News and Notes

VISITS WASHINGTON

CLASSES POSTPONED

The Center Stake priesthood classes scheduled for Monday night, January 8, will be postponed one week on account of the Book of Mormon Institute to be held at the Stone Church from January 7 to 14 inclusive.

MISSIONARY ACTIVITIES

Apostle D. T. Williams assisted by Seventy Albert Scherer met with those actively interested in missionary work in Kansas City Stake in the Central Church at a dinner, December 14. Apostle Williams made a talk on "How we should do missionary work now." Stake President J. D. Anderson was present. Wives of those participating in the missionary effort also attended.

Apostle Williams preached the Sunday morning sermon, December 17, at Central Church in Kansas City. His topic was "The Spirit of the Prophets."

VISIT THE NORTH

Apostle and Mrs. C. George Mesley have recently returned from a visit to the Ontario and Michigan area where they battled the winter elements in their travels.

While there they attended women's institutes in the Chatham and London, Ontario, districts, a district conference at Toronto, and then visited church activities in Detroit, Michigan; Montreal, Quebec; Belleville and Ottawa, Ontario. New groups have been organized at Brantford and Belleville.

BRANCH ORGANIZED

A new branch was organized December 4, 1950, at Grayling, Michigan. Officers elected and installed were Elder Roy Newberry, pastor; Mrs. Grace Newberry, secretary; Norval Stephan, treasurer; Daniel Babbitt, solicitor; Mrs. Leta Babbitt, church school director; Mrs. Helen Jensen, young people's leader; Mrs. Letha Leng, women's department leader; Mrs. Flora Vanden Berg, music leader; Kenneth Ashton, auditor.

ANNUAL DINNER

The annual Christmas dinner for the Herald House employees was held December 15 at the South Chrysler church. Master of ceremonies was Kenneth L. Graham, Manager. Prayers were given by Clyde Hastings and Keith Stokes. Group singing was led by Lucile Lea, who also presented a vocal solo. A piano solo was given by Gladys Omohundro and a story was told by Dolly Budd. Choral music was furnished by Ardith Curtis, Marjorie Smith, June Robb, Allene McClaran, Irene Beemer, and Gladys Omohundro. One hundred twelve people attended the dinner.

"THE MESSIAH"

The twelfth annual broadcast of Handel's "Messiah," directed by Franklin S. Weddle, was presented December 17 over the Columbia Broadcasting System. The choir of 262 voices, the forty-three piece orchestra, which included members of the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra, the four soloists, and guests were

Arthur J. Rock

LISTENERS to "Morning Devotions" on KMBC are quite familiar with the golden voice of Elder Rock. Many of you may wish to know what he looks like when he is at work on his radio talks. Marvin McDole caught him in a photogenic mood with the above result.

Arthur's efforts are reaching out through the medium of radio scripts furnished by the Radio Department of the church to branches that are using time on the air, such as Goodland, Kansas, and Beckley, West Virginia.

He has prepared for his 1950 General Conference appointment as "Radio Minister" by courses in radio and speech at the University of Washington (Seattle), University of Montana, and Baylor University. From Baylor he received a B.A. degree last year, and when he finishes writing his thesis on "Joseph Smith as a Public Speaker," he expects his M.A. degree also.

Arthur's pleased and dignified look may stem from the fact that he taught school for five and a half years in Montana. More likely it is because he likes his work in the church so much better. In 1941 he terminated a promising career with Herald House for Virginia Ann Williams at the marriage altar. Their Judith Ann is eight. David Arthur is five.

He was in the Corps of Engineers in Kansas City for two years and between 1942 and 1945 with the United States Army Air Corps. He has served the church recently as pastor at Joplin for two years, and at Marlin, Texas, for two years. Doesn't look that old, does he?

Your Account With God

"Thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened."

—Daniel 7:10.

YOU HAVE AN account with God.

You didn't open it. It was opened for you at the time you made your appearance on the earth. Reports are recorded in it every day. That may sound quite mystical. But it seems also to be a scientific fact. Psychologists tell us that every experience, every action, every thought, every emotion, leaves a record somewhere in the nervous system, and that under certain conditions it can be called forth, no matter how many years later circumstances may open it.

The Bible says that the record is somewhere. Science says it is in you. Under hypnosis, fever, and other conditions, people have rattled off reams of material that had been experienced in early years and "forgotten" by the conscious mind.

Whatever you have done, God will find the record in you. And what you have failed to do will be indicated too, in unmistakable terms.

OUR THEME for January is a single laconic word: "Accounting." You have already gathered that there is more in this word than is at first apparent.

You are called to account, sometime, for your stewardship of life, for the use of time and talents, for your treatment of the souls and personalities of others.

You are called to account for what you have done to and with yourself. Yes, your stewardship includes even yourself. You are responsible to a higher Power for what you have done with you. For God has made a great investment of creation in you. You had no life capital of your own. It is all his. Sometime you will be asked to explain what you have done and why.

You will be called to account for what you have done with your material possessions in relation to the work of God.

THE ACCOUNT or record is written so clearly in every human face that you don't have to be God to read it, though he can read that record better than any human being ever will. It takes intelligence to read the record accurately.

Look at almost any face, and you can read volumes there concerning the character and the personality that formed it. As Edwin Markham said in "The Man With the Hoe":

"Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?

Whose was the hand that slanted back his brow?

Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?"

In too many cases the answer will be, "Himself."

Read a brief letter that a man has written, and it will tell you all about his education and culture. What is between the lines will be a thousand times greater than what is in the lines.

You are like a book. Your biography, your history is written in yourself. And when the light of eternal intelligence is turned upon your soul, you will be more transparent than clean glass. You will be able to hide nothing.

It is from this record that your accounting will be made.

DURING the early days of this month, there will be the usual jokes about the lovely resolutions made on New Year's Day, only to be broken the next day, the next week, or sometime.

It makes resolutions seem so futile, doesn't it?

Nevertheless, we need some time in the year, once anyway, when we try again to do the good things in which we have failed, and to amend the faults of character that have so long plagued and betrayed our better selves.

Failure is only failure if we quit trying.

If we resolved to do better and to be better a year ago—and if in the interim we have faltered in our decisions and forgotten our plans—now is as good a time as any to try again.

Who knows? This time we may succeed!

AND NOW, here we are again, right back where we started, with an open book—our account—lying between us and God. What are we going to put in it this year?

We have some obligations to our homes and families. We have obligations to our neighbors, our communities, our nation. Caesar must be paid too, but not Caesar alone. And there are the obligations to God. How we handle all these things is written into our record.

And when the time comes that "another book . . . the book of life" is opened, we shall be judged out of "those things which were written in the books."

Official

Publicity for the Messiah Broadcast

The Presidency would like to join with the Radio and Music Departments in expressing appreciation to all of you across the continent who so enthusiastically supported the 1950 Messiah broadcast.

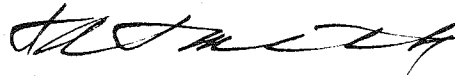

The response to the invitation to help advertise the broadcast through the mailing out of the Messiah post cards was so enthusiastic that, even though 60,000 cards were printed, the entire supply was used up, and many who wrote and even telegraphed at the last minute were disappointed in being unable to secure additional quantities. We are informed that a number of requests for more cards were received too late to allow time for the extra printing which would have been necessary to meet the demand.

The last minute decision to omit the advertising folders, such as were put out last year, in favor of additional cards was made because of the greatly increased cost of printing and the necessity of keeping within the budget.

We have been asked by the Publicity Committee to express regret to those officers who either failed to receive the proper number of cards or who may have received duplicate mailings. With ever-changing officers, the problems involved in keeping our mailing lists up-to-the-minute make it very difficult in all cases to put these materials in the hands of the right persons. Volunteers who helped in the Messiah mailing, including members of the Messiah Chorus and young people of Independence, without whose help the job could not have been done, were unable to eliminate all duplications and omissions.

If our local officers will be alert in keeping the general church advised of changes in names and addresses of local officials, we will try each year to improve this service and thereby to win a wider audience to this fine presentation of our church to the United States and Canada.

Book of Mormon Institute Independence, Missouri January 7-14

A short time ago notice was given of the Book of Mormon Institute which will be held at the Stone Church from January 7 to 14 inclusive. We want to remind you of this very important series of meetings and urge you to set this week aside for an intensive study of the Book of Mormon through sermons, classes, forums, and illustrated lectures.

All are invited to attend the morning class sessions as well as the afternoon and evening lectures. The following program will be adhered to as nearly as possible.

The Book of Mormon Story: (8:30-9:30 a.m.)

Monday, January 8—Its Origin, Purpose, and Preservation—Israel A. Smith.

Tuesday, January 9—The Coming Forth of the Book of Mormon—D. O. Chesworth.

Wednesday, January 10—The Testimony of the Witnesses—W. Wallace Smith.

Thursday, January 11—The Book of Mormon and the Bible—Maurice Draper.

Friday, January 12—The Book of Mormon in Missionary Work—Harold I. Velt.

Saturday, January 13—The Book of Mormon in the Life of the Church—Roy A. Cheville.

The Teaching of the Book of Mormon (9:45-10:45 a.m.)

Monday, January 8—Central Witness (and atonement)—Arthur A. Oakman.

Tuesday, January 9—The Nature of Man—E. Y. Hunker.

Wednesday, January 10—The Church—D. T. Williams.

Thursday, January 11—The Principles of the Gospel—C. George Mesley.

Friday, January 12—The Powers of the Holy Spirit—F. Henry Edwards.

Saturday, January 13—The Social and Moral Message of the Book of Mormon—Reed M. Holmes.

Internal Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon: (11:00 a.m.-12:00 noon)

Monday, January 8—Its Spiritual Level—Russell Ralston.

Tuesday, January 9—Book of Mormon Prophecies—George Njeim.

Wednesday, January 10—Editorship and Grammatical Structure, Language, Avoidance of Anachronisms—Israel A. Smith.

Thursday, January 11—Customs, Geography, etc.—Paul M. Hanson.

Friday, January 12—The Testimony of the Spirit—Henry L. Livingston.

Forum: 2:00 p.m. Daily:

There will be a discussion forum each afternoon with President F. Henry Edwards as chairman, members of the teaching staff will be associated with him on the platform.

Society for Archaeological Research Lectures: (7:30 p.m. Daily)

The Society for Archaeological Research will sponsor lectures with illustrated slides each weekday night. Special preaching services are being planned for both Sundays, January 7 and 14.

The manifest interest in the Book of Mormon leads us to anticipate capacity crowds at all of these sessions, and we sincerely hope that all who desire to attend may do so.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

W. Wallace Smith.

PART TWO

BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY

IT IS DIFFICULT to imagine the effects of over 1,000 years of time, erosion, jungle growth, and the wear of the elements on the Nephite cities of Book of Mormon times. When to all this we add the effects of numerous major earthquakes and hurricanes, the collapsing and burial of buildings under the debris of many centuries, it is little to be wondered that at the present time there is no sure evidence by which to positively identify one solitary Nephite city. To add to the problem, there are vast areas of jungles in both Central and South America where modern man has never set foot.

Legends and stories are numerous of lost and buried cities in the unexplored jungles all the way from Southern Mexico and Guatemala to the vast unexplored areas of Colombia and Ecuador. A story of vast ruins in a remote part of Southern Colombia indicating a prehistoric city with a population as great as that of New York or London was published in a New York newspaper. (See New York Herald, October 5, 1894.)

While in Bogota, Colombia, last year, I interviewed the head of the institute of archaeology for Colombia. The existence of the ruins was confirmed, but little is known about them other than that there are stone columns of buildings. The institute of archaeology for Colombia was not organized until 1942, just eight years ago. Very little has been done in archaeological exploration except at San Augustin, where some 300 monolithic figures in stone have been found.

While I was waiting in our hotel at Minatitlan, Mexico, to board a plane to fly across the jungles and swamps to Yucatan, the American owner of the hotel offered to obtain horses and provisions for a trip into the jungle where he would show me the ruins of a city as fine as any yet discovered and which no living white man other than himself had ever seen. It is easy to dismiss such offers and stories with a wave of the hand and a remark about keeping some customers a few days longer, but nevertheless the fact still remains that the dense green curtain of the American jungles holds unchallenged the secrets of the identity and location of Nephite cities.

Where ancient cities have been discovered, archaeological exploration has not yet scratched the surface. The marvelous ruins of Palenque on the borders of unexplored jungles in Chiapas stretch for twenty-eight miles along the base of the mountains. While at Palenque I accompanied one of the caretakers of the ruins on a hike of several hours into the jungle. The trail led through a great forest with tropical cedars and mahogany trees of great height and size. No sunshine penetrated the depths of the forest. We were continually hacking vines and clambering over fallen trees and mounds containing ruins of buildings. Most of the mounds and ruins of cut stone indicated that the buildings were small and probably were residential.

At our deepest penetration of the jungle, we came to an immense mound covered with large trees. The size of the mound was impressive because of the area covered (perhaps two city blocks) rather than its height. At the corners cut polished stones were plainly visible. After such an experience and in consideration of the fact that the archaeological excavation of the palaces and the temples at Palenque (including the Temple of the Cross) does not include an area more than twenty or thirty acres, it is little to be wondered that, at the present stage of archaeological exploration, we do not have sufficient information for drawing definite lines on Book of Mormon geography.

A MERIDIAN NEEDED

Our greatest need, I believe, is to locate and identify Zarahemla, the capital city of the Nephites. It should be a city of great size. It may be found in Guatemala or it may be found in Colombia. In either case it would at once be a meridian point from which we could proceed to identify the land southward and the land northward and the narrow neck of land. At the present time we have no meridian point from which to start a survey. It is true numerous books and articles and maps have been published, both by our people and our Salt Lake friends, in which proof has been marshaled and definite conclusions reached. The very diversity of disagreement among these authorities and writers should be ample evidence that there is not sufficient information at hand for reaching definite conclusions on Book of Mormon geography.

The narrow neck of land is placed by various writers in five widely separated locations, from a mountain pass in southern Ecuador to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. The Sidon River also is located in five widely separated locations all the way from the Santa River in Peru to the Usamacinta River in Guatemala and southern Mexico. Some of these writers have made extensive trips into South America as well as Mexico and Central America. It is an interesting fact that these authorities should reach exactly opposite conclusions. Some have returned firmly convinced that the Nephites never were in South America and that the Book of Mormon has to do with events limited to the confines of Mexico and Central America. Others have returned convinced that the Nephites landed in South America and that the Book of Mormon has to do with events in South America as well as Mexico and Central America.

It is a most interesting fact that a monumental work of 583 pages of finely printed material published in 1948 is devoted to the proposition that all Book of Mormon history has to do with events that occurred in South America. This theory is based on the supposition that there has been an upheaval in South America and that before the upheaval the elevation of the Andes was between 5,000 and 10,000 feet less than at present. This theory would put most of South America (including the Amazon valley) under the Atlantic in Book of Mormon times, with the Santa River in Peru as the Sidon River, the narrow neck of land in Southern Ecuador, and Desolation in Colombia, and the Carribean Sea as the "Sea North." The author of this work, Book of Mormon Guide Book, is a professor in the University of Utah and formerly of Brigham Young University. Her name is Virla Burrell. She has made extensive trips into Mexico and Central and South America to study the geology, legends, and terrain of these regions. Her theory is that Mexico and Central America resulted from colonies (Hagoth's ships) of Nephites who emigrated from South America.

In all fairness to Virla Burrell, it should be noted that she manifests generous open-mindedness on Book of Mormon geography. She says:

As has been said, any study correlating the topography of the lands of the Book of Mormon and the lands of the Western Hemisphere should be approached cautiously, as the variable factors included in such a study are so great. Finally, it is well again to advise readers to consider maps and topographic correlations by the author in this volume as being in an "experimental" stage and, therefore, not to fix their evidence as being conclusive.¹

I have reached only one definite conclusion on Book of Mormon geography, and that is that the entire question is an open book which must await further exploration or, as some suggest, revelation. By selecting the facts and evidences that support one's own theory or preconceived ideas and ignoring all that does not agree, it is possible to prove to one's own satisfaction most any theory extant in the field.

One writer recently concluded that Copan, Honduras, is the city of Nephi. The basis for this conclusion is that Nephi, shortly after landing in America, "built a temple after the manner of the temple of Solomon," (II Nephi 4: 22-25) and that a temple was found at Copan, Honduras, of which it was said that "the genii who attended on King Solomon seems to have been the artist." This building according to Stephens and Catherwood is 62 feet in front, by 60 to 90 feet high, and 2,866 feet long.

To conclude that Copan, Honduras, is the Book of Mormon city of Nephi on this basis, it is necessary to assume a position for which there is a great deal of missing information:

1. Is there any likelihood that a temple built by Nephi around 550 B.C. might still be intact?
2. Could a handful of Nephites shortly after their arrival here and after separating from the Lamanites, have possessed the man power and resources to have built a temple as much as 90 feet high and over half a mile long?
3. Writers have made statements about the Temple of the Sun at Cuzco and also at Pachacamac, Peru, being similar to Solomon's temple.

I am not assuming the position that Copan, Honduras, is not or could not be the Book of Mormon city of Nephi. If it is ever proved to be so, it will have to be done as part of an unfolding design that fits in the entire picture of Book of Mormon geography, and not by one isolated archaeological fact.

WHAT IS OUR NEXT STEP ON BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY?

In my opinion our next step as a church in this field should be based upon the first and only step we have already taken.

In 1894 the church appointed an archaeological committee. This committee, including members subsequently added, was composed of W. H. Kelley, F. M. Sheehy, R. Etzenhouser, W. Woodhead, Louise Palfrey Sheldon, and S. A. Burgess. After careful and prayerful study, the committee presented to the church a 103-page booklet entitled, "Report of Committee on American Archaeology." This report was accepted and published by the church. It contains the only Book of Mormon maps ever published by the church. The personnel on this committee included some of the keenest minds of the Restoration Movement.

It seems altogether fair and logical that any move to revise and improve our Book of Mormon maps and geography should be based on the work of this committee. The only Book of Mormon maps ever published by the church lands the Nephites on the west coast of South America. Panama is the narrow neck of land. Cumorah is in the state of New York. Mexico is the land "Desolation." Zarahemla, capital city of the Nephites, is located in Colombia, South America.

Before the work and maps of the 1901 committee can be revised, it will be necessary to show where they are in error. The burden of proof rests upon those who have reached conclusions at variance with the conclusions of the Archaeological Committee.

Did the Nephites land in South America? There are three major reasons advanced against the theory of the Peru landing of the Nephites:

1. No hieroglyphics are found in South America.
2. A vast distance devoid of ruins of ancient cities intervenes between Copan, Honduras, and the ancient cities of Peru in South America.
3. There are statements in the Book of Mormon which do not fit into the present geography of South America. ("And it came to pass that they did multiply and spread, and did go forth from the land southward to the land northward, and did spread insomuch that they began to cover the face of the whole earth, from the sea south, to the sea north, from the sea west, to the sea east."—Helaman 2: 8.)

Do these facts constitute a sufficient basis for concluding the Nephites never were in South America?

HIEROGLYPHICS

The Book of Mormon clearly indicates that very early in Nephite history the Nephites migrated northward. It could very well have been that the developments which led up to the calendar system and hieroglyphics came after the Nephites had migrated or been driven northward by the Lamanites.

Melvin R. Fowler, archaeologist for the state of Illinois and a member of the church, says, "It seems plausible to assume that this migration ceased before the early developments took place that led up to the calendar system and hieroglyphics in Central America or one would be able to find rudiments of these systems in South America." (Page 18, Central and South American Indian Civilizations—A survey with regards to possible historic relationships.)

In Volume 2 of the recently published Handbook of South American Indians, Rafael Larco Hoyle presents evidence he has uncovered which he believes indicates ideographic writing among the Andeans that is related to, and a rudimentary form of, the Mayan hieroglyphics.

THE GAP BETWEEN HONDURAS AND PERU

The lack of great stone cities between Copan, Honduras, and Chan Chan, Peru, is advanced as a major reason against Nephite occupation in South America. It should be noted that this very area between Honduras and Peru is an area of plentiful tropical forests and timber. The stone cities of Central America and Mexico are largely located in areas where timber is not available. The same is true of Peru where there is no timber. The Book of Mormon tells us that timber was available in the southern areas and that their cities in this region were built of wood (see Helaman 2: 3-13).

In the last great war between the Lamanites and the Nephites, the Nephite cities were burned as fast as the Lamanites advanced—"And their towns and villages and cities were burned by fire" (Mormon 2: 31). How could the Lamanites burn and destroy all the Nephite cities as fast as they advanced if they were all built of stone? The Book of Mormon says that it was in the Land Desolation that timber was scarce, and they built houses of cement, etc. The cities of stone and cement are now found in Yucatan and Mexico, indicating the cities of wood must have been in regions to the south.

Artifacts not subject to destruction by fire, such as ceramics and metallurgy, are abundant and of a very high type in Nicaragua, Panama, Colombia, and Ecuador. The finest gold work of the Ancient Americans (Manibi) is found in Ecuador. The writer took pictures of gold plated on silver in museums in Ecuador. The ceramics and metallurgy of the Chiriqui and Coclé archaeological sites in Panama are the equal of Mayan work along the same lines. The finest and most dazzling collection of gold artifacts of prehistoric America is to be found not in Mexico or Peru, but in the "Museo de Oro" of the Bank of the Republic at Bogota, Colombia.

In southern Panama there are swamp and jungle areas containing numerous unexplored mounds. There are vast areas unexplored in Colombia and Ecuador. These areas may eventually produce ancient cities with hieroglyphics and other evidence of Nephite occupation. I wrote to Doctor Kidder of Carnegie Institute relative to archaeological exploration in these areas. Doctor Kidder responded with the information that practically no work has been done and little is known about the archaeology of these regions.

Until these areas are explored and the facts known, it is premature, to say the least, to regard the gap between Honduras and Peru as conclusive evidence that the Nephites never were in South America.

It is well to note also that the Book of Mormon itself indicates large areas of wilderness and mountains were within the boundaries of Nephite occupation. The story of the Gadianton robbers gives us some indication of the vast size of these wilderness areas.

NEPHITE AREAS NEARLY SURROUNDED BY WATER (Helaman 2: 8ff.)

When S. A. Burgess and Louise Paley Sheldon of the 1901 committee on Book of Mormon geography were asked if recent discoveries had in any way altered their previous beliefs, they affirmed their convictions regarding the original maps and the landing of the Nephites in South America, and said that the statements regarding the sea north, the sea east, the sea west, and the sea south, which do not fit present South American geography, were given before the great upheaval. It was also the opinion of this former archaeological committee that Southern Mexico and Central America are too small in area to contain the geography and history of the Book of Mormon peoples.

It is very possible that before the upheaval, South American geography did fit the requirements just referred to, while Central American geography may not have fit into the picture. The Amazon basin may have been beneath the Atlantic, and the Caribbean Sea nonexistent previous to the upheaval. The Book of Mormon says, ". . . whole face of the land changed." Many of the great Nephite cities both on the east sea and the west sea were sunk and the inhabitants thereof drowned in the sea. A careful reading of the description of the upheaval in the Book of Mormon will overwhelm one with the greatness of the changes wrought by the earthquakes and hurricanes. Considering the fact that the statements given in Alma and Helaman belong to books written before the upheaval, it seems very evident that these statements cannot have definite bearing upon the present topography of these regions.

The Book of Mormon is an abridgment. Mormon shortened the records of Alma, Helaman, and the other prophets; he evidently did not rewrite them. In his own record Mormon makes no statements by which we could determine the changes wrought by the upheaval on Nephite geography. As already noted, the recently published work of Virla Burrell is predicated on the theory that the geography of South America was vastly different before the great upheaval.

DID THE NEPHITES LAND IN CENTRAL AMERICA?

Those who sponsor the theory that the Nephites landed in Central America and never were in South America are confronted with the obvious necessity of offering some explanation of Peru. The explanations include several theories:

1. Antediluvian colony (before the flood).
2. Separate colony from ancient Israel, of which we have no account.
3. Lamanite off-shoot.
4. Jaredite off-shoot.

According to Rivero and Tersherdi, the Peruvian legends indicate Peru was populated about 500 years after the deluge. They were led to the valley of Cuzco conducted by four brothers. (See Peruvian Antiquities, page 52.)

Mr. Baldwin tells us the youngest of the four brothers assumed supreme authority and became the first of a long line of sovereigns. (Ancient America, page 264.)

Daniel C. Brinton says:

Just as in Mexico, the natives attributed the creation of buildings, the history of which had been lost, to the white Toltecs, the subjects of Quetzalcoatl, so in Peru various ancient ruins whose buildings have been lost to memory were pointed out to the Spaniards as the work of a white and bearded race who held the country in possession long before the Incas had founded their dynasty.²

The Peruvians as well as the Aztecs and Mayas knew the story of Jesus Christ. They called him Viracocha.

Let us summarize. The Pre-Incas were white, bearded men. They were led to Peru by four brothers, the youngest of whom held the supreme authority. They knew the story of Jesus Christ. In view of these facts, the antediluvian theory is scarcely worthy of consideration. Christ appeared only to the Nephites and the Lost Tribes (in the north countries). There is no evidence he made a separate appearance in Peru to a separate colony of Israelites led there from ancient Israel. In addition, they were led by four brothers, the youngest of whom (Nephi) was the leader. Obviously this all points directly toward the Nephites and none else. The Lamanite theory also seems untenable because the Pre-Incas, according to legends, were white men. The Lamanites obviously cannot meet the color requirements.

TIDE OF EMIGRATION FROM PERU NORTHWARD

The Book of Mormon clearly indicates that the tide of Nephite emigration was northward. (See Helaman 2: 3-8; Alma 22: 12ff.) The latest findings of leading archaeologists now support the Book of Mormon story.

There was a time when some archaeologists thought that the original flow of civilization was from Central to South America. This has now been reversed.

Paul Radin in a recently published work says:

From Bolivia and Peru northward to the valley of Mexico, both in the mountains and along the coast, there is no break in the general high level of culture that prevails. . . . What is the precise relationship between the great Mexican and Central American civilizations on the one hand and the great Andean on the other?

Granting to Peru the priority for the creation of the basis upon which all the higher civilizations of the two Americas rests does not, however, signify much more than that these basic traits were disseminated from Peru at a very early time. The Maya culture reared on this basis stands on its own creation, completely independent of the former, except for its beginnings. Many features of Maya architecture, the hieroglyphs, the calendar system, to mention only a few, are manifestly Maya achievements and are utterly unknown in the south.

Insofar, then, as one can sum up the situation today, everything points to the Peruvians being the fundamental givers, for they manifestly created the economy upon which the societies of all the great American civilizations rested. Metallurgy, too, is admittedly their creation. When, to this, we add the fact that specific South American Indian languages have penetrated Central America, whereas no specific North American Indian languages have penetrated South America, it must strike us all as strange that we should for so many years have failed to notice the main direction of this cultural flow.³

The renowned Dr. Alfred I. Kidder of the Carnegie Institute of Washington, D. C., backs up the deductions of Paul Radin, P. A. Means, and others in no uncertain terms. Dr. Kidder clearly shows that the flow of commerce and culture was from Peru northward. There are South American implements found in Central America, but as yet the reverse has not been discovered or proved to have taken place. I strongly recommend that all Book of Mormon students who lean toward the theory that the Nephites never were in South America read Dr. Kidder's authoritative and clear-cut book, South American Penetrations in Middle America (1940).

Samuel K. Lothrop in an article, "The Southeastern Frontier of the Maya," in the American Archeologist, Volume 41, pages 235-243, says there are emeralds and gold from Ecuador in Coclé (Panama), gold ornaments from Coclé and Colombia at Chichen-Itza, and Peruvian gold work in Guatemala and Oaxaca in Mexico. Lothrop also points out that some well-known design pattern and pottery forms, not susceptible to separate invention twice but very adaptable to imitation, are found copied in some Mexican ceramics. Also, an art strain or influence dated in Peru is discerned in Panama and Southern Central America.

IS THE ISTHMUS OF TEHUANTEPEC THE NARROW NECK?

If the Nephites never were in South America, it becomes necessary to assume that the Isthmus of Tehuantepec is the narrow neck of land.

According to the Book of Mormon, the narrow neck required a day's journey for a Nephite. By what means could a Nephite travel from the Carribean to the Pacific across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec (approximately 165 miles) in one day? This distance is out of question for either a horse or man . . . Indians trained as couriers and runners from childhood can scarcely cover more than half this distance in one day.

For those who believe the Isthmus of Tehuantepec to be the narrow neck, there is another difficult problem.—The area south of the narrow neck is the "land southward." The Book of Mormon tells us the Jaredites occupied the land northward and preserved the land southward for a wilderness to get game.

And they built a great city by the narrow neck of land, by the place where the sea divides the land. And they did preserve the land southward for a wilderness, to get game. And the whole face of the land northward was covered with inhabitants; and they were exceeding industrious, and they did buy and sell, and traffic one with another, that they might get gain.—Ether 4: 68-70.

If the Isthmus of Tehuantepec is the narrow neck, then Yucatan and Guatemala belong to the "land southward." The Jaredites never occupied the land southward but preserved it for a wilderness to get game. Archaeology indicates that the Jaredites were in Guatemala and Yucatan. C. Leslie Mitchell says, "Whatever the origin of the Maya people of the old empire, that origin is connected only remotely with the origin of the area's antique civilizers."⁴

In an article in the San Francisco Chronicle, Earl Morris and Gustav Stromsvik say, "No one knows whence the Mayas came, but it is agreed before they arrived in Central America, another race had lived there for thousands of years."⁵

Another race lived in and preceded the Mayas of the Old Empire (Yucatan, Guatemala, Honduras). How then, could Central America be the land southward inasmuch as the Jaredites did not occupy the land southward?

It is axiomatic that when the correct and final solution to Book of Mormon geography is found, it should answer many questions.

CUMORAH AND LARGE BODIES OF WATER

And it came to pass in the forty and sixth year, there were much contentions and many dissensions; in the which there were an exceeding great many who departed out of the land of Zarahemla, and went forth unto the land northward, to inherit the land; And they did travel to an exceeding great distance, inasmuch that they came to large bodies of water, and many rivers.—Helaman 2: 3, 4.

The old archaeological committee located Cumorah in New York and the large bodies of water in the Great Lake area. Without question this is the most vulnerable of the conclusions reached by this committee. Nearly all Book of Mormon students now agree that Cumorah is in Mexico and the large bodies of water in the valley of Mexico. While our present knowledge indicates that it would be unlikely that Cumorah is in New York and the large bodies of water in the Great Lakes area, yet the evidence is not conclusive.

If the great mounds of Ohio were set one against another in a straight line, they would extend for several hundred miles.

The great Cahokia mound in Illinois covers sixteen acres and is 100 feet high. Within five miles in any direction of Cahokia mound, there are 250 other mounds—mute evidence of a great population in ancient times. The artifacts and construction of the mound builders in many instances point toward ancient Mexico and Central America.

The Book of Mormon says, "And they did travel to an exceeding great distance, insomuch that they came to large bodies of water, and many rivers."—Helaman 2: 4.

WHAT CONSTITUTES "AN EXCEEDING GREAT DISTANCE"?

What about "large bodies of water, and many rivers"? There are and were good-sized lakes in the valley of Mexico, but where are the "many rivers"? The valley of Mexico is semi-arid. There is no stream worthy of the name of a river.

We assume that despite a thousand years of Nephite civilization, growth, and development, it would be too much to presume that the people could have traversed the great distance from the valley of Mexico to the valley of Ohio and to Western New York, yet when America was discovered 1,000 years later, the ignorant and barbaric Lamanites had spread over the entire North American continent including Canada and Alaska. Tree-ring dating in the Southwest puts the arrival of the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico back to A. D. 9, which is very definitely Book of Mormon times.

We have much to learn about Book of Mormon geography. The 1901 Book of Mormon maps published by the church were carefully and prayerfully prepared. An unbiased approach to these maps will reveal that there are strong reasons behind the conclusions reached by the 1901 committee on archaeology. Without doubt these maps will eventually need revision. However, before revision can be recommended, it will be necessary to produce conclusive evidence proving the revision to be necessary. As before stated, it is easy to assemble an array of facts and suppositions and jump to conclusions. The Book of Mormon and American archaeology have long possessed a most remarkable faculty of upsetting men. Book of Mormon geography is still in the guessing stage. When further exploration

Qualified Consecration

THIS SUMMER it was necessary for us to go over the route some of the California immigrants traveled a century ago. Seeing the barrenness, the waterless stretches through desert country—some aptly called “Journey of Death”—and the almost insurmountable obstacles, we were astonished that so many were able to reach their goal. Many, of course, did not. For the records of this great movement are full of tragedy and death. Animals died from lack of forage and water, leaving travelers stranded. And many people succumbed. Some fell down by the trail crying for water, unable and unwilling to go on trying.

One great fact stands out in the historical records compiled from journals kept by some of the travelers. Those who prepared—studied out the obstacles and as far as was humanly possible equipped themselves to overcome, and refused to be persuaded from the main trail by glowing accounts of shortcuts—were the ones who reached their coveted destination, and sometimes were even able to carry along the improvident in their success.

All were alike in being consecrated to the goal of reaching California, having left the security of homes, and the companionship of loved ones. But their qualifying themselves for the rigors of the trail varied all the way from careful preparation to just a haphazard ambling along.

It isn't enough to want to achieve something. It takes a preparation, too—a qualifying.

CHURCH MEMBERS all too often complain of workers who they feel do not achieve for the church what is desired or possible. Our numbers are few—comparatively—and those members qualified to serve in a given field are too often not consecrated to the service of God and their fellow man. While some willing to expend their time and energy are not always qualified to the extent of their possibilities or to the needs of the church.

My father many times counseled us: “That which is worth doing at all is worth doing well.” His judgment in his field of work was considered so sound it was sought for publication. And even in his community work, political, educational, and religious, his counsel was accepted as well worth following. He was always studying—preparing. And coupled with his preparation was a desire to use his abilities for the good of his neighbors.

The other night a nine-year-old boy came over to visit. He said he didn't believe he wanted to go to college when he got older, because he'd have to study too much. His whole idea of education centers in dislike because of the work involved. The boy is intelligent, generous, and desirous of helping. If his parents would stress the greater opportunity he would have of serving his neighbors by qualifying himself, his dislike for schooling would be lessened.

There is no greater means to happiness than qualifying to serve one's fellow man. A person who selfishly expends all his energy on himself and his desires is the most miserable and unhappy of humans. His outlook on life is within the narrow confines of his own experiences and hinges on what he wants—demands—for himself. He loses that which he so graspingly snatches at for the very lack of ability to enjoy it, while the person who forgets his own desires in the service of others soon finds himself enjoying a greatly enlarged life. “He who seeketh to save his life shall lose it; and he who loseth his life for my sake shall find it.”

If one has the capabilities of achievement and wastes his heritage, he must answer for his squandering. Talent is a debt which can be paid only through qualified service to others.

THE OTHER DAY at a writers' luncheon, the Reorganized Latter Day Saints' Church was discussed by those near me. One praised the radio programs. And I felt gratified, knowing the training and preparation back of our broadcasts. Another, a successful author, said she and her husband wanted to visit the Stone Church, especially wanting to hear the choir. And of course, we all know the training and devotion back of our music department.

Wherever we go we reap the reward—good or bad—of those members who have preceded us. And those who come after us will be helped or burdened with our success or failure at living the Zion life. For our associates judge our church by our achievements. Regardless of our kind of work—if it is for the benefit of mankind, whether scrubbing floors, or selling merchandise, or professional work—if we do it well, the honor is reflected to the church.

By striving to give our best efforts for the church's sake, our scope of achievement is broadened. From mortal goals, ending with death, they become eternal.

To love God, to love the church, isn't enough. It is necessary to have a driving urge sweep through the members to qualify themselves for service and to put their whole hearts into the betterment of their work and the progress of the church.

The Family Church

THE REAL CHURCH is a family church. It isn't exclusively for the old, nor does it give all its attention to the young. It is for everybody in the home.

People in their homes come in all ages. That is the way God intended families to be. And that is the way he intended his church to be.

The church is dead that has only old people in the congregation. Their future is all used up; they have only the past. Soon they will depart, attendance dwindles, and the minister preaches to empty seats.

That church is alive that has all the family represented; parents and grandparents; young mothers and fathers with their little children and babes in arms; children of school age, young men and women doing the work of the world; students home from college. All of these are needed to make a good church. They should all be welcomed.

A church is more than a building. No matter how costly, its beauty is useless if it is empty. People are the one adornment completely indispensable. A filled seat is a place of vibrant human interest and importance. An empty seat is a misfortune, a confession of failure.

Youth in all its ages—from earliest infancy to young manhood and womanhood—imparts beauty to any church, to any home, to any place. Youth is the flowering time of life. No garden can be beautiful without its flowers, nor can any organization have any promise of a future without the young.

Be sure of this: the family church is a successful church. The church that caters exclusively to any special age group is headed for trouble. Let ours be a family church!—L. J. L.

V. How Older Members Can Help

"When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren."—Luke 22: 32.

THE CHURCH AS A FAMILY

The new member should be received into the church as a newly born child is received into a family.

The child has been expected. Preparations have been made for his arrival. His parents rejoice to have him, and they love him long before he can know the meaning of the love that unites them. They give him constant care, without which he could not survive more than a few hours. And they continue that care for nearly twenty years, changing their ministry as the child grows and develops toward self-sustaining adulthood.

That is the spirit in which the new member should be received into the church. By his baptism he has interested people near him. Members can do this in a way that church officers cannot.

Those who have helped to bring the new member into the church may take it as their responsibility to keep up their contacts, go and visit him, and especially call at his home and accompany him to church. In some cases transportation will be needed. It means so much more to ride to church with a friend than to go by public transportation. This should be kept up, at least until regular attendance becomes a habit.

"TALKING CHURCH"

Many times older members are observed in our congregations, sitting beside new members, sharing a hymnbook, singing with them, and identifying persons who are participating in the service. It all comes down to one thing: the older member likes the new one and enjoys being with him.

pathy have been turned long before. And "talking church" between old members and new ones can be a strong force in helping them to maintain interest in the church.

Of course, the talk should be the right kind. It should not include criticism and gossip. It should always be affirmative.

Thus the fireside is one of the greatest pulpits and one of the best attended chapels in the world. In friendly social life, people visit and talk about what is nearest their hearts—the love of God, the blessings of the gospel, and the fellowship of the Saints.

THE RIGHT ATTITUDE

In all of this, nothing can take the place of the right attitude toward the new members. We must love them if we are to win them and keep them. If getting them baptized is merely an ulterior and selfish motive—simply wanting to increase the congregation and gain recognition for baptisms—we will fail to hold them. If we really like and love them, we will get busy and be friendly with them. If the love is only pretended, it won't last long, nor will it amount to much. People have a deep liking for what is genuine. They hate shams, and they soon see through them.

If we really care for the new members, we will go far and work hard to keep them.

Submission to God

I suppose the hardest lesson we ever have to learn is to be submissive to the will of God. When I say this I'm not talking about old men and women. I'm talking about youth; youth who need now to place themselves in the hands of God so he may make of them something worth while. If you don't, some day you'll wake up to the fact that you haven't done anything and it is too late to do it.

—Rev. Ralph Ernest Webber,

Ministry to new members

become a son of God through adoption. He should not be treated as an orphan committed to an institution.

One is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren. . . . one is your Father, which is in heaven.—Matthew 23: 8, 9.

The older members of the church, like the older ones of a family, have a responsibility for the new one. They should love and protect him. They should assist him in danger, encourage him, and help him to learn how to take care of himself. They can help him in many ways: physical, mental, and spiritual.

ATTENDANCE

It is important to see that the new member attends church and that when he does he will find friendly,

In many cases where conversions of adults have been made, it will be found that members and nonmembers have been visiting together, and that they have been "talking about the church." So much is learned, and so much is taught in just that way. The members who do this are often humble. They may not have gone far in higher education, and their opportunities often have been limited. They may not even be fully informed about the church themselves. But they know something, and they are not afraid to tell it. They bear their testimonies and express their ideas.

"Talking church" informally in the home, as a matter of primary interest, is one of the strongest forces in evangelism. The new member may make his decision at a series of meetings, but his heart and sym-

QUESTION:

Mormon 2: 49-54 reads, "Therefore repent ye, and humble yourselves . . . lest a remnant of the seed of Jacob shall go forth among you as a lion, and tear you in pieces, and there is none to deliver." What people are the remnant of Jacob who will go forth among you [Gentiles] as a lion?
Wisconsin

Mrs. I. D.

ANSWER:

The question can be answered in three words, "The American Indian." But the answer would leave a wrong impression unless properly explained. To obtain a partial reason for Mormon's statement, read Mormon 2:35-54. A remnant of the seed of Jacob is the American Indian. These people were to be scattered by the Gentiles; but the Lord was to remember the covenant he made with Abraham. The Indians are eventually to become a "white and delightsome people" (II Nephi 12: 84).

Both the Nephites and Lamanites had sunk to the depth of degradation. After the Lamanites had destroyed the Nephite nation, apparently a renaissance took place under more enlightened leaders. When the Pilgrims landed in Plymouth in 1620, they were met by friendly Indians. Will Rogers said his ancestors didn't come over on the Mayflower, they were on the reception committee. A statue of Massasoit is located on Coles hill, Plymouth. He was on the "reception committee."

In that very remarkable prophecy delivered by Joseph Smith in 1832 concerning the War of the Rebellion, it is stated: "And it shall come to pass also that the remnants who are left of the land will marshall themselves, and shall become exceeding angry, and shall vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation."

Possibly the major reason for the "lion" Indian was that the eastern Indians progressively were pushed farther and farther away from their homes by the white invaders. The Indian Bureau was organized with good intentions about a hundred years ago. It has been a blessing and a curse to the red man.

Another reason for "vexing the Gentiles with a sore vexation" was the many broken treaties. At the present time the government is faced with a decision by the high courts which may compel it to turn over to the Indians millions of dollars in payment for lands illegally taken from them. Crooked Indian agents and traders had much to do at times in causing the "seed of Jacob to go forth as a lion and tear in pieces."

In 1862, on the lovely plains of Minnesota, in only one of the many Indian wars, two thousand men, women, and children were cruelly murdered in two days. That massacre cost the government and individuals $25,000,000.

Now efforts of the government and the collaboration of the foremost authorities on American Indian life have resulted in the fast increase of the Indian population and the decrease of the "lion" Indian. Good books to read on the subject are Pratt's, The Red Man's Moses, 1935, and The Changing Indian, 1942.

QUESTION:

By what present-day landmarks may the original temple lot in Independence be identified?
Missouri

V. E.

ANSWER:

There are no landmarks that I know of which were placed at the time the lot was dedicated. It should be remembered that on August 3, 1831, the spot which was dedicated for the temple was a part of a tract of sixty-three acres which at the time did not belong to the church or any of its members. It was not acquired until December 10, 1831. It is fair to assume, I believe, that the tract commonly known at the present time as the "Temple Lot" is the one where the people stood when the tract was dedicated August 3, 1831. There are no identifying landmarks going back that far that I know of.

QUESTION:

Was the temple at Nauvoo ever completed?
Missouri

V. E.

ANSWER:

No, the temple in Nauvoo was never completed. For years the Mormons in Utah made no claim that it was ever dedicated. In recent years they have trumped up statements that it was. For over half a century no such claim was ever published. In fact for nearer a century. But what set of thinking people would dedicate a building that was not finished? Who would dedicate workbenches and carpenter tools; unfinished, rough floors, unhung doors, and such? No one who knows anything about God and decency in the dedication of sacred buildings would consider such nonsense. When my wife and I lived in Nauvoo, we were well acquainted with an old gentleman whose workbench and tools burned with the fire which destroyed the Temple in October, 1848. I met and conversed with many people living in and about Nauvoo when the Temple burned, and all told the same story—that the building was unfinished. My Grandfather Lambert was among them.

QUESTION:

Have there ever been any buildings erected upon the lot that lies between the Auditorium and the Stone Church?
Missouri

V. E.

ANSWER:

Yes. For many years—forty-four that I know of—there has been a small, white two-story church on the ground asked about. At one time, twenty-years ago, an attempt was made to construct a temple there. Only the excavation for the basement was completed, if that much were done. The hole stood that way for years but recently it has been filled.

Our Attitude

military service

J. A. Smith

SINCE THE UNITED NATIONS has engaged in military operations in Korea and our own country has taken steps toward additional military preparedness and conscription or universal service in the armed forces, we are again confronted with a question which has engaged the attention of our church leaders in every war in which our country has taken part, beginning with the Civil War, or the war between the States.

In 1939, soon after this country began preparations for an increased Army and Navy, and the National Congress had provided for conscription of our citizens, President Frederick M. Smith discussed what the attitude of the church should be "toward war," and his editorial pronouncement may be found beginning on page 1443 in The Saints' Herald of November 18, 1939.

There is much in this that we indorse, and it may be well to reproduce it, which we do herewith:

WHAT IS THE ATTITUDE of the church toward war? What shall be the attitude of individual members of the church in the matter of joining the national fighting forces, either by conscription or enlistment? To what extent if at all is one justified in refusing to fight or take part in any way in military activities? These and kindred questions come to the fore in the thinking of the Saints in these days of wars and rumors of war, when they cannot but feel that the morrow will enmesh more nations in the entanglements of the military conflict of nations. And in many cases these questions are passed on to the Presidency and others of the general officers by church members who are and cannot well fail to be disturbed by the situations which give rise anew to the same questions that have at intervals in the past come before the church and its members.

As far as our attitude toward war as a church is concerned, the answer is obvious in the light of admonitions and instructions in our Scriptures. We are bound to stand for peace, to lift up the ensign of peace, to maintain peace in our own midst as well as with neighbors. Our motto is peace; and the whole work of the church as a religious organization centers about the development and maintenance of brotherly love or fraternity, which is the essence of peace when it becomes dynamic. It is foundational to Zion and the development and expansion of Zion's ideals. With Zion as a great ideal of the church and its achievement a prime goal, the church must be a great and continuous advocate of peace.

But the answer as to what shall be, or is, our attitude toward peace does not adequately tell what shall be our attitude as individuals toward war as it affects the nations in which our citizenships are held. We owe allegiance to the church, of course, and must uphold its ideals; but we also owe allegiance to the nation in which we live and under which we find protection and civil safety as citizens. This allegiance to governments may, unfortunately, involve us in war activities if and when the nation of which we are citizens becomes involved in military conflict with other nations. Thus the question concerning war and our attitude as individuals toward war becomes far from simple.

THE CHURCH has rather definitely spoken upon the matter in section 112 of the Doctrine and Covenants, which it would be well for all our people to reread in the midst of present world-wide stress and strain. The section need not be reproduced here, but it may well be epitomized. In it the church declares its belief that governments were instituted of God for man's benefit and that he holds men accountable for their acts in relation thereto; that governments are to protect by law the free exercise of conscience, the right to control and own property, and protect life; that civil officers must be upheld by the people, and good men sought for such offices; that religion is instituted by Deity, and that neither man nor law can be permitted to infringe upon the right to worship according to conscience; that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside; that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming and punishable; that rulers and magistrates should be honored in their stations as protectors of the innocent and punishers of the guilty; that all men owe respect and deference to the laws; that rulers, states, and governments can and should enact laws for the protection of citizens in the right to their religious beliefs; that crime should be punished by adequate penalty; that men should use their abilities in bringing offenders to punishment; that religious influence should not mingle with civil government; that religious societies have a right to deal with delinquent members, providing such dealing be for good standing and fellowship, and not for right of property or life; that men should appeal to civil law for redress of wrongs and grievances; that all men may rightfully defend themselves, friends, and government from unlawful attacks and encroachments, where immediate appeal cannot be made to the laws, and relief afforded; that we can preach the gospel to the nations, but not to interfere with bond servants.

In the light of section 112, which repeatedly has been adopted by the church, the answers to the questions as to individual attitude toward and responsibility to governments in times of war become more or less obvious. We are bound to support our governments; and if the governments by law or authoritative mandate call us to arms, as citizens it is our duty to go and give our countries our best service. This applies wherever our citizenship is held. We owe loyalty and allegiance to government.

WITHIN THE MEMBERSHIP of the church we have some who have taken rather radical attitudes on war, going to the extreme at times of holding that under no condition should we take up arms. And some have been prepared to face incarceration rather than take place in army ranks.

This attitude is not justified by the position of the church. That would be destructive and contrary to allegiance and loyalty to government. Such an extreme attitude seems to spring from reluctance to or abhorrence for killing, or the shedding of human blood. We have been told we should not kill, it is true, but that command must be considered in its relation to what has been set out regarding support of government.

This same question has always been before the Saints when war has come. It was at the time of the great Civil War in America, when President Joseph Smith, my predecessor, and his brother Alexander, also a minister, were of military age and subject to call to the American colors. They both had innate horror of human bloodshed; both were loyal citizens. What should they do? They solved this perplexing question as individuals by deciding that if they should enlist, or voluntarily take up arms, then they would be held individually accountable for the killing they might do as soldiers; but if they were conscripted and commanded to take up arms, then the responsibility for such killings as they might do as soldiers would rest with the government from which the command came. On this basis they acted. Fortunately neither was drafted.

In America members of the church have played parts in every war in which the United States has engaged since the organization of the church. And this is probably true in Great Britain, Canada, Australia, Germany, Poland, and elsewhere. How far the attitude taken by President Joseph Smith and his brother Alexander has been taken as a guide by Saints here and in other countries, I, of course, cannot say. But I am not disposed to agree wholly with the conclusions they reached. By our actions as a church we are committed to the idea that we all owe allegiance to our governments, wherever we may be so long as we have the benefits and blessings of governmental protection; and allegiance and loyalty cannot but prompt us to go to the aid of that government in times of stress or danger. Hence to be slow in responding to the danger signal or refusing to move until commanded might be considered failure to display proper loyalty. Hence it might be considered that duty to government would demand voluntarily offering services.

IN MODERN WARFARE the killing of foes is done almost entirely by the soldiers and military machines "at the front," using that term to cover the activities in the trenches, in the air, on the sea, under the sea. To support those "at the front" requires a large "war machine" "behind the lines," in the activities of which killing has little or no part. And even some "at the front" activities do not require the shedding of blood—stretcher-bearing on the battlefield, nursing and care of wounded, maintaining base hospitals, running supply trains, signal service, etc. Service is demanded also in training recruits, building ships, manufacturing guns and munitions, mine sweeping, and many other fields. Into such arms of the service those with deep scruples against bloodshed under any condition can go, support their government, and give loyal service, when enlistment in such arms of service is permitted. Of course when the government commands through channels, then we have only to obey, leaving the question of determining the responsibility for bloodshed to God and to the nation so commanding.

It is a matter of sorrow and grief that the Saints have to decide the questions of attitude toward war. We grieve that war is poured out upon the nations; but we have been told it would be. Said the Lord:

"I have sworn in my wrath and decreed wars upon the face of the earth, and the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the saints also shall hardly escape."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 9.

The battle of Armageddon has not yet been fought. Until it has been, wars will continue. And as long as our people are not gathered into the safety of Zion, we are likely to pass through the sorrow of knowing that Saints are in the ranks of opposing armies. We can pray for peace, work for it, declare against war, and proclaim the peace-producing gospel of Christ brought about by the functioning in our midst of brotherly love, that fraternity which we hope will eventually cause all military weapons of destruction to be forever silenced. To hasten that time we should now be determined to do all in our power, both as individuals, as groups, and as a church, to remove the barriers from our march to Zion. It will be the most effective ensign of peace we can raise. Zion will mean not only cessation of military war but cessation of the devastating wars of commerce, industry, economics, and social struggles. The world longs for peace, but until the foundations of peace shall have been properly laid, war will continue. All the more earnestly should we proclaim the gospel of peace portrayed by the Master, the fraternity which springs from the love of God.

IN THE FOREGOING I hope I may have presented that which will enable our young men, and even women, of military age to determine their courses, wherever they may be. As for my own course as an individual, my attitude has been rather easily determined by circumstances. It has happened that in my life so far the United States, the government to which I owe allegiance, has been engaged in two major wars as they might be determined, the Spanish War in 1898 and the First World War, 1917-1918. In the Spanish War no conscription was had, and I continued my work as a student and in the church. In the early stages of World War I was past military age till the last draft which included those up to forty-five years of age. I registered and did not plead ministerial exemption, determined I would go where sent. Now—well, it is not likely that men of my age will be confronted with the question. However, this does not prevent my having a deep sympathy with my younger brothers and sisters who must decide what they will do for their governments in times of war. I am sure that most if not all will meet their problems in the spirit of loyalty to both government and church. And I sincerely hope and pray that when that time comes to any of our Saints they may, in reaching their conclusions, be conscious of divine guidance, and that they will respond to the demands of duty to church and government in such a way as to bring credit to themselves and honor to the church.

WE ARE IN ENTIRE ACCORD with the closing sentence of this statement, feeling, in the last analysis, whether we should volunteer or should wait to be drafted is a question in which each one should receive divine guidance and exercise what no one questions as his undoubted right to volunteer or to withhold until his government "calls" him.

Stripped of all incidental consideration, the question is, If I volunteer for any service in any branch of the Army or Navy, will I be liable for blood that may be spilled in the prosecution of the war, regardless of who shot the rifle or dropped the bomb?

During the course of the war between the States (1861-1865), there evidently was much discussion regarding service in the armed camps. Elder W. W. Blair wrote about it in the Herald under the caption, "Shall the Saints Fight?" A little later Elder Samuel Powers added his contribution to the subject in the Herald, disagreeing with the views of President Blair. Both dealt with the question of possible guilt for shedding blood if one volunteered to serve in the Army.

The late President Joseph Smith assumed editorial management, and in the next issue of the Herald thereafter (July 1, 1865) he published an editorial pronouncement under the same heading, "Shall the Saints Fight?" His opening statement was as follows:

IN VIEW of aiding the effort made by writers of two articles which have appeared in the Herald to throw light upon a vexed question, one of some importance to the church as a body, and to the individuals comprising the church, of more or less importance in accordance with the separate convictions of their own minds.

Further along he said:

Is there now a direct, or a permissive law under which the Saints are brought, by which they are commanded to slay any of their fellow beings, or by which they are permitted to take carnal weapons of warfare for the destruction of human life? If there be no law commanding, or permitting, is there a law, "Thou shalt not kill," of so wide an application as to include every possible killing, by which man spills the blood of his fellow man?

With all our circumlocution, this is the very question at issue. This once decided, the course of the Saints is clear.

Not wishing to cumber the columns of the present number of the Herald with that which might crowd out worthier matter, we shall cite only a few more passages in addition to those quoted by former writers, and those referred to in this article.

Read Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2, 5, 6; 102: 7; also sections 1 and 2; 42: 6, 7, 21, 22; and 58: 5.

We have noted these, for it would seem that the same principle is announced in these commandments, or laws, that runs through the operation of similar laws, the same prohibitory characters saying unto the members, "thou shalt not kill," and also telling them that "whoso killeth should be delivered up to the law of the land, which law of the land you have no need to break while you keep my law."

It is somewhat significant that the law providing for the sustaining of the principles of this government was in existence when this command to the church was given, and it must have been given with a direct knowledge of such provisions, for we are told that God raised up men for the bringing about of such a form of government that His purposes might be accomplished, viz: the establishment of his church upon this land, that all nations might flow unto it, and that every man might learn his duty in all righteousness, according to his agency.

We gather also (so we at least understand it) that the Saints are not to fight their own battles for the redress of their wrongs, or for revenge upon those who injure them, but are blessed if they forgive even after warning their enemies the third and fourth times, and we presume the same rule would bless them, more and more each time, till seventy times seven were reached.

We feel that the law of the church is wisely framed, and that those deductions from the revelations which we find in Section 110 were wisely adopted years before this war broke out, while yet it was being foretold unto the nation.

The standard of peace was raised, and all men were warned to make use of the means to obtain life. It was declared that the gospel dispensation was a dispensation of peace.

The Saints have been sorely tried; the faith of some has waxed cold. Many felt afraid that God had forgotten his people; but the promise has been fulfilled in part, that the Saints should hardly escape.

The emergency arose—war was upon the nation. Men were called to battle. The law forbids discouragement of enlistments. Political differences existed, even in the church. Few of the church cared to volunteer; many of them who did have been blessed; may God prosper them by permitting them to return to do his will. Then the law drafted many into the Army, and over many of them the prayers of the Saints at home have hovered, and we trust they are remembered in this day of promised peace.

To conclude then we are of the opinion that when the law of this land makes it the imperative duty of any of the Saints to take up arms, with no provision for an escape, then we are not at liberty to disregard the law of the land, but if there be a provision for an escape without violation of law, then they who have so learned the law of the church may justifiably avail themselves of that provision.

We feel that an exhortation to more carefully study the laws of the church, and in connection therewith the constitution and laws of the land, that we may be more able to discharge the duties of both citizens of the kingdom of God, and of this republic, was needed; and this without disparagement of any who may think differently from us.

AS A LAWYER I know that an accessory to a crime is accountable and may be held to be guilty as such. The law does not concern itself too much with the niceties of shades of degree of guilt.

Can the master sergeant who prepares the food for the combatant at the front escape all and any guilt—if it be a sin—when the latter kills his antagonist?

Many thousands of our young men of draft age have not waited for the "call" to go through the "screening" processes and be assigned, regardless of their preferences, to some specific branch of the service. Many have anticipated such calls in order to select the branch of the service least objectionable or most to be desired, if indeed any can be so designated.

It has been suggested for the benefit of those who feel any compunctions of conscience about military duty, that there is the probability that before the call comes, a change in the "fortunes of war" may obviate all necessity for their service.

What is herein stated, and what has been written or said by those referred to, have only the weight of expressed opinion. The church has not acted or spoken on the subject.

These reflections are presented for consideration, although each citizen of the Republic must maintain an attitude of complete loyalty to his country, and we assume all of our own church young people will never be found recreant to their responsibilities as citizens.

As we write, our country is at war as a member nation of the United Nations. What we have presented applies largely to our home situation, and we do not attempt to deal with similar questions in other countries, as we have no knowledge of their laws and customs.

In closing, we wish to emphasize our position on volunteer service. We do not discourage it, feeling it is a question for each one to decide for himself. This I did in the Spanish-American War, attempting to enlist, but was rejected for a slight defect of vision.

"Uncle Henry" Kemp

By Marcella Schenck

I REMEMBER little old "Uncle Henry" Kemp, who was the backbone of the Reorganization in our district when I was a child. As one person said, during those years, "He blesses us all, baptizes us all, marries us all, and buries us all." We leaned on him in trouble and called him in to share our joys.

His hair was silvery curls, and he was tiny as tiny. He had a little cane with which very small children might play if they did not carry it too far away. He had a habit of sitting forward on his chair, perhaps so that his feet might reach the floor. He sang with fervor the songs of Zion, teetering like a little robin as he sang, keeping us all in rhythm and tune.

He had known me since infancy, but the first I remember seeing "Uncle Henry" was when I was four years old, and he had come to my grandmother's house to hold a series of meetings. She had arranged her chairs in rows in the living room and borrowed from the neighbors, also gone about and invited the neighbors in to occupy the chairs. There was a long board on some low kegs making the back row. Father and I were seated there, and I don't know who else.

The little group was singing, "'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light," and I wondered why. Grandmother's kerosene lamp was on her little stand as it had always been. But wait a minute—the song said something about "Revelation's holy light." Now what was that? Oh, yes, something the "Saints of old did see." That would be grandmother and Uncle Henry, because the lamplight was falling on their silvery hair and making it pretty, besides they were the oldest Saints present.

I wanted Uncle Henry to baptize me. I never thought of anything else until I got to the water's edge, almost ready to go in. There lay the path of golden straw across the mud to a smooth flowing stream. Wild June roses were blooming on the bank across the stream. Almost at the last minute, someone whispered to me that all the others wanted a certain other minister to baptize them. There could be no reason for Uncle Henry getting wet, too. So another man would perform the rite.

Don't ever tell a child it makes no difference who does the baptizing. One of the best men in the church baptized me, but it wasn't Uncle Henry. I was glad he offered the confirming prayer.

ONE DAY, as Uncle Henry was nearing his "journey's end," some Saints were discussing the "hereafter" and what they thought it might be like. A lame person in the group spoke happily of that time when he himself would no longer be a cripple. Uncle Henry announced that he would, at last, be normal size. At which a young girl cried out in disappointment, "Oh, please, don't be any different, Uncle Henry! We wouldn't know you."

He sensed her earnestness and while the rest laughed, he musingly remarked when there was quiet, "I wonder if we are so sure what will make us happy in the next life. I am sort of like the little girl. If I met Brother Frank in eternity,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Briefs

MILLERSBURG, ILLINOIS.—The seventy-eighth anniversary of the branch was observed at a homecoming on November 12. Services were in charge of C. C. Wakeland, pastor, and L. W. Woodstock, district president. Apostle Donald Chesworth was the speaker at morning and afternoon preaching services.

The theme of the day was fellowship. The day's program opened with a prayer service. Approximately 150 members from various branches of the district attended, many had formerly resided in this community.

The branch was organized in 1872 with fifteen charter members, none of whom are now living. The church building was erected a few years later. There is now an enrollment of thirty-one.—Reported by MRS. CLIFFORD WAKELAND.

OCEAN LAKE, OREGON.—On November 26 Elder and Mrs. V. E. Chapman and Elder and Mrs. Carpenter of Vancouver, Washington, visited the branch. Church school and church services were held in the morning. In the afternoon a potluck dinner was served.—Reported by HAZEL CARVER.

CRESCENT CITY, CALIFORNIA.—November 20, Crescent City-Brookings Mission was organized by District President J. L. Verhei in association with Bishop M. E. Lasater, and Elder Miles Whiting.

Invocation was by Bishop M. E. Lasater. District President Verhei in charge spoke for a short time followed by Mrs. Effie Verhei who spoke about church school problems. Mrs. Miles Whiting spoke about the women's work. Elder Miles Whiting talked about the part young adults take in our church program, and Bishop Lasater spoke of the financial part of our work.

District President Verhei made appointments to the following offices: Mrs. Marjorie Moore, church school superintendent; Mrs. Vivian Cummins, secretary; Art Moore, treasurer; Mrs. Gail Wittmeyer, women's leader; Olcott Cummins, publicity agent and librarian. All appointments were approved by the group.

At present meetings are being held at the home of Mrs. Vivian Cummins, Box 186, Crescent City. A permanent meeting place will be announced later. An effort is being made to contact all Saints in the neighborhood.—Reported by OLCOTT CUMMINS.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK CITY.—On September 24 the following officers were installed for the new year: Elder Perce Judd, pastor; Glen Guest, church school director; Charles W. Harris, adult leader; Lois Harris, young people's leader; Betty Harris, women's leader; Olga Guest, children's supervisor; Adeleine Harris, music director; Earl Squire, treasurer; Gladys Harris, secretary; Beryl Judd, Herald correspondent; Lee Hartshorn, book steward.

The sale of the present church building in Brooklyn has been approved, and a relocation committee has submitted propositions on a number of new lots for consideration.

A Zion's League group has been formed under the leadership of Donald Potts and Beryl Judd; and has already had several successful meetings.

Two babies have been blessed in the past month.—Reported by BERYL JUDD.

BENTON HARBOR, MICHIGAN.—On November 26 the Benton Harbor mission became a branch. At 11 a.m. Elder Luther S. Troyer, district president, took charge. The Saints joined in singing, prayer was offered by Elder V. L. Coonfare, scripture was read by Elder L. S. Troyer, and a solo was sung by Sister Betty Trimble. Deacon L. I. Tacy read the history of the mission, which has extended over seventeen years.

Elder Troyer asked if the Saints wished to be organized into a branch. It was moved by Deacon L. I. Tacy and seconded by Priest C. L. Wismer that they be so organized.

The following officers were chosen by unanimous vote: Elder V. L. Coonfare, pastor; Priest E. J. Hayden, secretary, publicity agent, historian, auditor, and reporter to the district paper; Deacon Lester I. Tacy, treasurer and book steward; Priest C. L. Wismer, church school director, member of finance committee, and branch solicitor, and auditor; Sister Fern Emde, leader of women's department; Deacon Ray Trimble, leader of young people; Sister Modell Tacy, director of music; and Sister Clara Coonfare, flower committee.

The meeting closed with benediction by Elder Coonfare. In the afternoon two of our new members, Elizabeth Attwood and Joseph Howell, were united in marriage by Priest C. L. Wismer. And the day closed with a sermon by Elder L. S. Troyer.—Reported by E. J. HAYDEN.

DINUBA, CALIFORNIA.—Evangelist William Patterson preached a series of sermons November 17 to 23. Some nonmembers attended, among these is one lady and her son who have been studying our literature for the past year.—Reported by MRS. LULA F. PARK.

SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA.—The November 13 issue of "Briefs" mentioned the age of Brother Walker as eighty-one when it should have been eighty-five.

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE.—Linda Kay Hedeon, daughter of Adolph B. and Mary Aldine Hedeon was blessed November 26 by Elders Glaude A. Smith and S. A. Thiel.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—The Minnesota District conference was held September 16 and 17. The sessions began with a prayer service at 9:00 o'clock supervised by District President Wesley Elvin and Missionary Merle Guthrie.

The conference approved recommendation of the following: to the office of elder, Ira Calkins of the Chetek, Wisconsin, congregation; Fred Allan Olson of the St. Paul congregation; to the office of priest, John Calkins of the Chetek congregation; Aubrey Shaw of the Fort William, Ontario, congregation; Charles Lampman of the Eau Claire, Wisconsin, congregation.

Officers elected at the business meeting are: Wesley Elvin, district president; Donna Attwood, secretary; Frank Parsons, treasurer; Blanche Metcalfe, church school director; Laura Olson, women's group leader; Walter Conway, Zion's League leader; Helen Lundeen, music leader; and Mary Miller, historian.

President Wesley Elvin appointed James Thomas and Clive Metcalfe as counselors; Gordon Bennett as district auditor; James Thomas as nonresident pastor.—Reported by DONNA ATWOOD.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—The district conference was held at Lincoln Branch, October 14 and 15. It opened at 2:15 Saturday with Apostle D. T. Williams in charge of the business meeting.

The following ordinations were approved by the conference: Lavern Sivits, North Platte, to the office of elder; Ladd Duryea, Lincoln, to the office of priest; Simon Hicks, Blue Rapids, Kansas, to the office of priest; Alvin Atkinson, Blue Rapids, Kansas, to the office of teacher; Bob Beckett, Nebraska City, to the office of priest.

Elder Clarence D. Williams was elected district president. His choice of Paul Goodrich and Ernest G. Keller as counselors was approved by the conference. Luther Schmoyer became religious education director; Larry Rife, young people's director; Edith Niehaus, director of women; Bertha Keller, district clerk; Lorna Rife, music director; David Krahl, treasurer; Grover C. Wall, auditor; Harry Niehaus sustained as bishop's agent; Vinton Wight, church historian; Verla Mills, director of nonresident Saints; Iola Wright, secretary to the district president.

Bishop W. N. Johnson was the guest speaker at the evening service. His subject was "Faith in the Kingdom." A social hour was held at 8:45 by the district young people.

Sunday morning began with a prayer service. At 10:00 Apostle Williams spoke on "The Restoration Story." Bishop Johnson spoke at 11:00 on "The Work of the Kingdom."

The women's department served the noon-hour meal.

In the afternoon Bishop Johnson taught a class on "Financing the Kingdom." The conference was adjourned at 4:30 at the conclusion of the general prayer service. "Seek Ye First the Kingdom" was the theme used throughout the conference.

In the evening Apostle Williams spoke on "The Spirit of the Prophet."—Reported by IOLA WRIGHT.

SAN LEANDRO, CALIFORNIA.—The annual business meeting and election of officers of San Leandro Mission of East Bay Branch was held September 20. District President A. C. Andrews was in charge. Elder D. C. Holden was sustained as pastor; Elders Paul Stanfield and Irwin Field, counselors; Audy Henry, church school director; Mabel Korell, women's leader; George Anderson, Zion's League leader; Leilani Reid, department of music; Nellie D. MacDougall, secretary, publicity agent, and historian; Mardel Holden, director of drama; Art Davis, book steward; George Campbell, treasurer; Paul Stanfield, and Harold Korell, auditors; Orral Hartwig, bishop's solicitor; Irwin Field, missionary administrator and home visitor; and Alene Henry, librarian.

The San Leandro Mission consists of about ninety-five church families, living in East Oakland, San Leandro, Hayward, San Lorenzo, and Castro Valley. The Mission was organized in March, 1946, and has held meetings in rented quarters until June of this year when meetings were begun in the new, partly-finished church at 156th Avenue and Plaza Drive. There is an enrollment of ninety-five in church school. The following have been baptized in the past year, Frederick A. Bower; Audy M. Henry and two children, Richard F. and Judy K. Henry; Joan M. Wells; Hilda Mae Newquist; Mabel June Caldwell. Four ordinations during the year are Priest Irwin F. Field to elder, George H. Campbell to teacher, Lloyd F. Stewart and Deacon George F. Anderson to priest. Babies blessed are Ronald Oran Wells; Kathlene Jane Davis; Kathleen Ann Henry; Paul Douglas Henry; Barbara Lynn Hindmarsh; Julie Marsha Baker; Joseph Walter Smith; William Richard Nelson; Ronald Wayne Caldwell; Paul Howard Caldwell and Linda Kay Hart.—Reported by NELLIE D. MACDOUGALL.

LIMERICK BRANCH, CHILLICOTHE, OHIO.—At the annual branch business meeting held September 18, the following officers were elected: Priest Millard F. Weese, pastor; Priest Wayne Weese and Elder T. R. Beatty, associate pastors; Mrs. Ruth I. Burns, branch secretary and treasurer; Mrs. M. F. Weese, Herald correspondent; Mrs. Ruth I. Burns, pianist; Miss Adelyn Landrum, assistant pianist; Blane Landrum and Shelba Jean Burns, church librarians; Malcolm Burns, Zions' League leader; Mrs. Ruth I. Burns, book steward.

Church school officers are: Elder T. R. Beatty, church school director; George Rowland, assistant church school director; Miss Adelyn Landrum, secretary; Miss Wilma Richards, assistant secretary; Mrs. Ruth I. Burns, treasurer; Mr. Sylva Landrum, adult class teacher; Malcolm Burns, junior class teacher; Millard F. Weese, primary class teacher; and Mrs. Ruth I. Burns and Miss Adelyn Landrum, pianists.—Reported by MRS. MILLARD F. WEESE.

CHICO, CALIFORNIA.—District President L. A. MacDonald presided at the annual branch business meeting September 27, when the following were elected: H. D. Hintz, pastor; H. M. Brown, director of religious education; Helen Hintz, secretary-recorder; L. V. Richardson, treasurer; Margaret White, historian; H. D. Hintz, solicitor; L. V. Richardson, book steward. The appointive officers are: J. F. Ferguson, auditor; Helen Hintz, publicity; Evelyn Riley, librarian; and Bessie Ultican, director of drama. Maude Hutler was appointed superintendent by H. M. Brown, director of religious education.

There were fifteen baptisms during the year. H. M. Brown was ordained to the office of priest.

Ten members have signed up for the Union Leadership Training Course for leaders and teachers sponsored by the Chico Ministerial Alliance, beginning November 27 by a trained staff of teachers, from kindergarten through adult classes, open to all denominations in Chico and surrounding territory.

Immediate plans to redecorate the sanctuary are going forward and the building fund for future expansion is steadily increasing.

Patriarch William Patterson and Seventy Herbert A. Lynn were recent speakers. Brother Patterson ministered for eight days with missionary-type sermons, and Brother Lynn gave six days of instructional lectures to members anxious to train themselves in telling the restoration story.

The Homebuilders Group has recently been organized with Harold White elected as president.

The choir has added much to the worship services in creating the proper reverential atmosphere by giving thoughtful, prayerful presentations of music. New choir robes have recently been purchased. Fern Sliger is music director.

Twenty-two members from Chico attended the confirmation services of Marysville Mission, November 12, when thirteen newly baptized members were confirmed. Seventy Herbert A. Lynn, together with Elders H. A. Hintz and H. Dean Hintz of Chico, assisted the pastor, E. L. Hamilton, in these rites. The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Hamilton was blessed by Elder E. L. Hamilton. Services were held in the Church of the Brethren, loaned for the afternoon by its pastor, Reverend Whipple.

On the evening of November 12, Priest George F. Albertson taught a class on the pre-Christian era, the Apostasy, and the Restoration of the gospel.—Reported by HELEN HINTZ.

ROGUE VALLEY MISSION, MEDFORD, OREGON.—A three-week missionary series was held recently by Elder Elwin R. Vest, missionary for Oregon district. The climax of these visual aid lectures was nine baptisms. Charles W. Petrie, Jr., of Sunny Valley; Marian Petrie, Max Petrie, and Joseph Petrie of Grants Pass were baptized by visiting Elder George Day of Bimidi, Minnesota. Bonnie Lyon, Margaret Lyon, Willard Lyon of Grants Pass, Naomi O'Conner and Ray O'Conner of Central Point were baptized by Brother Vest.

Thanksgiving Day dinner was enjoyed by forty-eight members. Elwin and Peggy Vest and their children Charles and Virginia came from Portland for the holiday. Family talents were revealed at a late afternoon entertainment. At the evening service, two babies, Dale and Calvin Petrie, were blessed. Those who were baptized that morning were then confirmed. Rogue Valley Mission was organized December 11, 1949, by Elder Jack Verhei, president of the Oregon district, and Elder Ted Schuld. The membership at that time was nine. There have been nineteen people baptized this last year and, with gathering Saints, the membership is now forty-eight. The pastor has announced that 60 per cent of the members have filed statements and are paying tithing. Visiting Saints please phone Medford 2-6492, Ted Schuld, pastor.—Reported by MRS. JOHN E. WEIR, JR.

BEND, OREGON.—Elder Elwin R. Vest, district missionary, has just completed a successful series of meetings. Brother Vest presented the gospel by means of sermons and visual aids. Thirteen new members were added to the group and were baptized.

LAMONI, IOWA.—"Decision Day," Sunday, November 26, 1950, proved to be a very fine experience for the Lamoni Saints and their neighboring Saints at Andover and Bloomington. Nineteen persons entered the waters of baptism and were confirmed members of the church. Of these, eleven were adults, three were high school students, and five were children.

Many events and activities led up to this day of decision. Many of the Saints found satisfaction in knowing they had been effective instruments in drawing their friends closer to the church by visiting and by sharing tracts and books, and by extending a cheerful invitation to the services of the branch. Added to their good work was the experience of the reunion; the six weeks' series of cottage meetings in five homes conducted by Seventy V. J. Billings; the series of seven sermons by Evangelist R. A. Cheville; and the visiting ministry of the priesthood.

Fifteen of these new members will be enrolled in the Lamoni Branch which brings Lamoni's baptisms for the year to 38 and of these 20 have occurred since reunion. (Two other baptisms were postponed because of illness, and another "Decision Day" has been scheduled for December 31, 1950.) Of the other four new members, one will be enrolled at Andover, two at Bloomington, and the other at Leon, Iowa.

Baptisms for the Stake are now 88, which is well ahead of last year's 65 and nearing an all-time high.—Reported by R. S. FARNHAM.

MACHIAS, MAINE.—The Kennebec Branch recently held the annual business meeting. The following officers were elected: Willis O. Foss, president; Mrs. Addie Foss, secretary; Orrin Marston, treasurer; Mrs. Amelia Hooper, solicitor; Mrs. Mabel Foss, church school director; Mrs. Helen Wood, music director and women's leader. The finance committee consists of Willis O. Foss, Orrin Marston, Mrs. Mabel Hall. The flower committee chairman is Mrs. Mabel Foss. Publicity agent is Mrs. Emma McEacharn.

The branch has purchased a furnace-type stove for the church to be installed as soon as possible.

Other officers for the women's department are Mrs. Iva White, vice-president; Mrs. Amelia Hooper, secretary; Miss Berlye Davis, treasurer; Mrs. Phoebe Manchester, Mrs. Addie Foss, and Miss Davis, ways and means committee; Mrs. Iva White, Mrs. Emma McEacharn, Mrs. Flora Reynolds, social committee; Mrs. Helen Wood, Mrs. Amelia Hooper, Mrs. Edna Foss, entertainment committee; Lesson study is under the direction of Mrs. Amelia Hooper.

New members in the church are Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Stanhope, Mrs. Carrie Elder, Miss Eva Laughton, Mr. and Mrs. Roger Wood, and Miss Muriel Harp.

MOBILE, ALABAMA.—Approximately ninety Saints and friends attended the Thanksgiving morning service. Following the organ prelude played by Martha Ann Salter, Ann Long sang, "When All Thy Mercies." Elder Raymond Booker read the Scripture reading and said the invocation.

The pastor, Elder J. A. Pray, read from the Doctrine and Covenants. Elder N. LaFayette Booker, Brother Raymond Booker's father, and a veteran missionary of the South and The Isle of Pines, led in a season of prayer. A period of organ music followed, and the ushers received the "Thanks" offering.

Elder Pray spoke on the subject, "The Harvest of Souls." Brother R. Booker said benediction.—Reported by JULIA MAE WILSON.

CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE.—A Stake conference was held November 12 with an attendance of 632. At the morning prayer service, Patriarch A. C. Martin gave a prophecy. Apostle A. A. Oakman occupied at the 11:00 service. The music was by the combined Holden and Warrensburg choirs. At 1:15 a pastor's meeting was held. At the business session held at 2 o'clock, the following ordinations were recommended and approved for elders: Herbert Ridge of Marshall and Ward Smith of Buckner; for priests: Emory Dillon of Odessa, Lynn Weldon of Warrensburg, Clifford Colcleasure of Kingsville, Walter T. Schwensen of Lexington, and Ward Weldon of Warrensburg; for deacons: Cecil Eddleman of Lexington, Charles A. Williams of Kingsville, and Lee Scofield of Oak Grove.

Elder Frank C. Sherwood resigned as a high councilman as he has moved to Independence. The following stake officers were sustained or elected for the coming year: Harry J. Simons, S. E. Mifflin, and Hunter Ferguson—presidency; Willard C. Becker and Otho Clark—bishopric; Melba (Clark) Rich, secretary; W. S. Macrae, Fred Scarcliff, Roy Weldon, Paul Landsburg, Orville Hulmes, Vere Turney, E. F. Darnell, Burr Bronson, D. R. Hughes, Nelson O. Gard, and John T. Smith, high councilmen; Louise Loveland, historian; J. Edwin Swall, director of religious education; Leonard Smith, young adult supervisor; Merton Loveland, Zion's League leader; Wilma Green, children's supervisor; Ruth Simons, women's leader; Metta Anderson, music director; and J. E. Swall, Jr., recreation director.

The third young adult annual Thanksgiving banquet was held November 17 at Oak Grove school auditorium with 302 present. The stake leader, Leonard Smith, was in charge. Howard Martin, his assistant, was master of ceremonies. The Oak Grove women's department prepared the supper, and the Oak Grove Zion's League served it. Special guests were Sister Floyd M. McDowell and her mother, Sister Carrie Goode. Elder Floyd M. McDowell was the guest speaker. His theme was "The Ever-changing World and What We Can Do About It." A program of special number included: vocal duet by De-De and Stanley Curtis, Lee's Summit; vocal solo, Beverly Clark, Atherton; and piano duet by Mrs. Roy Smith and Mrs. Charles Magargee of Buckner. —Reported by LOUISE LOVELAND.

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA.—On October 22 the formal opening services in the newly constructed educational unit of the church was held. The building is of a modernistic structure. W. J. Breshears, district president, presided over the activities of the day, assisted by E. D. Dixon, pastor. Visiting priesthood included V. R. Chandler, Palmer Anderson, and M. L. Salter of Birmingham, W. O. Harper of Atmore, and G. W. Hall of Milton, Florida (formally a member of the branch). Visiting friends were present from other parts of the district.

A basket lunch was served at noon.

The program of the day included the ordination service for J. O. Sellers to the office of priest and confirmation services for Mrs. Vivien Sellers and Mrs. Hazel Story who were baptized the night before.—Reported by MRS. J. O. SELLERS.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON.—Evangelist Adolph Lundeen and his wife Eva visited in Everett, December 3. Brother Lundeen spoke at the Communion service and related some of his experiences received at the recent High Priests' gathering at Kirtland. He offered a patriarchal prayer of blessing for the congregation assembled.

It is traditional to celebrate Thanksgiving at the church with a turkey dinner, and this year twenty-two people enjoyed the fellowship of singing and visiting while others played games and amused themselves in other activities.

On November 12 Elder Elliott Gilberts blessed the infant David Lin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gary Bloom. There were three ordinations to the Aaronic priesthood on the same day. Winston Insee was ordained a priest by High Priest Alma Johnson, assisted by Elders Orville Oppelt and Elliott Gilberts; Joseph Skoor was ordained a teacher by High Priest Granville Swenson, assisted by High Priest Carl Oliver and Elder Gilberts; and Merle Foster was ordained a deacon by High Priest Oliver, assisted by High Priest Swenson and Elder Gilberts. The three newly ordained men sang, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go." Brother Swenson delivered a sermon concerning priesthood significance.

After the ordination service, which was attended by a large number of visitors, many enjoyed a potluck dinner in the lower auditorium. In the afternoon District President Swenson met with the local priesthood and with the branch council.

On November 14 the priesthood were dinner guests at the Olivers' home. Since then the pastor has organized the priesthood into teams which are visiting in the homes of members and interested friends.

The basketball team has new uniforms or navy blue and gold and is expecting to make a good record this year in the Interchurch League with Merle Foster and Winston Insee as coaches.

Sister Fern Gage has organized a junior choir which rehearses each Saturday afternoon.

Women's club met November 9 at the Gilberts' home. The pastor spoke on the subject of "Witnessing." During the business session, the women moved to join the Federated Council of Church Women of Everett. —Reported by HELEN GILBERTS.

DANVILLE MISSION, ILLINOIS.—Business meeting was held October 29 with District President Arthur Henson in charge. He appointed Elder W. D. Poore as pastor. The following officers were elected, Max Matthews, church school director; James Altman, assistant; Ruby Elledge, secretary and women's department leader; Shirlee Poore, treasurer; Betty Poore, music director; Daisy Matthews, assistant music director; Mary Altman, historian; Robert Altman, librarian; Daisy Matthews, young people's leader; and Jack Ehlenfeld, book steward.

Arthur Henson was speaker at the close of the business meeting.

Apostle D. O. Chesworth is to visit the branch in January.

Any Saints living near Danville should call 61420 about services.—Reported by RUBY ELLEDGE.

An Allegory of Renewal

By Alice Bolon

IN THE SPARKLING GLOW of the hearth fire, mother and children were dismantling the Christmas tree, carefully storing the bright luster balls, colored lights, and other trimmings in their proper boxes until the next "star bright" season.

Mother made a game of it, and her conversation ran something like this when different members of the family voiced regret that the holiday season was over

We have passed through the time of "renewal" and have come on through the gate of Janus into the New Year of 1951, but we shall leave a few fragrant pine cones on the mantel yet awhile to keep us in remembrance of "Starlight and song Jesus the Savior is born."

The exhilarating fragrance of pine will remind us too of our climbing in the mountains together last summer—climbing to view the blue lakes which they hold in their laps—and of our boating on the opalescent blue-green glacial waters among the sentinel pines. The pine fragrance will symbolize pleasant companionship.

Children, if you will look with your thought vision, you will see that the Christ child has left us a large number of intangible gifts under our tree for the New Year—useful gifts for us to make a part of our personalities as we go about our work, play, and worship this year.

These gifts are really parcels of that "good will" of which the angels sang at the birth of our Savior and King. The use of these gifts will keep every one of us youthful and happy, and will make us feel warm and secure in the love of each other and our Father in heaven.

SUPPOSE WE PLAY a game of "make believe," and I shall pull out for you, from this brown paper bag under the tree, our intangible gifts. Here they come!

First, we have bright-eyed Jollity and Children's Laughter.

Another gift is Cheerful Good Humor. And here is Faith, which is a force of yearning and desire that makes us active in doing good things for others, and anxious to cope with our problem each day and accomplish something useful. Perhaps this is true because Faith makes us conscious that God gives us the priceless gift of Life, and the good earth for our home, and the hope of life beyond that of the Earth with him in the future.

Here is the beautiful gift of Patience. Jesus was speaking of this gift when he spoke of forgiveness and he, himself, had patience with Peter, when the apostle denied Him, saying that he "never knew him."

A gift of Patience is linked with Tolerance, you see. These gifts take a lot of practicing, both within one's family group and without, and the gift of Love simply must be present to push Harsh Criticism away, to let Faith counsel that those who do not well will learn wisdom.

The great gift of Charity is under our tree, too, and we must not stow it away, but use it in kind words, in our actions of sympathetic understanding, and in courtesy and cooperation with others. We must take care to treat others with the same dignity and respect we want for ourselves—or exercise the gift of Charity in loving others. The one who conducts himself with honor and dignity goes a long way toward treating others so and creating good will.

HERE IS A SCRAP of cardboard, fallen from the halo of our Christmas angel, with the words, "My Peace I Give Unto You." Perhaps, children, you will be able to carry this gift with you every day of the year if you can keep intact within your innermost selves a feeling of tenderness and thankfulness toward God, in appreciation for all his good gifts to you, both spiritual and material, remembering all the while that men, who are the children of God, are happiest when they live by the light of his Word.

The greater these gifts in your personality influence your associations with others, and the more you lose to them of the gifts you carry, the greater your own increase in Good Will. Strange paradox, isn't it, that these gifts multiply with loss and use?

Oh, yes! We must not overlook the gift of interesting, inspiring thoughts, which everyone needs to furnish strength and resilient vigor for happy climbing toward the green hills of Perfection. To develop this gift, we must always look for truth and beauty in study, in nature, in travel, in friendship, in good character, in recreating plays and games, in music, worship, painting, and work.

It is well to remember that often we feel the force of these gifts in people rather than see the gifts. The gifts are woven into their personalities, making them pleasant people to have about.

WHEN ONE CHILD protested that this talk of gifts was really only about small every day concerns, the mother smiled, put her arm around him, and said, "Perhaps when you have grown older you will agree with the poet who says, 'The great things are so simple, and the simple are so great.'"

Then the mother told the children that the exercise of these gifts would make an ugly person of any age attractive, or if the person had once been handsome and had lost his good looks, he could become fair again through the use of these gifts, for they were designed to develop beauty. She explained that sometimes, people get tired, tense, nervous, sick, or just plain grouchy and leave their gifts lying about, forgetting to pick them up and make them part of their personalities, but they can always look to Christmas for renewal—that is if they couldn't find the gifts they had lost before that time.

Father, who had come to carry out the tree, looked amused; however, after a number of years with mother and her "make believes," he had a secret tenderness for them. He had discovered some wonderful, much-overlooked intangible gifts underneath a Christmas tree long ago—intellectual honesty linked with dignified humility—and he had cherished them. His were quiet gifts that had brought him a happy wisdom and some abiding convictions. He was now aware that part of mother's charm was her talent of helping people find their misplaced gifts during the year and giving them back through her own personality when they were unaware of it, and of her turning many difficult situations into happy ones.

By this time, the hearth fire had died down, and all were getting sleepy, but Mother said, "We have one more intangible parcel to draw out of our paper sack before we throw it on the fire. This very last gift is one of the finest, an eternal force, Hopeful Anticipation, that makes us alive and eager for the days of the New Year of 1951. . . . Come let us say Horatio Nelson Power's poem, 'The New Year.'" And they recited together these lines:

"This is the year that for you waits, Beyond tomorrow's mystic gates."

THE DUSKY NIGHT was cool and sweet. The smooth road twisted in patterns of light and dark, lifted over a hill, swept into a valley, whirled capriciously around a graceful turn. We were less than sixty miles from home.

My husband and I felt the tenseness of the past days' driving ease, and we settled back to enjoy the shadowed hills, the gentle dipping and turning of this familiar and beloved route leading straight to the heart of the nation—and, as far as we were concerned, the heart of our whole world.

Later, we were to think wistfully of Seattle's wide, clean sweep of water, her skyline set with mountains on either side, the breathless wonder held in the curve of Elliott Bay, the unmistakable splendor of Cascade Pass, boot-deep in new snow. Yet right now we were tuned to full awareness of this quiet countryside, serene in the starlight, taking for its own the radiance of the round, ivory moon.

Home! Only travelers know what that means. Only wayfarers know how dear the familiar feel of home ground is to the wandering feet. So it was with us. The feeling of belonging suddenly rushed over us in great swells. Even the children felt it. They sat, wide-eyed, quiet, rested, and at peace.

IN THE SWIFTLY FOLLOWING DAYS it was with great reluctance that we saw Daddy off for Korea. Despite the confusion and uncertainty we felt, there seemed to be a com-wonderful people everywhere, working, praying, building together. It is an awesome thing to witness—this singleness of purpose. It brings a warm happiness when we are able to share in the forward trend. There are people with amazing capabilities who are channeling their talents reverently into service for the fortable little niche into which we settled with ease. It was just our size. Missing desperately the quiet strength and encouragement of the head of our house, we are deeply touched by the devotion of old friends. Everywhere we turn, there is love and helpfulness, and the privilege of learning. Without lifting a hand, opportunities for service tumble out at us from the most unexpected corners. Constantly our basic need is being filled by the steady stream of thought unity which flows to us. We are trying ever to let it flow through us to others.

Residence in other cities has brought us priceless opportunities to make lifelong friends. There are church. They recognize both their endowments and their responsibilities. Each of these people has been a source of continued inspiration to us, for which we are most grateful.

STILL, here in the Center Place, there are so many of us. We do not seem to realize what these sheer numbers mean. We cannot grasp how much spiritual encouragement there is in being a majority instead of a minority. Everywhere we look there are classes taught by thoughtful and well-qualified teachers. We cannot even take advantage

New Horizons

You have 365 days

By Ruth Midgorden Goodwin

WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO with the year 1951? You have 365 days to do with as you please. If you could weigh accomplishments, how much will yours weigh at the year's end? If you could chart on a graph your personal development, how much will you have grown by December 31?

Whenever people start putting down their New Year's resolutions, the resulting hodgepodge is amazing. Here are some that many Latter Day Saint young people will be thinking:

1. I will attend church regularly.
2. I will improve my grades.
3. I will study the Three Standard Books.
4. I will give up buying so many malts and hamburgers.
5. I will try harder than ever to help build Zion.

These are all good resolutions, as resolutions go. All resolutions are attempts to improve, and improvement certainly is commendable. But dust the wheels of your thinking mechanism a bit and do some probing. Why do you want to study the books of the church? Why do you feel it necessary to attend church regularly? Why do you want to improve your grades and stop spending so much money on "stuff to eat"? Why try harder than ever to help build Zion? Why do people make resolutions?

EACH ONE OF US has a God-given discontent, an inner urge to become better than we are. Regardless of how we try to ignore or suppress it, something constantly drives us to try to learn the will of God. But how often our resolutions are conscience-soothers and a compromise to doing God's will. We pick out something we know God would approve or wants us to do, and we set about with determination to do it.

Nothing in our whole lives is so important as this: We must learn to know God—know him as he knows us. We must discipline and pray ourselves into the place where the big thing is to want to know, to seek to find out, and to be ready to do his will. Then everything else takes care of itself.

You don't fool around with good resolutions to go to church then—you go because you want to go and because you know that's where God wants you to be. You don't halfheartedly promise you'll improve your grades—you do improve your grades because you work hard at it and pray about it, and you do this because at last you realize that mastery of academic subjects will help you to be of service to God. You study the Three Standard Books because you know that in those books are revealed many instances of God's will and of people's obeying and disobeying—a valuable help to your understanding and enlightenment. You stop spending so much money on "stuff to eat" so you can give it where it will do some good—in bringing about "thy will be done, thy kingdom come on earth." You throw out of the window such high-sounding things as "I'm going to be a better person" and "I'm going to be a better Zion-builder" because they mean so little by themselves. Anyone can say he will be honest or morally sound or a Zion-builder, but unless he starts at the beginning point, "I will do thy will, God," little is accomplished.

LET'S ASK ANOTHER QUESTION. Why do we not have Zion now? Because we aren't spiritually "up there," you say. The Lord, speaking through the Prophet of the church at a recent General Conference, told us, "Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies."

Please do not look around you. "My people" is you and I, not Brother Jones or Sister Smith. I say that in this way because of our human predisposition to look for a scapegoat. Zion will be when each one of us sees to it that A-1 seeks constantly and steadfastly to know and to do, without reservation, the will of God. God's will is that Zion be established; he waits only for you and me.

You have 365 days to do with as you please. God gave you your agency; it has been in effect since Adam and Eve that man may choose whether he will do right, God's will, or wrong. The choice is still yours and mine. We may decide to putter around with good resolutions to appease our godly discontent, or we may face up squarely and say, "What I really need to do is ask, and keep asking, God what is his will that I should do, and then do it, never holding back from him in any way." Then all the efforts to be a good Latter Day Saint, to build a better Zion's League, to improve grades, to spend money wisely, to study the church books, and to attend church regularly will be toward the prime objective of our lives.

How much will our accomplishments weigh at the end of 1951? What will be the direction of the lines on our personal development charts? Will we be able to say, "God, I've tried to know and understand and do thy will. Help me again next year"?

Graceland

THE THANKSGIVING SEASON opened at Graceland on November 21 with the annual Thanksgiving fellowship held in the Memorial Student Center. President Gleazer was in charge.

The next day saw throngs of Gracelanders streaming home to spend the holiday. Many students from distant places were guests of Independence and Kansas City students and had a skate, swimming party, and other entertainment arranged by their hosts' Zion's Leagues. Those who stayed at school enjoyed a skate, family style meals, extra late hours for the girls, a trip to Centerville for the basketball game, and general relaxation.

Graceland students have signed up for the second series of workshops on religious activity. Three are being offered: "Church Literature," a survey of church literature directed by Tess Morgan, Doris Conklin, and Henry Anderson; "American Indian," a survey of the church at work among the American Indians, overview of the Book of Mormon, etc., directed by Ned Jacobson and Ruth York; and "Cottage Meetings," a study of objectives, methods, and materials used in cottage meetings, directed by William Gould and Paul Deaver.

A long-range housing program report was discussed by the board of trustees in their last meeting. The theory of the board is that students benefit more by living in dormitories on the campus than from the present system in which many students live off the campus. Their plan is to eliminate off-campus dorms and replace them with campus residences as soon as financially possible.

Ivan Vallier of Council Bluffs, Iowa, was elected president of the sophomore class in a recent election. Donna Sterns of Seattle, Washington, is vice-president, and Wallace Aki of Hilo, Hawaii, is secretary-treasurer. Freshman president is Dick Cheville, Lamoni; vice-president, Les Gardner, Wallsend, Australia; and secretary-treasurer, Arloe Baughman, Denison, Iowa.

Dr. Floyd McDowell spoke on "Standards of Christian Friendship" at the Wednesday night fellowship November

29. This was the opening service in a series of five on the general subject of "Dating, Courtship, and Marriage."

The Concert Choir, under the direction of Henry Anderson, has made its first concert appearance of the year in the Memorial Student Center. Included in the program was music from the literature of ancient times, music from the liturgy of the Russian Church, American spirituals, and sacred music by contemporary composers.

Jim White of Lamoni reported on his trip through Europe to an interested assembly audience recently. Jim, a Graceland graduate of '49 and a senior at Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, told of his bicycling two thousand miles through Europe, his experiences, and the hospitality he received from all the church people he visited there.

Roscoe Faunce, drama coach, has announced the cast for the second play of the year, Ladies in Retirement, by Edward Percy and Reginald Denham. The cast of six women and one man consists of Leonora Fiske, an old actress, Donna Kapp of St. Petersburg, Florida; Ellen Creed, her companion, Celia Rae Stage-man of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Louisa and Emily Creed, Ellen's two "pathetic" sisters, Marian Robinson and Marilyn Seroy, both of Independence; Lucy Gilham, the maid, Bonita Sands of Omaha, Nebraska; Sister Theresa, a nun, Ardis Ade of Portland, Oregon; and Albert Feather, Ellen's nephew, Les Gardner of Wallsend, Australia.

Graceland's Yellow Jackets walked away with the Interstate Conference football championship by smashing the Cadets of Kemper Military Academy, 32-7. This marked the end of a nearly perfect season for the Jackets, who bowed only to Missouri Valley in the season-opener, which was a practice game for both schools. Their string of conference victories includes Kansas City, Kansas J. C.; Chillicothe, and Wentworth.

The start of basketball season will see seven men returning from last year's squad: Bob Green of Mobile, Alabama; Lewis Gilliland of Lamoni; George Rosacker of Sharon, Pennsylvania; Alan Slayton of Independence; John Snider of Hamilton, Missouri; Terry Weldon of Moorhead, Iowa; and Bob Wolfe of Nelsonville, Ohio. Most of the team's height comes from the freshman roster and includes Bob Wilcox of Lamoni at 6'6", Al Fuller of Ava, Missouri, and Chuck Fortman of Minneapolis, Minnesota, both well over six feet. In the opening game of the season on November 24, the Jackets downed Centerville 44 to 22. They defeated Clarinda Junior College 43-40 in their second game which was played on the home floor. Against their traditional jinx rivals, the Burlington, Iowa, Blackhawks, Graceland emerged on the short end of a 67-60 score in the third game of the season.

President Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., was the luncheon speaker at a regional meeting of the American College Public Relations Association and the American Alumni Council in Kansas City on December 4. R. Edwin Browne, Graceland's Public Relations Director, is chairman of District 8 of the A.C.P.R.A., which includes representatives from most of the colleges and universities in Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, and North and South Dakota.

The Wednesday night fellowship of December 6, one of a series of five services on the theme, "Dating, Courtship, and Marriage," offered a panel of three faculty members who gave their answers to questions which had been placed in a question box by students during the preceding week. Questions ranged from how to get a date to the advisability of marriage in the face of the world crisis.

A series of outstanding motion pictures, including The Grapes of Wrath, Jane Eyre, The Snake Pit, and Romeo and Juliet, is being shown free of charge in the chapel. The purpose of the series is threefold. In addition to providing the students with high quality of entertainment, the donations requested at the door are being saved toward the purchase of a screen large enough to be used effectively in the Memorial Student Center, and the pictures chosen supplement the regular classwork of many departments.

Glen Johnston, who will be awarded a Bachelor of Art Education degree from Kansas City University when he leaves Graceland at the semester, has presented one of his paintings, "The Student," to President E. J. Gleazer, Jr. The oil painting, representing a woman writing, is one of ten that were shown in a Kansas City exhibit. It will be hung in the lounge of the Memorial Student Center. Johnston hopes the painting will stimulate the formation of an art department at Graceland.

of them all. We turn, almost bewildered by this abundance, from one to another, feeling almost greedy in our desire to learn everywhere at once. We feel almost fearful lest we miss a chance for growth where such chances are all around us.

There comes a new realization of the significance of all that has been increasingly available to us through the years. It was so close that we very easily could have missed it entirely.

So, during this sojourn at home, we are really appreciating our blessings. We presume our stay will be comparatively brief, and one day in the future the two little boys and Mother will walk up the gangplank onto a ship Japan-bound. While we are here, surrounded daily by all those forces of love and unity which are here to continue to uplift us and strengthen us against the time when they will not be so readily apparent, we are drinking of all this spiritual abundance in great draughts. As a thirsty man quenches his thirst when he comes upon a well of cool, pure water, we are refreshing ourselves in this oasis, marveling over and over again at our heart-shaking discovery of how deep the well.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

December magazines are full of Christmas material, of course, and we hope you have already found for yourself the many delightful pieces that were available. As you will read this after Christmas, however, we shall confine our recommendations mainly to articles containing other subject matter.

"What You Can Do Personally to Stop Communism," Woman's Home Companion, is an outstanding article aimed at each American, with concrete suggestions about what each of us can do.

You will enjoy the loving sense of humor, and the anecdotes about famous people, in "Dear Sam: Do You Remember?" Woman's Home Companion, by the wife of Samuel Goldwyn.

"The Patient's Wife," Good Housekeeping, is not such pleasant reading, but it says many things that need to be said, and that will help any woman faced with her husband's illness.

"My Cure for Comics," McCall's, is good if you have that problem, and my personal experience confirms its effectiveness.

"Community Begins at Home," Ladies' Home Journal, is an excellent discussion of stable home life, and its value in the world today.

One piece especially written for Christmas, I must mention, for it carries a year-around message—it is "Room in the Inn," Ladies' Home Journal.

Television is becoming common enough that many of you may be interested in "What Shall We Do About Television?" Parents' Magazine. It is a symposium of the problems and how several parents have solved them.

With the new emphasis on permissive attitudes in child care, "Children Need Sensible Parents," Parents' Magazine, is particularly needed, for it discusses the sensible limits to which it should be carried.

For a warm feeling in your heart read "The Mystery of Minnie," Reader's Digest.

Concerning Herald House Prices

In another part of this issue of the "Herald" will be found an announcement concerning several Herald House price changes. A number of these involve price increases on certain of our books, and a number of others are reductions in price of some titles which have been published for sometime.

As was the case during World War II, Herald House is making and will continue to make every possible effort to keep its prices as low as possible. The fact remains, however, that when costs of the component parts of our products show consistent increases, we must attempt to keep up with these advances in order that we may not ultimately become a financial burden upon the church.

During the past six months, the cost of materials (paper, bookbinders' cloth, etc.) has advanced four and five times on some items. Since our last prices were set, labor costs have also increased. The price adjustments announced in this issue are in the nature of an equalization, rather than any "across the board" increase for all items. They were previously announced to our book stewards.

Herald House has greatly appreciated the co-operation of all members of the church during the past year and solicits the continued understanding of the members through the trying period which all publishers are now experiencing.

Kenneth L. Graham, Manager.

She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on August 5, 1909, to which she was ever faithful. Until recently she attended the Buffalo, New York, Branch, where she held membership for over twenty years. On July 25, 1900, she was married to James Huff; two children were born to them, one dying in infancy.

She is survived by her husband; a daughter Mrs. Pearl Scott; a sister; a brother; one grandchild and one great-grandchild. Services were conducted by Elder Walter O. Simpson at the Hilliard Funeral Home in Tonawanda, New York. Interment was in Elm Lawn Cemetery.

JOHNSON.—Albert Thabe, son of Thabe and Gertrude Johnson, was born on April 9, 1884, in Hannover, Germany, and died November 14, 1950, at St. Margaret's Hospital in Kansas City, Kansas. He came with his parents to America when he was two years old. On September 15, 1909, he married Jennie Elizabeth McKee; four children were born to them: Forest M. (who preceded his father in death), Herman W., Violet Mae, and Gladys Lucille. Mr. Johnson was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1922. For thirty years he was employed as a switchman by the St. Joseph Terminal Railroad, from which he retired in April, 1950.

He leaves his wife Jennie; a son; two daughters; one sister, Bertha; and nine grandchildren. Elder Emery Jennings was in charge of the funeral service. Burial was in the St. Joseph, Missouri, cemetery.

BAILEY.—Floyd Frederick, son of Frederick G. and Celia E. Bailey, was born at Lamoni, Iowa, and died October 22, 1950, at Independence, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 18, 1909, and on April 8, 1921, was married to Mary E. Dodson. They moved to Independence and resided there for twenty-nine years. For the past twenty-six years he had been owner and operator of the Bailey Plumbing and Heating Company.

He is survived by his wife, Mary, of the home; and three sisters: Mrs. Hattie Criley of Independence; Mrs. Bertha Burgess of Chicago, Illinois; and Miss Florence Bailey of the home. Funeral services were conducted at Stone Church, Elders Glaude A. Smith, Donald V. Lents, and M. L. Parker officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

CARTER.—Albert Alma, was born February 16, 1877, and died October 13, 1950, in Surry, Maine. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in his youth and was ordained a priest on November 3, 1929. For many years he served as solicitor.

He leaves his wife Olive J. Carter; a daughter, Mrs. Douglas Candage of Surry; three sons: Freeman J. and Lorado C. of Surry, and Lawrence C. of North Deer Isle; two stepdaughters: Mrs. Howard Link of North Ellsworth and Mrs. Bernice Carter of Surry; and one stepson, Roland O. Taylor of Ellsworth.

MOSIER.—Mary E., daughter of Hiram and Rena Byrne, was born October 23, 1878, and died August 9, 1950, at her home in Byrneville, Indiana. She was married on August 22, 1898, to S. O. Mosier; five children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since December 16, 1905.

She is survived by her husband; two daughters: Mrs. Alma Harrison and Mrs. Ruth Smith, both of Byrneville; three sons: Wilbur and Fulton Mosier of Byrneville, and Millard Mosier of the United States Army, Bowling Field, Maryland; two sisters: Mrs. Emma Voyles of New Albany and Mrs. Minnie Flick of Kokomo, Indiana; and a brother, Warren Byrne, of Georgetown. Funeral services were conducted by Elder H. W. Burwell at the Reorganized Church in Byrneville. Interment was in the Wolfe Cemetery, Georgetown, Indiana.

and he weren't limping a little, I would be a bit disappointed, too."

Of course the last reunion had to be when Uncle Henry was getting feeble. He had informed us during that week that his missionary days were to be ended because of feebleness. When the dear missionary climbed into the lumber wagon which was to take him away, he waved his cane and called good-by cheerily. We tried to respond as cheerily, but there were lumps in our throats, and tears in our eyes.

I trust today, somewhere in the church, there is a missionary so beloved that a little child can cling to his coat and plead, "Don't go. Please, don't go. We love you."

seated in the ballroom of the Muehlebach Hotel.

Soloists contributing to the performance were, in order of their appearance, Garland Tickemyer, tenor, of Los Angeles; Maurice Nord, bass, of Springfield, Illinois; Virginia Ehwa, contralto, and Josephine Mader, soprano, both of Kansas City.

GRACELAND FEATURED

A two-page article featuring Graceland College appeared in the November 26 edition of the "Des Moines Register and Tribune" Magazine Section. The pictorial feature appeared on pages 6 and 7 of the paper and cited the various geographical backgrounds of Graceland students.

PICTURE PRESENTED

On December 1 Glen Johnston, a student of Graceland who is from Independence, presented his painting "The Student" to President E. J. Gleazer of Graceland College. The painting which was one of ten that were shown in a Kansas City exhibit will be hung in the lounge of the Memorial Student Center.

WHITE MASQUE

"The Little Town of Bethlehem" was the Christmas play presented by the White Masque Players December 12, 14, and 15 in the Stone Church Little Theatre. The three-act presentation was directed by Nina Maloney with Corrine Martin and Robert Akers starred in the leads.

tion finally pulls open the curtain on Book of Mormon geography, some of us may be surprised.

Mr. Nadaillac says, "America does not stint her surprises for those who study her ancient history . . . Here, too, we are in the presence of nameless people, of races without a written history; and to add to our difficulties, new discoveries are daily made, upsetting preconceived hypotheses, breaking down earlier theories, and completely destroying what had appeared to be the best founded conclusions."⁶

I shall be glad to receive suggestions and criticisms, and I shall respond to them. My address is R.F.D. 5, Warrensburg, Missouri.

 ON PUBLIC SPEAKING

Credit our young friend, Linda Snider, of the South Chrysler congregation, with a wise observation and a valuable bit of advice for all public speakers. She is just ten, and you can believe that she is speaking her convictions.

"I like to listen to you," she said, "because I can understand you. Some speakers just mumble, mumble all the time. And some of them talk like they don't want to talk to us."

If a speaker resents his task in his own heart, it will inevitably appear in his manner. Learn to like your audience, and enjoy speaking to them.

Well, Mr. Speaker, and Reverend Preacher, remember that the ten-year-old who sits there in church school is important. In a few years when Mama can't send her any more, she will decide for herself whether to attend or not. If you make a poor impression now, she may not be there at all. She is listening to you, more intelligently and critically than you may imagine.

And you, Sirs—pastors and preachers—when you are shaking hands at the door with the departing congregation, do not forget to look down into the faces of the children, smile at them and greet them, for they are the future. In a few years they will swing the elections, fill the offices, do the work, and pay the bills. The child you love today will be the man who loves you when you are old and tired.

 NOW THAT IT'S OVER—

Nobody can accuse us of trying to influence the election.

Politicians are always worrying about getting out the vote. In general, only 60 per cent of us register; only 40 per cent of us vote. That makes it possible for 21 per cent of us to control the election. The people who don't vote kick the loudest.

Certainly we ought to vote. But if the Government tells us we must, it will be only a little while until it tells us how we must vote. How would you like a "Ja" vote in America? You, there . . . maybe you'd better get out and use your ballot before you lose it!

If politicians want more people to vote, why don't they organize a Women's Party? That would certainly pep things up. Think what a national convention of powder-puff patriots would be like, with the Bridge Club Bloc, mezzo-soprano oratory, secret deals over the tea cups (Well, they're better than the hiccups, over which men make their deals), and scented boudoir art on the campaign posters.

What would happen to this country if the girls really got together? They could vote out rotten politics and incompetent politicians. They could ruin every Tammany Hall, big and little, in the country. They could break the infamous link between politics and the national crime syndicate, and send every gangster to Alcatraz.

They could. But would they?

We have no right to expect better judgment, intelligence, or ethical standards of women than of men. Men would like to shift all the burdens and responsibilities to Mother's shoulders. It is a part of the lazy way of men.

However, it probably won't work that way. Aunt Tilly is just as staunch a Republican as Uncle Ben is a Democrat. The other side is stubborn and unreasonable, just as we are firm and loyal!

HAWAII

A. Orlin Crownover, district president in Hawaii reports that Elder Avon Yap and Elder James Kemp have baptized eleven, completing one family circle and making many new contacts. In addition to their missionary work, they spent considerable time on a family survey of the island of Hawaii.

Brother Crownover also reports that the total baptisms for the year was at least fifty-two with the possibility that two or three more will be completed before the year is finished. This is the highest total ever achieved in the islands in one year.

L. F. P. CURRY ELECTED

High Priest L. F. P. Curry has been elected as the new president of the Independence Chamber of Commerce. Brother Curry is a member of the Stake High Council and also serves as associate pastor at the Stone Church.

DeLAPP SPEAKS

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp was the principal speaker at the regular meeting of the Optimist Club, December 27. His subject was "A Viewpoint of Economic Conditions in Germany and England." Brother DeLapp has just returned from an extended tour of these two and other countries.

BRANCH ORGANIZED

The Benton Harbor, Michigan, group was organized into a branch, November 26. District President Luther S. Troyer presided. A solo was sung by Sister Betty Trimble. Deacon L. I. Tacy read the history of the mission which has extended over seventeen years. Elder V. L. Coonfare was elected pastor.

EDITORIAL STAFF CHANGES

Miss Barbara Peavy of Mobile, Alabama, started her work as editor of "Stepping Stones" and Assistant Editor of church school literature in the young people's division on December 18. She succeeds Mrs. Emma M. Phillips who will do some part-time editorial work while acting as Stake leader for the Skylark movement.

Miss Gladys Omohundro, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, became private secretary to the managing editor on November 30, succeeding Miss June Robb who became Mrs. Wallace Rice on December 22.

INCORRECTLY REPORTED

In the December 11 issue in the Missionary Endeavors report, it should have read, "At Lawrence, the Kaw Valley area was organized into a district." The official title of the district is the Kaw Valley District.

AUDITORIUM DINNER

The Employee's Club of the Auditorium held a Christmas Dinner Party on December 22 at the South Chrysler church. Songs were rendered by Burhl Hill. "The Littlest Angel" was read by Eleanor Heady. Bishop Leslie Kohlman was master of ceremonies. Norma Smith accompanied on the piano for carol singing by those attending the dinner. Stake President C. V. Graham was Santa Claus for the occasion.

We'd Like You to Know

P. Guy Fairbanks

Seen at his secretarial desk in the office of the First Presidency is genial Guy. To General Conference crowds, he is a familiar figure at the table where the official minutes are made and read. He is Assistant General Church Secretary. His training and experience are drawn on continually to keep the records straight. Since 1900 Guy has been using shorthand to help people remember what they have said for their contemporaries and posterity to read.

In 1917 he was called to Independence from his home in Chicago to do secretarial work in the office of the Presiding Bishopric. A few months later he was asked to transfer to the Presidency's office to fill in because of the serious illness of O. W. Newton. This "temporary arrangement" lasted ten years, because Guy made himself not only congenial but indispensable.

Another thing which makes P. G. such a valuable man in his dual capacity to the church is the ten years he spent at Herald House (1933-1943) where he acquired a thorough knowledge of church literature and publishing activities. Here he worked at various times on advertising, circulation, cataloging, and orders.

With his wife, Lillian E. (Dean), he lives at 1110 West Walnut street. He has four children, Delores, Maynard, Alma, and James—all married. Guy is an elder, but prefers to let other elders do the public speaking—not that he has any speech impediment; he is a good conversationalist and makes and keeps friends easily. Singing is a little out of his line, but he can really play that typewriter.

A Time for faith

NOW IS THE TIME to show the quality of our faith. Of course, such a statement is always true. But it is specially so in times of crisis and it is most clearly so in times of world-wide crisis. In such times as these men of faith come into their own.

The Apostle Paul was keenly aware of this and made it the basis of his classic message in the Hebrew letter. Faith, according to this letter, is assurance based on evidence. This evidence is not apparent to all men, not to educated men or shrewd men or wealthy men, just because they are cultured or able or rich. But it is apparent to men of God: men of every sort and condition who love God and so are honest and just and good. Such men of God see truths which men who are morally and spiritually blind can never see. They walk in the light and have powerful inner assurance that no darkness can ever entirely put out the light. Such assurances—such faith—is especially precious in times like these.

Paul says that "faith is the assurance of things hoped for." It is the assurance that the noblest and best hope of all mankind is fully justified—that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ truly lives, that he is at work in the world, and that his purposes fail not. It is an assurance which reaches out to refine and guarantee all our secondary hopes in relation to this which rightfully comes first.

Faith includes assurance that these recurring crises are important to God because he is so fully committed to our salvation. He is not an on-looker, sitting aloof and unconcerned while we work out our own destiny. He is a field commander whose only Son died for the Cause and whose persistence even at such a cost assures us that he will never forsake us.

The faith which is assurance of these things is not blind, for it has behind it the record of all the mighty acts of God. It is not passive, for it lays on us the obligation of confident and continuing service. It is not irrelevant, for its significance is everywhere apparent. It is the gospel in action, the power of God for our salvation, the victory which overcomes the world.

Random Thoughts

A house was on fire. Flames had transformed the interior into a furnace that seemed as hot as the one into which Daniel and his companions were cast. Its searing heat could be felt at a considerable distance by those who stood solemnly watching it. Precious possessions were being destroyed, and the family were lucky to save themselves. Abject and miserable, they stood with tears in their eyes as they watched things perish.

One never sees a fire without reflecting, "This could have happened to me."

These thoughts occurred too: "The building cannot be saved. But the builder lives, and will build again. He will build better than before. The fire robs him of something that he loved, but bound him to the past. His new home will be different."

* * * *

I stood at the bedside of one who was ill and in great pain. This sickness seemed like a tragedy. It was costing so much. It had broken up cherished plans that my friend had made.

However, it was not all a loss. Something could be salvaged out of the experience. I knew that my friend would live. Out of this hard time he would learn and gain something that would make a different man of him.

The fire of trial had destroyed the structure of existence he had planned. But the builder lived, and he would build again, better than before.

* * * *

In the fires of war, we see the world burning before our eyes. It seems like irremediable disaster. We cannot justify it. But it may be that something better will come. The building perishes, but the builders live.

Across the Desk

Elder James W. Davis of Ava, Missouri, for many years a church appointee, writes to President Israel A. Smith as follows:

I want to tell you that I am more than pleased with this souvenir* you brought us from Australia. I am delighted. Tiona is one of my great loves.

I had been appointed one of a committee to locate a site for a reunion ground, and while visiting among the Saints of Tuncurry, I went up on the mountain there that marks the entrance to the little harbor, and from there I got my first view of Tiona, ten miles down the coast. It was like Moses viewing the Promised Land from afar, for when I saw it, the Spirit indicated to me, "There is your reunion grounds."

When I reported my discovery to the other members of the committee, Brethren M. A. McConley of the Twelve, Bishop George Lewis, W. J. Haworth, George Parker, and Earnest Wright, we were in full agreement that we had found the proper place.

The mission conference of December, 1922, authorized us to go ahead and purchase the land—eighty acres with about a mile of frontage on that lovely sea beach with beautiful Wallace Lake on the other side.

Soon after acquiring the land, the committee met to arrange for the development of the project, and I was assigned the work of making necessary clearing of the land and getting some buildings up. So I was in charge of that part of the work and did much of it with my own hands. However, I was ably assisted by quite a number of the brethren from up and down the New South Wales coast, including Stanley Ballard, A. V. Robinson, A. L. Loving, Hermann Peisker, William Maybury, and numerous others. Sister Inez, Sister Loving, Sr., and Sister Addie Ballard made a noble contribution by cooking for the crew. I should also mention that Brother Loving, Sr., helped us.

Our work in connection with the development of Tiona is outstanding among our missionary experiences and one of our most pleasant memories. We were a happy group of workers. And when we finally were able to meet with the Saints in our first reunion in December, 1923, our spiritual experiences amply repaid us for all our toil. We are older now and living with our memories. I am in poor health, and so is Inez. Right now she is having a bad attack of sciatica and is suffering much pain. We are still doing what we can to assist in the work of the church, but of course we haven't the vigor and push of former years.

Yesterday we had a visit from Brethren D. O. Chesworth and Stephen Black; they certainly revived our spirits. Brother Black has already established himself in the hearts of the people here in our part of the district, and we love to have him come among us. Brother Chesworth's sermon Monday night was very inspiring.

Again we want to thank you for your kindly remembrance. We surely appreciate it.

Now that the Holiday Season is so near, we send you our heartiest greetings,

Official

Book of Mormon Institute

All Book of Mormon students will be interested in attending, and inviting their friends to attend, the Book of Mormon Institute to be held in the Stone Church, January 7 to 14 inclusive. There will be a very worth-while program of classwork and lectures presented during the day, with evening services focused on the archaeological evidences significant to the Book of Mormon.

We invite you to participate with us in this very worth-while endeavor to make the Book of Mormon more effective in the lives of the Saints.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

and also to all the folks in the department of the First Presidency.

With abiding love,
James W. and Inez Davis.

*The principal street in the camp at Tiona Reunion Grounds is named "Davis Avenue," in honor of Brother and Sister Davis. When I visited these grounds in August last, I picked up a stone from Davis Avenue to bring to Brother and Sister Davis. Patriarch Charles Dickinson, when I informed him as to my intention, though convalescing from a long illness, asked his sons to have made a base of Australian walnut, highly polished, which he gave to me. After my return I fastened the stone to the base and sent the souvenir to Brother and Sister Davis as a desk ornament to remind them of their ministry in Australia where the Saints hold them in loving and enduring memory.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Los Angeles, Calif.

December 12, 1950

To the First Presidency:

Our new church building in the Van Nuys mission in Los Angeles was opened and consecrated Sunday, December 10. It was my privilege and pleasure to preach the first sermon in the new building at the eleven o'clock service. The invocation and benediction were given by my son Lynn. This building, originally a dwelling house, was donated by Mr. Joseph N. Chase, a well-to-do nonmember. It was moved from its original site to the present location to clear land for a new development.

The building is of excellent construction, two stories high, and I am told about forty by sixty feet in width and length. The members of the congregation through their own volunteer labor stuccoed and repainted the entire exterior in pleasing colors and remodeled and redecorated the entire interior, with the exception of the installation of central plumbing and central lighting units. This entailed a great amount of hard work and careful planning.

There is a commodious main auditorium, kitchen facilities, and basement to be utilized later for various purposes. And there are more classrooms available than are to be found in most of our church buildings, even in Independence. The mission is less than two years old, and the progress made is remarkable. The members are missionary minded and plan to carry on an aggressive missionary campaign. They have interested some of our Mormon friends. The song leader at the morning service is a recent convert from that church.

Mr. Chase and his wife were present at both the forenoon and afternoon services. The building was Mr.

Geography

A department for replies to debatable topics printed in the Herald. The views expressed here do not necessarily reflect church policy nor commit the Herald or its editors. Our limited space will not permit us to print many articles on the same subject.—EDITORS.

NEW EVIDENCES concerning the geography of the Book of Mormon suggests that maps prepared by the archaeological committee selected by the church in 1894 should be clarified. The effect of the committee's contribution was far-reaching and resulted in a general stimulation of interest in the Book of Mormon, but it should be clearly understood that there was no freezing of thought or research on the subject by the church. The canon of writings on Book of Mormon geography was not declared closed. The church was wise in anticipating facts the future might disclose, for in dealing with American archaeology one enters an inexhaustible and difficult field. The committee doubtlessly was pleased that the church did not officially endorse the maps as correct. There has been no official endorsement by the church of any interpretation of Book of Mormon geography.

A rapidly growing body of students today believes the landing place of Lehi and his colony, one of the three groups divinely led to America, was in Central America, not on the coast of Chile in South America as indicated on the maps prepared by the committee. In accordance with the theory of the South American landing place, the lands and cities of the Nephites and Lamanites are located by the committee in the vast area which is now Chile, Peru, Ecuador, Colombia, the Isthmus of Panama, Central America, Mexico, and the northeastern part of the United States.

Which is the more probable landing place of Lehi and his company, Chile or Central America? It is at once recognized of importance in the study of Book of Mormon geography, whether one starts the civilization of the Nephites far down in South America or in Central America.

THE REGION where Lehi landed was known in Book of Mormon times as the "land of Nephi," and was "south of the land of Zarahemla."¹ As the land of Nephi was "divided from the land of Zarahemla by a narrow strip of wilderness,"² if the land of Nephi were in South America, so would be the land of Zarahemla.

We read:

And thus the land of Nephi, and the land of Zarahemla, were nearly surrounded by water; there being a small neck of land between the land northward, and the land southward.³

View a map of South America and discover, if you can, how the lands of Nephi and Zarahemla, represented on the maps of the committee as extending from Chile to the northwestern part of South America, could be "nearly surrounded by water." It is no answer to say the whole continent of South America is nearly surrounded by water with the Isthmus of Panama keeping the water divided; for the record says the "land of Nephi and the land of Zarahemla," not the continent, were "nearly surrounded by water."

Alma, writing about 65 B.C., twice refers to a "narrow pass which led by the sea into the land northward, yea, by the sea, on the west and on the east,"⁴ and Mormon, writing about A.D. 360, refers to it as "the narrow passage which led into the land southward," the "narrow pass which led into the land southward."⁵

In a book just off the press by Milton R. Hunter and Thomas Stuart Ferguson, entitled Ancient America and the Book of Mormon, page 183, is the following:

At the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, adjacent to ancient Hue-hue-Tlapallan (ancient Bountiful-land), is a narrow pass meeting all the requirements of the pass referred to by the Nephite historians. It is on the Gulf of Mexico side of Tehuantepec. One of the writers studied and photographed it from a Cub plane in 1948. It runs by the sea for about seventy miles in a general northwesterly-southeasterly direction.*

It appears this "narrow pass" was a notable route of migration between the land southward and the land northward by the seashore at the narrow neck of land. Mormon's reference to it in A.D.

360 establishes that it remained practically unchanged by what occurred in the earth at the time of the crucifixion of Christ, and also leads to the conclusion that probably no change of great importance occurred in the coastal contour of the near-by lands southward, Zarahemla and Nephi, which were "nearly surrounded by water."

IS THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA, as indicated on the committee's maps, the "small neck of land" separating what the Book of Mormon calls the "land northward" from the "land southward"? There are many reasons why this isthmus cannot be the "small neck of land." The question then arises, Where is the "small neck of land between the land northward and the land southward," the location of which is of the utmost importance as a key to Book of Mormon geography? It is not sufficient just to find a narrow neck of land. There are a number of such regions, such as the isthmuses of Panama, Honduras, and Tehuantepec.

The prophet Alma refers to the "narrow neck which led into the land northward."⁶ It should be noted that not only did this narrow neck separate the land northward from the land southward, but here the people multiplied and spread "insomuch that they began to cover the face of the whole earth from the sea south, to the sea north, and from the sea west, to the sea east."⁷

J. A. Washburn and J. N. Washburn, of the Mormon church, whom I consider high among the best writers on Book of Mormon geography, say:

Where was the narrow neck of land? Have the readers of the Book of Mormon in the past been right in assuming that the present Isthmus of Panama is the place?

The present writers doubt this very seriously. They feel confident that the narrow neck of land was farther north. One of the foremost authorities in the church placed it at the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and a number of other students have agreed with this. The present writers have no objection though this is the result of a feeling rather than any definite evidence. But, then, is there any proof that the Isthmus of Panama was the narrow neck of the Book of Mormon? There is none.

For want of something better the writers tentatively accept the view that the Isthmus of Tehuantepec was the narrow neck.⁸

The Isthmus of Panama does not meet the requirements, as does the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, of being the "narrow neck of land" separating the land northward from the land southward, the region being surrounded by north, south, east, and west seas.

LOCATING THE "NARROW NECK OF LAND" at the Isthmus of Panama leads to trouble. This isthmus is over four hundred miles in length. We read that because of a "great dearth upon the land" and the inhabitants' flocks fleeing before poisonous serpents "towards the land southward, which was called by the Nephites, Zarahemla," the people went into the "land southward to hunt food for the people of the land."⁹ This would mean going the whole distance through a humid, tropical area for food, and returning with it. And animals went from the land northward into the land southward "for food."¹⁰ Did animals also travel four hundred miles for food?

The Isthmus of Panama is narrower than the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, but it does not follow from this that the choice should go to the Isthmus of Panama as the narrow neck separating the land northward from the land southward. One can envisage the Isthmus of Tehuantepec as the "narrow neck of land," Mexico as the "land northward," Central America as the "land southward," and the people spreading out "from the sea south, to the sea north, from the sea west to the sea east."

Miguel Covarrubias says of this area:

Powerful arts and impressive techniques were developed there, together with an inner drive to erect monumental cities and colossal sculptures. . . .

A great and mysterious race of artists seems to have lived since early times on the Isthmus (of Tehuantepec), partly around Los Tuxtlas and the Coatzacoalcos River Basin. Everywhere there are archaeological treasures that lie hidden in the jungle and under the rich soil of southern Vera Cruz, burial mounds and pyramids, masterfully carved colossal monuments of basalt, splendid statuettes of precious jade and sensitively modeled figurines of clay, all of unprecedented high artistic quality. The tantalizing presence of a great and remote past in what is now uninhabited, impenetrable jungle is all the more puzzling because most archaeologists now agree that these artistic masterpieces date back to the beginnings of the Christian Era. Appearing suddenly out of nowhere in a state of full development, they constitute a culture that seems to have been the root, the mother culture, from which the later and better known (Maya, Totonac, Zapotec, etc.) cultures sprang.¹¹

I know of no student who says there were no Nephites in South America. The Book of Mormon speaks of "many of the Nephites" entering a "large ship" built by Hagoth, 54 B.C., who took their course northward,¹² and there may have been many who moved into South America.

THE LEGEND OF FOUR BROTHERS conducting the first inhabitants of Peru toward the valley of Cuzco, in which the "younger of the brothers, who, according to tradition, was at the same time the most skillful and hardy, wishing to enjoy alone the plenitude of power, rid himself of two of his brothers, by enclosing one of them in a cave, and throwing the other into a deep hole and caused the third to fly to a distant province,"¹³ appears to be a distorted tradition of the famed four brothers of Book of Mormon history: Laman, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi, a tradition that could have been carried to South America by colonists from Central America.

The Book of Mormon indicates the movement of Nephite civilization was northward, but this does not necessarily mean the Nephites moved from Chile northward. The movement could have been northward from a point in Central America.

The committee on its maps locates the place of the final battle resulting in the destruction of the Nephite civilization in Cumorah, New York. This location is challenged by many students of Book of Mormon geography. Because the plates of the Book of Mormon were found there, that does not establish that the last great battle of the Nephites was fought there. The hill Cumorah where the battle was fought was "in a land of many waters, rivers and fountains." This region appears to be located by the seashore slightly northward of the narrow pass. Here is an intricate system of lagoons, lakes, and great rivers meeting the requirements of the record in the Book of Mormon. The evidence does not support the theory of two large armies going the immense distance from the region of the "narrow neck of land," separating the land northward from the land southward, to New York to fight what proved to be the destruction of the Nephite civilization.

Clark Wissler says:

"In North America, no stone carving worthy of the name occurs north of the Rio Grande."¹⁴

THE QUESTION ARISES, Did the original Book of Mormon current of civilization flow from South America to Central America and Mexico, or from Mexico and Central America to South America? South American influences are known to have extended north of the Isthmus of Panama, and there is evidence of Central American influence in South America. There is evidence of both South American penetrations in Middle America, and Middle American penetrations in South America.

Alfred Kidder II, who has served as tutor in anthropology at Harvard and research associate of Peabody Museum, in an article, "South American Penetrations in Middle America," presents a statement of the problem:

Although there are numerous traits of culture common to both Middle and South America, in most cases the place of origin is uncertain. It is reasonable to suppose that an interchange of ideas, techniques, and actual objects had been going on for many centuries prior to the Conquest. Some of the later introductions into Middle America are undoubted. Further in the past, however, it becomes increasingly difficult to find satisfactory evidence for the time or place of origin of given traits, and the direction of dispersal from a center. Thus the question of penetration, viewed broadly, entails the entire problem of the origin, development, and history of the higher culture of the New World.¹⁵

Note that Mr. Kidder says some of the later introductions into Middle America are undoubted, but that "further in the past it becomes increasingly difficult to find satisfactory evidence for the time or place of origin of given traits, and the direction of dispersal from a center."

Philip Ainsworth Means, a member of the Yale Peruvian Expedition of 1914-1915, gives his opinion that culture was brought into the Andean area from Central America, one route of which he suggests was by following the shoreline of the Pacific Ocean to Panama and thence along the western shore of South America. He believes that "between about 1000 B. C. and the beginning of the Christian Era, people of the archaic culture were filtering into the Andean area."¹⁶

Thomas A. Joyce, who organized archaeological expeditions to British Honduras in 1906, 1927, 1929, 1930 and directed them personally on each occasion, and was president of the Royal Archaeological Institute, 1931-33, says:

"While there are traditions of a southerly and southwesterly movement of peoples, there is no single account of a movement in the reverse direction."¹⁷

SOME READERS of the Book of Mormon believe that across the "narrow neck of land" was the "distance of a day and a half's journey for a Nephite." Therefore, they may ask, how can the Isthmus of Tehuantepec be the "narrow neck of land"?

We read:

And now it was only the distance of a day and a half's journey for a Nephite, on the line Bountiful, and the land Desolation, from the east to the west sea.¹⁸

It should be observed that this text does not state the "narrow neck of land" separating the land northward from the land southward was the "distance of a day and a half's journey for a Nephite;" it says the "line"—boundary line—between Bountiful, which was part of the land southward that bordered on the narrow neck of land, and Desolation, the land northward, was the distance stated. And the text does not state that the "line" extended from the east sea to the west sea, but "from the east to the west sea."

Note similar language in the following quotations:

It came to pass that the Nephites had inhabited the land Bountiful, even from the east unto the west sea.¹⁹

And the Nephites were driven even into the land of Bountiful; and there they did fortify against the Lamanites, from the west sea, even unto the east; it being a day's journey for a Nephite, on the line which they had fortified and stationed their armies to defend their north country.²⁰

The Nephites' fortification against the Lamanites was not on the whole line separating Bountiful from the land northward, but "from the west sea, even unto the east," it "being a day's journey for a Nephite, on the line which they had fortified."

In the foregoing quotations, composed of precise language, in none of which sea follows east, may not "east" mean simply eastward, which would suggest that the boundary line between Bountiful and Desolation did not extend entirely across the "narrow neck of land," but from "the east to the west sea"—such line being the "distance of a day and a half's journey for a Nephite"? If the boundary line did not extend from sea to sea, it was this line, and not the "narrow neck of land," which was in width a "day and a half's journey for a Nephite."

The record of the flocks fleeing from the land northward before poisonous serpents "towards the land southward, which was called by the Nephites, Zarahemla," implies that both Bountiful and Zarahemla formed the division line between the land northward and the land southward.

THE APPEARANCE OF WIRACocha, the white and bearded personage who looms prominently as a deity in Peruvian traditions, on the Island of Titicaca, in Lake Titicaca, is strongly supported by traditions reported by trustworthy Spanish historians who arrived in Peru very soon after the Spanish conquest. As Jesus appeared after his resurrection to groups of Israelites in widely-separated regions of Palestine, he could have appeared to the believing Israelites in Mexico and South America. The following words of Christ addressed to his people in the land Bountiful reveal that in his resurrected state he would minister to people in several separated areas:

And verily, verily, I say unto you, that I have other sheep, which are not of this land; neither of the land of Jerusalem; neither in any parts of that land round about, whither I have been to minister.²¹

If it be thought that Central America and Mexico are too small in area to contain the Book of Mormon peoples, reflect upon the country in which the main events recorded in the Bible took place:

We are astonished when we learn the actual size of the mainland of the Bible, Palestine. It is only one and one-half times as large as the state of Connecticut, one of the smallest states in the union. . . .

From Egypt to Palestine, a distance in which Israel spent forty years, is less than three hundred miles. From Dan to Beersheba, in the opposite extremes of Palestine, is one hundred and fifty miles. From Jerusalem to Moab, where Naomi spent so many lonely years, and from which it was such a great undertaking to return, is about thirty miles. Hannah, who lived at Ramah and went once a year to see her son Samuel, traveled fifteen miles each way. David and the Philistines were separated by twenty-five miles!

And when the Master, driven from Nazareth, went to Capernaum to make that the center of his ministry, he walked some twenty miles across the hills.²²

The Bible is a record of God's people in a small land, and the area may not be very large in which the events occurred as chronicled in the Book of Mormon.

Chase's ancestral and boyhood home. He and his family lived there after his marriage also. He seemed greatly pleased that the building is now turned to such a consecrated purpose.

The Saints of this mission are located in a good neighborhood in the famed San Fernando Valley. They stand high in the respect of the community and have had excellent publicity in the city papers. At the afternoon meeting Stake President Garland E. Tickemyer was the speaker; Pastor Douglas R. Clarke was in charge. Other speakers on the program were as follows: Joseph N. Chase, donor of the building; Reverend Charles W. Hasselbach, Minister of the Lutheran Church of the Redeemer; James G. Moran, Secretary-manager of the Van Nuys Chamber of Commerce; Glenn Davis, former pastor of the Van Nuys mission; Mrs. Stanley Gordon, President of the Riverside Drive Parent-Teacher Association; George T. Swartzott, Superintendent of McKinley Home for Boys; Robert A. Crismond, President of the Sherman Oaks Chamber of Commerce; John Sloan, Editor of Sherman Oaks Sun; Richard Arlen, Honorary Mayor of Sherman Oaks; Honorable Lloyd Davies, city councilman from this district.

The new building is one in which the church may justly take pride, and the rapid and stable growth of the mission is something to bring great satisfaction.

Those Self-satisfied Musicians

BY EDITH G. BEGGS

People who are forever blowing their own horns seldom realize that anyone else has a horn to blow, and would never hear it if he did.

Theirs ears are filled with their own music. Their lives revolve around them, their horns, and the noise they make.

Funeral Sermon of

Samuel A. Burgess

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

Stone Church, November 29, 1950

MY DEAR FRIENDS, we have met this afternoon not to reason about immortality or to prove by some system of logic the fact or the hope of the resurrection. We take for granted here that these great doctrines have already laid hold on us and have enriched us. Nature and Scripture alike testify of the divine intention; that is, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. And this intention is, we believe, the law which governs the whole of the physical creation from the smallest living cells to the bodies of great and good men. The end and purpose of life is in all we see, in what we hear, and sometimes "half perceive."

We have met to honor a good man. We must here endeavor to interpret the grace of God in his life, and perchance to worship together as we remember.

The most important thing about a man is not his grace of form or figure, his physical skill or prowess; it is not his wealth or his fame. The important thing about a man is not even what happens to him—his fortunes or his misfortunes. The significance of personality, and indeed of every person, or any particular person, is in what he stands for—in what his ruling passion is—for his ruling passion is his God. It lies in what determines his choice in times of crisis when the gales arise in the sea of life, how his sails are set, and whether or not he has the will and the strength of purpose to keep on his course and use the storm and the wind as a means of hastening him toward his port. It isn't what happens to him, but how he permits it to affect his life. Not whether he lives, but how. It's the nature of the cause or causes which demands his allegiance. The question is not is he able to live, but is he fit to die? Not does he lose his sight, but what does he see when his sight is gone. Not does he lose his hearing, but what are the sounds that exist in his soul? What arises within him beyond the senses? Answer these questions or questions like them, and you determine the value of the man.

THE LIFE OF BROTHER BURGESS was the testimony of a triumphant faith—a faith that was tested through the years, and through the testing it grew steadily into greater and greater knowledge. Blessed was he with a rich Latter Day Saint heritage. His grandfather, I believe, served as the first or one of the first pastors of the Manchester, England, church. He treasured his inheritance with the Saints, but he did not worship his ancestors. He was grateful for them, but sought for himself the glory that made them significant. Fortunate in his choice of a companion—undoubtedly being guided in this matter as a result of earnest meditation and prayer—he was worthily and rightfully blessed with a lovely family. He saw to it that this gift was treasured, too. And when he took his leave of them, he left them as he found them—unblemished. Their ministry was one, as was their life together. It is still one ministry, although now, of course, extended beyond the sense of sight and touch.

In his early youth, he welcomed a bright future, but that future was darkened soon by the onset of total deafness. Can you fathom the depth and breadth of the disappointment that then was his? Can you gauge the temptations, even temptations to rebellion, that must have been his then? Can you sense the struggle and conflict that beset him? But he knew that man lived not by bread alone, and that even if men were maimed, they could enter the kingdom of God. Had not the greatest music come from the deepest distress? Beethoven was deaf. He lost his hearing in young manhood. Were not the most grateful hymns sung in prison? And was not the worship of the Lord Jesus joyfully given in adversity by Paul and Silas who were shut up in prison? When they prayed and sang hymns of praises to the Lord, the earth was shaken and the prison tumbled down around them, and the prisoners went free. Was not Milton blind? Truly Brother Burgess could say with the poet, "God tested me to see if I durst stand." "God tested me to see if I durst stand."

Even beyond all these things, Brother Burgess stood for something else. He loved poetry, but he wasn't its priest. He enjoyed philosophy but never worshiped at its shrine; studied history, but was never its servant. He was a high priest, a high priest after the order of the Son of God. He bowed his knee to one and to one alone; he was never a man-worshiper. He worshiped God—the true and the living God. He appreciated virtue, but more than this, he sought beyond virtue that to which virtue points—holiness. We have seen him stand in our midst with his arms outstretched, with his face suffused with a heavenly light praying for the church. He was, as it were, imprisoned within himself, longing for ease of full communication with us. But in his darkest hour, as did Paul and Silas, he often prayed and sang praises to God. And we prisoners heard him. I have known some of the prisoners to be set free through his prayers. How great shall be his joy with them in the kingdom of God!

HE WAS A HIGH PRIEST. This authority and all that it implied he revered. For unknown to many of us, Brother Burgess bore grievous burdens of soul, burdens which he assumed because he loved the church and her servants; burdens which came to him because he was willing to take responsibility of problems he did not create, as his Lord had done before him. Of this priesthood it is written that it has the "power to hold the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church; to have the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of God; to have the heavens opened unto them; to commune with the general assembly and the church of the First Born; and to enjoy the communion and presence of God the Father and Jesus the mediator of the new covenant."

He broke every band. He stood in the presence of God and endured that presence in behalf of others. He saw the course of time in the church's darkest hour. He exercised the faith which this vision bore to him, and wrought righteousness. He communed with the church of the First Born. And who can tell or measure the extent of the blessings which have come to us because of him? The serenity of soul which shone through his eyes came from the peace found as he walked by the still, deep waters of life. And often he stooped and drank. The warmth of his handclasp, and his kindly humor came out of his faith in his fellows, which was a reflection of his faith in God, his faith in us.

What a marvelous thing is personality! We take the external world in which we live and cause it to live in us. Memory is a world fashioned out of experience as we choose from our experience those elements which please us. If we are wise, and blessed with the grace to hear the gospel, obey it, and living to high and holy purposes, we have an experience with God; then is given to abide in us the record of heaven—the peaceable things of immortal glory, the truth of all things, the heavenly environment.

If our purpose persist and we are true to our ideals, the world within us does not correspond to the world we see around us, but is richer and finer. We seek to impose on the outward world the inward beauty of the heavenly world. How many of us are carried around by the world; how few of us carry our world around with us!

BROTHER BURGESS carried in his soul the record and the testimony of the kingdom of God. That was his peace and the secret of his hope. His frail bark sailing toward the promised land was often buffeted by the inadequacies, by the ignorance and sometimes even by the self-seeking of others. But the invincible surmise in his soul kept him sailing on and on. Now he has reached the other shore and has been welcomed.

He sees the faces of the Saints he knew before. He enjoys their smiles of welcome. He hears their choirs of praise and stands before them and says, as he says to us: "My brethren and my friends, God tested me to see if I durst stand, and praise be to his Name! I found that I durst." And he takes his leave of them and hastens toward the throne of grace where, after kneeling, in adoration he lifts his face and looks into the eyes of his Lord and his Savior without shame.

The Career of Samuel Burgess

Historian

Lawyer

Minister of the Church

SAMUEL A. BURGESS was born September 15, 1877, at St. Louis, Missouri, the son of Samuel Rostron and Eveline (Allen) Burgess.

From his earliest years, he was inclined to the pursuit of learning. He received his B.A. degree from Washington University in St. Louis in 1899. Later he took his degree in law at Washington University, specializing in corporation law. He practiced this profession for several years in St. Louis.

But his life and work were to be with the church rather than in the law. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on March 29, 1890, by Rudolph Etzenhouser. After practicing law for a time, he had a spiritual experience in which a vision presented to him a choice of two careers, and he chose the steep path of service to the church. He was ordained a teacher on December 22, 1901; an elder, September 17, 1905; and a high priest on April 11, 1914.

In the fall of 1913, he was called to be the President and Treasurer of Graceland College, and served through two crucial years, personally balanced the books, made the first effective efforts to retire a threatening debt, and prepared to have Graceland accredited as a Junior College, a plan which was completed shortly after he was called to other work.

While at Graceland College, he was married in the historic Brick Church to Miss Alice M. Chase, a gifted, devoted member of the church, and a teacher at Lamoni High School. The beautiful love and happiness of their home life to the present time have been an inspiration and an example to many young people.

AT THE REQUEST of President Frederick M. Smith, Brother Burgess next went to Clarke University at Worcester, Massachusetts, to study under the noted scholar, G. Stanley Hall. Together, he and Sister Burgess pursued their educational work. His study was in the field of comparative religion, from the earliest sources to the present time. While at Worcester, he served as pastor of the Boston Branch, and the couple won many life-long friends there.

He completed his thesis and saw it approved. The oral examination for the Ph. D. degree was still to be taken when a crisis occurred at church headquarters in the severe illness of the beloved Elbert A. Smith. Brother Burgess was called to take up the task of serving as editor of the Saints' Herald.

From this time Brother Burgess began to suffer an affliction which greatly affected his hearing. Further suffering, together with the death of Dr. Hall, prevented the final step of obtaining the degree. Deafness had begun as an after-effect of a childhood disease. With further suffering and a mastoid operation, he lost his hearing completely in 1920.

Despite his deafness, he was noted for his faithful church attendance. He often said, "I come for the peaceful influence of the church, and the goodly company of the Saints."

He served as Church Historian from 1925 to 1942. After that he was Research Assistant to the First Presidency, and was at work on various investigations and reports at the time of his passing.

During the years of his church service, he used his knowledge and experience in the law as an aid in his ministry. Many times he served as trustee of estates and gave his legal counsel and help free to many who could not afford the services of regular attorneys. His ministry, through correspondence, extended to church members around the world, and many came from foreign countries to visit him as a result of friendships thus formed.

He had a deep appreciation of music, and was familiar with nearly all of the great works of the masters. He still attended the Messiah when his hearing was gone, feeling able to derive some of its majesty and beauty by spiritual means. His own spiritual insight gave him the power to understand many things in an extraordinary way.

HE HAD SUFFERED for some time with a serious heart ailment, and his family had felt apprehensive about his condition. On Saturday evening, November 25, he suffered a severe attack for about an hour, passing away about 11 p.m., with Sister Burgess and their two daughters present.

VI. Opportunities for Self-help

The duty of the members after they are received by baptism: . . .

The members shall manifest before the church, and also before the elders, by a godly walk and conversation, that they are worthy of it, that there may be works and faith agreeable to the Holy Scriptures, walking in holiness before the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18.

A Member's Responsibility

In the discussion of ministry to new members, it should be recognized that they can do much to help themselves. The above quotation from Doctrine and Covenants definitely indicates that.

New members should not be exclusively dependent upon others. Some have been brought into the church largely through their own study and investigation. They have the strength of mind and spirit to take charge of their own progress. If a new member will do nothing for himself, his chances of survival in the faith are slim. If he will try, his opportunities are great.

There are some things that new members must do for themselves, and nobody else can do for them. The time should and must come when they will stand on their own feet, depend on their own spiritual resources, take full responsibility for their own decisions, and become mature in the gospel work.

Ministry to new members

Individual Maturity

To such members, Paul said, "I have fed you with milk, and not with meat."—I Corinthians 3: 2. That was for their infancy. But for maturity there was to be "meat in due season" (Matthew 24: 45), and Paul said, "Our fathers . . . did all eat the same spiritual meat" (I Corinthians 10: 3).

There is a time for milk, and a time for meat. When the days of infancy are over, the child is weaned and put on a solid diet. He is introduced to vegetables, fruits, cereals, and new forms of proteins. So it is in the spiritual and religious life. The convert is not always to be kept on a child's regimen.

He grows up, gains strength, and knows and does something for himself.

A Member's Opportunities

The new member should begin immediately a regular attendance at church services. Worshiping, learning, and working with other members is a required part of his experience and development. The unit of church life is the branch or the congregation. It is the family group of our organized church life. The new member should be identified, if at all possible, with the church family.

The church school offers many helps and advantages to the new member. He should select a class carefully, and join it. He will learn more of the standard books, the literature, the history, and the doctrine of the church. He will become better acquainted with the people. He can ask questions and make comments. He will receive more individual help and attention.

Prayer meetings provide a reservoir of spiritual power at which he can draw freely according to his needs. In them he will hear the testimonies and experiences of church people who have been helped in times of trial and suffering by the spirit and power of God.

The church publications provide profitable reading matter for leisure hours when the new member is alone. They contain many kinds of information that cannot be imparted in detail in the local meetings. As a good citizen, one plans a program of reading and self-education. As a good church member, he will devote a part of that time to his church education.

Preparation for Service

The new member should look forward to definite termination of his own period of preparation and probation as a member. There is a call to service waiting for him. Other souls, as precious as his own, are waiting to be saved, nurtured, and developed. Workers, teachers, and leaders are always needed. According to his training and qualifications, the new member can give important help.

The Doctrine and Covenants indicates a kind of personal standard, life, and conduct necessary for a new member, "Godly walk and conversation Walking in holiness before the Lord."

The new member has a heavy responsibility for his own spiritual, moral, and intellectual development. It appears that we have understood too narrowly the well-known passage, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—II Timothy 2: 15. "Study" has a broader meaning than "book learning." The dictionary recognizes it as "a setting of the mind or thoughts upon a subject to be learned or investigated; acquiring by one's own efforts knowledge or information; considered endeavor toward some object."

Keeping this in mind, we understand why Goodspeed renders the same passage of Scripture in the following words: "Do your best to win God's approval as a workman who has nothing to be ashamed of."

This approach to the understanding of the meaning and purpose of membership in the church can be placed before the new member at the appropriate time by the minister or friend who has had some part in his conversion.

NEWS AND NOTES

day, December 24, with accompaniments by the Independence Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Franklyn S. Weddle. Soloists were Eldoralynne Dunaway, soprano; Donna Weddle, contralto; William Ferguson, tenor, and Robert Downs, baritone. The invocation was offered by Apostle Maurice Draper.

PRAYER CRUSADE

A prayer crusade for the yuletide season in Independence was proclaimed by Mayor Robert P. Weatherford, Jr., for December 18 to January 1. All churches remained open during the day in order that those desiring to enter for prayer and meditation might do so.

BRANCH REPRESENTED

The Galesburg, Illinois, Branch was represented in a Christmas parade by a float symbolizing "The Gospel to all Nations." Several people in the dress of various nationalities and the Nativity scene completed the float. The parade was sponsored by the Galesburg Chamber of Commerce.

CAROLING

LEAGUERS IN PAGEANT

The Christmas Eve program at the Walnut Park church was in charge of the Zion's League. About fifty youth participated in the Christmas pageant which was directed by Miss Kathleen Hodges.

December 23, a Communion service was held at the church by the Zion's League in which boxes for needy families of the church were dedicated. Members of the League delivered the boxes to the homes.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Please explain I Corinthians 6:9-11, particularly where it says that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom. Then follows a list of the unrighteous. Verse 11 states: "And such were some of you, but ye are washed . . ." Since these sinners were forgiven and washed, does this imply that the same transgressions will be treated the same today?

Iowa

A. V. W.

ANSWER:

The statement in I Corinthians 6:9-11 should not be construed to mean that one may commit the sins there mentioned in the assumption that they will all be forgiven. There are great differences under which similar physical acts may represent widely different degrees of responsibility and culpability. The Corinthians lived under very different influences in many respects than do those today who have been enlightened with the gospel message. Bad examples and lack of proper moral teaching might result in sins committed largely in ignorance of upright living. There is also a grave difference between willful sins of which the guilty one is fully conscious after professing a better way of life, and those the evil of which has not been pointed out.

Verse 11 explains that these persons to whom Paul wrote had been cleansed of their sins, having become sanctified by obeying the gospel of repentance and reformation of life. Their forgiveness would necessarily be impossible without their previous repentance, as the gospel plainly teaches. Due to their former ignorance and habits, it was advisable to warn them of the danger involved if they relapsed into sin, and this seems to have been largely Paul's purpose. However, one who sins willfully after receiving the gospel and the teachings involved is committing a much more serious act, and such a willful course often causes him to become more evil until the will to repent is gone. The divine word warns that such people cannot inherit the kingdom of God, hence they must in due time receive the condemnation and punishment their evil course has merited. One of the most dangerous fallacies in which the sinner may indulge is the notion that he can repent after he has satiated himself with an evil course in life, for experience proves that it becomes increasingly difficult for such to repent.

QUESTION:

Yesterday in our young adult class some were of the opinion that when asked the name of the church all that is necessary to say is, "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ." Wouldn't it be better to give the full name of the church and leave no room at all for doubt?"

Wisconsin

O. M.

ANSWER:

By all means the full name of the church should be used. The fact that the church has passed through some experiences which necessitate the full, long name should not enter into the thinking of the people. Our church does have a name. There are other religious groups active all around us which have a similar name; let us use our full name and insure ourselves against any doubt in the minds of our hearers. We are the Church of Jesus Christ; we have undergone a reorganization, because of a misleading spirit; and we are the saints of God in these the latter days. That is the answer: The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

It has been said that a good business letter is one which contains everything that should be said, and nothing that is irrelevant and of no consequence. The reader of such a letter knows exactly what the writer means. Similarly, we should use the entire name of our church and leave no question in anybody's mind.

MYRON REED SCHALL.

QUESTION:

Should we serve coffee at church suppers given for the purpose of raising money (in our case for building a new church) at which nonmembers are served?

Iowa

Mrs. J. E. F.

ANSWER:

The Word of Wisdom covers most of the points contained therein only in broad terms, leaving all detail for men to determine in accordance with the developing knowledge of the times and to act according to individual conscience. It is not a law, but a word of wisdom or helpful counsel from God concerning the health of the body, and the temporal salvation of the Saints when the destroying angel shall pass over and divine judgments fall upon the wicked.

Sound advice given to anyone, by anyone, is not to be disregarded without loss, and he who follows a course that is wise and good will experience good results, while he who chooses to do otherwise must in time reap the harvest of his mistake. We do not see justification in this revelation for any man to prescribe or dictate to another in any of the details growing out of it. Every individual is left free to determine for himself what his course shall be and to follow accordingly. We do have need to be cautious about judging others in this matter, and may find it to be a convenient occasion for the exercise of charity, not forgetting the divinely guaranteed right of free will or free agency.

As to serving coffee at banquets and suppers held under the auspices of the church, the right of option applies, the option in such an instance being determined by the group that serves, perhaps in conjunction with the branch authorities. Circumstances vary. Perhaps nonmembers are guests who, having paid for their meal, feel that they have a right to receive in food and drink what they are accustomed to. To arbitrarily deny them their customary drinks, could estrange them. As already indicated, decision on such minor points is the free right of each individual, and his choice should not become the occasion for extended criticism which would tend to division and disruption within the church. "Let all things be done with charity."

I Am the Wife of a Serviceman

By Lola Bradshaw

I AM THE WIFE of a serviceman. At this moment I am not sure whether he is alive or dead. He is somewhere in Korea. Korea—a land of filth and poverty that first was alternately dust and mud, and now is frozen rivers and bodies and blood.

Strangely enough that day in June when the news first came over the radio, it did not enter my head that, because the North Koreans were attacking the South Koreans, the pattern of our lives would be changed. How blithely we packed our lunch and went to Waikiki for our Fourth of July picnic!

But less than a week later, the men of the Fifth Infantry Regiment were going about with grim-set faces, getting the regiment packed and ready for shipping out. The wives were stunned, white faced. Some reacted with tears and hysterics, some with drink, some with prayer.

The days and nights were hideous with sound—the incessant hammering of crates, the roar of trucks, shouted orders, curses, the drone of planes, and louder than all, the rumble of the tanks with sirens wailing. Men and vehicles rushed to and fro until dawn, and every night the rains descended, adding to the misery of the tired officers and men. But at last they were gone and a calm more ominous than the previous bedlam fell over the post.

And so it was that on the evening of July 24, I found myself and the children aboard an Army plane winging our way over the blue Pacific from Hawaii toward the mainland and home.

But where was home? I had none. Independence was my destination, but a home would have to be of my own making. Thus, through circumstances, I was “gathered” to Zion. Here I have found new strength for the task of establishing that home. I am grateful for the stabilizing and comforting influence of God’s church in my life through these difficult experiences.

There were days and weeks of looking for an apartment, always to be turned down because I had children. There was the physical exhaustion from moving when I finally found one, and now the search for a suitable house to buy!

Always there is the concern for my husband’s safety. I pray for physical and spiritual strength for the task of becoming both mother and father to my two children, guardian of the family’s health and resources, teacher, counselor, housekeeper, and handy man.

Each day sees the war clouds becoming darker and darker. Fear, famine, evil, and oppression stalk the earth. I look at my children and think, “You are too young to go to war, but will war come to you?” Will war crush beneath its bloody heel the lives of women and children even in this beloved land of America because of the wickedness of the people? And so I cling to the rod of iron; it is my strength and my stay.

I pray for peace. Yet, I am doubtful. Is it right to pray for peace? We know that in the last days these terrible things shall be. Should we pray that God withhold his wrath, and let his purposes come to nought and his prophecies be unfulfilled?

There are thousands of service wives like me, and our number is rapidly increasing. What is the church doing to prepare for those who are members? Will they come here as I did and find “no room in the inn” because they have children?

And what of those who are not members? Their souls are sore afraid. They need the light and truth of Christ’s gospel, which only our church can give. The challenge is here. Will the church meet the needs of this group, or are we to become the forgotten women of this generation?

The Pollyanna Complex

ALL OF US have had some well-meaning friend try to cheer us up with the advice, “Count your blessings,” as though that held the cure for all unhappiness. Perhaps it does, but to be reminded of it rubs most people the wrong way.

The children’s book, Pollyanna, was so famous for its determinedly cheerful outlook that many people call such a philosophy “the Pollyanna complex.” As I recall it, Pollyanna was a little girl who believed that nothing was as bad as it could have been. For most of us, especially when we are discouraged, there is something slightly obnoxious about such a saccharine philosophy. It usually takes a mild rebuke to make us realize that we are wallowing in self-pity, and that such indulgence may be harmful to our personalities.

The ancient Persians must have realized this because they had a proverb to cover the situation. The next time you are depressed, don’t actually try to count your blessings; just remind yourself of this subtle proverb:

“I had no shoes and I murmured until I met a man who had no feet.”

Near at Hand

By Mabel Williams
Crayne

IT'S NIGHT AGAIN," muttered Emily Craton, as she turned on the living room light and went to the front window to pull down the shade. Emily was a widow living alone, waiting and hoping that her daughter Elizabeth would come home to live with her. She gave the shade a vicious little jerk and, as though resentful of such unusual treatment it flew out of her fingers and went clear to the top. Being a mere five-foot-minus, Emily had to climb on a chair to reach it. Just as she raised her hand, the street light came on and illuminated the full length of the driveway across the street. The folks had not lived there long and she only knew their names, but she was sure she saw them drive away shortly after noon and the house was dark. The big police dog Thor had been sent to the country, but his kennel still stood just outside by the garage door. Emily was certain she saw something moving in that doghouse, and gasped as a tow head emerged and then the whole body of a small boy. She climbed down off the chair and hurried across the street.

"Sammy Biddle, what were you doing in that doghouse?" she demanded of the lad who stood before her with soiled blouse and tear-stained face. "Where are your folks?"

"They's gone to Uncle Jed's," he said, "and my real daddy and other mother didn't come to get me. I got tired and kinda cold, and I crawled in Thor's house, but they's ants in there, and I don't like ants when they's big red ants, and I don't like dark when Mommy is gone."

"You poor little tyke," said Emily to herself, "just another innocent victim of divorce and remarriage." To the boy she said, "I don't like any kind of ants, and I don't like dark either when I'm alone. I'm going to take you over to my house and give you a nice dinner, and you don't have to sleep in the doghouse." She took his cold hand in hers and led him to her home where there was plenty of warmth and love to take away the hurt of being left alone.

"You can call me Sammy Biddle if you want to," he said, "but when I am with my own daddy, my name is Sammy Elliott."

"Do you have a grandmother?" asked Emily.

"Mommy says I've got a grandmother," answered Sammy, "but she's lots of miles away. Maybe we'll go to see my grandmother some day."

"How would you like to have me for your near-by grandmother?" asked Emily. "I need a little boy like you to bake cookies for." Sammy's eyes opened wide, and his big smile gladdened her lonely heart.

"I'd like that," he said, "and maybe I can come to see you some days when you don't think I'm in the way."

Emily put her arm about him, "You'll never be in my way," she said. "You can come every day if your mommy says it is all right, but you must never come without asking her."

The boy ate a hearty meal, then looking up at his new friend, he said, "My stummit is all full and my eyes go shut."

"That's good," said Emily. "Now I will fix you a nice bed on the couch, and you can let your eyes go shut as long as you want." She found an old dilapidated, wooly sheep that she had treasured for years because her own son had loved it; and Sammy was soon fast asleep with it cuddled closed in his arms.

THE TELEPHONE RANG, and she hastened to answer lest it waken him. A pleasant masculine voice said, "I am not sure that I have the right person but you are the only one listed in the directory by that name. I am trying to locate a friend by the name of Camille Craton, and I thought you might be related."

"I'm sorry," said Emily. "I wish I could help you, but I do not know your friend."

"Well, it's like this, mam," the voice continued, "I was with the Marines in the last war, and they have called me back again. They gave us a little time here to call up our friends, if we had any."

"I see," said Emily. She realized that he needed a friendly voice to say "Good luck and God bless you," before going across. "Where is your home town?" she asked.

The answer was "Laurel Creek, Kentucky, mam," and then he went on to tell her of his mother and the buddies who were with him before and who, like him, were called back. When he had finished, Emily felt that she had known him a long time, that he belonged to her home town. "How long do you have here?" she asked.

"Not more than an hour," was his reply, "and I guess that my next stop will be many miles away." He laughed as he added, "We Marines move fast."

"So I have heard," answered Emily. "I have a son in the Army. I wish you had more time and could go to church with me tomorrow and then come home with me for dinner."

His tone was wistful as he answered, "I sure would if I could, mam. I appreciate your talking to me like this. I am going to write mother about you."

"Do you believe in prayer?" asked Emily.

"Sure, I do," was the positive answer. "What do you suppose brought me home last time? It was just a lot of hard praying and believing. Sure, I believe in prayer."

Emily's voice trembled a little, "Then count on me—I'll be praying for you. Perhaps you had better give me your name so I can tell God for which Marine I am sending a special prayer."

"It's Lowry, mam," he said, "and God bless you for being so kind. Good-by, now, I'd better be going."

Emily answered, "Good-by, good luck, and God bless you." Another Marine was on his way, and Emily bowed her head and offered up her first prayer in his behalf, then went to the couch and looked down at the little sleeper. "Sammy," she said, "he was just another mother's boy like you, afraid of the dark unknown and needing a friend."

IT WAS ELEVEN O'CLOCK when the car turned into the driveway across the street. Emily called on the telephone and said, "This is your neighbor, Mrs. Craton. I guess there has been some misunderstanding. Your little boy is here with me. Don't worry and don't bother to come for him tonight. He is asleep, and it is a comfort to have him with me."

Sammy had eaten his breakfast and was on the porch, playing with the cat and a string when his mother came next morning. She thanked Emily and explained, "I didn't want to leave before Sammy's father came for him, but my husband insisted that he would be all right and told him to stay in the back yard until his father came. He does not dislike Sammy or want to mistreat him, but he resents this sending him back and forth. He says it keeps the boy upset and he thinks he should stay with one family all the time."

"And I agree that it is not good for the child," said Emily emphatically. "He is apt to become confused and feel insecure and unwanted. I think it is something we should pray about."

Mrs. Biddle's face flushed as she said, "My mother taught me to pray and I used to go to church with her, but I guess I got out of the habit after I left home. She would never decide on any important problem until she had prayed. She would say that she had to ask the Lord about it."

Emily's eyes brightened as she asked, "Would you like to go to prayer meeting with me next Wednesday evening? I get very lonesome going by myself."

"I'll try," said Mrs. Biddle. "I think my husband will stay with Sammy. He is so sorry that we left him yesterday. I must get my boy and take him home. You are a good neighbor, Mrs. Craton. I'll let you know about Wednesday."

EMILY LOOKED AFTER HER with a prayer in her heart. "Please, God, everyone needs a close-by, understanding friend. I want to be that friend. Please tell me how I can remind her of the prayer service without seeming too insistent."

She stood in the doorway for a few moments, then gave a happy little laugh. "I do believe I feel a rhyme coming on," she said aloud, "and that may be my answer." She went to her typewriter and began working on one of her simple little rhymes that she wrote for her own amusement. She never thought of them as poems. When she had finished, she read it over:

"I want to be a friend to you, And help in ways that good friends do; Do not forget our Friend Divine Is your good friend as well as mine; You'll find him near when things go wrong, He'll change your sighing to a song; All your worries he'll gladly bear, If you but leave them in his care."

"Well, it's no classic," thought Emily, "but it rhymes, and it says what I want it to say." She just had time to get to church school and was soon walking briskly down the street.

The next day's morning mail brought a letter postmarked "Chattanooga, Tennessee." It was from her daughter, Elizabeth, and it took some time for her to get beyond the first paragraph. She read it over and over.

Dear Mother, when you receive this, I will be on my way to New York and expect to be there for a week. If the Consul likes my looks and will give me a visa, I will take off for Brazil, and hope to land in the town of Belem, where I will begin my work as missionary nurse. Say a little prayer for me, mother dear, that all my plans will go through and I shall realize my dream at last. Don't worry about me as I have taken so many shots that I won't be able to catch even a little cold. Only for the Lord and his work would I ever face all those needles again.

Emily sat for some time looking out the window but seeing nothing. Elizabeth was not coming home, but was going farther away from her. Her disappointment was so great that she bowed her head and asked God to help her bear it, then going to the bookcase, she found a map of South America and located the town of Belem at the mouth of the Amazon River. Her heart sank as she saw the long stretch of land and sea and realized the many miles that lay between them. Very few of Emily's friends knew that Elizabeth's dream had once been hers and that circumstances had prevented her following it through. She loved to fly and tried to visualize herself in that plane on her way to that far-off country where she would share in the work of caring for the bodily and spiritual needs of a people who had never heard the gospel. But the vision was not clear and with a deep sigh, she thought,

"It is too late even to dream about it." Then it was as though a voice spoke to her, "You have instilled your desires for service in the heart of your child, and in her will they all be fulfilled. Be content with my work that is near at hand." With tears in her eyes, Emily humbly prayed, "Lord, forgive me and help me to see what thou wouldst have me do. Make me a good friend and neighbor."

THAT NIGHT Emily dreamed that her living room was filled with people, and she could not understand why they were there until someone told her that it was a "cottage meeting." The next day she could not get the dream out of her mind and felt impressed to lay aside her work and think things through. Almost immediately she remembered the woman who had asked her about her religious belief. She had promised to send her some tracts but had neglected to do so. Then others came into her mind who were not members but who might be interested in coming to a meeting at her house. A wave of happiness filled her soul; surely this was God's work that lay near at hand. She called Brother Thomas, the pastor of her church; he advised her to invite the people and said that he would be there to talk to them.

On Wednesday morning the postman brought a letter to Mrs. Biddle, and she was puzzled to find only a verse of poetry in the envelope until she saw the name signed to it. "Bless her heart," she said. "I wonder if she wrote that just for me. I'll call her and tell her that I will go with her tonight."

Emily answered the phone and heard Mrs. Biddle say, "I have decided to go with you to prayer meeting, and I have been thinking that Sammy should be going to Sunday school. Would you mind taking him with you next Sunday to your church school?" Emily was so overjoyed that her voice was a bit husky as she answered, "I shall be delighted, and Sammy can call me Grandmother. I've been rather lonely of late and sometimes felt so useless living her alone. I guess all we need is to talk to God about our problems, and he will show us how to overcome them."

"That was a dear little poem, Mrs. Craton," said Mrs. Biddle, "and I am happy to have you for my friend. You remind me so much of my mother. When shall I come over?"

"Make it seven-fifteen," said Emily, "that will give us plenty of time. It's nice to have a church that is so near at hand."

Never Be Discouraged

Born the daughter of an elder and having church privileges, as a girl, I greatly missed attending services after I married and moved to a town where there is no branch. However, I decided to rear my two daughters in the faith as best I could, and today one belongs to the church and I expect the other to be baptized soon. My husband, who was morally a good man but not a member when I married him, has joined too, and we have never been happier. After a long period of isolation, we began attending meetings two-and-a-half years ago between Iola and Chanute where Saints in that area hold services. There is an active women's group in which I am able to serve as a friendly visitor. I am thankful to my Heavenly Father who has blessed me through the years, and I would say to others who are now isolated, "Never be discouraged, but live a Christlike life. Be patient, and be prayerful."

As friendly visitor I am preparing my friends and neighbors for a series of meetings to be held in Iola in the near future. Perhaps this will be the beginning of a mission in our own town.

From a Reader of "Daily Bread"

I am renewing my subscription to Daily Bread. I received one of the first issues sent out and wish to express my appreciation for the spiritual food provided in this publication. Many times I have turned to the devotional for the day and found the answer to a problem confronting me. It is my prayer that every member in the church who someday have a subscription to Daily Bread, and that God will continue to inspire and bless those who contribute to its pages.

From a Tuberculosis Patient

I wish to thank whoever sent me a copy of the Herald; it is a wonderful gift. It has been a long time since I last wrote to the Herald, although I used to be publicity agent of Owen Sound Branch. Since September 18 of this year I have been at Freeport Sanatorium receiving treatment for tuberculosis and diabetes. I am comfortable here, but very lonely. I have not had any church visitors since I am now on the "isolated list." I shall appreciate the prayers of the Saints.

The Prayer Service

The question is often asked, "Why a prayer service?" In nearly all cases the person asking does not really understand its purpose and meaning, perhaps due to his lack of regular attendance or lack of preparation.

The most important factor necessary for a successful service is the presence of the Holy Spirit. It is just as important that the individual make proper preparation for the service as it is for the one in charge.

President Joseph Smith once wrote, "Observe the Great Commandment given by the Master, always to remember the Lord, to pray in the morning and the evening, and always remember to thank him for the blessings we receive from day to day."

In these services in which we take part, we can first see God at work, and second help ourselves to come a little nearer to him.

From an Isolated Member

We want to express our appreciation to Brother Holloway for his "Missionary Experiences." My two children and I read them together and thoroughly enjoyed them.

We are isolated and have very little contact with the church. Herald articles, stories, editorials, and letters have been a great help to me in the past. At times I have read something that met my exact need.

I have been a member of the church since 1929, but have never lived near a branch. I know the work is true, and I hope that someday we will live where we can worship with the Saints and help in this great cause.

For Those Who Follow After

As we look about in the world today, we are made to realize more fully the significance of the task that lies before us as Latter Day Saints. How many of us in the past year have helped to make this a better world? Jesus said, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." Have we tried to discover these gifts and then, with God's help, put them to work for him? Man's allotted time here is three score ten. Those of us who have reached it, and some who have exceeded it, must leave their testimony for those who follow after. They are the ones who, putting on the whole armor of God, should stand against the temptations of evil and fight the battles of the kingdom. To them I would say, "Let not your hearts be troubled. Let your watchword be onward, remembering there are no idle soldiers in the army of the Lord. The hastening time is here, and we must all give our best to the work while time lasts. The winning of souls to God's kingdom is the great objective, and we are all chosen to act as his representatives in these latter days. Let us be about our Father's business with an open mind and a willing heart, so that when we lay our armor down we shall be able to say with Paul, 'I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith,' and then hear those soul-comforting words of the Master, 'Come thou faithful, enter thou into the house of thy Lord.'"

MUSKOGEE, OKLAHOMA.—All-day services were held on October 29. They were well attended by visitors from Tulsa, Oklahoma City, Morris, and from Blackgum and Warner Missions. Church school was held at 11:00. Clarence Baer of Tulsa spoke. A basket lunch was served at noon. At 2:30 Jim Bayless of Tulsa brought the "Graceland College Day" message.—Reported by BETTY BULLOCK.

LAWRENCE, KANSAS.—Since being organized into a branch two years ago, Lawrence has continued to grow both spiritually and materially. The Kansas State University is located here and many of the student body attend the meetings. The proportion of a full-sized branch with all the departments functioning is being attained. Elder Wayne Simmons held a series of cottage meetings recently. As a result of these meetings, eight people were baptized. They are: John Holt, Jared Holt, Nelda Holt, Ruth Norris, Jerry Owens, Madeline Norris, Darrell Norris, and Dwight Sickle. These four adult and four children baptisms complete their family circles of church membership.

One great evidence of progress was the organization of a district on November 26 which will be known as the Kaw Valley District. Included in this district are the branches at Topeka, Leavenworth, Osawatomic, and Bonner Springs. Elder James C. Daugherty is district president, Mrs. Ammon Andes is secretary, and Allen Tyree is district missionary.

Special services are held each Sunday night for several members of the Haskell Institute, the largest Indian school in the United States.

Several recommendations for ordinations have been made and approved. They will be attended to in the near future.

The women's department has been very active with various projects. In the past year the kitchen has been furnished and equipped. Plans are being made to re-decorate and furnish the church.

Pastor G. R. Norris officiated in the confirmation service of his daughters-in-law and grandchildren on December 3. This unites the homes of his five married sons.—Reported by BESSIE TAYLOR.

Saturday was devoted to classwork with classes conducted by Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Bishop Leslie Kohlman, Seventy Cecil Ettinger, Evangelist Ray Whiting, and Elder Sylvester R. Coleman.

Apostle Chesworth was the speaker at the evening service. Bishop Kohlman was the speaker at 11:00 a.m. Basket dinner was served at noon at the church.

The conference assembled in business session at 3:00 p.m. with District Presidency and General Church officials presiding. Apostle Chesworth and District President Coleman were in charge.

Reports of district officers were read. District budget was read, amended, and approved.

The following ordinations were approved: Stanley Greathouse, elder; Sam Anderson, Charles Kelley, Norman Jackson, Willis Christy, priests; Leroy Rhine and Verle Moore, deacons.

Officers elected and sustained were Sylvester R. Coleman, district president; Myrta Choate, women's leader; George Wolfe, church school director; Ed Colvin, Zion's League supervisor; Ruby Ellis, district secretary; Ralph Rocket, treasurer; Ed Knapp, bishop's agent; Dr. W. E. Phillips, historian; Mrs. S. R. Coleman, district music director. Lewis DeSelms to serve on auditing committee three years; Rufus Rockett automatically sustained for two years; W. W. Brown for one year.

District President Coleman's choice of Dr. W. E. Phillips and W. W. Colvin as his counselors was approved by the conference.

District Conference was adjourned at the conclusion of the business session.—RUBY ELLIS reporter.

BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA.—District President W. J. Breshears presided at the annual business meeting September 6, 1950. Officers elected were J. Henry Porter, pastor; Mrs. Helen Vickrey, church school director; Margarette Porter, junior church school director; Sadie Chandler, women's leader; James Odom, young people's leader; Milton Ceraso, group secretary; H. Hale Vickrey, chairman building fund committee. Alma Williams, formerly from Davenport, Iowa, was recommended to serve as church school attendance director.

The former pastor, Marvin L. Salter, has accepted the position as assistant to the district president in this northern section of the Gulf States District. Three elders will assist him in this work.

In the past year, the group has had the ministry of President W. Wallace Smith, District President Breshears, Elder Ben Jernigan, and Brother Harper of McKenzie, Alabama.—Reported by PALMER B. ANDERSON.

NEW PLYMOUTH, IDAHO.—A mission was organized on October 25. District President Philip W. Moore was in charge of the meeting. Elder Harry S. Fry was elected pastor of the group. Officers elected were Burton Parton, church school director; Muriel Nelson, young people's leader; Mabel Parton, women's leader; Brooks Nelson, church school secretary; Ardath Fry, music leader; Barbara Parton, church school treasurer; Bill Nelson, auditor; Bernard Parton, church historian; and Burton Parton, solicitor.

Seventy E. Y. Hunker held a series of services for five days in November.—Reported by VELMA NELSON.

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—Three adults and three children were baptized on December 10. Services are held at the Lend-A-Hand club. Wednesday evening services are held in the homes.—Reported by FREDERICK C. BEVAN.

HUTCHINSON, KANSAS.—On September 1 the women's department sponsored a rummage sale. Proceeds were used to buy the Three Standard Books for the church.

A Halloween party was held October 30 at the home of Sister Armand Bailey. Eleven members, eleven visitors, and ten children were present. Games were played and lunch was served.

Janol Lynn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Wilson was blessed on November 19 by Elders J. J. Wilson (grandfather) and E. C. Eckright.

The women's department met at the home of Sister Bailey on December 30 for a covered dish luncheon. The day was spent in tacking a comforter and pressing and mending clothes for a rummage sale held December 1.—Reported by JENNIE WHITED.

BRANTFORD, ONTARIO.—The Brantford group in charge of V. Byrnes recently organized under the jurisdiction of Elder Carl Muir, district president of the London district, has been successful in obtaining suitable accommodations in the Y.M.C.A. Building. Meetings are being held.

Arrangements have been made by the district presidency for assistance in ministering to the Saints. Elders J. Cohoe and C. Weeks of the Delhi Branch, Elder R. Moor of Rustock, Elder and Mrs. Ralph Briggs and family of four children have recently moved from Salt Lake City, Utah. Elder Briggs was the speaker on November 12.

A choir has been organized. The first appearance was on November 19. Choir leader is Pat Dayton and pianist is Vi Dickerson.

On November 26, Elder Edwin C. Kent baptized Eutha Wise, Margaret Wise, and Fannie Daugherty. Elders Kent, C. J. Remington, and David Cooke officiated at the confirmation service that evening.

Ben Clark and Clyde Youngs of the St. Louis Branch were visiting speakers for November.—Reported by MARGE KENT.

PITTSBURG, KANSAS.—Mrs. Stephen Black was the speaker at the home of Mrs. T. W. Bath, who was hostess to the combined women's groups in October. The women's department had a talent fund program Sunday morning, October 8. The amount received was $199.40.

The Zion's League activities have varied. A chuck wagon picnic was held for the branch on October 15. Nineteen Leaguers attended a week-end retreat at Springfield, Missouri, October 27, 28, and 29. Mrs. J. W. Jones and Mrs. Wayne Gathman accompanied them. Harry Black of Stockport, England, now attending Graceland College, was guest speaker at the Graceland College Day program. A potluck dinner was held for the Leaguers and Graceland alumni. Sam Landrum is in charge of the Communion service for the League held the first Sunday of each month. The Zion's League presented the evening Thanksgiving worship service November 19. Deember 2, the Leaguers sponsored a hayride to the home of Bonita Burns. Dale Swall is young people's leader.

The engagement of Beverly Kauble of Arcadia, Kansas, to Eldon Hart of Independence has been announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Kauble. Both are students at Kansas State Teacher's College.

A family night covered-dish supper was sponsored by the women's department in November. Mrs. Bill Shaw gave a book review of Cheaper by the Dozen and T. W. Bath, pastor, gave a short talk.

District President Stephen Black was the Sunday evening speaker, December 10.

The Golden Key Circle Christmas party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Wiley, December 12. Husbands of the members were guests.

Curtis Pearson showed pictures of the life of Christ, Wednesday evening, December 13.—Reported by MRS. ROY T. HELLER.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—A Zion's League fellowship service and breakfast was held on Graceland Day. The service was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Art Thompson. Bruce Riley, worship chairman, designed a very attractive centerpiece embellishing the Graceland Tower and the cross.

November 3, the Lincoln League served a pancake feed in the lower auditorium of the church to raise funds to buy baskets for the needy on Thanksgiving.

November 10, the League had a taffy pull and popcorn fest at the home of their supervisor, Mrs. Grace Gates.

November 3, the elder adults met at the home of Francis and Esther Schrunk. Ethel Spradling, class president, presided. The name selected for the class was "Oasis."

A series of missionary sermons began November 5.

The Young Adult Club, "YACS," met at the home of Art and Virginia Davis, November 10.

The Zion's League had charge of the 9:30 a.m. Thanksgiving fellowship service for the Lincoln Branch on November 23.

A baby girl was born November 4, 1950, to Elder Don and Joyce Savage.—Reported by EUNICE FULTON.

MODESTO, CALIFORNIA.—A special ordination service to the office of elder was held December 3, 1950, for Bill Orlan Hays. Prayer was given by the pastor, David C. Elliott; a vocal solo, "The Lord's Prayer," by Malotte, was sung by Homer Gatchett. Elders John Moffet and Alma Moffet escorted the candidate to the chair. Ordination was by Pastor David C. Elliott who was assisted by Elders John Moffet and Alma Moffet. The charge was given by the pastor following the ordination, and a white carnation placed in the candidate's lapel as a symbol.

Modesto is welcoming Mr. and Mrs. Homer Gatchett and Nelson Vaughn, formerly of Independence, Missouri.—Reported by ILAH ROSE.

BAYOU LA BATRE, ALABAMA.—Alma Tillman and Delbert Tillman are the newly-elected counselors to the pastor.—Reported by RUTH NELSON.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—Annual rally day was observed on October 22. Pastor Myron R. Schall delivered a stimulating sermon on the subject, "Christ Calls for Stewards." The choir contributed special music in keeping with the theme of the day. Dinner was served in the lower auditorium, where a program was presented by children of the church school in charge of Mrs. Elma Rolfe.

Seventy Herbert Lynn gave the Graceland College Day sermon. A special collection for the college was received. In the evening Elder Lynn gave a missionary sermon, using colored slides.

Evangelist William Patterson conducted a two-week series of meetings in November, speaking at the church on Sundays, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings, and holding cottage meetings on other evenings.

Several members attended a part of the workers' and priesthood conference held at Berkeley on November 8 to 12 in charge of Apostles E. J. Gleazer and Reed Holmes.

A Thanksgiving dinner was served at the church on November 17, followed by a motion picture. "God Wants a Thankful People," was the subject of the Thanksgiving sermon by Elder Schall on November 19. A Thanksgiving worship service was held on November 22 in charge of the pastor. Miss Helen Sloan, contralto soloist, sang "Thanks Be to God." The program, directed by Mabelle Nephew, was entitled "A Gift for Thanksgiving." Attention was called to God's greatest gift to man and the blessings that come because of that gift, as scenes from the life of Jesus were depicted in tableaus while a quartet sang appropriate hymns. The reader was Elder Gann. Members of the junior church prepared a basket of food to be presented to a needy family on Thanksgiving Day.

The women's department held a successful bazaar and bake sale at the church on December 1. The women also gave a play during the evening.

At an early morning service on December 3 the following were baptized: Wilma Hooper, Phyllis Jensen, Clinton Jacks, and Ruby Sellers. The confirmation service was held the following Sunday at eleven o'clock. The baptisms were performed by Elders Lawrence Hendrickson, Cecil Jacks, and Elder W. H. Dawson. Confirmations were by Elders Hendrickson, Jacks, J. A. Damron, and Bishop E. C. Burdick. Following the confirmations, Bishop Burdick spoke on "The Gift of the Holy Spirit."—Reported by LENA SWANEY.

PATTERNS FOR DEVOTION

by Gladys C. Murrell

These 27 story services are designed to meet the needs of women's groups—excellent for P.T.A. meetings, for school and retreat programs, for women's church groups. Each service centers about a brief, interest-holding, easy-to-tell story and brings a prayer, selected poetry, suggested hymns, and scripture references. All enable the busy leader to conduct effective memorable worship programs.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Fancywork for God

By Emma Phillips

AN OLD, TIME-WORN NOTEBOOK dated 1928 contains data concerning the beginning of a church-wide benevolent enterprise. The Commodity Shop held weekly meetings in the building back of the Kansas Street Church in Independence, Missouri. This is not the first record; others date back to the time when the Commodity Shop held meetings in the Zion's Ensign Building in Independence.

During those busy years, the Commodity Shop became well known to the Saints over all the church. Its purpose was first, the collecting and remodeling of clothing, and second, the creating and selling of needlework. Many families who were victims of misfortune received clothing from this charitable group. The clothing was either given directly to the needy or sold at a nominal price. Women of Independence and other districts, seeking a channel through which to serve the church, sent fancywork to the Commodity Shop.

Without there being any definite request for salable material, the homemade handcraft continued to be sent from many branches to the Commodity Shop. Weekly meetings were held in the Auditorium in a room to the right of the main entrance in the lobby. Soon the room was inadequate to hold the donated material. The handling of the remodeled clothing by the needlecraft became a bigger undertaking than Mrs. Anna Watkins, president, and her group of helpers could manage.

The solution was to divide the project into two parts; one to handle remodeled clothing, the other to handle new needlework. Mrs. Russell Rowland was placed in charge of the first part, and Mrs. Anna Watkins was placed in charge of the second part, known as the Needlecraft Society.

Attention—Women of the Church:

Since the recent Conference convened, there has been a definite change made in the two women's working organizations here in Zion. The two organizations known heretofore as the Campus Shop and the Needlecraft Society are no longer identified as such but have been amalgamated under one name known now throughout the church as the Social Service Center, 310 North Liberty Street, Independence, Missouri.

This article is being written to inform all church women of the needs of this new organization. Due to expansion and increased need, this endeavor can use the support of all the women of the church.

In the past, people have responded generously with needlework and salable articles. Continued help is needed. Any articles of handwork will be acceptable at any time during the year. These will be displayed in a showroom for new needlecraft.

Items particularly in demand are aprons (all sizes), pillowcases, dish towels, towels, luncheon sets, doilies, and infants or children's apparel. Small, usable novelties have always been popular as souvenirs with Conference visitors.

Past contributions have been greatly appreciated and have helped to make this large expansion possible.

May God help all who strive to care for the needy in the church and community.

LAVONNE KRICKLE, Secretary of Social Service Center.

Under the leadership of Sister Rowland, the "remodeled old-clothing" part of the Commodity Shop grew into the Campus Shop and later into the Social Service Center which now occupies one of the buildings in the business section of Independence at 310 North Liberty Street.

ON FEBRUARY 26, 1941, the Needlecraft Society held its meeting for organization in the basement of the Auditorium with an enrollment of forty-five women. Officers selected were Mrs. Watkins, president; Mrs. Ruby Swalley, vice-president, and Mrs. Lottie Sarratt, secretary and treasurer. The March 15, 1941, issue of the Saints' Herald says of the group: "The object is to raise money from the handwork of the women of the church for the general church program."

"Needlecraft just naturally came into being," explains Sister Sarratt. "There wasn't anything we could do about it." Then, more than ever before, beautiful and intricate handwork was received from the church women living in many parts of the world. Aprons, pillow slips, novelties, luncheon sets, towels, quilts, rugs, pot holders and handkerchiefs continued to arrive at the Auditorium.

After the death of Sister Watkins in September, 1943, Sister Sarratt became the president and served seven years in that capacity. Vice-presidents of the organization have been Mrs. Lucy Silvers, Mrs. Vida Morgan (deceased), Mrs. Pearl Wilcox, Mrs. Mildred Collins, and Mrs. Maude Newberry. In 1946 the weekly meetings were changed from the Auditorium to the basement of the Women's Center building near the Stone Church.

The women worked diligently at doing their part to clear the church of debt. Needles moved swiftly in the creating of beauty. Every article received, regardless of its size or value, was personally acknowledged.

AFTER THE GENERAL CHURCH was cleared of debt, the Needlecraft Society continued its work. Money was given to the missionary reserve fund for spreading the gospel throughout the world. Fifteen hundred dollars was donated to make available the Missionary Edition of the Book of Mormon at the last General Conference. A considerable amount was given to the cancer research fund.

At every General Conference except one, the Needlecraft Society has had a large booth in the Auditorium to display its merchandise. On that one exception the merchandise was displayed on a large table in the lobby of the Auditorium.

For a few years a showcase in which bright needlework and handmade novelties was exhibited stood in the foyer of the Auditorium at all times. Visitors from afar found it a handy place to purchase souvenirs to take home to loved ones, and the local Saints found it a convenient place to purchase gifts.

Handcraft has been received by the Needlecraft Society from Canada, England, Australia, the Hawaiian Islands, and all parts of the United States. Mrs. George Lewis sent a buffet set from Australia. Letters ordering certain pieces of handwork have been received frequently.

Some articles received seemed much too valuable and rare to put on sale as general merchandise. Among these articles were: an 1885 heirloom quilt, yellow with age but still in good condition, made of small pieces of print cloth and quilted so closely together that hundreds of yards of thread were used in creating its intricate design; a hand-crocheted bedspread, long and wide enough for any bed, with an over-all popcorn design; and a hand-woven rug which took Sister D. J. Krahl almost one year to make. Such priceless handwork was sent to the Mansion House in Nauvoo where it could be constantly on display to an admiring public.

DURING HER YEARS of service to the organization, Mrs. Surelda Hardy crocheted 185 rugs. At one weekly meeting she would take home the raw material; at the next weekly meeting she would bring back the complete product. At present Sister Hardy is only seven years away from the century mark. She laments the fact that her failing eyes will not allow her to continue doing fancywork for the church.

Mrs. Ida Layton's specialty was creating hooked rugs from gay strips of cloth. Often the strips were so small they could not be used to create other pieces of handcraft. She originated her own designs. The maple leaves that spread autumn-red across the walk before her home became a colorful pattern to be worked into a creation. But many homes still display the beautiful results of her talent put to good service.

The devotion of the Needlecraft group did not surpass the devotion of those who sent handcraft in for sale. The touching letters received revealed the faith the women had in the church and their desires to give consecrated service to it. Many women who were unable to help the church because of financial burdens or problems in the home, chose the creation of handcraft as a means of serving.

The Presiding Bishopric reports that during the few years the Needlecraft Society has been in operation the sum of $9,536.08 was turned over to the General Church. Over $2,000 was realized at the last General Conference. All of the money earned by the enterprise was used to purchase more raw material for the creation of handcraft.

Some of the women who were active in the beginning of the Needlecraft Society are still putting forth their best efforts to help establish Zion. There is Mrs. F. M. Slover who has pieced an uncounted number of quilt tops and who is still piecing quilt tops from cloth sent to the Social Service Center. There is eighty-six-year old Mrs. Mary Curtis, a regular attendant who often walks to and from the meetings even in inclement weather. And there are Mrs. Lucy Silvers, Mrs. Grace Krahl, Mrs. Lucy Conyers, and Mrs. Lottie Sarratt.

At the last General Conference, the Needlecraft Society and the Campus Shop were again united. They are now known as the Social Service Center.

THROUGH ONE of the big front windows at 310 North Liberty can be seen a rich display of handcraft. Several long showcases of bright needlework add to the cheerfulness of the spacious room where most of the fancywork is displayed to the public. But all of the handcraft is not in this one room. Almost every room of the Social Service Center shows handcraft either in the making or completed. One storage room boasts almost four hundred quilts and quilt tops, pressed and ready for sale.

Six days a week the Social Service Center is open to women who want to serve the church either in creating new handcraft, remodeling old clothing, selling directly to the public, or preparing merchandise for sale. Every Tuesday the women who were active in the Needlecraft Society go to the Social Service Center to devote a day's work to the church and to add their part to the success of the newly combined organizations.

Plans are being made for a booth at the next General Conference in which needlework and other products of the Social Service Center will be displayed and sold for the development of this fast-growing institution.

The women of the Needlecraft Society have carried on an enterprise that has consumed immeasurable hours of time, but they have reaped untold material and spiritual profits.

However, if anyone mentions the achievements of the women of the Needlecraft Society, Sister Sarratt will smile and declare, "Oh, we didn't do any more than any other group of women."

The Family Next Door

Half a year has passed since the Stevensons moved next door to us, and during that time I've learned a lot about the brand of neighborliness famous in the horse and buggy days. I didn't bother to ask their name or offer to help them when the moving van backed up to their door. After all, I told myself, they would probably think I was only curious about their furniture, and anyway I had too much work of my own to do. Such is often the attitude of the city dweller who never needs to borrow a cup of sugar because there's a store at the corner, and who seldom visits his neighbors because he has a television set at home to entertain him in his free hours. But the Stevensons were fresh from the wide open spaces in Kansas, and theirs was a different way of life.

First thirteen-year-old Dick came over and offered to help my husband with the retaining wall he was building between our properties. When we asked how much we owed him, he said, "Nothing . . . that wall's going to do us as much good as it is you folks." Frequently since then he has stopped by to see if there's anything he can do, and the only time he's accepted pay was when he wanted to buy a present for his mother's birthday. In an age when juvenile delinquency is as common among adolescents as three-day measles, it takes someone like Dick to restore the older generation's faith in youth. He's an all-around favorite with the youngsters, too. When the world series was on, he organized a neighborhood baseball team. During football season he taught the pigskin-totin' grammar-schoolers how to tackle, making himself the target. He helps two-year-old Diane—who belongs to the neighbors on our east—when she's having trouble pedaling her trike uphill. And he's a first-class baby sitter.

Next to make themselves acquainted were Sharon and Sheree, the six-year-old twins. Like something out of a fairy story, they came to my kitchen door and offered to sing for me, so I asked them in. After a whispered conference in the bedroom, they walked out hand-in-hand and announced, "We will now sing for you 'Somewhere Over the Rainbow'"—and they did. They were full of questions, as all six-year-olds are, and by the time I'd answered their queries and asked a few questions myself, we felt we knew each other pretty well. Kay, their eleven-year-old sister, knocked at the door and asked if the twins were bothering me. I answered, "Of course not," and suggested she join us. Then came May, who at fifteen substitutes as head of the household when Mother and Father Stevenson are away at work. She told me about the rest of the family, handing me pictures from her billfold as she talked. "There are ten of us all together," she explained, "but the four oldest are married, and my brother Jim who's nineteen soon will be. They all live in Kansas." Since then Jim has married, and the whole family is delighted to have his pretty blonde wife as "one of them."

Mrs. Stevenson is a trim, attractive woman with a soft voice and firm determination. Most of her married life she had been an "isolated Saint," but all through the years she held to the dream

THE OTHER DAY a fellow student asked me if I believed in God. Before I could answer him, there was another question I had to answer for myself—what kind of God do I believe God to be? For there are many different ways of thinking of God, and men are led to them for many different reasons. All religions are unified in declaring that God is the supreme object of worship. But experience shows that men have worshiped many different kinds of gods and that their ideas differ partly because of differences in their view of the nature of worship.

mand to suggest the best outside of me. My God is concerned about me; in all I find him present. He reveals himself in history; he reveals himself in nature; he provides the moral environment which helps me in my struggle after the good. I worship him with all my personality. This helps me to find the answers to questions deep rooted in my nature and makes me what I am.

I FIRST BELIEVED in God because my father and mother before me believed in him. In the early years of my life, I took him for granted. My take over my friends' faith without question. I had to put it to the test of my own experience, and here I found that revision was necessary, both as to what I believed and as to my reason for believing it.

It was necessary for me in the first place to revise my idea of what God was like, for I learned that even in the simplest realities men do not agree. In college I discovered, to my surprise, how wide a difference of interpretation can find lodgment within the compass of a single word. Therefore, I had to distinguish in my beliefs between that which is less and that which is more certain; and what is more important still, between that which matters little and that which matters a great deal.

The God I Worship

By Glen Johnston

The God I worship is the Christian God, a self-conscious personality who has a plan for the world and who invites men to be co-workers with him. I know him in a thousand ways, for he touches my life at every point where I contact reality. But I know him best in the character of Jesus Christ, who expresses in human form the qualities of righteousness, love, and wisdom which I believe to be supremely present in God. To me God is the supreme object of my worship; he represents the realized ideal, the thing I would like to be but am not. In contrast to this, he is a personal helper who shares my life's experiences with me. We are co-workers together in building my personality so it will be able to reach the highest things in life.

I believe because there is something in me which says that I myself am greater than I know, and that in admiration of the greatest, I find my truest self fulfilled. Personality is the name I give to that in me which aspires after the best, and in saying that God is a person, I am using the word that describes the best within me as the fittest word I can com-belief was the implicit assumption that all my parents told me was true. I recognized God's presence in the grace said at meals, in the family prayers which began the day, in the church service to which we all went on Sunday, in personal conversation with my family when things went wrong or new opportunities were to be faced. The God we knew was as real to us as any other fact of life. No one could observe our family without perceiving that this belief had definite effects upon our characters which could not be overlooked.

At first, then, my belief in God, like all my other beliefs, came to me from without on the basis of external authority. I believed because I found others believing. But even at this early stage there was a transition to be noted. What I first believed because someone told me, I soon came to believe because of what I saw in the lives of others. I believed in their God because I believed in them, and what I saw in them justified my trust.

As I grew older and began to think for myself, this simple belief was subjected to a double test. It was no longer possible for me to MOVING INTO SUCH AN EXPERIENCE with all my other inherited beliefs caused my faith in God to be altered to a great extent. When it emerged, it was the same and yet not the same. It was the same in its central content, but different in its emphasis and implications. I still believe in God as a personality, as a wise, loving, fatherly Helper and Friend, but I realize, as I could not realize before, how little I knew of personality and its laws.

If I were to continue to believe in God with a good conscience, it would be because there is something in me which I cannot surrender without ceasing to be myself, which requires the reality of God as the complement of my own reality.

Here Is the Writer . . .

Glen Johnston is a graduate of William Chrisman High School in Independence, Missouri, and a veteran of World War II. Following his discharge from the Navy he attended the University of Kansas City and Kansas City Art Institute, from which he obtained his B. A. Degree. After serving as a guide at

So I was led to this revision on these grounds for my belief in God. I began believing because my friends told me there was a God. This belief was confirmed because of what I saw of its effects in the character of my friends. I then perceived that if I was to continue to believe with full conviction, it must be because I could find effects in myself which corresponded to those I had observed in them.

But I soon found that one generation cannot reproduce the experiences of another even in a matter so sacred and fundamental as belief in God. The greater our knowledge, the greater vision we can see of God. There were things which God meant to some people which he could not mean to me. God was real indeed and near, but no longer clear-cut and distinct as of old. As I went farther on into this strange new world which modern science opened before me, I found there the same needs for guidance, inspiration, security, comradeship, and worship, of which our fathers had been conscious before us and which led them to their faith in God.

How was one to know which way the truth lay? There was but one way that I could see and that was by trying. One must experiment in one's own way. What does it mean for the modern Latter Day Saint to find in experience the God whom Christ has revealed? It means to discover, to have an experience with what Jesus made central in his picture of God.

IT IS CLEAR TO ME that if the way to find God is through experience, then I cannot find him alone. For my God is my neighbor's God as well, and I can be sure of him as long as I can see my neighbor finding him too. I worship a God who is stronger than evil. His love is stronger than hate. His generosity is stronger than greed. His hope is stronger than despair. And we, his co-workers, are engaged in building a world that shall be a fit home for the children of such a Father.

Our Gift to God

By Kay Norman Beldin

AROUND THIS TIME EACH YEAR, most of us are concerning ourselves with Christmas giving and receiving. In all our festive activities, we sometimes forget to give a gift to our Heavenly Father.

During the past few days, I have been considering a list of possibilities for this particular gift, and as I have done so, I have found they all seemed to be grouped around the gift of service to God.

While in this trend of thought, I remembered the words of a hymn which suggests the type of service we should give to God—"Give of Your Best to the Master."

To give our best service doesn't mean simply to serve when it is convenient, but rather to serve at all times—even when it may require much effort on our part. Often as I have been made to realize my neglect and slothfulness in serving God and his church, this thought has come to me, "What would have happened to the church in the early days if the Saints had not put forth any more effort to support it than I sometimes do?"

To do our best in anything demands preparation, and God's work certainly demands no less. We are not able to give our best contribution in a class discussion if we wait until the closing hymn of the church school worship service to glance over our lesson. We must set aside time for preparation (regardless how small our part or how great our experience) that the service we render to God might be our best!

IN ORDER to give our best in any phase of living, we must be concerned with the thing to which we are giving our time and efforts. A good painter is constantly concerned with the methods and procedures to be followed in blending the various colors of paints that he might attain the best in his finished product. Doctors who desire to give their best service to cure human ills are ever seeking more efficient ways.

So it should be with those of us who have embarked in the work of God. To give our best service to this work, we must develop a deep concern for it.

WHEN WE HAVE DEVELOPED this concern for God's work, we also shall have acquired the desire to fulfill the next step in giving our best service—putting God's work first in our lives. One line of the hymn is, "Give him first place in your service, give him first place in your heart." When we can truly place the furthering of God's purposes first in our hearts, we will find it easy to settle such questions as, "Shall we pay our tithing now or after we buy a television set? Shall we go to the movie tonight or donate our time and efforts down at the new church site?"

We read in the Book of Mormon of the prosperity and happiness the people enjoyed when they heeded the instruction ". . . Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God." We also read of the disaster that befell these people when they refused to put service to God first in their lives, but rather walked in their own stubborn ways and concerned themselves primarily with material things.

In the beginning of this new year, we should make a pledge with God and ourselves to give our best.

New Horizons

that someday things would be different. When the chance to move to Independence came, she made the most of it, and now her husband and five children accompany her to services on Sunday. It was a happy occasion for her several weeks ago as she watched May, Kay, and Dick being baptized and confirmed, knowing that they would have the church privileges she had been without so long. The twins would like to have been baptized too, "But we have to wait two more years," they explained to me at the close of the service.

Mr. Stevenson has a particularly warm place in our hearts, and he leaves us wondering how we can ever repay him for the help he has given us. When we began building our new home, he came over with a shovel and helped dig out the corners of the basement after the excavator left. When we got to the main floor, he came with a hammer and saw. Since labor is scarce, we were especially grateful to him, but when we tried to reimburse him for his help he protested, "Oh, no, you don't. We're neighbors, aren't we?"

This year I resolve to try to become as good a neighbor as the Stevensons.

Surviving him are his wife Alice M. Burgess; two daughters, Miss Eveline A. Burgess of the home and Mrs. Florence Belcher of Merriam, Kansas; a sister, Mrs. G. L. Evans of St. Louis; a brother, Harold C. Burgess of Chicago; an aunt, Mrs. Sybilia Zenor of Lamoni, Iowa; and two grandchildren, Danielle Marie and Alice Cathleen Belcher. He was preceded in death by his sister, Florence, in April, 1920; and by his brother, Arthur P. Burgess, in September, 1945.

What were the qualities of personality and character that endeared him to his family and his friends? A thousand might rise to speak for him at the judgment bar of God. . . . He loved his family and his friends with a pure and selfless devotion. There was nothing within his power that he would not do to help another. He was always kind, a Christian, a gentleman, a son of God, a Saint.

Los Angeles, California

Notice to California Members

Genevieve Wagoner, Box 294, Livermore, California, would like to contact other members living in the Livermore-Pleasanton area who are interested in attending cottage meetings. These are held every Friday evening at eight in the A. L. Allen home at 597 McLeod Street, Livermore.

CORRECTION

On page 20 of the December 25 issue of the Herald, the name of Karen Lynn Barrows appeared under the heading of Deaths in the annual index. It should have been printed under Births.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Don Baldwin, Box 185, Opheim, Montana, requests prayers for her grandmother, Mrs. Etta Taylor, of Hope, North Dakota. She is suffering with arthritis and cancer and is in pain constantly. She is not a member of the church, but if there are members of the priesthood living near her, she would appreciate being visited.

Prayers are requested for James Etter, 134 South Hardy, Kansas City, Missouri, who recently underwent surgery for cancer. He is a patient at Bell Memorial Hospital in Kansas City, Kansas.

On August 27, 1882, she was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church and for many years taught in the church school. On December 3, 1904, she was married to Charles C. Mitchell. Two children born to them died in infancy. Mr. Mitchell died November 1, 1928, of injuries received in a streetcar accident.

Surviving are two brothers: Paul K. Smith of Independence and Joseph Smith of Los Angeles, California; and a sister, Mrs. Nora S. Quivey of Independence. Services were conducted by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Paul F. Kelsey at the Stahl Funeral Home. Interment was in Elmwood Cemetery.

BRUCH.—Howard Milem, son of Fletcher and Lucille Bruch, was born August 27, 1930, at Genoa, Colorado, and died December 16, 1950, at Leon, Iowa, from injuries received when he fell from a scaffolding at the new church being built in Lamoni, Iowa.

He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at the age of eight and was active in the work. Following graduation from Cameron, Missouri, high school, he engaged in various activities, especially in construction work.

He is survived by his parents; five sisters: Mary Lou of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Ann King and Mrs. Barbara Barry of Cameron; Peggy and Dorothy of the home; and his grandfather J. S. Bruch of Genoa. Elder Emery E. Jennings was in charge of the funeral. Burial was at Cameron.

BOGART.—Elsie May, daughter of Oscar and Hanna Sheese Bogart, was born March 13, 1896, near Joy, Illinois, and died December 8, 1950, at Aledo, Illinois. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 8, 1909.

Surviving are two sisters and three brothers. Her parents and an infant brother preceded her in death.

Concerning Herald House Prices

In another part of this issue of the "Herald" will be found an announcement concerning several Herald House price changes. A number of these involve price increases on certain of our books, and a number of others are reductions in price of some titles which have been published for sometime.

As was the case during World War II, Herald House is making and will continue to make every possible effort to keep its prices as low as possible. The fact remains, however, that when costs of the component parts of our products show consistent increases, we must attempt to keep up with these advances in order that we may not ultimately become a financial burden upon the church.

During the past six months, the cost of materials (paper, bookbinders' cloth, etc.) has advanced four and five times on some items. Since our last prices were set, labor costs have also increased. The price adjustments announced in this issue are in the nature of an equalization rather than any "across the board" increase for all items. They were previously announced to our book stewards.

Herald House has greatly appreciated the co-operation of all members of the church during the past year and solicits the continued understanding of the members through the trying period which all publishers are now experiencing.

Kenneth L. Graham, Manager.

 JANUARY IN CHURCH HISTORY

Joseph Smith wrote this account of an important January (1832) event in church history: "On the 26th I called a general council of the church, and was acknowledged as the president of the high priesthood, according to a previous ordination at a conference of high priests, elders, and members, held at Amherst, Ohio, on the twenty-fifth of January, 1832. The right hand of fellowship was given to me by the bishop, Edward Partridge, in behalf of the church."—"Church History," Volume I, page 244.

On January 31, 1831, the first missionaries of the church reached Independence: P. P. Pratt wrote of the journey: "In the beginning of 1831 we renewed our journey; and, passing through St. Louis and St. Charles, we traveled on foot for three hundred miles through vast prairies and through trackless wilds of snow—no beaten road; houses few and far between; and the bleak northwest wind always blowing in our faces with a keenness which would almost take the skin off the face. We traveled whole days from morning till night, without a house or fire, wading in snow to the knees at every step, and the cold so intense that the snow did not melt on the south side of the houses, even in the midday sun, for nearly six weeks. We carried on our back our changes of clothing, several books, and corn bread and raw pork. We often ate our frozen bread and pork by the way"

"This was about fifteen hundred miles from where we started, and we had performed most of the journey on foot, through a wilderness country, in the worst season of the year, occupying about four months, during which we had preached the gospel to tens of thousands of gentiles and two nations of Indians; baptizing, confirming, and organizing many hundreds of people into churches."

When you complain about walking three blocks on clean sidewalks to church, think of these men. And don't forget the missionary work they did on the way.

 A NEGLECTED GIFT

Years ago, when Father was in his prime, we were visiting in the home of relatives where the young and only son was quite a problem.

"We don't know what to do about Buddy," the mother said. "He doesn't mind, and we can't do a thing with him."

Father remarked, "You have forgotten that one of the principles of the gospel would take care of that."

The mother was astonished and exclaimed, "Principles of the gospel! Which one?"

"The laying on of hands," said Father. "Would you like me to show you?"

"Why, yes," she replied, a little doubtfully.

At the moment, Buddy was in a bit of mischief. Father picked him up and gave him a sound spanking, an experience entirely new to him. Buddy was a changed boy for the remainder of the visit and behaved himself very well.

The world is discovering that the "spoiled brats" of the twenties and thirties do not make very good parents in the forties and fifties.

News and Notes

BAPTISMS

The most recent statistics from the stake offices indicate that a new high in baptisms has been achieved in the Center Stake. Three hundred two were baptized in 1950.

ATTENDS INSTITUTE

Bishop Leslie L. Kohlman attended a Priesthood Yuletide Institute for the Central Missouri Stake at Warrensburg, December 29, 30, and 31. The theme for the institute was "How Shall We Save Marriage and Family Life for the Kingdom." Bishop Kohlman taught several classes and preached a sermon. Elder Carl Mesle assisted in conducting the classes December 31. Approximately ninety members of the priesthood attended.

DeLAPP SPEAKS

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp spoke to the local Optimist Club, December 27, and the Lion's Club, December 28. His subject was in regard to his trip to Europe.

YULETIDE CONFERENCE

The third annual Yuletide Conference was held December 28, 29, 30 and 31, for the members of the Stake-Wide Zion's League. Sponsored by the cabinet of the League, the conference featured various activities including a Talent Night, a Panel Discussion, an Activities Night, and a Candlelight Fellowship. The theme "Commend Thy Ways Unto Him" was concerned with youth's place in the war, stressing an especial ministry to the young men who are leaving for the service.

INTEREST BY SPANISH-SPEAKING PEOPLE

Elder Wayne Simmons spent the period from November 26 to December 15 in the San Antonio, Texas, area, visiting and contacting the Spanish-speaking people there. He conducted a series of cottage meetings in the home of one of these people. An average of nineteen Spanish-speaking people were in attendance. Two of those attending the meetings belonged to the church. Interest was reported as very good.

CHURCH FARM

A large concrete soil saving dam was finished December 29 on one of the church farms operated by Frank Pratt and managed by N. Ray Carmichael and his assistant, Don Elefson. The Missouri balanced farming agent, George P. Smith, assisted with the work. This farm together with five other church farms has been a member of the Balanced Farming Association for three or more years.

MISSIONARY EFFORTS

Elder G. Wayne Smith associated with Elder Stephen Black concluded a series of meetings December 17 in Joplin, Missouri. Seventeen were baptized as a result of the missionary endeavor. Fifteen were adults and two children. These baptisms make a total of 25 in the last three months in Joplin, and a total of 147 for the district up to December 17.

Apostle D. O. Chesworth and Elder Black traveled through part of the Spring River district during the week of December 11 to 18.

We'd Like You to Know

Roy Stearns

ROY IS THE FIRST "executive secretary" ever to be employed in the Council of Twelve office. An ever-increasing amount of work in the preparation of missionary materials, training courses for appointees, and field administration gravitates to the office of the Twelve. Special assignments were made at last General Conference to some members of the Council, such as President Paul M. Hanson, Charles R. Hield, and Arthur A. Oakman. The need for an office administrator thus became imperative. Roy was a natural for the job—experienced and unattached (single). After finishing his training in business college (1939), he started pounding the typewriter keys and balancing accounts in a set of books.

In 1941 he was helping the Immigration and Naturalization Service as clerk-stenographer to the Chief Border Patrol Inspector. About this time the United States Army had a little unfinished business for Roy to take care of in Northern Africa and Southern Europe. After thirty-four months of this, he came home with a Bronze Star Medal and the rank of master sergeant.

Two years in Graceland College (1946-1948) readied Brother Roy for secretary to the traffic manager of the C. M. St. P. & P. Railroad and his present position to which he came last April. He sings with the Morning Devotions Quartette on our daily radio program and with the Stone Church Choir and Male Chorus. He is a member of the Lambda Delta Sigma and F. O. X. Alumni and serves in the office of priest.

Render Unto God

Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.

—Matthew 22: 21.

Trouble arises in the world out of differences of opinion on one question: Who is more important—Caesar or God?

Sometimes the trouble comes from Caesar, who thinks he is God.

Trouble comes because there are people who insist that we must render unto Caesar the things that are God's.

Caesar doesn't trust our conscience as God does. Caesar takes his portion out of our pay check before you get it. He gets his first. God has to wait for the collection plate to go around. And if we aren't at church, our contribution is missing.

* * * * *

Caesar has always been the symbol of power. God has always represented the spirit. Caesar believes in force. God believes in love. Caesar dominates. God invites.

An angel once spoke to an ancient prophet and said, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."—Zechariah 4: 6.

Before the creation of the world, the two-way struggle developed in heaven. There were two schools of thought on the strategy of redemption that was to be employed in the salvation of the race of human beings that was yet to come into existence. Satan would have taken a short cut by the use of force. He was impatient; he did not want to wait. Christ was willing to accept the Father's plan of love.

The use of force in the world has caused untold misery and suffering. But people have never learned that it will not work.

* * * * *

The "Law of Love" is greater and more enduring than the law of force. Chains and slavery are on the side of force, but they have never been able to conquer the spirit.

Love is the theme of the gospel from beginning to end.

Apostle George Mesley summarized it beautifully at the recent Conference of High Priests at Kirtland:

God so loved the world that he gave . . . —John 3: 16.

Christ so loved the world that he came. —I Timothy 1: 15.

We so love the world that we go.—Matthew 28: 19.

"Thou shalt love," said Jesus. God asks our love. If we give that, all other things will follow. It is the one thing we must render unto God. "No man can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love," said the latter-day prophet. It is a basic truth.

* * * * *

Rendering unto God the things that are God's is not always easy. Sometimes it is done through great sacrifice. Sometimes it is done through loss and sorrow.

At a recent prayer meeting here in Independence, a splendid young woman stood up to bear her testimony. Her husband was a fine young missionary who went under appointment not long ago. They had shared great hopes of missionary service, of home and companionship. Then he was killed in a car accident. Alone, she is taking care of a lovely baby daughter. Her courage and fortitude have been an inspiration to the people of her church. She is holding fast to the ideals and work that she and her husband supported. Here is what she said:

I can feel in my life the gentle but firm hand of God drawing me near to him. It has made me feel how much farther I have to go. Each day I want to improve over the day before.

Rendering unto God the things that are God's is sometimes costly. A young married woman recently had a choice of two offers. One was for a position that would give her a good income to add to her husband's. It would have augmented the family resources in a splendid way. They had no children to prevent her accepting it.

On the other hand, she was offered a responsibility that would take nearly as much time and pay her nothing at all. It was to be the head of a children's organization in the local church. In fact, she would probably have to put some of her own money into it to keep things going.

She chose to make the sacrifice. She will serve without pay in a volunteer job for the children.

We wonder: How many other people would be willing to make such a rendering to God?

Every one of us has an accounting—a spiritual accounting as well as a financial one—to make to God. We must report on the use of our talents, and we will find that we owe God something.

Every gift, every ability, every capacity imposes its own obligation. It is the duty of the artistic person to learn to paint. It is the duty of the person who has natural musical talent to learn to use some instrument, to sing, or to conduct. It is the duty of the person who has literary capacities to learn to write, and to employ that ability in a good work. All of this is rendering unto God the things that are God's.

It is the duty of one who can teach, or lead, or serve in any way to train and serve.

"Render . . . unto God the things that are God's."

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

THE CHRISTIAN AMENDMENT MOVEMENT (headquarters at Topeka, Kansas) is renewing its drive to induce the National Congress to adopt an Amendment to the Constitution, called appropriately "the Christian Amendment." Here is the proposed amendment:

SECTION 1. This nation devoutly recognizes the authority and law of Jesus Christ, Savior and Ruler of nations, through whom are bestowed the blessings of Almighty God.

SECTION 2. This amendment shall not be interpreted so as to result in the establishment of any particular ecclesiastical organization, or in the abridgment of the rights of religious freedom, or freedom of speech and press, or of peaceful assemblage.

SECTION 3. Congress shall have power, in such cases as it may deem proper, to provide a suitable oath or affirmation for citizens whose religious scruples prevent them from giving unqualified allegiance to the Constitution as herein amended.

The proposal if adopted by Congress, to become effective, would have to be approved by thirty-six of the States.

Notwithstanding, Section 2 stipulates that this amendment "shall not be interpreted so as to result in the establishment of any particular ecclesiastical organization, etc.," the proposed legislation is bound to be the focal point in a stormy controversy, opponents averring that the whole thing violates the spirit and plain intent of the First Amendment.

While we as Latter Day Saints have a well-defined belief, founded on Ether 1: 35, as to what is required of Americans to preserve ourselves as a free people, I believe it would be unwise to go beyond the provisions of the First Amendment adopted in 1791 which is as follows:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

We believe that the Lord raised up wise men to "establish" (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10) our Constitution. At the time this word was given (December, 1833), the First Amendment had been adopted, and we may rightly assume, I am sure, that it was that document as then constituted that was in the divine mind, thereby bringing in all amendments then in effect.

As desirable as it certainly is that this country continue to be a "Christian nation," I do not believe the adoption of the proposed amendment would ipso facto accomplish such purpose. It no doubt would be of value in combating atheistic communism, and would thus have educational value, although the movement would provoke endless and bitter controversy. Its passage by the Congress, which, in my belief, is not at all likely, would involve the country in a terrific and probably a most injurious struggle between the pros and the contras.

Even if adopted, it is likely there would be a persistent demand for its repeal.

WHITE HOUSE YOUTH CONFERENCE

This convention has been held within recent days. We have not seen any extended report on what was canvassed or what was accomplished, except a report that it went on record as opposing the reading of the Bible in the public schools. Here, we assume, an extreme interpretation of our Constitution has prevailed, and undoubtedly suggests the convention was strongly Protestant, in the light of the running warfare of recent years between those who seek Federal aid for parochial schools and those who go "all out" in opposition.

Elders F. M. McDowell and Carl F. Mesle were our representatives at this convention.

THE VATICAN IN AMERICA?

Mr. Alfred Tyrnauer, journalist, lecturer, editor of International News Service, writes in Liberty (December, 1950) on the question, "Will the Pope Move the Vatican to America." We recommend a careful reading, as we feel Mr. Tyrnauer speaks advisedly, but treats the question objectively. In a brief summarization in the beginning of his article, Mr. Tyrnauer says:

The first World War brought America economic supremacy. (The gold of the Old World poured into Fort Knox.)

The Second World War transferred the political center of gravity to the United States.

The Third World War is likely to bring us—among other things—the Vatican.

The increasing tension between East and West, and the acute danger of an armed conflict has induced the Holy See to look for a bomb-proof shelter. A source, closest to Pope Pius XII, revealed to me that the head of the 330,000,000 Catholics of the world has at last given consent to plans for the evacuation of the Vatican in case of a sudden Russian invasion of Italy. Under these highly confidential plans, the Sacred College of Cardinals, the huge administrative apparatus of the Vatican, the Courts of the Holy See, and all movable treasures are to be transferred to America under the protection of the U. S. and British navies.

The Pontiff, however, remained steadfast on one salient point. He refused absolutely to accept safeguards for his own person. "My place is in Rome," he said, and indicated that he would rather face the invaders defenseless in an empty Vatican than "abandon the throne of St. Peter." He agreed, nevertheless, to insure the safety of the Vatican apparatus so that the brain-center of Catholicism should not be paralyzed by a possible occupation of Rome by the Communists.

The decision to evacuate Rome rather than to submit to a hostile occupation, was not one for the Pope and his advisors. True, there were several precedents for such a move in the long history of the Vatican, but, as a rule, the Popes preferred to submit to humiliation, captivity, and even death rather than abandon their traditional seat upon the Vatican Hill of Rome.

Ever since the death of the Apostle Peter in A.D. 67, the name of Rome has been associated with Catholicism, and the history of the famed city for the past 2,000 years is inseparable from that of the Papacy. The ties binding the heirs of St. Peter to Rome are not religious ones alone. They are political, economic, national, social, and personal bonds as well. Out of the 262 Popes, no less than 103 have been Romans, and 107 have been natives of other parts of Italy. Only 13 were French, 11 Greek, and 7 of German origin. Other nations were represented by only one and two Pontiffs in the history of the Church, with the exception of Spain which claimed 3. The election of non-Italians to the Papacy usually reflected the predominance of their respective countries in the Christian world at that period.

It is logical to assume, therefore, that an American Pope will take his place in the not-too-distant future. —Quoted by permission of the publishers.

It is not difficult to picture what may happen in Italy should Communism with its intolerance become dominant. The Papal State is probably in jeopardy in its own "seven hills."

Thus we see crosscurrents in our national and international picture.

Observe Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Russell of Twining, Michigan, observed their fiftieth wedding anniversary on December 19 by holding open house. With them for the occasion were their four children and their families. They are Mrs. Arlene Pestrue of Standish, Michigan; Howard Russell of Flint, Michigan; Jack Russell of Prescott, Michigan; and Bob Russell of Twining.

Elijah Russell and Jennie Hanson were married in the Bay City Reorganized Church on December 19, 1900, by Elder J. A. Grant. Later they moved to Twining, where for thirty-six years Sister Russell was in charge of music and Brother Russell served as treasurer. Both resigned recently, giving up their positions to younger members.

Experience, Authority, and Revelation

By Arthur A. Oakman

THE DOCTRINE OF REVELATION is the foundation of our church life. It is causal. That is, it creates and sustains the life of Christ in the body. Understanding the doctrine is vital for many reasons. First, to understand the principle is to recognize the process when it occurs in experience. Second, understanding is vital to the development of that open-mindedness which alone conditions the appreciation of the movement of Divinity. Third, if understanding of the principle is had, safeguards against abuses and immature or even impure expressions are set up. Everyone will agree that such safeguards are vitally necessary now.

Most of us have experienced breath-taking rapture as we have listened for the first time to a great poem or a symphony or have viewed an outstanding painting. It lays hold on us, on every part of us—heart and mind and spirit. We apprehend beauty and are apprehended of it. We are “caught up,” so to speak, so that feelings of praise and statements of appreciation flow into awe, wonder, and amazement. Something like worship ensues. In proportion to the quality of the work is the depth of this experience when thought and feeling merge into adoration of spirit. In this initial impact of human mind upon such a work of art, true spiritual authority is exercised upon the subject perceiving. All authority resides in the nature of things as they are. The spirit receives the flow of creative artistry and bows in rapture. It recognizes something akin to its own nature.

But to stop here in passive reciprocity is not possible.

THE MIND DEMANDS that experience be organized and understood. So then comes the investigation of this (to the subject) subjective experience. Questions are asked: “Why does this symphony make me feel thus? How does the poet achieve the power to stretch my soul?” “By what magic is this artist more than a painter? How does he become a revealer?” Here the mental faculties begin to work on experience, and concepts of principles are fashioned. When this conceptual process is stated in propositional form, we have the doctrine of art. But art is more than doctrine—just as revelation is more than truth about God—or just truth. But the work of art and its authoritative appeal precedes the statement or doctrine. Apprehension comes first. Comprehension follows when the mental faculties descry the principles upon which the artistic achievement is based. Comprehension dawns when meter and rhyme are discovered; or melodic line, movement of harmony and key relation are disclosed; or when, in the case of a great painting, form and color consonance come to light. But the revelation itself is more than these. A man tone-deaf may easily recite the principles of harmony, or a color-blind person state the doctrine of art. But his appreciation can never be complete. A map of Arizona will disclose the location of the Grand Canyon. Accurate direction as to how to get there can be distilled from the map. But because the map is an abstraction—a guide, and this alone—it can never convey the glory and beauty of the canyon itself. Doctrine is to revelation what the map is to the tourist. But the experience itself is more—inconceivably more—than the doctrine distilled from it.

THUS WE ARE NOT CONTENT ever, unless we have diseased minds, to stay upon the second level of appreciation. Indeed a distillation of doctrine from experience itself impels or inspires one to return to the experience with “freshened vision.” With the principles clearly in mind, we return to the work of art. We look again or we listen. A new grace comes. Again are we laid hold upon. This time our apprehension is infused with new meanings. It becomes understanding. We not only bow in his presence but have the mind of the artist, or the rudiments of it. The seed of artistry is in us. We have the prophecy of a capacity for similar creation. Now we are in communion not only with the created thing but also with the creator.

Revelation has its roots in the intercourse between mind and event. Always the event is the locus of revelation. The mind appreciates

Marks of Maturity

Convocation Address, September 14, 1950

By E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

President of Graceland College

IN A HOUSE just across the road from North Hall, one can find several pencil marks on the wall-paper in one of the rooms. If those marks are studied for a few moments, they will be seen to have a kind of organization. They are short, horizontal marks and arranged in four columns. In one column is a little notation: Allen, age two years, three months. Then above that an inch or so: Allen, age three. In the next column are similar notations for Sandra Jo, John, and Susan. We're going to miss that section of wallpaper in our new house, for it is a picture of our children growing up.

How many of you fellows have gone to your dad and measured yourselves up to him? About the first time you thought of it, you probably came to his belt line, gradually to his shoulders, and then that grand and glorious day when—because you had a little more hair on your head—you seemed to be just a fraction of an inch taller, and now some of you can look down upon the balding head of the one you once looked up to. In most normal human beings, there seems to be the urge to “grow up.”

But there are exceptions. A few months ago I was walking along the sidewalk to town when a car went speeding by and hit a puddle of water, splashing dirty water over a girl walking just in front of me. A fellow poked his head out of the window and laughed. In anger the girl cried, “Why don't you grow up? Why don't they develop the and one we might well use for our text at this Graceland convocation of 1950. Why don't people grow up? Why don't they develop the stature of manhood and womanhood which will match their height and weight?

It's a good question to ask right now, for our very lives and the hard-won heritage of the human race is threatened by those who refuse to grow up. We're concerned not only because the events in Korea, Russia, China, and Europe touch our lives rather directly, but because we have come to this place this year to dedicate ourselves to the cause of education, which in simple language just means “growing up.”

WE MIGHT MARK on the wall here this morning four check points which may not be given necessarily in order of importance but against which we can check our growth.

1. Persistence and purpose. Have you ever observed a very small child trying to lace his shoes? Watch his face, see how hard he works, and in a few minutes if he hasn't been successful he throws down the shoe and runs crying to his mother.

Immaturity is lack of persistence and purpose. The mature person doesn't throw up his hands and moan, “What's the use?” when he encounters obstacles and feels some resistance. The scientist may make thousands of experiments before finally discovering the formula that works. In fact one way to find the truth is to discard all formulas that don't work. The person who is grown up recognizes that God, the Creator of the universe, has been working millions of years. That which is most worth while is not done in a day. He develops a sense of perspective, and yet his sense of purpose drives him on to growing efforts. Lack of immediate results does not frustrate nor defeat him.

The United Nations, a Zion community, life's great concepts, lasting friendships, disciplines, and skills—none of these are gained in a few moments. And one of the tragedies of our day is the false, damnable doctrine of resignation to the movement of world events. Man is not powerless; he is not a pawn in the force of circumstances; he is not helpless to act upon his environment. But he must be possessed by great purposes and persist until those purposes find expression.

2. A love for people. Sometime, watch a couple of children playing in a sandpile. For a few minutes there is peace and quiet until both of them happen to want the same toy at the same time. “It's mine, it's mine,” they cry, and soon the struggle is on. A mark of immaturity is the feeling that one is the center of the solar system and anything and everything which has meaning slowly revolves about him and is related to him. Egotism and selfishness are very often related to insecurity and are marks of immaturity. The three-year-old feels that everything which occurs—the sun as it shines, the rain, his parents' actions, the growing grass—all have some relation to his personal desires and wants. The mature person recognizes other people. The Christian religion has the hope that man can go beyond his childish concern with himself, his egotistic world of persons and interests, and even transcend boundaries of space and color and nationality to build a brotherhood. A love and concern for an ever-enlarging circle of persons is a mark of maturity. This college is not for me alone; this building is not for me alone; this book is not for me alone—all of these I share with my fellows. Carry that out to your work in the church, to your communities, and the world of nations. A love of humanity is a mark of maturity.

3. Freedom to choose is another mark of maturity. The small child makes few decisions other than to mind or not to mind. His parents, teachers, and circumstances make his decisions for him. To mature is to grow free—but to grow free for something not to grow free from something—freedom for, not freedom from. Our very purposes in life, our allegiances, our responsibilities constrain us. There is no absence of discipline in freedom, else it becomes chaos; but it is discipline and restraint self-administered, not enforced against our will. We need so much to see that freedom cannot live without discipline. The difference between democracy and totalitarianism is that in democracy, order, discipline, and control are self-imposed by people who are free to choose; while in the totalitarian form of society, discipline is externally imposed.

4. Allegiances and loyalties and ties beyond the group characterize the mature person. Popularity is not the greatest thing in life for him. What people will think of him is not his supreme revelator. He doesn't have to take a Gallup Poll before he makes a decision or thinks a thought. All others can leave him, and he can still carry on in steadfastness of purpose. The throngs left Jesus—his popularity waned—the twelve were with him—then eleven—then three—then they slept—and he was in Gethsemane alone. A mark of maturity is the recognition that in the most serious problems of life there is frequently a loneliness, a going on alone. Our concerns, our loyalties to give us life must extend beyond the group to identification with those values and purposes that persist through the changing times—to the soul that breathes through the life of the universe.

For the sobering days in which we live, days of change and therefore days of opportunity, mature people are demanded. Maturity is not always associated with chronological age. Circumstances can mature people very rapidly. We can grow up here and thereby contribute to our communities, our church, our nations. It's the desperate need of twentieth century.

Farming and Accounting

By Gerald Gabriel

Stewartsville, Missouri, east of St. Joseph, is the business center of a rich area where many church people are active as farmers and businessmen. . . . Gerald Gabriel, pastor of the church, is a graduate of Graceland College and has his B.S. degree in Agriculture from the University of Missouri. He has served as assistant county agent and in other related work. The following material is quoted from a newspaper article and a letter by Brother Gabriel.—Editors.

(From the newspaper article.)

The Hidy brothers west of town are preparing to harvest a 110-acre field of corn that will produce 105 bushels per acre.

The field was plowed out of permanent pasture last spring; 1,000 pounds of rock phosphate, and seventy-five pounds of phosphate or superphosphate were applied per acre, based on soil tests. Hybrid seed corn was planted and this high yield was the result. . . .

Gerald Gabriel, R. L. D. S. pastor and former assistant county agent, assisted the Hidy in interpreting the soil tests and making fertilizer recommendations. . . .

(From Brother Gabriel's letter)

The Hidy brothers are two of our most successful farmers. Gordon has been the pastor at Stewartsville for nineteen years, and Joseph has been solicitor for some time. They are ardent financial statement filers and tithepayers. They have done more than their share on the local budget, and have helped those in need.

In temporal things as in spiritual, those who humbly seek help are those well on the way. This last spring we went over their entire farm with the soil auger, then made tests and recommendations. They have a record of these readings and will use them in future planning.

Since we are able to figure what is removed by cropping and what is added by their building program, we will know their needs. We have an accounting.

This year we figured the land planted in corn would make seventy-five to eighty bushels per acre without adding plant food. Then we figured the plant food necessary for 100 bushels. The cost was about $25. Some of the fertilizer is slowly available and will be useful in the next few years' crops, but the investment of $1.00 would return about $1.15. The seed company figured the corn to make 140 bushels, and the county agent figured 105.5 bushels on another plot. With the help of God, the Hidy brothers' returns have been even greater. This is an example of "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Malachi 3: 10.

Alexander Smith

By Marcella Schenck

HE WAS A KINDLY MISSIONARY, and we called him "Uncle Alec."

I wouldn't have you think that southwestern Iowa "uncled" all its missionaries, but the several Brother Smiths had to be given personalities of their own, so we knew them as Brother Joseph, Brother Fred M., Brother F. A., Brother T. W., Brother Heman, etc. I don't know why the "Uncle Alec" to this one.

Was he large of stature or was I just a very small girl? He seemed a big man with a big heart.

My first memory of him was as he sat on a stump on the reunion ground. (In fact, I seldom remember ever seeing him except at reunions.) A little toddler walked up to him and said in her baby voice, "I want to sit in your lap."

Everyone smiled aloud, but he didn't seem to mind. He liked children, and as we skipped about the camp, he had a kindly way of tousling the heads of little boys and patting us little girls, if we passed him. It seemed very fitting that the child wanted to sit in his lap. The atmosphere about him had said to her, "Come unto me."

My most vivid memory of Uncle Alec was a sermon that might have been entitled, "Bring the little children, Let them come to me."

I was cradled in the church and have been a member more than fifty-three years. Now would I be a heretic to say that very few sermons stand out from the rest? I don't want our missionaries to be discouraged. I am a part of all the sermons to which I have listened. Some are for the hour, for the day, for the week or year, some for a time of distress or doubt or trouble; some are for others who listen; some are for me. I wonder if we don't have to "meet sermons on the way," if they are to assist in our worship.

For each person a few sermons stand out, alone and apart, to become a wall of strength or a refreshing fountain or maybe a picture framed in gold. Uncle Alec preached a sermon one day that I have always remembered. Why? How? These things are inexplicable.

THIS IS WHAT I REMEMBER:

We camp children were sitting together in the center of the tent on the long boards propped up on blocks. It is surprising how comfortable one can be on such a backless arrangement if he is interested in the gospel. I don't know if we had been herded in, invited in, or why we were there together. Very little was done in those days for the children. We were supposed to be young adults in the sprouting stage. Yet our parents meant well, and considering some of the fine results, maybe their methods were more nearly right than we know.

Was his sermon being preached for children? He smiled down on us now and then. Was it a warning to our parents? I don't even know if he often preached about children. This is a part of what he said, "It is as important to keep the children we have in the church as it is to convert the new."

He drew his illustrations from the woodland about us—the saplings well-rooted in the soil and the seedlings sheltered by the mother tree. Maybe it was from that sermon I got the thought which I often express that I may not be much of a missionary to convert outsiders, but if I can help the faith of a little child, I shall be happy. It would be a glorious experience to know I had kept someone in the faith.

What became of those boys and girls who sat there in the tent with me that day, Uncle Alec? I can see some shouldering the burdens you wished they would, but some worthwhile timber for our building was lost along the way. Why were they lost? Did they follow after weak leaders? Did they give ears to idle tales? Were their own parents too critical of sermons and programs of the church? Did some one man hide their view of the real gospel? Was some fault of mine their undoing?

You preached the sermon. How much did we profit by it?

The church has grown. We were just beginning then. You died too soon to see the army of workers who labor today to conserve the timber we have. The work for the children and the youth has grown and grown. There are many kindly missionaries now whose laps look good to toddlers. We have children's pastors, youth pastors, choristers, and teachers for every age. Yet we still need the warning cry, "Save the timber, root it deep, water and feed it well."

I wish I could hear you read that Scripture again, "Behold your little ones!"

No Apologies Needed

By Ruby Fishel

ONE MORNING a young woman came to my door, and when I gave her the opportunity, she told me in a fearful, timid tone of the product she was selling. Her indifferent approach failed to arouse my interest, even though her product might have been good.

On another occasion, I met a good friend who was enthusiastically selling Christmas cards. Her own exuberance paved the way for me to expect a product of excellence. The cards were really lovely, printed on the finest of paper, and the illustrations were works of art. The scriptural texts were uplifting and filled with the joy and faith that is associated with the yule season. In my friend's face, I could see the light of faith, sincerity, and absolute confidence in the quality of her product. Examination of the cards brought proof of my first impression.

How do you tell the gospel story to the friend you meet? Do you approach the subject with an inferiority complex, both as to your ability to portray its meaning and as to the story itself? Are you fully converted to the belief that the world should know the story of the Book of Mormon, or is it something that you tuck into the folds of the gospel garment and hope they will accidentally discover it later?

I have been somewhat disturbed by these oft-repeated warnings: "Don't ever discuss the Inspired Version, or read from it, if nonmembers are present," "Don't teach the Book of Mormon in the church school class; some nonmembers might come and not know what you are talking about."

How can believers in the Restoration message say such things in the light of the plain instruction we have received from the Lord on these Scriptures:

And again the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in which is the fullness of the gospel

Thou shalt ask, and my Scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldest hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5, 15.

This latter quotation leaves no doubt that we are to use the Inspired Version.

IF I WERE TEACHING a class on the Book of Mormon and someone came to the class who was not familiar with the teachings of the book, I would take time to lay a suitable foundation, as briefly as possible, which would lead him to the subject under discussion. A teacher should always adapt the subject material to the students. Why can't this be done with the Book of Mormon studies as well as with any teaching from the Bible? The Inspired Version can be introduced as a corrected version of the King James Bible; one or two well-chosen examples should be sufficient to convince the listener that this is a superior rendition of the Scriptures. Many versions of the Bible, other than the King James, are being used today. The Revised, Goodspeed, and Moffatt translations are often used. Why place ourselves on the defensive in regard to the Inspired Version? It is so far superior to other versions that if we will give it the opportunity to stand on its own merits, it will need no defense.

The Book of Mormon teachings are those of our Lord and Savior. Need we offer them with any apology? I have read of many instances in the early church of the missionary work of the elders. They traveled on foot from house to house, expounded the Scriptures, and told the story of the Book of Mormon and its teachings. The people rejoiced when they heard of this marvelous work and a wonder. Some of our present missionaries have opened up series of missionary services in new places, giving the Book of Mormon teachings the spotlight to attract the first interest of the people and it has worked. Is it not still a marvelous work and a wonder?

Recently, a young woman attended a service in a small branch of the church. Her knowledge of our teachings was quite limited. On this occasion, the pastor spoke on the subject, "The Book of Mormon, what is it? What does it teach?" The woman listened intently. During the informal part of the service, she asked several questions. After the services, she remarked, "I have always heard that Latter Day Saints believed in the Book of Mormon, but I had never before heard anything about what it was or what it taught. I am glad I heard this sermon tonight. I am really beginning to learn something about it. I have often wondered if it were some sort of a secret doctrine." There were several young people present who had been reared in the church. They, too, expressed the fact that they had learned much from that informal service. Could it be true that we have talked about defending the Book of Mormon to the exclusion of straight-from-the-shoulder teaching of the simple facts of the restored gospel as contained in it?

IF WE FAIL to be straightforward, if we suppress knowledge of the marvelous work and a wonder concerning the teachings of the Book of Mormon, not just its miraculous coming forth but its actual teachings, and when we are "discovered" using an Inspired Version we say apologetically, "Oh, this isn't the King James version, but we can use the King James just as well to prove our doctrine," we are presenting our gospel story with an “inferiority complex.” If we believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, then we should believe that the Inspired Version was corrected through the power of God. To me the marvelous clarity of the Inspired Version (which presents no new doctrine but simply portrays harmonious texts with the inconsistent mistranslations corrected) is another vindication of Joseph Smith as a prophet of God. We, as Latter Day Saints, fail to avail ourselves of this opportunity to teach the gospel to the world through this means. Again I repeat, the Inspired Version will greatly assist us if we demonstrate our faith in its use to tell the gospel story in clarity and reasonable logic. It will stand on its own merits, with no apologetic props needed.

It is my firm conviction that if we will teach the gospel affirmatively from the Three Standard Books in the spirit of humility, with faith and confidence in the guidance of God’s Holy Spirit, our message will be received by many spiritually hungry souls now thirsting for the message of Christ. If we can forget our “inferiority complex” and our apologetic manners, if we can project our thinking into the lives of those whom we meet from day to day and can see what the light of the gospel can do for them, we will not hesitate, we will not falter. We will not disagree among ourselves as to the manner of presentation. Unitedly, we will move forward, and soon the world shall know of the message that has come to us in these latter days. It was not given to us to be kept to ourselves, to be hidden under a bushel, but to be given to our neighbors. Church school leaders, teachers, and ministers, all of us should, when the opportunity comes, present the message in its fullness.

We have a precious product to give to the world. May we present it with straightforward confidence, knowing that it is God’s handiwork.

CHILDREN IN CHURCH

IF YOU READ chapter eight of III Nephi, you will find the challenging account of Jesus blessing the American children. First he collected all the children, then he prayed for the wicked people ranged around and the people he had left in Jerusalem. This moved him to tears. Next he blessed the children, concluding by arranging that angels should come down to minister to them—but not the adults about.

Here was an embryo church school, and the incident illustrates some of the values of “children in church.”

Jesus collected all the children that memorable day, the clever and less clever, the strong and the unathletic and delicate, the children of rich and poor, of administrator and farmer and judge and poet and builder and priest. He wanted all, for all were of the fellowship of angels as he was to prove.

Then why did he pray for wicked adults? What moved his mind into that channel? Was it the contrast of childish innocence with the much less innocent? Here on one hand was the demonstration of what men had been and must again become—but how obvious that the line between was no straight line. It had sagged so badly.

He doubtless wept for the children who would become so like the adults about them in a scanty fifteen years. It was like seeing flowers put into hands ready to crush and tear them, like showing sunsets to the blind or unregarding, like playing symphonies to the deaf or to a furious mob about to rush in to break up the instruments.

CHILDREN ARE PLACED among us as very clearly marked signposts. They announce that we must go down this street to Heaven—and in no other way. They stand among us in constant contrast, as a challenge, as a “caution” light. How do we respond? We ignore the signs or deface them.

Jesus brought angels down to those he blessed—to their like, obviously. He was demonstrating the easy to-and-fro movement that could cross the thin barrier between life here and life there, were we worthy of it. We could find that veil as thin. But the angels avoided the unblessed adults!

All our fine stock has pedigree papers, which attest the validity of its inheritance and the purity of its blood. These papers lend value and must not be lost nor defaced, nor must the animals be misbred to corrupt that lineage. Strangely enough, heaven is in our pedigree, even when we are liars, murderers, thieves, or brutal louts—which is the only reason all such may still be redeemed.

We should keep close to the pedigree we share with angels. Church school helps us to do that—to witness our children walking right paths, to hold out a hand of guidance and encouragement, and clinging so, we adults are the ones who really are led and cheered. Thinking we teach, we are taught. We become the recipients of more than we can give. What better examples could we find? The tacit lessons of such a school become more explicit and inspiring than its spoken word. Imagine our being privileged to sit in pews with the angels, “whose spirits do always behold the face of my Father”! DR. EVAN V. SHUTE.

The Book of Mormon?

By Vernon E. Lundeen

RECENT SURVEYS made here in America and in England on the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures indicate that accurate comprehension is practically nonexistent, even among Christians. For example, very few persons know what the Gospels are. It reminds us of the story of the minister who was speaking on the relative merits of the different translations of the Bible. When he had finished, the inevitable "little old lady" came to him and said, "Reverend, no matter what you say, nor how long you talk, the King James Bible was good enough for Apostle Paul, and it's good enough for me." If, then, the Holy Scriptures are too little known and imperfectly understood, it is not strange that the Book of Mormon is virtually unknown and widely misunderstood.

In an attempt to dispel that misunderstanding, these claims are made for the Book of Mormon.

The book is meant to serve as a companion piece to the Bible. In no way, whatsoever, does it supplant the Holy Scriptures. Rather, the two works mutually support each other, as well they may, springing as they do from the same Source and through the same racial channels.

The Old Testament was written by the Jews and covered the period from the "Creation" down to about 200 B.C. The New Testament was written by the Jewish Christians and covered approximately the first century A.D. The Book of Mormon (also a collection of books, and named for one of its prophet-historians) was written by the Jews and their descendants in the Americas, and covered a period from about 600 B.C. to A.D. 400.

To the Jew who accepts the Old Testament and rejects the New, and to the Christian who accepts both the Old and the New but feels that the canon of Scripture closes with the Testaments, the Book of Mormon has this to say about the Words of God:

And because that I have spoken one word, ye need not suppose that I can not speak another; for my work is not yet finished; neither shall it be, until the end of man; neither from that time henceforth and forever. Wherefore, because that ye have a bible, ye need not suppose that it contains all my words; neither need ye suppose that I have not caused more to be written.

BRIEFLY, the narrative of the Book of Mormon is this: In Jerusalem, about 600 B.C., a minor prophet was warned of the imminent destruction of the city and was told to flee this destruction with his family. In the possession of his family were the ancient records of his people, which he was commanded to preserve and to continue. Included in these records were many of the prophecies of the Old Testament, more particularly those of the major prophet, Isaiah. From these prophecies of Isaiah was received the hope of the Messiah, so peculiar to the Jews. This hope was kept alive in the Americas by the line of prophets until it reached its fulfillment when the resurrected Christ visited his "sheep of another fold."

After leaving Jerusalem under direction from God the family group finally reached the Americas, traveling the sea journey by a ship which they had built. Soon after reaching the Americas, they broke up into two groups, the one "obedient," the other, "rebellious." The prophets in the "obedient" group kept the record of their experiences for one thousand years, then finally this group became evil and its members perished. One of the last to die was a prophet of God. During his last days, he buried the metal plates upon which the record had been kept. The gravest sin of this "obedient" group was polygamy, and for it the group was rejected.

Ironically, the "rebellious" group, although its members were quite thoroughly evil and had been cursed with a darkened skin because of their rebellion, never did embrace the doctrine of polygamy, and because they did not, they were promised that their children would continue to live in the choice land of the Americas, and that once again they would be a happy people. These "rebellious" ones we now know as the Indians of all the Americas.

SOME FOURTEEN HUNDRED YEARS after the metal plates were buried, their presence was revealed to young Joseph Smith. After seeing the plates for the first time in 1823, he was four years in preparation before being permitted to take them for translation. Their translation was accomplished by means of the ancient oracles, the Urim and Thummim, which accompanied the plates. After the translation had been recorded in manuscript form, and after the plates had been shown to several witnesses, the plates were removed by the same Spirit which had revealed their presence. The original manuscript (not the plates) is in the possession of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Two distinctly different modes of transmission were employed in the Holy Scriptures and the Book of Mormon. The Bible as we know it is the product of countless translations and retranslations. None of the original manuscripts exist today. Bible scholars readily acknowledge that inconsistencies, inaccuracies, and omissions exist in these Scriptures, but in spite of defects, their power for good is unsurpassed.

In the translating of the Book of Mormon, the original engraved metallic plates were made available by the Holy Spirit, along with the translators, the Urim and Thummim. There are two reasons for this mode of transmission. One is apparent, the other implied. The apparent reason is that God wished no error or inaccuracy to prevail in the presentation of this work to the world. The implied reason is that by this very mode of transmission the world would know again of the presence and the power of the Holy Spirit, the third person of the Holy Trinity.

ESSENTIALLY, the Book of Mormon is no more denominational or sectarian in character than is the Bible. Joseph Smith, the translator, was a member of no church when he made the translation. In 1820, during a widespread religious revival, his mother, a sister, and two brothers joined the Presbyterian church, and he said later that he "had leaned toward the Methodist sect." It was inevitable that a possession such as the Book of Mormon should stimulate the formation of an organization to "spread the good news." Today's legal and spiritual successor to this early church is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints with headquarters in Independence, Missouri.

The field of moral and spiritual injury, resulting from the early American teaching and practice of polygamy, was relatively narrow, being confined more or less, to those who embraced this doctrine. But world-wide and almost century long has been the field of injury to the mission of the Book of Mormon by reason of the association of polygamists with promotion of the book. Undoubtedly, the forbidden doctrine of polygamy has been the cause of most of the prejudice which has existed against the Book of Mormon. Literally, thousands of persons have been dissuaded from reading it because they "had an idea it taught polygamy." Yet, expressly and by implication, the Book of Mormon unreservedly condemns and forbids this unwholesome doctrine.

THE purposes of the Book of Mormon are manifold. Perhaps the most significant is that it shall assist the Holy Scriptures when "God sets his hand a second time to recover his people." The recovery of the Jews is foreshadowed in these words through Joseph Smith:

And then shall the Jews look upon me and say, What are these wounds in thy hands, and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am Lord; for I will say unto them, These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the son of God. And then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their King.

The Book of Mormon's most gracious promise is that "it shall be an added testimony to those who believe in Jesus Christ." Today, ministers of many Christian faiths are endeavoring to provide their people with the means by which they may enjoy a new religious experience. Uniquely inherent in the Book of Mormon is that very provision. And if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost; and by the power of the Holy Ghost, ye may know the truth of all things.

Hilltops

By Grace Crocker

NOT FAR from where I live, on the road from Kaw to Ponca, there is a beautiful hilltop view. The river goes out and meets itself coming in on the other side. The trees make a graceful arch underneath a canopy of blue. In the quiet of this setting, I sense the Creator of all things and know that life is good.

The view is for all who pass by, but some do not see it for they go by too hurriedly. Some see—but to them it is only a hill, a river, and some trees. Others look at it and see God in all his majesty.

Life holds a lot of hilltop experiences. Whether we find them or not depends not so much on what we see without but what we see within. Hilltop experiences of any type require one thing—climbing the hill.

IT TAKES FAITH to climb hills. We may wonder what is at the top. Then we pause to think and pray, and it doesn't seem to matter that we do not know what is at the top. Surely the God who made the hill will give us strength to climb it.

Half way up the hill, part of the things we did in faith have now become knowledge, and we know that "Faith without works is dead." Going on is a little different now—it seems we have caught something. Faith becomes knowledge. We must have more faith to go the rest of the way, but we know that by the time we get to the top our faith will be linked with knowledge, and a part of truth shall belong to us that we might never have known had we not moved out in faith.

At the top we ask ourselves what is really the top. There are always other hills to climb—we can see them now. The next hill will be a little easier because of this one. A little more responsibility will be added though, for having climbed the hill, we cannot be the same again. Added knowledge means added testimony.

For a moment we pause to thank God for the hilltops in life. We realize we have been made bigger because of them. They give us such a clear view and so much faith to climb the next one.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

Question:

Was Lucy Mack Smith, the mother of Joseph the Martyr, ever an invalid, requiring a wheel chair to get about? Where in history is the information to be found?
New York

Mrs. P. B.

Answer:

Lucy Mack Smith, mother of Joseph Smith the prophet, was born in 1776. Her life was most active and full of hardship, tribulation, and tragedy, springing largely from persecutions because of her son's prophetic mission which she espoused. She lived and sacrificed in the interest of others. When in her later years she was left alone, with health broken, she went to live with her son and daughter-in-law, Joseph and Emma, and shortly after experienced the terrible persecution which laid her sons Joseph and Hyrum cold in death. According to an account found in Journal of History, Volume 12, page 108; she became an invalid and was able to move about only by means of a wheel chair. She died in 1855 at the age of seventy-nine.

Question:

Why does Alma 5: 19 state that Christ would be born in Jerusalem, when the Bible clearly states in Luke 2: 4-6 that he was born in Bethlehem?
California

B. S.

Answer:

Alma does not state that Christ would be born in Jerusalem, but at Jerusalem. However, in a broad sense, either word could be used as we shall prove. Alma states in verse 19, "And behold, he shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem, which is the land of our forefathers." Alma was not pin-pointing in his description of the place where Christ was to be born.

Several books written by our opponents state Alma was an ignorant, false prophet because he predicted Christ would be born at Jerusalem.

Webster's dictionary gives this definition: "At—Primarily this word expresses relations of presence, nearness in place or time, or direction toward. At the house may be in or near the house." Bethlehem was only six miles from Jerusalem, so it was permissible for Alma to state Christ was born at Jerusalem.

Bethlehem is not mentioned in the Book of Mormon at all, while Jerusalem is mentioned ninety-one times. In the Bible Jerusalem is referred to 750 times, Bethlehem 52 times.

As Bethlehem was possibly unknown to the people of Gideon while Jerusalem was well known, Alma would naturally refer to Jerusalem as the land where Christ was to be born.

This is recorded in I Samuel 17: 15, "But David went and returned from Saul to feed his father's sheep at Bethlehem." Evidently David opened the corral in the field near Bethlehem.

Question:

Is the Spirit of God as mentioned in the statement in Genesis 6: 3, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man," the same Spirit as the Holy Ghost promised through the laying on of hands?
Iowa

L. O. L.

Answer:

Yes. There is but one Spirit of God, universal, infinite, and eternal, manifesting itself in infinite ways, striving with men, no matter how deep they are in sin. To those in the gospel, the Spirit of God gives gifts, and greater ministrations of gifts and powers to such as are called to the ministry according to the requirements of their work.

The Spirit of God is diffused throughout the world like the light, and ministers to all men according to their faith and works. To those who receive it, the light "groweth brighter and brighter until the perfect day." The Lord has said,

The Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit; and every one that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit cometh unto God.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 7.

Those who follow its lead through the ordinances, such as baptism and confirmation by the laying on of hands, receive it in a greater or special degree. It is the same Spirit that leads all the way—always to God.

Question:

What is the list of officers elected at the annual branch business meeting?
Ontario

K. P.

Answer:

The local branch is given considerable latitude in its organization. Need and persons to fill the various offices should largely determine the size and extent of the organization. The following may be considered standard:

The branch president or pastor; two counselors; the director of religious education (church school—with the director of religious education should be associated supervisors of the adult, the young people's, and the children's divisions of the church school. These should be appointed by the pastor in consultation with the director) director of women; director of the department of music; secretary, recorder; historian (to be sustained, as appointment is made by the General Church historian).

Librarian (if there is need); publicity director; Herald book steward (this office is sustained, as appointment is made by the Herald Publishing House); branch treasurer; auditor; finance committee (with three or five members as needed); building maintenance committee (as needed); bishop's solicitor (this office is sustained, as the bishop's solicitor is appointed by the Presiding Bishop of the church); home visiting supervisor (in a large branch a very capable member of the priesthood should have this responsibility. In a smaller branch the pastor or one of his counselors could co-ordinate this ministry to the home); missionary co-ordinator (the suggestion given above would apply to this office also).

The Danger of Looking Back

By May Richards Hamm

JESUS SAID, "No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God."—Luke 9: 62. The children of Israel looking back to the leeks and onions of Egypt (Numbers 11: 5) died in the wilderness. Lot's wife looking back became a pillar of salt (Genesis 19: 33).

A young sister told me that she wanted to dance, then with a sigh, added, "But I have joined the church." I said, "It is bad that you are missing both the church and the dance." When she came to realize that she had to make the choice herself, she chose the church and has since found much joy and satisfaction in the work.

Often we hear people tell of some desire they have prayed and prayed for the Lord to take away from them, and all the while instead of looking toward the Lord they were looking back and grieving about something they were missing.

When I was young in the church, I was isolated. My family and friends were so prejudiced that I became discouraged. The Lord spoke to me, "Put thy body in subjection, and every desire." Then I realized that my desires were subject to my own will power, and if I wanted the guidance, comfort, and strength of the Holy Spirit, I had to desire them more than other things. I decided that I desired the Holy Spirit and that I would think and act as if I did.

Emotional disturbances, discouragement, depression, inability to concentrate, and insomnia may be brought on by the frustration which comes as a result of knowing and accepting the cleansing power of the Holy Spirit, then looking back and grieving about something that we are missing.

The Holy Spirit must be desired and invited to dwell in us; if not, a vacuum is left and "nature abhors a vacuum." The Scriptures tell of the person from whom a devil was cast out; the place is empty, swept, and garnished. Then seven more devils move in. "The last state of that man was worse than the first."—Matthew 12: 38, 39.

We should remember that our covenant is to keep God's commandments. The first commandment is to desire his way, to love him more than friends, kindred, a dance, a drink, a smoke, or anything else.

And even as the children of Israel, though bitten by serpents, could live if they would look, so can we, if we keep our eyes on "Jesus the author and finisher of our faith" (Hebrews 12: 2).

Love and Stewardship

By James F. Keir

GREAT TRUTHS are so simple that we sometimes may fail to appreciate their value. One of these is couched in the admonition, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might."—Deuteronomy 6: 5. This is basic to all Christian endeavor; it is fundamental. ". . . no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4. We get a glimpse of the importance of this in the instruction that Moses gave to the children of Israel: "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk to them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."—Deuteronomy 6: 6, 7.

To manifest our love for God, the divine triangle must be present—God, man, and neighbor. Love, generated by what we do for others, becomes a channel through which our love for God can be routed. In the interest, tolerance, kindness, and solicitude for his welfare and problems will be found the measure of our love for God. This channeling of our affections is clearly indicated by John:

Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother hath need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?—I John 3: 16, 17.

If, as a church, we are ever successful (and I think we will be) in developing a practical and workable program of our economic theory of stewardship, the crux of which is consecration of surplus, it will be because this love of neighbor—the corollary of the love of God—is the motivating power of our lives. For nothing but the love of God in the hearts of men

God and Country Award

To a Michigan Boy

ON SUNDAY, NOVEMBER, 12, Thomas L. Johnson, son of Brother and Sister Harry L. Johnson of Belding, Michigan, was presented the God and Country award in Scouting. This is a special award in religious life and work to give emphasis to the program of co-operation between the National Council of Boy Scouts of America and the church in the religious life of the boy and to encourage his participation in the work of his church as essential to his spiritual growth. The God and Country award is given in recognition of the fulfilling of certain requirements designated by the General Church. The Boy Scout National Council has authorized the God and Country Award badge and has compared it to the Eagle Scout award.

Tom is fifteen years old, a member of the church, and a sophomore in high school. He is an honor roll student and a press carrier in addition to his Scouting activities. He has a three year active membership in Troop 101 of the Wabsis District of the Grand Valley Council. At present he is an Explorer Scout of Star rank and well on his way toward his Life rank. He is also a scout camper of two years, a patrol leader, and junior assistant scoutmaster.

Among the requirements to receive the God and Country award is the completion of 150 hours of service to the church, showing evidence of Christian character and conduct at all times, and knowing church doctrine, history, the meaning of the sacraments, and any other work or study outlined by the pastor. Tom's service hours include three years as church school secretary, vice-president of the Zion's League, and an outstanding camp record at Camp Michivoix (church youth camp) last summer where he was chosen camper-of-the-day.

The award was made to Tom, along with another Scout and scoutmaster, at the local Baptist Church which sponsors the troop. This troop has the outstanding record of being first in the Grand Valley Council to award ten of these badges in the past year to boys representing three churches in the city. Elder James C. Phillips, Southern Michigan District President, outlined Tom's work and recommended him to the church awards committee of the community. Elder Garnett Smith of Grand Rapids, Michigan, presented the award. Elder Smith spoke briefly with commendation to the three on their outstanding accomplishment in receiving the award. As he read the citation from his own church to Tom, those listening felt the power and worth-whileness in fulfilling this standard. The awards were made by the representing pastors and the boys' mothers pinned them to their son's uniforms.

STONE CHURCH.—Two babies were blessed on December 10. William David Snodgrass, son of William J. and Mary Esta (Ream) Snodgrass was blessed by Elders J. C. Blumenshein and Evan Fry. Barbara Anne Johnson, daughter of Robert La Vern and Betty June Johnson, was blessed by Elders Glaude A. Smith and M. L. Parker.

Six people were baptized at the Stone Church, December 17. Lawrence Sidney Allen, Virginia Lee Garrett, Glenda Carol Smith, and Barbara Leona Garrett were baptized by Glaude A. Smith, James Eric Nichols was baptized by his father, William Nichols, and Phyllis Renee McDole was baptized by her father, Marvin McDole.

Mr. and Mrs. Granville S. Trowbridge celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary on December 25. Open house was held December 24, and many of their friends paid respects to them.

The Christmas service, December 24, featured a program of music in which the Stone Church choir, the Men's choir and the Boy's choir participated.

Under the direction of Mrs. J. T. Westwood, the Cantanina Chorus presented the annual Christmas Eve service at the Stone Church. Mrs. Gene Pope accompanied the chorus. Joan Talcott, marimbist; Roy Stearns, vocalist; and Mrs. Clayton J. Wolfe, organist were featured as soloists. Pastor Glaude A. Smith read the Scripture, and John Darling offered the benediction.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO.—During the week end of November 4, 1950, a priesthood institute was held at Owen Sound, Ontario. The first service was a prayer service with the theme, "We Seek to Learn."

Two class periods for the priesthood were held from 10 a.m. until 12 noon. The first subject discussed was "Why Should Priesthood Be Concerned About Family Life?" The second period was a panel discussion on "What Kind of Family Life Should We Build?"

In the afternoon classes, the group discussions were on the topics, "The Economically Sound Family" and "The Spiritually Adequate Family."

A fellowship supper was held in the lower auditorium of the church, including a sing, closing with the central thought "The Christ."

On Sunday Dr. F. M. McDowell addressed the priesthood, and Bishop J. E. Baldwin addressed the membership. There was a Communion service presided over by District President Gordon Farrow, assisted by the visiting ministry.

The sessions closed with the district conference, at which the following officers were elected: Gordon Farrow, president; Alex Cadwell, R. J. Farthing, counselors; Elizabeth Belrose, secretary; George T. Furness, treasurer; Arthur Dunn, director of religious education; George T. Furness, director of music; Laura Farthing, director of women; Everett Kennedy, young peoples' leader; Anne Davis, children's supervisor; Aubrey Mason, children's pastor; R. J. Farthing, auditor and historian.—Reported by MRS. BENSON BELROSE.

HUMBERSTONE, ONTARIO.—A new church is being constructed. The building is not yet complete, but plans have been made to enclose it for the winter. Construction thus far has been voluntary work by mission members with friends of members assisting. Elder Howard Snider is in charge of the mission and also serves as chairman of the building committee assisted by Lee Barrick and Raymond Augustine.—Reported by MRS. HOWARD SNIDER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—The Stake-Wide Zion's League sponsored the third annual yuletide conference December 28, 29, 30, and 31. The theme, "Commend Thy Ways Unto Him," was concerned with youth's place in the war and was planned to especially minister to the young men who are leaving for service.

The opening activity was a Talent Night, Thursday, December 28, at the Stone Church Little Theater. Ten numbers including talent from Canada and England were provided by John Smith and Cecelia Fry, officers in the Stake Zion's League.

Friday night featured a panel discussion at the Stone Church. The theme was discussed from four different angles: "How far can we go—in putting ourselves in His hands?" by Marilyn Seroy; "Is God concerned?" by Kathleen Fuller; "The role of the church in war," by Marion Brown, and "Horizons beyond the war years," by Joe Taylor. High Priest John F. Sheehy presented the summary at the close of the discussion. Elmer Sloan and Delmar Sloan planned the program for the panel discussion, and Carl Mesle served as moderator.

Saturday night was an activities night in the Auditorium basement. Featured was a comic and a regular basketball game, as well as exhibitions of the various activities that take place at the regular activities' nights each Saturday. Ann Whiteford and Lois Pederson planned the program.

A New Year's Eve watch service was held Sunday night at the Stone Church. This service and the mixer that followed were the last of the conference programs. "Commend Thy Ways Unto Him" was the theme of this fellowship service. Following a reading by Howard Ziegenhorn of the "Legend of the Church of the Lighted Lamps," candles were lighted as individuals took part in the service. Elmer Sloan directed the music with Bernard Butterworth at the organ. Dick Andersen gave the theme talk, and Bob Sparks sang a solo. The service was arranged by Bob Akers and Barbara Peavy. Carl Mesle was in charge.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.—"The Littlest Son," a Christmas program of story and song, was presented on December 25.

Edgar Pillsbury, a student at Graceland was reader. A chorus, under the direction of Margaret Chesworth, gave a pleasing rendition of the music.

Soloists were Mary Pillsbury, Etta Heap, Elder Alma M. Coombs, Isabel Millward, and Margaret Chesworth. They were assisted by Elbert, Raymond, and Donald Heap.

Recent speakers here have been John Sheehy, Myron Fisher, George Armeson, and Benjamin Leland.—Reported by EDGAR PILLSBURY and EDGAR GEORGE.

CANTON, OKLAHOMA.—A bazaar and chili supper was held at the church December 2, at which $109 was raised.

December 22 featured a Christmas program. A special visitor for the program was Mr. Harvey Rauh who has been bedfast the past fourteen years. Mr. Rauh lives one mile from town and made the trip to the church in an ambulance. He sang two songs while lying on his cot.

Twenty-two members were present at the all-day Christmas dinner of the Ladies' Club. Secret pal gifts were exchanged.—Reported by NINA E. GOODMAN.

Letters

From One "Born Into the Church"

I suppose I should be the most thankful person in the world to have had the gospel from the day of my birth. But this also has its drawbacks, as one "born into the church" is prone to take it too much for granted.

Many people who come in contact with the church in later life seem to have so much more to make them believe. Some have such wonderful experiences that the steady everyday ones do not have—or perhaps God thinks they do not need them.

After much prayer and thought, I married a nonmember I had known from childhood. He is a wonderful husband, and I am thankful for him and our son and daughter. He takes us to my church every Sunday it is possible. I can see my prayers being answered in this regard.

I believe that someday he will have faith as I do.

Gifts From God

It is with pleasure that I renew my Herald subscription for another year. God has been good to me on many occasions. He has spoken to me through the gift of tongues and prophecy and has revealed to me exactly what he would have me do. He has answered my prayers almost instantly on three occasions and has spared me from being crushed to death by mere inches. That God's blessing may ever abound with each and everyone during the coming year is my prayer.

Comforted by a Vision

I had an experience similar to the one Dora Williams Tarrant told of in her letter to the Herald. We lost our baby daughter in 1937, and although we had three other children, I often grieved for the child who had died. I regretted that I was never able to do much for her or tell her how much I loved her. One day as I was resting alone in the house, I heard footsteps. Looking up I saw a girl of about ten with golden hair. She was beautifully dressed and wore a ribbon bow in her hair. Suddenly I realized that she was my daughter. Then a voice spoke to me, "What could you give your girl to compare with what she has?"

I have never grieved for her since, but have tried harder to provide a good life for the other children. The vision has given me something to live up to.

The Need For Spiritual Food

In my life of traveling, I often go to churches of other faiths when I can find none of my own to attend. I like to read the literature of other churches, but it is never as spiritually satisfying as the Herald and Daily Bread. Truly they are a feast to me; it is almost like sitting down with the Savior himself. I am thankful to belong to a church where I can partake freely of spiritual food and drink of the fountain of life. I pray that we may all partake often and, being strengthened, help others on the way to eternal life.

Grateful for Blessings

When I read in the November 6 issue of the Herald that a member, Sister J. A. Welch, had been in the Nogales, Arizona, Hospital because of an accident, I felt heartsick because I had not known she was there. I am an isolated Saint here on the border town, and I would have felt it an honor to have helped her and been with her in her time of need.

I want to take this opportunity to thank God for granting us a blessing for our baby son. Two months ago he was dangerously ill with pneumonia in the same hospital. He was going into a bad convulsion, so I asked the nurse to rub him with consecrated oil. She did, and I prayed. But I felt I needed more help—prayers from our ministers—so I hurriedly put in a long-distance call to California to my mother and told her how ill our baby was. She called the pastor, Dr. Harold Wixom. Then I went back to Philip's room at 2:30, a half hour later. He was asleep, and his fever had subsided. By 3:30 he was walking around his crib and talking. His nurse and I cried from joy. The doctor later told us he had been dangerously ill, and had feared we might lose him. We thank God for letting us keep our precious son. Now, our desire is to have strength and knowledge to care for him so that he may grow to manhood and help in the fulfillment of the Restoration Movement in these latter days.

I also wish to thank God for giving me back my health. I am anxious to be of any help that I can in the mission to the Spanish-speaking peoples. Since I live on the border, I shall be happy to help in this place. These Mexican people have been grand to me, and I have many friends among them who someday may help the church in its movement to bring the gospel to their kind.

Concerning Salvation

I am grateful to God that I have found the true gospel of Christ. If we are faithful, he will give us more than we ask for. Some are confused, and many are misled by being told they are only to believe on Jesus and be saved. Salvation involves more than this. The blood of Christ cleanses us from sin, but we must obey the whole law and be perfect if we expect to be fully saved. Baptism for the remission of sin is an essential step also.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Teaching for the Master

By Elva Oakman

ONCE UPON A TIME there was a mother who diligently studied the Word of the Lord that she might know how to bring her children up in the way of light and truth.

One morning as she read, she noticed that practically everyone was commanded to labor "to establish the cause of Zion." Zion, she thought eagerly, is the place where there will be no rich nor poor, no sickness nor pain, no quarreling nor strife, no sorrow nor sighing. It is a place where health will be found, not even touched with weariness, and where we shall have wisdom and great treasures of knowledge.

It is worth working for, she decided, and she would want the children to live in this beautiful city, too. Well . . . maybe the Lord had a special message for her, and she would know just what to do. She would try in the usual way and see. She shut the Doctrine and Covenants which was on the table before her, then she closed her eyes tightly, stretched forth her hands and opened the book, and looked quickly to read what her hands had found. Yes, that was the morning message for her: "Inasmuch as parents have children . . ." Her eyes unseeingly skimmed the lines until they came to the words, "and teach them not . . ." Again her eyes skimmed the page until she finished the thought, "the sin be upon the head of the parents." She closed the book with a flourish and sat back to think what she would teach.

SALLY WAS ONLY nine months old; she couldn't be taught about Jesus and Zion until she was at least four or five years old. She didn't know anything now. She'd have to learn simple words first, words like food and drink, doggie and kittie, mother and daddy. (Daddy was away in the army, but Sally could learn the words anyway, and she could show her pictures of him.)

She sat back in the chair to meditate upon her youngest, and the words she had sung so often at church rang in her ears, "Let the little ones come unto me." The words kept repeating themselves over and over in her mind, "Let the little ones come unto me." They were the words of Jesus, but she could not teach a child as young as Sally about him. Why she would have to use such words as Jesus and love and sheep and shepherds and the Sea of Galilee. (Of course the baby would hear about Lake Tapa-wingo all the while, but since they lived near it that would be easy.) No, if Sally turned out to be very smart—and she was smart as a whip now—it might be that she could be taught by the time she was three years old.

"Let the little ones come unto me."

The mother shook herself impatiently and turned her thoughts to Jimmie knew the name of every street way, and not too important for Zion.

JIMMIE WAS FOUR, and knew quite a lot, too! He knew all about Jack and the bean stalk, Little Red Riding Hood, Aladdin . . . in fact Jimmie knew the name of every street from their home into town. He could even identify the various makes of cars, and he was only four. Next year he'd go to school. Probably next year would be the time to teach him about the Master. He might be far enough along by then. He'd know a lot of those words. My! it was cute the way he acted out "Jack be nimble, Jack be quick . . ." He'd surely be a smart one by the time he got around to understanding about Zion.

"Inasmuch as parents have children and teach them not, the sin be upon the head of the parents." That was the passage she had read. Nobody could say she hadn't taught. Jimmie knew about the fairies and the brownies and practically every nursery rhyme. He had gone to church school too, and he knew that God made the birds and the trees and the flowers. Yes, it wouldn't be long now until he'd be old enough to learn about Jesus and Zion. He'd start learning about it in church school, and then would be the time for her to go on with the teaching.

SHE CLOSED THE BOOK and stepped toward the bedroom door to see if the children had wakened yet. A smile of satisfaction lighted her face. It was nice to receive such a comforting message from above.

But there stood in front of her the Angel of Clear Vision with uplifted hand. He was holding a book like the one she had just closed. He spoke in tones that startled her: "The book was indeed opened before you, but you did not read. Listen: 'Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes . . . and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of hands; and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.' You have not taught for the Master or for Zion. Next year your oldest child will be under the tutelage of the nation. You will have him only a short time each day. In the schools he will learn again the fairy tales and the nursery rhymes you have taught him, but he will not learn of the Master. Do you not know that you should teach from infancy, if your children would assist in the building of Zion? From now on move out in wisdom to serve and great shall be your joy."

The angel was gone. The house was silent. Quickly the mother moved to the table and opened the book. Yes, it was all there just as the angel had read.

Her eyes filled with consternation. Fear tugged at her heart. If her children were supposed to know all of that by the time they were eight, and she had little opportunity for teaching after five, she had practically lost Jimmie already. There was only one year left. At least she did have more time to help Sally. But where would she begin?

"Let the little ones come unto me." The words went right on singing themselves over and over in her mind. Could that mean that she was to start with Jesus?

SLOWLY SHE WALKED to the buffet. Pulling out a drawer, she took from it a beautifully framed picture of the Master with a group of children gathered around him. It had been a gift to her, but she had seen no place where it really belonged. She placed it on the table in front of her and sat down. As her eyes lifted, she saw the picture of her husband on the mantel near by. Why! It really wouldn't be more difficult to teach the children to love Jesus than to love their daddy. Neither one was right here where the children could see him. Although Jimmie had been two and a half years old when Daddy left for the army, he really didn't remember him at all except as he saw his picture.

As fear left and assurance began to grow, she chuckled to herself, "Come to think of it, the Sea of Galilee is easier to talk about than Lake Tapawingo. And bless me, there's a sheep and a lamb not six blocks away that I can take them to see."

Eagerly she reached for her Bible. They would start at once to get acquainted with the Master. She'd begin by telling them the loveliest story of Jesus she knew. Jimmie enjoyed stories and could understand most of them. Sally would sit on her lap and hear the words even if she didn't understand yet. For a few moments she read in silence, then she closed the book and arose. First she got the easel that Jimmie's blackboard usually rested upon and placed it in the corner. Then she got a beautiful scarf to put over it. Against that background, she placed the picture of Jesus. In front of it there would be the big easy chair and beside that the smaller chair for Jimmie.

As she worked her mind moved ahead joyously. Perhaps Jimmie would ask for the story again and again, and every time he asked, she'd tell it to him. Then he might want to act it out—he often did. After awhile she'd read the story to him right from the Scripture. All of that might be the first lesson. It might take ten lessons. She'd never know until she tried.

She could hardly wait now for the children to wake. She bowed her head in a fervently whispered prayer, and then softly she began singing the song that had deepened her understanding, "Let the little ones come unto me."

An Architect's Plan

By Marie Gosline

HAVE YOU EVER WATCHED a good contractor build a house? First of all he considers the architect's plan. He considers it before he lays the foundation—even before he buys any materials. He nails a copy of it to the first two-by-four of the scaffolding because it tells him everything he needs to know about that building.

All the way along, he consults the plan. If it calls for a twelve-inch flue on the fireplace and the bricklayer puts on only a ten-inch one, he is called back to change it. If it calls for redwood paneling, knotty pine won't do. If it calls for brass fixtures, chrome is not the thing.

Our Architect has given us a plan, too. Yet we do not always keep it before our eyes. Instead of being first-class contractors, we are often slipshod carpenters.

The work of the Lord calls for real artisans. Each one must have a job, fill it not only to the best of his ability, but beyond that. Sometimes the best is not enough. God expects us to continually study, learn, and improve. We excuse a great many people of the mistakes they make in church work by saying, "He does as well as he knows." This is no excuse.

If we hire a man to build us a house and find out he used too much sand and not enough cement in the foundation, do we wait until the house is completed and say, "Well, he did as well as he knew"?

God has hired us to build his kingdom on earth. He has hired us to work for him. His wage scale is high. He pays us in blessings too numerous to mention, but he expects us to give him first-class work in return. Shall we consult his plan? Shall we train ourselves to be good builders? The time has come when this church—God's church—can use no others.

Let's Look to Our Morals

By Josephine Montgomery

THE MOST ALARMING DANGER of the modern world is not the fact that we have the atom bomb as a weapon for destruction; it is that we are not morally equipped to know how to use it. The deplorable part of an economic system which dictates a policy of buying a potato crop and then burning it to keep prices up is not that big business has grown to cut-throat proportions but that we do not have the moral know-how to manage what we have.

Malthus was almost right in his analysis of what is driving the world to destruction. His theory was that while population is increasing geometrically, the ability to produce food is increasing arithmetically. The result: famine, pestilence, and war. The pattern is right but the cloth is wrong. The advance in science is geometric while the advance in morality is arithmetic. The result: famine, pestilence, war.

The pattern of history will bear this out. The Jewish nation had the most advanced religious philosophy of its time, but the moral fiber of the people was not far enough advanced to keep up with it. They did not know what to do about a man like Jesus, and so they killed him. Alexander brought his country to a military perfection that conquered the known world, but morally he was not equipped to be a conqueror nor were his successors, and the empire decayed. James Watt with his tea kettle and Hargreaves with his spinning jenny touched off an industrial revolution that has kept up a series of problems requiring moral solutions ever since; unfortunately, our moral solutions are still pitifully far behind the steady scientific advance. In the succeeding centuries following Christ's execution, the church spread to catholic proportions and grew to such wealth and power as the humble fishermen and tax collectors had never dreamed. But the moral ability of the people did not expand fast enough to keep up with the wealth and power. They did not know how to use it, and so they corrupted it; they killed the goodness in it; they headed the whole world into the Dark Ages.

It could happen to us. As a matter of fact it has happened to us. It hasn't stopped happening to us since one man learned to make a better and more acceptable sacrifice to his God and another man didn't know what to do about it except to kill his rival.

THE WORST THREAT OF ALL is that people are too spiritually blind to see the widening gulf between science and morality. Such a cultural lag can only be bridged by people who see the situation and go to work with every means at their command.

Look around at the economic struggle in the countries which are set up as the righteous Christian powers of the West. Note the strikes, political unrest, social evils, and intolerance. At the expense of being trite, I want to point out that the sum total of national conditions is due not to just a few isolated evil-but-powerful people, but to the thinking and activity of the majority of the people. That means you and me.

It would be fine if each person, as he reads this, could think, along with me as I write it, "Of course, I'm not one of those people who are to blame. It's the other 149,999,999 Americans." As a matter of fact, that's just what most of the other 149,999,999 are thinking. Not quite two years ago the Ladies' Home Journal made a study of the moral and religious beliefs of the American people which pointed up this dangerous trend.

- 18%—believed they are living a wholly good life.
- 28%—felt they had attained three-quarters ethical perfection.
- 32%—claimed to have reached at least the halfway mark.
- 78%—insisted they were fully obeying the Christian law of love in all business dealings.
- 80%—insisted they were obeying the Christian law of love in all dealings with members of other races.

8 out of 10 thought that most of the world's problems would be solved by absolute obedience to the law of love.

8 out of 10 believed they were rendering such obedience.

For such a nation of individually righteous people, something has certainly pulled down the collective average.

Could the answer be that whether we realize it or not, we are an amoral people, if not downright immoral.

We are amoral because we are trying to control a twentieth century science with sixteenth century morals, just as in the sixteenth century, we tried to govern affairs with a twelfth century code of behavior. Science has never waited for us to catch up with it. I doubt if it ever will. Our job is to catch up without expecting it to slow down for us on the tricky hairpin curves of atomic development.

MORALITY IS STEWARDSHIP. Stewardship has to do with more than money and time. Stewardship must extend into every corner of our lives. Personality development, love, friendship, marriage, rearing children, business affairs, even such a trivial thing as good grooming to make the most of personal appearance, are accountable as stewardship properties.

Too many people accept the tinsel of dwarfed personalities, neurotic temperament, selfishness, and indulgent self-deceit. A man with a vision of a higher life may achieve selfhood through continually and consciously trying to develop his moral nature.

Too many people skim the surface of friendship rather than take the trouble to discover, explore, and expand in and with another person. To share in the time and work required to build a fine friendship not only brings rewards from itself but builds a type of moral fiber which cannot be produced by any other experience.

Too many people are satisfied with infatuation because love demands more giving than receiving. Too many people take refuge in promiscuous relationships because marriage is a twenty-four hour a day lifetime job. And too many other people think that promiscuity is the accepted way of making the hunt for a mate fun. They fail to realize that the moral fiber of their marriage is being built during the years before the wedding. No one is capable of sudden morality. It is a system of thought and action integrated through practical application in daily life.

Too many people make the pain of childbirth the only pain they ever suffer for their children. Rearing a child is one of the greatest challenges to the moral mind of man.

Too many people think that putting a dollar bill in the oblation offering once a month makes it all right for them to skin what they can get out of the business world for the other twenty-nine days. The cut-throat tactics of our present economic system is not so much due to the fact that the theory of big business is wrong, but that the individuals who put the theory into malpractice are operating with selfish lack of principle. Business should and could be both moral and profitable.

But no one is 100 per cent moral in any of these things. The dangerous part of modern thought is that so many people, as the survey showed, think they are moral. It would be a long step forward if we would admit honestly, humbly and prayerfully that a cultural lag does exist between the mechanics of our world and our moral capability to use them. For us in this church the answer seems to lie in a heightened awareness of stewardship responsibility and the extent to which it must influence our lives.

How close to ethical perfection are we?

A New Kind of "Night Club" Needed

By Maude D. Anderson

ONE OF THE GREATEST PROBLEMS the church has to face today is commercialized entertainment. There was a time when an evening with friends—perhaps gathered about the organ or piano—meant an evening of relaxation and happiness. In those days it was even possible to carry on an intelligent conversation. One didn't have to run competition to some radio announcer telling why his particular brand of cigarettes or beer is a sure cure for all ills.

Friday or Saturday evening was set aside for the neighborhood literary society where old and young alike could participate. It was not necessary for a fellow to take his girl to some night club and spend a couple of days' salary in order that the occasion might be considered a "date." Of course none of us want to return to the horse and buggy era, but we could certainly incorporate a few of its better phases in our modern living.

If the church is to compete with commercialized entertainment, young people will have to develop a greater appreciation of the church as the center of their lives—not just one day in the week but every day in the week.

THERE IS A DIVERGENCE of interests in the various age groups, and there needs to be some way of bridging the gap. Those in the group capable of making the greatest contribution to the life of the church are frequently lost because they do not find an outlet for their enthusiasm. For this age-group just emerging into adult life, the boisterous games, skating parties, and such hold little appeal. Their interest is in soft lights and music—a place for romance; and it is during this stage in their lives that the night club beckons.

To most young people this is merely a phase of growing up, and when it is over, they will return and settle down to the more worth-while pursuits of life; but what a pity that the church cannot supply their great need during that time, for even though they may not suffer any permanent effects from their slight indiscretions, it would have been of so much greater value if they had been able to have their need supplied by the church. Somehow their spiritual progress has been halted. They have become cynical, and the brightness of their youth has been tarnished by their contact with the less worthwhile things of life.

It would be a good thing if the young people of this particular age group could be induced to use the finances which they feel they should spend on commercial entertainment in fitting up their own special type of "night club"—one they would be proud to invite their friends to for an evening of wholesome entertainment and one which, when they were finished with it, they could be proud to pass on to the next generation of youngsters.

this. The prophets saw the movement of God in history. It was there before they saw it. Had they never apprehended it, it would still have been there. But it became revelation to them when they appreciated this divine movement. What we have in the Old and New Testaments is not, therefore, revelation. It is a record made by the perceptor. It is, in the nature of things, a record of an interim experience between the first perception and the working out of what was perceived in the course of time. We cannot expect the divine self-disclosure to be made to us either in or out of the Scriptures, but through them. Theologians will analyze and summarize. Prophets will write "as they are moved upon by the Holy Ghost." But the theologian will turn from theology to worship, and the prophet will look up from the written page to contemplate the vision splendid and say,

But great and marvelous are the works of the Lord

The whole earth is full of his glory

There are, then, strictly speaking, no revealed truths. There are "truths of revelation"—statements of principles, that is, which stem from the actual revelatory experience. These may be, like the map, guides to the beatific vision. But they are not the vision itself. For revelation is based upon the intercourse between the mind which guides the event, and the mind which views it. When appreciation of Divinity in nature and history comes to man, revelation takes place.

will move them to consecrate of their surplus. Love substitutes selflessness for selfishness.

Stewardship is not a process by which I get something. Danger lurks in any inordinate desire to get, without an equivalent in effort on my part. In this path of inordinate desire are to be found such sordid and ugly things as envy, greed, and jealousy. On the contrary, the Spirit of stewardship, prompted by love, is the desire in the hearts of surplus-producing stewards to consecrate of their surplus for the benefit of others and of helping them to reach a position where they, too, can become surplus-producing stewards and have the joy of sharing.

It is through this process that equality governed by the rule of needs and just wants shall be established. "God so loved the world that he gave"—John 3:16.

Pray that the day may soon come when we shall demonstrate these lofty ideals which add to the beauty and glory of Zion.

Concerning "Messiah" Recordings

ON THE LAST PAGE in this issue of the Herald will be found an announcement of a close-out sale of record album Number 1 of the Messiah as sung by the Independence Messiah Choir. When this album was first offered for sale early in 1950, it was the first part of our plan to make the entire Messiah available on what was then considered standard 78 r.p.m. records. The plan was to have issued eventually three albums, each containing three double-sided records, the total cost to be \$22.50 plus 50c federal excise tax on each album or a total of \$24.00. Since issuing the first album, however, the new 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ r.p.m. long-playing records have become so popular that all of the major recording companies have entirely discontinued manufacturing this speed record for all classical and religious music. The reasons for this change are that the long-playing records offer better quality recordings and are only about one-third as expensive. Therefore, before Herald House, the distributor of Stone Church Recordings, entered into negotiations for the manufacture of album Number 2 of the Messiah set, the entire matter was canvassed with the Music and Radio Department of the Church; and after a careful study, it was decided not to continue with the manufacture of the 78 r.p.m. set and instead make the entire Messiah available on the 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ r.p.m. long-playing nonbreakable records. In this way, it is possible to offer the entire oratorio, as presented by the Independence Messiah Choir, in one album containing two double-sided twelve-inch long-playing records for about one third the total cost of the 78 r.p.m. The records for this album are being manufactured by RCA.

This new album and its price will be announced in the Herald within the next two or three weeks. In the meantime, we are offering our present stock of album Number 1 of the 78 r.p.m. records for $3.75 plus 33c federal excise tax or a total of $4.08. The original price was $7.50 plus 50c tax.

When the new album is ready for sale, we shall allow credit of $3.75 to all who have already purchased this Number 1 album if they wish to purchase the new complete long-playing album. By this plan even those who have previously obtained the Number 1 album, can get the entire recording of the Messiah for less than one half of the price originally contemplated in the old style recordings.

If further information is desired, please write us.

Mary E. Cline, daughter of Mrs. Lewis Cline of San Jose, California, and James E. Renfroe, son of Elder and Mrs. Z. Z. Renfroe of Independence, Missouri, were married December 17 at the Englewood Church in Independence, Elder Renfroe officiating. The bride is a graduate of Graceland College and the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing. The groom is a graduate of Graceland and the University of Kansas and is missionary in charge of the Arkansas-Louisiana District. After January 15 they will be at home in Little Rock, Arkansas.

Cline-Guilbert

Mary Lee Guilbert, daughter of Elder and Mrs. Elbert D. Guilbert of San Jose, California, and Kenneth L. Cline, son of Mrs. Lewis E. Cline, also of San Jose, were married on December 23 at the Reorganized Church in San Jose, the bride's father officiating. Both are graduates of Graceland College. They are making their home in Madera, California, where Mr. Cline teaches in the local high school.

Christmas-Tankersley

Jeanne Marie Tankersley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Tankersley of Miami, Florida, and James E. Christmas, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Christmas, also of Miami, were married November 26 at the Reorganized Church by Elder Ammon C. Calhoun. The bride attended Graceland College. They are residing in Miami.

Papenfus-Coleman

Lottie Marie Coleman, daughter of Mrs. Kitty Coleman of Independence, Missouri, became the bride of Emory F. Papenfus, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred C. Papenfus of Kansas City, Missouri, on September 29, 1950, at the South Crysler Church in Independence. The double-ring ceremony was performed by Donald V. Lents. Mrs. Papenfus is a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing.

BIRTHS

A daughter, Patricia Lynne, was born on October 25 to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Haney of Fort Belvoir, Virginia. She was blessed on December 31 at the church in Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, by Elder E. H. Brennan. Mrs. Haney is the former Ruth Bow-ersox.

DEATHS

FANNON.—Anna Mary, daughter of Ole and Maren Madison, was born June 19, 1871, near Bedison, Missouri, and died December 6 at Bedison after a year's illness. She was married on August 21, 1893, to Edward S. Fannon, who preceded her in death on May 19, 1942. Five of the six children born to them survive. They are Charles Madison, Orville Edward, George Elbert, and Myrtle Pauling of Conception Junction, and Mrs. Jessie Hall of Junction City, Kansas. There are also thirteen grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Elder Emery E. Jennings conducted the funeral service. Burial was at Bedison.

SHEFFER.—William H., was born December 6, 1870, in Cheboygan, Michigan, and died on November 3, 1950, in Independence, Missouri, after a long illness. His wife, Clara, preceded him in death four years ago. An elder in the church, he had served as president of Eastern Michigan District and in later years did much "free-lance" missionary work in that area.

He is survived by three sons: Everett of Dearborn, Michigan; Charles (address unknown), and George of Texas; four daughters: Mrs. Ruth Wills of Sandusky, Michigan; Mrs. Ellen Gardner of Highland Park, Michigan; Mrs. Minnie Armstrong of Dearborn; and Mrs. Pearl Horton of Pontiac, Michigan; and several grandchildren. The funeral and burial were at Independence.

RENFRO.—Eddice Myrl, daughter of W. H. and Ida Huffman Clester, was born near Burlington Junction, Missouri, on July 3, 1894, and died at Marshall, Arkansas, on December 3, 1950. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church as a girl and, although isolated much of her life, she was ever faithful to her belief.

She is survived by her husband, George Renfro; and two sons: Herbert of Marshall, Arkansas, and Joseph of Maryville, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Warren E. Peak at Maryville. Burial was in the Workman Chapel Cemetery near Burlington Junction.

JENKINS.—Charles Emery, was born on July 20, 1892, at Oneaville, Texas, and died on December 4, 1950, at the Independence Sanitarium. On July 6, 1919, he married Lutetia Christie; five children were born to them. Mr. Jenkins's family was his main interest in life. During World War I he served in Battery E, 146 Field Artillery, receiving his discharge on June 25, 1919. A cabinet maker by trade, he worked for the A. J. Stevens Company for years and the Sheridan Stove Equipment Company three months before his death. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since November 9, 1902.

He is survived by his wife, Lutetia, of the home; three sons: Frederick Charles, Chief Petty Officer in Adak, Alaska; David Robert of Kansas City, Missouri; and Verne F. of Independence; two daughters: Mrs. Cora Mae Gates of San Diego, California, and Mrs. Dorothy E. Vetter of the home; and six grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the George C. Carson Chapel, Elder Glaude A. Smith and The Reverend N. L. Haney officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

DAVIS.—Charles Franklin, son of J. Franklin and Louisa Davis, was born August 31, 1883, in Owen County, Indiana, and died September 9, 1950, at the Coral Gables Hospital in Miami, Florida. He was married to Mary Ruth Brewster on October 30, 1904; four children were born to them. Before uniting with the Reorganized Church he was a minister for the Christian Church. As a high priest he served on the Stake High Council, was superintendent of the church school at Stone Church while living in Independence, pastor of the Pensacola, Florida, Branch; a member of the Gulf States Reunion committee, and active in priesthood work at Miami, Florida.

Funeral services were held at the church in Miami, Elder Ammon Calhoun officiating. Interment was in Graceland Cemetery, Miami.

MOREY.—James Monroe, son of David B. and Deborah Morey, was born October 22, 1876, at Pleasanton, Iowa, and died November 19, 1950, at Pleasanton. On June 9, 1901, he was married to Stella Rees; four children were born to them. A son, Garold, died in infancy. From 1902 until 1911, they made their home in Nebraska. Here on October 2, 1904, he and his wife were baptized into the Reorganized Church. A year later he was ordained to the office of deacon. His was a service of love and brotherhood that found expression in many deeds of kindness to others.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Wanda Maurice of Pasco, Washington, and Marjorie Allingham of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; a son, Walter W. Morey of Wray, Colorado; a sister, Mrs. Angie Peck of Riverside, California; and four grandchildren. The funeral was conducted at the Reorganized Church in Pleasanton. Burial was in Hamilton Cemetery, Pleasanton.

P.S.

* WORRY

This was a rather small item in the newspaper the other day, but significant of something we should try to understand. A young man, a university student, was found dead in a car parked on a country road. He had piped the exhaust fumes of the motor into the car and died of carbon-monoxide poisoning. . . . Friends revealed that he had been worrying about world conditions. The condition of things had become too much for him. It was the wrong way out, of course. But it shows how deeply many of the young people are feeling these days. They know they are being sacrificed to an evil they did not create. Most of them will not do this. The young men will submit to conscription, and many will die on foreign fields. Young women will miss them, worry, and grieve through lives of loneliness and frustration. It is not a pleasant sort of world just now.

* THE TRIANGLE

Billy Rose, a master showman and a keen storyteller, relates a bit of news about a church in Brooklyn. He was riding by and heard beautiful music from the chimes of a modest Methodist church in a poor neighborhood. Hunting up the story, he found that the pastor had suggested to his congregation that it would be a good thing if their church could have the bells to give fine music to the neighborhood. The cost would be high, and they might accumulate enough in a few years if they would sacrifice. Then a businessman came forward and said that he and his partner would like to give a third of the cost, each. But there was only one trouble—the partner was a Jew. Would that make any difference? "Certainly not," said the pastor, "for many Jewish families in the neighborhood would hear and enjoy the music." Now, if only a Catholic would offer the other third—three great religious groups in that part of Brooklyn would be represented. Soon, a willing and generous Catholic was found. So the bells were ordered, and in due course installed.

Today on the outer wall of that church is a bronze plaque with three names on it—a Protestant, a Jew, and a Catholic—who gave something good and beautiful to the people of a great city.

In these days when there is so much strife and trouble in the world, isn't that a good story for us to think about?

* MORTALITY

We grieve that so many of our young men have died on the field of battle in the Korean war. But we have killed more people at home in the States with careless and drunken driving. The casualties of battle are unavoidable, unless we can stop the war. But these home casualties could be prevented with a little care and some sensible driving.

* POISE

Uncle Joe was speaking regretfully of the loss of glamour that comes with the years.

"It gives poise and dignity," said a younger member of the staff, trying to comfort him.

He rested his hand on his belt, at the point of his greatest girth.

"You mean avoirdupois, perhaps?" he inquired.

News and Notes

TWELVE AND SEVENTY ASSEMBLY

"Evangelism in the Modern World" was the theme of the Twelve and Seventy Assembly held January 1 through January 5. The meetings were held in the West College Church in Independence. Classes, forums, recreation, and worship services were planned by and for the Council of Twelve and the Seventies. Special services included an Upper Room Communion service, a report from President F. H. Edwards on his missionary experiences abroad in Europe, and a banquet at which President I. A. Smith told of his missionary experiences abroad in the Pacific area.

STAKE PRIESTHOOD COMMUNION

A Center Stake Priesthood Communion service was held January 5 at the Stone Church. The theme was "United With Christ Through Service in 1951." As it was impossible for the 400 in attendance to each offer a testimony, the service was planned so that each could participate by offering a written testimony for 1951. The Stake Presidency, Bishopric, and other Stake officers were in charge.

REPORT FROM EVANGELIST

Evangelist Ray Whiting reports that as a result of the 372 services he has conducted in the past year, 102 have been baptized. Brother Whiting states, "Although I did not baptize one of them, it is my policy to urge the local men to do the baptizing.

"The year of 1950 was one of the best of my entire experience. The high lights were the General Conference and the High Priest Conference in Kirtland. In spite of world conditions, I am looking into 1951 with confidence, and believe that as the terrors of the world increase, so will the power of God be made increasingly manifest among his worthy Saints."

VISITS SOUTH

Apostle Percy E. Farrow made a trip through the Arkansas and Louisiana districts in late November and early December, visiting most of the branches and missions in the southern part of the district.

The mission at Little Rock, Arkansas, that was started in September, 1950, now has a membership of fifty.

He visited in Paris, Tennessee, and commented on the steady progress on the building there.

Brother Farrow also mentioned that alterations have begun on the church in Indianapolis.

ELECTED

Mrs. Howard P. Andersen, wife of a member of the Standing High Council, recently was elected president of Pioneer Trails Area Council of Girl Scouts, Inc. Brother Andersen has served the same position for the Boy Scouts.

Elder Carl Mesle was guest speaker at the installation banquet January 8.

RICH HILL DISTRICT

An Institute was held for the Rich Hill district January 6 and 7. Participating with Apostle D. O. Chesworth were Elders Donald L. Kyser and Cecil R. Ettinger.

CORRECTION

The notation concerning the Spanish-speaking people in the January 15 column should have read nineteen "different" Spanish-speaking people were in attendance during the series.

John Blackmore

JOHN IS RIGHT IN HIS ELEMENT when he is backed up with shelves of books. He came from "down under" (meaning Australia) and climbed up the hard way. He started out in the mission field of New South Wales, then after two years he came to Graceland to join the religious education class of 1921 which attracted several of our younger appointees. More missionary work followed, then pastoral assignments till 1928 when he entered the work of the Department of Religious Education where he continued until the Depression releases of 1931. While pastor at Pittsburg, Kansas, he finished his work for a B.S. degree at Kansas State Teachers College. From 1931 to 1939 he taught history in the Independence high school. The next ten years he was doing pastoral work at Los Angeles, Omaha, and Joplin. He was appointed church historian at the last General Conference.

Brother Blackmore likes history and has prepared several lectures on International affairs which he has given before civic and church groups. He has a passionate desire to prepare manuscripts so as to supply the demands of members for the facts of the church's growth up to the present time. His training has prepared him to discriminate between what is history and what is fiction and not get the two mixed. His ability to organize and present his thoughts should make a final product which will be both reliable and good reading.

The Influence of the Home

"I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth, but . . . you have not . . . and this is the cause of your affliction."

—Doctrine and Covenants 90:6.

A TEACHER in the junior department of one of our largest city churches made this statement recently:

Only one child in my class has a normal home life and lives with both parents. All the others live with one parent, or the grandparents, or some other relative. All but one come from broken homes. . . . It is only in the home of this one normal child that the parents give religious instruction and read from the Standard Books of the church. All that the others receive comes from the radio, the movies, comic books, and television.

This represents not the disappearance of the home influence, but the neglect and corruption of it.

What would people say if the pastor of that congregation were to talk to them about it rather frankly in a sermon?

Talk to the schoolteachers, and you will be amazed by the experiences they have. They will tell you that every child in the classroom reflects the spiritual, moral, and economic conditions in the home, and that the disturbances of home life often make it impossible for the child to learn or study. Fear, insecurity, and lack of love make children desperate.

Teachers see children betrayed and corrupted by selfish, weak, and evil parents. The child can resist the evil conditions of a community if he has a good home. He can resist the naughty habits of some of the worse companions on the school ground. But if he has to meet wickedness at home, he is almost helpless.

This is not meant to say that there are not many splendid Christian homes. It is meant to say that there are not enough of them.

We can do little enough for the many, many broken homes. The parent left alone with a child faces problems too tragic and sometimes too terrible to admit much opportunity for spiritual and religious instruction, though some are able to manage it. We should point out that the church and its people are a great help to such a parent in times of crisis and disaster.

Our real weakness is in the normal home where both parents are present and simply do nothing for the nurturing of the child in the knowledge of the church and the gospel. They turn the child loose to take care of himself under the influences of dreadful "comic books," brutal and sensational radio programs, and television. They merely fulfill their obligation to feed and clothe the child's body. Animals do as much for their young. They do nothing for the mind and spirit.

These homes are losing a whole generation of children from the church and God.

* * * * *

What are the elements of a good home influence for children? Here are some practical steps parents can take:

1. Grace at the table. Children learn a part of the faith by participating in the prayer of blessing for the food.

2. The family altar. The reading of the Scriptures and the practice of prayer once every day is a splendid thing for the whole family, including the children.

3. Reading matter. Parents can provide good literature, both non-fiction and recreational reading, suitable to the age and the needs of the children. This will protect them against many inferior recreations.

4. Supervision of radio and television programs. Not all that is put out for children is good for them. It would be better for a home not to have a radio at all than to let children hear everything.

5. Supervision of recreation. This will require of the parents a considerable amount of time spent in real companionship, with supervision of a kindly type that will not repress the child unduly, nor make him feel that it is all discipline.

6. Teaching of church literature. In addition to the reading of the Scriptures, there should be study periods for the children in which help is given with the learning of the quarterly lessons.

7. Love. Just plain, old-fashioned goodness and loving-kindness. Nothing can take the place of this factor in a child's life. He needs to be loved, wanted, and respected.

8. Opportunity and freedom. The good home is a home governed by law, but it is not a law that crushes the spirit of the child, nor robs him of his freedom and initiative. He is

San-Day April 22

Pursuant to the action of the last General Conference, the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing Day has been set for Sunday, April 22, 1951.

Your attention is called to this date at this time with the hope that all District Presidents, pastors, and others involved in planning for this day can make their plans early. Your efforts in arranging for special program and offerings for this particular occasion of the church at the 11:00 o'clock service on April 22 will be appreciated. We believe the work of this institution is such as to be deserving of our best efforts.

Work on the Auditorium

PROSPECTS ARE GOOD that the Auditorium will come out with a new hat next spring. This one will be of copper with plenty of trimmings. Every day when the weather will permit, six to a dozen men will be found on the roof, putting sheet copper securely in place on the dome. The accompanying pictures show a close-up of the fabricating units and a view of some of the strips which reach from the edge to the skylight section.

Considerable study preceded the final choice of copper over that of stainless steel or aluminum. The latter two have been used occasionally during the last twenty years in competition with copper. However, the administrative officers of the church were unanimous in the choice of copper, which decision was supported by the High Council of the church. The value of copper has proved itself over a period of hundreds of years, and the selection of copper should assure adequate protection for many decades to come. While much can be said for stainless steel and aluminum, it was felt that they have not been fully tested and tried. This, together with the fact that the edge of the dome had been previously covered with copper when the stone facings were put up, added to the factors which made the choice of heavy copper sheet preferable. The weight of this copper varies from 24 ounces to as high as 48 ounces to the square foot. When complete, there will be about 130,000 pounds of copper on the roof. A final green color will be added with the Patina process. This hastens the action which changes copper to a greenish hue by long exposure to the atmosphere.

Each section of copper plate as seen in the picture is processed in the contractor's shops in Kansas City before it is brought to the Auditorium. It is anchored to the roof with a copper bar through which brass and copper expansion type bolts two and a half inches long are fastened into the concrete roof.

THE ORIGINAL PLAN called for a massive skylight on top of the dome, approximately fifty feet above the ceiling. However, because of additional cost for material and maintenance, the glass in this section has been eliminated and artificial lighting will be used instead. The total cost of this roof improvement is expected to run to $160,000.

Considerable work has been done in improving the dining room. The ceiling will be lowered as much as six feet in some places and covered with sheet rock to which will be attached acoustical celetex. Concealed fluorescent lighting will flood the place with light. The cost of this project will run to approximately $23,000, of which $8,500 is being contributed by the Laurel Club. A public address system which will cost close to $3,500 is being permanently installed in the ceiling. The room will seat approximately six hundred diners when completed and will be one of the largest dining rooms in the community.

Workmen are also busy in various stages of finishing office, storage, and library space around the Auditorium. More information about this will be available in a later Herald.

The Quest of Truth - Part I

By J. A. Koehler

For this cause came I into the world: that I should bear witness unto the truth.—John 18: 37.

THE FIRST FUNCTION of religious leadership, the first function of priesthood, the first function of anyone who would enrich the life of man, is to teach or make known The Truth. And the reason is this: only The Truth can "make you free"; only through resort to Truth can the well-being of the soul be promoted. The peace, prosperity, and happiness of man is conditioned in what he does about The Truth. "Go ye, therefore, and teach" The Truth. (See John 7: 32; Matthew 28: 19; and Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8 in particular.)

But to make known explicitly The Truth, we ourselves must first have apprehended it. We ourselves must know it—not obscurely, but distinctly. So, said Joseph to Hyrum, "Seek not to declare my word [which is truth], but seek first to obtain my word."—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 10. The quest of truth is the first function of those whose office it is to proclaim it.

So "the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and he should seek the law of God's mouth." The priest should seek to know The Truth, "for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts" (Malachi 2: 7).

The Truth

The deposition "to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" means that the witness swears to testify to that, and only that, which he believes to be "true to fact," because he has seen it with his own eyes or heard it with his own ears. But true to fact or not, that "truth" is not The Truth with which we are concerned in this article.

When you say, "The newborn baby should be fed milk, not vinegar," you speak part, not all, of The Truth. That is to say, you speak of that which accords with the requirements of man's nature and with the circumstances of his being. The particular circumstance, in the case of feeding the baby, is infancy. In the circumstance of manhood, the truth is somewhat different.

There are, then, circumstances of man's being, as well as his physical and psychological constitution—circumstances of both peoples and persons—which determine, specifically, what The Truth is—in part or temporarily.

For both peoples and persons may pass from infancy—spiritual as well as physical infancy—to manhood; and when they do, "strong meat" comes to supersede "milk" as a requirement. The law of life for a twenty-year-old is somewhat different from the law of life for a twenty-minute-old. But whatever that law in its totality and unity may be, it is The Truth.

Some laws—especially curative laws—may be "added" only temporarily because of moral or mental sickness; "because of transgression" (Galatians 3: 19). But curative or not, such necessary laws are truth.

"The gathering" law of Restoration did not apply to Abram's household, because the circumstances then were different; "the gathering" was not necessary. It was not part of The Truth for that people. But it is necessary today because of the scattered circumstances of the "elect" and its relation to the formation of a singular people. And because it is a requirement for us, it is truth for us.

When you say, "Man shall not live by bread alone," and when you say, "There must be an organization of my people . . . to advance the cause" (Doctrine and Covenants 77:1), you speak other parts of The Truth. You speak of necessary relations which arise both from man's nature and from the circumstance of his being. You speak of The Truth with which we are concerned in this article.

Universality

Such truth as "man"—the "human race"—"shall not live by bread alone," or the truth that economic affairs must be conducted aright if "the soul" is to prosper, is general. It is for every nation, kindred, tongue and people. And because such truth respects the conduct of primary affairs, it is of first importance to all mankind. All peoples should seek "first" to find that truth: the truth which respects the business of human living together. The quest of that truth should be both universal and continuous.

Since peoples are composed of persons, since society is an organization of personality, since the business of human living together is the business of all, all persons should seek to know the truth respecting that business: the first truth (according to the record) proclaimed by the genius of Bible religion. (See the first two chapters of Genesis; see the whole book.)

ery member of society to know the truth about agriculture or architecture or aeronautics or what not; but it is the duty of every member of the all-inclusive society to seek to know the truth of citizenship—the business of human living together. Each and every individual should seek the truth, the knowledge of which is power to be a good member, or functioning part, of a good community.

So, to seek to know the truth about “the cause of Zion” that great economic enterprise grounded in moral considerations, that community enterprise, that enterprise of A People—is a need and a responsibility of every person who has espoused the cause—whether he be farmer or physician, businessman or butcher. That is the force of Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18 and 102: 2.

Consequences Through Implementation

The statement, “The quality of truth is its universality,” means several things. It means that The Truth exists for all mankind. It means that The Truth will work in any competent hands. It means that there can be no monopoly of The Truth. Any people, anywhere, has the right in its own right to do the morally right. It has the right in its own right to conform its social order to the moral order of the universe. It has the right in its own right to ground matrimony, industry, and government—its business under God—in The Truth. There can be no monopoly of The Truth. It will work in any competent hands. The quality of The Truth is its universality.

That word of truth, according to the ancient prophet of Restoration, “shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish . . . the thing whereunto I sent it” (Isaiah 55: 6-13). It will work. For that word of truth is related to the prosperity of the soul of man as naturally as the rain and the snow which come down from heaven are related to plant life.

“It shall” work. It just naturally shall. “If Zion do these things”—if she find The Truth and implement it—“she shall prosper.” She just naturally shall. And she won’t if she doesn’t. (See Doctrine and Covenants 94: 3-5.)

Simply to search for the truth and to find it will not yield peace, prosperity, and happiness. It will not, it cannot, save the soul. Nor can the everlasting preaching of “the gospel of your salvation”—the proclamation of The Truth—save even “you.” To save anyone, the truth must be put to work; the will of God must be done. The Truth is for consequences through implementation.

This is the way Jesus put it: “If ye continue in my word [if ye do it], then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.”—John 8: 31, 32.

The quest of truth is important. The refinement of truth is important. The proclamation of truth is important. But implementation of The Truth is infinitely more important.

The Eternal Quest

“As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God.”—Psalm 42: 1.

All beings have capacities to reach out for the things upon which their lives depend. And they do reach out, as the potato in the dark, when it begins to vegetate and sprout, reaches out for the light. As there exists in higher plants an affinity for light, so is there a spiritual relationship of attraction between humanity and truth.

As far as we know, as far as the history of education reveals, the quest of truth has been going on ever since man began to face the pressures and problems of life thoughtfully. The search for that which accords with the requirements of his nature and the circumstances of his being, or for that through which he might improve his condition, has been going on ever since he began to get ideas of means to ends, of cause and effect, of adjustment to environment. Long before Solomon said, “Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding” (Proverbs 4: 7), the quest of truth was on. For humanity, in the long run, the quest of truth is eternal.

I say, “For humanity—not for this person or that.” I say, “In the long run—not uninterruptedly; not continuously and at every particular time.” For you and me the quest of truth may not be on. For The Church, the quest of truth may not be on. But for some men, somewhere, now and then, the quest of truth is on. And it will continue to go on until man has found it—until he shall come to comprehend “even God” (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12).

Good Quests and Bad

The acquired natures of men do not all correspond to the original nature of man. Some men have “corrupt minds,” as some have perverted appetites. So they “do not like to retain God in their knowledge” (Romans 1: 28); they “resist the truth” (II Timothy 3: 18). It is common for the customary moralist to love pleasure more than The Truth. The quest of such persons may be for some physical world truths—the truth, for instance, about poisons with which to kill people, or the truth about making less poisonous their intoxicating drinks. Or their quests may be for “economic laws,” that they may take advantage of their neighbors and live by the sweat of other men’s faces. Such quests are bad.

But some “profane” quests are not so bad as some that are called “sacred.” I have in mind, at the moment, the quest of the hair-splitting brigade of medieval Christendom—men who built bonfires around the searchers for truth. I refer to the typical ecclesiastic of that day, to men who may have been sincere, but who, without question, were superstitious, prejudiced, uncompromising, intolerant, and cruel. I refer also to others who now wear truth-crushing cloth, even though it may not be "all wool and a yard wide"—men who disguise their ruthless imperiousness by social tact, who do nasty things in nice ways.

Surely you have read the story and know of the human degradation that attends such quests of truth.

Saint Paul did not miss the mark when he said that such "foolish and unlearned questions," such "profane and vain babblings . . . increase unto more ungodliness" (II Timothy 2). They turn men away from the quest of the truth.

I never knew a man who was engrossed with questions about the gates of the New Jerusalem, the composition of the blood in the resurrected body, and other such "foolish and unlearned questions," whose quest was for the real things that matter. I never knew one such person whose passion or engrossment was to know The Truth. Nor have I ever known one such delver in "mysteries of iniquity" who was intelligently devoted to the completion of Restoration.

The most notable discoveries of physical-world truths were made in modern times. I refer to the discoveries of Faraday-Pasteur and Company. The lot of man has been greatly improved through the implementation of such truths. We now see by the light of day in the middle of the night, because the quest of those men was for physical-world truth; because we have done something about the truth. But the most notable discoveries of spiritual-world truths were made in ancient times. This is not the first generation to find out things about the conscious or subconscious mind. Whoever wrote the Book of Job had found that truth too. (See Job 33: 14-16.)

"Religion" got off to a much better start than did "science." The race has never had to abandon the first proclamation of religion respecting the business of man under God—the proclamation that that business is to conduct marital, economic, and political affairs, and their complements (particularly education and the "Sabbath") aright, to promote human well-being: to enrich man's life.

But Faraday-Pasteur and Company did have to abandon Galen-Ptolemy and Company. The "Religion" of the day lost ground; it abandoned truths which it had discovered; "science" gained. But notwithstanding incursions of priests who worshiped Aristotle, whose attachments were to ritual rather than righteousness, prophetic Bible religion has never been weighed in the balance and found wanting—not as respects principles, postulates, premises; not as respects "righteousness." Some things were said about the truth that were not true, but what was said in general by the prophets respecting the conditions of human well-being was, as it always will be, roughly The Truth.

Genesis 1: 28 speaks of an absolute truth. And America is God's best witness that when Jesus said government must be established in "righteousness" if there is to be peace as well as plenty—when he said, "Man shall not live by bread alone"; when he said, "All these things shall be added unto you," assuredly, through the establishment of governmental "righteousness," the righteousness of the "Kingdom"—he spoke the truth.

In the beginning "religion" looked forward to "science." Genesis 1: 18 contemplates every contribution to human well-being that science, art, and education may make. In the end "science" looks backward to "religion" and seeks to build upon the foundation of The Truth it laid.

Restoration Proclamation

RESTORATION—which is the genius of prophetic Judaism and Messianic Christianity in a comeback—was originated with the proclamation that "A great and marvelous work is about to come forth unto the children of men": a work which "whosoever will" may "seek to bring forth and establish" (Doctrine and Covenants 4:1; 6:1, 3; 10:13; 11:1, 3; 12: 1, 3). That work, which is "intrusted to all" (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8), that "cause of Zion," that great economic enterprise grounded in moral considerations, has yet to be brought forth and established; and by now you may suspect that the aim of this article is to give part of the answer to the question, Why?

The misconduct of humanity's vital affairs, the delinquency of peoples, the corruption of basic social institutions have made a Restoration of the business of peoples to the status of a business under God, or the status of a kingdom-building business, a necessity. That is why Restoration was inaugurated with the proclamation, "A great and marvelous work is about to come forth," "the cause of Zion" is about to be established. Restoration is a proclamation of that fact—a proclamation that is for the ears of "every nation, kindred, tongue, and people" (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3).

Restoration is a proclamation of an intention to raise up a people—a peculiar, singular, competent people—to do that work—to form that people selectively, of course, through a process of social reintegration under competent religious leadership (see particularly Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12; 48: 2; 65; 98: 9; 102: 8-10).

Restoration is a proclamation of the rise of a church adapted for the purpose of forming a people that will do its work. And it is a proclamation of the means, measures, and methods through which that work is to be established. It is a proclamation of divine legation. It is a proclamation of facts and truths—facts which, in the present state of human affairs, have the force of truth. And whoever runs may read in the Doctrine and Covenants that this is true.

Faith of Our Fathers

By W. J. Breshears

*Faith of our fathers, living still
In spite of dungeon, fire and sword,
Oh, how our hearts beat high with joy Whene'er we hear that glorious word!*

WE SING THIS FAMOUS OLD HYMN with feeling and with admiration for those stalwarts of old who suffered privations in cold, damp dungeons, who gave their lives unflinchingly at the fiery stake and in the arena at the mercy of wild animals, who died by the sword at the hands of ruthless kings seeking to stamp out Christianity. We are inspired by their actions and their deeds. We admire their strong faith, but most of us fail to consider the source of their convictions—why they so willingly gave all.

Their faith was more than child-like credulity. Theirs was a poignant, abiding belief, based upon realities and nurtured by experiences with the Father of all—experiences so real and convictions so deeply rooted that they could face the persecutions willingly for the cause of Christ.

Theirs was the "faith once delivered to the saints" of which Jude speaks in his general epistle, and for which mankind is admonished to contend. The Apostle John said, "For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

JOHN TELLS US in his writings that in the beginning the Word was with the Father. The Word here referred to is Christ. He also states, "In him was the life; and the life was the light of men." We discover by further reading that "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." The Apostle Paul tells us that "the gospel is the power of God unto salvation."

The gospel was therefore preached in the beginning through the Son. It was Jesus who delivered the faith to Adam, the first man. Adam was taught the principles of the doctrine of Christ as outlined by Paul in Hebrews 6. If we believe the Prophet Malachi's statement, "God changes not," and James' "with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," and Paul's "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever," we must agree that the gospel as preached by Christ, this gospel of the kingdom, would be the same in all ages, and the requirements for entering into that covenant relationship with Christ would likewise remain unchanged.

Adam delivered the faith as received from the Lord to his posterity, and the righteous line through Seth carried it down to Noah whose purpose was to continue it beyond the flood. Through the righteous seed of Noah came Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob whose name was changed to Israel. Of the twelve sons of Israel came two righteous lines, Judah and Joseph. Then Moses, who was in the similitude of the Only Begotten of the Father, was divinely directed to lead the children of Israel out of bondage in Egypt. In Acts 7, we discover that Christ was "in the church in the wilderness, with the angel that spake to him [Moses] in the mount Sina, and with our fathers, who received the lively oracles to give unto us," the lively oracles being the Ten Commandments.

In I Corinthians 10, Paul states that the Israelites, while in the wilderness, all "drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ."

Moses tried to teach the children of Israel the faith of his fathers as once delivered to the saints, but they would not accept his teachings or apply them to their lives. They required something more tangible to direct them, so the Law of Moses was given as a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ.

CHRIST CAME IN the meridian of time when the peoples of the earth had so far departed from the faith that Christ himself had to deliver it again. In the words of John, "The Word became flesh and dwelt among us." When Christ came to the years of his ministry, he began to preach, "Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," or "The kingdom of heaven is within you." He sought to point men to the faith of their fathers—the faith once delivered to the saints. He preached as one having authority and not as the scribes and Pharisees who had fallen so far short. He brought the gospel as he introduced it from the beginning.

Jesus told Peter, "I will build my church"—not a reformation of the Mosaic sects, not a combination with compromises of doctrine and practice, but upon the ancient order of things.

The church that Jesus built had as its purpose the salvation of men, for God creates men to be his sons. This required an organized plan, with officers and laws and subjects. His plan was complete in every detail, and the power of his Spirit was the motivating influence.

In the New Testament church the following ministers functioned: apostles, prophets, bishops, evangelists, high priests, seventies, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. The ministers were not the church; they were only the foundation. It takes

Operation '51

By William McMurray

AS WE BEGIN a new year, it is natural for us to cast a glance over our shoulder at the year just passed. In our personal lives we can see accomplishments perhaps, but unquestionably each one of us can look back on opportunities lost and see places where our achievements have fallen short of goals which we set a year ago.

As we view the world in general, we see that suffering and intolerance are still commonplace; security has been swept from under us and even now we lurk perilously on the brink of another great war. We see a world of people urgently requiring a new way of life; we feel our own responsibility to show them the way that has been revealed to us through Jesus Christ.

THE SITUATION is complicated, however, by attitudes of the people. Men have been hypnotized by the brilliant display of discovery which science has paraded before their eyes during recent years. Where ignorance of the world of which they were a part once turned them inevitably toward God for the satisfaction of their every need, this newly acquired knowledge—pitiful though it may be in the scales of eternal values—causes them to be self-satisfied. With the arrogance of youth, they turn away from their Creator, confident of their own ability to care for themselves.

The world is further confused in the spiritual things of life because so many ways of salvation are proclaimed. Varied interpretations of Scriptures are presented to such an extent that we have lost the desire to seek after eternal truth, feeling inadequate for the task which has seemingly conquered better minds throughout the ages. In this way any existing doubts concerning God are nourished and strengthened. Christianity is in conflict with a new type of paganism, which expresses itself in modern form by a lack of interest in spiritual things and a theory that it doesn't make any difference what a man believes. It is difficult, in the face of this, for the message of the Restoration, which was given by God to resolve these doubts, to take root. Yet the fact remains that someone must cleanse the world of the sin and unbelief which is everywhere apparent. The restored message of Jesus Christ is the only way available to humanity which can succeed, since his is the only name given under heaven whereby man can be saved. To each who has been warned, there comes the responsibility to warn his neighbor. Each who has been called into this work has a task to perform in the deliverance of the world from the results of its own sin.

TOO OFTEN we are inclined to shrug off our responsibility and satisfy ourselves with the thought that we are helpless since an individual voice is soon lost amidst the clamor of the multitude. But this fails when we realize that every revolution or reform in history had its conception in one moment in the mind of one man. Let us consider this thought again and endeavor to measure its meaning: EVERY REVOLUTION OR REFORM IN HISTORY HAD ITS CONCEPTION IN ONE MOMENT IN THE MIND OF ONE MAN.

In exactly the same sense that one acorn contains the promise of ten thousand oaks, so also can we trace each individual accomplishment of our civilization back to the first man—hence the possibilities of great things are present in each of us. In the Garden of Eden, Adam held the armies of Rome, the wisdom of Greece, the scientific knowledge of modern civilization condensed in his being. The promises of these accomplishments were first found in God; they were delegated by him to his Son when he endowed Jesus Christ with all power both in heaven and in earth; they were passed on to Adam and became a part of our heritage when we were created in the image of God and his son, Jesus.

There is then, only one intelligence—that of God—in which all of our universe was conceived and which was breathed into the nature of Adam. Once we tap the source of this intelligence, once we recognize within ourselves the power of reason, we have at our disposal all truth, all understanding, all knowledge, all wisdom, and the possibility of all accomplishments. All truth finds its root in Deity; all that is not truth originates with the confusing powers which seek to frustrate the work of God.

THE UNITY OF THE GODHEAD which compels us to the recognition of one intelligence drives from our mind the possibility of any save one love—the pure love of God—which made it possible and imperative for him to give his Only Begotten Son for the redemption of mankind. This love expresses itself constantly in an endeavor to bring man to a level where he can appreciate the fullness of celestial joy which has been prepared for him. Love which seeks less than this for its object, concerning itself with worldly comforts or rewards, is unworthy of the eternal love of God which looked beyond the cross on Calvary to the salvation of the souls of men in eternal relationships.

Having its source in one God, being conceived by one intelligence, motivated by one love, there can be but one purpose. Any purpose in life which reaches its climax in less than celestial glory for all mankind cannot find its source in the unified plan of God. There is room for success in the way of Christ; there is room for happiness, for a home, a family, recreation, education, but only as these things revolve around and find their consummation in the purposes of Divinity. When we permit any worldly goal to become the focal point of our life, forcing God out of our existence, or at best relegating him to a subordinate role, we leave the ranks of the army of salvation and unite with the forces of evil which seek to destroy the souls of men.

Today, then, we must examine our lives not to see how well we have lived during the year that has just passed—not to see how much success we have enjoyed in the things of the world—but to discover to what extent we have aligned ourselves with the eternal things of God. To what extent is he the central figure in our lives? Or are we so engaged in other activities that we have crowded Jesus to the fringe of our existence?

WE ARE LIVING in a time when the whole world calls to us to slow down. Doctors tell us that we have to take things easier. We all believe we are working too hard and need to relax more. Yet above the voices which call us to a slower pace sounds the voice of God in a recent revelation calling us to increase our efforts to conform with the requirements of the hastening time which is upon us even now.

Clearly, our greatest need is not to "slow down" or to "take it easy," but to eliminate from our lives the nonessentials which clutter up our time and divide our loyalties. We need to re-establish God at the center of our universe and to take our place behind the wheel of activity and service, focusing our attention and concentrating our effort on the furtherance of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the building of the kingdom of God.

We have already wasted much time in our lives, but fortunately we have not the power to waste time in advance, and the rest of 1951 now stretches out before us as surely as

Spectator's View of

The "Messiah" Broadcast

ANOTHER BROADCAST of Handel's Messiah by the Messiah Choir of Independence went on the air over the Columbia Broadcasting System network, Sunday evening, December 17. What the radio audience could not appreciate was the drama of the broadcast as seen by the comparatively small studio audience which was privileged to attend.

It was a small audience only because the more than 320 participants in the broadcast filled the large ballroom of the Muehlebach Hotel, leaving room for only a few spectators. About 270 persons, largely church members but including a number from other denominations in the Kansas City area, sang in the chorus which was seated in tiers to the left of the conductor. To the right were the forty-three members of the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra. Directly in front of the conductor were the four soloists, the time-keeper, producer, and announcer. Behind them were the organist and pianist at their instruments. Finally, crowded together behind Franklyn Weddle, the conductor, were about thirty spectators.

IN THE AUDIENCE were W. Wallace Smith, representing the First Presidency, and Mrs. Smith. From the Presiding Bishopric came Walter N. Johnson and Mrs. Johnson. Mr. and Mrs. Chris Hartshorn represented Herald House, while Irby Mundy, who makes the trip annually from his home in Colorado Springs for the broadcast, seemed to symbolize the church membership. There were a few guests of the soloists, including the three daughters of Josephine Mader, soprano soloist.

From the Independence Community Music Association, which has given such splendid support to the Messiah Choir, came Dr. and Mrs. Charles Nickson and Miss Cammie Johnston. Kansas City musical circles were represented by Hans Schweiger, conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, and Henry Kerr Williams, assistant conductor of the orchestra and conductor of the Philharmonic Chorus. Present also was Mr. C. B. Neibarger, music editor of the Kansas City Star, who wrote the story of the concert for the Monday paper. Among those absent were the Trumans and Blevins Davis, all of whom were out of town. President Truman's secretary, Matt Connolly, had written a letter expressing the President's regret over his inability to attend, while Margaret Truman wired her regards and stated that the transportation tie-up would make it impossible for her to arrive in time.

AS THE MOMENT APPROACHED for the opening of the broadcast and the doors were closed to keep out the sounds of activity in the hotel lobby, the room became quiet and tense. The chorus had had only one rehearsal with the orchestra earlier in the evening, the orchestra one rehearsal with the soloists the previous night, and the chorus only ten complete rehearsals this fall; but all were keyed up and ready to do their best. The prayer of invocation was offered by President Wallace Smith. Then, after a minute or two, the producer gave the signal, the orchestra responded to Weddle's baton, and the church was on the air with the lovely strains of the Overture. The announcer stepped to the microphone and, in pleasant tones, told the radio audience about the program and its sponsorship by the church.

The opening tenor solo, the beautiful, "Comfort ye," was sung by Garland Tickemyer, who had made the trip from Los Angeles for the broadcast. A few minutes later, the alto section of the chorus brought in the choral number, "And the glory of the Lord," and the tension was broken.

AS THE CONCERT CONTINUED, with split-second timing from chorus numbers to solos to orchestral interludes, there passed before the eyes of those in the audience a scene to be long-remembered. Members of the chorus, who sang their parts as one voice, sat on the edges of their seats, eyes moving rapidly from director to score, alert to every cue, singing with all their hearts the music they had learned to love so much. In contrast to the average oratorio performance, where the soloists are the important persons and the chorus simply supplies the background music, this chorus annually steals part of the show because of its brilliant and exacting performance.

The soloists, singing to the microphone rather than the audience, put full expression into their numbers. The bass clenched his fists and pumped his arm as if to help him do the difficult arias. The faces of the other soloists expressed the intensity of their own performances.

The professional orchestra did its part in a more matter-of-fact way. Back at the organ was Bethel Davis Knoche, who had broken one of the small bones in her right foot the week before, but played the entire concert with her foot in a cast which immobilized the ankle. She managed the pedals with one foot and used the cast only for the holds. The quality of her music was undimmed by the accident. At the piano was Norma Smith, who works throughout the year as office secretary to Franklyn Weddle, in addition to being a wife and mother.

THE HOUR AND A HALF PROGRAM moved rapidly to the observers in the studio, for there was always something new to watch. In the chorus one would discover a mother and daughter or a father and son sitting together. There were the old-timers too, who conducted or sang solos in years past. Because their loyalty is to the Messiah, they will take any part to make each performance the best possible.

The heart of this presentation is Franklyn Weddle, known throughout greater Kansas City and the church as the director of the church Radio and Music Departments. Franklyn does more than conduct. Like a magnet, he draws the maximum from those taking part. By the expressions on his face and by the signals from his hands, he brings the performers to the peak of expression, inspiring them to do better than they know. He is like a wound-up spring, not only conducting but also directing an hour and a half performance which must begin and end on time. When the last notes of the Pastoral Symphony, trademark of the Messiah broadcast, sound and the producer waves the group off the air, a great sigh of satisfaction sweeps the room. Another nationwide broadcast of the Messiah by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has ended.

The Ministry of Praise

By James F. Keir

PRaise IS ONE OF THE CHANNELS through which we express our appreciation of God's goodness to us. The Psalmist puts it nicely: "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."—Psalm 103: 1, 2.

After having many of the material blessings which come from God pointed out to us, we are reminded, "And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man . . . and in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things and obey not his commandments."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 5.

From a heavenly angel comes this urge to us: "Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountain of waters."—Revelation 14: 7.

To fear God is to hate evil (Proverbs 8: 13), and by our ministry of praise we glorify God. "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me; and to him that ordereth his conversation aright will I show the salvation of God."—Psalm 50: 23.

All can participate in this ministry of praise—the young, the old, those who can express themselves fluently, and those of faltering speech. Many people have been made glad as they have heard that grand old Christian gladiator F. G. Pitt sing, "God Is so Good to Me." Others have been moved to tears by the simple expression of faith of some child in a prayer service.

Praise is to Christian living what the starter is to the automobile. It is the spark that ignites the gas which generates the power of righteousness.

By singing our ministry of praise, we can tell the gospel story to our neighbors. We should open the windows and let this melody drift out to transform the monotony of some daily task into a happy experience which we can share with our neighbor.

I have found the glorious gospel
That was taught in former years,
With its gifts and blessings
All so full and free!

By our ministry of praise, we can witness for Christ. It develops our appreciation of truth and fires our zeal. Through it we strengthen the faith of others. It opens the doors of our hearts and invites Christ to come in. It fills our souls with joy. It stimulates and encourages the downcast and discouraged.

Lift up your heads, ye heirs of glory,
Cast aside your doubts and fears.
He who called you to his kingdom,
Soon will reign a thousand years.

Praise the Saviour, all ye nations,
Praise him, all ye hosts above;
Shout, with joyful acclamations,
His divine, victorious love.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

Question:

In Doctrine and Covenants 107:29, we read, "I appoint unto him that he [Hyrum Smith] may be a prophet, and a seer, and a revelator as well as my servant Joseph. . . ." In what sense was Hyrum made a prophet, seer, and revelator as well as Joseph? Did this make Hyrum Joseph's legal successor? Our Utah friends say that in Times and Seasons 5:683, Joseph stated he intended his brother to succeed him in the presidency. They further say that in 1841 Joseph ordained him to this position.

I quote three passages from Doctrine and Covenants:

1. Section 104:11, "The twelve . . . form a quorum 'equal in authority' to the three Presidents previously mentioned . . . and the Seventy form a quorum 'equal in authority' to the twelve."

2. Section 87:3, ". . . I say unto . . . Sidney Rigdon and F. G. Williams, their sins are forgiven them . . . and they are accounted 'equal with thee' [Joseph] in holding the keys of this last kingdom . . ."

3. Section 104:14, 15, "The Standing High Councils and . . . high council in Zion form a quorum 'equal in authority' to the quorum of the presidency."

What do these terms "equal in authority" mean?

Answer:

It is a rule of Scripture interpretation that the interpretation of any passage must be in conformity with other texts dealing with the same subject. Before answering the question directly, we note some of the "other texts" which show the basic law of the church concerning the presidential office and its prerogatives.

In a revelation directed to Oliver Cowdery, who had been closely associated with Joseph Smith in the founding of the church, and who was designated "to be the second elder of the church," the Lord clarified his duty in the following:

Behold, I say unto thee Oliver, that it shall be given unto thee that thou shalt be heard by the church in all things whatsoever thou shalt teach them by the Comforter, concerning the revelations and commandments which I have given.

But, behold, verily, verily I say unto thee, No man shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church excepting my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses; and thou shalt be obedient to the things which I shall give unto him, even as Aaron, to declare faithfully the commandments and revelations, with power and authority unto the church. And if thou art led at any time by the Comforter to speak or teach, or at all times, by way of commandment unto the church, thou mayest do it. But thou shalt not write by way of commandment, but by wisdom; and thou shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church, for I have given him the keys of the mysteries and the revelations, which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead.—Doctrine and Covenants 27:1, 2.

This instruction was given in consequence of some spiritual communication having been received through a stone by one of the brethren, Hiram Page, regarding the upbuilding of Zion and the order of the church, and which had created some confusion (Church History, Volume I, page 118). The Lord directed Oliver to go to Hiram Page and tell him he had been deceived by the adversary, explaining, "for behold, these things have not been appointed unto him; neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants."

Notwithstanding this plain instruction and warning, less than six months later, a woman began giving revelations and commandments to the church, and the Lord again spoke:

Ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me.

But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him, he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations and commandments; and this I give unto you that you may not be deceived.—Ibid., 43:1, 2.

The giving of revelations for law to the church belongs to a particular office, that of president (and consistently so) and not to any man who might choose to act in that capacity of his own accord. Other men holding the high priesthood might have the inherent qualification for giving such revelation by virtue of their priesthood, but the right to function in that capacity inheres only in the presiding office. The Lord has spoken further upon this point:

There is no difference in the priesthood, though there may be and is in the office in which the several orders may occupy and act.—Ibid., 129:7.

Different offices have different functions, and the law clearly specifies that each man must labor in his own appointed office: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed."—Ibid., 104:44.

The high priesthood is from heaven and is a gift of God, becoming inherent in the man who receives it. Office belongs to organization. Priesthood is the right or power to act; office determines the field in which to act and prescribes the scope and direction of the work being done. In priesthood there is equality, but in offices there are "differences of administration." We have a close parallel in a factory with its many electric motors which receive the power from the line running from the dynamo and put that power to work in various ways and in different degrees in the many machines operating there. Every motor draws power to its full capacity, some a hundred horsepower and others down to a fraction of one, in which all are equal, yet with their "diversities of operations," there are differences of administration, "each according to the requirements of its office."

The power and right of receiving revelation for the benefit of the people belong to priesthood, in the which all are equal, subject to various factors such as personal talent and qualification, standard of righteousness, and to the responsibilities of office, the requirements of the work, etc.

We believe it was in the light of this view which we have presented that the several utterances concerning equality among the men of the church were made. Hyrum Smith was equal with Joseph in the powers of his priesthood, but not the same in office or function. His appointed office was that of patriarch, and it was in that office that his priesthood was to function, including his power of revelation. In no way could this justify his stepping over into Joseph's office and functioning there in any capacity. The same may be said of all other high priests in their several offices. It applied to Joseph's counselors, Sidney Rigdon and F. G. Williams.

In like manner the leading quorums and councils of the church operating under one and the same priesthood; in which all are equal, have their own appointed functions and administrations.

Thus in the church, as in the astronomical heavens, in the realm of vegetation, in the animal creation, and in all of God's works, we discover the great principle of unity in diversity.

We see nothing in the statement relative to Hyrum Smith which even hints at his occupying as revelator in the same capacity as Joseph, neither of his succeeding Joseph in that office. Three years before, Joseph had, by the laying on of hands, designated his little son Joseph to be his successor, and neither Joseph nor the Lord could have forgotten that.

The "Messiah" Given at Des Moines, Iowa

The choir at Des Moines under the leadership of Wilbur R. Chandler presented its twelfth annual rendition of Handel's Messiah on Sunday evening, December 17. It was broadcast on WHO, Des Moines, on December 18, 11:00 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. The branch choir was assisted in this performance by small groups from the Chariton and Ames choirs. The soloists for the occasion were: Pauline Peterson, soprano; Shirley Mason, contralto; Robert Sparks, tenor; and Mitchell Juergens, bass. The accompaniment was played by Lois Walden, pianist, and Lucien Stark, organist.

The pastor, Herbert M. Scott, says that they sang to a packed house, as all of the six hundred seats were filled.

"Provision for the Flesh"

By Robert J. Miller

Question:

This matter was presented to the late President Joseph Smith in May, 1908: "We desire to move to Missouri, but it seems hard to know just what is best, and so I take the privilege of asking you to enlighten us on the matter."

Answer:

By President Joseph Smith, May 12, 1908: From the tenor of your letter, I would conclude that for the present at least it would be better for you to invest your money in enterprises nearer to you and with the nature of which you are acquainted. To venture into a new field with which you are unacquainted and with limited means would be hazardous. The language in the revelation in reference to gathering into Zion is to the effect that those who thus immigrate should have all things prepared before them in order that there might not be failure and distress consequent upon such failure. I would therefore advise that you do not venture in this respect to the West without first obtaining a knowledge personally with the region to which you are coming, and the facilities for business there. This is the advice of the spirit of Wisdom and Revelation.

But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh, to gratify the lusts thereof.—Romans 13: 14.

THIS IS A HARD SAYING to us just as many of the things which Jesus said were hard to the Pharisees and Sadducees of his day.

To put on Jesus Christ is to put on righteousness. To put on righteousness, we must take from our lives the evil, selfish ways thereof. Jesus and his disciples taught that the desires of the flesh profit us nothing and can lead to our destruction.

There are, of course, desires of the flesh which are necessary; and it is for this purpose in part that man is endowed with the senses of seeing, hearing, tasting, feeling, and smelling. But these can also be used to bring a measure of fleeting pleasure which is not necessary to sustenance or to the development of our minds. A little common sense is all the discernment we need to know what is needful and what is harmful.

To be industrious, to save and acquire wealth, is not bad in itself except as it may rob God. If we submerge our lives in this pursuit to the exclusion of our social and spiritual needs, it is evil. If we acquire money for the purpose of indulging our flesh—or to satisfy selfishness, vanity, pride, or lust for power—it is evil. But if it is done with an eye single to the glory of God, it will help to refine the soul, for it will bring comfort and provision to the needy, it will help the lame to walk, the blind to see, and the lost to find God.

"Making provision for the flesh to gratify its desires" is the same as making idols to worship in the place of God. The commandments are clear on that point—"Thou shalt have none other gods before me."

It is an inspiration to all mankind—irrespective of race, faith, or behavior—to see or know one who has surrendered himself to truth and consecrates his life and substance to the good of himself and his fellowmen. We are reminded of some of the words of Jesus: "For inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me," and "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends."

Interesting Personalities

Leroy Edward Harris

BESIDES HIS DUTIES as delegate to the 1950 Conference, Elder Leroy Harris showed his desire to be active between meetings, to serve the church he loves so well. Wearing his policeman's insignia, which is a part of his regular job in San Jose, California, where he lives, Brother Harris could be seen helping the traffic police in front of the Auditorium during rush hours. Later in the week he was to be found in the basement, giving much-needed aid in answering queries at the door of the Daily Herald Pressroom so that the workers inside the roomful of clicking typewriters would not be disturbed. When the information business grew too slack to keep him occupied, he volunteered his services in the administration booth and was gladly taken on.

Brother Harris was not always a member of the church he now loves so well. His father's parents, Nathanael and Rebecca, born in England, were both strict Jews. Brother Harris' father was born in California and brought up under conditions which prevailed among the Jews there in the early 1850's. Although his mother was a Methodist and never became a member of the Jewish faith, she honored her husband's religion, strictly keeping all the Jewish laws and customs.

Because young Leroy Edward was a Jew and refused to stay after school one time when he wanted to attend synagogue during the feast of the Passover, he was expelled from the public schools of San Jose. At this time he was only in the fifth grade and was still forced to comply with the California law about attending school somewhere, so his father reluctantly let him go four years to St. Joseph's College, a Roman Catholic school. Here the priests treated him charitably, but the boys took delight in beating him up daily because he was a Jew. Finally he taught them some respect for the feelings of others by defending himself with a tenpin. In this school he learned much about the Catholic Church, and decided that he wanted none of it. All this time he kept up his religious training at the local Jewish Sabbath school.

THEN CAME the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Insurrection. Now eighteen years of age, LeRoy Harris joined the army and suffered more persecution on account of his Jewish beliefs.

And then began a chain of circumstances which were to bring him into the membership of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. On July 5, 1900, he was married to a childhood friend, Olive Amy Bates, to whom he pays tribute as being "the finest, most loyal woman in the world." Her parents were members of this church, and she soon became one.

Two lovely girls, whom the happy parents named Ruth and Leah, came to bless this home. When Sister Harris wished to take the girls to church and have them blessed, he agreed and even went along to witness the ceremony. He was still a believer in the faith in which he had been brought up, but since his marriage and subsequent learning about the Latter Day Saints, he had a feeling that there was something wrong with his religion. At the blessing of his daughters, he began to think more and more seriously about this church. And when his girls were eight and asked permission for baptism, he consented and attended, still feeling that he was being shut out of their religious lives.

In the meantime, he had felt as if he were forced by some unseen power to read the New Testament, a book that loyal Jews were taught would lead them astray. Although his intention was to defend himself as a Jew, the more he read the more he was convinced that Jesus Christ was the Messiah the Jews were expecting. But baptism was out of the question as long as he was afraid of separating himself from "his people."

About a year passed, and on a day in January, his wife's physician informed him that she had double pneumonia and could not live the night through. It seemed to the husband that the entire world had fallen about him, and he did not know which way to turn. He had an idea that his trouble was some kind of judgment brought upon him for not attending services at the synagogue for years. Worn out by night after night of sleeplessness because of his wife's condition, he was about to lie down to rest when something seemed to say, "Why not pray?" Assured that it was the voice of God, he put his whole heart and soul into this prayer: "Lord God, if she is right and her church is teaching the true religion, give her this night's rest, and I will join the church to which she belongs and become a follower of Jesus Christ."

Noting that his wife had become quiet during the prayer, he lay down to rest for what he thought would be a few minutes. When he awoke he was badly frightened and reproached himself for having neglected her, because nearly eight hours had passed. But his wife was sleeping soundly, and when the doctor arrived a little later, his examination revealed nothing wrong. "You can get up now," he said. "There is nothing the matter with you. I do not understand it." Brother Harris did not tell his part in her recovery, but in about two weeks he was baptized.

TWO YEARS after his baptism he was called to officiate in the office of priest, and in 1939 he became an elder. His work took him to missions in various towns near San Jose. He was assistant pastor at San Jose Branch for about twenty years and pastor for seven years. He later became pastor at Salinas, California, and served in that capacity for four years, driving sixty miles each way on Sundays and whenever he was called for administration. In Brother Harris' enthusiasm to spread the gospel, he extended his services out of the local branch to get a copy of the Book of Mormon and a number of our tracts placed into one of the California state prisons.

All the days of his ministry he was self-supporting, following for his livelihood the printing trade, which he had learned in his youth by working in the mechanical department of the San Jose Daily Mercury and Portland Evening Telegram. He worked as foreman on the Vancouver Columbian, the Redwood City Gazette, and the San Mateo Times. Then in 1924 he and his wife established their own weekly paper, the Menlo Park Recorder, doing newspaper work and job printing, and operating continuously until 1943, when Sister Harris became an invalid. Since he could not find a nurse, Brother Harris was forced to sell his business to care for his wife until her death in 1949.

BECAUSE OF THE EXPERIENCES through which Brother Harris had passed, he found his sympathies quickened for others in need. He visited the sick and those in trouble or sorrow. He officiated at funerals whenever asked to do so, sometimes traveling as far as 400 miles.

For the past four years he has served as national chaplain of the Philippine-Pacific War Veterans, and in this capacity has written about 1,200 letters for the organization. His work as chaplain of the California Legion of Guardsmen has called for more letter writing, besides visits to various parts of the state. Recently he has been commissioned a lieutenant and regimental chaplain in the California Defense and Security Corps, a division of the State Guard. His work will include responsibility in the fields of spiritual and moral welfare, recreation, health, and other duties of the chaplain when the regiment is in camp or called out for duty.

Although his opportunities for schooling have been limited, he has studied all his life. After leaving the Army, he decided he needed more education and finished his high school course in night school, then took a course from the International Correspondence Schools. Finally he received the degrees of doctor of divinity and doctor of psychology from the College of Divine Metaphysics of Indianapolis, Indiana. Trying to study everything that would help him in the work at hand, after he became a member of the church, he thoroughly grounded himself in the fundamental principles of the gospel. Also believing that he should know firsthand what other religionists teach, he has spent a lot of time in the past six years studying Seventh-Day Adventism.

Of his hobbies he says that he does police work with juveniles besides taking motion pictures and slides for use in church work and for educational purposes. But ask him of his special interests, and Brother Harris will tell you, "Promoting the work of this great church, which is first at all times." With a strong faith and an outstanding testimony, he wants to serve, and is never happier than when doing so.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—"A Time for Greatness" was the theme of a Youths' Conference held in Omaha Central Church, December 30 and 31. The conference was sponsored by Omaha, and young people were invited from the four districts of the Missouri Valley Association; Northwest Iowa, Southwest Iowa, Southern Nebraska, and Northeast Nebraska.

E. J. Gleazer, Jr., President of Graceland College, was the guest speaker. Other conference leaders included Elder Charles D. Neff, pastor of Omaha and president of Northeast Nebraska district; Elder Clifford Cole, president of Northwest Iowa district; Dale Paterno, Northeast Nebraska young people's leader; Millard Gollehon, young people's supervisor, Omaha Branch.

One hundred seventy-five youths from the four districts registered for the conference. The theme was presented at the worship service December 30.

The lower auditorium of the church was filled to capacity for the banquet Saturday evening. President Gleazer was the principal speaker. His talk was preceded by toasts on the theme by Ray Zinser, Francis Harper, Bruce Riley, and Ruth Loving. A musical number was given by the young people from Council Bluffs.

Sunday morning during the church school hour, Elder Gleazer conducted a class on the theme of the conference. At the eleven o'clock service, he preached to a capacity crowd. The service was in charge of Elder Clifford Cole, assisted by Larry Rife, young people's director of Southern Nebraska district. The conference ended with a dedication service in the afternoon.—Reported by C. B. CONSTANCE.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.—Two young men were ordained to the ministry on December 10. Albert Barr was ordained priest by his father, Elder John Barr of Turner, Michigan, assisted by Elder George Hose. Vere Rosbury, who has held the office of deacon for several years, was ordained an elder by High Priest E. V. Osborn, assisted by Presiding Elder W. Guy Oatsvall.—Reported by PAUL SHAW.

VICTORIA MISSION, VANCOUVER ISLAND, B. C.—Officers for the coming year have been elected: Elder Henry Piedt, pastor; Bessie Bell, church school director; Jessie Baird, women's group leader; A. Mae Bell, music director; Betty Gurney, assistant music director; Lowell Piedt, young people's president; Ethel Piedt, young people's supervisor; Claude Huffman, publicity and book agent; Maurice Gurney, treasurer and bishop's agent. Services are held at 1110 Hillside Avenue.—Reported by BESSIE BELL.

WEIR, KANSAS.—District President Stephen Black presided at a business meeting September 14. Officers elected were: A. J. Jones, pastor; David Sheppard, assistant pastor; Seleno Owen, church school superintendent; Minnie A. Butler, solicitor and treasurer; Edna Barrett, secretary; Maud Mason, historian; Ellen Ross, Zion's League leader and music director; Evelyn Biolostski, leader of women.

A group of young people motored to Independence, Kansas, to attend the youth institute.

On November 13 a surprise birthday party was held for the pastor. He was presented with gifts, and a program was arranged for the occasion.

The Scammon and Weir Saints worshiped together in a beautiful Thanksgiving service, also at Christmas time. Fourteen Saints from Pittsburg, Scammon, and Medoc met with the Weir Saints with Elder Stephen Black and Apostle D. O. Chesworth as speakers. December 20 a special prayer service was held for the young people, after which they went Christmas caroling.

A housewarming was enjoyed at the home of Brother and Sister Jones on December 29. About 30 Saints were present.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA.—Many of the local townspeople and Saints of the area attended a baptismal service at Lake Carlton, December 17. Uniting with the church were James and Elizabeth Cole. Presiding Elder O. O. Dollins officiated, assisted by Appointee Bill J. Dollins. Brother Cole, a semi-invalid, was baptized despite the cold weather. This makes a total of twelve baptisms for the branch this year.

A great deal of improvement has been made on the church buildings in the past year.—Reported by MRS. CHARLES MONTANA.

WEST VIRGINIA DISTRICT.—An omission of the names of two ordained members of the priesthood occurred in the "Briefs" in the December 4 Herald. In the portion from the Parkersburg Branch, it should read: "Orval Cottrill, priest; Lawrence Cooper, teacher; William Cottrill, teacher, and Earl Smith, deacon."

PROTON, ONTARIO.—A priesthood institute was held at Owen Sound, Ontario, November 4 and 5, conducted by F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Education, and Bishop Joseph E. Baldwin. There was a good attendance from the Proton Branch.

On October 15, Howard Jack was called to the office of priest. The call was presented by Dr. W. P. Ellis, former branch president. The ordination took place November 19, under the hands of District President Gordon Farrow and Elders Alex Cadwell of Guelph and W. P. Ellis of Holstein. Elder Farrow was spokesman.

The branch has also received recent visits and addresses by George Furnace of Owen Sound, John Walker and Everard Kennedy, both of Guelph.

A concert and Christmas tree program was held at the church by the women's department on December 8. Treats were distributed to the children and homemade candy was served to all.—Reported by DELL BLACK.

KENNETT, MISSOURI.—On December 24, Sgt. Bob L. Skinner of Biloxi, Mississippi, was baptized by the pastor, Elder C. A. Phillips.

Mr. and Mrs. Rolland Perkins of Poplar Bluff were baptized December 31 by Elder C. W. Germon, also of Poplar Bluff. The group of Saints from Poplar Bluff were all present.—Reported by SUE BRANCHE.

WALTHILL, NEBRASKA.—At the annual business meeting held September 11, district officers Charles Neff, Albert Livingston, and E. Link were present. The following officers were elected: Elder Lester Hunt, pastor; Elder George Taylor, treasurer; Bessie Taylor, branch secretary; Hazel Hunt, church school director; Beulah Maryott, women's leader; Mazie Wingett, book steward; and Russell Maryott, youth leader and music director.

In the report by the secretary, there was a gain of twenty-one baptisms during the year and one transfer, also a steady increase in attendance of all meetings; eight children were blessed during the year.

Russell Maryott was ordained an elder, and John Schlotman was ordained to the office of priest September 24.

The women's department held their annual bazaar and chicken supper on October 18.

A Thanksgiving Day worship service was held.

Fellowship dinners are held the second Thursday of each month at the County 4-H Building. December meeting was a Christmas party with a program and carol singing after dinner was served.

The first week of December, the church was given an interior decoration that added to the Christmas season. The church school Christmas program was attended by a large crowd, and treats were given. After the program, the pastor and wife were presented with a table full of gifts from all the group.

Christmas Eve, the choir rendered the musical program, "O Holy Night." This was under the direction of Russell Maryott.

Miss Madonna Hunt was home from Graceland for the holidays.—Reported by HAZEL HUNT.

FARWELL, MICHIGAN.—The new church home is located on Highway No. 10, just four miles west of Clare. Church school, morning preaching, and evening services are held on Sunday, as well as the midweek fellowship services on Wednesday evening.

Patriarch Edward R. Carter of Lansing completed a ten-day series of visits and lectures in the homes of the Saints and friends, which resulted in four adults and one boy being initiated into the kingdom. The evening preaching services and all Sunday services were well attended.

Under the leadership of the pastor, Elder Albert Seymour, attendance is increasing and new interest is being shown in the branch.—Reported by BYRON L. MAYNARD.

ORLANDO, FLORIDA.—The mission enjoyed a Christmas service, December 24, when Judith Audentia Moran, daughter of James H. and Audentia Fredrick Moran, was blessed by her great-grandfather, High Priest B. M. Anderson of Omaha, Nebraska, and her great-great uncle, President Israel A. Smith. Brother Paul Kaiser was ordained to the office of deacon by President Smith and Elder William R. Martin, pastor of the group. The charge of the priesthood was given by Elder H. P. Kelley.

President Smith delivered the Christmas message. He was visiting his brother-in-law and sister, B. M. and Audentia Smith Anderson who are wintering in Orlando in the homes of their two daughters, Doris A. Fredrick and Bertha A. Hulmes.

December 21 a musical program with a dramatic narration by Elder Kelley was presented. Sister Doris A. Fredrick directed the music which featured group singing of carols and hymns, and solos by Sister Janet F. Costello, Evelyn Wise, and Doris A. Fredrick. Accompanists were Sister Bertha A. Hulmes and Brother H. G. Fredrick.

A Christmas party was held December 23 for the branch. Activities included a three-hour boat ride on a chain of several lakes as guests of Brother and Sister Harry J. Wise, and a picnic supper in the home of Fletcher Crane in Mt. Dora, Florida.—Reported by BETTYE FREDRICK KUHNERT.

IOLA, KANSAS.—The group is still meeting with the mission in Chanute. The following officers have been elected for the coming year: Elder A. C. Barker, pastor; Roy Hill, assistant pastor; Robert Vohs, church school superintendent; Zerna Carlson, church school secretary; Elizabeth Bain, pianist; Roy Hill, Mildred Earnest, Robert Vohs, teachers.

Elder Stephen Black, district president, met with both groups in Chanute for a business meeting on November 16.

In the women's department, the following officers were elected: Mrs. W. C. Moore, leader; Margarete Trammell, secretary and treasurer; Arbutus Thomas, cradle roll; Mrs. R. C. Walton, teacher; Mrs. Roy Hill, friendly visitor for Chanute; Mrs. Lillian Matney, friendly visitor for Iola. Book of Mormon Studies by Thelona D. Stevens has been the course. November 28 the following officers met with them in the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Starkey in Iola: Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Elder Lee Quick of Mapleton, Kansas, and Elder Donald Kyser of Miami, Oklahoma, Mrs. Arthur Dennis and Mrs. R. L. Meek of Mapleton, Kansas. Apostle Chesworth spoke to the class on "Witnessing for Christ by Personal Testimony."

Apostle Chesworth met with both groups in the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Walton in Iola on December 18.—Reported by LILLIAN MATNEY.

JACKSON, MICHIGAN.—District President J. Phillips and his counselors Alva Dexter and Eddie Premo attended a special service Sunday December 10.

Two young men were ordained. They were escorted to the front by the pastor, Brother Robert Smith. Brother Ira Blosser was ordained to the office of teacher, and Brother Charles Bobbett was ordained to the office of priest. High Priest Alva Dexter and Elder Eddie Premo officiated.

Tommy William Bobbett was blessed by Elders Phillips and Dexter.

The Christmas program was held December 22. Each class presented a short program and a party followed.—Reported by CHARLES BOBBETT.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.—The annual business meeting was held September 13, and the following officers were elected: Elder Joseph L. Berry, pastor; F. P. Hall and Floyd Jett, counselors; Mrs. Marjorie Koehler, secretary; Mrs. Mary Hall, church school superintendent; Mrs. Jane Wight and Charles Eastham, leaders of young people; Miss Emma Jackson, director of music; Mrs. Nettie Sheppard, director of women; Ernest Hegwood, adult supervisor; Mildred Bonnet Holder, children's supervisor; Mildred Evva Gatrost, book steward and librarian; James Hanson, Boy Scout leader.

During the month of August, the congregation was divided to form a mission on the north side of the city. The mission is meeting in the east wing of the Municipal Auditorium. Meetings are supervised by Floyd Jett and G. F. Galbraith, and much progress is being made.

The women, under the leadership of Mrs. Nettie Sheppard are working to defray expenses both for the branch and district. The last project was a bazaar held December 9, which netted $125. This money is to be applied as payment on the reunion grounds. During the past year, many improvements have been made on our church building. Last year the branch was able to raise its budget of $3,600, the total income of the branch being $4,353.

The branch is fortunate in having the Educational Building as a permanent meeting place for social functions. This building has recently been erected and is well equipped with a modern kitchen. It is used for church school classes on Sunday.

Missionary John G. Wight and family are living in the city. They are assisting in branch work. Brother Wight has preached on several occasions at the branch and the mission.

Brother Floyd Jett has been conducting a Book of Mormon class for the past six months at the home of Brother and Sister Ernest Hegwood. The class is well attended and has proved of interest to nonmembers.—Reported by MRS. RUTH HARP.

Another World

By Gladys Gould

YOU HURRY ALONG the streets on cold blustery days until a shop window especially attractive stops you short. This one should, with its stacks of new books in gay jackets—books standing on end, displaying appealing titles by favorite authors, books left open to reveal choice paragraphs and illustrations. If your mind is akin to mine, it immediately offers reasonable excuses for loitering: books make such delightful gifts, and for long winter evenings by the fireside, they provide the company of talented men or women whose ideas give zest to living. Quickly convinced, you slip through the door, and as your hand reaches for Louis Bromfield's Out of the Land, you enter another world.

You will reach for this latest book of Bromfield's if you have already enjoyed Malabar Farm in Pleasant Valley, the farm on which the "animals all think they are people," so well cared for are they, and the owner is proud of being considered "a little 'teched,' for it means that he loves his land, his animals, and his trees and understands them all."

Bromfield deals with the newest methods of recreating soils to produce appetizing food crammed with vitamins and nutriment to replace the multiple pills and capsules now crowding into our diet, and his farm in Ohio demonstrates his theories to the satisfaction of many investigators.

Out of the Land (Harper and Brothers, Publishers) begins this way:

Long ago, so long that no even faintly accurate estimate of the time can be made by men, something happened in the vastness of the universe which has never been explained and which has never been understood. . . .

And on the last page is this paragraph:

A lot of things have changed on the farm of today, but the essence of the farm and the open country remains the same. The freedom is unchanged, and the sense of security, and independence, and the good rich food; and the beauties that rise for the seeing eye on every side and, above all, that satisfaction as great as that of Leonardo or Shakespeare or any other creative artist in having made something great and beautiful out of nothing.

This is a book to enthuse farm folks, a book to offer balm to town-folks who cherish a homesickness for the farm of their youth.

IF YOU ARE A MOTHER who yearns to cuddle your baby when it cries, to allow it to regulate its own time and manner of eating and sleeping according to its nature, you now "have the foremost experts in the country to back you up," says Dorothy Baruch in her book, Parents Can Be People (D. Appleton-Century Company). This book emphasizes the value of happiness, the good results that follow when peace and contentment of each member of the family is cherished. It pictures the painful and tragic results that grow out of harbored resentments, even tiny resentments of small babies who are neglected or rigidly disciplined. In the chapter, "Who Is Boss?" parents who worry about giving in to their babies are reassured by these paragraphs:

In actuality, the more we can let a child lead when he is little, the more do we become the leaders as he grows. His desire to imitate and please and be like us increases as he loves and admires us; not as he resents and hates. Real leadership evolves out of friendliness and love and understanding. We lead in lovingness rather than in strife. . . .

The baby who cries may not be hungry or in pain or sick—maybe he is just lonely, needs some loving, the closeness of touch of someone who makes him feel love. He will go out into the world to face life some day strengthened by the sureness that comes from long knowledge of being loved.

A similar book is called Children Are People by Emily Post (Funk and Wagnall). It suggests that if children were treated with the same courtesy and respect for their feelings and ideas as are guests, they might naturally display quite continuously the "company manners" we crave for them. Many challenging ideas are offered.

These two books will interest any person who loves children, and either of them attractively wrapped in gift paper, and beribboned, might do missionary work in the home where such is needed.

SOMETHING FASCINATING in poetry is found in Kahlil Gibran's books translated from the Arabic. A sample of his rhythm and thinking is seen in the following quotations from the book, The Garden of the Prophet (Alfred A. Knopf Company):

Oftentimes we call life bitter names, but only when we ourselves are bitter and dark. And we deem her empty and unprofitable, but only when the soul goes wandering in desolate places, and the heart is drunken with over-mindfulness of self

Is it not that which you have never striven to reach, into whose heart you have never desired to enter, that you deem ugliness?

Call nothing ugly, my friend, save the fear of a soul in the presence of its own memories.

And from his book entitled Jesus this one quotation:

My kingdom is not of the earth. My kingdom shall be where two or three of you shall meet in love, and in wonder at the loveliness of life, and in good cheer, and in remembrance of me.

For singing young people a fine possession all their own is the new Hymnal for Youth. They are responsible for many devotionals, and here is material to choose from. It includes many of the ever-living hymns, such as "Hail to the Brightness of Zion's Glad Morning," "The Spirit of God," and "Admonition," along with choice songs not in Saints' Hymnal; among them, "Still, Still With Thee," "Sunset and Evening Star," "Jacob's Ladder," and some spirituals.

In addition, the book gives orders of worship, including responsive readings, Scripture readings, chants and responses, some poems of Roy A. Cheville, and instrumental music.

This book will stimulate the gift of song, the spirit of worship.

THE SMALL BOOK, When Jesus Was a Carpenter, by Muriel Clark (Abingdon Press) is a child's story with power to touch the hearts of all ages, a book to enjoy on a "family night" of good fellowship. While it is the story of a family living near Nazareth whose members in turn visit the Carpenter Shop and come away with changed attitudes, their experiences give to us a sense of the Master's close companionship.

The child Rachel discovers on her first visit that the Carpenter is her friend. Later, after a day of sulky discontent at home, she receives with surprised contrition a message from the Shop: "If you loved me, you would rejoice. You ought always to be rejoicing—those of you who are my friends."

Another time when Rachel protests, "But I can't love people I hate," she is met with the firm reply of the Carpenter:

"If you wish to be my friend, you will do it." And Rachel learns the secret.

Esther receives a satisfying answer to her inquiry: "Can I be your friend while I am angry with God for taking my father away?"

Aunt Sarah, aged and afflicted, can remark after one visit from the Carpenter:

"I think I shall never be lonely any more."

Mark, while harboring lofty condemnation of another's weakness, discovers in the Carpenter Shop that we do not ourselves feel forgiven (even though we have been) until we forgive.

The father is inclined to scoff at the kingship of this Carpenter, the friend of his household, until he feels an unspoken compulsion to change his ways and acknowledges it as the command of a King.

Picked From Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

January magazines contain material covering many fields, including world problems and ways to meet the rising cost of living. They contain much information and inspiration with which to start the new year.

"We all Go 'Round in Cycles," McCall's Magazine, is a fitting subject for the beginning of a new cycle of time. It recounts a scientific experiment which should help all who read it to have better control of their emotional ups and downs.

McCall's contains two articles on ways to cut the high cost of eating and gives some delicious recipes.

For a fresh realization of the wonderful spirit of man, everyone should read "Riches at Your Fingertips," American Magazine. It is a story by a blind man of his family. He and his wife are blind, but their three children have normal vision. He has a wonderful philosophy that will give readers new courage.

"Diagnosis: Cancer—Recovery: Probable," Ladies' Home Journal, is a woman's own story of her fight with cancer. It was written with the hope that it might bring encouragement to others.

"The Way You Walk," Ladies' Home Journal, is an article that nearly every woman needs to read and heed.

Everyone has heard of antihistamines and probably used them. "Do Antihistamines Really Work?"

The mother voices the feeling of all by saying: "When we have once known the friendship of Jesus, it would be terrible to live without it."

The time you spend in a bookshop may enrich many lives, change attitudes, build character, and open doors into new worlds.

Woman's Home Companion, is a well-known science writer's answer to a controversial question.

"That Dangerous Walk to School," Woman's Home Companion, tells how some cities have solved the school-crossing problem by the use of women guards.

"If Your Child Faces Surgery," Parents' Magazine, is an important article, for most children encounter at least a tonsillectomy, and the author, a doctor, gives suggestions that will help children take a hospital experience in stride.

"How to Get a Scholarship," Parents' Magazine, will be of interest to parents of young people, for it tells what scholarships are available and when and how to apply for one.

Particularly appropriate for these times, and containing excellent food for thought, is "Homily for a Troubled Time," Woman's Day. It has particular value for anyone who thinks that seclusion or isolation from the world is the answer to present fears and problems.

Good Housekeeping this month contains a "Comprehensive Home Medical Chart" which should prove helpful in any home.

"Loving Our Neighbors as Ourselves," National Parent-Teacher, outlines a program of action to kindle the flame that will warm a cold world with man's good will toward man.

FACING APPARENT UNCERTAINTY in the confusion of national emergency and world crisis, a group of young people in Zion selected as a theme for a Yuletide conference, "Commit thy way unto the Lord." Participating in the discussions, services, and recreation were young men and women interested in their place in the kingdom, many of whom may soon become a part of the armed forces of this nation.

Concern that their decisions be right was evident in the questions of faith and trust may shake their heads over these statements. Psychiatrists may term such an attitude a defense mechanism, an attention-gaining device; nevertheless there remains a definite spiritual need.

WHEN THE PSALMIST DAVID sang, "Commit thy way to the Lord; trust also in him," he was not asking for a blind loyalty. He brought a promise as well as a request. The conclusion of that verse, "and he shall bring it to pass," could give be war. They must find that no man can govern God's creation—only God can do this. That Zion shall be a theo-democracy is no new idea to our church people. Confidence in the leader then is to be expected.

One young man stated, "If God has a work for me to do on earth, then I'll come out of this o. k. If I don't come back, then the sensible thing for me to do is to try to be ready for service anywhere."

YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE CHURCH are blessed with the promise of eternal life. Fear and despair are conquered by a practical application of faith in the eternal purposes of God. At the conference they discussed the topic, "Just how far can we go in placing ourselves in God's hands?" In the world situation today, a person of necessity must place himself largely in the hands of God, for those who place faith in people find these people failing, and those who pathetically believe only in themselves find how limited life is when they cannot understand themselves and have nothing to put their trust in.

Elder John Sheehy summed up the forum discussion by saying that young people who must go to war should not pray, "Lord, don't let me be shot," or "Please, God, let my aim be right." Instead they should pray for the conviction that their cause is just, that the principles for which they stand are worth the effort. He went further to explain that despite corrupt political conditions the church could function in a democracy and could not in a communistically controlled country. Therefore the prayer would be for the conviction that the church was worth the effort of fighting to preserve the nation.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE CONFERENCE was held New Year's Eve. On the threshold of possible world disaster, the young people made resolves that, when carried out, should strengthen the program of the church as well as the individ-that arose in the forum. "Is God Concerned?" was one of the topics for discussion. A young man from England who had known the terrors of war during the German blitzes stimulated the discussion by asking how faith could be explained to one who knew very little about God or any church and had just had his home bombed and his family killed. A practical faith seems to be the need for so many people whose rose-colored worlds are tottering and who find themselves mixed up in world affairs whether they like it or not.

"Faith is one of the principles of the gospel—you've got to have faith," a good sister remarked to a young man who questioned. That answer did not give the young man faith, nor did it help him develop a foundation upon which to build. He needed to understand the practical application of trust in God. His attitude was "I don't care about anything much. I don't feel anything. Nothing really matters. I won't ever get anything out of life if every ten years I go out to shoot or be shot. I can't feel good about living." Those who experience the security solace to those who fear and despair.

Some might even say such a philosophy is foolish, that it is adolescent to believe in something that one cannot understand. Yet a drowning man does not question the safety of a lifeboat if he can reach it. If not believing that God is concerned creates spiritual retrogression, and trusting that he knows, loves, and understands makes a personality finer and offers strength for weakness, then logic would require faith.

In a series of meetings, a Seventy once concluded that as long as men attempt to be supreme rulers of a world created by God there would Barbara Peavy, new editor of "Stepping Stones," is twenty years old and a native of Mobile, Alabama. After graduation from Graceland, she worked in Oregon, Iowa, and Alabama, then decided to make Independence her home. Here she attends Walnut Park Church and serves as vice-president of the Stake-wide Zion's League Cabinet. She likes living in "the uals who made them. One fellow, not usually serious in nature, testified of the blessing he had received at Graceland and how many of the students there exemplified the life of Christ to him. He had grown up in Zion, among many church young people, yet his faith was strengthened in the experience of growing in understanding together with others his age from various areas whose problems were so similar to his.

God has not asked that men be puppets. He would not deny them their free agency, and yet they often deny themselves happiness by their inability to trust in the omnipotent knowledge of God.

In this era of confused philosophies, a simple faith might seem inadequate. Yet Jesus, when faced with his most crucial decision—the salvation of mankind—made his will the will of his Father. Great men become great because of their ability to comprehend even the simplest idea, upon which great thoughts are built. Trust in God is no longer a passive part of religion. It is the faith of men in God that brought forth the church again to the earth. It is the faith of men who today will keep the church alive.

It is a comforting thought to “only believe and everything will be fine,” but faith goes farther than that. To “Commit thy way unto the Lord” is to give God the go-ahead in using people for kingdom-building. And as God uses those who “trust also in him,” the promise of the kingdom is fulfilled for “he shall bring it to pass.”

Over-all Picture

God sees us as we are altogether; not in separate feelings or actions, as our fellow men see us. We are always thinking better or worse of each other than we deserve, because we only hear and see separate words or actions.

—George Eliot.

Garment of Life

AN OLD NEGRO PREACHER, uneducated but highly respected because of his zeal and sincerity in expressing some of the truths of life, was asked one Saturday afternoon what he was going to preach about on the morrow. He replied, “I’ve got a good subject. I’ve goin’ to preach on de ‘Garment of Life.’” He was quick to see that the subject puzzled his inquirer so he explained. “It’s dis way. Lots of people don’t know how to take life, de garments fit ‘em too tight, an’ dey can’t push der troubles out of the way, and enjoy life and live right. You gotta take life like a loose garment and don’t let it bind you nowhere a-tall. If yer garment do bind you, cut de ropes and unhand yo’self, so you can have yo’self light in hand.”

If we think about it we will see that the old preacher was perfectly right. Life should be worn like a loose garment. It must not confine us until it hurts. When we see folks wearing lines of worry and anxiety on their faces, we know they are wearing the garment of life too tight. They are so bound that life does not flow freely. So bounded on the north, south, east, and west by their own problems that they cannot see new visions nor enjoy life’s blessings. The great day comes when the mirrors of their minds turn more and more to windows, and they unloose themselves in the service of others.

Life binds most of us tightly with our prejudices and fears. We do not dare to think for ourselves. We squirm in life’s tight garments for fear of “hurting” or “giving offense” by speaking our minds because of others’ opinions. The curse of fear is that it is taken too seriously. Fear, when put in its proper place, cannot render useless our ability to speak out fairly and honestly against untruths and injustice.

I’m thinking of a man who wears life wrapped so tightly that his feelings have been stunted. He is afraid to show friendliness and love. He is afraid to act and speak in accordance with what he knows to be right and fair and true. Happy will be the day for him when he explodes himself—lets himself go, punctures his emotional barrels, unlooses his garment of life.

MANY PEOPLE are wrapped tightly, tied hand and foot by negative attitudes. They have never acquired the habit of gathering up the threads of their cherished dreams and weaving something else out of them. To them life is drab, disheartening, a dead-end street. To be sure, there are situations in life that may properly be called hopeless, but even in such situations one can be a real person, loosening his life’s garment by displaying an undefeated spirit in desperate circumstances. Mankind is served by people who think positive thoughts, who do not “crack up” when they are expected to. We may be led into negative attitudes by many roads, but there is only one road out—faith. Confidence in life, assurance that beyond a doubt it is worth while, and belief in its possibilities means the dawning of a glorious day for those who are wearing their garment of life too tightly.

All of us are bound at sometime or another by possessiveness, prudishness, self-love, remorse, guilt, fatigue, frustration, and anger. But the ability to loosen ourselves from these things is the difference between a stunted, lazy, miserable existence and a life that flows freely, grows, and outgrows.

It was Balzac who said, "Life is a garment; when it is dirty, we must be clean enough to brush it; when it is ragged, we must be industrious enough to repair it; and when another would try to steal it from us, we must have the decency and courage to protect it."

Yet perhaps that humble Negro preacher said it even better. "You gotta take life like a loose garment and don't let hit bind you nowhere a-tall. If yer garment do bind you, cut de ropes and unhand yo'self—so you can have yo'self light in hand."

all the members to complete the organization as it is supported by the foundation of divinely-called ministers with Christ. These ministers were given to the church to labor with Christ until "all come in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Jesus intended for them to stay in the church.

Power is expressed in many ways. In the church of Jesus Christ, the power of the gospel was revealed in spiritual gifts so that the members of his church might see clearly their duties and opportunities. They were manifestations of power, given by God on the occasion when they were most needed and the faith of the people permitted.

There were also basic principles of doctrine in Christ's church—the same that had existed in the church from the very beginning—faith, repentance, baptism in water by immersion for the remission of sins, baptism of the Spirit by the laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment. In his second general epistle, John states that there is no other way to the household of God.

THIS IS THE CHURCH that Jesus built. This is the faith that was once delivered to the saints. This is the faith of our fathers.

This faith was lost to the world during the great apostasy of the church, predicted by the Scriptures and fulfilled by history.

This faith, this gospel of the kingdom, has been returned to the earth with "the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," as Peter prophesied in Acts.

John said in his Book of Revelation, "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." The fact that John saw an angel bringing back to the earth the everlasting gospel that was preached in the beginning is evidence enough that there was an apostasy. If the gospel had not been taken from the earth, there would have been nothing to return.

The church of Jesus Christ exists upon the earth today with all of the gifts, blessings, and officers necessary "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."

It is identical with the church that Jesus built which followed the pattern of the faith from the beginning.

though we had never wasted a single second. Each of us receives the same amount of time during the year that lies ahead; neither wealth nor rank nor genius will be rewarded with one hour more than that which is placed at our disposal.

Measured by science the year 1951 will be no longer than the year which preceded it. It will contain the same seasons; the changes of the moon will be essentially the same. But measured in terms of effect in our lives the year which now dawns holds limitless opportunities for service and close identification with the divine plan of God. With the new year before us we can purchase a year's advancement of the cause for which Christ died—a year's service to God—a year's evolution of our souls toward the levels to which he calls us. Let us endeavor to spend our time always with a view to eternal purposes.

Concerning "Messiah" Recordings

ON THE LAST PAGE in this issue of the Herald will be found an announcement of a close-out sale of record album Number 1 of the Messiah as sung by the Independence Messiah Choir. When this album was first offered for sale early in 1950, it was the first part of our plan to make the entire Messiah available on what was then considered standard 78 r.p.m. records. The plan was to have issued eventually three albums, each containing three double-sided records, the total cost to be \$22.50 plus 50c federal excise tax on each album or a total of \$24.00. Since issuing the first album, however, the new 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ r.p.m. long-playing records have become so popular that all of the major recording companies have entirely discontinued manufacturing this speed record for all classical and religious music. The reasons for this change are that the long-playing records offer better quality recordings and are only about one-third as expensive. Therefore, before Herald House, the distributor of Stone Church Recordings, entered into negotiations for the manufacture of album Number 2 of the Messiah set, the entire matter was canvassed with the Music and Radio Department of the Church; and after a careful study, it was decided not to continue with the manufacture of the 78 r.p.m. set and instead make the entire Messiah available on the 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ r.p.m. long-playing nonbreakable records. In this way, it is possible to offer the entire oratorio, as presented by the Independence Messiah Choir, in one album containing two double-sided twelve-inch long-playing records for about one third the total cost of the 78 r.p.m. The records for this album are being manufactured by RCA.

This new album and its price will be announced in the Herald within the next two or three weeks. In the meantime, we are offering our present stock of album Number 1 of the 78 r.p.m. records for $3.75 plus 33c federal excise tax or a total of $4.08. The original price was $7.50 plus 50c tax.

When the new album is ready for sale, we shall allow credit of $3.75 to all who have already purchased this Number 1 album if they wish to purchase the new complete long-playing album. By this plan even those who have previously obtained the Number 1 album, can get the entire recording of the Messiah for less than one half of the price originally contemplated in the old style recordings.

If further information is desired, please write us.

The home that leaves the whole burden of religious education upon the church, and does nothing to strengthen the influence of the church, will have disappointing results in the development of the child. Unless the parents care about the church, the child will not.

It is not enough to "send" a child to church school. Parents should go with him. Families should sit together at church services. If the church is a vital force in the spiritual life of the parents, it will have the same importance for the child, in general.

Righteousness will not be attained in any life, in the home or out of it, by letting nature take its own course. The attainment of a high standard of spiritual, cultural, and social life requires intelligent direction and care. If our members in their homes will work under the direction of the church, we can make our homes Zion in character, fit for the kingdom of God. L. J. L.

INTRODUCING

E. GLADYS GOULD, Independence, Missouri (page 18), was born at Battle Lake, Minnesota, where she received her high school education. After a summer term at Minnesota State Normal in Moorhead, she taught school for seven years, then took a secretarial course at Graceland College. In 1928 she was graduated from the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences. Since 1921 she has been a stenographer in church offices, working in the church architect's office, the local bishop's office, the social service bureau, the presiding bishopric's office, and the office of the First Presidency. She has served in this last position since 1942. She is a teacher in the Gudgeon Park church school and also secretary of that congregation.

WILLIAM BRESHEARS, Pensacola, Florida (page 8), was born in Springfield, Missouri, in 1906 and was baptized in Bremerton, Washington, in 1941. He was graduated from Springfield High School in 1924 and attended Drury College of Springfield and the Southwest Missouri Baptist College in Bolivar, Missouri. In high school he went in for athletics and was the only three-letter man in a school of 1,800 students. For several years he was employed by the Frisco Railway as a machinist. During the war he went to the Puget Sound Navy Yard and served there as a journeyman machinist trainee instructor. Here also he came in contact with the gospel.

Reared a Baptist, he became a church school teacher, youth leader, deacon, and finally an ordained minister. He served as pastor of five small Baptist churches on a part-time basis. He learned the gospel while working with Elder A. W. Lundeen, who was his supervisor at the navy yard.

He was married to Frances Evelyn Curtis in 1937. They have three children: Jo Ann, Donald, and Robert Lewis. Brother Breshears was ordained a priest in 1942, an elder in 1943, and a high priest in 1947. His first General Conference appointment in 1947 was to the Gulf States District where he is now serving as district president.

WILLIAM McMURRAY, Toronto, Ontario (page 9), like Brother Breshears, is a recent convert. He married a Latter Day Saint girl, Norine Norris, in 1946. Brother McMurray was baptized the following year, ordained a priest in 1948, and an elder in 1950. The McMurrays have two children: Grant, 3 1/2, years and Donna, 6 months. Brother McMurray served in the Canadian Army in Europe and later became advertising manager of a trade publication. He was appointed to the mission field last General Conference.

* WHAT FIRST?

You have heard of the man who jumped into a political situation "with both feet." You have seen the diver going into the water "head first." You have heard of the fighter who "led with his chin," only to be knocked out.

With what organ should a person enter the gospel? The heart, indubitably. The gospel is like any other love affair (see Matthew 22: 37-39). If one puts his heart into it, everything else will come along. If one doesn't put his heart into it, nothing else will do any good.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence," said an ancient wise man, "for out of it are the issues of life."—Proverbs 4: 23.

* BABY JESUS

Dana, who has now reached the mature age of two years and some odd months, took us for a ride to see the Christmas lights on the Plaza. Of course, he brought his parents and sister along too. But he was in charge of the tour. The Plaza was beautiful, as always at this time of year. Rudolph-the-Red-Nosed-Reindeer had been taken away because vandals had damaged him so badly. But on the way home we visited a church where there was a very beautiful Nativity scene for the passing citizens to enjoy.

There is a small Nativity setting at Dana's home, but when he saw this one, he was so impressed he simply wanted to walk up and possess it. He was carried away, finally, in the arms of his father, crying and protesting, "I want the Baby Jesus!" And he would not be consoled.

Let that soak into your mind for a while. Here is a child who, at this early age, loves the Lord Jesus. It might be a better world if more children were taught to do so.

* CARE OF THE TEMPLE

Gumchewers, like match-scratchers, manage to deface every public building, no matter how sacred. If you accidentally put your hand under the edge of a seat in church, your fingers are likely to encounter repulsive little lumps of dried gum. We ought to do better, much better.

In answer to the P.S. note of November 13 about gum stuck to the woodwork of Kirtland Temple, Brother W. E. Williams, the pastor, makes the following explanation:

"To the best of my knowledge, lack of care for the Temple has not entered into the picture of our building program at all. I believe the Kirtland people are to be commended for their concern regarding the care of the Temple. They have spent much time down through the years in cleaning and caring for the building. The reason that the branch is planning for its own building is so that the General Church can have full use of the Temple for special functions and activities, like the one in October."

It would be unfair to leave the impression that the good people of Kirtland are responsible for the presence of the gum. There are many visitors who might have put it there, thus adding to the work of the local congregation. And thanks to Brother Williams for the correction concerning the purpose in planning a house of worship for the Kirtland congregation.

PERHAPS NO MAN had a longer nor more intimate official acquaintance with the late President Frederick M. Smith than "O. W." They were both born in Plano, Illinois, but met in Salt Lake City, Utah. President Smith lived there doing literary research work in 1905 and was assisted by Oscar. Six years later President Smith needed a secretary and prevailed upon Brother Newton to move to Independence to help him.

"Those were rough days in Utah Mormonism when official giants slugged it out in the press," explained "O. W." "C. W. Penrose, editor of the Deseret News, and B. H. Roberts, church historian, were wielding vigorous pens to meet the attacks of Frank Cannon and his American Party friends. President Smith joined in to enliven the debate." Oscar was employed as bookkeeper and secretary to the superintendent of the Postal Telegraph branch office in the daytime and helped prepare copy at night.

Two years after he became secretary to the First Presidency, he succeeded R. M. Elvin as secretary to the High Council and has taken most of its minutes since then. In 1930 when Israel A. Smith was made church secretary, Oscar became assistant secretary. He held this post until Brother Smith went into the Presidency in 1940; then he became secretary, continuing in this office until he resigned in 1948. Oscar has a practical knowledge of a lot of church history. He remembers when so-and-so did such-and-such. Because his desk is nearest the door of the First Presidency's office, no matter if the visitor is a new member of the church, a superannuated missionary, or a government official, Oscar is likely to have the first and last word.

News and Notes

PRIESTHOOD CLASSES

Members of the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthood of the Center Stake met January 15 for the opening session in the second series of classes for this year. At this initial meeting, two hundred members of the Aaronic and 150 of the Melchisedec were present.

The study course of the Aaronic priesthood is "Teaching in the Home" prepared by Harley A. Morris. This course offers fundamentals in ministry to homes during priesthood visits.

Alternate periods of study designed so that actual practice may be had is furnished in the course for elders. Demonstrations of the different ordinances are given, and the men learn the technique in administration, ordination, baptism, etc. The other period is devoted to a class by the Presiding Bishopric using "Stewardship Opportunities and Responsibilities," by Bishop L. Wayne Updike.

MISSION ESTABLISHED

Approximately 150 members who reside on the outskirts of the city limits east of Independence compose the new Walnut Park Mission. The group and the Walnut Park congregation have approved the purchase of two large lots for the purpose of erecting a building. Those in the group are from several congregations in Independence, but reside in this area.

INSTITUTE HELD

During the week of January 7 through 14 a Book of Mormon Institute was held at the Stone Church. Classes assembled during the day, and illustrated lectures were held in the evening. The original manuscript of the Book of Mormon was on display January 10, as one of the features of the institute. Special emphasis was given to the program of the week at the Sunday services in all the branches in Independence.

BAY CITIES AREA

The East Bay Branch, including San Leandro, Richmond, and Berkeley-Oakland had forty-five baptisms in 1950. This is largely due to the work done by Evangelist William Patterson, Seventy Herbert Lynn, and Seventy George A. Njeim. E. J. Gleazer, apostle in charge of the area, recently received a report indicating the progress. "Greater attendance and participation, more tithepayers and more baptisms" were noted.

MINISTERS TO STUDENTS

Bishop Henry L. Livingston spent the week end of January 6 and 7 in Iowa City, Iowa, ministering to the college students at the university there.

CHORUS IN CONCERT

The Independence Messiah choir with the choruses of the Conservatory of Music and the University of Kansas City presented excerpts from Handel's "Messiah" January 6 at the Municipal Auditorium. This was a part of a regular concert by the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra directed by Hans Schwieger.

PROGRESS NOTED

Elder Vern Webb, appointee pastor of the Spokane, Washington, Branch has organized his forces in such a manner that forty people have been baptized during the past year. Brother Webb reports that progress was slow at the beginning of the year with only four baptisms in the first five months. But the year as a whole is a commendable increase over the previous years.

Truth on the Scaffold

*Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne —
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and, behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch

—James Russell Lowell, in "The Present Crisis."

IN THESE TROUBLED TIMES, all the world can see that truth has been placed on the scaffold by tyranny, which occupies a throne of great power. What too few of us realize is the fact that God is standing in the shadow, "keeping watch above his own." We need the faith to believe that God is there, and that things have not gone completely out of his control, but that he will shape the destinies of men toward his own purposes in the end.

* * * * *

A fine church mother was talking to me at the close of the Sunday morning service. Her son, well along in his university work, must soon go into military service in defense of his country and in defense of freedom for the world.

How much money it has cost this family to rear and educate this splendid son! How many years of work, sacrifice, love, and hope are invested in him! And now, when it is all ready to bear fruit in service to humanity, it must be placed on the altar of military necessity, and only God knows whether this son will return, or be sacrificed.

The mother said to me, "Our sons are not prepared for this business of going out to kill. Yet they must do it. But it will cause something fine in them to die unless we can give them an understanding and a strong faith. Now, you have a greater responsibility than ever."

And that responsibility presses heavily on the soul.

What have we to offer that mother? What have we to offer that son? What can help them in this time of danger?

The mind turns back to a poem learned in school days, quoted at the beginning. Lowell knew in his time how we feel about things. Our country faced a dreadful peril in his days. Yet God was even then standing in the shadow, "keeping watch above his own" as he is today.

Many times the world has been poised precariously on the brink of destruction. Many times ruin and desolation have seemed imminent and inescapable. But somehow an overruling Power has always saved humanity from disaster. Somehow the world has always recoiled from the precipice of disaster to return to safer and saner ways. This, we believe, is the hand of God in history.

This may not give us all the assurance we would like to have, but we cannot be choosers. Until humanity submits to the law of Christ and builds a world in which war cannot be, this is all we can have. Let us be grateful for it.

Dr. H. A. Merchant of Omaha sends us an editorial clipped from the Evening World-Herald for December 13, commending it to our readers. Following are some selections:

In days that are full of trouble, it is difficult to retain one's sense of proportion and one's perspective. The tendency is greatly to magnify the terrors of evil, as greatly to minify the saving grace of truth. We seem now to see Wrong enthroned and Truth crucified. . . . Cynicism, pessimism smother the faith that still lives, deep down, in all hearts. . . .

We forget so much; we overlook so much. . . . Again and again the tides of evil have been resisted and swept back by just plain, common humanity made invincible by the touch of divinity that dwells within it.

Faith must depend upon the conviction that somehow, under the providence of God, wisdom and courage will be restored in leadership of this great American people. In this faith, and with that conviction, we live.

Reflect upon that splendid phrase, "plain, common humanity made invincible by the touch of divinity that dwells within it." It is in that kind of humanity, transformed by the divine Soul, that our hope of the future lies.

* * * * *

The enemy is formidable as hell itself. A great and terrible power is arrayed against us. The writer entitled his editorial "Not by Brute Strength." This reminds us of a passage of Scripture:

"Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, say—

Across the Desk

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

At Christmas time the First Presidency received many greetings addressed to the members of the presidency collectively or individually, which are really expressions of faith in the Cause committed to all of us. One of the most helpful of the letters received this year came from Elder Charles Fry, a stalwart who has served the church with distinction in many fields for many years. While the letter has some personal references, it carries such a fine spirit that we are sharing it with the readers of the Herald.

Tabor, Iowa

The First Presidency,
Dear Brethren:

At this Christmas time, I feel to express to you some of the thoughts of my mind, assuring you of my continued interest in the work over which you are presiding, and extending to you the season's greetings, with my appreciation of the faithful work you have done and are doing.

I count it an inestimable privilege to be associated with you in so great and good a work, and to live in this age of divine consummation when the forces of heaven and earth are combining to bring the work of all ages to a climax in the establishing of the kingdom of God whose extension will be to the ends of the earth, and the establishment of righteousness and peace among all men. It is an age of great things, leading on to changes which will astound mankind beyond measure, and bring fear to many hearts, and to others joy and gladness.

The church restored by the Lord more than a century ago has struggled against adversity, antagonisms, and (to us) immovable barriers, insomuch that progress has been slow, and the church is still small and insignificant in the eyes of the world. But the day of its emancipation is soon to come, when the obstacles will be removed, clearing the way for the most rapid extension the work of God has ever known. The light of the Restoration is yet to shine forth in greater brilliance, to the convincing of multitudes of the gentile world, and later of even nations of lost and down-trodden Israel which will be brought in for the building up of the kingdom of God on earth.

Today we view the opening scenes of this great panorama of events, involving the downfall of empires, kingdoms, and many other institutions embodying the world's material civilization; and the bringing into prominence the long-observed and despised church of Jesus Christ until its glory shall enlighten the earth. This church has in it the elements and the latent powers for accomplishing the dream of the ages, even the bringing of peace to the world through the establishing of the universal kingdom of righteousness, the kingdom of God. The star of hope again shines in the midst of darkness and will shine with growing magnitude until the dawning of the day of the Lord.

The world does not see, and perhaps few in the church see this potential power, nor comprehend its extent. The atom bomb is the smallest of bombs, but its potential is indeed great. So it is with the church whose power is yet to be demonstrated. By virtue of Christ's presence through priesthood, it is again the light of the world. It is the standard-bearer of unadulterated truth and the messenger of salvation to a dying world. It is yet to offer to a torn and devastated world the one and only means of peace and security, hope and joy, happiness and prosperity. It is to build a holy city—Zion—in preparation for the coming of the Lord. What a grand and glorious work! There is none greater or more sublime. But what a mighty responsibility is laid upon the servants of the Lord, and how shall it be borne except by divine grace?

You, brethren of the presidency, carry the greater burden of this responsibility. You need and are entitled to the support of every officer and member in the church, for every man shares in this responsibility. I have no criticism, for I have learned from myself the nature of human limitation and human frailty; without Christ we can do nothing. At this Christmas season, therefore, I am glad to add my prayers with those of others for your strengthening and upholding, asking that light, direction, and power may be given you in every need, for the sake of the work of the church and the world.

May your hearts be comforted, and peace and joy attend you with courage, faith, and fortitude to endure until your work is done.

Frank McDonald, pastor of St. Louis Branch, writes:

The services during the month of December were carried on at a very high level in the St. Louis Branch. The morning worship services held up over the 300 mark, and church school attendance was about what has been normal for us. We had one bad Wednesday evening, when the streets were slippery and the temperature down to about zero; attendance was cut to 56. Outside of that one night, the average for this service is over 100.

Our Christmas program held on December 24 was very fine, and the church was filled. On the last Sunday of 1950, we baptized five. During the year our baptisms have equalled 20, which is low, but of that number there were three husbands and two wives baptized to complete five family circles. Also we baptized a young couple, husband and wife, to add another family circle to the kingdom endeavors. There were three young people and ten children added to our rolls.

We closed the old year with a watch-night service beginning with our usual service at 8:30 p.m., appropriate program, lunch, and fellowship, and closing with a prayer service from 11:00 p.m. to a little after midnight. There were about 170 in attendance at this service.

We look to the new year with faith, hope, courage, and a strong determination to carry forward the work of our Lord with vigor and enthusiasm and make this the best year of all for this branch and district.

You may count on this area to support the total program of the general church.

Aqua Regia

BECAUSE A MIXTURE of hydrochloric acid and nitric acid would dissolve gold, early experimenters called it aqua regia or "royal water."

Christ told the woman of Samaria that whoever drank of the water that he gave would never thirst, for he would give living water from a well springing up into everlasting life.

The gold to be dissolved has to be in touch with the "royal water," and so must our lives be in touch with the living water of the Master to dissolve our hearts and establish a desire to follow the path of love and service he trod before us.

Some men's hearts are not dissolved because they will not permit the touch of the aqua regia. They have no desire to be partakers from this well springing up into everlasting life. They serve only for the material things they can receive.

Those of us who have touched the aqua regia must be always aware that we cannot continue thirstless unless we serve and share it with others.

Honor the Lord

By Lewis E. Landsberg

THESE WORDS of counsel were recorded by Solomon, the Son of David, in Proverbs 3: 9; and in addition to these three, he continued "with the first fruits of all thine increase." This builder of the temple of God was well acquainted with the laws of his heavenly Father, and even though he was not as righteous as he ought to have been, he was faithful in his stewardship, and from his gift of wisdom gave this excellent counsel. Solomon knew that men honored God when they participated in their stewardship. He recognized that man does not own the tenth of the increase; it belongs to God who gave it in the beginning. Man does, however, function as a steward over this one tenth until it is returned to the church to carry on the work of God on the earth. This law was a part of the Law of Moses and was practiced faithfully by the Israelites.

The next sentence in the book of Proverbs holds a great promise for the steward. It reads, "So shall thy barns be filled with plenty and thy presses shall burst out with new wine." This statement coincides with the one that Alma made to his son in the Book of Mormon: "My son, ye ought to know as I do know, that inasmuch as ye shall keep the commandments of God, ye shall prosper in the land." These Scriptures express a complete faith and confidence in God. They reveal that God is the owner of the universe and all that is in it, and men become stewards of their heavenly Father when they make their accounting and return the first fruits for his work. These are words to live by, and in them is provided an opportunity for every member of the church.

The latter-day church has been given these same commandments, but for some unknown reason only about one out of ten members has participated in this wonderful opportunity. We find the following words in Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1, "For it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity These things shall be had on record, to be handed over unto the Bishop in Zion." This word of God is given that men might participate in the glorious program of Zion and preparing for God's kingdom here on earth. It is a tragedy for men not to recognize the distinct privilege they have by following this commandment.

THE ACCOUNTING is the first step, for only by it can the tithing due be determined. After this calculation, the payment from the first fruits follows easily. Some might question this "easily," but one only needs to do it and then by experience he will know that it is no hardship. Often individuals have postponed the payment of tithes as they think by some miraculous means their bank account will increase until it is large enough to take care of it. Actually, if it is impossible to pay tithing outright, plans should be made to make weekly or monthly payments until it is paid in full. If one has never made his accounting before, the tithe due may be large, for it represents the accumulation of a debt that has not been acknowledged annually as God intended. The payment of the tithes is another opportunity for one to share with his co-partner, his heavenly Father, in the great work of salvation. It should not be put off, for surely God does not postpone or defer blessings to His people. He carries forth his obligation immediately, and men should do likewise.

After the first accounting, comes the annual accounting. We find these statements in the Scriptures: "Thou shalt truly tithe the increase of thy seed that the field bringeth forth year by year."—Deuteronomy 14: 22. "For you pay tithes of mint, and anise, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier things of the law; judgment, mercy and faith; these ought ye to have done and not to leave the other undone."—Matthew 23: 20.

Annual accounting provides a good opportunity for analysis of the year's business. Men spend most of their time in earning a living; should they spend some time in making an analysis of how these earnings are used? There is untold value for the members of a family who sit down together in the spirit of acknowledging their stewardship to their Heavenly Father and go over the year's records. In this meeting there will come a better understanding of the problems of the family, and plans can be formulated that will guide them to security and financial progress. They will sense a new relationship with their Heavenly Father and soon find that their stewardship is in the management of the nine tenths after the title has been returned to God for his favors.

THE STATEMENT found in the sixth chapter of II Nephi, "Wherefore, do not spend money for that which is of no worth, nor your labor for that which can not satisfy," should challenge each person to develop wise stewardship not only in financial matters but over time as well. Such counsel is valuable to every family recognizing that the parable of the talents applies to men today just as it did to those who listened intently as Jesus uttered this famous parable.

The program of the church is to build the kingdom of God on earth called Zion. Every member of the church wants to see this accomplished in his day. His vocation, energy, time, and all he possesses need to be pledged for this one divine purpose. In II Nephi 11:104 are these words: "But the laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish." As civilization rushes toward destruction, men must heed the words of the prophets and the commands of God if they are to be saved from complete destruction.

It is not with any sense of fear that one should approach his stewardship this year, but rather with the expectancy of a real opportunity to be a co-worker with Christ. Jesus, in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, told his disciples about the perilous days to come and cautioned them: "See that ye be not troubled; for all I have told you must come to pass." Jesus expected the conditions found in the world today when he gave the two commandments: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God and thy neighbor as thyself." If we are to achieve that to which his Saints are entitled, we must not be diverted from his purposes. The opportunity of choice is still ours, and as wise stewards we will follow God's direction.

AS A NEW YEAR BEGINS every member of the church from eight years old on should exercise his agency in choosing his relationship with God. If the words of Solomon, "Honor the Lord," determine his course, he can likewise look forward to the promise, "So shall thy barns be filled." This does not always refer to material things, for many know that spiritual blessings are often the most valuable. Someone has said, "The Western mind will never understand the Asiatic mind, as the Western people have never been down to their last bowl of rice." Our barns have always been filled, but we have not always acknowledged our stewardship and returned to God that which rightfully belongs to him.

The promises of God are true; he is always a thoughtful, kind, heavenly parent. If the world today would only listen and follow his commands, bloodshed would cease. The church of Jesus Christ today continues to invite all to believe in Christ, and, because of this belief, to stand in their stewardship.

Jesus said, "by their works ye shall know them." Have all witnessed the divinity of the Lord by the stewardship of accounting and payment of the first fruits? No one should put off that which ought to be done today! The church needs the support of every member, and God desires that each one will assist in his work. So shall the church "honor the Lord" and glorify him by building Zion quickly that a world may have the destructive evil done away and come to worship the Heavenly King.

This picture was taken at the district priesthood institute and conference held November 4 and 5 at Taylorville. During the past year, eighty-five persons have been baptized in the district, ten as a result of two missionary meetings by District President Arthur Henson. He states, "This year we are planning an extensive program with these young men, especially in missionary work. They are all busy in their occupations. Melvin Fowler of Springfield is in charge of the Research Department of Archaeology for the state of Illinois. O. C. Henson, Jr., has a retail grocery business in Decatur. Jason Daykin of Taylorville is agent for the Marathon Gas and Oil Company. Harold Walker of Beardstown has a large super grocery market, so also has Paul Rudow in Pana. Billy D. Poore of Danville is employed by the University of Illinois at Champaign. Floyd Bowman of New Canton is farming. Ernie Campbell, Pleasant Hill, is a plastering and trucking contractor. Earl Blakeman of Murrayville has a poultry business."

Are You Time-Minded?

By Chris B. Hartshorn

AMERICANS ARE FAST DEVELOPING a sense of timing. Time is the essence of living in this industrial age as well as of legal contracts. Radios, time clocks, and transportation schedules are our educators. The original timing device was the musical director's baton. In contemporaneous affairs, it is more likely that the household is geared to a favored TV program. Some sponsors are paying for radio and TV time at the rate of $500 a second, and why shouldn't they be time-minded? If they are scheduled to come on the air at 7:30 p.m., "about half-past seven" is not satisfactory timing from their point of view.

In Jesus' parable of the ten virgins, there is nothing to indicate that the five foolish ones were perverse of heart. It was night and all were sleeping as was expected. The foolish five had planned to get oil for their vessels, and tried frantically to do so at midnight. The thing which indicted them was their poor timing. Like many of us, we put off till tomorrow some things we should do today.

Many years ago, Edward Young wrote, "Procrastination is the thief of time." The truly efficient person learns early in life, that "The most important thing is the thing that needs doing now." Dallying, putting off the unpleasant or difficult, only builds up frustrations which add to our burdens. The discriminating person will survey the many things which need doing and select them in the order of their importance as judged by all probable results. When it is of first importance to have oil today, let's not wait until midnight.

"To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven."—Ecclesiastes 3: 1.

ALL OF US have been annoyed at times by public services which were late in starting. Five minutes delay in the opening of a concert or preaching service may be sufficient to take the keen edge of enjoyment from an otherwise good meeting. Delay breeds impatience which is always aggravated by our ignorance of its cause.

In America we have accustomed ourselves to expecting the trains to run on schedule. If a train or bus leaves the station before the time, or long after the time printed in the schedule, we build up a resentment which brings about effectual relief. We demand that the time tables be changed or that they be observed. No man has a moral right to disregard his appointments and keep others waiting in outer offices on his pleasure. "Time is money" to many of us and should not be purchased by anyone with impunity.

THE JEWS made a big mistake in Jesus' day. For centuries they had been looking for a deliverer. They had been promised a king who would rule on David's throne and overthrow the oppressor's yoke. When Jesus told them, "My kingdom is not of this world," they rejected him. He prophesied the destruction of the temple and of the nation "because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." As the two disciples were walking to Emmaus after Jesus' crucifixion, they told their risen Lord, "We trusted that it had been he who should have redeemed Israel."—Luke 24: 20.

Latter-day Israel seems to have made some mistakes in its timing along this very line. In 1832 Zion seemed to be almost within the grasp of the Saints in Jackson County, Missouri. The Fishing River revelation of June 22, 1834, declares, "... they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient Therefore, in consequence of the transgressions of my people, it is expedient that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2, 3.

Zion-building is in effect a peaceful, social revolution. It involves changes in habits of thought and behavior which are almost staggering. Many have seen the problem of effecting basic changes in human nature and have said that at best it was evolutionary, not revolutionary. Perhaps they reckon without faith in God's contribution to the plan: It was he who said about three years after the organization of the church, "They could have been redeemed even now." Pessimists are still crying, "You can't change human nature."

There is considerable evidence that the Saints are more time-minded today than a hundred or fifty years ago. As the priesthood members function in public services, they are more conscious of the timing of their movements as in Communion services in their entrance to and from the rostrum. This is the spirit of togetherness, co-operation, and order. Most people have a natural sense of rhythm and fitness. Worshipers will respond with a feeling of confidence and well-being to such leadership. After becoming used to a high type of orderliness, they will become restless or uneasy without it.

OPPORTUNITY IS KNOCKING at our doors daily and is impatient with our delay in bidding it enter. The old saying, "What's good enough for father is good enough for me," kept some of us out of the church for years. We think we have learned our lesson on this score; but have we? Let's take the one aspect of church life—preparation by study. In our new birth into the kingdom, all of us dream of telling the story of the Restoration so convincingly that our relatives and friends cannot resist the call to membership. The thing which usually cools us off is that we feel inadequate for the task; we can't think of the right Scriptures or the correct history to answer their questions. Too soon we resolve that we had better let the missionary do the evangelizing work; and our spirit of testimony dies "a-borning." It would be infinitely better to "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."—II Timothy 2: 15.

Many children resist the efforts of teachers and schools in their behalf. Compulsory education laws in the United States are as necessary to overcome the shortsightedness of children as they are to protect society against the shortsightedness of avaricious parents. Learning correlates closely with effort. To most of us it's just work, hard work. We soon get mentally lazy and intellectually rusty. Knowing this tendency and the urgent need for preparation, the Lord commanded, "Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

Will the familiar excuse, "I don't have time to study any more," stand up under divine examination on the Day of Judgment or even before? Church school superintendent Bailey of Woodbridge, Ontario, once met this excuse, from a man whom he needed to teach a class, with this answer: "When you come in from the fields or the barn for your meals, you usually sit down and read the newspaper for at least ten minutes, don't you?" "Yes, I suppose I spend that much time at least." "Well, if

The Light of the World

A RECENT THEME for church worship has been "Make Jesus Your Lord." This has the same continuity as "Pray always, lest ye enter into temptation." Surely the impact of the personal ministry of the Creator has not dawned upon the average Christian mind. Is the "incredible" a reality? Has the Creator of the universe actually walked with men?

The Apostle John testified that "In him was the gospel, and the gospel was the life, and the life was the light of men; and the light shineth in the world, and the world perceiveth it not." Then he continued to say that John the Baptist

... was not that light, but came to bear witness of that light, which was the true light, which lighteth every man who cometh into the world; even the Son of God. He who was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

With many of the ancients who testified of this great Personality, the first of the prophets of our day was empowered by the Spirit of God to say,

And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things.

Light is a form of energy, and earthly life is dependent upon energy waves which are poured upon this planet in exhaustless floods of radiance from the you'd take your quarterly and spend even ten minutes a day on next Sunday's lesson, that would make one hour's preparation. Try that system, and I'm sure you will not fail."

Let's seize time by the forelock. God has also said, "My Spirit will not always strive with man." Let's be sure that we know the time of its visitation. Such time-mindedness will pay eternal dividends.

By Ray Ashenurst

sun. It is also now being stated that matter and energy are but two manifestations of a single principle, and matter and energy can be both created and destroyed in the sense that each can be converted into the other. With this theory, it is an admitted fact that we do not yet know how to transform matter completely into energy. Perhaps we should also confess that we do not yet know exactly how Jesus would transform us into fit creatures for fellowship with his Father.

SINCE JESUS actually is a person, I have often pondered what he meant when he said, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

Jesus was with the Father in the beginning, so in origin he cannot be classified. In the dictionary, "light" is defined as "the imponderable agent by which objects are rendered visible by its action on the retina." Light, then, is an agent that cannot be weighed or classified because of its antiquity.

Jesus is our light and our life. Unless his gospel truths are permitted to shine in upon our souls to form his image there, we shall walk in darkness. To say that we must comprehend his origin before we will accept nurture by his light is just as unreasonable as to refuse sustenance of physical life from the light that is all about us. Surely then, Jesus has chosen to describe himself by the best possible means within human understanding.

A few years ago it became my opportunity to fellowship with my older brother thousands of miles from home—a rare privilege during war. One night as we stood on the upper deck of a ship, he pointed out various stars and named them. He told me about the light-years of distance to the stars forming the sword of Orion, as well as others. I marvel at these facts of the universe. Light travels farther than any other known agent. It possesses the greatest of speed and penetrating power.

In the Hebrew letter, chapter 4, we read:

For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of body and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight; but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do.

In the preface to our book of modern revelations these words of light and inspiration are given to us,

For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated; and the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed; and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them.

We may infer, then, that even the darkest corners of evil shall be illuminated by the power of judgment and righteousness that is in Jesus Christ. Truly, his is a penetrating light.

SOME OF US have been "bitten" by the "camera bug." We know that in order for light to enter the camera, the shutter must be opened. For a clear image to be formed on the emulsion of the film, the camera must be brought into focus according to distance from the subject. Often we get a "fuzzy" picture. Some of the best pictures are taken by time exposure.

The light of Christ would form his image upon our souls, if we would that it be so. Adjustments need to be made in our lives, according to our distance from him. Repentance is a divine principle. The real Christ will be made most valid to a dying world by people who have repented and permitted his light to form the divine image clearly upon the "emulsion" of their souls.

The full impact of Christ's personal ministry begins to dawn upon us, when we sense that the responsibility of showing forth the gospel is the task of his disciples. "I give unto you to be the light of the world," he declared. How impossible that his image should be fully formed upon our souls by a quick flip of the shutter. The full light of the sun blanks out images to our eyes. So the modern version of quick salvation—a thirty-second salvation—"by kneeling beside the radio"—is preposterous. It may be a good beginning, but Jesus spent thirty years of growth and preparation for three years of an earthly ministry. Can man possibly form the image of such a grand Personality upon his soul in thirty seconds? Is not a time exposure required? It may take more than a lifetime.

Parents Should Teach

By J. A. Kettlewell

Teach your children . . . to understand the doctrine of repentance . . . to pray . . . and walk uprightly.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4 (adapted).

IT IS UNFORTUNATE that Christian parents occasionally fail in these duties, especially those who have accepted the gospel of the Restoration. However, such failures can and do happen, and just as truly as blessing follows obedience to this divine command, remorse and condemnation follow disobedience.

A middle-aged woman recently came to my place of business, and in the course of a short conversation related how she had been reared a member of the church, and had married a man of a Protestant faith. They have a daughter, now grown to young womanhood, who is interested in the Catholic Church, yet the mother was firm in her opinion that it is not right for the parents to tell children what they should do in respect to religion, that a child eight years of age doesn't know enough about a church to choose, and that it is better to let children find out for themselves when they are old enough.

The responsibility and opportunity afforded the parents cannot be minimized. Little children are receptive to the counsel of their parents, whom God commanded to teach them.

At a special conference of the church being held at Hiram, Ohio, in November, 1831, this wise admonition was given:

Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands; and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

THIS IS A DIVINE COMMAND. It is not a matter for debate. God has spoken, and it is enjoined upon us, especially we who live in the stake or organized districts. Here in an environment conducive to the growth and development of the child, we are left without excuse if we fail. Nor can the responsibility be shifted to other shoulders. Parents are responsible. The commandment is explicit; it is comprehensive. The teaching of faith in God, repentance, and baptism for remission of sins, and to walk uprightly are all a part of this vital commandment. They are essential for the development of a Christlike character, such as should be desired by every parent.

To teach and lead is not to coerce, but rather to direct the feet of the little ones in the footsteps of the master who said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me."

The forces of evil in the world are too great to leave the child's spiritual growth to chance. To fail to heed this divine command is to defy the God who gave it. Almost certainly the disobedient must suffer the agony of seeing their loved ones going the way of the world.

Harmony

Let him who desires harmony in the world look first to his own nation. If he desires order in the nation, let him look to his own home. If he would regulate his own home, let him first cultivate his own life. It is when the heart is right that the person is right; and it is when the person is right that the home is right, and the nation is right and the world is at peace.

The Quest of Truth - Part II

Why Proclaim?

The first reason for Restoration's proclamation is to make its existence known, to reveal its essential character, and to call men to repentance, or to engender a hunger and thirst for the righteousness, the cause, it would establish.

The second reason is a corollary of the first; it is to gather enough suitable material with which to do its work (see Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3, 4; 44; 58: 2; 100: 6; 102:9).

The function of preparing that material so it may be built into Restoration's social structure is a pastoral function, a function of the church (see Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7, 18; 85: 21; 94: 3-5; 102: 3).

You see, one person may sing a solo, two may sing a duet, and four a quartet; but only A People, only many persons who have formed a community, may render the score of Restoration's social symphony—a truth which still seems to be elusive.

Another reason for Restoration's proclamation is that "Thoughts untangle passing over the lips." Thoughtful proclamation of The Truth for the purpose of assuring its implementation is truth-refining. Whoever truly explains Restoration to others clarifies his own thought; he definitizes the truth; he improves his own understanding of Restoration; he refines its truth.

The over-all reason for Restoration's proclamation, as we have already indicated, is to make possible the implementation of its truth—the doing of its great work.

Knowing the Truth

As far as we know, Pilate did not wait for the answer to the question, "What is truth?" He may have felt that the answer Jesus would have made was not highly important.

"When I was a child . . . I thought as a child." I did not think as a man. In truth, I did not "think." My studies in religion consisted largely in memorizing facts—facts about the number of books in the Bible; facts about Jesus and the apostles, facts about what "God set in the church," but little more than nothing about its structure in relation to its function. I had many perceptions of events, but few conceptions, if any, of Truth. And in religion most people are like that. And such knowing may not be even the beginning of a quest of truth.

The Truth, as we said, respects necessary relations that rise from the nature of things; it is that which accords with the requirements of man's nature and the circumstances of his being. The Truth is understandable, comprehensible, knowable, demonstrable. The search for it involves much more than the memorizing of facts. It involves interpretation, reasoning, judgment.

To know The Truth, of which Restoration is a proclamation, is to understand the relation of the organization of "my people" to the appointment of stewardships, the relation of Zion's deeds to economic accountability, the relation of Zion's property organization to moral freedom and political liberty and much more. To know that truth is to understand the relation of "the cause of Zion"—of the establishment of that cause, that is—to the improvement of personality, the cultivation of the soul, salvation in the kingdom of God.

Contemplate the Doctrine and Covenants, particularly 10: 3, 10; 50: 4-6, 8; 85: 12, 15, 21, 36; 90: 4-6; 94: 3, 5; and 102:3. Therein is the answer to the question, What is Truth? Therein is also a statement of what it means to "know" it.

Refinement and Implementation

The former references to Doctrine and Covenants mean that, besides being a proclamation, Restoration is a refinement and implementation of The Truth.

It is especially an implementation. It is A Work. Its characteristic is not what its people know and what its church says, it is what its instrumentalities do. Restoration is characteristically an action—a life-enriching action, a soul-well-being promoting action. It is a general action which involves all the specific affairs upon the good and right conduct of which the welfare of the soul depends.

Restoration is not only the score of a social symphony, but a rendition of that score. It is an organization of personality, a co-ordination of functions that are mutually dependent—functions which together, conjointly, in a unity, are the life of a people—a true people—a self-governing people—a people composed of all the persons who live in one locality and govern their vital affairs in accordance with established law and custom.

Restoration does not merely "compass sea and land to make one proselyte." It does not merely "pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin" (Matthew 23: 15, 23). Its interests center in "the weightier matters of the law." Its principal affairs are vital, basic, fundamental. The center of its interest is its domestic and economic and governmental (or political) affairs, and their complements. (See particularly Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1; 36: 12; 48: 2; 51: 1-5; 77: 1; 81: 4; 98: 10; 101; 102: 2, 3; 111; 112; and especially its curriculum, 85: 21.)

That action is a general action; it is comprehensive; it is a composite of many specific actions; it is a social symphony, a co-ordination of many different functions which—together in conjunction, in unity—are the life of a people.

Restoration is a community-building action; a kingdom-building action. The sum and substance, the essence and crux of Restoration is not a mere mass of church and other affairs; it is not the novelties and varieties which people seek in vain to make a substitute for progression; it is not a round of ordinary Sunday affairs which lead to nowhere; it is a momentous on-going enterprise; it is a movement toward a glorious goal; it has a work to do that is great and marvelous.

Benjamin Franklin and others searched for the truth about electricity, but their quest was not so fruitful as the quest of Michael Faraday, who, in several ways, was a better searcher. Michael found the physical-world truth he was in search of. He gave us the key with which to unlock nature's storehouse of electrical energy.

But we had to learn how to use that key. To put that truth to work as we implement it today, much refining of it was necessary. And it was refined partly because, outside religion, there is more breadth of view and more modesty of accomplishment.

In some important particulars, Joseph Smith was like Michael Faraday. So his quest of truth gave us the keys of the "kingdom." But for the want of more breadth of view and more modesty of accomplishment (and for other reasons, some of which I shall mention shortly), we did not refine Joseph's truth as we did Michael's, and for that reason we have not been able to make it work successfully. We have not unlocked the door of the kingdom. We have not brought forth and established the cause of Zion. And we have not "prospered" and spread as indicated in Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5.

We have perceptions of this and that—perceptions of stewardships, perceptions of the storehouse, perceptions of local economic autonomy, common consent, and what not—but we have not thought these percepts into a general concept. We do not "know" the truth. We do not have a comprehension. We do not refine the truth we say we know, therefore we do not bring forth and establish The Cause.

The Passion to Proclaim

If one should discover a physical-world truth—a better way of making good shoes of poor leather, for instance—he may say nothing about it. But let another man discover (what seems to him to be) something important in the field of religion (some social-world, moral-world, spiritual-world truth) or even a fanciful "fact," and he may have an almost unconquerable passion to publish it. You may explain that phenomenon as you wish.

Historic Bible religion (in which Restoration is an epochal development) is characterized by momentous truths and great developments, or weighty facts. The divine legation of Restoration is regarded by Latter Day Saints as a highly important fact. So also is Restoration's "great and marvelous work," its "cause of Zion." So also is Restoration's instrumentalities. And when a good man is convinced that those things are true and of great importance to others, he has impulses to proclaim them—"to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people," perhaps, or in some cases or circumstances.

It is good, very good, to wish to proclaim "The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth"—in person and by proxy. But it is bad, very bad, to publish ideas about The Truth that are not true. It is bad to talk "tenets" instead of that which must be said to enlist the "elect" in the great work of Restoration; in its great enterprise. (The "cause of Zion" is a great enterprise. It is a city-building enterprise—see Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12; 48: 2 and much else—that is essentially economic. "The cause of Zion" is an adventure in economic self-governance that is grounded in moral consideration.)

It is bad to talk "tenets" (Doctrine and Covenants 18: 4) when the call should be to "repentance" and enlistment in Restoration's great work (Doctrine and Covenants 6: 4).

It is bad to fuss with other religious people about their affairs (to contend against other churches, Doctrine and Covenants 16: 4) and neglect to ground the affairs of our own church in The Truth.

It is bad to see so much bad in other religious leaders that we do not see the good in our own. Restoration has a great work to do, and the proper business of its church is to get that work done. It cannot be halfhearted about that work without losing its grip on The Truth.

A Community is stricken with famine and disease. Its life is in the balance. But there is good news: the curative of the crisis is at hand. A great life-saving work is to be done. Through the doing of that work (not through the talking about it) a people is to be saved; it is to be restored to prosperity and health again.

You wish to tell that Good News; you wish to tell those calamity-stricken people about that work; you wish to publish the Glad Tidings.

Do you say first, "The deliverer has a black leather case that cost a thousand dollars"? You do not! You say first, "There is a curative for your crisis. It is at hand. To apply it you have something to do. This is it. Come now, let's get that work done."

It seems certain that, to do the great work of Restoration, three things must be done. The Truth must be proclaimed. The Truth must be found through the quest of it. The Truth must be refined and implemented. I put two ideas together here, because much refining is conditioned in implementation. And that is part of the answer to our question, Why?

I think it is because we have not been devoted, wisely, to The Work to be done through the proclamation, the quest, the refinement, and implementation of The Truth throughout the years—I think that is the reason this generation inherited a pattern of church business which it has not made better.

I think that is the reason—part of the reason—we have such an avalanche of administrative affairs (of “kinds”) to attend to that we do not have time even for a quest of truth. I think that is why there is more novelty and variety than progression. I think badness—church badness—has a way of increasing itself.

The Spirit of Truth

“Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth.”—John 16: 13.

I knew a man who had tuberculosis. He went to his physician and was told that he had tuberculosis, which was the truth. But he went on to one physician after another until he found one who told him what he wanted to hear—that he did not have tuberculosis. That search, I think, was not in the spirit of truth.

I was reprimanded for being almost “cruel” in my statement of certain facts. My critic said, “Of course they are the facts. But why face them?” That criticism was not in the spirit of truth.

I have said, on occasion, that my first aim is not to prove that Restoration is true; my aim is to prove whether it is true. And people have found fault with me for doing that. I think that faultfinding was not in the spirit of truth.

I think that he, who in argumentation, conversation, or otherwise, cannot hear what others say clearly, either has no ears with which to hear—no apprehending mind—or does not have the spirit of truth.

I think that when we do not like to retain God—the personification of The Truth—in our knowledge, our minds tend to become “reprobate” (Romans 1: 28).

I think that nothing of greater import, respecting the quest of truth, was ever said than this: “Except a man be born of the Spirit”—the spirit of truth—his quest of The Truth, as he may call it, will be in vain. I think the man who is mentally lazy, even, will not find The Truth.

Well, we set sail here on an ocean of truth that we can hardly begin to compass in this article. So that is all for the present.

I am sold on the message of Restoration, but not on everything that has been said and done about it. I believe Restoration is even more an implementation of truth than a proclamation. I believe that whoever would proclaim Restoration should heed the counsel: “Seek not to declare my word, but seek first to obtain it.”—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 10.

I believe the first function of these whose office it is to proclaim The Truth is to “know” it, as far as they may, through the quest and refinement of it. And I believe failure of that duty is part of the answer to our question, Why?

What do you believe?

Good Seed

ONE OF THE MOST FAMOUS thoroughfares in London, England—Kingsway—had to be carved out of an area of mean streets and shabby buildings a few years ago. In the place where they stood are rows of fine buildings and wide stretches of pavement. It took many years to make the transformation.

During that time a strange thing happened. Nature began to turn those vacant spaces into gardens. Strange flowers appeared, flowers for which it was difficult to account, for they were not native blooms. Expert naturalists examined them and declared that they were Italian flowers. They said that the ground there had not had any moisture or sunlight since the days when the Romans occupied London and built on that site. After all those centuries, this was the first time the ground had been opened to the rain and sun, and these flowers were the result. Buried under cement and stone, they had had no chance. When their opportunity to grow finally came, they responded quickly.

THE SAME THING happens in human life. Potential virtues and things of loveliness are often buried in the most unlikely places, waiting for a chance to find expressions. Sometimes they get their chance only after an experience that resembles a demolition. A person with an unattractive personality must be jolted into the realization that personalities can be remodeled much the same as an ill-fitting dress; that ugly physical externals can be made to appear pleasing by good grooming; that faith, hope, and courage can grow in the good ground of the soul when doubt and fear have been torn down so that the love of God can get through.

There are no born kingdom-builders. Some of us are fortunate in home and family surroundings during our early lives so that Zion's ideals and purposes begin to grow in us from the start. Others of us who lack this background have our best impulses stunted because the growing materials are absent. Still others through intelligent doubts or fear prevent our spiritual growth. It takes a blasting experience to destroy the obstacles and bring the power of God openly into contact with our lives.

Often we allow ourselves to become so preoccupied with the business of living that we have no time to give to God. Perspective is easily lost in the overcrowding of modern life. Only when something draws us up short do we realize that we are the losers when we neglect to take God into partnership.

Zion is buried in every person. But, like the flowers of Kingsway, it will develop and show itself only under the right conditions.

The Book of Mormon Institute

By Evan A. Fry

THE BOOK OF MORMON INSTITUTE officially opened on Monday morning, January 8, in the Stone Church, after preliminary sermons on the Book of Mormon theme in all Independence churches on the Sunday evening preceding. Coming closely after the Seventies' Institute, the Book of Mormon Institute had been planned so as to utilize the services of many of the General Church officials and appointees who were already in the Center Place. A very wide field of experience, research, and ministerial backgrounds was therefore made available for this week of intensive study of the Book of Mormon.

A glance at the program of the Institute, or even attendance at a few of the sessions, indicates that it was not so much intended to teach the history of Book of Mormon peoples as to approach the Book of Mormon from other angles. There have been reviews of its miraculous origin, preservation, and translation. There has been a re-examination from many angles of its spiritual meaning, its central witness, its doctrinal teachings, and the evidences of its divinity—historical, internal, factual, and archaeological. Much of the material presented has already been familiar to Book of Mormon students in its main outlines, but there have been interesting differences of approach and interpretation by the various speakers which have done much to increase the appreciation and widen the fields of understanding of those who heard.

The morning sessions were divided into three classes, meeting from 8:30 to 9:30, 9:45 to 10:45, and 11:00 to 12:00. The usual procedure was streamlined—one short song, invocation, main address, ten minutes for questions or comment from the floor, and benediction. At 2:00 each afternoon (except Wednesday) a speaker presented the main topic, and then opened the meeting for a forum discussion with questions and participation from the floor, where problems not touched in the more formal sessions could be thrashed out. The evening sessions, beginning at 7:30, were given over to the Society for Archaeological Research, which sponsored lectures on American Archaeology in support of Book of Mormon claims. These sessions were divided so that audiences in both the upper and lower auditoriums of the Stone Church could receive the full series of lectures, including one from Apostle Paul M. Hanson, one from Seventy H. I. Velt, two from Apostle Charles R. Hield, and two from Elder Roy Weldon. These lecturers, while presenting their own pictures in the main, have drawn heavily from other photographers and the results of other archaeologists and explorers to round out and illustrate the subject matter of their discourses.

A list of those participating in the institute includes Presidents Israel A. Smith, W. Wallace Smith, and F. Henry Edwards; Apostles D. O. Chesworth, Maurice Draper, Paul M. Hanson, Arthur Oakman, C. George Mesley, Reed M. Holmes, D. T. Williams, and Percy Farrow; Seventies E. Y. Hunker, H. I. Velt, Russell Ralston, and George Njeim; Bishop Henry L. Livingston, and Elders Roy A. Cheville and Roy Weldon.

THROUGHOUT THE INSTITUTE there has been the feeling—often expressed but continually in the background of the thinking of both speakers and audience—that as a church we have neglected the Book of Mormon; that we have too often been apologetic in our use of it; that we have been dilatory in using it for missionary work among Jewish and Lamanite peoples. In one of his early talks, President Edwards stated that the purpose of the institute was primarily to promote the use of the Book of Mormon for spiritual purposes—as Scripture, and secondarily, to strengthen our faith by showing that the lines of evidence regarding the book are growing stronger with the passing years—that they are cumulative. He remarked that in many instances we have spent too much time on proving the divinity of the book by use of Bible prophecy, archaeological evidences, etc., but too little time in actually using it for its spiritual content and doctrinal teaching. An important part of the institute has been the re-examination by many speakers, from many different angles, of the spiritual and doctrinal content of the book.

Attendance has been good, though not overwhelmingly large. The difficulties of leaving employment have of course kept many Independence people at home, and kept out-of-town people from attending in large numbers. But the Stone Church has been comfortably filled for most of the morning and afternoon sessions. At the evening sessions, every available seat that could command a view of the screen in either upper or lower auditorium has been filled. Those attending are alert and interested, taking notes, and following the citations with open books in their hands. Several nonmembers have taken this opportunity to learn more about the Book of Mormon, and a number of elders from the Utah Church also have attended several sessions.

ON WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, January 10, the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon was brought from the bank vaults in Kansas City under police escort and

Personalities I Have Known

Columbus Scott

By Marcella Schenck

I REMEMBER COLUMBUS SCOTT as a gentle missionary.

The first time I saw the man, he was entering a reunion tent and smiling. A rather lively, rowdy little boy stumbled against Brother Scott and almost knocked him down. The missionary picked up the rough little lad, smoothed him out, and started him again on his merry way.

"He was very gentle with the child," remarked one of the good sisters who sat on the long plank that made one of the seats for reunion.

"Yes, Brother Scott is a gentle man," answered Sister Clara Briggs, who sat beside her.

"You mean he is a gentleman," said the first lady.

"He is both a gentleman and a gentle man," said Sister Briggs.

That gave me something to think about as I watched Brother Scott on the platform. I turned the statement over and over in my mind—"He is both a gentleman and a gentle man." Wouldn't the two always go together? Maybe not.

I cannot tell whether the next incident happened the following day, two days later, or three or more. Time seems to have no part in what I remember except that it all happened during the same reunion.

MY FRIEND PEARL and I were standing on the small bridge that spanned the little stream between the Hougas home and the reunion grounds. We were leaning against the railing, probably watching the water bugs skim the water. Through the saplings and trees that lined the lane leading into the farm, I could see the home of Dan Hougas.

The yard was spacious, the trees were spacious, and the shade was spacious. It was all very picturesque. A well-kept white picket fence framed the yard. At the north gateway was a hitching post and a platform for the convenience of entering or leaving the vehicles.

As my eyes wandered from house to gate and to platform, my attention was suddenly riveted upon one of the saddest sights I had ever seen. The little missionary, Columbus Scott, was sitting upon that platform, bowed and alone, with his "preacher's satchel" beside him. Everything about the scene bespoke of tragedy. He had no smile. He looked as if he could never smile again.

I turned to Pearl. "What is the matter?" I asked, tipping my head in his direction.

"He got a telegram." Pearl was a very matter-of-fact person and could, unintentionally, be very stingy with information.

"A telegram?" I asked.

"His son died or got killed or something," said she, lifting her eyes to look with sympathy. "He is waiting for some one to take him to the train."

The Hougas vehicle, known as a "democrat," came out of the drive just then. The sad little man picked up his satchel and climbed in beside the driver. We watched them disappear over the hill to the west. To the very end it was a picture of sorrow.

We girls turned silently back to camp and separated. In front of our tent my father was playing with whichever child happened to be the baby at the time, tossing it up and listening to its gurgling laughter.

"Papa," said I, timidly, "will Brother Scott ever smile again?"

"I reckon," he answered, giving the baby another toss. Then he stopped and looked at me. "Don't take life so hard," said he.

I walked on through the camp. I wasn't really taking life hard. I was trying to think. I had known other men who lost their sons. They had never looked such pictures of desolation. Was it because he was a gentleman or a gentle man? I decided on the latter. Had the preacher forgotten all the beautiful things that missionaries explain about death and eternity? You see I was young, and death had never yet touched me closely.

IT WAS YEARS before I ever saw Columbus Scott again. I was a new Gracelander, sitting with a group of others in the north gallery of the old Brick Church in Lamoni. Up the steps that led from the southwest room of the basement, came a group of people, laughing and chatting. One of them was Brother Columbus Scott, and he was smiling!

Another new Gracelander at my left nudged me and said, "That is Columbus Scott down there—the little man. He was in our district last year."

"Yes, I know," answered I. "He can smile."

"Sure! Anybody can smile," said she. It was silly of me to have made the statement with no explanation, but it was not the time nor place to say why sometimes people cannot smile.

I saw Brother Scott many times afterwards. To me he seemed to have the hope of resurrection radiating from him.

Out in their missionary fields, alone and apart from loved ones, men of the priesthood must sometimes meet their Gethsemanes. Then who shall "stay up their hands" to keep them steady? It must be we to whom they have ministered.

I am glad we still have gentle missionaries. How tenderly their hands rest upon our heads at those moments when life hangs on threads of hope and faith! How sweet their words of comfort in our times of sorrow, tragedies, and troubles! I am older now and I realize. I know, too, that gentleness is not a lost art among our missionaries.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

Question:

According to Doctrine and Covenants 83:24 the Melchisedec priesthood was taken away at the time of Moses, and the Aaronic priesthood continued until John. How is it that the prophets of the Book of Mormon time held the Melchisedec priesthood when it was removed way before the time of Lehi?

Michigan

V. B.

Answer:

Lehi and his descendants lived in America. Moses and his descendants, the children of Israel, referred to in the text lived in Asia Minor, hence they dwelt in separate worlds of experience. There was no communication between them, and of necessity there had to be separate administration in ecclesiastic affairs—two churches in fact. Assuming that only Lehi had the Aaronic priesthood when he and his family left Jerusalem, there is no indication that God would not have called him to the higher offices as the need arose.

Alma, the son of Alma, explained how the priesthood came:

I, Alma, having been consecrated by my father Alma to be a high priest over the church of God, he having power and authority from God to do these things, behold, I say unto you, that he began to establish a church in the land which was in the borders of Nephi.—Book of Mormon, page 313, verse 3.

There is no greater authority than that under which Alma administered. The contradiction implied in the question does not exist. Instead there is perfect harmony, and there is as much validity for the existence and operation of the Melchisedec priesthood among the Nephites as there is for its presence among us.

Question:

Is not the Reorganized Church adding officers to the church by having patriarchs?

Saskatchewan

H. W. F.

Answer:

No. The office of patriarch or evangelical minister, like all other offices in the Reorganized Church, was established by the Lord in the founding of the church at the time of its restoration, just as it was placed in the New Testament church as stated by Paul:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.—Ephesians 4:11, 12.

In restoring his church in 1830, after the long apostasy during which the existing churches had displaced many of the officers Christ had appointed, and had instituted others which he had not appointed, the Lord by revelation again set certain offices in the church, and provided for officers to fill them. The list includes the office of "evangelist."

The New Testament does not define the work of an evangelist, though Paul's statement previously quoted indicates quite strongly that it was in ministering to the saints. In defining the duties belonging to this office in the church today, the Lord indicated that it was to serve the needs of the membership rather than to travel as missionaries to the world.

The revelations which have guided the church in its present organization, more often refer to this officer as "evangelist" or "evangelical minister" rather than as patriarch, though the latter name is sometimes used. The Lord says, "The patriarch is an evangelical minister," the names being used by our church as synonymous. The name "evangelist" is mentioned only three times in the New Testament, and each time incidentally, hence the need for more light upon it.

CHARLES FRY.

Question:

What are the functions of counselors, and are they the same as associate pastors?

Ontario

K. P.

Answer:

A counselor, as the term implies, is a counselor to the pastor. The pastor is the executive officer of the branch. The counselor advises and assists the pastor, and accepts responsibility as a representative of the pastor. The counselor may well be a specialist in advising and supervising departmental work in the branch, when authorized specifically to do so. He may, when so designated and authorized, supervise home visiting or missionary work performed by the local priesthood and other selected persons.

He is an extension of the pastoral arm, with his work being directed by the pastor.

He is not an associate pastor, as this implies equal authority and responsibility with the pastor. For efficient performance, all organizations must have a directive head. To this responsibility the branch president, or pastor, is elected. The counselor is elected, usually by nomination from the pastor, to counsel and assist the pastor as he may be directed or appointed. He may be expected to, and should have, inspiration in the performance of his work as counselor. However, the final disposal of the matter is the responsibility of the pastor.

ALMA C. ANDREWS

Question:

Please explain Revelation 13:10: "He that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword."

Oklahoma

Mrs. G. K.

Answer:

The sword, it would seem, is symbolic of any lethal weapon. Condemnation would fall upon the unprovoked aggressor. In Matthew 18:6, Jesus is recorded as saying: "Woe unto the world because of offences! For it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!" There are many instances in the Scriptures in which the just defender is not only justified, but aided by divine power.

Renewed Resolutions

By Betty Sanford Tripp

THE DRIZZLY WINTER RAIN beating against the windowpane echoed the misery in Susan's own heart, as she sat staring at the piece of white paper in her hands. No matter how hard she tried, she couldn't seem to get ahead. The list in her hands proved that! It was her New Year's resolution list for 1950 which she had accidentally run across while cleaning out the desk drawers. She had glanced at it curiously, wondering what it was she had written there last January. And as she read it over, she became more and more discouraged. She could hardly remember now the enthusiasm with which she had jotted those things down. She had been so sure that 1950 was going to be a better year for her—that she was going to do and be all the things she so desired.

A tear of self-pity trickled down her cheek. If she just had more determination . . . if she could just be more methodical and practical . . . but it seemed as if she couldn't get her life organized the way she wanted it to be. Reluctantly, her eyes strayed again to the neatly printed list in her lap.

1. I resolve to keep an accurate account of my income and expenses during the year, writing them down carefully.

Susan shook her head helplessly. Her family record book was in a deplorable state. For the first few months she had really tried to keep an accurate account, but somehow when she came home from shopping there were always meals to get, clothes to change, and so much to do that she'd put off jotting down her spendings. And as a result of this, she'd often as not have to guess a lot of the items at the end of the month. And her books simply refused to balance as they ought. Would she ever learn to keep an account as the church intended her to do?

With a feeling of hesitation, she read on:

2. I resolve to take one hour from every day to read church literature that I might grow in wisdom and in understanding.

One hour a day! At the time she had written that, she had thought anybody ought to be able to find just one hour in the day to meditate . . . but instead her hours had gone into baking and cooking and sewing and washing, in shopping and choir practice, and ironing and church school classes.

Again tears of self-pity formed in her eyes. Impatiently she brushed them away. Other women found time to study, and reared families and kept up their housework. No, it wasn't lack of time; it was lack of management. It all went back to the fact that she just didn't manage her time correctly.

NUMBER THREE was no more encouraging than the first two had been.

3. I resolve to be a friendly visitor this year and to win at least one soul to the church.

Almost involuntarily her thoughts went back to the beginning of the year when young Jane Thomas and her husband had moved into a house in their block. Jane had been new in town, and surely had been lonesome. Susan had called on her a time or two at first, and then in the rush of things had neglected to go back for several months. And when she did, Jane told her that one of the Christian ladies had been so friendly, she and her husband had decided to join the Christian Church. Susan had tried to forget that it was through her own indifference and neglect that these newcomers were lost to the light which she could have given them, but now she was reminded.

And what had become of those daily prayers she had promised herself to say for the three people on her missionary list? For several months she had said them faithfully, praying that these people might be given to understand the ways of the church and the influence it could have upon their lives. And then because there seemed to be such little results, she had put it off a morning or two, then several mornings at a time, and now she was at the place where she prayed for them only once or twice a month.

Remorse swept over Susan as she sat probing into her soul. Again she could see a lack of determination within herself—the weakness which always deprived her of real contentment and accomplishment. How could she be satisfied with herself when she knew she lacked the strength of will that was needed to reach the goal set in her mind's eye?

Discouragement became so heavy a burden as she sat there, that unconsciously she crumpled the resolution list between her fingers. Other people set out to do things and did them, but she merely let ambitions and opportunities pass by. What was the matter with her? Why couldn't she ever seem to get ahead?

THE SHRILL RINGING of the telephone shattered the brooding silence about her, and wearily Susan arose to answer it.

"Hello," she answered dully. It was Alice Norman, wanting her to help clean the church Friday. "All right," Susan agreed, with part of her mind still dwelling on her thoughts of discontent.

"And, Susan," Alice's voice continued on, "I've wanted to tell you how much we appreciated your making all the decorations for the children's Christmas party. They were lovely. I wish I had your talent. How ever do you find time for it?"

Susan murmured something about dinner burning on the stove and escaped from Alice's chatter. She was too miserable to even trust her voice to carry on a conversation just now.

It was a long time later that her friend's last words penetrated into her mind. "Lovely decorations," Alice had said, ". . . talent."

For a moment Susan hugged these words of praise close to her. Perhaps she wasn't a failure in all things. She did know how to design and cut out intricate little patterns for decorating the church for services and programs and parties. She had a certain talent for organizing the group for church dinners, and seeing that things came off smoothly. And she usually was asked to make out lists and call the ladies about bazaars and socials. At least she was a good manager when it came to her church affairs.

SUSAN'S TIRED FACE seemed suddenly to light up at the new discovery. Perhaps right this moment some other woman in the branch who could keep her budget books down to the last penny and who read every piece of literature in the church library was crying her heart out because she didn't know how to do the things she wanted to and couldn't seem to find a place to serve in the work of the church.

"Why, we all have our problems," thought Susan, excited now for the inspiration that had come to her so suddenly. All the other men and women and young people in the branch probably had their own dreams and goals set, but went on being just what they were year after year with no really marked change in them.

Eagerly she opened the desk drawer, drew out a slip of clean paper, and began to write:

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS FOR 1951

1. I resolve to be more patient and understanding, not only of the weaknesses of others, but of my own, resolving to give myself due credit for the things I am able to accomplish and encouraging myself to strive harder for those things which hinder my progress, putting my talents to further use in the work of the church, and developing those which are needed to make my own life happier. In view of these things, I resolve also to keep an accurate account of my income and expenses to the best of my ability that my tithing may be more accurate this year than last.

2. I resolve to rise earlier each morning than has been my custom that I may read the church books and commune with God.

3. I resolve to make a real effort to find the time to meet and visit with my friends and neighbors and never let an opportunity slip by that might win a soul to Christ.

With a sigh of satisfaction, Susan signed her name proudly to the paper and then, as an afterthought, penned these simple lines: "Discouragement is like a baby; the more you nurse it, the bigger it grows." This also was to be a reminder to her.

She took the list of resolutions and pinned them above her dressing table where she would glance at them often throughout each day. Then, slipping to her knees beside the bed, she prayed, "Thank thee, Father, for lighting my way with understanding. I'll need thy help this year, I know, in accomplishing these things I desire to do, and many times I shall be ready to give up, but I pray for thy firm hand to direct me at all times that I might help in promoting this great work which thou hast entrusted to thy people. Amen."

LIFE AND MINISTRY OF JESUS

by
F. HENRY
EDWARDS

This text provides both a background study of the geography and times in which Jesus lived, as well as of the things Jesus did and said. It was first published in 1940 and has now been extensively revised. It is a book you can be happy to present to your friends. It contains a vital message in beautiful and understandable language.

MAPLETON, KANSAS.—The following are the officers for the coming year: Arthur Dennis, pastor; Joe Rei, church school director; Perry Gardner, clerk; Charley Rei, treasurer; Hazel Dennis, women's leader; Hazel Stoughton, children's department supervisor; Berdine McCollam, young people's supervisor; Erma Clayton, director of music; Addie Meek, historian; Miriam Loar, publicity agent; Ward Wellington, branch solicitor.

The Zion's League was in charge of both the morning and evening services October 29, with the theme, "A Greater Graceland." The evening service was an installation of officers for the Zion's League followed by a debate on the question, "Resolved, that the prayer meeting is the spiritual thermometer of the church."

The women's department had some fine meetings this fall. Beginning the first meeting in October, in place of devotions, all joined in circle prayers for the success of the missionary series to be held the last week in November. Apostle D. O. Chesworth was the speaker at the women's meeting November 29. He told several of his outstanding experiences as a minister.

On November 26, Apostle D. O. Chesworth started his series of meetings which lasted for six nights. The average attendance was around 130, many of whom were nonmembers.

Seventy Donald L. Kyser held cottage meetings and visited among the Saints for two weeks following Apostle Chesworth's series of meetings. As a result of these meetings, Ellsworth Clyton and Edward Nickelson were baptized December 17 by Elder Arthur Dennis. They were confirmed by Elders Lee Quick, Arthur Dennis, and Donald Kyser. At this service, 132 were in attendance. These two baptisms brought the total baptisms for the year of 1950 to ten.

Seventy Donald Kyser was the speaker for the first three Sunday evenings of December, using slides to illustrate his message. He also spoke at the morning service December 10.

Seven women attended the district women's meeting at Fort Scott, December 5, when Elder and Sister Stephen Black were the speakers.

The young people were well represented at the district Zion's League Christmas party in Fort Scott, December 14.

December 24, Elder Arthur Dennis in behalf of the Saints presented a platform rocker and floor lamp to Elder and Sister Lee Quick as a token of their appreciation for the fine service they have rendered to the Mapleton Saints through the years.

December 31, the morning speaker was Priest Joe Wellington home on vacation from Graceland College. The evening speaker was Priest Nelson Lucas home on furlough from San Francisco, California.

During December an average of 104 have attended church school, which is an increase in the average of 80 during August and September.—Reported by BERDINE MCCOLLAM.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN DISTRICT.—The Lansing Branch was the host for the district priesthood and their companions at a yuletide fellowship December 17. Sixty-one men, including some young unordained men along with their companions, participated in a short worship followed by a study class for men and one for women. A period of organ meditation concluded the afternoon meeting. The evening candlelight Communion service was very impressive. The 157 in attendance listened to the Christmas story told in special Bible quotations, Christmas hymns by the choir, and the Communion message.

The priesthood of the district are giving one night a week to their ministry in an endeavor to visit and strengthen the families of each branch. One evening a month is spent in study in each group with James C. Phillips as instructor. Elder J. Charles Mottashed, leader of district priesthood education, is giving a series of monthly lectures on R. L. D. S. theology for the whole district group. A number of young unordained men are coming to these meetings.—Reported by JAMES C. PHILLIPS.

LONDON DISTRICT WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT INSTITUTE.—The institute was held in London, November 23 and 24. Apostle C. G. Mesley and the district president, Elder C. E. Muir opened the institute by conducting a worship service. At this service Brother Muir welcomed Apostle and Mrs. Mesley as well as visitors from all parts of the London, Ontario, district.

The women met for classwork with Sister Mesley as speaker.

One hundred and twenty-eight women met at a banquet and heard an inspiring address by Sister Mesley. A vocal solo, a reading, and a trumpet solo were rendered by three of our girls. Following the banquet the group of women attended a very instructive lecture given by Dr. Evan Shute at the State Institute.

November 24, study classes and round-table discussions with Mrs. Mesley as instructor were held. At the conclusion of this, the institute was closed.

Following the conclusion of the two-day association of the women, the young business and professional girls of London Branch held a lovely dinner at Braemore Lodge and had as their guests Mrs. B. McMaster, district leader; Mrs. S. S. Moore, branch women's leader; and Mrs. C. G. Mesley as the guest and speaker for the occasion.—Reported by MRS. BEATRICE McMMASTER.

CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE.—A stake yuletide priesthood institute was held at the Warrensburg church on December 29, 30 and 31 with approximately 100 men in attendance. The theme was "How Shall We Save Marriage and Family Life for the Kingdom." Classes were conducted by Bishops Leslie Kohlman and Willard Becker, Seventy John Puckett, High Priests Carl Mesle, and E. P. Darnell. Members of the stake presidency presided over the prayer services. Other local stake officers and workers assisted in the discussions.

Early in December missionary services were held in eleven different congregations. These were all held during the same week, and the sermons were preached by members of the stake presidency, bishopric, and high council in addition to a series by the stake missionary.

Other news includes the announcement of the installation of a baptismal font in the Odessa church, the raising of $1,351 in one evening to finish paying the indebtedness on the Richmond church, the extensive work being done in putting a basement under the Lee's Summit church and the installation of a new gas furnace there. In recent months there have been baptisms at Warrensburg, Buckner, Richmond, Lee's Summit, Atherton, Knob Noster, Holden, Blue Springs, Odessa, Marshall, Wakenda, and Kingsville.

A series of sermons will be presented in January in the Blairstown Methodist church by Elder Evan Fry as an attempt is made to open up the work in that area.

The work at Atherton is characterized by considerable activity on the part of practically every department. The women's department and young adult department have both emphasized the matter of friendly visiting. Zion's League conducted the service on the evening of December 17, and the children's division of the church school presented the worship service on the morning of December 24. Elder Ammon Beebe is pastor.

Oak Grove, under the pastorship of Elder Gerald Thomas, has one objective for this year—the elimination of the remaining indebtedness on the church. Last year the young adult department sponsored a garden project and netted almost $500 which was contributed to the branch budget. A church library has been started, and a new book-case is being constructed.

October 6, the Buckner Zion's League sponsored a chicken dinner at which time $260 was raised for the building fund, and on October 21 a public sale was held at the barn of Brother and Sister George Bilquist. Over $1,300 was raised from that sale for the building fund. The need of a larger church is apparent and efforts are being made to increase the building fund to the amount required when actual construction can begin. December 10, the Buckner church presented an evening of music as a Christmas gift to the community. The service was held in the large Buckner Christian church and over 260 people attended. Elder Roy Smith is pastor at Buckner.

At Blue Springs under the leadership of Elders Carlos Smith as pastor and Eugene Look, who recently moved to Missouri from Maine, as church school director, the ministry of priesthood in the homes is being emphasized. Priest Howard Martin is in charge of the priesthood visiting program. In addition to the Eugene Look family, there have also moved to Blue Springs Elder J. F. Pinson and family and Priest R. W. Murdock and family. A junior choir, directed by Sister Carrie Baird is making a fine contribution to the services.

Elder Charles Pooler, pastor, and the church school director, Burford Page of Harrisonville have assisted in the recent purchase of a building site. At present the congregation meets in the Youth Center. Both the women's department and the Zion's League have sponsored interesting meetings lately.

MEDOC, MISSOURI.—The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting: Elder William L. Miller, pastor; Elders Clifford L. Miller and George Doubledee, associates; Roy Hight, church school director; Mrs. Harel Scott, secretary; A. A. Barrett, treasurer; Mrs. Pearl Williams, solicitor; Mrs. Tom Williams, historian and publicity agent; and Mrs. Pearl Williams, women's leader.

The annual fall bazaar and chicken supper sponsored by the women was held November 3 at which $250 was cleared.

Family night for November was held in the lower auditorium. A covered dish supper was the occasion.

Seventy James C. Daugherty held a series of meetings beginning November 29.

An attendance contest was started the first of October. An increase of 15 per cent was noted. The losing side held a New Year's Watch party for the winners. Refreshments were served.

Mrs. Ernest Troyer was hostess to the women December 21. Gifts were exchanged and refreshments were served.

November 26, Albert Troyer of Independence delivered the morning sermon.

T. W. Bath, pastor at Pittsburg, Kansas, spoke December 17.

The Christmas program was under the direction of Mrs. Geneva Moore and treats were shared by everyone.

Phillip Aaron Eldred, son of Mr. and Mrs. Warren was blessed by Elder Arthur Rock of Independence. Linda Rose Winn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Winn was blessed by Elders W. L. and C. L. Miller.—Reported by MRS. LETA WILLIAMS.

placed on display under a locked glass case from 1:00 to 5:00 p.m. for those attending the institute. Publicity regarding this event had purposely been held to a minimum in the advance announcements, but from 1:00 to 5:00, there was a continual double line reaching from the front vestibule of the church, down the east aisle and past the case which stood in front of the pulpit on the floor level. The manuscript was open at the second chapter of Jacob. Beside it was a printed copy of the Book of Mormon opened to the corresponding page, and adjacent to that was the pile of photostat sheets which contain a complete copy of the original manuscript as an insurance against loss or deterioration of the original. Many comments were heard about the legibility and beauty of Oliver Cowdery's handwriting, and the good state of preservation of both the paper and ink of the manuscript.

The institute closed its formal sessions on Saturday night, January 13, although sermons on the Book of Mormon theme were given in each Independence pulpit on the Sunday morning following.

Other reports giving excerpts of some of the lectures and discussions will appear in subsequent issues of the Herald.

ing, Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."—Zechariah 4: 6.

Truth has so many times in the world's dark history been placed upon the scaffold while its enemies rejoiced in hoping to destroy it. Wrong—wicked and terrible—has so often occupied the throne of power. Yet evil men and nations have never had the last word.

It is not by power alone that great wrong can be destroyed. We must have the Spirit of the Lord to defend us. Let us rely on him.

Captain John Wrigley (the John of the story) and Captain William Prescott, Medical Service Officers with the 17th Infantry Regiment, 7th Division in Korea.

LETTERS ARE SUCH WONDERFUL THINGS. They can bring a far-away land close, or a remembered scene to mind. They can be a vital link from loved one to loved one and ease the months of painful separation. So it is that an army man's letters link Korea to Independence and his heart to our hearts.

It began back aboard the ship USNS "R. L. Howze," which took John out of San Francisco and to a new world of uncertainty and discomfort. Seasickness had been his downfall on more than one occasion, so he wrote happily ". . . I have a good supply of dramamine which should last through this trip nicely." It is hard to leave a wife, a six-year-old son, a way of life . . . harder yet to leave a ten-month-old boy who looks to Daddy for all comfort, who with smile, gesture, and his two little white teeth has entwined himself securely into his father's life. Thus a wistful note crept in the letter telling of the ship's chaplain who entertained the troops aboard ship with a magician's show. "Among the things he removed from a hat was a little pink pig like the one Kirk has . . ."

New Horizons

The War Comes Home

By Louise Scott Wrigley

Always John remembers our older son and his letters paint pictures of sights and sounds so that Johnny may share in these experiences. He told of the flying fish, life aboard ship, crossing the international date line, the phosphorus, and a rainbow, of which he says "the colors were very vivid, and since the rainbow ended in the water, the reflection was as dramatic as the actual rainbow."

I smiled at the thought of my husband humped over a desk with a traveling iron in his big hand, as I read, ". . . you won't believe this, but I ironed a shirt this morning." A cable on his birthday—the second one spent on the high seas going to a war—surprised and pleased him, brought home close once again.

Always comes the warning, "If my letters stop abruptly, don't worry. I will just be moving ahead. . . ." Yet what wife can keep her heart out of her throat when letters don't arrive? Many times have I thanked God for the faithful penman my husband has always been, for many men write seldom, and the fearsome days between are hard for loved ones at home to bear.

WE WERE GIVEN A PICTURE of Japan as he hurried through. ". . . on the voyage up Tokyo Bay, the view was more beautiful than I had anticipated with green hills and white lighthouses. . . . The houses are flimsy, and the people eat, sleep, and sit on mats spread on the floor. The housewives drape the family laundry over a long, bamboo pole which is laid on a rack outside the house."

Later, ". . . if the post office would just get some mail through to me, it would help. Rice and vegetable gardens are everywhere, and the Japanese are always working in the fields."

The constant rain reminded him of Seattle where we had spent so

The little Presbyterian church and congregation of Pungsan, North Korea, where worship was so precious and so appreciated.

many happy hours, and day by day he looked for letters from home which didn't come. "Remind John and Kirk that I love them . . ." he writes, homesick for his two boys. After a month without mail, one letter from home arrived with some pictures of the children. "Johnny looks so well, and Kirk has lots of hair and is standing all alone!" A week later—"I finally hit the jackpot in mail today and received seventeen letters from you. It was wonderful to learn that you really are all right. Can Kirk really whistle . . . does he whistle at little girls? I don't know how to time your special delivery letters any more so that they arrive on Sunday." Then again, "I am glad you are home with your family. Tell Johnny I still get corn flakes every day. What is the inventory on Kirk's teeth now?"

A typhoon warning was something new to most of the men from the States. A "possible" turned to "probable" and the typhoon struck. ". . . [it] hit in the vicinity of here, and the wind and rain were terrific. We were obliged to strike all tents and crowd the men into the mess hall for what little sleep they could secure."

THEN A LONG HOP ACROSS Japan and aboard ship again bound for Korea. In Pusan Harbor in late September, his mind was again on the home we are trying to create even so far from each other. He speaks of material things, but more than that, of the intangibles which are the only things we can ever really possess. "Love the boys for me," he writes. "Teach them and guide them." Even now he is looking ahead into their future, knowing that if we don't put quality there now, it will never develop later. He was always ready with a real answer for Johnny's questions—not just a reply. It was he who found a book where they could "look it up," or grabbed John's hand and said "Let's go see for ourselves how they do that!" It was he who put that satisfied look in Johnny's eyes when he questioned, for he always wanted his boy to know things for sure, not just guess about them. What an overwhelming responsibility for the mother who tries to step into those big shoes so that none of the knowledge-hungry years may be wasted.

As John went into combat, the days were monotonous with the thunder of heavy weapons and the cold and misery of the people all around who were shunted this way and that, as the ponderous machinery of war shoved ahead. Yet always his thoughts remained of the morale at home, and his letters were cheerful and full of compassion for the people who could do nothing but accept this new fate. "A steady stream of refugees keeps going past the area . . ." As he received other pictures, "Kirk is chomping his thumb and his goopie feathers [our name for the curls which wander from the front to the back of Kirk's head] stand up.

"I still don't see how the Koreans endure carrying such loads on their heads, but if we tried it, perhaps we would find it comfortable. It requires an excellent sense of balance. In fact, the air currents of a passing vehicle can cause their load to be off balance, so they always reach up to steady the bundle when a vehicle approaches."

THE WAR AND THE COLD moved on, with frostbite taking its vengeful toll. Over the air came the sudden mention of his name, then the quick relief that he was still all right. Living on the edge of a precipice has nothing on being the wife of a serviceman in combat.

From Pungsan he wrote, "Our lines of evacuation [for wounded] are very long and dangerous, so much treatment is rendered at the clearing station . . . the first battalion just ran into a road block, so we will soon be in business again . . . our interpreter and one of our cooks were just out in the village and purchased a 175 pound hog for 4,000 won, so we will soon have some roast pork to supplement rations."

Kirk, Louise, and John Warren.

And then, on a Sunday "we discovered, to our pleasant surprise, that a real church existed in this town. Our services were held at this church in conjunction with civilian services. It seems that a Presbyterian missionary built this church many years ago and had perhaps two hundred members in his congregation. The present Korean clergyman informed our chaplain that possibly half these members were taken out into the hills and killed. He also added, with tears in his eyes, that he would be happy when an American missionary could again return to the church. Three different services were held this morning, and the civilians were so hungry for worship that they attended all of them. The service I attended was conducted by the Korean clergymen, and of course the Korean language was spoken, but there was never any doubt about the presence of God. It was a truly moving service."

ON THEY WENT, the first outfit to reach the Manchurian border. "We are pretty much up here by ourselves Johnny is doing very well with his printing. . . . We don't have a thermometer, but the radio announced the temperature as twenty below, and I am inclined to agree We are now in a schoolhouse which has a stove, and we can climb into warm sleeping bags tonight

"The one glaring fault with our occupation of a country such as North Korea is our extreme shortage of trained or experienced civil affairs personnel to get a city back on its feet, to give the people something productive to do, to organize the civil government and to establish an equitable rice distribution system."

When the seventeenth regiment was cut off up by the reservoir, the cold hand of fear closed around anxious hearts, and the long wait began again. The silent newspapers mocked our searching eyes. The radio newscasters talked around and around the thing we most wished or dreaded to hear. Then news came of the command post of the twenty-third regiment being overrun and we thought painfully of the two years in which we came to know the men of the twenty-third and were part of them. What of Lieutenant Clements—would he come back to his little, blonde German wife? What of Sergeant Wood and Sergeant Novosad—had their families received word? Where was Robbie—Robbie of the gay whistle and the light step, Robbie our neighbor, whose two little girls looked like him—Becky by her dancing eyes, Georgia with her father's slow, engaging grin? What of the others we had lived and worked and laughed with?

Then the blessed letters again. "It is fifteen below here but somebody says it gets eighty below Yesterday evening and this morning our regiment received an 'air drop' which included medical supplies, ammunition, and some clothing. It was fun to watch the gaily colored parachutes float down from the C-82's. . . . I wrote a letter of condolence today poor solace to the relative of a loved one. . . . six wonderful letters from you the snow is really coming down."

Then back to Hungnam as cover for evacuating troops. "Just one more Saturday night until Christmas. Be sure to tell me about the decorations and doings in Independence and Kansas City, what the children's reactions are."

Finally, ". . . . we left our warm Korean house in the Hungnam perimeter this morning and climbed aboard this beautiful ship. It is very nice has a snack bar that serves real American hamburgers, a soda fountain that serves ice cream as well as genuine candy bars. I took a long, hot shower, the second since October 26. I was forced to eat strawberry shortcake [his favorite] for dessert this noon and tonight we are to have sirloin steak there is a beautiful Christmas tree in the officers' lounge the beds have sheets on them such things, which are normally taken for granted are high points in the life of a soldier thousands of North Korean civilians are grouped together on roads near the docks and they, too, are being evacuated from this area in LST's [landing ship tanks] or any other available ships. Trains going south with equipment were covered with Korean men, women, and children huddled in gaily colored comforters, clinging to the sides of vehicles, sitting in the seats of am-tracks, or perched on top of crates."

And then, ashore again, "Merry Christmas, Sweetheart. I hope today has been as happy for you as it has been for me I opened my packages this morning the pictures and other things are wonderful, the food delicious. Last night just after dark the men spontaneously started singing Christmas carols. My thoughts were of you and the boys. We are quartered again in a nice schoolhouse. There is snow on the ground for Christmas, and best of all was the receipt of eight letters from you, and packages from Mom and Mary Rose [his sister]."

AND HERE AT HOME? His packages, purchases planned for and made so long ago for us, made our Christmas real and warm. The flowers he sent are just now fading, as if they lingered a long time to further express his love. The card enclosed, in his own handwriting, I'll cherish always.

So, into the New Year with the last letter from overseas bearing the date of 30 December and giving us reassurance to that point that he was still well and in good spirits. Who says that love and hope and a belief in a better tomorrow cannot be transmitted through the written word and oh, there's the postman. Excuse me, I'll run to see if there's a letter from my John.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Since this writing "Robbie" (Captain Ralph Robinson of Tacoma, Washington) has been reported seriously wounded and recommended for the Distinguished Service Cross.

The groom, a graduate of Graceland College, is attending Central Missouri State College at Warrensburg, where they are making their home.

INTRODUCING

MARCELLA SCHENCK, Lamoni, Iowa, (page 14), was born near Henderson, Iowa, and baptized at the age of ten. During most of her youth she attended Carson Branch. Recently she retired after thirty-three years of teaching in the primary grades of the Lamoni public schools. Before this she taught seven years in the rural schools of Western Iowa and worked three and a half years in the editorial department at Herald House. Her educational training was taken at Graceland, Iowa State Teachers' College, Kansas City Art Institute, and University of Nebraska. Years ago she took into her home and her heart her niece, Marie Bohn, now Mrs. Jack Craig. Today she has added interest, Gracia Marcella, a baby daughter of "my girl."

Sister Schenck says, "I began writing for church publications forty-eight years ago under the encouragement of Marietta Walker and Estella Wight, mostly for the children."

In addition to all her other duties, she found time to carry on Girl Scout activities and just recently retired from twenty years of scouting, nine of these as leader and eleven as committee woman. She is conducting art classes as a vocation in her present "retirement."

LEWIS E. LANDSBERG, St. Joseph, Missouri (page 5), was born in Independence in 1916. He was graduated from the Bonner Springs, Kansas, High School in 1933. His collegiate work was taken in Park College, Parkville, Missouri; Kansas City, Kansas, Junior College, and Kansas State College, where he received his B.S. degree in agriculture administration. In 1940 he was married to Irene E. Shriver. They have two sons; Dean Arnold, 4, and Kent Lewis, 2 months. Brother Landsberg served as county supervisor of F.S.A. for three and one-half years and then went under conference appointment as bishop of the Lamoni Stake. At the present time he is serving as bishop of Far West Stake. His hobbies are stamp collecting and farming.

J. AUGUST KOEHLER, Independence, Missouri (page 5), is a native of Missouri, where he was also baptized and married. He was graduated from a Kansas City high school and attended Temple University while doing pastoral work at Philadelphia, receiving B.A. and B.D. degrees. In 1901 he was married to Edith Ruth Clow. They have two children, Leonard W. and Altha N. Belscamper. Bishop Koehler lives on a farm near Independence and has as his hobby gladioli culture and landscaping. As a young man he worked at the coppersmith trade, then went to clerking in industry, later becoming foreman. He has served in several offices of the priesthood, including priest, elder, Seventy, high priest, and bishop. He relieved Albert Carmichael as manager of the Herald House for one year and was a member of the Independence Stake Presidency when it was first organized. He has held pastorates in Independence, Missouri; Fall River, Massachusetts; Jonesport, Maine; and First and Second Philadelphia churches. He also served as bishop of Far West and of Central Missouri Stakes.

* SHOP NOTES

A big, new mezzanine floor is going in at the back of the shop (mezzanine sounds fancy, but it's really a very practical planks-and-timber structure) to hold new stacks of the things you customers are ordering. The new elevator has an electric hoist, an improvement over the hand winch on the old one, and a boon to hard-working John Zion, our shipping chief. With all the construction operations over his head, John has continued his "Business as Usual" policy.

Keith has found a substitute for clock-watching. He has put up a little calendar to look at. "The calendar helps me to keep calm," he says. "It doesn't rush me as a clock does." Maybe he has something.

Leola operates a big folding machine many times her size. "What I don't like about it," she complains, "is that there isn't any place where I can kick it when it gives me trouble!"

* RESPONSIBILITY

Years ago a friend of mine, an elder in the church, came to me and gave me an important lesson. He pointed to an article in a current issue of the "Herald."

"Why did you publish that?" he asked. I squirmed unhappily.

"I know it isn't very good," I apologized, "but that member needed encouragement and help. I couldn't turn him down."

"It is good that you feel a responsibility for a weak member," my friend told me, "but you also have a responsibility to thousands of other church members. You must not let them down to please one person."

In this case, as in some others, my desire to be merciful to an individual had made me forget my obligation to many persons. It is not always easy to know what is best. With the finest intentions, we frequently go astray.

* MIRACLE

Igor Gorin, famous singer, tells a moving story in his article, "Miracle in Ward 15-A" ["Christian Herald," January, 1951]. He often sings at veterans' hospitals, and at one of these in Dayton, Ohio, he had a wonderful experience. In the main assembly room for convalescents, he was given a splendid reception. In the wards where injured men could not be moved, there was enthusiastic applause. Then the doctor asked him to sing in 15-A, the psychopathic ward.

In there, his first song received faint applause, and the rest were greeted with blank silence. The doctor, disappointed, was about to lead him out of the ward. Then Gorin had a strong impulse to sing one more song. He spoke to the accompanist at the portable piano, who began to play "The Lord's Prayer." A gaunt, sensitive-looking soldier who had been making sounds during the latter part of the song, waited for the "Amen" and then exclaimed, "The Lord's Prayer . . . That's what we need!"

As the doctor led Mr. Gorin out the door, he explained, "Those words that soldier just spoke are the first he has uttered in two years. You have performed a miracle!"

Mr. Gorin thought of the light of glory that shone in the soldier's face. "Yes, it was a miracle," he said, "but it was not I who performed it."

News and Notes

COUNCIL OF TWELVE

Members of the Council of Twelve in Independence for January council sessions were busily engaged Sunday, January 21, in preaching assignments. Those speaking in Independence were: P. E. Farrow, Stone Church for the two morning services; M. L. Draper, Walnut Park morning service; R. M. Holmes, Stone Church Zion's League, Sunday evening; and C. G. Mesley, 11:00 a.m., KMBC radio service and Walnut Park evening service. Those speaking out of town were: E. J. Gleazer, morning service at Warrensburg; D. T. Williams, morning service at First Church in St. Joseph, Missouri, with a conference of missionary workers in the afternoon; A. A. Oakman at an institute in Wichita, Kansas; D. O. Chesworth, Pittsburg, Kansas, in the morning and Eldorado Springs, Missouri, in the evening; and C. R. Hield at the morning service at Grandview, Kansas.

INSTITUTE AT WICHITA

A combined priesthood and women's institute was held in Wichita, Kansas, January 20, 21. Sister Pauline Arnsen, chairman of the General Council of Women, spoke to the women and directed their classes. Apostle A. A. Oakman and Seventy James Daugherty conducted classes for the men of the priesthood. The theme for the institute was "Lay up for Yourselves Treasures in Heaven."

CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, president emeritus of the order of evangelists, celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday January 19. A dinner was given in his honor and relatives visited him. Brother Smith has been a missionary for fifty-one years and served as presiding patriarch for twenty-six years. He continues to be active in his official office and also teaches a church school class of adults.

ATTENDS MEETING

Kenneth L. Graham, who is also chairman of the Citizens' School Advisory Committee, attended a meeting of the National Citizens' Commission for Public Schools at Cleveland, Ohio, January 12 and 13. One year ago the commission had only three hundred members, and this year a thousand representatives from the Middle Western States were at the gathering. Ray Larsen, president of Time, Inc., is chairman of the National Citizens' Commission for Public Schools.

HAWAII

Missionary Elder James N. Kemp has made a fine contribution to the music development on the island of Hilo in Hawaii. The following is from an article in the "Honolulu Star," "The Reverend Kemp is one of the moving spirits behind the current resurgence of music as a major cultural medium in Hilo. He is music director of the Hilo Oratorio society and the Hilo Symphonic ensemble." Brother Kemp directed the opera "Hansel and Grätel" which was given in December in Hilo and also portrayed the part of the father in the production. The Hilo Oratorio society presented the second annual production of Handel's "The Messiah" under Brother Kemp's direction.

SHOWS SLIDES

The Employee's Club of the Auditorium was shown slides of Europe by Bishop G. L. DeLapp at the regular monthly meeting, January 19. Featured on the program was a duet by May Jorgensen and Bishop Leslie Kohlman. After the program, the group was served a luncheon prepared under the direction of Rosamond Sherman.

Mrs. Myrtle Quitmyer, R. N.

THE FIRST FULL-TIME INSTRUCTOR the "San" employed was Myrtle Grapes in 1925. This was the real beginning of the present School of Nursing. Not that nurses were never trained at the Independence Sanitarium before this, but the school was put on a stable and forward-looking basis at this time. Teaching was a natural for Miss Grapes as she had served as a public schoolteacher for eight years before she took up nursing. Then followed two years of office experience at Waterloo, Iowa, twelve years of private nursing duty and two years as supervisor. She graduated from the Sanitarium nursing course in 1924.

In 1931 she was married to Irvy Quitmyer. She is quite fond of her stepchildren, Ava Snider, Hamilton, Missouri, and Irvy Quitmyer, II, U. S. Navy. She says her "very special interests" are her grandson, Keith Snider, a pre-medic at Graceland, also Irvy III and his baby sister, Brenda Ann of Pensacola, Florida. Mr. Quitmyer died in 1946.

Eight years ago Mrs. Quitmyer resumed her nursing instructor assignment and is devoted to her task and her girls in training. She calls it, "Doing my little bit in preparing girls for the nursing profession which needs so many recruits." She teaches nursing arts, nutrition, geriatrics, and math of drugs and solutions. She is a member of the A.N.A., M.S.N.A., and Nursing League of Nursing Education. (See page 12.)

Radio Under the Constitution

WE HAVE ADOPTED THE POLICY of conservative statement regarding our relations with the Government. Church members are generally knowing to the fact that our application for a radio permit is and has been pending before the Federal Communications Commission for some time. And in recent weeks they have probably read news items to the effect that the official examiner, before whom hearings were held, reported adversely on our application on legal grounds, raising a question as to the right of the Commission under the First Amendment of the United States Constitution to issue a permit to anyone to operate a radio station for church propaganda purposes. For the benefit of our readers, the First Amendment is as follows:

Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

It is not wisdom for us at this time to discuss the legal merits of the examiner's position, preferring to await the action or ruling by the Commission itself; but we may with propriety suggest that the examiner's ruling, which may or may not be sustained, has excited much comment by the press of the country, and we invite our members to forward to us news items, editorials, or comments of any kind about the matter.

From what we have already received, we note many people in the country do not like the ruling of the examiner, and later on we may print some of their criticisms in Herald columns; but we here quote from an editorial in the Ohio State Journal, Columbus, Ohio, under the heading, "Religious Liberty Gets a Setback":

ONCE upon a time a group of men got together and laid down some basic principles for a nation. Liberty and equality, freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of the press were some of the rights guaranteed by these basic principles.

The men were visionaries and idealists. They must also have been realists, for the nation they projected was born, survived and prospered, and the basic rights and freedoms were adhered to reasonably well.

Of course there were always those in America who held the basic rights and freedoms lightly, who were perfectly willing to sacrifice them. And this is easy to do when the rights are those of some minority and the power is the power of the state.

Such a case has come up in Independence, Mo. J. D. Bond, an examiner for the Federal Communications Commission, which holds life-or-death power over all radio stations, has refused to approve for operation a radio station run by an Independence church to promulgate its religion.

Fantastic as it may seem, he claims to have done this on constitutional grounds. Mr. Bond maintains that to approve the application of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to operate a radio station "completely to foster the religious and educational interests of the applicant" would violate the Constitution's provision for separating church and state.

Shades of Jefferson! This is perversion indeed. The Constitution guarantees, not restricts, the freedom of religion. The very provision to which Mr. Bond has recourse was written for that purpose. By keeping the church's radio station off the air, this little bureaucrat has put his paws on the throat not only of freedom of worship but freedom of speech and, ac-ording to many interpretations, freedom of the press.

We are not thoroughly familiar with the doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, but we are familiar with the doctrines of Americanism. This little church should have the right to promote its faith by any decent means, including radio. It has until February 6 to file objections to Bond's ruling. We hope it does.

The only possible interpretation of Mr. Bond's "church and state" argument is that he believes radio to be state property. Only, under this assumption could he logically claim that a church radio station violates the "church and state" principle. We have come a long way down the path to state socialism, the path away from Americanism and freedom, if the FCC can get away with this.—Reprinted by permission of the publisher.

From such comments we can see the country is watching the outcome of our case with considerable interest, and unquestionably a grave question is involved. We, it appears, for the time being at least, are the "guinea pig" in the resolution of the question.

It Will Not Die

The story of polygamy is ever the salacious morsel to dish up for the public, with all its "window dressing" (credit to Utah Mormonism). The Woman with Woman's Digest, January, 1950, number, has a story, "Polygamy in Short Creek Valley," a revamp of Mormon claims as to its origin gathered up in the recent prosecutions of "fundamentalists" who ought to be labeled "recidivists." We have written to the author and the publisher in an attempt to enlighten them as to their erroneous statements about Joseph Smith.

Official

Addressing Our Ministers

One of our leading ministers writes concerning a problem that affects our volunteer officers who engage in business and professional life as well as in church service. It comes from getting church mail and telephone calls into the channels of business. The misuse of church titles results in misunderstanding with people of the world. This man asks for a statement that will help.

To protect the dignity of the church and the men, all should observe these few simple rules:

1. Do not use the church title on any envelope. Use "Mr." or the name without any title.

2. Whenever possible, send all church correspondence to a man's home, not to his place of business. This will avoid inconvenience and delay. Some men cannot transact church business during working hours.

3. If possible, make all telephone calls on church business to the man's home. If you must call him at the office, ask for "Mr.," not for "Brother," nor "Elder."

4. The church title can be used in the letter, under these conditions, and in personal conversation with the officer.

Part-time ministers who are also business and professional men will appreciate this courtesy and consideration on the part of other members.

This is an appeal to district officers as well as to members. May we ask you, personally, to co-operate?

BISHOP J. C. DENT IS DEAD

A telegram has been received that Bishop John C. Dent died on the evening of January 23 in London, Ontario. Bishop Dent had been a member of the church since 1891 and had served in the office of high priest and bishop since 1920. In addition to his work as bishop, he served as president of the Chatham District for three and a half years and pastor of the Bothwell Branch for sixteen and a half years. He was also a member of the Erie Beach Reunion Committee for thirty-eight years. In 1949 he was released from his responsibilities as bishop of the Chatham and London Districts.

The editors hope to have a more extended tribute to use soon in the Herald.

Sister Mary Curtis, Nelsonville, Ohio, sends us a clipping from the Athens (Ohio) Daily Messenger of recent date, which appears to be a sketch of the town of Creola, Ohio. Because of Elder A. B. Kirkendall's career as a minister of the church, we excerpt these paragraphs:

The first post office at Creola was known as Karns City, but the name Creola was suggested by a resident who had read a novel in which this name figured. The first post office was a movable van near the railroad station. For about 50 years the late A. B. Kirkendall was postmaster and station agent. David Fri was the first rural carrier out of Creola and held this post for 26 years. Sawmills once operated day and night about the village. The first school stood just east of Route 75 near the Steele home.

Mr. Kirkendall was one of the founders of the [Reorganized] Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Creola, and the first meetings of this group were held in his home in 1887. In 1899, when the present church was built, it was dedicated by a sermon preached by Elder Joseph Smith, son of the founder of the Mormon Church. Mr. Kirkendall was pastor of the church from 1892 until 1938 and spoke there more than 2,000 times. The Bible Christian Church in the village was founded after the famous H. C. (Syndicate) Wilson held a series of meetings there in 1898.

In the church of the Latter Day Saints of Creola is a painting of unusual design with a scroll on which are these words "Whosoever will, may come," and a cross surmounted by a crown. This painting was executed by one Thomas McIntyre who was working on a farm near by many years ago, despite his ability as an artist. Elder Kirkendall related that he had a dream in which the design of the painting came to him and upon his relating of the dream, the farmhand painted it on the wall of the building.

Today there is little business in the town of Creola but from its railroad station in another day more iron ore was shipped there than from any other station its size along Hocking Valley Railroad system.

Brother Franz Beil of Hannover, Germany, writes:

This year again I desire to wish you and the whole priesthood, as well as all the members of our church, a happy and blessed Christmas. We of the Hannover Branch, pray that all the Saints may be richly blessed in 1951. May the Lord give you strength, and may his Spirit guide you so that you may bring all of us closer to him. We of the Hannover Branch have many reasons to be thankful for the blessings of this past year which the Lord has bestowed upon us. We are especially grateful that we had the privilege of having the brethren with us, whereby we felt God's Spirit in great power. May the Lord give us strength to be true to his cause, and may he make it possible for you to meet with us here again soon.

God in History

A Sermon delivered at Stone Church on November 12

By John Blackmore

But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we shall walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion. . . . they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid.—Micah 4: 1-4.

YESTERDAY WAS ARMISTICE DAY—the anniversary of November 11, 1918, when the roar of cannon and the din of war ceased on the “Western Front” in the First World War. On that day thirty-two years ago, the hope of the world seemed bright. The Germany of Bismarck and the Hohenzollerns, with the Austrian Empire of the Hapsburgs, had been defeated in a bloody war which cost the lives of ten million men. We had hopes that day of an enduring peace. Then for a few precious years the world went to sleep amid the “dreams” of peace. Men became interested in things—airplanes, faster automobiles, better washing machines, and other paraphernalia associated with the luxuries of life. Suddenly the “dreams” of peace were shattered. Out of the material debris and psychological residue of that First World War came new and more dangerous forces. Hitler and Mussolini rose to the top of the froth of the war’s aftermath. The “dreams” of November 11, 1918, were lost in feverish preparations of the nations for World War II. The world in those days was caught in a stream of onrushing events. Men of vision saw the Niagarian cataract ahead, but the currents were too strong. So the world swiftly drifted into the morass and maelstrom of World War II. Conservative estimates say that fifty million perished in that deluge of destruction. Nations became bankrupt, and the masses lost their sense of direction and perspective.

Today, five years after that terrific holocaust, the peoples of the world have not found peace. We see the stream of events carrying us into further international difficulties and most probably into a greater and more devastating conflict. However, I am not going to talk only of wars and rumors of wars this morning. History presents to us a great and impressive pageant with a constantly shifting scenery. My message this morning is—

The Saint Should Never Lose Sight of God in History

In history we see men rise out of the dust and for a short period strut upon the stage of history and then return to the dust—Caesar, Napoleon, Bismarck, Hitler, and Mussolini. But, my friends, we also see the collective life of man moving slowly and painfully, many times stumbling and falling, then rising again out of the pit of darkness and ignorance into the dawning light of greater knowledge. We see man in his exalted life receiving multitudinous revelations from God—in the fields of religion, science, and other social aspects of life. We see mankind heroically fighting his way upward, pausing sometimes on a social plateau, toward an ever-brighter day of greater understanding. That is why we are here this morning—we see God in history.

There Is no Death With God

The tragedy of war in God’s sight is not the death of men, for with God there is no death except the spiritual death of separation in motive from him. The temporal death is merely the passing of the soul from one room to another room, always in the presence of God. The tragedy of war in God’s sight is the frustration of the “good” in the lives of men. It is the warping of the soul in the madness of hate and the insanity of destruction.

The Saints’ Ultimate Hope Is in the God of History

We cannot define God. Clerics and theologians have tried it and failed. God is more than any definition. He is greater than any image we can picture. There is a vast difference in believing in God and in believing in some particular picture of him. I can and do believe in God, but not necessarily in any particular mental picture of him. No human idea of God can adequately express the nature of so great a creator. But our being incapable of adequately picturing him does not make him any the less real. Of course, we must express God in words, so we say, “God is love”—which is a beautiful expressive statement, or we say “God is good”—which is a very inadequate description, for “good” in its final form is beyond comprehension. Sometimes we say, “God is our Father,” but our conception of

"father" is limited by our human experience. In history we see God, an unexplainable, undefinable, unpicturable entity or spiritual force and power, the source of all light, of knowledge, and of all life. Yet, for convenience—and rightly so—we may form our personal mental picture of him as a Father and a friend. However, an intelligent belief in God involves fundamentally an attitude toward life as a whole. It involves a way of looking at creation, not as a haphazard, nonpurposeful affair, but as a universe of law and order, involving an eternal purpose. An intelligent belief in God involves a way of interpreting events of history in terms of an ultimate though distant purpose. A belief in God is a way of relating oneself to the whole structure of creation. The individual man is an integral part of the universe, not an isolated mechanism or personality. We must have a consciousness of God "in whom we live and move and have our being." Please, for this morning, let us think of God not as some distant potentate commanding and arbitrarily forcing man onward, but as a supreme intelligence, an ever-active creator, a spiritual entity working in and through and with this vast universe. The universe is not merely a demonstration of God—it is his manifestation. It is impossible to separate God from his universe. He could not exist apart or distant from the universe or its history.

The Spiritual Element in History

We see a spiritual—some may call it psychic—element in history that must be understood as the "real" history. It is the eternal struggle of spirit and will over matter, of life over death, of intelligence over ignorance. It is the eternal conflict of the good and the evil. Apart from this spiritual, this innate intelligence, the individual would never know himself. He would live the life of a brute animal satisfying the urgent appetites of hunger, sex, and physical needs. History, in the ultimate, becomes the record of the social and spiritual evolution of man. It did not occur to primitive man for thousands of years that nature could be understood—that all physical phenomena are ordered by universal law. Only slowly this idea dawned upon him. Some have not yet learned it, for they wait upon the whims of the gods for a better social order. Zion will be realized only as we strive to make our intelligent dreams come true. It is this spiritual urge, this "push-upward," this unknown quality called the soul of man through which God works in history. God in history—social history—works through personalities. When he wants to achieve social progress, he does not initiate merely a new church program. He inspires some man or men to do his work. It is against this background that we must interpret our very human world with all of its problems.

God Works Socially Through Men

We are always wondering at the marvels of the present: giant jet-propelled airships traveling at six hundred miles per hour; radio and television; radar and the marvels of atomic power—all God's intelligence expressed through men. With this background of thought we can better understand the statement of the Scriptures, "Come let us make man in our own image." Man has within him the creative genius of God.

Man is progressively harnessing the forces of nature, causing the deserts to bloom as the rose, turning night into day by the power of nature's waterfalls, filling the heavens with music and pulling it out again from the heavens into our homes, throwing across seas and plains animated pictures to be seen by the boys and girls in the sanctuary of their homes. To be sure the world is a muddle of perplexing thought and activity. Physical science has jumped ahead of spiritual culture. But the problems an advanced science develops accelerates the spiritual forces of adjustment. The increasing horribleness of war forces men to think on higher spiritual levels. And the fear of the future increases our meditation about social justice. We are gradually learning that the meeting place with God is not the bloody altar of sacrifice; nor the holy of holies, for God cannot be confined to space nor the church nor the synagogue. The meeting place with God is the need of our brother—whether in Zion, New York, London, or Sydney.

Ultimately This Will Be God's World

The revelation of the gospel to the Saint must be the divine movement with an ever-enlarging concept. If the Saint is to remain a Saint, he must press on to spiritual maturity. In spite of the dark clouds on the international horizon, in spite of the possibilities of a third devastating world war, the Saint must go forward to realize his spiritual dreams and hopes. Ultimately this will be God's world. We have seen him directing Noah to build an ark to avert a coming catastrophe and to save anew the social world. We have seen him calling Abraham from among the Chaldees of Ur, with whom he made a special covenant and created the beginnings of a new people. We have seen him saving the boy Joseph to serve a starving people and to preserve the beginnings of a new nation who were to make an essential contribution to the religious thought of the world. Again, we see him speaking to the herdsman, Moses, from the burning bush, and Moses became the leader of men. We have seen his hand in the ancient history of this land of America, leading Lehi and his family across the ocean to people a new world. Later we see a stirring in Europe as a sailor with a vision of other lands stands before kings and queens seeking help. We see him driving the "Pinta," "Nina," and the "Santa Maria" before the winds across unknown seas to discover the shoreline of a new continent. This sailor was the forerunner of the Pilgrims who made this land a haven of

Not Afraid to Tread Unusual Paths

HOLY WRIT IS RICH with promises of assurance for the man or woman who seeks to obey God's will, but in this materialistic age, too many Christians shy away from anything that cannot be explained as the normal action of a natural man. We are terribly afraid of being labeled "peculiar," yet that is the category into which the majority of God's chosen men were placed. Our modern designation for men and women who follow God's leading is: "He's peculiar."

History is replete with incidents that prove the wisdom of God's peculiar men—men who went out not knowing whither they went as the Spirit of God urged them to go in faith. Noah, Abraham, Moses, Gideon, Samuel, and Philip were the peculiar men of their generations, but none can say today that they were misguided.

It took great courage for Noah to predict a flood and build an ark. It is easy to imagine the sly glances of neighbors as they stood watching the old ship builder daub pitch on the ark. No doubt his sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth, were a little embarrassed at the old man's actions.

There probably were many quiet discussions in their home about the illusions Dad had developed. Sons always know more than their fathers until they find themselves in the midst of the floods of life, and then, somehow, Dad's crazy ideas and his seaworthy ship do not seem to be quite as foolish as they once were.

We can imagine the three boys later, as they looked out over the flooded world, saying to each other, "Dad really knew his stuff; he wasn't so foolish after all."

IT IS VERY DIFFICULT at times to decide just what are God's leadings. God ordered Samuel to go down to Bethlehem to anoint a king over Israel: "Fill thine horn with oil and go . . . I will shew thee what thou shalt do."—I Samuel 16: 1.

Samuel's experience with God in the past was such that he had learned to obey the inward urge. In this instance he did not know the sons of Jesse, but he started out on the road to Bethlehem, expecting further instructions as he proceeded along the way.

He looked over the seven sons of Jesse, and something within told him that they were not the men God wanted anointed. "Are all thy children here?" he asked. Then David was called from the sheepfold, and the Lord said, "Arise and anoint him." To leave no doubt in the mind of Samuel that he had made the right choice, "the Spirit of God came upon David."

A FRIEND OF MINE and I were chatting one day recently along these lines. He told me the story of Reverend James Graham, a Methodist minister, who followed the urge to go out one night to a strange and apparently empty house.

He went in and saw no one, but following the urge, he prayed aloud. Later he learned that a man was crouching in the old building planning a crime, and the prayer of the old minister led to his conversion.

Experiences like this are not unusual in the annals of church history. Philip was told by the Spirit of God: "Go join thyself to this chariot." It was a strange order in a strange place, but the fulfilling of the command brought salvation to an Ethiopian (See Acts 8: 26-40).

Joseph Smith felt the urge to go to the rear of his father's farm and pray under a large tree in the grounds. The result was a vision and the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Certain religious leaders today recognize this type of individual generally as a godly person with character above reproach that they must have patience with, but as far as and as soon as possible they use the process of elimination from church offices and activities so that the membership will not be affected by their influence.

Such experiences are not unusual in our day. Time and again we have had a burden laid on our heart to go and join ourselves to some passing chariot. Sometimes the urge has been to write a letter to someone.

On more than one occasion, we have failed to follow the leading of God's Spirit, and later events proved that it was our last opportunity to write to such a one. The result is that we have many regrets to remember when we might have had spiritual triumphs had we followed the urging of the Spirit.

We are sure that many readers could tell stories of divine guidance that would lend strength and courage to others who are afraid to follow the dictates of the Spirit of God or, as some call it, inner urgings. Our own experience has proved times without number that the still, small voice is to be trusted, for truly, "the meek will he guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way."

National Morality

Let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be obtained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

Let Us Not Be Confused

By Clair E. Weldon

The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors.

TWO THOUGHT-PROVOKING ARTICLES stating opposite points of view recently appeared in the Herald. Their wonder-arousing topics were "The Serpent Symbol" and "The Feathered Serpent." Friends have come to me, asking, "What's this about serpents?" "I'm all mixed up about it." "It's too deep for me." They may be typical of others in the church. Probably many Herald readers are confused by these divergent opinions about a scholarly subject. We hope now to make clear a matter that may seem perplexing.

The authors of these articles are among the church's leading students of the Book of Mormon. They express different points of view about their subject. Some people think that these articles should not have been printed. They fear that differences of opinion will lead to argument and contention in the church. But the editors made it clear that the topic is DEBATABLE: it has at least two sides, neither of which is definitely established. They stressed that viewpoints expressed do not commit the editors or the church. We should learn that men engaged in the same cause can have different opinions without angrily clubbing each other or disrupting their common endeavor. So let us consider these questions: "What is the serpent symbol?" and "What is its significance in the work of the church?" Let us strive for a clearer understanding through a process of logical thinking.

Importance of the Book of Mormon

Movement and message. The young boy Joseph Smith received divine counsel to prepare for two things: (a) assisting God in the restoration of his church and gospel among men, and (b) receiving, translating, and publishing the Book of Mormon. This book was presented to the world shortly before the church was organized in April, 1830. We believe that Joseph Smith was a prophetic leader in the restoration of God's work among men. The Book of Mormon is an important product of his prophetic ministry.

The Book of Mormon makes many amazing claims. It purports to be a history of three groups of people led to America by our Heavenly Father. It tells of mighty civilizations in ancient America. It speaks of large populations, many cities, beautiful buildings, roads, prosperous commerce, skilled workmanship in stone, metal and cloth. Its 777 pages are filled with plain, detailed descriptions of the peoples and civilizations which flourished in ancient America.

Archaeological evidences support the Book of Mormon. Archaeologists are scientists who search for the ruins and remains of ancient people. These men have done a great deal of strenuous, painstaking work in digging out the remains of ancient civilizations in Mexico, Central and South America. The results of their work vindicate the amazing claims of the Book of Mormon. (For example: it claims that the ancient people were expert workers in gold. We find gold jewelry of high quality in the ruins.)

Proof of Authenticity

The Book of Mormon has tremendous missionary value. This is its significance: it was published in 1830 with definite commitments about the people of ancient America. In 1830 both scientists and the general public thought that there had been no civilized developments in America before the white men came. They regarded the Indians of America as barbaric savages who never advanced beyond a very primitive cultural level. Some clay pottery, flint arrowheads, blunt tomahawks, blood-curdling yells, cruelty, stealthiness, and an uncanny ability for living out-of-doors—these were among the popular ideas about the level of Indian achievement. Naturally, the claims of the Book of Mormon drew intense ridicule. Joseph was described as a neurotic boy from the backwoods who craved attention and wrote the Book of Mormon out of his fantastic and warped imagination.

A few years after 1830, an American diplomat found a great city buried in the wilds of Yucatan. This was Chichen Itza, the first ruins of ancient American civilization to be vividly "discovered" to world awareness. Other remains had been found before. The Spanish conquerors and priests had seen some evidences of civilized developments. A few wrote down what they saw. But these things were not known among either the men of learning or the common people of the United States. So Chichen Itza was like a siren in the night. Its discovery filled the scientists of the time with consternation. But they soon accepted the inevitable, changed their pat little theories about America's ancient peoples, and set to work following the lead of Chichen Itza. Progress in searching out and excavating other ruins was slow at first. It was 1900 and later before our museums and scientific organizations began to pour men and money into the work in large quantities. Through the years many ruins and artifacts have been excavated and studied. Today the evidences of archaeology present a fairly detailed picture of the great civilizations of ancient America.

This is the crucial point. These civilizations were all but unknown in 1830 when the Book of Mormon was published. We can put the Book of Mormon to a scientific test—we can compare what science has now amassed with what the Book of Mormon claimed before the discoveries were made. Archaeology in 1950 positively supports many claims the Book of Mormon made in 1830. Joseph Smith (or any other man) could not possibly have written the book then or now!

Archaeological discoveries after the Book of Mormon was published bear witness of its divinity. And that is powerful, dynamic, concrete evidence supporting the Restoration Movement. Some of us in the church take great advantage of this. We use colored slides of these ruins and remains in our missionary work. Our appeal has cold, calculating reason and the backing of scientific authority. Our message about the Book of Mormon is very convincing and effective. On that basis we can present the spiritual authority and moral rightness of the Restoration of the church of Jesus Christ. And that is our main endeavor. The Book of Mormon offers convincing evidence that Joseph Smith was divinely led in its discovery and translation, also in organizing the church of Jesus Christ in these latter days, and in preaching the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. Our people are recognizing the vital appeal of the Book of Mormon in our missionary message.

Where Does the "Serpent Symbol" Come In?

Archaeologists have excavated many ruined cities. They have found various kinds of buildings: pyramids, temples, courts, and unusual structures of many sizes and descriptions. These stone buildings were found in various stages of downfall and ruin. Some were completely covered with soil and vegetation. Some were remarkably well-preserved. Others were no more than jumbled piles of stones. The archaeologists needed great patience and endurance. They have tried to rebuild the cities—to restore each building to its original form of architecture and decoration.

Representations of snakes are found on many of these buildings. Two massive stone snakes form the main entrance of a temple in Chichen Itza. A pyramid near Mexico City has long rows of snakeheads adorning its base. Many other structures have similar snake forms. Snakes are often pictured on the sculptured fronts of buildings. Their scales and tortuous bodies are clearly evident. Stone snakes often stand by themselves as columns, statues, or altar-pieces. Their faces are sometimes weird and menacing—and sometimes almost obscured with symbolic sculpturing. Many of these ruins are literally infested with symbols of snakes or serpents—twining about walls and doorways, wriggling across sculpture work, and rearing up in majestic isolation. I have seen many of them, and they are very striking, to say the least. This snake design is a dominant feature of decoration and sculpture in many ruined cities in Mexico and Central America. This snake-emphasis is called "The Serpent Symbol."

Why was there such a preoccupation with snakes in ancient American architecture and sculpture? Book of Mormon students offer different answers to explain the snake symbols.

A Symbol of Christ

The Indians said that these snake symbols represented one of their great legendary gods. The Aztecs called him Quetzalcoatl. His Mayan name was Kukulcan. Both names mean "The Feathered Serpent." The feather-serpent god was worshiped by Indian peoples in widely-separated areas of ancient America. Knowledge of him had spread even farther. The Indians had many legends about him: he came from an eastern land across the sea; he was born of a virgin; he was light-skinned and had a long beard; he wore a flowing white robe; he taught the people to live together in peace and happiness; and he departed mysteriously, promising that he would return. These stories about the "Feathered Serpent" god plainly suggest the person of Jesus Christ.

Jesus Christ is the central witness of the Book of Mormon. Its chief claim is that Jesus Christ personally visited the peoples of ancient America and taught them his gospel. His ministry brought far-reaching changes in their personal lives and in the course of their history. Two centuries of peace, unity, and prosperity followed his coming. If Christ actually visited America and made such a tremendous impression, surely some indications would have survived the ensuing march of time.

We have trustworthy evidence of Jesus Christ in ancient America. The symbol of the cross was common among the ruins and inscriptions. This led the Spanish priests to believe that: (a) it was the work of the devil, or (b) some Christian—perhaps St. Thomas—had visited America. The famous Tablet of the Cross, found in a beautiful temple at Palenque (southern Mexico), shows a cross being worshiped as the symbol of life by two priests. Sculptures at Yaxchilan show persons holding crosses in their hands. A number of cruciform tombs (shaped like a cross) have been found. And most significant are the Quetzalcoatl—Kukulcan legends, for which Jesus Christ is the reasonable explanation.

We have a reasonable, scientifically supported basis for believing the Book of Mormon. This basis is continually growing. It becomes broader, richer, and more convincing as new evidences are uncovered. The "Feathered Serpent" legends (so suggestive of Jesus Christ) raise these questions: Should we accept the many striking snake symbols as added evidence of Jesus Christ in ancient America? And if so, shall we use them in our missionary endeavors to prove the Book of Mormon? These are the basic questions involved in these Herald articles. Here is a brief summary of the central ideas and main points of the two points of view. We hope that they are represented fairly and adequately.

VIEWPOINT NUMBER ONE

(Herald, November 27)

Central Idea—The serpent in ancient America archaeology is the symbol of an idol-worship which developed as an apostate perversion of the true gospel of Jesus Christ.

Main Points—

(a) Our Three Standard Books use the serpent as a name and symbol for Satan, not Jesus Christ.

(b) The serpent is widely regarded today (also in Bible times) as a symbol of sin, degradation, and vileness.

(c) The serpent forms of ancient American archaeology are the images of an idol worship which flourished among the Lamanites after the Nephites were destroyed.

(d) This serpent idol worship appeared among the Lamanites before the Nephite destruction. It caused considerable trouble by winning Nephite converts to its practices.

(e) This serpent idol worship was related to similar worship of serpent images among their ancestors in ancient Israel. King Hezekiah tried to stamp it out (without complete success).

(f) There is an analogy between Moses' lifting up the brazen serpent in the wilderness and Christ's being lifted up upon the cross. But the comparison is in the lifting up: both were lifted up that the people might live. The serpent was not lifted up to portray symbolically the future crucifixion of Christ.

(g) Satan fostered the serpent-image worship to besmirch the name of Jesus Christ and to confuse the evidence of his visit to ancient America.

(h) After the Nephite destruction, the true religious ideas about Jesus Christ became confused and mixed with the symbols of a barbaric religion. Perhaps some sincere reformation movement among the Lamanites restored what was left of the knowledge of Christ and combined it with the apostate feathered serpent cult.

(i) The serpent was worshiped in and of itself: it was the image of a true idol worship.

Conclusion: We cannot accept the serpent in ancient America as a true symbol of Jesus Christ. We should not advance it as added evidence for the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

VIEWPOINT NUMBER TWO

(Herald, December 4)

Central Idea—The serpent in ancient American archaeology is a true symbol of Jesus Christ. It had divine origin among the Israelites and was developed by the followers of Christ in ancient America.

Main Points—

(a) The Book of Mormon's story of Christ's visit to ancient America is one of the most startling, wonderful developments of our times.

(b) The Bible contains definite evidence that Jesus Christ was to visit ancient America.

(c) The serpent images of ancient America were true religious symbols, and had their origin in Moses' lifting up of the brazen serpent in the wilderness. If the people looked upon it, they might live. Christ was also lifted up to "draw all men unto me." The serpent became a valid symbol of Christ's uplifting and his power of salvation.

(d) We have allowed an ugly, revolting reaction against the serpent to obscure the real meaning of Moses' lifting up of the brazen serpent. The combination of the serpent on the pole was symbolic of what was to come: the pole symbolized the cross on which the Savior was to be crucified, and the serpent symbolized the treatment he would suffer and the vanquishing of evil and Satan.

(e) Later on King Hezekiah had to stamp out the brazen serpent because the Israelites had perverted its true symbolism and made it the image of an apostate idol worship.

(f) The serpent symbol in America was not the product of apostasy. It embodies rich, definite meaning and true religious symbolism. The meaning of the name "Quetzalcoatl" is broader than merely "Feathered Serpent." The lovely Quetzal bird was symbolic of all that was peculiarly beautiful and precious.

(g) Internal evidences of the Book of Mormon support the serpent symbol as the true representation of Christ. The Nephites had the Hebrew Scriptures which recorded Moses' lifting up of the brazen serpent. Their prophets spoke of Christ's crucifixion in relation to Moses' lifting up of the serpent. The Book of Mormon does not indicate that serpent worship was practiced in ancient America.

(h) The serpent was merely a symbol of the god whom the ancient Americans worshiped. The serpent was not worshiped in and of itself until its true symbolic meaning was perverted by a sweeping apostasy in ancient America. The feathered serpent symbol then assumed degenerate forms as true idol worship.

(i) The serpent symbol has been found on one ruin dating well back into Nephite times. This is evidence that it did not originate as an apostate idol-worship after the destruction of the Nephites.

(j) Only in the person of Jesus Christ can an explanation be found of the abundant legends about the "feathered serpent" god. These legends and the extensive use of the serpent symbol in ancient American architecture are impressive added witnesses of Jesus Christ and the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

Conclusion: We should overcome our reaction of revolt toward the serpent symbol, recognize it as a true symbol of Jesus Christ in ancient America, and make use of it as powerful new evidence spearheading our proof of the Book of Mormon.

As we think about the serpent symbol and the different explanations of its meaning, we should keep several things in mind:

It is an important question. It has definite bearing on (a) the scientific evidence supporting the Book of Mormon, and (b) the life, gospel, and church of Jesus Christ.

The different viewpoints are presented with sincerity, reason, and thoughtful preparation. The authors want harmony and understanding. They carefully rally supporting evidences for our consideration.

Neither viewpoint represents the official position of the church. The official statements of the church are more general—and wisely so. They support the divinity of the Book of Mormon. They witness that its prophecies bear the stamp of true revelation and that its teachings represent a worthy standard of moral rightness.

These Are My Own Personal Feelings

(1) It is good for the people of the church to consider the constructive presentation of differences of opinion—and to try to reason together.

(2) Supporters of the different points of view should be very wise and careful. Their approach to each other should be frank, humble, and full of brotherly love and consideration. Differences of opinion are often signs of health and vitality. There is great power for growth and new conviction in them. But caution, wisdom, desire for agreement, and

Part Two

IF TWO OF THE PURPOSES of the Book of Mormon Institute were to increase the faith of the church in the Book and to stimulate its use as Scripture with a spiritual and moral message for our day, those purposes were abundantly realized. One who sat through the entire week of rather strenuous but highly rewarding attendance at classes, lectures, and forums could not help but gain a new appreciation for the Book of Mormon through the sheer impact of so much material, so much testimony, so much evidence from so many different fields of research, so much pictorial proof that the things written about in the Book had once actually existed here in America.

Best attended of all the sessions were the evening lectures, illustrated with Kodachrome slides depicting the findings of several of our own specialists in the field of American archaeology. With these visual aids, the cumulative impact of the evidences presented was overwhelming. Picture after picture, night after night, pounded home again and again the theme. There have been great civilizations in Mexico and Central and South America. The greatest and highest of these civilizations was preceded by an earlier and completely different civilization; it was followed by a decadent and seemingly apostate civilization which built on the ruins of its ancestors. These cultured people knew about the Christ long before he was born; his symbols—the cross and the feathered serpent—are found again and again. Hebraic influence is found in the construction of temples and altars, and Hebraic features are almost always depicted in the carved likenesses of the bearded white God. Egyptian influence is to be found in their buildings, carvings, hieroglyphics, and monuments. All this, of course, is not exactly new to students of the Book of Mormon who know that Lehi's colony came from Jerusalem in 600 B.C., and that they were descendants of the Joseph who was sold into Egypt, but it was reassuring and stimulating to see again the tremendous bulk of the accumulated proof.

These ancient people were skilled in the arts of masonry, ceramics, pottery, working in gold, silver, and both precious and semi-precious stones. They were informed and accurate in their astronomical observations and mathematical calculations. They must have understood the making and use of metal tools for stone cutting, and machinery for transporting huge blocks of stone for many miles over mountains and rivers. They built mammoth, beautiful, costly buildings, adorning them with fine carvings, sculpture, stone mosaics, and chaste design. They understood some modern principles of surgery, pharmacy, and medicine. There are even some indications that they knew the use of the microscope and telescope. They built roads, bridges, and aqueducts; they built and cultivated terraced farms on the sides of seemingly inaccessible mountains. Until the days of apostasy and corruption, there was no sign of human sacrifice or idol worship.

They were so numerous that "the whole face of the land was covered," and so many buildings were built that in spite of the marvels uncovered, only a fragmentary part of the ruins have as yet been excavated. It is one thing to see a few pictures in a book, or to hear a lecture illustrated with pictures from so many geographical locations that one never does get the connections quite clear. It is quite another thing to sit for six evenings and see picture after picture, each one corroborating those that have gone before, until as we have already said, the combined and cumulative impact is overwhelming and convincing.

By Evan A. Fry

To the impact of these illustrated lectures, of course, was added the impact of all the lectures and discussions held in the morning and afternoon. In these there was a review and re-examination of the other evidences of the Book of Mormon—the evidences found in its doctrinal teachings, in its social and moral message, in its prophetic declarations and warnings, and in other internal evidences. Some of the best minds of the church reviewed again the biblical prophecies concerning the Book of Mormon, and the prophecies of the Book of Mormon itself which have been fulfilled, are now being fulfilled, or are yet awaiting fulfillment. Other good and scholarly men helped those attending to re-evaluate the teachings of the Book of Mormon—its lofty concepts of God and his purposes, the nature of man, the atonement, the church, the Holy Spirit, the social and moral message, and the implications of all these for our day and time.

Still other men bore personal testimony as to their experiences with the book, and recommended methods of using it in preaching, in church school, in missionary work, in personal evangelism. Objections to the book were frankly faced, and the best possible answers given with which to meet the most frequently voiced objections. Some few objections which as yet seem to have no plausible answers were also frankly faced, but viewed in the perspective of the other overwhelming evidences in favor of the Book and in the faith that future developments will eventually solve these objections in the same way that many past objections have been solved, with vindication for the Book of Mormon and its story.

Nursing -

The Challenge of the Second Commandment

By Myrtle Quitmyer

There was considerable attention given to the detailed internal evidences of the Book of Mormon—evidences which are revealed only to the careful and methodical student who knows not only his Book of Mormon, but his Bible, and history, ethnology, language, grammar, archaeology, sociology, psychology, and other sciences. Of late years many new discoveries have been made, and new studies have unearthed evidences from the Book itself—its language, vocabulary, phraseology, grammatical constructions, terminology, personal and place names, accounts of social and political customs, history, a study of the characters which were copied from the plates and taken to Professor Anthon by Martin Harris, and a study of the organization and structure of the various parts of the Book itself. In all of these varied fields, careful research has revealed material which supports the claims of the Book of Mormon.

Part of one afternoon's session was devoted to brief personal testimonies concerning the Book of Mormon, or experiences in which its use had been instrumental in converting prospects. Several personal experiences were told of how a testimony concerning the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon had been received, how truth taught in the Book of Mormon had been found useful in preaching and conversing, how people who were prejudiced and opposed to the church had been converted by a reading of the Book, of its use among the Indians, of how the Book of Mormon had made it easier to believe and to understand the Bible, of how a reading of the Book had revived the dying faith and interest of members, and of how seemingly casual references to the Book of Mormon and its content opened the way for conversations which later led to conversions, and of how Scripture from the Book of Mormon received favorable comment from a

And thou shalt love thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might, and with all thy strength.

Service Is Love in Action

THE CONCERN OF NURSING is life from conception until breathing ends. In this year of 1951, there are those who are determined to destroy life. So there must be those who will preserve it. The concern of the nurse is to nurture life. Eighty years ago Florence Nightingale said, "Nursing has to nurse living bodies and living spirits." This has always been the challenge of nursing, which in this year of impending world crisis has an even greater significance.

If you are a young woman, we challenge you to gain nursing skills, to acquire scientific knowledge, and to enrich your spiritual philosophy in a good school of nursing. Why? To enable you to effectively bind up the wounds of a world—sick in body, mind, and spirit.

The old concept of nursing had the nurse only at the bedside of the sick patient. The patient in the hospital, or wherever we find him, still needs the skilled and sympathetic ministry that only a nurse can give; but nursing is a young profession, and new trends and fields are constantly developing. All kinds of talents can be used. Health teachers, writers, and research specialists are in great demand.

Today's trends may call you as a qualified nurse to participate in these fields of research:

1. Cancer
2. Heart disease and its prevention
3. Venereal disease—with need for wider health education
4. Nutrition—with attention to better processing of food

5. Mental hygiene—with increased emphasis on the emotional needs of the child.
6. Degenerative, chronic disease (people are living longer)
7. Rehabilitation programs, for veterans and other handicapped and disabled people. These must be taught: "He that is plenteously provided from within needs little from without."

ZION DEMANDS good homes, good wives, and mothers. As such, graduate nurses will serve a very practical ministry in the redemption of Zion. No other profession can better prepare a young woman for good home life. On the other hand, many sweethearts and husbands may never come back from the war which seems to be staring us in the face. Nursing offers a full life to one bereft of many of life's legitimate, joyful fulfillments.

There are new and distant horizons to challenge the young nurse. In the American Journal of Nursing for December, 1950, some of the recent activities of the World Health Organization are reported. Nurses are being assigned to teaching and administrative positions in pediatrics, midwifery, public health, nursing arts, and tuberculosis nursing in such faraway places as Borneo, El Salvador, Haiti, the Philippines, and Malaya. Nurses are serving on demonstration teams in South Korea, Egypt, Pakistan, India, Thailand, and Turkey. Attractive salaries usually accompany these far-flung nursing jobs. Whether the nurse stays close to her

Literature in the Home

By Laura P. Minkler

Yea, and I also thought that they could not keep the commandments of the Lord according to the law of Moses, save they should have that law.—I Nephi 1: 117.

HOW CAN WE KEEP THE LAW except we turn to it and study it? In all our homes there should be the Three Books of the church, not just so we can say we have them, but so we can become acquainted with them as tried and dearly loved friends.

We also need other books and publications that will help us, especially our children, to understand and appreciate the Three Books. The Young People's History, The Herald, Stepping Stones, Zion's Hope, and many interesting and wholesome books such as Birds of a Feather, Into the Latter Day Light, Timbers for the Temple, Call at Evening, Joseph's City Beautiful, Walking With Jesus, and Between the Covers of the Book of Mormon should be accessible to all. A good book makes a lasting gift for any member of the family. We should not limit ourselves to church literature alone, however, for are we not told, "Seek own hearthstone or flies (literally flies) to the four corners of the earth, there are countless opportunities for her and sometimes unusually colorful service.

Tremendous problems must be solved in preserving the health of the world, and nurses will help solve them. There is no other group of women as well-trained and organized for this work. They work together in local, national, and international professional associations. Helping people, sick and well, in measures promoting positive, total health (physical, mental, and spiritual) without distinction of race, color, or creed—what a challenge!

WILL YOU, YOUNG WOMEN OF 1951, RESPOND?

ye out of the best books words of wisdom"?

MAKE A FRIEND of a book that is rich in thoughts, and it will conduct you into the intimate comradeship of great minds. It will take you on far journeys, unlock secrets of the past, and illuminate the way into the future.

In nearly every home, magazines will be found that reflect the chief interests of those who read them—magazines on scientific developments, hobbies, business, politics, and many other things.

Even as our bodies should have proper food, so should our minds be provided a "balanced diet." We should be careful what we read and what we encourage our children to read.

A great sculptor once made a statue which showed two figures, nearly identical. One was groveling downward toward the earth, the other reaching upward toward the light. On the base of the statue, the sculptor carved the words, "I feel two souls struggling within me." All of us are like that. We have base impulses struggling against our nobler thoughts. It is the work of our minds to choose which of these contending forces shall rule our lives, and this decision must be made every day until habit makes us either a slave of our base impulses or a master of our aspirations.

WE SHOULD OVERSEE the books and magazines our small children read and point out the undesirable things that may have been slipped into otherwise good reading material. We cannot long keep them in ignorance of undesirable literature. Therefore, we should help them recognize it as such. Thus they will learn to refuse it because it is their desire to do so. With so much good to learn, there is no time for the bad. As a rule it is easy to supervise the reading of the younger children but it is more difficult to deal with the adolescent, unless it can be done indirectly. They dislike being "supervised," especially by parents. Sometimes a teacher or someone outside the family can wield a great influence for good by merely expressing likes and dislikes in regard to certain books and authors.

If at all possible we should have such an abundance of good reading in our homes that our families will gradually develop a taste for the best. Even the poorest need not be denied, as the public library stands ready to lend books and magazines. They have but to make the effort to choose the good and reject the undesirable.

If parents select sordid material for their own mental diet, they cannot expect their children to do better. If we are conscientious but doubt our ability to judge suitable material, we should contact those who are qualified to pass judgment. No matter how limited our capacity, if we use fully that which we have, our capacity enlarges either for good or evil. It is up to us to choose which force shall rule our lives—the one that degrades or the one that uplifts.

We are stewards of everything committed to our care, and must give an account in the day of judgment of how we have used our money, our time, our strength and our talents. I believe we shall have to give an account of the reading matter we have had in our homes. May the Great Judge never need ask us, "With the best efforts of inspired men at your command, why did you read inferior literature? Why did you not choose the very best for yourself and for the young souls entrusted to your care?"

What do we live for if not to make the world less difficult for each other?—George Eliot.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

Why is it that the ministers of our church refrain from using "Reverend" when speaking of the church ministry?
Kansas
H. R. L.

Answer:

When we refer to our church ministry before our own members or before non-members who are well acquainted with our ministry, we usually use the word "Brother" rather than "Reverend." This is a practice and a tradition in the church which has been observed from the time of the Restoration. We like to use the word "Brother" (and the same applies in the use of "Sister" when associated with a woman) because it carries with it a greeting of warmth that can hardly be felt in the use of the word "Reverend."

As church members we feel a closeness to one another that is hardly experienced by those in other churches. While we respect our ministers and believe that they should at all times live lives worthy of our trust and honor, we do not place them upon pedestals and regard them as superior to the rest of the church members.

There are times, however, the title "Reverend," may well be used. The word "Reverend" means worthy of reverence, which indicates that one has the profound respect and love of those to whom he ministers. In this sense we can see no reason why our ministers could not be referred to by the title of "Reverend" when the occasion makes the use of that title advisable. Such an occasion may arise when one of our ministers is being introduced to someone not acquainted with our church. We sometimes use the word "Elder" when speaking among our own members or among members of the Mormon Church where those with whom we are associated understand what we connote in the use of the term "Elder." However, in some churches the term "Elder" means any individual who has been elected to an advisory office in the congregation by vote of the people. It does not denote a presiding officer who has been called and ordained by the Holy Spirit. Likewise, in some churches the word "Brother" is used to denote a person who may do hospital work or teach in a school. The term as used by those churches does not refer to a member of the clergy. Therefore it would seem quite appropriate and advisable that we use the title "Reverend" to designate our ministry whenever speaking to those not acquainted with our church and its officers.

Question:

Have the two witnesses and the 1,260 days of Revelation 11: 3 already passed?
Colorado
W. L.

Answer:

Undoubtedly the two witnesses and the 1,260 days of Revelation 11: 3 are in the future. It is helpful to note that the Inspired Version of the Scriptures states the years as years when they should be years, as in Revelation 12: 5, and days as days, as in Revelation 11: 3. The King James rendition leaves them as days in both cases, which may be confusing. Their identity has not been revealed.

Question:

Please explain verses 43-46 of the ninth chapter of Mosiah, Did Alma baptize himself at the same time he baptized Helam?
Illinois
W. A.

Answer:

The simple and plain inference is that Alma was baptized by the Holy Spirit, being buried in the water as was Adam in ancient times. (See Inspired Version, Genesis 6: 67.)

We are introduced to this Alma at the instance of the preaching of Abinadi among the subjects of king Noah and before the king himself. He was pioneering, and there were no other believers there. Among them was Alma, a descendant of Nephi. He believed the preaching and pled for the life of Abinadi before the king. For this he was banished, and Abinadi was burned to death.

Soon Alma began to teach privately, for fear of his life. Near by was a body of beautiful water where some devout souls gathered to hear Alma. After considerable teaching he invited them to baptism. They responded that this was the desire of their hearts. Alma took Helam into the water and cried unto the Lord, "O Lord, pour out thy Spirit upon thy servant, that he may do this work with holiness of heart."

After Alma pronounced a baptismal prayer for Helam, the record says, "both Alma and Helam were buried in the water."—Book of Mormon, page 259, verse 45. God answered Alma's prayer with the bestowal of the Spirit in a marked degree. Of the next baptism it is recorded, ". . . and baptized him according to the first, only he did not bury himself again in the water."—Ibid., verse 46.

In the beginning of a dispensation of the gospel, God works according to the circumstances and his infinite wisdom, and results follow as sure as day follows night.

Question:

If your church is the true church of Christ, why did God permit it to be broken up and its leaders killed?
Colorado
E. C. D.

Answer:

If Jesus Christ established his church when he was in Palestine (which we all believe he did), then why did he permit it to be broken up and his servants killed? We do not question it. Most of the early apostles and a great number of other priesthood members were martyrs to Christ's cause. Jesus himself was crucified. In every age his work has suffered at the hands of men whose eyes were blinded to the truth. As his church suffered and was broken up during the Apostasy, so was his church

Each One Bring One

Through Orioles

By Mrs. Marvin McDole

IT HAS BEEN MY PRIVILEGE to read the Herald articles on "Each One Win One" and "Each One Bring One." I have not done much about these campaigns, but I do have sixteen junior high girls in an Oriole Circle at the Stone Church; seven of them are nonmembers. Our circle has been organized for a year and a half, and I pray that soon we will baptize several of these girls.

As far as I know, I have not helped to bring anyone into the church, but through the girls activity program, I believe I have helped keep the girls near the church.

As our missionaries prepare for cottage meetings and all the ways of introducing our church to people, I suggest they stress the Oriole program too. The church through this fine activity program has a splendid opportunity for missionary work.

It was our good fortune to attend the Silver Lake Reunion last summer. Sister Vest, instructor for the women's classes, brought out the value of a girls' program in every branch. After she had given her material, a woman from Canada arose and bore her testimony to the missionary possibilities through the Oriole program. This lady said she was one of nine girls in England who belonged to a circle organized by an understanding monitor. She was the only member of our church among the girls, but before long, all the girls asked for baptism. Many of their families were brought into the church too, and three of these nine girls have attended Graceland.

A CIRCLE or group of Orioles may be organized in any branch in the church with possibly only one eleven-year-old member. A consecrated leader with three or four girls can learn about the church by using the Oriole Handbook as a "road map" for the course of study. There is also a manual for the monitor to help her in her work.

Anyone who serves in a public office meets criticism. The monitor may give hours of service to her girls and still meet those forces that discourage and dishearten her. Any person assuming the responsibility of Oriole work must be able to "take it" when the going seems rough. Adolescent girls have problems, but if a woman loves children, especially girls between the ages of eleven and fifteen years, and wishes to help them through this period when many are lost to the church, with the pastor and branch girls' leader she can organize an Oriole Circle. She will need the two books, Oriole Hand- book (fifty cents) and The Oriole Monitor's Manual (one dollar) available at Herald House, Independence, Missouri. Miss Edna Easter at the Auditorium also will be glad to help anyone who contacts her.

MAY WE EACH HELP hold the line for our young people through these dark times. We cannot afford to lose a generation of young girls in the Oriole program of the church because we are too busy to give of our time and energies to guide them in their leisure hours.

Recently I heard a Boy Scout leader say, "We enjoy the American way of life today because our ancestors thought enough of religion and freedom to preserve it. The American way is not inherited; it is developed with each oncoming generation. Today there are six hundred million who follow a way of social and economic life which leaves religion out." Are we going to be "too busy" to teach our own girls a religious way of life? Our early missionaries and their families sacrificed much that we may have the gospel today.

As a Little Child

By Frances Cochran Booker

THERE WAS A TIME when I thought of all teachers as adults. As I look back through memory's treasure house, however, I find many precious gems—some of the finest lessons I learned have unconsciously been taught by the example and words of children.

In a recent prayer service a young mother—war-widowed—was present with her seven-year-old son. Toward the close of the service she arose to speak. This is the gist of her talk. "I came into the service tonight as I usually do, with no intention of making a contribution. I just expected to get help and strength from the prayers and testimonies of others. I have thought that it is my responsibility to lead my little son, but tonight the order has been reversed, and he has led me. While others were praying, he whispered, 'Mother, I'll pray if you will.' That was a challenge, and I had to say all right, so he prayed first and I followed. This causes me to feel more keenly my responsibility in living up to the things my son expects of me."

Hearing this mother speak brought to my mind an incident which happened some years ago. My niece has taken her twin daughters to church regularly since they were tiny infants. One night when they were three years old, as she sat with one on each side of her, listening to the testimonies of others, one of the twins nudged her, and in an every-one-could-hear whisper said, "Mama, why don't you say your piece?" "Mama" did, and as the years have passed and her family has increased to four children, she has continued to take them regularly to the Sunday morning and evening services and prayer meetings. Today it is not only the mother who participates in the services, but the children as well, including the youngest daughter who is not yet old enough for baptism.

ALL TOO OFTEN parents unwisely make critical remarks against men of the priesthood, church and day school teachers, and others in the presence of children, apparently not realizing that they are influencing the attitude of the children in sowing seeds of distrust in their fertile minds. A young boy approached his pastor, an elderly man with many years of service as his record, and bluntly said, "Why don't you always preach the way you did today? That's the first good sermon you've preached this year." Knowing the boy's home background, one could easily understand what influenced such a remark.

Back in the early days of my husband's missionary work. I spent several summers with him and one or two other missionaries, holding tent meetings. I earned my right to do so by acting as their hostess, keeping house for them in our small living-tents, and by playing the little Bihorn organ for the services. Once we spent thirteen weeks in one rural community, and thirty-three people were baptized. Naturally the day this occurred was a red-letter day for us and the occasion for much conjecture among the people of the neighborhood about who were being baptized. The baptisms were performed in a pond on top of a big hill. As we walked up this hill, my companion was a little girl who chatted with me all the way. She named over dozens of people she thought would be baptized. One young woman she mentioned had been attending our services quite regularly. We had been told something of her background—her morals were questionable, and she had a habit of joining any church which conducted a revival, so that at one time or another she had united with every church in the community. My little friend mentioned her, and said, "I don't know about her. She belongs to the—" but she could not remember the name of the church. Just to be sociable I tried to help her out by naming every church I could think of, but none would do. She took a moment for deep thought, then triumphantly exclaimed, "Oh, I know. Mama says she's a Hypocrite!"

I LEARNED when my daughter was quite small that I had to be careful in the selection of stories I told her, even though they were good ones. Once I told her of a little girl who went wading in a stream on a very chilly day. She became ill. Her father was away from home, and as they lived far out in the country, her mother could not get an elder or a doctor. She prayed for her little girl, and she got well. Sometime later in the early spring-time, I found Aarona sitting with her feet in an irrigation ditch of icy mountain water. Her feet were red and swollen they were so cold. As I warmed them, I scolded a little, and of course as any mother would, said, "Why, you might get pneumonia doing a thing like that!" To my astonishment, she nonchalantly replied, "Oh, that's all right. If I do you can just pray to Jesus, and he'll make me well." I was glad that she had so much faith in Jesus and me, but I wasn't sure I wanted all that responsibility placed on me.

When I was with my husband some years ago on a mission to the West Indies, we planned an evening's program to be given in the town hall. For us it was a rather big undertaking, and I was much concerned that everything should go off well. In one play, "Liggle Gingersnap's Birthday Party," the leading character was a little black girl. I found the perfect character for the part, but there was a great deal to learn, and she had difficulty memorizing her lines. As the date drew near, I became worried and said, "Ellorine, you must study hard on this and pray about it." The next time she came for rehearsal, her little black face was glowing, and she exclaimed, "Sister Booker, I asked Jesus to help me, and now I know it every word."

On the night of our program, just before time to start when there were about forty people behind the curtains, everyone excited and buzzing about, everyone losing something and coming to me with questions, I became panicky and felt that everything would be a failure. Then I saw Ellorine and thought of prayer. Somehow I found a corner where I could be alone for a moment, and there I asked for the blessing of God on our efforts, and instantly my being was flooded with the wonderful feeling of assurance and peace, and from then on I could move with the confidence that all would go well, and it did.

ROBERT ROSE was a little tow-headed four-year-old who came to have dinner with us one day. He stood by as I was dishing up baked apples. He saw a slight blemish on one, and in all soberness he drawled, "Sister Booker, at our house we throw away the wormy ones." In the eighteen years since then, I have many times remembered that remark and have tried when making choices to throw away the "wormy apples."

Buzzy is another little friend of mine. Last year I took care of him and his sister while their mother was working. She instructed me to see that the children "behaved." I had no need to resort to very stringent measures, but on occasion I had to be somewhat firm. Their yard was the gathering place of all the neighborhood children, and sometimes they invaded the house upstairs and down. At such times I was instructed

Two Journeys

By Mrs. William Worth, Jr.

THE SANDS IN THE HOUR GLASS of time have sifted through, and the year of 1950 takes its place in the Hall of History. The new year, 1951, is with us. What are we going to do with the days as they come? Several avenues loom up before us; one to be avoided is the Avenue of Indifference; another, the Avenue of Service is to be sought.

We start out on our journey on the Avenue of Indifference and wrap the mantle of self-righteousness about us with a smug self-satisfied feeling within for we have the gospel of Good News in our possession—and what else matters?

After many days of travel, we are halted momentarily by a wail from the byroad. We look and see a child, seemingly lost from its home. But we haven't time to stop and show the spirit of love that is needed to soothe the fear in the little child's mind. We pass on down the long road ahead, afraid if we stop we will lose the precious thing we have in our possession.

Again we are met by a young woman who is desperately in need of the help we could give. She needs encouragement and strength so the tasks that are hers to perform may be easier for her. But again we pass on down the highway, never sharing with her the very thing that would give the strength and courage she so much needed—the Gospel of Good News.

Once again after many days journey, we are stopped by an old lady. She is lame and almost blind. She wants to cross the busy thoroughfare but is hesitant because of her afflictions. Again we pass by unmindful of her trouble, fearful that if we stopped we would lose the precious Good News in our possession.

As the days pass we begin to feel disgruntled with everybody and everything. Our precious possession begins to lose its appeal for us and bears heavy on us, for we have failed to share it with others. But still we journey forth indifferent to the very things that would make us happy. We arrive at the end of the journey disturbed and discouraged.

THE JOURNEY down the Avenue of Service is much different. We are happy as we start our journey, knowing that we have the Gospel of Good News, but we are humble and full of love and gratitude for this priceless possession. It has meant so much to us that we are eager to share it with others. We meet many people in our journey, and each time we share with them our happiness and love. Instead of the fear that had possessed them before our meeting, they now go on filled with strength and faith in themselves and in God.

Instead of a frown we give a smile to those in sorrow, and they go on their way rejoicing, sharing their happiness with others they meet. And so it goes—as we share our Good News the circle of happiness enlarges. We find that as we all work together, the pain, hardships, and tears change into joy and happiness and fade away into nothingness.

At the end of the road we have gained far more than we have lost. Our joy has increased an hundred-fold as we have shared and served others along the way.

May the year of 1951 be joyous because we have chosen to follow the Avenue of Service.

Justice consists in doing no injury to men; decency in giving them no offense.—Cicero.

Briefs

LA CROSSE, WISCONSIN.—The annual business meeting was held September 19 at which the following officers were elected: Elder Miles Lenox, pastor; Frank Fitzsimons and Harry Hearn, counselors; Harry McCormac, treasurer; Zelpha Anderson, secretary, Frank Fitzsimons, church school director; Zelpha Anderson, women's department leader, Laurence Davenport, Zion's League leader; Jean Gollnick, music director; Margie Ellis, church school secretary; Orlin Gollnick, chairman auditing committee.

Two babies were blessed: Kathleen Lyn Baker and Robert Michael Mueller.

Mrs. Gerald Ellis, Sherri Sue Hearn, and Danny Gollnick were baptized and confirmed with Pastor Miles Lenox in charge.

Seventy James Daugherty, High Priest Frank Mussell, Elder Ed Ford, Seventy Merle Guthrie, Elder Phillip Davenport, High Priest John Darling, Evangelist Harry Wasson, High Priest Ervin Lenox, High Priest Fred Moore, and Deacon Bud Schorr served as guest speakers during the past year.

The women's department held their business meeting September 22. Zelpha Anderson was sustained leader, Tena Lenox, assistant leader; Eva Ellis, secretary; Josie Davenport, treasurer; and Zelpha Anderson, friendly visitor. The group is studying "Each One Win One."—Reported by ISABEL SCAFE.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.—The attendance for the branch has been sustained except during the flood period. A new church building has been obtained, and with the help of voluntary labor from both members and non-members, it has been remodeled and is now being used. Money has been raised to meet current expenses. There is much work yet to be done in providing classrooms.

A Christmas concert given by the children was held December 22. Gifts were distributed and Santa visited.—Reported by CYRIL CLARK.

MODESTO, CALIFORNIA.—David Edward, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Fields was blessed January 7 by Elders John Moffet, Sr., and Bill Hays. Elder Moffet was the spokesman.—Reported by ILAH G. ROSE.

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA.—District President Elder Chester Metcalf presided at the September branch business meeting at which the following officers were elected: branch president, Elder Thomas Taylor; church school director, Elder John Thompson; women's leader, Velva Smelser; Zion's League leader, Elder Robert Anderson; branch treasurer, Deacon Lucian Holland; branch secretary, Rebecca Nolan; branch auditors, Elder Victor Humphrey and Priest Wayne Smelser; music director, Jan Nolan.

Upon recommendation of the building committee, headed by Elder Joseph Nolan, a program has been started to remodel and enlarge the church. A new oil heating plant has been installed, and much progress has already been made in the renovating of the downstairs by the men of the branch. The women of the branch are directing their efforts toward equipping the new kitchen.

The annual bazaar and turkey dinner was held in November.

During the past few months, the branch has enjoyed the visiting ministry of Apostle Percy E. Farrow, Elder John Darling, Associate Director of Education, and Elder Chester Metcalf, district president.

Two children, Karen Partlowe and Robert Smelser were baptized by Priest Wayne Smelser in December. Karen was confirmed by Patriarch A. W. Gage with Elder John Thompson assisting. Robert was confirmed by Elder Thomas Taylor assisted by Elder Victor Humphrey. On the same day, the infant daughter of Carrol and Doris Dethridge was blessed.

The Christmas program on December 24 was given in two parts. The children, under the supervision of Priest Wayne Smelser, gave recitations, flannelgraph Bible verses and songs. The choir, under the direction of Jan Nolan, had the second portion of the program and presented a Christmas cantata with pantomime.

Pastor Thomas Taylor presided over the New Year's Eve candlelight service.—Reported by VELVA SMELSER.

FREESOIL, MICHIGAN.—Under the guidance of Elder Charles Martin, who came from Grandview, Missouri, a little over a year ago, the branch has made progress.

Recently Brother and Sister Martin purchased a home here. The members of the branch gave them a surprise house-warming and a gift for their new home shortly after they moved in.

Elder Theodore Beck, bishop for the state of Michigan, and Elder John Blackstock, president of the Central Michigan district, visited the branch November 30 and December 1 and stressed the financial law, instructing and assisting the members.

A combined Christmas program given by the Methodist and R. L. D. S. congregations was presented at the R. L. D. S. church on Christmas Eve.

Funeral services were held for Sister Maude Martin on New Year's Day. Elder Alan Schurer of Gaylord, Michigan, was in charge. Sister Martin was formerly from Freesoil, but for many years had made her home in Saginaw. She was buried in Maple Grove Cemetery.—Reported by MRS. KLEBER C. HILL.

NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT.—Several visiting speakers have ministered in the past year, including Seventy William Guthrie who held a missionary series in December. Brother Guthrie showed slides portraying the gospel story and visited in many homes.

Four children were baptized during Onset Reunion last July. They are Priscilla and Patricia Engdahl, twins, and their brother Walter, Jr., and Adrienne Alves.

The women's department with Sister Margaret Slater as leader held a bazaar in August and another just before Christmas. Articles were also donated for the reunion sale.

Family night with a potluck supper was held at the home of Sister Muriel Wheeler.

The church has been painted on the exterior, and Brother Francis Whipple repaired the steeple.

Elder Gilbert Hambleton, the pastor for the past year and a half, has received orders to report for duty with the navy in Key West, Florida. He spent his last Sunday with the branch December 31. Sister Hambleton will remain in New London until housing is located in Florida. Their daughter, Beatrice, is attending Graceland College.—Reported by MURIEL L. WHEELER.

LAS CRUCES, NEW MEXICO.—Three isolated families met January 7 at the home of Brother and Sister R. M. Porter to form a study class on the Book of Mormon. Priest Robert Porter conducted the class. Present were Brother and Sister Robert Doan and Sister Bantz Dowis, formerly of Independence. Mrs. Waite and Mrs. Porter, Sr., were visitors. The group made plans to meet every two weeks alternating between Las Cruces and Alamogordo. The towns are 65 miles apart.—Reported by R. M. PORTER.

refuge in their struggle for freedom of religion. We witness that spirit again in the lives of Washington, Lincoln, and a thousand other men. Looking back through history we again see the directing hand of God on the battlefields of Marathon, Tours, Waterloo, Mons, and the recent victories against tyranny.

The Plea

God wants us to learn by our own experience. If God had wished it otherwise, he would have left with the church and with our prophets the Urim and Thummim so that we might have effortless revelations of truth. He would have given the endowment to the priesthood despite our deficiencies, so that we could convert people without much personal study and effort. God does not work that way. For the Saint the message of history and the advice of the Scriptures are: Go on to spiritual maturity. Place your hand in God's hand, for there is to be found safety and security.

genuine give-and-take are very necessary ingredients. We must not become embroiled in controversies which we cannot hold within healthy bounds and which might injure our contribution to the work of the church.

(3) We should not hope to arrive at the true meaning of the serpent symbol by taking a church-wide opinion poll or passing a General Conference resolution. We cannot legislate righteousness. And we cannot make something true simply by getting a majority vote to approve it. If we are deeply concerned about this, we should seek divine guidance from our Heavenly Father. We must always be careful not to rely completely upon the interpretations of any man. The answer must lie in earnest fasting and prayer combined with intent searching and study. The faithful desire for enlightenment from God is essential. Nephi once came upon his brothers disputing something, and he asked this pointed question: "Have ye inquired of the Lord?" (I Nephi 4: 2-10) The question of the serpent symbol is fresh testimony that we continually need guidance and wisdom from our Heavenly Father.

(4) We should be cautious in using the serpent in ancient America as a true symbol of Jesus Christ and as added evidence for our missionary appeal. We should be cautious for these simple reasons:

(a) It is not sanctioned by latter-day revelation or by any official statement of the church.

(b) At present the matter has not been positively and clearly settled. The burden of proof rests with the affirmative—those who advance the serpent as a true symbol of Jesus Christ. This viewpoint is supported by a number of reasonable evidences. But there are many equally reasonable evidences which positively oppose it. As far as you and I and the church are concerned, the matter remains open and unsettled.

(c) Our proclamation to the world of the serpent symbol as a true symbol of Jesus Christ could produce very damaging associations and recriminations. Many good people who should be won to the church of Jesus Christ feel definite revulsion and repugnance at the very idea of SNAKE. The serpent unquestionably represents vileness, treachery, and sin to many people. To associate the serpent with the name and worship of Christ, even as added testimony of him, might be of negative and doubtful value. Besides, if we accept the serpent now as a true symbol of Jesus Christ, we run the danger of confusing people about the fine distinction between the serpent as a symbol of Christ and as the image of an apostate idol-worship.

(d) We have many other positive and appealing approaches to people about the Book of Mormon—approaches which do not provoke undesirable associations. Until we can see our way more clearly, we should emphasize the reasonable, convincing, scientifically supported and highly effective evidences which we now have for our belief in the Book of Mormon.

New Horizons

"They Also Serve..."

EVERYTIME he had tried to propose to her, they had been interrupted. Then one day the crowded troop train had carried him away, and only a glimpse of her waving and smiling from the platform remained.

Now, as he lay prone in the mud under a disabled jeep, watching the uneven bursts of enemy fire, he wondered if he would ever have another chance. In these hours alone his mind turned first to her and then seemed to race along the same pathway into the past to emerge with the same set of problems.

Since hitting the beach a lifetime of hours ago, he had become a veteran in the art of saving his skin, but also surprisingly, he had developed even more the art of total recall.

With fine clarity his mind's eye presented him with scenes from his past—they flowed backward under his slitted eyelids as easily as the pictures of the Penny Arcade, and they glowed with twice the luminosity and detail. And the candor of these scenes was amazing, for there was no censor on duty here as he waited in the dark. It was typical of him that his role was . . . to wait.

Over his face played a twisted smile which hurt so that he wiped it off with a muddy hand, leaving a smear on his four-day growth of beard. With his life suspended by a thread, he had learned to dream. He frowned—they came to him like acts from a play, and they were not what his professor would have called "wish-fulfillment" dreams, either. They were not controllable. They were honest dreams that seldom if ever cast him in the role of a hero, and he was beginning to become uneasily aware of certain personal characteristics not very pleasant to face. To begin with, he was being forced to face the fact that he was a blunderer as a soldier—an inept blunderer and misfit.

DURING ELEVEN CONSCIENTIOUS MONTHS, he had watched his buddies with less education and alertness go off to O. C. Training, and in that same period he had earned one single stripe—private first class.

Now, there was little doubt left in his mind that he was hardly deserving of that. Ever since induction, he had felt like the proverbial frog struggling desperately but always falling back deeper and deeper into the well. It would seem that he had been backward in a rather dismal sort of a way and right from the start, too.

He suddenly saw himself on that sunny July day about a year ago arriving at Camp with his fellow rookies, marching in a ragged line across the parade ground.

Then it had begun—the standing in line, first for his physical, then for his uniform. As succeeding events returned to his memory, he saw the long line of his buddies each time in the most vivid detail and always himself at the end. He groaned as he remembered the hundreds of chow lines to which he had never seemed to arrive until well toward the end of a line already formed.

Then his memory started another chain reaction farther back still, and he saw himself even earlier, while still a boy always the last one of the crowd to board the school bus, even though he had been one of the first ones on the corner. He remembered his mother's rueful comment as she early observed this peculiarity. She had said, "It's strange about Jimmie. Everytime there is a line, he winds up at the tail end. Not in front or even in the middle, but the very last one!" She smiled when she said it, so he knew she didn't mind and didn't blame him for his diffidence. A pang of homesickness overcame him as he thought of her.

THE SHELLS were bursting closer now, and he was trying to curl up as small as he could next to the stoutly boxed ammunition with which he shared the shallow ditch under the jeep. It had been a long night, and dawn was beginning to tint the horizon.

Strung out along the road ahead of him, he could now dimly see the beginning forms of many trucks and a few jeeps that were all a part of the supply train that was trying to make contact with the ground battalion fighting five or six miles ahead in the valley.

In the last three days since they had left the beach, he had seen few casualties. The road had been their worst enemy. It had been so steep and full of holes and rocks that they had been forced to stop during the night. Ever since, the enemy artillery had been trying hard for the range.

Now it was almost dawn, and when the light came, they would be completely exposed. The road followed the crest of a hill and led steeply down in spiraled curves to the valley. The artillery fire was still inaccurate, but if even one plane should be sent after them before they moved off of this bare hill into some sort of a sheltered position—He shuddered at the thought even as he scrambled stiffly from his cramped resting place and began to drag the ammunition boxes after him and heave them one by one into the back of his jeep.

Along the roadway now he could dimly see other figures doing likewise, and he heard the officers' shrill whistle that seemed to lend added urgency. All along the line, motors were coughing and sounding off as they were starting to warm up. Five or six more miles ahead, all down hill, and they would arrive at their destination. There were some pretty bad holes in the road, but in spite of that he began to feel hopeful.

THE AMMUNITION BOXES all loaded, he was just stepping on the starter when he saw the figure of a captain approach and stand beside the car. "Soldier, they tell me you know the road from here on in. We've got to start now even before it's quite light enough to see well. Five minutes more or less might mean all the difference—how about —" He was interrupted by a voice behind him which Jimmie recognized as that of Private Mickey O'Brien from Brooklyn. He spoke eagerly, "Say, Captain, believe me I know the road too. Jimmie and me, we made the trip twice before. My jeep's right over there, and the motor's already running. Come on, I'll take you to the head of the line in a hurry. My jeep's full of canned beans, and Jimmie's is full of 'ammo,' so I'm safer to ride with anyways." His voice grew fainter as they moved away in the uncertain light, and Jimmie heard the captain's appreciative laugh at the last remark and then a sudden roar as O'Brien gunned the motor and took off along the shoulder of the road toward the head of the column.

It was getting lighter by the minute, and Jimmie glanced over his shoulder to make sure his ammunition boxes were packed tight. What O'Brien had said was true. Mickey had come up to the supply dump on the beach and had loaded canned beans into his jeep by choice. Jimmie had arrived a few minutes later and been given ammunition—probably hand grenades. Jimmie started his motor and waited cautiously till the sergeant in the overloaded transport had lumbered by, then he turned into the road and brought up the rear.

It was fully light now, and Jimmie realized they were still in a hot spot. They were crawling along the crest of the hill, silhouetted against the sky with no sheltering trees or bushes, and the enemy artillery men on the next hill were accelerating their fire and feeling for the range—and then it happened!

FROM OUT OF THE SKY directly into the advancing column of slow moving traffic came the enemy plane. It dipped low over the road and the trucks seemed to Jimmie to cringe as the plane came down the line, spraying lead. It had happened so fast that apparently not a car had stopped. The line still moved as Jimmie stole a glance over his shoulder and saw the jet trying to brake and turn for another pass at the column.

And then from out of a beautiful white cloud he saw the American twin jets traveling toward the enemy like bullets. The enemy plane saw them too. He veered from his purpose and started to climb at a steep angle—heading away. Then it was over so suddenly and Jimmie breathed a prayer. The column hadn't even stopped.

The road slipped sharply now, and he knew that a few more seconds of travel would put a blessed mountain of rock between them and the enemy artillery fire. And now it was accomplished!

He saw a young bareheaded soldier waiting at the side of the road with the old familiar gesture of the American highway accompanied by a disarming grin. He slowed down, and the soldier hopped expertly on the back and scrambled into the seat beside him.

"Boy, did you see our jets that time!" he said by way of introduction. "I'll bet they got that guy by now. He only made one pass at us but if he had come back—"

"Was anybody hurt up ahead?" Jimmie interrupted.

"Nope—nobody—or at least, hardly anybody—one jeep that was leading the column. A captain and his driver—that's all."

Jimmie nodded and looked straight ahead down the road. How strange were the ways of Providence and how beyond his understanding.

Great Lessons

Have you learned lessons only of those who admired you, and were tender with you, and stood aside for you? Have you not learned great lessons from those who braced themselves against you, and disputed the passage with you?

—Walt Whitman.

minister attending a funeral service, although he was unaware of its source.

It was stressed that the Book of Mormon offers an approach to several classes with particular needs and problems—the Jew, the Indian, the atheist, the agnostic—which is unique and effective. It was pointed out that much of the early success of our missionaries was the result of a reliance on the promise of the Book of Mormon that the Spirit would bear witness of its truthfulness to those who read it and humbly seek those who read it and humbly seek such evidence. Perhaps in our modern missionary efforts we would do well to rely more strongly on the Book of Mormon and on God's promises concerning this unique book.

As a Little Child

to send them home. One evening I tactfully suggested they go home as it was suppertime, but they lingered on, and I spoke a little more forcefully the second time, whereupon Buzzy spoke up, "Leave 'em to me, Sister Booker. Come on gang, and get home." He opened the door and with his thumb pointed the way out. When all were on the porch, he stepped out and in a serious voice, but with a twinkle in his eyes, said, "That's a preacher-lady in there, and she sure can whip hard." Then I decided it was time to examine myself lest in my efforts to teach and lead others I become known as one who "whips hard."

"Except ye become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven," our Master said, and Isaiah predicts a time when "A little child shall lead." It will be well for us who want to assist in building and entering the kingdom to learn some valuable lessons from the little children about us.

INTRODUCING

John Blackmore, page 5, was introduced in the issue of September 25, 1950.

JOHN LESLIE PRENTICE, Toronto, Ontario (page 7), a native of Fergus, Ontario, was baptized at Wallaceburg. He is a graduate of the Toronto schools and received his Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of Toronto, then graduated from the Osgoode Hall Law School and received the title of Barrister-at-Law in 1926. He practiced law from then until 1938 in Toronto, when he was appointed magistrate for the city of Toronto, which position he still holds. In 1935 he was appointed King's Counsel. He was married to Luella May Street in 1912. They have two daughters: Margaret E. Packer and Esther M. Campbell, whose husbands both hold the priesthood. Brother Prentice is a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada, Canadian Club, and the Empire Club of Canada. He is interested in slum clearance and church work. His hobby is color photography. He has occupied in the offices of teacher, elder, and high priest. He was pastor of the Toronto branch and counselor to Bishop A. F. McLean from 1923 to 1938, when he was appointed bishop's agent, which office he held for eleven years.

Clair Weldon, page 8, was introduced in the issue of July 17, 1950.

Laura Pearl (Lathwell) Minkler, Lorain, Ohio (page 13), was born in Joyfield, Michigan, and baptized in the town of Beulah. She was graduated from the Lorain High School in 1925 and prepared herself to teach in the church school by completing the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants credit courses. She was married to Clyde A. Minkler in 1929. They have two children: Jean A. and Clyde Herbert. Her hobbies are crocheting, dress-making, swimming, and writing poetry. Before her marriage she did sales work. In recent years, because of her husband's affliction, she has done part-time work in a steel plant. She has been active as women's leader, worship program director, P.T.A. work, and in the church school. She also has taught first aid classes.

FRANCES (Cochran) BOOKER, Miami, Florida (page 16), was born and reared at Vancleave, Mississippi. Although she did not graduate from high school, she completed her academic work at Graceland College. In 1908 she became the wife of Missionary N. L. Booker, and since has traveled in different parts of the country, spending three years in the British West Indies. She had two children of her own, Richard, who died at the age of four, and Mrs. Aarona Kohlman. She also has a stepson, Raymond, of whom she is very fond. She and her husband were in charge of the Graceland commissary from 1932-1939. Her hobbies are oil painting, handcraft, and sewing. She has assisted in many aspects of church work, including musical activities and vocal solo work. Much of her nature is revealed in a statement by her daughter—"She is always willing to be a worker, so nearly always comes away from business meetings with a job."

P.S.

* SINCERITY

When it comes to ministry, the simplest and humblest person in the congregation will see through a sham, no matter how thick and attractive a sham it may be.

There is just one way for the minister, a deep and absolute sincerity. He cannot afford to pretend anything.

If we cannot deceive people, how could we expect to deceive God?

The longer we deal with life, the more we learn that veneers and platings and surface imitations are undependable. Whatever we have, it must be solid all the way through. If we can't have silver, we may take brass and keep it polished, for brass can be beautiful.

So with a man. He must be genuine, right down to his heart's core, what he appears to be on the surface.

* WHO HAS FAILED?

The following from "Kansas City Star," January 11, 1951, in the column "Starbeams" is challenging:

"Necessary, we guess, but odd—these air raid practice sessions in our schools, during which the children are sent from their rooms because the world's grownups have flunked in deportment."

* THE PERPLEXING FRIEND

Do you, too, have a few perplexing friends? People with a heap of good in them, mixed with a slight demoniac taint?

The Perplexing Friend gives you a nice compliment, with a little dig in it, like a kick in the slats. He sees you waiting at the bus stop, offers you a ride, then leaves you half way to your destination, so that you miss the bus you would have caught and have to wait for another. He sends you a valentine, one of the hideous comic variety, with a few personal barbs attached. He introduces you to others with a load of half-humorous, half-corny tales about your faults, real and imaginary, and makes you wish he would either die or clean up his mind. He is the kind who always greets you with a friendly smile—and a bit of an evil leer—so that you do not know whether to believe his lips or his eyes. I can stand my enemies, but may heaven deliver me from the Perplexing Friend!

* NO STRANGER

Our friendly radio man, Al Boos, sends us this clipping from the January issue of the "Jayhawk Realtor":

Every time I pass a church
I always pay a visit,
So when at last I'M carried in
The Lord won't say, "Who is it?"

* HISTORICAL NOTE

In the library stacks of a university, we recently noted this: A bust of Caesar was on the floor, face to the wall. The most imperious of all emperors had this instruction attached to his neck, a directive to one of the janitors:

"Caesar to be transported to L. A. 209."

Nobody pushed Caesar around that way in the year 50 B. C.!

News and Notes

BAPTISMS

The latest statistics reported to the First Presidency show a total of 4,771 baptisms for 1950. This is slightly in excess of the total for 1949 and is the highest annual baptismal total since 1921 and the second highest in church history.

Baptisms for December totaled 496 which is the largest number reported since we began monthly tabulations in 1920.

JOINT COUNCIL ADJOURNS

The Joint Council held its final session, Friday, January 26. The Twelve remained in session until evening in order to clear up some outstanding matters. By the week end the majority of the council were in their fields.

APOSTLE AT AMES

Apostle Charles R. Hield was in Ames, Iowa, during the week end of January 26 to 28. On Friday night he spoke to the Pan-American Club of the university there. "Christ in South America" was the topic of his sermon to the church group Saturday night, at which several Spanish-speaking students were in attendance. He also preached the morning sermon on Sunday and talked to the group that afternoon.

TOURS DISTRICT

Bishop Leslie W. Kohlman has returned from a tour of the Central Oklahoma District accompanied by Elder Victor Witte, president of the district and appointee pastor to Tulsa. A complete survey was made of all of the church properties in this district. Bishop Kohlman stated that excellent progress has been made in the improvement of these properties, and new lots have been purchased in the anticipation of building new houses of worship at Muskogee, Bartlesville, and Ponca City. The survey was conducted from January 21 through 28, and the following branches were visited: Oklahoma City, El Reno, Holdenville, Wilburton, Muskogee, Sperry, Ponca City, Tulsa, and Skiatook. Brother Kohlman preached at each of these branches, emphasizing the financial law. His topic was "Rejoice Ye in the Law of the Lord."

BISHOPS TRAVEL

All members of the Presiding Bishopric were away from Independence over the week end of January 27 and 28. Bishop G. L. DeLapp was in Mobile, Alabama, Bishop Henry L. Livingston was in New York, regarding church building projects, and Bishop Walter N. Johnson was in Madison, Wisconsin.

PRESENTS RECITAL

Carl Weinrich, organist and musical director of the chapel of Princeton University, presented an organ recital at the Stone Church, January 28. The increasing interest in music was indicated by the overflow crowd of approximately one thousand who attended the recital. This is the first time the Stone Church organ has been used as a recital instrument by a nationally-famous artist, though its tones are familiar throughout the Midwest by reason of its use on various radio programs from the Stone Church.

The recital was a Julia Davis Memorial Concert, sponsored by the Independence Community Music Association.

ONE HUNDRETH BIRTHDAY

Priest David Donaldson of the Belleview, Florida, Branch celebrated his one hundredth birthday, January 2, 1951. Brother Donaldson was baptized September 9, 1874, and ordained on July 8, 1878, by L. F. West and Heman C. Smith. The branch held an anniversary service in his honor December 31.

We'd like you to know

By Blanche A. Carpenter

A PLEASANT, HARD WORKING, LITTLE LADY is Acting Statistician Mrs. C. I. Carpenter. Two rooms in her home once served as the office for all the "membership records" of the church. Of course, then the church was only a third of its present size, and now we refer to our records as "vital statistics."

Her first acquaintance with keeping tab on the growth and movements of those joining the church came in 1906 when her husband, Claude I. Carpenter, was made church recorder. "He could not get the secretarial help he needed, so Bishop E. L. Kelley suggested that he depend on his wife. I took a business course and became his stenographer and secretary," she recalls. For thirteen years following this training, she worked with him.

When the Herald building at Lamoni went up in smoke in 1907, the recorder also lost his office and equipment. The membership records were in the vault at the time, and it took the ruins three weeks to cool off enough for the Carpenters to learn whether the statistics had burned. Aside from smoke there was little damage done to the records. Then it was that Sister Carpenter opened up her home to house the recorder's books and smoke-covered files. During the months while the new "Herald House" was being built, she tells us, "Either my husband or I remained at home so that we could easily secure help if danger threatened the records."

Elder Carpenter was then sent out to work in the mission field, and she accompanied him, doing work with the women and girls in the district where he labored.

She returned to church office work again in 1930, serving a year in the Department of Religious Education. "In 1931 I was asked to work in the Department of Statistics and operate the PBX board for a year," she relates. After seven years of that, the statistical work became so heavy that she gave her full time to it. In 1947 Carroll Olson, church statistician, was transferred to the legal department, and Mrs. Carpenter was promoted from his assistant to Acting Statistician.

Want to know when your next wedding anniversary comes so you can surprise the wife? She'll tell you.

A Bell for Springfield

ELDER FRANCIS M. BISHOP, pastor at Springfield, Missouri, sends us a copy of the December, 1950, All Aboard, a local paper published by the Frisco Railroad, which carries a brief account of a presentation by the railroad of a locomotive bell to our church there, also a picture taken at our "Scenic Chapel" showing a group of members, including Elders Bishop, Yeoman, and Mr. A. G. Denham, railroad's general storekeeper through whom the gift was made, as well as the bell itself.

There is to me something romantic about a church bell, and here is one that has looked down upon a million people and scenes and incidents in its travels. Its clarion has carried a warning voice, sometimes of alarm, and often of fright; but henceforth, localized and atop our church, its iron tongue will send out a note of welcome, a gladsome invitation to come aside for a quiet hour where the weary may find security and peace "that passeth understanding."

We commend our brethren for their alertness and have written to extend to the officials of the Frisco Company and Mr. A. G. Denham our thanks and appreciation.

Now here is a hint to our representatives: Diesel locomotives are rapidly replacing the "iron horse" of the last one hundred years, and we have no doubt that many steam engines are being discontinued and dismantled at "division points" all over the country. Do you need or want a bell for your local church? See your friends among our railroad employees. You might be surprised.

* From the New International Encyclopedia, under the subject "Bell," I quote:

From old usage, bells are intimately connected with the services of the Christian Church and thus have acquired a kind of sacred character. They were founded with religious ceremonies and consecrated by a complete baptismal service; received names, had sponsors, were sprinkled with water, anointed, and finally covered with the white garment of chrisom, like infants. Their usage is as old as the time of Alouin (735-804) and is still practiced in Roman Catholic countries. Bells had mostly pious inscriptions, often indicative of the widespread belief in the mysterious virtue of their sound. They were believed to disperse storms and pestilence, drive away enemies, extinguish fire, etc.

THERE ARE MANY famous bells the world over, but to Americans, the Liberty Bell, which first rang to celebrate the adoption of the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776, is the most sacred. The famous bell was recast twice between 1752, when it was brought from England, and 1776. The last time (1753) the words, "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof," (Leviticus 25: 10) were inscribed on it.

For many years it was rung annually on the Fourth of July. But on July 8, 1835, while being tolled in memory of Chief Justice John Marshall, it was broken. It is a prized possession of our country and is viewed by millions in the old State House at Philadelphia.

Memory takes me back to my boyhood, to the bell that called us to church—to the old Brick Church at Lamoni. I am not advised whether it will be installed in the new church now in process of construction there.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Winchell on Tolerance

IT IS AN EVENT worthy of attention when a national radio commentator or editorial writer mentions the mission of Joseph Smith. It becomes an incident worthy of more than passing notice when a nationally known commentator brings in the work of our founder and does so judicially. We have received from a number of our members copies of a recently syndicated editorial by Walter Winchell under the head, "Time and Tolerance," from which we quote:

About 1844 Joseph Smith believed an angel visited him with a new interpretation of the Bible. Thousands of people flocked to his banner. But the people of New York and Pennsylvania didn't want any part of the new religion and the sect was forced into Ohio . . . Ohio, too pushed them on and they finally took refuge at Nauvoo, Illinois. They were given the poorest land, but their terrific industry made it bloom . . . The neighboring towns hated them and feeling mounted . . . Political pressure was brought to bear, and Joseph Smith was ordered to trial. With tremendous dignity, he surrendered to the authorities . . . It is written on one of the blackest pages of our history that as he awaited trial a mob of 200 men with blackened faces lynched him.

But Joseph Smith's idea survived his Nauvoo lynching as certainly as the spirit of Joan of Arc lived though the flames in the market place of Rouen . . . The midnight of his lynching, the persecuted colony of desperate Mormons put their women and children in wagons and, their rifles in their elbows, crossed the Mississippi on its frozen ice—and marched on to found the magnificent State of Utah.

It will be seen that Mr. Winchell is in error as to dates and the time of the movement from Nauvoo to the West, but we commend him for the fairness of his treatment. We have written to him calling attention to his mistakes and in doing so have tried to set him right as to our relationship to the original church.

"Christ Feeding The Multitude"

Featured in the Bethlehem
Star Parade

IN 1949 the first Bethlehem Star Parade was held in Van Nuys, California. Due to the great success of this venture, it was decided that such a parade should be featured as an annual Christmas attraction. Church and civic leaders hope that in years to come people will make a pilgrimage to view this beautiful spectacle and that churches throughout the country will participate.

Last year the parade was held on the evening of December 7 with fifteen churches represented. The primary object of the parade is to have floats depicting the Nativity and the life of Christ, and to put the true Spirit of Christ back into Christmas.

The Saints in Sherman Oaks started preparations for their float in October under the direction of Sister Minghini. Lack of funds and available workers almost caused the project to be abandoned. (The church home had to be ready for its dedication on December 10.) When the news reached Sister Woodring that the project was to be abandoned, she and her husband volunteered to advance the money and build the float; Mr. Woodring also portrayed Jesus on the float. In the meantime the other men and women members of the church were working feverishly on the new church as the city would give no further extension of time to complete the building.

THE SUBJECT of the float was "Christ Feeding the Multitude." It is difficult to recount the hundreds of details that go into such a project. Sister Florence Guy painted a realistic scene of the Sea of Galilee and its surrounding mountains. Sister Minghini and Sister Woodring each spent a day locating tree branches and greenery to simulate a mountain scene. It was necessary to cover the sides of the float and all the running gear with greenery. Sister Ruth Harris was in charge of making the costumes for the thirteen figures on the float. Much thought and ingenuity as to colors and combination of colors went into this phase of the project. The Bethlehem Star Parade Association was most generous, furnishing a trailer on which to mount the float, wigs and beards for Christ and the apostles, and a wig for the boy. The Hudson dealer in Van Nuys loaned a new Hudson Convertible to pull the float in the parade. It was driven by Brother Clarence Smith, and the pastor, Elder D. R. Clark, and his wife and children, rode in the car.

In eight days the float was built and all of the characters costumed and ready for dress rehearsal. When Mr. Moran, secretary-manager of the Van Nuys Chamber of Commerce and director of the parade, heard about the dress rehearsal, he suggested bringing a newspaper photographer to take pictures for advance publicity. Pictures of the float were on the front page of the Van Nuys News and Green Sheet, also in the Los Angeles Mirror and the Hollywood Citizen News. There were many other times that the church's name appeared in news stories in all the local papers with regards to the parade.

Anyone who has worked on any large project such as this knows that last minute details are the hardest. Without the help of Brother Joseph Liberto on the day of the parade the presentation would probably not have been so successful.

DURING THE PARADE the title of the float and name of the church were announced at each street intersection by means of a public address system. The parade, viewed by 80,000 people, took almost two hours to pass the reviewing stand. The cast was as follows:

John Woodring—Christ; Donald Shedd, the boy with two fishes and five small loaves of bread; Martin Ahlstrom—kneeling disciple; Jack Davis—serving disciple; Leona Furlong, Claudia Furlong, Jewell Starkey, Albert Starkey, Perry Pitt, Ruth Harris, Dorothy Morrissey, A. J. Gray—the multitude.

There were no awards given to the individual churches, as it is a co-operative movement on the part of all to have a successful parade. All of the men had to work at their various occupations until 6:00 p.m., and as the parade started at 7:30, it was a busy hour and a half of completing details. The money accepted from the Woodrings was repaid by selling popcorn to the spectators of the parade. The J. C. Penney Company very generously loaned its popcorn equipment and booth in the arcade of the new store on Van Nuys Boulevard. In the meantime, Sister Swanson and Sister Peterson popped corn all day at home and boxed it. Nearly everyone who was not on the float helped with the popcorn, both in making and selling it. The advance of $115.00 cost of the float was repaid to the Woodrings, and $14.80 net remained from the sale of popcorn. The Bethlehem Star Parade Association solicited funds from various individuals and organizations and as a result, after all bills were paid, each participating church received approximately $40.00 to help with the cost of the floats. This made a total of $54.00 to add to the building fund.

As members of Van Nuys Branch look back on December 7, 1950, the tiredness is all gone, and nothing remains but a peaceful glow as they realize that the parade was a success, and at last the church's name is getting before the public.

God's Purpose - Our Mission

Home-coming Sermon--Graceland College--October 22, 1950

By President E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

WE COME TO THIS PLACE this morning with some expectancy. To reinforce the bonds of good fellowship which we experience, we sense the need for a common re-dedication to the way of life taught in this place in His name. The firm handclasp, the friendly sparkle of the eye, the buoyant spirit—these bespeak fraternity, well-being, and peace.

But, like the sinking, depressing feeling of some half-remembered, unpleasant incident is the realization that all is not well in the larger community. There are those who worship lesser things, diseases of the mind and emotions infect great numbers of our fellows, and God-given riches of the earth are dissipated in insane conflict of men created in his image. Not the physical struggle of man against man is of greatest concern, the important thing is that the issues are beclouded and perverted in the minds of men. And the greatest sin is that so many live incompletely, uncertainly, sadly. We in this assembly cannot be insensitive to the pain and confusion of our brethren and still worship God. Here on the Graceland Hill, at the midpoint of the twentieth century, there must come to us a renewal of our powers, prophetic insight on the part we shall play, and the assurance that we go in His name.

One Eternal Purpose

What wouldst thou have us say, O Lord, to those who wait on thee?

The voice of the Restoration, Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1, says,

The works and the designs, and the purposes of God cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round.

There is the truth which man must hear spoken today—truth which will take flesh in the lives of a people who will give allegiance to its call. We must know why we are here and what we are to do if life is to be anything but a burden and a disappointment.

GIs IN KOREA HANDICAPPED BY UNAWARENESS OF MISSION

This headline appeared on the front page of the New York Times, Sunday, August 13, with the following: "A commander of infantry said: 'I can tell my men what to do. I can show them how to do it. But until they understand why they are doing it, they can't do it well.'" "Their's not to reason why" is not characteristic of fighting or working-men in a democracy. "I'll fight for my country," said a GI to the Times special correspondent, "But damned if I see why I am fighting to save this hell hole."

The peril of our time is that men know how but not why. We can build a city, send buildings one hundred stories into the air, structures of glass and steel, beautiful to behold. We can dam rivers, bridge chasms, fly faster than sound, shatter the atom, talk to friends on the other side of the world, but WHY? Why spend millions on cancer research and kill on the highways with drunken driving? Why educate for healthful living, teach our boys and girls it's not right to fight on the playground, and send them out soon to maim, destroy, kill, to be in the mud, filth, and disease of the battlefield? Why train a boy to be an electrician, an engineer, a teacher, and not expose him to the great minds of the ages? Whom does he know—Isaiah, Hosea, Jesus, Plato, Jefferson, Lincoln?

How often are these questions asked: "Whence did I come?" "What am I?" "Whither am I going?"

If a man is to survive, he must become conscious of his mission. If a student is to succeed at Graceland, he will know why he is here. The Committee on Student Selections feels that the paragraph stating "why" a student wishes to attend Graceland is the most significant information on the application form.

Purpose Is Not Enough

Every man, every nation, needs a sense of purpose. But sense of purpose is not enough. The killer with purpose stalks his victim. The mob with purpose burns and lynches. The politician with purpose may think only of winning the election. Our purpose during a war is to destroy the other nation—bombing, blockade, invasion—but when that has been accomplished our troubles are just beginning, for there is no clear-cut purpose which transcends the destruction of military forces. In the battles of technology we shall win. But what of the battles for the souls of men? No, purpose is not enough. Purpose reveals single-mindedness and concentration of effort, but purpose needs to be related to enduring principles of truth and rightness if it is not to be a greater enemy than friend.

Where today can we hear the great ringing sounds of "This is my work and my glory to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."

Or "a new nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war testing whether that nation or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure."

There are some great declarations of purpose related to eternal principles of life which we can enunciate on this Home-coming Day.

In the beginning God created —Genesis 1: 1, I. V.

And I, the Lord God, took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it, and to keep it.—Genesis 2: 18, I. V.

Yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart, yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul and in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments.
—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 4, 5.

God created! He created a garden for man, and man was to tend and care for it—not a finished product but work to do, creation to share in. And there is to be an abundance to be used with judgment and justice. Man is to have this responsibility and to use the products of the earth with a prayer of thankfulness in his heart and acknowledgment for the Creator of it all. Who is there to say, "this is mine"? Who is there who can declare that he has no responsibility toward others? Who can say, "I shall do with mine as I will"? Cannot we sound forth from this place the message of stewardship: "No man is in business for himself"?

The Way of the Steward

What a richness of experience is enjoyed by the farmer who manages his soil, not as his own, but in the spirit of wisdom of trusteeship; who sees his efforts supported by sun and rain and the energy of the earth, and knows that God gives the increase. What fullness of life can be known by the doctor who ministers with skill and superior training, yet breathes silently or audibly, "Lord, use me, thy humble servant."

And what of the mother who rises far above the level of the biological experience common to the animal to acknowledge that she and her companion have in their care the most precious trust of all, a life which can be rich or barren, joyful or despairing, a blessing or cursing? Has she not acknowledged her partnership with God?

We are called to be stewards, trustees, co-laborers with the Eternal Creator. This is God's purpose. This is our calling.

Service as a Principle of Life

2. There is another principle of purpose to be sounded. "Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I, send me!"

Even as Isaiah responded to the needs of his people, so there is a call today for those who will not ask, "What's in it for me?" but will declare, "I'll go where you want me to go and do what you want me to do."

We are here today because there have been giants in this land—men who have stood courageously for truth against the assault of falsehood, men who have served when appreciation was not known, men who have realized that in being true to their sense of mission they have become one with a select company who reckoned returns not in honor, prestige, or riches, but in that sense of having been true to the best they knew. There is very little relation today between the monetary returns to a person and the service he gives to the community. Can we sound here, clearly and bravely, the note that we shall respond to the needs of humanity as our talents may allow us?

What does it pay? How are the working conditions? Is there a good retirement program? Is it a five-day week? Is there much responsibility? It is sacrilege to mention in the same breath with those questions the names of Edison, Carver, Lister, and Einstein. I don't have anything coming to me. The world doesn't owe me a living. I owe something for the privilege of breathing the breath of life, for eating of the fruit of the earth, for seeing God's beauty in the heavens. How can anyone with a soul not shrunken fail to breathe as he rises in the morning, "Here am I, Lord, send me." Sense of purpose? To heal the sick, to bring sight to the blind, to free the captive, to comfort those who mourn, to teach the ignorant, to feed the hungry, to lift the downtrodden. Who can ask, "What is there for me to do?"

Establish the Cause of Zion

God created. He placed man in the garden to dress it and tend it. . . . He calls men through the ages to speak and to go for him. And what culmination is there to this purpose?

And it shall come to pass in the last days, when the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it:

And many people shall go and say, come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem:

And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more, O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord.—Isaiah 2: 2-5.

Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ.—Ether 1: 35.

And I have made the earth rich and behold it is my footstool; wherefore, again I will stand upon it; and I hold forth and deign to give unto you greater riches, even a land of promise; a land flowing with milk and honey, upon which there shall be no curse when the Lord cometh; and I will give it unto you for the land of your inheritance, if you seek it with all your hearts.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4 (January, 1831).

Cannot we see how, through the ages, mankind has been blessed with opportunities for growth? How God's purposes have been expressed through those who have been willing to stand for him? How the plan of creation, like the streams from many hills, converge into a mighty river? Seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion! This land is ordained to that purpose. It has been designated as a choice land, inhabited by people who were not seeking for wealth but for freedom, for the privilege of worshiping their God, for the establishment of a social order built upon the idea of the dignity of humankind.

But there is danger that this land at the very hour that greatness is thrust upon it has lost its sense of destiny and calling. Dollars do not minister to the basic needs of people. Charles Malik, Minister of Lebanon to the United States, said at Harvard this summer regarding the so-called Point Four, "If the United States extends merely its technical know-how to the lesser-developed countries of the world and does not at the same time share the richness of its total cultural heritage, it will be one of the most cruel things a great nation has ever done."

To feel that this nation is ordained to a great mission is not to deny a world brotherhood of nations. Those persons who are most firmly rooted in the culture of their own nations will be the best citizens in a great world order.

Our Mission

There is need at this very hour to proclaim the great purpose of this nation. It was said in those early days. It was written in the great documents that have become our heritage. All men are created—they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights. The greatness of this nation has been in its recognition of the blessings and direction of the God who created it. Not lands but citizenry make a nation great. We hold these truths to be self-evident that the United States of America, having been given the material means, the opportunity for developing political and social institutions dedicated to the welfare of humankind, and at this moment in history being equipped to serve as minister, friend, and teacher, will dedicate itself to the mission of its calling.

And here on this Hill, we shall state our purpose:

1. To teach the way of trusteeship—we are laborers with God. We are accountable to God and our fellow men.
2. To respond with will and competency to the needs of our fellows. To place above any other form of return the desire to find the work for which our gifts best qualify us, and to answer that call.
3. To recognize that this land has been designated by its Creator for unusual responsibility, that this is its day of destiny, and that the strength to fulfill its calling is in its people. To bring forth the cause of Zion.

Present Day Concepts of Jesus

By Josephine Montgomery

THERE ARE FOUR main schools of thought concerning Jesus. As always there are those who do not even accept the existence of such a man as historically accurate; there are those conservatives who accept the historical version of Jesus as being the miraculous God-man; there are those liberals who accept him as a human being in whom God was indwelling to a degree not found in most men; and there are those who accept his existence as a good man having no particular religious significance.

In Christian theology, of course, the conservative and liberal views are more important than the other two. Our concept of Jesus has a profound influence on our other religious beliefs. The conservative acceptance of historical Christianity leads to an emphasis on the divinity of Jesus, the doctrine of atonement, and immortality. The liberals, on the other hand, see Jesus as a real human, one who was divine in the same way that all men are divine (God was indwelling in him) but who recognized the possibilities of his divinity more than the rest of us do. It is this unique quality of divinity which sets him apart, not as an object of faith, but as an example. In this way they believe that it is the spiritual, moral, and ethical meaning in the life of Jesus which is savingly related to mankind, not his death as the conservatives believe. Through the life of a superlatively good man, God was able to reach more deeply and more immediately into the lives of men than he ever could in any other way. This was God's way of revealing himself to the utmost degree.

Most modern theologians tend toward the liberal viewpoint, but they are not dogmatic in believing that everyone must agree with them. It is far more important that men understand and agree on the fundamental point that God operates in and through Christ in a redemptive and creative reality than that they should argue over the "how" behind it. The way is not important; the purpose is.

The Covenant of the Bow

By Deam H. Ferris

FEW STORIES are as appealing to children as the lovely story of the rainbow and its promise found in the ninth chapter of Genesis. The rainbow itself has been a source of pleasure and inspiration not only to the simple and unlearned, but to the artist and poet as well. With Wordsworth, most men would exclaim:

My heart leaps up when I behold
A rainbow in the sky:
So was it when my life began;
So is it now, I am a man:
So be it when I shall grow old,
Or let me die!
The child is father of the man;
And I could wish my days to be Bound each to each by natural piety.

And in the childhood days of civilization, the rainbow had a still more cogent meaning. Noah had prophesied and preached and labored among his neighbors, but they perished in the flood. Although he had labored in vain, it had undoubtedly been a labor of love with the purpose of turning men from evil. Although sinful, those people had been his neighbors. To Noah and those who survived, there is implied in the Scriptures a fear of a recurrence of events. Each heavy rain would bring new fears. Children are hard to rear. Some will stray from the gospel in spite of all efforts. When might a group become sinful enough again to cause a repetition of the flood? Perhaps to some who lacked Noah's prophetic insight, there might have been a question as to the kind of a god they worshiped—was he a monster? a despot?

To the men of that day, it had tremendous significance. But the covenant was made with more than Noah and his immediate posterity:

This shall be the token of the covenant I make between me and you, and for every living creature with you, for perpetual generations; I will set my bow in the cloud; and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth.—Genesis 9: 18, 19, I.V.

It was made for all creatures and with the earth. But with the passage of time, this covenant became relegated to the folklore of a primitive people. Among many of the educated it has been regarded, however lovely and symbolic, as a myth out of a departed age. And the rainbow itself, although always the esthetic inspiration of the artist or poet, dwindled to a place of innocuous and commonplace beauty, accepted along with the sunset and sunrise as the seasonal legacy of mankind.

FEW MEN before Newton considered the rainbow. With the greatness and simplicity of genius, he began to study this commonplace phenomenon which had been overlooked through the centuries. By means of a triangular prism, he spread sunlight into a band of the same colors. Isaac Barrow, his teacher, and the other philosophers at Cambridge did not believe this was the same phenomenon as the rainbow. Although his experiments and reasoning were unimpeachably clear, his contemporaries continued to believe that the glass itself had created the effect. But Newton correctly concluded that the rainbow represented a separation of the colors of light from the sun.

Today, the beginning chemistry student notes with pleasure what chemists have long known—that different materials burn with a variety of colors. Lithium chloride charms the eye with red, copper with green, and sodium with a fluffy yellow flame. The deeper significance of this was lost upon men for many years. About the time of the American Revolution, Joseph Fraunhofer became aware of a strange message in the rainbow. While studying a beautiful spectrum of sunlight, he observed strange black lines. Continuing his research he charted and named over six hundred of these lines. As with many important discoveries, men were not ready to receive them; the significance of these lines was not understood until 1859. Kirchoff in that year discovered that when a pure element is heated to incandescence and the light examined by a spectroscope—a development of Newton's prism—bright vertical lines appear. Each element, it dawned upon men, has its own place in the light of the universe . . . "it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth."

Can one imagine a man able to make, accurately, from memory, the simplest measuring ruler? And yet, each simple element carries in the rainbow its own perfect and undeviating yardstick! From this and related studies, the chemists discovered that the elements of the earth and the universe were related to each other in an amazing fashion. What had been a chaos of magic rites, of secret recipes, of alchemist's lore, became science, truth, law. In 1868, when the Reorganization was outdistancing the laws of the land by permitting women members to vote at the General Conference, Sir Norman Lockyer discovered certain lines in the sun's spectrum which were not found in any known element on the earth. Perhaps there have been fewer thrills than that which came to Sir William Ramsey, when in 1895, he discovered this element—helium—in the chemistry laboratory. It had been revealed by the rainbow many years before.

THE MESSAGE of the rainbow began to dawn upon man. From the laboratory of the scientist and study of the philosopher, it began to touch the daily life of men. Henry Ford was the first in industry to realize that the rainbow's secret could help produce cheaper automobiles by allowing a more rapid analysis of the steel from his great furnaces. And the F.B.I. used it to bring the poisoner and criminal to justice.

The rainbow became the arch bridging the gap between the minds of men and the mysterious universe beyond. The dark lines were found to be caused by the absorption of certain wave lengths as they passed through the cooler vapor of the same element. Thus the interior of the sun could be studied as well as its outer covering of gasses. The rainbow became the answer to the age-long riddle of the sun and stars. Abbot says (speaking of the dark lines) "From then until now they have been the master key which has unlocked, one by one, the secret storehouses of knowledge of the universe."—Man and His Physical Universe, page 33. Doppler found that by comparing the shift of the lines, the movement of stars and planets in relation to the earth could be measured. And finally, it was through the astronomer's study of the sun's spectrum that a knowledge of the transmutation of hydrogen into helium was discovered. This is the vital force underlying the sun's energy. Upon it our physical existence is predicated.

MANKIND FORGOT the covenant of the bow. But not so the prophet of Palmyra! A reading of the Inspired Version reveals truths unrecorded in other manuscripts:

And this is mine everlasting covenant, that when thy posterity shall embrace the truth, and look upward, then shall Zion look downward, and all the heavens shall shake with gladness, and the earth shall tremble with joy.—Genesis 9: 22.

As men looked upward toward the rainbow and embraced the physical truths of this rich promise, they were rewarded with esthetic, intellectual, and temporal rewards that in retrospect seem so miraculous as to be fantastic. Even the simplest elements were revealed in a new light. That man was made of the "dust of the earth" was proved to be a scientific truth. Instead of a chaotic world, ruled over by a despot to be placated by mystical rites and meaningless sacrifices, a world of law and order surpassing the most precise speculations of the wise was revealed. Truly this was a consequence of Noah's posterity "embracing truth."

THE PROPHET of our day has defined intelligence as "light and truth." He has well described it as the "glory of God." In harmony with the ancient covenant of the bow, we see a parallel for our use today. Light, the external reality whose source is God, falls upon the prism of the human soul. Truth, then, is the inner comprehension of this light—the spectrum of understanding. As physical instruments differ in their ability to transmit the light, so human beings differ in willingness to accept light and embrace truth. To "embrace" implies love. Love means the interpretation and application of truth to daily life—to act. To embrace truth means more than mouthing trite platitudes. Embracing the truth of the rainbow by the scientists did not come easily. The prophecy of Wordsworth's poem too often went unfulfilled, and childish joy and wonderment did not become mature understanding. In our physical work God has rewarded richly those who kept their part of the covenant. Could this be a shadow of richer spiritual rewards yet unattained? The social and spiritual truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ have yet to be embraced in our day. Can we in our relationships between races and nations and classes begin to drop our time-worn traditions and prejudices and begin really to "embrace truth?"

As beautiful as the rainbow of childhood, and as sure as the spectrum of science, stands the covenant of the bow before us.

Church Men in the News

The following account from a Long Beach, California, newspaper is about Elder James Burdick, a member of the Santa Paula, California, mission.

NEW HOSPITAL ADMINISTRATOR NAMED
San Pedro Community hospital's new administrator is James B. Burdick, former administrative resident at the 413-bed Good Samaritan hospital, Portland, Oregon.

Burdick is a native of Arkansas but spent most of his early life in Oklahoma. He came to California in 1928, taking up residence at Ventura, where he was accountant and office manager for Limoneira Company, large citrus producers and shippers.

Burdick left Ventura in 1945 to become office manager and accountant at Graceland Junior college, Lamoni, Iowa, where he had attended school. In 1947 he became acting business manager there.

In addition to attending junior college, Burdick attended UCLA and received his B.A. degree in business administration at the Los Angeles school. He received a Master's degree in 1949 at the University of Chicago, specializing in hospital administration.

For his essay on "Relationship Between the Board of Trustees, the Medical Staff and the Hospital Administrator," Burdick was awarded the A. C. Bachmeyer prize for outstanding writing at the Illinois institution.

Burdick and his wife Hazel have a daughter Juanita, 13, an eighth grade junior high school student.

The new administrator of San Pedro Community hospital was active in the Toastmasters club at Portland, and is an elder of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Mrs. Burdick has been active in Girl Scout work and the women's department of the church, also in the P. T. A. organization of the public school system.

The Book of Mormon Institute

Part III

ONE OF THE BENEFITS of the Book of Mormon Institute was the bringing into focus of many research projects suitable for serious part-time or full-time work by Book of Mormon students, and the suggestion of many needs in the way of new literature, materials, helps, and study aids. A phrase frequently heard at the institute was "Why doesn't somebody . . . ?" followed by a specific suggestion for a research project or the creation of new Book of Mormon literature. Not once, but several times, President Edwards would turn such a query back on the inquirer with the words, "Why don't you?"

One of the major needs was suggested by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, who observed that since the last formal published report of the Committee on American Archaeology (originally appointed in 1894) many new developments have occurred to change our concepts of Book of Mormon geography. There has already been some careful research, but there needs to be more to correlate the geographical references of the Book of Mormon with known geographical and archaeological facts which have been discovered in late years.

ALMOST INNUMERABLE FIELDS for research and investigation which may shed light on the Book of Mormon are suggested by even a cursory examination of the book itself, or a rapid survey of the sciences which have a bearing on the history of ancient America. As Book of Mormon students we should be interested in a study of the various codices and other writings of pre-Columbian peoples in America. The hieroglyphics on ancient American monuments, buildings, and stelae still present a challenge to the student who is faced with the problem of interpreting them. A hundred and one Indian legends, customs, traditions, ceremonies, religious beliefs, art designs, and crafts need to be studied to see whether they have any relationship with the Book of Mormon story.

There need to be some diligent and scholarly studies made of ancient American artifacts, tools, jewelry, architecture, masonry, and other construction processes, pottery, mosaics, etc., to see whether they corroborate the Book of Mormon story. There needs to be a study of dates, and an attempt to correlate the systems of dates proposed by various scientists. There is still room for a study of the medical, surgical, pharmaceutical, astronomical, biological, engineering, and architectural skills and knowledge of these ancient peoples. We should make a careful study and analysis of all the examples we can find of the use of the cross and the feathered serpent as architectural and religious symbols. We should be interested in modern paintings and murals, modern buildings, modern literature, and modern exploration which may have some bearing on the story of the past, as they incorporate ancient styles, designs, or traditions.

We should be interested in ethnology, and in the investigation of the Mongolian theory of American origins which is advanced and believed by many modern ethnologists. We should be interested in Egyptology, and in a study of Hebrew history, language, literature, and customs—all of which have their bearing on the Book of Mormon. We should be interested in modern research in the field of biblical manuscripts and origins, in view of the Book of Mormon teaching that the colony of Lehi brought many of the Old Testament Scriptures with them, which are freely quoted in the Book of Mormon. We should be interested in making a careful study of the minute internal evidences which are to be found in the language, vocabulary, phraseology, imagery, organization and structure, editorship and arrangement, and other objective or mechanical aspects of the Book of Mormon, in its countless incidental statements of fact, and its avoidance of anachronisms.

SOME OF THE NEEDS which still exist in the field of Book of Mormon aids, helps, and commentaries, are also challenging. One of the most important projects—one which must be pushed rapidly before there can be extensive missionary work in foreign fields—is the translation of the Book of Mormon into Spanish, French, German, Danish, Norwegian, and eventually other languages. A Spanish translation is already under way; others should be in preparation, so that they will be available as needed and as funds become available to print them. The urgent need for a Book of Mormon Concordance has been adequately met in the recent past (and there was unanimous praise and appreciation for this new tool), but there still exists a great need for a good topical and doctrinal index, and for a good Book of Mormon Commentary.

TYPICAL OF THE OTHER SUGGESTIONS made both by speakers, and in comments from the floor of the institute, are the following:

A collection of aphorisms, or gems of thought, selected from the Book of Mormon.

An introduction to and guide for the reading of the Book of Mormon, to be included with books handed to nonmembers.

Some printed studies in Book of Mormon geography—new maps, etc.

A collection of short Book of Mormon biographies.

Some studies of Book of Mormon sermons and prayers.

A book containing selected source and reference materials or quotations concerning the Book of Mormon, its origin, three witnesses, proofs of authenticity, etc. Many of these are out of print or unavailable to the average reader, but could be used wisely if collected and made available in book form.

A booklet containing some photographic reproductions of selected pages from the Book of Mormon manuscript.

A missionary notebook for cottage meeting use, similar to the Restoration Story.

A book of pictures of archaeological subjects, with explanations of their connection with the Book of Mormon. (In the Land of the Feathered Serpent, by Paul M. Hanson is excellent in this field, but there seemed to be a demand for other similar books.)

The Book of Mormon in story form, and other Book of Mormon literature suitable for children.

Outlines and other Book of Mormon materials for discussion panels, forums, etc.

Book of Mormon drama, campfire stories, skits, etc., for youth groups.

Hymns based on the Book of Mormon theme.

A Book of Mormon textbook for study on the college level.

A collection of testimonies regarding the Book of Mormon.

We have been negligent as a church, not only in our use of the Book of Mormon in teaching and preaching and in private study, but in the fields of research which would bring corroborative evidence to the Book of Mormon, and in the field of developing aids and helps and collateral materials which would make it more useable and understandable to all age groups and to nonmembers as well as members. One of the major results of the institute may well be the stimulation of our people to these lines of endeavor.

Some Questions and Answers About the Book of Mormon

Questions by an Inquiring Catholic
Answers by Apostle Maurice Draper

1. Since the Book of Mormon is a translation, why wasn't it written in nineteenth century American rather than being replete with so many seventeenth century English phrases? Was it to add a biblical flavor to the work?

First of all it should be noted that Joseph Smith was not a "translator" in the ordinary sense. To translate intelligently from one language to another, a person must be familiar with both, and should have great facility of expression especially in the second language in order to permit idiomatic terminology. Joseph Smith knew nothing whatsoever about the original tongue of the Book of Mormon record, and was unlettered even in his own. To say that he was a "translator" in the usual sense, would be an error.

The miraculous element in the Book of Mormon translation, then, included the stimulation of the mind of Joseph Smith to grasp the concepts of the writers of the Book of Mormon account. It would be extremely difficult to say whether Joseph himself was given information about the phrasing of the original record, or whether he was simply impressed with concepts which he was left to find expressions for in the best manner he could. There are a few evidences that the original phrasing was sometimes involved, for there are Hebrew and Egyptian constructions which have been carried over into the English, to the detriment of the English form. But it seems that in large measure Joseph had to use the best English he could command, probably even searching for phrasing and sentence structure. His lack of literary training would be reflected in this. Furthermore, the only "literary" training Joseph had was in the few texts of the earliest grades of a frontier school, and in the King James version of the Bible. Any religious expression he desired to make would most likely take on the form of King James Bible English, since it was the only religious "literary" form he knew anything about.

2. The Book of Mormon was translated from Reformed Egyptian into English. The Bible was translated from Hebrew into Greek and then into English. We end up with verse after verse of identical English sentences. I cannot believe that two independent translations could possibly coincide in this way, even if they came from a common source.

Of course the translations of the Bible into English followed a slightly more complicated course than a direct translation of original Hebrew into Greek, and then another direct translation into English. But the sense of the question is clear, and it is a worthy question, as well as a challenging one. Many of the similarities can probably be explained in terms of the discussion under No. 1—i.e., Joseph Smith used familiar terms when endeavoring to express similar ideas which were encountered in the prophetic and theological writings of the Book of Mormon. Then there are portions of the Old Testament quoted directly in the Book of Mormon—in this part, however, it is well to note that the quotations run almost, if not exactly, word for word, rather than being similar sentences to biblical sentences. Keeping in mind these facts, we can account for many of the similarities. Beyond this, however, we might say that one of the greatest areas for study of the Book of Mormon is suggested by this question, which we cannot fully answer with information now available.

3. The Book of Mormon is supposed to be translated from ancient plates. How do you account for the many, many passages that are identical with the Bible—but always with the Authorized Version, never the Revised Version or the Douay Version or such—even down to phrases in the Authorized Version that have been proved not to correspond with the old Greek and Hebrew Codices?

If the Book of Mormon slavishly followed the King James or Authorized Version whenever there were similar passages or quotations, and never followed any other version or any of the ancient manuscripts, especially when there are differences of significance, this would be a serious blow to the claims of the book. As to which specific passages the questioner may have in mind, we cannot say, but it can be demonstrated that the Book of Mormon does depart from the King James Version in quotations from Isaiah, of which there are several chapters and parts of chapters in the Book of Mormon. Before considering these examples, however—an answer to the more general part of the question as to how verse after verse of identical passages are found in the Book of Mormon and in the Bible—we shall say that the parts from Isaiah were simply quoted by the Book of Mormon writers, who brought Old Testament Scriptures down to the time of Jeremiah with them upon their departure from Jerusalem in 600 B.C. Even more difficult to answer are questions about similarities between the Book of Mormon in its Christian period and the New Testament. These problems are under investigation, but satisfactory answers are still lacking.

Now to the matter of the Old Testament quotations. The following are several examples of differences in reading between parts of Isaiah quoted in the Book of Mormon, and those same passages in the King James and the Septuagint:

Isaiah 2: 16— BOOK OF MORMON (II Nephi 8: 32)	KING JAMES	SEPTUAGINT
And upon all the ships of the sea, and upon all the ships of Tarshish and upon all pleasant pictures.	And upon all the ships of Tarshish, and upon all pleasant pictures.	And upon every ship of the sea, and upon every display of fine ships.

In this case the King James Version (and probably the Hebrew manuscript from which it was taken) lost the first phrase. The Septuagint evidently lost the second phrase, and corrupted the last. But the Book of Mormon, which differs from both, contains elements of both, and seems not only more complete, but more intelligible than the others.

A quotation from Isaiah 2: 20 in the Book of Mormon is different from other renderings, but is supported by the Codex Alexandrinus, a fifth century Greek manuscript of the Septuagint:

BOOK OF MORMON (II Nephi 8: 36)	KING JAMES	CODEX ALEXANDRINUS
In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which he hath made for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats.	In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which they made each one for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats.	In that day a man shall cast out his abominations, the silver and the golden, which he made for himself to worship, to the vain ones and to the bats.

The point of central interest here is in the third phrase, where the King James Version reads, "which they made each one" and the Book of Mormon reads, "which he hath made." In this case where the Book of Mormon departs from the King James Version, if the Book of Mormon quotation is actually from an independent text, its translation ought by chance to correspond at some points at least with translations from other texts. This is exactly what happens, as is seen here.

There are other examples which could be given, as with Isaiah 50: 2, which seems to be quite confused both in the King James and the Septuagint Versions, but is clarified by the Book of Mormon text, and again in Isaiah 9: 3, in which the apparently contradictory "not" is left out of the Book of Mormon quotation of the phrase "and not increased the joy" as the King James puts it. This "not" in the King James Version was apparently introduced through a misunderstanding of the Hebrew word "lo," which can be translated either "not" or "to it." Had the latter been selected, the phrase would make sense and could be translated exactly as the Book of Mormon rendition gives it, with the "to it" understood, referring to the antecedent "the nation."

A fuller development of some of these examples and others is given by Sidney B. Sperry in his book, Our Book of Mormon, pages 172-177.

4. The Book of Mormon is supposed to be a translation from Nephite plates, written by various authors. I find its style amazingly similar to the "Writings of Moses," supposedly a revelation; the "Book of Abraham"—from Egyptian hieroglyphics; and Joseph Smith's autobiography. The hand of the same author is too apparent to me.

In so far as similarities appear in these various writings—and it is admitted that there are similarities of phraseology and terminology—we point out that as translator Joseph Smith was not skillful nor trained in the arts of literary expression, his understanding of religious literature in the early years was limited evidently to the King James Version of the Bible. Having cast the Book of Mormon into such style, and having already given expression to a considerable body of such literature in the revelations published to the church, and in the preparation of material for public information, it is not unreasonable to suggest that a pattern was set into which subsequent writings, whether original or translations, would tend to be shaped. Every writer has his own style. This is characteristic of him in such a way that he cannot disguise it from a skillful literary analyst. It is probably even more true of one whose background in this field is limited—the distinctive features of his style would show up markedly in all of his work, due to his inability to use a great variety of familiar literary forms.

In passing, regarding the content of the Book of Abraham and other parts of the work known as The Pearl of Great Price—we quote from our Church History, Volume 2, page 569, the words of Joseph Smith, III (editor and son of the founder of the church): "The church has never to our knowledge taken any action on this work, either to indorse or condemn; so it cannot be said to be a church publication; nor can the church be held to answer for the correctness of its teachings. Joseph Smith, as the translator, is committed of course to the correctness of the translation, but not necessarily to the indorsement of its historical or doctrinal contents."

5. The Book of Mormon is supposed to be a translation into English. Such words as "ziff," "cureloms," and "cumoms" puzzle me.

They puzzle me, too. There are some terms that are untranslatable, for a number of reasons—perhaps the one language lacks a word for the concept due to lack of experience by the people with such objects or ideas; or perhaps the construction conveys a grammatical color or shade which the language of translation does not permit. The "cureloms" and "cumoms" evidently refer to animals used by the most ancient colony, the "Jaredites," for which there was no equivalent term in the Nephite tongue (since Moroni abridged the translation of this part of the record made by Mosiah), or in English. A similar situation exists today with regard to the French word "garage" for which there is no English equivalent. We have, therefore, simply adopted the French word. This does not mean to say that the animals referred to are necessarily unknown, though this may be the case. It means simply that there was no identifiable equivalent in the other languages for the term used. Every translator runs into this problem and frequently leaves a whole phrase in the original, though this would not be regarded as a satisfactory translation. The same holds true for the word "ziff," apparently a metal familiar to the Nephites, but one for which Joseph Smith could find no English equivalent. It could have been an alloy—unfamiliar to the English-speaking people because of their lack of experience with that particular metal. Or again, these words could represent terms for which Joseph Smith was at a personal loss to translate, but which another translator might have been able to express.

6. In general, the prophecies of the Old Testament are veiled and hazy. The prophecies of the Book of Mormon concerning the Messiah are crystal clear, even to the name of Jesus, the name of his mother, Mary, the exact time of his coming, etc. Did God so favor his children in the new world over those of the old, or could it be that the prophecies were written after the fact?

It is impossible for us to tell today how clear the original prophecies of the Old Testament were, and how many may have been lost sight of through the years. A number of prophetic books are referred to in the Scriptures which are not contained therein, i.e., the Book of Iddo the Seer, the Book of Enoch, the Book of Nathan the Prophet, etc. (II Chronicles 9: 29; Jude 14). The copyings and numerous translations undoubtedly have obscured many of the passages, and some may have been lost entirely. An advantage of the Book of Mormon over the Bible versions lies in the fact that it had but one copying (if one can call the work of abridging by Mormon copying) and one translation, to get it into English. Furthermore, an inherent claim in the Book of Mormon is that its people would be more responsive to revelation, particularly in the early part of the Nephite history, since the family of Lehi was especially selected by the Lord to escape the Babylonian captivity due to the righteousness of Lehi and his spiritual responsiveness. Nephi shared in this spiritual sensitivity and was blessed with remarkable spiritual insight. Thus the great clarity of Book of Mormon prophecies is a fact consistent with its own claims, and not inconsistent with the spirit and nature of revelation itself.

7. There are many New Testament passages that appear in the Book of Mormon, supposedly written hundreds of years before the coming of Christ. Did St. Paul and the evangelists have access to the Book of Mormon?

No, St. Paul and the evangelists didn't have access to the Book of Mormon. If they had, the answer to this question would be much easier. This is undoubtedly one of the most puzzling features of the Book remaining to be explored. There is apparently no really satisfying answer to this question at the present time. A suggested line of thought and investigation is given by Sperry (Our Book of Mormon, pages 195, 198).

Nevertheless, many phrases are word for word the same as in the King James Version. Here the author frankly admits the possibility that Joseph Smith used the familiar version as he translated Mormon's words; whenever the two versions differed substantially, he inserted the Nephite reading. And, again, we point to the probability that Paul and a Nephite prophet had access to a common body of teaching. . . . When the prophet Joseph Smith came to a passage which contained statements which reminded him of similar ones in the New Testament, he was doubtless influenced by their wording, and used them whenever it was possible to do so.

This answer is not entirely satisfactory, but it seems to be at the moment the best we can do with the question.

8. "I am Alpha and Omega." Why would Christ use Greek terms to a people who had no knowledge of Greek? It has been said that the Nephites might have come into contact with the language before coming to the new world. Even if this were so, they couldn't possibly have known of the letter "omega" because it was not added to the Greek alphabet until after the time of the Nephite migration.

Here seems to be another case in which a foreign term has been accepted into the English because of a shade of meaning or feeling which it carries. While one could simply say, "beginning and end," the term "Alpha and Omega" to the English ear carries a grandeur which gives feeling to the concept. This seems to be a translation term in which Joseph makes use of the Greek term for its effect on the English ear, rather than because the exact Greek term as such appeared in the original. The concept was in the original, but the term used to convey it to English was the Greek term which the English language has borrowed.

Joseph does something similar when he has Jacob closing his book with the French word "adieu." Surely this French word does not appear in the original—there is neither historical nor cultural basis for such an assumption. But it is used, with understanding, by English-speaking people as a variant of farewell, and so Joseph borrowed it for this purpose. One might question the literary value of such translating, but that it fits into the possible pattern of terminology for this record is unquestionable.

9. The Book of Mormon says that Christ was to be born at Jerusalem. The Bible says Bethlehem. Which is wrong?

Correction, please—the Book of Mormon says that Christ "shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem, which is the land of our forefathers."—Alma 5: 15. This reference to Jerusalem as a land is common in the Book of Mormon. Note the references as follows: I Nephi 1: 38, 67, 68, 152; 2: 8, 13; 5: 46, 82, 94, 98, 214; II Nephi 1: 1, 3, 18, 55; 11: 20; Alma 17: 27; III Nephi 7: 24; Mormon 1: 83, 84, etc.

The Book of Mormon is accurate at this point. The "land of Jerusalem" is used to designate the area around the city, growing out of the ancient practice of so naming city-states. See "A city of the land of Jerusaelm, Bet-Ninib"—Die El Amarna Tafeln, by J. A. Knudtzon, 1: 864-867, 872-875. The following is also in the same work: Siehe dieses Land von Urusalim hat nicht mein Vater und nicht meine Mutter mir gegeben (I see that this land of Jerusalem has given me neither father nor mother).—Ibid., 1:865.

Since Bethlehem is less than ten miles from Jerusalem and really includes the area we would call "greater Jerusalem" today, it falls well within the area designated as the "land of Jerusalem"—a term used in the ancient tablets of El Amarna, translated into German by Knudtzon, and from whom we have here quoted with the English equivalent.

10. References to such things as "secret societies" and "dissenters" date the origin of the Book of Mormon as nineteenth century rather than 2,000 years ago.

Why should the term "dissenter" date the book nineteenth century? There have been dissenters from every social movement which has gained any recognition by a considerable group of men ever since society has achieved sufficient organization for it to be called society. The term simply means "nonconformists," or opponents, or apostates, and the Bible is full of the stories of those who have rebelled against existing civil, social, and religious conditions and movements. A traditional biblical example is the division of the kingdom through the dissension between Rehoboam and Jeroboam over taxation.

In the matter of secret societies, the Jews apparently had a tradition of such, for such a society was formed to dispose of Paul. ". . . there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him."—Acts 23: 21.

This field is worthy of full investigation, however, and a study will be undertaken to determine the relation of the Book of Mormon "Gadianton" society, organized for criminal purposes as a "gang" or even a predatory nation, to secret societies in general. When the results of this study are in, perhaps a more complete answer to this question can be offered.

Question:

In view of the differences that persist among all Christians, in what manner do you believe the honest in heart will catch the vision of the Restoration Movement? Illinois J. R. M.

Answer:

The question implies that the honest in heart had not yet caught the vision of this latter-day work, which is largely true. For 120 years now the elders of this church have labored assiduously against great odds to spread the gospel. The church is still small in comparison with many others, and while it has not failed to gain recognition in the world, it has not become outstanding in the eyes of men.

In the United States alone, the church faces, according to latest reports, entrenched religion to the number of 256 church organizations, carrying a total membership of 77,744,943, out of a total population of 149,215,366, or a little over 52 per cent. The task of the church is not an easy one and cannot be accomplished without divine help, and according to the Scriptures without divine intervention. The membership on October 1, 1950 was 143,585.

The Lord is yet to move in greater power in the extension of his work and will in time remove many of the obstacles and hindrances which now prevent the full accomplishment of the work. He has said, "The adversary hath hindered, desiring to prevent the success of my work in the earth," but "The days cometh that I will send forth judgment unto victory."—Doctrine and Covenants 52: 3. Babylon, both political and religious, is to fall; the great church with its offspring is to go down and cease to exist. (Ibid., 28: 5; Ezekiel 31; 1 Nephi 7: 48-53; Mormon 4: 36-56.)

Through divine judgment many hearts will be softened and inclined toward the truth. "I will visit and soften their hearts, many of them, for your good, that ye may find grace in their eyes, that they may come to the light of truth, and the Gentiles to the exaltation or lifting up of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 2. The Lord will clear the way for the spreading of his gospel and the giving of opportunity to all the honest in heart to hear and understand.

CHARLES FRY.

Question:

In Genesis 7: 29 it says "the seed of Cain were black." Was Enoch, being a son of Cain, black? If not, who was the first black man? Oregon Mrs. T. M.

Answer:

Genesis 5: 25 states that God put a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him. The mark put upon Cain could have been a dark skin, though this is conjectural. If Cain was black, it is probable that, in consideration of other statements, his children were black. Genesis 7:10 says that a blackness came upon all the children of Cain. Verse 29 says that the seed of Cain were black. It would seem conclusive that Enoch, the son of Cain, was black. Genesis 8: 42 says all flesh that moved upon the earth died in the flood. Thus ended the descendants of Cain. Enoch should not be confused with righteous Enoch, whose father was Jared, a descendant of Seth, who was a son of Adam. See Genesis 6: 4, 12, 15-26, 32-56, Inspired Version. ALMA C. ANDREWS.

Question:

If it is true, as we have always been taught, that the only unforgivable sin is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, how can Doctrine and Covenants 42: 6 be true? Washington B. N.

Answer:

To answer this question, we must correct two errors. First, consider carefully the exact language of the Scripture. "The blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men

... whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in the world to come."—Matthew 12: 31, 32.

Jesus did not say that this is the "only" unforgivable sin. He simply said, "It shall not be forgiven." There could be others. If some teaching has been contrary to this, it is incorrect.

Jesus did not say "unforgivable." The word is not found in the Bible. If it occurs in the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, it has not come to our attention. Changing the language of the Scripture here greatly alters its significance.

This leaves the matter open. There is no conflict. Doctrine and Covenants 42: 6 says, "He that kills shall not have forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come." Now we know two things for which there is no forgiveness: murder and blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.

L. J. LEA.

Question:

Some of the members of your church believe that the United States should disband its army and destroy its navy because in the Bible it says "Thou shalt not kill." Is that the teaching of your church or is that just a private opinion? Rhode Island T. W.

Answer:

This statement is to be interpreted as a private opinion only, for the teachings of our church are that we are to uphold the government and the laws of such government under which we live. We do NOT teach aggressive warfare, but as stated in our book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 112, (which is our belief with regard to earthly governments and laws in general) our belief in the inalienable rights of the individual for "the free exercise of conscience, the right and

EUGENE AND SPRINGFIELD, OREGON.

—A growth in attendance has been noted in the mission. An average attendance has been forty-five. The annual business meeting was held at the home of Ephraim Barnhart on September 21, 1950. District President J. L. Verhei was in charge. Elder Lowell D. Shultz was appointed as pastor with Ephraim Barnhart and Paul Sargent as associates.

The following officers were elected: church school director, Ephraim Barnhart; secretary and treasurer, Guilda Barnhart; music director, Rena Whittington; women's leader, Cecile Sargent; publicity agent and book steward, Janet Sargent; auditor, Zela Peacock; Zion's League leader, Rena Whittington; solicitor, Carolyn Shultz; historian, Guilda Barnhart; building committee, Ephraim Barnhart, Guilda Barnhart and Paul Sargent. Three weeks missionary series have been planned by Elder Elwin R. Vest.—Reported by GUILDA BARNHART.

DENVER, COLORADO.—The Eastern Colorado District held a yuletide retreat in Denver sponsored by the Denver Zion's League, December 29, 30, and 31. The theme of the retreat was "Living With a Purpose." Approximately 112 young people attended the retreat. It was the first of its kind, and plans are developing to make it an annual affair.

Chaplain Donald Lents of the Independence Sanitarium was present, contributing to the success of the retreat.

The first day was spent in becoming acquainted, followed by a tour of Denver's holiday lights. After the tour the group assembled at one of the parks for a short fellowship.

Fellowship, classes, skating, and a lovely banquet were enjoyed. An Upper Room Service was held where the Leaguers committed themselves to worth-while causes.

On Sunday, the Denver Zion's League took charge of the church school program. Brother Lents spoke at the preaching service.—Reported by CONNIE ADKINS.

SIoux FALLS, SOUTH DAKOTA.—The small group of Saints are organized and hold services each Sunday in the "Pine Room" of the Y.M.C.A. building. There is no regular pastor yet, but there is a great need for one.

Elder C. R. Buller of Parker, South Dakota, makes a sixty mile trip each Sunday to preach to the group.—Reported by CORA EMERSON.

MUSCATINE, IOWA.—A special baptismal service was held January 7. Seven candidates: Pearl Wagler, Darrell Ashby, Patricia, Sandra, and Gary Courtoise, Marilyn Symmonds, and David Church, were baptized in a peaceful setting. The font was decorated with green rugs and beautiful flowers.

Following the service, the congregation moved to the upper auditorium. Two babies were blessed: Joyce Ann Arp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Arp; and Kathy Lynn Courtoise, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Courtoise.

After the candidates were confirmed, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was served to the new members and other members present. The setting chosen for this service was the picture of the "Last Supper" as the worship center on the wall, with the members of the priesthood seated beneath it, encircling the table on which the emblems had been placed.

Elder Philip Wagler and Priest Ray Church officiated at the baptisms. Elder Philip Wagler, G. G. Goddard, and L. L. Allen officiated at the confirmations and blessings. The pastor, Griffith G. Goddard, was in charge of the service.—Reported by JUANITA NORDEEN.

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—Progress is noted in the branch under the leadership of Elder Leonard Chesworth. A prayer and praise service is held each Wednesday night. January 3, Elder Ben Leland and his brother from the Plymouth Branch visited the service.

Priest Howard Reynolds, a long time faithful member of the branch, is bedfast with a heart ailment. The prayers of the Saints have been for him.

The church school, under the leadership of Ernest Wright, is growing. There are many young people in the branch.

The slogan for the New Year in the branch is "Watch us grow (spiritually), then grow with us."—Reported by Y. EDMUND STEARNS.

TAMPA, FLORIDA.—"The First Christmas in America," a Book of Mormon Christmas play sponsored by the Zion's League and directed by Martha Forbes, was presented. Music and singing were directed by Zelma Weiser and Anice McBride.

The children took part in the church school, giving recitations on Christmas, assisted by Anice McBride.

An invitation is extended to all who visit Florida to visit the branch. The address is Memorial Highway and Sterling Street.—Reported by ROY MCGAHAGIN.

GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND.—The women's department has recently achieved several things. In 1949, when the branch purchased a two manual organ to replace the one which had given good service for many years, this department decided to be responsible for raising funds to pay for it, and a substantial amount was raised through a sale of work the same year.

A further similar effort was made last December which has raised the full amount of the purchase price and a substantial balance for the branch funds.

The effort was given much encouragement and support by devoted sisters of Independence who sent material and garments. Through such activities as this has come an added interest in the work, and regular attendance to the weekly class meeting has increased.

Opportunities have come to further the total missionary endeavor as contacts are made with nonmembers. The baptism of one sister last year was largely due from her association first of all with the women's class. The visit of President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp shall long be remembered by the Saints.—Reported by CARRIE TRAPP.

SAULT STE. MARIE, ONTARIO.—A baptismal service was held on November 19 by Elder G. A. Edwards with Brother A. R. Nott assisting. Those being baptized were Dorothy Nott, David Hill, and Myrtle Cliffe. The candidates were confirmed at the evening preaching service by Elders G. A. Edwards and W. A. Bushila.

Another baptismal service was conducted on December 17. Elder G. A. Edwards was in charge with Brother A. R. Nott assisting. Albert E. Robinson and wife Stella E. Robinson were baptized. They were confirmed by Elders A. Kosmack, W. A. Bushila, and G. A. Edwards at the evening preaching service. The decorating committee assisted greatly in making the church beautiful for both occasions.

On December 19, the church was filled to capacity to hear the annual church school concert. The church was decorated with a tree and gifts. All the children took part in the concert, and the young people conducted a play entitled, "Quizzing the Quack." After the concert was over, the children were favored with a visit from Mrs. Santa Claus.

December 24, the choir conducted a beautiful service. The choir members presented Sister Oris C. Flood, music director, with a gift and a corsage of red roses. The service consisted of solos, duets, a ladies' chorus, a men's chorus, and different numbers by the choir as a whole.—Reported by WINNIFRED SPENCER.

TUCSON, ARIZONA.—The annual business meeting was held September 17, and the following officers were elected: Elder I. E. Turner, pastor; Elder A. H. Hartman, associate pastor; Priest Russel Hart, superintendent of religious education; Hazel Donn, superintendent of adult division; George Green, superintendent of youth division; Shirl Sheffer, superintendent of children's division; Lucy Sleight, branch clerk; Earl Bootman, treasurer; Margaret Heald, director of music; Laveta Bergan, publicity agent; Lula Hill, book steward; Arthur Mills, Jr., scoutmaster.

The women's department sponsored a bazaar and rummage sale, netting a nice sum toward the building fund. They also sold Christmas cards and occasional cards. The women have a circulating bake box, the delicious food being sold among Saints and friends and the money given to the building fund.

The Zion's League has contributed a large sum to the building fund, sponsoring a Spanish supper and a mystery package project.

The annual Christmas party for the women was held December 22 at the home of Brother and Sister Russel Woods. The members revealed secret sisters and exchanged gifts.

December 24, the theme of the Christmas service was "Christ's Birthday Offering." Each one brought a gift to the altar for Christ and the amount, $115.30, went to the building fund.

A ground-breaking ceremony was held for the new church building on the same day. The pastor and associate pastor officiated. The oldest member of the congregation, Sister Annie Lamb turned over the first shovel of dirt. The building will be fifty by eighty feet and will consist of auditorium, dining room, kitchen, and three classrooms. Members of the congregation will donate most of the labor for the church which will be finished in about six weeks.—Reported by LAVETA BERGAN.

LITTLE CURRENT, ONTARIO.—On December 15 the following officers were elected for the new year: Elder Vernon W. Charlton, pastor; Priest Myles P. Sagle and Deacon John C. McCulloch, counselors; Miss Leona Noble, secretary; Deacon Albert Mills, treasurer; Mrs. Vernon Charlton, women's leader; Mrs. Humphrey Mav Zion's League leader; Mrs. John McCulloch, pianist; Miss Leona Noble, assistant pianist; Mrs. Vernon Charlton, chorister and book steward; Mrs. Roy Brown, publicity agent; Albert Mills, janitor.

Church school officers are: Albert Mills, church school director; Roy Brown, adult supervisor; Alberta Brown, children's supervisor; Humphrey May, primary class teacher; and Miss Carol Charlton, librarian.—Reported by MRS. ROY BROWN.

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—Two candidates, Geraldine Woods and Jack Adams were recently inducted into the kingdom by Priest Roy Hanes.

Anita Diane, infant daughter of Seventy and Mrs. Louis Zonker was blessed by High Priest S. M. Zonker. Duane Denny, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Duane Craft was blessed by Elder Williard Allen. Geraldine Lee Yoder, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Yoder was blessed by Seventy Zonker.

The music department, under the direction of Lenora Nixon, presented the cantata "The Holy Advent" on December 17. Organist was Helen Phillips.

The Aaronic priesthood, under supervision of Pastor John Treiber, is conducting a class study of "Ministry in the Home" with various members acting as teachers.

Zion's League under leadership of Roy Hanes meets weekly. A carnival was sponsored in January.

Lenora Nixon, women's group leader, has selected friendly visiting as the project of the year. The group presented a play, "Mrs. Apple and Her Corps," which was favorably received. The women also held their annual bazaar and bake sale before Christmas.

The Live Wire and Adult Class meet monthly.—Reported by RUTH CHADWELL.

LOWBANKS, ONTARIO.—In early July, Lois Doreen Graham and Jacqueline Pifer were baptized by Elder Clarence MacDonald.

Also in July the wedding of Donald Moscrip and Pearl Olm was solemnized in the church by Elder Clarence MacDonald. A reception was held for the young couple in the lower auditorium following the ceremony.

In the spring and summer months, the young people's group under Donald Moscrip enjoyed weekly study periods and recreational activities including wiener roasts, hayrides, ball games and visits to stage plays at one of the local "straw-hat" theaters. The junior church school has frequently contributed musical and dramatic numbers to the senior church school program on Sunday mornings.

The various departments of the branch in conjunction with the pupils of the local elementary school presented a Christmas concert on December 22 at the church. The young people contributed a production of the nativity play, "Wondrous Night," to the program.

On December 24, the congregation united in the Ancient Festival of the Nine Lessons and Carols, under the supervision of the music director of the branch.

The following officers were elected at the business meeting in September: Elder Clarence MacDonald, pastor; Elder Archie Dayton, Priest Delbert MacDonald, Priest Percy Graham, Teacher Lloyd Minor, Deacon Fred Moscrip, and Deacon Clarence Barrick, counselors; Miss Elizabeth Patterson, treasurer; Mrs. Donald Kennedy, secretary; Lester Roloson, church school director; Mrs. Clarence MacDonald, junior church school director; Mrs. Fred Moscrip, women's department supervisor; Mrs. Lester Roloson, young people's supervisor; Delbert MacDonald, music director; Percy Graham, solicitor.—Reported by CLARENCE MACDONALD.

BOISE, IDAHO.—Seventy Russell Ralston was the guest speaker at the all-day meeting on October 22 when the Boise Branch was host to the groups from Nampa and New Plymouth.

Recently a three-week series of cottage meetings was held by Seventy Philip Moore which greatly increased the interest in the church by many friends.

During November three young men were ordained: Stanley Hunt to the office of priest, Ole Olson to the office of teacher, and James Sutherland to the office of deacon. Brother Olson moved to Independence shortly before the first of the year and is missed by the branch.

Senior President of Seventy E. Y. Hunker was the guest speaker for three services, December 2 and 3.

The church school Christmas program was presented December 23. The younger classes gave exercises, and the older classes joined together to present a pageant, "On to Bethlehem." The program was under the direction of Sister Ladyce Barr. On Christmas Eve, the choir presented a cantata at a vesper service under the direction of Sister Philip Moore.

The men of the church have recently completed the construction of a baptismal font. It has been finished with velvet drapes to match the other curtains in the church and makes a fine addition to the church building. It was first used December 31 when six adults and three children were baptized by Pastor Cecil Gilmore: Dan Sutherland, Opal Sutherland, Wilhemenia Montgomery, Albert Montgomery, Maude Montgomery, Kay Montgomery, Jimmy Montgomery, Sharon Carr, and Lila Carr. The confirmation service was held New Year's Eve.—Reported by LOIS MOORE.

MADISON, WISCONSIN.—Eva Moore directed the church school Christmas service, "God So Loved the World," given December 17. The narrator was Myron Curry; the music director, Ronald Mortimore; and the organist, Mrs. Mary Woodstock. It consisted of musical selections by the choir of church school young people. After the poem, "Our Gift to Him" by Evelyn Root, a white gift offering was held.

A Christmas party for the kindergarten, primary, and junior pupils was given by the church school teachers. A birthday cake with "Happy Birthday, Jesus" was the centerpiece on the table. The children sang, games were played, and refreshments were served.

The women's department had a Christmas party, December 14, at the home of Jeanette Fuss.

The branch was saddened December 29 by the death of Elder Floyd Griswold.

Guest speakers for December were Elders Carl Heaviland of Milwaukee and Ormond Kimball of Wisconsin Rapids.

A Doctrine and Covenants class is held each Sunday evening. Elder Robert H. Brigham is the teacher.

The women's department held a prayer and testimony meeting January 4 at the home of Esther Brigham. Elder Fred Moore, pastor, was in charge. "I Witness Through My Stewardship" was the theme.

Young people's prayer service was held January 14. Missionary Merle Guthrie was in charge. Seventy Guthrie also gave the morning sermon and held a class in the evening using the theme, "In all Thy Ways Acknowledge Him." On January 15 he held a general class on stewardship.

During the winter months, the weekly prayer services are held at various homes. Family night is held the last Wednesday night of each month. A program is held after the supper at these occasions.—Reported by LEDA COLBERT.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.—The Christmas service for the church school was held December 24, 1950, with the annual Christmas tree and concert. A play, "The Story of Jesus," was given by the members of the primary, junior, and kindergarten classes, after which gifts were distributed to the children. The church school attendance has steadily increased during the past year.

The branch candlelight watch service on New Year's Eve was well attended. The speakers were Elder George F. Robley, Priests H. Clifton Hallgreen, and Leonard Garlick. A Bible quiz, in charge of Mrs. Alice Rhodes was held before the service in the church basement. Refreshments were served by Mrs. Gladys Cook and Mrs. Irving Cook.

Russell Kenneth Salisbury, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford H. Salisbury, Jr., of Charlotte, North Carolina, was blessed Sunday, December 24, 1950. Elders George F. Robley and Edmund M. Brown officiated.—Reported by JEANNE M. HALLGREEN.

Honored on Golden Wedding Anniversary

Elder and Sister Richard J. Hawkins of Scranton, Pennsylvania, observed their fiftieth wedding anniversary on Christmas Day.

Elder Hawkins, who has served as pastor of Scranton Branch for twenty-five years, was baptized in 1905 by Missionary William Lewis. He was ordained a priest in 1905, an elder in 1907, and a high priest in 1938. A native of South Wales, he arrived with his parents in Scranton in 1883 and worked for the Glen Alden Coal Company for 53 years, retiring as an official in 1946.

Sister Hawkins, the former Elizabeth Moses, was born June 17, 1879, at Scranton. She became a member of the church in September, 1906, and always has supported Brother Hawkins in his ministerial labors.

Brother and Sister Hawkins were blessed in their marriage with five children, all of whom are living. They are: Chester, Mrs. Walter Buntz, and Frederick of Scranton; Mrs. George Dippel of Conyngham, Pennsylvania; and Mrs. George Jones of Elizabeth, New Jersey.

On December 23, a dinner party was given by the Scranton Branch in their honor, and open house was held on Christmas Day in the home of their daughter Mrs. Buntz.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

What Is This Word?

By Alice Crossan

FIFTY YEARS AGO parents were satisfied if their children could read the Bible adequately. While this was no small accomplishment, parents today expect their children to read much more widely and are perplexed and unhappy if their boys and girls cannot do so. The next time Junior says, "What is this word?" and you sigh because his teacher has told you he is slow in reading, follow these easy suggestions for helping him. Reading is a complicated process, and your child's teacher does not expect you to do her job for her, but there are things you can do to help. Most parents want to help, but they are often uncertain about what to do.

If there is a public library near you, be sure to make Junior acquainted with the children's librarian. Most modern schools have small libraries of their own. Many libraries have story hours which children enjoy, and the librarian will show your child how to check out books for his own reading pleasure as well as books for you to read to him. Be sure to impress upon him the proper care of books. Encourage your child to bring home many easy library books. When he brings them home, tell him you will enjoy hearing the stories. Do not tell him you want to hear him read. If he thinks you are listening more to the way he reads than to what he reads, he will naturally feel self-conscious, and reading will be a nervous strain instead of the pleasure it should be.

Take time to sit down with him and really listen. Tell him that, when you are planning to read a story out loud to him, you like to read it over by yourself first. Suggest he try this. Then he can make his oral reading more interesting.

Children like to read to their fathers. Fathers can help a great deal by listening, and by giving plenty of praise and encouragement. Making comments about the story will help. Look at the pictures with the child, and let him see that you like to read and that reading can be a very happy, interesting, and satisfying experience. If there are little brothers and sisters, they make a good audience, too.

Urge your child to read just as he would talk—that is with natural expression. Doing this yourself when you read aloud to him will help more than much talking about good expression.

WHEN JUNIOR is just learning to read, it is a good idea to tell him words he does not know because every time he stops for a hard word he forgets what he is reading about. Then his reading will be slowed down and the story will be spoiled. However, there comes a time when Junior must learn to help himself. He can do this in three ways. He can look at the pictures for clues to words. He can jump over the unknown word and read the rest of the sentence. This will often suggest what the new word should be.

He can check to see if the word discovered in this way makes sense.

If there are many abstract words such as WAS, WHAT, and THAT which bother Junior, play this game with him. Write the bothersome words on cards. Make a pack of these word cards. How many words can he learn to say after just one quick look? When words are learned, put them in the "known" pile. New words can be added to the "unknown" pile as they appear in reading materials. Sometimes let him flash the cards for you. He will need to watch closely to see that you are right, because sometimes you may test him by saying a wrong word! The spirit of a game should always be present, and practice periods should be kept short.

Praise is one of the most valuable things in encouraging the child who is a slow reader. Make reading a happy experience always, and if the child succeeds in any way let him know you are pleased with his success.

Be sure to ask questions about the story to see if Junior understands what he reads. Sometimes you might have him tell the story to you.

READING AT HOME should always be for short, regular periods. Fifteen minutes each evening is far more beneficial than two or three hours spent at one time only once a week.

Books make fine gifts for children and outlast many other toys. Why not buy good books on occasions that require gifts? Be sure to buy books with easy words, large print, colorful pictures, interesting stories based on the interests of the child, strong bindings, and convenient size. The children's librarian can suggest good books for your child, and so can his teacher.

As a final reminder, children who have reading difficulty should always have a thorough physical examination and tests of hearing and sight should be made. If your child is a special case, he will need special

"Earnest Workers for the Master"

By Marie Gosline

THERE IS MUCH TO BE SAID in favor of the people in small groups in small communities who are working toward the building of Christ's kingdom. In these days we are apt to think in large terms—in hundreds and thousands—and excuse our own slothfulness and continue in our lackadaisical ways because "we are too few." We cannot do this or that because there are only a half dozen of us. But people usually do what they want to do.

Jesus knew what he was talking about when he said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name . . ." He knew that these two or three would gather themselves together because deep in their hearts they loved the Lord and wanted to do his bidding. Jesus, as great as he was, did not always think in large numbers—for he knew his people would be few and scattered—yet how he loved the little groups that met in his name. It is not the number that counts, but the willing and earnest workers who are ready to consecrate their lives to this great cause.

Recently here in Marin County (northern California), just across the Golden Gate Bridge from San Francisco, there was organized a women's group with about ten members. Now each woman (some of them had been isolated the greater part of their lives) was cheered by the thought that others of like faith were living in the same county. Each one knew that near at hand were nine others with the same ideals, the same aspi-care and assistance according to his physical defects.

Reading is one of the most interesting forms of recreation as well as one of the best ways to gain information. Give your child every chance to succeed in this complex skill. Introduce him to the best storybook friends, from Winnie-the-Pooh to Billy Beaver. He will remember these friends from childhood all his life.

rations, the same desire to build up the kingdom. So they banded together to raise money to start a church school. Help came to them from many sources—from the little Negro bootblack who gave his worn dollar bill, to that someone in southern California who sent her check for one hundred dollars. These women did not say, "If only there were more of us . . ." They were willing to give their money or their time, and usually both. Through hard labor and sacrifice, they found that God loves the few who do his bidding. They found that God is good.

JUST NOW I AM THINKING of a small church school down in a part of the desert country of southern California, in a little spot called Lancaster, which is "managed, owned, and operated," by one lone young woman. Each Sunday twenty-five, sometimes thirty children, meet in her home. It is inspiring, to say the least to think of what one person has done—one willing and earnest worker—who was not content to sit idly by and whine because she was "isolated."

Some of the larger churches here on the west coast realize the power behind a few. There is one group in particular—not of our faith—with a membership of about twenty-five hundred. The women's department of the church limits its membership to thirty members—but it has a long waiting list. If any of these thirty members is not a worker, she loses her membership, and one of the "waiters" becomes a member. Do you think these thirty women are on their toes? They earn enough money each year to balance the budget. Last fall at one sale they cleared

$3,200.00. It is not the money that counts. It is significant only in the fact that it proves what a few can do who set their goal and never lose sight of their "star."

This church of ours needs earnest and willing workers who are filled with the Spirit of Christ. It is not enough to be willing. Much harm has been done in branches by workers who are only willing. We must have His love deep within our hearts.

God's work is not a work for amateurs. Too much is at stake. The risk is too great. This work calls for those who are trained to do his will and who have his love in their hearts—those who have learned that only by doing God's will and enriching their own lives other lives may be enriched. How many of us are training ourselves for work in his vineyard? How many of us are praying that his love might enter our hearts? His field is large. He offers to all a cross that is light to bear. He offers us all a new way of life if we will but come to him.

"Earnest workers for the Master"—what do those words mean? They mean today just what they meant nearly two thousand years ago. If we are earnest workers for the master, we will truly be "of the same mind in the Lord." We must, like Paul, be willing to give up all for Christ. Then, and then only, will Zion be redeemed.

If you have built castles in the air, your work need not be lost: that is where they should be. Now put the foundations under them.—Henry David Thoreau.

New Horizons

Controversial Allegiance

EARLY ON NEW YEAR'S MORNING, I heard a radio commentator speaking in review on the tragedy of events as they had transpired in 1950. No doubt many others heard him or another recount the tremendous impact that the passage of 1950 into history has transformed in our lives. Since the close of the Second World War in 1945, the world has gone on, gaily oblivious to the trends and patterns that were shaping destiny not only on a world scale but also within the structures of our own communities. Yet as this gentleman went on recalling the travail of this mid-century year, he ventured the observation that the peril of our present civilization is causing more people to be cognizant of the value of religion and a dependence upon God, as they find their fellow humans are as frail as they themselves in solving the twin riddle of peace and prosperity.

It is a small wonder that unnumbered millions of human beings are cast into the quandary of despair to be thrashed about by vagaries and fantasies as chaff upon the threshing floor, by the vacillating opinions of a few self-styled formulators of high-sounding nothingness. Into the caldron of human despair jump seekers after that elusive will-o'-the-wisp termed satisfaction, or peace of mind; that which by any name gives to the individual a reason, a purpose in existence. Every year the suicide list mounts with the names of those who have failed in their quest and have given up the very spark of life which is the ingredient, in itself, for the solution of their problem.

By Robert H. Anderson

Economists, experts in government and social science have devoted the best of God-given talent to the construction of various frameworks which would in themselves cure the world's ills. History has observed their passing into oblivion after their creator was led away in a white coat, or an enemy army transposed one theory for another. Mankind has never lacked for an economic Moses empowered by the god of personal gain speaking from the burning bush of altruistic purpose. Unfortunately, however, for most this was the first and last contact with a god of any kind.

IN THIS HOUR as in any other, we poor human beings who find ourselves caught in the maelstrom of socio-economic controversy need an anchor of sure foundation and a true compass with which to chart our course, for even though a new theory may for a time be oil upon the waters, the essential storm—the battle between right and wrong—still rages without, one tending to uplift, the other to destroy. This was the point that the commentator was making: Unless everyone has his sight and purpose fixed on a supreme allegiance outside of man's bungling realm, then the best the world can expect to see is a global, Darwinian atom race with the waiting list growing to astronomical figures at the office of the world mortuary, while those whose time is not yet come shiveringly hold a Gieger counter over a radio-active crust of bread.

Once we realize that it can happen here, human action leads men toward a greater realization of Deity and universal power and law, or to a reckless abandon to the Epicurean philosophy which only tightens the hold of the floundering swimmer in the currents of society, threatening also the life of his would-be rescuer. In his struggle the rescuer wonders if it is worth the effort.

Fatalism is not the answer for which we seek. For even if man himself is responsible for the ills which beset him, the path is not inevitable. Our thinking along these lines has only accentuated these misfortunes until they cloud our vision of what gloriously might be. Our Creator was kind and loving enough to endow all of us with the right, privilege, and responsibility of choice in everything pertaining to our own welfare. If we are stupid enough to allow ourselves to be stampeded to the brink of destruction, as a herd of unthinking cattle, then our condemnation is great indeed, for we have forsaken God's greatest gift. There is not one too weak to resist the current of popular opinion. Kipling gave as a standard of manly stature—ability to keep our head when everyone else is losing his and blaming us for the loss. We find ourselves in a year of decision because sometime in the past others have by-passed opportunities to assert God's way of righteousness, at a moment when such a choice of right would have made more of a difference than the collective voice of 100,000 might now.

THE CHALLENGE COMES to us to reaffirm the fact that in spite of the darkness of the moment, destruction and submission to the status quo is not inevitable, but for the honest Christian and Saint, it constitutes a frank admission of anarchy to the cause for which Christ so cruelly died. None of us realize the importance which another may be placing upon our behavior, and so we become responsible for more than our own selves.

If democracy has failed to live up to its highest possibilities, the fault is not with the framers of our constitution, for in our own latter-day Scripture, God reveals that noble, righteous men were set apart to see that in this choice land his church would have opportunity to redeem the state of civilization. The fault is upon a citizenry which failed to glimpse the high eternal purposes envisioned by these heaven-endowed men.

THE CHURCH AND DEMOCRACY have no need for reconciliation, because if a difference exists, it is in the faulty thinking of men who vision a democracy as a playground for the privileged idler rather than a workshop for the man of purpose, which it rightly is. The present-day clamor by pressure groups for "something extra for nothing" had its counterpart in the time of the Hebrew prophets when one of them warned, "woe to him who is at ease in Zion." Our concept of Zion certainly doesn't include room for the worker who expects fifty-six hours' pay for forty hours' work, nor where any receive a privilege at the expense of others, and our democracy, I cannot believe, was envisioned in a corresponding light. Our church and our government are partners in a destiny of the freedom of the human soul.

But as loudly as we may proclaim the invalid right of freedom under our flag, we fail yet to persuade the totalitarian slave in his prescribed seclusion that democracy is the way of eternal right. Men may win others to new economic theories, but

Graceland, champions of the Interstate Conference for the 1950 football season, landed three men on the all-conference first team. They are Warren Barritt of Council Bluffs, Iowa, as a back; George Rosacker of Sharon, Pennsylvania, at center; and Paul Hampton of Hamilton, Missouri, who was tied for a guard position. On the second team are Kenny Cochran of Joplin, Missouri, at end; Sam Scherer of Thamesville, Ontario, at tackle; and Ron Thoreson of Montebello, California, at guard.

Graceland's basketball team defeated Tarkio, Missouri, a four-year school, 62-55 on December 5. This was the first time that a Graceland team had been able to turn the trick on the Tarkio home court.

the flimsy thread of human invention is not substantial enough unless the warp of humanity is infused with a common allegiance to one greater than any to whom we can bow in respect and seek in solace of love. Unless men meet on such a common ground, the resultant confusion is as ridiculous as two teams meeting each other on an athletic field where one group is attempting to play baseball and is opposed by a team playing the rules of football.

THE DIGNITY AND HOPE of civilization are waiting for man to come to the realization that the means and method for a peaceful world are within his grasp. Only his refusal to acknowledge his humility before the central power of all the universe stands in his way to a world of peace, prosperity, and love. The world-wide call for men, women, and children to serve as cannon fodder for selfish desire dims the voice of God asking men to come to him and there find common ground; but the call comes still. Its ears are ours.

The first three fellowships of the new year comprise a series called "Spiritual ABC's for 1951." The themes for the three are "Our Adventures Into 1951," "Our Brotherhood Into 1951," and "Our Certainties Into 1951."

INTRODUCING

E. J. Gleazer, Jr. (page 5), was introduced July 11, 1949.

DEAM HUNTER FERRIS, Lamoni, Iowa (page 8), was born in Mankato, Minnesota, in 1912, and baptized at St. Joseph, Missouri, in 1921. He was graduated from St. Joseph High School and attended junior college, receiving his Associate of Science degree in 1932. He received his A.B. from Drake University in 1934, and his M.A. degree in 1938. Deam began teaching physics and biology at Osawatomie, Kansas, in 1935. After three years there he went to Des Moines, where he taught five years in the general science field. Then he served four years in the U. S. Army and was one of the first officers assigned to Biological Warfare Research. Most of his time was spent as director of the photo library for the Army. In 1946 he returned to his teaching position at Des Moines which he continued until his present assignment at Graceland College in 1948. In 1935 he married Merle Bonne Wildey. They have three daughters: Sara Josephine, 12; Tary Jeanne, 10; and Deborah Joanne, 6. For the past three years Karen Tiner, 7, a Hindu girl whose mother is attending the University of Illinois, has been a part of the family.

Deam earned letters in track and cross country running in both high school and college. He is a member of the Phi Delta Kappa and Sigma Tau Delta, the Biological Photographic Association, American Association for Advancement of Science, American Parasitologists Association of N.E.A., and the American Film Library Association. His special interests are philosophy, audio-visual techniques, biography, and non-fiction. He was ordained a priest in 1935 and an elder in 1941.

MAURICE L. DRAPER (page 11), was introduced May 21, 1949.

ALICE MARIE CROSSAN, Albin, Wyoming (page 18), was born in Burns, Wyoming, where she attended normal school. She was baptized at Albin and was graduated from high school there in 1939. She has also taken a year's work in the University of Wyoming. Her hobbies are art, writing, and travel. She has been teaching school since 1941, except for several years during which she worked as postal clerk, telephone operator, and clerk in the office of the Collector of Internal Revenue. She is now teaching in the Cheyenne, Wyoming, schools. She has won first place honors in literature contests and is a member of the National Honorary Quill Club and the Varsity Villagers.

ROBERT HAYER ANDERSON, Marseilles, Illinois (page 20), lives on the farm where he was born in 1925, and is the fifth generation of the family (which goes back to the 1830's) to live on this farm. He received his A.A. degree from Graceland College in 1949 and married Dorothy Lee Eastwood last June. His hobbies are athletics, classical music, photography, literature, and industrial efficiency. He has a degree as state farmer of the Future Farmers of America. He was graduated from high school as valedictorian and is a member of Lambda Delta Sigma at Graceland College, where he also received the Silver Seal for journalism. He was editor of Graceland Tower. He is now serving as pastor of the Mission Branch and is director of religious education for the Northeastern Illinois District.

 LEE'S SUMMIT, MISSOURI

The congregation at Lee's Summit, Missouri, is demonstrating to Central Missouri Stake, of which it is a part, how much can be done to beautify and improve an older church building. Members of the congregation are digging a new basement and making excellent progress. They have reconstructed and decorated the interior until it has a very attractive appearance, and they have some good classrooms adjoining the main auditorium for use by the church school. A new furnace and other facilities have been installed, improving the comfort and protecting the health of the people. All supplies have been purchased locally to promote good will in the city. They advertise in the city paper to maintain good public relations. Some families formerly living in Independence have joined the group and are happy in the new association. Pastor A. G. Hougas and his associates are giving an able and constructive leadership to the congregation. A good choir, in which both young and older voices are blending effectively and promoting branch harmony, is giving excellent service. . . . The visiting minister has a very pleasant and inspiring experience there.

 THE UNTIED (SIC) NATIONS

One of our prominent national radio commentators—I think it must have been Edward R. Murrow—told a significant little story on a recent evening. A girl secretary working at United Nations headquarters had typed a manuscript hurriedly, and the typewriter had committed an error of transposition. The phrase "The United Nations" came out "The Untied Nations."

In view of recent events in that assembly, Mr. Murrow saw something symbolic in the mistake. The nations there are becoming "untied." They are falling apart. Whether they can come to an agreement or not, only time can tell.

Those who saw the old League of Nations go to pieces recognize some of the symptoms: a refusal to face the facts, even with a word; expediency and abandonment of principle in the presence of world danger. As in that other case, the organization is failing even before its new home is completed.

There are overtones in history. One can hear them echoing out of eternity—the question of Cain as he cowered before the Lord, the lament of King Saul when he knew that God had deserted him and that the kingdom was slipping from his grasp, the cry of despair and penitence from the lips of Judas as he threw the thirty pieces of silver clanking on the Temple floor. In these troubled times we wait to see whether something new will be added from the councils of the "Untied Nations."

 INVOCATION

A suggestion to those who stand in the pulpit to offer the pastoral prayer. Remember that the choral response or "Amen" is a part of the prayer. There is a tendency for the congregation to sit at the end of the prayer, causing a small uncertainty and confusion during the response. The man offering the prayer can help to remedy this. If he will stand still in his place at the conclusion of the prayer until the response has been finished, his example will help the congregation to remember to remain standing too.

Easter Programs

Easter Program Builder No. 2

Latest in our series of program books for all departments. Contains 20 songs for choir, small children, and two-part numbers. Program material is graded by ages, a feature welcomed by departmental supervisors. 56 pages.

Price 35c

Standard Easter Book No. 2

A 48-page program book offering "The Broken Seal" pageant, recitations for all ages, short playlets, drills, acrostics, exercises, etc. The program committee will find here complete programs worked out and ready to produce, or can build its own program from the variety of material provided.

Price 30c

The First Easter

An effective instrumental prelude and choral number precedes the story which alternates with vocal selections throughout the cantata. The reading of the story may be omitted at the option of the director.

Price, 20c; $2 a dozen

The Living Redeemer

This cantata provides for a narrator whose reading supplies the desired continuity. It is not beyond the ability of the average volunteer choir, but will require more rehearsal time than others of its type. With song and story, this cantata builds upon the dramatic events leading to the Crucifixion, concluding with the thrilling choral number, "Immanuel Victorious."

Price, 40c; $4 a dozen

The Golden Dawn

The Prince of Life

The popularity of these story cantatas is due to the attractive simplicity of the music and the faithfulness of the lyrics to the message of salvation. Volunteer choirs with only average voices find in this material charming numbers which are within the range of their ability.

Price, 20c; $2 a dozen

Standard Easter Program Book No. 3

A 32-page collection of program material to insure a most effective Easter service. Two plays are included: "O Lord, Remember me!" and "After Three Days," plus an excellent selection of recitations for children, devotional poems for adults, etc.

News and Notes

BIRTHDAYS OF PIONEERS

Following the Stake conference meeting February 2 at the Stone Church, an informal reception was held in the annex honoring President Israel A. Smith on his seventy-fifth birthday. Stake President Charles Graham was the master of ceremonies and was assisted by his counselors, Elders Fred O. Davies and Glaude A. Smith. The assembly sang "Happy Birthday," after which President Smith was presented a birthday cake and several gifts.

Another beloved pioneer is Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, whose eightieth birthday is March 8. Brother Elbert is now in California with his son Lynn, but will return to his home, 1513 West Walnut Street, Independence, the last of February.

Bishop C. J. Hunt was ninety years old February 4. Brother Hunt is a member of the Stone Church congregation. Many friends called on him on his birthday.

VISIT SOUTH

President Israel A. Smith and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp have returned from their tour of certain areas of the South. They were in Mobile, Alabama, for the dedication of the new church school annex, January 27 and 28. President Smith spoke at a banquet Saturday night and also gave the Sunday evening address. Bishop DeLapp gave the Sunday morning sermon. After the services in Mobile, President Smith returned home and Bishop and Mrs. DeLapp continued through the area accompanied by District President W. J. Breshears and Elder Jack Pray and his wife. With Brother Breshears he visited the new buildings at Montgomery, McKenzie, and Pensacola.

While in Pensacola, Brother and Sister DeLapp visited Priest David Donaldson who recently celebrated his one hundredth birthday. Mrs. DeLapp was pleased to discover as they conversed that Brother Donaldson was a very close friend to her grandfather, George Montague, a missionary to the South for many years.

NEWS OF THE APOSTLES

Apostle D. T. Williams was in Mason City, Iowa, February 4, for the organization of the mission into a branch.

Apostle Charles R. Hield visited at Lawrence, Kansas, February 3 and 4. Saturday evening he spoke to the branch on "Christ in America." On Sunday he taught a church school class on "Repentance," presented the Communion address, and spoke in the afternoon on "Agency."

Apostle Mesley and President Edwards are visiting in the Michigan area.

VISIT WARRENSBURG

Elder John R. Darling, accompanied by Mrs. Darling, and Edna Easter, of the Department of Religious Education, participated in the awards program honoring the recently organized Ker-tyce Oriole Circle of Warrensburg, Missouri, on January 28. Brother Darling brought the sermon of the evening.

WINTER HOLIDAY

The Stake-wide Zion's League sponsored a "Winter Holiday" at Gardner Lake on January 20 and 27. The first activity was planned for the members of the Junior Leagues. The Senior Zion's Leagues attended the second outing. A total of approximately two hundred Leaguers were present at the two activities. Ann Whiteford, Recreation Chairman for the Stake-wide League cabinet, was in charge.

CONFER WITH COUNCIL

Elder O. O. Dollins, Sr., and his son, Bill J. Dollins, of Wilburton, Oklahoma, were in Independence, January 25, conferring with members of the Joint Council.

We'd like you to know

Miss Elaine Parkes

THE INSTRUMENT in front of Miss Parkes, in case you are wondering about it, is an auto-technicon. All of us know about autos these days of speedy transportation, but that technicon is a bit technical. Anyway, I found out that each container on the top has a different kind of fluid in it. Now if it is ever necessary for the surgeon to cut a mole off your scalp, and he tells you "It was not malignant," you can be almost certain that it has been put through this tissue processing machine, and quite likely Miss Parkes gave him the important facts on which he based his conclusion.

Elaine was baptized at Park of the Pines (Michigan) Reunion in 1931, was graduated from the Gaylord (Michigan) High School in 1941, Graceland (A. A.) 1944, University of Michigan (B.S.), 1947, and Northwestern University (Med. T.), 1949. Her sister, Irene, is a surgery nurse at the Sanitarium. Her brothers, Elmer and Don, attended Graceland. Her father, E. L. Parkes, has been a member of the Northern Michigan District presidency for fifteen years and recently became its president.

In high school, Elaine played the flute, was editor of the school's newspaper, president of the student body for two years, and valedictorian of her class. While doing her graduate work at Northwestern she was on the student council one semester. At the University of Michigan she worked as a biochemist with the cardiovascular research units. Then, just so she wouldn't let her mind get in a rut, she switched to Northwestern University and worked as a bacteriologist on avitaminosis research.

She is a member of the American Society of Clinical Pathologists and of the Kansas City Registered Technicians. She likes to play the organ, but her real musical hobby is playing the piano. Despite her many activities she still finds time for "reading, sewing, and cooking Chinese dishes."

—Matthew 7: 21.

The Origin of Wimpy

Very few of us have escaped meeting Wimpy sometimes, if not in the papers, then in life. In the comic strip he is amusing; in life he is often a tragic figure.

The cartoonist Segar, who created the superpowerful Popeye the Sailor, also devised this super-lethargic, gluttonous, parasitic Wimpy. In his exaggerated way, Wimpy is symbolic of a major fault in the human race. There is a bit of him in nearly all of us. We can see reminders of him every time we look in a mirror.

When trouble started, Wimpy stood on the sidelines and said, "Let's you and him fight." He was indifferent and neutral in the struggle between right and wrong. When food was served, he was the first in line. When work was to be done, he was the last to be pulled, reluctant and unashamed, out of his hiding place in the bushes. When duty called, he was the last to hear. Wimpy was always in favor of sacrifices, work, and danger—for other people! Never for himself.

The Wimpy Doctrine

The essence of the Wimpy Doctrine in practice is evasive action. There are many cloaks for it, and you can see most of them employed, at one time or another, in a church business meeting. For Wimpy goes to meeting, not to see what he can do, but what he can avoid. He also has a gossip's interest in who gets "stuck" with what job.

Here are some of the camouflages in which he escapes: "There are others better qualified than I am."

"I am far too busy with other duties." "My responsibilities to my home and family will not permit me." "My employment leaves me no time or strength." "I am not prepared." "I have never done this sort of thing." "I nominate Brother X for this work."

Wimpy in Church

I heard him only a few days ago. He was broadcasting something on the front steps of the church. I would have recognized his harsh, gravelly voice anywhere.

"I am against giving so many luxuries to the missionaries," he said. "The old-time missionaries walked. They sacrificed. Their families went without food and clothing so they could spread the gospel. Our missionaries would have more of the Spirit if they sacrificed more."

Wimpy himself wore a good suit. A good car stood at the curb a few feet away, waiting for him. After church he and his family would drive to a swank eating place on the plaza for dinner. He knew nothing of sacrifice. But he was prescribing it for others.

You have heard some of that kind of talk too. How do you answer it?

Wimpy in Jerusalem

Wimpy is not a recent development. He was a familiar figure by the shores of Galilee, on the banks of the River Jordan, and around the gates and thoroughfares of Jerusalem. Jesus saw him loafing in the sun.

Wimpy was with the five thousand present at the miraculous feast. He had his cup ready when the water was turned to wine at Cana. He was a loaves-and-fishes Christian. He was one of those who complained as the apostles waited on tables after Pentecost. He looked on while thousands scattered flowers and sang hosannahs at the Triumphal Entry into Jerusalem. He fled with the crowds who disappeared when Jesus began the death march to Calvary.

Jesus understood Wimpy. He said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Redeeming Wimpy

Wimpy seems funny until you reflect how many of his kind are in your congregation and mine. They attend seldom, they give scant financial support. They eat heartily at the dinners. They are out of town on church clean-up day. They are long on criticism. They are a major problem of the church.

We can never build Zion until we can redeem and reclaim them. We need more who really care, and who will participate in the work that must be done. There are many potentially good people among them. They mean well. They have admirable qualities that could be developed.

Building material—the human kind—for the kingdom of God will rarely be found ready-prepared in this world. We must transform it out of what we find. The inactive part of the congregation is a mine of hidden and forgotten human treasure that may yield wonderful values if we work at it.

In the gospel work, we must accept the assumption that no human

In Memory of John Shields

Brother Shields was born May 24, 1859, in Arthur Township, Wellington County, Ontario, Canada. He was baptized January 5, 1884. His ordinations came in the following order: priest, June 19, 1885; elder, June 3, 1888; seventy, April 15, 1894; high priest, April 18, 1909; evangelist, October 1, 1911. He was superannuated on October 11, 1928.

He was married to Janet Ann Robson in 1881, and she followed him in joining the church when they received the gospel. She preceded him in death on July 24, 1923.

Their children are named as follows: John Stanley Shields, born May 5, 1882; William Nephi, born August, 1884; Ethel Robina Wilson, born November 15, 1886; Margaret Oracy Bartleman, born December 13, 1889; Thomas Alma, born March 25, 1892, died 1943; Percy Claremont, born June 2, 1895 (a twin), died 1919; Lilly May (a twin) died in infancy. Mary Elizabeth Lanway, born May 19, 1899.

Brother Shields married Victoria Rose Farrow on October 3, 1924. Varying dates have been adjusted to his own brief summary of his life published in the Herald of December 25, 1943.

Brother Shields was a tower of strength. Like his name, he provided a shield of defense in the gospel warfare. The great part of his life and ministry was passed in the Province of Ontario and adjacent areas. It is in this territory that the benefits of his ministry are so well known and so deeply appreciated.

"The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." — Proverbs 4: 18.

THE PASSING OF JOHN SHIELDS on November 29, 1950, brought many memories to the minds of thousands of members who had been brought into the church through his labors and blessed in the course of his long and devoted ministry. To all of those who knew and loved him, and to many others who were encouraged by his writings, this memorial is addressed.

Brother Shields was a familiar figure at the General Conferences of the church. His friendliness, combined with a quiet dignity and kindness, made him one of the most approachable of men. In a few minutes of conversation, one began to respect and care for him.

He made a number of literary contributions to the church, not the least of which was the account of his work in "Notes From My Life," which began in the Herald of May 29, 1943 (Volume 90), and continued in most of the issues until the end of that year. In all these notes, the reader is informed of his deep faith, his rich spiritual experience, his courage in time of trial, and his faithfulness under the trust reposed in him by the church.

A New Church Home for Bernie, Missouri, Saints

By Mrs. F. O. Kelley

IN 1948 there were nine members of the Reorganized Church living in and around Bernie, which is located a few miles north of the "boot-heel" of Missouri. Some of these members had tried attending other churches; some drove forty miles to the nearest branch, but both proved unsatisfactory. So in late spring of that year they began holding study classes at the home of one of the members. Soon the group was augmented by eight other members who lived at Sikeston. In July, Elders William T. Guthrie and D. L. Kyser conducted a series of meetings at the Masonic Hall in Bernie. During this time the group was organized and the study class divided into three sections: adults, young people, and children. The following month it was decidated a church should be built, and all the members went to work enthusiastically. The first services were held in it on September 24, 1948, and on June 19, 1949, it was dedicated by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Sr. Since the organization of the group, ten persons have been baptized (seven children and three adults). Those acquainted with the efforts of these members feel that the group will grow and become an important factor in the building of the kingdom.

Dr. F. O. Kelley of Bernie is serving as pastor.

INSCRIPTION ON DONIPHAN MONUMENT
RICHMOND, MISSOURI

Colonel Alexander William Doniphan was of immense stature, noble appearance, brilliant parts, fearless, of great moral courage, sanguine, faithful, just, poetic in temperament, the champion of the down-trodden, eloquent beyond description and without doubt entitled to be classed among the greatest orators and lawyers that ever lived.

WITH MANY OF THE CHURCH who are at all familiar with the life of Colonel Doniphan there has been a desire to do something to honor him for his Christian kindness to the Prophet Joseph Smith and other church leaders during the troublous times in Missouri over a hundred years ago.

A petition has been filed with the First Presidency, signed by several score of our members, reading as follows:

In honor of one who so nobly stood for justice against those who tried to destroy the Prophet and the Saints of the church in the early days of the Restoration, we the undersigned respectfully request the name of "Gardner Lake" to be changed to "Lake Doniphan."

"Gardner Lake" is the name of a tract owned by the church a few miles from Excelsior Springs, in Clay County, and the name comes from the man who developed and operated the grounds and lake as a summer resort for a number of years. It has been extensively used by us for reunion, priesthood, and other retreat purposes.

Colonel Doniphan Nature's Nobleman

By Israel A. Smith

After some inquiry as to biographical material about Colonel Doniphan, we found some in the Dictionary of American Biography, Volume 5, pages 365, 366. We found also that a more comprehensive sketch had recently been written by Raymond W. Settle and read at the 1947 Commencement of William Jewell College, Liberty, Missouri.

After some correspondence we have secured permission from William Jewell College, through Mr. P. Caspar Harvey, secretary, to reprint in its entirety the biographical address given by Mr. Settle at the 1947 Commencement, which we greatly appreciate. The title of this address is "Alexander William Doniphan, Symbol of Pioneer Americanism," The William Jewell College Bulletin, Volume 20, Number 7, 1947.

We are sure this biography will be of considerable interest to members of the church. On account of its length, we shall run it in two installments.

The story of Doniphan's refusal to carry out the order of a drum-head court martial and shoot Joseph Smith and others is graphically told by Mr. Settle, and we will not give editorial space to it. However, we believe an account of a visit that the late President Joseph Smith and his brother, then Apostle Alexander H. Smith, made with Colonel Doniphan will be of interest. It is found in Volume IV of our Church History, pages 449 and 450:

We met General A. W. Doniphan at his hotel in Richmond, whither we went to see and shake the hand of the man who had the courage and manhood under strange and trying circumstances, where death from unauthorized violence threatened Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Alexander McRae and others of the elders, to face the consequences of stemming the torrent of bigoted prejudice and murderous clamor and say: "I will have nothing to do with such business; my men are soldiers, not murderers. I shall march from camp with my men tomorrow morning at daylight." It is undoubtedly owing to the outspoken stand taken by General Doniphan on that occasion that those men were not shot upon the public square the next morning, as had been decided on by Generals Clark and Lucas, and others of the council of war.

The General is well advanced in years, but is still tall and erect, and speaks clearly and distinctly. His mind seems to be still vigorous; and we were told by one who studied law and is practicing with him, that there is no apparent diminution of his powers in his profession, except the failure, common to age, to recall events recently transpiring. He is modest and avoids saying anything of the part taken by him in the scene referred to above. And when we told him that we came, with Brother Alexander, as sons of one of the men whose lives were spared by reason of his action that day, as we believed, to thank him in person, he deprecated our thanks, saying: "I deserve no thanks for doing what was my duty. I had a long time to live and could not afford to burden my conscience and life with the blood of my fellow men."

We referred to the prejudice existing against our father and his comrades, and the terrible excitement of the time, and the risk he ran in incurring the displeasure of the popular will, as expressed in the order to kill those men the next morning. To this he replied that what he did at the time he did without thinking of the consequences, as men frequently act in cases of extreme emergency. Our interview was pleasant. He has been a man of action and careful observation. Has not sought political honors, but has served the people when their desire for his services has been properly expressed.

He visited Salt Lake City some years ago, met Alexander McRae, whom he remembered; and was well treated by the authorities there. He is a Democrat and talked freely of the present political aspect of the country, but without any partisan feeling. One remark was very striking. "It is a difficult thing to grow old and prevent becoming querulous, covetous, and weak, or suspicious and misanthropic. I recognize this difficulty and strive to avoid either extreme." He is quite a friend to Elder Whitmer, knew Oliver Cowdery well, as well as many others of the Saints in Ray, Caldwell, Jackson, and Daviess Counties; remembers Lyman Wight, whom he regarded as an especially brave and fearless man. He affirms that there was nothing like polygamy taught or known among the Mormons during their stay in Missouri. He further states that so far as his knowledge went they were good citizens.

ON JUNE 7, 1949, we received a letter from Bishop Mark H. Siegfried in which he suggested honoring Colonel Doniphan by calling our property in Clay County "Lake Doniphan." I believe we should honor Colonel Doniphan in some special and enduring way, and perhaps the adoption of the name suggested is an appropriate way and probably the only way we will ever do it.

I once made a visit to see Senator William J. Stone of Missouri at Washington, D. C., when Colonel Doniphan's name was brought into discussion in a way I shall never forget:

It was right after General John J. Pershing had taken an army into Mexico in 1917. It was acclaimed in the public press as a great military achievement. I found Senator Stone in his committee room, and while I waited, I listened to some remarks addressed by him to a number present, among them a representative from Missouri.

Senator Stone said that Washington papers had commented on Pershing's invasion of Mexico, but one of them had recalled that during the War with Mexico, Colonel Doniphan had taken a regiment a thousand miles into Mexico, "one of the greatest military feats of modern times," the Senator quoted, "yet Doniphan's name was unknown to the histories used in our public schools." He then turned to the Missouri Congressman and asked him to prepare a bill for introduction to appropriate the necessary money to erect a monument to Doniphan in the City of Washington. "And" he said with considerable emphasis, "when it comes up in the Senate I will make a speech about Doniphan."

Since then, I am informed, the bill was passed and the statue erected in Washington.

I believe we as a church can with propriety do something in memory of this remarkable man, but before decision is made as to the proposed change of name for Gardner Lake, let us get Doniphan's history before the readers of the Herald.

The first section of Mr. Settle's biography of Colonel Doniphan follows:

ALEXANDER WILLIAM DONIPHAN

Symbol of Pioneer Americanism

PART I

RAYMOND W. SETTLE

WILLIAM JEWELL COLLEGE, Missouri Baptists, and the citizens of Clay County reflect much credit upon themselves by paying tribute to the memory of Colonel Alexander William Doniphan in this way, the year 1947, the one hundredth anniversary of the return of his famous regiment, the First Missouri Mounted Volunteers, from its Homeric expedition to far-off Mexico. Although not a Baptist, nor even a professing Christian until some thirteen years later, he was one of the leaders in the initial movement to locate our beloved Alma Mater in the town of Liberty. He attended every meeting of the citizens called to deliberate upon the proposition, helped organize the county by townships for a campaign to raise money, adjourned his law practice, mounted his horse and with others, among whom were E. M. Samuel, Judge J. V. T. Thompson, and Adam Lightburn, rode through sunshine and rain, from town to town and farm to farm with a subscription list in his pocket. When their work was finished $24,767.00 had been pledged as endowment for the new institution of learning and $7,000.00 for the erection of buildings.

On August 21, 1849, delegations from Clay, Callaway, Boone, Howard, and Marion Counties assembled at Booneville to effect an organization and determine upon the home of the college, which as yet was unnamed. The representatives from Clay County were Colonel Doniphan and Judge J. V. T. Thompson. E. M. Samuel had also been elected, but for some reason did not attend. For voting purposes the subscriptions were divided into shares. Although that of Clay Countians was the largest of them all, it did not represent a plurality of votes. After a spirited contest, much speech-making, and considerable log-rolling the Howard County representatives cast their vote for Liberty. That determined the issue and the college possessed a home. On the following day Dr. W. C. Ligon presented a resolution, written by Colonel Doniphan the night before, which recited the unselfish labors of Dr. William Jewell in behalf of an institution of higher learning for Missouri Baptists and proposed that it bear his honored name. Being fully aware of the appropriateness of this resolution the representatives quickly adopted it.

Prior to the meeting at Booneville, on February 27, 1849, the General Assembly of the State of Missouri passed an act to charter the contemplated college. Among the twenty-six men named in it as the first board of trustees, five—including Colonel Doniphan, Judge J. V. T. Thompson and E. M. Samuel—were not Baptists. The first meeting of this board was held November 12 with Colonel Doniphan in attendance. It appropriated $10,000.00 for the erection of buildings, chose the sites, appointed Dr. E. S. Dulin principal, and Reverend Thomas F. Lockett professor of mathematics, and directed that the college be opened in the basement of the Second Baptist Church on January 1, 1850. Colonel Doniphan's membership on the Board terminated early in 1850, but he was re-elected in 1854.

SINCE HE WAS NEITHER a Baptist nor a professing Christian at this time, one might ask why he busied himself with the founding of an institution dedicated to the teaching of evangelical principles. The answer is that he was moved by the same impulses which prompted the American pioneers to organize subscription schools for their children before their log cabins were completed or their fields cleared for planting—a passionate love for learning. He believed that the opportunity to secure an education was the common heritage of all. This conviction led him to accept appointment as Commissioner of Public Schools for Clay County in 1854 and inaugurate an aggressive program of building new schoolhouses and opening new schools where they were needed. In this, perhaps better than in anything else, his native greatness is revealed. The spectacle of the hero of Sacramento and nominee for the office of governor of Missouri devoting himself to organizing rural schools and training teachers for them is indeed an inspiring phenomenon.

The imperishable service Colonel Doniphan rendered Missouri Baptists in the founding of William Jewell College and the centennial of the return of his regiment of Missouri boys from their unprecedented and as yet unequalled march, which the poet William Cullen Bryant compared to that of Xenophon's ten thousand Greeks, compels the query, "What manner of man was he?" Fortunately that question can still be answered with reasonable accuracy.

The emigrant ancestor of the Doniphans came to America in the middle or latter part of the seventeenth century and settled in Virginia. At the beginning of the Revolutionary War, Joseph Doniphan, father of Colonel Alexander William, and two of his brothers, one of whom was killed in the Battle of Brandywine, enlisted in a company commanded by John Marshall, later Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court. When his period of service ended, Joseph returned to Virginia. In the summer of 1779 he went to Boonesborough, Kentucky, possibly with Daniel Boone's own party of that year. That winter he taught the first school organized on the "dark and bloody ground" in the fort at Boonesborough. A year or so later he returned to Virginia, where he again enlisted in the Colonial army. This time he served until the end of the war, and was with General Washington at Yorktown. Early in 1785 he married Anne Smith, whose ancestors were among the original settlers at Jamestown in 1607. Having seen the new land beyond the Alleghenies he could not be content to dwell in old Virginia. In 1791 the family fared forth, with May's Lick, now Maysville, Kentucky, as their destination. Upon arriving there they shared a cabin with Simon Kenton, intimate friend and comrade of Daniel Boone. Later they moved to a nearby farm where Alexander William was born July 9, 1808.

THIS BRIEF RESUME of family history reveals certain important factors both in the heredity and environment of Colonel Doniphan. At this time we concern ourselves only with the latter. Being born about a quarter of a century after the conclusion of the struggle for independence the tales first poured into his ears when he was old enough to understand them recounted the deeds of General Washington, "Mad Anthony" Wayne, "Swamp Fox" Marion, "Light-horse" Harry Lee, and others of the immortal host of Revolutionary heroes. Therefore any estimate of him must be made in the light of the fact that he was born and nurtured among people who had experienced the hopes, tragedies, and triumphs of a long war waged in behalf of freedom. Their spirit descended upon him, and the white-hot flame which burned in their breasts was transmitted to him.

In addition to all this he was born upon the raw frontier amid the odors of the primeval forests which had but lately rung with the dread warwhoop of savage Indians, and whose dim aisles were yet threaded by wild beasts and the hunters who sought them. The tales of the winning of freedom which charmed his youthful heart were interspersed with others equally thrilling relating to the conquest of Kentucky. Under the spell of the narrators, many of whom had lived through those perilous days the deeds of those mighty men of old, Daniel Boone, John Floyd, James Harrod and others of like heroic stature wrought their irresistible influence upon him. These two powerful factors then, the one a backdrop and the other an actual, everyday environment, constitute the mold in which he was cast.

Reared in the midst of a sturdy people who had won their homes with an ax and rifle, inured from childhood to the hardships of a primitive society and partaking in abundant measure of the qualities of his elders he became and remained to the end of his days a typical American frontiersman. He was honest to the core, dauntless in the face of danger, self-reliant and resourceful; he scorned sham and hypocrisy, recognized no artificial class distinctions between men, and was thoroughly democratic in spirit. Stalwart of figure (he was six feet four inches tall), possessed of an impressive physique, exhibiting a manly beauty Greek sculptors would have delighted to copy, the outward man typified the grandeur, moral integrity, and uprightness of the inner man. He was modest in the extreme, unassuming, never thrust himself forward, and was utterly void of desire for empty honors.

THE CELEBRATION here today is in keeping with the remark of that French philosopher who said that if a nation would survive it must, from time to time, refresh itself at the well-springs of its own origin. Translated into common speech it means that if this nation, "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal," is to achieve its glorious destiny it must continue to be inspired by the same fundamental political and social ideals which inspired our fathers in the beginning. Catalogue them as Jeffersonian and Jacksonian democracy, homely Lincolnian philosophy, virtues of the pioneers, or anything else you choose, so long as they constitute the deep foundation for our national structure. Today many among us have strayed so far from the well-springs of our origin that any muddy, poisonous "ism" other than pure, sparkling Americanism suffices to quench their thirst. American genius, born and developed under the inspiring aegis of democracy, has elevated this nation to the awful heights of world leadership. We neither dare avoid the responsibility involved in that position nor abandon the principle which lifted us to it.

In these critical days, with momentous issues trembling in the balances, with the havoc wrought by the enemies of democracy before our very eyes and with the most complete totalitarianism practiced daily in large groups of our fellow citizens in the name of economics or other advantage, the need for refreshing ourselves at the well-springs of that democracy which nourished men like Colonel Doniphan is imperative. Let us not think that totalitarianism was forever buried under the flaming debris of once proud Berlin or consumed by the incredible heat of atomic bombs over Hiroshima and Nagasaki. It still thrives in the nations which first adopted it, and that nation, grown strong through victorious conflict with others of its own kind, now boldly challenges the democracy of the Western Hemisphere. Today we are engaged in a gigantic ideological struggle which girdles the globe. . . . Within the framework of one of these ideologies lies the pattern for all governments, including our own, for tomorrow. Therefore we shall serve ourselves, the generations of our children yet unborn, and the world by refreshing ourselves at the democratic well-springs of our national origin.

Christian Standards

Whether we like it or not, unbelievers set stricter standards for Christian living than many believers themselves. They are not willing to follow these standards themselves, but they expect them of professing Christians. Therefore, as followers of the Lord Jesus, we need to guard against anything in our conduct or conversation that would hinder others, or make it difficult for them to know and accept the Lord Jesus Christ. Hence our need for daily fellowship in prayer and in the reading of the Word, that we may give to the Lord Jesus the opportunity to keep our lives pure and free from everything that might cause others to stumble.—Sunday School Times.

The Book of Mormon

I. The Palmyra Edition, 1830

The First Edition

There is extraordinary interest among church people in the first edition of the Book of Mormon, known as "The Palmyra Edition," published in 1830. Though it is not as rare, in point of existing copies, as some other printings, it is most important for its historical value.

It would be useful to know how many copies of this book are now in the hands of church people, and who owns them.

The showing of the Book of Mormon manuscript at the Book of Mormon Institute held at Stone Church in Independence during January of this year brought a revival of interest in the early editions, and expression of general interest has prompted the presentation of this information.

A Surviving Copy

Quite recently a copy was borrowed by the Herald staff to be photographed in the Visual Aids department for a slide. This copy was made available by President Israel A. Smith. It is well bound in leather and comparable with good book publishing and binding of the period. The leather is still intact; the back is strong; and the pages are in good condition considering their age. The paper is only lightly marked with chemicals used in the manufacture of paper about 1830.

It is a pleasure to examine this splendid old volume. Its type and page composition are good for the time. A certain quaintness along with the merit and dignity of the work impresses the modern reader with an appreciation of the workmanship. What book published today, in cloth or in leather, will still be holding together 121 years from now?

The Printing

No date is given, so far as is known, for the completion of the translation of the Book of Mormon. But the translation was nearly done, because Joseph Smith wrote in his history, Meantime our translation drawing to a close, we went to Palmyra, Wayne County, New York, secured the copyright, and agreed with Mr. Egbert Grandin to print five thousand copies, for the sum of three thousand dollars.

That statement identifies the two transactions as the business of one day. The date is fixed by the fact that he deposited the title page with the Clerk of the Court of the Northern District of New York on June 11, 1829. This, apparently, was the copyright procedure at the time, under the Federal law of 1790, for the legal statement quotes some of the phrases of the law.

John H. Gilbert of Palmyra claimed to have set the type for the Book of Mormon, and in an interview with W. H. and E. L. Kelley on March 5, 1881, he made the following statement: "The manuscript was put in our hands in August, 1829, and all printed by March, 1830."

The title page of the 1830 Palmyra edition contains all the material found on page iii of the present Authorized edition. In his history Joseph Smith has something special to say about this title page:

I wish also to mention here, that the title page of the Book of Mormon is a literal translation, taken from the very last leaf, on the left hand side of the collection or book of plates, which contained the record which has been translated, the language of the whole running the same as all Hebrew writing in general; and that the said title page is not by any means a modern composition either of mine or of any other man's who has lived or does live in this generation. Therefore in order to correct an error which generally exists concerning it, I give below that part of the title page of the original Book of Mormon, which is a genuine and literal translation of the title page of the original Book of Mormon as recorded on the plates.

THE BOOK OF MORMON

AN ACCOUNT WRITTEN BY THE HAND OF MORMON, UPON PLATES, TAKEN FROM THE PLATES OF NEPHI.

Wherefore it is an abridgement of the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites; written to the Lamanites, who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile: written by way of commandment, and also by the Spirit of prophecy and revelation.

Written, and sealed up, and hid up unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed; to come forth by the gift and power of God unto the interpretation thereof: sealed by the hand of Moroni, and hid up unto the Lord, to come forth in due time by the way of Gentile; the interpretation thereof by the gift of God.

An abridgement taken from the Book of Ether, also; which is a record of the people of Jared: who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people when they were building a tower to get to heaven: which is to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations. And now if there are faults they are the mistakes of men; wherefore condemn not the things of God, that ye may be found spotless at the judgment seat of Christ.

These statements are from the Times and Seasons, Volume 3, pages 928-931, and 943.

Also on the title page of the Palmyra edition, just below the material just quoted is the following:

By Joseph Smith, Junior
Author and Proprietor

PALMYRA:
Printed by E. B. Grandin, for the Author,
1830

The words "Author and Proprietor" have aroused discussion and speculation. Some critics have tried to make capital of them. It is believed that Joseph Smith used this form to obtain the protection of the law for the text. This is supported by the words of the legal statement on the next page for copyright purposes. Joseph had already experienced great difficulty in protecting the integrity of the work, due to the folly of Martin Harris.

The Legal Statement

The back of the title page contains the legal statement where modern books carry their copyright. We read the following words:

Northern District of New York, to wit; Be it remembered, That on the eleventh day of June, in the fifty-third year of the Independence of the United States of America, A.D. 1829, Joseph Smith, Jun. of the said District, hath deposited in this office the title of a Book, the right whereof he claims as author, in the words following, to wit:

Here follows a repetition in small type, of what is contained on the title page, down to the printer's signature, place, and date. The last paragraph is a formal legal statement, and the page is signed at the bottom: "R. R. Lansing, Clerk of the Northern District of New York."

Preface to Palmyra Edition

Martin Harris had been acting since about April 12, 1828, as scribe for Joseph Smith in the translation, and when he had finished 116 pages by June 14 became very importunate in seeking permission to show the manuscript to his family and friends. Through folly, and despite the most solemn promises, he lost the manuscript, the sole copy and it was never recovered. Enemies could and would have used it dishonestly to discredit the work. This confronted Joseph Smith with a most serious problem. How it was solved he explained in this special preface, which is here given:

To the Reader—

As many false reports have been circulated respecting the following work, and also many unlawful measures taken by evil designing persons to destroy me, and also the work, I would inform you that I translated, by the gift and power of God, and caused to be written, one hundred and sixteen pages, the which I took from the Book of Lehi, which was an account abridged from the plates of Lehi, by the hand of Mormon; which said account, some person or persons have stolen and kept from me, notwithstanding my utmost exertions to recover it again—and being commanded of the Lord that I should not translate the same over again, for Satan had put it into their hearts to tempt the Lord their God, by altering the words, that they did read contrary from that which I translated and caused to be written; and if I should translate the same over again, they would publish that which they had stolen, and Satan would stir up the hearts of this generation, that they might not receive this work: but behold, the Lord said unto me, I will not suffer that Satan shall accomplish his evil design in this thing; therefore thou shalt translate from the plates of Nephi; and thus I will confound those who have altered my words. I will not suffer that they shall destroy my work; yea, I will shew unto them that my wisdom is greater than the cunning of the Devil. Wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, I have, through his grace and mercy, accomplished that which he hath commanded me respecting this thing. I would also inform you that the plates of which hath been spoken, were found in the township of Manchester, Ontario county, New York. The Author.

Not a Perfect Edition

There is no reason for regarding this first edition as a perfect one. It is an error to regard corrections made in later editions by checking with the manuscript as "changes," as some have alleged. The preface to the 1837 Kirtland edition, published by Oliver Cowdery and Company, the preface being signed by Parley P. Pratt and John Goodson, explains this, and we quote it in part:

Individuals acquainted with book printing, are aware of the numerous typographical errors which always occur in manuscript editions. It is only necessary to say, that the whole has been carefully re-examined and compared with the original manuscripts, by elder Joseph Smith, Jr. the translator of the book of Mormon, assisted by the present printer, brother O. Cowdery, who formerly wrote the greatest portion of the same, as dictated by Brother Smith.

Further Notes

In this original edition, the testimony of the witnesses is given at the end of the book.

Our present Authorized Edition follows the same chapter divisions that are used in the Palmyra edition.

The Palmyra edition has long paragraphs which are not numbered, an arrangement that is not convenient for reference purposes.

The punctuation of the passage in Jacob 2: 38, as found in the Palmyra edition, has been preserved in our Authorized edition. Differences in punctuation in other editions have been made a basis of controversy by some sects. They must be regarded as incorrect.

A Parable

THERE WAS ONCE a church that was never happy. To a stranger all seemed well and in order, but to the regular attendant all was discord and chaos. No one took full responsibility for any task, and the services came to depend on those folks who happened to be at church on any given morning.

Even church officials who visited now and again went away a bit heartsick sensing something was very amiss, and no man cared to be pastor.

Another church was always happy. Not only did folks do the special jobs to which they had been appointed but they were not afraid to do more than their share. Always someone was spending extra time helping the other fellow with his special problems. When a member missed services everyone was genuinely interested, and no one tried to guess at some dire reason for his absence. Each was the other's keeper, but not his jailer. Pleasant conversation was heard everywhere, and idle gossip not at all.

Many men wanted to lead this group—and all visitors wanted to stay as long as possible in this friendly, godly atmosphere. Church officials left the branch inspired and alert to God's work.

Two churches were here . . . one is your church—it is made by you. You and your fellows set the pattern by which one of these becomes yours.

There are 588 numbered pages in the Palmyra edition, beginning with the title page as number 1. The two additional pages of testimony at the end are not numbered.

JOHN LOOKED AROUND the small branch in which he worshiped each Sunday morning and was a bit disgusted with the behavior of everyone—especially the children. He wasn't too tactful in how he told parents of misbehaving offspring either. Since John was a good lad and spent many hours keeping the branch building in shape for meetings, the parents forgave him and went their ways.

Ten years went by and times changed. John had moved away and had married a church girl in another part of the country. It was their good luck to have a chance to vacation in the old home town, and they brought along their two lively little sons. Their first Sunday at church was both a joy and a trial. It was good to be able to introduce wife and family to his old friends—but John was embarrassed because his boys were not as still as they could have been.

After the preaching service one kindly sister came to him and, putting her hand on his arm, said simply, "John, I'm happy to meet your wife and family. It's good to have you back and I'm more than happy to see that you don't have angels for children. It reminds me of my boys when they were restless in church too."

John had the grace to blush, later confessing to his wife that it was too bad teen-age boys couldn't see ahead when they were criticizing how other people reared their children.

" . . . and Grace for Grace "

By W. J. Haworth

ARE YOU SAVED? is an oft-repeated question put to most people by aggressive Christians. When it has been asked of me I have invariably replied, "Of course." This has not been an affirmation of absolute salvation, for conscientiously, I am part of that whole creation which "groaneth and travaileth together," waiting to see just who does qualify to be called sons of God—absolutely saved. Because I have received the spirit of adoption, I pray, "Our Father" (Romans 8: 15-21). With those of the true Christian faith, I have received Jesus as the Son of God and my personal Savior.

Through acceptance of him, I have qualified to "receive power to become" a son of God. Though such a son, I am still on probation. The manner of my life will finally determine if I have grown to "measure of the stature" of a son of God. It is not what I am, but what I am becoming that is of moment now. The One John declared to be "full of grace and truth" gives me "grace for grace." That is, he gives me his grace that I may use it to develop the spiritual graces that were characteristic of his life (John 1: 11-16).

The grace of God, given through obedience to the gospel is able to deliver us from the kingdoms and powers of darkness, and to translate us into the kingdom of heaven. To the extent that one is delivered from sin, he is saved—now. One of the Wesleys, seeing a drunkard reeling along a street, remarked: "There, but for the grace of God, go I." Drink is a great evil; but there are legions of other sins in the kingdoms and powers of darkness.

I HAVE HEARD IT SAID that the final temptation of Jesus by Satan was that He should accept the ignominy and suffering of the cross because it would draw all men to him and he would be their Savior. The Devil is supposed to have chuckled at his victory when Jesus ascended the cross, because he knew the many sins Christians would commit in the name of their Savior.

Jesus did not go to the cross because he fell to the temptation of Satan, but because, by arrangement with his father, he was "a Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world." Christians do commit sin in the name of the Redeemer. It is not my purpose to point out the specific sins, but to concentrate on the evil being done through the propagation of the idea that when Jesus took all believers under the shelter of his grace, he forever shielded them from the consequences of the sins they would subsequently commit.

How much better it is to accept the challenge of Hebrews 12: 28: "Let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." It is well to remember that "He giveth grace to the humble."—I Peter 5: 5. When we are buffeted, or tempted, or tried, we need to take advantage of the Master's assurance, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

THE ANCIENT BRITONS wore a symbol of grace. It was the bitter herb rue. This was carried as the outward sign of the inward grace of repentance. In Hamlet, Shakespeare has the distraught Ophelia saying to her brother:

Here's rue for you, and some for me,
We may call it Herb Grace o' Sunday.
—O, you may wear yours with a difference.
—Act 4, Scene 5

It is interesting to trace the connection of this herb with the principle of repentance. It is "an emblem of bitterness and grief—called herb of grace," say the dictionaries. When we rue anything we repent of it, perhaps because it does not appear to be to our advantage. Rue is used as a soporic and as a purge.

When sin lies heavy upon the soul, the soporic of repentance makes us figuratively "shed blood," just as rue, as a soporic, makes men perspire. Going through such an ordeal we see ourselves at our very worst and feel an urgency to shed the sinful self—to crucify the old man of sin and be rid of him. It is at this time that repentance as a purge has a great part to play. There is expulsive power in a new affection, and the One who is the Author of our salvation asks us to love him even as he has loved us. Linking the expulsive power of this love with repentance will not only expel old sinful habits, but will prompt new, Christlike ones.

Astringency will follow the purge. Thus the entire self is gathered up in singleness of heart and mind for the Lord. Comparing ourselves with the One who ascended Calvary for us, compassion, or ruth (a derivative of rue) prompts the giving. When it enters the soul the ruthlessness of sin is expelled.

Then, the giving of the self, body, soul and spirit, locks the door on any return to the old sinful way of life. Sinful pride goes out. Humility and love take up their abode within.

TRUE REPENTANCE involves a life program of going forward as a new creature in Christ. The old man of sin must be crucified in repentance and buried in the waters of baptism, to be raised to newness of life with Jesus. There must be no turning back to the manner of the old life. The "new" person must make constant spiritual advancement.

Many Scriptural illustrations point the way: the winner of the race who endured to the end; the man who looked into the perfect law of liberty and continued therein; the person whose house, built upon a rock, withstood the storms; and others.

Even the saved person finds, as did James, that there is a continuous war going on in his own personality—a struggle between the leadings of the Spirit and the desires of the flesh: "Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain, the spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy? But he giveth more grace. Wherefore he saith, 'God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble.'"—James 4: 5, 6.

THE FOLLOWER of the Nazarene receives of his fullness and of his grace for the development of gracious personality (John 1: 16). Not by the righteousness of the Law of Moses, nor of human conventions, but by his grace Jesus saves us from our fleshly desires when we make a solemn covenant with him "by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost."—Titus 3: 5.

That is why Paul wrote in the Ephesian letter: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."—Ephesians 2: 8-10. These God-ordained works were manifested in the grace and truth which came by Jesus Christ (John 1: 17) even the gospel, which is called "the word of his grace."—Acts 14: 3.

Jesus is also called the Word, because he manifested the "grace and truth" which he preached in his life. The converted person is also a "living epistle read and known of all men." He is a new creature, bent on becoming a son of God through personally cultivating the graces which made the life of Christ so lovely. It is spiritually exhilarating to associate with people whose graciousness is patterned after the example of the Master.

One person desiring spiritual ministry and being unable to find it in Christendom journeyed to India and there realized his ambition through a certain Yogi. He claimed that the chief and most striking manifestation of power in this man was saintliness. I have ministered the word to Hindus and Mohammedans, but have never noted anything superior to Christian graciousness among them. It has been my privilege to see a Hindu converted to Christ, and I have rejoiced as I watched Christian graciousness being developed in him. Aloof saintliness can never measure up to Christian graciousness.

MARK THE GRACIOUSNESS, divine yet tenderly human, in the story told long ago by Nathaniel P. Willis of a leper Jesus met by a pool. On hearing footsteps approaching, after the custom of lepers, the man called out "unclean." To ordinary men that cry was a signal to turn aside. Not so with the Master of men. Walking up to the leper, he commanded him to rise. Here is the pen picture of the gracious One he beheld:

Love and awe mingled in the regard of Helon's eye as he beheld the stranger . . . His garb was simple and his sandals worn. His stature modeled with a perfect grace. His countenance, the impress of a god's, touched with the opening innocence of a child's. His eye was blue, and calm as is the sky in the serenest noon. His hair, unshorn, fell to his shoulders, and his curling beard the fullness of perfected manhood bore.

He looked on Helon earnestly a while, as though his heart were moved. Then, stooping down, He took a little water in his hand, and laid it on his brow, and said, "Be clean!" and lo, the scales fell from him, and his blood coursed with delicious coolness through his veins, and his dry palms grew moist, and on his brow the dewy softness of an infant's stole. His leprosy was cleansed, and he fell down, prostrate, at Jesus feet, and worshiped him.

Such was the revelation of God to Helon, the leper. The power of God was poured out on him in healing and divine graciousness in the person of the One who was "God manifest in the flesh." Helon was so blessed because of his great need, not so much because of any special worthiness. We cannot see and receive the personal ministry of Jesus now, but he has left us this promise: "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." The supreme graciousness of the Almighty awaits those who attain purity of heart.

Though Jesus is not here to minister in person, he has left his servants to carry on. He said of the believer: "Out of him shall flow rivers of living water." Rivers of spiritual blessings for those in need of help. Nor were these glorious spiritual streams limited to the times of Jesus and the first apostles. I have witnessed them in the ministry of healing in Australia, New Zealand, the Pacific Islands, and the United States. Men of God have taken this wonderful ministry to lepers and other incurables the world over. It is the same Christian ethic that inspires the sacrifices made by many physicians and nurses.

But not all who need the ministry of healing are in need of hospitalization. Many need understanding and healing of spiritual hurts. In this ministry not only the priesthood but the women of the church have brought spiritual and mental comfort and joy to needy persons. For one in need of physical healing there are hundreds who need the sympathetic and godly ministry that can be given by God's servants, male and female, out of whom rivers of spiritual blessings flow.

FAR FROM THE GEOGRAPHIC CENTER of church activity I learned the gospel largely from those who ministered the printed word. I had an insatiable desire to meet personally these men and to hear the word accompanied by spiritual power. So, in 1911, I attended my first General Conference. This was truly an inspiring experience for me—one that was subsequently reflected in my ministry in the far-away Australasian Mission. I could now present the church, not as a doctrinal skeleton, but the real Body of Christ, animated by the Holy Spirit and manifesting the true Christian graces.

As representative of the uniform manner in which I was received and helped by all, I mention my meeting with President Joseph Smith. It took place in the Stone Church. An obscure elder from Australia, I had been announced to preach. To my surprise, the chief officer of the church had done me the honor, not only in coming to hear my message, but in also associating himself with me in the pulpit. The humility and comradeship thus manifested created for that sermon a spiritual atmosphere I shall never forget.

By invitation I visited his home on a number of occasions. Reading his articles in church publications and studying the revelations given through him had afforded me much pleasure; but to meet and converse with him in person gave me a new and intensely satisfying appreciation of the prophetic office. He was possessed of a keen, analytical mind, and his conversation was illuminating.

His gracious personality manifested itself in simple courtesies. I was reminded of Hillaire Belloc's statement, "The grace of God is in courtesy." I witnessed the Spirit of God at work in a godly man—a prophet of God who spoke and acted as a Saint with no thought of lording it over the common man. "The Grace of God be with you!" he said, in parting.

ARE YOU SAVED? The question persists. By the grace of Christ, I am, if I am giving grace for grace. He has given me "power to become" a son of God, a perfect man; and, since I am pressing on toward the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Ephesians 4: 13; John 1: 16), I may also receive the fullness of his grace. I shall be like him just as soon as I develop all of his graces. Then Zion and the gathering will be appreciably nearer, for all of the Saints are just like me.

Here is a divine formula for the attainment of this condition: "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity."—II Peter 1: 5-8. A very old prescription, yes, but when one has completed this addition problem it will be no idle or barren boast to say, "By the grace of God I am saved."

It is extremely serious to reject the formula. Of the person who does so Peter says: "He that lacketh these things is blind and cannot see afar off and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins" (verse 9). How easy it is to forget.

Lest we forget to observe the commandments which so vitally affect our salvation, the Savior instituted a periodical reminder in the Communion: "This do in remembrance of me." What a jog to fickle memory when the Communion brings us into intimate contact with his sacrifice on our behalf. At his table, the pinnacle of our privileges, he gently reminds us that he gives "grace for grace."

Hard Feelings

When Dwight Morrow was told that a business acquaintance had expressed a marked dislike for him, Morrow lapsed into puzzled silence, then exclaimed, "I don't see why he should feel hard toward me. I don't remember ever doing anything for him."—The Public Speaker's Treasure Chest.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

Who is Elias who was to restore all things?
Illinois O. C. H.

Answer:

Since no completely satisfactory answer can be given to this question as to the identity of Elias, no effort will be made to be dogmatic. Bible quotations will be from the Holy Scriptures.

1. Was Elias John the Baptist? John the Baptist answers, ". . . I am not the Elias who was to restore all things. . . ." —John 1: 22. The angel, who told Zacharias of the impending birth of John the Baptist, according to Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2, was Elias. Luke (1: 17) states, "And he [John the Baptist] shall go before the Lord in the spirit and power of Elias." This indicates the sense in which John the Baptist is identified with Elias, and that John is not to be confused with Elias personally.

2. John the Baptist, speaking of Jesus, is recorded in John 1: 28, as saying, "He it is of whom I bear record. He is that prophet, even Elias. . . ." The fact that Matthew 17: 2, 3; Mark 9: 4; and Luke 9: 30 all state that Moses and Elias were with Christ on the Mount of Transfiguration excludes the possibility of Christ and Elias being the same person. Therefore, we must look for another sense in which the meaning of the name Elias may apply to a number of persons.

3. It is just possible that Elias may not be identified with any known person of scriptural history and may have to be considered as a person who never lived upon the earth. Church History, Volume 2, pages 46 and 47, state that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were visited in Kirtland Temple in 1836 by the Lord, Moses, Elias, and Elijah. Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2 states that Moroni was sent to reveal the Book of Mormon, containing the fullness of the everlasting gospel and also with Elias, to whom was committed the keys of bringing to pass the Restoration. This same Elias was the angel who visited Zacharias to tell him of the coming birth of his son John the Baptist. John the Baptist was the one sent to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery to ordain them to the Aaronic priesthood; and also to them appeared Elijah, unto whom was committed the keys of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children and the hearts of the children to the fathers, that the whole earth may not be smitten with a curse. Joseph, Jacob, Isaac, Abraham, Michael (who is Adam), Peter, James, and John were all mentioned as having part in the work of the Restoration, and all committed to Joseph and Oliver the keys of their ministry. These men including Jesus Christ acted under the restorative mission and spirit of Elias (See John 1: 28).

4. The most thoroughly substantiated position as to the identity of Elias seems to be that Elias and Elijah are one and the same person. As Dr. Scofield puts it (paraphrased), Elias shall truly first come and restore all things. This prediction was fulfilled in a measure by John the Baptist and was yet to be fulfilled by Elijah. John the Baptist had already come, and with a ministry so completely in the spirit and power of Elijah's future ministry that in an adumbrative sense it could be said: "Elias is come already." The thought of identification is expressed while yet preserving personal distinction.

Several Bible dictionaries and commentaries consulted agree without exception that Elias and Elijah are the same person. Several New Testament quotations use the name Elias as the person of events occurring in the Old Testament of which Elijah is the central figure. The following are examples: Luke 4: 25, 26, "But I tell you the truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heavens were shut up three years and six months, and great famine was throughout the land; but unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Serapta, of Sidon. . . ." I Kings 17: 1-9 identifies Elijah as the one meant. Romans 11: 2-4 tells of Elias making complaints to God against Israel, and the Lord's answer, "I have reserved to myself seven thousand men who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal." The original of this is found in I Kings 19. James 5: 17 says, "Elias was a man subject to like passions, as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth for three years and six months." Thus we see that the Elias of the New Testament is really Elijah of the Old Testament. Dickenson's Bible Commentary says that the Elias who appeared with Moses before Christ on the Mount of Transfiguration was the same person as the Elijah who was translated according to II Kings 2: 1-12. It further states, "There was Moses the great representative of the Law, and Elijah the representative of the prophets, and Jesus the fulfillment of the law and the prophets." This would seem conclusive that Elias is the spiritual and prophetic name given to Elijah, the translated prophet whose mission was to extend through the ages, and whose spirit and work would be shared by all who were to assist in the Restoration. Elias is the Greek form of the Hebrew proper name, Elijah. ALMA C. ANDREWS.

Question:

Are we to assume that all persons in the several glories must have received baptism somewhere in order to be permitted there?

Michigan

C. A. H.

Answer:

Mormon quoted the words of Christ to him, and taught that little children "need no repentance, neither baptism," but "are alive in Christ," and are "partakers of salvation." Not only are little children "alive in Christ," but "also all they that are without the law, for the power of redemption cometh on all they that have no law; wherefore he that is not condemned, or he that is under no condemnation, can not repent; and unto such baptism availeth nothing."—Moroni 8: 8-28. Where there is no sin or condemnation it would seem that baptism does not apply. Evidently King Benjamin so understood it:

His blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died, not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned.—Mosiiah 1: 107.

Baptism is unto repentance and a remission of sins; where sin is not imputed, neither repentance nor baptism is required. CHARLES FRY.

They Brought Themselves

LET ME TELL YOU about the Jenkins family. They moved to the Center Stake from western Nebraska. When they chose their congregation to attend in Independence, they did it as if they meant business. The first Sunday they attended, people spoke to them—if for no other reason, because they spoke to people first. Alice—that's Mother Jenkins—smiled at people and people smiled back. Percy—that's Dad Jenkins—asked for further details about the Wednesday night prayer service, and in receiving his answer had a nice conversation with Brother Brown. Brother Brown then introduced Brother Jenkins to all the folks who were standing around after the service, and it wasn't long till everyone knew Brother Jenkins.

Joan, the older daughter, asked about the choir. "Do you need members?" And what choir isn't also having it's own Each One Bring One campaign? At the next choir practice there was a new tenor—Dad—and two new sopranos, Mom and Joan.

Jeanette—the younger daughter—wanted to know about the Orioles. She found the circle of the girls her age and got busy. One day as part of her Oriole activity, Jeanette paged at the Sanitarium. She got acquainted with some of the patients and saw how lonely they were. The next day was Saturday. When Mom gave permission to go up town, she thought Jeanette might go window shopping with some of her friends. Later in the evening Mom learned that Jeanette had spent the afternoon at the hospital visiting the lonely ones.

From the first the Jenkins' always came to church school. They were so consistent the superintendent saw in them a family that could be depended upon. At the beginning of the new year, there were members of the Jenkins' family teaching in the church school. Brother Jenkins played the violin for worship services.

By the end of two months the Jenkins' were "old home folks." No one ever heard them complain that they came to church and "nobody spoke to us for three Sundays." They knew that people are people and willingly forgave them of their shyness. After church they invited stragglers home for dinner.

How do you go to church school? Don't be bashful. There are others more shy than you are who need your friendliness. Be like the Jenkins' family and be happy in the gospel. —Mrs. Harley Nagel.

Roots Go Deep

IF YOU ARE A woman who is contemplating sending her man off for the first time—or again—to service with the armed forces, don't feel that your roots have been pulled up, that the marriage you have created is being destroyed. Roots go deep, and through the cruel cold of winter they are still nourishing life. The flower above the ground may wilt but the roots will bring forth another flower, more perfect than the last.

While you are separated, encourage those roots of the love you share with hope and cheerfulness. Build the link between you with letters, sharing your hopes and dreams as before, though you cannot build the concrete things around you. Find happy things to do; give thought to your responsibility to those who look to you for strength. The devil compounds interest on trouble, so don't borrow any!

And when you are together again, you will have much richness to offer your home and your husband because you have allowed yourself to grow. Because you have fed the roots, you will find you have also fed the flower.

Briefs

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN.—The Port Huron and St. Clair Branches of Michigan recently concluded a successful ten weeks' period of intensive missionary work in this area which was patterned in the three phases: training for evangelism, ministry in the home, and a missionary sermon series.

Through the medium of the publication Lower Lights, which is mailed monthly to every church member, the proposed "Men's Forum for Evangelism" was publicized. This course was open to all men of the church. They met in the church parlors each Monday evening for six weeks, receiving four lectures by Elder Jacques Pement and one lecture by Bishop T. A. Beck on the mode of evangelism. The pastor, Elder Warren Chelline, demonstrated the use of the folder, "The Restoration Story." Elder Joseph Muir conducted devotions. At the last of the six sessions, Apostle Percy Farrow, Evangelist John R. Grice, and Evangelist J. J. Ledworth each presented inspiring messages and led the men in prayer.

There were forty men active in this campaign. After their period of training, these men conducted twenty "Cottage Missions," using the material in the "Restoration Story" at three sessions in each home. The men worked in groups of three and four with a priesthood member in charge of each crew. The men shared the responsibility of presenting the message, compiling reports of all who attended and providing transportation. For three Sunday afternoons, while these "Cottage Missions" were in progress, the men met together at the church to compare notes, compile statistics, and to pray fervently for the success of the work. At the final report session, the visiting missionary, Elder Joseph Yager, was in attendance, and the men partook of the Lord's Supper in a rich spirit of fellowship.

One hundred and fifty attractive window posters were printed in green on white, giving the name and location of the church, a picture of the church and the announcement of Elder Yager's series dates and its theme. The Zion's League distributed these show cards to the stores of the city. A five-inch, two-column display ad on the regular church page of the Port Huron newspaper announced each sermon topic. Church program folders carried announcements and invitations to the series. Elder Yager preached with power on the theme, "Eventually—Why Not Now?" There was a record attendance at these services. Members of the Department of Women kept a listing of the names of each individual who attended these missionary sermons. As a result each nonmember was greeted and his name put on file, together with information on which sermons he has heard. Mimeographed copies of the sermon notes were distributed to all at the door after each sermon. Music departments from both branches (Saint Clair and Port Huron) assisted ably by providing appropriate music for all these services. During the week of the series the missionary and the pastor and several of the men of the priesthood were busy visiting the homes of the prospects, gaining decisions to be baptized. At the eleven o'clock service on the last Sunday of the series, the following candidates were baptized:

Keith Bankson, Karen Kilbourne, Winnifred and Cyrus Kilbourne, Alice Miller, Grace Miller, Norris MacDonald, and Edward Schunck. At the Sunday evening service, Raymond Smith was also baptized. There are many more prospects for baptism now than there were before this campaign started. Four new "Cottage Missions" have now been started and it is intended that these mission activities will be continuous. The "Cottage Missions" activity using forty men in twenty locations had a total attendance of 359, and reached sixty nonmembers with the message of the restoration.

The Women's Department sponsored a roast beef supper two days before the series of meetings and a folder advertising the missionary series was placed beside each plate. During the month of December the four groups of the Women's Department held a mass meeting in the church, each woman bringing a toy or picture for the nursery which recently was newly decorated by the Young Matrons' Group. A bazaar in the downtown Detroit Edison building was sponsored by Group Three (sewing group). A bake sale by Group One was held in conjunction with the bazaar. Baskets for sick and shut-in members were made up and distributed by the women. Recently Bishop Wayne Updike spoke to the women in the church parlors on the subject, "Building Zion Through Stewardship."

Members of the Zion's League presented the branch with a beautiful Communion table with the words, "This do in remembrance of me," in gold on the side. This contribution was made possible by the sponsoring of a Fall Festival. They also delivered handbills for a local store, thus adding to their funds for the table. League members sang carols at Christmas time to the shut-ins. They also held a semi-formal watch party New Year's Eve in the home of Brother and Sister Beryl Reid, who are League sponsors.

A flannelgraph series of Book of Mormon stories is being presented by Sister Leila Muir. Sister Muir also presented the Christmas story in flannelgraphs for the children. There is an average of sixty-five children attending junior church. St. Clair has recently organized a new junior church for the children.—Reported by LEONA HANDS.

KLAMATH FALLS, OREGON.—Since the removal of Elder Ted Schuld to Medford, meetings have been held during the summer at the various homes of Saints under the leadership of Brother Y. Carroll. July 3, Elder Walter Chrestensen of Bakersfield, California, conducted services in which eight people were baptized.

After the fall district conference at Portland, Oregon, Priest Harold Crooker was appointed leader. October 29, the group met at the home of Brother and Sister McNabb for reorganization into an active group. Y. Carroll was appointed as assistant church school director; Marie McNabb, secretary; Clarabelle Morris, treasurer; and Etta Shaw, auditor.

November 18, Elder and Mrs. F. E. Chapman and Elder and Mrs. Harold Carpenter of Vancouver visited the group. Elder Harold Carpenter presented slides at the evening service. Roycie Chapman, district women's leader, gave a talk.

A Communion service was held November 19, conducted by Elder F. E. Chapman. Elder Harold Carpenter presented the sermon. A potluck dinner was served and a roundtable discussion followed in the afternoon.

Lucille Crane was selected and Y. and Grace Carroll were appointed historians.

Since the first of December a permanent meeting place has been established at the City Library.—Reported by HAROLD E. CROOKER.

MOLINE, ILLINOIS.—E. J. Lenox and Lyle W. Woodstock attended the high priests' institute in Kirtland, Ohio.

On December 10, three adults and three children were baptized. Martin Edwin Hessler, Carol Olson, and Carolyn Olson were baptized by Elder Richard Martens. Ruth Willey, Richard Harrington, and James Kennedy were baptized by John Harrington. The candidates were confirmed at the evening service.

David Wayne, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald L. Mitchell, and Linda Lou, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Mann, were blessed recently.

Three of the young men in the branch have gone into the armed forces. Keith Lane and Don Boney are in the Marines, and Lee Burgess is in the Army.—Reported by ORA BURGESS.

The Public Worship of God By Henry Sloane Coffin

The principal element in Christian worship is the adoring recognition of God. Dr. Coffin has shown by what means the recognition and appreciation of God can most successfully be made the underlying theme of every part of every church service.

Prepared for the guidance and aid of ministers, choirmasters, students of divinity and of sacred music, and office-bearers within the church, The Public Worship of God offers an abundance of both instruction and inspiration for anyone entrusted with the task of leading in common worship.

BILLINGS, MONTANA.—On December 16, 1950, six new members were baptized at Billings by Elder C. Houston Hobart. Following the confirmation service on Sunday, December 17, a business meeting was held and the Billings Mission was organized with approximately twenty members.

The district president, through Elder Hobart, appointed Priest John Crawford as pastor of the group. Vern S. Holmes was elected church school director; Deacon Glenn J. Beck, secretary and treasurer; Sister Lillian Chase, music director; Sister Ruth Beck was sustained as leader of the women's group.

Meetings are held in the parlor of the Y. W. C. A. every Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—Evangelist Ray Whiting conducted a two weeks' series of services from February 7 to 20. Services were held each evening at the church with fair attendance considering the bad weather. One cottage meeting was held in Butler, Pennsylvania.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLORADO.—Elder J. D. Curtis is pastor of the branch.

On November 2, Harold N. Schneebeck was ordained to the office of priest, and on December 20, Ray C. Ebeling, who has been a priest, was ordained to the office of elder.

The priesthood has been very active in the past year, baptizing thirty-two since the middle of January. Brother Curtis has blessed seventeen children and married four couples.

There are two active women's groups in the branch. The women's department, under the leadership of Mrs. W. W. Poe, meets twice each month in the homes of the members. The study group meets one evening each month with Mrs. Lorraine Hammer as their leader. Both groups are studying Sister Blanche Mesley's book, I Witness for Christ.

The Zion's League is very active under the leadership of Brother and Sister Harold N. Schneebeck.

Brother Curtis presented the Graceland Day sermon and a special offering was taken.

A special prayer service was held Thanksgiving Day.

The children of the junior church gave a Christmas program after which treats were given them. Brother Curtis presented the Christmas sermon and a special offering was received.

The Sunday evening study class is well attended and much interest has been shown. The course of study pertains to the New Testament.

The women's groups are sponsoring vesper services.—Reported by Mrs. W. W. POE.

ODESSA, TEXAS.—The Odessa Mission and the Staton Group met November 12 at the Cloverdale Park for a barbecue. Sermons were delivered by Elder Iral Parker and Priest Otis Baker. Sixty-two were present.

The Odessa Saints attended an all-day meeting at Eunice, New Mexico, November 26.

The Odessa and Staton groups met for a two-scene play, "The Wondrous Night," on December 24. A Christmas party was held after the play.

A "Sock Drive" was held to raise money for the building fund.

A business meeting was held February 1, 1951, at the home of Pastor Iral Parker. The group decided on the location of the building soon to be erected.—Reported by Mrs. OTIS BAKER, SR.

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—An ordination service was held at the Mt. Vernon, Illinois, Branch, December 10. Verl Fredrick Moore and Troy Rhine were ordained to the office of deacon. Elder Sylvester R. Coleman was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder W. W. Colvin. Norma Lee Rockett, Opal Fuqua, and Mayona Cramer composed the trio that sang.

An ordination service was held at Marion, Illinois, December 13. The following were ordained to the office of priest: Willis Christy, Norman Jackson, and Charley Kelly. Sister Mildred Atwood was organist. Elder Sylvester Coleman was in charge. Sister Geraldine Cobler presented the solo, "God Send Us Men." Norman Jackson was ordained by Elder O. P. Allen and Priest Ralph Rockett. Willis Christy was ordained by Elder Sylvester Coleman assisted by Elder W. W. Colvin, and Charley B. Kelly was ordained by Elder W. W. Colvin assisted by Elder Lindolph Casey. "A Charge to Keep I Have" was sung as a solo by Sister Meriba Vaughn. The charge was given to the priesthood members by Elder Coleman. Eight members of the priesthood were present.

A group of Saints from Marion and Tunnel Hill met with the Mt. Vernon Saints for the baptism of Harley Lee Throgmorton of the Tunnel Hill Branch. Elder W. W. Colvin was in charge of the service. Prayer was offered by Elder Vernie Whitehead, Elder Lindolph Casey officiated in the ordinance of baptism. Teacher George Wolfe spoke on "The Ordinances of the Church."

Elders W. W. Colvin and Lindolph Casey officiated at the confirmation service which immediately followed the baptism.—Reported by RUBY ELLIS.

being is hopeless or irreclaimable. Our talents and efforts may be insufficient to discover and bring to light the diamond under the rough surface, but we must keep trying. We cannot expect to succeed in all cases, but we can expect to win some of them. To win a few we must try all. The most discouraging prospect may hold the greatest treasure.

We look at the active members of the congregation—the sturdy, dependable ones. Many of them were once cold and inactive. They were changed because somebody cared and would not give up. Others can be changed too.

Let us never forget that the work of the church narrows down to a struggle for the possession of the individual human soul. It is either Christ or Satan who wins. Hell or heaven is the result in that individual victory. We cannot lightly cease the conflict. We must learn to care as much as God does.

If the Lord has sent you to reclaim some cold, indifferent member, go gladly. You have a glorious opportunity of serving God.

If you have not been sent, if you feel no concern to redeem others, if you are not worried about the inactive part of the congregation—you'd better look in the mirror, Brother, because you may see the face of Wimpy there, and Christ may be sending somebody out to retrieve you!

By Margaret T. Applegarth

Here is a new book of suggested worship services and programs—usable, striking, timely—by an experienced, creative writer. Miss Applegarth has chosen and arranged dramatic incidents and stories and presented them in word pictures that enrich the understanding and deepen devotion at the same time.

The twenty-eight complete worship programs are easily adaptable to the many types of services in churches large and small: for morning worship, for special Sundays, for those sponsored by youths' and women's groups, for midweek or Sunday evening services, and even for individual reading. A mine of priceless worship material for the present day.

Letters

This Is Life

Victor Hugo, in the sunset of his life, wrote these glorious words with which many are familiar. "Winter is on my head, but eternal spring is in my heart . . . the nearer I approach the end, the plainer I hear around me the immortal symphonies of the worlds which invite me. It is marvelous, yet simple . . . the tomb is not a blind alley; it is a thoroughfare. It closes on the twilight; it opens on the dawn."

As one moves on in years, it is natural to think more seriously upon life after death, although there are many who in the bloom of life pass into the great experience. As one bids farewell to loved ones about to take off upon this journey, there is sometimes a bit of envy as he wonders about the world beyond.

During a serious illness, I was permitted to take a few steps in that direction, and I recall wanting to travel further into that field of beauty. My escort beckoned me to turn around and I entreated, "But I would like so much to go on. I want to see Blanche." (Blanche Greene, who recently died.)

"You are not prepared to meet with Blanche," the angel replied, and slowly I came back. Thinking of others who have passed through this gate, I rejoiced that they are with God. Our lives here on earth can be so very beautiful if they are filled with acts of service to God and mankind. Then, when the time of departure comes, we too can know that the tomb is not a blind alley; it is a thoroughfare and altogether lovely.

The Revelation of Christ

The Scripture says that to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. This is a special "gift" that has been given to me. Some time after I had been baptized, I was walking up a narrow road. Soon I saw a man coming down the road toward me, and even while we were quite a distance apart, a wonderful power seemed to draw me to him. Upon meeting, he took my hand, and looking down at his hand I saw the nail print. Then I knew he was the Christ. He talked to me and said that I was welcome in his church. This was the most helpful thing he could have said. I am sure he could look down through the years and see that I would have my lessons to learn in life, and that with his help I would be able to live acceptably. I trust that the same power which gave me this gift will bear witness to the truthfulness of my testimony.

A Letter of Gratitude

The father of my children died while they were quite small, but the examples and teachings of some of the devoted members of our church have helped them very much. Among those to whom I owe deep appreciation are E. Burt, R. D. Weaver, Jesse Shelley, R. Jones, Homer and Byron Doty, Robert Morrisson, James and R. D. Davis, the Brackenburys, the Wirebaughs, the Bletts, Brother Silvers, Sister Addie Brown, and my own brother Milo. Two of my sons, William and Carlton, have been ordained to the office of priest. My second husband, whom I married seventeen years ago, also joined the church and now is a deacon. I am grateful to have so many in my family serving the church, and I am glad that I have been able to help by teaching in the Sunday school. There are many souls yet to be won to the gospel. May we all be found ready when our call comes to go to our heavenly home.

A Letter of Appreciation

I am grateful to those who responded to the request for prayers for my husband a few months ago. He was suffering from the effect of a cerebral hemorrhage, but is regaining his health again. He received many letters of comfort, which helped him much.

Being an isolated member, I hunger to hear the message I love so much. Yet I am never alone, and always in my hours of greatest need God has blessed me.

I pray this year may bring us closer to the kingdom. Let us keep Christ in our hearts and continue to work faithfully that we may be found worthy when he comes.

Helped by "Herald"

My back issues of the Herald arrived in a bundle at a time when I needed them most. The first one I picked up was the January 1 issue; I immediately read "Submission to God." I have gained wonderful strength from articles I have read, even though I have recently had a great sorrow in my life—almost more than I can bear.

My eyesight is so bad I can read only a short while at a time, but I plan to read everything in the Herald. I am also finishing The Call at Evening, although I have read it many times before. I am thankful for the church literature and all who make it possible.

A Unique Conversion

I am so glad that my wife and I found this church. We came to America from Germany in 1890 and were married in 1894. We were blessed with seven sons and two daughters—all our children and grandchildren belong to the church, and two sons are high priests.

We were originally members of the Lutheran Church, but some relatives of ours urged us to investigate the Reorganized Church. One evening after supper my wife left for a while, and when she returned she said that while she was praying, the Holy Spirit came in the form of a dove and spoke to her: "Today, if you hear the word of the Lord, do not harden your heart." We were glad to receive this message and one week later were baptized. My wife died on April 6, 1945.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, and I also hope those who read this letter will remember my grandson, Walter Penny, Jr., who has been an invalid since the last war. He is a patient in Wadsworth Hospital. My son Andy is afflicted with rheumatism.

I pray we may all live faithfully to the end that the Holy Spirit may guide us to resist temptations of the adversary. May God bless his people everywhere.

Blessed in Abstaining From Coffee

At home we children were allowed to drink coffee, often drinking two cups each meal. I can remember always having a pain over my heart, but was never able to determine the cause of it. Shortly after my baptism I heard the Saints talking about not drinking coffee, tea, and cocoa. One morning I made my breakfast of toast, egg, and coffee, and sat down to eat. After finishing my breakfast I noticed that I had not touched my cup of coffee, and at that moment I decided to quit drinking it right then.

Later, after moving to Independence, I was offered a drink of something that looked like coffee by one of my neighbors. She assured me that it wasn't coffee, that it had 97 per cent of the caffeine removed and that it wouldn't hurt me. I drank with her and immediately that same pain over my heart returned. I had forgotten all about the pain I had once had, and I determined then that if it returned from drinking just one cup of coffee that I would never drink another drop.

My testimony to those who are putting off baptism because of their bad habits which they cannot reconcile with a Christian life is that God will give them strength to overcome if they will but put their faith and trust in him and are determined to please him.

Note of Thanks

I take this opportunity of thanking all who sent cards and letters to me. Two of them—one from Jane Kernan and one from Mae Richards—had no return addresses, so I must use this means to express my gratitude. I am feeling much better and thank the Saints for their prayers.

From an Isolated Member

I enjoy reading the articles in the Herald; many of them seem to have been written especially for me. Since I am alone, the task of rearing my three children is difficult, but it is made easier by the encouragement of my friends and neighbors and the inspiration of the written word. God has been good to me, too, and he seems ever near when problems or trials arise.

Since I am unable to attend many services and have long evenings at home, I would appreciate hearing from any other members who would care to write. I would particularly like to correspond with some of the people who used to write to me before my marriage (I was then Martha Hartman of Hummelstown, Pennsylvania). I'd especially like to hear from the person who used to send me poems.

Importance of the Book of Mormon

I was privileged to sit in the company of the Saints and hear some of the messages given, testifying of the Book of Mormon, this portion of the gospel given to the Gentiles in these latter days.

As the institute progressed I became conscious, as never before, of what God wants me as an individual to do—to go among my neighbors and friends, telling of this added testimony of Christ's divinity.

Always the Book of Mormon had been a stumbling block to those to whom I wished to bring the story of our church. It seemed to be something they could not or would not believe. One speaker told us, "God shuts the curtains of the mind of the unbeliever, the scoffer, the cynic. Only by honest effort—at least a little grain of desire to believe—will God help his darkened mind to see the light, help to set his feet upon the path, and place his groping hand upon the rod of iron."

Many by their rejection of this sacred record condemn themselves and receive a lesser reward. For without a full knowledge of God's Word, we cannot expect to come into a fullness of glory, or have an estate with the Father of Light.

Let us give all to the cause of Christ. Let us by our loving patience and our firm persistence attempt to help remove the doubt and fear which keep those about us in bondage. Let us try to create a desire for knowledge and a fuller understanding of God's purposes for those living in this day and time.

From a "Free-Lance" Missionary

I believe that if some members of the priesthood could visit in the Los Fresnos, Texas, area they could interest several persons in the church. I could direct them to a schoolhouse I am sure they could get to hold services in, and I could supply a list of names of people to whom I have already given church literature.

While traveling on the train recently, I was able to tell a number of people about the gospel by placing tracts on the arm of my seat. When they walked by, many would ask about the tracts, which gave me an opportunity to present the story of the church. One man later sent me $10.00 and a Christmas card carrying the message, "Merry Christmas and God bless you, Mr. Cadow." I have used the money to purchase more tracts.

Texas is a wonderful field for missionary work. If I were younger I would go back there to "follow up" the contacts I have made, but I am unable to do so.

To the People of Central Missouri Stake

After being reared in Central Missouri Stake, I found it a little hard to bid all of our friends goodbye at the last stake conference we attended as part of the official family of the stake.

I was born in the stake, baptized in one of the congregations, acquired most of my education there, and in stake activities met the young man who later became my husband. We were married in Holden, one of the congregations in the stake. Before our marriage and after the ceremony, all of our service to the church was in this stake.

But we do not leave the stake in sorrow. Now that our little daughter is five years old, we are happy that we can attend one branch, where she, like other children, can attend the same class every Sunday. My husband has been director of religious education in this district since before our daughter was born, so her Sundays have been hard—up early, riding from twenty-four to two hundred miles with us to attend church school, church services, and staff meetings.

We had prayed for direction as to the place and course of our service, particularly from consideration of our child's welfare. Our prayers were answered. Not at any time did we want to be the one to decide to leave our stake activities, as long as we were needed.

We owe much to the good people in Central Missouri Stake, and they will always have a warm place in our hearts. However, since we were not baptized into Central Missouri Stake, but into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, we will continue to serve to the best of our ability wherever we may be.

Note of Thanks

I wish to thank the person responsible for sending me the Herald and Daily Bread. It is an answer to prayer. I have been isolated for nearly fifteen years, and these publications are almost like having a group of Saints come into my home.

I have two children, one twelve and one thirteen years old, who need religious instruction. I do not always feel equal to the task, but with the prayers of my brothers and sisters in the church, I trust I shall be able to rear them acceptably. I hope that I may also help to convert my husband.

Again my thanks to the one who is sending this wonderful gift to me.

"Daily Bread" as a Missionary

I think Daily Bread is just the right name for this church publication. I believe it will prove to be one of our best missionaries.

As I started this letter one of our young church women called to thank me for some back copies of the Daily Bread which I had given her. She lives with a young nonmember friend and has tried to interest her in the church but she feels she has been quite unsuccessful. She told me today that she thought Daily Bread will be the "ice-breaker." Her friend has read two copies all the way through and suggested that they read a thought together each day.

When we must send a gift I can think of nothing better than Daily Bread. I enjoy it thoroughly, and I want to share it with as many people as I can.

Persons in the News

The Andersens

THE CHURCH is benefited by those who can actively serve in branch life and find time to participate in community projects as well. Such persons are High Priest Howard P. Andersen and his wife, the former Carol M. Williams, who have recently received honors for their efforts in Scouting work.

Brother Andersen, the son of the late Apostle Peter Andersen, served as president of the Kansas City Area Council of Boy Scouts in 1949, and is at present chairman of its board of directors. He is an honorary chieftain of the tribe of Mic-O-Say, the honorary camping fraternity of the Council's Camp Osceola. He received the Silver Beaver award in 1943.

Sister Andersen was elected president of the Pioneer Trails Area Council of Girl Scouts for 1951. This area includes all of Jackson County outside of Kansas City; about 1,165 registered Girl Scouts and 321 adult leaders are in the area. The Council makes effective the National Girl Scout program. At the installation dinner, January 8, Sister Andersen received the ten-year service pin, and Brother Andersen also received a five-year service pin for work with the Girl Scouts in an advisory capacity.

Brother and Sister Andersen are active participants in the Stone Church congregation. He is now chairman of the finance committee for the new educational building fund. He is also a member of the Standing High Council, the Board of Publications, and has served a six-year term as a member of the Graceland College Board of Trustees. Sister Andersen not only serves as secretary and treasurer of her women's group, but is active in P.T.A. work and formerly served as a Gray Lady at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Their fifteen-year-old daughter, Lynda, is a sophomore at William Chrisman High School where she is active in extra-curricular activities. Dick, their son, recently has been placed under church appointment. An Eagle Scout, Dick has been very active in Scout work. He was one of the boys privileged to attend the International Scout Jamboree held in France in 1947 and served as an aide to the national staff at the recent National Jamboree held at Valley Forge. A Graceland graduate of 1949, Dick will graduate from the University of Kansas in June and will be assigned to his field then.—By BARBARA PEAVY.

Landscaping The Farm Home

By Mrs. Kelton Shipley

WITHIN RECENT YEARS there has been a commendable trend among farm people to beautify their homes by properly planting shrubs, trees, and perennials; but even yet we find many barren yards as we travel throughout the country. When we consider the average income of most farm families, and the relative cheapness of fine shrubs and ornamental trees, we can hardly blame this barrenness upon a lack of funds. And when it comes to perennials—well, a sincere lover of flowers can always find neighbors who would gladly share their iris, peonies, coreopsis, phlox, Shasta daisies, and chrysanthemums. In fact, any neighbor who has a well-established perennial row or garden is really glad for such a privilege, for all the above named flowers, with perhaps the exception of peonies, need to be divided and reset at intervals of three years for best results. People, as a general rule, are able to afford at least a small amount of landscaping, but they may lack knowledge of where and how to start.

Trees and shrubs need a few years to grow before they are capable of showing much for the money spent on them, but if they are properly chosen, set out, and tended they will well repay for the care given them. Reliable nurseries list many fine specimens. Each family will differ in its choice of plants, but here are a few that have been found to be most gratifying, in beauty as well as in ease of culture:

Chinese Elms, for quick growth where shade trees are needed, or for a lacy, green background. We have a north fence row of these trees, grown from mere switches (given to us), which we set out a few years ago. We prize this row very much. They have never been pruned, so the foliage goes to the ground.

American Elm, for enduring beauty and shade. Fourteen years ago this summer when I was cleaning the backyard soon after we moved here to our home, among the tangled mass of weeds, tall grass, and woven wire, I found a tiny American Elm, straight and beautiful. Carefully, I cleaned out all debris around it, giving it a chance to grow, and now it is a big shade tree under which our small children play. Money would not buy this tree from us.

Lilacs, for the screening along the backyard fence. We originally bought some hybrid French lilacs, and a good neighbor gave us some sprouts of her common lilacs. They grow slowly, but they have bloomed every year since the first. We live on Grand River bottom land, so occasionally a late freeze nips our lilac buds, but even then, the bushes remain for greenery during the summer. Another thing that we have had some trouble with is the borers in the hybrids. We have felt that the use of wood ashes at the base of the bushes has helped to check these. Just a hint, too—if you secure sprouts from friends, be sure they are from a blooming bush, that is, one that blooms freely year after year. Otherwise you may have a nice green bush but no bloom. The hybrids are profuse bloomers, and the blossoms are lovely. We can recommend them to any farm family as an easily grown shrub.

Red Barberry, for contrasting color, and for a low, natural growing hedge. We are all especially fond of our row of barberry which marks the division between front yard and back yard. As a rule the only trimming it ever needs is the removal of occasional dead sprigs. One winter, however, we had a temperature of thirty degrees below zero for a few hours, and that evidently was too much for our barberry, for in the spring we had to trim a few bushes almost to the ground. They quickly grew new tops from the old roots, though.

Spirea Van Houttei for quick growth and beauty. Most all people are familiar with this shrub. We have found it hardy, even at thirty degrees below zero, and it is a sure bloomer. We secured our bushes from a nursery, but if you can find someone with an extra bush, you can divide the clump and have several bushes that will soon grow into a graceful, blooming hedge or into beautiful individual specimens. My husband's brother chose the latter method of getting his start, and found it very satisfactory and easy on the pocketbook too. He dug up one old clump in his father's yard, then he divided it into eight or ten small clumps with an ax. Now these bushes have grown into a row of beautiful shrubs. Always prune the original bush to within a few inches of the ground before digging, if using this method. This will make it easier to handle, and insure growth.

Sumac, for autumn color contrast. There is nothing more beautiful than the bright reds and yellows of wild sumac, so if you cannot afford to buy the cultivated varieties, dig up some of the wild ones along the roadside and set them among the other shrubs in a corner or along a fence. Our staghorn sumac spreads by roots, sending up numerous new plants each season. If you have a friend with a start of sumac, let her know ahead of time that you would appreciate a plant, and I'm sure she will be glad to furnish you one. Every summer I throw away plants, not only of sumac, but also of other shrubs and flowers, because there is no one on my "waiting list"—and believe me, it is a hard thing to do.

Sweet Pea Shrub, for sheer beauty in a corner or along a fence. We have ours in the corner of our flower garden, and what gorgeous blossoms it has, followed by fuzzy, brown seed pods. This shrub also spreads easily, so we have given away several sprouts to friends and relatives. We especially recommend it to farm families. It grows from four to six feet tall, like a neat little tree, and starts blooming when it is one year old.

Old-fashioned roses, for a combination shrub and flower. Unless you have time to trim properly old-fashioned ramblers and keep them under control, I would advise against them, for they can soon become messy looking, thus spoiling the beauty of their blossoms. Here in our locality, all roses need frequent spraying. Our old-fashioned roses were given to us. They spread profusely, and need to be thinned out each year or so.

Home Column

Iris, for sure bloom and ease of culture, in a row, or any place. Most any one with iris is glad to divide with others who love flowers. All of our iris has been given to us by relatives. We have at least twenty different colors. No other flower can give more beauty for such little care. Again I urge that you let your friends know if you want flowers, and let them place you on their waiting list. It will save time. Do not plant the iris too deep if you want blooms. They require no mulching. Just keep them free of grass and weeds, let them have plenty of sunshine, and they will do the rest. Their exquisite beauty will cause you to love them.

Peonies, another sure-bloomer with practically no care. We fell heir, so to speak, to some gorgeous, huge peonies which had been raised from seed. If you realize how slowly the seedlings grow, you can imagine why we prize these huge clumps as rare treasures. My husband's father bought a farm which he intended to use only as a pasture, and it was on this farm that the peonies had been lovingly grown by a Mr. Wake. We dug up the clumps in early spring and set them out undisturbed, with the good results that they bloomed the first year. I would suggest you get peony roots in late August or September.

Phlox, for late perennial blooms. There are many fine varieties listed in the seed catalogs, but you may get a start from a friend. We got our first collection of seven different colors from a nursery. In a few years we had a mass of new plants which had come up from seeds, an unusual thing to happen in perennial phlox. We did not know that the seedlings would not be true to the original color, so it was not long until we had lost a few of the first plants by confusing them with the seedlings. However, we have had some gorgeous blooms from the seedlings, and they make husky plants. We save the bright-flowered seedlings, and discard the small, pale-flowered ones. We are getting a fresh start of phlox from the nursery, and we will be more careful about mixing the seedlings with the original plants. We can heartily recommend this flower as a sure bloomer for the farm home.

If you are gentle, you will probably receive gentleness in return.

If you smile at the world it is likely to smile back at you.

If you want to be slapped, merely offer a slap.

And if you want a smile, offer one.

If you dash into a thorny tangle, and seek to force your way through, the thorns will retaliate.

The Gift of Human Kindness

By Evalina Gustin

SEVERAL YEARS AGO I lived with my family in Independence, Missouri. Our circumstances were such that every penny had a niche to fit it even before it was received, leaving none for unexpected emergencies.

We had two little girls, one just old enough to crawl and the other two years old, making considerable laundry. I had to go next door to do my washing, and one winter day I found I'd have to leave the babies alone. I decided I would check on them between machinefulls. The machine was just started when I checked and discovered the baby had somehow cut a large gash between thumb and forefinger on the left hand. I had nothing that would properly hold the wound together to stop its bleeding.

I made hurried preparation and a neighbor kept my older daughter while I carried the baby two blocks to the bus line to go to a physician. We waited and waited while a blinding snow beat against us. A taxi stopped and the driver informed me that the bus was not running. I showed him the baby's bandaged hand, and his two customers told me to get in.

The customers were two teen-age girls whose destination was soon reached. I had thanked them for sharing their taxi but when we arrived in the business district and I asked what my fare was the driver said, "The girls paid that! I thought you knew." I never got to thank them personally, but their good deed left me enough change for a taxi home.

I was very young and unwise in my decision to wash and leave my two babies alone, but I learned my lesson, and I also learned what a wonderful gift human kindness is.

God is a wonderfully understanding parent of the young and has a multitude of tools he employs to help them.

Cowbells for Christians

By Alice Zion Buckley

THERE WAS A STRANGE SOUND in the quiet neighborhood this early summer morning. It sounded strangely as if a cowbell were being pealed down around the curve of the street. The sound came nearer and curiosity got the better of most of the housewives. When they looked out of their windows an amusing sight greeted their eyes. A small boy about two was riding his trike. Ahead of him and seemingly unconcerned went his mother wheeling a small baby in a buggy. Whenever the bell stopped ringing or started sounding in an off direction the mother would stop the buggy and come back to the two-year-old and set him again on the straight and narrow sidewalk. All being well, she would go back to the buggy and start again. As the neighbors watched they couldn't help being amused at the novel way of keeping track of Junior and yet allowing him a certain bit of freedom.

Most of us would get along better if God gave us cowbells. When we wandered from the straight and narrow someone could hear us and come running to haul us back to the right way.

New Horizons

An Open Letter to Young People of the Church

EDITOR'S NOTE: Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., President of Graceland College, recently spent five days in Washington, D. C., and Atlantic City, New Jersey, interviewing educational, governmental, and military leaders to obtain latest information on the military situation as it affects young men and women of college age. This article is a digest of impressions received on that trip. It is one of a series of counseling articles which will appear in this department as a joint service of the "Herald" and Graceland College to the youth of the church.

PROBABLY YOU NOTICED in this morning's newspaper another reference to the proposal of the Department of Defense that eighteen-year-olds be drafted for military service.

There has been a great deal of discussion in Washington about this problem and there will be more before the issue is decided.

I know you are especially interested because it certainly must be taken into consideration in any planning you do for vocation, college, or marriage. During the last few weeks I have talked with a few young people who wonder whether it's any use to make plans. Their feeling is that you do what you are told to do and go where you are ordered to go and there is not much you can do about it. Many of the articles we read in newspapers and magazines and stories we hear over the radio serve to confuse us even more. What is the answer to the question? Does it pay to do some planning?

What Can We Expect?

There are a few definite indications of the direction of the events to come. For instance, we can pretty well assume that the United States of America is not going to dodge its share of responsibility among the family of democratic nations. Our government has varying manpower needs depending upon the interpretation which is given of the best way to assume that share of world responsibility. Estimates of manpower needs for military service are up to three or more million. The policies which our nation is adopting will require a universality of national service. This means that all young men and possibly some young women will contribute perhaps two years of time to the nation.

AT THE PRESENT TIME IT APPEARS THAT THE NEW SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT WILL BE BASED UPON THESE ASSUMPTIONS:

1. We are in for a long-time emergency period with unusual adjustments required.
2. Nearly every young person will give at least two years national service of some type.
3. Our leaders place great value on measures which will insure a constant flow of trained personnel.
4. Practically all areas of study are important as related to the needs of the future.

Another principle we can bank on in our planning is that we are involved in a rather long-time emergency nationally and internationally. Apparently we will not be out of the woods for quite a while.

What Can We Do?

Now, if we are in for a rather long period of unrest, and if we are all to have some share in keeping the boat from rocking too much, what can we do about it?

For instance, what about college plans? It is very clear that our leaders place great value on measures which will insure a constant flow of trained personnel. They know that a nation must not only meet its immediate problems but must take a long view toward the future, so we can expect provision to be made for those who have the interest and qualifications to complete college. Just what the timing will be is not clear yet. There may be a four-months basic training period before the opportunity will be presented for school work; or there may be the chance of entering college and, with maintenance of good grades, being deferred for a period of time. We'll know more about this in the next sixty days. We do know that unless the situation becomes worse quickly, young men who are closer to their eighteenth birthday than their nineteenth, can probably count on entering college this next fall. And there is a pretty fair chance that even those past the eighteen and a half mark can enter.

If the present policy continues, once you are enrolled you can have induction postponed until the end of the year, if you keep up in your work. By the way, a tip for those of you who have finished two years of college work . . . you better get your applications into the university before July 1. If you do there may be some possibility of postponement of induction.

Need for Competent Personnel

Now let's get one thing straight. We are not encouraging you to see if your national service responsibility can be evaded, but we are saying that many of our leaders recognize the need for college-trained personnel and will very likely encourage college work through the new selective act. You will still have a period of national service, but if you do good work in college, it may come after you have finished your college work and may be related to your field of interest in college.

You may also ask what fields of education give the best possibility of deferment. The answer is encouraging. Our nation is recognizing that practically all areas of study are important as related to the needs of the future. Many of our problems today arise from a lack of personnel trained in sociology, psychology, political science, languages, geography, history, and literature, as well as the physical and biological sciences. So choose the field in which you are interested and go to it.

Another thing we are finding is that our present plight may be due in part to lack of a citizenry and leadership which could see far enough ahead to make wise decisions, or having chosen a course of action to establish the disciplined program to achieve those objectives. In other words, we need above all in this world people of quality—men and women who can be about their business with some sense of direction whether it rains or the sun shines.

Set Your Course

We do not have the time as a church and as a world of nations to stop planning and building and growing during this emergency period. Mankind has lived so long in an emergency period that it is getting pretty normal.

I wonder if we can take the long view. Let us assume that we'll have some part to play in national service and that things are going to be pretty shaky for a while. Will it not be better for the nation and certainly for the fulfillment of our own lives, if we make our plans to stay on the job wherever that might be? And if an invitation comes to some other area of activity for a while, we will, with good spirit, do the best we can in those circumstances. Each one of us is here with some purpose, some function, to which we are called. There is no higher aim than to attempt to fulfill our purpose and function.

So I would say, keep on planning. Establish a sense of direction. The person without a rudder is going to do a lot of aimless traveling in the kind of waters we're sailing on. If your board doesn't call you by next September and you are ready for college work, come to Graceland. We believe that Graceland can provide a strength of fellowship and establish a foundation for building a life which is especially needed now. We are intending to be in business here next year with young people of the church from Japan, Australia, Hawaii, England, Holland, Ecuador, Canada, and the United States, and possibly Germany. To this community life we would welcome you.

GAZETTE

PRESIDENT E. J. GLEAZER and R. Edwin Browne, Director of Public Relations, have been granted leaves of absence by the Board of Trustees. President Gleazer was granted a year's leave starting June 15 when he and his family will move to Cambridge, Massachusetts, where he will continue his graduate work at Harvard. He is working for a Doctor's Degree in educational administration. Doctor Cheville, Dean of Faculty, with the assistance of the Administrative Council, will carry the presidential responsibilities.

R. Edwin Browne, also accompanied by his family, will take a semester's leave starting February 1. He will continue his work on his Master of Arts degree at the University of Kansas, where he was formerly Director of Public Relations. He will major in journalism with emphasis on public relations.

The Graceland music department presented a formal student recital in the Memorial Student Center on February 2. All advanced music students appear in one or more of these recitals during the year to gain experience in public performance. Those appearing in this one were Ilene Sheehy, organist, Greeley, Colorado; Erleta Covalt, violinist, Los Angeles, California; Maurice Bottom, baritone, Lansing, Michigan; Harold Keairnes, pianist, Kansas City, Missouri; Gordon Wilder, tenor, Lansing, Michigan; Margaret Holman, organist, Independence, Missouri; Fred Worth, organist, Independence, Missouri; Glendora Rieske, soprano, Lewisburg, Ohio; and Kenneth Noland, pianist, Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Graceland will play a football game with Compton College on the weekend of September 28 under terms of a contract signed recently. Compton, a junior college in Compton, California, which enrolls about 5,000 students, has in recent years consistently ranked in the top ten in national junior college competition. This will be the first time a Graceland team has played Compton and the trip will be the longest that a Graceland team has ever made. If Graceland had been chosen to play in the Junior Rose Bowl two years ago, Compton is the school she would have met.

The Graceland Sinfonietta, under the direction of William Graves, presented its first formal concert of the year on January 19 in the Memorial Student Center. The Sinfonietta, now in its first year, replaces the old Lamoni-Graceland Orchestral Society. Made up of a small but skilled body of musicians and emphasizing the strings, it is admirably suited to the performance of works from the Baroque and Classical periods. The program included Cowell's Hymn and Fuguing Tune Number 2; Corelli's Concerto Grosso Number 8; Hindemith's Pieces for String Choir, Opus 44, Number 3; Philidor's Overture to Les Femmes Vengees; and Haydn's Symphony Number 2 (The London Symphony).

DEATHS

SNIDER.—Harry Daniel, son of Daniel Webster and Rose Snider, was born August 20, 1885, at Weir City, Kansas, and died January 28, 1951, in Independence, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 24, 1904, at Fairland, Oklahoma (then Indian Territory). On December 24, 1910, he was married to Mary Elizabeth Hensley; four children were born to them. In 1906 he moved from Weir City to Independence, in 1912 to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and in 1922 back to Independence, where he spent the remainder of his life. By trade he was a painter. His favorite avocation was reading, and the Bible and Book of Mormon were among his best-loved and most-read books.

He is survived by his wife, Mary, of the home; two daughters: Mrs. Marian Roe Staton of Kansas City, Missouri, and Mrs. Maxine Lorraine Evanoff of Tulsa, Oklahoma; two sons: Harry D., Jr., of the home and John Wesley, who lives near Independence; two brothers: Robert and Claude Snider of Independence; and four grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Stone Church, Elders Glaude A. Smith and L. F. P. Curry officiating. Interment was in the Salem Church Cemetery.

KEY.—Dorothy Horr, was born October 12, 1912, at Bronson, Iowa, and died January 12, 1951, in San Bernardino, California. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of eight, and on June 9, 1936, was married to Harvey D. Key. She had lived in California since 1921.

Besides her husband she leaves a son, Harvey, seven years old; two sisters: Mrs. Audentia Hull and Mrs. Florence Criddle of Torrence, California; and her stepmother, Mrs. Estelle Horr of San Bernardino. Funeral services were held at the W. A. Brown and Son Mortuary, Elder George H. Wixom officiating.

TYSON.—David Henry, was born November 24, 1894, in Chicago, Illinois, and died January 5, 1951, in Los Angeles, California. Little is known of his early life, but on May 27, 1934, he was converted to the Reorganized Church at Central Los Angeles Branch. In April, 1939, he was ordained to the office of deacon. Later transferring to Pasadena Branch, he served as treasurer and bishop's solicitor in addition to his work as deacon.

He leaves no immediate relatives. Funeral services were conducted by Stake President G. E. Tickemyer. Interment was in Inglewood Park Cemetery.

SWANSON.—George Lee, was born December 15, 1867, at Wentzville, Missouri, and died January 2, 1951, at St. Joseph Hospital in St. Charles, Missouri. He was married to Mary Tyler Hughs, and three children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since July 29, 1945.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Mrs. Francis Trask of St. Charles; two sons: Charles of St. Charles and Hugh of Jacksonville Beach, Florida; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church, Elder F. F. O'Bryan officiating. Interment was in Oak Grove Cemetery.

HARPER.—Mary Childerson, wife of the late Frederick Harper, died January 27, 1951, in Aiden, New York. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood and was active in the Buffalo, New York, Branch.

She leaves a daughter, Mrs. Ethel Mae Brewster of Pleasant Hill, Missouri, and a son, Frederick Harper of Aiden. Funeral services were held at the Frantz and Meyer Mortuary in Aiden, Elders Harold Van Buskirk and P. L. Weegar officiating. Interment was in Evergreen Cemetery, Aiden.

LOGAN.—Benjamin Franklin, was born October 5, 1860, at Holton, Maine, and died January 12, 1951, at Salem, Oregon. On March 13, 1897, he was married to Dottie M. Good, who preceded him in death on April 12, 1933, at Los Angeles, California. During the Spanish-American War he was a major in the Army, serving in this office for eight years. Later he was assigned to work with the Government Indian Service in Colorado and Wyoming. After that he became an employee of the Simmons Corporation, where he worked until his retirement at the age of eighty-five. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since February 15, 1948. He was also a member of the Hesperia Masonic Lodge. Since 1933 he had made his home with Mr. and Mrs. William C. Swain. His only survivors are four nieces and one nephew.

SELLERS.—James William, was born November 20, 1866, at Calvert City, Kentucky, and died January 28, 1951, at his home in Springfield, Missouri, after several months' illness. At the age of thirteen he moved from Kentucky to Missouri, where on December 21, 1902, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church. On October 8, 1905, he was married to Ida J. Jerrell; five children were born to them. One child preceded him in death.

He is survived by his wife, Ida; three daughters: Mrs. Maggie DeWitt of Bois D'Arc; Mrs. Edna DeWitt and Mrs. Helen Binkley of Springfield; a son, John C. Sellers of the home; twelve grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren. The funeral was held at the Klingner Chapel, Elder Arthur E. Starks officiating. Burial was in Green Lawn Cemetery.

WARD.—Ruby Anderson, daughter of Elder Edward and Mrs. Emma Anderson, was born at Lebeck, Missouri, in 1892, and died December 7, 1950, in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in her childhood. In 1911 she was married to Algot Ward; two children were born to them: Mrs. Marion Pippin of Saskatoon and Elmer Ward of Sutherland. Also surviving are eight grandchildren: four brothers: Robert Anderson of Forest Grove, Oregon; Byron Anderson of Shellbrook, Saskatchewan; Louis Anderson of Independence, Missouri; and Victor Anderson of Saskatoon; and three sisters: Mrs. Grace Nunn and Mrs. Bertha Anderson of Forest Grove, and Mrs. Alice Gould of Muskegon, Michigan. Funeral services were held in Saskatoon, Elder J. A. Gendron officiating.

HENDERSON.—Louisa Bella, was born at Plainwell, Michigan, in 1872, and died December 21, 1950, at Rosetown, Saskatchewan. She was married to Alex Henderson, and in 1923 was baptized into the Reorganized Church.

Five children survive her: Mrs. Anna Kingwell of Rosetown; Mrs. Maud Hares of Herschel; Lawrence of Cheyenne, Wyoming; Mrs. Olive Mogg of Vancouver; and Frank of Kelowna, British Columbia. She also leaves thirteen grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren. Elder J. A. Gendron conducted the funeral service.

BUDWORTH.—Wilford William, son of Isaac N. and Sarah Ketrner Budworth, was born January 19, 1858, in Wisconsin, and died January 2, 1951, in San Bernardino, California. On December 24, 1883, he was married to Arabelle Parscal; twelve children were born to them. While living in Oklahoma he heard of the Reorganized Church and was baptized in May, 1899. In July, 1911, he was ordained a priest. Following the death of his wife, Arabelle, in February, 1947, he married Grace Turned in August, 1948, who survives him.

He also leaves four sons: Robert I. of Ramona, California; Benjamin H. of Sebastopol, California; Walter and Clarke of Los Angeles, California; seven daughters: Edna Brinkerhoff and Hazel Budworth of San Bernardino, California; Dora Curley of Long Beach, California; Hester Valen of Canogo Park, California; Rhea Notmeyer of San Francisco, California; Carrie Lampman, and Bessie Rumor of Los Angeles. One son died in infancy.

BUNDY.—Charles Andrew, was born August 15, 1881, in Le Seul County, Minnesota, and died suddenly on January 6, 1951, at the home of his son, Harold, in Warba, Minnesota. In 1889 the family moved to Otter-tail County, Minnesota, where Charles grew to manhood. On November 19, 1902, he was married to Catherine Vail; one son was born to this union. Following the death of his wife Catherine on January 21, 1933, Mr. Bundy was married to Emma Eggabroaten in 1938. She preceded him in death in February, 1947. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since April, 1914.

Besides his son Harold, he leaves a stepson, Edward Pulford of Richville, Minnesota; a stepdaughter, Mrs. Ruth Cheney of Arlington, South Dakota; two sisters: Mrs. Lottie Zuelsdorf of Independence, Missouri, and Mrs. Leola Henneman of Moorhead, Minnesota; two grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, and eight stepgrandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Baptist Church near Richville, Elder Courtney Rotzien officiating. Interment was in the Richville cemetery.

COLLINS.—William E., son of William H. and Sophia Collins, was born August 30, 1901, at Flint, Michigan, and died December 3, 1950, at Leon, Iowa. On March 10, 1928, he was married to Camilla Holben. After baptism into the Reorganized Church, he was ordained in 1929 to the office of priest and later to the office of elder and high priest.

He is survived by his wife; four children: Hale, Vivian, David, and Robert; a brother, Bob, of San Juan, Texas; his stepmother, Mrs. Ida B. Collins of Oakland, California; and a stepbrother, Fred C. Hutchins of Flint, Michigan. Elder Arthur Lane conducted the funeral service. Burial was in the Lamoni, Iowa, cemetery.

HUDSON.—Sarah Melsina, daughter of James and Katherine Coop, was born February 1, 1871, at Keokuk, Iowa, and died January 13, 1951, at the Independence Sanitarium after three weeks as a patient there. At an early age she moved with her parents to Kansas, where she spent most of her life. On January 6, 1889, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church and on October 25, 1890, was married to George W. Talmage. Three children were born to this union; one of them, Mrs. Ethel Williamson, preceded her mother in death. On November 20, 1898, she was married to H. A. Hudson; seven children were born to them. Two sons, Ernest and Elmer, preceded her in death. After moving to Independence in 1943, she was active in Social Service Center work.

Surviving are two sons: Chester Hudson of Eureka, Kansas, and Charles Hudson of El Dorado, Kansas; three daughters: Mrs. Ida Eye of Independence; Mrs. Ruth Owsley of Odessa, Missouri; and Mrs. Grace Drennan of Dodge City, Kansas; a brother, Earl Coop of Colorado; two sisters: Mrs. Myrtle Haskins of Oregon and Mrs. Etta Holman of Kansas City, Missouri; forty-one grandchildren and thirty-eight great-grandchildren.

BRUMM.—Byron Isaac, son of William and Helena Brumm, was born March 12, 1894, at Kingston, Iowa, and died January 8, 1951, at Fort Madison, Iowa. He was married on December 23, 1922, to Mabel Edna Cooper. A member of the Reorganized Church, he served as an elder for a number of years. He was also past master of the Claypoole Masonic Lodge and past patron of the Diamond O. E. S. chapter. During World War I he served from June 24, 1918, to June 5, 1919, as a corporal in the Army.

He leaves his wife; two brothers: Clayton of Mediapolis, Iowa, and Burton (his twin) of Burlington, Iowa; and one sister, Mrs. Ruth Friedeman of Alexis, Illinois. Funeral services were conducted at the Reorganized Church, Elders D. J. Williams and Ward A. Hougas officiating. Burial was in Hillcrest Memorial Park.

ROBERTS.—Ralph, son of George D. and Alice Roberts, was born on July 8, 1892, near Iowa City, Iowa, and died January 21, 1921, at the Boothroy Memorial Hospital. In 1913 he enlisted in the Marine Corps, from which he was honorably discharged after four years of service. In December, 1917, he was married to Pauline Gales; one daughter was born to them. In 1920 they moved to Ruleton, Kansas, where Mr. Roberts was employed as a section foreman. In 1946 they made their home in Goodland, Kansas, where they were residing at the time of his death. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1921.

He is survived by his wife, Pauline; and his daughter, Mrs. Ernest Middleton of Goodland. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Goodland, Elder E. E. Marolf officiating. Burial was in the Goodland cemetery.

SELBY.—Francis W. was born December 24, 1914, at Detroit, Kansas, and died January 14, 1951, at Chico, California, after an extended illness. As a child he moved with his parents to Burley, Idaho, where he received his education. In 1937 he was married to Ella Rutledge and several years later was baptized into the Reorganized Church. Moving to Chico in 1945, he became affiliated with the Roy Miller Store, remaining there until he joined the police force on May 26, 1949. In September, 1950, he resigned because of ill health.

He is survived by his wife Ella, a daughter Frances Jane, a son Willard Glen, his mother Mrs. Ada Selby of Paradise, California; and three brothers: O. A. Selby of Prospect, Oregon; C. A. Selby of Seattle, Washington; and Paul Selby of Medford, Oregon. Funeral services were held at the Brusie Chapel, Elder H. Dean Hintz officiating. Interment was in the Masonic section of the Chico cemetery.

KENREIGH.—James Allen, was born April 28, 1861, in Ohio, and died December 31, 1950, in Vinita, Oklahoma. He is survived by his wife, the former Henrietta Shaw.

WALLING.—Flora Ida Newman, was born February 25, 1867, and died November 14, 1950, at her home in Denver, Colorado. On June 28, 1893, she was married to Garet F. Walling; they celebrated their sixty-seventh wedding anniversary last summer. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 26, 1893.

She is survived by her husband, Elder Garet Walling; three sons: Frederick of Greeley, Colorado; Ernest and Laverne of Denver; a daughter, Leona, of Denver; eight grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in Denver Chapel, Ward A. Hougas and E. J. Williams officiating. Interment was in Crown Hill Cemetery.

GRISWOLD.—Floyd A., was born August 27, 1894, in Monroe County, Wisconsin, and died December 29, 1950, at Mercy Hospital in Janesville, Wisconsin, from injuries received while working for the railroad. For the past thirty-eight years, he had been a member of the Foreman Veterans Association of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway System. On September 8, 1915, he was married to Lula Fuller; three children were born to them. One daughter, Norma, preceded him in death in 1924. In 1921 he was baptized into the Reorganized Church. Later he was ordained to the office of priest at Wyeville, Wisconsin, and served as pastor there. In 1924 he was ordained an elder, and for twelve years was pastor of the Madison Branch.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Mrs. Chester Mamastal of Madison and Mrs. Duane Covey of Milwaukee, Wisconsin; his aged mother; a sister May of Madison; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were at the Frantehi Chapel, High Priest Frank Mussell officiating. Burial was in Forest Hill Cemetery.

* OUR PLACE OF DUTY

A friend recently brought us this clipping from an unidentified author and publication. To those who are frightened, it may help to bring some calmness of mind.

"In these days of confusion, Dr. MacFarlane said that an event in New England over 100 years ago, when a yellow fog came suddenly and people thought the world had come to an end, was in point and a good thing to keep in mind. The general assembly of the Connecticut legislature was in session. When the fog settled in, there was confusion and wailing. But one man, Abraham Davenport, a legislator, called for order and said: 'My friends, this well may be the day of judgment which my Lord hath ordained or not, I only know that my present duty and my Lord's command is that in the place where he has put me, he shall find me when he comes—bring out the candles.'"

* WORDS

"I have often been caused to wonder at the 'encouraging words' people drop, perhaps unknowingly, that supply someone's deep need. It may be that they are prompted to offer them—who can say? I have marveled at the ways in which some of our needs are supplied. It is one of God's mysteries."—Leona Hands.

* FROM THE YUKON

"I am so happy today I had to write and share our anniversary with you. Two years ago yesterday we started the Sunday school with an attendance of fifty-two children. . . . At Christmas time we had over 160 children on our books and made up Christmas treats for 175. Our first Christmas offering was less than two dollars. This last Christmas the fund, contributed through the year, amounted to almost forty dollars. This made five generous hampers of food for the needy Indian families in town. It is appalling to see such dire poverty in a world we dare call civilized. The people live in crude shelters and tents, and the mercury dips under forty below. . . . A new area has been populated. Suggested a survey to the Padre, and visited the homes, finding eighty-eight children four and over. I enlisted teachers, lined up a graded school, and in one week we had permission to use our lovely little chapel on the base. We opened our new church school last Sunday, with an attendance of seventy children and eight teachers and officers. The recreation hall, known as the Upper Whitehorse Sunday school, convened as usual with about sixty children in attendance there, too. . . . Our chapel on the Air Base is a converted Quonset Hut. It is really lovely inside. There are colored windows. . . . An old-fashioned bell calls our little ones to worship. Here we have a real church atmosphere, and the children respect it. . . . Tonight is prayer meeting night. Where can I go? My heart will be in a little home on Rainsford Road, or in Sister White's living room. If I could attend such a meeting, I would say, 'Pray for us.' . . . I need information and help on girls' organizations. There are fourteen teen-agers here. I will go tobogganing with them this Friday, if it doesn't hit fifty below, as it did last week."—Jean Barnett, R. C. A. F. Station, Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, Canada.

News and Notes

DAUGHTER BLESSED

Apostle and Mrs. Reed M. Holmes announce the birth of a daughter, Dorothy Jewell, born December 20 at the Sanitarium. The baby was blessed February 4 at the Central Church in Kansas City by Apostle C. George Mesley and Elder Lawrence E. Holmes, her grandfather.

ELDERS' INSTITUTE

Elder James Phillips was guest speaker at the elders' institute held at Mishawaka, Michigan, January 20. All the pastors of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District were present with one exception. The district presidency and bishop's agent also attended.

OCCUPY NEW OFFICES

The Music Department and Radio Department have moved into new offices in The Auditorium. The new rooms are decorated in pastel shades and offer much more space for the departments. Brother Weddle, Brother Rock, and staff are now finishing the unpacking and will soon be well established in their new location.

REPRESENTED IN COUNCIL

High Priest Carl Mesle represented the church in the Independence Council of Youth Agencies at the initial meeting January 31. The council will bring into focus the problems of the community in regard to adequate service to youth and the various agencies plan to combine to support the youth. The Boy Scouts, Y. M. C. A., the Independence Ministerial Alliance, the Chamber of Commerce, and our church were some of the agencies. Brother Mesle presented a report from the Mid-Century White House Conference which he recently attended in Washington, D. C.

MISSION ORGANIZED

Central Missouri Stake President Harry Simons reports that a new mission has been started at Carrollton, Missouri, with Kenneth Ward as leader. Forty-one were present at the organization, February 4.

AWARDED HONORS

Several young people of the church received honors in the recent one-act play contest at William Chrisman High School in Independence. Kenneth Curtis was rated the best actor in the contest. Other awards were presented Richard Byrne, Donald Bain, Alice Eastwood, Charles Hield, and Dorothy Ferguson.

MISSIONARY ACTIVITIES

Elder Wayne Simmons is holding four cottage meetings a week among the Latin American people in Kansas City, Kansas, and Kansas City, Missouri. Two meetings each week are held in Kansas and the other two in Missouri. Two nights a week the meetings are held in the homes of Catholic families and the other two nights at the homes of Protestant families. Two meetings each week are conducted in Spanish and the other two in English. The average attendance per night is approximately eight. The meetings have been held for about a month.

SPEAKS TO STUDENTS

President W. Wallace Smith spoke to the students at Iowa City, February 11. His topic was "A Journey Into a Far Land." He visited with the students while there.

Will Smith

SINCE HE BEGAN WORK for the Sanitarium thirty years ago, Will Smith has been a real part of this institution. He holds the title of Building Engineer, but he is more aptly described by St. Paul's phrase, "I am made all things to all men." He is equally dexterous in mending a broken steam pipe or building a specialized piece of equipment for a handicapped patient. "If someone describes it, he can make it," Bishop Deaver said.

In the fall of 1948 Brother Smith was a patient in the hospital for several days. As he began to get well, he had his special wood, imported from Czechoslovakia, brought to his room. Assistant Superintendent Deaver visited him as he was selecting the right pieces for the instrument he was making. "What's this, Brother Smith?" he was asked. "I am going to make another violin. I have another grandchild who does not have a violin, and I don't have much more time to get it done," he said.

Brother Smith will be eighty years old next September 23. He was born in Jonesport, Maine. In 1895 he married Anna French; two daughters were born to them: Mrs. Nellie (E. Y.) Hunker and Mrs. Madelyne Gerard. Sister Smith died a year ago (February 17) after celebrating their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary. She was a good church worker and influenced Brother Smith to join the church.

He is the Sanitarium's oldest employee. He started work when John Chapman was its superintendent and bookkeeper. Two years later Miss Copeland came to head the administration of the hospital. He definitely feels that the Lord directed his coming to Independence. He was previously employed for fifteen years as engineer and machinist. All of his training and experience was put loyally to use at the San, netting it compound interest through the years of the institution's growth.

He was ordained to the office of teacher in 1910 and an elder three years later by Apostle U. W. Greene. He served as counselor to the district president about five years, and church school superintendent for eight years. We like Bishop Deaver's appraisal of the man: "Mr. Smith has always inspired others with his tremendous capacity for work, his friendliness, and his 'know how' for doing things."

Retreat

"And when he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone."

—Matthew 14: 23.

JESUS LOVED PEOPLE. He enjoyed being with them. He taught them, healed their sick, reproved their faults, encouraged them in time of trouble, and pointed them toward the kingdom of God.

But people were continually drawing upon him, making demands on his time and strength. They pressed about him in a throng, as when Zacchaeus had to climb a tree to look at him. They drained his strength, as when a sick woman touched the hem of his garment. They clamored for attention and preferment, as when Salome asked for special favors for her sons, James and John.

There were times when Jesus felt the need of getting away from them to be alone. He needed to escape their strident voices, their selfish, earthy concerns, their importunate requests. He needed a time of quiet when he could listen to the voice of God. He needed to replenish his strength and refresh his spirit at the everlasting fountains of spiritual power.

Jesus practiced the principle of retreat.

* * * *

THE GREAT RETREAT taken by Jesus is described in the fourth chapter of Matthew. For forty days and nights he fasted. The text does not tell us what happened during that time. It relates that at the close of the period Jesus experienced the three great temptations.

We are puzzled by the statement of the King James version, "Then was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." That is quite obviously contradictory, because the temptation did not come during the forty days.

The Inspired Version helps us by saying that he was led into the wilderness "to be with God." That makes sense. The purpose of a retreat is to be with God.

This retreat was a time of decision for Jesus. It is when we must make decisions that our strongest temptations come. When the doors to the future are open, evil tries to make an entry. Jesus stood his ground and rejected the temptations. But the most important part of that whole experience was the fact that he was "with God."

Many of our great spiritual battles are fought out alone—that is without human companions. But the great spiritual powers are there, beckoning us in different directions and toward different fates.

* * * *

THERE ARE TWO FREEDOMS very precious to us: one is the right to go wherever we wish among men; it is access to human society. The other is the right to withdraw from society to some quiet place and be alone.

Our minds grow from contact with other people. We need them, and they need us. We learn from each other. There is a varied richness of personality that is shared, that loses nothing by what it gives, and adds to its resources from what it receives.

But there are times when we become worn and tired. It is not only the mind that must be enriched. The soul has its hungers too. It needs the quiet times, the hours of communion with God.

How we use these two freedoms is very important.

Editorial

MANY PEOPLE have not yet learned the value of a retreat. They do not know its healing power.

In our cities we are surrounded by great numbers of people—hurrying, noisy, desperate, busy, frightened, determined, irritated people. It often seems that there are too many of them. Wherever we turn they are in our way, blocking our path; and we are in their way. We have to change course often to avoid bumping them. Sometimes we collide, and then there are wounded feelings and wounding words. We become nervous, neurotic, frustrated. We get ulcers. (It has become almost conventional for friends to inquire solicitously, "How are your ulcers today?") Some of us just can't stand it and go to pieces.

There is something lacking in our way of life.

Many times we could save our peace of mind, we could make better decisions, we could rest our nerves and come away refreshed and stronger, if we would follow the example of Jesus. We need the times of retreat, not just to be alone, but to be with God. There we can pray over our problems and think about our lives in the Lord's presence.

* * * *

THERE ARE many kinds of retreat. One kind is a vacation. Another may be a car ride in the evening, or a week-end trip. Others are at reunions, for a reunion is a special kind of retreat.

We can pray for a few moments on a bus or street car or while driving along the highway. These are brief necessary retreats. But they are not sufficient for the greater needs. We can meditate and pray in a quiet room at home, if home has one.

Pope Raises "Iron Curtain" Against Rotary

THE WORLD was recently astonished when the Pope of the Roman Catholic Church made an announcement that no priest of that church may henceforth hold membership in a Rotary Club or attend its meetings. And while laymen are not forbidden, they are informed that "The faithful . . . must guard against associations which are secret, condemned, seditious, suspect . . ."

Rotary International is a service organization for business and professional leaders in communities. There are 7,200 clubs in eighty-three countries, with a total membership of about 342,000. They meet for dinner once a week, hear a speaker on some informative subject, entertain visitors, promote civic projects, help the Scouts, engage in Community Chest drives, give scholarships to needy students, and generally try to live by the motto, "Service Above Self." The meetings are as open as those of any good civic organization, visitors are welcome and generally present. Rotary cultivates international friendship and good will, as well as high ethical standards in business and professional life. There is nothing secret, disloyal, or objectionable about it.

A peculiar circumstance is the fact that the President of Rotary International this year is Arthur Lagueux of Quebec, who is also a loyal Catholic. Many clubs have priests and Catholic laymen as members.

FEAR MAY BE THE MOTIVE in the Pope's mind. He may be afraid that some of his members will get "liberal" ideas, that they may be influenced by their Protestant fellow citizens and Protestantism. The Pope may be trying to raise an "iron curtain" between his church and the rest of the world.

If anyone doubts, let him remember the history and attitude of the Roman church toward other organizations. In general, that church recognizes none but church-sponsored organizations like the Knights of Columbus. In cases where it accepts outside organizations, such as the Boy Scouts, it prefers its own troops and controls, which is fair enough. The Roman church has always been very guarded about engaging with other organizations in any joint enterprise. It does not encourage contacts of its members with members of other churches, except for proselytization.

SOME CATHOLICS are saying, "The Pope was misinformed," or badly advised. One would hope that is so, and that a change of the ukase might be anticipated. Such people should remember the Catholic dogma of papal "infallibility." It is more likely that the leopard will change his spots than that the Pope should admit he is wrong. If one understands and accepts the Catholic belief, the Pope was not wrong; his statement is perfectly consistent with Catholic policies for ages.

A relaxation of the order would, of course, be possible. But it would be a greater surprise to the informed reader than the original declaration was.

Some faithful Catholics will sorrowfully obey the order, and some devout Catholics will probably defy it.

In this instance, as in many others, the Roman Catholic pontiff (like many predecessors) is simply reminding the world that it will never be content except with absolute supremacy over all human organizations.

Rotary International will survive this blast. It will grow stronger and continue to add members. Its influence for good in the world will increase. And no real Rotarian is ever going to think less of his Catholic friends because of it, or do anything against them. The Rotary weapons are good will, friendship, and cooperation. They will not change. Rotary will still invite the fellowship of good men of all faiths.

But what will this order do to the Catholic church? How will it affect members? It would seem to the observer that the Pope has struck a blow that will harm—not Rotary International—but his own church.

Reading the Bible in the Public School

SHORTLY AFTER my article entitled "Crosscurrents" appeared in the January 15 issue of the Herald, Sister Vergie Smith, who is a teacher in the high school at Jamesport, Missouri, wrote us concerning her experience in Bible reading. The laws of states differ on the rights and privileges of teachers to read the Scriptures to their pupils, and each teacher should know what the law permits and the attitude of her board before deciding to do this type of teaching. We believe Herald readers will be interested in the following paragraphs of Sister Smith's letter:

For the first time in my high school teaching I am exercising the privilege of reading the Bible daily in my classes, and I enjoy it immeasurably. In fact I enjoy it so much, I think that in making application for another position, I would like to ask if the school where the vacancy occurred were the type which would approve of my reading the Bible. If I receive a negative reply, then I will not accept a position there.

The embryo for my reading the Bible this year came through a W.C.T.U. lady. Since I knew the subject was a delicate one and a disputed one in some areas, I asked my pupils to write a note telling me if they approved my reading from the Bible daily. Only five of the group disapproved.

I tell them I think this is a good disciplinary measure for their minds. I insist that they try to keep their minds on the Scriptures being read, and that they be of the right attitude and mood. Physically, they must be quiet and reverent. Silently (and no doubt this should be audibly) I thank God for the opportunity. I invite his Spirit to attend us, and ask that much good may come from the efforts. If I find anything in the Herald, Daily Bread, "Morning Devotions," sermons, or other sources which I think would supplement the Scriptures read, I also read them. This is not my first year for reading things of this nature.

Israel A. Smith.

The Melting Pot

By Wayne E. Simmons

And it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.—Isaiah 2: 2, 3.

over all is rich unto all that call upon him . . . —Romans 10: 12.

Yet it has remained for the church of the Restoration to proclaim that the Lord must gather the nations of the earth together in one great kingdom of God here in the Americas before peace on earth can be. The God who directed richly in the framing of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, with its Bill of Rights, has directed the Restored Church to offer equity in the gospel of the kingdom, in language contained in the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants.

And he inviteth them all to come unto him and partake of his goodness; and he denieth none that come unto him, black and white, bond and free, male and female; and he remembereth the heathen, and all are alike unto God, both Jew and Gentile.—Book of Mormon, II Nephi 11: 113-115.

Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore, he is not of my church.—Doctrine and Covenants 3: 16.

Many of the early builders of America's concept of freedom and equity dreamed of a great nation where caste and social discrimination should be discarded. They dreamed of an age and time when the United States should unite completely in establishing the postulate as fact that "all men are created equal." However, it is interesting to discover that men such as Madison, the framer of the Constitution; Washington, the leader of the people; and Hamilton the one who did much to place the nation on a solid financial footing, were not willing to believe that the common man could rule or that his voice in government was worth more than casual consideration. These men were aristocrats and believed that such were born to lead. They were succeeded by Thomas Jefferson and other advocates of democracy whom God raised up to establish equity in the land after tyranny had ceased to be an outward foe.

As school children, most Americans are taught something of the vision and desires that gathered early peoples to America's shores. School books contain many stories of colonies founded to establish freedom to worship God, of the coming of a vast assortment of people—rich and bond servant, adventurer, debtor, craftsman, farmer, and teacher. Members of the Restored Church in America are teaching their children of other colonies of peoples who responded to the will of God in coming to these shores in other ages. Latter Day Saints in America have a rich heritage of American history and American colonization beginning two thousand years before Christ's birth, extending unto the present, with a prophecy of projecting forward into the day when Christ shall return to reign over the world. Nephi affirms the rightness of teaching that the American dream of government and the history of its growth is a part of God's plan for building the kingdom of God (See I Nephi 3: 145-200).

A careful student of American history will not be absorbing the demoralizing doctrine of nationalism in studying early American history.

ANY STUDY of the development of the government of the United States offers interesting parallel to the writings of many prophets regarding the establishment of the kingdom of God. Since both have come into being in "the last days," and since both occupy the same land, there is strong evidence that God's hand is many times revealed in both movements. Even as John the Baptist preceded Christ, and as Reformation preceded Restoration, so have come the vision and dreams of statesmen of the infant United States to bring about a society in which the kingdom of God can take root and flourish.

Other nations had also dreamed of a more equitable social order, even as other churches have dreamed of the kingdom. France's dream of a people's government was destined to turn to a nightmare of blood and the guillotine; England's, a slow evolution from feudalism to its present experiment in socialism. Other churches of Christendom have sensed the call to world brotherhood in such New Testament scriptures as these:

[And God] . . . hath made of one blood all nations of men . . . —Acts 17: 26.

Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons . . . —Acts 10: 34.

For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord

He will see the concern of a God of the nations in bringing about the fruition of the kingdom way of life. Much American history is a story of a dream seeking to come true, wherein a society strives to build itself on the principle of equity for all. A recent writer has described this dream of America for all as "The perfection of that state where many national, racial and religious groups will blend their contributions to produce a symphonic ensemble of human culture." This may also be a definition of the kingdom of God.

The Problem of Races

When the United States was young, it was a nation of Anglo-Saxons and Teutonic peoples. But it grew, and today it embraces many races which came in, bidden and unbidden, to share its bounties. One wonders if those who wrote, "We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union" . . . dreamed of the immense diversity of races and peoples in modern America. Perhaps they saw only a few Anglo-Saxons, Teutonic and Irish peoples, and some Negro slaves whom no one thought of as potential citizens. Here is a fairly recent survey of "We, the people":

Sixty million Anglo-Saxons
 Twenty-five million mixed or unclassified
 Fifteen million Teutons
 Thirteen million Negroes
 Ten million Irish
 Nine million Slavs
 Five million Italians
 Four million Scandinavians
 Two million French
 One million each: Latin Americans, Filipinos, Orientals
 One million Greeks
 One-third million American Indians

The motto of the United States, E Pluribus Unum, "from many, one," has not as yet been realized. We Americans are a surprisingly prejudiced lot of people with respect to matters of complexion among races. If we were Jews, with an admonition from the Almighty not to mingle our seed with others, it might be more understandable. Despite our pride in the United States as a melting pot of nations, we have failed, perhaps on a larger scale than almost any other nation, in the matter of holding prejudices against certain races and peoples living among us. We have not yet been able to meet dark-skinned peoples as our equals. Many of us still talk, however unwisely, of segregation or "shipping off to their own country" those colored peoples who never have had any country but this one. Their grandparents were born here. Our tendency to push certain of them into "Jim Crow" ways of life and to bury others of them in reservations, or in city slums, must only postpone the time when they must be socially resurrected and accepted on equal status with us. Other nations, particularly in South and Central America, have done much better in the assimilation of these races than we have.

The church of the last century was aware of the Lord's call to all peoples, and the early Saints moved out zealously to reach the Negro and the Indian, even though the great barrier of slave law separated the Negro from them, and distance, the Indian. Their friendliness to the cause of the Negro undoubtedly brought great persecution to those living in Missouri, and the early missions to the American Indian may have deepened the rift between Latter Day Saints and their frontier neighbors to whom the saying, "The only good Indian is a dead Indian," was gospel.

Times are changing, and much antipathy toward dark-skinned peoples has disappeared. There are no laws which now prevent us, or unsurmountable distances which may impede us in our ministry to these, as well as our other minority groups in this land.

At our last General Conference, when official sanction for a mission to Mexico and to Spanish-speaking peoples was made, a great forward step was envisioned. Latin Americans are a proud people, deeply sensitive to the callous point of view of North Americans toward peoples who fail to correspond in complexion, in customs, or in language. It would be a heart-breaking experience for any of them to encounter the same un-Christian attitudes in the church of Jesus Christ. Undoubtedly, some Latter Day Saints still have reservations toward accepting such races into fellowship, and it is a matter for great concern to the church.

Throughout our congregations, any observer may readily see that nearly all of us are racially similar, even homogeneous—that is, we are mostly derived from Northern Europe, directly or indirectly. In the United States, the Restored Church ought to be gathering a natural increment of Irish, Slavs, Scandinavians, Italians, Negroes, and Latin Americans into its congregations. If we are to be citizens of the kingdom of God, the church should be racially representative of the communities in which its branches stand.

Latin Americans have had reason to view the "American dream" of equity very narrowly. To those of us who have lived in their countries come such questions as these: "If your country believes that 'all men are created equal,' why do you segregate your colored people and offer them, grudgingly, educations in substandard institutions?" "If America is really working at its role as the melting pot of nations, why does it refuse its restaurants and hotels to many of our friends who come to visit you?" There is a little defense we can offer for these criticisms of American life. We can tell them that the American dream of a society of equal privilege is written on the statutes but not, as yet, in the hearts of many of the American people.

Let us not repeat the errors of American culture in the kingdom approach to living. An old colored brother who fellowships with a congregation in Kansas tells of being invited to attend the community Negro church instead of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints group, of which he is a member. When the old man emphatically declined to accept the invitation, his friend became scornful. "What for you want to go to that white man's church?" he asked the old fellow.

"I don't go to no white man's church," was the old man's answer, "I go to God's church."

Our brother stressed a vital point. Whether we be white, black, or brown, we are members of God's church, and none of us have any right of proprietorship.

The Work of the Gentiles

However much we may deplore the apparently haphazard gathering of nations to American shores, in building up citizenry that is quick to race riot and discrimination in peace, and equally quick to receive all alike into its armies in time of war, yet we should realize that God has an orderly plan for the gathering of his people into the kingdom of God. He does not expect us to meet and solve all race problems at the same time in the church. In the Doctrine and Covenants, he sets forth his long-range program in these words:

Lo! It is my will that my gospel shall be preached to all nations in every land, and that men of every tongue shall minister before me.—Section 116: 1.

Yet he cautions the church about the order of the calling of nations and peoples, saying:

... every man in his own order.—Section 116: 4.

There has been order in the gathering of peoples into the church that shall build the kingdom of God. The church has had its beginnings, in this age, among Gentile nations. Like the United States itself, it first consisted of Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic peoples. Doubtlessly, of the original 200,000 estimated membership of the church at the time of the death of Joseph Smith, nearly all must have been of these peoples. No student of the Scriptures can believe that this is all of the Lord's plan—the gathering of a few North European cultural groups. Our church must grow, even as the United States has developed, to take many other peoples and races into itself.

In Lehi's vision, as recorded by Nephi, members of the American nation and of the Restored Church of the present day are referred to as Gentiles. That the gospel should first come to the Gentiles as a prelude to even greater things is affirmed in the following words:

I will be merciful unto the Gentiles insomuch that I will bring forth unto them in mine own power, much of my gospel which shall be plain and precious, Yea, they shall be numbered among the house of Israel; and they shall be a blessed people upon the promised land forever.—I Nephi 3: 183, 202, 203.

Many Saints of the last century called themselves Latter-day Israel and publicly disparaged their non-member neighbors as Gentiles. We ought not to forget that we are Gentiles until we come into a covenant with the Lord in deed as well as in ordinance. The very nature of our covenant to serve him bids us carry out his purposes to the remnant of the house of Israel, to whom Christ gave this promise:

I will establish my church among them [Gentiles], and they shall come in unto the covenant, and be numbered among this the remnant of Jacob, unto whom I have given this land for their inheritance, and they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob; and also as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem. . . . —III Nephi 10: 1-2.

In this, the Lord does not tell us that we are to take leadership, nor does he tell us that we are to be subordinate to the remnant peoples in building the kingdom in this land. We are to "assist" the remnant peoples in building Zion and in carrying the gospel to all their race. The Lord further promises his assistance in the following words:

And then shall they [Gentiles of the covenant] assist my people that they may be gathered in, who are scattered upon all the face of the land, in unto the New Jerusalem. And then shall the power of heaven come down among them; and I also will be in the midst . . . —III Nephi 10: 3-4.

Thus, the Lord has set forth a second step in the gathering of nations. We Gentiles of the covenant are to assist in taking the gospel to the remnant peoples, known to us as the American Indians. It is through the compliance of this commandment that great power is promised the church.

The call to the church to preach in Latin America is in harmony with God's plan for building the kingdom. In Mexico, specifically named as a nation to be contacted early in the mission to Latin America, a great work awaits our ministry. Among its twenty-three million population, twenty million are of Indian heritage, and seven million are pure Indian. Since constitutional law in Mexico bars our immediate entrance into ministry there, we must reach the remnant of Israel living among us. Not only in southern Texas and California do we find great numbers of Latin Americans, but also in many metropolitan areas as New York, Chicago, Detroit, Kansas City, and other cities. The first stage of our mission to these people is to convert and bring into our branches those scattered among us. The way to others in their own lands will be opened to us when we have been alert here to search out and share with them the Book of Mormon and the promises therein contained.

The Melting Pot

In the days of these kings shall the God of Heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever . . . —Daniel 2: 44.

JUST A FEW YEARS after the beginning of the century, the prophet Joseph Smith III, approached the Heavenly Father asking that he might understand the Divine will more fully, more clearly, and more completely concerning the safeguarding of the health of the people in the church. He felt that many promises had been given, the fulfillment of which depended on man's habits of daily living and on the full faith of the people. In response to this appeal he was directed to bring to the Saints a commandment to build a "house of refuge for the sick and afflicted," where enough protection against the world's iniquities would be provided to make possible the attainment of the proper degree of faith conducive to the healing of the sick.

Such an institution has been in existence in the Center Place for some forty years. This Sanitarium has had a twofold purpose; the primary one, to establish within its walls a high quality of living that would be creative of a faith conducive to the healing of the sick; the second, that there might be added the ministry of a trained physician.

Approaching the institution, one sees on the east the older building, the original Sanitarium, completed late in 1909 and now used as the home of student nurses and the School of Nursing. The majority of these student nurses are the daughters of church members and come from all parts of this country, Canada, even from places far across the seas. They attend classes in the classrooms and laboratories, study in the splendid library well provided with books and magazines by the Board of Trustees and the gifts of many friends throughout the land. A beautiful social room and other specialized facilities make the Nurses Home pleasant living quarters.

THE MAIN HOSPITAL BUILDING to the west is a seven-story structure just being completed this year, though mainly finished during World War II. As one enters the front door, he almost immediately senses the spirit of the revelation of 1906 which called the institution into being. At the greeting desk, he finds at all hours of the day and night, sisters of the church who by their attitude and spirit represent both the hospital and the church, welcoming the afflicted and their friends. It is interesting to reflect that these sisters have "gathered" to Zion from Nebraska, Michigan, New York, and Pennsylvania.

Again the ministry in the adjacent Admissions Office is appreciatively felt by the thousands of sick who first sense the feeling of "the refuge," as they are cared for by the kindly ministrations within these portals. The full measure of aid given these sufferers by Sister Maxine Franklin and her aides is well known and appreciated by the Board of Trustees, the superintendent, the attending physicians, and by the patients served.

Adjacent to this busy department is the office of Sister Gertrude Copeland, who has been in charge of the Sanitarium for over a quarter of a century. She came at the invitation of the late President Frederick M. Smith, after training in one of the finest hospitals in Philadelphia and serving overseas with the Allied armies of World War I. Following this she served as a hospital executive in an eastern city. She brought to the Sanitarium the necessary "know how" to permit the great development of these past decades. Through these years she has maintained and administered this "house of refuge for the sick and afflicted." The church owes her much love and appreciation for this long service of noble work.

Bishop Neal Deaver, long business manager at Graceland College and specially trained in hospital management at the University of Chicago, is the assistant superintendent of the hospital. Already the lift afforded by his strong help has been felt.

Sister Nelle Morgan, Director of Nursing since the new building has been occupied, has modernized this work so that it ranks among the best in the State of Missouri. Just recently the Governor of Missouri honored Miss Morgan by appointing her to serve on the Missouri State Board of Nurse Examiners. She has also served as president of the Missouri State Nurses Association.

The professional education of student nurses is guided by Sister Vida Butterworth, educational director. She has the very best of training in nursing education from one of the finest universities in that field. Due to her devoted and continuing sacrifice, this phase of the work is of the highest type. Through the many years, sometimes almost without recognition, she has steadfastly continued to promote the quality of the education given student nurses. In direct charge of nursing service is Sister Shirley Butler, who devotes herself to the care of the sick within the walls of the Sanitarium.

Many others are giving this type of matchless service in the Sanitarium. The supervisors on each floor live a full life of devotion as they develop the work intrusted to them in meeting the requirements set forth in the 1906 message to the Conference. In the nursing school, in the laboratories, in surgery, in the business office, in the dietary department, among the nurse aides, Gray Ladies, and among the mechanics, one finds devoted Saints carrying the gospel message in their own individual and various daily assignments. The kind of work may vary widely, but the spiritual quality is uniformly high. A good illustration of this fact is found in the service given by Will Smith. Thirty years ago, he came from Maine, a highly skilled mechanic, to serve in the Sanitarium. No one, doctor or nurse, has meant more to the successful completion of the Sanitarium's mission than Will Smith and the consecrated men who work with him.

It is impossible to pay full tribute to the many sacrificing Saints who give daily a full devotion in doing their part in attaining the Sanitarium's total objective, the spreading of the message of Christ through our church to the sick and the afflicted.

Since the church has appointed a full-time chaplain, the message of Christ has been carried here as never before. It has been magnificently lived and presented by the men selected to be chaplains, since this particular type of ministry has been added in such full measure.

MOST OF THE SICK are, of course, from the city of Independence, and of these, many are members of the church. Independence has a population of thirty-seven thousand; the Saints number nearly ten thousand. There are sixteen congregations in Zion, and, naturally each of these congregations has some of its sick in the hospital on occasion. Pastors and other officers along with the ministers of the stake, frequently visit these members in the hospital. Kansas City Stake has ten congregations, and many of their afflicted come to the church's hospital; also there are those from the larger centers of the adjoining stakes such as Far West Stake, with St. Joseph, Cameron and Stewartsville; and Central Missouri Stake, with Warrensburg, Holden, and Atherton; Spring River District, with Joplin and Webb City, and Lamoni Stake. In fact, the Sanitarium is within such easy ambulance distance of a very large population of church people that patients come here from all of this peripheral territory in fairly large numbers. As the institution grows and physicians of the church increase in number here, the Sanitarium should care for far more than it now does. The day should not be far distant when the Sanitarium will own ambulances to carry the sick over the splendid system of roads now leading to this institution of refuge in the Center Place.

Up on the floors of the Sanitarium this very day, one finds this distribution of members well demonstrated. On the medical floor is a sister from Port Huron, Michigan, who is here because—being touched by the message of the 1906 revelation—she chose to be among those who understood her religious beliefs, and she wished to be cared for by those whom she believed to be vitally interested in her and her problems. Up in the orthopedic department is a brother from Iowa where the home community's limited facilities forced him to seek a larger hospital; he too wished to be among "his own." From out in Colorado comes another sister who, frightened and fearful, came to the Sanitarium where she felt confidence in those who cared for her. Today a brother came from Stewartsville; last week one from Oklahoma City; last fall one from Plymouth, Massachusetts. It seems but yesterday that there was a sister here from faraway Santa Ana, California, who came as a patient, but who did so much of lasting good that she still daily serves and is daily remembered for her good deeds while here.

The role of the Sanitarium appears to be increasing and spreading as it continues to reach higher into the firmament of its full mission as envisaged by the Prophet and as the attainment of such objectives are made physically possible by splendid road for automobile travel, and now also by air transportation.

THERE LIES IN THE SANITARIUM a full measure of devotion by large numbers of Saints gathered here from all parts of the kingdom who wish to serve. This spirit of service is already in full bloom but is capable of still higher attainment. There is room for many more Saints of spirit-touched personality who have prepared, or will prepare, for assignments. It should give satisfaction and joy to Saints to serve

The Lord's Prayer in the Book of Mormon

EDITOR'S NOTE: Occasionally "Question Time" receives an inquiry from members of our church who have difficulty in reconciling the fact that the Lord's Prayer in the Book of Mormon is different from the Lord's Prayer in the Inspired Version or in the King James version of the Bible.

This is a problem as old as the Inspired Version of the Scriptures and will likely persist for many more years.

The following is based on a letter written thirty-four years ago by R. S. Salyards. We believe that many of our readers will find it helpful.

I HAVE MADE considerable inquiry and given lengthy consideration to the difference in language of the Lord's Prayer in the Book of Mormon and the Inspired Translation of the Bible. I have also consulted some of the brethren who are special students of the Book of Mormon.

I cannot explain just why the rendering in the Book of Mormon differs from that of the Inspired Version. Many theories have been advanced to account for the variation. The leading theory is that the amanuensis of Joseph Smith the Seer, accustomed to the familiar phraseology of King James Version, wrote the prayer as he was accustomed to rendering it, hence the error, if any, crept into the book in that way. Errors have been made in transcription of Bible manuscripts precisely in that manner and have been found and corrected later by scholars and revisers; instances are similar to that previously mentioned, such as copying from memory; also where the copying transcriber has glanced away from the original copy and when returning to it has dropped down to the same word copied, but lower down on the page, thus causing an omission and in some cases an apparently connected sentence. Many other errors have been accounted for, caused by unconscious or apparently unconscious insertion from memory, in transcribing familiar passages of Scripture. Similar difficulties are met in efforts to answer arguments against the Scriptures presented by those who are unbelieving or skeptical concerning its claims.

YOU PROBABLY ARE AWARE that there are two views concerning the translation of the Book of Mormon. An old theory is to the effect that every word of the translation appeared before the Seer in the work of translation. However, the great majority of those who have given thought to the work accept the theory that the Urim and Thummim did not present a literal, verbatim translation, but that it was a means by which the Seer was enabled to comprehend the meaning of the writings and that he was left free to express in his own language an equivalent of the history contained on the plates. This latter theory, if true, would leave a larger latitude for peculiarities of expression, familiar to the translator, or even to the scribe assisting him, by mutual concurrence, to be manifest in the work. Bible students do not generally accept the theory of verbal or plenary inspiration, but believe that the prophet or writer is inspired in mind to express truth—that his individuality is manifest in the style of expression, as witnessed in the varied diction of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and other of the prophets. Indeed, it is one of the evidences of the trueness of the Book of Mormon that, even through Mormon's abridgment, the peculiar styles of expression of the various writers he abridges are manifest—an additional evidence among others that no one or two minds produced the Book of Mormon.

Without doubt the rendering of the Lord's Prayer given in the Inspired Translation is better than that of the King James. However, the rendering of King James and of the Book of Mormon do not necessarily imply a prayer in effect that the Lord under any conditions led the supplicant into temptation. The language may be justly construed to mean "lead us not into temptation [as is our carnal human nature inclined to go], but deliver us from evil," etc. The words, "deliver us from evil," are not to intimate a suggestion of propriety to Deity, but rather express the desire of the one praying to be led according to the Divine ideal and contrary to the carnal. We would be obliged to assume this position or its equivalent in a defense of the King James Version if attacked upon the point by an opponent. The same defense may be made for the Book of Mormon rendering, though it is not an exact duplicate of the King James.

WHILE OUR OPPONENTS have loosely charged that the Book of Mormon contains whole chapters taken from the Book of Isaiah as included in the Bible, examination will disclose that the charge is without foundation. In the renderings of Isaiah by Jacob (III Nephi, chapter 5) and by Nephi (II Nephi, chapters 8-10) will be found 102 corrections or revised readings that are in exact harmony with the Inspired Translation—a very significant feature. The Book of Mormon makes thirty-two omissions that are found to read the same in both the King James and Inspired Versions. There are seventeen revised readings or corrections from the King James version that are not found in the Inspired, that is, they are not found in the Inspired but are revised or improved over the King James—being better in the Book of Mormon. There are only two instances of corrections being made in the Inspired text which are not found in the Book of Mormon—where only two words read as in the King James, instead of as in the Inspired.

One writer has said: "It is noticeable that where the sense of the reading is affected the Book of Mormon agrees exactly with the Inspired Translation." A study of the phraseology of the quotations from Isaiah will make it clear that Joseph Smith cannot be convicted of the charge of copying from the Bible in producing the Book of Mormon.

As has been said by one defender of the book:

The Book of Mormon was translated and published some years before the Inspired Translation was made, and yet it reads very differently from the King James version. . . . The fact that the Book of Mormon does not read as the King James version of the Bible reads, nor exactly as the Inspired reads, but agreeing with it so far as the sense goes, is one of the best indications that Joseph Smith did no copying, either in translating the Book of Mormon or the Bible.

We have no positive proof that either Jacob or Nephi quoted Isaiah's prophecy verbatim as contained in the plates of brass. There are many of the ministry who do not make word for word quotations, and yet do no violence . . . If the quotations were made verbatim . . . we are not assured that there were not some changes made in copying. I understand the Inspired Translation to be a correction and revision by the Spirit of revelation, as well as a translation, and is made to represent the word of God as he gave it; not as it was written, transcribed, or copied from time to time, but corrected so as to properly represent the intelligence of God revealed to his people. God is not so particular about the language that is employed to convey his word to men, as he is regarding the thought and intelligence conveyed by the language.

THE SAME WRITER SAID:

In this our last examination, we began with Abinadi's quotation from Isaiah as found in Mosiah 7: 17, 21; 8: 3, 4, small edition. Then we made a comparison of the teachings of Jesus to the Nephites which was similar to his discourse in the sermon on the Mount, and . . . recorded by Matthew, and also in the book of Nephi 5: 9-13; 6: 1-5; also the quotations Jesus made from Isaiah, Book of Nephi 7: 4; 9: 10, 11; his quotations from Micah, Book of Nephi 9: 12, and from Malachi, Book of Nephi 11: 1-6, resulting in the following discoveries: I found forty-seven corrected readings agreeing with the Inspired Translations; thirty-five instances where readings differed from both the King James and Inspired Translation; twenty-four omissions from readings found in both King James and Inspired translations; three readings transposed, and twenty-four instances wherein the Book of Mormon reads as does the King James and differs from the Inspired Translation. I was a little astonished at these last figures; but upon careful examination I found that nearly all the differences are in the wording and seldom affect the sense of the language.

Only in one instance does there seem to be a direct disagreement between the Book of Mormon and Inspired Translation . . . in what is commonly called the Lord's Prayer.

Taking the text of the Lord's Prayer as given in the King James Version, Matthew 6: 9-13, from the Inspired Translation, Matthew 6: 10-15, and from Nephi 5: 102, and after showing changes in use of pronouns in the versions, he says that in the Inspired Translation [Book of Mormon] the words, "Thy kingdom come" and "give us this day our daily bread," are omitted entirely. He says:

Regarding the first sentence omitted, we may find a reason in the fact that when Jesus taught this prayer to his Jewish disciples the kingdom of God had not as yet been organized, and the apostles had not yet been chosen; but both Jesus and John had declared that the kingdom of God was at hand . . . And it would be in accord with his own teaching, as well as that of John the Baptist, so to teach his followers to pray. But his appearance to the Nephites was after his death and resurrection, and the conditions were vastly different; he had already begun the organization of the kingdom of God in the land of Jerusalem, and organized the church among the Nephites at his appearing. With the exception of those differences referred to the prayer is about the same as in the King James Translation.

This writer says concerning the words of the prayers as given in the Inspired, "Suffer us not to be led" etc.:

We believe that the Inspired Translation represents the words which Jesus actually taught his Jewish disciples to pray. We further believe that he taught the Nephites the same words. But it will be remembered that the Book of Mormon nowhere makes for itself the claim of perfection or that it is free from errors; but on the other hand its writers admitted the possibilities of errors in their writings. (See pages 44 and 500.) The weaknesses and failures to which humanity is subject are much the same in every age of the world. We believe that much of the teachings of Jesus, both at Jerusalem and on the land of Joseph, were written from memory; hence the possibility of unintentional errors. According to the Inspired Translation the Jewish writers, or perhaps the copyists, made a mistake in the sentence under consideration. It was possible, and we think reasonable to believe, for the Nephites to make the same mistake. Under the same circumstances and with the same matter, they would be liable to make the same mistake as the Jewish writers. It is likely that both writers wrote from memory, and it would be easy to make the mistake referred to. However, they preserved the leading thought in the sentence, which was to pray that temptation might be averted. The translation of the Book of Mormon does not claim to be a correction of any of the errors made by the Nephite writers, but to be a literal translation, by the power of God, into its English equivalent; hence their mistakes would appear in the translation. The Inspired Translation does claim to be a correction by the Spirit of revelation, and thus we have the words, or thoughts, as Jesus really gave them. It is not claimed that the Inspired Translation was made from any original Hebrew or Greek, but that it represents the truth as God gave it. This is the most reasonable solution of this matter that has as yet come to my mind.

It would be strange indeed if, as some say, the Book of Mormon is a fraud gotten up by an ignoramus, yet has such complete harmony with itself in all its parts, and also with the Bible. The translating and writing of the book, or much of it, was done under trying and opposing circumstances, and in different places; yet we find perfect harmony in its chronology, history, and doctrine. All these considerations are in favor of its divinity and truthfulness.

Restoring Worship

By Clarice Bowman

This book deals with the theme of how men and women, children and young people, can be led into deeper and more meaningful experiences of worship—through prayer and prayer groups, through our rich Christian heritage of worship symbols; through art, music, and the church building itself.

Alexander William Doniphan

Symbol of Pioneer Americanism

By Raymond W. Settle

Part II

IN POLITICS COLONEL DONIPHAN was originally a Whig and a disciple of Henry Clay. "I worshiped Clay," said he, "as no man but him was ever worshiped by his followers." This explains his political principles and relations throughout the remainder of his life. When the Whig party was formed in 1834 he worked with tremendous energy to organize it in Clay County. In 1836 he acceded to the wish of his friends and was elected Representative in the State Legislature. He was re-elected again in 1840 and in 1854. This office, the humblest in the legislative branch of government, was the only one he ever sought. In 1850 he was informed that he could be elected United States Senator providing he would support the Jackson Resolutions on the subject of slavery. He refused to countenance such a proposal, declined to go to Jefferson City for conference, and another Whig was elected. In 1855 the Legislature cast forty-one ballots over a sixty-day period for a successor to Senator David R. Atchison. During that time the vote stood at fifty-nine for Colonel Doniphan, fifty-six for Atchison, and forty for Thomas Hart Benton. Again and again the leaders of the Atchison and Benton factions informed him that they would cast their votes for him if he would pledge himself to champion their particular views upon slavery. His reply was that he would deem it a great honor to go to the United States Senate, but if he ever went he would soar there and not creep in by intrigue. To his everlasting honor he was not elected.

IT IS HIGHLY SIGNIFICANT that he received his training and early experience among men who regarded the law as sacred and the Constitution of the United States as its unfailing source. To him this magnificent instrument was the second great miracle in our national history, the Revolution being the first. In his youth the vast controversy over broad or literal interpretation of it still raged but that ultra-modern school of cynics who preach observance or abrogation according to their own distorted ideas of political expediency had not yet arisen. Not yet had that mighty bulwark of judicial sanity, legal stability, and national well-being been seized as an instrument of class or party aggrandizement.

This reverence for the Constitution, coupled with his admiration for Henry Clay, made him an inalienable Union man. In those dread days of early 1861, with seven states already seceded and the formation of the Confederacy well advanced, he stood up in the Missouri State Convention, elected to determine the course the State would follow, and said, "I am a Union man . . . I go for the whole Union . . . I live by hope, and as a Union man I shall only die when hope dies!" Six months before he had stated in an address to the people of Liberty that he believed the Constitution and the Union would survive every shock of the calamity which seemed about to fall. When news of the secession of South Carolina reached him he had handbills distributed calling the people of the county together that he might advise them upon what course Missouri should pursue. Although the ground was covered with snow six thousand of his neighbors assembled in the open air and stood for three hours while he plead with them to remain loyal to the Constitution and the Union.

His understanding of the terrifying situation in 1860 and 1861 and of the issues involved was both profound and correct. That sectional strife which threatened the disintegration of the nation was caused by one single element—Negro slavery. "Nationality," said he, "and sectionalism cannot exist at the same time." During the decade preceding the Civil War, politics in the United States became violently radical. This was especially so after the formation of the Republican party in 1856. That party constituted a rallying point for frustrated Whigs, all degrees of Abolitionists, and everyone else who was dissatisfied with those who had ruled the country for many years. The result was a radicalism which matched that of the Democratic party. Because of this Colonel Doniphan found himself upon the horns of a painful dilemma. Being himself a slaveholder he sympathized with the determination of the Democrats to retain the institution; passionately devoted to the Union he was willing to free the black men in order to maintain it. These things led him to adopt the then apparently anomalous position that the Southern states had no right to secede and the Northern ones none to coerce them. The failure of the almost forgotten Peace Congress in Washington in 1861 and the outbreak of Civil War fell upon his heart like the stroke of doom. Then, although he lived in a county where the majority of the citizens freely expressed Confederate sympathies, he labored to hold Missouri in the Union. The fact that this State never officially joined the secessionists was due in no small measure to him.

But all of this was long ago, and while the facts are interesting enough of themselves, they mean little unless we apply them to the pattern of things today. That word "sectionalism," which he hated with all his soul, and his attitude toward it, are full of meaning for us. Unfortunately we too behold the disturbing spectacle of organized radicalism and cleverly maintained discontent. There is this difference, however, that sectionalism which threatens to place our national unity in jeopardy is the fruit of inflated class consciousness and mutual distrust between employer and employee. In the light of history, therefore, our task is clear. It is none other than the solution of our problems in the spirit of good will and the banishment forever of the cause of them. The alternative is stern indeed. If we fail here the America our fathers fashioned and transmitted to us will be but a poignant memory.

To Colonel Doniphan public office was a public trust, something not subject to bargaining in the market place. He was wholly incorruptible, and political advancement at the expense of integrity had no charm for him whatever. Here in the town he called home, within almost a stone's throw of the tall, symbolic shaft which marks his long resting place, it would indeed be well for us to remember that government is safe only in the hands of men like him. Corrupt, venal officeholders are a greater menace to democracy than foes without.

UPON GRADUATING from Augusta College in 1827 Colonel Doniphan entered the law office of Martin T. Marshall, kinsman of Chief Justice John Marshall, where he read the classical English authors, histories of England and America, and meticulously conned the law textbooks of the day. This, together with his undergraduate studies, laid the foundation for a broad, comprehensive scholarship which made him almost invincible as a lawyer and irresistible as an orator. Three years later, in 1830, he moved to Lexington, Missouri, and to Liberty in 1833. The judicial circuit in which he began his practice boasted such legal giants as Abiel Leonard, David R. Atchison, Austin King, Amos Rees, James M. Hughes, Robert Wells, and others, all in their prime. His maiden speech before a jury was made in Lexington in 1830 as assistant to Abiel Leonard in defense of a man charged with murder. This apparently determined the type of practice in which he was to engage the remainder of his life. His fame as what was known as a "criminal lawyer" spread until there was scarcely a case in western Missouri involving murder in which he did not appear as counsel for the defendant. Over a period of more than thirty years he acted in this capacity for 188 men, not one of whom suffered the extreme penalty for the crime with which he was charged. In later life, when the passage of time permitted a proper view of things, he said he regretted having been the cause of so many scoundrels going unhung.

As an orator Colonel Doniphan was unsurpassed in his day. Since he almost invariably spoke extemporaneously and probably without notes only a limited number of fragments of his speeches have been preserved for posterity. Fortunately some who knew him well and heard him under varying conditions wrote down their opinions and impressions of him. One of the best of these was by D. C. Allen, long-time resident of Liberty, who said:

Men who had been to Congress used to say that Webster and Clay could not sway men as could old Alex Doniphan . . . His burning eyes, his gestures, his tall figure—everything about him was like a flame . . . Before a great audience . . . he brought into play the whole range of his stores of thought, sentiment, eloquence, and wit, transported his hearers from grave to gay, from tears to mirth, with a certain divine ease and rapidity, and molded their opinions and hearts to his will with a thoroughness only possible to the greatest orator.

H. H. Crittenden, who heard him speak at Lexington, Missouri, in behalf of the Union party in 1860 said:

I have heard many distinguished orators in my time, in the Senate, in the House, in the pulpit, and on the stump, in Kentucky, Missouri, and elsewhere, but have never heard one who surpassed Doniphan in his style of speaking; in the resonance of his voice which at times was soft, low and gentle, at other times was like the deep, clear, rich tones from the pedal bass of a cathedral organ, musical and far-reaching, with as graceful a delivery as ever won the attention or acclaim from a listening Senate or assemblage.

COLONEL DONIPHAN'S first military training was doubtless at the "musters" held periodically by the Missouri Militia of long ago, and probably as a member of the "Liberty Blues," a company commanded by David R. Atchison. His first experience in the field was during the so-called Hetherly War in 1836. Two years later as a brigadier-general he led 250 Clay County boys to Far West in Caldwell County where he received the surrender of Joseph Smith, the Mormon Prophet, his brother Hyrum, and some fourteen other leaders of the cult. That night he received orders from Major-General Samuel D. Lucas to take the prisoners into the public square at Far West at nine o'clock the following morning and shoot them. Seizing his pen he wrote, "It is cold-blooded murder and I will not obey your order. My brigade will march for Liberty tomorrow morning at eight o'clock, and if you execute those men I will hold you responsible before an earthly tribunal, so help me God!" By all technical military rules he should have been arrested, court-martialed for mutiny, and dismissed from the service. General Lucas very wisely let the matter drop and the prisoners were not shot. Perhaps the idea of being prosecuted before an earthly tribunal by the greatest criminal lawyer and orator in western Missouri was totally devoid of charm. Incidentally it may be said that to this day the Mormons consider Colonel Doniphan the greatest Gentile who ever lived.

On June 18, 1846, the War with Mexico having broken out, he was elected colonel of the First Regiment of Missouri Mounted Volunteers, which he had helped to raise. Four days later two of his companies marched from Fort Leavenworth where it had been assembled, for Bent's Fort on the Arkansas River, and four more on the twenty-sixth. On the twenty-ninth he himself got off with the remainder. The regiment was practically untrained when it took the road for Santa Fe, New Mexico, very badly supplied, but evidently well equipped with guns, sabers, and uniforms. The little Army of the West, numbering only 1,701 officers and men, of which this regiment was the largest unit, was commanded by General S. W. Kearny. To it had been committed no less a task than that of making a forced march of almost a thousand miles from their base of supplies, across the unsettled, Indian-infested Great Plains and capturing Santa Fe, New Mexico. They were ordered to cover an average of twenty-five miles a day along the Santa Fe Trail, and they did it. But the cost in human suffering and loss of animals was terrific. On August 18 the diminutive expeditionary force crawled into Santa Fe without the necessity of having fired a shot. They had all been on short rations since leaving Fort Leavenworth six weeks before and some had only fifteen rounds of ammunition. That night American soldiers went from door to door buying, begging, or stealing a little food from the conquered inhabitants. Having taken the city and annexed New Mexico to the United States, General Kearny appointed Colonel Doniphan and Private Willard C. Hall, also of Liberty, to draw up Organic Laws and Constitution for the new territory. They were assigned quarters in the old Governor's Palace and worked in the room where General Lew Wallace later wrote Ben Hur.

ON SEPTEMBER 25, 1846, General Kearny set out for California, leaving Colonel Doniphan in Santa Fe as Military Governor until the Second Regiment of Missouri Mounted Volunteers, then on the road under Colonel Sterling Price, should arrive. He was to march south by way of El Paso and join General J. E. Wool, who was supposed to be advancing upon the city of Chihuahua, some six hundred miles away. Colonel Price arrived three days later, but in the meantime Colonel Doniphan had received orders to march into the Navajo country to the west and northwest and make a treaty of peace with the Indians. In compliance with the order he sent out two detachments, which after almost unbelievable hardships and sundry adventures, brought a delegation of sub-chiefs to Ojo Oso near present Gallup, New Mexico. There Colonel Doniphan signed a treaty with them, which they broke almost before he reached the Rio Grande on his way to join his regiment.

While he was making his rather fruitless excursion into the Navajo country the Mounted Volunteers and some three hundred traders' wagons were assembling at a place called Valverde below Albuquerque. Leaving there and marching southward he met a considerable body of Mexicans in a small skirmish called the Battle of Bracito on Christmas Day, 1846. Pressing on he remained at El Paso, during which time he learned that General Wool was not marching upon Chihuahua. With a bold courage which defies the imagination he determined to take it himself with his regiment of 925 men and officers and some three hundred bullwhackers in the traders' caravans. At Sacramento Pass, eighteen miles north of Chihuahua, lay a Mexican army of 4,120 men protected by carefully built fortifications and sixteen cannon. About noon on February 27, 1847, he launched his attack with such vigor that when night

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

There are two works which are definitely promised as coming forth, but they will in all probability be called by their own names—not the Book of Mormon. The first is the prophecy of the world given to the brother of Jared (Ether 1: 90) covering world history from beginning to end. This is to be sealed with the interpreters, but (II Nephi 11: 125-130) is not to be revealed or “come forth” during the days of the wickedness and abominations of the people.

The second work yet to come forth is the Plates of Brass, which volume will no doubt be called by its ancient name (see Alma 17: 32, 33).

JOHN A. ROBINSON.

Question:

The parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16), says that after death there was a great gulf fixed over which none could cross; yet the church teaches that the gospel is preached to the spirits in prison, giving opportunity for repentance and salvation. How can we reconcile these teachings?

Illinois

G. D.

Answer:

The contradiction is only seeming and grows out of our failure to recognize that the Scriptures show that the wicked after death are divided into two classes—the redeemable and the irredeemable—who occupy different places and conditions.

The redeemable are those who lived under sin in this world and were unrepentant, and are consequently not fitted for the kingdom of God. The fullness of the gospel did not reach them here so that they neither accepted nor rejected it, yet their sin is not unpardonable since it is not against full light and knowledge. These are consigned to a place of suffering and reform, sometimes called hell, or prison house, and where the gospel of repentance is preached. They are “prisoners of hope,” awaiting the time of their redemption at the end of the thousand years, when they come forth to salvation in teletial glory (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7).

The irredeemable are the willfully wicked who have heard the gospel and rejected it against their own conscience and their own knowledge, so that the Spirit of God which had striven with them gave them up and left them in utter darkness. Their sin is unforgivable. They have refused the best that God had to offer them, and remain without hope. These are sent to a place also called hell or prison where they suffer the torments of their own conscience. They are “reserved in chains of darkness until the judgment of the great day,” and “are looking forth with fear in torment for the fiery indignation of the wrath of God to be poured out upon them.” They are sons of perdition for whom there is no deliverance. (See Genesis 7: 1, 64, I.V.; Doctrine and Covenants 38: 1; 76: 4; 108: 13; Mark 3: 24, 28, 29 I. V.; Mosiah 1: 73-85; 8: 72-88; Alma 9: 22-32, 56-59; 19: 45-47.)

In the light of the above, both points of the question are true, one class of the wicked being visited and having the gospel preached to it, and the other class being shut off from divine light and mercy by its own decision. Evidently the rich man of the parable was of the latter class.

Question:

Are the records contained in the portion of the translation of the Book of Mormon plates lost by Martin Harris yet to come forth?

Missouri

X. Y. Z.

Answer:

We will never receive the part covered in the 116 pages Martin Harris lost because:

a. The Lord provided for that loss some thirty years after the Nephites left Jerusalem when Nephi was commanded to make other plates. (I Nephi 2: 93-95; 5: 223-225; Jacob 1: 1).

b. The material was more historical than spiritual, therefore nothing essential has really been lost.

There will be no more of the Book of Mormon revealed because the work we know as the Book of Mormon was the work of Mormon between the years approximately 375 and 384 A.D. to which he added the volume known as the Small Plates of Nephi, which appear as the first 203 pages of the Authorized Edition.

Question:

How can man see a spirit with the natural eyes as Moses said he did in the revelation prefacing the Inspired Version of the Scriptures? Can Satan take on the appearance of a physical body at will?

Michigan

C. A. H.

Answer:

The natural eyes of man are not capable of beholding spiritual things, neither a spirit. Where men have beheld such things it has been under divine quickening as it was with Moses, who, when the glory of God was upon him, was able to see the Lord and talk with him. Later when this glory had been withdrawn Satan appeared, and in comparison seemed to Moses as darkness. Moses did tell him that he could look upon him in the natural man, but he also said to him, “Blessed be the name of my God, for his Spirit hath not altogether withdrawn from me.” He was still under the Spirit of the Lord by which he had this spiritual view.

Enoch saw the spirits of men and other things “which were not visible to the natural eye,” but only by the Spirit of God. Nephi saw Christ in the Spirit and talked with him as with a man six hundred years before his birth, but it was at a time when Nephi was “caught away in the Spirit.” The brother of Jared saw the Lord, when “the veil was taken from off his eyes.” Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon not only saw and conversed with Christ, but like Enoch, were shown the world of spirits, including the saved and the unsaved; their eyes were opened “by the power of the Spirit.”

Psychic mediums in their seances are supposed to “materialize” spiritual beings at times so that they are seen, but the nature of such occurrences is not understood, and there is no certainty that the forms seen are in reality spirits. Such practices have no indorsement in the Scriptures.

How Makiki

Branch By Maurine Crownover

Did It

IF I WERE TO TRY to put my finger on a simple phrase which would catch up the reason for our growth it would be a trite one: "By simply putting school into church school." Our enthusiasm for "meaning business" has been contagious, and we have found help available at almost every turn toward improvement. To many it might seem an insignificant thing to watch the parts "fitly framed together," but to me it has been a deep religious experience to know that God has answered our prayers as we have stood in need of certain help and have known almost the exact person who should respond with that help, then to watch them "come to life" and respond to a power that was not their own. I'm sitting right now in our little children's chapel, and as I look at all the newly added beauty my mind goes to at least twenty people who have given of time, money, and energy to make it possible. The teachers have a monthly work night at which time they just plain work on lesson plans, handwork materials, physical equipment, etc. It has been gratifying to see the regular and consistent response to this endeavor.

Our growth has been largely in reclaiming rather than in conversion. Many who had drifted away are returning and giving of their strength. This is most gratifying. We still have a tremendous responsibility in the church school when we realize that almost half of the eighty children attending here at Makiki are not members. And at Kalihi, the Japanese congregation, the percentage is even higher. These children come from Buddhist homes, and it is a very difficult task we are facing, but knowing how much God is interested in them I feel confident each Sunday as I stand before a group of them that God is "winging our words" that they might reach the hidden depths of many hearts.

We have had to take it easy here, for substantial growth doesn't come rapidly. We're trying to build for the tomorrows as well as today. The soul stretching which comes as a result of adjusting oneself to other personalities is a marvelous experience. Someday I'll find the words to express my deep feelings on that score, and when I do it will be a masterpiece, not because I wrote it, but because it is what God wants said to people everywhere. If every smug person who ever lived could mingle with these wonderful people for just a year, he would forever be ashamed of any feelings he might have had which separated him from people.

How They Prayed

George Whitefield, the famous English evangelist, said, "O Lord, give me souls, or take my soul!"

Henry Martyn, missionary, kneeling on India's coral strands, cried, "Here let me burn out for God."

David Brainerd, missionary to the North American Indians, 1718-1747: "Lord, to Thee I dedicate myself. Oh, accept of me, and let me be Thine forever. Lord, I desire nothing else, I desire nothing more." The last words in his diary, seven days before he died, "Oh, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen."

Thomas à Kempis, 1379-1471: "Give what Thou wilt, and how much Thou wilt, and when Thou wilt. Set me where Thou wilt and deal with me in all things just as Thou wilt."

Dwight L. Moody: "Use me then, my Saviour, for whatever purpose and in whatever way Thou mayest require. Here is my poor heart, an empty vessel; fill it with Thy grace."

Five Little Rabbits

by Bill and Bernard Martin

"Cheerup! Cheerup! Cheerup!" sang the Red Bird to Mother Rabbit. "The dog's asleep! The dog's asleep!"

That's why Mother Rabbit and her five little bunnies felt good as they set out to the clover for breakfast.

But then things began to happen—all because a quarrelsome, old Blue Jay decided that rabbits bothered him.

How the Red Bird and the rabbits outwit the Blue Jay and the farmer's dog makes a delightful picture-story for young children.

Briefs

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS.—Baptism services were held October 22 and December 10. October 22, David Lee Mercer, Janet Vanover-shelde, and Archie Dutro were baptized by Elder Lee White. They were confirmed that evening. David Lee Mercer was confirmed by Elders Lee White and S. A. Chesnutt. Janet Vanover-shelde was confirmed by Elders S. A. Chesnutt and Harry Eckright. Archie Dutro was confirmed by Elders Harry Eckright and Lee White. Alma Sults and Edward Clark were baptized by Elder Clyde McKee, December 10. That evening Alma Sults was confirmed by Elders Leonard Stiegel and Clyde McKee, and Edward Clark was confirmed by Elders Clyde McKee and Leonard Stiegel.

Steven Francis Lundquist, infant son of Brother and Sister Lloyd Lundquist, was blessed by Elders Lee White and Leonard Stiegel, October 29.

Dewey William Edwards was ordained to the office of priest by Elders Leonard Stiegel and Harry Eckright on November 8.

A pancake supper was held by the young people November 18, under the supervision of President Guy Maxfield. They are raising funds to purchase furniture for their lounge, which is planned for the new addition to the church building.

The women's department under the direction of their leader, Virginia Short, is quite active. December 9, a smorgasbord under the supervision of Helen Stiegel was held in the lower auditorium of the church. The Sorosis Circle, under the supervision of Rachel Knott, sponsored a bazaar. The Clara Smith Circle, under the direction of Helen Hinkle, had a candy booth. The women's department recently purchased two banquet tables and new plastic dishes.

"O Little Town of Bethlehem," a Christmas play, was presented December 24. The service was under the direction of Winifred Stiegel. This was followed by a vesper service. The choir, under the direction of Maida Seline, presented the story of the first Christmas in America with Elder S. A. Chesnutt as the reader.—Reported by DOROTHY O'LEARY.

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA.—The Zion's League of Birmingham accompanied by Brother Porter and Brother Odom were in Montgomery January 13 for the organization of the Zion's League. Eleven of the Birmingham group were present including the president of the League, Larry Salter. A banquet was held preceding the business meeting.

Officers elected and installed were Carol Dixon, president; Durmont Sellers, vice-president; Barbara Edwards, secretary and treasurer; Betty Goree, recreation chairman; Ann Dixon, worship chairman; Susan Bedgood, service chairman; and Yvonne Dixon, study chairman.

Brother Porter, pastor of the Birmingham group, directed the activities, assisted by Brother Odom, leader of the Birmingham youth.

Brother Harold Sellers is the leader of the youth in Montgomery.—Reported by MRS. J. O. SELLERS.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS.—Seventy Donald Kyser was in charge of the annual election of officers held September 11. Those elected were Elder Dale Crown, pastor; C. C. Martin, counselor; Arthur Geottle, church school director; Marie Hawley, children's supervisor; Lloyd Feagins, Zion's League leader; Leah Williams, women's leader; Wilma Crown, clerk; Lavone Hill, music director; Susie Le-Neve, publicity agent; Lloyd Hill, secretary; and Roy Graham, bishop's solicitor. Elder Kyser occupied the pulpit during the morning and evening service September 10.

The interior of the church has been re-decorated. Various activities by the women's department and Zion's League have helped finance the project.

Dr. and Mrs. Glenn LeBaron of Seattle, Washington, spoke August 20. Dr. LeBaron spoke in regard to the connection of herbology with divinity. Mrs. LeBaron told of the many interesting historical places of the church and the need of regular prayer and attending prayer meetings.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Martin, assisted by Gloria Shadel of Independence conducted a flannelgraph on August 26 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hale Hawley. Brother Martin gave a flannelgraph talk August 27 on the Restoration. Arthur Dennis Mapleton spoke the same evening.

At the Rich Hill district conference September 24, Arthur Geottle was ordained to the office of priest.

Gary and Dickie Crown were baptized by their father, Elder Dale Crown and confirmed by Elders Crown and C. C. Martin on August 6.

Cynthia Jane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gene Farmer, was blessed at the Communion service September 3. A solo was presented by Rosalee Newhouse, aunt of the baby. Elder C. C. Martin, grandfather of the baby, blessed her assisted by Elder Dale Crown.

Following the three weeks of cottage meetings by Seventy Donald Kyser assisted by the pastor and the local priesthood, the following were baptized November 26: Lucy Love, Robert Love, Clara Mae Love, Clifford Baldwin, and Donald Baldwin. On December 3 Sheron Boyd was baptized. All six of the candidates were baptized by Brother Kyser and confirmed by Elders Crown, Martin, and Kyser. The above baptisms completed two family circles in the church.

The district women's meeting was held at Fort Scott on December 5. Sister Hazel Kyser, district women's leader, was in charge of decorations. The worship center was a large picture of the head of Christ. Sister Kyser, district women's leader, was in charge of the Spring River district also gave a talk on "Three Prominent Women of the Church." A luncheon was served at the noon hour in the church basement. In the afternoon Spring River District President Steve Black told the story, "The Other Wise Man." At the close of this meeting a large aluminum tray made by a local member, was presented to Sr. Kyser from the women's department in behalf of her work during the year.

A district Zion's League meeting was held December 14 in the main auditorium with district young people's leader Arthur Geottle supervising. An inspiring talk was given by Leroy Beckham.—Reported by SUSIE LENEVE.

GOODLAND, KANSAS.—The branch members have been saddened by the recent misfortune of several members. Brother J. R. Graybill, former pastor of the branch for almost thirty years, has been ill in the hospital at St. Francis, Kansas, since December 26 with a heart ailment. However, his condition is improving. Sister Don Harding was recently injured when a stove exploded and cut off her left foot. Later her leg was amputated between the knee and hip. She is now able to be in a wheel chair some. January 21 Ralph Roberts had a heart attack while attending the Sunday evening service. He died at Boothroy Memorial Hospital.

Despite the sorrow in the branch, progress has been noted. Sunday evening services were started in January and the attendance has been good. Dick Marolf, pastor, showed some slides on the ruins of Mexico at Rotary recently.—Reported by O'ELLA MAROLF.

came on he was comfortably camped within the fortifications from which the enemy had fled in terror, and his men feasted upon the abundant supplies left behind. On March 1 they entered Chihuahua, with their German artillery band playing "Yankee Doodle" and "Hail Columbia." Eyewitnesses of the spectacle said that they presented such a wild, ferocious appearance with their long hair and beards, nondescript uniforms, riding crowbait horses which could scarcely lift a hoof, that fellow countrymen living there scarcely recognized them as Americans. A correspondent for a Missouri newspaper, who looked upon it all with something of a humorist's eye, remarked that "Colonel Doniphan did not look unlike a strutting gander" as he rode along, his coat minus one sleeve.

After two months occupation of the city and upon receipt of orders from General Zachary Taylor to evacuate it and return to the United States by way of Monterrey and the mouth of the Rio Grande they set out on April 25. On June 11 they reached this latter place where they embarked on sailing vessels for New Orleans. Their arrival there was hailed by the newspapers as one of the rarest sights ever seen. "They reminded us," remarked one of them, "of the pictures of Robinson Crusoe and other shipwrecked adventurers who, having been a long time banished from civilization and compelled to live among savages and wild beasts, are suddenly transferred to their homes." One of them had lost his hat in the Gulf of Mexico, another had thrown away his deerskin pants because they were so ragged it was impossible to patch them, and still another walked ashore clad in tattered drawers and an old overcoat. They were mustered out of service and received a full year's pay because they had not so much as seen a paymaster since they left Fort Leavenworth twelve months before. They crowded the barbershops, bought sixty thousand dollars worth of new clothing, and joyously boarded Mississippi River steamboats for home. They arrived in July, and the remainder of the summer was mostly devoted to celebrations in the various counties of their more than five thousand mile journey. Their task was nobly performed. No incident in American history affords a finer example of sheer courage, bold enterprise, and dogged persistence than the long march of this regiment of Missouri boys. After leaving Santa Fe they were surrounded by enemies, cut off from contact with any other military unit, with no base of supplies and none of their own, and no hope of reinforcements from any source whatever. Indeed this story of a regiment of untrained citizen soldiers—farm boys, clerks, mechanics, and whatnot—led by a tall sandy-haired country lawyer, is worthy of the genius of the poet who sang of Xenophon's heroes.

NO DISCUSSION of Colonel Doniphan would be complete without at least brief reference to his religious sentiment. His experience ran the whole gamut from infidelity in youth to humble, child-like Christian faith in middle and later life. In '1859, after overwhelming tragedy in the form of the death of his two sons had broken his heart, he cast the worthless bauble of atheism aside and seized the Pearl of Great Price. Becoming a member of the Liberty Christian church he honestly sought to make amends for the mistakes of the earlier years. Of him it may be truly said that he died in the faith on August 8, 1887, and that his works do follow him.

Now to the conclusion of the whole matter. The time spent here might well raise the question, What is the profit in the study of historical subjects or personalities? Is it not that we may derive inspiration and guidance for the ordering of our own ways and the solution of our problems? Long ago the God of Israel outlined a program for the perpetuation of his law and the history of his people:

Therefore shall ye lay up these words in your heart and in your soul and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes. And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt write them upon the door posts of thine house, and upon thy gates, that your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers to give them, as the days of heaven upon the earth.

Allow me to translate that grand passage into an appeal for a more determined effort to teach American history in our homes, public schools, colleges, and universities. Let the press, radio, motion pictures and every other means of communication be dedicated to this noble undertaking. Certainly the days of our children shall not be as days of heaven upon earth if we fail here. Thomas Carlyle said "the history of what man has accomplished in the world is at bottom the history of Great Men who have worked here. . . . They were the leaders, the modelers, patterns, and in a wide sense creators of whatsoever the general mass of men contrived to do or attain. . . . We cannot look, however imperfectly, upon a great man without gaining something from him. He is the living light-fountain . . . the light which enlightens . . . and this is not as a kindled lamp only, but rather as a natural luminary shining by the gift of heaven." Would you destroy American democracy? Then abandon the teaching of American history and allow our children to forget those "natural luminaries," great men like Colonel Doniphan who have been the modelers, the patterns, and creators of all that we prize. Let this be done and the seed plot for any kind of noxious "ism" has been prepared. Let us who have here gazed imperfectly upon this blazing "natural luminary" rekindle our feeble torches anew and honestly dedicate ourselves to the unfinished task of bringing forth a true democracy which shall bless all the earth in the long ages of time yet to be.

"As a Place of Refuge" others here, especially those of the household of faith.

It was the hope of the late President Frederick M. Smith that the Sanitarium might serve the branches of the church far as well as near. He hoped that there would go out from this place, trained, qualified nurses who would serve in branches everywhere. Moreover it was his hope that there would arise in connection with the Sanitarium a school for the training of young men and women in the healing arts and that these would go out to serve Zion-minded physicians and ministers in branches, and in districts, and to the faraway places as yet not reached by the ministers of the Gospel.

This is the aspiration, too, of President Israel A. Smith. I join with them in these hopes that our people may be able to serve more fully the people of the world in this day of great need. Their need is spiritual, but truly it is physical too. Truly the harvest is ripe but the laborers are few.

I trust that our people and our ministers in all of the congregations of the church may be fully aware of what their Sanitarium affords, if its services are utilized to the fullest and its capabilities expanded to the widest possible range for good.

IN A PREVIOUS ARTICLE, I mentioned a few of the trees, shrubs, and perennials that have given us great satisfaction on our Worth County, Missouri, farm. Several women have asked me for a diagram of just where to put what, so in this article I shall try to describe how I worked out the landscaping for our home; perhaps it will help others with similar problems.

When we moved here in 1936, one year after our marriage, piles of debris, woven wire entanglements, and hog wallows presented a most disheartening picture. I hardly had the courage to do any landscaping, but, on the other hand, I didn't want to go on looking at the place day after day in its run-down condition. So it was that week after week all my spare moments found me raking, hauling, digging, and sweating until at last I could really feel proud of my efforts. After the hog wallows were filled in, the grass grew luxuriantly, and with an old worn-out lawn mower I went over and over the yard until it was quite beautiful. The only flowers I could muster in those days were gifts from my friends. With these around the house, and the neatly hoed vegetable garden adjoining the lawn, our home meant increasingly more to us.

In August, 1940, we began our new house, and in the process of moving the old house, and building the new, we destroyed a few of our shrubs. In the spring of 1941 I drew literally dozens of landscaping diagrams, for we had decided to transfer the vegetable garden to the lot north of the yard and use the original plot for a flower garden and fruit trees. Then, too, we wanted foundation plantings around the house to "tie" the building to its surroundings. I wore out several catalogs as I read and studied and figured. That spring we bought ten spirea van Houttei, ten red barberry, four Eva Rathe weigela, two spirea Billardi, and two tamarix, one deutzia, and three althea. We had a few perennials given to us, and the shade trees that were already well established (including a big American elm and many red cedars) to help in our landscaping venture.

I HAVE LEARNED a number of things about the proper planting of shrubs to insure maximum beauty. By carefully studying the plantings around beautiful homes, I learned a great many things. It is a good idea, too, to stand several feet from the house and figure out where to plant what. I used to stand at our front gate, pencil and paper in hand, and sketch the various flowers and shrubs in their rightful places. By so doing, I could visualize them as passers-by would see them.

Now, after years of planning and work, here is the way we have our shrubs and flowers arranged about the house:

At each corner—a clump of spirea van Houttei.

North side—wild sweet William, columbine, anchusa, deutzia. (We originally had althea here, but it winter-killed.)

East side (front of house)—weigela, spreading pfitzers (evergreens) Mecho pine (evergreens), baby iris, tulips, and other early blooming bulbs.

South side—spirea Billardi, tamarix, old-fashioned pink rose, anchusa, iris, hyacinths.

West side—Because of the drainage from the porch roof, I have no plantings here except some baby iris around the cement step.

We have our yard arranged in this way:

Back fence—lilacs, sumac, golden elder, sweet pea shrub, Amur privet, weigela, with a few iris and phlox in front of shrubs.

Between back yard and front yard—a low hedge of red barberry, with subulata (creeping phlox) and tulips in front of it.

Between yard and the vegetable garden on the north—a row of iris and phlox.

Between the flower garden and fruit trees—a row of shrubs, including mock orange, golden elder, sumac, sweet pea shrub, old-fashioned red rose, japonica, with hibiscus, iris, and chrysanthemums in front of shrubs.

The flower garden is arranged rather informally, and more or less changes from year to year as I divide and reset clumps of perennials, or as I plant annual poppies and petunias. The general plan, perhaps, might help someone get an idea of how to start a garden. As one works from year to year with the various flowers, it becomes increasingly simple to figure out suitable and pleasing locations for each one.

Our home faces east, toward the road. To the north of the yard is the vegetable garden, to the south of the yard is the flower garden. South of the flower garden is the barnyard, so I planted some shrubs along the division fence, including althea, summer lilac, red spirea, pink rambler, red hybrid climbing rose, pink hydrangea, with a clump of sumac and sweet pea shrub in the southwest corner. We have a walk along the west end of the flower garden; this is bordered by peonies, phlox, daffodils, and tulips. We have beds of peonies and iris in front of the south row of shrubs, with ample space for full sunshine and proper cultivation. Tulip and phlox beds come next. Then beds of baby roses, chrysanthemums, Shasta daisies, tiger lilies, iris, and hybrid tea roses, with hardy verbenas and more tulips along the east border. Next to the lawn I have a bed of low-growing evergreens and yucca, with penstemon, lythrum, annual poppies, coreopsis, and phlox in the background, and crocus, tulips, low-growing phlox, and one lone foxglove in the foreground.

THE MAIN IDEA to keep in mind is to know when each flower blooms and how tall it will grow, so that it can be placed in a location where it can be seen. While our row of peonies and iris are blooming, all the plants between them and the lawn, or between them and the road, are small and cannot obstruct the view in any way. Then as they go out of season, the Shasta daisies, hybrid tea roses, and coreopsis come into full bloom. By the time the phlox bloom, all the dead stems of annual poppies or larkspur have been cleaned away, and the phlox can be easily seen.

I try to arrange the flowers so that as we wash dishes at the sink, or rock the baby in the living room, or feed the cats at the back door, or gaze out the window when sick-a-bed, we can have blossoms for the soul. It is a good idea to choose a few flowers, and get a maximum of good out of them, rather than to choose too many and have nothing but pandemonium. To those who are interested in growing flowers, I would say: start with a small garden, and enlarge it as you learn; keeping it beautiful with loving care, and your flowers will respond in a way you cannot yet anticipate.

Christ in Everyday Living

By Shirley Sanford Howard

PRONE TO WANDER, Lord, I feel it; prone to leave the God I love Aren't most of us today "prone to wander"? I know I am. I can make resolution after resolution to put my religion into everyday living and Christ into everything I do, yet many times I find myself letting discouraging and degrading thoughts enter my mind. It is hard to keep them out unless my mind is so filled with good thoughts that there is no room for anything else.

I have found a wonderful aid in this business of putting Christ into my everyday affairs. It began when my small daughter developed a liking for being rocked and sung to sleep. When I began singing to her I was embarrassed to find how few songs I knew by memory that were suitable as "lullabies." I decided then to sing hymns of the church in the hope of planting within her at an early age a love and understanding for them. I began by propping my hymnal on the magazine rack beside the rocker and memorizing at least one hymn at each rocking.

Once I had them memorized I had to sing them often so that I wouldn't forget them. As the need for singing to Cynthia decreased I carried my hymnal with me to the ironing board. It was amazing how much faster my ironings went and how much more pleasant I felt while doing them. That had been one of the times when my idle mind often entertained unwelcome thoughts. While washing, doing dishes, or various other tasks when it wasn't convenient to have the book with me, I reviewed all the hymns I had already memorized; this kept them fresh in my mind.

I find that this habit of singing at my work has made quite a difference in my life. I have made tremendous growth toward an appreciation of our church hymns. What before had been just words set to music, became meaningful expressions of worship. (To memorize quickly one must memorize the thought and emotional content.) What had previously been dull hours of household duties became hours of communion with God.

Those of you who have read Brother Elbert's Blue Pencil Notes will recognize the phrase, "Thank God for the woman who sings at her work." I should like to add "Thank God for the woman who sings at her work—especially the hymns of the church." They will not only increase her own happiness but create an environment of peace and contentment which the whole family can enjoy.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

FEBRUARY IS AN "in-between" month for magazine material—a little late for winter ideas, and a little early for spring. However, the tone of much of the material in February magazines is forward-looking, with glimpses of spring showing.

"Are We Asked to Give Too Often," Woman's Home Companion, discusses the many charitable drives which are carried on, and how some cities are solving the problem of raising necessary funds for worthy causes without over-taxing individuals.

"You've Got to Hold Your Man," Woman's Home Companion, gives the clue behind much marital unhappiness and surprising separations or divorces. All wives would profit from reading it.

The home craftsman will enjoy the very complete and easy-to-follow directions in Woman's Home Companion for making "A Set of Nested Tables."

"My Son Died in Korea," Ladies' Home Journal, is a simple account by an ordinary American mother, told in the hope that it might be of help to others.

"Men Don't Understand Money," McCall's Magazine, will be pleasant, self-satisfying reading for members of the feminine sex, especially as the author is a man.

If you have ever longed for fame and fortune, you may feel different after reading "My Life With Harvey," McCall's Magazine. (The "Harvey" referred to is the invisible rabbit who has become so well known.)

For variations of an old favorite, which is also thrifty, look up "12 Meat Loaves," Woman's Day.

"Hold High the Light," Woman's Day, adds the bright bit of inspiration that all of us need.

Anyone who thinks that the day of opportunity is past should be referred to "If I Were Twenty-one," American Magazine, which is a true account of one man and his many careers.

This being the season of the year when children's illnesses are quite likely to strike, Parents' Magazine offers two excellent helps, "If Your Child's Heart Is Weak," and "When the Doctor Says 'Soft Diet.'" Both are worth filing for future reference, if not needed at present.

Some great churches have little worship chapels attached for personal prayer. There are places in the parks and woods where we can be alone. Or we can go into our own church alone when there are no services. And wouldn't it be good if every home could have its place of prayer—a real family altar?

* * * *

LET US SHARE just one great experience. A large class planned its retreat at a reunion ground. We gathered for introductory talks and orientation. We sang together, discussed our problems, prayed, bore our testimonies. We were "of one heart and one mind" respecting our purposes. It was a splendid fellowship of understanding. God's Spirit rested upon many, and all were blessed.

We found new strength, enlightenment, encouragement, and power. As we considered returning to our occupations in the world, we had no regret. We knew we would have to go back. We could not remain always in this place, however blessed. We must go back to the world to serve, to work, and to help. But for a time we had tasted the joys of heaven. We were changed men and women. We had come empty; we returned filled. We had come weak; we returned strong.

This is the meaning of the retreat.

In our free society, we have the privilege of access and the right of withdrawal. Jesus expressed the idea in these words: "he . . . shall go in and out, and find pasture."

We are free to come and go in our cities and in our country. This has a spiritual parallel too. We can walk out of our human society for a little while—we can walk out and find God.

In this sense Jesus said, "Behold, I have set before you an open door, and no man can shut it."

L. J. L.

ISABELLE CHAPMAN, PUBLIC HEALTH NURSE

is Pittsburgh with its steel mills, factories, and coal mines.

"I think I've got a good day lined up for you," she said moving her bag to make room for me on the seat. "Almost everyone we'll see today will be interesting, and it should give you a good picture of our work." As we drove over the country roads she filled in the background of the visiting nurse organization and told me of the people we would meet. Every now and then she would interrupt what she was saying to point to a house we were passing or a shack set back from the road.

"A cancer patient lives there," she would say. "A little boy is ill in that house," or "A young couple just moved in there with a new baby. She's fixed up the place so you'd never know it was a garage."

Isabelle told me that she had graduated from the Western Pennsylvania Training School for nurses and then had taken the specialized training necessary for visiting nurses. Her day begins at eight thirty at the McKeesport nursing office, twenty miles from her home, where she finds what treatments have been prescribed by the doctors for the various cases. By ten o'clock she is on her way to her patients, first to visit the well babies, then those that are ill, and finally the sick adults.

buying baby clothes, and the best way to fold a diaper.

When she finished she wrapped the child in a clean pink blanket and picked it up in her arms. "Be sure to love the baby," she told the mother. "Hold it close to you and pat it and talk to it." Turning to me she said, "You know, taking care of babies is the frosting—the dessert of this work. You just can't help loving them."

With a quick flip of the thermometer she had taken the mother's temperature, packed her black nurse's bag, and we were off. We had been there forty-five minutes.

"What is this visit going to cost that family?" I asked when we were back on the road.

"Twenty-five cents," she replied. "You see, we have a graduated scale and the families pay according to their income. That father makes $250 a month, but there are five people to be supported. Therefore they pay twenty-five cents a visit. The rest comes out of the Community Chest."

"Is the rate the same for long and short visits, or do you charge by the hour?" I asked.

"It's the same whether I stay ten minutes or half a day," she explained. "One child was having gas pains and the mother was certain something worse was wrong. I could see I hadn't convinced her that her baby was going to be all right, so I gave the treatment and then stayed until the child went to sleep and was resting normally. And that family didn't pay anything. Of course, for those who can pay, the rate is $3 an hour. One of our doctors always calls the visiting nurses in when his family is ill, and he pays the regular rate."

WE CAN'T ALL BE MINISTERS—or can we? If Mr. Webster is correct, to minister is to do things needful or helpful—to aid. I have a friend who does that, and she isn't a minister in the preaching sense of the word. She is a nurse, Mrs. Isabelle Chapman of North Charleroi, Pennsylvania.

I first met Isabelle at a Mother-Daughter banquet in the mill town of Lock Four. Lock Four refers to a lock on the Monongahela River about thirty miles from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The banquet was held in the basement of our little church at Lock Four and, quite by accident, I was seated next to Isabelle. During our conversation that evening I learned that she was a visiting nurse, one who was genuinely enthusiastic about her work, and, because it sounded interesting, I asked to go with her on her visits to her patients.

Since Isabelle lives in Charleroi, Pennsylvania, and I live in Pittsburgh, we agreed to meet in the little town of Elizabeth. I arrived at the drugstore meeting place a few minutes before she did and was gazing out the window when she pulled up in a 1949 Dodge. In her blue uniform and beret she was a sharp contrast to the dingy mill town. A slow rain had started to fall, penetrating the pall of smoke that hovered over the town. Elizabeth, the center of Isabelle's three-township territory, is seven miles from Donora, the town where last year twenty-two people died in a poisonous smog. Ten miles in the other direction

OUR FIRST CASE was a seven-day-old baby. The mother was waiting for us and had blankets, pins, clean clothes, soap, and towels laid out ready for Isabelle.

"This mother has had visiting nurse care before so she knows what to do," Isabelle pointed out. "Sometimes we have to go hunting through drawers for clean clothes for the babies."

While I sat on a kitchen chair out of the way, Isabelle washed and put on a clean starched apron, drew water for the baby's bath, rolled cotton swabs, and then proceeded to bathe the baby on the kitchen table. Beside the table sat the mother, who watched the proceedings and appeared to be taking in all that Isabelle was telling her. For while she worked she talked, explaining formulas, diet for the mother, how to save money

WE WERE DRIVING over a country road that wound between the hills and past great slag heaps, the smoking refuse from steel mills. Suddenly Isabelle pointed to a neat cottage by the road.

"A wonderful man used to live there," she said. "He was still young when he got such a severe case of arthritis that he couldn't move a muscle. For nine years we cared for him, making four or five visits a week. And although the work was hard, we always left his home feeling lifted up. Despite his suffering we always found him mentally alert, courageous, and interested in his two children. Not long after he died, his little girl got a bone infection and we were able to care for her too. It didn't cost the mother anything, and besides nursing care, we were able to give her encouragement. She would call us with all sorts of problems during those years, and we always tried to help."

"Not all of the cases are so nice. I seem to have no end of social problems. People have illegitimate children and just don't care, or they are maladjusted in their home life. If I were going to pick out one thing that raises problems in my area I would say that bad sexual adjustments cause the most trouble. When I run into such cases, the paper work alone is tremendous. I have to write a book about each case to adequately explain it to the doctor."

We had arrived at our second case, a home delivery. The baby was only a few days old and the mother was still in bed. Isabelle went through the same process again, this time bathing the baby on a folded towel on the corner of the mother's bed. It was harder on Isabelle to have to bend over so far, but she wanted the mother to watch her do it.

"Before we leave a mother we always give her a demonstration on how to bathe her baby, then we sit back and let her take over. You know," she added, "teaching a mother is a lot different from teaching a student nurse. The baby is her baby and she learns in a jiffy. You never have any trouble with new mothers."

OUR THIRD VISIT was in Smithdale. A dirt road led through a break in the hills to the little town in the valley. A river, yellow with waste from the mine, flowed sluggishly through the town. The houses were caked with coal dust. Most of them had never been painted. Isabelle's patient was an old colored woman who lay in a close, hot room and was cared for by her daughter. Six adults lived in the four-roomed house which was backed up so close to the mine that the rattle of the conveyer belts could be heard in the sick room. The woman had had two strokes and was partially paralyzed. Her room was dingy. Family photographs lined the walls, and over the bed hung an old pair of deer antlers. But when Isabelle came into the room the atmosphere changed. The sick woman tried to raise herself up to greet her nurse. The daughter hurried in with clean bed linen and a basin of water. Isabelle's presence radiated cheer and competence and self-assurance. When she left she had to disengage her hand from that of the patient because she was so reluctant to see her go.

Our fourth visit was to two elderly spinster sisters who lived alone in a large, bare house. At one time they had been schoolteachers, but now it was all they could do to care for each other—with Isabelle's help.

NOT ALL OF ISABELLE'S TIME is spent caring for the sick. In fact she estimates that half of it is spent teaching, and her greatest joy is teaching mothers. She talks for hours with them about their children and the books to buy for them, the magazines to read, the neighborhoods to live in. She tries to get them to understand that their children's mental and social health is as important as their physical well-being.

But her help isn't just limited to advice. A casual visitor will find her helping a mother cut out an evening gown for her daughter, or suggesting how kitchen cabinets should be built in a new home, or taking pictures of children for their parents, or sending the church young people to carol at Christmas time outside the window of bed-ridden patients.

Isabelle finds that different approaches are necessary for different people. Most patients are extremely grateful for the care given them. But some have to be persuaded to carry out the treatments, and even, on occasion, threatened.

"It know that isn't the best way to get co-operation, but it often works among undereducated people," she said. On one occasion she went into a home and found the children ill with scabies and living in a filthy condition. Isabelle has a temper, and this time she used it. She told the mother just what she thought of such conditions and ended by declaring that she wouldn't return until the mother had given each child a bath and had boiled every thing in the house.

"And so help me," Isabelle declared, "when I came back the place was clean."

ISABELLE'S INTEREST IN EDUCATION isn't limited to nursing. For many years she has been in charge of junior church at Lock Four Branch, and last October was asked to supervise the junior department of the church school. The Kirtland Reunion committee asked her to teach in the junior department there this year. She spent months preparing her material for class work only to fall three days before reunion and tear the ligaments in both ankles. It was six weeks before she could walk again.

Her other big interest is her son, Henry, four years old, with whom she spends a good deal of her time. Henry is large for his age, and precocious. He reflects his mother's ideas of health.

This February will mark a change in Isabelle's schedule, for she will be attending the University of Pittsburgh and taking courses in General Public Health. She has already had special training in the rehabilitation of the aged and in the treatment of tubercular patients.

She also looks forward to working in a Zion community. Although she is sure there won't be so many social problems to contend with, she says, "There will always be the aged—and the sick—and the babies!"

Graceland

FORTY PER CENT of the members of the campus congregation filed financial statements with the campus bishop's agent. Complying with the financial law has been of primary concern to church members throughout the world in recent weeks, and Gracelanders are no exception. During January, student priesthood members visited every Graceland student to encourage and help him to make either a first financial statement or an annual tithing report.

The campus congregation is divided into sixteen pastoral groups. These groups are designed to provide personal contacts and opportunities for participation such as would be available to a student in his home branch. Each one is led by a student minister, who has another student minister, a woman student, and a staff member minister as associates. The stewardship program, which was the theme for all January services, reached its climax at the last Wednesday evening fellowship of the month. Then a representative from each of the pastoral groups presented the statements of the members of his group to the bishop's agent.

miracle of it. Daniel's language of the above prophecy tells of the kingdom breaking in pieces and consuming other nations. Perhaps the Lord is foretelling less of the destruction of nations and more of the development of the kingdom in these words. Fragments, or remnants of many nations—pieces of kingdoms, are to be melted or consumed in the power of the kingdom of God.

I believe that the Restored Church was intended by the Lord to function as a melting pot for these remnants of nations. He is preparing, already, to bring forth fine metal—the kingdom of God—which shall continue in the process of assimilating nations. Like ingredient elements in a chemical formula, ingredient nations are being called forth by his power, in the order in which he determines, for he is the Master Metallurgist. He has been blending races and peoples in the Americas for an extensive period, as a stock pile preparatory to melting them in the furnace or melting pot of his church. Many Gentile peoples have been sought out to be added to those already in the Americas; Anglo-Saxons of England, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand; Teutonic peoples of Belgium, Holland, and Germany; Scandinavians of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden; and Slavs of Poland. Some remnant peoples of Israel, living in islands of the Pacific have already been called, together with Oriental brethren there. All these have been nations on the early ingredient list. Now he calls for the bringing of all the remnant of the house of Israel on the face of this land—the American Indians, whose population center lies in Central America.

We must assist the Lord in this call. The church needs an army of people who will devote time in preparation to minister to them. Such preparation includes the experience of associating with them in branches in communities where they reside here in the United States. It includes the arduous task of the study of Spanish and, later, perhaps, Indian languages prevalent in Latin American areas. It suggests travel, even residence, among these peoples to become acquainted with their culture.

We ought to make each branch such a melting pot or furnace for blending many races and peoples into the kingdom. Let us not fear that the ingredient peoples we bring will not blend or combine for the good of the finished product. The Lord is calling them now and if we work in harmony with his divine formula, searching them out in the order of his salvation plan, we may be assured that he will bring to pass his "marvelous work." It is by the power of his Spirit that the peoples of the church shall mingle their hearts and their very lives in establishing the kingdom of God. Into the melting pot they come—Anglo-Saxons, Teutons, Mediterranean peoples, Slavs, Scandinavians, Indians, Asiatics—white, brown, black, and yellow races. Out of the melting pot shall come not white men or brown, yellow or black, but "the pure in heart."

Study in Family Evangelism

by Reed M. Holmes

This mimeographed pamphlet was prepared at the request of the reunion committee and has been used in reunion classwork.

Family and personal missionary work are discussed—principles, effective evangelistic appeals, special tools, and a planned approach. Good for priesthood classes, women's classes, or home study.

HERALD HOUSE INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Apostle E. J. Gleazer will be in the district April 13 to April 18 for the Zion's League Convention at Vancouver, and from May 5 to May 13. The Woodburn Church will be dedicated and the spring district conference held in May.

Church Directory Changes

New places of meeting are being used by various branches and missions because of acquiring new property by purchase or rental. The Church Directory, therefore, soon gets out of date. Errors have also been reported in the issue that was put out last summer. If branch, district and stake presidents will keep us advised, we will report these changes in this column from time to time so that those having directories can make the additions or corrections necessary. By thus keeping Directory information up to date it will be possible to issue a new directory as soon as the present supply has been used, without spending weeks to get in touch with the local authorities—the only ones who can give us this information. C. B. H.

West Virginia Institute

The West Virginia District Institute will be held at Wellsburg, West Virginia, on March 3 and 4. Classes and a business meeting are scheduled for Saturday with preaching and fellowship services on Sunday. All are invited to attend.

MAY R. GRIFFIN
District Secretary

Kansas District Conference

The Kansas District conference will be held in Wichita on March 31 and April 1. Classes will begin at 3:00 p.m. Saturday, followed by a preaching service in the evening. Sunday's activities include a youth prayer service at 8:00 a.m., general prayer service at 9:30, preaching at 11:00, and the district business session at 2:00 p.m.

Dorothy Sheppard,
District Secretary.

Notice to Servicemen in Texas

Servicemen located in or near Lubbock, Texas, are invited to attend meetings at the East Fourth Street Church or contact either W. A. Hartman next door to the church (phone 27802) or Pastor W. K. Schreier, Box 403, 1307 L., Abernathy, Texas (phone 163 J).

Notice to Rolla, Missouri, Members

Mrs. Ruth Whittaker, 41 Great Oaks, Rolla, Missouri, would like to contact other members in the Rolla area.

Notice to Michigan Members

Members living in Livingston and Lenewee Counties are requested to send their names and addresses to the stake office, 359 Louise Avenue, Highland Park, Michigan. An effort is being made to establish contact with all members in this area.

1951 Easter Lessons

If you are planning to use the following quarterlies in your church school curriculum next spring, it would be wise to get your order in early. In 1951, Easter Sunday falls on March 25, and the third quarter material below carries the Easter lesson; therefore, you will need these quarterlies to complete the second quarter.

Kindergarten B-III, "Showing Our Love for God."

Primary A-III, "Friends of the Natural World."

Primary B-III, "Stories of Jesus."

Primary C-III, "How Our Church Began."

Junior B-III, "Jesus' Helpers Take Up His Work."

Kansas District Reunion

The annual Kansas District reunion will be held at Camp Fellowship, seventeen miles southwest of Wichita by Lake Afton, from June 16 to 24. Modern facilities, cabins, dormitories, and space for trailers will be available. Further information may be obtained from C. S. Gose, Box 567, Arkansas City, Kansas.

Correction

In the Article "Christ Is Still With Us," Saints' Herald December 18, 1950, by Warren L. Van Dine, the author feels that it was changed so as to infer that "Jesus may have been placed on a hillside after his birth." He wished it to say, "He may have been born on one."

DEATHS

DERSHIMER.—Emma S., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Turner, was born June 18, 1873, in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and died January 13, 1951, at her home in Pittsburgh after a brief illness. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since she was twelve and was the wife of Elder T. A. Dershimer, pastor of Pittsburgh Branch.

She is survived by her husband; a daughter, Mrs. Ford Walther; and one grandchild. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Ray Whiting and Don R. Ross.

ANDERSON.—J. Albin, son of Gust and Anna Anderson, was born December 26, 1882, near Denison, Iowa, and died December 25, 1950, at Kimball Hospital in Wyoming. When he was four years old, he moved with his parents to Wyoming territory. In 1907 he homesteaded 240 acres of his own. Two years earlier he had borrowed $5.00 from an uncle to begin a small business; this grew until he had five clerks assisting him. Moving it to his homestead, he increased his merchandise to include drugs, groceries, meats, farm machinery, and later auto supplies. In 1905 he was commissioned by President Theodore Roosevelt to be postmaster of the settlement of Albin, which was named for him. On September 25, 1927, he was married to Gladys Emily Gidley, who preceded him in death on January 6, 1934, following an automobile accident in which both were injured. In addition to his mercantile business, he also managed extensive farming operations and served as executive secretary of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company. All this despite the fact that he was crippled with rheumatism and had to use a wheelchair to get around since he was twenty-one. He was a well-informed reader and an authority on local, state, and world affairs. Since 1910 he had been a member of the Reorganized Church.

He is survived by a sister, Mrs. G. R. Crossan of Albin; and five brothers: Charles R., Edwin P., and Arvid E., of Albin; Elliott M., of Lander, Wyoming; and Otto C. of Windsor, Colorado. Funeral services were held at the Schrader Chapel in Cheyenne, Elders Glaude A. Smith and M. M. Billyue officiating. He was buried beside his wife in Lakeview Cemetery.

Introducing

WAYNE EMERSON SIMMONS, Independence, Missouri, (page 5) was born in Cameron, Missouri, in 1915, where he was baptized and attended high school. After graduation in 1932 he attended various colleges, being graduated from the University of Kansas City "with distinction" in 1948. He received his B. A. in absentia, being in Costa Rica at the time. In 1938 he married Verneil W. Newcom. They have three boys, Neil Emerson 10, Gareth Wayne 8, and Dana Allen 4½ months. Brother Simmons' business experience consists of six years in elementary school teaching, including one year as principal. He worked for the Standard Oil Company in Aruba, Netherlands West Indies, from 1941-45; one year as school principal at San Jose, Costa Rica, in 1947; and two years as director of the American Cultural Center, United States State Department at Caracas, Venezuela, 1948-50. Last October he began his missionary appointment to the "Spanish-speaking peoples."

CHARLES F. GRABSKE (page 8) was introduced April 16, 1949.

BLANCHE MAXINE (NEAL) SHIPLEY, Grant City, Missouri (page 18), was born in Allendale, Missouri, and baptized at Far West. She graduated from Grant City High School in 1931 and continued her education in Maryville State Teachers College, completing two years' work in summer sessions. She taught rural schools in Worth County, Missouri, for nine years. In 1935 she married Kelton Shipley. They have three children: Sharon Kay, 7 years, Madelyn, 5 years, and Russell, 1½ years. Her hobbies are flower growing and writing, particularly in the field of home and farm arts. Several of her articles have been published in the Herald and other magazines. She has been secretary of the Council of Churches of Worth County for three years and adds: "I am also unofficial secretary to my husband, who is pastor at Allendale, Missouri." Her special interest is "beautifying homes for Zion's growth." She is a junior teacher in the church school, branch clerk, solicitor, treasurer, and publicity chairman.

* FAITH

"It is so much easier having the kind of faith you can talk about than the kind you can use."—Jennie Z. Elliott (a blind member).

* J. ALBIN ANDERSON

A church member who lived a courageous and inspiring life under a terrible and painful handicap was Brother J. Albin Anderson, who lived and operated his business in the town that was named for him, Albin, Wyoming.

Suffering from rheumatism since his childhood days, he was obliged to spend his life, after he was twenty-one, in a wheel chair. But this did not prevent his making a success of his life as a merchant, farmer, banker, and insurance man.

We used to see him at General Conferences, generally very quiet because of his condition. But his friends knew him as a kind, friendly, happy, hopeful man. He spent nearly fifty years in that wheel chair.

Brother Anderson passed away last Christmas morning at the Kimball hospital. He had been there for medical treatment over a period of three months. A splendid tribute was given to him by the "Pine Bluffs Post" of Laramie County, Wyoming, in its December 28 issue.

Not often has anybody given the church and his community so much under such difficulty.

* STAFF OF LIFE

Stories of achievement and service are always of interest to church people, especially when they concern our own folk.

Visitors to Nauvoo have noticed a large and attractive home on the river shore just east of the church properties. In that house lives the friendly family of Harold D. Smith. Brother Smith has served as district president, and in many other ways has been a benefactor to the church, its officers, and its people. A pretty name, "Windy Lane," has been chosen for the home.

Many of Brother Smith's excellent photographs have appeared in the "Herald," given without cost. His photo business, which pays the expenses for his many good works, is located at 612 Seventh Street, Fort Madison, Iowa—quite a drive from home every day. This is also a headquarters for his other enterprises.

In recent months, the family has become interested in a new project. They believe in the Word of Wisdom. But they could find no really good whole wheat flour on the market. It was all too coarse, and often made of inferior wheat. For their own use they bought a stone burr flour mill, selected good wheat, and made excellent finely ground flour. Visiting friends commented on the delicious baked goods that came from Sister Smith's oven. Learning the source, they wanted some of the flour. Now the Smith's have increased their production and are building a trade.

* There are just a few places where a punch causes no offense: a time clock, a ticket, and a transfer.

* SATAN has his own kind of arithmetic. He can add to your troubles; he can subtract from your happiness; he can multiply your problems; and he can create divisions between you and your friends.

News and Notes

VISIT THE SOUTH

Dr. and Mrs. F. M. McDowell returned to Independence, February 6, after spending six weeks in the southern districts. The trip included visits with the Saints at Little Rock, Arkansas, and Atlanta, Georgia, en route, and spending the holidays with their daughter and family at Gainesville, Florida. They participated in two services held in Orlando, four services in Miami, a three-day workers' institute for Southern Florida at Tampa, a service at Pensacola, Florida, and Escatawpa, Mississippi, a district conference and workers' institute for the Central Texas District at Marlin and for the Southwestern Texas District at San Antonio. Under the direction and approval of the Women's Department of the General Church, Sister McDowell conducted classes for the women at Miami, Florida, and at Marlin and San Antonio, Texas.

They speak highly of the growing number of up-to-date church homes which are being erected throughout the South and especially of the devotion of the priesthood and members generally. They commend also the moral support of the local district presidents and pastors, and the co-operation of the appointees, Apostle P. E. Farrow and Elders A. H. Yale and John G. Wight during the Priesthood Institutes in Texas, and Ammon Calhoun, pastor of Miami, Florida, who substituted for Apostle Farrow at Tampa.

MISSIONARY EFFORTS

Appointee Charles Kornman and the local authorities in Ottumwa, Iowa, are holding a missionary campaign following the opening of the new church there. Ten converts have already been baptized and others are showing interest.

IN NEW OFFICES

The staff of the General Council of Women has moved into the new offices at the Auditorium. Mrs. May Worth, secretary to Mrs. Pauline J. Arnson, director of the council, has been in the process of moving the equipment for a week.

PRIESTHOOD TRAINING

The second six-week priesthood training school for the Center Stake has been completed. Approximately 150 members of the Melchisedec priesthood and 175 members of the Aaronic priesthood completed the course.

EASTER WEEK

The Center Place is entering into a week of prayer on March 19 through Easter. Each night the Saints in this community are invited to go to the Auditorium for worship. Prayers and testimonies from the audience are to be encouraged by the use of traveling microphones. Last year the upper and lower auditoriums of the Stone Church were filled with capacity crowds each night. It is expected that with the greater accommodation at the Auditorium a crowd of three thousand will attend.

Palm Sunday address is to be given by President Edwards and the Easter sermon by Bishop DeLapp.

Plans for the special Easter week meetings are also going ahead in other branches of the church.

CONCERT GIVEN

The third concert this season of the Independence Symphony Orchestra was presented February 18. Norman Hollander, was cello soloist. Also presented on the program was the William Christman High School A Capella Choir.

Vida E. Butterworth, R.N.

IN THIS PICTURE Miss Butterworth, educational director of the School of Nursing, is calling the attention of Miss Jean Franks, a freshman, to some laboratory results. Educators say, "We see what we look for." The instructor's job is to direct and lengthen the span of attention. An architect and a farmer riding along the highway together will not see exactly the same things. In fact, no two people see things in the same way because each sees with his eyes plus his total experience and present interest.

Miss Butterworth comes from a family of educators. Her father, Charles E., was an evangelist. Her brother Raymond is superintendent of schools in her old home town of Dow City, Iowa. Until recently her brother Julian was head of the Rural Education Department of Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, where he still holds a full professorship. Vida was valedictorian of her class when she graduated from high school. She was graduated from the Sanitarium School of Nursing in 1929 and continued there in professional service. She attended Graceland in 1933 and 1934, then went to Columbia University where she received B.S. and M.A. degrees finishing in 1941. She has been educational director at the Sanitarium since 1943.

Her special interests include art work and writing. In her teaching profession she is particularly interested in tests and measurements. She belongs to the American Nurses Association, National League of Nursing Education, Business and Professional Women's Club, and American Association of University Women. She was treasurer of the Missouri State Nursing Association from 1942 to 1950 and has regularly attended the National League of Nursing Educator's conventions and workshops. She enjoys travel and has already visited forty-two states.

Correction

On page two of the Herald of February 19, 1951, the statement is made that E. L. Parkes is president of the Northern Michigan District. Miss Parkes calls attention to the fact that her father is counselor to District President Harry Doty. This correction should also be noted in the Pastor's Handbook.

The Third Generation

Editorial

"Unto the third and fourth generation."

—Exodus 20: 15

The president of a stake was visiting the editors some time ago, and we were discussing the prospects of church work in his area. From the outside, the work there looks fine.

"We have a wonderful opportunity," he said, "but we also have a problem in our third generation. The pioneer grandparents endured many things to establish the church work. Their children shared some of the warmth of their enthusiasm. But the grandchildren—the third generation—are sometimes rather cool. They have not felt the appeal of the church. They do not contribute much. They attend infrequently. The church does not seem to mean much to them. I would like to know what to do for them."

Here is a problem of major significance for the church. In some families and branches it has been solved. In some it has not.

* * * *

When Israel was in Egypt, all went well under the wise administration of Joseph, as long as Pharaoh held Joseph in high esteem. But that situation could not last forever, as Pharaoh could not live forever. The Scripture records "there arose a new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph."—Exodus 1: 8. From that time the situation of the Israelites worsened. Things began to be hard.

There are young people in the church who "know not Joseph." What can be done for them? The future of the church depends on its power to win and hold the young people from whose ranks future workers, ministers, supporters, and members are to come.

* * * *

We need to analyze the problem. It is our problem. If it is to be solved, we must try to solve it. Definitely, it is up to us. The young people will not begin the move to solve it, but it must be faced and solved through them.

The first thing to admit is the fact that parents and grandparents have failed. We can scold them, worry them, and disturb them. But we can't make them do much about it. They don't know how. It is rather late for them to help. They have missed an opportunity and it is gone. Whatever can be done now must be accomplished by the local officers and workers of the church, and especially young people's leaders.

* * * *

First, what do those young people think? What is their angle?

There is not much group psychology here. Their thinking is individual, though they get ideas from each other. They must be approached and reached as individuals.

Some of them think that the church is not for them. It belongs to Grandpa. At least he acts as if he owns it and tries to run it. And if they try to say anything, or if they want changes, they are "told" and put in their places, which are too often found outside the walls of the church.

Sometimes they think there is nothing for them to do, except to sit and listen—a tiresome thing. The thinking has been done, and nobody is interested in what they think. Sometimes the church building is antiquated and does not meet their needs.

The older generation has its eyes upon the past; the young looks to the future. Is it any wonder that young people have to begin a revolution, sometimes, to find a place for themselves in society, in business, and in the church?

If we want to keep those young people, the local church must be progressive. It must have a work to do and a program for the future. We must listen to their ideas, see that they help with the voting, and that their rights and needs are respected. We must see that it is their church, too, as well as ours.

Too many of the third generation have heard about the church all their lives, but have not experienced the Spirit of God. That takes personal ministry, prayer, and leadership. We cannot win them without this deep personal spiritual experience.

We must give them work to do, give them opportunities for service and leadership. We must let them know that they are needed in the work of the kingdom of God. They must have a place in the work and the government of the church.

* * * *

We shouldn't be too hard on older persons. They have done great work in their time. The church could not have reached its present strength without their efforts. But here is a problem to be solved. We want to help with it. After all, it is their children and grandchildren we are trying to save.

Perhaps the key to the situation is this: "Make room for the future. Be willing to step aside and give place to the young. Call upon them for the help they can give. Be willing to let them make changes and improvements. It is their church too. Pray with them and let them carry a part of the burden."

There is a way that we can help the young to see that this is their problem, this is their struggle, the fight against sin and trouble is their battle, and the victory, too, when it comes will be partly theirs.

Attention

Dr. Evan V. Shute writes: "The Committee on Ministry to College People has given me the arduous job of tracking down some of our graduates. I thought I would begin with trying to get the names, current addresses and positions held, etc., of any of the physicians, dentists, Ph.D.'s, lawyers, and architects among church people."

This work is very important, and it is significant that a man as eminent as Dr. Shute has been chosen to do it. May we ask the co-operation of every person in the classifications he has mentioned above to write him, giving him the information he requests? Your help will be appreciated.

A Word of Appreciation

THE NEWS which came to us during the recent council sessions, of the death of Bishop John C. Dent, was received with deep sorrow. It brought to mind the many years of splendid service given by Bishop Dent to the work of the church, particularly in his office as bishop. I am sure that I speak for all the members of the Order of Bishops when I say that his loss will be felt by all of us who were in close association with him.

His counsel was wise, and his devotion and service to the church outstanding. His is a record which I am sure will prove a challenge to each and every one of us. Bishop Dent served the church for twenty-nine years, and in addition to handling the business affairs of the church which happened to be his particular responsibility, he gave of himself unselfishly in the broader ministry of his priesthood.

It is with deep appreciation of his life that we pay tribute to him and express our sincere sympathy to his wife and to other members of his family.

G. L. DeLapp,
PRESIDING BISHOP.

Important Notice

Until further notice is given in this column, members of the church are advised that letters, packages, and mail of any kind, especially church literature, should not be sent to the Eastern Sector in Berlin or to Eastern Germany, Poland, or Czechoslovakia.

Packages for the eastern zone should not be sent to Brother Theys until he has been advised and instructions from him have been received.

English Is Fun the Graceland Way

By Tess Morgan, Chairman
Division of Language and Literature

Tess Morgan has been a teacher at Graceland College since 1928. Her freshman English course has been a "must" on the schedule of generations of students, who now remember her with affection as an "institution within the institution." She, with other members of the Graceland staff, is responsible for having developed the new course she describes in the accompanying article.—EDITOR.

AT HOMECOMING an alum approached one of Graceland's teachers and asked, "What's the deal around here? My boy isn't taking freshman English . . . says he's taking communications. What is this communications course?"

Communications 1-2 takes the place of the traditional freshman English and speech courses. Its purpose is to develop students' abilities to give and to receive meaning in order that they may become more effective members of a democratic society.

It is a course in reading, writing, speaking, and listening. Instead of the usual emphasis on rules in two separate aspects, the students get the principles that the four aspects have in common. For instance, they learn how meaning is conveyed by language and why misunderstandings occur. Rules of grammar and rhetoric are de-emphasized in favor of emphasis on language appropriate to its time, place, circumstance, and purpose. Students also develop discrimination toward communications received through the newspaper, radio, and movie.

Here are some of the specific objectives set up to implement the aims:

1. Reading—opportunities to develop skills in reading directions, bulletins, textbooks, news reports, and analyses

2. Writing—reports on personal experience, reports on reading and observation, and investigative articles
3. Speaking—opportunities to develop skill in conversation, group discussion, extemporaneous speaking, oral reading, and reporting
4. Listening—taking good notes, criticizing lectures, sermons, commentators in both radio listening and "live" situations

Room 108, Briggs Hall, has been set up as a communications laboratory. In it are newspapers, magazines, and reference books used for individual and group preparations.

The Speech Shop is used for group listening experiences — recordings, "live" group discussions, and projector work. During a two weeks' period recently, the 330 freshmen have listened to a recording of the C.B.S. documentary, "The Making of a Movie" and a reading of the Chicago Round Table Discussion, "What Do We Know About Prejudice?"

One of the most satisfying experiences so far this year is the newspaper project. To save everyone

When Shall the Earth Rest?

By Gerald Gabriel

IN THESE HASTENING TIMES when there is so much to be done, and when there are so many things left undone, we are apt to weep and cry unto the Lord as Enoch of old, saying, "When shall the earth rest?" At the close of a busy day we are very tired, and near the end of the week's struggle we welcome the sacred day of rest, but when does the earth rest?

Tired Mother Earth

We know Mother Earth must be tired for, unlike ourselves, she works day and night, day after day, year after year, without a moment of rest. Above her surface is a continuous war from which she receives the impact. It has been estimated that there are 37,500 tons of nitrogen above each of her acres bombarding the earth's surface to make entrance, while on the other hand, man uses her in such a way that this nitrogen is necessary. This continuous bombardment can pierce the soil through a bolt of lightning which may store up as much as one fourth of a ton of nitrogen, making it too highly concentrated for use in the growing of crops. Nitrogen may pierce the soil through the co-operation of man by seeding legumes. Nitrogen is not the only element doing the bombarding, for many others are doing likewise. Common to all of us are oxygen and hydrogen.

Below the surface of the earth there is enough energy being used on a small tract of land to furnish heat for a farm home, also lights and power for many modern conveniences, if there were a way to harness that energy. Scientists tell us that there are approximately five million living organisms in one teaspoonful of soil, which work wonders in Mother Earth. They produce enough heat in early spring to enliven our soil, and when awakening from the winter's nap they make the frozen soil absorptive in a few days time. Grass turns green and life in general is on the move again.

One small plant produces enormous amounts of energy. We are told that a medium-sized tree will pull from the soil about 600 pounds of water each day. It always seemed quite a chore for me to pump the average twelve gallons of water for the family cow each day, yet one tree pumps fifty times that amount and pumps it much higher than the level of the earth.

The crop of corn that has just been harvested has done a lot of pumping too. An acre of corn is said to use about 5,500 tons of water in one season. That amount would cover the soil with twenty-four inches of water. Think how much energy it would take to pump a watering tank the size of an acre and two feet high full of water. We also begin to realize how much energy is expended when we figure it in tons of coal. This same acre of corn will burn up carbon equivalent to four tons of coal. Of course, these are only three of the many elements used in growing corn.

Now, what about the constant probing of roots in search of food? The roots of one plant of wheat are believed to send out about sixteen hundred feet of roots in search of food, and the squash vine which does even more searching, has been found to have about fifteen miles of roots. Constant probing of plant roots in Mother Earth must also make her very tired.

Then, too, there are those natural forces that use large amounts of energy. The volcano that builds a mountain in a few hours; the glacier that moves slowly but surely, carving mountains as it goes; and the constant shifting of the earth by wind and water play a big part in keeping Mother Earth at work. Heaped upon all these other requirements, she must support hundreds of bodies of water, lands, plants, and animals. Man, the most intelligent of God's creation, also contributes to her unrest by continually mining, blasting, and warring upon her.

These energy-consuming forces were not, however, the things that made Mother Earth so weary, causing Enoch and the heavens to weep and cry, "When shall the earth rest?"

Man's Sins Most Tiring

Reading further in this most interesting seventh chapter of Genesis of the Inspired Version, we find that sinful man is the most energy-consuming. Enoch saw the history of mankind—a sinful world destroyed by the flood, Noah and his temporal salvation, the coming of the Son of Man and his crucifixion, the earth pained and weary because of the filthiness of men, the first resurrection, then the period of wickedness and the Second Coming of Christ when the earth should rest. Enoch saw our day.

And the Lord said unto Enoch, As I live, even so will I come in the last days, in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you concerning the children of Noah. And the day shall come that the earth shall rest. But before that day . . . the heavens shall shake, and also the earth. And great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven, and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of mine Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men. And righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out mine elect from the four quarters of the earth, unto a place which I shall prepare; an holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle; and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem. And the Lord said unto Enoch; Then shalt thou and all thy city meet them there And there shall be mine abode, and it shall be Zion, which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made; and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest.—Genesis 7: 67-73.

We believe we live in those last days mentioned, for we see verse 74 being fulfilled.

But before that day, he saw great tribulation among the wicked; and he also saw the sea, that it was troubled, and men's hearts failing them, looking forth with fear for the judgment of the Almighty God, which should come upon the wicked.

We Stay the Earth's Rest

We live in that period of wickedness that was to precede the second coming of Christ. We live in the eleventh hour. Indeed, we live in the hour when we have a hope of being called the sons of God. "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he [Christ] is pure."—I John 3:3. We are now in the twilight zone and must prepare ourselves, for "Zion is no further away than the spiritual condition of my people justifies." Zion, then, awaits the spiritual conditioning of His people. As John would say, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matthew 3: 28. This kingdom can only be at hand when we are a repentant people. The earth awaits this conditioning. We prolong Christ's coming when we do not repent. We invite not only the wicked conditions, but foster and accentuate the corruptible with our procrastination. The earth suffers and will continue to suffer with increasing intensity until man, who has dominion over it, is repentant. When the perfection of his people is achieved, Christ will come.

Rejoice in the Protection of His Grace

"Vengeance cometh speedily upon the ungodly, as the whirlwind, and who shall escape it; the Lord's scourge shall pass over by night and by day; and the report thereof shall vex all people; yet it shall not be stayed till the Lord come."—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5. Great things are yet to come before that perfecting process reaches the necessary heights.

The promise has been given that no power shall stay the hand of God in the accomplishment of his purposes among his people; and as the church shall move forward in its great work, the fulfillment of prophecy may cause the Saints to tremble at the exhibition of divine power, yet they shall rejoice in the protection of his grace.—Doctrine and Covenants 135: 3.

This exhibition shall be "before the day of the Lord shall come, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon be turned into blood, the stars fall from heaven; and the remnant shall be gathered unto this place . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 6. Then a trump shall sound and then shall be the resurrection of the just. They shall come forth to meet him in a cloud. Then great things shall happen to Mother Earth.

Changes in the Earth

The Lord shall set his foot upon Mount of Olives, "and it shall cleave in twain."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 8. In this period we are told that God shall not keep silent (Psalm 50: 3). ". . . he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked."—Isaiah 11: 4.

Other things will happen to Mother Earth also.

Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places made plain; and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.—Isaiah 40: 3-5.

At the time of these happenings the earth shall suffer. Following, however, the earth shall rest for the space of a thousand years. Satan shall be bound. It shall be the habitation of the righteous (Genesis 7: 73). This is the period spoken of in Isaiah 11:6-8: "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them." Children shall grow up without sin, and the earth shall truly be at rest.

A New Earth

At the end of the thousand-year rest, Satan shall be loosed again, and—

The heavens and the earth which are now kept in store by the same word, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men . . . wherein the corruptible things of the heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the mountains shall melt with fervent heat And we look for a new heaven, and a new earth wherein dwell eth righteousness.—II Peter 3: 7, 12, 13.

This righteous people shall inherit the new earth and have the intelligence which God wants to give to them. Being of this intelligence they shall have no desire to sin (see Doctrine and Covenants 43: 7).

Just Sliding Along

The trouble with many of us is that we just slide along in life. If we would only give, just once, the same amount of reflection to what we want to get out of life that we give to the question of what to do with a two weeks' vacation, we would be startled at our false standards and the aimless procession of our busy days.—Dorothy Canfield.

By Their Works Ye Shall Know Them

Vida E. Butterworth, R.N.

And now my brethren, I judge these things of you because of your peaceable walk with the children of men; for I remember the word of God, which saith, By their works ye shall know them; for if their works be good, then they are good also.

—Moroni 7: 4.

THE STUDENT NURSES of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing come from the north, east, south, and west. They come from farms, from small towns, and from large urban areas. Some have no brothers or sisters; some come from large families. Some have been partially educated in a one-room country school; some are from large city high schools and colleges. They come from the cold climates of Canada, Minnesota, Michigan, and Montana; and from the more temperate zones of Florida, California, Alabama, and Louisiana. Some are from the mountains of Colorado, Pennsylvania, Maine, and Oregon; others are from the coastal areas of the Pacific, Atlantic, or the Gulf of Mexico; still others come from the mid-western plains of Kansas, Iowa, and Illinois. While the family, social, and geographic backgrounds of the students vary much, there is one thing about all of them that is common—their desire to be good nurses so that they can better serve humanity. To these students who enter the Sanitarium, each patient cared for becomes a sick mother or father, an old grandfather or a loving grandmother, a future child, a brother or sister, or a favorite aunt or uncle.

INSPIRING MOMENTS occur to the student nurse when she contributes a well-planned class report or leads an interesting class discussion organized according to her own creative ideas, or gives a class demonstration in nursing that wins the praise of instructors and classmates. Other inspired moments come when she eases the pain of a cardiac patient by a well-timed intravenous injection, quiets the labored breathing of an asthmatic by starting nasal inhalations of helium-oxygen mixture, or soothes the crying of a hungry baby as she cuddles him close to her and feeds him his two A. M. bottle of warm formula. The smile of a sick child for whom she has cared when he was too ill to smile, or the farewell of a patient leaving the hospital, who, at one time, she thought would never see the light of another day, can be ample reward for the more discouraging days. These overshadow the times when she is too tired to study for an anatomy test or when she watches life ebb from the limp body of the "wee premature" to whom she had ministered so tenderly, or when she assists with the birth of a still-born baby. One thing through the dark days holds her to her original purpose. This is the certainty that life must go on, that dark days will surely be brightened by golden ones, and that, in spite of everything, she is doing God's work.

HUNDREDS OF STUDENTS have come to the "San" to learn nursing. Over four hundred of them have graduated, passed state board examinations, and become "R. N.'s." Most of these have spent hours in service to mankind in hospitals, homes, clinics, and industries in this and countries abroad.

Once a girl has met the requirements of an "R. N." she can not stay away from active nursing. It is in her blood. Seeing all those who need nursing is a challenge that can not be denied. If she marries, she is seldom content to selfishly enjoy her home, to keep it immaculate for her husband, and meekly rear their children. Or if she must of necessity stay at home while her family is young, when the children are of an age that they no longer require her full-time services, it becomes important for her to get back into the professional groove and associate with her own kind again. Even while her family is growing up there are times when she can help the school nurse take temperatures and weigh and measure children; she can give tuberculin tests or disease immunizations, or talk to the P. T. A. or women's department of the church about matters pertaining to health. She can sponsor a Bluebird Circle or an Oriole Band, serve as den mother for a group of Cub Scouts, care for children at the nursery school during school sessions, help conduct junior church, or teach a church school class. She can go to youth camps or attend reunion as a nurse. Everywhere she goes she will find an occasion to use some of her valuable knowledge, dexterous skills, or sense of judgment to minister to the needs of those who require such ministrations.

ONLY A FEW of the San's graduates who have proved their worth by their works can be mentioned here. Only a few of the fields of nursing or the means by which they have found it possible to aid others can be recalled now.

Edna Haviland Welch, Doris Eliason Caster, and Jean McDonald Carswell minister to the needs of children in their work as school nurses.

Virginia Fitch, Sybil Harper This-thlethwaite, and Josephine Faulk

Vickery are public health nurses in the South.

Helen Ekburg, Euleta Morrison, and Elaine Metcalf have within the past three months entered the Army Nurse Corps to help care for sick and wounded soldiers. Captain Victoria Blackburn, another member of the A.N.C., has just returned from months of duty in Japan and is now on her way to Europe to continue her ministrations to those needing them. Dorothy Smith and Marjorie Grimes have spent years in the service of the Veteran's Administration caring for the sick.

Edith Wingett and Cleo Larson manage small community hospitals as hospital superintendents.

Ruth Spiller Zion was assistant supervisor at the San. Later she was college nurse at Graceland. Now she is married and living in Independence where she devotes her time to the welfare of her family and aids in various church, neighborhood, and P.T.A. activities.

Vera Gamet Njeim and Leola Brady Wight are wives of missionaries and able assistants to them.

Re Carpino and Anne McKinney, 1950 graduates, are doing general duty nursing and ministering to the needs of patients in a small rural hospital.

Virginia Johnson, another 1950 graduate, is assistant to a young physician as his office nurse.

Lily Ng Mitsunaga is caring for tuberculosis patients in a large municipal institution. Evelyn Wiley is meeting the needs of sick children in a charity institution.

Vida Jackson McGlassion, Donna Holmes, and Catherine Author are supervisors at the San during the evening and night; they also take the responsibility for the administration of the hospital, the nursing duties, and teach students who are on duty.

Mabel Faulkner supervises the maternity ward where over twelve hundred babies first draw breath each year. Edith Ehlers Phillips assists the doctors in delivering babies, supervises a home, and cares for an invalid father. Elizabeth Jahn, a 1950 graduate, chose to spend extra time learning and practicing supervision in the labor and delivery rooms so she could teach young students who are assigned to that department.

Iola Tordoff is away at Western Reserve University studying medical nursing so that she can come back to the San and be a better instructor in the school. Many nurses are taking advanced work in colleges and hospitals so as to become more proficient in meeting the professional needs of their patients and students; among these are Stella Zieffe, Louise Heiserman, and Alice Itamura. Still others are taking educational courses on an in-service basis—that is learning on the job.

Lavon McFarlane Eastwood has been a faithful Oriole leader during the years her girls were growing up and has kept the hospital supplied with Oriole page service. Maxine Mann Munro is leader for a group of College Street Skylarks.

Florence Hanson Grabske was operating room supervisor at the San for a number of years and now ably assists her dentist husband in his office. Blanche Minton Craton, a former medical floor supervisor at the San now ably assists her pharmacist husband in their drugstore.

Irene Engstrom Shearer is employed at the hospital as an assistant to the pharmacist. She is capably guiding four young daughters in the growing-up process. One of these daughters is a student nurse at the San.

Nelle Morgan is director of nurses at the San, and a capable director of the Board of the Missouri State Nurses Association and member of the Missouri State Board of Nurse Examiners.

Vida Juergens Smith, Beulah Lytle Pimblott, and Mabel Andrew Mc-Kevit have, besides rearing families, found time to act as camp nurses at Nauvoo and Gardner Lake.

Shirley Butler was a school nurse in Kansas City for several years. She came to the San as medical instructor and had charge of the student health program there. She is now Miss Morgan's assistant, being in charge of nursing service in the hospital. She also teaches ward clinic classes, is student adviser to the Student Council, coaches the variety show, and is a counselor that all students and graduates love and respect.

Lucy Marie Nelson Land, a former instructor at the San, and Ella Ultican Winholtz devote themselves to the care of the very ill private patients during the night hours when their husbands can be home with the children.

Eva Franklin, Faye Franklin, Lonita Fry, and Lena Goode ably supervise departments at the San and guide the students in their ward experiences, at the same time looking after the welfare of their patients and hospital equipment.

Almost all of these have been students at the San under the regime of Gertrude E. Copeland, who—while not a graduate of the San—after twenty-eight years as its superintendent is claimed as a member of its professional clan.

San nurses are outstanding members of their profession, of their community, and of their church.

Observes Fifty-fifth Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Atwell of Independence, Missouri, observed their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary on February 21. Mr. Atwell, a retired Burlington Railroad man, came to Independence in March, 1882, and attended the first General Conference of the Reorganized Church to be held in Independence. He and Mrs. Atwell have made their home here since 1915. They have five sons: Ammon, Melvin, Alma, Guinn, and Immanuel; thirteen grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren.

Funeral Sermon of Bishop John C. Dent

By Elder C. E. Muir

London City Pastor and District President

SCRIPTURE: I Corinthians 15: 35-38

DURING THE RECENT PAST several of our greatest ministers for Christ have been called to pass through the vestibule to the world beyond where they have their rest in the Paradise of God and fellowship with Christ.

One of these was Bishop John C. Dent who endeared himself to all who came in contact with him. His passing stuns us in London and other branches of the church in the London and Chatham Districts; yet we shall not fully realize how great the loss until, during the days to come, we shall miss what we have learned to take for granted—his presence in our midst with his outstanding personality, his counsel, his wisdom and the many other qualities which made him a man of God. A high priest and bishop for thirty years, he had opportunity to minister to many people in this area. His radio-ministry from London and Chatham stations brought comfort and courage to a great number of people in different walks of life. Many who are seated here can testify of how his ministry has pointed them to Christ.

However, all about Bishop Dent is not lost—for his teaching is deeply imbedded in the minds and hearts of countless men and women. His example shall be remembered and felt by even the very young who have known him. As he grew older in years he was losing in a physical way but gaining spiritually. Such spiritual gains could be attained only by early cultivation. Thus he imparted to us that which his eyes have seen, his ears have heard, and his heart has felt, of the mysteries of God. He could see the common things more clearly—see their meaning and their beauty. I am sure that he was able to see the great things, too—the goodness and glory of God, the meaning and value of Zion; he could see Jesus Christ as the Revealer of the Father's love. Bishop Dent was, at least in this sense, a prophet.

He has gone to his reward, but thank God for what he has left us.

I HAVE HAD some very fine visits with him during the past two years. Always he finished the conversation on a note of hope and confidence. Recently, while we were traveling together to a service in Brantford, he emphasized many fine memories of the past, mentioning the names of several who had helped and associated with him during the years. He spoke of the confidence he had in the leaders of the church and their ability to direct us toward the final consummation of God's purposes. He expressed confidence in the many fine young men who are now accepting leadership in this area, and more than anything else he dwelt upon the goodness of God to him. My association with him has convinced me that he carried the unyielding testimony of the love of God which reminds me of the statement of the Apostle Paul,

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, for thy sake we are killed all the day long: we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Such a testimony comes from experience in the things of God.

He had the glow of high-heartedness and enthusiasm to the closing day of his ministry on earth. He had a zest for living which did not depend upon favorable circumstances and easy success. His deathless vitality about his ministry can best be explained by the phrase, "He was alive in Christ."

These words were recorded of another but seem to fit the qualities of Brother Dent:

Children loved him. Young people sought his company. Older people eagerly desired his friendship. No one ever called him a bore when he had gone out. He knew how to be silent at the right time and when he spoke he said words that looked more to the future than to the past.

To these words I would like to add:

He was never disturbed because he was not noticed, and he retained his serenity because he loved God and thought of him and his church more than he did himself.

He lived with optimism for his own times, and for Zion to come. He took his leave from us loving God and man—with faith in those of us who remain to complete the unfinished task.

Plano Church

A Landmark in Church History

By Ruth Wildermuth

SINCE YOUNG JOSEPH SMITH assumed the leadership of the Reorganization in 1860 there have been many beautiful edifices built by the church dedicated to the worship of God, but the little stone church in the small city of Plano, Illinois, continues to occupy a unique place in the hearts of all Latter Day Saints as the first real home of the Reorganized Church. As the years pass, this little stone building is truly becoming a shrine, not only to the present day members of the branch who have the beautiful experience of worshipping there, but also to many Saints throughout the United States and Canada who stop in their travels to discover the church always open and to sign their names in the guest book. Many of them like to see other historical landmarks in the town, because this was for many years the home of "Young Joseph" and his family, as well as other members of the Smith family, Alexander and David, and many men of prominence in the early days of the Reorganization.

Plano was chosen as the meeting place for the General Conference in 1865 after the burning of Mechanics Hall in Amboy. A branch of Saints had been organized in Plano on April 21, 1861, with Elder James Horton (an elder in the old organization) as president and with Samuel McIntyre as teacher and clerk. At least a part of the time the meetings were held in the old Academy Hall.

The Saints' Herald, which was first published in Cincinnati, was printed in Plano after 1863 by Isaac Sheen. In 1865 the editorship of the Herald was assumed by Joseph Smith, who with his family moved to Plano in January, 1866.

The Smith family at this time included Joseph, his wife Emmeline Griswold Smith, three daughters, Emma, Carrie, and Zaide, and an infant son, Joseph Arthur. Shortly after their arrival in Plano Mrs. Smith became homesick for the old home in Nauvoo and it was arranged for her and the baby boy to go back for a few weeks' visit. President Smith records in his Memoirs of the premonition which came to him as he bade his wife and baby good-by at the train in Chicago that he would never again see the two of them alive. This premonition came true when he received word from Nauvoo telling him that the boy was seriously ill. Upon reaching there he found that the child had died the day before. The tragedy of the boy's death was softened for Joseph when he learned that shortly before his passing, because of some manifestation to his wife, she had been baptized into the church by his brother David, and for the remainder of her life found great joy in the church which her husband was serving so well.

At the General Conference held in Plano in 1866 the branch was requested to consider measures for securing or erecting a building which would be adequate not only for the local needs but also for housing the General Conference. The congregation acted favorably on the proposal, and in the spring of 1867 a building committee was appointed and given the authority to secure the means and proceed with the building as wisdom should direct. This committee was composed of Joseph Smith, Isaac Sheen, and William Bronson. A short time before this an effort had been made to build a church at Fox River near the home of Israel Rogers who had contributed generously in lumber to this project. For some reason this movement was abandoned. Brother Rogers was glad to transfer his gift of lumber to the building project in Plano.

A subscription list was started among the Saints and some of the townspeople also contributed—among them one of Plano's most prominent citizens, Lewis Steward; William and Denslow Henning, brothers, donated two town lots, sixty feet frontage by one hundred and twenty feet deep. These donations were credited to the Hennings at one hundred dollars. Brother John Earnshaw, a stone mason and contractor from England, gave the committee an estimate for the stone work of the building which was to be forty by sixty feet with an eighteen foot ceiling. Brother Levi Lightfoot, a carpenter and builder, estimated the lumber work. In the latter part of the year, the committee contracted with a Mr. Post who owned a quarry on the Fox River for seventy-five perch of stone, and with the other materials secured, active construction was begun. Brother Lightfoot took the contract for the job and began work on March 18, 1868. From that time on until fall the work progressed steadily.

The footing of the building was outlined with a smooth-surface stone obtained at Aurora, as also were the corners, the arched windows, and the doorways. An oblong plate of the same material with an inscription carved thereon, was placed on the front of the building, "Holiness to the Lord, 1868." By some mistake the painter, Brother Wright who outlined the motto reversed the "N" in the phrase and the oddity still stands carved in the enduring stone.

As the building neared completion it was found that the materials needed had taken more of the money than the committee had planned for, and that the building fund was completely exhausted. One Thursday morning members of the committee met to consider what could be done. They decided to present the matter to the Saints at prayer meeting that evening and if by Saturday nothing had happened to relieve the situation the project would be abandoned temporarily. At that prayer service, the Saints engaged in earnest prayer over the matter, and finally parted rather discouraged in spirit. President Smith describes in detail in his Memoirs a dream he had that night in which, as he was sitting at his noon day meal, a man, whose face he did not recognize, came and offered him the loan of eight hundred and fifty dollars on his individual receipt of the money. The next morning when he went to his office he told of his dream to Brother Sheen. And that noon as he was eating his dinner that dream was fulfilled in its every detail. Brother Samuel Williams came and offered the loan of eight hundred and fifty dollars. Being a wise business man President Smith records that he would have been reluctant to borrow the money, except for the circumstances of the dream. What a marvelous answer to prayer!

And so the work of building continued. Because of the lack of money there was some difficulty in deciding just what type of seats could be put in the church. So Brethren William and Edwin Crum, iron founders, came to the rescue with a proposition to furnish iron ends and center pieces, if lumber could be obtained for the seats and backs. This offer was gladly accepted and the Crums donated their work. All of the men of the branch turned out to help make the seats. They were finished and all the inside woodwork of the building was painted in time for the conference of 1869. Church history records that the building was dedicated November 15, 1868, the first to be deeded to the bishop of the church. It stands today as a testimony that the pioneers of the Reorganization knew how to build a beautiful and enduring church.

During the years that followed until the end of 1881 Plano continued to be the headquarters of the Reorganization. Therefore the history of the branch and the general church are very closely associated. Many things of importance occurred as the faithful were gathered back into the true church; new converts were made, and the way was prepared to move on toward the Center Place which God had designated to the early church.

Plano was the scene of fourteen General Conferences. Here was given the revelation, now Section 117 of the Doctrine and Covenants, in which William W. Blair and David H. Smith were added to the presidency, and William H. Kelley, Thomas W. Smith, James Caffall, John H. Lake, Alexander H. Smith, Zenas H. Gurley, and Joseph R. Lambert were called to the Quorum of Twelve. In the Conference of 1866 at Plano authorization was given to contact Sister Emma Smith about the manuscript of the Inspired Version, which had been her sacred trust for many years, and provide for its publication. During the twelve months following every effort was made to make a perfect copy for publication from the manuscript and the old Bible from which the revision was made. The last Herald of 1867 carried the glad news that the first five hundred of the first edition of five thousand copies of the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures were ready for mailing. Here in Plano the Herald was developed from a monthly into a semi-monthly magazine, and in 1869 hand printing was replaced by steam-powered machinery. In July, 1869, a child's paper, Zion's Hope, appeared, sponsored largely by Marietta Faulconer. Here also was published an edition of the Book of Mormon.

The church was now issuing many public documents which needed something to mark them as official. Accordingly, at the Conference of 1874 a committee composed of Joseph Smith, Jason W. Briggs, and Elijah Banta was authorized to adopt a style and form a church seal. The work of this committee was reported as follows:

"We, your committee on church seal, respectfully submit the following design, with legend, date, and motto: 'Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.' Emblem, a lion and a lamb lying down at rest. Motto, 'Peace.' Incorporated 1872." This suggestion was approved.

From Plano missionaries left for their fields both in the United States and abroad. Here lived Alexander Smith and his family; also David Smith and his family.

The years brought many changes to Young Joseph and his family. Sister Emmeline Smith died in Plano on March 25, 1869, and was taken back to the old home in Nauvoo for burial. During her illness Sister Bertha Madison, a girl of a fine Norwegian family of Mission, Illinois, had assisted in the Smith household caring for the dying mother and the three small daughters. After Sister Smith's death Miss Madison continued in the home and in November of that year President Smith and Miss Madison were married at the home of Bishop Rogers in Sandwich by Elder Elijah Banta. They continued to make their home in Plano where seven children were born to them, David Carlos, Mary Audentia, Frederick Madison, Israel, Kenneth, Bertha, and Hale. Two others were born after their removal to Lamoni.

While in Plano, President Smith took an active part in the community life of the little village, serving for some time as president of the village board. His Memoirs tell of many fine friendships with the townspeople of Plano. When he moved to Lamoni, the Plano Mirror of June 22, 1876, carried this tribute:

"Should these people leave Plano, they will be a loss to the village; they are good citizens and number two hundred in Plano and vicinity. Elder Smith is a good man, and however much others may dissent from his Mormon views, all who know him respect him."

The Saints looked forward eagerly to the day when they could return to Zion, and as a step further the organization was moved to Lamoni, Iowa, in 1881. The last General Conference to be held in Plano was in April, 1881.

With the departure of the Herald office and the Smith family, many of the Saints followed, and although the membership dwindled considerably the branch continued on in Plano. During the years at the turn of the century many men well known in the work of the church lived here—Henry Southwick, W. A. McDowell, Charles Burr, Eli Wildermuth, and F. M. Cooper. Later Elder Joseph Blakely, who had come to Plano from Ontario, Canada, served as a faithful shepherd of the flock for thirty years, resigning in 1940 because of failing health and dying in November, 1942. Since 1940 Elder Richard Wildermuth has served as pastor.

THE PRESENT DAY SAINTS in Plano take great pride in keeping the church as a historical shrine. In recent years the basement has been excavated and made into a pleasant lower auditorium. A Geneva pipe organ installed in 1945 adds to the beauty of the worship services. The past year a start has been made on a landscaping project. Two homes are still standing in which the Joseph Smith family lived, as is also the home of Alexander Smith. Visitors to Plano also like to see the old Herald office which has been removed from the business district to the residential area and made into a dwelling. It is unusual in that it is the only home in Plano to have a corner entrance. The Plano Bank now stands on the site of the old Herald office on Main Street.

Plano branch has some seventy-five members who cherish their rich heritage but are looking to the future with anticipation that the Restoration movement might continue to grow in this place. And this anticipation shows promise of reality when one views the priesthood group which is growing in spiritual ministry to the people. These men meet weekly for classwork, have organized a visiting program among the members, and share in the ministry of preaching, teaching, and presiding over prayer services. Included in the group are the pastor, and his father, Elder L. O. Wildermuth, a superannuated seventy; priests Gerald Blakely and Burdette Heun; teachers Sumner Walker and Walter Sanderson; and deacon Kenneth Blakely. The branch has a weekly bulletin carrying the picture of the church, an active Zion's League and women's department, and an annual vacation church school.

Since Plano church is located in the center of Northeastern Illinois District, many of the district gatherings in recent years have been held there. The ministry of many of the general church officials has been enjoyed. Twice in the last few years President Israel Smith has been a guest in Plano. On one occasion he was invited to be the speaker at the local Baptist Church. It is interesting to know that he and the pastor of the Plano Baptist Church, Dr. R. E. Simms, are distant cousins. The building is filled to capacity often for the district meetings—the same building which at one time could house the General Conference.

The church is always open for visitors, and Plano Saints are happy to welcome them and share with them the historical lore of the Restoration Movement in this little city.

Life's Purpose

Back for the sixtieth reunion of his class at Harvard, the most picturesque alumnus died. A striking figure among the thousands of alumni was this bearded old gentleman with a bamboo staff. Ten years ago at the fiftieth anniversary, he reported on his life. "The short and simple annals of the poor. I think no one can dispute my claims to being the class failure. I have neither wife nor child—land nor money." Having received his master's degree from Harvard, he had studied in Paris. Working for a while as a chemist in a dynamite factory, he forsook the world to live in a Mexican hamlet where he was the only English-speaking resident.

Strange contrasts are these to the words of the Master who cried, exultantly, "It is finished." Startlingly different are the words of Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—II Timothy 4:7, 8. The Christian faith is offered to men not merely as a means to idle away their thoughts and time in innocent fashion—Christianity offers to a man purpose in life which gives meaning to the daily tasks. There is a job to do for the Lord; there is a goal to achieve, the striving for which is great joy; there is a dignity bestowed upon the soul of a man which gives him a feeling of worth before God and men.

A Book Review

By Aaron Booker Kohlman

THE BOOK Kon-Tiki, written by a Norwegian, Thor Heyerdahl, and translated into English, may be considered from different viewpoints, and from any angle it makes absorbing reading.

Looked at as an adventure book, it is full of suspense and action, and is interesting to a wide range of ages. One's imagination is caught and challenged by the courage and daring of the group of men who set out on a primitive raft to cross the Pacific Ocean. The reader is kept in suspense as one bizarre adventure follows another. The book is lavishly illustrated with photographs, very interesting in themselves.

As a human document, the book is somewhat lacking, for the impact of personalities confined on a raft for three months is not evident from the account. If any disagreements occurred, the author fails to give them even passing mention. It would be interesting to know if personal relations actually worked so smoothly, for most of us would profit by knowing how they avoided friction and irritations, or how they handled such situations.

Kon-Tiki, however, has more significance than as a purely adventure story. Mr. Heyerdahl, after much travel, study, and observation, developed a theory that the Polynesian Islands had originally been peopled about A.D. 500, with a new cultural wave arriving as late as about A.D. 1100, and that these people had come by balsa rafts from the region of what is now known as Peru.

Eventually Mr. Heyerdahl prepared a manuscript, "Polynesia and America; A Study of Prehistoric Relations." He contacted one scientist after another, but all thought his theory so ridiculous that they refused to even read his thesis, one principal reason being that they believed that a sea voyage of approximately four thousand miles could not be made in the only craft that ancient Peruvians had, balsa rafts.

From his deep discouragement, he finally conceived the idea of making the trip himself to prove that it could have been done. He found five other men with enough faith and spirit of adventure to accompany him, and the book records the happenings of the trip, as well as the events leading up to it.

Considered in the light of knowledge of the Book of Mormon, the actual happenings of the trip are overshadowed greatly by the many conclusions at which Mr. Heyerdahl arrived. Interspersed among the events of the voyage are very interesting accounts of the ancient life on the islands, as reconstructed from the ruins which are to be found, and from legends which have been passed on by the inhabitants.

The author himself concedes that his migration theory, as such, was not necessarily proved by the successful outcome of the Kon-Tiki expedition. However, he did prove that such a trip could have been made, and thus his theories were considerably strengthened.

Nevertheless, we should not be over-eager to accept Mr. Heyerdahl's theory as fact, but should carefully study and weigh the evidence. James A. Michener, who knows the Pacific from personal experience, in reviewing Kon-Tiki, says that the weight of evidence remains heavily in favor of an Asiatic origin, yet he concedes that the original inhabitants of Easter Island might have drifted there from Peru. Mr. Michener believes that early Polynesians might have sailed their keeled canoes from Tahiti to Peru, and home again, bringing with them the sweet potato, which seems undeniably to have reached Polynesia from South America.

Whatever conclusions one may reach, Kon-Tiki is fascinating and challenging, and should stimulate those who have a knowledge of the Book of Mormon to greater study along this line.

(Kon-Tiki is available at Herald House, $4.00)

Diffident Hero

Orlin T. Greene, pharmacist's mate, received a citation for bravery which read that he volunteered to rescue and did rescue a wounded marine officer during the Solomons campaign, in the face of "heavy Jap machine-gun fire and with complete disregard for his own safety."

When questioned about this, Greene replied: "I don't think I really volunteered, though I may have coughed a little."

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

What is meant by the provision in the Word of Wisdom to eat animal and fowl flesh, if at all, sparingly . . . in winter . . . cold . . . famine . . . excess of hunger?

Missouri

L. K. R.

Answer:

When the Word of Wisdom was given, there were people advocating against the use of meat in human diet. By the year 1847 these people were given the name "vegetarians." Such ideas as vegetarianism came into the church, and as early as March, 1831, the Lord said, that "whoso forbiddeth to abstain from meats, that man should not eat the same, is not ordained of God; for, behold, the beasts of the field, and fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 49:3. On March 27, 1833, the Word of Wisdom was given, stating that meats were to be eaten in winter, cold weather, and in times of famine. The phrase, "if at all," that appears in the question is not in the words of the Word of Wisdom, but we are told that meat should be eaten "sparingly."

Around 1833 many communicable diseases of the animal were transmitted to man by the ingestion of its flesh. Such diseases under strict government inspection have practically disappeared. Modern refrigeration also keeps meat in a better state of preservation than was the case in 1833 when such means were not in existence. From the point of health and disease, we are safer now in eating meat than were the people of a hundred years ago.

This improvement, however, should not be interpreted as a signal for over-indulgence in meat eating. Many a health authority warns against the excessive use of meats in human diet. The argument is that overindulgence may be "the cause of excretory substance and uric acid deposits or rapid tissue-destroying diseases in man." The safe thing for us to do is to be "temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to our care" (Doctrine and Covenants 11:4). Because of the high content of proteins in meat, and because of our bodily needs for these proteins we should eat meat, but when eating it we should do so sparingly and with wisdom, taking cognizance of present inspection and means of preservation.

GEORGE A. NJEIM.

Question:

From Sister Addie Leland, Plymouth, Massachusetts, to the late President Joseph Smith in 1905, relative to an interpretation of the law of tithing.

Answer:

From a letter by President Joseph Smith, dated January 31, 1905: I understand the general teaching of the Bishopric is to this effect: that any person choosing to comply with the law of tithing may do so by paying one tenth of what he may have estimated between himself and the bishop or his agent; and if he is not in condition to thus tithe himself, he may pay whatever he may have to spare as a beginning, and thereafter pay one tenth of his annual increase or interest; that is, one tenth of what he may have left at the end of the year after his living expenses have been paid. This teaching is upon the hypothesis that all will observe the principles of proper economy, living honestly and frugally, keeping out of debt so far as it is possible for them so to do.

It may be possible that you have misunderstood Bishop Bullard, for some of them have taught like this: What they have to give to the Lord is the same as any other debt, and to be paid proportionately, upon the supposition that a person might constantly keep in debt to his fellow men and of course not paying anything to the Lord till he is out of debt, and thus would never have anything to give to the work of the Lord. I have heard this myself. I think the matter is pretty clearly stated in sections 42 and 106 of the Book of Covenants, and in the bishop's circular, which he is authorized to send out.

Question:

Do we believe that the terrestrial and teletial glories are kingdoms of God or the kingdom of God? Is there a difference between the kingdom of God (where God and Christ dwell) and where those of the lesser glories dwell? Would it be more fitting to call the lesser glories "kingdoms of heaven" rather than the "kingdom of God"?

Michigan

C. A. H.

Answer:

As pertaining to the eternal world the term, "kingdom of God," most generally refers to the whole realm of the saved whether in the celestial, terrestrial, or teletial glories. In all of these there is salvation, and all the saved are in the kingdom of God. In Doctrine and Covenants 85:5 the word "kingdom" is applied to the several realms of celestial, terrestrial, and teletial separately. The context must supply the proper interpretation and application.

In the broad use of the word the different glories are all one kingdom—the kingdom of God where He rules, and where all are subject to him. With "many mansions" and all men being "rewarded for their works," there must be different degrees of glory and different realms where the redeemed dwell, but all are in the kingdom of God. We have never been able to draw a line of distinction between the "kingdom of God" and the "kingdom of heaven." They are synonymous. In speaking of the various divisions we believe it would be better to use the terms found in the Scriptures.

Program Enlargement Report For the Council Bluffs Branch

By Apostle Maurice
Draper

INTRODUCTION

The writer had the opportunity recently to share with the Council Bluffs, Iowa, Branch and their pastor, Elder V. D. Ruch, in an interdenominational census and church study. The program included a "self-study" of evangelistic resources in the branch; the actual census taking, in which the entire population was investigated for church membership or religious preference; the interpretation of the "self-study" and census returns; and finally a statement of "program enlargement" designed to meet the responsibilities and opportunities of the branch. Being typical in many ways of most branches, it is inevitable that many of the suggestions for "program enlargement" in Council Bluffs would be applicable elsewhere; therefore this report is submitted in the same form as it was presented to the Council Bluffs Branch.

THE OPPORTUNITY TO PARTICIPATE in the general program of the National Christian Teaching Mission is justly considered a unique experience for us. Our belief that the true Church of Jesus Christ teaching and administering the "fullness" of the gospel had been restored by Divine initiative, our belief in the Book of Mormon as a sacred record of ancient America with its testimony of the ministry of the resurrected Christ on this continent, the concept of a divinely-called and authorized priesthood designated by revelation, and our experiences with continuing divine revelation and an open canon of Scripture are a few of the significant features of our belief and practice which have made it very difficult for us to find opportunities for interdenominational activity in which we can wholeheartedly participate. This is in part because we have been misunderstood and excluded. It is also partly because we have feared the temptation to compromise our convictions as a people called to special service. We feel, then, that we should congratulate the leaders of this movement for the skillful development of a technique which permits a study of the community and internal examination of the church in co-operation with other movements without doing violence at any point to our own convictions. You who have shared the work and responsibility are also to be congratulated for the manner in which you have given time and talent during this week of intensive activity.

Our studies bring sharply into focus some facts that we have known before, and thus they are emphasized and defined. Other facts have been brought to light of which we were not aware, but to which we can now give intelligent and sustained attention in our expanding ministry. Known facts, now emphasized, include the important part played in our movement of a high quality fellowship, and the studious nature of many of our people. Our fellowship is unique in that it is not merely congregational in nature. A common testimony in our church is that we always feel at home among our people, even though one is in a strange city attending a branch for the first time. The high rating on study results naturally from the emphasis on the inclusive scope of the gospel, with reference to physical, mental, spiritual, economic, community, national, and international principles. We who have devoted ourselves to the actual creation of demonstration-communities of the kingdom of God are thereby projected into a broad field of study and training in which all knowledge comes within the purview of Christian wisdom.

SOME OPPORTUNITIES AND RESOURCES for evangelism are clearly revealed in the "self-study" analysis. We note that there is a high rating in evangelism for the primary department. This is to be expected, since many children of baptismal age—eight years—are brought into the church through this church school department. Care should be exercised to insure the sound indoctrination of these children, not only at the level of understanding capable for eight-year-olds, but also in subsequent years of church school study. The junior and intermediate curricula should include emphasis on the duties and responsibilities which pertain to membership in the church of Jesus Christ.

The rich resources of fellowship in the young adult groups can become very significant in their evangelistic ministry. A grave danger which always accompanies good fellowship is that it becomes easily selfish in expression. Ways must be considered to turn this fellowship outward, seeking to share its blessings with unreached persons, who, by reason of being God's creatures and in many instances in search of truth, have a right to these blessings with us.

We are surprised at the relatively low rating given by the women's groups to the "service" features of their experience. Here again, fellowship is stressed. There is nothing "bad" or "wrong" about this evaluation. It simply reveals once more that fellowship is an important evangelistic resource in the women's department. The question to be answered here, as with the youth, is, To what extent is this fellowship reaching out to include others in its embrace? We are reminded at this point of a statement by Apostle E. J. Gleazer: "You must make friends before you can make converts."

The music department rates high in service. This is to be expected, since this department has highly specialized functions in which expression of talents for the benefit of the whole church is central. This fact can also be turned into evangelistic potential through an active search for persons of musical talent, not now participating in the work of the kingdom, whose gifts may be enlisted and dedicated to the service of men through the church.

The Men's Club is a medium of fellowship. There is a great need for the kind of fellowship in which the lie can be given to the traditional attitude that church is all right for women and children, but not important for men. Our program, envisioning industrial, economic, civic, and political regeneration can challenge the most masculine of men. Here is a program which deals with agriculture, engineering, business management, construction, social planning, etc. Can not the fellowship of the Men's Club be channeled into projects of training and service into which the leading men of every field of men's activities can be invited?

As the "self-study" reveals unused evangelistic potential, so the community census reveals the extent of the evangelistic field of labor. It is of interest to note that the Council Bluffs churches turned out 1,040 census takers on Sunday, October 29. The twenty-three participating churches report latest returns as follows:

Calls completed.....	10,985
Not at home.....	3,113
Decline information.....	128
Persons attending, or members of a Protestant Church here.....	17,035
Persons preferring, or members of Protestant Church elsewhere.....	3,468
No religious preference.....	1,335

Our own people responded with a larger number of census takers and workers in relation to the size of the active membership than nearly any other church. We had ninety-six census takers, of whom fifteen were captains of teams. We completed 541 calls on Sunday, with 216 "call-backs" to homes where all were gone during the Sunday canvass. These "call-backs" were over half finished by Wednesday night.

Our new responsibility list from this census is already more than 350. Our sample visitations on Wednesday indicate that a large majority of these people are friendly and responsive to our approaches, and that a great many of them are already near the kingdom.

THOUGH WE ARE AWARE OF many errors on the census cards returned to us regarding church membership, age estimates, and divided families, yet they represent a vast body of information from which a careful analysis will reveal the evangelistic field for each department and organization of the branch. To make this analysis and assign responsibility for "fellowship cultivation," a commission has been appointed by the pastor. As the cards are analyzed by age, sex, and interests, we will find that each department will receive assignments of names which represent a substantial increase in their participating members. To meet the needs of these enlarged groups, we need, now, to give careful attention to our facilities, equipment, and program.

The most obvious need for the Council Bluffs Branch is at least one new church building. The old building is antiquated and grossly inadequate even to meet the needs of the present attendance in any department. That substantial growth will be made immediately upon the providing of more adequate quarters is evident by the increase in church school attendance of over one hundred persons in less than a month since new space was provided for juniors and intermediates in the Danish Hall nearby. Already there is evident a need for more space for these departments. Undoubtedly, the same growth would be achieved in the youth and adult departments were better facilities available. We shall keep this in mind and refer to it once more in making specific recommendations.

The fellowship of the youth and young adults needs to be spiritually motivated and enriched by a sense of testimonial commission. There is no finer opportunity for achieving this than in the services of prayer and testimony. The participation of the youth in these services does two important things:

1. It enriches the quality of existing fellowship through mutual devotion to a compelling life purpose in which God shares and takes the lead.

2. It enhances the values already in the group by interaction with the whole age range of the church, in which the vigor of youth gives enthusiasm to the more mature and aged, and in turn the assurance and sound faith of experience undergirds and builds the foundations of life in the youth.

WE SUGGEST THE FOLLOWING as goals to be achieved, methods which might be used, and equipment which would be helpful in meeting the demands of our evangelistic opportunities:

1. THE CHURCH PLANT

The expeditious construction of the new building, with attention to plenty of space for religious education.

2. TEACHER TRAINING

The creation of a class in teacher training, which will function continuously, beginning a new series of lessons with new pupils as soon as the old course is completed. This could be a "brush-up" class for teachers already active and a recruiting class for needed new teachers. Every church school class should have a teaching "staff," rather than "a teacher." This staff could well rotate in responsibility, thus providing variety in personality, point of view, and opportunity for the teachers to replenish their supply of ideas and materials. A staff of two to four for each class would permit every teacher to take one or two quarters each year, either consecutively or alternately, and would guarantee an adequacy of trained and experienced teachers continuously available.

3. TEACHING FACILITIES

The enlargement of the "new members and nonmembers" class, with more adequate space. In the nature of things this class should have priority attention to the matter of adequate teaching facilities in a place where distractions are at a minimum.

4. LEAGUE PROJECT

The adoption by the Zion's League of an attendance and participation project in support of the mid-week prayer and fellowship service. The League might also profitably give attention to the selection of a project of special service—not necessarily money-raising—in which their physical vigor and spirit of social fellowship are advantageous. Such a project might be the physical care of the church property, building and grounds, under the direction of the deacons. Another might be the gathering, repair, and distribution of toys, games, and other gift items for underprivileged children. Perhaps some other service project will occur to them, but in any case such a project ought to make use of their sense of fellowship and reach out into the lives of others, both as beneficiaries and participants.

5. MEN'S CLUB ACTIVITIES

We sustain a very heavy preponderance of girls over boys in the baptismal rate of persons from eleven through nineteen years of age. This suggests a great need for improvement in our ministry to boys. I am persuaded that this need begins in the intermediate group, ages twelve through fourteen. We do a better job meeting the needs of the younger boys. An analysis of this situation reveals that this is probably because the younger boys respond more readily to the leadership of women than do the older ones. This is recognized by the Boy Scouts of America, who provide "den-mothers" for the packs of Cub Scouts, ages eight through ten, while the leadership of the Boy Scouts, ages eleven and up, is drawn entirely from older boys and men. This suggests that a very worthy area of service by the Men's Club is in the field of male leadership for boys. Why could not the Men's Club undertake a study of the needs of leadership for boys, including reports and speeches from representatives of various boys' movements, and follow through by providing church school teachers for boys' classes, Cub Scout packmasters (with help from the women for den-mothers), scoutmasters, and adult leadership in such a program of gathering, repairing and distributing toys, should the Zion's League undertake such an activity?

Another worthy activity for the men would be to adopt a service of the church which needs special support and make it their service. This does not mean that they would assume responsibility for planning and administering the service. This belongs to the priesthood under the leadership of the pastor. But they could consult with the pastor, so that the nature of the service can be studied and prepared with the support of the men particularly in mind, and they could be invited to provide the special features of the service—music, ushers, dramatizations, etc. We suggest the Sunday evening service for this. The men could agree that particular attention will be given by them for attendance and participation in this service, with invitations to their families and friends to join them.

6. MUSIC DEPARTMENT

Expansion of the music department, both as to numbers and variety of function. Already this work has begun with the organization of the adult choir and the Cecilian singers. It could well continue through the searching out of leaders and singers for boys' and girls' choirs, quartets, and specialist groups. Opportunities for service expression can be multiplied by the organization of a boys' choir, a children's choir, a male quartet for both sacred and secular music, instrumental combinations, and solo performances. Such groups could share responsibility for providing music for public worship services, social activities, and even for community functions. Finding the leaders and participants for such an enlargement of the musical program is a major evangelical movement.

7. YOUNG ADULT PROGRAM

There is no area in our program more significant than that of family ministry in terms of stewardship principles. Inasmuch as this touches the lives of young married adults at such vital points, we suggest that this group give attention to stewardship study, practices, and participation in terms of family units. The broad base of stewardship is a sense of divine commission to manage the total investment of God in human life, that is, health, talent, time, influence, and money. It has been said that the home is the workshop where human character is built. The home is the foundation unit of stewardship. Texts such as Zion-ic Procedure by Bishop DeLapp, Handbook of Financial Law by the Presiding Bishopric, and helps to financial stewardship found in the Family Income and Expense Record, Youth Income and Expense Record, and My Stewardship can serve as the basis for class study. These can be supplemented by seminars on special problems of stewardship, that is, the divided home, training children in financial law observance, and budgeting.

The young adults are also vitally concerned with the sociology of marriage and family life. There are materials available for study and discussion in this field. They include Children Are People, by Emily Post; When You Marry, by Evelyn M. Duvall and Reuben Hill; Marriage and Home-Building, by Elbert A. Smith.

Young adults, rating high in fellowship, lower in study and service, and even lower in worship might well add power to their activities by relating their fellowship to worthwhile service, undertaking study in relation to this service, and being led to worship in a sense of divine commission and need for divine aid in getting their job done. For unmarried young adults, whose family interests are obviously of a different order than the married group, these projects and functions might well be related to the leadership needs of the entire church. Could a group of young adults whose interests are not specifically related to any existing special group become a "special" group of their own with the function of studying leadership needs in all departments, and serving as a "clearing house" and "employment service" in development of personnel or searching out the persons who can fill these needs? Suppose such a group were to meet fortnightly, discussing with the pastor and department heads (who may want to appear singly or in groups, voluntarily or by invitation) the needs of their particular departments. After a ten or fifteen minute presentation of needs, the group could analyze the problem, considering the age, sex, training, experience, and other requirements of the necessary leadership, then make assignments to committees to investigate possible resources of personnel among existing membership, community residents, or the possibility of selecting persons for special training to meet the need. This same kind of thing could be done with regard to the providing of equipment and materials for special purposes, as well as attacking the problem of personnel. Social activities, entertainments, refreshments, games, rounding out the program of a group like this would turn its need and desire for fellowship into a real power for evangelism through special service.

8. WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

The women's department is customarily a stable and rich source of Christian service. We note the unusually high relative rating in fellowship given by the women to their functions. This surely does not mean that the Council Bluffs Branch is lacking in service functions by this department. Our observations otherwise indicate that many services are rendered by a large number of women. One group, however, rating itself tops in fellowship is also reported to consist of the same women as composed the group years ago. This group also has a high figure for average attendance. This is evidence of the "holding" power of their fellowship. We might well ask, however, what will become of this group in another twenty years? Unless it reaches out and invites others into this rich, unifying relationship, this great resource for evangelism will disappear in time. The entire department is urged to study its program with the following points in mind:

- Integration with the branch life as a whole.
- Use of materials and program suggestions offered by the General Department.
- Enlargement of group through contact with women of the community in which each group meets, and by adding the present members of the church not now active in the department, and through contact with nonmember wives and daughters.

9. VISUAL AIDS

The branch should be provided with at least one slide and film-strip projector, a large and a small screen, and a sixteen millimeter sound movie projector. These aids to teaching, evangelism, and entertainment can be used in the church school classes and departments,

Briefs

SAULT STE MARIE, ONTARIO.—The Zion's League had a sleigh ride on January 15. Afterwards a spaghetti supper was served in the church basement.—Reported by WINNIFRED SPENCER.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.—The branch was fortunate to escape casualties in the recent cyclone.

Geraldine Sellers was baptized January 7. Two children were blessed the same day. The Worthington family recently moved to Stockton.—Reported by STEVA CALDWELL.

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA.—The annual business meeting was held September 29 with Brewton Greene of Mobile, presiding. The minutes of the last business meeting were read by the secretary and approved.

The various officers read their reports and the chairman of the building committee also presented a report. The following officers were elected: Elder H. H. Jernigan, pastor; Jack Page, church school director; Nannie Clark, junior church school director; Mrs. Marshall White, women's leader; Leonard Clark, young people's leader; Nannie Clark, chorister; Erin White, pianist, secretary and treasurer; Monzer Dees, reporter; Sybil White, book steward; Frank Eubanks, C. E. Garrett, and Jack Page were sustained on the building committee, and Horace White and Walter White were elected to replace Louis R. White, deceased, and Leonard Clark who resigned.

The women's department decided to name their group "The Seeker's Circle."—Reported by MRS. GRADY DEES.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.—The White Christmas service was observed by a special offering of tithes and local funds. An emphasis was placed on the financial law when Elder George Armeson came from Dennis Port to speak to the branch. He was entertained at the home of Sister Margaret Robinson, who recently joined the church. Sister Robinson's husband is an organist and often plays for the branch. Elder Almer W. Sheehy spoke at the funeral of Sister Charlotte Rogerson December 20.

Patriarch Frederick W. Roberts came from Onset to speak at Fall River recently. He also brought a group to hear Elder John F. Sheehy speak.

Elder Almer W. Sheehy visits the homes of the priesthood in this area often. In his last visit he was assisted by Eugene Carter.

Elder Frank H. Dippel of Hazleton, Pennsylvania, presented the Christmas message.

Elder A. M. Coombs was invited by Rabbi Ruderman to speak at the Temple Beth-El about the Restoration doctrine. About one hundred people attended the lecture. Various denominations were represented in the congregation.—Reported by MRS. GLADYS V. COOMBS.

PHILLIPS, TEXAS.—The Saints in Phillips and surrounding areas met at the Community Hall December 3 to organize into a group and to organize a church school. The following officers were elected: Pete Renfro, church school director; Elder L. A. Johnson, adult teacher; Y. A. Knutson, substitute teacher; Velma Knutson, secretary and treasurer; Betty Knutson, reporter.

Services are held at the Community Hall every Sunday afternoon.

Judy Ann, baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Sieber, was blessed December 3 by Elder L. A. Johnson.

Saints from Skellytown, Borger, and Spearman attend these services.—Reported by BETTY KNUTSON.

KIRTLAND TEMPLE, OHIO.—Membership of the branch was increased by seven when Mrs. Robert Whiting and the entire family of Dan Hostetler—his wife, Clara and children, Mary Sue, Samuel, Elizabeth, and William were baptized.

The Christmas program held in the auditorium December 22 was in charge of church school director, A. L. Sanford and children's supervisor, Mrs. Oakley Isenberg. All the children in the children's division participated.

"Each One Win One" missionary committee meets each Sunday evening to study The Restoration Story. T. Evan Thomas is chairman. Other members are Wave Smith, Howard Roberts, Carroll Fenner, A. L. Sanford, and William Rimes. This committee is in charge of missionary work of the branch and conducting cottage meetings under the direction of the pastor, William Williams.

Bishop J. F. Wildermuth conducted financial stewardship classes on two Sunday evenings during the month of December.

December 17 several Kirtland Temple choir members sang in the Willoughby Community Chorus when Handel's "Messiah" was presented in the Kirtland Temple in the afternoon and in the Willoughby Methodist church in the evening.

A Christmas vesper service was held on December 24. The service was in candlelight and carols were sung by the choir, directed by Clyde Ebeling. Solos were sung by Sandra Davies and Mrs. Robert Conoly.

Mary Gale told the story, "The Other Wise Man." Christmas slides were shown during the service and appropriate Scriptures were read by the pastor.

Fellowship services are being held in the homes of the members with one meeting a month in the Temple. During January, meetings were held in the homes of Howard Roberts, Earl Curry, and T. Evan Thomas.

The women's department cleared about five hundred dollars on a turkey supper and bazaar. Mrs. Clyde Ebeling, Mrs. Arthur Burt and Mrs. T. E. Thomas were in charge of the bazaar. Mrs. Thomas and kitchen committee were in charge of the supper.

Floyd Pedersen has been recording on wire the confirmations and blessings of babies. Mrs. Jack Soldner transcribes the blessings and they are presented to the families. This work is in charge of the cradle roll supervisor, Mrs. Floyd Pedersen.—Reported by RUTH BURT.

TAMPA, FLORIDA.—A priesthood and workers institute for the South Florida District, which includes Orlando and Miami, was held January 19 through 21. Dr. F. M. McDowell was in charge of the institute with Elder Ammon Calhoun assisting.

Seventeen members from Orlando were present and sixteen from Miami. The average attendance was seventy-five with 145 present for the closing service Sunday. There were visitors from Michigan, Ohio, Maine, Indiana, and Canada.

Brother McDowell was toastmaster for the banquet Saturday night. Everyone participated in the community singing and toasts were given by Edgar Chevalier of Miami, Floyd Burt of Michigan, H. P. Kelley of Orlando, and Roy McGahagin of Tampa. Ammon Calhoun gave an address using as his theme, "In His Stead."

Theme for the prayer service Saturday morning was "We Seek to Learn," and for Sunday morning, "We Seek to Serve."

Twenty-five members of the priesthood were present Sunday morning. Brother McDowell directed the prayer service.—Reported by ROY MCGAHAGIN.

Attention All Youth and Youth Leaders

WE KNOW THAT YOU WANT TO PARTICIPATE in the major work of the church. Other young people have no monopoly upon zeal and courage. Most certainly none have such a magnificent opportunity to serve as we do in the Restoration Movement.

Here is an opportunity for you and your Zion's League. You are familiar with the Church School Attendance Campaign and its slogan, "Each One Bring One." The Campaign has been marked by some success, although quite frankly we have not yet achieved the results we had hoped for. We believe you can help. We call upon the youth of the church in these days before Easter to organize a Zion's League project in each branch, mission, or mission church school with the one object to bring friends, relatives, and neighbors to the church school. First of all, you can bring your friends, guaranteeing a friendly reception and worth-while activities when they arrive. Secondly, you can work with your church school director and attendance director in discovering who should be contacted among the friends of other members of the church. Visit as many as you can, inviting them to attend; telephone and write letters and postal cards to those you cannot visit personally.

This endeavor will be supplementary to your regular program of Zion's League activities. We take this opportunity to let you know that we are asking you to do this in the absence of Brother Carl Mesle. Brother Mesle was appointed general church Director of Youth, but his appointment is to take effect when he can be relieved of his present assignment as stake youth leader in Independence. We shall appreciate your co-operation and know that you can make a significant contribution toward the evangelistic program of the church in this venture.

Salvation

I wish we could have the faith of Enoch of old to go out and preach or teach this restored gospel to the world.

It seems that many people are asleep, yet think they have a fullness of the Gospel. No one knows, until he has received of the gift of the restored gospel, just what he has missed in his religious life.

I have wondered many times why God lets men go on in wickedness and misunderstanding when all they would have to do is to ask of him which faith to follow and they would be given light.

Many people have condemned the Book of Mormon without even handling it or reading its contents. If they would be open minded, they would find there is more than enough knowledge in the Book of Mormon to give the whole world salvation.

When I can read the books of the church—the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the Holy Scriptures—my soul is filled with joy and the hope of eternal salvation. Often it seems there isn't enough time in one day for me to do all of the reading that I would like to do.

My desire is to continue on in the work of trying to bring salvation to a world of men and women whose lives are so mixed up and befuddled as to the truth of God's word that they may become lost. My prayers are always for God's people and for those who are wandering in darkness.

From a School Teacher

I have a class of eight second year juniors at church school. As a result of stressing the stewardship program during the month of January, I was pleased to have five members of the class file their first financial statements, which I have turned in to the bishop. All students in the class have stewardship books and pay tithing. Some are nonmembers, but they too are keeping records and paying their tithing.

An Answer to Prayer

During the summer of 1949 I was bedfast with a spinal ailment. The doctors believed that I would have to undergo surgery for the removal of a disc, but I sent a request for prayers to the Herald that another course of treatment I had decided to take would eliminate the necessity of an operation. A year of these treatments plus the prayers of the Saints have helped me so much I am now able to do all my own work, although I still feel a few twinges of pain occasionally. I am thankful to my Heavenly Father that the terrible pain I used to suffer has left, and I thank all who remembered me in prayer so faithfully.

A Golden Hour for Prayer

By Marguerite Constance

I FELT A WARM GLOW as my husband offered up the prayer at our family altar. On either side of me was a small daughter kneeling quietly. Knowing that we were attempting to fulfill the command, ". . . and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord," brought a measure of satisfaction.

Suddenly from one side of me came a faint sound which gradually increased to a decided giggle and, before the hurried "amen" of my husband, had all the earmarks of uncontrollable laughter being quickly smothered by a corner of a sofa pillow. I arose quickly and looked reproachfully at my older daughter; her eyes were gleeful as she pointed at the apparently innocent figure of our current kitten curled in a corner of the davenport.

"Oh, mother, it was so funny. Kitty was trying to slide down my back." Just then I noticed the younger daughter was still on her knees; she had fallen asleep while her father prayed what we felt to be a rather short prayer.

After assuring our offspring that the kitten should be outside during the worship period and gently tucking the little one into bed to finish her night's sleep, my husband and I attempted to bring order out of the chaos that had suddenly disturbed the peace and satisfaction of our family worship period.

"Somewhere, my dear, we are missing an opportunity during this period of worship. True, the girls are learning reverence of God and are forming a habit of communion that may go with them all their lives, but . . ."

"But," I continued, "if the family altar is to be effective, it should reach not only the older members of the household, but also the younger members."

Out of this discussion grew our "golden hour for prayer"—or in our children's terminology, "our pray hour."

AROUND SEVEN O'CLOCK the next evening, before the children became too weary, we brought their own little chairs into the living room. After attractively arranging a familiar picture of Christ on a low table, we called the children in. We felt a little embarrassed that first evening and perhaps a little awkward, but the children were delighted. They didn't seem to mind that just two little girls and their mother were gathered with their father to listen to a story of Jesus, whose picture they could watch. And that first night following the very short story which brought out some points of discipline and good Latter Day Saint philosophy, the children had no difficulty staying awake and paying attention to the brief prayer which followed the story theme and emphasized the goodness of Christ.

In a few days, the "pray hour" was an established function in our home. The girls would often have the chairs arranged ahead of time, and my husband and I took turns preparing the worship subjects. And, as pleasant experiences have a habit of doing, the period was expanded to include discussion of numerous childish questions and puzzles that were so much easier to talk about at the quiet familiarity of the home altar than during the busy rush of the day, and also many childish experiences and observations were recounted that otherwise might have been lost.

By degrees we enlarged our scope of participation. Occasionally at first, then more frequently, the children themselves planned the hour together. We were amazed at ideas their little minds brought to us; although sometimes patterned after an earlier experience, they were frequently completely original. By this time, the girls were also taking their turn at offering the evening prayer and seemed most eager for the opportunity to participate in this manner.

WE REALIZED IN A FEW WEEKS that we truly had a precious period of day which meant much to the whole family, but we did not know it was to become a neighborhood function until the girls' little friends began to question what this "pray hour" was and why our daughters would not miss it for any game or childish play outside. One by one their playmates were added to our circle until some evenings we had six or seven youngsters grouped about our living room. At first we wondered if our family altar were losing its "family" effectiveness by enlarging its circle of participants, but many of these little ones had never been to church, and practically none of them had offered a prayer of any kind. We could not refuse them the opportunity which we as a family could offer. Subsequently, we realized our daughters held as much more precious that which they could share with others. As we realized our circle was growing we had to enlarge our own scope of activity. Occasionally we joined hands and had a sentence prayer instead of the usual prayer. Not once did anyone refuse to take part in this friendly circle, and out of this each child grew to the point of prayer relationship where he too could offer a short prayer of his own.

For two years, while we lived in that locality, our "golden hour for prayer" remained a neighborhood function. Occasionally our family was alone, but more frequently from one to half a dozen other youngsters were with us. Our own children learned a dignity of service and a reverence and understanding of their Heavenly Father that our original family altar could not have brought to them for many years to come. My husband and I found reflected from them a more humble and pleasant relationship with God than we ever experienced before.

Our hearts were indeed full and grateful the night when we realized God had ceased to be a far-off "Father in Heaven," and had become in actuality a guest through his Son in our household. Our older daughter brought the big ottoman beside her chair and cautioned all that were present that this was Jesus' seat, and none else should occupy it. To the children, Jesus was there in their midst, the subject of their prayers, and an honored guest in the household.

THE FOLLOWING simple points may be helpful to others in planning their "Golden Hour for Prayer." These were learned through the trial and error method.

1. Worship must be consistent. Children soon get out of the habit when adults permit every minor interference to become an excuse for skipping this hour. Little ones also follow the parents' example in the "excuse habit" too.

2. The hour should be one compatible to the whole family, but primarily before the children are weary and cross. (We found 7:00 o'clock to be ideal, as our dinner was over and the kitchen cleaned by then.)

3. Using the same part of the house each day for the worship hour together proves effective. The children will frequently have the place prepared when the hour arrives, particularly when they are planning the service themselves. We found the corner of the living room near the piano convenient and effective. The piano stool makes a satisfactory "low table" for pictures, etc., especially when the children sit on their kindergarten chairs.

4. A short discussion period during the service is enlightening to the parents and quite satisfying to the children. Eagerly they tell their individual experiences of the day, and soon they learn this is an excellent time to bring their childhood questions for explanation. The atmosphere of the hour readily inspires confidence and unity.

THESE PROGRAM IDEAS are easily carried out.

Number One: A picture of "Jesus, Savior of All Nations" may be placed on a low table, with a lighted candle on either side. Shades should be drawn against the light, leaving room in semi-darkness.

Standing, adults and children sing together, "Jesus Loves the Little Children of the World." This is followed by a short prayer by the mother, after which the family can be seated.

Father remains seated near the picture on an eye level with the children (they'll watch him closely, their expressions and mood reflecting his own) while he explains the meaning of the picture, and perhaps follows with an original illustration.

After the story, the children will no doubt remember the little colored boy on the street or a friend whose mother speaks a foreign language and ask the frequent childhood question, "Does Jesus love them too, really?" Deep satisfaction will come to them when their natural childish love of everyone is reassured by this lovely picture and story illustration!

When an appropriate pause occurs, the family kneels while the father offers a short and fitting "family prayer."

Number Two: A white cloth is spread over a low table, on which is placed a small jar of milk, various pieces of fruit and vegetables, all attractively arranged. Several small paper cups and dishes (or a doll's tea set) are also placed on the table.

A scripture is read (one of the many emphasizing the goodness of God) followed by a familiar kindergarten song which the children have learned at church school.

The children will be quite excited and squirm and probably whisper, so immediately the mother draws a chair close to the table while the rest of the family sit in a semicircle in front of the display. While she cuts small bits of fruit and vegetables and places them on the plates and pours the milk, she explains the great gift of God through his plan and emphasizes the fact that all good things come of him.

As the children eat and drink, a wise mother can briefly outline what each piece of food is going to do for the body so that it can perform its work for God more effectively.

This evening one of the children may want to offer the family prayer. By now the child's heart is overflowing with a feeling of thankfulness and his prayer will demonstrate this.

Number Three: One tall lighted candle is placed in the middle of the low table; in front of it or to one side can be the Three Standard Books of the church. To one side a number of small "birthday cake" candles are ready.

As the children gather, the mother plays softly "Jesus Bids Us Shine With a Pure, Clear Light" (a children's kindergarten hymn).

After the family sings, the father gives the signal to sit down and reads an appropriate Scripture (as the children learn to read, with a little previous coaching, they will love to assist in this part of the service). A short discussion of the light of Christ as reflected in the lives of everyone is followed by the lighting of the smaller candles from the larger ones.

A dark part of the house is designated to which the children and family go, one by one, carrying candles to demonstrate the fact that one candle does help a little in brightening a dark corner. As a final gesture, all combine their lights to show how much brighter all working together makes a "dark corner of the world."

The family prayer follows this demonstration.

Note: Religious calendar pictures, beautiful scenic photographs, nature subjects, et cetera, can be used as a basis around which to plan the evening worship. In a few weeks, even the youngest child will be able to assist in the planning of the service, growing to the point where he will, perhaps, arrange the entire worship period occasionally. Imagination and a knowledge of the current family need will create a constant source of worship material.

Faith, Power, and Action - By Vassie Z. Sheets

FAITH IS A FORCE within us that causes us to act, but its results depend upon our efforts. Faith does not accomplish much unless it inspires us to do things. A living faith leads to Christian living. If we put our faith into practice, certain results are sure to follow.

If we live according to Jesus' teaching, we will become strong in will and power to do and to endure. The only way to become a strong Christian is to be an active Christian. The faith that makes men strong is the faith that leads to action.

We learn more by doing than by reading or studying. We know the help of God because he has helped us in some task or burden. We know the joy of giving because we have given until we are glad. We know the reality of prayer because we have prayed. Faith becomes knowledge when we do the words of Christ. The people who do not know are the people who do not do.

KNOWLEDGE of the word and the promises of God helps us to be masters of ourselves. If we know the truth of God, that truth enables us to live simply, unselfishly, humbly, and soberly in this world.

Patience is not handed to us on a platter. It comes from years of self-control and self-denial with the strength and the knowledge which are the result of trusting and obeying Jesus Christ.

When we do and endure with the help of God, we come to a blessed fellowship with him. Godliness means godlikeness. As he lives in us and works through us, we will become like him.

If we are born of God and have his Spirit, we will love each other. We will be able to see the good and overlook the wrong. We will be ready to serve. We will be one in the family of God. The best measure of spirituality in a congregation is how much the members love each other.

LOVE OF THOSE within a specific group leads to love of all men. Love grows by practice. The more we love, the wider the circle of our love will be. We do not begin by loving all men, but by loving the members of our family, our class, and our church. Some people talk a lot about the brotherhood of man who haven't learned yet to live brotherhood in their own home or church. The church is to be a school of love and brotherhood where we learn to love each other and develop the spirit that enables us to love all men. We help to build a peaceful world by living in love with those right around us.

A Democratic Church

By George Young, Jr.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO KNOW how to speak English very well to express what you like about the United States and democracy. "I like your freedom of think," is the way a Peruvian friend of mine put it. The freedoms of conscience, of speech, of thought, of the press, of assembly—these are the things which make our country great. These are the things which we should fight for and which, if necessary, we should die for.

Yet, there are some who would deny freedom. There are various groups which vigorously oppose the idea that a man can decide for himself what to think and what to do. We should know of these groups, for knowing of them, we can avoid them. We need some sort of a measuring stick so that we can determine their policies.

The best way I know for finding out just what any particular group believes is to read the publications of that group. See what it has to say about freedom. Ask yourself the question, "Can I say I believe in democracy and still say I believe in the policies of this group?" The answer to that question will determine the position of the group and your position in relation to it. This was one of the questions I had to ask myself while I was yet a Catholic, and my answer led me out of the church. I had to ask myself this same question when I found the Reorganized Church, and my answer led me to ask for membership in it.

THIS IS A DEMOCRATIC CHURCH practicing a democratic religion. I'll apply the measuring stick and prove this is so.

One of the basic principles of democracy is that the majority rules. The Reorganized Church believes this, even while it is yet a minority institution. The Book of Mormon contains this concerning majority rule.

Therefore choose you by the voice of this people, judges, that ye may be judged according to the laws which have been given you by our fathers, which are correct, and which were given them by the hand of the Lord.

Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right;

Therefore this shall ye observe, and make it your law to do your business by the voice of the people.¹

What is it the church desires for America? The Book of Mormon gives an indication of this and paints a picture of pure democracy:

But I desire that this land be a land of liberty, and every man may enjoy his rights and privileges alike, so long as the Lord sees fit, that we may live and inherit the land.²

This further description is given of the relationships the church desires:

And it came to pass in the thirty and sixth year, the people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another;

And they had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift.³

OURS IS A DEMOCRATIC CHURCH, or so it would seem from an examination of one of the church books. We believe in rule by the majority and even go so far as to say that it is not common for rule by the minority to be wrong. We desire that every man be alike in the enjoyment of his rights and privileges, that all be free, and that the relationships among men be right relationships. But we have more than one book. There is the Doctrine and Covenants.

It is generally believed that the Constitution of the United States is the embodiment of all that is democratic in government. Our church believes that. We dare to say that God himself commanded us concerning the Constitution and this is what he had to say about it:

And again I say unto you, Those who have been scattered by their enemies, it is my will that they should continue to importune for redress, and redemption, by the hands of those who are placed as rulers, and are in authority over you, according to the laws and Constitution of the people which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles, that every man may act in doctrine and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto them, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment. Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.⁴

We can find much more. We do not restrict freedom to a few, we believe in democracy for all who would have it. We must believe this for God told us—

And now, verily I say unto you, concerning the laws of the land, it is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them, and that law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me; therefore I, the Lord, justifyeth you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; and as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these, cometh of evil. I, the Lord God, maketh you free, therefore, ye are free in deed; and the law also maketh you free.⁵

Our church is a democratic church practicing a democratic religion. I have applied the measuring stick and this is the conclusion. I may express my belief in all the democratic principles without apologizing for my belief in church principles. I could not do that as a Catholic.

A CHURCH, to be consistent with the teachings of Jesus, must espouse these principles. Consistency is the soul of logic, and if the church is not consistent with the laws of God, to belong to it is not logical.

In all areas of living we must attempt to determine the laws of God concerning them. Then we must determine whether or not our church beliefs are consistent with these laws. If they are not, then it cannot be the church of God.

I am a Latter Day Saint because I believe this church is consistent with the laws of God. It is a democratic church practicing a democratic religion. It is the church of God.

A Ministry of Song

By Henry Anderson

I believe that the choral art will become the great spiritual and artistic expression of American people who respect their fellow men, who know that they can say finer things together than as individuals, and who love the song and the singing.—Credo of Robert Shaw, founder-conductor of the Collegiate Chorale.

AT GRACELAND it has long been considered a fact that the choral art is an avenue for great spiritual and artistic expression. A Zion-centered concept of life requires respect for our fellow men and a belief that co-operative endeavors are more meaningful than is individualistic activity. And Gracelanders love to sing. All in all, it might be said that we subscribe wholeheartedly to Mr. Shaw's credo.

Each year a group of about forty young people are selected from all who come to Graceland's hall and given a special duty of ministry. It is their pleasant task to learn selections from the great choral literature of all time, past and present, and bring these compositions into life for their fellow students in the Graceland community. This ministry of song requires many hours of rehearsal, for a task of this sort should not be done in a half-hearted way. Learning the words and notes are mechanical features of the project, and there is in addition the need for "catching the spirit" of the song. The process of producing an artistically whole choral number requires hours of concentrated study and application. The Graceland Choir believes that great choral music is worth every stretch of sinews, drop of sweat, and reach of intellect required to bring about an artistic result.

THIS YEAR the Choir leaves the campus for the fourth consecutive annual tour. These tours are intended as a tie between alumni and the Graceland of today. Many alumni have felt refreshed by the reawakening of fond memories of "days 'neath the blue and gold" through this contact with Gracelanders. We are proud of the impression made by this group of Gracelanders on strangers who come to the concerts, and hope that in the future the Choir can continue this tour of musical ministry.

Following is a list of the places to be visited on this year's tour:

Members living near any of these places, are invited to come and bring their friends to hear the Choir. Those who would like to have the Choir visit their branch, should write to President E. J. Gleazer, or to Henry Anderson, Choral Director, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

in cottage meetings and family evangelism, and in socials for all age groups.

10. PRIESTHOOD RESPONSIBILITIES

Priesthood members are under a special obligation by reason of their ordination. Every member of the Aaronic and Melchisedec orders is responsible to God and the church for the quality of his ministry. He must be informed about his basic functions. He is charged from heaven with the task of performing those functions. Every man must be engaged in personal study of his ministry continuously and in the service of the people through his priesthood office. Emphasis is laid on the following:

a. DEACONS—are responsible for the care of church property, buildings, grounds, equipment, and the care and comfort of the congregation during services. I deplore the increasing tendency to hire janitors and groundskeepers. Many deacons do not know the joy and spiritual blessing possible through work done with their hands in making the church building and grounds beautiful and clean for the worship and education of the builders of the kingdom.

Deacons are also responsible for "searching out" the poor. The church has abundant resources for meeting the needs of the unfortunate. These people ought not to be reduced to the necessity of asking the church for help; however, the most worthy poor are the last to make their needs known. It is the deacon's job to be so familiar with the people through ministry in their homes that the church can take affirmative steps in their direction when need is apparent.

b. TEACHERS—are first of all the local revivalists. They are to see that members of the "church meet together often" in the spirit of repentance and humility. If this can be encouraged, corrective measures for people already found in sin will be correspondingly fewer. Teachers should have membership records available for attendance checks. The teachers should know the attendance record of every member of the branch. Their visits can thus be effectively directed to those who most need the encouragement to "meet together often."

c. PRIESTS, as ministers in family matters, face a tremendous evangelistic challenge in uniting divided homes, in which the work of the church can only partially be done even when the member is loyal. The immediate task of the priests, therefore, seems to be specifically evangelistic—to minister in divided homes with a view to uniting them, and to complete the family circle when children are nonmembers. Besides this, they are to take the lead in demonstrating in the homes the values and techniques of family worship. Daily Bread is of inestimable value in this work.

d. ELDERS ought always to be circulating among the people in anticipation of their needs for spiritual ministry and in the administration of the ordinances. They should be aware of expected child-births, and prepare weeks in advance for blessing services. They should be alert to maturing romances, and anticipate the need and encourage the young folks concerned to have a church wedding. They should be aware of the probable decisions for church membership and prepare for the baptismal services. They should be so available to the people through their fellowship with them that counseling and guidance will result naturally and be acceptable. Administrations to the sick will carry greater spiritual power and be directed with greater wisdom when the elders know the people through intimate and continual association with them.

It should be noted that no department will do its best work unless its leaders are thoroughly conversant with the total framework of worship, education, service, fellowship, and kingdom-of-God relations which are but facets of the central purpose of the church—the redemption of man through the gospel of the kingdom. Every person, therefore, is urged to participate in the services of general worship—preaching, prayer and testimony, and ordinances. In these services the unity of the body of Christ is demonstrated, and the spirit of its central purpose and fellowship is shared. Through them the total program of the church is integrated through that which every department, class, organization, club, group, and individual contributes. These general gatherings represent the church at work. The health and effectiveness of every part depends upon its being a part of this larger movement of the whole body.

money, the students sent home for their family newspapers. Papers came from Hawaii, Florida, Washington, Massachusetts, California, and many places in between. At least two thousand papers poured into Room 108.

The freshmen studied the makeup of these newspapers from masthead to advertising. They also compared news stories as they were carried in different papers in various parts of the country.

It is an exciting development in education. Graceland is happy to be among those schools in the forefront in this experiment. So far, students and faculty members alike are calling the course a distinct success. Now "English" is fun.

Funeral of John C. Dent

What of tomorrow? A good man has left us, but his name has been perpetuated by what he was constantly doing for the cause of Christ.

What of your name and mine? History shows that our forests have not been cleared by the brawn of men who took things easy. How about the early struggles of the church men since 1830 in pioneering the work of the great Restoration? They worked adventurously toward the kingdom and chose to take risks for it and endure.

We always have this choice to make—to live within and for ourselves, or, in generous forgetfulness, live for God, his church, and his Zion.

The Nature of Priesthood

A TEXTBOOK FOR PRIESTHOOD STUDY

By Charles Fry

This booklet of twelve lessons on priesthood has been prepared for the benefit of the members of the priesthood and for any other persons wishing to study them. The research for this publication has been made almost entirely in the Three Books of Scripture adopted by the church as standard, and the chapters cover grades of priesthood, offices growing out of the priesthood, historical aspects, organization, gifts and blessings through the priesthood, responsibilities under the priesthood, and general aspects of the priesthood offices.

1951 Easter Lessons

If you are planning to use the following quarterlies in your church school curriculum next spring, it would be wise to get your order in early. In 1951, Easter Sunday falls on March 25, and the third quarter material below carries the Easter lesson; therefore, you will need these quarterlies to complete the second quarter.

Kindergarten B-III, "Showing Our Love for God."

Primary A-III, "Friends of the Natural World."

Primary B-III, "Stories of Jesus."

Primary C-III, "How Our Church Began."

Junior B-III, "Jesus' Helpers Take Up His Work."

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

Josephine Green, 827 Fourteenth Street, Rock Island, Illinois, requests the continued prayers of the Saints that she may regain her health and receive strength for the trials she has to bear. She is alone and will appreciate hearing from other members.

Mrs. Ethel Sheppard, 203 West Church Street, Lexington, Tennessee, requests prayers for the spiritual welfare of her family.

John F. Schrank, Atkinson, Nebraska, requests the continued prayers of the Saints that his health may be restored.

ENGAGEMENTS

Weldon-Crayne

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Crayne of Kansas City, Kansas, announce the engagement of their daughter, Mary Lou, to Terry Weldon, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Weldon of Moorhead, Iowa. Both are students at Graceland College. The wedding will take place in the spring.

Johnson-Cook

Mr. and Mrs. J. Allison Cook of Providence, Rhode Island, announce the engagement of their daughter, Jane, to Stanley W. Johnson, son of Mrs. Frank Fiebelkorn of Spokane, Washington. Jane will be graduated from Graceland in June; Stanley, a Graceland graduate of 1948, also attended Whitworth College and now is under church appointment. No date has been set for the wedding.

Barritt-Berryman

Mrs. J. W. Potter of Royai Oak, Michigan, announces the engagement of her daughter, Evelyn R. Berryman, to Ward L. (Bud) Barritt, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Barritt of Council Bluffs, Iowa. Both are graduates of Graceland College. Miss Berryman is now a student nurse at the Independence Sanitarium, and Mr. Barritt is in the Navy. No date has been set for the wedding.

Buckner-Essex

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Essex of Pleasant Hill, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Edith Mary, of Kansas City, Missouri, to John Richard Pearce Buckner, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Buckner of Pleasant Hill. Miss Essex is employed by the First National Bank in Kansas City. Mr. Buckner is a junior at Southern Methodist University School of Engineering, Dallas, Texas.

Introducing

GERALD GABRIEL (page 5) introduced April 23, 1949.

RUTH (Gregory) WILDERMUTH, Plano, Illinois (page 10), was born in the adjoining town of Sandwich in 1913. She was graduated from Plano Community High School in 1930 and attended Graceland College in 1934-1935. In 1936 she was married to Richard E. Wildermuth. They have three children: Cynthia 11, Roger Gregory 6, and David Otis 1. Before her marriage Mrs. Wildermuth served as reporter for the Plano weekly newspaper for five years. She is a member of the P.T.A., the Women's Club, King's Daughters, and Camp Fire Leadership. In addition to serving as a pastor's wife, she is local publicity chairman, historian, and counselor to the district leader of women. Her hobbies are music, reading, and book review.

AARONA (Booker) KOHLMAN, Independence, Missouri (page 12), was born in Wellston, Ohio, in 1913, and baptized in Sans Souci, Alabama, in 1921. She graduated from the Vancleave, Mississippi, high school in 1930, and from Graceland in 1933. She is a member of the Lambda Delta Sigma, and while in college belonged to the Crescent Club, College Players, and Press Club. She taught school at Vancleave one year. In 1934 she married Leslie W. Kohlman. They have four children: Fay 15, David 13, Kathleen 9, and Richard 4. Her hobbies are painting, handcrafts and writing. She is a member of the P.T.A., Home Beautiful Club, General Council of Women, and Messiah choir.

MARGUERITE CAROL CONSTANCE, Blue Springs, Missouri (page 18), was born in Independence on December 25, 1912, and was baptized in 1921. She was graduated from North Central High School, Spokane, Washington, in 1932, later taking correspondence courses in writing. She was employed in stenographic work at the Auditorium in 1929-1930 and 1948-1951. From 1936-1937 she was employed as a medical secretary in Spokane. She was married to Harold E. Constance in 1932. They have two children: Sylvia Fay 17, and Carol Lynne 15. Her hobbies are writing (particularly in the field of the Book of Mormon), handcrafts, and sewing. For seven years she edited the Spokane District "Beacon," and has contributed articles to the Herald, Zion's Hope, and Stepping Stones. She also wrote several Children's Story Hour scripts for use on the radio in Spokane, Washington.

P.S.

* THREE STARS

There was a new moon last night like a thin slice of lemon in the evening sky. Not far away there was a lovely grouping of stars or planets, the lowest glowing like copper and very near, the second more distant, an incandescent yellow; the third and highest apparently trillions of light years away, with a violet tinge.

Doesn't it give the heart a pull to look at the stars like tiny ships sailing in seas of infinite space, and realize that there is no imaginable end to all this?

Reminds one of what James Branch Cabell once wrote: "Man is forever destined to try to measure infinity with a yardstick."

We are afflicted with illusions of measurements and directions. Our clocks, like our lives, tell us that there is a beginning and an end to all time. Our dimensions make us think there are definite quantities of every space. We are deceived by north, south, east, and west.

Out There "Beyond the bounds of Time and Space, Where countless aeons flow" there is no north nor south, no up nor down, no beginning or end of anything.

The thing bothered Einstein until he comforted himself with a theory that it goes in a circle and comes back to its starting point. . . . Ah, but what lies outside of the circle?

Well, it bothered Einstein, and a lot of other people including me. And now, Messieurs et Mesdames, is it bothering you?

* A BIT OF GRASS, A LITTLE TREE

On a strip of grass stood a little tree, and its shade on my window comforted me. The tree stood there in the blazing sun, helping me get my labor done. I loved the grass in its tiny glade, and I loved the tree for its cool sweet shade. Then workmen came with heavy feet, with orders to widen our little street. They took the grass and they cut the tree, and they left us bare, bleak misery. Now the sterile earth is hard and dry where the bright new cars go rushing by. This is our gift to posterity, for a bit of grass and a pretty tree. Pave the alley, build the wall, spare no beauty for us at all. Tear some papers, add some cans—here's creation, according to man! But in my dreams I often see, a bit of grass, and a little tree!

* QUINDARO CHURCH

A recent visit to the Quindaro church in Kansas City, Kansas, revealed how the work is thriving there. On a Sunday morning when the temperature stood near zero the church was filled by a congregation that ranged from the little folk to veterans who were present when the church was new. Here is a church that has been transformed by the good taste and the hard work of the people. Chancel and choir arrangements are excellent. The new electric organ and a well-trained choir contribute much to the service. The lower floor is used for classrooms. Quindaro congregation has remained faithful through good times and bad. Now, under the leadership of L. A. Fowler, the pastor, and James Skaggs, associate, the church is serving to its full capacity.

Now complete in one album! The Messiah

at 33 1/3 rpm

They've just arrived from RCA! Our new pressings of the Independence Messiah Choir's recordings of "The Messiah" . . . now complete in one album at 33 1/3 rpm.

Yes, the development of long-play records makes it possible for us to offer you "The Messiah" in one album instead of three . . . on two records instead of twelve!

New low price, too! Since the number of records required is drastically reduced, we are offering the new albums at only $10.60 each, federal tax included.

Order your album of "The Messiah" right away.

Estelle Rosamond (Filson) Sherman

THE PLEASANT-LOOKING LADY behind the desk in the Presiding Bishop's office was not just posing for the photographer. Neither is her smile due to a momentary elation upon learning that 1950 was our best year for tithes and offerings and for filing accounting statements. That pleasant appearance was etched there by nature.

After some persuasion the editor got Mrs. Sherman to talk just a little about herself. "I don't think I do anything other than just the ordinary office routine—stenographic and secretarial work that comes my way—but I really have quite a pleasant life, although unspectacular."

All her life she has lived in Independence. She was graduated from William Chrisman High School in 1927, and two years later married Ronald G. Sherman, who is manager of one of our largest furniture stores. They have one son, Jerry, who is a senior in high school.

When the depression hit the church in the thirties, Mrs. Sherman responded to the call to work in the church offices on a volunteer basis. She served part time in the office of the auditor, and later in the Presiding Bishop's office. Since 1941 she has been secretary to Bishop DeLapp.

She and her family are members of the Gudgell Park congregation, where she serves as pianist. Jerry is active in the Zion's League, and her husband is associate pastor.

In her high school days Mrs. Sherman was editor of the Glean one semester—which touches our sympathetic nervous system gently—played in piano contests, for the orchestra, and for the chorus. She also accompanied quartets and soloists in musical contests.

Into her hands first come many of the important papers sent to the Presiding Bishopric. Keeping these where they will receive the necessary attention at the proper time, and being able to locate them as called for is an important service to the church. Of course, no one is indispensable in an office, nor in a branch, but I know some administrators who "do not know how on earth" they would run their offices without their secretaries on the job each and every day.

News and Notes

SAINTS IN IRAN

Anyone knowing the address of a member of the church either permanently or temporarily located in Iran (Persia), should notify the First Presidency.

BAPTISM STATISTICS

The total baptisms for January, 1951, has been reported by the Department of Statistics as 311. This is the largest number of baptisms reported for January since the monthly tabulation was begun in 1920.

GUEST SPEAKERS

Dr. F. M. McDowell and his wife were guests of the Sedalia senior high school, February 22. They were entertained by the women of the church at a noon luncheon and Dr. McDowell addressed the senior high school students in the afternoon. At the evening meal they were guests of the officers of the P.T.A., at which time Dr. McDowell spoke on the Mid-Century White House Conference. There was a great deal of interest indicated in the meetings and the church received some favorable publicity.

VISITS MICHIGAN

Franklyn S. Weddle, Director of Music and Radio, spent almost a week in Michigan. Tuesday, February 20, he was in Flint, and Wednesday night he was in Port Huron. He spent Thursday at the Shute Institute in London, Canada, and was in Detroit Friday where he remained for the week-end activities. The new Moller pipe organ was dedicated at the Detroit Central church. A two-day music and worship institute was held for the Detroit International Stake.

CHURCH REPRESENTED

In a recent art display in Des Moines, a painting of our church there was exhibited. The church is known as "The church of the lighted window." Miss Harriet Macy, the artist, painted approximately eighteen churches of Des Moines for the display. The particular buildings were chosen because the artist wanted to pick out churches that were rather distinctive and different in architecture.

VISITORS IN ZION

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Decker of Cash, Michigan, were visitors to the "Morning Devotions" program February 27. Brother Decker is the youth leader in Cash, and Sister Decker is the former choir director of the Eastern Michigan District.

GROUND-BREAKING CEREMONY

February 12 the ground-breaking ceremony was held for the new church in Seattle, Washington. The contract price is $65,394. Construction is to be completed by May 15, and the interior finish work will be done by the membership. Paul A. Wellington is pastor of the branch.

AWARDED SCHOLARSHIP

Merryanne Dunbar, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Dunbar of Port Huron, Michigan, recently received a music scholarship from the Past President's musicale of Port Huron. Merryanne competed against other students for the scholarship. She is a senior in the Port Huron high school and is a member of the school choir and a soprano soloist. She is also a member of the choir in her branch and often sings solos for various church services.

The Increase of Joy

Editorial

"Thou hast multiplied the nation, and not increased the joy."
—Isaiah 9: 3, King James Version.

For some reason, the translators of King James dropped into the text of this passage of the Bible a negative that did not belong there. Modern translators have cut it out to produce harmony in an otherwise anomalous passage.

It is interesting to us that the Inspired Version, which was prepared early in the history of the church and published in 1867, anticipated this correction by many years. This kind of thing is also noted in many other places in the version of the Holy Scriptures presented to the world through Joseph Smith.

The Inspired Version reads: "Thou hast multiplied the nation, and increased the joy."

* * * *

Yet there is a very provocative thought in the King James version, in spite of the error.

"Thou hast multiplied the nation, and not increased the joy."

Isn't that what has happened to us?

Our nation has grown great, but the old feeling of insecurity is as strong as ever. We know that we are not very far from inflation and have not been far from it for some years. Our economic welfare could be ruined in a short while.

We are bigger, but not happier.

* * * *

The following is not the story of any one person. It has happened so often that it has become a pattern.

A man has worked his way up from the bottom in business. He builds a big company, and has many people working for him. He borrows money, and goes rather deeply into debt. But he has a large income and seems to be paying his way through. As long as conditions are lush, his future looks rosy.

Then people begin to hedge, and the "seller's market" is replaced by a "buyer's market," and his sales go down. He cannot decrease the size of his organization. Income decreases and so do profits. He becomes discouraged and panicky.

Then one day he thinks he can stand the pressure no longer. In the bathroom at home, or in a hotel, a shot is heard, and his career ends. Possessions increase, happiness decreases.

* * * *

In smaller ways, many of us go through similar experiences, though not such fatal ones. We buy a home, furniture, a refrigerator, fancy stove, automatic washing machine, deep freeze, radio, television set, and many other things. And whatever we have forgotten will be suggested by the next salesman who comes along.

American industry can solve all of our problems with a new kind of idea, gadget, or machine. That is, all problems except one, how to pay for all this stuff. That one we must solve for ourselves.

We have increased the size of our possessions.

Have we increased the joy? Probably not.

* * * *

There is one fallacy that afflicts many people: the idea that if a thing can be made super-big, it is sure to be better. There is no greater mistake.

A commencement speaker once came to Graceland College who gave a very wise piece of advice. He said, "It is more important to be good than it is to be big."

Goliath was big. David was good. And you know who won the brief battle that they fought.

* * * *

Size isn't everything.

There was some rich marshland on the home place, and Father once had the idea of growing some good potatoes there. It was a salt marsh. So he plowed and planted. The potatoes came up, and grew to be enormous. They pushed up out of the soil. But when they were dug and opened, they were unfit for food.

Try some of the super strawberries that are shipped in from wherever it is they grow them. They are coarse-grained, and punky on the inside, not nearly as sweet as the little wild ones you pick at the edge of the woods.

Across the Desk

THE PRESIDENCY recently received the following report from Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith. Brother Elbert has been recovering from the flu, which also attacked his son Lynn, with whom he has been making his home during the winter.

I have ministered in Sunday services in Los Angeles Central several times, and in Burbank, Van Nuys, Long Beach, Venice, San Bernardino, Compton, Santa Ana and Lennox.

I wrote you some time ago about the Van Nuys meetings. I also had an especial interest in visiting San Bernardino and Long Beach. In the first of these branches my missionary work under appointment began fifty-one years ago. It was pleasant to meet a few of the old-timers and many of their children and grandchildren. I was surprised at the attendance. The main auditorium was filled to capacity and the doors opening on the annex at the rear were opened to take care of the overflow. I might have been lifted up in my ego at such a response, but I was informed that there had been a similar overflow at the Communion service the previous Sunday. Herald Wixom, son of George and Celia Wixom, is doing a good work as pastor.

Meeting with the Saints at Long Beach I was reminded that some forty-odd years ago, Brother Paul Hanson and I drove out from Los Angeles to hold services in a little hall over a store; this was the beginning of a mission in Long Beach. The outlook did not seem too bright, but faithful workers from Los Angeles Central, Bishop Robert Cooper, Peter Kaufman, and others faithfully carried on and the work grew so that eventually there was a thriving branch in its own church building. The congregation outgrew the building and purchased the present building. I was with Brother Tom Chapman, of pleasant memory, when this building—a synagogue—was purchased from the Jewish Rabbi. It met our needs with little alteration, and I had the pleasure to preach the first sermon in it. The Long Beach Branch has been and is one of our best on the coast. It has acquired adjoining buildings which have been fitted for classwork and junior church services. And this branch in turn has sponsored and sustained at least two successful missions. So I thought I saw a fulfillment of Paul's philosophy, which I may paraphrase like this, "If Paul will plant, and Apollos will cultivate, God will give the increase."

In the various missions and branches I visited it was gratifying to note the number of children and young people in attendance. At Compton the most interested portion of my congregation seemed to be a group of youngsters from the junior church which occupied the front rows of seats. Their interest added materially to the pleasure and interest of the adults. Compton is becoming known as something of a "young peoples' congregation," which is a good omen for the future.

Subtle Propaganda Through Movies

EDITOR'S NOTE: A letter has been received from the National W. C. T. U. in which we have learned of a new device prepared at considerable expense to defeat the cause of true temperance. A film which bears the scriptural title, "The Truth Shall Make You Free," has already been shown in many churches and to civic clubs under the auspices of a group formed especially to distribute wet propaganda known as the Temperance and Tolerance Association. With this pious approach the organization conceals its real purpose—making liquor drinking more respectable. By using a name which gives primary emphasis to temperance while they are really interested only in tolerance for their evil business, they have started to win converts from Christian ranks. It seems important to us that people understand more about this project. Herald readers should be interested in the article which follows:

An extraordinary scheme financed by liquor and beer associations and supported by liquor stores and saloons is under way throughout the country, obviously intended to mislead church people and even to bribe their attention by offering to pay churches for individual showings of a cleverly made and expensively prepared fifty-two-minute long motion picture, sententiously called "The Truth Shall Make You Free."

The film pretends to epitomize America's dealing with the alcohol problem through the past century. Its atmosphere, redolent with religious and moral purpose, closeups of everyday American life, sensational flashes of gangsterism in national prohibition years, affecting to visualize the "failure" of the temperance movement to stop drinking or dissipation, but chiefly its shrewd suppression of the size, the political, and social menace of the legalized liquor power, make the film a complete distortion of the truth.

In appearance it seems to the uninformed a veracious historical picture. This motion picture, sponsored and paid for by the liquor crowd, is advertised as the initial project of the "Temperance and Tolerance Association."

The association's headquarters are in Lincoln, Nebraska. It is advertised as the brain child of one Mrs. Ida M. Thurber, who, it is claimed, is its "founder."

Mrs. Thurber is described as a "former W.C.T.U. leader of many years standing," but a W.C.T.U. investigation reveals that the claim is false. An exhaustive search of records in Nebraska and in Arkansas where the "Temperance and Tolerance Association" figured conspicuously in an antiprohibition campaign last fall, fails to reveal any evidence of Mrs. Thurber's former temperance "leadership."

So far as learned, membership in the "Temperance and Tolerance Association" is for the most part made up of members of the liquor trade who have been directed to get behind the association and the motion picture by their trade spokesmen.

A letter from the Nebraska Beer Retailers' Association over the signatures of Steve Wayerman, president, and Harry Schwid, secretary, says:

The Temperance and Tolerance Association of America . . . is dedicated to the promotion of true temperance and moderation in the use of alcoholic beverages . . . and is opposed to statutory prohibition, whether local, state or national . . . It has the active endorsement of all phases of the brewing industry including brewers, wholesalers, and union leaders. It is our judgment that if we provide the tools, the association will go a long way in removing the constant threat of national prohibition.

The Wisconsin Beverage News, voice of beermakers and brewery workers in that state, urges that all leaders of the alcoholic beverage industry join the association. It says:

The Temperance and Tolerance Association should be welcomed and supported by everyone in the alcoholic beverage industry. . . . Membership in the Temperance and Tolerance Association is only one dollar . . . and should be supported by everybody in the business. These contributions will be used to engage liberals drawn from the pulpits of this country and other organizations who are able and competent to challenge the claim that prohibition is the answer to the problem. . . . These dollar bills needed for this campaign is the most reasonable insurance policy that you can buy to defeat your biggest enemy, prohibition. . . . The Wisconsin Tavern Keepers Association and the International Brewery Workers Union have already endorsed this movement. . . .

The foregoing evidences the latest twist of wet propaganda.

The wet film, "The Truth Shall Make You Free," we are informed, cost the liquor men $65,000 to make.

The Origin, Purpose, and Preservation of the Book of Mormon

Given at the Book of Mormon Institute on Monday, January 8

By Israel A. Smith

THE SUBJECT of my discussion, as you and I know it, is an English account of certain alleged historical records of peoples who lived in the Western Hemisphere, or New World, some hundreds of years ago. Said records are alleged to have been revealed to one Joseph Smith, Jr., by the power of God, and by him translated, by the same power, into English. We have seen what purports to be translations of this book into a few other languages, and we have heard that it has been translated into some thirty or more different languages.

Latter Day Saints—at least we of the Reorganized Church—believe the Books of Mormon we have published are authentic historical records. We presume the various translations sponsored by the Mormons are more or less correct translations of the original Book of Mormon published by Joseph Smith, Jr., in 1830, at Palmyra, New York, known as the Palmyra Edition.

We Latter Day Saints believe this book, speaking as to our issues at least, is an authentic record; that the claims of Joseph Smith with respect to the plates or records, their revelation and translation, are true. We aver these are facts.

As a member of the Reorganized Church, and especially as a descendant of Joseph Smith, I subscribe unreservedly to the claims of Latter Day Saints with respect to this record, its discovery and translation, and I trust I shall be able to make an accurate, judicial, and sufficient presentation of the subject assigned to me.

Now to amplify what I have already stated. Perhaps no more concise but inclusive statement can be made than the one on the title page of the Palmyra Edition which, so far as other editions put out by the original church (The Palmyra 1830 and the Kirtland 1837 editions) and by the Reorganized Church are concerned, has continued to be a part of the title page. (I cannot speak advisedly as to editions of the book put out by the Mormons.) It bears every appearance of authenticity. Here it is in its entirety:

THE BOOK OF MORMON

AN ACCOUNT WRITTEN BY THE HAND OF MORMON, UPON PLATES, TAKEN FROM THE PLATES OF NEPHI.

Wherefore it is an abridgement of the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites; written to the Lamanites, who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile: written by way of commandment, and also by the Spirit of prophecy and of revelation.

Written, and sealed up, and hid up unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed; to come forth by the gift and power of God unto the interpretation thereof: sealed by the hand of Moroni, and hid up unto the Lord, to come forth in due time by the way of Gentile; the interpretation thereof by the gift of God.

An abridgement taken from the Book of Ether, also; which is a record of the people of Jared: who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people when they were building a tower to get to heaven: which is to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations. And now if there are faults, they are the mistakes of men; wherefore condemn not the things of God, that ye may be found spotless at the judgment seat of Christ.

Joseph Smith, in referring to the title page, said:

I wish also to mention here, that the title page of the Book of Mormon is a literal translation, taken from the very last leaf, on the left hand side of the collection or book of plates, which contained the record which has been translated; the language of the whole running the same as all Hebrew writing in general; and that said title page is not by any means a modern composition either of mine or of any other man's who has lived or does live in this generation. Therefore, in order to correct an error which generally exists concerning it, I give below that part of the title page of the English version of the Book of Mormon, which is a genuine and literal translation of the title page of the original Book of Mormon, as recorded on the plates.

Origin

It is unnecessary to go back of the abridgment made by Moroni to the records of which he testified, for the latter stand or fall as his abridgment is established or discredited. In fact, the evidence as to the fuller records is, as we must admit, in the nature of hearsay testimony. This objection may be urged, to be frank, against the Moroni abridgment—but we do have the supporting evidence of the three and the eight witnesses as to the existence of plates or records, which is, of course, lacking as to the others. And the testimony of these witnesses was affirmed by all of them throughout their lives, a fact which, in the light of human experience, suggests forcefully or convincingly that they told the truth. Many persons do not conspire to do an evil or unlawful thing without some of them exposing the conspiracy. This argument has greater weight when it is shown that some of the witnesses parted company with the church which was founded contemporaneously with the publication of the Book bearing their attestation. And here is their testimony:

The Testimony of Three Witnesses

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken; and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety, that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown unto us by the power of God, and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon: and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bare record that these things are true; and it is marvelous in our eyes, nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.

OLIVER COWDERY,
DAVID WHITMER,
MARTIN HARRIS.

And Also the Testimony of Eight Witnesses

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that Joseph Smith, Jr., the translator of this work, has shown unto us the plates of which hath been spoken, which have the appearance of gold; and as many of the leaves as the said Smith has translated, we did handle with our hands; and we also saw the engravings thereon, all of which has the appearance of ancient work, and of curious workmanship. And this we bear record with words of soberness, that the said Smith has shown unto us, for we have seen and hefted, and know of a surety that the said Smith has got the plates of which we have spoken. And we give our names unto the world to witness unto the world that which we have seen; and we lie not, God bearing witness of it.

CHRISTIAN WHITMER HIRAM PAGE
JACOB WHITMER JOSEPH SMITH, SEN.
PETER WHITMER, JUN. HYRUM SMITH
JOHN WHITMER SAMUEL H. SMITH

Joseph Smith's widow, Emma Smith Bidamon, also gave her testimony as to the existence of the plates.

Joseph Smith's story of early personal spiritual experiences prior to the possession of the plates is of course well known to and believed by us. Some years after the church had been organized, he began to publish a biographical sketch of his life. Enemies of the church and writers who condemn him in advance and write to justify their particular theses, have used this late biographical effort to establish a claim advanced in late years, that such early experiences as he (in 1838) was describing were an "after-thought," self-serving in their nature, an attempt to impose further on the credulity of his people now numbering a few thousands.

I have in the month just past seen some early newspapers in the files of the Library of Congress, some printed as early as 1831. These papers carried accounts of the new religious movement begun by Joseph Smith, in such terms that the writers must have heard the story of his experiences in the woods when he was but fifteen years old, and of those he alleged had followed. Evidently they were being told by the elders to their converts. But to avoid any hiatus in our sequence, let us quote from the Prophet himself.

In speaking of an angelic visitor who came to him three times during one night, he alleged the angel on his second and third visits repeated and enlarged upon what he said before. He said, speaking of the first visit:

He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Nephi [this name is given Moroni in the Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2 and 110: 20], that God had a work for me to do, and that my name should be had for good and evil, among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people. He said there was a book deposited written upon gold plates, giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang. He also said that the fullness of the everlasting gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants. Also that there were two stones in silver bows, and these stones fastened to a breastplate constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim, deposited with the plates, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted seers in ancient or former times, and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book.

As to the second visitation:

I lay musing on the singularity of the scene and marvelling greatly at what had been told me by this extraordinary messenger, when in the midst of my meditation I suddenly discovered that my room was again beginning to get lighted, and in an instant, as it were, the same heavenly messenger was again at my bedside. He commenced and again related the very same things which he had done at his first visit without the least variation, which, having done, he informed me of great judgments which were coming upon the earth, with great desolations by famine, sword, and pestilence, and that these grievous judgments would come on the earth in this generation. He having related these things he again ascended as he had done before.

And here is a quotation from his statement as to the third visit that same night:

By this time so deep were the impressions made on my mind that sleep had fled from my eyes and I lay overwhelmed in astonishment at what I had both seen and heard; but what was my surprise when again I beheld the same messenger at my bedside, and heard him rehearse or repeat over again to me the same things as before, and added a caution to me, telling me that Satan would try to tempt me (in consequence of the indigent circumstances of my father's family) to get the plates for the purpose of getting rich. This he forbade me, saying that I must have no other object in view in getting the plates but to glorify God, and must not be influenced by any other motive but that of building the kingdom, otherwise I could not get them.

After relating these things to his father, he said that he went to the place "where the messenger had told" him the plates were deposited, . . . "and owing to the distinctness of the vision which I had concerning it, I knew the place the instant that I arrived there."

He then told of finding the stone box with the plates and the Urim and Thummim, but was not allowed to take them—in fact though he visited the place every year it was not until September 22, 1827, that he was allowed to remove them—with this charge that I should be responsible for them; that if I should let them go carelessly or through any neglect of mine, I should be cut off; but that if I would use all my endeavors to preserve them until he, the messenger, should call for them, they should be protected.

Recently a member of the Utah church came to my home and engaged me in a lengthy conversation in the course of which I made reference to the statement of the messenger at the first visitation, where he said "that the fullness of the everlasting gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior . . ." in the records of the gold plates; that the term "everlasting" connoted eternally the same—from the beginning to the end, and that the Book of Mormon made reference to the doctrine about which we were talking. To that this Mormon responded: "But you know we do not have all of the Book of Mormon." And since the question raised has to do with the origin and preservation divisions of my subject, I have felt led to discuss this matter somewhat.

Joseph Smith, when some 116 pages had been translated, was persuaded by Martin Harris to take them to show to others, and in some way never fully explained, these pages were lost and never recovered—a strange incident, to say the least. Sections 2 and 3 of the Doctrine and Covenants deal with this matter of the lost manuscript. Joseph Smith was told not to attempt to translate or retranslate that portion of the record, because of the evil designs of wicked men, and in verses 8 and 9 of section 3, we find this language:

An account of those things which you have written, which have gone out of your hands, are engraven upon the plates of Nephi; yea, and you remember, it was said in those writings, that a more particular account was given of these things upon the plates of Nephi.

And now, because the account which is engraven upon the plates of Nephi, is more particular concerning the things which in my wisdom I would bring to the knowledge of the people in this account, therefore you shall translate the engravings which are on the plates of Nephi, down even till you come to the reign of King Benjamin, or until you come to that which you have translated, which you have retained; and, behold, you shall publish it as the record of Nephi, and thus I will confound those who have altered my words.

There are other records made by the people of Book of Mormon times which we are told were, and we believe yet are, in existence and which many believe will come forth in the due time of the Lord. But I hardly believe these records can with propriety be called the "Book of Mormon." Certainly the references to the Book of Mormon in the revelations must be held to apply to the record which has come to us through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

So much for the origin of the Book—at least for our claims with respect to its origin. In this we have had to rely mainly, in the last analysis, on the account given by Joseph Smith himself, supported more or less satisfactorily by the testimony of those who joined their fortunes with the church.

There is, of course, with us believers; the fact that many have testified that the truthfulness of the Book has been made manifest to them by inspiration, a most satisfactory method to them, but not necessarily accepted by critics and inquirers generally.

Purpose

Under this division we who believe he was divinely led may properly turn to (1) the account given by Joseph Smith, (2) statements found in the Book itself, and (3) statements found in the Scriptures which have been presented by advocates of the Book as prophetic of its coming forth, and which have value in proportion as one believes they are truly prophetic of such an event as this Book named after Mormon.

Joseph Smith's Account

Under this head we include statements found in the revelations to the church which, after all, are properly a part of his account of the Book.

We go back again to his story of the angelic visitation, as found in Volume I of our Church History, page 13:

He said there was a book deposited written upon gold plates, giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang. He also said that the fullness of the everlasting-gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants. Also that there were two stones in silver bows, and these stones fastened to a breastplate constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim, deposited with the plates, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted seers in ancient or former times, and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book. After telling me these things he commenced quoting the prophecies of the Old Testament. He first quoted part of the third chapter of Malachi; and he quoted also the fourth or last chapter of the same prophecy, though with a little variation from the way it reads in our Bibles. Instead of quoting the first verse as it reads in our books, he quoted it thus: "For behold the day cometh that shall burn them saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." And again he quoted the fifth verse thus: "Behold, I will reveal unto you the priesthood by the hand of Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." He also quoted the next verse differently: "And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers; if it were not so the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming." In addition to these he quoted the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, saying that it was about to be fulfilled. He quoted also the third chapter of Acts, twenty-second and twenty-third verses, precisely as they stand in our New Testament. He said that that prophet was Christ, but the day had not yet come when "they who would not hear his voice should be cut off from among the people," but soon would come.

Again, also, we have recourse to the authoritative title page:

... which is to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations. And now if there are faults, they are the mistakes of men; wherefore condemn not the things of God, that ye may be found spotless at the judgment seat of Christ.

From an examination of the Book itself we could perhaps draw conclusions as to its purpose or purposes, since obviously the Book is corroborative of the Bible and especially supportive of the New Testament record, and is, as all candid and unbiased persons must admit, a new and remarkable witness for Jesus Christ. But, as we believe in the divine origin of the Book and in the revelations to the church through its founder, we prefer to establish its purpose, if possible, by other and—likely to many people—more satisfactory means.

Early in the history of the Restoration Movement, which culminated in the organization of the church, revelations were given to the church by Joseph Smith, and to these we now turn.

In Section 1 of the Doctrine and Covenants, which purports to be God's "authority" and the "preface" of the entire book, we find this reference in paragraph 5:

After having received the record of the Nephites, yea, even my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., might have power to translate, through the mercy of God, by the power of God, the Book of Mormon.

In an earlier revelation, however, given in July, 1828, we find the following:

Inasmuch as the knowledge of a Savior has come into the world, through the testimony of the Jews, even so shall the knowledge of a Savior come unto my people, and to the Nephites, and the Jacobites, and the Josephites, and the Zoramites, through the testimony of their fathers; and this testimony shall come to the knowledge of the Lamanites, and the Lemuelites and the Ishmaelites . . . and for this very purpose are these plates preserved . . . that the promises of the Lord might be fulfilled which he made to his people, and that the Lamanites might come to the knowledge of their fathers, . . . and that they may believe the gospel and rely upon the merits of Jesus Christ.—Doctrine and Covenants 2: 5.

Again in Doctrine and Covenants 3: 15:

I will show unto this people that I had other sheep, and that they were a branch of the house of Jacob, . . . and I will also bring to light my gospel, . . . that I may establish my gospel, that there may not be so much contention, concerning the points of my doctrine.

The belief that the gospel of salvation would be restored in the latter days is fundamental to Latter Day Saintism, and in the Book of Mormon people would find the fullness of that gospel. In Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2 Moroni is mentioned as the human instrument who was "to reveal the Book of Mormon, containing the fullness of my everlasting gospel."

Again, in Section 42: 5 we find:

The elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel.

This definitely sets forth the greatest purpose of the book, since confusion for hundreds of years has existed and still exists in regard to what the gospel of Christ really is.

From these statements—and from our knowledge of its contents—we believe

David Chambers

By Marcella Schenck

I REMEMBER BROTHER DAVID CHAMBERS as the merry missionary.

When we children heard of his intended visits, we danced on our toes and sang, "Brother Chambers is coming! Brother Chambers is coming!"

Elisha, with a special upper room which had privacy and the comforts of a bed, table, stool, and candlestick, was never more royally welcomed at the Shunammite home than Brother Chambers when he came to our house. We had two rooms downstairs, and two more in the half story above, and the house was overflowing with children. He must have bunked in the boys' room at the head of the stairs, but the man liked to come.

My brother Laverne, in his tender years, whacked off the top of his beautiful, wavy, golden hair. When asked why he did it he answered with all solemnness, "I want to be a missionary like Brother Chambers when I grow up, and I have to be bald, don't I?"

WAS I NINE YEARS OLD OR TEN—the year I remember a district conference at Wheeler's Grove? A group of us children didn't want to go in to the second service. The day was pleasant. Nature was very picturesque around the rural church at Wheeler's Grove. Between Sunday school and preaching service, we were voicing some sort of objection, when right through our midst walked the merry bald-headed man with a cheery, "Come on in, youngsters. I am playing catch with you after the service."

Our rebellion melted like magic, and we trooped in. The younger ones lined up in an eager row toward the front; the big boys sought the back. If Brother Chambers were going to preach, there were sure to be "twinkles" in the sermon, although he could be as serious as the best if the occasion demanded it.

At the noon hour, while the good sisters laid out the wonderful basket dinner on the platform and benches inside the church, and the menfolk looked after the teams, two games of "catch" went on in the open space near the church, with Brother Chambers seemingly a part of both.

After they called us in to the dinner and grace was over, Sr. — confronted the missionary with intentional criticism, "Weren't you teaching the children to desecrate the Sabbath, out there playing ball on the Lord's day?"

"Kept them out from underfoot, didn't I?" he asked with a laugh. Then ran on quickly into something like this, "Where's that coconut cake you always bake? If there isn't a piece of it when I am ready for it, there better be. And didn't I smell fried chicken in your pan? Chase that pan for me, and see that I get a piece of yours. You know it will be moist and delicious."

So off she scurried for the chicken and either kept still about the game, or else I got so busy with edibles I didn't hear any more.

THE YEARS WENT PAST, and Brother Chambers was still just as welcome. I think I was around fifteen when the Saints were having a two-day meeting. Two or three families dispersed to my grandmother's house at noon. She was Sister Mary Davis and a truer Saint never lived. We hadn't learned yet about buffet meals and such. People thought they had to eat with their feet under the table. So we often set two or three tables, the youngsters coming in last with the cold leftovers. Meanwhile the first dishes "stood" and dried.

Our unrelenting parents had given an ultimatum that we older girls had to wash the dishes before we went back to church. Imagine the groans!

Brother Chambers had been in the living room with the men, probably discussing the "three glories" or whatever subject was popular at the time. Suddenly, there he was in our midst, making the dishwashing a merry, fast-moving process.

Maude was engaged to Zannie and starry-eyed with love. "See," said Brother Chambers, "when Maude wipes a plate she hugs it up to her like this and says, 'This is Zannie's plate.'" What a loving hug he gave that piece of china! It was what she had said and did, but not with the exaggerated tenderness he put into all of his clowning. We were gay with laughter, glad to go to church, and happy to know there would be no stacks of dishes awaiting our return, nor for grandmother to do if we went on home.

SOMEWHERE ALONG THROUGH THE YEARS, we missed Brother Chambers for a time. I think the conference must have sent him elsewhere, because when he returned to our district, I overheard someone say that his merriment was not understood and appreciated in that other district. For a long time I held a grudge at that district, only I never did know where it was.

At one time he was not well. He couldn't labor very strenuously. An old brother in the church said to him, "Isn't it too bad the devil tries to stop your good work?"

"The devil?" said Brother Chambers. "Don't lay my sickness onto him. The poor creature will have enough to answer for without taking on what I do."

"You don't think the devil tries to stop good?" asked the old man.

"In this case I rode three miles in wet clothes after a baptism in cold weather. I could have changed right where I was under warm shelter, but I carelessly thought my way would be easier and took that long ride," explained the missionary.

"If it was a baptism, one would have thought the Lord would have protected you," said the older man.

"The Lord would have done just that if it had been necessary for me to take that ride," said Brother Chambers, "but God gave man wisdom, and he created the laws of health. Man can't defy them and remain whole. I knew it was unwise, yet I deliberately did it. Why should God have protected me? As for the devil, I feel too sorry for him to lightly lay my faults on him."

THE YEARS KEPT SLIPPING BY. I was teaching school the last time I remember Brother Chambers distinctly. He had come into the neighborhood to hold a series of meetings. I was rooming with Uncle Pete and Aunt Laura Fredrickson, not my real uncle and aunt, but as dear as any I had.

"Pete, got any work I can do alone around the farm?" asked Brother Chambers on Monday morning. "I feel as if I could plan my sermon better if I were busy with my hands."

"I will be working in the garden," said Aunt Laura. "We have no children. Missionaries find it quiet here."

"I want my hands busy," said he.

That evening, when I returned from school, Aunt Laura reported he found some shingling to occupy himself. When she finished in the garden, she had called up to him that the quiet room was still available, and he had replied, "I am closer to God up here. I stop to make a few notes on my thinking when I want to do so."

The Sacred Serpent Symbol in America

By C. Ed. Miller

The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors.

MARK TWAIN'S MISSION in life was to make people laugh. He said the Book of Mormon was "chloroform in print." The editor of Harper's Magazine, whose clientele is from the intelligentsia, wrote:

Whatever may be the truth in respect to the real origin and authorship of the Book of Mormon, there can be no doubt of its wonderful adaptiveness to the purposes to which it has been applied. We cannot agree with those who would deny to the work either genius or talent.

When I was a young man a fine Latter Day Saint asked me to read the Book of Mormon. After reading a considerable part of the book I was bored with the record of the internecine wars, but I was intensely interested in the reference to Christ. Then I came to the section written by Nephi who recorded the dramatic descent of Jesus Christ among the Nephites. I concluded that if this claim could be substantiated, next to the Bible the Book of Mormon was the most valuable record in the world. It was another witness to the resurrection of Jesus Christ!

THE BOOK OF MORMON AND CHRIST

Some have interpreted the words of Christ, "It is finished," as indicating his work on earth was finished. But it is recorded that after his resurrection he appeared to his disciples a dozen times. On one occasion he said to them: "And other sheep I have which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." We believe that those sheep were in America and that the Book of Mormon is an authentic record of the people who composed three migrations from Asia to America.

THE PROPER INTERPRETATION OF MOSES AND THE SERPENT

We are trying to reach unity by brotherly discussion. Some old-timers will remember the discussions on "Where is the Hill Cumorah?" Now I think we are fairly united on that subject.

Moses had a wonderful experience with serpents. The children of Israel found fault with him and with God. They had to learn through punishment. The Lord sent flying serpents among the people. Note this, God instructed Moses as follows: "Make thee a fiery serpent and set it upon a pole: and it shall come to pass that everyone that is bitten, when he looks upon it, shall live. And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived." Artists invariably picture that "pole" as a cross.

Christ aligns himself with Moses in the following language: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."

Why should there be any disagreement regarding the symbol? Must we be in the same class as those who did not believe or understand the mission of the serpent?

The difficulty of some seems to be in the position they take that God would not use such a type in relation to Christ and his work.

In the light of what the Bible and the Book of Mormon teach concerning the serpent lifted up on a pole by Moses, that "as many as should look upon that serpent should live," such being a type of "as many as should look upon the Son of God should live," it appears clear that when the Nephites, et al, looked upon those marvelous carvings of the serpent on their temples, they were constantly reminded of what the Lord had done for their forefathers, and what he would do for them, hence the serpent symbol. Israel's sins were those of forgetting and disbelief. Some would not look upon the brazen serpent in the wilderness and be healed. In my opinion the Nephite prophets explained the "type" which would lead to the people's understanding the carvings of the Quetzal-Serpent masterpieces.

As there has been no evidence produced proving serpent worship was practiced by the Nephites, I believe it is very harmful to the Book of Mormon to charge the people as being serpent worshipers without offering any proof whatever to substantiate that serious accusation.

The feathered serpent was not an idol to be worshiped. Thousands of women wear gold crosses suspended on chains around their necks. The cross on our churches is to remind us of the crucifixion. It is a much-used symbol. The serpent was a symbol. In Revelation 5: 5, we read, "And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof." A lion a symbol of Christ! There are about two hundred references to the lion in the Bible; very few are complimentary to the king of beasts. I would rather meet a snake than a lion.

After many years the brazen serpent began to be worshiped, courageous Hezekiah destroyed it, "and he called it Nehushtan" (brass). When and where have the Book of Mormon prophets shown less courage than Bible prophets? If serpent worship was practiced, those prophets of God would have proclaimed against it.

We thank the writer of the article in the Herald for November 27, 1950, for making this very important concession:

If we could accept the brazen serpent as an unquestioned symbol of Jesus Christ, it would give us a tremendous boost in proving the Book of Mormon, because the mythology and archaeology of Mexico and Central America present Jesus Christ to us in the name and form of a feathered or flying serpent. Both the Aztec and Maya names for Jesus Christ

The picture shown of the feathered serpent sculpture is from Copan, Honduras. Note the symmetry, the plumes, and highly conventionalized serpent's head.

(Quetzalcoatl and Kukulkan) literally mean feathered or bird serpent.

It seems to me we should spend more time in marshaling evidence to prove the Serpent symbol than in wasting time on the hopeless effort to brand the Nephites as snake worshipers.

In Middle America there are ruined cities with buildings whose façades are covered with marvelous carvings which feature a plumed serpent. And there is an abundance of tradition of a bearded white man who visited the ancestors of the Indians, and in Mexico became a most beloved deity.

He was called Quetzalcoatl in Mexico, Kulkulcan among the Mayas, and Wiracocha in South America. As far as I know, all Latter Day Saints have good reason to regard the bearded white man as Christ. Apostle Charles R. Hield, Walter and Roy Weldon, and I visited a number of ruined, ancient cities in Mexico. We finally visited Uxmal in Northern Yucatan. We entered into the large court through a magnificent arch. As we looked around we were almost speechless. We were overwhelmed with admiration; the view was breath-taking. The four buildings are arranged in the form of a rectangle. The group is known as the Casa de Monjas, nunnery. Waldeck states, "The most magnificent and beautiful front in America is that of the serpent temple on the western façade of the nunnery. The marked feature of the sculpture is the formation of square panels between entwined bodies of two huge stone serpents surmounted by plumes." The plumed serpents impressed me as symbols inseparable from the religion of the builders of the ruins. Here Quetzalcoatl evidently was worshiped.

THE BOOK OF MORMON AND THE SERPENT SYMBOL

When an individual is charged with a crime, he is considered by the law to be innocent until proved guilty. Those who charge the Nephites and Lamanites with serpent worship have the responsibility resting upon them to offer real evidence. The "I think" of some "eminent savant" is not proof. Of high authority is the Book of Mormon. It is claimed by some that serpent worship was universally practiced in Book of Mormon lands; if so why was it not mentioned and condemned by the Book of Mormon writers? The omission is fatal to the claim.

The Herald Publishing House has published a very complete concordance in which may be found every subject mentioned in the Book of Mormon. I have carefully consulted it and I cannot find a single statement of serpent worship.

The "grosser crime of polygamy" and many lesser crimes are mentioned, even the condemning of pride and the wearing of fine clothes and adornment with pearls, but the practice of serpent worship is not mentioned. On page 426, verses 191, 194 of the Book of Mormon is written:

Behold, he [Christ] was spoken of by Moses; yea, and behold, a type, was raised up in the wilderness, that whosoever would look upon it might live. Now the reason they would not look, was because they did not believe that it would heal them.

In the first part of the Book of Mormon (page 57, verses 134, 135), the brass serpent story is told. Stress is placed on faith being necessary, to look upon the serpent. On page 142 (verses 38, 40), we read:

And as the Lord God liveth, that brought Israel up out of the land of Egypt, and gave unto Moses power that he should heal the nations, after they had been bitten by the poisonous serpents, if they would cast their eyes unto the serpent which he did raise up before them. . . . Wherefore, for this cause hath the Lord God promised unto me that these things which I write shall be kept and preserved, and handed down unto my seed, from generation to generation, that the promise may be fulfilled unto Joseph that his seed should never perish as long as the earth should stand.

The things written concerning the brazen serpent and its relation to Christ, among other things, were to be "kept and preserved and handed down . . . from generation to generation."

With no evidence of serpent worship among the pre-Columbian Indians, and a knowledge of the brazen serpent to go down from generation to generation, it follows that the plumed serpent is an emblem appropriately applied to the bearded white man and deity, Quetzalcoatl.

THE MASTER SYMBOL OF THE AGES

There are books published on Christian symbolism that illustrate symbols in many forms, invented by the early Christians; these may be seen carved on stone or on the altars of cathedrals and churches. Some feature the serpent and Jesus Christ in the form of a Christograph. It is hardly the object of snake worship. In the Americas of pre-Columbian times, clever symbols were invented to represent Quetzalcoatl. Some of these, from our point of view, are ugly. All people do not have the same idea of beauty. For example, what possessed the architect of the splendid cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris to have grotesque devils perched on one of the towers? Many of the symbols of the Quetzalcoatl are beautiful works of art. The knowledge of the arrival of Christ was not forgotten, for the presence and departure of Quetzalcoatl—the bearded white man—is uniquely portrayed on the walls of the National Palace in Mexico City by Diego Rivera, one of the noted muralists of this age. In the murals Quetzalcoatl is shown seated on a throne. His gorgeous head-dress is made of the feathers of the Quetzal; grouped around him are white-robed worshipers. In a place of honor he is portrayed taking his departure in the sky in a beautiful serpent-formed canoe.

In the Palace of Cortez in Cuernavaca is a highly artistic stained glass window representing the fair-skinned bearded Quetzalcoatl. At the top of the window is a highly conventionalized serpent.

The famous Palenque Tablet of the Cross has the rebus or symbol complete—at the top the Quetzal, with a highly conventionalized serpent's head, and in the middle a Latin cross.

The arrival and ministry of Christ on the American continent was by no means forgotten, and to perpetuate the glorious event the most beautiful, intelligible, Ne Plus Ultra symbol was devised—the feathered serpent. It binds Christ to the eastern and western worlds. It uses the feathers of one of the most beautiful birds of the world. A world's masterpiece in choice, suggesting what is beautiful and precious.

TO SUMMARIZE

It is immaterial how many texts are presented from the Three Books proving the serpent as a "devil" symbol, all will agree God used that symbol as a means to save the lives of those who were bitten by the flying serpents.

The inspired Helaman makes the proper application in these words, "Yea, did he not bear record, that the Son of God should come? And as he (Moses) lifted up the brazen serpent in the wilderness, even so shall he be lifted up who should come.

"And as many as should look upon that serpent should live, even so as many as should look upon the Son of God, with faith, having a contrite spirit, might live . . ."—Book of Helaman 3: 47, 48.

Alma presents the matter in these words, "Behold, he was spoken of by Moses; yea, and behold, a type was raised up in the wilderness, that whosoever would look upon it might live. And many did look and live."—Alma 16: 191.

The Nephites used the type, the symbol for a beneficial purpose. There is no evidence in the Book of Mormon to prove they ever worshiped the serpent.

All Hail! Quetzalcoatl, Kulkulcan, Wiracocha, The Lion of the tribe of Juda, The Prince of Peace, God's dear Son, the Universal Savior!

Question:

The sword of Laban is not listed among the things found by Joseph in the box. It was shown the three witnesses later with the plates. Was it ever put in Joseph's custody?

Missouri

A. S.

Answer:

I have found no record that the sword of Laban was held in custody of Joseph Smith. Direct testimony does show that it was seen by the three witnesses at the time they viewed the plates under miraculous supervision. Some references to this are found in Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1; Church History, Volume 4, pages 362, 370, and 447; Saints' Herald, Volume 29, pages 68, 69, and Volume 31, page 396; Latter Day Saints Biographical Encyclopedia, page 266; also Kansas City Journal, June 5, 1881. On May 2, 1838, Joseph Smith wrote that the plates, the Urim and Thummim, and the breastplate were delivered to him by a heavenly messenger and remained safe in his hands until the work required of him was accomplished, when he delivered them up to the messenger (Church History, Volume 1, pages 17, 18). It might be assumed that the sword of Laban was included with these articles held in custody by him, but I know of no specific statement to that effect in our records. However, perhaps it might with some reason be so inferred.

A. B. PHILLIPS.

Question:

a. There are some who believe that Christ will come for "his own" about seven years prior to his second coming, leaving none but the "unsaved" on the earth to endure the tribulation period. What Scripture may be used to prove this is untrue?

b. Will the tribulation also fall upon Zion?

c. At that day can anyone enter Zion without becoming a member of the true church of Jesus Christ?

Illinois

J. R. M.

Answer:

a. The theory of the tribulation upon the wicked and the "rapture" of the righteous is partly true and partly false. There is a period of judgment with tribulation upon the earth prior to the coming of Christ of disastrous import to the wicked, but the Scriptures are void of any specific teaching as to the "rapture" wherein the righteous will be caught up into the air or to heaven temporarily until the judgment is over. Paul's statement in I Thessalonians 4 about some being caught up at the Lord's coming to meet him carries no hint that it is to escape judgment, or that they are to remain there for any length of time, but merely that the joy of his coming will bring them to meet him on the way just as children run to meet their returning father. This view is further strengthened by the fact that the dead are raised and caught up at the same time—surely not to escape the judgment.

We would hardly expect to find Scripture to prove false a theory that has no foundation in truth, except to show a different method of preserving the righteous from the calamities which will fall upon the wicked. The Lord has a different and better plan. From earliest times he has designed a place of refuge to which he will gather his people and shield them from the destructions falling on the world. It is called Zion and will be upon the earth, though it has other names.

Jesus, speaking of that time of judgment and tribulation, says, "He shall send his angels . . . and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matthew 24: 31. John the Baptist taught, "He will thoroughly purge his floor [the earth] and will gather the wheat into his garner; but the chaff he will burn up with unquenchable fire."—Luke 3: 17. Jesus in Matthew thirteen calls this period "the harvest," which is the end of the world, and says that the tares and the wheat (the children of the kingdom) are to be separated, the first to be destroyed by burning, and the other, the righteous, preserved in safety—not by being taken up into the air, but by being "gathered into my barn" or garner.

The Old Testament adds its testimony:

Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity.—Isaiah 26: 20, 21.

Latter day revelation amplifies this teaching of a place of gathering for the salvation of the righteous people of God.

b. Since Zion is to be the place of refuge it is not likely that the destructive judgments sent forth upon the wicked will fall there. However the Saints can not expect to be entirely free from inconveniences and difficulties. The gathering will unavoidably entail sacrifices, losses of property, and separation of loved ones. There will be many problems and much labor in upbuilding. But these are incidental. Zion will be free from the destructive judgments.

c. Zion has a much higher purpose than mere temporal salvation. Self preservation in a state of sin, and in the absence of a Zion purpose, will not justify one's entrance there. Jesus said it was the wheat, the "children of the kingdom," who alone would be gathered into the garner. It is the Saints who have "made a covenant with me by sacrifice" (Psalm 50: 5) who will be gathered; and as the Lord said through Malachi (3: 16, 17), it is "they that feared the Lord" who "shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." Not all members of the true church may have place there, but only those who are truly righteous.

CHARLES FRY.

At The Crossroads

By Mabel Williams
Crayne

SPRING CAME EARLY that year to Hilldale. The trees were already green and wild flowers came in profusion with the gentle rains. In the church yard the grass, padded with the decay of other years, was like a soft cushion under foot.

Luther Parks, sitting on the old wooden bench under the elm, was not conscious of the beauty of nature around him. He saw only the little church building, deserted and neglected, with its paint almost gone and the hedge fence grown tall and ragged. He covered his face with his hands and whispered, "O God, why did I ever make such a promise? You gave me another chance here but I failed you. Forgive, dear Lord, forgive!" He sat silent for some time thinking over the past years. His dream of happiness with the woman he loved had been short lived. His promise had destroyed his hope of oneness with her and had even crept in between him and the children she had given him.

When he and Harriet Young were married they went out beyond the town to build their home on an acre of ground. They enclosed it with maple and elm trees and planted an orchard that, in time, gave them all the fruit they could use. Two years later, the twins, Bob and Barbara, were born, and they should have been a happy family. Just a quarter of a mile farther on were the crossroads that branched out from the main highway. They were more like shady lanes with their maples reaching out to each other and intertwining their leafy branches, making a canopy of cool loveliness in the summer months. In winter their long arms held the glistening frost and spearlike icicles that sparkled like diamonds in the sun and made a fairy land in the moonlight.

One road led to the Community Church; the other to the Roadside Inn. It was not the type of inn portrayed on screen and radio as the ultrafashionable, or the lowest where criminals gather to plot their crimes. Instead, on Saturday evening the most respectable folk of the town gathered there for an evening of relaxation. The young people enjoyed charades and folk dances. The older men contented themselves with a quiet game of checkers or chess, while the matrons exchanged recipes, crochet patterns and the latest gossip. The next morning, however, they were all in their places at church and joined heartily in singing the opening hymn, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." This gave them a chance to expand their lungs and put them in a receptive mood for the pastor's message.

Then came the day when the Inn changed owners and a noisy, drinking crowd took over. The little church was deserted and weeds overran the path that led to its doorway.

LUTHER PARKS' MIND finally came back to the present. He arose from the bench, straightened his shoulders, and with a look of determination on his face walked back to the highway and caught a bus to Kingston, a thriving town fifteen miles away.

About two months later Luther's son, Bob, came rushing in with the news that two young men were working at the church and that it would soon be gleaming white and clean again. Harriet seemed upset as she asked, "Did you find out what church they represent? That is the important thing."

"But, Mom, why should that be so important?" asked Bob. "I have always thought it was poor judgment to close the church. Some of the folks on the way to the Inn might have made a mistake and come down the church road and been converted."

His mother ignored his question and took a hat and coat from the closet.

"What are you going to do, Mom?" asked Barbara.

"I am going to find out what organization has taken over the church," answered her mother.

"Why don't you wait until Dad comes home?" asked Bob. "Maybe he can tell you."

"Because your father and I never discuss religion," replied Harriet. "I was reared in a family that loved to argue. All the aunts and uncles lived near us and were continually arguing about something—usually about religion."

"Mom, what are we? What do we believe?" asked Barbara.

Her mother hesitated before replying. "Well, you youngsters might as well know the truth. I don't belong to any church, as I couldn't see where any one was better than the others. Your father is a Latter Day Saint, but I would not consent to marry him until he had promised never to discuss religion with me or in my presence. I never objected to his attending the Community Church or taking you with him as long as he didn't try to persuade you to join. There were people from five different organizations going there, and I heard they had some great times trying to convert each other. I'll be going now, but I won't be gone long."

AS SOON AS HIS MOTHER was out of hearing Bob said, "I hope it's Dad's religion that is taking over."

"Why do you say that?" asked Barbara. "What do you know about Dad's religion?"

"I know plenty," answered Bob. "He may have kept his promise to Mom, but that didn't keep him from talking plenty to me about the church he used to go to when he was a boy. It all sounds mighty interesting, and I'm inclined to believe it's true."

"Well, I'd rather go to almost any church than to those lectures Mom has been dragging us to every Sunday," said Barbara. "She used to let us go to picture shows until she went with us one time and decided they weren't refined."

"After Dad talked to me about his church it didn't seem right to spend the Lord's day in a picture show of that kind," said Bob. "The first time he was really serious about it was the night I had planned on meeting some of the fellows from school at the Inn. He got wind of it, somehow, and I found him waiting for me at the crossroads."

"Whew, what a surprise!" said Barbara. "What did you tell him?"

"I wasn't telling him anything, Sis," said Bob, "I just sat down on that old log with him and listened. It was then he told me about his church. I'll never forget how I felt—just as though I'd suddenly grown up and was responsible for things I'd never thought of before, especially when he said, 'Son, there comes into every man's life a time when he stands at the crossroads of decision and must choose the way that will be the pattern of his future. The signpost pointing to the road of the worldly minded promises gaiety and laughter, but it often leads to ruin and despair. I am asking that you remember this and let 'His Word' be your signpost to a life acceptable to God.' He insisted that I go on and meet the boys and seemed pleased when I asked him to come along."

Barbara's voice was tense as she asked, "Did he really go with you, Bob?"

"Sure . . . and I was mighty glad he did. When we walked into that place the smoke hit me right in the face and almost made me sick. The boys were at a large table, and Dad asked to join them. Most all of them knew Dad because of his business in town. They must have been surprised to see him there, as everything got awfully quiet for a moment. The boys hadn't ordered yet, so he ordered Cokes for all of us and then told a lot of funny jokes on himself and some of the queer experiences he had in the Army. As we sat there I saw the contrast between my father and the type of people who usually come to the Inn. He'll never be just an ordinary man to me again. Soon after that he started the Saturday Night Club for us boys and helped us with all kinds of projects; he even supplied the machinery for wood-work."

"I've known for a long time what a grand person Dad is," said Barbara, "and I won't ever forget the night I went to the Inn with Cary Snyder when we were supposed to be at the school play. I couldn't stand the place and ran out on him while he was talking to some friends at another table. Imagine my surprise when I found Dad waiting just outside the door. He didn't scold; he just took my arm and gave it a little squeeze as we got in the car and drove back to the schoolhouse. We stayed outside until the play was over and then milled around with the crowd. Mom never knew I had been away. I've often wondered how he knew I was there."

Bob put his arm about her and said, "And I've often wondered if you would be mad if you knew I trailed you and Cary that night, then called Dad. I couldn't let anything happen to you, Sis."

Barbara laughed, "Confession is good for the soul, and I don't call it snitchin' when twins tell on each other. I tipped Dad off about you going there. Cary told me when I refused to go with him again." They both laughed heartily and agreed that it was great to be twins.

IN THE MEANTIME, Harriet Parks was seated in the office of Silas Flanders, the agent for the church building. Her eyes were wide with excitement. "How did they ever happen to buy the little church out our way? Who told them about it?" she asked.

"There are several Latter Day Saints right here in Hilldale, and they have quite a group in Kingston," replied Mr. Flanders. "They are followers of those who stayed behind when many members went to Utah. They have no connection with the people who went with Brigham Young. They are a separate organization."

"Do you know Henry Budworth who lives in Kingston?" asked Harriet.

"Yes, Mrs. Parks, I do, and since he is the one who made all the arrangements for buying the church, he is no doubt a member."

Harriet remained silent for a moment, then said thoughtfully, "I'm beginning to see things a little more clearly," she said. "Please do not tell my husband that I have come to you for information. He is in Kingston today on business and might feel hurt because I did not wait and ask him. I will tell him when the right time comes."

"Not a word to anyone," Mr. Flanders assured her. "It has been a pleasure to serve you."

As Harriet walked quickly down the street he looked after her with a knowing smile, as he thought, "The right time is now, Mrs. Parks, but since you are Sam Young's daughter, and the two of you as alike as peas, you won't tell Luther until it is almost too late."

SHE WAS VERY QUIET when she returned home and started right in getting the evening meal. Luther was later than usual, but his wife made no comment. At the dinner table Bob told his father about seeing the men working on the church and asked if he knew about it.

"Yes," his father replied, "Henry Budworth told me about it in Kingston and said that he had bought it for the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. He has been a member for some time. There are about twenty-five Saints in Kingston, and they will be coming here to services." He looked at his wife as he spoke, but she gave no evidence that she had heard.

That Sunday morning when the "meeting house" was ready and the doors open for worship, both sky and air added their blessing. It was a perfect day. Luther Parks put his arm about his wife and asked, "Are you going to church with me this morning, my dear?"

"No, thank you," she replied tartly, "I will be going into town as usual, that is if I may have the car."

"Of course, go ahead and take it," replied Luther. "We have only a short walk and it will be a pleasant one. But, my dear, I don't like to see you go alone."

"Alone?" she asked. "Do you mean that the children are going with you?" She looked startled as though the thought had not occurred before.

"Yes, Harriet," her husband replied, "and we must hurry along as Brother Henry Budworth has asked Barbara to play the organ for church school. Come along, youngsters!" He kissed his wife and said gently, "Good-by, dear, and good luck." If he had looked back as he went out the door he would have seen her standing very still, her face pale and her lips quivering with emotion. That word "Brother" was like the sting of a lash.

THAT EVENING, about dusk, Luther asked his wife to take a walk with him. It had been some time since they had walked together in the evening. When he started to turn off the highway at the crossroads, Harriet pulled back and said, "Just where are you taking me? I don't care to go down this road. There is nothing there I care to see."

"Perhaps so, my dear," Luther replied, "but both of our children have gone this way. Don't you think it time you saw the kind of place where the young people of our neighborhood spend their Sunday evenings because there is nothing better offered them?"

The thought of her children frequenting the Inn made Harriet shiver. Then she said firmly, "Very well, I will go with you."

The parking space at the Inn was filled, lights in the building were low and the orchestra was playing softly. Harriet and Luther found a place close to a window where, hidden by shrubs, they could see into the lounge. Soon the outside door opened and a young man staggered out. He stood for some time leaning against a post as though he was confused. Harriet whispered, "Luther, that is Cary Snyder, the only son of the richest man in town."

"That's right," answered Luther, "and he is the young man who escorted our daughter to this place. I suppose we should feel honored. If you will look across the room you will see his father standing there by the bar—you may even recognize some of the women." Just then Cary started for the steps and Luther whispered, "Stay here, Harriet, I'm going to help him before he breaks his neck." He put his strong arm about the dazed boy and guided him to his father's car. He persuaded him to lie down in the back seat and, taking off his own coat, placed it over him. When he came back to his wife he said, "I think you have seen enough to make you understand the situation and agree that God needs helpers in this town. Let's go home."

THE NEXT DAY Harriet took the bus to Kingston and had a full hour's visit with Henry Budworth. When she left his office she carried several tracts and a Book of Mormon. Henry looked

Origin, Purpose, and Preservation of the Book of Mormon

this is the greatest value of the Book and therefore its primary purpose: to correct the awful apostasy which exists among the churches professing Jesus Christ.

In addition to what we find in Latter Day revelation, we discover that from the beginning of the Restoration resort has been had to some of the ancient prophets to show that such a work or record would come forth, from which prophetic statements the purpose or purposes of the Book are explicit or are fully implied as to the form of the church and its authority.

In early latter-day history it was said that the doctrines of the churches were a heterogeneous mixture of truth and error, with scarcely a vestige of the ancient and authorized pattern and form, to say nothing of its ancient power and authority. What Joseph Smith had brought forward cleared away all the doubt and confusion, and the Book of Mormon we claim was and is the greatest factor in such clarification.

From the blessing Jacob placed on the posterity of Joseph of Egypt, as set forth in the forty-ninth chapter of Genesis, there must have been some significance attached to Joseph's "branch running over the wall," meaning a flowing beyond the wall of water or the oceans, some important destiny connected therewith. Where has Manasseh or Ephraim beyond the seas had an important place in history, if not in the bringing forth of the record in the Book of Mormon?

Did not Ezekiel (chapter 37) predict a final gathering of Israel as a result of the two records of Joseph and Judah being united? Whether the present gathering of modern Israel in Palestine is or is not that "final gathering," at least two records—one of Joseph through the Book of Mormon and the "record" of Judah—have been united, actually placed together in one book.

This, then, if Ezekiel's prophecy as advanced by many Book of Mormon disciples is applicable to the Book of Mormon, is an additional purpose for such a record. At least, I am positive there appears no other event of history so nearly approximating the terms of Ezekiel's prediction.

We heard the claim that the coming forth of this Book was a complete fulfillment of prophecy found in the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah. Orson Pratt, the great Mormon preacher, made much out of this prophecy and claimed it had been fulfilled in every detail.

Without the benefit of inspiration—which might tempt one to be dogmatic—a careful reading and several rereadings cause me to believe the early advocates have been right. But, parenthetically, I propose to you young doctors of divinity that you make it project number one to learn what the doctors of divinity of former years—about the time of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon—had to say in an expository or interpretative way about this prophet Isaiah and his twenty-ninth chapter, as also the thirty-seventh chapter of Ezekiel.

Would it not be enlightening and very helpful to our cause if we should find, as I believe may really be found, that the learned ecclesiastics of 120 years ago were interpreting Isaiah as prophesying something then yet to transpire in the way of a restoration of the gospel or of the church of Christ? This query has been entertained by me for some years, but I have not taken occasion to do the necessary research.

One of our former worthies, in considering Isaiah, said: "It has been abundantly proved that the Book of Mormon has been confirmed by the voice of the Lord, by the ministry of angels, by heavenly visions, or by the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Ghost, unto tens of thousands of witnesses."

He then quotes Revelation 14: 6, 7, to prove a restoration was predicted, and only the Latter Day Saints claimed such a restoral as John described.

But returning to Isaiah 29, the argument has been made that the second part of verse 2 refers to a people other than Ariel or Jerusalem, because "it" should be, "as Ariel," that is, the same as with Ariel. What follows can obviously only apply to a people that had been destroyed, obliterated. It says,

And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust.

In a later verse: "For Jehovah hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes, the prophets; and your heads, the seers, hath he covered."

Comment:

And all vision is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; and he saith, I can not, for it is sealed: And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee, and he saith, I am not learned.

These words recall circumstances well known in our history: The book was delivered to Joseph Smith, an unlearned man. Words of the book were delivered to Professor Charles Anthon, a learned man.

Then follows the promise, because men could not read a "sealed book," that God will "proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder," which we believe was fulfilled in the bringing forth of the Book of Mormon, and even the time thereof fixed by reference to it as an event that would happen about the same time Lebanon should "be turned into a fruitful field."

Then "shall the deaf hear the words of the book" or writing (marginal).

May we not conclude that the Lord here refers to the same book mentioned in the twelfth verse?

We therefore may rightfully hold that the Lord had a purpose in all these prophetic events, and that the Book of Mormon was certainly not the least of them.

Preservation

Under this division I assume it is intended that I deal with "the Book" made from the records and not the records themselves, since the records were not called the Book of Mormon, and I do not know that there is much to say about it.

We have read that great care of the manuscript was enjoined upon Joseph Smith, and that some 116 pages were lost. In this connection I have often marveled, if he were an imposter that he would make known to his small group of believers—and in July, 1828, there could not have been very many of them—such a castigation as Martin Harris received in Section 2 of the Doctrine and Covenants, for in that section Harris was called "a wicked man."

If Martin Harris had in fact been a co-conspirator, is it not human to believe he would have blasted Joseph Smith with a candid confession and exposure of some kind?

Do we not have the right to weigh men and events in the light of our knowledge of human nature? Who among us would have suffered the ignominy of such a rebuke as Harris received from a joint tort feasor—by which I mean a fellow wrongdoer—without exposing their joint ill-doing?

We are told that Joseph did guard the manuscript sedulously, and during the weeks the Book was in process of printing, he himself called every day at the Grandin printing office, bringing a few pages of new copy, and carefully taking back with him the pages for which the type had been set.

At this juncture I should like to deal briefly with the question—for question has been raised—respecting the original manuscript.

We read in the history of Joseph Smith that there were a number of persons who served as his scribes. These were Oliver Cowdery, Emma Smith, Martin Harris, and one or two of the Whitmers. There is evidence that Oliver Cowdery claimed he wrote the entire book. We know this claim could not possibly apply to the original manuscript. It must therefore apply to a second copy which of course he could have written himself in its entirety.

We have a complete copy of the manuscript, and a copy was placed in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House. Why a copy or perhaps the original itself was not placed in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo Temple, laid I believe in 1842, in preference to the Nauvoo House (which was intended as a permanent home for Joseph Smith and his family), is hard to understand.

Now the Nauvoo House was in an unfinished condition—never occupied as a home—until in the 1860's when Mr. Bidamon altered the construction, changed the plan, cut it down, and completed only a portion of the structure originally begun.

The reduction in the size of the building left the original cornerstone, on the river side, out of the building. During the years, however, water had seeped into it and frozen, cracking the stone. This brought about a disintegration of the contents, and when the stone was removed and opened, much of its contents was in bad condition.

Years later Charles Bidamon, son of Major Bidamon who did the remodeling, gave some of the manuscript found in the stone to the late President Joseph Smith and some of it to Joseph F. Smith of Utah. Ever since then the Mormons have claimed to be in possession of a part of the original manuscript. Our manuscript, they say, with their usual air of superiority, is the copy.

An examination of photostats of the pages we received from Bidamon causes us to believe they were in Cowdery's handwriting.

In any event, the manuscript which we have, secured from the heirs of David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses, is most assuredly in the handwriting of a number of persons. Both Joseph Smith and Alexander Smith, sons of Emma, have identified portions as being in the handwriting of their mother. We ask why she should have been engaged in any but the original. We know she was used as a scribe in those momentous days.

My brethren, we have the original manuscript, safely kept in the vaults of the First National Bank in Kansas City. I hope during these meetings you can have the pleasure of examining it.

Some of the best things still come in small packages.

* * * * *

It is probable that God would like his church to become large and convert many people. Yet latter-day revelation puts great emphasis on moral and spiritual quality. The matter of numbers is kept in second place.

There is a way of increasing our joy. We can be happier people by being better people. We can live by the gospel law. We can render service and have many friends in the gospel by doing what we can for the building of God's kingdom. We can increase our knowledge and improve our culture. We can seek the best things in life. We can make this a Christian world, and we can help to make ours a Christian nation by being better Christians ourselves.

Personalities I Remember

He had ordered certain dishes for supper which gave her something to think about. Aunt Laura cooked a delicious meal. We laughed heartily as we ate. What a wonder we didn't put on pounds!

The missionary preached a good sermon that night. Aunt Laura said he put as much vigor into it as he had in the shingling. It was a serious sermon, too, and deep with devotion.

We were quite cheery on the slow ride home. Aunt Laura was quick with retort, Uncle Pete's slow drawl had a wit worth listening for, and Brother Chambers could almost make you laugh at the moon!

Dear Brother Chambers: Did you impart so much of your merriment to us that you had none for your own hours of need? I am afraid so. Would it help to know that we have planned recreation in our church today? Children in a Sunday school class can go out in the middle of a service and play "drop the handkerchief" if they wish. Oh, we know so much better than we did that "A merry heart doeth good like medicine."

The Nature of Priesthood

A TEXTBOOK FOR PRIESTHOOD STUDY

By Charles Fry

This booklet of twelve lessons on priesthood has been prepared for the benefit of the members of the priesthood and for any other persons wishing to study them. The research for this publication has been made almost entirely in the Three Books of Scripture adopted by the church as standard, and the chapters cover grades of priesthood, offices growing out of the priesthood, historical aspects, organization, gifts and blessings through the priesthood, responsibilities under the priesthood, and general aspects of the priesthood offices.

Briefs

HOUSTON, TEXAS.—Brother Fred Banta was ordained to the office of priest under the hands of his father, Albert J. Banta, and Patriarch A. V. Arnold, on February 7.

Many of the Saints from Houston attended the institute services during the district conference at Marlin, Texas, on the week end of January 26, 27, and 28. These services were under the supervision of Brother and Sister F. M. McDowell, Apostle and Mrs. Percy Farrow, Brother and Sister Alfred Yale, Brother and Sister Jack Wight, and District President Charles Tischer.

The Zion's League, under the supervision of Sister Vera Barksdale, sponsored a yearly valentine dinner and program the evening of Friday, February 16, at the Height's Women's Club House.

The building permit has been granted, and work is being started on the new recreational and educational addition to our church.

Brother Farrow spoke at a special preaching service, February 15.

The mission is now meeting in a hall every Sunday morning and favorable progress is being made.—Reported by LUCILE CROOKER.

SALINA, KANSAS.—Church school is held each Sunday morning in the chapel of the Y.M.C.A. Although there is no priesthood member in the group, various men from Wichita visit and minister. Ronald Manuel and his wife, Marion, visited October 29 accompanied by Joy La Pointe and Rita Henry. Brother Manuel is district president, and Sister Manuel is district religious education director. Brother Manuel took charge of our annual election. Officers installed for the coming year are Marguerite Tyree, branch secretary; Maude Reiff, church school director; Mary Turner, assistant church school director; Edna Henry, music director, historian, women's leader, adult class teacher; Edith Munden, assistant music director; Irene Weigand, Herald reporter and publicity agent; Evon L. Kueker, primary class teacher, solicitor, librarian, and book steward.

At this meeting a worship service was conducted by Marion Manuel, assisted by Joy La Pointe at the piano and Rita Henry who sang a solo.

A Christmas program was given on December 17. The program consisted of a vocal solo, vocal duet, a piano duet, and several readings by the adults. The children sang three Christmas songs and Lewis Weigand played two piano solos. The children presented several readings, and gifts were exchanged.

Other visitors from Wichita recently have been Brother J. R. Wolfe and Sister Wolfe on November 26 and Brother Deverne Davis and Sister Davis on January 7. Mrs. Marjorie Gamble, also from Wichita, recently visited and sang a solo.—Reported by IRENE WEIGAND.

COFFEYVILLE, KANSAS.—A candlelight installation service was held September 31. The following officers were installed: Elder Myron Cadwell, pastor; Glen Johnson, church school director; Mrs. Floyd Karlstrom, music director and children's supervisor; Mrs. Glen Johnson, secretary treasurer; Mrs. Myron Cadwell, women's leader and reporter; Mrs. Stella Edens, librarian; Mrs. Lester Detwiler, adult supervisor; Floyd Karlstrom, youth supervisor.

The outstanding events of the church year thus far are as follows: group attendance at the annual Rally Day Service at Independence, Kansas, the first day in October; a district young people's retreat at Cedar Bluff camp; the visit of E. G. Gilbert, district church school director; the sermon delivered by Apostle D. O. Chesworth on December 17; the sermon, "Choose You This Day Whom You Shall Serve," by Elder Clyde McKee of Rock Island, Illinois; and the fine fellowship enjoyed in the monthly family night meetings.

A church school has been organized at Cahey, Kansas, by the pastor and the meetings are held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Carriker. Sherman Shepard is the church school director.

District President Stephen Black presented a series of services during the week of January 22.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Yeubanks of South Coffeyville celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on January 1, 1951. Over one hundred friends and relatives called to congratulate them during the open house, December 31. All but one of their six children were privileged to be present.—Reported by MRS. MYRON CADWELL.

EVERGREEN BRANCH, LAMONI, IOWA.—Sunday, February 4, the Evergreen Zion's League, consisting of nine members, was in charge of the evening service. The theme, "Preparing for Zion's Living," was emphasized by four talks given by the Leaguers: "Preparing for Zion's Living Through Our Personality," "Preparing for Zion's Living Through Education," "Preparing for Zion's Living Through Our Vocational Interests," and "Our Goal—Zion." Following the talks, a trio, "The Old, Old Path," was sung by three boys. The service was concluded with a vocal solo, "The Lord's Prayer."

The women's department has had an average attendance of fourteen. The group meets every two weeks and the present study course has been the "Church Member's Manual." Special activities enjoyed by the group have been showers, Thanksgiving supper, program for the community, Christmas gift exchange, and a Christmas offering for the new Lamoni church.

The women's department and the Zion's League have furnished the funds necessary to purchase Venetian blinds for the church.—Reported by DONNA MARIE GARDNER.

OELWEIN, IOWA.—The following officers have been elected: Elder Evert McFarlane, pastor; Elder George McFarlane and Priest Russell Shippy, counselors; Beth McFarlane, librarian; Bernice Pratt, branch secretary and attendance recorder; Mrs. Ruth Stella, director of music and church school director; Mrs. Margaret Shippy, treasurer; Mrs. Pearl Beckner, Herald correspondent; Bob Beckner, young people's supervisor; Elder George McFarlane and Mrs. Ruth Stella, auditors; Priest Russell Shippy, solicitor.

The pastors of the churches in the town have a week of morning devotions on the radio station KOEL, and the pastor of the branch, Elder McFarlane has broadcast three times.

Merle McFarlane was ordained a deacon. Three young men from the branch are now in the service. They are Carl Richard Rasmussen, Merle McFarlane, and Donald Shippy.—Reported by MRS. BERNICE PRATT for MRS. PEARL BECKNER.

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE.—A. C. Brower resigned after thirteen years' service as supervisor of the adult and young people's department in the church school. Paul B. Elliott also resigned as supervisor of the senior high department after serving for twenty-five years. In appreciation for their years of service a special service was held and each man was presented with a copy of the book The Big Fisherman. These men also served in other capacities as well as in church school.

How to Help Your Child Grow Up

Mrs. Leigh and Mrs. Reimer graduated from the class of 1942 at the Sanitarium.

Gregg Alan, son of William Edward and Kathryn Rodekops, was blessed by Ronald Sherman and Glaude A. Smith, February 18.

BURBANK, CALIFORNIA. — Garland Tickemyer, stake president, presided at the annual business meeting held in October. The following people were elected to serve for the coming year: E. E. Spencer, pastor; Eleanor Wilms, secretary; Normand Slick, treasurer; John Kirkpatrick, church school director; LeRoy Sorenson, bishop's agent.

The members of the congregation have completely redecorated the church building under the direction of the pastor, who is a professional in this field.

On October 28, the men of the congregation prepared and served a chicken dinner to about seventy-five persons. The dinner, movies, and music were furnished by the men.

The women's department held their annual bazaar on November 11, under the direction of Bell Calamia, women's director. The women made $250. The Van Nuys women had a booth as their church had not been completed at the time. A program of several plays and musical numbers was presented in the evening.

The Christmas program was presented for the children, December 22. The program was under the direction of John Kirkpatrick, church school director, and the teachers. The traditional tree and visit from Santa were enjoyed by the adults as well as the youngsters.

The pastor preached the Christmas sermon, December 24, after which the choir presented a Christmas cantata, "The Birth of Christ." Eldon Whitehead directed the choir.

Brother Elbert A. Smith addressed the group Sunday, December 17. This was the first time the congregation had the opportunity of hearing the presiding patriarch speak in the church in Burbank.

The following blessings have taken place: Gerald Eugene, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Curry on October 29; John Woodrow, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Prentice, on October 1; and Marsha Diane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon M. Cline on December 3.—Reported by MINNETTE M. KIRKPATRICK.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—In the recent high school commencement at Wiarton, Ontario, two R.L.D.S. students received awards. Gomer Farrow received the Russel Moore Memorial Award for Science in grade thirteen, and Elaine Farrow received the McAsh Trophy for highest standing in grade twelve. They are the son and daughter of High Priest and Mrs. Gordon Farrow of Wiarton.—Reported by HELEN FARROW.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO.—Apostle and Mrs. C. G. Mesley visited Ottawa, December 2-5. On Saturday evening, Apostle Mesley showed films of Australia.

Sunday was a day of special emphasis. Classes were taught in the afternoon by Brother and Sister Mesley. Communion service and classes were held in the morning. Apostle Mesley preached at the evening service. All meals were served in the lower auditorium under the auspices of the women's department.

Monday evening Brother and Sister Mesley spoke to the branch on the problems of building.

On December 20, twenty-six adults and eighteen children of the branch gathered in the lower auditorium of the Odd Fellows' Hall where after a festive supper and song-fest, gifts were exchanged.

The branch approved the architect's plans for the exterior and main auditorium of the proposed new church home at the first business meeting of the new year.—Reported by B. M. FARROW.

Report on Attendance Campaign

By Reed Holmes

HAVE you brought one? Many have. As a matter of fact, we have at least twenty-five hundred more church school attenders than at the beginning of the Church School Attendance Campaign. That's a lot of people; enough for ten branches of 250 members, or twenty-five branches of one hundred members. Somebody brought one—twenty-five hundred in fact. Each brought one. Tell me, did you bring one?

Nearly two months remain in the campaign. These can be fruitful weeks. Some people shall have their feet planted on the road to the kingdom for the first time; others shall be brought back to the kingdom road, if each one will bring one.

A response to the campaign was immediate and heartwarming. Nearly six hundred branches, missions, and groups responded. Posters went up all over the church. "Each One Bring One" became a normal part of our vocabulary. We have attendance reports from nearly every branch, and most likely from yours. Many have reported regularly; others spasmodically. Some tell us of excellent gains, others wonder why the attendance drops off. A few are disappointed that their gains are no larger than two or four people thus far, forgetting that gains which seem small in the local branch when multiplied seem very large indeed.

The success of the Campaign depends primarily upon you. You have the friend, the relative, the neighbor who is to be brought. Furthermore, you are the one who must help guarantee that those who come to dine with us on spiritual food are not disappointed.

Actually, our primary concern is to set church members to thinking in terms of specific friends who may be enlisted in a special activity. This can be the first step toward conversion, rebirth, and an expanding fellowship. We must be interested in others; this is the very nature of sainthood. The Church School Attendance Campaign is designed only to implement our interests in the spiritual welfare of others. If our motive for study and other church activities is transformed to one of evangelism we shall truly be thankful. If many come to church school, and hence into church membership, we shall rejoice.

By Florence Sanford Ourth

ANYONE WHO HAS EVER PLAYED in a band or orchestra knows that the united effort not only makes beautiful harmony, but gives one a definite thrill that he cannot experience while playing alone. For that reason I would like to share some of the letters that have come from those interested in the Word of Wisdom. I'm sure they will mean much to Herald readers and encourage them to know that they are not alone in trying to put into practice "the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days." The response has been wonderful and makes me feel that the Lord is opening the hearts of his people to his plan, that they may be strong when disaster, plagues, and pestilences come upon the earth—strong in order that they may better minister to others in their need. Pearl Buck illustrates this beautifully in her book, Fighting Angel, which is the story of her father who served so many years as a missionary in China:

It never occurred to any of us that Andrew could ever grow old. His body had always been the same, lean as a pine, his skin weathered to a dark bronze red. He never added a pound to his weight and his waist stayed as slim as it ever had been in his youth. . . . His regimen remained immovably the same—a cold bath at rising, and he rose invariably at half-past five; from six to seven he spent in prayer and meditation; at seven he breakfasted, invariably the same breakfast, and it always included a dish of porridge made from native wheat washed and sundried and ground in a little stone hand mill. . . . None of us remember a single lapse of indulgence. And his magnificent body remained a miracle of vigor, his eyes clear and vivid, and his skin where it was not burned, as white and smooth as a little child's. . . . So he went unscathed through sickness and disease everywhere about him and remained whole and untouched. If he had a little malaria, a dash of quinine instantly restored him, so quick to respond was his healthy body. And as time went on he seemed to build up his own immunity and never had malaria at all. Time after time he went into famine areas to do relief work and others came down with typhus but never he.

In a weekly publication dated November 2, 1950, is this Washington dispatch—"Truman Decries Unfitness of Youth—One of the most disgraceful things that ever happened to this country was to find that 34 per cent of the young men and young women were not physically and mentally fit to serve the country."

WE CAN BECOME an outstanding people physically if we will. Some day nations are to come to learn our ways. Will it be partly because we are a strong and healthy people?

I was interested in this letter from Missouri:

We became particularly interested in the Word of Wisdom when death was on our doorstep. Administration brought relief but not cure. Instead we were led into contact with the science of natural hygiene. My husband regained his health, and we have gone deeper into the study of natural law.

From another part of Missouri:

Many have asked, "Why is it that we do not have more healings today?" I have wondered if the Lord is not trying to force us to consider his advice. Just as Dr. Shute has found the solution for most heart trouble in the use of vitamin E, which is found in wheat, so I believe the cure for cancer will one day be discovered, and its solution will lie in the observance of the Word of Wisdom. If the Lord were to just touch us with healing as we desire, in a brief time we would be ill again unless we changed our ways.

From Washington:

Is it any wonder that after the elders have responded cheerfully to the call for administration that many times healing is not received? We have experienced in administration that the mind was enlightened to know what to do or what not to do to bring about healing. . . . I have been able to obtain 100 per cent whole wheat which is not processed, dated, and supposed to be used within three weeks. I started to use it and in a short time found definite improvements in my physical well-being.

From Indiana:

We have made up our minds to eat wheat. We tried to buy the whole grain around here but all we could get was some that was mixed with corn for chicken feed. It was dirty, but the wheat was good wheat so we picked out the corn and other foreign particles, washed it in my ricer, and then put it on cookie sheets to dry.

From a Seventy in the missionary field:

You'll be surprised to get this letter. It's about whole wheat. I just wanted to say that since reading the Word of Wisdom articles in the Herald I have been eating whole wheat bread in many of the Saints' homes, which makes me very happy because now I'll not only have the staff of life at home (which time is very short) but also "abroad."

From a serviceman:

I am stationed at Fort Richardson, Alaska. I feel the need of obtaining some pure grain (wheat), which has been called the staff of life, for my daily ration. Would it be possible to send me five pounds? What I had in mind was to eat a certain amount uncooked every morning when I first get up. I am a firm believer in the Word of Wisdom, and I feel the results would be priceless.

Dr. Royal Lee tells us that Wellington's army received as its only rations, one pound of wheat per man a day—and these men licked Napoleon's army.

From Hawaii:

I am much interested in the Word of Wisdom. My husband is Chinese. Since rice is the Chinese staple food, I am trying to get my family to eat brown rice instead of white.

FROM LEADERS OF WOMEN'S DEPARTMENTS come these comments: Lansing, Michigan: ". . . We are planning twelve Word of Wisdom lessons in our year's work, one each month at our mass meeting." Western Oklahoma: ". . . We hope to make the Word of Wisdom one of our district projects this year." Northwestern Iowa: ". . . We have selected 'Observing the Church Health Program' among the six ways in which we plan to magnify our calling this year." The president of a LaDaSa young married group writes that the people she is working with are very much interested in the Word of Wisdom; this is an ideal set-up in which both husband and wife can study together.

I was privileged recently to attend the opening services in the new church at Ottumwa, Iowa, and was impressed at the Communion service when I noticed that homemade, whole wheat bread was served. Later I heard the guest soloist explain to her friend who had played the accompaniment, "Did you notice that brown bread was served at the Communion? That is typical of our belief in the Word of Wisdom."

From Independence:

While at Chetek Reunion we met a couple from Chicago who told us they had been converted just last fall. When asked what brought them into the church, they replied that two missionaries had stopped at their home and asked if they might hold cottage meetings. They told them "Yes," but in their hearts they did not want them. They were eating at the time and invited the missionaries to join them in their refreshments. Coffee was served, but to their surprise, the missionaries refused the coffee and explained why. The husband was impressed and said, "If they have that teaching in their church and are abiding by it, I'll investigate their teachings." He did and they were converted.

AS I READ "A Stranger Goes to Church," published by the Cleveland Press and reprinted in the Herald of December 18 (which told of the high priesthood meeting at the Kirtland Temple), I thought, "Again we have given silent witness to the Restoration in the keeping of another part of the Word of Wisdom." The reporter was very much impressed, for five of the thirteen paragraphs called attention to the fact that "The men of the High Priesthood of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the Saints do not use tobacco in any manner, shape or form." He also asked, "Can you imagine any gathering of 200 Clevelanders at ease—just standing around talking during an intermission at a public meeting—and nobody smoking?"

From Lamoni, Iowa:

We have tried to live by the Word of Wisdom principles since we were quite young, but must say that our ideas have changed with the years, and the more we learn the more we see there may be to learn. At first we felt we were complying fully with it when we merely abstained from the use of tea and coffee. Soon, however, we realized that the revelation comprised vastly more than negations—that it involved an entire philosophy of living. We are middle aged but still learning.

At Lamoni, Brother Bert Brooks has been making 100 per cent whole wheat bread and sending some to Independence. It is enriched, not with synthetics, but with wheat germ. Even the sweet bread dough for rolls, doughnuts, and such, is made with part whole wheat and enriched with the wheat germ. He is very much interested in the Word of Wisdom and is really working hard to supply the widespread demands for his bread. Recently his bakery burned and folks were without the bread for eight weeks. He said, "You should have heard the lamentations." Now he is situated in the building that many Gracelanders will remember as the "Coffee Shop."

We heard that a baker in Council Bluffs was making whole wheat bread for our people and upon inquiring found out that a sister who was taking care of six little children besides her own family and could not find the time to bake the thirty loaves a week that she needed had asked a local grocer if he would bake 100 per cent whole wheat bread from the Enright Flour using the recipe enclosed in the bag. He was very glad to do so. Now he has several of our people buying it since the news soon spread around.

FROM OLD FASHIONED MILLERS of Saint Paul, Minnesota, came a free 100 pound bag of Enright's Whole Wheat Flour with this note from Miss Kathleen Enright, vice president:

We have had inquiries from all over the country and particularly from Iowa. Recently we have contacted Mr. Vredenburg of the Chariton Wholesale Grocery, who is a member of your church, and will carry it in his thirty grocery stores. I'm wondering what you wrote in those articles.

Undoubtedly the inquiries from Iowa were due to the influence of Sister Mildred Nelson Smith in her work as extension nutritionist, as well as her teaching among our people. I sent copies of the articles to Miss Enright and explained that I had only called attention to a revelation which God had given us over a hundred years ago but which had somehow become dimmed through the years.

From Texas:

We live in the Rio Grande Valley so find it next to impossible to get pure whole grain wheat flour. It seems to me that the church would do well to have a health food store where its members can obtain these health-giving foods.

As if in answer to this need a friend sends a clipping from The Independence Examiner of November 30:

An ambition of C. C. Hoover to become operator and owner of a health food store so as to be of definite service to humanity has been realized with the establishment of the Staf-O-Life Health Foods, 1421 West Lexington, Independence, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Hoover have always been health-minded. Mrs. Hoover is a graduate nurse, and both were reared on the farm, early learning the value of natural and wholesome foods. As far back as 1930, Mr. Hoover promoted the use of whole wheat cereals in the University of Nebraska. . . . The Staf-O-Life features all freshly prepared products, 100 per cent whole wheat bread from the Natural Food Center in Kansas City (this wheat is ground and made into bread the same hour), papaya from the tropics (rich in Vitamin A), Hollywood Cup and My Breakfast Cup (delicious warm drinks), raw sugar, dextrose, honey from the mountains of Wyoming, country sorghum from Kentucky, brown rice, soya beans, whole wheat crackers, mild herbs, and many other items. The store also carries a line of diabetic foods. Mrs. Walter Zimmerman, their assistant, has had twenty years experience in nutrition study. The Hoovers . . . will do all they can to help people obtain the kinds of foods they need.

IN NAUVOO the Harold Smiths, who I had bought a small stone buhr mill to grind their own flour, have exchanged it for a large size mill. They have experimented all summer and fall with every variety of local wheat as well as wheat from several states. Having found the "best," they are ordering a carload to be shipped from North Dakota. So the Nauvoo Saints are looking forward to having fresh ground whole wheat flour every week.

When Brother Smith went to Independence to attend the Book of Mormon Institute he took some samples along. He found the Saints there very enthusiastic about whole wheat. Staf-O-Life plans to stock it as well as some other grocery stores and a bakery there. Lamoni Bakery has ordered some to try also.

The flour is quite fine so the dough needs to be made very stiff. They suggest using a floating dairy thermometer to be sure the liquid for mixing and the dough for rising is kept at 80 degrees. Some heat the oven to 80 degrees and let the bread rise there. They also find it more economical and satisfactory to buy the bulk baker's yeast, from a fourth to a half a pound at a time, and use one ounce to a baking of four loaves. Mildred Nelson Smith suggests handling the dough on a greased instead of floured board since it is stiff, making a nicer looking loaf when baked. A beaten egg to each loaf makes it lighter, but a little more flour will be needed. The flour also makes good pie crust if only a very small amount of water is used and the dough rolled between sheets of waxed paper.

From Oklahoma came a letter enclosing a very interesting article taken from the November, 1947, Coronet entitled "Can Medicine Make You Smarter?" It tells of a wonderful substance called "glutamic acid." Experiments showed that rats fed on it were able to perform feats that had been impossible for them before. When tried on children suffering from mental difficulties or epilepsy, it was found the I.Q. of every child tested went up. It also pushed higher the I.Q.'s of normal children. I was thrilled when I read—"Glutamic acid is found in a variety of foods including peas and beans. In commercial quantities it is obtained from wheat gluten."

Peas and beans! Why that was the "pulse" according to the dictionary that Daniel and his three friends asked for in preference to the meat and wine from the king's table, and when the testing time came "in all matters of wisdom and understanding that the king inquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers in all his realm."

Wheat gluten! The Lord tells us wheat should be the staff of life and promises that if we follow his advice we too "shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures." It may be hard for us who are older to change our habits of eating, but for the sake of our children we should make the effort so that their minds will be capable not only of grasping the truths of the gospel, but of receiving enlightenment that many of us have been denied because we have not kept the law.

A Man and His Town

By Alice Crossan

(NOTE: This article was written at the request of the editors. The life and accomplishments of J. Albin Anderson, a cripple, are so extraordinary they should serve as an inspiration to all who read of them. The author is a niece of Mr. Anderson.)

community was later located, and where the town of Lindbergh, Wyoming, now stands. In 1889 they homesteaded about two miles northeast of the present town of Albin, Wyoming, where young Albin lived with his parents until he filed on a 240-acre homestead of his own in 1907.

A couple of years before, he started a store on a small scale at his father's home with five dollars borrowed from an uncle. From this small beginning in the business world he built up his store until, after he had moved it to his homestead, the business at one time required the services of five clerks. His merchandise, consisting of drugs, groceries, meats, farm machinery, and later auto supplies, was hauled by four-horse team, and later by truck, from Pine Bluffs until the arrival of the railroad at Albin, at which time the town was settled (in 1928).

In 1905 he was commissioned by President Theodore Roosevelt as postmaster of the office which bears his name, and the framed document was one of his most prized possessions.

With the arrival of the railroad he moved the large modern home from his farm to town, where the building served as residence, store, post office, telephone exchange and headquarters for the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company which he helped to organize.

He was married in September, 1927, to Miss Gladys Gidley. They were an ideally happy couple for seven short years until she died in January, 1934, nearly a year after both were injured in an automobile accident.

In addition to the mercantile business he operated for many years and his extensive farming operations, Mr. Anderson also served as executive secretary for the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Wyoming for over thirty-five years, until his retirement a year ago. He retired from the post office at Albin in 1944. The Mountain States Telephone Company honored him in 1948 by presenting to him a life membership in the Frederick H. Reid chapter of the Telephone Pioneers of America in recognition of his service as manager, and many times sole operator, of the Albin exchange for forty-three years.

HE WAS FIRST AFFLICTED with rheumatism when he was nine years old, and after several years traveling around trying to find a climate that would benefit him, he grew gradually worse until, at the age of twenty-one, he found it necessary to adopt a wheelchair as a means of locomotion.

In spite of his many years of suffering and confinement to his chair, Mr. Anderson was one of the most cheerful persons to be found anywhere. He was broad shouldered and robust in appearance, and had he been able to stand erect he would have been six feet two inches tall. Although his body was twisted and crippled almost beyond belief, suffering never changed him mentally or emotionally. For this reason, he was beloved of all who knew him. It was a source of strength to many that this man, sitting rigid in almost forty-seven years in a wheelchair, could still radiate cheerfulness and unquenchable optimism.

TO ME, this man was Uncle Albin. Although I did not know him best, I knew him well, and almost four years of my life were spent, at various times, in his home. In spite of the fact that he was often under the care of doctors, I never knew him to seek the help of a psychiatrist and, although he read widely, he never needed to read any books on how to be popular. His was the true Christian philosophy. People in his town loved him because he loved them, and because in all his dealings with them he did unto them as he would have had them do unto him.

When I was five years old I remember that we lived for a time with Uncle Albin. My brother and I slept upstairs, and every night after our prayers it was our habit to call downstairs to him, "Good night, Uncle Albin, God bless you." Later, when we were both in high school, we spent a year with our grandmother and Albin, and during the recent war I stayed and helped to take care of him and worked in the post office and LANGUAGE BEGARS EXPRESSION in our moments of deep emotion and most intense feeling, and we always find it difficult to be articulate in either great happiness or sorrow. For this reason, God gave us tears. The good deeds men do are not written in books, but, as Emerson said, upon hearts. So as I write this short article in memory of Albin Anderson, I realize that it is not what I have written here that will be remembered, but the effects of the life he lived which will go on after him.

When a man dies, the pertinent facts concerning his life are collected, and it is made known where he was born, what work he was engaged in during his lifetime, what family survives him, and with a few more paragraphs all that went on record of his earthly works are summed up. We do this because we find it impossible to tell what that man's life really was, how much he was loved by those who were closest to him, or how deeply he influenced the lives of those who knew him. Thus language fails us when we need it most.

J. ALBIN ANDERSON was born December 26, 1882, near Denison, Iowa, and came to southeastern Wyoming territory with his parents, Gust and Anna Anderson, when he was four years old. His father filed on a timber claim and pre-emption near where the Salem telephone exchange. It was during this last time that I grew to understand the deep regard others had for him. He always had a great sense of humor and was quick with clever greetings and quips about things of local interest. He enjoyed a good joke, a good meal, good fellowship, good conversation. One of his favorite greetings was "Top of the morning to you." He loved to talk to people who came to his office on business, although many just dropped in to say hello and to make themselves feel better. His friends were varied. He could talk as easily to the governor of Wyoming as to the town drunkard. Although his counsel was good, he never "preached" to his friends; he did not lay down rules for living the good life; he quietly lived it. Often honored for his long and faithful services to the community, he was always modest and unassuming, although friendships meant a great deal to him.

He was interested in the children of the Albin community and in the young people everywhere. He made frequent contributions to Boys' Town, and received letters of gratitude from Father Flanagan himself. He was always interested in the church and eager for its advancement.

WHEN ALBIN'S WIFE DIED suddenly in 1934, many people felt that he would want to give up his business and go elsewhere to live. He did not do this. Many times he told me that Gladys wanted him to go on just as he was, and this he promised to do. One less secure in the love and goodness of God might have felt the loss too grievous to bear, but instead of this, he said time after time that God had been good to him, and that he had been richly blessed. He grieved at the loss of his mother, too, but this same well-balanced fortitude carried him on without the help of these two he loved so much. He was privileged to see both his wife and his mother after death, and he felt secure in the knowledge that they were safe and happy.

I REMEMBER many happy incidents during my years with my uncle, and especially the summer that he answered an ad from a well-known soap manufacturer who promised soap enough for two weeks to make a complexion test. He received this soap, letting the company continue in the belief that he was "Mrs. Anderson," aged over fifty. Every morning he and I faithfully used the product, and filled out the questionnaire that came with it. Each morning Albin would ask for his shaving mirror, so he could admire his rapidly improving complexion. "Don't you think my skin looks lovely today?" he would ask with a twinkle in his eye. It is such memories as this that make our loss seem greater.

Many persons knew of our belief in healing, and often asked Albin and others of us why, since we believed in healings, Albin had not been permitted to walk again. Albin realized that his service to God would be greater in the condition in which he had been placed, and he never complained. Like the apostles of old, he had learned in whatsoever state he was, therewith to be content. During his last illness, a Catholic nurse who had known him only a few weeks remarked to my mother that certainly when Mr. Anderson died he would not go to purgatory but straight to heaven. This was but one of many examples that people felt him to be a good man. I believe this was the thing Albin desired most in life—to be a good man, and not to be a stumbling block in the path of anyone. And in this his success was surely greater than he knew. After his death, some who knew him said with all sincerity, "There was a Saint." Surely these words bear out the fact that his willingness to accept the plan of God with good cheer accomplished the divine purpose.

We are comforted in the thought that he walks today with those he loved. Brother Glaude Smith, who gave the funeral sermon, and who also gave the sermon for Gladys many years before, expressed our greatest hope when he said that if we love one another, and if we mutually love God, then nothing can separate us, for we are under his care, whether in heaven or earth. We can say, then, with the eloquent simplicity of Saint Paul, "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's."

First semester exams and second semester registration marked the midpoint of the Graceland year and dominated Graceland life during the week of January 21. After the completion of exams, the registration procedure for each class began with freshman and sophomore assemblies. At the freshman assembly, led by freshman president Dick Cheville, Dr. R. A. Cheville introduced some thirty new students and told of the expected arrival of another, Kisuke Sekine, from Hanno, Japan. Kisuke is the first student to come to Graceland from Japan, though not the first Japanese to attend. He has overcome grave obstacles, and it has taken him over a year to make arrangements to come to Graceland.

The annual freshman-sophomore girls' basketball game the morning of January 25 saw the sophomores victorious by the score of 31 to 25. The first all school function of the year was held the evening of the same day—a talent show in the form of a radio program. It was "emceed" by Ed Barlow of Brewton, Alabama, and featured the unveiling of "the thing." The purpose of this activity was to help students relax after a week of exams.

Also related to the midyear idea was the Wednesday night vesper service. In it, Graceland students examined the progress they have made in the first half of the school year and looked forward to what they hope to accomplish in the remaining half.

The phrase, "Memorial Student Center," is used many times in this column. That is because Graceland life revolves about this building in so many ways. Financed entirely by College Day and alumni contributions, "The Center," as it is known on the campus, is Graceland's newest building. Of striking modern design, it houses the office of the Director of Social Activities, the school post office and book store, a snack shop, a lounge area, and a large floor used for roller skating. This floor has a stage at one end and when chairs are set up on the floor, this part of the building function as an auditorium. In this capacity it is used for assemblies, church services, concerts, and plays. Modern lounge furniture occupies the space around the fireplace on one side of the floor and the area along another wall is used for the playing of games, which may be checked out from the Director of Social Activities. It was recently the scene of a hotly contested table tennis tournament. For a student who has never known Graceland without a Center, it is difficult to imagine what life without it would be like.

at the check she had given him and thought, "It's a goodly sum to start with."

In late July Luther casually remarked to his family that he had attended a meeting at the town hall and that a new office had been created—that of park commissioner. "What on earth will he do?" asked Bob. "We don't have any parks."

"Give me time, Son," said his father. "As the new commissioner I can promise one park at least."

"Tell us about it," begged the impatient Barbara.

"Don't be in such a hurry, Young Lady," said her father. "I'm just as excited as you are. I have been made park commissioner and my first job is to buy the Inn and surrounding grounds for a park and recreation hall."

The twins voiced their excitement but their mother's face was as calm as if she had not heard the news. "Mother, don't you think it's wonderful?" asked Barbara. "You are now the wife of Park Commissioner Parks."

It was Harriet's turn to surprise the family. With a happy laugh she said, "I have been going around for the last month talking to myself to keep from telling anyone what was going on. I became utterly obsessed with the idea of getting rid of that place ever since the night I was there. Now that it is all settled I can relax. When Uncle Everett was here last year he gave me a check and told me to use it for some good cause. I am sure he will approve of what I have done with it."

"The day I went to see Henry Budworth about it he urged me to bring home some of your church literature and the Book of Mormon, and I have been studying it ever since. I will have to admit, Luther, that I have found a church which promises more than I ever dreamed of. I have asked for baptism next Sunday, and I hope I won't have to go alone." Bob and Barbara assured her that they would be with her. Bob, trying to be funny, said, "We'll all get washed at the same time, Mom."

Luther Parks spoke quietly, "Remember, Son, that your baptism is your covenant with God. Never treat it lightly." Then he turned to his wife. "Harriet, darling, this means our family is united in love, home, and religion, and the crossroads of life can have no serious problems so long as our signpost is the Word of God."

A daughter, Zoanne Dee, was born to Edward and Pauline White of Berkeley, California (date of birth not given). Mr. and Mrs. White formerly lived in Independence, Missouri, and Denver, Colorado.

DEATHS

BUNNELL.—Rosa E., daughter of William and Mary Ann Fry Palmer, was born December 12, 1865, at Logan, Iowa, and died January 19, 1951, at Portland, Oregon. She was married on January 22, 1884, to George E. Bunnell, who preceded her in death in May, 1928. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since early in life and was always glad to bear her testimony to the truthfulness of the church.

She is survived by two sons: Boyd E. Bunnell of Portland, Oregon, and Paul S. Bunnell of Milwaukee, Oregon; two daughters: Ada B. Hoisington of Kansas City, Missouri, and Rosamond B. Smith of Independence, Missouri; eleven grandchildren; and seventeen great-grandchildren. An infant son and a married daughter, H. Helen Hoisington, preceded her in death. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Elwin Vest and Evangelist Walter Barker at the Colonial Mortuary in Portland. Interment was in Lincoln Memorial Park, Portland.

LEEKA.—Joy, son of William Madison and Nellie Leeka, was born near Thurman, Iowa, on June 22, 1911, and died January 18, 1951, of injuries received in an automobile accident on January 16 near Percival, Iowa. He was a graduate of Thurman High School (class of 1928) and a member of the Reorganized Church. On August 1, 1930, he was married to Winifred Irene Snell; two daughters were born to them. After their marriage the Leekas made their home on a farm west of McPaul, Iowa.

Surviving are Mrs. Leeka; two daughters; Nancy Dee and Loretta Marlene, both students at Doane College in Crete, Nebraska; his father, W. M. Leeka; a brother, Irwin, both of Thurman; and a sister, Dolores E. Kelley of Independence, Missouri. His mother preceded him in death on May 15, 1946.

McFARLANE.—Steven Alan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Evert McFarlane of Oelwein, Iowa, was born December 19, 1950, and died December 31, 1950, following a brief illness. He is survived by his parents; a brother, Douglas; his paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George McFarlane; and his maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. F. Troester. Funeral services were held January 1 at the Brant Chapel, Elder Lyle Woodstock officiating. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

MARTIN.—Robert F., was born February 7, 1891, in Chicago, Illinois, and died October 20, 1950, in Chicago. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since July 25, 1945.

He is survived by his wife, Cecelia Hicks Martin; a son, John H. Martin of New York, New York; two sisters: Edith Allie and Sadie Martin; and one brother Daniel Martin. Funeral services were held in Chicago, Elder J. C. Stuart officiating.

* APOLOGIES

"I wish that we could learn to apologize when we have made mistakes, when we have done something wrong and hurt other people. False pride and cowardice often prevent us from asking forgiveness. But we can get the courage we need through prayer. To say, 'I'm sorry,' and really mean it brings a wonderful spirit of understanding. After apologizing, one feels clean inside, knowing that the fault is forgiven. It would help us individually, and it would help the church—it would prevent trouble and sorrow—if we could learn this lesson and practice it."—Myrtle Louderback.

* TEMPTATION

Think back a little while to the last time you had a contest with a temptation. Can you remember who won?

Certainly. It flitted around, never out of sight, but never within easy reach where you could destroy it, until . . . Well, you know what happened.

Now here's something for you. Do you have a formula for dealing with temptation? If not, try this.

First, separate yourself definitely from the temptation. If you cannot remove it from your environment, remove yourself from it. The greater the distance, the greater the safety. And quit wanting it.

Second, get a substitute. Think about something else. Get up and go into action on some piece of work. Keep busy.

Third, keep away from the people who favor the temptation. Associate with those who oppose it.

Fourth, if it is a strong temptation, get down on your knees and pray for help. Ask yourself, "Could I do that with Jesus watching me?" Then remember that he sees you all the time!

* BOOK OF MORMON, PALMYRA EDITION

Brother Frank G. Hedrick, 16 North Ninth Street, Atchison, Kansas, writes, regarding the article on the Palmyra edition of the Book of Mormon (1830), that he has a very interesting copy. The book is complete, pages clean, with no marks or notations. The front cover is loose, and carries a ticket reading, "Library of the American Bible Society." On the first fly leaf is written, "Presented by Marcus Wilbur, Jan. 7, 1838." On the second fly leaf is the autograph of Newell K. Whitney, which S. A. Burgess identified as genuine. Brother Hedrick has a large collection of early church books, "Heralds," and other publications.

Brother Carl T. Self, attorney at law, 2582 Whitmore Street, Omaha, Nebraska, writes that he has a copy of the Palmyra edition. It also has an interesting history, recorded in notations. It once belonged to Morris Hobart, who bought it from a missionary, afterward using it in working against the church. He gave it to Reverend C. W. Savidge at Mankato, Minnesota, on September 28, 1882. Brother Self purchased it from Reverend Savidge on May 4, 1930. The original purchase price in 1833 was noted as $1.25. It is leather bound, complete, and "is in a fair state of preservation," says Brother Self.

News and Notes

HONORS TO STUDENTS

The debate team of William Chrisman High School won several honors at a recent speech festival in Omaha, Nebraska. Celia Fry received the rating of excellent and a gold medal in original. She and Delores Tandy and several other students won nine of twelve debates for second place honors in the festival.

BISHOP IN OHIO

Bishop L. W. Kohlman was in Cleveland, February 25, for the Kirtland District Financial Day held at the East Side Church in Cleveland. He preached at Kirtland that evening.

PRESENTS PLAY

"The Hasty Heart," a three-act comedy drama was presented by the White Masque Players, February 12, 13, 15, and 16, in the Stone Church Little Theater. Mrs. Glenna Griffith directed the play with leading role portrayed by Robert Akers, Gene Adkins, and Barbara Peavy.

PLANS FOR CAMPS

Elder John Darling attended the meetings of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America which was held in Columbus, Ohio, February 11 through 14. While in Columbus he met with the members of the West Mission.

After leaving the council Brother Darling stopped in Chatham, Ontario, and talked to the women's group. He then went to London, Ontario, February 16, where he met with the camp committee to plan the Ontario Youth Camp to be held at Erie Beach, June 24 through July 1. February 17 he was in Port Huron, Michigan, planning for the new youth camp to be held July 1 through 8 at the Bluewater Reunion grounds. Brother Darling will act as director of both these camps. Carl Muir is chairman of the Ontario camp committee and Melvin Russell is chairman of the new Michigan camp committee.

While at Port Huron, he preached the morning service, February 18, at the branch.

ATTENDS MEETING

Kenneth L. Graham attended the meetings of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America in Columbus, Ohio, February 11 through 14. Mr. Graham is Chairman of the Exhibits Committee and a member of the Executive Committee of the Publishers' Section.

PRESIDENT IN EAST

President Israel A. Smith left for a visit to the churches in Baltimore and Philadelphia March 9. He will also visit other points in the New York-Philadelphia district. He is scheduled to be in attendance at the dedication of the new church at Caraway, Arkansas, March 25.

VISITOR FROM HAWAII

Brother Andrew Kashimoto of Hilo, Hawaii, is visiting with Bishop and Mrs. Howard Miller and other friends in the Center Place en route from an insurance conference in Biloxi, Mississippi, to his home. He is expected to sail on the "Lurline" from Los Angeles on March 26. Brother Kashimoto is a priest and is head of the Camera Craft Photo Shop in Hilo.

We'd like you to know

Mrs. Irene Engstrom Shearer

SOME PEOPLE learn to like the odor of drugs and enjoy the clinking of bottles. Mrs. Shearer says, "It's my life." Old printers come to Herald House and say, "I love the smell of printer's ink." Nostalgias take queer quirks in the other fellow.

Mrs. Shearer has not spent her life in a dispensary by any means. She has four girls: Beverly Jean, 18, Elizabeth Jane, 15, Pamela Dale and Paula Sue (identical twins), 6. That qualifies her as a mother. After graduating from Lincoln (Kansas) high school in 1926, she entered nurses training at the Sanitarium, graduating in 1929. She took graduate work at the Chicago Lying-In Hospital specializing in obstetrics in 1930-31. Then followed three years of relief duty at the Sanitarium. In 1936 and 1937 she did private duty nursing. The next two years she had charge of the medical floor. In 1942-1944 she had charge of the delivery room. Since August, 1949, she has been assistant to the pharmacist. That would qualify her as a good person to have around in case you are sick.

She was baptized in Lamoni in 1920 and was married to Paul Shearer in 1931. Her brother, Elder Floyd Engstrom, is a chaplain with the armed forces in Germany. In addition to being devoted to her job and her girls, she finds time to attend church and P.T.A. meetings. That, we might say, qualifies her as one who is living a full life.

The Risen Lord

When Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene And she went and told them that had been with him as they mourned and wept. And they, when they had heard that he was alive believed not.

—Mark 16: 9-11.

WE TRY TO EVALUATE the events of the last days of Jesus upon the earth: the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, the rising storm of deadly enmity, the betrayal, the trials, the Crucifixion, and the Resurrection. We try, but it is in vain.

Scholars and critics pick their way carefully through the details of the story and, like the disciples, some of them "believe not," and try to explain them away.

A generation of critics dies, and its words are forgotten. Another generation takes its place, and the process is repeated. The tide of commentary never ends.

But the story, simple as it may be, remains and endures, sharing the immortality of the Lord Jesus.

* * * *

WHICH CHAPTER of that story is most significant? What is the climax of that great and grave drama?

Some faiths concentrate on the cross. In an almost sadistic way they perpetually exploit the death agony of Jesus. It is the center of their church art; members wear the crucifix suspended from their necks by golden chains; the religious orders say their prayers by the rosary.

This emphasis is bound to have a strong effect on the human mind. What will it do to those people?

The cross is one of the oldest symbols to be used by human beings. What must the first man have been like, who imagined that form as a means of human sacrifice?

In its relation to Jesus, the cross is a symbol of suffering and death.

IN THE STORY OF JESUS there is something more significant than the cross. There is the open tomb, the symbol of the Resurrection. Evil tried to destroy good, but failed. The Son of God was granted an immortality of his own, a life that could not be destroyed by the weapons, the hate, or the cruelty of men.

Love was greater than death. Love is still greater than death:

God so loved the world that he gave his only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3: 16.

The death of Jesus on the cross was a fact. The divine love was a promise. The Resurrection is an eternal truth.

* * * *

THE RESURRECTION, unfortunately, has no certain, specific symbol. Books on the subject offer the phoenix, a legendary bird of Egypt that was supposed periodically to perish in flames, and then rise to new youth from its own ashes. But it is not a symbol of Christian origin. Another symbol offered is the empty cross, but it was not from the cross that Jesus arose to eternal life. It was from the tomb.

That empty tomb is the most significant thing in the whole story of Jesus. He was crucified. He died physically. But by the power of God his spirit survived, and the body was renewed in a mysterious way. And because he lived, we too shall live:

Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye shall see me: because I live, ye shall live also.—John 14: 19.

* * * *

THAT TOMB was only a cave, according to some people—a cave with a heavy stone door. That it was an empty cave on that morning, the first day of the week so long ago, means nothing to them.

The disciples would not accept the testimony of Mary Magdalene. "They believed not." And when the resurrected Jesus appeared to the other apostles, Thomas still would not believe their testimony. Eventually he was convinced.

To some, the shadow of a cross falls athwart the world. In the dim light of that first Easter morn, how grim it must have looked upon the brow of Calvary! But over the eastern mountains—across the River Jordan and the Dead Sea—from Nabataea and Arabia beyond, came the first golden tints of dawn in the mauve shadows of the night. It was the light of a new day, and the glory of God was in it. In it, too, was the promise of a risen Savior, the Redeemer, and the hope of the world.

Historical Document

VOLUME 7 of our Journal of History, page 453, issue of October, 1914, had an account and a copy of a petition filed in the Senate of the United States on December 31, 1849. This document is significant, first, because it was signed by William B. Smith and Isaac Sheen as presidents and twelve others as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and, second, because the nature of the allegations set forth in it.

About ten years ago we secured a photostat (as we then supposed) of this petition which, in the light of what we have lately acquired, we now know was but a photostat of a typewritten copy of the petition.

Recently we applied again for copies of this document, which have been received, and quite to our surprise and satisfaction, we now have photo reproductions of a handwritten document. Examination of the same discloses that all except the signatures is in the handwriting of one person, and a comparison with signatures convinces us the document is in the handwriting of Isaac Sheen.

WILLIAM B. SMITH in 1849 was the sole remaining brother of the prophet and patriarch who had been slain at Carthage. William had been selected, chosen, and ordained presiding patriarch by the church at Nauvoo soon after the martyrdom. His accession to the office was well publicized in the Times and Seasons, and he occupied in the office for a time, then was rejected, not sustained—in fact thrust out by Brigham Young and his associates.

An original book of blessings given by William while presiding patriarch is in our possession, and from it we find he functioned in the office at least from about June, 1845, until about September, 1845.

William Smith afterward lived at Eldorado, Iowa, for many years; affiliated with the Reorganized Church from the 1880's until his death; and for a time labored in the field as a missionary.

ISAAC SHEEN, an Englishman by birth, was converted in 1840 at Philadelphia and came to Nauvoo in 1842, but soon removed to Macedon, Illinois; later he went to Kentucky. In 1859 he gave his allegiance to the Reorganization movement, became the first editor of the Herald, then called The True Latter Day Saints Herald, official organ of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," shown thus from the first issue until October 15, 1866, when, for some reason not made known at the time, the word "Reorganized" was inserted.

Isaac Sheen was thus removed from Nauvoo and the church during the closing years of its stay in Illinois; but it is quite obvious from his history that he maintained his interest in the Latter Day Saint movement.

In 1849 Elder Sheen was joining with others to secure redress for wrongs allegedly committed by Mormon leaders, and objecting to statehood for Utah, according to the petition filed in Congress. And in 1852 he wrote a letter to the Saturday Evening Post which was published by that paper on October 9 of that year. This letter Sheen printed in the first issue of The True Latter Day Saints' Herald, as also a letter he had written to the Cincinnati Commercial in October, 1859.

It was this first letter which the Mormons have attempted by distortion and false assumption to make Sheen admit Joseph's connection with the plural wife doctrine, interpreting the words "spiritual wife doctrine" to mean polygamy, when they were and are different things, one entirely innocuous, but the other positively wrong, though, to be sure, they are both brought into the alleged revelation (Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132) which the Mormons promote to this day as an essential principle of salvation, and which, according to its own terms, must be complied with on pain of eternal damnation.

AFTER SO LONG A TIME we can neither fully establish nor fully disprove Sheen's competency to testify about Nauvoo and what happened during the later years of the church occupation there. Evidently in his petition to Congress on December 31, 1849, he was averring truth about some events allegedly happening prior to February, 1846.

However, Sheen deliberately disqualified himself as to Joseph Smith's alleged complicity with polygamy, when in his article on polygamy, page 9, Saints' Herald, January 1, 1860, he said, "This branch of the subject we shall leave to some of our brethren who are qualified to explain it satisfactorily." Whether he meant polygamy, when he referred to "this iniquity," we do not know. Neither do we know definitely what his conviction about it was in 1860; but we do know what, ten years before, he said was true, for in this petition to Congress he apparently "held the pen" which indited it.

Let us therefore look into the language of this document (page 2, beginning in the third line):

The rulers of the Salt Lake church hypocritically pretend to venerate the name and character of the Prophet Joseph Smith that they may retain their popularity among that people who believe that he was a true prophet. These rulers are apostates from the true church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which church Joseph Smith was president of. These rulers teach and practice polygamy,

Repeating: "These rulers apostates from the true church which Joseph Smith was president of. These rulers teach and practice polygamy."

The only reasonable interpretation of these statements is that polygamy was the "head and front" of their apostasy; that Joseph, martyred leader, had been rejected in fact, but secretly, in order for these men to retain favor among the members of the church.

By what process could one conclude from Sheen's statements that Joseph himself was in any degree under the lash of Sheen's indictment? On the contrary, he was obviously Joseph's champion.

Now it is obvious that if Sheen at any time had been personally knowing to facts that made him a competent witness as to the personal life and character of the Prophet, he was better qualified in 1849 than he was in 1852 and in 1860. And in 1860 he practically eliminated himself by the statement we have quoted in the foregoing.

From this petition it is extremely easy to conclude that Sheen had nothing but contempt for Brigham Young and his associates, as he charged them with all manners of crimes—most of them felonies: "murders, treason, adultery, fornication, robbery, counterfeiting, swindling, blasphemy, and usurpation of power, both political and ecclesiastical," quoting from the petition.

THIS PETITION is also significant because it furnishes proof that it was among the early public statements that polygamy was being practiced in Utah. The next year, in the spring of 1851, the Bureau of Indian Affairs filed a report which was given publicity in the annual report of the Department of the Interior, to the effect that the Mormons were practicing polygamy; that one of their leading church officials, secretary of the Territory and postmaster at Salt Lake City, was living openly with sixteen wives in one home. There was plenty of evidence that pressure was getting heavy, and some public statement must be made; as Brigham said in August, 1852, the time had come to "proclaim it." And pro-

Can Christ Save Christianity?

A sermon preached at the Auditorium on April 9, 1950

By Apostle D. T. Williams

SCRIPTURE:

Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. Give us this day, our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And suffer us not to be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever, Amen.—Matthew 6: 10-15.

And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand for ever. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter; and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure.—Daniel 2: 44, 45.

TODAY IS THE COMMEMORATION of the greatest day in the history of the world. I think we can say this without equivocation. Many other days have found red letter space on our calendars; many other days have been written large in the history of the human race; but there is no day quite so important as this because of the powerful and beautiful event which it commemorates. It was a wonderful thing that Christ should have come to earth at all. But let us remember that no matter how he may have been born, if he had never triumphed in the Resurrection, his Saviorhood would never have been established and confirmed, and we would not be thinking of him as we are now in this glorious Easter time. No matter how many good things he may have taught, or how many kind deeds he may have done, if he had not triumphed over the grave, we would be reading only his philosophy as we read the philosophy of Plato, Socrates, Aristotle, or Epictetus.

The Dynamic Life

We read of him today in the pages of the Bible, which is the world's best seller. It is the best seller because it has in it the story of the Nazarene. Had it not been for the addition of the New Testament to the Old, you today would not be reading the Bible. The Old Testament would have been just another tribal contribution to what we know today about the tribes of Israel; but Jesus made the Old Testament live because he fulfilled the prophecy of its poets and sages. As a result, we think of him as the Christ of the Resurrection, rather than the Jesus of the Crucifixion. But his cross and his resurrection are the two things which combine to make his life a power among men even now.

However, I'm not so much concerned this Easter day about the emotional pull we find in these events; I'm more concerned about the utility of his triumph. What does and what will his life do for us? What will his life mean to the generations of the future? We are concerned as to whether this Christ can be a saving Christ for us. If he cannot be that, then there is no meaning in his death, nor is there utility in his triumph. But he came as the Savior of the world. His Father sent him on such a mission as this. "God so loved the world that he gave his only Begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

The Coming Kingdom

We have read for your consideration the Lord's Prayer which so often we repeat, perhaps too much by rote. I wonder when we worship if we think about its vitality. It is not only a prayer for the coming kingdom, but a prophecy of that kingdom's coming. "Thy kingdom come" is not only a prayer but a prediction, not only a petition but a prophecy. Jesus laid for us in his prayer the very foundations of the new society, in which there will be justice between man and his fellow man. In this society there will be no racial problems, since we will recognize that "God hath made of one blood all nations of men." As a consequence of its coming, we shall have established ourselves, or shall have been established, by his power and Spirit in the character of the society we call Zion.

In the second Scripture we find that the prophet Daniel was speaking also concerning the coming kingdom. His very prophecy of its coming becomes an affirmation of its reality: "Thou sawest that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces."—Daniel 2: 34. And he said that this kingdom, represented by the little stone which God would establish, should "never be destroyed and the kingdom should not be left to another people." This Christ whose resurrection and triumph we commemorate today is the very essence and power and glory of that universal kingdom which will live forever to the glory of God under the power of his only Begotten Son.

Power, Purpose, and Permanency

We might well ask ourselves, "Can this Christ save us?" This becomes a pertinent question in the lives of innumerable people in this age of the world. We are threatened not alone by atomic bombs, but with a war of two great ideologies that face each other in battle array for life or death.

Is it any wonder that the people of all nations should be asking themselves, "What shall we do to be saved?" And while their terminology might not mean to them what it means to us, it certainly is meaningful to those fearful of the outcome of world events. They are looking for a way of escape which is purposeful, a way that offers some promise for the future. Can Christ bring this promise into reality? Again we're informed in the Hebrew letter concerning the Prince of Heaven: "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." Here is the prophecy of permanency.

"Thy throne, O God, is forever." This is evidently not a part-time business. It is an everlasting affair. God, through Christ, is seeking our co-operation that the death which his Son died and the resurrection with which he triumphed might be made effectual, not only among a few thousand or a few hundred million—not alone among those who possess white faces or who speak the English language—but among men everywhere and in every generation.

Man Cannot Save Himself

The announcement of his coming by the angelic messenger who informed Mary of the approach of the Savior of the world was "You shall call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." This means more than we often realize. He shall save his people from their sins—from the results of their errors, from the effects of their evil doings—until the kingdom of God shall come into reality, and man shall cease striving simply to save himself by pulling himself up by his spiritual bootstraps. He does not possess in himself the elements of his salvation. "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps."—Jeremiah 10: 23. He can assist in bringing to pass his salvation only inasmuch as he co-operates with this Christ who alone can save us all. In him we find the opportunities of ultimate salvation.

Christ Is Our Salvation

Can Christ save us? He saved others, and if he saved others, then why can't he save the seven thousand here today, and why not the one hundred forty thousand represented by those present upon this occasion? And if he can save the church which calls itself after his name, cannot he also save the world? He can—if the world is brought to a willingness to walk and talk with him. Here in obedience to the laws of life lies the sesame of salvation. Herein, too, is the element of agency. God has never been intent upon saving mankind without respect to mankind's will to be saved. He has never (and Christ has followed the pattern) forced the human mind, but he has attempted to persuade it. He has attempted to draw men to him. It was Jesus who said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." So in both the trials which came to him and also the triumphs which resulted from his overcoming of the trials, he becomes our Savior and guide.

Yes, he can save us because he saved Isaiah who, standing in the temple and seeing the vision of God, said, "Woe is me, I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the king, the Lord of Hosts." As Isaiah saw the king, the Lord of Hosts in the temple of God in that far-off day, so in the very life of this Christ who died and triumphed over death, we see our hope of salvation. If, upon analysis, we find in ourselves the same faults found in himself and are likewise repentant, God is kind and considerate. He will forgive us if we are willing to receive his extended hand of pardon.

The Church His Instrument of Salvation

He pleads with his church today to become an active participant in the building of his kingdom by warning the world and by enticing untold thousands and millions to obedience in this, his church, through the gospel of salvation.

God has called us to a great service. Can he save us through such service? He saved Peter who said, "Depart from me, Lord, for I am a sinful man." He saved doubting Thomas who said, "I will not believe unless I feel and see." Despite their sin, Christ converted these men and saved them. He converted three thousand on the day of Pentecost. Can he save us? He most assuredly can if we will allow it. But first there is this question, "Can he save a nominal Christian or a nominal Christianity?" The answer to this is a definite "No." He cannot save in his high glory a nominal Christianity, for a nominal Christianity begets Christians who are asleep, who may have received the good word of God but have forgotten its import, its power, its glory, and its capacity to save. Only those will be saved with him who have been "valiant in their testimony of Jesus." The only way Christ can save Christianity is for a nominal Christianity to become vital in every aspect.

This becomes our responsibility as a church. For Jesus said, "As my Father hath sent me, so send I you." This scripture may have a broader application than just to the Twelve to whom he was speaking at the moment. Every man and woman who has received the light of the gospel has received also a commission to tell the gospel story. One doesn't have to be a member of the First Presidency, or the Council of the Twelve, or a Quorum of Seventy, etc., to tell this story. Everyone who has received it has a commission, and thereby a responsibility to tell it. And there is only one way to tell it—that is God's way. Nominal Christianity can be changed into vital Christianity when nominal Christians are changed into progressive elements of his kingdom's program, and in this bring to pass the will of God among all those whom he yearns to save.

A nominal Christianity is a falling Babylon. The eighteenth chapter of the Revelation reads, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen and has become a habitation of devils." That is strong language. Babylon—this spiritual commercialism—is a power in a world which is sick with "spiritual wickedness in high places." In the midst of all this, God invites us, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues."—Revelation 18: 4. Jesus puts it in another way in his prayer, advising that his people should be "in the world but not of the world." This carries the implication of a world mission.

Life and Liberty

Being in the world we have the responsibility to tell the people of the world the story of Christ, of his power to save, and of the beauty of the message which he brought to elevate man above the mere physical level. This gospel creates in him a spirit that lives on though the flesh dies. This is the triumph of the Christ. I am looking to the day when the kingdom of God—which we believe is being spear-headed by this church—will move forward with such rapidity that it will astonish not only us but also the world. And all this because the Spirit is working through the church to achieve God's purpose among men.

Today there are many nations shaken to the center knowing not which way to go. Think of the plight of some of the European statesmen when they had to make a choice as to whether they were going to fight against the ideology of Communism or take their stand with the Western Democracies. What a choice indeed! Some of them made their choice in opposition to freedom only because they were pressured to make it. Others chose on the basis of their love of freedom; for them there was no intermediate ground. We, too, are in a world of choosing. Fortunate are the people who can make their choice out of freedom rather than coercion.

I was thrilled one day in Washington, D.C., as I stood in the beautiful memorial to Jefferson and looked at the top of one of the columns containing a statement of that great statesman's philosophy. There, engraved in the granite are these powerful words: "God who gave us life, gave us liberty." That is a tremendous truth—one worthy of the consideration of all mankind. With this life and this liberty, God expects us to make right choices. As individuals we can say "no" to Christ, or we can say "yes" to him. The nations of the world today can say "no" to him or they can say "yes" to him, depending on how they determine to use this liberty.

Christ's Way With the Nations

Have you noticed in Daniel's prophecy the sentiment that these nations shall have either one thing or the other happen to them? They shall, in the end, be "broken in pieces" or they shall be "consumed." These two statements speak of two different results stemming from two opposite courses of action. They that will be "broken in pieces" will be broken because of their rebellion against Christ and their refusal to walk with him. They that will be "consumed" will be willing to be melted into the purposes of the new kingdom which shall come, even the kingdom of God. These kingdoms—some "broken" and some "consumed"—shall be molded into the process of kingdom-building. By one means or another they shall become "the kingdom of our God, and his Christ."

Here is the liberty of choice among the nations. People today who are satisfied with ritualisms and formalisms have driven out the very Spirit of God, the only spirit that can save. Vital Christianity has Christ at its heart, and in that character of Christianity alone dwells the essence of salvation. As we lend ourselves to his purposes, no matter where we may be, we become responsible for carrying the evangel of the Restoration.

It is our business—the biggest business in the world—to carry the message of Jesus to men and women about us and around us that they may have the opportunity of knowing how they too may be saved with us in the kingdom of God. Christ was concerned about the salvation of men generally; he was concerned about the salvation of those who had already professed membership with him in his church and kingdom. For, speaking to a group outside of that inner circle which was his, he said to them about those on the inside, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

Christ Only Can Save Christianity

Yes, Christ can save a vital Christianity and people who are willing to become vital Christians. Perhaps it may seem unnecessary even to mention the fact that Christ can save a virile Christianity, for that fact you may say is set forth in all his work. But sometimes we need our minds awakened to a holy remembrance of the things he has said, as well as to the promises he has made and the powers which are his, that in us his kingdom might possess reality. We haven't gone as far as we ought to go in kingdom-building, and as one of the late revelations to the church states, "The preparation and perfection of my Saints go forward slowly." It isn't that God wants it to be slow; it is because we slow it up through our unworthy state of mind. God would have us hasten his work and adds, "the hastening time is here."

Every member who attends this Conference should go from it a torchbearer of the kingdom to carry the light of revelation and to inspire in the hearts of the children of men the hope of eternal life. We must not be satisfied with keeping such a tremendous hope to ourselves. Some seem to think that if they possess the secret of eternal life, they can keep it a secret and thereby be saved while others are lost. No one fools himself so utterly as one who reasons thus. No one possesses the secret of eternal life except he of whom it is intended and demanded that he shall take that secret to others among whom he dwells. "It becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor."—Doctrine and Covenants 84: 22.

This church of ours comes, then, to spearhead the kingdom of God. Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon gave to us in the seventy-sixth section, paragraph three, of the Doctrine and Covenants their testimony this is! As I have thought of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him." What a vital testimony this is! As I have thought about that great affirmation, I have pondered about Luther, the good man of the Reformation, of Wesley, of Calvin, of Roger Williams, and of others. Then I have thought to myself, what would they not have given for a testimony like this, "We know that he lives, for we saw him." Surely they would have said, "I wish that I had been given a testimony like that."

Here Was the Wisdom of Christ

Then, too, as I think about the manner in which the church was restored in its pristine simplicity, with all of its beauty of organization—with prophets, apostles, seventy, bishops, high priests, and all of the elements and officers of the church set in order—I can hear Luther, Calvin, Wesley, Williams and other church-builders say, "I wish I had thought about that." Then I ponder the fact that this young man who had little formal education in the world, but who possessed education by the Spirit and power of God, brought forth the church and restored to it the pure doctrine of Jesus Christ in all its simplicity, grandeur, and splendor. And again I think I can hear Luther, Wesley, Calvin, Knox, and others say, "I wish I had thought about that."

Here was a young, unlettered man, who was under the spirit and impulse of the Christ who died on Calvary and who arose that Easter morn from Joseph's new tomb to lighten the world with his glory. This Christ lightened the eyes and heart of a young man such as this that he, in turn, might send forth to proclaim the restoration of the gospel as the means of salvation to the world.

So today, my friends, as you go from here, may you go with this testimony in your hearts and on your lips: "God through Christ has set his hand this last time, for the gathering of his people Israel, that as the little stone was cut out of the mountain without hands to roll forth and become a mighty kingdom to fill the whole earth" so may this kingdom go forth, and we under God be participants in its building and in its ultimate triumph.

"He Is Risen," this salutation of the early Christians is a powerful testimony of his ability to save us individually and collectively. He is willing and able. Are we willing and anxious?

claimed it was, and that was all—no submission for a vote of acceptance or rejection! But could it have been otherwise, since a submission of the doctrine to a vote would have been a fatal admission that a doctrine never effective legally had been practiced illegally for a number of years? Besides—the other alternative: What a predicament if a people who had professed the rule of "common consent" from the beginning had arisen in righteous indignation and thrown the proposal in the waste basket! What an embarrassment that would have been!

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

The Sanitarium

An Integral Part of the Church

By Israel A. Smith

SUNDAY, APRIL 22, will be observed throughout the church as Sanitarium Day. This is in harmony with the action of General Conference, and deserves the support of all officers and members of the church.

Each year this institution is serving an increasing number of the sick and afflicted who seek its ministry as "a place of refuge and help." An important aspect of our Independence Sanitarium and Hospital is the School of Nursing. This is an educational unit of the institution and prepares young women for one of the finest vocational opportunities afforded in life today. Since the establishment of this school in 1910, over four thousand nurses have been graduated. Many of these have returned to the communities which sent them here for training as competent ministers of health to take an important part in the life of every community. It is the only institution of higher education in Independence.

As we contrast the improved standard of living which we enjoy today with that of the beginning of the twentieth century, each of us is inclined to feel that, not only are we entitled to food and shelter, but newspapers and magazines, radios and automobiles. However, good homes and other things which go to make up good living conditions are insignificant without good health. Our civilization is spending more and more each year to maintain our physical bodies in a healthy condition. Hospitals with the very best of equipment are demanded in more and more communities. During the last war the government took recognition of this need and subsidized communities where the defense work was being carried on, so that their hospital facilities could be enlarged to render a more adequate service. Our church hospital shared generously in this respect. However, hospitals, even though well equipped, have little utility value until properly staffed with doctors and competent nurses. Therefore, the hospital board, of which I am president, has concerned itself with a continuing source of supply for personnel, particularly for trained nurses.

It is a well-known fact that neither hospitals nor schools in America are self-supporting. Without being sponsored by church or taxing organizations, most of them would have had to close their doors. Many of us are inclined to think that the charges we pay should be adequate. However, operation costs are high and while the charges are held down as low as possible, there are some charity patients and quite a number of uncollectible bills which each hospital must assume, which complicates the financial problem.

Because our Independence Sanitarium and Hospital is a church institution, established as a direct result of divine direction, it guards jealously the health of the conference appointees. Because of good roads and improved transportation, it draws to its services many patients from outside our community, for our members from the adjoining stakes prefer to be cared for in this institution when the nature of their distress will permit them to come here.

THE "SANITARIUM WAY" of educating its nurses has become a tradition in itself. At 6:45 each morning a chapel service starts the day which ends when everything possible for the comfort and care of the patients has been completed. Miss Gertrude E. Copeland, who has been Superintendent of the Sanitarium for twenty-eight years, has loyally served this institution as her mission in life. For many years the success of both the school and the hospital depended almost entirely upon her organizational and administrative ability.

For the past several years, some elder under church appointment has served the institution as its chaplain. About three years ago our first full-time chaplain, Elder Donald V. Lents, began serving the institution. Last year over twenty-two hundred administrations were received by the patients. A few of these who were not members of the church have since become interested and united with the church.

THE NEED for more competent and devoted nurses seems to be imperative throughout the world. This has become more acute with the casualties of war. The government has already taken some steps to encourage more young women to enter the profession. I know of no more honorable profession nor more Christian service than that of ministering to the care and comfort of the sick and afflicted. The training is strenuous, and to the uninitiated the care of the suffering has its unpleasant aspects. Yet as these young women become proficient in their profession and gain confidence in their ability to meet even the critical situations which arise, their fears and sympathies which cause them suffering are overcome by a satisfaction of having witnessed the recovery of hundreds of seriously ill people and seeing them leave the institution to become strong and healthy citizens again.

May I assure those of you who have it in your hearts to contribute toward the "San Day Fund" that this call is for a highly deserving project and merits the best support you can give it. We understand that there are many insistent demands coming to each of our members for financial support in these times. Each one must judge that cause to which he shall give his support. We invite you to respond as heartily as you can to the needs of this great institution and the nursing school which is needed to sustain it.

A Scientific Pioneer

Caldwell and Associates, Headed by an Independence Church Member, Leads in Scientific Air Conditioning

An Interview by Leonard J. Lea

A LETTER and a telephone call brought a cordial invitation to visit the headquarters and factory of Caldwell & Associates near Independence. Accompanied by Marvin McDole to provide some of that technical understanding in which I am unfortunately lacking, I went south on Noland Road a quarter mile beyond the picturesque village of Little Blue. Looking to the left we saw, in the midst of a beautiful 200-acre tract of rich farmland, the spacious home that houses the headquarters of the company, and the factory near by. It is amazing that in this small factory is produced the air-conditioning equipment for some of the largest and most modern business buildings in America. One soon learns, however, that all those tools and machines would be useless without the brains and the skill of the mechanics and technicians who operate them. Many of these men acquired their skill in aircraft sheetmetal work.

Founder of the Business

At the head of the business is William J. Caldwell, engineer, inventor, and pioneer in the field of air conditioning. He and his helpers have manufactured and installed their equipment in some of the finest new business buildings. In 1929 Caldwell installed air conditioning in the Hotel Astor, overcoming technical difficulties that baffled other operators. This brought an acquaintance with the motor magnate, Walter P. Chrysler, and a contract to air-condition the Cloud Club in the Chrysler Building, a social retreat of millionaires. This began a rise to national prominence in the field, and orders followed for contracts for the Woolworth Store (New York City), Koppers Company, Northrop Aircraft in California, many Bell Telephone buildings in Michigan, United Air Lines, the Naval Ordnance Factory at Pocatello, Idaho, and others.

Pioneering

Currently, William Caldwell's designs, machines, and principles are still considered radical by conservative companies in the field. There is even some bitterness in the opposition. But he has succeeded in convincing some of the top business leaders and has been able to provide air conditioning under engineering conditions that others have considered impossible. At the present time he has one of the nation's largest contracts for the installation of his equipment in the General Motors Technical Center near Detroit. Twelve buildings are being constructed in the present program, and ultimately there will be twenty-one in the group, all air-conditioned by Caldwell & Associates, except some smaller spaces where individual conditioners will be used.

Church Background

Why should we be interested in this man and his work? He is a church man, interested in the aims and objectives of the church, and in its social and economic program. He comes from a four generation family background of membership in the church. He is a grandson of W. H. Garrett, a great nephew of George Hulmes, both members of the presidency of the original Independence Stake. He has been in touch with church work most of his life.

Home Life

There at the home, Mrs. Caldwell and the children live close to the work and participate in it in various ways. After school, the girls ride their ponies in the wide pasture and play with friendly dogs about the home. Brother Caldwell is a home-loving man and enjoys family life. As business grows, he hopes to have homes built near by so that workers will be close to their employment.

Operations

The Caldwell system of air conditioning employs small air ducts, high pressure and high velocity conditioned air up to speeds of 8,000 feet a minute, patented fans, silencer-expanders, and air control nozzles. He is able to control temperature within one degree in any large area—a condition vital to successful operation in many industries. His air-washing-conditioner equipment is unique.

Assets

"My most valuable assets are my patents," says Brother Caldwell. But the visitor who looks over the business soon sees that the number one asset is Caldwell himself with his splendid mind, experience, and ability. After that, his men are his most important resource. No business can succeed without good men and good ideas.

Recognition

On two occasions, the eminent builders' magazine, Architectural Forum, has given space to articles about Brother Caldwell's work, ideas, and achievements. The issue for July, 1950, devoted four large pages with illustrations to his engineering principles.

It was the eminent engineer, Charles F. Kettering, who brought about the acceptance of the Caldwell system for the General Motors Technical Center. Caldwell numbers many architects and engineers among his friends and supporters.

Caldwell & Associates employ fifty-three men in the engineering department and plant, and extend work to a number of sub-contractors.

Caldwell's Philosophy

The foundation of every successful career, the motive power of every good man, is a philosophy of life. Brother Caldwell's philosophy is pointed, vigorous, and characteristic of the man. Some may consider parts of it a bit advanced, and it is certainly marked with the touch of a pioneering mind. We present this statement he prepared:

In the early "thirties" a nationally recognized fact-finding agency made a survey to determine what reward the inventors of America receive from the nation. It was found that of the inventors of the 10,000 leading patented inventions, only a mere 3.6 per cent received sufficient reward for their travail to insure even a comfortable living. By the grace of God I am one of that group.

Back in 1928 the Lord revealed to my understanding new and revolutionary engineering principles, and the methods and means to apply them successfully. The "authorities" in the heating, ventilating, and air-conditioning industry said I was crazy. But a few open-minded chain store executives were sold, and successful installations were made from coast to coast.

As usual, financial interests kidnapped the inventor's "brain children" on two different occasions. Real privation, worry, and long separations from my family ensued. But the Lord who hears and answers prayers intervened to restore and extend the scope and merit of his revelations for his own ends. And now, while selfish Babylon adopts piecemeal the early revelations, the Lord of the Vineyard advances his Cause by revelations of greater power and scope, commanding recognition from the truly wise and learned who will make their growing contribution toward building the still unbuilt half of Zion here on earth.

I am working to the end that all talents and possessions shall be used to help toward making up a century of wasted time by this "called out people."

If the things we have been able to accomplish through a whole series of miraculous helps and blessings can be utilized to bestir our wishful thinkers to spiritualized endeavor, implementing the truth in our hourly and daily lives—individually, as a group, and as the Church Militant, believing in and acting on the premise that miraculous helps are inevitable when we provide the avenues of transmission and reception—we shall be most happy to have the growing recognition vouchsafed us used to further the Zion building.

Pioneering, during all the history of mankind's journeyings, has entailed privation, heartache, misunderstanding, misrepresentation, and apparent failure; all these eventually generated progress and, ultimately, victory for the right.

But to pioneer—to insist that all energies, blessings, talents, property, opportunities—shall be used now to redeem the lost years; to build the kingdom now while it is still day, as we serve the Master by helping one another, will bring thousands and tens of thousands of God's children into his victorious army of builders of Zion here, that Christ and Zion above can come down and redeem the earth.

Pioneering such as this, combining spiritual, material, and scientific resources to break the thralldom of selfishness and sin, and erect the ensign of truth in action brings down on the pioneer's head the wrath of hell and the blessings of heaven, and leads to certain victory in the Lord's own way.

No one is important, except as he learns the way and does the Lord's will; and then he knows his own utter unimportance of himself. We pray for grace and divine guidance for higher and truer service for and with each new day.

Yours for scientific pioneering in the Lord's service,

WILLIAM J. CALDWELL.

An Easter Dream

By Jennie Z. Elliott

Early one Easter morning, before it was light, I turned on my radio so I could hear the broadcasts of the Easter services as they followed the rising sun across the continent.

Then I dreamed again, and in my dream I walked alone within a rose-dawn, drenched, lily-scented garden in which there was an empty tomb. For an angel of the Lord, clothed in robes of shining white, had descended from heaven and had rolled back the stone from the door of the tomb, and was now seated upon it. As I approached him, the angel said, "Fear not, I know that you seek Jesus, who was crucified. He is not here, for he is risen. Come, see the place where the Lord lay." And so I stooped down and looked within the tomb. Wondering, I turned back into the garden path. There I met One I took to be a stranger. But when he spoke my name, I knelt at the pierced feet of my risen Lord. Gently taking my hand he lifted me, as he bade me go tell others the gospel story.

The dream ended and over the radio there came almost heavenly music from thousands of worshipers as they greeted the rising sun in Colorado's Garden of the Gods.

Our Lamanite Brethren

By Hubert Case

WE HAVE JUST COMPLETED the Book of Mormon institute, and we wonder if the Spirit of our beloved Enos of the Book of Mormon times is rejoicing and singing praises to his Heavenly Father. We are told in the first chapter of Enos that, because of his great love for his brethren he cried with all diligence unto the Lord:

... if it should so be that my people, the Nephites, should fall into transgression and by any means be destroyed, and the Lamanites should not be destroyed, that the Lord God would preserve a record of my people, the Nephites . . . that it might be brought forth, at some future day, unto the Lamanites that perhaps they might be brought unto salvation . . . and he covenanted with me that he would bring them forth unto the Lamanites, in his own due time.

So great a love had Enos for his people and also for his enemies the Lamanites.

We feel that he was made to rejoice in 1830 when the command went forth: "And now, behold I say unto you that you shall go unto the Lamanites, and preach my gospel unto full-blood Pawnee." There is plenty of room for more who have a love for the work of the Master.

Nephi says: "And he inviteth them all to come unto him and partake of his goodness; and he denieth none that come unto him, black and white, bond and free, male and female."

Do we have a love like Enos or Alma? We must remember God has commanded us to love. Jesus himself is love. He said: "If ye love them which love you, what reward have you?" And again; "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost." And again: ". . . if ye lose your life for my sake, ye shall find it in the world to come."

Truly with world conditions as they are, we of all people should have a love, a great love, a burning love for all mankind, a love so pure and deep that we shall not be willing to rest until we have done all within our power to bring to pass the greater work among our Lamanite brethren, those to whom and for whom the records of the Book of Mormon have been written.

Will we accept this challenge, and will we, as Enos and Alma of old, cry mightily unto the Lord for our Lamanite brethren that they be given the opportunity of knowing of this great work to bring to pass their salvation? If we do not do all we can, will it not rest upon our heads when we face the judgment bar? It has been said, ". . . In as much as ye have done it unto the least of these . . ."

May we, as believers in the Book of Mormon and the Restored Gospel, accept this challenge and be willing to file our inventories and give to the Lord of our substance that there can be no hindrance on our part in the completion of Zion. We are told: "together . . . that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem." May God hasten the day.

Zion conditions are no further away nor closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies.

Easter—

The Season of Joy

By Vivian Amundson

FOLLOWING THE DEATH of our Lord upon the cross, heavy darkness covered the earth and a terrible fear gripped the hearts of the wicked who had persecuted Christ. The ones who loved Jesus and had expected him to be their glorious king were filled with despair at his death. Their faith died with Jesus on the cross and was encased within the tomb. On the third day when he rose again, triumphant, victor over sin and death, their faith was rebuilt; a tremendous thing happened that lives on even today in the hearts of all the true disciples of Christ.

We know that we shall live again, because Jesus rose from the dead. We know that if we keep his commandments during this life we shall be raised up at his coming. "I go to prepare a place for you . . . that where I am, ye may be also," are words spoken by Jesus himself filled with promise—a promise of eternal life to be enjoyed in the presence of both the Father and the Son in a celestial glory.

This life with its generally accepted idea of "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die" is in direct contradiction to the teachings of Jesus which show all earthly pleasures to be of short duration. The frenzied grasping for gold, the mad race to reach the top rung of the ladder, must be truly grievous in the sight of our Heavenly Parent who prepared enough for all.

Truth crushed to earth rose again triumphant in the person of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, who died that we might have immortal life.

Truly the most joyous season of the year to all Christian peoples should be Easter for what it means to all mankind. As we listen to the inspired strains of the Easter songs, our hearts should be filled to overflowing with gratitude to God for the gift of his Son, our redeemer, the great I Am, who has atoned for our sins.

Our Brother's Keeper

By Robert J. Miller

MANY CENTURIES AGO Cain asked, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Since then the answer has been given and verified countless times by human experience. We are our brother's keeper.

Jesus stressed this fact in his ministry and gave us the golden rule as a yardstick to measure our behavior, "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets."—Matthew 7: 21, Inspired Version.

Later he gave these two great commandments upon which hang all the law and the prophets: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

As we come to know our Lord better through prayer, meditation, and fellowship we appreciate the meaning of the first commandment. And as we acquire knowledge and a measure of wisdom from our experience with our fellowmen, the righteousness of the second becomes apparent.

WE HAVE LEARNED that personal well-being is achieved by helping others to a better way of life; that each of us is a thread in the grand fabric of society which embraces all mankind. We have learned that that fabric can be perfect only when each thread is unbroken and entire. We have learned that this is possible only through obedience to the laws of God.

This concern which we acknowledge is necessary is called love, and must reach out from our lives in two directions. First, it must extend to God: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, . . ."; second, it must embrace our neighbor: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Those who have caught the vision and embraced this doctrine given by the Son of God, whether they be ministry or laity, become physicians to the sick even as Christ himself is minister to all. Social stewardship is a common duty demanding sincere consideration and the exercise of wisdom.

We have all seen people discouraged from attending church and others literally driven from the church by ill-timed remarks, inconsiderate behavior, idle conversation, thoughtlessness, envy, jealousy, and a host of other things. Our intentions may be good, but our timing poor or our planning superficial. Sometimes we would make better haste slowly, guided by wisdom, discretion, and spiritual insight.

THERE IS NO CLAUSE in the second commandment limiting our love to those within the church or excluding those who are not found among the children of God. The word of the Lord comes to us again, saying ". . . this is wisdom, Make unto yourselves friends with the mammon of unrighteousness, and they will not destroy you. Leave judgment alone with me, for it is mine and I will repay" (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 6). While a soft answer turns away wrath, love combats evil successfully, and the wisdom of "making friends with the unrighteous" may save us some persecution, this is not the point which is to be gained from compliance with this commandment.

Christ's work was to save that which was lost; our work is the same. If we antagonize the unregenerate by our behavior we erect a barrier which will not permit us to reach them. If we make them our friends, we eliminate the barrier. If we have a superior attitude we are not very good Christians, and we certainly haven't put on the cloak of humility which the Master always wore.

The way to help those who need Christ is not by superior or condescending attitudes, but by a genuine love for man—not for the sin which has crippled him. We must make friends with all manner of people if we hope to reach them. As Jesus walked among men he always sought their friendship and continually performed acts of love to those about him.

We cannot do some of the things Jesus did to help others; but we can do other things which are very important in our daily associations and exert a subtle influence in creating the desire and determination in others to do better.

When James said, "Confess your faults one to another, and pray for one another, that ye may be healed" (James 5: 16), he meant, I believe, that we should admit honestly our own faults to our fellow men and make no pretense of perfection. On this common ground, of a common guilt, we feel our need of each other's help; and the urge to pray for one another "that we may be healed" becomes a natural impulse. In this recognition, we clothe ourselves with a mantle of humility which is pleasing to God.

When his followers addressed Jesus as "good Master," he asked them, "Why callest thou me good? There is none but one, that is God" (Matthew 19: 17). The Master, always humble, admitted having the common curse of all flesh, which makes us all brothers. Our bodies (even Christ's) are of the earth, so we share a common burden, and it behooves us to walk meekly (humbly, if you please) in this world. We should be grateful if we have been so fortunate as to have taken the right path to better living. We should establish the common ground.

Jesus repeatedly warned us against passing judgment. In answering those who invite us to participate in some unwise practice such as smoking, drinking, or gambling, it is never wise to preach a sermon condemning others for their behavior. Jesus mentioned something about casting the mote out of our brother's eye, but doing nothing about the beam in our own. It is hard to classify sins; and while smoking, drinking, chewing, and profanity may be very noticeable and perhaps obnoxious, they may not be as insidious or deadly as some of our more respectable sins such as overeating, late hours, procrastination, dishonest thinking, selfishness, greed, deceit, pride, vanity, envy, or jealousy. We may not be aware of our sins, but it is very probable that the persons we criticize or judge see faults in us.

The consistent habit of gracious refusal to take up bad habits will in time preach a far better sermon, reach more hearts, and win more friends. There is no need to insult a person's intelligence by criticizing him about a habit which is obviously harmful. We all have our agency, and we also have the intelligence to know good from evil. "Behold, here is the agency of man, and here is the condemnation of man, because that which was from the beginning is plainly manifest unto them, and they receive not the light."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5.

WHEN JESUS TAUGHT us to pray, he never used singular pronouns; it was "Our Father," "Give us," "forgive us," and "suffer us not." He never suggested selfish personal prayer, but prayer which includes our neighbors even to the uttermost parts of the earth. And in these times when our affairs are so interwoven in international politics, we can easily see that our welfare depends in large measure upon the attitudes and behavior of those in all quarters of the globe. Our prayer for others is, therefore, selfish in a measure, but in a wholesome way, because it also seeks the well-being of others.

Christ's instructions concerning prayer conformed strictly to the two great commandments and the "golden rule." Prayer is the welding influence of brotherhood, as indicated in Christ's prayer to the Father, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us."—John 17: 20, 21.

YOUR ACTIONS speak so loud I can't hear a word you say" is a statement charged with truth. Our behavior supports or belies our speech. The Christian cannot afford to be careless in this respect. His conduct at work or play will tell what manner of man he really is and what he believes.

A great man once said, "When ye are in the service of your fellow beings, ye are only in the service of your God."—Mosiah 1: 49. Surely the average person who has a part in this world's work is in the service of his fellow men; for the commodities and services we use represent the combined efforts of all people. So whether we recognize the fact or not, our work is really a service for God, because we are helping him and others in the fulfillment of a great purpose. It behooves us to be as ardent in our daily activities as we are in our devotion. By "living" the things we believe we give our greatest testimony to society.

IT IS QUITE NATURAL and understandable that parents' greatest desire to help others centers in their children. Here we feel our greatest responsibility as our brother's keeper, and the most welcomed because they are "flesh of our flesh." Yet we often so mismanage this job that we lose our children's confidence and drive them from us. Why?

Particular importance has been placed upon the need of complete honesty in confessing or admitting our faults to others. Nowhere in our round of social duty is the need of complete honesty more needful than in parent-child relationships. We cannot afford to leave the impression with the child that we never knew sin. It can be the means of creating an inferiority complex within children, and it will probably be the means of eventually weakening their confidence in us. The day will come too soon when they shall see in us the same common clay of which they are made.

Recognizing the mistakes we have made to them at a time when they need counsel and guidance gives them confidence in our honesty. It is realistic. From our own experiences and mistakes we gain a sympathetic understanding of their problems. As children appreciate the fact that Mom and Dad also had obstacles to overcome, they are less timid in confiding what is in their hearts and troubling their minds.

A mother once told me, "I do not worry about Marian, because I know she will come to me with any problem she may have. I enjoy her complete confidence." What a wonderful tribute to a mother. Soon after that I moved from their city, but I have good reason to believe Marian became everything her mother hoped for her. Let our children feel that we understand their problems; and let us temper our counsel with sympathy and mercy as we expect our Heavenly Father to do with us.

Regardless of what we hope for we must remember one thing: Jesus did not win many to his cause during his ministry, and he was the Son of God. But the effect of his example and teachings through the centuries has become tremendous. So it is with us. We shall never know the sum total of our works; but if we do our utmost, with His help, we can leave a good example. As the constant drip, drip, drip of water upon rock leaves its mark, so will our consistent good department leave its mark through all eternity.

Silver Lining

As we sat in the dim light of early morning for the 1950 Easter Sunrise Service in Long Beach, California, and heard the beautiful story of the first Easter, the very elements provided a background of amazing sound effects and lighting.

It had rained all night and seemingly paused only long enough for the congregation to arrive at the church. As the service progressed and the words of the terrible hours of the trial and the Crucifixion were being read, the clouds gathered and the church grew very dark. The thunder clouds rumbled and a flash of lightning gave us a sense of closeness to the tragic events which took place so many years ago.

The story unfolded and as the miracle of the Resurrection was being told, the sun suddenly broke through the storm clouds and shone into the church through a balcony window. Its rays fell upon the unlighted crystal chandelier and were reflected by the prisms of glass which caught the light and sent it sparkling into the dark corners of the chapel.

As the service drew to a close, we felt God had sent another reminder of the wonderful truth that there is always a light shining through the darkness, and that by our lives it may be caught and reflected over and over again until it reaches into all the dark corners where goodness and truth have been shut out.

Anyone Have a

Lokele?

THE SIMPLE SAVAGES of the Congo can't understand why the white men's wars last so long. "Why don't they get a lokele?" they ask the missionaries among them.

A lokele is a small shell of a jellyfish. It is chalky and shaped like a jar turned upside down, and has a doorway. Among the natives it is more useful than a United Nations Security Council.

When the two chiefs of warring Congo tribes begin to fear that there will be famine because nothing has been planted for such a long time, they search the country to find a lokele. When they have been able to get one, it is sent to the other tribe by a slave or by a girl who is willing to be given away so that the war may be brought to an end. When the natives of the other side see the lokele they stop fighting immediately, and send back a message to say that the quarrel should be ended by talking and not by fighting. A place is appointed, and the two sides meet there, leaving their spears at home. The lokele is placed in a hole filled with chalk and water. The chalk and water are sprinkled by one side upon the first row of the warriors of the other side. Everybody gives a great shout and quickly whitewashes everybody else. They shake hands and dance, promising never to fight each other again.

A silly, symbolic ceremony? I suppose by our standards it is. Still, I think it sounds like fun—at least, more fun than the continuation of either a cold or hot war.

But of course the people of the Congo are only simple savages, and we are too civilized for such childish practices. We would rather spend our time looking for bigger and better atom bombs than trying to find a lokele.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

We have heard so many descriptions of Apostle Paul's physical condition, we would really like to know what his "thorn in the flesh" was.

Oregon

Mrs. E. V.

Answer:

There is no definite knowledge as to Paul's problem. Various writers have mentioned different ailments. I have read that perhaps it was his wife. I think that very unfair. The latest opinion given by a recent writer is that his "thorn in the flesh" was asthma, which periodically incapacitated him and was a constant source of annoyance. Some have thought it might have been a nervous disorder which troubled him. Others have suggested that it was the insults and opposition of various officials in the church that bothered him. Evidently, it was a physical ailment that incapacitated him in his ministry and prevented self-pride and personal self-exultation. However, we do not know.

Question:

What is the place of temples in the work of the church? (See pages 33 and 34 in the quarterly, "Overviews of Church History," by F. Henry Edwards.)

Kansas

D. L.

Answer:

Peoples in civilizations capable of forming religious organizations and of erecting substantial buildings have erected "temples" for their various religious ceremonies. Temple building existed in Babylonia, India, and in early Bible times among the Hebrews. In Book of Mormon history there are references which indicate the building of numerous temples in the ancient civilizations of America.

Temple building has always been associated with institutional religion since primitive civilizations. The use of the temple was always associated with the particular religious and sacred ceremonies that were peculiar to the peoples who built the temple. The essential difference between a "church" and a "temple" is that in the ordinary meetinghouse—be it church, or synagogue—the service is limited to the ordinary functions of the particular religion; in the temple the more important and complex ceremonies of the rituals are performed, and the building is considered more sacred.

THE PLACE OF TEMPLES IN OUR CHURCH

We believe that "temples" erected by the church should be built by the express command of God. This was the case in the building of the Kirtland Temple. It was also true in the building of the temple at Nauvoo. Section 57: 1 of Doctrine and Covenants contains the revelation designating the "spot" for the temple in the Center Place. Accordingly, in August, 1831, the place for the temple in Independence (Zion) was dedicated.

The use and value of a "temple" in the church will be governed by the spiritual development of the people. In Kirtland Temple special functions were established. The school of the prophets was organized. After the dedication the sacred ceremony of the "washing of feet" was practiced. Unusual spiritual blessings were received in the sacred precincts of the "Temple." The formality of the services was more complex.

When the temple in the Center Place is built according to future revelations from God, its usage will be governed by the "word of the Lord" to the church at that time. We read in Section 108 of Doctrine and Covenants, ". . . the Lord who shall suddenly come to his temple." Similar language is used in Section 42: 10 ". . . in that day when I shall come to my temple." These statements indicate that Christ will come to the temple when the command is eventually given to the Saints to build this specific temple.

This temple will be erected for specific sacred usages. It will differ from an ordinary church building in the degree of its sacredness and usage. Special ceremonies not practiced in an ordinary church building, will undoubtedly be provided for in the temple to be built. Just what those sacred functions will be has not been fully determined or revealed.

Question:

Isn't one church as good as another? Colorado

E. C. D.

Answer:

No! It matters tremendously what we believe, and it matters also what church we join. Mere sincerity of belief will not save us. We must be right. They who would come to God must do so upon his eternal terms; otherwise, the Lord tells us that we worship in vain. Unless we live by the true doctrine of Christ we cannot hope for salvation. Christ says, "Observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."—Matthew 28: 19. Does your church do this? Christ came to the world at a time when there were three recognized churches in existence, yet he said, "I will build my church."—Matthew 16: 18. Instead of uniting with one of them, he built his own church according to his own pattern. His church today will follow that same pattern. Apostle Paul says (Ephesians 4: 4) "There is one spirit and one body," meaning one hope, one faith, one baptism—one church undivided. He asks, "Is Christ divided?" and answers, "Nay!" He further admonishes the churches to all speak the same thing (I Corinthians 1: 10). Again he says that Christ loved the church and gave himself for it (Ephesians 5: 25.) Jesus spoke repeatedly concerning the narrowness of the way to eternal life and the broadness of the way in which the multitude would wander away and be deceived. Can a church differ from Christ's pattern and be as good as the one which is in harmony with his commands?

News and Idea Letter

HERE'S ANOTHER NEWS AND IDEA LETTER for you leaders to pass around among yourselves. We hope you can get some help to give these closing weeks of the Each One Bring One campaign an extra punch. And don't forget, even though attendance counting may end at the close of March, the campaign never ends. This six months has been just an eye-opener to show the possibilities of the church school as a missionary arm.

Lots of branches have had marked success with their work of increasing church school attendance. No honest effort ever goes unrewarded. May we share some of their statements:

"We are planning some type of church-wide activity once every three months. We had a dinner about two months ago. When we have an Each One Bring One social event we send a notice to each family on the records that is inactive and also to any nonmember friends whose names we have, besides urging every active member to bring a friend. We also have some very attractive and colorful posters in our church. We are trying to institute a transportation committee for those who have no way to come to church school." Another branch has a bus which is used for this purpose.

"Our whole group is quite missionary-minded. We have an organized visiting program in the women's department."

"Since our priesthood members have been making visits each Tuesday evening with such regularity, our church won't comfortably hold all the people who come for church school."

ONE CONGREGATION uses some of its blank space in the weekly bulletin to republish statements from the little tract distributed at the beginning of the campaign, or from the article in the August 7 issue of the Herald. It's well to remind each member of the things he can do to help.

"Last week our church school sponsored a family night dinner and program, emphasizing the importance of parents attending with their children, which may partially account for this sizable increase in attendance: January 28—193; February 4—262." Remarkable, isn't it?

"This month we are sending out invitations to friends inviting them to worship with us this new year. We have already had some results." On January 21 this good worker mailed out thirty-seven invitations to attend church.

"We have a pot-luck dinner each second Sunday in the month; this seems to be increasing our attendance."

"Barry Horaney sang at worship service—4 years old." In this branch the very young members often participate.

"Our branch has organized a club for the boys nine to twelve. One of our capable men donates a couple hours after school one evening each week to provide some wholesome activity. Our junior church school attendance has built up considerably since the beginning of the year."

"One mother who seldom came to church is now coming, bringing three small children."

"We have an active Daughters of Zion group which is helping our church school attendance through the friendly interest which the younger women show to each other and their families. As a result we have some fine young nonmember husbands coming to church school with their wives."

Results are produced when an effort is made. Let's put some extra work into this matter of building Zion through church school witnessing.

Briefs

AMES, IOWA.—Elder Delbert Smith has been chosen as pastor at the recent branch election. The following have also been elected as branch officers: Teacher Francis Harper, church school director; Carol Arbtin, women's leader; Helen Marsh, social chairman; Priest David Shippy, music director; and Delno Knudsen, public relations director. The average attendance at the branch is about fifty.

Elder John Loren, district missionary, spent the greater part of two weeks in early November on the campus, meeting with the group and conducting cottage meetings. The two weeks were climaxed by a baptism service November 19. The new members are Iris Edwards, Norman Edwards, Jeanne Graybill, Robert Lebl, and Anne Jordison.

Four babies have been blessed this year as follows: Katherine Jeanne and Danny, daughter and son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Graybill; Howard Allen, infant son of Elder and Mrs. Delbert Smith; and Ann Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Loren Dunham of Shenandoah, Iowa.

Norman Nelson and Robert Turner were both ordained to the office of priest on January 7.

Apostle Charles R. Hield visited the campus during the week end of January 26-29. Primary emphasis was placed on establishing and furthering relations with Spanish-speaking students on the campus. Apostle Hield spent a great deal of time showing slides on archaeological ruins in South America and personally meeting with Latin-American students.—Reported by LLOYD YOUNG.

TEMPLE CITY, CALIFORNIA.—The "Each One Bring One" campaign of the church school has increased the attendance. A number of the young people have been gaining experience in the worship services and interest is shown in all of the classes. The merit system of pins for perfect attendance was also inaugurated. Associate Pastor Royal E. Doss is church school director.

Pastor Blaine Bender and associates, Lee Peterman and Ralph Sharrock, have been in charge of the prayer services. The theme for this year is "Unity."

A Christmas party for all ages was held December 22. A pageant was presented December 24 by the young people. A "White Gift" service followed the Christmas sermon by the pastor. Special music was presented by the choir, under the direction of Sister Lois Nunamaker.

The women's department and LoA group held a bazaar and bake sale on December 8 and 9 and profit was given to the building fund. A Christmas party was enjoyed by both groups at the church December 12. The women's department meets twice a month and has been studying Blanche Mesley's book, "Witnessing for Christ." The teacher is Sister Audentia Kelley. The LoA group meets once a month and has a varied program.

The young people meet at the church one night a week for crafts, drama, and recreation. A retreat was held at Crestline at Brother and Sister Evan Insee's cabin in the mountains. The pastor and his wife and the young people's leader accompanied them.

Ten of the Zion's Leaguers attended the Yule Camp of the Los Angeles Stake during the Christmas holidays.

The League presented several bound volumes of the Saints' Herald to the congregation at the Communion service, November 5. These were won by the Temple City League in a western states contest.

Brother and Sister Firman Stiles and Corinne and Rex Moore were baptized October 22 and confirmed the following Sunday. On January 28, Charles Bickle, who is in the Army, was baptized. He was confirmed at the Communion service February 4. He specialized in radio operation in Georgia.

The priesthood members have been meeting on Sunday evenings for a class, preceding the evening worship.

Associate Pastor Paul Moore conducted a series of discussions on the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants on Sunday evenings.

Stake President Garland E. Tickemyer was the guest speaker January 28.—Reported by HELEN R. FERGUSON.

GULF STATES DISTRICT.—The winter conference of the district met at Mobile, Alabama, February 17 for a two-day session devoted to classwork, departmental workshops, and worship. The theme of the conference was "My Stewardship in Evangelism."

The opening service was a fellowship worship service. Immediately after this meeting Evangelist A. D. McCall conducted a general class. District President W. J. Breshears conducted a class in the afternoon. It was divided into three parts, each part comprised of a ten minute talk and a question and answer period. Elder M. L. Salter spoke on "The Worship Period," Evangelist A. D. McCall spoke on "How to Teach in the Church School," and Elder L. I. McDonald spoke of "The Procedure and Material Source."

Workshops for women, young people, branch solicitors, music leaders, children's workers, publicity agents, branch secretaries, and youth camp workers were held in the afternoon also. The evening's activities began with a service devoted to music and its ministry. Apostle Percy E. Farrow, who is in charge of the Southern Mission, assisted by Elder Breshears and Elder J. A. Pray, pastor of the Mobile Branch, conducted a missionary rally.

Sunday's activities began with a prayer service. The church school hour was attended by 367 persons. Brother Farrow brought the eleven o'clock message to an attendance of 409.

The business session convened in the afternoon. Twenty-one men were approved for ordination to the priesthood. The district president stated that the reunion grounds were free of debt, and he recommended that they be deeded to the general church. This recommendation was approved.—Reported by AUDREY B. TILLMAN, District Secretary.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—A Thanksgiving service was held November 23. Elder Louis Hancock, Elder H. T. McCaig, Sr., Priest Paul Gouty, Robert Dawson, Helene Hancock, and District President J. C. Stuart participated in the service.

The following six children were baptized: John Lyddon, Linda Lindberg, Robert Lindberg, Marilyn Schulz, Diane McPeak, and Linda Stuart. All candidates were baptized by their pastor, E. W. Chandler, except Linda Stuart, who was baptized by her father, Elder J. C. Stuart. Miss Ruth Skinner was organist and Don Fisher was pianist for the service.

Robert Brown was ordained a deacon November 19 by Elder E. W. Chandler and Elder Stuart.

A combined women's group and Zion's League building fund party was held at the church November 17. Approximately $45 was raised.

Speakers for the month were Elders E. W. Chandler, H. T. McCaig, J. C. Stuart, and Louis Hancock.

December 3 a confirmation service was combined with the Communion service. Apostle Arthur A. Oakman delivered the message for the occasion.

Pauline Jones was hostess to the Ssenippah Guild Christmas party on December 14. Fern Barrows was hostess to the Friendship Guild Christmas party December 21. The North Side Circle Christmas luncheon was held at the home of Frances Salomon. The proceeds from this were turned in to the circle by Sister Salomon as her Talent Fund.

The annual Christmas program was presented December 22. It was a pageant depicting the nativity. The pageant included the children as well as the adults of the congregation. It was directed by Mrs. J. C. Stuart and Miss Alice Skinner. Miss Ruth Skinner was the organist. The choir directed by Juanita Stewart sang Christmas carols during the pageant. Mrs. Charles Conway was in charge of costumes and stage setting.

On December 24, the branch received the ministry of three members of the Chandler family. The pastor, Brother Elbert Chandler, introduced his father, W. R. Chandler, who offered the invocation. Elder Wilbur Chandler delivered the sermon, "The Birthday of a King." Mrs. Warren Hinkle sang a solo, "Christ Is the Messiah."

Speakers for the month were Elder John Darling of Independence, Priest Paul Whitman, Elder W. R. Chandler, and Elder J. C. Stuart.

Speakers for the month of January were Priest John Senter, Elder B. A. Lenox, Elder H. T. McCaig, Sr., Elder J. C. Stuart, Priest Lemont Mair. Special solos for the month were by Delores Jones, Helene Hancock, and Don Zion.

Mrs. Harry Striblen, president of the North Side Circle, had a Coppercraft party, January 25. The proceeds were donated to the building fund.

Brother Leo Callaci is the attendance campaign chairman.—Reported by VELVA E. CASTINS.

CORRECTION.—The news brief from Klamath Falls, Oregon, in the February 19 issue should have read: Since the moving of Elder Ted Schuld to Medford, meetings have been held during the summer at the various homes of Saints under the leadership of Brother Y. Carroll. Another correction is noted—Lucille Crain was selected women's leader.

ALBANY AND CORVALLIS, OREGON.—The Saints of Albany and Corvallis held services February 11 at the Albany Memorial Hall. Brother Harold Carpenter of Vancouver and Elder Cleo Thompson of Sweet Home had charge of the service.

Church school is held at the home of Brother Steinbrink. Brother C. E. Nitcher is the supervisor.—Reported by BETTIE CHAMBERS.

SCAMMON, KANSAS.—During the months of October, November, and December, the pastor, Priest J. Harold Summers, obtained elders to preach.

The following spoke in October: Stephen Black, district president; Clifford Miller of Medoc; and David Sheppard of Pittsburg.

Graceland College Day was observed by an address given by Ellen Ross, graduate of Graceland. Her subject was "What Graceland Brings to the Youth of the Church." This was followed by a talk by Peggy Norris, a prospective Graceland who spoke on "What I hope to receive from Graceland." The entire day's collection was given to the Graceland fund.

The Saints united with the Weir congregation November 19 at Weir when Elder T. W. Bath, pastor of the Pittsburg Branch, preached.

December 3, Elder J. W. Jones of Pittsburg was the speaker. Brother Jones made arrangements and his tape recorder was used and a sermon by F. Henry Edwards was heard during the class period. Another Sunday, Brother Elbert A. Smith was heard on tape recorder.

Eldon Hart gave an illustrated lecture December 10 on the church in the early history.

Much of the history of Kirtland was given.

David Sheppard preached December 20.

Under Sister Melba Morehead the church school is progressing. The "Each One Bring One" campaign has brought the attendance to thirty-three.

A Christmas pageant was presented December 22. Some of the members from Weir assisted.

The study class of the women's department under the direction of Sister Nina Coldiron is studying Book of Mormon Studies by Thelona D. Stevens.

The women's department gave a bazaar and bake sale at which they cleared seventy dollars.—Reported by ALICE E. JONES.

CANTON, OKLAHOMA.—The ladies' auxiliary gave a food sale February 24 at the American Legion hall which lasted all day. Proceeds amounted to eighty-six dollars.

The church school has an average of forty at the present time. Four Sunday services are held and a midweek prayer service is also held. Elder Diamond of Eagle City is pastor.—Reported by NINA GOODMAN.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—The women's department sponsored a Christmas bazaar. The articles sold were made and donated by the Dallas Saints. All the profit was turned over to the building fund. Two meetings are held each month in the homes, with an average attendance of sixteen members.

The Zion's League members meet each week. Joint prayer services are held the first Wednesday of each month. They meet in the homes. The Christmas party for the entire branch was sponsored by the League. Gifts were exchanged, games were played, and treats were distributed.

Henry Edward III, adopted son of Brother and Sister Henry E. Williams, was blessed January 14, 1951, by Elder Hal E. Davenport and Elder Robert F. Moore. Eddie was born on June 26, 1950, and has been with Brother and Sister Williams since he was three days old.

Donald Everett, son of Brother and Sister W. E. Everett, left for service with the Army and is receiving his basic training at Camp Chaffee, Arkansas.

Dwight Graham, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Graham, enlisted in the U. S. Coast Guard and completed his training in New Jersey.

The annual winter conference began January 26 at Marlin, Texas, with F. M. McDowell, director of priesthood education, Apostle Percy E. Farrow, and District President C. J. Tischer in charge. The theme of the conference was "Building Latter Day Saint Homes." Classes were scheduled for the priesthood, young people, and the women. Meals, housing and recreation were provided by the Marlin Branch. Fifteen members from Dallas attended the conference.

Visiting speakers have included Elders L. E. Wheeler, H. E. Davenport, C. A. Green, and R. F. Moore; Priests G. W. Fordham and Harold Peterson.—Reported by LOIS LEWIS.

GUELPH, ONTARIO.—Brian and Bruce Whitehead and James Wilson were baptized by Elder Alex Cadwell. Brian and Bruce were confirmed by Elder Kenneth Rowe and Elder John Hockaday August 20, 1950. Donna Marie Sharp and Lorna Jean Downing were baptized by Elder Kenneth Rowe and confirmed by Elders Rowe and Hockaday September 10. James Wilson was confirmed at a later date by Elder F. C. McLean.

Glenna Fay, daughter of Brother and Sister William Green, was blessed by Elder F. C. McLean and Elder Ev. Kennedy.

The young people's department meets every other Monday.

A chicken supper was held before Christmas in the church school room. Sister Winnie Menden was in charge of decorations. Films were shown by Glen Downing and dialogues and readings were presented. The young people served the supper.

Open house was held at the home of Brother and Sister Johnnie Walker New Year's Eve. This was the third annual party.

A party and presentation was given Sister Donelda Cromwell at Sister Walker's home prior to Sister Cromwell's leaving to live in London.

Sister Helen Kennedy succeeded Sister Nancy Walker as president of the women's department in September.

Brother Johnnie Walker has replaced Sister Ruby Sharp as secretary-treasurer. Sister Sharp was married to Edward Birch October 6.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—Jane Joyce, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Savage, was blessed by her father, Elder Savage, on February 21. Mrs. Savage is the former Joyce Ahrens of Plattsmouth, Nebraska.—Reported by Mrs. DONALD W. SAVAGE.

SECOND CHURCH, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.—Seventy Arthur A. Gibbs held a series of missionary meetings in October which were well attended. The last night 113 were present. A travelogue preceded each illustrated lecture. Cottage meetings were held in four homes for four weeks before the meetings began. These were well attended.

Evelyn Earl was baptized by Priest Roy Earl and confirmed by Pastor Charles H. Powers and Brother Gibbs. Four babies were blessed by the same officers: Mark Lynn, son of Priest Kenneth and Augusta Nelson; Lois, daughter of Raymond and Norma Mattix; Lanni Elaine, daughter of Stanley and Mae Clark; Douglas Raymond, son of Elvin and Lorna Anderson.

The ministry of Apostles E. J. Gleazer and Reed Holmes was greatly appreciated at the district meeting.

Guest speakers have been Priest Glenn Davis of Los Angeles, Elders Paul Duvic and Carl Cron, and District President Granville Swenson.

Plans are being completed for an enlargement of the church building. The church school has the largest attendance in the district, and a bus operated by the branch helps many to attend.

Choir practice is conducted by Sister Rose Clisby.

Sister Pearl Stearns, soprano soloist, gave a song recital. The benefits from the offering were given to the women's department.

The service flag was dismantled of the stars from the last war in a special service. A star was given to each man who had served in the armed forces. Later in the service, stars were again placed on the flag for those who are serving in the present war. Harold Walters is in Korea. Edward Gilmore and Keith Clisby are also represented on the flag by stars.

Fourteen women attended the district women's meeting in Everett. Sister Ruth Selzer was a co-partner in charge, in the absence of the district leader, Sister Eva Lundeen. Sister Selzer gave a talk on meeting procedures. Sister Florence taught the general class Sunday morning. Sister Pearl Stearns sang a solo and others contributed.

Nearly three hundred dollars was raised at the bazaar and dinner, November 3.

A program was given in December which featured music and drama. Jean Reynolds had the leading role. The closing number was "Silent Night," sung by Sister Jean Meehan, formerly of Boone, Iowa. She is eighty-four years old, and is the mother of Sister Ruth Selzer and Sister Barbara Olsen of Pe Ell, Washington. Sister Meehan is a sister of the late Evangelist George Thorburn. Sister Thelma Powers was in charge and thirty-two attended.

Five of the branch members attended teacher training courses at the Council of Churches. Elder Alvin and Louis Twilligear, Sister Florence Gilmore, and Sister Anna Briggs received certificates. The church was presented at a district meeting of the council. The district comprises Washington and Northern Idaho. There were 185 ministers and delegates present. After the talk telling the story of the church, questions were answered.—Reported by DAISY L. CHRISTIANSEN.

The Gift That Is in Thee

By Leona Hands

THIS IS THE KIND of Sunday I love to see—beautiful and bright,” said Jane Richardson to Mary Perkins as they walked home from church.

“And cold, too?” questioned Mary, with a hint of laughter in her voice.

“I don’t really mind the cold,” answered Jane, “especially when the sun is shining. You’ll have to admit that’s a good sign. I’ve always heard it said that minding the cold is a sure indication of approaching old age.”

“You’ll never grow old, Jane,” Mary said, affectionately. “Anyway, you’ll always be young in heart.” Then, after a moment’s hesitation, “Wasn’t that a wonderful sermon?”

Jane agreed quickly. “One of the best I’ve ever heard on that subject. I’ve never heard the parable of the talents presented in just that light before. Elder Martin certainly brought out some new thoughts in regard to talents, and I can’t think of anyone whose life could be more in harmony with the things he presented. He really is gifted. His talents are all so obvious, while I . . .” her voice trailed off into complete silence.

“I know just what you’re thinking, Jane,” cried Mary. “You and I are middle aged. What is our special gift or talent? I mean, what can we do that anyone else can’t do just as well or better? We’re just average run-of-the-mill people. I’ve often thought about it,” she went on earnestly. “In fact I’ve even prayed and fasted over it, asking the Lord to show me where my talents lie, but I’ve never had an answer that I’ve recognized or any light on it whatsoever. It’s discouraging.”

“It certainly is,” Jane said seriously. “I’ve done the same thing myself. Why, it was the burden of my prayers for years but,” her face brightened, “I don’t think of it much any more. Maybe it’s a good thing I’m too busy to think,” she ended, with a faint smile at her attempt at humor.

“With John’s three children to care for I don’t wonder at it,” Mary said abruptly. “I still think you may have taken on too much. Not that I believe you made a mistake marrying John—he’s a wonderful man, and with you looking after the children he can devote his whole time to missionary work. But you were a widow so long and practically reared your own two children by yourself. I think as much of Bob and Jean as if they were my own. I only wish . . .”

“Yes, I know,” Jane interrupted, “a widow alone in the world with no children doesn’t have an easy life. After Bob left for college and Jean went away nursing, I discovered what it was to be lonely. But I’ll pay you this tribute, Mary, it hasn’t made you bitter as it would some folks.”

“I’m like you,” smiled Mary, “I haven’t had time. Keeping my rooms rented in that big house is a full-time job.”

“You’re not fooling me one bit, Mary Perkins,” scoffed Jane. “You’ve been a second mother to those college youngsters who call your house home. You’ve taught them to cook and helped them with their mending and their personal problems. And the shut-ins you visit! I wish I had your way with people. You always seem to know just what to say.”

“Maybe some of my college children have helped me there,” smiled Mary. “They certainly run into a variety of problems. It’s surprising to hear the counsel they give each other, too. Often they have a problem almost identical themselves and can’t see the answer—I suppose because it’s so close to them. Do you know,” she laughed, “I don’t believe I ever saw people eat so much bread and butter. I’m teaching several of the girls to bake bread.”

“I’ve never tasted better bread than you bake, Mary. I’ve always said you had a gift for it.”

“Well, I’ve had practice enough,” Mary said smiling, “but it wasn’t always so easy. Once I vowed I would never bake bread again.”

“Tell me about it.”

WELL, IT WAS A LONG TIME AGO,”

Mary began, “soon after Frank and I were married. I had never made bread before and when I mentioned to Frank I thought I’d try, he smiled and said I’d better ask his mother to show me how first. Now I liked Frank’s mother, but I was a proud young thing and slow to ask favors. Secretly I determined not to ask anyone’s advice, I made the bread, and oh, what a failure! Fortunately, there were only two loaves but after it cooled, it was too hard to cut. I threw it out to the birds, thinking it would all be gone before Frank came home from work. Then I hurried to the store to get bread for supper.” She paused to laugh at the recollection, then continued, “Somehow I didn’t get around to see what became of my bread, and when Frank came in, he was laughing. I smiled at his good humor and asked him what was so funny. The mischief fairly danced in his eyes as he told me that several sparrows were sitting on a loaf of bread in the back yard, looking around for something to eat. I didn’t laugh with him. I got angry and stormed out of the house, heading for mother’s. It was quite a walk, and I had cooled off considerably before I got there. However, when I saw my mother I burst into fresh tears, telling her all about my cruel husband who laughed so heartlessly at his new bride’s first failure. Now mother was a very practical woman. She gave me a lecture that remained with me for years. I begged to stay overnight, but she promptly sent me home, telling me that if I wanted to save my marriage I must never go to bed angry with my husband. I was so disappointed at her lack of sympathy and understanding that I left for home at once, though at a much slower pace than I had come. In fact, I was so occupied with my thoughts and my eyes so blinded with tears that I did not realize there was anyone near me until a hand gently touched my arm and Frank said in a low tone, ‘May I see you home?’” Mary was silent a moment, then added slowly, “I think Frank was one of the kindest people I’ve ever known.”

“Yes, he was,” agreed Jane gently, noting the look of sadness on her friend’s face. “I’ve always thought God must have needed him a great deal to take him so young. His life was certainly an example to follow—I know it was for me.”

“As if you needed an example to follow!” said Mary. “Why, there isn’t a more active woman in the church. And I don’t think you know how to say ‘no.’ Look what you took on last fall—leadership of our group besides being chairman of the kitchen. And you managed it all beautifully too.”

“Maybe it was because no one else wanted it,” laughed her friend. “After all, somebody had to do it. I’ll admit I was a bit frightened at first, but ‘shucks,’ I said to myself, ‘they’re not asking you to be president of the United States.’”

“I still don’t know how you manage it all,” Mary insisted. “It seems to take all my time trying to be a good follower.”

“Besides being a church school teacher and friendly visitor,” added Jane, with a twinkle in her eye. “Not to mention the things you do for shut-ins and the number of cards you send out, along with the visits you make.”

THE SUDDEN TOOT of an automobile horn drew their attention to a car that was drawing to the curb while the voice of their young pastor, Elder Martin, called out, "How about a ride home, ladies?"

"We really haven't much farther to go," said Jane, "but of course, we'll ride, won't we, Mary?"

Mary smiled in agreement as they both got into the car. As they drove away, Elder Martin remarked, "I hardly knew whether I should interrupt two people so deep in conversation. About the sermon, no doubt," he said, his eyes twinkling with good humor.

There was a moment of silence as the two women exchanged glances; then both laughed together.

Jane was the first to speak, "Well—yes and no," she said honestly.

"Not that we had any fault to find with anything you said," added Mary. "It's only that your topic is rather a touchy subject for both of us."

Elder Martin did not speak immediately, for they had reached Jane's home. Then he shut off the motor and turned to look at them. "I can't believe you really mean that," he said seriously. "I'm sure there aren't two other women in the branch who have given more freely of their time and talents to—"

"Talents," they both echoed, disbelievingly, then Jane found voice to speak. "You're joking," she protested, weakly.

"Not at all," insisted the pastor firmly. "I'm serious. Though mind you, I may be willing to admit that we have a difference of opinion as to what comprises gifts and talents. Remember the quotation I used in this morning's Scripture lesson: 'Neglect not the gift that is in thee.' Personally, I'd say there is no limit to the ways in which one can serve the Lord. To me it all comes right down to serving where you are, proving yourself a good steward. After all, our time, our talents, even our life is a gift from God. What we do with these God-given gifts will eventually prove us to be either faithful stewards or unprofitable servants. Don't you agree?"

"Yes, of course," Jane answered quickly. "But don't you think by the way the Scriptures read that everybody is given at least one definite talent?"

"Are you implying that because you cannot sing a solo, play a musical instrument, paint beautiful pictures, or lecture in public, you have no special gift or talent?" questioned Elder Martin. When Jane did not answer immediately he continued, "I've always thought there might be something to cultivating talents—like seeking the best gifts, perhaps. Take faith, for an example. It is mentioned as a gift, yet even though Abraham is spoken of as father of the faithful, I never could find any record of God's giving him faith as an outright gift. The evidence seems to indicate that he continually worked toward acquiring that remarkable faith we read about."

BOTH WOMEN remained silent and thoughtful, though he could see they were following closely and waiting for him to continue. "There's another point that keeps coming to my mind," he went on. "Perhaps I can best illustrate it by repeating the conversation between two men. One asked the other if he could play the violin. 'I don't know,' replied the second, 'I've never tried.' This would seem to indicate that unless we are continuously engaged in trying our hand at new skills, we may never know just what we can do. Of course I couldn't close this one-sided discussion without touching on the subject that's closest to my heart—church attendance. Now I know I'm talking to two women who seldom miss a church service," Elder Martin said. "Yet, if I should ask either of you to name a person in our branch who sets an example in attending church, whom would you think of immediately?"

"Sister Wade," they answered together.

"Of course," he said, "because no matter what type of meeting we have, regardless of who occupies the pulpit, whether it rains or shines, she is always there—usually sitting in the same place. And if it's a devotional service, she never fails to offer both a prayer and a testimony. It's a fine thing to have a talent like that. Do you suppose it might be a gift?" he questioned, with a twinkle in his eyes, and then added, "Now there's a field that is wide open—cultivating the talent of faithful church attendance. Anyone could work at that, don't you think?"

Jane shook her head, with a quizzical look in her eyes. "It seems to me this is a very deep subject," she commented, then reverting to her usual practical self added, "Why can't we continue this discussion over our dinner? Come on in, both of you, and I'll have it ready in no time."

"Sorry, but I have a previous engagement," Elder Martin said, as he opened the car door for them. "I'll take a rain check though, and you can expect me to cash it very soon, too."

"You know you're welcome any time," Jane replied with her ready smile. "But come on, Mary, you can stay, I know."

Bidding the pastor good-by the two women walked slowly into the house. "You know, Jane," said Mary thoughtfully, "somehow, I don't believe I'll ever be concerned about my talents again. Serving where you are, trying new things—that's opportunity unlimited the way Elder Martin explains it. I'll always remember that sermon, won't you?"

Jane nodded her head in agreement, then her natural good humor manifested itself. "Which one?" she asked, with a smile. "Which sermon, Mary, the first or the last?"

"It must have been the combination," Mary answered. "You feel the same way, don't you?"

"With all my heart," Jane answered, as they walked into the house together.

A Rose to the Living

*A rose to the living is more
Than sumptuous wreaths to the dead;
In filling love's infinite store,
A rose to the living is more
If graciously given before
The hungering spirit is fled—
A rose to the living is more
Than sumptuous wreaths to the dead.*
—Nixon Waterman.

This little poem has a very interesting and true message. The real understanding of it can do much toward changing one's feeling about his neighbors.

When a child loves someone, he wants to give him something. In this he leads his elders. Love is always the important part of any gift. A fine diamond would not bring real happiness unless the giver loved the person to whom he gave it. But a single rose or even a violet or a daisy from the hand of one who loves you and whom you love can bring untold joy.

So we must learn now to show our love, even by some small token rather than waiting until a person is dead and unable to see or smell the beautiful flowers in expensive wreaths. This is true not just of flowers, but of all deeds and acts of thoughtfulness—a card to one who is sick, a book to a shut-in, a lift to a friend who has no car, or a call on one who is alone and has many lonely hours. These may be that "rose to the living" that is truly more than "sumptuous wreaths" to the dead.

An Empty Tomb

By Francis Harper, Jr.

Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?

But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not.

For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.—I Corinthians 15: 12-22.

AROUND THE WORLD there are more than one hundred thousand funerals every twenty-four hours, which is evidence that it is the universal experience of mankind to die. Men have not been able to escape death. During his life, Houdini was the man who couldn't be bound. He was able to escape chains, jails, and coffins. In fact no man-made device could hold the great magician. Before his death Houdini planned to escape the grave also, but to this day he has not returned. Death attacks all men—rich, poor, weak, and strong, regardless of fame, social standing, race, or clime. Even you and I now are subject to death.

When the loss of a loved one casts a shadow across our lives we ask questions. Is there life beyond the grave? Will I ever see him again? At such times we seek an explanation of life and death as we have never done before. In our search we may listen to the facts of science and the theories of philosophy, but these often only confuse us. Scientists have been able to analyze the human body and its constituent parts; they can explain to a great degree the processes of life and have prolonged its span to almost three score and fifteen, but they have no facts concerning immortality. As to life beyond the grave they are silent. We can read the philosophies of the greatest thinkers on this subject, and we find many have decided that, on the basis of reason, there must be a life to come. Plato argued for it, but logic alone is not satisfying. Philosophers have no positive answer for us.

Francis is a native of Woodbine, Iowa, and a graduate of Woodbine High School. He also attended Graceland, where he was senior class president (1950). At present he is a student at Iowa State College in Ames. He was ordained to the office of teacher on June 12, 1949, and serves as church school director of the Ames group. His objective in church work is to help in the actual establishment of a better social order.

FROM THE BEGINNING OF TIME men have asked, "If a man die, shall he live again?" and the question remained unanswered for thousands of years. Then one morning a little less than two thousand years ago two women came to the tomb of their loved one and found it empty. At first they feared that He had been carried away, but they were told to fear not for He had risen. This empty grave belonged to Jesus Christ.

The tomb of Mohammed is at Medina in Arabia. It is not empty. The tomb of Confucius is near Kufow, China. It is not empty. Buddha is buried in many tombs—that is parts of his body have been enshrined as relics in different places in the Orient. But the tomb of Christ is empty.

No longer do people have to wonder and question about death and the beyond. Christ's resurrection has shed light on the mystery of death, for he has risen. He has been given the secret of life eternal. By using his life as a pattern, we have the key to a life everlasting with him. "Since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead, for as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

BEING HUMAN we sometimes question the reality of Christ's resurrection, but the fact of the resurrection is real. It is not wishful thinking nor day-dreaming. Historians, in explaining the origin of the Christian church, find that it is based upon Christ's resurrection. They say if Christ had not risen there would have been no Christian church today. The church would have died with him. The resurrection gave the disciples convincing proof that Christ was the Son of God and that all his other claims were true. The followers of Christ had already gone back to fishing, although he had been dead only two days. Christ proved himself the Son of God by his resurrection.

In his own triumph over death, the Master of man made it forever plain that obedience to his law not only carries its rewards in this life but also provides for the greater rewards in a future life. It shows us that as man can solve mathematical problems by following the principles of mathematics, so he can solve the even more perplexing problems of life, death, and beyond by following the principles of the gospel.

THE APOSTLE PAUL, in speaking to the Hebrews many years ago, explained and enumerated the principles of the gospel when he said, "Let us go on unto perfection" by repentance from dead works, faith toward God, the doctrine of baptisms, the laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment. These principles of the gospel were the keys that enabled Christ to come forth from his tomb and go unto eternal life. These same unchanging principles—these same keys—are for our use today.

Let us use them!

GAZETTE

The Graceland library has purchased three new sacred paintings to be used by student groups in devotional services. The paintings are Da Vinci's "The Last Supper," Hofmann's "Christ in Gethsemane," and Hofmann's "Head of Christ." They may be checked out by any student or staff member. Marilyn Sorden, librarian, expressed the hope that these may be the start of a larger group of such paintings to be purchased over a period of time.

KGRA, Graceland radio station, has returned to the air after several weeks of silence. At the beginning of the year it was using a quantity of long-used equipment which repeatedly broke down. The high cost of new radio parts made it nearly impossible to rebuild the station completely. However, the staff has now obtained serviceable used parts and has been able to put the station back into regular operation.

Eight fellowship services were held simultaneously on a recent Wednesday evening. The sixteen pastoral groups met together in pairs in place of the usual all-school fellowship. Such services are held periodically. The leaders of campus religious life feel that there is something to be gained by meeting in the smaller groups which is not available in the large one.

The motion picture, Les Miserables, was shown recently in the chapel. The contributions taken at the door will be put in the fund being raised to buy a large movie screen for the Memorial Student Center. Like the other movies shown throughout the year, this one was chosen for both its educational and entertainment value.

President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., recently spent several days in Washington, D. C., and in Atlantic City, New Jersey, at the National Association of Colleges Convention, talking to educators, senators, representatives, and others in an effort to obtain direction for Graceland's role in the present preparedness program and to obtain information for students on the possible effects of the draft on their educational plans. In a report to the student body, Gleazer said that present indications are that military service will be universal with perhaps even women serving. The only question is whether that service should be before or after college.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: A full report prepared by President Gleazer on the military situation as it effects young men and women of college age will be found on page 20, February 19, issue.)

Graceland basketball players had an excellent opportunity to observe how it's done in the big leagues recently when the traveling squad of the Oklahoma Aggies visited the campus en route to a game with Drake University in Des Moines. Considered the nation's number one team at the time of their visit, the Aggies spent two hours practicing on the newly refinished floor in Graceland's Zimmerman Hall. The visit attracted a large crowd of student spectators in addition to the Graceland squad. Members of the Graceland B team worked out on defense against the Aggies in the practice session.

DEATHS

BLISH.—John, son of Andrew and Mary Blish, was born October 1, 1883, and died January 9, 1951, at a hospital in Sycamore, Illinois. On August 8, 1912, he was married to Elsie Aurand, and on June 27, 1943, was baptized into the Reorganized Church. He attended the DeKalb, Illinois, Branch.

He is survived by his wife, Elsie; a son, Earl; three daughters: Mrs. Mary Jean Devine of DeKalb, Dorothy Mae and Rosalie of the home; three sisters: Mrs. Alice Heitter of Tacoma, Washington; Mrs. Lizzie Crummer of Freeport, Illinois; and Mrs. Arthur Strunk of Silver Springs, Maryland; two brothers: Thomas of Keithsburg, Illinois, and George of Lincoln, Nebraska; and five grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the DeKalb church, Elders Lloyd Hadley and Roy Healy officiating. Interment was in the DeKalb cemetery.

NISEWANGER.—Charles J., son of John and Margaret Nisewanger, was born March 12, 1873, at Greenup, Illinois, and died February 5, 1951, at Independence, Missouri. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on December 9, 1888, and was a deeply religious man, always conducted family prayers in his home until his affliction made it impossible for him to do so. He was also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having joined in 1914. His wife, Edmona, preceded him in death on September 10, 1950.

He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Margaret Smith of Studley, Kansas; a sister, Ella Owens of Wichita, Kansas; and four grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the George C. Carson Chapel, Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

DENT.—John C., son of Charles and Elizabeth Dent, was born January 7, 1880, near Bothwell, Ontario, and died January 23, 1950, at Victoria Hospital in London, Ontario, following an operation. In 1903 he was married to Mary E. Jacklin, who was a great help to him during the twenty-nine years he served the church as bishop of London and Chatham Districts. For the past twenty-five years he was a manufacturer's agent, importer and salesman of farm equipment in western Ontario.

He is survived by his wife, Mary; two sons: Dr. O. V. Dent of Toronto, Ontario, and John C. Dent of Ingersoll; a brother, James V. Dent of Chatham; four sisters: Mrs. Edith McDonald of Bothwell, Mrs. Beatrice McMaster of London, Mrs. Leta MacRae and Miss Fay Dent of Chatham; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Needham Memorial Chapel in London, Pastor C. E. Muir, Bishop Joseph Baldwin, and Evangelists John MacGregor and Robert Brown officiating. Burial was in Bothwell cemetery.

* BROKEN BONES IN COLUMBUS

If church members have any good ice hockey suits, it would be an act of mercy to lend them to the Saints at Columbus, Ohio, where many have suffered broken bones from falls on the ice. Norma Anne Kirkendall writes, "I began it by breaking my left arm on way to church—I didn't get there—on January 26. My aunt, Ruth Mock, broke a wrist on January 30. We are both in casts. Next came Charlotte Anne Jenkins on February 8, with a bad break in her right leg; my dad, G. H. Kirkendall, on February 12 broke his pelvis and will be in bed six weeks; then Vassie Sheets on February 15 broke a hip. Pastor Merle Howard suggests we start a mission at Doctors' Hospital here where Dr. Margaret Barker of our branch is on the staff. I hope this is the end. . . . I'm planning to go to Guatemala this summer!"

* A READER who lives in what she calls "A City of Sin" writes that the children there have all been weaned: It is the parents who live on the bottle."

* YOUNG PEOPLE

In a church where I spoke recently there was no junior service, and I noticed quite a number of children and younger folk in the congregation. At a certain point in the sermon where it was convenient, I turned and looked at them and talked especially to them, in language they could understand. They all sat up and were very attentive. Afterward, as I stood at the door greeting the departing congregation, many of the children thanked me, and said they enjoyed it. A bright little girl of four insisted on sitting beside me on the way home, and telling me about herself, sang to me, and revealed her plans for a school career. I don't know of anything sweeter than the friendship of a child.

* PLEASE BLESS

Mrs. William Nixon tells this story on her son, two years of age, who has been most anxious to have a tricycle. As he said his prayers one evening, he included this petition: "And dear Jesus, please bless Kenny, who gave me a lick off his ice cream cone, and a ride on his tricycle!"

Do we older ones always remember to be that grateful to those who have helped us and given us happiness?

* Sister Jennings had paused, pen in hand, and was looking into the distance. Another editor broke her reverie by entering. Sister Jennings looked up, "I am just ink-ubating some thoughts," she explained.

* IF YOU MUST TALK IN CHURCH

"When you enter the church service, talk only to God. During the service of worship, let God talk to you. After the service, talk to each other."—Donald V. Lents, Chaplain of Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

* BLESSING

When I returned to church after my illness, a dear old sister whispered something very lovely to me. She leaned over and said, "It's good to see you here. This is our blessing for today." I shall cherish that.—Leona Hands.

Eugene E. Closson

GENE CLOSSON is a teacher of psychology who practices his art in a way which has won him life-long friends among a generation or so of students of Graceland College. He is the unofficial "father-confessor" to students who have him as teacher in the classroom and who just naturally gravitate to his office after class for counsel on personal problems.

Born in Maine in 1894, baptized in the Atlantic Ocean about eight years later, and married to Julia Travis in 1927, Eugene Enoch Closson came to the Graceland faculty in 1931. He brought with him a distinguished record of service to the church, and has continued to add laurels to his name. In 1927 he went under General Church appointment as General Director of Recreation and Expression and held that position for four years. The record of those days reads like a page from the book, "Graceland Firsts." He was the first director of Nauvoo Camp (1927) which was the first General Church youth camp. He was the first director of young peoples' activities of the church (1930). He was associate editor of the Journal of the Department of Religious Education, along with Blanche Mesley. He was Graceland's first director of social activities (1932).

All of this could have been forecast in the record of his preappointment days. He distinguished himself as a Graceland student in such widely separated areas as achieving membership in Lambda Delta Sigma, honorary society, and by serving as Graceland's first student-manager of athletic teams. He has never been able to get this latter interest out of his system. You will find him at most any Graceland varsity

RECORD YEAR FOR BAPTISMS

The past ten months (April, 1950, to January, 1951, inclusive) have topped all previous records in baptisms for the same ten months. In April, 1921, to January, 1922, we baptized 4,138. This was surpassed by the baptisms April, 1950, to January, 1951, which totaled 4,178.

RESTORATION WEEK ANNOUNCED

A youth series for the week of April 9-14 is being planned by the Zion's Leagues of Independence to celebrate Restoration Week. Four selected speakers from Independence and Graceland College will present lectures requested by the Stake League cabinet. A panel discussion and worship service including selected testimonies on the meaning of the church to the young people are also on the program. A vigorous campaign to pack the Stone Church with the young people of Independence and vicinity is being launched.

INSTITUTE HELD

February 28 through March 2 were the dates for the Church School Teacher and Worker Training Institute held at the Stone Church in the evenings. Following a worship service, audio-visual aids were used to present the themes each evening. Teachers at the institute included Glaude A. Smith, Carl Mesle, John Thoman, and Ruby Williamson. Sadi Nagel planned the worship services. Stake President Charles V. Graham presented the closing address.

TO LEAVE HAWAII

Word has just been received from Elder James Kemp in Hilo, Hawaii, to the effect that he will be leaving Hilo, April 10, for the mainland. His new assignment is to the Oregon district.

SPECIAL STAKE MEETING HELD

Approximately five hundred people were present at the special Stake Conference, March 5, when the names of fifty-five men were voted upon for ordination to various offices in the priesthood. The Stake Presidency presided at the meeting, and Apostle D. T. Williams gave the closing remarks.

SISTER ARNISON RETURNS

After several weeks of illness, Sister Pauline Arnison, Chairman of the General Council of Women, is back at work in the new office.

STAKE CONFERENCE HELD

President W. Wallace Smith spent March 10 and 11 in St. Joseph, Missouri, at a Stake conference, in association with Apostle D. T. Williams. He was present at a banquet for priesthood and wives Saturday evening in the Y.W.C.A., at which over two hundred people were present. At the conference, Kenneth Piepergerdes and Lawrence Keck were set apart as counselors to Bishop Lewis Landsberg. Charles Haden, Lloyd Siebert, and Donald Bowman were ordained to the office of high priest and set apart with Joseph Albus to the Stake High Council.

AT GRACELAND

Apostle Charles R. Hield spent the week end of March 4 at Graceland. His topic for the Sunday morning sermon was "Today's Mission of the Book of Mormon."

"Trust in the Lord"

"Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed."

—Psalm 37: 3.

Let us begin this thought with a small perpetual calendar that I recently found in the Book Shop while I was consulting my temptations and probing my budget with the long, slender finger of desire.

This little calendar is made of brightly burnished copper. There are no paper sheets to tear off. All you have to do is to push the button one way or another, and you can have it begin the new month on any day of the week. It is a lovely gadget.

But the calendar has something else on it. On the left panel is the Christian cross. On the right is the motto: "Trust in the Lord."

I needed that motto on my desk. I ought to look at it often. There are many times when I should trust the Lord, rather than my own thoughts and impulses. So I bought the calendar.

* * * *

"Trust in the Lord" is a text that we have seen and heard all of our lives—or at least ever since we have been connected with the church. There is comfort and assurance in the text. "Trust in the Lord"; we cannot trust in the arm of flesh, because it will fail. "Trust in the Lord," for riches can be lost and stolen, health can fail, and strength can be taken away. As President Lincoln said during his war years, "I went down on my knees to God because I knew I had nowhere else to go." And that is but an echo of the words of Peter when he considered what it would mean to leave Jesus—"Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." We believe we must trust in the Lord because we know that in many things in life there is no one else we can trust.

* * * *

"Trust in the Lord." Perhaps we have been at fault in accepting this popular and time-honored quotation of Scripture without thinking much about it, and so have failed to get the good out of it that we should.

One thing we should realize: that we have separated it from its context, and so have missed its whole point. This Scripture, as quoted above, contains a command and a promise. Unless we obey the command, we cannot expect the fulfillment of the promise.

The commandment has two parts: (1) Trust in the Lord; and (2) do good. Faith and works are combined in this one order. "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." It is right to trust in the Lord, but that is not enough. We must do good. Only then can we expect the promise.

The promise is "so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." We can understand that this promise means spiritual strength as well as physical sustenance.

Millions of Christians all around the world will remember the admonition, "Trust in the Lord." A few of them, here and there, will remember its sequel, "And do good."

Trusting in the Lord without doing good may really help many people. But it is incomplete.

At this point I would like to quote something, or paraphrase it, from the Japanese Christian leader, Kagawa. He said something like this:

"It was said of One in olden times, that He went about doing good.

"I am distressed to find how easily I am satisfied with just going about."

* * * *

All of us can do some good as we go about our way of life.

Yesterday I was standing at the bus stop, waiting to go uptown. Across the street, at the opposite bus stop, a woman was waiting to go downtown. As she stood there she saw a big ugly bent nail on the pavement. She does not own a car. The nail meant nothing to her. But some passing motorist might pick it up with his tire, have a flat, be delayed, and experience trouble. She went over and picked up the nail, then threw it back into the bushes where it could do no harm.

A small thing, you say. Yet here was a good conscience at work. One has respect for people who do good, not for reward, not for recognition, but to save and help somebody else, even though they may never know it. If we would trust the Lord collectively and do good in the same way, this would be a better world.

* * * *

There is an elderly man in the city who has trusted in the Lord all his life. And he has worked for Him, too. His family is grown, his wife has passed away. He might easily have resigned himself to loneliness and disappointment. But he loves people too much for that. A few years ago, he was retired by his company, and received a gold watch, a medal, and a pension. He said, "Now I can spend all my time work-"

Across the Desk

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

From Apostle Reed M. Holmes:

During the past year we have baptized 138 people in Central Oklahoma District. This is an increase of fifty-five over the eighty-three baptisms in 1949. (The average for the preceding ten-year period was seventy-six per year.) There have been twenty ordinations to various offices of the priesthood. From a recent survey of the church school records we find that there has been a general increase in attendance. Our houses of worship have, in most cases, been beautified. Some have been redecorated or remodeled. The Ponca City group was organized into a mission recently, and has purchased lots for a church building site. Muskogee Mission was organized into a branch. Holdenville Branch has rebuilt its church (partially destroyed by tornado) which is now a more beautiful building than before. A very successful youth camp was held at Pawnee. A most outstanding reunion was held near Wilburton with an all-time record attendance of 596 registered during the week and over 800 attending on Sundays. Oklahoma City Branch moved into its fine new church home. These are some of the outstanding achievements of the past year which form a basis for greater accomplishment in this new year of 1951.

Elder A. R. Gunning writes from Auckland, New Zealand, on February 24, 1951:

This will, in all probability, be my last letter from the fair shores of New Zealand. On March 10, we sail for Sydney and home after spending five and a half years in this mission. The mission conference at Easter will be our first for six years, and you can imagine how we are looking forward to sharing such a rich spiritual time there.

Mitta and I have been happy to have had the opportunity to serve here. The Lord has been gracious and kind to us both. We shall ever remember your visit with us. It is one of our treasured memories. Frequently we refer to the happenings during that visit and somewhat of the spirit returns to us. May you be blessed in your responsible position.

Brother and Sister Imrie and their son, John, have already arrived to take up the work here. They are in the throes of moving in, and we are in the midst of packing to get out. Thus there is some confusion at times, but all together we seem to manage.

Sister Gunning, Ronda, and Barry join me in sending best wishes across the sea to you, trusting the good Lord will bless you and give you increasing strength for your many duties.

From Brother A. M. Boomer of Escanaba, Michigan:

Our hopes were inspired as we entered into the new year. The seed planted is beginning to grow. At first mostly children came out; now the parents are coming and bringing the children. Some members who were inactive are showing new interest.

For our New Year's service we used "At the gate of 1951." Of course we commented on what was accomplished in the past year. This was good—but we want to do better this year. Making a greater effort, being organized, and working together with God can bring us new-found joy and more abundant blessings. We plan to make the best possible use of our talents and our means in helping to build the kingdom.

After this service I wrote out receipts for tithing. I had calls for the family income and expense record, and some inquired about what they could do to help. Others expressed a determination to rededicate their lives to the church.

From Herbert M. Scott, pastor at Des Moines, Iowa:

Last year on January 22, when we opened our new mission building out in West Des Moines, Evangelist Henry Castings and I went all through the neighborhood passing out handbills advertising the series that we planned to hold the latter part of that month. As we walked in the snow, we asked ourselves, "Will this do any good? Will it bring any results? Will anyone be baptized because of these efforts we are making?" Today we are able to say that those efforts did bring forth fruit. Many of the contacts we made were effective, and a number of people joined the church last year because of them.

About two weeks ago we were again passing the handbills out in sub-zero weather, and again we asked, "Will this do any good?" We are finding that it is doing good. The young lady who lives next door to the church, upon whom we called prior to the series, has given her name for baptism. She has read the Book of Mormon and will be baptized this coming Sunday. We believe that her husband also will be baptized in the near future. There are several other pros-

Observe Diamond Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Henry Yager, Sr., Coleman, Michigan, celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary on December 17. A turkey dinner and open house added to the joy of the occasion as children, relatives, and friends of many years came together to honor this respected couple.

Mr. Yager was born at Parkhill, Ontario, on August 13, 1867, and moved to Michigan on March 9, 1876. They were married December 11, 1890, at Coleman, Michigan, where, with the exception of two years, they have resided since.

Mrs. Yager united with the Reorganized Church in 1893 and Mr. Yager was baptized in 1904.

Seven children were born to them, all of whom are living except Verna May (Mrs. George E. Burt) who died in 1943. Their present living posterity numbers twenty-nine—four sons and two daughters, fifteen grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. All of their children and many of their grandchildren have united as members of the Reorganized Church.

pects with whom we have been working in West Des Moines.

Our prospect list is growing here in our branch for the coming series with Brother Ray Whiting. Counting children, we now have approximately one hundred prospects. I would like to get 150 or 200 prospects so that we will be assured of baptizing ninety. Our slogan for the branch is "One Hundred-One for Fifty-One," which is a take-off from your slogan, "Two-Hundred-One for Fifty-One" for the district.

The Principle of Resurrection

By Apostle E. J. Gleazer

Based on a sermon given at Walnut Park Church in Independence.

And when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun. And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great. And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted. And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted: Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is risen; he is not here: behold the place where they laid him. But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter that he goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him, as he said unto you.—Mark 16: 1-7, A. V.

THIS IS THE RECORD of Mark as to what happened that first Easter morning when these good women went to the tomb to embalm the body of their Lord. He was not there. He was not dead; he was alive.

A similar story by a different writer is found in the twenty-seventh chapter of St. Matthew, beginning with the sixty-second verse.

Now the next day, that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first. Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can. So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch.

I think that Scripture is indeed significant. First of all, if I'm sure of anything at all, I'm sure that Christ rose from the dead. I need no testimony other than the presence of God's Spirit which I felt when the choir was singing just previous to this part of the service. Possibly this is the only day in the entire year, or one of the few days in the entire year, that we are conscious of the fact that Jesus lives. If we were as conscious during the other 364 days as we are on Easter, what manner of men and women would we really be?

THE FACT OF THE RESURRECTION is not an allegory. It is not a parable. It is not a story told to impress us with some teaching. It took place on this earth, and we have many eyewitnesses who can testify regarding it. The forces that would seek to destroy God and all that's representative of him, including his Son, did everything in their power to see to it that the Resurrection would not take place. It amuses me a little—because it's so true of us today—that these women seemed to be more concerned that the promises of God be fulfilled than the very disciples themselves.

But the enemies of Jesus were troubled. They wanted to make sure that nothing happened. Don't you recall that they were not merely satisfied to nail those spikes in his hands and feet, but even stuck a spear into his side to make sure that he was dead. There are people today who attempt to explain that Christ really wasn't dead—that the mystics identified with the church took him from the cross, went to work on him, and revived him.

If any man ever was dead, Jesus was. His enemies made sure of that. Not only did they make certain that the spirit had left his body, but they were going to make sure that the disciples didn't steal him from the tomb. Again they appealed to the officials, and their appeal was recognized. The stone they placed at the sepulchre was large enough that it would have required several persons to remove it, but they were not satisfied with that—around the stone they placed the seal of Caesar.

THE FORCES OF EVIL were not conscious that they were contributing to the purposes of God, for the very fact that they left nothing to chance demonstrates that Christ came forth not by the power of man but by the power of God. In their shortsightedness they thought that the body would be stolen by the disciples and the rumor would go abroad that Christ arose and went to heaven. These people didn't sense that the Son of God himself would put in an appearance on many occasions.

You'll recall how Jesus appeared to Mary Magdalene. This account touches my heart, because she was one who gave much. She was a transgressor, but she found Christ, and through the power of his ministry she cleansed her soul. She was one of the first to give consideration to the need of her Lord's body. And certainly we're not surprised at the appearance he made to his own mother who had meant so much to him during his days on the earth.

I like the statement of the angel which shows again the love and consideration of Jesus Christ who hadn't forgotten the fact that another poor sinner was in need of some spirit to reclaim him or to give him confidence in himself. Instead of Jesus saying, "Go tell the apostles I go before them to Galilee," he said, "Go tell the disciples and Peter." He didn't forget Peter, even though Peter swore under a power not of God that he never knew him. Jesus saw in Peter not only human weakness, but his potentialities as a servant for the cause. And this is the same Christ we worship today.

If you have strayed, I want you to know today that this same Jesus, who carried upon his soul the burden that one of his disciples had denied him and was in need of his ministry, is saying through the power of his servants today, "Go tell them I go before them even unto Zion." Some of you have lost heart; some of you have doubted the divinity of the work; some of you have permitted the weakness of men—just as these persons permitted the weaknesses of each other—to turn you aside. To you God is saying that he will go before you even unto Zion in these latter days.

WE HAVE THE TESTIMONY of the angel who was at the tomb when the women went there to find Christ. We have the testimony of the women to whom he appeared. We have the testimony of his appearance to Peter and John. And here again we have a picture. I see those two disciples as the Scriptures portray them—one a little younger than the other. John was able to outrun Peter and got to the tomb first, but he was more cautious than Peter; he waited when he got to the door of the sepulchre, while Peter ran right in. These men had their visitation also. The Twelve on several occasions saw Jesus Christ, and on another occasion five hundred of the brethren saw him and were witnesses to the fact that he lived. He talked with them as a man talks to his fellow men. He broke bread with them.

I say to you today, I know it is a fact that Jesus rose from the dead. Why should I emphasize this? Don't I believe all Christians take it for granted? I'm afraid not. If they really believed in the resurrected Christ, this world today would be a paradise. If Christians actually believed that Jesus Christ is alive, there wouldn't be any war or consequences of war. If Latter Day Saints actually believed that Jesus lives, they would be a power in the midst of nations, and their influence would be felt throughout the entire universe.

I THINK OF THE TESTIMONY of Paul, who was first called "Saul of Tarsus." He didn't believe Christ rose from the dead, yet he believed he was a good man. I used to be told when I was a member of another church, "Oh, it's all a matter of conscience. If your conscience is all right, then you're all right." I sometimes wonder if that spirit is getting into this church, too. I have been told by some of the elders that conscience is a matter of education and environment. This man Saul of Tarsus bore testimony with all pure conscience, but persecuted the church, believing that he was doing God's service. He didn't believe in the resurrection of Christ in spite of all the witnesses. He knew something of what had happened for he stood by and saw Stephen stoned to death because of his testimony in the living Christ. While he was still on his way to put down this new church, he encountered the light of heaven. And you remember how he became physically blind because of that light, and heard the resurrected Lord, whom he had not acknowledged, saying unto him, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" I'm wondering today if we don't have many Sauls of Tarsus who are doing everything in their power to stay God's purpose in this Latter Day work. Maybe they're not doing all in their power, because they see no occasion to do their utmost, but if this church were moving forward as God intends it should, there would be strong characters coming against it. But the God who turned Saul of Tarsus from persecutor to apostle could do the same for men today.

SOME OF US are just as much concerned this morning as were the women when they approached the tomb. What was the question? "Who will roll away the stone?" Some Latter Day Saints are not so much concerned about rolling away the stone in front of the sepulchre where their church lies motionless as they are about some things that are not their business. The removal of some stones is the business of God. And if the Saints would move forward in the direction of their quest, they wouldn't have to worry about who was going to roll away the stone. God will take care of his part if men will take care of theirs.

There's one other testimony I want to bring to you today. After Paul paid his great tribute, not only by word but by life, he demonstrated that Jesus Christ really lived. Here is another that ought to mean something to Latter Day Saints. This next witness also was a man. He had some human weaknesses, but God used him as an instrument. I'm bringing you now the testimony of Joseph Smith recorded in section 76 of the Book of Covenants:

Now after the many testimonies which have been given of him [Christ] this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God.

Here is a testimony of a prophet of the nineteenth century. He adds his humble testimony with that of Sidney Rigdon, "We have seen him."

It's one thing to admit that Christ arose from the dead; it's something else to believe that we also shall have eternal life. We become so modern sometimes that even in our funeral services the power of the resurrection is not mentioned.

IN OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY a man by the name of Job had a problem, and it wasn't his problem alone. It's your problem and mine. It's a problem of many both in and out of our church. Here it is: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

Have you ever read the Psalmist's statement? God forbid that I'm trying to frighten anyone, I'm just dealing with facts this morning. "As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth. For the wind passes over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more."—Psalm 103: 15, 16.

I think we ought to consider ourselves as well as the resurrected Lord. Sometimes it's a good idea to ask ourselves why we are here, and where we are going. We permit the affairs of this life to keep us so occupied that we don't take time out to think of the life to come. In his meditations Job was thinking of things that really matter. It's very important that we have the answer to this question, for it has everything to do with the direction of our lives. "If a man die, shall he live again?" Perhaps the only time we think about it is when we have to lay some of our loved ones away, or when we're called in to administer where death seems to be threatening. Then we try in our way to bring comfort and confidence to those who are going to be left. Some of the stories we tell are certainly poor substitutes.

I know how we attempt to explain such things—"Well now, that's all right, his time has come; he has a work to do somewhere else." But is that always the answer? It's hard for some of us to believe when we see the work that people have to do here. Why don't we really deal with the principle of the resurrection? Why do we stress out of all proportion how important this life is? How soon our "three score and ten" passes. As the Psalmist says, we are like a flower; we flourish for a season, the wind passes over us, and we're gone. Some of us sense our importance in this life, "Why, the church, or the kingdom, or the government, or the business could not get along without us." We may be important, but the world can get along without us. As a church we have been lax in teaching the principle of the resurrection.

I'M GLAD JOB RAISED THE QUESTION he did. Certainly men will live again, and the fact that they will is the thing that's important. It's not how long we live here, but how we live. Let me read from Job 14: 14, 15: "If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change comes." Thank God he knew the answer to his own question. "Thou shalt call and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands." Job knew that God was concerned with the workmanship of his hands. Then again, we have the testimony of Job in the nineteenth chapter—one that thrills us every time we hear it. I used to associate it very closely with this Latter Day work because it seemed to express the spirit of the Restoration so well.

Oh that my words were not written! oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me.

How did Job know that? Christ hadn't even come yet, for he was to come in the meridian of time. But Job, under the inspiration of God's Spirit, was able to bear his testimony, "I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth." Such was the Spirit responsible for Job's success after he had lost his substance, after death had invaded his own family, after his companion said to him, "Curse God and die!" Job couldn't do that for he had the testimony, "My redeemer liveth, and he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth." What manner of men and women would we be, what manner of conduct would we observe if, as Job, we knew that our Redeemer lives?

THE VERY FACT that Jesus lives is a guarantee that we, too, shall live. John gives another testimony that I'd like to bring to you—a statement of the Lord himself. It happened at a time when his heart was heavy because one whom he loved had been taken in death. The two sisters of Lazarus had been seeking Jesus, and finally they found him. Jesus knew that Lazarus was going to die—in fact he didn't hurry to the home. He was taking advantage of the situation to stress another spiritual truth. When he arrived at the home the sorrowing women told him their brother had been dead four days. Then Jesus went outside the tomb and called Lazarus forth. To Martha, who believed she would see her brother only in the hereafter, Christ said:

"I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"—John 11: 25, 26. Are we living in him this morning? Are we believers in him in the truest sense of the term this morning? Whosoever liveth and believeth in him "shall never die." The Scripture says it's appointed unto all men to die, but Jesus wasn't talking about a physical death. I have been present time and time again when good women and men passed through this experience called death, and I can say to you it was not unpleasant for them to die. I have had them say, "Brother Gleazer, in administering will you please ask God to relieve my body and my spirit? I want to go." Several times I have placed my hands upon the heads of people who were suffering terrible pain and, asking God for relief, I have known them to sleep under that power. Theirs was no real death—the kind of death the ungodly are acquainted with.

Not only was the resurrection of Jesus Christ an accomplished fact, but it also proved the possibility of our resurrection so far as our physical bodies are concerned. I'm not going to discuss how this will come about; all I know is that Christ came forth from the tomb, and as he came forth, we too shall arise and have bodies. My concern is that God will give me the body that is most suitable to the kind of life I shall be expected to live.

WOULD IT SATISFY YOU this morning if I could give you positive assurance that you'll be raised from the dead? I want more than that. All men are going to be resurrected. That hymn we sing, "The being he gave us death cannot destroy," is true. A sinner can sing that too, so far as his body is concerned. He's going to have a body and spend a thousand years in retirement some place. Sin cannot keep anyone from living again. There are a lot of people who say that death ends all. They say, "eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die, and what's the difference? Cremate me, and throw my ashes to the Pacific or the Atlantic Ocean or scatter them over the earth," and with a cynical smile, they defy their Creator. Poor souls! They can scatter their ashes anywhere they please, but God visions their coming forth, and they're coming forth.

Many people rejoice today merely in the fact of a physical resurrection; that marvelous event which even the disciples didn't believe in their day to us is now taken as an accepted fact. Let us read how some of us are coming forth:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life. Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man. Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.—John 5: 24-29, A. V.

Now I'm not substituting any words there. I think we have hurt people by putting in substitutes. All are going to come forth—they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the other resurrections, and everyone has the opportunity to determine which he shall experience.

WE CELEBRATE THIS EASTER in vain unless we recognize that the coming forth of Christ was an accomplished fact, and because he lived, we too can live, and take advantage of his life and his teachings. There's a two fold meaning on this matter of the resurrection of Christ. The coming forth of his physical body alone would not have been enough. Of necessity there had to be the resurrection of the soul. Latter Day Saint revelation says that the soul consists of the body and the spirit.

My brother, in his prayer this morning, said that life had conquered death. That's what matters. Who wants to come forth with a physical body if it is still dead in trespasses and sin! If we're going to conquer death, we must do so by the life we live. God had to have a perfect sacrifice to manifest his power in the crucifixion and the resurrection of Jesus Christ. What would it have profited God if an ungodly man had been resurrected? The truth is that a sinful man never would have passed through the experience and made the kind of offering Jesus did. It was the power of life over death, because of the life he lived during the thirty-three years he was upon this earth.

I'm not merely concerned this morning with the resurrection of the body. I'm concerned with what kind of persons we shall be when the resurrection takes place. We have been told by the power of God that the same spirit which brought Jesus from the tomb can bring to pass in us a newness of life. There is no purpose in coming forth unless we do so as new-born men and women in Christ Jesus. The principle of the resurrection must operate within us daily, or we remain dead in trespasses and sins. We talk about the principles of the doctrine of Christ and recognize that faith is a principle that governs our very being. The principle of repentance is, if properly understood, a daily residing principle in life. The ordinance of baptism is to reveal the principle that we're dying unto self and coming forth in Christ; we should keep this in mind daily. The laying on of hands is a daily principle, too, in recognition that it is not within man to direct his own steps. In the language of one of old, "There is a spirit in man, but it is the inspiration of God that giveth him understanding."

THE PRINCIPLE OF THE RESURRECTION is that daily we are dying to the forces of sin. We didn't die to sin when we went into the waters of baptism. I've traveled a great many miles in the interest of this church, and I've never met a perfect Latter Day Saint yet. We all know that when we come into this church we come into a saving process. We're not perfect any more than the disciples of old. We're working out our salvation, but the principle of the resurrection should abide with us daily. Death, in this sense, is a daily process too. We're crucifying daily the old personality of sin.

Some of us get the notion that we must come to every Communion service. There is a crowd on every first Sunday because we have to come back every month to ask God's forgiveness for what we did that month and get a new start. We're back to where we were before. I don't believe this. I think we're back further than we were before. We're going back and back and back, and such is not the purpose of the Communion. That's why I'm not calling it a sacrament in the reference I'm making now. We abuse the word. The sacrament is really what happens in us, and there are only a few people in this church who experience the sacrament when our ordinances are performed.—All observe the outward, visible part, but not many sense the change which takes place within. That's the sacrament—that which is not visible.

We must, of necessity, die to the forces of sin daily; sin is not conquered in the twinkling of an eye or in a moment. One of the best definitions I have ever heard of sin is that it is the distance which separates us from God. It's the overcoming of that distance, the putting on of Christ in the truest sense in our character, that I have in mind when I say that we are crucifying the man of sin and building in his stead the man, Christ

Jesus. So the purpose of God is only partially served in the physical resurrection. Remember what I have said, "The resurrection of your physical body profits you nothing unless you are also experiencing daily the resurrection of the spirit." It was easier for God to bring to pass the resurrection of the physical body than to bring to pass the resurrection of the spiritual. The resurrection of the physical is in vain, unless there is the principle of the resurrection bringing to pass new life in us. For if we're going to live, we want to live with God, and with the spirits of just men made perfect.

"This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23.

A Very Present Help

by Aarona Booker Kohlman

AS THE MOTHER of four children, I feel keenly my responsibility to rear them in such a manner that they will be workers for God in establishing his kingdom. I realize that they are not primarily my children but human beings who have been placed in my care by God until such time as they can go forth to take their places in society. Each child born enters life pure, and in a sense each is a "blank" on which life will stamp impressions. My responsibility as a mother is to see that they receive the best impressions until they are prepared to choose wisely for themselves.

In common with most parents, I feel my inadequacy to carry out this task without a great deal of help. I feel that I must have the help of God, the help of my husband, and the help of any qualified individual or agency that is available to me.

One of the most available agencies is my church. It provides the church school, which reaches the child on his level. The classes are planned to meet the needs of the children in different age levels. Here they come in contact with the influence of consecrated men and women. These teachers furnish a cumulative breadth of experience and wisdom that I could not possibly match.

Little children have so much love that they need other adults than their parents to lavish it on. I thrill to hear a three-year-old talk with shining eyes about "my teacher," who is truly regarded as the final authority in many matters.

Human beings are creatures of habit, and I want my children to form the best habits. By early attendance at church school, they will form the habit of attending, participating, giving, and serving.

ICANNOT EXPECT the church school to teach my children everything they should know about God and his creation, but certainly they do learn much there. They learn about God with perhaps a broader concept than they would get from their parents alone. They learn the beautiful stories of the Bible and the Book of Mormon, and they become familiar with the great characters of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and church history. They learn songs written especially for them—songs dear to the hearts of Latter Day Saints. (My four-year-old son was so proud when he came home and sang me "The Old, Old Patch"!)

This brings to my mind another value of the church school; it points out to me the religious "knowledge-gaps" and misconceptions in my children's minds. Quite often something is mentioned at church school which leaves them puzzled, and I am questioned about it. Often the subject is one that would not have occurred to them spontaneously, and one with which I may not have realized they needed help. It is then my privilege and opportunity to supplement the work of the church school.

As a mother, I cannot feel that the church school is for my children alone. It is a necessity for me and their father as well. It is one of the best of family activities in which the youngest to the oldest can engage actively and wholesomely. We could not imagine our family life without the influence of the church school.

White House Youth Conference

Report on the Mid-Century White House
Conference on Children and Youth

THROUGH the efforts of President Israel A. Smith and Senator Forrest Donnell, our church was invited to send two delegates to the Mid-Century White House Conference on Children and Youth called by President Truman to convene in Washington, D. C., December 3-8, 1950.

Dr. Floyd McDowell, director of priesthood education and for twenty-six years director of the Department of Religious Education, and Carl Mesle, newly appointed to general church youth work, were named to represent the church at this Conference. Their preparation included the report to the White House Conference on the services rendered by the church to its children and youth, a copy of which was printed in the Saints' Herald of October 23, 1950.

Purpose of the Conference

The Mid-Century White House Conference was the fifth such conference called by Presidents of the United States each decade since 1909. The first and each succeeding Conference made valuable contributions to the promotion of the welfare of the children and youth of the nation.

The theme of the Conference was stated as a question, "What can we do—what must we do—to secure for every child a fair chance for a healthy personality?" The purpose of the Conference was, in the words of the National Committee:

To consider how we can develop in children the mental, emotional, and spiritual qualities essential to individual happiness and to responsible citizenship, and what physical, economic, and social conditions are deemed necessary to this development.

Personality in this connection does not mean charm or temperament; it is the sum total of a person, his ability to live a normal life, operating at somewhere near his own top capacity.

Recent decades have seen great strides in the improvement of services which have brought excellent physical care to our children and young people. The concern of the Conference therefore was the mental, emotional, and spiritual health and welfare of the nation's children and youth.

The Conference creed was expressed as a "belief in the primacy of spiritual values, democratic practice, and the dignity and worth of every human being and a recognition that these are essential to undivided happiness and responsible citizenship."

Background of the Conference

From a small group meeting in the White House at the call of President Theodore Roosevelt in 1909, the White House Conferences had grown so that the fifth Conference meeting in the mid-century brought together 5,000 delegates from 464 national organizations, 1,000 into four printed manuals made available to all delegates.

The procedure in making this Conference most effective involved three steps: (1) the two years of preparation by experts and laymen throughout the country, (2) the Conference itself, which met to consider the findings and counsel of those who had made the preparation and to bring forth from those findings recommendations which would be beneficial to the nation's children, and (3) the follow-up of the proposals and recommendations to make them work in our own areas. To that end, this report is submitted.

The Conference Itself

The five thousand delegates, representing all walks, interests, and cultures of American life, met in the National Guard Armory in Washington, D. C. Among them were the nation's recognized authorities in the field of youth work and young people themselves, professors from colleges and universities, housewives and mothers of children, members of the clergy of all major faiths, farmers representing their home counties, and white persons and Negroes from both sides of the Mason-Dixon Line.

Several members of our church attended the Conference as representatives of groups and agencies in their own areas. Those who were fortunate enough to meet and talk with were Mrs. Ruby Inlow from Los Angeles, California, who represented the School of Social Work at the University of Southern California; Mrs. Elba Crum of Seattle, Washington, representing the Community Program in Family Life Education for the Seattle schools; and Miss Mary Lois Williamson of Frankfort, Kentucky, Director of Vocational Home Economics for the State of Kentucky. Brother Wilford Winholtz of Washington, D. C., represented the American Society of Planning Officials. Brother and Sister Winholtz served also as our most kind and considerate host and hostess during our stay in Washington.

The Conference opened on a Sunday evening in the first of eight general sessions with an address on "Spiritual Foundations" by a Presbyterian minister.

Many pointed statements came out of the White House Conference which helped those in attendance to better understand the world in which children and young people live. The following are of especial interest.

ON CHILDREN:

"Christ set a child in our midst as the focus of our world."

"Love is as vital as calories for the growing child."

"The child is the hope of the world—if he didn't have to live with (imperfect) adults."

"Children are not receptacles to be filled or emptied at will."

"Today we are teaching unknown children how to live in an unknown world. It is like equipping our flyers with a survival kit; we do not know just where they may land."

counties, fifty-three states and territories, and thirty-seven federal agencies. In addition, there were 250 selected young people participating, and 275 international observers from forty countries. Into this Conference went two years of preparation, involving one hundred thousand persons working under the direction of Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator. Our church was one of 180 national organizations which submitted written reports. These, with the reports of other groups, were condensed

With him on the platform were a Jewish rabbi and a Catholic priest. The general sessions, which met at intervals during the Conference, included such speakers as Dr. Benjamin Spock, one of the foremost authorities on the rearing of children, the Honorable Carlos F. Romulo, representative of the Philippines to the United Nations, and President Harry S. Truman.

Other speeches were presented and opinions exchanged in thirty-one panels

ON THE HOME:

"There is no more satisfying, important, soul-stirring job than parenthood."

"It is in the living of the home pattern that honesty and integrity are integrated."

"Home is our launching platform for sending our children out on uncharted seas."

"Too many of us live in a civilization wherein home is only a stopping-off place to and from the garage."

"Homes should be fed by business, not drained by business."

"Home ownership is now at an all time high."

"Delinquent behavior is only a reflection of what the child has received from his parents and society—but we refuse to accept the responsibility."

in that many different fields related to youth, with one delegate able to attend only two different panels.

The real work of the Conference, however, was carried out in the thirty-five different work groups which met for three half days, and where, in strenuous and democratic give-and-take, the delegates hammered out the recommendations which they wished the Conference to consider and approve. Brother McDowell attended the session on "Contributions of Family Life to Healthy Personality Development," while Brother Mesle represented the church in the group on "Spiritual Values and Healthy Personality." Recommendations made here were condensed and co-ordinated by central committees which worked most of one night and were presented to the five thousand delegates in plenary session the last morning of the Conference.

The session to consider these recommendations, which was scheduled to last only during the morning, took all day, eliminating the final afternoon's program. Most of the recommendations were adopted; many were amended; and some were rejected.

FINDINGS OF THE CONFERENCE

Barriers to Healthy Personality Development

The two years of preparation and the week of the Conference turned up many interesting facts which dramatically illustrated the barriers existing in the American social system between children and their chance for the development of a healthy, happy, and normal personality. Here are some of those barriers:

1. Of more than 53,000,000 children and young people under twenty-one years of age, half are not now reached by any institution of religion.
2. 1 child in 8 is not living with both parents. In 1948 129,700 babies were born outside marriage.
3. 1 in 5 mothers with children under 18 works outside the home.
4. 1 out of 2 children in large cities belongs to a family with inadequate income.
5. There is 20 times as much juvenile delinquency in slum areas as in good areas.
6. In 1949 3,158,000 children between 5 and 17 years of age were not enrolled in school.
7. 11 per cent of the homes accommodate from 3 to 6 persons per room.
8. There is inequality of opportunity among different racial, cultural, and economic groups.

Influence Toward Healthy Personality Development

1. Parents are the most significant adults in the lives of children to communicate spiritual values and to lay foundations for the development of healthy personalities.
2. The way parents, teachers, and other professional persons feel about children is more important than the specific methods and techniques they use.
3. Nothing is of greater importance to the moral and spiritual health of our nation than the work of religious education in our homes and families and in our institutions of organized religion.
4. Each child should live in a secure home that is free from want, and dread of want, and provides all family members with a satisfying physical, aesthetic, social and spiritual environment.
5. There should be a regard for the individual worth of each child and a sensitive respect for his feelings by all who touch his life.

6. Loving care and guidance is necessary from mothers and fathers, who have a sense of the privilege and responsibility which parenthood involves, and who have confidence in their capacity to rear a child.

7. A community needs citizens dedicated to establishing values and practices that make life meaningful and abundant for children of all colors, creeds, and customs.

8. There should be full access to health, educational, recreational, social, and religious services and programs, directed toward the well-being of all they serve.

Other Significant Findings

1. It is particularly important to build up the faith of the younger person in society, its democratic and spiritual ideals, and make clear the significance of the young person's contribution.
2. Secure and informed parents are a prerequisite for healthy personality development.

ON RELIGION AND SPIRITUAL QUALITIES:

"A child takes to God as a bird takes to air."

"Reason is a puny child that strong faith carries on its shoulders."

"We can dimly see the way but not without God's beckoning."

"The very God idea which people hold stems from the father figure in the home."

"Religion is not a pair of galoshes to be put on only in case of storm."

"Some people use religion as a streetcar, only when it is going their way."

"Faith is our life thrust into the dark future."

"Spiritual values are defined as those centered in God and the individual's relation with him."

"Spiritual qualities include a sense of God, of direction, of responsibility, and of mission."

3. Education for parenthood should be made available to all through educational, health, religious, and welfare agencies maintaining professional standards and by properly qualified individuals.

4. Spiritual values are essential to the development of a healthy personality.

5. Moral and spiritual growth occurs most effectively in a healthy community; therefore the church and the synagogue must take leadership within themselves and in the community to overcome these factors which imperil individual and family well-being.

6. Americans should reaffirm their confidence in the over-all success of American family life and in the competence of the average American parent.

7. Organizations and agencies should bend their efforts toward supplementing, rather than substituting for, family functions and should build their programs, co-operatively, toward this end.

8. The family, properly guided by the church and synagogue, best provides an atmosphere in which a child can develop morally and spiritually.

9. Almost universally, young people seek a mature, understanding, and trained professional person with whom they can discuss fully their vocational, educational, social, and personal problems. Few communities provide this important service adequately.

10. Parents are urged to consider the value of a family plan for the use of leisure time which includes all ages and also provides an opportunity for each member to spend time with other people of his or her age.

11. Educational institutions have a responsibility to assist the student in developing spiritual values and an understanding of religious and ethical principles necessary to the development of a healthy personality.

12. Churches of various faiths should co-ordinate, strengthen, and expand their religious services and activities for people of inadequate income.

13. More emphasis should be put on the effects of recreational activities on the personality of the individual. Young people should have an equal chance with adults to participate in planning and carrying out recreational activities.

14. Prompt steps should be taken to eliminate all types of racial and religious segregation and discrimination.

15. In view of television's unprecedented growth and its potential as a medium for mass education, the television industry and all educational, health, and social agencies seeking to use this medium should accept their social responsibility for the welfare and development of children and youth. This principle should apply to the other mass media of communication.

16. The Federal Communications Commission should reserve television channels for non-commercial, educational television stations so that some part of the limited number of frequencies to be allocated by the Commission may be reserved for educational uses and purposes.

17. All groups concerned should develop and maintain programs for protecting the healthy personality of children living under the stress of defense preparation.

Implications for Our Church

1. Give more consideration to the extent and nature of our participation in interdenominational, community, and civic groups interested in working toward these goals.

2. Work toward greater unity of understanding, purpose, and effort among our own church agencies having to do with the child, youth, and the family.

QUOTES OF INTEREST:

"Healthy personality is one which is free to operate at somewhere near top capacity."

"Consecrated ignorance is not enough."

"Success today is a nasty mixture of cash and gadgets."

"We are shocked at gang behavior, but too often we do the same thing more politely to those outside our social, educational, or religious groups (leaving not bloody noses, but sick hearts)."

"In 1960 we will need a quarter million more teachers than we now have."

"What is troubling adults about the adolescent? We are green with envy."

"America is the only country in the world where most of the children know more than most of their parents."

"Young people vote with their feet; they walk out."

"Silence is often a potent means of indoctrination; in our public education, we are often guilty of 'compulsory secularism'."

3. Give increased consideration to the needs and welfare of the family as the basic unit of the church.

a. The church should serve the family rather than simply asking the family to serve the church.

b. Ministry which serves all ages and strengthens the total family ties with the church is needed.

c. The church should not compete with the family:

(1) either taking the family out of the home too much, or

(2) separating members of the family too much, or

(3) taking on the functions of the family rather than assisting the family to perform its own functions.

d. Give priority to family life in such areas as:

(1) worship, including preaching and prayer meeting,

(2) reunions as family camps with program family-life centered.

e. Education for and counseling in all matters pertaining to marriage and family life should be provided.

4. Give greater attention to the needs and welfare of the one-third of our membership under twenty-one years of age:

a. These are the formative and critical years.

b. We are losing from active membership 50 to 75 per cent of our natural increase.

5. More and better ministry is needed by young adults rearing the children who will follow their parents into, or away from, the church influence.

6. Co-ordinate our efforts with other faiths to:

a. strengthen and expand our services and activities for people of inadequate income,

b. reach out to the twenty-six million children and young people not now touched by any institution of religion.

7. Attack the problems of discrimination and prejudice with the message of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all men.

8. Recognize and utilize the opportunities found in service and fellowship as well as in religious instruction and worship for providing the essentials of religious experience and spiritual growth.

9. Give greater recognition to the vital relationship of wholesome recreation to healthy personality development.

10. Anticipate providing more and better trained counselors for our young people to guide them as they meet these life problems in the home, school, church, or community.

11. Give careful attention to the spiritual undergirding of our young people, families, and congregations to meet the destructive forces brought on by war and defense mobilization.

12. Provide more consistent opportunities for young people to play a greater part in planning and carrying out all phases of church work (in which they are qualified to participate).

The Missouri Basin

By Charles E. Erwin

THINKING BACK OVER the past years, I wonder how the true significance of the alterations along the course of the Missouri River could have escaped me. It is even more embarrassing when I realize that I watched the concrete flood wall and levees being constructed along the industrial districts of Kansas City. Later on there were occasions to observe the Liberty Bend cutoff just outside Independence become a reality to include a fine new bridge over what was once dry land. I didn't know that several years later I would be observing quite different construction projects, a part of the same plan, as much as six hundred miles northwest along the 2,460-mile winding length of the "Big Mo."

The goal of our engineering field trip at Graceland was Fort Randall, South Dakota, formerly an Indian fort. It is now the site of a huge construction project—just one of many, some even more tremendous. Fort Randall is to be the name of a large reservoir—one of 138 reservoirs that the United States Corps of Engineers has the responsibility of constructing. The objective in point of time is the year 1970—at which date it is expected that the entire Missouri River Basin will have its face lifted, get a new lease on life, and permit in our day a true and stable "balance of power" between the midwest's two greatest resources: land and water.

How does mere man feel he can hope to change the economics of one sixth of the land area of the United States with one co-ordinated plan, let alone harness the "mighty Mo"?

AS A RESULT of a series of floods and droughts, Congress finally stated flatly in 1932 that such disasters were a national problem and that a comprehensive plan for controlling the water and land of the Missouri Basin was needed. Mr. Sloan and the late General Pick, U. S. A., did an inspired (and I use the term advisedly) piece of work independent of each other. Their efforts were accepted by Congress and combined into the present Pick-Sloan Plan, which often has been mistakenly referred to as the M. V. A.

It is not my primary purpose to assail the reader with technical data, but a true appreciation of the entire program will entail some facts and figures. There are certain salient features of the Pick-Sloan Plan which should be of special interest to church members.

(1) Who administers the plan?

There are five co-ordinating government agencies, each of which has clearly delegated responsibilities:

a. The United States Army Corps of Engineers—flood control and main stem construction

b. The Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of Interior—irrigation and tributary construction

c. Federal Power Commission—power distribution and sale

d. Department of Agriculture—soil conservation

e. Department of Commerce—river navigation and recreational areas

The Missouri Basin includes all or part of ten states: Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, and Colorado. A board of governors from the ten states elects five members to serve with one representative from each of the five governmental agencies, and the resulting ten-man body is called the Inter-Agency Committee. All action that originates from this committee must be a unanimous decision of the members—a good case of democracy in action, with a minimum of politics.

(2) How does the construction worker live?

No doubt this does not apply to all of them, but a good share of them live in government towns. In the past, some of these towns have had a rather unsavory reputation; but Pickstown, on the bluff overlooking Fort Randall, is a functionally arranged, clean little town. Completely planned, it is a tribute to the fact that the modern engineer can apply his methods equally well in the area of town administration and social problems. The philosophy must have been that the best control was not to let vice and crime get started. As an example, full local and state government co-operation was sought after and received to deny liquor licenses within a twenty-mile radius of the town. This and other policies have resulted in a clean town in every sense of the word. With my tongue in my cheek I am constrained to wonder whether we as a church have done as well in our own back yards. Or do I need to put my tongue in my cheek?

(3) What does this have to do with our church membership?

Perhaps you are thinking as you read—if you have read this far—that this is an incidental article, somewhat interesting, but so what? First, let me reaffirm that the Missouri Basin is getting its face lifted. The life of its 7,000,000 inhabitants will definitely be affected. Flooded lowlands along the "Big Muddy" will be a bad memory, and it will become a comparatively clear stream. Navigation will be stabilized as far north as Sioux City. 11,000,000 acres of the parched western plains will be irrigated. 2,000,000 kilowatts of hydro-electric (cheap) power will be available to relocating industries. Tremendous reservoirs of low grade manganese and lignite might become commercially usable with this power. Large recreational areas surrounding the huge reservoirs will be developed, and these alone should create many occupational opportunities.

THROUGH THE YEARS of my life, Zion has been referred to less and less specifically in point of time but always has apparently centered around Independence, Missouri. I think it would be correct to say that the population center of our church is now in the Missouri Basin with every chance of its being increasingly so in the future. Is it not good sense to keep close watch on the changing Missouri Basin? Should we not relate its coming opportunities to our thinking on the Gathering? Couldn't some specific investigations be carried out by the General Church in regard to available lands and resources? Government agencies such as the Department of Commerce are very willing to co-operate with any group on such an investigation.

I have had to restrain myself from spouting many interesting but needless figures on the height, length, storage capacity, etc., of the Fort Randall Reservoir, because it was significant only as a stimulus for this greater view—this vision which I have caught, and which I think Mr. Sloan and General Pick also caught when they devised the Pick-Sloan Plan. No, I don't think mere man could conceive such a plan. I think the Lord may have seen something in it for us.

Letters

Concerning Book of Mormon Articles

I have read with interest the recent articles on the Book of Mormon which have appeared in the Herald. While these are no doubt very valuable to the student, I believe that humble searchers after truth who read the book with a desire to check its spiritual values will be convinced that it is true. Does it really matter if we ever know where the narrow neck of land is, where the city of Zarahemla is located, where the various peoples landed? I know the Book of Mormon is divine, and as is stated on page three, "if there are faults, they are the mistakes of men." I also know that the same spirit holy men of old wrote by acts upon the hearts of men and women today, and by them Zion will come into being. In trying to present the book to people who have shut God out of their lives, we are on the way to disappointment. It is better that we should select humble "timbers of God's temple," praying always for guidance in our work of presenting the gospel. Surely many will come to know, as we know, "in them shall be written my gospel, saith the Lamb, and my rock and my salvation; and blessed are they who shall seek to bring forth my Zion at that day, for they shall have the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost; and if they endure unto the end, they shall be lifted up at the last day, and shall be saved in the everlasting kingdom of the Lamb; and whoso shall publish peace, yea, tidings of great joy, how beautiful upon the mountains shall they be."

How to Quit the Tobacco Habit

I write this in the hope that it may help others who are trying to break the tobacco habit. My husband had smoked since he was seven years old. When he joined the church in his middle age, he quit smoking cigarettes, but continued to smoke his pipe and cigars. He never smoked away from home, and several of the Saints had talked with him about quitting completely.

One evening an elder he especially liked called on us and during the conversation asked, "Joe, when are you going to quit smoking?" My husband replied that he would quit one of these days. The next morning he remarked to me, "I guess when this pipe is gone I will quit smoking."

A short time later he came home and began to look for his pipe. Not finding it, he asked if I had seen it, and I told him I hadn't. Angrily he accused me of getting rid of it, so he went to the store and bought another. Because of his anger I did not tell him that I really knew nothing about where it was. A few days later I reminded him that he said that when that pipe was gone he was going to quit smoking, but he just smiled and said he knew I had gotten rid of it. I assured him that I had not and again reminded him of his assertion that he would quit when that pipe was gone. He lifted the griddle off the stove to knock the ashes from the bowl, and the bowl of the new pipe fell off the stem into the fire.

Then he started to smoke only cigars, two in the morning and two at night. This he cut to one cigar morning and night, then to half a cigar at morning and the other half at night. Then he began to chew gum. After nine months of this he finally broke the habit completely. He gained weight and felt better than he had ever felt before. He said he believed if he had tried to quit all at once it would have killed him because he had used tobacco in some form all of his life.

Note of Thanks

I wish to express my sincere thanks to all who sent cards and letters or offered prayers for me during the time I was recovering from injuries received in an accident. I hope to be able to walk as well as ever soon. I pray we may all live to be worthy of God's richest blessings.

From Iceland to California

When I last wrote the Herald, I was in the Arctic on the island of Iceland. During the many months I spent there I found opportunity to spread the gospel of the Restoration. I still receive letters from native families who made my stay so pleasant while I was away from family and friends. I was also greatly pleased to receive a Christmas greeting card from the Honorable Sveinn Bjarnason, President of Iceland, extending his good wishes.

As one contrast often follows another, we chose to spend this winter in sunny California with our daughter and family, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Melton. We have found here not only a sunny climate and relatives, but many Saints and friends. We attend a little branch of the church at Venice, where Pastor Herbert Blakeman and a devoted corps of workers serve. I am pleased to state this is one of the most harmonious church families I have met with in a long while. Under this good leadership the Saints are tackling their problems unitedly. Looking forward to the building of a church home, they have secured a splendid lot and have several thousand dollars.

Brother Garland Tickemyer worshiped with us a few Sundays ago, bringing an inspiring message of faith and power. On January 26 we were privileged to attend a birthday dinner at Central Church commemorating the organization of Los Angeles Branch in 1882. As I spent a considerable time here in 1908 and 1909, having been ordained by President Fred M. Smith and started out in my ministry under Brother T. W. Williams, Charles E. Crumley, and R. T. Cooper (then in charge of the work here), the event held more than passing interest for me. Space will not permit details of this splendid social and spiritual evening. Brother Tom Beil, pastor, was master of ceremonies and Barney (Earl) Page represented Father Time, bringing to us many interesting events occurring through the years. Brother Will Badham spoke briefly. We were honored by the presence of "Brother Elbert" who gave one of his timely talks and a prayer of blessing upon the present efforts.

It is good to know that here in this outpost of Zion and Western Gateway to the Land of Joseph, there are people making the Zionic life their goal and alert to the factors which make for sainthood.

My vision seems to extend beyond the present crisis of nations to the time when the gospel shall be preached to Russia, China, Japan, the Philippines, and other nations, and by the grace and power of the Almighty there shall be "gathered from every nation under heaven" those who have cast their lot with this Restoration Movement.

As we move among the Saints our faith is increased that before too long the kingdom order will become a reality; the power of loving co-operation will permeate our spiritual, social, and economic life, replacing the greed and avarice of the worldly order and preparing the way for the return of our Lord.

May his spirit direct us all to this end is my prayer.

From a Tithepayer

About two years ago I was near death with a heart attack. I was afraid to go to sleep for fear I would never regain consciousness. Exhausted, I sent for the elders to come and administer to me. I determined that if my life were spared I would try harder to keep God's commandments, including the paying of tithes. Soon after administration I slept peacefully—the first time in many hours. My health has gradually improved, and we are paying our tithing regularly. I believe that all who keep the commandments will find God's goodness to them is limitless.

I pray that soon we may have church services in Yankton, as I believe some of our friends would be interested. We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may be among the faithful and have a part in God's great work.

Likes Pollyanna Philosophy

We often notice in articles and conversations references to the book, Pollyanna. It seems that in the minds of a great many people the thought expressed therein is a very foolish attitude in life. As I remember, I was quite young when I read the book, and I found it very helpful. Having had many dreams and hopes that were not realized, I needed to find a way out, and Pollyanna seemed to give something that helped. As a child I was frail and could not enjoy many pleasures other children could, yet I was not handicapped by being crippled, blind, deaf, or maimed, and I loved to read. My parents by certain circumstances were poor, yet they were highly respected by all who knew them. I became a member of the church at fifteen, and in time, through its ordinances, was healed. In later life I had a dream. At this time I had two small children. Although I was unable to do my housework, I could give the children the most of the care they needed. Other conditions caused the load to be very heavy. I dreamed I was in a house, and the room I was in was full of bugs. I went into another room, and the bugs were not so bad. As I went from room to room the bugs disappeared until it was a joy to notice the beauty around us. When I awakened the interpretation came to me. The bugs were the burdens and worries I carried at that time. The rooms were years, and each year the cares would grow less, and I would be more free. I feel this has been realized. All people do not think as I do. The book that was a help to me may not be enjoyed at all by my neighbors. It is the same with sermons and the way people live. That is why charity must have a place in our hearts.

game sitting on the bench with the players, or giving a word of good psychological counsel in the locker room. He had charge of Scouting in Independence for the church in 1920.

What most people don't know about Genial Gene is that for eight years preceding his teaching career he served as a master mechanic. Visit the Closson household this year or any year and you are likely to find some part of the house in the process of construction by the master mechanic himself. This hobby has come in handy in recent years since "Judy" his wife decided to turn her own hobby, raising flowers, into a business. The building hobby has also helped the house to expand as the family expanded. The Clossons have three children: Edward (20), Mary Jane (16), and James (14).

In addition to his teaching duties Gene is a member of the Council on Student Welfare, the Academic Council, and Chairman of the Division of Health and Education. He is a former member of the Committee on Student Selection (15 years), Administrative Council (16 years), and the Curricular Adjustment Committee (7 years). He was acting dean of the college in 1932. He is a high priest, and has served on the Lamoni Stake High Council for 15 years. He has traveled for the church or college in every state. He is a member of Psi Chi, national honorary society in psychology.

But whatever official responsibilities he is called upon to shoulder during the coming years, you will probably find him spending at least five hours a day at his big love—giving personal, fatherly counsel to the students who come to his office in Kelley Hall. Perhaps this relationship explains the affectionate term which students use to describe him—"Pop."

J. CHARLES MAY LEAVES

Patriarch J. Charles May left Independence March 10 for the west coast to sail March 15 on the "Maitemata" for Papeete, Tahiti. This is Brother May's fourth trip to the Society Islands and his first trip as an evangelist. Brother May has been in the mission field for forty-two years, serving in the South Seas and this country. He expects to be gone about a year, doing evangelistic work among twenty-three church congregations in various parts of the islands. Sister May has remained in Independence.

YOUTH INSTITUTE

President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., announces a Youth Institute on Missions Abroad at Graceland College April 28 and 29. He is inviting both the youth and the youth leaders to this institute on materials and methods for branch activities.

Delegations from branches and districts have been solicited. The General Church is cooperating with the college in sponsoring this invitational conference.

CHOIR SINGS

The Graceland College Concert Choir, under the direction of Henry Anderson, presented a program of hymns, spirituals, folk songs, and popular music at an assembly of students of William Chrisman High School at Memorial Hall, March 12. The choir was on a tour of Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma. Roscoe Faunce, head of the drama department at Graceland, was announcer. Recordings were taken of the choir at the Stone Church.

NEWS FOR WOMEN

Sister Pauline Arnsen and the General Council of Women have completed the study outlines for the women's classes at reunions. They will soon be available at the Herald House. Prospective teachers are urged to obtain the material as soon as its publication is announced in the "Herald" in order to be sufficiently prepared.

SPONSOR INSTITUTE

John R. Darling, Associate Director of the Department of Religious Education, and Clifford Cole, president of the Northwest Iowa District, sponsored church school institutes in Woodbine, February 23-25, and in Denison, March 2-4. During the week they met with church school workers at Morehead, Missouri Valley, Cherokee, and Pisgah.

NURSES RECEIVE CAPS

A capping service for thirty student nurses who entered the San in September, 1950, was held at the Enoch Hill church, March 4. Four of the students are from Independence, thirty girls represent twelve of the States, the Territory of Hawaii, and Canada. President W. W. Smith was speaker for the service. Miss Anna Marie Smith led the Student Nurse Chorus in special music.

VISIT OKLAHOMA

President F. Henry Edwards and Apostle Reed M. Holmes were in Oklahoma City the week end of March 3 and 4 at a district conference in the new church there. The theme for the conference was "United in Purpose We Build Together."

From there Brother Edwards and Brother Victor Witte went to Wilburton, Oklahoma.

Briefs

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—The annual branch Christmas service was held at the church on December 22. Mrs. Edith Jacks directed the program presented by the church school. As a special feature of the program, the children brought "gifts for Jesus" as their contributions to the project planned by Mrs. Elma Rolfe and her junior stewards. Food, toys, clothing, and money were collected for Christmas boxes to be presented to two needy families.

December 23 a group of Zion's Leaguers sang Christmas carols at the home of shut-ins. A gift, furnished by the women's department, was left at each home visited. The annual "bean feast" at the home of Elder and Mrs. John Gann concluded the evening. A Yule camp was held at Pincroft December 29 to January 1. A program of worship and recreation was planned.

The choir, under the direction of Edna Burdick, gave the Christmas portion of The Messiah December 24. Soloists were Virginia Winsor, Marjorie Damitz, Hazel Damron, and Laurence MacDonald. Accompanists were Phillipa Gann, organist, and Helen Wilshusen, pianist. "Let Us Keep Christmas" was the subject of the sermonette by the pastor.

Associate Pastor John Gann gave the morning message, "Choose Ye This Day," December 31. Guest soloist was John Varvaro. Pastor Myron Schall presented the evening sermon.

A devotional service was held January 7, and the Communion message was presented by High Priest John T. Smith of Central Missouri Stake. Mrs. Virginia Winsor sang "By the Rivers of Babylon." Elder Smith was also the evening speaker January 14.

Evangelist William Dawson, a veteran of many years of faithful service to the church, has established a creditable record in his temporal work. He recently celebrated his seventieth birthday and retired from his position with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, having completed forty-seven years and two months of continuous service with the company. He also set an outstanding record for punctuality, having been late only once in his long period of employment.

The boys' basketball team finished the first half of their interchurch championship tournament undefeated.

Pastor Schall presided over the Communion service February 4. This was also annual filing day and at the close of the service the inventories were placed on the altar. Bishop E. C. Burdick was in charge of this part of the service.—Reported by LENA SWANEY.

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL STAKE.—A conference was held February 11. Attendance was better than average, and the reports indicated much organizational work has been done in the Stake.

Bishop Updike presented an analysis of the current financial status and emphasized the immediate as well as future goals.

Unanimous approval was given the recommendations for ordination of the following eight men: Guy W. Stewart, teacher; John Wesley Smith, Myron Willard, Truman Richard Horton, Paul Robert Shaw, priests; Lyle W. Jones, and Harold Pearl, deacons; and Murdock Day, elder. A program of fifteen preordination training sessions was announced.

President F. H. Edwards was present at the conference.—Reported by A. E. DEPEW.

DINUBA, CALIFORNIA.—The Saints visited Fresno February 12 at the invitation of the pastor at Fresno, Elder E. E. Workman. The morning sermon was presented by Patriarch William Dawson. The group was invited to the homes of the Saints in Fresno for dinner. A prebaptismal service was held in the afternoon. Three candidates from the Dinuba group were baptized by the Dinuba pastor, Elder G. E. McGoon. Those baptized were Robert Wise and his wife, Mabel, and eight-year-old Jacob Wise, son of Brother and Sister J. A. Wise. Immediately after the baptism, the candidates were confirmed by Patriarch Dawson and Elder McGoon.—Reported by LULA F. PARK.

SAGINAW, MICHIGAN.—Priesthood classes for the men of Saginaw, Bay City, and Burt were conducted February 12 and 13 under the direction of Bishop T. A. Beck of Lansing and Apostle C. G. Mesley.

South Central Michigan district will hold its first women's institute here February 13. Despite exceptionally cold weather and icy highways 125 were registered. A prayer service which opened the institute was under the direction of Apostle Mesley and District President Everett Berendt of Midland. Sister Blanche Mesley was in charge of the remainder of the program. She spoke on "Women Build the Kingdom." Also serving at the institute were Sister T. A. Beck and Sister Ella Wiley, district women's leader.—Reported by ALICE BRANDT.

LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS.—Church school is held each Sunday morning in the chapel of the Women's City Club, under the direction of Brother R. H. Cowen. Brother Cowen has promoted the missionary endeavor and approximately eighty Saints have been contacted in the city.

Various men visit and minister. Monthly family night fellowship meetings are held since the organization of the Zion's League under the direction of Brother Jim Kev. Brother Key recently moved here from Oklahoma City.—Reported by MRS. R. H. COWEN.

FLINT, MICHIGAN.—The city of Flint recently built a new street called Hamilton Avenue past the Newall Street Church. This congregation is now designated as the Hamilton Avenue Church.

November 14 a co-operative dinner for all Flint Aaronic priesthood and their wives was held at the Baltimore Boulevard Church. It was an informal occasion, and the evening was spent in relating church experiences. The priesthood gathered for an annual dinner March 9 where Elder A. H. DuRose was guest speaker. Wives of the priesthood members were guests.

The department of women, headed by Lillian Swift, conducted a visiting campaign in which every member on the records was contacted. Mrs. William Joplin is in charge of this campaign. The women are also assisting in the building fund drive.

Instead of exchanging gifts at the December general meeting the women brought gifts for the nurseries of both churches.

The women's annual candlelight service was held January 7 with Mrs. Joseph Wellman of Port Huron as the guest speaker. Vocal music was supplied by Mrs. Richard Derenzy and Mrs. Paul Bacon. They were assisted by Rosetta Lanigan, organist, and Mr. Eugene Everhart, violinist.

The ordination of Eri Irwin to the office of elder took place Wednesday evening, November 8. The entire active Melchisedec membership of Flint were present to welcome him.

The young men from the branches now in service are Donald A. Roberts, Clinton Skinner, Jack Little, Jack Barker, Howard Wecker, Kent Bennetts, and Al Sutton.

Scout leaders were in charge of the Hamilton Avenue service on Boy Scout Sunday at the worship service. Elder Warren Chelline of Port Huron delivered the morning sermon.

President F. H. Edwards was the speaker at a city-wide service February 14.—The city choir sang "My God and I."

Elder Blair McClain of Detroit spoke at Hamilton Avenue church February 18. That evening the Flint choir gave a concert at the Lake Orion church. Elder Arthur H. DuRose presented a brief talk on the history of church music. The Lake Orion ladies served supper to the choir members and their families.

Elder Franklyn Weddle was guest speaker February 20. His topic was "Music in the Worship Service." Following the service, friends gathered in the lower auditorium to visit with Brother Weddle, former associate pastor of the Hamilton congregation. Members of the choir presided at the tea table.

A series of illustrated talks on "The Life of Christ" has been presented by the pastor, Elder R. Melvin Russell and Elder W. R. Kapnick.—Reported by ELEANOR RUSSELL.

MIAMI, OKLAHOMA.—High Priest Roy Weldon of Warrensburg, Missouri, presented illustrated lectures February 11, 12, and 13. The lectures and slides were of Central and South America and the Book of Mormon, and were well attended by nonmembers.

During the month of January, the district president, Elder Stephen Black, and former district president, Evangelist William A. Patterson, were guest speakers. Brother Patterson was en route to his field.

Three members of the congregation, Mrs. Melvin Shipley, Mrs. E. G. Gilbert, and Mrs. D. L. Kyser, attended the Book of Mormon institute at Independence in January.

Eight new members have been baptized. On January 7 Floyd Snider, Clell Craft, Alden Craft, and Larry Paul Kemper were baptized by the pastor, Elder B. F. Kyser. On January 28 a family circle was completed with the baptism of Mrs. Hubert Thornburg and Bobby Eugene, Beulah Faye, and Bill Wayne Thornburg. Following the confirmation service, the younger children of Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Thornburg were blessed. They are Cheryl Paulette, Carolyn Ann, and Gerald Lynn. Stephen Ellwood, son of Paul Thornburg of Yates Center, Kansas, was also blessed at this time.

Terry Middleton, son of Mrs. Joe Jones of Fairland, Oklahoma, was baptized February 9. Myra, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orville Lightfoot, and Jeffrey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Parkhurst of Vinita, Oklahoma, were baptized by Elder Earl Phillips of Joplin, Missouri, on February 18.

The study course, "Essentials of Teaching," taught by Mrs. Melvin Shipley, has been completed and five members received units for credit. Mrs. John Mount received her first certificate of progress from the Department of Religious Education.

The Zion's League presented the pageant, "The Light Burns On," by Eveline Burgess, November 26. It was directed by Mrs. E. G. Gilbert.

Miss Aleta Runkle of the General Church Music Department was presented as guest speaker on November 19 by the Primo de Chiesa Club. Her topic was "Congregational singing."

The Three Standard Books have been placed in the public library. The branch has made plans to establish a library of wire recordings.

John Mount has been selected as the new Zion's League leader to succeed Mrs. Carl Angel who has moved to Greenville, South Carolina, to join her husband who is in the service.

Mrs. Mae Dion has moved from Commerce, Oklahoma, to North Miami, Oklahoma, following her husband's death.—Reported by MRS. BETTY L. KYSER.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.—Kaw Valley District Missionary Alan Tyree spent two weeks in late November and early December conducting cottage meetings and contacting the Saints. These meetings were held in five different homes in various parts of the city for several weeks, with special effort to interest nonmembers. At the close of the meetings, two adults were baptized.

Herald House INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Brother Arnold Ellsworth of Independence was guest speaker December 17, and assisted Pastor Andes in the blessing of the baby of Sister Colleen Anderson.

On December 16 the District Zion's Leagues met at the church for a dinner and program. Sister Nell Ellithorpe, local League leader, was director of the activities. Brother Lyman Edwards of Lawrence was in charge of the meeting. Brother Edwards is president of the Kaw Valley Zion's League. Brother Eddie Jones was master of ceremonies, and Bishop Howard Miller was the speaker of the evening. Brother James C. Daugherty, president of the district, was present, and Lawrence, Leavenworth, Bonner Springs, and Emporia were represented. About seventy-five attended.

The first anniversary for the new church was celebrated December 17 in the church basement at a social. The Zion's League furnished entertainment.

On December 24, Brother Clifford Christenson, assisted by Brother Andes, blessed the infant daughter of Robert and Barbara Glenn of Wichita. Sister Glenn lived in Topeka before her marriage.

Pastor Ammon Andes spoke at the morning service December 31 in regard to the accomplishments of the first year in the new church and the responsibility of the coming year.

The district officers' meeting was held at Lawrence, January 7. Those in attendance from Topeka were Pastor Ammon Andes, Historian Mildred Goodfellow, Women's Leader Calla Kelley, and Elders Christenson and Jones.

An ordination service in charge of District President James C. Daugherty, assisted by Elders Ammon Andes and Alan Tyree, was conducted at the Topeka church January 7. Those ordained and their respective offices are: Eddie R. Jones, elder; Merle Harmon, priest; Harry M. Pitchford, deacon, and Clifford E. Alfrey, deacon.

Lela Hendricks, women's group president, Helen Hays, and Calla Kelley attended the Kansas City Stake council meeting at Central Church in Kansas City, January 8. Women from Topeka, Leavenworth, and Lawrence were guests at this meeting. The Kansas City Stake women under the leadership of Sister Minnie Peterson wished the new Kaw Valley District much success.

The women's department has started a morning study group that meets twice a month at the home of Florence Erickson.

The music department is under the leadership of Brother Eddie Jones.

A baptismal service was held at the church January 21, at which Collier F. Hendricks was baptized by Elder Arnold Ellsworth of Independence, Missouri. Also several candidates from Lawrence were baptized at this service by Brother Norris, pastor of the Lawrence Branch.

January 28, Brother Eddie R. Jones, assisted by Brother Burrell Landes, confirmed Brother Hendricks as a member of the church. At this service Mrs. Helen Davis was baptized by District Missionary Alan Tyree.

The Communion service February 4 was also observed as Decision Day for the filing of financial statements. At the beginning of this service Helen Davis was confirmed by the pastor who was assisted in this ordinance by Elder Clifford Christenson. The two new members were served the Communion first.

On February 4 two new families who recently moved to the city were welcomed.

The church is at the corner of Huntoon and Medford Streets.—Reported by CALLA KELLEY.

SASKATOON, SASKATCHEWAN.—January 8 Mrs. Iva Steeves, accompanist for the branch and district for over forty years, was honored. Following a musical program, Mrs. Steeves was presented with three beautiful pieces of silver deposit on crystal. Her husband, George Steeves, was presented a leather billfold with his name stamped in gold. Lunch was served by members of the choir. Mrs. Steeves was born in Lamoni and has served the branch and district devotedly in Saskatoon as long as she and her family have been in the area.

Junior church is being conducted in the lower auditorium of the church under the leadership of Mrs. Erma Ward and Sister Amy Powell. Flannelgraphs, stories, colored movies, illustrated nature talks, and prayer services have created a great deal of interest among the juniors.

Prior to the Christmas season Resident Pastor W. J. Cornish and Elder Victor Anderson visited Walkie, North Battleford, Shellbrook, Mayview, Deliste, and Saskatoon. Elder Cornish reports 127 calls, thirty sermons, three Communion services conducted, and four babies blessed.

Carolyn and Darlene Thomson of Beggar, Saskatchewan, were baptized November 24 in the font of the Saskatoon church by District President Howard Fisher.—Reported by MRS. C. E. DEGGLE.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN.—The following babies were blessed December 24, 1950: Evelyn Lucy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Burde; Suzanne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Conlee; Marjorie Lou, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Greene; Melissa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Moore; Deborah, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Curtis; Sherry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Keith Gersten; Mona, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Piacenza.—Reported by LEONA HANDS.

CENTRAL TEXAS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—The Central Texas District Conference and Institute was held at Marlin, Texas, with 165 members present from Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth, Waco, Hearne, Bryan, San Antonio, New Baden, and Omaha, Nebraska.

The Marlin Branch had approximately one hundred members in attendance. Brother J. R. Allen, pastor, was unable to attend on account of severe illness and is confined to the Torbit Hospital in Marlin. At the business meeting, Brother Fred Banta was recommended and approved for the office of priest. Brothers A. J. Banta and A. H. Yale were elected as delegates of the Central Texas District on the reunion committee. Our visiting church appointees were Apostle and Mrs. P. E. Farrow, Dr. and Mrs. F. M. McDowell, Elder and Mrs. John Wight and daughter, and Elder and Mrs. A. H. Yale and daughters. Forty priesthood members were in attendance at the Sunday morning services, taught by Apostle Farrow and Dr. McDowell. At the close of the Sunday morning prayer service, a telegram from Brother Arthur Rock, former pastor of the Marlin Branch, was read by Apostle Farrow.

Elder A. H. Yale spent the period from January 8 to 21 in Waco, visiting and contacting the Saints there. He conducted a series of cottage meetings in the homes of Brother and Sister Clyde Toon, Brother and Sister M. B. Reneau, Brother and Sister John Bryant, and Mr. and Mrs. Rezzado. The meetings were centered around a colored slide presentation of the "Life and Purpose of Christ's Ministry." The initial meeting had eighteen persons present and the attendance increased to twenty-six.

An organization meeting was held on January 21. Priest Arthur B. Allen was appointed counselor to the branch president, Jim Allen of Marlin was sustained as leader, and he appointed Brother C. E. Swanner teacher and Brother Clyde A. Toon as his counselor. Brother Yale presided over the organization meeting. Sister Faye Toon was elected as secretary and Brother Clyde Toon was elected treasurer. Brother John Bryant was elected as director of education.

The mission will meet in the home of Brother and Sister John S. Bryant, 606 North Fifth, Waco, Texas. The mission has over five hundred dollars in the building fund.

Elder and Mrs. A. H. Yale and daughters, Brother C. W. Tischer, Central Texas District president, formerly of the Southwest Texas District, Brother A. J. Banta, and Brother Hal Davenport of the Central Texas District attended the Southwest Texas District conference held in San Antonio.—Reported by NELLA JUNE DOTSON.

White Witch Doctor

by Louise A. Stinetorf

White Witch Doctor is a novel based on fact—on life as it was actually lived in the Belgian Congo a short time ago. It is completely fresh and different—by turns amusing, hair-raising, and warmly moving. It is the story of a group of people who seemed to be separated from one another by widely varying concepts of sin and virtue, ugliness and beauty, and yet were tied to each other, and to all people everywhere, by the supreme bond of humanity.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

My Girls and Their Parents

By Emma M. Phillips

A YOUNG WOMAN STOOD before a room full of junior-age boys and girls. "Each one of you," she said, "is an advertisement of the home from which you come. Because all of you speak English you advertise that you come from homes where English is spoken. I don't expect any of you to speak the Chinese language, and if you did I would not be able to understand you, for I also advertise a home where English is spoken. If you swear when you talk, you advertise the fact that your parents have taught you to swear. If you come to church school regularly, you advertise the fact that your parents believe in going to church. You advertise your home. You would have a hard time trying to keep from advertising your home."

Since hearing the remarks of this teacher I have thought about some of the girls I have associated with during the years I have been helping with "girls' work" in six different branches of the church. Truly, children do advertise their homes, and in a more detailed way than the teacher could express to her gathering of juniors. Children do not acquire personality growth as naturally as they acquire physical growth. Personality is built day after day by the tools of environment. And because more time is spent in the home than any other place, the environment of home life plays the most prominent part in building personalities.

IN THE FIRST GROUP of Blue Bird girls I had there was a quiet, blonde, attractive girl known as "Baby." She had another name but I do not recall what it was. Her parents called her "Baby" and treated her as such. The other girls her same age called her "Baby" and grew to think of her as being a few years younger than themselves. This nickname which the parents had thoughtlessly given to her had its cruel effects upon the child.

In the same group was a rather plump girl who wanted to know how to play the piano without taking the time to practice. Her mother tried to avoid nagging and scolding the child. In an even-toned voice she kept before her daughter the fact that one cannot have perfection without practice. At a Girls' Award Service Betty played "The Glow Worm" with a perfection that astonished the audience. Now Betty is Zion's League age and is the pianist in a small branch. Nothing spectacular, but she is being of service.

AND I RECALL an incident that took place in the backyard of the house where Helen and Marie lived. I had gone to visit their mother, but before I had reached the front door, a friendly voice had called, "We are out here in the backyard. Come join us." In the backyard I found the mother and several of the children of the neighborhood squatted around an ant hill. "They're moving," announced Marie, taking her eyes from the ant hill just long enough to greet me. The mother left the group and directed me toward a lawn chair. "I left my housework for a brief worship service. Watching a display of nature can be the next thing to worship." I realized, then, why small Helen was able to affirm, "It's caterpillars, and not worms, that become butterflies."

I always want to laugh when I think about the remark seven-year-old Ilene made after hearing a story told at Skylark band meeting. Our story was about an African girl who rebelled at worshipping the stone gods of her grandfather because she wanted to worship the true God. At the close of the meeting Ilene came to me and said, "That grandfather sure was silly to think a stone could help him get well. Why, there's a big stone in front of our house. I would never be stupid enough to think it was a god. I know about the true God in heaven." It was not a boast; it was merely a conviction of a truth that was prevalent in her home.

NOT LONG AGO while telling stories to a group of girls, I met Ruth, one of the most bumptious children I have ever known. She introduced herself as "Ruth so-and-so, the daughter of so-and-so who is the head of so-and-so business." I pity that child for eventually she will learn that she must make friends through her own personality and not through the glorified business adventures of her father. And eventually she will learn that her father is more interested in teaching her an ancestor-worship form of religion than in teaching Christian brotherhood. When I think about Ruth, I wonder what type of an individual she will be when she reaches adulthood. Hers will be a difficult life.

Mary wanted to take comic books to Skylark meeting, and there was a very good reason why she wanted to. Mary stopped at her home after school before going to band meeting. Comic books and detective story magazines were always piled on the dining room table. Other books? There were few besides the Three Standard Books on the shelf. Because Mary had never seen her parents reading the Three Standard Books she never even thought that there might be printing in them. The comic books were always within easy reach. I have absolutely nothing against a "good" comic book, but it is well to remember that a diet of easily digested reading is about as helpful to the mental development as a diet of easily digested soup is sufficient for the physical development.

SILVIA RARELY SMILED and seldom mingled in the merriment of the other girls. They considered her a "snob" and a "poor sport." She would do the work required in her Skylark record book, but she would not venture to ask for any explanations of the work. Unable to help the child find an interest in life, I visited her home. There I discovered a loving grandmother who felt sorry for "poor, dear Silvia with that big, ugly brace on her front teeth." At our next meeting our worship service was built around two famous movie stars, one with an over-sized mouth, the other with an over-sized nose. Gradually after that Silvia learned to laugh at her "big, ugly brace" and to refer to it as the pen around her teeth. She was no longer a snob.

A woman had unwisely made what she considered a witty remark to the two-year-old brother of Sadi. To Sadi's childish way of thinking the remark was insulting. Sadi came to Skylark meeting in the torments of a rage over the remark. Any explanations that I tried to make fell on stony ground. When Sadi discovered that she was creating an audience for herself among the other girls her rage increased to the arm-swinging stage. Edna came forward and stood before Sadi defyingly as she said, "My dad says that when a person does one bad thing we should think of two good things he has done. What two good things has Mrs. Insley done for us?" Sadi and the other girls entered into the game of saying good things about the woman. Undoubtedly Sadi gained from the experience. I know I gained from it. The influence that was brought to meeting because of the wise counsel of one father had its effects upon the personalities of all those at the meeting.

Beatrice, a ten-year-old girl, brought me daily reports on the first romance she ever witnessed. A teen-age boy and girl in the older grades of the school she attended were apparently ardently in love. Day by day the reports were brought to me, and day by day the romance developed in a manner that it should not decently develop. Soon Beatrice was asking me questions that I felt I should not attempt to answer without her parents' permission. I phoned her mother and a settlement was reached. As soon as the girl left my home I called her mother and told her the daily circumstances. Each evening the mother casually worked the solution to her daughter's questions into the conversation of the home. Before long Beatrice was telling me how "silly" the teen-age boy and girl were behaving, and how her own romance and marriage would be far above such a level for she wanted a Zion home.

I LIKE TO THINK that when God created the different instincts for the various ages of human development he considered how home life would influence the personalities of primary and junior age girls. No matter how good home life might be, girls of these ages need outside influence to complete their development and to prepare them to meet the challenging problems of this world. To cope with this situation God undoubtedly created the "club instinct" in growing girls. The church recognizes this "club instinct" by establishing the Skylark organization. The church wants to influence the lives of primary and junior-age girls. Adults, both men and women, have given hours of time in assisting with this work. It is not all pleasant work, and it certainly is not easy work.

I can't say that I have "enjoyed every minute of it," but I can honestly say that I have enjoyed my association with each girl, and over fifteen years of working with girls includes many girls.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Koh'man

The month of March makes us restless and dissatisfied with things as they are; we look for ways to change ourselves, our meals, our home decorations. March magazines cater to our wishes with various articles and suggestions that will freshen up our lives.

"Do You Know Your Groceries?" Woman's Home Companion, is based on research aimed to help you get the most for your money when you do your food buying, in quality and quantity of food and in service.

"Keep the Cooky Jar Filled," Woman's Home Companion, is the very thing your family would recommend you read and then put to the test, for it is a collection of cooky recipes.

"Hair-Dos as You Like Them," Woman's Home Companion, pictures new hair styles for different types of hair and different ages.

"Our Underfed Children," Ladies' Home Journal, is an article that will shock you into examining more closely your own family diet habits.

"The World Through Three Senses," Ladies' Home Journal, is a beautiful article by the remarkable Helen Keller, who shames most of us for our lack of observation.

"Grow Slim," McCall's, contains ten days' menus for those who feel that their winter overeating is beginning to show!

If you often forget that our boys are fighting a war, refresh your memory with "The Most Wounded, the Most Sick, the Most Tired," by an Air Force nurse in McCall's.

"The Case for Privacy," Good Housekeeping, brings out some needs that are all too often overlooked today.

Women who do the family sewing will be interested in "How to Make a Spring Suit," Good Housekeeping, for in it the author answers sixteen questions about this type of sewing.

"I'll be Home for Lunch," Good Housekeeping, gives thirty-one new menu ideas for those whose family appears for lunch.

"Talk About Good Eggs," American Home, does just that, quite thoroughly, and includes recipes. More egg lore and recipes are given in "She Opened an Egg and Discovered Gold."

For delightful chuckles over human nature, read "The Customers Always Write," American Magazine, whose author formerly was in charge of correspondence for Sears, Roebuck and Company.

"Why Your Hurry?" Parents' Magazine, tells how one mother found a way to achieve peace of mind and time to enjoy her children.

"When a Child is Different," Parents' Magazine, tells how one family met the heart-breaking problem of a retarded child.

"Strength for These Days," Reader's Digest, is an article of inspiration, based on the value of personal integrity.

"My Banking Daze," Reader's Digest, is a little piece that will give you a big laugh.

"How to Give Your Child Security," Reader's Digest, discusses the part the overindulgent parent plays in creating insecure children.

"Spiritual Guidance Starts Early," National Parent-Teacher, suggests means of providing children with the safeguard of a steadfast inner life.

ing for the Lord." He visits the sick and discouraged. He looks up those who have quit coming to church. He encourages them. A well-to-do friend makes available to him a fund of $100 a month to give to the poor, and he uses it wisely. He is a happy example of how wonderful old age can be for one who loves God and keeps working.

Let us remember the Psalm. "Trust in the Lord . . . Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." L. J. L.

Never Alone

By Betty Sanford Tripp

SITTING BESIDE BRUCE ANDERSON in the battered old Ford that he always drove on their dates, Carolyn felt this was truly the crucial moment to tell him what she felt that she must tell him before any more time elapsed. It was going to be one of the hardest things she had ever done, because Bruce was so much fun and never seemed to take anything or anyone seriously. He could always think of new and exciting things to do, and laughed and talked a lot about the things which interested her the most.

At school Carolyn had always thought of herself as a rather dull and uninteresting person—perhaps because her whole life had centered in and about the church and its activities. She had such little contact with the “outside” world that she knew little about the girls and boys who were her classmates at school. By the time she attended church on Sunday nights, League on Tuesdays, and fellowship service on Wednesday nights, it didn’t leave much free time, particularly on the weeks when there were box suppers and ice cream socials and choir practice. Of course, she had always considered herself fortunate to be a part of an organization that kept its young people happy and occupied; but when she considered herself in the light of her school friends, she felt backward because she knew so little about their activities.

Sometimes it was terribly hard not to mind when all the girls were talking about their formals for the dance and whispering about the places they had been the night before with their dates. There had been so many, many nights when she had lain awake in her upstairs room and wondered why she wasn’t popular and at ease with her school friends. They all talked to her about their lessons and shared jokes with her, but none of them ever invited her to attend their parties or double-date with them—not that she was sure her parents would have allowed it if they had.

SHE HADN’T MINDED these things so much when she was in grade school and junior high, because there had been girl friends in the League and fellows near her own age to date, but now most of the Leaguers were at Graceland or too young to go with. Being a senior was like standing on the threshold of a bright, new exciting life of which she knew nothing and could not share with her church friends who were freshmen and sophomores.

For several months this feeling of unrest and unhappiness which had come as a result of her change in age status had bothered her more than she cared to admit. Before, she had felt a part of the League activities and a part of the church, but now she felt out of place and so all alone somehow. She just didn’t seem to fit anywhere. The young married class at church was too old for her; the League class too young. And as far as her social life at school was concerned, she was a misfit there too.

But one good thing had resulted from all this unhappiness and insecurity. She had found a new friend. One night she left League meeting early and was walking home. She had been so miserable and confused because she couldn’t seem to enjoy the things which had always been so much a part of her that she found herself crying tears of self-pity. As she walked along the words of a familiar hymn come to her as if by inspiration:

How many times discouraged,
We sink beside the way,
About us all is darkness,
We hardly dare to pray.

Then through the mists and shadows,
The sweetest voice e’er known
Says, “Child, am I not with thee,
Never to leave thee alone?”

With these beautiful words there had come a swift rush of warmth over her such as she had never known before. And that night, for the first time in her life, Carolyn had knelt beside her bed and prayed a vocal prayer to God, that he would not leave her alone, that she might find her rightful place in life and among her friends.

AND THEN TWO MONTHS AGO, Bruce Anderson, left tackle on the football team, invited her to the Senior Prom. Because Carolyn had dreamed of being asked for so long, and because of her longing to be treated as one of the “crowd,” she had eventually overridden her parents’ objections and gone with Bruce.

It was a night she would remember for a long, long time. It had been a night of gay laughter and fun for the young people at the dance, but to Carolyn it had been like a terrible dream. She had felt that her dress was too childish and her hair too straight; her smile was strained when she kept stepping on Bruce’s feet as they danced. She wished over and over that she hadn’t gone, that she’d stayed at home; except that if she hadn’t come she’d never have known what it was like. How many times dreams glorify the reality of things.

But later, when they’d stopped off at a little restaurant for hamburgers, she had forgotten how miserable and ill at ease she’d been as Bruce kept smiling at her. He had a way of making her forget her shyness, and he put her at ease with his quick sense of humor. He had never invited her to another dance and Carolyn was glad that she'd been spared the necessity of refusing him; but their dates had continued after the first one, and she became very fond of Bruce. She deliberately evaded his questioning looks when she refused to accompany him to various parties or school activities. He never insisted that she go and always substituted another date in its place, but somehow Carolyn knew she owed him an explanation. The problem was how could she tell him that she didn't believe in dancing and card playing because of the church? If he discovered that she was a member of what the other kids called the "Mormon Church," would he still want to go with her?

But more and more, Sunday nights and Tuesday nights and Wednesdays were presenting a problem. Carolyn was constantly torn between her desire to go to church and to be with Bruce. She had always been a devout churchgoer and her conscience refused to give her peace when she missed the service. But to tell Bruce that she couldn't date him because she had to go to church was something she kept pushing to the back of her mind and refusing to acknowledge must be done.

LAST SUNDAY NIGHT, when she had been waiting for Bruce to come for her, she had encountered her father in the living room and found herself blushing and stumbling when she tried to explain to him about Bruce. Her father had listened quietly and offered only one comment when she had finished. "They miss you at church, Carolyn. You're a good leader of young people, and they look up to you and respect you. Do you respect yourself?"

It was true what her father had said. She was a leader when she was in her own environment. Among the people who knew her and loved her she was cheerful and talkative. She had been League president, sung solos, and been in church plays many times. Among these people she had found self-confidence and assurance, but taken from this environment she had no personality at all. Among Bruce's friends she felt unsure of herself. Only with Bruce himself did she feel comfortable and at ease.

Many times she had watched him as he talked with others and thought what a wonderful preacher he would make. The church had need of young men with his ability and drive. But to explain to Bruce that she was basically a person into whom religion had been given firm roots, that she wanted to live close to the ideals which the church and her parents had instilled into her life, was almost more than she could attempt to do by herself.

AND SO THAT SUNDAY NIGHT as she had slipped into bed she thought again of the words of the song:

Reach out thy hands and find him,
And lo, the clouds have flown.
He smiles on thee, who promised
Never to leave thee alone.

And led by a sudden impulse which she could not define, Carolyn had slipped from the bed onto her knees and once again had taken her bewilderment and indecision to Christ for help. As she prayed she felt the burden of her sins of commission giving way to the guilt of omission. She realized for perhaps the first time it wasn't the things she was doing that were hurting her parents, herself, and the church but the things she was leaving undone—the things she was refusing to face and the work which she might have accomplished had she the courage to be true to herself. And as the words of the song filled her mind again, for a moment she could imagine that she heard voices there in her own room singing:

No, never alone, no, never alone.
He promised never to leave you,
Never to leave you alone.

The sudden rush of warmth that had been with her before was magnified at that moment, and she sank her head into her hands and asked the Lord's forgiveness. As she arose from her knees, a new determination came within her heart to tell Bruce on their very next date that she loved the sound of the organ on Sunday mornings, and that she sang soprano in the church choir, and that she believed God speaks to people today and heals and enlightens them. She knew that she would not be alone, for the promises of God are sure and he would be there beside her.

NOW THE TIME HAD COME. As she looked at the handsome face of the boy beside her, Carolyn lifted her eyes for a moment to the sky and then, praying that her voice would not falter, she began.

"Bruce, there's something I'd like to talk to you about. I've not been very fair with you from the very beginning."

"Fair with me, Carolyn? What is it?"

"Bruce, I'm not what you think I am at all."

"But how do you know what I think you are, Carolyn?"

"Why I . . ."

"Want me to tell you? I think you're sweet and good. I think you're the nicest thing that ever happened to me. I've never known anyone who was so honest and so clean." He reached over and took one of her cold hands in his. "Carolyn, are you ashamed of me?"

"Ashamed of you?" she gasped, not quite sure she had heard him right.

"Why, Bruce, of course not. Why should I be?"

"You've never once invited me to meet your friends or your family for more than a 'Hello' at the door."

"But it wasn't because of that, it was because I . . . I was afraid. You see, Bruce, I told you that you don't know me at all. You think I'm honest, but I'm not. I'm a coward."

"Carolyn, I don't understand."

"I haven't wanted you to know my friends because I was afraid you wouldn't understand them or like them—that you might even laugh at them. You see, my friends are all Latter Day Saints, and I am too."

"Well so what? I know that."

"You . . . you do?"

"Of course, Carolyn, why do you think I started dating you in the first place? Because of your friends, because of your church, because I've never known such a fine bunch of kids as those you ran around with. They're so clean and seem to have such good times together. They have imagination and initiative. I like that kind of people—people who can think of new things to do and can enjoy themselves without drinking and gambling. My mother says that if your parents are anything like you, your church must really be giving them something that ours isn't giving us. That's why I thought you were ashamed of me, thought you didn't want me to meet your friends. You've never once invited me to one of those League parties or a pot-luck supper."

Carolyn was glad of the darkness that hid the tears on her face. Had she been strong enough and brave enough to witness for her church as she should have, she might have saved her parents from worry, and herself from the doubts and fears which assailed her. And most of all, how much happiness she might have brought to Bruce.

He moved closer to her on the seat and put his arms about her. She had never heard the tone of voice he used as he spoke then. "Carolyn, I want to meet your friends. I want to visit your church. I want to discover what is in it that makes you what you are. When I find it, I want it in my own life, and I want to be able to give it to others as you do."

Carolyn could almost hear the voices again as the music seemed to pound in her ears. Smiling to herself, and thanking the One she knew to be responsible for this, she lay her cheek against Bruce's and grasping his hand firmly in her own whispered, "Come with me, Bruce, to my church, and I'll help you find it. It's a very simple thing, really. It's the love of God."

Attention All Herald House Magazine Subscribers

This notice is of importance to subscribers of all Herald House magazines ("Saints' Herald," "Zion's Hope," "Stepping Stones," "Daily Bread," "Guidelines," and gospel quarterlies) who live in cities where the post office zoning system is in effect.

Until recently, the post office department has been lenient in its interpretation of the regulations requiring a post office zone number as a part of local addresses in most large cities. Effective immediately, however, we have been advised that no magazine mail to cities with the zone system will be accepted unless the zone number appears in the address. In the past, many of our subscribers in these cities have been lax in furnishing the zone number when ordering or renewing subscriptions to these magazines. In the future, it will be necessary for Herald House to require that the zone number be furnished by the subscriber. If this is not done, the subscription will necessarily be delayed while we ascertain either from the subscriber or his local postmaster the zone number in question. This delay can be prevented if all subscribers in all cities using the zone system will make sure that the necessary zone information is furnished when subscription orders are placed with local book stewards or directly with Herald House.

Van Fleet-Dowker

Carol Winifred Dowker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Dowker, Jr., of Independence, Missouri, and Ronald Nelson Van Fleet, son of Nelson and the late Maude Van Fleet of Upland, California, were married February 25 at the Redeemer Lutheran Church in Ontario, California. Elder Herald Wixom performed the double-ring ceremony.

LALONDE.—John E., was born January 11, 1871, at Oconto, Wisconsin, and died January 17, 1951, at Colorado Springs, Colorado. He was married on January 23, 1895, to Effie Ethel Grandfield; five children were born to them. Mrs. Lalonde and four of the children preceded him in death. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church for fifty-two years, forty-nine of which he served as an elder.

He is survived by his daughter, Helen Matthews; two grandsons, one brother, and two sisters. Funeral services were conducted by Elder J. D. Curtis. Burial was in Evergreen Cemetery, Colorado Springs, Colorado.

WILSON.—Lucious William, son of Robert L. and Nancy A. Wilson, was born November 29, 1881, near Chariton, Iowa, and died January 18, 1951, at his home in Woodburn, Iowa. On June 4, 1913, he was married to Zella Mae Smith; one child was born to them. His wife, Zella, preceded him in death on October 18, 1916, and on February 5, 1923, he was married to Cora F. Baldwin, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 7, 1919.

Besides his wife Cora, he leaves his daughter Mrs. H. H. Hiltbrand and family of Monmouth, Oregon; four brothers and four sisters.

BRYANT.—Lester L., was born December 3, 1897, and died January 18, 1951, at his home in Bremerton, Washington, following an extended illness. On April 25, 1927, he was married to Ethel Gertrude Ward; one son was born to them. On January 13, 1935, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church, and on November 4, 1945, was ordained to the office of deacon. He was a veteran of World War I.

He is survived by his wife Ethel, and his son William C. Bryant of the United States Navy. Funeral services were conducted at the Lewis Chapel in Bremerton, Evangelist A. W. Lundeen officiating. Interment was in Ivy Green Cemetery.

ELLIS.—Mary Caroline Gleason, was born December 25, 1861, at Augusta, Michigan, and died December 31, 1950, at the home of her daughter in Mishawaka, Indiana, following four months of illness. On October 3, 1885, she was married to Claude Ira Ellis at Saugatuck, Michigan; two children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 14, 1921.

She is survived by her daughter, Mrs. C. F. Hoxie; a brother, Obadiah Gleason of Holland, Michigan; and a granddaughter. A son died in infancy. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Mishawaka, Elders F. E. Myers and John Drader officiating.

STERRETT.—Emma Haden, daughter of Joshua and Jeannette Armstrong, was born March 6, 1878, at South Bend, Nebraska, and died January 23, 1951, at the Independence Sanitarium. She was married on December 25, 1900, to Oscar E. Haden by her father, Elder Armstrong. Four children were born to them. Mr. Haden died on May 7, 1917, and on November 18, 1920, she was married to William G. Sterrett, who preceded her in death on July 9, 1935. She had been a public schoolteacher for a number of years, and had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 6, 1888. While living in St. Joseph, Missouri, she was supervisor of the primary department in church school, and upon moving to Independence was active in teaching at Stone Church. She also served as women's leader of Group 8 for several years and, until failing health caused her to stop, was a faithful worker at the Campus Shop.

Surviving are two sons: Harold G. and LeRoy E. Haden, both of Independence; a sister, Mrs. Jessie Doudna of Lee's Summit, Missouri; a brother, Elmer Armstrong of Stewartville, Missouri; three grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Services were conducted by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Arthur E. Stoff at the Speaks Funeral Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WADE.—Celestia, was born October 20, 1876, and died January 26, 1951, at Port Huron, Michigan. In 1896 she was married to Daniel P. Wade; thirteen children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for thirty years. Mr. Wade preceded her in death ten years ago.

Surviving are six sons: John and Emery of Independence, Missouri; George and Emery of Port Huron, Michigan; Roy of Grand Rapids, Michigan; and Charles of Lansing, Michigan; three daughters: Mrs. Margaret Breckon of Port Huron; Mrs. Stella Kelly and Mrs. Beatrice Baker of Detroit, Michigan; and twenty-nine grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Reorganized Church by Elders Jack Ledsworth and Warren Chelline. Burial was in the Harbor Beach, Michigan, cemetery.

WILLEY.—James A., son of Charles E. and Ellen Jane Willey, was born November 7, 1889, near New London, Iowa, and died January 15, 1951, at his farm home near Van Wert, Iowa. He grew to manhood in Lamoni, Iowa, and was graduated from high school there in 1910. On February 28, 1911, he became an employee of the railway mail service and continued on that job until February 28, 1945. June 28, 1914, he was married to Helen Anderson, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since May 26, 1910, and served his country as a member of the military forces during World War I. He also belonged to the Masonic Lodge.

Besides his wife he leaves a sister, Halcyon Jackson of Leon, Iowa. Funeral services were held in the Marsh Chapel in Lamoni. Burial was in Rose Hill Cemetery.

GILLESPIE.—Henry Early, son of Benjamin R. and Lucy Gillespie, was born August 14, 1875, at Wellington, Missouri, and died February 26, 1951, in Independence, Missouri. On March 16, 1904, he was married to Hattie E. Griffith who preceded him in death on June 18, 1943. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1944.

Surviving are two sons: Glen H. and Carl E., and a daughter, Ernestine, all of Independence; three sisters: Ida and Hattie Gillespie of Napoleon, Missouri, and Mrs. Herbert MacDonald of Bates City, Missouri; a brother, Marion A. Gillespie of Grainfield, Kansas; and four grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Walnut Park Church in Independence, Elder Marion Talcott officiating. Burial was in the Oak Grove cemetery.

RASMUSSEN.—Joseph Richard Leslie, was born December 12, 1903, in Underwood, Minnesota, and died February 19, 1951, in Kelso, Washington. In March, 1922, he was married to Pearl Massor. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since July, 1917.

He is survived by his wife, Pearl, of Kelso; four daughters: Mrs. Audrey Smallwood of Kelso; Mrs. Lois Stange and Mrs. Lila Christiansen of Longview, Washington; and Katherine of the home; two sons: George of Longview and Dale of the home; his stepmother, Mrs. Winnie Rasmussen of Portland, Oregon; eight sisters: Mrs. Mary Jorgensen, Mrs. Minnie Bently, and Mrs. Vivian Howard of North Dakota; Mrs. Hilda Hammel, Mrs. Anna Dardis, and Mrs. Andrea Tracy of Salem, Oregon; Mrs. Mabel Hammel and Mrs. Emma McDermott of Richland, Washington; three brothers: Peter of North Dakota, Arthur of Salem, and Roy of Kelso; and five grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Kelso Methodist Church, High Priest J. L. Verhei and Bishop M. E. Lasater officiating. Interment was in Longview Memorial Park.

MAITLAND.—Gomer Evan, son of the late William T. and Carrie E. Briggs Maitland, was born August 26, 1899, in Bevier, Missouri, and died February 24, 1951, at the Veteran's Administration Hospital in Danville, Illinois, where he had been under treatment for a brain tumor. He moved with his parents to Des Moines, Iowa, in 1900 and was educated there. On February 1, 1930, he was married to Viola Phillips, and they established their home on a farm at Ava, Missouri; four children were born to them. He was a veteran of the First World War and a member of the Reorganized Church, having been baptized at the age of ten.

He is survived by his wife; three sons: Samuel A., Gomer E., and John A., and a daughter, Elmore, all of the home in Kansas City, Missouri; two brothers: J. W. Maitland of Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, and James G. of Independence, Missouri; and two sisters: Mrs. L. W. Koehler and Mrs. Juanita M. Wilkie, both of Independence. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel, Elders Harmon A. Higgins and Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

McKIBBEN.—Mary Ann Wood, was born February 9, 1880, in Marietta, Ohio, and died February 13, 1951, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. James Bayless, in Tulsa, Oklahoma. On August 28, 1900, she was married to Franklin Hodge McKibben, who preceded her in death in 1938. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1920.

Surviving are three sons: Rex of Winfield, Kansas; Harold of Sante Fe, New Mexico; and Ira of Santa Barbara, California; two daughters: Mrs. Doris Butler of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; and Mrs. Gladys Bayless of Tulsa; twelve grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Funeral services were held in Tulsa, Elders Victor Witte and O. A. McDowell officiating. Interment was in the Ponca City (Oklahoma) cemetery.

ARMSTRONG.—Frederick Harry, was born September 12, 1900, near Merlin, Ontario, and died December 5, 1950, at the Good Samaritan Hospital in West Palm Beach, Florida. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since early youth and had lived in Chicago, Illinois, for the past twenty-five years.

He is survived by his wife, Geraldine; a daughter, Margaret; two sons: Richard and Frank, all of the home; his stepmother, Mary M. Armstrong of Chatham, Ontario; and four sisters: Mrs. Enna Vince of Toronto, Ontario; Mrs. Mae Baker of Chatham; Mrs. Merle Boyd and Mrs. Margaret Bohonsky of Independence, Missouri. Funeral services were held in Chicago. Burial was in the All Saints Cemetery at Des Plaines.

McWHORTER.—Alfred, was born October 15, 1913, and died January 2, 1951. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since he was nine years old. He is survived by his mother, Addie M. McWhorter; a brother, Harold H. McWhorter; and a sister, Margaret M. Southward. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Albert Pierston at Manhattan Beach, California.

CLINEBELL.—Jacqueline Mae Moser, was born September 6, 1922, at Chicago, Illinois, and died February 15, 1951, at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa, following a brief illness. In 1932 she moved with her parents to Council Bluffs where she was graduated from high school. Later she attended the University of Nebraska, receiving her B.A. Degree in Liberal Arts. She was chosen for membership in the National Honor Society and Delta Phi Delta, and was offered a professorship on the university faculty. During World War II she enlisted in the Marines and became a staff sergeant. On August 4, 1950, she was married to Marvin L. Clinebell, who survives her. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 11, 1933.

Besides her husband she leaves her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest F. Moser; a sister, Mrs. C. Raymond Elyer; and her grandfather, Frederick Palmer, all of Council Bluffs. Funeral services were conducted at Woodring Chapel, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in Cedar Lawn Cemetery, Council Bluffs.

* THE LINGERING VISITOR

Editors often have a problem of lingering visitors who do not understand the pressure of work and responsibility the office imposes. Anguish of heart often comes to the editor as time passes and deadlines come painfully near. One editor recently drew attention to this Scripture:

"Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbor's house; lest he be weary of thee, and so hate thee."—Proverbs 25: 17.

Visitors are important. They often leave good thoughts and ideas. The best ones make good use of the time, and go as soon as they have finished their business or talk. Only a few have nothing to do and nothing to say—these few are simply killing time, and they sometimes hurt editors in the process.

* LAMONI REDIVIVUS

When it was developed in the 1880's, Lamoni gave promise of a bright future. Then automobiles and superhighways came, and it seemed that Lamoni, like some other small towns, would lose out to the larger cities. There was a while when people thought Lamoni was dead, and they were just waiting for the funeral. They didn't know Lamoni.

The revival began with the Lamoni creamery co-operative in its new building. The new church is helping progress along. Farmers are prospering, and visit Lamoni merchants in large numbers to do their buying. The elevator is co-operative, and there is a new lumber yard of the same type. The new Chevrolet building is very attractive. There is also a locker plant and a packing plant. Employment is a factor in the life of the city.

As we have said before, Lamoni is the only town in the world where our people are numerous enough to direct the life of the community in an important way. There we have a great opportunity. There are problems to be solved, of course, but compare that city with others of its size—consider its library, its fine citizenship, its steady improvement, its wholesome environment, and you will be glad. Once again Lamoni has a promise of a bright future.

* THE PALMYRA EDITION

Brother Arthur H. DuRose, 2716 South Saginaw Street, Flint 3, Michigan, writes concerning the article on the Palmyra edition of the Book of Mormon:

"I have a copy which I acquired from a lawyer by the name of W. V. Smith, who also used to be the city librarian. Some years before a woman called him that she had a bushel basket of books he could have, and it was among them. At one time it had the signature of Joseph Smith on the title page, but some autograph hunter had evidently cut it out leaving the bottom of the J. and the S. in evidence. On the fly leaf immediately in front of the title page is the following:

"This Book was given to my Father in Batavia, Genessee Co. N. Y. By Joseph Smith, Jr. in the fall of 1830 -

"Father being then Under Sheriff having charge of the Court House and Jail - Smith, My Father permitted to use the Court room for Preach his Mormon doctrine & to sell his Bibles. 'J. H. Townsend'"

Brother DuRose finds other writings in the back of the book, but it has become illegible from age.

BOILERS, STEAM GAUGES, air and electrical conduits, and carpenter work are all taken in stride by Auditorium Maintenance Supervisor Johnson. After taking a plumbing course at Dunwoody's in Minneapolis and another course in air conditioning, heating, and plumbing at the University of Minnesota, together with his practical experience, he smiles at some of the toughest jobs which the construction work around the building with the new copper dome presents.

For twenty-six years Charley had charge of the air brakes, heating, plumbing, and air conditioning for the Milwaukee Railroad passenger cars. In 1943 he was asked to come to Independence to take charge of maintenance at the Auditorium. He had served as pastor of the Minneapolis Branch for four and a half years and was president of the Minnesota District at the time of his coming here. He is now presiding elder of Group 17, Stone Church area.

Brother Johnson is a member of the Men's Club and in charge of its public address system; he is also a charter member of the Optimist Club of Independence. His hobby is building houses, and his special interest is "helping to build up the cause of Zion." Something of this determination must have been with him when he joined the church back in 1905, for it was ten below zero that December day, and those who prepared for the service had to cut through twenty inches of ice to get to the water.

In 1908 he married Sarah E. Dempsey at Nevada, Missouri. They have seven children: five girls and two boys. All are church members as are the sons-in-law and daughters-in-law with one exception. Yes, "the cause of Zion" is on his heart day and night, and he is always busy at it.

News and Notes

YOUTH SERIES IN APRIL

The Zion's Leagues of Independence are conducting a door-to-door campaign to fill the Stone Church for a youth series to celebrate the Restoration Festival during the week of April 9-14. The week's program will bring the following speakers on questions vital to the religious and everyday lives of young people. April 9—"This Church of Ours," E. J. Gleazer, Jr.; April 10—"The Plus Element of Latter Day Saintism," Roy A. Chevile; April 11—"The Miracle of the Book of Mormon," Evan Fry; April 12—"We Are Accountable," Reed M. Holmes; April 13—"If Any Man Lack Wisdom," John Sheehy, moderator; April 14—"This Is Our Testimony." All young people of the church and their friends from 13 to 30 years of age are invited.

ORDER OF BISHOPS MEETS

The Order of Bishops met from March 12-16 at the Auditorium. In attendance were G. L. DeLapp, H. L. Livingston, and W. N. Johnson of the Presiding Bishopric. Others from Independence attending the meetings were H. W. Cackler, Leslie Kohlman, N. Ray Carmichael, A. Neal Deaver, and J. A. Becker. The bishops from other areas who attended were Willard Becker, Far West Stake; Earl T. Higdon, Lamoni Stake; J. Stanley Kelley, Los Angeles Stake; Lewis Landsberg, Far West Stake; Howard Miller, Kansas City Stake; L. Wayne Updike, Detroit-International Stake; W. R. Adams, Northwest Iowa District; Joseph Baldwin, Canada; T. A. Beck, Michigan; D. B. Carmichael, Southern California; and Stephen Robinson, Des Moines.

APOSTLE IN MICHIGAN

Apostle M. L. Draper held a two-week series at Saginaw, Michigan, March 4-18. The average attendance for the entire series was 141, and the average Sunday attendance was 167. The size of the congregations required extra seating arrangements in the church. There were two baptisms and a number of prospects whose baptisms are anticipated shortly. The excellent attendance of nonmembers was noted, with an average for each service of sixteen. A large number of copies of "The Restoration Story" and "In All Thy Ways Acknowledge Him" were sold. Brother Draper had two sessions with the priesthood discussing missionary follow-up plans.

HOLDS SERIES

Apostle D. T. Williams held a series of missionary meetings at the St. Joseph, Missouri, First Church during the week of March 11 to 18. All three branches in St. Joseph participated in the series which was given over to a discussion of prophecy with regard to world events and the coming forth of the church.

WOMEN'S WORK

The General Council of Women were guests at the Kansas City Stake Women's Day, March 15. They met with the Kansas City women's council after which they attended a luncheon. The meetings were held at Central Church in Kansas City.

Mrs. Benjamin Moats, member of the General Council of Women, has been a teacher of women's classes in the Kansas City Stake during the winter. She has successfully completed two of her classes and will instruct another shortly.

The Narrow Bed

"For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it: and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it."—Isaiah 28: 20.

THE TRAVELING MISSIONARY is generally very well treated, especially in these days of comfortable homes. But every missionary has had some experience in his life when things did not go so well. After visiting with the family until very late, he is conducted to his place of rest, weary in body and mind. The room may be cold, the furnace fire is down, the register has been shut off, and there are not enough covers to keep warm. So the missionary shivers, between waking and efforts to sleep, through a long and comfortless night.

Surely, poor Isaiah must have been on a missionary trip, if we may judge from the vividness of that one trenchant, revealing paragraph!

All missionaries have had many experiences of wonderful kindness and hospitality, in which everything possible was done for their comfort and happiness. And the traveling missionary has learned to be deeply grateful. But he has had some of the other experiences too, which have taught him how to appreciate the good ones.

* * * *

ON A RECENT DAY I visited a church in the city—a "popular" church. When I saw how the neighborhood around it had run down, how the builders of it had moved away, either to heaven or to another part of the city, and how the poor who lived there did not feel like entering it, I realized what a burden rested upon the shoulders of the minister. When I listened to the sermon and realized what a harmless, narrow gospel he was permitted to preach, I felt sorry for him. And then on the way out I talked to some of the members who kept tight control over him. My heart went out to him in sympathy, and I prayed for him. I still feel like praying for that good man.

He has been given a short bed to lie down on. He cannot stretch himself out to his full stature as a man and a minister. The covering that has been given him is thin and narrow indeed.

* * * *

ONE OF OUR MEMBERS was visiting me. He was the kind of man who visits by talking, and never listens. He can be with you for hours, and never learn a thing. You have no chance to speak.

He has concentrated on the negative aspects of the gospel. He knows all its restrictions and prohibitions. He has never considered its wonderful possibilities and its glorious opportunities. Through the years, his life has steadily narrowed and decreased. He has spun a web and built a wall around himself from which it would be difficult indeed for him to escape.

He is quite intolerant of others. In fact there is scarcely anyone of whom he approves. And as he talks, a hard light shows in his eyes, and you know very well that he does not approve of you. He has made his bed short, and he has cut his blanket narrow.

I felt like praying for him, too.

* * * *

ANOTHER EXPERIENCE came to me recently. One of our finest church men was in my office. He is a brilliant thinker, a forceful speaker. He commands respect and attention wherever he goes. And as he talked he showed a depth of understanding, a breadth of vision, a far-ranging comprehension of the truth that always amazes me. I sometimes think I understand him. I sometimes wish and hope that I may be like him. But when he visits he reveals reaches of thought and intellectual adventure that are always far beyond me.

Then I find that I, too, have made a spiritual bed for myself that is too short for me to stretch myself on it to my full length; and I find that I have cut a cover too narrow for the requirements of my intellectual life. I want to begin anew. And I pray for myself.

* * * *

C. S. LEWIS, in his strange and interesting book, The Great Divorce, discusses the difference between good and evil, and his conclusion is that it is a matter of size, a difference in dimension. Evil is infinitely contracted, little, cramped, narrow, and small. Good is incomprehensibly large, generous, big, and great. Lewis may be right, and he may be wrong. At least, that is one way of looking at it.

The short bed and the narrow cover are not the result of God's goodness. Some other power has fashioned them.

On the other hand, the greatness of God is manifested everywhere in the universe. As it has been expressed in the Scriptures:

"Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised; and his greatness is unsearchable."—Psalm 145: 3.

Official

Radio KMBC

Since June 21, 1946, the church has been broadcasting over the facilities of KMBC of Kansas City, Missouri, under the provisions of a contract bearing that date. On February 16 last, the Midland Broadcasting Company notified the church that rule 3.109 of the Federal Communications Commission, which was adopted since the execution of our contract, has made it necessary to modify this agreement.

The church recognized the necessity for some revision and made diligent effort to co-operate with the Midland Broadcasting Company in modifying this contract to comply with rule 3.109. At the same time we have been under the necessity of conserving our rights and equities in the contract. After consultation with the members of the Twelve in Independence and in the field, with the Standing High Council of the church, and with the Order of Bishops (who were in session at the time), and on the advice of our legal counsel, the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric therefore submitted proposals to the Broadcasting Company which, in our opinion, would comply with the rule as well as to conserve these rights and equities. No mutually satisfactory agreement was worked out by the church and the company, however, and the company elected to terminate the contract as of 12:00 o'clock, noon, Thursday, March 15, 1951.

The contract which has been terminated required the Midland Broadcasting Company to pay to the church the sum of $50,000 "as stipulated damages in full satisfaction" for the broadcast time we have ceased to use. This amount has been paid, and the money has been added to the radio capital fund and will be held intact therein subject to the action of the next General Conference.

It is with keen regret that the church contemplates the severance of the relationship with the station which has continued without interruption for many years. Study is being given to our broadcasting policy in light of these developments.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

Missionary Editions of the Book of Mormon at Work

AT THE 1950 CONFERENCE the church introduced its Missionary Edition of the Book of Mormon, part of the cost of which was subsidized by the General Church to encourage members to give these copies to friends who are willing to read the book. In the front of each edition is a little blue slip carrying the request to detach and mail to the Council of Twelve, giving the name and address of the person to whom the book is given or loaned, as well as the name and address of the one giving or loaning the book. Some interesting replies are being received by the Council in response to a letter which the Council sends out to the one receiving the book. This letter gives a brief description of the book and some points of interest to the investigator concerning its contents. The following is an excerpt from the letter:

It tells of the appearance of Jesus, following his resurrection in Palestine, to a nation of early Americans who were descendants of the Hebrew tribe of Joseph. You will be thrilled by reading this account on pages 631 through 654. The age of Christian peace which followed is described briefly on pages 681 through 683.

You will also be interested in the teachings of the Book of Mormon about marriage, described on pages 171 and 172, paragraphs 32-36.

The testimony of the book about God teaches us that He is an eternal, unchangeable Being, whose works are miraculous in our eyes. Read pages 710 through 712, paragraphs 68-88.

Your attention is also directed to the testimonies of the three and eight witnesses at the front of the book. We believe that these testimonies will be helpful to you, and suggest also that you note the promise in the book itself on page 775, paragraphs 4 and 5, reproduced on the blue insert on the inside front cover.

Typical of the response received is this letter from Miss Ida Hart of West London, England; the book was given to her by Roy D. Oakman of Enfield.

I have many times attended the service of the Enfield branch of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints and have had the opportunity of discussing your teachings with Roy and May Oakman of that branch. I was most pleased and interested to receive a copy of the Book of Mormon and am at present attempting to study its story and teachings. I find it a most beautifully written and inspiring book, and though as yet I must question its divine authorship, I remember the promise reproduced on the blue insert, and do earnestly desire to know the truth.

I have noted all the references given to me and will continue to study the Book of Mormon until I understand it more thoroughly, and I am sure its testimony will be of the utmost spiritual value.

Readers will be glad to know that another Missionary Edition of the red cover Book of Mormon has just been printed and is ready for distribution. These volumes, when wisely used, can bring joy to the hearts of thousands of others as it has to Miss Ida Hart.

Stewardship and Accounting

Based on a sermon preached January 14, 1951 in Second Church, Independence, Missouri

By Chris B. Hartshorn

From a wire recording by Lawrence Fordham

Scripture reference—sixteenth chapter of Luke.

MOST OF US who have been in the church twenty-five or thirty years remember that we always looked forward to having a sermon on tithing and stewardship when the bishop came among us. Things have changed. Today every minister for Christ feels that he should talk upon this theme because it is a part of the gospel, and it has to do with the salvation of men. How can we leave it to one class of officers when it is put in that light? I hope that you will feel that way about it and that you will see it plays a vital part in one of the greatest works ever undertaken among men.

The parable just read speaks of the rich man who had a steward. A steward is one who has charge of the property of another. He was more than just a servant; he was a steward—he was responsible. It seems that in those days people were watching what others were doing, and they carried a message to the owner of the property. It was reported to the owner that his steward was wasting the substance from this property, and so the steward was called upon for an accounting. Now let's think of the parable as an attempt on the part of our Lord to express a relationship between man and his God.

All Are Stewards

Perhaps this will be clearer to you if you can see yourself in the position of steward. Not only has there come a change in the thinking of the ministry who at one time felt that the teaching of the law relating to temporalities was the duty only of the bishopric, but there has come a change in the thinking of each member of the church. Many of us now regard ourselves as stewards in a very real way. There comes a time in our lives when we must decide whether we are going to live for the enjoyment and the enrichment of self, or whether we are going to act as a steward for God, using the means, the talents, and the property which come into our possession for the blessing of mankind. I am glad that many of us have endeavored to sublimate our talents and dedicate all we have and are for the betterment of mankind, and that we have the feeling that the best method of doing this is in an organized way. So we, therefore, concentrate our efforts in the advancement of or the building up of the church which is the Lamb's bride here upon earth.

I remember hearing a story one time that serves a purpose here. A man who had been rather careless in his relationships became aware of the fact that he had some things to change in his conduct if he were going to enjoy the good life. So he went to his parson and told him that he had "got religion." Now it happened that the colored preacher knew this man pretty well and he questioned him a little. "Do you mean that you are repenting of all your sins?"

"Yas sah!"

"Do you mean that you are going to attend church regularly; that you are going to help the widows and the orphans?"

"Yas sah!"

"And does that mean you are going to pay your debts?"

"Now here, Boss, that ain't religion. That's business."

Some of us separate business and religion rather severely. We think religion—anything pertaining to the church—is rather ideal, a lifting up of our spirits; but when it comes to work, money, and the type of behavior which happens between Sundays, that's something else. I do not mean Latter Day Saints feel that way about it, for we are quite of the opinion that the building of the kingdom of God is something that goes on every day as long as life lasts.

A Change Necessary

When we go to what we term a foreign country, we usually take with us some money that we cannot use until we can change it. So we go to some exchange agency and have our United States currency replaced with the coin of the realm. This carries a lesson to us who are in the kingdom of God. When we go to heaven, we will not be dealing with United States currency even though we have on our dollars "In God we trust." There's another coin of the realm that is legal tender when we get into the realm of the redeemed, and we are making a change right here. We are not going to consider our business as being such that we have to keep entirely separate the money, the talents, and the services which we exert or have charge of.

Now let me give you this testimony—I hope that it doesn't sound as if I am bragging—for when I talk to you about stewardship and accounting, it is not a new philosophy with me. For twenty-five or thirty years I have been doing that which I am recommending to you this morning, and I bring it to your attention for the reason that I have found great satisfaction in it. Sometimes we fail to keep the celestial law, but God never fails to keep the promises which he has made to those who observe the law of the celestial kingdom.

I want to present to you a Scripture given by the Lord to us in this our day. In 1834, when the Saints had been driven from Independence to the counties north, a group of some two hundred brethren came from the East to see if they could do something to bring moral courage and physical comfort to these people who had been persecuted and driven from their homes. When they camped a little way northeast of Independence at what is known as Fishing River, the Lord spoke to them and told them why the afflictions had come upon the people in the land of Zion. I want to read that revelation to you:

Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgression of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience if it must needs be by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

Now twice the Lord in this one paragraph of the Fishing River revelation uses that phrase, "the law of the celestial kingdom." Do you know there is a special law that gets us a passport, and provides currency, the legal tender in the realm of the celestial kingdom? Here God has said that the law has to do with caring for the poor and the needy and with bringing to us a standard of righteousness that lifts us above some of the things which caused the affliction of the Saints in Independence before the year 1834. We first run across this word "celestial" in the writings of Saint Paul as he talks about the time when as resurrected beings we shall inherit a condition better than this. I want to read a few verses from the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians.

Also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial, and bodies telectual; but the glory of the celestial, one; and the terrestrial, another; and the telectual, another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead.—Corinthians 15: 40-42.

Now there is a law of the celestial kingdom which God has made very clear through latter-day revelation, and we will suffer if we fail to understand and live up to it. I am afraid too many of us do not know what is required of us because we are willingly ignorant, and some of us know but do not do a very good job of living up to what we know of the law.

Wanted to Help

Brother John Garver used to tell this story of an incident that happened in his ministry when he was laboring up in Far West Stake. He said he was preaching one Sunday morning about the kingdom of God. At the close a small lad, the son of a missionary, came up to him and said, "Brother Garver, take this (which was a five cent piece he held out) for the spread of the gospel." That's all he said. Brother Garver said he looked at the boy for a moment. He knew that nickels came rather hard for him—that it wasn't often he got even a five cent piece to spend as he wanted to, but Brother Garver said he couldn't refuse it because the boy was sincere. He wanted this five cent piece to go to spread the gospel, so Elder Garver took it.

Now that's the spirit of the celestial law. It exists where we are willing to sacrifice some of the physical, personal comforts that others might know of this message of salvation and might be saved from some of the heartaches which result from greediness and selfishness. It's not the natural thing; it doesn't come easily for people to give up for others, even to sacrifice for the cause of the kingdom; but if we could see that every sacrifice and everything we give up is for our own good, as well as for the benefit of others, we have a different feeling about it. This boy was blessed, and Brother Garver took the five cent piece because he would not deny the boy the blessing that came to him from giving.

"Selfishness is the door," says William George Jordan, "by which iniquity enters the soul." From the cradle up, we think a great deal about ourselves, and not enough about mother, brother, sister, and father, about our friends and co-workers; but we can attain the grace through the gospel that will make us not only the kind of people whom others love to be with, who are known in the community as being fine upstanding citizens, but also good kingdom builders. It is good to have money. God doesn't want us to be poverty-stricken; he wants us to have the things of this world. It is good to have money and the things money can buy, but we need to check up occasionally to find out if we are losing some of the things money can't buy.

The Use of Agency

In section 101: 2 we find these words:

For it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures. I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work, and all things therein are mine.

That's the key to the idea of stewardship. "All things therein [this earth] are mine."

... and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves.

Agency means we can use our wealth selfishly if we want to, or we can use it in accordance with the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom.

Therefore if any man take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.

I know there is lots of torment we don't have to wait until the next world to get into. I was telling my wife this morning about reading in the January Reader's Digest the story of Ernie Pyle and his wife. If there wasn't some hell there before they both died, I don't know where you could find a description of it. Particularly on Mrs. Pyle's part. There was self-indulgence which led to personal debauchery. She had everything she wanted, but she just couldn't control herself.

In this revelation it's been made crystal clear that it isn't up to us to decide whether we are stewards or not; we are stewards. Everyone is a steward over the things which come into his possession. "All is mine [God's]," but we are agents unto ourselves. Because we are stewards and there is a law which we are invited to understand and to live by, we need to decide soon whether or not we want to do this according to the law of the kingdom or some other way.

Only Pennies for God

I remember Brother John Sheehy telling of this experience. He said one day he had a little business at the Herald House when Bishop Keir was business manager there. He took his grandson along with him. Brother Keir made friends with the boy, and when he came out of the office he showed his grandfather a nickel. John asked, "Where did you get that?"

"The man."

"Did you ask for it?"

"No."

"Well, what did you say?"

"I said thank you."

"I didn't hear you say anything."

"Oh, I said it kind of soft."

"Well," John asked, "what are you going to do with it?"

"I'm going to buy a candy bar."

"Now, David," he said, "tomorrow is Sunday, why don't you take that and when you go to Sunday school give it to the Lord?" "Oh, Grandpa," he said with disgust, "don't you know they don't give nickels in Sunday school, only pennies?"

Well, I presume some of us have that idea. Maybe we still practice giving pennies to the Lord and keep the larger pieces for our own personal use. If we do, we have decided to use our agency in a way that may bring us something of the torment that was mentioned. The desire to give is the incomparable gift, for what we give is just the symbol of the desire in our hearts. At the Christmas season, perhaps we did a good share of giving, and the gift which was given in the spirit of love, because we wanted to express our feeling of love and affection for someone, is the gift that gave us the most enjoyment. If, perchance, we gave something just because we felt that we might be getting a gift from this person and would be embarrassed in our relationships for failing to give, we got little satisfaction out of it. Again let me say, the main thing is for us to get in our hearts today the sincere desire to live according to the principles of the celestial kingdom, by giving, sharing, and helping other people through the gospel.

A Time for Accounting

In another revelation we are told:

... It is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. For he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father. Verily I say unto you, The elders of the church in this part of my vineyard shall render an account of their stewardship unto the bishop which shall be appointed of me, in this part of my vineyard. These things shall be had on record, to be handed over unto the bishop in Zion.

Here we are told about an accounting and records. This accounting is to be made annually (Doctrine and Covenants 106:1). Some may ask, "Why should the bishop want to know all of our business? Why should he ask us to make out these statements?" I assure you it isn't for his benefit. It is that we might keep the law of the celestial kingdom which requires us to render this accounting. Why to the bishop? Because God has asked the bishop to represent him in this matter, and because our salvation is tied up so closely with it. We cannot redeem our souls, our church, nor Zion except by the laws of the celestial kingdom. I want to help you see this and to assure you that as you get within your heart the desire to live according to this law, God will bless you, and you will get enjoyment from it and grow spiritually in ways that will astound you and your friends.

I would like to use this little legend of an English peasant woman because it seems to get right down where some of us live. It is said that on a certain day the king was to pass through the village where this woman lived. The people lined the road where the king was to pass, and as he came along this peasant tossed a copper coin in front of the king. He stooped and picked it up much to her surprise. As he did so, he held it up and said, "Why, this is a gold half crown," for it had changed at his touch into a piece of gold that was represented by the English half crown. He said, "This is too much for a poor person like you to give," and handed it back to her. Instinctively, she reached for the coin and took it from his hand, feeling that perhaps she had given a bit too much. As soon as it touched her hand again, it turned back to copper.

Many a copper piece that we give, many a common ordinary service that we perform in the name of the Lord turns to gold; but when we serve self, when our singing, our playing, and our preaching is for the glorification of self, it becomes just plain copper or brass or ashes, while in the hands of the Lord it might be beautiful and grand.

The Beauty of Celestial Law

I can't think of a better illustration of the beauty of this than one that Brother John Sheehy gave us when we were at the reunion three years ago in Michigan. He said that years before he had talked with Dr. Drew Taylor, who was registrar for Missouri Wesleyan College when John was attending there. He was also a Christian minister. Brother Sheehy explained to Dr. Taylor the celestial law that I have been trying to express to you this morning. He told him how this law was designed to aid us in overcoming our greed and to be helpful one to the other, explaining to him just how it was applied in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Dr. Taylor said to him,

Mr. Sheehy, I am going to a regional conference of our denomination next week, and I am going to tell them that any interpretation of God's law which says that a man earning $10.00 should pay one dollar of that regardless of his wife and children, while another earning $100.00 a week needs to pay only $10.00, is wrong; it's damnable. I cannot understand why people would say that Joseph Smith who taught that a man should care for his wife and children first, and then pay the tenth of the increase left, is a bad man. I can't see why they should say he was a bad leader. Why, the principle that you have explained to me this morning is the most beautiful that I have ever heard taught, and I am going to talk for it, and I am going to vote for it in our conference.

Now friends, it is beautiful because it is just, and I know of no teaching in any church that is so clear or so good.

When I was returning from a convention in Ohio last February, I was privileged to sit with two Nazarene ministers from Kansas City and we started talking along these lines. I explained to them our teaching of the tithe being paid on the increase, not

Harmful Attachments

THIS IS A TIME when society is bound in bundles—a time of many organizations. Since little of importance to the public welfare can be done individually, we need to do it through organizations.

There are good and bad organizations, and we must be wise in choosing what we join. Most beneficent organizations are open to the public. Many of those that are detrimental are secret organizations. As I see it there can hardly be any good wrought by secret societies that could not as well or better be done in the open.

We are justified in joining and helping in any good cause that is clearly open to the public and in harmony with the principles of the gospel. Our gospel embraces all the good found in any secret organization; that leaves us little excuse for going under cover to make additional pledges.

We cannot consistently pledge ourselves to especially befriend the members of more than one organization; after that it would no longer be special. The more organizations we are pledged to, the more partial our conduct among the people must become. If we join in some good cause for the purpose of assisting in the promotion of the good, we add to our worth. If we join some organization, as many do, to get friends, or for material gain, or for connections with the "right" people, we lower our character.

WE SHOULD AVOID unnecessary oaths and pledges involving the name of God or calling on him to witness, such as are made by the members of some lodges. It is no trivial thing to pledge by our lives everlasting secrecy to some lodge activities in God's name. The Lord has given us good advice on the subject of oaths and pledges (read Matthew 5: 37-38).

It would be inconsistent for any of us who have taken the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the Holy Spirit for our guide to promise in secret to take the Bible for a rule and guide for our faith and practice.

Joseph Smith, while in jail at Liberty, Missouri, wrote to the church saying: "We further caution our brethren against the impropriety of the organization of bands or companies by covenants, oaths, penalties, or secrecies:—pure friendship always becomes weakened the very moment you undertake to make it stronger by penal oaths and secrecy."

This was pronounced "sound advice" by Joseph Smith III, president of the church, and Apostle Heman C. Smith. (See Church History, Volume 2, pages 324-325.)

If we belong to an organization and promote its good, we share in the blessings resulting. But on the other hand, if the organization does something bad, we cannot escape the responsibility. The only way we could escape the guilt would be to withdraw before the action is taken.

The more organizations we join the less individual freedom we have. At present the measures taken by many labor unions often cause great loss to people who in no way have anything to do with the measures in dispute. We should be careful not to be led into harmful attachments. If we have pledged to do any wrong, it is better to repent and not carry out the pledge. May we follow the example of our Lord who said, "In secret have I said nothing."—John 18: 20.

I Will Make An Accounting

By Lyman Smith

EARLY IN THE DAYS of the Restoration Movement, the principle of stewardship was announced. This doctrine carries with it the idea of accountability. Stewardship is justified in the belief that God is sovereign; that it is his right to rule and reign in the lives of men. He is the creator of all things, also the owner; hence comes our accountability to him for the use of the things that come into our possession.

The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein.—Psalm 24: 1.

Every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle on a thousand hills.—Psalm 50: 10.

All these properties are mine.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10.

These Scriptures assert God's sovereignty, and his ownership of all that we use and value. Whatever rights we may have to the use of these things, God has a prior claim upon them—the claim of ownership. The Lord's reasoning with respect to this matter is: "If these properties are mine, then ye are stewards."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10. It follows as a natural result that if God is the owner of all things, then our use of them is by his permission—not because of any inherent right we may have to use them. This being true, then in the very nature of things, we are stewards, whether we believe it or not and whether we acknowledge it or not. Surely we will be called into account for our stewardship, both in time and in eternity.

THIS PICTURE of the relationship between God and his people under stewardship may appear to some to be too austere. It is not merely a landlord and tenant relationship; the making of our account to God is not just a settlement or a pay-off. It is a much closer and more intimate relationship than that. It probably can better be described as a covenant relationship; for in this is implied a coming together. We come part way and God comes part way; we meet on common grounds. We should remember, however, that our Heavenly Father can bring much more to this covenant than we can, for he is Almighty and has the resources of the world at his command. We have nothing (of a material nature at least) that we can bring; we come poor and naked. Yet because of the agency God has given us, there are some things we can bring. We can bring a willing heart and an obedient spirit. We can bring faith, repentance, and a consecrated life. These are about the only things we are expected to bring. On the other hand, God can bring to this covenant the great spiritual blessings of his kingdom, the riches of his grace. And while we have the promise of the riches of eternity (Doctrine and Covenants 67: 1), the Lord also assures us "the riches of the earth are mine to give" (38: 9), and it is his purpose to provide for his Saints (101: 2).

How do we go about rendering an accounting to God? We do it through the church, for the church is God's representative body on earth. In turn, we make our accounting to the church through certain men that represent the church. They have been called of God to administer the temporal affairs of the church. In the great and important matter of making an accounting to God, we should not think it our privilege to by-pass these men who have been called of God, and set apart by the church to receive the testimonies of the Saints in regard to their temporal affairs. Our accounting should be made to one of this order of bishops or to a representative.

When should this accounting to the church be made? If no accounting has ever been made, it should be done as soon as possible, for we have no lien on life. If we have made the first accounting, after that it should not be made less than once a year (Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1). The bishops of the church have tried to educate the people to the idea that the natural and logical time to make the yearly accounting is the first of the year, and the month of January has been designated as the month to render our accounting. However, there is no hard and fast rule about this.

I SHOULD LIKE to bear my testimony. I will do it by using the words of the Psalmist who said, "I have been young, and now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread." I can bear this same testimony. I have lived over a span of rather eventful years, but for all the things that have happened, there are some I have not seen happen; I have not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread. I have never seen an upright, righteous man—one who prays over his affairs, honors God and his law, and accepts the responsibilities of his stewardship—begging bread, nor his children going naked or hungry. God has a way of taking care of those who keep covenant with him. Such persons are the salt of the earth.

The Covenant With Enoch

By Marian Brock Blumenschein

FROM CHILDHOOD we have known the story of Noah and his ark. We remember that God placed a rainbow in the sky to be a token of the covenant he made with Noah that the waters of a great flood should never again cover the earth to destroy all flesh. Yet the rainbow was set in the cloud as a token also of another covenant which the Lord described to Noah as "the everlasting covenant which I made with thy father Enoch." In speaking to Noah, the Lord called Enoch "thy father," though actually Enoch was Noah's great-grandfather.

This is the everlasting covenant:

... that when men should keep all my commandments, Zion shall again come on the earth, the city of Enoch which I have caught up unto myself. And this is mine everlasting covenant that when thy posterity shall embrace the truth and look upward, then shall Zion look downward, and all the heavens shall shake with gladness and the earth tremble with joy. And the general assembly of the first-born shall come down out of heaven, and possess the earth and shall have place until the end come.—Genesis 9: 21-23, Inspired Version.

The Lord had further described this great event to Enoch as follows:

Then shalt thou and thy city meet them there, and we shall receive them into our bosom; and they shall see us, and we shall fall upon their necks, and we shall kiss each other.—Genesis 7: 71, Inspired Version.

From the bosom of the Father, Enoch was permitted to see the day when, after many thousands of years and untold suffering and bloodshed, men will finally succeed in keeping all the commandments of God, thus fulfilling the terms of the everlasting covenant. In the last days of wickedness and vengeance, a righteous people will again build a holy city called Zion, the New Jerusalem.

The covenant was not to be fulfilled through an individual's keeping all the commandments of God, but through a group of people who are living together in a state of righteousness comparable with that of Enoch's Holy City. What is this righteousness they achieved? In the Inspired Version of the Bible and in our Doctrine and Covenants, God has given us a limited knowledge of that Zion and its people. The rest is contained in the Book of Enoch, one of God's rich treasures withheld because of our own lack of faith. We do know that they "were of one heart and mind and had no poor among them." The Lord himself dwelt in their midst, and they were feared by all nations because of the glory of God which was upon them. For 365 years, as time is reckoned in Bible history, they dwelt in righteousness (Genesis 7: 76, Inspired Version); then they were taken into heaven to the bosom of the Father.

Not until the day of Pentecost did any group of people again approach these Zion conditions. Then, filled with the Holy Ghost, many who had been baptized sold their possessions and shared with one another according to individual needs. Once again men were of one heart and one mind. The record states that some had all things in common. In time, however, there came a falling away, and the everlasting covenant was yet to be fulfilled.

FOLLOWING THE PERSONAL MINISTRY of Jesus to the Nephites, these ancient Americans built a society from the blueprints he gave them which is known as the Golden Age of the Nephites. They did all things as Jesus had commanded them. Christ himself said to them, "And now behold my joy is great, even unto fullness because of you and also this generation; yea and even the Father rejoiceth, and also all the holy angels because of you and this generation, and none of them are lost."—III Nephi 13: 7. Once again men ministered to one another, and once more they gave their material possessions for the common good. In thirty-six years all the people upon the face of the land, both Nephites and their bitter enemies the Lamanites were converted to Christ, and they all lived in peace and harmony, dealing justly with one another. The blessings of God were poured out upon them without measure. Marvelous miracles were wrought in their midst, blessings the church of Christ today has yet to experience. They were a strong people described as "exceeding fair and delightful." Nephi, author of the fourth book of Nephi, said of them, "Surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who have been created by the hand of God."—IV Nephi 1: 19.

Why was not the everlasting covenant fulfilled in these people? Christ knew that before four generations had passed, they would betray him for gold and silver. The sin of the Nephites was the worst of all sin, that of perdition. Having known the brightness of the light of Christ, they chose darkness rather than light, and their destruction was swift and sure.

Because the sins of the Lamanites were less grievous and because of the promises of God concerning them, they were not completely destroyed. In a relatively short time their degeneration was so complete that Charles Darwin seeing the depraved cannibalistic Indians on the barren rocks of Tierro Del Fuego, southern tip of South America, wrote, "Viewing such men, one can hardly make oneself believe that they are fellow creatures and inhabitants of the same world." Not long afterward Darwin declared that man and apes had a common origin. In a brief exploration of the land inhabited by the Fuegian Indians, Darwin found violence everywhere. "In the depth of the ravines, the contour of the mountains, the whirl of the winds, the beat of the rain, the very people of the land . . . Death, instead of life, seemed here the predominate spirit," Darwin recorded. This account is given by Victor Wolfgang Von Hagen in his book South America Called Them (page 201).

Alexander Von Humboldt, German scientist and explorer, after whom the Humboldt oceanic current was named, visited Quito, Ecuador, in 1802. Here he found the Indians enslaved and sullen, judged as a low animal and treated as such by their Spanish conquerors. Von Humboldt became interested in the ancient history of Quito. He learned that the Indians had once been a proud and happy people. His description of Pre-Inca Quito in which there was no poverty nor want is most interesting, but for our purpose, we will select only this statement, "This Incaic civilization nestling in the Andes with its far-flung empire was as close as man would ever get to Utopia."—South America Called Them (page 138).

IT IS OUR FIRM BELIEF that man with the help of God will again build upon this earth a society of peace and brotherhood which shall never again be removed from the earth. The church of Jesus Christ today is dedicated to the perfecting of that people in whom the everlasting covenant shall be fulfilled. Whether it be this generation in which we live or a future generation depends upon our willingness to keep all the commandments of God. Enoch's City of Zion was built in a relatively short period of time, during the early part of Enoch's life. The Nephites to which Christ ministered personally did all things as Jesus commanded them and lived together in such righteousness from the time of his ministry to the end of their lives that all were saved in the kingdom of God. In comparison with this achievement of Christ's church in that day, our progress has been slow indeed.

How much longer will God wait upon us? How much longer will he stay the awful forces of destruction behind locked doors in order that we may establish Zion in her place? Let us turn from our primary pursuit of the goods of the world and consecrate our wealth, our time, and our talents to the cause of Zion in our day. Let us seek to know and obey all the commandments of God that ours may be the communal righteousness which shall cause the heavens to shake with gladness and the earth to tremble with joy.

The Mountain Meadows Massacre

A Book Review

The Mountain Meadows Massacre, by Juanita Brooks. Stanford University Press, Stanford, California, 1950, $5.

I.
THIS MASSACRE was one of the most tragic episodes in the history of the Mormons in the West. On September 7, 1857, Indians who had been incited by the Mormons attacked an emigrant train, the Fancher party, at Mountain Meadows, Utah Territory, and were twice repulsed. Under orders from Mormon authorities, John D. Lee, an officer of the Mormon militia, led his troops to the scene, and under a flag of truce induced the Fancher party to leave its defensive position, with a promise of protection. Women and children walked ahead a quarter of a mile; the men were kept behind, each one with a Mormon "guard" beside him. At a certain point Lee gave a signal, upon which each soldier was ordered to kill his man, and most of them did, but some refused. The Indians rushed in, killed the women and children, and finished the men. Eighteen small children were spared, of whom one died. Indians and Mormons plundered the train, even taking the clothing and leaving the naked bodies exposed to the sun, vultures, and animals. Attempts were made to make the massacre the work of the Indians alone. Efforts have been made to keep evidence hidden, to protect the names of high officials in the church. The author was denied access to some documents, but she still has abundant evidence to support her conclusions.

II.

With the conviction that the truth should be told as far as it could be learned, the author, a member of the Mormon church, carried on research with the aid of a fellowship granted under the Rockefeller Foundation. She has produced a historical work of merit, a contribution to the story of the West.

The author must be commended for the care with which she has done her work, and for the pains she has taken to find and tell the truth.

III.

The responsibility for the massacre is one of the points of the investigation. Certainly the author is right in insisting that this massacre cannot be separated from the persecutions of church people in Independence, Missouri, in 1833, the slaughter at Haun's Mill in 1838, for Governor Boggs' infamous extermination order, the expulsion of the church from Missouri, the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith at Carthage, Illinois, in 1844, and the expulsion of the church from Illinois, 1844-46. Here is a single deed against many others just as bad. These were things that the Mormon people remembered.

We cannot go into detail. We simply state that the author has ample proof for her summary, which is quoted here:

1. While Brigham Young and George A. Smith, the church authorities chiefly responsible, did not specifically order the massacre, they did preach sermons and set up social conditions which made it possible.

2. That this particular company met disaster was due to a most unhappy combination of circumstances: they were first to pass when the war frenzy was at its height; their own attitude was such as to fan that frenzy and provoke added violence. Had they been of the temperament of the group immediately following, they would likely have escaped unharmed, though short of provisions and robbed of their cattle. But the reckless boasts and acts on the part of those who called themselves "Missouri Wild-cats" culminated in disaster for the whole train.

3. While he did not order the massacre, and would have prevented it if he could, Brigham Young was accessory after the fact, in that he knew what had happened, and how and why it happened.—Pages 161-162.

IV

From the beginning much has been made of the part played in the massacre by John D. Lee. He was the Mormon officer on the spot in charge of the militia. He personally took part in the killing. He led the militia in the murder of the men of the Fancher party. He took part in the gathering of the loot.

The Mormon church was willing to let him be the scapegoat, and he was a suitable subject. The claim that he was "acting under orders" has been asserted in his behalf. That was the excuse of the Nazis for atrocities under Hitler. Lee abandoned his personal moral responsibility. Here we see what happens when men "obey counsel"—the unwritten law of the Mormon church—rather than Christian principles.

In Missouri, General Doniphan defied the execution order of Governor Boggs, calling it murder. Lee might have done well to remember Doniphan's heroic example in defense of the Saints.

It is true that Brigham Young sent orders to "save life always when it is possible" (page 99), but they arrived at Cedar City too late. The reader who is acquainted with the history of this place and time knows how often there were "secret instructions" and "counsel" by which Mormons were guided, while the official instructions went out as mere "window dressing."

The author comments on the unwritten law of the Mormons—"do things according to counsel" (pages 26, 27), and Jacob Hamblin in his confessions mentioned having met two Mormons from Cedar City who spoke of "secret instructions" for killing all of the Fancher party.

LITTLE CHILDREN are very busy getting acquainted with a strange new world—trying to master a strange language which their seniors have never quite mastered; trying to understand the customs and standards of adults and their unpredictable moods. On the other hand, the sayings of these newcomers are often refreshingly surprising.

The Adding Machine

Frank Colby, a well-known columnist, recently deceased, closed one of his columns with the story of a little girl who had just come home from church school and quoted to him a passage of Scripture, as she had understood it, after this fashion: "The Bible says you should not look at wine when it is red, for it will bite you like a serpent and sting like an adding machine." Well, what was wrong with that? An adding machine must be an adder.

Eric's Prayer

Eric is a five-year-old who sometimes gets into juvenile troubles. He is not willful or desirous to be disobedient. He is just a happy-go-lucky, full-of-life youngster who is so preoccupied with his own interests that he gives scant heed to nor long remembers the admonitions of his seniors. One morning I said to him, "Eric, be a good boy and don't get into trouble." For once he apparently remembered. At least that night when his mother heard his evening prayer, he prayed, "Lord, help me to be a good boy and keep out of trouble." That plea touched his mother's heart. It is no fun to discipline a five-year-old, even when he needs discipline. Eric's prayer was answered sooner than he thought. Perhaps he never knew it was answered. His mother turned from the bedside and looking around the room discovered Eric's little shirt in the fish bowl. But she remembered the prayer and had no heart to administer punishment. After all, Eric wished to be good and he wished to keep out of trouble. So he was forgiven.

Eric had not deliberately put his shirt in the fish bowl. He just gave it a careless toss and there was where it landed. We adults get into trouble just that way, through stupid carelessness—when we should know better. And sometimes it is much worse trouble than having our shirt in a fish bowl.

Your Prayer

There was something in Eric's prayer that fits in with the Lord's Prayer, "Suffer us not to be led into temptation but deliver us from evil." Help us to be good and keep out of trouble. Remember those four words, "Deliver us from evil." When sore beset by temptation that you seem to have no power to resist of yourself, voice that simple prayer, "Deliver me from evil!" The Lord will hear and answer.

"Shack, shack, and to bed we go"

An old family anecdote, which came down through my mother's family, had to do with the small boy who returned from the Sunday morning service and was asked what the preacher talked about. He replied, "Shack, shack, and to bed we go." Strange theme for a Sunday morning sermon! Inquiry revealed that the subject had to do with the three Hebrew children, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. But this is what the boy heard, "Shack, shack, and to bed we go in the fiery furnace." Small wonder that children fail to understand sermons addressed to adults. By the way, do we preachers always make our message understandable to ordinary adults?

When we preach to ourselves

Just a few days ago, a young man cornered me in the vestibule of a certain church. He is in college, keen-minded and interested in the church.

This lad put to me a question something like this: "Don't you think that sometimes our preachers study and think about certain mysteries or things on the higher levels of spiritual understanding, and when they preach they stand up and sort of preach to themselves in terms they understand—but few people know what they are talking about."

I had to admit that this young man "had something" there. I have heard people say, "I could not understand what that preacher was trying to say." Being an ordinary person I have heard sermons that I could not follow, and so I thought that other ordinary people might not understand. It seems a waste of time to preach if people do not understand.

Sometimes we preachers may have a rather confused understanding of something pretty good which we have not thought through clearly—and so we leave our hearers in confusion. More often we may presume too much and take scant pains to make our meaning clear. I think it well worth our time to take almost infinite pains to learn how to present our message in simple language and in terms that ordinary people understand. Simplicity does not rob the message of beauty. Simplicity may add to its beauty. We have a great message. We should have a great passion to tell it convincingly and with the utmost clarity. Otherwise we may about as well say, "Shack, shack, and to bed we go in the fiery furnace." Nephi wrote, "I glory in plainness; I glory in the truth."

Elder E. Walter Lloyd

of Kansas City Central Branch

SURELY angels in heaven smile as they see E. W. (Daddy) Lloyd at the age of eighty-six going about his self-appointed tasks of visiting the sick, the lonely, and the troubled in mind, or taking Communion to shut-ins, and administering with such faith and assurance that many who seek divine help through him are healed. His kind hands have been placed on the heads of more than ten thousand persons throughout the years, and because of his unwavering trust God has blessed him in his ministry.

In a letter dated January 25, 1951, he wrote:

I had a wonderful experience yesterday. I was called to preach a funeral sermon to a group of which more than half the people were Catholics. I was to talk to them of the gospel principles, and some were deeply moved. I heard that they sat up until two o'clock this morning and talked about the sermon. I am so happy that God can still use me in his work.

Some people doubt that business and religion can always work together but Brother Lloyd's love of the gospel and his desire to lead an exemplary life made him an honored and beloved employee of the Standard Oil Company for twenty-five years. As an expression of their regard, his employees gave him a beautiful gold watch at the time of his retirement.

He was born January 16, 1865, at Paddy's Run, Ohio. Later the place was called "New London." In speaking of his parents and early life, he said:

My parents were Abner and Catherine Lloyd. They were devotional and prayerful. I had a happy childhood and every good influence to lead a religious life. After moving to Montgomery County, Missouri, we met Elder John T. Phillips, who baptized my father, mother, and myself into the Reorganized Church. A small branch was organized, and my father was called to be an elder. He was a man of faith and was greatly blessed with the gifts of the gospel, especially that of healing. At one time when I was very ill, he was told while administering to me that I would live to be a minister in the church.

In June of 1878 we attended the first district conference ever held by the Reorganized Church in Independence, Missouri. There we met Elder Charles M. Schroeder and his family. In October of that same year we moved to the farm of James Parker where I contracted pneumonia. My family had given up hope and expected me to die. At my request, Father went six miles in extremely cold weather to get Brother Schroeder, who came and administered to me. I was instantly healed. While we were living at this place we met Brother Luther Allen. Although he was an aged man, and I but a child, his life touched mine in an unforgettable way. He often spoke in tongues in our prayer meetings.

We held meetings every Sunday for two years, alternating between our house and that of Brother Schroeder. It was there we first met Elders Joseph Luff and Emsley Curtis, who came to preach for us.

IN DECEMBER, 1880, my family moved to Cedar County, Missouri. I was then in my fifteenth year. There were no Saints in this vicinity, and my mother would go to a near-by place called Hardin's Hill to pour out her soul to God in prayer, asking that he would send his ministers to help open up the way for the gospel. Her prayers were answered, and our good friends, the Schroeders, moved into the neighborhood. Brother I. N. White who lived at Clinton, Missouri, came to visit us, and soon the Clintonville Branch was organized. I was ordained a teacher in 1886. Several families of Saints moved into the community—the Andersons from Minnesota, the Beebees and Kents from Kansas, Andrew Oglevie, and others. We soon erected a church on the forty-acre farm of Luther Allen; it was called the Coal Hill Branch. This building is still being used.

In August of 1886 a public debate was held between our Brother I. N. White and Henry Price of the Christian Church. As a result, about fifty people were baptized into our church. Elder Daniel E. Tucker was the first one. He was followed by Brothers Swen Swenson, F. C. Keck, and R. T. Walters. All have been outstanding men of the church.

About this same time a Mrs. Gloyd, who was visiting Eldorado Springs for her health, became seriously ill. She prayed earnestly for guidance, and the answer came in the form of a vision. She saw the names of Charles M. Schroeder and Abner Lloyd, and was told to apply to them for baptism. She had never met either of them, but the next day being Sunday, a friend took her to the Coal Hill Branch, where she was baptized and confirmed. After administration she was healed and went back to her home in Kansas and lived for several years, rejoicing in the gospel.

In October, 1881, I was married to Julia Miller—a lovely, spiritual girl. Many times have I seen God's power manifested in her behalf. At one time she was so near death the doctors said there was no use to visit her again. The elders came and administered time after time, then, when there seemed no hope, my father prayed from the depths of his soul and uttered these words, "In the name of Jesus Christ, I rebuke the power of death." She was instantly relieved and was soon resting easily. Before many days she was up and doing her own work.

In 1905 I became a resident of Kansas City, Missouri, and met with the Second Kansas City Saints in the old basement structure. There were many spiritual meetings held there, especially the prayer services.

I HAVE BEEN GREATLY BLESSED in my ministry. I have baptized persons who were too ill to stand on their feet and had to be carried into the water and baptized sitting on a chair. Wonderful blessings.

ings have come to many who had the faith to believe. To strengthen your faith I will relate a few of them.

Brother Herbert Bootman called me one evening and told me that two doctors had informed him he had but twelve hours to live. He asked me to come and bring another elder. I called Elder J. O. Worden, and we administered to him. He went to bed, slept well, and the next day returned to work. He lived several years after that and did a fine work for the church.

I shall never forget the experience of healing that came to Sister Lelia Wyatt. She was paralyzed in the lower part of her body and was as helpless as a baby, having to be lifted in and out of a wheel chair. She had been in this condition for nine months when I was called to administer to her. You can imagine her joy when she stepped from her wheel chair and said, "Oh, Brother Lloyd, I can walk!"

Bishop Skinner and I were called to administer to Leonard Duncanson. This boy had been released from the hospital and sent home to die. After several visits and administrations he was able to do a certain amount of work. He lived for several years, and I had the pleasure of baptizing him, his father, mother, and sister.

Two doctors told the parents of Marguerite Roush that she could live only a few hours. Elders George Harrington, J. O. Worden, and myself administered to her. Twenty years have gone by, and she is still living.

Mary Ainsworth was stricken with polio and placed in an iron lung. With the doctor and nurse standing near by, I bowed in prayer and under the influence of the Spirit of God I rebuked the power of death, then administered. Two weeks later she was able to go home. She is now married and living in Colorado.

I am the father of nine children; seven are still living. They are Harry N., Joseph Ray, Mildred Ellen, Jessie O., Tyra, Mary, and Arther. Charles Abner and Hubert, with my dear wife, are waiting until my work is finished here on earth, when I hope to join them in the Paradise of God.

After this wonderful testimony given by Elder E. Walter Lloyd, no one should doubt the power and love of the Heavenly Father. Surely all can see that the spirit of God still works in the lives of men.

"And these signs shall follow them that believe."—Mark 16: 16-21.

Our Lamanite Brethren

By Hubert Case

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Elder Case's article which appeared in the "Herald" of March 19 under the above title was incomplete. Through a typing error several lines were omitted. We are reprinting the entire article as we feel it carries a significant message on a timely subject.

WE HAVE JUST COMPLETED the Book of Mormon institute, and we wonder if the Spirit of our beloved Enos of the Book of Mormon times is rejoicing and singing praises to his Heavenly Father. We are told in the first chapter of Enos that, because of his great love for his brethren he cried with all diligence unto the Lord:

... if it should so be that my people, the Nephites, should fall into transgression and by any means be destroyed, and the Lamanites should not be destroyed, that the Lord God would preserve a record of my people, the Nephites . . . that it might be brought forth, at some future day, unto the Lamanites that perhaps they might be brought unto salvation . . . and he covenanted with me that he would bring them forth unto the Lamanites, in his own due time.

So great a love had Enos for his people and also for his enemies the Lamanites.

We feel that he was made to rejoice in 1830 when the command went forth: "And now, behold I say unto you that you shall go unto the Lamanites, and preach my gospel unto them; and inasmuch as they receive thy teachings, thou shalt cause my church to be established among them, and thou shalt have revelations, . . ."

Yes, we have sent missionaries among the Lamanites, but has that been sufficient to satisfy this great love Enos had for his brethren?

Alma also tells of a great love; ". . . because of their love toward their brethren . . . they had rather sacrifice their lives than even to take the life of their enemy, because of their love toward their brethren. And now behold I say unto you, has there been so great love in all the land?"

THERE ARE NOW, as we know, five tribes of Lamanites whose leaders are anxious that we come among them and teach their young. They say, "We have a knowledge, but we have no one to teach our young, and there are many who are wanting to know and be baptized. We are old, and we want our young to know."

At Graceland College there is a class on the "Work of the Lamanites." We understand many attending the class have Indian blood in their veins, including one fullblood Pawnee. There is plenty of room for more who have a love for the work of the Master.

Nephi says: "And he inviteth them all to come unto him and partake of his goodness; and he denieth none that come unto him, black and white, bond and free, male and female."

Do we have a love like Enos or Alma? We must remember God has commanded us to love. Jesus himself is love. He said: "If ye love them which love you, what reward have you?" And again; "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost." And again: ". . . if ye lose your life for my sake, ye shall find it in the world to come."

Truly with world conditions as they are, we of all people should have a love, a great love, a burning love for all mankind, a love so pure and deep that we shall not be willing to rest until we have done all within our power to bring to pass the greater work among our Lamanite brethren, those to whom and for whom the records of the Book of Mormon have been written.

Will we accept this challenge, and will we, as Enos and Alma of old, cry mightily unto the Lord for our Lamanite brethren that they be given the opportunity of knowing of this great work to bring to pass their salvation? If we do not do all we can, will it not rest upon our heads when we face the judgment bar? It has been said, ". . . In as much as ye have done it unto the least of these . . ."

May we, as believers in the Book of Mormon and the Restored Gospel, accept this challenge and be willing to file our inventories and give to the Lord of our substance that there can be no hindrance on our part in the completion of Zion. We are told: "together . . . that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem." May God hasten the day.

Zion conditions are no further away nor closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies.

on the income. One of them said, "Well, that's scriptural. That's the way I believe." The other one said, "Well, that's not the way we teach it." And so they began discussing with each other just what the law was and how they taught it. I listened with interest. I have found no other church in all of my comparative religions research that sees and teaches this principle as we do. I am not surprised that Dr. Drew Taylor said to Mr. Sheehy, "That's the most beautiful teaching I have ever heard; it shows the justice of God." We as Latter Day Saints should feel proud of our stewardship and get in our heart the desire to live according to the celestial law, because Zion cannot be redeemed on any other basis. That God may help us not only to see it but to live it is my prayer.

Each
One
Bring
One

From Holland comes an excellent illustration of the effectiveness of this motto. It happened in Rotterdam Branch just after liberation from the Nazis. One Sunday a member of the class remarked about the fact that the church school had dropped to about thirty-five. Another followed with the question, "Can't we do something to build it back up?" And after discussing it for about fifteen minutes, a dozen young people decided to forfeit their class and noonday meal in the interests of the church school. For the next two hours they rang doorbells in the neighborhood of the church. After introducing themselves, they asked such questions as these: "Do you have any children?" "Do they attend Sunday school?" "We'd like to invite you to bring them to our Sunday school at Gaesbeekstraat 79, Sundays at 10:00." The next Sunday attendance had doubled! In the weeks following, some of these newcomers dropped out, but others brought brothers, sisters, and playmates until the attendance soared to nearly one hundred, where it is now. Two sessions were provided in order to accommodate the increase in students, youngsters up to fifteen years meet from 10 to 11 A.M., and the young people and adults from 11 to 12. The missionary significance of this project started to become evident in 1948, some three years later, when on Children's Day twelve children were baptized. Eleven of these came from homes where no other members of the family belonged to the church! These, too, however, have become interested in the message of the Restoration and are being baptized. All this started with a casual comment in a class of courageous young people.

HERALD HOUSE - Independence, Missouri

Briefs

WESTERN MONTANA DISTRICT.—A priesthood and women's institute was held in Missoula, Montana, February 10 and 11. The theme was "Ministry in the Home."

Representatives from Butte, Anaconda, Bozeman, Helena, Kalispell, Polson, Deer Lodge, Hamilton, Superior, and Missoula attended.

The opening service was a worship program for both groups. A worship center was built around the hymn, "My Prayer," using the oil painting of Christ in Gethsemane.

Sister Lundeen from Bremerton, Washington, spoke to the women while Brother Lundeen instructed the priesthood. The second class for the women was taught by Brother Hobart with Brother Lorance teaching the priesthood. A reception followed the second class and refreshments were served.

A prayer service was held on Sunday, and the church school class period was used for classes for the priesthood taught by Brother Hobart, and a women's class taught by Sister Lundeen. Brother Lundeen gave the morning sermon.

The Missoula Saints provided the noon meal, Sunday. In the afternoon Brother Hobart conducted a general class in which the challenge and charge of the institute were presented.

Special music was provided for each service.—Reported by MRS. VIRGINIA GARDNER.

CENTRALIA, ILLINOIS.—Elder Sylvester Coleman of Flora conducted a series from January 3-12. The theme was "The Church of Jesus Christ Restored." Cottage meetings were held during this time also. Katherine Ainscough and Martha Wesner were baptized at the close of the series.

A special service of blessing of babies was held February 4. Randy Lee, son of Olive and Dean Shelton; Kathryn Wesner, daughter of Ruth and Charles Wesner, Jr.; Caryn, daughter of Martha and Earl Wesner were blessed by the pastor, C. H. Wesner.

Otis Ainscough was baptized by Brother Wesner February 11.

"Behold, How Great Is Your Calling" was the theme used in the Southeastern Illinois District institute and conference held February 17 and 18. A short worship service preceded the classwork. Classes were conducted by Elder Sylvester Coleman and Elder Stephen Black. Sister Black also taught a class for women. Following the business meeting Sunday, Brother Coleman was ordained to the office of Seventy by Apostle D. O. Chesworth.—Reported by GRACE SCARBROUGH.

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—Sam Anderson of the Flora, Illinois, Branch was ordained to the office of priest, and Stanly Great-house of the Poplar Creek Branch was ordained to the office of elder in November.

A special business meeting was held February 13, following the institute of priesthood and workers. Apostle D. O. Chesworth and Missionary S. R. Coleman presided. It was voted unanimously to approve the organization of the Fairfield, Illinois, group into a branch. It was also approved that $1,000 be transferred from the house of worship funds to the Fairfield Branch.

The name of Irwin William Holman from Centralia was submitted and approved for ordination to the office of priest, subject to the approval of the Centralia Branch.

Seventy Sylvester R. Coleman conducted a two weeks series at Mt. Vernon, February 11-25. The following were baptized: Elver Jones, Larry Drury, Joyce Moore, Ronald Moore, and Carl Clinton Runnels. Brother Coleman officiated at the baptism and at the confirmations assisted by W. W. Colvin.

The branch at Mt. Vernon has been saddened by the death of two members. Brother Freelon Henson died January 7, and Sister Ida Bell Feltman died March 10.

A three week series of cottage meetings was held by Seventy S. R. Coleman and Pastor W. W. Colvin.—Reported by RUBY ELLIS.

WENATCHEE, WASHINGTON.—Evangelist A. W. Lundeen, accompanied by Sister Lundeen, held services from January 25 to February 4. Previous to the Communion service February 4, Brother Lundeen blessed two babies: Thresa Mabelle, daughter of Brother and Sister Kenneth Savage of Pullman, Washington, and Darrel Clyde, son of Brother and Sister Clyde Pennington of Wenatchee, Washington.

The Zion's League netted a total of $97 on a box social held February 10. The money was given to the building fund to help complete the church which is located on the corner of Rockwood and Standerfer, East Wenatchee.—Reported by OLIVE GILSTRAP.

MOBILE, ALABAMA.—The church school director, A. V. Peavy, and assistants, Jarvis Grace and Elbert Jenkins, were in charge of the leadership emphasis week, held beginning February 19 through February 25. Two classes were taught each evening by various ones of the district and local branch. Evangelist A. D. McCall, District President W. J. Breshears, and Evelyn Breshears, district children's supervisor, participated in teaching the classes. There was an average attendance of fifty.—Reported by JULIA MAE WILSON.

ONTARIO, CALIFORNIA.—The following officers were elected or sustained at the business meeting: pastor, Clyde C. Roberts; secretary and recorder, Bonnie B. Ritchie; church school treasurer, Charles Swain; church school director, Lewis Scott; music department director, M. Warren Tait; assistants in the music department, Ann Scott and Mary Ritchie; women's department leader, Marian Van Fleet; librarian, Neta Waller; Herald House representative, Guy Waller; young people's director, Fern Roberts; auditors, George Swain and Kenneth O. Duffy; historian, Kenneth O. Duffy; pastor's counselors, Charles Swain and Kenneth O. Duffy.

Brother Lewis Scott, a building contractor, is chairman of the building committee. The women's department has contributed a great deal to the building fund.

On February 18, Kay Roberts was married to Bob Bowman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bowman of Chino. Kay is the eldest daughter of Pastor and Mrs. Clyde C. Roberts. Evangelist Louis Ostertag performed the single ring ceremony.

Ronald Nelson Van Fleet was married to Carol Winifred Dowker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Dowker, Jr., of Independence, Missouri, February 25. Ronald is the son of Nelson and the late Maude Van Fleet of Upland. Elder Herald Wixom, pastor of the San Bernardino Branch, performed the double ring ceremony at the Redeemer Lutheran church in Ontario.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer was present at the morning worship and Communion service February 4.—Reported by KENNETH O. DUFFY.

CARAWAY, ARKANSAS.—Seventy Z. Z. Renfro and Elder James Renfro held a two-week series in February. Three were baptized on the last Sunday of the series. This was the first time the new font was used. Those baptized were Lavanda Booth, Ershel Booth, and Myrtle Larsh, thus uniting three family circles in the church. Elders Paul Earnhart and C. A. Carmack assisted with the confirmation service.—Reported by J. RENFROE.

WINTHROP, ARKANSAS.—A missionary series was held January 24 through February 4 by Missionary James Renfro. Despite cold weather, the attendance was good. Wayne, Jr., infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Rogers of Wichita, Kansas, was blessed by Elder F. B. Sharp, pastor of the branch.—Reported by J. RENFROE.

MASSILLON AND CANTON, OHIO.—The members of the Canton-Massillon Branch completed the purchase of the former St. John's Lutheran church in Massillon on January 11. This building has a pipe organ and thirty-six twelve-foot pews.

Through the efforts of Sister W. Edward Razor, a member of the building committee, negotiations were started with Reverend Francis Machina, then pastor of the St. John's Lutheran church, on July 5, 1950. Completion of the negotiation took six months. Brother E. Guy Hammond donated his legal services for the transaction.

All repairs on the church are being taken care of, for the most part, by the members of the branch. Furniture, draperies, folding chairs, and hymnals, as well as other material are being donated.

Brother Bernard Rohrer is the pastor. Ray Ashenhurst recently completed a series of meetings.

PEORIA, ILLINOIS.—Branch Rally Day was held Sunday, February 11. District President Lyle W. Woodstock and family of Moline, Illinois, were guests for the day. Brother Woodstock gave the morning message, using for his subject "The Cause of Rightness." In the evening, the monthly fellowship supper was held in the church room at the Peoria women's club. Sisters Marcella Brady, Zaide Stearns, Virginia Cady, and Elva Taylor were the hostesses. The decorations were in keeping with a valentine theme, and the evening program included singing by those present led by Sister Lyle Woodstock. Sister Ann Lynn Hatton sang an amusing solo accompanied by her husband, after which he played a selection on his viola. The close of the program was a panel discussion entitled "What Makes Our Branch Tick," in which most of the officers of the various departments participated. Brother Woodstock closed the discussion with his talk on the duties and aims of the branch priesthood and the general church.

A farewell party was given at the home of Brother and Sister William Shotton, February 23, for Brother and Sister Jay Hatton. Mrs. J. F. Brady and Mrs. John Borah were hostesses for the occasion. The Hattons had been in the branch a year while Brother Hatton studied at Bradley University. Both are gifted musicians and contributed a great deal to the branch. They were presented with a gift from the branch before they left for their new home, Macon, Missouri.—Reported by GLADYS L. HEGWOOD.

CENTRAL MICHIGAN DISTRICT YOUTH CONFERENCE.—Elder John W. Blackstock was granted permission of the district conference last fall to organize a youth council. Elder Robert Ball of Houghton Lake, Priest Don Barber of Farwell, and Deacon Clarence Provoast of Whittemore were appointed to serve. The council met shortly after the district conference last fall and planned the year's activities. The first of these activities was a youth conference at Prudenville, February 11.

The branches of the district were represented by 106 young people. The theme for the conference was "We Live and Work for the Kingdom." A worship service directed by Don Barber opened the conference. Apostle and Sister C. G. Mesley attended and led discussions of the following subjects: "Branches Fit for the Kingdom," "Homes Fit for the Kingdom," "We Develop Our Talents for the Kingdom," "We Enjoy the Privileges of Winning Our Friends to the Kingdom."

A dedication service, directed by the district president and his counselor, Elder Ben Ouderkirk of West Branch, closed the conference. Apostle Mesley and two members of the youth council also assisted in the service.—Reported by ELDER ROBERT BALL.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—The church building has been sold, and the Saints are conducting services (temporarily) in the Highland Park Branch Y. M. C. A. auditorium on 570 Jamaica Avenue in Brooklyn, near Cypress Hills. It may be reached from Manhattan by using the B.M.T. Jamaica Line train to the Cypress Hills station (by the cemetery), or via the Eighth Avenue Line of the Independent subway system, transferring at East New York station to Route B-56 bus which passes the Y. M. C. A. Visitors to the city of New York are invited to contact the pastor, Perce R. Judd of 144-35 Charter Road, Parkway Village, Jamaica (Tel. JAMAica 3-4963) or LeRoy Squire, 4060 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn (Tel. DEWey 9-8471).—Reported by L. A. HARTSHORN.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.—The district conference convened in San Diego February 11 and 12. Classwork began in the afternoon with Apostle E. J. Gleazer teaching the adults in the auditorium. A period of special classes for church school leaders, music directors, Zion's League, and women's leaders was conducted. The priesthood met separately with Bishop D. B. Carmichael giving instruction on the financial law. Bishop Stanley Kelley conducted an adult class, discussing tithes, offerings, and surplus.

One hundred and seventy members were present at the business meeting. On the stand with the district president, Rodney Engel, were his counselors, Harry Hampton and Peter Whalley, Bishops Stanley Kelley and D. B. Carmichael, and Apostle E. J. Gleazer. The following officers were elected to serve the district: president, John Davis; counselors, Rodney Engel and Herald Wixom; women's leader, Marian Van Fleet; church school director, Mildred Calkins; music director, Warren Tait; young people's supervisor, Hugh Kensler; secretary, Madeline Osterreich; treasurer, D. B. Carmichael; auditor, Lee Casey. Brother Carmichael was sustained as bishop and chose Brother Engel as his counselor. Brother L. J. Ostertag was sustained as district evangelist.

The names of the following were presented for priesthood ordination from San Bernardino: Clifford McGuire, teacher; Millard Caldwell, priest; Fred M. Savage, elder; from San Diego: Donald Eugene Hada, priest; Fred L. Tignor, priest; Kenneth Arkley, priest; Ellis M. Shimel, elder; from Santa Paula: C. C. Burdick, elder; Jack R. Evans, priest.

Prayer service was held on Sunday morning. The theme was also the theme for the conference, "A Reasonable Service."

Two hundred and eighty-nine were present at the eleven o'clock service at which Apostle Gleazer spoke. He combined the theme of the conference with a part of the ninetieth Psalm.—Reported by PHYLLIS CARMICHAEL.

PITTSBURG, KANSAS.—Apostle D. O. Chesworth was the speaker at the morning hour January 21.

Mr. R. G. Smith gave a book review, Look Younger, Live Longer, by Gayelord Hauser for the three women's groups at Pittsburg and later at the district conference at Joplin, Missouri, February 11. The book contains much data concerning nutrition and care of the body.

The Zion's League, under the direction of Dale Swall, is studying Exploring the Church, by Elbert A. Smith. Mrs. Roy Heller is the teacher.

Harmony Circle, one of the women's study groups, is studying Let Us Worship, by C. B. Hartshorn. Mrs. T. W. Bath is teacher.

Mrs. John Cochran was hostess to the combined women's groups January 4. Mrs. I. G. Wilson conducted the lesson on "Aids to Spiritual Growth."

Mrs. T. W. Bath gave a history of the Herald Publishing House and displayed a full year's edition of The Evening and Morning Star for 1832, the church's first publication, at the Golden Key Circle, January 9. Kathryn Cochran was hostess.

Those from Pittsburg who attended the Book of Mormon Institute at Independence were Elder J. W. Jones and Mrs. Roy Heller. Brother Jones made wire recordings of many of the lectures.

The young people attended a Zion's League retreat at the reunion grounds January 13-14.

The Two by Two group, young women and their husbands, are now studying I Witness for Christ, by Blanche Mesley. This group had a Thanksgiving dinner at the church with District President Stephen Black as speaker. They presented the evening service December 1, which was a pageant written by Maurine Crownover. On January 29, the Two by Two's had a covered dish supper at the home of Harold and Marian Summers. In October they had a chili supper for the branch at which time they received $70 to be applied on the purchase of a new instrument for the church. Mrs. Warren Jackson is president.

The combined women's groups met February 1 at the home of Mrs. Leonard Boone. Mrs. T. W. Bath presided. The program was a forum discussion on building a happy marriage. Those who took part were Mrs. Lewis Bennington, Mrs. Harold Summers, Mrs. Earl Burns, and Mrs. Roy Heller.—Reported by Esther Heller.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—November 16, the Zion's Circle held a harvest luncheon at the church. Esther Schrunk was the hostess.

Thanksgiving baskets were delivered to the needy by the Zion's League under the direction of Mrs. George Gates.

The Zion's League gave a Christmas play, "The First Christmas in America," December 17, under the leadership of Mrs. June Williams.

"Night in Judean Hills" was the Christmas cantata presented by the choir. Elder George D. Gates was the director.

A number of young people attended the Yuletide Youth Conference held in Omaha, December 30 and 31.

A series of missionary meetings was held in January. The speakers were Elders E. Y. Hunker and F. T. Schrunk. The subject was the Book of Mormon.

Ladd and Betty Duryea were hosts for the young adult meeting January 11.

The Zion's League held an early morning fellowship meeting January 21 at the home of Brother and Sister George D. Gates.

The Baldwin electronic organ was initiated February 2.

The young adults held a branch dinner February 9 at the church.

February 17, the Zion's Circle held a bake sale in one of the local grocery stores in Lincoln.

Doris Krahl was baptized.—Reported by EUNICE FULTON.

EUGENE AND SPRINGFIELD, OREGON.—A two-week missionary series of cottage meetings was held in different homes from January 26 to February 9. Elder Elwin R. Vest, missionary for the Oregon District, conducted the series. At the close, seven were baptized. They were Ray Sizemore, Violet Sizemore, Bob Burbe, Max Treadwell, Judy Sargent, Dale Coop, and Joyce Barnhart.

The confirmation service was held February 8, with the district president, Elder J. L. Verhei, Elder Elwin A. Vest, Elder Lowell D. Schultz, and Elder Z. A. Coop in charge. After the confirmation service, the group went to the home of E. N. Barnhart for refreshments and visiting.—Reported by GIRELDA BARNHART.

The Nature of Priesthood

A TEXTBOOK FOR PRIESTHOOD STUDY

By Charles Fry

This booklet of twelve lessons on priesthood has been prepared for the benefit of the members of the priesthood and for any other persons wishing to study them. The research for this publication has been made almost entirely in the Three Books of Scripture adopted by the church as standard, and the chapters cover grades of priesthood, offices growing out of the priesthood, historical aspects, organization, gifts and blessings through the priesthood, responsibilities under the priesthood, and general aspects of the priesthood offices.

As Little Children

By Donna Weddle

IN MATTHEW 18: 2 these words of Jesus are recorded: "Verily, I say unto you, Except ye . . . become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." I have been familiar with these words for as long as I can remember; but I did not fully comprehend them until I began to see the greatness of their challenge exemplified in the life of our six-year-old son.

One night when Ronnie was in his fourth year, I promised him he might sleep with me—which he was rarely allowed to do. In the early hours of the morning I was awakened by his sobbing, as he tried to climb out of bed. He said his stomach hurt. I picked him up and put him back on the bed. He was perspiring heavily, and his pajamas were completely soaked with perspiration. Between cries he asked me if I would get Jesus' oil. I went to the cabinet and got the consecrated oil, and he reminded me not to forget to say a prayer. I knelt beside him and prayed very briefly, in words I thought he would understand. As soon as the prayer was over, he said, "Mommie," in such a cheerful voice that I could hardly believe my ears. "Mommie, my tummy doesn't hurt any more." He was stronger than I, for I asked, "Are you sure?" (O ye of little faith!)

He answered confidently, "Yes, Jesus made it well." As I leaned over to hold him close to me, I was aware that his pajamas were as dry and warm as if I had just ironed them and put them on him. In less than five minutes he was sound asleep.

"According to your faith, shall it be done unto you."—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 8.

Except ye become as little children . . .

PERHAPS MOST MOTHERS have had a youngster say something to them similar to what I heard after scolding Ronnie quite severely, and as punishment for his behavior, forbidding him to do something he wanted to do. He lashed out at me with, "When you treat me like this I wish I had someone nicer for a Mommie."

I had a very large lump in my throat, for he had never said anything like that before. I sat down beside him and tried to show him that he, and not I, was responsible for his being punished. When I could see that he understood, I diplomatically changed the subject. In less than an hour he came up, put his arms around me, and said, "Mommie, I'm glad you punished me. I want you to help me to be good like Jesus." His eyes filled with tears as he added, "I'm afraid Jesus won't forgive me because I keep being naughty." I tried to explain to him about God's wonderful mercy and understanding. Then I thought, "Would that most adults, including myself, could be as repentant and full of humility as this five-year-old youngster who knelt by my knee and prayed for forgiveness and guidance."

"He that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5.

Except ye become as little children . . .

IN THESE DAYS of comic books, cheap literature, and many radio, television, and movie shows unfit for young eyes and ears, it is sometimes difficult to guide children to read "all good books." Surely we cannot expect our youngsters to read just anything in their early years, and then overnight, at a given age, be willing to be discriminate and read "good" books. Ronnie always has had good church literature as well as the Childcraft books, Children's Activities magazine, etc. He has built up a great respect for the Three Standard Books of the church and loves to have stories read directly from the Bible or the Book of Mormon—stories he has learned in simpler forms in his own books. I heard him quote the Word of Wisdom to a man whom he saw smoking.

One Sunday he came home from church school so excited he could hardly talk. "In the sand table we had a sea—which was really a mirror—and there was a little ship. And, Mommie, do you know what was on that ship? A little brass ball. And we pushed the ship a little bit, and a little more, and a little more, till there we were—in the promised land!" No child was ever more excited over a western movie than was he, at four years of age, over the story of the journey of Lehi and his family to America.

"Whosoever treasureth up my words, shall not be deceived."—Matthew 24: 39.

Except ye become as little children . . .

RONNIE WENT THROUGH quite a period of wanting to see Jesus. I talked to him about the Spirit of Jesus, about seeing the influence of Jesus in the lives of others, etc., but he wanted to see a personage. He even got to the point that he talked about dying; because, in an effort to keep from fearing to die, we had told him that after death good people went to live with Jesus. I then tried to talk to him about his not being ready to die, because he had not yet done the work God put him on this earth to do.

Finally one day he came out in the kitchen and said, "It seems like I heard voices in the sky." I asked him where, and he said just outside his bedroom window over the driveway. I asked him if it were singing, thinking possibly he heard the neighbor's radio, but he answered, "No, it was Jesus' voice, and he said, 'Behold! Ronnie, when you are a big man and die, you can come to live with me.'" He has not since talked about dying or seeing Jesus as a person. His imagination? Perhaps . . . but I prefer to think that children are closer to Divinity than we sometimes realize. Did not God talk to the boy Samuel?

"My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me."—John 10: 27.

Except ye become as little children . . .

LAST SUMMER we of the Stone Church congregation were privileged to see for the first time Alta Seal's lovely painting, "The Dawn of a New Life," which now hangs over the baptismal font. Ronnie was quite impressed, and a new interest in baptism was aroused. We had a long talk that Sunday afternoon, and as I told him the story of the baptism of Jesus, he began to scowl. I asked him what troubled him, and he said, "Wasn't Jesus more powerful than John?" I told him that Jesus was the most powerful man ever to live on this earth, for he was the Son of God. Then he asked, "Why didn't Jesus baptize John, instead of John's baptizing Jesus?"

And did not John make the same query? "I have need to be baptized of thee, and why comest thou to me?"

The wisdom and understanding of a child is amazing, yet some of our own people doubt if a youngster of eight can understand enough to be baptized.

"Seek not for riches but for wisdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 3.

Except ye become as little children . . .

HOW OFTEN have you heard someone say of children, "Don't you wonder what goes on in their little minds?" Frequently if you keep one ear open when children are playing, supposedly unobserved, you can get an idea about what they are thinking. One particular time I heard Ronnie singing over and over to an obviously original tune, "Jesus is my friend, Jesus is my friend." I asked him where he learned the song, and he explained that he just made it up—a simple, but sincere, expression of what was in his heart and mind.

"My soul delighteth in the song of the heart; yea the song of the righteous is a prayer unto me."—Doctrine and Covenants 24: 3.

Except ye become as little children . . .

ONE WOULD HAVE to be heartless not to be touched when listening to children pray their own prayers. I am constantly surprised at new things injected into our children's prayers. For weeks after Ronnie saw pictures in the newspaper of the great destruction of homes in a storm, he prayed for the people concerned. Our three-year-old prayed for a Zion home after he had heard a story from the Zion's Hope on that subject. We had tried not to talk about war in front of the children and made a habit of spelling out K-O-R-E-A, until one night Ronnie prayed, "Please help the people in Korea, where the war is." News broadcasts had not entirely gone over his head.

We have a family worship service, including morning prayer, as soon as the boys finish their breakfast. Ronnie prays for guidance and watch-care each noon before he goes to kindergarten; the boys take turns saying table grace; and of course they say their evening prayers. Ronnie has expressed the thought a number of times that it is so nice that we can pray whenever we want to . . . and many times have I walked softly away as I have come upon him, a six-year-old, praying.

"Pray without ceasing."—Mosiah 11: 149.

Verily I say unto you, Except ye become converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Backyard Missionary

Young Bobby was at last playing contentedly in the back yard. Anne, his mother, gave a sigh of relief and went back to her wrecked morning schedule. She hoped that one hour would be time enough to get a whole morning's work finished and that no more interruptions would come.

Later she carried out the garbage and stopped to notice neighbors all around looking into her backyard and smiling. . . . What was Bobby up to this time?

What a sight greeted her eyes! Bobby, like a fledgling rooster was high on the top of the playhouse wildly waving his arms. Along with the motion he was shouting, "Jesus loves me, this I know—for the Bible tells me so."

At the end of her patience Anne started for him. At least he could sing something besides a hymn if he was going to shout so loudly. Then she stopped short—Bobby was sincere. He knew Jesus loved him and in his tiny-tot way he was proclaiming that great love to his small world.

Waving a greeting to her neighbors and throwing a kiss to Bobby, Anne went back to her work. The loudest "Jesus loves me" that Bobby could ever sing wouldn't be loud enough to reach the many ears that should hear of Christ and his way. . . .

New Horizons

Experiment in Living

By Bernard Butterworth

THE YELLOW LIGHT in his laboratory flickered and finally went out altogether. It was four A. M. Thomas Alva Edison had succeeded after five continuous days and nights of experiments in perfecting the early wax-cylinder type of phonograph.

Probably no greater name in science is linked with experiment than that of Edison. His successes were not, as has been supposed by some people, due to luck or blind happenings. His experiments fill over one thousand notebooks. On the storage battery alone, he made over 50,000 separate experiments. Few of us realize when we turn on a light, talk over the telephone, or watch a movie, that these conveniences are due to the struggles of a man who experimented thousands of hours for their development and perfection. Behind these inventions are tiresome research, sleepless nights, and countless tears.

Science is founded on experiment. Experiment is a trial made to confirm or disprove something doubtful; an operation undertaken to discover some unknown principle or effect, or to test some suggested truth. There are few a priori truths. We must submit on every hand to experiment.

LIFE ALSO IS AN EXPERIMENT. The people who succeed are those who use their faculties for the enlargement of their souls. Long ago the great teacher, Alma, said: "If ye will awake and arouse your faculties, even to an experiment . . . then ye will . . . say . . . that the word is good, for it beginneth to enlarge my soul; yea, it beginneth to enlighten my understanding; yea, and it beginneth to be delicious to me."—Alma 16: 151, 154.

Here Is the Writer

At present Bernard is a biology major at the University of Michigan, where he is also president of the student church group. He attended Graceland '47-'49, was president of the student council, and a member of Lambda Delta Sigma. His major interest is music, and last summer he directed the "Mikado" at the campus in Independence. He has been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1931 and serves in the office of priest. His brother, Edward, is a Seventy in the Tahitian Mission.

How can we experiment with our faculties? In any investigation, we must begin with some theoretical conceptions or definitions of the facts we are looking for. Further, we must have some notions of what kinds of facts are related to each other. As a help, we can build upon previous data, either confirming or rejecting the evidence. We should never be hindered by theory, but demand proof by experiment—testing for ourselves every variable. And most important, we must have an urgent desire to discover new truths and principles.

To what extent has FAITH worked for us? Using the supposition that "faith can remove mountains," let us experiment with it. We cannot be content to peer through the rose-tinted spectacles of optimism, seeing faith as a force which brought to Job the conviction that "though He slay me, yet will I trust Him," or healing to the woman who touched the hem of His garment. We must never be content to see it work for others and fail to tap the unknown possibilities it can contribute to us today. Let us not permit time and distance to retard our determination to experiment with this great force. And though experiments may not produce the desired end, the experiment is not a failure. Every experiment is a success even though it has not resulted in the predicted product. It can serve as a valuable lesson for guidance in future work.

What was the secret of the successes of Peter, Paul, Martin Luther, and Joseph Smith? Was it perhaps the contactability of God through their methods of prayer? Perhaps we have never learned to pray. Many of us have never experienced full satisfaction through our praying. Perhaps we must change our methods. There must be more to prayer than the closing of our eyes and uttering of words. A faint heart never conquered a theory. Shall we make this year productive by conquering this, another great spiritual force which awaits our consumption?

ABUNDANT LIVING, I am afraid, has become a lamp post for many of our drunken ideas to lean on. We do not live abundantly. We so often continue in our narrow daily routine. We never really live fully. Educated men are humbled by the vast amount of knowledge that none of us can ever know. Open an encyclopedia and scan its pages. Make a list of subjects you know something about. Over against this, list those that have no meaning to you. The comparison justifies an experiment in reaching out after new knowledge. Life can be an exciting adventure. There should never be a dull or idle moment. Vast fields of literature, music, science, arts, sports, philosophy, and religion are at our finger tips. Let us make a resolution to examine and explore at least one new field this year.

Wisdom is always respected. We can enlarge our souls by experiments in faith, in prayer, in abundant living, in steadfastness, and in enthusiasm. And further, an experiment is never finished. When desired results are discovered, we must keep right on experimenting to find improvements and perfection.

OUR CHURCH is a laboratory for guided experiments. Let us use it well. We must not be content with getting by. We must dare big things for God. Great ideas produce great people. We must aim high and push hard. If we do, there is no limit to our progress and happiness.

But we must never rely on our own strength alone. We must never become too educated, either by university training or by experience and experiment, to become self-sufficient. The combination of our wisdom and the favor and direction of God will result in miraculous events—for "with men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength . . . They shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and faint not."

One Mind Many Tastes

By Ione Sartwell

It's the little things that trip us up. During the past year, while attending college, I lived in a house where there were thirteen other girls from the east coast, the west coast, and the Middle West. We got along well; the differences in our customs, mores, etc., never bothered us—that is, until we were granted cooking privileges. Then each of us discovered that every one of us had the strangest eating habits. The girls from the large cities liked food spelled with accent marks and strange-sounding vowels; the Midwesterners preferred the meat-potatoes-vegetables variety. Some made pancakes small and dainty; others made them as big as the skillet. It was not unusual to hear, with variations, "Beans on toast! Who ever heard of it?" A standard form of teasing was sticking our noses in each other's kettles and saying, "What is that?"

Now I had gone to Graceland previously and had learned all about how everybody's differences are good, right and understandable, so I was prepared not to stare at the Indian girls on campus dressed in their long, flowing saris, or the Mennonites on the streets with their black bonnets and beards. Nor did it bother me in the slightest that half the girls in the house were Jewish. Yet I caught myself thinking my roommate peculiar because she stuffed her tomatoes with cottage cheese!

That's what set me thinking.

In Zion we will be of one heart and one mind. True. But there will be Texans who still think Texas oranges are better than Florida ones; there will be Californians who still think avocados are delicious and Midwesterners who think they're not. Yes, it's the little things. We'll attend the same church, preach the same gospel, sing the same hymns. But, careful! lest we accuse Sister Spiffenberry of cheating on her tithing because she insists on mushrooms in her gravy!

GAZETTE

The Graceland Players, the school's dramatic organization, presented Julius Caesar on March 5 and 6. The production, directed by Roscoe Faunce, was notable for its use of modern dress and center staging. Featured in the cast were Lloyd Hurshman as Caesar, David Leonard as Antony, and Dick Howard as Cassius. All are from Independence.

* * * *

The motion picture, "The Razor's Edge," taken from Somerset Maugham's best-selling novel of the same name, was shown in the chapel. Proceeds will go to the Memorial Center screen fund.

* * * *

Apostle Charles R. Hield was the speaker at a recent Sunday morning service. His subject was "Today's Mission of the Book of Mormon."

* * * *

Graceland's Yellow Jackets took fourth place in the Iowa Junior College Basketball Tournament at Webster City, Iowa. After defeating Ellsworth Junior College and the highly rated team of Burlington Junior College, they were defeated in the semifinals by Waldorf Junior College. Terry Weldon, guard from Moorhead, Iowa, was named to the all-state team, and Jerry Hampton, guard from Cameron, Missouri, was named to the second team. Bob Wilcoxson of Lamoni and Kenneth Cochran of Joplin, Missouri, received honorable mention.

The Jackets also competed in the Regional Basketball Tournament at Norfolk, Nebraska. They defeated McCook Junior College, McCook, Nebraska, 56-43 in the first round of play, but in the second round were defeated 74-51 by Fairbury Junior College, Fairbury, Nebraska.

* * * *

Graceland's campus congregation has been divided into a number of "sectional" groups. These groups bring together students from the same sections of the country, such as the New England States and the Southern States. They will correspond with the leaders of the home districts and stakes. By receiving news of developments in the home branches, the groups will attempt to reorient their members to the branch life which they will shortly resume on returning home. Each group, with its staff adviser, will on occasion meet for worship services and social events.

Attention All Herald House Magazine Subscribers

This notice is of importance to subscribers of all Herald House magazines ("Saints' Herald," "Zion's Hope," "Stepping Stones," "Daily Bread," "Guidelines," and gospel quarterlies) who live in cities where the post office zoning system is in effect.

Until recently, the post office department has been lenient in its interpretation of the regulations requiring a post office zone number as a part of local addresses in most large cities. Effective immediately, however, we have been advised that no magazine mail to cities with the zone system will be accepted unless the zone number appears in the address. In the past, many of our subscribers in these cities have been lax in furnishing the zone number when ordering or renewing subscriptions to these magazines. In the future, it will be necessary for Herald House to require that the zone number be furnished by the subscriber. If this is not done, the subscription will necessarily be delayed while we ascertain either from the subscriber or his local postmaster the zone number in question. This delay can be prevented if all subscribers in all cities using the zone system will make sure that the necessary zone information is furnished when subscription orders are placed with local book stewards or directly with Herald House.

Introducing

H. LYMAN SMITH, Independence, Missouri (page 9), one of the dependable local elders who is active in the Walnut Park congregation, was born in 1885 in Gage County, Nebraska, and baptized in 1905. In 1911 he married Ethel B. Cochran. They have four sons: Alma J., Max E., Harry Lyman, Jr., and Charles F. Brother Smith explains: "I was reared under more or less frontier conditions. My father homesteaded land in western Oklahoma. My schooling consisted of common school and two years of high school at the old Kingfisher College in Kingfisher, Oklahoma." He moved to Independence in 1904 and soon began working at the Sheffield Steel Company. Recently he retired after forty-four years of continuous service, at which time he was honored by the company officers and employees. He was ordained a deacon in 1915 and an elder in 1918.

MARIAN (BROCK) BLUMENSCHNEIN, Independence, Missouri (page 14), was born in Bushong, Kansas, and was baptized at the Stone Church in Independence eight years later. She was graduated from the Fortesque high school in 1933, Graceland in 1938, and received her B.S. Degree from Iowa State College in 1940. She taught a homemaking course in the Bondurant, Iowa, High School and then became home supervisor for the Farm Security Administration in Mills and Montgomery counties in Iowa.

In 1942 she married Dr. John Blumenschein. They have four children: Brent, 6; Beth, 5; Tommy, 3½; and Laura Jo, 4 months. She is a member of the Auxiliary to Jackson County Medical Association, the women's department, and the Daughters of Zion. Her special interest is the Book of Mormon.

DONNA MARIE (SILSBY) WEDDLE, Independence, Missouri (page 18), was born on the old Mormon Trail at Pisgah, Iowa, in 1920, where she was also baptized in 1929. She was graduated from the Albia High School in 1936 and from Graceland in 1939, after which she entered North Texas State Teachers College and received her degree of Bachelor of Music in 1943. That fall she started teaching music at the Milo, Iowa, public school. In 1949-50 she taught in Lamoni. She was married to Frederick O. Weddle in 1944. They have two sons, Ronald, 6, and Dale, 4. She is a member of the Mu Phi Epsilon (National Honorary Music Sorority), the Stone Church Choir, the Messiah Choir, and the P.-T. A. She sang the alto solo with the Messiah Choir at the Auditorium last Christmas. She is supervisor of the Stone Church Cradle Roll Department, and also worked in the vacation church school last summer.

* ANCIENT SEEDS SPROUTING

A recent morning paper contained a remarkable little article about some Indian lotus seeds that were found by archaeologists in Manchuria, estimated to be more than 50,000 years old. They came into the hands of Edward J. Kelley, superintendent of parks in the national capital. Their age is calculated from the depth and character of the deposit in which they were found. A plant pathologist, Horace V. Webster, succeeded in causing them to germinate and begin growth. The two seeds are about the size and shape of small olives.

We hear and read remarkable things about seeds from persons who do not qualify as experts in such things. We do not question their honesty, but we may wonder, in such remarkable instances, at their competence and scientific exactness.

Here is a case, as far as one can learn from the account, in which experts discovered, preserved, and germinated the seeds. It would be most interesting to have more facts, together with evidence that no slip has occurred.

If this is true, and if the deductions of the archaeologists are correct, here is a most remarkable tribute to the toughness of life and its power to endure. How nature could pack into that small seed a spark of life capable of remaining dormant so long, apparently consuming no fuel to maintain it, and able to revive now, is a major mystery. The reader is amazed and silenced at this manifestation of the power of God in nature.

* VISIT TO GRACELAND

A trip to Graceland brought an opportunity to visit with the Evan Waldens in their comfortable, pleasant home, and to become acquainted with their two sons. Brother Walden has been Superintendent of Graceland's buildings and grounds for some time, and at present is directing the erection of the men's new dormitory, saving money by generous use of student labor, thus giving the men an opportunity to earn school expenses. It is going to be a fine, attractive building, harmonious with Walker Hall. If hopes are realized, it should be ready in the fall.

Sunday morning, February 25, gave us rain-drenched skies and a sodden earth, but students turned out bravely in large numbers for worship at the new Student Center. We discussed church books and publications, and afterward many of the students lingered to examine the display, showing much interest in resource materials. One of the young ladies played the Hammond organ beautifully, and a student was in charge of the service. Here is a fine, thoughtful, reverent group of church young people of whom we may well be proud. We believe that the students today are more mature and more serious for their age than we were.

As one revisits the Graceland campus old memories return of precious days and associations forever gone, and nostalgia fills the heart. One climbs the stairs of the Ad Building, notes that the treads are worn thin by generations of passing feet. The children, and the children's children are here today, and there will be more tomorrow. The "Greater Graceland" of which the pioneers dreamed is rising on the Hill, and will continue to rise in time to come.

News and Notes

PRESIDENT TRAVELS

President Israel A. Smith was in Caraway, Arkansas, March 25, at a conference of the Arkansas-Louisiana District. The new church at Caraway was dedicated at this time, and President Smith gave the dedication address. Apostle Percy E. Farrow was in charge of the conference assisted by Thomas B. Sharp, district president, and Missionary James Renfro.

President Smith plans to attend the conference of the Utah-Idaho District at Salt Lake City, April 7 and 8.

WEEK OF PRAYER

"Sources of Power for Today" was the theme of the opening address of the week of prayer, presented by President F. Henry Edwards Palm Sunday evening, at the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. The theme for the entire series, "A Way of Life for These Times," was presented each evening in addresses by Evan Fry. His topics were "A Righteous Life," "An Intelligent Life," "A Purposeful Life," "A Sacrificial Life," and "A Triumphant Life." The average attendance at each evening's service was over two thousand. Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp closed the series Easter Sunday evening with his subject, "I Am the Light of the World."

IN MICHIGAN

President W. Wallace Smith and Apostle C. George Mesley visited Flint, Michigan, attending the building fund dinner, March 17. Brother Smith preached at the Baltimore Avenue Branch and the Hamilton Avenue Branch in the morning and Port Huron in the evening of March 18. R. Melvin Russell is the pastor in Flint and Warren Chelline is pastor at Port Huron. March 19, the brethren made contact with Elders Everett Berndt and John Blackstock who were in Midland holding a series. President Smith preached at Lansing that evening. Brother Francis Boman is pastor at Lansing. President Smith visited and preached at Alto-Alaska, Michigan, March 20, and was in Grand Rapids, March 21. Brother James Phillips is district president in this area. President Smith met with the building committee while there and noted that the building is progressing nicely.

RETURNS FROM CALIFORNIA

Apostle Gleazer has returned to Independence from a two-months trip in Southern California District, Los Angeles Stake, and Northern California District. He was present at conferences for both districts as well as the stake. He also attended a priesthood institute in the Los Angeles Stake. Brother Gleazer noted that excellent interest was evident at all gatherings. This trip made it possible for him to visit many of the smaller congregations where in addition to rendering a preaching ministry he became acquainted with the local situations and the possibility for development in some of the newer congregations. Brother Gleazer also reported excellent visits with various key workers in these areas.

APOSTLES AT GRACELAND

Apostles C. George Mesley, D. T. Williams, Maurice Draper, and Reed M. Holmes journeyed to the Graceland campus, March 28, to meet with college students from their respective areas. At the close of each year at Graceland, emphasis is placed on the responsibilities and conditions that the student will return to in his home branch. The students are placed in sectional groups of north, south, east, and west. The apostles presented a picture of the situation in the areas to the students.

August Henry Witte

THAT FOUR-DECKER MAILBOX on Brother Witte's desk in the office of the Presiding Bishopric is often loaded with matters needing his attention. He is office clerk-cashier as well as Auditorium purchasing agent. He is responsible for accounting to contributors for all incoming funds and "tries to keep some sixty people happy by supplying all their wants and needs for office supplies."

He was born in Frederick, Oklahoma, but moved to a farm near Hartsburg, Missouri, when he was one year old. When he was a sophomore in high school, his parents moved to Kansas City. Here he was graduated from Northeast High in 1929. The next two years he worked for a company which constructed dikes on the Missouri River. The next six (depression) years he was employed as assistant cashier of the Bank of Hartsburg. In 1937 he began the work at the Auditorium in which he is now engaged.

During his high school days he was a member of the Art, Literary, and Hi-Y Clubs. He also served on the student council. He was active in church work at the Bennington Heights congregation, serving at various times as church school teacher, Zion's League officer, young people's director, choir member, Scout committeeman, and associate pastor. He also served Kansas City Stake as Zion's League treasurer, young people's director, and Men's Club secretary.

In 1944 he married Alta Marie Thorburn, daughter of Evangelist and Sister George W. Thorburn. They have two children, Richard August, 5, and Marilyn Marie, 5 months. Brother Witte was ordained a priest in 1937 and an elder in 1941. The family now belongs to the West College congregation where Brother Witte is a Scout committeeman, choir member, and group elder.

This is the man who writes receipts for the church funds sent in to headquarters. Handling cash and checks doesn't bother him, but trying to keep everyone around the many offices of the Auditorium supplied with paper, typewriters, chairs, and files occasionally wrinkles his brow. "It's Augie this and Augie that until I consider my truest title is General Flunky," he says.

Now Is the Time

"Now is the accepted time now is the day of salvation."—II Corinthians 6: 2.

THE IMPORTANCE of the present moment in your life and mine—as well as in great national and international affairs—is pointed out in the January-February issue of It's Said and Done, a publication of the Dictaphone Corporation. The theme is so well stated that we would like to quote most of it:

Perhaps the most realistic philosophy that has come down through the ages is the realization that in our individual and collective lives, local and global action, planning and thought should be based on the conditions of now.

A man can go wild hashing over his mistakes of the past. He can go looney trying to peer into the future. He functions best, is most in tune, and certainly most potent, in the now.

There is no defeatism in now. In yesterday and its blunders, yes. In tomorrow and its unpredictable problems, yes. But now we can cope with things—as men have since recorded history.

A ball player who can't step up to the plate now and be determined to hit the ball because yesterday he struck out will soon be out of a job.

A storekeeper who moons over all the goods he had yesterday that he wishes he had today would be in no mood now to greet a customer with anything but a whine. Let him accept that what he's got for sale is what he has now.

This now business, recognized by St. Paul and countless other saints and sinners who hammered a personal philosophy out of their own turmoil, can save individual and collective lives now.

So let's point out to ourselves and our children now the sound principles upon which this great free country depends. Let's quit talking about yesterday and tomorrow and let today—now be our incessant care.

An editorial writer who doesn't put down what he needs to know never gets much punch in his copy. We're sold, editorially, on now—and three other little words.

Love (as against) hate
Good (as against) bad
Light (as against) darkness

What we want now is in the first column. What a lot of the world has now is in the second column.*

WE SPEND so much time regretting the past and fearing the future, that we neglect a much more important time, the present. It is wise to plan a life and look to the future, but not to be a slave to it.

I have always liked a few lines of "The Salutation of the Dawn," contributed long ago by some writer in Sanskrit, the parent tongue of all our Indo-European languages:

For Yesterday is but a Dream,
And Tomorrow is only a Vision
But Today well-lived makes every Yesterday a Dream of Happiness,
And every Tomorrow a Vision of Hope.

"Today well-lived"—an eloquent phrase, very full of meaning. We do not have to travel all of life's journey in a single day, nor carry all its burdens at once. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," said Jesus.

IT IS BETTER to do some little thing, to perform some small service, to make or build something of value today, than to dream of great things to come and brave deeds for tomorrow. He who is able to accomplish something now, today, this present moment, is worth more to the world than one who is forever planning grandiose adventures and stupendous achievements.

There are people who will promise you anything in the world—tomorrow; but getting any little thing done today is often difficult.

Hendrik Willem Van Loon once paid this tribute to his energetic Dutch compatriots: "The Dutchman regards the world as his apple, and he will have it now, if you please!"

A friend who was visiting me said, "This is the hastening time. We've got to hurry!"

"God isn't in a hurry," I replied. "He has all eternity."

"Yes, but I haven't," he answered. "My time is short. Whatever I am to do in this life, I must do soon."

THERE IS WORK to be done for God, now. There are souls to be saved, today. There are bills to be met "on the first of the month." There is a word of testimony to be spoken for Jesus, not next year, not next week, not tomorrow, but this very instant. If we wait, the time may be forever past. If there is a good word to speak to a friend, say it now, for you may never meet alive again, and tomorrow may be too late.

Whatever should be done or said, do it or say it now. For it is not only possible that your friends may not be here tomorrow. You may not be here!

Priesthood Institute—Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa
June 10-17, 1951

A priesthood institute sponsored by the General Church will be held at Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, June 10-17. This institute will be open to all members of the standing ministry (local priesthood) of the church who may find it possible to attend.

Special attention will be given to work of the local ministry, that is, worship, preaching, teaching, administration, ministry to children, ministry to youth, ministry to young adults, etc.

Seven days will be filled with worship, instruction, study, fellowship and recreation, with actual down-to-earth, on-the-job training in pastoral work being the keynote.

Board and room will be provided on the campus at a reasonable price. The charges for registration and tuition will be nominal.

Administrative officers in stakes, districts, and branches are urged to give special attention to this most unusual opportunity with a view to having their respective areas well represented at the institute.

Watch the columns of the Herald for additional information in regard to courses offered, costs, etc.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

Across the Desk

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The Presidency received a report from Dr. Floyd M. McDowell concerning his meeting with the Junior College Association in Des Moines recently. Brother McDowell was introduced as a charter member of the organization, as well as the first dean of the first junior college in Iowa. His book on junior colleges in the United States is the first nation-wide survey in this field and is still recognized as a standard text. We quote from his report:

I have just returned from Des Moines where I attended some of the sessions of the American Association of Junior Colleges, and where I addressed the North-Central Section of the association representing some eighteen states.

In my brief address, I reviewed the early organization and development of junior colleges, the movements and trends which persist today, and the more enduring ideals which were basic in the junior college movement, and then stressed my conviction that the junior college could save its soul only if it shifted its emphasis from the "secular" to the "sacred." I emphasize the historic fact that our oft-repeated ideals—freedom, justice, brotherhood, good will, etc.—were the contribution of those peoples who believed in a sovereign God and a living Christ, and that these ideals would be preserved and perpetuated only by those who both believed and practiced such faith. Finally, I said that since Communism was not merely a political theory but a "religion," it could not be combated except by those possessing a deep religious faith—a deep, abiding Christian faith.

I was happily surprised at the reception which my address received. A considerable number of junior college leaders representing different churches and schools and various sections of the country went out of their way to congratulate me.

I was especially happy that the church and Graceland received the recognition which they did. Graceland was well represented by several members of the college staff. Brother Gleazer is on the administrative committee of the larger association and secretary of the North-Central Section. Also the concert choir sang last evening at the annual banquet.

I appreciate very much the opportunity of re-establishing contacts with this organization. I heard favorable comments that a member of a college board would take the trouble to sit in on a meeting of this kind.

A Testimony of Healing

MIRACULOUS HEALINGS WERE claimed by Christian believers long before the Restoration Movement began, and some new churches have made health and healing central in their message to a sick and troubled world since that time. The church has never claimed any exclusive rights to the mercies of God, nor has it set forth the claim that the healing of the body is proof of organizational superiority. Nevertheless, Latter Day Saints have long appreciated the love of God as expressed to them in the times of their physical suffering and need, and many of their public testimonies stress this evidence of God's love.

Recently our attention was called to a testimony that comes from an outside source. This is quoted in Church History, Volume one, page 91, and originally was printed in Early History of The Disciples in the Western Reserve, Ohio, by A. S. Hayden. Elder Frank G. Hedrick has a copy of the book and recently verified the quotation. We believe readers will find it interesting.

Ezra Booth, of Mantua, a Methodist preacher of much more than ordinary culture and with strong natural abilities, in company with his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, and some other citizens of this place, visited Smith at his home in Kirtland in 1831. Mrs. Johnson had been afflicted for some time with a lame arm, and was not at the time of the visit able to lift her hand to her head. The party visited Smith partly out of curiosity, and partly to see for themselves what there might be in the new doctrine. During the interview, the conversation turned on the subject of supernatural gifts; such as were conferred in the days of the apostles. Someone said, "Here is Mrs. Johnson with a lame arm; has God given any power to men now on earth to cure her?"

A few moments later, when the conversation had turned in another direction, Smith arose, and walking across the room taking Mrs. Johnson by the hand, said in the most solemn and impressive manner, "Woman, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, I command thee to be whole," and immediately left the room.

The company were awe-stricken at the infinite presumption of the man, and the calm assurance with which he spoke. The sudden mental and moral shock—I know not how better to explain the well-attested fact—electrified the rheumatic arm. Mrs. Johnson at once lifted it up with ease and on her return home the next day she was able to do her washing without difficulty or pain.

The Testimony of the Witnesses

By President W. Wallace Smith

I AM HAPPY TO BE HERE this morning and have the opportunity to discuss the testimony of the witnesses. I imagine everyone who has been on the speaking program will be relieved after this lecture is over so that he can go ahead and mention the testimony of the three witnesses without feeling that he is stealing someone else's thunder.

I think because this matter dealing with the witnesses is factual—that is factual evidence to be presented—it must largely be a review of the historical material. I cannot, like Mark Twain, say that I depend on my memory for wit and on originality for facts in a case of this kind; although there are those who would accuse Latter Day Saints of doing so in this matter of bringing forth the Book of Mormon and the testimony of the witnesses. It is necessary to go back into history and present those things which have to do with the testimony of the witnesses and call them up in your thinking so that they become part of you. I hesitate sometimes to mention some of the things having to do with these witnesses, because I feel that they should be a part of you and have been memorized by you so that you can repeat them verbatim. I want you to join with me in faith as we try to recapture what must have been an almost inconceivable thrill to those men who were allowed to become witnesses to the authenticity of the Book of Mormon.

I wonder if you feel as I do when talking about the thrill that came into the lives of these people as they were permitted to become witnesses to this Book and to view the plates and other things that had to do with its coming forth. It is somewhat like the thrill that comes to me as I stand looking at the flag of the United States and listening to our national anthem being played—an indefinable emotion that goes up my backbone and ends in my consciousness, making me feel that here, indeed, is something of great significance. I would like for you, with me, to try to recapture some of this feeling, some of this thrill that undoubtedly came into these men's lives as we think about the witnesses.

Quite often when we talk about the Witnesses of the Book of Mormon, we do not mention one of the central witnesses—Joseph Smith.

This young man at the age of fifteen was concerned about what might happen in his life and in the lives of other people; he was interested enough to go to listen and try to sort out what was true in the various presentations of the religions in that day. History tells us that he was a normal child and led a normal life. His education, as far as his early childhood was concerned, consisted of only the grade schools at Palmyra, New York. Possibly he didn't go to school after he was thirteen because he was needed to help on his father's farm. However, in his early manhood he felt the necessity for additional education, and he made up for his lack of formal schooling by study. At the time of his death he was acquainted in the field of language, law, history, and government and had become what might be termed an educated man. As we go back in history to investigate his life, we find that wherever he lived and with whomever he associated, his actions were always honorable.

There have been those who tried to refute this. There have been those who have gone through a great deal of study to try to find out something disreputable about him so they might look down upon him; they have attempted to find him guilty of some misdemeanor for which he might have been incarcerated as a young man, so they could discredit the things he did. Instead, these people have found that the record he left behind him bespeaks honesty, honorableness, industry, a capacity to learn, and the ability to get along with people. I think we will have to admit that he held steadfastly to the mission he set out to perform, even though it was costly in the way of physical and mental suffering. He was thrown into the Liberty jail and received the persecution of the people who would brand him as an impostor. Later he was incarcerated in the Carthage jail where he was assassinated.

During his life he held fast to his mission, continuing in the way which would bring a realization of the fullness of the gospel to other people. So as we think of the witnesses to the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, we cannot disregard this man who was one of the central figures. There are still not enough reasons advanced to give us cause for disbelieving him and the things he taught. Even those who do disbelieve him are under obligation to explain the Book of Mormon and its coming forth.

IT IS RECOGNIZED that the testimony of Joseph is strengthened by the supporting testimony of other witnesses. This is recognized in the word of God revealed to us early in June, 1829, previous to the time that the plates were viewed by the three witnesses.

Behold, I say unto you that you must rely upon my word, which if you do, with full purpose of heart, you shall have a view of the plates, and also the breastplate, the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim, which were given to the brother of Jared upon the mount, when he talked with the Lord face to face, and the miraculous directors which were given to Lehi while in the wilderness on the borders of the Red Sea, and it is by your faith that you shall obtain a view of them, even by that faith which was had by the prophets of old.

And after that you have obtained faith, and have seen them with your eyes, you shall testify of them, by the power of God, and this you shall do that my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., may not be destroyed, that I may bring about my righteous purposes unto the children of men, in this work. And ye shall testify that you have seen them, even as my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., has seen them, for it is by my power that he has seen them, and it is because he had faith; and he has translated the book, even that part which I have commanded him, and as your Lord and your God liveth, it is true. Wherefore you have received the same power, and the same faith, and the same gift like unto him; and if you do these last commandments of mine, which I have given you, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; for my grace is sufficient for you; and you shall be lifted up at the last day. And I, Jesus Christ, your Lord and your God, have spoken it unto you, that I might bring about my righteous purposes unto the children of men.—Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1-3.

I want to say something about what is recorded in the second verse of this particular section. It reads, "And after that you have obtained faith." This is basic to the whole matter of the testimony of the three witnesses. We have been talking about the translation of the Book of Mormon and those engaged in it. Oliver had been assisting Joseph Smith in the translation by writing for him, and they had come across that passage in which it is said that there should be witnesses to the Book of Mormon. They had asked their Heavenly Father to reveal to them how this could be done and who would do it, and this testimony came to them as a result: "And it shall be done by your faith." The Lord told them that after they had obtained faith, they should be allowed to see these things, and after having seen them, it would be their responsibility to witness to them.

I should like to bring this up to date and call attention to the fact that it is through the acquisition of faith that the testimony of the truth of the Book of Mormon comes to us. If we read it, doubting its authenticity, looking for things which we can use to disprove it, there is a possible chance that in spite of our doubting there will come a testimony of its truthfulness. But it will come much stronger if we ask in faith, believing that the book is true, and that it is indeed a record of the peoples who came to this continent.

I know there are those who have read it who are incredulous and are looking for a way to discourage others who are making a study of it before joining the church. Yet there often comes a testimony to them in such strength that they can't resist it.

While talking with one of the elders in Independence recently, I asked how he became acquainted with the work of the Reorganization. He said it was through reading the Book of Mormon. He had been looking for a way to discourage others from joining the church, but the testimony came so strong to him that he couldn't resist, and as a result investigated further and joined the church himself.

NOW, I WANT TO TALK about the testimony of the three witnesses. Who were they? I have mentioned Joseph Smith as being one of the central figures who witnessed the plates. The others are Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris. I should like to read for you the testimony of the witnesses as it is recorded in the Book of Mormon. I do this because I am afraid there are those in the audience who haven't read this for some time, and I think it should become so familiar that we can quote it almost verbatim.

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people, unto whom this book shall come, that we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken; and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shewn unto us by the power of God, and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bear record that these things are true; and it is marvelous in our eyes, nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.

(Signed) OLIVER COWDERY.
DAVID WHITMER.
MARTIN HARRIS.

Oliver Cowdery was born in 1806 and died in 1850. He knew the Book of Mormon was coming forth before it did, as he talked to Joseph and told about the things which were leading up to it. He worked across the desk from Joseph in the translation of the Book of Mormon and wrote much of it as it was translated through the power of God. He bears witness to the truthfulness of the things he saw and knew. In his later life things occurred which estranged him from the church and from Joseph Smith, yet on his deathbed he said to David Whitmer, "Brother David, be true to your testimony of the Book of Mormon."

David Whitmer was born in 1805, the same year that Joseph Smith, Jr., was born, and died in 1888 at Richmond, Missouri. Martin Harris was born in 1783 in eastern New York and died in 1875 at Clarkston, Utah.

These are the three witnesses mentioned in the Book of Mormon. I will have more to say about them later.

NOW I SHOULD like to read the names of the eight witnesses of the Book of Mormon: Christian Whitmer, Jacob Whitmer, Peter Whitmer, Jr., John Whitmer, Hiram Page, Joseph Smith, Sr., Hyrum Smith, and Samuel H. Smith.

I also want to read the testimony that comes from these men that we have recorded in every copy of the Book of Mormon:

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that Joseph Smith, Jr., the translator of this work, has shewn unto us the plates of which hath been spoken, which have the appearance of gold; and as many of the leaves as the said Smith has translated, we did handle with our hands; and we also saw the engravings thereon, all of which has the appearance of ancient work, and of curious workmanship. And this we bear record with words of soberness, that the said Smith has shewn unto us, for we have seen and hefted, and know of a surety, that the said Smith has got the plates of which we have spoken. And we give our names unto the world, to witness unto the world that which we have seen; and we lie not, God bearing witness of it.

Christian Whitmer died in 1835 in close fellowship with the church of Jesus Christ. Jacob Whitmer separated from the church in 1838. Peter Whitmer, Jr., died in 1836 in full fellowship. John Whitmer was separated from the church in 1838 but in 1836, as editor of the Messenger and Advocate, made this statement regarding his testimony (Church History, page 55):

John Whitmer, one of the eight witnesses, when leaving the editorial chair of the Messenger and Advocate in 1836 in an address published in March issue of that year said, "It may not be amiss in this place to give a statement to the world concerning the work of the Lord as I have been a member of this Church of Latter Day Saints from its beginning. To say that the Book of Mormon is a revelation from God I have no hesitancy, but with all confidence I signed my name to it as such. And I hope that my patrons will indulge me in speaking freely on this subject as I am about leaving the editorial department. Therefore I desire to testify to all that will come to a knowledge of this address that I have most surely seen the plates from whence the Book of Mormon is translated, and that I have handled these plates and know of a surety that Joseph Smith, Jr., has translated the Book of Mormon by the gift and power of God.

Note that the particular statement, "by the gift and power of God," appears frequently and in this thing the wisdom of the wise men assuredly has perished.

Therefore, know ye, O inhabitants of the earth wherever this address may come that I have in this thing freed my garments of your blood, and whether you believe or disbelieve the statements of your unworthy friend and well wisher.

In the Church History as written by Heman C. Smith, we read:

To us he wrote in 1876 in harmony with the foregoing: The testimonies given at various times by the very men who report says denied their testimony lead us to believe that said reports are not true, hence have no rightful place in history, especially so when we consider that no statement from them confirming the rumor has ever been authenticated.

Their testimony then stands unretracted and unimpeached. The reader can examine it, together with the circumstances under which it was given, and form his own conclusion as he expects to answer for that conclusion at the bar of God.—Ibid., pp. 57, 58.

Hiram Page died in 1882. He "fell by the wayside" in 1839, but he did not deny his testimony of that which he had signed as being true.

Hyrum Smith was killed on June 27, 1844, in the jail at Carthage by the side of his brother, Joseph.

Samuel H. Smith died in 1844 "faithful to the last." As I read that following his name, I was reminded of something I saw in the Herald several years ago. After the death of F. M. Smith it was said that his one desire in life was that he would be able to remain faithful. I should like to read from II Nephi 11: 133 and 144:

Wherefore, at that day when the book shall be delivered unto the man of whom I have spoken, the book shall be hid from the eyes of the world, that the eyes of none shall behold it, save it be that three witnesses shall behold it, by the power of God, besides him to whom the book shall be delivered. . . .

Wherefore, when thou hast read the words which I have commanded unto thee, and obtained the witnesses which I have promised unto thee, then shalt thou seal up the book again, and hide it up unto me, that I may prepare the words which thou hast not read, until I shall see fit in mine own wisdom to reveal all things unto the children of men.

AS THESE MEN visioned the plates and the other things which were given them to see, they made various statements and signed them.

David Whitmer, in an interview in 1898 at Richmond, Missouri, said he saw the plates of the Book of Mormon, also the brass plates of the Book of Ether, and many other plates. He said that he and the other witnesses went out expecting to see these things. As they sat together there descended upon them a light which was brighter than anything they could possibly imagine. It was more glorious and beautiful than any light they had ever seen, and before them on a table appeared many records and plates, the sword of Laban, the Directors which were given to Lehi in the wilderness, the "Interpreters"—as called by the Nephites—the Urim and Thummim, given to the Brother of Jared on the Mount. These are the things the witnesses were shown and continued to bear witness that they saw.

Here is a challenging statement by Hyrum Smith, one of the eight witnesses:

I have been abused and thrust into a dungeon and confined for months on account of my faith and the testimony of Jesus Christ. I thank God that I felt a determination to die rather than deny the things which my hands had handled and which I had borne testimony to wherever my lot had been cast. And I assured my beloved brethren that I was enabled to bear as strong a testimony when nothing but death presented itself, as ever I did in my life.

Could we do the same today if we were called upon to give a testimony of the truthfulness of this gospel? Are we prepared to make such a statement because of our belief and trust in God? Because of our faith, have we come to a knowledge of the truthfulness of this book and of the things which it purports to teach? I think many of us have.

I want to call your attention to something significant which many of you will be in a position to appreciate. This statement appears in the testimony of the eight witnesses who were, for the most part, farmers: "And this we bear record with words of soberness that the said Smith has shown unto us, for we have seen and hefted." How many of you when trying to determine the consistency of something have wanted to reach out and take it in your hands? Women do that when they go to buy a piece of material; they like to feel it. These farmers, as they were shown the plates of the Book of Mormon, wanted to "heft" them—to get the feel of them—to tell whether or not they were of light or heavy material. This statement bears particular significance because they were saying, "We have felt and we know of a surety" that the plates are of a weighty material, something that had substance and body to it, and appeared to be gold. Here is something which may not be of common knowledge to all students of the Book of Mormon. At a conference held in Orange, Cuyahoga County, Ohio, on October 25, 1831—at which, among others, there were twelve high priests, seventeen elders, four priests, three teachers, and four deacons—these witnesses stood together, lifted their hands, and swore that they had heard and seen that to which they had subscribed their signatures. As far as we know this was the only time after they had signed the document that they stood together and made such a declaration. It seems to me here again is additional proof that this Book is true, because it is hard to conceive that there would be eleven people standing together if it were not true. If there had been any doubt, surely at least one of them would have dissented.

In 1848 at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Oliver Cowdery said:

Friends and brethren, my name is Cowdery, Oliver Cowdery. In the early history of this church I stood identified with her, and one in her counsels.

WHEN I WAS A YOUNG MAN I made a trip to where David Whitmer lived in Richmond, Missouri, and viewed the various historical spots around in that area. I also went to Fishing River and Haun's Mill. In Richmond my attention was called to the fact that David Whitmer had lived the latter part of his life and had died there, and a monument was erected to his name. We went out to find it, and, I am sorry to say, at that time it was not very well preserved. We had to beat the tall grass down that had grown up around it in order to read the inscription: "The record of the Jews and the record of the Nephites are one. Truth is eternal."

THE RICHMOND DEMOCRAT said that David Whitmer was one of the most remarkable men ever connected with the history of Ray County. He never repudiated his statement regarding the truth of the Book of Mormon. He remembered the words of the angel to the last: "Blessed is the Lord and he that keeps his commandments."

There were those who were concerned about the testimony of these witnesses being preserved. There were those who would have liked to have had these men repudiate their testimony, and as a consequence there was a misquotation after an interview with a reporter in 1881 of the things which David Whitmer had said. In an attempt to rectify this, the paper in Richmond printed this statement which was ascribed to by some twenty-one or twenty-three people:

We, the undersigned citizens of Ray County, Missouri, where David Whitmer, Sr., has resided since the year 1838, certify that we have been long and intimately acquainted with him and know him to be a man of the highest integrity and undoubted truth and veracity.

This was signed by such men as General A. W. Doniphan; G. W. Dunn, judge of the Fifth district; C. W. Woodson, president of Ray County Savings Bank; A. T. Chiles, A. C. Garner; and some eighteen other men.

In the Saints' Herald, Volume 29, page 68, is an account of an interview conducted by W. H. Kelley and E. A. Blakeslee in 1882 in which David Whitmer made this statement:

It makes no difference what others say, I know Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and he translated the Book of Mormon by the inspiration of God from the plates of the Nephites. Some people think if they can only make it appear that Joseph Smith's life and character were not perfect and that he had human weaknesses that it would prove that he was not a prophet, yet the same person will believe that Moses who killed the Egyptian, and David who had Uriah killed and who took a multitude of wives, and Solomon who was a polygamist and idolater and Peter who lied and cursed, etc., were all prophets and should be honored and respected. What the individual life of Joseph Smith was after he translated the Book of Mormon has nothing to do with the question as to whether he was or was not inspired to bring that book forth.

And when he was asked later what manner of man he knew Joseph Smith to be, he said, "He was a religious and straightforward man."

I THINK WE SHOULD consider the testimony of these witnesses as much as we admit evidence in court. We sometimes admit evidence as given by one witness as sufficient to hang men, but here we have the witness of three at one time and eight at another, in addition to the witness of Joseph Smith, his mother, Lucy, and his wife, Emma, who were intimately associated with him during this time. These witnesses could easily have found good reason to repudiate the statement which they had made and signed but so far as I have been able to determine, there has not been produced any authenticated evidence that one of these persons denied that which he saw and felt and heard as a witness to the divine coming forth of the Book of Mormon.

The Power of Suggestion

By Maude D. Anderson

THERE IS A STORY told of a man who claimed there was nothing to the power of suggestion. His friends thought it would be a good joke to gang up on him and prove that he was wrong. Each one who met him on a given morning was to tell him that he looked ill. Although he started to work feeling like a million, by early afternoon he went home and to bed ill.

One sometimes wonders what effect it would have on the world if all of the newspaper commentators were to get together and stress all of the good things that happen in our country, cutting to a minimum the unpleasant events. It couldn't do any harm, and I'm quite sure it would be a novelty at least. I guess most of us like to listen to Walter Winchell, not because of what he says, but the way he says it. It sounds exciting; and whether he brings us a bit of new scandal or not, it stimulates interest.

In many places throughout the country, organizations work to put over some worth-while project and individuals frequently do meritorious acts of kindness, but they get little or no publicity in the newspapers. However, if some self-centered individual wants to make the headlines, all he needs to do is go out and commit a crime and he is immediately the center of interest. The more atrocious the act, the more newsprint he rates—he may even warrant a few pictures if he is bad enough.

In recent months there has been quite a campaign over the radio to get people of all denominations to attend church, and no doubt it has done much good. But the real need of the world today is to develop mass thinking to the place where it will crowd out the sordid. As long as we are in the world and dealing with human beings, we cannot expect perfection, but we can learn to look for the beautiful and the good, and publicize it.

Most people have to be educated in the appreciation of classical music—and the same is true of many other beautiful and worth-while things—but the enjoyment to be derived is worth the effort.

THOSE WHO INSIST that all facts of an unpleasant nature must be revealed, remind us of the person who contemplates a hideous photograph of a friend and quotes, "The camera never lies." It may not lie, but it can certainly distort. Most people do not consider a photograph "good" unless it flatters them. They not only want to look their best, but want their good points emphasized and their bad features minimized. The same things should be remembered in portraying events or the things that people do.

It is really amazing what the moving of a light or two can do for a human countenance. It may bring out the beauty of eyes which would otherwise not be noticed, or throw into shadow a whole series of double chins. A tilt of the head may change an ugly nose into one that is almost beautiful.

So it is in portraying the character of people. If the beautiful and the good are emphasized, people soon forget to look for the ugly.

ONCE KNEW a woman who could relate wonderful spiritual experiences, but she spent far more of her time in dragging family skeletons from the closets of her friends and acquaintances. By the time she got through dressing them up, they couldn't even recognize themselves. How much happier everyone would have been if she had locked these ugly things more securely away from public gaze.

What a different world we might have if everyone would start the day by publicizing some pleasant "rumor." It might be well for all of us to remember the words of Robert Burns, "There is so much good in the worst of us, and so much bad in the best of us"—

Complexion Care

If it is true that God cursed some people with a dark skin because of their sinfulness, and that history repeats itself, why aren't we watching our complexions more closely these days?

Thanks a Million and More!

By Bishop A. Neal Deaver

EVERY worth-while deed or contribution becomes enhanced only as we give it its due recognition. Likewise, it becomes our duty to acknowledge those gracious expressions of appreciation which come to us.

In the business of caring for the ill and afflicted, we very often come to realize that we are dealing with people at a time when they, shall we say, "feel at their worst." Or perhaps they or members of their families are disturbed by an accident or a health condition which has suddenly beset the family. At such times as these, all of one's resources in the use of kindness, friendly words, considerate encouragement, and assurance must be mustered when the utmost is being done for the ailing patient in a professional way.

Days later, when the patient has once again regained his physical well-being and mental confidence, the true unfolding of appreciation and thankfulness approaching affection toward his doctor and the quiet-mannered, kindly-spirited, yet proficient nurses, becomes realistically apparent. Then it is that he visualizes the whole of things: he was critically ill and he did need friends—professional friends—and he found them in the hospital, the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Many of the almost eight thousand patients who come yearly to the hospital to recover from their illness or to be treated for an accident have never heard of our church. They soon come to feel, however, that somewhere behind the small, kindly voice and sympathetic hands of the nurse who cared for them lies a conviction which enshrouds the soul—a sincere belief and confidence in God as taught by our church. And out of this magnified and contagious spirit of love for mankind has come a desire to serve humanity—a desire which has become an obsession. It is into this environment and into these consecrated hands that the patient has come and recovered, and to which he looks with gratitude and a heart full of that feeling which does not always find expression in his usual conversation.
