview where the services were held was not large enough to accommodate those attending.

Brother Hunker spent a week end with Elder and Mrs. Elvin Vest and their two children at an institute at Weyburn, Saskatchewan.

At Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, reunion Elder E. A. Ledsworth was alert to secure the best reunion facilities yet had in that area. Through his assistance and the assistance of the Vests and other local workers, Brother Hunker said the people enjoyed the largest reunion ever had in that territory. A fine spirit prevailed.

The reunion at Sylvan Lake, Alberta, was also the largest attended reunion in their history. Workers there were the Ledsworths, Vests, Brother Hunker, and many local workers led by District President Elgin Clark. Brother Hunker says that this reunion built up to an excellent close.

He was encouraged at the two Canadian reunions by the response of the corp of young men, some holding priesthood and others recommended for priesthood. This gives considerable hope for the future in those areas.

Baptisms at the reunions he attended totaled eighteen.

Brother Hunker went on to Wyoming for two all-day Sunday meetings and was pleased to be accompanied by Mrs. Hunker on these occasions. The first was of the North Central, and Northeastern Wyoming Districts, and the Rapid City, South Dakota, group held at the foot of Devil's Tower. The second was of the South Central and Southern Eastern Wyoming Districts at Guernsey Lake Park. These were among the first all day gatherings since 1942. The fraternity was excellent and much good was accomplished.

Brother Hunker stopped in Billings on his way to Wyoming and visited the family of Sister Lillian Chase, whose husband, Dr. Chase, was the brother of Mrs. Alice Burgess of Independence.

EDWARDS AND JOHNSON RETURN FROM COLORADO SPRINGS

President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop Walter N. Johnson returned Monday, August 29, from the reunion at Colorado Springs. Brother Johnson was there full time, and he and Brother Edwards worked with Apostle Reed Holmes, District President Ward Hougas, and Elder Houston Hobart. They report a very fine reunion.

MESLEY REPORTS REUNIONS

Apostle C. George Mesley tells that all three reunions he recently returned from reached a fine, high level of intelligent, spiritual participation among the Saints. Mrs. Mesley and their son, Gordon, accompanied him to these gatherings and the family enjoyed sharing in each other's ministry. Brother Mesley feels that the youth camps are doing a great work in stimulating young people to devotion and participation in reunion leadership.

Elder Silas Condit, after about seventeen years of acting as the president of the Idaho District retired this year. This presidency has been temporarily taken by Elder Philip Moore. Apostle Mesley is pleased to announce the installation of R. Vern Webb, General Church appointee, as pastor at Spokane.

Life After Death

By APOSTLE MAURICE DRAPER

MAN IS IMMORTAL. Experience and good reasoning combine with the Scriptures to assure us of this. It is apparent that man is of a dual nature—that is, there is more to life than the body.

Spirit and Body

We know that the chemicals found in the body of man are common also to plants and other animals, to the soil and atmosphere. The mass and structural relationship of these chemicals seem not to be changed at the moment of death. The appearance of the body, so far as size and shape are concerned, is unchanged. Yet, beyond doubt there is a tremendous difference between a body just after death and that same body before death. While alive, it is capable of many functions, even when in an unconscious state, which are impossible after death. The differences, ranging from the complex activities of conscious persons in life to the inability of a dead body to retain even its physical structure, are very evident.

What is responsible for the difference? Something is gone! Call that something the life force, intelligence, the spirit—as long as we can agree on that to which we refer, the name is not important. We are thinking of that peculiar power which gives the body the characteristics of life which disappear in the experience of death. The bodily functions moving voluntarily, thinking, reacting to stimuli of various kinds, maintaining bodily organization—all these things become impossible after death because something fundamental is gone. For lack of a more descriptive name, we shall call it the spirit of man. Even though we are left unsatisfied as to the details, all our experience bears testimony to its existence.

The Spirit Returns to God

The spirit departs from the body to a destination unseen by mortal eyes. There are numerous evidences of an original, purposeful intelligence at work in the universe. These evidences are noted in the characteristics of man. Only God could create the powers expressed in the intelligence of an Einstein, the artistry of a Da Vinci, the spiritual insight of a Moses. This same God who calls the spirit of man into being and weds it to the physical body in mortal life receives it back into his care when the mortal life is ended. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return to God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes 12: 7.

So far as the future is concerned, obedient persons may expect to experience harmony, pleasure, and well-being, while the disobedient person sows the seeds of strife and confusion in his own being. "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."—Revelation 2: 7. "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."—Psalm 9: 17.

Paradise

John writes that paradise contains the fruit of the "tree of life," available to "him that overcometh." The implications of this Scripture are plain—the Christian is called to "overcome evil with good" (Romans 12: 21), to overcome his carnality, and by obedience to sanctify himself for eternal life. Paradise is a condition of harmony and adjustment, consequently a condition of peace and rest, though not necessarily of inactivity, for life always involves activity. It is a temporary abode for repentant spirits awaiting the time of their resurrection. An ancient

American prophet once declared, "the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care and sorrow . . . until the time of their resurrection" (Book of Mormon, pages 448, 449).

Hell

"The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."—Psalm 9: 17. This statement introduces a concept about which there has been much confusion. Detailed descriptions are not possible in the light of our present experience. But the Scriptures and our observations indicate the fundamental ideas involved in the concept of hell and punishment.

It should be pointed out that it is the spirit that goes into hell, not the body. The body remains here on earth and returns by the natural process of decay to the dust of the earth from which it came.

It is commonly supposed that hell is a fiery place, where the unfortunate inmates are tortured endlessly in raging fires of unimaginable heat. But we are reminded that it is the spirit of the wicked person which enters hell. A literal fire, requiring physical substance upon which to feed can have little effect on the disembodied spirit which has no connection with our sensory nerves. It is illogical to assume that the suffering experienced in hell is physical, even if there were the fires of hell as sometimes described. Actually, the Scriptures distinguish between the "lake of fire," which is the second death (Revelation 20: 14), and hell. Indeed, when its purpose is achieved, hell will be destroyed by being "cast into the lake of fire" (Revelation 20: 14).

Referring to the judgments of God upon those who have defiled the earth because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant" (Isaiah 24: 5), the prophet says, "And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited."—Isaiah 24: 22. The fact that the wicked must be restrained indicates that they are conscious, and that they are in a state of suffering. But it is not the suffering occasioned by blistering heat on a physical body. It is the agony of a restrained spirit, becoming aware of the consequences of rebellion. It may be the blind rage of one who is utterly hopeless, or the agonizing awareness of one who may even yet sense the injustice of his misdeeds, for hell is more than simply a place of suffering.

Isaiah states, in the above Scripture, that after many days they shall be visited. Who is the visitor, and what is the purpose of his coming? In I Peter 3: 18-20, we read how Jesus suffered for the world in order to bring us to God, and how by that same spirit he went and preached to the spirits in prison. In the next chapter, sixth verse, Peter tells us that the gospel is preached to them who are dead that they may be judged by the same standards as those who received the gospel in the flesh. What reason could there be for the preaching of the gospel to the spirit restrained in hell unless it is possible for them to respond and receive benefits of the gospel?

As its purpose is achieved, hell shall relinquish its claim on the spirits which are there. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works."—Revelation 20: 13.

Hell is a place of restraint, moral suffering, and spiritual punishment for rebellion against law. It is a place for teaching repentance on the terms of the gospel and from which finally the wicked shall be released to be judged according to their works.

Jesus in Charge of Hell

It is popularly supposed that the devil is the keeper of hell. But in Revelation 12: 8, we are told that Satan was cast out of heaven into the earth, not into hell. Again, in Revelation 1: 18, when John saw the Master in vision, he was told, "I . . . have the keys of hell and of death." Jesus, then, is in charge of hell. He has the keys, unlocks the gates, determines the policies, and supervises the activities there. This is why he could preach the gospel in hell, and why someday he can open the gates and release the prisoners.

Hell is a condition prepared by God and supervised by Christ to save what may still be worth saving of the lives of those who wouldn't be saved in any more complete measure.

The Resurrection of the Dead

A part of the Christian faith is that in due time men shall be resurrected in a union of the spirit with a body suited to the spirit's capacities. "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body."—I Corinthians 15: 44. We do not know exactly what the resurrected body will be like. John said, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—I John 3: 2.

Apparently all except the sons of perdition shall be resurrected, even those who have suffered and been taught the better way of life in hell. Jesus said, ". . . for the hour is coming, in the which all who are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they who have done good in the resurrection of the just; and they who have done evil, in the resurrection of the unjust."—John 5: 28, 29. Paul said, "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust" (Acts 24: 15).

Since the Master visits hell and the gospel is preached there for the purpose of saving what is still worthy of salvation in the spirits of those who are there, we do not doubt the wisdom and just mercy of God in releasing them that they may be judged not only for their evil works but also for the good works they have done (Revelation 20: 13).

These Scriptures indicate that there are two resurrections—one of the just, one of the unjust. The exact time of these resurrections is unknown. Nor shall it be known until the time arrives, for that of the just is associated with the return of Christ, about which the Master said not even the angels in heaven know the day nor the hour. In I Thessalonians 4: 16, 17, we read, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise first." "And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God . . . and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."—Revelation 20: 4, 5. These Scriptures show that the resurrection of the righteous will occur at the second coming of Christ and that they shall reign with him a thousand years. At the end of the millennial reign, the unjust and rebellious, having been purged in hell of their sinfulness, shall come forth in the second resurrection.

The Purpose of the Resurrection

The purpose of the resurrection is found in our present experience. Our bodies are given us in order that we might receive the fullness of joy, which is possible only when death can no longer interrupt our best work. In this life, when death is possible at any moment, any work that we attempt may be left incomplete. Our major works of art, like the cathedrals, have to be left to others for completion. Our ideals of freedom and justice are never expressed in their fullness. But in the resurrection the spirit is joined to a body which is suited to its needs, and the fear of death is removed from all but those who are utterly rebellious. This inseparable union, which constitutes the redemption of the soul, gives promise of an opportunity to share with God in the creative work of eternity.

The fact of the resurrection is real. It is not wishful thinking nor imaginative daydreaming. It has already been accomplished in the life of Jesus. In his triumph over death, the Master made it forever plain that obedience to law carries its rewards into eternity. Through obedience men may gain power even over death in the inseparable union of spirits with bodies capable of performing the righteous will of those who are obedient.

Eternal Judgment

And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works.—Revelation 20: 11-13.

The words eternal judgment stimulate us to think of this final judgment when every person shall be revealed for what he has become by his works. And this is correct, for it is a part of the process of eternal judgment, and it deserves our careful thought. But it ought also to be understood that judgment is a process, an eternal process, which has been, is now, and shall continue eternally making adjustments in the lives of men according to their deeds. That it is an eternal process is as much reason why it should be called eternal judgment as that its consequences determine the nature of our eternal future.

Judgment and Repentance

We are being constantly judged for the things we think, say, and do. In a large measure, each of us is the result of his experiences, choices, and deeds up to the present. If one would be something different ten years from now, he must begin now to do the things which will make him the kind of person he wants to be. This is the process of eternal judgment. In it the principle of Christian repentance has its effectiveness. In repentance, we cease doing evil and learn to do well. Judgment builds into our lives the things we do, and our better works make of us better persons.

The eternal consequences of our deeds are finally revealed in the event referred to in Revelation 20: 11-13, the day of judgment. This experience is described as the time when "our conduct with our fellow men will be revealed." In other words, this judgment does not change the nature of the people being judged, but it reveals what the process of judgment has made them. If we are rebellious now, our rebellion will then be revealed for eternity. If we respond to the call of Christ now, the results of our response will be revealed in terms of the Christian nature we have developed through obedience to the gospel law. The revelation, it must be emphasized, will be of what we have become by our deeds, and the fact of the revelation will not change our natures.

Degrees of Reward

In the process of resurrection and judgment according to our works, every man shall be rewarded according to his deeds (Matthew 16: 30). Paul makes it clear that because we vary in the quality of our deeds, we shall be rewarded in varying degrees. "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead."—I Corinthians 15: 41, 42.

Our rewards and punishments result from what we are. The reward of a righteous man is the power of righteousness within him. And as men are not all equally righteous, so the powers of eternity are not shared by them equally. These glories may be said to represent degrees of divine fellowship, in which the powers of eternity are shared. "And this is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—John 17: 3. The fullness of celestial glory (of the sun) represents fellowship that is complete with the Father and Son. A lesser glory of the moon involves a lesser fellowship, in which the full glory of the Father is not expressed. The least glory, that of the stars, involves only the fellowship of the Spirit. In each case those who partake of the various glories also enjoy the comradeship of those of like spiritual quality. But if there are any who have forfeited all their rights through utter rebellion, their punishment consists, in part, in eternal separation from God and the righteous.

Even the wicked, who are not the sons of perdition, but who have not lived up to their privileges and have paid the penalty for their carelessness and rebellion in hell, may be rewarded for the good that they may have done. Since many of their opportunities have been wasted, and some used wrongfully, their spiritual capacity is not sufficient for the greater glories, but as one star differs from another, so shall be the rewards of those whose works are not adequate for full fellowship with God.

The Lake of Fire

"And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."—Revelation 20: 15. The sons of perdition—those who choose utter and complete rebellion, who deny the Son after the Spirit has revealed him to them, who put the Master to an open shame and crucify him in themselves—are cast into the lake of fire. A modern prophet has said of them,

These are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb, who was slain, who was in the bosom of the Father before the worlds were made.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4. (Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, in a vision experienced by them together on February 16, 1832.)

We do not know who these persons are. Their identification is left to divine wisdom. But if there are any who have sinned away every opportunity of life, whose works are in determined opposition to the divine plan, and whose rebellion is utter and complete, the second death lays hold of them, and their end is likened to the lake of fire and brimstone.

Not only these, but the devil and his angels are cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, and death and hell are likewise destroyed (Revelation 20: 10, 14). This is the final end of all things unalterably opposed to divine law. But this is not hell, for hell is among those things which are destroyed, having achieved its purpose as a temporary restraint for those who may have sinned, but who are still capable of learning repentance.

Eternal Life

How great is the mercy of the Lord, that he will save the works of his hands and make of sinful men his sons; that he continues to seek after even the rebellious and feel for them by his Spirit in the prison house of hell; that his Son shall suffer all men to come to a knowledge of the gospel even by his ministrations to the wicked and careless in hell. This is marvelous in our eyes.

How challenging is the conviction that men are now preparing for eternity! This life is the time when we develop our spiritual capacities for the future. At death, those who have eagerly sought truth await their resurrection in the condition of peace and rest known as paradise (Revelation 2: 7). Those who have rebelled must learn by the punishment and restraint of hell that the rebel cannot stand (Psalm 9: 17 and Isaiah 24: 22). The teaching of the gospel to the prisoners in hell will make possible their repentance (I Peter 3: 18-20; 4: 6).

In the resurrection the righteous will come forth to reign with Christ, and then comes the last resurrection when death and hell shall deliver up the dead that are in them (Revelation 20: 4, 5, 13). Having accomplished their purpose, death and hell shall be destroyed (Revelation 20: 14). Men shall be revealed for what they have become through their works, in the experience of final judgment (Revelation 20: 12). Their differing works will result in differing glories, that of the sun, the moon, and the stars, and as one star differs from another in glory, so also is the resurrection of the dead (I Corinthians 15: 41, 42).

In the life that is to be, men shall enjoy the fellowship for which they have suited themselves through the gospel. They shall share in the works of eternity, in bodies capable of responding to the righteous will of good men, never again to be frustrated at the caprice of death. "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."—Revelation 22: 17.

The Widow's Mite

I SHALL NEVER FORGET a wonderful experience that came to Bishop McGuire and myself early in our work for the General Church. We were working late, and all the office help had gone home. The telephone rang, and a woman asked how long we would be at the office as she would like to talk to us. We told her that we would wait to see her.

When she came, she said that her husband, who had been employed by a utility company, had been killed, leaving her with several children. After paying all expenses incident to his passing, she had a remainder from his life insurance from which she desired to pay her tithing. "How much will it be?" she asked.

Had we given in to our feelings, we would have said, "Sister, you will need every cent you have. You do not owe anything." But we remembered our duty to keep the law. Believing that in observing the law one's faith is strengthened, we told her the amount she owed, and she made out her check. Then we knelt down and implored our Heavenly Father to watch over, protect, and care for this little widow and her children. When we arose, we said to her, "As long as you live we want you to know that you have two big brothers who will always be interested in your welfare. We want you to feel free to come to us if at any time we can help you."

She never contacted us afterward, and I have confidence that our prayer in her behalf was answered.

Asking and Receiving - By MRS. S. C. BETHEL

ASK AND YE SHALL RECEIVE" and "Ask and it shall be given you" are positive statements. They are promises filled with the power of assurance.

We can learn many things about prayer from the New Testament. How, when, and what to pray for, and why our prayers may or may not be answered are revealed. The power of assurance is strongly emphasized by all the New Testament writers.

To pray is to enter into spiritual communion with God. Prayer is the best means of becoming acquainted with God. We must know God if we are to have our prayers answered.

We don't often go up to a stranger and ask a favor. When we do, we may doubt that the favor will be granted. When we ask a favor of a friend or someone who loves us very much, we feel certain that the thing we ask for will be received. Yet even our best friends and loved ones grow weary of our constant "gimmie" approach. Unless we do something to show our appreciation for them in return, we may find that they too will cease to help us. We cannot hope to have our desires granted if we approach God only in time of need and pray only for ourselves and those nearest to us.

WE ARE COMMANDED to pray. In Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4, we read, "And a commandment I give unto them, that he [the inhabitant of Zion] that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people," and in II Nephi 14: 11, "For if ye would hearken unto the Spirit which teacheth a man to pray, ye would know that ye must pray."

We are instructed as to what to pray for in several instances in the Book of Mormon and also in the New Testament. Paul, in writing to Timothy, said, "I exhort therefore that first of all supplications, prayers, intercessions and giving thanks be made for all men. For kings and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceful life in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior."—I Timothy 2: 1-3. In Matthew 5: 46, we are told to "pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." Paul, in praying for the Ephesian saints, asked God to grant them strength by his Spirit, that Christ might dwell in their hearts by faith, that they would be given the spirit of wisdom and revelation, that the eyes of their understanding might be enlightened, that they would be rooted and grounded in love, that they might be able to comprehend and to know the love of Christ. Paul was concerned about others and prayed for them.

Alma admonished his people:

Cry unto him when ye are in your fields, yea, over all your flocks. Cry unto him in your houses, yea, over all your household, both morning, mid-day and evening. Cry unto him over the crops of your fields that ye may prosper in them. Cry over the flocks of your fields that they may increase. But this is not all: ye must pour out your souls in your closets and in your secret places. And when you do not cry unto the Lord let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare and also for the welfare of those who are around you.—Alma 16: 219-222.

In their great distress, the people who followed Alma prayed to the Lord in their hearts, never uttering a word, and God released them from their bondage. We are also told:

Behold I say unto you, ye must pray always and not faint; that ye must not perform anything unto the Lord, save in the first place ye shall pray unto the Father in the name of Christ, that he will consecrate thy performance unto thee, that thy performance may be for the welfare of thy soul.

We are told that God knows our every need before we ask. If we pray, "Thy will not mine be done," and let God in his wisdom, grant those things best suited to our needs, we will be able to see God's hand leading us along the way. Many times our prayers are answered in a way we are not able to comprehend.

MANY TIMES our prayers are answered instantly, so much so that we recognize it as a miracle. I remember one such occasion. My husband and I were traveling over some of Nebraska's steep hills. Something went wrong with the car. We would get about three fourths of the way up a hill and have to back down. There were deep ditches on either side and these attempts to reach the top were nerve-wracking. We had the car in several garages along the way, and in none of them were the mechanics able to locate the trouble. After several attempts to reach the top of an unusually steep hill, we finally made it and stopped the car. I was ill and told my husband that I could not endure the strain much longer. We prayed. I prayed first and with my eyes still closed while my husband was praying, I saw beneath the hood of the car. Two snow-white hands were working on the motor. Once more we started on our way and had no more trouble for the remainder of the trip, a distance of about 200 miles. I have never since doubted God's power to work upon the afflicted parts of my body when I needed a physical blessing.

ATTITUDE has an effect upon one's spirit, and those attitudes are best which are the natural or customary expression of the spirit of worship. There is no prescribed posture. The posture of prayer among the Jews seems to have been most often standing, unless the prayer was offered with especial solemnity and humility, which they expressed by kneeling or prostrating themselves upon the ground. The Hebrew for prayer, tehninah, meaning supplication, and tefillah, meaning to bow down, indicates their understanding of a natural attitude of prayer. In Doctrine and Covenants 85: 40 we read, "Let him offer himself in prayer upon his knees before God." God will accept our petitions if we are standing. In Christ's exhortation on prayer in Mark 11: 27, we read, "And when ye stand praying . . ." Whichever attitude of prayer is best suited to a particular service or occasion is acceptable to God.

One thing that I have always believed is that the eyes should be closed. To pray effectively we must shut out the world and the distractions immediately around us. It is impossible to approach God in a spirit of worship if we are observing the things going on around us. This is especially true in a service where unity of prayer is so essential. Another reason I believe the eyes should be closed is illustrated by an experience.

It was at a Sunday morning service. I had had to hurry to get to church on time. I could not relax sufficiently to enter into a spirit of worship immediately. Prayer was being offered. I did not close my eyes. A little child of about three was kneeling on the seat just in front of me. He was trying so hard to shut his eyes tight and observe whether I was closing mine at the same time. His mother had taught him to close his eyes while prayer was being offered. I was not setting a very good example for him.

And where are we to pray? We are admonished to meet together often and offer our prayers to the Most High God.

We are also told to pray in our families. "Pray in your families unto the Father always in my name, that your wives and your children may be blessed."—III Nephi 8:52. The family altar is the first steppingstone in the building of Zion.

"And Alma and his people did not raise their voices to the Lord their God, but did pour out their hearts to him; and he did know the thoughts of their hearts."—Mosiah 11:59. They prayed in their hearts, never uttering a word, and the Lord released them from their bondage.

WE HAVE BEEN TAUGHT that if we ask we shall receive, but when we pray little doubts creep in. Our lack of sufficient faith may be one reason our prayers are not answered. In Mark 11:26 we read, "Therefore I say unto you, Whatsoever things ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive, and ye shall have whatsoever ye ask." James 1:6, 7 says, "But let him ask in faith nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord."

Another reason for our prayers not being answered may be found in Mark 11:27 and 28.

When ye stand praying, forgive if ye have aught against any; that your Father also who is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if you do not forgive, neither will your Father who is in heaven forgive your trespasses.

In I John 3:22, John bears testimony that his prayers were answered and why they were. "And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight."

Humility is necessary if we are to have our prayers answered. "Be thou humble, and the Lord thy God shall lead thee by the hand, and give answer to thy prayers."—Doctrine and Covenants 105:5.

In I Peter 3:7 we read:

Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them [wives] according to knowledge, giving honor unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered.

Paul admonished the Thessalonian saints to "pray without ceasing."

IN JAMES 5:13-16 we read:

Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray. Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick; and the Lord shall raise him up.

Confess your faults one to another and pray one for another that ye may be healed.

An illness may be an affliction, but an affliction need not be an illness. The synonyms for affliction as given by Webster are adversity, misfortune, trial, or illness.

Many today who ask for administration are not healed, and then they ask, "Why aren't such blessings experienced in the church today?"

God does heal his people today. I have seen many who have benefited by his miraculous power, and I myself have received blessings of healing.

Before I was a member of this church, the doctor said I could not live. I called for the elders and promised the Lord that if he would spare my life I would be baptized and would serve him to the best of my ability for the remainder of my days. The doctors and nurses in the hospital where I was a patient called me the miracle lady.

We moved to Kearney, Nebraska, in 1925. I had no piano at the time, and the pastor gave me the key to the church so I could practice. I was fast losing my sight at the time. One day as I sat at the piano and could not read the printed music before me, my very soul cried out to God that my sight might be restored. Unconsciously my fingers moved over the keys, and I was given my first selection by the Spirit—a very beautiful piece of music. The next day as I sat in darkness, for one fleeting moment I could see, and then all was darkness again. That evening at a prayer service I was administered to, and from that time on for twelve years I never wore glasses again.

In 1930 the doctor felt it was necessary to amputate my right arm because of infection. Arrangements had already been made at the hospital for the amputation, but I still have my arm today to use in God's service.

God is unchangeable. He is still a God of miracles; he does hear and answer prayer. "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous and his ears are open unto their prayers."

Christ gave instruction on prayer:

When ye pray, use not vain repetitions as the hypocrites do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Be ye not like unto them; for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him.

I once heard the very briefest prayer ever offered answered. We had moved to Nebraska from Ohio when our oldest son was two. I received a letter from my sister-in-law telling me that her baby was very ill and that the doctor said he would never walk. My little boy asked about the letter, and I told him of its contents. He walked over to a daybed and knelt down and prayed, "Jesus, make Junie well." A week later I received another letter telling of Junior's miraculous recovery.

And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men.

THE LORD'S PRAYER was given as a model. It is a form of prayer, the spirit of which best expresses the spirit of true prayer. That it was a model and not an authoritative form is shown by the fact that recorded prayer in the New Testament is filled with its spirit, but not one takes its exact form. Even the prayer that Jesus himself uttered as recorded in John 17, only followed the model.

The Lord's prayer is given in Matthew 6:9-15. In the ninth verse we read, "Therefore after this manner shall ye pray."

To follow through with the Lord's prayer we first must recognize God as our father. We are to pray for the coming forth of his kingdom on earth or the redemption of Zion. "Give us this day our daily bread" means we are to pray for our material welfare. "Forgive us our trespasses . . ." We are to pray for forgiveness. "And suffer us not to be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil." We are to pray for strength to overcome in the hour of temptation. Our prayer should include also thanksgiving, a confession of our weakness, and words of adoration and praise.

WE CANNOT GROW without prayer. It builds faith and helps to indicate the spiritual condition of the soul. It stimulates our thinking. The mind has a definite influence for good or ill on our spiritual and physical health.

If we let little doubts creep in when we pray, we begin to worry. Worry grows out of fear—fear of want, fear for health, or fear for loved ones.

When we worry we feel uneasy, anxious, fretful, apprehensive, and disturbed. Our health is definitely affected by these emotions. Worry, indifference, sadness, despair, and other depressing emotions dull the appetite and impair digestion. Since malnutrition is conducive to a gloomy state of mind, a vicious circle is formed from which it is difficult to escape. Much self-control is needed to overcome such a condition. Hence there is a need for encouraging others and praying for them. It is hard to pray or have faith in prayer when one is in a depressed and burdened state of mind.

Love is the best of tonics. To love or be loved, to know that someone cares, is conducive to good health. So also are hope, contentment, and happiness—all of which stimulate the output of endocrine chemicals and thus raise the vital processes to a higher pitch in the improvement of health.

Worry causes one to become irritable and obnoxious to his family and associates. It should be replaced by a cheerful and serene outlook. Worry ceases when prayer becomes effective.

I once heard a missionary say that every member of this church should be a super optimist. It is impossible to be pessimistic if we have faith in the promise, "Ask and ye shall receive." There is nothing so wretched or foolish as to anticipate misfortune. So much depends upon our mental outlook. The following story gives us an interesting picture.

An optimist and a pessimist were snowed in for the winter in an Arctic igloo. All they had for food was a barrel of flour. In the middle of the winter, the pessimist looked into the barrel. "Already," he groaned, "it's half empty." The optimist took a look. "By George," he exclaimed, "it's still half full."

IF YOU FEEL that your prayers for "me and mine" are not answered, pray for others. When you pray for others your own burdens become lighter. When you intercede for others, your own surroundings become brighter.

Perhaps when we feel that our prayers are not being answered, it is like Nelia Gardner White is quoted as saying. "Some folks just don't seem to realize when they're moaning about not getting their prayers answered that NO is the answer."

Remember, today is the tomorrow you worried about yesterday.

If you make a habit of sincere prayer, your life will be very noticeably and profoundly altered. Prayer stamps with its indelible mark our actions and demeanor. A tranquillity of bearing, a facial and bodily repose, are observed in those whose inner lives are thus enriched. Within the depths of consciousness a flame kindles. And man sees himself. He discovers his selfishness, his silly pride, his fears, his greeds, his blunder. He develops a sense of moral obligation, intellectual humility. Thus begins a journey of the soul toward the realm of grace. Only in prayer do we achieve that complete and harmonious assembly of body, mind and spirit which gives the frail human reed its unshakable strength. —Alexis Carrel in Prayer Is Power.

God's promises are sure and certain. They are meant for us today even as they were in times past. He is the same today and forever. His promise to us is—"Ask and ye shall receive."

Samuel Powers - A Leader of the Reorganization

SAMUEL POWERS was born near Brockville, Ontario, January 26, 1819. He was married to Miss Maria M. Moulton near Orono, Ontario, on January 26, 1842.

Either before or after marriage, we are not informed which, Mr. and Mrs. Powers united with the Christian Church, then known as Disciples. Shortly after marriage they heard an Elder Savage of the Latter Day Saint church preach. They left Canada and moved to Wisconsin in 1848, settling on a farm near Beloit. Several families of Saints lived near them, namely Henry Pease, Jason W. Briggs, Ed. Briggs, and others.

Elder Powers was early in the movement to reorganize the church, having united with the church in 1852; both he and his wife were baptized by Elder Z. H. Gurley. He related to a friend that this action was not taken until after a severe illness, during which he was made to understand that there was no hope for him except in obeying what he had been convinced for years was the truth.

In 1854 he was ordained a seaventy by J. W. Briggs, Z. H. Gurley, and Reuben Newkirk. He held this office for one year.

Samuel Powers was ordained an apostle in April, 1855, under the hands of J. W. Briggs, D. B. Rasey, and Z. H. Gurley. For the remainder of his life he was prominently and zealously connected with the church and did much missionary work. He was present at the April conference of 1860 and assisted in the ordination of President Joseph Smith.

He was a man of unusual mental development—both in power of thought and fund of acquired fact; goodness of heart, in regard to kindness of disposition and integrity of character; and of superior spiritual faculty in the exercise of faith and reception of the excellent gifts of God.

His studious habits caused the mental side to predominate, although his physical frame was above medium height and well developed. His strong conviction that he was called of God to preach the gospel of Christ caused the rougher labors of life to bear heavily on his shoulders, as he was more at home in a spiritual and mental field.

He had a strong affection for home and the brethren of his faith and a great reverence of God. He paid little regard to the ideas of man and once said, "I have small desire to please man, but great desire to please God."

At the annual conference held in Amboy, Illinois, in 1864, he reported his labors of that period that he had preached in company with Brother Aldrich; he had baptized one woman who was at the point of death, and that she was healed. He also preached in Canada, New Hampshire, and Vermont, baptizing thirteen persons in all. His labors were very effectual whenever he took the field; but the requirements of home and its watch care often precluded the possibility of his traveling in the ministry.

For a number of years preceding his death, his health was quite poor. He died on Sunday evening, February 16, 1873.

He was well respected by those not of the faith also. At his funeral, held in the Baptist church at Beloit, Wisconsin, at which Brother Noah Dutton, of Janesville, Wisconsin, officiated, the house was filled, although only a few of the faith resided near.

At the time of his death the Saints' Herald contained the following tribute from the pen of its editor, Joseph Smith: "Brother Powers was one of the best and ablest men of the church, or in the northwest; a man full of the tenderest solicitude for the good of the human race, loving and kind. His rest must needs be glorious."

Why Be Good? - By EMMA M. PHILLIPS

ONE OF OUR FIRST experience lessons in life is that if we are good, we get pleasant results; if we are not good, we get unpleasant results. The child learns that his own backyard is a good place to play, for there he has the safety of home surroundings. Likewise, he learns that the road is not a good place to play, for there danger lurks. If he is good, his parents smile with satisfaction upon him; if he is not good, they punish him and help him to understand how his mistake was made. The child soon learns that "be good" is one of the primary laws controlling the little realm of which he is the center.

Before many years he learns that his goodness has its affect upon the other people who move within the limited realm he knows. The old saying,

There was a little girl who had a little curl right in the middle of her forehead. And when she was good she was very, very good; and when she was bad, she was horrid, can rightfully be applied to all individuals, for one's degree of goodness does have its effect upon others. The child learns that if he is "very, very good" other people will respond with happiness, and if he is "horrid," those about him will show dissatisfaction. Realizing how individual goodness affects the goodness of others is one of the foremost steps toward brotherhood.

When the desire to be good to others grows beyond an individual's little realm of friends, the foundation is laid for true happiness in that life. Those who continue to obey the "be good" law because of their desire for personal gain never acquire true happiness. There are no boundaries placed upon the amount of good a person can do, and there are no props or tools needed to do it. Here is an unlimited field of endeavor that anyone can enter at any time and any place.

Of course, there is the desire to be good enough to inherit those mansions in heaven that poets sing about. The person who is good just for that purpose is not really good. He is an empty shell, a vacuum that has missed the paramount motivating power of Christianity. If the teachings of Jesus are truly followed, each person must have a keen interest in all of the people of this universe. There can be no being good for Divinity without being good for humanity.

WHILE I WAS GROWING UP at home, my mother often said to me, "If you try to follow the teachings of Jesus, it will not be difficult for you to choose between right and wrong. The problems of life come from trying to choose the better of two goods." When a person learns to refuse successfully the temptations of the world, he does not need to fear them. The complete life of a true Christian, however, is a series of deciding where he can be of the most value to his fellow men. There are many places to be of service to others, some places offering more and better opportunities than others, but all offering reasons for being good.

Jeremiah admonishes us (6: 16) that if we want to find rest for our souls, we are to find the good way and walk therein. Common theory would prove that those people who find the "good way and walk therein" must necessarily be good people. There is friendship, companionship, and a helping of one another along that way. If we of this church would have the good brotherhood on the good way, we would have Zion conditions. The only thing that keeps us from enjoying such pleasure is ourselves.

Being good does not mean keeping our halos polished. Most of us at some time or other have met a person who seemed to glory in the fact that he was "good." Often we were tempted to add, "Yes, good, but good for nothing." Living a good life in the interest of fellow men makes one good for something. No matter which way a person turns, there is some good to be done, some challenge to be met. It is utterly impossible to willfully isolate oneself from others and live a good life at the same time.

In Shrewsbury, England, there is an inscription on an ancient tombstone that gives us a measure of goodness. These lines of wisdom written by an unknown sage in times long past are gems to be treasured.

For the Lord Jesus Christ's sake,
Do all the good you can,
To all the people you can,
In all the ways you can,
As long as ever you can.

Harry Emmerson Honored

Brother Harry Emmerson, coach and director of physical education at East Junior High School in Sioux City, Iowa, has given long service in Boy Scout work, as scoutmaster and in other capacities, and was honored with the Silver Beaver Award last February in a ceremony at the Mayfair Hotel at that city. He has had supervision of "Teen Canteens," "Social centers," junior athletic teams, and other activities, for the past fifteen years. His present troop has been his responsibility for eight years, handling sixty boys with three assistants. Scout canoe trips have been made locally, in Minnesota, and in Canada. Brother Emmerson is one of a few men to receive the Silver Beaver Award while still an active scoutmaster.

Scouting runs in the family, as his son, Dan, received the Eagle award on his fourteenth birthday, the youngest in that council.

What of Tomorrow's Adults?

By LOUISE SCOTT WRIGLEY

EIGHT SIX-YEAR-OLDS sat restlessly in a small basement church school room looking at each other, thinking about getting up to wander around. A harried minister rushed upstairs to find a substitute teacher for the one who didn't show up and didn't call. When he finally found someone who protested lack of preparation, he said desperately, "Oh, that's all right . . . just keep them quiet."

In another branch where there was little room, adult classes were conducted, but there could be none for the children "until later when we get a bigger church." Obviously here the adult was considered more important than the seeking, receptive, future adult. How many of these "put-aside" children will be lost to the church?

What are we doing as individuals about the lack of properly equipped teachers in some of our church schools? Surely if we expect to have a church of tomorrow, these children in all our branches must be trained and taught today in the way they should go. We cannot start "someday"—the need is now.

This is not to say that we are not blessed with the services of many fine teachers at the present time. In many instances, the guidance of these wise, prepared individuals has meant the turning point in young lives, a steady pattern to work toward, a calm and important influence when decisions must be made. There are many consecrated workers who contribute invaluable hours and service to the building of the principles of Zion within young lives and hearts. These people have caught the vision of what is needed and, by taking their trust seriously, impart to their classes a greater portion of truth and knowledge.

Too often, however, the teacher for the youngest group of churchgoers is chosen merely because she is either willing or available—or both. Qualifications are sometimes passed lightly over in the press of getting "anybody" to control the lively youngsters, so they will not bother the other classes. Sometimes really teaching the children, particularly the littler ones, seems of secondary importance.

BEING A TEACHER is one of the most satisfying positions available in church work. Too often teachers are looked upon as not too important characters, when in reality they have perhaps the most essential single function outside that of the pastor. Each Sunday they have the opportunity to help others learn—and if they are not properly prepared themselves, everyone suffers. Many teachers of the smaller children feel that if they rush to church school with their Bibles under their arms and good intentions in their hearts, they have done all that is required of them. Christ himself was first of all a teacher, and we could have no finer example and inspiration than that.

Actually there is a great need for institutes to be conducted—not just in a few places but wherever we have branches—by the priesthood, the pastor, and other people trained in the fields of education, child psychology, and related subjects. There should be made available to all who teach (often there is, but many are unaware of it) the teacher helps which are so much needed, suggestions for presenting material, and training in getting the most out of the lesson hour. Nearly all children are more-than-willing listeners if they are approached properly, but even a child's self-respect is damaged when he realizes that his teacher is merely interested in keeping him quiet and cares little whether he actually learns anything or not as long as the church school hour is peaceful. Children are not easily fooled for all their apparent simplicity and can soon tell if one really likes them and is trying to do a good job or if the "teacher" considers his task rather boring and performs it only through a sense of duty.

AMONG OUR TEACHERS may soon be found many who, feeling the need of the church school, have tried in every way they can to give the best they have. They can and should be helped to make their best much finer by a little extra training. Many of these good people, in their eagerness to help, would be glad to find time in their busy schedules for either an institute or a regular training class for teachers. Much is to be gained by these contacts with other teachers—the exchange of ideas, methods, and experiences, and the lining up of suitable material in easy source form so that little time is lost in knowing and ordering what is needed for classes.

Material, though properly chosen or provided, must still be properly used. When quarterlies are written, it is not intended that the teacher must read all of the stories word for word. They can come alive in the imagination of the children if the teacher is a good storyteller (which nearly anyone can learn to be). After all, there is much about the life of Christ, as well as Book of Mormon heroes, to capture the imagination of a child. Children can easily and willingly be transported on this magic carpet of imagination to scenes of long ago and faraway and come to feel almost as if they had lived in those times. Actually there is never a dull moment in either of these chronicles. If any incident seems dull, perhaps it has suffered from thoughtless interpretation. The story is there. The thrill is there. If it becomes lost, perhaps the medium was not well chosen, perhaps the preparation was incomplete, perhaps the interpreter failed to catch the picture in its fascinating entirety.

THERE IS frequently too little understanding of what the church school papers of our church are trying to do for us. For the six-tentenners, there is Zion's Hope. Stories are slanted for that age, and good thoughts are introduced in an interesting fashion. The editor spends long hours considering material and choosing only that which, in her opinion, offers something constructive and helpful as well as intriguing to the child. It is not to be expected that older children will listen attentively to these little stories when they have grown beyond them. Yet too often church school supervisors feel that because of their limited budgets they must get along with one or the other of the youth publications.

STEPPING STONES takes an older, more advanced attitude with the older age group. There is a world of good reading—and not dull reading either—packed into its pages. Naturally these stories and activities are beyond the scope of the little ones, and they should not be expected to listen to or appreciate them. A little careful choosing of material ahead of time for worship services and illustrative stories in the classroom will eliminate much of the boredom found there. The church school papers should be supported by every branch in order that they may bring finer material to an increased circulation list, and they should also be found in every home where there are children.

Church school literature editors are constantly on the lookout for new material that will "fit in," offering a variety to the teacher. The Herald House tries to keep abreast of new ideas, new helps. But without the co-operation of teachers who will use this material to advantage and realize its worth, the best results cannot be obtained. As our church publishing agent, it should be given a chance to assist church school workers.

IN THE ADULT GROUP from which we glean our teachers, there are many who are unbelievably removed from that happy state of childhood which once was theirs. They have forgotten. As a result, they are completely in the dark as to what childhood needs and what its requirements are. The day is gone when children are expected to digest things far beyond them with docile obedience. Today our children are seeking, questioning, probing—and we would not want them otherwise. They will make better citizens tomorrow for the firm foundation they are building for themselves today. They will not accept blindly. They will know! The truths we teach will be more than ever precious to them if they are led to seek after knowledge for themselves. This should be the ultimate aim of any teacher. You cannot be with them always. So it is better to see that they know how to sift and weigh for themselves.

Normally we are perhaps all a little lazy in this present age; as a result, our interest must be aroused. From then on, new horizons unfold for us as fast as we are able to assimilate the new knowledge. A skillful teacher, awakening interest in the young child, leading him carefully until he can pick and choose for himself, making available information and sources for him, builds an invaluable background of which she may be proud and for which the child will later thank her.

Nor must the position of the home be ignored. What a tragedy looms in the home which shoves the little one off to church school without a thought of the individual responsibility involved. Too many mothers and fathers feel that their duty is done when Junior gets out of the car to disappear in the door of the church school room. They neither wonder nor care what happens inside, what has been or is to be learned. They are only relieved to think that they are giving Junior all the advantages of a Christian existence. Actually, they are giving Junior worse than nothing. He is not being stimulated nor encouraged to learn in the home which should be his place of refuge, his source of information, his place to fortify himself against the problems which may beset him. Lucky are the children who find real encouragement at home, real help, real interest.

THE TEACHER'S FIELD is vast and unlimited. In an ideal situation, the weekly exposure to knowledge that the child gets gives him enough to make him curious and interested, impatient to know more. Then the supplemental home teaching should lead him on and on down the road he seeks to travel. Children have an insatiable curiosity and a depthless capacity for storing up knowledge. If we can partly fill this deep well with clear water, how much better it is than to let it stagnate or grow dry. There are so many things to learn. Childhood is the proper, the planned time to start. God intended it should be, or he would not have instilled in the child such yearning to know everything about the world around him.

Can we deny these children their right? Can we afford to take the responsibility of not teaching them properly? Will we awaken to the trust which has been given to us, the task which we are expected to perform with cheerful hearts and open minds? Surely there is nothing more rewarding than teaching a child. Let us all help each other, that we may guide our children wisely and well, building a strong and educated church for tomorrow.

Future Features

"Religion, Intellectual Honesty, and Science," by Dr. E. V. Shute will be our lead article in the issue of October 3. It is the kind of stimulating and informative article you will want to study and keep for reference. You will also find a missionary spirit in the articles "Someone Invited Me to Church" and "When Did Christ Organize His Church?"

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

What is the basis for our interpretation of the "land shadowing with wings" (Isaiah 18) as applied to America? Has any revelation received by the church or its officers so interpreted it?

ANSWER:

We read in II Peter 1:20, "No prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation."

There is nothing in modern revelation referring to "the land shadowing with wings." The church has taken no official position on the question. Other interpretations are possible. Our missionaries have used this interpretation as part of the evidence for the Book of Mormon.

The nation scattered and peeled (pillaged whose land the rivers had spoiled, was no doubt the Israelitish nation. See Isaiah 8:7 where the king of Syria was likened to a river that overflowed its banks. Note in Isaiah 18:7 that after being scattered they were to be brought "to a place of the name of the Lord of Hosts, the Mount Zion."

Where does prophecy indicate they were to go?

Alma 8:3 states that Lehi was of Manasseh, the son of Joseph who was sold into Egypt. (See also III Nephi 7:13.) The fact that Manasseh was to cross the sea has Bible support. "Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall."—Genesis 49:22.

The waters of the sea, we are told in Exodus 14:23, was "a wall." Apparently this wall over which the branches of Joseph would run was the sea, as the sea was the boundary of Manasseh (the son of Joseph). "Northward it was Manasseh's and the sea is his border."—Joshua 17:10.

The Bible gives another pointed prediction that people from the region occupied by Manasseh would go over the sea. When the children of Israel were about to pass over Jordan and subdue the Canaanites and possess their land, "Moses gave unto them, even the children of God, and unto the children of Reuben and unto half the tribe of Manasseh the son of Joseph, the kingdom of Sikon, king of the Amorites." Heshbon was the capital city of the Amorites. (Numbers 21:26.) Sibmah, according to Smith's Bible Dictionary, was about 500 paces from Heshbon. People from this section occupied by Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh were to go over the sea. "For the fields of Heshbon languished, and the vine of Sibmah; and the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof, they are come down even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are stretched out, they are gone over the sea."—Isaiah 16:8.

There are other texts pointing to this migration, but this will suffice.

Others have seen North and South America as the shadow of wings. In the files of the Chicago Tribune is a cartoon by McCutcheon of a large American eagle flying high, and a number of small South American countries in baskets held in the eagle's claws. The purpose was to indicate the protection exercised over these smaller nations by the U.S.A. in the Monroe Doctrine.

The shadow of the eagle's wings below was North and South America.

—James F. Keir.

QUESTION:

Is it right for a minister at a preaching service to dismiss without a song or a prayer?

ANSWER:

It is a general custom to close our preaching services with a song and a prayer. However, there is nothing in the law which says that it must be done in this way. The omission of either a hymn or the prayer would not necessarily mean that it could not be a genuine worship experience.

The Scriptures tell us that the assemblies in the church are to be presided over by those in charge as they are led by the spirit. Usually those who are thus presiding are inclined to open the service with a hymn or prayer, or both, and close in somewhat the same manner. This is more or less a customary form of worship in our church and probably is a good form to follow on most occasions. However, we should not become so accustomed to a rigid form of worship that we are unable to enjoy the service when another program of worship is used.

The purpose of planning worship services is to bring the members of the congregation closer to God, and to increase their devotion to him and to the work of the church.

History of New Albany Branch

By Margaret L. Maymon

WITH A BRIGHT HOPE for the future and a realization of the blessings received in the past, the Saints of New Albany, Indiana, will dedicate their church building on Sunday, September 25.

The history of the New Albany Branch dates back to 1911 when services were first held in a hall on Vincennes Street under the direction of H. E. Molar, John Zahnd, and J. W. Metcalfe. This hall was rented from E. A. Jaegers, at that time a member of the Catholic Church. Mr. Jaegers was later converted to the Latter Day Saint faith and proved to be of great value to the branch in his office of priest and later as elder.

About seven families comprised the membership of this first mission. For a time services had to be discontinued because of the lack of leadership, those of the priesthood having moved away. Later they were resumed under the direction of H. W. Burwell and W. O. Robertson of Louisville, Kentucky, in the home of Brother and Sister Harry Thompson. There the Saints met for a time and were always given a warm welcome.

The group began to grow in numbers until it was necessary to find a larger building in which to meet. A hall was rented on West Main Street. These were the lean years of the depression, and it was often hard to raise the necessary funds for rent. It has been said that many times Brother E. A. Jaegers and W. O. Robertson paid the rent themselves in order to keep the work going.

Gradually new families moved in, and men were called and ordained to the priesthood. Among these were: W. O. Robertson and E. A. Jaegers, elders; George Maymon, priest; Chester Metcalf and H. B. Thompson, teachers. Later ordinations included: Chester Metcalf and Edmond Fouts, elders; Dallas Fouts, deacon; and Forrest Gatrost, teacher.

Ever desiring to progress, the Saints obtained better quarters at Thirteenth and Culbertson, where they worshipped for nine years.

THE NEW ALBANY BRANCH was organized on November 24, 1935, with forty-three charter members. Apostle M. A. McConley presided with District President J. O. Dutton assisting. Elder W. O. Robertson was elected pastor and served in that capacity until recently.

The Saints had an ever-increasing desire to obtain a house of their own for worship. The women's department, under the capable leadership of Sister Minnie Martin, directed its efforts in raising funds toward that goal.

In December, 1943, a fine little building in a good location was purchased from the Grace Lutherans for $3,500. The $1,500 down payment was quickly raised by cash donations from the members, together with a $425.00 gift from the women's department. Much of the work preparatory to purchasing and getting the building ready for occupancy was accomplished through the untiring efforts of Brother Chester Metcalf, now president of the Southern Indiana District.

In March, 1944, the first service was held in this new church home. Missionary E. F. Robertson presented the opening address in which he admonished the Saints to be on guard against evils that might creep in and to be ever aware of the greater responsibilities they now bore.

It was a happy day for the branch. Though still laden with debt, the members felt that through prayer and hard work they could soon pay for the building. To this end a ways and means committee was appointed, and today the branch is free of debt.

Many and varied were the methods used to raise money—rummage sales, bazaars, suppers, bake sales, offerings, and pledges. Every department helped and even the small children had a part in the final drive to erase the debt. Much credit must also be given the local merchants for their generous cash donations.

IN 1947 Elder Edmond Fouts was elected pastor. With the help and encouragement of his fine family, he is doing a splendid work in the branch. He is always one of the first to don work clothes for whatever task of labor needs to be done. This same willingness has been shown through the years in the service he rendered the branch as deacon.

Many improvements have been made since the building was acquired. An up-to-date kitchen, equipped with gas stove, steam table, and hot water system has been helpful in cooking and serving meals. An organ and baptismal font are recent additions, also, and the basement has been completely redecorated. The building, though not large, is compact and has proved to be adequate for the needs of the branch. However a building fund is being maintained for future expansion.

The New Albany Saints look forward to the dedication of their church building and to the presence of President Israel Smith and Apostle Wallace Smith on this occasion. It will be counted as one of the outstanding events in the history of the branch.

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.—The spring and summer months bring many visitors to historic Nauvoo. Bus loads of young people with their leaders from various branches have camped in the Nauvoo House over the week end and attended services at the church in a body on Sunday morning. Youth Camp, the Memorial Service, and the reunion brought many more.

President Israel A. Smith was the speaker at the morning service on June 26, and his sermon on the authenticity of the Book of Mormon will long be remembered. Bishop Mark Siegfried gave a lecture on Nauvoo at the Youth Camp and preached at the church the following morning.

The reunion, held from July 24 to 31 under the leadership of Apostle D. T. Williams and District President D. J. Williams, was of a high order. The booklet, Each One Win One, by Apostle Williams, was used as the basis for discussion in the three classes: Evangelist Ray Whiting teaching the men, Mildred Nelson the women, and Bishop Wayne Updike the young people. "The Message of Personal Evangelism" was the topic used by Ray Whiting in the general class which followed. Mildred Nelson taught a class in "Nutrition" in the afternoon and Wayne Updike at 7:00 p.m., on "Building Zion." Apostle Williams' sermons each evening were uplifting and inspiring. There were 125 campers on the grounds and many drove back and forth each day. Mrs. Arvella Propst was in charge of the forty-five children of junior age, with Cecil Ettinger as junior pastor. One of the finest exhibitions of memory work ever heard was given one evening by this group under Cecil's direction, when they repeated in unison the entire 10th section of Doctrine and Covenants. Thirty-nine children were cared for in the well-equipped nursery and kindergarten under the direction of Mrs. Mildred Smith and Mrs. Florence Ourth. A cantata, "Other Sheep I Have," by Louise Hills Lewis, under the direction of Edward Wright with Shirley Howard as pianist, was a fitting climax to the reunion.

Officers elected for the coming year by the Nauvoo Branch were: Pastor, Elder Arnold Ourth; secretary, Mrs. B. A. Galbraith; director of church school and treasurer, B. A. Galbraith; assistant, Leo Stevenson; music director and historian, Mrs. Elbert Tripp; adult leader and solicitor, Ralph Tripp; young people's leader, Mrs. Floyd Hartman; children's leader, Mrs. Harold Smith; publicity agent, Mrs. Floyd Hartman.

An ordination service was held in July, at which time John Williams and Bernard Galbraith were ordained to the office of priest and Floyd Hartman to the office of deacon.—MRS. MABEL ATKINSON, Reporter.

JACKS CREEK, TENNESSEE.—This group gained two new members when James Beechom and Ruby Beechom were baptized on June 26 by Elder C. R. Reynolds.

A week's series of services beginning August 20 was conducted by Elder O. S. Caldwell. Prayer services were held each morning at 10:00 o'clock and preaching services each evening at 7:30. Attendance was good with a number of nonmembers present. A fine spirit was present throughout the series, and the Saints were strengthened.

Guest speakers during the recent months have been District President Jerry Fitch, Elders C. L. Ross and Barney Ross, Brother Everett Smalley, and Missionary Joseph Yager.

Brenda Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reaford Tucker was blessed August 25 by Elders O. S. Caldwell and C. B. Bailey.—Reported by Minnie Bailey.

How to Start a Nursery School

By STELLA B. OMOHUNDRO

IN OUR TOWN there is no kindergarten provided for in the public school system. The chief reason is that there is no room. In fact, there is so little room that any child not six by the end of the calendar year may not enter school until the following fall, when he is almost seven.

That fact is not particularly catastrophic unless a child is an "only" in need of learning the first principles of "give and take" in an orderly fashion before he is thrust into a bewildering situation with some other thirty children, when he has been used to "ruling the roost."

In brief, this very simply defined problem drove me into starting a co-operative nursery school in our town. Our only child, a three and one-half year old daughter, was used to having family attention centered on her. Attending church school was not enough to help her learn the rudimentary principles of getting along with others. She happened, at that time, to be the type who retired into a long silence when confronted with others. At home she would sometimes be aggressive, occasionally polite, but usually when associated with more than two of her contemporaries, she would simply retire.

Since we live in a world which requires getting along with others, we were fearful that if she waited until seven to meet the discipline of the classroom, she would have more than necessary delays in social adjustments; so I decided to take some action. This situation must be typical of other small, or even larger towns, with overcrowded schools, so perhaps it will be helpful to others to shorten the steps.

I found, almost immediately, other mothers in the same predicament. They wanted regular, disciplined association with children the age of theirs but hardly knew how to start.

THERE ARE TWO beginning points: first, the location of a suitable place for a nursery or kindergarten; second, finding a suitable teacher. You may be fortunate enough to find a large home to accommodate daily classes. In our town, we were able to secure the Community Hall for morning sessions five days a week from 9:30 to 11:30, free of charge. It was equipped with oil burners, two of them, which kept the children warm enough for their activities. This allowed us to keep down the fee charged.

While we could not find a teacher accredited by college training for handling preschool age children, we did find a woman who had taught this age for many years. She was the town's part-time librarian. She had received her training by experience, having started as a young girl in church school work. She had later helped in vacation Bible schools, and finally, during the war, had run a daytime nursery for working mothers. She had a fondness for children, a knack with them, and enough discipline to gain their respect.

Out of our experience, I would recommend the use of a teacher who understands children, even though she has not had the required academic training, over one who holds degrees in nursery education but still doesn't "like children."

This particular matter came into the limelight when we had our school inspected. We discovered that the welfare of preschool age children is a concern of our state. Perhaps it is in yours. Some mother suggested that perhaps we would have to be licensed by our city or state. The city was not concerned, we found, but in writing to the State Department of Welfare for information, our letter was referred to the Department of Child Welfare, and we received a pamphlet of suggestions. Among the things this department was concerned about were fire protection, the number of lavatories, the training of the teacher, rest periods, lunch provided if the sessions lasted all day, the attendance of a nurse, etc.

When we called at the state office, we were further admonished on these matters, so we scurried home to do a better job. Fortunately the mother of one of the prospective pupils was a registered nurse. She volunteered to make a monthly inspection and to caution the teacher on what to look out for in the way of ailing pupils.

AT FIRST we solicited pupils through acquaintances and friends. We didn't advertise for fear of getting too large a class. The state frowned on more than twenty pupils to one teacher . . . and with good reason for such small children.

We got our mothers together for a council before the opening of school. We had already written to the United States Bureau of Child Welfare, as well as getting the pamphlets from our state bureau, and had materials from our library. We had also received information from the National Headquarters of the American Association of University Women at Washington, D. C.

Our teacher was willing to work on a basis of $4.50 per child for the two-hour session, five days a week. So we decided to levy a fee of $5.00 per month, with a $1.00 enrollment fee (for supplies) and 50c per month reserved for renewing supplies. Also we added to our $5.00, 10c a week for fruit juice, making the total cost per child $5.40 a month.

In ordering our first supplies, we went into consultation with the teacher, otherwise, we settled all problems in the mothers' council, leaving her free of such jurisdiction.

We made a campaign through the town for donations of supplies before we made our purchases. In this way we secured one small table and benches, another large table, and an old phonograph for playing records. In learning the cost of kindergarten chairs, we made it a rule that each child should bring a small chair, marked with his name, so that he could take it home after the close of school. Each child was also asked to bring a pair of blunt scissors and an assortment of colored crayons. Thus our initial fee of $1.00 per child amply covered the purchase of blackboards, chalk, modeling clay, drawing paper, finger painting set, clips, paper cutter, and other miscellaneous items.

We also encouraged each child to bring a toy. The teacher soon found it necessary to ban guns and other noise-making items. We provided music books and puzzles. Since there was a piano in the hall, it was available for a former music teacher who gave one hour a day twice a week to teach rhythm. She encouraged the pupils to bring what they had in the way of rhythmical instruments; these were supplemented out of our funds—drums, cymbals, toy xylophone, triangle, et cetera.

From the mothers' council we appointed a supplies chairman, who regularly bought fruit juice at the best price, paper cups, napkins, toilet tissue, soap, and supplies for the occasional "parties"; an educational chairman, a former first grade teacher who consulted with the teacher on buying books for the reading of stories, advised new games, cut-outs, and techniques learned in the public school system; a music chairman, who hunted up suitable records for listening and games, and who enlisted the aid of the rhythm teacher, and a treasurer who sent out the monthly bills and kept our "books."

OTHER SUCH SCHOOLS have more officers, for instance, a transportation chairman to arrange to get the children to and from school. In our case, we left this matter up to mothers. Those in one block would take turns in seeing that the children got safely back and forth. In larger cities, it is preferable to have cars stop-by for the children. Where the fees must be larger, and a charge is made for the location of the school, a ways and means chairman to raise funds to keep the school operating may be desirable.

It is desirable to have a balance between boys and girls, so that neither sex will feel isolated. In our case this took care of itself, although we always had more girls than boys. It is not too important—just so there are enough boys to feel "easy."

Our teacher organized the session to start with a roll call, answered by each child with a nursery rhyme. Then she read a story, followed by table play, finger play, and work with crayons. A period of activity followed this, some free playtime in which the children acted out stories of their choosing under limited supervision.

On the days they had regular rhythm work, that followed, including singing, singing with movements, marching, and playing their instruments. On other days they usually asked for records to be played.

Then there was a rest period, refreshments (fruit juice) for which the children joined in a unison prayer of thanks and more handwork until it was time to get on their wraps.

Below are the rules our mothers drew up, based on many such lists secured from writing to the sources previously mentioned. Our rules proved adequate for our community. Perhaps others would be necessary in other places.

LEADVILLE CO-OPERATIVE KINDERGARTEN

RULES AND REGULATIONS

1. Tuition shall be $5.40 per month, cash in advance. ($5.00 Tuition and 40c for daily fruit juice for each child.) Upon entering there shall be a special fee of $1.00 to help buy equipment.
2. In case of absence for two consecutive weeks during a month, one half of the month's tuition shall be refunded.
3. To be eligible for enrollment, a child must be at least three years of age—up to school age. He must meet the specified health requirements of the school.
4. Prior to admission to nursery school group, each child must have a physical examination by the family physician.
5. Prior to admittance, each child must be immunized against diphtheria and whooping cough.
6. Health records must contain authorization by child's parents to call designated family physician in case of accident or when considered necessary by person in charge of nursery school.
7. Health inspection of each child must be given by mother before sending child to school. (Do not send a child with any sign of sniffles, sore throat, or skin rash. If in doubt, keep the child home.)
8. If a child has been absent because of contagious disease, a doctor's permit must be brought when returning to school.
9. Weekly inspection by a nurse will be made at school.
10. If a child has been exposed to a contagious disease, parents should keep the child out of school for the incubation period of that particular disease plus three days.
11. If a child is absent two days or more, a written excuse is required on return. The teacher must be notified if a child is absent because of a contagious disease.
12. Any child developing any illness after arrival at school will be isolated from other children and sent home as soon as possible.
13. A parent may visit the nursery school during hours only when notice has been given the teacher, or on special invitation.
14. A parent may be asked to withdraw a child from school if:
 1. He is not emotionally ready for the group association
 2. The parent is careless or negligent on health matters
 3. Nonpayment of tuition
15. Although the school shall make every effort to safeguard the children, the parents must assume the risk of accidental injury.

We Mutually Agree - By DORIS M. OAKMAN

IN THE EARLY DAYS of the church when Brother John J. Cornish was active in the work, he used to follow an interesting custom at baptismal services. When the candidate was about to enter the water, Brother Cornish would call him by name and ask, "Do you agree to serve Jesus Christ through good and evil report all the days of your life?" When the candidate would answer in the affirmative, he was taken into the water and baptized. This custom was brought to England, and when I was baptized the same promise was exacted. These words have stayed with me and in some way made a profound impression on my thinking.

We mutually agree at baptism to serve God all the days of our lives. We renew the promise every time we accept the Communion after the prayer of blessing in which we take upon ourselves the name of Jesus Christ, that we may always remember him, that we may have his Spirit to be with us. Sometimes we forget the mutuality of our agreement. Maybe the going gets a little tough or we are unable to recognize the hand of God moving for our good, and we quickly take to the side lines and nurse our hurts. When we react this way, the church as a whole suffers. We individually are the church; without our personal support the church can do nothing.

There are many ways we can express to God our willingness to keep this covenant we have made. One of the greatest is to live in the present and make the most of today. None of us have a minute of tomorrow to spend, and yesterday is as dead as anything can ever be. We need to take a daily check on our appreciation of God. Then we need to stretch out our hands and help our brothers and sisters. There are kind words we need to speak while our loved ones can hear them. We can look for the good in those around us and today treat each other as if Zion were established. Being "kindly affectioned one to another" means treating our contemporaries decently. We have observed that it is easy to look to aged members and, listening to their experiences, catch a vision of Zion. However, by ever such a slight turn of the head we can also look to those our own age and see the promise of beauty and character. We can encourage and help them just by simple, ordinary daily living.

WE THINK there is nothing quite so ridiculous as the idea that the endowment will be given to the priesthood, and we will all suddenly love each other, and Zion will follow. Zion is a plant of a slow, steady growth, a procedure that will come about little by little as we learn to study and love and silently meditate and appreciate the nature of God. To all of us it is an educational process. We have to learn to understand the nature of God. We must experiment in our thinking and understanding and find out how God works with us individually. When we are armed with this knowledge, we must be tuned to hear the whisper of the Spirit that will lead us to do much good. The grind of everyday living is a Zion procedure. We have to learn to live together in love. How can we better do it than by starting where we are with those nearest and dearest to us?

The wedding ceremony is full of beauty and promise, but the real beauty is portrayed later in lives of love, understanding, loyalty, and devotion. We are moved to deep appreciation by the realization that two people have succeeded through the years in living together in

"Man, Creator of His Own Destiny"

By Trudy Turner

The ordinance of baptism is likewise beautiful, but the man or woman who has accumulated a circle of true friends at the end of the race and bears testimony of the goodness of God stirs us far more than the act of baptism does.

love, sharing joys and sorrows, and maintaining the dignity and decency of a saintly home.

The ordinance of baptism into the church is likewise beautiful, but the man or woman who has accumulated a circle of true friends at the end of the race, and bears testimony of the goodness of God to him or her stirs us far more than the act of baptism does.

WE HAVE ZION at our fingertips if we could only educate ourselves to appreciate today and all we have, and love those around us. All we have is a daily assignment; anyone can put forth an effort for such a short time. We are told that joint responsibility rests on us all. We should have no place for foolish bickering and grumbling. God has been so good even to the most unworthy of us that it behooves us to live today well. There is no room in any of our lives for ungratefulness. We can serve God only by helping each other. There is no future time when we will ever be free from one another. The tie that binds is eternal. All we have and all we ever will have through all time and eternity is people just like us. We need a course in mutual appreciation. We would do well to discipline our reactions and try to look beyond the little annoyances to the fine people we can help each other become.

We mutually agree to build Zion. Shall we let this precious opportunity slip by or push heaven's gate ajar and appreciate our Zion's opportunities in concrete terms of service to each other?

THE CARPENTER cannot build a good house without the right tools. And so it is with man in the creation of his own destiny. He must have the right tools, the right thoughts. For everything that was ever created is the result of thought.

What, then, should a man desiring success have in his tool-kit? First of all, a picture—a blueprint of what he desires to build or to be. If he desires to build a house, he must first see the perfect house already built. He must know with certainty that God has given him illimitable powers—the power to build the house and the power to create the life he desires. This picture must be held firmly in the mind, for thought-control is the most important tool a man possesses.

LET NO THOUGHT of failure ever enter the mind, for man becomes what he thinks. To think success is to become successful, for thoughts are powerful forces that immediately go into operation.

Let us remember that God gave man dominion over the earth. We are a part of God; therefore we are unlimited except as we create our own limitations.

A great philosopher once said, "Success is a quality of the mind." Real success must come from within. Whatever our circumstance may be today, it is the direct result of our thinking.

MODERN MAN is beginning to realize, through the aid of psychiatry, the untapped potentialities of the mind. While our western world has been making rapid strides in material progress, the science of mind has lagged far behind. To understand the mind in all of its aspects is to prevent mental illness which is increasing at an alarming rate.

For many centuries, the eastern world has devoted much time and attention to this subject. India, for all her poverty, is adept in utilizing the powers of mind—the power of the subconscious as a positive, vital force for man's good.

Once it was believed by the common man that the conscious mind was all. Now science is proving that this phase of the mind is about one tenth of its total capacity. It has been compared to the iceberg, the submerged portion being the subconscious. In the not too distant future, we shall begin to realize in truth that each man has many slaves at his command, and we shall come to regard the subconscious mind not as just a force to be reckoned with in the combating of mental illness, but as a God-given power through which we all may benefit.

NEWS AND NOTES

NEW STUDENTS AT THE SANITARIUM

Miss Nelle Morgan, Director of Nurses at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, announces that the largest class of nurses ever to arrive at the Sanitarium enrolled on August 31. Forty-three new recruits from Massachusetts, Oregon, California, Florida, Iowa, Ohio, Illinois, Kansas, Michigan, Idaho, Missouri, and the Hawaiian Islands. Nine young ladies are from Independence and nine more are from the state of Missouri. The next largest representation is six from the Hawaiian Islands. They are the Misses Grace Maruo, Margaret Lee, Evelyn Chock, Susie Higa, Alice Awaya, and Alice Tagami.

MISSIONARY WORK BY CHARLES MAY

Seventy J. Charles May spent the week of August 14 in Bonesteel, South Dakota, with Elder Harold Reid, president of the Central Nebraska District. A Vacation Church School was held in the church each morning for the children, and Elder May preached each evening.

On the last day of July he concluded ten days at Blue Rapids, Kansas, where nine were baptized, four children and five adults, making a total of fifteen baptisms at that place since last Conference. Elder May says the work in that place is characterized by a fine personal missionary spirit.

CONSULTATION IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

President Israel A. Smith and Bishop G. L. DeLapp left Monday August 29 for Washington, D. C., to consider with members of that branch the location and purchase of a building site for the Washington, D. C., church. They planned to be gone several days also visiting other points in the East on church business.

THE REUNION ASSOCIATION

Apostle D. T. Williams announces that the organization has been culminated of the Missouri Valley Reunion Association at a business meeting held on August 13 at Woodbine, Iowa. This association is for the purpose of bringing together the four districts, Northwestern Iowa, Southwestern Iowa, Northeastern Nebraska, and Southern Nebraska, for work toward ownership of permanent reunion grounds and better reunion planning. This year is the first reunion in which all four districts have officially associated. The Woodbine Reunion was formerly the Northwestern Iowa District Reunion at which the other districts were guests.

REVISION OF TEXT

The Department of Religious Education is in the process of editing a revision of the booklet previously called "A Yearbook for Church Schools."

NEWS AND NOTES EDITOR MARRIES

Sadi Anka Moon, editor of News and Notes, Stepping Stones, and assistant editor of junior quarterlies, was married Friday evening, August 26, at Stone Church to Harley Nagel of Independence. She will continue in her work at the Herald Publishing House. Her husband plans to attend the University of Kansas, where he will study for his M.A. in sociology.

LAMBERT FAMILY REUNION

The Forty-ninth annual Lambert Family Reunion, held each year the day before Labor Day was in Independence, Missouri, this year. There were seventy-five present. The original Lamberts were Richard and Jane who came from England when the Saints gathered at Nauvoo. They had six sons and six daughters. Of this second generation there are two still living: Mrs. George (Hattie) Lambert of Nauvoo, who is ninety years old, and Mrs. Alex (Ann) Lambert who is eighty-two years old. Well known to church people were J. R. and Daniel F. Lambert who would have been of this second generation. Gathered for the family reunion were the third, fourth, and fifth generations. Members of the third generation are Mark H. Siegfried, Richard J. Lambert, and Elbert Lambert, the latter from Nauvoo. Kenneth L. Graham, manager of Herald House, is a member of the fourth generation.

WORK IN MARLIN, TEXAS

Elder Arthur Rock, pastor at Marlin, Texas, visited the Department of Religious Education on September 6, bringing with him Brother and Sister Alfred Feldman, members of the Marlin Branch. Brother and Sister Rock and their family live in Waco, Texas, where he is working on his Master's degree at Baylor University in the field of radio. Recently he prepared, for a course in the radio department, a television show based on the archaeological evidence of the Book of Mormon and entitled "Whence Came the Red Man?" which met with considerable appreciation from the professor of the course.

The Rocks travel thirty miles by bus from Waco to Marlin three times a week, Sunday, Wednesday, and Friday. On Friday evening the group in Marlin have a very successful and inspirational fellowship class. Brother Arthur Allen, another student at the university, alternates teaching with Brother Rock. The president of the class is Earl Allen. On the fourth Friday of each month the group has a social evening. About twenty members of the branch meet for this class, which uses as its text, "Book of Mormon Studies."

The group in Marlin has been fortunate in receiving excellent publicity in the local newspaper.

THAT MUSKOGEE, OKLAHOMA, GROUP AGAIN

Readers will remember that Muskogee Branch started a mission recently, and that mission has in turn started another mission church school about fifty miles away at the town of Black Gum. Five young people were baptized there on the third Sunday of the month, and the average attendance at the church school is forty-five.

STARTING TO BUILD AT WICHITA

Wichita, Kansas, members, under the pastorage of Myron LaPointe, have demolished their old inadequate church building in preparation for building a larger new edifice on the same site. Most of the work is being done by members of the congregation.

MRS. VICTOR WITTE RECUPERATING

Helen Witte, the wife of Victor Witte of Tulsa, was released from the Sanitarium on Friday, September 9, after an operation on August 22. She is recovering nicely.

NEWS OF EASTERN COLORADO REUNION

An excellent reunion was held on the grounds near Colorado Springs with a high degree of fellowship and fraternity present. The Eastern Colorado District is united in its work. Ward Hougas headed an excellent staff of workers, and the camp pastor was Howard Sheehy. General church workers were President F. Henry Edwards, Apostle Reed Holmes, Bishop and Mrs. Walter N. Johnson, and Elder Houston Hobart.

At a reunion business meeting, the district decided to sell the reunion grounds because it is inadequate in space and housing. Next year the reunion will probably be at Pine Crest Camp grounds at Palmer Lake, Colorado, about twenty miles north of Colorado Springs.

HIELD REPORTS REUNIONS

An excellent reunion of the Western Colorado District was held at Delta, Colorado, according to the report of Apostle Charles Hield. It was held Wednesday through Sunday. Assisting Brother Hield there were Seventy Russell Ralston, Patriarch William Paterson, and Pastor Arthur Rose.

About 800 Saints filled the grounds for the Southern California reunion held at Pacific Palisades near Santa Monica for a larger reunion than held in recent years. Brother Hield tells that outstanding work was done by Sister Mamie Blakeman and Brother Glen Holmes in their work with the young people. A special feature was the dramas presented from 7:30 to 8:00 each evening on the missionary themes of the reunion. Another high point was the annual presentation of the Last Supper, by the Santa Ana men, a tableau portrayal of Da Vinci's famous painting. Garland Tickemyer assisted Apostle Hield in charge of the reunion program.

At the Northern California Reunion, Apostle Hield says there were about 50 per cent more campers this year than last. It was held at Pacific Grove near Monterey. Helpers included Bishop J. Stanley Kelley, Elder and Mrs. Herbert Lynn, and Patriarch William Paterson. Excellent evensong dramas prepared by Katherine Lynn showed various missionary and pastoral events in the lives of a Latter Day Saint family.

At the same time as the Northern California Reunion, a labor leaders' conference was held in the large Pacific Grove grounds. Excellent relations were developed between the two groups through inter-group sports contests. Many questions were asked, and many visited our church services. Good opportunities were given for presenting our philosophy to these leaders and to some of their visiting lecturers who included professors from near-by colleges and universities.

The Zion's League at both of these reunions was led by Brother Tickemyer. These young people were very active, and among them were a number of college students, including several from Graceland.

The Arizona Reunion, held at Camp Lawton on Mount Lemon, was 25 per cent larger than last year. Bishop and Mrs. J. Stanley Kelley, Seventy George Njeim, and Elder and Sister Herbert Lynn were among those who assisted Brother Hield in the work of the reunion. Among the projects that met with considerable interest were the numerous artistic charts produced by the Lynns on the various subjects relating to the missionary work of the church. Mrs. Lynn does the art work, and Brother Lynn furnishes the ideas, flavored with his training in the use of color in the science of reading and advertising. Together they have worked countless days in expanding their set. Apostle Hield gives their work his highest commendation.

Eddie Green, Ronald, and Bonnie Green led a fine recreation program at the Arizona Reunion, and Mrs. Lynn led in the presentation of her dramas. The Tucson and Phoenix groups also presented dramas depicting a priest's visit and the right and wrong way to have cottage meetings.

ILLINOIS REUNION PLANS

This year at the Chicago District Reunion at Palos Park, the members of the district decided to work toward uniting with Northeastern Illinois for a full scale reunion next year. The Chicago Reunion was three days this year, and Northeastern Illinois has not enjoyed having a reunion at all.

ENGAGEMENTS

Stayton-Elefson

Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Elefson of Butler, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Jean, to Manley Stayton, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Manley Stayton, Sr., of Phoenix, Arizona. Both were members of the 1948 graduating class at Graceland.

Pearson-DeTray

Mr. and Mrs. Donald E. DeTray of Independence, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Betty Jean, to Russell W. Pearson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nels M. Pearson, also of Independence. The wedding will take place October 21 at Liberty Street Church.

WEDDINGS

Davis-Surbrook

Ona Lee Surbrook, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Surbrook of Grain Valley, Missouri, and Charles E. Davis of Eldorado Springs, Missouri, son of Elder and Mrs. Paul R. Davis, were married at the Coal Hill Reorganized church on August 20. The groom's father performed the double-ring ceremony. The bride is a graduate of Graceland, and the groom will be graduated in 1950.

Johnson-Webster

Phyllis Wheeler Webster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Alton Wheeler of North Stonington, Connecticut, and Harry Newton Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Johnson of Clarksburg, West Virginia, were married August 26 on the lawn of the home of the bride's parents. Elder Almer Sheehy read the double-ring ceremony. Both bride and groom attended Graceland College. They will make their home in Buckhannon, West Virginia, where Mr. Johnson is a senior at Wesleyan University.

Hartshorn-Shippy

Laurel Shippy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Shippy of Lexington, Missouri, and Lewis Hartshorn, son of Elder and Mrs. Horace Hartshorn, were married August 26 at the Reorganized Church in Lexington. The bride's father read the double-ring ceremony. They are making their home in Odessa.

BIRTH

Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt E. Filer announce the birth of a son, Curtis Lee, born August 21 at Marysville, California. The father is a graduate of Graceland, class of 1948.

DEATHS

PINKERTON.—William, was born at Hamilton, Scotland, on December 27, 1878, and died July 8, 1949, at the St. Joseph Hospital in Belvidere, Illinois.

He was baptized a member of the church September 11, 1902, at Glasco, Scotland, by Elder John W. Rushton. He was ordained a deacon at Hamilton, Scotland, August, 1904. On March 4, 1907, he came to America. He was ordained May 5, 1910, to the office of priest at DeKalb, Illinois. On June 21, 1911, he was married to Miss Minnie Agnes Michael at Madison, Wisconsin, by Elder W. A. McDowell. He was ordained an elder at Belvidere, Illinois, September 11, 1911.

He had four children, all of whom are left to mourn his death: Earl William Pinkerton of the home, Robert A. Pinkerton of Belvidere, Dorothy Jane Pinkerton of Janesville, Wisconsin, and Mrs. Ray W. Manley of Cherry Valley, Illinois. There are three grandchildren.

Brother Pinkerton was a steadfast member and worker of the church. Also left to mourn is his wife. The funeral was held July 11 at Belvidere. Elder Lloyd Hadley of River Forest, Illinois, conducted the service.

 BUCK FEVER

Ever since the economic inflation of war days, people have been suffering from an old frontier disease, "buck fever." Not the kind, however, where they stand paralyzed with their hands frozen to a gun; but the kind where they become ecstatic and slightly demented with the idea of getting more than their fair share of dollars.

 ON SECOND THOUGHT

We meet so many ideas in life, of course, to which we should never even give a first thought. They just aren't worth the time. There is many a notion that, on knocking at the door of our attention should be refused admittance, simply because it is a vagrant and an offender, and will do harm if we let it in. You wouldn't let a drunken bum into your house. Why should you let a low, unworthy idea into your mind?

But there are other ideas that, on first thought, attract our sympathy and attention. They are pleasant enough when they arrive. They look good and have the external social graces. But soon after they come we discover a strange disquiet in our hearts, a feeling of separation from friends and those we love and a sense of insecurity and distrust. When that condition arrives, it is time to put those ideas out—firmly, resolutely, and bluntly.

A good "second thought" will protect us from many a sorrow.

 PLANNING

"Kiwanis Magazine" for August carries an inspiring story of how Mayor Russell G. Hileman swept corrupt politicians out of office in Michigan City, Indiana, and brought good government and competent administration to the city.

The keystone of his campaign and plan of action was a Central Planning Committee, composed of representatives of all leading city organizations, business and professional groups. These people served as volunteers, and brought expert knowledge, skill, and leadership to the solution of problems that had thoroughly baffled the politicians.

Here is a great idea, capable of wider application. It could apply to businesses. It could apply to schools. It could even apply to a church.

Suppose your church—your branch congregation—had a Central Planning Committee. Suppose it included your leading business men, your school teachers, your doctors and dentists, nurses—all persons of experience, skill, and capacity for leadership. That would really be a group of helpers. They wouldn't need to hold office, though undoubtedly some of them could give splendid help in carrying out the suggestions of the committee.

A pastor or a district president with enterprise and imagination could do wonders with this idea. In fact, it is already being done in some places, and in a limited way, by some of our churches. Some splendid successes have been made.

And one of the great benefits is the strength and help obtained from a wider participation of the congregation in church management. People give stronger support when they have a voice in government. Debts could be lifted, new buildings erected, missionary campaigns pushed to success, with the help of all the people.

Historic Building Issue

Trusteeship

THIS "HISTORICAL BUILDINGS" ISSUE contains much information which we believe the members of the church and other readers of the Herald will find helpful as well as interesting. The Church feels it is a part of our stewardship to see that the records and properties prepared at great effort and expense by the pioneers of the church be kept intact and in good repair. The same God who said that the Inspired Version should be preserved in safety also said that the Temple at Kirtland should be built and the Nauvoo House should be erected. Members of the Reorganized Church are happy to serve as trustees of these manuscripts and properties.

We believe it is providential that the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon as well as the original transcript of the actual characters on the plates has been kept securely; these and the Inspired Version we hold in sacred trust as the legal successors to the original church organized in the year 1830.

Let us remember that these historic properties, built at great sacrifice by the early Saints, also were the concern of the Almighty (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 18). It is evident from the language used that some of these buildings were to remain "from generation to generation, for ever and ever." To these religious shrines many of the Saints have gone in recent years that they might catch more of the spirit of the Restoration and, through this revered environment, feel the inspiration in the faith of our fathers. We here acknowledge our gratitude to the care and blessing of God which has made us the custodians of these properties, as we hold it another evidence that God has recognized this church as the church of his choice.

Introducing...

CECIL RAY ETTINGER (page 13) was born July 26, 1922, at Taylorville, Illinois, where he was graduated from high school in 1940. He attended Graceland from 1940 to 1942 and again in 1946. He received his B. A. degree from the University of Iowa in 1948.

He served with the United States Air Force from 1943 to 1946, and saw service in Europe as a fighter pilot. Vocationally he has done bookkeeping and clerical work.

Cecil is an elder and went under general church appointment in October, 1947. He is now serving as the church's representative in Nauvoo.

On August 1, 1946, he married Betty Jean Russell. They have two children: Cecil Ray III, 2 years; and Stephanie Lynn, 8 months.

Brother Ettinger's hobbies are photography and music. He has won national recognition as a bassoon soloist.

RAYMOND J. ASHENHURST (page 17) was born in Denlo, Missouri, May 1, 1913. He was graduated from Roosevelt High School in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1931, and became a member of a national honor society.

During the war he served as radio technician in the United States Navy from 1943 to 1945. From 1932 to 1936 he was employed as a bookkeeper; and from 1936 to 1947, except for the period of his war service, he was bookkeeper and bank teller.

Ray is an elder and went under Conference appointment in April, 1947. His first assignment was to Kirtland Temple, and he is now doing missionary work in northwest Ohio.

In 1936 he married Eva Phipps. They have two children: Patricia Bell, 10 years; and Harry James, 1 year.

Brother Ashenhurst's hobbies are reading, electric wiring, and radios.

News & Notes

COLLEGE STUDENTS CONFERENCE

In a larger gathering of such nature than ever before held, college students from many of the educational institutions throughout the United States met for a three-day conference at the Stone Church in Independence. About 125 visitors and many local young people participated in the discussions and lectures, and attended the dinner and the consecration service. Dr. E. V. Shute of London, Ontario, Canada, spoke to a large group of visitors and townspeople on Thursday evening, September 8.

Others who were active in the conference were Harley Morris, Sparta, Wisconsin; Dr. Lawrence O. Brockway, Ann Arbor, Michigan; A. Neal Deaver, administrative assistant of the superintendent of the Independence Sanitarium; President F. Henry Edwards, Apostle Reed Holmes, and Bishop G. L. DeLapp. One of the high lights of the conference was the making public of the priceless manuscripts of the Book of Mormon and the Inspired Version together with first editions of hymnbooks, the Book of Mormon, and other original pieces of writing. These were on display under guard at the Stone Church, being taken from the church vault in a bank in Kansas City. Other visitors besides the college students came to see this exhibition, the first public viewing of the Book of Mormon original manuscript since 1930.

JOINT COUNCIL MEETS

The Quorum of Twelve met in quorum council on Tuesday, September 13, at the Auditorium in Independence. All members were present except Apostle Roscoe Davey who is in Australia and Apostle D. Blair Jensen who is in Europe. Their deliberations continued daily until the twentieth when the bishopric and presidency joined them. The work of the joint council will continue for several days with the anticipation that business will be concluded before October 1.

ALBERT SCHERER IMPROVES

Elder Albert Scherer, who recently returned to the United States with his family from Holland where he was missionary, is improving in health constantly. He has requested permission to work part time and already is following a preaching schedule in and about Independence.

RECREATION GROUNDS

Work on the Campus recreation grounds progresses. The Scout Leaders and Senior Scouts of Independence finished the campfire circle during the week of August 22. This will accommodate up to 150 and is designed especially for small groups and for outdoor worship service. Lights were put up at the miniature golf course, and the new storage and refreshment building, being built by the Men's Club, was nearly up to the roof by August 27. Carl Mesle announced on August 23 that the second tennis court is opened for daytime play. The first court is equipped for night games.

MISSIONARY SERMONS IN INDEPENDENCE

Evangelist Ray Whiting preached a series of missionary sermons every night between August 22 and September 2 except Saturday and Sunday, on the lawn of the Enoch Hill Church. This is the second of several such missionary series being carried out in Independence during the autumn months. The attendance at these services is 100 to 200.

JOSEPH SMITH II

Historical Markers for Nauvoo and Kirtland By PRESIDENT ISRAEL A. SMITH

EMMA HALE SMITH

THE CHURCH for some years has maintained historic properties at Nauvoo which were owned by the Prophet Joseph Smith and that are now owned by the church, which acquired them from the heirs of the Prophet. We visited Nauvoo recently and are well pleased with the condition of these buildings and the surrounding grounds. Guides are maintained by the church for the benefit of tourists or others who desire to visit these Latter Day Saint shrines.

A few years ago wooden markers were erected, bearing simple legends that indicate what each building is, the date of occupancy, et cetera.

We now believe better, more complete, artistic bronze tablets should be installed, and a few general signs of the same character should be placed at appropriate locations from which all persons visiting Nauvoo will be informed as to history and present ownership of these buildings by the church.

Decision has been reached to have individual markers placed on the buildings or on granite or marble stones within each enclosure, showing what the building is, a concise statement of its history, its present ownership, et cetera. For this purpose we will give a prize of a fifty-dollar Government Bond for the best design for markers for each of the following buildings: Homestead, Nauvoo House, Mansion House, Kirtland Temple, and a general marker for Nauvoo.

We want our designers to use their own originality in each design and consider the suggestions which follow as being only illustrative.

The Homestead

"A log house, built originally about 1823. Joseph Smith and wife Emma with their three children took possession on May 11, 1839. Resided there until September, 1842. Frame addition was added later. Near it lay the remains of Joseph, Emma, and Hyrum Smith."

Suggestions: Profile of Joseph Smith in upper right corner, Emma Smith in upper left corner, facing each other.

The Mansion House

"Built for residence of Joseph Smith and Emma Smith. Occupied from and after September, 1842. Bodies of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, after assassination on June 27, 1844, brought here, viewed by thousands. David Hyrum Smith born here November 17, 1844. Occupied for some years as a hotel. Remodeled and reduced in size years later."

Suggestions: Left upper bas-relief of original structure. Upper right bas-relief profiles of Joseph and Emma facing left.

At bottom across the marker, in relief: Joseph III, Frederick, Alexander, David.

Appropriate reading in center.

Nauvoo House

"Construction under way in 1844, but never finished by the church. Reduced from original plans and finished in the 1860's. Emma Smith died here on April 30, 1879."

Suggestions: Appropriate reading across the tablet. Below at left in relief the unfinished building as it stood from 1844 to 1860's (186-?)

In relief, Emma Smith at right.

A General Marker

In addition we desire designs for two or more bronze markers (they can be identical), showing that the properties belong to the Reorganized Church, giving full name of the church, international headquarters at Independence, Missouri, organized April 6, 1830, at Fayette, New York. Maintained for benefit of visitors and searchers after the truth.

Kirtland Temple

Built 1833-1836, by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, now owned and maintained by its legal successor, The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by decree of the District Court of Lake County, Ohio.

For the benefit of those who desire to submit designs, we publish pictures of all these buildings, also of Joseph, Emma, and Hyrum Smith; also a picture showing the four sons, Joseph, Frederick, Alexander, and David.

The Presidency and Bishopric will select three judges who will award the prizes; their decision will be final, and all drawings or designs submitted become the property of the church.

Drawings must be submitted before January 1, 1950. Sketches should not be smaller than 8½ x 13 inches.

Address all correspondence to the First Presidency, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Acknowledgments

It was early in July that President Israel A. Smith gave us—Mrs. Lea and myself—a pleasant assignment in working up materials for this special issue of the Herald on our church historical properties. We arrived at Nauvoo during the reunion season, and so enjoyed the association of visiting church people and the ministry of Apostle D. T. Williams, Evangelist Ray Whiting, District President D. J. Williams, and others. Despite many activities, the historical work went on, based upon readings in Journal of History; History of the Church, by Heman C. Smith; the Saints' Herald; and articles by S. A. Burgess. In lieu of too many by-lines, it will be sufficient to state here that the following articles resulted from this reading and work: "Beginnings in Nauvoo," "The Mansion House," "Nauvoo House," "Nauvoo Temple," and "Kirtland Temple." Mrs. Lea's contribution appears in "New Horizons."

Most of the cuts—all of the new ones—are from the excellent photographs of Harold D. Smith of Smith Studio, Fort Madison, Iowa. We enjoyed the kind hospitality of the Smith family and their beautiful home, and have many grateful memories of their kindness and generosity. Brethren Cecil Ettinger and Glen Cargyle, guides at Nauvoo, were also very helpful to us.

To all who assisted in the completion of this project, our sincere thanks and appreciation.

LEONARD J. LEA.

The Greatness of Joseph Smith

This issue of the Herald is, in a sense, a record of the achievements of Joseph Smith, the founder of the church. Long after a man is gone, other men seek to explain his greatness and his success. What made Joseph Smith great?

His was an original mind. He did not follow the fashionable and accepted patterns of thought. He was a pioneer. He cut his own way through the intellectual and spiritual wilderness that had grown up about the gospel and about men's ideas of God.

He had no ancestors to worship, like so many of the more eminent citizens of the part of the country where he lived. His ancestors were humble but good people; he honored them, but he wasted no time uselessly upon them.

He did not bother too much with the historical parts of the Scriptures, but turned his attention to the prophecies, because they dealt with the future. He stopped reading history in order to make history.

The Beginnings of Nauvoo

Notes From Historical Records

THE SMITH FAMILY MOVES TO COMMERCE

On May 9, 1839, Joseph Smith left Quincy with his family, and arrived at Commerce on the 10th, where he moved into a small log house one mile south of Commerce on the bank of the river, on the White purchase.—Heman C. Smith, Church History, Volume 2, page 365.

According to old plats, the village of Commerce was on the northwest part of the broad headland formed by the great bend of the Mississippi River at this point. Commerce was formerly an Indian village, Quash-quema, and was settled in the 1820's as an Indian trading post.

After its occupation by Joseph Smith and his family, the "small log house" received some alterations and additions. Today it is known as "The Homestead," one of the historic properties of the church at Nauvoo.

A WILDERNESS IN 1839

From the pen of Joseph Smith, we have the following early history:

Tuesday (June) 11. I commenced dictating my history for my clerk, James Mulholland, to write. About this time Elder Theodore Turley raised the first house built by the Saints in this place; it was built of logs, about twenty-five or thirty rods northeast of my dwelling, on the northeast corner of lot 4, block 147, of the White purchase. When I made the purchase of White and Galland, there were one stone house, three frame houses, and two block houses, which constituted the whole city of Commerce. Between Commerce and Mr. Davidson Hibbard's, there were one stone and three log houses, including the one that I live in, and these were all the houses in this vicinity, and the place was literally a wilderness. The land was mostly covered with trees and bushes, and much of it so wet that it was with the utmost difficulty a footman could get through, and totally impossible for teams. Commerce was so unhealthy, very few could live there; but believing that it might become a healthy place by the blessing of heaven to the Saints, and no more eligible place presenting itself, I considered it wisdom to make an attempt to build up a city.—Millennial Star, Volume 17, page 276; Church History, Volume 2, page 367.

Monday, June 24, the church purchased the town of Nashville in Lee County, Iowa, together with twenty thousand acres of land adjoining it.—Church History, Volume 2, page 368.

July 2, President Smith advised the building of a town to be called Zarahemla, upon land recently purchased by Bishop Knight in Iowa.—Ibid.

THE CITY IN 1840

Joseph Smith and a group of associates were returning from a mission to the Capitol at Washington early in 1840, and we obtain an idea of traveling conditions from his notes. The latter part of his journey home, from Dayton, Ohio, and across Indiana, was made on horseback. He wrote:

Wednesday, March 4, 1840. I arrived safely in Nauvoo, after a wear-some journey, through alternate snows and mud.

On April 21, 1840, a letter was written by Robert Johnstone, Second Assistant Postmaster General, announcing that the Postmaster General had changed the name of the post office from "Commerce" to "Nauvoo." The Saints had already been calling the city by the new name for some time.

In the early part of the year 1840 there was not much done in Nauvoo and vicinity, except the duties incident to preparing homes, preparing for spring farming, and other work; only the regular routine of church business and the preaching of the elders in the regions round about.—Church History, Volume 2, page 446.

Progress was indicated, however, in what Joseph Smith wrote on June 1, 1840:

The Saints have already erected about 250 houses at Nauvoo, mostly block-houses, a few framed, and many more in lively operation.—Church History, Volume 2, page 450.

OLD NAUVOO FROM THE AIR

Looking northwest from an airplane over historic Nauvoo. White gravel roads contrast brightly against the dark rich loam of the river valley. Here the broad curve of the Mississippi surrounds the site of a once thriving city on three sides. Waters impounded by the great dam at Keokuk down the river deposit silt and sand which show close to the surface of the water in many spots. Center of picture, by the water, is Nauvoo House. The large white house near lower right is home of the photographer, Harold D. Smith. Lowest right is the home of Elder R. H. Atkinson.

For students of history and for church members, it is a pity that more complete records of the growth of the city were not kept. The Saints were so busy with building that they had little time to write. Yet the accounts that remain are detailed enough to give a clear idea of the tremendous amount of work being done.

NAUVOO IN 1843

The marvelous transformation which took place in four years is indicated in the report written by Samuel A. Prior, a Methodist minister visiting Nauvoo on a visit of investigation. His report was published in the Times and Seasons for May 15, 1843:

I was surprised to see one of the most romantic places that I had visited in the west. The buildings, though many of them were small and of wood, yet bore the marks of neatness which I have not seen equalled in this country. The far-spread plain at the bottom of the hill was dotted over with the habitations of men with such majestic profusion that I was almost willing to believe myself mistaken, and instead of being in Nauvoo of Illinois, among Mormons, that I was in Italy at the city of Leghorn (which the location of Nauvoo resembles very much) among the eccentric Italians. I gazed for some time upon the plain below. Here and there arose a tall majestic brick house, speaking loudly of the genius and untiring labor of the inhabitants, who have snatched the place from the clutches of obscurity, and wrested it from the bonds of disease; and in two or three short years rescued it from a dreary waste to transform it into one of the first cities of the west.

The hill upon which I stood was covered over with the dwellings of men, and amid them was seen to rise the hewn stone and already accomplished work of the Temple, which is now raised fifteen or twenty feet above the ground

I passed on into more active parts of the city, looking into every street and lane to observe all that was passing. I found all the people engaged in some useful and healthy employment. The place was alive with business—much more so than any place I have visited since the hard times commenced. . . . I could see no loungers about the streets, nor any drunkards about the taverns. . . . I heard not an oath in the place,

THE HOMESTEAD

First occupied by Joseph Smith and family on May 10, 1839, enlarged and covered partly with siding, this building is a memorial of the earliest days of church occupation in Nauvoo.

I saw not a gloomy countenance; all were cheerful, polite, and industrious.

I conversed with many leading men—found them social and well-informed, hospitable and generous. I saw nothing but order and regulation in the society.—Journal of History, Volume III, pages 239-241.

THE CHARTERS

The rapidity of progress and the extent of recognition accorded the new city in the state of Illinois is indicated by the fact that on December 16, 1840, charters were signed by the governor, after being passed by the state, senate, and house, for the city of Nauvoo, the University of the City of Nauvoo, and the Nauvoo Legion.

OLD NAUVOO TODAY

Except for a fringe of wayside shops and curio stands on the highway leading up from Quincy and Hamilton to the south, Old Nauvoo maintains a quiet and peaceful possession of the flats down by the wide expanse of the river, undisturbed by trade and commerce. Unless somebody buys the remaining vacant land along that highway, it is inevitable that small businesses will be attracted there by the tourists who pause and get out of their cars. And one should not disregard the service that such small businesses render to the traveling public, as well as to the church, by assisting in giving information to those who need it. However, too great a development of business there would rob the historical sites of some of their unique value.

The real business section of Nauvoo is up on the hill. A modern hotel, installed in an old building that has been nicely renovated, dispenses excellent dinners for which some visitors drive hundreds of miles. The now famous "Nauvoo Blue Cheese" is made not far from the principal business street. This cheese is like the French Rocquefort, but is made from cow's milk instead of sheep's milk. A merchant has developed a tangy sausage for those who like smoke flavor. A newspaper serves the city and sends local news to subscribers all over the country who like to keep in touch with events there. The local citizens are friendly and accommodating in helping and giving information to visitors. Nauvoo on the hill is as pleasant to visit as any good Illinois town. About the city are the great grape vineyards, which turn out their purple flood for the making of wine, the subject of an annual festival in the fall.

Nauvoo, however, will never lose a certain solemnity due to the vacant site of the temple overlooking the river from the crest of the hill.

Nauvoo House

INSTRUCTIONS TO BUILD

JANUARY 19, 1841, was an important date in the history of Nauvoo, when a revelation was given to the church containing directions to begin work on two new buildings, the largest in the city during the life of Joseph Smith, Jr. One was to be the Temple in a beautiful and prominent place at the crest of the hill overlooking the grand sweep of the Mississippi River around the bend that formed the pleasant, tree-shaded flatlands of the lower part of the city. The other, Nauvoo House, was to be a large hospice, conveniently located near the river's edge.

The revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 107) is a lengthy one, containing detailed instructions for raising the funds to finance the erection of what it described as a "boarding house"—which would be called a hotel today, for both residents and transients.

The name it was to bear was given exactly—"The Nauvoo House." It was to have some permanent tenants:

Let my servant Joseph, and his seed after him, have place in that house, from generation to generation, for ever and ever and let it be a delightful habitation for man, and a resting place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion.

There in the hospitality of that spacious structure, the head of the church himself planned to be available to meet the multitudes of visitors coming to the city, new members from distant states and from England, wishing to settle, and interested persons and travelers investigating the church and viewing the city.

CHARTER OF INCORPORATION

On February 23, 1841, Governor Carlin of Illinois approved the document passed by the legislature to incorporate the Nauvoo House Association. The articles named George Miller, Lyman Wight, John Snider, and Peter Haws as trustees.

Joseph Smith gave the site from his own land purchase, the south half of block 156 of the City of Nauvoo. Heman C. Smith, historian, suggested that this may have been one of the considerations in return for which Joseph and his family were to have a place of residence in the building.

LAYING THE CORNERSTONE

On October 2, 1841, the corner stone of the Nauvoo House was laid with imposing ceremony. Several relics of historic value were placed in the receptacle prepared in the corner stone, including one of the manuscript copies of the Book of Mormon.—Heman C. Smith, Journal of History, Volume III, page 168.

THE PLAN OF CONSTRUCTION

The house was commenced on a solid basis of rock masonry. It was built in the form of an ell, the south front facing the river 120 feet long by forty deep; and the west front facing Main street the same length and depth. The walls of the basement were forty-two inches thick and the design was to build three stories high.

The Nauvoo Temple being in course of construction at the same time and being considered of first importance, the building of the Nauvoo House was retarded greatly, yet the committee pushed the work on its walls as fast as means coming into its hands would permit.—Ibid., Volume III, page 169.

THE BUILDING NOT COMPLETED

The church had been given a limited time in which to complete the Temple on the hill. Persecution and opposition were increasing around Nauvoo. Leaders were convinced that it was absolutely necessary to finish the Temple. Nauvoo House would have to wait.

An editorial appeared in the Times and Seasons for March 1, 1844, stating:

It is in contemplation to devote all our energies to the completion of the Temple

NAUVOO HOUSE

Nauvoo House stands today as a small part of the large hospice once planned for the entertainment of visitors and as a residence for Joseph Smith and his family. The walls to the left were a part of the original foundation, and the small building was erected in the 1860's on what would have been the northwest corner of the complete structure. Quiet and peaceful today, it was a scene of bustling activity from 1841 to 1844.

this season, and to let the Nauvoo House stand until the Temple is finished. By a unity of efforts, it is expected that the roof can be put on by next fall, and the building be enclosed.

The Temple was not finished that season, and Nauvoo House was to wait longer than anyone had anticipated.

THE WORK ABANDONED

The tragedy of June 27, 1844, the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith at the jail in Carthage, Illinois, threw all plans into confusion, and nothing more was done on the building until much later.

Heman C. Smith continues the narrative:

After the abandonment of Nauvoo by the church the Nauvoo House stood as left by the committee for several years. The title passed into other hands, Major Lewis Bidamon, who married the widow of Joseph Smith, finally coming into possession. He built a substantial residence on the southwest corner by building up the walls from where the committee left them. The stone portion of the west wall north of the part finished by Mr. Bidamon still remains, and on the northwest corner he erected a small building which he occupied as an office. The brick above the stone basement has all been removed. That portion of the south wall east of the Bidamon house was entirely removed by Mr. Bidamon.

AFTERNOON

It is growing late, and the westering sun throws slender fingers of shadow across the footprints of the pilgrims, long since gone, who trod the earth here in the company of their dreams and hopes, their fears, despair and pain. . . . It is later in the afternoon of history, too, and other pilgrims follow the old trail with their thoughts on the dawn of a better day.

Further information is given by S. A. Burgess, formerly Church Historian, now Research Assistant to the Presidency:

Very little more is known of Nauvoo House history for the next twenty years and over. There is a story that the bodies of the two martyrs were temporarily interred in the basement; then in the 1860's Major Bidamon, who had married Emma Smith, undertook to make a residence of the building and tore down the east wing and much of the north wing; completed the southwest corner, forty by forty feet, and carried it up to the third story. It was called "Riverside Mansion" and was the home of Emma Smith Bidamon from 1871 to her death in 1879; and it appears that there she lay in state, and the funeral took place.—Saints' Herald, Volume 92, page 724, August 4, 1945.

BOOK OF MORMON MANUSCRIPT

There has been considerable discussion about the manuscript of the Book of Mormon that was deposited in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House at the time it was laid. Here we quote again from Heman C. Smith:

At the time the Book of Mormon was placed in the hands of the printer for the first edition, Oliver Cowdery took the precaution to make an entire copy so one could be preserved for safety while the other was used by the compositor.

The one used by the printer was doubtless left in the custody of Oliver Cowdery and by him transferred to David Whitmer, and finally fell into the hands of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and is still in good condition.

After dealing with other matters, the historian tells of the final disposition of the copy of the Book of Mormon left in the cornerstone.

That portion of the south wall east of the Bidamon house was entirely removed by Mr. Bidamon. In the southeast corner he found the relics deposited in the cornerstone, but the manuscript before mentioned was so much damaged that but little of it was legible. He preserved a few pages, some of which he sent to President Joseph Smith at Lamoni, Iowa, and some of them he sent to Joseph F. Smith, son of Hyrum Smith, at Salt Lake City, Utah.

PRESENT OWNERSHIP AND CARE

The title of the property passed into the hands of Mr. Charles E. Bidamon, son of the Major, who made his home there for several years. It was supposed that the property had passed forever out of the hands of the Smith family and the church. . . . However, through the negotiations of Elder Heman C. Smith, the title was finally secured, the transfer being made by Mr. Charles Bidamon and wife to Bishop Edmund L. Kelley, trustee in trust for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, October 13, 1909, for the consideration of three thousand dollars.—Journal of History, Volume III, page 171.

In recent years the Nauvoo House has received maintenance from officers of the church. It has been fitted for use during reunions and youth camps to afford a kitchen and dining hall, and some sleeping quarters for campers and staff.

In the time of its construction, it was the second largest building in Nauvoo, and second in importance of the many projects of the church until the death of Joseph Smith. Today, it is the largest of the structures remaining in Nauvoo of that period of our history.

Nauvoo House has great possibilities. Properly renovated and finished, it will become a beautiful building, much more useful than it is now.

The Mansion House

Sketches concerning the last home of Joseph and Emma Smith and their family.

(NOTE: When Emma Smith looked for the last time upon the body of her slain husband, she exclaimed, "My husband! Oh, my husband!" This lovely and tender way of addressing him provided a key for an effort to phrase what might have been her thoughts on that happier day when they moved into the Mansion House, the last home they shared together.—L. J. L.)

I. THE MEDITATIONS OF EMMA SMITH, AUGUST 31, 1843

MY HUSBAND! Oh, my Husband! Today we move into our new home. Here, at long last, we have the place for which I have prayed so long and of which I have dreamed. How grateful to God I am.

I wonder, my Husband, if you can understand what that word, home, means to me and to the thousands of other women here in Nauvoo. Perhaps no man ever fully understands the heart of his wife. Because he does not bear her burden, because he does not live out every long day against her weakness, because he has never known her pain, because he need not reach down into the depths as she does for hidden sources of strength, how can he ever understand? A man knows only what a child knows—a little more, but the same things, and a woman must often forget and forgive.

I watched these walls going up under the hands of the workmen. I saw them completed. And then, one day, you took me by the hand and led me in. You told me it was mine. You sent me down to St. Louis on a boat to buy linen for the table, napkins, dishes, and silverware; curtains for the windows, blankets and spreads for the beds, and rugs for the floors. How carefully I selected every item, knowing the sacrifices of the people whose love had provided for these things.

And then I thought of the marvel of it! I who had eaten cold food in fear and desperation by the wilderness trail, dreading the approach of enemies at every moment—I was to sit down at a table in peace. I who had tramped through the mud and snow, by forest paths at night, in blackness and in rain—I was to walk on smooth wooden floors with rugs over them. I who had made one home after another, in log cabins and camps, under the rude shelter of the boughs of trees, and in the houses of strangers—I who had toiled and built, only to be taken away, leaving all my labor behind, then beginning again and doing it all over in a new place—here at last I can settle down to a permanent home.

AND THEN there were the children. When you were taken away by your journeys, when hateful mobs pursued you from place to place, when you were held illegally in prison, when troubles among the people of the church called you to settle them, I was often alone with the children. I longed for a place of safety where I could take care of them, where they need not feel afraid, where I could feed them and put them into proper beds, and keep them warm. How often I hid them and warned the little ones not to cry. How often I heard them say they were hungry and ask for food. How often I felt their bodies shiver with cold, and held myself close to them to keep them warm. All that is past now.

Now at last we are at home. We have a place of safety. There will be no want nor cold here, no fear nor terror in the night, I trust.

Oh, my Husband, I pray that we may never have to move again, nor fly like hunted animals from our foes. Whatever you give us, give us peace. Give us a chance to stay and live as others live, with long uninterrupted days for household tasks, the talk of happy children laughing at their play on the grass under the trees, afternoons of calm content, evenings spent by the fireside in sweet companionship—all of us together.

I AM ONLY A WOMAN. I am but one of many who followed their menfolk from the settled towns and the civilization of the east, across raw frontiers toward the setting sun, and into the wilderness. We have followed our men where there were no roads. We have cooked with the smoke of campfires in our eyes and taste of ashes in the food, and by those smoldering fires we have dried out garments sodden with rain. We have nursed the sick on straw pallets in the forest, ill with the fevers of the river bottoms and the moors. We are only women, and you do not know what we have suffered, because you were so often away.

Oh, my Husband, I thank you for all that you have done for us, and for all that you intended to do. Now let us remain here and enjoy the quiet ways. Let there be no more trouble. Let there be peace with all men.

God, I thank thee for this beautiful home, this mansion of my dreams. I thank thee for the children, for the companionship of thy people, for this city built up by willing hands in the wilderness, and for the goodly land that gives us our daily bread. Oh, God, I thank thee! Amen.

II. THE MEMORIES OF YOUNG JOSEPH

(NOTE: In his later years, President Joseph Smith dictated his Memoirs to his son, Israel A. Smith, now President of the Church. These were published in the Saints' Herald, and the following is quoted from Volume 82, page 110, January 22, 1935.)

FATHER'S HOME in Nauvoo [The Homestead] was generally overrun with visitors. There was scarcely a Sunday in ordinary weather that the house and yard were not crowded—the yard with teams and the house with callers. This made a great deal of bustle and confusion, and also a heavy burden of added toil for Mother and unnecessary expense for Father. About 1842, a new and larger house was built for us. After it was finished and we had moved into it, some friends suggested that it should be expanded into a hotel, large enough to accommodate the usual crowds of visitors and an adequate force of domestic helpers as well.

Deciding to do this, Father proceeded to build quite an extensive addition running out from the south wing toward the east. On the ground floor this included a large dining room and a suitable kitchen, with a basement below in which the cooking range was placed and a cellar for provisions. Over the dining room and kitchen was a series of bedrooms, six single ones ranging along the north side and four double ones with connecting halls on the south side.

These rooms, with those already existing, made the house seem a very large one for that period and locality. In going back to it in after years, however, I found that it really was not large. The dining room, which was also used as a ballroom in those old days, was really quite small—barely large enough for four sets of dancers in the old-fashioned square dances—and the ceiling, like those above stairs, was low compared to those of more modern buildings.

At any rate, it seemed spacious then, and a sign was put out giving it the dignified name of "The Nauvoo Mansion," a house destined to become quite famous and interesting in its day. Mother was to be installed as landlady, and soon made a trip to St. Louis for the purpose of securing such furniture, curtains, bed linen, table napery, dishes, and utensils as were needed to properly equip and operate a hostelry of its kind.

III. ADDITIONAL NOTES

For its historical significance and architectural beauty, the Mansion House is the most important of the historic church properties at Nauvoo today. Every bit of information about it is of interest. To the reader of 1949, it is amazing and disappointing that there is such a dearth of information. And yet, from the viewpoint of the years in Nauvoo from 1840 to 1844, it can be understood. The great interest then was in the Temple on the hill, which is completely gone; and in the Nauvoo House, which was to have been the permanent home of the Smith family and the meeting place for the steady stream of visitors coming to the city. Apparently the only reason the Mansion House was built was that its smaller structure could be more quickly completed, to be used until the larger building was ready. The reader imagines that the family of the prophet would have had little privacy or peace there. But then, circumstances always kept them at the mercy of the public, and family privacy was a blessing rarely known to them.

Emma Smith in later years.

In Timbers for the Temple (page 200), Elbert A. Smith quotes from Joseph Smith's Diary for August 31, 1843, "I commenced removing into the Nauvoo Mansion."

There is some interest about the name of the building. "Young Joseph" in his "Memoirs" said that a sign was put out giving it the name of "The Nauvoo Mansion."

Why this name was ever changed, and why and how it came to be called "The Mansion House," is not stated in the material at our command now. To some, "The Mansion House" is a name that seems tautological. However, in judging the words and acts of the people of another period, we should be fair and try to understand the mood, the feeling, and the circumstances of the times. Was this use of the name, "The Mansion House," unique? Apparently not. In the city of Stratford, Ontario, Canada, which has a number of picturesque and interesting old buildings, there is one that has lettered in stone high up on its façade the name, "The Mansion House." So, the name was used in at least one other instance. Information of other instances would be appreciated.

The importance of providing some kind of permanent and beautiful marker for this church historical property is something that can readily be understood by the reader, and especially by church members. Tourists from all over the nation, from north of the border in the provinces of Canada, and even from overseas, come here to see the properties. Crowds of people sometimes keep all available guides busy, and others will come to look with only a few minutes to stay. With no signs or markers, the hurried visitor goes away having gained but little information.

A few important facts clearly stated on a historical sign will give the visitor something to remember, even though the guides cannot reach him before he leaves. Moreover, some visitors come through early in the morning or late in the evening, look briefly and continue on their way. A good sign would help these people.

Wooden markers decay, paint peels away, and the effect is poor. Permanent bronze markers, set in heavy granite slabs, have been found very satisfactory in other parts of the country. President Israel A. Smith is anxious to have such permanent markers installed.

The Nauvoo Temple

THE AUTHORITY TO BUILD

THE REVELATION of January 19, 1841, gave the church the command to build the Temple. The plans were to be given to Joseph Smith. Apparently the matter had been under consideration, and the one best and most obvious location had already been selected.

There was a note of urgency in the command to hasten the construction: "I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me," and yet no definite date was set for its completion (Doctrine and Covenants 107).

Work on the foundation was soon under way to make ready for the laying of the cornerstones in the spring. "Young Joseph," son of the Prophet, later wrote his memories of the early stages of construction:

I used frequently to be up and about the temple block, used to see the stones being brought in on great carts drawn by oxen, with the stones swinging under the axle of the great high, broad-tired wheels, usually two yoke of cattle drawing them. The stones came from a quarry in the north side of the city along the river bank, and some of them from down the river.—Journal of History, Volume III, pages 142, 143.

THE LAYING OF THE CORNERSTONES

Previous preparation having been made, the cornerstones of the Nauvoo Temple were laid on April 6, 1841, with appropriate and imposing ceremonies by and under the direction of the First Presidency.—Heman C. Smith, Church History, Volume 2, page 519.

So much for the bare historical record. There was a bit of pomp and ceremony included. The observant eyes of eight-year-old "Young Joseph" took in more colorful details to be recalled in later years:

I remember when the cornerstone was laid. The basement had been built and a rough floor laid preparatory to the assembling to witness the laying of the cornerstone, and I was on the platform with my father and the others. . . . The whole area of the building was covered, and all around it in the yard were members of the assembly standing and sitting upon benches and stones.—Journal of History, Volume III, page 143.

But one small boy could not see all that was happening, and a detailed account is found in the Times and Seasons for April 15, 1841. There were fourteen companies of the Nauvoo Legion, some in resplendent uniforms, marshaled to participate in the parade. A band met and accompanied them.

After the arrival of Lieut. General Smith, the ladies who had made a beautiful silk flag, drove up in a carriage to present it to the Legion. . . . During the time of the presentation, the band struck up a lively air, and another salute was fired from the artillery.—Journal of History, Volume III, pages 153, 154.

From the parade ground to the Temple, the procession took its way, some of the troops mounted, some on foot. At the Temple an oration more than an hour in length was delivered by President Sidney Rigdon, despite his recent illness. Then the First Presidency supervised the laying of the principal cornerstone at the southeast corner of the Temple, and President Joseph Smith prayed that the structure might soon be completed. The other three cornerstones were laid by representative church officers, the Legion returned to the parade ground where they were addressed by Major General John C. Bennett and by President Joseph Smith. This concluded the ceremonies.

DESCRIPTION OF THE TEMPLE

Descriptions of the Temple differ in some details, and we offer that by Heman C. Smith, Church Historian:

The Temple was built of gray limestone, 128 feet long, eighty-eight feet wide, sixty feet high, and to the dome of the tower 200 feet. It had thirty hewn pilasters costing $3,000 each. The whole cost of the building was $1,000,000.—Journal of History, Volume III, page 163.

The greatest building erected by the early church was never completed; it stood only seven years before it was burned, and in thirteen years a tornado blew down its ruins.

The Millennial Star for Monday, November 8, 1841, carried a detailed description of the temporary baptismal font in the basement, a model for the permanent font later installed:

The baptismal font is situated in the center of the basement room, under the main hall of the temple. It is constructed of pine timber, and put together of staves tongued and grooved, oval shaped, sixteen feet long east and west, and twelve feet wide, seven feet high from the foundation, the basin four feet deep. The molding of the cap and base are formed of beautiful carved work in antique style; the sides are finished with panel work; a flight of stairs in the north and the south leading up and down into the basins, guarded by side railing.

The font stands upon twelve oxen, four on each side and two at each end, their head, shoulders, and forelegs projecting out from under the font; they are carved out of pine plank, glued together, and copied after the most beautiful five year old steer that could be found in the country, and they are an excellent likeness of the original; the horns were geometrically formed after the most perfect horn that could be procured.

The oxen and ornamental moldings of the font were carved by Elder Elijah Fordham from the city of New York, which occupied eight months of time. The font was enclosed by a temporary frame building sided up with split oak clap boards, with a roof of the same material, and so low that the timbers of the first story were laid above it. The water was supplied from a well thirty feet deep in the east end of the basement.

This font was built for the baptisms for the dead until the temple shall be finished, when a more durable one will supply its place.—Church History, Volume 2, pages 551, 552.

Of the baptismal ceremonies, "Young Joseph" Smith later wrote:

I remember witnessing baptismal ceremonies in the font, seeing the candidates march up one side of the stairs on the east to the font, and passing from the font down the stairs on the west side of the font.—Journal of History, Volume III, page 143.

THE GREAT REJECTION

In the revelation of 1841, the people were given "a sufficient time" to finish the Temple. In 1844 at the death of Joseph Smith it was still incomplete, and the people came under the condemnation of which they were warned "ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead" (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 11).

This one point in the revelation puts great importance on the fact that the Temple at Nauvoo was never finished. In 1897, President Joseph Smith wrote at Lamoni, Iowa:

I knew of the work being done on the temple at that place from the time it began until the building was burned in 1848. It was not finished. I know, too, that it was a matter of common talk among the members of the church that changes were made in the designs, after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith; and that those portions that were completed so as to be occupied were not in accordance with the original plans.—Journal of History, Volume III, page 161.

Alexander Smith, brother of Joseph, made a similar statement in the same year:

The auditorium or main meeting room was temporarily finished; the seats and pulpit were only temporary. In the upper auditorium, the plastering was not done, the floor—only the rough boards intended for the lining—was laid, and from this floor upward the stairs, except in the tower or circular main stairs, were also temporary. . . . To my knowledge the temple was never finished, and those who have been led to believe it was have been deceived.—Ibid., page 162.

THE TEMPLE IN 1846

Two years after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, a description of the Nauvoo Temple was written by a visitor, Charles Lanman (July, 1846), which was published in Appleton's Literary Miscellany in 1847. He gave the name of the architect as "Weeks." He wrote:

It is principally after the Roman style of architecture, somewhat intermixed with Grecian and Egyptian. It has a portico with three Roman archways. It is surrounded with pilasters; at the base of

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Nauvoo and Her Mission Today

Missionary experiences in guide activities.

By CECIL R. ETTINGER

WHEN MY WIFE and I first arrived in Nauvoo after receiving general church appointment, we sensed some of the hallowedness and grandeur that was once a part of the City of Joseph. Since that day in February, 1948, we have experienced some of the joy, sorrow, sacredness, and even turbulence that characterized this city a century ago.

Often the question has been asked, "Doesn't it become monotonous to take people through the properties time after time, day after day?" Yet each time I approach the graves of Joseph, Hyrum, and Emma, a feeling of reverence permeates my being, and the knowledge of the devotion they held for the cause of Christ gives me an added incentive to go forward in this great cause.

Until two decades ago the properties in Nauvoo were allowed to fall into disrepair, but since that time effort and money have been consecrated to the renewing of this fitting monument to those who gave their lives for the cause they held in their trust. Where stood weeds and brambles and rotting timbers now stand hedge and shrubs and stalwart buildings to declare to the world through history that the fullness of the gospel is still on the earth to lead men to salvation. Nauvoo can never be a major missionary endeavor of the church, but it can be a powerful publicity factor. Few missionaries can convert a person to the gospel in one sermon, which is about the amount of time we can spend with the visitors who come here. However, thousands of people each year come to Nauvoo who would never go near a church building. If we can give them a slight knowledge and a feeling of good will, perhaps at some future date one of our missionaries will be preaching in their home towns, and they will think, "I was at Nauvoo, and enjoyed myself. Perhaps I will go and hear what this fellow has to say." If we can accomplish that, we will be furthering the mission of the church.

IT IS THE PURPOSE of the guides at the historic church properties to perform an effective ministry to all people who come here. In striving toward this goal, three cardinal points have been set up. First, we try to give to the visitors some of the history of Nauvoo and its part in the building of a nation; second, we try to tell them some of the basic concepts in the restoration of the fullness of the gospel through the authority of Christ; and third, by stating our beliefs rather than our disbeliefs, we attempt to give a clear picture of the latter day apostasy of the dissenting factors of the church. This is an enormous task to accomplish in the time we spend with the visitors to the properties, but this is Nauvoo's mission.

AS VARIED as the history of Nauvoo is that of the tourists who stop here and our experiences with them. People from all parts of the world and from all walks of life compose the ever-increasing audiences who hear the gospel story interwoven through history. All do not manifest the same degree of interest, but it is hoped that each receives a portion of what Nauvoo has to offer. As different as the personality and background of each individual are the questions and interest they have. Some come here in search of truth, others come to be entertained, still others come with no particular purpose whatsoever, but leave with some information and a better appreciation of the latter day work. On one occasion I went over to the grave enclosure to contact a group of people who had gathered there. As I arrived, I heard one of the party telling how Joseph Smith had hidden runaway slaves in a tunnel that connected the Mansion House and the Homestead. Continuing, he said that Nauvoo was not a city but a state, and it was the plan of Joseph Smith that he be made governor of the state and eventually the president of the United States. Approaching the situation in the best way I knew how, I inquired as to the accuracy of his information. During the previous week a new water line had been laid along Main Street between the Mansion House and the Homestead at a depth of eight feet; if any tunnel had connected the two buildings, evidence of it would have been discovered. Also the charter for the city of Nauvoo was granted by the state of Illinois of which it was a part. Nauvoo was never intended to be a state. Joseph Smith did allow his name to be placed on the Independent ticket as a candidate for president of the United States, but doubtless as a protest against the platforms of the leading candidates of the day. Faced with this, the gentleman admitted the people with him were visitors from another state, and he was trying to entertain them. I might add that his guests were impressed with the guide story, as we took them through the buildings, and they were much more satisfied with accurate information than with the sensational tale they had heard before.

It is unfortunate that some of our own people have been guilty of this. In their eagerness to tell the gospel story, they have sometimes interrupted us with inaccurate information which we have had to correct. This is embarrassing and detracts from the ministry we are able to give to nonmembers. There are rich spiritual blessings to be had at Nauvoo if we only avail ourselves of them.

NAUVOO TO QUINCY

Over this modern bridge and along this concrete highway, the modern traveler can traverse in a few minutes the route that Joseph Smith and his family took slowly and with difficulty on May 9 and 10, 1839. Gently the waters of the broad Mississippi wash these peaceful shores today. Joseph left behind him the enemies of his people, men who sought his life.

On another occasion a man came to the properties, introducing himself as an author who wanted to write an accurate account of Nauvoo. I spent the major portion of a day with him, giving him information, showing him documents, and discussing in general the history of Nauvoo. He was elated as he departed, assuring me that he was going to turn out a work of art. Several days later he returned to the properties. As I greeted him, he began to tell me a host of malicious lies. I asked him if he knew that those stories were false, and he answered, "Yes, but I am writing my book to make a living, and these things will make my book sell." I felt utterly defeated, but fortunately his book has never made an appearance to the reading public.

MOST OF OUR EXPERIENCES here are more uplifting, however, than those we have just recounted. As a man tries humbly to serve the Master, a strength from above often augments his own meager efforts. Such has been the enjoyment of those who minister at the historic church properties. On one Saturday evening, I was particularly tired as I had been talking most of the day. There had been a great number of visitors, and I was just leaving for supper when another car drove up. The desire to serve momentarily left me, and I sincerely wished they would not stop. The moment they did, however, I felt impressed that the visit would be a profitable one. From the time of our first greeting, the Spirit that accompanied us was ample evidence of the genuineness of that first impression. In addition to the guide story, I was led to discuss as a result of their questions many of the major concerns of the Restoration. As we continued to talk, all thoughts of fatigue or physical deficiency left me, and the Spirit of God prompted my actions and speech so that as I tried to teach, many things I had been wondering about in the past became clear to me. At the point of parting, the gratitude of that young couple made my heart soar, for we were sharing in the truths of eternity. They said they were students of the Bible, and that I had given them a revelation of Christ such as they had never experienced before. I knew that if I had given them a revelation of Christ, it was effective only inasmuch as the witnessing Spirit had revealed Christ through me. The next day I wrote to the city pastor in Detroit concerning this couple. I have never heard as to the outcome of this experience in their lives, but I do know that my own life was enriched through the moments we spent together.

TOO OFTEN we speak of experiences as belonging to the past, but the continuing experience of right relationships and the sharing of these relationships today leads us to greater knowledge of the divine purpose. Yesterday a clinical psychologist came through the properties and became intensely interested in the psychological aspects of the Restoration Movement. He remarked that Joseph Smith must have been a great psychologist because of the driving force the Restoration received from the New Testament, but as we continued through the Homestead, he observed that Joseph Smith had to have more than psychology. He had the Spirit of God to direct him. Then his interest shifted from psychology to the history of the church and the truth it contained. The minutes flew by, and finally because of the urgency of time we had to terminate our discussion. Before he left he told me that he was sort of a spiritual vagabond. He was reared a Protestant but could never reconcile himself to some of the inconsistencies he had been brought up to believe. He thanked me for the hope of a personal and just God I had tried to present to him. As he left, I felt a yearning that the sense of rightness and truth which I felt so strongly within my being might be imparted to him. Human words can never fully express it, but the Spirit of God will bear witness to those who desire to know.

One of the marks of Divinity in the gospel is that each person is called to serve in the capacity with which he has been endowed. Everyone cannot perform the same service. Nauvoo has a mission to perform. It represents the church on the outer ring. To some people, Nauvoo is the only representative of the church with which they have contact. Beautiful grounds, ageless buildings, and representative guides can present the gospel story to some who could be contacted in no other way.

Jesus, during his ministry here on earth, emphasized the building of the kingdom of God. Nauvoo was an attempt in this direction, but dissensions within and prejudices without the church proved her downfall. Nauvoo is a page out of the past, but the gospel of Christ that inspired the people to build this great city is being perpetuated by the church today, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—The city-wide Zion's League organization held its annual election of officers after the Campus preaching service on the evening of August 28. New officers are: Kenneth Green from Slover Park, president; Bob Sparks from Liberty Street, vice-president; Carol Hodges of Walnut Park, secretary; and Oliver Houston, Jr., of Slover Park, treasurer. The cabinet members will be appointed by the president and will be announced later.

On Monday evening, August 29, at the Stone Church, the Conference in Zion approved the following city-wide officers: F. Carl Mesle, director of young people; C. Cecil Talcott, director of religious education; Miss Aleta Runkle, director of music; Mrs. Katherine Wilson, leader of women; Mrs. Frances Benner, chairman of Daughters of Zion; W. E. Wakeman, missionary co-ordinator.

Pastor Charles Graham announces the following officers for the city-wide women's organization: Mrs. G. B. Wilson, city-wide leader; Mrs. Paul Kelsey, associate leader; Mrs. Preston Hubble, friendly visiting chairman; Mrs. John Darling, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. Lawrence Jones, cradle roll chairman; Mrs. Melvin Benner, Daughters of Zion chairman.

Another six-week course in the Aaronic priesthood school started Tuesday evening, September 6, to continue weekly until October 11. The theme for this unit is "Citizenship Responsibility in Zion." Instructors are Bishop Walter N. Johnson, Bishop L. W. Kohlman, Bishop Harold Cackler, Elder Lloyd Bland, and Elder Lyndon Waggoner.

About 200 Zion's Leaguers were registered for the Labor Day week-end retreat held at Gardner Lake near Excelsior Springs, Missouri. The theme was "Speak to the Children of Zion That They Go Forward," and besides a fine corps of about twenty-four young people and their leaders, there were also present Bishop Wayne Updike, Pastor Charles Graham, Albert Scherer, Leonard Lea, Richard Carter, Fred Epperson, and Marion Talcott who led discussions and gave lectures.

The first practice of the Independence Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Franklyn Weddle was held Tuesday evening, September 6. This is sponsored by the Community Music Association and has among its members many church people.

At a Stone Church business meeting Glaude Smith was approved as pastor, with L. F. P. Curry and Howard Harder as his associates. Marion Talcott will continue as director of religious education and Mrs. May Worth was chosen as women's leader. A planning committee was appointed by Brother Smith in preparation for the erection of the new educational unit for the Stone Church. This committee consists of L. F. P. Curry, John Luff, and Thomas B. Franklin.

Guests at the Stone Church Sunday, September 4, included many of the new class of nurses at the Sanitarium and several visitors from the Hawaiian Islands, some of whom are en route to Graceland College.

MUSCATINE, IOWA.—On August 31, 1949, the branch business meeting was held with District President Lyle Woodstock present. On September 4, eight new members were baptized and confirmed before the Communion service. Those baptized were Loren Lyle Mulenburg and his wife, Alvina Amanda; three of their five children: Loren Ronald, Janette Ilien, and Patricia Ruth; Dorothy Mae Hines; Robert Marion Hines; and Wilma Maxine Hisford.—Reported by V. L. Hisford.

Kirtland Temple

The great shrine of the Restoration, an example of architectural beauty and sacrificial devotion, is owned and maintained by the church at Kirtland, Ohio.

THE COMMANDMENT TO BUILD

A commandment I give unto you, that ye shall commence a work of laying out and preparing a beginning and foundation of the city of the stake of Zion, here in the land of Kirtland, beginning at my house; and, behold, it must be done according to the pattern which I have given unto you. . . . And ye shall not suffer any unclean thing to come unto it; and my glory shall be there.—Doctrine and Covenants 91: 1, 2. A revelation given May, 1833.

Guides and missionaries of the church inform visitors to Kirtland, "Here is the only temple in the world, still existing and still in the service for which it was intended, that was built in obedience to a specific and definite commandment from the Lord." There were others built by divine commandment, but they have been destroyed. There are others built by human direction, and they have no such divine authority back of them.

THE ERECTION OF THE BUILDING

From the time the revelation was given there was no relaxation of the effort to bring it to completion, though the people were poor and found it difficult to provide the means and to spare the time for labor on the project.

The building committee consisted of three persons: Hyrum Smith, brother of Joseph; Jared Carter, and Reynolds Cahoon.

The commandment to build had been received in May, 1833. By July 23, the work had progressed far enough that the cornerstones were laid. Throughout the work, enemies in the vicinity tried to discourage the builders.

In 1834, the troubles of the church people in Missouri had become extremely serious, and Joseph Smith and others had to leave the work on the Temple to go to Jackson County and assist the members there. Joseph had chosen the position of foreman in the quarry where the stone was being obtained for the walls of the Temple.

When Joseph had to leave, "Sidney Rigdon was left in charge of the work at Kirtland, and it was to his faith and confidence that the success of the work was in large manner attributed."—Heman C. Smith, Journal of History, Volume II, page 411.

TOIL AND SACRIFICE

Heber C. Kimball returned from Missouri to Kirtland on July 26, 1834, and wrote the following account of the work on the Temple:

At this time the brethren were laboring night and day building the house of the Lord. Our women were engaged in spinning and knitting in order to clothe those who were laboring at the building, and the Lord only knows the scenes of poverty, tribulation, and distress which we passed through in order to accomplish this thing. . . . Elder Rigdon . . .

Looking at the suffering and poverty of the church, frequently used to go upon the walls of the building both by night and day and frequently wetting the walls with his tears, crying aloud to the Almighty to send means whereby we might accomplish the building. After we returned from our journey to the West, the whole church united in this undertaking, and every man lent a helping hand. Those who had no teams went to work in the stone quarry and prepared the stones for drawing to the house. President Joseph Smith, Jr., being our foreman in the quarry; the Presidency, high priests, and elders all alike assisting. Those who had teams assisted in drawing the stone to the house. These all laboring one day in the week brought as many stones to the house as supplied the masons through the whole week. We continued in this manner until the walls of the house were reared.—Journal of History, Volume II, pages 411, 413.

DESCRIPTION OF THE BUILDING

This historic building stands on elevated ground, south of the east fork of the Chagrin River, about three miles southeast of Willoughby, Ohio, and nine miles southwest of Painesville, and about six miles in direct line from Lake Erie.

The building is of stone, plastered without and within. It is three stories high, exclusive of the basement. The first and second stories are auditoriums, each fifty-five by sixty-five feet on the inside, exclusive of the vestibule on the east end, through which is the entrance to the building, in which are the stairways.

The lower room was to be dedicated for sacrament offerings, and for preaching, and for fasting, and praying, and the offering up of most holy desires unto the Lord.

The second room was to be dedicated for the school of the apostles.

In each of these rooms were eight pulpits, four in each end, one above the other. Those in the west end were intended for the Melchisedec priesthood, and those in the east end for the Aaronic priesthood.

The third story is divided into small rooms.

The outside walls are about two feet thick. The outside of the building is fifty-nine by seventy-nine feet.—Heman C. Smith, Church History, Volume 2, pages 33, 34.

THE DAY OF DEDICATION

Kirtland, Ohio, March 27, 1836. Previous notice having been given, the Church of the Latter Day Saints met this day in the house of the Lord to dedicate it to him. The congregation began to assemble before eight o'clock a.m. and thronged the doors until nine, when the Presidents of the church, who assisted in seating the congregation, were reluctantly compelled to order the doorkeepers to close the doors; every seat and aisle was crowded. One thousand persons were now silently and solemnly waiting to hear the word of the Lord from the mouth of his servants in the sacred desk. President S. Rigdon began the services of the day by reading the ninety-sixth and twenty-fourth Psalms. An excellent choir of singers, led by M. C. Davis, sung the following hymn: Tune—Sterling. "Ere long the veil will rend in twain."

President Rigdon then, in an able, devout, and appropriate manner, addressed the throne of grace. The following hymn was then sung: Tune—Weymouth, "O happy souls who pray."

The speaker (S. Rigdon) selected the eighth chapter of Matthew, . . . confining himself more closely to the twentieth verse. He spoke two hours and a half in his usual forcible and logical manner . . . no one unacquainted with the manner of delivery and style of our speaker can from reading form any adequate idea of the powerful effect he is capable of producing in the minds of his hearers; and to say on this occasion he showed himself master of his subject and did well, would be doing him injustice; to say he acquitted himself with honor or did very well, would be detracting from his real merit; and to say that he did exceedingly well, would be only halting praise.

After closing his discourse he presented Joseph Smith, Jr., to the church, as a prophet and seer. The Presidents of the church, then all in their seats, acknowledged him as such by rising. The vote was unanimous in the affirmative.

The question was then put and carried, without a manifest dissenting sentiment, to each of the different grades or quorums of church officers respectively, and then to the congregation.

The morning services were closed with the singing of "Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation," to the tune, "Hosanna." The above is a part of the account published by the Messenger and Advocate, and reprinted in Church History, Volume 2, pages 34-45.

There was an intermission of only fifteen minutes, during which a few mothers left their seats to care for children, most of the congregation remaining in place.

The afternoon service began with the singing of "This Earth Was Once a Garden Place," to the tune, "Adamondi-Ahman." There was a ceremonial sustaining of the quorums in their offices, and an address, somewhat in the nature of instruction and admonition to the quorums and to the church by President Joseph Smith.

Then they sang, "How Pleased and Blest Was I," to the tune, "Dalton."

The prayer of dedication by Joseph was a sustained spiritual effort that reached a climax of power and faith, touching the sufferings, the hopes, and the trust of the church in final triumph. At the conclusion of the prayer the congregation sang, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning," to the tune, "Hosanna."

The eucharist was served, and there were testimonies from a number of the leaders of the church. Joseph blessed the congregation, and the service was finished a little after four o'clock.

Many rich spiritual experiences were received at that time and in the following days, for which there is not sufficient space to relate at this time.

Missionary Sermon Studies

By F. HENRY EDWARDS

Here are helpful foundation materials for fifty sermon topics chosen from among the fundamental doctrinal themes of our church faith and theology. They do not in any sense prescribe the character of the sermon nor limit the preacher. They make available to him, in most convenient form, the kind of texts and leading thoughts that he will need. This new revised edition is improved in many ways.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The House of the Lord By RAY ASHENHURST

INTEREST in historic Kirtland Temple varies among the tourists from those who slow down as they pass on State Highway 306 and peer curiously out and up from car windows to witness the height of the structure to those who enter its old doors and touch almost reverently the walls, pews, and other furnishings. The building is located about sixty feet west of the highway, which highway in 1833 was the road used for hauling sandstone for the walls from a distance of approximately two miles south of the building site.

Local visitors (that is, from Ohio) often bring friends to see this landmark of pioneer days. This is especially true of people from Cleveland, a large industrial city twenty-two miles west of Kirtland. A few travelers from far distant places also have listed this spot as a "must" in their journey through the United States. A woman from India, in her native dress, listened attentively to all information given about it. Swedish Mormon elders spoke quickly in their native tongue to bring out even more through their interpreter. Quite often Protestant missionaries of our own land, having spent years in China or India, have deemed it worth-while to check on the history of this edifice. Visitors have registered addresses from all parts of the earth including Canada, French Indo-China, Hawaii, South Africa, Sweden, Norway, Mexico, Switzerland, Australia, Holland, and various other countries. In scanning church affiliations registered, during a three month period I found that Methodists were the greatest in number, Mormons were next; then Presbyterians, Reorganized Latter Day Saints (our own people), Lutherans, and Catholics, in that order. There is a great variety of faiths registered. Unusual registrants were Bahai, Greek Catholic, and Jewish. Most unusual was one "up to the minute" young Mormon. Noticing a group of Reorganized Latter Day Saints registering "RLDS" for church affiliation, he stepped up and registered his affiliation as "Real Latter Day Saint."

From June through September of 1947, there were over 5,500 registered visitors. Quite a number do not register. The present Temple minister, Elder Bill Williams, tells that from December through July (1949) over 3,000 registered. This period ends during the busy visiting season.

Many Saints have shown visiting strangers through Kirtland Temple since 1880. Gomer T. Griffiths is among the number and says that he has shown thousands its interior. There are those Saints of the community today who often assist the Temple minister in the dissemination of historical facts. Such help is offered especially on busy Sunday afternoons. It is a real pleasure to tell the story to an interested stranger.

THE BUILDING has a distinctive appearance as one stands and looks at it from top to bottom. Gomer Griffiths tells that the stone posts just out from each front corner were to keep ox carts and other vehicles from backing up against the corner. The height is perhaps deceiving. The ball on top of the tower is about 110 feet from the ground. To the north from the tower Lake Erie may be seen when the atmosphere is clear. The lake is just six miles distant—a nice walk for the Saints when this majestic edifice was begun in July, 1833. At the time it was dedicated on March 27, 1836, the metropolis of Cleveland was barely in its infancy.

Today members of the living body that erected this House of the Lord more than a century ago are aware of the Lord's command through Joseph to erect a house in his name. This information is usually accepted quietly and without comment when given to the visiting stranger. Evidences of sacrificial love for a cause is to be seen even yet in broken chips of china in the cement which still clings to the outer wall of sandstone, a wall that is easily two feet thick. Devotion surely was responsible also for the careful and simple beautifying of the interior. Notable is the fluting on pillars and window casings. These deep grooves were made by a rounded blade in a wooden plane with an ox team serving for power.

Amazement is often expressed by the visitor on finding two auditoriums, one immediately above the other, of exactly the same shape and dimensions. The third level is an attic floor, with five long classrooms. Here it is appropriate to mention to the visitors that emphasis was placed by the builders upon education, as evidenced in the divine purpose of the second and third floors. Since "School of the Prophets" is a rather meaningless term to a stranger, it is perhaps wiser to refer to it as a school in which the men of the priesthood furthered their learning, but it was not a seminary.

The first auditorium was primarily for worship; it was also used for conferences, at which time the presiding members of the priesthood occupied the beautiful pulpits in the center at either end of the room. The information, "Conferences are not now held here, but at our headquarters in Independence, Missouri," often brings the question, "But I thought your headquarters were in Salt Lake City." This provides a natural opportunity to straighten out a few simple facts of history relating to the apostasy under Brigham Young's leadership.

QUITE VARIED are the discussions and questions concerning church doctrine and organization after visitors view the two groups of pulpits and especially the Melchisedec priesthood pulpits on the first floor at the west end of the room, and the Aaronic on the east. There are four tiers of pulpits in each group with places for three men in each tier. Leading quorums of the priesthood are represented in the pulpits, the lowest level of the four tiers being in the form of a long table with drop leaves in front. This large table is adequate for serving the Communion and was intended for that purpose. Here again is an opportunity to speak simply of the Lord's Supper, for there are visitors who had been led to believe that Latter Day Saints are non-Christian.

The representation of the two priesthoods in the pulpits, although the belief and architecture is unique with us, is more in harmony with the belief of the average Christian than he at first thinks. That man was created with both body and spirit is quite widely accepted among Christians. However, very few people have considered the need for the total ministry which a loving Father would consider and a ministry that would be in balance with man's creation. A sense of responsibility is felt as one explains that the functions of these two priesthoods include the temporal and spiritual ministry to the people, who are by nature dual creatures and have need of such ministry. Good Latter Day Saints as they "reconsider" the two orders of priesthood might also think of the need for a total worship of our Father who is to be worshiped both temporally and spiritually.

QUESTIONS AMONG VISITORS are multitudinous, and there is always the "new" question which stimulates thought in the mind of the temple minister. As Mormons from Utah view the pulpits, the most usual question noted is "Where did the Savior appear?" This experience

A New Year of Opportunity

By PAULINE J. ARNSON

HAPPY NEW YEAR! These are strange words at this time, but the days will soon be here for church members to get into the stride of work in the branch. Often in the past, summer was a period without formal meetings when some folks really took a vacation from all church-going. Some minds even stopped thinking about the work and responsibility of keeping alive the church which they shared with others during the winter. But now—and this may be a sign of richer and fuller appreciation of the gospel—the summer often affords an opportunity for those who avail themselves of the reunions and youth meetings to fill their minds and souls with the good things of the kingdom so that they will have a reservoir of strength for the year's work ahead. Reports coming to the Center Place ever since the first reunion in June indicate that large numbers of Saints have taken advantage of these opportunities of fellowship and of the outstanding programs offered.

Every woman who has the responsibility of leadership in a woman's group is concerned about a program for the year. She needs to know what theme to emphasize. It is with these questions in mind that we make the following suggestions. This year women's departments in all branches will have as their theme, "Witnessing for Christ," adapting this subject to their own fields of interest. A witness is a person who attests to a fact and has a personal knowledge of that to which he desires to bear witness. We must have a personal testimony. This thought suggests a starting point for the year's work.

We find Paul speaking to the Philippian saints in this way, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Philippians 2: 5), or in other words, "Christ's Way—My Way." Christ's way is found in the gospel. Leaders should attempt to outline their programs and choose their themes in harmony with this way. The women should familiarize themselves with the program of their own particular department and as far as possible learn what is expected of them so that they can function properly. A discussion of the general goals of the church and of the department as found in the Handbook for the Work of the Women can be used as source material. As a result of this first lesson, each woman should feel the sacredness of the task and commit herself to its accomplishment.

WHEN A PERSON believes in a cause and has joy in it, he desires to share it with others, so the next question is "How shall I tell it [the gospel] most effectively?" Better witnessing is the result of a better method of telling the story, and many good ideas and materials for lessons can be found in Apostle D. T. Williams' booklet Each One Win One. It can be purchased from Herald House for fifty cents. Brother Harold Cackler, Bishop in Zion, emphasized this point at reunion. The church of Jesus Christ meets all the needs of the human family. In every situation He has provided ordinances, sacraments, and blessings for the benefit of his children when they have need of them. How much more beautiful and full of meaning is this approach to interest a nonmember in the gifts of the gospel than some we have used.

When a salesman tries to sell his product, he must know about the organization and what it offers. The same is true of a church member. Our organization is a world-wide one; we should know its makeup, how it functions, and what it offers to its followers, so let's include a few lessons on "Contemporary Church Life." Some may say, "We know all that," but how many at a moment's notice can call off the names of the members of the Quorum of Twelve or the Bishopric? A few topics to present on this subject are: officers and leaders—both general and local—their duties and functions; the Center Place, its institutions and services rendered, the Sanitarium, Resthaven, Auditorium, Stone Church, Gardner Lake, et cetera; The Saints' Herald, official church publication, and other current available literature including tracts, Graceland College, and missions abroad, England and the Continent, Australia, South Seas and Hawaii.

Such a series will require extra work and the co-operation of the members and even the pastor, but if several people can discuss the data which they have found in past Heralds or through inquiry, the women will be better informed and qualified for their missionary effort.

THE GENERAL GOAL of women's work—building Zionite homes—must always be kept in mind. Several years ago in a quarterly series, Bishop H. L. Livingston defined this home and its characteristics. In a booklet, Building Latter Day Saint Family Life, prepared for the Aaronic priesthood, four phases of the Zionite home are discussed. These are: "How Shall We Build a Socially Responsible, A Morally Wholesome, an Economically Sound, and a Spiritually Adequate Home?" Women can use these outlines and discussions in classwork with profit. These are only a few subjects that would make up a good study program. In addition consider the many fine pamphlets which have already been used by some groups presenting homemaking helps, qualifications for leadership, suggestions to officers and their duties, and pointing out the importance of developing the spiritual qualities in the lives of the family.

In most cases a discussion of the work of the various officers and departments within the women's department is helpful. A well-organized women's department has certain officers to direct the work. All members should be informed about the requirements even though they may not work in all of the sections at one time. Those who have had past experience may profit by an up-to-date discussion and presentation. Old iron dutch ovens used by our grandmothers cooked perfect pot roasts, but so does a modern pressure cooker or the well in an electric range. Today's woman must know about the present vessel and methods available in order to keep ahead.

Another important subject to include is the friendly visiting program. Our people by nature are warm and friendly and have always visited. This is an important and long time phase of the women's work, but it cannot be accomplished in the ways of the past. People have streamlined their lives to such an extent that we must recognize little good can be done in a haphazard fashion of visiting across the back fence. We may prefer the old way, but we cannot make progress unless we move forward with the new. Ask the pastor and others to discuss this visiting question so that the effort put forth by the friendly visitors in your branch will be effective.

During the fall and next year new study material will be prepared and made available to the women of the church. Watch for the announcements. The study program as well as all activities planned for the coming year should be pointed toward raising the standard of our lives and

Helpful Suggestions

By MRS. J. HARRY PAXTON

AS HAS BEEN SUGGESTED after our busy summer with all of its inspiration and beauty and harvest, many of us have shelves and lockers full of fruit and vegetables for the winter, all testifying of God's loving care for our physical needs. In our more intimate association with our growing families during the vacation period, we are made conscious of new responsibilities and desires to more fully take up our share in making our homes, churches, and communities happier places in which to live.

As women of the church, we are convinced that this can best be done by sharing our experiences with those of like faith, ideals, and goals.

Our Women's Department of the church probably offers a broader field of activities and interests than any other women's organization. For this reason we should be able to attract every woman in our own church and also nonmember friends who could share in our social activities and beneficial programs.

Our first job is to plan a program of work, study, and play that will meet the needs of all. These must all be kept on a high level. Small groups will find that outside friends are always glad to help if cordially invited to do so. Merchants, teachers, doctors, musicians, artists, and many others will be glad to give special talks dealing with their particular fields.

We must contact every woman in our group and help her find her talents and use them. Anyone can pre-actions so that we shall be fitted to witness. The quality of teaching by the leaders throughout the summer should bring results in the lives of the membership. The Lord has blessed us with new vision and determination to press forward; with his continued help and our diligence, this year can be the best in our history.

pare a short devotional if she is asked in advance.

In classwork, even though the number is small, two classes can be arranged for. Younger women are interested in how to rear their families, how to make their homes more attractive, how to budget their time and finance so that there will be leisure for activities outside the home. Mothers whose children are grown will want other types of study but should not stand in the way of those whose interests are different.

After we have planned our year's activities to best meet our needs, we must try to reach all women in the branch. This can be done only through personal contact. They must feel they are wanted and needed, and that there is something they need which we can help them attain.

A social call at the home of those who are not in the habit of attending regularly, then a phone call or a postal card as a reminder and a repeat when necessary is about all that is required to have a good crowd. I know one group that tripled its attendance by this method in three months. A luncheon or tea with a hearty word of welcome and an invitation to come back will start the season right.

When a need is felt for financial help from the women's group, let us make our money-raising projects social as well as practical. This opens a wide field for service. Many times there are women who can use their talents in this way and be assured that they are rendering a needed service. The late President Frederick M. Smith often reminded us that all services are equal in the sight of God. Let us always have beauty and order in our services and serving. This cannot be stressed too strongly as it leads to a higher type of life and spirituality.

Three Graves in Old Nauvoo

By LUCILE ESGAR LEA

IT MAY NOT BE HOLY GROUND, but as we sat upon the lawn in front of the Homestead looking across the placid expanse of the Mississippi, I had the feeling that I was in the presence of something greater than one meets in the ordinary course of life, even in church work.

On most days now there is little to be heard upon that shore but the ripple of the water. In imagination, I turned back the pages of the years to the time when Joseph and Emma lived, with their young family, behind the stout log walls of the Homestead. I wondered if perhaps there were not occasions when they spent a few quiet hours in front of their home—the first one they had occupied peacefully for so long a time. I wondered if, as they looked across the water to the distant Iowa shore, they were glad the river was there to separate them from all the fears and sorrows that had driven them to this place.

UP ON THE HILL TODAY, the new Nauvoo works and lives as any small, industrious Illinois town. Down below, by the water's edge, it is different. Grass has covered many of the streets where once the traffic of a thriving city flowed. A few of the buildings have been preserved; but there are many ragged fence rows and empty, tumbling foundations as reminders of the neat, cheerful homes lovingly built and tended by a people who found here a brief respite from the life of persecution and flight which had been their lot since they had set out to follow their hopes of a Zion.

Peace and quiet rest like a benediction upon the faith and hopes of those who once lived and now lie buried there. I am glad it is peaceful now—that place where, in a small enclosure, three tablets of stone tell the tourist and the pilgrim that at last Joseph and Emma and Hyrum may now rest without fear.

I am glad, too, that the town of shops and stores keeps its distance up there on the hill and allows the shadows of the old streets and yards to preserve the silence they have kept so long. It is as if the place needed no more excitement, so much it had to bear during those days more than one hundred years ago.

Lucile Esgar Lea comes from a family long prominent in church work and affairs. She grew up in the country and developed a love of natural beauty, flowers, birds, the orchard about her home, and long hikes through the woods. She was also fortunate in living near Independence and attended the city schools. A graduate of Warrensburg State Teachers' College as an English major, and, like some other members of her family, a lover of good music, she uses her beautiful contralto voice in church work and is a soloist often in demand for church programs and weddings. For several years she conducted a successful children's choir. Professionally, she is a teacher. For years she has been a member of the Stone Church congregation and its choir, the Independence Music Club, and the Messiah Chorus. Since her marriage last year she has lived in west-side Independence and is serving with her husband (Leonard Lea) at the beautiful new Englewood church.

The trees seem old and willing to rest like aged folk, gently rocking and enjoying the quiet coolness of the summer breeze crossing the river.

SOME MAY SAY the place is dead, that there is something mournful about it—the shadow of the hand of death upon it, a sad reminder of a shattered dream. But to me, those who lived and hoped, who toiled and wrought in this place, only to be despoiled and driven out, those brave men and women who built and loved their homes are not dead. Their dreams live in the white mist that comes up from the river in the stillness of a moonlit night, their voices are heard again in the soft sighing of the wind in the trees. In their memories, this is a place of many homes, and the Temple still rises majestic and beautiful at the crest of the hill.

We leaned on the fence that protects the soil about the three graves. What of those who lie buried there? There is Joseph, the Prophet, and his brother, Hyrum, on his left. Throughout a brief life, the young seer had cherished this dream of Zion—this dream which was a divine assurance and a constant inspiration to endure even the bitterest of opposition rather than to forsake the cause he knew to be true. When hatred and persecution began to threaten, even in beautiful Nauvoo, some sought to accuse them of evading their enemies. There was no cowardice in the two men who, knowing it would be their last journey on this earth, went to Carthage on that June day in 1844.

EMMA, who was left to bury her husband secretly by night so that the mob might not do further violence, had the harder task of living on alone. We think of her in the third grave. We have read her story, and we marvel at the courage and faith of this young mother who, with her five children, remained steadfastly in her place while others fled. She reared those children to love and cherish the gospel their father had died for. She guarded the manuscript of the Inspired Version of the Bible.

And finally, she gave her oldest son to be president of the Reorganization, in spite of what the church had already cost her.

New Horizons

Rescued from the oblivion of their secret and unmarked graves, Joseph and Hyrum lie near each other, identified to the world, with no fear of disturbance. And Emma, who was at Joseph's side in life, rests there beside him now.

What could be more appropriate than for the church which honors their names to raise here a beautiful and permanent marker worthy of their lives, their works, and sacrifices?

each is carved a new moon, inverted, while the capital of each is formed of an uncouth head, supported by two hands holding a trumpet. Directly under the tower in front is this inscription, in golden letters: "The House of the Lord. Built by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Commenced April 6, 1841. Holiness to the Lord." In the basement room, which is paved with brick and converges to the center, is a baptismal font supported by twelve oxen, large as life, the whole executed in solid stone. Two stairways lead into it from opposite directions, while on either side are two rooms for the recording clerks, and, all around, no less than twelve preparation rooms besides. On the first floor are three pulpits and a place for the choir, and on either side eight Roman windows. Over the prophet's pulpit, or throne, is this inscription: "The Lord has beheld our sacrifice; come after us." Between the first and second floors are two long rooms, appropriated to the patriarchs, which are lighted with eight circular windows each. The room of the second floor, in every particular, is precisely like that of the first. Around the hall of a spacious attic are twelve small rooms, with circular windows and a massive lock on each door. At the two front corners of the edifice are two winding stairways, which meet at the base of the tower and lead to the summit—while the roof of the main building is arranged for a place of promenade; and the walls of the noble edifice vary from four to six feet in thickness.—Journal of History, Volume XVI, pages 246-248, April, 1923.

THE BURNING OF THE TEMPLE

The Millennial Star, Volume XI, page 46, reprinted an article from the Nauvoo Patriot describing the fire which destroyed the Temple on November 19, 1848:

Fire, when first discovered, was bursting out through the spire of the temple, near the small door that opened from the east side to the roof, on the main building. The fire was seen first about three o'clock in the morning, and not until it had taken such hold of the timbers and the roof as to make useless any effort to extinguish it. . . . It was a sight, too, full of mournful sublimity. . . . When the flames shot upward, the spire, the streets and the houses for nearly a mile distant were lighted up, so as to render even the smallest objects discernible. The glare of the vast torch, pointing skyward, indescribably contrasted with the universal gloom and darkness around it; and men looked on with faces sad, as if the crumbling ruins below were consuming all their hopes.

It was evidently the work of an incendiary. . . . To destroy a work of art, at once the most elegant in its construction and the most renowned in its celebrity of any in the whole west, would, we should think, require a mind of more than ordinary depravity.—Journal of History, Volume III, pages 225, 226.

FINAL DESTRUCTION

Gaunt and melancholy, the empty stone walls remained for another six years as a reminder of the tragic end of a great dream. Then, in 1854, a tornado raced through the city, struck the walls, and demolished them. Some of the carved stones were taken away for historical souvenirs. Most of the limestone blocks left in the city were used as building materials for other structures by a later people and may be seen in Nauvoo today.

The House of the Lord

seems to have great significance in their temple rites. The Christ is said to have appeared to Joseph and Oliver in the Melchisedec group of pulpits as the veil was lowered about them (the pulpits could be curtained off). Interest in the boxed-in pews is quite general, especially since the old, wide planks are much in evidence. The sound but somewhat rough flooring speaks of careful construction with the tools at hand. The fine cabinet work in the pulpit doors and intricate carving throughout are admired by carpenters and architects. Architects especially note the blending of architectures. The symbolism of this blending is quite appropriate, as all nations are to flow into His kingdom.

In the building there are five large windows having a distinct colonial appearance, one at each end of the auditoriums, and one in the front wall between floors shedding light into both upper and lower auditoriums. One of these large windows on the second floor is reputed to have been a favorite with John D. Rockefeller. It is said he even attempted to purchase it at one time. In the upper casing of this window is to be seen the clear carving of the swastika, which carving to the builders may not have even had a name at that time. The beauty of this window is in the arch, a vine and flower design carefully carved in wood with a beautifully carved wood keystone. The glass appears to be original, very wavy and imperfect. In fact there is much of this old glass on the second floor, even in the exterior, gothic style, windows. There are thirty-two Gothic windows in the structure. Almost thirty-five hundred panes of glass are required for the building.

For one who appreciates winding stairs, there is a treat in viewing the staircases in the narrow foyer at the front of the building. The steps are still very sound. As one climbs them, he is impressed with the fact that they have remained so for more than 100 years although made of lumber. There are thirty-three steps between each floor level, another reminder of Christ.

AND SO, as visitors come and go, we make a distinct effort to acquaint them with the church of our Lord. In this brief visit there is hardly time to make converts, but we do answer many sincere questions and hand out our best tract literature.

The Temple surroundings are more beautiful today than ever. In its modern setting the House of the Lord is still majestic. It has regular use, and each year it is the center of a reunion gathering. Tent city becomes a reality back of the Temple. In the tower is a huge bell, which calls the Saints to services, both in reunion and branch activities. Brother Gomer T. Griffiths superintended the installation of this bell about 1892.

Airplanes pass overhead not far above the old tower. An airline beacon light is located a few hundred yards south of the Temple, its beacon at night cutting across the tower on each swing. As one looks westward toward Missouri from this pinnacle, he may well be grateful for the heritage left by these builders, that God led them Zionward, and that Zion has not been moved out of her place.

Visits Aged Saints

We have experienced great joy in meeting with the aged Saints of the Eastern Montana District during the past summer.

Far out on the Montana desert near the little cow town of Jordan, thirty-five miles south of Ft. Peck Lake, we came to the home of Charles Wooden. Brother Wooden had worked for packing companies in Kansas City for forty years. He longed for the freedom of wide, open spaces, and when he was fifty-four years young he came west and took up a homestead in the breaks and bad lands along the Musselshell River in Central Montana. At the age of eighty-three, he preaches the gospel in the community hall after church school. His days are spent in study and preparation, his nights in "praise and prayer." He has just begun to live.

Far to the eastward, among the lakes and pine forests of Minnesota, we met a fine group of Saints of the Bemidji Branch. Elder George Day invited us to dine with him. Several nonmembers were dinner guests on this occasion.

Elder Day and wife spread a satisfying repast for the physical man and Elder Day, at the age of seventy-two, fed us with the bread of life from the table of God. "We feasted and were filled." How glorious a sunset in the land of lakes and forests!

At Grand Forks we stopped at the home of Melvin and Alice Jones to meet a new arrival. At the age of five days he had begun to assert himself. May the passing years improve his thinking as well as his methods of expression.

For three months this summer, aged Sister Charles Smith of Minot, North Dakota, a sister-in-law to former Church Historian Herman C. Smith, was confined to St. Joseph's Hospital. What joy beamed from her eyes as we administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. It was a holy experience. We spoke gently so as not to disturb the suffering ones about us and considered well our words so as to bring gladness.

At Williston, North Dakota, we visited Brother and Sister E. F. Mellor, ninety-five and eighty-five respectively. He is now unconscious most of the time, lingering just within the veil between sunset and eternal dawn. She cares for him by herself. What love! What patience! What faith! We bowed in prayer together and the joys of eternity encompassed us.

Before we left this humble home, Sister Mellor brought out a large bedspread together with other fine pieces of handwork she had made. She asked that they be sold and the proceeds used for spreading the gospel in the district. Anyone interested may write to Sister Lester Anderson, Manning, North Dakota.

At Glasgow, Montana, there lives an aged, crippled sister, Minnie M. Bickford, who has watched the decay of the once lively Glasgow Branch. She has been confined to a wheel chair for thirteen years, but she still places her trust in Jesus and looks forward to a brighter day.

At Hinsdale, Montana, we visited Sister Ella A. Richter, age eighty-three who lives alone. She had just returned from a visit with her son, Melvin, at Long Beach, California. Melvin had strategically obtained some recordings while she was at the piano, and Tommy Hentz, a grandson-in-law, accompanied on the violin. We were delighted and highly entertained as she played "Home on the Range" and "Red Wing."

These aged ones have a mission no other can fill. They minister to us.

Note of Thanks

I take this privilege of thanking all who were so kind to me during my illness. God has indeed been merciful. When I was administered to, I would get almost immediate relief from my extreme suffering. For this I thank my Heavenly Father and his servants. I am not entirely cured of my affliction (cancer), but I am able to live an almost normal life again. The doctors thought I could not live. I am grateful to all who remembered me and my wife in their prayers.

God Rules

As we contemplated moving to a farm in an area where there was no branch, I wondered how it would be to live away from the people and church I loved. Our local group was one of the finest, with a capable pastor, an active priesthood, and a devoted congregation. While meditating, I was given to know that nothing is impossible with God, and that we would not be entirely isolated.

It was not easy to move away, but soon after we established our new home, men of the church came to serve Communion and began organizing a group. I was so glad that I often found myself singing, "My God, How Wonderful Thou Art." Surely he is always willing to help us. He was here waiting for us when we came. Now we know that God rules. May we never disappoint him in our effort to serve.

Grateful for Church Privileges

I am indeed happy to be living in a town where there is an active branch of the church. After many years of isolation, I now feel that I must do all I can for the advancement of the work. During my years of isolation, I read the Scriptures and the Herald; this helped, but it does not compare with association with other members. Since making my home in Miami, (which move was advised by the Bishopric) I feel that I have been blessed spiritually, physically, and financially. I pray that God will give me still a few more years to repay him for these blessings.

Enjoys Letters in "Herald"

The Saints' Herald is a missionary to the scattered members. I enjoy it all and wish there were more of it. I get much help from the letters, and when I have read my Herolds, I pass them on to others.

When I was a young girl, I used to read a little church paper called The Canadian Messenger. I got more from the letters in it than the articles. Even isolated members can do something for the church by writing of their experiences.

I was baptized in 1902 by Elder F. Gregory. God has been good to me and helped me in times of trial. For this I am thankful.

DEATHS

FUSSELLMAN.—Augusta C., daughter of Hosea Sales and Polly Doyle Clemmons, was born August 23, 1876, at Celt, Missouri, and died August 22, 1949, at Blessing Hospital in Quincy, Illinois. She was married to George Fusselman on July 4, 1900, at Quincy, and spent the remainder of her life in that vicinity. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 8, 1919.

She is survived by her husband; a son, Ernest Raymond; two daughters: Miss Mary Fusselman and Mrs. J. J. Schulte; and a granddaughter, all of Quincy; two half-brothers: Edward Clemmons of Celt and H. S. Clemmons of Mayview, Missouri; and a half-sister, Mrs. William Vance of Lebanon, Missouri. Funeral services were held at the Stormer Mortuary, Elder Cecil Ettinger officiating. Burial was in the Greenmount Cemetery.

HUNTER.—Jennie, was born February 16, 1874, at Windham, Ontario, and died July 24, 1949, at Detroit, Michigan, following a long illness. She moved to Detroit in 1898 and became a member of the Reorganized Church there on September 3, 1899. For fifty years she attended Central Church in that city. Funeral services were conducted by Elder David Dowker at the Neeley Mortuary. Burial was in Grand Lawn Cemetery, Detroit.

CROWELL.—Nellie Frances, daughter of Loring and Sophia Humphrey Howes, was born September 30, 1865, at Dennis, Massachusetts, and died August 2, 1949, at Tobey Hospital, Wareham, Massachusetts. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 3, 1912, at Onset, Massachusetts, and for many years was a member of the Dennisport Branch, later attending Brockton Branch. In 1931 she moved to New Haven, Connecticut, and was transferred to the roll of the newly-formed New Haven Mission. She was a charter member of the New Haven Branch which was organized in January, 1935. She was united in marriage to Calvin Crowell; to this union two children were born: a daughter, Olive E. Dobbins of Onset, Massachusetts; and a son, Donald E., of West Haven. They along with seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren survive her. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Calvin C. Sears at the Cornwell Memorial Chapel in Wareham. Interment was in Swan Lake Cemetery, Dennisport, Massachusetts.

BUCHANAN.—Lloyd Clayton, son of George W. and Mannie Moore Buchanan, was born near Chillicothe, Iowa, on February 20, 1873, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Rural Gosser, near Queen City, Missouri, on July 8, 1949. He was an employee of the Rath Packing Company in Waterloo, Iowa, until his retirement in 1940, after which he made his home in Ottumwa, Iowa. His wife, the former Harriet Loy, whom he married in 1899, preceded him in death on July 13, 1947. He was a member of the Reorganized Church.

Surviving are six daughters: Mrs. Bertha Gosser, Mrs. Florence Patton, and Mrs. Mabel Miller of Waterloo, Iowa; Mrs. Faye West of Los Angeles, California; Mrs. Myrtle Colley of Arlington, California; and Mrs. Lorene Jackson of Ottumwa; a son, George, of Oaks, North Dakota; two sisters: Mrs. Della Sackfield of Rock Island, Illinois, and Mrs. Bertha Hendricks of Ottumwa; nineteen grandchildren; and eleven great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Edward Stark, pastor of the Ottumwa Branch.

HENDERSON.—Nancy Caroline, daughter of Franklin and Synthia Meni, was born September 5, 1856, and died at the home of her daughter, May Rose, in Springerton, Illinois, on September 4, 1949. She was married to James Clark, and one daughter was born to them. Later she married Raney Carter; four children were born to this union. Mr. Carter and two of the children preceded her in death. After several years of widowhood, she married Wilson Henderson. For the past four years, nineteen months of which were spent in bed, she was cared for by her daughter. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 26, 1874. "Mammy," as she was affectionately known, was a woman of rare virtue, meeting all the difficulties of life with a smile. She will be greatly missed.

Surviving are two daughters: May Rose, and Maggie Bailey of Pontiac, Michigan; a son, George Carter of Springerton, Illinois; twenty-five grandchildren; forty-one great-grandchildren; and fifteen great-great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Springerton Reorganized Church, Elder S. R. Coleman officiating. Interment was in a nearby cemetery.

SNELL.—Janet, was born at Redickville, Ontario, where she spent most of her life, and died August 20, 1949, at Creemore Hospital following a month's illness. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 23, 1904, and remained a faithful member until death. On December 18, 1907, she was married to Luther John Snell, who survives her.

She also leaves three sons: Earl and Melville of Redickville, and John of the home; two daughters: Mrs. Glenn Russell of Shrigley and Mrs. Elwood Arnold of Shelburne; a sister, Mrs. Jennie Kearns of Craik, Saskatchewan; a brother, James H. Baxter of Toronto; and sixteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Gamble Mortuary in Shelburne, Elder H. A. Dayton officiating. Interment was in Horning's Mills Cemetery.

RUSSELL.—Susan Emmaline Davison, was born near Wareham, Ontario, and died at Markdale Hospital on August 7, 1949, following a two weeks' illness. On November 27, 1895, she was married to William H. Russell of Dundalk, and on January 28, 1900, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Proton, Ontario. She was an active member of the Redickville Branch until her death.

She is survived by her husband; two sons: Elder Melvin Russell of Flint, Michigan; Glenn Russell of Shrigley, Ontario; two daughters: Mrs. Alex Acheson of Markdale, Ontario; and Mrs. Sherlock Methers of Dunedin, Ontario; and fourteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the McMillan Mortuary in Dundalk, Elder H. A. Dayton officiating. Burial was in the Dundalk Cemetery.

HANCOCK.—Edith Mabel, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth Edworthy Lynn, was born on July 6, 1880, in Toronto, Canada, and died on July 21, 1949. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at Jonesport, Maine, on December 12, 1909; although isolated for some years, she remained ever faithful. On June 10, 1925, in Mobile, Alabama, she married Elder J. W. Hancock, who preceded her in death on September 22, 1937.

Surviving are two sons (by a previous marriage): W. Judson Dobbins of Citronelle, Alabama, and Captain R. G. Dobbins of Mobile; a sister, Bessie McKay of Toronto; a brother, R. H. Lynn of Toronto; five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Elder Franklin Steiner conducted the funeral services which were held at Citronelle. Interment was in the family lot in Pin Crest Cemetery.

SANTOS.—George Vincent, a native of Sacramento, California, died September 6, 1949, in Sacramento at the age of thirty-nine. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 4, 1946, after having been reared in the Catholic faith. He had been a public instructor in Sacramento for several years.

He is survived by his wife, the former Betty Bidwell; two daughters: Joan and Susan Gay; his mother, Mrs. Rose Yeager, and stepfather, Joseph Yeager. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Sacramento, Evangelist William H. Dawson officiating. Interment was in the Odd Fellows Lawn Cemetery in Sacramento.

MORGAN.—Deborah, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Morgan, was born June 7, 1873, at Llansamlet, Glamorganshire, South Wales, and died January 1, 1949, at the Martin's Ferry, Ohio, Hospital. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church and for many years attended the Bellaire, Ohio, Branch. She had been in poor health for a long period of time, but remained steadfast in the faith, living a life worthy of emulation.

She is survived by Miss Jeannette Morgan (kinship not stated) with whom she made her home; Mary Bodycombe of South Wales; Mrs. William Richards of Steubenville, Ohio; Mrs. W. E. Lewis of East Liverpool, Ohio; and Mrs. John H. Davis of Martin's Ferry; and three brothers: David Morgan of California; Harry Morgan of Wheeling, West Virginia; and Walter Morgan of Martin's Ferry. Funeral services were held at Martin's Ferry, Elder John Wallace officiating.

YINGLING.—Jenny, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Robinson, was born November 1, 1864, in Owen Sound, Ontario, and died August 4, 1949, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Frank Jennings, in Independence, Missouri. On October 20, 1888, she married Albert Lamb Newton, four daughters were born to this union. Following Mr. Newton's demise, she married A. L. Yingling on March 9, 1906, who also preceded her in death. She was a devoted Saint and did many things for the church. For twenty-two years she was superintendent of the primary department at Stone Church, during which time she wrote the first primary quarterlies published by the church. She possessed a mother heart, rearing in addition to her own family five other children and caring for two orphans who stayed at her home until they were married. She was interested in community projects and was a champion of the underprivileged. Her home was ever open to the young, and ministers found a welcome there too. She taught her family to respect these men of God, and many wonderful discussions were held in her home following church services.

She is survived by three daughters: Mrs. J. O. Isaacks and Mrs. Frank Jennings of Independence, and Mrs. Deal Six of Lawrence, Kansas; a brother, John A. Robinson, also of Independence; ten grandchildren; and ten great-grandchildren. One daughter died in infancy. Funeral services were held at the Stone Church, Elders Evan Fry and Glaude A. Smith officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

REILLY.—Joseph W., was born February 22, 1875, at Little Sioux, Iowa, and died December 24, 1948, at Los Angeles, California. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1909 and was ordained an elder in 1911. In 1901 he was married to Jennie D. Lane at Onawa, Iowa.

Surviving are two sons: Scott L. of Los Angeles and Fred of Gretna, Nebraska; two daughters: Daisy Berg of Waterbury, Nebraska, and Jenivee Kennedy of Calipatria, California; and sixteen grandchildren. He was preceded in death by his wife and a son, Charles. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Walthill, Nebraska, Elders Charles Putnam and Ira Lewis officiating. Interment was in Lyons, Nebraska.

P.S.

 NO GRIPES

Your "Herald" pages come to you in good shape as a result of much planning and co-operation. The planning is by the editors, the co-operation is by the mechanical department, particularly in the person of congenial "Gib" Gordon.

"How does your patience hold up?" an editor asked when she had given him an unusual number of changes to make.

This was Gib's reply: "When I was in the service [from the sands of Dixie to the snows of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands] I figured that if the good Lord would let me come back I'd never kick about the American way of life. And this is a part of it!"

How's that for a philosophy? The rest of us could use quite a large chunk of it.

 CRYPTOGRAM

Brother R. J. Farthing asks a question which has even the editors puzzled:

"Recent numbers of the 'Saints' Herald' have carried a curious black hieroglyphic over and upon the white letter 'H' in 'Herald.' My imagination has been unequal to the task of deciphering this mystic character. It may be a monogram in which I see the letters E S L and possibly D and C. It also reminds me of an apple paring thrown over a maiden's shoulder which, falling upon the floor, indicates the initial letter of a beloved one's name. I suggest that you tell us through the 'Herald' what this intriguing figure represents."

We, too, have been mystified by that peculiar rune, so we asked the artist. He gave us a disappointing answer: "It doesn't mean anything at all. I just put it there to break up the plainness of the lettering."

People like things with significance and symbols of meaning. Our suggestion to the artist: Next time, why not make it mean something? It's an opportunity.

 FOR BEAUTY

A nice crew of men is at work redecorating Uncle Joe's house, sanding the floors, painting the woodwork. Uncle Joe says, "It is marvelous what you can do to a place with a few gallons of paint and four hundred dollars!" He saved $2.59 by painting some of the walls with water paint. Most of the brush work was done by Lady Beautiful, as Uncle Joe figures that "the hand that wields the distaff" can also swing a paint brush.

 MISSION COURIER

Notes from a recent issue of the "Mission Courier," which serves the British Isles Mission: Harold Dewsnap, member of a family that has given the Mission some distinguished leaders, is now the editor. He has visited this country, and was a student at Graceland College. He receives his editorial correspondence at 11, Leaton Avenue, Wytheshaw, Manchester, England. . . . Brother Joseph Holmes was honored by the King with an award of the Medal of the Order of the British Empire (Civil Division). . . . Dr. Roy Cheville of Graceland College, on a European tour, visited the British Saints and participated in their Mission Day Program.

 ADVICE FROM THE SCRIPTURES

"Fret not yourself; it does nothing but harm."—Psalm 37:8. J. M. P. Smith translation.

For the Priesthood

These booklets have been prepared to take the place of the old Priesthood Manual which has been out of print for many years.

PROCEDURES IN PRESENTING CALLS TO THE MINISTRY by Lorne White

"Called of God as was Aaron" might be taken as the theme of this book, for this is the foundation of our whole concept of priesthood and ministerial leadership. How calls are to be recognized, safeguarded, and acted upon is carefully discussed and considered in this volume which summarizes the best that has been written upon this subject by our people. Paper binding.

MINISTRY TO THE ERRING AND CHURCH COURT PROCEDURE by Bishop L. Wayne Updike

This booklet is designed for those persons who must serve in church courts in ministering to the erring, with a statement of court procedure adopted by the General Conference of 1932 and some further pertinent actions of the conference of that year. Paper binding.

THE PRAYER MEETING

This is for leaders and directors of prayer meetings and contains practical suggestions based on experience in how to conduct a thoughtful and inspiring prayer meeting. Plans for themes, for the organization of the meeting, suggested Scripture readings, and hymns are all here in this paper bound booklet.

PREACHING MINISTRY by Lorne White

A book for preachers of all ages, from the young man just beginning his service to the mature and experienced minister who has been at it a long time. Thoroughly Latter Day Saint in viewpoint, it recognizes the place and function of inspiration and divine guidance, and at the same time suggests a wise program of study and practical preparation. Paper binding.

The Voice of Youth

ON SEPTEMBER 7, 1946, the Saints' Herald began a new department "by and for young people." This has been a regular feature for three years and is called "New Horizons." Its guiding spirit has been Naomi Russell, who has been assistant to the managing editor since December, 1945. She has the interests and viewpoint of the young people because she is one of them.

The church officers are not unmindful of the need for a youth magazine such as most other denominations publish to channel the expressions of its younger group. However it is not yet ready to stand the large outlay of funds required to launch such a project at present costs. There are some things which poor people and small churches cannot afford.

Now we are wondering if the young people are actually using this department by reading and writing for it. You parents need not expect that they will come naturally by the urge to read this Herald department as they acquire their eye teeth. Call their attention to some of the good articles it carries. Help them establish the habit of turning to "New Horizons" of each issue as soon as it comes each week. Their ideas which have general interest for publication will be welcomed.

Introducing...

EVAN V. SHUTE (page 5) was born in Stokes' Bay, Ontario, October 21, 1905, and was baptized ten years later in London where he is a practicing physician at the present time. In 1932 he married Marian Miller. They have five children: James, 12; Roberta, 10; Barry, 9; Mark, 5; Vere, 4.

Doctor Shute finished his high school work at Windsor Collegiate in 1919. He received his B.A. degree from the University of Toronto in 1924 and his M. B. in 1927.

Among Elder Shute's interests are archaeology, writing, and sports. While he has not found time for extensive writing for church publications, the Herald has published several articles on such subjects as evolution and higher criticism as it affects Latter Day Saints.

In 1935 he was given the distinction of Fellow of the Royal College of Science in Canada. He is also a charter member of such societies as the Canadian Physiological Society, the American Society for the Study of Sterility, and the British Society for the Study of Endocrinology. He is vice-president of the Western Ontario Society of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

INDIA MARGARET (FARLEY) SPERRY (page 13) was born in Summerfield, Ohio, on September 30, 1913, and was baptized in Columbus, Ohio, on November 19, 1939. She was graduated from North High School in Columbus in 1931 and received a bachelor of science in agriculture from Ohio University in 1939.

She did secretarial work in the church offices at the Auditorium from 1942 to 1944. Her special interests are organic gardening, nature study, and the history of the Lamanites.

She married Roy M. Sperry in 1943. They have three children: David Roy, 4; Diana Katharine, 3; Lauren Daniel, 1.

ELSIE (ANDES) TOWNSEND (page 16) was born in Far West, Missouri, October 15, 1908, and was baptized in Andes, Montana, in October, 1916. She was graduated from the Culbertson (Montana) High School in 1926 and attended Montana Normal School in 1926 and 1927. She was a student at Graceland College from 1929 to 1931. She received her bachelor of science in education in 1934 with music as her major. She later obtained an English major. She married James Doig in 1934. He died in 1940. To them were born five children, including two sets of twins: Beverly, 13; Marjorie and Marilyn, 11; James and Joan, 9.

In 1946 she married Wendell Townsend. She is director of the church school at Bozeman, Montana, and is an assistant leader of the 4-H Club, of which three of her girls are members. She is also a teacher of English in the Bozeman high school.

ORGAN CONCERTS

Franklyn S. Weddle announces the first of a series of five organ recitals to be held 5:30 Sunday afternoon, October 30, at Englewood Church. Bethel Knoche will be the organist. It will be a forty-five minute recital. These recitals are sponsored by the Community Music Association. Other organ recitals will follow on succeeding last Sundays of each month. Some scheduled places include the Congregational Church, the Presbyterian Church, and the Stone Church. They are free to the public.

PASSING OF SISTER W. J. HAWORTH

Word was received by telegram September 21 from Elder W. J. Haworth of the death of his wife at Sydney, Australia. Sister Haworth is the mother of Mrs. H. I. Velt, who resides at 127 South Chrysler in Independence. An additional statement will appear in a later issue of the "Herald."

O. W. PARKER IN HOSPITAL

The former production manager of the Herald Publishing House returned to the Independence Sanitarium, where his condition is considered critical. He underwent an operation a year and a half ago and since then has been weak.

C. B. HARTSHORN IN CHICAGO

Elder C. B. Hartshorn, managing editor of Herald publications, was in Chicago for the Chicago District Institute under the direction of Hattie K. Bell, District Director of Religious Education. The institute was held September 23, 24, and 25. Brother Hartshorn spoke at a banquet at the Central Y.M.C.A. on Friday evening, led discussions on Saturday, and addressed the group on Sunday afternoon.

McDOWELL IN SALT LAKE CITY

Dr. F. M. McDowell on his recent trip to Utah was able to make some interesting contacts concerning the ward and welfare program in Salt Lake, among the Mormons. He had unusual opportunity for observing first hand the organization and program. There the city is divided into wards with a church, combined with a social center, in each ward. He also had opportunity to observe their social welfare program. Produce is donated, and the work is done largely by volunteer help. The costs come from fast offerings. Millions of dollars worth of food and clothing are distributed to approved families. None are purchased.

Dr. McDowell attended a broadcast of the tabernacle choir and also attended a meeting of the Eighteenth Annual conference of the international organization of Welsh singers. There were over one thousand and the whole congregation sang.

He visited Brigham Young University and held services in Malad, Idaho; Ogden, Salt Lake, and Provo, Utah; and Grand Junction, Colorado.

In connection with members of the Twelve involved, Dr. McDowell will soon be conducting series of priesthood institutes in the East, including Columbus, Ohio; Charleroi, Pennsylvania; Toledo, and Kirtland, Ohio; and Louisville, Kentucky.

Dr. McDowell announces that soon there will be published another volume in the priesthood series, "Ministry in the Home." The publication will be announced in the "Herald."

The department of Priesthood Education joins with other departments of the church in publishing an expanded "Guide-Lines to Leadership." This will be a bi-monthly magazine, starting in its new capacity January, 1950. Each issue will contain a large section devised to interest local priesthood.

"Follow Me"

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me."

—Luke 9: 23.

Christ as Leader

The leadership of Christ is at the heart of our theme for October, "Follow me." It puts before us his invitation to accept him as our leader, teacher, and friend.

From the cradle to the grave, few of us are wise enough to assume full responsibility for the direction of our lives. We need the good influences of home, school, church, organizations, and friends to point the way and open opportunities for our development. Without these, people wander without plan or purpose from one experience to another, never getting anywhere because they aren't going anywhere.

Leadership is important because great issues are involved. We hope for eternal life. Are we making preparation for it? Our destiny, we trust, is heaven. Are we going that way?

Jesus knows the way. He offers to guide us in the great and difficult pilgrimage of spiritual destiny. Are we ready now to accept his leadership?

The Need of a Leader

Sara Delano Roosevelt, mother of the late President, once told this story concerning his boyhood. She noticed one day that he was bossing his young friends, telling them what to do. She asked him why he did it. Couldn't he let the other boys direct their play part of the time?

Franklin protested, "But, Mother, if I leave it to them, they won't do anything!"

There is the key to the necessity of leadership. Some people must be told what to do. Through lack of imagination, purpose, or initiative, they do not plan. Examine yourself honestly, without vanity and taking no offense. Aren't you, like most of us, a person who needs a leader? What would you, personally, do for the church or community unless somebody asked you to help?

Qualifications for Leadership

Many people would like to be leaders because of the fame, power, or wealth involved. Any leader motivated by such selfish purposes is partly disqualified because he is not primarily concerned with the good of the people. Moreover, not all who aspire to leadership have the capacities of intelligence, understanding, and ability for it.

On one thing Jesus was supremely qualified to offer himself as a leader to the people of the world. He was completely unselfish. In the three temptations, he rejected the lure of wealth, fame, and power. He set them aside for a higher good: righteousness, obedience to God, and the welfare of the people. He gave himself; he died for us.

You and I can accept Jesus as a leader without fear of being exploited or betrayed.

Regrets

When we receive an invitation that we cannot accept, it is good social form to send our "regrets." During his ministry, Jesus sent out his invitation many times. In return he received a modest number of acceptances and many "regrets."

A case that contained the elements of spiritual tragedy was that of the Rich Young Man (Matthew 19: 16-25). Apparently he was a perfectionist and wanted to meet every requirement for salvation. His quest was personal—salvation for himself. "What lack I yet?" he asked. Jesus saw that selfishness and wealth stood between him and the kingdom of heaven. "If thou wilt be perfect, sell ... and give." Informed of the cost, the young man "went away sorrowful."

Jesus must have been sorry too, for "Jesus beholding him loved him."

Jesus, beholding us, loves us too, and offers himself as our Savior and friend. How many of us have sent him our "regrets"!

The Followers

From the beginning of written records to the present time, wherever a teacher, philosopher, or holy man stood up to speak, students have gathered around him to form a little band of disciples. Sometimes what began as a small group developed into an organization with a philosophy, a discipline, and a body of literature. So it was with the philosophers of Athens, Gautama Buddha of India, Confucius and Lao-tse of China, and many others.

Around Jesus, too, a band of disciples began to gather, like the earnest scribe who declared, "Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest." Some even felt like Peter, who said, "Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake." At that time Peter meant what he said, and the time came when he fulfilled his promise.

May we ask today, "Lord, why cannot I follow thee now?" What worldly things, what selfish purposes stand in our way? We can put them aside.

A Personal Note

So far, all this has been rather general. Now, how does it affect you? ... Imagine yourself in one of the great gatherings of thousands of people who came saying, "We would see Jesus." You press through the throng to behold his face, to hear his voice. As you become absorbed in the power, the beauty, and the truth of the message, you completely forget yourself and are possessed by

Editorial

Keep the Law

Many annual tithing statements are overdue from members who filed statements last year and preceding years. Special efforts are being made at this time to contact all those who filed tithing statements during 1948, but who have not yet completed annual statements during 1949.

We commend to all the need for compliance with the financial law of the church. This is the best year the church has known, so far as tithing statement filers are concerned, but there is an urgent need that many more members shall evidence their stewardship of possessions by filing tithing statements and paying tithing in accordance with the revelations, legislative actions, and well-established teachings of the church.

Now is the opportune time. Mail your statement as soon as completed to the Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, or hand it to the bishop's representative in your branch or district in order that it may be filed immediately.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

Across the Desk

From faraway Tahiti comes news from Elder Edward Butterworth, letters dated August 16 and 20, from which we make excerpts:

We are putting on a drive for new baptisms, and if you will examine the statistical report for this quarter, you will notice that it is unexcelled in any past quarter so far as I am aware. We are getting good results also from our request to re-interest the inactive. I have several letters on my desk now, requesting permission to repent and become active again. We have set as our goal for this year, eighty-five new members to bring our statistical membership to 2,000 members. We lack only 32 baptisms before we reach that mark. We will arrive at that number by next month or maybe the month after. If the deaths throughout the mission do not exceed our new converts, we will more than reach our goal before the end of the year

The Union Conference President of the Seventh Day Adventist faith will arrive on their Gospel Boat from Fiji this month. They only have 135 baptized members in the whole of French Oceania. The Mormons will dedicate their new building by December of this year. It is said that the First Presidency will be present as well as several apostles and former missionaries to Tahiti. A Roman Catholic Bishop has just recently toured the mission. We deserve a visit from headquarters.

Brother Miller and his good wife, Eriel, of Honolulu are to be commended for the splendid reception they gave Sister Emere Mervin and her daughter Dede of Tahiti. We are proud of them and express our appreciation for their personal interest in the Mervins. Emere also speaks very highly of the women of Honolulu and the Saints who cared for them as they were undergoing operations at Honolulu.

This is the first time in the history of our mission that we have been so close to the Hawaiian mission. We feel that we have a personal interest in it now that we have made such pleasant contacts with them recently. Brother Mervin wishes to call your attention to the fact that the Honolulu Saints helped his family, and he cannot thank them enough. He wants you to know that he shall always remember them and your personal interest by sending them a letter while they were at Honolulu. He says he will repay these kindnesses when you arrive in Tahiti.

Also from Elder Breckenridge, dated August 21:

Your letter of July 18 arrived by Trapas a few days ago. We are most gratified that mail comes through so regularly. The governor has announced that air mail will arrive Thursday or Friday of the third week each month. I realize it is difficult for you to expand much in answering my letters, and I assure you that it is not expected. Although your letters will always be received joyously and read carefully. Brother Butterworth keeps me well posted in regard to developments at headquarters which come to him through his office.

The activities are coming along well here. The band has graduated into a full-size orchestra of ten violins, one cello, four clarinets, two cornets, one C-melody saxophone, one bass saxophone, and one bass horn. We think it sounds very well. The dramatic club is not coming along as well as we had hoped, but the members are working on a play to be given in October. We have a baptismal service planned for next Sunday which is also Father's Day. There should be about five baptized then, making a total for the year of thirty. We hope to have not less than fifty for the entire year. Next year when we are able to train some priesthood in definite missionary procedure, we should do better than that.

Emere Mervin and Dede are back with us apparently well on the road to recovery.

We quite often receive interesting suggestions from Brother J. W. Lea, Ukiah, California, father of our Associate Editor Leonard J. Lea. Just now we have one from him which presents us with the "aptest expression of 1949." He writes:

We attended the Mendocino County Fair in Ukiah We saw only one booth on religion. . . . Managed by a handsome Utah Mormon elder well posted in error.

Brother Lea closes with a quotation from Bernard Baruch: "Every one has a right to his own opinion, but no one has a right to be wrong in his facts!"

From Elder Almer W. Sheehy of Boston, September 8, 1949:

This summer has been outstanding for me in highly spiritual and challenging experiences. I am grateful for this but more so for like experiences of my brethren. Surely you must rejoice over the reports you are receiving of the great work. May the church continue to move Zionward.

Work with Brother Draper was a pleasant experience for me this summer. He is industrious and spiritual. We shared many good experiences. We are moving ahead here in the East. I would rate the Deer Park, Onset, and Maine reunions as excellent. From reliable sources comes the statement, "Onset reunion was the best in years in numbers and spirituality."

We have moved into the new Boston Branch parsonage. It is a comfortable nine room house, and we like it. The Boston Saints are proud of it, too. We will probably have Open House on October 16. This is an achievement for the branch and the church. We have baptized fifteen in Boston since February of this year and have eight more decisions.

Religion, Intellectual Honesty, and Science

By E. V. SHUTE, B.A., M.B., F.R.C.S.C.

IF ONE READS President Andrew Dickson White's great work, A History of the Warfare of Science With Theology, or Lecky's masterly Rise and Influence of Rationalism in Europe, he will see at once that the first and last terms of my title have too rarely been bridged by the second. Men have given their allegiance to one or the other, not often to both, perhaps because each so easily becomes an absolute mistress, disdaining any rival. And yet, although these types of thinking may occupy different areas of the brain, there must be reasonable commensures which permit of an interplay between them. A whole man dislikes to feel that his mind is a kind of department store, where sales in the various divisions cannot be made concurrently, and where a clerk on the fourth floor knows nothing of what goes on in the basement.

CAN THE CONFLICT BE SETTLED?

And yet to pose the question admits the difficulty. It is no real answer to say that "true religion and true science never conflict" because each deals with a different realm of knowledge, a different pinch of reality. Ever since I first heard that hoary and unrealistic answer, I have been amazed that so obvious a sophistry should have ever filled great mouths. For men, especially thinking men, are boundary-jumpers by nature and compulsion, and they will not say, "Beyond this thorny hedge lies science. We cannot jump it until we put on a red coat" or "That island is religion. We may not land unless we unfurl the papal flag."

The religious man will wonder about the atomic bomb, which has unloosed the sternest problem of his generation, and ask what is plutonium and a neutron. The scientific man will hear of the ecumenical conferences which conceivably could unite our world before it becomes unfit for a laboratory anywhere or even for free thought, and wonder if and at what place the hand of God should grasp the wrist of man and say, "No! Do this my way, for only I know where this leads, and how it fits my cosmic and eternal schemes." Is there never to be a rapprochement? Has each become too specialized in thinking terms, too dogmatic in approach, and too proud among its hierarchs to admit that simple and humble, but knowledgeable men, can honestly speak of and deal with and believe in both at once?

I am not vain enough to feel able to offer anyone a permanent solution of the problem set for me, a problem whose aspects change rapidly from decade to decade; but perhaps one can point out tenable and practical answers for now. It is wonderful to be able to box so formidable a foe, although one realizes he will still be champion long after my round is over and this challenger forgotten.

THE FIELD OF RELIGION

To begin with, I would not belittle religion by defining it in terms too vague or too limited. If a man feels it at all, it is something big and compelling, and if such an impression is not his, it merely signifies that he is too mean a vessel for so noble a draught. Religion is not just a detached way of looking at God and his dealings with man, or even at the ethical interactions of men. It is the acute awareness of the nobility of God's enterprise in his world and us. It is the enduring conviction that we must be great, being his and not of our own make. It insists that what glimpses of his will are granted to us reveal a purpose full of both transcendent glory and sympathetic and tender, personal love—the thing to be anticipated of the Maker and Master both of the spheres and of the most helpless human infant. Religion is not just an opinion, a sentiment, or an impulse; it is a color of life we call devoted, and a type of mind at once noble, humble, persistent, brave, and unselfish.

Religion is good, and all men need it. Shall anyone be denied it merely because his daily occupation deals with the phenomena of rocks or muscles? Meeting the Great Author should give us a better perspective on his book, where we perhaps are the curl on one "Q" which makes that letter just a little more significant than nothing.

Natural religion has enticed every savage and every philosopher, whether as "sermons in stones" or gods in everything. We cannot but compare the dust storm with the little dust we kick up, or the rainbow with our prisms, or the ocean with our canals, and in that moment feel the might and omnipresence of a greater Being. But this Creator is savage and fearful in Nature's angrier moments. An innocent child is as likely to be swept off a coral island by a typhoon as the vicious wastrel. A philosopher on a cliff will fall into the abysses below if water has weakened the ledge—and Nature will neither groan nor shed a tear. Typhus strikes down the saint and the prostitute together. Natural religion, in short, poses more problems than it solves, and it is not enough to say, "The firmament showeth his handiwork," if the next moment it is convulsed by an earthquake or hurricane. God may be in the "rushing, mighty wind," but if so his aspect there is often merely terrifying, and one blast from him can elicit more tears than Timur or Heidrich.

Revealed religion has to do with the spiritual intimacies of God and man. But since such communication must always filter through the lesser partner, it smells of him, and the odor is not always a fragrance. So many dreadful things have been done by men in God's name, and purportedly at his behest—things we associate with the greenwood fire that burned Servetus slowly, or the rack of the Inquisition, or the sword of St. Bartholomew's day, or the Spanish Christianization of Peru! And yet, the other side of the picture is at least as significant, and the life of Christ is the high point in human history, either to believer or unbeliever. Life can be good, and it was best in him. Only through him can such a day-to-day performance be imitated. Revealed religion, therefore, has come down to thirsty men through many a trickle and even the occasional great stream, but its Amazon source is ever Jesus. In him we see human character made perfect, and Nature playing a subordinate role as its backdrop—not the capricious manipulator of puppet strings, ourselves the puppets. The Being who poured the sea, in Him becomes the pacifier of the storm. The deviser of those gastric contractions which produce hunger becomes the kindly distributor of fish and loaves to improvident disciples.

LIMITATIONS OF SCIENCE

The scientist is usually a divided man. He is a student of natural and artificial phenomena, a reporter of fact, a creator in his own right, a manipulator of matter, and, at his best, a formulator of law. But he too is a man, easily inflated and deviated from his strict role. He becomes confused and is apt to regard the truth he sees as the only truth—at least the only valuable truth—because it is so readily verifiable and demonstrable to anyone. Formulating a "law," he feels as Olympian as if he himself had set in motion the interactions that "law" merely describes. He forgets the history of science which indicates that the law of Einstein supersedes the law of Newton, and that vitamins and enzymes revolutionize the gross facts of digestion and assimilation. Eddington pointed out in Needham's Science, Religion, and Reality that the world of physics was a mental shorthand. Much of it, indeed, forever escapes understanding. How can a scheme built on the square root of minus-one or the idea of curved space be comprehended. When one says that anger is a function of the thalamus at the base of the brain and involves a sudden increased secretion of the adrenal gland, is he any closer to an explanation of the experience?

So many of the scientist's words hide more than they disclose. The pity of it is that he may thus be deluded, too. The maze of enzyme reactions now being explored by food chemists illustrates the baffling and elusive complexity of the world the scientist tries to chart. His perpetual difficulties should make him humble if only he measured his successes against his failures, or his total gains against the gaps in his knowledge.

But the too-human scientist tends to measure himself against his equally distinguished but equally baffled fellows. He joins "learned societies" and "holds office." He gets a "chair" at a university where the work in his own "field" passes him so rapidly that soon he can scarcely understand the jargon and interests of the juniors he is supposed to lead and teach. He writes a book that is outdated before it issues from the press. He acquires learned degrees which really show that he is now "safe" and "passé," that he has become a light-house for scholars, but that now younger and abler men fare forth to sea on voyages of discovery. He becomes a "standard reference" in textbooks, and so joins the honorable but very dead company of Galileo and Hutton and Leibnitz.

AREAS OF LIFE NOT REACHED BY SCIENCE

Because knowledge has grown to such vast proportions, any aspect of it can become absorbing, and involvement in it can create the illusion of the full life and the complete mind. Yet riper knowledge has scarcely advanced the prospects of mankind, and we could well dispense with an Oppenheimer or indeed a whole laboratory of top-flight experts on "heavy water" at Gielsenmunde without feeling the loss as keenly as the sudden obliteration of Milton's writing or all the copies of Paul's Second Corinthians. It is well to pause and ask ourselves if our total position has advanced or retrogressed since the days of Joseph Smith. Yet most of the epic of science has been written in the century since his time.

Part of my complaint against the single-minded pursuit of science, therefore, is that knowledge remains incomplete and so is constantly in flux. It is a tool and not a cause. It was devised by us. It can become an idol but never a God. Being men, we feel the need of immortal anchors. It is a telescope or microscope by turns, whose lenses are human eyes, and so are subject to chromatic aberration. The light coming through is limited and altered by the medium. Our gains are soon swamped in the triumphs of our successors.

Admittedly, too, values are always subjective and vary with persons and the years. The philosophic scientist may ask if the standard we choose shall be ours or an ant's, and which has more validity to a Martian. But even he is pulled up short by common sense at Hiroshima or Bikini or Belsen and is ready to admit this is not quite the paradox a Voltaire could have made of it. There are eternal values, and this is not an ant's world, nor that of an educated baboon. Beauty, for example, seems like an added item—a gift only man could perceive or revel in. Therefore it was designed specifically for human values. It alone is a cogent argument for the Adamic pre-eminence of man and his awareness.

Science depends only on the seeking human. Since man's mind is its only resource, science therefore tends to exalt its major tool and only inspiration. But this can end in deadly fallacies, as in the absolute state, or in incinerating ovens for inferior races, as well as in better peanuts or the control of the tsetse fly. Even in its nobler aspects, the exaltation of human intelligence as such can result, and often does, in all the worst manifestations of selfishness and egoism. My own knowledge of first rate scientists indicates that this can go as far as the suppression of fact, the stealing of patents, the burial of invention, vilification and slander, and all the rest of the spawn of the "father of lies." Science in this aspect is a very unlovely and immoral thing. Religion gone wrong could neither do nor be worse. And every academic scientist who reads this knows that I am referring to no rare phenomenon. To cite just one example, how many millions have died from tuberculosis because B.G.G. vaccine was howled down by "scientists" for twenty-three years? We in science desperately need a return to the viewpoint of that Harkhuf, a noble of Elephantine who explored the Sudan in the twenty-sixth century B. C., and who gave us his motives for the good life, "I desired that it might be well with me in the Great God's presence."

Worst of all, science is admittedly amoral. It has no values but physical ones. It always thirsts for more, and so drinks the poison of U-235 as avidly as the milk of better-bred Guernseys. Some monstrous evil it spawns may at any given moment obliterate every good achieved through the ages of man. Only God can foresee the end of what is often utterly blind experimentation. The inevitable result is that scientists of devotion come to regard every new fact as being equally good, until, appalled at what flies out of their Pandora's box, they found Nobel prizes with the income from dynamite in a conscious effort to restore the balance of their world while there is yet time.

A world that had no ethical standards would be callous and horrible beyond belief. We want the meaning of facts, too, and science is weakest, probably, in the discovery of meanings. It is fortunate, therefore, that our world is never in danger of being universally scientific, and that religion was the first-born child of life, whereas science was its Benjamin. So euthanasia was rejected, and a deformed child grew into an Alexander Pope and a deaf mute became a Helen Keller to the enrichment of the world. Geriatrics becomes a division of medical science, so that my grandmother and other old people may live longer and more happily.

THE GREATNESS AND COMPLEXITY OF LIFE

Life escapes every mold of thought we pour for it. It is colossal and co-various with the inanimate world. We see it in starfish and tetanus germs, in the octopus and the boa, in the favorite dog and the fly we hunt without mercy. To what end do they live, and what term have their lives? Does the fish we hook end with its last gasp? And if all these lives have meaning or continuance, what of the sum of life throughout geological time?

How many great men and heroes and artists have flourished and died unsung? What happened to the stone carvers of Behistun or Uxmal? Can you name one Hitite hero or the bravest of the Sioux? What gallant and hopeless fights occurred on the Gladiator's Stone in Old Mexico? Would you like to know more than the fragments of the Greek Anthology, or who barely lost the crown of myrtle to Aeschylus or Sophocles? The incidents which fill our libraries are but one symbol in the calculus of history. How great life is! How reverently we should approach it! How vain to think it will yield more than one tantalizing kiss to all the ardors of science! Human searching can never discover more than its outward traces, and only the revelation basic to religion can come even close to its nucleus.

What happens when revealed religion and science overlap, when the same man uses a stereoscope in which they are the twin lenses? The view is apt to become distorted. Shall an earthquake then become the judgment of an angry God or a fault in the earth's crust? Did Dr. John Keats get tuberculosis for his sins or because some unknown coughed tubercle bacilli over him? Was Byron a clubfoot because God foresaw his seductions, or because there was a defective gene in his father's sperm cells, or he was cramped in the womb? Such contentious issues could be multiplied a thousandfold. And some decision on these items must be reached by all honest and thinking men, even if the decision is tentative, since we know so little of geological faulting or human resistance to tuberculosis or the factors determining clubfoot, and even less of God's wrath and purposes.

WE LOOK BOTH WAYS

Perhaps the first answer lies in humility. In a day when the gene theory of chromosomal inheritance is being challenged by experts, we do well to withhold a decision on Byron's clubfoot, for example. My own studies would indicate that such a malformation could be as intimately associated with the food of Byron's father or even his addiction to tobacco as to his heredity.

At the same time we do well to disregard the unholy arguments which "elected" unborn children to God's vengeance. Of necessity we are guests of the world on the terms of that world. Its laws must impinge on us, whether we violate them knowingly or by accident.

The religious man with "scientific" training is aware of this but believes that God can deflect his laws for our good or for his purposes in us. He therefore prays, on occasions, for such an intervention. If that is never possible, all prayers of intercession at least are vain. The history of mankind and our own Latter Day Saint experience indicate that they are often vain, but often fruitful too. We may say, with Jesus: "If it be Thy will, let this cup pass from me." The experience of riper years often shows us that the bitter cup was the one we should have preferred, but few of us have Bassanio's intuition. Were I the father of a Byron, and knew that statistically the chance of a congenital defect appearing in my later children was twenty times higher than in some other man's family, I would pray for their freedom from such a "curse," then make sure I was in the best possible medical condition before siring more. If more defectives appeared in my family despite these religious and scientific precautions—the latter made possible only in the last ten years or so because of much careful and disciplined study which in itself is an ennobling and challenging teacher—I would pray that I should have no more children and adopt every scientific measure known to avoid their conception. For I would then conclude that in this instance, but only in this instance, God had left me subject to the universal laws governing the appearance of congenital defects, and also that my previous scientific deductions about them were in error.

What do I think of Dr. John Keats' death of tuberculosis? As a medical man, I think he contracted the infection as would any other man, prince or poet or beachcomber or artist Aubrey Beardsley. Its course was the same in Keats and its end the same. I do not know if he tried to pray himself out of the clutches of the dreadful wax-coated bacillus. But I know of no evidence that such prayers, if offered up, availed him in any way. As one having some pretense of religion, I cannot think that his silencing was unforeseen or that we have lost any great works by his "premature" death or that his voice is now forever stilled. It is incredible to my value recognitions that Szigeti's hand or Carrel's should lose its cunning with the transitions of death, or that Pieter Breughel or Van Gogh sees no more color, or that Sir James Jeans sees no stars from the higher reaches to which he has now climbed.

I have picked these two medical phenomena from history at random to illustrate how the ascertained facts of science that are familiar to me bear on my approach to incidents in other lives (as they would on my own experience), but also that religion lights them with a tender and humane gleam that the dicta of genetics or bacteriology could never provide.

THE DIMENSIONS OF OUR IGNORANCE

And I am impressed by the dimensions of our ignorance, of the territory fact can never invade, the history forever lost, the worlds we shall never reach with any telescope, the motives and lives I shall never know of, the mathematical complexities and botanical wonders and geographical areas I shall never explore. Even what I know best is tentative and partial, however plausible its "scientific" accuracy. Where human acuity and capacity fall short by so much, revelation only can extend perception and give us the sense of relatedness and meaning which I feel is due us. Religion provides something of that here and the promise of more hereafter. It would take feeble me an eternity to search out and drink in the wonders of all time and place. That is why I hope for eternal life after this "scientific" stage has given me a "religious" hint of my prospects and God's opportunities.

But the critic and agnostic must immediately and finally challenge me here on two points: the ability of prayer to alter the course of natural events, and my belief in the persistence of value and talent beyond death—even more in the fundamental concepts of a Creator who cares for his creatures. So one must conclude with a general defense of these basic features of the religious view.

The so-called "laws" of nature are occasionally breached. After all, they are mere formulations of what we call the usual course of events. Such exceptions to the rules are rare—but it is surprising how heavily they are leaned on by the critical as soon as any religious man claims an intervention by God in answer to prayer. Men who scoff at telepathy or thought-transference or coincidence are quick to use such phenomena to explain God out of any picture. Scientifically trained people are also quick to appeal to the unknown future of scientific achievement. "We will have an answer for that," they say with quiet confidence, "twenty years from now," which is, of course, as irrational a phrase as a scientist can utter, since of all men he may not guess, and can extrapolate only within close limits or by the law of probability. This line of unreasoning is difficult to cope with as both parties to the discussion stand before time's resolutely lowered curtain, discussing what lies beyond, much or nothing, and neither one is in the least equipped for comment.

THE VALIDITY OF RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE

But to some few, reliable, perfectly honest and critical religionists, experiences have occurred which should meet the demands of those candid people who challenge the efficacy of prayer. These experiences are not open to all men, as are the experiences of science, because religious dividends come only to good men and not even to all the good but only to those who are blessed as well. God speaks to whom he will, not necessarily on rude and peremptory demand. One of Himmler's devilish doctors could have ascertained any scientific fact about the temperature control of the human body as well or better than an Albert Schweitzer. But the experience and truest instinct of mankind debar such a beast from the experience of God's love and help as long as he remains bestial. God himself casts no pearls there.

So all men have come to rely on the experience of a host of special witnesses (who must be good and also blessed) of God's mercy and power. On the other hand, any man, however evil or foolish, may see all the wonders of Westinghouse if he but follows a guide. Good witnesses aver that God has made otherwise incredible motions in response to prayer. I am not called on to believe all such witnesses or even all their testimony. But contacting this sort of people, as is the duty and privilege of all men, and as the church gives opportunity, I accept their records as factual and welcome their evidence as making some meaning out of an otherwise incomprehensible world and so resolving a dilemma in my thought.

I cannot, like an agnostic, deliberately ignore a whole set of experiential phenomena of major rank. I must try all and let my thoughts flow freely past every artificial barrier, even those built by mighty men in the presumption of "science."

MORAL GRANDEUR

I am impressed by moral grandeur and find it grows best throughout all history and in my own day in the soil that God waters and suns. How barren, after all, are the speculations of Marcus Aurelius or Epictetus! I wonder sometimes why they have been preserved, save as curiosities or as landmarks of the mind. Set these best of the pagans beside Paul or even Augustine or Sir Thomas Browne or a papal encyclical, and one cannot help but feel how real and essential a manifesto of the human spirit is to be found in the revealed religion we know and to which we wisely yield our allegiance.

Such belief gives my inquiring mind rest, for it fits both the verified and incompletely verified details of my experience and opinion of life better than any alternative. If conclusions must always be tentative, short of perfect knowledge and wisdom, then I choose this as the best answer, the others leaving more unsolved questions than it does.

Moreover, I believe in justice—not just the police and fine-and-jail justice of my country, but a justice that reaches through the centuries back to an Author of right and forward to a standard of judgment. All of our lives are predicated on such justice quite as much as on the existence of matter. We say the latter is indestructible. Can justice be less so?

General Principles of Local Finance

By L. WAYNE UPDIKE

Bishop of Kansas City Stake

THE AIMS of church officers in raising funds should correlate with the aim of the church, that is, the salvation of souls—first that of the giver, and second the souls of others, through hearing the gospel story. Appeal for funds on the grounds that expenses must be met is sometimes necessary and may be productive in terms of dollars, but the results in terms of character-building are not equal to those achieved when people give according to ability regardless of the immediate organizational needs. Members should be taught to give according to a reasonable estimate of their own ability. If they are encouraged strongly to give more because the need is great, it naturally follows that they will be inclined to give less when the need is (really or supposedly) less.

Giving to pay immediate expenses or to go over the top in raising the "budget" is not "giving" at all; it is only "buying" a certain type of personal satisfaction. "Giving" implies a fair analysis of one's ability, reaffirming periodically the commitment already made at baptism. "Giving" brings spiritual benefits to the giver regardless of how far "over the top" the income might be. This is not limited to "sacrifice" giving in case of special need, where one gives out of his needs and just wants to meet a specific situation. Spiritual benefits result whenever we give, whether out of ability or out of sacrifice. The nearer our gift approaches our total ability, the greater the benefit both to us and to the cause of Zion. Many branch officers would do well to talk less about meeting certain monetary goals and give more ministry in encouraging people to analyze their own ability to contribute. The planning of budgets to include such gifts needs much more attention than we usually give to it.

LATTER DAY SAINTS are familiar with the words, "from each according to his ability, to each ac-ording to his need." These words express the philosophy which has always been the basic economic principle of our faith. This principle is already being applied in several aspects of our church endeavor, but its application should become more general. It is obviously a guiding principle in the collection and general use of the oblation fund, the purpose of which is to care for and rehabilitate the needy. It underlies the tithing law inasmuch as the tithe varies with the individual's increase, and the funds are allocated by the General Conference to meet the needs wherever they exist in the church without regard to the geographical location from which the funds came. This principle is also the guiding rule by which the allowances are allocated to the various appointee families. But these applications are not sufficient.

The "from each according to his ability to each according to his need" principle should apply among the members and departments in a local branch and among congregations in a stake. Where members or departments or congregations (in a compact stake organization) follow this procedure, each doing his part in accord with his ability, advancement is inevitable. The principle is, of course, applicable in spiritual matters as well as in temporal. In either case, this procedure is so expansive it can never be outgrown. It is a part of the framework within which the gospel can be carried to the whole world. The task can never be done by "meeting expenses," for by that method, our fears that we might incur expenses which will not be "met" cause us to hesitate. With "giving according to ability," our combined abilities determine the size of the program which we can wisely undertake. Success in carrying the gospel is bound to follow.

Because we have feared that people won't give enough without it, and because the need for immediate funds has been so pressing, we have continued to set monetary goals. Sometimes, it is admitted, they are necessary, but such goals diminish the giving aspect and enhance the paying for something aspect of any contribution with definite, cumulative effects on the thinking and character of the donor. Until such time as we have a sufficient number of people who are willing to commit themselves to giving "according to ability" to assure an adequate income to operate the branches from this source, we shall be forced to set certain monetary goals and ask people to "pay expenses."

A RECENT EXPERIENCE at Nashua, Missouri, in the northern part of Kansas City Stake, brought this truth to light in a way that had not previously been within my experience. On this particular occasion, a church had been bought, paid for, and equipped from the funds of the branch (the stake). Our approach to the members of the congregation as they met in their new church the first day was something like this:

This church is entirely paid for. We don't owe a dime on it. The coal bill is paid. Adequate church school supplies have been provided. We are coming to you this morning with no thought of asking you to pay expenses, though we know you realize that all these things have cost money. You and other people in other days and in other places have provided the necessary funds for this congregation to be formed here under such pleasant circumstances. The offerings presented this morning will be used to carry the gospel to other people in the Kansas City area wherever the need is most urgent and the opportunities appear the best.

This church teaches that the most important gift one can bring to God is the gift of himself. To symbolize the giving of one's self, as well as to help in the practical aspects of building the kingdom, the matter of the offering was instituted by our Heavenly Father in the very beginning. This is recorded in the Scriptures which tell the stories of long ago. God has always required that men shall enlist in the cause of the kingdom to help him do the work he has set out to do among men. The offering we bring this morning will be a symbol of our desires to help in that regard. In the degree to which we are willing to give according to our ability, each one decides for himself the measure of his willingness to offer himself in service to God.

One of the beauties of this part of the gospel is that it makes it possible for those who are rich and those who are poor to meet on a common ground. In this matter of offering, the amount which one gives as a symbol of his own devotion is left entirely up to the individual. That which God considers valuable is you. Money is needed, but it is a secondary value. He desires, therefore, that you shall give only that part of your total resources which will be sufficient to assure him that you are really willing to bring an offering according to the measure in which you have been blessed. I am reminded that long ago a certain widow cast two mites into the treasury and was commended for having given so much. It is pleasing to know that the Lord recognizes not the amount alone, but he recognizes the amount as it relates to one's ability. Thus it becomes possible for men of moderate means, or even men of wealth if they are sufficiently devoted, to receive the same commendation that has been given at various times to poor people who often seem so devoted.

We are asking you, therefore, as you consider your offering this morning, to consider it not in terms of expenses, nor in terms of habit, nor in terms of giving according to what other people might expect of you. Rather let your offering be a symbol of giving yourself. Let it be decided by your own analysis of your own personal situation. Take the overview. Make your own analysis of the various aspects of your life. Which do you consider most important? The acceptability of your offering depends not upon its amount, but upon the degree to which it accurately represents your ability and your devotion.

The offering on that occasion was beyond our expectation for such a small congregation. Numerous comments were received as to the way such an approach to the financing of a branch gives people a benefit from their church attendance which they could not possibly receive if they had been asked to give money to meet the branch expenses.

In some places we cannot say, "This church is paid for. We don't owe a dime." But we can express our confidence that the need and the expenses which we must meet will be amply provided for if everyone will bring his offering in the spirit of giving. It should become the habit of those in positions of leadership in the branches to emphasize the "offering" aspect of branch financing. Thus our branch financial program can effect direct results in the spiritual lives of our people.

"Follow Me"

him. Then he pauses. He turns slowly in your direction, searching the crowd for your face. Then he finds you, fixing his great eyes upon yours. He looks into the depths of your soul. His lips move, and he speaks to you, "Come, follow me!"

What answer will you give to the Son of God? What will the records of heaven say you replied to him in that moment when time, like your heart, stood still as eternity there on the hillsides of Galilee?

Regrets? God forbid. Rather, "My Lord, I follow thee!" L. J. L.

The European Situation

By D. BLAIR JENSEN, Apostle in Charge of European Mission

THE BALKANS are boiling again. All of the world watches with pointed interest the events and daily happenings which develop in this land bridge which lies between Europe and the Middle East. It is here that those movements which have foretold coming events of marked importance in the affairs of many nations have been first observed and felt. The geography of this Balkan peninsula emphasizes its full importance. Any nation which lies in the north of Europe and which has intentions and ambitions in the eastern Mediterranean must first be established in the Balkans. Germany under both the Kaiser and Hitler had these ambitions. Russia under the tsars looked in this direction. Soviet Russia has this interest.

The Balkan peninsula today is important in a world that is seeking and groping for peace, not only because of her strategic geographical location, but also because of the multitudinous and extremely intense territorial rivalries of her little nations. Some of these reach back through the centuries; and because of some of them, generations have spilled their blood and lost their lives. Out of the desperation of these rivalries of the Balkan nations, the aid and assistance of outside powers have often been sought in the past.

For the last third of a century, Jugoslavia has been the strongest of these Balkan states, and as such has had the largest number of enemies. Today Hungary, Bulgaria, and Albania hunger avidly for some of her provinces. Russia decries the independence of Jugoslavia's Tito. Daily there is talk of menacing troop movements in adjoining Balkan states. Verbal propaganda is being hurled generously and vitriolically against Tito. Anna Pauker, the Rumanian foreign minister, has even affirmed that he will not be in power much longer. Even as she is uttering this prophecy, suspicions are being voiced that her future is not too certain, and allegations are made that she is depositing personal reserves in countries that lie outside of the Cominform. Greece, with the advice and support of the West, has nearly vanquished her rebels. It was only because of the cool-headed, sane, and swift action of the Western Powers that she was restrained from pursuing these defeated and fleeing rebels into Albanian territory. Had she invaded that territory, she would have plunged the Balkans into open warfare. Out of Czechoslovakia comes evidence of revolts and rumor of pending revolts. They prove that peace has not come to Czechoslovakia. Published edicts reveal the fears, the tensions, and the uncertainties of her rulers.

ENGLAND is understandably weary with the heavy demands of the past decade. Her present government is almost the antithesis of that which has governed her in the past; this acute change from Tory to Labor was effected most abruptly and most completely. Her present monetary crisis is very real indeed; actually it reflects the crises in trade the world over. Within the past three years Britain's $2,500,000,000 gold and dollar reserves have fallen off to $1,370,000,000 as of September 1, 1949, and this in spite of some $6,000,000,000 that has been received from the United States in loans, Lend-Lease, and Marshall Plan aid. One hopes and prays that out of the councils of top-flight officials of the United States, Canada, and Great Britain and the machinery set up by them, there will eventuate trends that ultimately will make for those balances of trade that will bring sorely needed benefits to all citizens.

Holland meets with representatives of Indonesia, and hope mounts that out of these considerations there shall in due time come a free and a democratic Indonesia. France has been terribly scourged by forest fires. As she buries her dead and gazes upon her scorched earth, she cannot but be reminded that, in part at least, this destruction is laid at the doorstep of her neglect to reclaim and restore her soil and forests, now free for quite some years from the occupation. Russia is nervous as Danish, Norwegian, Swedish, and Finnish ministers meet to discuss the possibility of making unemployment insurance interchangeable between the four countries. If they are successful in this endeavor, the same will undoubtedly be done for the old-age pension. By such steps as these, a United States of Scandinavia would become a reality. Russia would not like this.

GERMANY moves forward. One feels that the frugality and realistic determination of her people will eventuate in the rebirth of a German Republic. Already the birth pangs of an emerging nation are evidenced. Tremendous and most obstinate hurdles are yet to be overcome and surmounted. Germany, like Caesar's Gaul, is divided into three parts, the East, the West, and Berlin. In Konrad Adenauer, Western Germany has found a leader of tried devotion to his nation. He is a man of strong Christian faith. Forty years of his life have been spent in public service. His enemies call him conceited and say that he is malicious and ruthless. His friends affirm that he is self-willed, and assert that he is tenacious and hard-hitting. Many occupation authorities are in agreement that at this stage of Germany's recovery, he is best fitted to lead his country until a new generation can rise to power.

At Strassbourg the Council of Europe has opened its session and is marred at the very outset by the clash of personality and idealism of Churchill and Morrison of England. Delegates to the Assembly are nominated by their respective governments and come free to speak and vote as they choose. As yet the question remains unanswered as to whether in the long run they will continue to sit as national delegations, irrespective of political party, or whether they will come to sit as political parties irrespective of nationality. This Council has come into existence by the popular demand of the citizens of Western Europe who are convinced that their nations must unite more closely or perish one by one. Today in this worthy endeavor, some 275,000,000 people are represented.

The International Relief Organization presents figures which reveal a decreased demand of 28 per cent for assistance as compared with the monthly average since it began operation in July, 1947. IRO has been the instrument through which approximately 500,000,000 refugees have been resettled. By June, 1950, when it is to terminate, some 170,000 people will be left dependent.

DURING THE YEAR of 1948 something like a quarter of a million American tourists visited Europe. In June of 1949, Western Germany was opened to visitors from abroad, and it is estimated that the tourist traffic for the current year will considerably exceed that of the previous season. As accommodations and other facilities are bettered, this tourist traffic should continue its increase. The commercial value to European nations is great. There is also a growing appreciation of the value of increasing the travel within the European family. It is a need, almost a mandate in fact, to become better acquainted with, to increase knowledge of, and to grow in sympathy with the other nations that there might develop a better understanding of their problems, hopes, and worthy achievements.

Finding the Lost Sheep

By O. C. HENSON

I KEEP SOME livestock on the small farm where I live. Last year it was sheep—the first I ever owned. It gave me much pleasure to feed them, to care for them, and to watch them grow.

Almost every day I went out into the pasture and counted them and watched the little lambs as they ran and played.

Sheep have enemies. One must be very careful that the dogs do not get among them. Sometimes some get lost from the fold and wander away, so a good shepherd will count his sheep often. The day came when I had to sell them, but after counting them, I discovered some were missing. I could not imagine what happened to them, but they were gone.

I kept back one ewe and her two small lambs as they were too small to sell. About three or four weeks later, I discovered that these two lambs had wandered away, so I had to search for them. At ten o'clock in the morning of this very day, I had an appointment to visit with a young man and his wife to whom I had been teaching the gospel. It was ninthirty, and I could spend a few moments in search for these last sheep. I hurried back over the fields, looking every where but could not find them. On my way back to the house, I passed the barn. Here I noticed a hole in the woven wire next to the bales of stored hay. I thought possibly they might have gone in at this place and fallen down behind the hay. There I found them behind prison walls too steep for them to climb.

Here also were the sheep and lambs which had strayed from the fold some weeks before. As I went down into the pit to rescue them, I became heartsick upon seeing the pitiful condition they were in. One had starved to death, the others were so poor they could hardly walk. I lifted them out and set them free, feeling somewhat that their suffering was due to my neglect.

LOOKING AT THEM I thought, "If I could have found them one day sooner, I might have saved the sheep that died." I was so sorry for my negligence that I got down upon my knees and asked God to forgive me for what had happened to these dumb animals. While I was praying, I heard the voice of the Redeemer of mankind say, "And so it is with the sheep of my fold. Some are dying, and some are starving to death because of a lack of spiritual food. Will you go and help to feed my sheep?"

I could not understand the words, "Will you go and help feed my sheep?" when at that very hour I had an appointment to go and explain the gospel to a family not in the fold. I answered, "Lord, I have been going out and feeding the sheep." Again I heard his voice, "Yes, but go now and by the power of my spirit, you shall be able to rescue some who are dying and starving to death."

It was then that my attention was directed to the sheep and the lambs already in the fold who have strayed and wandered away from God. My heart ached for them, and I felt sorrow such as I never had experienced before. This intense heaviness of heart remained with me all the day and even through the night, so that the thing I actually had seen in the morning was almost forgotten as my mind turned to the sheep of his fold.

As a result of this experience, I now have some conception of the sorrow which comes to our Heavenly Father when his children walk in forbidden paths and wander away from his fold, becoming imprisoned, behind dark walls of bondage and sin.

Someone Invited Me to Church

By MARGARET FARLEY SPERRY

SOMEONE INVITED ME to church!— And what happened? I found the church my mother had been seeking—but died without finding. And I found much more. Mother was looking for the New Testament church with apostles, spiritual gifts, et cetera. I found all this plus some latter-day trimmings: the Book of Mormon, record of the ancient Americans; the privilege of having a part in the restoration of Israel and assisting in the establishment of a city which will eventually show the world the way to peace and the possibility of living until the second coming of Christ.

How Mother would have appreciated this! But no one invited her to church—our church, I mean. She was reared a Methodist—and was baptized by sprinkling—but it didn't satisfy her. She'd read in the Scriptures that members of Christ's church were immersed, so she asked for immersion. This made her feel better, but she continued to attend other congregations when invited, hoping she might find a church that met all the New Testament requirements.

Sometimes, when I didn't want to get up on Sunday mornings, she reminded me that God expected us to attend some church, even if Christ's church was no longer in existence. I had less enthusiasm. I even had doubts about a God who would be so changeable as to have one kind of church organization in Christ's time, and an altogether different one in my day.

When I talked this way to Mother, she thought I sounded like an atheist—and it worried her. Someday I expect to learn that one of the first things she did when she got to the next world and learned that Christ's church existed on earth was to hunt up her family's guardian angels and beg them to lead our wandering footsteps toward The Church.

Perhaps that is why a new and enthusiastic church member, who lived in my neighborhood, invited me to services. I didn't attend the first time I was invited, but fortunately for me she was persistent.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH was the first speaker I heard, which gave me a good impression of the speaking ability of Reorganized Latter Day Saint ministers. There was a large crowd, but a friendly one. Many persons shook my hand and made me feel welcome. Someone gave me a tract. Someone else loaned me a Book of Mormon.

I continued to attend services—feeling like a fish that wanted to be caught but was afraid of being caught. My desire overcame my fear, however, and four weeks later I was baptized.

Perhaps it had been more than coincidence that some time prior to finding the church, I was given a copy of Stuart Chase's Mexico. I was so fascinated by this book that I read it many times. It opened up a new world to me, for previously I'd known very little about Mexico and her many Indians.

When I was reading the Book of Mormon, I felt the Spirit of God witnessing its truthfulness. Many times I looked up from the book, silently exclaiming, "This is true!"

Father didn't want me to be baptized, but I went ahead without his consent.

After studying the church books and meeting some of my new church friends, he consented to attend a service. The theme that day was "Why Hesitate About Making a Decision?" So he asked for baptism the next week.

Father was sixty-five then. He had used tobacco for many years, though his doctor had often advised him to quit. He told God he'd quit smoking (about three packs a day) if He'd permit him to join his church. God permitted, and Father quit.

I BECAME FRIENDS with a travel-minded family (I was poor, and they were generous) and had many fine trips with them, the crowning trip being to Mexico—"Land of my Dreams."

The church brought me in contact with the man I married. So I might say that my husband and three fine children are more "gifts of the gospel" to me.

Making practical application of Section 86 and other "words of wisdom" has brought me the best health of my life. No small gift this!

Then there's the gift of "freedom from fear." In a world where wars and rumors of wars, earthquakes, and tempests are on every hand, it's wonderful to recognize them as prophetic signs that are forerunners of the most wonderful era of the world's history.

Like most new members, I was filled with enthusiasm and tried to convert all of my friends, neighbors, and relatives.

Perhaps I made a nuisance of myself. At any rate, I was unsuccessful in most instances. My father and my brother's wife joined the church, but none of my other relatives, friends, or neighbors.

Eventually I settled down and became a "run-of-the-mill" Latter Day Saint, not trying very hard to convert anybody, losing much of my original enthusiasm. But the old flame didn't entirely die out. Occasionally I feel its glow. At this summer's reunion (particularly in the women's class) the small flame was fanned into a blaze. Again I want to convert the world.

Last night our family worship dealt with "The Unprofitable Servant," and I realized I was "it." I certainly had buried my talents. For each of us has at least one talent—that of warning our neighbor.

I am reminded, too, of all the neighbor may be seeking Christ's church as mother did.

I am reminded, too, of all the gifts the gospel has brought to me. And they were given to be shared—not hoarded!

Worship Suggestions for November

By Goldie Graham Zion

Theme for the Month:

WITH THANKFUL HEARTS

NOVEMBER 6, 1949

Theme: WE APPRECIATE THE GOSPEL

Call to Worship:

Lift up your heart and rejoice, for the hour of your mission is come; and your tongue shall be loosed, and you shall declare glad tidings of great joy unto this generation. You shall declare the things which have been revealed to my servant Joseph Smith, Jr. . . . thrust in your sickle with all your soul . . . and you shall be laden with sheaves upon your back, for the laborer is worthy of his hire.—Doctrine and Covenants 30: 2.

Opening Hymn: "I Love to Tell the Story," Saints' Hymnal, No. 306.

Invocation

Reading or Solo:

(Either read as a poem or sing to tune of "Admonition" or "What a Friend We Have in Jesus.")

We appreciate the gospel

'Tis our God's enduring word;

By obedience to his teaching

Our salvation is assured.

In his mercy he restored it,

By an angel once again;

Council, peace, and admonition,

In his words, so sweet and plain.

If you know then teach your brother;

Let him not remain in sin,

For before the throne of judgment

You shall with him stand again.

How much sweeter is your glory,

Greater still the joy you've won,

When you enter God's bright kingdom

And he says, "My child, well done."

—G. G. Z.

Theme Talk: "We Appreciate the Gospel."

Let us think about the word appreciate. Webster defines it: "To value, estimate the value, esteem highly, be sensible with." All of these meanings rightly apply to the gospel.

It is the nature of man to protect his own, his material possessions, and to accumulate more and more as he grows older; to work almost to the point of exhaustion to acquire these things for his security. One must be cautious and alert in accumulating the material blessings that he does not allow these things to come first, for love of God and his great gift to mankind—that of salvation through his Son—is man's first appreciation, if the right kind of love is in his heart.

God has blessed many in the church today with wealth, and many, many with abundance, and has promised sufficient to all the faithful. It is his desire that these great material blessings be shared so that there be equality according to his word.

Because of the supreme sacrifice of the Son of God for us, if we are faithful to the gospel to the end of our days, we shall be blessed while we live upon the earth, and then shall live again throughout eternity with Christ as our King.

And the Lord even the Savior shall stand in the midst of his people, and shall reign over all flesh.—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5.

And he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.—Revelation 21: 3.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5; Revelation 21: 3, 4; Doctrine and Covenants 110: 23.

Hymn: "More Love to Thee, O Christ!" Saints' Hymnal, No. 284.

NOVEMBER 13, 1949

Theme: WE ENJOY OUR FREEDOM

Call to Worship:

Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation possess it shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ.—Ether 1: 35.

Opening Hymn: "For the Beauty of the Earth," Saints' Hymnal, No. 18.

Invocation

Inspirational Reading:

I THANK THEE, GOD

I thank thee, God, that I may bow

To thee, and thee alone,

For freedom to serve a living God

And not one made of stone.

I thank thee, God, that I may bow

To a God that lives and breathes,

To one that loves and hears me now,

And my every action sees.

I love the freedom that I have

To kneel when'er I choose;

And may I ne'er so ill behave

That I this freedom lose.

—G. G. Z.

Theme Talks "We Enjoy Our Freedom"

Throughout the study of the Three Books, we are deeply impressed with the thought that God made every good thing for the blessing of mankind, his choice handiwork. No artist, no matter how great, how earnest, how well-trained, has ever been able to fully reproduce the perfect copy, either in color or scenic outline, of God's creations. All this the Father has made for the enjoyment of man, whom he placed on this earth. "Men are that they might have joy" (II Nephi 1: 115). Lovingly, trustingly he gave man his agency to live here and freely partake of all this beauty. God intended from the very beginning of time that man should live upon the earth in freedom. The special blessings offered in our land of America are to enjoy freedom to worship and live without bondage from any other nation if we will but serve God in righteousness. All promises of God are given on condition of obedience to his commandments. The penalty of disobedience to this particular promise is:

Whatsoever nation shall possess it shall serve God, or shall be swept off; for it is the everlasting decree of God. And it is not until the fullness of iniquity among the children of the land, that they are swept off.—Ether 1: 32, 33.

Let us daily thank God for our freedom, for it was bought at a great price, as was the gospel. If we are truly thankful, we will serve him in love, being assured of his everlasting promises to those who keep his commandments.

(Additional thoughts and scriptural references on the subject may be found in Lesson Thirteen of Book of Mormon Studies by Thelona D. Stevens.)

Scripture Reading:

If iniquity shall abound, cursed shall be the land for their sakes.—II Nephi 1: 14.

And if there be no righteousness, there be no happiness.—II Nephi 1: 90.

I hold forth and deign to give unto you greater riches, even a land of promise . . . upon which there shall be no curse when the Lord cometh . . . for the land of your inheritance . . . forever, while the earth shall stand; and ye shall possess it again in eternity, no more to pass away.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4.

Hymn: "Lest We Forget," Saints' Hymnal, No. 426.

Benediction.

NOVEMBER 20, 1949

Theme: WE ACKNOWLEDGE OUR ABUNDANCE

Call to Worship:

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths . . . Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.—Proverbs 3: 5-10.

Opening Hymn: "Faith of Our Fathers," Saints' Hymnal, No. 291.

Invocation

Inspirational Poem: (By four juniors or junior highs.)

First Child—HOME

I'm thankful for the home I have,
Where love and peace are near,
For all the things that make life good,
And for my family dear.
I'm thankful for a body strong,
For food and clothing, too.
My thanks belong to God above;
He blesses all I do.

Second Child—CHURCH

I'm thankful for this church I love,
For truth and guidance sure,
For Christ who came to show the way
And keep our spirits pure.
I'm thankful, too, for friends in Christ,
To guide the way I go,
For those who lead our youthful steps
Must righteous teachings know.

Third Child—LAND

I'm thankful for this beautiful land,
Made by the love of God.
Supplied with plenty by a Father's hand,
From the tree to the rich brown sod.
I love the flowers, the valley, and hill,
The seasons of the year;
Dear to me is this land of mine.
I am thankful I am here.

Fourth Child—FREEDOM

I'm thankful for the land so free,
It's a wonderful gift to man.
I know God wills we have liberty;
And protects it by his hand.
Men have died and suffered long
For the freedom we cherish today,
And with his help to make me strong,
I'll show America God's way.

Theme Talk: "We Acknowledge Our Abundance"

Something of the abundance of this land of ours is presented in Book of Mormon Studies by Thelona D. Stevens, page 80. Use this material and the promises contained in Deuteronomy 28: 1-13 at the beginning of the theme talk, concluding with these thoughts:

We who accept the gracious goodness of our Father owe to him a great debt which can be paid only in loving service. God is not so displeased with any people as with those who fail to acknowledge his hand in all things and thank him for his blessings. Those who are so abundantly blessed are expected to share them with others.

Scripture Reading: Mosiah 2: 9-50.

Hymn: "With all My Substance I Will Honor," Saints' Hymnal, No. 351.

Theme: WE COUNT OUR BLESSINGS

Call to Worship:

Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, forget not all his benefits.—Psalm 103: 1, 2.

Opening Hymn: "Praise Him, Praise Him," Saints' Hymnal, No. 10.

Reading or Solo:

(Either read as a poem or sing to tune of number 1 Saints' Hymnal.)

With joyful hearts and happy voices
Our song of thanks in love we raise.
In God our ransomed soul rejoices;
For all we give to him the praise.
United now we count our blessings,
For all the yield of this good land,
For all that goes to make life pleasing
Was given by our Father's hand.

E'en tho' a cloud may sometimes darken
What was before a perfect day,
A song and prayer will make it vanish,
And brighter still will be the way.
With grateful hearts, let's count our blessings,
And see the good at our command;
For all that goes to make life pleasing
Was given by our Father's hand.

Theme Talk: "We Count Our Blessings"

A people who has been so abundantly blessed should continually thank and praise God. Wise, grateful parents will plant very early in the hearts of their children—as soon as they are able to comprehend—the fact that God is the giver of all we enjoy and that he expects us to be cheerful, to "go forth with the sound of rejoicing," to look on the bright side, to count our daily blessings.

The ability to count blessings instead of misfortunes grows with practice. Just as one practices painting or singing or any skill, he can also learn to practice cheerfulness.

The ability to count blessings grows also with faith. In severe trials we may be able to see the loving hand of God lifting us up if we will cease to complain and bear a testimony of previous blessings.

Let us count our many blessings, "name them one by one." It may surprise us "what the Lord hath done."

Scripture Reading:

Be clean, be frugal, cease to complain of pain and sickness and distress of body Bear the burdens of body of which the Spirit of healing from the Lord in faith, or the use of that which wisdom directs does not relieve or remove, and in cheerfulness do whatever may be permitted you to perform that the blessings of peace may be upon all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9.

And inasmuch as ye do these things, with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts, and countenances; not with much laughter, for this is sin, but with a glad heart and a cheerful countenance; verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this the fullness of the earth is yours . . . —Ibid., 59: 4.

Verily I say unto you, that ye are chosen out of the world to declare my gospel with the sound of rejoicing, as with the voice of a trump; lift up your hearts and be glad, for I am in your midst, and am your advocate with the Father.—Ibid., 28: 2.

Hymn: "Praise Ye the Lord," Saints' Hymnal, No. 27.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

None to Give Away

By ELSIE TOWNSEND

YOU CAN'T KEEP them all, my dear. It's impossible. Think of them. You're selfish to want to keep them. Think how much more they could have if your brother adopted them," my mother said.

I did think. Five children! How could I expect to support and care for them alone? My husband's estate was small. My brother had written, "We'll take any number of them. We have none of our own."

But which one would I let go—to be adopted—which one? At night I looked at them when they were asleep. Not Beverly, my oldest, her father's pride. Nor Marjorie and Marilyn, the twins who were two years old. It couldn't be Jimmy, my only son, the exact replica of his father. It must be Joan, his little twin sister; Joan, the tiny, dimpled, curly-headed baby, whose happy smile made us glad. No, we didn't need her. She was really unnecessary. We had three girls already. She was the smallest. Surely it would be easier to give her up than any one of the others.

But the thought tore at my heart. Selfish! Perhaps I was selfish. Was it selfish to want to keep one's own children? I suppose so, for I couldn't give them the temporal things that my brother could. His home was beautiful. His income was that of a successful doctor. Always they had wanted a baby of their own. His wife would be such a good mother to my Joan.

Then came a letter from my brother, saying that they thought it would be easier if the baby were a few months' older. I felt as if I had been given a temporary reprieve from my sentence.

But each night for several months I seemed to go through the process of giving her up. She wouldn't miss us, surely, but we would miss her.

The winter was bitter cold as Montana winters often are. Except for rare occasions we were alone—the children and I.

ONE MORNING Beverly's face was flushed. She coughed hoarsely. Taking her temperature that evening I found it 104°. Sponge baths lowered it a bit. The other children were fretful. With so much flu all around us, I could hardly expect to escape entirely. But they'd been so very healthy. By Tuesday morning all five were ill.

The doctor started the thirty-mile drive through snowy, winter roads. Although there was much to do, time passed slowly as I waited for him. His car pushed its nose almost against our little log house before it stopped. He smiled at me quietly as he came into the house.

October

"Oh, World, I cannot hold thee close enough," must have been said of October. Is there another season in the year that makes our whole being vibrate from its sheer beauty as does October? There's a feel in the air—a tangy smell—an urge to be a part of the great out-of-doors—an exotic riot of color that belongs only to October.

It is as if, after the trials and tribulations of bringing a year through to the harvest, all nature joins in singing its "Hallelujah Chorus." Those last picnics, excursions into the woods, and football games fill the month with interest.

Then comes Halloween appropriately placed for refreshments of red apples, cider, and spicy ginger bread.

Remember Columbus made his visit to America in October about 450 years ago. Wasn't it nice of him to discover it? So many changes have been made since he did, would he know it if he could see it now?

Yes, progress, vast improvements—but have we grown with them? With the bountiful harvest, there has been a wealth of scientific achievement accumulated through the years. Wonder what might have been accomplished through these same years if we, with God's help, had worked as hard to improve ourselves, our families, and our communities. There could be a harvest there!

—Lula Carmichael

Saying very little he went from one child to the next, deftly taking temperatures, noting pulses. When he raised his head after examining Joan, he spoke tersely, "Better put her in the hospital. Bronchial pneumonia. You have your hands full taking care of the others."

"When, doctor?" I was determined to seem as calm as the doctor was, but little butterflies were beating their wings inside my stomach, for this was the first grave situation that I had faced since the children's father died.

"As soon as you can get her there," came his answer. "I'll make the arrangements at the hospital. Call me as soon as you get there."

He left a few sulpha pills, wrote a prescription, gave me some more instructions, and was gone in a whirl of snow.

I called a neighbor, four miles away, and persuaded her oldest daughter to come help me a few days.

In the evening the sulpha had lowered the temperatures of the other children, but Joan's hoarse cough left her choking for breath. The neighbor girl could take care of them for a few hours while I made the trip to the hospital with Joan. Starting the car with the temperature twenty degrees below zero was another task. But the car was my friend—it understood a crisis.

PUTTING JOAN in her warm little "bunny-suit" and zipping it to her chin took only a few moments. Her basket would be better for her, I decided. As I gave last-minute instructions to the girl about the care of the children, I was putting on my warmest coat, scarf, and other wraps. My cough was worse, but I had had so little sleep the last week.

On the way to the hospital, I rested as I drove. Soft snowflakes began to fall as I neared town. "Be dark soon," I warned myself. "Must hurry back home."

The nurses were so kind to Joan. Several remembered when she was born there. "Leave her basket here. We may use it," they suggested. "We'll put her in a ward, Room 105. But she'll have to have special nurses."

By that time the doctor had arrived. X rays were taken and the nurses let me into the darkroom to see the results.

"It is pneumonia. Look at those bronchial tubes," the doctor muttered.

Another doctor had come in. He went closer to the lighted plates. "Bad case!" he grunted. "She'll never completely outgrow it. Even when she's grown, she'll have to guard her throat." His speech was crisp and short, but not unsympathetic. He was an older doctor whom I had known for years.

"Never outgrow it." The words cut into my mind. They hurt. I must warn my brother of this. Someone else, not I, would be caring for her.

As I left the darkroom, a nurse met me in the hall. "Your special nurse has arrived. Do you want to talk to her before you go?"

The "special" was bending over Joan's basket as I entered the ward. She looked up. "Oh, Mrs. Townsend, it's your baby. I didn't know." Her face was so filled with solicitude. It was Miss Fergud who had been with my husband when he was dying.

"Yes, this is one of my youngest twins. I'll not worry about Joan since I know you're on the case, and I'll call every day."

Relieved, I patted Joan and said good-bye.

The keen cold felt good to me as I hurried down the front steps of the hospital. I breathed deeply, gaining strength from the invigorating air. The snow had quit falling and the stars were out. As I drove, I tried not to let my anxiety about the other children hurry my driving. The beauty of the night was restful. Bright moonlight pictured the mountains clearly. Majestic peaks, blanketed with deep, quiet snow pushed their shoulders into the star-studded sky. With David of old, I murmured: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help . . ." The thought helped me through the long ride home and carried me into the house.

Quietly the neighbor girl spoke from the bedroom. "They're much better. All asleep. Jimmy's had his 9 o'clock bottle. Coming to bed?"

THE NEXT THREE DAYS the children at home improved gradually. Twice a day I called for news of Joan, but the hospital would give me no definite information. "Condition about the same" was the usual answer.

Friday morning the idea that I must hurry to the hospital obsessed me. By noon I was on my way. It was difficult to keep my foot pressure light on the accelerator. I wanted to go faster and faster. I pulled up at the hospital, covered the car with a blanket, and ran up the steps into the big building. Doctor K met me in the hall.

"I was just going to call you, Mrs. Townsend," he said, "Joan is very low. Her temperature can't be held down. White count very high. Won't take any nourishment nor water. She can't live if this goes on."

As he talked I was walking toward Joan's room, the doctor following. Nearing the ward I recognized my baby's weak crying. I slipped off my coat as I entered the room, smiled at the nurse who was trying to coax Joan to drink the bottle of milk, took the baby in my arms and began to hum an old lullaby. Joan settled quietly against my breast for a few minutes.

"Has she been crying long?" I whispered to the nurse.

"Almost all the time," she answered quietly.

Joan stirred and began to cry again. I resumed my humming as I picked up the bottle from the stand by the bed. Again she quieted as I sang. Gently I put the nipple against her mouth. At first she refused it, but after a little coaxing, she opened her mouth and began hungrily to take the milk.

Fascinated, the nurse and the doctor watched; then the doctor spoke. "I wouldn't have believed it. A baby six months' old homesick! You stay with her. It is the only medicine that can make her well." And nodding to the nurse, he left the ward.

"I'll get a rocking chair for you," the nurse offered. Still I watched the milk disappear in the bottle—two ounces, four ounces. I wiggled the nipple in her mouth. Sleepily she emptied the bottle. Softly I talked to the nurse. She asked about the other children.

"Don't you want to try to lay her down?" she suggested at last.

Slowly I eased the sleeping baby onto the little bed and stretched my arms. But in an instant that fretful weak cry came again. Restlessly she moved and cried. I took her in my arms again, spoke to her soothingly. A few sobs and she was quiet. For hours I held her as she slept. Often she woke and cried but quieted always when she was aware that I was holding her. Every three hours she took a bottle of milk. The special nurse had gone off duty. Lights were turned low. Only now and then the rubber-heeled footsteps of a hurrying nurse sounded in the hall.

About midnight Joan was quiet for so long that I tried again to lay her in the bed. This time she didn't stir as I gently covered her and tiptoed from the room, taking my coat with me. Catching a nurse in the hall, I explained. "I'm going to curl up on the davenport in the waiting room and sleep a while. Wake me if she stirs."

"I will, Mrs. Townsend. Your eyes look so heavy. Do sleep." She put her hand on my shoulder as she passed.

"How kind the nurses are," I thought as I stretched out on the davenport. Caring for children had taught me to relax whenever I could. Almost instantly I was asleep.

A GENTLE PRESSURE on my shoulder aroused me. Penetrating my consciousness was a voice.

"She's crying again. Want to come?"

I looked at my watch, then hurried to my feet. The nurse led me down the dimly lighted hall to the ward. Joan's wailing cry reached us before we neared the door. Hastily I picked her up and quieted her. How light she was! But her hot little body seemed somewhat cooler than it had in the afternoon. For hours I held her, laying her down once in a while when I went out in the very cold winter air to walk a few minutes.

When morning came, I called home. The slow, steady voice of the neighbor girl reassured me that all was well there.

For longer periods Joan slept. Her temperature dropped gradually to normal—to below normal—to ninety-six degrees. About four o'clock in the afternoon she became very quiet. Her pulse was faint, her breathing almost undetectable. I watched her closely. At last I went to the telephone and called the doctor.

"She's so very quiet. Can you come tell me? She's reached the crisis, I believe. But I must know whether she'll live or not," I told him.

As I waited for him, I found my heart praying, "Dear God, don't let her die. Don't ask me to give her up. I can't go home and tell the children that she's dead. I told them of their father's death just three months ago. Please don't make me carry another message like that. It would break their hearts. They love her so. She's part of us . . ."

The doctor entered quietly, bent over the baby, listened and looked, talked to the nurse on duty. "She'll get well, I think, Mrs. Townsend. Stay with her today, and you can take her home tomorrow."

The tears stood in my eyes as I said huskily, "Thank you, doctor." I could say no more.

But silently I was saying, "Thank you, dear God. We'll keep her. She needs us, and we need her."

Never again did I consider letting a child be adopted.

Future Features

"The Joys and Sorrows of Our Lord," by Elbert A. Smith in the October 10 issue brings the Master closer to mankind. "The Kansas City Times" runs a feature story of the showing of the Book of Mormon manuscript. Read about it in next week's "Herald."

HONOLULU, HAWAII.—The first official reunion ever held in Hawaii, since the gospel was brought there over fifty years ago, convened at Camp Erdman, Mokuleia, about forty miles from Honolulu from August 8 through August 14. It was considered one of the finest projects ever attempted there. About eighty-six registered for the entire week. The peak attendance was about 130 on the last day.

The Camp Administration Committee was composed of Elders Howard F. Miller, James Kemp, and Prescott A. Foo, together with Avon Yap who was in charge of the registration and transportation. The theme of the reunion was "Witness for Christ," which seemed to be carried into the attitudes of each camper, both young and old.

Elder Charles Lee was in charge of the daily morning worship, which followed a flag-raising ceremony at 7:00. He also had charge of administration of the sick. Registered nurses Grace Lee and Leila Miyamoto provided professional services during the reunion. Music was in charge of Puarose Mahi. Fine music was provided by Elder and Mrs. James Kemp, Helen Norwood, Maxine Bowman, Iola Bradshaw, Ethel Miller, Emma Kaawakauo, and Junior and Beatrice Mahi.

Mrs. Eriel Miller supervised the hostess work in the dining room and chose her assistants each day to help wait on the tables. Meals were prepared and dishes were washed by the camp's permanent staff.

Henry Inouye was official lifeguard and John Ledo was chief of police. Mrs. Emily Inouye and Mrs. Marie Ledo led classes and games for the younger children. A camp bulletin, Ka Hoike Kuikau, or "The Daily Witness," was published daily, with Lois Foo as editor.

Camp Erdman is excellently equipped for reunion purposes. The dining hall and assembly halls are centrally located and on both sides in a semi-circle are the cabins, enough to accommodate a total of over 100 persons. These cabins are all comfortably arranged, each having a private bath with hot and cold water in lavatory and shower. In the foreground is the Pacific Ocean, and in the background a majestic mountain range.

It is estimated that there were twelve to fourteen different nationalities represented. The majority of those at the reunion were young people. There were swimming, fishing in the ocean, hikes up the mountain, baseball, volleyball, colored slides, and campfire, besides the special classes and the general classes in which the young people took part. At the closing prayer service, there were thirteen prayers and fifty-two testimonies. Elder Howard F. Miller and two assistants presided at the daily prayer services.—Reported by EMMA RUTH BROMANN.

BLUE RAPIDS, KANSAS.—Following a series of meetings conducted by Seventy J. Charles May, nine new members were baptized on July 31.

NORTHWEST REUNION.—The Northwest Reunion, held at Silver Lake, near Everett, Washington, was better attended by regular campers than any previous year. Between one thousand and one thousand one hundred campers remained throughout the entire time. On Saturdays and Sundays the attendance was almost doubled.

It is the general opinion that this was not only the best attended but most uplifting reunion ever held at Silver Lake. Many suggest that the campers started the reunion where they left off last year. This was in part realized because of a large group of workers under the leadership of the grounds committee, Elders Elliott Gilberts, Harold Johnson, Vic Mesher, and Sig Freestad; Bishop Monte Lasater, Rose Lasater, Eva Lundeen, and Effie Verhei, who had the camp and facilities in shape after two weeks' hard work.

Leaders were Dr. F. M. McDowell, Apostle C. G. Mesley, Mrs. Blanche Mesley, Seventy Arthur Gibbs, Elder Paul Wellington, Elder Elwin R. Vest, Mrs. Peggy Vest, Mrs. Wana McDole, Elder Harold Carpenter, Bishop M. E. Lasater, Evangelist Frank Curtis, Evangelist Adolph Lundeen, Elder Ray Sowers, Mrs. Effie Verhei, Elder J. L. Verhei and Elder Kenneth L. Graham.

Dr. F. M. McDowell instructed the priesthood for two periods each day and brought to them a new experience in the meaning and functions of priesthood. He preached to and taught the general gathering with inspiration and power from on high, and with the impelling power that Joseph Smith and others must have had when the church was organized.

Apostle and Sister C. G. Mesley brought to the reunion a great ministry. Their teachings and leadership were such that a calm sense of peace and security settled over the entire camp until there wasn't a bit of discontentment or discouragement. They gave leadership at every juncture. The people will not soon forget the after-service fellowship hours brought by them and their son Gordon. He also assisted greatly with the music and morning devotions.

The Saints enjoyed the teachings of Elder and Sister Elwin R. Vest who came to the reunion on their way to his new assignment as missionary to the Oregon District. Elder Vern Webb shared his experiences with the Saints on his way to his new assignment as pastor to the Spokane Branch.

Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs taught, preached, and associated in all activities giving leadership and emphasis in missionary work. Elder Kenneth L. Graham represented the Herald House by operating a bookstore, and he gave the reunion a ministry through that avenue that was respected and appreciated.

A new feature added to the attraction of the Northwest Reunion, was the barbeque salmon dinner featured by Elder L. R. White, a former district president. This will be a regular reunion feature on Friday hereafter. Each year Brother White plans to barbeque several hundred pounds for the entire camp.

The recreation for youth and the entire camp was under the very capable leadership and direction of Elder Paul Wellington, pastor of the Seattle Branch, who directed more of these events than have been held previously.

The church school for children was under the direction of Elder Harold Carpenter and a large group of teachers and assistants. This department overcrowded every building and overtaxed all facilities provided for them.

Sister Effie Verhei guided the functions for the women.

The same leadership has been selected to operate the 1950 reunion with the exception that Elders Granville Swenson and Carl Hammel have been added to the reunion committee. Brother Swenson is the new president of the Seattle District, to replace Elder Elma Johnson, released because of illness. Elder Hammel is the new president of the Spokane District.

Apostle C. G. Mesley closed the reunion with an inspiring sermon. The former district president of the Seattle District, Elder Carl Oliver, offered the invocation, and Elder Carl Hammel gave the final benediction.—Reported by J. L. VERHEI.

RIDGEFIELD, WASHINGTON.—On Sunday, August 14, three new members were baptized into the church. They were Ronald Becker and Robert Snead, baptized by Elder Milton Becker, and Ralph Chapman, baptized by Elder F. E. Chapman. Confirmation services were held the following Sunday, August 21.—Reported by RUTH PHILLIPS.

KENTUCKY-TENNESSEE REUNION.—The women's class of the Kentucky-Tennessee Reunion met at ten o'clock each morning for an hour session Monday through Saturday. Mrs. W. Wallace Smith was the instructor. There was an average attendance of twenty-one for the week.

As the women sat in the classes, they were taught that in order to have "each one win one," they must be mentally, spiritually, and physically fit. Mentally fit through study, spiritually fit through prayer, and physically fit through compliance with the word of wisdom. Sister Smith stressed that our homes should be expressive of Latter Day Saintism, that our children must be disciplined. They should be properly taught the principles of the gospel so that they are ready to ask for baptism when they are eight years old. She stated that this training should start in the prenatal period by dedicating the life of the child to the service of the Master. The women were encouraged to be valiant in testimony, to strengthen and support their husbands in their offices in the church. There was strong emphasis placed upon working to improve our branches. "Use the trained talent in music if there be any, co-operate with the pastor, ask him to visit delinquent members, visit them yourselves, and use your talents with an eye single to the glory of God," said Sister Smith.—Reported by ADA FARRIS.

LOW BANKS, ONTARIO.—On Sunday, August 7, two young people were baptized in the beautiful waters of Lake Erie and confirmed after the Communion service. Those baptized were Ann Light Hart, confirmed by her uncle, Elder Archie Dayton, and Ronald Dayton, confirmed by his grandfather, Elder Harry Dayton.—Reported by Mrs. HENRY J. MINO.

CASH, MICHIGAN.—The Eastern Michigan District Reunion held on the Cash reunion ground was a great source of inspiration and strength to all who attended. From the morning prayer services to the concluding campfires in the evening, the reunion breathed the spirit of evangelism under the general church theme, "Witness for Christ."

The response given to Elder Blair McClain in the morning prayer services, followed by the class periods instructed by Bishop Ted Beck, Elders Blair McClain and James Phillips, Mrs. McClain, Lillian Dunlap and her assistants, marked a new high in the growth of the people toward an increased need of working for Christ. The preaching ministry brought each week night by Elder Virgil Billings stressed the great need of building the kingdom. Apostle A. A. Oakman on the last week end spoke to an overflow crowd on the need of the church to grow up to fulfill her mission.

Camp activities included also a women's candlelight dedication service, a tea and a bazaar, youth campfires, a hayrack ride, and a children's achievement program.

Preceding the last afternoon preaching service, seven people were baptized in the Cash church.—Reported by MRS. ISABEL PHILLIPS.

LOS ANGELES AND SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA REUNION.—Attendance at the 1949 combined reunion of the Los Angeles Metropolitan and Southern California Districts was the largest in the history of this area. All camp facilities were used, and a number of applications had to be turned down. There were approximately five hundred campers, and week-end visitors swelled attendance to over one thousand for some services. Offerings and registration fees totaled a little over $1,800 which met all reunion expenses and added $1,000 to the reunion ground funds. Reunion was held at Pacific Palisades July 29 to August 7.

Apostle Charles R. Hield was in charge of the reunion assisted by two district presidents, Garland Tickemyer of Los Angeles Metropolitan and Rodney Engel of the Southern California District.

The theme of the reunion, "Witness for Christ," was carefully developed in prayer services, classes, and sermons. General church emphasis on the training of youth was well illustrated in the children's and youth programs. Mrs. Mayme Blakeman was general director of children's activities, and Elder Herald Wixom acted as junior pastor. A well-balanced program of music, classwork, calisthenics, stories, worship, and handcraft followed, supervised by able leaders from both districts. Junior church at 7:30 each evening was under the direction of Glen Holmes, the children generally joining the adults afterwards to participate in the friendship hour. For the junior high group, John Davis, pastor of the Long Beach Branch, acted as general director, supervising classwork, Bible drill, and handcraft. Garland Tickemyer was director of young people's activities, assisted by Vern Webb, Jack Van Eaton, Royce Foster, and Ava Carmichael. On Tuesday Brother Webb was ordained to the office of elder by Herbert Blakeman and Apostle Hield. Brother Webb left the next day for Spokane, Washington, to assume pastoral duties as a General Church Appointee.

Both drama and music helped to stress the theme of the reunion. Preceding each evening's service a short, effective dramatization was given. The Friendship Hour at the end of the day featured singing, dramatic skits, and a serious closing devotional thought.

On Friday evening the service was devoted entirely to music and drama. The children's choir sang, there were motion pictures and a play, "Passport to Heaven," written and directed by Marie Sturtevant and presented by the Compton Branch. On Sunday evening, after a sacred concert, a most inspiring tableau, "The Last Supper," under the direction of Ava Carmichael, was presented by the men of the Santa Ana Branch.

Fine musical programs were under the general direction of Luella Wight and Mary Ethel Cooper. Branch choirs in the two districts participated, and each morning preceding prayer service, Erlita Covalt, violinist, played during meditation.

Classes and panel discussions were conducted by the following general church men: Apostle Charles R. Hield, Bishop J. Stanley Kelley, Elders George Njeim, John W. Rushton, Peter Whalley, Garland Tickemyer, and Albert Carmichael. They were assisted by Patriarch L. J. Ostertag, Bishop David Carmichael, and men of the local priesthood. The women of the church conducted panel discussions after classes under the general direction of Hazel Gregg and led by various women leaders in the two districts.

On Wednesday afternoon, August 3, the women of the Southern California District were hostesses to the whole reunion at a reception honoring Dr. Ambrose Wilson Teel who served as General Church Physician from October, 1928, to April, 1947. Dr. Teel was escorted to the platform by two close friends, John W. Rushton and L. J. Ostertag, the group rising in respect as he was seated. Brother Rushton read a letter of congratulations and good wishes from the First Presidency of the church and added his own felicitations, speaking movingly of the long years of devoted service to the church. Brother Ostertag then presented Dr. Teel with a gift from the assembled group. All present came up to shake hands, led by Apostle Hield and Bishop Kelley.

Mrs. Rodney Engle, R. N., was in charge of First Aid, and with skill and devotion, truly ministered to those who had need of her services.

A well-equipped nursery, under the supervision of Mrs. Hazel Gregg, was a busy and popular place for the very young, permitting mothers to attend services.—Reported by PHYLLIS CARMICHAEL.

PONCA CITY, OKLAHOMA.—Miss Leola Hutchinson and Mrs. Cecil Jackson issued invitations to the church members in Kay and part of Osage Counties to attend a meeting on Sunday, August 21, to organize a church school. Victor J. Witte, Central Oklahoma District President, sent Elder W. J. Sherman of Tulsa, to be in charge of the organization meeting assisted by S. R. Stephens, also of Tulsa. Brother Stephens was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour.

Robert J. Cavanaugh, Ponca City, was elected church school director; Graham S. Hart, assistant director; Mrs. Graham S. Hart, children's division leader; Miss Leona Hutchinson, secretary; J. C. Bowder of Kay City, as treasurer.

The classwork will be held in the homes of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Jackson, 118 East Gary Street, and Mrs. Lula Jackson, 114 East Gary Street, each Sunday morning at ten o'clock.

Other priesthood members present were Paul Storms, priest, of Lyman, Oklahoma, and Elder Oscar Case from Independence, Missouri. Brother Case preached that evening on the subject, "The Restitution of all Things."—Reported by MRS. GRAHAM S. HART.

ESSEX, ONTARIO.—During the past year about a dozen Dutch people half of them members of the church, have settled a few miles from Essex. Not being able to speak English very well, we have commenced a class for them to meet every two weeks during the church school hour, when they can learn our quarterlies in their own language, also the language of their adopted country. Brother Harry Scherer, who can speak both languages, has volunteered to teach them. We hope that will make them feel right at home in their own church.

Essex group, of about seventy some three years ago, has not yet overcome the loss of about twenty-four of their members, and nearly all the priesthood, moving to Missouri. It left but two ordained men, Elder Gordon Brown, and Frank Eldridge, priest, both of whom are usually on duty during service time. The district is helping by sending Elder James Pycok, once a month, and other visiting ministry. Advancement is being made, although it is not easily accomplished.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—The Highbury House was the scene for the daily vacation church school from August 8 to 19. Forty-six students were enrolled in the school with an average attendance of thirty. Of the total number of students, twenty were R. L. D. S.

Apostle Arthur A. Oakman visited the branch and occupied the pulpit on Sunday evening, August 21. The congregation appreciated his ministry and the spiritual insight and understanding accompanying his work.

MISSION, ILLINOIS.—Signposts are being erected to point the way to the church in this vicinity. A sign reading "To L. D. S. Church" will be on Route 71, four miles south of Route 52, at the Danway Road. Make the turn as indicated on the sign. After that turn, there will be an arrow at each corner where a turn is to be made, which will indicate the way to go.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Dare to Be Different! - By Ruth Midgorden Goodwin

NOT LONG ago a news story appeared in our local paper with these headlines:

JACKIE SKILLINGS ASKS $79,000 FOR PIPE INJURIES. HARP OIL COMPANY BLAMED WITH LACK OF SAFETY DEVICES.

The story read: A $79,000 damage suit has been filed in district court against O. G. Harp, Shawnee, by the father of Jackie Skillings, 12-year-old youth hurt on Harp's property.

Jackie was critically injured April 12 when he was pinned under two 900-pound, 36-foot oil well casings which rolled off a three-foot pipe rack.

... Skillings's petition claims the pipe rack was "alluring, attractive and dangerous to children playing on the railroad right-of-way."

As a result of the accident, the story goes on to say, the boy suffered shock, bruises, a brain concussion, back and kidney injuries, a fractured pelvis, and injury to eye and head muscles.

* * *

I called my dairy to order some extra milk one day. "Oh, Mrs. Goodwin!" exclaimed the secretary, her voice warm and friendly. "We certainly do thank you for making the correction on your bill. Not many customers tell us when we make a mistake in their favor."

"Shawnee sure is a dead town," the taxi driver offered. "There ain't nothing here to do—no place to dance. You have to go to Oklahoma City. Can't do much here except go to the movies and to church."

* * *

A few months ago I questioned my doctor about whole milk for our little daughter. "Keep her on evaporated milk until she's three years old, if she'll take it," he advised. "I know it's sterile, and the dairies in this town aren't safe."

He explained that the dairy from which we buy milk doesn't always have enough pasteurized milk to supply its customers' demands, especially in the winter months. "So when the fresh milk comes in the morning, the owner mixes it with the pasteurized, to keep his bacteria count down, bottles it, and sells it as pasteurized whole milk," the doctor said.

"But the man who owns the dairy is an A and M graduate," I puzzled. "He has a degree from an agricultural college and knows the many diseases that can break out because of impure milk."

"Sure, I know," returned the doctor. "But what can he do? His customers want the milk, and he has to supply it some way. I can't really blame him. You or I would do the same." I remember how it hit me when the doctor matter-of-factly said, "You or I would do the same." He actually believed I would! How could I explain to him that I would rather sell less milk and have it be safe.

* * *

The taxi driver thought our town was dead. I know it is, in many respects, but not in the more or less unimportant way he mentioned. Shawnee is no night spot. There isn't much to do except go to the movies, a sandlot baseball game, or to church. But wouldn't the taxi driver give me a "is-she-nuts?" look if he knew we had breathed a sigh of relief to find out that almost everyone in Shawnee seemed to go to church on Sundays and many to midweek services?

* * *

The dairy's secretary regarded my correcting an error on her bill as unusual. It was an error of two quarts of milk, a total of 40 cents, nothing that would break the dairy up—unless it were multiplied several hundred times. To me, as to any Latter Day Saint, I believe, it was a matter of simplest honesty and fairness.

* * *

The story of Jackie Skillings is a sad one and more complicated. It is unfortunate—and it was unnecessary—that the boy was hurt. But there must be another side to this story. Here are some ideas:

1. Posted on the oil company's property were "Keep Off" signs and other warnings about trespassing. Jackie Skillings, being twelve years old, can read. And certainly a twelve-year-old boy can realize there would be some danger involved around such heavy equipment.

2. There is a law which makes an employer liable for any injury to any person on his property—even if that person has no business there, even if he is a flagrant violator of "keep out" and "no trespassing" signs. It is unfair, but it is a law which lawyers, good and bad, know about.

3. Jackie Skilling does not live in a slum area—he lives a very few blocks from a city park which has playground equipment, swimming pool, croquet lawn, and in the summer a miniature train.

4. There remains in my mind from childhood a white sign with black letters, "Keep Off, Railroad Property."

5. O. G. Harp is a rich man. He not only has oil interests, but also owns a large food company.

Should the picture be clearer? If reading between the lines in this case can be accurate—and there is no way for me to tell—it sounds like a squeeze play to get $79,000 that isn't due the petitioner. Jackie was injured severely, there's no doubt about that. And I'm sure the pipe rack was alluring and attractive. But so was the blue-white glow from my father's welder when I was that age. I never watched it, though, for I got one of the most rigorous warnings of my life and a promise of banishment from my father's shop—a terrible punishment—if I didn't obey the rule set down for my own good.

* * *

The challenge to be a Latter Day Saint is practically synonymous with the ringing words delivered to a high school audience several years ago—"dare to be different!" The building of Zion will wait until we mold into our lives and into our children's lives and into our friends' lives the principles the Master teaches us. Simple honesty will not be thought of as an unusual occurrence; a town whose citizens regularly go to church will not be considered "dead"; intelligent people will not risk the lives of other people's children for the sake of more dollars; and there will not be the constant attempts to gain material wealth that is not due nor to "get something for nothing."

If you are a Latter Day Saint, you have no choice. Either you believe, work, and fight on God's side, or you work and fight against him, for there is no neutral ground. When you must be unlike other people in order to stay on God's side, dare to be different—do not be afraid!

His Servants - By JOHN CHURCHMAN

IN 1923 an important meeting was held at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago. Attending this meeting were nine of the world's most successful financiers. They were the president of the largest independent steel company, the president of the largest utility company, the president of the largest gas company, the greatest wheat speculator, the president of the New York Stock Exchange, a member of the president's cabinet, the greatest "bear on-

Arthur Cotton, wheat speculator, died abroad insane. Howard Hopson, gas company president, also went insane. Leon Fraser, president of the Bank of International Affairs; Jesse Livermore, the Wall Street "bear," and Ivan Krueger, monopolist, all committed suicide. Albert Fall, cabinet member, was pardoned from prison so that he could die at home. And Richard Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, served a long sentence in Sing Sing.

All of these men learned well the technique of making money, but not one discovered the art of Zion living.

IN ORDER that we may co-operate for a common welfare, God has given us a plan for building a community in which the spirit of brotherhood may exist in both temporal and spiritual affairs. Such a social order can be established only through the development of skill in human relationships and in the training of hands, hearts, and minds to do the will of God.

We must devote our talents to living more abundant lives if we would establish Zion. We must choose vocations with consideration as to how they will fit in with the goals of the church. Our highest calling is to reveal Christ in our social relationships. Good will, fair play, tolerance, open-mindedness, patience, and faith must be applied to our everyday living—in business, in the home, in all our contacts—before we can hope for Zion.

We must remember that all the material things we possess in this world will belong to someone else the day of our death, but what we are will determine our place in eternity. The time we give, the service we render, the tithes and offerings we bring to God will be a blessing forever.

Here Is the Writer

John Churchman, a native of Jersey City, New Jersey, speaks three languages — Ukrainian, Polish, and Spanish—in addition to English. He is of Ukrainian descent and was reared in the Greek Catholic faith but joined the Reorganized Church about a year and a half ago. During the war he served as refrigeration and air-conditioning engineer at Burinquen Field, Puerto Rico. Following the war, he and his wife, the former Jane McGraw, made their home in Miami, Florida. Recently they sold their house and bought a trailer: they are now living near the campus at Graceland, where both will attend this fall. John's ambition is to take the gospel to foreign lands. Jane will major in teacher training—and religion.

The Churchman's have two sons: James, 4, and Robert, 3.

Wall Street," the head of the world's "greatest monopoly," and the president of the Bank of International Settlement. Certainly we must admit that here was a group of what could be termed successful men—at least they had found the secret of making money.

Twenty-five years later it was a different story. The president of the steel company, Charles Schwab, spent the last five years of his life on borrowed money. Samuel Insull, utility company president, died a fugitive from justice in a foreign country.

New Horizons

When justice temporarily disappears, as at Dachau, the world dissolves at that point. Were Dachau to become general in time and place, hell would have arrived. But if justice exists, it rules and must rule through all time and place, or it were not just. It is eternal and incorruptible. It can permit, therefore, no frustration of its good ends whether by death or accident or carelessness or malice, being just.

THE APPROACH TO GOD

The cultivation of talent and all great human powers cannot then be wasted, and these qualities must hurdle the flimsy barriers of death. If this be not so, then this world is foolish beyond belief, drunken on an orgy centuries long, a silly concentration camp whose brutality is aimless but finally inescapable, and we do well to give up all reflection, effort, and decency forthwith. Even a child expects more than this of his world. Shall we who are older have less good sense in the midst of its beauty and bounties—we who have been blessed by the love of mothers, wives, and children?

Prayer is merely an approach to the Infinite Being. He is apparently accessible to other approaches, even those not willed by us. If he is powerless to whom we appeal and curbed on every hand by the habits of atoms, then, but then only, can intercessory prayer be useless. I share a more exalted view of Infinite Power and still insist that this view of that Power makes him much less than capricious, for caprice is irresponsible.

Science really is a function of men's growing minds, and my practical experience with scientists indicates that these minds are not always well grown. But men are not all mind. Religion is the product of the soul's growth, and of those gifts of the Almighty which favor it. The whole man either grows symmetrically or becomes a caricature of our kind. God pity the scientific man who lacks religion and the religionist who ignores the data of science! God pity our world unless we can marry this Montague to this Capulet!

This is Europe, or rather that part of it which has become the racial parent of the United States, Canada, and Australia. In this area the Restored Gospel has been established. Throughout this suffering continent, it has been spreading at a quickened tempo. God has gone before, his voice sounding above the din of strife. The beauty of his message stands clearly portrayed in the presence of awful destruction. His peace has brought serenity to the uncertain and the distressed. His way stands forth clearly as the final hope. In his Christ and in his gospel there is life. Of these things the testimony that comes out of Europe this day is most certain.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. H. B. Moncur, Box 254, Rupert, Idaho, requests prayers for her husband who is in poor health.

Mrs. Samuel Hunt, Sr., of Emmett, Idaho, requests prayers for her five-year-old grandson Dickie, who must walk with crutches because the bone in his life leg is softening. She would particularly appreciate having the Saints unite in prayer on Sunday, October 2, and Wednesday, October 5, and also asks that they pray for the boy's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hunt, Jr.

THE MAN FROM NAZARETH

As His Contemporaries Saw Him

By Harry Emerson Fosdick

This work is the fruit of long and careful study of the Christian and Jewish literature of the time of Christ and of the emerging of the Christian church. It is the first book, on the basis of modern research, to picture Jesus as others saw him. Dr. Fosdick enables us to put ourselves in the place of ordinary people of that time and thus to see the man called the greatest figure in history.

Sergeant Robert Creorston, son of William and Opal Creorston of Poplar Bluffs, Missouri, and Helen Marie Richmann, daughter of George and Mabel Richmann of Indianapolis, Indiana, were married August 7 at the Reorganized Church in Indianapolis. Evangelist Arthur W. Gage officiated.

DEATHS

SOPER.—John K., son of Samuel and Amy Hall Soper, was born May 1, 1865, near Welland, Ontario, and died July 1, 1949, at Independence, Missouri. He moved with his parents to Michigan in 1870, where he was baptized into the Reorganized Church. Following his ordination to the office of priest, he traveled as a missionary with Elder J. J. Cornish. In March, 1890, he was married to Grace Winegall; five children were born to them: Mrs. Edith Campbell of Comins, Michigan; Mrs. May Geiser of Ottoville, Ohio; Mrs. Florence Tuttle of Edmore, Michigan; Mrs. Grace Kuder of Vicksburg, Michigan; and Jay P. Soper of Barberton, Ohio. Following the death of his wife, Grace, he married Aletha M. Ward; four children were born to this union: Asa; Ernest, and Lloyd of Independence; and Mrs. Eva Dexter of Lansing, Michigan. Brother Soper moved to Independence in 1936 and continued to serve the church as long as his health permitted. He did not live to occupy the new home he had helped to build in Independence and in which his widow resides alone. Funeral services were held in the Gudgeon Park Reorganized Church, Elders George Davis and Clyde Gault officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

GREENWOOD.—Joseph H., son of George and Mary Greenwood, was born January 14, 1869, at Bagdon City, Utah, and died at his daughter's home in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on August 16, 1949. Soon after his birth, the family left Utah for St. Louis, Missouri, living there about four years and then moving to Iowa. In July, 1901, he married Olive Somerville, who preceded him in death last year.

He is survived by four sons: Harry and George of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Alvin and Will of Dunlap; two daughters: Mrs. Ruth Carlson of Council Bluffs, and Mrs. Charlotte Poitevin of Dow City, Iowa; eight grandchildren; and thirteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in Dow City.

PRICE.—Mary Adeline, daughter of Howell and Jane Lewis Price, was born October 22, 1887, at Bevier, Missouri, and died July 22, 1949, at the St. Joseph Hospital in Ottumwa, Iowa. She had made her home in Ottumwa since 1894 and was employed in the county auditor's office for seven years. She was a member of the Reorganized Church.

Surviving are five sisters: Mrs. Annie Howells, Mrs. Ed Hughes, and Mrs. Maggie Wilkinson, all of Ottumwa; Mrs. E. E. Sperry of Minneapolis, Minnesota; and Mrs. E. F. Caldwell of Denver, Colorado. Funeral services were held at the Priestess Mortuary.

BUSCHLEN.—Harold Clifford, son of Simon and Mary Jane Poole Buschlen, was born May 21, 1899, at Chicago, Illinois, and died August 14, 1949, at Pasadena, California, following a long illness. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 8, 1907, at Port Elgin, Ontario. In 1923 he moved to California where on June 30, 1923, he married Consuelo Cunningham; two daughters were born to them. On March 17, 1940, he was ordained a priest. He served as superintendent of the Burbank, California, church school for eight years, and since 1943 was active in priesthood work in the Pasadena congregation. For twenty-eight years he was a mail carrier, and was loved by all in the territory he served for his kindness and generosity.

He is survived by his wife, Consuelo; two daughters: Mrs. Evelyn Tucker and Mrs. Mary Jane Duchain; his father; three sisters: Mrs. Beulah Arnold, Mrs. Alice Brown, and Mrs. Florence Bray; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder John W. Rushton at the Keefer and Eyerick Mortuary in Glendale. Interment was in the Grand View Cemetery at Glendale.

GINTHARDT.—Charles T., son of Charles and Fredericks Ginthardt, was born in Binghamton, New York, on March 11, 1883, and died June 26, 1949, at Moline Public Hospital following an emergency operation. He was married on September 11, 1907, to Della M. Mason. They made their home in Kewanee for two years, then moved to Moline, Illinois, where they resided the rest of their married life.

He is survived by his wife and three sisters: Mrs. Catherine Foster, Mrs. Minnie Bennett, and Mrs. Clara Linguist, all of Kewanee. Funeral services were conducted by Elder E. J. Lennox at the Knox-Trimble Mortuary. Interment was in the Pleasant View Cemetery in Kewanee.

COLLINS.—Mary Peslin, was born September 1, 1860, at North Tonawanda, New York, and died September 17, 1949, at the home of her son, Homer, in Independence, Missouri, where she had resided since 1929. She was married on January 1, 1880, to Telers Fumal at Appleton, Wisconsin; four sons were born to this union. Two of them preceded her in death. Mr. Fumal died on February 7, 1898, and in June, 1902, she married E. C. Collins, who died on June 22, 1925. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 15, 1872, and remained a faithful member throughout life. She had been ill for the past eleven years.

Surviving are two sons, John Fumal of Appleton and Homer Fumal of Independence, and their families. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and P. G. Fairbanks officiating, with graveside services and interment at Appleton.

EMMERSON.—William, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Emmerson, was born November 16, 1874, at Le Mars, Iowa, and died September 11, 1949, at his home in Sioux City, Iowa. In 1898 he went to the state of Washington where he resided for eleven years. On June 8, 1900, he married Elyza Kiits at Tacoma, returning to Iowa in 1911.

He is survived by his wife; a son, Harry of Sioux City; three daughters: Mrs. L. W. Houghton of Chicago, Illinois; Mrs. Jack Gardner and Mrs. Albert Bradbury, both of Omaha, Nebraska; a brother, T. F. Emmerson of York, Nebraska; a sister, Mrs. Mamie Halben of Lamoni, Iowa; and six grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Sioux City, Elders George Vandell and Charles Smith officiating, and at Pisgah, Iowa, Elder Mark Hutchinson officiating. Burial was in the Magnolia Cemetery.

Letters

Letter From England

I wish to express my sincere thanks to all the brothers and sisters of the various congregations in and around Independence that I had the pleasure of meeting and associating with during my visit there.

It was a great moment for me when I entered Stone Church for the 8:15 Sunday morning meeting and saw Patriarch Elbert A. Smith with his associate elders ready to begin the services of the day. The youthful choir and the sweet strains of organ music that filled the church while large numbers of people entered to worship were impressive also.

Brother Smith's sermon on "The Three Books" will be long remembered as the years go by. The 11:00 o'clock service at Walnut Park Church was also attended by throngs of earnest Saints, and I was made to feel that surely this was Zion the beautiful. The brethren in the discussion class led by Pastor F. O. Davies made me realize how active and alive all were to the needs of the hour.

Then at the final service of the day on the campus I saw a city of Latter Day Saints all singing their praises and offering up their thanks to God for his mercies. At the close of each service I had the pleasure of shaking many hands, and felt the great, warmhearted welcome in Saintry company. This memory will live with me for many a long day.

Words fail to express my gratitude to all from Presidents Israel Smith and F. Henry Edwards to the other ministers of the church that I was privileged to meet, however, in this way I hope to reach them through the medium of the Herald and convey my warmest thanks to them for their hospitality. I especially appreciate the kindness of Brother and Sister Davies and daughter Velma who enabled me to fulfill my ambition of a lifetime.

Plea for Kindness to Older People

Many of our older members feel left out and of no use to the church because so much emphasis is placed on youth work and the needs of young people. Sometimes they are not even spoken to, and I have seen aged Saints walk miles to services while members with cars pass them up on the way. We need more understanding between youth and age and more sharing in the work of the church.

I would love to help build Zion.

 QUOTE:

American Indian: "How!"
White Man: "How much?"

 REDUCING EXERCISES

The number one personal problem in America is girth control. Here we worry about how to reduce. All over the world other people are worrying about how to get enough to eat to keep alive.

A good home reducing exercise is to place the hands on the edge of the table and give a long, strong push.

When you have eaten enough, don't sit at the table consulting your temptations. They'll get you if you stay there.

Will power is not enough. What you need is won't power.

When invited out, if the hostess offers you a second helping, shake your head vigorously from left to right. This is beneficial for triple chins and bay windows.

As we grow older, we gradually give up the active sports: golf, tennis, hunting, etc. The last exercise we take is bending the elbow to lift the hand up to the mouth.

 CAMP

Take it any way you like, our little group of editorial offices in the north forty (forty feet) of Herald House is a concentration camp. The editors try and try and try to concentrate!

 APPRECIATION

Something new in the way of human gratitude is always turning up to surprise and delight us. Many friendly visitors have been guided through our publishing house. Last week we received a note of thanks from a visitor for the courtesy extended to himself and his family. First time it's ever happened! That note goes into the file under "Important—Extraordinary."

 NOTES

I have observed that other people have liked me so much better since I have tried to like them better.

Everybody is making a collection of public reactions. As you walk the streets, which do you get the most of—smiles or frowns?

There is such a thing as "Sidewalk Courtesy" just as surely as there is "Highway Courtesy." Those who violate the rules of Highway Courtesy get smashed fenders and broken radiators. Those who violate the rules of Sidewalk Courtesy get bruised shoulders and hurt feelings. How do you rate as a sidewalk navigator?

 MYSTERY

Everybody has his own way of having fun, even a policeman. Add this to the strange things observed in the early morning. A patrolman, in uniform, laboriously riding a bicycle to which he is not accustomed, and a bunch of his buddies cruising behind him in a squad car, all smiling broadly. He must have lost a bet, poor chap, and was looking a little glum.

 SOUL'S AWAKENING

Why don't we sing some of the more beautiful numbers in our "Hymnal"? It is a long time since I heard number 42, "Come, my soul, thou must be waking," so appropriate for a morning service. With so much to choose from, it is a pity always to select what is poorest and least inspiring. On the wings of this beautiful Haydn melody, the heart rises into the vast reaches of eternity, and one shares with the composer a vision of God's glory.

Not Old

ALL OF US are growing older, but people do not usually appreciate being called "old." For one to admit he is "old" is a confession that he is all through, just waiting for his summons. There is a suspicion that some of these live on just to avoid paying their funeral expenses.

A recent news story from Washington, D. C., quotes the remarks of seventy-four year old Senator Neely, chairman of the Senate District of Columbia committee. When a seventy-eight year old witness referred to herself as old, Neely said:

"Don't use that word old. It's an excuse for surrendering work in God's vineyard." Then he continued his quotation from Henry Wadsworth Longfellow: "For age is opportunity no less than youth itself, though in another dress, and as the evening twilight fades away, the sky is filled with stars invisible by day."

The church as well as the nation needs all its man power. Long we have sung, "There is no furlough granted in the army of the Lord." To "retire" from active duties is to die. The front lines call for the strength of our younger men, but the counsel of ripened experience comes only from the older generation. As Senator Neeley directed his witness, we also suggest: "Go look for the stars, madam, instead of saying you're getting old."

Introducing...

GRACE L. (GARDNER) KRAHL (page 13) is the widow of David J. Krahl, who was president of the Holden Stake just prior to his death in 1926. She has four sons: A. Kenneth, David G., George M., and Richard E. A daughter, Grace Frances, died in 1926.

Sister Krahl was born in Hingham, Massachusetts, and was educated in the schools of Boston and Saint Joseph, Missouri. After attending Bryant's Business College in Saint Joseph, she became a stenographer, and later cashier and bookkeeper in a wholesale millinery firm in Saint Joseph.

It was in Boston that Sister Krahl and her family became acquainted with the gospel and, learning of the gathering movement, decided to move to Far West Stake. They settled in Saint Joseph, though at that time a church had not been built in the city.

In 1900, Bishop E. L. Kelley called Brother Krahl to be bookkeeper and assistant in his office in Lamoni, where he served for sixteen years. In 1916, after his appointment as president of the Holden Stake, they moved to Holden, Missouri, where he labored until 1922 when incapacitated by his final illness. They moved to Independence in 1923.

Sister Krahl's first job in the church was that of organist. She served as the general secretary of the Department of Women and was its general superintendent in 1918-1919. She has long been interested in the Women's Christian Temperance work and has served as a local secretary and as publicity director in the field of temperance.

MARY WEISE MOATS (page 16) served the Independence Sanitarium as superintendent of nurses between 1909 and 1913. She was graduated from St. John's Hospital Nurses Training School in 1908. In 1943 she received her B.A. degree from the University of Kansas City and was a member of the senior women's honor society, Cap and Gown.

She served as a member of the board of trustees of Graceland College from 1938 to 1948. During the first World War, she served with the U. S. Army Nurses Corps in France for twenty-three months.

In 1921, she was married to Benjamin F. Moats, who died in February, 1948. She has one son, B. F. Moats, Jr., and a stepdaughter, Helen Margaret, who is the director of the Inland Transport Section of the United Nations.

Sister Moats has a broad interest in the church and civic affairs, indicated by the following groups with which she has been associated: La Causerie Francaise, Independence Music Club, Sigma Nu Delphian Chapter of Kansas City, Kansas City; Women's Club, Kansas City; Registered Nurse Matrons, Central Church Women's Club of Kansas City Stake, General Women's Council.

News & Notes

WORK IN THE EAST

Apostle Maurice L. Draper reports that in the Southern New England District there has been a sharp rise in the baptismal rates. The Maine District has bought an automobile for their missionary, Don Harvey, thus enabling him to increase greatly his missionary work for the district.

Brother Jack Conway tells of a growing missionary interest in the New York-Philadelphia District. The South Jersey Mission has a growing interest and an increasing attendance.

Work is being done toward the establishment of a New Philadelphia group and the organization of this new group seems imminent.

Seventy W. T. Guthrie and Elder Jack Conway have recently completed a tour of the New York-Philadelphia District, acquainting themselves more personally with the work in all the branches.

ONSET, MASSACHUSETTS, REUNION

The general theme for this reunion was "Witness for Christ." It was held July 13 to July 24. Apostle Paul M. Hanson, President of the Quorum of Twelve, was at the reunion during the closing days and delivered the 11:00 a.m. sermon of the final Sunday. Apostle Maurice Draper taught the general class, the men's class, and ministered to the young people and in the morning prayer services. Elder Elder Almar Sheehy, president of the Southern New England District, devoted much of his time to the guidance of the young people's activities. Seventy William T. Guthrie gave an outstanding sermon each night of the reunion. His sermons followed the daily theme. Seventy Don Harvey talked to the young people, women's group, and assisted at the young people's prayer services.

The 1949 reunion marked the opening of the new commissary which seats 250 persons at one time. The meals served by Mrs. Florence Sinclair and her staff were excellent.

One of the colorful recreational events of the reunion was the crowning of the reunion queen. At the start of the reunion, the candidates for queen were chosen and campaign managers were selected. On Friday night a ballot vote was taken, and the results were announced during evensong that night. The queen was Phyllis Cowgill and the attendants were Jane Cook, Betty Law, Priscilla Crowell, Georgiene Garlick, and Nova Cox. After the crowning, the queen and her attendants presided over various racing events and competitive sports. During the reunion there were four baptisms. These were Mrs. Angela Ruth, New London, Connecticut; George Edmund Stearns, Brockton, Massachusetts, Mrs. Elsie K. Booth, and her son, Frederick William Booth, both of Boston, Massachusetts.—Reported by Barbara L. Sears.

OFFICERS AT AURORA, ILLINOIS

The branch held the annual business meeting, Sunday, September 18. The following officers were elected: Arnold Settles, pastor; Everett Parcell, superintendent of department of religious education and of adult department; Margaret Reedy, superintendent of women's department; Delores Hughes, supervisor of young people; Orpha Tater, superintendent of children's division; Clarence White, treasurer; Mabel White, branch clerk; Shirley Clark, secretary of church school; Ellsworth Clark, librarian; Charles Reedy, historian; Ethel Malcor, publicity chairman.—Reported by Ethel Malcor.

The Reluctant Saint

"Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us."

—Psalm 115: 1.

The Cloak of Humility

You have all been in meetings where someone perfectly able to serve in a position of responsibility was asked to do so; but who, with practiced eloquence, wrapped a cloak of humility snugly about himself and withdrew from the nomination in resolute and impregnable order, leaving the work to be done by one whose hands were less skilled for the task, but whose heart was more willing to accept it. So often members who take new loads of church work are already burdened down.

Those who look up the context of our Scripture will see that it is used in another way than this. At the same time, it seems the perfect utterance of people who decline to serve God by seeming to praise him.

Such are the reluctant saints.

"Only Not Yet"

The spirit of the reluctant saint is perfectly expressed in the Confessions of St. Augustine (VIII, 17):

But I wretched, most wretched, in the very commencement of my early youth, had begged chastity of Thee, and said, "Give me chastity and continency, only not yet."

He wanted ultimately to be good, but not right away.

It would be fair for many of us to be honest with ourselves and with God and confess that we, too, have been like that at some time in our lives. We have wanted to reach the heights of righteousness, but we were not ready at the moment to give up some pleasurable sin or luxury. We wished to be reconciled with all men, and to forgive everybody, except one particular exasperating enemy. We were all ready to take the glory train to heaven, but we wanted one more stopover privilege at some earthly carnival.

Jesus had to meet that problem in his disciples when he said, "Come, and follow me." One wanted to bury his father, another to have a final farewell party at home. It is doubtful if either of these two men ever went under church appointment, for Jesus dismissed them as failures with these words: "No one who puts his hand to the plough, and then looks back, is fitted for the kingdom of God."—Luke 9: 62.

Comment on Reluctance

It is a misfortune to look like one thing and feel like another. A sinner with the face of an angel, a preacher with the countenance of a pugilist, a brilliant college instructor who looks like "The Man With a Hoe"—these folk have their problems and sometimes create problems for others.

The saint who looks willing and feels reluctant is also a problem.

Some years ago Walt Disney produced a comic opus, "The Reluctant Dragon," that may offer help now. Nature played a revolting trick on him, giving him the appearance of a bright green but authentic Tyrannosaurus, and the soul of a gentle old lady who liked cakes and tea. He didn't want to be a dragon at all; he simply wanted peace and good will. A rusty, creaking knight, a local St. George, was determined to make war against him. But the dragon, with the aid of sympathetic townfolk, succeeded in working out his problem in terms of tea and cakes. Not all people are as fortunate as that imaginary dragon.

God, in his mercy and wisdom, has appointed many of his children to the life of a saint. But not all of them like it. And out of the two-way pull between calling and inclination, many a sore trouble occurs. The reluctant saint looks genuine, but the world still has a claim on some corner in his heart.

Conversion the Cure

The real question, of course, is, "What can we do for the reluctant saints?" You have them in your congregation, and I have them in mine. There is a chapter in a new book in preparation entitled, "The Unconverted Member," and this gives us a key to his disease and the cure.

The reluctant saint has heard all the arguments, but God has not yet been able to touch his heart. The gospel has been presented to him, but he has not yet been able to grasp its central idea. He has ridden on the gospel train, but on a free pass, for he has never paid his fare. There are ways of working with him, of course, and of getting him to help. Perhaps all we can do, in the final analysis, is to show him what the love of God has done in our lives and trust that some day it will reach him, too. If it does, his heart will be won. If it does not, we must leave the result with God. We can never give up, for if we would do the work of heaven, we must share its love, practice its patience, and "endure unto the end."

Nobody was ever kicked into heaven. Nobody was ever whipped into submission for salvation. The child remembers his whipping, but not what it was for. Dealing with the reluctant saint is a work of love, or it is no work for a Christian at all. If there is punishment or discipline to administer, let God take care of it in his own way. "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." Love is our only effective weapon, our only tool, in his work.

Early (First?) Mail-Order Business

Students of stewardship developments in the church should read the following with interest submitted by Elder M. H. Siegfried:

For many years I have read Doctrine and Covenants 57: 4, believing it provided for what has since been developed in the great mail-order business.

In this section Sidney Gilbert was specifically instructed. He was told to establish a store; to sell goods without fraud, but through the operation of this store to obtain money (profits) by the use of which he would buy land.

He was told to obtain a license by which he could send goods to the people at distant points; just the same as the mail-order houses do today—"Behold, here is wisdom, and whoso readeth let him understand."

This was definitely an inspirational idea, far in advance of the day. That first mail-order house was established in Independence. Of course it was short-lived, for two years after the revelation was given, the goods were strewn in the streets by a mob, and the distribution idea never was developed. Look what it might have been today! What a city Independence might have been had these inspired people been let alone to develop it!

Thinking of this, I decided to go into the history of the mail-order business. I wrote the Commerce Department and from it received some very interesting information and leads. Mr. D. D. Richards, Secretary of the Mail-Order Association of America, says the back cover of Spiegel Company's current catalogue carries the statement that the company is now in its eighty-fourth year. This would establish the date of its founding as 1865. The company originated in Chicago as Spiegel, May, Stern.

The following is from Marketing, by Charles F. Phillips, Assistant Professor of Economics, Colgate University:

One of the earliest successful mail-order businesses was conducted by E. C. Allen operating from headquarters in Augusta, Maine. In 1870 Allen was selling a receipt for a washing compound through a number of agents (house-to-house salesmen). As he added other items to his line, notably engravings and chromos, he decided to supplement his agents with mail-order selling. To get his advertisements before possible customers in an attractive form he originated the first of the "mail-order journals."

In 1872 the firm, which is now second in size among all mail-order companies, was established. Mr. A. Montgomery Ward began his mail-order carrier in a small shop located in a barn in the city of Chicago.

Sears, Roebuck and Company, the largest of our mail-order houses, really dates from 1892.

Thus it will be seen the Gilbert store was thirty-three years in advance of the earliest known mail-order business in the world. This is another evidence of the inspired leadership of Joseph Smith.

From a letter written by Joseph E. Baldwin on September 2, we quote as follows:

The Northern Ontario Reunion held at New Liskeard was a small reunion, but those in attendance were hungry for spiritual food and leadership. It was a challenge to find such devoted Saints so far off the beaten path.

At the Port Elgin and Erie Beach Reunions I was able to talk to many people about the financial law and assist some in filing their inventories. It was good to find the people ready and wanting to do what they should in regard to the financial law. I was pleased with the response they gave to my ministry.

The Berkeley Daily Gazette, Berkeley, California, selects one sermon each week as its Sermon of the Week. On Monday, September 12, it featured a write-up of the sermon given Sunday, September 11, by Alma C. Andrews, pastor of the East Bay congregation. In bold headline was the sermon title, "Lay Hold on Eternal Values," and a fine article followed, accompanied by a picture of Brother Andrews. We quote from the account as follows:

Elder Andrews, speaking on Paul's message to Timothy, "Fight the good fight, lay hold on eternal life," outlined the eternal values which contribute to eternal life and declared that Christ's Church is the only kingdom in this world that shall be eternal. It will be united, as the church militant, with the Church Triumphant when Christ returns. Our being truly a part of his church will assure eternal life to us.

GRACELAND HOME-COMING

THE LARGEST group of Alumni ever to attend a Graceland Home-coming is expected for the annual celebration this year in Lamoni on October 14, 15, and 16. During that week end, the Memorial Student Center now nearing completion on the college campus will be dedicated.

With this announcement in the Saints' Herald, Graceland College officially invites all ex-servicemen and women of the church to attend the Home-coming activities. The Student Center is a memorial to alumni and other men and women of the church who served in World War II. The building will not be ready for actual use until later in the year, but it will be ready for dedication ceremonies which are planned for Sunday morning, October 16.

Special reunions are planned this year for the classes of 1924 and 1939. Members of all classes are always invited to every Home-coming.

Here is the schedule:

Friday, 8:00 p.m.—Home-coming Play, "Arsenic and Old Lace." After the play, reunions of class of 1924 and class of 1939.

Saturday, 9:45 a.m.—Assembly

11:00 a.m.—Alumni business meeting

2:30 p.m.—Home-coming Football Game. Opponent: Wentworth

8:00 p.m.—Alumni Talent Show

Sunday, 9:45 a.m.—Dedication of Memorial Student Center Building

11:00 a.m.—Worship Service—speaker to be announced

The Joys and Sorrows of Our Lord

A Sermon by Elbert A. Smith at Pittsburg, Kansas. From a wire recording by Elder John Jones.

THE PROPHETS SAID that Christ was to be "a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief." It may be we have dwelt too exclusively on that phase of his experience and his character. I am afraid it has given some people a one-sided idea of his personality and his religion. The most famous paintings we have of Christ are almost always devoted to that side of his experience. There is a picture of him, weeping over Jerusalem, one of the greatest of them showing him in Gethsemane in one of his darkest hours, and almost numberless pictures of him upon the cross.

I wonder if it would have been sacrilegious to have painted a picture of him, laughing—or at least smiling. As a boy, did he ever run and laugh with the children of his neighborhood as children always do? As a young man working at the carpenter bench with the neighbors and friends gathered around or occasionally out under a tree, did he sometimes laugh at their jokes? Not the cruel ones or the dirty ones, but the witty ones. People did joke a way back yonder. I wonder if sometimes on the road with the disciples on a sunny day, did he not chuckle at some of the things he heard them say? He may even have laughed to keep from weeping. We do sometimes. As a matter of fact, he knew sorrow but he also knew joy.

REJECTED IN HIS HOME TOWN

I want, first of all, to touch on some of the high points of his grief. I suppose perhaps the first shock he had as a minister was when he came back to Nazareth, where he had lived most his life, his home town where everybody knew him and presumably were his friends.

He came back from a period of temptation, and Luke says that "on the Sabbath he went to the synagogue as was his custom." Now in our vernacular we would say, he went to church on the Sabbath as was his habit. Thirty years old, he was in the habit of going to church on the Sabbath day. This is a little aside, but some of his professed followers today feel no responsibility and no need to go to church at all. They can "live just as well without it." Christ did not feel that way.

When he went into the synagogue that day, as a mark of the esteem in which people held him, he was invited to read the Scriptures and talk to them. Like our speakers, he stood up to read. Then he sat down to talk. This is what he read from Isaiah:

The spirit of the Lord is upon me because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor. He has sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to captives, and the recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty the bruised, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord.

Then he sat down and said to them:

This day is that Scripture fulfilled in your ears.

As we read the rest of his discourse, which must be very fragmentary in the report, we see he indicated clearly that he was not only a prophet, and the one Isaiah had in mind, but he was the Messiah. That idea seemed blasphemous to the congregation. Was not this the carpenter's son they had known all his life? It sounded blasphemous to them, and their friendship turned to hatred. They mobbed him and tried to kill him, but he escaped and went away, turning his back on his home and his one-time friends.

That must have been a sad experience to have his old friends turn against him in that spirit. But he did not permit it to embitter him or to turn him aside from his mission of good will. That is something for us to remember when people offend us.

THE DEATH OF JOHN THE BAPTIST

Perhaps the next great shock that came to him was in the death of John the Baptist. John was the man who had baptized him, had prepared the way for his coming, and had pointed him out as the Lamb of God; Jesus held him in high esteem. He said no greater prophet had ever been born, that John was "more than a prophet." He may have looked to John for help.

Then came the disciples to Jesus with the report that John had been murdered by Herod's orders. His head had been chopped off and carried around on a platter by a dissolute woman. His body had been thrown over the wall for the dogs to devour had not his friends rescued it and buried it. There is just about one line that indicates how Christ felt when he got the news. Matthew says he "departed into a desert place"—no doubt to be alone with his grief. But he was not permitted to be alone, and that may have been a good thing, too. The people saw him go, and they followed, a multitude of them. He did not brood over thoughts of revenge, instead, immediately he had to forget himself and turn to his ministry. He ministered to the multitude and therein probably forgot his grief.

GETHSEMANE

We have in considerable detail, the story of his experiences in Gethsemane. It was just on the eve of his crucifixion. He knew very well indeed what was coming. He was a young man yet and with the prospects of a long useful life. He did not wish to die. He went aside by himself to pray, and he was so beset with agony and fear that he sweat, as it were, drops of blood. The situation was not helped when he went back and found his friends asleep; but he knew human nature, and he said, "Sleep on and take your rest. The spirit indeed is willing but the flesh is weak." They could not watch with him even one hour.

Then there was the scene in the judgment hall where he was beaten and spit upon and crowned with thorns. To cap it all, he heard Peter, who had said he would die for him, swear, "I never knew him." To a man in his extremity to hear his friend swear, "I never knew him," must have been a severe blow. But he had already learned his lesson in Gethsemane. He had learned to say, "Not my will but thine be done." Sometimes we say that in a mechanical sort of way; sometimes we learn to say it the hard way.

THE CROSS

We have the rather detailed story of his crucifixion on the cross. At one time in his extreme pain and humiliation, his spirit failed him, and he cried out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" That seemed to be the very lowest point of his experience, but he recovered himself and said, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," and, "It is finished!"

That was the end of his sorrow on earth. All this certainly does entitle him to the saying that "he was a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief." But I think there is another side to the picture. His message as heralded by the angels was, "glad tidings of great joy." He had his joys about which we think too little. There is a fraudulent document that has been published several times in the past, which pretended to have been written by Lentulus, who succeeded Pilate. It contains a detailed alleged description of Christ. There was one statement which said "Nobody ever heard him laugh." I do not believe that. Bruce Barton in his book, The Man Nobody Knows, goes on to say that such an idea has darkened the spirits of a great many very good people. They have thought, "now suppose Christ should come into our home or into our little gathering when we are laughing and having a happy time while there is much sorrow and sin in the world. What would he say?" They have felt guilty, and Barton says, "Thus they have shut the friendliest man who ever lived out of the lives of some of the best people at the very moment when he would like most to have been with them."

Such an idea has been back of a harsh, austere idea of religion which seemed to feel it is a sin to be happy, a sin for young people to have a good time. Even most innocent pleasure appeared something to be ashamed of, something Christ would frown upon. I know that the men who wrote about Christ and testified of him wrote under the shadow of the cross. They remembered Gethsemane. They remembered the crucifixion. Also they wrote under the shadow of their own cross, and probably they left out anything they considered light and unworthy of accompanying the message of the cross.

I cannot think of Christ as austere, always melancholy, and his religion one of continuous sadness. I do not think that the men who walked with him as apostles were altogether different from the ministers I have known, and I have known a great many of them in our church over the years. The very best of them, the most spiritual of them, the most serious minded in times to be serious, ordinarily were cheerful men who enjoyed friendship, sociability, and humor.

EXCESS OF LAUGHTER WRONG

The Book of Covenants has something to say about that. It says to "avoid excess of laughter" (Doctrine and Covenants 85:19), too much, too boisterous, too silly. I have even attended one or two church gatherings when I thought there was much boisterous merry-making to the point where it became unseemly. Doctrine and Covenants 59:4 says we are to be of a cheerful countenance, but not with much laughter. Again, the message of Christ was a message of glad tidings which was to be to all people, and he admonishes us to be "cheerful in our warfare."

HIS BOYHOOD HAPPY

In his childhood Jesus must have had a happy boyhood. Children make the best of a situation. The situation in which they find themselves is the only one they know anything about, and they don't worry because it is not better. Evidently Jesus had a good home as a boy. Not too good a house, but a good home. All Christendom reveres Mary, his mother, and while not much is written about Joseph, there is enough to show him as a very fine person. Of Christ himself, Luke, who was a physician, wrote that Jesus "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." That indicates he was normal in body and in mind, he was healthy, and he "grew in grace and favor with God and man." We would say today, "he made good social adjustments"; he fitted into the community as a boy. He was no problem child. I have no doubt at all that he was happy.

IN THE TEMPLE

That must have been a very happy occasion for him when at twelve years of age, perhaps for the first time in his memory, he visited Jerusalem. The temple, which his people so revered, he enjoyed so thoroughly that for three days he forgot everything else and stayed there while his people searched for him.

He must also have been very happy at his baptism when the voice from on high said, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

WEDDING IN CANA

The setting of his first miracle has always been significant to me. It was the scene of a wedding in the little town of Cana. He was invited by the family as also were his disciples. Apparently he was glad to go. He was a social person. He liked to go among people. He was criticized because he went to gatherings of all sorts, weddings, funerals, and banquets with all kinds of people.

A wedding is ordinarily a joyous occasion. Nobody weeps at a wedding unless it is the mother of the bride. She may shed a few tears, but they are not tears of sorrow, just emotional upset. At Cana Jesus did not sit aside as a man of sorrow acquainted with grief. He must have entered into the spirit of the occasion, and when the whole affair seemed about to be ruined, in the eyes of the people in that day, and the bride and her family to be ashamed and humiliated because there was not enough wine to go around, he performed his first miracle. He turned water into wine. I think we have a rather happy picture of Jesus at that wedding.

I do not know whether Jesus approved or disapproved of the age-old custom of toasting the bride by drinking wine. He certainly did disapprove the idea of having the occasion turned into one of grief and humiliation for the family and the bridal party.

The only time I ever joined in this custom of taking a sip of wine at a bridal banquet was years ago when I myself had solemnized the marriage. The bridegroom was a Catholic at the time. The bride's family were my close friends, splendid people, and good church members of our faith, certainly not addicted to alcoholic beverages. But in the land over seas from which they came, and in their ancestral family for generations, it had been a custom to toast the bride. It had become merely a symbol, a sip of wine, no more. I had my choice: to embarrass the family in the presence of their guests, perhaps hurt them deeply, or take a sip of the wine with the others. In the Judgment Day, remembering Cana, I think I shall have a precedent to justify my decision.

There is a sequel to this story. Presently the young husband was converted to our faith. Before he was baptized, he filled out his inventory and paid his tithing. At the time he had in the house several gallons of chokecherry wine which he had made for his own use. After his baptism he turned it all over to a hospital to use for medicinal purposes. I imagine the action of Jesus at Cana had a sequel no less pleasant!

HOME OF MARY, MARTHA, AND LAZARUS

There is another picture I like to think about, and that is the home in Bethany. After Jesus had been driven out of Nazareth and turned his back on his old home, he could truly say, "The birds of the air have nests and the foxes have holes, but the Son of man has no place to lay his head." That is, he had no home of his own. But there was at least one home to which he was very happy to go, the home of Lazarus, Mary, and Martha. According to tradition they were quite well-to-do people, and they certainly took him into their home circle and made him feel at home. He loved Lazarus, his close friend. He appreciated Mary who liked to sit and listen to his spiritual conversation, and I am inclined to think he also appreciated Martha who bustled around and kept her eyes on the affairs of the household. She was worried about many things, but she made it her business to see that he was taken care of. That was clearly, I think, according to tradition and the written word, a place where Jesus was happy and where he loved to go.

I think every missionary of our church who travels far and wide remembers such homes. I do. I have been made at home from Canada to Alabama, from Maine to California, in homes where they had a room that they called mine, or maybe it was Brother Hield's room or Brother Hanson's room—where the missionary could have a place to lay his head and really feel at home.

THE "LORD'S BREAKFAST"

After his resurrection Jesus must have had some joyous experiences, although he had not yet left this earth; he had not yet ascended up on high. There was the occasion when he met with the disciples on the shores of Galilee or Tiberias—remember the story? They had gone fishing. They did not go fishing because they were on a pleasure trip—they needed something to eat. Judas had carried the money, but Judas was gone. They turned to the only thing that most of them knew how to do to get food—they went fishing. They fished all night without success, and then in the morning they saw a man on shore. To make the story short, they did not recognize him at first; but when he called to them, they recognized him and hastened ashore. It was their Lord and Master. He had a fire kindled, and there was fish broiling on the fire and there was honeycomb. Before he said a word to them about religion, he fed them.

Baptism by Water - By DONALD SAVAGE

WITHIN MY MIND'S EYE, I cherish a picture familiar and pleasant to many Saints. This picture sees the sweeping bend of a quiet river—the Big Blue—which has witnessed many times the beautiful and holy ordinance of baptism.

The Big Blue is a stream of south-eastern Nebraska which winds its peaceful way down the fertile valleys and across the smiling plains to join the Missouri. A stranger, following the course of its wanderings, might happen upon many scenes which, to him, would seem every bit as pleasant as the one of which we speak. But to the Saints, who remember, our picture has none beside it, for it is of hallowed ground. One can hardly help wondering if the tall, green cottonwoods standing guard over our choice spot do not speak together of scenes in days past whenever the light, warm breeze brings them to quiet whispering.

Once all baptisms upon the earth shared in this natural and godly beauty, when theological dogmas were still unlearned and men obeyed the voice of God. But those times have changed. As the years passed, men became too holy and too powerful to condescend to such a simple and humble ordinance as being buried in the waters of baptism for a remission of their sins. Sudden garments and muddy feet do not go well with scarlet robes and bejeweled vestments. Therefore, for vanity's sake and the glory of Satan God's ordinance was cast aside, and an easy and convenient ritual developed in its stead. Is it any wonder that the heavens weep and the angels stand waiting the order to descend and cleanse the earth of men's pride? Do men imagine that they can pass off a lie—a counterfeit baptism—upon the Holy One of Israel?

I frankly doubt if anyone in this enlightened age can justly claim at the day of judgment that he was deceived about the meaning or proper form of baptism. Numerous paths of investigation are open for the sincere disciple to discover the truth for himself. For to them who are not slothful are given the promises, "Seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you," and, "Blessed are all they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost."

"Baptizo" or "Raino"?

Perhaps the simplest way to demonstrate that baptism means immersion and not sprinkling, pouring, or any of the other acts which masquerade behind its name is to examine the word itself.

Baptism is a word coming from the Greek derivation baptizo, which in turn comes from the Greek radical bapto. A radical, as pertaining to language, is a fundamental root or unit from which many other words are derived. Radicals denoting specific action (such as bapto) do not lose their original meaning or their specific sense in their derivatives. This is not a matter of opinion or supposition; it is a fact. Throughout bapto's many hundreds of flexions and derivatives, its fundamental meaning is retained, and this radical has been translated by every learned and honest scholar in the last 2,000 years as meaning "I dip," or "I plunge." It is well to note that bapto or baptizo has no necessary connection with water. Actually, a thing can be baptized in water, oil, air, doubt, light, or spirit, a fact which agrees with our statement that bapto is a specific action.

Upholders of the rite of sprinkling and pouring have desperately grasped at straws in this matter and have attempted to reconcile their acts to the commandments of God by suggesting that a derivative of bapto could mean to dye or stain. "Then," they say, "since baptism can mean to stain or dye, the same action can be obtained by sprinkling or pouring as by immersion." This is quite untrue because, as we stated before, bapto is always used to mean dip or plunge. (Immerse is merely a synonym of these two.) The radical itself has no reference to, or connection with, the medium in which it is to be performed. Of course, it is possible to dip one substance in another which will cause it to be stained or dyed, but it is equally possible to dip one substance in another which will not at all cause it to be stained or dyed. For example, immersing a gold ring in ink stains it not at all. Similarly, immersing a delicate fabric in nitrogen leaves neither mark nor stain. Certainly, if any connection exists at all between stain and bapto (and none does philologically) it is indeed a far distant and figurative acquaintance.

Furthermore, if our Savior had meant to give the impression to men that this ordinance was accomplishable by sprinkling or pouring, he most certainly would not have used a word which means to dip or immerse, but would have used the root, raino, which means to sprinkle. Raino has its family of derivatives and flexions as does bapto. These all retain the original sense of raino and are literally translated to conform to the idea of sprinkling. To twist bapto into meaning sprinkling or raino into immersion is absurd.

Throughout the books of the Old and New Testaments whenever the ordinance of baptism is referred to, bapto, its derivatives and flexions are the words which indicate the act. These words occur over 140 times, baptizo alone appears eighty times in the New Testament. Can there be any reasonable doubt that the Holy Spirit directed men to declare immersion when speaking of the form of baptism?

Historical Light

A second avenue of approach to our subject for the sincere investigator to follow is in the acts of the people who practiced baptism during and following the life of Christ. A part of this particular line of testimony receives a considerable amount of attention from time to time by religious writers, for it is easy to show from biblical quotations that immersion was practiced without question.

Since Jesus is the central figure of the New Testament, let us first examine what is written concerning his baptismal actions.

Matthew writes concerning his baptism by John the Baptist as follows:

Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. . . . And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water.—Matthew 3: 13, 16.

Mark writes concerning this baptism in much the same tones:

And it came to pass in those days that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan. And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon him.—Mark 1: 9, 10.

Upon examination these two texts reveal a number of important facts:

1. John baptized.
2. John baptized in the River Jordan.
3. Jesus was desirous of being baptized in the River Jordan.
4. John baptized Jesus in the River Jordan.
5. Jesus came up out of the water after his baptism.

All of these facts lead us to a significant answer. John the Baptist performed an ordinance that required a large amount of water. The ordinance was called baptism. Jesus considered this ordinance so important that he complied with it even before he began his ministry. To be baptized, Jesus had to journey to the Jordan River because there was sufficient water there for him to go down into the water and up out of the water. He went to John the Baptist because John had authority to perform the ordinance.

The next scriptural witness I would like to present is a disciple of Christ named Philip. The eighth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles informs us that the Holy Spirit acted upon Philip and caused him to go from Jerusalem to Gaza. There he met a traveler from Ethiopia and after some discussion about the meaning of certain prophetic passages from the Book of Isaiah concerning Christ, he convinced the traveler that he should be baptized.

And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more; and he went on his way rejoicing.—Acts 8: 36, 38, 39.

This Scripture presents information in harmony with and supplemental to that quoted concerning Christ's baptism:

1. Philip had the authority to baptize.
2. The eunuch saw the necessity of proper baptism.
3. Philip and the eunuch arrived at a place where there appeared to be enough water to perform the ordinance.
4. Both Philip and the eunuch went down into the water.
5. The eunuch was baptized by Philip in the water.
6. Both came up out of the water following the baptism.

Here is the baptismal ordinance performed by a man so spiritual that he was caught up out of the sight of the eunuch as soon as the act was finished. Nevertheless, to perform the act, he went down into the water with the candidate, baptized him, and then came up out of the water with the new disciple.

If baptism could have been performed in a more convenient manner which would have been pleasing and acceptable to the Lord, would not a man as spiritual as Philip have known it? Again there can be but one answer. Philip practiced immersion because it was the way ordained by God and the only baptism acceptable in His sight.

A third scriptural passage, which I would like to present because of its obviousness, comes from the Gospel According to St. John.

After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and baptized. And John also was baptizing in Aenon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came and were baptized.—John 3: 22, 23.

Here we again find John the Baptist hard at work. We note that he baptized in a manner which required much water—so much, in fact, that he was forced to stay in a specific place to perform the act. Had John been practicing sprinkling or pouring, this restriction would not have been necessary, for he could have carried sufficient water in a canteen or gourd to meet the need. Furthermore, wherever human beings lived, there would have been sufficient water to baptize by sprinkling or pouring. Only one form of this ordinance fills the requirements of the situation, and that is immersion.

I have at my hand scores of supporting testimonies and opinions from writers who lived during the time of Christ and in the centuries following. To quote from their works would still further prove that immersion was the only baptism practiced by Jesus' true followers.

Baptism by immersion was taught as a commandment by Jesus to his disciples and they in turn taught it to the world. The world accepted and obeyed the requirements of the ordinance for a long time—perhaps several centuries. During this time nothing was practiced save immersion. Then, as Satan became more and more the master of men's hearts, he counseled them to creep around the letter of the law upon occasions when for one reason or another they deemed it necessary. With each violation, the Spirit of God withdrew farther and farther from them until they were left in such a blinded state that their former "emergency" baptisms of sprinkling appeared altogether acceptable in their worldly eyes, and the break with Christ was complete. To say just when the decay began or when the fracture was finished is, of course, impossible. I believe it to be a process which required ten or fifteen centuries, during which time men turned from God's commandments of proper baptism to Satan's counterfeit of sprinkling.

It is not for me to say or guess just who was responsible for this apostasy. Undoubtedly it will be laid at the feet of many persons. Our responsibility today is to see that we keep all of Christ's commandments and encourage everyone to throw off these ancient shackles and do the same.

Infant Baptism

It has been said by some misguided persons that immersion is obviously not the only method of baptism, because such a form is not applicable to infants.

In part of this, I am sure, the advocates of immersion most heartily agree. Immersion is not applicable to infants because God never intended that infants should be baptized. A true Christian's sense of justice fairly revolts as he considers the doctrine of infant baptism.

Baptism is practiced for one reason only—the remission of sins. God's commandment was given so men might know how to go about gaining this end. John the Baptist taught it in the wilderness of Jordan when he cried:

Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. . . . Prepare ye the way of the Lord and make his paths straight. . . . And many were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.—Matthew 3: 28, 29, 32 (Inspired Version).

Peter, the apostle, taught it on the day of Pentecost when he declared to all who would hear:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.—Acts 2: 38.

Ananias taught it when he urged Paul:

And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.—Acts 22: 16.

Every true representative has continued to preach this same doctrine and will continue to preach it as long as the earth shall stand.

As for the old sophistry so often raised and reveled in concerning infant baptism for the remission of the original sin, we have this to say: No man would ever preach such a doctrine if he were called of God to preach, if he had the Spirit of Christ dwelling within his heart, or if he had even an intelligent knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. This doctrine denies the atonement and the Christ.

Adam and Eve tasted of sin in the Garden of Eden, and having tasted of this disobedience, could no longer dwell in the presence of God but were cast out of the garden. Thus man became sensual, devilish, spiritually dead, and subject to temporal death. His children were conceived in sin, and had not an atonement been made for their sins, they could never have overcome either the spiritual or temporal death. Christ made that necessary atonement. He, being crucified, and rising the third day, overcame the temporal death for all mankind, and death became subject to him. No man or woman can avoid accepting of this part of the atonement, every man must be resurrected in the day of judgment.

Concerning the Divinity of the Book of Mormon

PRESENT DAY FINDINGS are crowding upon the discoveries of yesterday so fast that we find ourselves in a maze of facts, which leaves us at a loss as to where we should begin or how we should end a reasonable discourse on the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

In spite of my whole-hearted acceptance of the Book of Mormon, I have never ceased to delve into the archives of ancient America whenever possible. I have also read a great many works having a bearing upon the early inhabitants of this country. However, names of peoples and places, which in many instances are similar (and sometimes identical) to those mentioned in the Book of Mormon, have never, as far as I know, been tied in with biblical characters. Therefore, it was with great interest that I read the works of Josephus and noted what that eminent Jewish historian had to say in regard to the Tower of Babel.

It was not because of any great wickedness on the part of the people that their tongues were confused at Babylon, it was because God did not want them to settle there. We find that they had been commanded of him to scatter and form new colonies in order that they might more fully populate the earth. These people were so poorly instructed in the ways of the Lord they did not obey his command. They had been admonished numberless times to send out colonies, but they imagined that the prosperity they enjoyed was not from God. They were puffed up in the pride of their hearts and supposed their own power and resourcefulness were responsible for their success.

IT WAS NIMROD, the mighty hunter, who led them to such contempt of God. He was mighty in speech and, no doubt, had great persuasive powers—so much so that he became their leader. He it was who instigated the idea of building the Tower of Babel, for some of them were worried lest the Lord destroy them a second time by means of a flood. Nimrod pacified them and promised that they should build a tower to heaven, sufficiently high to afford them a refuge from the waters. The multitude followed him and built this great tower. Among them (according to the Book of Mormon) were Jared and his people.

We have been quoting from Josephus, Book I, chapters 4 and 5. We find here, in the "history of the Jews," that the tower builders had been commanded to colonize the earth. It is quite apparent that Jared and his brother knew of God's will in this matter, for after the confusion, they awoke to the fact that they had better comply with his command. On pages 715 and 716 of the Book of Mormon, we find Jared and his brother preparing to fulfill the commandment of God to form new colonies. Note the statement in the Book of Mormon, page 715, verse 7, "At the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, and swear in his wrath that they should be scattered upon all the face of the earth; and according to the word of the Lord the people were scattered." This quotation is a parallel statement to the one in Josephus, Book I, chapter 5, wherein he records, "There were some also who passed over the sea in ships." It is obvious that Josephus knew there were some who passed over the sea. As we have no records of any other people who crossed the sea at that particular time, he must have been referring to the Jaredites.

Let us not lose sight of Nimrod, the mighty hunter, who, according to Josephus, was the leader of the tower builders. Herein lies the connecting link between the Bible and the Book of Mormon, for you will note on page 716, verses 22 and 25, that they went into "the valley of Nimrod, being named after the mighty hunter." Let us contemplate this well, for it should challenge the whole of Christendom as to the divinity of this great book. Joseph Smith did not have the work of Josephus in his possession, as it was not printed in English until the year 1898.

WE OFFER as another witness to the divinity of the Book of Mormon that the translator, as well as the scribes and early sages of the church, did not know who the brother of Jared really was. This being so, it proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that Joseph Smith did not write a book, but merely copied from the plates which he had in his possession at the time. The brother of Jared is one of the most outstanding characters in the Book of Mormon and as such, beyond most, deserves to have a name. Had Joseph Smith known, and had he merely concocted a book, he surely would have given him a name.

Turn to page 439 of the Book of Mormon, verse 52, where Alma writes, "And now, I will speak unto you concerning those twenty-four plates," and you will note that he is speaking regarding the plates of Ether. In verse 55 we find, "And the Lord said, I will prepare unto my servant, Gazelem, a stone which shall shine forth in darkness unto light." Now refer to the Book of Ether, chapter 1, verse 88, where the Lord tells the brother of Jared, "And behold, these two stones will I give unto thee, and ye shall seal them up also, with the things which ye shall write." You will observe that the name of the brother of Jared, must be Gazelem, as referred to by Alma in the above quotation.

"Kansas City Times" Features Story of Book of Mormon Manuscript

IN THE Kansas City Times (morning issue of the Kansas City Star) for Saturday, September 10, is a picture of President Israel A. Smith showing the "translation of his grandfather, Joseph Smith, Jr., founder and prophet of the church, now known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to Miss Verna Bradford, junior at Southwestern Missouri State College, Springfield, Missouri. Miss Bradford is holding a facsimile version of one of the original plates from which the manuscript was translated. This explanation appeared underneath a two column picture in the middle of the front page of this newspaper. Altogether, the picture and legend occupy eleven column inches. This was followed by a thirty-four column inch story which was carried over on page two. We are glad to present this to Herald readers as evidence of better public relations in this community.

The story which was printed concerned the showing of the manuscript just mentioned, and also that of the Inspired Version, to a group in attendance at the institute for college students held at the Stone Church, September 8, 9, and 10. Absent from the story was the usual reportorial hedging such as "they allege," or "it is their claim," and other defensive techniques in common use by editors. We would not object to that, but it is noteworthy that neither reporter nor publisher found it necessary to use this obvious device. In appreciation of the fine presentation by the Star, President Smith sent the following letter to the reporter:

September 13, 1949

Mr. William Moore,
c/o Editorial Rooms
Kansas City Star
Kansas City, Missouri
Dear Mr. Moore:

On behalf of my official associates and the organization we represent, I extend to you our most sincere appreciation and thanks for your splendid write-up in the Times of last Saturday.

As a church we have often been misunderstood, and there has been much confusion in the public mind growing out of a failure to discriminate between us and the Utah Mormons. We, however, do not like to be called Mormons.

It is therefore refreshing to have such an unbiased and fair report as yours, and we are very grateful to you.

Our best wishes, then, to you, for success in your profession which indeed is one of growing importance.

Sincerely,
Israel A. Smith,
President.

At the same time, President Edwards sent the following message to the President of the Star.

September 13, 1949

Mr. Roy A. Roberts, President
Kansas City Star
Kansas City, Missouri
Dear Mr. Roberts:

As you may remember we informed your staff that we expected to display the Book of Mormon manuscript at the Stone Church in Independence last Friday. It was not possible to give earlier notice, but we were very pleased when Mr. William Moore and your staff photographer were available to report the display for the Star.

Our relations with these two gentlemen were very cordial, and Mr. Moore—who was necessarily at the Stone Church longer than his associate—was most congenial. The personal contact was worthwhile quite apart from the accurate reporting of Mr. Moore.

President Israel A. Smith with the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon open before him

Be Yourself - By LEONA N. HANDS

I DISTINCTLY REMEMBER a lecture that I attended some years ago. The young professor centered his entire discourse around an ordinary pod of peas which he opened and displayed for all to see.

"Remember the old expression, 'as like as two peas in a pod?'" he asked. "Looks perfect, doesn't it?"

No one disagreed. He had chosen a pod of peas that would easily arouse admiration, for they were perfect in size, shape, and color. "Yet," he went on to explain, "though all of these peas appear to be exactly alike, a horticulturist could readily show you, under a microscope, that no two are identical! This same truth is evident throughout the entire field of nature. No two blades of grass, no two leaves on a tree, no two flowers in a field or garden are exact duplicates, even though they appear alike to the naked eye. Each has some mark of distinction all its own."

The professor closed the pod of peas and laid it down on a near-by table. "Would you concede for one moment," he asked, "that such a marvelous Creator as the God we worship would fashion so minutely the leaves, grass, and flowers, then make man (the highest type of his creation) from a few sets of molds? No, indeed you would not! We are God's children, made in his likeness, and the divine touch is truly evident, for each of us has been given an individuality all our own—so much so that there really is no such thing as an average human being. There is no other person in the world just like you. Now why should you try to be like someone else?"

"Why not be yourself?" he challenged. Why not, indeed!

Have you ever stood on the corner of a busy street, watching a steady stream of people flow past, marveling at the fact that no two faces were alike? Think of the billions of God's creation—yet no two (with the possible exception of a rare set of twins) have identical features. Neither do they think, act, nor speak alike. Their fingerprints and footprints reveal separate identities. Contrary to the soap ads, each carries a distinct body scent that can be traced, if need be, over an entire continent. Truly they are wondrously made.

It is commonly understood, of course, that all of us are born with certain inherent family traits and characteristics that may affect our personalities, yet no two members of any one family are the same in every respect. Think of it—you could look the wide world over and never find another person just like you! So why not be yourself?

It is true we have no power over our heredity or the circumstances of our birth. We can control our environment only to a certain extent. Yet God, being no respecter of persons, has given each of us at least one talent to develop, with the promise that more shall be added to the faithful steward.

In the face of these facts, why is it that we are so full of strivings and yearnings to be like someone else? Would it not be wiser for us to look within ourselves and uncover our latent possibilities? We may be overlooking many hidden gifts and talents (of which we could be all too unaware) in our struggle to conform to the pattern we see in someone else's life.

Possibly you take exception to the statement that all men are created equal. Perhaps the right interpretation to this thought is that all are born with equal opportunity for self-development, each man having his own free agency to choose good or evil. Certain it is that all of us come into the world with neither friend nor enemy. We start out equal in that respect, at least. Very early in life, the lesson is brought home to us that if we want people to like us, we must be likable; if we want a nice personality, we must develop it; and if we want friends, we must be a friend to others.

Perhaps you have found it hard to keep from being envious of people of exceptional beauty or great intellect or powers of leadership. Beside these "rare flowers," you may consider yourself only a "weed." Yet Luther Burbank, who transformed the common field daisy into the beautiful Shasta blossom, and worked with the desert cactus until he had bred out of it its poison and spikes and made it edible for cattle, once said, "If I am convinced of any one thing it is this—no weed that grows need remain a weed!" Perhaps the secret of all development is in that one word, growth. All of us remember the story of the ugly duckling. How did it become a swan? It grew!

SOMEONE HAS wisely said that life is God's gift to us—what we make of ourselves is our gift to him. We do not have to be highly gifted, rich, nor beautiful in order to serve him. The plainest face can be transformed when lighted from within by the spirit of God. The most retiring personality can blossom into a beautiful character when a life is lived for God. Paul says, "If any man live in Christ, he is a new creature." To all who strive to emulate the life of Christ shall be given the "power to become."

Paul further admonishes us to know ourselves, to prove ourselves, and to hold fast to that which is good. Look for the good and beautiful that awaits development in your own life. God has a plan for you. Seek to discover his purpose in you. Become the person he wants you to be. You have been given a portion of that "light which lighteth every man who cometh into the world."

Be true to the divine spark within you. Be yourself!

"An Enemy Hath Done This"

By GRACE L. KRAHL

ONE OF THE PARABLES of Jesus concerns a householder who sowed good seed in his field, and while he slept, an enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat. But when the blade sprang up and brought forth, there appeared the tares also. The servants said to the householder, "Sir, didst thou not sow good seed in thy field? Whence then hath it tares?" And he answered, "An enemy hath done this."

We do not think Jesus intended to convey censure upon the householder because he slept. One's field should be as safe while he is asleep as when he is awake. But in this story it was a more opportune time for the enemy to defeat the householder's purposes, since it was the enemy's ultimate purpose to frustrate that which was in opposition to his designs.

We cannot say that our national householder—the government—has been asleep while breweries and distilleries have strewn our land with their poisonous beverages. Such distribution has been with the deliberate consent of our legislature. While our government is for the people and individual freedom, it would appear that a problem arises on this very basis of freedom—that is that a man can indulge in any beverage of his choice since he has the constitutional right to do so. What his indulgence causes him to do, if violent and injurious to another, comes under police regulation eventually. The point is that the law regulates the individual after his misfortune but does too little about the cause of his fate.

A TRAVELER, it is related, observed a young recruit in the early days of World War II slumped in a Pullman seat, unconscious, breathing heavily, his face flushed, his swollen tongue protruding slightly between his parched lips. He was a pathetic figure. Only a short time ago he had taken the oath of loyalty to the flag of his country and his nation's cause. Had a Japanese or Nazi soldier struck at his flag or his home, he would have been helpless to defend either. On the window ledge beside him stood a bottle about half empty. Evidently it was from this bottle he had drunk the poison that made him powerless to protect his country or even himself. The observer could not help exclaiming, "An enemy hath done this!" On that bottle was a United States government internal revenue stamp. When our government prohibits the manufacture of liquor, the inherent moral nature of man, unaffected by poisonous beverages, will find its natural and consistent expression.

Not all who drink have effaced their ethical and honorable inclinations immediately; it is the insidious and treacherous content of the beverage itself that debilitates the will power of the individual until he is helpless to control his appetite for it. As we have quoted before, "A man takes a drink; then drink takes the man." What can the citizens of this free country do to eliminate the cause of inebriety with its stronghold upon the appetite of men and women?

First, we can protest against the misleading and beguiling advertising which implies that the social life of the home depends upon serving some form of liquor. This would be supporting the Bryson Bill, House of Representatives 2428, now pending which reads, ". . . To prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of alcoholic beverage advertising and stop its broadcasting over the air." Second, we can protest against the sale of liquor in army camps. Third, we can declare our disapproval of the manufacture of alcoholic beverages. Congressmen gain office by the voice of the people, and they remain there only when the people are satisfied with their participation in the making of just and consistent laws. Thus if churches and other large organizations of abstemious people (smaller petitions are too feeble) would apprise the lawmakers of their objections to existing laws, there might be some effectual, judicial recognition of their request.

THE SLOW but reliable process of education regarding the detrimental use of alcoholic beverages to the human body and mind should accompany, in the interim, whatever effort is made to abolish the liquor traffic. And it must begin with the children—high school age is too late. The Women's Christian Temperance Union (undenominational) has such a program of education adaptable to the home, to the church school, to women's societies. Its literature for the safeguarding of our young people may be had at small cost. Membership in the organization is representative of 1,000,000 homes. This is a substantial nucleus for the spreading of the principle of total abstinence; and were it not for these faithful standard-bearers through the years, together with the annual increase of its recruits, our country would be worse off than it is.

There is an enemy in our land! Let us be found in action against its approaches.

Integrity pays big dividends. Business men everywhere are searching for it. It can neither be bought nor sold, and yet the poorest of men can possess it.

"Times" Features Story on Book of Mormon Manuscript

President Smith and I do not remember a better piece of objective reporting being done with regard to our church activities. There have been times when we have felt a little abused because of the difficulty our people have had in presenting a clear and accurate story. And for this very reason it seems only fair that we shall tell you how very much we appreciate the fine piece of work done by Mr. Moore and the others concerned.

We take such pride in the Star that it is particularly pleasant to be well reported there.

Very sincerely yours,
F. Henry Edwards.

THE ARTICLE contains nothing new and is too long to quote in its entirety. Our readers will have a good idea of its contents from the following: "To the church the Book of Mormon is an unquestioned record of ancient nations which flourished long before the discovery of this continent."

After describing the appearance of the manuscript and its case, the reporter stated that it is in the handwriting of four scribes who wrote as the prophet dictated. Then he related the story of the first vision in the woods, the vision of 1823, the obtaining and translating of the plates, and the testimony of the witnesses—both the three and the eight. He closed with a mention of the martyrdom, and stated that the Book of Mormon contains a strong condemnation of polygamy. Last he told how the manuscript came into the hands of the Reorganized Church. "Accepted as a sacred record as it is, the people of the church hold that the book supports the teachings of the New Testament, much as a second witness of the same truths. To those of the Reorganized Church, the manuscript is valuable beyond price."

Our readers, of course, realize that to the "Star-Times" Corporation, this was just an incident connected with the young college people's institute which had news value in the Kansas City area. It goes beyond this to the church members of this area and furnishes satisfactory evidence of fair treatment to a minority group in the highly controversial field of religion. We Latter Day Saints form but a small segment of the population of greater Kansas City and have no just claims for favors by this great metropolitan daily; however, we do appreciate friendly consideration at the hands of the press and will not forget our benefactors when we get it.

Baptism by Water

Overcoming spiritual death is a task each individual must accomplish for himself. Through his agency he must choose, in a manner acceptable to God, to qualify himself for the mercy of Christ and justice for the gift of eternal life. Little children are spotless before God from the foundation of the world, being alive in him. Baptism of them is mockery before God and equal to saying to the Eternal Father, "Come and be baptized by our hands for the remission of your sins!" Sins of parents are absolutely not answerable upon the heads of the children. God made that very clear when he declared to Israel that he never wanted to hear from them again the lie, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge."—Jeremiah 18: 2.

Baptism as taught by the Scriptures is an ordinance for persons who are old enough to realize they have sinned and who wish to take upon them the name of Christ that in their working love toward him they might have a remission of their sins. Faith and repentance must necessarily precede baptism, as good works and endurance must follow. The person who is not capable of repentance and faith is not a subject for baptism regardless of how young or old he may be.

Action With Authority

Three approaches presented in this article are but a beginning to the numerous ways in which this important subject can be studied. But, from whatever position baptism is viewed, the same answers will be forthcoming: baptism is unchangeable; baptism is necessary; baptism is immersion. It can be administered only by those whom God has authorized to perform the ordinance. That intangible substance, authority, or as Webster defines the word, "Legal or rightful power; a right to command or act . . ." is the justifying protection which claims the soul of the performer and the sanctifying satisfaction which blesses the soul of the recipient. Without authority, acts which require that authority are void.

Does it not seem strange to you that while people everywhere place such supreme importance upon authority in every temporal matter, they at the same time ignore or shamefully abuse it in spiritual matters? Men quickly learn that authority is indispensable in their worldly affairs if chaos and confusion are to be avoided. Therefore, such authority is closely regulated and rigidly upheld. Do they think that the kingdom of God is any less well governed? If the acts of every minister who claims for himself authority, but who is not divinely authorized, were recognized by God, what a melee would rend the courts of heaven! Confusion is evil, and God's kingdom is a place of harmony.

Since such a tremendous importance is connected with man's salvation, then is it not just, even in our own worldly minds, that God should have the right to say how affairs are to be regulated? Would he promiscuously give to whoever cared to open his mouth the right to represent him? We wouldn't think of doing this in our own worldly transactions. Do we have more intelligence than God? Does it not seem just that God would carefully choose the men who were to represent him in this important task? Would he give the right and promise, "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven," to a man simply because that man chose himself to represent the Creator of the universe? The Lord has called by his own mouth every minister who has ever legally represented him upon the earth. Those who illegally attempt to so represent him in this life will find themselves in difficult circumstances in the life to come.

Baptism is only one of the ordinances performed by man through the authorization of God. Yet the principle of authority is applicable to all. Ordinances performed without authorization from the Master are void in the sight of God. The path which leads to life eternal is truly narrow and straight. The gate of baptism is likewise straight. Therefore, let us press forward, keeping all of His commandments ourselves and urging our neighbors to do likewise. If we do this, we will stand before the judgment bar in the last day with clean hands and listen to the words of our Father, "Come, my faithful servant, and I will give you rest."

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Is there any law in the church governing children that have been baptized and confirmed members of the church with all the rights and privileges on voting in business meetings?

ANSWER:

Each member of the church, whether he is eight years of age or eighty, has certain fundamental rights. These include the right to participate in business meetings. The only requirements are that the participating member shall be in good standing and be regularly enrolled in the branch or district where he votes.

QUESTION:

If young Joseph were chosen by his father to succeed him in office and publicly so declared before at least 3,000 people and upon other occasions, how do you account for the fact that so few people seemed to know about it at the time of the martyr's death? Why is it that so many of the most prominent in the church almost immediately put out their claims as successor? Why did none of them say, "Young Joseph will assume control of this church when he comes of age"?

ANSWER:

The one asking this question assumes something not in evidence, therefore there is no need to attempt to "account" for the "fact" which he assumes. The mere fact that we do not have the record of the testimony of a host of witnesses does not negate the positive statements of those whose testimony was preserved, a testimony quite convincing on the question of the selection by the Prophet of his successor. It was unquestionably persuasive with Judge John F. Philips who tried the Temple Lot Case.

There is satisfactory evidence that the leaders of the faction that went west believed Joseph the son would succeed his father; but when it became evident that the Prophet's widow would not follow them to the West, they were forced to abandon that theory.

But I wonder why any who hold the Mormon Church to be an apostate body would have any regrets that "young Joseph" did not fellowship with that organization. He was told, in answer to prayer, that the "light" where he stood was greater than theirs, which was to the effect that the light he individually had was greater, because at the time he was not affiliated with any group of Latter Day Saints.

Bishop George Miller's diary is to the effect that Willard Richards and other prominent men said "little Joseph" would succeed his father, but it must be kept quiet for fear the mob would kill him also.

QUESTION:

What evidence have we that the law of the land forced the Utah Mormons to issue the Woodruff Manifesto of 1890? Recently Utah elders told us that the law did not force them to do so.

ANSWER:

The best evidence (and it certainly ought to be conclusive on the point) is the language of the so-called Manifesto itself, which reads as follows (the italics are mine):

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws, and to use my influence with the members of the Church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

Correction

Since featuring the article, "Music and Church Architecture," we have received further information from the Wurlitzer Company which is at variance with certain statements in the article relating to the Wurlitzer organ, and we are glad to correct our mistake. According to the Wurlitzer Company, "The Wurlitzer organ is an electronic organ which uses reeds only as a source of electrical impulse. The sound produced by blowing air through the reeds is not amplified but, on the contrary, suppressed. Electrical impulses generated by the vibrating reeds are picked up, selected, and modified to produce the desired tone and then converted into sound."

MARY

By Sholem Asch

"Mary" is the simple story of a mother's love for her son and the great story of the Mother of our Savior. The story unfolds in the little town of Nazareth. We see Mary, demure and self-effacing, when Joseph seeks her in marriage. We see her emerge, through sacrifice and a profound faith, as a towering figure, acquainted with grief, but so imbued with wisdom and love for suffering humanity that she can transcend earthly sorrow. We come to understand the deep roots of the Christian story in the Jewish tradition, the ancient hope for the Messiah as foretold by the prophets.

Co-operatively, Women Witness for Christ - By Mrs. B. F. Moats

WOMEN NEED both a physical and a spiritual home. The family with its intimate relationship is the physical home. The church with its intricate relationship is the spiritual home. Just as a house takes a lot of living and adjustments to make a home, so the church requires use and close fellowship to become a home. We learn to fellowship by accepting our God-given responsibility of service and learn to work with others for His purposes, thus we witness for Christ through our service. By unity of purpose and prayer, we can accomplish great things. We are uplifted spiritually. We improve our talents, and others are benefited by our example.

I am reminded of one young woman's experience. She had a growing family and had not been active in the women's department of the church because the department had been disorganized. The pastor felt the need of an organization and wanted the women's help in reducing the church debt. He called a meeting of women, and this young mother, who was not in town at the time, was appointed leader. Upon her return, she formed an effective organization, and the women of the branch started to work. They were united in a common cause for God. Without his help they never could have accomplished what they did financially, for when the first year's results were tabulated, the money seemed to roll in miraculously. Their efforts were greatly blessed.

Just as the hearthfires of the physical home need to be replenished by love, confidence, and mutual understanding, so the church home and spiritual fire and zeal need to be rekindled by closer association with God's work. We gain that association and a deeper understanding of his work by putting ourselves and our efforts at his command. Woman's specific avenue of service is the women's department, and through this field she can witness for Christ.

NOT LONG AGO I visited a group of church women and found deep satisfaction in their earnest and consecrated enthusiasm in planning for a new building. There were just twelve, and out of that number only four were active, but I have never seen more enthusiastic women. They were united in purpose and truly witnessing for Christ, and they were being greatly blessed in their efforts. It was inspiring to visit their meeting.

The natural way of life is to improve our surroundings, and it should be only natural for us to equip ourselves for better service to God and the church. We can do this by busying ourselves with his work. Emma Smith was called to do certain things as the "Elect Lady" just as her husband, the prophet, was called to do his work. Both were witnesses for Christ. Both had a

Wiping their brow at the set of the

May there always be food, and before

Oh, grant this, God, for the human race!
And may they gather on bended knee unity of purpose and were blessed in their efforts. Busy women are happy, and nowhere can a woman find greater happiness than in caring for her home and loved ones and in being actively engaged in working for God and his church. Of course there are disappointments and discouragements, but she will develop strength and character by persisting in active work. She will become more efficient and can render greater service, thus becoming a better witness for Christ. The quality of her witnessing is enriched, and her spiritual fires are replenished. Women witness for Christ through the women's department by working together with others in a united program. Just as in the physical home, it requires love and mutual understanding in the department. We develop leadership or following qualities (which is just as important) by working together for God. The reward is satisfying and sure. God richly repays consecrated effort with his spiritual blessings, and we become better witnesses for him.

The prophet of old said, "Without vision the people perish." He might well have said, "Without incentives women perish," for women need an outlet, a goal that calls for greater effort where they can lose themselves in self-expression. They find this incentive in the women's department.

Think of all the great women leaders — Clara Barton, Florence Nightingale, Edith Cavell, Carrie Nation, and others—who lost themselves in service to others. Women like a "cause." They enjoy crusading—and who can blame them? Not I. I too am a woman and have found satisfaction in witnessing for Christ through the women's department.

The late President Frederick M. Smith advised, "Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready, and God will send thee flax."

The Quality of Mercy

By DORA WILLIAMS TARRANT

*The quality of mercy is not strained;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice blessed;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes.*

I WONDER how many of us have heard or read these words and yet did not get a clear understanding of their true meaning. Often some quotation flits through our minds and does not leave much of an impression; another may stay with us and set us thinking.

Last fall our ten-year-old daughter was ill with a cold. She was taken to the doctor but seemed to make little improvement. The above quotation kept passing through my mind, so I stopped to analyze it. Mercy means favor, compassion, or kindly forbearance shown toward an offender. Droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven—it is so easily accessible that it is ours for the asking; it comes to us not in a spectacular manner but quietly, peacefully, and so naturally that it is hardly recognized unless we stop to consider it. It is twice blessed. Those that give and those that receive are equally compensated. We do not have to be very old to see the soundness of this truth. In home, school, church, or country there is always a blessing upon the giver as well as the receiver.

But back to my daughter and her illness. She seemed to grow steadily worse until one night about eleven o'clock her cough became continuous. I had called earnestly upon God but had not heeded his command to call upon the elders of the church. I asked my daughter if we should not ask our pastor to come, but she said, "Mother, it is so dark and far for him to have to come to our house." I knew she was right, because he lived several miles across town from us. Then I thought of my nextdoor neighbor whose daughter had had a similar cold. She gladly gave me some of the medicine she had used for her child, and after the first dose my daughter slept for three hours. I purchased more the next day, and she continued to get better.

I was grateful for the mercy shown me by my neighbor, but I also believe that if I had obeyed the command and asked the elders to come, my daughter's recovery would have been more rapid, and she would have received more of the promised blessings.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

Excellent and interesting articles abound in September magazines, and it is hard to select the best ones. Some not mentioned are undoubtedly as worth-while as the following.

One article seems to stand out above all the others. If it alone were recommended, and everyone would read it, this column could close with that. "Is Chastity Outmoded?" Woman's Home Companion, is an article you should read, have your children read, and clip for future reading and reference. Please look up this article, for its value cannot be emphasized too strongly.

"Let's Stop Blaming the Parent," Women's Home Companion, will be stimulating and perhaps comforting for the many good parents who are too doubtful of their adequacy for the task of rearing children.

"Care of the Breasts," Good Housekeeping, contains helpful information for all women.

"What Religious Experience Can Mean to You," Reader's Digest, reflects a growing interest in development of the spiritual phases of life.

"Are You a Good Wife?" Ladies' Home Journal, is a set of questions that will be "good for what ails you" if you answer them honestly. It might be a good thing for every wife to answer them about once a week!

"Love," Ladies' Home Journal, clarifies many aspects of a subject that concerns and interests everyone.

"How to Stretch Your Food Dollar" and "690 Short Order Meals," American Home, are features that will help the homemaker who feels a revival of interest in food preparation with the coming of cool weather.

"My Daughter and I Disagree—Agreeably," Family Circle, is a mother's account of her relation to her daughter which gives sound suggestions.

"Hope for Millions," McCalls, contains information of advances in the treatment of arthritis and other diseases; it is interesting reading for anyone.

"Do Your Children Know You Love Them," Parents' Magazine. Well, do they? You may not be so sure after reading this.

"What Can I Do About Junior?" Parents' Magazine, offers firsthand help from a mother to all parents, and presents the idea that a child must be allowed to develop along his own lines.

"New Techniques in Baby Care," Parents' Magazine, should furnish you with several new ideas and a new understanding of many problems. You will be interested even if you do not have a baby to care for.

Thanksgiving Centerpiece

Looking for an unusual Thanksgiving centerpiece? Hollow out two shiny red apples and stick candles in them. Between them, center a squatty yellow pumpkin which has been hollowed and filled with colorful grapes, oranges, apples, and tuck in a few nuts-in-shell here and there. It's festive; it's a conversation-piece.

ASHBURN MISSION, CHICAGO DISTRICT.—A few months ago the group at Ashburn started a small storehouse of nonperishable food-stuffs to assist the poor in times of need. Contributions are brought each month. So far, several families have been helped. Mrs. Lorraine Horn has charge of this work.

WARRINGTON, ENGLAND.—On July 1, thirty-four of the town's churches and church schools participated in the annual Walking Day, featuring a mile-long parade. A fine picture of our church's Blue Birds carrying an attractive and colorful banner is shown at the top of a page of the Warrington Examiner, and further news coverage concerning our church informs us: "Approximately 100 scholars took part in the procession, and the main feature this year was a huge rainbow made up of thousands of paper flowers with the caption below 'God's promises never fail.' Streamers from the rainbow were held by young girls in different colored dresses. Another feature was the banner, on one side of which is the church seal, depicting a lion, a lamb and a little child, with the word 'Peace.' The other side had on it the Three Standard Books of the church, namely, the Bible, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants."

GREENWOOD, NEW YORK.—A special Children's Day service was held June 26, 1949, at 7:30 p.m. The prelude was played by Mrs. Cora Burley at the organ and Mrs. Essie Bassett at the piano. The service was opened by a drill by the primary department under the supervision of their teacher, Mrs. Daisy Terribury. The junior class gave readings on the locations of branches of the church in other countries. Lorraine and Linda Bassett sang a duet. A song, "Tell Me the Story of Jesus," was sung by the congregation and was followed by a prayer by Elder Carol Bassett. Elder Jack Kennedy from Buffalo gave the Scripture reading prefacing the blessing of the following babies: Jerry Dean Burley and Debra Rae Terribury. A short talk by Elder William Guthrie of Niagara Falls followed the blessings.

The closing song, "In the Light" was dedicated to one of the young ladies, Betty Jo Nickerson, who is leaving the congregation soon. Elder Jack Kennedy said the benediction.

WICHITA, KANSAS.—At the annual branch business meeting, held September 7, 1949, Elder Myron LaPointe was sustained as pastor. The branch approved the appointment of Elder C. R. Richards and the sustaining of Elder Ronald Manuel as counselors to the pastor. Officers elected are: Paul Mengel, director of religious education; Mrs. Fred G. Brose, adult supervisor; Ralston Jennings, treasurer and young adult supervisor; Jim Key, young people's supervisor; Mrs. Glen Tenney, children's supervisor; Clayton Marker, branch secretary; Mrs. Sam Larkin, women's leader; Mrs. Frank Westwood, director of music; Mrs. Charles Slawson, director of dramatics; A. J. Rynearson, librarian; Mrs. Ronald Manuel, Herald correspondent; Lloyd Martin, Herald House book steward. Kenneth Ward was appointed historian, and Virgil Weaver was sustained as solicitor.

Doris Bedwell and Welton Foster have enrolled at Graceland as freshmen, and Alan Sheppard and Gay Westwood have returned as sophomores. Duane Shannon, Graceland graduate of 1949, has enrolled at William Jewell College, Liberty, Missouri. Charles Jackson has resumed his studies in Chicago; and Geraldine Beardsley, Elaine Cavin, Wallace Decker, Jim Key, Ralph Peak, and Ronald Manuel are attending the University of Wichita.

Bishop Lewis Landsberg of Lamoni Stake was guest speaker at both morning and evening services on September 18.

Excavation work has been completed for the new church building, and actual construction will soon be under way. Men, women, and children have co-operated in getting the old building torn down, and it is hoped that by Thanksgiving one section of the new edifice will be near enough completion to hold meetings.—Reported by Marian Manuel.

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS, DISTRICT.—Two new Zion's League organizations have been established in the Nauvoo District during the past year. The first one was at Keokuk, Iowa, and the second at Farmington, Iowa. Both of these branches are very limited in their number of young people Zion's League age but have done well. Mrs. Pyliss Hagemeyer has been appointed League Leader in Keokuk, and Mrs. Ruth Hannings in Farmington.—Reported by Betty Sanford Tripp.

PITTSBURG, KANSAS.—Pastor T. W. Bath was re-elected branch president at the election of officers September 7. Other officers are as follows: Mrs. A. S. Evans, clerk; Sam Landrum, treasurer; Mrs. Sam Landrum, music supervisor; R. G. Smith, church school director; Mrs. T. W. Bath, women's department leader; Eldon Hart, young people's leader; Mrs. Clyde Wiley, children's supervisor; Joan Margrave, publicity agent; Harold Summers, book steward; Mrs. Roy Heller, Herald correspondent; Mrs. J. W. Jones, historian; Mr. and Mrs. Warren Jackson, custodians; Joe McAdams, trustee. R. G. Smith was sustained as solicitor.

All three groups of the women's department have started their fall meetings after discontinuing during July and August.

Petitions from the Saints and a letter from Pittsburg's pastor influenced the city commissioners to deny permission for a liquor store across from the proposed new Pittsburg church building. Friends from other churches also sent letters and petitions to the city manager.

Scammon mission is now under the supervision of Pittsburg Branch. Six children were baptized during the summer, three from Scammon and three from Pittsburg.—Reported by Mrs. Roy Heller.

ST. CHARLES, MISSOURI.—Elder James S. Menzies preached a series of missionary sermons August 24 through September 4. His topics were "I Will Build My Church," "The Kingdom of Heaven Suffereth Violence," "Power and Authority," "Wesley's Prayer Answered," "Life of Christ" (illustrated with colored slides), "The Problem of Sin," "Have Faith in God," "The Doctrine of Christ," "Christian Baptism," "The God of Our Fathers," "Let us Go On to Perfection."

On September 4, the Saints had a basket dinner at the home of Pastor and Mrs. F. F. O'Bryan. The climax of the day was the baptism of Master Ronnie Omar Bloebaum, son of Mr. and Mrs. Omar Bloebaum, at the Landsdown church.

Plans for the alteration of a building recently purchased by the branch are being considered, thus giving the Saints at St. Charles a house of worship.—Reported by Florence Hollander.

COLUMBUS, NEBRASKA.—Camp Mo-Valley, at Camp Sheldon, Columbus, Nebraska, was the last scheduled youth camp of the season, being held August 29 through September 2. It was staffed by Charles Neff, pastor at Omaha, Elders Don Lents from Independence, Clifford Cole, V. D. Ruch, and other helpers. Don Lents taught the older teen-age young people and Clifford Cole was in charge of the 12 to 14 year olds.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLORADO.—The Colorado Springs Reunion ended August 28, 1949. The average attendance during the week was between 250 and 300. There were people on the register from fifteen states. District

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

President Ward A. Hougas and District Missionary Houston Hobart were in charge and Howard Sheehy was camp pastor. The general class was taught by Bishop Walter Johnson. The young people's class was taught by Houston Hobart, and the men's class by Apostle Reed Holmes. The women's class was opened each day by Mrs. Gunderson, district women's leader. Then Mrs. Bertha Johnson taught on the subject, "How Women of the Church Can Witness for Christ." Anne Claas was the supervisor of the children's division. One afternoon was given to the display of handcraft work the children had made. The district young people's leader, Charles Claas led the young people. Each morning there was an early prayer service.

On Saturday afternoon the wedding of Charlotte Engle and Jim Reynolds took place. Evensong programs included youth camp night, talent night, Graceland Night, and a watermelon feed.

President F. Henry Edwards gave the sermon on the last Sunday.

MARLIN, TEXAS.—At the church on September 11, the Marlin Branch held its annual election. Elder Arthur Rock was sustained as pastor. Mrs. Alfred Feldman was elected secretary and treasurer; Mrs. Mira Miliam, women's department leader; Raymond Brown, church school director; Earl Allen, church school secretary and book steward; Alfred Feldman, young people's leader; Mrs. Raymond Brown, music director; Arthur Allen, tithing solicitor. The recommendation for the ordinations of Arthur Allen to the office of priest and Alfred Feldman to the office of deacon was accepted.—Reported by MRS. FRANK SPICER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—Mrs. Norma Smith, secretary to Franklyn S. Weddle, says that the Independence Symphony Orchestra, directed by Mr. Weddle, has a strong violin section this year, better than ever. New bass players are having to be trained because former ones have gone out of town to college. In a talk to the Optimist Club recently, Mr. Weddle suggested to the businessmen that if they had an opportunity to hire merely a man with good qualifications or a well-qualified man who could play an instrument, to choose the latter. Some industries in Charlestown, South Carolina, follow this practice, thus making that city able to boast excellent community music organizations.

Rehearsals of the Messiah Choir will start October 2, Sunday, at four o'clock in the choir room of the Auditorium. On December 3 the choir will join with other choirs in the Kansas City area for the presentation of the Messiah at the Municipal Auditorium in Kansas City. The presentation of the Messiah to the community will be on December 18. The exact date of the Christmas broadcast has not yet been determined. On March 6, the Messiah Choir will join with other Kansas City area choirs in the presentation of Verdi's "Requiem" at the Municipal Auditorium.

A city-wide school for the Melchisedec priesthood is under way, being held each Tuesday evening at Liberty Street Church. The first evening, September 6, 130 men attended the two-hour session. On September 13 there were 135 elders plus the staff. The subject is "Building Latter Day Saint Family Life." The purpose is to study and organize with the Aaronic priesthood in an effort to minister better to the people. Elder Leonard Lea presents the introduction in the first hour. For the second hour the group divides into three discussion sections led by Fred O. Davies, C. V. Graham, and A. E. Stoft.

Twenty-one men are enrolled in a pre-ordination training class in Independence. They meet each evening except Tuesday, Saturday and Sunday, for fifteen sessions. The instruction covers the different fields of priesthood ministry. The course will be climaxed by a Communion service for the men, their wives, and the instructors. An examination will be given which they are expected to pass satisfactorily before being ordained.

The men called to the office of deacon are: Joseph R. Bates, Charles L. Dell, Noel Rodgers, and Frederick E. Worth; to the office of teacher: Gordon Liebold and Ralph Pententler; to the office of priests: Richard Anderson, Paul B. Clements, Homer D. Gatchett, Elmer F. Epperson, Wilbert E. Richards, Marvin C. Talcott, and Joseph Williams; and to the office of elder: Vern Brown, Leonard L. Coberly, Fred N. Goode, Chester A. McClaren, Jacques Pement, Milton J. Turner, and Frank D. White.

A new mission has been started in Independence. In the Blue Ridge neighborhood, southwest of the city, Russell Resch conducted some cottage meetings, and L. J. Richards was assigned by the pastoral supervisor to enlist members in the neighborhood. On August 24 the mission had its first service, with twenty-three present at the Wednesday night prayer service. It is estimated that there are between seventy-five and one hundred church members in the neighborhood. Church school services began August 28 with thirty-two present. On September 11 there were forty-six present at the church school hour and forty-eight at the preaching service. The group meets in the basement home of Mrs. E. Wayne Smith, 10322 East Thirty-fifth Terrace. The space has become so limited that some classes will be expanded into another church home in that same neighborhood. Four departments have been organized in the church school: beginner, primary, junior, and adult. Ernest Rauh is the church school director assisting Brother Richards.

The White Mask Players are sponsoring the Zion's League Drama Festival this year. The dates set are November 14 through 18, the week before Thanksgiving. There is already a list of thirty-four plays for the Leagues of the city to choose from.

On Sunday evening, September 11, Apostle Charles R. Hield closed the campus series of sermons. The Enoch Hill Choir, directed by Dwain Miller, provided the music. Those who attended the service were pleased to read at the bottom of the bulletin a resume' of the campus offering income and expenditures. Up to that evening there had been an income in offerings of $2,551.99. Expenses had amounted to $1,812.45. New trees are needed to surround the campus setting, and it is hoped that part of the money will be applied on new seats for the Auditorium and for expanding recreational facilities on the campus for the young people.

The Stone Church building committee has met and begun its work of planning for the educational unit to be provided for the Stone Church. They have plans to visit religious educational buildings already in operation and will shortly procure architect's drawings. A fund of $37,000 now stands in the treasury for the building.

Church members throughout the church will be happy to know that the new grill for the Stone Church organ has arrived and was put in place ready for services on Sunday, September 18. It is of oak, hand carved, and has nine gold-colored metal pipes to be set in the center. This artistic masterpiece of woodwork was made by the Moller Organ Company, Hagerstown, Maryland, and was put in place by the Weeks Construction Company.

ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO.—Elder Harry Sheffer of Tucson and Priest Manley Stayton of Phoenix visited the Saints in Albuquerque from August 3 to 10. On August 7 an all-day meeting was held, outstanding features of which were the Communion and prayer services and business meeting. On the following Sunday the first regular church school was held. Until a hall is available, church school will be held each Sunday morning at 10:00 and prayer services each Wednesday evening at 7:30 in the homes. Priest Lloyd Wilson is in charge of the group. Saints in or near Albuquerque are urged to call 3-9502 for further information.

The Best Gifts - By DOROTHY EASTWOOD

ONE OF THE beliefs dear to the hearts of Latter Day Saints and distinctive to them is that of the manifestations of God's Spirit as it comes to men through what we term the spiritual gifts.

At Kansas University last winter, I had opportunity to discuss matters of religion with my roommate and neighbors in the dormitory. One of the subjects which came up was the question of spiritual gifts.

To my astonishment, I found that my friends of other faiths did not believe in any of the gifts mentioned by Paul as being possible in these latter days. Yet they are fundamental in our doctrine.

Paul, in his letter to the Corinthians, lists what we of this church look upon as spiritual gifts. He mentions wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discernment of spirits, tongues, and interpretation of tongues. We are instructed to cultivate these gifts. Paul says, "Covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way." And with this he proceeds to give the famous advice concerning the need for love in all things—Christian love. A little farther on he adds, "Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church."

It is on these three points that I want to base this article:

1. The spiritual gifts are not spectacular things to be used for the elevation of the one who receives.
2. They are to be cultivated for the edifying of God's church and therefore must be kept in their proper relationship to that purpose.
3. They must be tempered with love, for "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. . . . And though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains and have not charity, I am nothing."

TO SAY that the healing of an illness which doctors pronounced incurable is not spectacular would be foolish. To hear an unlearned man speak in a foreign tongue and to hear another translate those words can be classed as nothing short of

Here Is the Writer . . .

Dorothy Eastwood is a native daughter of Independence, having spent all of her twenty-one years in Zion. After completing her high school work at William Chrisman, from which she was graduated as valedictorian, she attended Graceland College, where she received the college silver seal for journalism. She then attended the School of Journalism at Kansas University. At present she is employed by an automobile dealer in Independence. Her evenings are spent playing softball and volleyball with the Walnut Park champion girls' teams.

the spectacular. Yet these things which are actually the outrushing of God's goodness and his desire to give of his strength to aid his children must never be looked on as such. We have been admonished to cultivate these gifts. The first lesson then might be a humble spirit and a sincere desire to receive a blessing for the strengthening of purpose to lead toward the accomplishment of some goal in the work of his church. To seek reverently of God the manifestations of his Spirit in the form of one of these gifts is cultivating. But it has surpassed the spectacular stage.

When Christ left his work in the hand of his disciples, he told them that he would not leave them alone, that in his place would be the Holy Spirit to comfort them. After his ascension, a group of his followers gathered in a hall in Jerusalem, and the Bible says, "Suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." This was a flooding of the divine Spirit, but it was not for the glory of the participants. It was for the glory of God.

In time of weakness and doubt, in time of trial, God's gifts come forth. For the nature of some people the frequent touch of God's hand is necessary for sustaining courage. Others need his spirit to dwell with them so that those about them can be helped. To some the gifts listed by Paul are supplanted by others.

AND HERE I digress to personal experience. I have never experienced a healing, a vision, tongues or their interpretation, prophecy, or any of the other gifts mentioned by Paul. But I have been ministered to in the manner I have needed; these administrations I would term spiritual gifts. What I would like to do with this personal reference is to encourage those who feel as I have felt. I used to wish I could witness some great manifestation that I might be sure beyond a doubt that God is in heaven and that the things taught in the church and by my parents were true. But I never seemed to be at the right place at the right time. Invariably I chose to visit a friend at another branch when my branch received God's Spirit. I began to feel that I was unworthy, and that it would be better for me to stay away so that others might receive. But through my patriarchal blessing, I began to realize for the first time that although I had a concept of some of the gifts of God I had left out some others, and it was those I had overlooked which were the ones I received. I am speaking now of the sheer joy of learning some new thing concerning God's creation and his truths. I am speaking now of the sweep of love for every human being and the whole world which comes in on the notes of a beautiful song, or in the touch of a beloved person's hand, or a kindness done. These, too, are spiritual gifts and need to be included along with Paul's list. They, too, should be sought and cherished, for Paul said that there are diversities of gifts. This is God's wisdom, because there are diversities in men.

My third point is Paul's advice to the saints in Corinth concerning the necessity of love. Pure Christian love, though perhaps not a spiritual gift in the true sense of the word, is a gift worth cultivating. Without it all other spiritual gifts are worthless, for God grants his love and gifts to those who are willing to pass them on to others. Such a spirit comes only with love.

Tied up in this idea of cultivating God's gifts is an old maxim which I have heard through the years. Perhaps it's familiar to you: "God helps him who helps himself." I believe that is what cultivating means. The first steps are ours. A humble spirit, a desire to serve, a heart of love must be ours. As we seek we shall rise toward God. Then we reach an obstacle. Our own power alone fails to help us. We are on tiptoes with arms outstretched and our goal is just beyond the reach of our fingertips. God sees our need, recognizes our purpose, and reaches down to give us added strength. Whether it be a miracle of healing, a word of wisdom, prophecy, or a surge of inner strength, it is God's Spirit giving the extra push, and it is worth cultivating.

The Guatemalan Indian

By MARIE GOSLINE

GUATEMALA IS not a poor country in any way. The land is fertile, with a high percentage of volcanic ash. Money exchange is the same as ours, and the chief source of revenue is from coffee and bananas. Every year 500,000 one-hundred-pound sacks of coffee are exported.

The Guatemalan Indian does not buy land; he is given free title to it. When an Indian marries, or when he decides he needs some land, he goes out on the side of the mountain, picks out a spot, sometimes two or three acres, sometimes five or six, never more than that, and clears it off and plants his maize.

Outwardly the Indian is very religious. One sees him come into the village carrying a sack over his shoulder. In this sack are all sorts of paraphernalia for carrying on his heathen worship. He goes through all sorts of ritual—burning incense, in the little pot he takes from the sack, on the steps of Santo Tomas. He sends up his beautiful balloons and shoots loud rockets while chanting his prayers. He may stay on the steps of the church for half a day, beginning first on the lower step, then gradually working his way up until finally he is inside. There he listens to the prayers of the witch doctor, kneels on the bare floor, and spreads some of the rose petals from his sack in front of him.

HOW ODD it is that all this should affect his daily life so little! How poor he is when it comes to religion! He has no creed, no set of rules which affects his living in any way. There is an open field for our missionaries in Guatemala. But there is no need for them to go unless they carry with them a medicine kit. They will first have to teach these people something about sanitation and cleanliness. When one drives through the small villages, he sees in the center of town a water well. Here the burros are watered; here the women get the water for their washing, and here also they get water for their own drinking purposes.

Our missionaries would have to give the Guatemalan Indian more than any other religion has ever given. This is not hard to do, for he has received very little from the hands of anyone who preaches Jesus Christ. He has only been taught to pray and give his money, save for two Methodist missionaries who once came to Guatemala.

These two converted many of the Indians because they gave medicine to the sick—and because the Indians liked their music. How the Indians loved their hymns! Music plays a great part in the lives of Guatemalans. Each hotel and inn and every little village has its own orchestra or marimba band—usually both.

If the Indians were taught something of cleanliness and sanitation, what a nation they might become! I remember little Julia, the Indian servant we had at Hotel Tzanjuyu on the shore of Lake Atitlan. She had been taught cleanliness, and she was beautiful. Though barefooted, as she turned down the bed and put fresh towels in the bath, she had about her a certain amount of "class." Her two, long, thick, black braids had ribbons woven into them. Her long, full skirt was brightly embroidered. Her huipil (blouse) was also brightly embroidered, but on a lighter background. Her flashing black eyes, her ready smile—what a picture she was!

And so we find that in Guatemala as well as in other parts of the world, the "field is ripe." Surely someone will go to save the Indian!

The Joys and Sorrows of Our Lord

The Lord's Supper had been a rather somber occasion, but this was the Lord's breakfast. These men were now witnesses to his resurrection, and Pentecost was just around the corner. He knew they would never any of them deny him again, and they never did. He must have been happy when he ate with them and said thrice to Peter, who had denied him thrice, "Lovest thou me?" And Peter said, "Yes, Lord." "Then," said the Master, "feed my sheep."

WHEN JESUS SMILED

There is a somewhat similar experience recorded in the Book of Mormon when Jesus met with the people on this continent and began to organize a church here and called his disciples, twelve of them.

One evening at a prayer meeting in our home, there came one of the ministry, a local minister who was usually rather sober-faced and melancholy. A good neighbor, Sister Gurwell, who was anything but melancholy, said to him, "Brother, why don't you smile occasionally?" He said, "Sister Gurwell, we do not read anywhere in the Scriptures that Jesus ever smiled." Sister Gurwell replied, "I read in the Book of Mormon where he smiled." It is recorded by Nephi in the Book of Nephi, the ninth chapter, that Jesus gathered his disciples around him on this continent, and Nephi wrote, "He smiled upon them." That was not a smile as at a good joke or to make a sale. That was a smile of approval, of happiness, of joy to be with them.

To sum it all up, I think there is a lesson here for us. Jesus knew joy, and he certainly knew sorrow. He knew Gethsemane, and he knew the Mount of Transfiguration; but he never permitted either joy or sorrow to turn him aside from his work. He never permitted either joy or sorrow to change his fundamental convictions concerning God nor his fundamental attitudes towards people.

Gives "Heralds" to Friends

I wonder each time I read the Herald how it could be any better, but each copy seems to be better than the last. There is a good spirit with every article. When I finish reading them, I pass them on to my nonmember friends. I also have two copies of The Call at Evening and several tracts that I lend to people. I hope that in this way I can help in the building of the kingdom.

My daughter, Dorothy, gives her church school papers to the students at the school for deaf children which she attends. We get extra copies and give them to some of our neighbors, too. I shall appreciate having the Saints pray that, if it is God's will, Dorothy's hearing will be restored. He has blessed us both in spiritual and physical ways, and for this we are grateful. Although my cross has been hard to bear at times, God has been with me all the way, and my heart cries out, "My God, how wonderful thou art."

Asks for Continued Prayers

The little group of Saints in Wallowa have had much discouragement this year. Following the death of my husband, George Miller; Granville Andes, another member, and his family moved away, leaving only one other member, my two children, and myself. We haven't held church school since May, but we have hopes of starting again. If there are members anywhere looking for a new location we would appreciate having them investigate this locality. Wallowa has grown much in recent years; there is a large lumber mill and fine farms.

God has blessed and comforted us since our great loss. I am deeply grateful to all who prayed for us, and I ask the continued prayers of the Saints that I may have strength to bring my children up in the way God would have me to.

Note of Thanks

During the seven months I have spent in the hospital, I have been constantly assured of the restoration of my health because so many Saints have offered prayers for me and sent words of comfort. I am grateful for the blessing of being united with my family and of worshiping with the Des Moines congregation. I hope all who remembered me will accept my thanks for their thoughtfulness.

Helps German Family

During a rummage sale held at our church last January, a man came in and began looking over the coats. He said he wanted to buy a coat for a needy relative in Germany. I told him that if he wanted a coat to send across, he could have his choice at no cost. After he had selected a coat, he asked for my name, the name of the church, and said, "You will hear from this lady for she is very much in need."

Within a few days I received a letter from the man telling us that he had forwarded the coat to Germany; he was very grateful to us for what we had done for her. A few weeks later a letter came from this lady in Germany, thanking us for the coat which she said was a perfect fit. She said her husband had been missing six years in Stalingrad, and she was left with three boys: ten, eleven, and twelve years of age. She now lives in a very unhealthy climate, and the boys have all contracted asthma.

Our Book of Mormon study class, which meets every Thursday afternoon, sent her a package of food. In all we have received four letters from her, and we now have a package of clothing read to send to her as soon as we learn her new address. She is trying to get a government permit to move to a more healthful climate for her boys. The territory in which she lives is a stormy, mountainous region where even in the summertime there are frosts, hailstorms, cold fogs, and icy rains. Her next move is based on what they call "exchange residence." If someone wants to move back to his old homeland where she now lives, they will be allowed to exchange places.

From England to Australia

Some three years ago the Saints in Australia generously decided to adopt English families to send letters and food parcels to. We were among the recipients of these gifts and looked forward to receiving letters from Brother and Sister W. E. Mulligan of Taree, New South Wales, who had "adopted" us. It is remarkable how intimate people can become through correspondence. Before long we felt as if we had known the Mulligans all of our lives. Then a cousin of theirs won an award in dairy farming which entitled him to tour the world to study farming methods in all countries. During his visit to England, he came to our home, and we became better acquainted with our pen-friends by talking to him. Other relatives, Brother and Sister Keith McLaughlin, also visited in Enfield with us. Meanwhile, the Mulligans suggested that we make our home in Australia. This was a serious move to consider, and we gave it much thought and prayer. Then, on Good Friday, April 15, we left Tilbury on our 12,000 mile journey. It was a wonderful trip, and we enjoyed seeing the Suez Canal and Red Sea. We first set foot on Australian soil at Freemantle, near the beautiful city of Perth. Although ashore for only five hours, we were privileged to meet the Saints there and felt indeed blessed for the "tie that binds." We spent four days in Melbourne with members, finally arriving at Sydney where the Mulligan family met us. We were introduced to Bishop Don Alberts and Apostle Roscoe Davey there before leaving for Taree.

During our four months here, we have learned to love the Saints and have found opportunities for ministry in the church. We send greetings to all our church friends; our prayers are for them everywhere.

DEATHS

PINKERTON.—Earl William, son of William and Minnie Pinkerton, was born June 25, 1914, at Belvidere, Illinois, and died August 31, 1949, at St. Joseph Hospital in Belvidere. He had been in poor health all his life.

He is survived by his mother; two sisters: Miss Dorothy Jane Pinkerton of Janesville, Wisconsin, and Mrs. Ray W. Manley of Cherry Valley, Illinois, and a brother, Robert A. Pinkerton, who is attending Graceland College. His father preceded him in death on July 8, 1949. Funeral services were held at the Atkins and Johnson Mortuary, Elder H. A. Wasson officiating.

HARRIS.—Olive Amy, was born April 16, 1882, in Racine, Wisconsin, and died at her home in San Jose, California, on September 11, 1949. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1904 and for many years served as president of the women's group in San Jose Branch. She also served one year as president of the Menlo Park Woman's Club and was active in civic affairs in that city.

She is survived by her husband, LeRoy E. Harris, to whom she had been married for forty-nine years; two daughters: Mrs. Ruth Bradley of San Jose and Mrs. Leah Thompson of San Fernando, California; a brother, Harley V. Bates of San Jose; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the John Dowdle Mortuary in San Jose under the auspices of the San Jose Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star with Elder Charles J. Cady officiating. Entombment was in the mausoleum at Oak Hill Memorial Park where services were conducted by the Josephine Rebekah Lodge and General Lloyd Wheaton Auxiliary, Spanish American War Veterans.

TO HAWAII

Apostle Charles R. Hield will go to the Hawaiian Islands, leaving October 18. He will remain there until well into December doing ministry.

WELFARE BUILDING

The church has recently purchased the Liberty Building which is across from our Liberty Street Church. This is a two-story building with full basement 164 feet long by 82 feet wide. The upper floor contains twelve offices. Bishop DeLapp states that there is adequate room for the carrying on of relief and welfare work, formerly done at the Swope Mansion on the Campus, and besides this, there should be some office space on the second floor available for rent.

TO YOUNG ADULT RETREAT

Elder A. Orlin Crownover, assistant to the First Presidency, spent the week end of September 18 at Knobnoster Park with the young adults of Central Missouri Stake, where he was speaker at the Sunday morning hour.

AUDITORIUM WORK

Bishop G. L. DeLapp announces that the work on the Auditorium progresses slowly, due to the inability to get the stone from the east. This he regrets, but the contractors are doing all they can on other work involved in the project as they wait.

WORK IN THE NEW ALBANY BRANCH

President I. A. Smith and Apostle W. W. Smith were in New Albany, Indiana, Sunday, September 25, for the dedication of the church. President Smith offered the dedicatory address. A district conference was conducted for the Southern Indiana District. Missionary Joseph Yager attended and carried on a series of missionary meetings beginning the week after the dedication. Edmund Fouts is the branch president, and Chester Metcalf is the district president. Every branch in the district was represented at the gathering.

BAPTISMS THROUGH AUGUST

President F. Henry Edwards announced that the baptisms in the church for the month of August totaled 439. The total for this year is 3,200. As a rule 67.11 per cent of the year's total is complete by August. On this basis if the record holds through the end of this year there should be a total of 4,300 baptisms for the year. This would be one of the best records the church has ever had. The August total is the highest such in twenty-five years.

KANSAS CITY STAKE RALLY

Apostle E. J. Gleazer took part in a Kansas City Stake Rally September 25. It was held at Central Church and the interest and attendance were excellent. He tells that Central Congregation is attempting to carry on a continuous missionary campaign. Apostle Gleazer preached at South Chrysler Branch in Independence, Sunday evening. The attendance was very good.

Apostle Gleazer reports that in his area there were 600 baptisms during the first seven months of the year, of which 200 were from the Independence territory. Between sessions of the Joint Council, he has been traveling in his territory, making contribution where the demands were most insistent.

Answer Without Ceasing

By Margaret Lee Runbeck

"I believe that for those who pray without ceasing, there is answer without ceasing." In "The Great Answer," Miss Runbeck showed us the effectiveness of faith and prayer through personal testaments during wartime. Now, out of the postwar world, she has brought together more of these intensely moving cases where faith has been restored, hearts uplifted, solutions reached, and strengths made stronger. This is a book of heroism and personal courage, of people who experience miracles in their daily lives. In many remarkable and dramatic ways, men and women find the rewards of prayer and a new complete way of life.

Margaret Lee Runbeck is the author of "The Great Answer," "Our Miss Boo," and "Time for Each Other."

"Have you read . . . ?"

After reading a popular book or magazine, some people like to open conversation about it by asking a question. The value of any book or article is the deposit it leaves on one's mind. After spending forty-five minutes on the evening paper, I have been asked, "What did you read?" Frequently I could not think of one outstanding item of news or information that seemed quotable. When someone tells of the good they get from reading the Herald, it makes others wish to spend time on it and deepens the impression of that good on the reader's mind. It is a fine practice for our readers thus to spread Herald influence.

Introducing...

RAYMOND E. TROYER of Chicago, Illinois, (page 5) was born in Jasper County, Missouri, on June 8, 1908. He was graduated from Joplin (Missouri) high school in 1927 and attended Graceland College from 1927 to 1930. He received his B. S. degree from Southwest Missouri State College in 1943, and his master's from the University of Chicago in 1946, where he is still working for his doctor's degree.

He married Marjorie Mathis in 1933. Four children have been born to them: Jimmie, 14; Donna, 13; Carolyn, 11; and Ronnie, 1.

Brother Troyer's first job, at the age of twelve, was with the Joplin Globe. He worked in the printing, circulation, and editorial departments on newspapers in Joplin and Springfield, Missouri, and Chicago. He is now employed by the Chicago Tribune. He has also had part-time employment in the Lake Forest (Illinois) high school, teaching speech, dramatics, and parent education in the adult programs. He won a scholarship from the Lion's Club upon graduation from high school and used it at Graceland.

He was Boy Scout leader for eight years, publicity director for the Spring River (Missouri) District twelve years, and district director of religious education for six years. He organized and was pastor of the Medoc (Missouri) Mission for four years, and was pastor at Joplin one year. He has served as church school director in Joplin and Springfield, Missouri, and West Pullman, Illinois. He was ordained a deacon in 1932 and an elder in 1936.

CHARLES JOSEPH HUNT of Independence, Missouri, (page 8) was born in Tecumseh, Nebraska, on February 4, 1861. He married Etta Duckett in 1897. To them three sons were born: Russell W., Arlo L., and Maynard C. He was graduated from high school in 1878 and spent fourteen years in the merchandising business.

Brother Hunt was ordained an elder in 1891, and at the following April Conference was appointed to the Gallands Grove, Iowa, District, where he served for twenty-four consecutive years. He was ordained a seventy in 1894, and a high priest and local bishop in 1900.

Brother Hunt says: "I have preached more than six thousand times—always affirmative, encouraging,—never pessimistic.

DAVID J. WILLIAMS of Burlington, Iowa, (page 12) was born October 12, 1879, at Coalville, Iowa. He was ordained a deacon in 1904, a priest in 1909, an elder in 1913, a seventy in 1914, and a high priest in 1917.

He married Clara Lillian Jenkins in 1900. They have one daughter, Mrs. Clara W. Edaburn, who is now assistant professor of home economics at Oregon State College.

Brother Williams received his first appointment in 1913 and labored in the Des Moines District for two years. He next spent eight and a half years in Burlington, Iowa. After this he labored three and a half years in the Hawaiian Islands. Following this he served for a short time as president of the St. Louis District, and then was sent to Chatham, Ontario, where he labored for five and one-half years. In 1934 his appointment was to Philadelphia and the neighboring district. For the next ten and a half years he was appointed to Wichita, Kansas. In 1947 he was sent to the Nauvoo District with Burlington as his objective.

In his youth Brother Williams was a coal miner, though prior to his church appointments he operated a café and worked in a grocery business. His hobby is chart making.

News & Notes

OFFIE PARKER DIES

O. W. Parker, former production superintendent of the Herald Publishing House, died at the Independence Sanitarium Saturday, October 8. His retirement was announced in the "Herald" of August 22 after forty years of service.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS IN SANITARIUM

President F. Henry Edwards was released from the Independence Sanitarium the latter part of last week after a ten-day siege of pneumonia. His illness was not too far advanced, and the doctors report that it was reached just in time. It was stubborn and required careful treatment. Partial cause at least was that President Edwards labored too long hours and too hard under the heavy burden of a cold. He felt that during Joint Council session he should not excuse himself for treatment.

PRESIDENT SMITH TO OMAHA OPENING

The Saints in Omaha, Nebraska, recently purchased a church in the southern portion of the city and now have it sufficiently cleaned and repaired to begin having services on Sunday, October 9. For that occasion President Israel A. Smith was present. He met with the Saints of Omaha in a group for a fellowship supper on the seventh and spoke Sunday morning at the church at 36th and Burt streets. Open house was held at the mission church at 5:30, and he spoke Sunday evening at the mission at 2609 "D" street.

APOSTLE SMITH TO KENTUCKY CONFERENCE

On the week end of October 1, Apostle W. W. Smith was present at the Tri-City, Kentucky, district conference of the Kentucky-Tennessee District. Apostle Smith reports that there was a good attendance with representation from practically every branch of the district. Jerry C. Fitch is the district president. S. E. Dickson, Lancaster, Ohio, just finished a one week's series of missionary sermons, and two were baptized on September 30.

Four men were recommended for ordination; Keith Van Nieuwenhuyze, priest; Billy Dickson Gravenmyer, teacher; Closson Hendrix, teacher; and T. E. Smalley, elder.

WORK IN NEW ENGLAND

Almer Sheehy, of the Southern New England District, reported that there have been thirty-five baptisms in that district since the first of this year through September 18.

Don Harvey preached five sermons at Dixfield, Maine, September 12 through 18, with increasing attendance each night. This series took place in the home of W. C. Porter, pastor, and there were thirty-five present on the last Sunday night.

Missionary work will begin intensively in northern Maine, at Washburn, in Aroostook County, October 31, according to Apostle Maurice Draper. There will be cottage meetings and some preaching.

INSTITUTE AT KENNETT, MISSOURI

Elder John Darling from the Department of Religious Education and Elder Cecil Talcott, Independence city-wide director of religious education, were present for an institute September 25, at Kennett, Missouri. The event was planned by Gomer Malone, director of religious education in the South Missouri District. The people of that branch are show-

"Each One Win One"

The church has been strengthened by the reunion experiences of 1949. We have become more keenly alert to our need to make Jesus our Lord. We see our mission with greater clarity and urgency. The church is united and eager to advance!

In order to do this, we must witness for Christ! And in order to share in the joy of service, we must "each one win one" to Christ and his church! Here is the general outline of the follow-up of the reunion emphasis.

Every branch is urged to conduct a general class using the text, "Each One Win One" (D. T. Williams, Herald House, $.50). This class is to conclude its study by November 20.

Each and every member is urged to select immediately the prospect he hopes to have ready for baptism on the earliest possible Decision Day.

All pastors are urged to report the number expected to be baptized by November 20, the first Decision Day.

Pastors are requested to use the Pastor's Handbook in improving branch services.

Priesthood ought to lead out in this endeavor.

The church schools are to recruit new pupils in all age groups, and to improve the quality of teaching and worship.

Zion's League and the Women's Department are urged to make their program significant and inviting.

This evangelistic emphasis is to motivate and give meaning to every activity of the branch.

The church properties should be made as neat and attractive as possible.

Nonresident Saints are encouraged to begin church schools in their own homes.

Remember! November 20 is the first Decision Day. Let's make it a banner day in our experience as a church. Other Decision Days are February 5 and June 11. These do not exclude other baptismal services, but these are special days to be set aside for baptisms. Let's reach out and minister to our relatives, our friends, and to those who are now strangers but who, nevertheless, need the gospel of Jesus Christ as it has been restored. "Witness for Christ."

Growing Up

A MISSIONARY tells about a little girl he met while calling on a farm family. He was attracted to her when she told him about her barnyard Sunday school. She was the teacher, and her pupils were a doll, a kitten, and a calf. She was quite serious about it; the minister enjoyed the situation. Then he moved on to another field and did not see the girl for three years.

When the two met again the missionary asked, "Well, how's your Sunday school getting along?"

"I don't have any now," she answered and then explained, "The dollie's head got broked; my kitty ran away; and the calf got too big."

There are altogether too many people who think that the church school is just for children. These same persons are likely to argue that the Sunday evening services are for the elect and the Wednesday prayer service just for old folk. They have grown up like the calf. Zion will never be redeemed by those who get too big to support any of the Lord's work. "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is . . ."—Hebrews 10: 25. If the Saints ever become lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, Zion will have to wait.

Continuing Missionary Emphasis

The work of the church is pointed toward goals which partake of the nature of eternity. We are to evangelize the world and build the kingdom. But for purposes of administrative convenience and emphasis, we sometimes express these long-time goals in terms of short-time programs. Thus in the 1949-50 Pastor's Handbook we have called for the church to go forward under the slogan: "Make Jesus Your Lord."

We are very happy, indeed, that this emphasis carries forward so fittingly the major theme of the reunions: "Each One Win One."

To further this missionary emphasis, a committee representing the Council of Twelve has drawn up a program which provides for a series of Decision Days, the selection of prospects by individual members, the improvement of church services, etc. Some new materials are already available and others are in process of preparation.

A more complete announcement of this program is contained in this issue of the Herald. We are hopeful that the membership of the church will give their prayerful and wholehearted support to this important phase of our work.

College Day

THE LAST SUNDAY in October (30) has been designated this year as "College Day," when the Saints are requested to make a special offering for Graceland College.

All funds realized from College Day offerings will be used to furnish and equip the Memorial Student Center, nearly completed, and the men's new dormitory, construction of which is expected to begin next spring.

We quote Elder R. Edwin Browne, Director of Public Relations, as follows:

College Day gives the people of the church an opportunity to be reminded of the important function of Graceland College in relation to the total program of the church. We are encouraged by the report that more students have chosen to enroll at Graceland this year than last. This is in contrast to the record of most colleges which are reporting decreases in enrollment this year. It is our hope that the support of the members of the church both financial and otherwise on College Day this year will give another indication of the fact that our church college is playing an increasingly significant role in the educational program of the church.

When Autumn Comes

Some of us call it Autumn and some of us call it God.

EACH YEAR as summer draws to a close, the leaves on some of the trees begin to look a bit ragged and droopy. But the brave maple trees, the oaks, sumac, poplars, and quaking aspen have saved the best for last. They put on rouge and lipstick, have a new hair do, don their gay and flaming autumn robes for one last dance in the wind.

All that I have written thus far is not fair to the trees or to nature or to God. This beauty is not put on by a beautician with brush and powder puff and lipstick; these garments are not "put on." This beauty comes from within, from the very life of the trees—it is a part of them. (As must be our "robes of righteousness.") The sweetness and goodness in the life stream of the trees has come forth to testify.

The still, small voice in autumn's hush
Yon maple wood the burning bush.
—Whittier.

Every common bush afire with God.
—Mrs. Browning.

The colors in the autumn leaves are the result, 'tis true, of chemical changes, but they were designed by the great Chemist before man ever played with mortar and pestle, with litmus and test tubes; before artist ever spread color on canvas: "I, the Lord God, created all things spiritually before they were naturally upon the face of the earth."—Genesis 2: 5, Inspired Version.

It is wonderful to those who have eyes to see God at work in all seasons: in the first crocus of the spring—a little flame of life and color beside a snow bank. The full beauty of field and forest in summer. The glory of the autumn harvests—God's bounty to feed the hungry world. Every day is a thanksgiving day!

Duncan Campbell, a Scotch minister in the old days in Lamoni, perhaps gifted with "Scotch second sight," told me one time that he had been in the woods alone in meditation of an autumn day, when suddenly his ears seemed open, and he could hear and understand as every blade of grass, shrub, flower, and tree sang the praises of God. It was a very real experience to him. For those who have eyes to see and ears to hear, nature witnesses for God.

He is above all things, and in all things, and is through all things: and all things are by him, and of him; even God, for ever and ever.

—Doctrine and Covenants 85:9.

Building Zionie Communities

By RAYMOND TROYER

Some basic reasons supported by current Educational Theory, for the Saints to move close together.

The gathering is primarily a spiritual enterprise. It should be initiated in our already existing homes and branches, where the principles of Zionie living can be practiced until they become second nature.—From Reports and Objectives of the Church, 1947, page 5.

AS MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH, we can well spend a great deal of time in consideration of the above statement. As goals and objectives of local branches are formulated, some things will probably always be included which will be related to the above. What physical adjustments can we make in our local branches and homes—

1. that will help us to practice the principles of Zionie living?
2. that will best further our commission to evangelize the world?
3. that will quicken us so that we will be unreservedly devoted to the kingdom in all of our associations and activities?

Among the things that show promise of helping to achieve such goals is for members of the church to move to the immediate vicinity of their church home and form Zionie communities. While the Zionie pattern of living must originate in homes, it is doubtful that parental and home influences alone can build such lives. They need to be strengthened and sustained by many other factors that contribute to the formation of behavior patterns and learning.

Old and young alike would benefit from Zionie communities which would be part of larger communities whether they lived in large urban centers or in rural sections. Within such communities, a semi-controlled environment can be realized which would make possible the following:

1. Conditions for better basic character development in children and young people and would be characteristic of a Latter Day Saint way of life.
2. The establishment of high ethical standards within the immediate neighborhood.
3. The promotion of many activities together in the church, the home, and the community designed to contribute to a well-balanced life for all age-groups from the small child to those of mature years.
4. A greater degree of co-operation among Latter Day Saints in the sharing of good and ill fortune.
5. Real group action because of group cohesiveness and mutual understanding.
6. The establishment of Zionie traditions that would become deep-rooted in the lives of the people.
7. Contacts with nonmembers in which evangelization could be furthered to the best advantage.

Basic Character Formation

There are many studies which tend to show that basic character is fixed to a great degree early in life by the child's acquiring the characteristics of those with whom he associates. Most of those associations are with other members of the family in the home; however there are usually many other related influences. Of extreme importance also in a child's development is the conditioning and the manner of growth that takes place after these early characteristics have been formed. Every person with whom he comes in contact and everything in his environment has some influence on his continued growth.

In a study made some years ago in character formation by H. Harts-horne and M. A. May, indications were found that people's lives were influenced by others in the following order: their parents, their friends, their club leaders, their public schoolteachers, and their church school teachers. Knowing what we do today about learning and attitude formation, the results were what might have been expected in most communities. These results should give us leads in formulating our church objectives and in the problems we have of building godly, spiritual lives in our members.

Knowing the results of this study, I felt that if the best friends of Latter Day Saint children and young people belonged to the church, another big factor in character formation would be in our favor, so I set up a study to find who such friends were. Using sociometric techniques, I found in several branches studied that children and young people of the church had very few friends who were also members. In branches with boys' and girls' clubs and active Zion's Leagues, the group cohesiveness was somewhat higher than in those without such groups; however, with even the best scoring groups, a high percentage indicated that their best friends were not Latter Day Saints.

Having best friends out of the church is not in itself bad, especially if our young members have other friends and contacts in the church to help them in establishing a basic set of values and character patterns. Under ideal conditions, we will need to make good friends of nonmembers if we win them to the church; however under present conditions, such contacts are too often winning our own children away from the church and contributing to learning situations in which they form undesirable habits and attitudes.

How does one acquire best friends? Empirical observation would indicate that children's best friends live next door or across the street. They have many activities together in each other's homes and on the neighborhood playgrounds, and go to the same school together. In such associations, they develop attitudes, philosophies, and mutual likes and dislikes which they will carry through life.

If Latter Day Saints would move closer together, the parent-child-friend relationship could function in such a way as to determine, during those formative years, the basic characteristic of their children. By the children's sharing in the life of their Latter Day Saint neighbors, they would learn those standards, customs, and outlooks that could contribute to the highest kind of Christian character. Church school teachers also would become more effective because they would be looked upon in a different light than being just teachers. With closer weekday association in the home and neighborhood, they would more often be found also in the "friend" class.

There is an increasing recognition that education demands the effective co-operation of all the educative factors which we experience. With so many disintegrating elements in our society today, unless there are these Zionite communities in which we can have a greater influence on learning experiences, our children may lose these basic standards with consequent deterioration of manners and morals which are necessary in a Zionite people.

Community Ethical Standards

In living close together, Latter Day Saints can exert a positive influence within their immediate environment. They can thus have a voice in community groups and in such organizations as Parent-Teacher Associations. Through community solidarity against the evil forces loosed in the world, high Christian ethical standards can be kept alive.

The new and better society of Zion we dream about depends on our establishing and maintaining obedience to moral law and living according to the ideals of brotherly love in our homes and communities. If we are separated, we usually work alone, fighting a losing battle; however, by living close to each other, with the help of God, we can achieve success.

Activities

The physical church of Jesus Christ should be more than just a place to worship on Sundays. It should be a place where every age-group is ministered to in creative and spiritual activities throughout the entire week. One of our greatest handicaps has been that we have glimpsed only a partial view of the gospel and its possibilities. Through a well-rounded program that has as its end a well-balanced life, we may be able to understand better the many aspects of our religion as it applies to our entire lives; it will thus be a greater, dynamic force than has been possible in the past.

At one time, I made a study of the settlement houses in Chicago. In them, I found a real, constructive influence in the lives of people in some of the crowded, underprivileged sections of the city. Mothers' clubs were busy studying, canning, sewing, and cooking during the daytime. As soon as school was out in the afternoon, story and play groups for elementary school children were formed. In the evening, study classes, music groups, forums, recreational groups, and hobby and art groups met for pastime and the development of children, young people, and adults. On Sundays, classes met for the study of religion. From this study, a vision was glimpsed of the time when our churches could be community centers, ministering to the physical, mental, and spiritual needs of our people as these settlement houses contributed to the many needs of people in Chicago.

Boy Scout and Cub Scout programs, definitely Latter Day Saint centered in aims and activities, will be possible with our people all living close to the church. With the girls, Oriole and Blue Bird programs can be promoted to a greater advantage. Vacation church schools and weekday religious experiences will also be possible. Such can be sponsored even if there are only a few who are in those age-groups. It is difficult to see how a real, effective program for children can be planned and carried out unless they do live close together.

Study programs and recreational activities for young people and adults can be effectively carried on in both the church and the home if members live close together. For a full life, rich in spiritual experiences, we need to study, reason, and play together. Study classes one or two hours a week have often been ineffective because we were not prepared mentally and spiritually for the lessons presented and have not realized their implications in our personal lives. By living closer together, the things studied can be discussed during many activities and associations that would be possible in homes and the church.

Sharing Our Experiences

Sharing experiences with mutual friends is necessary food for our souls and for that mental condition which is ideal for progress. We really share with and understand others only after long periods of intimate acquaintanceship and by participating in activities together under varied circumstances. Such associations result in mutual trust and confidence which is the cement of a Christian society. There are many possibilities for sharing and co-operation with Saints living close together. All of us have our periods of suffering and misfortune when a close friend could greatly lighten our burden. At times of sickness or major mishaps, Latter Day Saints can minister more fully to each other's needs. Also, we all have periods of triumphs which may be shared with others near to us on such occasions. These opportunities, though lacking in much of our society today, are necessary among a godly people.

Living close together should increase the number of common experiences which the Saints have both in and out of the church. Among such would be activities with our own group and in the larger community which would contribute to our cultural advancement. Through sharing with each other, cultural growth would become more widespread than is now possible with our members scattered as they are.

Group Solidarity

The functioning of our branches has been greatly handicapped at times because of the lack of harmonious relationships in group work. Much of this might have been prevented had the members understood each other better. Many programs of improvement have failed, not because they were inherently bad, but because some members did not understand them or the motives back of them.

Too often we have relied on majority rule in reaching decisions with our people when we should have had a general consensus. This does not relieve one of his agency or prevent differences of opinion. There will always be some differences of opinion as long as we are intelligent beings, but decisions should be reached that are satisfactory to all after mutual exploration for common understandings.

Through group thinking and group action we must work out the many practical problems for realizing Zion. The basic motivation must be Zionism and group enterprise rather than fear motivation which has so often ruled in the past. We can never progress until there is evidence of a greater unity in some of our local groups. This group cohesiveness can become a reality through the fine human relationships possible with people living close together and having common goals in life.

Traditions

At times in the past, traditions have been a hindrance to progress, however they can foster stability in the lives of people and society and at the same time stimulate the highest type of growth and development. In Zionism communities, even where our members are a small minority, this necessary spirit may be bred and kept alive by our church people.

Traditions need to be established which are distinguishing marks of Latter Day Saints. These traditions should be of such a nature that they will preserve the best values of our church and at the same time make use of the advances of modern life and thought. In our contacts with the world, we should partake of those things that will contribute to our cultural, intellectual, and spiritual development, but we will, by our very nature, withdraw from participation in those things that are unholy. This type of life needs to become more than just habit with a godly people. It must become traditional.

Such traditions are not established over night, nor will they be realized with each family following a distinct pattern of its own. They will emerge from groups of our people living close together and having common experiences and common standards and values. As varied excellencies are acquired in such a Zionism society, they may then be enlarged, refined, and passed on to the next generation.

Evangelization

Our program for winning new members to the church has suffered greatly both because we have lived far apart and because we have not lived close to our houses of worship. If we live near church, it is only natural to invite friends and neighbors to special functions, to series of meetings, and to many other activities. If statistics were available, they would probably show that most initial contacts of converts, other than relatives of Latter Day Saints, were made by attendance at some special meeting through the invitation of a friend. If the church is just around the corner, it is much easier consistently to accept invitations to church functions than if the church is across the city. The cradle roll, boys' and girls' activities, Zionism League activities, study groups, and class meetings all provide channels through which others may be won to the gospel as well as a means for enriching their lives.

The friendship chain with non-members is strengthened by close association with several church members. Where one may have some little influence, two good Latter Day Saint families could have a great deal of influence in winning an individual to the church and also in setting an example of righteous living. Experience shows that in some situations, the initial contact has been with the friends of children or young people who have lived near. Later, fathers and mothers have become interested and have accepted the gospel.

A Tribute to David Whitmer

One of the Three Special Witnesses of the Book of Mormon.

Picture on Front Cover

By C. J. HUNT

DAVID WHITMER, eldest son of Peter Whitmer, Sr., was born January 7, 1805, and baptized in Seneca Lake near Fayette, New York, in June, 1829, by Joseph Smith. He was the third person baptized into the Restoration and was one of the original six members in the organization of the church on April 6, 1830. David's parents and the entire family gave substantial assistance to Joseph Smith when he was translating the Book of Mormon. They were prosperous, honorable, progressive Pennsylvania Dutch farmers. Their farm was in Seneca County near Fayette, New York. Soon after his baptism, David was ordained to the ministry (a priest); while assisting Joseph Smith in church work, he baptized nine persons in Seneca Lake, where a short time before he himself was baptized.

During the time of translating the sacred golden plates by use of the historic Urim and Thummim, Joseph Smith used at times five different scribes—Emma Hale Smith, Martin Harris, John and Christian Whitmer, and Oliver Cowdery, the latter doing most of the work. The Book of Mormon plates and the Urim and Thummim were delivered and entrusted to Joseph Smith by the angel Moroni on September 22, 1827. The translation was completed in 1829, and by divine instruction Joseph selected Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris as special witnesses to see and handle the "plates" and to converse personally with Moroni; this was a blessed experience to which they willingly signed a testimonial. Eight other men saw and handled the "plates" after the translation, but they did not see or talk with Moroni. Their signed testimony is also recorded. After the work was fully finished, Moroni took possession of the "plates" and the Urim and Thummim. These sacred instruments have never been returned nor used by any member of the church since 1829. All of the witnesses reaffirmed their published testimonies during their lives. (See first pages in all Books of Mormon.) Following the translation of the Book of Mormon in 1830, Martin Harris furnished $3,000 in payment for printing the first five thousand copies of the Book of Mormon, which contained about seven hundred pages. Millions of copies have been printed and sold since then.

Early in 1831 the Whitmer family moved from New York to Kirtland, Ohio.

Parallels of National Testimonies With the Eleven Book of Mormon Witnesses

In an article about the signers of the Declaration of Independence written by Mr. Lossing, which may be found in Harper's Magazine for the year 1858, we find these words:

It is a fact worthy of record that the fifty-six members of the Continental Congress of 1776, who signed the Declaration of Independence and thereby took a position of great eminence in the sight of the nations, not one fell from his proud estate, either by the effects of political apostacy, or lukewarmness, or by moral Degradation. In public and private life they remained pure . . .

It is recorded that George Washington was the first of the original signers of the "Immortal Document," the Constitution of the United States of America.

Ancient and Modern Testimonies of Unusual Interest

From 1827 to 1829, the angel Moroni, as stated above, bore testimony to the divinity of the Book of Mormon; also during the same period, John the Baptist, Peter, James, and John the Revelator (in angelic form) presented in person to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the priesthood authority. Likewise, on Sunday afternoon, April 3, 1836, in the Kirtland Temple (a week after the dedication), a marvelous heavenly vision was given to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. At that great event they saw and received testimonies and other instructions from the Savior, Moses, Elias, and Elijah, evidencing the truthfulness of the Restored Gospel church and of the Old and New Testament. The Inspired Version was finished July 2, 1833. Here is a strong array of witnesses, human and divine. Well might we sing, "How firm a foundation ye Saints of the Lord." (Read the instructive vision given to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon while they were translating the Bible on February 16, 1832, at Hiram, Ohio. It is recorded in section 76, Doctrine and Covenants, confirming the foregoing Holy Records.)

David Whitmer Again

As a high priest in the church, David Whitmer held several very responsible positions. However, in 1838, he became disaffected, yet he always retained abiding faith in the Restored Gospel and held high regard for Joseph Smith, the choice seer, Emma, the "elect lady," and their children.

With his family he settled in Richmond, Ray County, Missouri, in 1838, where he resided until his death. He was the first Mayor of Richmond and in 1857 was elected its first city attorney, being re-elected in 1858. His talent and continued popularity as a useful citizen was evidenced in 1858, when he was elected Commissioner of Common Schools of Ray County, serving two years in this capacity. In February, 1862, he was commissioned circuit attorney of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, which position he held throughout the Civil War, although serving in the county as captain in the Enrolled Missouri Militia. In 1867 and 1868 he was commissioned judge of the Ray County Court of Common Pleas.

Oliver Cowdery, a brother-in-law of David Whitmer, was given charge of the complete original manuscript of the Book of Mormon by Joseph Smith and the transcript of several lines of the hieroglyphics of the Book of Mormon plates. In 1850, Oliver came to Richmond, Missouri, where he was given generous care in the David Whitmer home, closing his long, useful life's work on March 3 of the same year. Prior to his death, as custodian of the Book of Mormon manuscript and original transcript, Oliver feelingly entrusted them to David Whitmer with these words, "Brother David, be true to your testimony."

Interviewers were more frequent after 1850 when Mr. Whitmer came into possession of the greatly prized manuscript of the Book of Mormon. He was often visited and questioned by believers and unbelievers in the Restored Gospel and prophetic mission of Joseph Smith. Fortunately the manuscript was clearly written and well-preserved. Hundreds were privileged to see it and listened to his positive testimony of handling the golden plates of the Book of Mormon and conversing with the angel Moroni. David Whitmer always permitted questions from friends and strangers alike. During 1875, an irresponsible newspaper man, after visiting Richmond, published an article derogatory to Mr. Whitmer's testimony, which account was soon answered. Whitmer's high standing for honesty and integrity and moral worth was upheld by prominent citizens of Richmond, including the circuit judge, postmaster, county officials and bankers. The Chicago Times published their signed statements.

A Last Written Testimony

I have before me a reproduced photograph of a ninety-three-word testimony of David Whitmer, dated Richmond, Missouri, March 2, 1875, thirteen years before his death. His eyesight being poor, a grandson, George W. Schweich, penned his words:

My testimony to the world is written concerning the Book of Mormon, and it is the same that I gave at first (1829) and is the same that shall stand to my latest hour in life, linger with me in death, and shine as gospel truth beyond the limits of life, among the tribunals of heaven, and (that) the nations of earth will have known too late the divine truth written on the pages of that book (Book of Mormon) is the only sorrow of this servant of the Almighty Father.

Signed, David Whitmer.

His Grave

His death occurred at his home, January 25, 1888. An observing historian wrote:

On top of the humble marble that marks the resting place of David Whitmer, in Richmond cemetery may be seen the chiseled figure of the Bible, upon which lies one of the Book of Mormon; while underneath some of his last words as follows: "The Record of the Jews, and the Record of the Nephites are one. Truth is Eternal."

David Whitmer was the last of the three special witnesses to the Book of Mormon.

A Cyclone at Richmond

Seventy J. Charles May of Independence, Missouri, furnished the following from The Ray Chronicle of June 3, 1878:

Language is too poor to adequately describe the desolation and ruin of Richmond. Within a few moments, a third of the town was made desolate, five hundred persons made homeless with many of them left penniless. Richmond is in grief and mourning. We have buried twelve bodies of our good citizens. Others are dying! . . . The buildings on the public square were estimated on Monday following the cyclone as having been damaged to the amount of two thirds of their value. Although the buildings all around it were torn to atoms, it is an interesting historical fact that the room in which the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon was kept was uninjured, although the building itself was damaged, it being the residence of David Whitmer, Senior, one of the Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon.

Thousands believed a divine providence cared for the sacred manuscript.

The Manuscript in New Hands

For a nominal remuneration, the Whitmer family placed the historic manuscript and some other valuable writings in the possession of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints at Independence, Missouri, on April 18, 1903. Thus the sacred manuscripts of the Inspired Version of the Bible and the Book of Mormon in their entireties were united again for the first time since the Prophet Joseph's martyrdom in 1844.

Future Features

Graceland College Day will be observed by the branches on Sunday, October 30. President Gleazer's Convocation Address will appear in the October 31 issue. A series of four articles by Roy A. Cheville concerning his European trip last summer will also start in that issue of the "Herald."

Evan Fry's sermon, "The More Excellent Way," in the October 24 issue gives some interesting sidelights on spiritual gifts and "spiritual persons." "Design for Living," in two parts, by Alice M. Edwards also starts then.

Deep Channels -

By RUBY TINKHAM

LENNIE FACED her church school class with the assurance that this Sunday was going to be different. There was good attendance with two visitors present. She was glad she had spent some extra time in looking up references and checking at the library—it had seemed dull and tiresome—but this feeling of deep satisfaction came only from being prepared.

She smiled happily, and her eager enthusiasm permeated the whole class—no reading the lesson here, no old and wornout phrases floating leisurely around in a dead atmosphere of stagnated thought. Rather the very air seemed charged with a new vibrancy. Some faces were raised expectantly, and Lennie's heart swelled with joy because she had something to give. "This is what I've worked for," she thought, "those long hours of study, that tedious attention to detail, that unrelenting search for a new and stimulating way of presenting the truth. Here it is now—all ready and waiting, full and rich."

Silently she lowered her eyes, for this was His moment too, and He must know the gratitude she felt before they began this hour together. And she was right—it was different. Questions and answers melted into perfect co-ordination. The quiet Mrs. Baker gave an unexpected reply that amazed the whole group. The argumentative element settled into a good-natured exchange of opinions. Humor bubbled up, and Lennie could feel the class relax into real fellowship. Then there were the other times, too—times when they were lifted as a whole, when hidden meanings were no longer clouded or obscured, but truth lay bright and shining before them like a new coin in the palm of the hand.

LENNIE FELT GOOD. She knew she had never done better. Wonderful new ideas raced through her mind like magic. She parried and thrust with equal ease, and the right explanation was always there. Old, forgotten Scripture flooded her consciousness with new, inspired meaning. This was what it was like to know God. This was the power he had promised. This was the spirit everyone talked about, but no one could show. Here it was, and it had come unlooked for and unbidden! She felt pride surge through her in a mounting crescendo, and then pity. What if some did not feel it? Could that be possible? She studied their faces. Would this prosaic looking group of people all go away with the feeling that they had been in the presence of a greater power this morning? Or would there be those who did not yet recognize this new and wonderful feeling?

She assigned the lesson and sat down, grateful for the sturdy seat that supported her trembling body. That weakness—it always came immediately afterward, as if the human body could not withstand divine intervention. She wanted to cry and thank God all at the same time.

Lennie knew it had been a good class. Several told her so. Even the visitors seemed impressed, and she felt a gratification at a job well done. Then it happened. The visitors were talking to Mrs. Algiers. Lennie had her back to them, but she heard the nice things they were saying about her. Things like, "Such a brilliant woman," "I've never been in a class I enjoyed more," "You certainly are fortunate."

Mrs. Algiers laughed a trifle shrilly and off key as she replied, "Yes, Lennie really throws the book at us. It's all right if you can keep up with her, but for me, sometimes it's depressing."

Lennie could feel without turning the astonished stares behind her back. She waited quietly, shocked into immobility. The visitors were silent but Mrs. Algiers laughed again this time definitely apologetic.

"You see, Lennie knows so much more than the rest of us that it makes us all feel ashamed. She works so hard, it makes us all feel lazy. No one really minds a shot now and then, but when a machine gun goes off, you feel like running for cover." Then they all laughed condescendingly.

LENNIE WANTED to run and hide somewhere. It was so unexpected and it hurt. She had tried hard. She had struggled and fought and sacrificed much to bring them something special and good, and they resented her for it. She found her way to the door, and then out into the blazing August sun. She walked rapidly as if every step left something hateful behind. Near home she slowed down beneath some shady elms and talked to herself. "They don't want to learn; they don't want to know; they're satisfied just as they are. O God, why did you let this happen to me today? Today when everything was going so well. Why, God? I kept asking you for help, for understanding, for knowledge, and then today it came. It was all there, I had it right at my fingertips, and then this had to happen. Why, God? They're too lazy and indifferent to study for themselves, and then they hate me for giving it to them. Help me, Father, help me . . . help me." Then the tears came.

That evening Lennie faced church like Joan of Arc going to the stake. She stayed away from groups and concentrated on old Mrs. Alden. It was better that way. The minister was mopping his brow and trying to keep his voice down. The children were restless, and the drone of insects was monotonous. His text was, "Except ye be humble and full of love." Lennie wanted to laugh, it was so apt. Just what she needed to complete her day. She wondered if anyone else felt the need of love and humility as much as she did. No, probably not, they were all satisfied just as they were. Elder George was trying so hard that she felt a kindred sympathy for him. She resolved to say something nice to him after the service, something that would encourage him and let him know she understood the effort he had made.

GOING OUT OF THE DOOR was always a slow process. Everyone congregated there as if ready to leave, and then they stood around and talked. Lennie made straight for the door, determined to tell Elder George what a good job he had done.

"Brother George, I liked your sermon tonight. It was just what I needed."

He smiled cheerfully, "Well, Lennie, I'm afraid it was really too hot to ask people to listen to a sermon tonight, but they did quite well, especially the children!"

His good nature made Lennie feel ashamed, and she probed her feelings for some kind of an answer.

"Tell me, Brother George, do you think we get humility and love simply by praying?"

He regarded her gravely, sensing the seriousness behind her question. "I think that's the beginning, Lennie. We want those things, we ask God to help us get those qualities, and then he starts the process whereby we may obtain them."

Lennie laughed. "You make it sound like a long, drawnout affair. What do you mean, 'He starts the process'? Isn't humility a gift?"

"No, Lennie, it isn't. Not in the sense that you pray for humility at night and wake up in the morning humble. It isn't so easy as that."

At the question in her eyes, he continued kindly: "You might do this though. You might pray for humility tonight and tomorrow face a simple act upon which you have the ability to make a decision that will result in a new awareness of humility. Thus by continued acts of humiliation you are brought to know the true meaning of humility, and the gift is then in your possession."

Lennie looked at him strangely. "Why, Brother George, that's the most wonderful explanation I've ever heard."

He smiled understandingly. "Thank you, Lennie."

SHE WALKED HOME SLOWLY, thinking hard. Elder George had made humiliation sound like an opportunity. He had said that to face humiliation was to learn how to be humble. You earned your right to humbleness by suffering continued acts of humiliation until you were brought to an understanding of what true humility is.

Suddenly she stopped, shocked into knowledge. God had done this for her. He had let her face shame and humiliation today so she could go on. He was saying, "Here, Lennie, is a new opportunity for you to grow. You have been praying for many gifts. Today you shall begin your apprenticeship in humility. Remember how ashamed you were of your ignorance at that meeting two years ago. Then you resolved that never again would you be so caught. You started to study, and you have learned much. But knowledge is not enough, Lennie, there has to be humility and love."

She looked up at the sky. It was the same as always. Nothing had changed. There were no visions of light, no shooting stars, no marvelous eclipses. All that glory was coming from within.

Working on Auditorium

THE FIRST of the permanent facing was placed on the outside walls of the Auditorium last week. This is the beautiful Bedford limestone which was quarried and cut to exact dimensions by the J. M. Hoadley Company of Bloomington, Indiana. Each stone is four inches thick but varies in size; some weighing up to 1,400 pounds. The last of the flat stone needed to cover the pilasters and pylons is expected to be here this week. The rest of the shipments will have the outer surface concave to conform to the circumference of the wall at the base of the dome.

The Weeks Construction Company has already laid fifty-five thousand bricks which are required to support the stone facing. The brickwork was about a fourth done on October 6, according to the foreman, James A. Hamilton. There are fourteen men now working on this job, and increased forces will be as more material is available.

The windows in this circular wall are being replaced with glass brick. These have prisms which will throw the light upward to the ceiling. This eliminates the glare and gives the benefit of indirect lighting by day.

The construction materials are hoisted up a 75 foot elevator shaft made of demountable steel tubing. Two electrically driven lift-trucks are used to pick up the stone and brick and transport them to the places needed. One truck operates on the ground and the other picks up the materials at the top of the elevator shaft and carries the load around the flat deck as needed. At the south side of the building an eight foot elevation of the deck, to make room for the organ in the completed Auditorium, leaves it in the shape of a horse-shoe, and the dome must be almost circled by the truck to deliver its load where the workmen were found working last week on the southwest part of the building.

The estimated cost of these improvements is $177,000. This includes the cost of a two and a half inch concrete slab on the deck, but does not include any work or materials for the dome proper. The Herald will carry some pictures and progress reports as the work proceeds.

When Did Christ Organize His Church?

IN BURLINGTON, IOWA, some years ago I answered the doorbell and found a lady who asked, "Is this where the pastor of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints lives?" "Yes," I answered, "will you come in?" At the invitation she stepped inside and was seated. Then she said, "I'm Mrs. W. H. Wyatt. My husband is ill and would like to have you visit him." After talking a while we left for their farm home across the Mississippi in Illinois. Brother Wyatt told me this story:

You see this? [Pointing to his affliction.] We've just returned from the sanitarium in Savannah. They burned it out three times and were preparing to do so again, but one morning after the nurse finished her work in our room, Mrs. Wyatt sat by my bedside to read, as was our custom, letting the Bible open where it would. That morning it opened at the fifth chapter of James, and as she read, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil" I said, "That's enough. Close the book. I'm going home and send to Burlington for the Latter Day Saint minister."

I remembered that when a boy I was healed twice by the laying on of hands. And I know that if it is God's will, he can heal me now.

At his request, I administered to him according to the practice of the church during the life of Christ and his apostles (Luke 4: 40; John 14: 12; Acts 9: 17, 18; Mark 16: 18). Before I left for the train that evening, Brother Wyatt said that after he married, he went with his wife into the Christian Church, which he made his religion for over thirty years. He added, "I have many questions I want to ask and would like to have you stay with me tonight." Conditions did not permit, but I promised to return the next day. Three weeks later his wife was baptized, much to his pleasure.

WHILE I WAS VISITING in their home one day, Brother Wyatt said, "Brother Williams, a Christian minister will be here this morning, and I want you to talk to him." I answered, "I hardly think that will do. It may be like pouring water on a duck's back." He laughed saying, "Well, you know best, but I'd like to have you help him." I promised, however, to do what I could.

About nine-thirty the minister came; while getting acquainted, we enjoyed talking of current news. This later drifted into religion. Sincerely he introduced his church and its work. Believing that I would receive the same courtesy in return, I listened attentively. However, when he reminded me of his belief that the church was organized on the Day of Pentecost I began to smile. At this he inquired, "Is that not true, Brother Williams?"

I said, "Hardly, Brother C."

"How is that?"

"When Jesus was at Caesarea Philippi, he said, 'I will build my church.'" (Matthew 16: 18.)

"That's right."

"But we're told that he didn't do anything without his Father's direction, for he said, 'The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise'" (John 5: 19).

"Yes."

"Brother C., the Apostle Paul, when writing to the church in Corinth, said, 'Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers' (I Corinthians 12: 27, 28). When did he do this, Brother C.? Wasn't it during the personal ministry of Jesus Christ?"

"In Luke 6: 12, 13, we are told that after he had gone up into the mountain and prayed all night, he came down and chose from his disciples twelve men whom he called apostles."

"Yes."

By D. J. WILLIAMS

"Then we are told in Luke 10: 1, 2 that Jesus said to his disciples, 'The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few, pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers into his harvest, and he appointed other seventy also.'"

"Yes."

"Now, Brother C., you remember that wonderful prayer Jesus made to his Father on the night before his crucifixion—just fifty-two days before Pentecost—when he prayed, 'I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do' (John 17: 4)."

"I never saw that before."

Recalling again the words of the Apostle Paul, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets," suggested, "Brother C., you could not put water in a bucket if you didn't have a bucket to put it in, could you?"

"That is right," he answered. And from then on we considered other truths of the Restoration.

UPON DISCOVERING his mistake, Brother Wyatt seriously regretted the thirty years he felt he had lost, but in renewing his covenant with the Lord, he paid his tithe and was happy knowing that his companion was with him in the church. Several weeks later he went to his reward in peace.

The minister with whom I had talked regarding the time when Christ organized the church met me just before the funeral and asked,

"Do you remember the discussion we had the last time we were together?"

"Yes."

"Well, I've taken that question up with some of the big men of the Christian Church."

"What did they have to say, Brother C.?"

God's Glory Light

FOR A NUMBER of years a large oil painting hung on the northwest wall in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church in Independence, Missouri. The subject of the painting was Elder John Cornish baptizing Sarah Lively in the River Thames, London, Ontario, on December 29, 1875. When the Stone Church Annex was built, the painting was placed above the font in the annex. I don't know what became of it.

Because of the glorious manifestation of God's power at the baptism, a description of the occurrence has been published a number of times. I obtained my material for this much condensed article from Elder Cornish's book, Into the Latter Day Light; Church History, Volume 4, page 181, Appendix page 735; and from a sermon preached by William Clow, at St. Joseph, Missouri, on September 2, 1923, published in the Saints' Herald of June 11, 1924.

I attended the twenty-fifth anniversary meeting in the Stone Church when the principles of the noted event bore their testimonies. While Elder Cornish had been preaching in London, Sarah Lively and Mary Taylor asked for baptism at the close of a Wednesday evening prayer service Mrs. Lively was leaving London on Thursday morning, so she wanted to be baptized after the prayer meeting. It was an unusually dark night. The group which consisted of seventeen nonmembers and fifteen members had difficulty in getting to the river. The nonmembers on the way to the river were ridiculing the Saints. William Clow seemed to be the leader of these "outsiders."

By C. ED. MILLER

As they reached the water's edge, Elder Cornish repeated four lines of "Lo, on the Water's Brink We Stand" which they sang. Then he offered prayer. As Elder Cornish took Mrs. Lively into the water, they heard a noise "like a mighty rushing wind." They could hear it far above in the distance. Now a cone of light enveloped the gathering. It made a circle of about 100 feet. Brother Cornish describes it as follows:

The light was round, straight up and down like a shaft from heaven to earth, and just as bright on the inside edge as it was in the center; and as far as we could see, it was just as dark on the outer edge as it was a mile away.

The floating ice was directed away from the baptisms.

"They say, 'Where the Bible speaks we speak, and where it is silent, we are silent,' but they evidently don't believe it."

"Could they meet your position?"

"No, they couldn't. Will you let me have that reasoning just as you gave it that day?"

"I'll be glad to, Brother C. If you will give me your address, I shall send it to you typewritten. We will be happy to have you read some of our literature if you will."

"I shall be pleased to do so."

I prepared the outline as I had promised and also sent a copy of The Old Jerusalem Gospel, a set of the Angel's Message tracts, a number of Zion's Ensigns, and some other tracts. A few weeks later I asked Sister Wyatt if she had seen our friend, Brother C., since our last visit.

"Yes, Brother Williams," she said, "and I asked him what he thought of our message now. He answered that he believed all he had read so far, and that he had subscribed for the Zion's Ensign. He also said, 'I'm preaching Latter Day Saint sermons to my congregation, but they don't know it!'"

Not long after this interesting experience, I was appointed to serve in the Hawaiian Mission and lost contact with the man. However, I had the satisfaction of knowing that I had presented the truth, and that he had accepted it, although he may never have joined the church.

WILLIAM CLOW bears his testimony thus:

This light was different from anything I had ever seen. The word light is not the proper word. . . . It seemed as if it were almost a substance that you could feel It is recorded that the light Paul saw exceeded the sun at noonday. So did this It was nothing short of the GLORY of GOD. I am not surprised when I read that those ancient Israelites could not look upon the face of Moses when the glory of the Lord covered his countenance. . . . My mind came to this conclusion, the Lord God is in this matter. As that thought passed through my mind, a voice spoke to me and said, (I shall always remember it, every syllable of that sentence. It is as audible and as clear to my mind tonight as it was that night): "These are my people: you must not laugh at them."

All those who were not members of the church who witnessed the baptisms joined the church.

God placed his seal of approval upon the man who did the baptizing, upon the method of baptizing, upon the candidates, and upon the institution officially represented there.

William Clow eventually was ordained an elder and became an able defender of the faith. He with his family finally moved to Independence, Missouri. The two women also moved to Independence. Sarah Lively married Bishop Roderick May, and Mary Taylor married William Bushnell.

There are ten great religions of the world. Christianity—one of the ten—is divided and subdivided. Upon what religious institution has God placed his special approval? "These are my people."

And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory.—Luke 21: 27.

Get ye up then to your mountain
Zion of this closing day,
For the glory of my coming
Waits to break upon your way
Forth from thence your testimony
Shall to trembling nations go,
And the world confess that with you
God hath residence below.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

What is the purpose of the "little season"?

ANSWER:

Little is said in the Scriptures of this period which seems to be the time of the great consummation of Christ's work closing the millennial period. In considering this short season, it is necessary to remember that a part of the earth will be occupied during the millennium by people in mortality, among whom will be some who continue in sin. Notwithstanding Satan will not be there to tempt, and the environment will be the most holy the world has ever known, some will still prefer evil instead of good, and evidently by the end of the thousand years they will have become numerous. They must be removed before the earth finally can become sanctified and crowned with glory. During this little season, Satan is permitted to come back, when he will stir up these wicked ones to rebellion against Christ and the redeemed, leading them to battle against the saints in the holy city. It will be his last great effort in the war which was begun in heaven before man was on the earth. (Genesis 3:1-5. See also Revelation 12:6; 20:7; Doctrine and Covenants 28:10; 85:35; 28:6.)

This battle is referred to as "the battle of the great God," and Satan and his hosts will be finally banished, while the mortals who accepted his leadership and fought against Christ will be consumed from the earth. It is the end of sin, and soon the earth will be crowned with celestial glory and made a fitting habitation for celestial beings.

QUESTION:

Explain Matthew 5:50, Inspired Version.

ANSWER:

The verse reads: "Ye are therefore commanded to be perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect."

The word perfect is often used in a limited sense rather than the absolute, which is evidently the case here. God only is perfect in the absolute sense, to which standard no mortal man can approach. But within man's limited capacity it is possible to be perfect. We speak of a perfect gentleman, meaning one who observes all the proprieties of good social conduct, but this does not necessarily mean that he is perfect in his business, political, or even his religious conduct.

Jesus had given counsel and commandments to his disciples as to their attitude toward both God and man while they were engaged in their ministry. They could not hold malice or animosity, neither be unyielding and offish toward the people whom they were sent to bless and win to Christ, and at the same time gain their friendship and confidence and lead them to faith and obedience. Failing in even one thing Jesus had told them to do would hinder or prevent successful accomplishment of the work. He had represented to them the Father who, in kindness to all, "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." To be his disciples they must act toward their fellow men with similar kindness and charity. Note in this chapter from verse 21 on, the various things Christ required of them if they would maintain a right attitude and make their ministry effectual. It was with these things in mind that Jesus commanded them to be perfect, that is, keeping their conduct above reproach so that no word of condemnation could be justly said against them. Dr. Weymouth translates the passage, "You however are to be complete in goodness, as your heavenly Father is complete."

Pretty much the same thought is differently expressed to the latter-day ministry:

No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever is entrusted to his care; . . . and faith; hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work.—Doctrine and Covenants 11:4; 4:1.

Perfection as used in this passage by Jesus meant simply that he required his disciples to live up to the requirements belonging to them in their ministry.

Building Zionic Communities

Conclusion

In studies of our society today, one sees a trend toward disintegration and breakdown. This makes it doubly important that we rapidly make plans for Zionic communities. While modern transportation provides means so that we can go to church meetings in a few minutes from quite a distance, it does not solve the many other problems with which we are faced in modern living. The actual gathering to the vicinity of the church will take time and will be costly for many. When we consider that it may mean the difference between spiritual life or death to our children or to someone else's children, to many adults, or even to many of our local branches, it will be worth every sacrifice we can make. We must keep the channels open for Zionic living by those who have been converted and at the same time provide for winning all others to our cause who are pure in heart and who have a desire for the higher things in life.

Even after Zionic communities have been established, their continuation will not be an easy task. The Saints will need to understand fully the values which members of their families, their friends, and their church receive from such physical surroundings.

Our world and the gospel offer us a challenge today. We have the greatest possibilities of progress that any people have ever had; yet we need to unite our efforts in every godly way known to take advantage of the good that God has seen fit to release for the use of mankind. By members moving close together, local branches of the church will be able to use the power of their spiritual and social weapons to endow their communities with a sense of the splendor of the gospel. "By their fruits ye shall know them" may then become quite applicable to those who are looking for the more abundant life.

Interesting Personalities:

The Gospel in Their Home

RUTH BRADY sat in prayer service one morning in August, 1948, at Far West Stake Reunion. Suddenly the light of inspiration flowed over her, and a beautiful truth filled her mind—it was really so simple, why hadn't she thought of it? Her place was in her home with her husband Dale and her children: Dalla Lea and Sherman Dale. Off and on for years she had been working out of the home, trying to help clear their little place from debt and pay for some of the doctor bills incurred during those first years of their marriage when she had spent almost all her time in the hospital.

She loved her home, and it really hadn't helped much for her to be working. Dale's job as fire inspector in the Corn Products Plant in North Kansas City was a good one, and their five acres in that suburb gave them room for garden, chickens, and cow.

She could hardly wait to get home from reunion and start being a wife and mother in earnest, for the light of inspiration had supplemented this council with something else that gave Ruth great joy. Why couldn't she bring other children into her home and care for them? She loved having her children's friends about, and it would be a wonderful way to help some little homeless children to have a taste of the gospel.

When she told Dale of her plan, he was pleased about her staying home. As for the children, he said, "Do whatever you think best, Ruth." So after reunion she put an ad in the paper, saying she would like to take children into their home to care for them.

That's how it started. At first there were three little girls. When their own parents were ready to take care of them, Ruth and Dale found that it was hard to give them up. Ruth tried working again. After a month she became sick and for a week was in bed.

"Dale," she said, "I broke my resolve. But I'm going to make it again. I'm going to stay at home. I just have no business working outside."

The next morning she began to improve, and that day Mr. Hartson of the child aid department called to ask her if she would take some children.

THIS YEAR at Far West Stake Reunion, the Bradys had an assortment of three tents and a total of ten children, counting their own. Campers couldn't help pausing to watch what went on at the "Kiddies' Dude Ranch." Some of the older ones were helping the young ones dress, some were washing the dishes; another group was straightening the rugs and making the beds. The striking thing about these children was that there was no wailing or complaining. Each was doing his duty cheerfully.

A few months before the reunion, the stake officials had written to the Bradys and asked them if they would be in charge of the commissary where campers could purchase milk, bread, groceries, ice cream, and soda pop. Dale read the letter to the family. Immediately each child suggested ways in which all could help. They decided to take the project, so during reunion they offered their service. This meant Ruth must help Dale during the especially busy hours of the day, which were usually before breakfast and lunch. Dalla Lea, eleven years old, directed the preparation of these two meals, and the boys helped with the work.

Dale had packed their own equipment, as well as the children's, in a big, rented truck to drive to the reunion grounds. There was room left so he drove through Liberty, Missouri, where they attend church in Far West Stake's newest mission, and picked up the tent and equipment of other Saints who were camping at reunion.

DALE IS A DEACON in the Liberty Mission. His job is to get there early on Sunday morning and light the fire in the rented hall, pass out the books, and do any last minute straightening that must be done after Brother Glen Reese, another deacon, has cleaned the church on Saturday evening. Last winter it was necessary sometimes for the Bradys to leave home at seven in the morning, because it is quite a distance from North Kansas City to Liberty. All the Bradys go to church on Sundays unless one of the children is sick. Then Ruth stays home with him, and the others go on with Dale. Dale and Ruth decided to go to Liberty Mission because the priesthood is needed more there. They live in Kansas City Stake and the new Nashua Church is closer, but there is not so much need there.

Besides the time he spends with his family, his job, and his church work, Dale finds time to be a scoutmaster. There's no doubt about it—he and Ruth love children. Ruth was den mother for a pack of Cub Scouts until recently. There have always been many children around their home.

THE CHILDREN were looking forward to going home after reunion, for Ruth and Dale had promised them a pet for each child and a pony. They also take care of the chickens and a neighbor's horse. Oh, life is fun at the Bradys'.

The house isn't the mansion one would expect. It's a basement house, measuring thirty by thirty feet, with four large rooms and a huge porch where the children sleep. There's plenty of room really, for where there's room in the heart, there's room in the house. Ruth has an automatic washer and an ironer. Work goes in a production line at home. Ruth washes, Dalla Lea hangs out, and some of the boys bring the clothes in. When it comes to scrubbing the children, Ruth bathes them, some of the boys dry them, and Dalla Lea dresses those who can't dress themselves.

Ruth and Dale get some compensation from parents or the county for the care of the children. It amounts to about $10.00 a week for each child. From this Ruth can manage the food, clothing, and school supplies. Extras are supplied by the Bradys. It doesn't cost them anything financially to keep the children, nor do they get any profit from it, but Ruth and Dale both can testify to a vastly enriched life for them and their own two children that has come as a result of this new venture. Family worship with ten little heads bowed is a thrill. God's special help is a constant source of joy. "We've never had so many rich, spiritual blessings as we have in the past year," Ruth said.

As for others doing the same type of service, Ruth says, "If you want to serve, the Lord will always help. He'll step in where you need him, and you'll always be happy that you've tried." This is the testimony of four persons who have tried to serve and have been blessed because of it.—Sadi Moon Nagel.

9 Witness for Christ Through Service to My Community - By MRS. M. A. McCONLEY

AMONG the women of the church, the question of participation in community activities sometimes arises. They ask, "Should I give time and support to community activities, or should I devote all my time outside my home to the church?"

Of course, every woman must decide that question for herself, but in so doing she should give intelligent consideration to the needs, interests, and activities of her community.

She should evaluate carefully not only the influence that the community has on her home and family, but also the influence that she, her husband, and family can have on the community.

Wherever there is an opportunity for friendly contact and influence, there is an opportunity to witness for Christ by "letting our light shine."

In order to give intelligent consideration to the needs, interests, or activities of either individuals or groups, one must personally know them. In the very nature of things, everyone is a member of a community, whether he is active and interested in the people round about him or a recluse who has withdrawn into his shell; he is still a member of his community, no matter where he is.

In all communities there are certain needs and activities that pertain to the group rather than to the individual; these are usually referred to as civic needs or activities. They may vary according to climate, location, economic conditions, and customs of the people comprising the community.

For instance, some of the common needs and activities of all communities or neighborhoods in towns and cities are adequate playground facilities for the children, athletic and recreational centers for the young people, and instructors and supervisors for both groups in larger cities. Club houses or community centers are often built in neighborhoods which serve the needs of all age groups, such as Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Cub Scouts, Girl Reserves, Orioles, Blue Birds, Drama Clubs, Civic Improvement Clubs, Social Clubs, and other neighborhood groups. Neighborhood organizations that all good citizens lend their support and encouragement to are the Red Cross and the Community Chest which usually includes all the agencies that minister to the needs of the less fortunate or handicapped members of the community.

Then there is the field of cultural activities that should be definitely stressed and encouraged by everyone who is interested in the finer things of life. Those with musical training have a fine opportunity to "witness for Christ" by organizing choral groups for both children and adults and community orchestras. One energetic and talented young teacher in a rural district became well known for choral reading work and her "whistling chorus," where the various voice parts were whistled. Of course, all who are musical can take part in community music in whatever form they wish.

MANY COMMUNITIES are quite outstanding in the field of literature while in others there is a dearth of worth-while activities. It is easy to organize a book or reading club with discussion groups, and book reviews can be arranged for social occasions. A "clearing house" for exchanging magazines in a neighborhood is splendid and profitable; it promotes friendliness as well as literary interests.

Every community should have a live committee from some organized group such as the Parent-Teacher Association to keep a sharp eye on the newsstand for licentious and objectionable literature. This is a never-ending task. Of course, training in discriminating between good literature and trash should be given in the home, and it should be demonstrated as well as taught. A mother who teaches an adolescent boy or girl that one should choose the finer things of life will have little influence with the child if she herself spends time and money on "cheap" magazines.

Unfortunately, there are many homes in which little effort is made to either read or discriminate; therefore fostering good literature in the homes is properly a matter for community concern.

A local committee can often get good results through friendly discussions with the individual dealers who handle material that is objectionable. By pledging support to him in buying clean literature, one may get him to voluntarily discontinue handling the other kind. Of course there are postal laws that govern the use of the mails for handling of salacious material, but that is on a national basis, which takes it out of the sphere of local community activity.

Amateur dramatics is another field of activity that can be cultural, educational, and recreational. It appeals to children, young people, and adults, and offers a fine opportunity for family participation.

The painting and making of scenery give opportunity for self-express-sion and artistic development; and the designing and making of costumes, with the research necessary to make them authentic, is another phase of self-expression.

UNDER GOOD LEADERSHIP the neighborhood children can spend a whole summer with much profit and pleasure in preparing a play to be presented before the parents. All children should be given something to do. A small nine-year-old boy wept bitterly because he couldn't play a cowboy (in an American historical play) like the other boys because his leg was broken and in a cast. A clever leader re-wrote the play to include a cowboy who had been hurt rescuing people from a sudden flood, and the other children did an excellent piece of work integrating his part with their own. In so doing, they learned the lesson of loyalty, service to others, and dependability while having an opportunity for self-expression and a lot of fun.

Stories from the Bible can be dramatized, and children love them. Much of the story of Christ can be learned by dramatization. For children who have no church school training this is invaluable—as well as for the director who leads them. It is a real opportunity to “witness for Christ.”

In every community there should be an alert committee on duty to secure accurate information concerning proposed city legislation and passing of ordinances that may be detrimental to the moral and spiritual interests of the people living in the area. This applies especially to the interests of children and young people. No voter should neglect his sacred privilege to protest bad laws and encourage and support good ones. By being alert every consecrated, devoted follower of Christ can find many different avenues of service whereby he can “witness for Christ.”

What greater opportunity could there be for “witnessing” and for letting our “light shine” than by participating in neighborhood and community activities and giving of our strength and influence for all that is good and against all that is evil?

Certainly no one should attempt to be active in everything that is done in a community. We should carefully evaluate our time, talents, and the areas in which we can best serve, then offer our assistance in the field for which we are best qualified. We should also give our encouragement and support to all other worth-while projects and activities.

All these suggestions apply to rural groups as well as cities and towns, except that the needs and activities will be somewhat different. Instead of interest being directed toward playgrounds and good city ordinances, it would be in the field of 4-H clubs, home economics clubs, Future Farmers of America, and Farm Bureau activities. In fact any movement that is for the best interest and improvement of the individual and homes in the neighborhood is an opportunity to “witness for Christ.”

ANOTHER COMMUNITY ACTIVITY that is of similar interest and importance to both rural and city communities is the Parent-Teachers Association. Often people are not aware of the benefits that can come to children and schools by the intelligent co-operation of parents and teachers. Sometimes the leaders of a P.T.A. group, lacking perspective and vision, fail to achieve the results that are possible through the organization. It may be because of poor program planning or the giving of too much time to frivolous and non-essential social activities.

A good P.T.A. interprets the school to the home and the home to the school. With mutual understanding, trust, and co-operation between parents and teachers, as to the needs of and goals to be achieved by the schools, it is not a difficult task to work out plans for their attainment. Such things as adequate buildings or equipment or better salaries for teachers might be discussed in P.T.A. meetings and accurate information given on the projects discussed.

With information about and understanding of the educational needs of any community at hand, parents and teachers together should bend every effort to meet those needs. Here again is another opportunity to “let our light shine” through community service. In making our contribution to community life, we should not do it in a conspicuous or objectionable manner with a “holier than thou” attitude which says, “We oppose evil and do good because we are Latter Day Saints.” We must do it not only for this reason but because we are “witnessing for Christ” as are all good Christian people—Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Lutherans, and others.

We should do these things as members of a neighborhood or community in addition to whatever responsibilities we may have in our own respective church congregations.

The spiritual injunction, “Be ye temperate in all things,” applies to community service and church work as well. There should be a careful balance between our home and family responsibilities, our church and community work, and our social and recreational life.

The suggestions for activities and the organizations referred to are mostly American, but they have their counterparts in other countries. Wherever there is a civic or neighborhood group working for the improvement of the home and family, there is an opportunity for our church women to give encouragement and assistance, and in so doing, let their lights shine.

Is "Social Security" Good for Us?

A discussion topic of current interest. On this debated subject we would welcome other expressions of opinion from interested readers.—Editors.

By M. H. SIEGFRED

IN THE EARLY YEARS when America was in the making, there was no government to which men could turn for so-called society security. It exists in name only. The only type of society which could provide social security is the type of society which does not in any sense need such thing.

In those early days every man felt deeply about the welfare of his neighbor. I believe that as much as I believe anything historical. Even the stranger, the wayfarer, was provided shelter and something to eat. If he were ill, he was nursed back to life and vigor if possible.

What did this do for those giving the assistance? It gave them humanity and unselfishness, it bred kindness, it fostered tolerance, and it rewarded them with happiness and contentment which can be had only by doing these works. Today we often think of these men as rugged, sometimes hard—and so they were. But they were also Christian gentlemen, not sycophants. Their souls were not shriveled and softened by a paternalism that deprives men of the existence of the responsibility which created in those early pioneers the spirit that makes truly great people.

EVERY STEP toward compulsory social security builds up the power of bureaucratic dictators, mild at first, but becoming more arrogant with added power. It also robs the members of society of the finest quality with which God has endowed the race—charity! Paul said this was the greatest gift of all.

We of the present generation are permitting the government and other organized agencies to take over our responsibility for the general welfare of all men, not just those who receive. By doing this we are permitting our lazy, easy-going attitude of "let George do it" rob us of the deep, spiritual, soul-stirring asset, the like of which can be kept alive only by the exercise of it. Without the conscious sense of this spiritual value, we cannot long perpetuate a society based on personal human dignity and freedom. Freedom, not security, is God-given.

When government—federal, state, county, or municipal (and it could become desperately close to the same thing in the church), or even charitable organizations—takes over the acts of benevolence, only the recipient benefits. When I do it, I get more good from my act than does the one to whom I give. "It is better to give than to receive," as every man who ever helped anyone knows.

CHARITY should not be the result of taxation. Indeed, when it comes to that, it ceases to be charity at all. Charity should be thought of as an act motivated by affection and sympathy, of faith in and hope for the ones who are helped. A tax-built attempt at security is a robber of souls. Charity begins in the soul of the individual, in his home. No Marxian force, by whatever name, can ever take the place of love—charity. If we try it, we shall become a degraded, deluded people; we shall lose the spirit by which we became great. And so will the church if we allow our own individual responsibilities to be taken over by it per se.

Taxation even for the support of the best social purpose ever conceived in the mind of our freest sociologists breeds rancor and ill will. It tends to tear down and destroy the love and kindness that each of us must feel if we are ever to build the kingdom.

But if the individual gives willingly, freely, and gladly to any project he deems worthy, his spirit is lifted up and his vital energy is stimulated. If you have never tried it, do so. If we give our money by taxation or otherwise and say to ourselves, "My responsibility is ended; that of the administrative begins," we are degenerating into a soulless, dying society.

Those who believe this are the ones who are safe from the danger. Those who do not believe it are the ones who will suffer from their disbelief.

Judicial Murder

An anonymous Dutchman recently asked the supreme court of Israel, the newest nation, to review the trial of Jesus before the Sanhedrin. He assumes the Israel supreme court is a direct and legal successor to the Jewish high court that sentenced Jesus to die.

The following is quoted from press reports:

The appeal is a strange mixture of mysticism and legal argument. It digs back into history as far as 1486 B.C., and brings itself up to date with mention of the United Nations partition decision of November 29, 1947, and establishment of the state of Israel, May 15, 1948.

Dr. Moshe Smoira, court president, said it was unfortunate that publicity had been given the petition since there might be an impression, which he said would be wrong, that the court was treating it lightly.

The world has long recognized that the crucifixion was "judicial murder." Under modern law the statute of limitations does not run in favor of a murderer; therefore the case might legally and profitably be reviewed if any of those who had a part in the crucifixion can be found.

FORT COLLINS, COLORADO.—District Missionary C. Houston Hobart conducted cottage meetings in January. This effort was preceded and followed by local priesthood visits and climaxed by a week of missionary sermons preached by Brother Hobart, resulting in increased interest in the gospel story. The following have been baptized: Dennis Shadel, King Koenig, Janet Irene Rodgers, Janice Ileen Rodgers, Patricia Ann Archer, Eugene Thomas Archer.

Local priesthood activities are being made more effective by the following calls to priesthood office: Francis V. Presler, Jr., deacon; Arthur H. Tilton, teacher; and Kelvin S. Gurwell, elder. These brethren are actively entering into their new duties.

Children's division activities, including church school and junior church, continued to increase in interest and attendance under the direction of Brother and Sister Lloyd Jones. On Children's Day the following were blessed: Warren Bruce Cole, Katherine Marie Holtzinger, Donald Bruce Ackelson, Richard William Ackelson, David Lee Novotny, Vernon Ardell Jaques, Maryland Leone Jaques, Janice Lorraine Jaques, Karen Doreanne Jaques, Bernice Kay Ward, Alma Ruth Ward, Matthew Lealden Pulscher, Sandra Kay Pulscher, Stephen Eugene Archer. Another service was held on July 31 for Vicki Lee Cook, Merry Anne McCoy and Mark Thomas Archer.

Zion's League activities under the direction of Brother Charles Claas took on increased interest, and a balanced program is being developed, emphasizing worship, study service, and recreation. A special feature inaugurated under League sponsorship is a fellowship service following the regular Sunday evening worship. This is a variety program including singing, readings, pageants, and special numbers. As a result, Sunday evening church attendance has increased over 50 per cent, this increase being largely young people.

Co-operative projects designed to furnish opportunities for group action resulting in common good are being initiated. This activity is under the direction of a committee with Brother K. G. Broliar as chairman, and much of the work thus far has been sponsored by the women's department under the leadership of Mrs. George Gates. Fresh vegetables and fruits have been donated, canned and stored in the "storehouse" for relief use. Sickroom equipment has been collected and is available for loan where needed. It is planned to enlarge and add to these projects as need and opportunity permit.

Brother Kelvin S. Gurwell was elected pastor for 1949-50. Elder W. E. Connell, who had been pastor of the branch this past year will be on a sabbatical year's leave of absence next year from his duties as Professor of Animal Husbandry at Colorado A and M College to take advanced work leading to a Ph.D. degree at the University of Minnesota. Mrs. Hazel Novotny, N. Whitcomb St., Ft. Collins, Colorado, is the newly elected branch reporter.—Reported by MRS. RUBY S. CONNELL.

ARGENTINE, KANSAS CITY, KANSAS.—Clifford Harris was ordained to the office of teacher, September 25. At the same time Charles W. Wedderstrand was ordained to the office of priest. The pastor is Donald L. Graham.—Reported by MRS. CHARLES WEDDERSTRAND.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—This branch sponsored a Thansgiving youth rally October 8, 9, and 10 with President E. J. Gleazer, Jr. of Grace-land College as special guest. Others participating were Apostle P. E. Farrow, Bishop J. E. Baldwin, Elder Louis Zonker, and the district presidents. This occasion was for young people from all the districts in Ontario.

EVERGREEN, IOWA.—This branch, near Lamoni, celebrated its fiftieth birthday on September 18 as a fitting climax to a successful missionary series by Elder John Blackstock of the Stake Presidency. Interest continued at a high level through the two weeks with a good number in attendance. The series closed with the sermon at the 11 o'clock hour.

The basket dinner which followed was the opening of the home-coming festivities. In the afternoon a review was given of the organization of the branch fifty years before in the Green schoolhouse across the road from the present church building. Those present who had attended the organization were: Mrs. John Hovengay of Stewartville, Missouri, the daughter of D. D. Young who was the first pastor of Evergreen; her son and his wife, Brother and Sister Jestus, Sister Dora Bradley, Sister Eva Anderson, Brother and Sister Artie Martin, and Brother and Sister George Snively. Also many other former branch members had returned for the day. The home-coming sermon was preached by E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

The late afternoon was occupied by a baptismal service with Robert S. Farnham, Lamoni Stake President, in charge. The four candidates uniting with the church were Mr. and Mrs. Glen Wardrip, Mrs. Dean Ballantyne, and Mrs. Ida Sharp. The confirmation service was held at the church on the following Wednesday evening with Elder John Blackstock in charge.—Reported by IRENE VOGEL.

OELWEIN, IOWA.—Elder Lyle Woodstock of Peoria, Illinois, Rock Island District president, held a series of services in Oelwein the first week in September.

On Wednesday evening, September 7, the branch held the annual business meeting and election of officers. Brother Woodstock presided over the meeting. The following officers were elected: Elder Evert McFarlane, pastor; Mrs. Bernice Pratt, secretary; Mrs. Margaret Shippy, treasurer; Brother Russell Shippy, solicitor and also appointed councilor to the pastor; Mrs. Ruth Stella, music director, auditor, and church school director; Mrs. Beth McFarlane, librarian and historian; Mrs. Jessie Shippy, attendance recorder; Mrs. Laura Clark, Herald correspondent; Elder George McFarlane, auditor and appointed councilor to pastor; Merle McFarlane, assistant church school director; Robert Beckner, young people's supervisor.

The Emma Burton Circle held its annual election of officers September 15. Mrs. Bernice Pratt is president; Mrs. Pearl Beckner vice-president; Mrs. Margaret Shippy, secretary; Mrs. Beth McFarlane, teacher.—Reported by MRS. BERNICE PRATT.

WALLA WALLA, WASHINGTON.—This group was organized into a mission in August of this year. Elder Carl Hammel of Pasco was present for the occasion. They meet in the Y. W. C. A. assembly room. It is a comfortable place located across the street from the city bus depot. John Fletcher, formerly of Lamoni, Iowa, was elected pastor. This group has grown during recent years. Saints visiting in that neighborhood are urged to contact Brother Charles M. Miller, 602 Military Street, Walla Walla.

The Ministers Manual

(Doran's)

For 25 years, this annual source book for the busy minister has supplied him with suggestions of sermon outlines, orders of services, illustrations, material for special days, suggested texts and themes, guides for church departments and activities—a wealth of material for all occasions. This Silver Anniversary Edition is marked by a special supplement containing outlines of the five best sermons and the ten best illustrations to appear in the past 25 years. In addition, a completely new section has been added which provides inspirational material for the observance of the Lord's Supper.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

A Moral Religion - By FRED ARMSTRONG

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, in his famous autobiography, describes himself as "a religious man who seldom attended church." At times his church attendance was quite regular, but he would always discontinue his spurt of Sabbath diligence because the peculiar doctrines of the sect were dry, uninteresting, and unedifying, since not a single moral principle was inculcated or enforced, their aim seeming to be rather to make us Presbyterians than good citizens.

He further relates in his book a particular sermon that his minister preached, using the text from Philipians, "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, or of good report, if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things." Franklin was immediately impressed by such a fine choice of Scripture only to be deeply disappointed when the clergyman confined himself to these five points:

1. Keeping holy the Sabbath day
2. Being diligent in reading the Scriptures
3. Attending duly the public worship
4. Partaking of the Communion
5. Paying a due respect to God's ministers

To Franklin, these five points were good, but not at all what Paul meant in his letter and certainly not sound principles to be emphasized in religion. The minister overlooked a golden opportunity for inculcating a moral religion based on love, mercy, honesty, justice, and kindness, and not on the paltry, symbolical aspects of religion. The symbolical aspects are important from the standpoint of what change they make in the hearts of the participants, but are insignificant from the standpoint of the overt observance. Partaking of the Lord's Supper has no significance whatever if the partaker does not recall how Christ died so that man might live. The immersing of an individual does not automatically cleanse his sins, but the accompanying thought of repentance and a covenant to live better in the future gives the ritual valid meaning. One sees, then, a paramount fallacy in the thinking of many people pertaining to valid principles of religion. Principles which do not cause people to live more virtuously and do not offer them a richer, happier, more abun-of the church's doctrine. Many people consider themselves righteous because their observances of the symbolical acts are consistent, disregarding the fundamental principles of any valid religion—morality, richer, more abundant living, and better relationship between individuals. People tend to get so involved in the small points of their doctrine that they cannot grasp the whole, the fundamental, beliefs. The future success of the church depends on our grasping the over-all picture of the gospel. Stagnation will persist until this moral picture is comprehended.

Here Is the Writer

Fred Armstrong is twenty years old and a Graceland graduate (class of '49). He is now attending Wayne University as a pre-med student and plans to enter the Wayne University School of Medicine next fall. He attends the Goddard Road Church (Detroit) and holds the office of deacon: "I have no specific church responsibilities now because of school," he explains, "but I am interested in the work of the church—especially in the Zion process."

dant life are invalid and must be obliterated, while principles which bring moral benefit and cause better social interaction must be emphasized. A moral people is the true aim of any church, and differences in opinion on insignificant beliefs and form are deviations from the path in which a church should be going and delay the accomplishment of the true goals.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH has fundamental beliefs pertaining to ritual and doctrine, such as baptism by immersing, blessing of babies, confirmation after baptism, observing the Lord's Supper, and laying on of hands in sickness and ordination; but these beliefs in themselves do not form the foundation

There are people who criticize the apparent lack of interest among the younger generation in the "fundamental beliefs." To the young people and other progressives, the trueness of the church does not rest in its form of baptism, salvation does not depend primarily on regular church attendance, and no one is going to be damned for not being able to recite long passages of Scripture. These progressives may be swinging the pendulum of fundamental beliefs a little too far in the opposite direction at times, but their religion is really on a higher level than the fifth century creed of many reactionaries. A widespread movement toward a moral religion will inevitably lead the church toward its one main goal, the fullest expression of each personality in a society called Zion, while the extreme right wing of religion will lead the church to nothing but stagnation.

A TRUE CHURCH cannot be tested by its form of ritual. Knowledge of the glories of the hereafter does not make a church true. The forms of baptism or confirmation are not valid criteria. A priesthood composed of deacons, teachers, priests, elders, etc., does not create a divine religion. Even the fact that Joseph

The Unwritten Commandment

THERE IS AN UNWRITTEN COMMANDMENT. You won't find it in the ten Moses gave nor in the two great commandments of Christ, but the essence of it is in all of them.

"Be kind" is the silent admonition back of the "Thou shalt not's." No one who is kind will kill or steal or lie or swear or covet or commit adultery. "Be kind" is echoed in the Master's "Thou shalt love thy God . . . and thy neighbor." People are unkind to their Creator who consciously ignore the plan he has given them for a better way of life. But God must grieve most over man's unkindness to man. Examples of this are many and soul-sickening.

The greatest unkindness comes under the heading of mental cruelty. A crushed ego hurts worse than a black eye or a punched nose. The employer who daily tells his workers that they are incompetent, lazy, and unworthy of their jobs is inflicting a more permanent injury than if he slapped each one's face every morning. Of course no red-blooded employee would tolerate such manhandling, but thousands of men and women take a daily barrage of insults from their bosses who apparently operate on the theory that the only way to keep production up is by threatening employees with if they don't work harder they'll lose their jobs. Little wonder that unions are having a heyday . . . at last the working man is getting his chance to strike back, and the vengeance of many generations is in his blow. Still there are industries that have escaped unionizing, and the "little people" who turn their wheels and keep their accounts grow more bitter with each day's injustices. Communism will have no trouble converting them to its gospel.

MENTAL CRUELTY wields its lash in the schoolroom, too. Sharp-tongued, quick-tempered teachers have crippled more personalities than polio has crippled arms and legs. The timid first-grader who is told, "I can't do a thing with you; you're too stupid to learn," is apt to go through life believing just that, when all he needs to start him off right is a little understanding attention. It is not hard to see why the homely or poorly-dressed or ill-proportioned child who is the target of unkind teasing during his school years may shut himself off from society entirely or else attempt to get even with those who have made his life miserable. Many complexes are born of such ridicule, and many crimes are born of complexes.

Mental cruelty finds its most fertile field in the home. Here the wounds are deepest, the scars most lasting. God must weep as he looks on the suffering existing in thousands of families as wives and husbands make mockery of marriage and thoughtless parents frustrate the lives of their children.

In one home a tyrannical father keeps his wife and children so in fear of him they scringe when he enters the room. He himself is tortured by imaginary fears and, not wanting to be alone in his misery, he sees to it that his family suffers with him. They do not run away because he swears he would find them wherever they go. After years of threatening and mistreatment, they are too cowed to even hope for anything better.

Mothers can be equally cruel. Although I would like to, I can't forget the heart-rending scene I witnessed in a restaurant recently. A young mother and her two small sons were eating out. Perhaps things hadn't gone well at home and her nerves were on edge; perhaps she is just ill-tempered by nature. Whichever the case, she spent the entire meal berating her children's manners and reaching across the table to slap their hands as they attempted to eat. She probably had two little boys with upset stomachs that night, but compared to the damage she did to their personalities that was of small importance.

Some parents go to the other extreme and neglect their children to the point that they grow up with a feeling of insecurity which undermines their confidence and makes them easy prey for the first escape they happen to contact. For some it is alcohol, for others narcotics, for others prostitution. There are many escapes—all with unhappy endings.

THE LIST of unkindnesses between husbands and wives is even longer. Actual physical illness often comes as the result of nervous strain brought on by an irritable, nagging, jealous, or over-critical companion. Any man or woman who seeks to establish superiority in the home by consistently pointing out and emphasizing the weaknesses of his or her mate is guilty of mental cruelty. So is the miser, the philanderer, the gambler, the drinker. So is the husband or wife whose indifference to the likes and dislikes of the other makes a compatible marriage impossible.

* * * * *

Kindness is the very basis of Christian living. It is not written into the commandments, but no one can keep the whole law without it.

New Horizons

Answer Without Ceasing

By Margaret Lee Runbeck

"I believe that for those who pray without ceasing, there is answer without ceasing." In "The Great Answer," Miss Runbeck showed us the effectiveness of faith and prayer through personal testaments during wartime. Now, out of the postwar world, she has brought together more of these intensely moving cases where faith has been restored, hearts uplifted, solutions reached, and strengths made stronger. This is a book of heroism and personal courage, of people who experience miracles in their daily lives. In many remarkable and dramatic ways, men and women find the rewards of prayer and a new complete way of life.

ing that they are conscious of the importance of the church school by expanding their plant to include a wing for classrooms. The institute included study in the areas of the meaning of religious education, and methods of improving instruction. There were two excellent prayer services, and the entire institute received the active support of district and local administrative officers.

FROM TAHITI

From a letter of September 19, we learn from F. Edward Butterworth in Papeete, Tahiti: "May we report 72 baptisms so far this year in the mission. This of course is not a complete report because we have not yet received word from many of our largest branches. In Tarona alone we have baptized eighteen people since Children's Day. Many families have been united, and several good, pure Tahitian stock Protestants have united with us.

"Horhitsu is out in the islands at present and according to his last letter is having a good response. He reports one baptism not counted in the above figures. Before he returns he will have many more I am sure."

Moral Religion

Smith saw God the Father and his Son in a vision and the fact that the angel Moroni revealed the Book of Mormon do not produce a state of inerrancy in the church. The criterion for the divinity and righteousness of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, or any other church, lies not in the ritualistic beliefs and mode of organization but in the belief in morality of people, creating richer, more abundant living among its members and having greater potential for the future. If the church does not teach a moral religion, it is not the true church. Any doctrine which does not cause people to live more virtuously and does not offer them richer, happier, more abundant living must be rejected, for the future of the church depends on the teaching of moral principles in the building of human personalities.

Ben Franklin's moral religion was not merely his own doctrinal dogma but is the type of religion which the church must maintain if it wishes to make progress and attain its goals. Better living or "the good life," as Rabbi Joshua Liebman puts it, is what religion must create.

* VISITORS

Since last July we have had a Guest Register for visitors to Herald House, and it is a pleasure to look over the pages and see how far many of them have traveled.

First visitors to register in the new book were Robert, Veta, and David Kent from the Maywood Branch, near Chicago, Illinois.

Oklahoma City was represented in the middle of August by the Judkins family, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar, and Lulom registering. Sister Judkins is Book Steward there.

Next visitors, on August 31, were three students, Henry Haina and Howard Ige from Honolulu, and Howard Kon from Halaula, Hawaii.

C. W. Clark, now of Independence, formerly of Columbus, Ohio, brought some friends from that city, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ferguson, Jack, and Eddie.

On September 6, Howard Sheehy (son of John), his wife Mildred, with their young folk, Kay, Howard, Jr., and Ilene were revisiting home scenes.

Chico, California, was represented by H. D. Hintz (pastor), May, Helen, and "Corky" Hintz, and Bob Bracewell, September 7.

Vonalea Harder of Bay Port, Michigan, accompanied members of her family from Independence in a visit here, September 12.

Bakersfield, California, sent us Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Horton on September 19. Brother Horton is in the oil business there. Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Renaud of Tulare were here on the same day.

Other visitors included Mr. and Mrs. Burt Hayden of Glenview, Illinois, Mrs. A. R. Hays and Mrs. Iva Staton. On the 29th, we greeted Mr. and Mrs. R. Leighton of Wiloughby, Ohio.

* NOTES

We can't expect perfection in the world, but we could try to make some improvements.

It is a human frailty to be unhappy about other people's faults, and to be quite complacent about our own.

The real question before the church is: How can we build Zion out of the kind of material we are?

The real hindrance to the kingdom of God is the flitters. They flit in and want it right now. And, before you can get their names and addresses into the file they have flitted away again.

* TWO NATIONS

John F. Sheehy, district president, and pastor at Toronto, Ontario, sent a copy of the program of the memorial service held there on September 25 in commemoration of those who lost their lives in the tragic fire and disaster of the steamship "Noronic." Citizens of both Canada and the United States were included among those lost, and the two national anthems, "God Save the King" and "Star-Spangled Banner" were included in the program.

At the close was this significant and moving bit of verse:

Two nations side by side,
Neighbors in peace abide,
And liberty,
Spring from one ancient line,
Serving one God divine,
Two flags as one entwine
Two nations free.

The Reminder

A PERIODICAL for members who do not have branch privileges has recently been distributed through district officers to nonresident church members. The first issue, which carries the date of October, 1949, has greetings from the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, the Presiding Bishopric, the Department of Religious Education, and the Department of Women. Short articles on recent publications, Graceland College, Youth Camps, "Daily Bread," Reunions, and Zion's League are also printed on this four page periodical.

It is planned that there will be at least three of these issues each year. The Reminder is sent to district officers in bundles, and it is planned that a mimeographed page concerning district programs and news will be inserted. The district nonresident pastor will then mail these to all of the members living distant from branches who are not able to attend the meetings of the Saints regularly.

Introducing...

EVAN A. FRY, Independence, Missouri, (page 8) was born at Tabor, Iowa, November 8, 1902. He was graduated from William Chrisman High School in Independence in 1920, and from Kansas City Junior College in 1922. From 1923 to 1925 he took a teacher's training course at Graceland. In 1926 he received his B.A. degree from the University of Kansas.

He married Dorothy Eden in 1932. They have three girls: Celia Louise 15; Margaret Ann, 9; and Evelyn Ruth, 5.

Brother Fry was employed by radio stations at Kansas City, Kansas, and Wichita, Kansas, from 1930 to June, 1940, and since then has been under appointment as radio minister. He was ordained an elder in 1930, a high priest in 1936. He has served as pastor to the Grandview, Kansas, congregation and has been a member of the Kansas City Stake High Council.

His hobbies are books and music. The compilation of the present Saints' Hymnal in 1930 to 1932 is largely his work. He is a member of Rotary International and the Y.M.C.A.

JAMES C. DAUGHERTY, Sparta, Wisconsin, (page 11) was born in Porterville, California, October 20, 1913. He was baptized at Joplin, Missouri, in 1934. The next year he was ordained a deacon, then an elder in 1940, a seventy in 1947, and a member of the Council of Seventies in October, 1948.

He quit high school in the second year to go to work and finished by attending night school. By profession Brother Daugherty is a salesman, and at the time of his appointment was agent and assistant superintendent of District Four of the Prudential Life Insurance Company.

In 1945 he was appointed to Central Missouri Stake. The next year he became a missionary to Wisconsin, where he has served ever since. Last October, Minnesota was also added to his territory, and he is serving as district president of Wisconsin.

His hobbies are fishing, golf, photography, and archery. Even before his appointment to the missionary field, he was active in religious and civic affairs in Joplin, Missouri. He served there as honorary councilman, park board member, chairman of Joplin Layman Brotherhood, chairman of the committee for handling juvenile delinquencies, and chairman of the salvage committee. He also did Red Cross, Community Chest, and Y.M.C.A. work.

ALICE M. EDWARDS, Independence, Missouri, (page 16) was graduated from the Independence high school in 1916, and from Kansas City Junior College in 1920. She received her B.A. from Stanford University in 1924, and has done graduate work in the University of Kansas City.

Her hobbies are music, painting, and social welfare. Her vocational experience has included editorial and advertising work and teaching adult education courses.

She was married to F. Henry Edwards in 1924. They have three children: Lyman; Ruth, 19; Paul, 16.

Sister Edwards has been active in the P.T.A., Child Conservation League, and Mental Hygiene Society. At one time she was a member of the General Church Women's Council, assistant in the Publicity Department, and assistant editor of Zion's Ensign.

News & Notes

Visit to Columbia, Missouri

Bishop G. L. DeLapp and Apostle E. J. Gleazer were in Columbia, Missouri, October 2, where they met with the fine, large group of university church members. Both of the brethren spoke on Sunday morning. In the afternoon there was a panel discussion. These men were impressed with the interest upon the part of the college priesthood, and their concern for the young men and women who are students. A good meal was provided in the hall and there was an excellent spirit of fellowship.

Spring River District Conference

On October 8 and 9 the Spring River District Conference was held in Joplin, Missouri. There was a panel discussion on Saturday evening, on the fundamental beliefs of our church. This was led by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, and Elders John Blackmore, David Wilson, and Francis Bishop. On Sunday morning there was a prayer service. Accommodations provided for an overflow into the lower auditorium of the church. Assisted by a public address system, the opening talks and most of the testimonies were heard there. In the following service Apostle Gleazer addressed the district priesthood at the Oddfellows' Hall. Arthur Dixon conducted a young people's class in an adjoining room. Elder Blackmore addressed the adults in the church, one block distant. The upper and lower auditoriums were full to capacity for the morning preaching service that followed. This was due to the anticipated visit of President Israel A. Smith, who, owing to another commitment, was unable to be present. Apostle Gleazer spoke instead. At the afternoon business session the conference elected officers and delegates to the next General Conference, as well as caring for district business.

Following this afternoon service Brother and Sister Gleazer drove to Springfield where Brother Gleazer preached at the evening preaching service. After this service he met with representatives of the building committee as they considered plans for building a small church in another section of Springfield. Apostle Gleazer feels that the Springfield Saints should be congratulated in the purchase of a fine lot and for funds on hand toward the building of one more of our churches in the city.

New Bible Class Begins

Mrs. Thelona Stevens began a new class on the text, Bible Studies, Monday evening, October 10 in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. There were about 130 present.

To Leadership School

Elders Almer Sheehy, Boston, and F. Carl Mesle, Independence, Missouri, represented the Department of Religious Education at a youth director's seminar in Mondon, New Jersey. This event was sponsored by the Relationships Division of the Boy Scouts of America at the national training school on the Schiff Reservation, September 26 to 30. Those attending were the youth and boy's work directors of Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish churches; of rural service organizations, and civic and fraternal groups. The purpose of the meeting was to study and demonstrate scouting resources open to institutions and communities represented. There was also a sharing of techniques used by agencies themselves in the successful incorporation of scouting into their own programs.

Treasures of Wisdom and Knowledge

"Through wisdom is an house builded . . . and by knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches. A wise man is strong; yea, a man of knowledge increaseth strength."

—Proverbs 24: 3, 5

College Day, October 30

You will wonder, if you have been reading these "College Day" editorials for years, whether it is possible to find anything new to write on the subject. I think I can remember that President Briggs once said to a chapel gathering, with a twinkle in his eye, as he was about to repeat one of his perennial admonitions to the student body, "A good topic for discussion is never exhausted; there is always something new to be said about it." Men may wear out, give up, or die; but the topic goes on, claiming the attention of new exponents.

Once again, on this College Day, we have a new opportunity to invest in the youth of the church. And it is an opportunity—a better one than we can know. Houses fall into ruins, business empires fail, lands are eaten up by taxes and ruined by ignorant cultivation; but investments in human life bring the richest and most enduring of returns.

The Greater Harvest

A Missouri conservation officer once said in an address to an Independence audience, "If you own any bit of hilly land, take along a pocketful of black walnuts when you visit it. Find an open place, dig a little hole, put a walnut in it, and tamp the earth back over it. Years later a fine hardwood tree will be there. With many such trees your waste land will have value. You may not reap the harvest yourself, but your children and your country will benefit."

That man was looking to the future—the distant future. It is good to look ahead farther than next year. Education takes the longest of all forward views. It builds for permanent values. Investments in Graceland are long-time investments. They prepare for the greater harvest.

Another Kind of Treasure

Paul, writing to the saints of Colosse (2: 3), used a thoughtful phrase, "the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." Those who have been alert observers of people and of life understand what a great truth he touched in these few words.

Let us return now to the text used at the head of this editorial. A house or a home should be built with wisdom. Knowledge and culture enrich the home and help the members of the family to find happiness together. It is literally true that "a man of knowledge increaseth strength." We are strong by virtue of what we know, as well as by the other great factors of religious and social life.

For two generations now, graduates of Graceland College and our young people from other institutions of higher learning have been returning in increasing numbers to worship, to work, and to serve with the congregation of our people. Wherever these trained young people go, they give help and strength to the church.

Investments in Graceland

First, our gifts on College Day are investments in Graceland as a church educational institution. We have not really missed what we have given to the college, either individually or as a church. It took an effort at the time, in some cases; but we soon readjusted our affairs and went on with our work. We planted an investment in the future, and then for a while we forgot about the harvest that would come to us.

Now the harvest is coming back, richly and steadily, in the leadership and consecration of able young people who serve the church and help its people.

Second, our gifts to Graceland are investments in our own young people. We send our money to the college, and then send the young people there to profit and benefit by what the money provides.

Needs of Graceland

Graceland will always have needs because young people will always have needs. A college must always be doing something to improve. New laboratories are needed for the expanding fields of science. Dormitories are rarely ever large enough to accommodate the students. Libraries get out of date unless they are provided with a constant supply of new books. If a library ceases to buy new books, it ceases to be a library and becomes a museum. New ideas, new services, new needs, new patterns of life all make their demands in building space and equipment, which must be met if the college is to serve our young people in the way other institutions do. We cannot educate our young people exclusively on the gifts of their grandparents! We ourselves must keep the college current and up-to-date. While a modern university student must know something about the "Hundred Greatest Books," he will be sadly behind the times unless he also knows the "Thousand Latest Books." L. J. L.

Travelogs

MY TRAVELS being considerably less for a time during the summer, I contracted a feeling of lassitude which has robbed me of effort to bring my goings and comings up to date.

Cameron

Somewhere about August 10 I drove to Cameron, Missouri, with my companion. There in the cool of the evening were held groundbreaking ceremonies for a new church. Stake President E. E. Jennings was in charge. The assembled Saints sang, prayer was offered, and I spoke briefly about altars and shrines.

The formal services over, Sister Smith and I found it necessary to leave for home, but before we drove away, we witnessed something we will long remember.

After the ground was broken by me, Brother Jennings, Brother Hampden, and others, the Saints, young and old, swarmed over the site; and as we drove away, there was a working bee such as I never saw before. It seemed everyone had a spade or a shovel and, so far as I know, each took a hand in this initial excavation.

Ruskin says he would not have a marble church in and of itself alone for every congregation, but he would have them of the spirit of sacrifice in order to build one. If I may judge from what I saw on August 10, the Saints at Cameron will make the necessary sacrifice to secure the construction of their church, plans of which have been already approved.

Far West Reunion

I promised Stake President Jennings that I would visit the stake reunion on August 21. I spoke at the eleven o'clock service, partook of a splendid dinner at their spacious dining hall and inspected the reunion grounds, the water purification plant, the lake and improvements before returning home.

The reunion, like all held this year, was outstanding in every way, and indebtedness on the land was reduced substantially. President Jennings, Bishop Higdon, and their associates are effecting much spiritual and material progress.

While there I met quite a number of old friends, Orman Salisbury, Fred A. Cool, John L. Bear, Coventry Archibald, and their wives, and others I cannot now recall. I was privileged to "sit in" on one of the meetings of the Stake High Council.

Washington

On Monday, August 29, Bishop DeLapp and I left for Washington, D. C., where on Wednesday, August 31, we met with Pastor Ray Hurst and members of the building committee: Brethren Powell, Edwards, Radcliffe, Forbes, Willard Hield, and Harder. We inspected a building site the committee was desirous of purchasing.

At noon we adjourned the session and, pursuant to arrangements made by the Hon. Vernon E. Moore, a good friend of ours, we—Bishop DeLapp, Mr. Moore, and I—had lunch with Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan, son of Sister Brannan of Denver. It was to us a very interesting experience.

We found Secretary Brannan a very genial host, and I was impressed with his personal charm which has so materially helped him in his rapid progress in governmental affairs.

In the afternoon we finished our business with the building committee, and Bishop DeLapp left on a late afternoon train for home.

I stayed until the next morning, then left for New York, spending a few hours there on Thursday, September first. I personally contacted representatives of Scribners, Funk and Wagnalls, Grolier's, and Encyclopedia Americana, all publishers of encyclopedias.

Six o'clock saw me aboard the Wolverine (New York Central) en route to Grand Rapids, Michigan, for a business conference on Friday with Bishop Elmer C. Evans. I had lunch with him and his brother Alonzo at the Pantland Hotel.

There I also called on the Baker House publishers, who are about to republish the Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia.

Bishop Evans took me for a visit to his fine printing establishment and to see the Municipal Auditorium. It is not as large as some, but of most excellent planning. The foyer of paneled walnut is, I am sure, the finest I have ever seen in a public building.

At five p.m. I was en route home via Chicago, having pleasant memories of Bishop Evans and Grand Rapids.

The next day I arrived home. Thus far I have always done so—but who can tell? Nowadays when one leaves home he does not know what the hazards of modern travel will bring to him.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Across the Desk

Excerpt from letter of Mrs. Alfay McCracken:

I have been an isolated member for the greater part of my life. Since my husband and two of the children came into the church, I no longer feel isolated. We are members of the recently organized Culbertson (Montana) Branch. We have been spiritually blessed in our little group. God is at work with his people. I do not speak of these blessings lightly, but if I treasure such experiences selfishly how can they reassure and help another? To the sick I say this: examine yourself and seek forgiveness for past failures—in a spirit of fasting, humility, and faith, then receive administration. Without doubting, pray with the elders they administer the ordinance and say, "Thy will be done." A blessing will come. Jesus denied no one who sought him. If you do not receive a miraculous physical blessing, do not overlook the spiritual blessing.

We feel that this testimony should bring strength and comfort to our members.

What Will Your College Day Gift Provide?

EACH MEMBER of the church who places a gift in the offering basket on College Day has a right to feel that his gift is furthering the progress of the kingdom of God. This report from the Public Relations office is designed to give the people of the church the facts they need before they decide how much they will give.

Every penny—every hundred-dollar check—contributed as a College Day offering, will one day be transformed into a chair, a table, a lamp, a bed, or some other item of furniture or equipment used by the student in the Memorial Student Center or the Men's Dormitory.

And the church member who gives will have the satisfaction of seeing the transformation of his gift soon. By January 1, students will be using the Center and its facilities—facilities provided by this College Day contributions. By the following year, students are expected to be living in the Men's Dormitory.

Careful studies of the needs of students have indicated that for the present the most pressing need is for the Center and the Dormitory. Surveys of student opinion indicate they share in the belief that these are the most urgent needs.

At present, 575 students have no place to go indoors on the campus for recreation. The gymnasium, with its physical education classes for both men and women, its varsity sports activities, its all-school assemblies, its all-school fellowship services, and its all-school parties is overworked and overcrowded. The Walker Hall reception room, which once served as a lounge for all of the students of Graceland, is too small for the present student body. The young men and women of Graceland need a place for indoor recreation on the campus.

This year over 200 Graceland men are living in the homes of Lamoni residents. The rest are living in converted residences and in a building which was once a bakery. All of these facilities are off the campus. These men need to be housed in dormitories. More of them need to be in dormitories on the campus.

GRACELAND IS GROWING—growing in numbers of students who want to attend, growing in stature as the educational institution of the church, growing in service to the young men and women of the church. Graceland's growth in physical facilities must match the demands placed upon her to serve.

As you give to Graceland on this College Day, you will help Graceland grow at two vital pressure points. You may be sure as you give to Graceland this year that you may take inspiration from the words of the poem, "They Who Build," by Cleo M. Hanthorne:

They who build on Graceland sod
Lay their wood and stone to God.

R. EDWIN BROWNE.

THE FORTY-NINERS SAY—

Last summer the Public Relations office at Graceland sent an "opinionnaire" to all 1949 graduates. The best thing this survey did was to discover that the confirming weight of student opinion is behind programs already initiated at Graceland.

One of the questions was, "If you had it in your power to do so, how would you change Graceland?"

A surprising number of answers were like this: "I don't know how anybody could do anything to improve Graceland, except for two important needs: provide a place on the campus for indoor recreation, and improve the housing facilities, especially for men."

These needs will be met soon. Already the Student Center is nearing completion on the campus. It will be ready for the use of students by the first of the year. The architect's plans for the new men's dormitory are almost completed. Construction is expected to begin next spring.

But buildings need equipment and facilities in order to be used. The people of the church have an opportunity to provide these on College Day, October 30.

This is the Memorial Student Center building as it looks now nestled among the pines north of the old Administration Building on the Graceland campus. This picture was taken from the west. The Student Center will be dedicated at the Graceland Home-coming on October 16. It is expected to be ready for occupancy before Christmas this year.

435—"Graceland Forever"

QUOTABLE QUOTE:

"To develop a fellowship of students whose lives are activated by the ideals and principles of Christian living as interpreted by the thought and program of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to encourage participation in its corporate activities, and to promote the disposition to share in the development of its spiritual and social program."—This is listed as number one among eleven "Aims and Objectives" of Graceland College in the catalog.

Thoughts for a College Day Sermon

We need men of good spirit. But we also need men who are qualified by training to use that good spirit. Graceland is an institution of the church set up for the purpose of training our young people for service motivated by the Christian ideals of the church.

Let our young men and women give serious consideration to the kind of education offered them at Graceland. Graceland's educational offerings are on a par with the best in the land. Her courses are fully accredited. But there is something more to be obtained at Graceland.

It is an influence which gives direction to learning. It is a spirit which gives guidance to study. It is an undertone of Christian motivation which turns education to goodly ends.

It is also a spirit which assists the learning process. It emphasizes the seeking of learning by study "and also by faith." It has been called the "Graceland Spirit." At its best, it is the Spirit of God.

Let our young men and women be challenged by the needs of the church for qualified personnel. Let them give careful—and prayerful—consideration to the important place of Graceland in the program of the church. Let them not forget that this is the church of Jesus Christ, and that the college has been established and is supported by the church.

Graceland now has room for qualified students. She welcomes inquiry from the young people of the church who seek the kind of learning that will qualify them for positions of worth in a world which needs young men and women dedicated to the ideals of the Prince of Peace.

Let us give our support—in prayer and good will, and in offerings—to the college of our church, Graceland.

Assorted Facts About Graceland

DID YOU KNOW—

—that Graceland is the oldest and largest junior college in Iowa?

—that Graceland is recognized in the American Association of Junior Colleges as one of the outstanding junior colleges in America?

—that Dr. Marshall R. Beard, registrar of Iowa State Teachers College stated recently that the finest citizens in the dormitories of that school were transfer students from Graceland College?

—that students from forty-one states and from England, Holland, Canada, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia are enrolled in Graceland's international student body this year?

—that this is Graceland's fifty-fifth year as the institution of higher learning of the church?

—that over 4,000 living persons are former students of Graceland College?

—that Graceland offers courses leading to degrees in business, commerce, dentistry, education, engineering, home economics, journalism, law, liberal arts, medicine, music, nursing, religion, science, secretarial science, and many more?

—that an investment in Graceland College may rightly be considered an investment in the future of the church?

—that a student savings plan may be started at Graceland for as little as $5.00 and that under this plan a prospective student may start saving toward a Graceland education, earning interest at a rate of 3 per cent per annum?

Graceland Gazette

FIVE HUNDRED SEVENTY-ONE STUDENTS from forty-one states and five countries and territories are enrolled at Graceland College this year. This is an increase of nineteen over the enrollment of a year ago at the church college. Of the 552 students enrolled a year ago, 289 were freshmen, largely new students. Of the 571 attending this year, 337 are freshmen, an increase of forty-eight over last year.

* * *

There are other interesting revelations in a study of the Graceland enrollment pattern this year. Men number 355, women total 216. Countries represented in the student body in addition to the United States and the territory of Hawaii are England, Holland, and Canada. The District of Columbia is represented as well as forty-one states. Ninety per cent of the students enrolled are members of the church. Other churches represented in the student body include the Church of Christ, Temple Lot; Presbyterian; Methodist; Lutheran; Congregational; and Catholic. Seventeen students belong to no church.

* * *

The student body is divided into sixteen "pastoral groups" this year, each with a student pastor and other officers. These groups meet periodically throughout the year for fellowship and worship and receive the ministry of their officers. Each group is responsible for one of our church missions abroad. Activities will include regular correspondence with members of the mission and sending packages to them.

Students who returned to the campus this fall were delighted to see the evidences of a growing college. The new Memorial Student Center is nearing completion on the lawn northeast of the Administration Building. The new heating plant across the road east of Zimmermann Hall is completed and is sending heat to all of the campus buildings including Walker Hall, which up to this year provided its own heat. The dining hall in Walker Hall has been remodeled and redecorated. The old heating plant has been converted into a dramatics playhouse, complete with a dusty rose interior decor. Partitions which provided a hall separating the two main library rooms in Briggs Hall have been removed and the new library covers all but a few yards of the entire third floor of that building this year.

Five offices at Graceland have been filled by new personnel this year. Malcolm Ritchie is the new Dean of Student Personnel. A graduate of Graceland with the class of 1947, he is also a graduate of the University of California, and has almost completed his work at that school for a Master's degree. Harry Walker, a graduate of Denver University, is instructor of economics and business. Harlan Metcalf, a graduate of Graceland with the class of 1947 and of the State Teachers College at Whitewater, Wisconsin, is teaching the secretarial courses. Leonard Delano, who graduated from Graceland in 1938, attended Iowa State College and received his M.B.A. degree from the University of Chicago, is the new Director of Food Service at Graceland. And Miss Mildred Judkins, a graduate of the Maine General Hospital, Portland, Maine, and former member of the staff of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, is the new college nurse.

The Graceland football team, champions of the Interstate Conference for the past three years, is out after a fourth championship in the league. The games remaining on the schedule are:

October 21—Burlington
October 28—Penn
November 4—Kemper*
November 11—Tarkio
* Conference game

The Graceland student broadcasting station, KGRA, which began operating last year, plans to go on the air before the middle of October with a daily schedule of programs. Studios are located in the basement of the Administration Building.

On September 18 President Israel A. Smith delivered the first address in a series of Sunday services planned for this fall in the college "church," Zimmermann Hall. The series is entitled "Expectancies," and President Smith spoke on the subject, "The General Church Expects of Us." He called for a Graceland whose offerings would help the student maintain and mature his faith.

The Graceland College Band will be made up of sixty musicians this year. This will be the largest band in Graceland history.

The More Excellent Way

Digest of a sermon preached in the Stone Church on August 21, 1949.

By EVAN A. FRY

SCRIPTURE READING: I Corinthians 12.

A PROPER UNDERSTANDING of any passage of Scripture is partly dependent on the context in which it is found, the occasion on which it was written, the people to whom it was written, and the purpose for which it was written. Therefore, it is not possible to understand the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians without reading the entire book to get a proper perspective.

Once the book is read in its entirety and analyzed, it appears that Paul had these purposes: to counsel against the factionalism and division which had crept into the church, dividing it into four parties, and to stress the necessity of unity; to deal with certain cases of gross immorality and licentiousness which had been brought to his attention; and then to answer various questions concerning marriage, banquets, and food offered to idols, the Lord's Supper, spiritual gifts, and the resurrection.

There is one theme, however, which runs through the entire epistle, cropping up in an almost unbelievable variety of places and ways. That is the theme of unity in diversity. This idea is the key which unlocks the mystery of what Paul is getting at in many of his statements—not only in First Corinthians, but in Hebrews, Ephesians, Romans, and Colossians. Note such passages as "He that planteth and he that watereth are one"; "Your bodies are the members of Christ"; "Every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that"; "As God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk"; "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called"; and "For we being many, are one bread, and one body." Let us keep well in mind this theme of unity in diversity as we proceed with a study of parts of this First Corinthian letter.

KEEPING THIS THEME in mind, let us read the closing verses of this twelfth chapter, according to the King James version:

Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? Have all gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? But covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way.

Then the thirteenth chapter proceeds to a discussion of charity, or love, without any answer for the seven questions propounded. Most of the Christian world believes and teaches that according to the thirteenth chapter, such things as prophecy and tongues are done away in favor of the "more excellent way" of charity. But that is not what Paul is saying: and not all translations of the Bible lend themselves to this interpretation. Moffat, Weymouth, and Goodspeed, yielding to the modern disparagement of prophecy and tongues, deliberately change the tense of the verb "show" to future, and say, "I will go on to show you," "still I have to show you," and "I will show you." Three other translations, the Greek Diaglott, the King James, and the Douay, keep the verb in the present tense: "A much more excellent way I point out to you"; "I shew unto you a more excellent way"; and "I shew unto you yet a more excellent way." It seems to me that what Paul is really trying to say, if only his translators will let him, is this: "And yet I am showing unto you a more excellent way [present progressive tense] by showing you that all cannot be apostles, or prophets, or teachers, or workers of miracles; but that all do have some part and function in the body of Christ; and that no part or function is to be disparaged or neglected or thought unprofitable to the functioning of the body."

The Inspired Version throws even greater light on the question by giving a definite answer to all the questions propounded (which no other version does): "I say unto you, Nay; for I have shown unto you a more excellent way." The "more excellent way" which has been shown throughout all chapter twelve is unity in diversity, as in the body of Christ—a unity made warm and alive and vital by the love of Christ, which is charity. Charity is not a substitute for spiritual gifts but the thing which unifies them and gives them purpose and meaning.

Continuing his theme of unity in diversity, Paul points out that there is a diversity even in the godhead:

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all.

In order that the Corinthians may understand this principle of unity in diversity, Paul is most eager to have them understand what we commonly refer to as "spiritual gifts." According to chapter fourteen, gross abuses had sprung up in the church in Corinth, with the various factions vying with each other in the uncontrolled exercise of certain gifts, with an eye to bringing glory either to the individual exercising them or to the faction he represented. Paul is eager to have this condition corrected, so that each will remember the first requisite of spiritual power, which is unity. "Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church."

WHAT ARE "spiritual gifts"? The phrase occurs only three times in the New Testament, in I Corinthians 12: 1; 14: 1, and 14: 12. In each of these three places, the King James version prints the word gifts in italics, to show that it is not part of the original Greek, but has been supplied by the translators to complete the sense and make a smooth English sentence. That being the case, Paul never coined or used the phrase we so often ascribe to him and repeat after him, "spiritual gifts." If we go to the original Greek, we find that in I Corinthians 12: 1, the word used is pneumatikon, meaning literally "the spirituals" with the ending indicating that "the spirituals" are persons. Hence the Greek Diaglott version reads, "And concerning spiritual persons, brethren, I wish you not to be ignorant." In the passages noted in the fourteenth chapter, the word is pneumatika which is rightly translated "spiritual things." Our own Inspired Version uses the phrase "spiritual things" in the first passage, and keeps "spiritual gifts" in the second two. But I believe that choice of phraseology has tended to narrow our viewpoint toward "spiritual persons" and "spiritual things" and to place an undue stress on things which Paul never intended to stress at all. Paul desired that the Corinthians should be informed not only about prophecy and tongues, but about all spiritual things, and spiritual persons, and the proper relationship of each to each in the "body of Christ."

HOW MANY "SPIRITUAL GIFTS" are there? Paul lists ten, if we include the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ. But nowhere does he say that this is a complete list; in fact he strongly intimates quite the contrary. "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all of the members of that one body being many, are one body, so also is Christ." In the body, each member has a different function; there are many members, many functions, many gifts. Paul names only a representative few; but adds, "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." Many other Scriptures support the idea that there are countless spiritual gifts:

And again I exhort you, my brethren, that ye deny not the gifts of God, for they are many; and they come from the same God.—Moroni 10: 8.

And I would exhort you, my beloved brethren, that ye remember that every good gift cometh of Christ.—Moroni 10: 13.

Behold, the Spirit of Christ is given to every man, that they may know good from evil; for everything that inviteth to do good, and to persuade to believe in Christ, is sent forth by the power and gift of Christ.—Moroni 7: 14.

For if there be one among you that doeth good, he shall work by the power and gifts of God.

All have not every gift given unto them; for there are many gifts, and to every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 5.

Every elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, is to be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto him.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 12.

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

Some people take the position that there is a marked difference between "spiritual gifts" and "talents," using the second word to mean natural aptitudes or abilities. Usually in the background of their thinking is the "parable of the talents" from Matthew 25. But a careful study of that parable will reveal that Jesus was talking about the same kind of "spiritual gifts" Paul is discussing in the twelfth chapter of I Corinthians. The word talents as used symbolically in the parable has not the slightest reference to natural abilities or aptitudes. It is simply a measure of weight or a unit of money. When the lord of the parable apportioned "his goods," he did so "to every man according to his several ability." Doctrine and Covenants 46: 5 says: "All have not every gift given unto them; for there are many gifts, and to every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God," carrying out the principle of giving to each a spiritual gift according to his natural ability. The men in the parable of the talents who recognized their "talents" as a spiritual and moral stewardship, using those talents for the purposes the lord intended, found them increasing. The man who took his lord's money and buried it in the earth, failing to recognize his spiritual and moral stewardship, lost that gift because he performed no useful service with it.

TO THE PURE all things are pure. To the spiritual person, all things—talents, natural abilities, material possessions, time, strength—are spiritual and are recognized as a spiritual stewardship. God himself has said:

All things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal My commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.

He that asketh in spirit shall receive in spirit All things must be done in the name of Christ, whatsoever ye do in the Spirit—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 8, 9.

The division between spiritual, and temporal or physical or natural gifts is artificial, arbitrary, and unnecessary. Any gift or talent exercised in the name of Christ under the direction and impulsion of his Spirit in his "body" is a spiritual gift in the largest and best sense of the term. But the moment we begin to covet earnestly the gift given to someone else in the body of Christ, or to exercise our gift for our own glory rather than for the edification of the body, that moment we lay ourselves open to deceit by spirits not of God. A gift exercised under a feeling of conceit or pride or factional rivalry cannot be given by the Spirit of Christ, and therefore it ceases to be a genuine "spiritual gift." I believe that is at least one significance of this phrase from Doctrine and Covenants 46: 4, "Beware lest ye be deceived, and that ye may not be deceived, seek ye earnestly the best gifts."

WHAT ARE the best gifts? Many of us have made numerous attempts to classify the "gifts" in what we thought were the order of their importance. But the whole import of the twelfth chapter of I Corinthians is that all gifts are equally important. "The eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee," neither can it say to the hand, "I am more important than you." Both are equally important to the full and efficient functioning of the body. Similarly, every gift, no matter how insignificant, is equally important to the functioning of the church—the body of Christ. Therefore, the "best gifts" for each member of the body are the gifts specifically given to that member. But all too often we tend to covet what we think are "better" gifts, which have been vouchsafed to someone else, while neglecting our own.

If the foot shall say, because I am not the hand, I am not of the body, is it not therefore of the body? And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body as it hath pleased him.

It would indeed be a crippled and a weakened church in which all the members were apostles, with no prophets; or all prophets without teachers; or all workers of miracles, but without governors or administrators. It would be a sorry church which had the gift of testimony, but no knowledge; the gift of tongues, but no interpretation; the gift of prophecy, but no wisdom; the gift of interpretation, but no discernment; the gifts of healing, but no love. It would be a strange church in which all collected money, but none paid; or in which all preached and none listened; or in which all led, and none followed; or in which all went into foreign fields to preach the gospel, and none stayed at home.

ONE OF OUR FAVORITE HYMNS suggests that as God marshals his army he calls forth both the aged and the youth and assigns some to duty in the ranks, some to the watchtower, and some to picket duty. All these duties, and many more, are necessary if the army of the Lord is to function as it should. Even in the ordained ministry there is a multiplicity of gifts and functions, which may rightly be regarded as priesthood functions, and as deeply spiritual when they are exercised under the impulses of the good Spirit. In our own church we can point to men who are examples of priesthood functioning not only in teaching, expounding, exhorting, taking charge of meetings, administering branches, stakes, and districts, visiting homes, doing the work of evangelists, seventies, bishops, etc., but also in such activities as healing, judging, marriage and business counseling, health education, worship, music, art, farm counseling, youth work, professional and business leadership, labor, and hundreds of other activities carried on in the Spirit of Christ as "spiritual gifts."

"To every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God." A spiritual man will take all his gifts and talents and make them spiritual by his use of them. A spiritual man will also recognize his brother's gifts as spiritual when they are exercised as a spiritual stewardship. You cannot afford to fall into the error of judging another to be nonspiritual because he does not exercise your gift or your favorite gift. If you yourself are spiritual, you will recognize the spiritual qualities in the gifts as exercised by other members of the body of Christ. The same Spirit which directs the exercise of a gift will direct the recognition of it by other spiritual men and women, and the discernment of it and acceptance of it as truly spiritual. In this connection, note the implications of section 50: paragraphs 5 and 6, in the Doctrine and Covenants:

He that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? And if it be by some other way, it be not of God. And again he that receiveth the word of truth, doth he receive it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? If it be some other way, it be not of God; therefore, why is it that ye can not understand and know that he that receiveth the word by the Spirit of truth, receiveth it as it is preached by the Spirit of truth? Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth understand one another, and both are edified and rejoice together.

To every man is given a gift—a spiritual gift. We, being many, are one body. In the body, no member can say to another, "I have no need of thee." Neither can any member rightfully say of himself, "I am not needed in the body."

If you cannot cross the ocean,
And far distant lands explore,
You can find the needy nearer,
You can help them at your door.

If you cannot give your thousands,
You can serve with willing might,
And whate'er you do for Jesus
Will be precious in his sight.

THERE IS A STEWARDSHIP of talents—of spiritual gifts—which is just as important as the stewardship of money. Apply the idea of stewardship of gifts and talents to this passage, and it takes on rather a new meaning:

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the

The Sermon on the Mount

By JAMES DAUGHERTY

WHAT IS THE SERMON on the Mount? It is the moral law of the kingdom of Christ. It is to the New Testament what the Ten Commandments are to the Old Testament. It is thus an excellent example of the relations of the two divine testaments.

The Mount of Beatitudes has become to baptized Christians in all nations of the world what Sinai was to Israel—the place where an authoritative moral ideal was promulgated. Not even those most skeptical of Christ's teachings will deny that it shows originality and genius of the highest order and reveals a character of unequaled moral sublimity. Yet what struck the hearers more than its moral splendor and originality was the tone of authority with which it was delivered. "And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes."—Matthew 7: 28, 29.

In his own name and by his own authority, Christ revised the Decalogue spoken by God on Sinai and declared himself Lord and Judge of the human race, before whom all men shall stand to receive their eternal recompense. In reality it expresses or implies every claim to supernatural dignity which Jesus ever made for himself, or his followers ever made for him.

The Sermon on the Mount begins with Jesus going up into the mountains to get away from the multitudes (Matthew 5: 1). He was followed by his chosen twelve disciples, and it was largely for them that the sermon was intended (Luke 6: 13-20). However, the multitudes were persistent and followed him. The Sermon on the Mount was spoken to the church and not the world; but as the multitudes appeared, they also listened. We may say it was spoken into the ear of the church and overheard by the world.

THERE IS EVERY INDICATION that this sermon was meant to be the ordination sermon of the twelve according to the account of Luke. "And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples; and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles."—Luke 6: 13. Most theologians and commentators hold to the belief that Matthew 5: 1 to 7: 29 is so similar to the sermon reported in Luke 6: 20, that it is best to regard them as basically the same. However, it is plausibly suggested by some that our Lord during his preaching tours often repeated nearly the same sermon to different audiences and that Matthew has given the sermon as delivered one place and Luke as delivered in another. Luke's version is much shorter than Matthew's—thirty verses scattered through his later chapters correspond to utterances in Matthew's sermon. Altogether both Gospels contain about sixty-one parallel verses. The common inference is that, upon the whole, Luke gives the sermon as our Lord actually delivered it, and that Matthew has inserted at appropriate places in the sermon other utterances of our Lord dealing with the same or similar subjects.

The great interest of the sermon as recorded by both writers is that it is more or less a full revelation of Christ's own character—a kind of autobiography. Christ had already written every word of it down in deeds. It seems to translate his life into language. In this sermon, he is very near to us. The blessedness which he offers to the humble and meek, the merciful, the pure in heart, the peacemakers, the seekers after righteousness, and the persecuted for righteousness' sake, he first experienced himself and then commended them to others. The power by which Jesus lived his life is the same power by which we must live ours; this is the power of secret prayer. "And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God."—Luke 6: 12.

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT is very important for a right understanding of Christ's conception of the kingdom. I believe this to be the kingdom of the heavens where angels live the ideal life of love and service, finding their whole pleasure in doing God's will. Christ makes this blessed life of sinless perfection brought down to earth in his own person available for reborn men and women.

Every baptized Christian is taught to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done by men on earth as it is done by angels and saints in heaven." The kingdom, then, is the heavenly life brought down to the earth and made practical (flesh).

The inward and spiritual views of the kingdom, which are promised in the Sermon on the Mount, are not inconsistent with its identification elsewhere with the visible church of Christ. In Matthew 16: 18, 19 Christ identifies his church with the kingdom of the heavens, because it is the only divinely appointed means of establishing it. To the church is entrusted the responsibility of implanting and nourishing the spiritual life of God's children.

The Sermon on the Mount expresses first, the qualifications necessary for admission into the kingdom of God; second, the blessedness or happiness of those who possess these qualifications; third, the misery of those who do not possess them; fourth, the sifting process; fifth, a doctrine equal in importance to that of Hebrews 6: 1, 2, 3, and much better expanded and applied.

QUESTION:

What proof can be offered to convince skeptical persons that the revelation concerning the rebellion of South Carolina was actually given by Joseph Smith on December 25, 1832, or at least prior to the Civil War?

ANSWER:

The revelation on the Civil War was published in 1851 in the Pearl of Great Price in Liverpool, England. It was also reproduced by John Hyde in his book on Mormonism, which was published in 1857. See any library having a collection of books on Latter Day Saints.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

QUESTION:

What is the purpose of the millennium?

ANSWER:

The thousand years Christ will reign on the earth following his second coming, generally referred to as the millennium, is a period of consummation when he will advance his work of redeeming and perfecting his people in preparation for the ultimate kingdom of God. Perfection is not attained in this life. The children of God must be further developed, purified, and fitted for their eternal inheritance. We list four reasons for this millennial period:

1. It comprises a gathering of all the righteous children of God of the celestial order from every age and every land, raised to immortality and eternal life, redeemed from sin and evil, to receive an inheritance on the earth where Christ shall reign. The period is for them one of instruction, training, and perfecting under Christ's supervision, completing what could not be fully done in this present life. The Lord has revealed some of the conditions of that day:

All things shall become new, that my knowledge and glory may dwell upon all the earth. . . . In that day when the Lord shall come he shall reveal all things; things which have passed, and hidden things which no man knew; things of the earth by which it was made, and the purpose and the end thereof; things most precious; things that are above, and things that are beneath; things that are in the earth, and upon the earth, and in heaven.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5.

And further:

I, the Lord, am merciful and gracious unto those who fear me, and delight to honor those who serve me in righteousness and truth unto the end; great shall be their reward, and eternal shall be their glory; and to them will I reveal all mysteries; yea, all the hidden mysteries of my kingdom from days of old; and for ages to come will I make known unto them the good pleasure of my will concerning all things pertaining to my kingdom; yea, even the wonders of eternity shall they know, and things to come will I show them, even the things of many generations; their wisdom shall be great, and their understanding reach to heaven.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 2.

With this great learning there must inevitably be a co-ordinate development and enlargement of character and power, and an increase of holiness. That probably is the time mentioned by the Lord when "you shall comprehend even God" (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12).

2. The millennium provides the opportunity for the development and perfecting of the kingdom of God. In this world sin hinders the work of the kingdom, and when Christ comes to rule over it, he takes over that kingdom with its imperfections, and begins the work of re-establishing, reorganizing its government, giving new laws as needed, developing, and perfecting it. In all this work the Lord can move only as fast as the people grow in personal qualification and fitness. Upon the throne of David, Christ will reign in justice, equity, and righteousness; "Of the increase of his government and peace there is no end." This kingdom will be a growth, for it cannot begin in absolute perfection.

3. The millennium is also a time when Christ will subjugate all opposing powers and remove all conditions of evil, not all at once, apparently, for there will be evil still existing and sinners among the mortals and nations that refuse allegiance. Satan will be bound at the beginning, but wickedness will bring him back during the little season after the thousand years are finished. Destructive insects, pests, diseases affecting animal and vegetable life must be banished, probably early in the period. Enmities of man and beast are to be removed. This subduing of evil and opposition will hardly be accomplished in a moment by fiat, but by the progressive work of Christ as his people gain spiritual power by development. It is only after the little season that the subjugation of evil will be made complete. The Lord has said:

When the thousand years are ended, and men again begin to deny their God, then will I spare the earth but for a little season; and the end shall come, and the heaven and the earth shall be consumed, and pass away, and there shall be a new heaven and a new earth; for all old things shall pass away, and all things shall become new, even the heaven and the earth, and all the fullness thereof, both men and beasts, the fowls of the air, and the fishes of the sea.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 6.

4. The millennium is the earth's period of rest; it is her sabbath. The perfecting and sanctifying of the people will have a corresponding change in the earth itself, for it is to be transformed to adapt to the developing people. The partial change which comes to men in the resurrection will require corresponding changes in the earth also that it might be adapted to their needs. It is at the end of the thousand years that the greater change will come to both. The Lord has said:

Therefore, it must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father; that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it for ever and ever; for, for this intent was it made and created; and for this intent are they sanctified.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

The whole purpose of the millennium is summed up in the following:

. . . . The fullness of times, when Christ shall have subdued all enemies under his feet, and shall have perfected his work, when he shall deliver up the kingdom and present it unto the Father spotless.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.

Afterward cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power, for he must reign, until he hath put all enemies under his feet.—I Corinthians 15: 24.

Netherlands Youth Camp

(The following, translated from a letter written to Brother Albert Scherer in Independence, Missouri, is a report of a youth camp held near Zierkzee, Holland, by a group of church young people belonging to the S.I.L. Number 2. This organization corresponds to our junior Zion's League. It is sponsored and cared for by the Senior League. Pieter de Mik, leader of the camp and president of the Junior League, writes of the experience. Pieter, in spite of a physical disability that has prevented him from participating in many activities, is a capable and hard-working young man. Other persons sharing the responsibility of conducting camp were Brother van Goch and Brother and Sister M. Boogaard. As is quite customary in gatherings of this sort in Holland, the camp headquarters was a large, clean barn. The wide, central drive was used for the dining room and assembly hall for activities in case of rain. The cow stalls, cleaned spotlessly were bedded with straw over which blankets were spread for sleeping. Those on one side of the dining area were used as the boys' dormitory, and those on the other as the girls' sleeping quarters. The camp site was one-half mile from the seashore with dunes and woods near by.)

I wish to send you a report of the camp which we held July 23 to 30. It was a week that will never be forgotten. I can't tell you about the trip itself, because I went a day early to help make preparation. We had our supplies and the necessary utensils ready several days ahead of time. It was intended that when the group arrived there would be a bowl of good soup ready and waiting for them, but this was a disappointment as the equipment didn't arrive until 3:30 Saturday afternoon, and fifteen minutes later the young people were there. We had already made the sleeping quarters ready and set up the long tables and benches in the dining hall. Following the Dutch custom, the tables were covered with clean, white paper. You should have seen the eyes of the campers as they came in!

They quickly unpacked and put everything in its place. The sisters who were responsible for the cooking hurried to prepare some warm tea for them to drink. All the campers changed to camp clothes, sleeping quarters were assigned to all eighteen campers and seven leaders, and tea was served at the long tables.

After some recreational activities, we had a short evening service. The campers went to bed at nine o'clock, but there was still a lot of enthusiasm. We could not get them still even at ten. Finally, however, all was in deep quiet, and the leaders were able to discuss the plans and program for the coming day.

The next day, Sunday, camp life really began. The campers awakened early—about four o'clock—and began to talk with one another, which was strictly against the camp regulations for that hour. At 6:30 the leaders arose. They prepared themselves as quickly as possible to get everything ready for breakfast. At seven o'clock the campers were permitted to get up. First they flipped the blankets to remove loose straw, and then they went to wash themselves. This didn't go as fast as we expected, for we had only two pails and many had to wait to wash. At eight o'clock all were seated neatly at the long table full of big Zeeland sandwiches. After a fellowship prayer, breakfast was served.

Now follows the camp program. We had prepared beforehand the camp regulations and work assignments. A copy of these was hung on the door of the barn where each could see the day's work schedule. Dishes were to be washed. Straw was to be aired anew every day. The dining hall had to be swept. Potatoes needed to be peeled and vegetables cleaned. In the kitchen the women were the bosses. They had to go immediately to prepare for the noonday meal.

By ten o'clock most of the work was done. Then a whistle was blown, and all came together for Sunday school. It didn't go just the way we were used to having it, but I don't believe our Heavenly Father will be angry with us. Then after a few quiet games, the noon meal was served. It tasted unusually good, because Uncle Cor is a good cook.

In the afternoon we went to the beach. It was nice, warm weather. This was the first time in my life that I had a bathing suit on. It was a wonderful experience to be able to splash around in the water with the rest. Finally we had the thanks prayer to God that we were able to do this.

So went each day. First to the sea, then roaming over the dunes and through the woods and playing games. We have not seen everything there yet, and we hope that we can go again.

The last evening we were there we had a very pleasant time. All necessary appreciations were expressed ahead of time. Hymns were sung. Yes, this time we will not forget very soon. Everyone enjoyed it immensely. We hope that we have been able to gain some members for S.I.L., and most important, that we shall bring children to God.

Grateful for Letters

I am thankful to all the kind people who showered me with letters. I wish to express my heartfelt thanks to those who thus made my hospitalization a fine experience. I enjoyed every letter and am hoping that this new companionship by mail might go on.

"And God Gave Some Pastors"

If there is one thing I am full of, it is advice. In rearing a couple of boys, one gets plenty of practice. I know there are many men who have spent more than twenty years as pastor of one congregation and could give more expert advice than I, but since none has appeared in print, I shall try. I doubt if there are any "new" experiences—just some repeats. The only purpose I give for writing this is that it might help some young pastor who is just starting in this particular ministry.

It is not all joy or all sorrow—this being a pastor—but I have found that in spite of the fact things sometimes look pretty hopeless, it comes out more good than bad. I can't see how anyone could have been much less equipped for the job than I, for I was isolated from the church most of my life until I was ordained a priest in my early twenties. All too soon the pastor moved away, and since I was the only member of the priesthood, I was placed in charge. My formal schooling ended with the sixth grade, but my "education" began when I started my ministry. Stake President Wilbur Prall gave me all the help he could, but travel was limited in those days. We had no active priesthood to help in the branch, but Brother Prall was like a guiding father to me. Just a letter once in a while from him would strengthen and swell my heart with courage. The Saints were most kind too. When I look back now on the many mistakes I made and see the patience and love with which they passed over my many shortcomings, I marvel. They were surely the children of God.

It was not always smooth going, and I often spent most of the night in prayer—sometimes even praying that the Lord would send another into the branch to take my place. If this happens to you, young pastor, don't give up, because he may send someone in only after he has made a man of you. I remember the good advice Stake President Dan Sorden gave me once when the going was rough. "To be a good pastor," he said, "you must have a heart of gold and a hide as thick as that of a rhinoceros." And then he added understandingly, "You will come out of this a bigger and better man." Thank God for stake presidents with their good advice and help.

Sometimes it is necessary to correct those you love the most. That is hard to do, but a pastor can't play the coward. I blundered at all too many problems that should have been small ones. They grew because of my failure to keep a proper perspective. A pastor must take counsel with God always before acting upon any matter. Nothing should be decided hastily. Most important, a pastor should never stop loving anyone for something he may have done, for it is only with love in his heart that he can help. It is wise to keep the confidence of his members, refraining from talking over the troubles or mistakes of one member with another member regardless of how close they may be to him, for they may betray his confidence, and it takes a great deal of "doing" to "undo" the trouble caused. A pastor must never forget that he is not infallible; remembering this he will be more patient with his "flock."

Now, young pastor, lest you think it is all trouble and heartache, just remember the babies to be blessed, young love to be wedded, new lives to be led into the waters of regeneration, and the consolation you can give at death. If you try to fulfill your office in faithfulness, you will receive grace from the Savior sufficient for every need. I have seen more than one pastor leave his post with disappointment and bitterness in his soul, so I have always prayed that when my time came to step aside for another man's try, I might leave with more love in my heart for the Saints than when I started. God surely helped me to make that prayer come true. I feel I would like to take them all in my arms and say, "God bless you for your help to me and my family for more than twenty years." I have watched them grow in Christlike love toward each other, and it makes all the struggle and heartache worth-while. Best of all I think they love me, too. Now we have a new pastor, Elder Harry Propst, a really fine servant for God and the people. It has been a joy to watch the branch make rapid growth under his leadership. It is a pleasure to work with him in building the kingdom of God.

May God bless all in the church, for the load is great. May courage for the road which lies ahead be ever with the young pastor.

Correction

Dr. A. W. Teel wishes to correct the name of the medical school that appeared in a feature about him on page 4 of the September 5, 1949, issue of the Herald. Instead of "Keokuk Medical College," it should be "College of Physicians and Surgeons, Keokuk, Iowa."

Briefs

BEVIER, MISSOURI.—On September 11, at the evening service, Kay Ruth, daughter of M/Sgt. and Mrs. Sam Bottarff of Kansas City was blessed. Sergeant and Mrs. Bottarff then showed and explained pictures taken during their stay in Germany and their travels in France.

Donna Mae Sutton, of Palmyra, Missouri, and Juanita Lear of Hannibal, Missouri, were baptized at Bevier, Sunday, September 25, at 2 p.m.

Bishop Earl T. Higdon, Far West Stake, was speaker at the morning services Sunday, September 18. The church has been newly decorated.—Reported by GRACE VANSKIKE.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS.—The Fort Scott Branch had their annual business meeting, September 18. The following officers were elected for the coming year: Dale Crown, pastor; Raymond Brooks, director of religious education; Lloyd Hill, branch treasurer; Ruth Main LeNeve, music director; women's supervisor, Leah Williams; Lloyd Feagins, Zion's League leader; Marie Hawley, children's supervisor; Marion Lybarger, auditor; Susie LeNeve, publicity agent.

CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE.—The young adults of Central Missouri Stake held their retreat at the (Knob Noster) State Park beginning September 17 at 2:00 p.m. with registration and recreation. "Be Valiant in Testimony" was the theme. The evening service was held inside the dining cabin beside the lighted fireplace. Elder John Puckett of Independence was in charge. Several musical numbers gave the setting for five outstanding personal experiences.

Sunday, the devotional before breakfast was in charge of Pike Richardson, pastor at Marshall. At 9:30 the business meeting was held. Leonard Smith of Oak Grove is to be the nominee for stake young adult supervisor at the Stake Conference in November. Herbert Ridge of Marshall and Ammon Beebe of Atherton were chosen assistant supervisors. Cora Jorgenson was elected secretary-treasurer.

Elder A. Orlin Crownover of Independence preached the sermon, "Are You Valiant in Testimony?" Sunday morning.

At 2:00 p.m., Elder Sam Balsler, pastor of South Chrysler Congregation, Independence, related his conversion experience. The final meeting was one of dedication. Stake President Harry J. Simons, Stake Bishop Willard C. Becker, and Elders Ezra Mifflin, Hunter Ferguson, and E. P. Darnell were with the group.—Reported by LOUISE LOVELAND.

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—A baptismal, confirmation and ordination service was held Sunday, July 31. Mrs. Elizabeth Ross and David Ross were baptized. Those ordained were Norman Bernauer and Donald Ross, Jr., to the office of priest, and John Ross to the office of deacon.

Sunday evening, August 7, Mr. Jack Mercer of Creston, Iowa, gave a recital which included music for violin and cornet. Mrs. Margaret Raisbeck accompanied him. Following this, slides of Mexico and Central America were shown by Mr. H. I. Letchworth of Independence, Missouri.

The annual business meeting of the branch was held Wednesday evening, September 14. Officers for the new year are: Elder T. A. Dershimer, pastor; Elder D. R. Ross, counselor and church school director; Elder John Tenors, councilor; De Vere Omohundro, secretary and Zion's League leader; Elizabeth Ross, treasurer; Ruth Snider, president of women's department; Margaret Raisbeck, music director; Gladys Omohundro, reporter; Dorothy Raisbeck, book steward.—Reported by DOROTHY RAISBECK.

COLDWATER, MICHIGAN.—The annual conference of the Northern Indiana District was held at Buchanan, Michigan, September 17 and 18. The conference was in charge of Bishop T. A. Beck and Elder Luther S. Troyer. The following were elected delegates to the next General Conference: Apostle Arthur Oakman, Earl Burt, Elder Luther Troyer, Ruby Troyer, Albert Taylor, Cecil Wismer, Lester Tacy, Forest Myers, and Melvin Johnson.

Officers elected or appointed were: Elder L. S. Troyer, pastor; Elders S. M. Nichols and E. J. Grigg, councilors; Myrtle Johnson, secretary and auditor; Rolland Durham, treasurer; Maxine Martin, women's leader; Glenn Cease, Religious Education director and historian; Harriet Schrader, music director; Arthur Middleton, nonresident pastor; and Lydia Myers, young people's leader.

The following recommendations were approved: John Smelser to the office of elder; Wilford McMurry, elder; Arthur Middleton, priest; Marshall McIvor, priest; Leo McCarty, priest; Kenneth Binkley, deacon; and Gordon Cease, deacon.—Reported by MYRTLE JOHNSON.

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON.—Five baptisms were cared for on June 12 in this branch. These were Carol Ann Spencer, Linda Eleanor Roth, Philip Douglas Nottingham, Phyllis Irene Meyers, and Gerald Allen Jones.—Reported by MRS. F. E. CHAPMAN.

BEND, OREGON.—An institute for the Oregon District was held at Bend on September 3, 4, and 5, under the direction of District President J. L. Verhei. Other members of the staff were Mrs. Effie Verhei, Elder and Mrs. Elwin R. Vest, Elder and Mrs. Harold Carpenter, Elder and Mrs. F. E. Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gollenhan, and Elder and Mrs. Ted Schuld from Klamath Falls, Oregon. Five children and one adult were baptized on Sunday, September 4. There was an excellent attendance from the district.—Reported by GEORGE M. DYER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—A rally of religious education workers from all the congregations of Independence was held Sunday evening at the Stone Church. Elder John Darling and Apostle Reed Holmes addressed the gathering.

Bishop Harold Cackler announces that the titling statements filed for the first eight months of the year show an increase of 3.4 per cent of the membership filing over last year. General church income from Independence congregations is $4,077 over the first eight months of last year, a rise of 4 per cent.

Donnis Jean Graham, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth L. Graham, was baptized September 18, and was confirmed at the Stone Church children's prayer service, September 21, held at the home of Raymond Johnson.

Pastors for the various congregations in Independence for the coming year include:

Stone Church, Glaude A. Smith; Walnut Park, Fred O. Davies; Liberty Street, D. B. Sorden; East Independence, Lyndon L. Wagener; Eden Heights, Fred A. Fry; Englewood, Ted P. Scott; Enoch Hill, Sanford Downs; Gudgell Park, George S. Davis; Mt. Washington, William LaGrece; Second Church, Howard Timm; Slover Park, Fred Epperson; South Chrysler, Samuel G. Balsler; Spring Branch, Iven Clothier; Sugar Creek, Victor R. Talcott; College Street Mission, O. L. Athey; Blue Ridge Mission, Lewis J. Richards; Resthaven, W. N. Inman.

City-wide officers for the year 1949-1950 are: Pastor in Zion, Charles V. Graham; Bishop in Zion, Harold W. Cackler; city-wide visiting minister, Arthur E. Stoft; director of young people, F. Carl Mesle; young adult leaders, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Deal; director of Religious education, C. Cecil Talcott; director of music, Aleta Runkle; leader of women, Mrs. Gail B. Wilson; chairman, Daughters of Zion, Mrs. Melvin Benner; missionary co-ordinator, assistant to C. V. Graham, W. E. Wakeman; Vacation Church School director, Mrs. Vernon Sackman.

FAYETTE CITY, PENNSYLVANIA.—Five babies were blessed on Children's Day: Albert David, son of William and Betty Barker; Lora Lee and Linda Lou, twin daughters of Mrs. Alice Hisson; and Donald Robert and David Allen Peters. Miss Rose Trombino and Mr. Wilford Grant were baptized the last week of May at Lock 4. The following Thursday evening they were married at the church.

Five children were baptized in August and confirmed September 4. They were: Judith Warner, Patricia Warner, Sandra Morgan, James Duall, and Billy Barker.

The women of the branch have made money by bake sales, covered dish suppers, and the sale of brooms and other kitchen helps. Mrs. Louise Stewart taught a class, "Growing Together in Love."—Reported by LAURA MAY WINSHIP.

OTTAWA, ILLINOIS.—On January 6, 1948, six women, all members of the church, organized themselves as the Ottawa Council of Women with the approval of the District Presidency of the Northeastern Illinois District. The goal of those women was a mission in Ottawa. Mrs. Elsie Turner was elected president; Mrs. Ruby Varland, vice-president; Mrs. Theresa Nelson, secretary; and Mrs. Nina Jamieson, treasurer. The two remaining members were Mrs. Elva Larson and Mrs. Myrtle Classon. Through diligence and hard work that group of women more than tripled their number, and they have seen their dream of a mission at Ottawa realized after a period of twenty months.

During August, 1949, as a result of the work of the Ottawa Council of Women, the District President, Lloyd L. Hadley, and councilor, I. E. Turner, were able to make arrangements to have Missionary G. Wayne Smith go to Ottawa, where he held sixteen cottage meetings, in addition to Sunday services, with an average of thirty-five people attending each week. Nineteen of those people were nonmembers, who came to learn of the kingdom.

The Government Recreation Hall at Ottawa was engaged for the missionary services, and all of the expenses in connection with that project were underwritten by the Ottawa women.

On the morning of September 4, 1949, near the town of Wedron, Illinois, six people were baptized in the river. Those six baptisms, together with other baptisms during the preceding week, brought the total number to thirteen. Those baptized were Margaret Jamieson, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Mading, Iola Mading, Kenneth Mading, Marion Wilson, Mrs. Howard Nelson, Kay Nelson, Gail Nelson, Dalburt Nelson, Fay C. Miller, and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Rocky. Immediately following the baptisms, a confirmation service was held at the recreation hall. The candidates were confirmed by Elders Lloyd L. Hadley, I. E. Turner, G. Wayne Smith, and Arthur Hogue.

The infant daughter of Brother and Sister Paul Rocky, Paula Jane, was blessed by Elders Turner and Smith at the close of the confirmation service.

A luncheon was served at the hall during the noon hour.

A Communion service was held at 2:00 p.m. At the close of that service, a business session was held, at which time, with the approval of the apostle in charge of the district, the district presidency organized the Ottawa group as a mission.

The following officers will be in charge of the work at Ottawa:

Walter Anderson, pastor; Arthur Hogue, assistant pastor and director of religious education; Lois Hogue, clerk; Clarence Classon, treasurer; Arthur Hambleton, leader of the young people; Elsie Wettengel, supervisor of the department of women; Elva Larson, director of music; Ardella Anderson, superintendent of the children's department; Iola Mading, secretary of the church school; Glenn Mading, librarian; and Faye C. Miller, reporter. Paul Rocky will be the auditor. Clarence Classon is the deacon.

The following individuals will serve on the building committee:

Walter Anderson, Arthur Hogue, Lowell Mading, Faye C. Miller, and Paul Rocky.

The September 4 services were the last ones held at the Government Recreation Hall. Future services of the Ottawa Mission will be held at 1617 Paul Street.—FAYE C. MILLER, Reporter.

GRAND JUNCTION, COLORADO.—At the annual branch business meeting, held September 9, Elder Jess Hubbard was re-elected pastor for the coming year. Other officers are: Mrs. Mary Towns, branch secretary; Mr. Joseph Towns, branch treasurer; Miss Ada Staats, church school director; Mr. A. E. Mock, church school secretary; Miss Christian Towns, librarian; Mrs. C. B. Wallis, corresponding secretary; Mr. R. H. Oliver, publicity agent, reporter, and book steward; Mrs. Ona Hubbard, women's department leader; Mr. John Hogan, young people's leader; Mrs. Crystalene Hubbard, music director. The following church appointees have visited the branch in the past year, Apostle Charles R. Hield, Seventy Russell Ralston, Elder Elwin Vest, Evangelist William Patterson, and Dr. Floyd McDowell.—Reported by JESS HUBBARD.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—Three people were baptized recently. Linda Lee and France Dee, twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Davenport, and William E. Everett, thus completing the Everett family circle in the church. Cheri Susanna, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Shannon Bennett, was blessed. The branch is the recipient of ten new "Saints' Hymnals," a gift from Ola Elam, of Independence, Missouri. The women's department sponsored a talent fund and style show for the building fund, and an ice cream social and bake sale for a new church carpet. The largest number from the branch attended the reunion this year. One of the new year's goals is to have still more next summer.

Attendance at services is increasing; it soon will be necessary to seat some in the room adjoining the main auditorium. The branch is looking for a new building site. Elder Linden E. Wheeler was sustained as pastor at the branch business meeting. Elder H. E. Davenport's men's class is proving very successful, studying the Book of Mormon. Pastor Wheeler has a lecture and discussion period Sunday evenings on "Each One Win One." District President Charles Tischer was the speaker September 18.—Reported by CHATTIE EVERETT.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—The radio department held its fall picnic, Monday evening, October 10, at the shelter house in Slover Park. Present were announcers, staff, the executive committee, artists, and their families.

Sunday afternoon, October 16, the Independence Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Franklyn S. Weddle, will present their first concert of the 1949-1950 season. They will play Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" and the Bach B minor suite. In this latter opus, Mr. Steven Gladics, the principle flutist of the Kansas City Philharmonic, will be the guest soloist.

Music appreciation classes are being planned by Mr. Franklyn Weddle for the season 1949-1950 in Independence. A similar course was given last year. This year Mr. Weddle will follow the same procedure, giving talks and playing recordings. All church people are urged to attend. The place of meeting will be probably in the music department of the Auditorium.

NORTHERN INDIANA DISTRICT.—A women's institute was held July 23 and 24 at Castle Manor, Meirfield Park, Mishawaka, Indiana. Nellie Mottashed of Billings, Michigan, was the guest speaker. The theme for the institute was, "Homes for Christ." District President Luther Troyer was in charge of the early prayer service on Sunday morning. Mrs. Maxine Martine, district leader, was in charge of the business meeting.

TUCSON, ARIZONA.—The Arizona reunion was held from August 21 to August 29 at Camp Lawton, Tucson, Arizona. The total registration was 153. The theme was "Witness for Christ." Apostle Charles R. Hield was in charge. Actively assisting were Seventy George Njeim, Elder Herbert Lynn, Bishop J. Stanley Kelley; state co-ordinator, Marion Blakely, and W. W. Wood, pastor of Phoenix; T. R. Davis, pastor of Bisbee; and A. H. Hartman, pastor of Tucson. There were classes and recreation for all age groups.—Reported by MRS. I. J. BERGAN.

MOBILE, ALABAMA.—The branch officers elected to serve for the year 1949-1950, were installed with a special service Sunday evening, September 25. The pastor, High Priest J. A. Pray, conducted the service and installed the following officers: R. L. Booker, church school director; A. V. Peavy, assistant church school director; Mary Brooks, secretary and Herald reporter; Hale Miller, junior pastor (appointment) and treasurer; Addilean Booker, director of women; Anna M. Lavinghouse, director of music; Edna Miller, supervisor of adults; George Tillman, supervisor of young people; Dora Cobb, supervisor of children; Gladys Barnes, church school secretary; Laura Vickrey, book steward. The finance committee and building committee are both headed by Brewton Greene.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Design for Living - Part 1

By ALICE M. EDWARDS

IT IS OCTOBER, and the children have gone back to school. I passed some of them at the grade school around the corner—small boys in bright, striped pullovers and coveralls and little girls in gay, ruffled pinafores, playing noisily on their way to school or parking shiny bicycles along the schoolyard fence. Farther on up the street I passed groups of older boys and girls on their way to junior or senior high school—boys in faded blue jeans and plaid flannel shirts, and girls in—well, faded blue jeans and plaid flannel shirts, or long cotton skirts—bare-legged and pig-tailed, walking slowly arm in arm, or proudly parking remodeled '26 Buicks or Model A Fords painted bright blue, red, or yellow in front of the Summer White House.

Maybe your children, like mine, were among these or groups like them; or maybe like mine also they have packed up their belongings, blue jeans, and plaid flannels or cotton skirts and formals, plus your best nylons and toilet water, or Dad's favorite shaving kit and the family typewriter—and other matters of equipment that you are just beginning to miss—and gone away to school, leaving a house full of poignant memories and writing home affectionate and glowing letters with rapidly decreasing frequency. Anyway, whatever their age, sex, or condition, they have gone back to school.

SO THE OCCASION of children going back to school, for thoughtful people—whether they are actually the parents of children or people who are concerned with the children of the community—becomes a time of re-evaluation. We think back over the summer that is past and the years which preceded it, even as we look forward to the school year ahead; and we wonder—we who love and trust our children—even as we watch and work and pray for their safety and well-being, if the patterns of home and family life which we have built for them in their growing childhood will hold through the coming season, and the years ahead.

I have always felt that summer vacation is an opportunity to get acquainted with my own children, although it seems strenuous with my backyard full of my own and my neighbor's children. I realize that it is also a precious experience. It is something that once past can be reclaimed only in memory.

I remember especially one summer when my older boy was about twelve, my daughter nine, and the baby six. There were by actual count twenty-seven children under fifteen in the immediate neighborhood, and I often felt that they were all in my yard most of the time. That summer they were engaged in building a miniature village on and in the terrace above the garage wall and right under the kitchen windows. The work was complicated, involving excavation, construction and management, industry, business and transportation, professional, and cultural services, and a series of the most unbelievable "swaps." All of the neighbor children were in on the deal; each came early, brought his tools and equipment in a box (and usually his lunch) and worked at, completed, bought, sold, traded, gave, or shared his interests, according to his own ideas and abilities.

A nuisance? In one way, but certainly not in another. There was a lot of noise but little actual confusion. There were many arguments but few quarrels. The fact that the children were where I could see, hear, and know what was going on made my own plans for the summer more or less secondary, and the man of the house thought that the sand for the repair of the garage wall was disappearing with unnecessary rapidity. Before the summer was over, however, we were convinced that my time and Dad's sand were an excellent investment.

One day I noticed a police car cruising in the vicinity. Another time the same car was parked across the street for some time; and again, it turned around in the driveway and one of the policemen went down and asked some questions of the children, who, as usual, were tunneling into the lawn and undermining the shrubbery. The children did not seem to be much concerned, but I was curious. I made an excuse to pass the police car the next time it was parked near by and asked what was going on.

"Well, you see," explained one of the detectives, "there have been some youngsters in this end of town getting into garages and basements and stealing scrap, tools, and so forth. So we have been checking up on all the kids that live hereabouts. But we figure that the bunch playing down there in your driveway—they couldn't be any of the ones we are looking for. Those kids down there are too busy and happy to be getting into that kind of trouble." You see what I mean? The design for living that was being worked out in the soil and sand of our backyard was not the same kind of pattern which, in the opinion of the officers assigned to that particular problem in juvenile delinquency, produced scavengers and petty lawbreakers.

VACATION, then, can be a time for checking, re-evaluating and re-shaping patterns of home and family life for the guidance and protection of the children and young people as they go out into the larger world of school and community responsibility. But the time comes again when they go back to school; and we ask ourselves, just a little anxiously, "What kind of patterns have we set? Are they soundly designed? Are the contours clear and the dyes set firmly? Will they endure, and carry over into the new environment? Or will the stresses of the enlarged life tend to alter their form and color, even beyond our recognition or belief?" How can we tell?

One simple way of answering these questions, which all thinking parents ask themselves from time to time, is by checking our own experience against that of others of like faith and belief. We must remember in working out our own design for living that we are not alone. Our lives, and those of our children, are not lived in a world which is separate and apart from that of our neighbors, our community as a whole, and our church—in other words, we are a part of the world we live in. Our own design is after all only a bit, a very small detail in the ultimate picture. Because it is not possible to make a good life for ourselves and our children alone, abundant living becomes a corporate matter.

In working the past few years with child problems in my community and in my own home, in contact with the juvenile court and corrective institutions; in counseling, and in more recent work with disabled and unsettled veterans, this fact has been brought to my attention with more and greater urgency. So I would like, in considering the setting of patterns of home and family life for the guidance and protection of our own children and young people, to tell you about some other children who do not go to the grade school around the corner, or the high school up the street—children whose homes have not provided the patterns for good and abundant living which we have tried to design for our own. It may be in comparing these other designs for living, patterns which are warped, twisted, and malformed by ignorance, indifference, and sinful living on the part of parents, neglect and corruption on the part of government, and failure on the part of the Christian endeavor with the patterns which we have tried to set for our own homes, and have advocated for our own communities, and dedicated to the work of the church, that we may begin to see something of the larger design in order that we may fit our own patterns a little better into the great mosaic.

Case I

For instance, there is Bobbie Q. Bob is a bright, beautiful child of six with soft, light, unruly hair and flushed cheeks, thin arms and legs, and a slight droop to his shoulders, as if already he found the burden of living a little too heavy. Bobbie goes to school this fall, too; but it is not the kind of school your child and mine go to. The instruction is excellent, and the teaching staff of the finest; and the little boys and girls wear pullovers and pinafores, even as yours and mine, though they may not be quite so bright and new. At least, not all at the same time. And they work and play in much the same way as our children in the school around the corner—but with a difference.

Whereas your child and mine dashes home at noon or after school and bursts into the house shouting for Mom to share a triumph or fix a scraped knee, or waits impatiently for Dad to come home from work to help with a knotty arithmetic problem or advise about the care of the new puppy, at S. Home where Bobbie goes to school, Mom and Dad are people who come to see you on visiting day—if they come at all—or maybe on a holiday they send you a new shirt or book or something to play with—maybe. If you have small problems (and what little boy or girl does not have problems?) they must wait for the doctor or the social worker. Probably by the time the trained expert receives the problem, or gets around to it, the problem has solved itself or has been shoved back by more urgent matters; but the heart-break has registered.

You ask why Bobbie Q. is at S. Home? Are his parents dead? Is the poor little child an orphan? Well, he is an orphan of sorts, yes—but his parents—. Well, his father has never played a very active part in Bobbie's design for living. He disappeared some time before the child was born; and his mother, young, frightened, and entirely incapable of carrying the burden of supporting and caring for a child, did try for a while, lost several fair jobs, was forced to leave Bobbie alone while she hunted work, and came eventually to lock him into their cheap hotel bedroom for a great many hours a day, while she gradually resumed the pleasures of the street from which the child's birth had claimed her for a time. Bobbie amused himself by breaking, detaching, and destroying everything the small room contained, and finally attracting enough attention by his disturbances that the other guests in the hotel complained, and the court took Bob and placed him in a boarding home.

It would be more accurate, perhaps, to say several boarding homes. For Bobbie only stayed a little while in each. Unwanted, neglected, and hopeless at the age of four, he turned his back on the race of men and lived alone. In a home where there were other children, his behavior was so peculiar and so unsocial as to be dangerous; in a home where he was an only child, and where every attention was lavished on him, he still continued to break, destroy, and detach everything breakable and detachable, until the foster mother had a nervous collapse, and now Bobbie is back again at S. Home.

Why? Simply because the pattern of living, in the already sadly deformed home which produced him, had become so torn, so defaced, and so lost that his small heart broke, and his small mind, unable to cope with its problem, closed.

Case II

On the other hand, Billie G., who is a friend of mine, has the misfortune to attend a school in a community where an antiquated system allows a woman, never well trained or well adapted by nature or temperament to her profession, to continue to teach small, impressionable children, in spite of increasing ill-health and temper. Bill is a fine, sensitive child, rather like Bobby Q. in appearance. But he has a home where a busy father still takes time to plan for his future and discuss his small problems with him, and where an equally busy mother provides not only the physical comforts of warm food and adequate clothing, but the even more essential warmth of affection and protection of knowing that he is loved and wanted and understood.

Knowing that Bill had this teacher, I asked his mother what sort of adjustment he was making. She was aware of the situation and thought he was meeting it well enough; but I was still curious, and seeing Billie on the street, I stopped and asked him how school was, and how he was getting along with Miss Y.

"Oh, all right," he replied, without much enthusiasm.

"Like her?" I asked casually.

"Well, I don't actually like her," he admitted. "But it's this way. I talked it over with Mom and Dad, and we figure that I have to learn to get along with people, even if I don't especially like them. And this is as good a time as any to start."

The design differs from the life pattern, already too desperately fixed, of Bobbie Q., doesn't it? Yet the two children are fundamentally much alike. But whereas with Bobbie the school, excellent as it is, can only partially compensate for the broken home pattern; with Bill G. a design of safe, intelligent, satisfying home life more than compensates for a really very difficult school situation.

Case III

Next I want to tell you about Russell F., who is seventeen and lives at M. Farm, where he also attends school. Russell is only in the seventh grade, because there at M. the school burned down several years ago, and the county has not found the money to build a new one so the boys can go to school only half days. The other half day is not wasted, of course. It is spent constructively, and often arduously, in the shop, the field, the garden, or working about buildings and grounds. And of course there is supervised recreation—and we do mean supervised.

Last summer Russell spent his vacation with us, while I tried to find an honest-to-goodness home for him. One night while the boys were wiping dishes in the kitchen, I heard one drop and break. After a minute of complete silence, Paul called out, "Sorry, Mom," and I heard Russell say quietly—because he did not intend me to hear—"Gosh, out at M. Farm, they beat you for that."

I found a home for Russell—a good home. But in six months he was back at M. Farm. You say, "Why? Isn't he a good boy?" Certainly he is. He is polite, personable, honest, intelligent, and nice to know. But he will not work. He cannot take responsibility, and he has no initiative.

Why? Because the patterns of life set in the cottages of an institution for incorrigible and neglected children have enforced discipline without teaching self-discipline, have demanded work without teaching the joy of working. What was intended to be a corrective and constructive program of activity and recreation has actually encouraged a dependence which thwarts the normal strivings and produces rebellions in adolescent life and gradually paralyzes the will to venture, experiment, and succeed.

What will happen to Russell F.? Will maturity bring back to his life these dormant qualities so that when he leaves M. Farm to enter into adult participation in the community, he will be able to make a good life for himself and his family? Or will the patterns of dependence and irresponsibility persist? I do not know. The problem is a serious one, because there are hundreds of boys like Russell F. living in such institutions because the fabric of their own home life was torn beyond repair by causes over which they had no control or because through no possible fault of their own their homes ceased to exist and there was no other place for them. Yet boys and girls who have been sent to such institutions and who have grown to manhood and womanhood in such forced, artificial environments are also destined to become a part of the community in which our own children have grown to manhood and womanhood, where they must work, live, assume leadership, and eventually establish their homes and rear their families. This is our problem—yours and mine.

It is as much our problem as the ordering of our own well-established and well-kept homes, and the guidance of our own well-fed and well-cared for children. Most child problems, of course, are parent problems. I read somewhere once that almost any marriage can be a success if both parties to the contract really try. I think the same thing is true of parenthood. To manage economic, social, and spiritual security in a home where two intelligent, normal parents work together, both putting the best they have into the task, is challenge enough. Where this security must be achieved by one parent working alone, that one is obliged to carry a difficult and sometimes thankless burden. And yet, where the conditions which cause broken homes cannot be avoided, a satisfactory design for living still must be maintained because the welfare of the child demands such security. And it can be achieved.

Case IV

Estelle A. is going to high school this winter, and that is indeed an adventure, for not many young people in Estelle's class go on to high school. She has been in California all summer, staying with an aunt, and she could hardly wait to get home to tell her mother about the good times she had and to show her the pretty things Aunt Ellen had fixed for her first year in high school.

Mrs. A. is a public health nurse, and has the sole responsibility for her child's welfare. But she is a good, conscientious, and intelligent mother. I remember her telling me once how she broke Estelle of temper tantrums. Like many small children, the child liked her own way, and when balked, would throw herself on the floor and bump her head. "So I told her," said Mrs. A., "just you go ahead and bump your head. Bump it hard. You need to be punished for displaying such temper. And if you do not punish yourself, I shall have to do it for you." In this way, Estelle learned that temper doesn't pay; and she also began to learn that she could substitute self-discipline for the discipline imposed on her by others in authority, which is a thing some adults have never learned.

Estelle's mother told me, too, about the aunt in California. "I send her there every summer," she said. "I have to work many hours a day and often late at night. My sister-in-law does not work and can be at home with Estelle all the time. But I do miss her."

I wish we could be as sure that Estelle's school life will be well ordered. Probably you have never even seen her school: it is not in a fashionable part of town, because Estelle and her mother are Negroes. But the patterns of her home life are sound and sane in spite of the fact that her mother alone must assume the responsibility for her support, care, and direction, and guidance.

Remembering Estelle, I want to tell you now about some neighbors of mine. They are the wife and four children of a minister of a denomination other than ours. Several years ago this family lived in a small town in central Missouri where they were loved and respected by their congregation and community. The home was all it should be, and Edith, Howard, Geraldine, and John were normal, well-behaved children, doing good work in school, popular with their friends, and happy in their home life. Then, during the war, the Reverend L. enlisted as a chaplain, got into some sort of difficulty, and did not return to his home and family and congregation. The family—hurt, disgraced and actually in need—moved to our town, where the mother found work, and with their remaining savings they bought a home.

The two older children, remembering better times, are bitter and resentful. Edith married early in the war and lives the struggling sort of life many young people nowadays do, but she is without zest. She does not know whether or not it will work. Howard is happy so long as he can smash up the remains of the family car on week-nights and put it back together again on Sunday. He works in a garage.

But with Geraldine and Johnnie it is different. Geraldine has never had many of the things other girls take for granted, and Johnnie does not know what it is like to come home from school to find Mom fussing around the kitchen or entertaining guests or planning an evening's fun for the family; Mom works because they have to eat. Geraldine and John had to learn to look after themselves, and they did a pretty good job of it at first; then things began to get difficult.

Case V

Geraldine could not quite bring herself at sixteen to accept the rulings on such matters as dates and hours and how much of her after-school-salary to spend on clothes and jewelry from a mother who was really not at home often enough to know whom she went with or where she went evenings or what she needed a new wrist watch for. So Geraldine quit school, got a full-time job, and took an apartment with another girl where "Mom" couldn't supervise what she ate and wore or presume to dictate her comings and goings. A nice arrangement, except that it just didn't work.

Geraldine, more careless than ever about raincoats and rubbers, got a bad cold, neglected it, and had pneumonia. It took the combined care of all members of the family and all the money they could get together to pull her through. And I know that she lay alone and ill in the house many days, and that one time she had to wait until payday before they could buy medicine the doctor had ordered.

But the emergency had brought Geraldine and her mother together again. The girl learned how precious a thing it was to have a family to depend on in the pinches, and Mrs. L. was moved to think through her problem again and to try to make home a more attractive place to a teen-age girl. When Geraldine was better, they fixed up the house a little and did some entertaining again. Geraldine joined a dramatic club and found some new friends who did not stay out so late nights. She did not go back to school, but sometimes a better preparation for living is made in this kind of on-the-job training.

Case VI

Young John is in school, of course, but it is a different kind of school still from the ones we have been talking about. Johnnie was a small, wiry lad, with a keen, inventive mind and charming manners. When they moved into our neighborhood, he was still playing with toy cars and cap pistols. He had a paper route and was a good worker, but he was continually without supervision. He came home twice a day to a cold house and cold meals, and the boys he played with were not always well chosen.

One day an older boy went to collect with him (which was forbidden). While Johnnie was busy with a subscriber, the other lad stole a purse from her table and then persuaded the young boy to run away with him. They were picked up the next day in a bus station in St. Louis and brought home; then, and only then, did John realize that without having done anything wrong except choosing bad company and being persuaded into taking an unofficial trip, he was facing a charge of petty larceny.

Knowing Johnnie, some of us were able to get him released, and he observed his parole meticulously. He did not get into any more trouble of this sort, but he still didn't do well at school. He did not study at home and often found it easier not to go to school than to go unprepared. He was dismissed from R.O.T.C. for nonattendance and failed year after year to pass the majority of his courses. The day he was seventeen, Johnnie L. enlisted in the Army. So he began again in one of the hardest of all schools to complete his education. Discipline, supervision, and regular patterns of thinking and doing are paying off at last. John has grown inches, gained pounds, has been promoted, and is now attending baker's school. The family at home is happy about his progress and proud of his accomplishments.

So a new life began for the L. family. The patterns of home and family life which were torn apart when the husband and father failed in his responsibility are being re-established under the supervision of a woman made wise by hardship and tribulation and supplemented by a growing sense of responsibility in the children themselves. But much that has been lost can never be regained.

Memories of O. W. Parker

Employees of Herald House went to Stone Church Tuesday afternoon (October 11) to pay their respects to O. W. Parker, who passed away the preceding Saturday. These memories of him will remain. He generally walked to work and home again, though he would accept a ride if it was offered. He ate lightly, and kept to the end of his life the slim figure and the smooth swift stride of a young man. This was a part of his health program He was the first to arrive at his desk, and the last to go home. He always took his work seriously, and spared no possible effort to do it But he never forgot that a smile could lighten the burden for others, and he often produced the little joke that eased the tension. He could hold his own in any repartee, but he preferred to turn the joke on himself He was a good companion for a walk around the square in the afternoon rest period The salesmen all liked him because he greeted them respectfully, listened to what they had to say even when he knew he couldn't buy. He always gave a man a chance When the weather was at its worst and the congregation at Stone Church was small, you could look back in the southwest corner and see him sitting quietly there. He gave his support Forty years of service in one line of work is a long time. Very few men manage it He loved his family and his home. He had quiet ways, and modest tastes. Rather conservative, he was never one to throw things around. He always kept his authority in the background. His characteristic expressions were, "I think we can do it," or, "If you want it, we'll try to get it."

There was always the pleasant "extra", of a friendly word when you stopped at his desk. One of the top secretaries in the office of the First Presidency, a man who had known him many years, said, "I miss him terribly. He was a good friend. You had to know him a long time to know him really well."

You wouldn't perhaps, call him an ambitious man; certainly not the kind who will climb over others to attain his objective. He hadn't time for it; he was too busy with his job. But he did have a strong desire to round out forty years of work for the publishing house. Despite pain, he tried to keep going. It was difficult at last, but with the sympathy of the Board he was able to fulfill his desire.

Younger employees found him kind and considerate. It was easy to get along with him.

In the publishing business a knowledge of paper is important, and it takes years to learn the field. There are hundreds of kinds and qualities, in many weights and sizes. Brother Parker had that knowledge, and used it to protect the interests of the business. He was a skilled judge and buyer of paper.

His life made a good record. His influence was felt in the formation of policies and procedures. He was a conservative and safe estimator. We remember him with gratitude, affection and appreciation. L. L.

Fruits of Home - By MARY WARD

RECENTLY while on affiliation in St. Louis, Missouri, I became aware of a great gift in my possession—the gift of a loving family. I seemed to sense the importance of such a factor in the lives of growing personalities more keenly as I labored each day with those whose personalities had been warped by the unwise procedure practiced by many parents today. I became more aware of the great need to remember the little things of everyday life, and a deep desire arose within me to express my gratitude to my parents for the love they have bestowed upon their twelve children.

Our home, though never a creation of great physical beauty or wealth, is filled with an inner harmony that through the years grows more dear to our hearts. The joys of home are often tainted with disappointment; still we always find Mother and Dad there to share with us in both happiness and discouragement. As I recall, the comedies, tragedies, and the usual happy scenes of home life which were ours to know, I realize the greatest gift God gave was two consecrated young people endowed with a deep desire to build a home for children.

Home is never the giver of one blessing alone, so I can't hope to make you understand all we've enjoyed. It would take each day's experience to give full account of the blessings we knew while together we grew to know and love our Father in heaven, and each other.

Thus my thoughts ran as I sat one evening alone in St. Louis, writing my parents a letter of thanks.

Dear Mother and Dad,

Tonight I'm very lonesome for my home, family, friends, and most of all, you two. I'm writing this letter in response to the newly acquired desire within my heart to say thank you both for the teachings of my childhood, for all the love and sacrifice of your own pleasure in worldly goods, and for the wise teaching you gave me. Thank you

Mary Ward is the oldest daughter in a family of twelve children (she has a twin brother, Kenneth). Born and reared in Independence, Missouri, she attended William Chrisman High School and then spent two years at Graceland. After being graduated from college, she entered the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing where she is now a senior. A member of the Spring Branch congregation, she is a favorite in the children's department because of her storytelling ability. Her main desire in life, she says, is to build a home which follows the pattern given by Christ.

for the security and assurance you gave to those little ones who came to you everyday for help and guidance. Somehow I can't say thank you enough for teaching me to pray and to know God as my friend. Thanks most of all for showing me the true value of a life lived in service to him. You, Mother and Daddy, are the lights my Heavenly Father gave me to light my small candle from and carry it into the world. Now I return to your door after a few years of carrying that candle alone to pay homage to you. I'm sure that without the aid of our Father above I can't express the desires of my heart, for it is full, but with his help I shall try to thank you for your love.

Graceland seemed to be all I could ask for in the way of complete joy. The friendships I made there will always be dear to my heart. There I saw God in a new and different way. My world grew to include not only my home but people everywhere. In the classroom I felt the beauty of silent personal power. In fellowship services I sensed the happiness of minds free from care and the inspiration of quiet, intelligent thinking. Through the Spirit of the Heavenly Father, I felt the calm assurance of a new day's awakening joy. Here I found a power in numbers, but more than that I felt the world's need for a people of quality.

After my Graceland experience came nurses' training. Here I have sensed a need to reach the soul through its physical weakness—to be kind and loving to all who show their need of me, and with the help of God to understand the need of those who will not ask. To be a nurse is to walk with God every day, every hour; to be humble and full of love for one's fellow men; to give, and also to receive. Many times my patients have served me more than I could ever hope to serve them. There have been those who, in their hour of intense physical pain, have taught me lessons that cannot be measured nor expressed in words.

Yes, nurses' training has taught and is teaching me to live life more abundantly. And tonight I realize that had it not been for the teachings of you, my parents, I could not have hoped to enjoy or even learn that which I have. I realize my failings and wherein I have not taken full opportunity of the growth offered me, but I find peace in the promised hope of the future. I can only say thank you again, Mother and Daddy, for the lives you have lived, all the while sensing the need to try harder every day to express my love for you in living as God would have me live, for I know my actions today are the fruits of my home. My sincere desire is to bestow good wholesome fruitage upon the emaciated lives of those I serve each day.

I constantly pray for each one at home, and thank our Father for you always.

Sincerely,
Mary

New Horizons

Each One Win One

But First Let's Sell Ourselves!

ARE YOU REALLY SOLD on this church? Do you attend services as regularly as you possibly can? Do you consistently file your financial statements and pay your tithing? Are you cultivating the virtues of kindness, patience, and Christlike love for all peoples regardless of their race, creed, or color? Do you support the ministry of your branch, or do you criticize the officers in their functions?

One of the most essential characteristics of a successful salesman is that of being fully convinced of the virtue of his product. During my freshman year at Graceland, I became acquainted with a fellow student who was selling shoes. I bought several pairs and became an ardent supporter of the brand of shoes my friend was selling. In fact I was so fully converted to this brand that I became a salesman myself.

The sales I have made I attributed to the fact that I am completely and enthusiastically convinced of the superior quality of every part of the shoe. I have worn this brand ever since I bought the first pair from my friend.

It would be a poor salesman, indeed, who did not use the product he sold. I would hesitate to guess how many sales I would make if I wore a brand of shoes other than those I sell.

SOME OF US are trying to sell others the gospel while we wear the trademark of another brand of living. If we are completely sold on this most precious product on the market, we should certainly be using its every advantage.

Too many of us "go to seed" on one phase of the gospel plan and completely overlook other important parts. I know a middle-aged brother who hardly ever prays or bears a testimony on Wednesday night without mentioning the need of abiding by the financial law of the church. I know a very conscientious mother who almost never talks about eating unless she mentions the splendid blessings which are ours if we obey the Word of Wisdom. Both are essential parts of the plan God has offered us in order to live abundantly, however, we know that all the phases of the divine plan are necessary if we are to enjoy life to its fullest.

Many Latter Day Saints lack an interest in the church. I became most aware of this fact this summer. A great number of the Latter Day Saints I guided through the church properties at Nauvoo during the summer months appeared only lukewarm or even passive in their interests.

Most of the one thousand four hundred nonmembers I took through showed more interest and respect than did the Latter Day Saints who visited the grounds. This lack of interest and restlessness in the members often transfers to others within the same guide tour who do not belong to the church. Perhaps some of these Latter Day Saints are trying to sell the gospel to others, yet they lack interest in it themselves. They are still wearing another brand!

By GLEN CARGYLE

Let's each begin conscientiously to "practice what we preach." Anything less than this will never convert those we would like to have unite with us. As a friend of mine puts it, "True religion is not a matter of doing good things in their time and place, but rather doing good things at all times and in all places."

Your Talent for Mine

AN ARTICLE appeared some time ago in a leading magazine suggesting that neighbors and friends trade services. It caught my fancy, and I tried it because I was intrigued. It not only works beautifully but the return in friendship and understanding is a source of richer, more satisfying living.

We cannot each possess all the talents there are, but we can share ours with someone and make our homes lovelier, our hearts lighter, our personalities more vivid. Perhaps it's sewing you need done or advice you seek on interior decorating. Perhaps you need help with a party or planning a group social. It may be that you crave music lessons or desire an afternoon's relief from the baby. Search among your talents for those you can offer to others.

I have no talent whatsoever for canning, but I recently acquired some precious jars of jeweled jelly in return for knitting some socks for my neighbor's big, genial husband whose size thirteen feet are almost impossible to fit at the store. Some time ago I redecorated the bath of the little rented house we lived in with gay, yellow daisies—just for fun. They hung happily over the mirror, clustered brightly on the walls around the tub. The effect was cheerful and pert, and my landlady was so pleased that she insisted on staying with my small son while I had a couple of wonderful afternoons free for shopping downtown.

There are many things you can trade, and it's such fun to help and be helped at the same time. It makes everyone concerned realize what a lot of happiness there is to be gained in friendly sharing and working together.

The More Excellent Way

law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall with the wicked lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.— Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

One of the greatest of all sins is a refusal to confess that God's hand is in all things—the sin of ingratitude, the refusal to use gifts and talents and material blessings for the edification of the body of Christ thereby making them spiritual. Your task, then, is to discover or recognize your gift, and to use it in the name of Christ under the direction of his Spirit in the tasks of his kingdom for the edification of the body of Christ in unity and love.

Covet earnestly the best gifts—the gifts given to you by God as best for you. And if you recognize these gifts as spiritual and all the other gifts exercised in the body as likewise spiritual—if you are aware of the relationship existing between your gift and all the others in the body of Christ—you need never be deceived by lusting after second best gifts that belong to somebody else.

Unity in diversity—a unity actively functioning under the direction of Christ's Spirit, and cemented by the power of charity, which is the pure love of Christ—this is the more excellent way.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Gulf States District Convention

A regional Leadership Training Convention will be conducted in Pensacola, Florida, on October 29 and 30, for the Pensacola area of the district. Elder W. F. Steiner will be in charge; staff members will include Evangelist A. D. McCald, District President W. J. Breshears, Elder R. L. Booker, and Elder Brewton Greene. The theme will be "Building Better Latter Day Saint Family Life" as related to the responsibility of every member. All members in the Pensacola area, which includes Belleview and Robertsdale, are urged to be in attendance. Members of neighboring branches are also invited to attend. The meetings will be held at the Pensacola church, Jackson and T streets in Brownsville, a suburb of Pensacola, and will begin at 3 p.m. on Saturday, continuing through Sunday afternoon.

W. J. BRESHEARS,
President, Gulf States District

WEDDINGS

Rutherford-Yager

Nadine Lillian Yager, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Yager of Wiarton, Ontario, and John Harold Rutherford, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Rutherford, also of Wiarton, were married September 10 at the Reorganized Church in Wiarton. Elder Duncan B. Perkins, grandfather of the bride, performed the ceremony. The bride is a graduate of the University of Western Ontario in London. They are making their home in Toronto where the groom is continuing his studies at the University of Toronto.

Monroe-Barrows

Maxine Barrows, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Barrows of Denver, Colorado, and Richard Monroe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Don Monroe of Chariton, Iowa, were married August 21 in the Graceland College chapel. Dr. S. C. Barrows, uncle of the bride, officiated. They are making their home in Mt. Vernon, Washington.

DEATHS

SWINNEY.—Lily, was born January 22, 1872, and died August 12, 1949, at her home in Independence, Missouri. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on January 19, 1932, and had made her home in and around Independence for the past fifty years. Her husband, Richard G. Swinney, preceded her in death nineteen years ago, and two of her five children, Delbert and Claudia, died in infancy.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. Marcel Hughes of Kansas City, Missouri, and Mrs. Lela Willis of Los Angeles, California; a son, Clarence Swinney of Kansas City, Kansas; seven grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Glaude A. Smith at the George C. Carson Chapel. Interment was in Mount Washington Cemetery.

AKRIDGE.—James George, son of John and Sarah Jane Akridge, was born November 17, 1878, near Morrisville, Missouri, and died September 20, 1949, at the Baptist Hospital in Springfield, Missouri, after a brief illness. He was married to Leona Dysart on September 2, 1900. Four children were born to them. Following his first wife's death on July 16, 1914, he was married to Kate Mae Sparing on October 29, 1915; three children were born to this union. He was an employee of the Frisco Railroad for forty-seven years, retiring in 1946. He was a member of the Reorganized Church and Masonic Lodge.

He is survived by his wife Kate of the home; four sons: Hulm of Enid, Oklahoma; Orin of Cincinnati, Ohio; Dorsey of Montebello, California; and Jimmie of Springfield; three daughters: Mrs. Tom Whitman of Fillmore, California; Mrs. Ralph Roseberry and Ruth of Springfield; a sister, Mrs. Leland Morris of Springfield; ten grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren.

Funeral services were held on September 23. Elder Francis M. Bishop officiating. Interment was in the Greenlawn Cemetery.

GELATT.—Amelia, daughter of James and Elizabeth Montgomery Oaster, was born October 1, 1860, in Clay County, Missouri, and died July 8, 1949, at Mercy Hospital in Burlington, Iowa. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on November 17, 1884, and remained a faithful member the rest of her life. On September 30 1877, she was married to Charles Amos Gelatt. Mr. Gelatt and two daughters, Alice Willis and Ida Rabb, preceded her in death.

Surviving are three sons: John E. of Leon, Iowa; Harry E. of Delray Beach, Florida; and Gerald A. of Burlington; eight grandchildren; and nine great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Ft. Madison, Iowa, Elder W. H. Gunn officiating. Interment was in the Green Glade Cemetery at Farmington, Iowa.

MACKIE.—Olive Marie, was born January 25, 1885, in Maquoketa, Iowa, and died September 6, 1949. She was of hearty pioneer stock and spent many years in Minot, North Dakota. With her husband, she moved to California six years ago where she spent the remainder of her life. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for forty years.

She is survived by her husband, Clarence W. Mackie; a brother, Edward G. Briggs of Maquoketa; and a sister, Ethel L. Olmstead of Long Beach, California.

BLEDSOE.—William Newton, was born June 18, 1865, in Missouri, and died September 9, 1949, at his home in Washington, Oklahoma, after a year's illness. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 30, 1912.

He is survived by his wife, the former Elizabeth Melton; three daughters: Mrs. Viola Dean and Mrs. Mary Marcum of Washington, and Mrs. Naomi Stanton of Salinas, California; and four sons: Oscar H. of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; John O. of Turlock, California; Joseph A. and Tonnie P. of Bay City, Texas. Three daughters: Dollie Mae, Julia, and Jessie; and a son, William Newton, Jr., preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Church of Christ in Washington, Elders Wilson Huff and Guy Clossen of Oklahoma City officiating.

SHAFFER.—Mary Elcy, daughter of William and Augusta Steele, was born near Moorhead, Iowa, on October 8, 1884, and died September 10, 1949, at Gilroy, California. With her family she moved to California in 1892, for twelve years, then to Independence, Missouri, where she finished high school. She took a business course and one year at Graceland before returning to San Francisco in 1922. A member of the Danvers Street Branch in San Francisco, she served as leader of the women's department and religious education, a teacher, a member of the choir, and a counselor of young people. In 1934 she married Lorin B. Shaffer; their home will be remembered as a haven of rest for missionaries ministering in the San Francisco area.

Besides her husband she leaves four sisters: Mabel Ross of Gilroy; Gertrude Sessions of San Jose, California; Nellie Acker of Fresno, California; and Bertha Van Eaton of Pisgah, Iowa. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Eibert D. Guilbert. Interment was in the Gilroy cemetery.

BELL.—William H., son of John and Mary Bell, was born July 27, 1872, at Ayr, Canada, and died September 30, 1949, at Chicago, Illinois. In 1900 he moved to Kansas where in 1901 he married Hattie Knox; five children were born to them. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Central Branch in Chicago and was called to the office of deacon on June 21, 1916. On April 4, 1923, he was ordained a priest in which office he served as long as his health permitted.

He is survived by his wife, Hattie; four daughters: Freda, Hazel, and Lois Bell, and Mrs. Faye Keir; and one son, Bruce Allan of Pine Bluffs, Wyoming.

 FALL BEAUTY

For a few days in the spring and fall, the sun rises due east, and those who go to work at the right moment have the glorious illusion of riding on a path of gold up to the gates of heaven. On a recent morning there were mauve and purple mists in the east, hanging like stage curtains for the sun to make a dramatic entrance on this beautiful autumn day. It came out shining with a soft, translucent glow like a fluorescent light. On such a morning it is easy to give the bus driver a cheery greeting, smile at the other passengers, and settle down contentedly into a seat, happy to have a work to do and a place to serve.

 BLOWING OFF STEAM

At the little junction near our home where three rail lines met, there was a certain spot where the engineers halted their locomotives to blow the scale out of the boilers. The escaping steam made a roar that could be heard, in that quiet country air, for three miles or more. Where the condensing moisture fell, there was a lush green patch of grass that remained bright as an emerald through the hot summer, when all other grass was dry as tinder and the color of straw.

After the blowoff, the engines always began to move again with gentle little puffs. The pressure was down. There was something almost human about it.

How often you have heard someone say, hearing another person speak angrily, "Oh, he's just blowing off steam!" Minor frustrations and small annoyances build up a pressure area in the personality that needs to be relieved. The trouble is that in "blowing off" we scald our friends, hurt those we love, and make enemies. We need a "blowing-off place" where we can regain control of ourselves and turn with serene face and soul to the world again. In that place, with no other human being near, we can return to normal. Then we can even smile at ourselves and be amused at how funny we are.

Remember Dagwood—one of the few entertaining characters left among all the dull, humorless creation in the "comic" strips. When things at home are too hard to bear, he bows his head, covers his eyes with his arm, and prays, "Give me strength!" It is the best thing Dagwood ever does. He has the right idea.

When we must relieve our feelings, it is good to take them to God, before whom we can see how small our troubles really are. Seeing them so little, we can laugh again, and I have sometimes thought that God himself must be smiling with us, too.

 "THE MANSION HOUSE"

A note in the recent historical issue of the "Herald" commented on the name of the Mansion House at Nauvoo, and noted that there is an older building in Stratford, Ontario, by that name. We also inquired if there were other examples. Mrs. H. L. May kindly replies, "Here in the town of Little Current, Ontario, on the Manitoulin Island, we have a hotel named Mansion House." It is interesting and of some value to church people to know that other instances of the use of the name are to be found.

Without Blame

THERE IS EVIDENCE to indicate that in many states and countries the spirit of gambling is on the increase among men and women. This spirit is being fostered in many subtle ways. Many of the gift enterprizes and drawings used in advertising have lottery features which bring them into conflict with the law. A lottery is a species of gambling which contains three elements: prize, consideration, and chance.

Many civic groups, lodges, patriotic organizations, and churches are using such means to raise funds for their worthy purposes; however, there is a deep-seated prejudice extending over the years against the vice of gambling. Just recently the Attorney General of Missouri, J. E. Taylor, ruled that bingo or "keno" violates the anti-gambling laws.

The elders were admonished years ago "to be without blame in word and deed" (Doctrine and Covenants 119:3). It is doubtful that any of our branches are troubled by those wanting to operate these games of chance; however, it is highly probable that a great many of our members might give encouragement to the gambling craze by the purchase of lottery tickets. This certainly is aiding and abetting the vice and comes under the divine injunction above quoted. Good intentions by civic groups and church people do not justify those who urge this as the easiest means to raise funds.

Latter Day Saints should avoid the temptation to "take a chance" even at the risk of displeasing some of their friends who are not as ethical as they should be in supporting the spirit and letter of state and national laws against gambling. America did not become the leading farming and industrial nation on the "something for nothing" basis. The sturdy character of its friendly citizens is blighted by that practice.

News & Notes

SAMUEL LEE ILL

Apostle C. R. Hield advised by air mail letter dated October 18 that Elder Samuel A. Lee, a local missionary in Honolulu, has been hospitalized with a brain hemorrhage. Our prayers are earnestly solicited.

MESSIAH BROADCAST

Music Director Franklyn S. Weddle announces that the nationwide broadcast of the "Messiah" to be sponsored by the church will be over the CBS network on Sunday evening, December 18. It will be an hour-and-a-half broadcast. Soloists and exact time will be announced later.

MANUSCRIPTS FOR EUROPE

Albert Scherer, recently returned from Holland, is nearing completion of a manuscript of a year's series of lessons on the primary level, one each for Holland and Germany. Minor revisions are made in lessons published in English to fit the local situations of each country. There are fifty-six lessons divided into four sections in this children's book. The four sections are (1) The Life and Ministry of Jesus, (2) Beliefs of Our Church, (3) Qualities of Good Followers of Jesus, and (4) The History of the Church. These two manuscripts are about ready to send to Germany and to Holland for translation. They are to be translated by members of our church who are highly specialized in that field. They then are proofread by three other members. Brother Scherer himself goes over the Holland manuscripts to see if idioms are carried into the translation accurately. In the children's book there will be pictures from church history to accompany that section. Pictures can be obtained locally in the two countries to illustrate the section on the life and ministry of Jesus.

GROUND-BREAKING AT LAMONI

Citizens and Saints of Lamoni joined for a momentous occasion in Lamoni on Sunday afternoon, October 16. It was the ground-breaking ceremony to begin the work on the new church. Lamoni has been without a church for eighteen years to house the 1,000 Saints who live there and the 500 college students who come to Graceland. Apostle E. J. Gleazer represented the first presidency as a guest for the occasion. Apostle Paul Hanson turned the first spadeful of dirt. The service was attended by several hundred people, many of whom turned spadefuls of dirt after the formal ceremony was over. The ground-breakers besides Apostle Hanson were Walter N. Johnson, representing the Presiding Bishopric; Robert Farnham and Lewis Landsberg, the stake; Thelma Silsby, the branch; Jay Barr, the pioneers; David Kaleikau, the college; J. F. Jeffries, friends of the church; and Willard Moon, the building committee. Robert Farnham, stake president; Roy A. Cheville, member of the building committee, and Lewis Landsberg, stake bishop, presided over the several portions of the program. On Monday morning the bulldozers went to work to really begin moving dirt.

OFFICIALS IN THE WEST

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp left Sunday, October 16, for three weeks in the Northwest with Apostle C. G. Mesley. They will minister in the four northwestern districts in company with the district officers.

Leaves From a Shepherd's Notebook

"The Lord . . . hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted." —Isaiah 61: 1.

Write in a Book

The favorite text of all authors should be, "What thou seest, write in a book."—Revelation 1: 11. How faithfully, ever since the days of Gutenberg, they have been obeying that commandment.

Since the Book of Revelation is true, the courts of heaven have officers appointed among the angels whose duty it is to keep a careful written record of all the major concerns of our spiritual life. If the keeping of books is good for the angels, why not for us?

Some of the world's greatest people have been diligent keepers of diaries, prolific writers of letters. Genius is early always articulate in some way. There are quiet ones of course, but people of talent are expressive, sometimes a little noisy, occasionally a nuisance to the neighbors. Life would be very dull if people didn't talk and write.

Robert Louis Stevenson, a famed Scottish author of the last century, told in a biographical note that when he went walking, which he often did, he always took two books with him, "One to read in, and one to write in." Out of the voluminous notes made on such pedestrian excursions, he later elaborated the fascinating plots, the interesting characters, and the gracious literary style of his romances.

It has been said that "Every life contains at least one book." Every such book ought to be written. That does not mean that it should be published.

How about the book of your life? Are you writing it? Or are you leaving all the work for some small, meek angel, toiling in the vast archives of heaven, perhaps suffering from writer's cramp?

The Shepherd

One of the most beautiful ideas in all Scripture comes to us from the tenth chapter of the Gospel of John—the picture of the Good Shepherd. Christ is the Good Shepherd who loves and serves his people. And everyone who engages in the work of the ministry is a shepherd, too. What else should we be but shepherds?

It was Brother E. P. Darnell of Warrensburg who combined these two great ideas—the writing of a book and the work of the shepherd—into one purpose.

"The shepherd ought to pray for people," said Brother Darnell. "He may forget some of them, so he should write their names in a book, look at the list often, and remember them. As he goes about his work, good thoughts will come to him which he can write in his book to share with these people. He should write letters to them." Brother Darnell generally fills up some such little book in the course of a year, and on January 1 begins a new one.

Every name in that book represents some kind of personal or spiritual problem, and the owner of it usually needs help—a shepherd's help. The name does not come out until its owner is converted, comforted, or restored to peace, fellowship, and good will.

Memories

I try to remember, in my daily affairs, the spirit of the text that I put down on page one of my own shepherd's book. It is quoted at the beginning of this editorial: "The Lord . . . hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted." So many people are hurt in life, so many bewildered and lost, so many wounded. The shepherd is called to help and to heal. It is harder to remember that than you imagine. If you think it's easy, try it. My score is rather low. How is yours?

My own little book is a loose-leaf thing from the dime store, though it cost more than that. It has 3"x5" sheets. Besides the names and addresses of my "sheep," it contains Scriptures and themes for use in prayer meetings and Communion services, sermon topics, a list of all our local church officers and their phone numbers, a church calendar, Communion prayers, sick persons to visit, quotations, et cetera.

Experiences

I have some experiences noted in that book, too, which have been useful to me on many an occasion. There was the time when I was warned to make special preparation for an evening sermon. That night a storm put the lights out, and I had to preach in total darkness. God prepared me for that emergency.

There was the time, away back in the depression years, when it was a fashion for our ministers (I think they got it from the sectarians) to preach scolding, critical sermons, a kind of self-flagellation. And I thought I had to imitate them. One Sunday I was called to preach to a congregation that had been hit hard—how hard I did not know until I sat on the platform looking at them, with the outline of my critical sermon burning a hole in my pocket. I saw the sufferings of those people, the malnutrition of children, the want of the mothers, the despair in the faces of the fathers. I felt condemned, and a wave of remorse

Expanding Our Welfare Work

For a number of years there has been carried on in Independence a project which has been referred to as the Commodity Shop or Campus Shop. This has been developed under the auspices of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, directed by the local bishop and an organization of women in Zion. This work has expanded and has grown rapidly in recent years under the able leadership of Sister Ethel Rowland. It has reached a point where the present quarters in the Campus building are inadequate.

This project was at one time carried on in a corner of the Auditorium before the space was converted into offices for general officers; then it was moved to the basement of Bartholomew Hall, and finally to the Campus building where now each Tuesday over 125 women work together in many diverse activities ranging from salvaging of small pieces of clothing to making beautiful quilts, rugs, hats, and repairing of furniture, et cetera.

Many of our members have had the opportunity of seeing the moving picture which graphically portrays the activities of this group.

These women work in crowded quarters under conditions that are not the best, and it has been a matter of concern to those of us who have been in close touch with this project. We were glad therefore to have the opportunity recently to acquire a building located on Liberty Street in Independence, which we are sure will meet the needs for this welfare work for many years to come.

This building has a basement and a main floor approximately 82 x 164 feet in size with small office space on the second floor at the front part of the building. It is of concrete construction and therefore has a minimum of fire hazard.

The work that has been done by this group of women in past years has been of great value to the church. Through it, clothing has been supplied for shipment to Europe, the needs of worthy poor have been met, and a community service has been rendered to many other people of limited means. As we look forward to the next General Conference, we are sure that many of our people will be delighted to visit this plant to see evidence of the progress made in recent years.

Comparative Statement of General Church Income for First Eight Months, 1948 and 1949

	1948	1949	Gain or (Loss)
January	$127,693.99	$147,928.49	$ 20,234.50
February	106,159.28	105,070.09	(1,089.19)
March	82,942.45	87,931.32	4,988.87
April	75,303.15	83,542.28	8,239.13
May	78,055.03	72,177.66	(5,877.37)
June	79,502.20	63,925.78	(15,576.42)
July	62,837.97	76,336.83	13,498.86
August	69,936.63	62,457.49	(7,479.14)
	$682,430.70	$699,369.94	$ 16,939.24

WE ARE GLAD to submit the above statement, showing a continuation of the favorable trend of income for the first eight months of this year, as compared with the first eight months of 1948.

However, it is to be noted that there are some minor adjustments affecting income from our missions abroad which would reduce the net gain almost enough to make the 1948 and 1949 income the same. This adjustment arises out of reports from Australia and Great Britain which were not included in comparative figures for 1948.

We sincerely trust that it will be possible to increase the income for the following months of this year beyond that received for 1948, due to the fact that our budgetary expenses have increased considerably.

We wish to express our appreciation to the Saints and to our general church representatives who make this fine showing possible.

Respectfully submitted,

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

By G. L. DeLapp.

Across the Desk

From Seventy Glen H. Johnson, Rotterdam, October 6, 1949:

We are nicely settled in Rotterdam and are trying to get the necessary things done. We like the tone and spirit of these people in the Netherlands (not Holland, because Holland is just one of the eleven provinces in the Netherlands) and have enjoyed working with the members of the church.

I have been teaching a priesthood class, preaching on Sundays, and helping out generally within the Rotterdam area. Starting one week from Sunday, I begin a week's series of meetings at the church. Then the following week I go to Enfield Branch in England for five weeks, and will attend the Southern District conference at Nuneaton. Brother Jensen will be on the continent and will do the preaching at the conference.

We left many fine friends in England and liked the work there very much. We are glad, now that we are settled in Rotterdam, that we can make new friends and attempt to minister in any way to these good people. The Lord has blessed us richly in our work, and it hardly seems possible that two years have passed since we left the shores of America. What a grand experience we have had!

Crisis Is Always - By PRESIDENT E. J. GLEAZER, JR.

Convocation Address given at Graceland College on September 15, 1949.

THIS MORNING we assemble together as a company of learners to give formal and ritualistic expression to our common quest for truth. There are time-honored customs such as the academic procession which serve a useful function in reminding us of the discipline of mind, the undergirding motivations, and the sacrificial efforts contributing to such achievement as is represented in the symbolism of the gown and hood. And to the Graceland faculty, I pay tribute for not only professional qualification but also the wholesomeness of personality that characterizes the true teacher.

It has been suggested to me that an appropriate theme for this morning's convocation would be "Crisis." I believe it has been recommended by the home-coming committee that in this way a beginning would be made toward the home-coming theme, "To Answer to the Hour."

Those who know me realize that I have no more favorite topic than "crisis," but the older I grow the more I wonder as to the true nature of crisis. Crisis as thought of in a serious illness is the turning point—crisis in a social situation appears to be the point at which a decision is made.

But picture for a moment a child in the water, crying for help and struggling. You are standing on the dock. Is that the critical moment in your life, or was the critical moment that summer five years ago when you neglected the opportunity of learning to swim? For you football players is the critical moment that ten yards to go off tackle for a touchdown, or was it that early fall afternoon when you carelessly played at learning to block? For you who missed an eight o'clock class because you overslept this morning, is the missing of the class the critical moment or the three months of the summer when there was no reason to use an alarm clock? How can we clearly identify the critical incident, the turning point, the time of decision?

I HAVE BEEN in the land of the living for thirty-three years. Born in 1916—was that a critical year? Grew up during the 20's—was that a critical period? Experienced a depression in 1930-31-32—were those critical times? Out of college in June, 1938—spent Labor Day week end in 1939 hearing newsboys cry something about the German army being on the move—was that a critical time?

Two conclusions are maturing in my mind—first, crisis is always, and second, crisis is not in the circumstances—a drowning child, an opportunity for a touchdown, a missed class—the crisis is not in the circumstances but how we interpret and react to those circumstances. In other words, the crisis is always, and the crisis is in us. The stuff out of which we respond to any situation is in the eternal process of building, and here we have the heart of crisis. We are each day, each hour making deposits in a bank of character and skills upon which we some day shall wish to write a check. Will the statement at the end of the month have in red figures "account overdrawn"? Or worse still, will the check bounce because there are no funds to cover?

Who can say then when a moment is critical to us? Our decisions may be made years before the actual moment of crisis appears to arise—decisions made in the fiber of our being, in the deposits we have made. I can't decide to save a drowning person if I can't swim. I can't decide to think a thought if the mind has had no exercise. There are prerequisites to life's greatest courses.

President Israel A. Smith and President Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., pause at the cornerstone of the Graceland Administration building. President Smith is a former student of Graceland College and posed for this picture during an inspection tour of the new developments on the campus.

Consider the significance therefore that attaches to every act, every decision and the need to utilize every moment, for no act is isolated from its sequence—no act stands alone. It is inseparably connected with every act which has gone before, and it shapes the acts to follow. No moment is apart from time before and time to come. We are the sum total, then, at any particular time of what has gone before. Can't you see that we are not preparing for the fight? This is the fight itself. We are not preparing for life. We are living. And whatever we shall be, we are now becoming.

GREAT OCCASIONS do not make heroes or cowards; they simply unveil them to the eyes of men. Silently and imperceptibly, as we wake or sleep, we grow strong or weak; and at last some crisis shows us what we have become—thus spoke one man of insight. We are saying that those moments of silent and imperceptible growth are the real soul of crisis.

The crisis is not in the circumstances but how we react to the circumstances. How we can react is dependent upon how we have utilized all of life's critical moments and experiences. And here we come to the true nature of education. Our field of choice and of action is defined by the experiences and the personalities to which I have related myself. The function of education is to widen and deepen the possibilities of choice. A large body of water gives greater freedom of navigation; you can go more places on it than on a small body of water. A deep body of water further increases possibilities by making it possible for larger vessels to sail. You can't sail the Queen Mary up a creek. And you can't build a great democratic community with people whose minds are shallow as a rippling brook and narrow as a pasture stream.

I can't decide to play a Chopin piano solo—I can't decide to read a novel in the German language—I can't decide to build a house—I can't decide to discuss the political situation in China. In these areas I have no knowledge, therefore I am powerless to make a decision; and inasmuch as I cannot make a decision, I forfeit the possibilities of growth. The inmate of a prison is given little opportunity for choice; the ignorant man has little opportunity for choice. We cannot choose to do that which we are incapable of doing, and in limiting the field in which we can choose, we limit just that much our possibility to grow. Education broadens the field of decisions and thereby contributes to the growth of the person. Education is to set men free on broad plains. Ignorance is a chasm with confining walls.

We are here to share in the life-building process of education. We are here to expand the base upon which a greater range of intelligent movement is possible. There are not important and unimportant moments, significant and insignificant experiences. Every moment and every act is critical, a turning point, a deciding incident.

Education then becomes more than a "journey in a closed car rushing through a dark tunnel, with nothing of value except the destination. It is more akin to a long health-giving sea voyage in good company, in which both the passage and the ports of call give satisfaction."

CRISIS IS ALWAYS. Crisis is in us. The Chinese character for crisis is made up of two symbols—one representing danger and the other opportunity. Every moment of our lives, every incident in our experience, is a molecule made up of those two atoms, danger and opportunity.

Our lives have their setting in a time of great opportunity and danger. And our college community does not exist in a vacuum. It must breathe of the larger atmosphere of man's concerns or there is no life in it. May I charge you then at the beginning of Graceland's fifty-fifth year to see in every moment of your experience here the excitement, significance, danger, and opportunity of crisis. Our communities, our nations, the church have no greater need than for a citizen afire with the thrill of life and the conviction that every moment can and must count to the good. This is the stewardship way of life, and to this cause we dedicate our efforts.

swept over me. Those people needed the love of God, not a scolding. While the hymns and prayers were going on, I prayed for help and selected another text. By the time the "special number" was finished, I was ready. We were all blessed together, and I decided then and there never to preach another scolding sermon but always to give the people something constructive to do.

There was the time when a member unknown to me stopped me on the street to pour out a flood of criticism and denunciation against church people. I kept quiet until he ran down, when, instead of answering him, some inspiration led me to ask him a question, "Brother, are you happy?" Tears filled his eyes as he replied, "I am the most miserable man in the world!" Then I told him, "Brother, you need to get back to God. Come back to church and start all over again." He did, and I have seen happiness and peace come to him.

Such things make up a shepherd's book, and many more. I think we are called to be shepherds to the people. I believe in the love and mercy of God. I have seen his healing power at work with his children. I have learned that he blesses members of the ministry when they serve the people. How many a needed blessing I have received while I was bending my head to pray for others!

"The Lord . . . hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted." God, correct and forgive us if we ever forget that. L. J. L.

I Wanted to Go to Europe

By Dr. ROY A. CHEVILLE

IN THE MAIN we plan ever so much for journeys of consequence. Sometimes the traveler dreams and studies for years and years. He has to have some idea about what to look for. He has to have some background to appreciate what he sees. There is a vast difference between covering miles and enjoying landscapes. There is a great span between gazing at persons of other cultures as oddities or as ways of life to be understood. The story is told of a group of college globe-trotters who were listing the several European cities they had visited. Mixed with this was a limited mention of college subjects. At a turn of conversation someone mentioned algebra, "Oh, yes," piped up one rapid-transit traveler, "I've been there, but we went through in the dark, and I didn't get much of it." It is likely the comment might hold for this youth's cities as well as his subjects. Let's say that it takes "a heap o' livin'" in advance of a journey.

Childhood Geography Talked

In the little Iowa rural school, the geography books were old and soiled, but they did have pictures. Those scenes stirred something in me. I can recall now pictures of the tower of London's House of Parliament, the Arch of Triumph of Paris, and the Peace Palace at The Hague. Some teachers must have had the imagination to make these places come alive, for even as a lad I dared to wonder if I should see them. Now I like to ask children and youth where they would like to travel—and why.

This geography came alive one day when "Uncle George," my mother's brother, and his three sons, stopped at our home as they were arriving from England. They did not sound as we do when they talked. They held their eating tools differently. I saw here the cultural differences and somehow sensed it was not a matter of right and wrong—they had different ways. Years later sociology was to expand this simple idea. And this idea is indispensable to any who move in and out among other peoples. The dream arose then in my juvenile outlook that just as these lads of my age came to America, so some day I could go to Europe. That idea was never lost.

Then a Missionary Made a Visit

My first contacts with Latter Day Saints came when I was fifteen. My baptism took place a year later. But I had experienced a missionary spirit much earlier than this. My sisters and I attended the Sunday school of the Christian Church (Disciples). One day a missionary from China visited the church and spoke to the boys and girls in the afternoon. In her Chinese gown she told us very feelingly of her work. She sang a song in Chinese. I believe there was an offering then, but the thing that stood out was her invitation to us to become missionaries some day. The idea remained with me that these faraway people needed so much the message of Christianity, and that anyone who had anything to share should do so. That day I said to myself that some day I would be a missionary. Later, even as a young man, I smiled at my early resolution; the idea would not be completely dispelled. The yen to see other places received a new boost, with an added maturation.

When I recall some of these happenings in my early life, I remember some of the dreams that stirred within me—dreams I would not share lest others think me foolish. I wonder what is rising up in the minds of hearers as I try to tell them of my travels. Perhaps some boy or girl is building hopes of going to distant places. I realize that today this is increasingly possible. Our travel across oceans will likely become as commonplace as automobile travel across the continent. I see all this as having great significance for the future of our church. Traveling now becomes imperative.

Missions Come Nearer

In 1919 I joined the first class in Religious Education at Graceland College. The church was moving into a larger field of missionary operations. Leaders asked me to get ready to go to Norway. I consented readily, but a siege of typhoid cut off that year of college. The next year I returned to the campus. This time leaders asked me to qualify in Spanish. Ere the year was over, the plans of operation had been changed. So I never went to Spain or South America. Later on I was advised in prophetic counsel that I should remain at the home bases and set myself to the development of youth who would go into the frontier fields. I learned that many of us would be supplying the home line of support.

In the fall of 1946 I was in the office of the late president of the church. He brought a letter he thought would interest me. It stirred me. It was the first word that had come from the Dutch Saints since the opening of the war. The idea

Music and the Church - By ROY BENSON

A presentation to the Graceland College congregation in the series, "The Church and the Arts." Roy Benson is an instructor in theory in the department of music of the college.

MUSIC IS ONE of the fine arts. It is nothing more than human experience expressed through the medium of sound. It is probably the best known of the arts and, in some way or other, almost everyone has been exposed to it.

Michelangelo, the great artist of the Renaissance, said, "a true work of any art is but a shadow of divine perfection." Such is my approach to music. Divinity, or God, to me means "goodness." All things which are good, therefore, are created by God and given to us. Much of what God has given us has been given to us through man. God works through people, and in this he has been no respecter of persons, creeds, or mediums of human expression. Great contributions rise out of sacrificial effort. Music is of this nature.

Good Music Is Born Out of Sacrifice

In the field of religion we think readily of many who made sacrifices for a cause they thought worthwhile: Stephen, Paul the Apostle, St. Frances of Assisi, Luther, Wickliffe, and Joseph Smith are a few. In other fields we find similar men willing to make sacrifices to bring about a "goodness," so that the world might be more wonderful and a better place in which to live. Most of the fine music we have has been bought for us through the sweat and tears of men willing to give themselves that others might benefit. The study of music has helped me to realize that most things worth-while have been purchased by a great deal of human suffering and sacrifice.

Franz Schubert, a great Austrian composer, lived but thirty-one years. He wrote over 600 songs and numerous instrumental compositions.

He heard not one of his eight symphonies performed. He could have been more successful if he had "played ball," but he chose to join other men of letters who, suffering from the chains of bourgeois contentment, fled into their own sphere of art in which they could express their bold and revolutionary ideas freely. As a result, this man helped build the bridges that enabled those who came after him to reach new horizons. He died a poor man, but he left a priceless gift to humanity. His music is free and full of the natural solemnity of unspoiled idealism. Yet, we accept this miracle of a musician as only natural. Such men often die young to give us something of worth.

Great Music Requires Convictions

Music has helped me realize that convictions are necessary if one is to make a contribution. In all fields of human endeavor, we find men with convictions. In science we could mention Galileo who was branded by the pope as a heretic and was sentenced to the dungeons because he refused to deny his teachings. In the fields of literature, medicine, and education, we find similar people; and in the field of music, there have been those also who had convictions.

Verdi, an Italian composer of the nineteenth century, was exiled from his native land for a good many years because he used his influence to help the movement for the unification of Italy. Beethoven, in order to accomplish his ideals, gave up his position in the service of the aristocracy. It was the custom of the nobility in Europe to engage a court musician. The musician had to write his music to please the ones for whom he worked. Beethoven had such a position, but he chose not to be bound by ties which would prevent him from writing as he wanted. He gave up his position and faced the world as an individual, often opposing it. He blazed new trails and formulated new points of view. He became known as the man who freed music and, instead of writing for entertainment, he composed music that became documents of art which knew neither social nor national boundaries. He could have led a life of ease and popularity, but his convictions would not permit him to do so.

Music Embodies the Good Life

Good music has characteristics similar to a good life. Such words as harmony, balance, design, purpose, restraint, imagination, and variety come to mind. If one is to enjoy living, he must understand the things that make life worth-while. And the same is true when one re-creates a piece of music. Re-creating is not imitating. We confuse them sometimes. In drama and music, re-creating plays a very important part, and much can be learned of life from this phase of art.

The arts do not segregate themselves from life. I was giving a piano lesson not so long ago and, after playing the composition through for the student, he remarked, "Brahms must have been a happy man to write something like that." That composition was a real part of the composer's life.

Studying the arts helps to create a good sense of values. One has to learn to acquire a taste for good music or good anything. We can read good literature or the comic book, see a good movie or a poor one, get interested in wholesome forms of physical exercise or play the pinball machine. The problem of choice is not so much choosing between good and evil as it is between first best, second best, and third best.

I believe we can develop a good sense of values if we attain a certain amount of proficiency in some field. It takes perseverance and consistency to become proficient, and nobody learns this more than one who has to perform in public. As we listen to artists perform, I wonder if we realize how much preparation it took and how much sacrifice on the part of others. One can't bluff his way through performances.

This past year Mr. Deaver and I decided to prepare a duo-piano recital. We started from scratch because neither one of us had ever learned any duo-piano repertoire. I averaged about three hours practice a day for approximately 150 days. This amounted to 450 hours or nineteen twenty-four-hour days. Our program lasted one hour and fifteen minutes. From this phase of music one learns to develop regular habits of study, something about regimentation, budgeting time, standards of values, personal satisfaction in being challenged, and the pleasure of giving.

Proficiency Out of Practice

I had a student who practiced the required number of hours to receive an hour credit in piano. She was a capable student, but she consistently had a poor lesson prepared. I finally found out why. She took her lesson on Wednesday, and she did all her practicing on Saturday. I explained to her why it wasn't a good procedure. I asked her, "What if you ate all your meals on Saturday to last you until Wednesday?" She gave me a womanly answer by saying, "I would lose weight." I said, "That's true, but wouldn't you become sick?" She said, "Oh, no, the only time I get sick is when I take a piano lesson." She didn't know it, but that's when I felt sick, too. I mention this incident because too many times we don't make the necessary preparation to insure good performance. One cannot be a good Christian through practicing Christian principles irregularly or spasmodically.

Half-educated people do not seem to be sensitive to the difference between good and poor workmanship or between artistic sincerity and insincerity. Standards of value in the arts have been set by the knowing ones. For this reason, it is generally found that people working in the arts have been good. I believe that in selecting our preferences, we pass judgment on ourselves. The commonplaces are rated high because they are the average. If we ground our faith in the difference between the best and the commonplace, we will have a faith which grows stronger with the increase of knowledge. Human progress is something we help determine everyday in the choices we make.

Music Can Enrich Daily Living

I do not think that music is the only thing in the world. It means much to me because it is my vocation, and as such I have a responsibility to teach others. Many people will study some form of music without making it a profession. That is as it should be. We strive to broaden our outlook by getting acquainted with the various fields of human endeavor; in so doing we broaden our understanding of life's essential problems. We need to specialize, but we also need to know what the other three fourths of the world has given us. We need not only a technical education but also a liberal education. The well-developed person is at home in the wealth of music.

In my study of music there have been pleasant experiences and ones not so pleasant. I can remember the time when I turned the clock up ten or fifteen minutes—the folks used to wonder why the clock gained so—and later there were times when I wished I could have turned the clock back because there were not enough hours in the day. I can never forget the many fine people who encouraged me and made it possible for me to get the means and teachers necessary. I can't forget some of the teachers I had. I learned to respect their ability, and they made me feel that they were more interested in teaching me than they were in collecting their lesson fees. When money was scarce, they gave me lessons anyway.

Our church will express her message in music only as she has competency and willingness for making artistic expression of high quality. We need stewards who can speak the language and stewards who can listen as we move upward.

Upon the Promised Land - By S. A. Burgess

THE HYMN, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah," appears to be based on the theme and music of an old Welsh hymn but revised to meet Latter Day Saint hymnology. There is an interesting aspect in that it was originally written in the land of Zion and published in The Evening and the Morning Star in 1832. But it did not then read as we sing it now. The original begins: "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah, Saints upon the promised land."

They were already there and felt the need of divine guidance upon the land of Zion. It was so printed, after they had been driven out of Jackson County, in Emma Smith's Collection of Hymns published in 1835 and used in the Kirtland Temple. In 1841 this collection was much enlarged and published in Nauvoo. Then when Emma Smith came to the Amboy Conference in April, 1860, she also was received upon her original baptism and appointed to make another collection of hymns. This still larger collection was published in 1861, and an appendix was added in 1864. In all these publications the hymn read "upon the promised land."

But in 1870, when the Saints' Harp was published, the change was made. The Saints had long been away and desired to return, so the wording was changed to "unto the promised land."

The thought is very different. In the latter case it may have been taken to mean that all we needed was to get to the promised land. There has been some such thought—that to gather was the only thing needed—to get to a place called Zion. Such ideas have never been approved by our leaders, and the late Joseph Smith was repeatedly active to refute any such thought. Saints upon the promised land need the guidance of God to make that land a Zion indeed, the pure in heart.

The Campus Shop Grows Up

By SADI MOON NAGEL

EACH TUESDAY MORNING a hundred or more women climb the stairway of the Campus Shop to the second floor for a half-hour worship service. This is the fitting beginning of each workday. Following a prayer dedicating the work they do, there is a short talk and some worshipful music; then the business is taken care of. The treasurer makes a monthly report, and the secretary makes a weekly report of interesting facts and happenings of the past week. Mrs. Ethel Rowland, manager, presides. Then the ladies go to their own departments to work for the Lord.

A tour of the rooms proves to the visitor that space is a most precious item—and in that place everything is precious, even scraps one inch square, even old shoes, old bottles—everything. Through the artistry of many, something is produced from almost nothing.

Many of the workers there are women over sixty. The rooms are so crowded that the women who work in the stock department must wear their coats and work on the porch. There isn't an elevator to carry these workers up to the third or fourth floor—and it is indeed a sacrificial effort for many to climb the stairs.

But imagine the work they do once they find their places in the beehive! All material, from furniture to hats, comes to the shop at the south entrance. Furniture stays there, under an unwallied projected drive, open to the elements. The other things are carried into the sorting room on the basement floor. On Tuesday morning sorting-room workers put the materials into the bins labeled—car rags, laundry, household items, woolsens to be washed, cottons, shoes, junk. From there it goes to any one of fifteen rooms, depending on what it is and the condition it is in.

APPROACHING the huge red mid-Victorian structure and going up the winding drive, you would think, "Why this is an excellent place for repair and welfare work. There must be plenty of room." But the first thing you notice as you step up on the porch is an enclosed portion around to the side.

"That was supposed to be the stock room," Mrs. Rowland explains, "but look." As you step into the little room, you see pasteboard boxes stacked to the ceiling, all neatly labeled, "Women's Coats, 1949," "Girl's skirts, 1949,"

"Men's suits and vests, 1949." And on, and on. There's a stove for heating and a table down under the many such boxes.

"These items should be on display," you're told. "People are in the sales-room now, looking for something in their size but may not be able to find it there. We probably have scores of that item here, but we have no room to display them."

And this is just one of several stock rooms. You're invited to view the others, mostly improvised by tacked-on rooms, walled-in porches, or cupolas. "We've spent $750 improvising shelter to give added inches of space."

Now the salesrooms. Squeezed into a little room that has a huge fireplace are a couple of clothes racks and a counter for babies and children's clothes. Mrs. Rowland points to the crowds of women handling the garments. "You see, it's impossible to keep it neat. And we need four times the space to display the garments we have. People probably can't find what they want because it's in some box. And look at these racks." You notice they are overcrowded. The garments are good—some are hand-tailored in the shop upstairs—but they all look as if they need pressing.

"We have no dry-cleaning plant. If we had one, it would increase the value of our garments by one third. And besides, every person who buys here needs something more than merely to cover his body. There's a psychological need. High school girls who are limited in funds must be as neatly and stylishly dressed as those who have more to work with. Those in poverty need to look nice. It's one of the best ways to establish the self-confidence of a person, as any woman knows." That is one of Mrs. Rowland's strongest beliefs.

There's another little room for girls and junior misses' clothing. The three racks are overcrowded, and "there should be twelve racks or more." So it is for the women's suits, coats, and dresses, the men's wear, the shoes.

YOU WALK through a narrow hallway where the checking counter is. Careful record is kept of all sales. Just because a dress is sold for fifty cents, such an item is not overlooked as being unimportant. Mrs. Rowland says, "We make it as Zioniac as possible. We list the price on a garment, but if a prospective buyer can't afford it, we'll reduce the price; if he has no money at all, we'll give it to him."

Across the hall from the checking counters there are glassed-in bookcases, remnants of a past era when a private library graced the shelves. Today, in stacks, you can see scores of hand-braided, crocheted, and hooked rugs, and many pieces of beautiful handwork, all for sale.

Mrs. Rowland looks sad. "We have so many beautiful things for sale, but who will see them here? This is just a small amount of what we do have. Let me show you." And this energetic little woman leads you to a closet. Here are comforters, the tops pieced with bright wool or corduroy, batted with wool, and backed with outing flannel. There must be sixty of them hidden away, for there's no place to show them so that those who need them can buy. The smell of moth balls blows past your face as the door swings shut.

In another closet are piles of beautiful woven rugs, hand tied—but no place to show them. The rugs are made from strips of cotton, wound in balls by the patient hands of those who can't see to quilt or sew. One woman has wound over 1,500 balls of cotton strips ready for the five rug looms on the third floor.

Other closets are full of supplies and finished products. There are two quilting rooms, but there is only one quilt in one. "We had to push the workers out, because we needed the space for storage." And Mrs. Rowland points to scores of those same pasteboard boxes stacked high.

Each workroom needs storage space for its supplies. When the Campus Shop workers order carpet warp they get one hundred dollars worth at a time. In the hooked rug department, the finest sweaters are raveled and the colored yarn is wound in balls and placed in boxes on shelves ready for use. The quilt and blanket sales room has had to turn into storage space for the 150 to 200 quilt tops ready to be made into quilts. Storage space—the crying need!

Someone asks Mrs. Rowland, "Should not you have a public sale and get rid of some of this?" But she kindly reminds him that there were the days of Egypt when there was famine. "It isn't bad to store things," she says. "And we won't have most of these fine articles on hand when the public knows they are here. When we have our new building—"

Our Lamanites - By HUBERT CASE

EXPERT WORKERS give their time freely to this good venture of serving others. The Campus Shop once spent $500 sending some of its women to schools in Kansas City for tailoring, millinery, and sewing.

"And we are prepared now to give free lessons in any of these arts, plus rug-weaving, hooking, braiding, and handwork to any woman who wants to learn, free of charge. My heart aches," says Mrs. Rowland, "to find that sewing is a lost art. A young woman who needed clothes for herself and her children came in recently. I offered her the material without charge to make her children all the clothes they needed, but she had never sewed a thing in her life. Our Latter Day Saint young women should see to it that they are never left without the ability to perform these home duties. We don't know when we will need them in our homes and need them desperately."

When these trained workers are not giving lessons, they are working feverishly, making things to sell or give away. On the third floor of the building is a large sunny room. Sixteen sewing machines are all busy. There is a long cutting table, a pattern cupboard, a button machine, a fancy-work corner. Off the room in one walled-in addition there are shelves of woolen rolls. Garments have been ripped up, washed, mangled, rolled, and then sent up to the sewing department for reshaping into new garments. But the sewing room isn't big enough, nor are there enough workers.

Men work at the Campus Shop too. They are needed for carrying things, and some men have special jobs. Mr. Lewellyn White has spent fifty-two years as a cloth cutter and today stands with his patterns and sharp knives cutting woolen pieces for quilts. He makes the knife handles and the cutting boards himself from beautiful woods, carefully and masterfully fashioned. There is Brother Harvey Pratt. He and his wife have a cozy apartment in the building and are there all the time. When anyone brings something to the Campus Shop, Mr. Pratt is there to take care of it.

THERE'S ONE INTERESTING rule of Campus Shop behavior. When the women began to work there a few years ago, the leaders realized that there would be many of them and that sometimes women in groups are given to gossip. They made it a rule that there shall be no gossip and no open criticism. Mrs. Rowland says she will listen to any criticism any individual wants to offer privately, but in this building the demeanor of the women shall be Zionitic.

And it has brought dividends. Women,

THE PRESENT CALL of the Lamanites should not go unheeded. The head chief of the Otoes, living near Perry, Oklahoma, says, "If you will now come and prosecute the work among us, we will turn from our old Indian religion, and all our young people will be baptized into this church." The leaders of the Iowas, Cheyennes, Kaws, Omahas, and Winnebagoes have made similar statements. Will these calls go unheeded in the face of our Book of Mormon with all the promises of the Lord to them? Or shall we harbor race prejudice and turn them away? The Iowa leader said to me, "Brother Case, we older Indians know this church is true. Our young people do not know, but they will all come and be baptized if you will give them a chance to hear the message."

Brother Barney Sharp, our good Lamanite brother who spoke in the last General Conference, emphasizes the great need of this work now, as the field is ripe for the harvest. He says one third of the people in his part of the country are Cherokee Indians, a tribe whom no one could tell from whites. They are what Nephi prophesied would be "a white and delightful people." We solicit all Saints to pray and urge this great church to show love for these not members of our church, have come there to work, and they have sensed the spirit of friendliness and cheerfulness that is found there. They have returned time and time again, and some have joined the church. Mayor Roger T. Sermon visited the Campus Shop a few weeks ago for the first time. After finishing his tour, he stood on the steps shaking his head and saying over and over, "I didn't know such a thing existed in the world. I didn't know."

These days in that old red stone building, happy conversations drift through the air. The women are talking about the new building, where there will be large plate glass windows for displaying the beautiful handwork, an elevator to carry the older workers to their posts of duty, warm rooms to work in, many rooms for display and sales, "acres" of storage space, and a dry-cleaning unit. These are happy workers for they are seeing dreams materialize. They know what happy volunteer labor can produce, and they want to give even more. "This is a big venture," they tell each other, "and we must be fully consecrated to our work." And you know they will prove themselves as they have so ably done in the past.

native American races. Our men who are now showing pictures of the old ruins should join our move for church-wide prayers and missionary work for those people.

Sister Thelona Stevens' classes and many individuals have contributed to buy records and aided in a financial way to assist. I have sent out nearly 400 records with a sermonette on many gospel subjects on either side, hoping to awaken more interest in saving souls. Our message is to all nations, and we have a great field yet ahead of us if we fill that mission. Race prejudice must disappear.

OUR BRANCH PRESIDENTS at El Reno, Stillwater, Ponca City, and Kingfisher, Oklahoma, as well as Walthill, Nebraska, are assisting in this mission work, and other lovers of God are witnessing also. The records have gone to six tribes. God speed the day when many more will go. We need not wait for South America to be converted; we should begin where we are, as thousands of Lamanites in the United States are ready and begging for our message.

When the work was stopped twenty years ago, I had just spoken to a great assemblage of thirteen tribes of Indians; the power of God was so great those stalwarts shed tears of joy and assured me I should visit their respective tribes and take the Restoration Message to all their peoples. On another occasion when I spoke to four tribes near Clinton, Oklahoma, and had four interpreters speaking at once in their respective tribal language every sentence I uttered, the Spirit of the Lord was so great confirming my message to them that I baptized two leaders among them and enough of their followers who had heard me preach many times before, that we had a splendid group south of Clinton. Earnest Watson was their leader. He is like our first leaders at Kingfisher, Leonard Tyler, Reuben Taylor, Philip Cook and John Bull, where I baptized 150 of the Cheyennes. If that work had been continued, we would now be the strongest church among them. Shall we now heed the call of God by the order of last General Conference to open that work anew? May the Lord call such men as volunteered last Conference to carry on that work.

In all of these tribes now the leaders say that if our missionaries will come among them again, the work will rise higher than it ever has before, for they're all hungry for the bread of life, and they believe that this is the true church.

The Land Shadowing With Wings

By CONRAD H. BOOTON

A department of opinion for debatable topics on which the editors do not take sides either for or against the writers. Other viewpoints will be welcomed.

THERE IS LITTLE DOUBT that the prophecy recorded in the eighteenth chapter of Isaiah refers to three nations: Egypt, Israel, and Assyria. There is nothing in the prophecy to indicate that Joseph's Land was the "land shadowing with wings." However, because North, South, and Central America form the image of a great bird, or shaped something like the outstretched wings of a great eagle, it is easy to believe that the prophecy refers to the Americas.

It is not probable that God was speaking to Isaiah concerning the shape of any land, but that the phrase, "Woe to the land shadowing with wings" had a different significance. The prophecy uses peculiar terms to express its spiritual meaning. It says, "The land the rivers have spoiled." The word rivers here does not mean actual river of water, but is referring to the Assyrians.

Now therefore, behold, the Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria, and all his glory: and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks.—Book of Mormon, page 127: 45.

Let us not forget that the king of Assyria and his people were called "the rivers," and that river was to spoil a certain land. This could not have been Joseph's Land for the shadow of the Assyrians was never cast upon it.

WE ALSO FIND the phrase, "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." No doubt this refers to a land beyond the tribes or kingdoms of Ethiopia, and not to a land beyond the natural rivers of that land.

Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia.—Isaiah 18: 1.

The only land beyond the tribal boundary lines, or the kings of Ethiopia, was Egypt, so we contend that Egypt was one of the lands shadowing with wings, or in other words, the land overshadowed by the war clouds of Assyria, the same as was Judah and Damascus at that time.

And he shall pass through Judah; and he shall overflow and go over, he shall reach even to the neck; and the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel.—Book of Mormon, page 127:46.

Here we have the stretching out of wings, which were the divisions of the army of the king of Assyria. Those wings were to overshadow certain lands—Egypt, Judah, and Damascus—and be the woe spoken of by the prophet Isaiah.

In other words, a woe was to be pronounced upon certain lands. This woe was to be in the form of outstretched wings—the martial power of Assyria. The lands overshadowed or defeated by Assyria were Egypt, Judah, and Damascus.

We here record one reference from Josephus (Volume II, book 10, page 149) concerning the king of Assyria who went from Palestine to war against the Egyptians. Thus the meaning of the reference just quoted from the Book of Mormon.

Accordingly the Assyrian king took it, and yet he had no regard to what he had promised: but while he himself went to the war against the Egyptians and Ethiopians, he left his general Rabshakeh, and two other of his principal commanders, with great forces, to destroy Jerusalem. The names of the other two commanders were Tartan and Rabсарis.

It is indicated in Isaiah 36: 4-6 and in II Kings 18: 19-21 that Israel was depending upon Egypt for help but that Egypt could not be trusted or depended upon.

And Rab-shakeh said unto them, Speak ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

Thou sayest, (but they are but vain words,) I have counsel and strength for the war. Now on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

Now, behold, thou trustest upon the staff of this bruised reed, even upon Egypt, on which if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it; so is Pharaoh king of Egypt unto all that trust on him.—II Kings 18: 19-21; Isaiah 36: 4-6.

And the Lord said, Like as my servant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoot three years for a sign and wonder upon Egypt and upon Ethiopia;

So shall the king of Assyria lead away the Egyptians prisoners, and the Ethiopians captives, young and old, naked and barefoot, even with their buttocks uncovered, to the shame of Egypt.

And they shall be afraid and ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory.—Isaiah 20: 3-5.

The Book of Mormon tells us that they used Isaiah whenever they could liken any of his prophecies to themselves. We do not find the eighteenth chapter of Isaiah recorded in the Book of Mormon, therefore, the Nephite prophets and recorders must not have seen anything in it that pointed to their land, the Promised Land to Joseph's seed. (Book of Mormon, page 98: 9-14; 116: 15, 16; 139: 1-10; 152: 1, 2; 165: 3; 658: 47.)

WE HERE MAKE A POINT OUTLINE of the prophecy in question:

1. Woe to the land shadowing with wings—
 - a) EGYPT—
 1. Woe—Cursed be you for not giving sufficient aid to troubled Israel. (II Kings 18: 24.)
 2. Shadowing with wings—Your land is overshadowed by the war clouds of Assyria. (Isaiah 36:4-6; 18:19-21; 20: 3-5.)
 2. A nation scattered and peeled—
 - a) ISRAEL—
 1. Scattered and peeled, or a nation defeated and sacked.
 2. Terrible from their beginning hitherto, or a great people from their commencement to their defeat.
 3. A nation meted out or divided among other nations.
 4. A nation trodden down or taken into captivity.
 5. A nation whose lands the rivers have spoiled, or a people defeated and laid waste by the armies of Assyria.
 6. Curse on Israel. (Isaiah 18: 3-7.)
 3. A nation called the rivers—
 - a) ASSYRIA—
 1. Waters of the river or armies of Assyria.
 2. Strong and many or equipped and ready.
 3. King of Assyria and all his glory or all his martial power.
 4. Come up over his channels and go over his banks, or did transcend his bounds, went out of his own territory to war against Israel and Egypt.
 5. Passed through Judah, or lay Judah waste.
 6. The stretching out of his wings, or the taking of new territory, the extending of his realm, the placing of the two divisions of his army.
 7. In the breadth of thy land O Immanuel, or the Holy Land, the Promised land to the house of Israel.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only those questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Man, having lost his former state of perfection by disobedience, how, when, and where does he regain it?

ANSWER:

Our answer must needs be prefaced with some mention of what was lost in Eden. Adam and Eve were created with fully grown bodies but not with fully grown minds and characters; these come only by self-effort. They were without experience and knowledge. Though God had given them their agency, it meant little to them; for without experience and knowledge, they had nothing upon which to make sound judgment. This was a state of innocence, and their making of decisions was very much like that of a child who acts not by intelligent understanding but by impulse. They had been warned of death resulting from disobedience, but never having seen or known it, they had no conception of what death was. This state is indicated by the fact that God, though permitting man to experience the consequences, assumed full responsibility for the fall, saying to Adam, "I have forgiven thee thy transgression in the garden of Eden," and took upon himself to "atone for original guilt" (Genesis 6: 55, I. V.). This forgiveness and atonement left men again innocent as pertaining to the Edenic sin, for the Lord has said in latter days, "God having redeemed man from the fall, men became again in their infant state innocent before God." God has never condemned man for that sin.

The fall brought about good rather than evil. When Adam and Eve had time to reflect and to receive instruction from the Lord, they had great joy and gladness. Adam said, "Because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy." And Eve "was glad, saying, Were it not for our transgression we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth to all the obedient."—Genesis 4: 10, 11. The fall opened their eyes, making possible joy in this life and the attaining of eternal life. They were learning and getting experience; they were acquiring power to exercise their agency and finding joy in achievement, which they could not have done otherwise. They found that all which was desirable in life was to be gained only by their own initiative.

Man was not perfect in Eden. Perfection lies at the end of human development, not at the beginning. Eden was but the cradle of the human race, and life cannot be lived in a cradle. Man must exert himself if he would attain what God has ordained for him. God had purposed that man, in this world, should be confronted by both good and evil which not only gave opportunity but also made it imperative that he should exercise his free moral agency, make his own choices, and build his own character. Only thus could he become a real man, or, choosing the evil, lose his manhood to become a son of perdition. Man lost Eden with its innocence, but God set before him the kingdom of God with its righteousness—righteousness attained through obedience to law. This opportunity was set before every soul.

The process leading to the kingdom of God, with recovery from sin and evil and their consequences, was planned of God before man fell. After the fall it was revealed to Adam, the Lord saying to him, "As thou hast fallen, thou mayest be redeemed." The plan required the co-operation of both God and man to make it operative. The first statement of it as made to Adam was:

If thou wilt, turn unto me and hearken unto my voice, believe, and repent of all thy transgressions, and be baptized, even in water, in the name of mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth, which is Jesus Christ, the only name which shall be given under heaven, whereby salvation shall come unto the children of men; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, asking all things in his name, and whatsoever ye shall ask it shall be given you.—Genesis 6: 53, I. V.

The whole plan, called the gospel, was revealed to Adam who was commanded to write it and teach it to his posterity. It is the same gospel as taught in other dispensations and by Jesus Christ in his life among men. It is the only means of regaining the presence of God, and it offers infinitely more than was left behind in Eden. The gospel gives to men a rebirth of spiritual life through the baptism of the Holy Spirit; through his atonement, Christ brings about the resurrection, restoring man to a new and immortal physical life. These are two great steps in Christ's redemption, and by them men are brought back into the presence of God to dwell with him. This redemption is made complete by the development provided for in the thousand years' reign upon the earth, after which men will be crowned with a fullness of God's glory to dwell with him eternally.

Not all men will attain the fullness of God's glory and must receive a lesser glory in another realm. Through utter rejection of Christ and his plan of redemption, and total abandonment to evil, some will not be brought back into the divine presence except to be judged, when they will be rejected from all salvation.

QUESTION

What is the "tongue of the Egyptian Sea" as mentioned in Isaiah 11: 15, 16? Does "smiting the river in seven streams" refer to the Nile River?

C. R. B.

South Dakota

ANSWER

The Red Sea is the body of water mentioned here as the Egyptian Sea. The "tongue of the Egyptian Sea" is supposed by some to be the present gulf of Akaba. There are others, on the other hand, who think of the shallow waters of the northern end of the gulf nearest to the Mediterranean as the tongue of the Egyptian Sea. Since the Christian Era the land that separated the two seas has risen on the Red Sea side and become depressed on the shores of the Mediterranean, thus fulfilling the prophecy.

The river in question is the Euphrates. The prophecy, it must be remembered, deals with the restoration of Israel "the second time," (verse 11). The first time, Israel was restored from Egypt. The second time it is to be restored from African countries (Egypt, Pathros, and Cush) and countries east of the Euphrates River (Assyria, Elam, and Shinar). Many authorities think that this prophecy was fulfilled by the return from the Babylonish captivity.

To us, however, this prophecy is significant. The angel Moroni told Joseph Smith that this, the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, "was about to be fulfilled." That this prophecy was fulfilled before does not indicate it may not find fulfillment again.

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—This branch celebrated its thirty-fifth anniversary on October 1 and 2. Patriarch John R. Grice was guest speaker for the occasion. He spent four days with the Saints there and ministered in many ways. Installation of the new officers was observed on Sunday morning with Elders R. E. Rodgers and S. M. Zonker in charge. Communion service was at 11:00. In the afternoon an experience meeting was held, during which the following charter members were presented with gifts by the pastor: Cora Melcher, Mary Allen, Williard Allen, and Clyde Zonker. The anniversary services closed with a challenging sermon by Brother Grice.—Reported by LEONA HANES.

PARKER, SOUTH DAKOTA.—On October 2 seven Saints gathered at the home of C. R. Buller for the Communion service. Lunch was served in the home, and Bishop Hillman of Canova, South Dakota, preached a sermon. Nine were present for the preaching service. Several friends of the church were also there.—Reported by C. R. BULLER.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA.—On Sunday, May 29, a memorial service was conducted by the Wheeling Branch, in honor of their former pastor, Elder Louis A. Serig, who died February 3, 1946. A large lighted picture of Hofmann's Christ was presented by Mrs. Serig and her children. Brother Serig served the Wheeling Branch as pastor for twenty years. Those participating in the service were Elders W. A. Schoenian, Moundsville, West Virginia; S. A. Martin, Wheeling, West Virginia; Otto Melcher, Wellsburg, West Virginia; and Glenn Carlisle, New Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, a grandson of Elder Serig.—Reported by MARGARET FREESE.

NEVADA, MISSOURI.—The branch held the annual business meeting September 12, with Elder Donald Kayser, district president, presiding. The following officers were elected: Elder John W. Noyes, pastor; Elder M. A. Goodfellow, counselor; A. E. Bullard, church school director and publicity chairman; Clifford Porter, associate director; Mable Braden, clerk, solicitor, historian, and librarian; Dewey Stukesbary, treasurer; Lillian Werst, superintendent of women's department; Alice Milligan, chorister; Dortha Porter, church school secretary; Jennie Mahuran, superintendent of adult department and book steward; Donna McVay, supervisor of young people; Hazel Stukesbary, superintendent of children's division.—Reported by A. E. BULLARD.

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA.—On September 14, Seventy W. C. Haden began a series of missionary sermons. On the following Sunday, September 18, R. W. Bunch was ordained to the office of elder. On September 25 Elder Ray Carrow baptized his grandson, Clide Johnson, Junior. W. C. Haden baptized Paul Childers, and Mrs. Norma Bunch was baptized by her husband, Elder R. W. Bunch. A business meeting was held in the afternoon. Officers are Ray Carrow, branch president; R. W. Bunch and Ray Renfroe, counselors; W. B. Burk, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. G. R. Ridings, music director and women's leader; and H. B. Qualls, church school secretary-treasurer. Beginning September 28 the branch started to have midweek prayer services.—MRS. ALICE SKINNER, reporter.

SHARON, PENNSYLVANIA.—At the branch business meeting, September 21, the following officers were elected: David Sheehy, pastor; O. G. Rosacker, branch solicitor; C. B. Ryhal, secretary; Dennis Cunningham, treasurer, and Zion's League leader; Emma Ryhal, secretary of church school; Inez Baldwin, women's leader; Ray Muder and Gordon Harrison, auditors; Donna Cunningham, music director; and Eleanor Miller, publicity agent.

On Sunday, September 24, Robert Warren Gregg, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Gregg of Syracuse, New York, was blessed by Patriarch Richard Baldwin. Mrs. Gregg is a former Sharon girl.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—September 2, the Walnut Park Zion's League installed new officers at the formal banquet, "Shipmates Forever."

The girls of the League have proved their skill in the field of sports by taking a trophy for volleyball in the Girl's Interchurch Volley Ball League, and also one for softball in the W.M.C.A. League.

September 7, the branch business meeting was held. Elder O. E. Slayton was sustained as associate to Pastor Fred O. Davies. Other key officers elected were as follows: Vernon Young, church school superintendent; John Thomas, young people's leader; Mrs. Clarence Redfield, women's leader; Mrs. Fritz Oeser, girl's leader; Mrs. Floyd Mengel, music director; and Ralph Remington, missionary representative.

Cub Pack 3227, led by Albert Handy, held their Roman Holiday on the church lawn, September 16. The boys engaged in various feats of skill. Den Five won the pennant for the tug of war. The pack received their advancements at their Indian dance, September 30. Those graduating into Scout troops are Billy Stagg, Kenneth Johnson, and Jerry Ziegenhorn.

Church custodian, Bud Henson, reports that with the help of the women's department who provided money for paint and men of the branch who gave their time, the basement was redecorated under the direction of Tupper Smith.

Three infants blessed during the month of September were Donna Mae Turner, Gary William Huber, and David Eugene Knight.

New members welcomed to the branch are William Sarrat, Sandra Slayton, Buford Tucker, Charles Johnson, Virginia Smith.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—The first unit of the elder's educational program ended Tuesday night, October 11. Six weekly meetings are held in each unit, followed by a rest of six weeks. Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Dr. F. M. McDowell, and Pastoral Supervisor Charles V. Graham were on the staff. The average attendance has been 125. Plans for close coordination with the visiting program and all work of the Aaronic order were discussed at the last meeting.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.—The annual business meeting of the Youngstown Branch was held on Sunday, September 11. The following officers were elected: Lloyd Baldwin, pastor; G. B. Franklin, assistant pastor; Agnes M. Kean, secretary-treasurer; Amy Axelson, chorister and women's department leader; Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Kean, young people's leaders; Alice Gallagher, Herald book steward; Daisy Franklin, church school secretary; Patricia Hammond, Zion's League president; Andrew Darling, church school director; and Milo Seagraves, associate to the church school director.

The Zion's League had breakfast in Mill Creek Park as their opening meeting of the new year. For study they have chosen several tracts which contain important information about the church.

The women's department had their first meeting of the year on October 6 at the home of Brother and Sister Andrew Darling. They had installation of officers with the district women's leader, Mrs. Emma McCune. District president, Elder William McCune, contributed to the meeting.—Reported by AGNES M. KEAN.

NORTHWEST IOWA DISTRICT.—The Northwest Iowa Conference was held on Sunday, September 18, at Moorhead, Iowa, with a very large attendance from over the district.

A prayer and testimony service was held at 9:30 a.m. Guest speaker at the 11 a.m. service was Apostle Paul Hanson. At the noon hour there were picnic dinners. At 1:30 p.m. the priesthood, young people, and women's department each had an hour of classwork.

The business session was held at 2:30. Delegates for General Conference and district officers for the coming year were selected.

The officers are Clifford Cole, district president; Ruby Adams, secretary; William R. Adams, treasurer; Raymond Butterworth, director of religious education; Cathrine Baughman, director of music; Bessie Shumate, women's leader; and Glenn McDole, young people's leader.

The names of Dale Argotsinger to the office of deacon and Ben T. Fish to the office of elder were presented to the conference for ratification and were unanimously approved.

The statistical report showed 118 baptisms and eleven ordinations to the priesthood during the last church year.—Reported by RUBY ADAMS.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON.—A concession at the Evergreen State Fair at Monroe, September 8-11 was a project of the Women's Club. Home-cooked meals were served twenty-four hours a day. Previous to the date of the fair, the women baked and froze four hundred pies. Those who participated stated that being together and working so closely was a happy experience, besides the pleasure of earning five hundred dollars for the building fund.

The new church on Everett Avenue and Maple Street is almost finished. Last Thanksgiving Day the branch opened the new church for the first time to celebrate with a dinner in the basement. Apostle George Mesley was the honored guest. Then services were held in the basement each week during the winter until the upper auditorium could be used early in the spring. The exterior is now completed with the exception of the landscaping.

People have expressed amazement that such a small congregation has been able to build so fine a structure. There are thirty-four active members in the branch, and of this number there are fourteen children under fifteen years of age. The building is valued at twenty-five thousand dollars, and it has cost so far approximately seventeen thousand five hundred dollars.

During the past year the Saints have been busy. Besides building the church, there was an excellent Christmas program; also a week of pre-Easter services in which Elders Granville Swenson and Carl Crum of Seattle participated. In the spring the branch sponsored a successful Vacation Church School as a climax to a missionary series by Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs.

On October 2 Pastor Elliott Gilberts baptized Merle Foster, Marilyn Bonneywell, Myrtle and Ronald Dodds, and Terry Roberts. Elders Carl Oliver and Granville Swenson assisted in the confirmations.—Reported by ELLIOTT GILBERTS.

Letters

They Prayed for Me

How beautiful—how far beyond the limits of our comprehension is the love of God!

I am in the hospital, waiting for an operation in which the nerves in my back will be cut to relieve hypertension. I have been ill for many years because of this. Although I have been administered to and have received blessings, I have not been cured.

I awoke at 5:00 a.m. this morning and felt better than I have in many years. Throughout the day I have even been able to visit with the other patients. This evening when my husband came to see me, he said he had requested prayers for me at the fellowship service the preceding evening. Instead of the usual type prayer and testimony meeting, the Saints had devoted the hour to praying for my recovery according to God's will. I have known these people only a month. The fact that they cared enough for my welfare to pray so earnestly for me makes me realize that God is truly with us today.

I am not afraid of the operation although it may mean intense suffering. I believe such trials often bring us closer to God and help us to understand the burdens of others better.

I wish that all the Saints could be shining lights to those about them so that they could know the blessings of Christ also.

From Seventy Six Year Old Member

I enjoy reading the letters in the Herald and am thankful that God still blesses his people wherever they are. The past year has not been all sunshine for me. I lost my companion, Walter Beebe, on January 29, and on March 11 I fell and broke my left leg. I was in the hospital for nine weeks, then I spent five weeks in bed at the home of my daughter. After using a wheel chair for a month, I purchased a "walker" which enables me to help myself quite a lot. Although I can't walk alone yet, I feel I soon will be able to. I have received a blessing each time I have been administered to. I am grateful for this and for the generosity of the Bay City Saints who helped to pay my hospital bill and did other kind things for me. My neighbors, who are of another faith, have been good to me, too. Although I am seventy-six years old, I feel that God has spared my life for a purpose, and I want to spend my remaining days in his service.

I always look forward to receiving the Herald. It has been in our home since 1872, when my father began taking it. I lend it to my friends and neighbors, and most always they come back pleased after reading it. I was eighty years old last June, and my health is very good. I live up to the Word of Wisdom in every respect. I go with Brother and Sister Stokes of Ft. Pierce to church and enjoy the services.

Design for Living - Part 2

By ALICE M. EDWARDS

THIS MATTER OF DISCIPLINE versus self-discipline seems to me to be one of paramount importance. The disagreement between the old school of "spare-the-rod-and-spoil-the-child" and the new "stand-back-and-watch-the-budding-personality" school of child-rearing seems to me to converge at this very point.

Discipline and a respect for authority is imperative from the beginning. But the sooner in the life of any normally intelligent child the patterns of self-discipline can be substituted for the patterns of implicit and unquestioning obedience to authority—any authority—the sooner that child begins to form a strong and independent character and capacity for judgment. Just how does this work out in everyday living? Let me tell you about Gretchen B.

Case VII

Gretchen's parents are of more than average intelligence and capacity. They are a sound family financially, yet they have interests above the bread and butter aspects of life. They try to help their neighbors and give some time to church and community effort. For some reason, something went wrong between Gretchen and her family from the very beginning.

In the first place, she was born with a minor physical disability. Instead of her parents feeling that this handicap was a challenge and that it was up to them to discover ways of helping her to compensate for her disability, so as to overcome the handicap, they were embarrassed by it. This resulted in increasing friction in the home.

Gretchen resented the treatment necessary because of her ailment; her father resented the financial burden it entailed; and her mother resented the child's invalidism.

Personality quirks developed—restlessness, insomnia, and rebellious attitudes. Then came behavior difficulties, and the means taken by Gretchen's parents in attempting to curb her resentments were unfortunate.

She was not allowed a light in her bedroom because, contrary to parental wishes, she would put it on to read when sleepless.

She was deprived of her beloved flute and later denied lessons on it, because she threw it from her in a fit of temper.

She was kept at home and denied the companionship of other children in punishment of minor faults until, as she grew older, the habit of running away from life as well as from home was firmly established.

The result was a growing restlessness, discontent, and indecision. She left school and got a job—quit her job and went back to school—left home—went back home—.

She is married now and a prospective mother, but the patterns of rebellion and indecision and restlessness have carried over from an unsatisfactory home life into an unsatisfactory and unsatisfying married life. She leaves her husband and goes home—she goes back to her husband—She will take some night classes maybe or some music lessons—next winter when her husband has a better job, or after the baby comes. Maybe!

Compare this with the career to date of Richard C.

Case VIII

Richard's mother and I started to school the same day, and I have watched his growth and development with affectionate interest. It has not always been smooth, for Dick is what you would call a rascal. He was the type of child who attracts trouble, courts disaster, and specializes in accidents. Yet everyone loved him, and in some way he always managed to turn his defeats into victory, with the help of about the sanest, wisest parents I was ever privileged to watch in action. When he was twelve, a scouting accident resulted in his serious injury which left a minor incapacity for life. Of course, his parents grieved over his disability.

"But," said his mother, "Dickie will manage. Even with part equipment. He has a good headpiece."

Then, a few weeks before he was sixteen and legally permitted to drive a car, he "borrowed" his aunt's brand-new Oldsmobile and ran into a truck. No one was hurt, but the car was ruined; the truck driver began a lawsuit; and there was nothing his not-too-well-to-do family could do but pay. And pay they did. Naturally, Dickie was much under a cloud. He had not meant to do anything wrong, but his judgment had been bad and his family, not he, had had to pay for his wrongdoing.

Then, on his sixteenth birthday, his father handed him a driver's license and the keys to the family car.

"Here, Dick," he said. "You made a mess of learning how to drive. But every man has to learn how to drive a car sometime. So take mine now and drive it. And see you learn how to do it right."

Richard and his father pass my house every day now on their way to work. They have recently gone into business. But the interesting part is this: he went to college, made a brilliant record, and served five years in the Marines with brilliant overseas records. He has never had another accident!

Yet, basically, Gretchen B. and Richard C. are very much the same kind of person—fundamentally intelligent, with active minds which tend to work out activities for themselves without waiting to consider the results of such action, with independent spirits which rebel at restraints but can be brought into reasonable channels of expression, and with strong spirits which can either be enlisted on the side of right and sane behavior, or be aligned against the forces which stand for right and sane living.

Their homes were, apparently, very much the same—physically adequate, well-ordered, and bearing the imprint of cultural and spiritual striving after the better and more abundant way of life.

But there was one fundamental difference. In Gretchen's home the patterns of family life were set for the guidance of the child's growing up without reference to her need to develop increasingly the responsibility for her own behavior.

Let us consider further this matter of responsibility. There are many reasons why children do or do not assume responsibility for their own and their families' problems as they develop. The home surroundings, the economic status of the family, the parents' temperament in granting and urging, and the child's temperament in accepting or demanding increased responsibility all have a bearing on the case.

Yet only gradually increasing responsibility can result in the building of strong, independent characters. Sometimes the home life, otherwise almost ideal, is so complete and well-organized that it seems to offer no opportunity to the child to learn to face the more arduous problems of life. Sometimes, through financial loss, illness, or other causes, a family is forced to place on young shoulders burdens which demand almost more than should be asked of immature minds and bodies. Somewhere a balance must be struck.

Consider Mary Lou van T.

Case IX

A few weeks ago the local paper carried a story in a column I do not always find time to read, but which I read very carefully in this instance because it introduced a new chapter in a story in the making which I have been watching for a good many years.

I quote: "Married by the Reverend Jones . . . the bride wore a gown of antique lace and carried Talisman roses . . . after a honeymoon in Colorado, the bride and groom will take up their residence at Columbia . . . where they will both attend the University of Missouri."

There is nothing unusual about this story in these days of interrupted educations and Bill of Rights weddings except for this one thing: Mary Lou was reared in a home where the mother was almost a complete invalid, and from the days when she herself should have been very much dependent on her family for physical care and spiritual comfort, she has had almost the complete responsibility for a frail mother and a family of small children.

Some of us used to wonder when we heard the young people planning picnics and parties and Mary Lou had the problem of finding a baby sitter before she could participate if the burden was not too heavy. But because they tackled their problem with intelligence, wisdom, and courage, the van T. family managed to build for themselves a home life that was good in spite of the handicaps illness imposed.

The mother herself found a task for her hands which kept her busy and happy and helped to pay for some of the things she herself was unable to provide. The younger children were taught to accept increasingly their own small parts of the family responsibility and to help relieve Mary Lou. And because the young girl carried an adult load, she was granted the adult privilege of a summer vacation away from the home and family. It was during one of these vacations that she met the young man she is now marrying—a young man of much charm and promise—and they go on together to complete their education.

There is no doubt in my mind that Mary Lou will meet successfully the problems of establishing and maintaining a home and family while this educational process continues; because she has already learned how to discharge responsibility easily and well.

Compare this story with the experience of Harry K.

Case X

Harry's was a good home—or so it seemed to everyone who knew him and his family. He had a father who went to work at the same time each day, a mother who maintained her unvarying schedule with admirable competence, and Harry himself went regularly to school and returned home regularly, where he had some small tasks and many small pleasures. His seemed to be a good, normal home, until you examined the hidden values.

Some of us wondered if Harry weren't being a little spoiled, a little over-indulged in small ways, and maybe just a little softened by the good, normal everyday living which made so few demands of him—and we were right.

Harry finished high school and was planning matter-of-factly to go on to college (a school of his parents choice—at their expense) when they both died, unexpectedly, within a few weeks of each other, leaving him an adequate property and good habits, but no sound design for living.

Harry survived the shock of their death and went on living in the house where he was reared, but gradually, instead of going on to school, he began to spend many hours in the company of new companions who introduced him for the first time to the delights of the pool hall, the dance floor, and the corner saloon.

Then, after a few drinks one night, he "borrowed" a car and landed in jail. There was no capable and willing family to take the responsibility for his misdeed. The pattern of home and family life had been, apparently, well-designed and executed, but it had not held.

The last time I saw Harry he was attending the kind of school where people learn to face the problems life presents—the hard way. He was sitting at a long table, playing a game of some sort; as I watched, an older man was leaning over his shoulder, directing his play—a much older man with a hard face and a long term of experience in that hard school. And then Harry saw me and came over to talk to me through some very substantial iron bars.

This was not a good school, nor an ideal kind of instruction, but maybe it is the only place now where Harry can learn to take the responsibility for his own acts. He should have learned this in his home life, but that life was too easy, and without the tempering process.

It is actually a matter of learning to accept and carry responsibility efficiently but easily and without strain. It is not just hardship and difficulty; no thinking parents would deliberately choose the hard way for themselves or their children. It is rather a matter of the way in which people can learn to approach difficulty and to accept hardship.

No parents, no matter how wise and understanding and forward-looking, can anticipate just what problems and difficulties young people are going to encounter when they go out to make their own way. Without the adjustability, the home pattern, no matter how admirable, cannot be made to fit the pattern of the larger life. What the home and family pattern must develop is the capacity to transfer the design into the larger picture. This is a basic process in the building of a good and abundant life.

As church people we feel that we are not alone in this final task. The church and its teachings, and the things for which it stands, work with us in establishing right attitudes and developing right attributes.

At risk of being considered old-fashioned, I still feel that young people must have help and guidance in choosing these goals and in setting the direction of their lives religiously as well as socially, financially, scholastically, and morally. I would be the last person to ask young people—or anyone else for that matter—to accept the opinions of others, or doctrines and creeds drawn up for them, no matter what the source of the authority, without question or consideration. Such questioning—examining, and thinking through—is a part of the basic doctrines of the church, and is the genius of Latter Day Saintism; but in the case of immature minds, such questioning can be done safely only under the guidance and direction of sympathetic and inspired leaders.

It seems hard for us, as church people, to realize that there are many young people growing up today in homes which are otherwise well-ordered and desirable, but where there is no religious instruction of any kind. There is a cross current of religious tolerance today, however, often affected by (so-called) intelligent modern people, which says: "I must not impose my religious beliefs on my children. If I would be tolerant and up to date in my thinking, I must permit my children to question and examine and decide for themselves. To offer guidance in this process is to discourage their right to make up their minds for themselves.

Charlene H. is the child of such teachings.

Case XI

Charlene is just twenty, tall, slender, dark-haired, and lovely. Her mother is a music teacher, and her father is an artist.

She is surrounded by beauty in material form and in the pattern of living. Witty and delightful people come and go at will, and the standards of accomplishment, whether in the kitchen, the schoolroom, or the studio, are high and meticulously maintained. But it has been a matter of great pride with the H's that they have never tried to influence Charlene on her thinking in any field, from the best recipe for rarebit to the best school of modern music or painters, or the safest and wisest beliefs in religion, ethics, morals, or faith.

So Charlene has done most of her thinking alone and undirected.

Imagine my surprise when Charlene said to me one day, out of a clear sky, "Mrs. Edwards, do you think we are a lost generation?"

Now I do not think that the young people of today are in any sense a lost generation, and I explained to Charlene that, in my opinion, those of this generation, though handicapped by the hazards of depression, war, and inflation, are rather more serious, thoughtful, and courageous than those who grew up in times that were safer and more secure.

And she said, "I'm glad to hear you say that. I hope you don't mind my asking you. I never talk to people about religion and things like that. My parents think one should make up his own mind about such things, but I think it's all very confusing."

It is not tolerant or broadminded or "civilized" to leave such young minds groping through the period when beliefs are being developed which will guide them throughout their entire lives, and when faith should be generated which will carry them through the difficult times they will undoubtedly have to meet in the maze of conflicting creeds and theories, dogmas and "isms" that are abroad in the world today. It does not make for inner peace and security, nor for the kind of trained and consecrated youth who will go on into the more arduous endeavors of adult responsibility adequately prepared to assume the leadership which must be entrusted to them. Yet such belief and faith can be developed in young people by right patterns of home and family life.

I refer you, finally, to Robert M., who no longer lives at home, and whose school is not listed in any catalog of colleges and universities.

Case XII

Robert is an only child, the son of devout Christian parents. Everything that goes to make up a strong, physical body, a sound, functioning mind, and a steadfast, courageous character has gone into the fashioning of the patterns of home and family life which produced this good-looking, normal, happy young man. And his is the stuff heroes are made of.

He enlisted in the past war, fought in the losing Battle of the Bulge, was wounded several times, and came home, the sole survivor of his outfit. Then, less than a month after his discharge, he collapsed and was taken to the Veteran's Hospital with a wasting disease. For nearly three years now he has fought a losing battle against almost insurmountable odds for the return of health. Still hoping against hope, he lies quietly in his hospital bed, while the world goes on about him, almost without touching his life; but Bob is not bitter, resentful, or rebellious.

I said to him one time, "You know, Bob, some of the men down here at the hospital can't seem to get over the war and what it did to them. They want to think about it, or talk about it, still."

And he answered me, slowly and carefully, because he tired so easily, "It does not need to be that way. If a fellow has will power enough and faith enough, he can put all that behind him, no matter how terrible it was, and go on living."

You see, no matter what the odds, it's still a matter of goal or direction. Bob knows that in this critical time his family is with him and will stand by him, no matter what happens. But he does not actually need it any more. He is ready and willing to face whatever the future brings.

SO THE CHILDREN go back to school—in striped pullovers and pinafores, in slacks and flannels, in dress suits and old lace, or maybe in denim suit with a number on it, an olive drab uniform, or a brief and aseptic hospital gown. . . .

In many garbs they go back to many different kinds of schools. And we ask ourselves, "Will the patterns of home and family life which we have designed for them work out for them over the years? Or will they be torn apart by the stresses and strains of the larger life into which they enter?"

"They beat you for that at M. farm," says Russell F. Beat you, not teach you And the patterns of self-discipline are not brought to substitute for the patterns of unquestioning obedience, the kind which must be demanded of little children. The questioning is not encouraged, and gradually the will to question dies.

"Mom works because we have to eat," say the L. children—and it takes illness and disillusion and tragedy, deprivation and heartache and failure to teach what might have been learned easily in a home where the young person's right to work out the design for living is developed under intelligent supervision in an environment of normal, happy living.

"I want my child to have opportunities I didn't have," said Harry's mother, and his father added, "And I don't want my son to endure the hardships I had as a boy." But Mary Lou's family, realizing that they must ask of her perhaps more than should normally be asked of immaturity, helped her to learn to carry whatever burden life may lay upon her with strength and courage.

"It's all so confusing," complains Charlene H. But Bob M. answers from his hospital bed, "It does not need to be . . . if you have will power and faith." And though his voice will not carry across the hall, it can be as one crying in the wilderness.

The children go back to school. With them go our faith, our hopes, and our prayers.

FINANCIAL COMPLIANCE

The Presiding Bishopric report that a comparison of the general fund income and of tithing statements by districts for the first eight months of 1948 and 1949 has been mailed to district presidents, bishops, bishop's agents, and general church appointees.

There has been a slight increase in the general church income this year as compared with the first eight months of 1948 and a gratifying increase in the number of tithing statements filed over the same period. A total of 11,456 tithing statements were turned in by September 30, 1949.

MISSIONARY WORK IN WISCONSIN

A mission has been organized at Wisconsin Rapids, Wisconsin, under the pastorship of Ormand Kimball. Brother Kimball was the soil conservationist in the southern part of the state, and when the mission in Wisconsin Rapids was organized a year ago and needed a pastor, he asked for a transfer to that part of the state. He received this transfer and is the pastor there now. The average attendance is thirty, and missionary work there has been growing. As a result of work done by James Daugherty, there were five baptisms there during the second week of October.

Thirteen others were baptized at Soldier's Grove, Wisconsin, as a result of Brother Daugherty's work.

In Wisconsin already this year there is over a 5 per cent baptismal gain. Every branch and group in the Wisconsin district has had an increase through baptisms.

INCREASE IN BAPTISMS

In the Des Moines District last year, there were 100 baptisms, making an increase of 5 per cent of the existing membership.

MISSIONARY WORK IN ILLINOIS

A mission has been organized at Ottawa, Illinois, where under the ministry of Wayne Smith fourteen people were baptized. The baptisms took place on the same day the mission was organized. This mission is under the direction of district officers.

BAPTISMS AT COLORADO SPRINGS

Pastor J. D. Curtis has been doing some missionary work recently, and at the end of a series of services fifteen baptisms took place. Several family circles were thus completed.

SERIES IN GAYLORD, MICHIGAN

Apostle Arthur A. Oakman preached a week's missionary series in Gaylord in October. It was well attended and made successful by the excellent support of the local leadership.

NEWS FROM MICHIGAN

Brother Allen Schreur, who has served the church faithfully as a district president for the past twenty-six years, relinquished his responsibility recently to Elder Harry Doty, appointed a short time ago to the missionary ranks of the church. A suitable tribute of affection and esteem has been planned toward Brother Schreur at a special conference next May, the proceedings to be dignified by the presence of a member of the First Presidency.

Missionary work has been successfully carried on in Michigan and Northern Indiana by conference appointees and in the latter district, by Edward R. Carter, evangelist.

The Saints in Michigan are pleased with their initial contacts with Bishop T. A. Beck. He has won many friends and is in a position to give a fine personal ministry envisaged in his appointment.

THE FORT MADISON, IOWA, CHURCH

PRIOR TO ITS ORGANIZATION as a branch on February 29, 1912, the Fort Madison congregation met as a mission under the direction of the Montrose, Iowa, Branch. At the time of its organization, there was a membership of thirty-five, and meetings were held in a small, one-room building. Steady growth necessitated obtaining more suitable quarters, and in 1916 steps were taken toward such an achievement. The present structure, erected in 1921, was largely financed by the W. H. Gunn, J. H. and D. G. Smith, J. E. McKiernan, and W. E. Sanford families. Depression years delayed the final payment and dedication until May 15, 1938.

Elder W. H. Gunn was pastor and chairman of the building committee. Since the organization of the branch in 1912, he has served as pastor approximately thirty years. Elders J. F. McIntire and J. H. Smith (both deceased) also served as pastor for short periods, as did several General Church Appointees, including Elder A. M. Chase.

In 1947, Elder Melvin E. Francis returned to Fort Madison from college at Warrensburg, Missouri, and has served as pastor during the past two years.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS have been made since the original construction, the latest being the large stained-glass window depicting the Three Standard Books of the church. The present priesthood personnel of the branch includes six elders, four priests, two teachers, and two deacons. An active church school, women's department, and other organizations have also aided the progress of the branch.

The present membership of 160 does not reflect the total growth, as many have moved and are making valuable contributions in other branches, especially Nauvoo.

The work in Fort Madison was begun by Solomon Tripp in 1897 and largely carried on by him until the branch was organized. The first missionaries to visit Fort Madison were Elders Frank M. Weld and John R. Evans. Ten persons were baptized by them on March 5, 1897. One of these, Sister Edith Cooper, still resides there. Fort Madison Branch now assists throughout the district and maintains a mission at Farmington, Iowa.

The city of Fort Madison, with its 15,000 population is located in the southeastern part of Iowa on the Mississippi River ten miles from Nauvoo. The church is on U. S. Highway 61 in the 2900 block. Its members extend a welcome to all who wish to visit and worship with them.

The Graceland Way

Some Advantages of the Small College

Note: Not long ago Ed Browne, Public Relations Director of Graceland College, was asked this question:

Can Graceland or any other small college offer a young person the broad view of life in general that the large college or university can? In a town like Lamoni, things change slowly, and life is more or less cloistered. People keep on doing the same things in the same way year after year. Students at Graceland have no opportunity to see first-class plays in first-class theaters, or fashion shows or concerts. For two years they are isolated from reality, because life in Lamoni is much different from life in most other cities. What can be done about it?

The following is his reply:

THIS IS AN EARNEST QUESTION which has been asked occasionally for many years. It is high time we attempted an earnest reply. If the questioner is right, and if no other good reason-for-being can be found, the small college ought to be eliminated, and many thousands of alumni of small colleges must be forced to conclude with some embarrassment that after all they are neither as learned nor as cultured as they had previously supposed.

If the questioner is wrong, we hope it will be his happy lot to attend Graceland, and see for himself, or, if that cannot be, we hope he can send a daughter or son to our school.

It seems to us that the questioner's statement divides into two parts: (1) life at Graceland is unreal, therefore a Graceland education is unsuitable, and (2) cultural offerings at Graceland are limited, therefore a Graceland graduate is less cultured than a university graduate. We will take these up in their order.

Is Life at Graceland Unreal?

The significant question which needs to be answered in the beginning of our discussion is: What, after all, is real? Our questioner attaches virtue to life in the big city. If "reality" means "city," then life in Lamoni is not altogether real. Our town has no mammoth department stores, no night clubs, no museums, and no art gallery. We boast no big hotels, no "elevated," and no subway. If these things are necessary for reality, then Lamoni is not real.

But perhaps these things are not the basic elements of reality after all. Perhaps a Graceland student can turn out to be a "real" person without ever entering a department store or an art gallery, or riding on a subway during his two years in Lamoni.

In another day Lincoln seems to have fared very well without the benefit of these realities during his formative years. In our time, a small-town boy from Kansas named Eisenhower was realistic enough to direct a military machine which won World War II.

Indeed, one could almost conclude, upon examining the record, that the "realistic" dwellers of our cities put a premium on the "unreal" qualities of the immigrants from Small Town, U.S.A. One of our best friends, a graduate of Graceland who was raised in Lamoni, is a buyer for the teen-age department of one of Chicago's largest and most fashionable women's dress stores.

Another Lamoni native and former student of Graceland is the president of one of Kansas City's largest and finest radio stations offering entertainment, education, and culture to an area which includes more than 500,000 realistic city dwellers. These urban listeners swear by this small-town boy's station, applaud its cultural offerings, and rush to the crowded drugstore on the main street of their large city to buy the products they hear advertised on this Graceland's station.

As civilization unfolds, men's values change. The fortunate New Yorker in today's "realism" is the urban worker who lives in the small town. Suburban housing is at such a premium that the fortunate New Yorker suffers the time-loss and perils of commuting morning and night to return to the peace of the small town and countryside. Today, more Americans live in small towns and on farms than in cities.

Yes, it seems possible to prove that living in the small town is just as real as living in the city. The Graceland student who lives in small-town Lamoni does not need to be "isolated from reality."

The matter of culture may be a different question.

Are Graceland's Cultural Offerings Limited?

Although it is true that the small town is coming into its own in these days of rapid transportation and overcrowded cities, the fact remains that there are cultural attractions in our cities which are not duplicated in exactly the same way in our small towns. This is also true in Lamoni, where there is no museum or art gallery. If to be kept from living close to such facilities is to be cloistered, then we must admit that life in Lamoni is indeed cloistered.

But we are not altogether certain that proximity to these facilities is a requirement for participating in their cultural benefits. And furthermore, to say that cultural offerings are limited in the small town is not necessarily to prove that cultural offerings are equally limited in the small-town college. Graceland, though located in Lamoni, is a community of its own.

Our questioner mentions three items which we assume he cites as examples of cultural offerings denied the Graceland: "first-class plays in first-class theaters, fashion shows, and concerts."

LET'S LOOK at plays. In our three years at Graceland, no touring company has presented a play at Graceland or in Lamoni. Graceland play groups and the Fireside Drama Club of Lamoni, on the other hand, have presented many excellent dramas (e.g., "Hamlet," "The Little Foxes," "Angel Street," "The Man Who Came to Dinner," "You Can't Take It With You," "Arsenic and Old Lace"). In twenty-five years as a resident of Kansas City, like the average citizen of that community, I saw very few plays presented by professionals. Since my return to Graceland three years ago, I have seen a dozen first-class plays. Yes, we'll take the Graceland plan—plenty of good plays at a price we can afford to pay. Our amateurs may not read their lines with the same polish achieved by Lunt and Fontaine, but they are the same lines from the same plays. And the way our amateurs read them suits our urban taste to a "T." We'll take the Graceland plays—for culture, for frequency, and for downright entertainment.

New Horizons

FASHION SHOWS. On this one the questioner has us, we suppose. We have heard about only one fashion show, put on by a local merchant in the basement of the local theater, last year. We understand a lot of Lamoni women attended and enjoyed it. But somehow we don't hold to the idea that we miss fashion shows at Graceland. We don't encourage uniformity on our campus. We like students to dress pretty much the way they do "back home." We think it's a wholesome part of the cosmopolitan flavor of a school which this year attracted 575 students (an increase over last year) from forty-one states (also an increase). We like for down-Easterners to dress like down-Easterners and for California originals to dress like California originals.

But for those who like their fashion to conform to the national and international norms, the library subscribes to Vogue, Harper's Bazaar, Mademoiselle, and other fashion magazines. We strongly suspect after looking at the pictures in these magazines that some of our students are conforming. But we're not sure.

WE'RE GLAD to be asked about concerts. How many times lately has the average university student heard the United States Navy Band? Two years ago this world-renowned musical organization presented a performance in Graceland's Zimmermann Hall. The band is expected for a return engagement this year. The Don Cossacks were an attraction on the Graceland Lyceum program last year. These are but two of many entrees on a menu of culture which has delighted the eye and tempted the musical palates of hundreds of Graceland students in our small town the past two years.

Yes, we have plays and concerts. We take the plays written by the men who came from the small towns, the men who now live within commuting distance of Broadway, and we produce them ourselves. We also produce our own concerts. Our A Cappella choir of fifty voices, our Oratorio Society of 150, our fifty-piece concert band, and our fifty-piece orchestra—to mention a few musical organizations at Graceland—are singing or playing for us most of the months of the year. And when they're not performing for us, they are satisfying the cultural tastes of audiences in cities and small towns visited on tour, and audiences listening via the radio. We are glad to report no kicks from the urban area on the cultural offerings of our small college musicians. We are glad they have the courtesy to keep coming back for more concerts. And we appreciate the encores.

Graceland now has its own broadcasting station, KGRA. Here a group of students give an "on the spot" report of a ball game.

The student in the big university located in the big city—what of his cultural opportunities in comparison with ours? How many persons who have graduated from Columbia University in the last fifteen years have attended a fashion show? How many engineering students who are now enrolled at Northwestern University have heard the Chicago Civic Opera? How many sociology majors attending the University of Kansas City have made a visit to the Kansas City Art Gallery? We don't know the answers to these questions, but we have known lots of students at large universities, and we think we are right to conclude—very few!

AND RIGHT AT THIS POINT—the point of how much participation can you get in spite of the wealth of cultural offerings—we would like to make a strong plug for the small college. If we are concerned about isolation from reality, we think the person we really need to worry about is not the small-town, small-college student, but the baffled young man who is enrolled as Student Number 16,973 in a university of 20,000. There is no more damaging isolation from reality than the self-imposed separation of an individual from his group—an isolation imposed by fear of failure, lack of confidence, and need for friendly companionship in a strange and gargantuan world. Here is the place where the small college steps in to lend a hand and lift the questioning young student on to a road with a rich future as he begins his adventure in higher education. He is John Doe among six hundred other Mary Browns and Henry Smiths. They do things together in the small college, and he swings along with the rest. He not only attends the concerts and plays, he sings bass in the choir's performance of Handel's "The Messiah"; he is Lord Burleigh in "Elizabeth, the Queen."

If this is the atomic age, it is also the age of communication. It is an age in which the mountain is brought to Mohamet. Because of radio and recordings, motion pictures and television, books and magazines, traveling art displays and touring artists—no small college today needs to be isolated from the finest culture in the world. Our library of books and periodicals is a depository of the best culture of the world. Our library of musical recordings, one of the best in the land, is another bank of culture from which our students are welcome to draw in as large amounts as their tastes care to hold. The people of the small town, like the people of the large city, are not limited in the age of communication to the near-by culture of their town. Yes, it appears that there is culture for the student in the small college.

One final philosophic word.

The real stuff of life, it seems to us, is not captured in buildings or facilities (although these items help). The real stuff of culture and the "broad view," it seems to us, comes from association with people, regardless of facilities. It is the hope of Graceland that our faculty and staff can keep alive to the needs of our students—can carry by their lives and teachings the tradition and values of urbanity into the lives of Graceland's students—though our urban ways may be cast in this rural setting. If we have not done this in former years, we are dedicated to the task for the present age.

R. EDWIN BROWNE.

of sending relief packages sprang up at once. Would the general officers approve our sending such boxes from the campus? "Yes," blurted Brother F. M. Smith in his usual direct style, "if you'll go at it right." That was good counsel. After three months of contact with Fred Davies, then supervisor of the European mission, and with postal authorities, we sent our first gift. At Christmas time thirty boxes were piled in the front of the chapel. With a prayer of dedication, we sent them on their way. That night the Atlantic Ocean was not very wide. We could reach across to our Dutch brothers and sisters.

A Never-to-be-Forgotten Service

In September, 1947, four young couples marched off the platform of Zimmermann Hall at Graceland. These were the Frys, the Johnsons, the Scherers and the Theyses. All were on their way to Europe. That night each had spoken in testimony. Six hundred voices joined to sing "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," as these eight went down the center aisle and out. Now we were sending out some of our best blood to live in Britain, Holland, Germany, and eventually in Scandinavia. Here were living links joining us to the Saints of Europe.

They Come to Us, Too

Healthy communication is not the one-way route. We were needing brothers and sisters to come to our country. In 1946 and '47 Merle and Alice and Lily came from England to the college campus. This was not enough. In 1947 Hendrick Compier, "Henk" to us, came from Rotterdam, Holland. At the same time, Australia, New Zealand, and Hawaii were sending youth. This fall we are expecting Harry Black of Stockport, England, to get over the immigration barriers and reach Graceland. The dream must grow until youth come from Germany and Scandinavia. These young people do much for us. They save us from our provincialism. They symbolize the world-wide nature of our message.

Through these years I had been pushing our collegians to extend the radius of their friendship circle. They had been writing letters, sending packages, and exchanging gifts. They had built services around missions abroad and had invited speakers from these missions. The universal return of our church had to receive inspired and intelligent interpretation. Now I was coming to realize I had used about everything at my command. I needed some firsthand contacts if Graceland were to go any further. I wanted to go to see for myself.

A Check—Why Go?

Since my return from Europe, I've come to feel even more deeply that many—ever so many—travelers would do well to stay at home. They have no commendable reason for going. Only those who go to understand—to understand with clear perspective—have a right to travel. Those who go to assert the superiority of their own culture or to return to brag about their journey would do well to stay at home. There has to be a set-of-the-soul. Even now I see how I might have qualified more for the trip of the recent summer.

My friends laughed at my preparation or lack of it. Only one thing was sure—the passport. In the rush of commencement and post-commencement meetings, I had no time. So the day I was to leave Lamoni, I quickly assembled two suitcases of clothes and started off. Yet the preparation had been going on for years.

I wanted to go to Europe to come to know my own people and the culture in which they lived. Providentially, the way opened through the good offices of others. On June 2 the plane rose from La Guardia Field and headed toward Europe. The dream was coming true. I had never told anyone how much I wanted to go.

DEATHS

KNIGHT.—George Mattison, son of Joshua and M. Melvina Knight, was born in Franklin County, Illinois, on September 9, 1874, and died at Mill Spring, Missouri, on September 28, 1949. In January, 1907, he married Dacey Ann Henson; nine children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1941.

Surviving are three sons: Calvin of St. Louis, Missouri; Melvin and John of Mill Spring; and a daughter, Mrs. Aline Roberts of St. Louis. Five children—Nina, Norma, Opal, Leon, and Barnard preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Christian church in Mill Spring, Elders J. A. Philipps and W. A. Kuntz officiating. Burial was in the Mill Spring cemetery.

McFARLANE.—Clara Emma, daughter of Harrison H. and Mahala Teeter, was born January 7, 1882, at Fairfield, Nebraska, and died September 19, 1949, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. LaVon Eastwood, in Independence, Missouri, after several years of illness. She spent her childhood and early womanhood on her father's farm near Fairfield, and after completing her education taught school in that neighborhood. On June 18, 1902, she was married to Robert S. McFarlane; five children were born to them.

On July 23, 1899, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church and remained a faithful member for fifty years.

She is survived by her husband; a son, R. Lyle McFarlane of Independence; three daughters: Mrs. LaVon Eastwood and Miss Violet McFarlane of Independence, and Mrs. Shirley Anne Brizendine of Lawrence, Kansas; four sisters: Mrs. Doris Fryxell and Mrs. Edith Trask of Independence; Mrs. Bell Caulk of Pleasant Hill, Missouri; and Miss Olive Teeter of Green Bay, Wisconsin; four brothers: James J., John A., and Charles F. Teeter of Independence, and Willis H. Teeter of Lee's Summit, Missouri; and seven grandchildren. A son, Richard Vincent, preceded her in death. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Glaude Smith and W. E. Wakeman at the Speaks Funeral Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

CLINESMITH.—Franklin Snyder, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Clinesmith, was born near Fredonia, Kansas, on November 19, 1873, and died at the home of his son, Guy Clinesmith, at Rolla, Kansas, on September 24, 1949, as the result of a stroke suffered the previous year. He was married on September 2, 1896, to Josephine Price; nine children were born to them. In the fall of 1907, the family moved in a covered wagon to Morton County, homesteading near Rolla, where he lived until the death of his wife in 1944. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1923 and soon called to the office of deacon. He was also a member of the Odd Fellow Lodge of Rolla.

He is survived by one daughter: Mrs. Elsie Glentzer of Hartman, Arkansas; seven sons: Howard, Everett, Guy, and Albert of Rolla; Fred of Kenton, Oklahoma; Elver of Levelland, Texas; and Russell of Pratt, Kansas; twenty-five grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren. One son, Herman, preceded him in death. Funeral services were held in the Rolla Methodist Church, Elder Clarence Owen and V. J. Ross officiating. Graveside services were conducted by I.O.O.F. 661 at the Rolla cemetery.

MITCHELL.—James Loranzo, was born January 12, 1868, in Reynolds County, Missouri, and died September 15, 1949. He was married on November 12, 1889, to Sarah T. Burnett, who preceded him in death on June 24, 1942. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 18, 1910, and remained a faithful member until death. The last four years of his life he was confined to his bed and wheel chair, but through his suffering he maintained a cheerful attitude and never complained.

Surviving are five sons, four daughters, twenty-four grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren.

MONSEES.—Ruben Henry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Deitrich G. Monsees, was born August 30, 1894, in Cole Camp, Missouri, and died August 30, 1949, in the Trinity Lutheran Hospital, Kansas City, Missouri, on his fifty-fifth birthday. He spent his boyhood in Cole Camp and Sedalia, Missouri, later moving to Jefferson City, and then made his home in Independence in 1925. On October 14, 1916, he was married to Monnie E. Settles; one son was born to them. On March 16, 1930, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church. He had been employed in the auditing department of Skelly Oil Company for the past twenty-one years.

He is survived by his wife; his son, William E. Monsees of Kansas City; and two brothers: Leon H. of Independence and Oscar J. of Sedalia. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Glaude Smith and William Inman at the Stone Church. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

McLEAN.—Marjorie, daughter of John and Rose Warren, was born on March 16, 1902, in Toronto, Ontario, and died on September 30, 1949, in the Mount Forest Hospital.  WITHIN THE TEMPLE

Brother Earnest A. Webbe of Kirtland, Ohio, sends a very interesting letter and a beautiful poem that should be shared with our readers: "On several occasions I have had the pleasure of entertaining 'Krisna,' as he likes to be called (N. K. Krishna Murthy). And as he visited our Temple here, I was able to tell before him our history and literature, some of which he is taking home to India next month, after a three-year stay. I have the feeling that Krisna will someday be a man of influence in that ancient land, and I prize his friendship greatly. The enclosed thought emanated from a visit we made to the Temple premises here—a lovely experience.

BROTHERHOOD

Krisna and I have fellowship.
 We see with the same eyes
 The beauty of trees and skies,
 Silver water churning sandy shores;
 With kindred ears we hear
 The whispering leaf, the song of bird:
 We think like thoughts.

Krisna has long heritage
 Of silent worship in far-off shrines—
 When he tells of his people, his face shines—
 And I feel that somehow, somewhere,
 We made homage together.

We came at even to the Temple.
 "Go," said Krisna, "Take you of its comfort."
 "Come also," I said, "We shall find there
 One who understands."
 So we entered
 And made obeisance to the Infinite,
 Each asking blessing on the other;
 And a gentle benediction whispering,
 "I am the parent-soul of each
 Who loves his brother."

Then when we parted,
 As the day grew older.
 "'Tis not so strange," said Krisna,
 "In such a place to feel the touch of a kind, Paternal hand upon one's shoulder!"

 RESPECT
