Under the influence of these and other good men the work quickly developed among their friends, and from the meetings in the shop kitchen, they rented a room on Church Street, Ashton New Road, Bradford. Events moved quickly and, leaving the Church Street meeting room, they purchased a house on Hawke Street, which was a little farther up the Ashton New Road area. The lower part of the building was occupied as business premises by the late W. H. Greenwood who used it for boot and shoe repairs. The upper part of the building was made into a large and fairly respectable meeting room by having all the partition walls removed. It had one disadvantage in that the staircase came up in the center of the hall, and caused some amusement to those who were seated behind it when, during the service, the head of a late comer would be seen suddenly coming up through the center of the floor.

While at Hawke Street, under the supervision of G. W. Leggott who had become pastor, a fund was organized to which each member paid the sum of threepence per week for the purpose of buying a more suitable place of worship. This fund increased rapidly until there was sufficient money to go ahead with the project.

Let me give you a few words leading up to that climax of the Hawke Street effort, and I think you will see clearly with me that the salt of the earth was indeed working to bring to pass the purpose that was in the mind of God.

The Hawke Street Branch gained many new members, and their zeal was such that they wished to convert their friends. Just a few streets away from this meeting place was a somewhat dilapidated, corrugated-iron building. This was known locally as the Gospel Hall and was occupied by the Plymouth Brethren. G. W. Leggott, T. Taylor, the old peddler, and others carried the Latter Day message to these people on many occasions, until the leaders became angry with them and at last ordered them out of the building, forbidding them ever to enter it again.

The old peddler stood with the brethren outside the place and with uplifted hand said, "Never mind, brethren. The day will come when that building will belong to us." Some little time later the Plymouth Brethren put the building up for sale. The brethren of Hawke Street attended, and a remarkable thing happened. Some people who were also in attendance with the object of purchasing the building stated that whatever sum the Latter Day Saints were prepared to pay, they would be ready to pay more. Now these Plymouth Brethren, who had in times past ordered the Saints out of their meeting house, stated that they preferred to sell to them rather than anyone else, and so the Gospel Hall came into the possession of the Saints, and the prophecy of the old peddler was fulfilled. You are all, of course, aware that there now stands on that spot a respectable brick building well-known throughout the whole church.

A CONCERTINA BAND

While we were still at Hawke Street, and prior to the events I have just related, we organized a concertina band of forty instruments with keyboards ranging from the smallest size to one so large that the player had to have the instrument suspended from his neck by a leather strap an inch and a half in width. This heavy instrument was played by the late G. W. Leggott. I had one of the smaller ones, and still have it to this day.

We marched through the streets carrying the message of the gospel with us, and stood at the street corners while the crowds gathered to hear such men as J. W. Rushton and F. G. Pitt preach the Word.

On one occasion we gave a recital in the old North Manchester Branch meeting house on Collyhurst Road. This was a building standing in its own grounds and capable of holding about two hundred people—more at a crush. A police constable was passing at the time and came into the Hall. Upon being asked why he had come in he said, "I was passing along on my beat when I heard the music, and as I stood and looked at the building from the outside, I wondered how in the name of goodness the folks had managed to get a pipe organ into a building of that size." He was amazed when he found that the "organ" was a concertina band, and he asked permission to stay and hear more.

SOME DISTINGUISHED "ILLITERATES"

Quite recently at a conference where the merits and demerits of the Northern District rules were under discussion, I overheard a young elder discussing the matter with Brother Eugene Theys who was over here on a visit from his appointment in Germany, and I confess that I felt some degree of chagrin to hear the young elder say: "Well, you know, Brother Theys, after all, it must be remembered that the men of those days were only illiterate men."

I wished sincerely that the young elder had known those men as I had known them; he would not have thought them illiterate. Like Paul, who had sat at the feet of Gamaliel, I had sat at the feet of these men and learned their message, and having learned it, I believe I can truthfully say that through the grace of God I have been able to carry that message to thousands of souls, have been able to convince many of its truth, and have baptized them into the church and kingdom of our God.

Let me call your attention tonight to a few of these so-called illiterates. Elder Joseph Dewsnup, Sr.,—"Father" Dewsnup, as we called him—was the overseer of the city of Manchester; his son, Joseph, an inspector in the Manchester city police; another son, Ernest, a graduate of Owens College (Manchester University), the first President of Graceland College, and later Professor of Economics at Liverpool University; W. R. Armstrong and S. F. Mather, both school headmasters; James Baty, Sr., assistant registrar to the city of Manchester and first patriarch of the British Mission, and Nathan J. Weate, city surveyor of the city of Manchester. It is obvious that the young man who referred to them as illiterates never knew them.

The sincerity of these men was evidenced in many ways, and I well remember their calling a meeting of the ordained men at which they decided it was not seemly that men should be called to lay hands on people, either for sickness or any other reason, with their own clothes reeking with the smoke of tobacco. Although the church had not then taken a definite stand upon this matter of priesthood members being addicted to the use of tobacco, these men decided to give up the use of tobacco and not to raise their hands in favor of anyone's being ordained to the ministry who was known to be using it.

Whenever you are apt to brood over the idea of the decadence of the work in this mission, let this be a beacon light to you. These men who brought the work to us were no mere illiterates, but men of intelligence, and their work lives on in the lives of those who heard their message. Though the pews of many of our branches may be empty, yet the work still lives.

THE "SALT" HAS NOT LOST ITS SAVOR

For years I labored in Rhonda Valley and the Vale of Ogmore. There I have gone in homes of strangers and been amazed to find that though these people were not members of the church, yet they had on their bookshelves the works of Latter Day Saintism; and when I talked to them about the gospel, they were full of the Restoration message, for they had received it through their parents and grandparents.

I had a most wonderful experience some years ago. I was traveling from Gloucester to Llanely with the late Elder J. W. Meredith of Birmingham Branch when I found out that the car I was driving did not have sufficient petrol to take us to our journey's end. I decided that I would pull up at the first place where there was any chance of getting a supply. By and by we came to a place just outside Lydney where we saw a building composed of three old railway carriages forming three sides of a square. We decided to get out and make some inquiries. It happened that we had seen a motor cycle in the square formed by the carriages, so I was hopeful.

We knocked at the door and were invited inside after we had made known our need. The man left that part of the building, and we were alone. I saw at one end of the apartment a large bookcase, and as I am always interested in good books, I went over to have a look. Imagine my astonishment when I saw right on the top shelf a full set of the Millennial Star, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. At the left side of the case, hanging on the wall was a framed picture of a church and what appeared to be a ceremony of laying the foundation stone. My eyes almost left their sockets when I saw that the persons who were performing this ceremony were Gomer T. Griffiths and F. G. Pitt.

On the other side of the case was another picture which showed the building completed, and standing on the steps along with many others whom I did not know, were Gomer T. Griffiths, F. G. Pitt, and Heman C. Smith.

The man returned with our petrol, and when we got into conversation I found that Brother Meredith knew him well. It did not take long to find that here was a man whose family had been valiant workers in the church, his father having been responsible for the building of the Lydney church. The family had become estranged through the usual kind of misunderstandings that arise in our work; but it was evident that although he had been out of touch with the work for some years, the old fire of Latter Day Saintism still burned in his breast, and he was very proud to exhibit the pictures and the books of the church. I am happy to tell you that we were able to get this man in contact with his church privileges once more. The salt had not lost its savor, although he was separated from church contacts.

A LARGE CHURCH ABANDONED

I was once introduced to the Mayor of Neath. He told me that at one time there had been ten thousand members of the church in Neath alone. After my talk with him I was taken to a big stone church a few streets away. It was a house of worship equally as large as any Methodist chapel in this city of Manchester. The floor space would hold two thousand people and there was a balcony running right round the building that would hold another thousand people quite easily.

My guide told me, "This was one of your churches in Neath." I stood on the platform where the Restored Message had been preached and thought of the good men who had occupied there as ministers of the gospel. Then I looked round the building and saw that it was being used as a junk store for an auctioneer. I felt the tears smart in my eyes.

UNDYING POWER

This was the answer to why many of the homes in Wales were filled with the latter day message, and why on many of the bookshelves were the works of the church. I took consolation in the thought that after all the message was still in their homes and in their hearts, a fact that was evident as you talked religion to them.

It was my privilege on one occasion (in the winter of 1920, I believe) to attend a conference of ministers called together by the Anglican church in the city of Leeds. The chief speaker on the platform was Bishop Weldon, one-time Dean of Manchester, and I had a seat that was only a few feet away from him so that I could hear every word quite distinctly. After a speech of about fifteen minutes on the work of evangelism in the church he said: "The Church that is not open to receive continued revelation from Christ, its head, is a dead church." This from a bishop of a church that for centuries had declared that the canon of Scripture was full!

Where did the good Bishop get this idea? Some two or three years previously he had led a very vigorous campaign against Mormonism. The papers, the hoardings, the theaters, everywhere there was the flame of his endeavor to wipe out this scourge. Of course as was always the case, the Reorganization came under the scourge of this campaign. In self-defense our men were forced to seek an interview with Bishop Weldon in order to present our side of the issue. It was made clear to him that we did not in any way associate ourselves with the doctrines of the Utah Body. Our belief in angelic ministration was explained to him, and stress was laid on the fact that we as the church of Christ believed in continued revelation. This impressed the learned man so much that he took sides with us on the day when the great assembly met in Albert Hall on Peter Street.

As our men walked down the street to the meeting, they were met with boos, hisses, and stones, and some very uncomplimentary epithets were shouted after them; but all this was changed by the statement of the bishop on the public platform before thousands of people. He said, as far as my memory serves me with the correct words:

"Ladies and Gentlemen, I want to make it clear at the outset of this meeting that the feelings I have expressed in relation to the people known as the Mormons of Utah and Latter Day Saints do not in any way apply to the church known as the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints; for I find that they are in no way associated with the former body, nor do they agree with its teachings. I regard them as an honorable body of men, worthy of our respect."

The Bishop at Leeds had not forgotten the matter of divine revelation.

Ever since I have retired on pension, I have made it a custom to go to a blitzed site at the corner of Market Street and Deansgate where one can see the modern "Men of Athens" at work. Here I have heard every kind of discussion under the sun—Anglican side by side with the Catholic Evidence Guild, the Pentecostal, Apostolic, atheist, agnostic, Socialist, and Communist—all giving out their dogmas with loud voices, and the Mormons in a corner by themselves.

I had often seen among this collection a very small English clergyman. One day I walked over to his crowd and was amazed to hear him saying that Christ had gone to preach to the spirits in prison, in order to give them the opportunity of accepting the gospel and becoming members of Christ's church on the other side of the veil. When questioned as to where he had got authority for preaching that doctrine, he said, "It is in the Bible, friend." True, it has been there all along, but in my sixty-eight years of life I do not remember the Church of England preaching it before. In my heart I was convinced that here again was evidence that the salt had been at work and had sifted into the minds of these men, who, on hearing it from the Latter Day work, had read it for themselves and were forced to admit that it was sound truth.

A SCENE OF TRAGEDY

Quite close to our meeting house in Leeds there is a church where a terrible tragedy occurred some years ago. The children had been giving a Christmas show, and most of them were dressed in flimsy garments to suit the occasion. Somehow one of the number got his clothing too near the temporary lighting that had been fixed for the purpose of the show. It immediately burst into flames and as he ran among the rest of the children, all of them were set aflame. They made a rush for a staircase leading out of the building, and in their anxiety to escape got jammed in a huge struggling heap. Over 100 of these children were killed, most of them by being crushed to death, others by the flames. The place was gutted, leaving only the shell of the church standing.

The church authorities later built a new church at the side of the burnt-out one, leaving the burnt-out shell as a witness to the tragedy that had deprived so many mothers of their children.

Quite close to this church lived an old lady who was a member of this congregation, and somehow this event played on her mind to the extent of making her wonder why such a thing should have happened to those innocent ones. She began to study more of her Bible and, in the course of her studies, got in touch with the late Thomas Taylor of Leeds, who provided her with a goodly supply of our tracts.

I went one day to visit her, and found on a sideboard in her kitchen a pile of our literature. I said I was glad to see that she was interested in our tracts and hoped she would find them of use in her search for new truth. She answered quickly, "Sir, I am not the only one who is interested in them." Then she told me that the minister of the church near by came regularly every week and would take one or two of the tracts. The following Sunday he would give a sermon from those same Latter Day Saint leaflets, and the people of his congregation were amazed at the truths he propounded, for they knew they were not Episcopalian. Surely he sowed the seed of truth, and who is going to say where it will lead?

I listened on the radio the other night to a scientist speaking about poisons, and how in the laboratory it was possible to find the smallest trace of poison in the human body, even though that body had been interred for some time. He said that a superficial examination may not reveal any poison, but a close test such as was given in the laboratory would soon prove the presence of the poison.

To illustrate his point, he said, "If you take a teaspoonful of salt and mix it in a large pail of water, then taste the water, you would not taste the salt at all, the volume of water being so great in comparison, but the laboratory test would prove that not one particle of the water would have escaped the penetrating influence of the salt."

Every housewife knows that the moment she puts salt into the compound she is mixing, it is lost sight of entirely, but there is no question of its effect on every bit of the mixture.

I know that for the economy of the church it is well that numbers be added through the waters of baptism, and I would suggest that it is now up to you young folks to see to it that every nerve is strained and every sinew bent to that end. But don't lose heart if people do not come in as fast as you would like. Sow the seed, salt the earth, and leave the issue with God.

EFFECTS OF MIGRATION

Now just a closing word about the loss of numbers in our mission. I am not going to pretend that I can outline all the reasons; nor will I pretend that I know them; but there are some things that I do happen to know.

Take as an example the case of North Manchester Branch. That branch was known as one of the most active in the British Isles. It had a membership of over 150 with a regular attendance of 120. Suddenly the emigration bug got hold of the members and in a few short months many of them left for other shores. The Smith family, nine children and the father and mother, went to Australia, where they are to this day. They were quickly followed by the Nixons, another five; then the Turners, five more, all to the land of Australia. Then the Hugheses went to the States, then the Millses, Paxtons, and several others. Soon this branch found that it had to close its

The Purpose of Spiritual Gifts

By Gerald Gabriel

Scripture: Doctrine and Covenants 46: 4-9

Now concerning spiritual things, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led.—I Corinthians 12: 1, 2.

WE FIND IN II PETER 1: 21 that "prophecy [and this applies to other spiritual gifts as well] came not . . . by the will of man." Since it is not by the will of man, nothing he can do will bring about the expression of these gifts unless he is moved by the Holy Ghost. The same applies today. The significant thing was (and is) that people must prepare to receive the Holy Ghost which did and will give expression through the spiritual gifts. No man can say "Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost," which is a prerequisite for the understanding of these gifts and a better comprehension of the Trinity. Apostle Paul names nine of these spiritual gifts in I Corinthians, chapter twelve, all of which are given by the same spirit—the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Spirit which works in harmony with God and Christ is not given to man in his natural state. He must be transformed as was Moses (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 7, 8 or Inspired Version preface page seven) when he talked with God (also I Corinthians 2: 12-14). Such transformation leaves men, to a degree, withered before him, as in the case of Moses, Joseph Smith, and others, whom the Holy Spirit has visited with much power. The Holy Spirit is also spoken of as the Comforter. There is no better description of the Holy Spirit, for it brings a comfort to mankind that cannot be found elsewhere. It is also the Abiding Comforter when once received and will abide as long as one continues to be receptive. Under the influence of the Holy Spirit one has a greater appreciation of Love and can better understand the expression of the Master, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love for one another." Under the influence of the Holy Spirit hatred melts away. The Holy Spirit, too, is referred to as the Spirit of Truth, which is received only by those who "know him and he dwelleth with you and shall be in you." This Spirit of Truth teaches truth and "brings all things to your remembrance" which the master has taught, and things which the disciples "could not bear" when he was here teaching.

MAN HAS A RESPONSIBILITY to perform if he is receptive to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. His responsibility is to trifle not with spiritual things and to study. Oliver Cowdery once believed that he could receive only by asking. He was spoken to in these words,

You must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me if it be right, and if it be right, I will cause that your bosom shall burn within you; therefore, you shall feel that it is right; but if it is not right you shall have no such feelings, but you shall have a stupor of thought.—Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3.

The disciples, on the way to Emmaus, had a burning within them when Jesus walked and talked with them after the Resurrection.

The Comforter, we are told, would not come to man unless the Master departed. His going away, however, would expedite the kingdom growth. "It is expedient for you that I go away." Human thinking is limited when it comes to attaching true spiritual significance to physical things. When the Master possessed a physical body and walked among men, they could not see him as he really was—regardless of the expression of the gifts through healings and miracles. When man receives the Holy Ghost as Christ gives it to him, he is able to do greater works than Jesus performed while on earth. Jesus hesitated to use the gifts, thinking man would not see the relationship between the physical and the spiritual. Those who receive the Holy Spirit have a greater responsibility than those who receive the Christ.

Wherefore I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men who receive me and repent; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him. . . . Matthew 12: 26, 27.

Once the light of truth has been received and is smothered out, gross darkness ensues, as in the case of open water fish. Desiring the warmth of a cave in the winter, or the coolness of the cave in summer, they enter and remain there several days enjoying it. When the fish decide to return to the open water, they find they are blind and remain so the rest of their days.

THE SPIRITUAL GIFTS are in the church for the edification of the body. They follow charity. They do not precede belief. They are signs that follow the believer. An unbeliever is not aware of the signs even when they are prevalent, as in the incident of Christ's restoring the ear of the servant of the high priest who had come to arrest him, and when the Pharisees were seeking a sign. Many signs and gifts had been performed but the Master pointed them to the sign of the prophet Jonas which foreshadowed his three days in the tomb and his resurrection (Matthew 12: 34-35). The spiritual gifts edify, making the church a living organism. Without the gifts there can be no abundant life for the members of that body.

The spiritual gifts, as expressed by Paul, are manifest that we might have an abundant life. Without any of these (wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, and interpretation of tongues) the body is not complete. Christ's body is a complete body—any other would be an apostate.

Wisdom is given that man might "lean not unto thine own understanding . . . be not wise in thine own eyes."—Proverbs 3: 5-7. It is good for man that he recognize his lack of wisdom; that he seek God—a God who giveth liberally. Lack of wisdom is given to some that they may be humble.

I give unto men weakness that they may be humble; and my grace is sufficient for all men that humble themselves before me; for if they humble themselves before me, and have faith in me, then will I make weak things become strong unto them.—Ether 5: 28.

Knowledge, as the other gift, is not given at the will of men. Study, attuned to the Spirit of God, results in knowledge.

Faith, as a spiritual gift, is different from faith as a principle—which is faith toward God, a process of growth. As a spiritual gift, it differs from faith as a belief, "The assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." The spiritual gift of faith is that which causes man to seek him diligently. It is sometimes thought to be closely akin to a talent. The just shall live by this gift. God deals with man according to the exercise of this gift.

IN THE GIFT OF HEALING, as with the other five remaining spiritual gifts, many are prone to think of it in regard to the spectacular. God is not in the business of exhibiting for amusement, nor for the satisfaction of idle curiosity. God does not work out of harmony with his laws. These are not a separate six, nor a separate one or two; they are part of a grand symphony for the life of the church. The healings of the Master, at times, seemed almost haphazard. He healed the ten lepers, nine of which were seemingly ungrateful. Few of those whom Jesus or the apostles healed played a significant part in the work of the church in that day. Mary exhibited greater love for the Master than did her brother Lazarus, who was raised from the dead. The raising of Lazarus caused the Pharisees to have a greater desire to kill the Christ.

It is commonly thought that when Jesus or his early apostles administered for healing, such healing was instantaneous. There are cases in which the healing took considerable time, and perhaps some of them were administered to several times. Paul was never completely healed of his eye trouble—poor eye sight remained to be his “thorn in the flesh.” Some were not healed, and others were healed only after fasting and prayer. The manifestation of this gift is the same today.

The gift of healing is, in part, a “sign that follows those who believe.” It is also to strengthen faith—a reminder of God’s love for us and his awareness of our needs. It helps us to appreciate his greatness and power. The gift of healing is not for missionary purposes. “See that you tell no man” was a frequent admonition from the lips of Christ.

Miracles were of secondary importance in the teachings of Jesus to his apostles. They were to teach the kingdom of God first, then the working of miracles. Jesus did not perform miracles in his home country because of unbelief. They were to be performed under the unction of the Holy Spirit after “the people with one accord gave heed unto those things” which were taught by the disciples. Jesus turned the water into wine, fed the five thousand, and rebuked the wind causing the sea to become calm; but never did he use this power in his own behalf—he did not call on the legions of angels to save him from the Crucifixion, nor did he turn the stones into bread when he was hungry.

The purpose of this gift is to glorify God and to display his love for those who believe. After turning the water into wine “his disciples [those who already believed on him] believed on him all the more.”

THE GIFT OF PROPHECY is for edification, exhortation, and comfort for the church. It is God’s revelation interpreted in the understanding of man—which is limited. “We know in part . . . we prophesy in part” is a fact of which Joseph the Martyr was cognizant. “The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.”—I Corinthians 14: 32. The purpose of this gift is made very clear in I Corinthians 14: 22. “Prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe.”

The discerning of spirits was with Peter when Ananias brought his surplus to the apostles. Satan can do miracles, prophesy, and “show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if possible they shall deceive the very elect.” God gave this gift to us “lest there shall be any among you professing and yet not be of God.” Prophecy and miracles can be of three sources:

1. Man—of his own planning and thinking. The great magician, Houdini, performed almost unbelievable feats of human origin and planning.

2. Satan has many ways of expressing himself to deceive men. The satanic magicians, by cunning craftiness, were able to turn their rods into serpents, turn water into blood, and to bring frogs upon the land.

3. God’s spirit always works in harmony with the “law and the testimony.” The expression of the Holy Spirit brings love, comfort, and truth. The purpose of this gift is obvious—that the sons and daughters of God be not deceived by man or by Satan.

The gift of tongues was given to the church at Pentecost that the saints might speak in other (not “unknown,” for I have never found a Scripture referring to the use of the unknown tongue) tongues enabling fourteen different nationalities to understand. This was not, however, a conversion experience. These people had to be taught the teaching of Christ before they were added to the church that day. This could, however, have been the interpretation of tongues—Peter and the other saints could have spoken in one language and the people have heard in their own tongue, as happened to the Burtons on the first trip to the Society Islands. Men with little or no knowledge of foreign language (or the correct use of English) are, under the spirit, able to speak beyond their education and natural ability.

The purpose of this gift is unlike the other gifts. It is given to attract attention but not to convert. “Therefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not.”—I Corinthians 14: 22. In the case of the early saints at Pentecost, we first see them gathered together in one accord, in one place; then the gift of tongues was manifested—not primarily for the saints, but for the nonbelievers. After they had asked the question, “Men and brethren, what shall we do?” they were told, “Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.” Miracles followed after their obedience to this admonition.

The gift of interpretation of tongues is necessary that the church and the nonbelievers may be edified. “For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace.” An interpretation may be given by someone under the influence of the spirit of interpretation, or it may be given as an added testimony by those who understand the tongue in which it is given. “If any man speak in another tongue let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret. . . . But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church.”—I Corinthians 14: 27, 28.

The promise is given, “He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do.”—John 14:12, 13.

May these gifts be used in humility with an understanding of the purpose for which they are given.

"The Missionary Courant"

A copy of The Missionary Courant, published at Moundsville, West Virginia, by our church people, has been received by President Israel A. Smith. W. A. Schoenian is the publisher, at 1302 Ninth Street, Moundsville, West Virginia; James S. Menzies, our missionary, is editor. The paper carries news and announcements for three districts: West Virginia, Youngstown, and Pittsburgh. The subscription price is $1.00 a year. This publication will assist the work of the church by keeping the people informed and giving encouragement to the workers in all departments.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

How complete will be the expression of Zion previous to the millennium?
Missouri F.E.

Answer:

Zion in latter days may have a small beginning but steadily grow to great proportions. We believe its greatest development will come during the millennium, but its attainment before the millennium will be of no mean proportions. It will be built up by the gathering of the Saints including the restored Lamanites who shall "blossom as the rose." Also the elect of Israel will be gathered from the four quarters of the earth. "What a gathering that will be!" They are spoken of as the righteous. The city will be a "Holy City," whose people are "pure in heart," and it shall "prosper, and spread herself, and become very glorious, and very great, . . . and the nations of the earth shall honor her." When Christ comes he will come to Zion (Isa. 59: 20). These references give us a glimpse of what Zion will be like, but beyond these we can only surmise.

Question:

Don't you believe God is working with all churches?
Missouri E.E.J.

Answer:

Deeds of kindness and mercy, and whatever works for the common good, cannot but be approved of God and be blessed with his co-operation.

But there are religious works performed officially as acts of the church, such as baptisms and other ordinances, when they are performed in a manner, or for a purpose differing from what the Lord had appointed, or being performed without his authority, which, because of their very nature, he could not indorse. The Lord has spoken of many such acts as "dead works," declaring that they "avail nothing," in which case we may be assured they are without divine confirmation.

Not all religious works are approved of God or have his endorsement. Jesus asked the Jews regarding John's baptism whether it was of heaven or of men. Some are of men but they can not answer the purpose of the true baptism. Jesus warned,

Many will say unto me in that day [of judgment], Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied [preached] in thy name; and in thy name cast out devils; and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I say, Ye never knew me; depart from me ye that work iniquity.—Matt. 7: 32, 33.

All such works must conform to the divine word in every respect or they can not be approved of God.

Question:

Must I quit dancing and using tobacco to become a member of your church?
Michigan J.R.G.

Answer:

The law of Christ as given in the Scriptures does not attempt to specify and define every detailed point under the term "sin." Good and evil are like day and night, one shading off into the other so gradually that it is impossible to draw a sharp line between the two. As to good and evil there is a "twilight zone" in which what one man counts as good, another will see as evil, the difference being in the spiritual perception of the man. The man who comes under the gospel and receives of the Holy Spirit will find an intensified power of perception so that he sees as evil what another man without that Spirit does not see and consoles himself in saying, "I see no harm in that." Jesus said of his Spirit, when he should come, that he "will reprove the world of sin"—that is, he would show sin in its true character, otherwise sin and evil are often deceptive as Jesus said of riches.

Many people living under the world's standard see no evil or harm in many things in which they indulge. But when they come into the gospel, under the pure Spirit of God, they discover there is evil where they had not seen it. To the sinner sin is pleasing and enjoyable. Alma writes of certain ones, "After being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, having their garments made white, . . . they could not look upon sin, save it were with abhorrence." The best way is to walk in the light, in the clear zone of righteousness, rather than in the twilight zone where there is danger of being led into temptation. The Lord has said, "Shun the very appearance of evil."

Question:

What constitutes authority in your church?
Missouri E.E.J.

Answer:

Authority comes with priesthood, and priesthood is a gift which Christ bestows upon men whom he calls to the ministry of his church. It comes by the power of his Holy Spirit, the same as other gifts of the Spirit. A man is "ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost which is in the one who ordains him," which removes him from any mere human action having no connection with divinity (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 12).

Priesthood is inherent in Jesus Christ and flows from him to those whom he chooses. It is the power under which they officiate, acting in his name and under his authority. By it, through the laying on of hands, the gifts of the Spirit and the powers of divine life are ministered to the people, including the gift of the Holy Ghost. In this way the membership at large share in the blessings which priesthood provides. It makes official acts, such as baptism, confirmations, ordinations, etc., authoritative, and the Lord is pleased to confirm the righteous works of his servants with blessings from above. The gift of the Holy Spirit is the divine promise of eternal life (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2).

Thus the authority of this church is truly the authority of Jesus Christ operating in and through his ministry.

A Builder of the Reorganization

Selections from the Memoirs of William Wallace Blair of the First Presidency

Part Two: First Missionary Work

Visiting Yellowstone and the Zarahemla Branch—1856

As the holidays approached, Mrs. Blair and I went by railway and sleigh to Blanchardville, Wisconsin, nearly 150 miles distant, meeting with Father Zenos H. Gurley and family at Yellowstone, and then with the Saints at Zarahemla. Here we witnessed most interesting and convincing evidences that they were the Lord's people, for the love of Christ and the gifts of the Holy Spirit were plainly manifest among them. Here we learned further of the wonderful manner in which the Lord had blessed and guided them in respect to the work of reorganization and the coming in the near future of Joseph, the son of Joseph, to be the president of the church.

The Ministry of Healing

Soon after our return home, I went to Amboy and there learned of the remarkable healing of Brother Jotham T. Barrett under the administration of Elders Gurley and Briggs when on their way to my place. I knew he had been suffering from bronchial consumption for a long time. He had been pronounced beyond all help by his physicians, but when these young elders called upon him, and at his request prayed for him and his family, it was revealed by the Holy Spirit that the brother would be fully restored; whereupon they administered to him according to the order of the church and he soon recovered excellent health, lived many years thereafter triumphant in the faith, and died of other causes.

In the spring of 1857 typhoid pneumonia was very prevalent in and around East Paw Paw. I had what was evidently a severe attack of it, suffered extremely for a time, believed God would heal me by the prayer of faith, and therefore, in the absence of elders, requested my wife to join with me in prayer for my relief. She sang a verse or two of a familiar hymn, knelt in prayer at my bedside, and in a few moments I felt sensibly and joyfully the presence of God's Spirit in my heart, from whence it spread with its healing power throughout my entire person, giving instant release from pain and fever, imparting sweet restfulness of body and spirit. This was immediately followed by gentle perspiration and quiet sleep from which I awoke next morning completely relieved of every symptom of disease, and after a short time entered upon my usual duties . . .

His First Mission—1859

From this time forward to the spring of 1859 the few who constituted the Reorganized Church were greatly blessed and comforted and taught of God's Spirit in proportion as they lived faithfully before the Lord, the Spirit frequently testifying at different times, in different places, that the Lord would soon call his servant Joseph to lead his church.

At the close of a conference held near Beaverton, Boone County, Illinois, April 6, 1859, on the request of Brethren William Aldrich and J. C. Gaylord of Burlington, Wisconsin, Brother Edmund C. Briggs and myself took a mission into their neighborhood, teaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the work of the Reorganization. These brethren had heard of the revival of the work of the church, and on attending the conference at Beaverton received such numerous and satisfying evidences that the work was ordaind of God and approved by his Spirit, that they readily united with it and sought earnestly to advance its interests. . . .

William Marks at Conference, 1859

On June 10 and 11, 1859, a conference was held at the schoolhouse near Edwin Cadwell's of Amboy, Illinois, Elder Z. H. Gurley presiding. This was one of the most spiritual seasons enjoyed in those days by the faithful Saints. William Marks, president of the High Council of the church and of the stake at Nauvoo up to the death of Joseph the Seer, met with us for the first time. He came with Brethren Aldrich and Gaylord at their urgent request, though doubtfully and reluctantly. But before the close of the first day's exercises, which were devoted to prayer, testimony, and partaking of the sacrament, the Lord gave him convincing and satisfactory evidence, by his Spirit, that the work we were then engaged in had its divine approval. The gifts abounded with the little congregation in a very notable manner. The gift of tongues was given to the little twelve-year-old daughter of Brother C. G. Lanphear; she arose and spoke therein as the Spirit gave utterance. A young married sister, Helen Pomeroy, a stranger to Brother Marks, arose under the power of the Spirit and walked down the aisle directly to him. (He was then sitting in the stand with Elder Gurley.) Lifting up her hands she said to him, "Thus saith the Lord; O thou man of God! In times past thou hast sat with my servant Joseph the Seer; and in times near to come thou shalt sit in council with his son. When I called my servant Joseph he was as a lone tree; but when I shall call his son he shall be as one of a forest."

Upon this Brother Marks arose, weeping with joy and gladness, and said, "This manifestation I know is by the Spirit of God. It is the same Spirit the faithful Saints ever enjoyed when I first received the gospel in the state of New York, and which we also enjoyed in Kirtland, Missouri, and at Nauvoo, when we lived uprightly before the Lord. I know by the evidences I see and feel here today that God loves and owns this people and the work they have in hand." And immediately when he sat down Elder Gurley explained briefly the former position and works of Brother Marks in the church. Then Brother Marks, upon vote, was received into fellowship with his former priesthood. . . .

Elder E. C. Briggs and I were here appointed a mission in Illinois and Iowa, and provision was made for us to go as far west as Council Bluffs. A goodly number were added to the church by baptism at this conference, and the Saints were greatly strengthened and confirmed.

June 21, Elder Briggs and I left home to prosecute our mission in the south and west, and we continued on to LaSalle and Chillicothe, then to Brother Rufus Benjamin's, three miles east of Princeville, Peoria County, Illinois. In all these places we distributed tracts and talked with the people, building up the interests of the work the best we could. Near the latter place we were opposed by Elder Z. Brooks, who, with others, sought to organize a church based chiefly on the Bible and Book of Mormon. . . . From this point we traveled on, fasting and praying. . . .

On the evening of the seventeenth [of July] we held service at the house of Brother George Morey [in Iowa] and at the close we were requested to administer to Helen, his daughter, who was confined to her bed by liver disease. It pleased the Lord to give her relief straightway, and on Monday, after preaching to a goodly number at ten o'clock, we proceeded to Grand River where I baptized ten persons, Miss Helen Morey being one of the number.

Another was a Miss Elizabeth Hartman, who the evening before made light of our administration to Miss Morey, saying she too would "be a Mormon if Helen were healed." And it pleased God to heal the latter also of a long-standing affliction, this blessing being sealed upon her by Brother Edmund Briggs in her confirmation the evening following. These two cases of healing were, for many reasons, very notable, for both were sorely afflicted and were likewise but recently instructed in the gospel of Christ. . . .

It should be borne in mind that a chief feature of our mission work was to tell the scattered Saints concerning the latter-day apostasy, the fact that God had begun to reorganize his church on its original foundations and was approving and blessing it with his Spirit, and to tell them also that the Lord had revealed to many by his Spirit, at different times and in different places, that the time was near at hand when he would call Joseph, the son of Joseph the Seer, to stand at the head of the church. We also taught and exhorted all to serve God faithfully, seek his blessings, and obtain testimonies for themselves that the tidings we bore and the word of God we preached were both ordained and approved of God. . . .

Early Results of Drinking

By Dr. Haven Emerson

When you choose to swallow alcohol, whether in low percentages in beer or in high percentages in wines, distilled liquors or liqueurs, many surprising things occur that you find it hard to explain or to understand.

BECOME IRRESPONSIBLE

First of all, you feel a change, a sense of warmth, a vagueness in your contact with others, a remoteness that makes you rather irresponsible. You talk more, your voice rises, you feel elated and think you are stimulated, while as a matter of fact your self-control and judgment are at once depressed. You no longer can trust your own or other people's conduct.

You've been told that you will be stimulated by beer, wine or whisky. You are surprised to find that anything you do you do poorly. Your clumsiness of hand or tongue does not distress you because your wits are too dulled by alcohol to observe and reason clearly.

You've been told that beer is nourishing, like a glass of milk, a cup of broth or potatoes. It is a surprise to find you still feel hungry and remain unsatisfied by the drinks you have taken, quite necessarily so because alcohol is in no proper sense a food.

EARLIEST EFFECT, LOSS OF JUDGMENT

The earliest effect, almost always unnoticed by the person who has drunk the alcohol, is a loss of judgment, of self-control, of discretion, of responsibility. It is this effect that makes the person with even small amounts of alcohol in his blood incapable of judging his own performance or ability. He thinks he is saying smart things, but does not see how silly he appears. He thinks he is witty, agreeable, skillful in the dance, or at some game or when driving a car. He often thinks and acts as if he were a stronger, more courageous, daring fellow with word and deed than his companion, when as a matter of fact he is more clumsy, awkward, unskillful and with a use of language he would be ashamed of if his wits and judgment were not muddled.

RESULTS OF BRAIN DEPRESSION

It is not the fault of the eye that he sees a blurred or double image, or of his muscles that his fingers fumble with his coat buttons, or his knees feel weak and wobbly. These common later effects of several cocktails or a bottle or two of beer are all of them the results of the depressing effects on the brain and spinal cord which can no longer make the muscles work together and perform their duties.

Alcohol, even in small amounts, slows our reaction time from five to ten per cent, so that our eyes and hands do not work together, nor the body respond with the usual speed and accuracy to a warning or touch or sound or sight. Whether at work or play we become less efficient after drinking alcohol.

As we neared shore we saw somebody waving at us, and soon, as we got closer, recognized the broad and friendly smiles of those we learned were Elders Gunning; his father-in-law, Harry Jacka of Euroa Branch near Brisbane, Australia; and a bright young member, Douglas Shirley, who took pictures before we were taken to 42 Leslie Avenue. The warmth of our reception told us we were among friends for the Master's sake.

While, as I have said, it was the last day of winter, it seemed almost that a special dispensation awaited us, because on the three days following, while we were in Auckland, the weather was delightful.

Among the fine families of the church in Australia is that of Elder Harry Jacka and wife. They are the parents of Sydney Jacka, missionary appointee; Sister A. R. Gunning, wife of appointee at Auckland (when we were there); Sister Allan Frater, wife of another missionary appointee in Australia; and Sister William Tappendeu of Auckland, whose husband is active in priesthood work. I believe another son, C. Jacka, was at the time pastor of the Euroa Branch.

We learned upon arrival that a strike among the coal miners was partly the cause of the absence of smoke usually seen in modern cities, to which I have referred.

We were domiciled with the Gunnings, and the time we spent at Auckland was well employed. On Saturday afternoon we visited the museum, a most interesting place. I noted the remarkable Maori exhibits, most wonderfully carved. Surely that native race must have been outstanding—quite a contrast with many primitive peoples. Brother Siegfried and I bought a Maori-carved cane for President Harry S. Truman, which in due time was received and thankfully acknowledged by him.

I occupied in the church at night on the Book of Mormon. My brief entry shows that on Sunday Brother Siegfried occupied in the morning and I in the evening. We both spoke at a meeting of the priesthood in the afternoon.

A reception was held by the Saints on Monday evening when again we addressed them, thus closing a busy three days in that far-off city, meeting most all of our members, I understand, and greatly enjoying their fellowship.

Tuesday, August 29, at 11:15 a.m., Brother and Sister Jacka, Bishop Siegfried, and I took a seaplane for Sydney. Bidding good-by to the Gunnings and other new-found friends, we arrived at Sydney, landing on the bay about 5:30 p.m.

Finds God in Time of Trial

Five years ago, following the death of my baby, I became paralyzed; I am still unable to use my right hand. Good can come out of such tragedy, however. Four years ago my sister gave me the Herald, and later, as I cleaned house, I found a worn copy of the Book of Mormon. I began reading it and discovered one of my troubles was that I had been so busy rearing my children I had forgotten to worship God. My sister then gave me the Doctrine and Covenants, and I have learned to love the Three Books very much. I was baptized in May, 1948, and have been blessed with a spiritual experience since.

Modern Prodigals

I think the Prodigal Son must have been much like we are today. God gives us all free agency; if he didn't, we would never come to really know ourselves. It seems to me that the father of this parable was very wise; he loved his son as God loves us. Sometimes we let Him down by failing to be diligent in the tasks he gives us to do, but he never forsakes us. He is forgiving even when the work suffers from our neglect. The Prodigal's father knew that his son meant well. No doubt he intended to go to the city and make some wise investments that would increase his wealth. We too wander into forbidden paths despite our good intentions. Then is when we need someone to seek us out and help us retrace our steps.

Jesus said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one for another. He also said that he came not to the righteous but to the sinners. We must forsake our erring ways and follow his way before we can hope to be of service in building Zion. If we become discouraged, we have only to remember that he has promised to be with us even to the end.

It was the great love of a father that led the Prodigal back to righteousness. The love of God can do the same for us.

Repent of Misplaced Values

Sometimes we have wrong concepts of where we can serve best. We think that only the "chief seats" do any good for Jesus.

This summer at vacation church school in Des Moines a capable teacher, formerly head of the primary department, was asked to bring reverence and respect for God's house to the children. She saw other teachers standing before classes or else directing the children to lead out in the worship services. She sat during these classes waiting to ring the bell to separate the periods. She thought her assignment was not much of anything, but before the vacation church school she asked God to help the children to have reverence and during the school she set about doing her work. Iva had hall monitors, and she did an excellent job teaching, not in standing before the classes but quietly among the children in the halls. The hard preparation which the other teachers had made was worth their while, for the children did not even whisper. Can you imagine sixty to seventy junior and junior high youngsters sitting together day after day and not whispering? They moved from class to class so quietly that the pastor said one would hardly know they were in the building.

"Exploring Our Scriptures"

This year's program makes a definite contribution to the scriptural knowledge of young people in the Three Books. The correlation of many favorite texts is emphasized. An effort is made to use these passages which can be applied to the lives of youth today.

God's Spirit was with them throughout the entire vacation church school in such a way as they had never experienced before. The Spirit of God was there so strong that the music appreciation leader was used by the Lord to speak in song to the children. She sang this again at the achievement program, and the Spirit of God bore witness to priesthood members and women as well that this was of God. For the last teacher's worship there was a testimony meeting, and in twenty minutes every teacher had some definite blessing to relate of God's help during the vacation church school. Those who came weary told how refreshed they now felt.

All of God's work serves a definite purpose. "What's worth doing is worth doing well."

Silver Lining

Last summer we lived on a farm near Eureka, Kansas. We were isolated from church privileges, discouraged, in poor health, and in debt. It seemed the harder we worked the farther behind we got, but we were afraid to give up our farm and move.

One day Ralph was injured in an explosion. I prayed for him and wrote to the Herald requesting prayers. I know they were answered, for we have been wonderfully blessed. Several weeks after I wrote, we went to Wichita to attend church. Elder Myron LaPointe's sermon seemed intended especially for us. Later that afternoon he and Brother C. R. Richards talked to us, and in two weeks we were living in Wichita with a good job and a nice apartment. God has given us both physical and spiritual blessings since then, and each week finds our debts diminishing.

Our two daughters were in the Children's Day program last month, and at the close of the program eight-year-old Trudi was baptized. Four-year-old Lynda is eagerly awaiting her eighth birthday so she too can be baptized.

I have received many letters from Saints all over the country. Since I cannot answer them all I want to express my appreciation here for them. We shall appreciate the continued prayers of our friends.

On Faith

I suppose everyone desires great faith—faith to be healed, to produce miracles, to understand. Christ compared faith to a mustard seed. After prayer and meditation it was given to me to know that I was like a farmer with a few kernels of corn who desired a binful. I possess a few seeds of faith which will have to be planted and cultivated—planted in the heart and cultivated through service. If I do not plant the seeds, or plant them but fail to cultivate them, I cannot expect a harvest.

Through neglect I have not harvested as much faith as I should like to have, but there is nothing in this world I would exchange for the little faith I do have. I have resolved that from this day forward I shall humbly try to do a better work, to think better thoughts, and to help others in their efforts to build Zion.

Help For Divided Homes Needed

In reading the many letters, pamphlets, and articles published by the church on building Zion homes I wonder if the authors haven't assumed that both husband and wife are members of the church. I wish someone could help those of us who have accepted the gospel and want to live up to its teachings but are faced by the problems which result from marrying a nonmember. There must be many who are in this situation. Habits, associations, and recreation must be viewed in a different light. Where do one's obligations to husband or wife leave off and obligations to church begin?

I think this condition, so prevalent among members, could be helped through letters and articles. I would be happy to see some on the subject.

Briefs

BRIDGEPORT, WASHINGTON.—Charles Milne Emslie has succeeded Elder L. N. Johnsen as pastor of the Bridgeport mission. Brother Emslie was ordained on November 5, 1950. On June 3 two men were ordained to the office of priest: Donald J. Love, by Elders R. V. Webb and William J. B. Buckingham, and Leonard E. Johnsen, by Elders L. N. Johnsen and William Buckingham. Following their ordination they served Communion to the congregation.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON.—Following a series of illustrated lectures and cottage meetings, Seventy Arthur Gibbs baptized nine persons in Silver Lake: Clare Jones, Gary and Valda Bloom, Ralph and Jean Chase (on June 15); Beryl Ayars, Barbara Bonneywell, Louis and Stephen Chase (on June 23). They were confirmed on Sunday evening, June 24, by District President G. L. Swenson, High Priest Carl Oliver, Pastor Elliott Gilberts, and Elder Gibbs.

Men now serving the branch in priesthood activities are Deacons Merle Foster, Sigurd Freestad and Benjamin Pilbeam; Teachers Harold Johnson and Joseph Skoor; Priest Winston Inslee; High Priest Carl Oliver; and Elder Elliott Gilberts. Priest Winston Inslee is the newly appointed branch missionary. Brother Harold Johnson is adding to the finishing of the interior of the church, making partitions for the classrooms of the church school. Brother Pilbeam is landscaping the new church grounds.

Early summer finds the Saints planning their activities around the interests of the church by sending their children to junior youth camp at Silver Lake, senior youth camp at Deception Pass on Whidby Island, and preparing for reunion.—Reported by HELEN GILBERTS

DuBOIS, PENNSYLVANIA.—Judy Walk and Sandra Hilliard were baptized by Elder Brennan on June 12 at Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania. They were confirmed at the Communion service on July 1. Lester Reitz was baptized recently also.

Seventy James Menzies conducted a week's series of meetings in February. Other out-of-town speakers have been District President Henry Winship, Thomas Freeland, Aubrey Holcomb, Donald Ross, Sr., and Donald Ross, Jr.

Sister Mae Ross is church school director. The women are selling Jello, cards, aprons, and pastries to raise money for the building fund. They meet once a month at different homes to study The Enduring Word.—Reported by GLADYS HILLIARD

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.—Vacation church school was conducted June 11 through 22. Thirty-three of the seventy-five children enrolled were nonmembers representing nine different churches. The work was directed by Leonard Speer, Gladys Williams, and Dorothy Wolf; teachers and helpers numbered twenty-three. At the achievement program held on Friday evening sixty certificates for satisfactory attendance were awarded. A list of visiting children was kept and those listed will be contacted in the future.—Reported by HELEN ROGERS

STEWARTSVILLE, MISSOURI.—High Priest Fred O. Davies spoke to a gathering of more than four hundred persons at the reunion grounds on Sunday evening, June 24.

The second annual series of Sunday evening services at the grounds is now being held. Gerald Gabriel is in charge, assisted by Ruth Haden (music) and Wesley Ballinger (Zion's League). Each meeting consists of League activities from 7:00 to 7:45; congregational singing from 7:45 to 8:00; sermon from 8:00 to 9:00; and League campfire service after the sermon. Average attendance at League activities has been 100.

Speakers for this summer series are Clair Weldon, D. T. Williams, L. E. Landsberg, Fred O. Davies, Donald Harvey, Roy Chevillie, and Emery E. Jennings.

SALEM, ILLINOIS.—The group is meeting in a newly decorated building. Early in March cottage meetings were begun in Salem with attendance varying from eleven to twenty-two interested persons and members of the church. Elder Charles Wesner of Centralia and Virgil Harmon of Salem were responsible for locating and bringing the group together.

Seventy S. R. Coleman of Flora conducted a series of meetings and assisted the group in becoming organized. Alton Smith was baptized as a result of the meetings. Since the official organization of the group on May 10 at the Clarence Stonecipher home, the group has been active.

The dedication service was held June 17. Formerly a small store, the building is well located near the central part of town. A committee of Mr. Fred Holler, Alton Smith, and Virgil Harmon secured the building. Several of the local businessmen assisted the redecoration plans by allowing special prices on paint and lumber. The first meeting was a mid-week prayer service June 14.

The church school was organized with George Wolfe of Mt. Vernon as presiding chairman. Elder Ed Colvin of Flora was appointed pastor; Virgil Harmon, church school superintendent; Mrs. Corine Munter, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. Moyle Colvin, elementary teacher; Mrs. Helen Stonecipher, intermediate teacher; Mrs. Edna Holler, young people's teacher; and Mr. Clarence Stonecipher, adult teacher.

Other group officers elected at the organization meeting were: Joseph Schenck, historian and publicity agent; Mrs. Doris Harmon, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. Helen Stonecipher, librarian; and Mrs. Fred Holler, women's leader. Following the dedication, a picnic was held at the Salem Bryan Memorial Park. Approximately thirty-five people were present. Regular services are now held every Sunday morning and evening and Thursday evening.

Harold Otis Holler, infant grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Holler was blessed June 21 by Elder Lewis DeSelms of Flora and Elder Brad Henson of Pleasant Grove.

—Reported by JOSEPH SCHENCK.

PEORIA, ILLINOIS.—Three services took up the entire church school and church hours on Children's Day, June 10. Six children were baptized and confirmed. Members of the Peoria Branch priesthood officiated, and Elder Raymond Wrigley gave the charge to the children. Children's Day was celebrated at the church school hour. Elder J. O. Dutton of Galva, Illinois was authorized by District President Woodstock to take charge of the ordination ceremony in his stead. Those to be ordained were Herbert J. Dutton, elder; Elvin Duke, priest; Ronald Duke, deacon. Elders J. O. Dutton, William Shotton, and Raymond Wrigley ordained the men. Elder Dutton gave the charge to the priesthood and extended the hand of fellowship to the men.

The work of the branch is progressing steadily toward General Church standards for each department. Before the baptisms of June 10, the membership enrollment was 153. The priesthood holds regular monthly meetings with the district president and a more efficient visiting program is in order. The Zion's League, under the leadership of the supervisors, Elvin Duke and Elder William H. A.

The Zion's League had charge of the branch fellowship supper honoring Mother's Day May 13. A feature of the program was the illustrated talk on the Restoration given by Brother Duke's sister, Winnie Hester of Burlington, Iowa, and her friend, Sister Elizabeth Davis also of Burlington. They are supervisor and assistant supervisor of the children's department in Burlington. Other friends of the Duke family attended the service, and at the close of the meeting Brother Duke was presented a leather bound volume of the Doctrine and Covenants by the Leaguers.

Again, the women have set a goal of one thousand dollars to be turned over to the branch building fund, at the close of the church year. Sister Ruth Shippy of Davenport, Iowa, district women's supervisor, has given support to the women.

TOLEDO, OHIO.—The Zion's League presented a variety show entitled, "Smiles" on May 18. The show was directed by Helen Green, youth leader. The cast included Janet Ball, Helen Green, Maurice Green, Gloria Harner, Sharon Keill, Eleanor Martin, Mary Lee Pray, Harold Rightmeyer, Carl Roe, Jerry Smith, Bonnie Wagner, Louise Wheeldon, Jerry Wheeldon, and David Willmarth. The proceeds amounting to $45 were turned into the branch building fund for the new church.

CALGARY, ALBERTA.—Following a two-week series of services conducted by Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe, nine persons were baptized: Edna and Loren Gebert, Carol and Roy Cobb, Betty and Barbara McClean, Marilyn Chapman, Marian Walker, and Anne Jane Dickson. Elder A. D. McLeod and Priest C. B. Gibson were the officiating ministers. This was the first time the new font had been used. The entire main auditorium should soon be ready for occupancy. Much of the work has been done without charge by the members. The women's department and Zion's League have sponsored projects to raise funds.

Children blessed in the recent past are Thomas Andrew Cobb (October 15), Gordon Howard Dickson (December 17), Terrence Allen Grant Chandler, Cheryl Ann Dorothy Chandler, and Diana Elizabeth Hope Chandler (December 24), and James Richard Painter (January 7). The officiating elders were D. K. Larmour, A. D. McLeod, F. L. Dickson, W. H. Atkinson, and C. O. Diaper.

FREESOIL, MICHIGAN.—Patriarch John R. Grice of Port Huron visited the branch in Freesoil from May 13-25. He preached a series and spoke at the prayer services. District President John Blackstock visited from June 24-26 and preached several times as well as visiting the Saints. William Vest was baptized May 19 and Carol Lee Brockhausmore was baptized June 10. Besides the regular services in Freesoil, Elder Charles Martin goes to Ludington and preaches at the home of Sister Estella Walters each Tuesday. The Saints extend sympathy to Brother Allan Schurer of Gaylord, Michigan, in the passing of his companion Sarah. Brother and Sister Schurer were members of the Freesoil Branch before moving to Gaylord.—Reported by BLANCHE HILL

DULUTH MINNESOTA.—The church auditorium has been newly decorated, a gift from the women's department. Mother's Day was observed with special music by the young girls, a talk by Pastor J. Fred Sumption, followed by the presentation of sweet pea corsages to all mothers present. Patriarch James A. Thomas and wife, of Minneapolis, were guests for the morning service May 20, at which he was the guest speaker. Donald A. Dathe was ordained to the office of priest at this service. Twenty-six young people of the Minneapolis Zion's League visited the branch May 27. They participated in a picnic dinner and an afternoon of sightseeing and getting acquainted. Elder and Mrs. Vernon Lundeen of Minneapolis visited the branch June 24. Elder Lundeen was guest speaker for the morning service. Elder and Mrs. R. Amsbury and daughter, Gwynneth, visited with us also this Sunday. The Amsburys joined the branch at the mid-week service and Elder Amsbury presented the lesson. July 1, Allen Casper of Iron, Minnesota, and Frederick Davies of Duluth were baptized. Mr. and Mrs. Lambert of Niagara Falls, New York, visited this Sunday. Sister Julia Case, a long time active member in the branch, has gone to Resthaven in Independence. Others of the branch who have moved and made their homes in Independence are Mrs. Lula Dathe of Barnum, Minnesota, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Blake of Duluth. Duluth Branch welcomes anyone vacationing in the area. The location of the church is 60th Avenue West and North Bristol Streets.—Reported by GWEN SUMPTION doors. Salford closed and Eccles, too, because the members went to other parts of the country for employment.

Even in connection with the branch at Bradford, Yorks, soon after its organization into a branch, two whole families settled in Australia.

Some of the finest men the church ever had went along with their families to the States and settled there, being of inestimable worth to the church at large, but at the same time robbing this country of very fine workers. Among these were J. W. Rushton and his family, Arthur A. Oakman, F. H. Edwards and his sister, Blanche, the Ecclestone family, the Phillipases, Joneses, and others whose names I cannot bring to mind at the moment. All these have added to the list of those who have left the British Isles Mission for other fields of labor.

AN ADMONITION OF COURAGE

May I end my talk by saying that it is up to us to take our courage in our hands, and if we find the methods used in the days gone by are no longer workable (although I am not saying that this is true) let us find new means of presenting our faith in such a way that it will bring souls into the church.

Let us not lose heart at the thought of decadence; don't let us lay aside our tools and declare that it is not worth while. These examples should spur us on to still greater efforts, and though we may not be able to measure our success in the numbers added to the church, we may at least find that we have been the means of sprinkling the salt—a sprinkling which will go on until the day when "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ."

Easy to Live In

By Naomi Russell

AMONG MY MANY BLESSINGS I count the fact that I am living in the age of plastic. Several years ago I bought my first plastic table cover and, looking across the table at my husband after I'd spread it on, I said skeptically, "It probably won't last long, but it is pretty." I was so grateful for the hours of washing and ironing it saved me that I began dreaming of a plastic house, and when we drew up plans for a new home I penciled plastic into every room.

All of our floors are covered with vinyl plastic sheeting. This is as easy to install as inlaid linoleum, requires no waxing, and is immune to grease, alcohol, turpentine, and a score of other things that dissolve asphalt surfaces. Even dust is easier to remove because the nonporous finish gives it no place to lodge. It lacks the self-sealing quality of linoleum, but weighing its virtues against this disadvantage, I still rate it as tops in smooth floor coverings.

On the kitchen and bathroom walls we have a tough plastic wall paper that is as easy to clean as tile (and much less expensive). For the mother with children of "fingerprint" age it can't be beat; gumdrops, jelly, mudpies, and water colors wash right off; even chewing gum is removable with carbon tetrachloride. There are some disadvantages, of course; the wall underneath must be absolutely free of bumps and dents or each inconsistency becomes magnified when papered. I thought I had done a beautiful job of putting nail holes in the sheet rock until it was covered—now I can see the faint outline of nearly every one. It's harder to hang than ordinary paper, or so the paper hanger told us, but again the advantages outweigh the disadvantages. Best of all, it carries a ten-year guarantee.

Plastic has found its place between rooms too. Instead of the usual wooden doors, we have vinyl plastic folding doors which are space-savers as well as a joy to keep clean. The initial cost is greater, but the fact that they need no hardware, do not require stops and molding, and never have to be painted cuts the price down considerably, especially over a period of years.

Plastic as upholstery is, I suppose, less popular than tapestry and frieze, but its promise of long wear and its easy-to-clean surface are fast winning a place for it in every room. In our living room we have a couch and three chairs with matching hassocks of plastic; in the bedroom two cocktail chairs (so called but not so used) and a plastic-covered headboard on the bed; and in the kitchen the usual plastic-covered dinette set.

THERE ARE OTHER AIDS to easy housekeeping besides plastic, of course. Having lived in a house with painted-plaster walls for the first five years of our married life I decided "never again" for them in any future houses. Plaster nicks easily and is forever getting hairline cracks—at least ours did. I have spent entirely too much vacation time touching up scars and painting walls when there were hundreds of things I would rather have been doing. Except for the kitchen and bathroom all the walls of our present home are knotty pine. Many of our friends have predicted, "You're going to get mighty tired of looking at knots," and maybe we will, but right now I think they're beautiful. Natural-finish wood has a warmth and casualness I find most appealing . . .

and it requires almost no upkeep. I like it so well that I have all of my kitchen cabinets in plywood coated with clear varnish. This promises to be much easier to maintain than the painted cabinets of our former abode. Blond furniture has the same advantage—dust and scratches are much harder to see on a light surface than on a dark one. The straight lines of modern furnishings eliminate many dusting problems too—which makes me wonder why we didn't get around to them a lot sooner and science, bless it, has come through with a new silicone wax that can put a slick-as-glass finish on almost any surface. It won't keep dust from settling, but it certainly makes the clean-up process faster. It serves as a water-proofing agent too, so "spills" don't bother me at all. With these many helps a busy mother or career wife can find time to loaf a little, and the whole family will be grateful.

Window coverings long have been a pet peeve with me. While lace and ruffles have a tender spot in every woman's heart, they're as much a thief of time as home-churned butter. Whether they're washed and stretched or ironed on a board, they take hours of maintenance before they wear out. I thought I had the solution when I bought drapes and Venetian blinds for the last house, but I found that drapes are no small problem to clean, and Venetian blinds are forever needing to be dusted. Then when the tapes get dirty there's the major task of sticking them in the bathtub and scrubbing them by hand or having them cleaned professionally—which can soon run into as much money as the blinds originally cost. Now we have vertical blinds of Celanese (and they're also available in flame-proof plastic) that can be easily removed from their frames, washed, and slipped back in place to dry—no

A Parable of the Talents

By Jane Mercer

THERE WERE, in a certain congregation, four women.

The first of these women had a beautiful talent. God had endowed her with a lyric soprano voice of fine quality. She had added to this talent the ability to play the organ. In her church work, she had much to offer. She played the organ for the services and also directed the choir. She was always eager to sing solos when needed. The more she sang, the more she played the organ, the greater became the beauty of her talent.

The second woman had had the opportunity for much education. She had read the great philosophers and listened to the lectures of the best teachers of the land. She could read and remember. And then she could translate what she had read into language simple enough for all to understand. Hers was the talent of the teacher. Because of her talent, she drew to her all who sought guidance and understanding. As she used her talent to enrich other lives, it multiplied.

The third woman did not seek place or position but devoted all she had to her family of six children. Each child was to her a work of art. With the patience and skill of the cleaning bill, no pressing. While the cost is almost double that of Venetian blinds, the inexpensive maintenance makes them a good investment.

In the month we have lived in our new home I figure I've saved at least eight hours "cleaning" time. This, in one year, amounts to four full days, plus the additional time I'll save by not having to take a week off for spring cleaning. Better still I don't have to keep a watchful eye on the youngsters who come to visit; everything from the table cloth to my husband's favorite chair is washable.

artist, she applied here some pressure and there some finishing. Like the sculptor, she sought to create objects of the greatest possible beauty from the materials with which she worked. But the material at her command was much more than sculptor's stone; it was the tender stuff of human personality. Her touch was felt each time a child of hers took part in any church activity. Through her, generations yet unborn were blessed.

The fourth woman looked at these others with envy. She could not create beautiful music. Her schooling had been meager. She had no children. Surely God had forgotten her. Her envy turned to bitterness, and soon she no longer attended church.

Her pastor noticed her absence and made a call.

MY DEAR SISTER, we have missed your smile," he said.

"But why should I come to church?" she asked. "What have I to offer? I am no musician. I cannot teach. I have no children who need to be led into the paths of righteousness. God has dealt hard with me. I have no talent."

"You have one talent which you have forgotten," the minister said. "It is the talent of your love. The world is in sore need of love. Love heals the wounds no medicine can reach; it seals the pledge of brotherhood. We need your love. If you do not share it, it will die. Then, truly, you will be without a talent."

From that time forth the woman gave to all the talent of her love. She helped those in need; she comforted those in sorrow. She befriended the friendless and lifted the downtrodden. Never from her lips was heard a mean thing about another.

And the congregation said of her, "Surely she has received bountifully of God." And they called her name blessed.

Loving Your Neighbor

By Lenora Nixon

OH, MOM," wailed Kathy in the midst of her cake baking, "We have no baking powder. What shall I do?"

"Run over to Mrs. Jones.' She won't mind giving you enough to finish your cake," consoled Mom.

Were you ever in a like predicament? Our Heavenly Father, in his great wisdom foresaw the need of people for each other. Our dependence is measured a great deal by our circumstances. People who live in isolated areas, strange to say, are less dependent on others. They prepare for isolation to a great extent by purchasing supplies and necessities to cover a period of time. They realize their inability to get things they need at any time. Folks living in town feel no alarm about running out of things. If the stores are closed, one can always run over to a good neighbor in an emergency.

It's a wonderful achievement to be a good neighbor. The family across the street can run in for a cup of sugar, some toothache gum (which is always needed late at night), or a spool of thread. That's one of the nice things about neighbors. It's nice, too, when hanging out the Monday wash, to chat a few minutes about our families, the international situation, and yes, even our different churches, for the neighbor nearly always belongs to another church. Did you ever feel discouraged in living by a neighbor of another denomination? "How can I ever convert or even interest her?" you say. But by careful living, talking, and kindness a good impression will always be made.

Of course, neighboring doesn't mean running into your friend's house three or four times a day. Proverbs 25: 17 tells us, "Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbor's house; lest he be weary of thee, and so hate thee." But many times in circumstances where there is great need for advice, "Ointment and perfume re-

The Price of the Kingdom

HOW MUCH IS A MILLION DOLLARS? I hear that sum mentioned almost every day on the news broadcasts, and I know we are being taxed such sums and spending such sums with hardly a backward glance. It is a common part of my vocabulary, and yet I have only a vague idea of what a million dollars really is. My mind is incapable of realizing the man-hours represented by that one little phrase—a million dollars.

Christ gave men the blueprint for the kingdom. The value of this kingdom was beyond their comprehension, but they were willing to sacrifice their lives rather than let the hope of the kingdom flee from them. How many thousands died in the arenas of Rome we have no way of knowing. They were normal people with the same desires, goals, and ambitions as people have today. They had children, and they hoped to pass on to them a better life, a richer heritage, a healthier society with Christ-like morals and ethics as a prerequisite for the goal they were believing in. When asked to forfeit these desires they chose torture and death rather than compromise with the goals of the kingdom or the pollution of their gospel with paganism. These people paid a price for the hope of the kingdom. Their knowledge of the kingdom and its value so far outshone the brutality and barbaric expression of their enemy that their lives were cheap in comparison to that which they were buying.

It took more than brutality to weaken the people in their convictions concerning the value of the kingdom. It wasn't until conditions arose that led to the feeding of the egotistical nature of man, the gratification of inordinate ambitions, the aggrandizement of the individual—in reality a complete sublimation or substitution of the kingdom for something of less value—that laid the foundation for the atrophy of the people, the degeneration of society, and a cessation of the church and the ideals of the church. So it has always been that the greatest weapon to destroy the Christ and his kingdom is to elevate the man and sublimate the kingdom.

IT TOOK TIME, much time, in order to once again prepare the way that people would have the capacity to vision the possibilities of the kingdom. In the latter days it was revealed to a young man, of necessity to a person whose vision was capable of expansion and who was not yet blinded by the human interpretation of the day. The church was organized and the kingdom re-introduced. Men and women were initiated into it following the pattern set by Christ and predicated upon a faith of the things of God and a turning away from the things of the world.

The church grew, and as in the days of old the feeble weapon of brutality and violence attempted to destroy that which God had put into the hearts of the people. Again men and women lost their lives, and not begrudgingly, for that which was of greater value than mere earthly living. The Latter Day Restoration was treated much as the early church was and again emerged in victory against that which is tawdry and cheap. The church went on without faltering and continued to build in the lives of people the aspiration for establishing the kingdom upon earth. God and man understood that once again the kingdom was a possibility, and the people listened to the voice of the Master.

Yet not many years passed and a crisis arose. More than ever the ears and hearts of the people needed to be tuned to the Master. This time many of them were, but history also records that many were not. Once again conditions existed that fed the egotistical nature of man, the gratification of inordinate ambitions, the aggrandizement of the individual, and a corresponding decentralization on the theme of the kingdom and the personage of the Christ. The church reeled and staggered under the near lethal blow it had received. The priesthood became, in many instances, a priestcraft. The rights and

Here Is the Writer . . .

Although born in Alton, Illinois, Jim Everett was baptized in Salt Lake City, attended Pleasant Grove High School in Utah, and, after two years at Graceland, received his B.S. degree from Brigham Young University. This background makes him a "natural" for the work he is now doing. Since the last General Conference he has been serving as a missionary to Utah District.

In high school he edited the school paper and at Graceland was a member of Lambda Delta Sigma. In 1946 he was ordained a priest, and in 1949 an elder. Before beginning his missionary career he served as young people's leader, counselor to the district president, district youth supervisor, and pastor of Ogden Branch.

prerogatives of the people were ignored or willfully trampled on and the laws of God abused in order to elevate the supposed position of the individual. That which God had consistently warned his people of, that which had been recorded for their benefit, was now upon them. Many fell—some by ignorance, some by fear, some by willful desires, some by the general confusion. Indeed it almost seemed that prophecy was void and the plans of God frustrated, so great was the havoc heaped upon the church.

The church, though wounded, was reorganized and came back full of the original convictions of the kingdom, made whole and well by God's hand. The storm was weathered; the greatest crisis of all times was met and conquered. Even though the damage had been great, the church stood as a living testimony that it could resist all the darts of Satan—even that which was more destructive than physical might. It still stands and will stand to all who can and will see that God is a God of the living and is ever with his people as they will work with him.

SUCH HAS BEEN THE PRICE of the hope of the kingdom. Is it worth a million—a billion dollars? Is the price even within our comprehension? All we know is that we are living and buying something with our lives—all of us are in the process of buying. The drunkard is buying sorrow and remorse or stuporous alleviation of that which he is too weak to face otherwise. The smoker is paying for lungs full of carbon deposit. The spoiled child pays for frustration in the future, and the parent reaps the results of overbearing. So on and on life goes.

We live in an age of which God has said, "Joint responsibility is laid upon all. . . . The hopes of my people and the goals of my church . . . are closer to realization than many recognize. It is yet day when all can work. The night will come when for many of my people opportunity to assist will have passed." The kingdom is ours if we are willing to pay the price. The foundation has been bought; the walls are being erected; the roof is needed. An uncompleted building soon falls to the buffetings of the weather, and so are we needlessly exposed to the buffetings of Satan as we fail to pay the price of the kingdom.

For what thing of greater worth can we spend our lives? Can we buy anything of greater satisfaction than Christ's way of life, the realization of men living together in harmony? Are we living in a day when we can afford to tarry? Surely we cannot sit idle and wait while others build the kingdom; that would be an admission of utter stupidity. The product is in sight; it needs us, and we need it. Surely this Pearl of Great Price is worth our all. A great price has already been paid for the hope of the kingdom. What price are we going to pay?

Home-town Boy

By Marie Gosline

TOO MANY PEOPLE are simply drifting along, day by day. As a result they have no peace of mind. They have no goal. They are like small boats on the ocean drifting with the tide. To have complete peace of mind one must have a definite aim—a goal shining far ahead like a beacon. Many sailors have been lost in the breakers because the captain couldn't see the goal.

I remember the story of the little boy who had a certain aim in life. Like many children whose parents are in the oil business, he had lived in various parts of the world. He had been born in Cairo, and had gone from there to South America. From Venezuela he had gone to Switzerland, and finally settled in Dhahran, Arabia.

One day he said to his mother, "Mother, I want a home town."

"Darling," she replied, "you have a home town. I was born in Cairo. You were born in Cairo. Cairo is our home town."

"No, Mother," said the lad, "that isn't the kind of home town I want. I want some friends, a little white house, and about an acre of ground. I don't want a lot of money. That's only a headache. Mother, you must know the kind of home town I want. I want a home town in Texas!"

This little lad knew at least what he wanted. He had a goal. He would not be a "drifter." He had something to live for and to work toward.

The Old Swimming Hole

By Glen Johnston

ONE DAY AS I sat on the bank of Burnt Corn Creek near Brewton, Alabama, my attention was attracted to the opposite bank where some young people were making their way down a ten-foot bluff toward the old swimming hole. Each one scampered down the side of the bluff and stood on the bank, then carefully tested the water to see if it was warm or cold. It was cold, and the air became filled with moans and groans as they got their toes wet and then oozed themselves in inch by inch. I thought to myself, "How could they get any enjoyment out of this, and why in the world did they ever come swimming?"

Suddenly, I noticed some other young people approaching from the same direction. Their whole attitude toward the matter seemed to be entirely different. As they sighted the old swimming hole their faces lit up like beacon lights. One of them yelled to the others, "Let's hit it!" And like jet bombers in V-formation they dived off the cliff, hitting the water together and splashing it about as if they were in the height of their glory.

There was such a great difference in the approach and attitude of these two groups that I could not help noticing it. I immediately thought of how similar this was to people joining the church. Some seem to fight it all the way and never get into the true love and fellowship that was intended for them, while others, seeing the possibilities of happiness and "life more abundant," plunge themselves into church work and become happy servants in the kingdom of God.

Under which condition did you join the church?

DEATHS

GERMAN.—Dora Aulean, daughter of Jacob and Ann Harpster, was born at Elton, Minnesota, on September 23, 1893, and died on May 26, 1951, near Cameron, Missouri. She was married to L. K. German on April 4, 1930, at Audubon, Minnesota, then moved to Far West Community where they made their home for twenty-one years. She had been a faithful member of the Reorganized Church since childhood.

She is survived by her husband; a sister, Mrs. C. M. Snider of Gladstone, Oregon; and four brothers: Anthony Harpster of Hampton, North Dakota; Walter of Audubon, Minnesota; O. R. of Devils Lake, North Dakota; and Otilla of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Funeral services were held at the Far West Reorganized Church, Fred Roy Kirkendall officiating. Burial was in Graceland Cemetery at Cameron.

GOOLD.—Elma Elizabeth, daughter of George and Elizabeth Fowler, was born November 16, 1874, at Amboy, Illinois, and died May 22, 1951, at Independence, Missouri. She was married to Hugh W. Goold on November 19, 1891; nine children were born to them. A member of the Reorganized Church since August 3, 1884, she was instrumental in starting the mission which later became Fourth Church in Kansas City, Missouri, where the family moved in 1902. Since 1911 they had made their home in Independence.

She is survived by her husband, Hugh; five sons: Ralph L. and Robert J. of Kansas City, Kansas; Roland E. of Fremont, Nebraska; Harold E. of Hobbs, New Mexico; and Walter A. of Independence; a daughter, Bernice Saunders of Olathe, Kansas; nineteen grandchildren; and fourteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Fred O. Davies at the Carson Funeral Home in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MOLLUS.—Minnie B., daughter of Arch and Hannah Rallow, was born December 30, 1836, at Lamoni, Iowa, and died May 8, 1951, at Mercy Hospital in St. Joseph, Missouri. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 14, 1897. Her husband, Frank Mollus, died in October, 1943. Her parents, two sisters, and a brother also preceded her in death. Her only immediate survivor is a brother, Bert Rallow, of Kellerton, Iowa. Funeral services were held at the Heaton-Bowman Mortuary in St. Joseph, Elder Emery E. Jennings officiating. Burial was in Memorial Park at St. Joseph.

BUTLER.—George Morris, was born September 14, 1884, in Hazel Dell Township, Iowa, and died unexpectedly at his home in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on June 1, 1951. He was married to Nancy Dingman on March 11, 1908, who survives him. He was engaged in farming for a number of years, was a grain dealer at Crescent, Iowa, from 1921 to 1928, and operated the Butler Motor Company in Council Bluffs since then. He served as a member of the town board in Crescent and as a director of the State Savings Bank. He had belonged to the Reorganized Church since December 20, 1921. He also held membership in the Elks Lodge, the National Auto Dealers' Association, and the Council Bluffs Chamber of Commerce.

Besides his wife he leaves a brother, John, of Hazel Dell; and seven sisters: Mrs. Amanda Rief, Mrs. Minnie Hartnett, Mrs. Stella Prentice, all of Council Bluffs; Mrs. Rhoda Williams of Crescent; Mrs. Sadie Hemmingsen of Underwood, Iowa; Mrs. Addie Neginess of Isabell, South Dakota; and Mrs. Anna Peterson of Long Beach, California. Funeral services were held at the Woodring Mortuary in Council Bluffs, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in the Memorial Cemetery in Council Bluffs.

LOVE.—Joseph Homer, was born July 5, 1880, in Marshalltown, Iowa, and died January 17, 1951, at a hospital in Spokane, Washington. He homesteaded near Mansfield, Washington, in 1902, and in 1906 married Nora Row; two daughters were born to them. Nora died in 1917 and in 1918 he married Louise Loss; two sons were born to them. Louise died in 1939, and in 1944 he married Elizabeth Miller, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1932.

Besides his wife, Elizabeth, he leaves two daughters: Mrs. Alta Angus of Spokane and Mrs. Ila Darby of Sprague, Washington; two sons: Joseph J. and Donald J., both of Mansfield; two sisters: Mrs. Blanche Baugh of Mansfield and Mrs. Maggie McLane of Jonesboro, Illinois; a brother, William Love of Omak, Washington; and several grandchildren and stepchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Mansfield Church of God, Elders R. V. Webb and L. N. Johnson officiating. Interment was in Mansfield cemetery.

HICKS.—Daisy May, was born August 5, 1877, and died May 30, 1951. She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Melvin Hartley of Wilhows, California; a sister, Mrs. Sadie Haynes of St. Joseph, Missouri; and a brother, John E. Hartley of Oroville, California. Funeral services were held at the Meirhofer-Fleeman Mortuary in St. Joseph, Elder Orman Salisbury officiating.

MCDONALD.—James Jefferson, was born October 20, 1897, in El Paso, Texas, and died February 20, 1951, at the Veterans' Hospital in Portland, Oregon. He served overseas during World War I and received an honorable discharge. In 1923 he went to Mansfield, Washington, to work and in 1924 was married to Edith Fay Greniger of that city. In 1947 they moved to Soap Lake, Washington, where he worked on the Columbia Basin Project. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August, 1941.

His only survivor is Edith, his wife. Funeral services were held at the Plott Mortuary in Ephrata, Washington, Elder L. N. Johnsen and Robert Buckingham officiating. Interment was in Ephrata cemetery.

TURNER.—Everett James, son of James and Dona Retman Turner, was born March 14, 1914, in Deloit, Iowa, and died June 1, 1951, at Wadsworth Hospital in Wadsworth, Kansas, following a brief illness. On July 11, 1939, he entered the Army, served overseas, and was discharged in October, 1945. On October 3, 1941, he was married to Elsa Becker, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since his youth.

Besides his wife, Elsa, he leaves a son, Jimmy Lee; three brothers: Lonnie N. of Cameron, Missouri; Lee V. of North Carolina; and Clayton V. of Colorado Springs, Colorado; two sisters: Mrs. Ida Schelldorf of Lake City, Iowa, and Mrs. Dorothy Janes of Monterey Park, California; and a step-brother, Albert J. Walsh of Kidder, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted by Orman Salisbury and Elmer Hampton at Cameron.

MILLS.—Elizabeth, was born January 10, 1877, in England, and died of pneumonia on April 23, 1951, in the Charleroi-Monessen Hospital (Pennsylvania). She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since March 5, 1916, and attended Lock Four Branch in Charleroi.

Surviving are two sons: James Leslie and George Marcellous; twin daughters: Mrs. Hilda Fox and Mrs. Doris Dooley; and three grandchildren, all of Charleroi and vicinity. Funeral services were held at Lock Four church, Elder John D. Carlisle (who baptized her) officiating.

HERD.—Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Turcott, was born November 15, 1891, in Gravelville, Minnesota, and died May 19, 1951, at Stratford, Ontario, after ten years of ill health. She moved to Owen Sound, Ontario, with her parents when she was quite young. On March 17, 1902, she joined the Reorganized Church, and in 1913 was married to Frederick W. Herd.

She leaves her husband; a daughter, Mrs. John Bishop of the home; two brothers: Joseph of Detroit, Michigan, and James of London, Ontario; a sister, Mrs. G. Kirkland of Montreal, Quebec; and one granddaughter. The funeral was conducted by Elder Russell Atkins and Priest Robert A. Withrow at the Reorganized Church. Interment was in Avondale Cemetery.

Correction

In the obituary of Pfc. Joseph W. Deller (issue of July 9) it was stated that Pfc. Deller had lived in Cameron, Missouri, for several years. This should read, "His home had been in Rich Hill, Missouri, for several years."

joice the heart; so doth the sweetness of a man's friend by hearty counsel."—Proverbs 27: 9. And in times of trouble we are told, "Thine own friend, and thy father's friend, forsake not; neither go into thy brother's house in the day of thy calamity; for better is a neighbor that is near than a brother far off."

Many times we are the recipients of kind deeds, but how often are we the givers? Doesn't it give us a warm feeling to do something for others? Have you ever sat in the twilight and really thought of your neighbors? Maybe you felt a pang of pity for Mrs. Blank with three small children, or for Mrs. Brown, whose husband was out of work so long; yet, did you try to be a good neighbor and love them enough to help ease their burdens?

We open our home to Mrs. Bond, whose children seem so susceptible to colds, and who need medical advice so often. We tell her, "If you need to use the phone, any hour of the night, don't hesitate to come over. Just tap on the bedroom window, I'm a light sleeper."

Did we take our offerings of food to Mrs. Brown who really appreciated it, and does attend quite a few of our church services, even though she is of another faith? Have we loved our neighbor and taken over those good trousers and shirts which have become too small for our Chuckie or Johnny?

If we are of a skilled profession and can do some work for our neighbor, which would cost him a small fortune otherwise, do we charge him a minimum fee, because we know he wants to pay something?

Do we take the lovely bouquets from church to our neighbors who are ill? Do we remember to send the kiddies get-well cards when they are afflicted, and perhaps birthday cards too? These are such little things to do, yet what comfort and feelings of love are felt by the recipient of these good neighbor gestures. Surely if the giving of a glass of cold water is observed by our Heavenly Father how much more doth he rejoice with our thoughtfulness. We need our neighbor and our neighbor needs us. There is no such thing as being independent of people. Trace a loaf of bread to its source and it will amaze you to find the persons involved in its manufacture. The water we drink, the heat we feel, the lights we see, all are dependent on the work of many neighbors before they can be enjoyed by us. Have you loved your neighbor today?

Introducing

ABEL HALL, Manchester, England (page 5) represented the church for twelve years under General Conference appointment and organized and edited the mission paper, The Envoy, forerunner of the present Mission Courier. Brother Hall was born, reared, baptized, and educated in Manchester, and for a time was Pupil Teacher at St. Philip's Church of England School. He took a university correspondence three-year course in elocution, theology, and press work.

In 1906 he married Florence Shaw. They have one daughter, Florence. For the last fourteen years Brother Hall has been engaged in municipal work for the gas department, street lighting, and now has the title of electrical engineer.

His church experience began when he was three years old. He was ordained a deacon in 1899, teacher in 1910, priest in 1913, elder in 1916, seventy in 1923, and high priest in 1945. He served as pastor of the Beresford Road church for three years.

GERALD GABRIEL, (page 9) was introduced April 23, 1949.

JANE ROSS MERCER, Creston, Iowa, (page 19) was born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania in 1924 where she was baptized at the age of eight. She was graduated from the Mount Lebanon high school in 1941, received her A.A. from Graceland in 1943, and M.A. from the University of Chicago in 1948, where she also received a Phi Beta Kappa key.

In 1945 she married R. Jack Mercer. They have three sons: Robert 4, Ronald 2½, and Craig 1 year. She taught freshman English at Lincoln (Illinois) College in 1946-47 and sociology in Creston Junior College from 1949-1951. She is an active church worker, and is interested in children's work and community welfare.

* EDUCATION OF THE FOUNDERS

An error—an infamous error—an almost unforgivable error—has gained credence among some of our people, and we ought to do what we can to stamp it out forever. It is the false idea, which is always coming up in sermons and manuscripts, that the founders of the church were "illiterate," that they were "unlettered" men. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Even before 1830, there are evidences in the literary work of Joseph Smith that he had read his Bible very thoroughly. Few people of today have read it so carefully or remembered so much of it. And regardless of what schools he attended, or how long, it is indisputable that he was able to write and express himself fluently in a style that was acceptable in his time. His associates were educated men. Oliver Cowdery was a school teacher and acted as scribe for writing the greater part of the Book of Mormon. Sidney Rigdon was a successful ordained minister and read the Book of Mormon intensively before he joined the church; and he was in charge of the completion of Kirtland Temple. It would be interesting if anybody could prove that any one person in the group of six who founded the church could possibly be called "illiterate" or "unlettered." . . . And yet somebody is always coming up in the freshness of dewy-eyed ignorance and blithely applying one of these words to the founders.

One sometimes wonders if those who use the words know what they mean. And they go on repeating this fiction in sermons and scripts so often that a whole generation of young people is coming to believe what amounts to a monstrous lie.

What piety, what sacred unction, what attraction is found in this illusion that people should cling to it so? Why should it be regarded as such a precious virtue?

Here is a project in which the people of the church—the people who sit in the congregations, the people who read the papers—can help. Whenever a speaker forgets the facts, or himself, and repeats this canard, let them go up to him as soon as possible and protest. Whenever it appears in print, let them write letters of objection. The men who make this mistake will never read or pay attention to this brief note. But they will pay attention if they are called down by the people who must listen to them.

That is how we can stop this falsehood about the founders of the church. Will you help?

* COMMIES

In Communism, a new term has appeared. Some of them are now called "radishes" because they are "red outside, white inside," which means that they are outwardly loyal to the party, but inwardly against it. . . . Well, if reports are true, there are some great crops of "radishes" growing in some of the satellite countries, and greater ones will probably follow, until the suffering people again find the freedom that is so precious to them.

George Francis Bullard

"I'LL TAKE ANYTHING you don't want to put in the regular stock," Brother Bullard told Manager Hield at the Social Service Center. As you can tell from the picture, he has about everything. As you walk into his "bargain basement shop" he will invite you to look around. None of the articles carry a price tag; if you can use it, just make an offer—Brother Bullard will bargain with you.

One woman looked over most of his shelves and tables and then remarked, "A person can find anything here except a glass eye." "Just a minute," said Brother George, "here it is." And sure enough he produced a glass eye. In all other departments the merchandise is cleaned, repaired, and put in usable condition. The items on his bargain counters are sold "as is." Don't make the mistake of referring to it as "junk" unless you wish to make him unhappy. For the last two months his department has turned over to the treasurer better than $400 each month.

George F. Bullard was born at Hartford, Iowa, in 1879. He was baptized at the age of fifteen in Wray, Colorado, where his father had moved the family in two covered wagons in 1886. He worked for a year in a flour mill, then entered the grocery business, which he followed for thirty-eight years. In 1901 he married Mary Leah Weller. To them were born five children: Clyde Orlin, Basil Laverne, Alice Lavetta, Eva Rachel, and Frances Leah.

Brother Bullard was ordained a priest in 1908 and an elder nine years later. From 1916 to 1924 he was pastor of the branch at Ft. Collins, Colorado. After moving to Independence in 1924 he accepted leadership in group work and had charge of seven groups during the following eighteen years. His companion died in 1942. In the fall of 1943 he married Nora Etta Welton. He has served the Walnut Park Development Association as treasurer since its organization ten years ago.

For the past eight months he has donated his labor to his bargain basement shop at the Center. He still has good health and is happy that he can make his contribution to this church project. Every day he is in his department from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., ready to help people who are looking for anything from hightop, button shoes to glass eyes.

News and Notes

W. W. SMITH IN SOUTH

President W. Wallace Smith was the speaker at the Center Stake Reunion Sunday morning, July 15. The reunion is held at Gardner Lake at Excelsior Springs, Missouri. Brother Smith reports that despite the flood surrounding the area, attendance is good and a fine spirit is present.

Brother Smith has returned from a trip in the South where he visited Brother T. B. Sharp, president of the Arkansas-Louisiana District, and contacted the Fort Worth Saints regarding their building program. He visited with Joe Berry, branch president at San Antonio, as well as J. E. Wilder, district president of the Southwest Texas District.

Sunday, July 22, Brother Smith was at the Ozark reunion.

IN NATION'S CAPITAL

President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp have returned from Washington, D. C., where they attended a hearing before the FCC on the church's request in connection with a radio license. While in Washington they also met with the building committee of the Washington Branch and report progress toward an agreement on the church in the capital.

CRISIS AT SAN

Miss Gertrude Copeland, superintendent of the Sanitarium, reports that the San has come through a critical period due to the water shortage caused by the flood, and while some surgery was curtailed, the highest efficiency possible was maintained for the patients and no undue suffering was experienced.

DAMAGE CAUSED BY FLOOD

The farm land owned by the church near Atherton, Missouri, was flooded July 13 by the record flood on the Missouri River. Advance notice of the Weather Bureau gave warning so that livestock, machinery, and equipment were moved to safety.

Full co-operation by the neighbors, the Red Cross, the U.S. Naval Reserve and the U.S. Engineers prevented any loss of life to personnel or livestock and assisted in the removal of personal belongings.

Just one week prior to this, the Aaronic priesthood of Independence and others answered an emergency call to sandbag certain areas on the levee and eighty men completed a piece of work that held the anticipated stages of the river. However, the great surge of the Missouri River which crested at 36.6 feet, the second highest stage on record, topped the levees and the 3000 acres were flooded. The 1951 crop in this area is almost a total loss.

MESLEYS IN NORTH

Apostle C. George Mesley and his wife, Blanche, have returned from Michigan and Ontario where they visited the youth camps introducing new missionaries. Brother Mesley was also giving consideration to buildings and reunion ground planning.

TO PRESENT OPERETTA

Two hundred posters advertising "The New Moon" have been delivered to business establishments and local churches in Independence. The operetta by Sigmund Romberg will be presented by the Center Stake Zion's Leagues on the Campus stage July 24, 26, and 27. Approximately 6,000 tickets have been distributed for sale. Proceeds will be used for improvement of the Campus recreation fund.

Divorce in the U.S.A.

A Moderate Improvement Indicated by Recent Statistics

A NUMBER OF ITEMS of interest appear in a report entitled, "Summary of Marriage and Divorce Statistics, United States, 1949," received by the First Presidency from the National Office of Vital Statistics. There were 1,579,798 marriages and an estimated 397,000 divorces. For every 1,000 population there were 10.6 marriages and 2.7 divorces. The number of marriages was the lowest in five successive years, and 1949 was the third successive year in which both marriages and divorces receded from the all-time peak of 1946. In 1946 there were 3.8 marriages to one divorce; in 1947, 4.1 marriages to a divorce; in 1948, 4.4 marriages; and in 1949, 4 marriages.

Among the various states a considerable difference in the divorce rates is observed. States having low rates for 1949 were North Dakota with 1.1 divorces per thousand population; New Jersey with 1.2; Pennsylvania with 1.3; and Wisconsin with 1.4. Others also have favorable rates. Among those with higher rates are Florida with 6.6 divorces per thousand population; Arkansas with 5.3; Idaho with 4.8; and New Mexico with 4.6. The freak state in this respect is Nevada, with 67.9 divorces per thousand population, which means little, since so many of them are obtained by out-of-state people who can easily obtain "legal residence" under lax laws for divorce. Perhaps the rates do not mean too much, since states with strict laws tend to push their broken marriages over into states with more lenient laws. Nevada's all-time high was 136.4 divorces per thousand marriages in 1946. Since then the divorce traffic in Reno has suffered a slight decline.

Compared with the national average of 2.7, Missouri has a rate of 3.6. Utah has a rate of 3.2, which does not support the idea sometimes propagated that religion there has made a very remarkable contribution to the results.

Statistics must be viewed with care, not because they are necessarily unreliable, but because the inferences that people draw from them are not always true.

The rise of the national divorce rate per thousand of population is indicated by the following: In 1867 the rate was 0.3; in 1890 it had risen to 0.5; in 1900 it was 0.7; in 1910, it was 0.9; in 1920 it rose to 1.6, and fluctuated through succeeding years until it rose to 2.0 in 1940; in 1949 it was 2.7.

* * * * *

In times of depression, like those from 1930 to 1934, both marriages and divorces declined. At the outset of war, when young men are taken away, marriages also decrease. When the men return from war, rates are increased as belated marriages are contracted. But war also leaves its scars on personality, and the young men who have suffered under battle conditions are not always able to maintain the responsibilities of home life. Many homes are broken because of nerves, shock, and anti-marital habits developed. In times of prosperity, the marriage rates go up, but because many of these are contracted by persons with only marginal stability and security, more of them fail.

* * * * *

Popular attention is directed to the divorce rates because it is there that the statistics are recorded. Not enough attention is given to the causes of marriage failure that lie back of the divorces. Too many marriages are contracted by immature, ill-prepared persons under frivolous and unfavorable conditions, intoxication, and social excitement. Such marriages have a small chance of success.

Editorial

Church weddings are more likely to endure than civil marriages. This is due not only to the influence of the church, but also to the kind of people who make the church a part of their lives. It must be recognized that the church is a strong influence in support of the home and encourages social conditions and activities favorable to the preservation of home and family life.

Statements have been published that college graduates have a higher percentage of success in marriage than their brothers and sisters who have not had the advantage of higher education. It takes some character and stability to get through a college course, and the same qualities help one to succeed in marriage. Those who fail to carry through in education may also have a difficult time at home.

While church attendance and membership do not guarantee that a man or woman will be a good companion, or that a marriage will be a success, the church contributes greatly to the intellectual and spiritual conditions favorable to a happy and successful home life. Those who try marriage without benefit of the church are taking a greater risk. Those who make the church a part of their home and family life are consciously taking advantage of factors that lead to success.

In meeting the problem of divorce, and the disturbing issues that contribute to broken homes, what institution is there that can do so much for the family as the church can? People should recognize that the church is a friend of the individual, the home, and the family. Within the influence and the shelter of the church, they can find the help and inspiration they need to save themselves.

Nina G. Smith Memorial Loan Fund

The Independence Music Club wishes to announce that the Nina G. Smith Memorial Loan Fund has been established as a trust for the education of worthy young people in musical endeavor.

The trust fund will be administered by the board of three trustees. The trustees chosen by the executive board of the Independence Music Club are Mrs. Nell Kelley, Mrs. Mark Holman, and Mrs. Pearl Gardner. Any information regarding the fund or application for loan may be sent to Mrs. Evan A. Fry, 701 North Cottage Street, Independence, Missouri, secretary of the Music Club.

The terms of the trust have been approved by the Club and also by President Israel A. Smith. The idea of a loan fund was conceived by a group of Sister Smith's friends, all members of the Music Club, who wished to establish a perpetual memorial to the memory of one who was a fine musician and always interested in the musical education and development of young people. The Independence Music Club assumed the responsibility, and Mrs. Howard Harder was temporary custodian of the fund. With the permanent establishment of the trust it is hoped the fund will increase through gifts of individuals and organizations and will be the means of assisting deserving young people.

MRS. A. G. CAMPBELL,
President of the Independence Music Club

We are happy to receive a letter from Pastor H. M. Scott of Des Moines, Iowa, that reports forty-five decisions were gained at the recent series held there by Evangelist Ray Whiting. These were out of the prospect list of 127 compiled previous to the start of the series. Brother Scott has made his baptismal slogan "101-'51." He feels confident that this goal will be attained.

We quote the following paragraphs from his letter:

I would like to report on the operation and status of the new mission that we organized in Highland Park on June 3. On June 3 we had an attendance of thirty-eight and on the second Sunday, thirty-five; the third, thirty and on last Sunday, June 24, we had an attendance of forty-seven for church school and morning preaching.

Our mission pastors, Brethren Don Cackler, Bill Castings, and Clyde McDonald are doing an excellent work in ministering to the needs of the church people in their respective communities.

The following letter from Evangelist J. Charles May was sent to Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith. He has made it available to Herald readers.

Dear Brother Smith:

I have appreciated your kind letters and also the letter sent to all the patriarchs with its words of encouragement and the list of new patriarchs ordained during the past year and more.

My experience thus far on this one year appointment to these islands has been very encouraging indeed, and I am hoping that much good will be done during the months to come.

I was rather discouraged to find that my trunk was carried to Australia after I left the boat. We had searched everywhere on the S.S. "Waitemata" for the trunk, and could not find it. Later we were advised that it was in hold Number 4, which contained baggage for New Zealand and Australia. I hope that this latter information is so, as the steamer will return here in early August. This trunk has all my supplies in it—the tape for recording blessings and other material that I need for my patriarchal work.

We are to have a mission conference in August or September and that is when I hope to have all these supplies. I have been associated with our Seventy Horahitu since his ordination. We are to leave on another trip to six islands of the Tuamotuan group in two or three days.

The receptions upon my arrival and for the few days following have been wonderful. My work since has been mainly in reviving the saints and branches I have had the privilege of visiting thus far. I am going to be very busy giving blessings after I get my trunk containing the necessary supplies.

The satisfaction and assurance that have come to me since my ordination to this new work has brought me much joy, and I feel it a great honor to be of service in this field.

I trust that you are enjoying good health, and I am looking forward to the coming General Conference with great anticipation, at which time we shall meet again and enjoy the spiritual feast of another good Conference.

May God's blessings be yours to enjoy from day to day.

Yours very sincerely,
J. CHARLES MAY

The following letter of Apostle C. G. Mesley to the reunion workers of Michigan and Ontario has come to our attention by courtesy of Apostle Mesley, and we are happy to pass it on to reunion workers in other fields.

Dear Co-workers:

We are happy to be associated with you in the coming reunion season. Our 1951 reunion theme "Sources of Spiritual Power" is full of meaning and rich with opportunities for the membership of the church. In a large measure the release of power in our reunion experiences will depend on us and on our intelligent and spiritual preparation for the rich blessings our Heavenly Father has to share with us.

Last year one of our brethren sweat blood over the evening preaching themes suggested. They challenged him to dig deeper than ever before in his ministry. His whole family had to travail with

A lecture given at the Book of Mormon Institute on January 9, 1951

By George A. Njeim

AS ONE CONSIDERS THE SUBJECT immediately there comes to mind the question regarding the meaning of prophecy. The Scriptures give us two meanings: (1) The testimony that Jesus is the Christ, Revelation 19: 10; and (2) the foretelling of future events, Deuteronomy 18: 20-22; Jeremiah 28: 9; Matthew 7:15-20, A.V.

When we consider the prophecies of the Book of Mormon in the light of the axiom advanced by John the Revelator we are forced to the conclusion that the Book is prophetic through and through. The very purpose of the Book is "to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ." The profundity of this purpose can be grasped only as we study the advance of thinking from the seventeenth century until the coming forth of the Book. In 1829, when Joseph Smith gave to the world the testimony of Christ's appearing in America, thought was shifting, gradually but surely, from rationalism to materialism. This shift would have meant little had it not been followed by the scientific and technical skill of the last hundred years. Man now has become corrupt in his thinking regarding the spiritual realm, but is a giant in knowledge respecting the physical world. This state leaves him at the mercy of the uses he makes of his late physical discoveries. In such a state he could annihilate his own species. For this reason, the God who loved us by giving us his own Son to save us prepared a stratagem to convince us of his divinity and love for us. Considered from this point the whole message of the Book is prophetic.

After examining the topics that are to be discussed at this institute, I find that this phase of the Book will be treated in detail by others. To avoid duplication, I shall dwell only on the prophecies of the Book of Mormon that deal with events to come. These prophecies will appear under four different headings: (1) The vision of Nephi. (2) The prophecy of Nephi. (3) The word of Christ relative to Gentile disobedience, and the return of the Jews. (4) The warning to Gentile America.

A word of caution will be timely at this point. There are those who are interested in prophecy and its fulfillment for the satisfaction of their curiosity. This is a dangerous attitude, and such people might as well go to fortunetellers. Prophecy is only of value when we approach it with a humble and sincere attitude as another step leading us toward sanctification. To the Apostle Peter, prophecy was to be heeded as a light that illumines the pathway of the believer as he travels in the midst of the surrounding darkness (II Peter 1: 19.) Yet prophecy is also beneficial to the unbeliever, helping him to believe. "And if it so be that I do not speak, judge ye; for ye shall know that it is I that speaketh, at the last day."—Ether 1: 104. My hope in this presentation is that the prophecies discussed may deepen appreciation of God's love to humanity and "rend the veil of our unbelief."

The Vision of Nephi—I Nephi 3: 210-216

This part of the vision of Nephi deals with the "great and marvelous work" which the Lord will do "among the children of men." This marvelous work will take place when the "other books" or "last records" mentioned in verses 191 and 192 of the same chapter, and which refers to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, will "come forth by the power of the Lamb." Couched in the language of this prophecy are great promises of "peace and life eternal" to the believer, or captivity, spiritual, and temporal destruction to those who harden their hearts against the Lamb of God (verse 216). Its words are precise, and the language leaves no doubt as to what was in the mind of the revelator. When the vision is analyzed in the light of the events that have taken place since the Book was given to man, the following facts become apparent:

1. The Book came to man's knowledge and was translated during the years 1823-1829.
2. Out of two billion people living in the world a small fraction has believed in it and made its message a living flesh in them. On the records of this church there are one hundred forty thousand members. What is that number when compared with two billion people in the world?
3. In 1829 and thereabouts, Europe and America were looked upon as Christian lands. Could one say that today? Russia, until 1917, was a Christian nation, but now is spiritually bankrupt. Germany was looked upon as a Christian nation, but after the Nazi regime came to power in 1933, Germany became noted for its anti-Christian act. However, there appears a revival among the German people now. France and Italy are saturated with Communism, and the eastern part of the continent is dominated by Russia. Even in Spain, the avowed hater of Communism, only 5 per cent of the men and 8 per cent of the women go to church, we are told. The need for Christianity is becoming apparent to the citizens of this land, and conversions are multiplying; but once the number of worshipers and the quality of their devotions are considered, doubt arises regarding the health of their spirituality. It is not only that the people who once were Christians are dead spiritually, but the same state is existent among the Jews and the Moslems. Ever since the beginning of these three faiths never was spiritual decay so manifest as it is now.

The prediction of the Book of Mormon of an imminent spiritual destruction, in case of no repentance, ran contrary to the optimistic outlook which became increasingly confident of ultimate Christian progress. This optimism was translated into action by the devotion and zeal of thousands of missionaries who left their homes in America and Europe to travel on the behalf of the different Christian churches into the remote parts of Asia, Africa, and the islands of the seas. Primary schools, colleges, universities, hospitals, and clinical aids were established in these backward countries to facilitate the conversion of the heathen. From every corner of the world reports of progress began to come in. Taken by these reports, The Christian Oracle changed its name to Christian Century. This was done because of the conviction that the twentieth century was to be the Christian century. What a prophecy! As we look backward at the predictions made in the Book of Mormon and compare them with the predictions made by man, the truthfulness of the first and the fallacy of the last become glaringly apparent.

4. Spiritual decay is usually the forerunner of temporal decay, and beginning with the first world war the world has been going through one phase of temporal decay after the other.

(a.) The first world war, the smaller wars that followed, the depression of 1929, the last world war, the present dim outlook for the future are evidences of this destruction.

(b.) During the depression years the gold standard was abandoned by the nation that gave it to the world—England. Commerce was at a standstill. Millions of people in America and throughout the industrialized world were without jobs. Hunger stalked the nation at a time when the world had plenty. Since the second world war all of Europe, except Sweden, became financially bankrupt. Without the Marshall Plan, western Europe would have gone into the fold of Communism. With continued armament and lending, the same financial difficulty may be experienced by us. The leaders of our nation see the picture but are helpless against it.

5. The question that must now be asked is this: Who was the author of this vision? God or Joseph Smith? The mind refuses to admit that it could have originated with man. Such outstanding fulfillment so soon after the Book made its appearance, and in the face of such man-made progress, would make one cry out the Apocalyptic anthem: "Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. Amen: blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might be unto God for ever and ever, Amen."

The Prophecy of Nephi—II Nephi 11: 116, 117

This prophecy needs no explanation. Jews and Gentiles are "drunken with iniquity" and are being "visited of the Lord of Hosts" with his wrath.

Some may wonder why this punishment, but the causes are explained in the verses preceding. In verse 90 pride is listed as a cause; in verse 106 another cause is listed—priestcraft; and in verses 110 and 111 other causes are listed. All these sins are grievous and do not contribute to the cause of Zion, which is the kingdom of God.

The Word of Christ Relative to Gentile Disobedience, The Return of the Jews—III Nephi 9:64-71

These verses contain the words of Christ to the fathers of present-day Indians. "The Father having raised me unto you first . . . because ye are the children of the covenant." Notice how beautifully this statement of the Master corresponds with another of his statements recorded in Matthew, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." The people he visited here were from the line of Manasseh, the son of Joseph, and of the other sheep mentioned in John 10: 16, who were to hear His voice. After these people were blessed by his visit the Holy Ghost was poured out upon the Gentiles, according to the book of Acts. This blessing made the Gentiles mighty people who scattered Israel in the old land and became a "scourge to the people on this land."

The Gentiles, however, were to receive the "fullness of his gospel" in time. If they hardened their hearts against him, the iniquities heaped by them on the House of Israel would return on their own heads. When the angel Moroni visited Joseph Smith and told him about the records, he also informed him that in these records would be found the fullness of the gospel. This leaves us with no doubt as to what the fullness of the gospel means. The fullness of the gospel is found in the Book. Since it has been published, the hearts of the people of the world have definitely been hardened, and sufferings such as the people of Israel endured because of their disobedience are being experienced by the Gentiles.

Verses 51 and 56, pages 658 and 659, make plain the consequences of sin. "The sword of his justice" is hanging over the nations of the Gentiles throughout the whole world. One can start with Japan and go west to China, India, Persia, the Arabian nations, Turkey, the Balkan states, all of Europe, and even down to the Americas, and find out the condition of the nations.

Again one is tempted to refer back to the statement of Christ recorded in the book of Ether, "If it so be that I do not speak, judge ye; for ye shall know that it is I that speaketh, at the last day." How could we doubt?

The Sign for the Return of the Jews—III Nephi 9:85-101

No prophecy in the Book of Mormon is so clearly detailed, and none have found such a precise fulfillment as this. For an appreciation of it one ought to read the book, Stranger Than Fiction, by Lewis Browne, especially the part that deals with the history of the Jews over the last 150 years. When the Book of Mormon was written, the Jews in Europe had no thought of returning to Palestine. One nation after the other tolerated them and gave them equal rights. Men of note in the fields of music, medicine, statesmanship, and education were gradually arising from among them. They had broken away from Palestine in language, culture, and birth; even in the details of their religion they were gradually becoming Europeans. Under the beneficence of the freedom of a new and liberal Europe the pastoral and agricultural life of Palestine had completely lost its appeal. In the thing that mattered most—their religion—they were becoming liberal. That is the thing which acted as a gulf between them and Palestine.

In this prophecy the Lord makes it plain that they would return and sets the time for their returning.

1. A sign is given to tell when "Jerusalem is inhabited again with my people . . . that I will gather from their long dispersion the house of Israel, and establish again among them my Zion" (verses 85 and 86).

2. The sign is (a.) "When these things which I declare unto you . . .

shall be made known unto the Gentiles" (verse 87); (b.) and when your descendants shall know about them, "shall come forth of the Father, from them unto you" (verse 89).

The things Christ declared to these people came to the knowledge of the Gentiles when the Book was translated in 1829, and from the Gentiles it went to the Indians. The work of God for their return is dated from that year. That the Jews were ignorant of the move is true, but the movement was on. Hardly were they secure in their newly won liberties before persecution started against them in Germany after the Franco-Prussian War. France, the mother of liberty, doubted their devotion to the nation when Dreyfus was brought for trial on grounds of treason. Russia had its Jewish pogroms after that. Then the Zionist society was organized to seek for Palestine as a national home.

3. "When that day shall come," the day of actual return, "kings shall shut their mouths; for that which had not been told them shall they see" (verse 94).

(a.) Lord Balfour made his declaration for the "establishment of a Jewish national home in Palestine" in 1917.

(b.) Since that time they began to return, and the sign was fulfilled. The Czar of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, the Emperor of Germany, the Emperor of Austria and Hungary have shut their mouths, and "that which had not been told them" they saw. God knew, but no human knew. Many kings were left on their thrones, but "that which they had not heard," they considered. During this last war, Immanuel of Italy, Zog of Albania, the King of Yugoslavia; and—previous to the war—the King of Spain had to exit. There are many kings left, but their fate is sealed, and they know it.

4. Not only kings but Gentiles as a whole will suffer (verse 101).

(a.) Transportation—"horses and thy chariots"—will be destroyed. That is what has happened to the enemy in Europe and in the islands during this last war, and that is what many are predicting will happen here in case of another war.

(b.) "I will cut off the cities of thy land." More than seventy-eight cities were destroyed during this last war in Europe and Japan. This number does not include small towns and villages. The power that caused this destruction has been perfected and augmented to such an extent that the United States is issuing defense instructions to the government and civilians of large and strategic cities. The fate of London, Coventry, Lubeck, Rostock, Cologne, Emden, Dusseldorf, Bremen, Warsaw, Kiev, Stalingrad, and Hiroshima may yet become the fate of many a city in the States.

(c.) "And throw down thy strongholds" (verse 101). Since the middle of the last century we have divorced ourselves from God and adopted in his place three modern strongholds: wealth, armaments, and the balance of power. Fortunate was the nation that possessed these three strongholds. The colonial expansion of the last century was for the purpose of obtaining that wealth—one of our modern trinity. Nations came together in binding agreements to help each other in case of an attack by another power.

In 1914 Germany had colonies for raw materials, factories for the transformation of the materials into useful goods, and markets for these products. She also had the balance of power on her side. An agreement with Austria, Hungary, Italy, and Turkey gave her security from an attack. Her strongholds were functioning well. Now it is a matter of history as to what happened to these strongholds. By 1939 France had her strongholds in excellent shape. She was regarded as the military nation of Europe, had a great empire, was in alliance with the Little Entente, with Russia, and on top of that had the Maginot Line. What did these strongholds avail?

The same thing happened to the greatest empire of them all—Great Britain. Every day that goes by brings added evidences of its dissolution.

Outside Russia and the United States there are no first-rate powers. But these two also, one behind an iron curtain and the other behind greenbacks, are preparing for the day of doom. Another war may bring the complete destruction of civilization.

Considering this sign from all its varied aspects one will have to come to the conclusion that the Book of Mormon is divine in its origin. Man cannot foretell with such accuracy. The Jews are back, and Gentiles are in complete retreat.

The Warnings to America—Ether 1: 29-35

All that one can say in regard to this prophecy has been said before. There are, however, a few things worth re-emphasizing:

1. There is no doubt that this land is precious above all other lands.

2. The danger for this land does not come from abroad. It came previously from within, and the seed of our destruction is now germinating in our hearts.

3. Our freedom depends on our service to "the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ who hath been manifested by the things which we have written" (verse 35).

4. There are different kinds of "Christs" in the world. Each has been made to suit the traditional temperament of the people or the nation. Such Christs legalize wars, approve of poverty and privilege, think of worldly things and shut their eyes to retribution in a hereafter. Above all, such Christs do not speak to either warn or guide their adherents. A priest or a minister speaks for them.

The real Christ of this land is an independent Christ. He is the Christ of history and experience. He is a Christ who reveals his will to his people and guides them in the things they are to do. He comes from without and not from within. He is the Christ of miracles and the Christ of strategy. He is the Christ who appeared in Palestine, preached, was crucified, and buried, and while in the grave went and preached in the prison house. He is the Christ who ascended into heaven and came to this land. He is the Christ who is revealing his will now to his people and warning them of things to come. He is the Christ who will build a place of safety for his Saints, and will come and reign in their midst.

This Christ chose as a mouthpiece a man of this land. His message of repentance has been preached to this nation more than any other nation under heaven. He revealed an economic system to be practiced and gave a location for the gathering of the Saints. Christ's prophet was killed, his followers scattered, his system of stewardship ignored by the people who insisted on a ruinous and highly concentrated system of capitalism. This nation shall pay heavily for her cruelty and hardness of heart. The hour of travail appears to be upon her, yet she will always be the land on which the Zion of the Latter Days will be established (Book of Mormon, III Nephi 10: 1-3; Doctrine and Covenants 98: 1-4).

These are some of the prophecies of the Book of Mormon, and to us they are a light that shines in our pathway as we travel kingdomward. Man could not have been behind them, or they would not have survived. Christ is their author, and all allegiance belongs to him.

these sermons as they emerged from his wrestling with God and his books. The cost was great. It was a soul-searching, painful experience. The results were tremendous. I found myself sitting on the edge of my seat and more deeply challenged than I had ever been by any series of sermons. The power of God will not be ours to enjoy in 1951 reunions merely by our hoping and wishing it will come, or by surface preparation. It will be ours only as we wrestle and plunge deep into the preparation that is called for to gain outstanding spiritual power. Will you join with Brother Hield and me in such preparation, that we all may become channels of blessings that flow to the people?

Several things need our attention at reunion. If we are not careful, reunions become ends in themselves—a self-centered love feast for those present. We need an outreach in all our reunion planning—outreach to isolated members and those not on the regular attender's list. Have you sent your reunion folders to such people? The average pulpit announcement doesn't reach them. Outreach to nonmembers in the neighborhood of our reunion grounds. Plan for teams of Saints to contact them personally with reunion folders. Arrange for good publicity in the local papers with local radio announcements. Outreach into branch and district planning. Each reunion should be a step upward in the planning of its participating districts. It can be planned to meet outstanding district needs. What happens in the lives of members at reunions needs follow-up through the home branch ministry. Let us build for an outreach in our 1951 reunions.

As soon as the reunion is over, have a one-member clinic on it and determine for yourself its good points and how next year's planning can be improved. Write these suggestions down and let your voice be heard in committee planning for 1952. May this coming reunion experience be the richest in your ministry, and in the lives of the people.

Sincerely and fraternally,

C. G. MESLEY

From Elder John E. Booth, Toronto, Canada:

I am happy to report the baptism of nine children on Children's Day. This brings the number of baptisms for the Toronto Branch to twenty thus far in 1951.

Members of the priesthood seem to be responding to directions given, and in general the entire membership is responding. Attendance has been good, with an increase in the number attending midweek services. A number of people plan to attend reunion.

IV

PRIOR TO SAILING from Papeete I had radioed Apostle Davey that we planned to fly from Auckland on the thirtieth; but the Saints had been advised we were coming earlier, and thus a goodly company was on hand to meet us—the Davveys, of course, Bishop Alberts, and some fifty or more, which brought a warm feeling to our souls. I made no memorandum as to names, but my diary shows that Elder Walter J. Swain, formerly and for years pastor at Balmain Branch, took us to 9 Lyons Street, Drummoyne, the home of Apostle and Sister Davey and daughter Dona, where we were made very welcome indeed.

In my message I had told Brother Davey we could spend ten days in Australia, certainly inadequate in view of the greatness and vast expanse of that country and the fine quality of our membership; but the Joint Council of First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric had been called to meet on September 5, our visit in the Pacific had been unavoidably extended beyond original plans, and I felt I should expedite my return as much as possible, making what I termed a "token" visit only.

Plans were made to fly from Sydney on September 6. The intervening days were therefore busily and well employed.

Early on Wednesday, the thirtieth, we left by auto for Tiona Reunion Grounds. Our group included Bishop Don Alberts; his brother, Victor Alberts, car-owner; Apostle Davey; Bishop Siegfried; and myself.

Though the way was long, and part of it was exceedingly rough, slowing our progress, we arrived at the grounds about five o'clock, with enough daylight remaining for us to enjoy a good inspection of this very interesting project; I was given quite an extensive account of its inception and development.

We stayed that night at a new administration cottage occupied by the caretaker, James Maples, and his excellent wife. Sister Maples had prepared a very fine dinner which was enjoyed by all of us.

The vegetation at Tiona is really tropical and the Saints have converted a primitive jungle into a place of beauty with as fine a beach as I ever saw. Since Tiona is such a big part of the lives of our people in Australia, I was glad to have an opportunity to inspect it.

From Tahiti I brought a smooth round stone from Cook's Point where Captain John Cook had landed in 1769, and gave it to Bishop DeLapp for a paper weight. I found a similar stone on the beach at Tiona for Apostle George Mesley, since he had done so much to develop the Tiona Reunion, and gave it to him recently.

Also, because of the part Seventy James W. Davis and Inez, his wife, had in the early steps toward Tiona, I recovered a paving stone from "Davis Avenue." When Patriarch Charles Dickinson learned about my proposal, he had made at his furniture factory and gave to me a block of Australian Walnut, highly polished, and after I got home I had the stone mounted on the block and gave it to Brother and Sister Davis, something for which they expressed a deep appreciation.

ON THE WAY up to Tiona on the thirtieth we stopped for a fine dinner at the home of Seventy and Mrs. Charles A. Davies, our oldest appointee in Australia. They live at New Castle. Sister Davies is a sister of Bishop Alberts. Learning we would be back about noon on Thursday, when we again would lunch at the Davies' home, announcements were made, and a meeting was held in the Hamilton Branch, New Castle, at 1 p.m. Both Bishop Siegfried and I spoke.

The official welcome service had been arranged for Friday at eight o'clock at the Leichhardt Church. Earlier in the day we had seen some of the sights of Sydney, which indeed is a marvelous city, and we did some shopping, making small purchases.

Brother Davey had requested all of the appointees of the Mission to be in Sydney, and we were very happy for the chance to meet them and get acquainted.

The reception at Leichhardt was one long to be remembered by us. A "Souvenir Programme" had been printed, which assists my memory, and I note that at this meeting addresses of welcome were made by Apostle Davey on behalf of the mission, Bishop D. A. Alberts for the priesthood, Elder G. F. Spencer for the young people, and Sister Nancy Parkes for the women. Both Bishop Siegfried and I responded, feeling we had been signally honored.

Afterward refreshments were served and the hours were profitably spent.

At the Leichhardt reception the following telegrams were handed to us: From South Brisbane Branch: "Welcome to Australia. Sincere greetings South Brisbane Branch regret unable meet with you in spirit fraternally yours. Edgeworth."

"Greetings from Adelaide. Branch sorry we cannot visit Sydney nor you visit us. Pastor and members."

"Welcome to Australia. Sorry you cannot visit Fremantle. All good wishes and pleasant journey home. Pastor A. and Fremantle Saints."

"Greetings from Shepparton fold. C. Jacka."

On Sunday three services were held in the Astra Theatre, engaged for the day. At eleven a Communion service was held in charge of Apostle Davey, assisted by ourselves and all of the appointees in the mission except Elder Gunning who was in New Zealand. There were many of our people present—a wonderful meeting withal—and I was glad to shake hands with all of them.

AFTER THIS MEETING CLOSED, we had our picture taken in the yard. This has been published in the Herald, but I should like to name these fine men of God who are carrying the banner in that faraway country: Apostle Davey, Bishop Alberts, Seventy C. A. Davies, Elders Sydney Jacka, Allen S. Frater, Floyd Potter, Vivian Sorensen, Floyd Burdekin, and John Imrie.

At 2 o'clock I spoke briefly to the assembled priesthood, then went to the theatre where I addressed the women; and at 7 o'clock I again preached at a worship service for the members. At this meeting the theatre with a seating capacity of eight hundred was nearly filled. On Monday I note we—Brethren Davey, Alberts, Siegfried and myself—had lunch at the home of Gloria Glasscock; her husband, a policeman, and her sister, Gwen, were present also.

When I was but a young man, a cousin, Ina Smith, daughter of Patriarch Alexander H. Smith, met an Australian church member by the name of Sydney Wright then on a visit to General Conference. They were married and went to Australia and, with the exception of one visit, Ina never saw any of her relatives afterward except her father who visited Australia in 1901, and Sister Inez Smith Davis, her cousin, who was with her husband James in missionary work in Australia. Ina died a few years ago, and these women—Gloria Glasscock and Lynne—are two of her daughters. I was indeed glad to get acquainted with them, because their mother was a favorite cousin, and we always felt it was a tragedy for her life to be spent so far away from her own kith and kin. She had a number of children, and some of her sons served in the Anzac military forces in World War One.

On Monday night we had dinner at Flora Delofsky's. Flora will be remembered as the Australian girl who entered the oratorical contest at the Centennial General Conference in 1930. Elder W. J. Haworth was also a dinner guest that night, and it appears that Cupid was not far away, for since our return we have learned of the marriage of Sister Delofsky and Brother Haworth. We take occasion to renew our congratulations and best wishes for their happiness.

That night Brother Siegfried preached to a full house at Balmain Church.

Tuesday and Wednesday were spent in trips about the city, and from a letter I wrote home I am reminded that on Tuesday we had lunch at Bishop Alberts' and dinner at Brother and Sister Rosson's.

On Wednesday noon we were luncheon guests at the home of Brother and Sister Clarence Butterworth. I was pleased to have this opportunity to get acquainted with Sister Butterworth, an aunt of Collin Ferrett who married my niece; also to learn more about Clarence whom I met some years ago at General Conference. His artistry in carving appealed to me especially, as he had a number of his productions in his very fine home.

Wednesday night, after dinner at Brother Swain's, I again addressed the Saints at Balmain church, this time on the Book of Mormon, by request, which was apparently strengthening to the Saints from remarks made to me.

After this meeting a delightful get-together was had at the Davey home when all of the appointees and their wives—and some of their children—were present, also Sister Florence Peisker, widow of Brother Herman Peisker, whose untimely death occurred at Independence just prior to the 1948 General Conference. I have a copy of the souvenir program in honor of the visit of Bishop Siegfried and myself, which went the rounds that evening, and in addition to the signatures of those of the priesthood, this now is more truly a souvenir as it bears the signatures of their wives: M. Alberts, Florence J. Peisker (just referred to), Lorna Peisker Burdekin (daughter of Sister Peisker), Gertrude Potter, V. Imrie, Sylvia Frater, Elsa Davies, Sister Sorensen, and Mabel Davey.

Pictures were flashed, and after an affectionate farewell, because we were to leave in the morning, the guests departed.

ON BEHALF of Bishop Siegfried and myself I acknowledge with gratitude the fine hospitality accorded us in the home of Brother and Sister Davey while we were in Sydney. They were, of course, old friends, but they have the faculty of making one feel "at home." Dona with her beauty and vivacity also added much to our visit, and she is one gem our loyalty to America suggests we do not care to lose to Australia. They can and have won the Davis Cup in tennis. At that let it stop, say I.

I am justified, I think, in giving a word about Brother Davey. It was a matter of personal gratification to me, through whom he had been called to the office of apostle, to observe his growth since the responsibilities of his office had settled upon him, and so his call and his selection were again confirmed to me.

Our busy, but delightful visit to the "land down under" was ended, and on Thursday, September 6, we said good-bye to a number of the faithful at the Airport, entered the Pan-American strato-liner at 9 a.m., and were on our way home after an absence of almost three months—sorry to leave treasured friends, but glad to be headed for our home and loved ones.

The next evening we were met, to our surprise somewhat—though notice had been sent to Elder Crownover—by a large crowd with leis and Alohas at Honolulu, and after a late dinner when we were guests of Brother and Sister Henry Inouye, we were domiciled for the night at the Mission House.

In the morning, again with quite a number at the Airport, with leis and fond Alohas, we were off again for Los Angeles. We got there in time to get a late "Constellation" for Kansas City, and by early morning on Saturday, September 9, we were in the midst of our families at Independence whom we found reasonably well, though I had premonitions that Sister Smith's illness had been progressive during my absence.

ISRAEL A. SMITH

A Rich Gift to Life

Bishop Clarence A. Skinner, 1880-1951

BISHOP CLARENCE A. SKINNER died at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital on Wednesday, July 11. His health had declined during recent years, and he was critically ill for the past few months.

The life of such a man is more important than his death. Many will remember his faithful service to the church, his kind acts, and the rich talents that he employed for the benefit of others. In spite of his long experience in public, he never lost his shy, quiet charm, touched by a sincere love of people. He was "a friend to man."

Brother Skinner was born June 17, 1880, near Lake City, Iowa; baptized May 26, 1891, near Grant City, Iowa; ordained a deacon December 11, 1904; a priest, January 30, 1911; an elder, January 1, 1922; a high priest and bishop, February 7, 1926; became a counselor to the Presiding Bishop April 14, 1940; resigned because of poor health, April 12, 1946; and was superannuated April 9, 1950.

His mercantile experience began in 1902. In 1903 and 1904 he attended Graceland College, where he met and married Aletha May White on December 25, 1905. She died on February 3, 1924. He suffered keenly from this loss.

In 1916 he began work with the Pennsylvania Consumers Oil Company, rising from salesman to district manager, to assistant sales manager, and then general sales manager. In 1929 he organized and became president of the Archer Petroleum Corporation of Omaha. In both business and church work he was associated with Orman Salisbury, to whom he paid grateful tribute.

On February 28, 1929, he was married to Helen L. Anderson and began a new period of happiness that he appreciated much.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Helen L. Skinner, of the home, and their daughter, Barbara Ann; two daughters, Mrs. J. T. Westwood, Jr., of Independence, and Mrs. Edgar Hansell of Leon, Iowa; three brothers, Elroy of Sac City, Iowa; Ira of Des Moines, and Levi of Tulsa; and six grandchildren.

Brother Skinner was an amateur artist of ability. Some of his fine oil paintings of nature scenes adorn the offices and homes of his friends. He had a talent for illustrated "chalk talks" that fascinated his listeners. He was skilled in the graphic presentation of the financial law in church work. He was a good companion and traveler, and men always welcomed an opportunity to be with him. A considerable part of the present beauty of the historical church properties at Nauvoo are due to his study and labor.

Selections from the Memoirs of William Wallace Blair of the First Presidency

Part Three: In the Power of the Spirit

E. C. Briggs Healed for a Purpose —1859

When Sunday arrived, the thirty-first day of July, it found Elder Briggs suffering from the leading symptoms of typhoid fever, which had afflicted him for the past three days, and so sorely at times that he was well nigh prostrated. Between Indian Town and Wheeler's Grove, on the twenty-ninth, he was so overcome that we went aside from the road, and he desired to be permitted to go to sleep. After prayer and administration we were reminded, vividly, of the experiences of the disciples in the garden of Gethsemane, when an unnatural sleep was thrown over them, as recorded in Matthew 26: 37-43. We now felt it important that he should obtain relief at the hands of the Lord, for we were conscious that we would be called upon to take part in the services at the meeting on that day. We accordingly repaired to a clump of cottonwood trees back in the cornfield, and sitting down beneath the shade we prayerfully deliberated upon the best course to pursue. We resolved that God would hear and answer prayer in our behalf, and that Brother Briggs would be restored. We united in fervent pleadings to the Lord for his special aid; this we did three times, and the Holy Spirit came with cheering power, witnessing that our prayers were heard. In a moment Brother Briggs exclaimed, weeping, "Thank God, I'm healed. That sleepiness has all left me!"

Returning to the house, we were soon on our way with Father Beebe and his family to the residence of Brother Newton Richards, where services had been appointed. When Father Beebe had opened the services of the occasion, he stated to the people that Joseph the Seer taught them in years gone by that when any important matters are presented to the Saints and they had no means at hand to determine as to their correctness, they should then humbly seek the Lord in fervent prayer, asking him for wisdom and knowledge on which to decide. He said, "These brethren brought to me statements concerning the soon coming of Joseph, the son of Joseph, to take the presidency of the church, and I was unable to decide as to whether such were true or not. I therefore have sought the Lord, as Brother Joseph instructed us, and the Lord has witnessed to me by his Spirit that these are his servants. I therefore present them to you as his servants that we all may hear what they have to say."

Upon this, by request, Brother Briggs gave a brief account of the rise of the work of the Reorganization in northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin, giving many testimonies of the Spirit which he had had concerning the coming of young Joseph to preside over the church. I then followed with a discourse on the latter-day apostasy and the need of a revival and reorganization of the church, treated of the law of lineage, and spoke of the promises made in the revelations and church records concerning the posterity of Joseph the Seer in connection with the presidency of the church and the successorship of the Seer.

At the close of this a young brother, James R. Badham, a Cutlerite, rose and spoke in tongues with much power, bearing testimony to our mission and stating that the Saints under Father Cutler had enjoyed the same Spirit that had directed the work we were then engaged in. This interpretation was through Father John Smith, an aged, noble, white-haired brother who, like Simeon of old, had been waiting for the consolation of Israel. Father Smith further said by the Spirit, pointing to Brother Briggs and myself, "These brethren are on a mission of great importance. The Lord has been with them, and he will still sustain them; and they will be the means in the hands of the Lord of laying the foundation of a great work in all this upper country." The Spirit was poured out upon many others, some of whom likewise bore witness to our mission.

We now began to perceive why it was that Satan, for the few days previous, had sought to render Brother Briggs, the chief witness, powerless to carry forward his mission work.

Leaving Brother Briggs to labor in western Iowa, I went . . . east.

In the November following, I went preaching down on Fox River in the vicinity of Sandwich and other points in that region. On the 18th we organized the Fox River Branch. About this time Sister Mahala Rogers, wife of Brother I. L. Rogers, had been suffering for some days with a felon on her hand. . . . Feeling powerfully constrained by the spirit of God, I went out and in secret prayed to the Lord fervently that she might be healed; and while engaged in prayer the witness of the Holy Spirit was given, assuring me that she would be relieved. . . . From that time forward she had no further trouble. . . . her hand was made whole.

About midnight, on one occasion, Brother Rogers called us to sit up with the family, saying that his wife's sister, Mrs. Roxy Austin, was very sick, nigh unto death. She at length signified her desire to be anointed and prayed for. . . . She trembled and wept, rejoicing in her instantaneous recovery. . . . Ten days after this, Mrs. Austin, with a goodly number more, was baptized.

The Origin of Corn With Relation to the Book of Mormon

By Melvin L. Fowler

EVER SINCE the Book of Mormon came forth it has been subjected to the criticism of persons who have never even studied it or its related fields. While there is a degree of reason in these criticisms, some of the strongest of them seem to be giving away, while the Book of Mormon remains with still the same statements as it was originally published. The purpose of this article is to demonstrate how one of those objections is now changing from a basis for saying "It couldn't possibly be so," to the admission, "It could be."

The Question of Crops

Early in the history as recorded by the Book of Mormon the statement is made that Lehi and his family "did go down into the ship with all our loading and our seeds,"¹ and after they had landed in the promised land

It came to pass that we did begin to till the earth, and we began to plant seeds; yea, we did put all our seeds into the earth which we had brought from the land of Jerusalem. And it came to pass that they did grow exceedingly; wherefore, we were blessed in abundance.²

This type of statement has been pointed at by opponents of the Book of Mormon as one which belies its authenticity, for, they say, if this were true, why was it that when Columbus came here the native Americans were growing crops that were distinct and in no way related to those being grown in the Old World? If they brought seeds with them, why didn't they grow the same crops as the people in the lands from whence they came instead of crops that were completely native to America? We could give the weak argument that their seeds didn't prosper and that these ingenious peoples domesticated local plants to replace them. Other explanations could be put forth only to find us ensnared in our own trap, for the preceding quotation definitely states that the plants prospered, and the Nephites were "blessed in abundance." Fortunately it is not now necessary to offer such speculative explanations. Let's look into the development of our understanding of the origins and nature of corn, the main crop of the American Indians, and see what has come to light.

The Golden Crop of America

The first report that western Europe had of corn, or maize, was an entry in the diary of Columbus. Shortly after this original observation, it became a widely-known crop in Europe and the Near East until today it is grown in all parts of the world. Indeed, it is commonly said that the value to our civilization of this one crop alone has been many times more than that of all the gold taken from America by the Spanish Conquistadores.

The crop was raised throughout the entire hemisphere and in almost as many varied climates as the people had penetrated. A special variety was found growing in the high altitudes of the incomparable Andes Mountains, another type was adapted to the jungle lowlands of Central America, and still others were growing in the northern parts of the United States and Canada where the weather was cold and the growing season short. Everywhere it was grown, maize was the staff of life. Indeed it is considered the crop that probably made the ancient civilizations of America flourish. With our fields of hybrids yielding rich harvests throughout the world we are prone to take this crop for granted, failing to realize that it is one of the greatest contributions coming to our civilization from the ancient Americans.

Whence Came the Indian Corn?

Students of the origins of American Indian civilizations have always realized that one of the keys to the problem would be in the tracing out of the beginnings of corn and its place of origin. Much has been written on this subject, and today research is continuing. Besides the early European botanists who gave the plant its botanical name zea mays and described its many variations for the scientific world, one of the first men to approach the problem from a point of view of whether or not this maize came originally from the Old World or the New was Berthold Laufer.³ After having studied the literature and finding that maize was well known in China and the Near East, and having been assured by the botanists of his day that this maize was no different than the maize of America, he came to the conclusion that it was a native of America and had been introduced into Asia shortly after the discovery of America. He further traced its route of spread from southern Europe through India, Burma, and into China.

With this fundamental problem thus settled the search was carried on for the ancestor of maize which, it was felt, would be growing wild in the area where the plant was first domesticated. A relative of maize was found to be common in the highlands of Mexico and Guatemala. It was called by the natives teocintli, or sacred maize; this was considered the ancestor from which maize was developed.⁴ Only one other plant found native in the New World was related to maize, but it was not as closely similar as teocintli, and so was ruled out. This is called tripsicum by the botanists and will appear again in our discussions. For awhile, then, this was considered as the solution, and any suggestion that the civilizations of America might have been influenced from outside of this hemisphere was faced with this evidence of concrete nature; the civilizations of America were based upon an economic structure dependent upon maize. Maize was a native plant whose ancestors had been found in America only, therefore the civilizations were also completely indigenous.

Recent Revisions

In the last decade and a half (Spinden's work was originally published in 1924) botanists have perused the writings of the Spanish adventurers of four centuries ago and have studied the nature of corn from the point of view of plant genetics. When the results began to be made known a slight tremor of amazement was felt, and the old ideas began to crumble. In 1939 two botanists published a paper⁵ demonstrating that teocintli was not the ancestor of maize, but rather a hybrid between maize and the plant tripsicum. Maize had its origin in an ancestor known as pod corn. This is a peculiar type of corn in which each kernel is encased in a husk much as wheat and other grains are. These theories were supported by a later find of some prehistoric pod corn within the last few years in a cave in New Mexico.⁶ It was proposed that this pod corn would be found growing in a wild state somewhere in the general region of the Amazon basin in South America, as this seemed to the authors the most favorable place for this type of plant.

At about this time botanists again had called to their attention the fact that maize was a common plant in Asia. Two botanists studied the maize in Asia and began to find that two rather distinct types of this plant were grown.⁷ One was a type that was definitely similar to that which Columbus first saw in the Carribean area and could definitely be traced in origin to its introduction into the Philippines and subsequent spreading from there throughout the Orient in post-Columbian times. The other—and this began to totter the accepted theoretical structure almost completely—was a type that was grown among the isolated and primitive hill peoples of Burma and was apparently a crop of ancient use among them. Pod corn was a common crop. In making a careful scientific analysis of the nature and structure of this latter Asiatic maize it was found to be most closely related to the maize found in South America in the earliest times, rather than with the type common in later times! It was concluded by Stonor and Anderson that the introduction of maize in Asia was from two different sources—one in post-Columbian times and the other before the discovery of America by Columbus. The direction of this early migration is left up in the air as a problem unsolved.

The final problem of whether this early spreading of maize took place from Asia to America or America to Asia has been discussed by two recent writers.⁸ Carter discusses the main plants of American agriculture and points out that many of these are definitely Old World plants which have spread somehow to this hemisphere. The so-called bottle gourd, a native of India, is one of these. In recent investigations of cotton in America it has been found that two varieties exist: a wild inferior type and a domestic long-fibered type raised by the Indians, the staple commercial cotton of today. Through complex studies of this domesticated American cotton it was found that it was a result of crossing native Old World cotton and native New World cotton! Since only one relative of maize is known in America as a native plant (tripsicum) and many are known from Asia (sorghum, Job's tears, and others) Carter suggests that the same thing might be true of maize as is true of cotton. An Old World plant brought to this hemisphere and crossed with the native plant produced a hybrid superior to either of the original plants. The evidence of archaeology brought to light in the past few years⁹ supports this idea in that the early type of corn is pod corn. This with an influx of characteristics thought to be due to a crossing with tripsicum resulted in more and better types of corn.

Summary

1. Opponents to the Book of Mormon have pointed to corn, maintaining that it is a native American plant, as a concrete reason for opposing the book which states that the Nephites brought seeds with them from Palestine.

2. Originally archaeologists pointed to certain American plants as being ancestors from which maize was domesticated, thus demonstrating the indigenous origin of aboriginal American agriculture and therefore prehistoric American civilizations. The raising of maize in Asia was thought to be due to the introduction of this plant into that area after the discovery of America.

3. Later, botanists demonstrated that the plant thought to be the ancestor of corn was not the ancestor but merely a hybrid between maize and a related wild grass, tripsicum. A type of corn known as pod corn was thought to be more like the original plant from which maize developed. Further, one variety of Asiatic maize was demonstrated to be of pre-Columbian origin and closely related to the maize grown in ancient Peru.

4. Many plants raised in America are found to be natives of India and other countries in the Old World. Cotton raised by the Indians in America was found to be a cross between native New World cotton and native Old World cotton. Since most of the relatives of maize are found in the Old World (only one in America), and since it has been proved that maize (especially pod corn) was known in Asia before the discovery of America, it is suggested that maize might have had its origin in Asia, but was crossed with tripsicum after being introduced into America, thus producing corn more as we know it today.

Conclusion

There the evidence stands today. Much of it is solid fact; some is intelligent guess; and some is conjecture. The picture, however, is much clearer than it was, and it all seems to point to the idea that people did come to America from Asia, introducing crops and influencing American civilization. The statements made in the Book of Mormon published in 1830 stand forth proudly today as being possible in light of the best scientific knowledge on the subject.

Trial by Friendship

Max Beerbohm and I once had a discussion about a mutual friend. I liked him and Max didn't, and after it was over I apologized for perhaps having been too overheated in my defense. "Probably you're right," I said.

"No," said Max Beerbohm. "If two people cannot agree about a third person whom they both know, the one who likes him is right, always."—G. B. Stern, Another Part of the Forest (Macmillan).

Knowing God - By Alice Zion Buckley

THERE WAS A MAN who bragged that he understood God and his laws because he had once seen a lame man healed. He reminded me of the diver who claims he has seen the ocean because he has pried loose one abalone shell from beneath the waves, or has come across a hulk of a sunken ship ten fathoms down.

The diver, in his puny wisdom, forgets the uncharted seas with hidden, dark caverns and the great depths to which man has never gone.

The man of religion, boasting of his bit of knowledge of God and his law, forgets that to God nothing is a miracle, while to an earthly being miracles surround him daily. He sees a lame man healed and forgets that there are greater laws by which men's hearts and minds are healed.

God, omnipotent and all-wise, stands ever ahead of our understanding, beckoning us on to higher places. It is challenging to have the complete knowledge of either nature or God always a bit out of reach. In this sure pattern of life man can be both humble and rich.

Notice to Priesthood Members and Branch Secretaries

THE SECRETARY of a small branch in a large city received in the mail, from the Department of Statistics, the balance sheet, membership page, and enrollment card for a sister whose membership was transferred to that branch. The secretary immediately called it to the attention of the pastor. He, as all pastors should do in such cases, went to call upon the new arrival to welcome her to the city in the name of the church and to invite her to services. Imagine his amazement when he learned that she had been living there for twenty-five years!

He learned that, before moving to this city, the lady had been active in church work, and that her husband, though a nonmember, had been fairly regular in attendance; but upon their arrival in the big city they found it difficult to get started to church without encouragement from someone in the branch, so they put it off from week to week. Finally their desire to go to church was gone. Thus their children grew up, out of the church, and now the grandchildren are growing up without even having heard of the church. Possibly these people would now be enjoying the blessings of the gospel if, twenty-five years ago, a secretary had been alert to his responsibility.

An anxious mother writes for a Certificate of Blessing for her son who is overseas and needs it badly. She knows that he was blessed, but we have no record of it. The officiating elder failed to report it, so untold difficulty is brought upon the one he sought to bless. This good elder failed to realize that the blessing is not complete until it has been reported.

A sister in need writes for a Certificate of Baptism to be used in getting old age assistance, but we have no record of her baptism. She, having been a faithful member for many years, is hurt to know that her name is not on the records, and in addition she finds it very difficult to prove her age so as to be able to get her assistance. Here we have two failures: first the man who baptized her failed to report it; second, the branch recorder, who over a period of many years, failed to check the records and find that the name of this sister was not on them.

And so it goes—souls lost, trouble, delay, and embarrassment to many people all because someone failed to qualify in a sacred responsibility.

But, you say, these are isolated cases or things that happened long ago. Unfortunately this is not true. Experiences similar to these and others equally distressing are coming to our attention every day. In addition, recent baptisms, blessings, marriages, and even ordinations, unreported but eventually discovered, come to our files. We discover them in many ways. For example a young man, not yet old enough to vote, was ordained. When we went to enter his ordination on the record, we discovered that his baptism had never been reported. According to the record he was not even a member of the church.

This is only part of the story, but perhaps enough to help you to understand the great need for reporting all blessings, baptisms, marriages, divorces, ordinations, and transfers. Have you officiated in some ordinance without reporting it? Do you know of something that has not been reported? If so, report it at once and save yourself, or someone else, embarrassment, delay, and disappointment.

Question:

Can God speak and call men to his ministry today?
Missouri E.E.J.

Answer:

In the light of the Scripture teaching that God is unchangeable in his character and purpose, and the fact that for over four thousand years he did call men to his service, how could we believe otherwise than that he can still do so today? To disbelieve in this would be to reveal a deficient faith in God—that he had either changed, or lost his power, or grown weary in his concern for man.

The very existence of this church is a living testimony that God speaks today. He called it into being. He called his servants, not from the ranks of church men who had studied theology and had become learned, but from the unlearned and made them his instruments in the bringing forth of this church. Their knowledge, and power, and wisdom came from him. The church stands today as the monument of his unchanging purpose and power. Every officer, minister, member and church building bears witness in trumpet tones that "God speaks today."

Question:

When may speculation in scriptural interpretation prove profitable, and when should it be avoided in missionary endeavor?
Missouri F.E.

Answer:

One of the strong commands given to the missionaries of the church is to "Preach naught but repentance"—not that the subject of repentance should be the only theme, but that the preaching should be the essential principles of truth, such as would be effectual in turning the people toward God—or as elsewhere stated, "saying none other things than that which the prophets and apostles have written."

Speculative argument is seldom profitable, especially when there is so much certain truth available. The servants of God have an advantage in their ministry above all others, that is, the promise of the Holy Spirit, by which they may be instructed, directed, and aided in their work. "Ye are not sent forth to be taught, but to teach the children of men the things which I have put into your hands by the power of my Spirit; and ye are to be taught from on high. Sanctify yourselves and ye shall be endowed with power, that ye may give even as I have spoken."—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 4.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Do not all churches lead to heaven?
Missouri E.E.J.

Answer:

The Scriptures which we have formally accepted as true and divine commit us to certain facts which determine our attitude toward both the church to which we belong and other churches. We can notice but few by way of illustration:

INFANT BAPTISM: Many churches maintain this practice but the Scripture states that we should teach "repentance and baptism unto those who are accountable and capable of committing sin," also that "little children are whole, for they are not capable of committing sin," and that those who teach that infants need baptism are denying the mercies of Christ and setting at naught his atonement and the power of his redemption. Such teaching "is mockery before God, and denying the mercies of Christ and the power of the Holy Spirit, and putting trust in dead works." The Lord further says, "Woe be unto him that shall pervert the ways of the Lord after this manner, for they shall perish, except they repent" (Moroni 8: 17).

BAPTISMS WITHOUT AUTHORITY: On one occasion persons sought to enter this church upon their baptisms in other churches. The request was laid before the Lord, and the answer given: "This is a new and an everlasting covenant; even that which was from the beginning. Wherefore, if a man shall be baptized an hundred times it availeth him nothing; for you can not enter in at the straight gate by the law of Moses, neither by your dead works; for it is because of your dead works that I have caused this last covenant, and this church to be built up unto me; even as in days of old. Wherefore, enter ye in at the gate."—Doctrine and Covenants 20: 1.

FOUNDATION OF THE CHURCH: "If it so be that the church is built up upon my gospel, then will the Father show forth his own works in it, but if it be not built upon my gospel, and is built upon the works of men . . . they have joy in their works for a season, and by and by the end cometh, and they are hewn down and cast into the fire."—III Nephi 12: 22, 23.

MORE OR LESS: "Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore he is not of my church."—Doctrine and Covenants 3: 16.

These points indicate the uncertain standing of many and the need for a re-examination of the foundation upon which men are building their hope of salvation and eternal life.

Question:

Will you please clarify the meaning concerning anointing the head with oil when one fasts?—Matthew 6: 17-18.
Arizona R. W.

Answer:

The anointing here mentioned has no reference to any sacred ordinance and was not given as a requirement for men to observe, except to say that the disciples when fasting should not make an exhibition of it for the sake of seeking the praise of men, as did some of the Jewish extremists who left their faces unwashed, their hair uncombed, and who disfigured their countenances in order that men might be impressed with their piety and devotion. This Jesus condemned as hypocritical. Fasting should be to the Lord only.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA.—June 1 was Preparation Day for vacation church school. The school opened June 4 with an enrollment of 116 and at the end of the week 153 in attendance. The second week 153 enrolled and there was an average attendance of 140 each day. The junior pastor was Priest Russell Rumsey and his assistant was Priest Leonard Hicks. Mrs. Lucile Rumsey, music leader, and Mrs. Leota Allen, pianist, supervised the music.

The school closed June 15 with an achievement program. The handwork exhibited in the lower auditorium consisted of notebooks, plastic braiding, needle work, molding figurines, textile paintings, and various kinds of woodwork. In the upper auditorium the program consisted of songs from the kindergarten, primary, junior, and junior high departments. A review of the continued story The Voyage was given by Claudine Lollar, and Mrs. T. P. Greenwood, the principal, presented sixty-nine award certificates.

The pastor, W. P. Rumsey and Church School Supervisor Joe Faulk supervised a follow-up of night services on instruction for the prebaptismal group. The local priesthood took turns teaching each night. This was climaxed at the close with a baptismal service June 24 when sixteen were baptized.—Reported by MRS. T. P. GREENWOOD

FLINT-PORT HURON DISTRICT, MICHIGAN.—Eighty-three members of the district made a pilgrimage to Kirtland Temple June 16 and 17. The group arrived at Kirtland in the evening on Saturday and were served dinner by the women of the Kirtland Branch. After registration a service regarding the history of the temple was held. William E. Williams, pastor of the Kirtland Branch, gave a resume of the history of the church and the building of the Temple. After viewing the main auditorium, the group went to the second floor auditorium which had been occupied as the School of the Prophets. The opening service on Sunday was a prayer service. Evangelist J. J. Ledsworth ministered to the group in this meeting. The morning sermon was delivered by High Priest R. M. Russell, president of the Flint-Port Huron District and pastor of the Flint Branch. Noon dinner was served by the women of the Kirtland Branch in the R.L.D.S. dining room and the group left for home.—Reported by LOIS GREEN

EDMONTON, ALBERTA.—President of Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe, missionary, held meetings every evening except Saturdays for two weeks beginning Sunday, June 3 through Sunday June 17. These were designed to tell the distinctive message of the Restoration to the nonmember neighbors and friends who had been invited to hear them. A baptismal service was held following the series and Mrs. Bessie Forrester was baptized, and arrangements were made for another baptismal service to be held in several weeks. Progress is noted in the building program of the branch.—Reported by MYRTLE BOWERMAN

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS.—Priest Harold Taylor and Deacon Richard Bowen are now in the U.S. Navy.

Patriarch Ray Whiting conducted a series during March 4-11. His topic was "Lift the Warning Voice." This was followed by five weeks of missionary work in the Quad-Cities.

Dora Lyne Rasmussen, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Rasmussen was blessed March 11 by Elders Leonard Stiegel and Orville Short. Phillip Naylor, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Naylor, was blessed March 18 by Elders Lee White and Leonard Stiegel. Dana George Chesnutt, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Chesnutt was blessed April 15 by Elders Stiegel and Orville Short. Sandra Bergman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Bergman, was blessed June 10 by Elders Stiegel and S. A. Chesnutt.

A baptismal service was held March 18. Mr. and Mrs. James Angell were baptized by Elder Stiegel. They were confirmed at the evening service. On April 15 a baptism was held and Vicki Armour and John O'Leary were baptized by Priest Harold Braun. Ruth Billman, Charles Billman, Bernice Bergman, Richard Rasmussen, and Guy Maxfield were baptized by Elder Stiegel. Confirmation service was in the evening. Claude Howard McKee and Larry McNeil were baptized by Elder Clyde McKee, and Marilyn Wakeland and Mary Lou Braun were baptized by Priest Harold Braun on June 17.

Two men of the priesthood have returned from Missouri with their brides. Merlyn Williams and Donna Deal were married April 5 at Cameron, Missouri, and Laurel Jordan and Effie Beltrama were married April 6 at the Stone Church in Independence, Missouri. A potluck supper was held in their honor May 18.

The annual business meeting for the women's department was held, and officers for the coming year elected. Margaret Braun will be the general women's leader. In the circles, Alberta Boysen is chairman of the Sorosis Circle; Muriel Sackfield is chairman of the Clara Smith Circle, and Rose Bowen is chairman of the women's auxiliary.

A spaghetti supper was held in the lower auditorium by the women's auxiliary April 18, under the supervision of Mrs. Sam Nuccio.

The Clyde McKee family were congratulated on their graduations this year. Mrs. Clyde McKee graduated from Mary Crest College in Davenport, receiving her B.A. degree. Paul McKee, the eldest son, graduated from Graceland, and Daryl McKee graduated from Rock Island High School.

Ordination services were held June 24. Ralph Largent was ordained to the office of teacher, Kenneth Stiegel to the office of priest, and William Seline to the office of deacon.

The new addition to the church is under construction.—Reported by DOROTHY O'LEARY

CENTRAL ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—A church school institute was held April 7 and 8 at Taylorville, Illinois, under the direction of William Banfield, district church school director. The theme of the institute was "Strengthen the Church." Apostle Reed Holmes, General Director of the Department of Religious Education, was present at the institute.

Topics under discussion at the Saturday sessions were "Improve Your Church School," "The Church School and Evangelism," "Worship in the Church," and "Youth at Work in the Church." A general class was conducted by Apostle Holmes in the evening. Simplified methods of teaching were discussed and a summary of the classes was given.

Apostle Holmes was in charge of the prayer service on Sunday, assisted by District President Arthur Henson and Seventy Cecil Ettinger. Following this service a class was held after which Apostle Holmes delivered the morning sermon.

During the afternoon Sister Mike Fowler of Springfield, Illinois, presented a demonstration of visual aids using the flannelgraph. Apostle Holmes conducted a general class at the closing event of the conference.

Church school directors of the district who were present or represented were: Max Matthews, Danville; James Munson, Pana; Ber-

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—Priest Jabez Elam delivered the Mother's Day sermon. Special music was provided by the choir, a solo by Marjorie Damitz, and a duet by Virginia Winsor and Marjorie Damitz. The women's department director, Mrs. Mary Honeychurch, presented corsages to the oldest and youngest mother present. Mrs. Emma Cook, the oldest mother, has passed her ninety-th birthday. A drama was presented in the evening.

A Memorial Day service was held May 27. Elder Harold Bolton was the speaker. The choir presented patriotic music and a solo written by Sister Grace Kenowyer was sung by Virginia Winsor. Many of the members of the branch spent the holiday at Happy Valley reunion grounds enjoying a picnic and outing while working on the grounds.

The second annual spring luncheon honoring the officers of the women's department was held at the church May 26. Mrs. Myron Schall presided. The theme of the program was "Women's Work in the Home, Church, and School." The table decorations represented these three spheres. Guest speakers were Mrs. Pauline White, district women's director, and Mrs. Max Bollman, head of the Sacramento church women's council. Seated also at the guest table were other women officers of the district. The talks were preceded by the reading of poems relating to the subject. Piano and vocal numbers were rendered.

Young people from the Stockton Branch presented the play, "Our Town" at the church June 1. Three children were baptized on Children's Day. Kenneth Loyd Perkins, James Melvin Nelson, and Christine Joy Dameron were baptized by Elder James Dameron. The confirmation service was held June 24. A Children's Day program was presented by the church school with music by the junior and youth choirs directed by Phillipa Gann. Pastor Myron Schall gave the sermonette. At the close of the service Mrs. Elma Rolfe, church school director, presented a potted plant to each child. In the evening Elder Herbert Lynn began a series of missionary meetings.

Elder Franklyn Weddle, assisted by Mrs. Bethel Knoche and Miss Aleta Runkle, conducted a music institute at the church June 15, 16, and 17. Classes were held covering all phases of music in worship. Elder Weddle delivered the morning sermon June 17.

At a business meeting held June 27 it was voted to donate an electric dish washer and some heating equipment owned by the branch to the reunion grounds.—Reported by LENA SWANEY

SAULT STE MARIE, ONTARIO.—Elder William McMurray was the speaker on June 6, 7, 8, and 10. A Children's Day program was held June 10. During this service Donald E. Robb, son of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Robb was blessed by Elder G. A. Edwards. Following the blessing of the baby, Lois Sharon Edwards, Victoria Carol Burch, Gloria Jean Burch, James Frederick Braun, and Kenneth Daniel Cliffe were baptized by Elder William McMurray. The confirmations took place June 24 during the morning service.

The district young people's convention was held June 15-17. The theme was "Little Things." Elders Rex Stowe and William McMurray were present.

A Pastor and Policeman Dies

By Hubert Case

A MAN WHO LOVED EVERYBODY, Police Captain George W. Hopkins, pastor at Enid, Oklahoma, died June 24. He won fame by his safety teaching in schools and church groups, both in his own town and other places where he had been invited to talk.

His many good deeds preached great sermons, never to be forgotten by this generation. He had just returned from Washington, D.C., where President Truman had invited him to talk to national safety groups.

Helping in the safety program was his delight. He understood children, and they loved him. Brother George leaves his record as a godly man and Christian gentleman.

His funeral was held in the Christian Church (to better accommodate the large crowd) by request of the pastor who paid him many compliments, and was associated with Apostle Reed Holmes and Seventy William Haden in the funeral services.

I have known George and his people since he was a boy. His father, also a lover of people, passed away when George was about sixteen, so young George took his father's place as line-man for the telephone company. With his faithful mother he made the living and put his brother and sister through school.

He leaves his wife, Dorothy; a daughter, Mary Lynne; his mother, one brother, a sister, and about as many friends as anyone I ever saw.

He goes to a well-earned reward where he may be as busy or more so than he was here.

I had the pleasure of living in their home and had their help, with that of Brother and Sister McGeorge and others, in starting the group work for the church in Enid. With the help of Arthur Dixon and George Hopkins we bought our present church building and mission house in Enid. George was happy in his church work, for unity, love, and peace crowned his efforts. God bless his memory, his noble companion, daughter, and his people.

Puppets and Bible Plays

Puppets and Bible Plays is the first book published in this country showing how puppets can be effectively used in the presentation of Bible stories.

Educators now consider puppetry an important new medium of visual education. Many public schools as well as church school teachers who are looking for creative activity, worth-while handwork, visual aids or drama material are using puppetry in teaching.

Witnessing Through the Doctrine and Covenants

By Bertha Newton

THE SCRIPTURES say we are called to be witnesses—witnesses of what we have heard, seen, and experienced concerning God and his Son, Jesus Christ. We are witnessing always—one way or another. Our Heavenly Father wants us to be qualified witnesses—those who know the law from studying the Word and keeping it.

Our church is specially blessed by having the Doctrine and Covenants as one of the canon of Scripture. It has been given to us as our law in these latter days with its additional light, understanding, and detailed instruction. If we study it and live according to it, we should be God's best witnesses. There is instruction in this book for us from our birth until our death—from our blessing as a baby to our baptism and from there on as we prepare our lives for effective witnessing. Here are a few of the instructions found in the Doctrine and Covenants to help us develop our lives so that we may be better servants:

1. We are to seek and cultivate the Christlike character by having faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, and diligence.

2. We are to be clean in thought, speech, and manner.

3. We are to be honest with God, our fellow men, and ourselves.

4. We are to be generous, not only in our temporal belongings, but in our thoughts and attitudes of others.

5. We are to be brotherly—and good citizens—being an asset to our community and nation.

6. We are to be useful. Many times we are told not to be idlers.

7. We are to be thrifty, sensing our responsibility as stewards.

8. We are to consider the Word of Wisdom as a help in maintaining our good health, physically and mentally, by using the correct foods.

9. We are to respect the sanctity of marriage.

10. We are to share in the worship services and activities of the church and to use our talents as we have the opportunity.

11. We are to be prepared and partake regularly of the Lord's Supper.

12. We are to be good parents, remembering our responsibility to teach our children "to pray and walk uprightly and to understand the doctrine of repentance."

13. We are to read good books, to study the Word of God, and to have our individual and family devotions.

14. We are to do all things with thanksgiving and prayer.

15. We are to feel the need of Jesus in our lives at all times.

These are only part of the instructions found in this book to help us become witnesses for Him, and our witnessing will be effective only in so far as we qualify.

A LONG WITH THIS INSTRUCTION we read the testimony of the two great witnesses in this book. This should mean much to us.

And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

Few men we read of in the Scriptures have had the testimony given to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery only 119 years ago. This testimony has come in our day—not in ages past. Because we can read this testimony, we are encouraged and our faith is increased. I often wonder if anyone since that time has had the same experience. If so, it isn't recorded for us to read. But there have been and are some great testimonies—I have heard some of them. Although they aren't printed in a book, they are recorded in our hearts and lives as we hear them. As I was meditating about this last week, I remembered that someone said we are a record of all the things that have happened to us—the words spoken to us, the things we have seen, and the many experiences of our lives. As I became lost in this thought, and realized how terrible and how beautiful the result could be, I found myself believing that surely I would become a better witness. If what I say and do to you becomes a part of your record, and your words and actions become a part of mine, then we become a part of each other! We do indeed become brothers and sisters, having either a good or bad investment in each other. And surely the part of each other's record that we contribute, we will want to be good.

WE CAN BECOME effective witnesses through the instruction given in the Doctrine and Covenants on how we are to live. With this later testimony "that our Savior lives" strengthening us, we can be living witnesses to those about us and our faith will become knowledge. If all of us witness together, even though we are scattered, we shall please our Heavenly Father. We will be paying our highest tribute to him and be helping to fulfill the purpose for which we were created.

The Zionie Home Is a Democracy

IN THE LAST several years of war and confusion we have heard a great deal about democracy. We have been taught how it should work, and we find in its workings many imperfections, but in spite of its defects it is still by far the best and most Christlike type of government in use today. We are free to express ourselves in many ways, yet there must be restrictions imposed for the benefit of all the people.

A democracy has recognized authority, self-imposed by people who are free to choose. This law and order, or discipline and control, act as balance wheels for society when, and if, some individual desires to impose his own personal feelings above the feelings of the majority, regardless of consequences to or infringement on others.

It is the same in our homes. We have a chance to demonstrate an even more perfect degree of democracy than in our national government if the members of the home are guided and controlled voluntarily for the good of the family.

The recognized authorities in homes are the parents. Disciplinary measures are the unwritten laws or ethics created by the mother and father in light of each personality involved.

A good home is a home governed by law, but not a law that crushes the spirit of the child nor robs him of his initiative and imagination.

IN NEARLY EVERY HOME there are problems of individual selfishness and errors. Each child and each parent may differ vastly in personality traits. Each has a different degree of imagination and initiative, hence the perspective is not the same.

This difference in perspective calls to mind the story of the beautiful home going up in flames. Outside on the sidewalk three men watched helplessly. They saw the same flames and the same house, yet their reactions were quite different, because one was the owner; one, the insurance man; and one, the photographer.

Children react differently to corrective measures. Some may need firm discipline to bring about harmony; others need only a word or two. This vast difference in personality is the balancing element in homes, and gives the parents an opportunity to bring into their lives a love of God through their faith, sympathy, understanding, and helpfulness in dealing with their children.

There is a great deal of truth in the saying that Christianity is to be caught, not taught. This lays the responsibility in the laps of the parents. If they express love, patience, kindness, understanding, sympathy, faith, hope, and charity in their own characters, the children in turn will absorb a degree of these traits. In an undemocratic home, where there is excessive authority, orderliness may be obtained in a particular situation or as long as the child is under authority, but once out of its range, he has little regard for discipline. On the other hand a parent who leads democratically, who encourages the fullest participation of his child in planning home projects and in co-operatively carrying them out, can more nearly rest assured that when the family members are away from home they will behave the same as when they are under parental care. In such a home children learn co-operation, responsibility and self-discipline not as mottoes, but as a way of living.

By Eunice E. Butterworth

Is there any greater work on earth than fashioning and molding the lives and characters of the little ones? Parents need the vision of their worth as seen through the eyes of Jesus.

THE RISING interest in world problems and conditions is reflected in much of the reading matter offered by the July magazines. Also to be found, of course, are the features on the always-popular subjects of food, clothing, and child-rearing.

"Schweitzer vs. Stalin," Ladies' Home Journal, is a contrasting of these two men, one classed as the kindest man in the world, and the other as the most ruthless.

"Anemia in Children—More Common Than We Think," Ladies' Home Journal, points out that anemia is quite prevalent. The author tells what to look for, and what to do about it.

Are you looking for a hobby? A well-known artist suggests what he thinks is a perfect cure for almost any tensions, anxieties, or insecurities, in "Become a Sunday Painter," Cosmopolitan.

When "What shall we eat?" is bothering you, look up "Salad Time," Woman's Day, for some new ideas.

This is neither pleasant nor soothing reading, but "Peril On Your Food Shelf," American Magazine, brings out some facts that homemakers should know that they may support control measures for the use of chemicals in food products.

Before you or anyone in your family risks bad sunburn, it might be a good idea to read "The Sun and You," Woman's Home Companion.

"The Bright Side of Korea," Woman's Home Companion, tells the story of the amazing medical care given to soldiers wounded in Korea.

"The Truth About Mixed Marriages," Woman's Home Companion, is a comprehensive discussion of the problems created when two

Tomorrow Will Be Wonderful

By Louise Scott Wrigley

THE POSTMAN JUST CAME BY, the rain dripping from his hat bill and making little rivers down the ribs of his umbrella. But from the sturdy brown bag where they were snug and dry, he pulled a packet of letters as precious to me as anything could be—and silently I thanked him for protecting John's letters from the rain, so that even the handwriting on the outside would not be smudged and spoiled. Its very familiarity steadied and supported me as I sat down right where I was (a habit formed long ago) and read with interest and appreciation the latest word from Korea.

It has been a year now. A year in which each day has forged itself to another day and another until month upon month stretched into a solid chain of waiting. There has been joy, of course. Who could have two growing boys around who tease Mother and each other, who have their own ideas and their own problems, without knowing joy and wonder at the limits of their unfolding minds? Who could have a husband in a combat area for a year, safe and sound, and not know joy—and a deep and humble gratitude to God?

There has been the happiness of association with wonderful friends and of renewing the home ties with Dad and Mother and two brothers who were always very close to my heart. The days have filled themselves, as days will, with love and service and new appreciation of the possibilities within ourselves and every other human being.

There have been heartaches too—but dwelling on them cannot change them. Ours has not been an unhappy separation, for we decided long ago that we could keep alive our family closeness in many intangible ways, and that when we must depend on those intangibles we would build them strong and sure.

In every holiday letter we had relived the Christmas activities for John, and he expressed his appreciation time and again, for he felt that he was, in some small measure, sharing all over again the excitement and the beautiful spirit of the Christmas season which has always highlighted our year.

When things got dull here at home, the last of January, I broke my foot—much to the embarrassment of young John, since the accident occurred on the schoolhouse steps. He had some misgivings as to whether this was a ladylike procedure or not. Little Kirk avoided the offending cast as carefully as I avoided the offending idea that such an unfortunate thing could have happened. Then those letters from Korea became the bright spot in my day, more even than before, and John's quiet strength and wise counsel helped me over many a blue day.

AS KIRK AND JOHN GREW, so did their daddy's longing to be with them. "I am eager to hear Kirk sing 'By Baby By O' [which he does accurately and with great gusto]. Is Johnny really learning to read? I enjoy his letters." (Johnny's letters to his daddy are meticulously printed, with tongue curled over teeth and a furrow in the brow . . . and they invariably read either "Kirk is a good boy" or "Kirk is a bad boy" depending on what incident immediately precedes the writing.)

Always there is the realization, common to so few men, that we back here are truly interested in the everyday activities over there, for they enable us to carry mental pictures of those we love. So, true to form, John's letters contain information which was fascinating to all of us. Korea is a strange land, Unnamed mountain south of Changni, North Korea, typical of the mountainous terrain on which much of the fighting has taken place.

yet by now we almost feel as though we have visited there. "The women carry enormous burdens on their heads," he writes. "It would seem impossible that they could stand the weight, but of course they are used to it. . . . These Korean people carry what is left of their worldly possessions on their backs as they plod away from war—sometimes one direction, sometimes another."

The American touch crops up often. "We are having delicious Kellogg's Corn Flakes for breakfast tomorrow." Anyone who knows John knows that corn flakes is his idea of something good to eat—especially in a muddy field with strange terrain all around, they taste like home.

HOW DILIGENTLY we write to him only to hear that days and days go by on a fighting front without mail call. In all fairness to the Army, this is nobody's fault—sometimes people are just too busy or can't spare a truck to go back to get mail. The Army realizes what an important morale factor mail is, and when it is humanly possible the boys get those looked-for letters. Still a note of homesickness creeps in when days go by without word from home. Then there is the joyous and almost unbelieving acknowledgment of the letters when they do arrive. It always reads,

An elderly Korean "gentleman" wearing a flytrap hat constructed of horse hair. This signifies that his youngest son is old enough to support him.

"I got six wonderful letters today" or "Mail call produced seven letters, five from you and one each from Mom and Dad." He never seems to quite believe his own good fortune when mail call brings a landslide.

Thoughts turn to home many times a day. "There is a Bantam Book out on railroading. Be sure to get it for Johnny . . . Kirk couldn't be wearing size three clothes. He's only sixteen months old."

Every now and then we get a strange package. One held silkworm cocoons, so that the boys might actually see what they look like. We pored over the Britannica to find out the history of silk and sent John a copy of the information so he would know all about it too. One package held tiny rubber moccasins such as Korean children wear. On Kirk's fat feet they went—and came off as quickly. They were lumpy and too narrow and smelled funny. He hid them behind the bookcase—my sentiments exactly.

ABOUT THE LAST OF APRIL came a rather unexpected and entirely welcome break in the form of a rest leave in Tokyo. "Of course I'm eagerly looking forward to eating some ice cream and drinking some re-combined milk," he wrote.

Since letters travel only as fast as planes and ships can carry them, before the letter telling of his proposed trip was received, the telephone rang.

"Tokyo calling," said a strange voice. My knees got weak. All sorts of wild things flashed through my mind before I could regain some sense of balance and assure myself that John could not possibly be coming home. Then there was some trouble on the circuit, and the operator said she would call back.

For seven unnerving hours I sat in mother's living room, afraid to move, afraid to use the phone, wondering why John was in Tokyo. Practical Johnny couldn't see the necessity for such a disgusting delay and went out to play. Little Kirk tried manfully to keep awake, but finally he drooped in a soft heap where he sat and was carted off to bed. Still I waited. I remembered talking with other wives who had received telephone calls which had been unsatisfactory because of bad connections and other disadvantages naturally present with such a call. I wished he hadn't tried to call. I wished he would hurry up and get through again.

Then the telephone rang again. I was there in an instant, and if I detected mirth in the operator's voice, I don't blame her. Surely it must be fun to connect such great distances, knowing the happiness which will flow through that connection.

"Hello, Louise," came John's vibrant voice. It was clear as a bell and as close as next door. In that instant the miles vanished with the months of waiting and the uncertainty and all the rest. That warm contact was worth all the waiting. Forgetting nothing, he took time to explain to Johnny how his call was coming from the other side of the world, was relayed from telephone to ship's radio, and then again through telephone connections. Johnny talked about it for days.

Later he had his ice cream in Tokyo, slept on real sheets, and wandered like a small boy through the beautiful Tokyo PX. A visit to the Imperial Theatre brought an enclosed program and an astonished comment on the beautiful materials used in the lavish costumes and the handsome curtains which hang over the huge stage there. To see people walking normally down the street without fear or haste was an appreciated experience. We felt again, through his letters, his concern for people, his interest in the world about him.

"I appreciate the pictures of the boys more than I can tell you." The pictures showed Kirk and John growing up and gave him some idea of what time does to two small boys.

DDT dusting in a Korean village. The natives are delighted with this treatment.

IN MAY, when spring seems to come even to a war-torn country like Korea, he wrote: "We took a hike into the mountains to the third battalion aid station. The trees were covered with blossoms and there were lots of frogs and birds. The trail up the mountain followed a fast stream, and it will be extremely difficult to carry litter patients over this rocky, steep trail. There is only one location near the aid station where a helicopter can possibly land to evacuate the most seriously wounded."

The universal appeal of the child in need reached out to touch the GI's time and again. Many times they were helpless to serve these children of the world, but at one point, John relates, they discovered a little girl crying and abandoned. She appeared to be about two years old and was hungry and miserable. Tender-hearted GI's—fathers and brothers and sons—took the little waif in and fed her. Then someone found an old Sears catalog and a hat to pass. From this generosity came money for a new outfit. She almost looked American in her little bonnet and coat, and surely she must have had a great and trusting love for these light-skinned men who would protect her from the terror her baby heart had known.

"Did you ever buy eggs by the foot? That's the way they are sold here, wrapped in straw. . . . I ran into Lt. Williams today [Lt. Williams shipped overseas with John]. It was good to see him again."

"It rains all the time here, just like Seattle only muddy and sloppy. The rice paddies are covered with water. These farmers must be discouraged when they come back to find that trucks and heavy equipment have been driven over their fields. It can't be helped though—there are no roads to accommodate heavy vehicles."

"Every time it rains our foxholes are full of little frogs. There is a steady croaking around us now since we are surrounded by water, and the water is full of them. . . . I do hope we can share an overseas tour together. It is an education that every American should have. You can't appreciate how wonderful our country is until you have visited some foreign countries and made a comparison."

"Have you ever heard a real, live cuckoo bird? Every day we hear one. He or she lives on the hill behind our area and entertains us. . . . We have lots of Chinese prisoners. They are very small and thin."

THE ALLIES are proud of and confident in their air power which bombards the hills by night, harassing the enemy into confusion. "We had an air strike of several flights on a near-by hill this afternoon. It was interesting to watch as the planes strafed, dropped fragmentation and jellied gasoline bombs, and fired twenty mm. shells."

I can almost smell that musty overseas odor as I read, "I am mailing home a box containing wool trousers and other wool clothing. All of these items will require cleaning as they've become slightly soiled after nine months of use."

Sometimes Korea is as quiet and peaceful as Main Street, U.S.A. Sometimes . . . "some 105's hit in the area last night, so Doc Holman and I have improved our foxhole by deepening it quite a bit."

Time and again he mentions what a splendid job everybody is doing over there, but of course he is best informed on the performance of the medics. Many things have been developed by medical science which are being employed there to sustain the lives which Americans consider precious even in times of war.

In the grim see-saw of war there is still time to think of humanity, for this is the way of the American GI trained from birth to love and not to hate, to build and not to destroy. Far back in the mountains, nestled like a modern Shangri-La, is a tiny village whose residents hadn't even heard of the Korean war until the GI discovered them. Their primitive way of life attested to their seclusion. Disease had struck at the vitals of this small community and with a nameless terror they had faced it as best they could. Soon the doctor and the medics were spraying the people and their houses with DDT—and instead of being fearful, the people were happy as children at the novelty of this new magic and its results. How far our modern miracles reach out to touch the unlearned.

A LETTER practically every day for a year makes quite a sizable pile. I must pack them away in a footlocker. I'm glad I didn't remember until just yesterday that five years ago John was just coming home from Europe, and we have sent him off overseas twice since then. Looking back to the year behind us, I wondered how we made it over that mountain of time. Then I realized that we haven't actually climbed that insurmountable obstacle at all. We have only taken it day by day . . . and little by little we have walked around it. Now we are almost on the other side of it, and we are looky forward to the tomorrow which will bring John home to us. Then the four of us will gladly face our next "new horizon."

Introducing

GEORGE A. NJEIM, Temple City, California, (page 5) was born in Christchurch, New Zealand, on the last day of December, 1900. He was baptized in Roum, Lebanon, in 1914. His school work was interrupted by the First World War when all foreign schools were closed. In 1920, when they were permitted to reopen, he continued his education in Roum until the fall of 1925 when he entered Graceland College. He studied here three years.

In 1934 he met Vera L. Gamet, a nurse, while he was a patient at the Independence Sanitarium; they were married that year. They have two children; Marie Eugenie 15, and Elizabeth Joyce 6. Brother Njeim's hobbies are fishing and nature lore. He is a staunch advocate of the Restoration message.

His first ordination was in 1930 as an elder. In 1940 he was ordained a seventy, and in 1947 he was ordained a President of Seventy. After his first ordination he was appointed to Toronto District. In 1932 his appointment was changed to Owen Sound; in 1934 to Chatham District; in 1939 to Chatham and London Districts; in 1942 to Toronto District; in 1944 to Ontario. In 1946 he was appointed to the state of California where he has remained since.

MELVIN L. FOWLER, Springfield, Illinois, (page 12) was born in Gordon, Nebraska, in 1925. After attending Fremont high school he went to Graceland College, from which he was graduated in 1943. He continued his education at Purdue University and received his B.S. degree in civil engineering in 1945. He took his graduate work at the University of Chicago in anthropology and received his M.A. degree in 1949. At the present time he is Curator of Anthropology at the Illinois State Museum.

In 1948 he married Dorothy M. Mills. They have two children: Michael Q. 2, and Erika Jae 1.

Brother Fowler is a member of the Illinois State Archaeological Society as well as the Society for American Archaeology. His special interest is 35 mm. photography.

He was ordained a priest in 1946 and an elder in 1950. He is pastor of the Springfield, Illinois, congregation, and Zion's League leader for Central Illinois District.

* EARLY UNIVERSITY

A recent editorial contained some references to the early beginnings of some universities that are still among the leading institutions of higher learning in all the world: the University of Paris, Oxford, and Cambridge. Sister Ella Jones of our proofreading department brought in a history, "The Land of Arthur," by Marie Trevelyan that tells of a university established much earlier than any of these extant ones. The national calamity suffered by the Welsh people and the hurt sustained by their culture from the Viking invasions of the sixth to the ninth centuries were and still are a loss to the world.

Quoting a few extracts from "The Land of Arthur," we learn of an early Welsh university:

"In connection with the name of Ilid is that of Eurgain, who is described as the 'first female saint of the Island of Britain.' This distinguished Welsh princess is described in the ancient records as having founded a church and a college that afterwards became very celebrated as the first university in Britain. . . . Caer Urgan. . . . It may be here explained that the terms "Cor," "Chorea," and "Bangor" mean a circle, a college, . . . The primitive Cor or Bangor developed into a university, . . . The site of this ancient city and university is now known as Llantwit Major, in the Vale of Glamorgan. . . . From this ancient institution, which was the only seat of learning and instruction in Britain, the Christian religion extended all over the country. . . . The Cor or Bangor of Eurgain continued in a flourishing condition until a raid was made upon it by Irish pirates, who carried away therefrom a beautiful youth and scholar, afterwards known as St. Patrick."

It is believed that Princess Eurgain was a daughter of the great Welsh patriot and general, Caractacus, who fought the Roman invasion of Britain so long, but was captured and taken with her to Rome where she may have been known to St. Paul, who was held as prisoner there before his execution. There she may have been the British Princess who was known as Claudia Rufina, mentioned as Claudia in Paul's Second Epistle to Timothy. War and destruction destroyed many great landmarks and records, but some remain, and traditions supplementing them make it seem certain that the ancient institution carried on a great work.

* WEATHER

When it rains day after day and night after night; when the rivers are flooding the lowlands and destroying the crops of the farmers; when levees are breaking, highways are closed, and grain lies rotting in sodden fields; when rising waters drive the poor from their homes in the lower sections of the cities; when the gardener sees his vegetables pale and sickly for lack of sun, and the lady's flowers are beaten down into the mud, one cannot help wondering: Just who is in charge of the weather, anyway?

News and Notes

PRESIDENT SPEAKS

President Israel A. Smith delivered the baccalaureate address for the summer graduating class at Central Missouri State College July 29. Nineteen students from Independence will graduate from the college at Warrensburg August 3.

APOSTLE REPORTS ON BAPTISMS Apostle D. O. Chesworth reports that as of July, baptisms for the East Central States Mission have already attained 52 per cent of 1950 baptisms. He states, "These three hundred baptisms have been gained through the persistent effort of the men of the standing ministry, plus the untiring efforts of our church appointees. Special mention goes to the four seventies in the field who are doing an excellent job in missionary work. An outstanding example is the Spring River District with a membership of 2,800. The ten-year average is approximately seventy. In 1950, 145 new members were gained, a greater percentage of these coming within the last six months. As of July 15, 1951, 105 have been baptized."

PUBLICITY FOR SAINTS

Several of the Saints in Honolulu have received favorable publicity in the newspapers there. Prescott A. Foo who was a counselor to the district presidency received the Gallatin award for outstanding service with the alcohol tax unit of the internal revenue department of Honolulu. Brother Foo retired from business June 30. He and Sister Foo are moving to the mainland and will make their home in Ava, Missouri, after August 1. His daughters, Mrs. Edgar Jones and Mrs. Robert Short live in the states.

Other men who have received attention in the news are Frank B. Almond, Tautu Moo, Matthew Esposito, Tsunao Miyamoto, John C. Ledo, and Fred Paoa.

CHURCH GIRL TO CAPITAL

Ruth Ann Ziegenhorn, daughter of Elder and Mrs. H. F. Ziegenhorn of Independence, left for Girls Nation in Washington, D.C. July 27. Ruth Ann was the Governor of Missouri Girls State, and she was selected as a delegate to the Girls Nation at the meeting.

BISHOP SCHREUR DIES

Word has been received by the First Presidency of the death of Bishop Dirk Schreur of Gaylord, Michigan, on July 18. Bishop Schreur was born in 1871. His daughter, Delia, is the wife of Apostle D. Blair Jensen. His nephew, Allen Schreur was district president for many years. He is survived by his wife, the former Grace M. Hackert.

CAMPS HELD FOR GIRLS

Edna Easter has returned from several girls' camps held at Gardner Lake where she was director. Two one-week sessions of Oriole camp had an attendance of 149, with sixteen monitors and twenty on the program staff. Three overnight camps for Skylarks had an attendance of 144 girls, twenty-one leaders and eighteen other program staff: Carl Mesle was associate director and business manager of the camps.

Also serving on the camp staff were Elder and Mrs. Calvin French. Brother French conducted classes in religion and astronomy and Sister French was in charge of music and campfires.

We'd like you to know

Roberta Palace McPherson

IF you were baptized during the past fifteen years, your baptismal record was typed and filed by Sister McPherson. In this period since she has been working in the Department of Statistics she has processed forty-five thousand records of those who have united with the church. During this same fifteen-year period she has recorded thirty thousand blessings of children. So there is not much likelihood anyone will get into the church by blessing nor by baptism without Palace knowing about it.

She is a native of McKenzie, Alabama, and was baptized when ten years old by Elder T. C. Kelley. Her high school courses were completed through credits from Central Missouri College high school, Warrensburg, Missouri. Then she continued on to complete her first year of college studies before the family moved to Independence. She did secretarial work for seven years following this, and first came to work at the Auditorium in 1932 on a part-time basis.

She taught juniors in the church school and sang in the choir at Second Church for several years. She says her hobbies are "amateur gardening—especially flowers—and spoiling 'Sandy.'" This is her nephew, Jamie, who lives in the lower part of the home she owns jointly with her brother. Sister McPherson uses her pleasing voice as relief operator three times daily on the switchboard serving the Auditorium.

Don't Mix Your Marriage

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

—II Corinthians 6:14

Editorial

ST. PAUL'S WORDS about marriage seem harsh. Who likes to think of marriage as a "yoke" before the wedding? Yet when a young married couple return to reality from the aureate cloudlands and rosy dreams of the honeymoon, they sometimes find the yoke is there—and a heavy one.

Who thinks of the beloved companion as an "unbeliever"? Yet, when Sunday comes and the question of church attendance is raised, it is painful to discover that the companion is a stern and uncompromising opponent in religion, and that one must go to church alone.

What seemed utterly unimportant in the moonlight of betrothal becomes in the daytime of living an insuperable obstacle in the pathway of domestic peace. A young woman may find that the "perfect lover" cares more for himself and his religion than he does for her. A young man may find that his wife trusts and confides in the priest more than she does in her own husband.

Marriage can bring happiness or misery, according to the wisdom or folly with which the mate has been selected. It is easy to forget how important religion is. But the roots of faith go deeper than we think—deeper than the processes of thought—down into the realms of feeling that are the fundamental areas of conscious existence.

The importance of "mixed" or interfaith marriages is indicated by the considerable number of articles on the subject appearing in recent issues of popular nonreligious publications. And studies in the causes of divorce have turned the attention of psychologists and psychiatrists to religion as one of the important factors in home life.

The Woman's Home Companion for July, 1951, carries an excellent article, "The Truth About Mixed Marriages," by Dr. David R. Mace, Professor of Human Relations at Drew University. Every young man and woman who is even potentially interested in marriage would find benefit in reading this article.

The situation is most difficult for a mixed marriage involving a Roman Catholic and a non-Catholic. The Code of the Canon Law says, "Everywhere and with the greatest strictness the Church forbids marriages between baptized persons, one of whom is a Catholic and the other a member of a schismatical or heretical sect."

In cases where a Catholic is determined to marry a non-Catholic, the church has a strict arrangement. Both parties have to sign agreements. The non-Catholic makes a binding promise that the Catholic party shall be entirely free to practice his or her religion, that all the children shall be "baptized and educated in the Catholic faith," that the Catholic prohibition of birth control shall be respected, and that there shall be no other marriage ceremony but that performed by the priest.

Concerning the conditions imposed upon the participants in a mixed marriage by the Roman Catholic Church, the Southern Baptist Convention (as reported in Time magazine for July 2) recently took cognizance of the matter with this statement:

We reaffirm both the sacredness of an individual's religious faith, in which the husband and wife must be equally free and that a fundamental tenet of our faith is violated if either the husband or the wife is forced to sign away the religion of unborn children.

* * * *

Marriages between persons of different faith, according to those who know, are two-and-a-half times more likely to fail and result in divorce than between persons of the same faith.

But divorce is not the only indication of a marriage that fails. There are many other couples who remain together, enduring misunderstanding and unhappiness to preserve the outward form of the home.

And in many cases of mixed marriages, where neither party is willing to accept the other's religion, they achieve harmony only when both parties discontinue church activity. The result of this is generally that the children grow up without any religious training or faith.

Dr. Mace concludes:

Young men and women, whose chief concern is to create peaceful homes and to raise happy families, should know that they stand a much better chance of doing so if they choose life partners whose spiritual background is the same as their own.

We tend to marry persons of education comparable with our own. We like partners with the same social training and similar interests and desires. If these are ignored, the chance of trouble increases. We should recognize the tremendous importance of religious harmony in the home as a factor contributing to happiness and stability.

For our own church people, there are some small groups where a young person has little choice. Perhaps the wisest course is to move—to "gather"—to a larger group, where opportunity to know more church people may be found. Those who mix their marriage are inviting trouble and unhappiness. Harmony in religion is important for harmony in the home.

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Excerpts from a letter written by Apostle Reed M. Holmes on July 2:

Early this week I was called to deliver the funeral sermon for George W. Hopkins, pastor of our Enid, Oklahoma, Branch. Brother Hopkins died Sunday evening of a heart attack at the age of forty-six.

As you will recall, George Hopkins was a captain of the Enid police force. He had earned for himself a most enviable reputation as a citizen. He was intensely interested in children and bent every effort toward safeguarding their lives during the years he spent on the force. I have never before seen a man so well beloved by the children of his community. I have seldom witnessed the respect and admiration shown for him at the funeral. I presume there were close to one thousand people in attendance, with many reserved sections for civic groups in which he was active.

While I had known of Brother Hopkins' intense desire to protect the children from harm both in traffic and against juvenile delinquency, I did not know how well he had succeeded in securing a response from his townsmen. He had given hundreds of addresses before schools, civic and church groups, always making it a point to be identified as a minister of our church as well as a policeman. He felt that the Lord's Prayer had definite reference to the community in which he lived. He prayed fervently, "Thy kingdom come," and then worked diligently to make as much of that kingdom available in Enid and the surrounding territory as possible.

Apostle D. T. Williams has passed on to us a report he received from Lyle W. Woodstock, Director of the Nauvoo Youth Camp which closed July 1.

We have just concluded our 1951 Nauvoo Youth Camp and wish to report that it was fine. Camp was smaller than usual this year with a registration of thirty-eight (as against seventy-nine for last year) but this proved what we already knew—that we could make much better progress with fewer people. I believe that a camp should have no more than fifty unless there are unusual facilities to take care of a greater number. We enjoyed the blessings that attend a small congregation of people who know each other and are working together 100 per cent toward common objectives.

Our staff was just right for the number of campers—ten in all, including the cooks. And I have never spent a week working with a finer group. We were indeed blessed with complete cooperation, devotion, and industry from the staff. Dr. Platz did what we knew he would and could do, helping the campers to gain a deeper appreciation of God through nature and science—blending with it a philosophy which drew all together in a very fine class. Charles Kornman did an outstanding job in his class. I have never experienced more spiritual classwork among young people—each camper grew a great deal through this class. The spiritual growth of the whole camp was a beautiful thing and a great blessing. Charles was responsible in large measure in bringing this about. Our third class, "Pioneering," was taught by Bernard Galbraith of Nauvoo. Bernie was a big help at camp and his class was good. We enjoyed having him on the staff.

Gerald Gabriel was business manager and did a fine job. Mable McKeivit was our nurse and helped with the camp log. Doris [Mrs. Woodstock] had the campfires and singing, and I had over-all direction and riverside chats. I felt that the week was very worth while. We did much to give each one present a "Faith For Our Times"—the theme and objective of the camp.

The following letter has been sent to us about the recent death and funeral of Elder George Arthur Cook of Hot Springs, Arkansas.

We wish to pay our respects also to this very fine man who not only fought his way up to be a front-rank business man of his state, but gave unstintingly of his time to the work of the church and to the welfare of our members in and near Hot Springs.

The church has lost the services of an honorable and successful minister in the tragic passing of Elder Arthur Cook. His life made his church honored in the esteem of his neighbors and fellow citizens. He and his good companion, Sister Vera Cook, reared a family whose loyalty to each other and their parents has added glory to the name of the church in Hot Springs.

Many members of our traveling ministry have made the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Cook their domicile and headquarters while in that part of their field of labor. None have come away from their experience with this family who did not speak of the kindness and splendid hospitality demonstrated toward them. All elaborated on the unity between parents and children. As Apostle D. T. Williams stated in conversation, "I never came away feeling other than that I had been ministered to more than I had ministered." This high accomplishment was achieved by the fine co-operation in the family, where all the affairs associated with their well-being seemed to flow with a sense of ease beyond anticipation in the average household.

It was as a result of this splendid working together that financial and spiritual success came to this most deserving group. The children and parents worked in such harmony that the business venture which had a very humble beginning blossomed into a success story deserving space in any journal of business accomplishment.

He entered into business for himself in 1930 and not only won honor for himself but made a distinct contribution to the building up of the city of Hot Springs. His business was built on the basis of righteous dealing, which has become a monument to his memory.

Arthur Cook's good deeds were not all in the open, for he believed in the scriptural injunction, "Let not your right hand know what your left hand doeth." And many of his blessings to his fellow men were done behind the scene where none but the receiver and God knew what was happening. They have come to light only when revealed by those who were the beneficiaries.

Brother D. T. Williams was invited by the family to conduct the funeral service which took place July 3 at one of the largest mortuaries in the city of Hot Springs. The chapel, which seats approximately 350, was filled to capacity, all standing room available was taken, and people who could not find room inside stood on the street. Such is the testimony of the esteem and honor in which this man was held by his neighbors and fellow citizens. There were many magnificent floral offerings, and the mayor of the city acted as one of the pallbearers.

The friends of Brother James E. Page will be interested to know that he has undergone an operation recently at the Burlington (Iowa) Hospital and is now recovering.

The Recent Floods

REALIZING THAT MANY of our members throughout the church would be intensely interested in the effect that the devastating flood has had upon other members, we are submitting herewith reports that we have asked Bishops Becker and Miller of the Central Missouri and Kansas City Stakes respectively to prepare covering the situation.

At the time of this writing complete estimates have not been made of the damages and losses sustained by our church families, but it is without question one of the greatest catastrophies that has ever been experienced by the people in these central areas, and church members have sustained losses along with thousands of others in the areas affected.

In addition to the report that we have received from these stake bishops, we have just a brief statement from Donald Kyser, general church appointee, which we are submitting herewith. This covers the people in the area around Miami, Oklahoma.

There are other regions affected by the flood from which we have not heard, and we would appreciate receiving full reports from any district officers concerning the damage in their districts.

We wish to assure those who have sustained such losses that the General Church will render assistance wherever needed and will co-ordinate its work with that of other agencies engaged in bringing relief to those who have been stricken by this disaster.

For the Atherton area, where it appears that we have sustained our greatest losses, a commission is being set up to appraise each individual situation. This committee consists of Willard Becker, chairman, Earl T. Higdon, Bishop of Lamoni Stake, and Otho Clark, counselor to Bishop Becker. Don Elefson, assistant to Bishop N. Ray Carmichael, agricultural supervisor for the church, is working with this committee.

We wish to thank the members of this committee and also the presidents of the two stakes, Harry Simons and J. D. Anderson, who have worked closely with the bishops in ministering to our people in this crisis. Both Brother Becker and Brother Miller have given long hours of conscientious and efficient ministry as they have met with the people affected.

While this report was being written, a mother and her four children came into the office of the Presiding Bishopric and made their contribution of $20.00 to help in flood relief. This gift meant depriving them of an opportunity to attend a reunion. This, we are sure, is typical of the sympathy and co-operation that will be forthcoming from our membership as a whole.

Contributions for such relief may be sent to the Presiding Bishopric for this specific purpose and will be used to meet the needs of members in rehabilitation and immediate relief.

As indicated in the reports from the two bishops, our people are meeting this crisis with courage and faith in the future.

Respectfully submitted,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Report on Atherton Flood

by Bishop W. C. Becker

ONE OF THE MOST DEVASTATING and costly floods in the history of the Atherton development has begun to subside. No amount of preparation could have averted this tragedy. Fortunately there was no loss of life, but the loss in crops and property damage is tremendous. This loss is both to the church and to the inhabitants of the area. Eight families living on church-owned land found it necessary to evacuate their homes when flood waters settled into the homes to depths up to 6½ feet. A total of 30 families living in the area were affected. As a result there was a great loss in household furnishings, clothing, and equipment. The rehabilitation of the homes will be expensive for the church. As the flood water subsided, a deposit of mud and silt to depths of 6 to 10 inches was left in the buildings, making it necessary to clean and repair each home before it can again be occupied. Barns, machine sheds, poultry houses and other buildings were quite extensively damaged. All houses, with the exception of one, look as though they should be reconditioned. The Pearson home is damaged beyond repair.

Perhaps the greatest loss will be the crops. Several thousand acres of crop land was covered. Approximately 850 acres of wheat which was ready to harvest was destroyed. Harvesting, which normally would have been completed, was delayed because of the continuous rains. It has been estimated that the wheat harvest would have averaged 30 bushels per acre. 1448 acres of corn and soybeans had been planted, and most of it was ready to "lay by." This land had been brought to a high state of productivity and as such the loss to the people farming the land and to the church was a sizable sum. Fertilizer alone, used for crops destroyed, amounted to $8,300.00.

THE LOSS IN FARM MACHINERY is undetermined at the present time. Some machinery was moved to higher grounds but a number of plows, discs, harrows, corn planters and pickers, elevators, wagons, stock equipment, et cetera, was caught in the flood waters. Several tractors were also marooned. Much of this equipment is partially buried in silt and mud. Some has been carried by the current into piles of debris which have lodged along fence rows.

Loss to livestock was light in comparison with other things. This was confined primarily to poultry. Most cattle and other livestock had been moved from the area. The earth mound built on the place occupied by Glen Lewis provided safety for 31 sows and gilts and their pigs. Although water was 18 inches over the top of the mound, the hogs were cared for in the partially empty corn crib on top of the mound.

THE PEAK OF THE FLOOD was reached Sunday, July 15. Seep waters began coming into a limited part of the area several weeks prior to this date. The levee system, which was one of the best, was one of the last to break in the flood area. The levee had stood several lower crests of the river and at times seemed as though it would survive; but when the highest crest in over a hundred years came surging down and waters began pouring over the top, the levee began to crumble and break in a number of places along its course. The waters rose rapidly from July 12 on. During this period every effort was made to raise household furnishings, etc., to higher levels by placing cement blocks under the pieces and moving some to upstairs rooms. Most of the items blocked up were still not high enough to be protected from the crest of the flood.

At the present time all of the families affected are living with friends or relatives. As the work of rehabilitation continues, some additional moves will have to be made as it looks now as though it will be several weeks before families will be able to move back to their former homes.

Generally speaking, the spirit of the people is good. Naturally it is disheartening to see the accumulation of a lifetime damaged or destroyed and the labors and expenses of an entire crop year completely gone. The crops of about 12 families have been destroyed, as the homes of some who farmed the land was high enough to be protected from the waters. The work of rehabilitation has been progressing satisfactorily under the leadership of Brothers Otho Clark and Don Efe-son. The people of the Atherton community and surrounding areas in the stake have responded very well in helping to do any necessary job in this period of emergency.

Report From Kansas City Stake

In response to the telephone conversation with Bishop DeLapp, I am sending the following information about the recent flood emergency in the Kansas and Missouri area.

Kansas City Area

A minimum of 31 homes and 87 people—most of them from the Shawnee Road and Grandview, Kansas, congregations, two families from Quindaro, and one from Malvern Hill were affected. These homes were flooded and badly damaged, some were completely demolished or washed away.

Nineteen families representing 52 persons in the North Kansas City and Northeast Bottoms areas were evacuated until the emergency was over. We know of no other damage or loss to any of these families. These folks were from the Bennington and Van Brunt congregations.

Osawatomie Area

We know only of the Powell home which was completely under water. We do not know of Mrs. Powell's whereabouts today, but we understand she is with relatives in Kansas City.

Bonner Springs

There is only one home (a family with three children) badly flooded.

Topeka

We know of seven homes that were badly flooded. Some of these are a complete loss. Two homes had their basements flooded, affecting 27 of our people. Some business men in this area will have some loss. Christenson who has an egg business, and Collier Hendricks of the Kansas Van and Storage Company are the only ones we know of thus far.

Lawrence

The basements of two homes of members were flooded here. We know of no other damage.

Emporia

According to information received by phone from the Rhodes family no damages occurred here.

Aid

Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, July 12 to 14, with Stake President J. D. Anderson and other stake officials, we tried to locate our people and check to see that they were evacuated from the danger zones. The following Sunday we sent out a call to our congregations for clothing, furniture, et cetera, and we had a most gratifying response. We received clothing which was very serviceable and appreciated. Some of it came from active wardrobes of many homes. Food stuffs were contributed generously, as well as furniture, while others responded with financial donations. This has made it possible for us to supply the immediate needs of families, and we still have on hand a quantity of these articles for the rehabilitation program ahead.

We have been able to locate and account for practically all members. People are being housed in our Grandview (Kansas), Quindaro, and Topeka churches, and perhaps will be there until they can get re-established in more permanent homes.

Rehabilitation

The people are being permitted to re-enter their homes and start cleaning up. Some men who have experienced the results of bombing and tornadoes have said that this is a worse mess. Our Argentine church had nine inches of silt all over the floor, and we have reports in the Armourdale area of homes which have three or four feet of silt.

Much of the furniture has fallen apart and cannot be renovated. The total damage at this time is beyond our estimation.

We have been able to relocate some families from the emergency homes they first occupied.

We are planning on the setup of a Social Service Center in the Kansas City area to minister to these people in the coming months. Some homes will have to be supplied with furniture, clothing, and what else we do not know. We feel at present we will be able to materially assist in this program in many ways.

It is gratifying to know that the Red Cross has functioned so effectively in issuing orders of food and caring for so many families.

General Remarks

This has certainly been a major disaster, and its aspects change very rapidly. It is necessary for our organization to be alert and fluid to meet these changes.

We certainly do appreciate the sincere co-operation and sacrifices of our church members and the harmony that has existed among the personnel who have assisted in this program. Many hours of labor and contributions, which are too numerous to mention, have been donated.

In gospel bonds,

HOWARD F. MILLER

For the Stake Bishopric

Report From Miami

This is to let you know that our home was caught in the flood area during the recent disaster here at Miami.

We were away at the time, attending the Kennett Reunion. However, our folks and neighbors were able to remove most of the contents before the water (which reached a level of three feet within our house) got to us.

Sixteen of our church families were affected by the flood—most of them own their homes.

They Come From Many Lands

By Roy A. Cheville

QUITE RECENTLY a friend suggested it might be better for our church to maintain two or three colleges in different sections of the country than one in the midwest. He argued that these colleges would be accessible to more young Latter Day Saints. He added that such an arrangement would save in money and time. I assented to both arguments, yet rapidly added that the proposal would take away one of the major reasons for Graceland's existence—the commingling of youth from all parts of the church. Let this be lost and one of the major services of the college goes.

Beyond a Local College

During those first years after the opening of the college in 1895 students came from the Lamoni region. For a few years college administrators deducted travel expenses from tuition as they attempted to induce those from a distance to come to Graceland. Those days are gone. No longer is it strange when students come from California or Massachusetts. In fact these are expected as much as those from southern Iowa and northern Missouri. The college flag suggests the world-wide circle of Graceland fellowship and the meeting of pathways at the campus.

Projects in World Fellowship

In the fall of 1946 Graceland entered a new field of social service. That fall our church contacts with the Saints in Holland were resumed. That Christmas thirty boxes were sent from the campus to Dutch families. So opened a new world for Graceland. The ocean distance seemed to shrink. In 1949 three hundred neckties were sent to Germany. An album of pictures went to Oslo. A recording of songs has gone to Tahiti, to Norway, to England. A box of clothing was shipped to the Isle of Pines. The sights of hundreds of Latter Day Saint young people have been lifted to see the world-wide circle of the church.

Last April the college invited local Leagues to send delegations to an institute on methods in world fellowship. These visitors went with the church to Australasia, Britain, Scandinavia, Tahiti, Holland, or Germany. They sent a hymnbook to Wales, letters to Australia, a subscription to the Saints' Herald to Norway, a small church flag to Holland, a log book of the institute to a branch in Germany, a recording of hymns in English and Tahitian to the South Seas.

The World Fellowship Fund

After World War II the idea kept growing that we needed a few youth of missions abroad to come to Graceland. Here was a two-way service. They and their home area would be benefited by the expansion of their outlook on the church. The students of the college would have their sights lifted through association with these young people from distant places. It was going to take more than wishing to make the wish come true. Those coming would have to be of good quality and they would need funds.

The problem was not easily solved. First of all, some countries would permit those leaving to take but a very limited amount of money. Delegates to General Conference from Britain had met this same difficulty. Furthermore the rate of exchange is generally not favorable to those coming to America. A student traveler from the United States pays four hundred francs for a sleeping room in old Paris, but this becomes thirty-five cents in American coin. Reverse this and it goes hard with those coming to our land.

Education for Freedom

By Deane W. Malott

Former Chancellor,
University of Kansas

We are presenting here the main part of the "Farewell to the Class of 1951" delivered at the commencement exercises of the University of Kansas by Deane W. Malott, retiring chancellor of the University. W. Wallace Smith, of the First Presidency of the Church, who was present to witness the graduation of his son, Wallace, was impressed by the message and obtained permission to quote it. We are glad to present to our readers this statement of "the American way" in education for freedom.—THE EDITORS.

IN THE COURSE of this education you have received here, something has happened to you. In the subtle alchemy of your developing mind and character, you have acquired, gradually and almost imperceptibly, powers of deduction, of coordination, of synthesis, of decision between truth and mere glibness, of the detection of sham from the eternal verities that underlie our civilization.

This is no vague and vocational equipment casually endowing you for future self-sufficiency, or assuring you that you may one day exert some sort of ephemeral leadership in your community.

The experiences you have gained here have merged into the background of your heredity and environment to form the character and the quality of your ability. That ability is needed now, immediately and at once, challenged by the seriousness of the times, the turbulence of sudden and dramatic events, the titanic struggles for power which are sweeping over the world and in which the United States lies at the inescapable vortex because of its wealth, its resources, its freedom. This American leadership cannot be maintained without the aggressive and immediate support of the intelligent and thinking young people of the nation, exerting the tremendous power of their influence against the heresies, the half-truths, the political machinations, and the self-seeking greed of special interests.

WE STAND IN HUMAN HISTORY as the greatest revolutionaries of all times—we Americans. Ruthless leaders of totalitarianism behind the iron curtain drive their enslaved millions to world revolution. Their methods and their program are no revolution at all, but demagoguery of the most flagrant sort, flying under the false banners of the rights of the common man, only to shackle his mind and body to the service of an all-powerful state.

We dare do otherwise in America, in an experimentation in free government which has been sought repeatedly through the ages, but experience with which has been of precariously short duration, throughout all of recorded time.

You have been in a free university, where professors have dared always to speak their minds and to disseminate truth as they see it. You have been free to defend any point of view or policy you may have chosen. It is a great tradition of Kansas that we are afraid neither of truth nor of heresy. Few governments in history have ever for long dared so much.

You go now to defend that freedom and to support always with your loyalty the University which nurtured it. You go into the life stream of the American commonwealth, into a free society. But because that society is free, it is also a confusing succession of "great debates," as pressing issues are settled in the public forum by the multiple-minded viewpoint of the American people, expressed through ten thousand media of press, radio, television, and curbstone debate.

WILL THIS METHOD WORK? Can we of the western world be the true standard-bearers of that great and emancipating doctrine? We cannot if we allow ourselves to be thrust into the indefensible position of seeking to protect the status quo. Our tradition is not static but constantly dynamic. Our tradition strikes off chains. Totalitarianism would put them back again.

In the great discord of sound and print, which in the last analysis is merely America making up its collective mind, you must bring to bear the intelligence, the tolerance, the courage of men and women molded for leadership in a free university, where all kinds of opinions are freely exchanged, and where in all the eighty-five years of this institution's history, no one has ever been afraid to say what he thinks.

This challenge for immediate leadership can be met only at a price—a drain on your time, a test of your courage, a demand on your effort. Those whose names are engraved in the hall of the campanile which you face tonight have paid a much greater price than any of the rest of us have ever been required to pay.

The most striking contradiction of our civilization is the fundamental reverence for truth which we possess and the thoroughgoing disregard for it which we practice.—Vilhjalmur Stefansson

We cannot see the wind that blows, and yet we can see the leaves that are moved by the wind. We cannot always see the spirit that is working in the lives of people, but we can see the results.—Unknown

Joshua's Long Day

THE SCIENTIFIC WORLD was set agog early last year by Dr. Immanuel Velikovsky, Russian-born writer, when Macmillan published his book, Worlds in Collision, which, according to announcements at the time of publication, was to be the first of a number, "four or more," in which the writer would "maintain that . . . many times has the earth undergone vast and disastrous cataclysms in which its rotation was interrupted."

Harper's Magazine for January, 1950, featured an article by Eric Larrabee, staff writer, under the caption, "The Day the Sun Stood Still," and the Kansas City Star for January 6, 1950, published an outline of Velikovsky's theory prepared by Mr. Larrabee.

Of course Velikovsky was not the first to exploit the theory that the sun actually "stood still," as related in the tenth chapter of Joshua. Professor C. A. L. Totten, an English advocate of Anglo-Saxon Israel, in his book, Joshua's Long Day and the Dial of Abaz, Destiny Publishers, has presented his theory as to what actually happened on the field of battle before Gibeon.

During recent years there have been a number of articles in Destiny Magazine in which the account by Joshua has been stoutly maintained as historically true.

The story has unquestioned appeal to our imaginations, and although we may not be able to understand fully the Velikovsky or Totten explanations of how the event actually took place, we cannot be blamed for indulging a natural curiosity if nothing more in fact than an "academic" interest in their theories.

However, the Velikovsky book and its advance notices and book reviews caused more than a tempest in a teapot. Men of science became so vocal in their denunciations of Velikovsky's "heresy," that the Macmillan Company, with its great reputation as publisher of standard and accepted school and college textbooks, found it convenient to save itself from threatened boycott, by scientists for its unorthodoxy, by handing the Velikovsky book to another publisher. The copy I have was issued by Macmillan.

Out of it all has come a notable clash between the orthodox scientists and the "catastrophists," the latter represented by "sophomoric" Velikovsky and the more or less (to the scientists) unlearned. The scientists say it could not have happened; the others say it did happen.

We are always a little amused when the savants get a shock of this kind. It shows all men are a little vulnerable.

After more than a year, Harper's devotes space in its current number (June) to "Velikovsky and His Critics," and by way of introduction says, "Up to now Dr. Velikovsky has been condemned as extravagantly unscientific, but almost none of his critics have made more than casual efforts to expose what they believe to be grave errors." It also says, "Although the book and its author have been violently censured in reviews and comments, there has been a remarkable lack of explicit criticism of it based on careful reading."

WE DO NOT BELIEVE we should devote space to an explanation of the theory of how the "earth turned over," as advanced by Velikovsky and Totten, not only because of its length, but because, if we did, then in fairness the argument against it ought to be shown. But we are sure the fact of such a controversy going on is of interest.

Now, let's see the story again:

— And the Lord discomfited them before Israel, and slew them with a great slaughter at Gibeon, and chased them along the way that goeth up to Bethhoron, and smote them to Azekah, and unto Makedah.

And it came to pass, as they fled from before Israel, and were in the going down to Bethhoron, that the Lord cast down great stones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died: they were more which died with hailstones than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword.

Then spake Joshua to the Lord in the day when the Lord delivered up the Amorites before the children of Israel, and he said in the sight of Israel, Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon; and thou, Moon, in the valley of Ajalon,

And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. Is not this written in the book of Jasher? So the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day.

And there was no day like that before it, or after it, that the Lord hearkened unto the voice of a man: for the Lord fought for Israel.—Joshua 10: 10-14.

The miracle of the alleged happenings is well stated in the fourteenth verse: "And there was no day like that before it, or after it." In any event, whether the sun "stood still" or the earth "turned over," we can at least believe, as it states, "the Lord fought for Israel."

Sense and Sensibility

How few of us really use our senses! I mean give ourselves fully at any time to the occupation of the senses. We do not expect to understand a treatise on Economics without applying our minds to it, nor can we really smell or hear or see or feel without every faculty alert. I have the feeling—it may be unscientific but it is comforting—that any man might see like an Indian or smell like a hound if he gave his senses the brains which the Indian and the hound apply to them. And I'm pretty sure about the Indian! It is marvelous what a man can do when he puts his entire mind upon one faculty and bears down hard.—David Grayson, Adventures in Contentment.

A Builder of the Reorganization

Selections from the Memoirs of William Wallace Blair of the First Presidency

Part Four: Young Joseph Smith to the Presidency

Anticipations of the 1860 Conference

The church, though expecting Joseph would be called of God to come to them and preside at no distant day, nevertheless had no thought of his coming until the scattered Saints, including the Utah Mormons, would be notified of the promises given through prophecy concerning him. But the very first of February, 1860, I received a letter dated at Blanchardville, Wisconsin, January 29, 1860, from Elder Z. H. Gurley, Sr., from which I now copy as follows:

I rejoice in God that the work goes on so finely, and I know that if we are united and do what the Lord commands us, the year 1860 will not pass before the prophet is among us. This the Lord has revealed to us. . . . Last evening in our prayer meeting we asked the Lord to instruct us and we were told that some years ago he called and ordained seven men apostles, to take the oversight of this work, telling us it was his will that the senior should preside, but the church appointed another, and inasmuch as he was upheld by faith he acknowledged him. . . . Brother Blair, I have got good news to tell you and you may get ready to praise the Lord. . . . The Lord told us the night we got the commandment [to organize] that many would fall, but some would remain and they should be a means of restoring, etc. . . . As to Edmund [Briggs], I do not think that it is the mind of the Spirit that he come to the conference. You recollect that the testimony of the Spirit one year ago last June in your house, through Samuel [Gurley] was that when he comes back he should come with the prophet. I am satisfied that he will do it. I have written to him as our counsel that from this time he visit the churches and let his labor be with them and preach organization to them. That is what this work is for, and I would not recommend the addition of any more old members before we organize. We have got enough to do that work, and we have but little time to instruct. We must interdict all controversy on doctrinal points by outsiders at our conference. When we get there we will go right ahead with it. I have lain awake hours thinking of it. The Lord has told us that many are preparing for deliverance, and he says, "Organize, that deliverance may come."

Well, Brother, preach organization; pray organization; talk organization. Our time is limited to do this work in; and if we do not do it within the time, the Lord has told us that we shall perish; but inasmuch as we hearken to his counsel and do as he bids us, we will do it and just escape, and that is all.

I think it would be well to have as many as possible come to conference from Iowa and elsewhere.

Not long after receiving this letter, perhaps the first days of March, it was revealed through the Spirit in an evening prayer meeting at Brother Royal Stone's near Amboy, Illinois, that young Joseph Smith would come to our conference, April 6, in Amboy, to take the presidency of the church. This was unlooked for and startling information to us all. On the evening of March 19, Brother I. L. Rogers called on me at my home near Amboy, saying that Brother William Marks had just received a letter from young Joseph Smith, Nauvoo, Illinois, in which he said he intended to come to the Amboy conference; also that he desired to counsel with Brother Marks and other of the elders; therefore he requested him (Brother Marks) to visit him at once at Nauvoo and bring with him such elders as he might select. Brother Marks, in view of this, had selected Brother Rogers and myself to accompany him.

The Meeting With Young Joseph Smith—March, 1860

I at once arranged and went with Brother Rogers, joining Brother Marks at Mendota, from whence we went via Burlington to Nauvoo, where we had interviews with Joseph and his mother in respect to the doctrinal views of the Reorganized Church, the work of Joseph the Seer, and the relationship of the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon to that work. To their inquiries we replied that the church held that the doctrines, principles, and rules for church government set forth in them were supreme; that the ministry and membership were bound to honor and observe them; and that these two, with the Bible, constituted the written basis upon which the church must ever be builded, and be the authority by which it should be governed. With this they seemed much pleased, and Joseph then said that he and his mother would meet with us in conference on the sixth day of April.

Young Joseph Smith Received as President—April 6, 1860

Joseph and his mother came on the fifth and attended the prayer meeting at Brother Royal Stone's, where a very spiritual and interesting season was enjoyed.

In the afternoon of the sixth, conference having been organized in the city of Amboy, Joseph set forth his call and claims to the presidency of the church, stating in his address, which was delivered most of the time in tears, that he had come to the conference upon the call and by a higher power than that of man, and that without such divine call he would not come. Upon the close of his address he was, upon motion, received as the president of the church and was ordained under the hands of President William Marks and Apostles Z. H. Gurley, Samuel Powers, and W. W. Blair.

Statement by Emma Smith

On the evening of the eighth Brother Joseph Smith and Sister Emma Bidamon, his mother, with Brother and Sister I. L. Rogers, Brother E. C. Briggs, Sister Helen Pomeroy, and Sister E. Whitcomb, spent the evening at my house on the farm, two miles west of Amboy. During the evening Sister Emma related many incidents in respect to church affairs which were both interesting and instructive. She said Joseph, her former husband, very reluctantly consented to allow his name placed in nomination for the Presidency of the United States, a matter urged upon him by two or more consecutive councils in Nauvoo, prominent in which were Brigham Young and some others of the Twelve. She stated that in those times his attention was so taken up with persistent appeals from ambitious, aspiring men, that good men like Father Marks did not have much chance to be heard by him. Joseph at first pronounced the scheme unwise and uncalled for. In this Sister Emma concurred, but their judgment was overruled, and Joseph yielded on the claims set forth by his blind political advisers, that in permitting his name to go prominently before the nation and the world in a political way, it would give popularity and impetus to the work of the church.

This statement is due the memory of both Joseph and Emma and is essential to correct understanding of the causes which led Joseph into such unfavorable notice politically and which eventuated largely in causing his assassination. . . .

The Laurel Club

FROM THE ORIGINAL SIX MEMBERS who formed the Laurel Club in 1906 for social purposes, the group has grown to a well-managed organization which has earned thousands of dollars used by the church for improvements. The membership today is around eighty women, although only forty-two are active. The newly elected president of the organization is Mrs. Flo Burton.

Each General Conference the Laurel Club serves an average of three thousand meals a day. The work is done for the most part by members of the club with some hired student help. The club serves about four banquets a month each year from September until June.

Over twelve hundred dollars was raised during the first three years of the organization's existence. The money was turned over to the Presiding Bishopric and used to furnish the dining room of the Sanitarium. Since the erection of the Auditorium, the projects of the club have been directed toward the improvement of the building. The club has spent over twenty-five thousand dollars on the Auditorium in twenty-three years. The projects have worked on a pay-as-you-go basis—nothing is bought until there is money. Recently the group contributed $8,500 toward the $23,000 which the church is spending to improve the facilities of the dining room and kitchen at the Auditorium.

The large black stove is used for baking rolls, and soup is prepared in the bowl at the end of the stove.

The kitchen furnishings include linen, silver, glass, and china-ware to serve 1,200 persons. The lighting in the kitchen is fluorescent, and the floor plan is arranged so that the workers need to take only a minimum of steps to do their jobs. Included in the equipment in the kitchen are all sorts of electrical devices; three four-decker pie ovens, enough to bake sixty-five pies at once; two soup kettles, which hold sixty and forty gallons; a steam pressure cooker, which cooks 400 pounds of potatoes at a time; four stoves for top cooking (twenty-five pounds of steak may be fried at once); two other stoves for cooking fillings and salad dressings; and four long steam tables to serve the food cafeteria style.

The women of the Laurel Club give devoted service. They have not only furnished the dining room and kitchen, but donated money that helped buy the brick on the front of the Auditorium. They also gave $500 to the Stone Church Organ Fund.

One of the busiest days the club has known was November 6, 1950, when it served the "Liberty Bell" luncheon honoring President Truman at noon and a 4-H Club banquet in the evening. This was a total of 1,500 meals in one day. This was a more difficult task than serving 1,500 people cafeteria style as is done at a meal at General Conference.—By Barbara Peavy.

Reunions

By Marcella Schenck

REUNION BEGINS FOR ME when I hear the morning worship program broadcast across our campgrounds," a boy said a year or two ago. "I am sound asleep in my tent that first morning when a familiar hymn awakens me. It comes from the loud-speaker not far away. I rise and dress quickly for the morning has begun, a pleasant day has begun, and reunion has begun."

Perhaps the familiar songs of Saints began the spiritual part of reunions for me when I was a child, but it was not the music of a morning broadcast. At that first evening service, when the Saints of southwestern Iowa lifted their voices in song, I took my little brother by the hand and found my way to the "tabernacle" tent. In those days we had not dreamed of broadcasting. There was no electricity, no radios, no whirling fans, no daily newspaper in the camp, and not even any comics to begin the Sabbath! Our own tent was lighted by the lantern we brought from home. The "big" tent had reflector kerosene lamps hung high on the tent poles, and a large parlor style kerosene lamp on the speaker's stand.

Preparation to attend reunion took a week at home. Mother washed and ironed two whole rounds of clothing for each of us, packing each day some little things which could be spared from our daily living to go to camp. Every child in the family helped according to his ability. We all wore last year's faded, outgrown castoffs to save the better apparel for reunion. Dad teased the boys about their "high-water breeches," and kept asking us girls if we could find nothing but collars to wear. We enjoyed his good-natured teasing and were quite willing to do our part if it did happen to be wearing the too short garments. Even then our outgrowns were nothing so abbreviated as the cool, comfortable, camp clothing of today.

AT LAST THE SATURDAY CAME when we packed to move those seven miles to camp. This particular reunion was held in the Hougas Grove near the old Farm Creek Branch. Our lumber wagon, with feedboxes on either side containing grain and corn for the horses and cow, was brought near the house. Then my father, older brother, and mother took down the kitchen range, carried it out, and placed it behind the spring seat in the lumber wagon. A short length or two of stovepipe went along. Mother plugged up the chimney hole inside the kitchen, then supervised the rest of the packing.

Our long extension table lost some of its boards, for the time being, and in its shortened state was put into the wagon, topside down with its legs in the air. Next, the washtub, heavily packed with necessary dishes wrapped in such household linens as our camping would require, was carried out and set inside the upside-down table. The washboard went along, also the wash bench and flatirons. We did not forget the water pail, long-handled dipper, milk pail, strainer, crocks, the rocking chair, and couple of kitchen chairs. We took a box of staple groceries, containing soda, baking powder, salt, navy beans, oatmeal, cornmeal, and some dried fruit. There was a sack of flour, a can of sugar, some home-canned fruit, and a huge sack of new potatoes. From our garden we had gathered cabbage, fresh corn, turnips, beets, tomatoes, etc. Empty bedticks and rough coverlets that would "take" reunion wear were folded and stowed over the trunk which contained some cotton blankets and a round of clothing for the entire family.

When the wagon was packed, the team hitched, and the family cow tied on behind, we scurried back into the house to don the fresh, clean garments spread out on each bed. Children's shoes were packed in the trunk. Only on Sunday would we punish our feet to wear the long, hot, cotton hose and bind our growing feet with shoes. But now presentable in that year's style of calico dresses for girls, blouses and knee pants for boys, we piled into the wagon. Dad, mother, and the two youngest sat on the spring seat. Father drove. Mother held the baby and looked after the little child who sat in the middle. The remaining four of us made ourselves as comfortable as possible on the top of the trunk, wash bench, or whatever was available. Being quite normal children, I doubt if we ever stayed put in any spot long.

Our speed was slowed to the walk of the cow. Nobody minded. The baby was bottle-fed and mother couldn't change its milk in the hot summer months. We bounced over clods and ruts maybe, or took the dust as a matter of course. The world did not yet know of paved highways nor automobiles.

The countryside gave us much enjoyment. Prairie flowers lifted brilliant heads, here and there the tall grass by the roadside or weeds looked sad with their dust. We named the birds we spied darting in and out of the hedgerows. We laughed at the quail, scurrying to hide in the grasses, surprised by our coming. Cottontail rabbits reared up to take a look at our queer mode of travel then hopped away. Ground squirrels popped out of holes by the roadside, stood upright a second, then went underground.

Father named the farmstead owners along the way. Mother recalled the times she had visited their wives at some gooseberry picking or Fourth-of-July celebration. The children of those farmsteads stared silently from their yards and watched us coming, passing, and out of sight. Vehicles passing on such roads were more scarce than airplanes moving over the town in which I live today.

SAINTS GREETED OUR ARRIVAL at camp cheerily. Having established their own camps, each turned in to help the next. Father located the tent we had ordered, while mother picked out a level shady spot. Somebody kept us inquisitive children in bounds while the tent quickly was raised into place. Every man and each boy of any size knew how to swing a tent upright speedily. There was a sound of ax blows pounding tent stakes, shouts of children, women exchanging news of who was coming and the speakers expected. When the cry "all set" sounded, we children scurried to see the inside of the tent.

We had to come right back out to help unpack the wagon. The stove was set up outside, at the rear of the tent, also the dining table, re-lengthened and covered with an oilcloth. The wash bench was put near the tent, holding the water pail, dipper, and washpan. A hand towel soon decorated the tent rope. Then our outdoor kitchen looked like all our neighbors' up and down the tent row.

In front of our tent went the old, roomy black rocker. Our babies were used to being rocked to sleep with a song, so that piece of furniture was a necessity. The trunk went inside the tent along with the groceries. Mother strung up a short length of rope between tent poles for coats and special garments.

Then she fished out the bedticks and handed them to father, who, with the two older boys, drove off to dispose of the cow first, then to obtain that "fresh, clean, available straw" which had been announced at our local branch and advertised in the Saints' Herald.

I have often wondered since I have grown older about some things. For instance—when Brethren Hougas, Badham, Sam Woods, or others donated their woodland groves for reunions, how much else did they donate? Pasture for cows, water from their windmills, forgotten household articles for various tents, wood for the cookstoves, fresh vegetables added to low supplies, milk, eggs, butter—and what else? The Saints of the surrounding districts were their guests and were so treated. They must have loved the gospel dearly to have given so much.

When father and the boys returned, the bedticks were stuffed with straw and were now twelve or fourteen inches thick. Mother spread down some old woven rag carpet lengths, and the ticks were lowered onto those. The sheet blankets and coverlets soon made up the beds—one for our parents, one for us girls, and one for the boys. Pillows for children were unnecessary. During the daytime the boys' bed was piled atop the girls to make more room in the tent.

SOMETIME DURING THE FIRST AFTERNOON the adult Saints held some sort of an organization meeting. We children were allowed at that hour to explore the camp within boundaries, so I can't give you much of an idea what went on at the meeting. I think they chose a leader, secretary, treasurer, choir director, Sunday school superintendent, class teachers, and camp policeman. Father seemed always destined to be on that force—a task he did not like. The camp police saw that hours and rules were kept and that outside rowdies did not molest the camp.

While this meeting was in progress, we children hunted in the bushes for the ripe gooseberries missed by June pickers, discovered wee bird's nests in the underbrush, squirrel homes in hollow trees, or leafy nests above. Maybe we found a bee tree high overhead or pebbles by the brook that wound between the campground and the Hougas homestead. We played on the rustic footbridge. I knelt in wonderment by the long, thick mosses at tree roots where a fairy wonder-world could be created.

After business meeting, parents hunted up their children. Boys were sent to find twigs and wood for cookstoves. It had been announced at the meeting just where wood could be had. Girls swathed themselves in cover-all aprons like the ones their mothers donned and were set to peeling potatoes. Everyone visited with his tent neighbors as suppers were prepared. There was a great deal of borrowing of needed kitchen articles and much laughter about unimportant things remembered and necessities forgotten. Cookstoves were soon drawing lively, if the weather was good. The smell of wood-smoke and the fragrant odors of outdoor cooking filled the camp.

Tables were not set too early, because some little girl must stand beside it with a long leafy branch broken from the sprouts at the foot of the trees. With this she must "shoo" the flies and other insects from the table. When her arms began to ache from the constant to-and-fro, to-and-fro, a sister took her turn. Sometimes to ease the work, mother would suggest counting the "shoos"—which also made the task come out more fairly. All along the row of outdoor kitchens the branches waved above the tables until plates were filled. Then each person took over his own shoeing.

Where did we sit? Father and mother had chairs. As for us—that was easy. An empty stump might not be too far away where we could take our filled plates or a long log where we could eat with other camp children. Stove length wood blocks made good seats. In rainy weather we sat inside on the beds. But if none of these suited our fancy, we could always stand up at the table, which was nothing uncommon for children in those days anyway.

EVERY DAY WAS SUNDAY at reunion in one sense. We had prayer meeting, Sunday school, preaching, choir practice, and other meetings. But between services it was not all Sunday for the parents. Mothers washed, ironed, baked their bread, sometimes churned their butter, just as they did at home. Baker's bread was not available in our locality. Fathers chopped wood, fed teams, and milked cows. Boys hunted dried twigs and broke them for the stove. Girls prepared vegetables, washed dishes, and acted as nursemaids or baby sitters.

What I have written so far is about the material part, the setting for the spiritual jewel called reunion. They were enjoyable in spite of rain, heat and other discomforts. We made many new friends and renewed former friendships. We heard the best speakers our church had to offer—wonderful men who came to explain the gospel and instruct us how Latter Day Saints should set an example of righteous living before the world. We heard the eloquence of Heman C. Smith and T. W. Williams; knew closely the friendliness and love of "Uncle Henry" Kemp; admired the gentleness of Columbus Scott, the fatherliness of "Uncle Alec" Smith, the brotherliness of his son, Fred A., the fearless strength of Brother Hilliard, the sincerity of H. N. Hansen, the logic of Brother Fred M. Smith, and many, many other missionaries. It was never my privilege to see Brother Joseph when a child, but I heard love in people's voices as they spoke his name.

Every day we gained spiritually, even as Saints do in reunions today. Then came that night when we sang together, "God be with you till we meet again." Wet eyes brimmed over among the older Saints. Parents and rules were softened.

Children were allowed to slip into other tents after that meeting for a last visit with new friends.

The next morning at the crack of dawn, wagons were packed, tents folded away, the big tent lowered. It was a long way for the Thurman, Tabor, and Shenandoah Saints to travel in a day in those lumber wagons. Disbandment moved quickly. Soon the grove didn't look like reunion at all, and we might as well be content to go home.

AS I GREW IN YEARS, reunions grew. Little oilstoves took the place of ranges and went inside the tents. Folding beds and cots came into use. Clean fresh straw became less available. A small official tent, known as the "book tent," took its place beside the assembly tent. The first of these I remember was at the Badham Grove Reunion. A young man—John Garver—was in charge, representing the Herald Publishing House and Graceland College. As I browsed through church books beside the tent and heard him talk, my first desire to attend our own church college was born, but then it seemed a futile dream.

A decade later my first Graceland days were in the past. I was a member of the Lamoni congregation. Reunions of the South Woods were larger than those I had known in southwestern Iowa. Here was a tent for "young people," although it seemed left for each individual to decide when he grew into adulthood.

At two or three of these reunions I found myself in charge of the children's work. Their ages ranged from babes in the arms of little sisters up to young people of high school age who couldn't decide yet where they belonged. I felt very inadequately prepared for the task, especially since my training had been for primaries only. God and the many willing workers of the Lamoni Stake helped as youngsters of the nursery, primary, junior departments, as well as older children, shared the services. Handwork was created almost out of nothing.

Let me pause here and offer a word of counsel. If you are assigned a task which seems entirely too broad for your shoulders, remember God is so near you can lean upon him. You will get discouraged and weary of a task too big, but he can add to your intelligence and wisdom if you seek him. He will help you solve those problems or send you one who can. Anything you plan to do will be of no lasting value unless God's spirit dwells with you and shines out in what you do.

Yes, reunions have grown. Snack stands have come into being. Commissaries have been added. Tents of their

Then, too, the economy of most countries does not permit young people or their families to save anything for education at home or abroad. This means that some subsidy must be given to those who come to our colleges.

Late in 1949 the World Fellowship Fund was initiated. Christmas vespers dramatized with candles a circle of lights around the world. The offering supplied the beginning. The most recent contribution was the gift of the graduating class this spring. Persons, clubs, and church groups have contributed, always on a voluntary basis. Just now additional funds are needed to meet the commitments for this year. To date only half the required funds are on hand. It can be said, however, that response has been good as friends of the college have come to see the purposes and the needs.

Students for This Year

The college year 1951-52 promises much in around-the-world association. It also carries a heavy load for financial assistance. Here are the young people who will be on the campus this year for whom financial aid is required:

1. From Holland

Klaas Kaat of Rotterdam came to the campus in early June and is now working on the summer crew. He has fulfilled the military service required by the government and is free to spend two years at Graceland.

2. From England.

Three young people from England will be in this year's student body. Sylvia Wood of Manchester came in the latter half of June and is working in the Public Relations Office of the College. William Muldoon of Clay Cross, and Ronald Dawbarn of Warrington, are expected in early August.

3. From Japan.

For two years letters went back and forth between the college and Kisuke Sekine of Hanno, Japan. He had been directed toward Graceland by church members who had made contact with him during the occupation of the country. Last January he was able to complete enough arrangements to permit him to sail. He is not a member of our church. His sincerity, industry, and standards of living have won him a place in the esteem of students of last spring.

4. From Australia.

Last fall two Australians from "down under" registered at Graceland: Valda Poole of Sydney and Leslie Gardner of Newcastle. Both worked for over two years to save money for passage and initial payments.

5. From Mexico.

For several years we have wanted to have students come to Graceland from "south of the border." Apostle Charles Hield has been exploring this field as a means toward opening up church missions in Mexico and on south. Susana Mendiola of Mexico City has been admitted for this fall on the recommendation of Apostle Hield and Irene Crane of Florida who has been in Mexico City. Maria Elena Argomedo Mercado of Chapingo, Mexico, has been approved subject to assent by immigration authorities.

6. From Ecuador.

Correspondence is being carried on with Beatriz Pena-Herrera of Quito. It looks as if she will be coming this fall. Contacts have been made by church leaders with her father who has been studying in this country.

With these come students from Canada, from Hawaii, and from two thirds of the states of the Union. All these bring this dream of world fellowship into everyday reality. It is no longer a dream. Young people are coming from many lands. The church is now doing some frontier work in Christian fellowship. Its missions are being strengthened. Right appropriately can Gracelanders salute their alma mater:

*Home of the open-heart,
Shrine of the world-soul.*

Those desiring to contribute to the good cause of helping worthy students from abroad to attend Graceland should send their checks to the World Fellowship Fund, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa. (Approved by the Presiding Bishopric. G. L. DeLapp.)

Observe Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. James F. Keir of Independence celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on Sunday, July 1, at the home of their daughter, Mrs. James M. Brand, also of Independence.

Mr. Keir was born in Braidwood, Illinois. He attended night school in Chicago, the Campus in Independence, and the Kansas City Law School. In 1901 he married Lottie Danielson. Their children were born in Chicago where they lived for fourteen years before moving to Independence in 1915.

Brother Keir was associated with Bishop B. R. McGuire for nine years. He was business manager of the Herald House for a number of years also.

The Keirs have two other children, L. M. Keir of Independence, and Mrs. Mont O. Roper of Dallas, Texas. They have four grandchildren.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

Why do you have high priests in your church when the New Testament speaks of Christ only as a high priest?
Australia

F.P.

Answer:

The New Testament was not written as a history of the Christian church, and consequently many important things are not mentioned there and others are but slightly mentioned. There is no specific mention of the organization of the church, though the church must have been organized; neither is there any complete list of the officers placed therein, and only occasional incidental references are made to their duties. Practically nothing outside the book of Hebrews is said regarding priesthood.

One thing is clear in the New Testament, that is, that Christ established in his church a permanent means of continuing to reveal his truth and will as the ever-changing exigencies of his work should require. Not all he said and did is recorded. Neither did he say all that was needful for the church, but ordained that his Holy Spirit should take the place of his personal presence, becoming "another Comforter" to teach the truth and reveal the mind of Christ throughout all time to the end of the world. The church's loss of that Spirit of revelation was not by the will of Christ, but by the transgression of his people. By apostasy the church ceased to be the church of Christ and lost connection with him.

And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.—John 21: 25.

I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot hear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; . . . He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you.—John 16: 12-14.

The only recourse the Lord had in view of the apostasy was when time and conditions became opportune to restore his church in its original character, including the implanting of his Holy Spirit and the authority of the priesthood, that Christ might again find his rightful place and function in his church through the Spirit, having the right to speak and direct and to appoint such officers as his wisdom required. This is what the Lord has done in the latter-day Restoration.

The book of Hebrews does show that the priesthood was in the early church. It was an order in the line of Melchisedec. The author says "No man taketh this honor unto himself," showing that it was not something that man could assume, but came by the will of God. Speaking of this priesthood he calls Christ's ministers his "brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling." He shared with them this priesthood calling. Jesus also said, "As my Father hath sent me, so send I you." This priesthood included the power to preach, heal the sick, cast out devils, and work miracles according to wisdom and necessity (Luke 9: 1, 2).

Under the Restoration of the last century, the high priesthood was restored, the Holy Spirit was bestowed upon the church, and the principle of revelation, which had been in abeyance for seventeen centuries, was renewed. Under the authority of Jesus Christ and the Holy Ghost, the order of the high priesthood was revealed and various officers belonging to it were ordained and set in their places, including three who occupied as a presidency, as well as apostles, patriarchs, or evangelists, and bishops, whom the revelations say are all high priests. The high priesthood is the life and power of Christ operating in and through his church. Where the priesthood is not, Christ is not, and the church is left without life and power. We have high priests because God has given them to us as being necessary. In all these things the church today is found to be in harmony with that of the New Testament.

Question:

What is the Journal of History that is quoted from so often in many of our church writings?
R.E.M.
Kansas

Answer:

The Journal of History was a quarterly magazine published by the church. The first issue was published in January, 1908, and the last issue, volume 18, in October, 1925.

The Journal covered a wide range of historical material. It contained articles of historic interest, explanations of historic facts, biographies, also what was then current history of local and of general interest. During the eighteen years of its publication, much historic information was preserved in its pages. It is now source material for much information in connection with the history of the church.

Question:

I would like to know how many people started with Brigham Young and how many survived the journey? Mrs. N.P.
Ontario

Answer:

We have no accurate information of how many people followed Brigham Young. Wilford Woodruff in his testimony before the court in the "Temple Lot Suit" states, "There were some four thousand came with him to this Valley. I don't remember the exact number, but some four or five thousand. They came in '48. I should say some fifteen hundred or two thousand came through the same season later on." We do not have accurate records. The United States Census gives the figure of the entire population of Utah for 1850 as: white 11,354, slaves 26, or a total of 11,380. This would be the population approximately three years after Brigham Young's arrival with the first contingent.

How many died en route is not known. Some would die because of age, others because of accidents, still others because of exposure and hardships. We know of no accurate tabulation. Hundreds died in "winter quarters" at Council Bluffs and Omaha.

Health at the Waistline

By the Metropolitan Information Service

PERSUADING the twenty-five million or so adult Americans who are overweight to lose their excess poundage through intelligent dieting under medical supervision has been made a major public health project by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. The undertaking has the support and active co-operation of the Public Health Service of the Federal Security Agency and the American Medical Association.

The effort is concerned primarily with those persons who whip the dial of their bathroom scales to a point at least 10 per cent higher than that required for their own physical and mental well being. Their number is estimated at the twenty-five million figure.

Thus, even at the admittedly conservative average of twenty pounds of excess per overweight person, the mass objective would be the loss of some half a billion pounds, which probably makes it the most ambitious weight reduction campaign in all history.

THE PURPOSE is to effect an improvement in general health by reducing the incidence of disorders most prevalent among overweight persons. The insurance company isn't interested in the glamorization aspects of losing excess weight, except to the extent that persons who look well, and know that they do, usually feel better and hence are healthier.

"Ours is a serious and professional approach to the problem of educating the general public in the wisdom of maintaining normal or near-normal weight," declares Dr. Donald B. Armstrong, public health authority and a vice-president of the Metropolitan in charge of its health and welfare activities. "Excess pounds are admittedly a threat to health, especially after age thirty. They may place a burden on the heart and circulatory system, and on other vital parts of the body. While obesity is not exactly a disease, it is certainly a departure from normal health. It is closely associated with increased case and death rates from such conditions as heart disease, diabetes, arthritis, post-operative embolism, hypertension, gall-bladder disease, and perhaps even cancer."

HIGH APPROVAL and active support of the nation-wide effort is being given by such additional national agencies concerned with the overweight problem as the American Heart Association, the American Diabetes Association, and the American Dietetic Association.

The campaign is developed about the premise, zealously maintained by Dr. Armstrong, that 95 per cent of all cases of overweight are due simply to overeating.

"The only 'best way' to lose weight," he points out, "is through a diet prescribed and supervised by a doctor. That is the common-sense theme of our entire project.

"Physical condition, degree of overweight, and individual living habits must all be carefully evaluated before an effective, safe reducing plan can be worked out. No one can do all this for himself. Only a physician has the necessary skill and equipment to decide how much, how fast, and with what treatment a person should lose weight. A plan that benefits one person may harm another."

ONE MEDIUM by which the campaign will be carried to overweight America is a new eight-minute animation motion picture film in popular vein for theater use, entitled "Cheers for Chubby." It was produced in Hollywood by Jerry Fairbanks and is presented by the Metropolitan with the co-operation—and wholehearted approval—of the Public Health Service of the Federal Security Agency and the American Medical Association.

The principal character of the film, Chubby, has definitely had that second helping of cake too many times. The picture portrays his progress through the pitfalls and vicissitudes of a reducing program, his setbacks, and his ultimate triumph.

ATTENTION—ALL WOMEN OF THE CHURCH!

WOMEN'S CHURCH-WIDE INSTITUTE

TIME: Monday, October 8, 1951, through Friday, October 12, 1951.

PLACE: Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

THEME: GO FORWARD IN STEADFAST FAITH

OPENING MEETING: 7:30 p.m., October 8, Pauline J. Arnson in charge. Greetings from President I. A. Smith, Stake President Charles V. Graham, Stake Women's Leader Mrs. G. B. Wilson. "Get Acquainted" reception arranged by Kansas City Stake women.

CLASSWORK begins at 9:00 a.m. each day, closes at 3:30 p.m., with an hour and a half for lunch.

NOON LUNCH served in Laurel Club Dining Room, reasonable charge.

HOUSING furnished free of charge by Independence women.

SPEAKERS: Blanche Mesley, Eveline Burgess, Aleta Runkle, Lucy McDowell, Bertha Johnson, Evelyn Velt, Rosamond Smith, Alice Burgess, F. H. Edwards, F. M. McDowell, Evan Fry, John Sheehy, and others.

TOURS are being planned to interesting points in Independence and vicinity. On Wednesday afternoon there will be no classes in order that a tour of historical places may be made. This will include Liberty Jail, Far West, Richmond, et cetera. Bishop Mark Siegfried will be in charge.

PLAN now to attend if at all possible. If you cannot possibly attend, see to it that your branch is represented. Each group could co-operate to finance the attendance of one or more of its members.

THIS INSTITUTE will be a high point in the work of church women. You can't afford to miss it.

WATCH the Herald for further details of program, speakers, registration, and housing.

What to avoid, the importance of staying religiously with the diet, and the opportunities for improved health through normal weight are featured.

A KEY ACTIVITY of the campaign will be the distribution of a booklet, Overweight and Underweight. The booklet will be delivered to millions of Metropolitan policyholders and to other interested persons by the 19,000 company agents and other field representatives throughout the country. Copies of the booklet also will be available to policyholders and the general public at each of the company's offices. The booklet is free.

Overweight and Underweight treats authoritatively such subjects as "What Makes a Person Fat?" and "Why Do People Overeat?" Under the latter heading are discussed some common reasons which have their root in the emotions—boredom, loneliness, a feeling of being unloved, or discontent about money, job, family relationships, or social standing.

"People who overeat for such reasons usually find it necessary to do something about their emotional problems before they are able to tackle their eating habits successfully," Dr. Armstrong advises.

Probably the most useful thing about the booklet is the list of various foods and their caloric content in measured portions, with the method of measuring the portion easily understood. Sample menus for 1,000-calorie, 1,200-calorie, 1,500-calorie reducing diets eliminate the starvation aspect usually associated with dieting.

"After a person is full grown and has reached his ideal weight, he should not gain or lose much for the rest of his life," asserts Dr. Armstrong. "It used to be considered inevitable and normal for people to get heavier toward middle age. We know now that it is not a normal part of getting older, not healthy, and not necessary."

Let Us Pray - By Dr. Glenn C. LeBaron

ON JULY 4, 1951, we of the United States celebrated the birth of our great nation 175 years ago. Today this nation and other nations stand on the threshold of a serious situation which will decide whether or not our civilization will survive.

The Bible and Book of Mormon foretell wars and rumors of wars. The wars in the early history of the world and the wars of today have the same fundamental cause—men cannot be at peace with each other if they are not first at peace with God. The powers of congress, parliament, kings, rulers, armies, navies, and the all-out efforts of the civilian population devoted to the establishing of peace will fail upon any other basis than the universal fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. There is really only one race—the human race—and all people are brothers and sisters in the sight of God.

IF THE MONEY SPENT on war, liquor, tobacco, narcotics, sinful pastimes, and unwarranted waste could be used to bring about the desire in men to live by the directives of the Sermon on the Mount, the nations of the world would have peace. There would be an amazing increase in the wealth of the world, and it would be properly distributed. Civilization would reach heights as yet unknown to man.

If this desire for the good of all men could be sufficiently aroused Christendom would mobilize and send out a missionary front into all the nations of the world to preach the gospel story with power and success. Then opposing armies, meeting on the field of battle would lay down their arms, take the hand of the enemy, and say "May God bless you, Brother."

When we see our next door neighbor at fault, we pray for him. Do we pray for our enemies across the sea? Or do we spend our time, money, and efforts to destroy them? The sons of Mosiah took the gospel to their enemies and saved the kingdom of Limhi. Love with prayer is more powerful than hate with destruction.

GOD AND HIS WAY should come first. How often do we listen to pre-election speeches on our radios and the many addresses concerning war and our destinies by men in high places who put God and Christian endeavor in the background by calling on the Deity at the close of their addresses (if at all) instead of bringing to the attention of their listeners the Light of the World at the beginning and undergirding their addresses with him throughout?

The faith of our forefathers is the concrete foundation upon which this nation has been built. Our Pilgrim fathers knelt in prayer when they first set foot on the soil of America. Could they have been wrong in their faith? Faith in God and the desire for good for others caused the men on that memorable day, July 4, 1776, to sign one of the greatest documents of all time. It is not difficult to believe that the majority of the signers offered a fervent prayer at the time of affixing their signatures.

The faith of our fathers is resident in all Christian people today. This faith must lead us on to victory over the satanic influence that has caused the present day turmoil. Only God-fearing Christian people can end wars and save our tottering civilization.

Let us pray often.

Briefs

FLINT, MICHIGAN.—A new oil furnace was purchased for the Baltimore Boulevard congregation. Detailed plans are completed and actual work has begun on the addition to the Hamilton Avenue church. The old section of the building will be remodeled. Recent guest speakers in Flint have been President W. Wallace Smith, Apostle C. G. Mesley, President F. Henry Edwards, Bishop Wayne Updike, Elder Blair McClain, and Elder John Blackstock. April priesthood classes for the Flint area were taught by Bishop L. Wayne Updike of Detroit.

Mrs. Carl Van Cannon reviewed the book, The Sweetest Story Ever Told, by Oursler, at the general meeting of the department of women April 6. The same theme was presented in the devotions by Lucile Shearer, Zola Green, and Mary Bennetts.

A mother-daughter reception for all the women and girls of both churches was held May 4 at the Hamilton Avenue church. The variety group presented the entertainment, and the central group served refreshments.

Pastor R. Melvin Russell talked to the young adults of the Court Street Methodist Church on the faith and doctrine of the R.L.D.S. church at a meeting April 22.

A choir has been organized at the Baltimore Boulevard Church with Mrs. Carl Van Cannon, director, and Mrs. Leonard Lanigan, accompanist. Music from the choir adds much to the spirit of the services.

The Hamilton Avenue choir presented the annual spring concert June 10. Choir numbers were directed by Allen Pohly and Mrs. Richard Derenzy. Miss Kathleen Barker was the organist. Assisting on the program were Robert Eliason of Swartz Creek and Pauline Frisby of Detroit. Professionally Mrs. Frisby is known as Carlotta Franzel. She was accompanied by her daughter Katherine at the piano. Robert Eliason played a sousaphone solo, accompanied by Mary Alice Pohly.

Recent Zion's League activities include a lawn party and barbecue at the home of Marilyn Wright, a barn party at the Eliason home, and a picnic at Flushing State Park. Lewis Wilcox is League leader.—Reported by ELEANOR RUSSELL

OSBORN, MISSOURI.—Elder Wesley Ballinger and Teacher Howard Hamann, local priesthood of Stewartsville, Missouri, have just completed a series of cottage meetings at Osborn, Missouri. At the conclusion of these meetings, six people were baptized, four of these a complete family. They are Mrs. Naomi Burkhead and her three children, Wayne, Betty, and Lavon; the father is deceased. Eleanor Vaught and her brother David also united with the church July 15. Brothers Ballinger and Hamann have been under the supervision of Gerald Gabriel, appointee in Osborn. They will begin another series of lawn lectures in Osborn the latter part of July.

NOEL, MISSOURI.—Elder L. V. Aldridge completed a week's series of slide lectures and preaching services. Following this five adults were baptized: Ellis Creek, Minnie Pogue, Maud Drake, Mable Gardner, and Franklin Pogue. On July 8 they were confirmed by Elders Aldridge and A. M. Hogan of Carthage, Missouri; Brother Hogan also gave the morning sermon.

Nine others were baptized June 10, making a total of fourteen added to this newly established group. The group now meets five miles west of Noel, Missouri, at the Saratoga School.—Reported by RUSSELL W. GENRICH

TAMPA, FLORIDA.—On June 17, June Walters, Mary Fulford, Virginia Steir and daughter Susan were baptized. Elder A. J. Chevalier and Priest Rolland Aultmen officiated. The annual picnic was held June 30. A lot has been purchased adjoining the church. This lot will be the future site of the educational building.—Reported by ROY MCGAHAGIN

WICHITA FALLS, TEXAS.—The Wichita Falls and Davidson, Oklahoma, Saints united for a baptismal service July 15. Three children were baptized: Mary Ruth and Richard, daughter and son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Childers of Davidson, Oklahoma, and Ernest, son of Sgt. and Mrs. Floyd Goff of Wichita Falls.—Reported by MRS. DOROTHY GOFF

PITTSBURG, KANSAS.—Patriarch Elbert A. Smith was present at the June 17 ordination service. Curtis Pearson was ordained to the office of elder by Brother Smith and Pastor T. W. Bath. Eldon Hart was ordained a priest by Elders J. W. Jones and T. W. Bath. Sherman Sheppard and Bob Trimble, accompanied by Dale Swall, sang two numbers.

Richard Boone, son of Leonard and Fern Boone, and Jimmy Dafft, son of James and Marjorie Dafft, were baptized by Pastor T. W. Bath June 10. Three children were blessed at this service: Marcia Dean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kirk; Glenn Allen and Dennis, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Dean Kirk. These families are nonmember friends, the fathers being brothers of Mrs. Clyde Wiley, Pittsburg's children's supervisor.

Four members received credit cards for work done under the leadership training plan June 3. Joan Margrave, Bonita Burns, and Dale Swall received credit in "Exploring the Church" and Mrs. T. W. Bath received credit in "Overviews of Latter Day Saintism."

Elder J. W. Jones attended the priesthood institute at Lamoni, Iowa.

The Zion's League and the Golden Key Circle sponsored a picnic and fellowship meeting at the home of Curtis and Bonita Pearson, June 27. There was swimming by the group before the picnic. Dale Swall, young people's leader, was in charge of the program. A quartette sang three numbers. Eldon Hart conducted the worship service before a campfire. Others on the program were Bob and Sam Ross, Shirley and Betty Fletcher, Rosa Lea Gates, Donna, Wanda, and Bill Ohlhausen, Kenneth Pearson, Bill and Barbara Landrum, Warren and Janice Jackson, David and Martin Lee Wiley, Mrs. J. W. Jones, and Curtis Pearson.

A Father's Day pot-luck supper was held on the back lawn of the church June 13. This was sponsored by the women's department.

The Two by Two group treated the branch to a watermelon feed July 11. Mrs. Clyde Wiley showed her colored slides of reunion scenes and activities. May and Warren Jackson served the watermelons.

The Zion's League went to Miami, Oklahoma, July 2 to play volleyball. Earl Burns furnished transportation for the group.

Apostle D. O. Chesworth was the speaker at the spring banquet held at the Hotel Besse May 22 by the Golden Key Circle. Those who furnished music were Joan Margrave, Bob Trimble, Pat Mosher, Dale Swall, Mrs. Kenneth Colyer and Mrs. Sam Landrum. Mrs. Curtis Pearson was toastmistress.

Mrs. Gwen Warden from the Jenkins Music Company at Joplin, Missouri, gave an organ recital June 10 to demonstrate the new Hammond electric organ purchased by the branch. Mrs. Sam Landrum, music director, was chairman of the committee appointed to purchase the organ.—Reported by MRS. ROY HELLER money for an automobile for the district missionary were distributed. These containers were returned and opened April 8 from which a contribution of over one hundred dollars was raised.

Monte Parker, from Independence, was the speaker February 11, and Lyman Edwards from Lawrence spoke in the evening. The infant son of Brother and Sister Clifford Alfrey was blessed at the morning service.

Lyman Edwards, district Zion's League leader, and Kenneth Byrn, district young adult leader, met with the Zion's League and the young adult classes Sunday February 11. Both leaders are from Lawrence.

Brother and Sister Joseph Martin of Independence spent two days with the Saints early in March. They gave flannelgraph lectures on church history.

Brother Cal French, newly appointed missionary in this district, spoke at the morning service April 8.

The Kaw Valley District held its first priesthood and women's institute at Lawrence April 14 and 15. District President James Daugherty, Bishop Howard Miller, and Missionary Cal French instructed the men. The women were instructed by Sister Minnie Peterson, the Kansas City Stake leader of women, and Sister Margaret Hoecker of Lawrence who is a member of the General Council of Women. Saturday evening of the institute was given over to "participation class," at which time each group, Leavenworth, Bonner Springs, Lawrence, and Topeka, put on a demonstration such as a devotional service, instruction in parliamentary law, an illustration of how not to conduct a business meeting, talks and illustrations of handwork. Bishop Howard Miller gave the closing address to the women. There were forty-nine registered in attendance at the institute.

On April 28, the district, under the supervision of the district president, the leader of young adults, and of Zion's League groups chartered a passenger bus for a trip to Nauvoo. Twenty-nine young people made the trip.

On April 22 Bishop Howard Miller met with the Saints and brought with him several of the nurses from the Sanitarium, including two who are natives of Hawaii. They spoke to the group.

Two newly ordained deacons, Clifford Alfrey and Harry Pitchford, occupied the pulpit on April 29. May 6, Burrell Landes, Jr., and Richard Landes were baptized by their grandfather, Elder George Landes of Niagara Falls, New York, and Sandra Schoenfeldt was baptized by Elder Eddie R. Jones of Topeka. Philip A. Whiting of Independence was the speaker at the evening service on this date.

On May 13, District President James C. Daugherty and Bishop Leslie Kohlman of Independence met with the branch. Brother Frank O. Kelley gave the Mother's Day sermon, and the Zion's League had a special Mother's Day program.

Elder Chris Hartshorn of Independence visited May 20 and gave the morning sermon. On May 23 Apostle Reed Holmes preached at the regular prayer service time.

Dee Hendricks was baptized by Elder Arnold Ellsworth of Independence, and Edith Anderson was baptized by Elder Eddie R. Jones of Topeka on May 20. Brother E. C. Christenson gave the sermon in the evening.

Brother Orville Weedmark of the Chelsea Branch in Kansas City spoke at the morning service May 27. Sister Weedmark gave a vocal solo.

James Daugherty, Collier F. Hendricks, and Herbert Bush displayed slides May 30, taken by the young people on their trip to Nauvoo.

Report From Mexico

By Billie Whiting Young

The First in a Series of Travelogs on Mexico and Central America

WE HAVE GREAT CONFIDENCE in Mexicans. We have to have—our safety is in their hands. For a month now George and I have been touring Mexico and Central America on foot, catching rides whenever and with whomever we can. This is the most humble and at the same time the most enlightening way we know to visit a country. We are dependent upon the people we meet; we are one on their level; and to our great delight, we have been accepted by them.

Naturally we travel light. All our belongings (including a sixteen millimeter movie camera, a tripod, a thirty-five millimeter camera, a light meter, and three months' supply of film) are in two Boy Scout knapsacks. We also are carrying a compass and a bowie knife—both gifts from friends at Lock Four, Pennsylvania—and a small tear gas pencil for use in case we should ever get into serious trouble. So far nothing but good has happened to us. We have been picked up by wealthy Mexican hacendados, by taxi drivers on vacation, by salesmen desiring to practice their English, by Mexican family groups, and by truck drivers. We rode into the southern city of Oaxaca on top of a truck load of tequila. One truck had no glass in its windows, which, in the rainy season, was an unfortunate arrangement.

IT HAS BEEN SIX YEARS since I was in a Spanish-speaking country, and in that time I think I can see changes for the better—changes that are significant to our church in its task of taking the message of the gospel to these people. Six years ago three friends from Graceland College and I were talking with a Mexican Catholic girl in Mexico City. Beatriz, a young woman of about twenty, was well-educated, and during the course of an evening's conversation the talk got around to religion. Naturally we mentioned the church to which we belong. To our surprise Beatriz stopped what she was doing and asked, with great concern, if we believed in God. When we assured her that we did, she sighed with relief and said, "Then you must be Catholic!" It took most of the evening for us to explain to her that there were concepts of God and his plan for men that were different from the Roman Catholic view. The discussion ended with Beatriz asking us not to mention our religion to her family or friends as she would suffer some ostracism on our account if it were known that we were not Catholic.

Now six years later we again visited Beatriz. Again the conversation turned to religion. Only this time my friend showed no sign of shock or even surprise to learn that my husband had not only left the Catholic Church but was a member of the ministry of another. This time our discussion ended with Beatriz asking us to tell her about our church and what we believe. Her most significant statement about the Catholic Church was this: "What I can't understand is that the church does nothing to help the poor."

Not all people are so liberal, but the fact that some are now willing to listen where before they were not is encouraging.

In the village of Huajuapán the foreman of a cement factory asked us about our religion. When he learned that we were not Catholic he immediately assumed that we believed in God but not in Christ. The idea that there were Christian churches other than the Catholic had not occurred to him.

TOURING A COUNTRY ON FOOT can lead one into strange situations—situations which demonstrate the ease with which most of these people can be approached. We were in the Zapotec Indian village of Teotitlán del Valle—a most primitive village at the end of a winding dirt road on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec—looking for someone who would sell us fruit for breakfast as there was no restaurant in the town. We heard music, and following the sound, we found a tattered band playing in the courtyard of a house. We had hardly seated ourselves on a rock wall to listen to the efforts of the musicians when the man of the house saw us and invited us into the courtyard. From there he ushered us into his house. The building was of adobe with a dirt floor and a ceiling made of corn stalks. One end of the room had been converted into an altar with candles and incense and a large black paper cross. In front of this altar on a crude plank table lay the body of an old man. We had been invited to a wake. The body had just been sewed into a black shroud with a black veil drawn tightly over the face. While we stood there, the old man's relatives lifted him into his home-made coffin and began lighting the long candles that lined the table.

Our host then led us to seats on a bench with the mourners and fed us orange pop, hot chocolate, cakes, tortillas, and a distasteful mixture called átole blanco. For an hour we received the condolences of visitors along with the family, while outside the band played the same death march over and over.

When we finally returned to the courtyard we found preparations under way for a feast. Five sheep had been butchered by the men while about twenty women squatted around charcoal fires patting out tortillas and mixing great quantities of átole. Everyone ate and drank great amounts, including all fourteen members of the band, until by afternoon the affair had taken on more of the characteristics of a fiesta than a wake.

Our experience at the wake may have been a bit unusual, but it is typical of the spontaneity of the people we have met.

Point of View

I once talked to an old cannibal who, hearing of the Great War raging then in Europe, was most curious to know how we Europeans managed to eat such enormous quantities of human flesh. When I told him that Europeans do not eat their slain foes, he looked at me in shocked horror and asked what sort of barbarians we were, to kill without any real object.—Bronislaw Malinowski

Is Education the Answer?

By L. C. Goffin, M.D.

Supervisor of Health Education
Los Angeles City Schools

CIVILIZED SOCIETY can take no pride in the fact that it allows so many of its members to debauch themselves with a powerful drug. Not only does society allow this to happen, but it actually encourages indulgence in alcohol by making it easily accessible to everyone and by surrounding its use with practically no safeguards. The public does not demand that alcohol be controlled as are other powerful narcotics. Yet alcohol does more harm, individually and socially, than all the other narcotics combined. Other drugs purchasable by the public are labeled as to contents, possible harmful effects, overdosage, and so on. But alcohol brazenly masquerades as an innocent and beneficial beverage.

Here is a social problem of significant proportions. It is a grave public health problem. What is the answer? What is being done? Some research has been conducted on the effects of alcohol and on how to cure alcoholism, but far less than on other public-health problems. "One million dollars for cancer research," reports the Research Council on Problems of Alcohol, "$12,000,000 for control of gonorrhea and syphilis, $330,000,000 for tuberculosis control, and probably less than $200,000 for research on alcoholism."

WHAT IS BEING DONE in education? Numerous reports from all parts of the country say that teaching on the subject in schools is perfunctory, confused, inadequate, or nonexistent. Teachers are not well trained, textbooks are inaccurate, and often have the wrong approach. In other words, not enough people consider the problem serious enough to insist on education doing its duty.

Yet education is our only hope. There is no other way to conquer this ancient enemy of man. The schools and colleges must inform themselves concerning alcohol and the problems it poses. They must teach young people the facts revealed by medical research. They must impress on the mind of youth that alcohol is a dangerous drug, best left strictly alone.

The ancient error that alcohol is a stimulant dies hard. It is difficult to convince one who knows nothing of the physiological chemistry involved that the mad capers of the intoxicated person are the result of narcosis. The average person is not afraid of a stimulant, but he is afraid of a narcotic.

When one considers the enormous sums spent on teaching people to drink and compares this vast organized effort with the Lilliputian endeavors of the public schools to combat such efforts, he realizes the magnitude of the problem.

IF THE SCHOOLS did an effective job of education about alcohol, would that solve the problem? Probably not, completely. Out from the schools would still go large numbers of unstable individuals, poorly adjusted to life, who would demand an escape from their frustrations, fixations, and phobias. Alcohol constitutes the quickest, cheapest, and most easily accessible escape.

Can education do anything about this? I believe it can. First, it can train young people to find less destructive avenues of escape. It can even divert their energies into constructive escape channels. Second, it can educate for mental and emotional stability. Much evidence is accumulating that neurotics and psychotics are oftener made than born, even starting in childhood. The observant teacher, trained in the concepts of mental hygiene, often can correct these incipient deviations of the psyche and prevent much adult maladjustment.

It is conceivable that a generation thoroughly conversant with the facts about alcohol would demand that this habit-forming narcotic be restricted to its legitimate purposes. An informed citizenry is not easily hoodwinked by specious propaganda. Only the ignorant and the misinformed will willingly tolerate a public menace.

THE CHALLENGE that beverage alcohol flings in the teeth of our civilization is one that education cannot continue to ignore. Sooner or later the issue will have to be faced realistically. With the threefold attack just outlined, the challenge can be met. The duty of the schools is clear: Teach the facts, unemotionally and scientifically; create the proper attitude; train young people to be well-integrated personalities with constructive emotional patterns and a well-developed sense of social responsibility.

The battle will be long and hard. It will have to be fought continuously and unflaggingly. But with these objectives held tenaciously before it, the American people can win through to victory.—(Used by permission of the World League Against Alcoholism, Westerville, Ohio.)

own provide for the nursery, primary, junior, and Zion's League groups. Handwork products are worthy of exhibition. Shower baths may be there for the campers' convenience, and some camps offer swimming, boating, or mountain hiking. But the vital thing is that reunions are still a source of spiritual feasting.

THE REUNION OF 1950 was a new experience to me. I had been convalescing all summer from a heart attack. When a visitor remarked, "Too bad you will miss reunion this year," I answered, almost jokingly, "Reunion will have to come to me."

It came indeed. The breezes wafted the music of morning devotions all the way from Graceland Campus to my home near Herald Hall. They carried again the evensong of the Saints. All this because of the public speaking system in use at the camp. Friends dropped in to share what they had gained at prayer services, repeating testimonies that had lived for them. Sister Ethel Midgorden took it upon herself to see that I was not a lonely invalid while others were engrossed with reunion.

The Creston Saints banded to bring reunion to me. Each day Brother and Sister Harry Propst came with their wire recorder and I listened to all of Brother Ray Whiting's classwork. Nearly every time they came they brought some Creston member I had not yet met. Sister Ruby Strand, a church writer, took extensive notes on the evening services and came down one afternoon near the close to give me a beautiful outline of the message Brother Oakman had brought to the Saints. Everyone's thoughtfulness was much appreciated.

PERSONAL RIGHTEOUSNESS was the theme of that great reunion sermon preached by good King Benjamin of the Book of Mormon. Stalwart leaders clothed the message in other words and brought it to the reunions of my childhood. In many places this year, tent doors are again pitched toward the central source of spiritual giving and receiving. The message comes to you anew in words that fit the age in which you live. Whether reunion begins for you with song or with service, or reading of it in your church papers—or if your friends bring it to you—may it swell in your heart and give you strength and peace.

Oklahoma State Reunion

The Oklahoma State Reunion will be held August 4 to 12 in the San Bois Mountains, Robbers Cave State Park at Wilburton, Oklahoma. General church representatives expected to be present are Apostle Arthur A. Oakman, Evangelist Arthur E. Stoft, Evangelist R. W. Scott, Bishop Leslie W. Kohlman, Seventy William C. Haden, Missionary Barnett W. Berridge, and District President Victor J. Witte. Mrs. Aarona Kohlman of the General Council of Women will teach the women's class. Those attending will be housed in small dormitories ($3.00 for adults, $2.50 for children under twelve) and tents ($6.00 for large one, $4.50 for small ones). Meal tickets will be $7.00 for adults and $5.00 for children under twelve. Information and reservations may be obtained from Victor J. Witte, 1324 South Cheyenne, Tulsa 14, Oklahoma.

Oregon District Camp

A district camp will be held August 13 to 19 on the Lewis River Camp ground owned by the church. It consists of thirty acres located twenty miles north of Vancouver on the Yacolt Road approximately three miles north of Battleground Lake and a half mile east of the Amboy-Yacolt Railroad and bridge over Lewis River. This is not a reunion but a camp for people of all ages who want to help improve the grounds. In addition to the work there will be recreation, rest, classes, and sermons. Bishop M. E. Lasater, Elder James N. Kemp, and district officers expect to be present to help.

Those who plan to attend should notify their district officers immediately stating if they need a tent and what size they want. There are no tent frames or cabins available. Stoves will be set up for the campers to cook on. All other camping equipment should be brought along. There is a store close by.

J. L. VERHEI,
District President.

* FOOTNOTE ON GAMBLING

The operator of the old-fashioned shell game chanted, "The hand is quicker than the eye," and he might have added that it sometimes plays strange tricks that escape attention. This happened in "Notes on Gambling" (July 16) where a slang word, "bookies," was substituted for a traditional epithet, "boobies," spoiling the meaning of the sentence. . . So sorry . .

Afterthought: The essence of gambling is the element of chance. Its purpose is to get something for nothing. It is a form of theft. Scientific tests show that modern gambling devices and games are set to rob the players. The slogan of the gambling czars is "Never give the sucker a chance." Literally, they rarely do.

Gambling is an ancient vice. The word comes to us from a Middle English verb, related to the noun for "game." Games were originally played for pleasure, but mischievous persons discovered that they could be played for money, opening the way for dishonest practices. . . . The lottery is simply a public gambling scheme. It originated in a practice of casting lots, or tokens made of wood, stone, or other material, to settle disputes, make judgments, and divide property.

It is interesting that the casting of lots had a religious use. Matthias was chosen to take the place of Judas by this means (Acts 1:26). In ancient Israel, the scapegoat was chosen by lot (Leviticus 16:8). It was decreed that the land should be divided for the twelve tribes by lot (Numbers 33:54). The book of Joshua, chapters 13 to 19, describes how the division was made. One observes that the casting of lots was employed to secure impartiality where decisions had to be made. . . As in so many other human situations, principles were established for good. Then evil entered and perverted them.

* FOUR BILLION DOLLARS GO UP IN SMOKE

If somebody were to set fire to four billion dollars, we would consider him crazy. Yet that is what the American people did in the year ending June 30. They took all that money, went out and bought tobacco, and then set it afire.

That great figure represents a total of 410,000,000,000 cigarettes—nearly half a package a day for every man, woman, and child in the U.S.A.

Would the American people give up smoking to save that much money? Apparently not. . . . Would you? You could save your share by not smoking.

* GOOD THOUGHTS

In response to our request for ideas, Henry Snow, Galesburg, Illinois, has sent the following thoughtful paragraphs:

Tithing: You can't take your money with you, but you can send it on ahead.

Various churches: We all have the same food but only a few know how to cook it.

Church workers: Few want to join the chase but many want to rush in for the kill.

Good deeds: Everyone should live so that he will have a few kind acts for a carry-over into eternity.

AT LAMONI REUNION

President F. Henry Edwards preached the opening sermon at the Lamoni reunion held on the Graceland campus. Bishop G. L. DeLapp was also at the reunion on the week end of July 21 and 22.

PRESIDENT AT OZARK REUNION

President W. Wallace Smith spent July 21, 22, 23, and 24 at the Ozark Reunion in Racine, Missouri, with Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Seventy Don Kyser, Seventy Cecil Effinger, and Elder Stephen Black. Sister Smith taught the women's class for the first three days of the reunion. Brother Smith had an opportunity to go to Miami, Oklahoma, with the Kyser family to survey flood damage, including the damage to the home of Brother Kyser which had four feet of water in the living quarters. Twenty-one other Saints had their homes damaged by the flood waters. Brother Elbert A. Smith was also at the reunion and preached at the afternoon service July 22.

APOSTLE IN IOWA

Apostle D. T. Williams attended a conference of the Southwest Iowa District under the direction of Elder Charles Putnam at which the conference passed a resolution in conformity with three other associated districts giving validity to an association of the young people of the four districts to meet in youth camp annually. While in Council Bluffs, Brother Williams observed the progress on the new church buildings. Footings are being laid and foundations are being set up preparatory to the building of the superstructure.

REPORT ON STATISTICS

The following has been received in a report from Merle P. Guthrie of the Department of Statistics: "In only two calendar years in the history of the Reorganization have we baptized more than 5,000 people—1921 with 5,477 and 1918 with 5,195. Again this year, with 2,058 baptisms for the first six months, we have a good opportunity of reaching or exceeding 5,000. This figure is 215 better than for the same period last year. For the last six months of last year there were 2,928 baptisms. If we also exceed this by 215 we will have 5,201 for the year. The good missionary months are ahead."

ADDRESSES OPTIMISTS

Elder Trevor Norton, formerly from Birmingham, England, addressed the Optimist Club of Independence July 25. His subject was "Political and Economic Conditions in England." Brother Norton has recently purchased a home in Independence.

FREMONT CHURCH SCHOOL

The first vacation church school held in Fremont, Nebraska, received encouraging publicity in the "Fremont Guide and Tribune," the daily paper. A picture appeared in the paper showing the life-size figure of Christ which is the feature of the children's worship center. The figure stands in a garden surrounded by a low white picket fence, and the children bring flowers each day to the garden. The worship center was designed by Harold Newton, whose wife was principal of the vacation school. It was also used by the Omaha branch for their vacation church school.

Merle P. Guthrie

FROM FARM to figures in seven years" might serve as the title of this personal sketch. Merle left the farm in 1944 and was appointed Church Statistician early this year. He is seen in this picture sitting at his desk in the Auditorium with tables of figures before him and a thoughtful look on his face. Statistically speaking, he is mainly concerned with interpreting the figures which are collected in his department so that they can be transmitted to serve the administrative officers of the church. The job should be easy for anyone who has the stuff to do the right kind of thinking and the necessary data.

Brother Guthrie was born at Nebo, Illinois, in 1913 and was baptized in Marshall, Missouri, in 1922. He was graduated from the Pleasant Hill (Illinois) high school in 1930 and received his A.B. degree from Illinois College at Jacksonville in 1946. He was valedictorian of the graduating class in college.

He married Cleona M. Weaver in 1933. They have two children: Richard Alan, 16, and Mary Merlene 14. They recently moved to Independence. Brother Guthrie taught school from 1941 to 1945. In 1946 he went under General Conference appointment to the Southern Ohio, West Virginia, and Pittsburgh Districts. After two years his field was changed by excluding Southern Ohio. Two years later he was appointed to Wisconsin and Minnesota. He was ordained a priest in 1938, an elder in 1945, and a seventy in 1948.

Danger - Liquor at Work!

*"Wine is a mocker, and strong drink is raging."
—Proverbs 20: 1*

Editorial

WE HAVE BEEN SEEING plenty lately of the "mockery" of wine and of the "raging" of strong drink. And we wonder, is there never to be any relief from this curse? Is the public completely apathetic on the question?

The following are recent observations. They are not colored, dramatized, nor exaggerated. They are such things as are seen in public every day. When will citizens revolt in disgust and stop this soul-destroying menace?

THE VERY TALL GIRL was wearing dark glasses, probably to hide her identity. She could have been engaged in business or professional work from her appearance. However . . . some misfortune in her life had made her an addict of the liquor habit. Standing by the bus door she swayed uncertainly, clutching a steel support so she wouldn't fall.

The driver asked her to pay the zone fare before alighting, and she replied with profane and abusive language that shocked the ears. What a tragic figure she was!

From the bus she went to a roadside liquor place—the last thing in the world she needed at that time or any other. Unless she is rescued her fate is sealed.

The people responsible for liquor set this fate for her!

THIS MAN had held his position in business for a dozen years or so. He was always pleasant, clean in appearance, respectful and courteous in speech. Many people did not know of his trouble, as he never appeared when it was upon him. He was an excellent worker. However . . .

Something in his life had caused him to take up drinking. His absences from work were occasional at first. They gradually increased in frequency and in length. The time came when he gave more attention to the bottle than to his business, and his employer was obliged to let him go. His next job isn't so good, and he is on the way down unless something can save him.

Those who are indifferent to the problem of liquor are indifferent to the fate of this man and partly responsible for it.

THE OLD MAN was waiting at the bus stop with the five-o'clock crowd of office workers and shoppers who were going home. His clothing was distinctive—old, worn and dirty. Perhaps he was that "Man of Distinction" the liquor ads tell about. Now he has become the "Man of Extinction," for he is hardly a man. A big liquor bottle was sagging at half mast in his hip pocket, and it was all too clear that he had taken much comfort from its contents.

The store that sold him the bottle took his money and pushed him out on the streets for the community to endure. At the moment he was a first rate public nuisance. He would become a menace before the evening was over. He wanted to go to his daughter's home. Can you imagine what it would be like for her and the children? One hoped he would never get there.

Why should the public be required to take care of these people?

Why shouldn't the liquor business be taxed to provide a place to take care of the drunks? Their taxes are high, but they should be ten times higher for all the trouble they cause.

The people who want liquor—yes, the indifferent people who tolerate liquor—are responsible for that man and for all like him.

FACTS from the news: Police found children hungry, crying, and cold in a car on a winter day, then discovered the mother in a tavern so drunk she couldn't realize anything . . . An intoxicated mother on the street with her little son, slapped him when she could aim straight enough to hit him, and swore at him most abusively. . . . A father went home drunk, his week's wages gone, while his family applied to charitable agencies for food. . . . These cases are on record, interminable numbers of them.

People who think liquor is all right are responsible for these things.

The country was far better off under prohibition. Conditions since repeal are a hundred times worse in every way.

This is how liquor is made: Yeast, a small living organism, is put into a mixture of water and sugar or starch. Kept warm, it thrives and multiplies. But it also gives off a poison that kills it. Then men strain out the bodies and drink the fluid, in the form of wine or beer. Distilled, the fluid becomes a liquor, with greater power.

The alcohol that has the power to kill the little organism also has the power to kill a man, bit by bit—first his mind, then his nervous system, and finally his body.

Alcohol is ever a killer. It is as truly a killer as typhus and the Black Death. It is as truly a killer as the coral snake and the rattler. It kills more victims than war.

Washington, D. C., Church Building Project

Erection of the Washington, D. C., church is undoubtedly one of the most important projects now being undertaken by the Washington Branch and the General Church. A beautiful lot has already been purchased in a very fine area, and it is highly important that the building to be placed on this site shall be representative of the church and provide for the functional needs of the branch, and at the same time serve as a point to which interested inquirers can go for information concerning the Restoration.

In designing this Capital City building the following points must be considered:

A sanctuary to seat not less than 150 and not to exceed 225.

An assembly room for overflow crowds, which could be used for other general meetings.

A kitchen adjacent to this assembly room.

Classrooms to provide for church school for the congregation.

The pastor's study, serving also as a library.

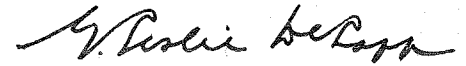

Baptismal font.

No decision has been made up to the present time as to whether the design of the church shall be contemporary or traditional or modified traditional. A Colonial tone would blend with the surrounding buildings. It is a requisite that the building shall look like a church from the outside, as well as the interior. Landscaping should be tied into the total design. The amount of money available for this project will be approximately $100,000.00.

We will be very happy to receive suggestions which may be sent to the office of the Presiding Bishopric,

The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, incorporating the features herein enumerated. These suggestions should be in the form of sketches and detailed drawings, to give both idea and perspective and functional arrangement. We will welcome these especially from our church architects, who we are sure will have a deep interest in this project. These suggestions and ideas will be of material assistance in final decision as to plans and the selection of an architect. We would like to receive all such by September 1. Lot sketch showing topography can be obtained from the Presiding Bishopric on request.

From Samuel M. Zonker, pastor at Wellsburg, West Virginia:

We thought you would be interested in knowing Dad and I saw Louis, Betty, and Anita off on their voyage. We visited their cabin and found the room very commodious and comfortable.

Although we have encouraged Louis for years to give full and complete service to the church, we felt some degree of regret as we were leaving; but with this feeling came also a fuller understanding of the text, "He that is not willing to leave family, and follow me, is not worthy of me." And with the evidence of the recognition of the spirit of our real desires, we found joy and peace beyond expression as we sacrificially placed the kingdom first in our hearts.

As I write I feel the fires of passion for the work of the church; and with this comes the renewed desire to serve more diligently.

With such a spirit to minister to us in the absence of each other, the period of separation should seem short and pleasant as we strive to do His work.

From Elder Myron F. LaPointe, Wichita, Kansas:

The work is progressing in the church at Wichita. Our baptisms will reach a new high again this year. Brother Whiting is here now, and we expect to gain a few more with his able help. We are having fine experiences.

The new building is progressing, but slowly. As soon as the plasterer finishes it will shape up more quickly we hope. We are still within our budget and believe we will build for $60,000, the amount we first intended. It is and has been a lot of work, but soon our time will be more free to do the things our hearts desire. We look forward to the future with great expectancy.

Elder D. J. Williams, president of Nauvoo District, reports that baptisms for Children's Day totaled eight, making a total of seventeen for the year at Burlington Branch. This helps swell the total for the church-year, which is moving on toward one of the best in church history.

We are happy to report that the growth at Lubbock, Texas, is giving these people an opportunity to be very active in the work of carrying on missionary efforts in that place. The following is from a letter written by Wm. K. Schreier:

We held our first services in Lubbock about four years ago, meeting in homes, a Carpenters' Union hall, and a theatre building, until we were able to purchase a war surplus building and convert it into a church. We have it paid for and have a branch membership of about fifty. We have had twenty-one baptisms in the last three years, and feel that the Lord has blessed us. We are looking forward with a great deal of anticipation to the help of Brother and Sister Berridge.

We are glad to be in a position to furnish help in places like this, and trust that the work will continue to grow not only here but everywhere.

The Principles of the Gospel

As Found in the Book of Mormon

By C. George Mesley

Presented at the Book of Mormon Institute on January 11, 1951

Introduction

SOME PHRASES are so deeply impressed in our church experience that they carry their own distinctive connotations. When Latter Day Saints talk about the "principles of the gospel," they generally mean the six principles enumerated by Paul in Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

Our expanding understanding of the great breadth of the gospel of Jesus Christ leads us to the conviction that these six are no more fundamental than are such principles as sacrifice, forgiveness, and witnessing. The ordinance principles mentioned (baptism and laying on of hands) are no more saving than is the not-mentioned sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Appreciating these six, which I think Paul used illustratively rather than evaluatively, I believe we could have 606 and maybe 6006 principles that were part of the gospel plan of salvation. However, if we thought in terms of reduction, we could bring all these principles down to one—repentance—and flood with significance the Lord's instruction, "Preach nothing but repentance to this generation."

With our creed, "All Truth," and our belief in an open canon of Scripture through the continuity of Divine Revelation, it is imperative for us to keep an open mind in our exploration for truth. One text is not the whole word of God. One word cannot hold all the validity of scriptural-centered doctrine. "The Lord hath yet more light and truth to break forth from his word" is as true in the twentieth century as it was when it was uttered in the seventeenth century. There are still many gaps in the record of God's relationship to man and man's understanding God. The word of God in the Bible is supported and enlarged in the Book of Mormon. The Doctrine and Covenants bears witness of truth received, enlarges our understanding, and brings new truths to light in balanced relation to all other truth. In the recording of Scripture we find that certain disputations or prevalence of contrary beliefs have served to bring out certain scriptural emphases. To illustrate: The 1925 church government emphasis was heard so much we haven't cared to study it since. Because of the early saints' vital interest in the field, Romans is full of Paul's discussion on the Law; and as we read the Book of Mormon we find prevailing conditions provoking dissertations on certain subjects. All these evidence its natural divinity. No man with a case to prove, a church he wanted to establish, would have written that way. He would have filled out his case on all subjects.

The first named of the "six principles," faith, is ably presented in the dissertation of Alma (Alma 16: 140 ff.). He uses the analogy of a planted seed. Just as a good seed swells and grows when nurtured, so faith needs nurture.

And now as I said concerning faith: Faith, is not to have a perfect knowledge of things; therefore if ye have faith, ye hope for things which are not seen, which are true.—Alma 16: 143.

But behold, if ye will awake and arouse your faculties, even to an experiment upon my words, and exercise a particle of faith; yea, even if ye can no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you, even until ye believe in a manner that ye can give place for a portion of my words.—Alma 16: 151.

But if ye will nourish the word, yea, nourish the tree as it beginneth to grow, by your faith with great diligence, and with patience, looking forward to the fruit thereof, it shall take root; and behold, it shall be a tree springing up unto everlasting life.—Alma 16: 170.

Faith begins with a desire to believe; then develops into faith; and finally is transformed into knowledge. Faith is not a substitute for reason, not flogging the mind to believe something that isn't true. It's a gift of God, but obtaining it is related to one's willingness to receive and nurture it. The result of this combination is the growth of a strong, intelligent, ever-growing faith in God and his purposes.

REPENTANCE—AS THE BOOK OF MORMON PRESENTS THE DOCTRINE

Repentance is in the name of Christ:

And he commandeth all men that they must repent, and be baptized in his name, having perfect faith in the Holy One of Israel, or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God.—II Nephi 6: 48.

And the Father said, repent ye, repent ye, and be baptized in the name of my beloved Son.—II Nephi 13: 14.

And behold when that time cometh, none shall be found blameless before God, except it be little children, only through repentance and faith on the name of the Lord God Omnipotent.—Mosiah 1: 122.

And behold, he cometh to redeem those who will be baptized unto repentance, through faith on his name.—Alma 7: 41.

REPENTANCE IS AN EARLY IMPERATIVE

And again: Believe that ye must repent of your sins and forsake them, and humble yourself before God; and ask in sincerity of heart that he would forgive you.—Mosiah 2: 16.

And now as I said unto you before, as ye have had so many witnesses, therefore I beseech of you, that ye do not procrastinate the day of your repentance until the end.—Alma 16: 229.

Ye can not say, when ye are brought to that awful crisis, that I will repent, that I will return to my God.—Alma 16: 231.

Repentance has its results:

And were it not for the interposition of their all-wise Creator, and this because of their sincere repentance, they must unavoidably [have] remained in bondage until now.—Mosiah 13: 25.

For behold, thus saith the Lord, I will not shew unto the wicked of my strength, to one more than the other, save it be unto those who repent of their sins, and hearken unto my words.—Helaman 3: 25.

Yea, he said unto them, As the Lord liveth, except ye repent of all your iniquities and cry unto the Lord, that they could in no wise be delivered out of the hands of those Gadianon robbers.—III Nephi 2: 20.

And it came to pass they did repent, and inasmuch as they did repent, they did begin to prosper.—Helaman 2: 49.

And because the people did repent of their iniquities and idolatries, the Lord did spare them, and they began to prosper again in the land.—Ether 3: 64.

Therefore blessed are they who will repent and hearken unto the voice of the Lord their God; for these are they that shall be saved.—Helaman 4: 70.

But if ye will repent and return unto the Lord your God, I will turn away mine anger, saith the Lord; yea, thus saith the Lord, Blessed are they who will repent and turn unto me, but wo unto him that repenteth not.—Helaman 5: 14.

And it shall come to pass, that whoso repenteth and is baptized in my name, shall be filled; and if he endureth to the end, behold, him will I hold guiltless before my Father, at that day when I shall stand to judge the world.—III Nephi 12: 29.

Behold, I have come unto the world to bring redemption unto the world, to save the world from sin: therefore whoso repenteth and cometh unto me as a little child, him will I receive; for of such is the kingdom of God.—III Nephi 4: 51.

Behold, for such I have laid down my life, and have taken it up again, therefore repent, and come unto me ye ends of the earth, and be saved.—III Nephi 4: 52.

When we read II Nephi, chapter 13, we learn that repentance is a continued process that must be carried through until the end for salvation. Repentance is the gateway to the kingdom. Repentance in its highest form is a constant adjustment of our own lives with that of God. It is the constant use of the idea "press forward." Repentance is not a single experience but a continual growth, the responsibility on the individual in conjunction with God.

THE DOCTRINE OF BAPTISM

Baptism was a favorite theme of Book of Mormon writers or abridgers. It is a command of God:

And he commandeth all men that they must repent, and be baptized in his name, having perfect faith in the Holy One of Israel, or they can not be saved in the kingdom of God.—II Nephi 6: 48.

And it came to pass that after he had poured out his whole soul to God the voice of the Lord came to him saying, Blessed art thou, Alma, and blessed are they who were baptized in the waters of Mormon.—Mosiah 11: 121.

Christ was baptized:

And the Lamb of God went forth and was baptized of him; And after he was baptized, I beheld the heavens open, and the Holy Ghost come down out of heaven and abode upon him in the form of a dove.—I Nephi 3: 73, 74.

And now, if the Lamb of God, he being holy, should have need to be baptized by water to fulfill all righteousness, O then, how much more need have we, being unholy, to be baptized, yea, even by water.—II Nephi 13: 7.

And now, I would ask of you, my beloved brethren, wherein the Lamb of God did fulfill all righteousness in being baptized by water? Know ye not that he was holy?—II Nephi 13: 8.

It is a means of salvation:

And again I say unto you, Ye must repent, and be baptized in my name, and become as a little child, or ye can in nowise inherit the kingdom of God.—III Nephi 5: 40.

And he hath said, Repent all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, and have faith in me, that ye may be saved.—Moroni 7: 36.

Therefore come and be baptized unto repentance, that ye may be washed from your sins, that ye may have faith on the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world, who is mighty to save and to cleanse from all unrighteousness; Yea, I say unto you, come and fear not, and lay aside every sin; which easily doth beset you, which doth bind you down to destruction.—Alma 5: 25, 26.

And it came to pass that the Lord did say unto me, Cry unto this people, Repent ye, and come unto me and be ye baptized, and build up again my church, and ye shall be spared.—Mormon 1: 65.

Baptism involves a covenant relationship:

Yea, come and go forth, and shew unto your God that ye are willing to repent of your sins, and enter into a covenant with him to keep his commandments, and witness it unto him this day, by going into the waters of baptism.—Alma 5: 27.

Now I say unto you, If this be the desire of your hearts, what have you against being baptized in the name of the Lord, as a witness before him that ye have entered into a covenant with him that ye will serve him and keep his commandments, that he may pour out his Spirit more abundantly upon you?—Mosiah 9: 41.

Baptism is to be authoritative:

And now it came to pass that Alma took Helam, he being one of the first, and went and stood forth in the water, and cried, saying, O Lord, pour out thy Spirit upon thy servant, that he may do this work with holiness of heart.—Mosiah 9: 43.

And when he had said these words, the Spirit of the Lord was upon him, and he said, Helam, I baptize thee, having authority from the Almighty God, as a testimony that ye have entered into a covenant to serve him until you are dead.—Mosiah 9: 44.

Therefore there were ordained of Nephi, men unto this ministry, that all such as should come unto them, should be baptized with water, and this as a witness and a testimony before God, and unto the people, that they had repented and received a remission of their sins.—III Nephi 3: 69.

And the Lord said unto him, I give unto you power that ye shall baptize this people, when I am again ascended into heaven.—III Nephi 5: 21.

And again the Lord called others, and said unto them likewise; and he gave unto them power to baptize.—III Nephi 5: 22.

And now behold, these are the words which ye shall say, calling them by name, saying: Having authority given me of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.—III Nephi 5: 25.

Baptism is in the name of Christ:

And the Father said, Repent ye, repent ye, and be baptized in the name of my beloved Son.—II Nephi 13: 14.

And also, the voice of the Son came unto me, saying, He that is baptized in my name, to him will the Father give the Holy Ghost, like unto me; wherefore, follow me, and do the things which ye have seen me do.—II Nephi 13: 15.

Now I say unto you, If this be the desire of your hearts, what have you against being baptized in the name of the Lord, as a witness before him that ye have entered into a covenant with him that ye will serve him and keep his commandments, that he may pour out his Spirit more abundantly upon you?—Mosiah 9: 41.

Verily I say unto you, that whoso repenteth of his sins through your words, and desireth to be baptized in my name, on this wise shall ye baptize them: Behold, ye shall go down and stand in the water, and in my name shall ye baptize them.—III Nephi 5: 24.

These are the results of baptism:

And it came to pass that the disciples whom Jesus had chosen, began from that time forth to baptize and to teach as many as did come unto them. And as many as were baptized in the name of Jesus were filled with the Holy Ghost.—III Nephi 12: 10.

Now this is the commandment, Repent, all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, that ye may be sanctified by the reception of the Holy Ghost, that ye may stand spotless before me at the last day.—III Nephi 12: 33.

And the first-fruits of repentance is baptism; and baptism cometh by faith, unto the fulfilling the commandments; and the fulfilling the commandments bringeth remission of sins; and the remission of sins bringeth meekness, and lowliness of heart; and because of meekness and lowliness of heart, cometh the visitation of the Holy Ghost, which Comforter filleth with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer, until the end shall come, when all the Saints shall dwell with God.—Moroni 8: 29.

Among Christian peoples opinions on baptism range all the way from infant baptism to no baptism at all. In the New Testament there are some few clear statements and lots of inferential statements particularly about the manner of baptism. The Book of Mormon is clear-cut on necessity, purpose, manner of administration, authoritative nature, and results.

Infant baptism is a common practice believed necessary to remove taint of original sin, ideas about which grow out of men's concept that children are born in sin. The Bible records carry a brief reference to children. The childhood years are the lost years in the life of Jesus: "He grew in wisdom and stature." If Jesus were born today, every word he uttered, his childish prayers and acts would be recorded. The mothers of Salem bringing their children for a blessing, and Jesus setting the child in the midst of the disciples are the major New Testament references to children. The Book of Mormon peoples evidence a more enlightened outlook in relation to children and original sin.

For if I have learned the truth, there have been disputations among you concerning the baptism of your little children. And now my son, I desire that ye should labor diligently, that this gross error should be removed from among you; for, for this intent I have written this epistle. For immediately after I had learned these things of you, I inquired of the Lord concerning the matter. And the word of the Lord came to me by the power of the Holy Ghost, saying, Listen to the words of Christ, your Redeemer, your Lord, and your God. Behold, I came into the world not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; the whole need no physician, but they that are sick; wherefore little children are whole, for they are not capable of committing sin; wherefore the curse of Adam is taken from them in me, that it hath no power over them; and the law of circumcision is done away in me. And after this manner did the Holy Ghost manifest the word of God unto me; wherefore my beloved son, I know that it is solemn mockery before God, that ye should baptize little children. Behold I say unto you, that this thing shall ye teach, repentance and baptism unto those who are accountable and capable of committing sin; yea, teach parents that they must repent and be baptized, and humble themselves as their little children, and they shall all be saved with their children: and their little children need no repentance, neither baptism. Behold, baptism is unto repentance to the fulfilling the commandments unto the remission of sins. But little children are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world; if not so, God is a partial God, and also a changeable God, and a respecter of persons; for how many little children have died without baptism.—Moroni 8: 5-13.

Wherefore, if little children could not be saved without baptism, these must have gone to an endless hell. Behold I say unto you, that he that supposeth that little children need baptism is in the gall of bitterness, and in the bonds of iniquity; for he hath neither faith, hope, nor charity; wherefore, should he be cut off while in the thought, he must go down to hell. For awful is the wickedness to suppose that God saveth one child because of baptism, and the other must perish because he hath no baptism. Woe be unto him that shall pervert the ways of the Lord after this manner, for they shall perish, except they repent. Behold, I speak with boldness, having authority from God; and I fear not what man can do; for perfect love casteth out all fear; and I am filled with charity, which is everlasting love; wherefore all children are alike unto me; wherefore I love little children with a perfect love; and they are all alike and partakers of salvation. For I know that God is not a partial God, neither a changeable being; but he is unchangeable from all eternity to all eternity. Little children can not repent, wherefore it is awful wickedness to deny the pure mercies of God unto them, for they are all alive in him because of his mercy. And he that saith that little children need baptism, denieth the mercies of Christ, and setteth at naught the atonement of him and the power of his redemption. Wo unto such, for they are in danger of death, hell, and endless torment. I speak it boldly, God hath commanded me. Listen unto them and give heed, or they stand against you at the judgment seat of Christ. For behold that all little children are alive in Christ, and also all that are without the law. For the power of redemption cometh on all they that have no law; wherefore, he that is not condemned, or he that is under no condemnation can not repent; and unto such baptism avail-eth nothing.—Moroni 8: 14-26.

And even if it were possible that little children could sin, they could not be saved; but I say unto you, they are blessed; For behold as in Adam, or by nature they fall, even so the blood of Christ atoneth for their sins.—Mosiah 1: 114-115.

For behold, he judgeth, and his judgment is just, and the infant perisheth not, that dieth in his infancy.—Mosiah 1: 117; 8: 60.

LAYING ON OF HANDS

For the bestowal of the seal of the Holy Spirit:

The words of Christ, which he spake unto his disciples, the twelve whom he had chosen, as he laid his hands upon them. And he called them by name, saying, Ye shall call on the Father in my name, in mighty prayer; and after ye have done this, ye shall have power that on him whom ye shall lay your hands, ye shall give the Holy Ghost; and in my name shall ye give it, for thus do mine apostles. Now Christ spake these words unto them at the time of his first appearing; and the multitude heard it not, but the disciples heard it, and on as many as they laid their hands, fell the Holy Ghost.—Moroni 2: 1-3.

And it came to pass that when Jesus had made an end of these sayings, he touched with his hand the disciples whom he had chosen, one by one, even until he had touched them all, and spake unto them as he touched them; And the multitude heard not the words which he spake, therefore they did not bear record; but the disciples bear record that he gave them power to give the Holy Ghost.—III Nephi 8: 70, 71.

For behold, again I say unto you, that if ye will enter in by the way and receive the Holy Ghost, it will shew unto you all things what ye should do.—II Nephi 14: 6.

As the operative power in teaching:

And the word of the Lord came to me by the power of the Holy Ghost, saying, Listen to the words of Christ, your Redeemer, your Lord, and your God.—Moroni 8: 8.

As the procedure of ordination:

And it came to pass that when Jesus had made an end of these sayings, he touched with his hand the disciples whom he had chosen, one by one, even until he had touched them all, and spake unto them as he touched them.—III Nephi 8: 70.

The words of Christ which he spake unto his disciples, the twelve whom he had chosen, as he laid his hands upon them.—Moroni 2: 1.

And now it came to pass that after Alma had made an end of speaking unto the people of the church, which was established in the city of Zarahemla, he ordained priests and elders, by laying on his hands according to the order of God, to preside and watch over the church.—Alma 4: 1.

After they had prayed unto the Father in the name of Christ, they laid their hands upon them, and said, In the name of Jesus Christ I ordain you to be a teacher, to preach repentance and remission of sins through Jesus Christ, by the endurance of faith on his name to the end. Amen.—Moroni 3: 2.

For healing the sick and for special blessings:

And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Mormon 4: 87.

Now it came to pass, that when Alma had said these words, that he clapped his hands upon all them who were with him. And behold, as he clapped his hands upon them, they were filled with the Holy Spirit.—Alma 16: 116, 117.

These men were ordained but needed a special blessing for work to be done. References to laying on of hands are not found frequently in the Book of Mormon. This may be due to the fact that much of the abridged work of the book is dated in the Old Testament period.

RESURRECTION

The spirit and the body shall be reunited again, in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame, even as we now are at this time; And we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt.—Alma 8: 100, 101.

Wherefore I know that ye know that our flesh must waste away and die; Nevertheless, in our bodies we shall see God.—II Nephi 6: 6, 7.

For as death hath passed upon all men, to fulfill the merciful plan of the great Creator, there must needs be a power of resurrection.—II Nephi 6: 11.

Wherefore, death and hell must deliver up their dead, and hell must deliver up its captive spirits, And the grave must deliver up its captive bodies, and the bodies and the spirits of men will be restored, one to the other; And it is by the power of the resurrection of the Holy One of Israel. O how great the plan of our God! For on the other hand, the paradise of God must deliver up the spirits of the righteous, and the grave deliver up the body of the righteous; And the spirit and the body is restored to itself again, and all men become incorruptible, and immortal, and they are living souls, having a perfect knowledge like unto us, in the flesh.—II Nephi 6: 28-32.

But behold, the bands of death shall be broken, and the Son reigneth, and hath power over the dead; therefore, he bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead. And there cometh a resurrection, even a first resurrection; yea, even a resurrection of those that have been, and who are, and who shall be, even until the resurrection of Christ: for so shall he be called.—Mosiah 8: 54, 55. (Read also verses 56-60.)

And if Christ had not risen from the dead, or have broken the bands of death, that the grave should have no victory, and that death should have no sting, there could have been no resurrection. But there is a resurrection, therefore the grave hath no victory, and the sting of death is swallowed up in Christ.—Mosiah 8: 80, 81.

Mosiah 8: 51-91 gives an excellent discussion of the resurrection as related to God's plan for the salvation of all mankind. See also III Nephi 13: 19 and Alma 16: 232.

Alma's counsel to his son in Alma 19: 28-61 presents a clear teaching on the intermediate state between death and resurrection. The soul-sleeping theory and many other theories of world religions do not hold in light of this inspired instruction of Alma. In the Book of Mormon we find striking clarity and no hesitation or doubts about im-

A Spiritual Barometer

Baptismal Report for the First Half of 1951
as Compared to the Same Period in 1950

By Merle P. Guthrie

WE ARE HAPPY to be able to report that there have been more baptisms for the first six months of this year than for the same period last year. We rejoice in this for two reasons. It means first that more souls have made their covenant with Christ, and second, that more members have borne an adequate testimony of the saving grace of Christ, thus leading these people into a new life of service and salvation.

This second reason is a most important one, for baptism itself is not a guarantee of salvation. It only opens the gateway to spiritual service, and spiritual service brings spiritual growth, which is salvation. ("This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."—John 17: 3.)

Conversely, those who are not concerned enough about the souls of others to render the spiritual service of testimony by precept and example are not themselves growing spiritually. Hence the process of salvation of the human soul is a process of spiritual growth which comes only through the rendering of spiritual service—testimony by quality of life as well as word of mouth, and baptisms result from such spiritual service or testimony. Thus the baptismal rate is an indication of the spiritual vitality of the church.

WITH THESE THOUGHTS IN MIND let us examine the baptismal figures for the first half of 1951 as compared with 1950.

Several things are noticeable about these figures. First is the fact that the 311 baptisms for January 1951 is the highest number reported in January since the inauguration of the present system of record-keeping in 1920, and certainly higher than 1950. The number of baptisms for June is also the highest on record. While every month has not been higher than the corresponding month of 1950, yet the total has remained ahead so that for the six-months period we have 215 more who have made their covenant with Christ than for the same period in 1950. We believe this increase indicates an increase in the spirit of testimony among us. For this we can be thankful, but we must not be satisfied with it and "rest on our laurels." It should be an incentive to even greater efforts.

We can be encouraged by these results, realizing that there is no limit to that which we can achieve as we fully dedicate ourselves to the service of Christ. The question for each of us to ask ourselves is, "What have I contributed by way of the service of testimony?"

REGARDLESS of where you are, even though you may be living a great distance from a church, you can, through study and prayer, receive the power of the Holy Spirit which will enable you to render a real service for Christ. And perhaps included in the list of those who have found Christ and have been baptized into his church in the next six months of this year will be someone who has profited spiritually by your service of testimony.

Consider the case of one brother who was baptized when quite young. Living most of his life about twenty-five miles from one of our branches, he considered himself "isolated." He attended other churches occasionally, but found no particular interest in religion. Then a missionary called at his home, stayed a few days, and held some meetings there. The Holy Spirit was present in such power that this "isolated" brother was impelled to study and pray and the Spirit bore witness of the divinity of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as well as to his call to God's holy priesthood. This witness was confirmed to him when his call to priesthood was presented by the district president exactly as it had been revealed to him it would be.

Today, less than a year later, a church school is being held in his home, and he is finding a joy in service that he had never before known. Is he still isolated? He recently found it not at all difficult to make a round trip of eighty miles each night to attend a series of missionary services, that his own efficiency in service might be increased. I am quite sure that out of the efforts of this brother and his family will come, in due time, baptisms to the kingdom of Christ. And thus to these people will come an increasing joy in service as they share the good news of Christ and his church with others.

Have you found this joy?

Men have discovered that it is far more convenient to adulterate the truth than to refine themselves.

Scrolls From a Dead Sea Cave

By John C. Trever

THE EDITORS have had several inquiries from interested persons in the United States and abroad concerning "the Dead Sea Scrolls" which came to light some three years ago. Because of the many misconceptions which writers have evidenced, the Herald editors thought it well to publish an article by John C. Trever as it appeared in The Christian Century of July 12, 1950. This article is copyrighted by the Christian Century Foundation and is reprinted here by permission of the editor of The Christian Century. The concluding paragraph of Dr. Paul Hutchinson's letter is as follows:

"In this connection, perhaps I should add that a number of important biblical scholars, both Christian and Jewish, take exception to Dr. Trever's conclusions. It is likely that at some time in the future The Christian Century will publish an article giving this other side."

A STRAYING GOAT which climbed up on the cliffs overlooking the Dead Sea in the spring of 1947 led to a discovery which has amazed the scholarly world and has excited Bible lovers everywhere. A Bedouin goatherd pursued the animal up the cliff, which is about seven and one-half miles south of Jericho near the shore of the Dead Sea. His curiosity was aroused when he noticed a hole in a projection of a rock. According to the story, he threw a stone through the hole, and heard a resounding crash, as if an earthen jar were breaking. Consulting his friends, he began an investigation which led to the discovery of several ancient leather scrolls, now known as the Dead Sea Scrolls. This, by the way, is the name now officially adopted for the scrolls, previously called, for various reasons, the Jerusalem Scrolls, the 'Ain Feshkha Scrolls, the Genizah Scrolls, and so on.

A MOSLEM SHEIK in Bethlehem, where the Bedouins did their trading each Saturday, informed the finders that the scrolls were written in Syriac. Whereupon the Bedouins, who belonged to the Ta'amireh tribe which inhabits the region to the east of Bethlehem, went to their Syrian merchant friend, Khalil Khando, to turn the scrolls into cash. Apparently Mr. Khando told George Isaiah, a Syrian Jerusalem merchant and friend, about them, and Mr. Isaiah in turn told the Syrian archbishop, Mar. Athanasius Yeshue Samuel of St. Mark's Orthodox Convent, who in July of 1947 succeeded in buying five scrolls (four different documents, however) and a few fragments from the Bedouins. They had originally offered him several more scrolls, but because of an unfortunate mistake at the convent, one of the Bedouins left the group and apparently peddled his share through other channels in Bethlehem; for six scrolls were later offered to E. L. Sukenik, professor of archaeology at the Hebrew University on Mount Scopus.

When the Syrians discovered that the scrolls were written in Hebrew and not Syriac, they were at a loss to interpret them, and sought the advice of others. From the evidence that has been accumulated, it is known that they consulted at least eight persons interested in archaeology and the Bible. Some of these identified the documents, but all of them, for various reasons, passed by the opportunity to study them. Finally the scrolls were taken to the American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem at the invitation of this writer, who was then acting director pro tem in the absence of Dr. Millar Burrows, who was on a two weeks' trip to Iraq.

THE MOMENT I saw the scrolls, on February 19, 1948, a series of events began which has grown to proportions far beyond my wildest dreams. At the time I was told that the scrolls had been in the Syrian library for forty years, but gradually the whole story of the discovery is being unraveled as new details are pieced together. Unfortunately, the country at that time was virtually in a state of war; hence many facts which otherwise would have come to light much earlier were obscured by difficulties of negotiation and communication that lasted over many months. It was not until February, 1949, that reputable excavators were able to visit the cave in which the scrolls had been found, only to discover that the cave had meanwhile been rifled and valuable evidence hopelessly destroyed by unauthorized treasure-seekers. In fact, the total number of manuscripts originally found by the Bedouins is still a mystery; but it is hoped that other documents may show up in due time.

The main details of the story and the manuscripts known to exist can, however, be told. Witnesses to at least twenty documents, both biblical and nonbiblical, have been found among the scrolls and fragments that are known to have come from the cave near the Dead Sea. It is quite probable that this number will increase as more of the 200 fragments found by the excavators are identified and classified. According to those who are studying them, the documents may be divided into three groups.

THE MOST IMPRESSIVE of the manuscripts are those in the possession of Archbishop Samuel, who arrived in the United States with his documents in February, 1949. Of these, the Isaiah scroll (DSIa)—24 feet of sheepskin 10½ inches wide, consisting of seventeen sheets sewn together to accommodate the 54 columns of the entire Hebrew text of Isaiah—is the most beautifully preserved and probably the oldest. The evidence points to the second century B.C. as the time when it was copied. Another scroll, the Manual of Discipline (DSD), is about six feet long, made up of five sheets 9½ inches wide of coarse, cream-colored leather sewn together, and consisting of eleven columns of Hebrew. This non-biblical document is extremely valuable for the insights it gives into the nature of the sect which originally owned this library of scrolls and apparently abandoned them during a period of persecution after placing them in the cave which has now been discovered. It was probably copied in the first century B.C. A third scroll, the Habakkuk Commentary (DSH), is about five feet long, consisting of thirteen columns of Hebrew text on two sheets of dark brown leather. The entire lower part of the scroll has disintegrated, but apparently the original columns contained about seventeen lines each. In this document, the writer interprets the first two chapters of Habakkuk in the light of his own day—apparently the period of the Maccabees, when the Greeks were the oppressors. It was probably written a little later than the Manual of Discipline.

In addition to these four documents, a number of fragments of other documents are in the possession of the Syrian archbishop. Among these are four fragments of Daniel, which, to judge from the style of the writing and the nature of the leather, are from two different scrolls; and a group of eight fragments which, in the late summer of 1949, I assembled into a section out of the center of two columns from a beautifully written nonbiblical scroll of poetic nature. When I first saw these fragments, they were crushed against the Daniel fragment in a solid mass of nine layers of leather. Among the remaining three fragments, whose contents cannot be identified, there is one on papyrus. The American School of Oriental Research, whose president is Dr. Carl Kraeling, is proceeding with the publication of the scrolls from St. Mark's Monastery under the editorship of Dr. Millar Burrows. Volume I, which contains photographs of all of DSIa and DSH, has just appeared.

THE SECOND GROUP of documents is in the possession of Dr. E. L. Sukenik of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. Among some six scrolls and fragments which he originally purchased from a merchant in Bethlehem he has now identified three different documents. Four of the scrolls belong together and make up what he is calling "Hymns of Thanksgiving" (DST). The second document describes a war which he calls "The Battle Between the Sons of Light and the Sons of Darkness" (DSW). The third is of peculiar interest in view of the fact that it is a portion, though fragmentary, of another scroll of Isaiah, giving sections from chapters 40-66 (DSIb). From a transcription of some of the letters sent to me by Dr. Sukenik, it is clear that his document was written about one hundred years later than the complete Isaiah scroll (DSIa) which is in the hands of the Syrian archbishop.

In February 1949, the cave was rediscovered by Captain Akash Bey of the Jordan Arab Legion when he noticed the pile of debris thrown out by the treasure-seekers who damaged the cave in November 1948. A guard was immediately posted at the cave, and G. Lankester Harding, director of antiquities of Jordan, assisted by Father Rene' de Vaux of the École Biblique in Jerusalem, carried on careful excavation for two weeks, retrieving everything that was ancient from the debris. About two hundred fragments of manuscripts were recovered, together with parts of at least forty-nine jars and fifty-odd covers especially prepared for the jars, plus some Greek and Roman lamps. Except for two Roman objects, which apparently were placed in the cave much later than the time when it was abandoned by those who stored their library in the jars, all the pottery is of a similar type, known to have been made during the Hellenistic period, or prior to the rise of Herod the Great near the middle of the first century B.C. in Palestine. A few of the jars and many of the bowls which were used to cover them have been reassembled at the Jerusalem department of antiquities by the archaeological specialists, Father de Vaux, Mr. Mubarak Saad, and an assistant, Mr. Hassan Mam-luk.

THE FOURTH SCROLL (DSL) in the possession of the Syrian archbishop is at present being treated at the Fogg Museum of Harvard University to make it legible. I succeeded in removing a large fragment from the tightly rolled scroll in April, 1949, and from the twenty-six fragmentary lines thus made accessible identified it as an apocryphal book of Lamech, which was previously known only by a casual reference in medieval literature. Just what the rest of the document will reveal, of course, remains to be seen after the experts succeed in unrolling it. The column which I have studied reveals the fact that Lamech, the father of Noah, is concerned about a child (no doubt Noah) who has been born to his wife, Bitenosh (see Enoch 106, 107 and Jubilees 4: 28). Not satisfied with her repeated assurances that the child is indeed his own and not the child of some heavenly being, Lamech goes to his father, Methuselah, who apparently is asked to go to his father, Enoch, to inquire about this child. The parallels to chapters 106, 107 of the book of Enoch are obvious. The contents, though legendary and of course of no value from the point of view of history, are nevertheless interesting. The real value of the document, however, probably is in the fact that it is written in Aramaic, the language which Jesus spoke. This is the first time that a religious document in Aramaic coming from a period close to the time of Jesus has been found. Thus a further study of its contents is awaited with keen anticipation by all scholars.

AMONG THE MANY FRAGMENTS of scrolls found by the excavators, five from the book of Leviticus are by far the most interesting. They are written in a hand characteristic of the period of the Old Testament prophets, and Father de Vaux suggests that they must have been written not later than the fourth or third century B.C., though there is some difference of opinion on this point. There are also fragments from Genesis, Deuteronomy, Judges, and the apocryphal book of Jubilees, and a great many too fragmentary to be identified or from writings not hitherto known.

It is significant that the evidence of the pottery found in the cave supports the evidence from the form of the writing, both pointing to the second or first century B.C. for the writing of the documents. Naturally there has been considerable debate concerning the date of the documents, but scholars seem to be moving toward agreement as new evidence appears to support the early dates.

THE PUBLIC INTEREST aroused by this discovery is significant. Through it the average person is made aware of the importance of historical background in the understanding of our Bible and learns something of the ways in which it was preserved. Thus, regardless of the values that scholars may derive from the contents of the scrolls, the education of the public through this find is extremely valuable. Especially is this true as we approach the year 1952, when the completed Revised Standard Version of the Bible, the new authorized version for Protestant Christianity, will appear. Newly made aware of the long history that lies back of our Bible, the average man will the more readily see why it is important to apply the knowledge gained from discoveries like the Dead Sea Scrolls to translation and revision, and thus to keep the message alive for our age.

The Old Testament section of the Standard Bible Committee, which is now nearing the completion of its work after twelve years of intensive labor, has applied the knowledge gleaned from discoveries and research to an up-to-date revision of the American Standard and King James versions. When the Dead Sea Scrolls happily were found, the committee had not yet turned its attention to the book of Isaiah; so, with the help of Dr. Burrows, one of their members, they were able to apply the knowledge gained from this latest discovery, which is now the oldest Bible manuscript in existence in any language. Significantly, they adopted only about fourteen minor readings from the Dead Sea Isaiah scroll, where the evidence from the scroll made those readings obviously superior to the standard text, the Masoretic. Thus the Dead Sea Isaiah scroll is primarily a witness to the substantial accuracy of the Masoretic text as it has been known since the tenth century A.D. None of its variations give any startling difference, and all those that one might feel are superior readings involve but minor changes. Many questions regarding the original text of the book of Isaiah are still unanswered, most of them having arisen

Selections from the Memoirs of William Wallace Blair of the First Presidency

Part Five: Experiences and Testimonies

Kirtland Temple—1860

At our conference [district conference, June 3 and 4] it was told Elder James Blakeslee and myself that in our mission to the East we would be greatly blessed of God in our labors. . . .

In Pittsburgh and Alleghany cities I formed the acquaintance of Brethren and Sisters Josiah Ells, Richard Savory, James McDowell, Joseph Parsons, Matthew Smith, and a few others, all of whom received me kindly, many of them receiving with gladness the tidings I bore.

After planning the work in these two cities I proceeded on to Kirtland, Ohio, where I joined Brother James Blakeslee, who had reached there a few days before and had been visiting the people and preaching the word, arousing no little interest. Here I met Brethren James Twist and family, Martin Harris, Leonard Rich, and others, all professing deep interest in the latter-day work. The town had a sorry look, and the condition of the Temple was pitiful. Its walls inside and out, also its trimmings and decorations, were badly defaced. It appeared that Z. Brooks, Russel Huntley, and others had effected a small organization and proposed to refit and refurnish the Temple. These parties offered us some opposition, and we found it best to preach a series of sermons in the Academy Hall instead of in the Temple. . . .

Early Life of Joseph the Seer

Leaving Kirtland on the twentieth day of August we went via Detroit to Brother G. A. Blakeslee's home, Galien, Michigan, reaching there on the twenty-fourth. Here we held a series of meetings and baptized a number, one of whom was Ezra Thayre, whose name is mentioned in the early revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants. He had been wandering for many years without church associations, but upon attending our meetings he at once recognized the voice of the Good Shepherd and readily united with the church. From him we learned much in regard to Joseph the Seer, his early life and his father's family. Brother Thayre had been a bridge, dam, and mill builder in that section of country where Joseph and his father's family had resided in his boyhood, and Father Smith and his sons, including Joseph, had been in Brother Thayre's employ. He told me that, though in humble circumstances in life, the Smith family was an upright and worthy one.

He further said that when Joseph, after translating the Book of Mormon, returned into his region of country with Father Smith, Hyrum Smith, and Oliver Cowdery, he (Brother Thayre) was persuaded by his brother residing in Auburn, New York, to go and hear them set forth their religious views in a meeting near his residence on a Sunday. He said that on reaching the double log house where the meeting was held, he pressed his way through the congregation and took his seat immediately in front of these new preachers, listened to broken remarks by the three others, and then Joseph, taking the Book of Mormon in his hand, proceeded, in his unlearned manner, to tell the history of its coming forth, explaining how he received the golden plates at the hands of the angel, and how he translated the book by the gift of God, with other marvelous matters connected with its coming forth. He said that immediately upon Joseph's beginning these statements, a new and heavenly power fell upon him, filling his entire being with unspeakable assurance of the truth of the statements, melting him to tears. When Joseph concluded his recital, he said he eagerly stretched forth his hand and said, "Let me have that book." It was handed to him, and he kept it, esteeming it a heavenly treasure indeed. He said that afterward he aided them at different times, when he could, in spreading the knowledge of the work to others, but that his family became prejudiced, and they opposed him bitterly. . . .

Testimony of Lyman Wight

In the latter part of January [1861] I met for the first time some of the people who had been with Elder Lyman Wight in Texas, and from them I learned that he always taught them "Young Joseph" would be called of God to lead the church, also that about 1858 he said to them that the time was near for the coming of Joseph, that a great work in that connection would be done in Western Iowa, and that it was time to leave Texas for that region. These brethren and sisters were zealous, humble, and worthy; and at an early time many of them and their children united with the Reorganization.

Charles Derry—1861

March 1 found us at Brother Jairus M. Putney's, ten miles east of Council Bluffs, where we held meetings, and where for the first time we met Brother Charles Derry. My diary note made then reads as follows: "At this place found Charles Derry, formerly a Brighamite, but who until of late had abandoned all religions. He seems to be a good man and claims to be seeking after truth." From him we learned that the errors and evils of Brighamism, as he found them in Utah, saddened and disappointed him to such a degree that he lost faith in all forms of religion and continued in that condition until he received some of the publications of the Reorganized Church, when it pleased God to give him the Spirit in power, testifying to the truth of the work being done by the church. He thereupon left his home near Columbus, on foot, and came to Iowa to find Brother Briggs and myself, since he had heard that we were at or near Council Bluffs. Brother Briggs baptized three at this place. Having an appointment for Farm Creek on the second, we proceeded there, accompanied by our inquiring friend, whom we persuaded to join us.

On Sunday, the third, we held preaching services, and I baptized Brother Charles Derry. In the evening prayer meeting at Brother Calvin Beebe's, Brethren Briggs, Beebe, and I ordained him to the office of elder.

A Vision of Eternal Life—1861

On the ninth day of April, I started out on a mission to De Kalb, Kendall, and La Salle Counties, Illinois, preaching the word as we could find or make opportunities. On the afternoon of the fifteenth, by request, I reached the bedside of Charles Lewis in Mission, La Salle County, who was dying with quick consumption. I prayed with him and administered to him, hoping the Lord would raise him up to health, but in this was disappointed. A few nights before, in a night vision, I was called to rescue a drowning man and in an instant I was standing on the brink of a broad, dark, deep-flowing river, in which, and near me, I saw a flaxen-haired man floating by helpless, just underneath the surface. I hastily reached and touched his head, and immediately I looked across the river and saw the same person, clothed in a white robe, walking up its beautiful green bank toward a gentle eminence on which was a company of people dressed in white robes, singing, and playing upon instruments of music, welcoming his coming. The scene was most enchanting. Not long after this I preached his funeral sermon, and from his friends learned he had been baptized when near ten years of age into the church. He, in "the cloudy and dark day," had grown neglectful of his covenant duties, but in his hour of need his heart turned to the Lord and he honored his ordinances, for he sent for the elders of the church as commanded in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12, and James 5: 14, and he received the promise of the Lord, ". . . and if they die, they shall die unto me."

My misunderstanding of this instructive manifestation, as with some others, caused me to appreciate the wise instruction of Joseph the Seer when he said, "When you see a vision, pray for the interpretation; if you get not this, shut it up; for there must be certainty in this matter."—Millennial Star, Volume 17, page 312.

What Price Christianity?

By Gladys L. Hegwood

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY? Why must men who seek to attain it pay a price?

Christianity is the religion taught by Christ and his apostles, and a Christian is one whose life and character conform to His teachings. If religion exacted no price, man would not value it. They appreciate most the things that cost the greatest effort, sacrifice of time or money, and sometimes even their lives.

One's spiritual life is of more importance than his physical life. Sincere Christian living brings with it God's favor and blessing, and most precious of all gifts—eternal life. Yet everyone must be proficient in his chosen field of endeavor in order to make a living and lead a well-balanced, happy, useful life.

There are two kinds of Christians—those who are alert and constantly studying the doctrines and laws of the church, preparing themselves for more efficient service, and those who profess to be Christians but make no effort after baptism to prepare themselves for membership. Soon the halfhearted Christian drops by the wayside and is lost, but the earnest Christian is blessed of God and rejoices with the many other earnest souls who have been brought to a knowledge of the gospel.

Christ, during his life, was without honor among his own countrymen. He was poor, unpopular, and had no home. Only the humble received his message, and often they failed to understand his teachings. Finally, he paid with his life for the message of salvation he had offered to his fellow men. However, he did establish the gospel plan, set the pattern for God's church, and leave instructions as to the officers necessary in that organization. He chose disciples and apostles to continue his work after his death. Then came his prophets—ordinary men who met and solved problems like those existing today—who are remembered for all time because of the work they did in Israel. Bible history contains many stories of the struggle of Christianity through the ages, and of the many courageous men and women who sealed their testimony with their blood.

Are you an active member, or do you just belong? The price of true Christianity is untiring service to God.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

What position should we take in regard to the anointing of other parts of the body than the head in administering to the sick?

Missouri

J.D.A.

Answer:

Some confusion has been caused in this matter because of a statement in the Church Member's Manual which says: "It is customary to anoint the head, although there are occasions when the afflicted part is also anointed." It is the opinion of the First Presidency that these occasions are few and far between. The new Priesthood Manual therefore says: "Sometimes requests are made to anoint afflicted parts of the body. This is not administering and must not be done. The elders should anoint the head only, . . ."

Question:

What change results in a person when the Holy Ghost is actually received as an impelling gift from God?

Missouri

F.E.

Answer:

The changes are many but all in the same direction—Godward. There is a change from a state of sin to a state of righteousness through forgiveness, which Nephi says comes "by fire and the Holy Ghost" (Nephi 13: 24). Alma says that by the manifestation of the Spirit to him he was "born of the Spirit." It was birth into a new life different from the old; and he was changed from a carnal, fallen state to a state of righteousness, becoming a new creature (Mosiah 11: 186). There is a quickening to a new life which before was unknown; it is being "born again into the kingdom of heaven" (Genesis 6: 64, Inspired Version).

Jesus spoke of that Spirit guiding those who possess it into all truth; it is a teacher. It bears record of the Father and the Son, revealing them to men; it also reveals the righteousness of God so definitely that their appreciation of righteousness is raised to a point where they cannot look upon sin except with abhorrence. These changes wrought by the Holy Spirit are possible only with the co-ordinate efforts of the person re-

Question:

Is not Christ the only High Priest we have?

Missouri

E.E.J.

Answer:

If we take the whole teaching regarding priesthood as found in the Scriptures given to the church both in ancient and modern times we discover that priesthood was designed of the Lord before the world was made, and that it was established as an order to be perpetuated on earth as long as man should need its ministrations. The highest degree of this priesthood was that of high priest. "This greater priesthood administereth the gospel," and without such priesthood the power and authority of the gospel cannot be had.

All priesthood centers and originates in Christ, the great High Priest, standing at the head of the church, as the only one having in his own person overcome the world and entered into the presence of God to intercede for man. But from the beginning of the world high priests have been provided among men whose priesthood is delegated by Christ. They have been called, endowed, and empowered by him, and in no other way can a man receive this gift.

The Bible describes this priesthood as "an order," or a line of priests, and revelation states that this priesthood came down from Adam to Moses through the line of patriarchs who were all high priests (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2). When the Israelites violated their covenant and turned to idolatry under Moses, the fullness of the high priesthood was taken from them, and high priests of that order ceased. However a secondary order, called the priesthood of Aaron, was left; the high priests of the Old Testament in Israel were of that order. It was at the coming of Christ that the high priesthood was restored in him, and again he delegated others with this authority and sent them into the world to represent him. Latter-day revelation informs us that apostles, bishops, patriarchs or evangelists, and others hold this high priesthood (Doctrine and Covenants 129: 7).

High Priests were among the Nephites in America from Alma down to Christ. Alma wrote:

The Lord God ordained priests after his holy order, which was after the order of his Son. . . . This high priesthood being after the order of his Son, which order was from the foundation of the world, or in other words, being without beginning of days or end of years, being prepared from all eternity to all eternity.—Alma 9: 63, 70, 71.

The book of Hebrews does not teach that Christ was the only high priest, though because his priesthood is eternally inherent in him he is presented as the only one outstanding above all others, and the only one capable of entering into the Divine Presence. Such passages as the following show that the author entertained no such thought as Christ's being the only high priest:

For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins.

No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron.

All those who are ordained unto this priesthood are made like unto the Son of God, abiding a priest continually.

The priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law [the law of Moses being done away and the higher law of the gospel superseding it].

As the law of Moses required the Aaronic priesthood to administer it, so the higher law of the gospel required the higher priesthood to administer it; as quoted before, "This greater priesthood administereth the gospel."

The position of the church on this point of high priests is consistent and necessary, and the teaching of the Three Books of Scripture is harmonious. Whenever and wherever the gospel is to be ministered, only by the high priesthood can such ministration be had. This requires high priests.

The Bible Versus Tobacco*

By E. W. Etheridge

DO YOU KNOW that Americans will spend $8,000,000 for cigarettes every day of the coming year and that there are sixty times more people smoking today than there were in 1900? These figures are amazing, to say the least. Just about everybody is smoking today—men and women, young and old, from presidents to paupers, doctors and chemists (who should know better), laymen and preachers. Strength and health are going up in a cloud of tobacco smoke—smoke that daily fills the bodies of over 100,000,000 Americans with nineteen different poisons, and few are doing anything about it!

Upon occasions I have asked professed Christians—laymen and ministers—who use tobacco how they can justify themselves in using it. Their answer: "The Bible doesn't condemn it." My surprise is not at their excuse but at their ignorance.

The burden of this article is to prove that the Bible does in many places condemn tobacco. Let me quickly say I am aware that the words "tobacco" and "cigarette" never occur in the Bible. But that proves nothing for the weed! The Bible, we must remember, speaks in more ways than a frank statement. In fact, it has four ways of conveying its message to us: by statement, by implication, by precept, by example.

Just because the Bible does not name the sin of tobacco-using is no reason for saying it does not teach against it. The Bible does not speak against opium-smoking, but does that make it proper to smoke opium? And how about arson? These sins find no name in the Scriptures either, but does that make them right? No! And so it is with tobacco.

PRAYERFULLY EXAMINE the following scriptures:

1. "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit."—II Corinthians 7: 1. Tobacco gives a bad odor to the mouth and hands. It is unpleasant to smell. Snuff-dipping and tobacco-chewing are especially filthy. Anyone who would deny that this habit is filthy has no sense of sight, smell, or taste—or is just trying to fool himself. Further, tobacco ruins the luster of the teeth, fingernails, and eyes.

2. "All things are lawful for me . . . but I will not be enslaved by anything."—I Corinthians 6: 12, R.V. The use of tobacco is habit-forming. This no one denies. Paul says it is unbecoming for a servant of Christ to be a slave to anything harmful, a slave to anything but Christ.

3. "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."—I Corinthians 3: 17. There is no doubt that tobacco-using defiles the temple of God and disgraces Christ. Devotees of the tobacco weed are fatigued easily. Their circulation is poor. Tobacco has caused an increase in heart disease of 187 per cent in the past fifty years and has also caused disease of the arteries to soar to an increase of 663 per cent. In a recent survey it was found that over 90 per cent of all lung and mouth cancers occur in people who are heavy smokers. Until 1940, 60 per cent of all children born to cigarette-smoking mothers died before two years of age.

"But my doctor told me to use it," exclaims someone. I am sure this is true. Some people try to quit smoking in their own power and fail and develop an emotional conflict. Medical men recommend a return to the weed rather than the development of a neurotic condition. These cases are very rare. More frequently doctors tell people to stop smoking rather than to start smoking.

4. "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."—I Corinthians 10: 31. "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."—Colossians 3: 17. Tobacco is never associated with the high and noble things of life. Christ is our example. Can you picture him, my friend, smoking cigarettes? Then do as Christ would do.

5. "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread?"—Isaiah 55: 2. Half the people in the world are lacking the essentials of life, and Americans spend enough money on tobacco in one day to buy 80,000,000 loaves of bread or 550,000 pairs of shoes for the needy. And, then, the average church member gives one-half cent a day for foreign missions and can't afford to tithe! Money spent for tobacco is money wastefully and wrongly spent.

6. "When ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend."—I Corinthians 8: 12, 13. Paul says here, "I will do nothing, even though I see no wrong in it, that would offend my brother in Christ." Even if one could conscientiously see no wrong in smoking, still, according to this verse, the Christian who smokes must cease doing so. The majority of Christians frown on smoking, as I do, and have little or no confidence in a person who uses tobacco. If for no other reason, professing smoker, you must give up the weed for the sake of such people. May God help you to see your way to a testimony for Christ that is without spot or wrinkle or any such thing.

BRITISH COLUMBIA, CANADA.—The district conference was held in the Vancouver church June 22-24. The priesthood of the branch had called on every member of the branch prior to the conference and issued an invitation to attend. Missionary Aleah Koury opened the convention by showing pictures he had taken. These were followed by a discussion period. The evening of activities was closed after refreshments were served. Classes were held Saturday morning conducted by Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elder Koury. Lunch was served at noon by a group of district women. Classes were resumed again in the afternoon. In the evening the Saints met again for a short social program, followed by an address by Apostle Gleazer. Then refreshments were served in the basement of the church. An early morning prayer service was held Sunday. After a brief song service following the prayer meeting, Apostle Gleazer delivered the morning sermon. A basket lunch was served and in the afternoon classes were held. Apostle Gleazer taught the men, and Brother Koury addressed the women. For the Sunday evening services, the Saints returned to their respective branches. Brother Gleazer addressing those at Vancouver, Brother Koury at Kitsilano, and Brother Edwin Spargo at New Westminster.

HOUSTON, TEXAS.—Apostle Arthur A. Oakman held a series July 1-8. Apostle Percy E. Farrow visited the Saints during the same week. Brother Joe Scott and Sister Annie Hansen were baptized under the hands of Patriarch A. V. Arnold July 11.—Reported by LUCILLE CROOKER CENTRAL ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—The district conference convened June 24, at Decatur, Illinois. The opening prayer service was under the direction of Apostle D. O. Chesworth, assisted by District President Arthur Henson, Seventy Cecil Ettinger, and Evangelist O. C. Henson. Brother Chesworth also delivered the morning sermon. The business meeting was held in the afternoon at which time the six following men were presented to the conference for approval for ordination: William Banfield of Taylorville, elder; Ernest Campbell of Pleasant Hill, elder; Oral Guthrie, Pleasant Hill, priest; Leslie Hudson, Vandalia, Missouri, priest; Lowell Weaver, Pleasant Hill, teacher; and James Munson, Pana, teacher. Approval of the district was secured and these brethren were ordained at this time. The twins born to Elder and Mrs. William Poore were blessed at this conference. Priesthood classes were conducted in the afternoon and evening of June 23 in Decatur. Instructors of the classes were Apostle Chesworth and Seventy Cecil Ettinger.

WEST VIRGINIA DISTRICT.—A youth conference was held at the Harmony Branch at Indian Creek, West Virginia, June 16 and 17. The theme for the conference was "Your light and the bushel." Under the leadership of district officers the program was carried out.

Sermons were given by Seventies James S. Menzies and Louis Zonker. Brother Zonker and his family have left for Germany. Class periods were under the direction of Elder Lawrence Phillips, district leader of young people; Blanche Martin, women's department leader; and Anna L. Schoenian, music director. Five brethren were ordained the last day of the conference. Patriarch Robert E. Rodgers welcomed the men to the priesthood, and Brother Louis Zonker presented the challenge. Ordained were Clarence William Dobbs, elder, Moundsville Branch; John Henry Simon, elder; Glen Easton Branch; Harry Gordon Dobbs, priest, Moundsville Branch; Warren Beryl Chamber, priest, Glen Easton Branch, and Willard Kidd, elder, Moundsville Branch.—Reported by MARGARET C. PACK

LAS CRUCES, NEW MEXICO.—The members continue to hold meetings alternating between Las Cruces, New Mexico, and El Paso, Texas. The group is studying the Book of Mormon. Classes are held for the children. Any new members in this area are invited to attend services. Visitors or members of the armed services can contact Robert Porter, Route 1, Box 18, Las Cruces, New Mexico; Captain Kenneth Walker, 5627 Grace Street, El Paso, Texas; or Bantz Dowis at the White Sands Proving Grounds.

Priest Robert Doan of Alamogordo, New Mexico, has been called back to the service. A farewell party for the family was held at White Sands.

Since January the group has been ministered to by Seventy Russell Ralston, Apostle Charles Hield, and Elder William Dollins.—Reported by BETTY PORTER

PAINESVILLE, OHIO.—The Temple Workers sponsored a strawberry festival June 16. On July 12, they held the annual lawn festival in the recreation room of the church. A feature of the evening was a parcel post sale. Packages were received from several states. An auction was also held following the festival. The Temple Workers also held their annual picnic with Sister Mabel Barnhouse on July 19.

Brother R. H. Freeman, son of Elder and Mrs. H. T. Freeman, is stationed at Camp Lejeune, North Carolina. Brother Freeman is in the Marine Corps.

Charles Brockway, district president of the Kirtland area, spoke July 8. The Temple Workers had a guest speaker, Sister Lillian Limric of Akron, Ohio. Sister Limric is the district women's leader.—Reported by ANNA BELLE RASEY

SCAMMON, KANSAS.—Mr. and Mrs. Roy Adams were baptized March 18 by Pastor Harold J. Summers. They were confirmed Easter Sunday by Elders A. J. Jones and T. W. Bath. Following the confirmation service two children of Mr. and Mrs. Don Spears were blessed. A special Easter program was held in the evening. At the morning service March 18, Elder Norman Gray, bishop's agent, delivered a sermon regarding the financial law. March 20 was Family Night. The meeting was held at the Masonic Hall. This was also the birthday of the pastor.

Rose Dockestader, member of the church for a number of years died April 21. The funeral sermon was preached by the pastor. Melba Morehead is the superintendent of the church school which has an average attendance of forty-eight. The record attendance has been sixty-five.

The women's department, under the direction of Rose Reynolds, is studying Thelona Stephens' Book of Mormon Studies. The group purchased a wool rug for the pulpit platform. The department was in charge of the Mother's Day program. Following a pageant, the pastor gave a short talk.

Mr. Harold Summers was in charge of the Vacation Church School which had an attendance of thirty-two. Achievement night was June 3. Sister Summers was assisted by several workers from Pittsburg and Weir City as well as Scammon.

District President Stephen Black and wife visited May 6. At the close of his sermon, Brother Black recommended the pastor for the office of elder. This was approved by the

A large group from the branch attended the district conference May 20 at Racine, Missouri. District President Stephen Black presided. Apostle D. O. Chesworth was in charge of the morning prayer service and delivered the morning sermon. The noon meal was served at the cabin of Brother and Sister T. W. Bath. In the afternoon an ordination service was held. At the service Harold Summers was ordained.

Seventy Sylvester Coleman conducted a series from July 1-15. People came from Pittsburg, Columbus, and Weir City, Kansas, and Medoc, Missouri. A baptismal service was held at the close of the services July 15. Ten were baptized. Elder George Doubledee of Medoc, former pastor of the Scammon group, baptized four and Brother Coleman baptized six. The confirmation service was held in the evening. The following confirmed the candidates: Elders J. W. Jones of Pittsburg, A. J. Jones of Columbus, George Doubledee of Medoc, Pastor Harold Summers, and Seventy Sylvester Coleman. Music was provided and was led by Dale Swall.—Reported by ALICE E. JONES

BALD KNOB, ARKANSAS.—The church sponsors three Girl Scout troops in town. They form the largest organization in the town and are composed of sixty-five girls and twelve adults. A seven-day camping trip to Crowley's Ridge State Park at Walcott, Arkansas, has been completed. Six junior counselors, two senior counselors and thirty-two Girl Scouts attended. Mrs. Dale Edwards was camp director. She has served nineteen years as a Girl Scout leader.

Elders John G. Wight of San Antonio, Texas, and James Renfroe of Little Rock, Arkansas, conducted a twelve-day meeting in Bald Knob. Brother Wight conducted a series at the branch eight years ago, and the people still remembered his ministry. The type services he held were campfires, community sings, question hours and slides. Brother Wight preached the Father's Day sermon. A baby was blessed at this service by Elders Renfroe and Emde. On the following afternoon, a baptismal service was held at which Patricia Edwards and Russell Wall were baptized. Dale Edwards was ordained to the office of elder at the closing service of the series. He was ordained by Elder John G. Wight, assisted by Tom Emde.—Reported by MRS. DALE EDWARDS

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.—Election of officers was held at the branch June 25. The district president, W. J. Breshears, presided at the meeting. The following people were elected to office: Elder Bruce C. Jones, pastor; Elder Don Willis, associate pastor; Loyce Grimsley, church school director; Freda Rogers, leader of women; Callie Barnes, director of music; Floyd Willis, secretary and statistician; Roger Stevens, treasurer; J. D. Hall, publicity agent and book steward; Don Willis, auditor; Bruce Jones, Don Willis, Roger Stevens, and Elbert Powell, building committee; Blanche Sandiford, flower chairman, Lucille Clark, librarian; and George Bovee, solicitor. The following men were ordained to the priesthood August 5: Floyd Willis, priest; Hillery Cook, priest; Thomas Tolbert, deacon; and Ralph Philpot, deacon.—Reported by J. D. HALL

WICHITA FALLS, TEXAS.—The Wichita Falls and Davidson, Oklahoma, Saints united for a baptismal service Sunday, July 15. Three children were baptized: Mary Ruth and Richard, daughter and son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Childers of Davidson; and Ernest Goff, son of Sgt. and Mrs. Floyd Goff of Wichita Falls.—Reported by MRS. DOROTHY GOFF

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA.—The work in the area is progressing under the leadership of Pastor R. J. Jones. On June 10 six children were baptized. James Acosta, Karl Kendrick, Rosamond Holt, and Brenda Rowe were baptized by Elder Paul L. Norris; and Karen Scott and Joseph Johnson were baptized by Elder E. F. Yerrington. July 1 the children were confirmed. Elders participating in the confirmation service were R. J. Jones, Paul Vickrey, Guy Clesson, Paul L. Norris, and E. F. Yerrington. Following the confirmation service, the six new members participated in their first Communion service. Richard John, son of Deacon and Mrs. R. E. Jones, was blessed at this service by his grandfather, R. J. Jones and Elder Paul L. Norris.

In order to accommodate the group, the prayer services are held each week, one at the church and two in homes in outlying sections of the city.

The Sunday evening services have been of varied types. In addition to regular preaching services, different departments and classes have prepared open forum type of services, and the young people have provided music. The choir gave its summer festival at the church, and also held a reception following the concert.—Reported by DORIS M. BUTLER

FORT WILLIAM, ONTARIO.—Several members of the branch met at the church May 24, and the exterior of the church building was painted. A basket lunch was served on the lawn.

On June 2, Seventy Sylvester Coleman and family arrived from Flora, Illinois. A missionary series was held June 3 to 17 by Brother Coleman. At the close of the series, a baptismal service was held at which Mr. David Kentner and Tinterella Henderson united with the church.

Those attending Chetek, Wisconsin, reunion were Elder Anson Miller, Sister Mary Miller, Robert and Neill Miller, A. R. Brown, Sister Norah Hewitt, Anita and Nola Hewitt, and Elaine Pugh.—Reported by A. JEAN SHAW

LENNOX BRANCH, INGLEWOOD, CALIFORNIA.—Forty-three nonmember children attended the vacation church school held the last two weeks in June. There were seventy-four children who attended. Using the theme, "Treasuring God's Word," the school was under the direction of Perry Woods, superintendent, and Mrs. Albert Pearson, principal. One hundred and sixty-one persons attended the achievement night program.

The Zion's League held election July 7. Officers for the year are Irby Webb, president; Arlene Holmes, vice-president; Janice Slater, secretary; Lloyd Knuckles, treasurer. Don Pike is leader of the group.—Reported by MRS. K. C. GLAZE

A Grandmother's Part

By Alice M. Burgess

WHEN PAUL WROTE TO TIMOTHY in happy remembrance of "the unfeigned faith that was first in thy grandmother Lois," I like to think of Grandmother Lois as more than a link in a chain, passing on her own religious convictions to her daughter Eunice. I think Lois reached down to her little grandson, and in those leisurely hours of understanding relationship peculiarly theirs, the fond grandmother shared with Timothy, firsthand, some of her great heart-shaking experiences with God. I think she told him stories of her own childhood and youth, of how God was always there when she needed him, and how he blessed the people of that day. She bore firsthand witness of the great men and women of faith whose lives had touched her own. I think Lois told her little grandson the wonderful hero stories of the Old Testament, just as she had told her own children, only now she had more time, and life had given her a larger, firmer faith. So even today the child who receives such personal testimonies from his grandparents realizes, as is not possible from any other source, that the deepest religious experiences have a universal quality and occur with fresh significance to each succeeding generation. This sense of the continuity and universality of religion gives him, even at an early age, a deeper, richer satisfaction of the religious impulse.

Grandmother Prepares

It goes without saying that the grandmother will do her part to help the expectant mother prepare for the little new life to come. She will help with the sewing and give her a helping hand with the household cares as they become too heavy for her. She is very careful to be there when she is needed.

But the devoted intelligent grandmother of today has an interesting time preparing herself and her life for the new responsibility she hopes to share. She reads with her daughter and by herself, dipping into the fascinating richness of literature everywhere about babies, their care, what to do and what not to do. She is amazed at the changes in theories and rules for baby care and feeding. But it all makes sense in the light of her own experience, and she glories in the new helps and the more sensible precepts that modern research has brought.

Grandmother has a busy schedule of service in church and community life, social obligations, and a hobby or two that take a deal of time and thought. Her first problem is to pry apart that busy schedule to make time to be with the new baby. This means not fifteen minutes or a half hour here or there but several hours at a time. She can't get acquainted with the baby in fifteen minutes. It means she will have to give up a hobby or a few less important social occasions. It means also a reorganization of her home. Often she has achieved an ultimate in beauty and orderliness she could not have when her children were growing up. She'll need to resign herself to a few jarring notes, as she brings down from the attic the old baby buggy, the child's bed, the high chair, and the little chair and table to make it easy for the grandchildren to come to visit. She must make room for the little ones and make sure they feel at home in her house.

The joy of that first holding a grandchild in her arms, the pure satisfaction of having a part in his life, of knowing him from the beginning, soon gives place to the deeper joy of encouraging, nourishing and keeping up with the amazing development of this new little personality. Grandmother becomes a zealous baby-sitter. She is concerned that the baby not be left in casual, uninterested, or incapable hands and tries to plan with the parents to be available at least once or twice a week as they need her. She furnishes her old favorite lullabies, nursery rhymes, and finger plays, as well as digging up new ones, so she will have something special to enjoy with the baby. She picks up an occasional new toy, thoughtfully chosen with the young mother's approval. Since she often needs to stay at home while she cares for the baby the wise grandparent establishes a special shelf, corner, or cupboard that the baby, as she reaches toddler stages, can call his own.

Knowing Her Place and Keeping It

The wise grandmother will not try substituting for the parents to any permanent or full time extent unless parental illness, death, or other emergency makes it necessary. Her age, health, nerves, and general outlook on life are not adapted for the full-time care of little children. Some grandmothers have courageously taken on this task and have done nobly with God's help. But mothers were meant to be of a younger generation, and the child who misses the daily and nightly care and love of a real mother misses a great deal. Grandmother should have her own place in the grandchild's life, but should never in normal circumstances take over the mother's duties or prerogatives.

Grandmother never insists on her own ideas of what is best for baby. Rather she takes great pains to receive full instructions from the baby's mother concerning all details of his care, feeding, sleeping, bathing, play, et cetera. The wise grandmother is conscientious in carrying out those instructions so carefully arrived at by the mother with the help of a pediatrician. She tries always to be helpful but never intrusive. She gives advice only when asked. She is never dictatorial or bossy.

A Glorious Part

On the other hand some women, by following a completely "hands off" policy toward their grandchildren, are missing out on a glorious birthright that should be theirs. I often have heard, "It's wonderful to have grandchildren. You can enjoy their cute ways and see them all dressed up and sweet and clean, and you don't have to do any of the hard work or take any of the responsibility of looking after them. When my daughter asks me what do you do when baby does thus, I say, 'That's your problem. I've reared my children—it's not my job to tell you how to rear yours.'"

I don't believe a real grandmother takes an attitude of complete irresponsibility. A real grandmother will delight in being wanted and needed occasionally in the really hard work of child care. She will pride herself on the fact that she can step in and care for the grandchildren temporarily in times of emergency, almost as well as the mother does. She will enjoy setting up a regular program of weekly baby-sitting when she can really get to be friends with her grandchildren. She will discover special traits and likes in common and set up certain precedents or "me to you" traditions with them. One china hen at grandmother's house always laid special treats for little Dickie. One grandmother established special privilege (after consent of parents) of choosing and buying religious books for the toddler till the little three-year-old met her one day with the query, "Do you have a new Jesus book for me today, Gram-gram?" Another good Latter Day Saint woman is teaching her grandchildren the simpler hymns that mean so much to children. They surprise mother with a new one or a new verse every so often.

One grandmother, whose home is a thousand miles away, comforted her little grandson when she had to leave him after a month's visit. "It's true, dear," she said, "I can't be here with you for a while, and we can't say our prayers together each night. But we can meet every night in our prayers. I will say a special prayer for you each bedtime, and you can say one for me. That way we'll feel really and truly together."

No grandmother should miss the joy and satisfaction of being close to her grandchildren, knowing them well, and understanding them. She needs the thrill of watching a new personality spread its wings, the indescribable, exquisite satisfaction of helping with a prayer in her heart to answer childish questions and directing the child's faith. As she grows older she may grow young again with her grandchildren. And as a grandmother she has a work no other can do.

mortality. Its record is as clear-cut as are the words of Jesus in the New Testament. The Book of Mormon makes it evident that the perfect enjoyment of immortality comes after the resurrection when spirit and body are again joined together.

ETERNAL JUDGMENT

And thus they are restored into his presence; to be judged according to their works; according to the law and justice; for behold, justice exerciseth all his demands, and also mercy claimeth all which is her own, and thus, none but the truly penitent are saved. What, do ye suppose that mercy can rob justice? I say unto you, Nay; not one whit. If so, God would cease to be God.—Alma 19: 106, 107.

And it shall come to pass, that when all men shall have passed from this first death unto life, insomuch as they have become immortal, they must appear before the judgment seat of the Holy One of Israel; And then cometh the judgment; and then must they be judged according to the holy judgment of God. And assuredly, as the Lord liveth, for the Lord God hath spoken it, and it is his eternal word, which can not pass away, that they who are righteous shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy shall be filthy still.—II Nephi 6: 36-38.

Resurrection is discussed in the early phases of this chapter, and the last half gives an excellent discussion on the terms and nature of eternal judgment.

Whereof, they shall be judged, every man according to his works, whether they be good, or whether they be evil.—Mosiah 1: 126.

And he said unto Alma, What does this mean which Amulek hath spoken concerning the resurrection of the dead, that all shall rise from the dead, both the just and the unjust, and are brought to stand before God, to be judged according to their works?—Alma 9: 14.

Read Mormon 3: 21, 22 for further truth in this field of belief.

As the whole church moves forward, wonderful possibilities lie before us in our witness for Jesus Christ, telling others of the Restoration Movement and each one setting out to win one for Christ. We have a three-fold testimony in our hands and hearts: the record of ancient Israel (Bible); the record of ancient America (Book of Mormon); and the record of modern America (Doctrine and Covenants). As we go forth to witness, we will need to appreciate the time it takes others to understand our doctrine. They have but one witness, and that is incomplete. We have three witnesses to confirm our faith. In this we have a three-fold responsibility to be three times as valiant in our witness for Christ, the Savior of the world.

We Have the Answer to Grief

By Josephine Montgomery

THIS AFTERNOON I went to a funeral in a church of another denomination. Let me tell you about it.

The minister read that beautiful passage from John: "Let not your heart be troubled . . ." and as always I felt tears in my eyes. Even in spite of the man's hesitant, meaningless reading and slight speech difficulty, the poetry and emotion of the words came through. No rendition can entirely spoil this perfect portion of the Bible. But one cannot judge a man or a service on poor delivery, and so I tried to forget the dry voice and faulty diction.

The trio which sang was as good as a small town church trio generally is, but it was the selection of hymns which jarred me most—so sad, such poor music, and such bad poetry. I tried not to listen to the minister's sermon critically, and yet before he had been speaking five minutes, this thought cut sharply through my conscious mind: "If I had to listen to this kind of stuff every Sunday from our pulpit, I'd agree with the man who defined religion as an opiate for the people. I'd be an atheist from intellectual choice."

It wasn't that he was not a good man, preaching the doctrine of his church. I'm sure he was both. It was the doctrine itself that was wrong. Can you imagine any sensible person finding comfort in the face of death from such platitudes; "She is asleep in Jesus . . . In my last visit to this dear sister I asked her if she was saved, and she told me that she had made her peace with God . . . What a testimony . . . The dead in Christ shall awake in a new day . . . There will be a new dawn, the sun will rise . . . Oh, what a blessed privilege to be asleep in Jesus."

During the entire service, the uncontrolled sobbing of some of the mourners was piteous. Afterwards, when the friends had filed out of the church leaving the relatives alone with the opened casket, one daughter became hysterical. Outside the church, we could hear her hysterical shrieks and unintelligible wailings, followed by half-screamed cries, "Oh, Mama, Mama." This from an adult woman.

IN CONTRAST TO THIS FUNERAL in the church of another denomination (much more popular numerically than that of ours) I cannot help remembering the quiet dignity of the funeral of Harley Nagel almost a year ago. I remember the serenity of his wife—the only one in all that crowded church who did not weep. I remember the controlled sobbing of the little sister and the way Sadi, more concerned for her than for herself, leaned forward to look along the length of the pew to lend the younger girl comfort and reassurance. I remember the sincere emotion of the minister, Apostle Reed Holmes, when he spoke of Harley's work in the church and the fact that when he (Apostle Holmes) went to the Nagel home to minister in the loss of the husband and son, he himself was ministered to in the loss of his friend. I remember the way Sadi's face lit the church with faith as she listened to the quiet hymns, "My Jesus, I Love Thee," "Give of the Best to the Master," and "I Would Be True." I remember when they rolled the casket down the aisle past her—she turned her head to follow it and was able to smile. She looked . . . how can I describe the way she looked except to say she looked proud. It was a happy pride.

Most of all I remember things she said in conversation. "I have been so richly blessed . . . This strengthens faith. It has mine. . . . Let's have some happier hymns, shall we? . . . It comforts me to know that we believe in heaven as a place of continuing creative work. I know that God won't waste Harley's talents in a heaven like that. I know he'll put him to work at the job he knows best. Who knows . . . perhaps right now Harley is busy preaching in the prison house."

I CAME AWAY from Harley's funeral feeling humbly proud to be a member of the human race. I came away from the funeral this afternoon feeling sorry for the mourners who were not members of our church. Those who were our members had an inner strength that the others lacked. What made the difference? Why did they have hysterics in the same kind of loss where the Nagels had been able to smile? Why were their hymns unlovely and comfortless? Why did their minister mouth meaningless platitudes where Reed Holmes had filled the church with the warmth of hope and humility?

Perhaps it is because of a very simple thing. The faith of our church is built on a doctrine of life, rather than death. We believe in what Dr. Roy Cheville calls "an up-to-God way of living." We believe that we start here and build heavenward, that salvation is an end-product of living, not a beginning. We believe, and emphasize, that the eternal life we seek is concerned more with quality of living than with longevity. Woven through the teaching of our church is the basic connection between the here and the hereafter. Zion itself, the goal we set ourselves, is merely another way of describing the "here" part of heaven. Eternity is not a mysterious unknown that follows death. Eternity for us is right now. We are as much a part of it as the loved one who dies before us.

There will always be grief at the wrench of having to give up the sight of a loved face, the touch of loved fingers, the sound of a loved voice. Christ was acquainted with death, and it never failed to sadden him. At the death of his friend, Lazarus, he wept, for being human he loved as we love the sight of the face, the touch of the hand, the sound of the voice. But he had the answer to grief in his concept of eternal life and the hope he gave for immortality. He gave us the answer for grief in the kind of heaven he described for us . . . a place of continuing creative activity, a place of many mansions with room for everyone, the "hereafter" part of Zion.

The Impatient Prayer

By Barbara Peavy

NOTHING THIS YEAR was the same. Reunions of previous years had always been spiritual oases for the young people in the district, but this year there was little reaction to the Spirit that was present. Susan sat on the bank of the little creek that provided the swimming area for the young people. The hot summer sun was fading, and the few stragglers were reporting for buddy tags on the beach. The kids are the same, she thought. Why hasn't something happened?

The responsibility of youth leader was a new experience to Susan, and yet she had accepted the job without any fears. The young people of the district were eager and enthusiastic. Reunion would prove to her which ones she could ask to tackle difficult assignments. Now it was nearing the close of the reunion, and the persons she had wanted to line up for responsibilities were contributing nothing to the services. Why couldn't Bill Edwards realize that League work was more than recreation and keeping the girls entertained? What was wrong with Marian that she had no desire to participate in prayer services? "Oh, God," Susan prayed, "please make these people feel something. God, what's wrong with everything? Please do something."

Slowly she arose and started back to the cabin. Everything was going so slowly. Nothing was right about the whole week. Just as she neared the cabin she spotted old Brother McKay. He was one of her favorite people and always seemed to know the answer to any problem. She could ask him what to do. He had been a patriarch in the district for several years, and his understanding of young people as well as the older members made him a constant source of inspiration to those who met and talked with him.

"Hi there, Susie, how're you enjoyin' the reunion? We've had some good meetin's, haven't we?"

"Fine, Brother McKay," Susan smiled halfheartedly. "Of course, the young people haven't responded as they usually do."

"I'd say that's been bothering you all week, Susan. Your prayers and testimonies haven't been as happy as they usually are. You act worried all the time. Are you afraid you can't tackle the job?"

"Oh, Brother McKay, I thought it would be so easy. I know the kids fairly well. I had my plans made and the jobs all lined up for each one to do. But the kids aren't what I'd like them to be—if they would only change."

"Do you want workers and leaders or puppets, Susan? A wise leader isn't a dictator, you know."

"Sir?"

"Have you prayed about your problem?"

SUSAN SAT DOWN on the log beside Brother McKay. If she could only let him know how much she had prayed. "Yes, sir, I've prayed. I've asked God to do something to help every one of the kids. I've waited, and still he hasn't done anything." Ashamed that she had sounded so irreverent, Susan turned her face.

"You know, you've got quite a problem, there." Brother McKay reached down and broke off a piece of grass and started chewing the end of it. "I'm surprised at you. You've always seemed to be patient. Your faith has been outstanding. Haven't you learned you can't push God around? The young people will respond if you have faith and pray and show them by your actions that service is a happy responsibility and not something that makes you blue. Cheer up, Susie. Stop trying to shove God around and be patient. He's aware of the situation, and you let him work the problem out."

"Stop trying to push God around!" Why she hadn't even been praying in the right spirit. She had been ordering God around, not realizing her own faults and shortcomings. By criticizing she was losing the spirit of love that was the first requirement of a good leader.

From the loud-speaker came the voice of the vesper choir singing, "O Master, let me walk with thee." Susan squeezed Brother McKay's hand gratefully and walked away. She hummed the song softly, and then she smiled, for the words that came to her mind were:

*Teach me thy patience; still with thee
In closer, dearer company.
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong, prior to the time of its canonization about 200 B.C., and the researches based on internal evidence will therefore need to be continued indefinitely. In the meantime, we can be thankful that so many Bible manuscripts and other important documents have come to light. The discovery at the Dead Sea suggests that the future may hold for archaeology and the Bible many astonishing finds further to illumine the Book of Life.
In trust that triumphs over wrong.*

DEATHS

KELLEY.—Leander Gomer, son of William H. and Ellen Campbell Kelley, was born June 5, 1889, at Kirtland, Ohio, and died May 28, 1951, at his home in Lamoni, Iowa. With his folks he moved to Lamoni in 1898, where on April 15 of the following year he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church by his father. He attended the Lamoni public schools and Graceland College. On March 25, 1913, he was married to Pearl Danielson; five children were born to them. For many years he was actively engaged in business, civic, and church affairs, serving as manager of the Farmer's Store, postmaster, farm implement dealer, a member of the town council, and a member of the building committee for the new church. He was first ordained a priest, then a high priest, and served the church as a member of the stake high council and counselor to the bishop of Lamoni Stake.

He was preceded in death by his wife, Pearl; a daughter, Ardith, and two sons: Martin and William. Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. W. C. Haden, and a son, Marion James, both of Lamoni; a brother, George B. Kelley of Healy, Kansas; three sisters: Mrs. Oscar Anderson of Des Moines, Iowa; Miss Mary Kelley and Mrs. J. E. France of Omaha, Nebraska; and four grandchildren.

BARGY.—Nettie Laura Bargy, daughter of Thomas Haviland and Louise Fulton, was born January 1, 1869, at Flint, Michigan, and died June 20, 1951, at her home in Flint. She was married on September 19, 1891, to Harmon Bargy and was a member of the Reorganized Church.

She is survived by her husband, Harmon; four daughters: Mrs. Leona Bess and Hazel Booth of Flint; Mrs. Sanford Allen of Birch Run, Michigan, and Mrs. Elmer Evans of Dearborn, Michigan; one son, Roy Bargy of Kewadin, Michigan; a sister, Mrs. Manuel Ward of Independence, Missouri; and three brothers: Edward Haviland of Detroit, Michigan; Leon Haviland of Flint; and Curtis Haviland of Independence, Missouri. Funeral services were held at the Groves Memorial Chapel in Flint, Elder James McBride officiating. Burial was in the Flint Memorial Park Cemetery.

ALLEN.—Lystra Thomas, was born August 26, 1859, at Jackson, Ohio, and died June 21, 1951, at his home in Independence, Missouri, where he had resided for nearly thirty years. On June 25, 1899, he was married to Anna Smith at Kirtland, Ohio; one son, Howard J., was born to them. Mrs. Allen preceded him in death on Thanksgiving Day, November 25, 1948. During his active life he worked as a caretaker for a large estate, did truck gardening, operated a general store, and did carpenter work. During his later years he tended a large garden, sharing the produce with those who needed it. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 3, 1933.

He is survived by his son and three grandchildren, all of the home, and a brother, Cless Allen of Kirtland.

WADLEY.—Minnie May, was born June 25, 1876, at Fayette, Iowa, and died June 11, 1951, at a hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa, after a series of strokes. In October, 1898, she was married to John W. Wadley; two daughters were born to them. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on February 25, 1889. (Young Joseph was ordained president of the Reorganization in the home of her grandparents at Amboy.)

She is survived by her husband, John; two daughters: Letha Wadley of the home and Mrs. Raymond Petersen of Council Bluffs; a brother, Frank Stone of Council Bluffs; and four grandsons. Funeral services were held at the Woodring Mortuary, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Burial was in Cedar Lawn Cemetery, Council Bluffs.

COOK.—Arthur George, son of Thomas Jefferson and Elizabeth Cook, was born on November 21, 1889, in Boston County, Texas, and died June 30, 1951, at Hot Springs, Arkansas. On August 2, 1913, he was married to Vera Margaret McClard; four children were born to them. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church as a child, was ordained, and for several years served as pastor of the Hot Springs congregation. He held the distinction of having been in the ice cream business longer than any other person in Arkansas.

He is survived by his wife, Vera; two sons: Dale and Delmah; two daughters: Thelma Freeman and Dorothy Bowling; six brothers: John, Delmah, Guy, Jim, Hulien, and Emory Cook; five sisters: Zora McBride, Jewel Reay, Blanche Bigelow, Elizabeth Fenton, and Imogene Cook; and eight grandchildren. Apostle D. T. Williams conducted the funeral service.

REED.—Kathleen Delight, daughter of Sgt. and Mrs. S. T. Reed, Jr., was born December 11, 1950, and died May 11, 1951. Besides her parents she is survived by a brother, Timothy; her maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John D. Williams; and her paternal grandparents Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Reed, Sr. Funeral services were conducted at the Reorganized Church in Tucson, Arizona, Elder F. E. Turner officiating. Burial was in the Evergreen Babyland Cemetery.

NUNAMAKER.—Mollie, daughter of Elijah E. and Phoebe Wilson, was born November 16, 1867, at Jerseyville, Illinois, and died February 23, 1951, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lillian Graves, Nashville, Tennessee. On July 16, 1890, she was married to Owen Oscar Nunamaker; seven children were born to them. Two children died in infancy, and Mr. Nunamaker died in 1924. Mrs. Nunamaker had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 4, 1898.

Besides Mrs. Graves she leaves two other daughters: Mrs. Zula Sheppard of Golden, Colorado, and Mrs. Myra Haferkamp of Temple City, California; two sons: James of Independence, Missouri, and Alma of Temple City; ten grandchildren; ten great-grandchildren; four step-grandchildren; and eleven step-great-grandchildren. Services were conducted at the Cosmopolitan Funeral Home in Nashville, Elder Jerry Fitch officiating. The body was then sent to Independence where funeral services were conducted by Apostle Charles R. Hield and Patriarch M. A. McColey at the George Carson Chapel. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HARTLEY.—Irvin A., son of Joshua and Catherine Hartley, was born May 19, 1890, at Ainsworth, Nebraska, and died June 7, 1951, at the Independence Sanitarium following an automobile accident. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of nineteen. In 1913 he was married to Susan M. Brunson who died six years later. On January 10, 1925, he married Mrs. Mattie Wells. In 1927 he was ordained a teacher; he served in this office until his death. For the past twenty-three years he had attended the Blue Springs, Missouri, church.

Besides his wife, Mattie, he leaves a stepson, Everett O. Wells; an adopted daughter, Mrs. Mildred Davidson; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders John T. and Carlos Smith at the church in Blue Springs. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

CLARK.—Bernice, daughter of Mike and Amelia Balluff Evert, was born November 24, 1908, at Strawberry Point, Iowa, and died July 4, 1951, at St. Mary's Hospital in Evansville, Indiana. She was married to Adna Clark on October 12, 1926; five children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since July 21, 1925.

She is survived by her husband; a daughter, Mrs. George Lenell of Santa Monica, California; four sons: Clair of the United States Air Force, stationed at Phoenix, Arizona; Ronald, Richard, and Darrell of the home; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Evert of Oelwein; five sisters: Mrs. Ruth Letchford of Postville, Iowa; Mrs. Ruby McFarlane of Oelwein; Mrs. Fern Tapel of Port Orchard, Washington; Mrs. Blanche Shippy of Newton, Iowa; and Mrs. Wilma MacIntosh of Anamosa, Iowa; and a brother, Francis Evert of Postville. Funeral services were conducted at the Alexander Mortuary by Elder H. W. Burwell. Interment was in the Memorial Park Cemetery at Evansville.

VAIL.—William Lemuel, son of George H. and Victoria Belle Vail, was born February 19, 1873, at Platte City, Missouri, and died June 11, 1951, at Los Angeles, California. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on February 14, 1897; ordained a teacher in 1903, and a priest in 1910. He served in the St. Joseph, Fourth Kansas City, and Independence congregations before moving to California where he was active in church work in Los Angeles. In 1897 he was married to Louise M. Smith, who died in 1923. Two years later he married Etta Oldfather, who preceded him in death in 1929. In 1936 he married Katherine Mullen, who died in 1950.

He is survived by a sister, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Souders of Nevada, Missouri; and a brother, James Vail of San Luis Obispo, California. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Thomas R. Beil at Los Angeles. Interment was in Inglewood Park Cemetery, Inglewood, California.

WINEGAR.—James, was born January 5, 1875, at Wheeler Grove, Iowa, and died May 8, 1951, in Buhl, Idaho. He was married to Clara Louise Meinecke at Willow Springs, Missouri, in July, 1903, and moved to Ellensburg, Washington, where they lived until 1914. Then they moved to Buhl and made their permanent home there. Eight children were born to them; a daughter, Hazel, died in infancy, and a son, Ralph, was killed in Germany during World War II. A member of the Reorganized Church since childhood, Brother Winegar held the office of priest and served as pastor of the Buhl mission from 1939 to 1945. His wife preceded him in death in 1938.

He is survived by two sons: Henry and James of Buhl; four daughters: Mrs. Gladys Shriver and Mrs. Thelma Harms of Buhl; Mrs. Olive Campbell of Hysham, Montana; and Mrs. Louise Sheldon of Nampa, Idaho; and eight grandchildren.

Light has always been a symbol of freedom; darkness, of pain and oppression. The most blessed words the Lord uttered in the beginning may have been, "Let there be light." In these dark days it is time for those who love the truth to say, "Turn on the light!"

During recent storms, our lights were out for some hours. Streets and homes were in darkness. How welcome the dawn when morning came and light streamed like a blessing over the eastern horizon!

We sometimes forget what a miracle it is that one can go to a wall, push a switch, and immediately the room is flooded with light. In a spirit of reverence, one might know how God felt when he beheld the great darkness and said, "Let there be light."

In Edwin Markham's masterpiece, "The Man With the Hoe," there is a line, "Whose breath blew out the light within this brain." There are countries in the world where tyrants are struggling to blow the light out for entire nations. Will they succeed?

In lighter vein: there's something nice about a cluster of fluorescent lights in an office. One of them is almost always sure to be working, though you never know which one it will be. . . . You should see the P.S. editor's desk lamp. It looks like a praying mantis—the cannibal of the insect world. If you come in some day and find it gnawing on the editorial neck, you will know that at long last some use for editors has been found: they are edible!

* SHOTS

Because of the flood and trouble with the water, thousands of people are lining up at clinics, health centers, and doctors' offices to get protective "shots" against typhoid. First day, you feel like you have a hot goose egg under the skin of your arm. Second day, you have arthritis in all your joints. Third day, you wonder if typhoid is any worse than the shot—and it is. . . . P.S. is wearing something like an enormous chigger bite on his arm. Bobbie has decorated herself with a "Purple Heart" because of her wound. Some have their smiles adjusted for pain at a slightly northeast-by-southwest angle. It will be nice . . . it will be very nice . . . just to get back to normal.

* DID YOU GO TO WAR?

It is not only as nations that people go to war. They do it individually, too. . . . Remember the last time something happened at church that you did not like, or somebody made a statement that offended you, or you decided to oppose someone's idea, tooth and nail, to the bitter end? Did you go to war?

There is something devastating and terrible about going to war. Reason is thrown to the winds. Compromise is excluded. Communication lines between you and the enemy are cut off. And all your resources—material, intellectual, and spiritual, so badly needed for other and more constructive things—are conscripted for this one purpose. You are prepared to lose everything, and you generally do lose it in the contest.

Are we wise to deplore the nations' going to war when we do it individually?

HIS CONFERENCE ASSIGNMENTS have carried him from Palestine to Los Angeles, California. For the past four years the radio has carried his voice over the Midwest. Brother Sorden's first appointment was to the British Isles Mission in December, 1920. In April, 1925, he was sent to Palestine. His next assignments were to Burlington, Iowa, in 1927 and to Portland, Oregon, in 1930.

He was born, baptized, and educated in Kingfisher, Oklahoma. He received his bachelor of arts degree from Kingfisher College after attending Graceland two years. He was with the Navy for several years, then taught at Graceland until the church called him on his first mission abroad. His most important preparation for this assignment was to marry his high school and college classmate, Gladys Virginia Steele, and then baptize her into the church. They have one daughter, Marilyn, the librarian at Graceland.

Brother Sorden was called to the ministry in 1916, being ordained an elder on November 12. On April 15, 1932, he was ordained a high priest. In 1934 he was sent to Los Angeles as pastor. In 1936 he became president of the Lamoni Stake where he served seven years, then was assigned to Salt Lake City where he labored until his call to radio work. In 1948 he became pastor at Liberty Street and served for eighteen months. He then returned to the Radio Department. A serious illness last year caused a let-down in activity. He is now working under the direction of the Presidency on research and writing assignments.

News and Notes

PRESIDENT IN MICHIGAN

President Israel A. Smith attended the Blue Water Reunion August 5. From there he went to Liahona Park at Sanford, Michigan, on August 6. He will go to Kirtland from there. While in Kirtland he will attend to some matters of business for the church.

NAUVOO REUNION

Apostle D. T. Williams attended the Nauvoo Reunion August 1-5. He preached the evening sermons on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. The closing sermon was also delivered by Brother Williams. Serving on the staff of the reunion were Elder Charles Kornman, district missionary; Evangelist John R. Grice, Bishop A. Neal Deaver, and Richard Carter. Chris B. Hartshorn, managing editor of the "Herald," and Sister Hartshorn attended the reunion.

"NEW MOON" A SUCCESS

Approximately 4,000 people attended the three performances of "The New Moon" presented by the Center Stake Zion's League July 24, 25, and 27. The profit was around $500, and this will be used for improvements on the Campus.

CAMPING NEWS

Over twenty Oriole leaders and monitors participated in a training group August 8 at the Campus. Camping and campcraft were taught by Mrs. R. B. Hoskins who has had wide experience as a leader of Girl Scouts and as an instructor.

In co-operation with the church, the Y.M.C.A. Boy's Fun Club holds day camps at the Campus during the summer.

Under the direction of Mrs. Helen Elledge day camps for Skylarks will be held August 20, 22, and 24. An attendance of 200 to 300 girls is expected. The program will include setting up individual camping units, worship, and phases of camp life climaxed by the achievement program to be held the last night which parents are invited to attend and participate with their daughters in the activities. This is the first camp of this type to be held and will be of special interest to girls who could not attend overnight camp at Gardner Lake.

INTERESTING STATISTICS

"In October, 1919, a system of consecutive numbering of baptismal reports was begun in the Department of Statistics. Every person whose baptism has been reported since that time has received a registration number. The "A" numbers are for the United States and Canada. Each mission abroad has its own system of numbering. Number A1 was baptized in October, 1919, by E. R. Davis, and is at present unknown to the church, having been just recently transferred to the unknown list. Number A100,000 is Eddie Lee Springer, 13, of Pleasanton, Kansas, baptized on June 10, 1951 by Seventy Donald L. Kyser. Who will be number A200,000? How long will it take us to baptize another 100,000?" This is quoted from a memo received from Merle Guthrie, head of the Department of Statistics.

"Better Than a Sheep"

"How much then is a man better than a sheep?"

—Matthew 12:10

Editorial

WHEN JESUS WAS TEACHING, the Pharisees liked to stand around the edge of the crowd and heckle him with questions and comments. So many times their questions were related to the exactions and prohibitions of "the Law."

At one synagogue there was a man with a withered hand. Pointing him out to Jesus, the Pharisees asked, "Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day?" They wanted to trap him.

Jesus replied—and the words are paraphrased here—"You would rescue a sheep from a pit on the Sabbath, wouldn't you? And isn't a man better than a sheep?"

Then Jesus healed the man, and the Pharisees went out planning to destroy him for this act of mercy. Fanaticism could not go further.

The healed man was "better than a sheep." But were the Pharisees?

* * * * *

It is an intriguing question that Jesus asked, "How much then is a man better than a sheep?"

Among all the domestic animals, there is hardly any more stupid than a sheep. In two thousand years of breeding since the time of Jesus, the wool of a sheep and the quality of his meat have been improved. Nothing much has been done for his mind.

Is a man better than a sheep?

Some men are; some are not.

Sheep are great imitators, great followers of the crowd. No sheep wants to do anything unless he sees other sheep doing it first. He will try anything if he sees others doing it.

There is something sheep-like about crowds of people.

No wonder Isaiah exclaimed, "All we like sheep have gone astray."

There are people, including some nicely-dressed and fancy ones, who behave like sheep. When they drink because the crowd drinks, they act like sheep. In any crowd of people lighting up their cigarettes many of them are mere sheep.

In their opinions on religion and morality, many of them follow the crowd as blindly and foolishly as sheep do.

Here is a typical human sheep statement: "I'll try anything once."

Once may be too often. One performance of the wrong thing could kill or ruin a person. One dose of poison, and the victim will soon find himself rendering his final accounting in the celestial offices.

* * * * *

Young people especially have many temptations to act like sheep. They want to be popular with the crowd. They don't want to oppose or criticize anything the crowd does.

OFFICIAL: The Conference of College Men and Women Kirtland, Ohio, September 1-3, 1951

THE CONFERENCE as previously announced is intended to reach all college students and graduates of the church with a concern for integration of professional training with the larger purposes of the church.

"ACADEMIC INTEGRATION FOR OUR TIME"

- Sept. 1 Preview and Purpose of Conference Devotions
Theme Message: "A Unifying Spirit in an Atomistic Age"
- Sept. 2 Devotions
a.m. Presentation: "An Integrated Church"
Symposium: "Integrating One's Field into the Total Church Life and Thought"
Presentation: "An Integrated Education Program in our Church"
- p.m. "The Outlook on Education in Kirtland, 1833-35"
"The Outlook on Education in Kirtland, 1951"
Vespers
Testimonial Service: "Forces That Have Drawn Me to Church Allegiance"
- Sept. 3 Forum: "Mobilizing Our Graduate Man Power"
a.m. Presentation: "Integrating Our Church Man Power" p.m. Symposium: "Recommendations"
Benedictory Service and Adjournment

Participating in the conference will be students, teachers, professional men, and church officers. The background provided by the earlier college conferences is contained in the summer issue of The University Bulletin. Extra copies can be obtained from L. O. Brockway.

Group meals will be served from Saturday evening through Monday (except Sunday morning) at $4.00 a person; housing will be available at about $1.50 a night, with higher rates at some tourist homes. Those planning to attend should send their names, and those of other conference visitors, to L. O. Brockway, Chemistry Department, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan.

Professional Help for Zion Building

THE "BUILDING OF ZION" has been an inspirational ideal for the Latter Day Saint movement since its inception. It has invested the ordinary tasks of living with a significance and dignity which have given to many people an enriching sense of purpose. We still look forward to the fulfillment of Zionic ideals in a group way, but in our generation the problems of living have become tremendously complicated. The building of Zion now more than ever requires the consecrated and critical interest of those who are trained to deal with the more complicated aspect of modern living. How else can we solve the professional problems of Zion but to ask the advice and assistance of consecrated professional people?

Under the impetus of this need the church is very concerned that its college-trained people find a satisfactory expression for their professional training in relation to the Zionic objectives of the church. The exploration of the relation of the church to its professional people will be initiated in a new way at the Conference of College Men and Women at Kirtland on September 1-3. Letters of invitation have gone out to a number of professional people of the church, and all people having a specific interest in this matter are urged to attend the conference. A forum under the leadership of Dr. Evan Shute on Monday morning, September 3, will invite the response of professional people to the question of their relation to the major objectives of the church.

The general program of the conference under the supervision of Dr. Roy Chevillie will consider "Academic Integration For Our Time" as previously announced. College students, teachers, graduates, and other interested people are invited. Meals will be provided from Saturday evening through Monday noon (except Sunday morning) $4.00 a person; housing will be available at about $1.50 a night. Visitors to the conference should send their names as soon as possible to L. O. Brockway, Chemistry Department, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan.

A Playwriting Contest

FOR MANY YEARS there has been a group of people in Independence which has been trying to interest others in the idea that "the play's the thing." Members of this group, known as the White Masque Players, from their own experiences and the experiences of others know just how true these words are as applied to missionary work for the church. They have seen both young people and adults from all denominations drawn together by a common interest—dramatics. They have seen them working and learning together in the true tradition that "the show must go on," forgetting personal differences in the thrill of creating something.

The White Masque Players have now become a part of the Center Stake of Zion, pledged to make every effort to contribute in any way possible toward reaching the goals of the stake officers as well as the general church officials. Their first project on a church-wide scale is a playwriting contest.

It is hoped that through this contest the church and the club will collect valuable material needed for worship programs, building fund projects, missionary endeavors—and all the many, many situations where good, short plays seem to belong.

The contest will run for six months, until March 1, 1952. The plays are to be one-act, thirty to forty-five minutes in length. They may be any type—comedy, tragedy, history—but should carry a definite message. Above all, the plays should be suitable for production on a simple stage, such as is available in small branches. The club reserves the right to edit, publish, and distribute these plays; none can be returned. All plays should be submitted to Mrs. Ray Heady, president, 1842 Drumm Avenue, Independence, Missouri, by March 1, 1952. The plays will be judged on the basis of originality and suitability for production by small groups with simple equipment. Three first prizes of $10.00 each will be awarded with the three prize-winning plays given full production by the club in Independence, Missouri. A second prize of $5.00 and a third prize of $2.50 will be awarded to the runner-ups.

This is more than just a play contest. It is an opportunity to make a real contribution to the work of the church and at the same time, gain material for local branch projects. Everyone who has enjoyed the plays produced at General Conference knows the type of people who are working to make this contest a success. Because they are now a department of the church, they ask this help in insuring the success of their first church-wide project.

All who have literary talent, or know anyone who has, are urged to take advantage of this opportunity being offered as a service to the church by the White Masque Players.

MRS. RAY HEADY, President,
White Masque Players.

Emotional Problems of Children

By J. E. Andes, M.D.

Love, Security, and Rejection

THE IMPORTANCE of the emotional state of a growing child cannot be overestimated. We are so busy thinking about vitamins, scholastic ability, spinach, proper clothes, athletic prowess, and other semiesential factors, that we often forget to consider the importance of a healthy emotional pattern in our growing children. Unfortunately, the factors affecting the child's emotional growth and pattern are poorly understood by most parents. We cannot go into great detail here, so it must suffice to say that most of what the baby and young child learns is tucked away into the subconscious mind* and forms a foundation for its behavior as an adult. In the infant all learning is in the subconscious (he does not actually remember it, although the knowledge remains with him). As the child grows older an increasing amount of learning is on a conscious level, and a relatively small percentage of information reaches the subconscious mind of a mature adult.

*The subconscious mind is that part of our mental store, which, although it is in the mind, cannot be recalled to the conscious (or remembered). Hypnotism has shown this to be true. A simple example is a forgotten name; when we hear it again we immediately remember that we have heard it before.

Thus a child with a healthy emotional pattern or background ("bringing up") usually grows into a well-balanced adult, who in turn, when he becomes a parent, teaches his children in a normal way. Unfortunately, the opposite too often occurs, and a child with a bizarre or warped emotional background becomes a parent who tends to continue the pattern with his child. In truth, the "sins of the fathers are visited upon the children, even unto the third and fourth generation."

A child with an insecure emotional make-up is an easy prey to the many siren voices in his environment, which promise him a state or set of conditions which he subconsciously feels deeply he needs. Thus a child with such a background has laid the foundation for an adult life in which crime, greed, broken marriage, excessive worry, anxiety, nervous breakdowns, and even insanity may occur. Undoubtedly fear is important in a child's life as a means of self-preservation; however, excessive or abnormal fears (or shocks) lead to anxiety. In addition, we should remember that the lessons learned through fear or bitter experiences have a different significance if the child is secure in the parents' love.

Role of Love

Love is an absolute necessity for a normal growing child. The Bible makes this so clear that I need not dwell on the subject. But we must distinguish between love and other factors: kindness, indulgence, dotting, selfishness, et cetera. Kindness is only a part of love and may even be akin to cruelty. We are kind to animals when we take their life rather than to see them undergo severe suffering. Likewise we may be kind to a child when we overprotect it to avoid all possible injury. But we do not necessarily love it! Love is not mere tolerance; love is not merely good scientific care of a child's physical wants and needs. True love is a behavior, particularly on the part of the parent, which seeks to do for the child all those things, and in a correct proportion, that in the long run are best for him. It has no relation to any pain or discomfort which such a procedure may cause the parent.

A good mother will rather see her child suffer than have it miss some type of discipline, training, medical care, or other unpleasant thing which would result in definite future benefit to the youngster. I recently had a mother come into the office five times before she could stand to have her child vaccinated! She was not thinking about the child, but the unpleasant feeling it gave her to see the child hurt. This act may have been kindness, but it certainly was not love. In a similar category come people who will drop or drown kittens rather than dispose of them with an instantaneous form of death, because they cannot stand to hurt cats. They shut their eyes and throw the kittens into the water and turn their head away while the little things struggle pitifully until they succumb. Or they drop the kittens out in a spot far from home, hoping that someone else (who is less selfish than they) will take them in, knowing full well that the probability is that most of the kittens will slowly starve.

True love in a parent starts before conception. The child is wanted, planned for, and eagerly awaited.

And this affection continues undiminished throughout life, consistent from day to day, even while the child is being punished. Parents do not fool their children. They know instinctively whether they are being punished through duty, fear, fright, anger, irritation, or because the punishment is necessary. Parents with true love are always looking ahead, realizing that their offspring is really another person—not theirs, but God's—merely intrusted into their care. They try to make the child happy, loved, respected, wanted by others, honest, unselfish, truthful, good, and industrious—and then the child will be lovable. They want their child really to be lovable.

A parent with true love recognizes the difference in children. He (or she) soon understands that John and William need different things and respond to different approaches. There is never a just reason for telling John to do something merely because William does it. He knows this is not a good enough reason and it immediately builds up resentment toward William and the (dishonest) parent.

A parent who truly loves a child will have several children if possible. This provides natural playmates, as well as prevention of overindulgence or spoiling. It is virtually impossible to bring up one child as well as several (other things being equal). I once knew a charming woman who had a lovely child of about fifteen months. I asked when it would have a playmate, and she answered, "I couldn't think of having another one. I love this one so much that I could not divide my love with two children." Note the I. Apparently she did not love the child as much as herself.

True love does not give too much, even though it wants to, but it gives enough. Many people want to give their children everything to prevent their having to undergo hardships or distress, such as the parents went through. They forget that they are what they are partly because of the difficulties. The "poor little rich boys," with few exceptions, are an unhappy, sorry lot.

I should also add that in order to give a child a true, constant, unselfish love, a parent must also love his (or her) friends, neighbors, wife (or husband)—yes, even mother-in-law. Hate and love do not mix. The child instinctively realizes something is wrong if dad and mother have trouble with all the neighbors, fight and fuss in church and have serious disagreements in the home. I might say in reverse that parents who truly love their children cannot, with occasional exceptions, help loving their companion and others around them.

One final thought needs a few words of comment. Fanatical trends have continued to cause trouble. Should a baby be nursed? (We will answer this later.) Should a child be rocked to sleep? By all means. Should a baby be allowed to suck its thumb? Certainly, within reasonable age limits. Should it be fed when it is hungry, or stay on a rigid clock schedule? It should be fed. Should it be allowed to cry or be quieted immediately every time it opens its mouth? There is no substitute for good judgment and common horse sense. The decisions are between the parents and God—and the closer they keep to him the better the decision they will make.

Security

Security is so closely linked with love that it is almost impossible to discuss one without the other. Parents who are insecure (with home, friends, job, church, community) often find it difficult to truly love their children. The importance of this is to be found in the fact that every home has some degree of insecurity, because life itself is a fragile, temporary thing. It is here that religious teachings are so important. In Him we have true security—all the security we can ask, and He is only too willing to give it. The parents who truly trust in God feel secure despite all insecurity around them, and pass these feelings of security on to their children even without trying. And insecure parents usually have insecure, fearful children.

In order for the child to be secure he must be wanted, needed, prepared for, and accepted—not rejected. If he is not wanted, he should be immediately adopted out to someone who does want him. There should be a gleam in the parents' eyes. It is essential also that the child should be nursed at the breast which is rarely impossible IF the mother really wants to! Nursing takes preparation beforehand, a real desire, a suitable, unselfish, mental state, and usually the absence of certain drugs, especially tobacco and alcohol. It also demands regular, sensible behavior on the part of the mother. The value of nursing is more easily understood if we remember that the baby comes from the warm uterus, or womb—is almost a part of the mother—into a cold, hostile world. Usually he is placed in a crib by himself and if he cries, a rubber nipple is stuck into his mouth—a shock from which he probably never entirely recovers in his subconscious mind. On the other hand, if he is left beside his mother, feeling her warmth, and when hungry is placed to her warm breast, the shock is minimized. And nursing should be continued as long as possible within reason. However, the first six to twelve weeks are the most important, and any nursing at all is a help.

In fact, the mother should voluntarily become a part of her baby for the first one and a half to two years. The papoose on its cradleboard, and the Egyptian mother who carries her baby out into the fields with her are good examples. This close communion of mother and baby is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, factor in producing emotional stability in the child. And a mother who misses this period of close association misses something very important to her in her role of an unselfish, loving parent. A mother's chief gift is love plus self; likewise the father although to a lesser degree, especially during the infant stage.

Although a close association of mother and baby and a feeling of security in the parents through complete faith in their Maker are important in giving a secure basis to a child's emotional problems, there are other very important factors. First, a stable home is desirable, even if it is only a trailer. A child needs something called a home for his own. It is better to have a house, a community, and neighbors.

Secondly, adult problems should not be passed on to the children. All parents would do well to read the book, "Mamma's Bank Account." Because he has an immature mind with which to reason a child who is continually bombarded with adult problems makes mountains out of mole hills. Unknown to the parents, the child worries for hours over insignificant trifles; this tends to produce in his mind an apprehensive, fearful, subconscious, emotional status. Adult problems may be discussed with children if necessary, but the problems should be placed on a childhood level. We may tell our children the facts, but not our worries or apprehensions. And how we tell them—our own emotional state—is more important to them than what we say. The old saying, "What you are speaks so loud that I cannot hear a word you say," still holds true.

Third, there are other fears of basic importance in this connection. These include the fear of hunger, loss of parents, destruction of the home by fire, death, poverty, thunder, lightning, persecution, and such like. It does no good to "pooh-pooh" these fears. If we keep such fears out of our own conversation and acts we will go a long way; but should they appear, a gentle consoling attitude with no appearance of fear on our part will eventually eliminate most of the difficulty.

As I previously mentioned, the church is an invaluable anchor. If the subconscious mind of the child is really ingrained with the love of God, even the parents' action in later years will have little long range influence. To be taught that right is right and that eventually good will triumph is a long step in climbing the stairs to being a good citizen and having a good personality.

I have found that rural schools have many advantages over larger city schools. In the large school the student is merely a number, so to speak. If the school is small, the child regards it more as his school—not only something to defend, but something that needs him and in turn something upon which he can depend.

At this point I want to emphasize the actual harm in sending children to school too early in life. As we should not saddle the child with adult problems, so we should not impose learning upon him when he is not ready emotionally to accept it. Every psychiatrist to whom I have talked about this subject has agreed. In fact one frankly stated that children who went to school too young were the basis of many of his major problems. True, Johnny may pass his grade—in fact he may excel, but it would be better in most cases if he failed and repeated the grade. I honestly believe that every child should be seven years old or older before starting the first grade. Before that age he needs his parents far more than a knowledge of the three R's!

The broken home is the last but not least factor that I wish to mention. A child's parents are his bulwark against trouble—they are closely akin to God in his estimation. What can be the effect upon Johnny's life if mother and father are constantly quarreling and fighting? If divorce comes, the effect is maximal. Each parent takes pains to tell Johnny what a "louse" the other is. As a result he has no one to whom he can turn. Neither of his parents are trustworthy! Where can he go? Where is security? Where is justice? Where is love? WHERE IS GOD? His parents have told him about God, and he can no longer believe them!

If there is parental discord to the point of separation, the parents can at least keep it to themselves as far as possible. If separation is necessary, neither parent should take away the child's security by undermining his faith in the other parent. They should simply state that they cannot live together. If father is all bad, why did mother ever marry him? Perhaps mother is unreliable too.

Divorce is rarely necessary, but when it is, the poor, bewildered, frustrated, unhappy children should be left out of it as much as is humanly possible.

The Problem of Rejection

This fundamental childhood problem only recently has begun to be properly appreciated and evaluated. It has always existed. Furthermore, all children are to some extent rejected by their parents. A child cannot help interfering with his parents' life and behavior, no matter how welcome he is. What mother has never said, "If I only had a moment's peace!" or, "Your noise will drive me crazy"? Or what parent has never been angry at a child without a true cause? Let us now carefully examine ourselves and not be ashamed of the results. Have we ever gone to Yellowstone Park or its equivalent in order to be free from the care of the youngster and brought him a gift in return for staying home?

As I previously stated, we are all imperfect, and any child upsets his parents' life, ambitions, economy, pleasure, youth, physical form, and health no matter how much they love him or how much richer he makes their lives as a whole.

And parents' rejection cannot be hid from the child, no matter how much they may try to hide it. This knowledge becomes a part of his personality pattern and leaves its wake of insecurity in his emotional make-up. The parents are the child's world (especially the mother) during the first few years; and any barrier between them, real or apparent, makes an impression on the child's feeling of security, so much so that it may even effect his behavior as a parent later on.

Parents may try to cover their feelings by abuse and neglect (in extreme cases starvation, sadism, locking in rooms, cruel punishment) or overindulgence, overprotection, and fawning, particularly in public, all of which tend to keep the child infantile. Actually there is little difference between these two forms of behavior on the part of the parent. A mother who makes a show of her affection in public may be a cruel despot in the confines of the home.

Usually one child is easier to reject than the others. He may be slower in speech, walking, thinking, learning toilet habits, or more noisy. It becomes easy to compare him with the others and to remind him how his behavior is inferior. In short one child upsets his parents' routine and desires more, and they reject him to a greater degree.

The child's reaction to being rejected is usually to clam up and not appear to want love or company, or to become a problem child or bully. Such a youngster actually wants love desperately, but does everything to keep it away in order to teach himself that he does not really need it. Behind every problem child is one or two problem parents. A third reaction, though less common, is for a rejected child to feign illness in order to obtain the wanted care and attention. In fact, attention is so important that some children will actually bring on severe punishment by misbehavior in order to get it.

Because of the marked importance of this problem, let us say a few more words about the types of rejection. First, there is the obvious rejection—more or less complete. Such cases are most commonly observed in the unwed mother and the "love child" of a married person. Again, a parent who renews, particularly after being divorced, may find the child coming between him (or her) and the new companion, especially after new children come as a result of the union. And there are few stepparents who do not partially or largely reject a stepchild. The lucky children are those who are adopted out early or even taken by a relative or friend who really wants them.

I once had a female patient who was an illegitimate child and who in turn bore a child out of wedlock. I asked her if she wanted the child and she replied, "No. My mother didn't want me. Give the little b----- to someone else." Fortunately for the child this was done, and the baby has grown into a normal, well-balanced youngster.

A second group comprises those children born to very selfish parents. Such parents may have been an "only child," or more commonly a rejected child. With these parents, especially mothers, children interfere with a career, business, social habits, and such like. The woman may worry about her breasts and figure and will not nurse the child. Not infrequently the woman tends to be mannish in habits. Strangely enough, these women, actually knowing their guilt, come to clinics to have the physicians reassure them that they are doing all that can be expected of them.

The commonest form of rejection, almost universal to some degree, is the hidden rejection. Such may be temporary or permanent. Most women undergo such a mix-up of feelings and unconsciously have a feeling of guilt for actual or imagined misbehavior. Most parents want to change and do not know how. Some of the common examples or possibilities are:

1. When the child is a moron, idiot, or a cripple.
2. When the onset of pregnancy occurs immediately after marriage.
3. When all the children are of the same sex—and they "want a boy." Then they name a girl a boy's name (or vice versa), branding the child for life with the rejection stigma.
4. An unwanted pregnancy. "If I had known. . . ." says the mother to the child. "You wouldn't be here." This is

"Quotes" From the Priesthood Conference

Compiled by Charles D. Neff

THE PRIESTHOOD CONFERENCE is over, yet it lives on in the lives of those who attended it. Here are some quotations gleaned from that eventful week:

"This is an experience in learning that has been long overdue."—Alfred Frey

"Such a conference as this is equal to the best of several reunions."—Everad Kennedy

"I have an idea that priesthood members who have attended this conference will go out of here with the concept that the church has grown out of its infancy to the extent that it can take its place in the various communities in which it works."—H. D. Hintz

"It is good just to be here."—Ivan Vallier

"The conference has been a success, and the contribution that we have made to each other through our fellowship here has given us a high spiritual uplift."—Ralph Hardy

"It is impossible to estimate the spiritual worth of this conference."—James Kelly

"This should be the beginning of a long line of similar experiences. To me it is like getting ants in my spiritual pants. I can't sit still any more."—Dave Shupe

"We have learned here that service is the only medium the gospel thrives in."—J. L. Jones

"I think we ought to do something about this marvelous work instead of just wonder."—Eugene Crandell

"Let's quit serving roast pastor and hashed choir for family dinner."—Milton Broadfoot.

"When you take a name off the prospect list, be sure you place it on the active membership list."—Art Dixon

"Young men need companionship, not paternalism."—Richard Carter

"The art of democracy is thinking independently together."—Roy Cheville

"If you have to disagree, disagree agreeably. . . . The branch president is the head, not a figurehead."—Wallace Smith

"The purpose of stewardship is soul development. . . . Stewardship is God's gift to the Restoration. . . . The financial statement is a means of baring the soul of man to God."—G. L. DeLapp

"Leadership is persuading people to work together. . . . A wise man knows where his strength is and isn't."—F. Henry Edwards

"When the church forgets about its children, the principle of apostasy is in force."—Reed Holmes

"Today I shall walk and talk and study with servants of God. Their influence will shelter me against temptation and remind me of the best I know. They will teach me to share, to minister, and to pray. What more could there be in heaven?"—A morning revelation from one of the priesthood men.

It isn't just the prayers we offer,

It isn't the things that we say,

It isn't the amount that we suffer,
Nor the penalties we're forced to pay.

It isn't that our souls may be gospel shod,

It isn't what others believe us to be,
It's just what we are in the sight of God,

That counts, after all, in eternity.

It's doing kind acts along the highway of life,

The easing of burdens, and the hearts we heal

Of the travelers we meet in this world of strife.

Caught up in Christ's message of loving appeal.

Evangelist R. W. Scott

A total of 179 ordained men attended the conference exclusive of the staff. They were as follows; three evangelists, twelve high priests, seventy-nine elders, fifty priests, sixteen teachers, and nineteen deacons.

For twenty years Renoir was a prey to rheumatism. His fingers were distorted. The brush he held between thumb and forefinger, the palm of his hand being cut and painful. His back, too, was in a sad state, and had to be perpetually treated. To work he had to be placed in his chair, which was moved up and down. So to the end he worked, with his poor, twisted hand, painting in pain sweet pictures of young girls on banks of flowers. I shall never forget Renoir's reply to Matisse, who expostulated with him.

"Why do any more, master? Why torture yourself?"

To which Renoir replied, "The pain passes, but the beauty remains."

The Church Can Help in These Troubled Times

By D. B. Sorden

RECENTLY WE HAVE HEARD of many young men leaving college because of the uncertainty of the future, fearing that at any time they will be called into military service. Other young people are breaking laws, saying that they have no feeling of security and are upset concerning their future. We also find older people blaming world conditions for their swerving from the path of duty. We all know of wars and rumors of wars and famine and turmoil in various places. We are living in critical times.

A crisis is a situation in which the normal flow of life is interrupted. It is a time when individuals or society stand at a place where a choice must be made. Critical times are met in various ways: with demoralizing fear, wishful thinking, blindness to fact, cynicism, or frantic changing from one activity to another. Of course, such times may be viewed as days when eternal and spiritual values hang in the balance and when all of our reserve should be called upon for analysis and solution of our problems. Thus, a crisis may be looked upon as an opportunity in which individuals or society can move forward. In such days the sure prophetic voice of the church speaks.

The church looks with keen interest at the needs of its people today. It draws upon the ages of secular and sacred human experiences and benefits from the promises of contemporary revelation and so can speak with a voice of authority and helpfulness. Its declarations are not merely the results of desire or of wishful thinking. They are the affirmations of a life-transforming religion or way of life. The church not only points the direction in which a man should go but guides him all along the way.

RIGHTEOUSNESS IS EVERLASTING

To begin with, the church says that righteousness is enduring. It is fundamental. It is basic. No matter what problems may arise in life, this truth remains: righteousness must be maintained. The church is positive that cleanness, decency, love, and brotherhood outlive the many opposite and disintegrating influences in life. Persons and nations not founded on righteous living eventually go down in self-defeat. "As the whirlwind passeth, so the wicked is no more, but the righteous is an everlasting foundation."—Proverbs 10: 25.

Dr. Roy A. Cheville once said: "Our God is a righteous God, and if we want to do business with him, we must be righteous, too." God made our earth and the worlds and created us. In the last analysis we are subject to him. We can deal with him only on his terms. Now here is the testimony of Nephi, "I know whom I have trusted. My God hath been my support; he hath led me through mine afflictions and hath preserved me. He hath filled me with his love."—II Nephi 3: 34. So, though trouble be on every side of us, though confusion is in the hearts of many, the church says that we must stay near to God and live righteous lives. Then, no matter what confronts us, we shall be the victors. The church says to live righteously.

YOU ARE WORTH WHILE

In the second place the church tells us that each person is supremely worth while. Each individual has infinite worth in the sight of God and has potential communion with him. This thought is important to the individual himself and has great value in his relation to other persons. This means that I must not do anything which will lessen my value to God or to society. It means that I should do everything within my power to develop my character and personality. I dare not be selfish, snobbish, or egotistical, or think ill of any man—no matter what his race or degree of development. If the individual is of supreme worth, it means that all social and economic institutions are secondary in importance to the individual. Even the family is but a means to the end that the primary unit of society, man, shall have every opportunity to grow to his greatest stature. So, all social and industrial institutions are merely agencies for the realization of personal well-being.

We know that persons grow in a society of mutual support. We know, too, that individualism (insisting on one's own way) disrupts and defeats the over-all well-being of man. We are certain also that the really religious man is creative and participates in the common endeavor. The Bible states: "There is joy in the presence of the angels of heaven over one sinner that repenteth." The same Book says: "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones." In the Doctrine and Covenants we find the statement of Jesus: "I am the true light that enlighteth every man that cometh into the world." From these statements of the worth of each person, we should see that no crisis or trouble which might confront us should in any sense cause us to be cast down or discouraged or cause us to swerve from the path of duty, which is to live righteously.

OUTSIDE HELP AVAILABLE TO YOU

The church also speaks another important word: "Inspiration is available to you today." Crises provide opportunity for the problem-solving function of inspiration. Frequently it is when we face problems or crises that faith in divine powers and all of our own intelligence are so blended that the wholesome expression of the gifts of inspiration are possible and probable in human experience. Often when the church and individuals are in dire straits they have the tenacity that prayer requires to be successful. Desperation sometimes drives us to exceed our casual and half-hearted petitions to God, and it is only when we are desperately in earnest that our prayers are heard. It is then that God leans a little farther down toward us and helps us. In our problem the church says that we can get God's help. President Edwards has written a book, the title of which is God Our Help. In these troubled and critical times we need the help of the One who so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that we might have help. In I Corinthians 12: 7, Paul says, "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."

The divine purpose goes on continually. Man usually understands only a small part of that plan and only a small portion of the universe. One reason some of us become discouraged or weary in well-doing is because we see ourselves as isolated individuals. Something goes wrong with our plans or hopes and we think, "Oh, well, it doesn't matter anyway. What's the use?" and we often give up. But each of us is a part of the divine plan and we do count. God's great purpose is often delayed because we do not give him greater support. He is not frustrated, because from the beginning he planned that he would work out his purpose through men, and he knew that sometimes they would give up. He needs our co-operation. He is doing all that he can to create and develop a beloved community with the material at hand. We are that material. We are his hope. He waits on us. We must remember that the achievement of the di-

WHERE DOES TIME GO?" Probably each one of us has asked this question without ever expecting it to be answered.

For a moment let's consider how to send time on its way rather than asking where it goes. Let us suppose time returns to God, its maker, with each minute carrying our name and the manner in which we spent it. If we could see the minutes we have wasted compiled into days, weeks, and months, we would most likely be more careful how we send them on their way.

It is hardly fair for us to think of time as our own. It is given to us to use in helping our fellow men. In wasting it, or throwing it away, we destroy the means whereby we could bring our friends and loved ones to know about Christ.

I heard the other day that once, while talking with his angels, the Devil said, "We have to figure out a new way to destroy mankind." The first angel replied, "I'll go to earth and tell people there is no Christ." The second angel declared that would be no good—he would go tell the people they were living all right, and God accepted their ways. "Oh no," came the suggestion of the third angel, "I shall go and tell them there is a Christ and they must live right—sometime, but no need to start today. Tomorrow will be soon enough." The third angel certainly has been busy.

GOD GIVES US TIME with which to live our lives in a manner pleasing to him—time for us to build his Zion; time to evangelize the world. However he has warned us that time is running out.

"My kingdom languishes because of many who could have given so much have given so little" (From an admonition given through Ward A. Hougas at the Colorado Springs Reunion, 1949). This could refer to time, talent, or money, but I should like to consider it from the standpoint of talent. In a church school class I talked to my students about talents; most of them told me they were sure they had no talent. Perhaps this is the trouble—people have convinced themselves they have no talent, and are unable to recognize and develop what they do have.

A seed which is planted but does not grow soon decays. So it is with our talents. If they are not developed and used they will be taken from us. Christ tells us, "From him that hath not obtained other talents shall be taken away even that which he hath received." To be a steward over our talents we must cultivate them as we would the seeds in a garden. There may be something which stands in our way. If we can remove that obstacle we should do so. It might be a worthless daily habit which will be hard to break, but if we are going to be wise and faithful servants, we had better break it. If, on the other hand, the obstacle has been placed in our lives by someone else, then we must find a way around it, so that it will not interfere with our talents. Talents are gifts from God; we should use them for the benefit of others.

Is money the root of all evil? It depends on how we use it. Money, when spent for the benefit of other people, could be considered the "root of all good." Money will play an important part in building Zion and evangelizing the world.

However, we must look at money in a different light than our other two stewardships. When we spend time wisely and develop our talents we are molding our lives and forming answers to the judgment day questions. The way we spend our money will help determine our future, of course, but money itself does not build character.

When we, as wise stewards, put our money, time, and talent to good use the result will be better homes, communities, nations—and eventually Zion.

A Builder of the Reorganization

Selections from the Memoirs of William Wallace Blair of the First Presidency

Part Six: The Gathering Army of the Lord

A CONFERENCE BLESSED

ON the twenty-seventh day of September, 1862, President Joseph Smith, Bishop I. L. Rogers, Elders James Blakeslee, J. Harvey Blakeslee, George Rarick, and C. G. Lanphear came to Little Sioux from Illinois, via Council Bluffs, en route to the fall conference at Galland's Grove, leaving Elder John Shippy at the North Star Branch. . . .

Passing on to Galland's Grove the fifth, they organized the conference on the sixth, with Joseph Smith as president and J. W. Gillen and Charles Derry as clerks. The attendance was large and the ministerial reports very encouraging, showing large accessions to the church. This was evidence that the Lord aided and sustained the ministry most satisfactorily, and that the gifts and graces of the Spirit attended their ministrations in a great measure, proving the work to be of God. . . .

Elder J. W. Briggs said to this conference:

It has been my fortune to be a witness of the renewal of this latter-day work, and I am prepared to testify that it is, and will be, the church and kingdom of God. I am willing to preach the gospel in any place where I may be called. This work is all beneath the heavens that can engross my attention. My all is identified with and wrapped up in it. I am the church's servant, and if it says to me, "Go here," or "Go there," I am ready. . . .

Of the conference the clerk had this to say:

I must here say that we had a glorious time. A great many people were present, eager to catch the words of life. . . . Those whose hearts had for the last seventeen years beat with anxious desires and whose lips offered up many fervent prayers that the rightful "heir" to the holy priesthood might stand in his place as the shepherd of the flock of God were now amply repaid. They forgot their toils and wanderings and raised their songs of praise and adoration to the Most High. . . . It was a rich treat to see those, whose heads blossomed with age, and who had stood shoulder-to-the-wheel in the days of Joseph the First, ready again with their influence and their all. . . . Near thirty persons were received into the church during conference, and many returned to their homes with a determination to lead their families and friends into "the good old paths," that they might find rest to their souls. . . .

THE CHURCH PRESS—1862

At this conference steps were taken to procure the first press owned by the church. The ministers went to their various fields resolute, cheered, and strengthened, firmly united in the love of Christ.

Agreeable to conference appointment (October 6-9, 1862), I called the attention of the western Saints to the need of funds to purchase a printing press and office fixtures; a hearty, prompt response was made.

Calls for ministerial services were so numerous and pressing that it was no unusual thing for the missionaries, many of them, to hold meetings five or ten times each week during the fall, winter, and early spring months, besides visiting investigators wherever opportunity could be found.

"ALL THINGS COMMON"—1863

About this time a very decided effort was made by some to promulgate and practically introduce, "all things common" in respect to property matters, they citing the practice of the primitive saints (Acts 2: 44; 4: 32; also Book of Mormon) as proof that it was good and ordaind of God. Others with myself taught that there was no commandment authorizing such an order of things; that the tendency of it was in the direction of idleness, carelessness, and general disorder; that it was in conflict with the fact of man's personal agency, responsibility, and accountability; that Jesus plainly taught the principle of separate stewardships in the kingdom of heaven, making each person accountable for the number of "talents" committed to him as set forth in Matthew 25: 14-30; and further that Joseph the Seer, whom God called and qualified to organize and set in order his church in these last days, rejected the "all things common" theory in Kirtland, proclaiming the principle of separate stewardships, including personal accountability to God and the church. After due investigation and reflection, general unity prevailed in this matter, and thus a theory tending to division and discord gave place to order and love of the Lord.

SUCCESSION IN THE PRESIDENCY

May 9, 1865, after prayer and committing myself and family to God, I parted from them to prosecute a mission to St. Louis, Missouri, as requested by the late conference. I proceeded on to Davenport and New Buffalo, Iowa, looking after the interests of the branches in these places, and then went to Burlington and Nauvoo, Illinois, on the fifteenth. While there I had an interview with Sister Emma, the widow of Joseph the Seer, and her son, Alexander. She stated that in the spring of 1844 a council, composed of a number of the leading authorities of the church, was held in Nauvoo. At its close Elder G. J.

Adams came and said to her, rejoicing greatly, that one matter was now settled: they now knew who Joseph's successor would be—it was little Joseph, for he had just seen him set apart under the hands of his father and others.

Brother Alexander H. Smith then related that Elder James Whitehead, a one-time secretary of Joseph the Seer, said to him not long before that in the spring of 1844 just prior to the death of the Seer that "Young Joseph" was set apart in a council by his father and others to be his successor, and that Bishop Whitney, Doctor Bernhisel, W. W. Phelps, Alpheus Cutler, Willard Richards, and, he thought, John Taylor, were present on that occasion; also that Bishop Whitney held the horn of oil and further that Joseph the Seer afterward stated to the Saints from the public stand that he was no longer their prophet. Putting his hand on young Joseph's head, he said, "This is your prophet. I am going to rest."

SON CHARLES BLESSED—1865

The second day of September I received a letter from my wife stating that our son Charles had his arm broken. That night I made his case one of special prayer, and I saw him in a night vision, looking ruddy and well, the afflicted arm swinging leisurely at his side. I said to him, "Charley, how is your arm?"

He replied, "Oh, it is all right now."

I said to him further, "Does it not pain you any?"

"No," he replied, "it has pained me none since I had it administered to."

A few days after this I received a letter from my wife stating nearly, if not exactly, the very words used by my son in the night vision.

Many Times Better

By D. O. Chesworth

A FEW YEARS AGO in Michigan an architect, who had volunteered to design a church building for us, inquired about our point of contact with the world by asking for our theme or emphasis. Someone answered, "Our message is one of light and truth." Consequently the church building today in that city reflects "light" in a very pronounced way.

On one occasion, Jesus speaking to the people said:

Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you; for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth. While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light.—John 12: 35, 36.

A supplement to this challenge is the invitation to "let your light so shine before this world, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven" (Matthew 5: 18).

After generations of darkness, commonly referred to as the Dark Ages, there came the light of the latter-day dispensation in what we refer to as the eleventh hour. This light was authorized by our Lord, who is the chief cornerstone (Luke 20: 17). There are definite purposes to be achieved in this restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and it was not by accident that the restoring process took place in Joseph's land.

When we concentrate our attention on the Restoration, project it before those with whom we are acquainted, recommend it to our friends, sacrifice for it, and bask in its life-giving light, we are advising others that the New Testament church which gave prominent place to the ministry of Jesus is now available on the earth for all who will accept. We further recall that the existing bodies of religious believers did not offer a complete program of worship for Jesus, which condition made it necessary for him to declare, "I will build my church." In his church there are specific features which are necessary for the world today, one being his "kingdom philosophy." The Master "went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom; and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of diseases among the people who believed on his name" (Matthew 4: 22). Jesus continued to admonish, "Wherefore, seek not the things of this world but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matthew 6: 38).

WHEN JOHN THE BAPTIST brought back to the earth the Aaronic Priesthood on that memorable day in May, 1829, he was commissioned by Peter, James, and John who held the keys of the kingdom. The restoration of the priesthood to two young men, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, accomplished a major achievement in the nineteenth century. This authorized heavenly messenger was to participate in an act timed by our Heavenly Father. The church, now established by divine will as a result of this decision, should offer a program and an opportunity to worship which is many times better than any offering available elsewhere.

Recently, in the East Central States Mission, a devoted church school teacher was discussing the deplorable limitations of some of our standing ministers who, by their ordination, have been called to preach the gospel. Further surprise came when she stated she was so hungry for powerful preaching that, had her own conversion not been so spectacular, she would gladly attend a neighborhood church regularly where on a few occasions she has gone with her Latter Day Saint husband for preaching services. There, she testifies, she has heard sermons many times better than those offered in her own congregation. Her statement gave me the title for this message.

Many times better! Do you think this sister was correct? I think so. Members from other branches may have had such experiences to share, too. Surely this situation would not be so predominant, however.

WHEN the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has the angel's message for sermon material those who preach should present a message many times better than is to be found anywhere else. On one occasion a member went with her prospective son-in-law to a church in Highland Park, Michigan, which was outstanding from an architectural standpoint. The next Sunday they attended our church service in the same city. The nonmember, making his estimate of both services, commented, "If we had that sermon by Evangelist Booth delivered in the beautiful church edifice of this other denomination we would have the ideal." Although, as children of light, we should excel in all fields I rejoiced because this inquirer indicated that a Latter Day Saint sermon was much better than those presented by the minister of the large church.

Today I read of the conversion of Dr. L. H. Lehmann, who resigned his post as a Catholic priest and rendered an outstanding ministry in Protestant fields. He told of an experience with a young man who awaited the electric chair as a result of misdeeds in society. This minister observed:

The injection of morphine administered by the doctor ten minutes before he was led to the chair calmed him somewhat. It suddenly dawned upon me that the doctor's single injection of morphine had brought the boy more external relief than all my administrations of the sacraments, which are believed to soothe both body and soul.—Converted Catholic Magazine, September 1950.

To his dismay this minister found that what he thought was many times better did not stand up under the test.

SOMEHOW THIS PHRASE, "many times better," appeals to me. I like to place it in the same category with "each one win one." I don't suggest that we go around our areas of assignment or our towns and cities with an air of dominance and this slogan, but if we feel in our hearts and minds that the angel's message is many times better than anything else this world offers we will reveal it in our conduct, our

Church Statistics

The August issue of the Christian Herald contains the always interesting "State of the Church" article, the "Annual Report on Church Membership in the U.S.A."

The optimistic note is that the number of enrolled Christians in the country is a rising percentage of the total population. In the "good old days" of the nineteenth century church members numbered as few as 19 per cent of the population. In 1900 Christians were only 34.7 per cent of the total. "Today 55.9 per cent of our people are on church rolls."

In the list of 101 Protestant denominations, our church is number 35, with an enrollment of 124,925. President Israel A. Smith says this figure "is not up to date" and adds "I am a little surprised to see how many churches in the United States are smaller than we are."

The Methodist Church is the largest Protestant denomination, with a membership of 8,935,647. The fastest-growing group is the Southern Baptist, which gained 318,624 last year. There are two other major Baptist groups, all three having a total membership of 14,121,283.

dependence, our saintly devotion, our payment of tithes, our winning of new souls to the cause of Christ, our cleanliness, our approach to stewardship, and our dynamic testimony.

Reverting to the first quotation from John, we are admonished to walk in the light while we have it, lest darkness come upon us. Some have testified that the Restoration Church is many times better while they have walked in the light; but when darkness has been permitted to enter, they have lost the vibrancy of testimony. We must believe in the light—believe that the message of this latter day dispensation is important, believe that what we have to offer is many times better. Believing this let us work diligently to "each one win one" in 1951.

The eleven top Protestant denominations have a membership of 36,000,256—a strong power if they can work together—with a greater total than all thirty-two non-Protestant denominations.

The Roman Catholics—a powerful political force as well as a church organization—now have 28,470,092, counting their children, which the Protestant statistics do not include. The other non-Protestant organizations involve no particular political factor.

It may be helpful for Protestants to remember a few historical facts. Roman Catholic missionaries were first to bring modern organized Christianity from Europe to America. They came to all South America, Mexico, and Central America, where they have a virtual monopoly; later to California, eastern Canada, Maryland, Florida, Louisiana, and in smaller numbers to other parts. Protestant settlement and expansion were largely confined to the United States and Canada. Protestants are not fighting a losing battle unless they relax and retire from the contest.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

A certain member was never against the church nor took part in worldly pleasures, was isolated and busy rearing a family. Then he learned more of the duties and became really converted. Would he be accepted as a child of God and enter Paradise at death?

This person is grieving because he thinks he may not be, although he does enjoy many spiritual blessings.
Michigan Mrs. E. C.

Answer:

Joseph Smith III had a wonderful vision of the temple which will be built on the Temple Lot in Independence, Missouri. He saw it completed and ready for use. Some members of the church were permitted to enter, others not. Two swords appeared to fit in an upright position in recesses in each side of the frame of the door. When some persons tried to enter, the swords, which appeared to be hinged, would drop to a horizontal position preventing entrance. If the person persisted in his effort to enter, the swords would vibrate and clash in a terrifying manner.

President Smith was surprised to see some enter whom he thought were unworthy, while others he judged worthy were barred by the swords from entering. He concluded human judgment at times is incompetent to judge character.

Christ said to the thief on the cross, "Verily I say unto thee, Today shalt thou be with me in paradise."—Luke 23: 43, 44. Only Christ could judge if the thief were worthy of paradise.

It has been pointed out that the thief may have been a follower of Christ, but in a moment of weakness gave way to temptation. He seemed to have known of Christ's mission.

Our brother is very much concerned regarding his standing before the Lord. We believe that from the description given of him we can to some extent render "righteous" judgment. He has been a loyal member of the church, has kept himself from the evils of the world, has done his duty as a father in rearing his family, was isolated from church privileges and encouragement of church officials, but at times experienced the blessings of the Lord's Spirit. He now realizes he has to some extent neglected the Lord's work. We believe it is to his credit that he has underestimated, in his humility, his standing before the Lord instead of assuming a self-righteous attitude. To aid him in making his calling and election sure, we suggest the following. He should subscribe for the little magazine published by the Herald—Daily Bread. If there are children still in the home or grandchildren living in the town, he could start a church school in the home, obtaining the proper quarterlies from Herald House, also Zion's Hope and Stepping Stones. If possible, he should attend reunions. If he has not done so he should observe the law of tithing. Additional church activities will eventually bring to him the assurance that he will receive the most glorious plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee a ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord."—Matthew 25: 21.

C. ED. MILLER

Question:

Was not Peter's sin in denying Christ equally as serious as that of Judas? Was it not a sin against the Holy Ghost?

Iowa

F. S.

Answer:

No. Judas' sin sprang from an evil heart of unbelief and personal antagonism of long development; it was committed with a personal knowledge of the innocency and integrity of Jesus and against a thorough knowledge of the truth. His sin was committed in the spirit of rebelliousness and with deliberate and hateful intent to destroy the very life of Him whom he so wickedly betrayed—and all this without consistent cause.

With Peter the whole circumstance was different. There was no hatred of Jesus, no unbelief, no estrangement, no disposition or desire to repudiate or cast him off. Peter had had a deep love for his Master which he never surrendered. That same night in the garden he had faced a raging mob and fought with the sword in His defense. At the risk of his own life he followed his Lord as he was being led by the threatening mob to the Jewish council which placed Him under semi-secret and illegal trial, already bent upon His destruction. Peter in following carried no word of accusation, his only possible intent being to render what saving help he might. Love and loyalty were his only motivation.

During the long-drawn trial when Peter was charged with being a disciple, his fear of dire consequences moved him to take refuge in ignorance. "I know not the man" he said. Apparently his failure at this critical moment was due to human weakness and fear, not to any disposition to speak against Christ. It was human nature asserting itself in a moment of crisis which Peter was not quick enough to see nor strong enough to control. His act was not deliberate. The moment he heard the cock crow he recalled the Lord's warning of this very thing, and he went out and cried bitterly. His mistake had broken his heart. Those who sin against the Holy Ghost do not shed penitential tears.

It is a remarkable fact that Jesus, after his resurrection, spake no word of reproof to Peter for his weakness, though he probably did allude to the incident with utmost gentleness and charity when he said, "Simon Peter, . . . lovest thou me?" Peter must have felt the implication for he said, "Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." The incident had created no rift between them. Peter had not denied Christ as the Son of God, neither his truth. He had not rebelled against him nor sought to injure him. Sin against the Holy Ghost is always willful, deliberate, rebellious, and hateful; but this was not Peter's sin.

Report on Black Hills Reunion

By E. Y. Hunker

THE REUNION COMMITTEE, under the chairmanship of Elder E. C. Judson, who is pastor for the nonresident members in the unorganized territory of Wyoming and Western South Dakota, began planning a reunion some weeks ago for these scattered members and groups. There was a deep desire and need for such a gathering, and through the untiring efforts and a splendid spirit of co-operation on the part of the Saints and friends, a reunion was made possible.

It had been ten years since the last previous reunion had served these people. Situations and conditions had wrought changes, and it seemed no longer advisable to try to hold a reunion at the foot of Devil's Tower, where former reunions were held. Persistent searching resulted in acquiring the grounds owned by the Custer, South Dakota, Chamber of Commerce called "The Bob Marshall Camp." This camp is situated in the Black Hills some seven or eight miles from the town of Custer, and in one of the most beautiful settings of natural scenery it ever has been my privilege to enjoy.

Here the Saints began to assemble on the afternoon of Sunday, July 8. That evening there was an organizational meeting for the reunion. Apostle P. M. Hanson and Brother C. H. Hobart were present to give their ministry. The local workers rallied loyally to the call for help in various departments. Brother E. C. Judson and his associate members of the reunion committee worked hard. Virtually everything was done by volunteer service: the kitchen and dining room work; the staffing of teachers and workers for the various departments, et cetera. Brother and Sister George Meford, assisted by Brother and Sister Gail Bronson, volunteered to care for kitchen and cooking. They were assisted each day by volunteer workers from those who were eighty years old down to those who were six. The music was in charge of Brother and Sister F. O. Weddel (Freddie and Donna) and was of the best. They were assisted by Sisters LaVon and Betty Lusha of Chicago, who with associates of their family came to enjoy the reunion. There were visitors, too, from Wisconsin, Nebraska, Idaho, Missouri, and Montana.

While this reunion was not a big one, from the outset it was one of the best demonstrations of co-operation I have ever witnessed. There was no charge to attendants for meals or cabin accommodations. All expenses were met by voluntary contributions which not only made possible the paying of all bills incident to this reunion, but supplies sufficient to allow a down payment to secure the camp for another year.

There was no harder working nor more efficient person on the grounds than Dale Larsen, secretary and treasurer of the reunion committee and in general charge of the facilities. Much credit goes to him for the handling of the temporal affairs, in which he was assisted by a number of brethren.

Mrs. Nell Harder of Casper, Wyoming, daughter of J. F. Curtis, willingly took over the responsibility of teaching the women's class and directing the women's work of the reunion. Sister Donna Weddle accepted supervision of the children's work; Mae Mitchell, Barbara Larsen, Dorothy Snearly, and others helped her.

The young people's work was supervised by Brother Hobart, who with assistants did a fine job. There are many who never will forget the evensong periods that closed daily activities.

Apostle Hanson, Elder Hobart, and I shared the preaching services, to which consistent support was given by the reunion attendants. Apostle Hanson taught the general class each day, with good response and participation.

The classwork was of a high order. The prayer services each morning were of excellent quality, all ages participating: even little children of four offered touching prayers. There was a growth in understanding as well as the expression of the underlying desires of the soul. The movement of the Spirit of God was gentle and searching; this touched many hearts with comforting and enlightening influence. No spectacular manifestations were received, but there was revealing power, as will be evidenced in the calling of men to service in priesthood office as made known by the light of the Holy Spirit.

After a week of such fellowship with one another and with Deity, those attending left for home at noon on Sunday, July 15, with new decision, deepened joy in the Lord's service, and spirits revived and strengthened. The hope for the future is brighter and the bonds stronger because of this reunion. I am grateful for the service and ministry experienced in this co-operative effort. It in itself is prophetic of the reality of the kingdom life the church is commissioned to help bring to pass.

They don't want to ostracize themselves by failing to participate in what the crowd does. At home, they say to mother or father, "Everybody does it!" as if that were a good reason. Thus a single boy or girl of low standards can persuade a whole group to do what it should not.

* * * * *

Men and women, young or old, can rise above the animal level of thinking of the sheep. No one has to imitate. It is not necessary to let others decide what one is to do. Human dignity requires a certain amount of courage and independence—a little spunk when it is necessary.

Jesus said, "Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets."—Luke 6:26.

If a man is not better than a sheep, it isn't because of anything the Creator did to him. When a man lives on the level of an animal, it is because of some low choice he has accepted from unthinking or unworthy companions. It is something he allows to be done to him.

* * * * *

Not everything about the sheep is bad, if he will follow the right leader. One of the most beautiful of all the discourses of Jesus is that on the Good Shepherd in the tenth chapter of the gospel of John.

I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

We are inspired by the parable of the lost sheep in Matthew 18:12.

There are times when we should follow the examples of others, but we should choose our mentors carefully.

A man is better than a sheep—if he remains a man, and not a sheep.

It is the work of the gospel to rescue us from the false shepherds and bring us to Christ, the Good Shepherd.

A Personal Testimony

This morning as I sat down to meditate and read Daily Bread before beginning my work, a deep appreciation for the ministry of God through people came over me, so I reached for my pad and pencil and began to write.

I sensed more keenly my relationship with my brothers and sisters; I have absorbed so many things from the ministry of others that I feel I am a part of them.

A few weeks ago I attended a women's institute in Port Huron. I wanted to go for the two days, but in talking to some of the women and inviting them to go I found that many excused themselves because of their duties at home, so I began to think that maybe I was wrong in going away and leaving my family.

While I was packing my overnight bag, my son came by and asked, "Going away again, Mother?"

I said, "Yes," and told him about it.

He said, "You certainly don't mind leaving your husband, do you?"

I thought, Why should he care if I leave my husband? It must be wrong for me to go. I dropped everything and went to my usual place of meditation and began to analyze why I was going away. While sitting there I picked up the Bible and opened it to Luke 14: 16-24. After reading this I felt that my excuse wasn't any better than the ones given by the people in that parable, and God didn't accept theirs. I went to bed a little more contented.

In the morning I arose at five o'clock humming "We Thank Thee O God for a Prophet." The words of the last two lines kept going through my mind: "And on to eternal perfection, the honest and faithful will go, while those who reject this glad message, shall never such happiness know."

After listening to the teaching of Apostle and Mrs. George Mesley and sensing the many hours of labor spent by those who planned this occasion I truly realized it as a spiritual feast that had been spread for the women of the church. After enjoying their ministry for two days, I felt that if others had made a sacrifice for my going they would no longer feel it a sacrifice, for I knew as a result of this experience I would be a better wife, mother, and friend.

A few weeks later I had the privilege of going to visit Kirtland Temple with other members of Flint Branch. There again I placed my feet on higher ground. I sensed the value of the people who had gone on before and was made to appreciate the ministry of our present priesthood.

The prayer service at eight o'clock Sunday morning was one I shall never forget. It was followed by a preaching service that made me realize how wonderful it must have been to sit in the service when the Temple was dedicated. I had wondered how anyone could sit for eight hours on hard seats and listen to long prayers and sermons.

Brother Russell from Flint, Michigan, was assigned to preach that morning. When we assembled I said to the lady beside me, "I hope this will be short and to the point." I was tired and had been ill and felt I couldn't sit very long on those hard seats. But as Brother Russell began to preach I breathed a prayer,

"Lord, we have been blessed in our branch many times by his sermons. Help him this morning that others might be blessed too."

It seemed at that moment that I was completely transformed, forgetting my physical discomfort entirely.

I went a few days ago with some of our women to help make ready Blue Water Reunion grounds. Having worked hard the day before, I was seemingly in no condition to paint, scrub, patch walls, scour pans, or do any other thing that needed to be done, but I thought the least I could do would be to drive and furnish transportation.

Seeing others work, I felt the urge to try, so I scrubbed up the refrigerator. Soon Brother Russell came along and said they needed some painters over in the apartments. It fell my lot to go with another sister. As we went over across the grounds, I began to sing, "Jesus, mighty king in Zion . . . we will follow none but Jesus; Jesus is the life, the way. This the path in which he leads us, this the gate to endless day."

Mrs. Jennie Skinner was following behind me and suddenly I heard her singing with me as we walked to our next duty. Four other women were already working there and seemed to be enjoying every moment of it. It gave me a lift I could not have received elsewhere.

One of the women invited me to help her make an apartment ready to paint by pulling paper and patching seams in the plaster board. There we worked alone, sharing experiences and talking of the gospel. Gradually I worked my way up to a paint brush and joined with the rest. All the while I thought of those who were to occupy these apartments and of how they would be able to minister to us more efficiently as a result of our labors, having such a pleasant place in which to reside.

Seven o'clock in the evening came before we realized it, and I was a new person again, both physically and spiritually. I have been working with more vigor and strength ever since.

Distributes "Heralds" and Tracts

I want to tell some of my experiences since my handicap has kept me from doing the things I used to do in missionary work. I have made several trips to Oklahoma and each time before we leave I go to the Social Service Center and get two to four hundred old Heralds and roll two together, and put a rubber band around them. As we drive along I throw them out at the mail boxes. We have thrown out as many as four hundred going down, and as we came back they would all be picked up. Also I take several tracts and give them away.

I would advise anyone taking a vacation or a trip to do this too. One never knows how much good he can do. It is a missionary effort that costs only an effort, and those who do it will feel better.

May the Lord bless all in their efforts to serve him is my prayer.

From an Isolated Member

I want to add my testimony with other Saints that I know the Restored Gospel is divine. I have had many prayers answered, and God has often revealed himself to me through the Holy Spirit.

I am living ten miles northeast of Pampa. I would appreciate corresponding with any Saints who live in this area. My husband is not a member of any church.

A Letter From Germany

When I arrived in Germany I began trying to contact church members here. After going to the home of Brother Rhinehold Czech in Stuttgart several times and finding no one there I left a note for him at the police station next door. Last Monday I received a letter from him telling me where and when to meet him. Services are held in the music hall at Stuttgart. Here I met Brother Czech and eleven other members. The spirit in which I was received made me feel as at home as if I had been in my own congregation in Independence. At the close of the service the people insisted that I "say a few words," so with Brother Czech as interpreter, I spoke to them. I spent the remainder of the day with the Czechs, and I have never enjoyed myself more since I came to Germany. He speaks a little English and can understand me very well, so it is not difficult for us to visit.

Up to this time I have had only one desire—to hurry home to the loved ones I left. But now, since I have to stay here more than a year, I have decided to try to learn the language so that I can talk to these people in their native tongue. Already I have spent about ten hours studying German.

I look forward to having many wonderful experiences with the Saints here. They meet only twice a month as the rent on the hall is expensive and they cannot afford to hold services more often. There are twenty-five members on the roll, but some of them live several miles from Stuttgart and find it difficult to make the trip often.

Visual Aids at Home

Like many other mothers, I'm often asked, "What can I do now, Mom?" I have found a solution to this problem and think it is worth sharing.

When I helped at vacation church school, the minister in charge had two pattern books filled with Bible figures to keep restless hands busy. My class made the picture of Jesus blessing the children. The youngsters enjoyed working on it so much that my husband and I decided to order several books of figures for our own children. We thumb-tacked a two-yard square of soft green material on the dining room wall. On this the children have worked out several stories about Christ. Now they are illustrating the account of Noah and his ark. They trace, color, cut out the pictures, and pin them on the material. During the worship hour my husband reads them the story, often repeating it six or seven times, depending on how long it takes them to complete the picture. They never seem to tire of it and usually ask questions that lead to a better understanding of the story. As soon as they finish their present project, we plan to have them work out the story of the church.

This has helped us to become a more relaxed and happy family. Learning more of the work of God is always refreshing, and teaching two eager, inquisitive children is a stimulating task.

Letter to the Editor

I think the Herald has never been better than it is now. I have especially appreciated the splendid editorials by Leonard Lea and the articles on the Word of Wisdom and the Book of Mormon. Each Sunday in my adult class I make it a point to call attention to features in the current issue I think will be particularly helpful to those present.

a heartless, cruel jab at the bottom of the child's security in life.

5. The menopause child. The mother often may be emotionally unable to cope with the child, particularly a first child, no matter how much she wants it.

6. Rearing a grandchild or a friend's child.

7. A child born after a divorce or death of the husband.

8. Society or career women, who really love their children but will not give up their careers.

9. A child born to a couple in school. In such cases the parents often have to quit school, change their plans drastically, drop classes, and work part time. Try as they may, there is some temporary rejection.

10. The adopted child, particularly one who learns of the adoption by accident, or learns of being abandoned by his own parents.

11. The orphan who learns that his parents are still living.

The following poem (who wrote it I know not) presents another form of rejection. The title is

"THEY LOVED THE CHILD"

They loved the child and led him by the hand
Through fragrant fields that knew but rain-bowed storm;

They wrapped him tenderly in fleece so warm,
He never dreamed the wind that scourged the land

Drew dark and hungry blood. So well they planned—

With no fierce sting he saw the wild bees swarm;

He stood on mountain peaks, watched great clouds form,

Yet knew no weary trail, slow caravaned.
Then came the sudden day they said, "My son,
You are a man, well-bred, well-taught, full-grown.

We gave you all we had. Our task is done."

They opened wide a new and unguessed door.
He saw snow swirl, heard wolves and tempests roar.

He went out naked, weaponless, alone.

With such a complex situation as a rejection, parents will wonder what they can do. It seems so hopeless on the first glance. But actually knowing these backgrounds is the best advice that I can hope to give. Each will work out his or her own solution, which in many cases becomes somewhat complicated. There are a few simple rules to remember that may be of help. The child learns by the parents' action and behavior. It is not what a parent says but how he acts while saying it. True love, the antithesis of rejection, has its basis laid before the birth of the child, yes even when the parents themselves were children. We cannot give a gift to our children as an exchange or substitute for ourselves. There is no substitute for parents. The best bulwark against the world's problems is not kindness or indulgence, but a love that includes all we can give unselfishly. Furthermore, the child who has once been truly loved is amenable to socialization, even though he may be battered mercilessly in later childhood, by cruel acts of fate or someone's wrong doing.

How to Make Paper Flowers and Party Decorations, by Natalie Morgan. Grosset and Dunlap, $2.98.

PAPER HANDCRAFT has a long and interesting history. It has served in ancient Chinese religious rites, and in later centuries as a fashionable pastime for women. It is still popular, with added value as a practical handskill, which can be, in many ways, as profitable as any other skill practiced in the home. And it can be as aesthetically satisfying as any other form of artistic production.

The author of this book, Natalie Morgan, is a noted paper crafter. Under her tutelage one learns the general methods of using crepe paper, then how to make flowers of that material; how to design and make novelty dolls and toys of paper; fancy costumes and their accessories for parties, plays, and pageants; table decorations and favors; decorations for halls and homes for parties, banquets, fairs, bazaars, and holidays; group paperwork projects, and how to use various forms of paper to provide indoor fun for children. Ideas for earning money by the sale of paper items are included in the book.

One is not limited in the application of the principles of working with paper to the projects detailed in the book, but only by one's imagination. Once the principles are learned and skill is secured in handling paper, one can go on to creativity in the field of papercraft to such genuinely artistic work as paper sculpture and decoupage, the finest examples of which have long been collectors' items.

A PAPER CRAFT BOOK is essential to the home library. Throughout the year the homemaker is called on for decorative ideas which can best be expressed in paper. Announcement parties and showers, school plays and other entertainments, exhibits and bazaars all demand ingenuity and imagination to which papercraft responds completely and inexpensively.

Papercraft is the quick answer when rainy days cause the housebound children to act like cyclones trapped in barrels. The chapter, "Rainy Day Fun for Children," details the simplest kind of paperwork, but after the child grows more skilled in the craft the whole book is his territory.

Working with paper to make beautiful and useful items is good occupational therapy for the chronic or convalescent patient. The material is light to handle and the colors used can be chosen for their cheering, soothing, or stimulating, and therefore therapeutic, values.

MANY OF MY READERS will agree with me that paper flowers masquerading as real are unthinkable; but when used frankly as paper flowers they are an amazingly effective decoration for exhibits, show windows, tables, bazaars, and similar places. A gardening friend suggested to me that paper flowers can be used as inexpensive material for the study of flower arranging. Such a practice would make this rewarding study possible at all times of the year and in any geographical location.

The more than 600 illustrations and diagrams and the clearly-worded instructions combine to make this a book from which one can quickly learn the fascinating and useful art of papercraft.

This book may be ordered from Herald House, Independence, Missouri.

Winning and Holding Members

HELEN MACDOUGALL, who had recently come to live in Glenwood, had been persuaded by a Latter Day Saint neighbor, Mrs. Margaret Allbright, to accompany her to a social evening at the Saints' church. Prior to the opening of the program the pastor shook hands with the newcomer and asked her name. In introducing her to the assembled Saints he said,

"We have as our guest tonight Mrs. Bruce MacDougall, whom we welcome most heartily. I feel sure that at the close of this program you will each extend her a personal welcome. May you have a very happy evening, Mrs. MacDougall."

Later on Helen joined the women's group where she particularly appreciated the friendliness and the good works of the members and where she was glad to co-operate in their many activities.

"Your members are the kindest, friendliest people I have ever known," she declared enthusiastically to Margaret. Over many an afternoon snack the two friends discussed the tenets of the church. Margaret loaned Helen her Book of Mormon, and together they studied the principles of the gospel, the law of tithing, and the Zion program. In due time Helen said she was ready for baptism. One June morning a small group of Saints gathered on the green-fringed bank of a clear-running stream, and the pastor initiated the young woman into the kingdom.

FOR A FEW MONTHS all went well. Helen decided to file her tithing statement with her husband's approval, and she accepted the Word of Wisdom as a basis for better health. Her musical talent and qualities of leadership were soon much in demand in the little branch.

Unfortunately, even before a year had elapsed, the Allbrights moved to another town and the two friends were separated. Soon the Saints who had been so cordial and co-operative became indifferent or critical. Seemingly weary of well-doing, some of them became jealous of Helen's talents. She was bewildered at first, then hurt, and finally disgusted. It was an effort to go among the women who had formerly been so friendly; in her bitterness she persuaded herself that they were hyper-critical.

After baptism Helen had quit smoking and dancing, but now she argued, "What's the use?" and began associating with her former friends.

The humble, overworked pastor did what he could, and the branch teacher talked with Helen, but her only response was to refer them to the attitude and principles of the Saints. They went away discouraged.

Helen's whole viewpoint became perverted. "What a fool I was!" she thought as she sat moodily on the bank of the stream where she had been baptized.

"I had such hopes for the future. I thought I could go out and convert everyone I met. I kept the Word of Wisdom until I found that very few of those precious Saints even pretended to live up to it. I filed my statement and paid tithing, but I discovered that not even 10 per cent of the members here had made out their inventories. And such a critical, fault-finding bunch of people I never have known! I am through with them. I will never set foot in that church again."

"Have I ever injured thee?"

By Lottie Clarke Diggle

Helen heard the voice and looked about her, but no one was in sight. Again came the voice, "Have I ever injured thee?"

"No, Lord!" Helen answered with full heart.

"Then why leave My church?" Why indeed? thought Helen, Why wound the Lord who has done so much for me? He can't help it because some of the Saints have been unkind. He cares for me, and as long as he is my friend nothing else matters. I must not cause him to suffer for what the Saints do. I'll go back to church, and I'll never quit because of the real or fancied attitude of the members. I'll keep the vision of Christ before me continually and try to atone for those months of neglect.

THE NEXT SUNDAY Helen sat in her old place in the prayer service, and in her testimony she told what had caused her diversion from the church. She testified with deep emotion about the voice she had heard and of her reaction. Then she added, "I dare not say I shall never wander again, but come what may, the adverse actions of a member will never again cause me to leave this church, when Christ, the Son of the Living God, loves me enough to care what happens to me."

As she sat down the pastor rose to his feet and admonished the congregation. "Saints, let this be a lesson to us all. Let us beg forgiveness of the Lord. Shall we kneel in prayer?"

A Dream Come True

By Kisque Sekine

Tess Morgan, instructor of communications, and Kisque.

IT HAS BEEN almost five months since I came to this great continent of America—the country where people have all sorts of rights and liberties, the land which contains an abundance of natural resources.

It was on February 23 of this year that I first impressed my step on the soil of America at San Francisco. I was thrilled with a feeling of great excitement the moment I said “good-by” to my own language, and thought that I must from now on speak nothing but English until I finished my education at Graceland College.

AT THE PORT OF SAN FRANCISCO I was greeted with the warm hands of members of the Latter Day Saint branch there—Mr. and Mrs. D. Rightmyer and Mr. and Mrs. J. Ware. That night Mr. A. Andrews gave me a welcome party at his residence in Berkeley, where I met many fine people who are alumni of Graceland College. My first night on foreign soil was passed at Mr. Rightmyer’s home in Richmond. I crawled into bed and slept like a small baby, because I was very tired both mentally and physically.

The following morning, I caught a train at Oakland and continued my trip to Graceland College. Before I boarded the train that morning the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Right-myer came up to me and gave me a bar of candy saying, “Good-by.” This boy’s deed moved my heart very deeply. He might have bought this candy with his own money and with his own will. I did not ask how old he was, but he couldn’t have been more than five.

That moment I felt that I saw a Christian spirit and love growing in this small boy. I thought to myself for a while, if all the people in the world today had the same spirit of love and lived together with such a mutual understanding and assistance, there would be no hatred to cause miserable wars. It is possible to have a Utopia in our age. If we all have a strong faith in Christ and keep trying to build the kingdom of God on this earth we may have that Utopia where all the nations can enjoy eternal life together.

MY LIFE ON THE GRACELAND CAMPUS is a happy one. Everybody on this “hill” is studying and working in the same faith along the highway of the Zionie Plan. All are doing their best to reach this goal. Their destination is the same. Zion does not come down from the sky automatically for people to move in, but all must work individually and collectively for it. I came to Graceland to study the better way of living, and I am learning a great deal through the association of people both on the “hill” and in the town of Lamoni.

Speaking of Lamoni, I think it is the nicest town I have ever seen in my life. This community is set up on the basis of Christian fellowship, love, and righteousness; it gives all passers-by a warm feeling, something that is unexpressable. Most of the people belong to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and are walking toward salvation—friendly and hopefully. There is no fighting or arguing, only smiling faces. I had never expected to find a town like Lamoni. In this peaceful community I am gaining a lot in my search by participating in many religious activities such as Sunday church service in town, fellowship service on the “hill,” and dormitory devotions.

As the hymn reads, there is no East or West in Christ. He made us the same. This summer we have many people from different countries—Australia, Canada, England, Holland, and myself from Japan. We have come from across the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and the border line. We all met with problems which disturbed us as we came to Graceland. But none of us failed because we had a strong faith in our hearts—a faith in God, ourselves, in our fellowmen.

IT WAS IN THE FALL OF 1947 that I heard about Graceland from Mrs. C. M. Ellis for whom I worked a year in order to study English at the Air Force base in Tokyo. She told me all about Graceland and encouraged me to attend this institution. Since that time I became very interested and made up my mind that some day I would go. I was then sixteen years old. I wrote to her parents in Lamoni and told them about my desire. Two years later I began corresponding with Raymond Holloway who works in the Lamoni post office. Both Mrs. Ellis's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. Seeley, and Mr. and Mrs. Holloway became my sponsors and helped me in all the ways they could. Many letters concerning my admission to school and my passport were exchanged during the three years that followed. The college itself and the Lamoni Rotary Club helped me to solve financial problems. Today, after four years of endeavor, I am in America and attending Graceland. By this very fact I can say that if man has faith and confidence in himself he can do almost anything. Yet if I had not had faith in Christ this thing would not have happened, and I would not have come to America to study.

ONE LOVELY SUNDAY AFTERNOON as I was sitting on the sunny side of the "hill" many thoughts came up to my mind. I am very thankful that I am able to stay in this community and get my education. What can I do, and what must I do about it? My answer is that when I finish Graceland and go back to my home country, I am going to tell many people in Japan about the gospel of God and the wonderful experiences I had in America. It is also my desire to send as many students as I can to Graceland from Japan to study the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I would like to express my deep gratitude to those who helped make my trip to America possible and to those who are helping me constantly as my real mother would.

I shall be praying for all of you.

This Is Your College

By William S. Gould

Director of Public Relations
Graceland College

A FEW WEEKS AGO a stranger appeared on the Graceland campus. He quietly wandered about, looking at the buildings and the grounds and watching the activities of the closing days of the school year. As he turned with the walk toward the old Ad Building, he met Dr. Roy Cheville who introduced himself and asked if he could be of service. "No," replied the stranger, "I'm just looking around. You see, I've been sending in my money to help Graceland College for over fifty years, but this is the first time I ever got a chance to see the place. I just want to look around and see what I've been paying for all these years." He had shared in the drive for funds to build the first building on the campus, the red brick building with the tower that has come to symbolize Graceland. And now, after more than fifty years of sharing in the support of the college, he had come to see a grandson graduate and to see the physical evidences of the use to which his money has been put.

There are hundreds of friends of Graceland who, like him, have been contributing in various ways to the support of our church college. Perhaps as we approach the beginning of a crucial college year it would be a good time for all of us to take a look at our college to see what we have been paying for and to discover what services it has to offer our youth.

THE PHYSICAL PLANT at Graceland is the best in her history. For three years we have been in a strenuous building program, and each year brings added advantages as that program nears completion. This year, for the first time since the GI bill become operative, all of the men at Graceland will be housed in college dormitories. Gun-solley Hall, located on the campus, will house over two hundred men this fall. Construction work is going forward rapidly, and while the building will not be decorated completely by fall, it will be comfortable and will mark a major advance in our college housing program. Classrooms, laboratories, library, and the Memorial Student Center are all ready for incoming students.

The instructional staff at Graceland has achieved a high degree of stability. Five instructors have over twenty years of service, a dozen more have from ten to twenty years, and only two will have been at Graceland fewer than three years. The acquisition of such a staff is an accomplishment we can be proud of. The years of service, though, would not be worth mentioning if it were not for the devotion that has kept many teachers here when they could have gone on to other positions with higher salaries and to institutions of greater renown. Our youth will do well to place themselves in the hands of such people.

Graceland's academic excellence is recognized by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Students who plan their programs wisely need not fear that their credits will be discounted when they transfer to another school. Students may complete the first two years in almost any standard curriculum at Graceland. Over a hundred and thirty-five separate courses are listed in the 1951 catalog.

New Horizons

WHAT KIND OF SCHOOL is your college? In some ways it may be very much like many other small colleges with beautiful grounds, good buildings and equipment, and a competent faculty. But that is only the setting for the real Graceland. Each fall a body of more than five hundred young people gather to complete the picture of what Graceland really is. Over half of these young people each fall are freshmen, new on the Graceland Campus. The success of the school year is pretty largely determined by the quality of these fellows and girls. Each fall we need a large, fresh group of church young people eager to combine with getting a higher education the other experiences that will lead to a richer and fuller life that is God-centered.

Do any of you attend the church nearest to where you live simply because it is nearer than your own church? Or do you pass up the other churches and travel the blocks or miles necessary to reach your own church home? It would be cheaper, and it would take less time if you attended the church nearest you; yet you would not. Think of your church college. Would you attend the college nearest you simply because it is cheaper or because it would take less time to get there? Or would you pass up the nearer ones and come to Graceland, the church home of the college students the two years they are here, where you may worship and learn and play with a congregation of the young people of your own fellowship.

Graceland needs church young people with vision and integrity. Such as these need Graceland. It is not too late to enroll for the coming fall term. If you would like information for yourself, or if you have a friend who would benefit by contact with Graceland, drop us a card or a letter right away. You will hear from us immediately.

vine purpose is conditioned on the nature and quality of our participation. We are not strong enough as individuals to get the job done, but we have One with all power who is willing and able to come to our aid. We can find help in our endeavor.

Here are two quotations from the Doctrine and Covenants that indicate the immensity of God's work and show his interest in men: "Worlds without number have I created, and I have created them for my own purpose. All things are numbered unto me, for they are mine and I know them." "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and the eternal life of man." The church says today that the divine plan goes on continually, and it urges us to participate with him in that work with ever increasing devotion.

TO SUM UP

Though there be storm all about us, though "the world is racked and distracted, and while millions are groping as the blind for the wall, and while men are resting on uncertainty as a general mass, the voice of the Savior, though mild, will pierce to the center the souls of those who diligently seek him today. These words are from the testimony of Oliver Cowdery, and this testimony has found verification in the souls of many in our generation. Christ stands at the door and knocks always. It is only for us to arise and bid him enter. He will come in and sup with us, and we with him. To be worthy of having him with us, we must live righteous lives and remember above all else that righteousness is enduring and ever stands the strain and stresses of today. Then, too, each of us must remember that our lives are supremely worth while. The church and its teachings can help us in these critical and troubled times.

DEATHS

TRUST.—John Edward, son of John Edward and Pauline Klein Trust, was born July 14, 1890, in Baltimore, Maryland, and died July 4, 1951, in Baltimore. On August 8, 1914, he was married to Helen Louise Yager; three children were born to them. On September 25, 1929, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church and was later ordained to the office of priest. He was a charter member of Baltimore Branch and served as treasurer for twelve years.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Helen and Pauline; a son John Edward, Jr., four brothers; and one foster brother.

GAVRALCO.—Linda Sue, was born April 12, 1951, and died July 25, 1951, of injuries received in an automobile accident. She is survived by her parents, William and Dorothy Gavralco, both critically injured and still in the hospital; a brother, Dennis, and a sister, Pat, all of Sacramento. Patriarch William Dawson conducted the funeral service. Interment was in Roseville Cemetery.

BRANNON.—William Bruce, son of Bryant and Myrtle Brannon, was born July 3, 1937, at Fanshawe, Oklahoma, and died July 8, 1951, when a car hit him as he was riding his bike on the highway. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 4, 1947, and was a regular attendant at church school and other services. He had been a member of Scout Troop 34 at Fanshawe for three years.

He is survived by his parents; three sisters: Mrs. Marie Branscum of Heavener, Oklahoma; Mrs. Gladys Tonetti of Baltimore, Maryland; and Mrs. Jennie Mae Cates of San Francisco, California; two brothers: Garnett of Salinas, California, and Lloyd of Fanshawe. Funeral services were held at the church in Fanshawe, Elders W. C. Haden and Victor Witte officiating. Burial was in the Fanshawe cemetery.

CRULL.—William Crull, son of Jacob and Eunice Crull, was born June 25, 1872, at Rolla, Missouri, and died July 26, 1951, in Independence, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 12, 1900, and on November 1 of the same year was ordained to the office of priest. On May 15, 1901, he was married to Edith M. Lloyd; eight children were born to them. In 1907 they moved from Davenport, Iowa, to Independence, where they made their permanent home. For sixty-five years he worked as a contractor and builder, taking great pride in his accomplishments. He was active in church work as a deacon from 1907 to 1945 when ill health forced him to retire from this responsibility.

He is survived by his wife, Edith; five sons: Alma, Lowell, Virgil, and Russell of Independence, and Lyle of Midland, Michigan; three daughters: Charlotte McKrill of Mishawaka, Indiana; Wilma Vickery of Galveston, Texas; and Mildred Stewart of Lansing, Kansas; fifteen grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren; and a brother, Roy Crull, of Florida.

BEITZ.—Mildred Irene, daughter of the late Elder and Mrs. Charles G. Dykes, was born November 7, 1905, at Muscatine, Iowa, and died June 26, 1951, in Muscatine. On June 30, 1925, she married Elmer William Beitz; four children were born to them: Juanita, Joyce, Gregory, and Ronald. In her youth she traveled with her missionary father, playing the piano for him at services. She was a devout member, and her kindness will long be remembered.

She is survived by her husband, four children, and a sister, Mrs. Melvina Gray, of Davenport, Iowa.

MURPHY.—Margaret, was born March 4, 1873, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and died July 3, 1951, at the hospital in Columbus, Kansas. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 21, 1936, and attended the Weir, Kansas, Branch.

She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Minnie A. Butler of Weir; four grandchildren; nine great-grandchildren; a stepdaughter, Mrs. Rosa Robinson of Washougal, Washington; two stepsons: Ralph Murphy of Craig, Colorado, and Ray Murphy of Los Angeles, California; and two sisters: Mrs. Cora Evans of Los Angeles, California, and Mrs. Elsie Tedlock of Cimarron, Kansas. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Weir, Elder A. J. Jones officiating.

HALL.—Nellie, daughter of David and Emeline Hall, was born at Persia, Iowa, on July 29, 1874, and died July 3, 1951, at Logan, Iowa. She received her early education in the rural schools and Woodbine Normal. After graduation she taught for a number of years. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June, 1885.

She is survived by a sister, Mrs. J. A. Waterman of Logan, and a brother, Alva Hall of Harlan, Iowa. Funeral services were conducted by Elders W. R. Adams and Roy Shumate. Interment was in the Cass township cemetery.

ATKINSON.—J. Henry, was born May 4, 1883, in Pike County, Indiana, and died July 8, 1951, at Decatur, Illinois. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since November 23, 1930, and had held the office of deacon since December 7, 1947.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Mrs. Ruby Merriman and Mrs. Marjorie Smith of Sullivan, Illinois; a stepson, Oral Nixon of Decatur, Illinois; two grandchildren; two great-grandchildren; a sister, Mrs. Lela Lotzgesell of Decatur; and a brother, Volle of Taylorville, Illinois. Funeral services were held at the Dawson and Wikoff Chapel, Elder O. C. Henson officiating. Burial was in Graceland Cemetery at Decatur.

BALLANTYNE.—John William, was born October 20, 1862, and died December 30, 1950, of a heart attack. On June 11, 1890, he was married to Julia Jump, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood.

Besides his wife he leaves a sister, Rachel M. Ballantyne, of Independence, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Dillen. Burial was in the Lexington, Oklahoma, cemetery.

EVERHART.—Charles A., son of John and Edith Everhart, was born March 27, 1901, in Traverse City, Michigan. The family moved to Flint, Michigan, in 1909 where he was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 7, 1914. On June 26, 1933, he was married to Ruth Fly; later they moved to Clio, Michigan, and in 1946 to Flushing, Michigan. He had been a tool designer for the Chevrolet Motor Company for over twenty-eight years.

He is survived by his wife, Ruth; a son, Charles Oliver; and a daughter, Vera Mae of the home; his mother, Mrs. Edith Everhart; two brothers: Eugene and George W.; and a sister, Leah Everhart, all of Flint. Funeral services were held at the Wheeler Chapel in Flushing, Elder Arthur H. DuRose officiating. Interment was in Sunset Hills Cemetery.

MEEHAN.—Jennie, daughter of Robert and Helen Thorburn, was born October 11, 1886, near Glasgow, Scotland, and died in November, 1950, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Barbara Olsen in Pe Ell, Washington. She came to the United States with her parents when she was four years old, and after living in Pennsylvania for a while moved to Iowa in 1872. In 1882 she was married to James Meehan; six children were born to them. A daughter, Helen, a son, Robert, and her husband preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for fifty-five years and also belonged to the Order of Eastern Star and Fifty Year Club.

She is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Olsen of Pe Ell and Mrs. Joe Seitzer of Seattle, Washington; and two sons: Martin of Seattle and James of Coal Valley. Funeral services were conducted at the Reorganized Church in Boone, Iowa, Elder Clyde E. McDonald officiating. Interment was in the Boone cemetery.

* THE LAND OF DESOLATION

We have seen a land of desolation. On a recent Sunday we were in a line of traffic that slowly crossed the area in Kansas City, Kansas, so recently devastated by the flooding waters of the Kaw River. We followed Rainbow Boulevard down the hill, across Southwest Boulevard, over the long bridge and up Seventh Street Trafficway.

Water had rushed as a torrent, in those lowest places, twenty to thirty feet deep. It had plastered gobs of mud against such brick buildings as were still standing, clear up to the top of the second story. The most frightful havoc was wrought on the homes of the poor—the older wooden buildings. Some were tilted to one side, some completely demolished, all filled with mud that stinks so a human being can hardly bear it.

We saw elderly women visiting some of these houses that had all their earthly possessions. Some came out crying, some bearing their grief silently. One emerged from the window of a house, trying vainly to brush the mud from a picture of some loved one.

Some people ask critically, "Why do they live there? Why did they build there?" Such speakers forget that it is fifty years since the flood waters swept over those flatlands; This time the great levees simply could not hold. Then, these people are poor, and they have no choice. They have to live where they can afford it.

In all the area where those flood waters came, there is not a blade of grass, not a living bush, nor a flower. Everywhere there is the repulsive gray of that evil mud, very slowly drying out into great cracking cakes, smelling of death and rot. This is a ruin to break the heart. With no sense of being profane, one exclaims, "This is hell!"

* D.V.

Apostle John W. Rushton always had a gracious way, whenever he proposed any plan of action or a journey, of inserting the abbreviation "D.V." into this sentence. This is Latin for "Deo Volente," or "God willing." . . . This memory comes up because the current issue of the "San Piper" carries a "Mystery Saying" as follows: "The Lord Willing and the Devil Not Caring." The "San Piper" asks the nurses to guess what member of the staff said it. Whoever said it, you may find occasion to use it. . . . Other bits from the "Piper": "Some people spend more time trying to dodge duty than would be required to discharge it"; "People may forget how fast you did a job, but they will remember how well you did it"; "Wisdom is knowing when to speak your mind and when to mind your speech."

* LIQUOR IS USELESS

In the catastrophe that visited Kansas City during the great flood of July, 1951, one fact stood out. The sale of any and all alcoholic beverages was absolutely prohibited. It was the only commodity to be so restricted. In this terrible disaster it was the one thing that could offer no help at all. It was the only completely useless commodity on the store shelves.

James T. Van Biber

THE PLEASANT-LOOKING MAN standing beside the X-ray machine is an Independence physician who specializes in child care. His boundless energy and humanitarianism drives him to share in many social and civic activities. He gives of much of his professional skill at Mercy Hospital to needy children without thought of remuneration. Yet he still finds time to carry some church assignments.

He was born in Oil Hill, Kansas, in 1919. His grandfather, James Jennings (father of Emery Jennings, President of Far West Stake), was an organizer of pioneer wagon trains which went from Missouri to the Northwest. Brother Van Biber was baptized at Wichita, Kansas, in 1933. At the 1937 Youth Conference in Independence he represented his district in the organization of the Zion's League.

Following his graduation from Andover (Kansas) high school he entered Wichita University where he received his A.B. in 1941. He did his graduate work at Kansas University where he received his M.D. in 1944. His internship was started at Illinois Central Hospital, Chicago, Illinois. Later he was resident physician at Children's Mercy Hospital, Kansas City, Missouri, for eighteen months, and was secretary of the medical staff. He also served at Children's Hospital of (Detroit) Michigan for one year. From April, 1946, to February, 1948, he served in the armed forces as a captain in the medical corps stationed in Puerto Rico.

He married Maxine Chuning in 1943. They have four children, James T., Jr., 6, John C., 3, Judith C., 1, and Janet S., 1 month. Dr. Van Biber's hobbies are golf and photography. He is a member of the Phi Beta Pi medical fraternity and the Jackson County Medical Association. He is a member of the Independence Sanitarium staff and is chairman of its program committee. He also is a Kiwanian. He was ordained a priest in 1939 and an elder in 1948. He worships with the Liberty Street congregation where he serves as associate pastor.

PRESIDENT VISITS REUNIONS

President Israel A. Smith recently made brief visits to the Blue Water, Liahona Park, Park of the Pines, Cash, and Kirtland reunions. While on the same trip he attended to some church business in Ohio.

APOSTLE ARRIVES

Apostle D. Blair Jensen and family arrived in New York from England August 12. They arrived in Independence August 14.

APPRECIATION FROM ZONKERS

Seventy and Mrs. Louis Zonker and daughter arrived in Rotterdam, Holland, on July 31. They were met by Elder Gene Theys and entered into their missionary work immediately. Brother and Sister Zonker received many cards, letters, and telegrams at the boat. Since there were so many they do not have opportunity to acknowledge them individually. They have requested that an expression of appreciation be placed in the "Herald."

BAPTISM STATISTICS

The statistics on baptisms for the first two quarters of 1951 have been received. Listed are the ten highest districts, stakes, and missions abroad for the end of the second quarter, or June 30, 1951:

Center Stake (Independence)	192
Los Angeles Stake	70
Kansas City Stake	70
Spring River District	67
Oregon District	63
Far West Stake	63

Gulf States District	56

APPOINTEE IN ACCIDENT

Elder John E. Booth, appointee to the Toronto District and pastor of the Toronto Branch, was recently in an automobile accident. His mother and son were also injured. The conditions of all have improved, and Brother Booth has expressed his gratitude for the concern of the Saints in their behalf. Sister Booth will have to remain in the hospital from ten to twelve weeks, but Howard will probably be able to return home in two weeks.

NEW CHAPLAIN AT SAN

Elder Almer W. Sheehy has assumed his new duties as chaplain of the Independence Sanitarium. Brother Sheehy will replace Elder Don Lents who is now assistant to the Presidency.

VISITS STAMPEDE

Brother Irby Mundy, who signs his letters "The Cowboy," paid his twenty-seventh visit to the Calgary Stampede in Calgary, Alberta, Canada. He participated in the stampede which took place July 9-14. While in Calgary Brother Mundy attended services in the branch there.

PASTOR SPEAKS

Victor Witte, appointee to the Central Oklahoma area spoke at a service sponsored by the Tulsa Council of Churches July 8. His theme was "Faith for the New Era." Brother Witte is pastor of the Tulsa Branch.

Trash, or Gold?

"When he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold."

—Job 23: 10.

THIS HAPPENED RECENTLY. The newspaper listed a young member of the ministry as the speaker at one of our churches. We were interested in the young man because he has made splendid growth and development.

Some years ago his family moved into the neighborhood of that church. Culturally, they had previously known very little opportunity. Their formal education had been brief. They were in the low income brackets.

Even church people didn't think too much of them, but they didn't know it and appeared to be happy. Some were unkind enough to call them "trash." Such things sometimes happen.

"Trash." That is a harsh judgment to pass upon any other human being.

This family came to church. New ideals exerted their power. The children went through school, and in the church school they developed into church workers. Conditions in the home were improving.

So what was happening on this Sunday marked a step forward for that young man and his family. One of our number, commenting on it, said, "I am continually amazed at the power of the gospel to take the most unpromising human material and transform it into something good."

The really important point of the story is that where people—and some of them our own people—saw only trash, God saw gold!

ONE TEST of a religion is what it does to its people. If it demands sacrifices of them without commensurate service to them, if it impoverishes them to build costly churches, if it is more interested in their contributions than in their souls, we make a certain kind of judgment upon that church. We suppose that God judges it too.

On the other hand, if the church takes people who are poor and lifts them up, if it improves their culture, if it helps send their children on to better education, better jobs, and trains workers for the gospel, that church is making a contribution to society.

If a religion discovers the gold of character and spiritual integrity in people, where only trash appeared on the surface, there is something great about that religion.

When we are testing a religion, we should think of these things.

WE READ the glamorous tales of the age of chivalry, of knights in shining armor—of their games of love and war. Some fascinated reader may think, "I wish I had been there."

Let us reflect that if we had been there, we might not have been kings and princes, knights and ladies. Most people's ancestors were humble folk. If we had been there, we might have been butlers and cooks, servants, vassals, knaves, or serfs. We would not have lived in the great palaces or castles, but in cottages made of rough timbers and wattle, with daubed mud for walls, and with thatched roofs infested by mice and sparrows.

We have had humble beginnings, but, due to religion, education, and association with other church people, we have come up in the world.

We can thank a democratic government for the freedom to rise. We can thank the church and the gospel for the power to rise.

Editorial

LAST SUNDAY MORNING we saw a man at the roadside who apparently had lost something. While others were going to church, he was on his way to a cheap liquor place. While others appeared in their Sunday best, he was in his daily worst. He had lost the power to see the good in himself.

When he looked into his mental mirror, he saw only useless trash. No doubt God could look into his soul and find a hidden bit of gold. But then he never talked to God, so how could he learn his true worth?

You may be seeing only the trash in yourself. But what does God see in you? The world will accept your estimate of your own worth, if you set it low enough. God is different. He will accept your estimate, if you set it high enough!

Remember, God sees the gold in you!

RELIGION is concerned with values. There are many kinds of values in the world. Material values are ephemeral, always changing. Twenty years ago you thought you knew the value of a dollar. Now nobody knows. What will it be worth next year?

The only enduring values we know are those of spiritual and moral worth. They do not perish with time. We can take them, and nothing else, into eternity with us. It is the work of religion to help us to make true judgments on life values.

Perhaps the best thing we can do is to see in ourselves and in each other the gold that God has always known is there.

A Fragment

IT IS BUT a soiled bit of paper unskillfully torn out of a newspaper of the day, leaving us to guess the date. We found it behind a daguerreotype in the small frame—an old family picture.

Because it refers to one who had much to do with the steady growth and stability of the Reorganization, it has an interest for us. Here is what it says:

Joseph Smith, son of the founder of the Mormon faith, was reported to have died recently at Plano, Illinois, but he writes to an Illinois paper that the report is a little premature; he hopes to live many years yet. He is the leader of the wing of the Mormon Church opposed to polygamy, and, though comparatively a young man, is fast gaining a standing among his brethren.

Since Joseph Smith III lived in Plano from 1866 to 1881, it must have been printed while he was a resident there.

We feel to comment that he did succeed in "gaining a standing among his brethren," and also among all who knew him, and that he lived "many years" after.

Missouri Constitutional Convention

ONCE EVERY TWENTY YEARS the voters of Missouri decide whether they want another constitutional convention. In 1942 they elected to hold one, and from September 21, 1943, to September 29, 1944, eighty-three delegates from the various districts of the state labored to bring forth a new constitution. In February of 1945 the electorate approved their work.

This convention and its work have received much attention by students of statecraft, and the April (1951) number of The Missouri Historical Review contained an article on the personnel of the convention.

Because of personal references to two of the delegates from the Independence area, General Edward M. Stayton and President Israel A. Smith, we believe it fitting to give Herald readers the benefit of Mr. Henry J. Schmandt's appraisal of the services rendered by the age group to which they belonged.

In classifying the delegates into various age groups, Mr. Schmandt said:

The delegates ranged from thirty-two to seventy-four years of age with the mean being fifty-five. Only three of the delegates were under forty years of age and only twenty-two were less than fifty years old. On the other hand, sixty-one of the members had passed the fifty year mark, with twenty-four (or about 30 per cent) being over sixty years of age and six between the ages of seventy and seventy-five. Ordinarily, the older a person gets the more likely he is to resist change. This unbalanced age distribution would therefore seem to have indicated a convention conservative in tone—one in which it was not likely that major changes in the organic laws of the state would be made. Actually, however, many of the most progressive members were well advanced in years. The group that furnished an enlightened and intelligent leadership in the convention centered around such delegates as Guy B. Park, a former governor of the state; Charles H. Mayer, an legislator and a utilities lawyer; Marshall E. Ford and Allen McReynolds, former members of the general assembly; Thomas C. Hennings, a former judge of the circuit court; Edward M. Stayton, a civil engineer; and Israel A. Smith, a lawyer and a member of the presidency of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Park was seventy-one years of age, Mayer, sixty-seven, Ford, seventy-three, McReynolds, sixty-six, Hennings, sixty-nine, Stayton, seventy, and Smith sixty-seven. These men were all outspoken advocates of such advanced reforms as the short ballot, the governor's cabinet, an extended merit system, and legislative reorganization. To their leadership must be attributed a large share of credit for the improvements that were accomplished in the basic law of the state. In this respect, it could well be that the high age distribution was a contributing factor to the success of the convention. Younger men with political ambitions are too often prone to use such bodies as a springboard for the furtherance of their own ends.

President Smith gives unstinted praise to the other men named in connection with him by Mr. Schmandt, and deems it an honor that he was thus classified and that he had the privilege of serving the State of Missouri as a delegate in what has been said to be a very high-grade representation of the state.

An interesting report of the missionary work being done in Kansas City Stake has come to our desk recently from Elder Albert A. Scherer, Stake Missionary Supervisor. We believe that the Herald readers will be glad to know the progress being made in recent months in this stake.

During the first six months of 1951, 123 new members were added to the church in the Kansas City Stake. Of the eleven congregations comprising the stake, three have already better than 5 per cent increase. These are:

Chelsea, Kansas, 127 members, 12 baptisms or 9.4 per cent increase

Grandview, Kansas, 311 members, 28 baptisms or 9.0 per cent increase

Quindaro, Kansas, 313 members, 18 baptisms or 5.7 per cent increase

No one person alone is responsible for these results. Co-operation between all Stake officials in planning the missionary program has been a key reason for success. Then too, in each congregation, the pastors and missionary workers have been diligent and faithful in holding cottage meetings with friends of the church. Many church school teachers have also helped by taking advantage of their opportunities to witness to the nonmembers of their classes. The net result is that this large number of people are now rejoicing in their knowledge of Christ, while entire congregations are blessed through the rich testimonies of workers and converts.

The Social and Moral Message of the Book of Mormon

By Reed M. Holmes

An address given at Stone Church during the Book of Mormon Institute

IN THE TEACHING OF CHRIST, righteousness is never defined as a solitary achievement. It is always expressed in richer fraternity. Beliefs are not isolated from life but find fulfillment in social endeavor. Thus the commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," is followed immediately by "Thou shalt love thy neighbor." In the teaching of Jesus even our approach to God is conditioned by our social relationships—"If thou hast aught against thy brother go . . . be reconciled . . . then come."

Probably there has never been a time in the history of the world when a pattern for the perfect society was more greatly needed. Each day brings greater yearning for a better world, and yet each day seems to have a greater measure of despair within it. Many have formulated ideals: Plato, his Republic; Augustine, his City of God; Sir Thomas More, a Utopia. None of these have found the key; only in the kingdom of God is there hope. The way to the kingdom is indicated in the Bible, but men are not content to accept its counsel. They want a kingdom that can be made with their hands—without sacrifice of pride and fleeting values. They need another evidence, another witness, that the better world of which we dream can be achieved only on the basis of integrity which is motivated by our love of God. They need further testimony that doctrines are not a matter for theological debate so much as they are the determiners of our destiny. The Book of Mormon has this distinct value: it is the dramatic story of doctrines at work in the affairs of men. This story of doctrines at work is of particular value to us who must build up and establish the cause of Zion. It has even larger significance in its world-wide application where diverse doctrines are even now in violent competition with each other and where people of no doctrine or passive reaction to doctrine are made the pawns of other men.

I. Source of Social and Moral Message

Our actions are determined by our belief in God. Our standards of value vary up and down the scale from immorality to integrity, depending upon our faith. Our character, whether personal or natural, reflects that which we esteem of highest importance. Joshua, for instance, was not passing the time of day but was hurling the divine vertical when he said, "Choose ye this day whom you will serve." Israel's history, and consequently the history of the world, depended upon its response.

The only abiding bases of personal and community life stem from God. Social well-being is a matter of allegiance, first of all. As we are loyal to God, harmony is the result. If we are loyal to the gods of our own making we have conflicting loyalties, and division is the inevitable result. For a society to endure, its attention and allegiance must be elevated to the Creator—"Whoso believeth in God, might with surety hope for a better world."—Ether 5: 4.

Here is evidence that peace results from our favorable response to God.

And it came to pass in the thirty and sixth year, the people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another; And they had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift. . . . And the Lord did prosper them exceedingly. . . . And there were no envyings, nor strifes, nor tumults, nor whoredoms, nor lyings, nor murders, nor any manner of lasciviousness; and surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who had been created by the hand of God . . . they were in one, the children of Christ, and heirs to the kingdom of God.—IV Nephi 1: 3, 4, 9, 18-20.

Yea, the more part of them had turned out of the way of righteousness, and did trample under their feet the commandments of God, and did turn unto their own ways, and did build up unto themselves idols of their gold and their silver.—Helaman 2: 158.

For because they are rich, they despise the poor, and they persecute the meek, and their hearts are upon their treasures; wherefore their treasure is their God.—II Nephi 6: 63.

Surely the nature of our belief in God determines the nature and durability of our civilization. This is the testimony of the Book of Mormon. It is a very apt testimony for this day of crisis. When we consider the inequality within our land, the many evidences of cheap, tawdry life, and the threat to our national security from within and without, the Book of Mormon counsel seems very appropriate: "All that he requires of you, is to keep his commandments; and he has promised you that if ye would keep his commandments, ye should prosper in the land."—Mosiah 1: 55.

The great frontier before us today is that of perfecting human relationships. The Book of Mormon would have us consider this great fundamental.

Believe in God; believe that he is, and that he created all things, both in heaven and in earth; Believe that he has all wisdom, and all power, both in heaven and in earth; Believe that man doth not comprehend all things which the Lord can comprehend. And again: Believe that ye must repent of your sins and forsake them, and humble yourselves before God; and ask in sincerity of heart that he would forgive you: And now, if you believe all these things, see that ye do them. . . . And behold, I say unto you, that if ye do this, ye shall always rejoice, and be filled with the love of God. . . . And ye will not have a mind to injure one another, but to live peaceably, and to render to every man according to that which is his due. And ye will not suffer your children, that they go hungry, or naked; Neither will ye suffer that they transgress the laws of God, and fight and quarrel one with another, and serve the devil; . . . But ye will teach them to walk in the ways of truth and soberness; ye will teach them to love one another, and to serve one another.—Mosiah 2: 13-17, 22, 24-26, 27.

II. Second Essential

The social and moral message of the Book of Mormon, like that of the Bible, takes into account the true status of man. First of all, he is a creature, "Are we not all beggars?"—Mosiah 2: 32. He has his agency, "Wherefore the Lord God gave unto man that he should act for himself." He is a sinner, "The natural man is an enemy to God."—Mosiah 1: 119. He has great potentiality, "Men are that they might have joy."—II Nephi 1: 115.

The kind of society we have varies according to our appreciation of our destiny. If we do not believe in eternal life, then we may "eat, drink, and be merry," but if we believe in eternal life, then we may hearken to the counsel, "Arise from the dust, my sons, and be men."—II Nephi 1: 36.

Throughout the Book of Mormon the kingdom of God is seen to be the result of the redemptive process. The perfect society can result only from the fellowship of the reborn.

Believe that ye must repent of your sins and forsake them, and humble yourselves before God; and ask in sincerity of heart that he would forgive you: . . . standing steadfastly in the faith of that which is to come, which was spoken by the mouth of the angel; And behold, I say unto you, that if ye do this, ye shall always rejoice, and be filled with the love of God, and always retain a remission of your sins; And ye shall grow in the knowledge of the glory of him that created you, or in the knowledge of that which is just and true.—Mosiah 2: 16, 21-23.

III. The Importance of the Covenant

One of the greatest evidences of our potentiality is seen in the willingness of God to enter into a covenant with us.

We must realize that the Book of Mormon is the dramatization of the ups and downs of men in their relation to the covenant. The result of observance and the lack of observance is seen in the social experience of the Nephites. We cannot understand the Book of Mormon apart from the covenant. The people of the Book of Mormon are from Israel, and Israel had made an agreement with God. Incidentally, this may indicate why the religion of many today is so unsatisfactory. It is so intangible that it amounts to nothing at all to them. Not so with the ancient Israelites. Their life turned upon obedience to the covenant. They had entered into mutual agreement with God. He had extended certain promises to them. The keeping of the Ten Commandments was a condition of its fulfillment. They considered themselves children of the covenant. We would do well to honor this covenant.

The covenant relationship was taken seriously by Lehi and Nephi and the prophets who followed them, Behold ye are the children of the prophets; and ye are of the house of Israel; and ye are of the covenant which the Father made with your fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed, shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.—III Nephi 9: 63.

The covenant with God provided the foundation of their personal morality, family solidarity, social unity. When the conditions of the covenant were observed the Lord fulfilled his obligations as well,

We did observe to keep the judgments, and the statutes, and the commandments of the Lord, in all things, according to the law of Moses. And the Lord was with us; and we did prosper exceedingly; for we did sow seed, and we did reap again in abundance.—II Nephi 4: 14, 15.

IV. Brotherhood in the Book of Mormon

When men are mutually covenanted with God, they are bound together as well. It is not surprising then that the principles of brotherhood find abundant expression in the Book of Mormon. Here are a few examples:

Behold, hath the Lord commanded any that they should not partake of his goodness? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; but all men are privileged the one like unto the other, and none are forbidden: . . . wherefore, the Lord God hath given a commandment that all men should have charity, which charity is love.—II Nephi 11: 104, 105, 107.

The Lord God hath commanded . . . that they should not have malice; that they should not contend one with another. . . . And he inviteth them all to come unto him, and partake of his goodness; and he denieth none that come unto him, black and white, bond and free, male and female; . . . all are alike unto God.—II Nephi 11: 110, 113-115.

One of the finest passages on brotherhood was given to us by King Mosiah as he spoke under the influence of the Spirit of God: "I desire that this land be a land of liberty, and every man may enjoy his rights and privileges alike."—Mosiah 13: 45. In consequence

There was a strict command throughout all the churches that there should be no persecutions among them, and there should be an equality among all men; that they should let no pride nor haughtiness disturb their peace; that every man should esteem his neighbor as himself.—Mosiah 11: 153, 154.

The Book of Mormon sets itself against class divisions, racial discrimination, and special privilege. Throughout the book the writers insist that allegiance to God brings respect for human life. It cuts through the ridiculous racial and social distinctions which we have set up through the ages.

However, again it is wise to note that spiritual rebirth is essential. Men are unified as they respond to the gospel. We recall the occasion of the coming of our Lord when "all had been converted to him—there were no contentions and disputations, and every man did deal justly one with another." We are guilty of fuzzy thinking if we believe that brotherhood shall ever be achieved outside the redemptive love of Christ.

V. The Home and Family in the Book of Mormon

The home is the essential unit of our community and national life. If there is decay here, the foundation crumbles and the building is ruined. If the home is weakened, we lose the basic unit of educating our children in our heritage. The worst threat to our security is still the threat to our moral fiber and our morality is nowhere threatened so seriously as in the corruption of the home. The Book of Mormon has a message in regard to the family which is pertinent to our own day. We may learn from both the people's obedience to the covenant and their chagrined recording of their misbehavior.

The excellent ministry of Nephi is credited by him to his parents. Here was a remarkable family. While some parents of our day may find consolation that Lehi and Sariah suffered in Laman and Lemuel, nevertheless their continuing insistence upon integrity is noteworthy. We know that the parents of Nephi honored the commandment, "Thou shalt not commit adultery." We know that Nephi lived by the commandment, "Honor thy father and mother." Throughout the Book of Mormon there is an insistence upon virtue and fidelity as the essential quality of the home. Marriage is to be according to the laws of God. We know from Jacob's counsel to his brethren the nature of home life which is esteemed worthy. While chastising his own followers, Jacob called their attention to the Lamanites and said, "Behold their husbands love their wives and their wives love their husbands and their husbands and wives love their children."

True to the normal practice of the Israelites this prophet, Jacob, reminds the parents of their responsibility to the children saying,

Wherefore ye shall remember your children how that ye have grieved their hearts because of the example that ye have set before them; and also remember that ye may, because of your filthiness bring your children unto destruction, and their sins be heaped upon your heads at the last day. O my brethren, hearken unto my word; arouse the faculties of your soul; shake yourselves, that ye may awake from the slumber of death

VI. The Search for Freedom

The search for freedom is not an academic issue today. We face a real threat to our cherished liberties. The prophetic counsel of the Book of Mormon, coming as it does out of the crucible of past experience, is of exceptional value to us.

"In as much as they will keep my commandments they shall prosper in the land." The Lord had made the promise, and it was understood by the Book of Mormon prophets that this prosperity would be accompanied by freedom. They likewise knew that freedom would be destroyed if they violated the covenant.

There are many references to their desire for liberty which makes them akin to us. Benjamin, perhaps more than any other, recognized that the liberty they desired resulted only from their loyalty to God, "He said unto them, Ye have spoken the words that I desired; and the covenant which ye have made, is a righteous covenant . . . under this head ye are made free."—Mosiah 3: 7, 10. Here are further references from the Book of Mormon on liberty and equality.

This shall ye observe, and make it your law to do your business by the voice of the people.—Mosiah 13: 36.

I desire that this inequality should be no more in this land, especially among this my people; But I desire that this land be a land of liberty, and every man may enjoy his rights and privileges alike.—Mosiah 13: 44, 45.

Therefore they relinquished their desires for a king, and became exceedingly anxious that every man should have an equal chance throughout all the land; Yea, and every man expressed a willingness to answer for his own sins.—Mosiah 13: 54, 55.

There is an amusing and significant insight into this search for freedom in the reference to their meeting together "every man according to his mind . . . having much dispute and wonderful contentions."—Alma 1: 58.

VII. Spiritualizing Temporalities for Stewardship

Whenever men of their own free will respond favorably to God, peace results, and men view their wealth as a private trust held for the public good. At least this is the testimony of the Book of Mormon. Under the leadership of Alma they learned "concerning the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." The record says, "They became the children of God." Then it was that Alma could call forth this response:

Alma commanded that the people of the church should impart of their substance, every one according to that which he had; If he have more abundantly, he should impart more abundantly; and he that had but little, but little should be required; and to him that had not should be given. And thus they should impart of their substance, of their own free will and good desires towards God, and to those priests that stood in need, yea, and to every needy, naked soul. And this he said unto them, having been commanded of God; And they did walk uprightly before God, imparting to one another, both temporally and spiritually, according to their needs and their wants.—Mosiah 9: 60-64.

A similar condition resulted following the ministry of Christ and his disciples in ancient America:

And as many as did come unto them, and did truly repent of their sins, were baptized in the name of Jesus; and they did also receive the Holy Ghost. And it came to pass in the thirty and sixth year, the people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another; And they had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift.—III Nephi 1: 2-4.

The essential teaching of the Book of Mormon regarding wealth is stated by Jacob:

Think of your brethren, like unto yourselves, and be familiar with all and free with your substance, that they may be rich like unto you. But before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God. And after ye have obtained hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted.—Jacob 2: 22-24.

The attitude of stewardship is most aptly stated by King Benjamin:

And now, in the first place, he hath created you, and granted unto you your lives, for which ye are indebted unto him. . . . And ye are still indebted unto him; and are, and will be, forever, and ever; therefore, of what have ye to boast? . . . Ye can not say that ye are even as much as the dust of the earth: yet ye were created of the dust of the earth; but behold, it belongeth to him who created you. And I, even I, whom ye call your King, I am no better than ye yourselves are; for I am also of the dust.—Mosiah 1: 57-62.

For behold, are we not all beggars? Do we not all depend upon the same being, even God, for all the substance which we have; for both food, and raiment, and for gold, and for silver, and for all the riches which we have of every kind? . . . And now, if God, who has created you, on whom you are dependent for your lives, and for all that ye have and are, doth grant unto you whatsoever ye ask that is right, in faith, believing that ye shall receive, O then, how had ye ought to impart of the substance that ye have, one to another.—Mosiah 2: 32, 36.

The social and moral message of the Book of Mormon is profoundly important for our day. Not only is it one of the evidences of the authenticity of the book, but its counsel is most appropriate. Let any who may take lightly the counsel of the Book of Mormon reflect for a moment upon the threat of Communism. Moroni penned words of counsel with remarkable insight for us. He saw the dangers threatening us and identified Communism in the terms which he knew.

Wherefore the Lord commandeth you, when ye shall see these things come among you, that ye shall awake to a sense of your awful situation, because of this secret combination which shall be among you. . . . For it cometh to pass that whoso buildeth it up, seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations, and countries; and it bringeth to pass the destruction of all people.—Ether 3: 98-100.

Wherefore I, Moroni, am commanded to write these things, that evil may be done away, and that the time may come that Satan may have no power upon the hearts of the children of men, but that they may be persuaded to do good continually.—Ether 3: 102.

Book of Mormon prophets learned through bitter experience that the basis of peace is that life which is conditioned by the love of God. We would do well to carry the same passion for righteousness that was expressed by a prophet of long ago.

O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with . . . a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people; Yea, I would declare unto every soul . . . that they should repent and come unto our God, that there might be no more sorrow upon all the face of the earth.—Alma 15: 52, 53.

The Coming Kingdom

PAUL, A STUDENT OF GAMALIEL, had a better education than most of the apostles. He used the word "mysteries" over twenty times in his epistles and loved to declaim on the deeper things of the law and the gospel. He had a varied experience and naturally became a leader in the early church, but there is much that sets apart the man who knows or gives the impression he knows something hidden from others. At one time Paul mentioned "seeing things it was unlawful for men to utter," which doubtless would cause some to seek his supposedly wise counsel or try to learn what it was he knew.

Paul said, "For God hath revealed unto them the invisible things of him, from the creation of the world, which are clearly seen; things which are not seen being understood by the things that are made, through his eternal power and Godhead."—Romans 1: 20. It is true, no doubt, that from the creation of the world, "the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork," but Paul was rather extravagant in his conclusions.

Extend and Order

Since Paul's day the heavens and earth have given up many secrets, but not all "his eternal power and Godhead" are even yet "clearly understood." Dr. Shapley, director of the Harvard College observatory says that Harvard photographic plates probably contain one million galaxies similar to the Milky Way galaxy which we see from the earth; 250,000 of these have had considerable study. There are hundreds of millions of stars in each galaxy, and some are eighty million light years away (the distance photography has reached) and no end is as yet in sight. The new appraisal of the size of the universe indicates two hundred billion galaxies. Modern revelation harmonizes well with the findings of science; we are told "he hath given a law unto all things, by which they move in their times, and in their seasons; and their courses are fixed; even the courses of the heavens, and the earth . . . as they roll upon their wings in their glory, in the midst of the power of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 11, 12.

Albert Einstein says, "Nature is another word for order; there is harmony in all nature, and beauty as a consequence. The most beautiful thing we can experience is the mysterious." We wonder, as did the Psalmist, "What is man that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that thou visitest him?" It may take light millions of light years to travel from the distant stars, yet man's thoughts can encircle that distant world instantly. Einstein says, "The mysterious is the source of all true art, science, religion; the important thing in a man's life is what he thinks, and what he does with his thoughts." Man himself is a mysterious creature of unfathomable potentialities. Science has developed instruments so delicate that the heat given off by the body can be detected 500 feet away. The magnetic force of the human body reaches out still further. Just how far will the intellect or mind of man reach out and influence his fellows?

The Power of Thought

That our thoughts contact and change the thinking of our associates is proven time and again. Indeed seldom, if ever, does one outstanding man or movement occur singly. Today there is a remarkable manifestation of this in the universal social revolution occurring simultaneously in almost all parts of the earth. In Russia, China, India, Britain, and Africa—even in the United States, Canada, and South America, irresistible forces are clamoring for a new world of social equality, and before the century has passed a new order will likely cover the earth.

From whence have these thoughts and stirrings come? Daniel said to Nebuchadnezzar, "Thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed." There is infinite power in man because he is made in the likeness of God, so the infinite power of Supreme Intelligence reaches down, contacts man, and "giveth him inspiration." "He hath set the world in their hearts."—Ecclesiastes 3: 11. "God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not, in a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon him, in slumberings upon the bed, then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction."—Job 33: 14-16.

The Supreme Intelligence

Science tells us there falls upon the earth a perpetual hail of cosmic rays which is simply a shower of electrons, protons, and neutrons, or a combination of these particles. They come with tremendous speed, fast enough to penetrate seventy-five feet of lead. Ten or more of these pass through the human body every second, and we know it not, yet they could tear apart millions of our personal molecules. Can we doubt that in the universe there is a Supreme Intelligence whose glory is intelligence, and from whom pass rays of light "which enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world"?

And the light which now shineth which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light which quickeneth your understanding, which light proceedeth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space, the light which is in all things which giveth life to all things, which is the law by which all things are governed, even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 3.

All men everywhere unconsciously receive impulses and enlightenment from nature, from God, and from their fellow men, for there is unity, order, and law prevailing throughout all creation. In the atoms of the body are miniature solar systems—electrons traveling at tremendous speeds around the nucleus, held together by magnetic or gravitational forces, even as the Milky Way galaxy travels around some distant center. It is natural then that from that distant nucleus (the Supreme Intelligence) must emanate the all-embracing power, omnipresent and omnipotent, which is in all things.

The Potentialities in Man

Man has discovered and mastered many of the forces of nature, but continually he seeks to learn the meaning of it all; he strives to find an answer and a purpose, because he feels within himself power and potentialities which, reason argues, must be capable of even greater heights of attainment. The poet says, "through the ages one increasing purpose runs, and the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns." Man persistently seeks for greater revelation; he runs to and fro, "knowledge shall be increased," but in the running, in the confusion and fear of the day, in the rush of business and travel, in luxurious living, he seldom has the time to draw apart awhile in a quiet place, on the mount, or by the sea, and tune his being to receive the inflowing powers of nature and God. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in and sup with him and he with me." Thousands have been able to grasp a message, a thought, an inspiration.

The Divine Purpose

A few of these thoughts have been recorded in the Bible, Book of Mormon, Koran, Vedas, et cetera, but these are only the records, and not the actual experiences. As recorded, they are but an insignificant part of the whole revelation. Before the art of writing existed, men were taught and inspired by the Supreme Intelligence and in turn left their impress on their fellow men in the form of social laws. God said to Moses, "Worlds without number have I created; behold there are many worlds which have passed away by the word of my power, and there are many also which now stand, all things are numbered unto me, for they are mine and I know them, but only an account of this earth and the inhabitants thereof give I unto you." I do not know of any word received of these other worlds at any later time, beyond the statement that God intends to visit each in "its time and season" (Doctrine and Covenants 85:12-15). But "line upon line, here a little and there a little," the purpose of God is made reasonably clear for the earth on which we live, and there is no doubt his purpose will be accomplished. "He shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied." He must "reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet" (I Corinthians 15:25), establish a perfected world, and be able to deliver "up the kingdom to God, even the Father" (I Corinthians 15:24). Through the ages one increasing purpose runs, and that purpose is unfolding; the mills of God grind slowly, and final fulfillment will extend into far distant ages, when even time shall be no more.

The Coming Kingdom

It is the purpose of this article to call attention only to some statements of interest to students of the present age—some events of the past and some of the future. Enoch of old saw in vision a panorama of the troublous history of earth; but in the time of the end he saw a better world emerging and rejoiced in that hope (Genesis, chapter seven). Daniel glimpsed a small stone (a small kingdom established in the latter days which would extend its authority over the earth and endure forever), "and there was given him [one like the Son of man] dominion, and glory, and a kingdom that all peoples, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."—Daniel 7:14. In the second chapter of Isaiah and the fourth chapter of Micah we are told that in the last day "the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it."

The Kingdom

This means, of course, that the kingdom of God shall be established above the governments of men. Of this government it is said:

Come, . . . let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, . . . and he will teach us of his ways and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid; by the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.—Micah 4:2-4.

There are several facts which stand out in definite assurance in these prophecies. They apply to the latter days in which we are now living. They are backed by the authority of the Lord himself. They point to a secular or materialistic kingdom on earth in which civil law is enacted, justice is administered, and judgment is given. The kingdom is a democracy in which the people agree to accept God's teachings, and walk in his paths. And the result is social security—in the home, in the community, in the nation. There will be freedom from fear, freedom from want, freedom of worship, and freedom of speech. There is also the spiritual kingdom within the temporal or civic organization, "one like unto the Son of Man," in person or by his Spirit.

Before leaving this description of the kingdom of God, I wish to emphasize the dual nature of the kingdom—the secular material body and the living spiritual kingdom which combine to make the living organism the kingdom of God on earth. As the body without the spirit is dead, so the spirit without the body cannot function effectively.

Israel's Hope

Israel looked forward with hope to the coming of the Messiah and his kingdom on earth. The later and minor prophets saw the kingdom as universal:

"His kingdom shall be from sea to sea and from the rivers to the end of the earth." Religion and patriotism were combined in a loyalty to Jehovah as both God and King on the throne of David. Christ declared this ideal world; the kingdom, he said, was at hand. The Israelites from David to Christ did not think of the kingdom of God as beyond the clouds. They saw, as did Christ, the kingdom as the ideal world (Matthew 13:37-41) occupied by a spiritual people. The kingdom of God had two elements then: a spiritual kingdom of joy, peace and love; and the physical, outward organization of law, order, and civil government. This is in harmony with the revealed nature of created beings. From Genesis, chapters one and two, we learn of the two factors which make a complete man, for there was a spiritual creation and a physical creation.

The Kingdom both Spirit and Body

We read that the elements are eternal, and that spirit and element inseparably connected receive a fullness of joy (Doctrine and Covenants 90:5). So the living organism called the kingdom of God could not be produced without the spiritual residing in the outward, physical kingdom. The kingdom of God on earth cannot function without the union of earth and heaven, spirit and element. Again the kingdom of God has a two-fold character and function to perform: on the one side is the regeneration of the individual life (Matthew 13:18-23) and on the other the regeneration of society or the community (36-43). These two must combine; neither can act well alone. To illustrate, the kingdom will rescue the soul that falls into sin and degradation, but it will also clean up the slums, the saloons, and the pits which caused the fall. This requires the assistance of the secular or outward kingdom of law and justice. In the kingdom that Christ foresaw there was justice and judgment; there was law as well as mercy, love, and joy. "Of the increase of his government and peace there is no end, . . . to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever."—Isaiah 9:7. Christ said, "Take no thought for tomorrow what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink." We all know such instructions, if literally followed, would mean disaster, but Jesus went on to qualify his statement with these words: "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6:33. This sets the right perspective before us; namely, until the body of the kingdom is built up and the law of stewardships and community co-operation are in effect, this particular instruction and benefits could not apply. There are laws which require the adherence or acceptance by the body politic—enforced laws which bind authoritatively the entire membership. Members of the apostolic church tried to use the "all things common" law before they had the civic authority to enforce it, so it was a partial failure.

Freedom Only Under Law

Today there is much talk of freedom and the dangers of control by governments. There is, of course, no freedom except under the law; man has his agency, but that agency is bounded by law. "Unto every kingdom is given a law, . . . there is no space in which there is no kingdom. . . . And unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions. All beings who abide not in those conditions are not justified."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 9, 10. Man may twist and turn, may nose into this and that, may boast of his wisdom and freedom, but there is only one course before him, and he must take it or die; anything other than this would be anarchy. We are bound by the laws of health, of nature, of the community, of the nation. We can drive our car without a license or on the wrong side of the street, but we will not drive it very long. Our liberty is the product of law. It is the will of God that we should ultimately live under the law of the celestial kingdom (or love), but in the process of the development of this environment we are kept under a lower law. God's will and purpose is twofold. There is a spiritual regeneration and fulfillment of the individual or personal life. There is the building of a world society or environment in which the will of God can be done on earth as in heaven. Christ spoke often of the spiritual, but actually emphasized the physical or secular. He healed the lame, the sick, the blind, and fed the hungry. He urged men to be meek, not to gain heaven, but to inherit the earth, to become light to enlighten the world—to be good salt, to salt the earth (Matthew 5:15).

The Temporary Failure

The history of the church during the past 1900 years reveals certain facts. As the early church extended its influence and scope, it took within its borders people of wealth and prestige and thus became connected with the ruling class (Constantine, for instance). The state became linked with the church and overpowered the spiritual, so that the Spirit and divine authority were driven out (Revelation, chapter twelve). Only the outward form remained for some 1,260 years. A sharp reaction took place in the time of the Reformation, and Christians struggled to get back to faith and sanctification and away from state control or secular works of any kind. This also was one-sided, incomplete, and inadequate; neither of these conceptions could represent the kingdom of God on earth, since one neglected the spiritual and the other rejected the secular as evil, even turning away in horror from the thought of church and nation, whereas Christ's teaching linked the two. The body without the spirit was dead, while the spirit must function through the body, "faith without works being dead."

The Increase of Knowledge

At the beginning of the nineteenth century, there was evidence of many new and strange factors overshadowing the earth—"In the evening time it shall be light." God's Spirit moved upon the face of the deep, and scientific advance and knowledge increased. The revelations of science began to destroy the old authoritative voice of religion and the old ideas of Christianity crumbled in the new conceptions of the universe—vast ages and distances and man's long ancestry. From the technical advance there developed the age of industrialism, which harnessed the forces of nature into a new and strange world of speed, temporal comforts, and competition, variously described as "capitalism," free enterprise, or "Christian democracy." Capitalism, of course, is not a new thing, but the industrialism of the twentieth century with its concentrations of wealth and power is new. While this industrialism likes to call itself Christian, actually it denies the basic principles of the laws of Christianity. This is pointed out in the report of the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam in 1948.

All Capitalism Not Christian

The motive actuating the new world of industrialism was unchristian, since it was based on the profit motive rather than Christian service.

Competition was held up as the ideal in business, instead of co-operation and brotherhood as advocated by Christ.

The results were gross inequality—a few rich, but many poor.

Inevitable periods of depression came with surpluses of goods but no way to distribute them to the suffering people. If this report is accepted as largely correct, then we must conclude that only capitalism which renders an unselfish service to the community as a whole can ever be a participant in the coming kingdom of God.

A Marvelous Work

Another very significant event occurred early in the nineteenth century which was intended to offset the effect of the two factors just mentioned. It was a "marvelous work and a wonder," which was to provide a leadership, a pattern, in this important period of change. It would be strange indeed, if in this time of flux, when long-accepted ideas of religious dogma were being discredited, when the industrial world with its harnessing of the powers of nature was changing the lives of men, if the Supreme Intelligence should not make a corresponding revelation of his "increasing purpose," which had been building up through the ages. In 1830, a remarkable revelation of God's power occurred, setting forth the pattern of the kingdom of God, "the ideal world" to come, the gospel of the kingdom, the message of the angel at the hour of his judgment (Revelation 14: 6).

For All People

The message would necessarily contain a description of the two factors or sections of the kingdom which we have considered, namely the spiritual "the pure in heart," and the secular, or outward body. It is indeed the picture of the complete and perfected kingdom, described in Micah and Daniel, which is to cover the whole earth.

Some have thought to limit this work of God to a small, isolated locality in a place called the land of Zion, forgetting that the message was to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," and the work was universal. Like the work of Christ it was the pattern, the nucleus, the seed of the kingdom, which would leaven the whole lump. It was the focal point, the spearhead, of a universal work, proceeding contemporaneously over all the earth as one grand harmonious whole.

In this study, we have learned how, from the Supreme Intelligence, rays of light came to contact the thoughts and minds of men in one grand crescendo of power, passing from man to man and changing the thinking of all. It would be utterly impossible for a movement such as the "Latter Day Work" to remain isolated. Again, the thought of an isolated kingdom of God, in one place or nation, is incompatible with the revelation of God's purpose; indeed it would be impossible for the physical body of the kingdom to completely function apart from the state or national authority. The kingdom must be in the top of that mountain and in spiritual authority over them.

The term "Zion," as used in the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants, has a lim-

A Builder of the Reorganization

Selections from the Memoirs of William
Wallace Blair of the First Presidency

Part Seven: Publication of the Inspired Version of the Scriptures

Manuscript of Inspired Version

UNDER DATE OF APRIL 11, 1866, my diary notes read as follows: "I have been sick with acute bronchitis for the past twenty-three days but am now recovering fast and am able to ride to Plano in carriage and attend the last day of conference."

Brother Joseph Smith, at the opening of conference, April 6, in an inspirational prayer, pleaded with the Lord for my recovery, also that my voice be heard in the conference ere its close. That prayer was granted, though all outward indications were against it until the evening of the tenth. From that time forth I gained in health rapidly, and on May 2 went with Brethren Marks and Rogers to Nauvoo to procure the manuscript of the Inspired Translation by Joseph the Seer. On the morning of the third we called on Sister Emma, the widow of the Seer, stating that we had come by direction of the church to procure the manuscript that it might be prepared for the printer and be published at an early time. She very readily placed it in our hands, and in reply to our inquiry as to what remuneration she asked for taking care of it in the past, she replied that she would make no charge, but said if we would furnish her a copy of the book when published she would be pleased. We said to her that the church was quite willing to pay her well for the manuscript, either a stated amount or a percentage on sales, as she might choose. She replied promptly that if she had desired to sell the manuscript she could have done so long ago at a large price, for the Brighamites and others had importuned her for it and some had attempted to steal it. She said that she had entertained no fears of any one getting it in any improper way from her possession, for she was conscious that the watchcare of the Lord was over it. . . .

On the twenty-eighth day of December, 1866, I engaged with Brethren Joseph Smith, Ebenezer Robinson, and I. L. Rogers in preparing the manuscript of the Inspired Translation of the Bible and continued to assist in that work, preaching in the meantime when leisure offered, until the first day of July, 1867. In the preparation of this manuscript we were greatly blessed and enlightened of the Lord. . . .

On July 5, accompanied by Brother Ebenezer Robinson, I started out to visit St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Philadelphia, to get the Inspired Translation stereotyped and published. I remained in St. Louis until the tenth, but could not arrange to get our work done in the manner we desired. We then visited Cincinnati on the eleventh and twelfth, but could effect no suitable arrangements for the work in that city. On the fifteenth and sixteenth we visited various offices in Philadelphia without success, but on the seventeenth we called on Wescott and Thompson and readily secured satisfactory terms, and on the nineteenth concluded our contract in writing. When I told him that the book was a revision, correction, and translation of the Scriptures by Joseph Smith, the Prophet, the Spirit of the Lord rested both on him and us, and he exclaimed with tearful eyes: "All right! I want to do your work, and it shall be done well and in good time." Up to this time we had not explained to him the nature of the book, nor our religious associations. From this time forward Mr. Wescott and his associates were our helpers and warm friends. Brother Robinson stated afterward to myself and others that his experiences and testimonies of the Spirit in procuring the stereotyping of the Inspired Translation were quite similar to those attending him in Cincinnati when he procured the stereotyping and publication of the Book of Mormon. . . .

On the twenty-ninth day of July (1867) we paid Wescott and Thompson one thousand dollars on our contract. . . .

On September 9, I wrote to Sidney Rigdon, Sr., and sent him some proof-sheets of the Inspired Translation. On the sixteenth, sent sample of paper, also estimates for printing, paper, and binding of the Inspired Translation to Ebenezer Robinson, as I had done to Joseph Smith. . . .

On the twenty-fourth I ordered the printing and binding of five thousand copies of the Inspired Translation of the firm of J. P. Lippincott and Company, Wescott and Thompson guaranteeing the payment of fifteen hundred dollars to twenty-five hundred dollars on the contract in ten or twelve days, such confidence did he and his firm have in our reliability. . . .

On the sixteenth [October] we settled with Wescott and Thompson, paying them in full on the stereotyping contract. We labored in Pittsburgh and vicinity from the eighteenth to the twenty-fourth, and in Brookfield, Ohio, from the twenty-fourth to the thirty-first, and then proceeded home.

On the seventh day of November [1867] I made my report on the Inspired Translation to the publishing committee.

Look With God

THOUSANDS OF LIVES have been saved in recent years by the signs requiring us to "Stop, Look, and Listen" at railroad crossings. Thousands of other lives are lost each year because people refuse to slow up.

This is true in our daily lives. The businessman takes inventory at least once a year. But many of us are so busy going somewhere that we never find time to enjoy the scenery by the way or to consider where we are going.

Those who have made a practice of stopping once a week to look backward and forward with God tell us that the week's journey is much more pleasant and profitable for the rest. They are like the wise old French lady who took off a day every now and again to catch up with herself, and said that this was her secret of eternal youth. They share the wisdom of the East, which gives over a definite day to the refreshment of silence.

Let us be still, and listen to God in the quietness of our own souls on days which feel different because they have been dedicated to him.

New Church at Everett, Washington

By Helen Stover Gilberts

THE CONGREGATION of the Everett Branch is housed in a neat and attractive church home at 2919 Everett Avenue on the corner of Maple Street. The frame building has grey shake exterior with Gothic windows and a square tower.

Entering the large double doors on the street level, the visitor sees a pleasing harmony in the lower foyer. The upper foyer is lighted by a large Gothic window, and on the opposite wall a plate glass partition provides an opportunity for mothers with restless children to enjoy the service outside the chapel.

The main auditorium, seating 150, has a wide carpeted center aisle and an aisle on either side. The entire floor is covered with plain green asphalt tile. Walls are beige, and the Japanese oak pews and chancel furniture create a restful atmosphere for worship. Tinted windows provide natural light.

At the back of the chancel is an altar providing a worship center, the pulpit, and three high-back chairs. Heavy green carpeting covers the floor. The chancel is reserved for the priesthood.

A Lord's Supper table and two matching chairs stand on the main floor where the Communion is served.

Every inch of the basement is used. Sliding partitions may be moved to make it a dining room with a friendly fireplace, or a number of class rooms. The women have equipped the compact kitchen with adequate conveniences. A large baptismal font, furnace room for the oil heating and air-conditioning unit, and an electric hot water tank add to the utility of the building.

At the present time the membership is 88, consisting of 57 families. Of this number there are 55 active members. The church serves the community, and many nonmembers attend.

FRIENDS ASK HOW such a small congregation was able to build this friendly little church with a small capital in so short a time. On March 28, 1948, the building committee—consisting of Elder George R. Brundage, Harold Johnson, High Priest Carl Oliver, and Pastor Elliott Gilberts—were given authority by the branch "to start the building project and proceed, using their best judgment."

Prior to this time the Saints met in a small building at 2415 Fulton Avenue which was built in 1922 and dedicated March 24, 1929, by Dr. F. M. Smith. The branch was organized April, 1923, and Elder Samuel Stearns was the first branch president. Others to hold this position were Elders George Brundage, Granville Swenson, and Elliott Gilberts, who now serves the branch as pastor. In time the little church on Fulton Avenue became inadequate so a building fund was started for the new church in 1938.

The committee entered into the new project with vigor. Brother Larry Roberts drew tentative plans, and Harold Johnson worked with Mr. Solomon, an architectural designer, who drew the final plans. Elder Brundage, being retired, had time to superintend the building. The committee hired two carpenters to build the forms for the basement. Mr. Bob Barci and another carpenter were retained until the building was roofed.

Men of the branch helped on Saturdays and after work in the evenings. By Memorial Day of 1948 the subfloor was laid in the main auditorium. Little by little the basement took form, and each week the work progressed. Plans were made to have Thanksgiving dinner in the new church basement on November 25, 1948.

It required a great amount of work to prepare the building for the Thanksgiving opening, but it was made ready, the men working until the guests arrived. The women prepared the dinner and took it to the church ready to serve. There were just a few boards in the kitchen space to set the utensils on. Apostle George Mesley was the honored guest. Saints came from Seattle and enjoyed the turkey dinner and musical program.

THE FOLLOWING SUNDAY, November 28, 1948, the Saints met in the basement for services, stayed for dinner, and attended the business meeting in the afternoon. From the treasurer's report it was learned for the first time that Brother Benjamin Pilbeam had donated the $800 for the lot where the new church stood. It was also noted that, at the start of the building operations, the building fund amounted to $2,196. The Rucker Avenue lots which had been purchased previously sold for $4,000 and Brother Pilbeam loaned the branch $8,500. At this time the Fulton Avenue church had not been sold. (Later the old church brought $2,500.) At the present time the building is worth $35,000.

Hired carpenters worked on the building, being paid by the day, until it was completely enclosed. Elder Brundage continued to act as building supervisor. Men of the branch helped evenings, Saturdays, and in their spare time. Those workers were: Harold Johnson, Russell Brundage, Elliott Gilberts and his two sons John and Dick, Ben Pilbeam, Presley Smith, Clarence Scafe and his son Gayle, Aaron Mallery, Millerd Utt, Merle Foster, and Jack Willett. Pete Johnson and Elder Brundage laid the finished fir floor on the upper auditorium during the late winter and early spring of 1949.

After the floor was laid upstairs and the shiplap enclosing the studding was up, the congregation moved upstairs,

God Is My Partner

By Esther Brockway

GOD IS MY PARTNER; hence I am in a business that cannot fail. We are sharing together the responsibilities of building the kingdom of God on earth. According to the Articles of Partnership, I carry certain responsibilities that are my just share; in return he has certain responsibilities if I give my loyal services to him. If I am to know what to expect of him, and what he has a right to expect of me, I must study diligently the Articles of Partnership, or The Three Books and other publications of his church.

Furthermore, since he is also a Partner of other people engaged in kingdom-building, I must regularly associate myself with my fellow partners that I might give them strength and encouragement, and in turn be blessed by them.

All partnerships include certain financial responsibilities that each partner must fulfill. I am expected to pay such tithes and offerings as might be reasonably expected of me in relation to my income and expenses. For a partnership to succeed, each partner must be of unquestioned integrity. I cannot cheat or lie or do "fancy" bookkeeping to cover dubious activities in the hope that God won't find out or will overlook my frailties with no penalties attached just because his love is everlasting. I am "bonded" under our Articles of Partnership, and as long as I keep all the requirements of our agreement, I am free under the law. But if I break any of the laws, the "bonding company" searches me out, fixes the penalty, and pleads that I repent.

MY PARTNER is very exacting about my relations to other members of the firm, and to those he hopes to win to participate in his business. He demands that I treat them with unfailing kindness, mercy, humility, and forgiveness. He says that if I give gifts, I should not give them to those who can repay me, but rather make my alms to the poor and afflicted, who can never pay me back. He says that if I have talents, I will lose them through hoarding; the only way I can keep them is to give freely. He says I must forgive all men their trespasses, but he will forgive only the repentant. He, not I, has the right to decide who is repentant. He, not I, has the right to become angry with sinners and see that they suffer the consequences of their sins. He says I must love my enemies or lose my privileges of partnership.

Jesus describes mercy and forgiveness in this language:

Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, who would take account of his servants. And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him who owed him ten thousand talents. For so much as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife, and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made. And the servant besought him, saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

Then the lord of that servant was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt. The servant, therefore, fell down and worshiped him.

But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants which owed him a hundred pence; and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest. And his fellow-servant fell down at his feet, and besought him, saying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

And he would not; but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt. So when his fellow-servants saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done. Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, O thou wicked servant! I forgave thee all that debt; because thou desiredst me; shouldst not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee? And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him. So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses.

Jesus demands my unquestioned loyalty:

He who loveth father and mother more than me, is not worthy of me; and he who loveth son or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me. And he who taketh not his cross and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.

The gospel has many hard laws which require great faith:

Lay not up for yourselves treasure upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal. But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.—Matthew 6: 19-21.

IN RETURN I have a right to ask the Lord to fulfill certain obligations of partnership to me when I do my part. When I have fulfilled the requirements, I can expect this:

Your Heavenly Father will provide for you, whatsoever things ye need for food, what ye shall eat; and for raiment, what ye shall wear or put on. Therefore I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your bodies, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment. . . . behold, I say unto you, that your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. Wherefore, seek not the things of this world but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day shall be the evil thereof.—Matthew 6: 27, 28, 37-39.

I have certain problems and "rumors of problems" to face in earning my daily bread: the possibility of ill health, unemployment due to economic upheavals and devastating wars, and of course, the feebleness of old age. These are factors which I cannot do much about, but the Lord is willing to help me with them. He knows I must eat, regardless of untoward factors in my environment. As long as I do my share in our partnership, he is responsible to help me solve these problems. Nowhere in our Articles of Partnership do I find a guarantee that I will be spared frustration, worry, struggle, pain, doubt, or temptation; but he does guarantee that if I put my hand in his with simple, childlike faith, in the long run the victory may be mine, even though I seem to suffer temporary defeats.

In this problem of earning my daily bread, I have certain responsibilities that I must fulfill by my own free agency. I must work to become competent for the tasks required of me on the job, and I must constantly seek to improve myself. The other half of this problem is for me to make every reasonable effort to be agreeable to my fellow partners on the job by showing myself full of love, humility, kindness, and patience. If I finish the required tasks and have time left, I must offer my services to help someone else—not grudgingly, but cheerfully. As part of my stewardship responsibility I should work at trades and industries that are beneficial rather than detrimental to community life, for I am responsible to the community for the kind of work I do. And as a steward I have group as well as individual responsibilities.

Furthermore, if I seek to advance myself on the job, it must not be to the detriment of my fellow workers, that I should elbow them out of the way as I push myself upward. "He who would be chiefest among you, let him be servant of all, and he who would be greatest, let him first be least."

When I make every effort to do what the Lord expects of me, I have a right to expect his divine direction in helping me to make decisions. My vision is limited, but God is all-wise, and he knows ahead of time what the result of my choices will be, and he will give me guidance that will bring me ultimate victory if I ask in faith.

Question:

We have understood that there is to be a special endowment given to the church just before the redemption of Zion and the coming of Christ. What is the scriptural evidence for this idea? California F. G.

Answer:

What is called the endowment is a special bestowal of the Holy Spirit upon the ordained men of the church, to qualify them for the exacting work which is to be done in a future day. It is collective rather than individual, and is designed to make possible the meeting of the unusual demands of the Lord's work in the world at the time of the closing up of the work among the Gentiles, when his servants "go forth among the gentiles for the last time . . . to bind up the law and seal up the testimony," and shall thenceforth turn to Israel as the Scriptures promise. It accompanies the fulfilling of the Gentile times, the ushering in of Israel's day of restoration, and the marking of a world climax.

The Lord began preparation for this endowment by commanding his people to build the Lord's house at Kirtland, Ohio, in which house the endowment was to be given (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 7; 91: 2; 92: 1-2). This endowment will be especially needful when the gospel is sent to scattered and lost Israel with a view to its restoration (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 23; 87: 3; 58: 3; III Nephi 10: 4). It is also related to the establishment of Zion, though we cannot give particulars (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 3; 102: 10; 100: 3; III Nephi 10: 1-8). It is a day of great things when "the Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God"—a day when there will be social, religious, economic, and political upheavals, affecting all nations (Matthew 24: 28-32; Isaiah 52: 10; Mosiah 8: 66-71).

Among the great events of those times will be the redemption of Zion. In 1834 the Lord spoke:

It is expedient in me that the elders of my church should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion, that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more perfectly concerning their duty, and the things which I require at their hands; and this can not be brought to pass until mine elders are endowed with power from on high; for behold, I have prepared a great endowment and blessing to be poured out upon them, inasmuch as they are faithful and continue in humility before me; therefore it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season, for the redemption of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 3.

It is expedient in me that the first elders of my church should receive their endowment from on high in my house which I have commanded to be built unto my name in the land of Kirtland.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 10.

The Sunday following the dedication of the temple in 1836, the Lord appeared there in vision to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery giving them this message:

I will manifest myself to my people in mercy in this house; yea, I will appear unto my servants and speak unto them with mine own voice, if my people will keep my commandments, and do not pollute this house: yea, the hearts of thousands and tens of thousands shall greatly rejoice in consequence of the blessing which shall be poured out, and the endowment with which my servants have been endowed in this house. [Reference to the endowment, though in the past tense, is prophetic.]—Church History, Volume 2, page 47.

A personal word here may be permissible. I think it was in the summer of 1912, when attending the Kirtland reunion, I walked one day with Bishop E. L. Kelley toward the temple. In conversation with him I asked, "Do you think the temple has served the purpose the Lord had in mind in commanding its erection?" "No, indeed!" he replied, saying there was yet to be an endowment given there. He proceeded to tell me this experience, which I give as accurately as recollection will permit:

During the time when I was directing the work of restoring the building after it came into the possession of the church in 1881 by decree of the district court, I was one day returning from lunch at the hotel across the way to the temple when suddenly I found myself in vision in the upper auditorium of the building. The place was well filled with men who apparently had been for some time preparing for mission work, and were now together for the last time previous to their going out to their appointed work. They were quiet and expectant. Immediately I saw the Lord appear before them, and he began to instruct and counsel them as to their work, following which he moved down among the men, touching each one on the head with his finger as he passed. With that touch every man became filled with the Spirit of power, and under that Spirit proceeded forth to his appointed fields.

Question:

Is it irregular for a man of the Aaronic priesthood who occupies at prayer service in the absence of elders or priests to discern the spirit of testimony or to be impressed that certain people should pray?

Ontario

D. S. W.

Answer:

According to Latter Day Revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10 and 11) it is permissible for the priest, teacher, or deacon to preside in the absence of an elder. He—the priest, teacher, or deacon—is to take the lead of such meetings as directed by the Spirit. If that one directing is a teacher he has the right of assistance from the deacon if the occasion requires. A branch may be presided over by a high priest, elder, priest, teacher, or deacon (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 2).

The Lord recognizes the presiding officer, regardless of his priesthood calling, for the benefit of the people to whom he is attempting to minister. Therefore the presiding officer has the right to have the spirit of discernment, which is a part of his prerogatives as a presiding officer. In the absence of other officers, the priest, teacher, or deacon, when asked to preside, do so in their own right.

The ideal situation, however, is always to have a qualified member of the Melchisedec priesthood to preside, but in situations otherwise the Lord has given the instruction found in Doctrine and Covenants, sections 17 and 120.

What Kind of Insurance?

I have often wondered if it isn't a weakness of many people to be more concerned about life insurance than "after-life" insurance. The conscientious husband and father says, "I want my family taken care of in the event of my death." This, of course, is the right attitude, but he should have some insurance for himself after his body and spirit are no longer one. The Doctrine and Covenants says that the reward shall be great for those who serve the Lord and are true to him. Besides putting money away for his family, a man should insure himself with the things that will bring him the rewards of eternity.

It is easy for us, when things are going smoothly, to cancel our policies with the Lord. Many things can take our eyes from the true goal; yet we are commanded to work for perfection every minute. Mothers should budget their busy days to make time for meditation, study, prayer, and preparation for fellowship service. These are the premiums that will bring dividends in the hereafter.

The Power of God

At the age of eleven I was in an accident on the Lamoni "westside" playground during recess. No one guessed then how far-reaching the effects of that accident would be.

During the next seventeen years there were many days of illness and eventually surgery. There were disappointments and "blue days" when it was hard to remember that back of the dark clouds was a silver lining.

Through administration God blessed me many, many times by relieving pain and healing various disturbances of both mind and body. Yet always it seemed that as one part of my body was made well, something else would require treatment.

The time came when it seemed I was completely well. Then it was discovered my spine was injured; this began to cause much suffering. I could not turn myself in bed without extreme pain, or bend, or lift even a small kettle of water, or slide my chair into position at the table. Walking was more painful than anyone ever knew. I leaned heavily upon God at this time for courage and endurance, and again through administration several times the pain was removed.

During the Lamoni Reunion which has just passed I made an appointment with Brother Cackler for administration. My husband, Jack; a close friend, Helen Thies; and I went fasting and praying. With the hands of the elders upon my head, I received a deeper sense of peace than I have ever known before. It seemed the sun was even brighter as we went arm in arm to the general prayer service. My husband had received assurance that I would be well and gave his testimony that morning. Helen too realized the Power that was there, and Brother Cackler told me he hoped I could testify to this blessing soon.

It was not an instantaneous healing, but off and on all that day I could feel a gentle pushing all up and down my spine. When I became uncomfortable, the pushing ceased and after a bit began again. This was on Friday; on Saturday I began to realize the muscles in my back were sore—unused ones that had begun to tighten and respond as needed.

On Sunday that peace was still with me, and I felt free and happy. I felt the urge to run . . . and I did.

The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is my God too. Can I ever forget him, even a day, as I bend and lift, work and play?

In my heart I desire to always find the song, "God Is so Good to Me."

A Testimony of Conversion

In 1941 my husband and I were baptized into the Utah Church; at that time we did not know of the Reorganized Church. In 1947 we visited Independence and received some literature at the Auditorium which explains the difference in the two organizations. After studying it we sent for the sermons by Evan Fry which proved a great inspiration to us. Brother J. A. Phillips of Kennett called on us at the request of Brother Fry and Apostle Chesworth. The first time our granddaughter heard him talk she asked for baptism. Other church members came to visit us, and we held meetings out in our yard under the trees.

As a result of the meetings I was baptized, and my husband will join when he returns home (he is away working now). On Sunday, July 21, the Saints came again and brought Brother Dortch with them to testify of his healing. He had been helpless with creeping paralysis but through the consistent prayers of the Saints and frequent administration he is regaining his health and is now able to stand and give his testimony. The Father was surely with us on that occasion, and the little circle where we gathered seemed holy ground.

I would like for the Saints to pray for us, our son, and our granddaughter who has eye trouble.

Concerning Nonmember Companions

I was much interested in a recent Herald letter by one who was asking for suggestions to those who are married to nonmembers. Somebody has said, "Begin where you are, use what you have, and keep going." I think it is wise to act as naturally as possible, doing whatever can be done to create an interest without irritating the one who doesn't belong to the church. It has been said that what happens to us is not so important as how we meet it.

For family worship, only a Scripture reading may be acceptable. Later this may be supplemented. Recreation that is objectionable should be avoided, and especially it should be kept out of the home.

Jesus said, "Render unto God the things that are God's, and unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." In all fairness to nonmember husbands, Latter Day Saint wives should be considerate, unquarrelsome, and should not invite priesthood visits or ask for administration in the home except in critical cases. Children should not be blessed or baptized without the consent of the father. When the wife attends services on Sunday or through the week she should leave meals prepared for the family if she cannot be home at mealtime.

I have been married twenty-two years to a nonmember. We have family worship, wholesome recreation, and two of our three children who are of age have been baptized. I would not mention my personal experiences except I feel they may encourage the sister who wrote, and others like her.

Teaching Children in Your Church

By Arlene S. Hall

Here is a complete and practical textbook on the preparation, methods, and effectiveness of the children's religious education program in your church. It will help new teachers learn their jobs and provide new zest and inspiration to experienced teachers. The purpose of this comprehensive volume is to assist leaders and teachers in their endeavor to lead children to Christ.

Women's Groups Are Active

THROUGHOUT the summer months many letters containing reports of the work done in local and district women's departments have been received. Each report indicates that the women are increasing their understanding of the work they must accomplish, and the keynote of the year's work seems to be "activity with a purpose."

Most local departments in the branches are realizing that they have a definite work to do and that they are important to the success of the district program. A district can be successful only to the degree that each local department is busy trying to reach the chosen goals.

One additional goal to strive for is accurate record-keeping and faithful, diligent reporting to the leaders.

These two sample reports are heartening.

A REPORT FROM A LOCAL DEPARTMENT

Jonesport, Maine, Women's Department

Local Leader

A Resume of Activities

We enjoy a fine spirit of fellowship and co-operation, and while our group is not as large as we should like, yet we feel that we have accomplished something worth while.

Meetings held	19
Smallest attendance	12
Largest attendance	42

Each meeting has opened with a devotion directed by the program chairman, and many of the members have taken part. Each service has been a source of help and inspiration.

For study:

"New Vistas Unlimited," by Alice Bolon, has been finished.

"The Building of a New Nation," Book of Mormon study, has been started.

Guest speakers—subjects:

Patriarch—A New Year's message

Superintendent of schools—Disaster preparedness

Visiting women's leader—Report of activities and goals in her district

Order of the day's program:

Devotion

Lesson

Business Session

Social Hour—Light refreshments served at first meeting of each month

Special meetings:

"Hat Party" (opening meeting)

Tree and appropriate program at Christmas

Projects (money used to aid the branch financially):

Annual church bazaar

Two food sales

Sale of cards (Christmas and all occasion), dish cloths, nylons, and toilet soap

Additional funds (members contribute fifteen cents each meeting):

This fund pays—

Current expenses; flower plants; four sunshine baskets and cards which have been sent to the sick in the community (This helps in the friendly visiting program).

The Women's Department has sponsored:

Two banquets

Two showers

Other activities:

Served meals for district conference and priesthood institute

Open house for district missionary

Donated to Girl Scouts and cancer drive

WOMEN'S CHURCH-WIDE INSTITUTE

IN OCTOBER there will be a migration of women from many points, all heading for Independence. Will you be one of them?

We hope that reunion experiences will serve to deepen your desire to attend the Women's Institute, October 8 through 12, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

The success of the Women's Institute depends not only on the efforts of those in charge, but also on your prayers, attendance, and participation. The Institute needs you.

Even more, you need what the Institute can bring you. It was first considered in order to meet the needs of the women of the church, and every activity is planned, not just to make the Institute a success, but to help church women make a success of Zion's living. That will be the true measure of the success of the Women's Institute.

Will you be there?

Report of Department of Women Central Oklahoma District

Mrs. A. J. Goodwin
District Women's Leader

THIS IS A COMPILATION of reports from fourteen branches in the Central Oklahoma District.

Projects for the Year:

Canned wine for Communion; made mite boxes; sponsored rum-waist measure aprons; showed religious films, bought armchairs for church rostrum; made branch telephone directory; gave a birthday dinner for entire church; gave Christmas basket to pastor; helped with city-wide Bible school at Enid and also held own vacation church school. Other women's groups sponsored vacation church schools in smaller communities. Two reported giving programs for branch at 11 o'clock service.

Numerical Totals:

Branches or missions reporting.....	12
Number of women in branches.....	418
Members active in women's departments.....	287
Average attendance.....	213
Number of meetings.....	329
Number of social activities.....	46

Visiting Program:

Total calls on sick.....	1,259
Calls to neighbors, friends, and members.....	1,113
(Of these, 588 were phone calls, and 192 were cards sent.)

Total Flowers Distributed:

To church.....	280
To members and friends.....	223
Number of groups making yearbooks.....	12
Dues sent to the General Council.....	$24.70
Total amount earned by departments.....	$4,577.94

District Project:

The women of the district purchased two tents for the children's work at reunion. Last year they met under the trees and, fortunately, it did not rain. This year the little ones will have shelter for their heads.

Philanthropic Work:

Made up holiday baskets for the needy; gave money for heart and cancer drive; gave food shower for needy family; gave gift to sick friend; reclaimed clothing for needy; sent young people to youth camp; sent people to reunion; gave milk and winter clothing to needy children; gave winter coat to lady in Sanitarium. Tulsa Branch contributed eighty and one half hours of service caring for sick and preparing food for sick or where death had occurred.

mage, doughnut, bake, parcel post, and Dutch sales; gave pie, chicken, and chili suppers; raised money to build church classrooms; gave bazaars; made rugs, quilts, and other handwork to establish mission in Turley; served branch Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners; acted as hostesses to district conference, ministerial alliance, youth conference and priesthood institute; raised money to pay note on church lots; bought silverware for church; bought hymnbooks for church; raised money for building fund by luxury offering and talent project; sold greeting cards; ran concession at Oklahoma State Fair; bought nursery equipment and bulletin board for church; made

Missionary Activities

Called on nonmembers; bought and gave tracts; loaned books; invited nonmembers to services; sponsored family visitor program; distributed thirty Books of Mormon in one branch; held two public meetings of women's department; gave missionary playlet at one meeting and followed it by using the next meeting to visit nonmember friends. Morning coffee was given by one woman for twenty-two friends during which time she reviewed and distributed Differences That Persist.

Greatest Need—Greatest Strength of Departments:

It is difficult to say what is the greatest need or the greatest strength of the department in this district. I believe the majority of the local leaders stress that their greatest strength is in their unity and cooperation and the help they receive through prayer and devotions.

In my opinion the greatest needs may well be an increased sense of the importance of working now, learning more about women's work, developing the desire to study and to learn in all areas of life. Perhaps both of these questions may be answered better in a few months when I know more about the district women.

EVANSVILLE, INDIANA.—On June 10 three candidates were baptized at Glenn Lake. They were Merna Gritton, Rodney Ingle, and Worthal Keller. July 22 another baptismal service was held. Two other children were baptized: Twyla Dawn Miller and Hubert Salm.—Reported by ODIE ELLEN CAMPBELL.

RAPID CITY, SOUTH DAKOTA.—At the close of a series of illustrated lectures by Seventy E. Y. Hunker, July 22, two men were ordained. Frederick O. Weddle was ordained to the office of priest by Seventy E. Y. Hunker, assisted by President Dale E. Larsen. George T. Mefford, Jr., was ordained to the office of deacon by Elders Orin and George T. Mefford, Sr. Following their ordination they were in charge of the evening preaching service.—Reported by DALE E. LARSEN

A rummage sale conducted by the women's department brought $200 for the building fund.

Joyce Rodney, Carol Brennon, and Bobbie Dulas were baptized on Children's Day by Elder Harold Cline.

Ray Elam, branch bishop's agent, was appointed as one of the trustees for the Happy Valley Foundation Fund. The pastor and his wife vacationed at Yellowstone Park. The district spent July 4 at Happy Valley.

Stanley Langfield has entered the service.

The marriage of Ruth Cline of San Jose and Robert Brown of Oakland was performed at a candlelight ceremony held in the church July 8. Elder James Cummings of Oakland officiated.

The Zion's League attended the district youth camp at Happy Valley. An all-church picnic was held at Alum Rock Park July 26.

Zion's League and Zion's Home Builders met at Menlo Park for a social which was held at the home of Jane Madaloni.

Agnes Elam spent a week at Big Basin Park as campfire counselor for her group of girls.—Reported by STENA CALDWELL

MOBILE, ALABAMA.—The local vacation church school was conducted in the education building June 18-29 with Julia Mae Wilson serving as principal. Beverly Peavy was in charge of the music appreciation period. Average attendance was eighty. Ninety-one children received certificates at the award service. Refreshments were served daily by members of the women's department.

Wayne Hough was ordained to the office of elder August 5 under the hands of Elders J. A. Pray and Henry Hough, the candidate's father. Brother Hough is a recent graduate of Troy State Teacher's College, Troy, Alabama, where he received his degree in education.

The pastor has organized weekly training classes for cottage meeting teams and a sustained missionary program will begin September 1 in preparation for a missionary series to be held beginning October 14.

The following were elected branch officers at the business meeting July 29: J. A. Pray, pastor; Brewton Greene and R. L. Booker, associates; Wayne Hough, church school director; Alma Peavy, leader of women; Hale Miller, treasurer; Gomer Miller, recorder; A. V. Peavy, adult and young people's supervisor; Julia Mae Wilson, children's department supervisor; Laura Vickrey, secretary; Ardeith Vickrey, Herald reporter, Gladys Barnes, church school secretary; Lonnie Rogers, book steward; T. C. Calter and J. C. Barlow, Sr., auditors; Gomer Miller, junior pastor; R. L. Booker, Brewton Greene, Hale Miller, Clara Paul, and J. C. Barlow, Sr., comprise the finance committee; and Jean Hough, director of music.—Reported by JULIA MAE WILSON

CENTRAL TEXAS DISTRICT.—Apostle Arthur A. Oakman held a series in Houston from June 24 to July 1. From July 8-15, Elder Alfred Yale held a series at Hearne. Accompanying Elder Yale was Ralph Bobbitt, music director of Houston Branch. The Marlin Branch has had six baptisms, and the Hearne Branch has had two baptisms.—Reported by NELLA JUNE DOTSON

HAWAII.—A one week vacation church school was held in Honolulu from June 9-17 with all three congregations under the direction of Maurine Crownover. There was a total attendance of 142.

The Honolulu congregations met together for a Rally Day service June 17 when attention was focused on the Gilbert J. Waller Memorial Chapel to be erected by the Hawaii District. Over $5,000 was raised in cash and pledges.

A Zion's League banquet was held at the Y.W.C.A. in Honolulu on June 22 honoring the high school and college, including Grace-land, graduates. Matthew Esposito, district supervisor of young people, was toastmaster. Fifteen nationalities were represented: Negro, Filipino, Hawaiian, Chinese, Japanese, Portuguese, Italian, Irish, German, Swedish, French, Dutch, Scotch, English, and Spanish.

The first youth camp in Hawaii on a district-wide basis was held in two sessions.

The young people on Oahu attended the camp at Kaaawa from June 28 to July 1, while those on Hawaii had their camp at Kawaihae from July 17 to 20. Elder A. Orlin Crownover directed the Oahu camp, and assisted Elder Elwin R. Vest who was director of the Hawaii camp. Since both camps are run as part of the same, the name Hooluana was chosen for both of them. The name means "a peaceful retreat for meditation and worship." A total of sixty-five people attended camp. Twenty-four were from Oahu, and forty-one were from Hawaii.

Elder and Sister Prescott A. Foo left Hawaii July 7 to make their home at Ava, Missouri. Brother Foo was a counselor in the district presidency and in the Kapalama congregation, and Sister Foo served as district historian.

A church school institute was held in Hilo, July 13-15. Major assignments were handled by Sister Maurine Crownover, district church school director, A. Orlin Crownover, district president, Elwin R. Vest, Hilo pastor, and Sister Inez Vest.—Reported by A. ORLIN CROWNOVER

ROSEBURG, OREGON.—On Children's Day Harry J. Ruchaber, small son of Harry and Amy Ruchaber, was blessed by Elder J. F. Ruchaber, assisted by Elder John B. Rodley.

Following the morning services on July 29 a baptismal service was held at the Urnpqua River. Ronnie Rodley was baptized by Elder John B. Rodley. Priest Harry F. Ruchaber was in charge of the service.—Reported by MAXINE RODLEY

PORTLAND, OREGON.—Elder James Kemp, newly appointed missionary to the Oregon District, and his wife Helen were guests of honor at a reception held in their behalf by the members of First Branch April 29. Elder and Sister Kemp and their small daughter were recently transferred to the Northwest from their former assignment in Hawaii. Elder Kemp delivered the evening sermon, after which the reception was held.

On April 6 the branch held a church birthday potluck dinner in the lower auditorium. After the dinner was served, each member was given the opportunity to tell how he became a member of the church and also to contribute ten cents for each year of membership. A total of $165.10 was received from this project. The money was given to the branch building fund.

President Wallace Smith was speaker at a special service at First Branch on April 11. Members of Central and Southeast Branches were also invited to attend and Elders Lester Comer and Lloyd Shannon, pastors, assisted in taking charge of the service.

The women's Golden Note Chorus of the Vestal P.T.A., directed by Sister Freeda Moore, presented a musical program during National Music Week on May 11. Refreshments were served following the musical program.

Larry and Marcene Toering were baptized June 10. Pastor Glenn Haviland had charge of the baptismal service and Elder Gordon Lampard performed the sacrament. Confirmation was held at the morning preaching hour.

First Branch honored the pastor and his wife, Elder Glenn and Dorothy Haviland, with a reception held for them at their home on June 21. A program including musical numbers and readings was given, followed by refreshments and the presentation of a gift to the Havilands.

The Zion's League presented a comedy, "Clarence Decides," on June 15, under the direction of Sister Virgie Mathewson. A free-will offering was taken and the proceeds went toward the purchase of a lantern slide machine, which is used by the League in their missionary efforts. They have also sponsored movies at the church, and have sold homemade popcorn at the showings. These were League projects to assist the building fund of the church.

Seventy Arthur Gibbs was the speaker for First Branch on June 24.

Church School Director Claude Young presented a special worship service July 1 with members of the junior department as participants. The usual procedure of worship service with classes following was reversed, and the classes were held first with the worship service ending just prior to the Communion service.

Keith and Patricia Guinn have been baptized by Elders Clifford Bryson and Reuben Porter respectively. Confirmations were held immediately following the baptismal services.

A branch picnic was held July 22, at Laurelhurst Park, following the morning preaching service.—Reported by EULA STOYNOFF ONSET, MASSACHUSETTS.—Leslie Faye, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Botts was blessed July 8 by Elder Almer W. Sheehy and her maternal grandfather, Elder Donald E. Crowell. Mrs. Botts is the former Shirley Crowell, R.N., graduate of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

OREGON DISTRICT.—A dedication service was held at Woodburn, Oregon, for the new church building. The attendance numbered 403. Elder George Omans is the pastor. At this conference, Missionary James N. Kemp and his wife, Helen, were introduced to the district members.

June 2 and 3 an institute was held in Southern Oregon for the membership in the vicinities of Medford, Grants Pass, and other communities in that area. Pastor Ted Schull and his leaders have conducted an extensive missionary campaign in the Rogue River Valley.

The Oregon District reunion was cancelled this year because the newly purchased grounds were not ready. Members from the district attended the Silver Lake reunion.

Elder Arthur Gibbs is in Alaska on missionary work.

At a convention in May the following men were ordained to the priesthood: Mike Ray of Portland, elder; Herbert Hawley of Woodburn and Ocean Lake, elder; William Brewster of Portland, priest; Richard Babcock of Wood River, priest; and George Rasmussen of Longview, priest.

Monthly priesthood meetings were held at the Central church in Portland. District President J. L. Verhei taught a class on priesthood activities and responsibilities. Various people in the district assisted him. As many as 130 attended. Sister Effie Verhei taught the wives of priesthood members. The classes will begin again September 25.—Reported by J. L. VERHEI FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.—Elder Charles H. Pillsbury, Jr. has been re-elected as pastor. His father-in-law, Elder Frank H. Dippel from Hazelton, Pennsylvania, was the speaker at the August Communion service. George Dippel, newly ordained priest, assisted.

Edgar Pillsbury is on vacation from Grace-land.

A radio broadcast has featured two elders. Sister Margaret Robinson helped on this. Elder Alma M. Coombs is the regular speaker. The pastor has also broadcast. Some members of the branch attended Onset reunion. The women's department held a social June 23 at Onset at the Sieminsli and Brodie home. The women have sent gift packages to Korea and Germany.

Lucy Brindley was baptized by Elder Almer W. Sheehy at the Boston church.—Reported by GLADYS V. COOMBS

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—A youth retreat was held July 14 and 15 under the supervision of Pastor John Treiber and sponsored by the Zion's League. A social was the opening meeting on Friday evening. Saturday's activities began with a fellowship. A class in psychology was taught by Charles Nixon which was followed by a priesthood study class conducted by John Treiber during which time Sister Elsie Treiber taught a nursing class for the girls. Recreation was held in the afternoon, and the campfire in the evening was held on the city's playgrounds which were donated for use of the League during retreat. A skit written by Bill Young was presented at the campfire. Following the campfire a quiet hour was held at the church at which the young people prepared themselves for the fellowship service on Sunday morning. District young people's leader Lawrence Phillips, John Treiber, and John Stinoski were in charge of this service.

Bonnie Phillips and Patty Treiber sang a duet. Sister James Menzies held a class on evangelism after the fellowship. A group of young people, under the direction of Neil Nixon, sang an anthem, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Charles Nixon instructed a class on marriage at the morning hour. Amy Axelson of Youngstown, Ohio, sang a solo, "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say." Don Treiber, president of the Wellsburg League conducted a vesper service assisted by Neil Nixon and Bob Berrisce. Three talks given by Roy Givens, John Stinoski, and Bill Young completed the activities of the retreat.

School authorities permitted use of a school-house near by for dining facilities. Other young people participating in the retreat were Keith Zonker, Dale Cunningham, Clyde Zonker, and Kenny Goodman. Committee on meals consisted of Elsie Treiber, Anna Givens, and Jessie Staffelino. The organist for retreat was Helen Phillips.

"Thou Art the Christ"

By Harry W. Black

PETER could have had two reasons for making this profound statement: he either intended to curry favor or else he believed Christ was actually the Son of God. The fact that Jesus answered with the words, "Blessed art thou, Simon . . ." suggests the latter was the case. Christ's further explanation to Peter, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto you, but my Father who is in heaven," proves that Peter had obtained a level of understanding on which God could reveal himself and his divine plan for mankind. More important still, Peter was enabled to see Jesus as the Christ, as the one and only mediator between God and man.

One might ask the source from which Peter obtained this understanding. The answer is, "Through Jesus, the Christ." He believed in God as taught by Jesus, and through this God recognized Jesus as the Christ. It would be unwise to say that Peter recognized the Messiah at their first meeting, but rather that he recognized a man who interpreted a God who was real and alive—a God who appealed to his very soul. Eager to learn more of this wonderful God, he resolved to practice the teachings of Jesus. In so doing he realized that this good friend of his was part of this same God. Many men have endeavored to find God and interpret him in terms of their own desires, but only those who have searched through the teachings of Jesus Christ have ever found him.

William Blake, poet of what is known as the preromantic period (1700-1798) gives a suggestion through the lines of his poem, "The Tiger," that mankind in his day was puzzled by the personality of God and questioned his purpose. "Did God who made the lamb, make thee?" (Scholars have suggested this line refers to the question of the twofold nature of God.)

YEARS LATER men were still wondering about the authenticity of a supreme being. Others, like Percy Bysshe Shelley, poet of the romantic movement (1798-1832), toyed with the idea of a power with no definite source, "The awful shadow of an unseen power floats, though unseen, among us." Although each of these poets added majesty and mystery to the deity known as God, they offered no solution as to his reality or the way he might be contacted.

Here Is the Writer . . .

Harry Black, recently appointed to serve as missionary in the Kaw Valley and Central Area, was born in Stockport, Cheshire, England. There he attended the Cale Green Council School and Stockport College, then took a year's work at the Manchester School of Technology. At church he served as Zion's League leader and director of the church school. In October, 1949, he came to America and entered Graceland College, from which he was graduated last June. He is married to the former Aliene McClaran, also a Graceland graduate.

Peter must have meditated many times on the identity and purpose of God and, like Tennyson perhaps, gazed with wonder at some tiny flower in a crannied wall:

Flower in the crannied wall
I pluck you out of the crannies, here
I hold you root and all in my hand,
Little flower—but if I could understand,
What you are, root and all, and all in all,
I should know what God and man is.

FAITH IS THE BIRTH of spiritual sight, the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. By faith the night fighter pilot trusts his life to the delicate instruments that guide him home in the darkness. Peter's belief enabled Jesus Christ to add this plus element to a soul that was truly searching for God and willing to subject itself to divine direction; stimulation followed and enabled a spiritual cooperation between God and man. Peter attained a higher level of understanding which helped him interpret the many signs telling of God's truthfulness. (Christ's denouncing of the Pharisees for demanding physical signs, yet being blind to the signs of the times, strengthens this statement. Matthew 16: 1-3.)

The sixteenth chapter of Mark, sixteenth verse, "And these signs shall follow them that believe," also bears record of the necessity of belief and faith before one is able to understand. Through believing that God lived, Peter accepted the teachings of Jesus, which enabled him to understand God clearer and to recognize his Son.

Today the opportunity which was given to Peter is offered to all mankind—an opportunity that, if accepted, will bring about eternal life and therefore fulfill the purpose of God and his Son. "And this is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God."—John 17: 3. The recognition of God through Jesus Christ not only opens the gates to eternal life for the individual, but also teaches him the importance of loving his fellow men, giving him the desire to fulfill the prayer of Luke: "But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren."—Luke 22: 32.

Nations are blindly searching for peace—threatening, shouting and crying. Yet a voice still calls, "Come, follow me." The same voice called in the days of Peter, days that throbbled with oppression and violence; men were seeking someone to guide them. The Jews sought deliverance from the Roman oppressor, yet the voice of their Savior went unheard.

Only when men turn to the teachings of Jesus will they find peace and recognize the Savior of mankind, for the password into the kingdom of peace and security is "Thou art the Christ"—the password proclaimed by a converted soul.

Growing Up

By Naomi Russell

EVERYBODY WHO GROWS UP physically is also expected to grow up socially—which includes more than learning to make proper introductions and carry on a polite conversation. But because there has never been an act of congress to make them do so, thousands of men and women remain social adolescents throughout their lives. They are perfectly willing to let others pay the bills, do the work, and solve the problems. They never worry, so they never get ulcers. They don't exert themselves, so they never have heart trouble. Unless an automobile or tornado happens along when they aren't expecting it, they remain the unwelcome leeches of society years after their ambitious cousins have given up the struggle.

Few people, of course, are completely adolescent in their attitude toward responsibility. More frequently it's an affliction that affects only a part of the personality. The wife who refuses to cook meals or keep house is immature in just that degree, although she may measure up as a perfect companion in every other respect. The husband who refuses to make a living or carry his share of home responsibilities, although he may be kind and sympathetic and loving, is still a little boy who relies on others to manage for him. The adult who pouts, feigns illness, throws temper fits, insists on being waited upon, threatens dire reactions if anyone denies him his way, or does eccentric things to attract attention will be a child as long as he continues to indulge in such infantile behavior.

IT IS EASIER, of course, to take a "what the heck do I care . . . the world owes me a living" attitude. It makes mental and physical exertion totally unnecessary. So what if people don't approve? Someone with a soft heart (or someone who can be intimidated into doing so) will come through with food, clothing, and shelter. A conscience calms quickly, and once the sensitivity is gone there is no feeling of guilt left to frustrate. It is a "talent" easily cultivated.

The only hope of reform (outside of starvation or complete social rejection) is for the "afflicted" to want to regain his self-respect. Alcoholics Anonymous has a set of principles that could well be applied to overcome any weakness. Basic is the will to change, to compensate for what has been wrong in the past, and to re-establish oneself as an acceptable personality.

The sloppy housekeeper will never reform until she sees the mess she lives in as those about her see it. So long as she is content to exist on the level of a pig, she has no reason to pick up a broom or dustcloth.

The indolent husband who feels no remorse at seeing his wife work for their food, mow the lawn, and tend the garden while he goes fishing will continue to spend his days on a creek bank until he can see himself in the same perspective as his wife's relatives see him.

The pouter never seems to be conscious of his heavy lip and sullenness. If he were, he would probably get as sick of himself as others do, but such insight takes more than a mirror.

The hypochondriac is one of the most subtle of all "cheaters." If he is a good enough actor, he can live for years without having to turn a hand. On a smaller scale, "headaches" have saved thousands of women from doing the evening dishes and thousands of men from taking the family out on a picnic. The offense is the same except in degree. Probably the most enlightening treatment for hypochondriacs would be to surround them with other hypochondriacs; in such a chorus of complaining someone would surely get fed up and reform—or take up another type of loafing.

TEMPER IS AN ADMISSION that one is too lazy to figure out a logical solution when things go wrong, so he blows his top, hoping somebody else will take over in order to get him to shut up. The child who screams and bumps his head on the floor is acting as intelligent as the man who swears at a flat tire or a woman who throws dishes. The only difference is that children get punished; adults don't.

Elderly people who "give up" and let their busy sons and daughters wait on them when they could very well take care of themselves are truly in their second childhood. It is nice to have someone button their coats and tie their shoes, but unless they are victims of arthritis or rheumatism, they are being as unnecessarily dependent as youngsters who could, but don't take care of their own grooming.

The bully is a spoiled boy in a man's body. His threats are echoes of childish promises to beat up on someone smaller. The wife who meets each disagreement with "I'm going home to Mother" is very much like a petulant little girl threatening to run away if she doesn't get a new dress.

The attention-seeker, whether a woman in a too-tight sweater or a man wiggling his ears, is a child ited meaning, as "the pure in heart," or even community life, or gathering of the brotherhood. This ideal could be established in several localities, exemplifying the laws of stewardship, consecration, and sharing, but in actual practice and reality, these must of necessity be limited in scope and practice, since without the civil law, body or state, the temporal law would be only partially observed.

Attempts to build such a Zion have proved to be failures and must of necessity continue to be. Indeed we were advised to "wait a little season," until endowed with power from on high (Doctrine and Covenants 102:3) before attempting such work. We should heed that command.

Another Development

Before concluding this article, I wish to call attention to yet another factor arising in this nineteenth century, growing up contemporaneously with the "Angel Message." It was a movement of social reform, commencing in Europe, which sought to bring into existence a more equal adjustment of the world's goods. Many earnest and devoted leaders spent their lives and suffered and sacrificed much for a cause, which in its purpose and principles had the characteristics of the stewardship plan and consecration of surpluses as taught by the church in America.

Again, note the changes which have occurred in the religious world's thinking, how the creeds and dogmas of the 30's, which were branded as abominations, have largely disappeared, how an increasing unity among the churches is being brought about, especially on the basis of service and social reform. Let us look again, across the water to the East, to the great country of India—to the immortal Gandhi, who spent his life and gave his all to free his country and lift up the oppressed of his people, and whose follower, Nehru, stands today as a great statesman, giving up all his wealth in a supreme example of self-denial and service.

Who can doubt that the Spirit of God is moving in great power among men, and that the body of the kingdom will soon be taking form in the earth? As events unfold in this strange period, we should study the development and progress of the United Nations Organization.

Will the spiritual kingdom be prepared to occupy in this kingdom now being cut out of the nations? We must not hesitate in performing the work to which the church is called.

being silly so people will notice. The only real difference is that adults have a larger repertoire of tricks than children.

Growing up is painful. It necessitates accepting responsibilities that consume time and energy. It requires mental exertion. It means facing problems and figuring out solutions for them. There is not much to be said in favor of it, except a very wise man once told his friends: "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things."

The kingdom cannot soon develop in a world of men and women who refuse to put away childish things.

and gradually the men finished the interior.

Individually the Saints have done their parts and worked and rejoiced together in the building of the church. As the new furniture was set in place prior to the Easter services last spring, the Saints were made to realize their responsibility in using the new facilities for the good of the community and for the winning of souls to the cause of Christ.

Of the original fifty-two charter members, the following remain in the branch: Carl Oliver, Rex Oliver, Bruce Shippey, Emma Stearns Johnson, Neva Willett, Leroy Davis, Edith Davis, Mae Brundage, Leona Stearns Utt, Julia Wheat Feeney and Elizabeth Wheat Emory.

Branch history dates back to 1910 when a few women met for a sewing circle. Brother Carl Oliver, then a priest and now a high priest, organized the mission in 1915.

The women's club has operated a restaurant at the Evergreen State Fair at Monroe the past two years and has a permanent concession. Last year the women sponsored a booth for Missionary Arthur Gibbs who displayed charts and showed slides, telling the gospel to hundreds of people.

Dr. and Mrs. Silas Anderson of Newark, Illinois, announce the birth of a son, Brian David, born June 17. Dr. Anderson is a graduate of Graceland College.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Erickson of Marseilles, Illinois, announce the birth of a son, Randy Gene, born June 19.

A son, Randolph Reed, was born on July 21 to Mr. and Mrs. Barnett W. Berridge. Mrs. Berridge is the former Gladys Wilcox.

He is survived by his wife; two sons: John and Robert of Pittsburgh; two daughters: Shirley of Pittsburgh and Vena of New Alexandria, Pennsylvania; and eight grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders James Menzies and T. A. Dershimer.

McFARLANE.—George I., son of John and Iantha Brooks McFarlane, was born January 1, 1890, at Arlington, Iowa, and died June 24, 1951, of a heart attack at his home in Oelwein, Iowa. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 28, 1918. In 1919 he was ordained a deacon and a few years later an elder. He served as pastor of the Oelwein Branch for twenty-five years. On December 14, 1914, he was married to Ruby Evert; five children were born to them. A daughter, Helen, preceded him in death. He had been in business in Oelwein since 1922; the past seven years he had operated the George McFarlane and Sons Hardware.

He leaves his wife, Ruby; two daughters: Mrs. John Ainlay of Los Angeles, California, and Mrs. Robert Beckner of Decorah, Iowa; two sons: Evert of Oelwein and Merl of the Air Force stationed in Pueblo, Colorado; a sister; two brothers; and six grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Presbyterian Church in Oelwein, the Reverend L. W. Hauter and Elder Lyle Woodstock officiating. Burial was in the family lot at Wandena, Iowa, cemetery.

BEGG.—Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Adam, was born at Aberdeenshire, Scotland, on September 18, 1879, and died on July 1, 1951, in Springfield, Massachusetts. She was married to Archibald Begg in November, 1904, and moved from Scotland to Vinalhaven, Maine, in 1912; they remained there until 1941 when they made their home in Springfield. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 4, 1916, and her husband served as pastor of the Vinalhaven congregation for many years. Their home was always open to missionaries, and she was a regular attendant at the Maine reunions. She will be remembered by her friends and neighbors for her beautiful flower gardens.

Surviving are her husband; a son, Alexander J. Begg; and three grandchildren, all of Springfield. Services were conducted by Elder Almer Sheehy at the Byron Funeral Home. Interment was in Hillcrest Park Cemetery, Springfield.

* VACATION FEVER

There is something special about the quiver of anticipation that comes over John Deskbound as his vacation approaches. He has a feeling as if gold-and-azure butterflies were fluttering in his stomach. The little bit of work on his desk swims before his eyes in a myopic haze, and it is hard for him to focus on anything. In the foreground of his mind there is a thin veneer of grammar, punctuation, and type. But in the background he hears the roll of majestic drums and a fanfare of trumpets, proclaiming the glory of western skies and snow-capped mountains, the fresh chill of a glacial breeze, and the endless music of the seashore. The bright reality of dreams overwhelms the pallid illusion of work. . . . John is as impatient as a child waiting for Christmas, or a motorist paused in the long amber interval between the red and the green lights. . . . Time, like a placid snail, moves almost imperceptibly on the face of the clock. Will somebody please trade a good sundial for this sickly chronometer? . . . Home, that will look so beautiful to him two weeks from now—his desk, to which he will return with relief—Hometown, whose streets are fading prematurely from his mind—all these things begin to pall on him. . . . There is nothing else quite like a case of vacation fever. . . . Bobbie asks, "Have you a good reservation in Cloud Number Nine?" . . . "Yes," says John, "and a lower berth!"

* WHETHER THE WEATHER

The malevolent eye of the August sun glared down upon our streets and brick walls, making them as hot as griddles and ovens. The editorial blood (25% ink) has been simmering in its veins and should be properly pasteurized by now. It has been over a hundred since noon. We would gladly trade thousands of acres of these smoldering prairies for a few feet of sandy beach anywhere.

Bobbie puts her head in the door and inquires, "Why so pale and wan, sir?"

"It's the heat," I mumble.

"It isn't hot. Not really hot," she says brightly. "Forget it!"

Then she faints and falls right down on the floor.

* PROTEST

A reader writes to protest against the use (Editorial, August 6) of II Corinthians 6:14, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," as a warning against mixed marriages. He thinks it applies to the joining of "secret organizations." We have heard this Scripture used as applying to marriage many times in the pulpit. There is nothing exclusive about it, and it can easily be applied to both. If a principle is true, it is capable of general application, and we believe this one is true. It is supported by Doctrine and Covenants 111:1, which says in part, "We believe that it is not right to prohibit members of this church from marrying out of the church, if it be their determination so to do, but such persons will be considered weak in the faith." In some cases the nonmember is converted. But too many times the member is lost.

Franklyn S. Weddle

THE MUSIC MASTER wasn't much interested in the music score he was holding—he knows it by heart. Judging from his expression, he was saying, "Go ahead and shoot, I'm ready!"

The cabinet holding the clock is a radio speaker, or really four speakers tuned to different frequencies acting in unison which is supposed to prove that this is the office of the Music and Radio Department Director. A music cabinet in another part of the room was made by Brother Weddle. He has developed a cabinet-making hobby into a practical art. Much of the finishing work and some fine pieces of furniture in his new home are the workmanship of his own hands.

Franklyn was born in Bantry, North Dakota, in 1905. He graduated from the Fargo High School in 1924, and from Graceland, with a Gold Seal Award in Music, in 1928. He received his bachelor of music degree from the University of Iowa, where he had charge of vocal music at the University High School during his senior year. His master's degree in musicology was given by the University of Michigan. He took some graduate work at Northwestern University and Berkshire Music Center. His teaching experience started in a consolidated school at Letcher, South Dakota. Next he went to Flint, Michigan, where he had the band, orchestra, theory, and glee club work of the schools from 1930 until the church called him to become director of music in 1943.

His musical talent and leadership ability was recognized early in his career. He became president of the Flint Choral Union, director of the Flint Part-Song Club, director of the Flint Civic Band, guest director at county and district music festivals, director of the Flint Little Symphony Orchestra, director of the Opera

PRESIDENT AT REUNION

President W. Wallace Smith spent the week end of August 19 at the Chicago-Northeastern Illinois reunion held at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. He preached while at the reunion. Included on the staff were Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Evangelist Ray Whiting, Seventy Cecil Ettinger, and Bishop Harold Cackler.

SEVENTY CONDUCTS SERIES

Seventy Sylvester R. Coleman conducted a two-week series of meetings from June 3-17, in Fort William, Ontario, Canada. The average attendance was between thirty and thirty-five with forty-five attending the last service. Two people, Tindarella Henderson and Dave Kentner, united with the church at this time. From June 20-July 1, Brother Coleman conducted a series at Vinita, Oklahoma, in the basement of the courthouse. A series was held in Scammon, Kansas, from July 1-15. Ninety-nine were present at the closing service which was a confirmation service for the ten people who were baptized. Brother Coleman reports that the series carried a great deal of inspiration to the people.

CLIFFORD COLE TO GRACELAND

Elder Clifford Cole has accepted the position of dean of students on the Graceland College staff. This vacancy was created with the resignation of Malcolm Ritchie. Brother Cole is the former president of the Northwest Iowa District and has been released from his General Church responsibilities for a year to serve at Graceland.

DEPARTMENT REPRESENTED

Franklyn Weddle, general church director of music, attended reunions at Port Elgin and Erie Beach, Ontario, where he conducted music classes. At Port Elgin he also held a general class on worship, and at Erie Beach he instructed a priesthood class. Aleta Runkle, also of the department, held music classes at the Far West Stake reunion and the Kansas City Stake reunion.

BISHOP IN TEXAS AND OKLAHOMA

Bishop Leslie Kohlman and family attended the Texas reunion at Bandera, Texas, and the Oklahoma reunion at Wilburton, Oklahoma. Brother Kohlman taught a general class and preached at both reunions. He also counseled with men who are new in the bishopric. Sister Kohlman taught the women's class at both reunions in connection with the General Council of Women.

CHURCH GIRL IN NEWS

The August 15 issue of the "Buffalo Evening News" featured an article on the University of Buffalo's Chronic Disease Research Institute which included a picture of Miss Ann E. Voltmann, assistant in the research laboratory. Ann is the daughter of Elder and Mrs. Max Voltmann. She and her two brothers, Jack and Floyd, are Graceland alumni.

RECEIVES AWARD

First Lt. Frank A. Minton, Jr., son of Elder and Mrs. Frank A. Minton, Sr., was awarded the Silver Star Medal for gallantry in action against the enemy in Korea. Lt. Minton holds the Distinguished Flying Cross in addition to several other ribbons. His wife, the former Louise Akena Blaisdell of Hawaii, and children, David, Becky, and Bruce, reside in Lawrence, Kansas.

Colleges and Morals

Editorial

WE ARE CONFIRMED in our belief that religious education should run collaterally with the secular. With this in mind we have encouraged the movement among our members who are getting their so-called "higher education."

This country has recently witnessed the dismissal of almost a hundred West Point cadets for violation of certain honor rules respecting "cribbing" or receiving help from others in their examinations—something that has likely always been done to a degree in West Point as well as in other universities and colleges. The tragedy for these young men is that this time disciplinary rules "caught up with them" and were enforced—perhaps to their complete surprise. For us who know human nature somewhat, it is hardly conceivable that the rule against cribbing has never heretofore been violated even at West Point.

But assuming, as we do, that morals follow closely upon religious convictions, we conclude that if these young men had received adequate training in church and religion, the chance that they would yield to temptation and cheat would at least have been much lessened.

Evidently cribbing has not been limited to our military colleges, because the president of Yale recently cautioned his undergraduates against it, saying, "Since the war we have been a bit troubled about the manners, rudeness, and easy ethics of some students, especially cheating and attendance at classes." He stressed the fact that the university would no longer tolerate the situation, warning that "cheating could mean dismissal."

Dr. E. C. Colwell, a former college president, recently was quoted as saying that many college presidents do not have "the moral qualities to raise their institutions above basement level." And the trend of thought seems to place the blame for decline in "campus morals" on the faculties and not on the students.

Within a few days many of our own college students will congregate for assembly in the Kirtland Temple, under the able direction of Doctor Lawrence Brockway and associates, for the purpose of integration and study under the aegis of the church.

How fitting indeed that our young men and women engaged in getting an education are to meet in a Temple dedicated to a belief that the "glory of God is intelligence!"

"As all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom, yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

Who Should Partake of the Emblems?

REGARDLESS OF THE NUMBER of times we treat this subject, there seems to reoccur periodically the question, "Who should partake of the emblems of the Lord's Supper?" This statement should not be construed as an attempt to enter into a controversy with anyone. It is merely an attempt to reiterate the stand which the church has taken on this particular matter. In Volume 96, Number 48, of the Saints' Herald for November 28, 1949, President Israel A. Smith wrote an article entitled, "The Communion Covenant." In it, he made this statement:

From several sources comes evidence that some of our priesthood members have served the emblems of the Lord's Supper to nonmember children and adults. This is surprising and disturbing, as there is no excuse for our ministers to ignore our close Communion doctrine. It only indicates that we must ever be on the alert to keep our educational program moving; otherwise, church laws may be superseded by the traditions of men.

We need to stop but for a moment to consider how apostasy occurs and to note that giving away to the traditions of men, or allowing the law to be superseded by the acts of men, are the insidious influences which creep into our church polity and can destroy it. We must not allow this thing to happen, and there is no reason for us to abrogate the laws of God by operating in any other manner except that which he has prescribed. We do not wish, nor do we attempt, to depreciate the sincerity of all those who profess Christianity. Very often in an attempt to rationalize situations of this kind, we overlook the laws which have been given to govern us. It is only by adherences to these laws that we can be assured this church will survive.

BY TAKING THE TIME to do so, we can find many articles in Heralds which have been published in the past, treating this subject, and we go back now to cite some of these. In the issue of February 11, 1893 (Volume 40, page 84), Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair, editors, published this statement:

A brother asks if it is lawful and proper to give the sacrament to unbaptized children, and we reply that it is restricted to members of the church who "are worthy of it."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18. The conditions required

The Record Speaks

Elder Merle P. Guthrie, church statistician, has submitted some interesting tabulations and analyses of the baptismal increases during the first six months of this year. The five branches having the largest number of baptisms are:

Council Bluffs, Iowa	36
Lansing, Michigan	27
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania ...	24
East Bay, California	22
Wellsburg, West Virginia ...	21

Twelve stakes and districts had more than fifty baptisms for this period. They are as follows:

.....
Kansas City Stake	70
Los Angeles Stake	70
Spring River District	67
St. Louis District	63
Oregon District	63
Far West Stake	63
Detroit International Stake...	62
Northern California	58
Gulf States	56
New York and Philadelphia	53
Rock Island	51

Percentage increase is a further indication of the missionary vitality in the branches and districts; it is therefore of interest to note the branches having the largest percentage of baptismal increase. Here are the top five:

Summersville, Missouri	18.18
Leavenworth, Kansas	14.89
Ava, Missouri	14.06
Lawrence, Kansas	13.88
Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania	12.83

Two of these branches (Leavenworth and Lawrence) are in the Kaw Valley District, an aggressive missionary area.

The districts having the largest percentage increase are:

Kaw Valley	3.53
West Virginia	3.04
Oregon	2.86
Kentucky—Tennessee	2.78
New York—Philadelphia	2.54

Three branches with less than 100 members had ten baptisms. They were Lawrence, Kansas (72 members); Ottumwa, Iowa (88 members); and Southeast Portland (99 members).

Elder Harry J. Simons, president of Central Missouri Stake, writes:

Our reunion, held at Lake Venita, is over. It was a good reunion. It started rather slowly, but gradually improved, and the last two or three days were of very high spiritual value. I think the unsettledness of many of our people was felt early in the reunion, as practically all the rural members in our stake have been adversely affected by the prolonged rains. They have lost hay and early crops. Then the flood situation at Atherton brought those people to the reunion with a discouraged feeling. It took a while to overcome this spirit. But I'm sure many of them left with a feeling of encouragement, confidence, and renewed faith in their Lord.

Classwork at the reunion was handled very capably by the various staff members. Sister Ruch did a good job, as well as Elders Fry and Whiting. Evangelist Whiting gave excellent help all along and gave a number of blessings.

One of the high points of the reunion was the preaching of Brother Evan Fry. The devotion of Brother and Sister Fry, the excellent spirit they carry with them, and their continual willingness to be of help, certainly left their good influence upon our people. Elders Puckett, French, Becker, and all our local people who taught classes did a commendable job. Bishop Johnson came for the last Sunday morning and preached a marvelous sermon.

Apparently larger branches need to give attention to cottage meetings and other means of person-to-person contact in missionary endeavor. No branch with an enrollment of more than 300 is in the top ten in percentage of baptismal increase.

In studying these figures, two things in particular should be kept in mind. They cover only six months and the figures might have changed considerably if reporting from the branches and districts had been a little quicker. June is usually the month of the largest baptismal increase because of Children's Day; probably many Children's Day baptisms will show up in July.

If all Children's Day baptisms had been reported in June, there is reason to believe that they might have totaled over a thousand.

F. HENRY EDWARDS

According to Bishop Becker's report we will show a new financial gain from reunion operations, and for the third successive year since we've been here, no specific charge has been made for meals. The diner pays according to his ability, and our dining room has shown a profit. We had a total registration of just under 600. Between 900 and 1,000 attended each Sunday. There were 300 cars there the first Sunday when Mr. Pennington of the Kansas City Star drove by on the highway and just stopped in to see what it was all about. That is how we happened to get the write-up in the paper.

From a letter written by Apostle Don O. Chesworth on August 15, 1951:

I am very pleased to be able to report that the 1951 Brush Creek Reunion was one of the best in my experience. It was a close competitor to this year's Ozark Reunion, which surpassed all that I have attended heretofore.

More counseling was done at Brush Creek by the staff than is usually done. Prayer services were of a high nature; classes were well attended; and attendance at preaching in the evening averaged around 400. I preached every night sermon, as was requested last fall.

The Trinity of Grace

By Apostle A. A. Oakman

A sermon given Sunday, January 14,
1951, at Stone Church in Independence

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST arose from her obscure dwelling in the wilderness for more than a millennium and came again among men. This happened while the nineteenth century was young, and, under Divine Providence, she appeared first in a well-born nation yet in its infancy. But not without adequate preparation did she come. For centuries before, among people in foreign climes or speaking alien tongues God had worked—with Wycliff, Huss, Luther, Columbus, and many others—to break down tyranny, change the course of thought, discover, open up and colonize a virgin land of promise. He guided the ship of Columbus—by the implantation of an “invincible surmise”—led and inspired the Pilgrims and sustained them in poverty and want, and endowed the founding fathers with wisdom beyond their own. Then he led a boy into the woods of New England to share a secret—a secret promising incredible happiness on one hand, or eternal misery on the other. Waiting his summons to make her appearance once more among men, so ran the vision, was the bride of Jesus Christ! So, trailing clouds of glory, came forth his church, linked with the great prophets of the past who accompanied her and validated her claims.

This is but a brief epitome of what is fervently believed among us. “Knowing the calamity which must come upon the earth,” God took the initiative for our preservation and salvation. From New England the church moved steadily westward. In the persons of very young men her enissaries took the good news to others. Four young men went to Ohio and thence to Jackson County, Missouri. In their hearts was a vision, in their hands a book—the Book of Mormon—which was the one tangible evidence they had to show to the world that within their souls the miracle of Grace had wrought wondrously—had wrought the new world which was to be.

The soil they trod was, and still is, holy ground. It had been sanctified millenniums before by noble men: prophets, kings, architects, and warriors from Jared and his brother down to Mormon and his son. Beside these young men trod the heroes of twenty-eight hundred years of history; and they were comforted, sustained, and blessed in the knowledge that around them and above hovered the “heirs of salvation” who, so long ago under God, had “received the promises . . . having seen them afar off.”

THE BOOK AND THE VISION—the touchstones of the ancient faith—were sealed in covenants delivered to Israel and confirmed and renewed in these latter days in the Book of Mormon and the vision of Zion. Wicked men tried to destroy the book and cripple the work. Even after the church of the latter days was organized, the Evil One sought to deceive it by pretending to locate the site of the “New Jerusalem.” But the life of Joseph the Prophet had been preserved by divine wisdom exercised fourteen hundred years before while Mormon was writing his abridgment, and the cause of Zion was sustained by the knowledge that

It is, perhaps, impossible for us to evaluate fully the profound influence the work of translation had upon the mind of the prophet. He sat, day after day, with his scribe, gazing at an antique panorama of human and divine activity unknown to the world at that time. He experienced intimacies with great spirits which must have brought joy to his soul as well as instruction to his mind. As he walked in heavenly places through the written word, interpreted for him by the Holy Ghost, there was laid in his soul the foundations of the kingdom of God, which, we are told, he had the power to build securely in the life of the church and among the nations. It was through the work of translation that he and Oliver went to inquire concerning baptism; they were visited on May 15, 1829, by John the Baptist, who ordained them and gave them the power by which they were rightfully baptized into the church. Through their work of translation, also, they saw many points of doctrine clearly, and they experienced in their own lives the fulfillment of Old Testament and Book of Mormon prophecy.

And so, with the emergence of the Book of Mormon came a freshened and renewed vision of mankind, a fitting climax to such declarations as “We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men were created equal . . .” and “We, the people of the United States, in order to . . .” The discovery of America, learned the prophet, had been no accident but a providentially ordered event. The Gentile nations had been wrought upon to yield such of their number as would under God seek freedom of worship in the New World. The Pilgrim Fathers, whose sacrifices and exploits subdued a wilderness and gave to their children a land of promise, were, according to the Book of Mormon, the special objects of divine care.

And it came to pass that I beheld the Spirit of God, that it wrought upon other Gentiles; and they went forth out of captivity, upon the many waters. And it came to pass that I beheld many multitudes of the Gentiles upon the land of promise; and I beheld the wrath of God that it was upon the seed of my brethren; and they were scattered before the Gentiles, and were smitten. And I beheld the Spirit of the Lord, that it was upon the Gentiles; that they did prosper, and obtain the land for their inheritance; and I beheld that they were white, and exceeding fair and beautiful, like unto my people before they were slain. And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles who had gone forth out of captivity did humble themselves before the Lord, and the power of the Lord was with them; and I beheld that their mother Gentiles were gathered together upon the waters, and upon the land also, to battle against them; and I beheld that the power of God was with them; and also that the wrath of God was upon all those that were gathered together against them to battle. And I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles that had gone out of captivity were delivered by the power of God out of the hands of all other nations. And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld that they did prosper in the land.—I Nephi 3: 148-156.

And then, after reciting these events, the prophet Nephi makes this promise:

And blessed are they who shall seek to bring forth my Zion at that day, for they shall have the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost; And if they endure unto the end, they shall be lifted up at the last day, and shall be saved in the everlasting kingdom of the Lamb.—I Nephi 3: 187, 188.

Who could have conceived in so short a time such a breadth and depth as this? Here was the "faith delivered to the saints." This faith, with its vision of the new manhood yet to be, its prophecy of the kingdom which interpreted history, and its impulsion to righteousness was part of the trinity of Grace which, according to Paul, "abideth." "Now abideth faith, hope, and charity."

FAITH IS THE SPIRIT of dynamic action. It is an inward light which discloses to the view of men the eternal objectives which guide and fulfill the purposes of creation. Faith is born of God. It is not something we think about or decide we are going to have. Again, quoting Paul, we are admonished to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." This faith, which is at root a preview of that which is to come, is worth every effort we may make both to secure it and to retain it once we have secured it. The writer of the book of Genesis says this concerning the baptism of Adam:

It is given to abide in you the record of heaven, the peaceable things of immortal glory, the truth of all things, that which hath all power according to wisdom, mercy, truth, justice, and judgment.

A man's soul looks upward, being drawn by the powers that come from above; his eye is opened to the light as he pours out his soul in repentance; and through the channels and powers known only to God, a record of divine beauty, truth, and goodness is secured within him. This is "the faith." We wish to make a distinction between faith which is an attitude of soul, and "the faith" which comprehends a set of intellectual and spiritual propositions based upon an analysis of nature, creation, prophecy, and destiny. Men may have faith in and of themselves. They may put their trust in "reeking tube and iron shard," and be as the poet says, "valiant dust that builds on dust." Faith is a natural propensity. When it is harnessed to ends that cannot endure, it is a tragedy and becomes a means of man's destruction. But the faith "once delivered to the saints" is something else. It is the spirit and earnest of things to come. It does not originate with man; it comes from above. It is a gift of the Spirit. It means faith in the ends and purposes of life which endure, and to harness life to those ends is the purpose of the preaching of the gospel. This faith which gathers up the soul of man and immerses it in the purpose of God is life itself. It is more than intellect and more than good feeling. It encompasses and transcends grim determination. It is "of the Spirit."

ONE OF THE GREAT TRAGEDIES which prophets carry within themselves comes from the continual comparison and disparity they find therein between things as they ought to be and things as they are. A man of faith compares what is with what he knows should be and finds great burden of soul. How many philanthropists have started out with great ambitions and anticipations only to find their trust in humanity shattered as the hard, stubborn facts of man's corrupt nature are borne in upon them? This frustration is obvious in the world situation today. Gradually, and it seems by some imponderable irresistible force, man's hope in a bright future is gradually being engulfed by despair and fear. And strangely enough, a cynically low estimate of his power to resist temptation and be clean seems to be abroad in the air. It has come to pass, as Paul of old said, that men are heady, high-minded, lovers of self, trucebreakers, and all that follows. This is so apparent that we talk urgently of international faith and good will and the need of abiding by covenant relations as a condition, not of peace alone, but of survival.

The peculiar quality of faith, however, is that it believes in man. It refuses to acknowledge that man's worst is final. It says, in effect, that underneath human frailty and sin there is a better self which waits to spring into life. The man of faith centers his hope in this. Man will eventually respond to the love of God. He is sure that the destiny which "shapes our ends," while it may be "rough hewn," eventually will be realized. And in this the faith of the Christian, the prophetic faith, seems to be more glorious than the faith of the seers and poets of human nature not in the Christian tradition. Shakespeare, for instance, begins his literary career with a robust confidence in man. He writes his comedies, his historical plays, his tragedies, and then last of all he writes his sonnets. In these sonnets he yields himself to the settled conviction that man has wasted his substance. "Lust is the expense of spirit in a waste of shame." But the man of faith hopes for better times, and when his vision becomes dim by the bludgeoning of circumstance or chance, he consults the record of heaven within himself and hopes again, against hope sometimes, until he creates within himself the possibility of the things he hopes for. There is no man who can have faith unless he has hope.

Faith and hope must be counterparts of the divine mind, however feeble a shadow of it. Charity is their fruitage, bringing understanding. Understanding is a great blessing far beyond knowledge. It lifts us up from a petty view of mankind and sets us securely on the heights of wisdom. If we can come to see men as they are, and can appreciate how they came to be as they are, there drops away from us all sordid judgments of their meanness. We see them as the objects of divine concern. Their sin is no less sinful; rather, it is even more so. For the greater the vision of mankind's possibility, the more poignant is the revelation of what he still wallows in. But men remain redeemable, therefore finally lovable.

JESUS HATED SIN because he loved the sinner. He loved the sinner because the sinner was worth loving. Not necessarily because man was lovable, but rather that Christ himself was love. Any of us can love the lovely at small expense of spirit. Christ loved the unlovely and won man from wickedness, so making him a creature of worth. In that we have the spirit of what was told to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery,

Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; for, behold, the Lord your redeemer suffered death in the flesh . . . and if it so be that you should labor all your days . . . and bring save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 16: 3.

Charity is the "sight of the Heavenly Father" dwelling in man. It makes us know souls are of "great worth." Charity is a fruitage of the revelation of Christ, and the revelation of Christ is essentially the revelation of all men. No face is as the face of all men but the face of Jesus. As the little Chinese girl said, "I have known him all my life but one day I learned his name." What of him has come to the surface in the life of our brother has inspired us to be like him.

If Christ is not seen as the prophecy of a brother's possibilities, he simply is not seen. The love of Christ is the love of him in others; for surely he lives in men to bless and redeem, to help and save; or, if they rebel, to destroy and to condemn. When one really sees men as they are, he will go to the limit in making allowances for them. He will be slow to condemn, quick to approve.

John W. Rushton once said, "If there is any good in me, Jesus Christ will be the first to find it." Every good deed is inspired of him. Every great and noble thought follows after his supreme intelligence. Every high and noble resolve comes from the heart of things as they are. To the man of faith, the meanest of human creatures has possibilities for divine sonship through the gospel, and, what is more, the man of faith acts toward the mean man as if that mean man were already a son of God. He does not wait for grace to manifest itself in the life of the sinner. He acts graciously toward the sinner and wins him from his sordidness because he believes in him.

THIS LEADS US to the cardinal principle governing the prophecy of the kingdom. If the foundation of Zion is not seen in the lives of men, there is no possibility for the kingdom. We make this statement with due regard to the factors involved and feel sure that our judgment will be sustained by the convictions of the church. The prophecy of Zion is not in a book. The word is not printer's ink. There can be no kingdom unless Christ lives in men today. And if the towers of Zion are not seen in the righteousness of the people of God, then there are no towers of Zion to be seen. We talk about the good times to come and speak of the day when we shall dwell in peace and unity and harmony. But we ought to live as if that day were already here; the only condition upon which that day ever can be here is that we live as if it were now with us. The man of faith hopes then, against hope, that sufficient numbers of mankind will respond to the love of God. He believes this with all his heart and lives as if they had already responded. As he does this, he actually contributes to the coming of the kingdom and becomes a factor in the divine equation which will help to solve the riddle of the ages.

Faith—an inward light which shines more bright and clear as we discipline ourselves.

Hope—the glory of faith, a peculiar quality of spirit which accepts the hard, unyielding, stubborn facts of man's sin and degradation and yet sustains the man of faith.

Charity—the understanding of men which sees them as they are and as they shall be under God, and acts toward them as if they had already achieved the highest glory.

With this trinity of grace in their souls, those of the early church went humbly forward "to the borders by the Lamanites."

HAVE WE YET GONE to the "borders"? Not, of course, to some geographical location, but to the borders where heaven meets earth, where we shall find the children of the promise and call them to repentance and life and power which

Introducing Mike Riley

MIKE RILEY is a young friend of mine, about five years old, I judge. As you have guessed by his name, he is not Scandinavian. He is a handsome lad with smiling Irish eyes and the sort of face that goes with his name. Recently, with his mother and little sister, Pat, he was visiting his Uncle Ronald and Aunt Vera. The first morning, what with everyone in the kitchen and all talking at once, contrary to the custom in that house the toast was burned. Mike, well-taught and a born diplomat, said, "Never mind, Aunt Vera, I like burned toast." When the same thing happened the next day Mike began to hedge a bit. He said, "Aunt Vera, I like burned toast, but I don't like it very much." Then he hastened to add, "But Aunt Vera, if you burn it I will eat it." Spoken like a gentleman.

Many grown men who sulk, frown and spoil the day over trifling annoyances could learn a lesson from Mike Riley. Some statistician with a head for big figures might make an estimate covering the total man-hours ruined each day in America by men who grouch and growl and scowl—and then apologize too late, if ever. A Gallup poll might cover the situation—if wives and mothers were permitted to answer the questions. An old story comes to mind. On her wedding day a young bride gave her new husband a book entitled, The Perfect Gentleman. A year later she gave him Ernest Seton Thompson's book, Wild Animals I Have Known. Probably just a coincidence.

Speaking of the Inspired Version of the Bible

Rather often we listen to or read after men of some importance who quote passages of dubious import from the King James or other versions of the Bible—passages that are cleared up and set straight in the Inspired Version.

The Sunday edition of the Kansas City Star always has an interesting editorial column entitled "Random Thoughts." The number for July 22 of this year was devoted to various passages of Scripture with accompanying comments sent in by readers of the column. This reference was made to a contribution by Dr. John W. Hamilton of Park College:

There is a passage in Deuteronomy (14: 21) that seems to Dr. Hamilton to carry what might be considered humorous significance: "Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself. Thou mayest give it unto a sojourner that is within thy gates that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto a foreigner."

It would be just too bad if the food shouldn't agree with them and they should die from eating it, but the sojourner and the foreigner must look after themselves.

The quotation is in substance as it appears in the King James version. However, the good doctor stopped a bit too soon. The reason assigned for this statute prohibiting the Hebrews eating the carcass of an animal that had died of itself, perhaps from some dangerous disease, the while they were permitted to give or sell it to Gentile neighbors and visitors was, "For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God."

Being a holy people they were not to eat of such questionable food. But being a holy people they might give it or sell it to their neighbors. What happened to them was nobody's business. We fail to see the "humorous significance" in such a commandment presumed to come from God.

The Inspired Version of the Bible states the law as the Lord surely must have given it:

Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt not give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest not sell it unto an alien; for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God.

Let any honest Christian choose for himself which he thinks to be the better version.

Drew Pearson, columnist, in his column for July 28 had this concerning a letter to the Bureau of Internal Revenue:

For instance, a disgruntled taxpayer recently wrote the bureau:

"... and from him that hath not . . . shall be taken away even that which he hath."

That's from the Bible, you lugs, and I think it's the only part you believe in.

The entire passage reads as follows:

For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.—Matthew 13: 12, A.V.

The Inspired Version not only sets this passage straight, it opens up a fine field for constructive thought:

For whosoever receiveth, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; But whosoever continueth not to receive, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.—Matthew 13: 10-11.

How often do we observe those who, having made a good start in their religious life and received many blessings, grow indifferent or rebellious. They discontinue church attendance and refuse or neglect to receive further ministry from its fellowship, sermons, music, classwork, and prayer services. The Saints' Herald and the Three Books are left to lie unopened in obscure corners of some room or are buried under popular magazines, comic books, murder mysteries, and what not. Inevitably such persons lose not only that which they might have gained—they lose even that which they once had.

Thus we have a solemn warning and a splendid promise: he that continues not to be receptive shall lose even that which he had; but he that continues willing to receive to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundantly.

A Builder of the Reorganization

Selections from the Memoirs of William Wallace Blair of the First Presidency

Part Eight: The Western Mission California and Nevada

GENERAL CONFERENCE convened April 6, at Plano. In a council of the First Presidency and Twelve during this conference, it was appointed that "Elders W. W. Blair and A. H. Smith take charge of and labor in the Utah and California missions." This appointment was confirmed by the Conference. A few days prior to this I saw myself in a distant land, laboring where there were peoples of all colors and nationalities, notably Chinese, Mexicans, and Islanders, and I was given to understand that there was my mission field. Being thus prepared in a measure, I accepted the mission, and after arranging my home affairs as best I could with the limited means at my command (here came a sharp trial of faith), the church treasury being so low that I could receive from the bishop for both myself and family but fifty dollars, I set out the first part of May to make my way to San Francisco, California, by the way of New York and thence by steamer via the Isthmus of Panama to the Golden Gate. This was largely a work of faith, for to make the trip it then required, as was supposed, between two hundred fifty and three hundred dollars to reach San Francisco. Just how I was to succeed I did not know, but I had confidence that under the overruling hand of God I would reach my destination in due time, and so I went, Brother Elijah Banta accompanying me, preaching by the way.

Embarked at New York

We called and labored at Brookfield, Ohio, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and a few other points in Pennsylvania. On June 5 at half past twelve we took the steamer "Santiago De Cuba" at pier number forty-six, New York, and started out to sea at once. Before we bought our tickets a new line of steamers had been put upon the route between New York and San Francisco and rates were reduced so that we secured passage for eighty-five dollars each.

The Saints and friends had aided me liberally at the points before mentioned, so that after I had purchased my ticket and made numerous purchases of things likely to be needed in a month's trip at sea, I had more money than I received from the bishop.

Voyage to San Francisco—1868

The trip between New York and Aspinwall [the principal city there today is Colon, Canal Zone] was stormy and rough in the main. Brother Banta was taken with seasickness immediately when we struck the sea outside of New York, and continued so until the morning of the third day out. On the night of the eighth we passed the island of San Salvador. . . . Rockets were exchanged by our steamer and the lighthouse on the island, giving an interest to the scenery on that beautiful starry night. . . .

On the twelfth a strong easterly wind prevailed and the ship rolled and pitched heavily. The storm increased until the sea was wild and tumultuous, tossing its waves at times clear across our vessel, and before night came on not a person, except the officers or the crew, was seen on deck save Brother Banta and myself. We felt desirous of witnessing a storm at sea, and though the night was on, we sought permission of the officers and obtained the privilege of going onto the upper deck, which we did by clinging to the ropes until we reached the leeward side of the pilothouse, where we remained for an hour or more, wet by the dashing spray, and witnessed the wild, furious tossing of the waves, the blinding flashes of lightning accompanied by deafening peals of thunder, until our curiosity and love of the sublime and the awful were thoroughly satisfied. . . .

When the storm was at its worst it was rumored . . . that we were momentarily in danger of going to the bottom of the sea. These tidings, with the howling of the storm, . . . filled many a heart with dismay, and had I not, before leaving home, seen myself engaged in mission work in what I understood to be California, doubtless I, too, would have feared greatly. But as it was, our trust was in God, and we at least exhibited no fear. . . .

On Sunday, the fourteenth, we reached Aspinwall, a small place inhabited chiefly by blacks, with a few French, Dutch, and English. We were glad to place our feet again on solid ground. Here we saw the rain literally come down in streams, not a breath of air stirring, and the atmosphere as warm as that of a hothouse. We crossed over to Panama by railway, forty-seven miles. . . . At about half past eleven we proceeded by small steamer to the splendid ship "Oregonian" anchored out in the bay. At that time Panama seemed an old town; its streets were narrow, and its population numbered about two thousand.

Just at dark we weighed anchor and stood out in the great Pacific sea. The night was beautiful; the stars shone out brilliantly and seemed twice as numerous as we had ever seen before. . . .

California—1868

On the morning of the twenty-eighth [of June], after a splendid passage of twelve days from Panama, our stately vessel, like a thing of life, rounded in at the Golden Gate and steamed up the bay, reaching San Francisco at nine in the morning. With hearts filled with gratitude to God for our safe and enjoyable passage from our home in Sandwich [Illinois] round about by sea to the western metropolis of our nation, we quit the steamer and with hopeful hearts sought the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Thomas J. Andrews, where we were received with most Christian cordiality by our brother and sister and a few friends who were in waiting for us. They had learned by letters over land that we would reach the city about that date.

Immediately we set about our Master's work. . . .

We attended sacrament and social service at three o'clock, and in the evening preached to an attentive and appreciative congregation. . . . We found the work in this western mission in a somewhat divided and lukewarm condition, and after canvassing affairs so far as we could in a preliminary way proceeded to call priesthood meetings to make further inquiries, also to advise and instruct relative to church government. . . . The affairs of the district were placed in a united and prosperous condition. . . .

Nevada—October, 1868

In answer to urgent calls from the Saints in Nevada, I visited Carson City the third, and on the fourth set out with Brother E. C. Brand on horseback, visiting many of the Saints and friends in Carson Valley and high up in the foothills, and lodging one night in a place similar to that in which our blessed Lord was born. . . . On the twelfth, district conference convened in Carson City. . . .

On the morning of the twenty-first, about nine o'clock, when Brethren Dungan, Green, and myself were calling on Brother Glaud Rodger and family, sudden and repeated shocks of earthquake came with a loud rumbling sound, the house lurching ominously from north to south with such violence as to throw Brother Green, Sister Rodger, and some of the children prostrate upon the floor, tossing chairs, tables, bedsteads, etc., about in wild confusion, filling all hearts with terror. When first it came, I thought an explosion had occurred, but at the second thought concluded it was an earthquake and thereupon offered a silent, fervent prayer, and instantly felt the Holy Spirit speaking peace to my heart and imparting perfect confidence in God.

A Church in Darkness— October, 1868

Thursday, the twenty-ninth, found Brother Glaud Rodger and myself at Santa Cruz. We remained here visiting and preaching as opportunity offered. On Sunday, the eighth, I preached at Unity Chapel in the city, at two and at half past six. In a night vision I had seen the chapel, came to its open doorway, heard people engaged in religious services, strove in vain to look within and see what was going on, but all within seemed blackness. As I looked a feeling of horror came over me, and the thought came forcibly to my mind that what I had seen was not a dream, but divine reality. I afterwards learned that this vision signified that inasmuch as the Unitarians deny the divinity and deity of Christ, they have not the light of Christ, but are in gross darkness on that point.

Celebrate Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Stowell of Independence, Missouri, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on July 10 by holding open house at their home. They were married in Leeds, North Dakota, and moved to Independence in 1925 where they have made their home since. Mr. Stowell has been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 8, 1894, and Mrs. Stowell was baptized on July 27, 1902. They attend the East Independence Church.

They have six living children: James S., Charles E., and Benjamin A. Stowell; Mrs. R. T. Crabb, Mrs. Michael Friend, and Mrs. Henry Grubb. A son, Joseph, died in 1925. They also have thirty-four grandchildren and eighteen great-grandchildren.

To Be Content

By Leona Hands

For I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content.
—Philippians 4:11.

ONE OF THE HARDEST LESSONS we have to learn in life is to be content. Indeed, it takes a great deal of learning to make the most of what we have, to count our blessings instead of our trials, to be happy wherever we are and whatever we are and whatever our station in life is.

Someone has compared mankind to a small boy who, looking enviously at a man jingling a few loose coins in his pocket, thinks to himself, When I'm grown up I'll really be happy! Yet when the lad has attained manhood he looks back to the carefree days of his childhood and thinks, I was happier then.

Most of us are apt to refer to our childhood as the happiest time of our lives. Yet we can all remember that when we were children, we looked forward to growing up, making our own decisions, and being our own boss.

Seemingly it is hard to get away from this type of thinking. As children we say, "I'll be happy when I'm older and wiser." A little later we say, "When I'm married and have a home of my own . . ." and still later, "When the children are grown and we're out of debt . . ." or "When I have more time to myself . . ." Why is it always some day or some future time?

The search for happiness goes on and on. It creeps into our thoughts and conversations. We desire it with all our hearts and seek it continually. Not content that we once had happiness or that happiness might be ours in the future, we want it now—today. And why not?

MOST OF US do not want happiness for ourselves alone. We want it for our loved ones and friends. How can we help others to be happy? Truly we cannot give something to others that we do not have ourselves. First we must have a rich measure of contentment if we would share this treasure with others. Where, then, shall we look for happiness? An old motto gives us the key: "The City of Happiness is located in the State of Mind." The Bible adds this thought, "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he."—Proverbs 23: 7.

It is very evident that our attitudes play a big part in our finding contentment. The story is told of a woman who entered a bookstore to purchase a copy of the well-known edition, Peace of Mind. When asked by the clerk what book she was looking for, she snapped, "Piece of Mind." Is it not true that, all too often, we find only what we are looking for?

Books on peace of mind and how to find happiness in everyday living are flooding the market and topping fiction sales. People everywhere are persistently, almost desperately, seeking peace and happiness.

In our own land the inhabitants are no exception. One world traveler recently made the observation that to the casual observer standing on a street corner in any country, watching people milling past, the same things are seen in faces. He could see no difference in the number of happy and unhappy countenances here than he saw in other lands. The fact that we live in a free country, enjoying many rights and blessings denied other peoples, has not brought us personal happiness or made us more content. Some people are contented with a little; others are discontented with much. Clearly the difference is in the people themselves—some have learned the secret of contentment.

WE DO NOT HAVE TO LIVE LONG before we make the discovery that happiness or contentment is not dependent on material things. It does not accompany great possessions. A certain rich man of our time pointed out that he did not possess his wealth—it possessed him. Someone else has made the observation that few millionaires smile. Good health or fame do not necessarily bring happiness either. Happiness must come from within our own hearts and minds. We carry much of our happiness or unhappiness with us.

We often hear the remark, "I'm just out of tune with the times—I can't adjust myself. I guess I was born forty years too late." This is useless thinking. The Scriptures point out that "God hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their [men's] habitation." He has a purpose in our being here at this particular time.

Let us look back to the days of the first century Christians. They had much to frighten them. Surely they faced just as real dangers as we do today. To be confined in dark dungeons, thrown to the lions, burned at the stake, or crucified on the cross was as much a threat of death as the present atom bombs. They fought ignorance, disease, and superstition, yet their most distinguishing mark was their happiness in God's service.

Christ himself was a happy person. His company was eagerly sought. He was a welcome guest at a feast or social gathering. In his daily life he endeavored to portray the love of God. Some historians and artists have pictured Jesus as a man of sorrows who, knowing his destiny from birth, was acquainted with grief and therefore of sad countenance. In J. A. Hammerson's Wonders of the Past, is a chapter entitled "The Wonder of the Roman Catacombs" by Edward Hutton. In it I found this statement: "The por-

The Bitter Road to Peace

Excerpts from letters written by Major Sam Toomey, an elder, to his wife, Winifred, in Independence, Missouri. Major Toomey has been in Korea since April.

Chorwon, Korea
7 July 1951
9:45 a.m.

I HAVE a little time this morning, so I'd better write while I have the chance.

I know in my fighting here that God has been with me. I have the assurance that I am alive today because of him, and I have come through some of the most dangerous situations without a scratch. It is only because of the love, and faith, and prayers of the Saints that I have been spared. With God on my side, no one nor anything can stop me.

Though you are not here with me physically, you are near me, for I feel your presence too. With this kind of support I cannot fail.

Chorwon, Korea
1:00 p.m.

Just a note to let you know I am still alive and in good health, although I have lost considerable weight. I weigh 170 or less; before leaving Japan in April I weighed 210 pounds. My wedding ring is so very loose on my finger, I have to watch it carefully. My clothes fit me like a burlap bag.

Activity has picked up somewhat. This peace talk is a farce as far as we are concerned. We have received more casualties lately than we normally do and have had more men killed than in the past. The Chinese have built their strength against us and are hitting us with heavier and larger forces.

Thanks for all the letters. I do want you to know that I appreciate them more than I can express in words. They are my life line—keep them coming. I leave in twenty minutes to go to the front lines, so I'll have to say good-by until later. God be with you and the children. I miss you terribly.

I don't remember when I last wrote you, or whether I have received any letters which I have not answered as yet. I lost some of my personal things, including some of your letters, my good pen, clothing, and toilet articles. While we were in action some of our vehicles and trucks were destroyed, and my things were loaded on them. I am now in regimental headquarters, which is above battalion, so I am not actually on the front lines, but some three to five miles back. The colonel pulled me back because he said I was getting too careless, disregarding my own safety. He said that if I did not have any regard for my own life, he was sure my wife and children did. I have a desk job now and no excuse for exposing myself to enemy fire at close range. I am unhappy about this new assignment—paper work just isn't in my field.

We've had some fine weather for a change. The peace talks are still going on, yet we are still fighting.

I received a letter from Brother Wakeman, and one from Brother Look, which I appreciated very much. They have helped to clarify my thinking in regard to war and killing. Good-by for now; I miss you all very much.

Munsan-ni, Korea

I've had to neglect you again. I need a secretary—you, for instance—to keep my affairs in order. This peace talk has us going in circles. I was instructed early last week to come to the peace camp and take over command of one of our battalions which is here as a security guard. The battalion commander took sick, so I am taking his place until he returns.

This is probably the most important little piece of earth in the world right now. The place is filled with officials, from General Ridgeway on down—correspondents, photographers, and secretaries. Aside from the United Nations Peace Commission, upon my shoulders rests the most important mission—to provide full security to the peace camp and the officials who make the long trip to Kaesong each day for conferences. My mission is a twenty-four hour job, and most of us are tired from a lack of sleep, and the pressure of having in one spot so many "high officials," and the responsibility of insuring their safety against an enemy that does not have any honor. World news and history are being made here.

I received a letter from you several days ago, one you wrote at the reunion at Gardner Lake. I can't remember where I've put it. Between official papers (and they are piled high), top secrets, all the notes I keep, and letters, my pockets are bulging! I cannot leave any classified material around. I must carry it with me wherever I go, and I even sleep with it on me. Some things I cannot even write down but must carry the information in my head.

I feel so lonely at times, my heart feels like crying. It's a terrible feeling to overcome. Pray continually for me. Give my regards to all the Saints.

2:00 a.m.

Here we go again—round and round. Could surely use some sleep. We have been in rain and mud since Friday, and this is Sunday. Makes no difference to us which day it is—one day is like any other.

I thought I'd write to you now since I must be awake the rest of the night. When I come home one of the first things I want to do after greetings is to catch up on my sleep. I marvel how this human machine can withstand the rigors, lack of sleep, irregular meals, and pressure of war. Some days, when I awake, I feel I simply cannot make it; but after I get started, I go right along. Another thing I want to do when I come home is to just sit and not think.

I don't remember when I last heard from you. It may have been just a few days ago, but it seems like years. What's going on in Independence?

I received two letters, one from Sister M. E. Haskins, and one from Sister James Etter. They both said that their pastors mentioned me and asked the Saints to write to me. I appreciate this very much, but hope that all the other fighting boys are mentioned and remembered too. Had a letter from Jimmy Daugherty, too, which helped me very much on my feelings about killing. I do appreciate the interest the Saints have in me, and the faith they have expressed. I feel much better since receiving their letters, and I have read them over again. I've surely missed you and the children, and the months ahead will be just as difficult, because I'm so far away from you.

I saw my efficiency rating from the Colonel the other day. He said:

This officer is very active and strong physically. He has good endurance. He is very friendly, and he has a good, cheerful sense of humor, especially when the going is tough. He has a sound knowledge of tactics through battalion level. He is very calm and collected under fire, and he has the desire and does fight close with the enemy, and he fights. He works eagerly with enthusiasm and initiative. He has good moral character, high ideals, and the ability to lead men.

Well, I have an "operation order" to look over and approve, so I'll say good night—or rather, "good morning."

A rest camp near Pusan. Native shacks are visible on the hill in the background.

Just received two letters from you. Had to drop everything I was doing to write to you. I received orders last night that I must report back to regiment this evening. In addition to my other duties, I have been appointed executive officer for the regiment. Our regiment is moving north again, and we are going into the front lines. I think it best to write you before I get tied down to the messy business at hand. The peace talks are not going so well. Enemy activity is still strong, and we are determined to hold at the thirty-eighth parallel.

Must close. I have a huge pile of operation orders, overlays, and march orders to prepare for our move to the front lines. Remember me to all the Saints and tell them how much I appreciate their interest. I hope they will understand why I don't have the time to answer each of their letters like I want to.

HE ROLLED THE STONE AWAY

By Marie Marsh

"Ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established."—Proverbs 5:26.

AN OLD FABLE tells us that many people traveled over a certain road on which a great stone lay, and each traveler must walk round it if he wished to go on or turn back if unable to pass. Each had his choice to do as he wished.

One day a young man came along, and, seeing the rock noticed others had avoided it. But this young man did not change his course. He got out of his wagon, dislodged the stone, and rolled it away. After doing so, he looked where the stone had been and found a mass of glistening gold.

DO WE LET OBSTACLES in the road stop us or turn us aside from the purpose we have in life? Today we have comforts and securities and satisfactions our ancestors never had. Yet we would not have them if someone somewhere had not bothered to create them. Columbus didn't turn back just because his men wanted him to do so. Someone had to pay the cost of a lot of thinking, planning, and work, to produce the radios, airplanes, telephones, books, music, art, and other conveniences and pleasures. Many stones had to be rolled from the road of progress.

It is not always easy, but we cannot balk and turn from the straight course in the road if we wish to succeed. We cannot thumb free rides into heaven; we must pay our own way, and no one can make the trip for us.

Our future is in our own hands to shape as we will. Our personalities consist of our heredity, environment, and will. To attain perfection, we must recognize our weaknesses whether we inherit them or acquire them from our environment. We form a universe all our own of which we are the center, and everything we do radiates the kind of people we are. We must conquer our weaknesses, or they will conquer us; we must be masters of our will.

In the garden of Eden, Adam and Eve chose their destiny. We have no alternative; we must choose our destiny also. Christ said he went to prepare a place for us—"In my Father's house are many mansions." We have the key to enter one of these mansions. We have the chance to prepare our lives here on earth. Now is the most opportune time to decide in which mansion we shall dwell.

We must do things and not just dream about them. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. We deceive ourselves when we are hearers only and not doers of God's word. We should use each day as if it were the last one of our lives. We must get our houses in order, for we expect the Lord to come soon. Will he say "I never knew you"? We must use today wisely. We must roll the stone away.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

From Abraham until Christ was there any hope of salvation for anyone but the Hebrew race? We read where the Hebrews were not allowed to marry outside of their own class, and we never read where the Hebrews made any effort to spread their gospel.

Illinois

H. S.

Answer:

The Scriptures, especially the Inspired Version, leave no doubt that it was the design of God that the plan of salvation should be extended to all men from Adam down. He said to Adam, "As thou hast fallen, thou mayest be redeemed, and all mankind, even as many as will." Later God told Abraham that in him all the families of the earth would be blessed, indicating that from his line divine blessings were to flow to all men.

God called Israel out of Egypt to become under his hand a nation for the dispensing of the blessings of God to all people. "Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests." But Israel missed the mark. Instead of making friends of all people and leading them to God, the Israelites counted themselves the especial favorites of Jehovah and the sole recipients of his favoritism. They looked upon all other people as enemies to God and to themselves. Seemingly they never attained a true vision of their place in the divine economy and of their responsibility to the world.

There were some proselytes, not always welcome, and often little more than "camp followers." From the beginning they were spoken of as "strangers within thy gates." While technically of the kingdom, socially and even religiously they never attained equal rights and privileges with native Israel. They were often held as servants and even slaves, and children of alien converts were socially looked upon as bastards.

The barriers between Israel and other people were not necessarily of God's making, whether as to marriage or other things. The barrier which he sought to raise was between himself and the false gods of the heathen; between the true worship and false worship. Intermarriage would certainly result in Israel's going over to the heathenism of their neighbors, and hence was forbidden, "For they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods."—Deuteronomy 7:4. Consistent converts to the worship of Jehovah could have had, and should have had, the full rights and freedom of Israelites under the law.

In the restoration under John the Baptist and Jesus the gospel was to all. John rebuked the Jews for their attitude toward other people and for their claim, "Abraham is our father; we have kept the commandments of God, and none can inherit the promises but the children of Abraham."—Luke 3:13. Jesus sent his apostles to preach to "every creature."

The failure of the Israelite nation to fulfill the divine requirements did not change the attitude or purpose of God toward mankind, and although the people between Abraham and Christ, through Israel's mistake, failed to hear the gospel, they nevertheless remained under the mercies of Christ. Provision had been made for such through the preaching of the gospel "to them who are dead."—I Peter 4:6.

Such failure on the part of the Jewish nation to seek the salvation of the non-Jewish world must have furnished in part the grounds of their rejection: "The kingdom shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." This transfer of the kingdom to the Gentiles did make clear the long-hidden fact that salvation is to all men—as many as will.—CHARLES FRY

Question:

Does this church teach that every church organized since 1830 is intricately a part of the Restoration? Or is our church the church of the Restoration?

Illinois

G. E. M.

Answer:

To understand clearly what the Restoration means as taught by the church, it is well to note that: 1. Jesus was sent of God and taught only what God commanded him to teach as his message of salvation, the gospel message, and its requirements; 2. Jesus declared that this message should be preached by the same divine authority that had sent him; 3. Jesus warned that God is not with those who do not teach as he commanded, and that such are not sent of God; 4. New Testament prophecy declared that an apostasy, or departure from the faith, would take place; 5. Restoration, as foretold in prophecy, brought back to mankind the original gospel message in its fullness and divinely commissioned men called of God to proclaim it.

As shown by these facts, false teachers arose and taught many heresies. They also omitted to teach various important truths as contained in the message of Jesus and perverted other essential teachings (such as alleging that sprinkling is a sufficient act of baptism), also claiming that no special or direct authority is required to represent God, preach, or administer the gospel ordinances. By this apostasy the purity of the gospel and also divinely commissioned authority ceased until the Restoration came. It is clear that the Restoration necessarily included the full gospel and divinely authorized men sent to teach it and administer its ordinances, for they were essentials in the message and mission of Jesus and therefore are implicitly embraced in the term "Restoration" itself. Hence the Restoration was not a piecemeal or scattered and disconnected variety of events. It was a movement to restore the purity of the faith, the church with a divinely commissioned ministry, and the seal and gifts of the Holy Spirit as promised by the Lord.

Letter of Appreciation

I want to express sincere appreciation to all who befriended my granddaughter, Mary Jane Brownrigg, who was a patient in tuberculosis sanitoriums at Phoenix, Arizona, and Los Angeles, California, prior to her death on August 3. I am especially grateful to those of the Phoenix and Venice congregations who visited her and wrote letters to her.

She is buried in Forest Lawn Cemetery at Glendale, California.

Notes of Thanks

Mrs. Ethel Driver, Rural Route 2, Peculiar, Missouri, wishes to thank all who remembered her with letters, cards, and flowers during her stay in the Sanitarium, especially the young adult group at Grandview. She also extends her appreciation to members of the hospital staff who cared for her.

We wish to express our thanks for the many acts of kindness extended by various groups and individuals of the Des Moines Branch and Fort Des Moines Mission during our bereavement. These expressions of sympathy and consideration will never be forgotten.

Faith and Prayer

I hope this testimony will be of help to the one who asked for advice on nonmember companions. My husband was not a member of any church, although he had been reared by Baptist parents. After our marriage we made our first home in Iola, Kansas, at that time about forty miles from the nearest branch of the church. My first thoughts were to be a good wife and mother and to try in every way to represent Christ and his church. I was only seventeen years old, but I tried to choose carefully our associates, since I never wanted to bring dishonor upon my church or family. The years went by, but my husband did not become interested in the church. I taught our three children to believe in the gospel and continued to pray in faith for my husband. About five years ago I began to have very poor health and had to undergo three operations. I prayed all the more that my loved ones would unite with the church before God should call me home. Then the still small voice seemed to say to me that I had committed the sin of omission, for I had told the gospel story only to my family. I realized there were others in the community who needed to hear it, so as my health permitted I visited my friends and neighbors, giving them church literature. I wrote for missionaries to come and preach for us, which they did. As I tried to help others, God indeed blessed my family, for now my husband, two daughters, a son-in-law, and a grandson are members. There is a small group of Saints in Chanute and one in Iola that we worship with.

My earnest prayers are for all who have nonmember companions. My advice is for them to be faithful and prayerful, even if they are isolated from church privileges. God will bless all who draw close to him.

Under the Stars, and associate director of the Flint Opera Company. Since coming to Independence he has founded the Independence Symphony Orchestra; he is also music director of the Community Music Association and conductor of the Independence Messiah Choir. He is a member of Kiwanis, Knife and Fork Club, and the Missouri and National Music Educators Associations.

The church should get to know Franklyn S. Weddle better each year. He has a great concern to improve the hymnology of the church and members' ability to use it. Under his supervision the Hymnal for Youth has already been published, and a children's song book is nearing readiness for the printer. Considerable work has been done toward a revised Saints' Hymnal. He was ordained a priest in 1927, an elder in 1940, and a high priest in 1943. He married Doris Irene Waterman in 1930. trait of Christ is seldom found, but when we do find a presentment of him as in S. S. Nerens and Achilleus for instance, he is pictured as young and bearded, with a smile on his lips, splendid as Apollo." There is portrayed the smiling, happy face of Christ depicted by those who knew and loved him best. Jesus' own teachings of the gospel of love emphatically point the way to find joy in everyday living. He speaks of the peace of heart, mind, and soul that is his special gift to his followers. This priceless peace was his parting gift to the Twelve just before he ascended into heaven. Is it not available to us today?

IN THE FACE OF TRIAL and persecution literally unknown to us the Saints of the early days of the Restoration were hopeful and busy. The Saints' Hymnal contains these songs written then: "Rejoice, Ye Saints of Latter Days," "'Tis a Glorious Thing to Be in the Light," "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning." Surely these hymns sound the note of happiness of those who served the Lord.

The evangelizing of the world has yet to be accomplished. This will not be brought about by fearful, gloomy Christians, but by those who manifest the fruits of the Spirit and are strong in the Lord, having the conviction that his purposes will not be frustrated. An unknown writer has given us a statement of deep significance. "The God of the prophets lives, and lives to help the saints."

In a world of trouble, uncertainty, and confusion, to be happy is no mean accomplishment. We recognize that it is not easy to achieve contentment. Paul says, "I have learned." He realized that this condition was not merely a gift from God, but rather something he had to work at, to strive for. Few people could match Paul's trials and sufferings.

In his own words:

Five times received I forty stripes, save one, thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in perils of water, in perils of robbers, in perils of mine own countrymen, in perils of the heathen, in perils in the city and in the wilderness, in perils in the sea and in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, hunger, thirst, fasting, cold and nakedness.

In spite of these harrowing experiences Paul triumphed, for he rose to the place where he forgot the things of the past, rejoiced in the Lord, and learned "to be content." We are called upon to do likewise. And what is the promise? Paul phrases it beautifully, "And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

Called To Be Pioneers

By Ruth Midgorden Goodwin

A LITTLE MORE than a century ago, the Conestoga wagons creaked their dusty ways across the prairies. Those trails, blazed by scouts and followed by rugged men and women in search of a better livelihood, have become highways humming with transcontinental motor freights. The wilderness of forest and the virgin prairie are no more.

But though the physical wilderness of this country, and of the world, has been largely conquered by the brains and brawn of men and their machines, there remains a field of pioneering vast and powerful in its reach. We are called to pioneer in the great task still awaiting the cooperation of men—"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth." This field of relations involving God, my brother, and me is as large as the love of God. Men have worked at this task for centuries. Shall we stand idle? Shall we put forth a little effort in the onward march of progress? Or shall we pioneer—flinging every resource we have into firm resolution and action to build Zion in our day?

The women of the church should have no difficulty determining their immediate avenues of pioneer effort. "To the women of the church has been given the special task of directing and developing the Zion home," reminds Pauline Arnsen in the Handbook for Women's Work in the Church. And from the same book comes these words of President Israel A. Smith, "The sphere of women in the home is an extension of stewardship; her duty is commensurate with her talents, many or few, and the opportunities offered for their use; and condemnation will result from nonuse or wrongful use."

AS WE CONSIDER how we shall pioneer in the task of building homes where Christ can dwell, let us think on our family's well-being.

The nurturing of our children that they may be taught the gospel and trained in the ways they should go is the all-consuming task of church women. Nothing else is so important as this—no time devoted to women's meetings, or singing in the choir, or any other activity. For if in doing our good works we forget the specific task God gave us, we have failed.

As we blaze new trails in the area of family well-being, we will be doing these things: developing and maintaining housekeeping standards of excellence, helping our neighbors to set their homes in order, experiencing the truly wonderful spirit that comes when husband and wife are mutually aiding each other. We will engender and maintain a genuine spirit of hospitality and be the charming, attractive, sincere people who will win others to the faith. And we will exemplify in our conduct Christian graces, especially remembering patience and long suffering, joyousness and thanksgiving.

In speaking of Emma Hale Smith, the late President Frederick M. Smith paid this tribute to her: "She was devoted to her home. . . . She kept it first before her, and worked assiduously to make it the best she could under the untoward circumstances under which she carried on the activities of that home. . . . She knew her place in society . . . her place in the church . . . and she kept it. . . . She knew the importance of the home in their social organization, and because she did know its importance she was willing to work that her home should maintain a standard which would result in a contribution to the welfare of the community in which her home was located." Could this tribute be made to all of us?

ANOTHER AREA of the Christlike home in which we must ever pioneer is the field of stewardship. We have already mentioned the home as an extension of women's stewardship. Let us narrow the term now to some specific items. First: money—there will be no Zion until the women of our church learn to feel that the stewardship of their money includes all of the money taken in. Second: time, energy and talent—it may not be an easy thing to tithe these gifts. One thing stands out, however—that we have not done it. Few indeed are our church members who tithe their financial resources; and few there are who are wise stewards of their time, and energy resources. The instruction given in the Word of Wisdom and the commandment to retire early and to arise early are scarcely heeded. The promise for the obedient is a precious one, yet we continue doing just enough to get by. Pioneering calls for maximum, not minimum, effort. Zion will be built by those who live and give the best. No second-rate effort will do.

Another area in which we women must pioneer is that of study. Many—perhaps most—of us have spent a great deal of time reading and studying good books. There are some who have not done this much; some persist in reading definitely harmful material; some will not read or study at all. How many of us have faithfully and intently studied the Word of God as revealed in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants? Nothing can substitute for personal contact with the Scriptures. And as we study, we must remember to pray and to fast.

In the area of evangelism, let us never forget that it is our first duty to teach the gospel to those within our family walls. We must spread the good news to all about us, but not to the extent that we neglect the souls God has entrusted to our care.

Brotherhood must come in for its share of pioneering by women. "One of the tests of a truly great man is his sense of oneness with the rest of humanity."—F. Henry Edwards. There is no shortcut to developing the love of Christ toward our brothers and sisters. It comes only as we associate with other people, learn to understand them and their problems, and love them, recognizing their contributions to us and the world in general. This holds true for our next-door neighbor, our neighbor across the Rio Grande, and our neighbors across the Atlantic and Pacific.

For me, this and many other things are caught up in this sentence from God Our Help: "It may be that as we are more urgently challenged by our redemptive calling we shall be less proud to be members of the church and more earnestly determined to be worthy of her past and of her destiny."

AS WE PIONEER in these areas of the home, we shall develop leadership in ourselves and in our family. It is a by-product of such activity.

We must realize the necessity to move out and be responsible in the field of civic affairs. It is to our shame that we have men and women of voting age who do not vote and who are not registered voters. We can at least make the minimum effort of reading candidates' remarks, listening to their speeches and examining their records, then voting as intelligently as possible. We can take time to write our congressmen our earnest pros and cons after we have considered issues in question from the standpoint, "Will this measure help or impede the coming of God's kingdom on earth?"

Finally, as we consider our own spiritual development, we recognize our great need to learn to know God so that we can teach others. We will see our need to conserve sufficient energy for worship and to take sufficient time for our personal spiritual development. We will, as mothers and fathers, point our children to kingdom-building. Then spiritual power will grow in parallel to the change that has taken place within us with faith that "all things work together for good to them that love God," by freedom from defeatism and despair, by inner peace. We will deny ourselves anything and everything that hinders us from receiving the blessings of God.

The call to pioneer today is in a field scarcely probed—family well-being by Christ's standards, stewardship pointed to kingdom-building, study, evangelism, brotherhood, civic responsibility, spiritual development. Here we are in a field of moral and spiritual development where it is more difficult to stand the mental pain of those trying to achieve that for which society is not ready than it is to endure the trials of physical hardship. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth" will happen only as we throw aside minimum standards and begin living by our maximum possibilities.

A Personal Prayer

HELP ME, DEAR LORD, to praise the work of others. Help me speak a cheering word to those along my pathway who need a friend.

Help me to be humble and always have the desire for service, but never seek glory for the things I do. Keep me from being egotistical.

Help me listen when someone gives me good advice. Make me kind and gentle in my speech and actions. I would not want the least to say I'd hurt him in any way.

Help me understand the lessons life teaches and in turn be able to help others over the rough places.

Help me keep silent when I'm hurt or in sorrow. Others have their hurts and sorrows too.

Help me be content with a quiet, modest happiness. Help me keep myself free from worldly pride and envy.

Help me be kind and loving always to those along my way, that through my humble efforts they may be turned to thee. Amen.

Who Should Partake of the Emblems?

in the above text cannot be fulfilled by an unbaptized child; therefore, such child should not be given the sacrament. And to this, agrees the teachings of St. Paul, I Corinthians 11: 23-29.

In the Herald for November 16, 1898, Volume 45, page 726, Joseph Smith, editor, under "Questions and Answers" stated the following in answer to the question, "Do you think it is lawful to administer the Sacrament to children ten to twelve years of age who have never been baptized?"

Paul was of the opinion that there were some things which were "lawful" but not "expedient." The Sacrament (the bread and the wine) is for baptized believers—those who are capable of discerning the Lord's body. No others are contemplated in the instructions in either the New Testament or the Doctrine and Covenants. We have no authority for the giving of the emblems to children who have not reached the age to obey, or unbaptized persons, either children or adults, who have reached such a period.

If, therefore, the statements in the law which make it lawful to administer the sacraments to specified persons, or those specifically named, make it unlawful to permit others not so named to partake, it is unlawful.

We are of the opinion that the administration to such persons as those described in the question is not provided for, and for that reason, it ought not to be done.

THE CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER of these excerpts indicates a need for reiteration of the principle that it is unlawful for those who are unbaptized to partake of the Communion. These early statements were made by Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair, and later by Joseph Smith as editor of the Herald. Here is one made by the late President Frederick M. Smith in the Herald for July 1, 1903 (Volume 50, page 593). Joseph Smith, collaborating with Frederick M. Smith as editor, said in answer to the questions: "Will you please give some instruction on taking the sacrament? Should those who do not belong to the church be invited to partake? If not, what is the meaning of Doctrine and Covenants 46: 2?"

In the Herald for May 1, 1870, page 272, the editor gave some thoughts on the Sacrament and in it uses the following language: "The person passing the emblems should not permit unbaptized persons, nor members of the church, against whom charges are made for which they are to be tried, to partake, if they know them." This is in harmony with the instruction thereon given in Doctrine and Covenants 46: 1, 2.

In the Herald for October 24, 1906 (Volume 53, page 1004), Editor Joseph Smith, with Elbert A. Smith as associate editor, said the following in an article, "Are We Close Communion?"

If by this question it is intended to ask, "Do you as a church administer and partake of the Sacramental emblems, bread and wine, with other religious bodies," we answer, "No." Our reason for thus answering is that we are commanded not to let communicants partake unworthily—this unworthiness in part is the failure to discern in the church the Lord's body, or, in other words, the church acknowledged of Christ as his.

In the Saints' Herald of October 15, 1938 (Volume 85), A. B. Phillips makes the following statement:

The Sacrament is essentially a memorial of the Christian covenant as previously entered into between God and the repentant believer. Only members therefore should be permitted to receive it, and spiritual cautions are given which warn against his administration in cases of unworthiness.

The Book of Mormon shows that Jesus limited the Communion to the membership when he instructed the disciples in such a manner as we find in III Nephi, 8: 32:

... And to him will I give power that he shall break bread, and bless it, and give it unto the people of my church, unto all those who shall believe and be baptized in my name.

In the fortieth verse we find:

And this shall ye also do unto those who repent and are baptized in my name.

AS WE CONSIDER these things which we find recorded in the Book of Mormon together with those which are in existence and recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants, there seems nothing for us to do but to accept the fact that we are "close communionists" and that those who are unbaptized shall not partake of the emblems at the Communion service. Nevertheless, as we find recorded in III Nephi 8: 62:

HERALD HOUSE

And if it so be that he repenteth, and is baptized in my name then shall ye receive him, and shall minister unto him of my flesh and blood.

This would seem to indicate that until such has been accomplished, no one should receive of the emblems of the broken body and the spilled blood of the Master until he has covenanted with his church restored in the latter days. Are we to believe that those who have repented and yet have not been baptized are to be treated as members of the church? I think not. Certainly we can say, as is recorded in the sixty-third verse:

But if he repent not, he shall not be numbered among my people, that he may not destroy my people, for behold I know my sheep, and they are numbered.

Until such time as additional information and light shall come to us through the prophet of the church, we urge that those who are in administrative positions and those who are in a position to administer the Communion should adhere to the laws of the church as they are set forth in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, together with those scriptural references which have been cited in this article to verify and substantiate the claims which we make. We investigate those who ask for baptism to see that they are not baptized unworthily, as we are admonished to do in the Book of Mormon:

See that ye are not baptized unworthily; see that ye partake not of the sacrament of Christ unworthily.—Mormon 4: 95.

There is some place for interpretation of the method in which refusal shall be sustained. There is no question but that it should be according to the commandments which we have been given.

This is the commandment which I give unto you, that ye shall not suffer anyone knowingly, to partake of my flesh and blood unworthily, when ye shall minister, it, for whoso eateth and drinketh my flesh and blood unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to his soul.—III Nephi 8: 60.

And verse 61:

Therefore, if ye know that a man is unworthy to eat and drink of my flesh and blood, ye shall forbid him. . . .

It might be expedient at this place to indicate that it is not up to each individual priesthood member to pass judgment on whether or not a person in the congregation is to partake of the emblems or is not to partake of them. There are laws governing these matters, and they should be judged accordingly. When that adjudication is made and so indicated by the one in charge, then and then only should those who are passing the emblems withhold them from an individual. It is because of the preceding citations and the conviction which we carry, and which is continued by our observance of those things we feel should be done, that the Presidency as editors and other church leaders have always spoken unequivocally. President Israel in his article has stated, and we quote in conclusion, "We are reprinting some of these statements which we commend for a careful reading. We cannot improve upon them, nor do we have any desire to modify them."

LOS ANGELES STAKE.—The reunion convened at the Presbyterian Conference grounds at the Pacific Palisades from July 29-August 5. Due to the absence of Stake President G. E. Tickemyer, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, the Stake Presidency, and the Stake Bishop were in charge. Evangelist Louis Ostertag and Lynn Smith were also appointed to the reunion. Mary Rasmussen was in charge of the music.

Prayer services were held for adults and young people. The class work for young people was directed by Brothers Ostertag and T. R. Beil; adults by Brother Gleazer and E. S. Kelley; women by Sister Millie Johnson. Children's activities were directed by Elder Glen E. Holmes and Sister Mayme Blakeman. Sister Opal Page and Brother Clyde Rockwell were in charge of the handcraft and Brother Bob Wallis was the children's pastor.

Elder Martin Ahlstrom directed the administrations for the sick. The experience meetings were under the supervision of Elder William J. Moyle who also served as co-ordinator of services.

Speakers for the preaching services were: Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Bishop E. S. Kelley, Elder T. R. Beil, Evangelist L. J. Ostertag, and Elder John Blackmore, church historian, who was visiting in Southern California with his wife. The choirs from the various congregations assisted in the services each evening.—Reported by MABEL JENSEN

SIOUX FALLS, SOUTH DAKOTA.—The Saints of Sioux Falls, Parker and Yankton, South Dakota, held a reunion at the home of Elder C. R. Buller of Parker. Out-of-state guests were Sister Frances Schardt and daughter, JoAnne of Chico, California. After services a pot-luck dinner was served.—Reported by CORA EMERSON

HARDY, ARKANSAS.—Elder James Renfroe held a series from July 22-29. One baby was blessed, and five adults were baptized. (Continued on page 22.)

A Native Indian from Tikal

Report from Guatemala

By Billie Whiting Young

A friend at a travel agency in Guatemala City loaned us jungle hammocks—remarkable affairs with rubber roofs, mosquito netting, and zipper closings that keep one from falling out. Since neither Uaxactun nor Tikal can supply food or water, we had to carry our own. Keeping everything at a minimum, we bought two loaves of bread, two pounds of cheese, one pound of salami, a bag of dried fruit, and twelve bottles of water, which, next to the cameras, turned out to be the most valuable item on the trip. Our only clothes for the journey were the ones we wore. Figuring rightly that water would be scarce, we dispensed with our toothbrushes and George's razor.

The only plane available was a C-47 cargo plane, and we had our choice of sitting in the metal "bucket" seats or on the cargo. As it turned out we rode up front with the pilots while they flew off course so we could get air photos of the towering temples of Tikal.

WE LANDED about 1:30 p.m. on a greasy air strip which had been hacked out of the jungle. Thatch huts lined both sides of the runway, while behind them the jungle pressed in on all sides. For the first time we really understood why there are no roads to Uaxactun. The only way to get through that vegetation is to go over it.

By 3:00 p.m. we had rented three mules and a guide and were on our way to Tikal. A jungle is really a beautiful place; exotic colored flowers—cousins to orchids—bloom high in the air; tremendous hanging vines tinsel the trees; strange birds make raucous noises; families of monkeys swing through the trees, peer down at passersby, drop sticks with very bad aim, and finally leave with a great crashing through the treetops.

We had been on the trail an hour when the rain came, and being in that rain was like standing under a giant faucet. In a matter of seconds we were completely drenched. Only our food and cameras, which were in the knapsacks, remained dry. By 7:30 it was dark—a dank, velvety darkness that completely obscured the hanging vines we were supposed to miss. We resolutely kept our minds off boa constrictors and the night noises of the jungle which sounded like feeding time at the zoo.

Shortly after nine o'clock we arrived at a clearing where a dozen Guatemalan soldiers lived under palm-leaf shelters. Most of their "barracks" had no walls—only the leaf roofs supported by poles, and dirt floors. Despite the meager accommodations, they made us most welcome, stringing up our hammocks for us and rubbing tequila on our insect bites. Although we both were severely bitten, George was the worst. His arms were a mass of lumps, and the back of his neck looked like bread dough.

Despite my wet clothes and the obvious discomforts of a hammock I slept through the night. Not so with George—he awoke in the middle of the night to hear something pawing at our knapsacks. Since all our food for the next three days was in those sacks he decided to investigate. We had no flashlight, and our box of matches was in the sack with the food. By his own account he stood by the sacks for ten minutes wondering what might be there before putting out his hand to investigate. We never did discover what animal was trying to share our lunch, but the knapsacks spent the rest of the night zipped up in the hammocks with us.

GEORGE AND I have just returned from the Guatemalan jungle. For us, who are used to nothing more hazardous than midwestern woods, it was an exciting experience. More important, we hope it will be profitable to the church as well, for we visited ruins that had never before been visited by our people. There we found a beautifully preserved sculpture of a bearded man dressed in Mayan priest's clothing, holding a staff.

Our expedition, as we fondly call it, began with a letter from Apostle Charles Hield. He told us about the ruins at Uaxactun (pronounced wash-act-tune) and Tikal (tea-cal) and suggested that we visit them and take pictures for the church. We received the letter on a Monday. On Wednesday we were loading our equipment on the plane that was to take us to Uaxactun and return for us on Saturday. From Uaxactun we were to take mules for the six or seven hour ride through the jungle to Tikal.

New Horizons

EARLY THE NEXT MORNING we left for Tikal. We found it to be a sacred city with five temples and dozens of smaller buildings, some with decaying wood, crumbling reinforcements and doorframes, all covered by the creeping, relentless jungle. Our most exciting discovery was the man with the beard. The stone was approximately six feet long and resting on its side, which protected it from the destructive effects of the weather. The man was wearing a feathered headdress, a Roman-type tunic that came to his knees, and sandals. One hand carried the staff that seemed twisted as if might be a snake, while the other was raised palm out in gesture of greeting or of peace. The stone was most difficult to photograph because the same angle that protected it from the rain also kept it out of the sun.

We returned to camp that afternoon to find our soldiers gone. They had run out of water. In a few hours we found ourselves in the same predicament. We had completely underestimated our thirst in the heat. Certain that it would soon rain again we set our utensils and waited, but nothing happened. All afternoon the sky was clear, and that evening, when the southern cross appeared on the horizon, we knew it wasn't going to rain.

To say we had no water is not entirely true. There was some that had drained off the roof, but it was swarming with mosquito larvae and other insects. Using George's folded undershirt for a sieve, we strained the larvae out of the water and boiled it. By then it was amber colored. Some ground coffee left by the soldiers changed the color and taste. When we finally drank it, it was the most refreshing beverage we had ever had.

THE NEXT DAY we left for Uaxactun, and again it rained—three times, I believe. The radio operator at Uaxactun gave us space for our hammocks that night, and the next day the C-47 dropped down into the clearing.

From our experience we learned several things: that it is possible to wear the same clothes, wet and dry, for four days and nights; that human beings drink much more water than they think they do; and that the beardless Maya Indians knew and revered some man who wore a beard and held up one hand in a sign of peace.

Note: Both Billie and George have accepted teaching positions at the Belmont School in Guatemala. They will be there until December when they come home for "summer" vacation, returning again in January. They will be glad to see, help, and advise anyone visiting in that territory. Their address is:

comes from Christ? How often has the Book been in our hands as we have journeyed? To the same extent has the vision been in our hearts? For except the Book of Mormon is used by the church much more than it has been hitherto, unless it becomes an instrument of power in our hands, there can be no vision of Zion with its faith, hope, and charity.

We are eternally indebted to our Heavenly Father, and are we grateful withal? How deep is our obligation to share with others the good news and the good fortune? May we not ask this question reverently, "When the son of man comes shall he find faith in the church?" Shall we "remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments . . . not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit?"—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8. Can we not, with the church of former days, address ourselves to the glorious consummation designed in the righteousness and love of God? The lowering shadows are visible all around. Soon a mighty storm will break, and he who has endeavored to destroy the handiwork of God because he himself could not possess it will unleash the fury of the storm. Blood, fire, and vapors of smoke will be seen, even in the land of promise. Where shall men look during those dark days for hope, for faith? Where shall they find the charity and fraternity which alone can bind men and nations together? Our Heavenly Father has designed they shall look to his church and to its sacred books. We must build hurriedly against that dreadful day.

At the heart of life there is a divine order. Has not God conducted the march of our own history? Does he not rule in the heavens above, and also among the armies of the earth? His order prevails and his will is supreme, so that even when wicked men exercise their wrath against him, praise is made to come from their deeds. His order is quiet, purposeful, serene, invincible. Neither Stalin nor Hitler flouts him. "For the kingdom of the devil must shake, and the inhabitants thereof stirred up unto repentance."

All that poets and musicians have put in sound and song; all that scientists have or yet will discover; all that good men have fought, bled, died, and won for us in their struggles down through the years—all this and much more is the will of God. All this and much more is at the heart of all existence. All is offered in the gospel of Jesus Christ: Love, joy, peace.

Can we not lay hold on these things, remembering our stewardship in the Book of Mormon, to make the word flesh, so that again truth may spring from the earth—the earth of which our bodies are made—then again will righteousness look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord will give that which is good again, and again; and in spite of desolations soon to come, our land will yield her increase!

P.S.

* THE COLOR OF DIRT

Our maintenance staff keeps things pleasantly clean around the plant. Yesterday morning the sidewalk didn't look dirty, but Brother Hart was sweeping it anyway. And I could see the line of dust between the swept and the unswept areas. Then I noticed a peculiar thing. The swept part of the walk was a different color from the unswept part. It was brighter. The other was dull. . . . That little difference was the reason why he was sweeping.

The color of dirt—it makes a subtle but important difference in all things. There are other kinds of dirt, too. A little of it getting into the mind, a bit of it dusted over the soul, may not appear to be very significant. Yet it will add its color to both. It is good to clean up at regular intervals.

You will notice that Mother washes Junior's neck and ears "whether they need it or not." And, after the start is made, it is generally discovered that they need it.

* NOTHING DOING

Trying to rest after an exceedingly hard day, father was annoyed by an endless stream of questions from his son, Willie.

"Whatta' you do down at the office?" was one of the questions.

"Nothing!" shouted the exasperated father.

Silence for a while. But it was soon broken by another question.

"Pop, how do you know when you're through?"—"Blue Valley Kiwanews."

* BUSINESS HELPS

Our manager just received a very fine letter from the Esterbrook Pen Company, Camden, New Jersey. We quote a part of it:

"To Esterbrook Dealers in the Flood Area: As business friends, we wish to offer our assistance in every way possible to any of you who have suffered losses in the recent flood disaster. . . . How can we help? Should you have any outstanding invoices from us, we will be glad to extend additional time for you to make settlement. If you have damaged Esterbrook stock send it to us with a covering note, and we'll gladly recondition or replace current merchandise at no cost to you. Naturally, we'll replace, without charge, any sales helps that have been damaged, such as show cases, displays. . . . Esterbrook wishes you a speedy and complete recovery."

Doesn't that give you a lift? Fortunately, we are above the level of the flood waters and suffered no damage, but it is fine to deal with concerns like this.

Some of the furniture dealers in Greater Kansas City have offered to recondition furniture damaged by the flood that is being purchased on installments by their customers. If you could see what happened, you would know better how much that means.

Many other business concerns are offering help to flood victims in as many ways as possible. Service is one of the important motives in modern business and industry.

News and Notes

PRESIDENT SMITH PREACHES

President Israel A. Smith preached at the morning service at Walnut Park August 26 and presented the address that evening at the Campus service.

EDWARDS VISITS REUNION

F. Henry Edwards of the First Presidency spoke at the Far West Stake reunion on the week end of August 18 and 19. Brother Edwards received a report from Emery E. Jennings, Far West Stake president, which states that $5,000 was received in offering and that twelve people presented their names for baptism. The average attendance for the two Sundays was eighteen hundred people.

Brother Edwards attended the Eastern Colorado reunion the following week. Also on the staff at this reunion were Apostle Reed M. Holmes, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, High Priest Carl Mesle, Elder Ward A. Hougas, and Elder John W. Banks.

ATTENDS MICHIGAN REUNIONS

Apostle C. George Mesley and his wife Blanche have returned from three reunions in Michigan. They were present at Blue Water, Sanford, and Park of the Pines. Brother Mesley reports a record attendance at each of the reunions. Brother Mesley was in charge of the prayer meetings and general classwork and Sister Mesley was in charge of the women's work.

HOLDS SERIES

Elder Wayne Simmons has been working at Topeka, Kansas, for three weeks and started August 20 in a series at St. Joseph, Missouri, working primarily with prospects of Spanish-speaking people.

APOSTLE IN NORTHWEST

Apostle Charles R. Hield attended reunions in Ontario and Michigan, at Port Elgin, Erie Beach, and Cash. The week of July 24 through July 29 was spent visiting and talking at all of the branches of Manitoulin Island, culminating in a week-end institute at Little Current, Ontario.

MEXICAN STUDENT ARRIVES

Susana Mendiola of Mexico City, Mexico has arrived at Graceland College where she is enrolling this fall. She is being granted an international scholarship to Graceland and is the first Spanish-speaking student to receive such a scholarship to the college. Apostle C. R. Hield who has been working with the Spanish-speaking people states that donations toward such scholarships will be gratefully received.

FIRE AT DES MOINES REUNION

Lightning struck the Memorial Building at Camp Mitigua where the Des Moines reunion was being held and destroyed the building. The fire occurred in the night of August 14. The Des Moines District suffered a loss of approximately $1,000, but no lives were lost. The Herald House lost around $375 worth of property. The reunion moved to Des Moines following the fire. On the reunion staff were Apostle Williams, who returned to Independence August 15; William Becker, who taught the financial law class; Seventy John T. Puckett, and Mrs. W. W. Smith, who taught the women's class.

We'd like you to know

Norma Bertha Smith

THIS PICTURE is not "a pose," for Norma is just being natural. She is always happy to serve and does it well. Franklyn Weddle, Radio and Music Department Director, "picked a natural" when he hired her for his secretary, for she had a combination of radio, music, and secretarial experience to offer.

Norma, the daughter of Victor and Hattie Gunsolley, was born in Lamoni and baptized there on her eighth birthday, February 27, 1918. Following her graduation from William Chrisman High School in Independence, Missouri, in 1927 she attended Kansas City Junior College and later took some courses at Los Angeles, California, in speech, literature, and psychology.

After three years in stenographic positions in Kansas City and Independence, she went to California and worked two years as a cashier. From 1935 to 1939 she was employed in radio work in Kansas City. In 1939 she was married to LeRoy E. Smith, a grandson of H. O. Smith. They spent the next two years in radio in the East with Norma doing free-lance radio programs—acting, singing, playing the piano, and conducting interviews in "man-on-the-street" programs. They have two children: Michael Leo, 10, and Judi Ella, 6.

Since 1946 she has been working at the Auditorium, part time at first, and full time since late 1948. She also serves the Community Music Association as business secretary.

During her high school days she sang in both girls' and mixed quartets which won several high ratings during her junior and senior years. She has participated in the Multiple Piano Concerts of the Community Music Association for the past three years, and played the piano for recitatives for the Messiah broadcast over C.B.S. this year. She is a member of the Independence Young Matrons Club, the Independence Music Club, and the Southwest P.T.A. Both of her children are active in church work and have shown unusual musical aptitude. It is a pleasure to present this talented, personable secretary and mother.

Jesus Passed By

"As Jesus passed by, he saw. . . ."—John 9: 1

THE APPRECIATIVE READER is very grateful for the Gospel of John. It has so many vivid, dramatic, human touches. There is an eye-witness quality about it. Even if the critics do say that it was written last of the four biographies of Jesus—some say many years later—the author who put it together had a remarkable memory for detail and a genius for making Jesus a real person.

Touches like our text for today are common, "As Jesus passed by, he saw. . . ." That helps us to understand Jesus better. He was no starry-eyed dreamer, unaware of his surroundings. He was no impractical theorizer. He was awake, alert to the conditions of his world and of the people around him. Even apart from his divinity, he was a very remarkable human being.

* * * *

CAN YOU IMAGINE the eyes of Jesus as he walked the streets of Jerusalem with his disciples following him? Sometimes he seemed to be looking beyond his immediate surroundings, beholding things that others did not see.

Yet he missed nothing of real significance. As he was passing by he saw—he took in everything. This day he saw a blind man. At other times he saw the hungry, the poor, the unclothed, the fearful, the wretched ones. Wherever he looked he saw people and their needs.

Jesus was observant. He kept awake on his feet. If ever he indulged in mere day-dreaming, it is not evident in the gospels. He saw much. His mind was stored with thousands of memories, experiences, passages of Scripture, ideas. He had all of them ready for immediate use.

"As Jesus passed by, he saw. . . ."

YOU KNOW how we people are. Nine-tenths of us are asleep on our feet. We spend half of our waking hours with a glaze of reverie over our eyes, not thinking but just mulling over our feelings, concerned with ourselves. We shut out the great, rich, human drama around us. If there are two alert, bright-eyed persons in a bus load of people, it is remarkable.

On the way to the office we may regard the trip as a mere waste of time in which we see nothing, say nothing, and learn little. We try to shut out the sights and sounds of the world—our fellow passengers.

* * * *

TWO MEN go down the street together, but it is as if they were in different worlds. One is intent merely on getting to the next point as soon as possible, ignoring the world as he goes. This results in poverty of mind and boredom. The other sees people, incidents, happenings. He hears the sounds of the world about him. Ask each one afterward to write what he can remember. One will give you a fascinating chapter, the other a blank paper.

The greatest differences in life are not in environment and circumstance, but in people. Some will live rich, entertaining, happy, wonderful lives in the same town where others are dull, poor, uninspired, listless, and thoroughly unhappy.

I read recently of a young woman who aspired to be an actress. She thought she would perish if she could not escape from Cincinnati and go to New York. Cincinnati is all right. Her trouble was in herself.

Editorial

ONE of the rich, literary works of the English language was written by a man who would have greatly enjoyed travel, but never got the chance. Gilbert White was born in Selborne, Hampshire, England, in 1720. He was graduated from Oriel College, Oxford, to become a deacon and a rector. Most of his life was spent at home in Selborne. He was very observant and recorded what he saw—the flowers, the plants, the birds—all the rich caravan of nature through the passing seasons of the year. The Natural History and Antiquities of Selborne is read with delight wherever literate people care about the good things of the past. What he saw is of interest to many today. He had but a little space in which to live, but he found enough there to excite the imagination and interest of many thousands.

* * * *

JESUS was not always patient with people who were mentally lazy or asleep. He was bothered by dullness and stupidity. There was a note of reprimand, perhaps of annoyance, in his exclamation, "Having eyes, see ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not remember?"—Mark 8: 18.

We, too, are passing by life every day. We pass by, but do we see as Jesus did? Do we see our fellow human beings? Do we see the human needs and human suffering? Do we see the opportunities that life affords for useful and unselfish service?

If we are to live as we should, we must begin by seeing and understanding, by being aware. The eyes and the ears are the gates of experience. Whoever keeps them closed suffers a personal tragedy.

Attention Alumni and Friends of Graceland!

The 1951 Graceland Homecoming will be held October 12 to 14, with alumni and friends returning to the campus and the Lamoni community from near and far.

At 7:45 p.m., Friday, October 12, the welcome and formal opening of homecoming activities will be held in Zimmermann Hall. Directly following at 8:00 the homecoming play, Heaven Can Wait, will be presented by the Graceland Players with Roscoe Faunce as director. No reserved tickets will be necessary.

On Saturday, October 13, at 9:30 a.m., the alumni assembly will be held in the Student Center, featuring the classes of 1926 and 1941. Following the assembly there will be a business meeting; and at 2:30 p.m. Graceland meets Wentworth on the gridiron. Alumni night will be held in Zimmermann Hall at 8:00 p.m., Saturday, followed by social meetings at 10:00.

The schedule for Sunday, October 14, will include a fellowship service at 8:50 a.m., followed by a worship service at 10:45. "A Community" will be the theme for this service, and there will be a guest speaker.

Come and visit your college community and your friends, and partake again of the "Graceland spirit."

Mob "Duty" in 1844

Herbert S. Salisbury, former county surveyor of Hancock County, Illinois, who now resides in San Rafael, California, recently visited friends in Carthage and La Harpe, Illinois. Noticing an article in the Carthage Gazette of June 22, 1951, reporting the death of Mrs. Edna Worrell Humacher of Kansas City (which stated that she was a great-granddaughter of Lieutenant Franklin Worrell "who was killed while on duty" by the Mormons), Brother Salisbury wrote the editor as reported in The Quill, published at La Harpe, Illinois, July 25, 1951, as follows:

The record that was carried by the Mormons to Salt Lake City states that Lt. Franklin Worrell was left by Governor Ford in charge of the Carthage Grays to guard the Mormon leaders, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and that he had not only aided and abetted the murder of the Smiths but refused to testify at the Carthage trial of the mobbers for fear of incriminating himself.

After the death of the Smiths, Lt. Worrell at different times collected mobs and led raids on farmers in the southern part of Hancock county, burning barns and haystacks and shooting at the Mormon owners. The record further states that Sheriff Backinstoss of Hancock county thereupon organized a posse and on various occasions interfered with the Worrell mob, and that Worrell, enraged by the interference, led his mob on a certain day in pursuit of Sheriff Backinstoss, who was not a "Mormon," with the avowed intention of killing him.

The record further states that the desperate sheriff, urging his exhausted horse to pull his buggy down the hill past the old Ogden school house near the creek just east of Nauvoo, came near two covered wagons of sick refugee Mormons going to Nauvoo, piloted and guarded by the noted Indian scout, Porter Rockwell. He yelled at the longhaired, buckskin-clad Porter Rockwell, that he was pursued by a murderous mob, and, as is still legal on such occasions and under such urgent circumstances, made Rockwell a deputy sheriff and ordered him to protect him, the sheriff, from the mob.

As the mob came over the hill, shouting and firing at Sheriff Backinstoss, led by the redoubtable Worrell "in his line of duty," Porter Rockwell pulled a long Kentucky rifle from one of the covered wagons and taking sure aim at Worrell's belt buckle, pulled the trigger. Lt. Franklin Worrell fell dead from his horse, and as the Indian scout was pulling a second rifle from the other wagon, the mob hurriedly placed the body of their dutiful leader across his saddle and fled back toward Carthage.

Make it a rule of life never to regret and never to look back. Regret is an appalling waste of energy; you can't build on it; it's only good for wallowing in.—Katherine Mansfield

Meet success like a gentleman and disaster like a man.—Lord Birkenhead

In a letter from Z. Z. Renfroe, attention is called to the work in the Prairie Provinces.

We are pleased to announce that, as a result of a series at Calgary, nine young people were baptized. The Edmonton Branch is busy on its new church building, bringing it into a more complete state, which will provide a better place to worship.

We are glad to see that the Saints at Senlac, Saskatchewan, are continuing in their efforts to carry on the work which was started by Brother J. J. Cornish. His influence is still strong there.

Reunions have been held at Ribstone and at Winnipeg, and while these were of short duration, they did give the Saints splendid opportunity to come together and renew their spiritual strength.

On July 21, at a meeting of the two districts, Northern and Southern Saskatchewan were united, and Brother Howard Fisher of Birsay was elected president of the newly formed Saskatchewan District. Other reunions were held throughout the district; Luther Troyer and Aleah Koury gave very fine assistance in helping to carry these out.

Stir Up Thy Gift

By Chris B. Hartshorn

Based on a sermon preached at Liberty Street Church from wire recording by Elmer Hart, April 29, 1951.

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus, To Timothy, my dearly beloved son; Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord. I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day; Greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy; When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also. Wherefore I put thee in remembrance, that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by putting on of my hands, For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power and of love, and of a sound mind. Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner; but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God.—II Timothy 1: 1-8.

EVERY MEMBER of this church has received the laying on of hands, or as Paul puts it in this writing to Timothy, "by the putting on of my hands"—that is in confirmation, so he might have the right to receive the Holy Spirit as an abiding comforter. Some, of course, have received the laying on of hands while they were small, being blessed as children. Many have received it in the ordinance of administration to the sick. And a few have received it as the means of conferring the authority of ordination to some order of the priesthood, as did Timothy.

I have been asked to discuss with you on this Sunday as a major premise the place of priesthood in the church of God. In his writing to the Hebrew Saints Paul calls our attention to the fact that no man takes upon himself this honor to represent God. God comes to us today in the same manner that was instituted in the days of Moses. As the Scripture says, "No man taketh this honor unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron."

Jesus once called attention to the fact that "many are called but few are chosen." He declared this in connection with the parable about the wedding. Some did not have on wedding garments. They were not asked in to the feast because they were not dressed for the occasion. This plainly indicates that there is a difference between a call of priesthood and the authority of priesthood.

In one of the outstanding revelations given to this church in the days of the Reorganization we are further told, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8. All of us have some gift, even though it may be latent. Perhaps we have not discovered the full scope of our talents and abilities; but all of us have a gift from God which we are called upon to exercise in the advancement of his cause among men. If we fail to keep the first and greatest commandment, which is to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength," perhaps we shall not be invited in to the wedding feast.

I am wondering if you realize the full intensity of this expression, "with all thy heart." The heart is a wonderful little instrument, beating about eighty times a minute, lifting about four ounces of blood every beat; and keeping this up for each of the twenty-four hours of the day, thus accomplishing the herculean task of pumping daily fourteen tons of blood. Worshiping God with all our hearts calls our attention to the continual, energetic, active life in the kingdom. He couldn't have used a better figure of speech. Thus you should "Love the Lord thy God, and . . . thy neighbor as thyself."

THE LATE COUNT Lecompte de NOUY in Human Destiny wrote, "Intuition disposes of a much greater field of action than does reason, and purely intuitive religious faith is a much more efficacious human lever than science or philosophy. Action follows conviction, not knowledge."

This points to one very important thing. It's one thing to know the gospel; it's another thing to do something about it.

When we first accepted the gospel of Christ many of us were so thrilled by the knowledge we had of the church that we felt sure we could tell about it so convincingly that all our relatives would be baptized at once. Then we would convert our friends and neighbors. But we soon learned that we lacked the experience which would transmit conviction and result in conversion. So we got discouraged and decided it would be best to leave the missionary work to the general ministry.

Jesus said the gospel is like a net that is cast out and gathers in all kinds of fish. This church has the task of taking the gospel into all the world, and "he that believeth and accepteth the gospel" has work to do. It's not just believing; it's not just getting the knowledge. It's one thing to know this church is the instrument of God in the salvation of mankind, but it's another thing to have a conviction about it that leads us to serve God with all our heart.

ONE THING that was emphasized a great many times during the last war was this, "In an emergency any intelligent quick action is better than delay in search for the ideal." Many times have I heard the excuses, "I haven't enough time to do this particular task." A woman is asked to teach a class in church school, and she answers, "I would if I knew enough." Another is asked to take a group of girls and she apologizes, "I'm just too busy," or, "I don't understand girls." So many things interfere with our using our gifts for God. Some of us might get cheated out of the wedding feast because of these excuses. "Any intelligent quick action is better than delay in search for the ideal." We will never be so well-prepared that we can enter in and do perfectly any job we are asked to do. If there is one thing we can learn from the history of the church and the Book of Mormon it is that God does not ask us to do things without first preparing a way and giving us strength to accomplish them. But we must enter into such tasks with intelligent, prompt response.

Brother Rushton is quoted as saying, "This church can move the hand that moves the world." The scope of this prediction is large, because ours is a small church. We are so weak in many localities that we become an insignificant force socially and in civic movements. But I think it is well for us to take stock in this statement by Brother Rushton, for if anything is clear in the Scripture it is that Christ is looking after the church and is interested in it. We read in the Word that Christ loved the church and gave his life for it. Why wouldn't he be interested in what takes place in Kalamazoo, or any other place?

The church, through our prayers and united devotions, can move the hand that moves the world, because the hand that moves the world is with us. God is more concerned than are we in the progress and success of the church.

Isaiah once penned these lines, "A voice came saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I, send men. And he said, Go and tell the people." That voice still speaks, and men who show the quality of loving their fellow men have one strong qualification for priesthood. If they have the conviction that God is at work in the world and that he intends to save mankind through the gospel, then priesthood is strongly supported.

I WAS ASKED one time by a friend of mine here in Independence who didn't understand much about the church, "Don't most of your men act as ministers in the church?" I said, "No; we have quite a large percentage, however, of priesthood." And he was troubled about the word "priesthood." It is not used commonly except in the Catholic Church, and sometimes in the Lutheran and the Episcopal Churches. Many people have forgotten this word that was prominent in the Old Testament, and even Peter talks about "a royal priesthood." It is a good word meaning "the agency which God has called into being for man's salvation."

Now I'd like to read from Section 83, which is called the section on priesthood. It has considerable significance in the understanding of God's plan in administering the gospel.

The Lord confirmed a priesthood also upon Aaron and his seed throughout all their generations, which priesthood also continueth and abideth forever, with the priesthood which is after the holiest order of God, and this great priesthood (the Melchisedec) administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God. Therefore, in the ordinances thereof the power of godliness is manifest; and without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh; for without this, no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live.

Priesthood is an essential means of grace. In the days of the children of Israel, those of the tribe of Levi were set apart to minister in the priesthood. That was the only thing they had to do—to minister in the priesthood. About one out of every six members over eighteen years old holds priesthood in this church.

Brother Harley Morris points out that the genius of the Restoration Movement is manifest in the fact that God established various orders of the priesthood for specialized work in the kingdom. The deacon has his field in economic affairs; the teacher, in social relations; the priest, in family relations; the elder, in pastoral care; the seventy, in missionary endeavor; the bishops, in temporalities and judicial work; the evangelist, in counseling; the high priest, in administrative work; the apostle, in general supervision. There is genius in the plan of God because no man can be an authority in all fields. Therefore, in the gospel as restored, men have been asked to study and to administer in certain specific areas of human need.

In Doctrine and Covenants 83:6 are some very serious statements concerning the priesthood.

And also all they who receive this priesthood receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth my Father, and he that receiveth my Father receiveth my Father's kingdom. Therefore, all that my Father hath shall be given unto him; and this is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood. Therefore, all those who receive the priesthood receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he cannot break, neither can it be moved; but whoso breaketh this covenant, after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come.

I point out how important and how serious it is to take the covenant of priesthood. It is serious not just to those who make the covenant, but to the church, because no man can save himself. We can't do it even after we get into the church. The ordinances of the kingdom of God are not self-administering. Only through the power of priesthood is salvation possible in and out of the church, and after having made the covenant with God that we will be his minister, to forsake and turn away from it puts us in a very serious position.

THE REAL AUTHORITY of the priesthood is not legal; it's not what happens to me by the putting on of the elder's hands which gives me legal right to serve in certain capacities. The effectual authority is spiritual, and that is manifest in the gifts of God which I am able to exercise. It is easy to love those who love us, but when they talk against us or our loved ones, it's hard to take. It's much easier to be nice to and love somebody who says good things about us and shows some appreciation of the things we hold dear.

I saw an autograph on a picture one day which read, "I love you because you love the things that I love." Many of us are like that, but to have the gift of loving other people in spite of their waywardness—in spite of the things they do to us—is one of the richest gifts that God can give. He gave it rather intensively to mothers, and he has given it extensively to some of the ministry that I know. We certainly need to pray for this gift and not turn away when people need our ministry the most.

And then there is the gift of wisdom—to know what to say and when to say it, to have awareness of the needs of people. It is hard to think of a better gift than to know when to say the right word, and then have the willingness and the skill to enter in and minister. Without these gifts we have no priesthood authority, and without spiritual authority the legal authority attached to priesthood has little value.

I remember reading of a preacher's boy who wondered about his father's practice of coming to the pulpit each Sunday and assuming the posture of prayer (I have seen some of these ministers come in; usually they have nobody to help them). This lad asked, "Dad, why is it whenever you come to the pulpit you always bow your head on your hand?" The father answered, "Son, I'm asking God to give me a good sermon." Then, in his innocence, the boy said, "Well, why doesn't he do it then?"

OPINIONS VARY on the quality of a sermon. I can tell that when I stand at the door and greet the people as they leave. The same sermon that's good to some just doesn't mean much to others. Why is that? It's because we do not all sense the same needs, or else the need that we think we have is not ministered to. I am not offended when people pass me by and show that they were not particularly impressed, but I do regret that I couldn't do more to reach them. And I rejoice that some have found a response in their heart to the spoken word. I would to God that we were able to reach those who need it in every congregation—and I'll let God be the judge. I do not know my listener's needs, and surely I do need to ask God to give me a good sermon if I am going to minister to those needs, because I don't know what they are, except as they are common to mankind.

Theodore Roosevelt once said that his church creed was contained in nine pungent paragraphs. I quote a few:

Yes, I know all the excuses. I know that one can worship the Creator in a grove of trees or by a running brook, or in a man's own house, just as well as in a church. But I also know as a matter of cold fact the average man does not thus worship.

He may not hear a good sermon at church. He will hear a sermon by a good man, who with his good wife is engaged all the week in making hard lives a little easier.

He will listen to and take part in reading some beautiful passages from the Bible, and if he is not familiar with the Bible he has suffered a loss.

He will take part in singing the good hymns. He will speak and nod or speak to good kind neighbors; he will come away feeling a little bit more charitable toward all the world, even toward those excessively foolish young men who regard church-going as a soft performance.

It is good for us to think of that a bit. Why do we come to church? Can we go away feeling that our time has been wasted if we sense the truthfulness of these observations? All of us have our ideas about what a successful sermon is. I know I do. I am far too critical. Perhaps the thing I need to study more about is not just what is going to happen in church this day to entertain me, but why I come to church. The first thing required to satisfy our souls is a consciousness of our own needs. We all have great needs. Some of us haven't got to the business yet of examining ourselves to find where we most need spiritual help.

MEN OF THE PRIESTHOOD have covenanted to serve God as ministers, and they need to stir up the gift that is in them by the laying on of the elder's hands. They need to preach better sermons, there's no doubt about it; but likewise the lay members need to stir up the gift that is in them. If they enter in with all their hearts to serve God, they will find wherein they lack. Then it will be easier for the minister behind the sacred desk to say something that will fit their needs.

I am thinking of a young priest I knew when I was a young man in Religio work. This man had a brilliant start in the church. At this time he was president of our Religio, had a wonderful personality, and held a good job. He was then secretary to the president of a large corporation. He developed rapidly in spiritual growth, and he had the

Helpful Advice for Pastors

By Calvin C. Sears

THE NEED FOR PASTORS

THERE IS A GREAT NEED for consecrated men to serve as pastors. From the ranks of the young men now getting started in the ministry must come the pastors of tomorrow. They need help in preparing for pastoral work. Some of them will be able to receive their training as they work under the supervision of experienced men. But many who cannot obtain such training will be called upon to serve. Their need of training is as great as that of the others, and someone should give them words of help. As one of the older men who long has served as a pastor, I have been asked to write some of the ideas I have found by experience to be of value in dealing with people and in pastoral work.

THE PASTOR'S IDEAL

The ideal pastor would be a man like Christ. None of us come near to being that good. We are all human and imperfect. Most congregations would have their pastors strong, both spiritually and physically; however, there are examples of weak men who, under the transforming power of Christ in their lives, have become channels of strength and have brought blessings to many.

We tend to become like the people we admire, so it is well for us to have in mind and hold as a standard a definite pattern of the pastor we would like to become. There are certain essential qualities a pastor must have in order to do his best work.

HE MUST BE a man of steadfast faith who loves people. He should have a large amount of charity so that he can love the sinner while hating and combating the sin. He must be a man of truth, honesty, and integrity. He must be dependable at all times and under all circumstances. He must be careful in speech, and his conduct should be above reproach. He must love peace, and work with wisdom and patience to establish it. He must be a spiritual leader, thoroughly familiar with the word of God contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. He must let his light shine before men as one who has walked and talked with God. He must be able to set a high standard and show how to live up to it, keeping in mind that those who have uplifting experiences are held to a stricter account for their way of living.

There will be some members who do not read the Scriptures, but they will read him as his life reveals his testimony to the gospel. There will be those whose hearts are burdened who will look to him for comforting words. There will be those who cannot see their way and will come to him for counsel and guidance. Only one who has traveled the road and knows it well can be a guide to others.

PERSONAL IMPROVEMENT

The lessons of life are learned slowly and with difficulty. Our Savior paid our ransom in full by his body which was broken for us. We in turn to be useful have to acquire patience, kindly consideration, tactfulness, discretion, wisdom, and discernment by the painful process of breaking in.

We have bad habits and wrong attitudes to be broken. We must cast out of our lives whatever hinders our spiritual growth and discipline ourselves in order to develop. The enemy of souls seems to double his efforts when he sees us shaking loose our fetters. We have to be constant in prayer and persistently repentant, making full surrender to Christ so that his strength may supplement our own in order to overcome the tempter's power.

HUMILITY IN LEADERSHIP

The essence of true leadership is humility, and it takes true leadership to be a good pastor. If the branch is small, the leader must be big enough to do little things, as there will be many labors of love for which the return will seem meager. It takes time for a rosebud to open into a perfect rose. Matters cannot be hastened by squeezing the rosebud. The pastor has the task of trying to touch human hearts. He can plant the seed of the gospel, but he must have patience in waiting for results. God must act to open a human heart.

STUDY BOOKS AND PEOPLE

The pastor will read and study good books, but he will also study people by watching them in everyday life. Close observation will reveal signs that tell him a lot about their needs. He will find that no two people are alike. The gospel net draws in all kinds, and they are the product of every influence and experience they have encountered in life.

As he studies people he will find that the outward appearance may be misleading. Let him look beneath the beauty of soul that may be there. A rough exterior often conceals a kind heart. If he can love the people and be interested in them, dealing kindly with them, love and kindness will come back to him. If he can adjust himself to their ways and apply common sense to situations he will be able to overlook a good many things. Some of these people will have hungry hearts. They need to be lifted so they can hear God's voice.

UNDERSTANDING OTHER PEOPLE'S VIEWPOINTS

It is important for the pastor to be able to put himself in the other fellow's place and try to see his viewpoint. In the branch there are sure to be many types of members. The impulsive ones will want action right away. The cautious ones will want to think things through first. The young will like to see changes, while the old will be upset by them. Then there seems to be at least one in every branch ready to take offense at something and "go up the Miff Tree." The conflicting ideas have to be blended into a project that the majority can approve. It is well for the pastor to compromise where no damage will result and no principle is at stake.

Getting the other fellow's viewpoint will help to prevent some of the difficulties from starting. There is so much needless damage caused by careless speech. The minister must have kindness in his heart and good will for others. Priesthood visits made in the spirit of the Master will help the members to keep their minds on the right things. The difficulties should be dealt with in that same spirit, with God helping to open the way for an adjustment.

THE SACREDNESS OF PERSONALITY

Each member should be regarded as a sacred personality. The pastor should help each one to "take time to be holy" and to treasure up faith in his heart. The times have come when nothing but God's power could sustain people in the hour of trial and affliction. One cannot starve himself spiritually and be strong in the Lord.

People do not know all the same facts at the same time; if they did their judgment would still differ. The pastor should admit that all have a right to their opinion. He should have his own convictions and be ready to talk intelligently and to the point if called upon, but he should not force his views on anyone. He should have a good reason for all of his actions.

PROBLEMS IN PUBLIC RELATIONS

Everyone who deals with numbers of people has to survive the give and take of getting along with groups. It is a part of the democratic way of life, but it requires stamina. Everyone in a position of trust is sure to feel the lash. In an orchard, sticks and stones under a tree witness that the tree has born fruit. A fruitful, active life will incite opposition and criticisms. A pastor can expect to take his share of the raps as a natural part of his experience. The verbal jolts and tricky maneuvers will be irritating. But the test of a man's greatness is how he reacts to petty things.

CONFIDENCE

The pastor should enter into activities with others of the community and obtain a good knowledge of affairs by conversing with a wide variety of people. He should invite confidence and keep sacred what is told to him in confidence. He must not use examples or illustrations from experiences related to him. Confidence once shattered is not easily restored.

RESPONSIVENESS TO NEEDS

The gospel does not change, but the needs of people do. The pastor must seek the Lord in humility and diligence that his mind may be quickened to see these needs. If he can draw fresh from the well of the Scriptures and talk to the burdened heart in language that even children can understand, the older people will surely get the message.

What Does Evolution Teach Today?*

By John A. Widtsoe

ALL LIVING THINGS, plants and animals, are subject to change. Every observer of nature, certainly all plant and animal breeders, know this to be true. It is an unchanging fact of nature. Living things are not static. This is the law of evolution.

In the meaning of this law, Latter Day Saints are the foremost evolutionists in the world. They believe that the immortal spirit of man may eternally approach the likeness of God himself.

The theory or theories of evolution are man's explanations of the multitude of changes observed in nature. Such theories may or may not be correct. They are always subject to changes as new facts are discovered.

Until recently one of the theories of evolution based largely upon the work of the great scientist, Charles Darwin, was that man was only a product of changes in organic life, throughout long periods of time. So vigorous was the battle over the proof of this theory, that in the minds of men the law of evolution, a fact of nature, and the theory, man's explanation of the fact, became as one. An evolutionist in those days was a person who held that man descended from the lower animals.

The battle over the evolutionary origin of man became so unseemly that each side looked upon the intelligence of the other with distrust. After many years of swaying opinions, more temperate views now prevail in this field of science. Leading scientists, those of unquestioned authority, have expressed their views upon the matter today.¹ These appear to be quite different from the views of yesterday. Quotations might be made from other numerous students, but the following from distinguished workers well-known in the scientific fraternity, will have to suffice.

"As far as science has discovered there always was man, some not so developed, but still human beings in all their functions, much as we are today. . . . Man came out of a blue sky as far as we have been able to delve back."

2. Vernon Kellogg, eminent biologist, trustee, Rockefeller Foundation, and other philanthropic scientific and educational organizations³:

"The fair truth is that the Darwinism selection theories, considered with regard to their claimed capacity to be an independently mechanical explanation of descent, stand today seriously discredited in the biological world."

3. Professor L. T. More, Dean of the Graduate School of the University of Cincinnati⁴:

"Unfortunately for Darwin's future reputation every one of his arguments is contradicted by the facts."

4. Dr. D. H. Scott, eminent British botanist⁵:

"A new generation has grown up which knows not Darwin. Is even then evolution not a scientifically ascertained fact? No! We must hold it as an act of faith because there is no alternative."

5. Dr. Henry Fairfield Osborn, foremost champion of evolution in America⁶:

"If living today, Darwin would be the first to modify his theory. Darwin was brave but wrong."

6. Douglas Dewar, zoologist, Indian Civil Service, Barrister, South Eastern Circuit⁷:

"The breeder, no matter on what animal or plant he experiments, after he has effected a number of minor changes in any given direction, is suddenly brought to a standstill. In a comparatively short time he reaches a stage at which he cannot accomplish more, no matter how much he tries. . . . This fact is fatal to the evolution theory."

7. Dr. David Starr Jordan, first President of Stanford University, educator, author, and naturalist⁸:

"None of the created 'new species' of plant or animal I know of would last five years in the open; nor is there the slightest evidence that any 'new species' of field or forest or ocean ever originated from mutation, discontinuous variation or hybridization."

8. Sir Ambrose Fleming, internationally famous physicist, President of the Philosophical Society of Great Britain⁹:

"Note certain qualities in the human species, not the smallest trace of which appears in the animal species. Thus, no animal has ever made any weapon or tool to help its bodily endowments. It fights with teeth and claws, horns, tusks, or hoofs. But it makes no military weapon of any kind. Nor has any animal made a tool—spade, rake, knife, hatchet, axe, or saw. No animal makes itself any artificial dress, hat, coat, shoes, or ornament to improve its appearance; nor does it dress or arrange the hair on its head. But all of the very earliest humans do these things. No animal had discovered how to produce fire or even to maintain it. . . . The animal mind or intellect is static or limited. It never progresses beyond a certain point. On the other hand, the human mind is extremely progressive, self-educative, and assimilative. Uncultured races of men brought into contact with more advanced races quickly adopt their achievements, customs, modes of thought, and habits. . . . Animals have not developed the powers of speech or rational thought.”

9. T. H. Morgan, zoologist, educator, and a member of the National Academy of Sciences, and numerous other organizations¹⁰:

“It seems to me that the idea that ancestral stages have been pushed back into the embryo, and that the embryo recapitulates in part these ancestral adult stages, is, in principle, false.”

10. Dr. Karl Vogt, of Geneva, German zoologist, associated with Agassiz in preparation of his work on fishes¹¹:

“This law which I long held as well-founded, is absolutely and radically false.”

11. Professor Adam Sedgwick, eminent embryologist of England¹²:

“After fifty years of research and close examination of the facts of embryology, the recapitulation theory is still without satisfactory proof.”

12. Sir Arthur Keith, President, Royal Anthropological Institute¹³:

“Now that the appearance of the human embryo at all stages is known, the general feeling is one of disappointment; the human embryo at no stage is anthropoid in appearance.”

13. Herbert Spencer, philosopher¹⁴:

“The facts of paleontology can never suffice either to prove or disprove the development hypothesis.”

14. Professor L. T. More, already cited, quotes Charles Darwin¹⁵:

“The belief in natural selection must at present be grounded entirely on general considerations. When we descend to details, we can prove that no species has changed: nor can we prove that supposed changes are beneficial, which is the groundwork of the theory.”

In his *Origin of Species*¹⁵, Darwin wrote:

“Geology assuredly does not reveal any such finely graduated organic chain; and this, perhaps, is the most obvious and serious objection which can be urged against the theory of natural selection.”

15. William Bateson, English zoologist¹⁶:

“So we went on talking about evolution. That is barely forty years ago; today we feel silence to be the safer course. . . . Discussion of evolution came to an end because it was obvious that no progress was being made. . . .”

16. Dr. J. A. Thompson, scientist, educator, and author¹⁷:

“We are more keenly aware than in Darwin’s day of our ignorance as to the origin and affiliation of the greater classes. . . .”

Clearly the theory of evolution has added nothing to our understanding of the beginning of things. The ancient view that God is the Creator of all things is still the best, because it is true.

Every Day a Feast Day

A YOUNG Latter Day Saint girl, spent a week’s vacation with a friend. The two girls had a wonderful time, and later I overheard the mother in this home say to the mother of the girl who had been the guest, “We were so happy your daughter came. It was a joy to have her with us.”

Every time I see that young lady I can understand why she would be a joy to any home. She has been taught kindness, unselfishness, thoughtfulness for others, and all the qualities which go to make up a gracious personality. Knowing her parents, I am assured that these graces have been taught by example as well as precept. Never have I heard either of them make an unkind remark about anyone or speak crudely in any way. They are trying to live Christlike lives, realizing the important place that Zion homes have in the establishment of God’s kingdom. So much depends upon daily living.

At the Lamoni Reunion this summer the Lord again admonished us Saints to study his Word. Why does he repeatedly give us this counsel? It is true that he would have us an informed people, for our capacity for sharing with others would then be increased; but beyond the information gleaned, is he not more concerned with what will happen to our lives as we read?

We do not live upon the physical food taken into our bodies only on feast days, such as Thanksgiving. We need a daily revival. So it is with our spirits. We cannot live healthy, productive lives when our only spiritual sustenance comes at feast days, such as reunions and conferences, or even on Sundays. We must learn to feed ourselves through the week.

By Ruby Strand

Early morning is a good time to take spiritual nourishment. There are days when it seems almost impossible to do this, but even fifteen minutes earlier rising will provide the means by which we can secure this “daily bread.” And how much more purposeful the day becomes when we have kept this appointment with God. With a prayer that our minds might be enlightened, our intellects quickened, and our hearts touched by the Holy Spirit, we feel renewed and reinvigorated. It is not to exploit our learning that we do this but rather that God’s will may be done more fully in our lives as we live more graciously, thus bringing others to Christ.

When Jesus said, “I am the way, the truth, and the life,” and “I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly,” he must have meant the daily living which comes about as a result of regular nourishment which helps us to learn what God would have us be. Then every day will become a feast day; we shall be a joy to those with whom we associate; and Zion will become a reality.

Literary Labors

DURING the winter of 1868 and 1869, I devoted considerable time in writing for the Herald, partly for reason that rainy weather interfered with ministerial labor, but more especially because I was prompted thereto by the Holy Spirit.

More Labor and Travel

At Sacramento, Stockton, Washington, San Bernardino, and other points, the Lord confirmed his work with the signs following, bestowing upon the faithful Saints the gifts of healing, prophecy, tongues and interpretations, filling their hearts with assurance and holy joy. . . .

Idaho, 1869, and Utah

About the twenty-fifth day of November I reached Malad City, Idaho, where I met Brethren Alexander H. and David H. Smith. . . . From Malad I went to Salt Lake City. . . . Perhaps no winter was ever seen in Utah when the very foundation of Brighamism was so laid bare and broken up as that of 1869 and 1870. . . . On parting with the Saints prior to starting home to Illinois, in our last service in Independence Hall, I stated by constraint of the Spirit to the packed assembly present that the time was near at hand when the fear and the dread that had been upon the people would be taken from them and be put upon their oppressing leaders; also that civil and religious liberty would yet come to Utah and abound throughout all her borders.

During these times and for two years after, we sent many carloads of people away to the East, procuring cheap fares for them. Others, profiting by our teachings, broke away from Brighamism and fled to Idaho, Montana, Nevada, California, Oregon, and other localities east and west, many of whom have since united with the Reorganized Church.

[Note on travel: The first transcontinental railroad was completed when the Union Pacific joined the Central Pacific at Promontory, Utah, on May 10, 1869. Regular train schedules were operating five months later, and the bridge at Omaha was completed in 1872.—Editors.]

Cyclorama, 1870—1871

Eastern Nebraska . . . Utah and Idaho . . . January 31, 1871—Battle Mountain and Austin, Nevada. Carson, Nevada, on February 24. . . . March 30, Sacramento. . . . San Bernardino in May . . . August 8 in Salt Lake City, then east . . . Council Bluffs. . . . Fall and winter in northern and central Illinois. . . . December 21, Deloit and Denison in western Iowa.

General Conference, April 6, 1872, in St. Louis, Missouri.

Church Publications

On the seventeenth day of June, on invitation, I met with the Board of Publication at Plano. On that date, pursuant to previous arrangement, the board took possession of the Herald Office and the property pertaining thereto and assumed control of the publishing interests of the church.

The Site of Lamoni—1873

The twenty-third day of December found me at Brother William Hopkins', two miles southeast of where Lamoni is now located. The Order of Enoch had located a fine body of land in this region and was actively engaged in improving it. I was highly pleased with the general outlook of affairs and was confident that the Lord would here plant a work from whence would go forth the gospel of Christ to all peoples abroad. . . .

I preached in and around Pleasanton and then went to St. Joseph, Missouri, and on January 16, 1873, Lee's Summit, near Independence, Missouri. On the twenty-seventh, I proceeded to organize the Lee's Summit Branch. . . . Then I went to Bevier. . . . Bryant and Canton, Illinois. My efforts there were blessed of God. . . .

Called to the Presidency

The annual conference of 1873 met at Plano on April 6, and on the seventh President Joseph Smith placed in my hands a revelation to present to the Quorum of Twelve, part of which was given March 1, and the remainder on April 6, 1873. (See Doctrine and Covenants 117.) By this I was called to be one of the counselors in the First Presidency of the church. Not long prior to this, I had evidence given me of the Lord that I would be called to this position in the church.

Having now become associated with the First Presidency, it devolved upon me to assist President Joseph Smith in arranging and appointing the several missions of the Quorum of Twelve, which we did on the twelfth, suggesting also the missions of some of the seventy. On Sunday, the thirteenth, the congregations were very large, the church being packed to overflowing. . . .

"Home Is Where the Heart Is"

—Author Unknown

MYRA HAMILTON had learned early in life to lean upon her Heavenly Father. When her tiny grandson, Dale Armstrong, was laid in her arms to be reared as her very own, she went to Him in great humility and asked for guidance. She welcomed the little one as a precious gift, but she was not young or overly strong.

The heart-broken father had no other choice than to place the responsibility of his child's care on his young wife's mother. Not long after that he went into the Army and vanished into that vast unknown called "missing in action."

It was not an easy task to be both father and mother to a lively, growing boy, but it was an interesting one, and it had kept her from the usual let-down of old age. From the time he was eight, Dale was constantly drawing pictures of airplanes and watching every one that flew overhead within the scope of his keen blue eyes. Myra bought models for him to build; and as he grew older and more experienced, he made beautiful gas models that took many hours to build but ten minutes to crack up. When he was sixteen he was "ditching" school on field days and going to an airport where his intense interest appealed to a kind-hearted instructor, who would take him up once in awhile on quiet days and who finally taught him to use the controls. From then on it was hard to keep his feet on the ground, and Myra gave her consent to regular flying lessons.

BEFORE HE WAS EIGHTEEN Dale was insisting that he leave school and join the Army. Myra had pulled him through two severe Navy spasms with no after effects, but he could put up a lot of arguments for the Army that made sense, and she found herself incapable of meeting them. She had realized her limitations many times before and knew that Dale needed the influence of a good, mature man, wise in the ways of teenage boys.

He and three of his cronies had rattled into the driveway after school one Friday afternoon in a battered old Ford. He ran into the house to announce that he and the boys were joining the Army the next day and would go through training together. Myra braced herself for a verbal combat as usual, but a still small voice whispered, "Wait, think it over. Ask God to help you decide," and she said quietly, "I can't give you my answer now, but I will tell you in the morning." This was so different from the flat "No" he had received before that Dale took heart and told the boys that he would call them later.

That night in the quiet of her own room Myra knelt in prayer and humbly acknowledged her lack of good judgment and her dependence on God. She reminded him that since he had taken the real father and mother of the boy unto himself she stood alone and must have help before giving her answer.

When she awoke the next morning, her mind seemed to be a perfect blank. Then there came to her mental vision, like a moving picture, the past year. She saw Dale's school handicapped by a lack of supplies and equipment, a discouraged photography teacher who no longer made things interesting to his pupils. She saw Dale, and the boys he chummed with, congregating on street corners, making a nuisance of themselves to the passers-by. They weren't bad boys, but so eager for adventure they were apt to be the innocent bystanders who would be accused of the crime while the real criminal got away—as the newspapers often tell the story. She saw Dale's lack of effort at school and at home. There were such wonderful possibilities and so much of good in this lad of hers that her heart yearned over him, and she again knelt in prayer, asking God to make her sure and that He would give her peace of mind if Dale were to go. Then she waited silently there on her knees for some evidence that her prayer had been heard. There was no still, small voice that spoke to her mind. Instead, there came over her whole being the sweet, comforting peace of the Spirit of God lifting her soul almost to the heights of ecstasy, and her tears were tears of joy. She arose from her knees satisfied and went about her tasks knowing that all would be well.

Soon after Dale was inducted into the Army he was sent to a camp on the east coast. For awhile he wrote often, but gradually the time lengthened between letters until Myra seldom heard from him. She accepted more church activities and took more interest in her neighbors, telling herself that he was too young to feel the pull of home ties while the excitement of new places and new friends lasted, but that everything would be all right after he came home.

ONE AFTERNOON as she sat on her front porch enjoying the sunshine and the fragrance of the roses on the near-by trellis, she had a visitor. Cliff Osgood, who lived three blocks away and had lost his wife the year before, came up the steps and sat down beside her. He mentioned the unusual weather several times and seemed to have trouble with his voice before he made known the reason for his unexpected call. "You see, Myra, there's no sense in your staying here all by yourself. You're wasting your time waiting for that grandson to come home and live with you. Once the Army gets them, they're never the same . . . it gives 'em a roving habit. You might as well sell this place and come to live with me."

For a moment Myra failed to grasp his meaning, but when it came clear to her mind she asked in amazement, "Cliff Osgood, are you asking me to sell my home and marry you?"

"Well, that's the general idea," he answered. "I've got a real nice home and a substantial income. You've been in my house and with my wife often enough to know how I like things done. I think we could get along real well."

Though she seldom showed it, Myra had a bit of temper, and her flushed face should have warned him. "The conceit of him," she thought, and then in her sweetest tones she said, "Why, Cliff, that's most generous of you. Of course, I wouldn't want anything my way. Everything would be just for your comfort as it was when Susan was there. But how about you selling your house? I have things quite comfortable here, and besides it's nearer the church, and we needn't miss a meeting. With you here to go with me we could be there every time the doors opened."

Myra almost laughed when he hurriedly got up from his chair and almost shouted at her, "I'll never sell my place, and I want everything left just as it was when Sukey was there. As for your church, I might as well be honest and tell you that I didn't go to church with Sukey, and I wouldn't go with you. I've got a big garden spot and a lot of fine fruit trees, and we could find plenty to do without going to church. Now that you're through raising children, you'll need something more to take up your time. Idleness is the root of all evil."

"You may have something in that last statement," said Myra, "for I know you're idling your time talking to me. I wouldn't brag if I were you, about not going to church with Susan. It made her very unhappy. I think she loved her church home far more than she did the one you gave her. It brought her peace of mind and a patience you never appreciated. I love this home because it is filled with memories of Ed and the children, but it is doubly dear to me because my church is close by. I'm going to stay right here, and you can stay where you please." Then Myra went in the house and closed the door.

She watched through the window and saw him go. "Selfish, pigheaded old man," she muttered. Then she noticed the stoop in his shoulders that had not been there a year ago, and her heart softened as she remembered how much Susan had loved him. "He must be very lonely," she thought, "and he cherishes the things that were Susan's, although he refused to give her what she wanted most." As she turned from the window she faced the picture of her husband, whose eyes looked directly into hers. She often talked to his picture as though he were still with her, "I wish you wouldn't look right straight through me, Ed, every time I get riled up. Even though I can't help thinking it was righteous indignation you make me feel ashamed. You never were rude to anyone."

She went out on the porch again to think over what Cliff had said about Dale being changed and having a roving spirit. Perhaps he was right and she would not have the boy with her ever again. He had written such glowing descriptions of New York and the trips he had taken in army planes over the east coast and the midwestern states. He had never been east of the Rockies before.

As she stood looking down the street she saw a man running and then another one came; together they lifted someone from the sidewalk. It was Cliff Osgood. She went down the steps and called to one of the men. "Mr. Lewis, I know that man. Please bring him here." Then she went back into the house and called the doctor.

When the doctor came he said that no doubt Cliff had a dizzy spell and had struck his head when he fell. It could have been a slight heart attack. "I hope you won't mind his staying here for a little while, Mrs. Hamilton, as there is no one at home to care for him until I find someone. I think he should stay in bed for a few days. When he regains consciousness, let me know at this address. I have a serious case there and must hurry along." He gave Myra a paper with the number to call if there were any change in Cliff. The next door neighbor came in to stay with Myra and was getting dinner when Cliff opened his eyes. He looked around the room, confused at first by his surroundings. Then he said, "Myra Hamilton, what am I doing in your house? What happened to me?"

"Now, don't get excited, Cliff," said Myra. "It's not my fault, and the sidewalk didn't jump up and hit you. So far as I could see you just laid down on it and went to sleep."

"Sometimes you have a mighty sharp tongue, Myra," Cliff said slowly, "but you are a good woman at heart, and I appreciate your taking me in. The last thing I remember I was thinking of what you said." His words ended in a whisper, "I'm sorry that I made Sukey unhappy," then his eyes closed in a natural, restful sleep. Myra called the doctor, who said, "Let me know when he awakens and I will take him home. Mr. and Mrs. Harlow, a young married couple, will stay as long as Cliff needs them."

When Myra heard the name she chuckled and said, "I hope they convert the old rascal."

"What did you say?" asked the doctor, "I didn't understand."

"Oh, I say, they are a very fine couple," answered Myra. "They belong to my church."

THAT EVENING she wrote to Dale and told him that she had been urged to sell the place and live with her sister, and since he seemed to have lost interest in her and the home, that she might consider it. She received a prompt answer, and her fingers trembled as she opened it. So much depended on what he had to say. "Dear Gram," he wrote. "I'm sorry if I have irked you by not answering your letters. I don't want you to get any funny ideas about my not being interested in you or not loving you as much as I always have, and always will. This is a good camp, and my work is interesting. I get time off for sight-seeing and even hop army planes and make some fine trips on week ends, but with all this, I get awful homesick, and army life is easier to take if I don't get too many reminders from home. You asked me if I was making any plans for when I get out of the Army, but right now my future seems awfully uncertain, and I get confused thinking about it all. Perhaps a little more intelligent thinking and a lot of praying will help straighten things out. I've tried to get used to the idea of your selling the home and not coming back there. I don't want to interfere with your plans, but that old house is home to me, and that is where I want to come. I even want to come back and finish my high school."

Myra read no further but knelt in a prayer of thanksgiving. She had prayed for guidance, and this was her answer. Waiting for Dale and knowing that he was coming back to her made the whole world bright again.

He had not told her the exact date of his return, but as the time drew near she stayed very close to home. She pictured him as opening the door and shouting as he always had, "Hey, Gram!" But one morning when she went to answer the doorbell she found a tall, browned soldier standing there. He waited for a moment with a twinkle in his eyes, then gathered her close in his arms. Dale had come home.

The following Sunday he asked, "Gram, do you mind if I go see a girl and ask her to attend church with us? I've not answered her letters either, and she may turn me down. We'll pick you up on the way back."

"Of course I don't mind. Go right along," answered Myra with a smile. This was like old times when he used to bring his friends home with him.

THEY WERE A BIT LATE for church, but Myra was glad of it as she wanted the whole congregation to see her as she walked down the aisle with Dale and his friend, Kathleen Duncan. She knew she was going to love this girl the minute she saw her. The music by the choir, followed by an inspiring sermon on the Restoration, made a beautiful service, and they listened attentively.

As they were leaving at the close of the service Myra stopped suddenly, for standing directly in front of her was Cliff Osgood with outstretched hand. She gladly gave him her hand in greeting and said, "I'm so happy to see you here, Cliff." Then came the big surprise as he turned to the kind, motherly looking woman who stood beside him. He said, "This is my wife. She's Sukey's cousin. She's been living with her brother, but I finally persuaded her to come

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

Does prayer influence God or change his mind? How can I know if he hears my prayer?
Kansas A. D. T.

Answer:

True prayer must influence our Heavenly Father in his attitude and action toward us, otherwise prayer would be futile. Prayer will not change God's will in moving him to do something contrary to his purpose, but it does move him to do what he desires to do, although he may withhold a blessing because we ourselves are not prepared to receive it.

The Lord has many blessings in reserve awaiting our preparation and development to a point where they can be safely put into our hands. When we ask for such, his first task in answering is to work with us and lead us along until we are capable of receiving the blessing sought, which means delay. No doubt, as with Daniel, the Lord at the time the prayer is offered often decrees the answer, but for various reasons it is delayed, hence the counsel in such matters "waiting patiently on the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 1.

It is not always that we do or can know that our prayers are heard. The element of faith enters in here. If we have offered a proper prayer, we may trust to the promises made in his word that the Lord hears and will answer. In some instances we are given to know in prayer that the Lord is hearing and that our petition will be answered, which is itself a valuable blessing, especially when the answer is long years in reaching us. When we recognize these as answering blessings, we know that our prayers have been heard.

Question:

If a person who is a member of another church has paid his tithing faithfully on what he has to that church, would he be required to retithe all possessions on becoming a member of the Reorganized Church?
Missouri Mrs. M. F. C.

Answer:

The normal procedure for new members is to file a First Tithing Statement establishing the values on their assets at what they consider are fair and then paying one tenth of their net worth as tithing as they are able to do so. Credit cannot be given for tithing paid to other churches any more than people can be accepted as members in this church on the baptism or confirmation of the Baptist Church. The person who is completely converted to the church and joins it with faith in its teaching and program will do his best to live up to the financial law as well as the other requirements of the church. If he has paid some tithing previously to another church and does not feel he can now pay one tenth of his net worth he should do the best he can after giving this matter earnest and prayerful consideration.

Question:

Did Joseph Smith write and endorse the Book of Abraham?
Oregon N. W.

Answer:

The "Book of Abraham" is what Joseph Smith said of it, "a translation of some ancient records, that have fallen into our hands from the catacombs of Egypt, purporting to be the writings of Abraham. . . ." Joseph Smith was only the translator of this Egyptian manuscript. He did not claim it as an original work of which he was the author. The church has never taken any action to endorse it. We have no record that Joseph Smith, Jr., ever endorsed its contents or teachings. He merely translated it on the basis of his own learning and study. He referred to it as a "purported" record. No claim was ever made to include it in the Scriptures of the church during his lifetime. The manuscript was purchased, by some of the Saints, from a traveling showman with some Egyptian mummies. Question:

What is the significance and intent (according to the Scriptures) of the Lord's Supper?
Kansas A. D. T.

Answer:

The primary intent and purpose of the Lord's Supper are to preserve the unity and integrity of the church through the retaining of the Spirit of Christ in the soul of every member. Union is the basic word—union with each other, union of each individual soul, and union of the whole body of the church with Christ. The keynote in the prayers of blessing upon the bread and wine is "that they may always have his Spirit to be with them." Under that Spirit there is union and there will be unity. When that Spirit is lost the integrity of the church soon breaks and apostasy follows.

The law provides that any invasion of evil or bitterness which tends to division between or among members shall be adjusted before partaking of the emblems. "First be reconciled," is the divine rule; otherwise partaking becomes a mockery and condemnation before God. At the table where this sacrament was initiated the Lord taught his disciples that love is the ruling passion. "Love one another, as I have loved you." Only by this, he declares, can we prove our discipleship.

The highest attainment possible for the church is to be one with Christ, not only in the enjoyment of pleasant blessings, but in exacting devotion, sacrifice, and deep yearning for the welfare and salvation of others. The foundations of this sacrament are laid deep in the love of Christ for man. Should not man ponder well to lay his foundations deep in this same love that he might attain oneness with him?

ability to preach wonderful sermons which went right to the heart of his listeners. Those who heard him felt that God was talking to them through him.

But he also began to climb the ladder in business affairs. Overtime and important assignments caused him to miss church frequently and to take on habits of men of the world with whom he was working. Men of the priesthood went to his home and asked, "Why don't you come to church?"

"Well," he said, "I'll tell you frankly, when I go over there to church I am not fed. I listen to men who don't know as much about the subject as I do. What's the use of going?"

This man's life was blighted when he was young and fully capable of giving a wonderful contribution to God and man; the last few years of his life were not productive. He forsook the covenant he made in priesthood and altogether turned away from it; now he is in God's hands. This is a serious matter. The world is depending upon the work of a consecrated priesthood—men who have made covenants with God to serve "henceforth and forever."

I met a young lady in Des Moines seven years ago. She said, "Do you remember the night that you came to the hospital in Albia and administered to me?"

I said, "Yes, I can remember that."

"You know, I thought I was a goner that night. I didn't expect to pull through. I didn't know anything about the power of God then, but I have since learned that God is at work in the world."

Now let's not be mistaken. A healing is not the greatest blessing that can come to an individual. This woman just increased her responsibility that night to live up to the covenant she made in baptism. Thus favored, if she is unfaithful, it will be worse for her than if she had not received that blessing. She would be better off to have gone on to her reward then. I'm not saying that this sister is not still serving faithfully in the church. I knew she was having some problems, but God often blesses people because of their need, not because of their worthiness.

I THINK YOU WILL ENJOY this little poem, "Doing My Job," by the famous Negro poet Paul Lawrence Dunbar.

The Lord had a job for me, but I had so much to do,
I said: "You get somebody else—or, wait till I get through."
I don't know how the Lord came out, but he seemed to get along—
But I felt kind o' sneaking like—knowed
I'd done God wrong—
One day I needed the Lord—needed him right away—
And he never answered me at all, but
I could hear him say—
Down in my accusin' heart—"Nigger,
Ah is got too much to do;
You get somebody else, or wait until I get through."

Now, when the Lord has a job for me,
I never tries to shirk,
I drops what I have on hand and does the good Lord's work;
And my affairs can run along, or wait till I get through,
'Cause nobody else can do the job that
God's marked out for you.

And I heartily advise you to stir up the gift that is in you by the laying on of hands.

Prediction

It is a gloomy moment in history. In our own country there is universal commercial prostration and panic; thousands are without employment, and without the prospect of it. In France the political caldron seethes with uncertainty; Russia hangs as usual, like a dark cloud upon the horizon of Europe; while all the influence of the British Empire is sorely tried in coping with disturbed relations in China.

ZION BUILDERS' SERMONS

BY ELBERT A. SMITH

Even though these sermons were preached a number of years ago, they still have a freshness and vitality of Brother Elbert's very best speaking and writing years. He takes up a number of the questions that concern young people in relationship to their life and the church, and deals with them effectively especially in relation to the decisions the young people must make. Fully revised and brought up to date.

HERALD HOUSE

Timidity In Children

By Blanche Neal Shipley

TIMIDITY OR SHYNESS in little children can be a serious thing. A wise parent will try to handle it with love and careful consideration, lest tiny personalities become warped.

When our girls were preschool age they had few chances to play with other children or to be with adults other than those of their immediate families. At that time they were the only Shipley grandchildren, and their cousins on my side of the house were few and far away. As a result, family dinners were the only occasions when the girls met their other cousins, and they were so shy that they clung to my dress or silently gazed at people.

We took them to church school every Sunday from the time they were a few weeks old so they grew up with the church crowd and were not the least bit restrained (sometimes I wished they had been when they became too lively); but if they were placed into a new situation they were frightened to tears. Such a condition is quite normal for small children, but as they grow older and near school age it becomes increasingly important that something be done about it.

When Sharon Kay was four and one half and Madelyn was three the church at Isadora, which is about one-half mile away, held a vacation church school. We took advantage of the invitation to enroll the girls, although we were not members there. Each morning I hurried through my work and took them. They enjoyed every minute of it and, after a session or so, lost enough of their shyness to enter into the games. Everything was fine until the final session, which was a review of the week's work before the full house. Then both girls balked. They wouldn't budge an inch from me, not even to sing—and they knew the songs word for word. I could have been terribly embarrassed, but I wasn't, for to me their constant daily participation had been proof that they had conquered a part of their shyness.

THE NEXT YEAR when vacation church school time arrived Russell was a tiny baby, so I could not see my way clear to take the girls each day. But they wanted to enroll, so on the beginning day I curled their hair, dressed them in

WOMEN'S CHURCH-WIDE INSTITUTE

Mrs. B. had been praying that the way would be opened for her to attend the Women's Institute, October 8-12, at Independence, Missouri. She didn't expect the money to drop from heaven, but she did get what she expected—an idea.

Now she is canning fruit and vegetables from her own garden and orchard and selling them to friends who must buy all their canned goods.

She will be there. Will you?

little starched print dresses, and told them to sit on the front doorstep until time to go.

In a few minutes Mr. Martin, the church school superintendent, stopped to pick them up. I explained to the girls who he was. They enjoyed playing with his little Marilyn but they were afraid to go with him. Sharon shook nervously and her voice quivered as she said, "Oh, Mama, I don't want to go right now." Big tears showed in Madelyn's eyes, and she clutched Sharon's hand tightly.

"Well, that's all right," Mr. Martin assured them, for he could see they were frightened. "Maybe they'll want to come after a while, so you let us know."

And then, just like an act of Providence, my husband's sisters drove up, announcing that they had come after the girls. What happy, relieved girls! All that week Aunt Leota came for them and delivered them safely to their class, and they were willing to stay there with the teachers and other children.

THEN SCHOOLTIME rolled around. Sharon was thrilled to talk about it. We made deliberate efforts to get her acquainted with the teacher ahead of time. She knew the children, having associated with them at church school. Sharon asked many questions about it, and I explained in detail how the bell was used, what the teacher would probably do the first morning of school, opening exercises, seating procedures, wash drills, lunches, games, and everything I could think of. She loved it all and had me tell it over and over. Then she asked, "Do the mothers take the children, or do they go alone?"

"Oh, they usually take them the first day," I answered, "but they don't stay long." She went over that thoroughly in her mind, and the next day when Madelyn suggested I go with Sharon and stay, she spoke up quickly, "No, mothers don't go to school."

The first day of school dawned bright and clear, and Sharon was happy as a lark getting ready to go. My husband took her, for Russell needed me at home. Had I been along she no doubt would have burst into tears. At noon she came home bubbling over with delight, and we thought she was going to make it fine. The next day, however, she could hardly force herself to get ready, and that night she was very subdued. Her little face was wistful and sad. We made few comments, and those were on the positive, cheerful side. Each day of that first week grew worse.

IT WAS IMPERATIVE that we use every means to make the school experience a happy one, and I made special efforts to make it so. First, we let her know that we were not slipping away to unusual places, seeing or doing unusual things while she was at school. She was not losing out on anything at home that really mattered. She could always depend on Mommy's being at home when she returned from school. Then we tried to make each lunch a delight, with a little surprise tucked in one corner of the box. I popped corn and sent a big sack of it for her to share with the teacher and other children. Extra cookies or apples or bananas were to be shared, especially with a poor girl. We played games at home that were played at school. We planned surprises for every evening. I suggested she draw or make special things at school for Madelyn, "because she can't do all the nice things that you learn to do at school." She made favors for the teacher and helped her do odd jobs. All the interesting, amusing experiences of our day were reviewed when she came home in the evening, and she then felt free to tell all the joys of the school day. This took time, but it was worth every minute, for cuddling on my lap, she felt secure and relaxed and forgot her timidity.

Finally one morning she burst into tears while I was combing her hair and begged, "Don't make me go to school today, Mommy."

"Why, dear?" I asked. "What's wrong?"

At first she wouldn't answer. Then she said, "The boys said I had to slide down the slide today, and Mommy, I'm afraid. Don't make me go."

"Honey, don't worry over that." I comforted her. "Your teacher won't make you slide until you want to."

I wrote a note to Mrs. Strain and told her the situation. Because she is an understanding mother herself, she solved the problem admirably. She went down the slide herself, then took Sharon on her lap, and they went down together. It was an entirely different little girl that came home that night. She was "thrilled to pieces" over it. The next evening she announced proudly that she had gone down the slide all alone, and it was not long until she was playing black-man, tag, kitten and mouse, and other games with the children.

From that time on Sharon enjoyed school life. When the day came for the school children to go to Sheridan for their vaccinations she again became very quiet, and her little hands shook nervously as I got her ready. We had discussed every detail of the probable procedure so that she could get used to it. Never once did she beg to stay at home. All at school were going, so of course she must. There was no question in her mind of that. Then, very firmly, she stated, "Mom, I sure don't think much of this Sheridan deal." And that was that! She neither flinched nor cried during the vaccination, and Daddy got her an ice cream cone for being such a big girl.

RESOLVING that we'd start in on Madelyn's shyness immediately, we let her visit school occasionally when it was satisfactory with the teacher. Although she had a wonderful time each day, she still insisted that she never would go to school, but was going to stay home with Mommy. Each time we would say, "Well, don't worry about it. It's a long time until you'll be ready to start; but everyone goes to school, you know."

Sharon's second year opened with a new teacher. Before many days passed, Madelyn wanted to visit school. We consulted the teacher, and she said to let her come. The next morning my husband took them, and Madelyn wouldn't stay. Sharon was provoked, and he was a trifle provoked too. Madelyn came home looking on the verge of tears, so I didn't comment, except to state my surprise. She went in the front room and curled up in the big arm-chair. After a while she asked, "Mom, do you know why I didn't want to stay at school with Sharon?"

"No," I answered.

"Well," she said, "I didn't want to wear my shoes that long."

Imagine that! I was in the kitchen, so she couldn't see me laugh. For the time being she simply couldn't visit school with a new teacher, and she had to make some kind of an excuse! Gradually she conquered her shyness, and now she begs to visit almost every week. She anticipates the fun she will have next year when she will be a first grader and hasn't mentioned staying home with Mom for months.

Timidity hurts the individual as much as actual physical illness if he has an overdose of it, and scolding, sarcasm, adverse criticism, or laughing at him may leave wounds that fail to heal. The little child grows into an abnormal adolescent whose life is downright miserable. A background of child psychology will help the parent with a timid child, but it is not an absolute necessity. Human kindness, genuine love, and tenderness will do the job just as well. Patience, understanding, and careful pushing when it is wise and necessary will pay dividends in the end. Parents should always keep their arms ready to snuggle and caress the wee one, for the world is such a big place for tiny children that they become bewildered and need the touch and warmth of mother and daddy.

FIRST BRANCH, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

—A Mother and Daughter smorgasbord supper was held for the First Chicago and West Suburban groups on May 11. Participating on the program were North Side circle, Friendship guild, Ssenippah guild, and also Emerine Gunderson, Margaret Newlin, Evaline Webb, Helene Hancock, Karen Partlowe, and Eleanor Stuart. Elder H. T. McCaig, Sr., delivered the Mothers' Day sermon, and the special music was presented by the junior choir. Speakers for the month of May were Pastor Elbert W. Chandler, H. T. McCaig, Sr., B. A. Lenox. E. F. Epperson, Delores Jones, Juanita Stewart, Dores Gelhorn, and June Green Platt participated in the music for the month.

Elders Elbert Chandler, A. O. Skinner, Buren A. Lenox, and Louis Hancock participated in the Communion service June 3. Brother Chandler delivered the address. Miss Ruth Skinner was organist for the service.

A special Children's Day service was held. Diane Elaine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gilmore, was blessed by Elders Elbert Chandler and Buren Lenox. Alice Skinner and Eleanor Chandler directed the program.

The pastor delivered the Fathers' Day sermon. Participating in the music for the month of June were Juanita Stewart, Sally Anderson, Helene Hancock, Delores Jones, Paul Studtman, Don Fisher, and Carol Olson. District President J. C. Stuart delivered the morning sermon June 24. Preceding the sermon, Jeffrey Royce, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Czach was blessed by J. C. Stuart and Elbert Chandler. Brother Stuart conducted a series of meetings from June 17-24. These were the last services held in the building before it was turned over to the group which purchased it. The First branch meets at the Austin Y.M.C.A. at 501 N. Central Avenue.

Preceding the June 22 service there was a building fund dinner sponsored by the Ssenippah guild. The women's department has turned in over $1,700 to the building fund during the past year.

Elders B. A. Lenox, Louis Hancock, Buren Lenox, J. C. Stuart, and Patriarch Leslie S. Wight were the speakers during July.

Bishop Leslie Kohlman and Seventy James Daugherty visited with the Saints May 10.

Eddie Cook, son of Brother and Sister Norman Cook, was baptized on June 10 by his grandfather, Elder E. C. Eckright. The confirmation service was by Elder Ronald Manuel of Wichita assisted by Elder Eckright and Elder Nilson. Brother Manuel spoke at the service. Francis Elder was baptized on July 29 by Elder Nilson. Missionary Clair Weldon conducted the confirmation service assisted by Elders E. C. Eckright and R. E. Nilson. Mary Deck was baptized on August 4 by Brother Weldon. Elders Wilson and Weldon performed the confirmation service.

Elder Eckright has resigned as pastor, and Elder Nilson was assigned as pastor until branch election in October.—Reported by JENNIE WHITED

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA.—Following the death of the pastor, High Priest N. T. Chapman, the branch elected C. J. Lant as pastor. Other officers elected were Roy T. Curtis, assistant pastor; Carl Heth, branch treasurer and bishop's solicitor; Ethel Heth, music director; and Thelma Heth, pianist.

The project the women have undertaken is to raise funds for robes for the choir. They have also assisted the nursery project in the church school.

The men have placed the Three Standard Books on a shelf especially designed with a light shining on them. At the completion of the project, Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag from Santa Ana conducted the dedicatory service. While at the branch he also gave two patriarchal blessings.

The church school is under the leadership of Richard Walter Poole. Brother and Sister Poole recently had their baby blessed. Brother and Sister Howell Hughes are in charge of the young married couples group and Sister Pearl Lytel is in charge of the women's group.—Reported by C. J. LANT

HAWAII.—The third annual reunion of the Hawaii District was held August 5-12. This was the first year the reunion was held for a full week. Twenty-two people from the Island of Hawaii and three people from the Island of Maui attended the reunion which was held at Mokuleia, Oahu.

District president, Elder A. Orlin Crownover, taught the general class, presided over the prayer services and preached the closing sermon. Elder Elwin R. Vest, counselor in the district presidency and pastor at Hilo, taught the men's class and carried the major preaching assignment. Elder Avon Yap taught the young people's class and served as registrar in addition to editing the reunion newspaper. He was assisted by Elder Peter Ahuna and Sisters Emma Bromann, Helen Inouye, and Jane Nii.

Evangelist Charles A. Lee, in addition to other reunion duties, gave patriarchal blessings. John X. Ledo had the major responsibility for business arrangements and camp security, and he was assisted by Marcelo Pagat. Elder Tsunao Miyamoto, the district bishop's agent, was in attendance and assisted with the preaching. Sister Maurine Crownover, with several assistants, had charge of the children's work. She also directed evensong. Sister Inez Vest taught the women's class. Sister Masako Kashimoto was in charge of the dining hall. Sister Emma Kaawakauo, Sr., supervised the music and directed the choir in the presentation of the cantata, "Behold, It Is Written." Sister Yuntin Kon had charge of the Herald House sales. Sister Leila Miyamoto, R.N., served as camp nurse. Assisting with recreation were Henry Inouye, Sr., Brother and Sister Charles Aki, and Newton Ward. Elder Akira Sakima and Brother Yoshimori Miyashiro assisted with transportation.

At the annual district conference, held at reunion time, seven men were approved for ordination to various priesthood offices as follows: Adolph Directo and Robert Kunichika, deacon; Miguel Mahi and Kogoro Sakima, teacher; Edward Garfield and David Fujita, priest; and Elias Kaawakauo, Sr., elder. The district officers elected for the coming year are: Elder A. Orlin Crownover, district president; Elwin R. Vest and Henry Mahi, counselors; Yoshimi Nii, secretary; Elias Kaawakauo, treasurer; Maurine Crownover, church school director; Clara Camara, assistant church school director; Puarose Mahi, music director; women's supervisor, Inez Vest; Newton Ward, young people's supervisor; Emma Bromann, statistician; and Richard Keko, auditor. Tsunao Miyamoto was sustained as district bishop's agent.

More than twenty new students from Hawaii will enroll at Graceland College and the Independence Sanitarium this fall. This will bring the total enrollment from the Islands at these two church institutions to approximately thirty-eight for this year. Included in this group are people of Hawaiian, English, Chinese, Portuguese, Japanese, Filipino, Scotch, and German ancestry.—Reported by A. ORLIN CROWNVER

SANTA PAULA, CALIFORNIA.—District President John Davis announced August 5 that the mission is qualified to become a branch, and action is being taken in that respect. On August 12, Elder James Burdick, recently of the Lomita, California mission, founder of the Santa Paula mission and brother of Pastor C. C. Burdick, gave a farewell sermon to the Saints in Santa Paula. Before the existence of the mission, the family worshiped with the Santa Barbara Saints, and members of that group were present for the service and barbecue that followed. The women's department served over ninety people, and the proceeds were donated to the building fund for the church. Elder James Burdick has made a great material sacrifice in forsaking his high-salaried position as administrative head of the San Pedro General Hospital to serve the church as business manager of Graceland College. It was with mingled sadness and great pride that his family and friends bade him farewell upon his departure for Lomita with his wife and daughter.—Reported by VERA HAVEN

MIRA LOMA, CALIFORNIA.—The church school and morning worship services have an average attendance of thirty-five persons. Prayer services are held on Tuesday evening at the homes of Saints. Elder Charles Mottashed, Priest Elmer A. Omohundro, and Teacher Dan Jarvis have been added to the priesthood.

Sidney Schuler was baptized by Priest M. F. Caldwell on June 10. The Zion's League held the first meeting on July 5. Violet Steele is leader of the group, assisted by Deacon George Steele and Carolyn Jean Caldwell. The women's department held their first meeting at the home of Inez Peck on July 12. Attending the meeting were Anna Caldwell, Bessie Lussier, Mrs. Angie Peck, Mrs. H. L. Bausell, Nancy Clark, Nora Norwood, and Inez Peck. A pot-luck dinner was held August 3 to plan future activities. Progress is being made on the building program.—Reported by M. F. CALDWELL

God Was Our Rudder

As told by
Allen Breckenridge

THIS IS THE TRUE STORY of five men and one child, members of the church, who faced with faith and fortitude the dangers of the open sea and apparent disaster. These six were cast adrift with little means of motivation and no food. All were from the Tuamotuan Archipelago. Their names are Mahinui a Hiringa, an elder, age 62; Pepe a Tearii, age 65; Tevahitua a Tahuhu, age 29; Tahu'a a Tahu'a, age 30; Opeta a Arai, age 27; and Matuanui a Tama, age 10.

This was no new experience for these Polynesians; they had often sailed the "Mother of Oceans" in their small boats, and some had even gone from island to island rowing their ten foot out-rigger canoes. They had no fear of the sea. It had been their home and the home of their ancestors who were the first to sail the solitudes of the Pacific, centuries before Magellan.

This, however, was different. They left their sailboat at home at the island of Tikehau, Tuamotu destined in a small-type motor boat for the near sister island of Mataeva some twenty-five miles westward. Leaving Tikehau in the wee hours of the night, expecting to arrive at Mataeva by early morning, they took with them no food or water, and only three gallons of gasoline. Since the trip ordinarily takes only two and one-half gallons, this should have been plenty. When dawn came, however, land was not in sight, and they used the extra half-gallon looking for the island which they had somehow missed and which never came into view.

Why did these good Saints not take along an extra can of gasoline or extra provisions? No one can say for sure why a Polynesian will leave home with scarcely enough to provide his needs, except that life has always been easy for him and his few wants could always be supplied from the sea and the coconut trees of his island habitat.

THERE WAS NOTHING for them to do but to drift with the current and the trade winds which, incidentally, were the same current and trade winds that propelled the famous "Kon-Tiki" raft westward on its journey in 1947. They drifted for sixteen long days before they landed safely upon the reef of the island of Motuone near the Cook Islands some six hundred miles westward.

The dangers of such a journey are even apparent to landmen. There were the ever present dangers of the storms and high seas which could easily flounder the small boat. There was no food or water aboard at the time of the disaster. There was danger of being crashed to death upon a foreign and gruesome reef if and when they arrived at an island. They did not, however, count themselves as lost. They recognized the great advantage of their faith in God, and the aid of the wind and ocean current. Although they could not express it in words there was also the assurance and the experience of past generations born into the very core of their bodies which told them that, as others had thus sailed and arrived, so would they sail and eventually arrive at an inhabitable land.

Upon recognizing their predicament they immediately did two things. Mahinui, the elder, prayed the first of many prayers offered to the Father in Heaven each morning, noon, and evening. This was not a new prayer experience for them. Many missionaries have been thrilled by the heartfelt prayers of the natives as they sail upon the treacherous ocean among dangerous reefs, for a Latter Day Saint will never leave land, see a sunset or sunrise upon the open sea, or even land at an island, without an earnest prayer of thanks for past blessings and protection on his journey. The second thing they did was to fashion a sail from a cotton blanket and improvise a rudder oar and two small paddles from some loose planking.

FROM HERE ON the story is not remarkable except from the standpoint of God's protection, which they never doubted. Although they had no food or water with them, these were supplied from time to time when their need became most urgent. A gallon or more of water was collected from two rainstorms, seven fish were speared from under a floating log, and one coconut was scooped from the sea. Upon their arrival at Motuone, with Mahinui handling the improvised rudder and Tevahitua and Opeta rowing, they maneuvered their boat close to the reef for their dangerous run over it and onto dry land. It was necessary for them to maneuver the boat in such a way as not to go in too soon on a dry wave, or too soon on a large wave, or to fall into a hole in the reef, or to hit a huge rock which was immediately before them. If the wave were too big or too small, Tevahitua and Opeta would back paddle until Mahinui had the boat in a position he thought safe for a landing between the hole in the reef and the rock. The Lord again showed his loving care as they landed safely beside the rock.

Their first thought after landing was to offer a prayer of thanks to their Father in Heaven. How did they react to their adventure? Mahinui said, "God was truly our rudder." Pepe said, "I am going to join the church as soon as I return to the home island." (He has already been baptized.) Tevahitua remarked, "I never doubted that we would land safely. Death never entered my mind. God was with us." Opeta said, "I know why God saved us. It is for us to repent of our sins and to serve him all our remaining days." Matuanui just smiled a happy, boyish smile.

NEW CHURCH AT BAYOU LA BATRE, ALABAMA

A MILESTONE marking nineteen years of endeavor was reached May 20, 1951, by the members of Bayou La Batre, Alabama, Branch when opening-day services were held in the new church building. The branch, which was organized in January, 1950, is the outgrowth of a mission of the Mobile, Alabama, Branch organized in 1932 by Elder Amos Berve. Services have been held continuously since that time in the home of the pastor, Elder O. O. Tillman, except for a few months in late 1934 and early 1935 when the serious illness and subsequent death of his wife made it impossible. From a nucleus of some three or four families has grown the present congregation of seventy-seven members. Elder Tillman is supported by his two sons as counselors, Elder Delbert Tillman and Priest Alma Tillman. Robert R. Pendarvis serves as deacon. Mrs. Lovinia Sutton is leader of the women's department and Frank Deakle is youth leader.

The building, of brick veneer construction with textone interior, has four classrooms, two of which are equipped with Modernfold doors; the auditorium, which will seat 144 persons; and two rest rooms. By opening the Modernfold doors to the classrooms, the size of the auditorium is increased so that 40 more persons may be seated. The inset on the front of the building over the doors (which shows in the picture) will, in time, hold a stone plaque of the Three Standard Books flanked by lighted tapers and underlined with the following quotation: "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established."—II Corinthians 13: 1. All the interior woodwork and furnishings are in natural finish wood. The draperies are dark green. The pulpit, of unique design, was planned and built by one of the members, Emery Powell.

The congregation and its officers are appreciative of the ministry of many who have come and nurtured them in the faith, encouraged and inspired them to push on to their high calling in Jesus Christ. A cordial invitation is extended to all who may be in this vicinity to worship in the new church.

and live with me. But she wouldn't come a step, Myra, until I promised to bring her to church every Sunday. We were married by your pastor, yesterday, and here I am. I like the pastor, and if the folks are always as friendly as they are this morning, I don't think I'll mind coming."

Myra gave her hand and a friendly smile to the bride, and said, "You and I are going to be real friends, and I'll be coming to see you soon." Then she hurried on to catch up with Dale and Kathleen, who were signing the guest register.

As they stopped to speak to the pastor at the door, she noticed how well they looked together. The light in their eyes as they looked at each other made her glad, and her silent prayer was, "Please, dear Lord, may the Spirit of God be found always in their dwelling place, and may they worship often in the house of God because their hearts are there."

DEATHS

SHARP.—Lucy C., was born June 3, 1894, at California, Missouri, and died August 12, 1951, at Camp Tahcodah near Bald Knob, Arkansas, while attending reunion. On November 25, 1911, she was married to Elder T. B. Sharp; eleven children were born to them. She was an active worker in the church, school, and community.

She is survived by her husband; three sons: Roy and T. E., Jr., of Winthrop, Arkansas, and Emmitt of Madison, Wisconsin; six daughters: Mrs. Mary Morgan and Mrs. Erma Wright of Texarkana, Arkansas; Mrs. Martha Sharrock of Stillwater, Oklahoma; Mrs. Beatrice Scarborough of San Francisco, California; and Mrs. Lucile Morgan and Miss Shirley Sharp of Winthrop; three sisters: Mrs. Stella Smith of Bonner Springs, Kansas, Mrs. Hattie Green of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; and Mrs. Lena Hess of Winthrop; two brothers: Dewey Schlup of Edwardsville, Kansas, and Frank Schlup of Muskogee, Oklahoma; and ten grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Winthrop, Elders Frank Pollard and R. L. Morrison officiating. Interment was in the Camp Ground Cemetery.

LEVERSON.—Clara Bertine, daughter of Eric T. and Inger Nelson, was born November 25, 1879, in Mitchell County, Iowa, and died June 6, 1951. On June 12, 1901, she was married to Otto G. Leverson, who died on May 16, 1937. A son, Norman, also preceded her in death in 1944, a war casualty. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 28, 1921, and was active in the music department, playing the organ and singing in the choir. She was also a member of the county extension service and sang in the Decatur County Farm Bureau Women's Chorus.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Roy W. Case of Minneapolis, Minnesota; Mrs. Merlin Chapman of Burbank, California; and Mrs. Paul Roberts of Lamoni, Iowa; five sons: Elmer of Los Angeles, California; Clarence of Van Nuys, California; Gordon of Burbank, California; Kenneth of Denver, Colorado; and Vernon of Des Moines, Iowa; two sisters: Mrs. Theodore Christianson and Mrs. Gus Krogsted of Osage, Iowa; two brothers: Theodore Nelson of Independence, Iowa, and Carl of Osage; seven grandchildren; and one great-grandchild.

FULLER.—Dennis Aaron, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Fuller, was born in Grayson County, Kentucky, and died January 18, 1951, at Nevada, Missouri. At the age of seven he moved with his family to Texas, where he became a professional baseball player. Later he established a business in Dallas, where he remained until 1931, when he moved to a farm near Ava, Missouri. He was first married to Mettie Stanfill, who, with their infant daughter, died thirteen months later. Then he was married to Mary Sanders, who died in 1925. His third wife, the former Lorraine Levington, and their six children survive him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1916 and held the office of elder. For seventeen years he served as bishop's agent for the Central Texas District, and for ten years was pastor of the church at Ava. Several years ago he suffered a stroke, from which he never fully recovered.

Besides his wife, Lorraine, of Independence, Missouri, he leaves two daughters: Mrs. Kenneth Pitts of Fort Scott, Kansas, and Mrs. Willard Hosler of Independence; four sons: Dennis A., recently of Fort Scott; Albert O., a student at Graceland; Edward of Rich Hill, Missouri; and Terry of Independence; three grandchildren; two half-brothers; and one half-sister. Funeral services were held at the church in Ava, Elders J. W. Davis and Raymond Stone officiating. Burial was in the Ava cemetery.

McMURTREY.—Gillie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Tyler Wilson, was born May 16, 1877, in Mashack, Kentucky, and died August 2, 1951, at West Plains, Missouri. At the age of seven she moved with her parents to Ozark County, Missouri, where she spent the remainder of her life. On September 1, 1901, she was married to Ames E. McMurtrey, and on August 10, 1924, was baptized into the Reorganized Church. Although isolated from church privileges much of the time, she lived her religion so that her life was a testimony of unwavering faith.

She is survived by her husband, Ames; a daughter, Mrs. W. W. Bayless of Springfield, Missouri; four sons: Don of Springfield; Clyde of Fort Leonard Wood, Missouri; Amos of Republic, Missouri; and John of Couch, Missouri; sixteen grandchildren; three great-grandchildren; a sister; a brother; a half-sister; and two half-brothers.

Funeral services were held at the Robertson Mortuary in West Plains, Elders J. W. Davis, Norman Cox, and Bennie Simmons officiating. Interment was in Sweeten Pond Cemetery.

FREEMAN.—S/Sgt. Richard H., son of Harry T. and Mabel A. Freeman, was born November 15, 1921, and died August 14, 1951, in the Naval Hospital at Camp LeJeune, North Carolina, after being struck by a car. He had spent most of his life in Painesville, Ohio, where he was graduated from Harvey High School in 1939. In August, 1941, he enlisted in the Marine Corps, becoming a member of the Second Marine Division, which received the presidential citation. He spent nearly three years on Guadalcanal, becoming a part of the inactive reserve corps on November 6, 1945. He was recalled on October 11, 1950. On April 28, 1945, he was married to Cpl. Hazel L. Sessions; two sons were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 19, 1932.

He is survived by his wife, Hazel; two sons: Douglas and Gary; his paternal grandmother, Mrs. Grace Freeman; and a sister, Mrs. Mabel Isenburg, all of Mentor, Ohio. A brief service was held at the Nixon Funeral Home in Painesville, followed by funeral rites at Kirtland Temple, Elder W. E. Williams, Apostle Maurice Draper, and Bishop Jerome Wildermuth officiating. Interment was in the Mentor cemetery.

PYCOCK.—Elizabeth Ann, daughter of William and Ann Whitworth, was born at Huttoft, Lincolnshire, England, on February 1, 1854, and died August 12, 1951, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. J. Seymour, in Humber Bay, Ontario. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1896, and was a charter member of the Humber Bay Branch. On May 16, 1878, she was married to James Pycock at St. Mary's, Wainfleet, England; six children were born to them. She was preceded in death by her husband, James; a daughter, Mrs. Robert Hamilton; and a son, David.

Surviving are two sons: James of Windsor, Ontario, and John of Toronto, Ontario; three daughters: Mrs. H. J. Seymour of Humber Bay; Mrs. Edgar Tiffin and Mrs. Albert Beggs of Weston, Ontario (the latter is an adopted daughter, niece of the deceased); a brother, Edward Whitworth; a sister, Mrs. Alice Harris; thirteen grandchildren; and fourteen great-grandchildren. Elder John Booth conducted the funeral service at the Turner and Porter Chapel in Toronto. Interment was in Park Lawn Cemetery, Toronto.

Introducing

CALVIN CROSBY SEARS, New Haven, Connecticut (page 8), is a native of Dennis, Massachusetts. He was baptized at Dennis Port, Massachusetts, in 1899, the year after he was graduated from Dennis high school. From 1908-1913 he took evening courses at the technical schools of Boston, which later became Northeastern University. His hobby is photography. From 1906 to 1914 he was employed as a civil and hydraulic engineer in Boston, doing designing and construction work in water supply and sewage systems. From 1915-1917 he was in the office of the construction engineer of the N. Y., N. H. and H. Railroad of Boston. For the next thirty years he was in the chief engineer's office of the railroad, and designed yards, terminals, docks, and bridges. Much of his work involved the elimination of grade crossings. In 1917 he married Laura Pierson. They have one daughter, Barbara (Mrs. E. J. Cote).

Brother Sears was ordained a teacher in 1913 and an elder in 1932. He served as president of the New Haven, Connecticut, Branch from its organization in 1935 to 1948, and was presiding elder of the mission prior to that.

ALLEN BRECKENRIDGE, Papeete, Tahiti, Society Islands (page 20), was born at Shreveport, Louisiana, in 1921. He was baptized at St. Joseph, Missouri, 1934, and after graduating from high school attended the University of St. Joseph. In 1944 he was married to Emma Jane Smith. They have two children: David 3, and Carol Lei, who was born in Tahiti last year.

Brother Breckenridge was ordained a deacon in 1937, a priest in 1940, an elder in 1941, and a seventy in 1947. His first missionary appointment was to Far West Stake in 1941. The next year he was assigned to the Portland and Spokane Districts, and in 1943 to Spring River District. From 1944-47 he worked in the Southern Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee Districts. Since 1948 he has been serving in the Society Islands. He sings tenor and plays the clarinet.

* HOW WILL YOU DIE?

Though it probably inspires more fear than any kind of danger, lightning kills only 250 Americans a year out of a total average death rate of 1,445,370—99,000 of them from accidents, 32,000 from motor cars, 2,600 from railway accidents, and 2,013 from airplane accidents.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company says that city dwellers are relatively free from danger of death by lightning because steel frame buildings act as conductors. Nine out of ten such deaths occur in the country or in small towns.

Here are some safety precautions: Don't seek shelter under a tree, nor in a broad open field, a small boat, or an isolated shed in an exposed area during a storm. Don't stay in swimming, as you can be electrocuted in the water. Baseball diamonds and golf links are dangerous. Occupants of automobiles are protected by metal bodies of the cars. Lowest death rates from lightning are in Rhode Island, the Pacific Coast, New England, and Middle Atlantic States. Highest rates are in the mountains and southeastern states.

Most deaths are caused by disease, the heart leading with 460,580, and cancer second with 189,811. Your chances of dying of old age are small—only 27,556 go that way.

Death comes to most people unexpectedly. Nearly all hope to live a few years, months, weeks, days, or even minutes longer than they do.

* THIS MAY SAVE YOU MONEY

The Kansas City Better Business Bureau Bulletin for July 18 reprints an article by Richard S. Lewis in the "St. Louis Star-Times," "Suckers in Swindle-Land," stating that Toronto, Canada, "is the headquarters for one of the biggest stock frauds in the world today." Promoters there are robbing Americans of more than $52,000,000 a year. These stocks offer promises of wealth in gold, silver, cobalt, tantalum, uranium, and oil. Ontario laws offer scant protection to victims of these frauds. The U.S. Post Office bars delivery of mail to known swindlers, but as they frequently change their names and tactics, it is difficult to keep up with them.

These facts confirm the observation that the richest gold mines are those in people's pocket books and saving accounts. Somebody is always digging at them. Is somebody digging at yours?

* A STANDING ADVANTAGE

"If you wish to add to your charm, bear in mind that you appear more youthful standing than sitting down. When seated—especially in modern, low-slung chairs, not only are you tempted by love of comfort to assume an incorrect posture, but you are in a passive state and less alert mentally. More than this, you are in a position of psychological disadvantage. When standing up, you are likely to be positive, alert, ready to act. The clever woman will let her younger rival sit down while she remains standing."—Quoted from Gelett Burgess.

News and Notes

ATTEND CONFERENCE

F. Henry Edwards and W. Wallace Smith, members of the First Presidency, attended the annual business meeting of the St. Louis Branch en route to the College Students Conference at Kirtland, Ohio. Brother Frank McDonald, the present pastor of the branch, was sustained.

Attending the College Conference with the members of the presidency were John Blackmore, church historian; Apostle Reed M. Holmes, Bishop Walter N. Johnson, Dr. Roy A. Cheville, Dr. Evan Shute, and Dr. L. O. Brockway.

TWELVE MEETS

The Council of Twelve held meetings from September 3-14. All members of the council were present with the exception of Apostle Roscoe Davey who is serving in the Australasian mission.

CENTER STAKE RETREAT

Three hundred and thirty was the record attendance of young people at the annual Zion's League retreat for the Center Stake September 1-3 at Gardner Lake. Directing the retreat were Carl Mesle and Lee Hart. Brother Hart replaces Brother Mesle as Center Stake youth leader. Brother Mesle has been transferred to the Department of Religious Education where he will assume responsibility for General Church youth work. The theme for the retreat was "Strength to Lead and Faith to Follow." Speakers for the week end included John Sheehy, Glen Johnson, and Evan Fry. New officers for the Stake-Wide Zion's League were installed at the retreat. They are Don Elfson, president; Celia Fry, vice-president; Doris Green, secretary; and Richard Lundquist, treasurer.

STUDENTS ARRIVE AT SAN

Forty new student nurses began classes September 3 at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. The students are from twelve states and Hawaii. The girls will have a week's holiday at Christmas time and do not begin floor duty until after eight weeks of instruction in hospital and community orientation and they begin their science classes. Chaplain Almer Sheehy spoke to the students at their first chapel service.

WOMEN RETURN FROM REUNIONS

Members of the General Council of Women have returned from various reunions. Mrs. Benjamin Moats and Mrs. J. Harry Paxton were in the East; Mrs. C. C. Peterson attended reunions in Minnesota; Mrs. Samuel Burgess served at the Erie Beach and Nauvoo reunions; and Mrs. Blanche Mesley attended reunions in Michigan.

HOLDS BANQUET

The White Masque Players held a banquet to open their season September 4. Mrs. Ray Heady, president of the organization, announced the plans for the year. The guest speaker was Charles Holt, a graduate student in drama at the University of Kansas City.

A TREE is known by its fruit; a plant by its production. It is more than a coincidence that Herald Publishing House had its most productive year soon after Gene became production manager. For quantity and variety of output last year excelled all others in Herald history.

Gene is proud of his thirty-two-year record at the Herald, but he will out talk you when you ask him his age. He has had only two jobs. From 1915 to 1918 he was pressman with the Lingle Bag Company. Then he started work at Herald in Lamoni and is the only remaining member of the force who transferred with the plant to Independence in 1921. Nature has conspired with him in concealing his age. He will only tell you that he was real young when he started work and when he was born.

He attended public school in Clinton, Missouri. In 1916 he married Ruth V. DeLozier. They have two children: Charles Laverne and Betty Jean Carey. Then there are two Carey grandchildren and one young McKean.

Before he became production manager Brother McKean worked as linotype operator, make-up and floorwork man, and foreman. He is a member of the Craftsman's Club. He was Scout leader, young people's leader, and choir member at Enoch Hill for several years. Over a ten-year period he was city-wide recreational director at the Campus and Auditorium. Gene has used his artistic ability to illustrate stories and books printed by Herald House. His hobbies are sports, drawing, and painting.

Waiting for the Light

"We wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness." —Isaiah 59:9.

OUR WAY was through the mountains, and when nightfall overtook us we camped by a running stream to cook our supper. We hobbled our horses so they could graze but not go far away. The saddles and packs were on the ground. We slept under the trees on thick beds of pine needles, and the murmuring of the brook lulled us to sleep. When we awoke in the night we could see the stars shining brightly against the blue-black sky. Later on the stars were gone and it was piercingly cold. With numbed hands we groped in the dark for fuel to make a fire. There were some hours before dawn, and we sat there enduring our misery, anxious for the day that apparently would never come. But we knew it would, and our business was to endure. We never saw anything more welcome than the light breaking through the clouds over the eastern horizon.

There are times in life when we must wait for the light.

* * * * *

THE World Council of Churches has released copy of an address given on January 7 by Dr. O. Frederick Nolde, Director of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, at Washington Cathedral, Washington, D. C. Dr. Nolde spoke of the "moral requirements" in our search for peace. We would like to share some of the significant thoughts of that address with our readers.

Dr. Nolde presented two "pre-suppositions" that should guide us at the present time: (1) "the conviction that God in his goodness makes available strength in proportion to the need of the hour"; and (2) "the belief that even in this trying hour a Third World War is not inevitable."

This leads to the heart of Dr. Nolde's message:

The people of the United States and their representatives in government are called upon to manifest a dignified humility, born of purposeful strength and not of weakness, dedicated to the service of all men in building economically healthy and morally free societies, and committed to the peaceful solution of world problems through international cooperation under the United Nations.

Out of this general statement Dr. Nolde drew a plan for a "three-pronged peace offensive" summarized as follows: (1) We should devote our military strength to the cause of peace; (2) In opposing totalitarian domination, we must help to build economically healthy and morally free societies; (3) We must seek through avenues of negotiation a just settlement of all problems with our allies and with those who oppose us.

* * * * *

WITH RAPID COMMUNICATION and transport, the whole world has become a single community, and the democracies are good neighbors who are trying to organize a government for protection and welfare. Lawless, criminal elements are making this very difficult and threatening the peace of the community. In such a time we should observe a few conditions carefully.

First, we should know our friends and be loyal to them. No genuine friendship should be forgotten, for we need every one. We must never let anything separate us from other friendly democracies, no matter what happens.

Second, "We must keep our heads," as people say, "or we shall certainly lose them." This is no time for anger or hatred. We cannot afford unreasoning fury. We dare not indulge in uncompromising vindictiveness.

Third, this is a time for courage. We must not give way to panic. Those who face danger can see to destroy it. Those who turn and run often lose their lives.

Fourth, this is a time for faith. We must believe that God is watching over the destiny of his world, in this age, as he has in the past. We must believe that the eternal purposes cannot be frustrated.

Fifth, we must abide by our principles, the great moral and spiritual laws that have developed with the race. There is a great promise in the statement, "That which is governed by law is also preserved by law." The lawless destroy themselves.

* * * * *

In the darkness of this night in the world's long and troubled history, this generation of people waits for the dawn.

There are those who do not know that the dawn is coming and do not expect it. For them, hope has died.

In our present darkness, we cannot expect much light from men. For the threats of war and annihilation, they offer only new and more terrible weapons of destruction. But we are not without hope, because "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all."—I John 1: 5.

If we know that the dawn of a new day is coming, we can endure until it arrives.

Across the Desk

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Elder Herbert M. Scott of Des Moines, Iowa, writes:

Reunion experiences are many and varied, but we of the Des Moines District feel that we have just completed a unique reunion, the details of which I have been delegated to pass on to you.

Early Wednesday morning, August 15, at one o'clock, while the entire camp was trying to weather a terrific thunder and lightning storm, a bolt of lightning struck the roof of the new, large $100,000 Boy Scout meeting hall where we had been conducting services.

Within minutes the entire structure was ablaze with no possible means of curtailing the fire. The Saints and a few of the Boy Scouts watched their beautiful building burn to the ground. With less than half the reunion finished, many of the Saints felt that this completed our experiences together.

While the building was yet burning the Saints gathered around the District President, Elder Ralph Wicker, Apostle D. T. Williams, and other members of the staff, and insisted that our reunion continue as scheduled. After due deliberation Elder Wicker stood on a chair and announced that the reunion would continue. Since it was obvious we could not continue there, he announced that we would break camp at daybreak and move to the church in Des Moines. At the appointed time a tired and sleepy caravan left for Des Moines. Sister Anna Wicker and Brother Harold Freberg had preceded them and made arrangements for lodging and food. At 5:30 that evening reunion was back on schedule with a fine evening meal.

Since all our reunion equipment was in the burning building, we suffered a total loss as there was no insurance to cover it. This amounted to approximately $1,400, not including the Herald House books and 100 rented chairs. The Herald House very graciously accepted the loss of the books, and the chairs were insured. On Wednesday night Brother Wicker announced our loss and suggested that we replace all the items burned. Several offerings were received, but on Sunday we were still $1,000 short of our goal. An appeal was made, and the Saints contributed $1,067, bringing the total offering to nearly $1,500—enough to replace the loss.

Not one complaining word was heard, nor a single discord. The spiritual power of the reunion gained momentum, and on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday mornings during prayer service the Lord graced us with his presence and his prophetic word through his officers. Other high spiritual points in the reunion were two "experience meetings" on Tuesday and Friday afternoon conducted by Evangelist Henry Castings and Elder Clyde McDonald. Because they "had a mind to work" the Saints were blessed beyond measure, and we all felt it was the finest reunion we had ever attended.

Religious Persecution in Colombia

A recent article appearing in the Scottish Rite News Bulletin of August 5, 1951, gives a dramatic account of some of the hardships and suffering of Protestant ministers who labor in the South American countries. We are presenting some statements from this article so that members of the church may understand that we may face similar problems in getting our message to the people of these Latin American countries.

This article tells of police breaking up a religious meeting in Colombia. A native minister by the name of Gonzalo was preaching when the police entered and interrupted the service, confiscating his Bible and other books saying they should be burned. Reverend William Easton, a missionary for the World-Wide Evangelization Crusade, with headquarters in Chicago, told the police he was the pastor. He was then asked, "You are Evangelicals, aren't you?" He ordered the women and children to leave, drew his saber, and struck Rev. Easton while other officers used rifle butts on other members. The missionary and two native companions were taken to the police station where they were stripped and kicked and beaten with leather straps and clubs.

Dr. C. W. Taylor of Washington, D.C., states: "It is well to remember that native Christians who have broken away from the church of their ancestors have suffered many times more than the relatively few missionaries. Many have paid with their lives; others have suffered the most indecent abuse imaginable."

The Day of Peace

THERE IS AN IDEA ABROAD that the Christian Sunday is a day of "blue laws" and tiresome restrictions. Surely no one who has lived in a truly Christian home feels this way. It is a day of opportunity, not of restraint.

Of course we cannot live two lives at once, and if this day is reserved for the worship of God and the cultivation of our souls it cannot at the same time be dissipated in the cheaper pleasures. But we are foolish if we refuse to enjoy our Sunday clothes because we cannot wear our work-day clothes at the same time, and we are equally foolish if we waste time regretting that we cannot make Sunday like any other day and at the same time enjoy the quiet happiness which comes from reserving this day for God, and for seeking the beauty and truth which led us to him.

Sunday is a day for happiness—happiness of a quiet contemplative kind. By Christian custom it is the day of all days for reflection; for reading fine books, enjoying fine conversations, sharing fine music, and—most of all—for cultivating the presence of Divinity.

We cannot enter into the richer values of Sunday observance all at once, but if we really want the finer and unending joys of Our Father's holy day, we will find that they grow on us as we set this day apart for him. David Grayson reminded us long ago that some of life's most satisfying adventures are the adventures in contentment. We can pursue these best on Sunday, the day of peace.

Life After Death

With Emphasis on Eternal Judgment

By W. E. Wakeman

AS PREPARING THE WAY for the kingdom of God in its completeness, certain events are to take place, such as death, Christ's second coming, the resurrection of the body and the general and final judgment. In the future condition of men, there are to be an intermediate and an ultimate state, both for the righteous and for the wicked. Unlike the apostate sects and creeds, the church of the restoration's belief points to other dispositions of humanity than those abiding either in heaven or hell. A merciful and just God assures that both death (grave) and hell (prison house) shall give up the resurrected dead to be judged.

THE PRE-EXISTENT STATE

The account of man's creation and the subsequent allusions to it in Scripture show that, while the body was made corruptible and subject to death, the spirit was made in the image of God, incorruptible and immortal. "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness."—Genesis 1: 27, I.V. "I, the Lord God, formed man from the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."—Genesis 2: 8. Again we read, "Nevertheless all things were before created, but spiritually were they created and made."—Genesis 2: 9. Man pre-existed in heaven as a spirit.

In the Hebrew records, the animating spirit is everywhere distinguished from the earthly body. "Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil; . . . Therefore, I . . . will send him forth from the garden of Eden."—Genesis 3: 28, 29, I.V. We find here implied that man had immortality of spirit, and lest to this he would add immortality of body, thereby frustrating

God's great plan of salvation, he was expelled from access to the tree of life (Genesis 3: 28, I.V.). As proof of the dual nature of man we read in Ecclesiastes 12: 7: "then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

There are many proofs of immortality of spirit and consciousness after death. One of the best is to be found in Acts 7: 59 where Stephen, at the point of death, prays to the Lord Jesus to receive his spirit.

THE HOME OF SPIRITS UPON DEATH OF THE BODY

In explanation of the disposition of the spirits of men at death we refer to the prophet Alma's testimony: "Behold it has been made known to me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body, . . . whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life."—Alma 19: 43.

At this time there is a partial judgment, for we find the prophet explaining: "The spirits of those who are righteous are received into a state of happiness which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles."—Alma 19: 44. Regarding the spirits of the wicked: "These shall be cast out into outer darkness; . . . yea in darkness and a state of awful looking for of the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them—they remain in this state until the time of their resurrection."—Alma 19: 46, 47.

PROBATION—VALUE OF TIME

The Book of Mormon warns, "All is as one day with God; and time only is measured unto men." Life here is given men as "A time to prepare to meet God; a time to prepare for that endless state. . . which is after the resurrection of the dead."—Alma 9: 41. "Thus we see that there was a time granted unto man to repent, yea a probationary time, a time to repent and serve God."—Alma 19: 84. The Hebrew epistle reads, "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this [not a second probationary period] the judgment [eternal]."—Hebrews 9: 27. Judgment means that event which will occur at the end of the millennium of rest, when all the resurrections shall have come to pass, and death and hell shall give up the dead.

Sacred scripture clearly promises there will be no second probation for those who have rejected their opportunities in this life. This refers to those exposed to law and who, because of their evil deeds, would not come to the light and allow their deeds to be reproved. A second probationary period for this class of man is not needed to vindicate the justice or the love of God, since Christ, through his spirit, is always present in this world, quickening the conscience—if allowed—giving to each man exposed to law his opportunity, and making every decision between right and wrong a true probation.

THE INTERMEDIATE STATE

The Scriptures affirm the conscious existence of both the righteous and the wicked after death and prior to the resurrection. In this state the spirit is without a fleshly body, yet this state is for the righteous a state of conscious joy, and for the wicked a state of conscious suffering.

Of the righteous it is declared:

1. The spirit of the righteous believer at death or separation from the body enters the presence and the rest of Christ: ". . . absent from the body, and present with the Lord."—II Corinthians 5: 8. In John 14: 3 we find the promise of Jesus that he would prepare a place for his disciples in heaven where there would be many mansions for the spirits of the righteous dead to reside in.

2. The righteous at death enter paradise. John wrote: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Paradise is the abode of the blessed, a place which Christ has prepared where the spirits of the righteous abide till the day of their resurrection. Jesus assures, "I go to prepare a place for you."—John 14: 2.

3. The departed righteous are truly alive and conscious. Only the inanimate dead body sleeps in the grave. Study the case of the rich man in hell and Lazarus, the beggar, in Abraham's bosom or paradise. Both had died, and yet in the spirit world with a great gulf between them, they were fully conscious, the one in torment and the other at rest (Luke 16: 25 ff.). Similar statements are made elsewhere in the Scriptures concerning consciousness and life after death. Jesus said to Martha: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live."

THOSE OF THE FIRST RESURRECTION

1. There will be two classes of men who come forth, namely the celestial and the terrestrial. Paul clearly describes this by saying "every man in his own order" (I Corinthians 15: 23). In verses 40 and 42 he refers to the glories of different flesh and assures this is the case in the resurrection of the dead. The celestial man is described in latter-day revelation as "just men made perfect through Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood; these are they whose bodies are celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God the highest of all; whose glory the sun of the firmament is written of as being typical."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5.

2. The terrestrial consists of five general divisions. They are:

(1) They who died without law.

(2) Spirits of those kept in prison whom the Son visited.

(3) Honorable men of the earth blinded by the craftiness of men.

(4) They who receive of the glory of Christ but not of the fullness of the Father.

(5) These are they who are not valiant in the testimony of Jesus.

These various orders constitute the second division of the first resurrection. The terrestrial resurrection will not take place until a period of undetermined duration after those of the celestial come forth. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 27, 28.) They do not receive the fullness of their reward until the final resurrection (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6) and the eternal judgment. Christ and the people of the celestial order will minister to them.

THE WICKED AFTER DEATH

I Peter 3: 19, 20 states that Christ ". . . preached unto the spirits in prison; some of whom were disobedient in the days of Noah." These disobedient spirits were in prison under guard.

2. Luke 16: 28 ff. refers to conscious suffering of those in this prison.

3. They are under punishment, for Peter writes that the Lord has "reserved the unjust unto the day of judgment." The Scriptures represent the intermediate state to be one of incompleteness and a temporary nature. The perfect joy of the saints and those who are Christ's and the utter misery of the wicked begin only with the resurrection and the general eternal judgment. "Spirit and element inseparably connected receive of the fullness of joy; and when separated, man cannot receive a fullness of joy."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5. The wicked "drink the dregs of a bitter cup."—Alma 19: 61. Matthew 8: 30 and Romans 8: 23 also concern "the redemption of the body." The location of the spirits of the wicked after death is specifically mentioned in II Nephi 12: 18. This prophecy merits careful study and constant use in warning those to whom we would minister.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION AND IMMORTALITY

As the Apostle Paul wrote we reverently proclaim: "Our savior Christ Jesus, who abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Immortality had been a truth dimly recognized, suspected, and longed for before Christ came; but it was he who first brought it out of obscurity and uncertainty into clear daylight and convincing power. Christ's resurrection assuredly carries with it the resurrection of all men. Jesus, by coming back from the tomb, proved that death is not annihilation (II Timothy 1: 10). This miraculous event is the most conclusive and impressive of all proofs of immortality—a miracle accomplished by his own power and demonstrating that the spirit lived after its separation from the body (John 10: 17, 18).

OUR WORKS AND THE DESIRES OF OUR HEARTS

There will be those brought forth in first resurrection and saved in celestial glory who died unbaptized in the first life. The Restoration prophet had this revealed to him

(Church History, Volume 2, page 16). This occurred January 21, 1836 in the Kirtland Temple. Of it Joseph wrote:

Thus came the voice of the Lord unto me saying, All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom, for I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desires of their hearts.

And I also beheld that all children who die before they arrive at the age of accountability, are saved in the celestial kingdom of heaven.

God will not permit men to suffer for our negligence, but we will have to be penalized for not doing our full duty. We are to be fully saved by saving others.

These also have celestial glory: "All they who suffer persecution for my name, and endure in faith, though they are called to lay down their lives for my sake, yet shall they partake of all this glory."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5. This refers to such men as Jerome of Prague, Peter Waldo, David Livingstone, and Fanny Crosby (sacred hymn-writer), and many martyrs of the Protestant Reformation.

THE GLORY OF THE TELESTIAL RESURRECTION

"These are they who shall not be redeemed from the Devil, until the last resurrection; . . . these are they who are cast down to hell and suffer the wrath of Almighty God until the fullness of times." They abide or continue in a fixed place being "unjust still" in the resurrection. (Section 76: 7)

RESURRECTION OF NO GLORY

"He that is filthy let him be filthy still." Therefore they who cannot abide the laws of either celestial, terrestrial, or telestial must therefore "abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory." (Section 85: 5)

MANNER AND CONDITION OF THE RESURRECTIONS

In the eternal world we shall see as we are seen and know as we are known. The Scriptures tell us our resurrection will be in the manner the Lord Jesus Christ took up his body.

The spirit and the body shall be reunited again, in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame . . . this restoration shall come to all . . . both the wicked and the righteous; and even there shall not so much as a hair of their heads be lost; but all things shall be restored to its perfect frame, as it is now, or in the body.—Alma 8: 100, 102, 103.

Or as stated in Alma 19: 58, 65: "The soul (spirit) shall be restored to the body, and the body to the soul; yea and every limb and joint shall be restored to its body; yea even a hair of the head shall not be lost, but all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame. . . that every part of the body should be restored to itself."

The apostle Paul in his second letter to the Corinthian saints warns, "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive a reward of the deeds done in the body: things according to what he hath done, whether good or bad."

THE FINAL ETERNAL JUDGMENT

While the Scriptures state that there are processes of judgment, yet they are to be concluded with a final and complete vindication of God's righteousness, mercy, and justice. This will be accomplished by making known to the universe the characters of all men and by awarding to them corresponding destinies. They that sin cannot escape the justice of the judgment of God. (Matthew 16: 27, 28; 25: 31 ff.; John 3: 18, 19; Acts 17: 31; Romans 2: 16; II Corinthians 5: 10; Revelation 20: 12.)

Judgment is an eternal act, and we are being judged every day. Every man honest with himself knows where he is going. Those who are not honest with themselves are playing a trick; if they are not careful, they will get a trick played on them.

The final judgment is not an endless process but a visible event occurring at a definite period in the future. God's justice needs a final outward visible judgment as its vindication. A perfect justice must be based on life as a whole. When the final judgment is passed there is not one word in the Three Standard Books that shows there will be any further opportunity. At this time Christ delivers his work of redemption and salvation to his Father, perfected and spotless. (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.) If there remained one more act of salvation, the kingdom would not be perfected or spotless.

REGARDING JUDGMENT AND JUSTICE

The prophet Alma (19: 66, 67) writes a clear explanation of man's future:

It is requisite with the justice of God, that men should be judged according to their works; and if their works were good in this life and the desires of their hearts were good, that they should also, at the last day, be restored unto that which is good: and if their works are evil, they shall be restored unto him for evil: therefore all things shall be restored to their proper order; everything to its natural frame, mortality raised to immortality; corruption to incorruption; raised to endless happiness to inherit the kingdom of God; or to endless misery to inherit the kingdom of the devil.

REGARDING MERCY

Mercy claimeth the penitent, and mercy cometh because of the atonement; and the atonement bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead . . . and also mercy claimeth all which is her own; and thus none but the truly penitent are saved.—Alma 19: 105, 106.

He [God] has all power to save every man that believeth on his name and bringeth forth fruit meet for repentance.—Alma 9: 27.

Therefore, whosoever repenteth and hardeneth not his heart, he shall have claim on mercy through mine only begotten Son unto a remission of his sins; and these shall enter into my rest.—Alma 9: 55.

For the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance.—Alma 21: 18.

JESUS CHRIST THE RIGHTEOUS JUDGE

John tells us, "The Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son."—John 5: 22. Paul declares, "We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ."—Romans 14: 10. In vision John saw this day for he wrote: "I saw a great white throne; . . . and I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and they were judged every man according to their works."—Revelation 20: 11-13. Alma the prophet describes this day and place of judgment also (Alma 19: 56).

THE SECOND DEATH

The first death occurred when our first parents, Adam and Eve, were cut off both temporally and spiritually from the presence of the Lord (Alma 19: 88). They became fallen, and there was brought upon all mankind a spiritual death as well as a temporal. Because of this expulsion from the Garden of Eden they were consigned forever to be cut off from God's presence.

Because of man's fallen state, if no atonement had been made all mankind would have been lost forever. Therefore Christ, the Son of God, committed the infinite atonement for the sin of the world and for as many as would believe on him. The great mediation for all men brings them back into God's presence for judgment.

And it shall come to pass, that when all men shall have passed from this first death unto life, insomuch as they have become immortal, they must appear before the judgment seat of the Holy One of Israel.—II Nephi 6: 36.

And they who are filthy shall be filthy still and they shall go away into everlasting fire.

An awful death cometh upon the wicked for they die as to things pertaining to righteousness; for they are unclean and no unclean thing can inherit the kingdom of God. They drink the dregs of a bitter cup.—Alma 19: 60, 61. (Also Alma 19: 111.)

Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. This city is the celestial kingdom.—Revelation 22: 14. (Also Revelation 21: 10-27.)

Outside this city John says there will be "sorcerers, whoremongers, murderers, idolaters and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie."

"He that overcometh [the power of first death] shall inherit all things but the [1] fearful and [2] unbelieving and the [3] abominable and [4] murderers and [5] whoremongers and [6] sorcerers and [7] idolaters and all [8] liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone which is the second death."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7. These are the people who receive the telestial glory. They have their glory when Christ has perfected his work. Where God and Christ are they cannot come worlds without end, but they do receive of the Holy Spirit through ministration of those of terrestrial glory and angels. This glory, however, passes all understanding.

SECOND OPPORTUNITY FOR PROBATION

There will be many people who in their life were never exposed to law or who were not to be held accountable. The resurrection will give them another life in which to make answer. It would seem baptism for the dead is not essential.

The atonement satisfieth the demands of his justice upon all those who have not the law given to them, . . . and they are restored to that God who gave them breath, which is the Holy One of Israel.—II Nephi 6: 54, 55.

Mormon, as one of his last acts, wrote to his son Moroni: "For the power of redemption [from the grave] cometh on all they that have no law."—Moroni 8: 26.

Little children are redeemed from the foundation of the world, through mine Only Begotten; wherefore they can not sin, for power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children, until they begin to become accountable.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 13.

Little children are whole, for they are not capable of committing sin; wherefore the curse of Adam is taken from them in me.—Moroni 8: 9.

Little children are alive in Christ even from the foundation of the world; if not so, God is a partial God and also a changeable God and a respecter of persons; for how many little children have died without baptism.—Moroni 8: 13.

It should be remembered that baptism is unto repentance for remission of sins.

The heathen nations that knew no law of God shall find the second coming of our Lord a tolerable day. "Then shall the heathen nations be redeemed and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

These shall come forth terrestrial beings.

Christ made this promise:

"Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." And Rudyard Kipling wrote: "If you can fill the unforgiving minute with sixty seconds worth of distance run, yours is the earth, and everything that's in it."

With Authority

MEN RESPOND to genuine spiritual authority. This includes the authority of the Scriptures, the authority of the good life, the authority of spiritual power. Biblical preaching and teaching and conversation are effective means of missionary activity. Genuine demonstrations of spiritual power have always deeply impressed good people, and still do so. The integrity, neighborliness, and evident sincerity of the average members of the church have spoken in many places with an authority which has silenced criticism. Our ineffectiveness in many centers has been directly traceable to loss of our one-time ready familiarity with the Scriptures, or to loss of local standing because some of the Saints have been found lacking in integrity.

The Eclipse of Christ

In Our Local and National Government

Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ.—Ether 1: 35.

Wherefore, this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring. And if it so be that they shall serve him according to the commandments which he hath given, it shall be a land of liberty unto them; wherefore, they shall never be brought down into captivity: if so, it shall be because of iniquity.—II Nephi 1: 11-13.

THESE PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURE were delivered in two periods of time about a thousand years apart. Both contain the same idea: that the Lord was to bless this land and preserve it with freedom and liberty for its inhabitants if those who dwell here would live in righteousness. Today we are in danger of losing the favor with which the Lord looks upon this country and its people. The law of cause and effect rules in this as in other spheres of life. "Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people." Righteousness brings respect, blessings of prosperity, progress, and security. Sin brings fear, distrust, and the undermining of lasting foundations. This is true of individuals, peoples, and nations.

God's Choice

Since this land was kept unknown to the peoples of Europe and Asia until God was ready for it to be inhabited by those who loved liberty and were ready to fight for it; since it was unknown until God-fearing people were ready to come to its shores, it is only reasonable to believe God intended that those who dwell here shall serve him. In the Scriptures quoted, it is clearly stated that God wants good people on this land. If he has them, the wealth of the richest land in the world, the blessings of heaven above and of the earth beneath are to be theirs to enjoy. There is grave danger that we may lose the right to the blessings of this promised land. And I firmly believe that we can do something about it.

Government Reports Startling

The reports of the Kefauver and other investigating committees tell in plain terms that lawlessness and crime are not isolated cases which come to the attention of the authorities but that these conditions exist to an alarming extent in our land. The web of sin has caught in its meshes the high and well-known of our country as well as those of little repute. From senators and ambassadors to the unknown "little" men, we find many taking unfair advantage of the rest of us, financially and politically. That there has been a decline of integrity in public life is an accepted belief. Our moral resources are dangerously depleted. The "five-percenters" who sell influence seem to be an accepted part of society. We have been warned against corruption in high places. Men in low estate also are to be watched. In the recent flood which was so destructive in Kansas City, we heard of truckers charging ten times their regular fees to take household goods out of the danger area and of grocers charging far more than usual for their goods during the flood.

Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5 warns us against rich men who do not give of their substance for the relief of the poor and against poor men whose hearts are not broken and whose spirits are not contrite and whose eyes are full of greediness. The rich who steal their millions are no worse in the sight of God than the poor man who takes but little of that which does not belong to him, or those whose desires are avaricious. One of the signs of the general decay in public morals is that so little indignation is shown at the revelations of malfeasance in office. The ethical standards of people in government is a matter of concern for all of us. Accepting favors—offending the spirit of the law without violating the letter—is frequently brought to our attention. Many businessmen of repute circumvent the law and become rich in doing so.

Our Danger Is From Within

In Mosiah 11 is recorded the experience of an angel appearing to Alma and the sons of Mosiah. This messenger told the young men that they were fighting against the church of God, but that it was secure from all of the attacks which they might make against it; in fact, the angel told them that nothing could overthrow it save it would be the transgression of its people. That is the way it is with our divinely established government. The Lord has a definite interest in this land and its people. As a nation we are strong, and Lincoln spoke truly when he gave this solemn warning, "If danger ever reaches us, it must spring up among us; it cannot come from abroad." I forget who said, "The condition upon which the Lord hath given liberty to mankind is eternal vigilance." The statement is true. We must watch for foes within as well as having fear of Communism and other outside forces. Those abroad who look to this land having the divinely established ensign flying must see self-respect among its people—a self-respect born of integrity. In the nation as in the church, moral prestige is a primary requisite in influencing others. Great nations of the past have declined because of moral decay from within. Each of us can help see to it that this does not happen to our civilization.

To Preserve Our Freedom

The promise of God for continued liberty and freedom of the land is contingent upon the inhabitants of this land worshipping him. The entire burden does not rest upon us, but we do have a tremendous responsibility. Latter Day Saints are scattered all over this vast country. Each one should be a pillar of honor, loyalty, and integrity in his community. The example of just one is not without influence. There are many God-fearing men in the land not of our communion who are "just and honorable men of the earth." We should unite with them and have them unite with us in the saving of our country. The Lord has said he had many agencies working for good that we know not of. We must let our friends and neighbors know that we believe in God and his Christ and in their watch care over this great nation. It is our duty to preach the saving grace of the gospel and warn the righteous to save themselves from the corruption of the world. We should continue to declare that men cannot set at nought the counsels of God. We must continue to bear record of that which we know and assuredly believe concerning these things.

Franchise to Be Used

We are specifically advised in Doctrine and Covenants 95:2 to seek out good and wise men to govern us and then uphold these men, for in the same paragraph the Lord tells us that when the wicked rule the people mourn. It seems to me that such duties are as binding upon our people as baptism. It is the word of the Lord to us. Let us exercise our God-given privilege of stating our preference at the polls for those who should rule over us. God said that he had raised up wise men and just to write the Constitution of our nation. So, it is a God-given privilege that we have of selecting our rulers in local and national affairs. We should take advantage of this opportunity to further the plan of God. Democracy is a wonderful thing in the affairs of the government of our people in the nation and in the church.

Prayer Is Useful in Our Times

Several years ago I had the privilege of seeing a dramatization of the framing of our Constitution as sponsored by the Los Angeles Bar Association. These men had all the help that the Hollywood studios could give them in staging, lighting, and costuming. The total effect was stirring as the trained minds and voices of these members of the Bar Association depicted this historic event. The one thing that still stands out in my memory is that on two or three occasions when the framers of that document of human liberty seemed to have reached a dead end, when they could not find the ideas or phraseology to use, Franklin arose and said, "Gentlemen, we seem to be making no progress. I suggest that we cease our deliberations and call upon Divine Providence for aid." Then that august assembly of some of the best minds any committee ever had would comply with the suggestions of Franklin, and the chaplain would ask God to intercede in their behalf. In a few moments after resuming deliberations, light would come to one of the group, and they proceeded with just the idea or phrase which they had been looking for. So it was as the Lord said—he had raised up good and wise and just men to do the work required for our nation.

The suggestions of Franklin have been given to us in our Scripture, in all three of our Standard Books that we should call upon the Lord for advice, counsel, and inspiration. We are to pray over the work of our hands, over our fields, our homes, and over all things about which we are vitally concerned. We should be concerned over the fact that the Lord chose this land upon which to establish his kingdom and that he is concerned about it and its inhabitants. May all of us do our part in seeing to it that the God of this land, who is Jesus Christ, is worshiped and his laws obeyed. May we see to it that Christ emerges from the eclipse into which he appears to have gone.—DAN B. SORDEN

Reaching Toward God

One beautiful spring evening as I sat wondering why things are as they are, I happened to notice the tall, majestic trees. They seemed to say, as the wind whispered in their lofty tops, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Then I noticed another thing—they were all pointing upward, reaching toward God.

I have also listened to the birds singing from the branches of the trees. Their notes are sweet and clear as they sing, heads held high, reaching toward God.

I have watched deer feeding quietly on a hillside. They never take more than they need and they are always ready to help their fellow creatures. "Do as you would be done by" is their way of reaching toward God.

The tree squirrel is another good example of true stewardship. He scampers around all day, busily gathering his winter supply of food. He chatters his praises as he works, reaching toward God.

When the wild duck, the gray goose, and the swan fly south in the fall to their winter paradise, and north in the spring to their land of promise, they know instinctively that God will provide. As they soar away into the blue, they, too, are reaching toward him.

How it must gladden the heart of our Heavenly Father to have us sing his praises, for are not we his masterpiece? And just as he cares for the children of Mother Nature, so he cares for us if we keep reaching toward him.

A Builder of the Reorganization

Selections from the Memoirs of William
Wallace Blair of the First Presidency

Part Ten: Twenty-three Years in the Presidency

The Great Conference, 1873

THE SEMIANNUAL CONFERENCE convened in the grove at Park's Mills near Council Bluffs, Iowa, on September 3. The attendance was very large. An excursion car conveyed a large number from Plano and Sandwich, Illinois, under the management of Elders Elijah Banta and Bishop I. L. Rogers. This session was a very important one. The number in attendance was variously estimated at from five thousand to ten thousand people, probably the former was nearer the correct number. Reports from nearly all the mission fields were encouraging. The clerk of the conference reported through the Herald as follows:

This conference was the largest ever held by the Reorganized Church. The attendance was large from the beginning; the interest and attention never flagged; there was the profoundest peace, the completest good humor, and most perfect order prevailing ever before observed. . . . At noon on Sunday there were on the grounds four hundred and eighty-one wagons, buggies, and carriages that were stationary, and one hundred and twenty-one in motion. There were also one hundred and twelve tents pitched around the stand and the circle inclosing the seats. . . . It is said by those resident there that our conference was the largest religious gathering ever assembled in the West; and by those whose opinion is entitled to consideration it is pronounced to have been the most orderly and peaceful they ever attended. . . .

Planning to Move Church Headquarters, 1874-1876

On October 17 [1874] I met in council at Plano with Brethren Joseph Smith, I. L. Rogers, and J. W. Briggs, in relation to the latter taking a mission to Utah and publishing a periodical in the interests of the church there, also in respect to selecting some central business location for the church and the press. . . .

On May 11, [1876] a council composed of the First Presidency, Bishopric, and Board of Publication met in the Herald editor's room, in Plano, where it was resolved that I. L. Rogers, David Dancer, and W. W. Blair be a committee to arrange for locating the business center at some other point than Plano. In answer to letters we wrote to various parties at various points, we received many communications; and on the sixth day of June the "locating board" decided to fix the business center of the church in the southwestern corner of Decatur County, Iowa, as soon as practicable. David Dancer, John Scott, and W. W. Blair were made an executive committee to procure means, buy lands, and locate the business center.

Joseph Luff and J. J. Cornish, 1877

Annual Conference convened at Plano on April 6. The committee members on location reported their efforts and were heartily sustained by the Conference. The session lasted seven days, and the meetings for business, prayer, and testimony were attended by the Holy Spirit richly. Much important business was done.

Brethren Joseph Luff and J. J. Cornish of Canada attended this session, and on request of Brother I. L. Rogers to supply our preachers for our branch at Sandwich on Sunday, the eighth, I secured these brethren to speak at the morning and evening services. They were strangers to our people, young in years, new members of the church, and some thought I had made a mistake in my selection, for it was expected that many of the leading citizens of Sandwich would attend our services. I assured the anxious and doubting ones that no mistake had been made. . . . Brother Cornish entered upon his sermon, and from beginning to close the Spirit of the Lord rested upon him with much grace and power. . . . Brother Luff preached a most timely, spiritual, and effective discourse. . . . These young ministers were living witnesses and exemplars of what the Lord does in enlightening and sustaining even the young and inexperienced minister who trusts him faithfully and serves him in spirit and in truth. . . .

Conclusion

(This brings to a close the written Memoirs of President W. W. Blair. His ministry continued until his death on April 18, 1896. He had been attending the annual conference at Kirtland, Ohio, but was suffering from what was described as a severe cold, accompanied at times by sharp internal pain. He was able to start for home, rested a day in Chicago, took a train for home at 10:30 p.m., on the seventeenth, and died on the train near Chariton, Iowa, the next morning.—Editors.)

The year 1951 measures a century since the first efforts to reorganize the forces of the church, scattered by the tragic events at Nauvoo in 1844.

Reprints of the writings of W. W. Blair and E. C. Briggs have been made in the hope of providing historical material and inspiration for use in the services of our churches.

Group Discussion and the Rural Church

By Gerald Gabriel

THE KINGDOM OF GOD on earth is a voluntary, democratic kingdom. Group discussion is the corner stone upon which it is built. "Talking it over" is the natural way of solving problems: it is an essential part of group life. Well-conducted group discussion gives everyone a chance to present facts, express opinions, and offer solutions.

No other meeting reaches more people personally and is as actively participated in as a discussion by the church school class or special interest group.

Group discussions are informal gatherings to accomplish one or more of three purposes: to increase knowledge, to create better understanding, to solve problems. D. E. Lindstrom writes in the Illinois Circular 581.

When we talk with another person face to face instead of depending on hearsay for our understanding of his point of view, we usually understand his position better. In fact, we may find our own opinions are much like his. Thus misunderstanding, wrong information, half-truths—all causes of individual and group conflicts—are often overcome by discussion.

A good guide for group discussion is found in the following:

Preparation for Meeting

Group discussions are informal and should be the predominating impression to all for the first and all other meetings. The people should be well acquainted, have similar interests in the problem to be discussed, be near the same age, education and economic level, so there will be less stratification. If these are present in the larger groups they can so be divided, but all groups should have differences of opinion to stimulate interest and create discussion. It should be explained that the "end" is not being sought, but a "means to an end" is being discussed.

Where to Meet

Small group discussions should be held where they will be centrally located for the ones attending—where people of the community or neighborhood naturally congregate. A school, town hall, community house, or church are usually equipped with chairs, blackboard, lights, restrooms, and other needs of the group. If the meeting is held in one of these public places there should be a reception committee to prepare the place for meeting and see that those attending are made welcome and comfortable. Any member's home is suitable (not the chairman's) if there is ample room. Whatever the place of meeting, it should be private and free from interruptions. The place chosen should be convenient and comfortable. The chairs should not only be comfortable, but should be so arranged that all can remain seated and see anyone who may be speaking. A circle is most desirable. The size of the room should fit the group so that people are neither packed into too small a space nor lost in too large a one. Regular meetings are practical and desirable. Scheduled meetings call for habit and are also desirable. A night in the week and a week in the month chosen to conflict least with heavy work or other regular activities (school, church or other organizations) is most desirable. Adherence to the schedule eventually results in tradition.

Size of the Group

The ideal size for group discussion is about twenty; it may range from eight to forty. If this number is exceeded those attending should be broken down into smaller groups. If this is not feasible, one of the following may be used: a panel for groups from twenty-five to 150, a forum for twenty-five to 200, or a symposium for fifty to 250. If the group is divided into subgroups, they should be limited in time and brought back for summary or further discussion together. No meeting should be held until it lags. It is much better to adjourn while interest is high. The discussion program should not be less than one hour nor more than two hours.

The Chairman

The chairman need not be an expert on the problem to be discussed. He should, however, have some skill in handling people to induce them to talk without saying too much himself. He should have some idea of the subject matter, source of material, and the time to prepare for the discussion. He must not be the type of person to take sides on the subject, but should be capable of holding the group thinking to the subject and also take an interest in challenging or defending various proposals as well as recognizing all sides and opinions relating to the subject. He should know when to keep still as well as possess the ability to speak when the occasion demands it. Most of all, he should be good natured and a rapid thinker, exercising humor and patience when needed.

A good chairman is the life of the discussion group. His is no small task, for he must be able to make proper preparation for the meeting, supply members with material, and prepare tentative summaries and questions to be used at various stages. He must be equal to emergencies that arise, such as long talkers and emotionalism; he must be able to guide the discussion to see that it progresses, and to start and close the meetings on time. If he is a member of the group and knows the participants by name and a little of their background, he can better encourage participation and recognize contributions. The good chairman outlines the subject to be covered, for in such planning he is more able to inspire individual participation.

Topic

If a group grasps the significance of the problem within a few minutes after the opening of the meeting, the discussion will, in all probability, be a success. A topic in which the group is already interested, and one to which they are seeking an answer, makes good discussion material. It must be a topic with which the people are concerned or can become concerned with the proper motivation. It is necessary to begin "where the people are" and proceed from there. The topic chosen must be one in which there is not complete agreement, or there will be no discussion. The topic should be one that is limited in scope and can be adequately covered in the time planned, as well as one that can be divided into small, logical divisions. Most important, the topic must be worded to create thought.

Introduction of the Topic

The topic is introduced by the chairman in as few words as possible, but clearly and definitely defined to stimulate group thinking. This need not be the "bomb shell" type. A general survey of the field, some information and facts on two or more sides of the issue is all that is necessary, if aptly given. When the introduction is completed, questions may be stated. They should not be the "yes" or "no" answer type. Questions to which there is no one answer, comparative questions that require a comparative answer, and questions of why, when, or to what degree are good starters. Alternative questions to which there must be made a choice between opposing ideas, for which the chairman knows that there are those who are going to join opposing forces within the group, are also good questions.

Questions should be well balanced so that the answer will seem logical to a new member when both sides represent their reasons for believing as they do. There must be nothing in the question to indicate the desired answer. It must be thought-provoking and presented within the realm of the experiences and understanding of the people. When the available information is presented (if it is not, it should be postponed until available) and there is some consensus of opinion reached, the ideas should be summarized and the next discussion question taken in its natural sequence. When the possibilities of the question have been examined as the previous one, it is time to proceed to the next one. The chairman should watch for bonds that unite the group to an agreement; watch for progress as suggestions for solution are discussed; and see that the points are discussed freely, then move from point to point. When some agreement has been reached, he should call attention to it to prevent further repetition. He should be sure the facts and information are true. Discussion is weighing, balancing, and coming to some conclusion.

Silence

Silence in the discussion group is almost as embarrassing to the chairman as the loss of control over a meeting, when everyone is trying to talk at once over a "hot" issue. The dead silence after the topic has been introduced may seem to be minutes long, when it is actually only seconds. The novice chairman often tries to break up this silence by restating the question. However, if the question has been carefully prepared and is of vital interest to the group members, he is insulting them. If the group is experienced in discussion, the chairman recognizes the silence as productive. He will allow it to become the primer for discussion. The silence will sooner or later become unbearable and someone will say something. However, the chairman should guard against the person who attempts to break the silence by "wisecracking" and making remarks off the subject. He may steer clear of this situation by calling upon someone he knows is acquainted with the problem and able to start the discussion moving. Should silence occur in mid-class discussion, it may prove to be unifying—a chance for slow thinkers to catch up and make their contributions. It may be a cue, letting the chairman know it is time for a change (a stretch, a new question, or adjournment). Silence may be evidence of too great concern over the outcome of the discussion (this concern may lead members to subject-changing). If silence, on the other hand, is due to the lack of significance of the problem, it may be that the wrong subject has been chosen or that the group has had inadequate stimulation.

Other Methods of Stimulating Thought

It is often found that people have problems to be solved of which they are not aware—or they may be aware of them but have taken them for granted as another sore thumb to be endured. Often the leader in the group is aware of the problem but knows no solution. It is not always easy to convince people that changes are needed so they must be taken through the steps. This being the case, demonstration is very effective.

A movie or slides may present the problem or solution and bring discussion. Visual aids produce effective results. Surveys are also effective if the group makes the survey and has some of the responsibility in compiling the information. The use of case problems by the chairman is often impelling, if the problems are "down to earth" (having some similarity to the group). If the problem is on or near the surface it can be brought to the front by thought-provoking questions. An address or lecture may stimulate thought and bring light, information, and facts that are necessary.

The assignment of reading material for reports often urges group thinking: if this is not practicable, the chairman may present the information in mimeograph form or on the blackboard. In any of these methods the time consumed should be limited, and they should be of such character that they are not boring and tiring. Information should be presented on the level of group understanding and in the light of the interest already present.

Authoritarianism has no place in group thinking. When material is presented, it should be presented for its face value—not for mere expression of opinion. Lectures or addresses are merely sources of information; the group should have the opportunity to make its own decision. People come to meetings to get something they can use, but mostly because they feel wanted and welcome. This does not mean that every contribution is praised. Honest criticism, spoken freely and frankly, as well as sincere praise stimulates individual participation. Authoritarianism is often found in evidence by the decision to have or arrive at a hard, fast answer to a question. The goal of group thinking is to come to a better understanding of the problem under consideration, not necessarily to decide what action should be taken for its solution. If the group is convinced that an immediate decision or action is necessary, this consensus should be terminated by vote and provision for its solution made.

When the Chairman Should Talk

The group discussion chairman may talk too little if he feels he must talk no more than any other member of the group. He talks too much if he feels he must summarize, enlarge, explain, or repeat everything that is said. It is sometimes a temptation for the chairman to take too much part in the "warm-up." This may place him in the center of discussion, making him a referee between opposing sides. Here again, it should be emphasized that group thinking is deliberative. The chairman should confine his comments to summarization and, at an opportune time, inject questions to stimulate further thinking and deliberation. When a question is directed to the chairman, he should reflect the question in a tactful way to the questioner. If this is not feasible and no one else has the information desired, he should excuse himself as chairman and give the information, participating in the discussion as any other member. However, when questions arise as to the procedure of the discussion, it is his duty to explain the procedure. When discussions lag or a timid member holds back, he may ask a question or break something apart to stimulate more intelligent discussion. If the chairman confines himself solely to the task of being chairman, he will have his hands full without attempting to enter the discussion.

When to Close a Meeting

Scheduled activity has its place in group thinking. There are times when it can prove to be a detriment. When a group finds itself without facts, it must adjourn from that part of the discussion until the information is available, and if the discussion following depends upon the information lacking, then adjournment is inevitable. A waste of time and energy will be expended when matters of opinion are being tossed about. When members begin to tire or are eager to get away early for various reasons, the chairman should be cognizant of unrest and move accordingly. Sometimes a "stretch" period is helpful. This may prove to be another stimulant for group thinking—small groups get together and talk it over. The chairman should adjourn the meeting when it is time to go home. Recreation and refreshments play their role in closing the discussion. The "acid test" as to the success of the group discussion will be apparent if the subject is continued during recreation or over refreshments.

Techniques in Handling Group Thinking

The major steps in group discussion are to (1) locate the problem and (2) find the solution to the problem. In locating the problem, the situation should be analyzed in specific detail. First is the consideration of where the group interest is, and next is consideration of the difficulties creating the problem. When the situation is analyzed and specifically detailed it should be summarized into three categories. First, the immediate problems and difficulties. Second, the proposed solutions (presented and listed before discussion.) Third, the discussion of these proposed solutions one by one, considering the basic principles or all the solutions suggested. At this point the group should be arriving at some definition of the problem; therefore, it is timely for the chairman to restate the problem in terms of these findings. If the problem is understandable and adequately defined, the findings of the solution (the next major step) is simplified.

The suggestions for solution of the problem are collected, and when there seems to be no more forthcoming, the chairman, or someone appointed, may eliminate the repeated solutions and combine the minor ones into one or more major solutions. A common mistake of the novice chairman is to accept one suggested solution at a time and discuss it. The result is a very clumsy "muddled" discussion and by all means should be avoided.

An Outline for Handling Group Discussion

I. Locate the problem

- A. Analyze the situation if specifically detailed. This may be done by answering the following questions:

1. Where is the interest?
2. What are the difficulties?
3. What decision is the group facing?

If the answers are all negative, there is nothing to discuss.

- B. Group and summarize the findings of A into these three categories:

1. Immediate problems and difficulties.
2. Proposed solutions.
3. Basic principles or considerations to any solution.

- C. Restate the problem in terms of the results of B.

A group definition: If you get a good statement, it is simple from here on.

II. Finding solutions

- A. Collect the suggested solutions, eliminate the repeated ones, and combine the minor ones into one or more major ones.
- B. Find agreements, lack of knowledge, and differences of opinion.
- C. Supply the needed knowledge and weigh the differences that still exist.

These three questions will help:

1. What is true?
2. What is desirable?
3. What is feasible?

- D. Summarize the discussion and draw conclusions. These conclusions will be in terms of:

1. Proposed course of action.
2. Principles of guidance.

From Faith to Knowledge

I was born into a Latter Day Saint home and grew up next door to the church. Our home was one where visiting apostles and missionaries stayed when visiting the branch at Bay Port, Michigan, and we always felt richly blessed by their association.

I would like to relate an experience of "visual education," in the reality of God. I had a brown, raised mole on my hip, and one night, before retiring, I noticed that there were red, finger-like projections extending out around it. I immediately thought of cancer, and my mind was filled with dread. Having an operation for a ruptured appendix at the age of six had left me with an abnormal fear of surgery. Then I thought of the consecrated oil, which we were never without, and as I used it I offered a short prayer for the desired blessing. I fully expected that in the morning those red streaks would be gone. But, when morning came, not only were these gone, but the mole had also disappeared, and the skin where it had been was normal and smooth. I'll never forget how I felt that morning; God seemed so near I literally trembled in his presence. This feeling stayed with me for some time.

Though I have had numerous divine healings, this one always comes to mind when doubts assail and try to reason away less positive happenings. This I saw, and nothing can change my knowledge of it. These blessings have come, not because of any special worthiness on my part, but because God knew I would need this sure knowledge that he is. I relate it only to strengthen others' faith that all things are possible with God.

In Favor of Youth Camps

We move around quite a bit, and the first thing we do when we settle in a new place is to hunt up the church there. Two years ago my son and I went to choir practice together for the first time; this summer Dale went to youth camp, and I taught a class at the junior youth camp at Silver Lake. It was a wonderful experience for both of us. I look forward to attending next year with my daughter, Sandra. My prayer is that more people will volunteer for youth camp work in the future; both teachers and students can gain a great deal from the classes.

The Faith of a Child

Children often have more faith than adults. When our oldest son, Lloyd, was about five years old he came rushing into the house one day, shut the door, and said, "Mamma, drop everything and kneel down and pray right away." I left my work, and we all knelt and asked for God's protection. Then he jumped up with a smile and went back outdoors to play. I have wondered many times why he was led to do this—what might have happened if we had not sought divine protection.

Once, when one of our daughters was quite ill, I asked her if she thought I should call the doctor. She looked at me questioningly and said, "No, Mamma, don't call a doctor. The Bible says for us to call the elders." I felt very humble and a little ashamed of myself. After she was administered to she got out of bed and dressed. Her faith had made her whole.

When our youngest son, Billy, was four, we went to visit my parents. Upon our arrival Billy's grandfather told him that his grandmother was in bed with a sick headache. While we were unloading our things from the car, Billy slipped into the bedroom and said, "Grandma, I will ask Jesus to make you well. Soon you will be all right," and he knelt by her side and prayed for her. When we came in the house, Mother was up. She told us that while Billy was praying the pain left her head. Again I thought, "Oh, for the faith of a little child."

Perhaps as the Saints strive to build Zion they would do well to follow the example of faith set by their sons and daughters, for as Jesus said, "A little child shall lead them."

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

Is it a fact beyond dispute that section 109 and section 110 were written by Joseph Smith? I understand they did not appear in Doctrine and Covenants until after his death and we do not know by whose authority they were included.

Oregon

N. W.

Answer:

It is true that these sections, 107, 109, 110 of our Doctrine and Covenants were first published in the August, 1844, edition, which was two months after Joseph's death. We do not know whether he endorsed them. We do not know whether he would have included them in the 1844 edition had he lived. They were not submitted before publication to the church in General Assembly. They were published by John Taylor after Joseph's death. We cannot say that it is a fact beyond dispute that they were written in their present form by Joseph Smith. (See tract Baptism for the Dead by Charles R. Hield and Russell F. Ralston for further discussion of these sections.)

ISRAEL A. SMITH

Question:

At what age was John the Baptist baptized? (See Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4.)

Ontario

D. S. W.

Answer:

According to the Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4 John the Baptist was baptized while he was yet in his childhood. As for the exact chronological date for his baptism there seems to be no evidence available in the scriptural commentaries, concordances, or other sacred literature.

Question:

Can you name the number of revelations in Utah Doctrine and Covenants that are authentically given through Joseph Smith?

Answer:

This phase of the total question is too involved to adequately answer in this column, for it deals with many involved factors of a whole book.

JOHN BLACKMORE

Question:

Please explain what is meant by Isaiah 11: 7-10. Is this to be literal or is it actually to take place in the thousand years' reign?

Texas

A. D. C.

Answer:

The whole chapter is a prophecy of the latter-day restoration of Israel and the setting up of the kingdom of God, with concurrent events. But in verses six to nine the prophecy runs over into a later period which we call the millennium, and shows the results of the Restoration and the kingdom with Christ at the head, indicating that not only the people but the whole creation has been changed.

The reference to the wolf and the lamb dwelling together, the calf and the young lion and the fatling, with a little child herding them; the cow and the bear feeding together with their young; and the child playing by the hole of the asp are symbolic expressions revealing the nature of some of the changes that are to take place, yet they may be literally fulfilled. The central thought is summed up in verse nine:

They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

Under the rule of Christ, which will be ushered in at his coming as declared by the prophecy of this chapter, many other changes will be wrought by which the earth, with all living things, animal and vegetable, together with the forces of nature such as climate, weather, etc., will be changed for good.

I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts.—Malachi 3: 11.

And every corruptible thing, both of man, or of the beasts of the field, or of the fowls of heaven, or of the fish of the sea, that dwell upon all the face of the earth, shall be consumed; and also that of element shall melt with fervent heat; and all things shall become new, that my knowledge and glory may dwell upon all the earth. And in that day the enmity of man, and the enmity of beasts; yea, the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5.

In that day wickedness will be suppressed, Satan bound, and destructive pests destroyed. Then the Lord "will cause the shower to come down in his season, . . . and the earth shall yield her increase."—Ezekiel 34: 26, 27. All nature will be kindly, and the world full of blessing. Christ, the root of Jesse, will rule in equity and justice (verses 4, 10) and for a thousand years peace will prevail upon earth.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

If your ministers are called of God why do some fail and drop out?

Michigan

J.R.G.

Answer:

A call to the ministry does not constitute a wall of fire around a man to make it impossible for him to be tempted or fall. Paul says of himself that he overcame only through Christ. It is said of the prophets that they were "of like passions with us." Even Jesus was "tempted in all points as we are." He repeatedly warned his disciples against temptation and sin, and thanked the Father that he had lost none but Judas. A minister is still human and, though striving to save others, still has his own salvation to work out. He must still fight temptation and be forever on guard against sin. For some to fail is not new or strange. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Every man is the guardian of his own soul.

SILVER LAKE, WASHINGTON.—A record attendance was noted at the Northwest reunion held August 3-12. Throughout the week, nearly 1,500 Saints and friends gathered for daily classes, recreation, and preaching services. An estimated 2,000 attended the reunion on weekends.

The reunion committee was comprised of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, chairman; Bishop M. E. Lasater, and District Presidents E. E. Hammel of Spokane district, Sam Clark of British Columbia, and G. L. Swenson of Seattle district.

Included in the personnel for the reunion were guest speakers Apostle Reed M. Holmes, who served in the absence of Apostle Gleazer; High Priest F. O. Davies, pastor of Walnut Park church in Independence, Missouri. General Church appointees working in the Northwest who assisted in reunion activities were Elders James Kemp, Vern Webb, Paul Wellington, and Missionary Don Landon.

All children's activities and the children's program were under the direction of Brother Wellington, pastor of the Seattle First congregation. Sister Wana McDole and Brother Don Landon assisted in the children's work. Junior high young people were led in classwork and activities by Brother Don Landon. Elders Webb and Kemp supervised senior high and older young people's activities and classwork. The women were directed by Sisters Evelyn Hight, Ema Lundeen, and Bertha Morrison. Elder Ray Sowers, pastor of the Tacoma congregation was reunion music director. Special music activities of the reunion centered in the junior choir directed by Dave Kaleikau of Honolulu, Hawaii, and Ray Sowers; the reunion choir directed by Sister Melva Crum of Seattle; and the reunion orchestra and band directed by Ray Sowers. Sister Mary Ellen Turner assisted with the junior choir.—Reported by DON LANDON

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.—Camp Wasila, district junior youth camp, was held at Silver Lake, July 24-29. Eighty-five young people attended camp. Participating on the staff were Don Landon, Evelyn Baird, Jim Clark, Fay Wellington, Paul Wellington, Dona Roll, Clyde Merriman, Paul Duvic, Thelma Bacon, Ralyn Baird, and Wana McDole. Hattie Belknap, Lulu Premo, Agnes Johnson, Tora Freestad, and Maude Foster were camp cooks.—Reported by DONA ROLL

MIAMI, OKLAHOMA.—Evangelist Ray Whiting held a series of missionary meetings during the month of May. At the conclusion of the meetings James A. Medley, William Frank Althouse, Ella Mae Forrest, Robert Laverne Colvard, William Vernon Babbitt, Virgil Leon Babbitt, Cecil Monroe Craft, and Dolores Dean Crownover were baptized. On July 20 Mrs. Pearl Lady was baptized by the pastor, Elder B. F. Kyser.

The annual vacation church school was held beginning May 28 under the supervision of Mrs. Ralph Jackson. Sister Jackson was assisted by twenty-three workers and various members of the priesthood. The total attendance was sixty-eight.

A branch business meeting was held June 26. The following new officers were elected: B. F. Kyser, branch president; J. D. Rook, church school director; Mary Leka, women's leader; Mrs. Bob Warnberg and B. F. Kyser Jr., children's supervisors; Mrs. C. L. Rook, music director; Edith Wright, branch clerk, Ova N. Ramsey, treasurer; Mrs. Walter Sample, church school secretary; William Bays, young people's leader; Arthur Dixon, auditor; Ralph Jackson, building committee chairman; Mrs. B. F. Kyser, Jr., publicity agent; Mrs. H. C. Shepherd, librarian; Walter Sample, solicitor; Mrs. Traverse Staton, book steward.

The women's department sponsored family night with a covered dish supper July 10. Entertainment for the evening was under the direction of J. D. Rook.

The evening services for July and August were dismissed to attend services at the reunion at Racine, Missouri. Elder Arthur Dixon, district young people's leader and Elder B. F. Kyser were guest speakers August 19 and August 26, respectively.

The homes of twenty-one families of the Saints were flooded July 15.

Joan Staton and Bob Adams have enrolled at Graceland College.—Reported by BETTY KYSER

GOODLAND, KANSAS.—The annual business meeting was held August 5, and the following officers were elected: Richard Marolf, pastor; Inez Been, branch clerk; Conrad Graybill, branch solicitor; O'ella Marolf, publicity agent; Pauline Roberts, women's director; Florence Taylor and Glen Middleton, youth directors; Alice Ingram, children's director; O'ella Marolf, music director; Bob Cowan, church school superintendent; Byron Graybill, assistant church school superintendent; Shirley Cowan, librarian; Glen Middleton, branch treasurer; Libby Stapp, church school secretary; J. R. Graybill, historian; Barney Been, caretaker; Kenny Carl, Barney Been, Glen Curry, and Harve Ingram, building committee.—MRS. E. R. MAROLF

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS.—The men in the branch have worked on improvements on the building during the spring and summer. February 28, Elaine Boyd, Frank Hoskin and his two sons, Franklin, Jr., and David, were baptized by Seventy Don Kyser. They were confirmed by Elders Dale Crown and C. C. Martin. The Graceland Bank entertained in the Eugene Ware Auditorium on March 14. Bishop and Sister Walter Johnson of Independence, Missouri, visited the branch on March 28. Brother Johnson gave the morning sermon. President Israel A. Smith spoke to the group on April 29. Elder J. C. Stuart of Chicago began a three weeks series of meetings on May 13. Nevada and Mapleton assisted with the music. The meetings were closed on May 27 with a baptismal service. Helen Hood was baptized. The women's department presented Brother Stuart with a tray, made by a local member, for his wife showing the appreciation of the branch for the sacrifice she made that he might labor with the membership.—Reported by SUSIE LENEVE

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—Out-of-town members of the church who visited the Stone Church in July were: Mildred Sant Amour, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde W. Ballinger, Blanche H. Beck, Mr. and Mrs. Beuron Boyd and family, Mrs. Clarence Braby, Sarah Bumgardner, Mr. and Mrs. Lester A. Campbell, Mrs. O. J. Campbell and Martha Jean, Clifford Carlson, Lewella E. PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—The annual district conference was held August 25 and 26. The business session was conducted Saturday evening. The general theme of the conference was "Observing Church Ordinances." An ordination service was held Sunday morning. William Wentzel was ordained to the office of deacon, Thomas Freeland and Ben Cooper to the office of elder. Prayer service followed this meeting. At the morning preaching service, Christina, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Marshall of San Francisco, California, was blessed. Apostle Draper delivered the morning sermon, after which luncheon was served by the women's department. Martha Sethman and Oliver Hough, Sr., both of

Fayette City, Pennsylvania, were baptized in the afternoon. A discussion led by Maurice Draper concluded the services of the conference.—Reported by MARGIE WALTHER

OSAGE AND NEWCASTLE, WYOMING.—Philip and Robert Sundstrom were baptized by Priest Forrest Julius on August 12. On August 19, Saints from Osage, Newcastle, and Alva, Wyoming; Spearfish and Rapid City, South Dakota, met at the home of Sister Gertrude Mahoney at Hulett, Wyoming, for church school and a basket dinner. In the afternoon Philip and Robert Sundstrom were confirmed by Elder George Mefford of Rapid City. August 26, the Osage and Newcastle group had as guest speaker, Priest Dale Larson of Deadwood, South Dakota.—Reported by MRS. FORREST JULIUS INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—Sharon Evon, daughter of Mrs. Lester Hein, was blessed June 3 by Elders Fred O. Davies and Lyman Smith at the Walnut Park Church.

MINOT, NORTH DAKOTA.—On August 19 church services and a picnic were held at the Reese Whitted farm at Logan with Elder Nelt Wager and Priest Orrin Wilcox in charge. Following the church service, three children were baptized. The candidates were Beverly Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Smith of Minot, and Clinton and Larry Beeter, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Beeter of Logan. Confirmation service was held following the baptismal service. A picnic lunch was served. Approximately fifty-three members were present for the services.—Reported by VIRGIL D SMITH

Celebrates Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. David T. Miller of Huntington Park, California, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on June 18, 1951, at the home of their son, Raymond Miller in Los Angeles. Another son, Leo, their grandchildren, and other relatives were present for the occasion.

They were married on June 18, 1901, at Oskaloosa, Iowa, and on March 29, 1908, were baptized members of the Reorganized Church. Each year they grow white snapdragons in their front yard especially to adorn the altar of the church. They are devoted, consecrated people who find happiness in serving others and are ever ready to help those who are less fortunate.

Observe Fiftieth Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Pennington of Mechanicsville, Iowa, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on Sunday, August 19, by renewing their marriage vows in a golden wedding service read by Elder Don Cassiday. They were married on August 14, 1901, at Fairchild, Illinois.

Present for the occasion were their children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, as well as friends and neighbors. They have eight sons: Levi, Jr., James, Virgil, Homer, Jasper, Robert, Joe, and Oliver; three daughters: Myrtle Hughes, Kathryn Schultz, and Ruby Smith; twenty-nine grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren.

Brother Pennington has served the church as a priest since November 7, 1926.

A Nursery for Prospective Saints

By Sadi Moon Nagel

MY STEWARDSHIP," she called it, this straight, slender woman with the silver gray hair and the girlish walk. It was Donna Haden speaking of the Lamoni Branch Nursery.

After twenty-five years, it would be only natural for her to call it "my stewardship." And certainly with upwards toward one thousand youngsters who have been "educated" in this Zionics institution, it is not unrightly named.

Thirty years ago Donna Haden was a missionary wife and mother. Her husband was busy out in the field preaching the gospel. Her three children, William, Juanita, and Geneva, were with her at home in Independence. In those days in order to have the bare necessities of life, missionary families had to help make their own way.

Besides doing all the family laundry, sewing, mending, and gardening, Donna Haden went to school. She had taken a course in mothercraft in the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences from Eunice Smith and Anne Friend Roberts. The next year she took a course in religious education. She was graduated from there in 1921. The next year she took the normal kindergarten course. In 1923 her daughter Juanita began the same course. They wrote their notebooks together. They were assigned the same circle for practice teaching. When Juanita taught the second grade in the Independence schools, Mother Donna worked in the Walnut Park nursery on Sundays and in the private Day Kindergarten sponsored by the Department of Women. She didn't charge for her services then, and in all the years following has never taken money for her work. "And we have always had our needs," she said. "We've never been in want. My children have all obtained good educations and have been happy that they were a part of a missionary family."

When she finished her training in Independence, some nine years—night school and afternoons at first—she made it a subject of prayer and fasting, asking the Lord where he wanted her to serve. She was qualified to teach almost any age group. The weeks passed, and she worked at Walnut Park in the little kindergarten. The work was hard. The church was facing the depression years.

She was resting one Sunday afternoon after a strenuous morning of teaching when she saw in a panoramic vision little children as flowers with human souls. The flowers expressed to her just how beautiful each soul is in the mind of God. She saw thousands of such lovely flowers. And she was shown that she should go to Lamoni with her three children and make her contribution there, working among the smallest children.

THE WAY OPENED UP in a marvelous but simple manner. Mother Haden and her three children were all asked to teach at the Campus in Independence for the summer during the six weeks of vacation church school; this gave them excellent experience. They were offered a house in Lamoni. Juanita procured the job of teaching kindergarten in the Lamoni Public Schools. And the twenty-five years of service in Lamoni began.

Though she never took money in payment for the work in her nursery, Mother Haden has received many a loaf of homemade bread and jars of jelly. Sometimes when someone wanted to do something for her, she said, "Here, take this rug and bring it back nice and clean." In gratitude fathers have helped her build the equipment for the nursery, which has always been held at her home. Recently some young fathers built a wading pool. The swings and climbers, some of which are twenty years old and still sturdy, have been built by fathers of nursery youngsters.

DONNA HADEN'S own three children have long since grown and married and had children of their own. Geneva is Mrs. Carlos Smith in Blue Springs, Missouri, where her husband is pastor. Juanita is Mrs. Fred E. Burow, a nursery teacher in Battle Creek, Iowa. Mother Haden's son is known to the Saints in Oklahoma as Seventy William Haden, a missionary for Christ as was his father before him.

And Mother Haden has continued to be nursery mother to many little folks each year, being a missionary in her own right. She has handled as many as seventy-five youngsters in her nursery at reunion in Lamoni, without help. Her home, which she speaks of simply as "the nursery," is open seven days a week to the little ones. The Sunday enrollment for children under the age of four is one hundred. On Sundays in recent years they have been meeting at the grade school activity room in Lamoni, but on the other six days of the week the children have gone to Mother Haden's.

The little children who have come to her have received, as she calls it, "religious education." "Give me a child until he is three," she says, "and his knowledge of Christ will never leave him. He will always be a Christian."

WHEN A LITTLE CHILD came to Mother Haden's nursery—its formal name is the "Lamoni Branch Nursery"—he was greeted each morning with cheerfulness and personal interest. Mother Haden was always ready to listen to him and talk with him. Each day between fifteen and twenty-five children came.

He took off his own wraps and put them on a hanger on a little rack just the right height for him. The new boys and girls learned what to do from the ones who had been coming a longer time. There were also the circle leaders, known as the circle father, circle mother, circle nurse, circle doctor, circle grandfather, and circle grandmother, all of whom functioned somewhat like the ones in real life. They were chosen because of their helpfulness and ability to lead the others. From the beginning the children were taught independence. No sick child was allowed to come to nursery school, for after the first objective—religious education—came health, which is closely allied with it. The nursery co-operated closely with the public health division of the Lamoni Public Schools and with the public health nurse. Mother Haden was always well posted on Iowa state health conditions.

After the child started the day in the nursery, he found material that he could use to his own choosing: building blocks, molding clay, a play house, educational toys; and in the summer, the sandbox, climbers, swings, wading pool, and outdoor playthings. The boys and girls were taught to improvise in their play equipment. A few years ago a poor child brought an old steering wheel for their "bus"—a double row of chairs—and he was happy because he had been able to do something to share. He had seen other children bring their choice toys to share.

AFTER THE FREE PLAYTIME, the children gathered in a circle and Mother Haden sat with them for their religious education period. At this time they exchanged ideas and discussed problems. They heard stories and used finger plays about members of the family helping each other and about Jesus. There were many finger plays. All the pictures they enjoyed had finger plays to go with them.

This period was the time when they might feed the birds, and tell about what they do to help people or they might dramatize the story of the Christ child. Or, between Thanksgiving and Christmas, they might board their "bus" and take a portion of their trip from Nazareth to Bethlehem. That Christmas journey was begun right after Thanksgiving and completed on Christmas Eve. During the Christmas season in the east window of Mother Haden's home hung the Bethlehem star toward which their journey was directed.

In their circle they often sang. Their favorite songs were "Away in a Manger" and "Jesus Loves Us." Socialization was emphasized. There were no toy guns or bows and arrows in the nursery. They never played war nor dressed in that fashion. Mother Haden was alert to their childish conversations, and, should elements which were not in keeping with Zion and Jesus' way creep in, she was there to direct gently and wisely.

After this period of conversation and stories and songs, the children enjoyed a pick-up lunch of apples or leafy vegetables which they raised in their little garden. As they ate together, they learned to say "Thank you," and "If you please," and they learned to remember the little courtesies. Mother Haden felt that by the time a child left her and was ready for kindergarten he should make a good social adjustment to other children and to adults.

After their lunch the boys and girls listened to the "Children's Corner," broadcast over the radio from Iowa State College. They marched to the music, sang the songs, and listened to the stories. Then the morning was about gone, and it was time for their parents to come for them. In cold weather, the house was ventilated; the boys and girls put on their wraps, and the doors and windows were opened. A spotlight was thrown on one of the lovely pictures of the child Jesus or his friends, and they heard some stories about Bible children. They were taught to quote from the Bible and to tell the stories.

MOTHER HADEN'S DAY of service was not completed when noon came. She went to visit the parents of her youngsters in the afternoon, giving parent guidance. This she started thirteen years ago after taking the course on nursery work by extension from Dr. Grace Langdon in New York City. The

The women's department of one branch is sending a representative. Mrs. A has been chosen to make the trip. Her husband is assuming the responsibility of their school-age children while she is away. advice and counsel she brought to the parents was rich with the experiences of many years of work with the children of Lamoni, broad reading in the nursery field and related fields—everything from nature to religion—from many visits to other nurseries, and the wisdom that comes from communion with a loving Heavenly Father.

Each child was visited in the home and was brought a plant as a gift from his nursery mother. Mother Haden understood her children better by meeting them in their homes and talking to their parents. She found on occasion that there was need for food or clothing, and when she saw this she set the proper wheels in motion to see that these situations were remedied. She worked closely with the welfare agencies, the pastor, the bishop, the health authorities, and the public schools.

Many young workers have trained under Mother Haden. She felt that nursery workers should be with her for five years for a full understanding of the work. Some of those who have trained have gone out and started nurseries of their own. Some are continuing the church school nursery in Lamoni now.

Kindergarten teachers in the Lamoni schools could hardly wait to meet Mother Haden, for children who came through her nursery were ready to participate the first day in kindergarten in a happy way. She made her visit to the kindergarten classes early in the year with her gift of flowers from the never-ending variety which she and the children grew.

MOTHER HADEN has been a pioneer in the field of nursery work, even in the nation. When she first started twenty-five years ago, she wrote to Washington, D.C., asking for extension work in nursery training, but it was not until about thirteen years later that it became available. In the meantime Mother Haden had been running a successful nursery and turning out some twenty-five educated four-year-olds each year.

Part of the reason that the little children who came to Mother Haden for training are well started is the general atmosphere of her presence. She treated each one with respect. They never heard her murmur nor complain—for she never does. Neither did her own children hear such from her throughout all the years. Once, as Brother Haden was leaving to go out on a mission, her daughter, Juanita, saw tears in her mother's eyes. The little girl said, "You mustn't feel sad, Mother, because Daddy is going out to preach the gospel." The little girl had learned well the lesson of cheer.

Her personality is enriched by her many hobbies. She loves flowers and plants and animals and shares her love with the children. She learned how to make corsages, and at the recent Lamoni Stake reunion had a beautiful corsage almost daily for the women's class teacher. And she's a missionary. She spent the summer with her daughter in Blue Springs, Missouri, and immediately made friends with the grocery lady, sharing with her bit by bit the joy of the gospel. She has taken numbers of children into her home over the years, giving a mother's love and

H EADLINES IN BOLDFACE TYPE are shocking millions of Americans across the nation. TEEN-AGE DOPE ADDICTS TELEVISED ON SENATE HEARINGS . . . YOUTHFUL SLAYER GETS LIFE . . . ADOLESCENT BOYS ROB STORE, STEAL CAR. Those are just a random sampling from one morning paper.

Cold statistics are even more damning to young America:

Fifteen per cent of the murders in the United States are charged up to teenagers. They are responsible for 51 per cent of the burglaries and 30 per cent of the rape cases in the nation. In New York City alone, there are 4,000 school-age youngsters who are dope addicts.¹

Many adults read the shocking headlines and feel that "it couldn't happen in my family" or "it couldn't happen in my town." During this past spring, small-town parents have had their smug belief that teen-age immorality is city-bred shattered. Little places like Borger, Texas; New Haven, Indiana; and Belvidere, Illinois, were found to be organized in "nonvirgin clubs." There is scant comfort in their blanket defense: "If it's here, then it's everywhere. I guess we're no worse than any other town." Or in the self-righteous excuse made by the mother of one of the delinquent girls: "You can't blame me for Janie's predicament. Why, she never learned a thing about sex in my house. We never mentioned the word."²

We've had our heads in the sand long enough already to do irreparable damage in the lives of hundreds of young people. It's time we began to realize that tragedy is not limited to the other person. It can touch our family and our town as easily as any other. If "nonvirgin clubs" are not yet popular in our town, it isn't because our girls are any better than the teen-agers of Belvidere or Borger; it's just that the idea may not have occurred to them. If our high school is not riddled with dope addicts and the resulting trail of crimes, it isn't because our kids can resist temptation better than New York City youngsters; it's just because the dope peddlers haven't got around yet to Fairland, or Independence, or Oshkosh.

L E T'S TAKE A LOOK at some of these unhappy teen-agers . . . and they are unhappy, as all confused people must be!

"Sure," shrugs a seventeen-year-old boy in the East, "all the girls I know have affairs by the time they're sixteen. Why not?"³ No one has given them an answer, least of all their parents. As a high school girl puts it, "My mother says I should be a virgin when I marry, but she doesn't tell me why."⁴ Who can give her one good reason?

"There's nothing else to do for any fun," a fifteen-year-old girl from the Bronx says sadly. "We don't have any activities at school. The teachers don't get paid for extra hours, so the Board of Education had to cut out all social parties and after-school activities. We have no recreation center in my neighborhood, and the kids are bound to get into trouble standing around on street corners with no money and nothing to do."⁵

In Mattoon, Illinois, where a nonvirgin club was exposed and sensationalized in the newspapers, a fifteen-year-old girl gave much the same explanation. "In small towns, we all get bored easily. All teen-agers like to belong to clubs, and it's always more exciting if they're secret. Unless their parents really take an interest in them, boys and girls can get in with a bad group."⁶ I doubt if there can be a more damning indictment of parents than the charge of indifference.

"Sure, I've heard about monogamy and fidelity," another disillusioned high school student scoffs, "but who believes in that kind of stuff any more?" Certainly not teen-agers who have only to pick up a daily paper to learn that the number of divorces in many cities now equals the number of marriages. They can have no ideal of fidelity when all around them divorce has become so misused that it has become nothing better than legal prostitution, respectable promiscuity.

"My mother tells me she thought women became pregnant from kissing up until she was married," titters a sophisticate of sixteen, "and she expects me to be just as dumb." Thousands of parents are too embarrassed or too ignorant of the facts themselves to give their children honest, positive sex information. The result is a smattering of ignorance and miscellaneous facts picked up on the street corners and in school lavatories—much more dangerous than complete innocence.

SEX EXPERIMENTS are not the only unhealthy indulgences of modern youth. In Illinois, and doubtless in other states, the newest fad is "Hadocol parties." Instead of an evening of Coke, hamburgers, and jive records, the simple object of these parties is to get high on Hadocol. Hadocol, as easy to buy at most drugstores as a bottle of nose drops, contains the same percentage of alcohol as wine. A tavern keeper caught selling beer or liquor to minors would be run out of town, but who has yet heard of a corner druggist being arrested for selling Hadocol to a teen-ager?

More sinister are the "joy parties" which teen-agers are throwing across the nation. They start the evening drinking cheap wine to get a "kick." Then someone introduces marijuana cigarettes (also called tea, sticks, reefers, hay, gauge, muggers, and boom) which were given him free as a come-on by a drug "pusher." The kids smoke them and get the big kick the pusher promised them. Then the "joy" parties become orgies, in which participants have later admitted to investigators that they indulged in various forms of sexual perversion. "It made our love-making more exciting," one teen-age girl explained. And a boy commented, "After smoking a stick, girls would go wild and do things they wouldn't do other times."

Any drug peddler considers this free gift of trial "reefers" to teen-agers a good investment. He knows that later they will come back for more, which he will be happy to sell them for prices ranging from twenty-five cents to one dollar a cigarette. He knows further that a high percentage of those who become marijuana addicts will soon be trying heroin for the greater kick that it produces. Novices first take heroin by sniffing it from a small mirror or from the finger nails . . . the mirror is preferred because there is less waste. Once "on the horse," the need for the drug soon becomes so intense that victims must learn to "main line" it (inject it directly into the blood stream) with a "spike" and an eye dropper, rinsing it out with their own blood in order to get the last grain of the dope. At this stage the addict no longer gets a kick from the narcotic. He simply takes it because he must, because the absence of it in his body brings on indescribable agony. To get this expensive relief from suffering, the addict will turn to any crime . . . prostitution, confidence games, robbery, assault, murder. A large percentage of teen-age crime can be traced directly to the frantic need for money to buy dope.

WHAT IS THE ANSWER to this tragedy of youth? Why should so many young people be so undisciplined and frankly criminal that one of our own teen-age boys, returning from a CAP camp, should make this comment: "The other kids think you have to break all the rules in the book to have any fun"? How can we help them to know better?

Let's start by admitting that the three agencies which might be expected to develop good moral instincts in young people have failed. Parents have failed when they are too smug to realize that their children are not automatically immune to all temptations simply because they are their children. Parents have failed to accept the challenge to give their children honest, accurate sex information. . . . "You can't blame me for Janie's predicament. She never learned a thing about sex in my house." Parents have failed to measure up in giving their children the proper example of fidelity, integrity, and happy adult attitudes that young people require as models for their own behavior. Parents have failed to protect their children from unscrupulous men when they continue to allow sex perversion and dope peddling to be treated by the courts as minor crimes.

EXCEPT FOR A FEW enlightened ministers and lay workers, churches have failed their young people in the important job of training and inspiring them to clean, moral living. Too much time is wasted cramming biblical history and doctrine down the throats of church school students when what they need is honest, detailed discussions of teen-age problems and guidance in the art of growing up. Two outstanding exceptions from this in our own church are Dr. Roy Cheville and Dr. Floyd McDowell. Dr. Cheville deserves applause from parents and teachers as well as students for his frank series of quarterlies The Latter Day Saint Youth Looks at His World (particularly the topic "What Is Our Church's Mission to the World?"). Dr. McDowell has given more help than he may realize to teen-agers who have heard his sermon on moral living (with the one-finger symphony). My class of Zion's Leaguers still talk about it after hearing it at their youth retreat last spring.

Schools have failed to include classes in family relationships and basic sex information in their curriculum because some board members and parents have stupidly carried their own repressions and ignorance over into the field of education. To them sex is "dirty" and ought to be ignored. Schools in many cities and small towns fail to provide adequate recreation facilities and organized parties because, as the girl in the Bronx explained, "teachers aren't paid for overtime." Schools fail to protect their students through proper discipline when gamblers are able to solicit bets within school buildings or maintain school-boy bookies to take bets for them; when fixes have almost become more of a rule than an exception in such sports as basketball; when dope peddlers can walk into a classroom under the teacher's eye to make deliveries; when teen-age "pushers" can sell their marijuana and heroin in halls and lavatories; when addicts can sniff heroin from their fingernails in class; when high school gangs are as tightly organized and vicious as big-time mobs.

training. Her hobby is the kingdom—anything that she can think to do she does.

The home's greatest asset, Mother Haden feels, is the child, not the parents. She suggested in her parent guidance that every home should have a family council, where each member might express his desires and be met with respect and loving wisdom. And each home, she suggests, should have family prayer.

Mother Haden's sweet smile will not be among the children of Lamoni regularly from now on. With the 1951 Lamoni Stake reunion she bade good-by to her duties as nursery mother to Lamoni's children—some are almost thirty years old and have sent their own children to Mother Haden and the Lamoni nursery. She is paying respect to her sixty-nine years and finding a little home in Independence, the Center Stake, where her sweet influence and wise counsel will still be available to the mothers of the church through her busy pen and friendly visiting.

It has been a personal pleasure for the writer to give this tribute to one of the church's great women for she was a pupil in Mother Haden's nursery twenty-five years ago.

Lila Mair, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Mair of Hammond, Indiana, and Fred Miles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Willis Miles of Inslow, Indiana, were married June 3 at the Reorganized Church in Hammond. Elder Perry Mair, brother of the bride, officiated. The groom is stationed at Ft. Riley, Kansas.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Roland R. Baber of Owensboro, Kentucky, (formerly of Kansas City, Missouri) announce the birth of a daughter, Noralee, born August 4. Mrs. Baber, before her marriage, was Virginia Lee Shockley.

A daughter, Terry LaVonne, was born on March 4 to Mr. and Mrs. Heman C. Martin of Grandview, Missouri. She was blessed on June 17 by Elders Lester Bronson and Marion Bronson. Mrs. Martin is the former Doris Harp.

A son, Mark Ernest, was born on March 4 to Mr. and Mrs. Daniel N. Binns of Lenexa, Kansas. He was blessed on June 3 by Elders F. Roy Whipple and H. Ross Higdon. Mrs. Binns is the former Gwendolyn Harp. Both parents attended Graceland College.

A daughter, Katharine Jean, was born on March 12 to Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Radicke of Battle Creek, Michigan. She was blessed on September 2 by her grandfather, J. V. Dent, and an uncle, J. H. Dent, at Chatham, Ontario.

A daughter, Kris Ann, was born on July 17 to Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Ulican of Des Moines, Iowa. She was blessed on September 12 by her grandfather, High Priest Samuel M. Zonker, and Elder Marion Pease. Mrs. Ulican is the former Junebelle Zonker of Wellsburg, West Virginia. Both parents attended Graceland College, 1946-48.

Mr. and Mrs. Palmer Phillips of Independence, Missouri announce the birth of a son, Clark Allen, born August 6 at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Phillips is the former Gene DeBarthe.

DEATHS

ROGERS.—Ida May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Phedelia Brown, was born February 16, 1860, at Galesburg, Michigan, and died July 11, 1951, at the home of a daughter in Independence, Missouri. On October 23, 1878, she was married to Frank T. Rogers; four children were born to them. Mr. Rogers and a son, Albert Marion, preceded her in death. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 10, 1901, and from that time on was a devoted member. In 1912, when the family moved to Montana, her home became headquarters for missionaries preaching in that vicinity, and they were always furnished transportation to their next field of assignment. She had lived in Independence since 1928.

Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Sarah Hickey of Independence, with whom she had made her home; and Mrs. Nellie Barker of Ottumwa, Iowa; a son, Webster P. Rogers of Warrensburg, Missouri; a half-brother, Dolly Brown of Galesburg, Michigan; three half-sisters: Mrs. E. C. Parker and Mrs. Mattie Shedd of Kalamazoo, Michigan, and Mrs. Mamie Triskett of Galesburg; fourteen grandchildren; twenty-eight great-grandchildren; and three great-great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Harold W. Hattey. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

CRABTREE.—Sarah Orcelia Morris, was born April 20, 1867, at Stockton, Missouri, and died at the home of her daughter, Opal Ulschafer, in Holden, Missouri, on August 18, 1951. On November 15, 1892, she was married to John D. Crabtree, and on October 27, 1901, was baptized into the Reorganized Church. Her husband and one daughter, Stella, preceded her in death.

Surviving are five sons: Martin of Holden; Charles of Clinton, Missouri; Clarence of Post Oak, Missouri; Lester and Roy of Buffalo, Montana; three daughters: Mrs. Ulschafer and Thelma Phelps of Holden and Minnie Palmer of Springfield, Missouri; twenty-five grandchildren; and sixteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Reorganized Church in Post Oak, Missouri, Elders E. P. Darnell and H. J. Simmons officiating. Interment was in Mineral Creek Cemetery at Leeton, Missouri.

TURPEN.—Charlottie, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Eastin, was born November 10, 1874, in Mercer County, Missouri, and died March 9, 1951, at Hutchinson, Kansas. On July 4, 1891, she was married to Thomas Comer Turpen; eleven children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since May 21, 1893.

She is survived by her husband; six daughters: Mrs. Hester Partin, Goshen, California; Mrs. Alta Barney, Eureka, California; Mrs. Nellie Hauschild, Sterling, Kansas; Mrs. Grace Poulton, Hutchinson, Kansas; Mrs. Josephine Cheney, Hesperia, California; and Mrs. Frances Unruh, Great Bend, Kansas; five sons: R. W. and Ellery, Albuquerque, New Mexico; Comer E., Dodge City, Kansas; George, Pomona, California; and F. A. of the home; thirty-three grandchildren; thirty-four great-grandchildren; two brothers; and two sisters. Funeral services were held at the Elliott and Gard Chapel, Elder Myron LaPointe officiating. Burial was in Fairlawn Mausoleum at Hutchinson.

KUEFFER.—Gottfried, was born April 30, 1873, at Bern, Switzerland, and died June 20, 1951, at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in November, 1899, and ordained an elder on October 29, 1911, serving as pastor of the Blue Rapids, Kansas, Branch until 1916 when he moved to Oklahoma.

He is survived by his wife, Carolyn, of the home; two daughters: Mrs. F. L. Parker of Clearwater, Florida, and Mrs. M. E. Croom, Jr., of Oklahoma City; a son, Caryle Kueffer of Oklahoma City; two sisters: Mrs. Dick Pharis of Ottawa, Kansas, and Mrs. Oliver Reams of Newton, Kansas; three brothers: Gottlieb Kueffer of Oklahoma City; Otto J. Kueffer of Independence, Missouri; and Rudolph Kueffer of Alexander, Kansas; seven grandchildren; and seven great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in Oklahoma City, Elders Richard J. Jones and E. F. Yerrington officiating. Burial was at New City, Kansas.

TUCKER.—Jessie B., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin V. Busby, was born on March 23, 1873, at Jewett, Ohio, and died August 26, 1951, at St. Margaret's Hospital in Kansas City, Kansas. On August 1, 1894, she was married to Daniel Tucker; one son was born to them. In June, 1897, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church. She was a member of the old Armstrong church in Kansas City, Kansas, and a charter member of the Grandview congregation which superseded it. She served thirty-five years as a teacher in the primary department and was active in the LaDaSa women's club and the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

She is survived by her husband, Daniel; a son, Clark E. Tucker; a grandson; and a great-grandson, all of Kansas City, Kansas; three sisters: Mrs. Mary Gallegher, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Abbie Thompson and Mrs. Mattie Stewart of Jewett, and a brother, Clyde Busby also of Jewett. Funeral services were held at Butler Chapel in Kansas City, Kansas, Elder Evan A. Fry officiating. Burial was in Highland Park Cemetery, Kansas City, Kansas.

ADKINS.—George O., son of Luke and Anna Anderson Adkins, was born January 20, 1857, in Carroll County, Missouri, and died August 5, 1951, at the Clifford Nursing Home in Independence, Missouri. He was married on September 15, 1880, to Osa Jane Arterburn; ten children were born to them. Mrs. Adkins and one son preceded him in death. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1888 and ten years later moved by covered wagon to Independence. He was ordained to the Aaronic priesthood in 1891 and, with Elder F. C. Smith, helped to organize several branches. He was a charter member of the Liberty Street Church in Independence and was an active worker until he grew too aged to serve.

Surviving are four daughters: Mrs. Etta Frisbey, Mrs. Jewell Leach, Mrs. Sue Petre, and Mrs. Osa Curnutt; and five sons: Steve, Robert, Jesse, Nelson, and Thomas, all of Independence; twenty-six grandchildren; and thirty-four great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Liberty Street Church, Elders Herbert Barto, Glaude A. Smith, and Fred Fry officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SCHMITT.—Vernon L., was born November 23, 1906, at Davenport, Nebraska, and died July 25 at a hospital in Sutherlin, Oregon, after a long illness. On October 5, 1945, he was married to Grace Lee Hudson, who survives him. He also leaves his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William N. Schmitt; a brother, Orvel Schmitt of Venango, Nebraska; a sister, Mrs. Roy Corey of Lamar, Nebraska; and a half-sister, Pearl Sable of Cambridge, Nebraska. Funeral services were conducted by Elders John B. Rodley and J. F. Ruchaber at Roseburg, Oregon.

* WARRENSBURG

On two occasions recently, invitations brought us in contact with the church work at Warrensburg, Missouri. The church work there is in charge of two fine men, Stake President Harry Simons and Bishop Willard Becker. The big church is near the central business district of the city. Since other churches do not have summer Sunday evening services, our Warrensburg congregation is featuring visiting general church men as speakers to attract others. . . . Warrensburg Saints maintain a friendly meeting place and a welcome for the many church young people who attend Central Missouri State College there. It is an advantage to have the stake offices in the same city. . . . There are some able men who contribute much to local and stake work: Ezra Mifflin, who gave many years of his life to missionary work; Roy Weldon, who has made an intensive study of American archaeology and the Book of Mormon and has a large following for his interesting lectures; E. P. Darnell, who has given years of service as pastor, council member, counselor, and spiritual leader; W. S. Macrae, who has been a tower of strength in that area. There are many others, too, for whom mention must be reserved for other occasions.

Warrensburg is a pleasant, friendly town. The college, of course, gives it a certain quality, like all college towns. The many young people on the streets make a difference, adding to the pleasure and charm of the place. Brother Simons took us to see the beautiful new Student Center just about completed, and already in use. . . . Nice things about such a town: the clean, fresh air; the absence of industrial smoke and dust; the feeling of peace of mind one gets; the gardens, trees, and wide lawns; the space; the leisurely pace.

* PREVENTING RECKLESS DRIVING

In one of the little countries of the Balkan Peninsula, the police discovered a way to cut down speeding and other traffic violations. They conduct the driver and his car to the curb and completely deflate all his tires. Then they go away and leave him. Respect for traffic laws has increased considerably.

* OBEYING THE SONG

A friend tells us a story of her father who was pastor of a small, contentious congregation. Some of those who were loudest in prayer and testimony meetings were also the most difficult to handle in the branch quarrels.

When such a contentious person gave a long prayer, the pastor would ask the people to sing, "Let us watch and FIGHT and pray," with particular emphasis on the word "fight." Members of the congregation would get the implication and smile, to the discomfiture of the offending person. A few treatments like this, and there was a little more peace in the church.

News and Notes

APOSTLE SPEAKS

Apostle D. O. Chesworth spoke at the Rich Hill District conference September 9, and reports that despite five inches downpour of rain, 285 were present. That evening he preached at Butler, Missouri, to a congregation of 138. The branch was host to the Butler Chapter of the Eastern Star. On September 2, Brother Chesworth spoke to the Hammond, Indiana, congregation. September 15 and 16 he was at the Spring River District conference at the Ozark reunion grounds.

SPEAKS TO OPTIMISTS

Apostle D. Blair Jensen spoke September 12 at the regular meeting of the Optimist Club of Independence. Brother Jensen, who has spent the last three years in Europe had as his subject, "My Views of Social and Economic Conditions in Western Europe."

BAPTISM STATISTICS

Branches having 10 or more baptisms reported in July are Des Moines, Iowa—29; Columbus, Ohio—24; Grand Rapids, Michigan—19; Sioux City, Iowa—19; Sperry, Oklahoma—16; Kirtland, Ohio—14; Pleasant Hill, Alabama—11; Louisville, Kentucky—10; Wichita, Kansas—10.

Districts and Stakes having more than 25 baptisms reported in July are Central Michigan, 37; Central Oklahoma, 35; Southern Michigan, 33; Southern Ohio, 31; Detroit International Stake, 31; Northwestern Iowa, 30.

Also of interest is the fact that Amarillo, Texas, and Jacksonville, Florida, missions each report 6 baptisms; and Odessa, Texas, mission reports 4.

ATTEND WORKSHOP

Kenneth L. Graham, manager, and Chris B. Harishorn, managing editor, of the Herald House, attended the Eighth International Audio-Visual Workshop, affiliated with the National Council of Churches, Division of Christian Education, at Green Lakes, Wisconsin, September 2-8. Arthur Rock and Kenneth Raveill accompanied them and also attended the conference.

AT YOUTH CAMPS

John Darling, Associate Director, Department of Religious Education, has returned from summer assignments in the field. He was director of the first youth camp at Blue Water, Michigan, and served at Brooksville, Maine, and the Kirtland reunions. The last assignment before returning home was to serve as director of the Brooksville, Maine, youth camp. Mrs. Darling and their son accompanied him on this trip. She had assignments at the Brooksville reunion, and at the youth camp there as well as at Blue Water.

Edna Easter returned home with them, after helping organize a youth camp at Chetek, Wisconsin, and serving in the Brooksville youth camp.

ORCHESTRA BEGINS PRACTICE

The Independence Symphony orchestra held its first practice September 4. Under the direction of Franklyn Weddle, the orchestra will present concerts during the year. The first concert is scheduled for October 21. Henry Livingston is president of the Symphony orchestra. Brother Weddle and Brother Livingston returned one hour before rehearsal from Interlochen, Michigan, where they attended a civic orchestra workshop for a week.

We'd like you to know

Carroll Lloyd Olson

There is little excuse for the Presiding Bishop to go wrong since the church provides him with two counselors and an attorney for legal advice. The dignified looking man pictured with the law tome in his hands is the adviser. Brother Olson says, "We cannot possibly move forward in our Zionitic program without careful attention to the laws of the land, and it is my purpose to assist the church by giving sound legal advice and counsel wherever it is needed."

He was born in St. Paul, Minnesota (1903), baptized at Portland, Oregon, and married in Independence, Missouri. He really got around the country in those days. After graduating from Central High School (St. Paul) in 1921, he entered Macalester College of St. Paul and received his B.A. degree in 1925, majoring in sociology and economics. Then he enrolled in the University of Minnesota and received his M.A. in 1928 with a major in statistical sociology. He taught in the Osakis high school in 1925-26. Following his graduation he came to Independence to work for the church as statistician and served in this capacity until 1948 when he resigned to give his full time to assist the Bishop in legal work. This change was not made without further training. He studied at the Kansas City School of Law from which he graduated cum laude with an LL.B. in 1934.

He married Alta Mae Schafer, a registered nurse and grandniece of Apostle Butterworth, in 1926. They have three children: Rosemary C. (now Mrs. E. Robert Fishburn, Denver, Colorado), Fred Allan, and Carroll, Jr. Brother Olson is a member of the Independence Bar Association, the Missouri State Bar, Men's Club, Walnut Park Development Association, Bellevista Heights Fellowship Group, Beacon Heights Group, Independence Co-operative Association, and the Stone Church and Walnut Park Savings Credit Unions. He writes, "The scientific approach to Zion requires that we experiment with various forms of social organization to determine the ways in which each can be used to further the central objective, and that we always keep our minds alert to new and better ways of achieving it." He was ordained a teacher in 1923, an elder in 1927, and a high priest and member of the Standing High Council in 1932.

You Can Control Yourself

"All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Matthew 21:22, A.V.

IN THE LATE NINETEENTH CENTURY, William Ernest Henley, a cripple from his childhood, wrote the brave words of Invictus as he surmounted his handicap:

I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul.

Bold young men loved to declaim the words of the poem and believe them. Such a spirit helped to make the nineteenth century a great one in many ways. Much of the science we have today was begun in the courage and hope of yesterday.

Today, people smile at Henley's brave words. Few people believe them now. It is too bad. We have lost something good.

In our times, when young men get into trouble, drink and drive, rob or kill, they plead, "I am a victim of circumstances. In my childhood I was frustrated. My parents did not understand me. I cannot help it."

* * * *

Perhaps it is time for common sense to be asserted again.

Self Control Can Be Learned is a title of a recent book review of a new volume on psychotherapy. Neurotic behavior is learned, says the author. Normal behavior can be learned too. This statement should bring encouragement to many a sufferer who thinks that he is a helpless victim of an evil fate.

The first thing any evil power tries to do is to pin the victim down so that he cannot escape. Any means may be used—physical force, fear, psychological factors, or political power.

When Jesus first declared his mission at Nazareth (Luke 4:16-30) he included among his aims to "preach deliverance to the captives." Later he said, "The truth shall make you free." He knew that people need to be freed of sin, fear, and unwholesome states of mind, as well as from external things that enslave them.

The person who cannot control himself is a slave. He can be free only as he attains self-mastery. A very important part of the gospel is the assurance that we can be free if we will follow Christ. He will lead us to a new and higher kind of liberty.

* * * *

Our peaceful neighborhood was a happy place for children to live and play. Then a new family moved in, and the little boy had a furious disposition. His mother assured us solemnly that nothing could control his temper. One of our fine neighborhood boys was a calm lad, completely unafraid. The day came when the newcomer became enraged at him and put on a fearful act of temper. Our lad reached out and punched him in the nose. For good measure, he did it again. The new boy quieted down immediately. He never lost his temper there again. It could be controlled. He owed a lot to the boy who helped him to make that discovery.

* * * *

The first step toward self-control is to know that it is possible. Believe it, and it will become true. (See our text above.)

Stories in the movies, radio, and television are filled with characters who are victims of moods, passions, hates, bad habits, bad influences, bad everything. These story characters destroy themselves.

They are not necessarily true to life. Things could be different. People can be changed. Conversion can work miracles. Look at any ruined character in the city—"This man or woman could be saved!"

* * * *

A great truth should be made known to all of us and to the world. We are not the helpless victims of our passions, our instincts, or any kind of fate dictated by our nature. The gospel tells us that we can be changed for good or evil, and it is the purpose of the gospel to change us for good.

Have you a terrible temper, a bad fault, a serious handicap, an unreasoning emotional urge? Be of good cheer. It need not fasten itself upon you forever. Through Christ you can be free. You have within you a capacity to change and to be changed. You may not be able to change the emotion, but you can change your response to it. It is an educational process, and you can learn it. Christ is your schoolmaster.

One of the most important things we can control is our attitude toward other people. We can love them if we try. We can get along with them. We can quit disliking and hating. We can improve human relationships by changing ourselves. We can thus add to the world's happiness.

We commonly try to change our external appearance, our manners and habits. This is in vain unless we change something deep within us. No change is effective unless it begins with the heart. We need new attitudes, new feelings about people. We must replace bad ones with good ones. When this is done, manners and habits will follow and conform. It is not what we say, but the light in our eyes and the tone in our voice that speaks most convincingly.

Self-control must begin in the soul.

Travelogs

ARRIVING FROM AUSTRALIA on Saturday, September 9, I found home conditions about the same, except, as I had feared, my companion's illness had become progressively worse. During the month of September, Sister Smith entertained her "Birthday Club" members and their husbands, which she did without apparent distress.

On October 4 I left home, bidding her good-by, the last time I was ever to see her alive, and went to Kirtland where I had a small part in a conference of high priests, the program and schedules for which had been arranged by my colleagues.

Two hundred four high priests were in attendance, and, in the words of President Ward A. Hougas, "From the beginning to the end, it was an outstanding experience highlighted continually by the presence of the Spirit of the Master. . . . The atmosphere of the Temple lent itself to the spirit of the occasion very nicely."

The work and results of this conference have been published in pamphlet form, and I have reason to be proud of the accomplishments of my brethren, though I am not conscious of any particular contribution of my own other than perhaps presiding at some of the sessions, for which I make no claim.

From a church-wide viewpoint the conference marked a forward step and while at Kirtland and since then I have been impressed that what we said and experienced was not far if at all removed in spiritual importance from the "school of the prophets" which was held in the same sacred edifice more than a century ago.

The meetings began on Friday and closed on Sunday, October 8. The prayer services were outstanding, the greatest of all on Saturday when a message came in great but quiet power through our Presiding Patriarch, with a special word of encouragement for me, which, in the light of the death of Sister Smith on the following night, and of other matters, brought much comfort to me.

That our Patriarch would speak to us under the inspiration of Christ had been made known to me, and I so stated in advance to one of my colleagues in the Presidency. As surely as God and Christ were with the church in 1836, they were with this body in 1950.

In connection with Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith and Apostle A. A. Oakman, I presided over the prayer service on the morning of Sunday, October 8. Upon retiring from the pulpit to the vestibule of the Temple, I was met by President Edwards with the suggestion that my brother Wallace desired to see me at the Rigdon House. Upon reaching it Brother Wallace broke the news to me that Nina had been called away in her sleep. Arrangements for plane service for Brother Wallace and myself had been made by Bishops DeLapp and Wildermuth. Soon we drove away from Kirtland, stopping at Brother Wildermuth's where his good wife had prepared refreshments, and soon Wallace and I were flying home. Here soon came members of the family, and my companion was laid away on Wednesday, October 11, the last of a family of seven. Rest to her ashes.

Lamoni

My memorandum shows that on October 1 I was in Lamoni for an afternoon service when Dr. Roy Cheville, veteran instructor at Graceland College, was ordained to the office of patriarch. It was an impressive occasion, the ordination being under the hands of Apostles A. A. Oakman and Charles R. Hield. Others participating in the services were President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., Stake President Robert S. Farnham, and the Lamoni Branch choir with Sister Burnham Silsby as organist.

Brother Cheville thus becomes one of our church fathers, a place for which by experience and natural endowment he is eminently qualified.

I was glad to be a witness at this special service.

De Kalb, Illinois

For some weeks I had been corresponding with Brother Hadley of River Forest, Illinois, regarding a "homecoming" at De Kalb, Illinois. Because of the death of Sister Smith I attempted—too late, it appears—to cancel my participation; but learning that Pastor Roy Healy had advertised my presence, I decided not to disappoint those in charge, and accordingly went to Palmyra where I was met and taken to De Kalb. Brother and Sister Hadley were on hand, and brought with them Patriarch Frederick A. Smith who was at once pressed into the service. He relieved me at the eleven o'clock service and preached a rousing Latter Day Saint sermon with old-time fire and enthusiasm. Fred as yet does not yield to the "tooth of time."

I took the other preaching assignment.

I was pleased to meet here Sister Fred B. Blair—"Aunt Bess" to many—and her niece Helen Silsby; Patriarch and Sister Leslie Wight, all of Chicago; and others too numerous to mention. Brother Wight took me to Elgin where I caught an evening train for Kansas City and home.

I recall a basket dinner was a part of the program, and withal the day was pleasantly spent. I hope I ministered somewhat to our Saints at this place.

Enoch Hill

On March 12, 1949, ground was broken for a new church at Enoch Hill in Independence, and on November 26, 1950, the new church, now a delight to the eye and commended by all for its appearance and appointments, was consecrated by special proceedings.

I wrote a forward for the special program, and from it I quote:

Forty years was quite a span in the life of the Enoch Hill congregation, but the fruits of their labor, their devotion, and their sacrifices now are written into the fine structure

The Defects of Our Virtues

By Maxwell Constance

For now we see through a glass, darkly, but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.

And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.—I Corinthians 13: 12-13.

THIS TOPIC, "The Defects of Our Virtues," is one that has had an unusually long gestation period, having lain mostly dormant in my mind since a passage in The Divine Comedy, which I read sixteen years ago, opened a new perspective for me.

There is one portion of I Corinthians 13 that I particularly wish to keep in mind: "We know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." One of the most comprehensive and destiny-packed problems of our age, and one of the most perplexing to those who are open-minded enough to be aware of its existence, is that of selecting what has survival value from among the gifts of the flood of years. And while selecting, by what criteria shall we separate that which is indeterminate and permanent. Recent civilization has added to the scope and perplexity of the problem. Beginning with France, Germany, and England about 1860,¹ we have seen, with accelerating tempo and vastly widening scope, such a transvaluation of moral and cultural objects of worth² that some people even question whether or not there is such a thing as what Carlyle chose to call "eternal verities." The widespread and deep concern of thoughtful people about our sense of values was reflected in a recent international convention of philosophers³ in which some topic of axiology—that phase of philosophy that treats of values—was the subject of the great preponderance of the papers submitted.

IT IS ADMIRABLE to be pious, that is to be loyal to the deepest roots of our being,⁴ to look backward to search out the foundations of our heritage as Americans⁵ and as Latter Day Saints, and to look to lessons learned in childhood. But, as Thomas Wolfe, in several lengthy novels so poignantly put it, You Can't Go Home Again,⁶ therefore we must search for new perspectives⁷ and be zealously aware of the dynamic growing edge of customs and faiths.

A person who too strenuously observes one of these two obligations—piety for the past and zeal for the future—is liable to fall into a defect of his virtue by way of a "trained incapacity."⁸ For, as psychological experiments have shown, one's training to observe a certain set of obligations may operate toward creating an emotional block that incapacitates him in observing some other set of obligations. My sister, Bertha,⁹ quoted a professor at Northwestern University as saying, "We need to realize that in most cases it is not either . . . or; it is both . . . and."

Coupled with the static morality of the priest who keeps the temple fire aglow, we need the dynamic morality of the prophets to write in emblazoned letters the insights of an emerging era.¹⁰ Probably one of the chief secrets of the courtesy and poise of the Chinese is their sense of half-and-half, their awareness of both permanence and change, their knowledge that in some things one may accede graciously to another without loss of face, but that other things abide and to them one must be loyal to the death.¹¹

Another highly pertinent text is found in the twentieth verse of the twenty-third chapter of Matthew, the "chapter of woes."

Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithes of mint, and anise, and cummin; and have omitted the weightier things of the law; judgment, mercy, and faith; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

Here we find a strict obedience to a portion of the law, wherein the portion observed was followed with such punctilio that a complacent attitude arose, thereby obscuring the importance of the rest of the law. This condition is caused mainly by the ease with which one can follow definitely prescribed instructions. Also involved is man's laziness when it comes to charting his own course in accordance with general principles that allow room for fine judgments and hence, growth.

This, as I see it, is a prime cause of our starting on excesses of one kind or another. Probably the basic reason for our continuance runs something like this: By one or more of various causes we find ourselves in a wrong situation or burdened with a wrong attitude. Then our sense of piety—piety here being defined as the sense of what goes with what—causes us to build an altar of our misery. To such altars we bring appropriate offerings in the form of corresponding attitudes and actions, justification, and proselyting. Also, as the Spanish dramatist, Echegeray, in The Great Galeoto pointed out with such deep insight, other people's opinions tend to form chains that commit us almost irrevocably to our courses. Thus, just as tightly as Laocoön was held thrall by the snakes, a man becomes "hypnotically entangled in the texture of his poem,"¹² that is, in his pattern of life.

LET US APPROACH from another angle this problem of a short-sighted focus that blurs the wholeness and unity of life. We frequently quote, "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God shall shine." What is beauty? It seems to me that if we are to unify our efforts, we need to clarify and enlarge our concept of beauty. One of the best definitions of beauty I have found was used by the medieval schoolmen.¹³ According to them beauty is composed of wholeness, symmetry, and radiance. What ore can we mine from these three words? First, wholeness: a building obviously meant to be ten stories high and left incomplete at seven stories is not beautiful, is it? Neither can a life be beautiful in which either the thinking, feeling, or acting phases of life¹⁴ are either shunted to the sidetracks of life or are shriveled through disuse. Incidentally, wholeness and holiness have similar word histories. Of the poets with which I am familiar, Goethe, Blake, Robert Browning, and Whitman have most consistently preached wholeness. Of contemporary writers it seems to me that Lewis Mumford¹⁵ has most zealously expounded the virtue of wholeness. Here is a sample:

Once we have found a central purpose and point of view in our life, we should subject ourselves to every activity that is necessary for a full experience and a complete understanding of life—knowing at first hand both manual toil and esthetic ecstasy, periods of hard routine and periods of adventure, intellectual concentration and the animal relaxation, strict discipline and random activity.¹⁶

Such a life multiplied into communities would go far along the road to Zion.

Beauty also has symmetry. Symmetry in living means a fine interrelationship of the aspects of life in such a manner that each portion is complementary to the other portions. Thereby we obtain an organic unity that reflects an attractive design for living. Incidentally, I think that a good many of us need more symmetry in our acquisition of knowledge. Too many church members think that all we need in this phase of life is a good knowledge of the Three Standard Books. I know of none better, but I sincerely believe that we cannot really know even these books unless we know a great deal about many other things.¹⁷

When I was about three-fourths through college I began to think that I knew quite a lot about my major—English. Then I began to perceive more intricate and far-reaching relationships between my major field and others than I had supposed existed. The pursuit of this problem of relationships has been one of the most fascinating endeavors in which I have engaged.¹⁸

Finally beauty must have radiance; it must have a shining quality that wins appeal. The beauty of holiness must somehow be winningly communicated. As most difficult endeavors have a long awkward stage of apprenticeship, the form of genius that is goodness probably has the longest awkward stage. About fifteen years ago a novel came out in which the hero got into many ludicrous and distressing situations because he, in his goodness, could not accurately gauge the thought-processes of his associates. The book was Heaven's My Destination.

A Methodist philosopher and teacher, Georgia Harkness, seems to be quite persistently conscious of possible defects within virtues. In one passage¹⁹ she mentions seven devils, each the inverted form of a virtue:

These are dominance, proceeding from a legitimate self-confidence; quiescence [a lazy acceptance of what comes], generated out of the temperament of philosophic objectivity; intolerance, born out of intense conviction that one's own views are right; irresponsibility in small matters born of the faith that one has a great work to do; irritability, emerging out of nervous tension and overwork; excessive self-condemnation, which arises to torment the sensitive conscience not held in even keel by a sense of proportion; and finally, the secret yearning for applause which, perhaps, as Milton suggested, is "the last infirmity of noble minds."

You will note that two of these insidious temptations—dominance and intolerance—arise from not properly judging one's associates; that is, from not evaluating enough the aspect of beauty called radiance.

JESUS SAID, "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life everlasting." That text, also, I wish you to carry with you as we continue. It is so difficult to choose just the right amount to keep from a dangerous deficiency or excess in an attitude or line of action that the symbol of the "Bridge of Dread" in Barthian theology seems frequently appropriate. What complicates our choosing immeasurably is not that we have only to choose various ingredients to incorporate into our lives, but that we all have, basically, the same ingredients and must choose the amount and the time for each ingredient. We all have the basic hungers and urges for food, warmth, shelter, sex, and other physical needs; we desire to explore our environment, to master and be mastered, to win social approval, love, and comradeship; and (some of us believe) to worship.²⁰ Out of this same basic matrix of hungers and drives proceeds our goodness and our evil—depending on our use of our largely similar equipment. According to the Spanish essayist, Unanimo, "Vices and virtues proceed from the same stock, and a single passion may be turned to good or evil."

Perhaps the obligation to consider the amount and timing may be brought home by an illustration from chemistry. First, the amount: two substances may have the same elements, but a change in the quantity of any one of them will radically change the nature of the substance. For instance, CO₂, carbon dioxide, is breathed by plants; whereas, the same elements in equal portions, making carbon monoxide, is a deadly poison. Perhaps we can logically compare the arrangement of atoms to the timing of the ingredients of our lives. Coal and diamonds are constituted mainly of carbon, and yet so different is the arrangement of the atoms in molecules of coal and of diamonds, that coal is a relatively soft substance and diamonds are hard enough to be used in tools of fine precision. The analogy may be carried over into types of religion and government. The dogmas of religion and the purposes of governments have common ingredients, but it depends largely on the emphases upon some of these ingredients whether we find a climate of other-worldliness or this-worldliness, ritualism or evangelism, suspicion or good will, autocracy or democracy.

IF EVIL CAN PROCEED FROM GOOD, I used disproportionately or perverted, cannot good come from evil? Evil is one of the insoluble problems of life,²¹ and the tight web of good and evil is one of the absorbing interests of tragedy. By "evil" I mean to include opposition, impediments, pain, and sorrow. I use the term merely for brevity. The less evil in the sense of perverse opposition to God, the better.

At least it seems evident that some oppositions or impediments are needed in our pathways. One of our greatest contemporary historians has ably demonstrated that those nations which had a medium degree of obstacles to overcome were those which developed the highest cultures and the strongest governments.²²

Perhaps you have wondered what was the passage in The Divine Comedy that started my ponderings on this subject sixteen years ago. One of the most impressive²³ features of The Divine Comedy is Dante's illustration through several cantos of the Purgatorio of how "the seven cardinal sins" are the result of a deficiency, an excess, or a twisting of the greatest virtue—love. Here is a passage in which he makes the theme explicit:

While e'er it [spiritual love] seeks
The primal blessings, or with measure due
The inferior, no delight that flows from it
Partakes of ill. But let it warp to evil,
Or with more ardour than behooves, or less,
Pursue the good; the thing created then
Works 'gainst its Maker. Hence thou must infer
That love is germin of each virtue in ye,
And of each act no less, that merits pain.
(Cary's translation, Canto XVII of the Purgatorio.)

The harsh punishments delineated in Dante's magnificent picture gallery of suffering humanity lead us to consider the role of tragedy in life. Not only complications and perplexities, but frequently the greatest tragedies of life come from the defects of our virtues. In fact, this must follow by definition—for the hero of a tragedy is largely admirable by his possession of some virtues in generous measure. A defect of his chief virtue, however, leads to an inevitable doom and the audience is thereby moved to fear and pity. Many of the tragedies of life come from the defects of our virtues, especially from trying to do good by foul means, then things that seemed fairest in prospect turn foulest in retrospect.²⁴ This I feel deeply, for a series of events in which I tried to do good by means that were sometimes other than good ended in a fiasco that had most of the elements of tragedy.

AS LOVE NORMALLY IS THE FINEST and the most powerful of our emotions, so religion represents the highest effort of mankind to seek the Source of his being and to become like the highest and most profound apprehension of that Source. One of the greatest contemporary American philosophers stated:

Religion is the vision of something which stands beyond, behind, and within, the passing flux of immediate things; something which is real, and yet waiting to be realized; something which is a remote possibility, and yet the greatest of present facts; something that gives meaning to all that passes; and yet eludes apprehension; something whose possession is the final good, and yet is beyond all reach; something which is the ultimate ideal, and the hopeless quest.²⁵

We have seen how love by misapplication, deficiency, or excess may be twisted almost beyond recognition. Can this happen also to as exalted a thing as religion? Yes, one of the deep sorrows and perplexing ironies of life is that it does happen. One of the most penetrating dramatists of ancient Greece, Euripides, in Bacchae, presents a most horrible spectacle. This he does, not by a magnification of something evil, but by a travesty of religion as it reaches frenzied proportions in the devotees of Bacchus.

Most of the wars of the world, especially those of Western Europe, have had differences in religion as one of their chief causes. Often the differences were of a trivial nature—at least in the eyes of many. One famous writer²⁶ says that it was usually over whether or not to put another i in Homoousianism to make it Homoiousianism. Personally, I can't be so facetious about the nature of the Godhead as Mr. Van Loon was; still, it is lamentable that the best aspirations of humanity were involved time and time again in one of mankind's worst activities because of the almost inveterate tendency to die for an old loyalty—no matter how incomplete or obsolete—instead of endeavoring to gain a new perspective.

In some recent wars a few slogans have gained almost the emotional veneration that religions have; among them being, "Make the World Safe for Democracy" and "More Living Space for the World's Master Race." The idea of a master race, of course, was false bait; but let it be remembered that a German²⁷ has done the most to dispel this fallacy.

A dialectic view of history supposes a condition, then a revolution to its opposite, and a final synthesis which unites the two former situations. Probably historical change has been effected this way more often than not but the Communists claim that the course of history of necessity follows this pattern. The same is true of materialism. The Communists have caused the unit of value to swerve from emphasis on the caprice of wants—usually a reflection of supply and demand²⁸—to man-hours of production. Also, they have given the world a deeper appreciation of the role of economics in influencing history. However, this role is so greatly magnified that it becomes the determining factor instead of one of the important influences. Thus, in the mingling of truths and half-truths and lies in Communism we see a contemporary example of the adage: "The worst enemy of the best is the second best."

BEFORE mentioning recent national slogans and ideologies, I called attention to the stanch zeal displayed in many religious wars. Why do we find this? How is it that a Chinese war lord, General Chiang Kai-shek, became converted to Christianity because Western nations had better soldiers than the Orient? In any era of valid change, many people in their confusion from finding themselves adrift in a shifting world have turned to examine the very foundations of language, especially symbols. And from a study of the symbols of law, poetry, and religion many important truths have been brought to light. Now, the chief symbol of Christianity is the cross. This is a very significant symbol, for it is a sign of the "eternal union of love with suffering."²⁹ Nevertheless, considerable thought should be given to devising other appropriate and powerful symbols to express other important truths of Christianity. Thereby some of the mischief wrought by being too stanch—before the available facts are gathered—may be overcome.

Incidentally, firmness—besides the good side of pious loyalty and the bad side of narrow perspective—mentioned in the preceding paragraph is sometimes also partly compounded of laziness. We all have had so much travail in learning our wrong attitudes and habits that we are loath to give up that which cost us so dearly, however wrong or burdensome it may now be.

Suppose we examine the universally prized quality of honesty. Is there any chance for slipping on a defect of this foundation of business? Let's take, for instance, two phases of honesty—veracity and consistency. Now, the former of these is going to hurt me. I have such a deep admiration for veracity and such a mass of statistics, dates, and other "worthless" information in my head that I have to exercise a great deal of ingenuity to discover how to contradict politely, those who like to embellish the truth by speaking in round numbers. Moreover, I frequently find that while I have been mentally checking some "whale" of a statement, the conversation has passed me by with as much unconcern as a freight train passes a tramp. Then my veracity won't let me play the bright boy, so I humbly ask, "What were you saying?"

What about consistency? The love of consistency works harm by not allowing people to change their attitudes for fear of being considered inconsistent. If Christ had been hemmed in by fear of being considered inconsistent, the Gospels would not have had the range of usefulness that they do have. In a remarkably fine passage that is too lengthy to quote here, Harry Emerson Fosdick in The Man from Nazareth (pages 114 to 166) shows how diverse commands such as "Let not your alms be seen of men. . . ." "Let your light so shine before men. . . ." "Blessed are the peacemakers. . . ." "Do you think that I have come to give peace on earth? No, I tell you, but rather division. . . ." could have been spoken consistently by the same man. The answer is that each was appropriate to the situation in which it was given.

LET US CONSIDER BRIEFLY a few of the other possibilities of defects of our virtues.

Patience is commendable, but it is sometimes taken as an invitation to domineering acts by the calloused and unscrupulous.

We all enjoy a clean house, but sometimes its cleanliness hems us in. Then we wish that the housekeeper would apply Christ's dictum about the Sabbath to housekeeping. Surely the house is meant for people instead of people being meant for the house.

One of the peculiarities of dreamers is that they often love an idea but not its manifestation in space and time. For instance, many love humanity in general, but loath many of the people through whom they could demonstrate their love. Repeated frustrations of such dreamers often leads to cynicism. In fact, it has been said that a cynic is a disillusioned romanticist. Bearing out the truth of this witticism is the fact that three of the greatest cynical and satirical writers retained enough romantic idealism to write a play about one of the finest heroines of our Western culture—Joan of Arc. These authors were Mark Twain, Anatole France, and George Bernard Shaw.

Undoubtedly we do not see enough obedience in our age. Still, even in our efforts to inculcate more respect for parents, teachers, law, and other authority, let us not forget the example Germany set by overdoing obedience to authority. There, since the time of Frederick the Great, strict obedience to some form of paternal despotism has been the rule until so many people were stunted and incomplete in personality that a definitely evil despotism easily gained control.³⁰

In our age, which has seen the violence of two major wars within a decade, there arise many occasions in which a tender conscience seems too much of a luxury. Perhaps the English hold the reputation of having the most sensitive consciences—at least theirs are reputedly well trained. In general this has aided the English in following an honorable course in international relations, but it has too often made them adept at finding "righteous" reasons for what they desire. Since the wish is often father of the thought,³¹ "there is no such Jesuit as the heart's desire."³² Modern theories of psychology point up the powerful linkage of emotion, conscience, and thought.³³

Apparently the delicate balances of conscience can be set askew by the pressure of continued wishful thinking to the extent that one is confused in his motives. Many conscientious people also misuse conscience in attempts to find justification in a past that is sealed, instead of noting well the possible lessons of the experience and using the delicate instrument of conscience to carve a better today.³⁴ Still the balance here is hard to strike. Cold storage is a good preservative in the realm of sin as well as with foods.

The French, since the time of Descartes, have prided themselves on their realistic thinking; they enjoy showing the English the sides of their natures which they do not like to observe. The desire to be realistic has produced beneficial effects in literature, philosophy, psychology,³⁵ and science. There are many philosophers, however—and Latter Day Saints would agree with them—who hold firmly the belief that attempts to explain things only by what we can see and measure result in what is known as a "reductive fallacy." That is, attempts to explain all by the simplest means often leaves some things out of account. On the other hand, some religions have held out hopes that were weakly grounded. This we may call a "seductive fallacy."³⁶ How to strike a balance between a "reductive fallacy" and a "seductive fallacy" is another one of the great problems of our age.

IN CLOSING I should like to take up some different defects of idealism than the one just mentioned—love of a general idea and aversion to the concrete individuality. One type is the cherishing of such an exalted ideal that one dreads the possibility of tarnishing the ideal by trying to put it into operation. Probably the most famous of those infected with the "malady of the ideal" was Henri Frédéric Amiel, a Swiss of wide education and high intellectual capacity. In spite of his great potentials, however, all that he left to the world was his autobiography. Still, that was something, as his Intimate Journal is one of the best autobiographies.

Closely related is the effort to harmonize artistic or professional ambitions with domestic and other personal responsibilities. The most tragic case of this type that I can recall is that of the sensitive Austrian poet, Rainer Maria Rilke,³⁷ who, being sympathetic and tender and yet uncompromising in his artistic ideals, could find no other solution than separation from his family.

And then there have been religious zealots who have prescribed fine roles for some exalted spiritual attainment, but which are not fully applicable to the endeavors of the mass of humanity. Such, perhaps, was the advice of Paul that it is better not to marry. This is merely one of many opinions, rules that were meant for special cases, but which the majority within some religious groups either zealously followed or "followed from afar" with tormented consciences.

This essay has been aimed chiefly at those who have already traveled far along the road that leads to perfection. Incidentally, there are experts in biblical exegesis who claim that the words "perfect" and "complete" are related. I have spoken of several types of defects within our virtues, caused by an excess, a deficiency, or a misapplication of that which is good. I have given a few suggestions for combating these defects, the principal ones being: the cultivation of a perspective that envisages the possibility of and the need for both permanence and change; the complementing of such perspective by discriminating judgments of survival value³⁸; and the cultivation of the three aspects of beauty—wholeness, symmetry, and radiance. Perhaps the diligent reader can find something of value herein to help him along the long road to the "city whose builder and maker is God."

6. You Can't Go Home Again is the title of one of Wolfe's novels, but is a dominant theme of all his later works. In his first novel he wanted to go home. Later he realized that no one can go home again.
7. An admirable device designed to further this purpose is "perspective by incongruity"—the placing of elements that are generally incompatible and diverse in close association because of some common element. Nietzsche did it repeatedly in Thus Spake Zarathustra by using the pious devices of poetical rhetoric (See the definition of what is poetical in The Meaning of Culture by John Cowper Powys to get an idea of what a pious thing poetry is.) to support revolutionary ideas. In Spengler's erudite—but we trust erratic—ontology of culture, The Decline of the West, Socrates would be contemporaneous with the French Encyclopedists since they illustrated the same stage in the pattern of cultural rise and decline. For a discussion of "perspective by incongruity" see Kenneth Burke's Permanence and

 11. What is superficial and/or transient, and what is necessary and/or permanent in given situations requires, it seems to me, the full employment of human resources plus, in many cases, the impingement of divine influences. The current interest in semantics (the psychology of meaning) is helping many leaders to recognize the uniqueness of each situation and thereby is encouraging them to think each problem through anew on its own grounds. Also, one of its dominant perspectives—that we can't say all that there is to say about anything, which is reflected in the name of semanticists' periodical, etc.—leads us to investigate interrelationships. The techniques and resources of anthropology, the philosophy of holism and Gestalt psychology also lead us to look for interrelationships and concepts of the whole instead of a portion. Existential philosophy, currently popular in France, stimulates also a full examination of the person as he is in each situation; however, it has the defect of tending to set up what is as what ought to be. Pragmatic philosophy has put forth the idea that it may be good to have various creeds since "truth" is relative to persons. One can admit a certain amount of truth in this idea and yet not be a "nonrelative relativist." For to say that all truth is relative to the predilections of all persons is self-contradictory, since there are people to whom the very idea of a relativity of truth is repugnant. Maintaining the stand of "nonrelative relativism" is being dogmatic about one's liberalism.

Small Potatoes

By Charles Neff

Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.—Galatians 6: 7.

BACK IN THE YEARS the Chinese farmers went on the theory that they could eat all their big potatoes and keep the small potatoes for seed. They did this for some time. They ate the big potatoes and planted the small ones. A new understanding of the laws of life came to them when, through the year during which they kept up this practice, nature reduced all their potatoes to the size of marbles. The Chinese farmers learned from bitter experience that they could not keep the best things of life for themselves and use the leftovers for seed. The laws of life decreed that the harvest would reflect the planting season.

Planting small potatoes is still a common practice. We take the big things of life for ourselves and plant the cheaper things. We expect that by some crazy twist of the laws of nature our own selfishness will reward us with unselfishness. We cannot eat the big potatoes and still keep having them through the years. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Planting small potatoes simply means that this is what we are aiming for. We never aim for the things we keep for ourselves; the goals of life are determined by what we plant. Consider this in relation to the investment of time that we make. Is it not true that the very choicest hours of each day and night we save for ourselves? We usually invest only the leftovers in servicetoward others. Is it not true that we are willing to give service to the church—attendance, financial, missionary—if it does not interfere with other activities which we selfishly put at the top of the list? And in return for our investment of loose ends we expect God to give us eternal life. But small potatoes will not yield big potatoes.

What shall we plant during the new church year?

Blue Pencil Notes

By Elbert A. Smith

Wings of Song for Words of Truth

OUR MISSIONARY ENDEAVORS are bringing into the church young people, and older ones, with a variety of gifts and talents to enrich our services.

Recently, while talking with President F. Henry Edwards, I told of an experience at the Reunion of the Ozarks. On Monday evening preceding the preaching service a talented young woman, Patricia Mosier, took part in the musical program. She made a fine contribution. I learned that rather recently she had been converted and baptized at a series of missionary meetings held in Scammon, Kansas, sponsored by the branch at Pittsburg, Kansas. She is studying music at the State Teachers College in Pittsburg. She is an attractive girl with a pleasing personality and fine voice. Pat, as she is known to her friends, is paid to sing for some of the larger churches in Joplin (which helps meet her college expenses), but I am told that now her greatest pleasure is to bring her gift of music as a freewill offering to the church of her choice. I was told, for example, that when she goes with some of our church workers to the little mission in Scammon, and it is advertised that Pat is to sing, "nearly the whole town comes to our church."

Brother Edwards listened to my story and then said, "You should put that into a Blue Pencil Note." So here it is.

When a Lamanite Sang

Brother Edwards and I then continued to reminisce for a time regarding outstanding occasions when music had helped us at a preaching service. I recalled a time in Buffalo, New York, when I was to preach at the evening service. I was tired and needed a lift. The soloist proved to be a comparatively young Lamanite woman; a descendant of one of the once powerful Indian tribes known as the "Five Nations" who had a strong confederation in that region. The "Five Nations" or Iroquois included the Onondagas, Oneidas, Senecas, Cayugas, and Mohawks. Their names are preserved in the names of trails, lakes, and other places in northern New York.

This sister was well educated and had a rich, deep, trained voice. She sang "Israel, awake from thy long silent slumber." That was an old time favorite found in the old Saints' Harp and Saints' Hymnal; it is not in the present hymnal. It has stirring words set to stirring music. Here was a Lamanite singing to believers in the Book of Mormon and the return to Israel. It electrified my audience, and I forgot that I was tired as I arose to speak. A solo can do that for a preacher. Here are the first two stanzas of the hymn:

Israel, awake from thy long, silent slumber,
Shake off the fetters that bound thee so long;
Chains of oppression! we'll break them asunder
And join with the ransomed in victory's song!
Arise! for the time has come,
Israel must gather home,
High on the mountains the Ensign
we see;
Fall'n is the Gentile power,
Soon will its reign be o'er,
Tyrants must rule no more,
Israel is Free!

Tremble ye nations of Gentiles, for yonder
The yeats of the despot in battle array,
With engines of war shake the earth with their thunder,—
The bright sword is drawn and the sheath thrown away!
Sound the alarm of war,
Through nations near and far,
Let its dread tones be heard o'er land and sea;
Zion shall dwell in peace,
Israel will still increase,
Liberty ne'er shall cease,
Israel is Free!

When George Anway and J. Charles May Sang

My mind then went back to an experience when I was holding a series of revival services in the Stone Church. The meetings had come to a crucial period about midway of their course, when it seemed to me they could go up or down. I felt no power in me to lift them higher. That evening there was a duet by George Anway, now of the choir immortal, and J. Charles May, now Patriarch in the Society Islands who joins his voice with the justly famed Island singers. They chose to sing a very simple song, "What Was Witnessed in the Heavens?" They sang it in part as a dialogue. One sang the questions, the other the answers, while Brother May strummed his globe-trotting guitar.

What was witnessed in the heavens?
Why, an angel, earthward bound.
Had he something with him bringing?
Yes, the gospel, joyful sound.

It was a simple song—nothing to challenge the attention of critics, but it did something for me and for the congregation; the meetings were given an upward lift. My thanks go to George Anway and J. Charles May—if by chance my thanks may reach one or both of them.

When Nina Smith Sang

Brother Edwards had the finest testimony in our little experience meeting. The event took place quite a number of years ago when he was in the Quorum of Twelve: in those days he was less prepared to meet emergencies than he is now. It was at a Reunion in Nauvoo, and President Frederick M. Smith had been advertised to preach. But President Smith was not well when the day came so he drafted Brother Edwards, who must protect the situation as it was in his field. Brother Frank was dismayed almost to the point of panic. People had come from far and near. They had come to hear President Frederick M. Smith—not F. Henry Edwards. Nina Smith, Israel's wife, happened to be at the Reunion. Sensing exactly how Frank felt she came to him and said, "I do not often volunteer to sing. But if it will help you, I will sing for your service tonight."

With rare intuition, or good judgment, or by divine direction, or by reason of all of those, Nina put away any temptation to sing a difficult concert number that would challenge her vocal range and perhaps delight a few connoisseurs of classical music who might be present. In-

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name (not just initials) and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

At what time in the history of the world was water baptism for the remission of sin inaugurated?

Oklahoma

J.A.R.

Answer:

For Latter Day Saints the answer to this question is found in the Inspired Version of the Bible, Genesis 6: 52-71. The gospel was taught to Adam after the Garden of Eden experience. Verse 67 speaks specifically of Adam's baptism. This belief in the antiquity of the gospel plan as taught by Jesus is peculiar to the Latter Day Saints.

For those of the "Gentile" world who do not accept the beliefs of Latter Day Saints, there is no definite information when baptism, as we understand it, was first inaugurated. There seems to have existed various ceremonial washings to symbolize the new birth among ancient paganistic religions. The Jews also had ceremonies of "washings" for purification. However, these cannot be considered "baptisms" as we consider the ceremony. Outside of our own church Scriptures, there is no definite information. In Galatians 3: 8 (King James Version) we have this statement: "And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham." As baptism is a principle of the gospel we may rightly assume that baptism as we understand it was taught to Abraham and practiced in his day.

Question:

Why do we not ordain men to be pastors the same as ordaining men to the other orders of priesthood mentioned in Ephesians 4: 11?

Ohio

S.W.J.

Answer:

We do. No one can preside over a branch, i.e., be a pastor, without prior ordination. And every ordained man has some pastoral responsibility.

This passage is the only one in the New Testament in which the word "pastor" occurs. Everywhere else its equivalent is rendered "shepherd" (John 10: 11-14; I Peter 2: 25; I Peter 5: 4). The verb form is used in reference to tending Christian flocks; in the charge given to Peter by the Lord Jesus (John 21: 16), in Peter's charge to his "fellow elders" (I Peter 5: 2), and in Paul's charge to the elders at Miletus (Acts 20: 28). Pastoral ministry is primarily Melchisedec responsibility, but it is shared in some degree by all members of the priesthood. So is the teaching responsibility mentioned in this passage. Apostles, prophets, and evangelists are ordained to their several offices because they have distinctive functions in addition to the pastoral functions which are shared with so many others. (See Dictionary of the Apostolic Church, article "Pastor.")

Question:

Since we are told that the Melchisedec priesthood was taken from the earth at the time of Moses and restored when Christ returned and organized his church, what priesthood did Simeon hold at the time Jesus was blessed in the Temple?

Kansas
R.E.M.

Answer:

We do not know the exact priesthood rank of Simeon. We assume that he was a priest after the order of Aaron. He was a very devout man and eminent for his piety. There is some tradition that he was a Doctor of the Law and was given the highest title, "Rabban," bestowed upon learned men of that day. We do know from the record that he was a good man with a prophetic spirit, waiting for the Messiah.

Mary and Joseph, as was the custom of the Jews, had gone to the Temple for the purification of Mary, and for the presentation of the child to God. Under the Jewish law, women after childbirth were considered unclean. It was necessary for them to go to the Temple to make the offering of purification. It was in obedience to this custom that Joseph and Mary had taken the babe, Jesus, to the Temple. You will note that Simeon "blessed God" with Jesus in his arms, saying, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace." He then "blessed" Joseph and Mary, speaking to them a prophecy in respect to the life of Jesus. Whether this was a ceremony of "blessing" as the church practices it today, we can only conjecture. Nowhere do we have any definite intimation of the priestly rank of Simeon. Evidently, he was a priest of the Aaronic order, a man favored of God because of his personal goodness and piety. Question:

Is section 121 in Utah Doctrine and Covenants a prayer and prophecy given through Joseph Smith by revelation? If so, why is it not included in our Doctrine and Covenants? Elbert A. Smith recommends it on page 262 of his On Memory's Beam.
Oregon N.W.

Answer:

Sections 121, 122, and 123 of the Utah Doctrine and Covenants are edited extracts from a letter written by Joseph Smith, Jr., Hyrum Smith, Lyman Wight, Caleb Baldwin, and Alexander McRae. The letter was published in two sections in the Times and Seasons, Volume 1, numbers 7 and 9. The letter was addressed to Bishop Partridge and to the church. From this rather long letter the Utah Church has lifted various statements, paragraphs and sentences and arranged them in sequence to form the above mentioned sections of their Doctrine and Covenants. A careful comparison of the wording of these sections with the original letter as published in the Times and Seasons (Vol. 1) will reveal that the arrangement and wording is not a faithful reproduction. The "copy" has been edited and changed considerably. Brother Elbert Smith in On Memory's Beam merely recommends the original letter. He does not suggest it should be inserted in our Doctrine and Covenants. It did not purport to be a revelation.

A Shepherd's Story

The Autobiography of Marcus H. Cook

I. A Young Man's Prayer

FAMILY ORIGINS

The Cooks came from England about the time of the French and Indian wars. They first settled in South Carolina, where my grandfather, Peter Cook, was born on July 1, 1805. Being Quakers, and thus opposed to slavery, they soon moved to Ohio, and later to Indiana. On August 31, 1826, my grandfather married Keziah Henderson in the state of Indiana; there my father was born March 6, 1836. They left Indiana for Illinois and still later pressed even farther west, this time to Iowa, where a number of Quaker pioneers settled west of Des Moines in what was called the Quaker Divide.

Bear Creek ran through the land taken up by my grandfather, and from this stream the settlement took its name. A church and a schoolhouse were built; they are still known as the Bear Creek church and school.

My mother's father, Thomas Chantry, was born February 27, 1795, in Lincolnshire, England, near a town called Sparling. After receiving his education at a university there, he emigrated to Pennsylvania, where he met and married Hannah Passmore, my grandmother. They moved to Lee County, Iowa, where my mother was born on November 30, 1839. Later they moved to Guthrie County near what is now known as Casey, Iowa. A small Quaker settlement was established there. My mother and father were married October 23, 1861, and settled on a farm in the Bear Creek neighborhood. There, in Dallas County, Iowa, near where the town of Dexter now stands, I was born on January 18, 1864.

RELIGIOUS BACKGROUND

My parents were very devout Quakers, and I shall always thank God for the sincere effort they made to bring up their children to live worth-while lives. We were taught to believe in God and in the Holy Scriptures. We were taught, also, to try to live up to the high ideals of the Scriptures. Among the most sacred memories of my childhood are the evenings when father would get us together, and tell us stories of Bible heroes—of how they often had trials and hardships to endure, but in the end God protected them and turned their trials into blessings.

Father was usually well read in the Bible, and could tell Bible stories so that the characters seemed to live for us. Thus we came to believe in a God who was interested in us—a God whose help would always be available to us if we tried to do his will. For these things I shall always be grateful.

TRAINING AS A PUBLIC SPEAKER

I grew up among pioneers. We were not wealthy, nor did we have the many conveniences that are today considered indispensable. But I had good health. Such toys as I had were of my own making which was, perhaps, a benefit rather than a handicap. I was large for my age, awkward and bashful, often the victim of jokes. I was so self-conscious that I couldn't recite a poem before our school without breaking down. No one can realize the humiliation I felt because of this, except those who have had similar experiences. I knew, however, that if I lived to grow up, at times I would have to speak before a crowd so I began trying to overcome my weakness. When I was about fourteen, a dozen or so boys and I organized what we called the Red Eagle Debating Club. Only members were allowed to attend meetings; this made it easier for me, because I was not afraid to talk before the boys. I was rather inclined to be pugnacious when aroused, and on such occasions I lost all fear. The questions we debated were mostly regarding farm life, and when a subject was agreed upon, we would divide the club into equal numbers, one side taking the affirmative, the other side the negative. I took part in the discussions and soon became so interested in trying to win arguments that I forgot everything except concentrating on how to answer the arguments of my opponents. The boys were inclined to heckle each other, and naturally I learned to be quick at repartee. I consider that the experience I had in that club was one of the prime factors in my education for the work that I was later called to do.

When I was sixteen years old the people of the community (mostly young people) organized an old-fashioned literary society. I was chosen to preside over it. I had little knowledge of parliamentary procedure, but I realize now that it was of great importance in qualifying me for my life's work.

About this time a man came into the neighborhood to conduct a singing school. I was very fond of music and was permitted to enroll as a pupil. There I gained an understanding of the rudiments of music. The following spring I went about thirty miles from home to work for a farmer who lived a short distance from Adair, Iowa. While there I attended the Presbyterian Church. The music was directed by a young man who taught singing. Each Sunday afternoon this young man met with the young people and taught them to sing new songs. I bought a book and joined with them. I believe that I learned as much in the practice we had there as I did at the singing school the previous winter. I worked there until the autumn; then I went to Casey, where my mother's mother lived, and finished the season working for a farmer.

AT WORK IN DAKOTA

When I had finished the summer's work, I returned home and attended school the following winter. The next spring our family moved to a place near Casey, where I worked on a farm during the summer, and attended school in the winter. That autumn there was considerable talk about taking land in the Dakotas. A cousin of mine and one of his friends asked me to go with them to Dakota. We went by way of Council Bluffs to Sioux City, where an employment agency signed us up for a job. We were to work on a new railroad being built not far from Caliope, Iowa. Upon reaching Caliope, we found that the railroad work had been shut down for the winter. But a man who lived across in Dakota hired me to husk corn. His place was near a little village called Sunnyside. When my work there was finished, I got a winter job, feeding cattle.

FIRST MEETING WITH CHURCH PEOPLE

The following spring I decided to return to Iowa. I worked for a while on a farm, but was not satisfied with the job I had. When I got a letter from a cousin telling me that there was a good opportunity to work at Neola, I went there and found a good job on a farm.

I learned that there were several Latter Day Saints living in that part of the country. Everything I had ever heard of them was from books that my father had read to us children such as Beadle's History of the Mormons, Ann Eliza Young, (Brigham Young's nineteenth wife), and similar works. I was full of prejudice and had never thought of considering the religion. My first experience with the church was when an insane woman, who was a member of what the people called "Josephites," announced that she would preach at a schoolhouse near where I was working. Out of curiosity I went to hear her. She denounced the "Brighamites," as she called them; otherwise her talk was simply the ramblings of a deranged mind. I thought her talk was about what one should expect from all of those we called Mormons.

Following her preaching, four young Utah missionaries held a meeting. They taught the principles of the gospel, specializing in Baptism for the Remission of Sin as essential for salvation. I was pretty well read in the answers made by the Quakers to the necessity of water baptism and after the service I asked them, "If I correctly understood you, baptism by immersion in water is for the remission of sin, and therefore essential to salvation." They said, "Yes, that is true." Then I asked, "Why, in First Corinthians 1:17, did Paul say, 'For Christ sent me not to baptize but to preach the gospel?'"

Evidently they were not well acquainted with the Scriptures, because they were unable to answer me. I thought I had defeated them and was satisfied that they could not sustain their position.

The next sermon I heard was by an Elder Lamphier of the Reorganization. His talk was different. Though not especially eloquent, he presented his sermon in a quiet, logical way. I had to revise my opinion regarding the mental ability of this representative of the church. While I was by no means convinced, I wondered if it could be possible that there was something back of the message.

The following winter I was employed by a grain buyer in Neola. When spring came I hired out to a man near Unionberg, about eight miles north of Neola. My employer was a member of the church, but a poor example of what a Latter Day Saint should be. While I often had serious thoughts, yet I was not living as a professing Christian should. I did pray though, and felt a strong urge to live a Christian life.

NEW CHURCH AT BUTLER, MISSOURI

ON JUNE 24 the members of the Butler Branch climaxed years of labor, saving, and planning by moving into their new house of worship.

President Israel A. Smith honored the occasion by his presence, and with humble dignity brought a fine ministry to the congregation in his afternoon sermon. Friends from six states, many members of the Rich Hill District, former members of the Butler congregation, and a host of people from the local community joined in the occasion. President Smith commended the loyalty and faithful devotion of the members of the Butler Branch and their successful completion of an excellent house of worship. He called particular attention to the great need for hope and faith in the future, and pointed out that many are now turning to the churches to overcome the existing confusion and uncertainty that seems to be present throughout the civilized world.

Bishop Walter N. Johnson, representing the Presiding Bishopric, preached the eleven o'clock sermon. He emphasized the purpose of a house of worship in the eternal purpose, taking as his text the commandment recorded in Doctrine and Covenants, section 85:36 "... establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God." His words enriched the minds of those present, giving them the assurance that what had been accomplished was a major achievement, yet only a testimony of things still to be done.

Elder Victor Witte of Tulsa, Oklahoma, a former pastor, brought the evening message confirming the ministry of the two preceding sermons and adding his testimony that the gospel of Jesus Christ and the authority of his church are the answer to the problems that confront a troubled world.

A total of 950 persons attended these three meetings. Seventy Donald Kyser, missionary of Rich Hill District, assisted in the services.

PRECEDING THE SERMON by President Smith a short "recognition service" was held. This consisted of presenting local dignitaries of civic organizations; representatives of the Ministerial Alliance; O. O. Concannon and Son, contractors and architects of Pleasanton, Kansas; former pastors; the building committee; and charter members of the branch. All but two former pastors were present to be introduced, and a letter was read from the first pastor of the branch who could not be present because of ill health. One member of the building committee, now living in Texas, could not be present. Of the twenty-six charter members of the organization of the branch in November 17, 1912, sixteen were present to rejoice in the achievement.

From its beginning in a rural schoolhouse the congregation moved to a church building in Butler in 1928. Here the Saints worshiped for a period of twenty-three years. On August 13, 1950, ground was broken for the new church, and actual construction began shortly afterward. The new house of worship was planned with a view to future expansion, this being the first of a two-part building program. The second portion is the educational unit to be built as needed and as funds are available. The completed structure, when seen from the air, has the shape of a "T", the pulpit being nearest to the street and backed up by the baptismal font which in turn is flanked by two rooms that are connected by a hallway. The entrance is at the crossing of the "T" on the left side of the building. The foyer is strategically located permitting entrance to each portion of the building without entering any other part of the building. The church is of mottled buff brick exterior with a plastered interior finished in warm cream. New pews and rostrum furniture of golden oak add much to the beauty of the sanctuary.

The type of heating used is forced hot water with a commercial type of baseboard radiation. The seating capacity of the auditorium is rated at 176; however in extreme necessity it can be made to accommodate 225.

A full basement of 4,000 square feet of floor space provides ample room for temporary classrooms, furnace room, kitchen, rest rooms, and social hall. The lots on which the church is built cost $2,800. The pews, rostrum furniture, and 100 chairs cost $2,941. The building—including plumbing, heating, and lighting—cost $26,000. This low figure was made possible by a great deal of donated labor, unsolicited generous discounts on materials, and expert supervision of the construction. The congregation is grateful for the assistance received from the House of Worship Revolving Fund.

that will house them from this time forward.

It is said that even the women helped to haul rock in 1913 when the original church was constructed. The group was established as a mission that year under the direction of President Frederick M. Smith. His heart's desire at the time is now realized, and the new church, one of the best in the Center Place, is to be dedicated to the worship of God.

Many pastors, whose labors will always be well remembered, have shared the fortunes of this congregation; but it remained for Elder Sanford Downs to direct them at this time of their greatest success. To him and his associates, the priesthood of the group, the women's organizations, and all the faithful members, we extend our thanks and congratulations, on a work planned in hope and aspiration and achieved with joy and satisfaction.

I occupied the new pulpit at eleven in the morning when appropriate services were conducted and at night another service was held when Bishop W. N. Johnson occupied.

Thus Enoch Hill Branch, with an enrollment of over four hundred, reaches a period in its existence with greater opportunities for service open before it. In the light of the spirit that has brought them to this hour we predict great things for these faithful Saints.

In passing I note the first four pastors at Enoch Hill were A. H. Parsons, George Jenkins, W. H. Deam, and W. D. Bul-lard, all gone to their reward.

Succeeding them were Charles Fry, William Brewer (deceased), O. W. Sar-ratt (deceased), Herbert L. Barto, E. A. Thomas, James E. Cleveland, Lawrence E. Martin, Everett J. West, and Brother Downs.

The results of united effort at Enoch Hill are and will be inspiring to all Saints to get the "spirit of the builders."

Ottumwa, Iowa

For some time Apostle D. T. Williams had been in touch with me about the new Ottumwa church. Construction was nearing completion, and on December 3, 1950, all arrangements were completed. Brother Williams and I went to Ottumwa for a day well packed with activities.

I was domiciled at the home of Brother and Sister Stark on Saturday night.

A Communion Service was held at 9:30 on Sunday morning in charge of Apostle Williams and Pastor Stark.

Elders D. J. Williams of Burlington, district president; E. R. Williams of Dav-enport; W. H. Gunn of Fort Madison; Charles Kornman, missionary; Edward Stark, pastor; Arnold Ourth and Harold D. Smith of Nauvoo; Frederick Bevan, and others of the priesthood took part in the services. Special music was supplied by Sisters Iris Taylor, Beverly Ann Kent, and Brother Max Hromek. The Women's Relief Corp presented the church with a United States flag.

I occupied at the morning preaching service, and Apostle Williams at the consecration service in the afternoon.

This new church is a fine adaptation of a house of worship to unique terrain; the architect is the Honorable Robert P. Weatherford, mayor of Independence, Missouri. It is contemplated that it will be dedicated on September 30 next, and it is hoped that Mayor Weatherford will be in attendance.

When the Christmas holiday season approached, I yielded to a desire to visit relatives in Florida. It was the first Christmas in forty-two years that I had to spend without my companion, and having been invited to come to Orlando, I left, I believe, on the nineteenth of December.

Some publicity matters developing after plans were made, I went via Wash-ington where, in connection with Doctor Francis W. Kirkham, of Salt Lake City, who makes common cause with us on certain matters, I interviewed Dale Morgan, author and research specialist.

Mr. Morgan, a grandson of Orson Pratt, professes a lack of belief in the Restoration. He has been engaged in historical research in connection with the entire Latter Day Saint movement and is in process of producing material for a book or books.

He greeted me cordially, and I believe he wants to be unprejudiced, desiring to be objective in his work; and I have reason to believe I will have opportunity to review and perhaps criticize his treatment of our cause prior to any publication.

I spent about ten days in Florida. Here live two of my nieces: Mrs. Bertha Hulmes (at Winter Haven) and Mrs. Harlow Fredrick (at Orlando). Harlow is a wide-awake, successful realtor with a number of side issues, such as candy manufacturing, etc.

The days were busy ones, what with meetings and family gatherings, church and preaching. My sister, Mrs. Audentia Anderson, and her husband, Ben, were there "for the duration," meaning winter, and so it was a family affair, our brother Hale being the absent one from our immediate family. Hale lives in Okmulgee, Oklahoma.

According to agreement with my son Don and his wife Darlene, I returned to Independence in time to spend New Years with them and their small but lively three-year-old son, Joseph. They are living with me, thereby helping me very much in making an adjustment to my new situation.

Wichita

Here was another visit planned between Apostle Williams and myself. The special services were planned by Pastor Myron LaPointe to inaugurate the use of the new church. So on January 13, Brother Williams, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, Seventy James C. Daugherty and I went by train to Wichita. That night there was a banquet with a large attendance. An interesting program was held, all of us speaking. At this meeting subscriptions for a large sum—as I recall—were pledged to complete the church.

On Saturday morning I spoke to a large congregation, and late in the afternoon we four took train for Kansas City and home, well pleased with our visit and gratified because of what the Saints there had accomplished.

Among the personalities I met there, as memory records it, were Doctor Harold Morgan and wife. Doctor Morgan is a grandson of Robert M. Elvin, early missionary and a long-time member and secretary of the Standing High Council of the Church. He lives at Newton, Kansas, I believe.

Mobile, Alabama

The Saints at Mobile began church rebuilding when Elder A. Orlin Crown-over was district president and pastor, a work that has been prosecuted to a completion by Elder Jack Pray. It was desired that Bishop DeLapp and I join them in special services on Sunday, January 28, 1951, in celebration of a completed structure. We proceeded to Mobile by different routes, both arriving in good time.

I was domiciled at Brother and Sister Pray's, and Bishop DeLapp at Brother and Sister Brewton Greene's.

A banquet was held on Saturday night, which was well attended. Bishop DeLapp and I both spoke. I remember that I related my Island experiences of the summer of 1950.

District President W. J. Breshears was present and had a part in the services. Consulting a program for Sunday I am reminded that Bishop DeLapp occupied at 11:00 o'clock, and I spoke at 7:30 p.m.

Others assisting were Elders Breshears, Pray, Brewton Greene, Raymond L. Booker, and A. V. Peavy. Before leaving for Mobile I had contracted a severe case of bronchitis, which almost incapacitated me; but I kept going and succeeded in filling my assignments. But the next day, on the first train north I took my leave for home, arriving safely and no worse for my efforts, happy that I was once more privileged to meet the Saints at Mobile, among them Elder Blue and a number of his mission at Pensacola.

Baltimore, Maryland

The Saints at Baltimore had planned special services for March 11. A very fine hall was secured for this home-coming.

I arrived on a morning train on the tenth and was met by District President Thomas Carr and others. I was domiciled at the home of Brother and Sister Albert A. Mehlisch. Brother Mehlisch is pastor at Baltimore.

There was a fine representation of Saints from Washington and other points in the district. I regret the loss of my copies of the program for the day, and memory may not serve me fully. But in addition to the preaching services, a special program was put on, without notice to the brother, in honor of A. H. D. Edwards, one of the oldest members in the district, who has carried the burden of the work in Baltimore for many years, raising a fine family of girls and boys, all of them active in the church.

A beautiful scroll had been engrossed, giving expression to the gratitude of the Saints for the life and works of Brother and Sister Edwards. This was signed by all the members. It was a distinct privilege for me, as president of the church, to make the speech of presentation. Sister Edwards occupied a place of honor beside her husband. These people have given their lives to the church, and they will live in the hearts and affections of their posterity and the children of others. The good they have done will never die.

At noon on Sunday, a near-by restaurant was chartered, and most of those in attendance had luncheon together.

At the request of Brother Carr, I stayed over to meet with the priesthood at the home of Brother Edwards on Monday night. Many things were discussed, and I felt the time was profitably spent.

On Monday also I was taken to Annapolis. There I saw some of the many things of interest at our Naval Academy, as well as the magnificent chapel where the cadets assemble for church.

On Tuesday I went to Washington to check on certain business matters there, including our pending application before the Federal Communications Commission. On Wednesday I joined Brother Carr at Elkton and was domiciled at his home, where I was made very welcome. Brother Carr showed me much of that historic section, and on Thursday and Friday nights I spoke to the Saints at Elk Mills to fairly good-sized congregations.

Philadelphia

On Saturday I went to Philadelphia. There I was housed and fed at the Conway home, glad again to renew acquaintance with John's fine family.

The morning service on this Palm Sunday was for worship, and I preached to almost a capacity crowd.

At seven, the evening meeting, the hour was devoted to an ordination service; I was in charge. As I have a copy of the program I record that Duane Edwards, Valmer Fish, and Walter Gooding were ordained to the office of teacher; Henry Beers and Walter Grimmer to the office of deacon; and Richard Edwards and Herman Thomas to the office of priest.

These ceremonies were conducted with dignity and understanding, and it was an auspicious occasion in which I was pleased to have a humble part.

Late on Sunday night I left Philadelphia, and at 1:30 a.m. on Monday I arrived at Bridgeport, Connecticut, where the following day I found certain court records for the benefit of some of our members, after which I proceeded homeward to Independence.

Utah District

Having accepted an assignment to the conference of our members at Salt Lake City, set for Sunday, April 8, I stopped over for a visit with Elder Ward A. Hougas at Denver, and also stopped at Glenwood Springs, en route, to relax and work on certain manuscripts.

On Wednesday word reached me by telephone from President Edwards that Elder George Albert Smith, president of the Mormon Church, had on that day passed away. Notwithstanding George Albert was a descendant of those who we contend went into apostasy, he was a son of a "legal" wife and was not a polygamist. For many years the relations between the members of my family, including my father, Frederick M., Audentia Anderson, and others, and this cousin—"kinsman" he called himself, had been very pleasant. There had been little argument indulged when we met, and that in good temper, however.

It seemed a little strange that I should be en route to Salt Lake City at the time of his death. I communicated with his oldest daughter, Mrs. Murray Stewart—Emily by name, called upon her and the family upon arrival, and sat with her and her husband and others of the family at the funeral in the Tabernacle on Saturday, April 7, when tribute was paid to their departed leader as a man who loved all of mankind. I bear witness that he did have genuine affection for his relatives, including the descendants of the Prophet Joseph, though divided from them by church and doctrinal differences.

My father had similar pleasant contacts with some of his relatives in the Mormon Church, notably with John Henry Smith, the father of George Albert Smith. And while church issues had been discussed with them, I am sure it did not disturb their friendly interest in each other because of blood relationship.

On Friday, April 6, President Paul M. Hanson, Elders Russell F. Ralston and James Everett, and I were accorded seats in the first session of the Mormon General Conference, where we were interested observers of the proceedings. For this courtesy we were indebted primarily to Wilford Wood, who has been a sort of special envoy to Independence many times, and, secondly, to Apostle Joseph Fielding Smith who, when he learned I was present, came down into the chamber and escorted Brother Hanson and myself to chairs nearer the front.

I recognized many officials whom I had formerly met, and I must acknowledge the cordial way in which I was received, of course because I am a grandson of the Prophet Joseph for whom great reverence is professed.

On Sunday the entire day was spent with our own people, beginning with a Communion service. At this meeting, I blessed the infant son of Brother and Sister Ralston, named David Mark. Brother Hilton D. Williams was ordained by Brethren Hanson and Ralston.

At the morning preaching service I believe I was the preacher; Brother Hanson spoke in the afternoon, and Elder Everett occupied with credit in the evening.

There was a larger attendance at this conference than usual, and we feel our ministry was well received.

As the funeral of their deceased president had postponed the closing meeting of the Mormon Conference till Monday, Brethren Hanson, Ralston, Everett and I had the opportunity of visiting their reorganization meeting on Monday, April 9, when selection of Elder D. O. McKay as their leader was made. Through the courtesy of those in charge we were favorably seated to see and hear all done and said.

The Mormon Church has now for the second time given leadership to a monogamist, a commendable step away from former procedure, every president from Brigham Young down to and including Heber J. Grant having been polygamists.

However, the Mormons—leaders as well as membership—still believe in plural marriage as one of the doctrines of salvation, which is of course an undoubted heresy from the original faith. They still advocate and teach it in their Standard Books. The cessation of practice, or failure to practice, does not save them on the charge of heresy.

I left Salt Lake City April 10 for Cheyenne, Wyoming, where I conferred with certain members as well as our legal counsel respecting church interests at Albin; spending one night at Cheyenne and another night, Wednesday, at the splendid and comfortable ranch home of Brother and Sister Ed Peterson near Albin. The weather was wintry with a lot of snow and ice on the roads.

Late Thursday afternoon, April 12, I arrived at Omaha where I stopped over for a day to visit my sister, Audentia, and her husband, Benjamin Anderson, leaving the next day for home.

MIDLAND AND SOUTHERN ENGLAND.—The Midland and Southern District reunion was combined with the annual conference and was held at Enfield, August 4-6. The occasion marked the close of Apostle Jensen's ministry in England after three years in Europe. He and his family sailed for the United States the day after reunion ended. Bishop and Sister Mark H. Siegfried from Independence, Missouri, were present at the reunion. A buffet tea was served to visitors Saturday afternoon. The business session was held in the evening under the direction of District President Frank A. Fry. The following are officers: Frank A. Fry, district president; J. F. Schofield and John Coggan, counselors; John Coggan, minister to nonresident Saints; Gertrude Allen, women's leader; John Holmes, church school director; Roy Oakman, young people's leader; John Holmes, music director; Violet Worth, secretary; Bishop Trapp, treasurer; Rose Worth and Frank Judd, auditors; J. F. Schofield, John Coggan, and Edgar Holmes, reunion committee.

Following the business session, a film lecture was presented by Brother Siegfried on his trip to the South Sea islands with President Israel Smith. The evensong was held in a near-by hall under the direction of Roy Oakman and Brother T. E. Worth.

Communion service was held Sunday morning. Apostle Jensen taught a general class and then the members were divided in four groups, taught by Frank Judd, T. E. Worth, Gertrude Allen, and Frank Fry. Brother Jensen gave the evening sermon.

An early morning prayer service was held before breakfast Monday morning. After breakfast, a general fellowship was held. Brother Franklin Schofield, pastor at Enfield, gave the address. Classes were held in the afternoon. Brother Siegfried gave the evening message, and Brother Frank Fry delivered a speech of appreciation to those who worked on the reunion. On behalf of the British Mission, Bishop Trapp made a presentation to Brother and Sister Jensen on their departure. Sister Jensen spoke in appreciation for the beautiful table linen she had been able to purchase with the gift.—Reported by VIOLET WORTH

MARLETTE, MICHIGAN.—The annual business meeting of the branch met September 4 with the district president in charge. The following were elected officers: Elder Audrey Murry, pastor; Beatrice Foster, secretary; Bill Brown, treasurer; Donna Lambert, music director; Beulah Lambert, women's department; Ray Kitt, book agent; Floyd Lambert, church school director. The report of last year included twelve persons baptized, one baby blessed, and one death, the former pastor, Elder Ara Bardeau.—Reported by ESTHER LAMBERT

BEND, OREGON.—The annual Labor Day institute was held with members from all over the district assembling at Bend. The group met for the opening meeting at the home of the pastor and his wife, Elder George and Mary Dyer where a chicken dinner was held. The first service took place at Norway Hall where the Bend Saints hold church services. A program under the direction of Sister Mary Dyer with Elder Don Williams as Master of Ceremonies was held. Participating in the program were Brother Dyer, Gale Williams, Mary Moye, Shirley McCallum, Lavern and Ronald Moye, Shirley Knowles, Kenneth Moye, Faye Williams, Robert and Vicki Petrie, Robert Williams, Bernice Knowles, Robert Henderson, and Alice Polly. District President J. L. Verhei gave a word of welcome and outlined the program for the week end. Elders James Kemp and Lloyd Shannon had charge of the young people. Brother Shannon also was in charge of music, with Gale Williams, pianist. Elder Harold Carpenter directed the church school and Roycie Chapman was in charge of the women's department. Elder James Kemp gave a short missionary rally talk.

Fellowship service was held Sunday morning with Brother Verhei in charge, assisted by Bishop Monte Lasater, Elder James Kemp and Elder Clinton Dobson. Priest Keith Kinert, Elsie Prothero, Elders Roy Keiser, James Kemp, Lloyd Shannon, Harold Carpenter, and Sister Effie Verhei assisted with the worship and church school period. Bishop Lasater preached the morning sermon, and Elder F. E. Chapman was in charge of the service. Also participating were Priest Milton Petrie, pastor of Grant's Pass; Elder James Davidson, pastor of Medford; Elder James Kemp, missionary to the Oregon District; and Elder Ernest Webberley, pastor of Camas. The noon meal was a basket lunch held at Pioneer Park.

A baptismal service was held at the river in the afternoon. Robert Petrie was baptized by Elder George Dyer with Elder Lloyd Shannon in charge of the service.

The confirmation service was held in the evening when Brother Petrie was confirmed by Elders Herbert Hawley, pastor at Ocean Lake and Clinton Dobson. At this service Judith Gayle Moe was blessed under the hands of Elders Harold Carpenter and Don Williams. Following these ordinances a class period was held.

Elder James Kemp was the evening speaker. Also assisting in the service were Elder Harold Carpenter, district church school director; Elder John Rodley, pastor of Roseburg; Elder Lloyd Shannon; and Elder Lowell Shulz, pastor of Springfield.

A program was held under the direction of the district dramatics director. Those taking part were Brother and Sister Robert Taylor, Brother and Sister Keith Kinert, Brother and

Prayer services were held Monday morning and the district council and officers held a meeting.—Reported by LEONA CARPENTER

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—Approximately 150 members of the district met at the annual district conference, August 26, at De Kalb, Illinois. "Work While It Is yet Day" was the theme followed throughout the services. Evangelist Leslie Wight of Chicago was the guest teacher for the early session. A morning prayer service was held with J. C. Stuart, district president, in charge. Brother Wight gave the talk. Brother Stuart gave the morning sermon. Luncheon was served in the lower auditorium of the church by the De Kalb women. Following a musical program, the annual business meeting was held. Officers elected are district president, Lloyd Cleveland; counselors, Richard Wildermuth and Arnold Settles; director of religious education, William Pike, Sr.; superintendent of women, Hazel Blakely; superintendent of children, Ruth Gouty; young people's leader, Arnold Settles; district secretary, Elmer Kahler; district treasurer, Russell Rogers; director of music, Gloria Settles; director of publicity, Dorothy Anderson; Book Steward, Robert H. Anderson, Auditors, Roberta Marvin and H. G. Van Epp; and bishop's agent, Clarence White.

The call of Marvin Lee Jones of DeSelm Branch to the office of priest was approved. Members of the conference also approved the call of Paul Gouty, Aurora Branch, to the office of elder. There are eight branches and one mission in the Northeastern Illinois District including Aurora, De Kalb, DeSelm, Forrest, Mission, Ottawa, Plano, Sandwich Branches, and Elgin mission.—Reported by DOROTHY ANDERSON

BAYOU LA BATRE, ALABAMA.—A branch business meeting was held August 29, with Elder Delbert Tillman in charge, High Priest J. A. Pray, presiding. The following officers were elected to serve during the coming year: Elder Delbert Tillman, pastor; Priest Alma Tillman, counselor to pastor and bishop's agent; Deacon Robert Pendarvis, counselor to pastor and treasurer; Irma Tillman, church school director and branch historian; Audrey Tillman, secretary, statistician, and music director; Frank Deakle, youth leader; Hazel Ruth Nelson, publicity agent and book steward; Louvenia Sutton, women's leader. These officers assumed their duties October 1, excepting the pastor who began his work immediately because of the death of the former pastor, Elder O. O. Tillman.

Brother Pray presented the proposed budget for the coming year, and after discussion and revision it was accepted unanimously.

Brother Delbert Tillman commended the building committee and as pastor, dissolved this committee and named the following to act as a finance committee: Deacon Robert Pendarvis, Ambrose Sutton, Louvenia Sutton, and Emery Powell, the latter acting as chairman.—Reported by HAZEL RUTH NELSON

MISSION BRANCH, MARSEILLES, ILLINOIS.—The annual business meeting was held August 22. Elder Robert H. Anderson was selected to continue as pastor to be assisted by William Pike, Jr., and M. J. Anderson as counselors. Other branch officers selected: director of religious education, Kenneth Mulvaney; director of adult department, M. J. Anderson; young people's leader, William Pike; children's leader, Cora Anderson; director of women, Stella Williamson; treasurer,

Vernon Hougas; secretary, William Fewell; recorder, William Fewell; director of music, Blanche Hayer; director of publicity, Dorothy Anderson; librarian, Susie Lowe; church school secretary, Adelbert Hayer; building committee, Robert H. Anderson, Vernon Hougas, William Fewell, Kenneth Mulvaney, M. J. Anderson; deacon in charge, Dale Anderson; solicitor, Vernon Hougas; auditing committee, Kenneth Mulvaney and Robert Anderson. Lloyd Cleveland, president of the district was in charge of the business session.—Reported by DOROTHY ANDERSON

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.—Dr. Harvey Grice of the Philadelphia District attended the fall business meeting of the branch September 9. His young son attended the meeting with him. Brother Grice was principal speaker of the evening service. Officers elected during the business session were Elder Richard J. Hawkins, pastor; Teacher Harry T. May, secretary-recorder; Teacher James Mulherin, treasurer; Hilda Miller, church school superintendent; Loretta Mulherin, organist; Priest Albert Lewis, chorister; Ann Jenkins, women's leader; and H. David Morris, church correspondent and publicity agent.—Reported by H. DAVID MORRIS

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—Out-of-town church members who visited the Stone Church in August were Mabel Anderson, Mrs. Isabelle E. PROTON, ONTARIO.—Five children were baptized by the pastor, Robert Black, August 5. The confirmation service under the direction of District President Gordon Farrow of Warton and Elder Alex Cadwell of Guelph took place the same day. Candidates were Effy Jack, Bessie Batchelar, Sandra Batchelar, Russell Jack, and Donald Batchelar.

On September 2, two sisters were baptized by the pastor. They were Helen Jack and Eunice Batchelar. They were confirmed by Elders Angus Kennedy of Toronto and Robert Black.

Apostle C. George Mesley and Missionary Al Pelletier visited the branch.

This summer a basement was put under the church. All labor was voluntary. This has provided extra classrooms and a place for social activities.

Sister Annie Dickson of Calgary and Sister Stella Shaw of Edmonton, former members of the branch, visited this summer. Several members of the branch attended the reunion at Port Elgin in July.

The women's department held a bazaar and tea in June. Approximately $100 was raised. The women installed the electric lights in the basement. In August the Grand Valley ladies visited at a grandmother's meeting in the church.—Reported by DELL BLACK

Teaching Children in Your Church

By Arlene S. Hall

Here is a complete and practical textbook on the preparation, methods, and effectiveness of the children's religious education program in your church. It will help new teachers learn their jobs and provide new zest and inspiration to experienced teachers. The purpose of this comprehensive volume is to assist leaders and teachers in their endeavor to lead children to Christ.

Better Homes and Gardens Garden Book, Meredith Publishing Company, $3.95.

GREEN THUMBS were outmoded as standard equipment for successful gardeners with the advent of this first edition of a new garden book. It was produced under the editorial supervision of Fleeta Brownell Woodroffe, garden editor of Better Homes and Gardens magazine, which assures the authenticity of its information.

It is a beautiful, ring-bound volume, covered with white, washable cloth printed with a design of natural-colored fruits and flowers on both covers and spine.

Its twenty chapters are separated by tabbed, labeled, and indexed dividers of lightweight cardboard (similar to those in students' notebooks) which form a visible table of contents that speeds the search for general information. A well-subdivided index in the back points to specific items of information. It would be difficult, indeed, to get lost in this book.

It has been written for gardens of all sizes, from one geranium in one flowerpot to complete home grounds. Like all general garden books, it is a capsule course in horticulture. But it has a plus feature which puts it far ahead of the usual book of its purpose. I refer to the more than one thousand pictures, charts, diagrams, and tables which truly make it a "show-how" book and advance the amateur gardener closer to the one experienced in planting and growing skills. It's a tossup as to whether the pictures supplement the text, or the reverse. There is an economy of words and a richness of visual aids that together instruct in the quickest and happiest way. A great number of the photographs are in color, as potent a producer of garden plans as a seed catalog in February.

The twenty chapter titles are self-explanatory:

How to use your space
Lawns—how to make and keep them

How to plan for continuous bloom
Success with roses

Shrubs for many uses

Evergreens for long-time pleasure

Vines—what they can do for you

Garden pools—how to build and plant

Shade—its possibilities and problems

Walls and banks—how to plant

Maintenance—labor savers—tools—garden storage

Construction in the home garden

Garden soils—how to manage them

Vegetable growing that pays
Fruit for the home place

Control of pests and diseases

Window gardening and success with house plants

Seed starting—propagation—flowers for cutting

Calendar of garden reminders for the twelve months

Index—handy facts on weights and measures.

The title page states that the book is a "year-round guide to practical gardening." At this time of year, gardeners are appraising and evaluating their gardening success, planning changes and improvements for next year. Much physical labor must be done in the garden in the fall if those plans are to be effected. It seems that now is the right time to begin, or extend, the garden bookshelf.

This book may be ordered from Herald House, Independence, Missouri.

Are You Asking These Questions?

1. Who may attend the Women's Institute?

Anyone who is interested. It has been planned for the women specifically, but men are also invited. All meetings are open to both men and women, leaders or otherwise. Everybody is welcome.

2. What will it cost me?

Transportation cost will be determined by the distance traveled. Expenses while in Independence will include the registration fee of $1.50, daily luncheon at the Auditorium, $.75, and the other meals of the day which may be secured at local cafes at reasonable cost. There will be no charge for housing.

3. Will a nursery be provided for small children?

A nursery will be provided during both morning and afternoon sessions, at a cost of 5c per child for each session.

4. Should I register with the housing committee even though I have arranged for my own accommodations?

Yes, please, for two reasons. First, we need to know the approximate number who will be attending, so that the noon luncheons and other special features may be planned, as well as making provision for distribution of materials. Second, your registration fee is needed to care for expenses of the institute.

It Can Happen Here

By Josephine Montgomery

PART II

THE ANSWER TO JUVENILE CRIME is the same as the answer to any kind of crime: education. Some leaders, particularly narcotics experts, disagree; their arguments are sound, I think, but not complete. "Education," warns U.S. Commissioner of Narcotics Harry J. Anslinger, "is likely to be dangerous, because it advertises the use of drugs and stimulates curiosity as to their effects. Instead of diverting young people away from addiction it tends to awaken interest and undue curiosity, and thus defeats its own object."¹ On the other hand, Commissioner Anslinger may be limiting the meaning of the word "education" to basic instruction in the effects and dangers of the drugs. I think that education must go deeper than simple instruction if it is to succeed in stamping out teen-age immorality.

Take education in the field of sex for example. Most people would agree that it is an absolute necessity to teach young people accurate, scientific facts about the anatomy and function of the sex organs. But it is also a known fact that sexual activity is pleasurable for most normal people. A teacher or parent might fall into the same error that Anslinger warns about in narcotics—that of stressing the pleasurable aspects and thus laying the groundwork for desire in teen-agers to go right from the classroom to find out for himself what kind of "kick" it can give. And in many cases that is just what happens. What was known as "heavy petting" during my high school days is now called "courting a storm," and to anyone who knows the powerful emotions produced by sex stimulation the phrase is most apt.

Education in the terrible results of improper use of sex is not as effective as some parents like to think. The appeal to fear of pregnancy or social disease is scoffed at by kids who think they are smart enough to beat the rap. With contraceptives as easy to buy as chewing gum from slot machines in rest rooms across the country, what does an "informed" teen-ager have to fear?

One prominent authority has protested that we talk too much about sex and too little about love. I think he is right. Education, although it should include the basic facts of sex anatomy and satisfactions, should go deeper into the moral life of the instructor and the instructed. When we say that sex was meant to be a pleasure to man, we should stress that the greatest pleasure is possible only when the sex act is the result of mutual love and respect, when animal desire and curiosity is ennobled by the desire to give happiness to the loved one, not just take it. We should talk about healthy family relationships, monogamy, fidelity, sharing, tolerance, the bearing and rearing of children. I feel nothing but pity for the thousands of young people, satiated with unhealthy experiences while still in their teens, who will never know the real thrill of discovering sexual love as God intended it to be discovered. We should make the rightness of sex so attractive to teen-agers that they won't be tempted to dull their capacity for married love by experimenting at joy parties or in parked cars.

IN THE FIELD OF NARCOTICS, Commissioner Anslinger's objection to education is similar and well founded. Mere education about the effects of drugs on the human body serves to entice young people to try them . . . always believing with pathetic faith that they themselves are strong enough not to become addicts. The craving of youth is for thrills and kicks . . . the greater the danger involved the greater the thrill. The appeal to fear of consequences here has no more effect than it has in the field of sex experimentation. We need something more.

I go this far along with Commissioner Anslinger:

Instead of wasting our time negatively stressing the dangers of drug addiction,

New Horizons

we should throw all our influence as good citizens behind the program to stop drug peddlers: . . . shut off the production and shipment of illicit drugs at the source; pass legislation requiring known and convicted addicts to undergo curative treatments . . . many "pushers" are addicts themselves; make the penalty for selling dope so severe that it will clean the streets within weeks after it is put in force; raise the standards of morality in the American home.²

Of these, I am most concerned with the last, for it is the kind of education I mean. By our teaching and example, we should make clean living so attractive to teen-agers that drug peddlers would be laughed out of business.

Behind the mere instruction in the mechanics of drug and sex (the underlying causes of many crimes) lies the most important single thing we can teach our young people—a sense of responsibility. We must, by instruction and example, teach teen-agers a sense of responsibility to God, to their relatives and friends, and most of all to themselves. Fear of consequences might regiment some people, but it will never do the job as well as a healthy regard for what is best for oneself and others. Zion, when we achieve it, would be a poor place indeed if its people were good only because they were afraid to be evil.

WHOO WILL TEACH young people about this kind of responsibility? The three agencies that might be reasonably expected to furnish such education. Parents can do their part by proper instruction and by their example of happy, well-organized lives. Churches can do their part by instituting classes for discussion of youth problems and sympathetic counseling. Schools can do their part by supplying basic, scientific information. All three should join to help provide planned recreation to keep teen-agers too busy to fall prey to peddlers with their proposition for a little "fun." Supervised parties and picnics should replace "joy parties" and "Hadacol parties." Good clubs sponsored by reliable adults who remember their own teen years should take over from the "nonvirgin" clubs and junior mobsters.

THERE IS A FOURTH GROUP with a responsibility to help delinquent teen-agers find the way back to healthy living and thinking. For every high school dope addict in New York City there are 200 students who have never touched it. For every rapist, murderer, and thief there are a thousand teen-agers who have never done anything worse than skip school on a spring morning when the air smelled like fishing. For every young couple who end their dates by "courting a storm" there are a thousand young couples who content themselves with holding hands and a good-night kiss. For every gang of teen-age thugs who delight in wrecking a store or looting the homes of people on vacation, there are clubs in a dozen cities like the group in Denver, Colorado, that raised $80,000 as their contribution to help finance a new hospital. On behalf of these young people I protest against maligning all teen-agers as a generation of juvenile delinquents because of the moral degeneracy of a few.

But let's face it, kids; the few are numerous enough, and their crimes are sensational enough to give you a black eye. For your own sakes as well as theirs, it's up to you to help re-educate your fellow teen-agers to the idea that "it isn't necessary to break all the rules in the book to have fun."

We talk a lot about temptation, as though it were always evil, but I think it has much to be said in its favor. According to Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, the business of Christianity is not to condemn, whitewash, or basically change humanity; it is simply to tempt men upward to the highest standard of living of which they are capable. Christ said the same thing 2,000 years ago when he defined his mission: "I am come that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly."

To help young people find the abundant life is still the job of every Christian in the year 1951!

"God Bless You"

By Alice Zion Buckley

THE DOOR BELL RANG persistently, and I went slowly to answer it. I was a bit disgruntled. After a weary morning of house-cleaning I had sat down to catch my breath, and here the door bell was clamoring for attention. I opened the door and a dark, little woman stood on the step with two brownish dried balls in her hand. They were Mexican lilies, she said, and for the small price of $1.00 I could have two of them. I was tempted, but a temporary lack of funds made me a bit brusque with her. When she told me that the money would be used for a motherless family I began to melt, and told her to come back another day. "That," she answered, "I cannot do"—but as she left she flashed me a radiant smile and with friendliness in her voice said simply, "God bless you." I was nonplused for a bit. Few folks at my door left with a "God bless you." I went back to my work feeling renewed and grateful. In three small words and one friendly smile she had reminded me that God was still in his heaven even if I had lost him during the day among my pots and pans.

stead she selected a familiar, well-loved hymn. She sang it simply with her clear, strong voice. She interpreted it as only a trained soloist could. It went straight to the hearts of the people and melted them almost to tears. It lifted Frank Edwards up above Frank Edwards so that panic was forgotten and God could use him.

A Sound Balance of Emotion and Intelligence

Someone will say, "That is pure emotionalism." The man in the congregation might answer, "So what?" Hymns are not written or sung to argue people into a right state of mind to hear God's word. A religion that is coldly intellectual may be as logical as a syllogism and as tasteless and unattractive as a cold fried egg—without salt.

The hymns that live and are loved stir the emotions of the preacher and his hearers, and they also quicken the mind so that in such a state of spiritual rapport the preacher may deliver a message which appeals to both heart and mind. Our safety is found in a sane balance of emotion and intellect.

Brother Edwards and I did not discuss congregational singing, choir work, anthems, oratorios, or orchestras, all of which have their time and place in the ministry of music. We tried to keep out of too deep waters. We were just two preachers who know something about the reactions of average congregations at a missionary or revival preaching service and the needs and feelings of the preacher who desires help from the ministry of music.

I think that the last song just before the preacher gets to his feet may well be selected with care; if possible it should fit his theme. It may inspire both congregation and minister. It may lend "wings of song to words of truth."

WEDDINGS

Worth-Eagan

Marguerite Estella Eagan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Eagan of Lamar, Colorado, and Frederick Eugene Worth, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Worth, Jr., of Independence, Missouri, were married August 24 at the tabernacle on the reunion grounds at Palmer Lake, Colorado. Apostle Reed Holmes read the double-ring ceremony. They are making their home in Warrensburg, Missouri, where the groom is a junior in business administration at Central Missouri State College. The bride is employed in the registrar's office. Both are graduates of Graceland College.

Jenkins-Cox

Zona M. Cox, daughter of Mrs. Lena Cox of Mason City, Iowa, and Jared W. Jenkins SYN/8, son of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Jenkins of Independence, Missouri, were married in the Y.M.C.A. chapel at Mason City on September 9, Elder John N. Loren officiating. They are making their home in San Diego where the groom is stationed with the Navy.

Cason-Coberley

Lois Coberley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Coberley of Toledo, Ohio, and Carroll E. Cason, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cason of Inverness, Florida, were married June 9 at Sylvania, Ohio, Elder Harry Ries officiating. They are living in Phoenix, Arizona, where Carroll is stationed with the Navy.

DEATHS

AUSTIN.—James Arlie, Sr., was born March 4, 1890, at Palouse, Washington, and died August 19, 1951, at his home in Los Angeles, California. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on August 10, 1927, ordained a priest on February 9, 1936, and an elder on March 26, 1941. He served as a young people's leader for many years, and his influence lives on in the lives of those who have received his ministry.

He is survived by his wife, the former Bertha Duncan, a son, James Arlie, Jr., of Los Angeles; a daughter, Thelma Horner of Los Angeles; a sister, Mrs. Lowell Heath of Stockton, California; three brothers: Robert, Melvin, and Ernest Austin, all of Washington; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Utter-McKinley View-Park Chapel in Los Angeles, Elders Blaine O. Bender and Thomas R. Beil officiating. Burial was in the Inglewood Park Cemetery, Inglewood, California.

BLOOM.—Dora Avinda, daughter of Lars Peter and Dena Danielson, was born October 4, 1883, in Eureka Township, Wisconsin, and died July 29, 1951, at St. Francis Hospital in Escanaba, Michigan. She was married to Claus Bloom on November 1, 1902, who preceded her in death thirteen years ago. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since May 8, 1918.

She is survived by a son, Frank, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin; a brother, Will O. Danielson of Superior, Wisconsin; and three sisters: Mrs. F. G. Landahl of St. Croix Falls, Wisconsin; Mrs. J. W. Scott of New Richmond, Wisconsin; and Mrs. William Birmingham of Gladstone, Michigan. Funeral services were held at the Kelly Mortuary in Gladstone, Elder Rex Stowe officiating. Interment was in the Merrill, Wisconsin, cemetery.

JOHNSON.—Joseph H. C., was born September 30, 1875, at Blenatim, Ontario, and died June 11, 1951, at St. Francis Hospital in Escanaba, Michigan. He was married to Julia Irena Acker on December 21, 1900, at Munising. In 1905 they moved to Bellingham, Washington, and lived there until October, 1933, when they made their home in Rapid River, Michigan. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 5, 1894, and had held the office of deacon since August 16, 1925.

He is survived by his wife and one sister, Mrs. Cecil Anderson. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Gladstone, Elder Rex Stowe officiating. Interment was in the Rapid River Cemetery.

SCHREUR.—Dirk, son of John and Jane Schreur, was born September 30, 1871, in Holland, Michigan, and died July 17, 1951, at Gaylord, Michigan. He was a lumberman, but had recently retired. On June 14, 1896, he was married to Grace M. Hackert, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since May 12, 1895. On November 1, 1908, he was ordained an elder, and on July 4, 1926, he was ordained a high priest and bishop.

Besides his wife he leaves four sons: Floyd, George, and Dirk of Gaylord, and Ammon of Allegon, Michigan; four daughters: Hattie Lind of Seattle, Washington; Delia Jensen (wife of Apostle Blair Jensen) of Kansas City, Missouri; Grace Jackson of Pontiac, Michigan; and Jane Butcher of Gaylord; nineteen grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Funeral services were held at the Walker Mortuary in Gaylord, Elder Harry Doty officiating. Burial was in Fairview Cemetery, Gaylord.

ANDERSON.—Hiley Eleeta, daughter of John and Mary Ann Bradford Fry, was born December 10, 1867, in Chicago, Illinois, and died July 21, 1951, at Los Angeles, California.

She was married on March 2, 1884, to Edward M. Anderson, in Benton County, Arkansas, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church on March 5, 1899, at Bevier, Missouri.

Surviving are four daughters: Pearl Coy, Millie Bullard, Edna Closs, and Georgia Holmes; four sons: Charlie, Joseph, Eddie, and Delbert Anderson, eighteen grandchildren; and twenty-three great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Brown Mortuary in Los Angeles. Elder Garland E. Tickemyer officiated.

SCHREUR.—Sarah Jane, was born May 26, 1880, at Manistee, Michigan, and died May 19, 1951, at her home in Gaylord, Michigan. As a child she moved with her parents to Freesoil, Michigan, where she lived until 1908. Then she moved to Gaylord and spent the remainder of her life there. On April 30, 1907, she was married to Allen Schreur; seven children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since November 6, 1893, and had served thirty years as clerk for Gaylord Branch.

She leaves her husband, Allen; five daughters: Ilah Davey and May Sandell of Flint, Michigan; Dorothy Tiel of Reed City, Michigan; Marjorie Pray and Elizabeth Glasser of Gaylord; two sons: A. John of Saginaw, Michigan, and Kenneth E. of Gaylord; a brother, John Lachene of Pontiac, Michigan; and fourteen grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Alvin Ellis and Rex Stowe. Interment was in Fairview Cemetery, Gaylord.

TILLMAN.—Origen Oscar, son of John W. and Jane Powell Tillman, was born February 13, 1881, and died August 26, 1951, after an illness of two months. In October 1904, he was married to Hulda Porter who died sixteen years ago. Two of the eight children born to them also preceded him in death. In October, 1943, he married Delia C. Cobb who survives him. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on September 7, 1903, and was ordained to the office of elder on June 3, 1906. In 1932, when the Bayou La Batre, Mississippi, group was organized, he was elected pastor. For nineteen years meetings were held at his home; this summer a new church—of which he had long dreamed—was built. He was the oldest active minister in the Gulf States District, having served forty-five years as an elder.

Besides his wife he leaves six children: Irma, Alma, Delbert, Burton, Audrey, and Hazel. Funeral services were held at the church in Bayou La Batre, Elders J. A. Pray, W. J. Breshears, and R. L. Booker officiating. Burial was in the Magnolia Cemetery at Theodore, Alabama.

P.S.

* A NEED OF PRAYERS

This story from life comes to us through Herman Fultz of the Enoch Hill congregation, Independence. It concerns the efforts of Brother and Sister Helmut Land, who have been very devoted in church work. As a part of her activity, Sister Land (formerly Lucy Nelson) gave out forty-four copies of the Book of Mormon as she told the gospel story. She is the friendly visitor for her group.

The group wanted to give her a present to express their appreciation, but she said, "No, I don't want a present. I need your prayers." That suggestion was the cause of a special meeting held for Sister Land, at which there was an outstanding experience of prayer and testimony. Brother Hubert Case, a friend of the family, was present and participated by relating some of his own splendid experiences.

The Lands are moving to Lamoni now, and will be there when you read this item. Sister Land will be serving on the Graceland faculty as College Nurse. Brother Land will be taking studies in religious education. Their home and apartments, for which they have worked and sacrificed, will help them pay their way.

* AN INTERVAL OF SILENCE

Among the notable things in heaven, this one comes to mind on certain days when noise drives one to desperation. When one of the angels opened the seventh seal, "there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."—Revelation 8:1. What one wouldn't give for a seal like that!

Think of what such a thing could mean on earth. No radio blaring its senseless jive into your ears. No telephone pulling your comfort up by the roots of your nerves with its insistent call. No brakes screaming or fenders being crushed in collisions. No sirens scaring the life out of you. No child crying as if its heart would break. No high-pitched voices flaying an absent friend alive. . . . Ah, this would be heavenly indeed!

Only heaven could produce a full half-hour of quiet. Once, years ago, they tried to get everybody to be quiet for just one minute on Armistice Day. We held it for fifteen seconds. Then somebody sneezed. A baby cried. A church cougher went into action. A teenage girl giggled. By that time it was all over, and this solemn minute was just like any other. We couldn't keep still that long.

Think what might happen to us if we had to keep an absolute silence for half an hour. It would get on the nerves. . . . Somewhere down the aisle is a barely audible whisp of whispering, and a huge angel lays a heavy hand on the shoulder of the offender. Somebody forgets and clears his throat, only to find his head enveloped in a small but dense muffling cloud. The imaginative think they hear voices far away. Finally, a woman who had talked continuously for forty years clenches her fists, shuts her eyes, and stands up to scream, only to find the large, firm hand of a determined angel across her mouth.

Nobody can tell us today what that seventh seal was like. It must really have been something. Nothing like it has ever been seen on earth. What a potency! What a charm! . . . If you ever see one, let us know. We are definitely in the market for it.

News and Notes

CHURCH DEDICATED

The church at Wood River, Illinois, was dedicated September 23. President Israel A. Smith preached the dedication sermon at the morning service, and Apostle D. O. Chesworth preached in the afternoon.

RECOGNITION GIVEN

In the July issue of "Der Deutsche Herald," which is the German "Saints' Herald," special tribute was paid by the people of Germany to Apostle D. Blair Jensen who just returned from the European mission.

SPRING RIVER CONFERENCE

The Spring River District conference was held at the Ozark reunion grounds September 15 and 16. Apostle D. O. Chesworth was in charge, in association with District President Stephen Black. At this conference a review of baptismal achievement was made. One hundred and twenty-one baptisms have been reported so far this year. The goal for the year is 177.

APOSTLE SPEAKS

Apostle Charles R. Hield spoke to the Kiwanis Club of Independence September 18. He presented an illustrated lecture on Mexico. Brother Hield was a member of a party which explored historic ruins in Mexico and parts of South America.

SEVENTY HOLDS SERIES

Seventy Sylvester R. Coleman completed a series September 16 at Tunnel Hill, Illinois. At the close of the series eighteen people were baptized, sixteen adults and two children. Several other people have shown an interest in the church as a result of the series.

IN WARRENSBURG

Edna Easter attended the Central Missouri Stake women's conference September 19, at Warrensburg, Missouri. Women from approximately twenty branches were present. Sister Easter spoke on the church program for girls' work and its needs.

YOUNG ADULT RETREAT

Two hundred and fifty persons attended the Center Stake Young Adult Retreat held at Gardner Lake September 15 and 16. Maurice Jacobsen, stake young adult leader, directed retreat. There were 175 adults, married and single, and 75 children. The children were cared for by Velma Jones. Don Lents directed the campfire, and Apostle Maurice Draper and Elder Fred O. Davies delivered sermons. Carl Mesle and Lee Hart assisted with the retreat. Alfred Ream was baptized at a special service. Brother Ream is the son-in-law of Brother Jacobsen.

MEETING HELD

The administrative council of the Skylark and Oriole groups met September 16. Elder Carl Mesle, General Church youth director, was in charge of the meeting. An election of officers was held. Mrs. Rachael Oeser, who served last year as city-wide girl's director, was re-elected to the same office. Other officers are Mrs. Ila Whenham, secretary; Mrs. Alta Redfield, treasurer; Mrs. Emma M. Phillips, publicity.

We'd like you to know

Leslie Woodrow Kohlman

Texas has a reputation for bigness. That's where Leslie got his start. He stands 6'1" and is built accordingly. His parents were admirers of President Woodrow Wilson—which seems to explain the reason for his middle name. He was born in Houston, Texas, on November 1, 1912. Here also he was baptized and graduated from high school.

He received his A.A. degree from Graceland College in 1933, majoring in public school music. We find no record that he ever taught public school music, but the record does indicate that he sang his way into the heart of a Graceland girl, Aarona Merle Booker, and they were married the following year. This seems to prove that a specialized education makes one more versatile and attractive. At least it refutes the old canard, "Nobody loves a bald man." The Kohlmans have four children: Larry Fay, 15; David Leslie, 13; Kathleen Frances, 9; and Richard Edwin, 4. This seems to be the perfect answer where fathers are anxious to have boys in the family and mothers feel the same way about having girls.

Brother Kohlman served the Crumppacker Distributing Corporation from 1933 to 1942. The last five years he served as secretary and general manager in charge of personnel, credits, and accounting. The following year he went into the oil business as assistant credit manager for Conoco. He went under appointment in July, 1944, in Central Oklahoma District, Tulsa objective. In October, 1948, he was ordained a bishop and appointed an assistant to the Presiding Bishopric. His previous ordinations were deacon, 1928; priest, 1932; elder, 1934; and high priest, 1947.

Bishop Kohlman is now serving as office manager for the Bishopric and personnel officer for the Auditorium. He also serves as supervisor for Resthaven, for relief cases abroad, and for those extended cases in the districts here. He teaches a young adult class at Stone Church and sings in the choir.

Beside the Still Waters

"He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters."—Psalm 23

How long is it since you have read the twenty-third Psalm?

Before this day is past, resolve to get out your Bible and turn to it. . . . You stand in the protective shadow of the Great Shepherd. Your tired eyes are rested by the beauty of the green pastures. You assuage your spiritual thirst in the coolness of those still waters. Your soul is restored to strength, and you think how pleasant are the paths of righteousness in which He leads you. . . . You read this beautiful Psalm as you would say a prayer.

Nothing in this world can make you really afraid when you are with Him. There is a table spread with abundance to satisfy all your hunger. You feel His goodness and mercy, and you know that you have a home forever in the house that he has provided for you.

* * * *

For my Scripture readings I have been turning to the Psalms more frequently in recent months than ever before. Perhaps it is because our times, like those of David, are fraught with danger.

Haunted by fear, surrounded by enemies, in desperate need of one great, friendly, trustworthy Power, David composed or collected these splendid songs as prayer appeals to God. He expressed in beautiful and understanding language what so many of us feel today.

There is help in the Psalms—comfort, faith, and peace. Have you ever begun reading them at the beginning, taking a few each day, and trying to get all the good out of each one of them, until you have finished all 150 of them? It is an experience that will bring you strength and a rich reward. Do not skim hurriedly through that stately language. Search every phrase for its value.

Perhaps you turned on the radio today. If it was news, it was mostly trouble. If it was drama, the characters were screaming at each other. If you step outdoors, you miss death by inches in the streets. Television gives you new and more vivid terrors and troubles. You find peace and comfort nowhere. No wonder you get ulcers.

Go to a social gathering of your friends. How many of them that you can remember now enjoy the blessing of an untroubled heart? How many of them know the meaning of peace? How many of the voices, coming from behind faces that smile, are tense with worry and insecurity?

Check yourself. See how you look in the mirror and how others see you. If you could only have a recording made of your voice when you are not aware of it!

* * * *

This would be a cruel time in history even if it affected only grown men and women. But it is more cruel yet because little children live in fear. It comes out in their frightened questions. You see and hear it in their play as they talk to each other. They may stop in the middle of a meal and complain that they can eat no more. They reflect the tensions and worries of their elders.

Probably those parents are wise who leave the radio (and T-V), with their dreadful stories for children, turned off. They provide good illustrated books, creative toys and tools, and fine recorded music for leisure time occupations. They spend their time with the children, sharing life and experience so far as possible.

We need not be ignorant of the world. We can be informed of the news. But we do not need to have it thrown into our faces and dinned into our ears every minute. We can build a life of our own.

Phrases from the hymns come to mind: "Be calm in thy soul" (322); "Take from our souls the strain and stress, and let our ordered lives confess the beauty of thy peace" (243).

There are times when we need to withdraw from the world and leave all its worry and confusion behind us so that we can be alone with God. We need to get the strident sounds of life and the clamorous voices of humanity out of our ears so that we can listen to the gentle voice of One who taught by the shores of Galilee.

* * * *

People become desperate when they have no other home but this world, no place to go, no escape from the hardness and sordidness of life—nobody to live with but other people. There would be nothing to live for if we had only this life. It can become unbearable at times.

But if we live for God, we find that he provides an inward light for the soul that keeps the path clear in times of darkness. There is a retreat in his presence that we can reach through prayer. We need not be afraid because he has given us something eternal that the world cannot hurt.

In the words of the Psalm, "I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

A woman bore this testimony: "My doctor told me I must have an operation, or die. I was terribly afraid. Then I prayed God to take away my fear, and it was removed. I had faith as they took me to the operating room."

In better health, her face shone with happiness as she bore her testimony. She had felt the presence of the Shepherd. She had walked beside the still waters. L.J.L.

Linguists Needed

As the work of the church is extended into new fields, we have increasing need for the services of competent linguists. It will be of great assistance to the church if we can compile a list of persons with a good knowledge of the English language who also have a sound knowledge of other languages and are therefore able to translate from one into the other, or to check translations made by other persons.

The First Presidency will therefore be glad to hear from any whose names should be on the list of language experts. The letter should state such details as the languages known, how acquired (native, university work, etc.), and the degree of interest in translating.

—F. HENRY EDWARDS

Across the Desk

From Elder Allen Breckenridge, Papeete, August 21, 1951:

On Children's Day we baptized thirteen children and blessed three. It was a very fine day for us and the children presented what in my opinion was one of the best Children's Day programs I have seen in Tahiti. Our custom here is to have our biggest services in the evening, even on Children's Day. We had an attendance of 306 at this meeting. Brother and Sister Rehi Haoa, our children's workers, are most energetic and progressive.

Next Sunday is Father's Day for us. It promises to be a good day full of activities, including a baptismal service in the morning at which several adults (four, I think) are to be baptized. The children, young people, girls' chorus, choir, and special men's chorus of about forty voices have prepared music to be presented at the evening service.

Our missionary program is moving along slowly but successfully. Two from the mission in Paoa are to be baptized on Father's Day. The new mission in Arue has had one baptism, and there are other good prospects. This mission in Arue centers its work around a large number of children in that district. Those children want to be baptized, but of course there is the problem of getting the parents' permission. I think, though, that this may not be too difficult in some cases. Many of the Protestant families would be happy to have their children change faith because of our stand in regard to smoking and drinking, which the Protestants permit even in their ministry.

Next October the conference and church dedication at Kaukura is on our schedule. A large attendance is expected from Taronā and all of the Tuamotus. The new church will be a big asset for us in the Tuamotus. It makes the third new church to be dedicated within the past three years. There is another church not yet finished, which will make the fourth new one for us.

From Evangelist Roland W. Scott, Seminole, Oklahoma, September 1, 1951.

While I presume that you have received official reports of the Robbers' Cave Reunion, I thought it would do no harm to add a little personal report to what you have perhaps already received.

It was held August 4 to 12 inclusive about four or five miles north of Wilburton, Oklahoma, in a canyon on the forested mountainside. It was a beautiful spot for an encampment.

There were a thousand or more present the first Sunday. Apostle Oakman gave the Sunday morning sermon and was at his best. Evangelist Arthur Stoft spoke in the afternoon to a record crowd, and his sermon was highly regarded. Apostle Oakman gave the evening sermon and spoke every evening during the week.

The spiritual atmosphere of the camp was languid at the start, but was better by Wednesday. On Saturday the Spirit of God was poured out upon the Saints without measure. They came hundreds of miles to attend—from Texas, discouraged by drought and other trials, desiring to be ministered to—and they were. They returned to their homes having been greatly blessed by the presence of the Spirit of the Lord.

I have been attending reunions for many years; in fact, I was baptized at one when I was sixteen. I listened to a sermon by Elder Joseph Luff in which I was singled a little by the brimstone which he used in his discourse; so I decided to move out of that hot atmosphere. Brother R. M. Elvin baptized me and Brother Alexander Smith confirmed me. Those were great days, but I have never attended a reunion that reached the high spiritual tempo that this one at Robbers' Cave did. Fifteen persons were baptized.

As I stated before, Apostle Oakman was at his best. His sermons were intelligent and delivered with power and assurance. The Savior was glorified in discourses on the Restoration Movement, and by the beautiful spirit which he carried.

Evangelist Stoft and I gave 76 blessings. There were something like 850 registrations, and you may imagine that under the direction of Victor J. Witte, Otis J. Stephens, W. R. Eubanks, Glen Limb, Elder Carson and others, including Elder O. O. Dollins, Chairman of the Reunion Committee, there was plenty to do.

There is some talk about having two reunions next year as the attendance this time was too large for camp facilities.

For Servicemen in Hawaii

Among the men in the armed services attending church at the Makiki congregation in Honolulu one Sunday were Arvid Galland (for whose family Galland's Grove was named), now of San Diego, California, and Harold Baldwin of Clitherall and Fergus Falls, Minnesota.

The men were invited to have dinner with the Crownover family and in course of their conversation one man asked the other, "What ship are you on?" "The Antietam."

"Why, that's the same one I'm on."

In the 3,000 men aboard the ship, they had never met. By locating and attending the church when an opportunity presented itself, each man now knows at least one person on his ship who is a member of the church.

A good many service personnel pass through Honolulu without knowing how to locate the church, and some are stationed on the Island for several months before coming to church. Families are urged to help these men find and attend church. Parents can give their sons the name of District President A. Orlin Crownover, who lives next door to the Makiki Church at 1666 Mott-Smith Drive, Honolulu 14, T.H. The telephone number is 5-8579. These men will be made welcome, and they will greatly benefit from this contact with the church.—A. ORLIN CROWNCOVER

The Lords of Destiny

Israel A. Smith

President Smith was invited by President George W. Diemer to deliver the baccalaureate address for the summer term of the Missouri State Teachers College at Warrensburg on July 29. Stake President Harry J. Simons wrote us that the message was well received and suggested that we solicit it for publication. The Warrensburg's "Daily Star-Journal" of July 30 quoted generously from the address. At our request President Smith has made it available, and we are glad to be able to offer it to our readers.

THE COMMENCEMENT period has been appropriately called "the season of literary festival"—a time happily dedicated to the honor of education, in memory the loveliest of days. When Nature is gorgeously adorned, when the leaves are the greenest, and before the song of the harvester is in the air, when the earth has been fully rejuvenated, we come aside from our homes and business distractions to celebrate the attainments and applaud the achievements of the scholar.

The occasion becomes the symbol of the character, the influence, and reputation of scholarly pursuits.

At such times, like sunshine, a spirit of generous appreciation and wishes all at once illuminates the world. Indeed, blessed is the place and happy the day! The flowers at our feet and the stars in the heavens—all nature—vie with each other tonight in preparing us for a timeless garland.

Today, you of the graduating class are essentially the scholars.

Tomorrow some of you may still be scholars, but in other classic forums. For others the day marks your real entrance upon the serious business of living—serious but withal a great experience if you make it such—in an arena where it is assumed you desire and will expect to have a part in making a better world.

SEVEN HUNDRED YEARS before Bethlehem the Prophet Isaiah said, in effect, that the troubles of the world could never be remedied until the world was led by a just ruler whom he called the Prince of Peace. For seven hundred years no such man appeared, but the faithful lived in hope. When Jesus Christ did come, it was easy for them to believe he was the Savior. Thousands who walked the streets and roads of ancient Israel saw him, recognized divinity at work in his miracles, and put their trust in One whose existence and power they could not question, because they had seen him and his works with their own eyes. They were competent witnesses that he was and yet is.

Now, twenty centuries later, mankind still lives in hopes that Jesus will again perform miracles for mankind, yea, that he will again appear in the flesh. At Jerusalem he was a man among men, but now he is a mighty spiritual force among men of all nations.

WE STAND WITHIN these college walls, certainly most beautiful for situation—adorned at the moment with all the splendor of nature, the scene of tender memories and happy associations—and now graced by the beauty and vigor of young manhood and womanhood, which will live in the memory of all who are privileged to be present.

On such a day as this, and other like days at a thousand other colleges in America, summer sun and evening star have beheld the same spectacle of eager throngs. The faith which is inspired here others will cherish, for it is the same God that is worshiped, only at different shrines which become sacred from the testimony of the Spirit.

The real interest of the day, however, is not that of study and scholarly excellence, of sound scholarship as a mere end, of good books for their own sake, but of learning as a power in human affairs, as an influence for righteousness in the republic or in the commonwealths where you will choose to live.

It is your privilege to be many-sided. You may, in your development, acquire as many facets as a finished diamond; but the real question you ought to be concerned about is "What can I do for the cause of mankind?" Whatever you may be—scholars, poets, philosophers, businessmen—you will always and ever be in the midst of men. From these inevitable social relations will spring golden opportunities and stern reciprocal and inescapable obligations.

How will you profit from these opportunities, and how will you discharge those responsibilities?

If a poet, will you sing of virtue and give little other evidence of it in your own life?

If a philosopher, will you concern yourself with the inhabitants of other spheres and have nothing to do with people on this one?

I assume—and I am sure all of your relatives and friends here assembled take it for granted—that you will have, as expressed by Thomas Huxley, a "loving desire" to live a moral and a righteous life, exercising a salutary and wholesome influence upon your neighbors. This aspiration I am sure you have acquired at your mother's knee.

THE TRAGEDY OF EARLY TRAINING often is that when the time arrives after the tumult of school and college, when the desire for self-expression becomes assertive, as come it will—even if pushed away—the idea of a moral life is often associated with the concept of personal restraint, a denial of freedom. Too often young people look upon morality as something that fetters, instead of being the way—and the only means—by which they may really achieve freedom. It is too often regarded as something established by traditional and parental authority and not as a living impulse. Too many young people, eager to try their souls, know no other direction than away or out—no route other than through rebellion against what they consider narrow or restricted, that up to this time has hedged them in.

Someone has said that there is no easy or painless way of passing from the discipline of childhood to the freedom of manhood. Experience always exacts its toll.

When this time of questioning comes, it is important that the principles of morality and religion should be presented for consideration. The Savior said that he was "the way, the truth, and the life," and that the "truth would make men free." The final testimony of the sinner has always been that sin is bondage. The Christian has always found release and freedom.

A SPIRIT OF FUTILITY prevails with many: the earth is the prison house and all of us are committed for life. To many, knowledge is but the knowledge of bars and the hurdles and handicaps of life, or walls against which they can only beat in vain. To them life is an entrapment.

But one of the great facts of modern history, especially during recent centuries, is that man is slowly emerging from such fatalistic habits of thought, and it bears witness that that portion of mankind which has made the most persistent and continuous effort has come to believe in itself and to claim a rightful lordship over the earth.

John Milton described the intellectual quest of his day as an attempt "to assert eternal providence and justify the ways of God to man," when we now discover that man's necessary task is to justify his way to himself. An awful responsibility has become a tremendous fact, formerly held to be but a weak and a sickly fancy.

As has been demonstrated, to throw off these natural fallacies—if they may be so called—requires a supreme effort of the human will, and it cannot be done without a courage that lifts one toward divinity.

Because of this great and universal experience, we have therefore chosen as one of the "lords of destiny" that quality of the heart known as courage, without which you cannot become the great influence of good which you ought and which we assume you desire to be. And from the exercise of courage we derive another great force in life which we call faith. The Christian asks what it is, and experience answers: "It is that which overcomes the world and makes men free." And we are reminded that it is written in the Scriptures "the just shall live by faith."

Faith conquers all fear—fear of the darkness, the unknown, the uncertain. It was fear that caused the Athenians to worship one whom they called "the Unknown God," not an intelligent understanding of the living God.

Thus courage and faith, which are so vitally necessary in our lives, give us the power to dare and to endure, though morality and religion in their beginnings are generally acts of pure courage.

May I name courage as the first of the "lords of destiny," and suggest that you lay hold of this excellent help and make it your very own?

The apostles were men who chose the hard task instead of the easy ways of life. They left their friends and families to carry an unpopular message to the world. The ancient prophets were men with an unusual zeal for righteousness. Lonely and friendless, they kept their chosen paths without faltering. And the early Christians—who were they? Men with an unusual sense of truth. They could not deny or change the truth which was theirs; but they could and did die for it.

To any who has felt himself to be a prisoner of fate, the liberating moment comes when he turns from the uncertainties of the outward world to something he discovers within himself. He feels a spiritual impulse and dares to trust his all to it. He has seen a great light; he resolves to follow it. Whither it shall lead him he as yet knows not. He will take the risk. And in that, his first great spiritual experience, he finds for the first time freedom of soul, the gift of one of the lords of destiny. Robert Browning described such a man in his epilogue to Asolando:

One who never turned his back but marched breast forward,
Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, though right were worsted, wrong would triumph,
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,

Sleep to wake.

And the Psalmist, a greater authority than Browning, said:

Be of good courage, and he shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord.—Psalm 31: 24.

HERE DAVID PRESENTS my second "lord of destiny," an understanding heart. Solomon, great man that he was, prayed for a heart of understanding, and the Lord said unto him, "I have given thee a wise and understanding heart."—I Kings 3: 12.

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom and the man that getteth understanding" is another proverb.

If we may depend on wisdom so anciently recorded—and the great men of today so believe—there is something in excess of mere learning that is highly desirable, that is deemed most excellent. It is learning and knowledge plus something more that puts one out in front, so to speak—that promotes him from the herd to leadership of the group. It is wisdom.

We have been told to “get learning and with all thy getting get understanding.”

Yes, that extra is wisdom, another “lord of destiny,” that will serve you well through all your days.

The poet Cowper put into charming verse a great truth when he wrote these lines:

Knowledge and wisdom, far from being one,
Have oftentimes no connection.
Knowledge dwells
In heads replete with thoughts of other men;
Wisdom in minds attentive to their own.
Knowledge, a rude, unprofitable mass,
The mere material with which wisdom builds.
Till smoothed, and squared, and fitted to its place,
Does but encumber whom it seems to enrich.
Knowledge is proud that he has learned so much,
Wisdom is humble that he knows no more.

And is that not also an excellent lesson in humility?

The world has paid tribute to the wise throughout recorded history. The words of many of the world's greatest men have been preserved for us. In the welter and confusion of our present book-making world, one wonders if anything new is ever disclosed.

Ecclesiastes, the preacher, perhaps was right when he said:

The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun.

And we are reminded, too, that when the Apostle Paul wrote about the gifts of the Spirit, he gave primacy to the “word of wisdom,” and a second place to the “word of knowledge.”

The world has seen many men of wisdom who never could have qualified, after the standards of the present, as men of education or scholars. There is an intriguing story of a humble but wise man told by that same preacher, Ecclesiastes, which I have often used as a source of inspiration:

Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest. . . . the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favor to men of skill, but time and chance happeneth to them all. . . .

This wisdom have I also seen under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it;

Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.

Then I said, Wisdom is better than strength. . . . The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

Wisdom is better than weapons of war.—Eccles. 9: 10-18.

The subject, of course, is inexhaustible. Perhaps it is sufficiently considered, but as examples are always helpful, may I mention the immortal Lincoln? He overcame many of life's handicaps and did many noble things, but his greatest virtue was wisdom. He, too, at a time when besiegers were at the gates, saved the citadel by his wisdom. He will ever be remembered by a grateful Republic.

Thus, as a second “lord of destiny,” I propose wisdom. The Psalmist said, “Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding.”—Proverbs 3: 13.

THAT ANCIENT PREACHER, already quoted, made a significant statement. He had noted a physical fact:

He said, “A threefold cord is not quickly broken.” I would make an adaptation of that truth to the intellectual and spiritual. We have already suggested two “lords of destiny”—one more and I will be done.

Doctor G. Stanley Hall, a great educator of our own times and president of Clark University, said:

The one word now written across the very zenith of the educational skies, high above all others, is the word “service.” This is coming to be, as it should be, the supreme goal of all pedagogic endeavor, the standard by which all other values are measured. It includes the highest of all duties. The individual is an end to himself only that and in so far as he may be the means of helping his fellow men.

If there be a God, we serve him best by serving mankind. If we have a soul to save, we save it most surely by saving our fellow beings to the best that is possible in this life.

Again Doctor Hall speaks:

The civilized world is realizing as never before that all who live for themselves live in vain.

Now I could tell you the same thing in my own words, and you might be impressed by them; I am sure you would be. But when a man like Doctor Hall speaks thus, it is worth remembering.

The basis of such service to our fellows is a compliance with the second law of Christ when he commanded us to love our neighbor as ourselves. Men are generally controlled by their innermost feelings. While men from business or political or social expedience may pretend to be interested in the welfare of others, such perfunctory service deserves little credit.

The classic example of Christian love is the story of the good Samaritan, the details of which you well know. It has been the inspiration of countless lessons and sermons; but the basic idea is that while two men from whom much was to be expected failed to succor the distressed, the third man, obscure and despised for his city, gave what the others refused—compassionate service to one in dire need.

Then there is the familiar story in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew which tells of when the Savior shall open the veil and show the division to be made in the day of Judgment, when the sheep will be given a place of honor at the right hand of God and the goats will be banished from his presence. This separation is one in which each man, to use a common expression, "writes his own ticket." Some of them had served their fellow-men. The goats had failed to do so.

Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

The world needs service-loving, interested help, born of compassion for the suffering, as when Jesus saw the leper:

And Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, . . . be thou clean.

MAY WE, your friends, indulge the hope that you will so live that your influence may be projected into the future beyond the terms of your natural lives? E. Merrill Root has written of this kind of a life, and I quote his paragraphs on Genius:

Some mighty star—a thousand years ago—

Faded, and died, and ceased, and was no more:

Beyond the Milky Way's dim ultimate shore,

The night engulfed it in death's waste and woe.

And while Aldebaran and Vega glow,
And galaxies yet gleam, and vast sums pour

Splendor and day, and many a meteor
Flashes, that star is dark in overthrow.

Yet still across the distance of the night,
The star that is no more still shines: and we

Behold the traveler of ten thousand years
From the dead star and still undying light,
The flying splendor, the white cogency.

So genius, dead, still lights the hemispheres.

Many things, many factors, we hope and pray, will minister to your welfare. I place no limitations on what may prove, in your moral and religious development, to be your "lords of destiny"; but I am confident that those I have briefly discussed—courage, wisdom, and service—will serve you faithfully. If you will but capture them and make them your own, your life will be blessed beyond measure.

Our Unfinished Task - By RONALD C. SMITH

Editor's Note: The following article is taken from the Wenatchee (Washington) "Daily World." Each week it features a sermonette by a local pastor. We believe "Herald" readers will find this interesting and timely.

"I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."—John 17: 4.

THERE WAS a building contractor in a city who was preparing to move to another city. A townsman told him, "We've certainly enjoyed having you in our city, and we wish you could remain longer." The contractor thanked him and replied, "I have enjoyed my stay here, but I have the building far enough along so others can finish it; I must go on to my next job."

Jesus established the foundation for building the kingdom of God. He finished his commission here on earth. Then the task was left to others and he went to his Heavenly Father to prepare another place. Jesus said, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever." He knew the many pitfalls and temptations men would have to overcome to be able to complete the task he was leaving.

John said, "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become sons of God, even to them that believed on his name."—John 1: 12. Jesus has not done all that is necessary to our salvation. The best gifts require something of those to whom they are given. I cannot give my child an education but only an opportunity for an education; she must do her part before my gift becomes complete. The free gift which God offers to every man is of value only to those who accept the gift and shape their lives accordingly. This means much more than mere recognition of what Jesus has done. It means much of the work of salvation is not complete. We have been called to become sons of God. If we continue and "observe all things," we inherit the promise. If we fail to continue in his way of life, we have no promise. Jesus said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven."

Matthew challenges us to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Everyone must answer to God for the divine investment in him. As is illustrated in the parable of the talents, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting; and let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."—Galatians 6: 7-9.

Our Heavenly Father values this self-development in us very highly. He will not interfere with us in the exercise of this agency, even though his providential care overrules all things. He even permitted wicked men to slay his Son. He now permits the wars which have been created by our rebellions. But at every point where we suffer through our wickedness, he suffers with us. Our right choices are fundamental to the development of Christlike character. This is the teaching of the parable of the talents. The reward of those who used their talents well was threefold; joy in the use of these talents; expertness in their use, and the chance to acquire and use further talents with the same joy and expertness. We grow in the likeness of Christ in the process of living his life according to the divine plan. We grow physically through persistent hard work. We grow spiritually through persistent right-doing. Character is determined forever in the free choices we make now. Our creation is still going forward.

We have many barriers to overcome in our daily process of striving for perfection. Christ established his church that we might grow ever nearer to God in love and perfection. We can only do this through helping one another. Let us remember that hurdles are not put up to be barriers but to be hurdled. We should pray to God to help us hurdle the barriers in front of our hearts that are keeping us from completing the task that Jesus, the Master Builder, left for us. We must not do less than our best in building the kingdom of God.

A Shepherd's Story

The Autobiography of Marcus H. Cook

II. Early Ministry

I HAD AN EXPERIENCE in early childhood that assured me there is a God, who hears and answers the prayers of those who earnestly seek his help. I had been guilty of conduct that brought deep remorse, and I earnestly sought for his forgiveness. I once spent an entire night in prayer for forgiveness. I lay awake weeping and praying through the night, and arising before the rest of the family, I knelt and repeated the prayer of the leper (Matthew 8: 2, 3), "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." The answer came in an audible voice: "I will; be thou clean." I heard the voice and there settled over me a peace beyond the power of human expression. I knew that the Lord spoke to me, and the assurance I received still remains with me. I have never since doubted that God lives and that he can and will answer prayer.

THE PROBLEM OF BAPTISM

At the general conference of 1888, Brethren J. W. Wight and C. A. Butterworth were appointed to the Australian mission. Before leaving for Australia, they came to Unionberg to conduct a series of meetings. I attended most of the services and recognized the outstanding ability of Elder Wight, but was not convinced that the work was true—to be honest, I didn't want to be convinced. The big problem was baptism. I would go all over the arguments used by the Quakers, that it was only a part of the old law that was done away with when the gospel was established. There were times when I wondered if it were still necessary that one should be baptized. Most of the other churches taught that one was saved by faith, and that while baptism should be observed, it was not essential to salvation. That seemed illogical to me; I thought if it were not essential, why observe it?

AN ANSWER FROM HEAVEN

I was troubled about it and sometimes wondered if the claims of the church could be true. In my perplexity, I did what Joseph Smith did; I knelt at my bedside one night before retiring and asked God if baptism were necessary. If not, I asked to be able to answer the matter to my satisfaction and forever settle it. Then I went to sleep as usual and had an experience—whether it was a dream or a vision, I cannot say. I saw a person by my bedside with an open Bible in his hand. The Bible was open to Acts 9: 6, where Jesus answered the question asked by Saul of Tarsus, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The personage traced the lines: "Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told what thou must do." I found myself wide awake, and I remembered the story as told in Acts 9: 10-16 how Ananias was sent by Jesus to minister to Saul and to baptize him. Also when Paul, in making his defense as recorded in Acts, was giving an account of his conversion, he spoke of what Ananias told him to do as follows, "And now, why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."—Acts 22: 16. Jesus told Saul to arise and go into the city and he would be told what he must do. Paul writes that when he arrived Ananias told him, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins."

THE OBSTACLE OF PRICE

I tried in vain to find an argument to the dream, but there was none. Christ is unchangeable. He told Saul to arise and go into the city and he would be told what he must do. When Ananias, who was sent by Jesus Christ, came to him, the message was: "And now, why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." There was only one answer to so definite a statement. I realized that baptism was necessary. I also realized that it must be performed by one Christ had sent. But I had my pride to deal with. I knew that uniting with the church would cause me to lose prestige in my father's family and with all my old friends. So I rebelled and refused to do what I knew I should. But the Lord knew how to break my foolish pride.

AN ILLNESS AND A WARNING

A few weeks later the daughter of my employer and I were practicing some songs. As she played the organ and I leaned over to make sure of a part of the song, I was stricken with the most peculiar sensation I had ever experienced. My whole body turned numb; I couldn't see. I staggered and fell backward into a rocking chair. My body was powerless, and I could not see, yet my mind was clear. Words came to me as definitely as though spoken: "You asked God to show you the truth and he answered your prayer; you have rebelled against what you knew to be your duty, now you must answer to him for your rebellion."

I thought I had come to the end of my life, and must face the Christ I had rejected. I couldn't pray, for I knew that I had rebelled against light. It was the most awful moment I had ever experienced. The young lady (who later told me I was white as a corpse) asked me what was the matter. I told her that I had never felt so peculiar before. Gradually my sight began to return and I soon revived and went to my room. While I could see no one, I felt that I was not alone. It seemed that there was a personage present. I did not hear a voice speak, but the following message came to me: "God has spared you this time. If you will obey the gospel and do that which God has for you to do, your life will be spared. If you continue longer in rebellion, your life will be taken."

That night I had the fight of my life. My mother had told me that when I was born, and she knew she was the mother of a son, she had consecrated me to God with a prayer that I might serve him and be a blessing to the world. I knew how she would be disappointed if I should leave the church I was brought up in and join the Latter Day Saints. I knew that my old friends would feel that I was a disgrace. Two powers were working with me—one pointing the way of duty, the other trying to hold me back. Sometime after midnight I made my decision. I promised God that I would obey the gospel. This occurred on a Saturday night.

BAPTISM

Sunday school was held at the neighborhood schoolhouse, following which the Saints usually held services. Next morning I attended Sunday school, and after the classes were dismissed I sat down beside Elder P. C. Kemish, a man well-respected in the community. I told him that I was convinced of the claims of the church and wanted him to baptize me. No one asked me to be baptized—I asked for it. The service was arranged for the following Sunday, June 3, 1888. I was baptized in a small stream in Union Grove and was confirmed at the water's edge by Elders Kemish and T. Thomas. I had heard some of the church people tell that when they were confirmed, a peculiar sensation had come over them giving them a thrill. I had wondered if I would feel a peculiar sensation. I did not, but there settled over me a calm peace and a feeling that I had done right.

A few days later, when I was reading and studying some of the church literature, I found that something had really happened to me. My mind was opened up to see something of the grandeur of the work. The Scriptures took on new meaning, light and understanding flooded my soul, and I began to realize the truth of the promises Jesus had made to his disciples: "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."—John 14: 26. And "He will guide you into all truth."—John 16: 13.

I was amazed; I realized that I really had been born again and become a new creature. Over sixty years have passed since then, but that testimony has always remained. I can truly say that God's promises will be fulfilled to those who honestly obey the gospel and fully consecrate themselves to his purposes. I have made mistakes, but I trust through the help of God to triumph over my human weaknesses and be among those who will be worthy to stand in his presence.

After my baptism I continued to work as a farm hand until autumn, when I became a book agent. The firm sent me to Woonsocket, Dakota. The book I was selling was along the lines of scientific farming. Upon my arrival there, I found that another book agent had covered the territory with a book very much along the same line. Nearly all the farmers had bought his book, so I had little success. I returned to Persia, Iowa, where I organized a singing class and spent the winter teaching. I organized a choir in our church there and, I believe, did some good.

The next summer I worked in H. W. Chapman's general store, and in the fall I tried selling fruit trees. My success was not very encouraging, so I stopped in Dow City and worked in a park being made there. I made my home with Brother and Sister J. M. Baker. I shall always remember their kindness to me while I was with them. The next spring I attended church at Galland's Grove, while working on a farm near by. In the fall I returned home, where my father was pastor in a country church, a few miles southeast of Waukeee, Iowa.

Shortly after my return home, I was stricken with typhoid fever. When I recovered, I went to work for a man who made molasses, and after finishing my work there, I spent the winter with a farmer near Grimes, Iowa. I had not yet fully recovered from the effects of the typhoid, so in the spring I went to Des Moines and secured a job in the Cottage Hospital. The work was not heavy and I got along very well.

MARRIAGE

It was there I got acquainted with my future wife; she was Mrs. Francis Higgins, one of the hospital nurses. We were married on December 12, 1890, and began our life together at 1440 Maple Street, Des Moines. She united with the church, and was a devoted member until her death on September 9, 1920.

ORDINATION

The branch at Des Moines had been disorganized but was reorganized shortly after my arrival. I helped with the music and took part in other activities. On September 7, 1891, I was ordained a priest by Elders Robert Young, James McKiernan, and N. A. Baker. Having accepted the office of priest, I began to study to learn what the duties of a priest were. I carefully studied Doctrine and Covenants 17, which says: "The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties: . . . and he is to take the

Question:

Should children of nonmembers be blessed by the elders of the church?
Missouri J.D.A.

Answer:

The clearest statement in the Scriptures in this connection occurs in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 19 which states that "every member of the church of Christ having children, is to bring them unto the elders before the church." This seems to be mandatory so far as members of the church are concerned, and is part of the same general pattern as Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4:

... inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

It will be noted that this later instruction has special reference to parents and children in Zion and her stakes. Yet the practice of the church from that time forward has been to baptize the children of Latter Day Saint families, who have been properly instructed, outside the stakes as well as in them.

The blessing of the children of members of the church should mean more than the blessing of those whose parents are not members of the church, just as the baptism of the children in Zion and her stakes should mean more than the baptism of those who do not have the privileges available in the major concentrations of our people. But we know of no rule which indicates that the children of those not of our faith should not be blessed by our elders. Indeed, it seems that this practice of blessing the children of those who are sufficiently interested to ask for it should be wisely and discreetly encouraged.

Question:

Does a member of the priesthood, who is in a position of administrative authority, have a right under church law to deny the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper to a member who is thought to be in transgression if a church court has not heard the case and recommended excommunication?
Missouri J.D.A.

Answer:

This question apparently arises out of the instruction contained in Doctrine and Covenants 46: 1 which reads: "... nevertheless, if any have trespassed, let him not partake until he makes reconciliation." Clearly this applies to a member whose unworthiness has been affirmed by one of the regular courts of the church. But what of the transgressor who has not yet been tried? It would seem that if a pastor or other officer deems a member unworthy of the Communion, he should warn him against partaking unworthily, and then if the offense warrants he should file charges against the alleged offender with the proper administrative officers or with a court. As a general rule, if the accused refuses to confess or urges innocence, the accuser should hold his peace and let the case rest with the court. If the member insists on partaking of the Communion, and no legal judgment has been pronounced against him, he should be left free to act according to his own conscience. But this would hardly apply in cases of flagrant and well-attested transgression, such as murder. Under these circumstances the presiding officer should instruct the one serving the emblems not to offer them to the transgressor. But, even so, this refusal of the emblems should not be continued over an extended period. It is an interim action only. The fundamental procedure is for guilt to be determined by court action, and no administrative officer should anticipate court action except in emergencies and for brief periods.

Question:

What do you mean by "the laying on of hands"?
Missouri E.E.J.

Answer:

The laying on of hands by the elders is a ceremony constituting with prayer and appropriate pronouncement defining the purpose in each case, an ordinance of the church, for the conferring of various blessings, including the gift of the Holy Spirit and ordination to spiritual service. The same form is used for blessing infants and others, and for administering healing, the purpose in each case being indicated by the pronouncement and prayer.

This ordinance of laying on of hands was taught and observed by Jesus in his ministry (Mark 16: 18; Matthew 19: 13), by Paul (Hebrews 6: 2; I Timothy 4: 14) and by Peter and John (Acts 8: 17-19). In restoring the church in latter days the Lord re-established this ordinance, and it has continued in regular practice to the joy of many people.

Question:

Is Zion a condition, a place, or what?
Michigan J.R.G.

Answer:

The word "Zion" as used in the revelations, and as commonly used by the church, applies sometimes to a condition or ideal, as "Zion is the pure in heart"; sometimes as a place as in "going up to Zion"; sometimes as a people as in "They might have been redeemed even now"; and sometimes as a designation of a place for a specific purpose as in "Zion shall not be moved out of her place," meaning the appointment of the place shall not be changed. The ultimate Zion will include all these. A careful distinction needs to be made in our thinking and speaking as to this word if we would avoid confusion.

Why Marry in the Church?

By Jane Ross Mercer

O SISTER BUTLER, I'm so worried," the agitated mother wails to her visiting church friend. "Our Gerry has been dating a girl, and they're beginning to talk about getting married. Elaine is nice, and we think she would make Gerry a good wife, if only she belonged to our church instead of being a Catholic. I'm going to see if our pastor will talk with him about it."

"It's too bad," Sister Butler nods in reply. "We seem to lose so many of our young people when they marry outside the church. We'll never be able to build Zion that way."

As the two women lament over Gerry, Elaine's family is having similar misgivings, and her priest is counseling her against the contemplated union.

"Mixed marriages lead to a watered down religion which cannot effectively cement the family group together," he tells her. "You should have avoided courtship with a non-Catholic. Gerry may be a fine boy, but, since he is not Catholic, you should not marry him. If you insist on marrying him, he will have to agree that all of your children be reared in the Catholic faith and that the wedding be performed by a Catholic priest. He will have to sign the antenuptial agreement of the church. Otherwise, the church will not recognize your marriage."

SO IT IS THAT SOCIAL PRESSURE is put on both of these young people to break off their relationship. Is this just an outdated religious superstition, or are there some valid reasons why young people should be urged to marry within the church?

Gerry and Elaine will not be content with loose opinions and vague theorizing. They need some real answers. In recent years sociologists have made extensive studies of family life. Some of the results of these studies may be of use to Gerry's pastor when Gerry comes to talk with him. Here are some of them.

First, young people should marry within their own church because their marriage will have a better chance of enduring. Judson T. Landis made a study of 4,108 marriages according to religious affiliation. He found that of the marriages in which both partners were Catholic, 4.4 per cent ended in divorce. When both were Jewish, 5.2 per cent ended in divorce. Of the Protestant marriages, 6 per cent failed. All of these percentages are quite low and the differences among them are probably not of great significance. It would be interesting to know what percentage of the marriages within this church fail.

However, of the mixed Catholic-Protestant marriages, 14.1 per cent wound up in a divorce court. When the combination was a Catholic father and a Protestant mother, the rate jumped up to 20.1 per cent—one out of every five marriages. According to his study, this was the most lethal combination.

Marriages in which neither spouse professed any religion were almost as poor a risk as those with mixed religions—17.9 per cent.

IN THE SECOND PLACE, even if Gerry and Elaine would fall into the 85 per cent class whose marriages do not end in divorce, their marriage would probably not bring them as much happiness as if they shared their religious faith. Landis made a study of 544 couples in the early years of marriage which bears out this conclusion.

He found that 65 per cent of those couples who had "excellent" agreement on religious matters rated as "very happy" in marriage. Only 33 per cent of those who had "fair or poor" agreement on religious matters reported being "very happy" in marriage, while 34 per cent rated themselves as "average."

His study of church attendance and happiness in marriage revealed a similar pattern. Those attending church regularly together were "very happy" in 54 per cent of the cases, while only 43 per cent of those who attended "occasionally or never" reported themselves as being "very happy." Apparently, attendance is not so critical to marriage happiness as agreement on religious matters, but both have an influence.

THIRD, by marrying within his own faith, a young person greatly lessens the areas in which in-law friction may develop. Amicable in-law relations are closely related to happiness in marriage. In the study by Landis, 67 per cent of those couples having excellent in-law relations reported being "very happy," while only 18 per cent of those having "fair or poor" in-law adjustments felt they were "very happy." Burgess and Cottrell found that family approval of a marriage was a significant factor in predicting whether it would be a success or a failure.

If Gerry and Elaine go ahead with their plans to marry in spite of the disapproval of both families and both churches, they run a great risk of having in-law problems after marriage. Both sets of in-laws will be watching carefully to see that the young marrieds do the "right" thing, and the attitudes and feelings of the two families will conflict.

A FOURTH CONSIDERATION in discussing the marriage of mixed religions is that of the training of children in religious matters. Many young people tend to discount this problem at the time of marriage. The problem of the religious training of children as yet unborn seems quite remote and unimportant. Actually, it looms as the most important single problem in religiously mixed marriages. The young person who blithely consents, at the time of marriage, to permit his children to be reared in an alien faith finds, when the children are born and the training begins, that he feels very differently about it.

One thing Gerry should know is that, if he marries Elaine and she remains true to her religious faith, he will be married in a Catholic Church by a Catholic priest and this will be the only wedding. He will be required to sign the antenuptial agreement of the Catholic Church. In this agreement he promises five things:

1. that the marriage bond will be broken only by death;
2. that he will permit "the free exercise of religion according to the Catholic faith without hindrance or adverse comment" to his wife;
3. that "all the children of either sex born of such marriage, shall be baptized and educated only in the faith and according to the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church" even if his wife should die;
4. that no other marriage ceremony than that by the Catholic priest shall take place,
5. that he condemns birth control.

Even if no such agreement were required, the chances are that the children would follow the faith of the mother. In a study of mixed marriages among the parents of college students made at Michigan State College, it was found that the children, especially the daughters, tended to follow the religious beliefs of the mother. About 65 per cent of the boys and 75 per cent of the girls did so. The fact that the mother is usually closer to the children and takes the greatest share of the responsibility ror all of their training probably explains this.

If the situation were reversed and a Latter Day Saint girl were marrying a Catholic boy, she could also expect difficulty. As a whole, Catholic fathers are much more reluctant about permitting their children to be reared in another church than Protestant fathers and are much more likely to interfere with the mother in her training. It is the opinion of Judson Landis that this is of primary importance in explaining why it is that the Catholic father-Protestant mother combination has such a high divorce rate (20.1 per cent).

The Catholic Church is officially opposed to birth control. After the arrival of several children, this presents a knotty problem in a marriage of mixed faiths if the Catholic mate feels that his conscience will not permit him to limit the number of children. It should not be overlooked in discussing mixed marriages and their problems.

A FIFTH POINT to be considered is that of the possibility of converting the nonmember. Many Latter Day Saint young people, who find themselves in Gerry's position, lull themselves with the belief that "after marriage" they will convert their nonmember husband or wife. This does occur occasionally, but not so frequently as could be hoped.

Of the mixed marriages studied by Landis, approximately one third of the couples had attempted to settle their religious differences by having one spouse accept the faith of the other. In about 50 per cent of such cases the Protestant spouse had joined the Catholic Church, while in the other half the Catholic partner had become a Protestant. It is significant to note that, in a majority of these cases, the conversion took place before marriage. Young Latter Day Saints hopeful of converting their future husbands or wives will have a much better chance of doing so before marriage and should not plan to wait until after the wedding.

As a whole, this seems to be a satisfactory way of settling religious differences in marriage. The divorce rate for such marriages is only slightly higher than the rate for those in which both partners originally held the same faith.

THE CHURCH has much to give toward the happiness of a marriage. Many things might be mentioned, but there are four of outstanding importance of which every Latter Day Saint young person should be fully aware.

The church is one social institution which has as one of its primary purposes the strengthening and uniting of the home. The father usually earns the family living by working outside the home; the children are formally educated outside the home; much recreation is commercialized and takes the family outside the home. The boys have Boy Scout activities; the girls have Oriole or Girl Scout projects; mother has Red Cross work, women's club, and P.T.A.; while father has Rotary, Kiwanis, or Masons. All of these activities may be worthy, but they do splinter the family group with each individual member going his own separate way.

On the other hand, the church emphasizes participation by the family as a unit. At church all members of the family worship together, study together, and play together. They gain strength from common participation.

Second, the church prepares for and sustains people through the emotional crises which every family has to meet at some time. There are people in this world who will not go to funerals and will not speak of death. They seem to believe that, if they treat death as if it were not a reality, they can somehow avoid it. They will be ill-prepared to face the crisis of the death of a loved one when it comes. We read about them in the newspapers committing suicide when a mate dies or seeking a divorce after the death of a child.

A truly religious person is prepared for the emotional crisis of death and for the many other vicissitudes of life. Economic loss, separation during war, long illnesses can be faced with tranquil resolution by families who have faith in the ultimate goodness of the universe.

Third, the church gives the family a sense of destiny. What do people live for—to raise children? To acquire a home? To build a business? Each of these aims is worthy, but they are not enough.

The church enlists people in an enterprise of universal importance. To build the kingdom of God is not a task for the half-hearted individual or the half-converted family. The family that is divided cannot hope to participate fully in kingdom-building. This is a loss of eternal significance to the young person who chooses to marry outside the church.

Finally, God has promised to bless homes with his Spirit. But, to be worthy of that promise, homes must be of Zion-ic quality. Paying a tithe of one's possessions is but the first step. Yet even this is impossible in most religiously divided homes because of the attitude of the nonmember spouse. Daily prayer together may be out of the question. In such an atmosphere, God's Spirit cannot dwell.

AS INDIVIDUALS, people grow most when they are reaching the highest. Persons and families who are dedicated to a cause greater than their own individual and family welfare grow in proportion to the greatness of the cause. A strong church allegiance is essential if a family is to achieve its highest potential.

Landis found that marriages in which neither spouse professed any religious faith had a divorce rate three times as high as that for persons who marry within their own faith. This relationship is consistent throughout several studies covering approximately 25,000 marriages. Can anyone doubt the value of a religious faith?

Latter Day Saints need not apologize for their stand against interfaith marriages. This problem should be faced squarely in every family with growing children, and no member should hesitate to bring the full weight of scientific evidence to bear.

The time to discuss the choosing of a future mate with children is long before they begin dating. It is rather late for Gerry's mother to be worrying about him after he has become emotionally involved with Elaine. The chances are that no amount of reasoning or dissuasion will bring him to the place where he will willingly inflict upon himself the emotional pain of a complete separation.

The easiest time to uproot a tree is when it is a seedling, not after it has grown to maturity. Courtship is the beginning which ultimately leads to marriage. If young persons avoid courtship with nonmembers they will avoid many marital problems and heartaches.

Prayer for a Daughter

By William Henry Chamberlin

I hope she is never bored by life and will be spared the kind of misfortunes that permanently hurt and crush. As an incorrigible individualist myself, I hope she will never surrender that last secure refuge of the individual, the sense of her own personality. And I commend to her a mariner's prayer of old Greece: "You may sink me or you may save me, Poseidon, God of the Sea. But whatever you do, I'll hold my course straight." There have been few wiser and finer statements of the proper attitude of conscious man toward the immense but unconscious forces of Nature and of chance by which he is surrounded.

A Member for Sixty-two Years

I was baptized when I was twelve years old, and I am now seventy-four. I have never regretted taking the step when I was young. I always enjoyed being a worker, but for the past two years my health has been so bad I have had to give up church school work and even "visiting over the back fence." I miss mingling with the Saints, but I try to be patient and do what I can to witness for my Heavenly Father. As I sit in my chair I sometimes write poetry, hoping that those who read it will be encouraged to serve Him more. I pray always for those whom God has called and set apart to lead the way to Zion.

A Testimony of Healing

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. I have been in this church fifty years and have witnessed many miracles. Once I was healed of an ulcer on my leg. I had to walk with crutches and suffered great pain until an elder unexpectedly came from Canada to our home in Pipestone, Minnesota, and administered to me. Within five days I was able to walk normally. Another time I was instantly cured of the flu.

I have received many blessings, and the Lord has protected me when my life was in danger. I would advise the Saints to turn away from worldly pleasures and listen for the Master's voice. We should all prepare to meet the Savior, enduring our trials and murmuring not. I am seventy-seven years old.

Tribute to Home Branch

Although the weather was cool, we attended Park of the Pines Reunion and were rewarded spiritually for our effort. I was thrilled when my companion arose and bore his testimony. The classes taught by Apostle and Mrs. Mesley were uplifting, and Bishop Updike's sermons were wonderful.

We met with the Saints of our home branch at Marion, Michigan, for Communion service. It was here that my husband first heard of the gospel, and my sons were baptized there. They helped serve the emblems, and my husband also sat on the rostrum. I was glad to see other young people taking their responsibilities seriously. One young man at reunion said, "There is nothing the world has to offer that is worth exchanging the gospel of Jesus Christ for." Many from this branch have been called to the priesthood, and I am reminded of the prophecy given by Brother Burr years ago. He said that our branch would be as a light set on a hill and would never go out, but it was up to the young men to see that it didn't.

NEW CHURCH AT MYRTLE POINT, OREGON

THE ABOVE PICTURE of the new church building in Myrtle Point, Oregon, was taken Sunday, July 8, during a branch institute. There was an attendance of over one hundred thirty. Members, neighbors, and friends are justly proud of this new church, which was built and paid for in twelve months.

Myrtle Point Branch is probably the farthest west of any Reorganized church on the continental United States, being located just a few miles inland from Cape Blanco, the most westerly point on the Oregon coast. Cape Blanco, the first geographic feature in Oregon named by white men, was discovered by Martin de Auglar, a Spanish explorer, on January 19, 1603.

The southern Oregon coast has one of the mildest climates found anywhere. The mercury rarely drops below thirty-two degrees in winter, and because of the Japanese current and the cooling trade winds, seldom goes over eighty degrees in summer.

This section of Oregon with its modern paved highways today is quite a contrast to the rough country visited some fifty years ago by Elders Joseph Clapp, Thomas Daley, A. Haws, Hyrum Holt, and Benjamin McGuire. These earlier ministers had to travel over mountain trails, cross rivers by canoe, and at times even swim the swollen streams to carry the message to the people of this valley.

It is interesting to look into the old records of the branch, where the names of Elders Chase, Cook, Baker, Savage, Velt, McConley, Chapman, and others are found. All these men helped to lay the good foundation in the establishment of the church as it exists today.

Myrtle Point has a population of over two thousand and is located nine miles from Coquille, county seat of Coos County. The main industry is lumbering, and there are eighty lumber mills adjacent to this community. Possibly more lumber is shipped from Coos Bay than any other seaport in the United States. The second largest industry in the county is dairying. The culture of lilies is an important industry, also the harvesting of native ferns, shrubbery, medicinal roots and herbs, and the growing of cranberries. Coos County is one of the few places where the beautiful and rare myrtle wood trees grow. The manufacture of novelties from this wood is extensively carried on.

Myrtle Point is a beautiful, healthful, prosperous community. It has a thriving branch, and the Saints will welcome other members of the church who at present haven't a church home, or any who would like to locate here with the desire to help build upon the sure foundation laid by those who pioneered on the southern Oregon coast.—GEORGE C. PRICE

Science and Invention

By Glenn C. LeBaron, N.D.

WE ARE THANKFUL for men of science and invention, such as Morse, Bell, Edison, Pasteur, Franklin, and Fulton. The wisdom and ability of these and many more were beyond the ken of their fellow-men. Humanity has been benefited in many ways by the fertile minds of such people.

These men were of flesh and bone and created as all other men, but their minds were activated by an innate intelligence which gave them light and the impetus to strive for great things. The Lord in his infinite wisdom called upon them to bring about an answer to the needs of mankind so that a better way of life could be enjoyed on earth.

Can Christian people believe that much of modern invention, which has resulted in faster planes, atom bombs, and other weapons, is the will of God? Will he bless the men who create death-dealing weapons?

I believe that only those who devote their talents to benefit mankind will receive a rich reward. The church has men and women who strive for the physical and spiritual betterment of the world, rather than riches or glory. The ministers, musicians, department directors, doctors, and nurses, all have tasks to perform in the vineyard of the Lord.

Regardless of how great or humble our good deeds may be, our credits are written in the Book of Life. "We lay up treasures in Heaven." The widow's contribution of a mite is recorded along with the deeds of outstanding men and women of Bible times. The Lord bestows wisdom and gives us inspiration to do our specific tasks to glorify him in the eyes of the world.

Being instrumental in saving one soul is a creditable task—greater in the sight of God than smashing the atom, building a jet plane, or commanding an army.

Let us seek our task and be diligent in performing it.

Interesting Personalities

Emma Smith Kennedy

I REMEMBER days in Nauvoo, although I was very young, but my happiest memories are those of our life on the farm close to Andover, Missouri," and "Aunt Emma" as she is called by her friends, begins a fascinating story of one of her countless experiences. Young and old alike are interested in the stories she tells of "Uncle Joseph" and "Father."

The daughter of Alexander Smith, first patriarch of the Restoration and son of the martyr, Aunt Emma was born in Nauvoo, Illinois, on March 17, 1869. Her mother was an orphan girl reared by Emma Smith, wife of the martyr. The kindly counsel of her father is a source of inspiration to this little old lady even after his death.

Aunt Emma was baptized in 1881, and was living in Independence at the time. She taught church school at the age of fourteen in the "little brick church on the hill." When the Stone Church was constructed, she became the first librarian. She smiles when she speaks of the first days of building, and recalls the ministry of such outstanding men as Joseph Luff and F. G. Pitt. She also enjoys relating the progress that has been made in Independence since the early days of the Restoration. "I remember," she begins, "how everyone thought we were foolish for building so far from town when we built the Stone Church. The old slave market, which was located where the present post office is, was the very edge of town. Persecution and opposition were strong in those days, and to be a good Saint was no easy matter. Watching the growth of the church has been a testimony to me in itself."

ONE OF AUNT EMMA'S favorite stories is one that took place before she was born. After the death of the Martyr, various groups came to Emma Smith and asked her to join with them. However, Emma refused each time. When one of the larger groups of people was leaving Nauvoo, delegates were sent to invite Emma to join, and she refused. The delegates then informed her that they would give her a certain length of time, and at the end of this time if she again refused, they would burn her home with her and the children in it. The house was picketed so there was no way of escape. When the appointed time came, Emma refused to go with the group. Knowing that her life was in danger, she gathered the children about her in the living room and they slept on the floor at her feet while she sat up all night in the rocker. The next morning she went outside to see what had happened, because she had heard the men and knew they were planning to kill her. When she looked around the house she could see where the fire had been laid, but it was only ashes, and the house was not burned at all. "The men lighted the fire, but God put it out," Aunt Emma says.

Today Aunt Emma is still active in church work. She writes many letters to Saints all over the world, and finds a great deal of joy in telling stories to children. Her testimony of the power of the Restoration has come to her because of her faith and devotion to the work for which her grandfather gave his life.—BARBARA PEAVY

Leadership in the Women's Institute

SPEAKERS FOR THE WOMEN'S INSTITUTE, to be held in Independence, Missouri, October 8-12, 1951, have been carefully chosen, and many of them need no introduction. Some of the speakers are not as widely known, but have been drawn from the excellent workers in various areas of the church. All of those who have been asked to participate are well qualified in their individual fields.

Several men who are outstanding in their church activity have been invited and have agreed to serve. Dr. F. M. McDowell is well known to members throughout the world for his outstanding contributions in religious education, priesthood education and youth work. Bishop Walter Johnson, a member of the Presiding Bishopric, will give one of the addresses. John F. Sheehy, known from coast to coast for his pastoral ministry, will discuss present day marriage problems. Dr. Addison Brown, who is becoming increasingly well known as one of the outstanding physicians of Des Moines, Iowa, will give a lecture of vital importance to women and their health. Mark Siegfried, an authority on church historical points in and around Independence, will conduct a historical tour. Glaude A. Smith pastor of the Stone Church and counselor to the stake president, will be in charge of the Wednesday evening prayer service. Evan A. Fry, familiar to thousands through his radio work for the church, will discuss meeting inquiries from non-members. Carl Mesle, church-wide youth director, will speak at a morning session. President F. Henry Edwards will be the speaker one evening.

An outstanding authority from outside the church, Dr. Clifford Adams of the National Council of Family Relations, Chicago, Illinois, will lecture Thursday morning on "Making Marriage Work." Dr. Adams is the author of several books on marriage and family life and writes the monthly feature, "Making Marriage Work," for the Ladies' Home Journal.

Several members of the Women's Council will serve as speakers. These include Mrs. S. S. Arnson, Church-wide Leader of Women; Mrs. H. I. Velt, Mrs. W. N. Johnson, Mrs. S. A. Burgess, Mrs. M. A. McConley, Mrs. C. G. Mesley, and Mrs. J. Harry Paxton. All of these women have become known to members throughout the church through their reunion and institute work. Other speakers who are known for their leadership in various fields in many areas of the church are Mrs. W. W. Smith, Mrs. T. W. Bath, Mrs. F. M. McDowell, Miss Aleta Runkle, Mrs. Orris Salisbury, Mrs. George Shippy, Mrs. W. S. Bennett, Mrs. Stephen Black, Mrs. Preston Hubble, Miss Eveline Burgess, Mrs. Mark Siegfried, Mrs. Ted Beck, Mrs. G. B. Wilson, Mrs. A. B. Taylor, and Miss Velma Ruch. Mrs. Wilson is leader of women for the Center Stake of Zion, and Mrs. Preston Hubble is friendly visiting chairman. Miss Ruch is a member of the faculty of Graceland College. Mrs. Bennett, Miss Burgess, and Mrs. Bath have become known through their writings. Mrs. W. W. Smith has conducted the women's classes for many reunions. Others of the group have made outstanding contributions in various fields of activity and interest, both in their own localities and in church-wide endeavor.

This large group of devoted men and women will give of their best to bring the inspired leadership necessary to make this institute a successful unit in the series of activities which have been planned by the First Presidency to meet the increasing needs of the members of the church as they strive to become better qualified builders of the kingdom of God. The prayerful, devoted participation of the women of the church, together with this leadership, will place this institute on the same high spiritual plane reached by the Church School Institute, the High Priest Institute, the Book of Mormon Institute, and the Priesthood Institute. It is the responsibility of each of the women of the church to do her part, whether she can attend or not, to make this success possible.

Notes on Women's Institute

MANY WORKERS are required to make any project a success. The General Women's Institute was originally planned by the First Presidency, and the General Council of Women has had the responsibility of working out details. Much thought, work, prayer, and consultation with general officers and other leaders were required to bring the plans to completion.

A general department depends, however, on many people and groups; without their willing participation an institute of this magnitude could not be carried out successfully. Credit should be given to the women of Independence, under the leadership of Sister Gail Wilson, and the leaders of the local congregations for their willingness to open their homes to guests; to Sister Lawrence Jones and her helpers of the Daughters of Zion who will have charge of the daily nursery; and to the women of the Kansas City Stake who are providing the refreshments for the opening meeting, October 8. Laurel Club workers will miss the morning classes so that the noon meal can be served. The quorums and departments of the church are preparing materials for exhibit, and the Herald House has offered assistance in many ways. Musical contributions will be given. Sister Aarona Kohlman of the General Council has been preparing copy for Herald publicity. These, too, merit appreciation.

The leaders are fortunate in having so many capable and willing helpers.

Perennials From Seeds

By Blanche Neal Shipley

GROWING PERENNIALS from seeds can be interesting and—in spite of one's forebodings and fearful anticipations—can result in a beautiful array of plants with a minimum of expense and care. For several years I had a yen to try my hand at some such venture but always dismissed the idea with the thought, "Oh, such delicate plantings are for the professional, not for an amateur like me." Then, quite accidentally, I found that even an inexperienced person can have good luck—sometimes.

It was this way. My mother lived in Lamoni, Iowa, on some property where a flower garden had been started years ago, and as she carefully tended the flowers that summer, she saved seeds from various plants, that were then new to us as a family, and divided them with me. Among them were columbine and anchusa.

When spring came I spaded a bed on the north side of the house and planted the columbine seeds, barely covering them. The anchusa seeds were planted in like manner on the south side of the house. Being rather skeptical of anything happening, I straightway forgot them until a torrential rain brought them back to my mind. "My seeds!" I exclaimed, "that rain will wash them to Turkey!"

Imagine my surprise a few days later to find baby columbine and anchusa plants raising the ground. They thrived, bloomed, reseeded, and so on, and our present beds are witnesses of the growth of those first perennial seeds.

Our very good neighbor across the road had some gorgeous Canterbury bells one spring that she had raised from seeds the previous summer. This gave me a desire to try my hand with them. Three years ago, while I was convalescing from an operation, Madelyn, Sharon Kay, and I planted some Canterbury bell seeds in an old pan of dirt that was none too good, but it was all that we could get at that time of year. It was late March, and we were having snow and rain, so everything outside was too wet to disturb. We kept the seeds moist by sprinkling each day. Surely every one sprouted, and it was not long until our pan was a mass of tiny plants. As soon as weather permitted we set the pan outside each day. When the plants were about three inches tall, we set them out in the flower garden, dividing them with my mother who then lived next door to us on the same farm. They grew and grew that summer—ninety-seven husky plants—and the next spring they produced masses of blue and white bells. (We had no pink ones.) There were hundreds of exquisite flowers—all very easily grown.

ALL MY PERENNIAL SEED GROWING has not been so fortunate. Two years ago our back porch looked like a seed nursery with its many cans of potential Oriental poppies and painted daisies. The girls and I watered them each day and carried them outside for light and sunshine. We were as proud as punch over our thriving plants. When they arrived at the setting-out stage, we carefully put them out in the flower garden to get adapted before cold weather came on, but alas, they were cheated of any such adventure. Two old white hens did more in a few moments one evening than the rest of us could reasonably do in half a day. Our cherished poppies and painted daisies—about seventy-five strong—were gone.

Last summer I saved seeds from the gaillardia and planted them in the house, and in about three days they were up. We could hardly believe our eyes, for never before had we been able to get gaillardia seed to sprout. The tiny plants were transplanted to the garden in the fall and mulched well for winter. We are looking forward to a big bed of yellow and orange blossoms all summer long.

Why not try your hand at perennial seeds? It's fascinating! But keep the chickens and the dogs and the cats and the babies out of them until they have had at least one good year's growth. After that they will stand considerable abuse and still come through. However, don't go too far on the neglect, for there is a limit.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohiman

September magazines reflect the approach of fall and the opening of school. Many outlets are offered for the fresh energy that comes with cooler weather. There is more emphasis on the home, now that vacations are over. Food sections continue to offer ideas for holding down food costs, while at the same time maintaining proper nutrition.

Usually we do not mention fiction, of which there is such an abundance, but one piece is so outstanding that we must bring it to your attention. "The River Garden of Pure Repose," Ladies' Home Journal, a novel complete in one issue, is beautifully written, and the central character is a woman of outstanding nobility. You will enjoy it.

World conditions continue to concern us deeply, and a thought-provoking article is "The Lesson of Korea," Ladies' Home Journal.

Fulton Oursler contributes some stimulating modern thoughts in "The Ten Commandments—Why They Work Today!" Cosmopolitan.

"Perspective on Parenthood," Parents' Magazine, is designed to help parents face and control their emotions, in order that they may give their children love and reassurance.

Fall is the time of year to start lawn improvements, and "This Lawn Cost $11.00," American Home, is just the help you'll need.

"Danger—The Shock May Kill You!" American Home, is an article for everyone, for it points out electrical hazards that we too often ignore or overlook.

"Here's How to Stretch the Food Dollar," Woman's Home Companion, is a chart showing proper selection and storage of vegetables.

"Make It Pretty," Woman's Home Companion, pictures ideas for making dozens of things, including food, more attractive at small cost.

"A Letter to Youth on Love and Marriage," Coronet, contains a vital message for every teen-age boy and girl.

"How Fruit Came to America," National Geographic, is a beautifully illustrated feature for young and old.

In these troubled times, women who are separated from their husbands will profit from the article, "If Your Man Goes Away," McCall's.

"Steps Toward Self-management," National Parent-Teacher, does a great deal to make infant behavior more understandable and to help parents aid in child development.

"The Danger of False Gods," National Parent-Teacher, is the first of a series designed to build up a practical picture of the kind of personality that has spiritual distinction and inner peace.

A Shepherd's Story

lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when an elder is present, he is only to attend to the duties of his calling. In all things, the priest is to assist the elder, if the occasion requires. The elder is to take the lead of all meetings."

A careful study of this convinced me that the most important work of a priest is in the homes of the Saints. It furnishes the best opportunity to become acquainted with human nature, which acquaintance I am convinced is one of the most important qualifications of a successful minister. No one can preach, teach, or do other work with people without knowing something of their problems and weaknesses, and in no other way can one get so close to people as by personal contact in their homes. So I began my work along this line.

One day I took my Bible and made my first call at the home of our pastor. He met me at the door, welcomed me in a genial way, and expressed his pleasure at my calling. I was rather at a loss to know how to proceed, but I told him that I had read in the Doctrine and Covenants that it was my duty to call at the home of each member, and that I had started out to make some calls. He seemed greatly pleased, called his family together and asked me to proceed. I was somewhat nonplused, but I read a Bible lesson, offered prayer, and made my first talk on home responsibilities. He helped me out by asking some questions about home problems. This helped me to see more clearly my own responsibility and the importance of my work. I left much encouraged, and began, whenever I was off work and in the evenings, to visit among the Saints. I was blessed in my work, and I am sure I received as much benefit from my visits as did those whom I visited.

perintendent and young people's leader; Curtis Pearson, church school director; Mrs. T. W. Bath, women's leader; Joan Margrave, publicity agent; Mrs. Clyde Wiley, children's supervisor; Mrs. Roy T. Heller, Herald correspondent; Mrs. Joe McAdams, historian; Mr. and Mrs. Warren Jackson, custodians; Dan Margrave and Clyde Wiley, trustees; R. G. Smith was sustained as solicitor; and Elder Bath has appointed Curtis Pearson as his assistant.

The woman's department voted September 4 to combine the three groups and to meet on the first and third Monday nights. Officers elected at this meeting were Mrs. Curtis Pearson, assistant leader; Mrs. Warren Jackson, recording secretary; Mrs. Al Comstock, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Clyde Wiley, treasurer; Mrs. Sam Landrum, music leader; Mrs. Roy Heller, teacher. Mrs. T. W. Bath was hostess at the meeting.

The three members who were baptized at reunion were confirmed August 5 by Elders J. W. Jones, T. W. Bath, and S. Farrington. They were Leon Cummings and his son, James; and Raymond Burns, son of Brother and Sister Earl Burns.

Sharon Sheppard, daughter of Priest David Sheppard, was baptized by her father August 26. Ronnie Gazaway, son of Mr. and Mrs. Grafton Gazaway was baptized September 2 by Pastor T. W. Bath. Both children were confirmed at the September Communion service: Sharon by her grandfather, Elder C. T. Sheppard of Independence, Missouri; and Ronnie by Elders J. W. Jones and T. W. Bath.

The Zion's League had a picnic supper on the church lawn August 13 in honor of Dale Swall who was called to the army. His mother and brother, Forrest, of Lee's Summit, Missouri, also attended. Several gifts were presented to him by the branch and Zion's League.

Vacation church school was held four days a week for two weeks beginning August 14. Mrs. Clyde Wiley was supervisor. She was assisted by Mrs. Sherman Sheppard, Mrs. Al Comstock, Mrs. Grafton Gazaway, Mrs. Bill Shaw, Mrs. J. W. Jones, Mrs. T. W. Bath, Mrs. Roy Heller, Marcia Gazaway, David

Wiley, and Gordon Heady. The achievement program was held August 26 and handwork done by the children was on display.—Reported by MRS. ROY HELLER

SASKATCHEWAN REUNION.—Seventies Z. Z. Renfroe and L. S. Troyer, and Elder Aleah Koury were the visiting ministers for the reunion held in Saskatoon July 15-22.

Following the daily prayer services classes were conducted. Elder Troyer taught the women's class; Elder Renfroe conducted the priesthood class, and Elder Koury taught the young people. Two early morning prayer services were held by the young people. The children also had services.

Brother and Sister Renfroe were honored on their wedding anniversary July 19, at a luncheon for the priesthood and their wives held at the home of Mrs. George Pow, a nonmember friend.

Two candidates were baptized the last day of reunion. They were Mrs. Pearl Hurley and Mrs. Doris Laverty. Sister Hurley was confirmed by Elders Bergerson and White; Sister Laverty by Elders White and Bergerson. At this same service ordinations were conducted when Merlin Olson was ordained to the office of elder by Elders L. S. Troyer and H. W. Fisher; Johnny Mills to the office of priest by Elders Fisher and Troyer; Vandy Davis to the office of priest by Elders Will Cornish and Aleah Koury; Orville Fisher to the office of priest by Elders Koury and Cornish. That evening Elder Koury showed slides on "The return of the Jews to Palestine according to prophecy."

Sister Diggle, chorister, was in charge of the music for the week. She was assisted by Sister Millie Waddell, Saskatoon, director of music.

A business session was held Saturday afternoon at which time a motion that "Northern and Southern districts be amalgamated and known as the Saskatchewan District" was passed. The following officers were elected: Elder Howard Fisher, president; Elders Len Jensen and R. L. Bowerman, counselors; Florence Gendron, secretary; Grace Beckman, treasurer; Elder Will Cornish, nonresident pastor; Elder Art Bergerson, church school director; Dora Carter, women's department leader; Orville Fisher, Zion's League leader; June Burgess, music director; Charles Jenkins, publicity agent; Amy Powell, corresponding secretary; Elder Art Bergerson, Priest Mel Taylor, and Deacon E. Baker, auditors; and district presidency, secretary, treasurer, and bishop's agent, budget committee.

Sister Florence Gendron was in charge of registration and also served as book steward. Brother Will Cornish cared for the administrations, and Sister Mildred Gore was in charge of the nursery. Mrs. Reid was in charge of the food, and Charles Nelson was caretaker for the auditorium.—Reported by AMY POWELL

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.—The first reunion of the newly organized Southern California District convened at Pacific Palisades, California, July 28 through August 4, with Apostle E. J. Gleazer and District President J. P. Davis, presiding.

The daily schedule included prayer service, presided over by Evangelist L. J. Ostertag; adult classes taught by Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Bishop N. Ray Carmichael; young people's classes taught by Elder T. R. Beil and L. J. Ostertag; an afternoon experience meeting conducted by Elder Peter S. Whalley; recreation; and preaching services with District President John P. Davis, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Bishop J. Stanley Kelley, Evangelist L. J. Ostertag, Bishop D. B. Carmichael, and Elder T. R. Beil as speakers. Children's classes were under the direction of Fern Roberts, the work for these classes was organized under the supervision of the district director of religious education, Mildred Calkins. Herald Wixom and his wife, Dorothy, were in charge of junior high classwork. A. Hugh Kensler, district young people's leader, was in charge of evensong, assisted by T. R. Beil. Marian Van Fleet, district women's leader, was in charge of the women's activities, conducting a class for women two mornings during the reunion. The reunion choir, directed by M. Warren Tait, district director of music, presented a service of music each evening and on Sunday. Their choir was joined by the children's choir on Friday evening, under the direction of Mary Ethel Cooper.

Rodney Engle and Herald Wixom were ordained to the office of high priest at the devotional service Sunday morning. These men are counselors to the district president and both are pastors of branches in the district.—Reported by MADELINE OSTERTAG

CHAMPAIGN, ILLINOIS.—The university group met at a banquet held at the Inman Hotel. District President Arthur Henson and Seventy Cecil Ettinger were in charge. A second meeting was held in the Illinois Union Building of the university. Malcolm Ritchie was elected president of the group. He will work with Bill Poore who is responsible to the district president for Danville and Champaign activities. Other officers are Mr. Henry Zahnd, treasurer; Mrs. William Allen Fetter, secretary. Among those present at the election meeting were Arthur Henson and son, Cecil Ettinger, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Poore, Mr. and Mrs. William Allen Fetter, Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Ritchie, Mr. and Mrs. Max Matthews, Mr. and Mrs. Burton A. The Quiet Miracle

By Naomi Russell

AT SEVEN O'CLOCK I rolled over on my side and took a brief look at the three other double-deck bunks in the room; then I shut my eyes and made a mental note never to volunteer to serve as house mother at any future retreats. I was glad this was the last day . . . if I could stand the clutter and giggles, the mud and the spine-chilling dampness until midafternoon I could go home and forget the whole thing. The low rumble of thunder predicted more rain, and I remembered how, on the previous morning, I had sat through Communion service in the big tent while drops of water oozed through the worn canvas above to drip on my head and shoulders with the measured regularity of a leaky faucet. I wondered how many of the three hundred campers would go back to civilization with pneumonia.

The girl above me yawned, "Anybody going swimming this morning?" and someone across the room moaned, "Don't be silly."

Outside a couple of junior highs in bathing suits scuffed along the gravel walk in the direction of the lake. I shivered and pulled my blanket up under my chin. "How can they do it?" I asked myself with mingled feelings of concern and envy. Strange how what is fun at thirteen looks like torture at thirty. Time certainly changes things . . .

"Come on, you chickens," yelled one of my charges in an adjoining room. A chorus of yawns and groans followed, and an "upper-bunker" landed on the bare floor with a thud.

Might as well get up too. Better get out to the hydrant before the pressure goes down. Last night there wasn't even enough water for brushing teeth. Too bad some wealthy member doesn't come to camp and donate enough money to modernize it.

I DRESSED, washed hurriedly in cold water, and headed for the breakfast line with my raincoat. No use trying to clean up the place until the girls are ready to leave. I've swept it twice now without any offers of help. I'll probably have the whole thing to do alone.

A half-dozen shivering swimmers walked stiff-legged back to the cabin, and I reminded them to bring their raincoats along when they came to breakfast. They ought to have known better. Wonder if I'll be held responsible for their coughs and sniffles. Maybe I should have refused to let them go. . . .

I took my place at the end of the line, half a block from the lodge door. Someone up front shouted, "There won't be enough toast to go around. The fellows raided the kitchen last night and ate up most of the bread."

"Great!" I muttered, and put on my raincoat. Ten minutes and three steps later the shower was on, and the stream of hungry humanity moved hurriedly into a hairpin curve inside the lodge.

AFTER BREAKFAST one of the better-equipped campers offered to share his blanket as an umbrella for the uphill trek to the meeting tent. What had started as a shower became a cloudburst, and inside the tent little rivers of water washed through the grass to form puddles in the low spots. We opened our songbook and joined in the singing, but drips from the saturated canvas overhead wrinkled the paper and blurred the words. We put the book away and sang from memory the songs that we knew. For half an hour we sang, because the roar of rain sweeping down on the tent made speaking unintelligible at a distance of a few feet. Then the man in charge announced in a loud voice that the prayer service would begin. A dozen or so dependables stood in their places with bowed heads and waited their turn; then others stood, and still others. For nearly an hour they prayed despite the deafening din of wind and rain.

Since I could not hear and felt in no mood to voice a prayer, I sat and watched the youngsters on the row in front of me. They're probably happy about the rain. Gives them a good reason for sitting closer together.

The boy immediately ahead of me took off his coat and wrapped it around his girl friend. She snuggled closer, and he put his arm protectively across her shoulders. Obviously neither of them was greatly disturbed about not being able to hear; they talked to each other instead.

THE RAIN BECAME a drizzle, and the wind died down a little. The man in charge announced that there would be time for several testimonies. Within a few minutes thirty people were standing, ready to speak. One boy, a nonmember, said that he had been searching for God and had found him here in fellowship with other young people. A Graceland student recalled how several years ago he would have laughed at anyone who might have suggested that he follow "this man Jesus," and how today it seems the only logical thing to do. An appointee from England told how he had missed his family when he came to America—how he used to take long walks with his father and talk over problems with him, and then there was no one to talk to . . . until he discovered that in the church anyone can have a "family" anywhere he goes. A girl whose parents had opposed her baptism said that here she had found strength to go back home and face her problems without bitterness.

An hour and a half passed by, and it was time for lunch. Still people stood and waited their chance to speak. Something had happened to the three hundred who sat together through the storm. There was no prophecy, no speaking in tongues, no pentecostal experiences—nothing except the good feeling of oneness, of mutual concern, of something bigger than personal desires and grievances.

The girl in front of me took off her boy friend's coat and stood up. "I didn't think I was getting much from retreat until this morning," she said, "and now I know why. I made a resolution this summer that I was going to start doing something for others, but then I sort of forgot my good intentions. Ever since I came I've been thinking about me. That's why retreat hasn't meant anything. . . ."

I didn't have to speak my piece then; she had said it for me. I'd missed the whole spirit of the thing because I'd been feeling sorry for myself. I'd let the rain and the mud and the inconveniences obscure my view of others and their needs. What I had given, I had given grudgingly. "From now on things are going to be different," I promised myself, and for the first time in months I didn't feel unhappy with anybody or anything . . . including the weather.

AFTER LUNCH I went back up the hill to the cabin. The prospect of cleaning up didn't seem so bad after all. I walked inside, and the room was cleaner than the afternoon that camp began. I looked in the adjoining rooms, and all but one was in order. "We'll take care of that as soon as the girls get their stuff packed up," explained one of the campers leaning on her broom.

"But this is supposed to be my responsibility," I apologized. "Don't you want me to finish up?"

"We'll do it," she smiled. "Your driver's waiting outside. You'd better get going."

"Thanks . . . thanks lots," I said, picking up my suitcase and bedroll. "See you next year!"

All the way home we talked about the change that had come over the camp. What had happened? Well, maybe it was a miracle—a quiet sort of miracle. I guess the classification doesn't matter much. The important thing is that the warm glow of it is still with us, and the whole world looks better because of it.

Wonder Medicines

By Viola Velt

WE MARVEL at the wonderful healing drugs and medicines which modern medical science has given us. Yet much more miraculous than these new medical discoveries are the medicines and formulas prescribed by the Great Physician to cure the misery, despair, and grief of a sin-sick world.

Perhaps we fail to realize the potency of these cures because we have laid them on the shelf for so many years. Perhaps we fail to remember that those who have followed the directions on these prescriptions have found them successful. Perhaps we scorn them because we have heard of them so often and used them so little. Perhaps we fail to heed the Physician's advice because the simply worded prescriptions don't look complicated enough. Maybe words such as love and forgiveness are too short to be impressive.

Sometimes we read the prescriptions and take only half of what they prescribe for us. Or we think the medicines will do us more good if we take them in our own way. However, in desiring to cure a physical illness we are most careful to read the doctor's complete instructions and to follow his advice carefully.

Sometimes we try the Great Physician's medicine. Grateful for what it does for us we eagerly rush to our neighbors and tell them of our wonderful discovery. Sometimes we are discouraged when our friends seem disinterested. Yet we realize a thing cannot sell successfully on mere sales talk. People are more interested in the cure than in the medicine. We don't need to talk so much if we demonstrate more.

These formulas we have are magic; they are worth getting excited about. The world is waiting. We must prove the cures effective by showing the changes they make in our lives. When we can show others the better life we obtain from following the Great Physician, then the sorrow, disease, and unhappiness of the stricken masses can be relieved.

School for Sympathy

In the garden of the School for Sympathy, I saw children playing: A girl of twelve, her eyes covered with a bandage, was being led about carefully between the flower beds by a lad of eight. Wistfully watching the others was another child on crutches.

"She is not really blind," explained the teacher. "This is only her blind day, as it is the other child's lame day."

In the course of the term each child has a blind day, during which a bandage shuts out all light and it is a point of honor not to peep; a lame day; a deaf day; a dumb day. This means the need of assistance in everything, and another child is appointed to help. It is educative for both, for the one privileged to see discovers that the necessity of describing to another makes all that he sees the more interesting.

DEATHS

ANDERSON.—Oscar, was born January 22, 1872, in LaSalle County, Illinois, and died at his home on August 12, 1951, after two years of illness. After graduation from Highland Park College in Des Moines he taught school in Lamoni. In 1898 he became cashier and director of the State Savings Bank in Lamoni and later was president. He served in the state legislature in 1925-26, was Iowa State Budget Director from 1929 to 1933, and was associated with the Iowa State Tax Commission for nine years. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in his youth, ordained a teacher in 1898, a priest in 1906, and a high priest in 1919. He also served on the Lamoni Stake High Council. For the past nineteen years he had been an active member of the Des Moines Branch. On June 23, 1906, he was married to Belle Kelley, daughter of Apostle W. H. Kelley. A son, Richard, preceded him in death.

He is survived by his wife, Belle; a son, Oscar of Boston, Massachusetts; a daughter, Margaret of New York, New York; a sister, Nellie Anderson of Lamoni, Iowa; two brothers: Benjamin Anderson of Omaha, Nebraska, and David A. Anderson of Phoenix, Arizona; and one grandchild. Funeral services were held in Des Moines, Elder Herbert Scott officiating, and in Lamoni, President F. Henry Edwards, and Elders Robert Farnham, Earl Higdon, and Herbert Scott officiating. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni.

BAILEY.—Samuel H., son of Earl D. and Katie A. Bailey, was born on July 14, 1883, at Lamoni, Iowa, and died July 8, 1951, at Kellerton, Iowa. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of twelve by his father. In January, 1903, he was married to Myra Booker; four children were born to them. They made their home in or near Tulsa, Oklahoma, most of their lives, later moving to Lamoni and Kellerton, where he engaged in the insurance business.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Mrs. Martin Hynden of Lamoni and Mrs. J. O. Shank of Independence, Missouri; two sons: Don C. of Houston, Texas, and Louis of Tulsa; nine grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Services were held in Lamoni, Elders Roy Cheville and Robert Farnham officiating. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery.

BURGESS.—Robert Harvey, son of Volney L. and Margaret Vest Burgess, was born April 12, 1886, in Wayne County, Illinois, and died September 2, 1951, at his home in Wayne County. In 1910 he was married to Malissa Huffines; a son, Stanley, was born to them but died in infancy. Malissa died on April 12, 1911. On March 3, 1915, he was married to Flossie Burkett; one of the four sons born to them preceded him in death. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 12, 1910, and attended Brush Creek Branch.

He is survived by his wife, Flossie; three sons: Eugene of Flora, Illinois; Robert and George of the home; three brothers: Lewis of Johnsonville, Illinois; Halleck of Dixon, Illinois; and George of Centralia, Illinois; and a sister, Mrs. Josie Ward of Xenia, Illinois.

BURROUGHS.—Sandra Gene, daughter of Freeman and Willie Burroughs, was born May 12, 1949, at Kansas City, Missouri, and died August 30, 1951, of injuries received in an automobile accident.

She is survived by her parents; four sisters: Brenda, Linda, Sharon, and Vivion; three half-sisters; and three half-brothers. Services were conducted by Elder Glaude A. Smith at the George C. Carson Chapel in Independence, Missouri. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

CALEY.—Elizabeth, daughter of Edward and Susanna Poole, was born February 3, 1858, at San Bernardino, California, and died July 16, 1951, at her home in San Bernardino. In 1884 she was married to Hiram Rabel, who preceded her in death in 1904. In 1921 she married Eugene Caley, who died six months ago. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in her youth and remained faithful to her covenant to the end of her days. She was also a member of the Rebekah Lodge and the Pioneer Society.

Surviving are two brothers: Frederick A. Poole and Walter J. Poole, both of San Bernardino; a sister, Mrs. Albert Fuller of San Bernardino; and one grandchild. Funeral services were held at the Mark B. Shaw Memorial Chapel in San Bernardino. Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag officiating. Graveside services were conducted by the Pioneer Society, George Wixom in charge. Interment was in Mountain View Cemetery, San Bernardino.

CLINE.—Hannah, was born July 27, 1865, at St. Louis, Missouri, and died August 27, 1951, at the M. and M. Nursing Home in Huntsville, Missouri. She was married to David L. Thomas at the age of sixteen; five children were born to them. Mr. Thomas and three children preceded her in death. She was married to John Cline on August 30, 1946, at Keytesville, Missouri, and lived there until his death on February 6, 1949. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since March 4, 1874.

Surviving are two daughters: Margaret McKeit of Independence, Missouri, and Maud Hanien of Glenco, Missouri; fourteen grandchildren; and thirty-five great-grandchildren. Elder Morris Warden conducted the funeral service. Burial was at Keytesville.

DROWN.—William Thomas, son of Elizabeth and the late Dr. Thomas Drown, was born September 7, 1903, at Staffa, Ontario, and died July 3, 1951, in Stratford General Hospital after a year's illness. He was married to Margaret Jane Gray on June 29, 1940, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 25 of that same year.

He is survived by his wife and two small daughters, Margaret Gayle and Karen Elaine; his mother; four brothers; and two sisters. Funeral services were held at the Lockhart Chapel in Mitchell, Elders Carl Muir, Russell Atkins, and Alex Smith officiating. Interment was in Staffa cemetery.

GRANT.—Wilbert Uriah, was born August 12, 1892, at Allentop, Pennsylvania, and died December 29, 1950, at the Charleroi-Monessen Hospital after a lingering illness. His home, at the time of his death, was in Fayette City, Pennsylvania. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since March 20, 1920.

He was survived by his wife, Bertha, (who died August 9, 1951); two daughters: Mrs. James Hough of Independence, Missouri, and Mrs. Louis Johnson of Fayette City, three sons: Wilbert, Jr., and Raymond of Republic, Pennsylvania, and Donald of Belle Vernon, Pennsylvania. He also leaves seven grandchildren. Services were held at the Melenyzer Funeral Home in Belle Vernon, Elders Thomas Freeland and Arthur Warner officiating. Burial was in the Belle Vernon cemetery.

GRANT.—Bertha Mae, was born November 8, 1892, at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, and died August 9, 1951, at the Charleroi-Monessen Hospital. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since December 15, 1918, and was an active worker throughout her life. Her husband, Wilbert, preceded her in death on December 29, 1950.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. James Hough of Independence, Missouri, and Mrs. Louis Morgan of Fayette City; four sons: Thomas Morgan (by a previous marriage); Wilbert, Jr., and Raymond of Republic, Pennsylvania; Donald of Belle Vernon; and ten grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the McCrory Mortuary in Fayette City, Elders Arthur Warner and Thomas Freeland officiating. Burial was in the Belle Vernon cemetery.

TREDE.—Bertha Ellen, daughter of John A. and Elvira Smith, was born March 14, 1874, near Iowa City, Iowa, and died September 5, 1951, at the Independence Sanitarium. On April 5, 1894, she was married to William Carl Trede; seven children were born to them. On April 30, 1923, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church and remained a faithful member until her death. Since 1947 she had made her home in Independence with a daughter, Mrs. Sam Graffeo.

Surviving are five daughters: Mrs. Graffeo and Mrs. Marie Marsh of Independence; Mrs. R. J. Stahl of Newman, Georgia; Mrs. G. A. Olson of Lincoln, Nebraska; and Mrs. J. F. Hopper of King's Ferry, New York; a son, Karl V. Trede of Inglewood, California; two sisters: Mrs. Nealie Clark of Creighton, Nebraska, and Mrs. Dora Lynn of Idaho; a brother, George Smith of Creighton; twenty-two grandchildren; and twenty-six great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Evan Fry and John Blackmore officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

TUCKER.—Jessie, died August 26 at St. Margaret's Hospital in Kansas City, Kansas, at the age of seventy-eight. She was born in Jewett, Ohio, and moved to Kansas City when she was twenty. A member of the Grandview Reorganized Church, she was active in church school work and the LaDaSa Club. She was also a member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

She is survived by her husband, Daniel Tucker; one son, Clark E. Tucker, mayor of Kansas City, Kansas; three sisters: Mrs. Mary Gallenough of Kansas City; Mrs. Mattie Stewart of Jewett; and Mrs. Abbie Thompson of Cadiz, Ohio; a brother, Clyde Busby of Jewett; a grandson; and a great-grandson. Elder Evan Fry was in charge of the funeral service. Interment was in Highland Park Cemetery.

WILLOUGHBY.—Harold, was born October 31, 1900, at Bonesteel, South Dakota, and died August 19, 1951, at Hammond, Indiana. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1909.

He is survived by his wife, Miram; a son, Dale; a daughter, Mary Johnson; and four grandchildren, all of Hammond. Funeral services were conducted by Elder R. W. Smith. Burial was in the Elm Wood Cemetery.

ZELLERS.—Grace Marie, daughter of William and Emma Dale, was born May 8, 1891, in Columbus, Ohio, and died August 24, 1951, at her home in Columbus. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1932 and served in the women's department and church school.

She is survived by her husband, Paul; a daughter, Janet Kirby; a sister, Mrs. Myrtle Swisher of Columbus; a brother, A. C. Dale of Bradenton, Florida; and one grandchild. Funeral services were conducted by Elder R. E. Madden. Interment was in Forest Lawn Park, Columbus.

* QUOTES

While many new books are being published, some fine older ones are being forgotten. I often think that many of those being forgotten are better than those being published. These good books should be resurrected in quotes.

On the subject of liquor, here is a good quote from "Looking at Life," by Floyd Dell:

"I have discovered a simple and sad truth about alcohol—it prevents drunkenness. For by intoxication I mean utter self-forgetfulness and happiness and indifference to the world. Alcohol is a depressant. How many times have I seen my gay companions, already flushed with the intoxication of ideas or love, suddenly sobered by a cocktail, the sparkling eye, the divine recklessness chilled, the soaring spirit brought to earth.

"I have never been less sober in my life than since I stopped drinking. The other night I strayed into a cafe for a cup of coffee, and as I sat there I realized in a dreary whiff of memory the hundreds of hours I had spent there in the past with people I did not like, waiting in deadly boredom, hour after hour, for something to happen. Nothing ever did happen except that somebody ordered another round of drinks. I saw them or people like them sitting there now—sober, waiting for something to happen. . . . Well, they could wait if they liked. As for me, I was going to get drunk on the moonlight outside. And I did."

* ABBREVIATIONS

Last Friday an inter-office note arrived for an editor with a cryptic symbol on the line below the name, "DB"—causing the lift of an eyebrow and half a wonder. "DB"—probably just a bit of stenographerese—a transliteration of the abbreviation for "Dear Brother." With this beginning, it is easy to figure out a lot of other shorthand short-cuts: "DS" for "Dear Sisters," "DN" for "Dear Nuisance," or the pest who is always making trouble, "YIGB" for "Yours in Gospel Bonds," and "C-SY" for "Cordially and Sincerely Yours." The possibilities, both in convenience and entertainment, seem endless. Would you care to add a few of your own?

* WHERE DID JESUS WRITE?

It happened again the other day. "Jesus wrote on the sand," said the author of a nice article. And then he went on to say some good and thoughtful things about writing in the sand.

You and I have heard, ever since we were little folk in Sunday School, how Jesus wrote in the sand. Preachers have used it as an illustration in their sermons. "He wrote with his finger in the sand." So you are quite sure it was sand, aren't you? Everybody knows it was sand, so why bother to look it up?

Well, we bothered to look it up, and we received a shock. The Bible doesn't say sand. It isn't there. Have all these good people been wrong all these years? The Bible says, "Jesus stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground."—John 8:6. The ground could have been sandy, of course, but we have no authority to say it was sand.

News and Notes

We'd like you to know

Kenneth Lambert Graham

THERE IS A REASONABLE SUSPICION that Kenneth has printer's ink in his veins. His mother, Lena Lambert Graham, was editor of the Lamoni Chronicle for fourteen years. Daniel F. Lambert, his grandfather, was publisher and editor for several years of the Lamoni Patriot and the Chronicle. Since 1940 Kenneth has been identified with Herald House and has been its manager since 1942. His cousin, Richard J. Lambert, was managing editor of the Herald for many years.

Kenneth was born in Minot, North Dakota, in 1915. He was baptized in Lamoni in 1923, and graduated from the high school there ten years later. He was graduated from Graceland College in 1935 and from the University of Kansas in 1937, majoring in political science and journalism. Following his graduation he became director of educational and religious programs for the Midland Broadcasting Company (KMBC) and held this position until he came to the Herald Publishing House.

Mrs. Graham was Hazel F. Brace until June 30, 1939. The Grahams have two daughters, Donniss Jean (9) and Karen Louise (3). His special interest is "better public schools." He has served the community as chairman of the Citizen's School Advisory Committee for several years, and its work has received some national recognition.

He is also a member of the Rotary Club, a member of the Committee of Management of the Eastern Jackson County YMCA, and a member of the executive committee of Protestant Church-owned Publishers' Association. He is an elder and assistant group leader in the Stone Church congregation.

PRESIDENT PRESENTED CHECK

President Israel A. Smith, who is president of the board of trustees of the hospital, was presented with a check for $2,000 for the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital drive September 26. The check was presented by H. R. Boehmer, manager of the Standard Oil Refinery of Sugar Creek, Missouri. The campaign for funds for improvements on the hospital has as its goal for community contributions, $35,000.

APOSTLE LEAVES FOR FIELD

Apostle E. J. Gleazer left for his field September 28, after a stay in Independence during Council of Twelve and Joint Council meetings. He will return to Independence about the first of December. President Israel A. Smith will be with Brother Gleazer for part of the time he is in the field.

PRESENTED PLANS

W. Wallace Smith of the First Presidency preached at the morning service at Gudgell Park church in Independence September 23. He was presented with a brochure showing the plans for the proposed new building for this congregation. At the present time the branch is crowded and Brother Smith reports that the building is needed very much.

JOINT COUNCIL MEETS

Joint Council was in session for two weeks, terminating September 26. Along with other routine business, consideration has been given to certain revisions in the Book of Rules which will be brought to the attention of the General Conference in 1952. The matter of radio was considered and the Council is still awaiting the decision of the FCC on the appeal from the decision of the examiner which was adverse. All members of the Council have been present throughout the sessions with the exception of Apostle Roscoe Davey who is in the Australasian mission. Other announcements regarding personnel changes will appear in subsequent issues of the "Herald."

CLUB SPEAKER

Apostle D. Blair Jensen spoke to the Kiwanis Club of Independence September 25. His talk was about the conditions in Europe.

OPEN HOUSE HELD

The Department of Religious Education, now established in new offices in the Auditorium, held open house September 25. Approximately eighty people attended.

PROGRESS AT WICHITA

Apostle D. T. Williams reports that progress on the new church building at Wichita, Kansas, is gratifying. It now appears, according to Brother Williams, that the formal opening of the church building, with General Church officials present, will take place over the Thanksgiving week end.

ELECTED TO OFFICES

At the election of officers for the Independence Community Music Association, September 10, the following church members received offices: Loren McConnell, secretary; Franklyn S. Weddle, musical director; Chris B. Hartshorn and Mrs. Clayton Wolfe, board directors; Mrs. Vera Thomason, Orlando Nace, and Carl Mesle, board members.

MY ATTENTION has been called many times to articles, tracts, booklets, books, and magazines wherein "Mormonism" has been attacked or "exposed." I recently examined a number of productions of a like character. The significant thing about all of them is that almost all of the objections or the bases of attack relate to doctrines and practices of the Utah Latter Day Saints; they do not apply to original or pure Latter Day Saintism or the Reorganization which has preserved inviolate the doctrines and tenets and forms of government of the church founded by Joseph Smith.

I have before me, as I write, a copy of a semimonthly paper published by the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society, Incorporated, for August 22, 1951, called Awake. The article is called "The Mormon Labyrinth" and is contributed—not an editorial—which is a fair example of articles of the kind.

The writer says, "The purpose of this article is not to discuss the history of such organization, but rather to point out the fundamental doctrines taught by Mormonism."

He then charges: "The basic and fundamental teachings of Mormonism are not found in the Book of Mormon or the 'Articles of Faith,' and here is where the real deception is practiced. Few people, generally speaking, including Mormons, have actually read the more doctrinal works such as the Journal of Discourses and Doctrine and Covenants which contain the 'revelations' of the church's many presidents, or the many sermons and explanations and interpretations of their so-called apostles and priests."

Then follows this: "The following quotations set forth the teachings of the Mormon religion on seven important doctrines. The quotations are from their own recognized authorities."

Here are the doctrines dealt with: Many gods. Citing Catechism, page 13; Journal of Discourses; The Seer by Pratt. Adam-god doctrine. Citing Brigham Young in Millennial Star; Truth (shades of Joseph Musser!); and Journal of Discourses.

Jesus the son of Adam, not by Holy Spirit. Citing O. Hyde in Journal of Discourses; Truth.

Polygamy. Citing The Seer; the Mormon Doctrine and Covenants, Section 132; R. C. Evans' Forty Years, etc. But quoting Jacob 2: 23-28 (Utah Book of Mormon) as being contra.

Two priesthoods. Citing Doctrine and Covenants.

Tithing. Citing Doctrine and Covenants.

The Bible not supported by the Book of Mormon. Citing Orson Pratt in Divine Authority of the Book of Mormon; Apostles John W. Taylor and W. M. Merrill; Wilford Woodruff, Brigham Young, Journal of Discourses.

It is obvious to all of our members who are at all informed that Latter Day Saintism, like old dog Tray, has been found in bad company—from a religious standpoint—and we who feel we have preserved Latter Day Saintism inviolate, have been "let in for" a lot of adverse criticisms and abuse which we do not deserve.

Shall we despair? No. There's no place to stop.

They and Their Children

"Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion." Joseph Smith in Doctrine and Covenants, January 19, 1841.

The foregoing statement in Section 107 of the Doctrine and Covenants comes to mind when we note an article in the Deseret News, official paper of the Mormon Church, for June 13, 1951, in which members are told that on June 11, 1951, one hundred five years after the "Saints of Nauvoo commenced crossing the Mississippi River for the purpose of moving West," the "church"—meaning the Mormon Church—has "turned its face east again toward Nauvoo and returned officially by the opening of a modest bureau of information on the northwest corner of the Nauvoo Temple Block."

The article then adds, "With the establishment of missionary guides in Nauvoo, the church [meaning, of course, the Mormons] will now be afforded the opportunity of telling the true story of the Prophet Joseph," et cetera. (Italics ours.)

As a true Latter Day Saint, I welcome the idea that the truth will at last be told by Mormons about the prophet; but when they represent him as a deceiver and hypocrite and criminal, as they do in effect when they claim he was a polygamist and was responsible for that alleged revelation on plural marriage, camouflaged as the "eternity of the marriage covenant," we are going to continue to defend him against such misrepresentations of the facts, whether made by their guides at Nauvoo or by others.

What phase of pride of leadership is nourished by them when they keep alive stories about Joseph Smith that to the average person but condemns him as a violator of law!

Official

From the Presiding Bishopric

We have received from Presiding Bishop G. L. DeLapp the following report of finances for the period of January 1 to August 1, which is very encouraging. We commend this report to all our members for a careful reading, and call special attention to Bishop DeLapp's reference to the forthcoming Auditorium Fund-Raising Campaign. This has been watched with interest and we are sure it will now be met with a generous response.

Financial Report

We are pleased to submit the following information on General Church income for 1951, as compared with 1950, for the months of January through July:

	1950	1951	Gain	%
January	$155,693.65	$162,756.17	$ 7,062.52	4.54
February	105,508.28	128,535.69	23,027.41	21.82
March	97,444.73	106,087.72	8,642.99	8.87
April	99,498.12	109,852.07	10,353.95	10.41
May	77,713.41	95,549.08	17,835.67	22.95
June	75,376.25	88,935.06	13,558.81	17.98
July	79,447.04	87,926.42	8,479.38	10.67
Total	$690,681.48	$779,642.21	$88,960.73	12.88

The above figures include income from Missions Abroad in the amount of $16,541.62.

As we approach the close of another year, we are reminded that it is just a few more months until the church convenes for a General Conference—a Conference which will undoubtedly be another important mile-post in the progress of the church toward its great goal, Zion. It is highly important that these closing months of the year be used to strengthen the position of the church financially to enable more definite action by the Conference to the attainment of the goals which mean so much to every thinking, devoted member of the church.

In the last couple of years the church has made progress in many ways. Houses of worship have been under construction throughout the entire church, and because of this and other needs of local character, the General Church, while consistently emphasizing the need for compliance with the law of tithes and offerings, has not placed great pressure upon its membership for funds for special purposes. Perhaps greater sums of money could have been raised in some areas, but it is our feeling that despite increased costs of building construction, increased taxation, and increased living costs, our sustained emphasis of compliance with the law has brought good results during that period of time, without placing undue burden on the membership.

The figures which we are submitting herewith covering the income for a seven-month period is evidence of this fact, for they show an increase of $88,960.73 over the same seven-month period for the year 1950, or an increase of 12.88%. It is to be noted, however, that this increase of income has also been largely offset by an almost equal increase in the cost of operation. Since the Conference of 1950, fifteen men have been added to our full-time appointment list. This, of course, has increased our Family Allowance Budget; and in addition to this, because of inflationary trends, family allowances, elders' expenses, departmental and institutional operations have also been more costly.

We wish to point out at this time that the net gains which we have experienced in recent years are now not adequate to cover the additional needs that must be met if our church is to continue its march of progress. We are, therefore, asking the membership of the church to consider carefully the needs of the church in these closing months of 1951 and to look forward in anticipation to continued progress in the Conference year of 1952 and the years immediately following. The closing months of this year offer opportunity to every individual to plan for or to complete his stewardship accounting and to get his affairs in line to make his maximum contribution to the church.

Specific needs in addition to our regular budgetary requirements are funds for the Auditorium and for additions to the Revolving Fund for Houses of Worship. A definite program for the raising of funds for the Auditorium will be announced in an early issue of the "Herald." We are suggesting that this is a notice of need for preparation and consideration of each member's responsibility to the total program of the church and to the attainment of specific goals.

We are glad that we can report good progress having been made, while at the same time calling attention to the work yet to be done.

Respectfully submitted,

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

White Masque Play Contest

Have you started writing your one-act play for our contest? We hope that you have, as we are interested in getting some good one-act plays that will be adaptable for Zion's League drama contest for church women's groups, et cetera. These should be on various phases of our own church beliefs and history.

In case you have misplaced your Herald of August 20, which carried the rules governing the contest, here they are again:

1. The contest is church-wide.
2. It is a one-act play-writing contest.

Emotional Problems of Childhood

By J. E. Andes, M.D.

Part II: Discipline, Overindulgence, and Frustration

IN A PREVIOUS ARTICLE we attempted to discuss the absolute need on the part of the child for genuine love, particularly from the parents, and the need for security and a feeling of importance. We also considered at some length the almost universal tendency for some rejection of children by their parents, pointing out that true, unselfish love was the only factor that would prevent this rejection. We now turn to other topics important in a child's emotional status, although all such factors are closely interrelated and a discussion of one leads to reference to the others, if not some actual repetition of ideas.

The Problem of Rejection

Discipline can be defined in many ways and has a variety of meanings. As far as the child-parent relationship is concerned, it refers to the education and training whereby a child is made subject to authority (parents and others), without losing his own personality traits and initiative. It might also be defined as the habit of obedience. In a broad sense the term would also include the methods of correction, whereby obedience is taught or enforced. Discipline can be either good or bad; a child can be taught to steal or to do good deeds: which road it travels is largely the result of the parent's choice of training. It is for this reason that we are taught to "Bring up a child in the way he should go. . . ." Or, in other words, form a habit of obedience to God and others in authority.

Certain elements are a necessary part of discipline. In the first place, love must always be the fundamental basis of good discipline. When love commands, they who are loved obey. And unless love is present the superstructure of training assumes an impersonal nature, actually becoming more mechanical than human. Discipline without love may be better than no training; however, the same goal is never reached or even approached.

Discipline should begin very early in life. Actually it should never begin, but should co-exist with the child's birth. This does not mean rigid feeding schedules or lack of attention. It does mean the gradual enforcement of rules known to be best for the child's well-being. With plenty of unselfish love, the child accepts these limitations. Discipline does not mean inattention. Within reasonable limits there is no restriction to the number of times a child is rocked to sleep, sung to, held in the parent's arms, or any other kind of personal attention. It does not mean that a rigid feeding schedule necessarily should be adhered to. I have had mothers call me and ask what to do, as the baby was hungry and his bottle was not due for ten minutes! This is not discipline; it is stupidity and so are most other rigid empirical, man-made rules.

Fair Discipline

In teaching discipline, the training is best brought about by request and not by demand. If a parent's requests are sensible and fair, the child will comply with a minimum of objection. But an overbearing demand, particularly if unreasonable, will lead to obedience only through fear of punishment. The parent who is so absolute in his rule or so inflexible in his demands that the child is scared into jumping like a frightened animal is not disciplining the child as a human being but as a trained rat. And the child either becomes a spineless individual or throws off the yoke at the earliest possible moment, often with all that goes along with it. The parent who has a well-disciplined child is one who can carry out the program (most of the time at least) with calm, simple requests that such be done, with appropriate punishment in private when the reasonable demands are not met.

False threats are an impossible part of any attempt at discipline. A parent's threats to "beat your ears off," to "skin you alive," or "beat you to a pulp," soon lose all their significance to the child and are useless talk on the part of the parent—also, and more important, are threats of punishment not enforced. The child soon begins to realize that dad and mother are liars, and they do not speak the truth; furthermore he tends to carry this feeling of distrust toward everybody in authority as a result. All of this leads to a lack of faith. And then there is the parent who says, "Now, John," and does nothing more. This, too, is stupid. If nothing is to be done about the child's behavior, why notice it at all?

PARENTS' "rules and regulations"—the things they require of their children—must be just and fair. It does not take a very old child to recognize an unreasonable demand. And the child justifiably resents it since he can do nothing about it. Any command should be explained if there is reason to do so. It must be remembered that the child is another person and has his own rights and likes. Parents should reason out all requests beforehand if possible, to see if they are reasonable; when wrong, they ought to admit it. If they request something unfair, and the child points out that it is so, they should not be pig-headed and stand their ground to "save face." Actually, they lose face if they do. Finally if a child thinks of something that he wants to do, parents should not say, "No," because they didn't think of it first. This is a very common mistake made by many mothers and fathers.

Consistency in Attitude

Parents' attitude should be consistent from day to day. How can a child derive any standard of right and wrong, or learn the value of discipline, when parents reverse their decisions with each change in their moods? Inconsistency not only deprives the child of discipline, but also makes him learn to wait to ask for privileges until the parent is in the right mood. In other words, it makes a politician or an opportunist out of the child at a very immature, impressionistic age. Another type of inconsistency is for parents to say, "Yes," or, "No," to save trouble, merely because they are too busy to give the child proper attention. And then they wonder why their "no" is disregarded by the child.

Finally, a parent's own behavior must be in keeping with that demanded of the children. Can a child be expected to be truthful when mother sends it to the door to tell an unwanted caller that she isn't home? Or when mother deliberately deceives somebody or breaks any one of the other fundamental commandments? Children cannot derive much value from a form of discipline which requires them to do other than what their parents do—which forbids them to use tobacco, get drunk, or swear when dad or mother regards such as acceptable for themselves. Obviously, there are things that adults need that are not for children—but not things that are fundamentally wrong! If a child's discipline does not develop a sense of right and wrong, it has failed in building a healthy, emotional pattern, to say the least.

Enforcing Discipline

I have said little and will say but little more concerning how discipline can be enforced. Such is not within the scope of this thesis. Certainly punishment should be just and deserved. The earlier it is started in life the less it will be needed. Certainly corporal punishment should be reserved for the early years of life and should not be given in anger. All punishment, regardless of how well-deserved, should be administered as soon as possible after the offense has been committed. Proper punitive measures do not keep a child from loving his parents; in fact he loves them more. A child taught to obey his parents honors and respects them, and such a respect is necessary if he is to learn to respect those in authority later in life.

There is a good reason why we are commanded to "bring up a child in the way he should go. . . ." It is criminal to deprive children of this asset. They must learn it sometime; they will learn it sometime; and a parent is the only one who has a chance to teach it at the proper age. A properly disciplined child is respected by parents, siblings, friends, and teachers, and such respect is invaluable in building a normal emotional background.

The Problem of Overindulgence

We have mentioned overindulgence in connection with rejection, and some repetition will be necessary here, as these two things often go hand in hand. Overindulgence is a common thing today, and it seems to be increasing in degree. Some of this increase is to be found in the increase of leisure time and amount of money available to purchase goods. Smaller families also make parents devote more of everything to each sibling. However, in spite of the many ramifications as to the causation, overindulgence may be fairly well summed up under three headings: (a) selfish possession, (b) a substitute for rejection, and (c) a fear of being selfish and not doing enough for the child. Since there are no perfect parents, it is difficult to conceive of anyone who is not overindulgent at times. In fact, some indulgence is probably best, as we are all selfish and find it difficult to know when we are really doing the right thing for our children.

1. Probably the most obvious cases of overindulgence are those in which parents are the selfish, possessive (doting?) type. Such is commonly observed with the divorced or widowed parent (chiefly women). When there is a divorce, at least some guilt of separation remains, and the woman or man seeks to atone for his or her feelings of guilt by giving additional attention to the children. The widow, because of her great loss and grief, naturally turns to the children for comfort. (And in some divorces this also is true.) In fact, the bereaved woman tends to use the children as an actual substitute for her lost mate, as far as such is possible, and repays them by increased indulgence, attention, and overprotection. There is no deliberation about it, as it comes about naturally. However, this leads to a condition of immaturity in the minds of the children—to children who are overdependent on the parent and find it difficult as they grow older to adjust to a life that does not include the parent.

In this category may come the woman who has been barren and a child appears only after years of waiting and longing. Or the woman who loses several babies before one finally lives. The fear of losing easily leads to overprotection. And the danger of overprotection is most obvious when the child becomes teen age. The parent or parents first insist on picking the child's friends; later friends of the opposite sex (none of whom even begin to meet "specifications"). This domination, the price the child pays for overindulgence, forms an emotional set-up that tends to be permanently immature. The child may never find a way to grow up. Unconsciously the parents do not want him to grow up mentally, as maturity is usually attended with eventual separation.

2. Overindulgence as a substitute for rejection was mentioned in my first article. It is a natural thing. The career woman, who cannot give her children her time, bestows gifts and favors instead. She gives too many things as a payment for not giving of herself and tries to make up in minutes for hours lost. Actually it is a form of selfishness. Again, the unwanted child may be pampered and overtreated in an effort to compensate for lack of love. In fact, it may be a rather honest effort on the part of the parents. But the child can detect the difference between fawning and loving, and his emotional development proceeds accordingly. The child's subconscious mind is not fooled, as its subsequent behavior and emotional development later prove.

3. The usual case of overprotection is that of parents' wanting to do things for their children. They may be called normal (although I do not know the definition of a truly normal parent). The natural feeling of the parents is to keep the child from the hardships they endured, even though they know that these same vicissitudes shaped their character into what it is. Also, there is a real pleasure in doing things for one's children, and it is difficult to decide just where to stop. Besides, it is a natural impulse to want to defend, protect, and insulate one's children. Parents may wait on a child too much, give him too many gifts, and buy too expensive clothes, but they cannot love him too much. Within reasonable limits, parents cannot rock their children too much, sing them to sleep too often, nor tell them stories too frequently. In short, they cannot give their children too much of their real selves.

How much is too much? Ah, there's the question! Parents need God's wisdom to decide. Christ took the children in his arms and blessed them (while adults waited impatiently about), and this was not overindulgence! In this connection, I'd like to include a story which I read not too long ago.

A woman had two sons: one was a frail, tender, sensitive child who was adopted; the other, a husky, healthy, ruddy child who was her own son. And when a well-meaning friend blurted out in front of the children, "And which is the adopted one?" the mother had the temerity to reply (even though it hurt her terribly) that her own son was the adopted one. She knew the adopted one had gone through too much to be allowed the additional hurt of not belonging. Although she told her own son how she had carefully picked him out of many children, etc., she did not tell him the actual facts until the frail adopted child had passed away many years later. This was not overprotection. This was love of the deepest type. This was a mother who, like Abraham, was willing to sacrifice her own son when such was demanded of her in the interest of decency, justice, and fair play. I would to God there were more like her.

The Problem of Frustration

Frustration is something of which we all have plenty. It is the shock we receive when we suddenly realize we cannot have our own way. The baby cries out violently when mother lays him down. He has been frustrated—and will continue to go through such experiences all his life.

A certain amount of frustration is good and necessary, but too much leads to trouble. In animals, experiments in which the animal is frustrated over a fairly long period of time (such as an electric shock every time it tries to drink) leads to ulcers, inanition, nervousness, and even death. It is not surprising that adults respond to excessive frustration by peptic ulcers, spastic colons, coronary attacks, and nervous breakdowns. Children may respond less dramatically and tend to be the neurotic, whining type or paradoxically, bullish and overextroverted. The severe cases may result in periodic vomiting, anorexia, loss of weight, and similar symptoms. Also, excessive frustration distorts natural thinking processes and probably forms a basis for later abnormal adult response to frustration. All "No, no, no" is like tapping the animal's nose every time it tries to eat. Eventually it quits eating. Any parent will do well to find a substitute for the negative. Every child shall be disciplined and trained, but not at the expense of being brow-beaten and having his spirit broken.

Frustration in Infancy and Early Childhood

There are many mistakes made during this period. The child denied his mother's milk and warmth receives a shock. A rigid four-hour schedule is ridiculous, unscientific, and inhuman. Parents eat when they are hungry. Is a baby different? The child who is punished without knowing why—certainly repeated, continual punishment—is again like the rat in the experiment. And repeated "noes" fall on the child's mind like a drip of water on a rock. Slowly they make their mark on the subconscious pattern.

As the child grows older, other things may warp his emotional pattern. To be treated like a baby, punished in front of friends, not allowed to speak at the table, not allowed to defend himself in the face of parental accusations, continual jawing, and ridicule before others, are among the common frustrations. The old rule, "Children should be seen and not heard," is sometimes overdone. It is an unfortunate child who, like a little deer, stands around with wide open eyes and never dares open his mouth. Such a condition bespeaks a warped emotional pattern; the child will find it difficult to accept maturity. I have always liked the old story about the boy who, when finally allowed to speak at the table, said, "Father, you had a worm on your salad, but it's gone now."

Adolescent Frustration

Later in life, as we previously mentioned, parents may try to chose all

A Greater Graceland

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 28, is Graceland College Day. The slogan which Neal Deaver popularized a number of years ago while he was serving as business manager of the college continues to serve as our rallying cry. A "Greater Graceland" is our hope and ambition for 1951-52. A "Greater Graceland" will continue to beckon us on as long as the youth of the world need intellectual and spiritual guidance. In Graceland the church has a strong right arm eager to be used in the building of the kingdom. The approaching college day invites us to take a fresh look at our college. What has happened during the last year? What are the prospects for the current school year?

Graceland 1951

The Graceland family for 1951 is a husky, lively group. While college enrollment throughout the United States has suffered a sharp drop of from 10 to 20 per cent, Graceland's current student body is almost the same size as last year's. Five hundred fifty students are enrolled, representing nearly forty states, Hawaii, and seven foreign countries. This represents a loss of less than 5 per cent over last year's enrollment. The student body includes approximately two hundred forty women and three hundred ten men. Of these men ninety-five hold the priesthood; several others have been called and will be ordained before college day. The priesthood group includes three elders, six teachers, thirty-seven priests, and forty-nine deacons.

Faculty

Over the years the college faculty has grown steadily, but more important than mere increase in numbers is the stability which comes from continuous tenure on the part of many. The majority of Graceland's faculty members consider their position at Graceland as a growing life stewardship. Of the present faculty, five have served the college for more than twenty years; two have served from fifteen to nineteen years; two have served from ten to fourteen years; twelve have served from five to nine years; eight have served from three to four years; and five are new this year.

As the college has grown in size its administration and organization have become increasingly complex. Matters which several years ago could be decided by just getting a few persons together to talk for a few minutes now involve so many persons that specific officers or committees must be relied upon if the work is to get done. A part of these growing pains is now under study by the board of trustees. Dr. Floyd McDowell, chairman of the board, is spending the current year on the Graceland campus to study some of the areas of co-operation between the college, the board of trustees, and the general church. As a result of his work this year policies are expected to be stated and adopted by the board and the college faculty concerning such matters as retirement, tenure, leave of absence, definition of responsibility and relationships between the college and the General Church. Dr. McDowell has been generous in offering his time and services in the opening weeks of this year in ministry to Graceland students.

Housing

Ever since 1947 when the enrollment of the college almost doubled, Graceland has been building to overcome the housing shortage. A new classroom building, a new service building, and the new Memorial Student Center have met certain space needs. Dormitory space is still at a premium. Girls are housed in three dormitories this year, Walker

By W. S. Gould

Hall, Herald Hall, and North Hall. Men are housed in Baker Hall, Gunsolley Hall, and in numerous homes in Lamoni. It was expected that Gunsolley Hall, the new dormitory for men, would be finished and ready for full occupancy by this fall. However, difficulty in getting delivery of steel, repeated rains during most of the summer, and soaring prices for both material and labor have delayed its construction. At the opening of school men moved into two floors of Gunsolley Hall. The rooms were not finished, but they were comfortable enough that they could be used. Work continues on this building. Before Thanksgiving time it is expected that the third floor will be available for student occupancy. This will leave about ninety men housed in Lamoni homes. Housing conditions this year will be far better than they have been at any time since 1947. By next fall Gunsolley Hall should be completely finished so that all men can be housed in college dormitories. "'Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished."

School of World Fellowship

The gospel of Jesus Christ offers hope to all mankind. No race, nationality, or special group is selected as the exclusive favorite of God. There is a chosen people—chosen to build the kingdom of God and teach his gospel to all mankind. The concept of the universal church has been growing at Graceland, and a universal church must be represented by a universal college.

Students of missions abroad have made a significant contribution to the college for many years. A number of them have gone on to make an even greater contribution to the church and the world after they had accepted the stewardship of youth at Graceland. Frank Edwards, Walter Johnson, George Mesley, George Njeim, Blanche Mesley, George Lewis—these are representative of the youth of other lands who came to Graceland and went out to serve. In recent years others have come whose names may be as familiar a few years hence as those just mentioned. They serve in many fields and in many places. Graceland has a sacred obligation to the youth of other lands who come to her, for they come with high expectations and often at incredible effort and cost.

In order to help worthy students from abroad to attend Graceland, a special World Fellowship Fund has been established from gifts of alumni and friends. As a result of this fund, nine students from other lands are attending Graceland this year. Some of them have worked and saved for years, only to have their savings almost wiped out by devaluation and inflation. Some demonstrate such admirable thrift and frugality that they attend college on a fraction of the money spent by most students. All are grateful for the opportunity extended to them through the World Fellowship Fund. Their contribution to the life of the campus is of genuine significance. Some of them will be ministering in near-by branches on college day. They are sometimes hesitant to accept help, but they offer a great deal in return for the help they receive. Graceland is proud of them and hopes that others like them will be able to come in increasing numbers.

Hispanic Institute

Last spring Graceland sponsored a youth conference on missions abroad, which was held on the campus. The enthusiasm with which this conference was received, and the impetus it gave to Zion's League groups, prompted the college to plan another special conference this year. The 1951 conference studied missions in Australia, England, Germany, Holland, Scandinavia, and the South Seas. The 1952 conference, the Institute on Hispanic American Missions, will explore missionary opportunities in Spanish-speaking American countries. This is a particularly rich field inasmuch as the Book of Mormon has special significance for these peoples. The institute will be organized by the college authorities, and will bring together an able staff of general church personnel, including Paul M. Hanson, F. H. Edwards, Roy Weldon, Wayne Simmons, Leslie DeLapp, and Charles Hield. The tentative date for the institute is February 23-24, 1952.

The Stewardship of Youth

Each year when from five hundred to six hundred young people of the church gather for the opening convocation at Graceland, the men and women of the faculty sense in increasing power the tremendous potential in the dedicated youth of the church. The sense of responsibility in the face of such opportunity is a humbling experience. Never before have young people come to college with such consistent devotion and dedication to the work of Christ. The expectancy revealed in their letters and applications for admission to the college is a challenge which must be met by the entire church. The greater effort, the greater sacrifice, the greater potential for service to the church and the world come from these youth. The world places greater demands on them today than ever before. At the same time their opportunities and prospects are brighter than ever before. So much is expected from them—they cannot be let down.

According to a 1951 survey a college education today costs more than ever before. According to the same survey a college education is more valuable and more necessary today than ever before. In spite of a gloomy world picture, this is a bright day of hope for the youth of the church. Never before has the church been so well prepared for the building of Zion, with such capable administrators, such able professional people, such well-informed members, such widespread support from the members, such sympathetic acceptance by nonmembers, such a large and devoted body of young people, and a growing man power. If there was ever a day when a "Greater Graceland" was needed to provide a special educational ministry to the church, that day is now.

A college education is almost indispensable to the young man or woman who wants to make a significant contribution in the modern world. The added "plus" of a Graceland education is becoming increasingly indispensable to the young Latter Day Saint who wants to make a significant contribution toward the building of Zion. Graceland must never become "just another college." A "Greater Graceland" means far more than better equipment and new buildings. It means a continually improving faculty and student body achieving the goals of a continually prophetic church, using the best methods and equipment which the world has to offer. A "Greater Graceland" is part of a "Greater Church" and a "Greater Zion."

The Persistent Needy

Funds contributed by the members of the church on college day have been used in a variety of ways. For many years these funds were used to provide scholarship loans to worthy students. As the scholarship loan fund became nearly self-sustaining as a result of repayments on former loans, college day offerings were used to assist in such projects as the erection of the Memorial Student Center and the new dormitory for men.

The most obvious need now is the completion of Gunsolley Hall. As soon as this building is completed good living quarters can be provided for a student body the size of this year's. Money on hand will finish the building with two major exceptions. Only half the plastering will be done, and the floors will be bare

The Autobiography of Marcus H. Cook

III. Personal Development

THE GREAT HUMAN NEED

I had several experiences that made me realize, to some extent, the importance of this type of ministry. Being off work for a few days, I made a trip of about fifteen miles to visit some of the scattered Saints. I visited one elderly sister, whose husband was not a member. She lived so far from town that it was impossible for her to attend church except upon rare occasions. She seemed wonderfully encouraged by my visit, and later, at a prayer meeting, she bore testimony that she was greatly strengthened by the visit of the young priest.

I had another outstanding experience with a young orphan boy, who was a member of the church, but was staying with relatives out in the country. I visited the home where he stayed, and after trying to encourage these people to be faithful to the work of the church, I told this young boy of the possibilities of usefulness and the blessings that come to those who serve God and live good, clean lives. He broke down and wept, as he told me that I was the first person who had ever taken an interest in him.

I found people who hungered for sympathy and longed for someone they could have a heart-to-heart talk with. If every priest could be a friend to those who need friendship, the good they could do along this line could not be measured by any human standard. Occasionally I was called on to preach, but my principal work was visiting in the homes.

ORDAINED AN ELDER

I was ordained to the office of elder on November 14, 1892, by O. B. Thomas and N. A. Baker. After this, I preached part of the time at our church in Des Moines, but occasionally I went out to rural school-houses and preached to people there. I have sometimes walked as far as fifteen miles each way, and then worked the following week at my job.

Shortly after my marriage, I had a chance to learn the trade of painting under a Mr. C. Clos, who was a skillful painter and took an interest in me. I worked for him four seasons, and afterward followed the trade during the summer season most of the time until I was placed under General Conference appointment.

WOMAN HEALED AT BAPTISM

I had many experiences that confirmed me in the church work. One outstanding instance concerned a Mrs. Foreman and her daughter who attended church. Mr. Foreman was not a member, but when he died, I was asked to officiate at his funeral. Some of Mrs. Foreman's relatives were members of the church, but she had never joined. After her husband's death, she left town, and a few years later returned to Des Moines. Her health was broken, and it seemed probable she had only a short while to live. One Sunday evening after services Mrs. Foreman came and told me that she wanted to be baptized. I was rather surprised, knowing that she frequently had fainting spells, and she seemed to have a kind of palsy also. I asked her if, in her condition, she had faith enough to go into the water? She replied that she had faith, and that if she died in baptism, she would die doing her duty.

A young man, named Earl Hall, had given his name for baptism, so it was arranged that both were to be baptized the following Sunday. The font was filled, and Brother

Hall, a fine vigorous young man, was baptized first. Mrs. Foreman's daughter didn't think her mother was able to go through it and was sitting in the church weeping. When the ailing woman started down the steps into the water of the font, she turned a deathly color. I told her to take her time, when all at once she seemed to get strength and came on into the water. After being immersed, she ascended the steps with apparent ease. She was healed and within two weeks was able to do her work, including laundry.

Several years later, after I was under church appointment, I came back to take the presidency of Des Moines District. Upon returning from a trip, word awaited me that I was to go to a certain place. The name was unfamiliar to me, but when I reached the place, I found the daughter of Mrs. Foreman. She had married and had told her husband about her mother's healing. They wanted me to tell them the gospel story. I did so and baptized both of them. I had three experiences of people receiving physical healing at the time of their baptism in that font in the little church at Sixteenth and Des Moines Streets. I thank God for such confirmation of the truth of the gospel.

A CASE OF HEALING

During my ministry in Des Moines Branch there were several outstanding cases of healing. One day I was working at home when an elderly sister, whom we called Grandma Manning, was brought to our place. She had fallen into the cellar and was badly bruised. One side of her face was much discolored, and she had not slept the night before because of the pain. My wife called me in and I administered to her. The pain left her, and the bruised places regained their natural color like magic. She lay down and went quietly to sleep. I was very thankful to God for what he did for her.

THE HEALING OF SISTER LILLY

Another outstanding manifestation of God's goodness to his children was the case of Sister Lilly, a faithful Saint, valiant in testimony, and loved by all. She became sick, and I was sent for about midnight. When I was told that she was beginning to bloat, a feeling of dread came over me. I felt that it was my duty to do all I could. When I arrived and saw her, I felt much discouraged, but I knelt by the bedside and began to pray. And suddenly there came into my mind a prophecy given through O. B. Thomas, in which she was told of work she should do that was not yet accomplished; and with it came the assurance that she would live. I arose and administered to her, after which a bed was fixed for me, so I could remain till morning. That night, in a spiritual dream, I heard her testifying how God had healed her. In the morning I again administered to her, but she soon began to get worse. Though it seemed impossible for her to live, I was given the spirit of faith and felt sure she would be spared. The Saints held a prayer meeting for her in the afternoon, but she did not improve. My wife, who was a trained nurse, didn't think she could live. She advised the family to send for Dr. Stoner, a prominent physician and surgeon. He came to see her and said she had appendicitis; nothing but surgery could save her life. He said if she lived through the night, he would do all he could to save her if she could be taken to the hospital. My wife stayed with her that night and told me that after the family retired, Sister Lilly prayed almost constantly.

Sometime in the night, she sat up in bed and said, "It is all gone." My wife thought her appendix had broken and the end was near. She awakened the family, and they all came to her room crying because they were sure she could live only a short time. But Sister Lilly had meant that the pain was all gone, and it soon became evident that she had been miraculously healed. Since then she has testified often of being wonderfully healed, just as I heard her in my dream on the night I was first called to administer to her. The next day the doctor called and said he couldn't understand it; he was sure he had not been mistaken in his diagnosis, but there was nothing wrong with her.

I have witnessed many manifestations of God's power that positively demonstrated he is the same as in ancient times. For this I am thankful.

A blind brother, William White, (a brother of I. N. White), who lived about ten miles out in the country, telephoned for me to come out and administer to their baby. It was snowing, and the only way to get to their place was to walk. I walked through falling snow, and when I reached the house I was very tired. The young baby's head was badly swollen, and the doctor had said she could not live, I administered to the child; then being tired, I went to bed. The child cried continually, and Brother White called me, asking if I would administer to her again. I arose at once and while administering to her, she stopped crying. The swelling disappeared, and the doctor marveled at the result. The last time I saw the child she was a healthy girl about ten years old.

CALLING FORETOLD

I continued my work as a local elder, and in the latter part of 1899 and 1900, I began to feel that I would be called into field work. I was not sure whether it would be as a seventy or as a high priest. During that fall and winter I did night work at a coal mine. I was on duty fourteen hours a day. My job was to pump the water out of the pit and to keep the steam up. If there were no men in the mine after I had pumped the water out, I could bank the fires and get a few hours sleep.

For some time I had been praying for direction, and one night after I had finished pumping, I banked the fire and went to sleep. I had a wonderful dream, so vivid that I hardly know whether it should be called a dream or a vision. I found myself in a vast harvest field that seemed to cover the whole face of the country. There were reapers cutting the grain and binding the bundles as they used to do in the old days of the self-binders. There seemed to be plenty of reapers, but the bundles were scattered over the field. I was seized with a feeling that the bundles must be cared for and found myself shocking up the grain that others had reaped. I felt such an urge to care for the grain that I was working with all my power. My clothes were wet with sweat, but I was happy in the knowledge that the grain was being cared for. Finally my day's work was done and I was unspeakably happy. I seemed to be in a valley in the twilight, and came to a log trough filled with cool water. I was just preparing to dip my hands into the water when Brother Charles Derry, who at that time was president of the quorum of high priests, met me and wrung my hand with such a welcome that it seemed my heart would burst for joy. Then there came to me a message, not audible, but as definitely clear: "Your work will not be out in new fields, but in the office of high priest. Your work will be caring for bundles that others have reaped." I knew where my place would be, but I also knew that when the proper time came the Lord would know where to find me.

The Test of Love

By James C. Daugherty

An address given at a memorial service on August 26 in the First Methodist Church at Osawatomie, Kansas, for Lt. Billy Gene Shoemaker who was killed November 20, 1950, in a plane crash over the English Channel.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.
—John 15: 13.

JESUS REGARDED THE OFFERING up of life for one's friends as the highest expression of love.

Future historians cannot fail to see that all of our ideas of peace, of human dignity, of freedom, of all the values considered universal and basic, have been discarded by a majority of our generation. It will be a great day of thanksgiving when we possess a social order in which the religious ideals of brotherhood and justice shall become the standard of human relationships. Our generation needs to know the meaning of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

Because of the valiancy of the men who fought and died for us, we who are here ask ourselves, "To what purpose have we spent our blood and wealth in these two world wars?" We are now compelled to face the reality of even another war in which many more people may lose their lives. Is it because we have neglected, abandoned, and betrayed those great principles to which we dedicated ourselves for the establishment of peace? Have we broken faith with those who fought and died for freedom and who warned us, "If you break faith with us who die we shall not sleep"?

If we believe what they said we know that these boys do not sleep in peace, and we also know we do not live in peace. Why? Because when the boys won their victories on the battlefield we permitted the forces of hate, injustice, and appeasement to take the victories from them.

Across the world the boys of two world wars have been betrayed. If we allow the forces of selfishness to refashion the world to conform to their image and likeness—if we let hate, injustice, and appeasement guide us during these next crucial years, we shall never live in peace again.

Freedom must be the watchword of the world; it must be foremost in our hearts and minds. People of other countries are looking to us in America for this expression of freedom. Since the first dawn when man stood before his Maker, all men have cherished their freedom, and our civilization must choose this freedom or perish.

BUT WHAT IS THIS FREEDOM? What right do we have to it? Why are we so unhappy unless we are free? In the breast of every human being there is a passion for freedom. This passion does not belong to us because we are Americans, neither is it acquired by education or national environment. We possess these inward feelings because we are made in the image and likeness of God. It is found in all of us, and we possess it not only in this life, but in the life hereafter. Without this image we have no free will or the capacity for liberty. We belong to the human vine, and that vine has its roots in heaven. God is its life and substance, and without God it withers and dies.

It is a proved fact that man has no worth nor meaning apart from the image of God in him. Too many of our young people in this twentieth century think it is not important to know God. However, we know that Bill realized that this was the basis for which he fought and died. He wanted men to remain free that they might do the will of God. What greater cause could any man or woman work and die for?

When our boys go off to war, we should make them aware of what is meant in defending their liberties. They should know the real meaning of freedom. They fight to preserve the image of God in them, in their families, in their countrymen, and make it safe for unborn generations yet to come. To wage war for anything less—for economic or political reasons—is criminal and should be dealt with as such. Edmund Buck once said, "The blood of man should never be shed but to redeem the blood of man." Man is more than a biological organism; he is eternal. He belongs to God and must some day return to him. Only on this premise we can have lasting peace.

PEACE ON THIS LEVEL is more than the absence of war. In the words of Conrad N. Hilton, "Peace is tranquility of order; it is security, liberty, and religious, political, and economic freedom."

Peace permits man to travel the high seas without hindrance; it permits all people to choose the form of government under which they shall live; it permits all nations to dwell in safety within their own boundaries, it is abandonment of force and aggression, it is life with honor; it is living the kingdom life on earth as the angels live it in heaven.

It is for this kind of freedom and peace that men are giving their lives today in Korea; for this kind of freedom and peace, we must be ready to fight tomorrow, and we had better achieve it or we shall see the end of civilization.

Historian H. G. Wells says, "The end of everything we call life is close at hand and cannot be evaded. Our universe is not merely bankrupt; there remains no dividend at all, it is not simply liquidated; it is going clear out of existence." However, he does suggest there is a way out—we must seek a new way of life, for it is impossible for us to save civilization the way we are headed.

Our hope for peace and freedom thus finally rests upon a staunch faith in a wise and good God. We trust God to give us food, light, air, and friends, and to meet our physical needs. Can we not trust him to give us life that shall conquer death and selfish desires of war-loving men?

IF THE TEACHINGS of Jesus Christ are trustworthy—and I believe they are—then God's purposes shall not be frustrated. Even war and death cannot destroy the plan of the Almighty. He has promised us that in the end his plan shall triumph. We believe that in his kind of world life is greater than death; souls are immortal. God lives, and if we become like him, we are compelled to believe that we cannot drift beyond his love and care.

In the words of Congressman Gilbert:

There are two consoling thoughts which are of special significance in the material universe around and about us. One is the evident fact that there is but one Architect in creation—planets, stars, and constellations have but one builder. The other fact is that no substance can be destroyed and lost. Changes in form and combination of elements may occur, but everything is sacredly preserved. May we not, therefore, by analogy, conclude that spiritual things which are higher than those which are material are also preserved? I believe that

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Question:

If your church is really the church of Christ, why do some fall away?

Michigan

J.R.G.

Answer:

It is not due to the standard of truth and righteousness, for the higher the standard the more likely men are to fail. History is filled with evidences of human failure under the law of God, and not infrequently a whole nation or church has departed from the Lord's rule. It is human nature to follow the path of least resistance, and unless men fight to attain and maintain the higher standards of life they are liable to fail.

Question:

Are we living in the last days?

Missouri

E.E.J.

Answer:

A review of the many prophecies touching upon the events of the last days leaves no doubt that we are now in that period, many events having been fulfilled, some being in process, and others showing signs of approach. The restoration of the gospel and church is an outstanding example. The revelations to the church contain many references to this fact that we are in the "latter days," or the "last days." In 1830 the Lord said, "The day is soon at hand when the earth is ripe; and all the proud, and they that do wickedly, shall be as stubble," also that the time of the gathering of his people was near (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2). In the world, events are moving rapidly toward a fulfillment of many prophecies which indicate the approach of the world's climax. In the church the preparations being made for Zion are for the coming of the Lord, though we must not make the mistake so many have made in the past of thinking that all the events of this last dispensation will be consummated within a few years. A dispensation may cover many years.

Question:

If I left my church to join yours would I not be letting God down?

Missouri

E.E.J.

Answer:

If to come into a greater light which God offers, into the more abundant truth which he gives, into the larger field of opportunity and usefulness which he opens, into the enjoyment of superior spiritual blessings which he supplies—if these be letting God down—then we might answer, "Yes"!

In and through the church and gospel which the Lord has restored in these last days the whole world is offered the greatest moral and spiritual uplift out of the lingering shadows of the Dark Ages, making possible advanced conditions of knowledge, liberty, and peace beyond what the world has before known. He invites all men to come to it, giving promise of the greater blessings to follow and of eternal life in the world to come.

And even so I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people and for the gentiles to seek it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me. Wherefore come ye unto it.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 2.

No man lets God down by coming closer to him, by rising to a higher plane of life, to a higher standard of righteousness.

Question:

I am a Latter Day Saint keeping company with a good boy who does not belong to our church and does not see our way of belief. If I marry him would it be proper for the sake of peace for me to unite with his church and retain membership in my own?

Michigan

J.R.G.

Answer:

Marriage generally requires compromises and a readjustment of one's habits and customs, but there are bounds and limitations beyond which one should not go. Neither party to a marriage covenant has the moral right to require the other to disannul the most solemn and sacred covenant made with God for life and eternity, which does not in any way hinder the fulfillment of the marriage vows. Neither is it requisite that one should lightly surrender such a covenant at the request of the other to accept even tentatively what in his heart he does not indorse. Such a policy could only lower the esteem in which each held the other. A policy of firmly adhering to the gospel covenant would in the long run build up a greater esteem and respect, thus strengthening the home ties. Where differences exist they should be considered with charity and under no circumstances be allowed to lead to contention. Any weakness shown toward one's faith and loyalty to Christ and the covenant made with him is liable to become fatal to that covenant.

In all such situations relating to marriage, no two are alike, and no blanket rule can be laid down for all. Counsel should be sought of the local pastor.

Question:

Are the Saints to be caught up to be with Christ in the air at his coming so that they will not be on the earth during the millennium?

Michigan

J.R.G.

Answer:

There is but a single reference in all Scripture to the Saints being caught up into the air, and Paul says they will be caught up "to meet him." If friends come to visit us at our home and we go to meet them, we would not remain at the place of meeting, but all return together to the home. Scriptural evidences are abundant and clear that Christ will reign upon the earth over his people during the millennium, Christ is to "come to Zion." "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." "Every one that is left of all the nations . . . shall even go up from year to year to worship the King." "The Lord shall be King over all the earth." The righteous are to inherit the earth.

the child's playmates. The lucky one discovers a "Huckleberry Finn," but some are not so fortunate. As sexual maturity appears, parents too often try to chose the friends of the opposite sex. It is true that they usually could do a better job, but mating or erotic love just does not work that way. If parents have trained a child wisely, usually he himself will try unconsciously to respect the parents' wishes as far as possible as he realizes that his parents' wisdom is better.

The continual attempt to completely think for the child (as we have stated several times) leads to an infantile mind with little ambition or initiative. When ears are battered down too often, they eventually droop. All this leads to the "mother's boy," an indecisive, neurotic fellow, who lets either his mother-in-law, his mother, his wife, or someone else dominate him—or to the girl who goes home to mamma at the drop of a hat. Maternal or paternal domination (whether blood relation or in-laws) are actually the mere end-result of an emotional pattern begun years before.

Unfortunately, these frustrated characters do not always get off so easy. Frustration by continued domination leads to peptic ulcer, dyspepsia, nervous breakdowns, and broken homes in too many instances. When a child is not allowed to think for himself, his "unused" mind as an adult resorts to a neurosis or a psychosis when adult roles are forced upon it.

A last point should be entered here. (This concerns the parents who insist on deciding their children's vocations in life.) Many a child's life has been wrecked by forced parental decision. A physician decides his son shall likewise serve humanity, even though the boy wants to be a plumber. Usually that man, who would have been a good plumber, turns out to be a poor physician, or else flunks entirely and starts anew with a shattered philosophy. And the daughter who wants and needs marriage and a home of her own but is virtually forced by her parents into studying music, law, medicine, or what-have-you in order to satisfy their pride, has a nervous breakdown. As the twig is bent, so shall the tree grow.

Conclusion

I have written this mostly to parents or parents-to-be. We know that children are largely what their parents make them. We never have problem children: only problem parents. Parents may well be judged by their children's behavior, as an observation of the latter is an accurate index of the parents' true nature. A child is usually its parents' image in the mirror, whether they know it or not.

In regard to the topics discussed, I would merely like to say that we need wisdom and lots of it. We should be on our knees daily asking for help. We should each day do the best we can and not worry about the previous one. Discipline should not be denied any child. It is a priceless possession, but it should be taught by a routine that is built on reason and love. Parents would do well never to give their child more than a neighbor should give hers. If they try "to break" their child's will—it stays broken. They should never say, "No," if there is a better way. It is best to lead and guide; not demand, bully, cower, frustrate, encircle, and overawe. Parents should admit their mistakes. If they are a good example, the rest may come simply, for their actions will be imitated. Especially it should be remembered that during the first few years of a child's life the parents are gods, and the closer their behavior is to that of the Master, the easier for the child to accept God for what he really is.

concrete instead of asphalt tile as was planned. Therefore, every contribution of two dollars on college day will put a square yard of plaster on the wall. Every thirty-dollar contribution will plaster one wall in a dormitory room. And every gift of a hundred dollars will finish the plastering in a room as the ceiling and outside wall are already surfaced. Gunsolley Hall is a beautiful building in which three hundred thousand dollars have already been invested. Its finished beauty waits for the college day offering to cover its rough walls and concrete floor. There will never be a day when the college will not have needs if it is to serve the church as it should. But this particular project, which represents the most pressing need for a number of years, is almost finished. The end is in sight. Next year Graceland will lift its sights to a different goal in the eternal project of kingdom-building.

nothing in the universe of God is lost. Our intellectual achievements, our mental attainments, our smiles, and tears, our happiness and sorrows, our affections and hatreds are all preserved, and will be used in ascertaining our proper places when the balance sheet is made out for our starting point on the other shore. I believe that every ray of light, every emotion, and every good thing is preserved and used.

Let us pay tribute to this, our brother and friend, with the immortal lines of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address:

The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that this nation—under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

Testimony Is the Life Blood

By G. W. Stewart

A DEBATABLE ISSUE

The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors.

FIFTY YEARS AGO I joined the church. Before doing so I studied its principles and became a firm believer in them. I can truthfully say that the promise of the Master, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself," was fulfilled in my life.

Five years earlier I was baptized by immersion into the Baptist church, and as I lived in a small mining town, my second baptism by immersion into the Reorganized Latter Day Saint church soon became widely known, and I was severely criticized and ridiculed. But I was not perturbed for I felt that I was protected by my new shield and breastplate and could rest in a sense of security that I had never before experienced.

In reality I had just begun to live; even though the church building was not impressive and the membership was numerically small, to me it was the most important thing on earth.

When I first joined the church I was thrilled with the Communion service coupled with the prayer and testimony meetings held on the first day of the week. I could see they were a pattern of the New Testament church and the church of Book of Mormon times, when the saints spoke to one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, and would speak to one another concerning the welfare of their souls.

Early in the days of the Reorganization the Communion services were held less frequently and later still, because of the increased attendance, the prayer and testimony part of the service was omitted. The result was that fewer church members availed themselves of attending any prayer and testimony services at all. Today the number of church members who appreciate them is far below what it should be.

The Restoration Movement has placed upon each member the responsibility to make his individual approach to God.

And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High . . . remember that on this, the Lord's day [the first day of the week, not month], thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments*, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren and before the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2.

Observe Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. William A. White celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on July 29 by holding open house at their home. Both Mr. and Mrs. White moved to Oklahoma territory with their parents in December, 1889, homesteading northeast of El Reno.

Approximately one hundred eighty friends came to call during the four-hour reception. Hosts for the occasion were the children of Mr. and Mrs. White: Mrs. Gladys Johnson and Charles White of El Reno; Mrs. K. G. Sinclair of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Mrs. J. W. Kaster of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Mrs. LaVern Howard of Duncan, Oklahoma; and Mrs. Bob Warnberg of Miami, Oklahoma. All are members of the Reorganized Church.

There are seven sacraments used in the church.—Editor*

Call your solemn assemblies, . . . organize yourselves, . . . establish a house . . . of prayer, . . . of fasting, . . . of faith, . . . of learning, . . . of glory, . . . of order [the sum total being a house of God]; that your incomings, . . . your outgoings, . . . your salutations may be in the name of the Lord.—Ibid., 85: 36.

Quite early in the days of the Reorganization (1887) contention arose about the time of administering the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and the people were told that either on the Lord's day of every week or on the first Lord's day of every month would be acceptable. "It is expedient that the bread and wine should be administered in the early part of the meeting."

Of all the meetings that this church provides for its membership, the Communion service, including a period for prayer and testimony, had presented the most opportune time for the manifestation of the gifts of the Spirit.

I do not deny that we may fulfill our mission in relation to spirituality even though we do separate the two types of meetings, but when I see that the prayer and testimony service is being neglected by our people, I'm sure it must grieve the Lord that many no longer individually express their loyalty to the covenant they made at baptism.

In times of acute need, when a special prayer service is called, an unusually large number attend. The recording angel is undoubtedly there, but among other things he must surely record the fact that in the days of their prosperity many were absent.

I submit that the spirit of testimony is the life blood of the church, and if it is lacking the church will die.

Bunch of Wichita Falls, Texas, delivered a sermon to the group August 26, Elder Stuart Wight of Oklahoma City meets with the Saints on Communion Sunday. Brother Wight baptized Kenneth Pate, son of Mrs. Virginia Pate on September 2. Brother Wight was also at the service of September 9. During the church school worship service, Stephanie Carol, daughter of Lt. and Mrs. Lansing Lysinger, was blessed by Brother Wight. Following church school a business meeting was held and the following officers were elected: Seth Osborn, pastor; Alan Stiles, church school director; Mrs. Lansing Lysinger, secretary-treasurer; Marvin Lindmark, solicitor; and Mrs. Seth Osborn, women's leader.—Reported by BETTE LINDMARK

BERRYDALE, FLORIDA.—Ammon Calhoun held a series of meetings during the early part of August. The building which holds 300 could not accommodate the crowd, and Brother Ben Jernigan of Brewton, Alabama, installed a speaker system so that meetings could be held on the church lawn. Brother Gwynn Odom, district supervisor of music, sang for a service. At the close of the series, sixteen candidates were baptized.—Reported by S. M. MCCALL

DE KALB, TEXAS.—Elder James E. Renfro held a series from August 23 to September 2. An average attendance of eighty-eight was had and twenty-six were nonmember friends. Elder T. B. Sharp came on August 27 and stayed during the concluding meetings. Five young people were baptized at the close of the series.

The following were ordained: Frank Owens, priest; Emmitt McDonald, teacher; James Arvil Wilson, teacher, and Edgar Wilson, deacon. Brothers McDonald and Owens are from Texarkana and the Wilson brothers are from De Kalb. The climax of the series was the Communion service, where the new members participated. Elder R. L. Morrison from Rodessa, Louisiana, and Elder B. F. Pollard visited August 2 and assisted in the services.—Reported by WILMA FRANCES NICKS

STANTON, TEXAS.—Twenty-nine Saints attended the reunion at Wilburton, Oklahoma. Randall Lynn, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Murray Smallwood of Colorado City, Texas, was blessed by Elder W. F. Page. Mrs. Smallwood is the former Joyce Imogene Carpenter of Lamesa, Texas.

Bob and Tina Reagan of Big Spring, Texas, were baptized at DeKalb, Texas, in May by Elder T. B. Sharp and confirmed by Elders Sharp and Frank Pollard. Brother and Sister Reagan have adopted a baby boy. He was blessed by Elder Douglas Church on September 9.

Mrs. Mignon Peacock, Big Spring, Texas, and Vivian Saunders, Stanton, Texas, were baptized at Stanton by Mrs. Saunders' brother, Priest Carl Leonard, Jr. Mrs. Saunders was confirmed at the evening service by Elder Church. Mrs. Peacock was confirmed June 3, by Elder Church, assisted by W. F. Page. Elder Iral Parker of Odessa gave the sermon.

Bishop Howard Miller visited Stanton, May 24, attending the high school graduation of Earl and Gearld Koonce, Fred Church and Sarah Standefer. He spoke at the church following the graduation. He visited with members of the group the next morning in the home of the pastor before leaving for Eunice, New Mexico.

Billy Ray Hamm completed his second year at Texas Technological College, Lubbock, Texas, and has enlisted in the Navy. Earl and Gearld Koonce are enrolled in college at Waco, Texas. Wayne Church is working at Odessa and helping with services there.

Elder W. F. Page has driven here from Andrews, Texas, a number of times to minister to the group and preached several sermons. He and his spray-painting company gave their services in painting the church.

Elder W. R. Standifer of Dallas, Texas, who recently lost his wife spent several days with the Stanton Saints, some of whom he baptized. Elder Standifer, though eighty-two years of age, gave two informal lectures at the church.

Attendance for evening services includes visitors from Colorado City, Snyder, Big Spring, Lamesa, Andrews, Odessa, and Brownfield, Texas; and Hobbs, New Mexico.

Two sermons have been preached by Melvin Thomas Hursh, ordained a teacher at the Olton conference, and his third sermon was given at Odessa June 10.—Reported by VIVIAN SAUNDERS

The Saints in Middletown are progressing in the missionary endeavor. The women of the branch are members of the local Council of Church Women, and are assisting with the council's project for the year—making bandages, dresses, and shirts for the leper colonies.

The report of the building committee is that by the end of the year, the building fund goal of $2,000 for one year will be realized.

Nine young people attended the youth camp in Pennsylvania.—Reported by ROBERTA TREBER

INMAN, NEBRASKA.—The following officers were elected: Elder Joseph Coon, branch president; Helen Coon, secretary; Vera Morsbach, treasurer and women's leader; Larry Sawyer, church school director; Faye Irene Ballantyne and Ila June Coon, music; Sadie Conger, chorister; Loretta Jacox, publicity; Jimmie Sawyer, librarian. The Zion's League officers for the coming year are Larry Sawyer, president; Faye Irene Ballantyne, vice-president; Ila June Coon, secretary and treasurer; Vera Morsbach, Elsie Ballantyne, and Brother Coon, sponsors. On September 12, the women's department met with Vera Morsbach for an all-day meeting and a covered dish luncheon with ten people present. The group is studying The Bible in Everyday Living. The district president, Brother Harold Reid has helped in the instruction.—Reported by R. JACOX

TULSA, OKLAHOMA.—C. F. O'Neil, young people's supervisor, has organized a junior Zion's League. This is the first time such an organization has been attempted in Tulsa. Elder Allen Kelly will be the leader of the group. At the organization meeting, C. R. Auxier, Jr., was elected president of the group and Helen Jane Vanwy, secretary-treasurer.—Reported by CLARENCE R. AUXIER

ODESSA, TEXAS.—The Stanton group united with the Odessa congregation for an all-day meeting June 17. The attendance was a record of 106. The following were baptized: Mrs. Leo Males, James Wilbur Hobbs, Mrs. Wayne Bowers, and Reggy Church. Frankie Louis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank McMillian of Wink, Texas; and Martha Gale, Dwight Maynard, and Derias Wayne, children of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Bowers of Snyder, Texas, were blessed. Derias Wayne Bowers, Sr., was ordained to the office of priest.

W. I. Sears of Livingston, Texas, visited the branch for one week. Sister Homer Speers and family, originally from Kansas City, Kansas, are now members of the Odessa group. Thirty-five members attended the reunion at Wilburton, Oklahoma. Brother Bill Shuster is attending services now after a long period of illness.

Officers were elected for the group on September 20.—Reported by EDNA BAKER

CHADRON, NEBRASKA.—A business meeting was held at the home of Brother Gordon A. Harshman on September 9. True Harshman was elected church school director with Jim Palmer assisting. Other officers are Minnie Lichte, secretary; Wayne Coburn, treasurer; Arline McDaniels, music director; Florence Coburn, publicity manager; Thomas Palmer and Ruby Gusner, teachers.—Reported by FLORENCE COBURN

SAULT STE MARIE, ONTARIO.—Michael Frederick, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Edwards, was blessed by G. A. Edwards on July 15.

The church school held the annual picnic at Bellevue Park with approximately seventy-five present. On September 9, Brother H. Doty from Traverse City was the guest speaker.

The annual business meeting was held September 4. Officers elected are G. A. Edwards, pastor; Alvin Nolt, associate pastor;

W. A. Bushila, solicitor; Fred Miller, church school director; Sister Oris Flood, music director; Winnifred Spencer, secretary; Lloyd Nolt, treasurer; Sister V. Hannah, adult supervisor; Brother R. Robinson, young people's supervisor; Sister Ada Edwards, children's supervisor.—Reported by WINNIFRED SPENCER

DU BOIS, PENNSYLVANIA.—The annual business meeting was held September 15, and the following officers were elected: Elder Thomas Freeland, pastor; Vernon Wilson, church school superintendent; Elsie Shaffer, women's director; James Hilliard, young people's leader; Gladys Hilliard, secretary and recorder; Sarah Nelson, treasurer; Bessie Wilson, press and Herald reporter. The new pastor, Brother Freeland, came from Fayette City, Pennsylvania. For many years the group was without priesthood leadership, but kept together under the direction of Sister Mae Ross and Elder Earl Brennan of Puxsutawney who visited the branch each month. Brother Brennan held a Communion service each month. Guest speakers for the past month have been Elder William Shea of Rochester, New York; District President Henry Winship of Lock Four, Pennsylvania; Elder Don Ross, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Elder J. Winters, Donora, Pennsylvania; and Elder E. Brennan of Puxsutawney, Pennsylvania. David Freeland is attending Graceland.—Reported by BESSIE WILSON

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—A large delegation from the branch attended the youth camp held at Happy Valley July 23-29. Many adult members have spent week ends there during the summer working on the grounds and attending preaching services on Sunday. Mrs. Ida Dungan and Mrs. Gladys Bolton were in charge of the kitchen and dining hall during July and Mrs. Elizabeth Schall in August.

Zion's League cottage meetings are held each Monday evening. The League presented the play, "The Lost Horizon," on three dates in August. The annual adult picnic was held at the home of Elder and Mrs. L. A. MacDonald on August 17.

Susan Grace, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Koski, was blessed at the morning service July 8 by Elders John Gann and Laurence MacDonald. On August 19, Judith Karen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Laudie, was blessed by Elders MacDonald and Schall. Mrs. Laudie is the former Mildred Ensley of the branch.

The annual branch business meeting with election of officers was held August 21. Elder Myron Schall was sustained as pastor, and Elders John Gann and Robert Nephew as his counselors. Other officers elected are Cecil Jacks, director of religious education; Earl Horton, youth leader; Edna Burdick, music director; Mabelle Nephew, director of drama; Cora Bridges, women's leader; Eula Damron, branch secretary; Rose Honeychurch, recorder; Ives Honeychurch, treasurer and solicitor; John Dawson, auditor; Edwin Burdick, Ella Dawson, and James Damron, finance committee; Marjorie Damitz, historian; and Hazel Damron, book steward.

The women's department sponsored a lunch counter at the State Fair again this year. The project has been carried on each year for more than fifteen years and has grown in proportion as the attendance at the fair has increased. Many nonmembers assist in this work.—Reported by LENA SWANEY

ZION BUILDERS' SERMONS

BY ELBERT A. SMITH

Even though these sermons were preached a number of years ago, they still have a freshness and vitality of Brother Elbert's very best speaking and writing years. He takes up a number of the questions that concern young people in relationship to their life and the church, and deals with them effectively especially in relation to the decisions the young people must make. HERALD HOUSE

Out of Zion - the Example

By Bernard Butterworth

LEADERS are ever in great demand. And yet in this area there is always a pronounced scarcity. Is this true perhaps because leadership is a perpetual challenge? Or is it because personal welfare must become subordinate to group welfare?

Young people in the Center Place have been concerned with problems of leadership. Personal testimonies and other evidence point to the fact that youths throughout the church are looking to Zion for leadership and example. It was with this realization that three hundred young people from the various congregations in Independence met in united purpose in a recent week-end retreat to resolve the problems of leadership.

Great leaders are born. Leadership potential is present in the individual because of heredity—a result of a certain combination of genes in the chromosomes. Good leadership to a large extent, however, can be developed by education, environment, and experience.

There are certain attributes of leadership which cause people to follow one man, the absence of which reduces another man of equal intelligence to a lesser role. A leader is a teacher of people, of other leaders, of the rank and file, and consequently must possess these qualities.

He must be absolutely sincere. This is foremost and paramount since insincerity is easily detected and rejected. Here is a point on which many leaders fail. Emerson said, "What you are speaks so loudly that I cannot hear what you say." Leaders who are outstanding preach what they practice. They are sincere both in motive and in desire for service to others. They have a definite goal and an intense desire to reach that goal.

The leader must have a genuine love for people. If he would influence people, he must be interested in them. He must possess a rich, sympathetic understanding of human nature. He must constantly be a student of the psychology of human behavior. He must respect ego. He will recognize that all people are egocentric and are therefore touchy about their self-respect. This he always venerates.

THE LEADER must always strive to improve his personality. Since personality is the outer expression of the inner self, that inner self must be right—philosophically, religiously, and morally. The good leader will inspire others to do higher things, therefore his life will be a personal testimony. The leader should develop all the qualities of a Christian character. He will be friendly and neighborly. He will know how to smile. He must be broad-minded—always ready to consider the radical or weak point of view along with the orthodox or intellectual side of the problem. He must not center his attention on one sex, but equally share in attention to both. He must know how to be firm, and he must not indulge in destructive criticism.

Everyone admires the leader who will listen to all sides of the question. A leader should develop the listener-learner attitude. Emerson said, "Every man in some respect is my superior; I can learn from every man." True education is not achieved by any means from books alone, but by experience with people and situations. To know the minds of people one must know how they think, reason, and form conclusions. A tactful leader will influence those conclusions.

IF YOU WOULD LEAD, you must have enthusiasm. You will keep your charges busy with ideas and suggestions. Your continued support and enthusiasm can be transferred to those who follow you. Your measure as a leader is determined by how many people you keep busy. You will not do everything yourself. You will use and direct everyone under your jurisdiction. People are happy as long as they are working and feeling that they are contributing something to the project. The leader of the Salvation Army years ago discovered this and substituted a band for the pipe organ in his church. Only one person was required to play an organ where as many persons as were available could serve in the band. This participation by many helped strengthen group unity, and there was joy in mutual achievement. The principle stands.

As a leader you must have moral courage and conviction. You must sense your responsibility to the truth. You must stand for something and stand alone if necessary. You must be steadfast to your principles. You must point people to these ideals. You must keep your eyes on Christ and develop those spiritual powers that would lead others to the Master. You will not be scornful of little things, but will integrate those little things into your pattern of work. You will develop faith in yourself and others. You

We Shall Not Fail

THE TEEN-AGE GIRL stood as the last line of the hymn was being sung. "Although I am in a room with only a few people that I know, somehow I feel a spirit of friendliness that I have never known before. You kids in Independence have so much to be thankful for. Sometimes at home it isn't easy to be the kind of person you want to be, but here with the campus for recreation, with activities like the 'New Moon,' with so many young people around you who are working for the same goal, I don't see how anyone could go wrong. If you will just keep ex-will cultivate the habit of success. You must be confident in your own ability, and when you speak you must speak with authority. This must be backed up, of course, with ability and sincerity. You will find joy in seeing the results of your service come back to you in the lives of others you have touched.

THE STRENGTH TO LEAD does not come through study but through active participation. Because of our opportunities we, the young people of Independence, are striving to become better leaders. We see the need—we sense the challenge of leadership. We must think leadership in order to display it properly. We must think, stand, sit, walk, and talk it constantly. Out of Zion can come the example.

Since leaders are in great demand and there is a scarcity in this field, we are challenged to correct this deficiency. Leadership requires an almost perfect man or woman, but the ultimate sacrifice of perfection is well worth the price. Leadership is never terminated. There is no finish point. It requires a daily self-analysis and improvement.

We have the goal and the ideology. We need you to bring others to this knowledge and these visions to fruition.

pressing friendliness and concern for the other young people outside of Independence, I know that together we can build the kingdom."

This is not an unusual testimony. When young people from branches outside the Center Place visit here they often speak these same thoughts. Living in Independence offers many opportunities and privileges, but the young people here are becoming aware that "privilege implies responsibility."

Testimonies like this furnished the incentive for the theme and purpose of the Stake Youth Retreat at Gardner Lake during the Labor Day week end. The Stake-Wide Zion's League Cabinet spent three months in preparation for the retreat. The leaders who directed the activities had spent years in service which gave them the ability to minister to the needs of the young people in the Center Stake.

An apostle once remarked in his sermon that when he was a child he knelt to pray facing Independence. His life was motivated by the teachings of his family and church that God's kingdom would be built on earth, and he looked to the Center Place for leadership. "Strength to Lead and Faith to Follow" was the theme for the retreat—strength to lead as youth of Zion, and faith to follow the commandments of God. This challenges the very best in young people.

WHAT HAPPENED in the lives of the three hundred young people who participated in the retreat will have a far-reaching influence in the church. One League has already begun making plans to contact smaller Leagues in the isolated areas and correspond with them, exchanging ideas. Another League has developed a study course that includes service to foreign missions as well as fundamentals and church doctrine.

The remarkable thing that has happened to the majority of Leaguers in Independence is the desire to "do something about this." Desire, we were told, is the first step to service, for desire leads to faith; faith leads to knowledge; and the three walk hand in hand to broader fields of service. No longer complacent, the young people of Independence have been challenged by the statement, "Anything you want to do, you can do."

The revelation given to the people in 1833 after being driven from Independence and facing persecution was one of encouragement. "Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding my children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances!" There is no question with the young people regarding the position of Independence; there is no doubt in their minds about their responsibility.

Living in the Center Place is a unique situation. It is an "abnormal" condition for so many young people professing a belief in the Zion program to live in the same area. But this condition is such that the young people have become vitally concerned about other Leaguers who look to Independence for leadership.

Young people of Independence have caught the vision of the Church of Today. "Don't ever let anyone call you the Church of Tomorrow," they were instructed. "You are the Church of Today—it's your job to build the kingdom."

New Horizons

Jesus Bids Us Shine

By Marie Gosline

THIS LITTLE STORY is written to show what one group—less than a dozen pairs of hands—accomplished. It is written to encourage other small groups which are striving to build up the kingdom. It is written to prove that God is ever mindful of the few, that he is waiting and ever ready to aid and help those who do his bidding.

It was just about one year ago that Brother Alma Andrews of Berkeley met with us in the apartment home of Mrs. Helen Pierce. Much discussion followed the opening of the meeting as to how the work might be built up in Marin County, California—that small but beautiful county north of San Francisco. Since we had no active priesthood, we decided to organize ourselves into a women's group at once. This we did with Mrs. Roselyn Bussey, who for many years had led the women of San Bernardino and at the same time was vice-president of the council of churches in that city, as president and Mrs. Helen Pierce as vice-president. I was given the job of secretary-treasurer.

As I looked over that small group of women I could not help whispering, "O Lord, we are such a few. Don't expect too much!" But we found as time went on, that he didn't expect too much from any of us—only what we were able to do.

ANY OF THE SEVEN or eight women present that night could have been excused from serving. Each of us had a reasonable excuse. One had three little girls under five years of age and a Catholic husband. Two had a bad heart condition. One had been partially paralyzed since birth. Another worked all day . . . and so on down the list. But we weren't looking for an excuse not to serve; rather we were ready to work, and each of us, like a candle burning in the night, found that as we did our bidding the flame grew brighter and steadier. We found that there must be no shirkers in the army of the Lord—all must be workers. We found, too, that his Spirit was with us waiting to bless and to help.

Our aim was to start a Sunday school, but this called for money, and money was scarce in almost all the households. We had to have money to rent a hall, to buy supplies, to purchase an organ (the only available hall had no piano).

So we started to work. Our first project was selling Christmas cards. At the same time we asked friends and relatives for donations. Soon, thanks to one generous donation, we had enough money for the organ. Then an apron project was started. Friends were asked to donate five yards of material apiece. After the material was collected—some material, and even finished aprons, was sent us by other groups and missions—the cutting and sewing began. Most of the work was done by Mrs. Pierce and Mrs. St. Clair who will soon celebrate her eightieth birthday. Since practically all of the material for the aprons was donated, the sale of them meant clear profit. We asked for other donations—anything was welcome, beginning with that lowliest piece, the flour sack. These we made into attractive tea towels.

IN A FEW SHORT MONTHS we were able to start our Sunday school. But where to have it was a real problem. We finally secured the hall without a piano for five dollars a week. There was a larger hall in the same building with a piano which was rented to another organization for eight dollars a week. After we had met in the small hall just once, but before we had purchased an organ, the manager told us that the organization which rented the larger hall had gone and we were welcome to use both halls for the price of the small one if we so desired, until the larger one was rented again. So we were able to keep our organ money in the bank to be used at a later time for the same purpose.

For the first few months we used paper-back hymnals, but we hoped that some way we might be able to secure some regular song books. Then one of the group—a Brother Salisbury—wrote to some friends in Independence, telling them of our plight and asked for old, discarded books. Imagine the group's surprise when a dozen books arrived—not used ones, but brand new ones! These had been donated by Independence friends.

Besides the sale of Christmas cards and aprons, during the first year that the group has been organized there have been two cake sales, two bazaars, and one rummage sale. This probably seems like "pretty small potatoes" to those in larger branches, but it must be remembered that we are only a few. When a cake sale is held each woman must bake three or four cakes, a little bread, and a few cookies to make the sale a success.

THIS LITTLE STORY is not complete without a word about the husbands. Only two are members of the church; three are Catholics; one is a Baptist; the rest do not belong to any church. While it is said that those who marry outside the church are considered weak in the faith, it must be remembered more character is required to be married to nonmembers than to a member, and still be active. For when one is married to a nonmember she must ever keep herself a shining example. She must "never let her hair down," so to speak. There are times when this is hard to do. When the baby has coughed all night, for instance, or two of the older children have colds, it is raining and her husband comes home late from the office and suggests that he will take the children to his Sunday school just as soon as they are well enough to go, it's pretty hard to remember that she's a Latter Day Saint. Yet blows such as these weld one into a strong character.

And so "Jesus bids us shine" here in Marin County. That our little candles might ever burn steadily, brightly, and happily is our aim. We do not ask anyone to pray that the way will be made easy for us. We ask only that our friends will pray for God to give us the strength to do our tasks each day so that his work might grow.

General Women's Institute

CHURCH LEADERS TO EXTEND WELCOME

President Israel A. Smith, notwithstanding his heavy responsibilities and full schedule of activities, has kindly consented to be present to speak to the women at the opening meeting of the Women's Institute, which will be held in the Laurel Club Dining Room at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, October 8. President Smith has been interested in the Institute from its inception, and the Women's Council has greatly appreciated his inspired leadership and counsel, as well as that of his associates, W. W. Smith and F. Henry Edwards.

Greetings will also be given by Mrs. S. S. Arnson, of the General Department of Women; Charles V. Graham, President of the Center Stake of Zion; and Mrs. G. B. Wilson, Women's Leader of the Center Stake of Zion.

The women of Kansas City Stake will be in charge of the get-acquainted reception, which will follow the messages of greeting.

African Violet Seedlings

By Blanche Neal Shipley

TO MY FAMILY, perhaps one of the most questionable things I have ever done in the realm of flower growing was my purchase of an African violet seed kit last winter. When my husband and children saw the size of the seeds, their opinion was a little less than nothing. My own opinion was slightly less than it should have been, and I confessed readily that if those tiny dustlike particles had the spark of life in them, surely no one could doubt the existence of God.

A carefully outlined chart came with the kit, and I followed it as precisely as possible, planting the seeds in prepared soil in the propagation box, covered it, and set it on the kitchen cabinet to do its work. This was on March 17 and by March 22 something was up. We looked at the plant and came to the conclusion that it was not a violet, although we had never seen a violet seedling, for it was far too spindly. On March 27, ten days after planting, several violets were up, so we pulled that first long-legged plant. The next day several more violets were sprouted.

The chart told how to water, when to remove the lid, and when to transplant the plants to larger space. The last week of May the larger plants, which were yet so tiny that they had to be handled with toothpicks, were transplanted into small baby food cans containing good black dirt from under shrubs where leaves had rotted for several years. Plenty of charcoal or gravel and three nail holes were in the bottom of each can for drainage.

For several weeks I watered them from the top, taking care to keep water off the leaves. Then in the fall I began watering them from the bottom, setting the cans in Pyrex pie plates of water and allowing them to remain there until the moisture came to the top soil of each can. In order to be able to handle the plants in less time I put them in a big pasteboard box. I kept them in an east window upstairs all summer, with a thin curtain drawn across the window to prevent the hot sun from burning them. In the winter I moved them to the east bedroom window downstairs in the direct light with no curtain.

DURING THE LAST WEEK of December some buds appeared on two plants, and on Sunday, January 14, a beautiful purple bloom was out. What excitement it caused in our household! Those hairlike plants had actually existed, and what's more, they were actually blooming—at least one was. Even the baby waved his hands wildly and chattered about the pretty blossom, and there is a growing respect for "Mom's silly ideas."

Baby food cans are not the best thing for violets, we have found out. The stems that touch the top of the cans gradually wither, and finally the leaves fall off. In order to prevent this, something like toilet tissue or facial tissue can be folded under the leaves over the rim of the cans. Plastic pots would probably eliminate this trouble, but in my case, I had lots of cans, and no pots, so that is why the cans were used. Several violets are ready to be set in larger pots, so we will look around for something better than the tin cans.

If you are in a hurry for blossoms do not bother with violet seeds, for it takes from six to twelve months to mature seedlings into blossoming plants. However, if you yearn for something different, try it, for the growth of those dustlike seeds into a plant of maturity is a miracle of nature that deepens one's appreciation of the Divine Creator. It has been said, "Only God can make a tree." After my experience with these tiny seeds and seedlings, I say, "Only God can make an African violet."

WITH THIS IN MIND we are eager to begin a practical demonstration of righteousness. Participation is one of the "down-to-earth" methods we plan to use. One of the leaders at retreat told a group, "I would rather preach ten sermons in one day than participate in prayer meeting. It scares me—always has and probably always will—but I've discovered that the only way to conquer the fear is to stand on my feet and say what is on my heart. The best way to make your prayer meetings alive is to take part." Participation in church school, League, and everyday righteous living is a challenge to every young person from Texas to Timbuctoo.

Preparation is another of our goals. "So often we are not ministered to by the speaker because we have not studied and are not prepared to understand what is being presented." Here's a new slant on study—it's our own fault if we can't sell people on the church. Scripture reading, prayer, meditation, all take on a new and meaningful significance as the plan of preparation is outlined.

The experience of communion with God at retreat will continue to minister to people, because out of it has come a testimony that the church is worth every effort we can put forth. We are going to become concerned with fundamentals instead of incidentals. We are going to work in harmony with the laws of God. We have taken the personal example of Christ as our interpretation of life and plan to stand in his power.

Ours is no common task. Endowed with power such as was demonstrated at retreat, we cannot fail. United with Leaguers all over the world and following in faith, we shall not fail!

Puppets and Bible Plays

Puppets and Bible Plays is the first book published in this country showing how puppets can be effectively used in the presentation of Bible stories.

Educators now consider puppetry an important new medium of visual education. Many public schools as well as church school teachers who are looking for creative activity, worth-while handwork, visual aids or drama material are using puppetry in teaching.

DEATHS

SHOEMAKER.—2/Lt. Billy Gene, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Shoemaker, was born September 22, 1925, near Osawatomie, Kansas, and was killed November 20, 1950, in a plane crash over the English Channel. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on February 13, 1938, and remained faithful to his covenant until death. He was graduated from Osawatomie high school in May, 1944, and the following month was called into service. Following training at Camp

Robinson and Fort Benning he was sent overseas with the Seventeenth Airborne Troop. In the fall of 1945 he returned to Camp Croft where he remained until April, 1946. He stayed in the reserve army until joining the Air Cadets on July 2, 1948. He received his wings on June 17, 1949, at Las Vegas, Nevada, and was sent to Shaw Field to become a jet pilot. He finished training on November 15, 1950, and was killed five days later.

He is survived by his parents; five brothers: Earl of Topeka, Kansas; Hugh T. and John H. of Osawatomie; Clifford M. of San Diego, California; and Major Leo W. Shoemaker of St. Johan, Austria; and a sister, Mrs. E. B. Young of Fontana, Kansas. Although his body was never recovered, memorial services were held on August 26, 1951, at the First Methodist Church in Osawatomie, Seventy James Daugherty and Elder J. D. Anderson officiating.

Introducing

JEROME E. ANDES, Parker, Arizona, (page 5) was born in Lebeck, Missouri, in 1904, and baptized in Andes, Montana, in 1912. He was graduated from the Training High School in Warrensburg, Missouri, in 1922 and received his B.S. degree from Montana State College in 1929; his M.S. in 1931, and his Ph.D. from Western Reserve University of Cleveland, Ohio, in 1932. From the Louisiana State University Medical School at New Orleans he received his bachelor of medicine in 1935, and his M.D. the following year. He is a member of the Sigma XI and Phi Kappa Phi honor fraternities, a Fellow of the American College of Physicians, a Fellow of the American Medical Association; a member of the Montana State Medical Society, and the National Association of Model Railroaders.

In 1929 he married Alice Erlene Jacobs at Bozeman, Montana. They have two children: David Kenneth 6; and Mary Charlotte 4.

His special interests are public health, psychiatry, and laboratory medicine. His hobbies are model railroading and, according to his own statement, he's "goofy about it," also hiking and photography.

Dr. Andes has had nine years teaching experience in medical schools in Louisiana and West Virginia; five years in private practice; and five years as director of university student health service at the Universities of West Virginia and Arizona. During the war he was medical director of ordnance plants at Lawrence, Kansas, and Pulaski, Virginia. For two years he was in the public health service at Bozeman, Montana. After some experimentation he has found that his health is much better in Arizona than any other place. He has suffered for several years from chronic sinusitis. He is now medical director for the Colorado River Agency of the three Indian reservations, Parker and Yuma, Arizona; and Needles, California.

Dr. Andes is an elder.

WILLIAM S. GOULD, Lamoni, Iowa, (page 8) is Director of Public Relations of Graceland College. He was born in 1914 in Independence and was baptized there in 1935. He was graduated from Northeast high school in Kansas City in 1931, received his A.A. degree from Graceland in 1933 and went on to the University of Iowa where he received his B.A. in 1935 and M.A. in 1936. Last year he received his degree as Ed.D. at Columbia University. In 1935 he was married to Charlotte Darnell who is the author of several junior quarterlies and instructor in commercial courses at Graceland. Their son, Paul, is 13.

Dr. Gould's hobbies are reading and construction work. He did much of the building on his own home. Before going to Graceland in 1939 he taught three years at Central College in Pella, Iowa. He is a member of the National Education Society, Kappa Delta Pi. He was ordained a priest in 1934 and an elder in 1942. His special interest is youth work.

* ATTITUDE

"Finding happiness depends on having the right attitude. We should be thankful for what we have. If a man loses a hand, he can still be thankful for the one he has left instead of griping about the one he has lost. If we don't get everything we want, we can still keep happy if we appreciate the blessings that have come our way."—William Worth, Jr.

* VALUE OF INHERITANCE

Around the turn of the century a humble elderly woman dwelt almost under the eaves of the Stone Church at Independence. She was known affectionately as "Grandma Davison." She was blood grandmother to many children, among them, Irene Layton, in whose parents' home she was then living, and later died there.

This year, 1951, at Onset (Massachusetts) reunion, a group of nine teen-age girls sang a musical number at the Sunday morning service. Seven of those girls were great-great-granddaughters of Grandma Davison.

At Graceland this year four freshmen, all great-great-grandchildren of Grandma Davison, are attending. They are Nova Cox, Baton Rouge, Louisiana; the Ourth twins, Lynn and Lee, of Nauvoo, Illinois; and Scott Fisher, Somerville, Massachusetts.

We are reminded of the Scriptures: "Multiply and replenish the earth," and "Bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—Florence S. Fisher.

* SIGNS

I passed a sign on the street this morning. It said, "Men Working." There was nobody around.

How could they be so sure of that? . . . The signs on the Kansas highway said, "Speed Limit, 55 M.P.H." I was going fifty-three. Other drivers were going by me like jet planes past a balloon. Doesn't it do any good to teach people to read? . . .

The sign said, "Narrow Bridge." Then a lad came along and tried to widen it—with his radiator. . . .

A sign said, "Buy on easy installments." It's a lie. Installments are never easy to pay. I've tried them. . . .

CHURCH DEDICATED

The new church at Ottumwa, Iowa, was dedicated September 30. Present at the services that day were President Israel A. Smith, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, and Apostle D. T. Williams. Also attending the dedication service were Mayor Lovelace of Ottumwa, and Mayor Weatherford of Independence, the latter being the architect for the building. Bishop DeLapp addressed the group at the morning service. The dedicatory service was held in the afternoon with President Smith giving the sermon. Seated on the platform with the president were Mayors Lovelace and Weatherford, who were introduced and who made short speeches. Apostle D. T. Williams offered the prayer of dedication. Bishop DeLapp received the deed from Brother Barker as a token of the transfer of the church building from the old to the new by the entire congregation.

ATTEND CEREMONY

W. Wallace Smith of the First Presidency, and Sister Smith attended the district conference in Omaha, Nebraska, September 30. Brother Smith preached in the morning and also at the evening service. Charles D. Neff is the pastor there. In the afternoon, Brother and Sister Smith went to the cornerstone laying service of the new Council Bluffs, Iowa, church. V. D. Ruch is the pastor at Council Bluffs. The mayor of the city, and a large number of the Saints attended the ceremony. A box containing a membership list, including officers and the Three Standard Books, was placed inside the cornerstone.

Brother Smith also reports that High Priest Benjamin M. Anderson of Omaha is critically ill in the Lutheran Hospital.

INSTITUTE IN OKLAHOMA

The third annual pastors and priesthood institute was held in Oklahoma City, September 29 and 30. This was for the Central and Western Oklahoma districts. Apostles Reed M. Holmes and D. Blair Jensen were in charge of the institute. Brother Jensen will succeed Brother Holmes as Apostle in charge of the Oklahoma and Eastern Colorado area. Also attending the institute and serving as leaders were Ward Hougas, district president for Eastern Colorado, and his counselors Ernest Crownover and Joseph Hufferd, and Elder W. Farr Kemp. Each of these men participated in the program. One hundred priesthood members were present. Brothers Jensen and Holmes went to Tulsa for the evening service. An encouraging item to Brother Jensen as he begins work in his new field is the large number of baptisms in small branches among which are Fanshaw which has had twenty-two baptisms this year; Wilburton with sixteen; and Sperry with sixteen. A group which has not yet been organized as a mission is Clovis, New Mexico, and they have had eight baptisms.

REHEARSALS BEGIN

Tryouts for the "Messiah" were held October 7. Rehearsal also began on the same day. This will be the thirteenth Columbia network broadcast, and the thirty-fifth local Christmas broadcast of Handel's oratorio. The choir is under the direction of Franklyn Weddle.

TO SAY THAT ALMER was born with a smile would rob him of due credit. He just likes people and meets them easily. Time has etched a pleasing countenance which might be mistaken for a perpetual smile. His mother tells that when he came home from college he would exchange greetings and soon be off on a tour of the homes about the neighborhood where he was always a welcomed guest. He particularly enjoyed visiting the shut-ins, and they looked forward to his visits. When he was selected for the chaplaincy of the Sanitarium, many of his friends said the authorities "picked a natural."

Almer (the name is a New England corruption of the Book of Mormon name, Alma) was born at Fall River, Massachusetts, in 1912 and was baptized nine years later at Onset. He was graduated from William Chrisman High School, Independence, Missouri, in 1929; from Graceland College in 1932, and from the University of Iowa in 1933. He has done graduate work there and in Kansas City University. He taught school for nine years in Independence, being principal of a grade school and a teacher at junior high and senior high. He also taught one year at Alton, Illinois.

In 1934 he married Vivian Castings, an accomplished musician and school-teacher. They have three boys: David, 14; Paul, 10; and Richard, 7.

He was ordained a priest in 1930, an elder in 1935, and a high priest in 1944. Since 1944 he has been under Conference appointment, serving as pastor and district president at London, Ontario, and Boston, Massachusetts.

Almer has been definitely civic minded, acting as Red Cross chairman, and Kiwanis chaplain as well as being active in Y.M.C.A. work and in the Ministerial Alliance. He has been called upon often to address civic groups and to give radio talks also.

Self-appointed "Watchmen"

THERE IS AN ORGANIZATION at Brooklyn that publishes a semi-monthly paper entitled Awake. The company is called "Watchtower Bible and Tract Society, Inc." The journal purports to keep the public "awake to the vital issues of our times," avers it "has no fetters," and "pledges itself to righteous principles, to exposing hidden foes and subtle dangers," etc.

We are left to surmise under which category it recently published a "contributed" article under the heading, "The Mormon Labyrinth." We have called attention to this magazine in Herald columns and stressed the fact that almost all of the criticisms set forth in it do not affect us, because we do not and never have believed what the Mormons do with respect to certain doctrines.

We recently addressed a letter of inquiry to this publisher and have received, under date of September 6, a prompt and courteous answer. Since we have received from our members so many letters about the article in question, we believe we should give them the benefit of this letter, which is as follows:

This acknowledges receipt of your letter of August 30 in which you asked if the article in the August 22 issue of our magazine Awake! is one of a series. It is not. We are publishing just the one article on this subject at the present time.

Additionally, we received a letter dated August 23 from John Blackmore, church historian, calling our attention to the distinction between the Reorganized Church and the "Utah Mormons." We appreciate receiving his very courteous letter, with the information that it contained. We think that we identified our article as applying basically to the Utah group, however, as it identified men associated with that group. The illustration on page 13 likewise identified the article with the Salt Lake City temple. The same principle was applied here that we apply when we speak of the "Catholic Church," meaning the Roman Catholic Church unless one of the smaller groups such as the Catholic Apostolic Church, the Greek Catholic Church, or the Russian Catholic Church are specifically identified. We think that due to its publicity and membership, due to the individuals mentioned in the article, due to the illustration that went with it, that our readers would naturally associate it with the more widely publicized Utah group.

We have previously distinguished between your organization and the one in Utah. Awake! was formerly called Consolation, and the May 9, 1945, issue (now out of stock) said on page 18, "And then there is the Reorganized Church, which, with its nearly 100,000 members, holds forth mainly in Missouri.

It rejects the polygamy revelation and so escapes the major inconsistency of modern Mormonism."

We hope this provides the information that both you and Mr. Blackmore were seeking, and that you find other articles in our magazines to be of interest. Thank you for your letters.

We have had much cause to feel we have been misunderstood and misrepresented in the public press, newspapers, and magazines because writers have failed to make proper discrimination between our organization and the Mormons; but we have discovered that, with the passage of time, our position is much better understood.

Auditorium Completion

IN HARMONY with the action of the 1950 General Conference, the Presiding Bishopric have been working on the program for raising funds for the completion of the Auditorium. They have been handicapped in this work, as is explained by Bishop DeLapp, but plans are now matured and the campaign is scheduled to begin Sunday, November 18.

This campaign has the full support of the First Presidency. The completion of the Auditorium as soon as possible is imperative if this fine building is to be used in the general and local programs of the church as has been anticipated these many years. It is no less imperative if the church is to be free to pursue other tasks which beckon us as we grow in vision and experience and numbers and resources.

It happens that the opening date of the campaign—November 18—marks the centennial of the remarkable spiritual experience of Jason W. Briggs, which encouraged him in the way which led to the reorganization of the church after the "dark and cloudy day" of latter-day apostasy. Let us move forward in our present task in the spirit of devoted sacrifice which animated Elder Briggs and his associates, and the Lord will bless us as he blessed them.

Let Us Finish Our Task

AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1950 the Presiding Bishopric was given authority to develop and carry out a program of fund-raising for completion of the Auditorium. At that time work was under way for the surfacing of the wall supporting the dome with stone and for the installation of a copper roof on the dome. We hoped at the time of the General Conference that this work would be completed months sooner than it was. We had hoped that during this time additional studies could be completed of both exterior and interior. These studies, as well as the work which was done, have taken much longer than was originally anticipated, and this is one of the factors which has caused delay in our decision to proceed with the raising of funds as authorized.

Another factor, which in our opinion justified delay, was the fact that many of our congregations were involved in houses of worship projects requiring a great deal of money. In fact, our records show that in 1950 and 1951 local houses of worship projects were under way involving approximately the total sum of $928,000.00. Of this amount the General Church has provided, through the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund and the Houses of Worship Fund, loans amounting to $318,000.00. (These figures do not include projects on which loans were made previous to January 1, 1950.)

We have now come to a place where we feel that plans are sufficiently far along to give some information regarding design and materials to be used in completion of the exterior as well as the interior of the Auditorium. This will be made available to the membership through the columns of the Herald from time to time in ensuing months.

We are also of the opinion that the church building projects are sufficiently stabilized that our congregations for the most part are pretty well able to calculate the extent of their obligations. Likewise, members of the church can figure the amount of their obligations to carry on local projects and can ascertain their financial ability to contribute to the sustained program that will be carried on in raising funds for the Auditorium.

We present the foregoing by way of information, for a few have made inquiry as to why we have not launched a campaign for funds for Auditorium construction. During this period of time those who desire to contribute to the Auditorium Fund are certainly free to do so, and their contributions are most welcome. In addition to this, through action of the General Conference, the document on Surplus which was approved provides for consecration of surplus for the completion of the Auditorium.

We are setting the date of November 18, 1951, as the opening date for a campaign to raise funds for the completion of this building and, as stated, information will be given currently in the columns of the Herald. We are setting a goal of $100,000.00 to be raised between now and December 31, $200,000.00 in the year 1952, and $200,000.00 in 1953, or a total of $500,000.00 by January 1, 1954. This is a task which will require consecrated and sustained effort in the months which are ahead, but we believe that it is one which we can successfully achieve without undue hardship upon the membership of the church, and without diminution of our other activities. Quotas are being assigned both for the immediate goal and for the total goal of $500,000.00.

It is contemplated that the money will be expended on the front of the building, the foyer, and the interior of the building. Just how far it will go in meeting the costs of the work is not known at this time, but we are sure that the money invested from here on will go far in providing the facilities which have long been needed.

Graceland College Day

The church will observe Graceland College Day on Sunday, October 28.

The original purpose of College Day was to secure funds "to aid the college work." Down the years this broad purpose has been interpreted according to the changing needs of both the church and the college, and many and important goals have been achieved. Last year, the emphasis was on "Greater Graceland," this phrase being intended to include improvements which the college is making in buildings and on the campus. This "Greater Graceland" emphasis will be continued for College Day of this year.

One value in the annual observance of College Day which was not clearly perceived at first has become more and more important in the passing of the years. This is a good time for all of us—parents, students, prospective students, and others—to think of education in relation to our total life programs and to our power to appreciate and to serve and to build.

As has been suggested in the Pastor's Handbook, we recommend that on Sunday, October 28, members of the church throughout the world give thought to their stewardship of education and especially to their obligation to provide educational opportunities for those now preparing for their life work.

The Keys of the Kingdom

By Ward A. Hougas

I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. 16:20.

THE IMPORTANCE OF KEYS

I WANT to talk about the keys of the kingdom. I was thinking today, as I was driving along, that keys are simple little things—rather insignificant, in fact, until we lose them. Some of the most frantic people I think I have ever seen have included those who try to crawl in the kitchen window because they have lost their keys, or look pathetically through a car window at the keys locked up inside. Keys are little things, yet they mean much to us. Sometimes they can change the whole pattern of life. I have seen sweet-tempered people become extremely upset when they discovered that their keys had somehow been misplaced.

I have spent several years as an officer in the bank. I used to open up in the mornings quite a bit of the time. All the money was locked up in a vault with big doors and time locks and other intricate paraphernalia. But before I got to the money, there was a pair of doors opened by a simple little key about the size of an automobile key. I had to have that key before I could work on the bigger locks.

When Jesus said to his disciples, "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom," he wasn't giving them anything very big so far as the world was concerned. One day, in talking to the people, he said, "The kingdom is within you," or according to another translation, "The kingdom is among you." When he talked about the kingdom being within people and among people, he was talking about the kingdom of God, something greater than a mere organization.

RICHES OF THE KINGDOM

Sometimes we talk of the church as though it were the kingdom, but actually the church is only an integral part of the kingdom. The kingdom is bigger than the church or any other organization. The kingdom of life offers treasures which we must have if the kingdom of heaven is ever to be ours. One statement that Jesus made is often quoted, "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly." It wraps up in one sentence the great purpose of life—the reason why we are here—and why we need keys to move into the kingdom, that this abundant life might be ours. We need to understand this. We have been trying to get our thinking past a religion of mere restrictions; trying to lift it to a plane where it will challenge us and make us recognize that there is such a thing as abundant life—a life which makes us accept the restrictions gladly and willingly, not because they are restrictions, but because they are the means by which the kingdom may be ours.

And yet it is difficult to get religion above a plane of minor restraints for many of us. We must adjust our thinking to the realities of life and understand that the religion of life is more than a system of trivial restraints; it consists of ideologies that lift us above this common realm of life that tends to worry us so much. The great men and women are those who have accepted restraints as a part of a philosophy which would lift them to higher planes of living.

So, when we speak of discipline, we mean more than the "thou shalt nots." We include all the attitudes of life—everything pertaining to a pattern of conduct which would tend to lift us up.

MORE THAN RESTRAINTS

Perhaps the best illustration I can use comes from the field of dieting. As long as one worries about what he can't eat, he never diets. He is always "going to," but he puts off beginning until tomorrow. Only when the day comes that he looks ahead to the results, and it becomes an obsession, does he seriously begin to diet—only when the ideal takes the place of the restraints. Then there is the problem of fasting. I meet people who think they will starve if they try to fast for even one or two meals. Why? Well, because the ideal of fasting just hasn't come to them. They are not fasting, really; they are just going without food, and that is all they ever think about. Among my friends are men who fast rather regularly—five, six, seven, and eight days at a time—and sense no particular pangs of hunger. They are not worried about what they don't eat. They fast because there has come into their lives a certain need, and that need has become a purpose for them. As they move into these periods of fasting, they are not worrying about what they eat or what they don't eat.

They are concerned only about the great objective.

Whenever you become truly conscious of any great need of the kingdom, you don't care to eat. Lose yourself in some great movement, and you will discover it is easier to go without food than it is to gorge yourself. The big difference is in the purpose back of what you do.

I am not one who fasts for long periods. A number of times in my life during various crises and needs, I have fasted for two or three days for the simple reason that the purpose back of that movement completely overshadowed anything of a physical nature. At such times I have suffered no physical discomfort of any consequence.

We need to forget some of the little things that worry us so much and become possessed with great ideals and purposes. That is what Jesus was talking about when he spoke of losing one's life, and in the process of losing it actually finding it. We are enhanced, strengthened and revitalized by combining our power with the power of God. This is what happens when we worship; and I don't mean when we just sing songs and listen to prayers, I mean when we worship. This is what happens when we fast; and I don't mean when we go without food, I mean when we fast. This is what happens when we pray; and I don't mean just say prayers; I mean actually give ourselves in this spirit of prayer.

Some six or eight years ago A. J. Cronin wrote a book which he called The Keys of the Kingdom. It is the story of a priest who refused to let his religion become a matter of simple restraints, and in his particular church he found that made him virtually an outcast—so much so that he was finally sent to a far-flung point in China where there was nothing except a memory of a mission that had been there in the past. Yet this man was so determined to make his life and religion really count for something that he rose above every obstacle that stood in his way. When he came to old age he was still considered peculiar by those about him because he insisted on making life and religion something more than a set of restrictions. Finally one day his superiors told him he should retire, and in order to make it more appealing they painted a beautiful word picture for him of how he could rest continuously in a home for elderly priests. The old man stood up and said, "I don't want to rest." And he didn't. Life and religion as they had come to him were so dynamic that he literally lost himself in the great objective, and the trivial restraints of life meant virtually nothing to him.

Occasionally we find someone who begins to probe out beyond the ordinary boundary line of thinking. One of the encouraging experiences of being a pastor is talking with those who have been searching for new truth, no longer content to go on just living in the old way, no longer content to look upon religion as just a set of "thou shalt nots."

Coming back from these experiences they discover that their souls have been enriched, and their conceptions of this entire thing called religion have begun to expand. They likewise discover that they are no longer concerned, as they have been in the past, by the things which they supposedly couldn't do because of their religion. They find themselves lifted up and spurred on, given a new incentive to do the things that they now see come within the realm of possibility in human life.

THE KEY OF HEALTH

I would like to mention a few keys. No one is more important than another; at least not in my thinking. We must start with something, so let us take a very common one.

Recently I spoke about the key of health and discovered that some hearers were disappointed when I got through because I seemed to have so little interest in a few minor regulations and restrictions which they try to enforce—disappointed because they seemed to think I had missed the kingdom somewhere, when all the while I was talking about something much bigger, as far as eternal values are concerned.

I said that health is a stewardship and suggested that it is a very personal stewardship. I almost got over into no man's land to suggest that it was others' business what they did, and my business what I did, and not my business what they did, and not their business what I did, except as we have a general interest in each other.

The responsibility of choosing, as far as my stewardship is concerned, is my responsibility; the responsibility of choosing, as far as their stewardship is concerned, is their responsibility.

If we use poor judgment financially, we go broke. If we use poor judgment physically, we break physically. We pay for every bit of misjudgment.

I found a few statistics the other day. The latest figures I could get show that in these United States there are eight million people afflicted with heart disease; there are two million afflicted with diabetes; there are seven million afflicted with arthritis; and millions of others have cancer, hardening of the arteries, ulcers, and a thousand-and-one other things. Much of this has been brought about by our change in producing and processing foods. Today we buy foods which have lost most of their value from a nutritive standpoint. Some of us starve while gorging ourselves.

We pay the price from our misjudgment and lack of wisdom. And this lack of wisdom is not especially an individual lack—it is a group lack. I think most of our physical needs are chargeable to our group characteristics as a society, in that we have allowed to develop in our midst—in fact have demanded—the type of foods which we get. That, of course, accounts for the popular movement which causes people to revert back to the type of food used many years ago. Some are radical in that line; some are foolish; and yet they are attempting to return in a way which I believe will be helpful to the nation at large. Health is the base on which our life work stands. I might suggest that malnutrition—not a lack of food, but a lack of proper food—brings to us what Section 86 promised would not come to us if we would live properly. The promise is that we shall run and not be weary, we shall walk and not faint. Weakness, of course, makes us susceptible to disease; and yet Section 86 says that the destroying angel will pass us by if we, as a society, learn to live properly. We need to understand the ideal. The restrictions have very little significance. Health is a key to abundant living.

THE KEY OF CONTENTMENT

Another key I would like to mention is that of contentment, and immediately we must draw a line between contentment and righteous discontent. As E. Stanley Jones has said, "There is nothing so important as your inner serenity." In other words, unless we can build a philosophy of life which will bring inner peace, and an inner poise and understanding that bring us the assurance that we are working with God, life is not worth much.

In order to live—and I speak of abundant living—there must be sufficient inner adjustment so that this philosophy of life actually comes to be our religion. Contentment cannot be based upon the fear of eternal punishment. To a great many people the actual moving force of their religion is a fear of eternal punishment. No wonder they never rise to any particular heights, no wonder they grovel down in the dust of restrictions; no wonder they never see ideals which challenge them and make life seem really great and good.

Only when we are motivated by something greater than fear are we able to accomplish anything of value.

This is true in many homes. A child who acts only because of fear of punishment develops an attitude that turns him toward crime.

There is such a thing, of course, as righteous discontent, and it is this that leads us to real contentment. I always like to think back to the story of when Moses stood before the burning bush. No doubt back of that experience was the righteous discontent which had been with him during his years in Egypt, and his years as a shepherd in Midian, a discontent that arose because he saw existing conditions which he knew somehow must be changed. It may not have occurred to him that this was his job and that he was the one who was going to have to change conditions. Yet because of this discontent, he prepared himself so he was able to understand as he never had before that this way to contentment for him was going to be difficult—a hard and sacrificial way. I don't suppose he knew that it would end high on Mt. Nebo, where he would look out over the promised land with a disappointment that was overshadowed by triumph. But he found his contentment by yielding to the righteous discontent which caused him to change his ways and give himself to a great cause.

If you can be led into new and better fields of thinking, if you can be discontented enough to seek new heights of prayer, new fields of meditations, new goals of righteous dreaming, this effort will not be in vain.

We think of the web that the spider builds. Some webs are very large. No matter how big they are, they have but few points of contact or anchorage. Three or four points of contact, as a rule, are all that hold up one of these great webs, and yet they are beautiful and intricate in design.

We don't have many contacts with Divinity—I mean real contacts that make us new men and women. If we could just take the few contacts that we have and build for ourselves a pattern of life, well-designed and bearing the impress of Divinity revealed everywhere in nature, we would find a measure of contentment, I believe, which would enable us to lift our lives to planes that many of us have never even dreamed of.

If we can be content only with those things that are valued in eternity, then we will learn to value life in the degree to which it will yield eternal values for us. A miner goes out and digs his ore; then takes it into the laboratory where it is assayed. He is told that it has a certain percentage of gold, a certain percentage of zinc, a certain percentage of lead or iron. The value of the ore doesn't depend upon its looks, but upon the percentage of valuable metal it contains.

The value of our life doesn't depend much on the looks of it, nor the size. The real value depends upon the percentage of eternal values that can be assayed from the ore we dig as we go through life.

THE KEY OF MEMORY

Another simple yet important key is the key of memory. Too often we remember the things we should forget, and forget the things we should remember. I believe the only purpose God had in making memories was that they might safeguard us; that they might help us protect ourselves and others from pitfalls. He never desired that through remembering, we should cause heartaches or revive anything which would cause embarrassment to others. I think one of the most dramatic instances recorded in the New Testament is the account of where some Pharisees brought to Jesus the woman who had been found in transgression, desiring that they might stone her according to the law. Jesus acquiesced. He said, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone." And then the Scriptures record, "He stooped down and with his finger wrote on the ground." I don't know what he wrote, but when he got through he looked up, and everyone was gone except the woman. Then Jesus asked, "Where are your accusers?" They had vanished; when they came under the test, they found that they had no accusation to offer. So he looked at the woman and said, "Go thy way and sin no more," and to Jesus the matter was a closed book.

Some people say that Jesus wrote in the sand. If so, I think sometimes we need a lot more sand piles which would help us forget many of the things we insist on remembering.

Out of such transforming experiences as this have come some of the world's great men and women—people who were big enough to forget. I stated to one congregation that we are all sinners, and a few people there didn't like it. It is queer what opinions we get of ourselves. But we are sinners every day and we need to face God, in the clarity of vision which comes to us by his Spirit, and say to ourselves, "From this day on I will sin no more," and go our way forgetting the past. I have discovered that the only people who grow are those who have learned to forget what they should forget and remember what they should remember.

THE KEY OF FAITH

Someone has said, "Faith is the pencil of the soul that procures heavenly things." I think that is a pretty good statement. Faith is the pencil of the soul that draws for us, helps us crystallize in our thinking the dreams which should lift us out of the petty things of life into a better way of living. Someone else says, "Faith is the building of the invisible to accomplish the impossible." Only men of faith look beyond this common world into the unknown, and there feel for things which in the minds of many people are absolutely impossible.

Goethe, the German philosopher, said that faith brings epochs of truthfulness, while epochs of unbelief are barren of permanent good. In those years in which we have faith, we find expressions and deeds of value coming out of our lives; but in the years we have not faith, our lives are barren. Dr. Spurgeon says, "Faith gets most; humility keeps most; love works most." Collier said, "Faith makes the discords of the present become the harmonies of the future." And some unknown author has added, "To distrust without cause is to dishonor both man and his creator."

Much of the strife we find in our homes, churches, and communities comes because we distrust each other. Many of us are losing faith in life, especially since there is so much talk about atomic destruction and so little about the possibilities of harnessing atomic power for industry.

A great many people have lost faith in life, and some have asked me: "What's the use of educating myself? What's the use of bringing children into the world? What's the use of caring whether or not I live?" That is dangerous thinking—if it is thinking. When God made the world back in the first gray dawn of creation, he knew just as much about the atom bomb and atomic power as he knows today. He knows a lot more about it than we do. And surely, if we have faith in God and his purposes, we can look beyond this flareup in our thinking at the present time and realize that a God who created such things in the beginning must somehow have been able to create processes by which these things may be properly controlled so that life can go on.

The work of the kingdom is not yet done, and it must be done before the world comes to an end. Since 1930 we have had a rather continuous wave of predictions about this catastrophe and that "coming" or some other millennial event. People have predicted that in five years, ten years, twelve years—time would end. In the early 1840's the Millerites gathered on one of the high cliffs along the Mississippi River after giving away their farms and possessions. They went out there to meet their Master, feeling that the world was coming to an end. Well, it didn't happen. They went back and talked as many of their neighbors out of their old farms as they could and waited for the next time. About three years later they gathered again, only this time they didn't give away any of their farms when they went up on the hill. They kept them—and they needed them too. From that time to this, we have been hearing more such predictions. As late as last year I heard of several predictions by people who were certain that the world would end within the next five, six, or seven years. Let us look forward in faith in such a way that it will carry us through.

THE KEY OF REPENTANCE

I will always remember Brother Elbert A. Smith's story about the cocklebur farm, because I grew up on a farm that extended for a mile and a half up and down a little river, and we had cockleburs. We tried to keep them out of our field, but the people who lived up in the hills beyond us didn't cut their burs, and every time it rained they came rushing down upon us. Those things would lie there for years and then sprout and come up. I learned the hard way that it takes sweat and toil to get rid of cockleburs. They have to be dug up and burned.

It is the same way in our lives. We try to get rid of our cocklebur habits by just clipping them off or scratching at the roots a little. We have not yet faced the fact that the only way to rid ourselves of them is to root them out and destroy them.

THE MASTER KEY: LOVE

Back of everything else is the motivating power of love. In the third chapter of John is that much-quoted statement, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Be-

The Graceland Spirit

From Through the West Door

By Roy A. Cheville

NO ONE HAS EVER DISCOVERED who was first to speak of the Graceland Spirit. Phrases like that do not have an identifiable origin. They are so inherently a part of a social experience that they seem always to have been there. . . . As soon as students and faculty began doing things together so they sensed an esprit de corps characteristically their own, it was ripe for such a name. . . . The father of a student wrote President Briggs: "I used to wonder what they meant when they talked about the Graceland Spirit. At last I discovered it through my son and daughter who went to Graceland. I came to the conclusion that it was the spirit of the church, that is, the Spirit of Christ, brought into focus and into operation in a college community. . . ."

What is there that is fundamental that runs through all Graceland life? What are the enduring values that are the quintessence of the Graceland Spirit? At least these are in that Graceland way of life:

—the fraternal spirit which receives each on the merits of personal worth without undue weight of pocketbook, name, or connections;

—the buoyant spirit which sees life as a great adventure with continuous zest for each unfolding tomorrow;

—the harmonious spirit which strives to attain right relations in the business of living together;

—the creative spirit with initiative to work out programs of leisure and labor without undue reliance on those supplied by others;

—the analytic spirit that is restless to discover the why, how and wherefore of the many-sided universe in which we live;

—the honest spirit without pretense or veneer, but with elevating sincerity, and genuineness;

—the happy spirit that interprets man as intended to achieve a happiness that is continuous in nature;

—the humble spirit that evaluates one's own self in the total overview of things, not too high, not too low;

—the reverent spirit that visions one's own abilities and achievements in relation to the great divine purpose in the universe.

*Spirit of Graceland,
Those thy path have trod
Found thee the Spirit
Of the living God.*

A SUGGESTED ORDER OF SERVICE FOR GRACELAND COLLEGE DAY

Call to Worship

They who build on Graceland's hill
Need pray direction for their will.
They must lay foundations down
Forty years beneath the ground.
And the towers must from the sod
Mount a million dreams to God.
Walls so flexible be planned
That the strain of growth will stand.
Growing minds will scatter light
Far beyond the breadth and height.
Entrance doors must be so wide
That no learner be denied.
Windows opened out on skies
Where expanse for dreaming lies.
And the trees that separate
Inner love from outer hate
Must for future Graceland house
Beauty in luxuriant boughs.
They build to incubate a kind
That mirrors the eternal mind.
They who build on Graceland sod
Lay their wood and stone to God.

Invocation

Scripture Lesson

And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.

Special Music: (Solo or quartet or choir number. Perhaps a Graceland song such as "Happy Graceland," "O, Graceland Beloved," "Hail, Alma Mater, Dear," "Conviction.")

Religion - The Ideology of Democracy

By Colonel Matthew H. Imrie

Seventh Army Chaplain

EDITOR'S NOTE: This timely and intelligent article was procured for the "Herald" by Elder Floyd H. Engstrom, who has served as chaplain under Colonel Imrie. Brother Engstrom says, "He is an Episcopal priest and a grand person. He has visited our home several times." Chaplain Engstrom was recently transferred to an American post in the French Zone.—C.B.H.

THE BRITISH HISTORIAN, Arnold Toynbee, was quoted in the October 30, 1950, issue of Time Magazine as saying: "How can the western nations successfully combat Communism unless they establish an active, working Christianity? If we are to fight (Communism) on equal terms, we must make our faith clear in our behavior, we must increase the percentage of our belief in Christianity and our actions as Christians."

There is nothing new about this plea for a spiritual awakening, for moral rearmament. The Bible is studded with eloquent pleas exhorting man to walk in the light rather than the darkness, to worship God rather than vain idols. In addition to Toynbee, many of our leaders have voiced this warning. Jacques Maritain, the French philosopher and statesman, as far back as 1942 gave brilliant and lucid expression to the relevancy of religion to political freedom in his book, Christianity and Democracy. General Douglas MacArthur, aboard the "Missouri" in Tokyo Bay, back in September 1945, gave this thought historic utterance in the words, "The problem is basically theological and involves a spiritual recrudescence and improvement of human character." And one could easily quote George Sokolski, Herbert Hoover, Walter Lippmann, Dorothy Thompson, David Lawrence, and a host of others to prove the point that leaders and thinkers and statesmen have been and are aware of the need of a revived Christianity to overcome the assault of barbaric, antidemocratic societies.

LET US FORGET for a moment what the Toynbees, the MacArthurs, and the others have to say, and let us turn to newspaper headlines, to the radio reports, and to our own memories and powers of observation. The past five years have convinced us, and all freedom-loving people throughout the world, that military weakness is madness in a world where nations practice ruthless aggression. And we have also been convinced that, in a world where basic philosophies motivate the conduct of men and nations, ideological weakness is also foolhardy.

Government alone cannot govern; it must have an ideology, a systematic philosophy to serve as a rationale for its policies. Government must have either an enslaving "ISM" that will reduce the number of free minds in the state, or an inspirational religion that will give men the grace to live together as brothers. The truth of this choice of ideologies is seen in the present conflict between Communism and Democracy.

Communism is more than an economic system; it is a philosophy of life based on a deliberate and absolute rejection of God. In the words of Lenin, "Marxism is materialism militant." This materialistic philosophy or ideology inevitably leads to the slave state and is perfectly suited to its perpetuation. The denial of the fatherhood of God is a prelude to the denial of the brotherhood of man. The repudiation of God's sovereignty leads to the policy of opportunism, to the belief that the end justifies the means, and to the repudiation of moral values in every sphere of human activity.

On the other hand, the form of political life which we call democracy, has its taproots in the religion of the Bible. It is true that some of the roots of our way of life run back to Roman law and Greek philosophy, but they have drawn their vigor from church and synagogue. G. K. Chesterton wrote: "There is no basis for democracy except in a dogma about the divine origin of man." Dorothy Thompson states this thought in the words, "The conception of man as a child of God—that is, as a soul, capable of choice, capable of reason, capable of developing and perfecting himself in the image of the ideal—is the basis of democracy. It is the only philosophical justification for democracy." The reality of God, the dignity and brotherhood of man because of his relationship to God, and the individual's responsibility to self, society, and the Creator characterizes the democratic state of mind. It is not without valid reason that our leaders acknowledge God's name and invoke his blessing when speaking in behalf of the people. The democratic way of life is a social-political expression of the religion of the Bible; it could not have originated, nor can it continue, apart from its essential biblical inspiration and vital religious principle.

IN OUR GENERATION we have seen two serious threats to our democratic way of life. The first, a combined Nazi-Fascist threat, was directed at the democratic political organization, at the body politic. The plan of attack was simple enough; kill the body, and the spirit no longer has a medium for expression; destroy the political organization, and the spirit of liberty can no longer manifest itself. It took the Second World War to destroy this threat.

Communism, the second threat to our democratic way of life, has a different approach. While paying lip service to democratic principles, Communism seeks to vitiate the strength of democracy by choking off its breath; it seeks to destroy the democratic principle by rejecting the religious principle. Of these two threats to freedom, Communism's ideological assault is the more difficult to detect and vanquish.

Appealing to man's inclination to desert discipline and limit reality to the realm of physical sensations, the materialistic ideology of Communism is welcomed in many free societies under various nom de plumes such as Positivism, Pragmatism, Humanism, Secularism, and Indifferentism; these forms of materialism—many of them fashionable and popular in democratic countries—corrode the metal of freedom even while their devotees protest undiluted patriotism. Again we quote Toynbee:

Democracy is another leaf from the book of Christianity, which has also, I fear, been torn out and, while not perhaps misread, has certainly been half emptied of meaning by being divorced from its Christian context and secularized; and we have obviously, for a number of generations past, been living on spiritual capital.

MOST OF US view democracy as we see the outside of a person coming toward us down the street. The outer body is important, but the most important thing about that person is the spirit that characterizes him; and the most important thing about democracy is its inner soul or spirit.

We properly do a great deal to nourish the body of democracy; we work and produce; we think, and we write; we argue, and we vote; we prepare for military defense. But what is a man who has given all his attention to developing a strong body, who has cared nothing for his inner life, his mind, or his soul? And what is a democracy that ignores its spiritual foundations, its motivating ideology, its very soul? We must give serious thought to nurturing the soul of democracy if we wish it well.

Ours is a democratic, western, Christian civilization. By this we do not mean that our civilization is Christian from top to bottom in all its characteristics, but rather that the basic impulse behind our civilization is Christianity. Toynbee warns us that all of the gains of our civilization can be lost if our religious impetus is either wasted or overcome by irreligious philosophies. Who levels this threat at our way of life? The Communists, certainly; and also every citizen who is indifferent to our religious heritage. Any one of us and all of us defective in our ideological obligations unwittingly further the cause of materialism. "He who is not with me is against me," Christ said. And in this conflict between materialism and religion, between Communism and Democracy, he who is not with the spirit of democracy is against it. This ideological conflict is the Number One Problem in the world today. An important question for each one of us to answer is "Am I part of the problem, or am I part of the solution?"

PART OF THE SOLUTION to this attack on our national life is to strengthen our spiritual foundations. Only the re-birth of religion within our hearts will give us the effective strength to combat the ideological assault of Communism. Let us not be so blind as to think that our nation may shift its foundations from the worship of God to those of selfishness and materialism and continue democratic. Our country is founded on profound belief in the providence of God and the dignity of men as the children of God.

The first constitution ever adapted for the government of a community on this continent was the Mayflower Compact; it began: "In the name of God, amen." William Penn, speaking of his colony in Pennsylvania, wrote: "My God will, I believe, bless and make it the seed of a nation." In the Declaration of Independence are found the words: "Appealing to the supreme judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions . . . and with firm reliance upon providence . . ." Alexander Hamilton said of our Constitution: "The sacred rights of mankind are not to be rummaged from among old parchments and musty records—they are written as with a sunbeam in the whole volume of human nature by the hand of Divinity itself." In his inaugural address, George Washington said: "No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the invisible hand which conducts the affairs of men more than the people of the United States." Patrick Henry, in the same speech in which he said, "Give me liberty, or give me death," said "There is a just God who presides over the destiny of nations."

There are many such quotations testifying to the fact that our founding fathers were religious, God-fearing men. They were diverse in their economic and political beliefs, but they were united in two great beliefs—belief in the great democratic experiment of the United States which they were making together, and belief in the Providence of Almighty God. We might summarize all these references by quoting the words of President Coolidge at the celebration of the hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence:

In its great outline the Declaration of Independence was the result of the religious teachings of the preceding period . . . they were a people who came under the influence of a great spiritual development and acquired great moral power. No other theory is adequate to explain or comprehend the Declaration of Independence. It is the product of the spiritual insight of the people . . . the things of the spirit come first. We must follow the spiritual and moral leadership which they showed.

It is imperative to realize that the principles for which our country stands cannot be maintained if they are cut off from their religious source, any more than a shunted freight car can maintain its momentum when cut off from the engine. We are to love our neighbors as ourselves; apart from religion, why? We must regard all men as equal; we can do so only as we see them as the sons of God. We must regard all men as brothers: this is so much nonsense unless we first accept the fatherhood of God. Karl Marx, the apostle of Communism, understood this when he said, "The democratic concept of man is false because it is Christian." To take this democratic concept of man and detach it from its religious dynamic is like attempting to build the kingdom of God without God! We must link the cars with the engine. We must return to God. We must work and pray and give for the spread of his kingdom. We must nurture the cause of religion by a personal and social application of our holy faith.

THE SPIRITUAL LEVEL of America is determined by the spiritual achievements of its people in the aggregate. As we the people nourish our souls through the practice of the presence of God and the doing of his will, we contribute to the spiritual life of our nation and democracy. When a man or woman achieves spiritual excellency, the level of the nation is lifted a little—the armor of God is more firmly fitted. When an increase of faith possesses an individual and righteousness is embraced, the ripples of that event spread all across the face of the democratic waters.

The vitality of religion is bound up with the life and work of the churches. By inescapable logic, therefore, the foundation of democracy depends on strong, vital, functioning churches. This fact raised serious questions concerning the trend and future of democracy, for it is a threatening fact that most adults either ignore the church or take it very lightly. For proof of this, I refer you to your own experience.

Inasmuch as religion is the ideology of democracy, to ignore or to weaken religion is to "bite the hand that feeds us." It was the great Gladstone who said, "I go to church because I love God and my country."

THIS STATEMENT provokes the question, Does one have to attend church in order to support the ideology of our democracy? Most of us are so anxious to admit that there is more to religion than church attendance that we run the risk of calling the latter unimportant. How necessary is church attendance? The attacks of reactionary totalitarian governments on the church is a clue to the answer. Nazi, Fascist, and Communist regimes have closed thousands of churches and have silenced the clergy because church attendance inspires Christian conduct. The relationship of public worship to public ethics is that of the apple tree to the apple. The fruits of Christian worship (righteousness, peace, brotherhood, and good will) are incompatible with the opportunism, warmongering, suspicion, and hatred employed by dictators.

Some of us say, "The spirit of religion, not the institution, is enough for me." In the world in which we live, values are known to man only through outward and visible signs. The entity referred to as your personality is known to your neighbor only through the presence of your material body. If the ego were not wrapped up in a body, communication in the realm of existence would be impossible. The spirit of political freedom is dependent upon the democratic state for its expression. Similarly, the spirit of religion needs to be

The Autobiography of Marcus H. Cook

IV. Under Church Appointment

ORDAINED A HIGH PRIEST

IN the spring of 1900 I had a week end off, and I went to the General Conference. On Sunday the Saints were asked to fast and pray for direction. That night, Joseph Smith appeared to me in a dream and told me that I would be asked to take the office of high priest. I asked him when, and he replied, "In the near future." On Monday morning when I said good-by to Joseph Smith and F. G. Pitt, who had been elected president of the quorum of high priests, they told me that I was recommended to be ordained to the office of high priest and asked me if I would accept the office. I told them that if the Conference approved, I would accept. I had to return home as I was on duty Monday night. The Conference approved, and J. W. Wight was sent to Des Moines to ordain me to the office of high priest on June 19, 1900.

MINISTRY IN IOWA

I continued in local work in Des Moines until the spring of 1902, when I was appointed to the towns of Clinton, Lyons, and Comanche, Iowa, and Fulton, Illinois. I found some good Saints there, and it was arranged that I should make my home with August Munson and his wife. I was elected president of the branch. The Saints there were co-operative and I enjoyed my work. I visited among the members and held meetings in private homes as opportunity made possible, while regular services were held in a hall in town. The work progressed, and a better and more united condition was brought about. Two young men were ordained to the priesthood, August Munson to the office of elder, and Ed Voelpel to that of priest. There were also two other priests, Brothers Wilson and Palgrove, and a William Potter who held the office of teacher. Six were baptized during the year, among them Clarence Biel, who has served since in the office of elder and was at one time counselor to the district president. He now has two sons who hold the priesthood, and one of them is the present pastor in Clinton.

I assisted Brother Oscar Case in mission work for a while at Fulton, and he came to Clinton and helped in a series of meetings there. At the close of the year, I felt that the work was in good condition, and that a greater work could be done during the next year. I filled out my application for appointment for the next year giving Clinton, Iowa, as my choice of field.

APPOINTMENT TO TRI-CITIES

But to my disappointment, I was assigned to the "Tri-Cities"—Davenport, Rock Island, and Moline. I took up my work there and held services mornings and evenings in a hall in Moline, Illinois, and afternoons at Davenport, Iowa. I baptized a boy in Moline, and continued working there until fall, when sickness in my family made it necessary for me to return home for a while.

While I was in the Tri-Cities, an interesting event occurred. Some elders of the Utah church were holding meetings on the streets in Moline, not very far from our hall. Someone asked them what difference there was between them and the Reorganized Church. Their answer was very misleading, and some of our members who heard it came to me asking that something be done about it. Brother F. A. Russell lived in Davenport at that time, and I phoned his wife, asking if he had some literature that would be helpful in replying to them. Brother Russell was field missionary in the district and happened to be at home. I asked him if he would come with me and meet them. He readily consented, and we went to the corner where they were to preach. Quite a crowd had gathered to hear them, and at the close of their service I stepped into the place where they had been and asked the crowd to wait a few minutes. I told the people that those men had made the claim that they represented the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints organized by Joseph Smith in 1830. I said that their claim was false, and that we were fortunate in having with us a representative of the true church who would like to make some explanations. I then introduced F. A. Russell; he began speaking and soon had the attention of the crowd. There was no soft pedaling; he made it quite plain that in the practice of polygamy and other things, they were not representing the true church. The crowd was with him from the start. When he finished, one of the Utah elders attempted to show that they were not practicing polygamy, that those living with plural wives had married them before there was any law in Utah against it. A short time before that, Joseph F. Smith had been fined for polygamous cohabitation. They claimed that he had married these wives before the law made such marriages illegal, and that he would not desert the wives he had married. F. A. Russell called attention to the fact that it had been proved that since Utah had promised to abandon polygamy the said Joseph F. Smith had become the father of five children by his various wives, and whatever they might say, that was certainly practicing polygamy.

We continued meetings at that same corner for some time, with crowds that some nights almost blocked the street. The Utah elders came out once after that, but the crowd all came over to our corner. It was not long after this that I was called to my home.

IN COUNCIL BLUFFS

When I was again able to take up the work, I was transferred to Council Bluffs, where I found a nice branch of devoted members. When I arrived, Elder Jenkins took me out among the Saints and introduced me to them. Brother Booth was pastor; I found him a splendid man, and my relations with him were quite agreeable. Two of these people whom I met through Brother Jenkins I shall always remember. One was an old lady of eighty who had joined the church before the apostasy. She had come from England to Utah, after receiving the gospel in its purity; she told me how happy she was and with what joy she embraced the true gospel. She also told me of her bitter disappointment when she discovered the evil teachings and practices of the people in Utah. Broken-hearted she left Utah and settled in Nebraska. Her faith in the gospel was unshaken, but she knew it was not taught in Utah. Representatives of the Reorganization found her, and with joy she received their message. She did washings and any other work she could do in order to get money to pay the expenses of missionaries to preach the message to her neighbors and friends. She wept because she was growing so old she couldn't work any more and earn money to help the church. About once a month she would hand me a dollar to help in my expenses; I don't know what sacrifices she made to do it, but I felt that such sacrifice should stimulate me to the greatest possible effort to be as loyal as she was. She will never know what an inspiration her devotion to the work was to me.

The other outstanding personality was a young man, George W. Steele, who had recently married a girl who belonged to the church. Brother Jenkins took me to their place late in the afternoon, then left for his home out in the country. I talked to Mrs. Steele for a while; she asked me to stay for supper and meet her husband. When he came home, she introduced him, and I was very favorably impressed. He was a fine-looking young man, very genial, and we became good friends. He was a salesman; not much interested in religion and inclined to be skeptical. I stayed with them overnight, and as our friendship grew, I often spent an evening with them. I finally had the pleasure of baptizing Mr. Steele. He is now an elder of the church, living in Omaha, and has done a good work.

I have lost my record of baptisms, but several persons were baptized in Council Bluffs during the year I began my work there. I was reapointed for the next year and was there the latter part of 1903 and 1904. During that time I held special meetings at Underwood, McLellan, Neola, and Crescent City. I roomed for a while with an osteopath by the name of Cooper. One of his patients suffered from fainting spells, and he told her about our administration to the sick. She asked for administration, and then after making her request, she fainted. I proceeded to administer to her. She regained consciousness, and, as far as I ever heard, was completely healed. A short time later I baptized her. I did most of the preaching at the church while I was there.

RETURN TO DES MOINES

At the General Conference of 1905 I was appointed to the Des Moines District. Brother J. F. Mintun had been located in the city of Des Moines and did a splendid work there. I remained in that district until 1909, when I was sent to the Portland, Oregon, District. I had been president of the Des Moines District, which at that time covered twenty-six counties in the central part of the state. There were branches at Des Moines, Newton, Runnels, Rhodes, Boone, and Eagle Grove. I visited all these places, preaching, advising the officers, and doing what I could to look after the interests of the work. I also assisted Brother Wardel Christy in tent meetings at Rhodes, Nevada, Boone, Baxter, Montour, and Colo. I held meetings in Tama, Boone, Shaver, and other places, and assisted as moderator in a debate between J. F. Mintun and a man who represented the Seventh Day Church of God. Brother Mintun had the advantage all through the debate, so much so that the followers of the other man were discouraged and some of them became quite angry.

I had a controversy with some Utah ministers who were preaching on the streets at Colo, Iowa. I was visiting the Saints there when they started a street meeting a few blocks from where I was staying. They had been all over town during the day, and when they began preaching, our people thought something should be done about it. Accompanied by the man with whom I was staying, I went and asked the mayor if I might reply to these elders. The mayor did not want a row started on the street, but I told him I would not interfere until they closed their meeting. He granted me this permission and said that they would again be there the next evening. I told the crowd that the organization those young men were representing was not the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as organized by Joseph Smith and his associates; that the church they represented had introduced doctrines and practices contrary to the original church; that the United States courts had decided they were not the original church and could not hold the property of the original church, as in the case of the Kirtland Temple, which was awarded to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I proceeded to call attention to some of the doctrines and practices of the Utah Church that were in direct opposition to the true church and said that I would be there again the next evening to tell them more about it. The Utah elders made very little effort to defend themselves and failed to return next evening to fill the appointment they had made, but I talked to a good-sized crowd at the same corner.

A man whose name I cannot recall, who had debated with Brother Hunt, published a book against our church and boasted that he had defeated Brother Hunt and was willing to meet any representative of the church. Some time later, when I was again in Colo, I found that several copies of his book had been circulated in the village. I obtained permission to hold a street meeting and sent for J. F. Mintun to come. I then sent word that we would analyze this book, giving the author the opportunity to be present to meet us and defend his position. He failed to come, so Brother Mintun and I met a large crowd on the corner. I announced that if the author were present, we would like to have him come forward, as we were willing for him to reply to us if he so desired. But he did not appear. I took his book and read several of the most outstanding things he had said against the church, and Brother Minton answered them. I never heard any more about this man.

Christian Child Training

By Glenn C. LeBaron, N. D.

LIVING IN THESE DAYS of world turmoil, unrest, uncertainty, and the ever-increasing costs of living, we pause to consider whether we are cognizant of the needs of our children. We recognize their physical needs automatically, but do we consider their need of spiritual home training to augment the usual church school lesson?

Never in the history of our nation has the need of vigilance been greater for our children and adolescents.

The recent report regarding the number of drug addicts among high school and college students is truly appalling.

Radio commercialists sing the praises of various brands of cigarettes, each telling why his brand is better and less harmful than the other. They fail to say that all brands contain deadly nicotine.

Many magazines sell full-page advertising space to draw attention to liquor but refrain from saying that the alcoholic content of all intoxicants tends to ruin nerves and digestion, cause cirrhosis of the liver, wreck homes, and lead to various mental disorders and deformities.

The amount spent on tobacco and liquor in the United States is almost incomprehensible. The tax alone would build and sustain many churches. Modern science has made great strides in certain fields of endeavor, even to deadlier methods of taking human life. Movements for the welfare and protection of children are inadequate to cope with this serious situation.

In the homes and in special classes children could be taught the harmful effects of tobacco, liquor, narcotics, and other vices. They have very receptive minds, and what they learn remains indelibly on their memories. Many of today's gangsters and racketeers were once the children of city slums. Many great leaders were once children in Christian homes. Environment plays a large part in the lives of children, as they will wear the cloak of their early training that predominated during the time their minds were most receptive.

WE CAN REASONABLY BELIEVE that a child's intelligence has its beginning in the embryonic period. Authorities on the subject claim that a child learns and retains more knowledge between the ages of four and ten than at any other given period of years thereafter. The kind of knowledge gained, of course, is different for a child and an adult; however the gift to learn and retain is in favor of the child. It is remarkable the many words and phrases a child knows the meaning of at kindergarten age. The training of children between the ages of four to twelve usually molds their adult character.

The march of crime cannot be halted or suppressed by law enforcement or a Christian crusade alone. The training of our children today will represent the spiritual force that will oppose evil tomorrow. They will be the leaders of the church and nation. Their training now is mandatory.

We should warn our children of the evil forces at work which can destroy morals, homes, churches, culture, nation, and civilization. Christian child guidance today is the paramount task of parents. We could all rejoice if we were assured that our Christian ideals and national security would not perish.

The sanctity of the church, the welfare and traditions of our great nation, will be in the hands of our children when they reach manhood and womanhood. It is never too soon or too late to start a child's training. The Devil and his satellites are always at work perpetuating the forces of evil.

We have heard the saying, "Fight fire with fire." Our motto must be, "Fight evil with good." A child having early Christian training will be much less susceptible to evil influence.

Our concern must not be entirely for our own children because the Lord loves all children. We must bring more children into church school and put more Bibles in the homes and public schools.

Tribute to the Late M. J. Crowley

UPON arriving at Detroit, Michigan, in 1942, to accept General Church appointment, I quickly became acquainted with one of the dependable and devoted men of the priesthood, High Priest Michael J. Crowley, and his companion, Sister Crowley. A few months ago this devoted man passed to his eternal reward, and I want to share this tribute and respect with the readers of the Herald.

Brother Crowley had an unusual conversion to the Restoration which he shared with me in our official church assignments. A quiet person, he was always ready to support the church and its representatives from headquarters from his earlier days of ministry in Toronto, Ontario, to his closing days in Detroit. On numerous occasions, in my heaviness of heart, I would wend my way to 2330 Cortland for advice, encouragement, and comfort from this minister. I would go away from this fountain of hope, happy to continue my ministry in this metropolitan area of responsibility.

As has been said of Phillip Brooks, Elder Crowley was sunlight to many in the midst of rain and fog. As the little girl paid tribute to this famed preacher by saying, when notified of his passing, "Won't the angels rejoice in heaven," so we can say that heaven will rejoice because this worthy minister throughout his life gave sacrificial devotion to Jesus Christ and his fellow-men. In his ministry to others he never forgot to recognize his devoted companion, Margaret. May heaven bless her.

Elder Crowley served as president of Detroit-Windsor District as well as counselor to several city pastors. Many times when we were together I would seek his counsel. We went to prayer meetings together, and I learned much from his philosophy

SOUTH SEA ISLAND MISSIONARIES RETURNING TO THE UNITED STATES

SEVENTY F. Edward Butterworth and his wife, Lilly Raye, with their little son, Gary, and daughter, Cheryl, will leave November 14 by Air-Tahiti via Fiji and Hawaii for the United States. They are completing six years of missionary activity among the natives of French Oceania. The Butterworths have succeeded in acquiring the native tongue, and even the children speak more Tahitian than English.

Brother Butterworth gives credit to the late Apostle Clyde F. Ellis for his early grasp of the language, and comments, "The old Tahitian masters of the dying language, who themselves are passing with the tongue, pay reverent respect to the memory of Brother Ellis who comprehended the language more thoroughly than any other foreigner who has entered the colony." The Butterworths have not yet been given their assignments of future missionary activity, but they anticipate serving on the mainland. The above photograph was taken by a professional photographer, Mr. Simpson, at the site of Captain Cook's monument at Haapape, Tahiti.

of life. He was a minister for whom I had a great love, and this experience has revealed to me the depth of fraternity that is possible in gospel bonds. I visited him many times in his days of affliction, and I remember that through his trial he was "sweet" and devoted. His death removes from our ranks a consecrated high priest and a true disciple of Jesus Christ.

Michael J. Crowley was a man of God. He served excellently and endlessly and left his imprint in the hearts of men. Two words come to my mind as a tribute to this man—love and victory. Through love he was victorious.

ALTON, ILLINOIS.—The branch held a formal dedication service, September 23, in the church building which was purchased in Wood River, Illinois. There were about 225 people present. The building was purchased March, 1951, from the Lutheran church and is located at Fifth and Lorena in Wood River. There has been some extensive redecorating done by the members of the branch.

A fellowship meeting opened the services. President Israel A. Smith delivered the dedicatory sermon in the morning. The dedicatory prayer was offered by District President McDonald of St. Louis, Missouri.

A basket dinner was held in the church basement at noon. Apostle D. O. Chesworth delivered a sermon in the afternoon. His theme was "What Shall We Do." A floral display for the services was supplied by members of the branch.

Visitors attended from St. Louis, Missouri; East St. Louis, Sawyerville, Belleville, and Pleasant Hill, Illinois; and Lamoni, Iowa.—Reported by MRS. DOROTHY JOHNSON

SWEET HOME, OREGON.—Progress is being made on the building fund, and the women have given a good portion of money they have made to the project. During the past year visiting speakers have included Elder George Speed of Salem, Oregon; Brother Clark of Salem, Oregon; Brother Chet Gregory of Portland, Oregon; Elder George Omans of Woodburn, Oregon; Elder Roy Keiser of Vancouver, Washington, and Elder Chapman of Vancouver, Washington.

Missionary James Kemp delivered the Mother's Day sermon. Two weeks later he began a missionary series with a concert. He held the series for two weeks and at the end of the meetings, a baptism service was held at the river. Three adults and seven children were baptized. They were Irene Richards, Arnold Richards, Louise Langenberg, Shane Thompson, Rodger Sparks, Frank Richards, Cherry Ann Phelps, Darlene Walberg, Carolyn Jean Ross, and Shiela Holden.

A picnic lunch was held August 26 at Cascadia Park under the direction of the social leader, Nellie Walberg.—Reported by VIRGINIA PHELPS

OREGON DISTRICT.—The monthly meeting for priesthood and their wives was held at the Central Portland church September 25. There were 136 in attendance. Elder Roy Keiser, pastor from Vancouver, Washington, had charge of the opening worship service. He was assisted by Elder Harold Carpenter and Priests Melvin Chapman and Robert Taylor. Wanda Fishel was pianist, and Gysie Rost directed the music and sang a solo.

Elder George Speed, pastor of Salem, assisted by Elders Jack Slover and Ferd Hammel and Sister Ferd Hammel, demonstrated a cottage meeting on home priesthood visits. Priest Keith Kinert, church school director from the Carnas, Washington, Branch, spoke on the regular responsibility of a church school director with the young people of the branch. Sister Effie Verhei instructed a women's class.

Following the classes lunch was served by Sister Verhei, Mable Ray and others.—Reported by J. L. VERHEI

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA. — The first of the fall events at the branch was the meeting of the women's department. The yearbook published by this department has been issued to the women of the branch and carries in it a month-by-month schedule of the social and religious activities of the group. Another publication appearing in October is the "Star of Zion," a mimeographed pamphlet containing a sermonette, excerpts from priesthood talks, local church news, and other items. This is sponsored by the Young Saints' Fellowship. Copies of this publication are sent to the Saints at Archbald, Pennsylvania, and at Binghamton, New York.—Reported by H. DAVID MORRIS

SPRING RIVER, ILLINOIS.—Apostle D. O. Chesworth was present to assist District President Stephen A. Black with the leadership of the district conference held September 15 and 16 at the Ozark reunion grounds.

At the annual business meeting officers elected for the coming year were Elder Stephen A. Black, president; Elders Francis M. Bishop and C. D. Wilson, counselors; Lela Parkhurst, secretary; Elder B. F. Kyser, treasurer; Priest E. G. Gilbert, director of religious education; Mrs. T. W. Bath, women's leader; Elder Don Guinnee, music director; Elder J. Arthur Dixon, nonresident pastor; Elder Harry Shank, young people's leader; Inez Smith Davis, historian; Lois Shipley, publicity; Elder Charles Cadmus, auditor; and Elder N. W. Gray was sustained as bishop's agent. Marjorie Gilbert, F. M. Bishop, Mark Mink, Herman Plumb, and T. W. Bath were re-elected to the finance committee, and Mark Mink, C. D. Wilson, and B. F. Kyser were returned to their positions on the reunion committee.

Carl Byfield of Nowata, Oklahoma, and Lloyd Hunley of Joplin, Missouri, were recommended and approved for ordination to the office of priest and deacon, respectively.

Enough money to purchase thirty-one new chairs for the reunion grounds was received from a special offering.

The district approved the organization of five missions into branches. They were Iola-Chanute, Kansas; Scammon, Kansas; Aurora, Missouri; Vinita, Oklahoma; and Lockwood, Missouri.

Classwork and special talks were provided by Lea and Stephen Black, Esther Heller, Nellie Hogan, Marjorie Gilbert, Mary Cochran, Mrs. T. W. Bath, and Elders Francis Bishop, T. W. Bath, Herman Plumb, C. D. Wilson, and B. F. Kyser.

Apostle Chesworth delivered the sermon Sunday morning. The children's church school was under the direction of E. G. Gilbert. The theme for the general prayer service was "Thy Kingdom Come," which was also the theme for the conference.—Reported by LOIS SHIPLEY

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL STAKE, MICHIGAN.—The Stake conference was held September 9. Stake President W. Blair McClain presided. Golden Harvest

By Leona N. Hands

FEELING THE NEED of something cool and refreshing one hot summer evening, we stopped in at a restaurant that had just recently been opened to the public. The booths were all filled, but the snack bar looked inviting. Two people were just leaving so we immediately slipped into the vacant seats and ordered our favorite sodas.

The place was attractive and quite crowded. Most of the customers were young people enjoying a light lunch or soft drinks. The air was filled with the buzz of many voices making small talk against a background of juke box music.

Quite suddenly the music ended on a high-pitched note. Then came a lull and a click as a new record swung into place. That moment of complete silence was refreshing. Evidently everyone was awaiting the opening strain of the piece about to be played. It was interesting to note the surprised looks on the young faces as a sweet voiced tenor began to sing, "Darling, I am growing old."

IMMEDIATELY, there were questioning looks. Who in all this care-free group had chosen that particular song? Searching eyes centered on a booth not far from where we were seated. There sat an elderly man and woman so absorbed in one another that they were completely indifferent to the attention they were getting from those around them.

The little old lady wore a soft gray dress with a corsage of gardenias pinned to the shoulder. Her snow-white hair was perfectly waved and drawn back from her face in a becoming style. She was lovely to look at. Faultlessly groomed, the white-haired gentleman was a pleasing complement in his dark suit with its small boutonniere. Both possessed a calmness and dignity befitting their outward appearance. What continued to hold everyone's attention was their absorption in each other. Obviously they were celebrating an important occasion as they conversed in low tones, their eyes meeting often in mutual affection and understanding.

As the song went on everyone smiled to see the old gentleman reach across the table to take one of the lady's hands in his own.

What a fortunate man he was to be blessed with such a charming companion. How equally fortunate she was to have such a gracious husband. All the onlookers were pleased to witness this display of love and companionship that had endured through fifty years of married life.

"Yes, it's their golden wedding anniversary," whispered the waitress. "I guess there aren't any children, or else," she paused, "they're gone. Aren't they wonderful?" she smiled.

We were thinking the same thing. Surely many others were also as we noted the expressions on several faces. Certainly everyone who witnessed that little scene will remember it with pleasure. Here was a perfect example of what marriage could mean to two people whose hearts and minds were attuned to each other. This indeed must be the rare companionship that God, in the beginning, willed for his children.

I SHALL NEVER FORGET that picture. It held a fascination for me at the time, and I remember resolving to store it deep in memory's hold as a cherished thing of beauty. I love to take it out and look at it again and again.

We did not hear a word that the old lady and the old gentleman said to each other across the table. We had no way of knowing what they talked about at that quiet little celebration. Yet their mutual love and understanding were clearly evident to everyone who saw them.

I thought of the phrase used in the marriage covenant, "Do you both mutually agree . . ." which forms the foundation of a successful marriage from its very beginning. Through the years this continual agreement was something both must have worked for in order to achieve the deep affection which was manifest in their actions toward each other. After fifty years of living together they still found joy and pleasure in each other's company.

We could almost sense the unspoken thoughts of the young people gazing at the old couple: "This is the way I want my marriage to be."

We shared their feelings as we quietly left the restaurant while the song was ending. What better testimony for the married state as God's plan for mankind could two people give than to achieve the ideal example set by this charming old couple.

Their memory remains a challenge, a goal to work toward—one I am sure Latter Day Saints desire with all their hearts. It is something to look forward to—that golden anniversary.

Losing Our Children

WE ARE TOLD TODAY that as a church we are losing our children. A generation ago we were told that we were losing our young people—now it is the children and younger young people. If this is to continue our church will not survive, and we shall have failed to fulfill our purpose as members. Our greatest contribution to society is to save our children for Zion's endeavors. This has been my growing conviction for a long while.

To educate our children in our religious belief, we have provided for them such activities as vacation church school, summer camps, and the regular church school class on Sunday mornings. We also have Boy Scouts, girls' organizations, reunions—and still, we learn, we are losing our children.

I am heartily in favor of these various activities, but it is clear that these alone are not enough. Where, then, shall we turn? It is time to look to the home; it is time we assume the full responsibility of parenthood.

It is not enough for us to provide food, clothing, and shelter. These, of course, are essential. It is important also for the proper growth of children that we have a blessing at the table and daily worship in the family. It is important that we read the church school lesson to the younger members of the family—or see that they are encouraged to read and provide the time for them to do so. All of these activities are good and important—but still, without more, they are not enough for a child's true spiritual nurture. To save our children, to rear them for the kingdom, we must be on the job more than this.

Beyond these essential provisions we must give our children a testimony; we must live in such a way they will know that what we seek to tell them is true. We have to live with them in the most abundant way.

I WANT OUR DAUGHTER to have the activities the church provides, but I also want time with her. If her life is so crowded with summer activities, and if my time and energies are so expended outside the home that I can't have some time with her, I will be most unhappy. Without being proud, and in due respect to other sources of influence, I believe that she would not develop and grow as she should without the care I can and should provide beyond the physical necessities.

In our home I want our girl to receive some spiritual blessings as well as material blessings. It is at home that I want her to learn something of the art of being a homemaker—and it is only at home that she will learn adequately the essentials of that art. In our home I want her to find companionship, happiness, and fellowship; and to make that possible I want to play with her, read to her, sing with her, and worship with her.

One night while my husband was attending elders' retreat, my six-year-old daughter and I were alone. After our worship together she had several questions, going from why her daddy went to this meeting without us and why he was an elder, to his work and our relation to the church. Then, before she went to bed, she said, "Mother, I wish Jesus would come tomorrow." I tried to explain to her how we must live so we will be ready to meet him when he comes. Then she added, "When he comes, can we invite him to dinner, and ask him to stay all night? And if I am still a little girl can he sleep on the other twin bed in my room?" I wouldn't have missed this experience for all the church activities and other interests to which I might give myself.

Let's have the church school, the vacation church school, the Scouts, the Skylarks, the Orioles, and reunions; but basically and first of all, let's have good homes! All of these are important and should be earnestly supported, but the true function of such activities is only to supplement the home. We should not expect them to take the place of the home and perform for our children all the ministry they—and God—have a right to expect from us as parents.

Begin the Day With Prayer

*Each morning lean thine arms awhile
Upon the window sill of heaven,
And gaze upon thy Lord.
Then, with the vision in thy heart,
Turn strong to meet the day.*

When we pray and are in tune with God, it seems the blessings from heaven flood our being. Prayer is one of the greatest provisions God has made for his children. It not only takes us to the very throne of God but brings God into our hearts. It opens the windows of our soul, and we are blessed by God's Spirit coming in and strengthening us.

We are told to "pray always and faint not." In everything we attempt we should ask God's blessing that our acts may be in harmony with his will. Prayer avails much. We should be in the attitude of prayer continually. We need not always be praying for things but thinking upon God's goodness to us and thanking him for the many blessings he has bestowed. He wants us to be a praying people and also a thankful and happy people. We should begin today.

The Church at the Fair

By Don Landon

WOULD YOU EXPECT to find the message of Christ at a fair?

Perhaps such a thing would surprise you as it did many fair-goers in the Seattle-Everett area in Washington.

The Everett Branch and Seattle District are giving a new twist to the missionary endeavor in the Northwest. Not content just to see the gospel being preached from the pulpit and portrayed on the screen, the Saints in this area feel that fair-goers should hear of Christ's message and be acquainted with his church. So for the second consecutive year, the Saints in Everett and Seattle District have sponsored a missionary booth at the Evergreen State Fair in Monroe, Washington.

The story behind the booth is an intriguing one. Three years ago, Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs, missionary to the Northwest, was talking with the Everett Saints about missionary activity in that area. Rather jokingly and yet with a touch of seriousness, he dropped the comment that the fair held in near-by Monroe offered some good missionary opportunity for the church. Sister Helen Gilberts of Everett picked up the idea right away and was quite enthusiastic. Brother Gibbs left the area and thought little more of the idea until the next fall when fair season was approaching. A few weeks prior to the fair, the Everett Saints informed Brother Gibbs that they had rented a booth and were expecting him to come during fair week and be in the booth. He was quite surprised that the idea had really taken hold and even more surprised to find a booth already rented and waiting for decorations.

SEEING the possibilities of the booth and the seriousness of intent on the part of the branch, Brother Gibbs rallied his forces and went to the fair grounds in September of 1950 with crepe paper, tacks, pins, drapes, posters, tracts, slides, and a three-by-four-foot picture of Christ. With a trained dog show on one side and a Sears-Roebuck display on the other, Brother Gibbs was soon filling the booth and the aisle with interested spectators as he showed pictures of Hawaii, Mexico, and the Northwest, and illustrated the Gog and Magog prophecy in the thirty-eighth chapter of Ezekiel. This was just to be a beginning. That first year Brother Gibbs, with the help of High Priest Paul Wellington, pastor of the Seattle First Branch, distributed hundreds of tracts and contacted hundreds of people. One entire family was baptized as a direct result of the fair booth that first year. The value of the publicity work done for the church can only be estimated.

This year the message of Christ was again found at the Evergreen State Fair. Brother Gibbs was back with slides of Mexico, Hawaii, and a new set of pictures taken in Alaska. He had just returned from missionary activities in Alaska three days before the fair opened. With him in the booth this year was Don Landon, missionary to the Northwest also, recently appointed by the General Church. Profiting by the experience of the previous year, and with a great deal more confidence, those in charge of the booth made it an even more successful project this year.

MANY OF THE SAME fair personnel were back this year. The World Book man was in his booth directly across from ours the same as last year. He welcomed us, and we became good friends with him, as we did with others in surrounding booths. The Sears-Roebuck display was back again on our left. On our right was a man who sold all-purpose shredders and slicers. We each bought a slicer and evidently we sold something of our message to him also, for as he left he contributed four of his slicers to the church.

We gave away over a thousand pieces of church literature and books, and we estimate that ten thousand people visited our booth during the week. We cannot immediately determine the amount of good done in terms of baptisms and conversions, nor can we accurately estimate the amount of good done in terms of publicizing the church, but comments from fair-goers indicated that there should be more of this type of thing.

The missionary booth wasn't the only church-sponsored activity at the fair. The women of Everett Branch had a cafeteria on the fair grounds which fed hundreds of people daily. It, too, was highly successful, as the patrons agreed that the "Evergreen" cafeteria was the place to eat. The chorus of comment from those who ate there blended into the phrase, "We are coming back." And they did . . . sometimes until 2:00 in the morning.

Without a doubt the message of Christ will continue coming to the fair at Monroe. The booth this year came to be respected by patrons of the fair as well as many other booth-keepers throughout the fair grounds. While raspy-voiced harkers sold kitchen gadgets on one side, excited farm folk tried to guess the weight of a porker on the other side, and the World Book agent sat sedately across the aisle, the message of Christ was proclaimed in word, in picture, and in writing, emphatically and with dignity.

Christ came to the fair—and was heard.

Time for the Soul

A FRIEND OF MINE, a distinguished explorer who spent a couple of years among the savages of the upper Amazon, once attempted a forced march through the jungle. The party made extraordinary speed for the first two days, but on the third morning, when it was time to start, my friend found all the natives sitting on their haunches, looking very solemn and making no preparation to leave.

"They are waiting," the chief explained to my friend. "They cannot move farther until their souls have caught up with their bodies."

I can think of no better illustration of our own plight today. Is there no way of letting our souls, so to say, catch up with our bodies? If one thinks over the sort of life led in innumerable homes a generation ago, our immense speeding up in the process of living today is clear. People then, as we say, "had time." Now, no one "has time."—James Truslow Adams, The Tempo of Modern Life (Boni)

Graceland Football Team Visits West Coast

GRACELAND ALUMNI of southern California have had their "homecoming" though several will probably attend the festivities on the campus in October. Occasion for this west coast homecoming was the long anticipated football game between Graceland College and Compton Junior College of Compton, California, on Thursday, September 27.

Serving as temporary contact men for Graceland, Jack Van Eaton and Thomas R. Beil began an early campaign of publicity and ticket-selling which reached a high point on the night of the game, September 27, when over six hundred Graceland Alumni, friends, and future Gracelanders occupied two cheering sections in the Compton stadium. Hugh Kensler of Santa Paula, California, a Graceland alum who is serving the Southern California District of the church as youth leader, rounded up well over two hundred backers from all over southern California, while Jack Van Eaton, another Graceland youth leader for Los Angeles Stake, led the campaign in the metropolitan area.

The players from Graceland arrived in Los Angeles on Tuesday, September 25, and were housed at the Lankershim Hotel. That evening, rest was the order of their coach, Richard Carter, after they had a short scrimmage at Occidental College field. Wednesday gave the members of the team an opportunity to see the city of Los Angeles, the Pacific Ocean beaches, a few interesting sights, and a chance for another team practice in Temple City.

On Wednesday evening the thirty-five team members, Coach Carter, E. E. Closson, and James Burdick of the Graceland faculty, joined with the youth of Los Angeles Stake at Central Los Angeles Church in a rally led by Stake President Garland E. Tickemyer. Well over three hundred attended this event and enjoyed the rich fellowship. Members of Los Angeles were quite impressed by the fact that Graceland numbers among its football players nineteen young men who have been ordained as members of the priesthood.

The fact that the game on Thursday evening was lost to Compton with a score of 30-0 had no effect on the keenness of Graceland spirit and fellowship which prevailed throughout the evening. All who were present thrilled at the fine playing of both teams and agreed that they would like to see the West Coast trip of the Graceland team become an annual event. Even the Long Beach Youth Band seemed eager to repeat the performance.

Practically all of the six hundred moved from the stadium to the Student Union Building which was offered by the Compton Junior College officials for a "homecoming-like" reception following the game. Though the hour was late, the usual Graceland fellowship prevailed through the singing and several program items which had been arranged. Refreshments were served by the Usherettes, a group of hostesses under the leadership of Mrs. C. P. Conrad of the Compton Junior College staff.

The team boarded its bus for the return trip early Friday morning, September 28. The thirty-five boys, most of them Midwesterners should have many an interesting tale to tell back on the campus because of the experiences they had "out west."

into one district to be known as the Saskatchewan District.

By mutual consent of the agents concerned and our office, Brother E. W. B. Baker will serve as agent for the Saskatchewan District. Solicitors should send their monthly reports to E. W. B. Baker, 1117 Avenue A North, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. We are happy to have Brother Baker accept this increased responsibility and commend him to the Saints for their support and co-operation.

We take this opportunity of expressing our gratitude to J. W. Mountenay for his good services as our agent in the former Southern Saskatchewan District. We are most appreciative of his testimony of rich rewards found in his work as agent in the past and of his willingness to continue to serve this department as solicitor for the Regina Branch. Our sincere good wishes are extended to all the Saints in this district reorganization.

New Bishop's Agent, Owen Sound District

Notice is hereby given that Brother Alex Cadwell, bishop's agent of the Owen Sound District, is appointed as agent to receive reports and remittances of all tithes and general church offerings contributed in Canada.

All agents and solicitors formerly sending funds and reports to Bishop J. E. Baldwin should, beginning with their September reports, address all such correspondence to Mr. Alex Cadwell, Box 382, Guelph, Ontario.

We have appreciated the excellent support given Bishop Baldwin by the Canadian Saints. With the transfer of Bishop Baldwin to the Southern Mission, we are happy to have Brother Cadwell assume the responsibility of handling reports, general church funds, official church receipts, Duplex envelopes, etc., in Canada, in addition to his work as bishop's agent of the Owen Sound District. We commend him to the Saints for their support and co-operation.

gotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Modern revelation says that no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love. Again it says, "See that ye love one another; cease to find fault with one another and above all things clothe yourselves with the bonds of charity."

The Apostle Paul says, "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true; whatsoever things are honest; whatsoever things are just; whatsoever things are pure; whatsoever things are lovely; whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things." And the poet says, "The night has a thousand eyes and the day but one, yet the light of the bright world dies with the dying sun. The mind has a thousand eyes, and the heart but one; yet the light of a whole life dies, when love is done."

The keys of the kingdom are ours—ours to unlock the treasures of life. Only when we attach ourselves to the simple things shall the simple keys unlock the passageway to the greater treasures. Then, and then only, shall we learn to live in that abundant life promised to us by the Master.

incorporated in a body, namely, institutional religion. This is a simple law of life: values are manifested through material bodies. Destroy the body, and you silence the spirit. Those who weaken institutional religion by the attrition of neglect unwittingly render a great service to those antidemocratic societies seeking to destroy religion, the fountain-head of democracy's ideology.

We have an obligation to God, to our country, and to ourselves to be true to the religion of our choice. If we would keep the forest, we must keep the trees; if we would keep the light, we must keep the sun; if we would keep our inalienable rights, we must keep our God; and if we would keep democratic society strong in the face of aggression, we must maintain and support our religion.

* HOW TO BE FRIENDLY WITH CHILDREN

When one is visiting in a home, he likes to be friendly with the children as well as with the grown members of the family.

There are right ways and wrong ways to approach children. It is unfortunate for them that many adults who would like to be friendly do not know how.

Children should be treated as people. They aren't pets, nor toys, nor cute animals, nor members of an inferior race.

The visiting adult should respect the rights of children. He shouldn't make any passes at them, pick them up unless they want to be taken, or force himself upon them.

The way to begin with a child is to love him in your own mind and heart, without making any move toward him. That is all, and that is enough. If you really like the child he has his own ways of knowing, which you may not understand. Just wait, and give him time to size you up and become used to your presence. He is observing you, probably more closely than you are observing him. His sharp eyes take in more than yours do.

Unless he has been mistreated by other adults, he will come around to you after a while and show you a toy or something, or put his hand on your knee, or show some other sign of interest. If he does, smile and be friendly. From there on, use restraint and good judgment.

A child does not like to be taken by physical force by gigantic strangers. He doesn't enjoy being turned upside down, being playfully spanked, having his hair tousled, or his nose pushed like the button of a doorbell (even if there is a vague resemblance), or being tickled in the ribs. If you pick up a pup or a kitten, it will wriggle out of your arms as soon as possible. A child feels the same way. He likes to be on his own feet. Incidentally, the parents will like you better, too, if you aren't too free with the children.

When the child finds out that you are civilized enough to regard him as a human being and as a real member of the family, he appreciates it.

If you really want to be friendly with a child, be interested in what he is doing at the moment. Talk to him about his toys or whatever he is playing with. If he appears to be busy, don't butt in. If he looks into your face, he is ready to talk a little. Use simple words, but don't "talk down" to him. If he is five or under, you may find it better to get down on the floor where he can look you in the eye. This will relieve his neck from the strain of looking up, and he will feel equal with you. Your hostess may be surprised or amused, but she will survive if you succeed with the child. He will not be shocked.

In getting acquainted with children, it is wise to be objective. He is probably an extrovert. Talk about things first rather than about him.

A final warning: Don't spend all your time visiting with the child, as too many do. Parents are also people and like to be noticed. A mother appreciates having people adore her cute infant, but she is a person too—more than a mere biological factor in the production of a child. The child will not be jealous or envious if you visit with his parents.

ACTIVE IN HIGH SCHOOL

Among the young people of the Center Stake who are serving in various high school activities at William Chrisman are Carol Collins, editor of the school yearbook "The Gleam"; Ruth Ann Ziegenhorn, editor of the bi-weekly school paper "The Envoy"; and Art Club officers Norma Cranmer, president; Beverly Wilson, vice-president; Virginia Jennings, secretary; and Judy Hall reporter.

SPEAKS AT FORT SCOTT

John Blackmore, General Church Historian, preached at Fort Scott, Kansas, September 30. The theme of his sermon was "The impact of modern life upon the home." Brother Blackmore also lectured in the evening.

STAKE NEWS

Classes for the priesthood of the Center Stake of Zion began October 1 at the Stone Church. The classes are held on Monday evenings in six weekly sessions for both Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthood. A total of 340 men attended the opening session. The course of study is "Sources of Spiritual Power."

The women of the stake held the first preparation day October 4. These meetings are held the first Thursday of each month during the year, except for the summer months.

The average attendance for the first six months of 1951 at church services has been 42 per cent of the total enrolled membership or an increase of 11 per cent over last year's attendance. An increase of an average of 426 persons per Sunday has been noted. A church school attendance increase has been 10 per cent over the same period of time last year, or an average of 338 persons per Sunday at church school.

MESLE ATTENDS CONFERENCE

A youth conference was held at Council Bluffs, Iowa, September 22 and 23. Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, attended the conference and spoke on several occasions. District President Charles Putnam and retiring district youth director, Paul Harding, directed the activities. The attendance at the banquet, held at Eagle's Hall, exceeded 100.

SCOUT RETREAT HELD

The second annual retreat for Scouts and Scout leaders of the church faith in the Center Stake was held at Gardner Lake September 29 and 30. The theme of the retreat was "A Scout Is Faithful in His Religious Duties." The retreat was under the direction of Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, and Lee Hart, stake young people's supervisor, assisted by local leaders. An attendance of 100 was noted.

SPEAKS AT GRACELAND

F. Henry Edwards of the First Presidency preached at the morning church service at Graceland College October 7. He met with the college priesthood, of which there are ninety-five, in the afternoon.

Mrs. Vinnie G. Hatch

BEING THE HEAD HOUSEMOTHER to student nurses has been the work of Sister Hatch for the past seven years. She began her work in the old Nurses' Home a block east of the Sanitarium building now used as the Nurses' Home. Of course, the number of students has doubled since then, and this large building is now "bursting at the seams" to hold the 83 of the 105 girls enrolled in the School of Nursing. Each room has two single beds, and a few have three. This picture was taken in Mrs. Hatch's combined bedroom and parlor. On the wall may be seen some of her hobby work. Each graduate nurse gets one of these crocheted pot holders when she marries.

Being a mother to four girls and boys of her own has made the "House-mother" job a little easier for Sister Hatch. Her daughter Lois (Mrs. Clifton Resch, Jr.) lives in Minneapolis, Minnesota, as does her son Harrison. Her daughter V. Betty (Mrs. N. C. Thompson) lives in Essex, Vermont. Lorraine (Mrs. C. L. Painter) lives in Neosho, Missouri. She also has seven grandchildren.

Mother Hatch was born, baptized, and educated in Dow City, Iowa. After finishing high school she attended Graceland, majoring in music. She taught music before her marriage to Leroy C. Hatch. She has a record of thirty-six years' teaching in Dow City, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Independence, Missouri. A fourth generation Latter Day Saint on her mother's side, she especially enjoys studying the Book of Mormon. Besides counseling the girls, she is assistant librarian of the school of nursing. The picture shows her "in conference" with Shirley Ratcliffe of Arlington, Virginia.

Only One Pair of Hands

"Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be ye strong, fear not."—Isaiah 35: 3, 4.

Sometimes friendly readers come to the office and suggest a topic for an editorial. This one had such a beginning.

The "Wheel of Fortune" was a familiar theme in medieval literature, and the poet Chaucer included it in the lore that he gathered into his Canterbury Tales. That wheel turns slowly and inexorably, he said, lifting some from obscurity into prominence and power, and carrying others down from riches and fame to poverty and woe. And that "Wheel of Fortune" is still turning invisibly today.

This visiting friend told a true story of something that happened in England during the last war. In the terrible destruction of the bombing, great losses were sustained—fortunes, homes, and lives. In one noble family all perished but a lone woman. With nothing left, and with no skill or knowledge of business, she who had been served by others was obliged to seek employment as a servant. A great readjustment was necessary. It was very difficult for her. She learned how much was expected of servants, the humiliations they suffered, and how hard their lives were.

Tasks were heaped upon her until she was in despair. One day when new orders came, she exclaimed, "But I only have one pair of hands!"

Another servant, a man, tried to help her understand. "Those who serve must learn to carry many burdens," he said. "They must find ways for their hands to do what seems impossible. They must be strong." The other servants, knowing her background, helped her until she was able to do for herself.

Every day we face our limitations. The tired mother, with all the demands of a thousand household tasks and the needs of her children, has only one pair of hands. The mechanic at his bench, the operator at his machine, the carpenter in his shop, the typist at her desk, the bookkeeper with his ledgers, the saleswoman besieged by shoppers—each has only one pair of hands, and so much is demanded of them. The executive at his desk faces mounting problems by day and by night, and for meeting all of them he has only one tired brain. Even editors, facing piles of manuscripts and letters that must be answered, sometimes see the pages blur before their vision. So much must be seen, and they have only one pair of eyes to do it.

Sometimes life seems to demand too much. It is more than we can bear, but we can't quit. So we pray for strength and go on.

* * * *

In conditions such as these, the best thing we can do is to help each other. The day that I am strong and you are weak, I should help you. When you are strong and I am weak, you should help me. "Strengthen ye the weak hands," said Isaiah. Jesus told the story of the Good Samaritan, commending his helpfulness.

Joab said to his brother in the heat of battle, "If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will come and help thee."—II Samuel 10: 11. Both the Syrians and the Ammonites were defeated that day.

The pagan way of life is every man for himself. The gospel way is for all who can give help to do so wherever it is needed. Strong friends can help and save each other. "Only one pair of hands!"

Yet how wonderful those hands are. What adept tools. How ingeniously they are devised. What an infinite number of tasks they can perform when trained and directed by intelligence. They are the servants of the mind and spirit.

The oriental department in the art gallery has a statue of an imaginary Hindu god, Siva, with three pairs of arms and hands. I know a kitchen where such a servant would be useful. However, the top end of the creature resembles an octopus. Imagine the trouble he would have putting on a coat!

No, Siva will not do. He is strictly a human invention. Too many hands would get him into trouble. God has nothing to do with such a monster. He gave us just one pair of hands. He knows they will be enough if we use them properly.

* * * *

In older days school children were expected to learn a number of good poems to be recited when programs were given. Some of those verses linger in memory. One, by Ellen Allerton, had this stanza:

Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is honest and brave and true, Moment by moment the long day through.

Mother's small careworn hands are beautiful. Father's work-hardened, calloused hands are strong and reassuring. The touch of a friend's hand can give great encouragement when it is needed. Hands are so expressive; they have a language of their own, and every position or movement reveals something of the state of mind of their owner.

Hands are most noble when they engage in service to God and to men. In that service, they attain their truest beauty.

We're Going to Finish the Auditorium

WE'RE GOING TO FINISH the Auditorium" is a positive statement that will receive warm welcome from progressive, deep-visioned members of the church everywhere around the globe.

Think about it for a moment—we're going to finish the auditorium! It means the culmination of the vision and concentrated effort of a prophet and people who, in 1920, sensed the need and took initial steps on the difficult pathway. It means affirmative answer to the hopes, aspirations, and prayers of patient, yet determined, Saints who gather for General Conferences and sense the need for a completed structure. It means additional strength through efficiency to the officers, leading quorums, and department personnel who headquarter at the Auditorium. It means achievement, which has ever been synonymous with the church of Jesus Christ. It means a better organization because of improved conditions at the place where the program of that organization germinates. It means the glorification of a sacred ideal; the rise to new heights of the very purpose of the church—the Gathering—which is symbolized by the Auditorium as it thus becomes the guidepost, the unflinching light in the center of the world.

Yes, it's true—we're going to finish the Auditorium! It's literally true. All of us, working together in a manner characteristic of Reorganized Latter Day Saints, will see the task through—and in a comparatively short time.

A PLAN OF ACTION

Here's the plan: as indicated by the Presidency and Bishopric in official articles in the last issue of the Herald, a campaign is being inaugurated to raise $500,000 by the end of 1953. The goals are $100,000 during the remainder of this year, $200,000 in 1952, and $200,000 the following year. As expressed by Bishop DeLapp, it is contemplated that the money will be expended on the front of the building, the foyer, and the interior. This work will progress during the campaign as funds are received.

Although an over-all campaign is being developed, we are immediately concerned with the accumulation of $100,000. According to schedule, this must be done by December 31. Accordingly, the date of November 18, 1951, has been set as the opening for this important endeavor. Letters and directives are being mailed to pastors, district presidents, and bishop's representatives so that preparation can be made for special emphasis in every congregation on that Sunday.

While a special offering will be taken, there are other means of making your donation. You may send it directly to the Presiding Bishopric or hand it to a solicitor, bishop's agent, or pastor. Please keep in mind that this is an offering and is not intended to affect the program of tithing. However, your offering may be made according to the principle of surplus as outlined at the 1950 conference. If this is the case, contact the Presiding Bishop direct.

Quotas are being assigned and will be revealed to you by the leader of your local congregation. Because of the expediency of this project, you will want to give immediate attention to your plans to participate.

WHY FINISH THE AUDITORIUM?

The Auditorium was conceived and started because of the recognition of a need and the willingness to do something about it. The church was growing. Space was needed to house the General Conferences as well as other large meetings related to a church organization of such size and potential.

So obvious was the need, so vivid was the vision, and so prevalent was the spirit of consecration of the people at the 1920 conference that, not only was approval to build granted, but $65,000 was subscribed in just a few moments following.

Much has been accomplished over the years since that vital action was taken. The Auditorium as it now stands has served well for many purposes over the years. But because we do not want to leave undone such an important undertaking, because we need to finish the task for reasons of efficient operation, and because of the utter necessity for a tangible, useful structure representative and symbolical of the church and its divine calling, the statement "We're going to finish the Auditorium," becomes synonymous in spirit, determination, and purpose with the challenge, "We're going to build," heard round the world in the twenties.

The Auditorium is more than a place to house large meetings. Important as that function is in itself, it becomes justifiable only when we enlarge our vision and determine the real, deep-seated purposes of the conferences and reflect on the experiences of those affairs. For instance, as we recall the beauty, dignity, and spiritual quality of the Communion services held at the beginning of each General Conference, the Auditorium becomes an oasis for spiritual refreshment.

We become reverently proud when flags of many nations are unfurled. That demonstration reminds us that the message of salvation is echoing around the world; we experience a feeling of achievement.

The audiences at the Conferences are truly cosmopolitan, as delegations gather from all parts of the globe to form a legislative body that shall concern itself with the promulgation of the message of hope and peace. Suddenly the phrase, "Auditorium—World Headquarters," becomes meaningful in the deeper recesses of our understanding.

The Auditorium, functioning as designed, is a shrine for persons and events conceived and dedicated to purposes divinely appointed. This purpose is obvious when we call to the forefront of our thinking those "lump-in-the-throat" experiences which have characterized Reorganized Latter Day Saintism and Auditorium meetings down through the years.

MEMORIES AND VISIONS

Remember the times when there has risen to preside men, always large in stature, who carried the name and responsibility of modern prophets of God. And because of their attitudes, wisdom, revealed convictions, expressions of love, and because of the confirming influence of the Spirit of God in the Conference,

Together We Write the Next Chapter

By Dr. Floyd M. McDowell

Graceland College Convocation Address, Sept. 13, 1951

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. . . . And God said, Let there be light: and there was light. And God saw the light, that it was good: And God divided the light from the darkness. . . . And God said, Let us make man in our own image.

LAST SUNDAY I heard two very simple and yet most significant sentences uttered from this platform. The first by Velma Ruch: "Something must happen at Graceland this year." The second by President Cheville: "This must be a great year for Graceland." Now personally I did not consider such as mere talk. To me it was not an overdose of Pollyanna, nor was it an attempt on the part of anyone to build up his own reputation or to make a good record for the year. Indeed, something must happen! And when we heard those words, we knew they were true. They touched the very depths of our souls. They found roots in the past, they found color in the vision of the future. They summoned all to courageous endeavor. The victories contemplated will not be easily achieved. What we have done and what we are doing is not good enough. A united endeavor such as has never yet been cared for would be required. Indeed the summons, "This must be a great year at Graceland," is the handwriting on the wall of the present-day world. It is the voice of the eternal God summoning us to unfinished tasks. This is where we come in. This is our day. This is the divine imperative. Imperative, Webster says, means a command, a directive, something not to be avoided or evaded, obligatory, binding. Divine? Well, we shall see. What briefly are some of the sources of this directive "must" which our president used with such conviction? I haven't asked him, but I think I know some of them.

In the Beginning God

Such is the title of the first chapter of an ongoing, unfinished story. We are here to write the next chapter of that story. Those who don't know that and those who do not believe it have yet to learn what Graceland College is all about. The "must" for this year stems from the fact of God. It is this eternal truth that shall yet unite and save our fragmented world. From him alone stems that eternal love which shall mold men into brotherhood and peace. In him alone do we find our purpose. Aye, that purpose which is our purpose was in the heart and mind of God from the beginning of time. Our purpose is heaven sent.

The second chapter, the second source of this divine imperative "must" might read This is my Beloved Son, hear him. This imperative stems from the fact of Christ, from him as the supreme gift of God's love, from his sacrificial life and death, from his message, the power of God unto salvation for all mankind. It stems from his commission, "Go ye, therefore and teach all nations"; from his promise, "Lo, I shall be with you always, even unto the end of the world." The divine mandate, "Hear him," is more necessary and more significant for higher education today than ever before in the history of education. Graceland must lead the way in this or betray its trust.

I Will Build My Church

The "must" for Graceland stems from the fact that the church we represent is indeed the very church of Christ. It bears his name, teaches his laws, seeks to build his kingdom. Graceland has no unique significance, no reason for existence separate from that church. Graceland succeeds or fails, advances or declines with that church. The divinely appointed tasks of that church are the divinely appointed tasks of Graceland: "Prosecute the missionary work at home and abroad, as far and as widely as you may"; "Seek to bring forth and establish my Zion." Graceland's unique contribution to education will be an educational program devoted to these purposes.

It's the Way We Have at Graceland

Such could be the title of the next chapter. Graceland's "must" for the 1951-52 year stems from all that constitutes the spirit of Graceland. The poet has said,

Spirit of Graceland,
Those thy path hath trod
Found Thee the spirit
Of the living God.

Have you read Through the West Door? I hereby solemnly and officially assign each of you that wonderful privilege. If you haven't read it, do so right away. If you've read it once, read it again. Read about Marietta Walker, Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, J. A. Gunsolley, and G. N. Briggs. You who would know what Graceland is all about, you who would know the price of this heritage, you who would learn of the men and women who dreamed of these buildings—for they were only dreams in those days—should read this book. They didn't have Gunsolley Hall; they didn't have the Student Center; they didn't have Briggs Hall; they didn't have Zimmermann Hall nor Walker Hall. Read the story of the vision and faith and courage and struggle and privation and seeming defeat out of which these buildings were born and the soul of Graceland was achieved. "It's a way we have at Graceland" wasn't meant to be a trite slogan or an excuse for sure trivial folly. "The way we have at Graceland" must be nothing other than the way of Christ.

And God Had a Voice in It

Will I be forgiven here for a bit of personal testimony? "And God had a voice in it," I quote from Through the West Door. The words refer to your speaker, and they are true. The "must" for me this year at Graceland, as I work with you, stems from the experiences of forty-four years which have provided multiplying evidences of the guiding hand of the Heavenly Father. During those years I was a freshman, a sophomore, a parent, a dean, a graduate student on leave, a church official, a trustee. Indeed, I never have been entirely dissociated from Graceland College during those forty-four years. I am here this year representing the church to which I have given the best I have. I am here to work for the Graceland that I have loved as I have loved my own family. I ask you to accept my record and my word that I have no other motive among you than to answer the call of God to me. For God had a voice in it.

The Way of Man Shall Come to Naught

There are no more prophetic words in the Doctrine and Covenants than those reminding us that the ways of men shall come to naught, but not the ways of God. Such have been literally fulfilled in our day. Here is a brief synthesis of the views of scores of present-day writers, statesmen, scholars, educators:

Civilization is sick, nigh unto death. We have built for ourselves unprecedented power in mechanical conveniences. We have acquired knowledge of facts, yet life is fragmented and warring. The very products of our genius threaten our undoing. We have not built our inner resources to control or direct our material power. We know how but not why. There is more lostness in the world today than ever before. The problem is moral. The problem is spiritual. It has to do with values. It is rooted in the quality of our lives. The only answer is moral power. A new life is demanded—a life that is strong and courageous because it is rooted in Almighty God.

All our prattle about brotherhood and peace and democracy will be of no avail, for our ethics is not rooted in God. Like cut flowers severed from their roots, they are beautiful today and withered tomorrow. The ideals which so-called educated people mouth as pious platitudes have their rootage in the souls of people who believed in God. They will be perpetuated only by people who believe and worship that God. Here is a "must" for Graceland, and we will be untrue to our trust if we fail.

To Be Learned Is Good if They Harken Unto the Councils of God

Or perhaps, "Seek learning by study and also by faith." Such could well be the title of another chapter in our story. In this, and in the confessed failure of education without God, comes another "must" for Graceland today. Sir Walter Moberly, said by many to have produced the most significant book on higher education in this generation, has this to say on the fundamental religious issue, the existence of God:

The modern university intends it to be, and supposes it is neutral, but it is not. It is a fallacy to suppose that by omitting a subject you teach nothing about it. On the contrary, you teach that it is to be omitted, and that is therefore a matter of secondary importance. In this the universities today are implicit if not intentionally hostile to the Christian faith and even to a liberal humanism.

Education today comes to confess that leaving out God, it has come to naught, as the boy prophet declared it would. Dr. George Buttrick says:

One of the sorriest assumptions of secular education is its assumption that it makes no assumption. Actually, it makes one whacking assumption that life is secular.

Educators come now to declare the falsity of this philosophy and of this practice.

Because of Thy Righteousness

A "must" for Graceland today arises from the collapse of moral standards even among so-called educated people. Dr. John Haines Holmes of New York says:

I have never before seen moral standards in America so low as they are now. Something very serious has happened to the moral fiber of this generation; like a human body, a society can fall victim to a disease and die of it as Toynbee and other historians have demonstrated. This country is in moral danger today. It could die as other societies have died. Americans are trying to live without God, and it cannot be done.

Supreme Court Justice Jackson declares:

It is one of the paradoxes of our time that modern society needs to fear little except man. And what is worse, it needs to fear only the educated man, and technical competent people. If education is to be the instrument of our improvement, it should be constantly aware of its mission.

When those who care—your parents and your instructors—urge you to be decent, clean, and wholesome, and to eliminate from your individual and group lives the folly and sin, the lust and greed of the present day, they are not talking just to hear themselves talk. They are summoning you to the challenge of the ages, the challenge of your better selves, the challenge that is written across the heavens. Hear me, education without morality is doomed!

President Cheville, I join you wholeheartedly and with the deepest conviction and pledge with all my power to support you in carrying out these divine imperatives during the year 1951-52. This requires, as you of the faculty and others have repeatedly emphasized, that we build together here a genuine Christian, Zionite community, deeply grounded in God and outreaching in all of its relationships to church, to community, to parents, to homes, to branches, to all nations of the world—a community that can be increasingly characterized as the kingdom of God, the Zion of our dreams. I understand too, that this requires each of us in our daily lives to so discipline ourselves that our attitudes, and practices, and pattern of living shall be consistent with citizenship in this kind of a community. As a servant of God and this church, I challenge you to a type of citizenship that excels anything about you in the world today. That's the divine imperative. Under your leadership, Dr. Cheville, we are here to conduct a great laboratory in Christian living.

Specifically—in case my generalities have not been understood—this includes among other things that you learn “what goes” and what does not go at Graceland, and learn it soon. Get out of the bleachers and onto the playing field. Get under the load and lift. Gripe a little if you must, but don't make a pattern of it. To be sure, it is a long way out to the college and the roads are muddy, and the sidewalks are worse. But don't try to tell Dr. Platz about it. He's been coming out that road for twenty-five years. And if you think it's cold—and it is terribly cold on winter mornings—don't try to tell Dr. Cheville how cold it is. He knows. I've known some who set their watches daily at 7:00 a.m. when they see the light in his office turned on. I was going to tell something about the good old days—about carrying tin tubs, and old-fashioned oilstoves, and water upstairs and then after heating the water and taking our baths, carrying the whole array downstairs again. I was going to say that that was tough, but I take my hat off to the Gunsolley Hall fellows. Boy, what a story they're going to have to tell their grandchildren.

If the standards for citizenship on this campus require reasonable hours in dormitories, then keep reasonable hours, unless you want a dormitory life that is so utterly chaotic no one gets any time for study or meditation. If the deans, and others who care, say the hour has struck for a new standard of relationship between sexes on Graceland's campus, and that most if not all of us are a bit tired of the growing practice of displaying affection in public, cut it out. Work when you're supposed to work. Take a job and see it through. If you're getting paid for it, give value received. Attend classes and master your subjects. If you're supposed to be at assembly, be at assembly. That's citizenship in the kingdom of God. Respect the rights of others. Respect the personality of others. Respect yourself enough to watch your health, and your food, and your sleep. Emphasize quality more than quantity—not three hours of credit, but how effectively you have explored the subject. Stay on the job. One student attended classes in Lamoni at Graceland Monday to Friday, and attended “college” in Independence on week ends. It's just no go.

Control your associations, balance your life, put in a proper proportion of work, of play, of love, and of worship. Integrate your personality. If ever we are to have a stewardship program, let's have it here this year. If ever there is to be a Zion, let's live Zionically here. If someday we are to live and work peacefully with our fellow-men, let's work peacefully among ourselves this year. This includes the faculty too. If ever we are to clean our lives from the lust and greed of the world about us, let's clean up and stay clean now. If we love Christ let's prove our love for him by keeping his commandments daily. If someday we hope to build with God his kingdom, let's build with him now.

Against this background of these divine imperatives and with all of the earnestness and conviction at my command, I ask that we join forces to write the next chapter of this story of the ages.

we knew they stood for truth and were capable indeed of interpreting the mind and will of God.

Remember the occasions when vigorous debate has dominated the business meetings. Despite impatience, our conclusion has always been that ours is a genuine demonstration of democracy.

Remember the cultural programs of music afforded by choirs, orchestras, and solo artists. All these things, and the hundreds not mentioned, are evidences that the Auditorium is a shrine for eternal verities.

Those are some of the purposes of the Auditorium. There are others, many of which will be discussed later in the campaign. But, whether now or later, it is important that all our people catch a vision of the real function of the Auditorium. Those who do will sense how inseparable are the Auditorium and program of the church. Then the completion of it will be paramount in all minds and hearts. Thus, success is assured.

Those are some of the reasons the Auditorium needs completion. As expressed by Bishop DeLapp, this is a task which will require consecrated and sustained effort in the months which are ahead, but we believe that it is one which we can successfully achieve without undue hardship upon the members of the church, and without diminution of our other activities.

Yes, we're going to finish the Auditorium!

One Day on the Road to Jericho

The drama of the Good Samaritan as it might have been told by the chief actors.

The Inn Keeper: Long ago I kept an inn on the road to Jericho. It was not the best inn in the world, nor the worst, but to it came many interesting people—Jews, Samaritans, Greeks, Romans, Egyptians; soldiers, priests, rulers, and thieves.

I remember one incident in particular. One day as I was looking down the trail I saw a man approaching, leading a donkey. He guided the beast with one hand and with the other supported another man who was sprawled across the back of the donkey, apparently too ill or too drunk to sit erect.

There were many bandits along the road, and I soon learned that the man on the donkey was a traveler who had been set upon by bandits and beaten and robbed. Like myself, he was a Jew. To my surprise I found the other man to be a Samaritan, and Samaritans were people of whom I had a very bad opinion. This man had dressed the wounds of the Jew, brought him to me, and directed me at his expense to care for him until he should be able to travel again by himself. This surprised me much, and I said to him, "Sir, how comes it that you, a Samaritan, who has had nothing but contemptuous treatment from us Jews, should do this for one of my countrymen? He would not have done as much for you."

The Samaritan shook his head and replied, "That I know. But I heard a man preaching once, and he said that we should do to others as we would wish them to do to us. That seemed a better way of life than I had known. When I saw this man I remembered that saying."

And so the Samaritan went on his way. I would say that he was a good Samaritan—he should by rights have been a Jew. I would like that sort of man for a neighbor.

The Priest that Passed By: I was on the road to Jericho one day, long ago, when I saw a man lying by the wayside. I observed that he had been beaten and was in a bad way. He seemed unable to stand or to talk. I had an impulse to stop and help him—but I was on my way to a religious service. I could not spare the time, and I did not wish to get my robes all bloody and dirty—so I crossed over the little valley and went by on the other side.

It seemed the thing to do—but afterward I heard a man preaching on "service," and I have wondered if service to humanity may not at times take precedent over religious rites and sacrifices. I wonder! I am a Jew—and many times my people are robbed and beaten and left by the road, and the religious world passes them by on the other side.

The Thief: I was one of a band of thieves operating near Jericho. I hardly know how I became a thief. I never knew anything but violence and thievery. There seemed to me no other way to live. One day two of us fell upon a lone traveler and robbed him. Then we beat him unmercifully. We shouldn't have beat him—it was my idea. I had always done things that way. My comrade, it seemed, had been of a religious turn, not like me, until misfortune turned him to my trade. He protested.

Afterward we both hung upon crosses—he who had compunctions, and I who had none. We were on either side of a man who hung on a third cross and was hailed as King of the Jews—but it was in derision. I joined others in mocking and cursing him; but my fellow seemed overcome with repentance and pleaded with this man for forgiveness—as though a man on a cross could forgive, or that it would matter if he did. And this King of the Jews said to him: "Thy sins are forgiven. This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise."

There was something about that man! I did not rail upon him again—and I too would have prayed to him had I known how to pray.

The Traveler: I am the man who went over the road to Jericho. I should not have gone alone, but I had business and money to invest in a venture. Thieves set upon me and robbed me and beat me nearly to death. They left me, supposing that I was dead. As I lay by the road, unable to move or cry out, two went by, first a Levite and then a priest. They looked upon me and should have known that I was one of them—but my groans did not move them. They passed me by, and I resigned myself to die. But presently there came a Samaritan.

From him I could expect no help, as he and his people have been at odds with the Jews for several generations. But to my surprise he stopped his beast and gave me help. He poured wine and oil into my wounds and then took me to an inn and paid for my lodging until I was well again. When I asked him why he, a Samaritan, did this for me, a Jew, he replied: "I heard a man preaching, a young man from Nazareth, the son of one Joseph who was a carpenter. He said to do to others as we would that they should do to us. I saw the priest pass you by, and I knew that he would not have others do that to him. I wondered if his religion might not be wanting and this religion of the carpenter's son be the true religion. So, knowing what I would have you do to me under like circumstances, I stopped and ministered to you. That is all. It is nothing."

I never forgot that good Samaritan. I told my story to friends, and it came to the ears of one who repeated it in a parable. He commended the Samaritan and said, "Go thou and do likewise." A physician named Luke put the story in a book for all to read.

A Shepherd's Story

The Autobiography of Marcus H. Cook

V. A Ministry of Power

THE HEALING OF LELA CUSHAT

DURING my stay in Des Moines District, a remarkable case of healing occurred. A girl of about sixteen named Lela Cushat, a granddaughter of William C. Nirk, lived at Baxter, Iowa. Something happened to her eyes, and although she was being treated by a specialist in Newton, she did not seem to respond to the treatment. She was a fine girl, loved by all who knew her, devoted to the church, and always ready to do any service she could. She continued to grow worse, and it seemed she would lose her sight in spite of all that could be done. I started one day on a trip that took me through Marshalltown. As we came to a junction where we connected with the trains from Newton, Lela boarded the train on her return from a visit to the eye specialist. She recognized me and sat beside me. Seeing that she was somewhat discouraged, I felt a surge of sympathy for the girl and wondered what I could say to encourage her. She was facing a truly heart-breaking situation. I told her that we are all soldiers in a great conflict, and that sometimes soldiers are required to suffer because of a dangerous situation or so that others could win the battle. I asked her if God wanted to teach a lesson that could best be accomplished by someone's losing his or her sight, if she could render a better service by showing how one could serve without sight, would she be willing to be that soldier? With tears in her eyes and trembling lips she said she didn't know. A few weeks later she attended the district conference in Des Moines. Her condition had reached the point where, although she could distinguish objects between her and the light, she had to grope to find her way. At a Sunday afternoon prayer meeting she rose and bore a testimony that those who heard could never forget. She said if it were God's will that she should lose her sight, and if she could render a better service by losing her sight, then she was resigned to his will.

I don't think there was a dry eye in the room. The earnestness of her testimony reached every heart. After the conference the girl and her mother returned home. The following Wednesday her father, who was not a member of the church, said that unless something were done, Lela would soon be blind. He asked her mother to take her to a Dr. Pearson, a Des Moines eye specialist, and see if he could help. On the way to the city Lela told her mother that she had suffered so much having them work on her eyes that she couldn't bear the thought of having to go through it again. She said she would rather ask the Des Moines Saints to fast and pray for her and be administered to at the prayer meeting, and if God did not see fit to heal her, she was willing to go blind. They reached Des Moines sometime before noon, and word was sent round asking the Saints to fast and pray for her. During the prayer meeting she was led to the front and seated. Elders J. F. Mintun, E. O. Clark, and N. V. Sheldon were present. Brother Clark anointed her, and Brother Sheldon confirmed. She arose and went to her seat healed.

THE TESTIMONY OF AN INFIDEL

A few weeks later I went to Baxter where the Cushats lived. They suggested that we get the City Hall and hold a few services while I was there. The mayor, though an infidel, consented for us to use the hall.

We took the organ from the Cushat home, and Lela played it at the services. The mayor was also editor of the local paper, and when I went to his office to settle for the use of the hall, he made no charge, but asked me to write for his paper a report of the divine healing of Miss Cushat. I told him I didn't want to put our church in the position of advertising healers but would write a short article on what we believe about healing. To this he agreed. In my article I stated our belief in an unchangeable God, and said that we believed the gift of healing, under the proper conditions, might be enjoyed today the same as in ages past, and that the healing of Lela Cushat was an event which confirmed our faith in an unchangeable God. He printed the article and also published this statement; "We know that when Miss Lela Cushat went to Des Moines she was practically blind; and we know that she can now see as well as any of us." Coming from an infidel that was a strong testimony. I saw Lela later in Kansas City, and again at a General Conference. She can still see.

The church made good progress under J. F. Mintun. When he first came to the city, we held our services in a small church at sixteenth and Des Moines Streets. But before I began under General Conference appointment, we had purchased a larger church at fourteenth and Lyon Streets where we were still meeting until some time after I left for the West. We opened a mission at Frazer and also held meetings at three rural schoolhouses. We had valuable help from an efficient young priest, Frank Walters. He arranged for me to hold services at a schoolhouse about a mile out of town where occasional meetings were held by a highly emotional group of people; he also arranged for me to board with an infidel who lived close by the schoolhouse. Upon my arrival I was kindly received. At the supper table the man of the house told me, "If you are used to saying something when you come to the table, why go ahead." I asked God's blessing, and they all remained quiet and showed every courtesy I could expect. After supper we went over to the school, and every lamp chimney had been removed, evidently by someone not favorable to us. The infidel expressed himself in language not fit to be printed, but he went back to his own home and brought lamps and chimneys so that we could go on with the service. The next morning I went to Frazer to see if I had any mail, and the man with whom I was staying gave me a half dollar to buy lamp chimneys. But he said that as soon as the meetings were over, "Every damned one is coming off." I couldn't have been treated better anywhere than I was in that home. There were no baptisms, but the family became good friends to me and invited me to visit them whenever I came that way.

TRIBUTE TO TWO MEN

I want to mention especially two men whom I shall always remember gratefully. Old Brother William C. Nirk was like a father to me. He seemed to carry an influence with him that always made me feel that I wanted to be a better man. I felt much like another man who said that when he came into that home, he felt as though he had been visited by an angel. He was also a wise counselor, generous in his decisions, and kind to all. I have often wished with all my heart that I might become so purified that those I meet might recognize in me the same spirit he carried with him. I loved him as a father and know that I am a better man because of his influence.

The other man was James McKiernan. He was always cheerful and had a spirit of optimism which lifted me out of the despondent moods I had when things seemed to be going wrong and I felt discouraged. His rare sense of humor often helped me to see the brighter side of situations. I can truthfully say, as was said of one of old, that "He being dead, yet speaketh." He was sub-missionary in charge of the field where I began my work under appointment.

Christmas Gift to Nation

THIRTEENTH NETWORK
MESSIAH BROADCAST DECEMBER 23

Our "Christmas Gift to the Nation" will be an hour and a half broadcast of The Messiah at *11:30 p.m. EST over the Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations. The broadcast will originate from the TV Playhouse of Radio Station KMBC in Kansas City, Missouri.

There will be the usual 280 voice Messiah Choir of Independence and guest soloists, with the Kansas City Philharmonic. An added innovation will be a "live audience" consisting of special guests and all who request free tickets to the capacity limit of twenty-six hundred people. This opportunity to attend the broadcast will replace the usual performance in Independence.

Rehearsals began October 7 at the Auditorium and continue each Sunday afternoon until the performance. Franklyn S. Weddle, Director of Music and of Radio, is again directing The Messiah.

There will be an even greater effort on the part of the church to publicize this event throughout the United States, Canada, and the Hawaiian Islands. The Columbia Broadcasting System and KMBC will give added emphasis to this advertising. Sixty-five thousand Christmas cards are in the process of being printed and will be distributed to each branch according to membership. Each appointee, district president, stake president, and branch president will receive a supply of cards and allied advertising material. All others who may request a supply from the Radio Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, may have their order filled. This material is free and urged for every individual for distribution. There will be time this year to fill all orders and requests for anyone writing the radio department for this publicity. There will be suggested copy for local radio stations, newspapers, and church bulletins. An attempt is being made to reach all local leaders. If you were newly elected this fall and there is a possibility your name is not on our list of local leaders, write the Radio Department at Independence, Missouri, and be sure you receive the material for distribution. Your help in assuring us a correct mailing list is urged. The success of the broadcast has depended on the listening audience. The local branch makes that possible by its careful advertising in that area.

You are urged to call or write your local Columbia radio station now and ask if this network program will be broadcast on December 23 at the time designated for your area. The more letters and calls the station receives, the greater is the possibility that it will carry this yearly broadcast in your area. Our goal is to present this "Christmas Gift to the Nation." Your request for it in your area will make it possible.

For any information regarding publicity or performance, write the Publicity Director, The Radio Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This Thing Called Love

— By L. Eugene Christy

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

(See page 23)

THESE ARE THE BASIC LAWS of Christianity. Obedience to these laws is the guarantee of eternal life and the basis for the fullest life on earth.

Love is a word with more than one meaning. I am inclined to doubt the ability of the lexicographers to define it. My new American College Dictionary says:

1) A strong or passionate affection for a person of the opposite sex; . . . (5) a feeling of warm personal attachment or deep affection as for a friend, parent, child; . . . (7) the benevolent affection of God for his creatures, or the reverent affection due from them to God.

There are many other shades of meaning, but the one we will be concerned about here is our love for God and his love for us.

Any person who has lived with another for any length of time will know that none of the definitions are complete. Sex may be involved in our earthly life, but the basic elements of love are much more enduring than sex. When love is tainted with personal desire in any form, the selfishness of that desire makes love subservient and eventually kills the "noble passion." Love carries with it respect, loyalty, faith, and a desire to serve as well as to be served.

Love is not something that happens in a flash and remains forever. It must be fed by shared experiences, confidences, forgiveness, and mutual understanding. There are basic similarities between our love for each other and our love for God; but the command to love God can only be obeyed by his grace, for we cannot love One we do not know, and we can know him only as he reveals himself to us through the Holy Spirit. Christ brought us the knowledge of the way to reach him. He promised that the Holy Spirit would remain on earth to guide, to comfort, and to bring us knowledge of the things of the kingdom of God.

LOVE FOR GOD is born of intimate, repentant prayer. When we open our hearts to God in this manner we drive from us all the insincerity that seems to be a part of our ordinary lives. We bare our souls to God hoping that he will see and understand our needs and bless us accordingly. Sometimes he enters our lives at the moment of prayer and inspires us to ask him to act as he wills. In such a moment love dominates our whole being, and we know without doubt that we have really talked to God. The world becomes a different place, and life is freer and fuller. At that time we know something of the fatherhood of God.

Our love for God matures as we study and learn of the Christ who came to save us by revealing the manner of our living and our worship. He warned us not to worship idols and taught us not to worship God as though he were an idol. He demonstrated by his life and his words that we were to approach God directly as individuals who would be sure of an audience if their reason for coming were based on the fundamental desire to serve and worship in truth.

CHRIST MADE IT PLAIN that we were to come humbly, with a contrite heart and with the assurance that we would try to lift our lives to the highest level of perfection. We must not approach him with hearts empty of love or with no ambition. Without a growing love we could not understand what he would tell us. Without ambition to lift our standards of purity and service to mankind, we could not bring ourselves back into his presence, for we would have no real purpose in coming.

There are times when we must feel his spirit in comfort for the loss of loved ones, or the strengthening of faith. No one who has ever sincerely called on him at such times has been denied a blessing. There have been those who demanded answers beyond the ability of mortals to receive, and they continue to blame God instead of their own unwillingness to abide by the laws of life and death. Their love is possessive and selfish, and they are not able to receive the light and love of God because they demand the right to dictate the terms and conditions of the gift. Christ taught us by example that we must give absolute obedience to the principles of life that he, through the Father, taught us. Christ was a perfect example. He never failed to pray and to give thanks to God. He never tried to lift himself into popularity. His effort was expended for the benefit of humanity, and when the people heard and obeyed him, they were led into the presence of God and given the promise of always having the words of salvation to read—assurance that his Holy Spirit would be available to any who called honestly for light to salvation. Such love is impossible to comprehend, for its scope and force covers every individual and every effort for good that has been, is now, or ever will be.

LOVE IS A POWER strong enough to accomplish anything it sets out to do. The young man who decides he will marry some particular girl because he loves her usually does. His love must be true, for only true love can endure. The woman too may be misled or not have had enough experience to differentiate between love and infatuation. The trouble is that most of us are too selfish to cherish the growth and development of love. We are too eager to have our own way in everything, and thus we lose the love of child or wife or parent. Those we are closely associated with have the first chance to share in our love, but there should be love for everybody in every relationship.

I want to learn to love so strongly that those I come in contact with who do not know the blessings of serving Christ may be led through the force of that love to listen to the story of salvation. I desire above every other thing that God will use my voice to say the things that will bring belief in Christ and create enough faith for others to pray with me for greater understanding. I know when I can purge my soul so love may dwell within, that in me will reside the power to lead the most hardened sinner to the Cross. I believe with all my heart that when I take the Lord's word simply, without attempting to twist meanings to my own advantage, I can and will overcome Satan and be able to deliver to the Lord those he has told me to bring to him.

THE FRUITS OF THE SPIRIT are "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance."—Galatians 5: 22, 23. I would say that the fruit of love is also all these things. One seems to depend on the other for existence. Love cannot grow without the Spirit, and without love the Spirit will not abide. Love is not an emotion that grows without bidding. It is not a weed, but a tender plant that has to be nurtured in the soil of earnest, honest desire. It must be constantly watered by pure purposes and allowed to bloom in the sunlight of God's presence. Love that is not pure will die, whether it is love for man or love for God and his kingdom.

The abuse of the powers of love will bring condemnation. We decide each moment of each day the manner of our lives and our loving. There can be no vacation from right living and no excuse for careless living, even though we are forgiven when we truly repent. Old and recurring sins, even when forgiven, retard us so that we do not have time to develop the love of God soon enough to use it fully. As we later come into the presence of God's love, the great regret of our lives will be that we made foolish decisions in our youth. We will always carry the scars of sin, even though we may go far in the service of God. Life can be full of delightful experiences when it is not marred by false starts and standards.

THE CHURCH IS CHRIST'S BRIDE.

There are those who make fun of her and deride her power and growth, who say if there were "anything to the church" it would do this and that. Generally such people will not even recognize the truth when it shines before their eyes, for they are blind. They refuse to repent and offer their lives, because they do not want to pay the price. They try to justify themselves in first one indulgence and then another. "God is a good fellow," they argue, "who understands and will accept us when we get ready to live as we have been taught."

We will forget about dancing and smoking and other indulgences when we find there is not time enough for them in the fuller life. They make no contribution to social grace or mental, physical, or spiritual development. They are not worth the time it takes to discuss them. Any habit that demands indulgence is one that will destroy our will and lower the quality of our decisions. Remorse and repentance already experienced should warn us that further indulgence will bring more suffering. God is always ready with his Spirit to stand by our side as our armor and shield, but he will never make our decisions for us. Once we surrender to him, he will strengthen our will and build our determination until no power but his can move us.

We cannot lead anyone to Christ who does not go of his own free will; but we can persuade him to follow us as we go. God has made an everlasting covenant that when we look up, then Zion will look down, and he will send those who lived before and know the ways of Christ to help us over the hard trails. We do not have to die to know death nor sin to know its degradation. We may see it in any slum area in any city. We can know it in the small town, too. There are always those who live so carelessly that they make themselves the example of what not to be. There is no place to "let in a little sin," for a little sin clouds the mind till it cannot tell the difference between "sins that don't count" and those that completely destroy. Trying to see how far we can go and not be hurt is dangerous. Only when we resist silly self-indulgence can we know the joy that comes from the gift of love and the self-confidence we feel as a result. Life in Christ is rich and prosperous. It always brings enough to share, and sharing is the privilege and reward of love.

THERE IS NO LIMIT to the attainment of men of God. The universe is their workbench. Plenty and security are for those who build with Christ and the Father. The God-inspired man can search out truths that are beyond the understanding of carnal man. Truth is in God's realm and will be revealed by him only as we are able to use it.

The great power of God-engendered love will open our eyes to the solution of the social problems that seem insurmountable and will make the establishment of Zion a reality. Dictionary terms are inadequate to define God's love, and it takes a long time for most of us to learn that God is love.

I entreat you, firstly, to believe nothing ill against those you hate, and you'll grow to love them; secondly, to believe nothing ill against those you love, and you'll love them doubly.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name (not just initials) and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

What do you mean by the apostasy?
Missouri E.E.J.

Answer:

Apostasy, as applying to the church of Jesus Christ, is the gradual decline of faith and spiritual life through vanity and sin until the Spirit of God can no longer abide or work within it. When the Spirit departs, the church becomes dead—apostate, regardless of whatever doctrines it may hold or works it may perform. It is no longer the church of Christ. It is as impossible for such a church to revive itself as for a dead body to restore itself to life.

Helaman describes the decline of the church in his day toward apostasy, though it recovered before it was too late. The people had set at naught the commandments of God, and because of their iniquity the church had begun to dwindle. They began to disbelieve in the Spirit of prophecy and revelation, the Spirit of the Lord had withdrawn from them, and they had fallen into a state of unbelief and awful wickedness.

Nephi, 600 B.C., saw in vision a great church among the Gentiles after Christ's time, calling it, "The great persecutor of the church, the apostate, the whore, even Babylon, that maketh all nations to drink of her cup, in whose hearts the enemy, even Satan sitteth to reign."

To read the history of the post-New Testament times down through medieval times to modern days, one finds ample proof of a complete apostasy from the true Christian standard. The Reformation did not and could not revive the church in its original character and life. Such a revival must come by divine initiative, for the Lord alone can quicken and bring forth a living church. This he did in the Restoration of 1830.

Question:

Why are not all of Joseph Smith's revelations included in our Doctrine and Covenants if they are considered inspired, leaving the members to "rightly divide the word of truth"?
Oregon N.W.

Answer:

Without discussing the detailed history of the development of the Doctrine and Covenants in the church prior to 1844, we will say that the compilation of the various revelations to the church into a book involved a process of selection. A committee was appointed for selection of the revelations to comprise the 1835 edition. Joseph the Prophet was a member of the committee, and the "book" was adopted by the church in general assembly.

In the Reorganized church at the General Conference, October, 1863, the church "authorized the Committee of Publication to publish the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, with such corrections in arrangement as may be necessary." The book was accordingly published. In the General Conference of September 13, 1878, the church took further action:

Resolved, That the revelations received by Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recognize the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, the revelations of God contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and all other revelations which have been or shall be revealed through God's appointed prophet, which have been or may be hereafter accepted by the Church as the standard of authority on all matters of church government and doctrine, and the final standard of reference on appeal in all controversies arising or which may arise in this Church of Christ.

Whereas, We accept the revelations heretofore given to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, through the present presiding officer thereof, as being the word of the Lord to his Church, equally with those published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; therefore, be it, Resolved, That the revelations received by the President of the Church in 1861, 1863, and 1865, be received as from God, authoritative and binding on us as a body; and in connection with the revelation of 1873, that they be hereafter compiled with that book.—Saints' Herald, Volume 25, pages 295 and 296.

The subsequent actions of the church always made provision for the revelations to be added to the "book" by legislation of the church in General Conference, either through committee action or by direct legislation. What is to be included in any edition of the Doctrine and Covenants is by order of the General Conference. JOHN BLACKMORE

Question:

Can I be baptized by a minister of the Reorganized Church and remain a member of the church to which I now belong?
Michigan J.R.G.

Answer:

It is not possible without vitiating the baptism if the adherence to the other church is a matter of choice in preference to this one. Baptism is an ordinance constituting an integral part of a broad system of divine truth. It is associated with sacred ordinances, ceremonies, and gifts, all being established within a Christ-designed organization known as his church, for administration and application to human souls for their salvation and eternal life. To divide this perfect system and separate its parts and functions is to destroy the effectualness of the whole. The truth is one; the body is one; the Spirit is one; and this trio of eternal verities is one. To divide our allegiance and our service is to forfeit all.

Question:

Having heard your gospel preached, if I die without obeying can I accept it in the prison house and become an heir to celestial glory?
Michigan J.R.G.

Answer:

Who wants to go to the prison house to be converted? Wouldn't it be better to obey at the first opportunity rather than to wait to be pushed into the kingdom? It is written, "The Lord requires a willing heart." No man can neglect his opportunities in duty and service toward God without suffering loss, and should a man through neglect find himself in the prison house, and should he be permitted to accept the gospel there, he would not gain celestial glory, neither terrestrial. The highest he could hope for would be telestial.

Camp Quotes

From the Lamoni Stake Reunion

By Marcella Schenck

JULY 30, 1951

From the opening prayer: "And when the day is done, may we be able to say as we have just sung, 'We have walked with God today.'"

* * *

The lad was nine years old when he inherited the jewel. His parents put it into his possession. At the time the boy thought he understood the value of the jewel.

The years began to pass. Now and then he picked up the jewel and looked at it. Sometimes he laid it carelessly down, wondering why it had seemed to glow when it was first given to him. Now it had become such an ordinary thing!

Eventually the lad forgot he owned the jewel. He even wandered farther and farther from the place where he had laid it. Then one day, as a youth of seventeen, he returned and found the jewel. How it shone! How it made him thrill to be worthy of its possession!

"I shall never lay it down again," he said. "I shall carry it with me, close to my heart."

The jewel? It was a pearl of great price—the gospel. (From the testimony of a young man from Australia.)

* * *

There are three people who know when repentance is in my heart. First, there is myself, and I say, "It feels good this way." My wife says, "My husband walks nearer God today." My little daughter says, "Daddy is nice today."

* * *

I accepted the gospel as a challenge in my youth. It is still a challenge.

* * *

This is a day to make appraisals of that which is of value to you. I can think of nothing I would exchange for my experiences in the gospel.

* * *

The gospel is not just a handy cable to grasp during an emergency. It is something we need near by at all times.

* * *

The gospel has been my lighthouse and my compass, guiding me in many ways and at many times.

From the lips of two who had known trouble and trials during the past year: "There are so many people in our town who live their religion."

* * *

Brother and Sister Roy Cheville, shaking hands with the "lame, halt, and blind" in the cars outside the big tent were overheard to say, "We thought we would shake hands with the fringe first."

* * *

Those who manned the old sail vessels used to fear most the calm. Are you in a spiritual calm?

* * *

Another sea danger is the storm. Our spiritual life can become twisted and sunk.

Some souls drift with the current because "everyone else is doing it."

* * *

God does not purpose to maneuver you. He does not quit when you go wrong. He starts over again with what you give him.

What design have you painted on your sails? What does it show when the winds of spiritual power fill it to the full?

JULY 31, 1951

How many "thank-you" prayers have been said this morning? How many "wanting" prayers?

* * *

How important it is to pray for those who are spiritually sick as well as those who are physically weak.

* * *

When I pray for help to serve others my prayers are more likely to be answered than when I ask for myself.

* * *

I was told my blessing came not because of my personal righteousness, nor because of my own prayers, but because of the prayers of the Saints.

* * *

There are many Saints who little know how their stanch steadfastness has helped me.

* * *

We are only as near or as far from God as we let ourselves be.

I am grateful that I love to study the Scriptures, because in the time that I needed to know what they say I was ready to explain.

* * *

Someone is reported to have said, "Praying is silly." But this I know: Sunshine dispelled our clouds because of a simple prayer.

* * *

The walls of Number 10, Briggs Hall, can testify how much praying goes into my classroom preparation.

* * *

It was only a weed in the hands of the woman who had picked it on the camp grounds. Once it had been a sturdy healthy green, but now that its maturing days had passed, the plant wore a beautiful brilliant coloring.

I thought to myself, Would that people in declining years could make themselves as beautiful.

Then I thought of certain elderly ones I knew and I said, "Some can and do. They make of age their enriched and glorified years. I wonder if I shall learn their secret."

* * *

Are you praying your age?

* * *

Every age is a golden age if you make it so.

* * *

What is the purpose of your prayer? To bargain with God?

* * *

Prayer should be above the level of begging and coaxing.

* * *

More and more you learn to pray for God's work.

* * *

Through the power of prayer you can rid yourself of the excess baggage of worry, envy, and malice.

* * *

Prayer can help you relax and can bring you divine assurance.

* * *

Prayer can bring clarification and give you the ability to lay a problem squarely and cleanly before God.

AUGUST 1, 1951

I have found that when I step forward and endeavor to serve I am never alone.

* * *

"I prayed," said the nurse. "It was not my prayers that accomplished the healing miracle, but it was my privilege to witness it."

* * *

When you tell me what the gospel has done to your life I am ready to listen.

* * *

My soul so overflowed with God's spirit that I could contain no more.

* * *

And on that occasion the gift of love was given to me. Never before did I know what love could accomplish.

* * *

The confirmation of those children was a feast of good things.

* * *

I have learned that you can't tell God what to do. You can only ask him to do as he thinks best, and always you find that his ways are much better than yours.

* * *

I enter the army tomorrow, and I hope wherever I may be to live worthy of the name of this church.

* * *

Our little family became interested in the church when our trouble was your trouble. You people as strangers were praying for our child who was stricken with polio. Your interest in us turned our interest to you.

"Mother," said the little three-year-old. "You didn't take me to the big church last night."

"It is over your head, Darling. You wouldn't understand," said the mother.

"But I did understand the night you took me."

"What did the preacher say, Darling?"

"The man said, 'No matter where you are lost God will be sure to find you,'" answered the child.

* * *

Grace is the loving-kindness and graciousness of God.

* * *

God is good and gracious to us because he himself is good and gracious.

* * *

Comfortable sermons don't help very much. The test is—did the sermon do you any good?

* * *

Baptism should be a life-long process. You need a continual immersion in God's power.

To rise in the newness of life is an eloquent symbol.

AUGUST 2, 1951

In the brother's prayer he invited heaven to be with us. That was a great request.

* * *

You have obeyed from the heart that which was delivered to you.

* * *

Latter Day Saints have talked much about faith and works. Today, let us talk about grace and the Christian virtues.

* * *

I have not had the testimony of the healing of loved ones as some of you. My mother died; my brother died; and they had received administration. But God gave me something else. He gave me his grace to sustain me in my loneliness.

* * *

The way of service is the happy way.

* * *

I have returned to my home community with a new realization that the people there love me and are interested in me.

Jesus was loving and understanding. These are the characteristics which draw us to him.

We must always find time to minister to the woman at the well.

* * *

"All my life I have been blessed to enjoy the Christian graces of others," said she from her wheel chair.

* * *

No mortal mind without divine aid can comprehend the love of God.

* * *

We thank thee, God, for the vibrancy of testimony.

* * *

Great religions always involve problem solving.

* * *

Little souls shrink from problems.

How to Sleep, by James Bender.
Coward-McCann Company, $2.75

BACK in the early thirties, psychologist Walter Pitkin wrote a book titled The Art of Learning. His thesis was that we must study throughout our entire lives learning many facts and many skills if we are to continue to be happy, socially valuable, and self-supporting in this age of rapid scientific and technological advancement.

Perhaps Pitkin was largely responsible for the "be-your-own-expert" movement which has, in the past few years, boosted millions of persons out of vocational ruts into the wide, pleasant, profitable field of jack-of-all-trades while remaining master-of-one.

Book publishers have been alert to the financial bonanza in supplying eager novices with how-to instructions written by experts in the various skills. So now we have neatly packaged between two book covers directions for doing anything and everything. A book on how to attain skill in sleeping was inevitable. This is it, written by a man who is experienced in helping troubled ones solve their personal and interpersonal problems.

The author has been, since 1944, Director of the National Institute of Human Relations. He holds a B.S. and a doctorate from Columbia University and was declared a certified psychologist in 1932 by the New York State Department of Mental Hygiene. He has applied his knowledge of human beings and their problems in the fields of teaching, lecturing, consultative psychology, and authorship. Fourteen books and many magazine articles have taken his help to those who cannot consult him personally.

SLEEP, its mystery and mastery, for centuries has been the subject of study, discussion, and consequent literary production by physiologists, psychologists, psychiatrists, physicians, poets, and philosophers. Biologists, mental hygienists, educators, and early-and-late breakfasters have contributed to the spate of words about slumber, how to get more of it and that more of better quality. Doctor Bender's contribution to the bibliography of sleep is a report on the results of extensive research on the subject, written in his usual interest-holding style. A humorous touch is his quotations from scientists. They disagree about sleep!

Doctor Bender presents evidence that sleep of good quality is a promoter of physical and mental health and brings some clarification to the meaning of the words, insomnia and insomniac. He cites disturbing statistics about the use and abuse of sleeping pills, issuing a stern directive: Take them only in a crisis, and then only under the direction of a physician.

He lists and describes fifteen ways to sleep better, which include the correct type of bed and its fittings, also a lesson in bedmaking; twenty-nine ways to coax sleep-inducing relaxation; and eight ways to rout worries that nag in the night.

The reader is briefed on the physiologic and psychologic state of a sleeper, and the engaging terms, hypnogenic state, narcolepsy, somnolentia, somnambulism, moon-walking and sleep-talking are explained. The scientific explanation of dreams will make him careful about telling his the next day; the comparison of man and woman, asleep, is another shot in the Battle of the Sexes. Snoring receives the author's sympathetic attention, as does the controversial subject, twin vs. double beds.

Mothers will find the information concerning children's sleep habits a concise summation of what is known about them. The suggestions for getting children to bed early and often enough should be quite helpful. (Confidentially, I can never understand all the bother about getting children into bed without a battle. I recommend my parents' system. They had only to say, "Bedtime, children," and we went to bed at once without back talk and without bedtime stories. As soon as we could tell time, we knew when to go to bed, without being told.)

Not necessary to the getting of restful sleep, night after night, are the chapters about the sleep habits of animals, plants, and famous folk. But they do supply material for interesting chit-chat. The Sweet-Sleep Inventory, if carefully checked and recommended procedures followed, probably will assure better sleep.

THROUGHOUT THE BOOK the author delineates a variety of techniques and routines for getting to sleep and staying so, but reserves the best for the last.

He says, what so many of us have already learned, that bedtime prayer is one of the surest, quickest ways to natural, restful sleep. He recommends that we follow the three-way approach to slumber: through body, mind, and soul, and that if any one of the three is neglected sleep will be less refreshing, less deep, than it should be.

He ends with a quotation from Victor Hugo which advises us to go to sleep in peace after a hard day, for "God is awake." That quotation recalls a story published during World War II about a famous bishop who was tossing sleepless one night because of worry over his recalcitrant flock. Finally God spoke from the darkness in a calm voice, "Go to sleep, Bishop. I am awake."

Doctor Bender, student of sleep, believes that God is awake and will look after our interests while we take time out for sweet dreams.

Peace I Leave With You

By Addie Spaulding Stowell

ON EVERY HAND we hear expressions of war, frustration, and uncertainties of all kinds. The emotional strain has become almost a crisis at our very door, filling those who are inexperienced with the true source of peace with fear and apprehension.

When Jesus dwelt upon the earth, he possessed the knowledge of what would come in the immediate future and on down through the ages to the end of time. But as long as he remained in the flesh, he conformed to the customs and laws of the land. Although he re-interpreted the old Mosaic law, there was no change which would incriminate him. He taught his disciples to "render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's."

When the day of unleavened bread, or the Passover, drew near, the disciples knew they should observe the feast. They were worried however as to where they should go to prepare it, but Jesus was not concerned. He knew a place would be provided. His mind was weighed down by other matters no one knew about. He knew the appointed time was at hand when his body would be offered up as a sacrifice. Although he dreaded the suffering that would come to him, he was more concerned about leaving his little band of believers. Jesus knew that soon after he left them "grievous wolves would enter in, not sparing the flock."

The day arrived when the Passover was to be prepared, and the Master said to Peter and John, "Go and prepare us the Passover that we may eat." They asked him where they would find a place. Jesus told them that when they entered the city a man would meet them, bearing a pitcher of water. They were to follow him, and when he entered into his house they were to say to him, "The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest chamber where I shall eat the Passover with my disciples?"

Peter and John met the man as Jesus had described. When they told him what Jesus had said, he showed them to an upper room furnished adequately for their needs.

The food and drink necessary for the Passover was placed on the table. The main item of the menu was in a large dish out of which each dipped for himself.

WHEN EVENING CAME the twelve apostles, with Jesus as their host, seated themselves around the table. When they had partaken of the Passover, Jesus gave them bread and wine as a token of the sacrifice he was about to make. Then he obtained a pan of water and washed the apostles' feet. To the very last, Jesus exhibited complete humility; yet he had the power to bestow upon them the greatest gifts that can bless humanity.

Jesus perceived that they were distressed in their minds even as he had been distressed. But with the apostles it was because of an underlying spirit of fear that some great calamity was about to befall them. In his great love and compassion for them, knowing the anguish they were about to suffer, he began to speak words of reassurance and comfort. He told them of the good things they would find in his Father's kingdom, of the mansions he was going to prepare for them, and how they would be with him.

Jesus knew the Holy Ghost would be given to his followers for a comfort, but that they might be comforted during his death and resurrection, he said, "Peace I leave with you. My peace I give unto you." His peace was not the kind of peace the world could give them, but the peace that comes through obedience to his commandments. So far his followers had complied with his commandments, so it was in his power to grant them the peace that comes through belief and acceptance.

Their acceptance was not only by word of mouth—"Lord, I believe"—but also by repentance and obedience. In faith they had followed him sharing hardships and trials. But Jesus was about to leave them, and he knew they would need help. He told them of the tribulations that would be in the world, but assured them that in him they would find peace (John 16: 33).

WHEN JESUS APPEARED after his resurrection, his salutation was "Peace be unto you." It was the Master's desire that his followers should have joy, not sorrow, in their hearts. The peace Jesus manifested was the love in his heart for the children of men, and that love is the gospel of peace that we must manifest toward each other.

God knows how our minds can be upset by the harrowing circumstances which often come to us, but we have an avenue of escape through Christ, and if we seek him, he has promised us that peace the Holy Spirit can give.

Jesus said, "Let not your hearts be troubled." To those who believed in him, he promised the blessing of his peace.

No matter what trials may come to us, our hearts may be made to rejoice with that peace the Master can give if only we trust in his promises and keep his commandments. Even though the world may be torn by war, Christ's word shall never fail.

"My peace I leave with you."

New Church at Tampa, Florida

SEVERAL YEARS AGO a few Latter Day Saints desired to establish a branch in Tampa. They met for several years in the homes of Arthur Chevalier, Sr., Alice Morley, and E. B. Walters.

In February, 1944, Elder John R. Grice ordained Hale Vickery and Arthur Chevalier, Jr., to the office of priest, and the group was organized into a mission. Hale Vickery and his family are now members of the Birmingham, Alabama, Branch.

The mission grew in numbers, and in the North Tampa Civic Clubhouse services were held until 1948. On December 15, 1946, Apostle McConley and Elder Ray Whiting organized the mission into a branch. Rolland L. Aultman was ordained to the office of priest, and Arthur Chevalier, Jr., was ordained to the office of elder. In June, 1948, a building fund drive resulted in over $7,000. Lots were purchased at Memorial Highway and Sterling Avenue, which is in a new and fast-growing section.

An Army Chapel was then bought from the Palma Ceia Methodist Church for $1,000.

This was originally built at the cost of $35,000. The Methodists had purchased this chapel from the Army but were unable to find a contractor who would move the building to their location for a reasonable fee, and since the Army would not sell the chapel unless it would be used for the purpose of worship, it was necessary for them to sell to another church. The Army notified the Saints that the chapel was for sale by the Methodist Church, and Pastor A. J. Chevalier found a contractor who agreed to move it for a reasonable price.

This is the only chapel that was ever moved successfully from the Army Field. The presence of God was felt in the efforts to move the building and to establish it on the lots which had been purchased.

Next came the task of refinishing. Both men and women gave of their time, and soon the exterior was glistening white and the interior clean and shining.

Christmas week of 1948 the first service was held when Martha and Bradford Forbs were united in marriage.

THE YEAR 1949 was filled with growing pains and planning. New furniture was bought for the rostrum. Saints were coming in from the North to worship. Local visitors were increasing, and there were baptisms to enlarge the local membership. The Saints and the priesthood from other states contributed their services. On April 23, 1950, Wallace Hough was ordained to the office of teacher and Roy McGahagin to the office of priest. In 1949 Elder Ernest Knight (former pastor at Akron, Ohio), moved to St. Petersburg, Florida, and is now an active member of the branch.

Recently another adjoining lot was purchased. The members are now planning to erect an educational building, and a drive is on to raise funds for this purpose.

The women have been very active in raising funds for the church.

At the present time membership numbers seventy-five, with an increase in attendance during winter months. The first priesthood institute to be held in this area was conducted in Tampa this year.

All members coming to Florida are invited to worship with the Tampa Saints. A welcome awaits them.

STAKE PRESIDENTS MEET

The First Presidency met with the presidents of the five adjacent stakes and Detroit International Stake October 10. Present at the meeting were Emery Jennings, Joy Anderson, Robert Farnham, Harry Simons, Charles Graham, and Blair McClain. Garland Tickmeyer of the Los Angeles Stake was unable to attend the meeting which was held to consider and perfect the missionary outreach in the stakes.

APOSTLE IN THE EAST

Apostle Maurice L. Draper attended the West Virginia District conference at Parkersburg, September 29-30. A number of ordinations were approved by the conference, and Brother Draper reports that plans are being initiated for the possibility of a reunion for the West Virginia and Southern Ohio Districts. On October 2, Brother Draper was present at the organization of the Follansbee, West Virginia, Branch which had a charter membership of fifty-nine. On October 3, he dedicated the Moundsville, West Virginia, church. On the week end of October 6 and 7, Brother Draper was at the district conference of the New York-Philadelphia District in Manhattan, New York. So far as is known this is the first conference of the Reorganization in downtown Manhattan. Brother Draper reports the spiritual atmosphere of the conference was one of missionary outreach which promises for considerable growth in the district, particularly in the metropolitan New York area.

KILLED IN COLLISION

Elder Arnold Ellsworth, pastor of the South Crysler Branch in Independence, was killed in a collision October 8 in St. Louis County. Richard Krahl, also of Independence, was injured critically and was taken to the St. Louis County Hospital. Brother Ellsworth is survived by his wife, Mrs. Gloria Ellsworth, and a daughter, Marcia, as well as other relatives.

1,500 WOMEN MEET

Approximately 1,500 delegates from throughout the United States attended the General Women's Institute in Independence October 8-12. Classes were held during the day and special speakers were featured in the evening. Other events of interest included a tour of church institutions and a tour of historical spots of interest in church history around Independence.

WORK ON HYMNAL

Apostle D. Blair Jensen and Franklyn Weddle met in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, with Sister Clara Hoxie to work on the new German hymnal. They report that work is progressing on the hymnal. Brother Weddle returned on October 7 in time to direct the first rehearsal of "The Messiah."

ELECTED DISTRICT PRESIDENT

Brother Sylvester Coleman who was appointed by the joint council to replace Brother Clifford Cole was elected district president of the Northwestern Iowa District at the conference at Logan, Iowa, October 7. He assumes his duties as soon as he can locate a place for his family.

WALLA WALLA, WASHINGTON.—The annual business meeting was held in July with the following officers elected: Charles E. Miller, pastor; Lauree Miller, secretary-treasurer; Hulin Crownover, church school director; Pheba Miller, publicity director; Opal Simpson, women's leader; Vida M. Fletcher, music director; Matt D. Crownover of Richland, Washington, elder in charge.

Sunday services are held in the annex of the Adventist church, corner of Fourth and Birch, Walla Walla. Attendance during the year has been an average of about twenty-five. As many as forty have attended several times. The first baptisms since the mission was organized were Joan and Richard Sargent. They were baptized early in the year by Elder Vern Webb at Spokane, Washington. A watermelon feed was held September 7 at the home of Sister Tillie Ary with Maxine and Hulin Crownover in charge of the program.—Reported by VIDA M. FLETCHER

MORGANTOWN, WEST VIRGINIA.—The pastor, James L. Jeffries baptized seven candidates September 9. Thelma Jeffries, his daughter, and Mrs. Norma Jeffries, his daughter-in-law, were baptized. Also baptized were Mrs. Virginia Garcia and her four children, Florence, Rosa Lee, Nickie, and Frankie. They were confirmed September 16. Election of officers was held on September 16. Brother Samuel Zonker, district president, and Brother Robert Rodgers were present at this meeting. Brother Zonker blessed Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Erasma Battencourt, of Point Marion, Pennsylvania, while at the branch.—Reported by MARY JEFFRIES

CLIO, MICHIGAN.—A series of missionary meetings conducted by Elder J. V. Pement, president of the Eastern Michigan District, was held September 16-30 at the branch. An average of seventy-five people attended the meetings which were held every night except Saturday. Brother Pement met with the young people for a dinner and group discussion on Saturday. Thursday he met with the women's department. An early morning prayer service was held on the first Sunday morning. The series concluded with seven baptisms.

Elder James McBride was elected pastor of the Clio Branch at the annual business meeting September 14 for the eleventh consecutive year. The average attendance at church school for the past year was seventy-five, while the midweek fellowship service had an attendance average of forty-one. The average for all other services has been eighty-three.

During the month of September, the women's department redecored the ladies' lounge by painting and upholstering wicker furniture, installing new mirrors, painting the walls, and making new curtains. They also donated screens for the church windows during the summer.

Patriarch J. J. Ledsworth of Port Huron met with the Saints for Communion service October 7.—Reported by ANN PHILLIPS

FOREST GROVE, OREGON.—The annual business meeting was held September 16, 1951, under the direction of Elder J. L. Verhei.

Brother C. M. Whiting was elected pastor for the coming year. The following names were presented to and approved by the branch for ordination: Ray Rogers, elder; Larry Bosshardt, Lyle Anderson, and Harvey Blynn Anderson, priests.—Reported by MRS. H. B. ANDERSON

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA.—Jack Page was ordained a priest August 26 by Elders Jack Pray and H. H. Jernigan. Two children were blessed on the same day by these elders. They were David Michael, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell White, and Jessie Rudolph, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Bryars.

The annual business meeting was held September 22. The following officers were elected: H. H. Jernigan, pastor; Jack Page, church school director; Mrs. Marshall White, women's leader; Mrs. Jack Page, children's supervisor; Mrs. Horace White, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. Sybil White, book steward; Mrs. Leonard Clark, reporter; Carolyn White, music director; Bill Russell, young people's leader; Jack Page, Frank Eubanks, Walter White, Horace White, Jessie Crysell, Bill Russell, building. During the year there have been four people baptized.—Reported by MRS. LEONARD CLARK

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—The annual business meeting was held August 27. The officers elected are Elder Vernon E. Lundeen, pastor; Priest Paul R. Staffeld, church school director; Ferne Parsons, music director; Ruth Walsh, women's director; William and Irene Shuster, Zion's League directors; Thor Oltvedt, branch secretary; Frank Parsons, Sylvester Roberts, Clifton Resch, Doyle Sundell, and Harrison Hatch, finance committee. The following persons were appointed by the pastor to their respective offices: Elder Gordon S. Bennett and Priest Roger R. Lundeen, counselors to the pastor; Elder C. Leslie Lynch, assistant pastor; Warren and Vallie Wolfe, junior church leaders; Thor Oltvedt, auditor; Howell Champion, building supervisor; Lillian Wolfe, historian; Donald Tracey, book steward.

Missionary Delbert Smith has been conducting cottage meetings in Minneapolis since his arrival last July. Several nonmembers have been coming to these services.

Six young people from the Minneapolis Branch are at Graceland this fall. They are Pat Scott, Hazel Smith, Ruth Johnson, Marjorie Roberts, Richard Elvin, and Russell Walsh. Barbara Bledsoe has enrolled at the Independence Sanitarium.

Three children have been blessed recently: William Charles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Elvin; Robert Charles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Porter; and Peggy Lee Virginia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Rounds.

Priest Robert Wise of Orlando, Florida, preached in the Minneapolis Branch on September 23. Brother Wise is a son of Mrs. Bertha Wise who is a charter member of the branch.—Reported by C. LESLIE LYNCH

MIAMI, OKLAHOMA.—On September 2, Gayle Jean, infant daughter of Elder and Mrs. D. W. Guinee, was blessed by Seventy D. L. Kyser and Elder B. F. Kyser. Brother and Sister Guinee and their family have moved to Miami from Moline, Kansas.

The Zion's League met on September 30 and elected the following new officers: Jewel Archer, president; Kay Kyser, vice-president; and Margeva Bishop, secretary-treasurer. Committee chairmen selected were Gene Gilbert, service; Ladoris Peterson, study; Glenda Kirk, worship; and Sandra Staton, recreation.

Home-coming Day was observed October 7. The church school attendance was 195. This is the largest attendance on our church school record. Special music was rendered by the mixed quartet composed of Mrs. John K. Mount, Mrs. Frank Althouse, D. W. Guinee, and Harold Van Sickle; the all-girl choir under the direction of Brother Guinee; and the adult choir directed by Mrs. C. L. Rook. District President Stephen A. Black was guest speaker at the morning service. His sermon topic was "Putting God First in Our Lives." A group picture was taken at noon followed by a basket dinner.

The interior of the church has been redecored under the direction of Ralph Jackson, building committee chairman. Brother Jackson was assisted by a number of the men of the branch.

Mrs. E. G. Gilbert, Mrs. Bob Warnberg, Mrs. Ralph Jackson, Mrs. D. L. Kyser, Mrs. B. A. Howard, Mrs. A. R. Hays, and Mrs. C. L. Rook attended the Women's Institute held at Independence.—Reported by BETTY KYSER

Shadow of a Tower

By Sally Harding

of the semester. My eyes searched the sea of faces for one familiar to my sight, and finally, out of the mass of students who had enrolled in English 45, I recognized a girl who had struggled with my group through the complicated processes of orientation. It reminded me of the beginning of my sophomore year at Graceland. I arrived on the campus a few days early. The sophomores were not scheduled to come until two days after the freshmen. How I searched for a sophomore face out of the freshmen visages that surrounded me.

THE UNFAMILIAR STRAINS of Michigan's "Hail to the Victors" which wafted through the crowd of 86,000 football fans failed to stimulate me at the first football game of the season. My ears would have welcomed the lyric of Graceland's "Yellowjackets" as they used to hear the song emphatically resounding across the Iowa landscape. But as the Victors song came over the air waves January 1 from California, my nerves tingled with a sort of pride that comes from being even a minute part of a sweeping spirit.

That first Sunday morning of the school year as I climbed the steps to worship with the Ann Arbor congregation and student group, I felt at home. I knew that the doors of the Graceland student center were standing open to welcome the campus congregation that morning, and in front of me, the doors to the same fellowship were standing open to welcome me and others.

That evening as the young people gathered around the piano in Dr. Brockway's home to sing the songs that I have sung with other young people at Graceland on Sunday

AS I SIT HERE at my desk and look out at the carillon tower that marks the passing of time at the University of Michigan, I remember other days, very similar in lots of ways to this one, when I sat at my desk in Walker Hall and looked out at the Graceland Tower spiring heavenward. Today, as then, my heart is overflowing.

This is exam week at the university, and as I burn the midnight oil I smile, remembering the cramming late at night that my roommate and I indulged in at Graceland during exam week. I remember Dr. Chevillie's admonition to students during that time, "Take sleep in the hours the Lord set aside for sleep."

I have spent a lot of time looking fondly back upon my Graceland experiences. There has been a little ache in my heart, a little knot in my stomach at times, realizing that those golden days are behind me. But I have not looked back regretting the passage of time. I have found inspiration in my memories; I have awakened from my nostalgic reveries with the sense of a new mission, challenged by my new horizons.

THE DAY I first registered at Michigan I stood in a line of several dozen students waiting my turn to counsel with my adviser. As the line dwindled down leaving only a few people ahead of me, my knees weakened, and I wished desperately that I could look across the table at Miss Morgan's smile and hear her words of academic counsel and friendly advice. But I discovered that the object of my present qualms was also wearing a smile, and I felt reassured and confident as I left his office.

The classroom was so spacious and impersonal that first day nights, I paused to give silent thanks for the bond of Christian fellowship.

MY HEART still skips a beat as I shuffle through the mail stack and find a letter or two addressed to me in the familiar script of a Graceland friend. And I turn avidly to the back pages of the Herald every week to keep up with the various announcements of my Graceland friends. And now I am adding another golden friendship to my treasure chest. I am no longer there to walk hand in hand with my friends up the Graceland Hill and meet God together with them at the summit. But I am walking up many similar hills, meeting God in a new environment and with newly discovered friends. My heart overflows in the midst of a wealth of enduring fellowship.

I have transferred my investments with fondest memories and greatest expectations. I drew my blueprints and laid the cornerstone in the shadow of the Graceland Tower. I shall continue the construction under the shadow of the carillon tower.

Five hundred forty-seven students have registered at Graceland College for the school year 1951-52. Early figures show 312 freshmen, 214 sophomores, and twenty-one unclassified students. In spite of the current draft situation, men outnumber women by some sixty students. A large part of the student body comes from Missouri and Iowa; others come from almost every state of the United States, Hawaii, Canada, England, Australia, Holland, Japan, Mexico, and the Netherlands West Indies.

Gazette

THE DIRECTORS of campus religious life have divided the campus congregation into fourteen pastoral groups. Each group has a student minister with a student, a woman, and a faculty associate. The groups are designed to provide opportunities for ministerial experience and to provide all students with the chance to participate in religious and recreational activities in a small group similar to most branches of the church. The fourteen student ministers are Sam Anderson, priest from Flora, Illinois; Dick Chevillie, deacon from Lamoni, Iowa; Jim Christiansen, priest from Holden, Missouri; Neil Eliason, priest from Deer Lodge, Montana; Al Fuller, deacon from Independence, Missouri; Les Gardner, deacon from Wallsend, Australia; Fred Howes, deacon from East Detroit, Michigan; Perry Mair, elder from Hammond, Indiana; Jim Postlethwait, priest from Lamoni, Iowa; Del Ranny, deacon from Council Bluffs, Iowa; Don Richards, teacher from Harbor Beach, Michigan; Dave Shupe, priest from Lakewood, Colorado; George Waddell, priest from East Moline, Illinois; and Gene Workman, priest from Fresno, California.

Mr. Paul Deaver, instructor of piano at Graceland for the past three years, has resigned. Miss Betty Mosier, who taught piano here two years ago, will return to fill the vacancy. Miss Mosier studied at the Kansas City Conservatory of Music and taught in Independence and Kansas City before first coming to Graceland to teach. Since leaving the Graceland faculty she has been teaching in Lamoni and the surrounding area as well as composing, and during the summers she has been studying for her Master's degree at the University of Illinois.

Dr. Wm. S. Gould, Director of Public Relations, reviewed Thor Heyerdahl's book, Kon-Tiki, before a group of interested students recently. The review prepared students for the motion picture, Kon-Tiki, which was shown in the Lamoni theater the following week. The book describes the adventures of six men crossing the Pacific from Peru to Polynesia on a raft to support Heyerdahl's theory that the ancestors of today's Polynesians came from South America. The motion picture consists of the film shot by these six men on the trip.

Dr. F. M. McDowell addressed the Graceland student body at the first formal convocation of the year. In his address, "Together We Write the Next Chapter," Dr. McDowell stated that although the world has reached a new high in mechanical power, it is in moral chaos. It knows the how but not the why. "It is for us," he said, "to build here together a genuinely Christian, Zionic Community. We are to conduct a great laboratory in Christian living."

The Graceland congregation attended a Wednesday evening fellowship on the theme, "This Is My Day." Many students told of the difficulties they had overcome to attend Graceland and spoke of the years of expectation now being fulfilled by their actual presence on "the hill."

Graceland is planning to show during the school year a series of eight outstanding motion pictures which cannot now be seen in commercial theaters. "Pygmalion," a film version of the play by George Bernard Shaw, will be the first.

New Horizons

High Lights of the Graceland-Compton Football Game

FOOTBALL FANS—PHOOIE!—Pesky nuisances who have monopolized the parking area around the Central Los Angeles church for years while screaming themselves hoarse at the near-by Coliseum. As for me, I've seen only two games in eighteen years and have little interest in the sport.

What am I saying? Here I sit on the forty-yard line, suddenly converted into a yelling maniac along with about 800 other R.L.D.S. maniacs who have caught their first sight of the glistening helmets and the gold and blue colors of the Graceland Yellowjackets under the floodlights of Ramsaur Stadium at Compton, California.

I'm trying to spot the Ku boy from Hawaii. They say he weighs 200 pounds and does all the kicking for the Graceland team barefooted. That was good material for publicity. We sent it out to 125 local metropolitan and trade area papers in Los Angeles County. It isn't every day that we have such an opportunity to get into the headlines.

The Gracelanders arrived by bus from Lamoni Tuesday, September 25. There was a good representation of local fans on hand to meet them. It was the first time I had looked over a group of church boys with the hopeful expectation of seeing bulging muscles, crooked noses, and cauliflower ears. They had muscles all right, and the business manager, James Burdick, assured me that they had fighting hearts. He also told me that sixteen of them hold the priesthood, and that they're the finest bunch of fellows that ever traveled 1,800 miles to play a football game.

We held a city-wide fellowship prayer service last night. Local church people were favorably impressed with the seriousness of the Gracelanders and with their wholehearted participation in the experience of prayer and testimony. The manager of a local eating place, accustomed to the usual rowdiness of football teams on trips, was so impressed with the quiet courtesy of our boys that she inquired where they were from and who they were. On being informed that they were from a church college the lady said, "We thought so. We knew that they weren't the ordinary type of football team."

THE BLEACHERS are getting crowded. Jerry Jones, a Graceland football star of twenty years or so ago, just stepped on my toes. We brushed imaginary moths off their old Graceland sweaters as he and Kay crowded by. The Ostertags, Van Eatons, Carmichaels, Engels, Van Fleets, Kelleys, Beils, Brackenburys, Leeks, Sheppards, Ballards, Nunnamakers, Benders, and about a thousand other church people are waving at each other. If enthusiasm will win the game, we'll win it.

The sixty-piece Compton College band is parading. They've just played the Iowa State song. Now it's our turn, and our fifty-piece band, engaged especially for the occasion (courtesy of the Long Beach Children's Band) has the center of the arena.

Here come the Compton players, all eighty-eight of them, representing a student body of around four thousand according to a radio sportscast. Glancing down the line-up I see fourteen Compton players whose weights are over two hundred pounds. I'm beginning to tremble with apprehension. I am told they expect to give our team the "steam roller." Graceland has only five men over two hundred pounds.

The eighty-five hundred spectators are now standing for the kick-off. Graceland receives and is downed on the thirty-yard line. Graceland players try a pass, and it is blocked. They try a line plunge and are stopped cold. What happened? Compton has the ball and is running for a touchdown in the first few minutes of the game. Well, anyway, Graceland blocked the goal kick.

Now it's a see-saw tug of war. Our boys looked a little nervous at first but they've settled down and are matching their skill against superior weight and speed of the Compton eleven. Someone's hurt—it's one of our two-hundred-pound tackles. He's being carried off the field. That's bad. I was told before the game that Graceland needed more weight in its line to hold Compton. Loss of a two-hundred-pound man is serious. Our boys are trying passes, but the Compton Tartars are coming through the line too fast and are knocking the ball down. Another of our men is hurt. It's George Ku, our big two-hundred-pound Hawaiian. His shoulder is dislocated, and he's out of the game. One or two more jolts like that and we'll be done for.

There's the end of the quarter. It looked for a little while as though the game would be turned into a rout, but the Yellowjackets held the Tartars on our thirty and forty-yard lines for the entire quarter.

Here's the second quarter. Graceland is still holding the line. A deceptive shift by our team has repeatedly pulled the Tartars off-sides with resulting penalties that have worked to our advantage. The folks here in the bleachers are concerned over the large number of our boys being injured. Fortunately, however, none of the injuries appear to be serious. Compton has sustained one injury, but its man-power supply is inexhaustible. Both teams are giving all they have, and Graceland lines have held through the entire quarter. Score at the half is still 6-0, Compton's favor.

There's the kick-off for the second half, Compton receiving. The Tartars are downed on their forty-yard line. Again it's a back and forth struggle, with Compton scoring twice in this quarter. Both times Graceland has blocked the goal kick, depriving the Tartars of the extra point. The score is now 18-0 as we enter the last quarter.

More of the same thing . . . the Yellowjackets playing with skill and courage against a powerful opponent bent on chalking up a tremendous score against them. The Tartars have beaten every Eastern team they have played in recent years and scores of 50 and 60 to 0 have not been uncommon. They don't intend this game to be an exception.

There are two more touchdowns in this fourth quarter. Each time our boys have broken through fast and blocked the goal kick. Compton has missed every one so far! About one minute to play now. The Yellowjackets have the ball, and at last their passing combination is clicking. They've carried the ball halfway down the field.

THERE'S THE GUN—the game is over. Our boys lost the game 30-0. We wish it had been different, but we're proud of them anyway. They have not trailed the Graceland colors in this encounter. Few expected them to win. I am told that "gentlemen of chance" were placing odds of seven to two on Compton.

The Compton coach told our coach that the Tartars gave all they had and had hoped to pile up a score of sixty or seventy points. They were a little surprised at the unexpected strength of the Graceland team.

A Graceland player was the first to assist a fallen opponent to his feet. This unusual act of courtesy so impressed the Compton players that courtesy became the rule of the game. Despite the numerous injuries our boys received at the hands of a team that is reputed to be the roughest on the West Coast, our coach was able to make the public statement that the Compton Tartars were the cleanest players Graceland has engaged in the past two years.

Proud Latter Day Saints on the West Coast like to think that the example of good sportsmanship on the part of the Graceland team, which places character above brute strength and sportsmanship above the laurels of victory, has left its impression on the young men of the Compton team.

Compton officials were amazed to see the local support that the distant Yellowjackets received. The approximately six hundred $2.25 reserved seats sold in advance of the game by the church, and the undetermined number of tickets sold to our people at the gate made an impressive showing on the Compton management which is accustomed to going in the hole financially when entertaining out-of-state teams.

Probably the most significant value of this West Coast trip of the Yellowjackets was the impression made on our own church people. The enthusiasm with which the hundreds of young people of Southern California welcomed their own church football team has resulted in a resurgence of the Graceland spirit in this area. Some of these brawny lads may one day supply the added power needed for the Yellowjackets to emerge victors from a West Coast engagement.

The Yellowjackets lost a game, but they won the hearts and support of hundreds of Saints to whom the name "Yellowjacket" previously had no meaning, and they have won the respect of a great West Coast football team. Last, but not least, they have made a flag-waving, whistle-tooting football fan out of this old die-hard.

(The following week Compton beat Joliet, Illinois, 59-0)

Letter of Testimony

In my youth I belonged to a popular church, but I became dissatisfied because it didn't teach the Bible as I understood it. When my husband and I and our children moved to Elida, New Mexico, we attended a series of meetings held by Elder A. J. Layland. After listening to him we decided this was the church we had been searching for, so we were baptized along with our two sons and daughter. Another son was baptized later. In 1925 we moved to Portales, New Mexico, where there was no Reorganized Church. We wrote to President F. M. Smith and requested that a missionary be sent to preach in our city, and Elder G. H. Wixom came. Two ministers of other churches were very bitter against our work, but Brother Wixom finally won them as friends and baptized several more people. We held group meetings in our homes for three years and enjoyed them very much. In 1930 we moved to Independence so we could attend Stone Church.

We have a granddaughter, Maxine Cothorn, of Rich Hill, Missouri, who has been bedfast with rheumatic fever since January 15. We shall appreciate having the Saints pray for her.

Books Wanted

Harry Black, a church appointee, 1307 Sterling, Independence, Missouri, would like to purchase a copy of True Succession.

Mrs. Stella Culiver, Box 352, Grayville, Illinois, would like to obtain a copy of Macgregor's A Marvelous Work and a Wonder.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Thomas, Lamoni, Iowa, request prayers for their daughter, Mrs. Robert Hinton, that she may regain her health and be able to care for her home and family.

Alice Powell, Box 121, Antonito, Colorado, requests prayers that, if it is God's will, she may be healed of high blood pressure. Her home was damaged by the flood, and she is living with her daughter.

Mrs. W. S. Joslin, R.F.D. 3, Cleburne, Texas, requests prayers for her husband and herself; their daughter, Lillie Beckham; and their granddaughter, Florene. All are in poor health.

Mrs. Edna Reneau, 1001 Caliman Street, Marlin, Texas, requests prayers for her father, Elder James R. Allen, who is a patient at Tarbit Hospital in Marlin. Elder Allen is pastor of Marlin Branch.

FLOYD MARION McDOWELL, Independence, Missouri, (page 5) is better known to the church through his activities than his writing. Few men have had a busier ministry. He is a native of Richland Center, Wisconsin, and was baptized at East Delavan when ten years old. He was graduated from the high school there in 1907, then went on to Graceland and was graduated in 1909. He received his B.A. degree from the University of Iowa in 1911, his M.A. from Clark University in 1914, and his Ph.D. from the University of Iowa in 1918. For his doctor's thesis he prepared the first nation-wide survey of junior colleges in the United States. This was published and distributed by the U.S. Bureau of Education. He was the first dean of junior colleges in Iowa, a member of the Phi Delta Kappa Fraternity, University of Iowa, and a member of the Graceland faculty 1911-13 and 1914-25. He became a member of the Board of Trustees in 1922 and chairman of the Board in 1948. He is temporarily living in Lamoni to give full time during the college year to Graceland interests.

In 1912 he married Lucy Myrtle Goode. They have three daughters: Wilda Lee Dixon, Marian Louise Wise, and Maxine Fae Crownover. His special interests are youth work, camping, counseling, and all aspects of educational work of the church. He is a member of the Optimist Club, Knife and Fork Club, Men's Club, and National Council of Family Relations. He was ordained a high priest in 1915 and became a member of the Lamoni Stake High Council. In 1922 he became a member of the First Presidency. In 1938 he became Director of Religious Education and held the post for sixteen years. Since that time he has been Director of Priesthood Education.

LEON EUGENE CHRISTY, Kansas City, Missouri, (page 11) will be remembered for his musical contributions in and out of the church, rather than as a writer; he will also be remembered as the son of that good missionary couple of a few years ago, Elder and Sister Ward L. Christy. He was born in Pleasant Grove, Utah, in 1893. He received his public school education in East Des Moines and Lamoni, Iowa, after which he attended Graceland and then went on to take training in the American Conservatory of Music at Chicago, where he was an honor graduate in 1921. He also took private tutoring with Hemus, Prochovsky, Rosenberg, and others in New York City. He is an honorary member of the Music Fraternity at Kansas University, Phi Mu Alpha, and won a silver trophy from the State Women's Club for his women's chorus in 1937. Early in his music profession, while still studying in the conservatory, he sang at Congregational, Presbyterian, and Catholic churches, as well as at the theaters. Then he taught music, directing choirs and choruses, and also traveled promoting festivals and school musicals over the country. In 1925 he went to the University of Kansas as an associate professor of voice. In 1930 he left K.U. and has lived in Kansas City since. In 1919 and 1920, he conducted the Stone Church Choir and the Messiah Choir. He was choir director at Central Kansas City at two different periods. For a while he was on the Chautauqua platform and on the main Redpath circuits. From 1930-1941 he had a private voice studio. Since 1946 he has been associated with the Better Business Bureau as special representative. At the present time he is a member of the Kansas City, Kansas, Chamber of Commerce and the South Kansas City Business Club. He is director of music, drama, and special interests at Central congregation and for the Kansas City Stake. He was recently ordained to the office of teacher.

His wife, the former Harriett Miller, is a registered nurse, a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing class of 1915. They have four children: Harriett Lenore Brick, Eugene W., David M., and Robert D.

GRACE ELLEN (PENNEL) TOUSLEY, Independence, Missouri, (page 16) has turned her love for writing into a vocation. She is the author of a book and several magazine articles. She is a native of Galland's Grove, Iowa, where she was baptized in 1910. Seven years later she married George H. Tousley. They have two boys and a girl: George H., Jr., John Dirk, and Marigold Chell. Sister Tousley was graduated from the Independence High School in 1916. She since has studied librarian science and served as medical librarian at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital from 1943-50. She has her certificate as medical librarian. In 1934 she was honored as "All-American ConteSTAR," and is a member of the Special Libraries Association, the Medical Library Association, the National Writers' Club, and All-American ConteSTARS. Her hobbies are collecting miniature objects, bird lore, and handcraft.

 THE PLUMED SERPENT

Here is a point that may be of interest to those who have read of the "Plumed Serpent" of the Aztec religion, in connection with the Book of Mormon.

Some may consider it fanciful and imaginary to associate feathers with a serpent; but if one goes into the zoological side of the question, it isn't so fanciful.

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary says: "Birds . . . are descended from the reptiles, which they resemble anatomically."

We have read of the ancient and now extinct Archaeopteryx, "a genus of primitive reptile-like birds," of which a number of specimens have been found in the Upper Jurassic of Europe. They had long slender tails with feathers along each side.

In this "Plumed Serpent" the ancient Americans may have preserved in their literature and religion a memory of something real that had been forgotten by the peoples of Europe. However, as late as the sixteenth century, excited Europeans reported seeing flying dragons (a kind of reptile) at night, though such things are now dismissed as superstition and imagination. This shows, however, the persistence of something in the love and memory of the people.

 YOUR FACE IS A WINDOW

Your face is a window wherethrough the world may look into your mind and see the state of your soul. If you have wrong thoughts or feelings, enough of them will show through your face to advise or warn the beholder.

Men used to conceal their thoughts and feelings behind heavy beards; Mohammedan women could use their veils, and Japanese women could hide behind their fans. Changes of dress and custom are steadily depriving us of these shields, and we are out in the open, with no more privacy than an amoeba under a microscope.

If you have thoughts or attitudes toward others that you do not care to acknowledge, be assured that you have no place to hide them. But you have the power to change them so that they will be safe for others to see.

 OREGON DISTRICT ANNIVERSARY

Oregon District (Oregon, southwest Washington, and northwest California) is holding its "Golden Anniversary Conference" at Portland, October 19 to 21. District leaders have issued an attractive mimeo booklet with printed cover containing the annual report, the district president's message, the conference program, and the names and addresses of district officers, pastors, and ministers to isolated members. "Fifty Good Years—1901-1951" is the slogan. Compliments are in order for Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who is in charge of that territory, District President J. L. Verhei, Bishop M. E. Lasater, and Missionaries Arthur F. Gibbs and James N. Kemp.

ATTEND CONFERENCE

President F. Henry Edwards and Apostle D. T. Williams attended the district conference for Southern Nebraska at Lincoln, October 13 and 14.

JOHN SHEEHY IMPROVED

A recent call at the Sheehy home found John much improved and hopeful. He wishes us to thank his many friends from coast to coast and Canada for their cards and prayers.

CONTACTS STUDENTS

Apostle Charles R. Hield contacted the group of church students at Warrensburg, Missouri, on October 9, discussing the Spanish-speaking project with them.

INSTITUTES HELD

Seventy James C. Daugherty reports priesthood institutes held in the Kaw Valley District. From October 7 through 12 an institute was held in Topeka, Kansas, and one was held in Leavenworth, Kansas, October 14-19.

FAMILY MINISTRY CONDUCTED

A successful family ministry night is conducted each Tuesday evening in the Center Stake. Activities are held to a minimum and members of the priesthood of the sixteen congregations are organized to visit families. Records of the families and visits are kept on maps, and under the supervision of the pastor and with the help of the church secretary, the plan is aiding in reaching many families.

INSTITUTE ITEMS

Mrs. Edward Nelson of San Francisco, California, member of the General Council of Women, attended the women's institute and was able to attend her first council meeting in several years. Sister Nelson is the daughter of Gilbert Waller, former missionary to the South Sea Islands.

The first woman officially registered and housed at the institute was Mrs. Gertrude Hathaway of Seattle, Washington. She arrived on October 4.

The parents of Sister Aarona Kohlman, also a member of the council, Brother and Sister N. L. Booker, traveled from Miami, Florida, accompanied by Brother and Sister William Dibble of Miami in order that Sisters Booker and Dibble might attend the institute. The unique feature of their visit was the mode of travel which was a trailer that was parked in the Kohlman's yard during the visit.

ATTENDS HOME-COMING

Chris B. Hartshorn, managing editor of the Herald House, attended the Des Moines Branch and gave the morning sermon at their home-coming October 14. He was pastor there 1927-31.

CHANGE "STEPPING STONES" DATES

A duplication error was made in dates and numbers of the two issues of "Stepping Stones" which have just gone into the mail. The issue featuring "Chipper, the Cowbird" as a lead story should be changed to read November 4, Number 44. The paper featuring "The Legend of the Blue Spruce" as a front-page story should be changed to read November 11, Number 45.

Let's Finish the Auditorium

The drive for funds to complete the Auditorium is gaining momentum. All effort points toward November 18, the date set for the initial emphasis in congregations throughout the world.

The goal is $100,000 by December 31, a total of $500,000 by the end of 1953. Quotas for each district and stake have been computed and sent to officers in each organized area. These figures will be relayed to congregations within a short time.

Among the materials being sent your pastors is an attractive poster. It should be displayed on the bulletin board in your branch. Start looking for it.

Your offering may be presented in the special collection in your local congregation, to the bishop's representative, or mailed direct to the Presiding Bishopric, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. If you wish to participate according to the principle of surplus, you should first contact the Presiding Bishopric.

The money received in the November 18 endeavor will be called a "Thanksgiving Offering." So, regardless of the method of contributing, the important point is that each member take inventory, in the season of Thanksgiving, of the bounteous material gifts with which he has been blessed. As a result, he will be motivated to give expression in a material way of his appreciation. An offering to the Auditorium Fund will be a logical and appropriate way to make such expression. C.D.N.

The Privileged Few

"Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."—Matthew 7:23.

Irving S. Olds, Chairman of the Board of the United States Steel Corporation, wrote an article that now appears in pamphlet form entitled, "Our Privileged Millions." He begins with this statement:

The greatest hoax that has been perpetrated upon the American people in my lifetime, probably, is that insidious and malignant phrase, "the privileged few." It has been used frequently with telling effect by men in high places. It has been widely exploited by demagogues, to their own political profit. . . . Today there are millions of people who . . . sincerely believe that the great industrial enterprises of America are owned and controlled by a handful of wealthy men.

He goes on to state that the great corporations of America are owned by many people—about fifteen millions. American Telephone and Telegraph is owned by a million stockholders; General Motors by nearly half a million; United States Steel by 256,630. His thought is that instead of "a privileged few" we have "privileged millions." Fifteen million people out of 140 million or about one person in ten own the great corporations of America.

There are many ways in which one can be privileged. Wealth is only one of them. Let us consider some of the others.

* * * *

It is a privilege, for example, to live in a civilized country. The great majority of mankind lives in backward, semicivilized, or barbaric conditions.

A man and his wife recently made a trip to a foreign country where living conditions are rather crude. He found that very little refrigeration was used in handling food; that ideas and facilities for sanitation were mostly very primitive; that everywhere there was a tremendous loss of life and property because of lack of modern equipment, methods, and standards. He said that in one city of two hundred fifty thousand he found only three places where he thought it safe to eat.

Returning to his own country, he made the discovery that his people have many wonderful privileges. They have many faults, many things to overcome. Other countries are more progressive in some respects. But the privileges here are available to all who will work and strive for them. Everybody has a chance.

* * * *

It is a privilege to be a Christian. This blessing is shared by many millions of people around the world. To have the assurance of God's love and care; to enjoy the fellowship of good and enlightened Christian people; to live where human life has dignity, and the worth of the individual is respected—these are great privileges.

It is a privilege to be a Latter Day Saint. In our church we enjoy spiritual gifts and blessings not known to many other people, either in kind or in degree. It is a privilege to live in a community of our people, to know them as neighbors and friends, to work with them, to share their hopes, their ideals, and their purposes.

* * * *

Here is something to remember: No privilege is of any value unless it is used.

The "privileged few" are those who use their privileges to the best advantage. Anybody could own stock in the United States Steel Corporation if he were willing to work for it. Only a "privileged few," one person in ten, does it.

The privilege of using the public library means little to the indolent man who does not care to read. The privilege of hearing great music means little to the person who prefers cheap songs. The privilege of attending the university cannot open to one who will not take the trouble to prepare to pass the entrance examinations.

The privilege of citizenship is of little value unless one lives as an active member of the community, pays his taxes, receives protection and services, votes, and enjoys the good life shared by the people. The privilege of citizenship means little to a hermit or a recluse. It means a great deal to most of us.

The privileges of church membership are as important as any others known to men, and more important than some. It is a privilege to be able to attend the meetings, participate in worship, hear good sermons, prayers, and testimonies, and be present as the Spirit of God blesses the people. These also are privileges that are good only if we use them.

If we look back over our lives, we can see many neglected opportunities, wasted hours, and buried talents. But nothing is to be gained by simple mourning over the past. However, we can turn to the future with a new determination, and be resolved to "live up to our privileges."

In a special sense, the people of the church are "the privileged few" insofar as they are active. It is a credit to belong to this privileged group. The church can minister only to those who place themselves within reach of its service. Let us choose, in the best sense, to be a "privileged few."

Reunion Procedure

At the recent Joint Council of First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric attention was given to reunion work and the following statement of principles and procedure was adopted:

Only such appointees as are specifically needed for work at any given reunion shall be assigned to that reunion.

All requests for the services of general officials and visiting staff members should be cleared with the Presidency before the general officers and other workers are approached by those making request.

Insofar as possible requests for specific workers should be made as early as possible.

The unified reunion material made available for the 1951 season was used to excellent advantage. Similar material will be prepared for the 1952 reunion season. The theme for 1952 will be "Spiritual Growth Through Stewardship."

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

costs have increased approximately 8.8 per cent. (Figures are subject to final audit.)

The closing months of the year provide a good time to get our tithing records up to date, pay our tithing, and be all prepared for a better year in 1952. These are important days and years for the church. As always we are deeply appreciative of the substantial evidence of the devotion of the Saints, as it is reflected in these contributions of tithes and offerings. Respectfully submitted,

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC
G. L. DELAPP

Across the Desk

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Emery E. Jennings, president of Far West Stake:

Since the Stake was organized in 1917 the highest number of baptisms for any one year was one hundred seventy-three for 1938. In 1937 there were one hundred thirty-eight baptisms; in 1940 there were one hundred thirty-one; and in 1950 one hundred twenty-seven, which was the fourth best year in the history of the Stake.

We closed the end of September of this year with one hundred twenty baptisms. This means we must baptize fifty-four people between now and December 31 to better the record of 1938. From all indications it appears that we shall have a good baptismal month for October and with the vigorous missionary program that we now have in the stake, it is altogether possible that we shall not only break the record but establish a new one.

We shall keep you informed from month to month as to our results.

In a letter from Elder D. J. Williams we are informed of the death of Sister Hattie Lambert, wife of the late Bishop George P. Lambert. Sister Lambert was ninety-two years old at her death on September 26, and up until the last remained in good health and was often seen at services with her son Elbert. She will be missed by the Saints at Nauvoo and throughout the church.

From Seventy Eugene Theys, Berlin, Germany, October 2:

This is to let you know that Brother Louis Zonker and I are now in Berlin. We have been in Germany now for four weeks and will not complete our present tour of the mission until October 15. We are having a conference for the Saints in Berlin and the Russian Zone this coming Sunday, and on the thirteenth and fourteenth we will have a second conference for our members in the three western zones. Capt. Floyd H. Engstrom, our Army chaplain, will be the guest speaker at the eleven o'clock service. An institute will be held on Saturday with Patriarch Franz Beil, Elder Zonker, and myself as instructors.

We hope to complete the final registration of the church property in Berlin and Hannover by November 1, after which we shall start to build the mission house and the church in Hannover.

May God continue to bless you in his work is our earnest prayer.

From Merle P. Guthrie, church statistician:

There were 513 baptisms reported in August. This is the highest total for August since 1929. For the first eight months of 1951 there were 3,289 baptisms reported to the Department of Statistics. This is the highest eight-month total since 1921.

August baptisms were well scattered throughout the church, only one branch reporting ten or more. Sweet Home, Oregon, had 12. Three branches had nine—Boyer City, Michigan; Flint, Michigan; and Rock Island, Illinois.

The first five stakes and districts in baptisms for August are Kansas City Stake, 34; Oregon District, 33; Center Stake of Zion, 29; Los Angeles Stake, 24; Arkansas and Louisiana District, 17; Eastern Colorado District, 17; and Central Missouri Stake, 17.

The following missions reported a highly commendable number of baptisms for August: Grassland, Ontario, 10; Anchorage, Alaska, 10; Klamath Falls, Oregon, 7; and Nampa, Idaho, 6.

A Spring of Living Water

A Personal Testimony of Happiness

By Hazel Napier

“WHAT IS HAPPINESS?” a friend asked me some time ago. “In a prophecy I was told that I would be happy. But is this happiness—arising early to go to work every morning, going to bed late at night so tired I have difficulty sleeping? Should I be happy under all circumstances?”

“No,” I answered, “but the way you react to each circumstance determines your state of future happiness. A defeatist attitude will make you see cloudy skies, but if you look up with bright optimism, you can expect sunshine after rain.”

Like so many of us my friend failed to understand the true meaning of happiness. We cannot expect bliss to accompany our every step. Happiness is not a great surge of emotion. It is not like an ocean with alternate calm and heaving, foam-crested waves. It is, as my mother taught me, like a quiet little spring of cool, refreshing water.

Mother learned about happiness from grandmother, who never had the comforts now considered so indispensable. After sixteen years of marriage, her sparsely furnished three-room log cabin overflowed with noisy, laughing children. For them she sewed garments of homespun, knitted an endless supply of stockings, baked “mile-high” stacks of cornbread and pancakes. All her cooking was done over the glowing coals of an open hearth. A dozen times a day or more she trudged stanchly up the hill to the house with buckets of water from the spring. She washed clothes in the creek after beating them on a rock to loosen the dirt. In winter, the icy water bit deep into her hands roughened by homemade soap. Hers was the privation, hardship, and suffering typical of pioneer days. Yet she usually had a song and a smile. She was never very articulate, but by example she taught her children how to be happy.

Accordingly, mother also greeted life with a smile. Her lot was easier than grandmother’s had been. She had a well behind a comfortable frame house, stoves for heating and cooking, kerosene lamps instead of homemade candles. Later there was a sink in the kitchen, and the house was wired for electricity. Still it was a constant struggle to feed and clothe her children adequately. In addition, she knew sorrow in the deaths of a little daughter, her husband, and a young son. Yet she has come to a peaceful, happy old age. Her eyes are the same bright laughing ones I remember so vividly.

EQUALLY vivid is my recollection of the day that I, a child of ten, first learned something concerning the secret of happiness. My mother, my two sisters, and I were in the woods picking blackberries. To be more accurate, they were picking the berries. Thinking of the dream I had the night before, I tagged behind my mother unconsciously clutching my empty bucket. Urged by my sisters to do my share of the work, I absent-mindedly plucked the fruit and let it fall on the ground.

Seeing this, my mother said, “Hazel, let’s find another patch of bushes.” To my sisters she said, “Stay here and pick until we get back.”

When we were out of hearing distance she asked, “What is the matter? You act as if you were in a daze.”

“I had a dream last night—a dream with my eyes open.”

“A vision? Tell me about it.”

“While I was staring at the ceiling it suddenly seemed to melt away, and I could see a blue sky dotted with white clouds. While I was watching them, a man dressed in white robes appeared in a circle of light. He looked at me and smiled as if he loved me very much. And then he opened his hand and let drop three pieces of paper. They were as white as the robes he wore. While they floated downward, turning this way and that in a little breeze, the sunlight made them look like gold. When they reached the ground I ran to pick them up. They were black.”

When I spoke the last word my mother started, the bright eagerness leaving her face. Slowly she placed her half-filled bucket on the ground. Taking my hand, she drew me along until we were walking on the mossy bank of a small, pleasant stream. I knew by the way she kept her face turned from me that she was crying. I thought I heard her say something.

“What did you say, Mother?”

“I was thinking about your vision. In the Bible black is symbolic of trouble. No doubt those pieces of paper represent the three great troubles that come to people—physical, financial, and the loss of loved ones. They will come to you through no fault of your own. You have work to do for the Lord. He will permit troubles to come upon you—”

She broke off, her attention caught by phenomena at times seen in nature. The waters of the stream dimpled and sparkled with light. While we watched, the air a few inches above the surface seemed to fill with a shower of moving gold, as if the rapid motion of the water produced a dancing spray that caught the glint and hue of the sun. A melodious murmur delighted my ear.

“Mother, what makes the water sing?”

“The rocky bed.” Then she asked as if talking to herself, “Is that the way with people? Do we sing because of the rocks over which we must walk?”

We moved on in silence. I knew she was thinking of her last question.

Suddenly we both stopped, our attention directed to the same thing: the water was disappearing right into the earth.

"Where is the water going?" I asked in a small voice. I felt as if I were on the verge of a great discovery.

"The water has found an underground passage. If we walk on we can see where it comes out again."

Eagerly I moved forward, but she held out a detaining hand.

"Wait. I have something to say," she spoke quickly, her face alight. "I want you always to remember that happiness is a spring of living water welling into everlasting peace and joy. When sorrows and troubles come, we feel as if the spring has dried up; but it has merely gone beneath the surface and will return. When your life is like that"—she pointed to the dry bed of the stream—"pray and keep your faith. And work. While happiness flows spontaneously into our lives, we must build a substantial course for its passage."

IN BUILDING FOR HAPPINESS, one of the first requisites is the proper perspective. As I use perspective in this article it means "the relative importance of facts or matters from any special point of view."

A childish game taught me early in life the meaning of perspective, although I could not have put it in words. I used to like to walk around the yard with a large mirror in my hands. When I held the mirror in front of me I admired myself and was amused to see how I kept following my own image. When I tilted it downward I could see the ground, which made walking easier. But the sight of my feet moving along seemingly detached from the rest of me was so startling I would hastily tilt the mirror upward. There, reflected in the glass, was the bright sunlight and the clear blue sky. "It is like seeing into heaven," I would tell myself.

Complete acceptance of the gospel tilts the mirror of life upward, revealing the nature of God and his purposes for mankind. People who walk in the light are the happiest of all.

Self-centered thoughts place the mirror directly in front of one's face, compelling us to follow after our own image. Happiness is experienced by turning away from, not toward, one's self. This explains why so many adolescents, engrossed in the gratification of selfish desire, are unhappy. When the development of healthy ideas point the mirror upward, the young person will know happiness.

The fallibility of human nature turns the mirror downward, showing just part of the picture. It is much easier to fit together three or four pieces of a picture puzzle and say "This is the picture," than to labor until the whole is finished. Thus we have conflicting doctrines, isms, and ideologies producing doubt and confusion. There are churches and philosophies of life, based on one piece of the picture puzzle—an isolated Scripture. Failure, to see the whole results in dissatisfaction.

Before accepting an opinion or theory we should put it to the following test: Will it bring comfort in times of trouble? Is it reasonable? Is it in harmony with Scripture?

Let us examine two conflicting doctrines concerning the problem of suffering, which is very important in relation to our subject. The first is that God, an all-powerful, all-wise, all-loving Father, to fulfill his purposes, at times permits suffering to come into the lives of his children. That brings comfort in times of trouble, is reasonable, and is consistent with the stories of Job and the Apostle Paul.

The other is that suffering is always the result of sin in the life of the individual. Such a belief could not bring comfort at any time. It is unreasonable in that little children, who are without sin, are subject to illness and affliction; it is unreasonable, too, in that Jesus suffered on the cross. It is also out of harmony with Scripture.

A SIXTEEN-YEAR-OLD GIRL was injured in a storm which swept the little town in which she lived. Never would she walk without crutches, or be quite free from pain. Without explanation she returned her engagement ring to the man she was to marry and refused even to see him. Scarcely stirring from the house, she took refuge behind the closed door of her room.

"I didn't know Harriet would be so spineless," her mother told her pastor. "I keep telling her that she must bear her punishment cheerfully and patiently; that she must search for and eliminate the sin that brought it about. But she just looks at me. I wish you would give her a good lecture."

"Perhaps she has had too many lectures already," said the minister as he first saw the pale, sad face, and the sunken, bewildered eyes. She greeted him with a bitter, twisted smile.

"Have you come to tell me about my sins? Mother intimated as much."

"I have never seen any sin in you, Harriet." He took her limp hand in his. "I have always considered you one of the finest girls in my church."

"I couldn't be. Mother said I had to sin for this to happen. She is a good woman and reads the Bible a lot, so she should know. But all day I sit here thinking—going over and over my past life. I can see nothing that would bring such a terrible punishment upon me. I get so mixed up—" she pressed trembling fingers to her temples. "If mother is right, since I was the only one injured in that storm, I must be the most wicked person in this town. That is the reason I broke my engagement."

Without speaking, he opened the Bible he had brought with him and read from the thirteenth chapter of Luke:

And Jesus answering, said unto them, Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all Galileans, because they suffered such things? I tell you, Nay. . . . Or those eighteen upon whom the tower of Siloam fell and slew them. Think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwell in Jerusalem? I tell ye, Nay. . . .

She regarded him wonderingly. "Then perhaps I am not the most sinful person in town?"

"Harriet, you are not sinful at all. That storm was just a product of nature, as are the rocks and streams, thorns and roses. Whether you had sinned or not had nothing to do with the fact that you were injured. It was simply an accident. By chance you were returning from visiting a sick friend when the storm suddenly blew out of the sky. That is all there is to it."

"God can command the wind to stand still—but he didn't!" Tears were spilling down her cheeks. "I wanted to get married and have children. Why did it have to happen?"

"I can't answer that, Harriet, but I can read a passage from the Bible."

He read from the ninth chapter of John:

And his disciples asked him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind? Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him.

When he looked up, she was drying her tears. A new-born hope struggled with the despair in her eyes.

"I didn't know that was in the Bible. I wonder why mother didn't tell me. Perhaps she doesn't know."

"Harriet, your mother never did have any trouble until this happened. She has always had plenty of money. She has never been sick in her life. But for some reason she has an inferiority complex. It gives her a feeling of righteous superiority to believe as she does. She just ignores anything that contradicts her pet theory that people's sufferings are brought about by their sins."

That theory was so deeply embedded in Harriet's mind it took time and much study before she could accept the strange new ideas the minister presented. Finally convinced that her mother was wrong, she was married in the room where she had spent so many hours reading the Bible. The bride wore crutches—and a radiant smile.

Today, after rearing six children and doing all of her own work, she still has that smile.

HARRIET'S MOTHER based her theory on a statement taken from Psalms: "The righteous man prospers in all that he doeth." According to her, to prosper meant to have health, wealth, and no troubles. Was that the Psalmist's meaning? He also said, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous." There is no contradiction between these statements. One of the meanings of prosperity is the attainment of any desired goal. The man who has reached great spiritual heights is prosperous even though he may have poor health and little money. Upright in all his undertakings, he constantly thrives and flourishes. He even gains from affliction, for "all things work together for good to them that love God."

In opposition to this quotation is the belief that trials are not beneficial; that they make many people bitter. Harriet was made bitter, not by her crippled condition, but by the wrong perspective created by her mother. Freeing herself from these erroneous teachings, she was able to rise to a happy useful life. Her crutches, twin banners of victory, have been an inspiration to many.

I do not believe it is our Father's will that anyone suffer. It is his will that the building of Zion eradicate illness, affliction, and adversity. To fulfill his purposes, he permitted his Son to suffer for our sakes. Is it not reasonable to believe that he would permit others to suffer if, by so doing, they could help mankind? With the world in its present condition, with men's hearts failing them for fear, even the elect need the lessons of faith, courage, endurance, patience, and the determination the afflicted can teach through their example.

To show that this is true, to show that trials can be helpful, I quote from my patriarchal blessing:

Through testing thou shalt reveal thy faith and thy determination to serve God. Fail not when dark days are upon thee, and he will sustain thee. For thine encouragement I am led to give thee the assurance that thou art a child of God. . . . In the hours of trial that are before thee turn unto God, and he will turn unto thee, and thou shalt be strengthened, and directed until thou shalt be able, through the grace of God, to come forth from these experiences stronger and more worthy of his blessing than ever before.

ONE OF THE BENEFITS derived from trials is appreciation. As we are told in the Doctrine and Covenants, without the bitter we could not know the sweet. Without sorrow there could be no joy. Nature groups the bitter and sweet, the good and bad together—rocks and streams, sunshine and shadow, weeds and flowers, thorns and roses. Summer rain comes with lightning and wind. Weariness of bone and muscle makes an ordinary bed a couch of thistledown. To a man parched with thirst the sweetest thing in life is a cup of water, and he cares not if it comes from a spring, a well, or from the refrigerator. If there were no hunger, there would be no enjoyment of food.

When asked how he could relish a dish of unseasoned beans, my father replied, "When I was a boy on the farm for three months there was nothing to eat except cornbread and molasses. After that I could eat and like anything edible. That is," he added, his eyes twinkling, "anything except cornbread and molasses!"

The most miserable person I ever knew was a woman of vigorous health and a brilliant mind who had never known sorrow or adversity. Her well-to-do parents indulged her every whim. When she was married, she expected the same from her husband. New clothes, furniture, and cars gave her a monetary pleasure that was replaced with sullen discontent. Her equilibrium was easily upset by trifling incidents. One day at the dinner table she became hysterical because the centers of the baked potatoes were slightly underdone. "I have more trouble than anyone in the world," she screamed, and ran sobbing from the room.

Such a person needs to learn the bitterness of life through observation. If she had dedicated her services to humanity, visiting the sick and working among the poor and unfortunate, she could have been happy. As it was, her tantrums and constant nagging so unnerved her husband that their marriage ended in divorce, and she returned to her well-meaning parents who had foolishly shielded her from every care and worry.

In contrast is the wise mother of a girl I will call Mary. Understanding how her daughter felt because she could not have an expensive party dress, Mary's mother sent her with a bucket of milk, a jar of apple butter, and a loaf of bread still hot from the oven to the home of a destitute family that lived by the railroad tracks. As soon as Mary entered the ramshackle house, her self-pity vanished. Never had she seen such dirt, such squalor. When she placed the food on the grimy table, a little boy, whose clothes looked as if they had never been washed, eyed the fragrant loaf with a look of naked hunger she was always to remember when she desired something beyond her means. By the time she reached her home she was repeating the words of a song, "Count your many blessings, name them one by one, and it will surprise you what the Lord hath done."

PSYCHOLOGISTS advise the practice of putting our blessings down on paper. The number, they say, will astound us. I have found it helpful to say a prayer of thanksgiving as I drift into sleep enumerating the good things God has done for me.

When trouble comes, I remember that I am not alone—that thousands of people have not only endured my particular trial but have conquered it. "If they can be victorious," I keep repeating, "so can I. Then I can help others." Then I find myself feeling sorry for those in similar circumstances and thinking of ways to alleviate their burdens.

"I never feel sorry for myself," a woman once declared with self-satisfaction, and then within half an hour she whinily complained that she was the sickest person in town. Self-pity is characterized by such remarks as "No one knows what I suffer," "I have more trouble than anyone," "I get all the blame," "The whole world is against me."

If I find myself saying or even thinking any of these things, I immediately take steps to develop appreciation. People who indulge in self-pity harbor grudges against others or against life in general. In fact, self-pity is so closely connected with resentment that it is difficult to tell where one ends and the other begins. Both have power to obstruct the flow of the spring of happiness.

KNOWING THE DELETERIOUS EFFECTS of resentment, Jesus instituted the doctrines of repentance and forgiveness. The Greek verb for "repent" means to change one's mind. Quite often the adamant man magnifies the faults of others and justifies his own mistakes. He finds it equally hard to repent and forgive.

Such was the case of Jerry, who poured a pitiful tale into every sympathetic ear. According to him, his wife and children had deserted him. With tears rolling down his cheeks he would tell over and over how he had sacrificed to give them material comfort (which was true), and how he had worked until his health cracked under the strain.

Indeed, he became so ill it was necessary for him to seek medical aid. By chance he chose a doctor who was also a psychologist. Examination showed that Jerry's troubles, physical and domestic, were caused by a deep-seated resentment against a brother he thought had wronged him. That ill feeling found expression in an insane fury he turned upon his wife and children, making it necessary for them to leave him.

Reconstruction of the past revealed—much to Jerry's chagrin and dawning remorse—that his own tactlessness, incon-sideration, and jealousy, had been the basis of his troubles with the brother he had unjustly hated.

I am reminded of the woman I knew in the little town which was once my home. An indefatigable worker in a Protestant church, she would have been a great asset but for her seeming total disregard for the rights and feelings of others. "If a thing needs to be said, I say it," she stated with pride. "If anything needs to be done, I do it." Within herself she built a seething volcano of resentment, for when her disrespect for the rights of others caused trouble, she considered herself the injured one. Understanding that she was on the verge of a persecution complex, the kindly pastor succeeded in helping her see where she was at fault.

Resentment also arises out of reflection of personality. Unconsciously despising his own faults a man harbors ill feelings against the one in whom he sees them reflected. Unfriendly people will think others are unfriendly and will say, "I'll not go back there again, for I was never treated so coldly in my life." Lazy people are at times contemptuous if they think they see the fault in others. The extremely selfish person harbors grudges against friends or relatives for claiming what was rightfully their own.

A man can overcome resentment, or prevent it, by being honest with himself and by dedicating his life in service to others. If he feels he has been mistreated or injured, he must face the situation squarely, trying to put himself in the other person's place. He should ask himself, "Did I expect to be met with a brass band? Do I expect others to bow when I pass?" Serving others, instead of wanting to be served, will rid him of such resentments.

PERHAPS WE SEE in another a reflected trait that we unconsciously recognize and abhor. If we think that others are unfriendly, selfish, or have other undesirable characteristics, we should examine ourselves for the same fault. The searchlight of truth will reveal what is within. In eliminating the undesirable we eliminate resentment.

It may be that our inconsideration or lack of tact has created a quarrel or a rift between us and a friend or relative. Perhaps through self-aggrandizement we have been guilty of infringement. Instead of being offended if someone objects to our conduct, we should learn to respect the rights of others.

If a mother permits her children to run destructively through someone's house, scattering crumbs and leaving dirty fingerprints, she should not feel insulted if she is greeted coldly the next time she calls. She should learn to restrain her children.

If we repeatedly ridicule a person's possessions or appearance, smiling with pleasure when he has misfortune, we must not feel hurt if he takes steps to avoid us. In destroying the feelings of inferiority or envy responsible for our behavior, we destroy the root of our resentment.

If upon examination we find that we have been mistreated or injured, for our own sake, and the sakes of those dear to us, we should follow the example of the Master. Because of his thorough knowledge of psychology, Jesus was able to forgive quickly and completely. Knowing why and how a man reacts to certain conditions, knowing how childhood incidents affect adult behavior, makes it easier to understand why he committed that particular sin. Since forgiveness comes freely from an understanding heart, studies in normal and abnormal psychology are helpful. Meanwhile, let us construct proper thought patterns by dwelling on love, not vengeance. The very quality that makes it hard to forgive makes it hard to repent. We should pray for those who injure us, forgiving them, even as we would have God to forgive us.

NATURE offers many a compensation. Our pioneer grandmothers could laugh and sing while they washed clothes in the creek, for their eyes and ears were delighted with a thousand sights and sounds. Those who could read had little or no time for it, but every day was a page taken from the book God himself has written. They did not have copies of masterpieces on their walls; but there were flaming sunsets, woodland scenes, and snow-covered landscapes no artist could duplicate. They did not have pianos, record players, and radios; but the music of birds, streams, and wind-swept woods blended in a symphony of sound no composer has been able to reproduce.

Nature also brings alleviation of sorrow. One busy farm woman, grieving over the death of her infant son, climbed a near-by hill every morning to watch the dawn. The flushed sky, the first touch of amber, the misty light of the rising sun tangled like pale gold spider webs among the emerald leaves of wind-stirred trees was a picture that carried her safely through a trying day. She also found comfort in the thought that the dawn of a new little life was finding completion in a better world. There was healing in the touch of wind upon her face; in the feel of grass under her hand; in the softness of the flowers she picked as she returned to her home.

The city dweller does not have this proximity to nature, but he can derive benefit from potted plants growing on the window sill or trees in the park.

Few things inspire creative thought more than a star. Standing still under the stars brings the humility of mind and spirit so essential to great achievement.

THE PERSON who has the right perspective and appreciation, and who has conquered resentment, is able to work gloriously for the Master. If, after achieving so much, he were to sit down with folded hands it would be like pinching off a rosebud just as it is ready to burst into bloom. Surmounting difficulties brings greater efficiency. Out of pain comes charity and sympathetic understanding. As the rose rises from the dark earth, so beauty of character rises out of sorrow. It may take the overcoming of handicaps to bring a life to perfect flowering.

To encourage others, I recount my own experience. When I lost three-fourths of my eyesight I thought I would never again be able to write for the Herald. I had done much study and research work. Feeling inadequate in my own knowledge, I had interwoven my thoughts with references from good books. I could no longer do this.

One day, while I was praying, the thought came to me that I had studied sufficiently; that out of the storehouse of my mind thoughts and ideas would pour when I needed them. A voice said within me, "Write a simple article out of your heart." I did, and continued writing until a few months prior to the birth of my baby boy. It was harder, of course, but the reward was greater.

Neither did loss of vision stop my music. Although I had only four months of lessons, playing the piano was an important part of my life. Last summer my son Paul began writing verse, and asked me to set it to music. "Since you can't read music any longer," he asked, "why don't you write your own?" With great difficulty I composed the music for his poem. Since then, because of my handicap and not in spite of it, I have composed the words and music to several more songs. Whether they are good or not isn't important. What matters is that in overcoming my handicap I have found greater happiness.

The three pieces of black paper I picked up in my dream are no longer black. Through faith, prayer, and work I have turned my troubles into blessings. With the victorious I can sing the song of the golden brook as it splashes over its rocky bed.

Happiness is truly a spring of living water welling into everlasting joy and peace.

The Generation of Fulfillment

By G. W. Stewart

IN GLANCING THROUGH some back numbers of the Herald, I reread an article by William Patterson published September 18, 1950. It was entitled "The Generation of Fulfillment." Cruden, in defining "generation," says "This word is used for the history and genealogy of any man."

In the Doctrine and Covenants we read:

And this I have told you concerning Jerusalem, and when that day shall come shall a remnant be scattered among all nations, but they shall be gathered again; but they shall remain [scattered] until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled . . . and when the times of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; but they receive it not, for they perceive not the light, . . . and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 3, 4.

It seems clear that the times of the Gentiles begins when the fullness of the gospel is restored and ends—or is fulfilled—when the Gentiles perceive not the gospel or reject it.

We cannot lay claim to the fact that the church has fulfilled its mission to the Gentile nations. The light has not gone forth to the nations that sit in darkness. For this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come—or the destruction of the wicked, which we understand will not take place until, or at, the coming of our Lord.

When we refer to the beginning of the Gentile times, we must understand it to be the beginning of a dispensation of the gospel to the Gentiles in its fullness.

We are indebted to the Book of Mormon for the following:

And after he has manifested himself unto the Jews and also unto the Gentiles; then he shall manifest himself unto the Gentiles, and also unto the Jews. And the last [the Gentiles] shall be first and the first [the Jews] shall be last.—38: 199, 200.

We turn to the Bible:

For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in.—Romans 11: 25.

WHILE IT IS TRUE that the emancipation of Israel began almost simultaneously with the Restoration Movement, it was only of national importance.

The real beginning of the Jewish emancipation was in 1917. Light upon this matter is found in the Book of Mormon:

And as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all nations [the European War 1914-1918] then at that day the work of the Father shall commence in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants which he hath made his people who are of the house of Israel.—41: 232-237.

I consider that as one of the many remarkable fulfillments of Book of Mormon prophecies. For further information from the Book of Mormon we turn to page 646 and read, beginning with verse 31. Here are excerpts from verses 34-36:

And thus commandeth the Father that I should say unto you at that day when the Gentiles shall sin against my gospel and shall reject the fullness of my gospel . . . and if they shall do these things and shall reject the fullness of my gospel . . . I will bring the fullness of my gospel from among them. Then I will remember my covenants which I have made unto my people . . . and I will bring my gospel unto them.

We understand that the latter-day dispensation of the gospel began in 1830. It cannot end until all the Gentile nations have heard it and when, or if the Gentiles reject it, the gospel dispensation of the Jews begins.

IT CANNOT BE SAID that the Gentile nations that have heard it have accepted it; rather they have rejected it. In all probability those Gentile nations that have yet to hear the gospel will reject it. We have reason to believe that some will accept it. "For it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing songs of everlasting joy."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 14.

"And now behold I say unto you it shall not be given unto you to know any further concerning this chapter until the New Testament be translated and in it all these things shall be made known." The chapter referred to is Matthew 24. In verses 12 and 35, reference is made to two "abominations of desolation," whereas the King James translation mentions one.

It seems clear that the first desolation took place in 70 A. D. The second is yet to take place. A study of Ezekiel 37 and 38; Joel 3, and Zechariah 14 will prove this.

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun shall be darkened."—Matthew 24: 34. This takes place before the great and notable day of the Lord (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 6).

I suggest that the gospel dispensation (generation) to the Jews begins after the gruesome war events just referred to, and "Verily I say unto you this generation in which these things shall be shown forth shall not pass away until all I have told you shall be fulfilled."—Matthew 24: 35.

A study of the eighteenth chapter of Isaiah is of interest.

Woe [Ho] to the land shadowing with wings . . . that sendeth [has sent] ambassadors by the sea . . . saying, Go, ye swift messengers [airplanes] to a nation scattered and pealed.

What message will they carry?

Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins.—Isaiah 40.

In verse three we read the same message delivered to the Jews. "Which they then rejected."—Matthew 3: 29. Following closely upon this second note of warning is the intimation that "the glory of the Lord shall be revealed."

The Messiah that came to their fathers 1,900 years ago was rejected by them, however Zechariah 13: 6 tells of an appearance again to his people, and "One shall say to him, What are these wounds in thine hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends." Nevertheless let it be said that the thing of the greatest importance is preparedness.

A machine is a great moral educator. If a horse or a donkey won't go, men lose their tempers and beat it; if a machine won't go, there is no use beating it. You have to think and try till you find what is wrong. That is real education.—Gilbert Murray in The Listener

Not As Other Men

By Olive Mortimore

DO THE HYPOCRITES in the church worry me? Yes, a very great deal. Even I worry me. I profess so much and am so little. I propose to all that we do three things:

1. Spend as much time worrying about ourselves as about each other.
2. Never blame the church for what we are or are not.
3. Remind ourselves frequently that we did not discover hypocrisy in the church.

Often we sound as if we thought the disclosure were the result of our own research—a dignified word for an undignified business. We feel a bit set apart when we can say, "Oh, yes, he seems like a very fine Christian. But I could tell you a thing or two!" As if it were an evil thing to rate one's neighbor better than he is!

No, hypocrisy was well known long ago. Christ knew all about it. He even talked to his disciples about it. He said, "Not every one who saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven." But, he knew there would be hypocrites in the church carrying such a load of sin and pretense that they'd not be able to carry much of any thing else. He still thought it worth while to organize the church and let them fall in line or fall by the way-side. He even made it possible for one of them to be in the inner circle of servants up to the very moment of betrayal.

HOW CAN WE KNOW who is a hypocrite? A wise and good man answered the hypocrites hounds in his own church in language something like this:

That man you worry so about—the one who gets drunk on Saturday evening and prays on Sunday morning—is at his best when he's on his knees. Would you deny him his moments of contrition, or be the judge of how deep it goes? Who knows but that in some moment of remorse he may get the strength to start becoming a man?

And there's the man who leads the prayer meeting with so much feeling but who always takes two-thirds when he's offered half. Perhaps he is not the double-dyed hypocrite I think he is. Perhaps his excessive acquisitiveness is the result of early privations that left in him a fear of destitution. The need "to get possession of" is a human drive as normal as any other. His has just got out of bounds and out of balance.

I DON'T KNOW who first thought of this delightful bit of nonsense about hypocrisy, but I think it's worth sharing:

A man was invited to church.

"No," he said, "I'll not be seen in your church. There are too many hypocrites there. I'll just go to hell in my own way."

"Now speaking of hell," said his friend, "just where do you think the hypocrites will go? They'll be right down there with you. You'd better endure them for a few years now than have to spend all eternity with them."

Perhaps it isn't such nonsense. In my better moments it has saved me needless worries about the sins of other people. In my moments not so good, when I have fallen into grievous errors, I can find many things wrong with people.

SUPPOSE YOUR FAULTS are bad indeed. I find a precious bit of wisdom in Carlyle's defense of Mahomet against the charges of chicanery and sensualism. He wrote:

On the whole we make too much of faults; the details of the business hide the real center of it. Faults? The greatest of faults I should say is to be conscious of none. Readers of the Bible, one would think, might know better. Who is called there "the man according to God's own heart"? David, the Hebrew king, had fallen into sins enough. There was no want of sins; blackest crimes. And thereupon the unbelievers sneer and ask, Is this your man according to God's own heart? The sneer, I must say, seems to me but a shallow one. What are faults, what are the outward details of a life, if the inner secret of it, the remorse, temptations, true, often-baffled, never-ended struggle of it be forgotten? "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Of all acts, is not, for a man, repentance the most divine? . . . David's life and history, as written in those psalms of his, I consider to be the truest emblem ever given of man's moral prayers and warfare here below. All earnest souls will ever discern in it the faithful struggle of an earnest soul toward what is good and best. . . . Is not man's walking, in truth, always that, "a succession of falls"? . . . I believe we misestimate Mahomet's faults even as faults; but the secret of him will never be got by dwelling there.

THESE SINS of yours, grievous or not, I believe I shall leave to you and God, unless there is something which, in love, I can do to help. I have been told and I tell my classes that literary excellence or excellence in everyday communication does not consist in freedom from faults, but in abundance of powers. So it is, I must conclude, with moral excellence. Not, "Does my brother lose his temper now and then?" but, "Does he reach out a hand to the unfortunate?" Not, "Does he judge too severely?" but, "Is he valiant in testimony? Can he be found where there is work to do? Has he an unfeigned interest in the little ones of the church?"

Friends—it's strange but you don't seem like hypocrites any more. Hereafter I shall look for the inner secret of you.

The Good Samaritan - By Robert J. Miller

AS WE READ THE STORY of the good Samaritan which Jesus told, a picture immediately forms in our minds of this man who was gracious to a complete stranger. And quite likely if each of us could draw the picture as we visualize it, no two pictures would be exactly alike. This is true of paintings of the Master as portrayed by various artists; the concept of each is a little different.

Our viewpoint of this story would likely change as we thought more deeply upon the matter and analyzed more carefully the point Jesus was trying to make. We may safely conclude that the principle followed by this good man of Samaria was of a pattern Christ wished all of his disciples to live, for he commanded the lawyer to whom he was speaking to go and do likewise.

The chance of this lawyer, or any of us for that matter, being faced with the exact circumstance which presented itself to the Samaritan might be one in ten thousand, or perhaps one in a million. So it is also safe to conclude that Jesus did not expect the lawyer to perform an act identical to the Samaritan's; but rather to do whatever became his duty in any matter touching his life.

For reasons best known to the priest and Levite they determined on a course which caused them to pass by on the other side, pretending not to see the man in need. In other words, they chose to dodge their social responsibility because of some weakness within themselves.

Their behavior was probably prompted by selfishness, false pride, vanity, laziness, or a complete lack of charity. Certainly it was not in harmony with the Christ pattern.

THE SAMARITAN was a good man, an honorable man, a compassionate man; he loved mankind. And in the case of this unfortunate person whom he chanced to meet, he gave of that which was his to give: money, medical care, sympathy, love. He did not ask what he would receive for his trouble. His act was instinctive, coming from the heart.

Because of this incident related by Jesus, the term "good Samaritan" has come to mean any person who performs acts of love and mercy. Each of us can call to memory persons who have been "good Samaritans" to us, or to those whom we have known.

I would not attempt to name the good Samaritans who have touched my life, or to recount their deeds. But as I think upon it, memory brings into focus many acts of love bestowed upon me by others. And strange though it may seem, some of my most treasured memories are of small happenings, long since forgotten by the giver, which cost him but little, yet gave me help of great spiritual value.

Acts of the good Samaritan are not always of a nature which are discernible to others; in fact, more often than not they are the small acts of kindness performed when needed—a friendly smile, a note of sympathy, a kind word, a gracious act. But like the workings of the Spirit (John 3:8), they operate to the glory of God and for the good of humankind. In truth they are the workings of his Spirit in man.

GOOD SAMARITANISM cannot be defined by certain acts, for there are a multitude of ways we may minister to others. If one is far from home, among strangers, it is quite possible that just plain friendliness may be the need. A little understanding and consolation may be the answer to one in grief or trouble. Sound advice, wisely given, may save a soul; or perhaps the exercise of a little faith and trust in another may help that one to find the self-assurance and personal faith essential to his success and happiness.

It is impossible to measure the value of a deed by outward appearance: trust funds, benevolences, memorial windows, endowments, and social works may do good and attract considerable attention to the giver; but there are many things which can enter in to spoil the gift or rob it of its full value. Any gift given to exalt self loses its real value. Two familiar statements express this thought: "Rich gifts wax worse when givers prove unkind," and ". . . the gift without the giver is bare."

Jesus gave nothing of material value to the people he served, but he gave of himself treasures so vast that the whole world is blessed by them. We must give of ourselves if we would be good Samaritans.

He gives best gifts
Who, giving naught of worldly store,
Gives me his friendship, love, and trust.
I ask no more.

—One of the Cary sisters

Good Samaritanism often requires exceptional courage—not in heroic action, but in the strength of character it requires for one to minister to another where no thanks will be given. The need may require a sharp reprimand, some strict advice, the pointing out of faults which the person seems unaware of, or the refusal to support an unsound project with money or personal assistance. Wisdom acquired through experience often directs one to a course which requires moral courage and a great love to perform.

The good Samaritan thinks about others; he is concerned about them and does good for them as occasion demands. His ministry is not performed with himself as the objective, though he will receive a blessing of the Spirit which is God's way of reward. And whether he be rich or poor, bond or free, opportunity will come for him to minister from his heart to others. Christ, though he was the Only Begotten of the Father, "by whom the worlds were made," yet it was wisdom in God that he should walk the earth without material possessions, was a servant and neighbor to all men.

From the Lamoni Stake Reunion

By Marcella Schenck

AUGUST 3, 1951

Every storage battery has a certain capacity power, but the battery can run down and needs recharging. In some ways we are like a storage battery. We run down and need spiritual regeneration.

The capacity power of a battery cannot be increased no matter how long it is under recharging, but our spiritual battery can be enlarged and expanded.

A storage battery placed on a shelf loses its value. If we do not use our stewardships we lose power and die.

Not the abundance of temporal things nor the lack of temporal things but the use of that entrusted to our care determines our spiritual blessing.

I have been given an inheritance of three generations in the church, and it carries a responsibility.

In a song of consecration you pledged your powers, your time, your talents to God's cause. That song prayer was heard by God.

God can choose only those who choose him.

Often I have been afraid to stand for the right for fear others would laugh at me. I have learned that people don't laugh. They respect those who do the right thing.

I lost hold of God's hand. I wanted to find it again at reunion. My testimony is that I have caught hold again and, under this spirit, I feel that I can do anything.

God holds out no promise to the lazy and irresponsible.

You will become a pray-er by being on the job of prayer.

When it rains you have a selected congregation. Only those who want to come will be there, and besides they will be inside the tent.

Stewardship is in your soul.

I have no right to influence people except to lead them Godward.

God does not inspire a vacuum.

AUGUST 4, 1951

Bind up the testimony; seal up the law.

Seals are put upon documents as a testimony of their legality. The seal of testimony should be upon our lives.

How long would this church continue without testimony?

A man, once an alcoholic, was converted by the gospel to walk in newness of life. Not long afterwards, a drunken driver ran over this man's son, and the child was killed.

While the drunkard was in jail because of this death, the father of the child learned that the drunkard's family was in distress. He went to the grocery store and ordered supplies which he took to the family.

When asked about it, the man said, "If the accident had happened before I knew the gospel, my impulse would have been to inflict physical harm upon the man, but the gospel bids me treat him otherwise."

The testimony of yesterday brings us here today. Today's testimony will bring us here tomorrow.

Count me in on the fun and challenge of building the kingdom.

It was the testimony of Saints that led me into the church. I heard those testimonies first at a reunion.

Our son, about to enter the army, said, "As long as I keep my faith, I know my work will be done."

Let your voices be voices of hope. Let your testimonies be of uplift and cheer.

Be studious. Ask for discernment. Learn how to mobilize God's army.

Let your hands be joined together in his work.

Give to the young people a God of love. They do not need your complaints nor your censure.

God sends us forth to serve, with an invitation to walk with him.

AUGUST 5, 1951

One of the spiritual gifts is the gift of praise.

It is a gift to be able to look on the sunny side of life.

To be well and able to attend services is a great gift and blessing.

I hope the older people feel how much we young people truly need them.

Did it ever occur to you that there are some things God cannot do? He cannot choose you until you have chosen him.

To preach from the pulpit, to be a teacher of children, to testify, to be called into the homes of the sick—all these are grave responsibilities.

We are told that if we follow in God's way, it will grow brighter day by day.

Once I was distracted in prayer meeting with problems that kept coming into my mind; then I prayed to be able to keep my mind on the service, and that prayer was answered.

God doesn't make people work for him; they have to do it with a willing heart.

I took chemistry to be able to understand God.

AUGUST 6, 1951

Every day is a day of dedication.

Witnessing for God calls for the mobilization of all that you are.

There is no age of our social life that does not bear an invitation to serve.

Let not your priesthood duties nor church activities call you away from your responsibility to your children. They also are your stewardship.

I shall go from here to witness both in my living and my telling.

Through a misunderstanding I once built a wall between the church and me. Love and prayers from the right source crumbled that wall. I finally threw away the last brick and stepped into the church.

What an interesting pattern the tent poles make! The center pole stands for the source of power. Next, ten middle-sized poles make a support with their feet planted toward that central pole, their heads leaning outward to speak to the world of strength. Between them hangs a little row of lights shining to make the message clear. Encircled about these are the smaller poles that mark the limits of the tent—or do they? For out beyond them are those who receive and go still farther out to serve. Insignificant but upholding are these stakes outside. They represent the multitude of unnoticed and unsung Saints who preach the gospel by their daily living.

Reluctant Convert

My husband first heard of the Restoration through the Mormon Church. Then a representative of the Reorganized Church came to our section of the country and preached a different doctrine which was much more convincing. Later we moved to a place where several families of Saints lived, and Brother Rowe from Independence came to conduct a series of meetings. My husband could scarcely wait for evening to come so he could attend services. I went with him, but only because I wanted to see that the preacher didn't prove my faith out of harmony with God. As the series progressed, my husband asked for baptism. First, however, he asked me, "Do you object to my joining?" I told him I would never object to anything that was for his good. Tears came to his eyes, and somehow in spite of my lack of understanding, I felt happy about his decision. He was baptized on Sunday afternoon, and I became a member a week from the following Monday. I knew that I could never really feel that I was a part of the group there until I joined. Before my baptism I tried to explain that I had always enjoyed a portion of the good spirit that these people seemed to have, and Brother Rowe said, "We do not ask that you give up anything good you have experienced, but we do invite you to add to your good experiences." This helped me over the difficulty of making the decision. My request for baptism seemed to mean much to the Saints there, and Brother Rowe stayed an extra day to baptize me. We were not popular, judged from a worldly standpoint, but we did rejoice in the gospel.

I love this work, and I know it is true. Now that I am nearing life's sunset I want more than ever to stay in tune with the Good Shepherd.

Requests Prayers for Family

I hope that I will be able to attend church in Ponca City this year. I have gone to churches of other denominations, but I can't become very interested in them. I hope that the rest of my family will soon become converted. My son will have to go into military service in February when he has finished his college work. My husband is suffering with asthma. I shall appreciate having the Saints pray for me and my family.

Solicits Subscriptions

At our recent conference held on the Racine Reunion grounds, Apostle D. O. Chesworth asked for volunteers to obtain five subscriptions to the Herald. I am pleased to send in five, and I hope to send in another five soon. I enjoy my Herald very much and find it a source of inspiration. I lend my copies to those I talk with about the gospel; some of them are nonmembers.

I do desire to do some good in this work of the Master.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel member signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only questions with contributor's full name (not just initials) and address will receive attention.—EDITOR.

Question:

Are not all churches fulfilling the same purpose? Does it make any difference what church I join?
Michigan J.R.G.

Answer:

A multiplicity of churches has been formed as a result of the Reformation which in an effort to destroy centralized power in the hands of the Pope and the Roman Church shifted to another dangerous extreme by which every man became free to set up a church of his own design. Not one of such men as attempted to establish a church required or obtained counsel from God in his effort, but followed his own judgment and his own interpretations of Scripture until modern Christianity has become a maze of conflicting doctrines, antagonistic organizations, and varying methods and motives. Can this be Christ?

Christ said, "I will build my church." That meant more than to found it; for he designed to be with it always to counsel, direct, reprove, to give spiritual gifts and powers. The Scriptures declare the church to be one—one body and one Spirit. It could be Christ's only by being one. But through disloyalty and sin men fell away from the divine standard, and the church lost the Spirit of life, lost contact with Christ, and fell into corrupt and wicked practices against which the Reformation was a protest.

In later times the Lord in mercy again revealed himself to men he called to re-establish his own living church according to his directions, to which he continues to communicate his mind and will, and to which he has given the same Spirit of life and spiritual gifts as were given anciently. He calls men to his ministry by the voice of the Spirit. The church pledges the same gift of the Holy Spirit to each obedient member with assurance of eternal life as did the New Testament church.

Churches are not all alike. They do not all lead to the same end. It does make a difference which church you join. Jesus warned against the "leaven" or doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees, a warning which men may well take to heart today. Men are to seek diligently for the truth.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

If your church is the Church of Jesus Christ why are many other churches so large, while yours is small in proportion?
Michigan J.R.G.

Answer:

Genuine Christianity never was popular, and in the early centuries of the Christian Era, it was only when the Christian church incorporated many of the pagan beliefs and practices that it was generally received throughout Europe. Like the hardwoods of the forest its growth is slow, though its power of endurance is greater. Jesus recognized this fact, saying of the strait gate, "Few there be that find it." He warned his disciples, "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you! For so did their fathers to the false prophets." Not number, wealth, and popularity, but truth and integrity are the criteria for determining value.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

I was baptized into another church: why can I not enter your church on this baptism?
Michigan J.R.G.

Answer:

This question was asked at the very beginning of our church, and being referred to the Divine Head, the Lord answered that in this church of his appointing he had established his "new and everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning," for which reason baptisms performed outside his authority could not be accepted. He referred to them as "dead works," saying, that a hundred such baptisms "availeth nothing." He said that it was "because of your dead works, that I have caused this last covenant and this church to be built up unto me," and invited all men to "enter ye in at the strait gate as I have commanded, and seek not to counsel your God." In his earthly ministry Jesus warned that many religious works done in his name by professing ministers would not be accepted in the day of judgment. He will say to them, "Ye never knew me." In modern Christianity there is much unwarranted assumption, and it becomes every man to prove the soundness of his actions.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

The Bible says, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Why do I have to believe in Joseph Smith?
Michigan J.R.G.

Answer:

Joseph Smith said: "We know that all men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ and worship the Father in his name, and endure in faith on his name to the end, or they can not be saved in the kingdom of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 6. His whole life and work pointed men to Jesus Christ as the only Savior and Redeemer and to the gospel of Christ as the means of salvation. In no instance did he arrogate to himself any prerogative belonging to Christ or interpose himself in the place of Christ to receive any divine honors or worship. As a man called and chosen of God to bring about the Restoration of the pure, unadulterated gospel and to reorganize the church which had through the centuries become decadent, and rejected of God, he labored as a humble and faithful servant, not perhaps without human mistakes which were correctable, but accomplishing the will of God. The Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, published by the Reorganized Church, both maintain Christ as the central and supreme personality within the church. We accept Joseph Smith for what he was—a servant of Jesus Christ, a prophet of God, the same as other prophets and apostles who gave their lives for His and humanity's sake.

A Shepherd's Story

The Autobiography of Marcus H. Cook

VI. A New Field in the Northwest

PORTLAND, OREGON

I reached Portland in time to attend the district conference held the first Saturday and Sunday in June, 1909. I was elected district president and began my work in a new field. After the conference, I went to Gresham where I held a few meetings. Brother Carl Becker kindly offered me the privilege of making my headquarters in his home, which was only a short distance from the church. I next went to Hood River, where Brother H. W. Chapman lived. I had known him and worked for him when I was a young man. He and his son Robert were running a store. Here also I met N. T. Chapman, who proved to be a capable and agreeable helper, and who was later my counselor as president of the district. We set up the district tent and held a series of meetings which were well attended, and which, I think, helped to open the way for the work that followed. From there I went to a reunion in Seattle and got acquainted with several people that I have worked with since. There I met Jessie Ward, author of The Call at Evening. I met the wife of William Johnson, who was formerly a member of Des Moines District. She pointed out her little boy, asking if I remembered him. Then she told me that I had blessed him when he was a baby in Des Moines. Later, when I was sent to the Seattle and British Columbia District, this boy had grown up and was married. I recommended that he be ordained a priest, which recommendation was approved by the branch and district, and I officiated at his ordination. The next year I was directed to recommend his ordination as an elder. This again received the necessary approval, and I once more was asked to officiate. Later he was ordained a high priest and served as pastor in Seattle for a while, and still later as district president. He has made a splendid record, and it is gratifying to remember that I was the instrument of his calling.

Following the Seattle reunion, I returned to Portland. I went to Condon, Oregon, where I met Pastor N. E. Austin. It appeared that I might be in the West indefinitely, and I naturally wanted my family to be with me as much as possible, so I took advantage of an opportunity to buy a home at Lebanon, Oregon. Then my family came there to live, where I could visit them at least occasionally. I spent most of the winter in Portland, sometimes going to other places for a week end or just for Sunday services. I occasionally visited Estacada where there were a few Saints, and I baptized Z. A. Coop there when he was about nine years old. After this boy grew up he went to Tillamook, on the Oregon coast, and married Miss Grace Holgrove. He worked in a foundry and studied pattern making, then worked for a time at Aberdeen, Washington, and still later at the Bremerton Naval Station. They returned to Tillamook where he again worked in the foundry. Later, in partnership with another young man who was a moulder, he established a foundry at Cottage Grove. Brother Coop bought out his partner and has built up a very good business there. It was my pleasure to baptize him, officiate at his marriage, baptize his wife and two daughters, and bless all five of their children. He is now an elder in the church and cares for the mission in Cottage Grove. His second daughter, Caroline, married Elder Schultz, who is pastor of the mission in Eugene.

During the summer of 1911, Brother N. V. Nelson was appointed to labor with me throughout the tent season. We held tent meetings in Hood River, where there was good interest, six were baptized, and the work was strengthened. We went to Estacada and held meetings, and several were baptized there. In the meantime I had traded my property in Lebanon for some lots in Vancouver, Washington, and built a house there, where I still live.

Shortly after we moved to Vancouver, Brother George M. Shippy came there to live. He was a seventy and had painted a set of charts that were well adapted to presenting the principles of the gospel. He held meetings in a vacant building, following which there were baptisms. Among those asking for baptism was a young married woman who belonged to the Christian Church, also known as the Disciples of Christ. When her pastor learned that she had applied for baptism he went to her husband saying that we were impostors and misrepresenting us. When Brother Shippy heard of this, he came to me and said he thought we should call on the minister and find out what his reasons were for making such an attack. I agreed, so we went to the Christian minister's home, and Brother Shippy turned the matter over to me.

MEETING AN ATTACK

I told the man that we were informed he had accused us of being impostors, and that I would like to know on what grounds he had made such assertions. He bristled up and admitted he had made these accusations, saying that we claimed such signs as healing and other manifestations that were had in the days of the early church. He added that if we would go over to the blind school and heal those blind people, then he would accept our claim; and if we could not do it, we were impostors.

I answered that I knew of no place where the Scriptures taught that we were to have power to heal everybody indiscriminately; but I could not see how one could believe the truth of what Jesus said as recorded in Mark 16: 15-18 and deny the claim that these signs should follow the believer. He said that was easily answered. By taking only a part of what Jesus said, one could form wrong conclusions. I asked him to show anything in the context we used which would justify the accusation that we were forming wrong conclusions.

He then told us in a boastful way that he was a graduate of Oregon University, that he had taught grammar school for seven years, and that he knew language. I again asked him to show by the context that we were making an unfair application of the Scripture. He said we should go back to the fourteenth verse, where it reads, "Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen." He said that was spoken to the eleven apostles. I agreed with him, but asked him what that proved against the signs following the believer. He answered by reading the next verse, "And He said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not, shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe . . ."

He said the word he is a singular pronoun and could not be the antecedent of them; therefore the only ones the signs were to follow were the apostles. I could hardly believe that one with his education would make such an absurd statement, but I asked him if he would care to meet that in a public discussion and let the people see if he could sustain it. He replied that he didn't have time, but he said he would go with us and let the woman who had asked for baptism decide the question. I consented and we arranged for a visit with her.

We were all very kindly received, and then I asked him to make his analysis of the last few verses of the sixteenth chapter of Mark. He proceeded with apparent confidence that no one could disprove his position. He asserted that a pronoun must agree with its antecedent in number, and therefore he could not be the antecedent of them. Then I told him that when I was in school, we were taught that a singular pronoun was one person or thing. He agreed that it was. I asked him if it were not also true that a pronoun must agree with its antecedent in gender as well as number? He answered yes. I then said that according to his position, only one person would be saved, and that he, being of the masculine gender, would be a man, and no woman could be saved, or it would be (as he claimed) not a singular pronoun. Perhaps I shouldn't have said what I did, but I told him that if he should happen to be that singular he who believed and went to heaven, and found no women there, I did not think, from the shape of his head, that he would stay there. I then asked him, since he was a graduate of Oregon University, if he didn't know that he is not always a singular pronoun—that it is sometimes used to refer to the whole human race, as for example, Genesis 6: 3, A.V. "And the Lord said, my spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh." Here the use of the word he covered the whole human race, both men and women. The woman was baptized.

EASTERN OREGON

Brother Shippy did much good while he was here. We worked together, holding meetings in different places. We held services together at Winlock, Washington, and at two schoolhouses in eastern Oregon. He was a splendid man to work with, and I deeply appreciated the work he did in the district. I had trouble with my voice, and for a few months did little preaching, but when I regained my voice I traveled among the scattered Saints in eastern Oregon. There was a small settlement near Baker on the Morgan Valley railroad. One woman who lived there was a Latter Day Saint, her daughter also belonged to the church. She wrote to the Presidency, requesting that some elder visit them as she wanted the people around there to hear the gospel. I was asked to look after her request. When I arrived I found this lady always conducted prayer in the home, both morning and evening, and her husband and son took part, though they had never been baptized. I was deeply impressed with the work she was doing in her own family.

At the hall where it had been arranged that I should hold services, a young Presbyterian minister had been preaching every third Sunday. It was his Sunday just after my arrival, so we attended his services. He was an interesting speaker and I enjoyed his sermon. I asked him if he would announce that I would begin services on Monday evening. He did so, and asked the people to come and hear me. He came himself the first evening, and at the close of the services asked me to come and spend the day with him. I accepted his invitation, and we had a very interesting discussion in a friendly way. He said he couldn't agree with all we believed, but he paid the sister I was visiting one of the finest compliments I have ever heard from a minister of another church. He frankly admitted that she was a better Christian than any member of his church and said that if what I taught would make all who accepted my message as good Christians as she was, then he would like to see me convert every member of the community, including those of his own church. I was not able to convert the whole community, but I did baptize her husband and son, as well as a young lady who lived there. I believe I also helped others to understand our faith better.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.—Elder William Guthrie visited and spoke to the branch September 7, 8, and 9. A personal visit was made to nearly every Saint's home. The evening of September 8, Brother Guthrie went to New Bedford and Elder Clinton Saxton was the speaker. At this service Dorothy Millward was confirmed by Assistant Pastor A. M. Coombs and Pastor Charles H. Pillsbury, Jr. She had been baptized that afternoon by Brother Coombs.

Arrangements were made for three baptisms at Providence September 16 by Elder William Guthrie. Mrs. Josephine Heap and daughter Carol, and Barbara Ann McNally were baptized. More than twenty of the Fall River congregation attended the service, and stayed over to attend the opening of a series by Brothers Guthrie and Saxton.

On September 23, these three were confirmed at Fall River by Elders Saxton, A. M. Coombs, and C. H. Pillsbury, Jr. Brother Saxton preached the sermon.—Reported by GLADYS V. COOMBS

ARIZONA REUNION.—The reunion was held August 18-26, with Seventy R. F. Ralston serving as minister in charge. Elder Marion M. Blakely served as state co-ordinator.

The daily schedule included prayer services for adults, presided over by Patriarch William Patterson, and a prayer service for young people under the direction of Elder James Everett. Preaching services were held daily by Apostle Arthur Oakman. Men's classes were taught by Elder Ralston; young people's class by Brother Everett; and children's classes by Mrs. Don Forsythe, Mrs. Gursel Taylor, Mrs. Gladys Williams, and Ronald Green. Mrs. Shirley Williams was in charge of music. Mrs. Grace Woods was in charge of handcraft. Ronnie, Bonnie, and Eddie Green directed recreation. Brothers Ralston and Everett were in charge of the evensong. Sister Elva Oakman taught the women's class. The book steward was Elder T. R. Davis; secretary-treasurer, Russell Wood; Scoutmasters, Wallace Green and Glen Smith. There were over 118 registered with approximately 140 on grounds both Sundays. Saints from New Mexico, California, Utah, and Missouri attended.—Reported by LAVETA BERGAN

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—Vacation church school convened June 4. Mrs. Edith Niehaus was the director. The Zion's League held an early fellowship service at the home of John Madsen June 15. Two of the Leaguers attended the senior youth camp at Columbus, Nebraska, and one counselor attended the junior youth camp at Fremont, Nebraska. Reports of the two camps were given at the evening service July 28.

Brother and Sister Charles Fry of Tabor, Iowa, were visitors on May 20. Several of the priesthood attended the retreat at Graceland on June 10. Ruth Elizabeth Brown and her husband Wilbur were baptized by Elder Donald Savage. Elders F. T. Schrunch and A. H. Thompson confirmed Sister Brown and Elders H. E. Niehaus and George Gates confirmed Brother Brown.

The Zion's Circle held their annual picnic July 26. Mrs. Rogene Prucha, Mrs. Villa Madsen, and Mrs. Joyce Savage were in charge. The picnic was held at the country home of Sister Capitola Mechling.

The annual business meeting was held August 8 at the church. Elder John Schrunch was sustained as pastor. On September 2, Dewey Larson and Billy Baller were baptized by Priest Ezra P. Oehring. Elders C. D. Williams and A. H. Thompson confirmed Dewey Larson and Elders L. A. Rife and Donald Savage confirmed Billy Baller. Thelma Turpin of Mankato, Minnesota, rendered a violin solo at the morning worship. On September 6, the Zion's League served a luncheon at the church. Officers were elected at this meeting.

The first session of the workshop on effective speaking convened at the church. September 14 the young adults held a picnic at Peter Pan Park. Elder Lawrence A. Rife is now an instructor in mathematics at the Mississippi Southern College at Hattiesburg, Mississippi. Shirley and Lester Hunt are at Axtell, Nebraska, where Brother Hunt has accepted a teaching position. They have a daughter, Nancy Ann, who was born August 21.—Reported by MRS. EUNICE FULTON

MUSKEGON, MICHIGAN.—The annual business meeting was held September 7 at which the following officers were elected; Elder William Farwig, pastor; Anna Farwig, clerk; James Arnold, church school director; William Hubbard, junior church school director; Laverne Wolcale, women's department leader; Leona Swager, young people's leader; Wilma Swager, music director; William White, treasurer; Douglas Sheffer, church custodian; Julia Sheffer, book steward and publicity agent; Ola Jacobs, Harold Lathrop, and Vern Hammon, finance committee; Harold Lathrop, auditor; Jess Swager, recorder. Elder James Phillips, district president was in charge of the election.

A farewell party was held August 30 for Sister Loretta Arnold before she left for Graceland.

Elder E. V. Swager, Charles Sheffer, and James Arnold attended the priesthood conference in Lamoni in June.

Priesthood classes are conducted each month throughout the fall and winter months at the Alto church for the Southern Michigan District under the direction of Elder James Phillips. Several members of the priesthood of the branch attend the classes.

The following have spoken at the branch: Muir Robinson of Kalamazoo, Edward Ashley of Battle Creek, Fred Khun of Grand Rapids, and Evangelist E. R. Carter of Lansing. Elder Wallace Jackson of the Detroit International Stake completed a series of services September 30, after which a baptismal service was held. Norma Cotton, Myrtle Evans, Thomas Evans, and William Pierce were baptized.—Reported by JULIA SHEFFER

PARIS, TENNESSEE.—The Kentucky-Tennessee District conference was held September 8. Brother J. C. Fitch was in charge, assisted by Brothers J. H. Yager and C. B. Gallimore.

Brother Gallimore gave the invocation.

Officers elected for the coming year are Elder R. T. Cochran, district president; Flossie Gallimore, secretary; nonresident pastor, Elder H. N. Van Nuenhyze; church school director, Elder T. E. Smalley; Hazel Withee, music director; Edna B. Hicks, women's leader; Francis Mink, young people's leader; Alma Cochran, publicity agent; and Curtis Ross was sustained as bishop's agent.

The following recommendations for ordination were approved: Alton Johnson, teacher; Clossen Hendrix, priest; Dale Booth, deacon; Jimmy Gately, deacon; Joseph Gately, priest; Newsome Jones, priest; Samuel Colliers, priest; Dorcie Beechan, elder. Brothers Fitch and Van Nuenhyze will act as counselors to the district president for the coming year. Brother J. H. Yager was the speaker at the evening preaching service. Apostle Percy Farrow conducted the morning prayer service, and spoke on Sunday. Brother J. C. Fitch preached Sunday afternoon. Brother S. E. Dixon was the speaker in the evening, beginning a series of meetings.—Reported by ALMA COCHRAN

ST. THOMAS, ONTARIO.—The London-St. Thomas congregations met for a conference at the St. Thomas church September 25 with Elder Carl Muir in charge. There have been nine baptisms in the past year. The church has been redecorated with the help of every department.

The following officers were elected: Frank Gray, presiding elder; Stanley Moore, church school director; Miles Rock, treasurer; Hazel Ford, secretary; Myrtle Cosan, director of women's department; Margaret Ford, music director; Hazel Ford, book steward; Brother and Sister Wilfred Skelding, Zion's League supervisors; Sisters Ruth Millard and Hazel Johnstone, auditors; Leva Kelley, solicitor; Brothers Joseph and Wilfred Skelding, custodian deacons.—Reported by SISTER H. FORD

SHOLEM ASCH

This magnificent novel sets an appropriate keystone in the career of Sholem Asch. Delving deep into roots held in common by much of the world today, it is a noble story, fused with the vigor, insight, and imagination of a writer who has devoted years to its re-creation. High Lights of the Women's Institute

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

THE PURPOSE of the Church-Wide Women's Institute, as outlined in the official program, was as follows: To help the church woman to do a more acceptable work in her home, her church, and her community; to become acquainted with new materials and methods; to exchange ideas and experiences; to stimulate and inspire thinking and to enlarge understanding; to integrate the women's program with the total program of the church; to fellowship with consecrated, purposeful women; to go forward in godly service.

Evaluating the institute in the light of these purposes, one feels that success attended the efforts and activities of all concerned. Certainly those attending became acquainted with new ideas, materials, and methods, and were inspired to larger understanding and a greater desire to serve. They found precious fellowship with other women of like faith and purpose, and they returned to their homes determined to go forward with faith in godly service. A year from now one can better evaluate whether the women are doing a more acceptable work in home, church, and community as a result, but no one who was present feels any doubt that this will be so. The theme of the Institute, "Go Forward With Steadfast Faith," will be the continuing thought and purpose of all whose lives were touched by the experience.

THE OPENING SERVICE of the Institute, held Monday, October 8, at 7:30 p.m., in the Laurel Club Dining Room at the Auditorium, was well attended, and with the greeting of old friends and the registration line, was reminiscent of General Conference. Mrs. S. S. Arnson, Chairman of the General Department of Women, presided over the meeting. Mrs. M. E. Mader, known to a nationwide audience as "Messiah" soloist, sang two beautiful solos, and the invocation was offered by President F. Henry Edwards. Mrs. Arnson introduced the principal speaker of the evening, President Israel A. Smith, who commended the women of the church for the work they had done throughout the history of the church and reminded them of their sacred calling and of the continuing responsibilities that are theirs. Greetings were offered by Mrs. Arnson, Charles V. Graham, President of the Center Stake of Zion, and Mrs. G. B. Wilson, Women's Leader of the Center Stake of Zion. The wives of church officials were introduced, and also the members of the General Women's Council.

Displayed on the speakers' table was a large bouquet of anthurium flowers, which had been sent by the women of the Makiki and Kalihi Branches in Hawaii. A message of greeting to the Institute from these women was read.

The "get acquainted" reception which followed was arranged by the women of Kansas City Stake.

THE SUBJECT OF THE DAY for consideration as the women met in the Stone Church at 8:45 a.m. Tuesday was "Women's Department at Work." President W. Wallace Smith offered the opening prayer, and Mrs. M. A. McConley was in charge. The three morning sessions covered "Essentials of Leadership," "Preparation of an Address," and "Ministry of Visiting," with subdivisions of these topics handled by Mrs. J. Harry Paxton, Mrs. Preston Hubble, Miss Eveline Burgess, and Mrs. Mark Siegfried, all of Center Stake, Mrs. Orris Salisbury of Far West Stake, Mrs. George Shippy of Rock Island District, Mrs. W. S. Bennett of Kansas City Stake, and Mrs. Stephen Black of Spring River District.

The afternoon sessions covered "Building Worship Programs," and "Use of Materials in Worship." Those taking part were Mrs. T. W. Bath, Spring River District, Mrs. J. C. Stuart, Chicago District, and Mrs. G. B. Wilson, Mrs. Arthur Lotts, Mrs. Pearl Gardner, and Miss Aleta Runkle, all of Center Stake.

Following the afternoon session, a tour of local church institutions was enjoyed by about 250 women. They visited the Sanitarium, Social Service Center, Resthaven, Herald House, and some of the church buildings. Mrs. B. F. Moats, Mrs. N. Ray Carmichael, and Mrs. Nell Kelley planned this tour.

Mrs. B. F. Moats was in charge of the evening session, at which time President W. Wallace Smith introduced as the speaker Dr. Addison Brown, well-known gynecologist and obstetrician of Des Moines, Iowa, whose illustrated lecture was on the subject of "Women and Cancer." Dr. Brown is a member of the church and a graduate of Graceland College.

WEDNESDAY'S SUBJECT, "The Family Plans and Prepares for Crises," was handled by three speakers in the morning sessions in charge of Mrs. S. A. Burgess. Mrs. H. I. Velt, Center Stake, spoke on "Building Morale in the Family"; Elder Evan Fry's subject was "What and How Shall I Tell My Neighbor"; and Bishop W. N. Johnson discussed "Stewardship in the Home."

No Wednesday afternoon session was held, however those who wished to do so participated in a tour of church historical spots by chartered bus, with Bishop Mark Siegfried in charge, assisted by Mrs. S. A. Burgess. Points of interest around Independence, Liberty, and Richmond were visited by 270 women.

Glaude A. Smith, Pastor of Stone Church, was in charge of the Wednesday evening prayer service and the message was given by Apostle Charles Hield. It was an inspiring service, with prayers and testimonies which were brief, to the point, and sincere. A few of the expressions heard were these: "I'm glad that I can recognize the blessings that God has given me." "My expectations have been more than fulfilled." "I am grateful for my womanhood." One mentioned the great blessing she had received through the guest that she had taken into her home, and another, from Canada, told of bringing her eighty-two-year-old mother, recently baptized, over 1,000 miles to attend the Institute and of the blessings they were receiving. The sense of fellowship and love was very strong throughout the service.

THE 'PLUS' OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP for Women" was Thursday's subject, with Mrs. C. George Mesley in charge of the morning sessions. Mrs. W. Wallace Smith, Mrs. W. N. Johnson, and Mrs. S. A. Burgess were the speakers for the first session. Dr. Clifford Adams, of the faculty of Pennsylvania State College and well-known author on marriage problems, was introduced by Dr. F. M. McDowell. He spoke on "Making Marriage Work," with special emphasis on the importance of preparation for marriage.

Carl Mesle, General Youth Director for the church, and Miss Velma Ruch, of the faculty of Graceland College, were the first two afternoon speakers, followed by Dr. F. M. McDowell, also of Graceland College.

President F. Henry Edwards spoke Thursday evening on "The Nature of Zionic Marriage." Three beautiful selections were presented by the Stone Church Choir, with Paul Craig directing. Mrs. J. Harry Paxton was in charge, and the opening prayer was given by Mrs. V. D. Ruch of Council Bluffs, Iowa.

MRS. N. RAY CARMICHAEL was in charge of the closing sessions on Friday morning, that day's subject being "Using Our Increased Knowledge in Our Home, Church, and Community." Mrs. M. A. McConley ably answered questions which had been turned in during the week, and Mrs. C. G. Mesley spoke on the subject, "Fifty Framed Together."

Mrs. Ray Heady presented some interesting facts about the Institute. Total registration was 892, and the average attendance for each day was 1,200. Mrs. Morris Jacobsen and Mrs. M. L. Draper were in charge of registration and housing. Twenty-two states, England, and Canada were represented. One man was registered—Irby Mundy of Colorado. About 1,700 meals were served by the Laurel Club, which served lunch each day. Four hundred five children were cared for in the nursery, which was managed by Mrs. Laurence Jones. The Herald Book Store in the lower auditorium of the church sold $1,100 worth of materials. The beautiful and inspiring display of religious pictures in the Radio Room was arranged by Mrs. Arthur Oakman from her own extensive collection.

Mrs. Arnson asked that all those present, who also attended the first Women's Institute held nearly thirty years ago, rise. There were eight: Mrs. Alfred Hulmes, Orlando, Florida; Mrs. Leslie Wight, Chicago, Illinois; Mrs. D. J. Williams, Burlington, Iowa; Mrs. Iva Bivins, Kansas City, Missouri; and Mrs. William Bath, Mrs. Cora Henson, Mrs. C. R. Smith and Mrs. Carrie Ballinger, all of Independence, Missouri.

Instrumental music for the services was furnished by Mrs. Clayton Wolfe, Mrs. Cecil Burton, Mrs. Harold Higgins, Mrs. L. R. Turner, Mrs. Joseph Knoche, Robert Miller, Oliver Houston, Marjorie Wade, Mrs. LeRoy Smith, and Mrs. Glen Johnson.

THE CLOSING DEDICATION SERVICE at 11 a.m. Friday crystallized and summarized the inspiring experiences of the week. Mrs. Glen Johnson's violin solo set the mood of worship and closeness to God and each other, and this mood was deepened by the solo, "O Rest in the Lord," sung by Mrs. William Nichols. High lights of the Institute were given by Mrs. Cedric Evans, Mrs. Paul Kelsey, Mrs. Edward Nelson, Miss Margaret Christensen, and Mrs. Edward White, representing the different viewpoints of the women present. The responsive reading, with Mrs. Clarence Skinner as leader, gave every woman an opportunity to participate vocally in the service. The closing statement, "Our future is far more important than the past or present, and it will be no greater than our faith and works will make it, supplemented by Divine Guidance," a quotation from President Israel A. Smith, was a fitting setting for a message to the women by Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith. A trio composed of Mrs. Albert Baird, Mrs. Tom Deal, and Mrs. M. L. Draper sang "Onward to Zion," and Mrs. Arnson gave her charge to the women as they prepared to depart for their own homes. The hymn, "Consecration," was followed by Brother Elbert's stirring and beautiful prayer of dedication and blessing.

With the close of this Women's Institute, those present felt sorrow at parting from old and new friends but also a greater joy and thankfulness for the privilege of being, as Sister Arnson said, "blest by sweet fellowship and harmony." They went forth determined to follow her charge to express their appreciation by willing service and to keep alive this counsel, weaving it into the fabric of their lives.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aaron Booker Kohlman

World affairs and conditions and related subjects are quite widely dealt with in the October magazines, as well as the usual seasonal topics relating to food, clothing, and housing.

For parents who are troubled about the possible undesirable influences that may be brought to bear on their sons in service there is a heartening article by Estes Kefauver, "Dear Parent," Cosmopolitan.

"Democracy in Theory and Practice," Ladies' Home Journal, will cause the careful reader to take stock of himself and his attitudes toward politics and to face up to his responsibilities.

Closely tied in with this, but giving practical steps for action that have been tested and tried, are three other articles, also in the Journal: "Who Cares?" "Political Pilgrim's Progress," and "What Women Did in Gary."

Bringing our attention to matters very much at home is "Care and Feeding of Household Appliances," Good Housekeeping. Most of us do abuse them.

For a startlingly attractive new color scheme, look at the cover of American Home. Inside are many excellent home-making ideas and recipes—we'll let you choose your own this time, except for special mention for a short feature, "Decorating Do's and Don'ts."

If your interest runs to marionettes, Woman's Day has a complete manual on them, including instructions for making your own.

For the woman who knits there is "Mittens with a Double Life," Woman's Day, with the instructions right there—no sending away for anything.

"How to Help Your Child Make Friends," Parents' Magazine, explains what parents can do to help their children make the friendships they need.

"You're a Lucky Mother," Parents' Magazine, tells how much easier, safer, and how much more fun it is to be a mother since childbirth and childcare procedures have changed.

"Does Your Child Fight Sleep?" Parents' Magazine, tells why most children go through periods of disturbed sleep and passionate resistance to bedtime.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The Church and the Arts

Barbara McFarlane Higdon

(The following is a talk given at the recent institute for college students held at Kirtland, Ohio. Mrs. Higdon and her husband, Bill, are graduate students at the University of Missouri, where she is majoring in speech.—F.H.E.)

THERE IS A LINE from Shelley that goes like this:
*Life, like a dome of many colored glass,
Stains the white radiance of Eternity.*

I suspect that Shelley, being a poet, meant by that figure that the eternal truth—the white radiance which is abroad in the world—is colored, distorted, obscured by the materialistic life of the Western world, based as it is on the limitations prescribed by the five senses. Ever since the Renaissance even the religions of the Western world have espoused this sense-bound materialism, and they would no longer admit the possibility of any extra-sensory field of experience in this life. They preached that God no longer communicated directly with the churches. We must remember, however, that communication implies a two-way process, and I wonder if it was the churches' loss of ability to hear him, rather than his unwillingness to speak, which accounted for the silence. Then came the Restoration, with its incipient charge, "Hear him." And direct communication with God was again established. Inspiration or extra-sensory experience is still an important part of the function of our church, and if it is lost we can no longer be the church of God. The keeping open of lines of communication between God and the church is the responsibility not of the prophet and patriarchs of the church alone but of every person who has taken upon himself the name of the church.

It is in this responsibility, the keeping open of lines of communication between God and the church, that I firmly believe the arts have their greatest contribution to make to church life and thought. By the arts I mean architecture, sculpture, painting, music, and literature which includes the art forms of the essay, the novel, and poetry.

LET US EXAMINE the nature of art. First of all, great art has the capacity to achieve an existence independent of its creator. That is, it is possible for a person who appreciates great art to experience a vision equal to but not necessarily the same as the vision of the artist. For we know that a work of art is an effort on the part of the artist to translate a vision into terms of the sense world in order that the vision might be communicated. For example, I hope you have had the experience of reading Browning's Saul. By means of one particular incident in the re-relationship between David and Saul—an incident which may never have occurred—Browning conveys his vision of divine love with its symbol in the Christ—a vision which could never be expressed in words. I hope too, that you have stood before a Rembrandt portrait and experienced there a revelation of humanity which no sight stimulus could reveal. In summary, then, great art is first of all capable of achieving an existence independent of its creator and independent of the sense world which is its medium of primary communication.

From this it follows that great art has a portion of that white radiance of eternal truth uncolored by materialism or by the limits of the man or the culture which produced it. I remember how amazed I was the first time I read the Odyssey to note the noble values enunciated therein—values which I had naively assumed to have originated with the Christian code of ethics. The Odyssey, written 1,000 years before Christ in a pagan society, upholds the ideals of loyalty, the triumph of right, and the sanctity of the home. And I recall the great mystery surrounding the opera Don Giovanni, considered by some to be the greatest masterpiece of the Western world. How did the young Mozart, a man who died at the age of thirty-five, store up such a vast treasure of wisdom? That the provincial from Stratford could ever have known humanity well enough to create a Hamlet or a Macbeth or an Othello has been questioned so seriously by some that a man of more cosmopolitan accomplishments has been suggested as the real author. What was it that inspired Homer and Mozart and Shakespeare? These men and the other great artists of the world discovered how to push back the boundaries of the sensory world in which they lived, discovered how to rise above the dome of many-colored glass and see for themselves the white radiance of eternal truth. To the individual who makes the same discovery comes not necessarily a Macbeth or a Don Giovanni but tremendous power to live his life creatively.

I'D LIKE TO PIN this experience down for you by sharing an experience of my own. I've become acquainted with a man who is a great poet. He knows intimately this experience because it has been the inspiration for his work as well as the inspiration for his life. He calls this experience "expanded consciousness." It is a state of awareness which pushes beyond the world revealed by sight, taste, touch, smell, and sound to a broader field of experience. Here are his words describing such an expanded state: "I sense the larger relations of things. I feel gloriously safe in the cosmos. My petty self with its innumerable hurts and fears and desires is lost in an overwhelming sense of love for all things and all men."¹ With my poet friend this experience has become habitual, and one need be with him for only a few minutes to know that this attitude is the motivation for his every word. And so my friend would add to our list of architecture, sculpture, painting, literature, and music, two more arts—ethics and religion. For he says, "The technique of art is the technique of an expanded attention, realizing an extended world through its larger relations," and this is, therefore, fundamental ethics and fundamental religion."² All of us know that the language of poetry is the language of great prophecy. Without this "expanded consciousness" it is impossible to conceive that the Book of Micah or the eighty-fifth section of the Doctrine and Covenants could have been possible.

THE POSSIBILITIES of such a state of awareness for each of us individually are tremendous. Just think for a moment what it would mean to be able to say truly, "I sense the larger relations of things. I feel gloriously safe in the cosmos. My petty self with its innumerable hurts and fears and desires is lost in an overwhelming sense of love for all things and all men."³ This "expanded consciousness" would create a prophetic personality, a personality which is a reflection of Divinity. We are all aware of how much our world needs living expressions of the divine.

The possibilities of such a state of awareness for our church as a group of expanded individuals are even more tremendous. We recall the account of the endowment of the early Christian apostles and the creative power which followed. Standing in this spot, we cannot forget the expanded personalities and the creative power which in 1836 attended the power that accomplished impossible things and produced this masterpiece of architecture.

"Expanded consciousness" is an experience of integration. Integration takes its meaning from the Greek, "to make whole or to renew." The extent of creative power which is released is directly proportional to the extent of integration which is achieved.

In the words of Tennyson's Ulysses, the arts have this to say to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of 1951:

*Come, my friends.
'Tis not too late to seek a newer world. . . .
For our purpose holds to sail beyond the sunset.*

DEATHS

MOTHERSEAD.—Dolores, daughter of George O. and Dessie R. Pearson of Independence, Missouri, was born August 5, 1905, in Joplin, Missouri, and died September 1, 1951, in Memphis, Tennessee. Following graduation from high school she attended Miami Junior College and Ward-Belmont College. On August 3, 1913, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church, and on September 23, 1923, was married to W. H. Mothersead. For the past sixteen years they had made their home in Chicago, Illinois, moving to Memphis on May 1 of this year.

She is survived by her husband; her parents; and a sister, Mrs. F. C. Wallower, Jr., of St. Joseph, Missouri. Funeral services were held at Joplin in the Thornhill-Dillon Chapel, Dr. J. K. Howe and Elder Stephen Black officiating. Burial was in Mt. Hope Cemetery.

HIGGINS.—Edith Elizabeth, daughter of George and Emily West, was born October 3, 1881, in Nebraska City, Nebraska, and died August 26, 1951, at Ft. Dodge, Iowa, in the Lutheran Hospital. She was married on October 14, 1889, to Frank H. Higgins; two sons were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 18, 1910, and was an active participant in church activities as long as her health permitted.

She is survived by her husband; two sons: George Herbert of Omaha, Nebraska, and James Lester of Fort Dodge, Iowa; thirteen grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren.

Services were held at the Wilder Bruce Funeral Home in Fort Dodge, Elder Harold E. Mann officiating, and at the mortuary in Nebraska City, Patriarch Harmon Higgins officiating. Interment was in the Nebraska City cemetery.

ARMSTRONG.—Annie Loretta, was born March 20, 1879, and died May 29, 1951. She was married to Irwin Armstrong. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 13, 1938. Pastor G. A. Edwards officiated at the funeral. Interment was in Greenwood Cemetery.

GRIFFIN.—Annie Lucinda, was born December 21, 1878, near Paris, Tennessee, and died September 4, 1951, at Wingo, Kentucky. On December 17, 1895, she married J. T. Griffin. Four of the fourteen children born to them preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for forty-nine years.

Besides her husband she leaves six daughters: Mrs. Ila Coltharp, Farmington, Kentucky; Mrs. Lela Barnes and Maxie Brown, Mayfield, Kentucky; Mrs. Nadine Johnson, Wingo; Mrs. Oris George, Kansas City, Missouri; and Mrs. Verla Pittman, Independence, Missouri; four sons: Francis of Independence; and Boyd, C. L., and Keith of Detroit, Michigan; twenty-two grandchildren; and eighteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Reorganized Church at Tri-City, Elder Parvin Jimerson officiating. Interment was in the Pensen Cemetery near Wingo.

Introducing

HAZEL MAY NAPIER, Springfield, Missouri, (page 5) was born in Mountain Grove, Missouri, where she also was graduated from high school. She has always loved to write and has contributed several articles to the Herald during the past twelve years. She won first prize in a short story contest conducted by a national magazine. Her hobbies are composing music and raising potted plants.

In 1925 she was married to Jess Napier. They have two children: Paul 17, and Joseph 3.

She was baptized in Springfield in 1937 where she also attended the Draughons Business College. Her sight became impaired a few years ago, and she has become especially interested in the handicapped and the sightless. She is interested in making available the release of records on the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, and even a monthly issue of the Herald in Braille. Sister Napier is a member of the S. and S. Progressive Club. She has served as church school and study class teacher for her branch and a Herald correspondent and publicity agent.

OLIVE (THOMAS) MORTIMORE, Lamoni, Iowa, (page 10) is a daughter of one of the great missionaries of the Reorganization, Seventy O. B. (Open Bible) Thomas. She has lived in and around Lamoni most of her life, though she was born in Ellston and baptized in Leon. She was graduated from the Lamoni high school in 1909, from Graceland College in 1911, and received her B.A. degree from the State University of Iowa in 1913. She taught school for twelve years, three in the Lamoni high school and seven at Graceland College, the last five starting in 1946. In 1917 she married Morris E. Mortimore. They have two sons, Thomas Nathan and James Edmund, both living in Washington, D.C. Sister Mortimore has followed her geologist husband who did oil prospecting in the Midwest fields and in the northern part of South America. He is now in government service as a soil conservationist. They are living on a small farm just south of Lamoni.

* HONOR TO BISHOP BECKER

An unusual occurrence took place at the meeting of the Standing High Council on Friday, October 5. It was in the office of President Israel A. Smith, and he was in charge, assisted by President Edwards. There were a number of ordinations of high priests to be considered, and they were approved. After this routine had gone on for a while, President Smith declared a recess, and said that a brief party was to be held in honor of the birthday of one of the council, Bishop J. A. Becker. It was his seventy-seventh.

President Edwards reviewed briefly the services and contributions of Bishop Becker to the church. He was ordained an elder in 1902 and a seventy in 1905, going to Germany as a missionary in 1905 and 1906. He was ordained a bishop in April 19, 1908, and served as bishop of the Ohio, Pittsburgh, and Kirtland Districts. From 1918 to 1926 he was bishop of Independence. He was a counselor to Bishop A. Carmichael in the Presiding Bishopric from April 13, 1926, until February, 1931. He was secretary-treasurer of the Order of Bishops in 1913. Brother Becker served on the Standing High Council from 1922 to 1926, and from April 14, 1940, until the present time. Earlier in his career he had also served as secretary of the Order of Enoch.

President Smith made an appropriate talk in appreciation of Brother Becker's services, and then announced that refreshments would be served. O. W. Newton and Don Lents brought in the ice cream and cake, and Brother Becker cut the cake with true episcopal fairness, efficiency, and precision.

Brother Becker later responded with a talk about his experience and gave his testimony. President Smith did not know whether the High Council had ever before included such an item of business on its agenda. But he observed that there must always be a first time if a precedent is to be set. Members of the council were of the opinion that it was a very fine and happy occasion in an association which means so much to all of them.

The council then returned to its regular business, thus incorporating this pleasant interlude within framework of ordinations ending the evening by restoring a penitent applicant to membership in the church.

* PASTOR

A news note records the fact that a New York City church has chosen for its pastor a man who has been blind from birth. His wife is also blind. In this act is a demonstration of Christian mercy that is a great credit to the congregation and its officers. No doubt they will find that they will experience an upsurge of spiritual strength and satisfaction. They will find that this man's spiritual and intellectual resources are not less because of his handicap.

News and Notes

NEWS OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

President Israel A. Smith was in Portland, Oregon, October 20 and 21 for the district conference celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the Portland District. He will be on the west coast for a few days attending to church business.

President W. Wallace Smith was in Washington, D.C., for anniversary services and will visit a number of eastern points returning to the office in November.

President F. Henry Edwards is working on plans for General Conference as well as routine matters with Don Lents, assistant to the First Presidency.

HOLD CONFERENCE

Forty-one priesthood members from ten districts in the eastern states met in Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, for a two-day conference October 20 and 21. Directing the conference were Apostle Maurice L. Draper and President W. Wallace Smith. The conference was attended by district presidents, their counselors, bishop's agents, traveling missionaries, and missionary pastors. President Smith preached the morning sermon, and Apostle Draper delivered the evening address.

ATTEND INSTITUTE

Apostle Reed M. Holmes attended a church school institute in Joplin, Missouri, October 26, 27, and 28. He was joined on October 27 by Elder Carl Mesle.

SPEAK ON COLLEGE DAY

Several members of the Graceland faculty preached at branches in Independence on College Day. They were Delmar Goode at South Crysler, William Gould at Mount Washington, Richard Carter at West College, Roy Chevillie at Stone Church. Robert Farnham, president of the Lamoni Stake, also traveled to Independence to speak at Liberty Street Branch.

AWARD PRESENTED

Larry Pool of Flint, Michigan, was presented his God and Country award on October 7 by Elder R. Melvin Russell.

HOME BURNED

The home of Brother Lester Wildermuth, seventy-nine year old missionary, burned while he was out west in missionary activity. Brother Wildermuth had little insurance on his home, and at present is staying with his son Dick in Aurora, Illinois. His home was in Plano.

"STEPPING STONES" DATE CHANGE

The "Stepping Stones" which were mailed from the publishing house Friday, October 19, contained a duplication error. November 4, Number 44 should be the date of the issue containing "Chipper, the Cowbird" as a lead story. The issue with "The Legend of the Blue Spruce" as a front-page story should read November 11, Number 45.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Doris Conklin

Doris Conklin came to Graceland College as a student in 1944, and has been a member of the Graceland family ever since. After graduating from Graceland in 1946 she accepted a position in the business office, then in the spring of 1948 she became Director of Social Activities, and has, together with other responsibilities, served in this capacity ever since. In addition to the planning and directing of social activities for the entire campus, she is manager of the college bookstore, manager of the snackshop, director of the Memorial Student Center, chairman of the Concert and Lyceum Committee, counselor to the Student Council, supervisor of one full-time and twenty part-time employees, and in addition teaches two sections of the freshman communication course.

Doris was born and reared on a farm near Ithaca, Michigan. Her parents are both members of the Reorganized Church, as is she. Her father was pastor of the Alma, Michigan, congregation for about ten years, and Doris participated in church activities as a primary teacher and in the Zion's League and Women's Department.

As a student at Graceland, she was very active in campus life. She was business manager of the Acacia, for which she was awarded the Silver Seal for Journalism; a member of the Student Council, Graceland Players, Crescents—an honorary girls' service organization—and the Lambda Delta Sigma Society, which is an honorary society for scholarship and citizenship. Also, during her freshman year, she was president of North Hall, dormitory for women.

She attended Central Michigan College of Education in the summer of 1949, and from January until August, 1951, she attended Drake University at Des Moines, Iowa, where she majored in psychology. She is a member of the Psi Chi Fraternity, national psychology honorary society.

Because of her friendly manner, talent, and co-operativeness, Doris is given many responsibilities on the campus, but she is never too busy to counsel with students or converse with friends.

Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

Let's Finish the Auditorium

This great building, a symbol of the church and its people, needs to be completed in dignity and beauty to tell our story to the world.

THE AUDITORIUM, in more ways than we realize, is a symbol of the church, and it gives thousands of visitors their first and most lasting impression of us and our mission. It is a symbol, too, in the eyes of our neighbors and friends. It represents the gospel, the message of the Restoration, and the people.

As long as it remains unfinished, it tells an incomplete story and the world wonders about us and our work. Are we the kind of people who finish a task we have begun? Will we leave all our dreams of Zion, our hopes of the kingdom of God, in this same incomplete state?

Whether we like it or not, the Auditorium tells the whole world something about us. Do we like what it says?

We can change the statement! We can finish the story!

THE AUDITORIUM, with its great copper dome looming against the sky, now protected with a coat of green, is seen from the air by nearly every plane passenger approaching Kansas City. It is visible from the horizon on the highways from nearly every direction.

The beautiful gray limestone surface under the dome informs the beholder that this structure was built to endure. Beneath that dome a strong steel framework rests on reinforced concrete columns that go down to bedrock. Double walls, with corridors and ramps between them, add to its enormous strength. It would take natural forces that have not yet been displayed in this area to damage the building. As long as things fashioned by human hands remain, the Auditorium should stand. We may be proud of how well it is built.

DRIVE PAST the Auditorium or stop and look, as many visitors do, and you will observe the plain but substantial front. As it stands now, it is good, but it lacks a great deal as a façade for the home of a church organization.

This picture of the Auditorium—and that's all its present appearance is, for the real Auditorium has not been seen yet—is not the picture that President Frederick M. Smith held before the people in 1926 when it was begun. This is not the completed work of which the members dreamed and for which they sacrificed.

This picture of the Auditorium is not what President Israel A. Smith or his counselors have in mind. It isn't the ideal of the Council of Twelve or of the Presiding Bishopric. It isn't what you and I want, either. We're all thinking of something better.

We can imagine how other people say, as they drive by, "They never finished it." And some of them may ask, "Will they ever finish it?" Have you wondered sometimes too?

For a fair representation of the church to the world, for our own confidence and morale, for the com-

Years of Progress - Past and Future

OUR EFFORTS to finish the Auditorium, and the achievement of the goal of those efforts, will provide another indelible chapter in the history of the church.

This remarkable story of progress, which should be climaxed by the completion of the gigantic Auditorium, began nearly 100 years ago. In a small building which housed the Newark Branch near Beloit, Wisconsin, Jason W. Briggs stood before a tiny gathering of Saints and revealed a manifestation of God's mind and will that had been given him. That gathering constituted a conference, and the reaction to Jason Briggs' message started the Reorganization on its way.

A review of the long list of conferences, where legislative action has determined the course of action for the church, provides many interesting observations. All describe growth and development. All point toward achievement of sacred ideals. All have a definite place in the thrilling report of progress.

In addition to legislative action, the physical properties where conferences have been held are, in themselves, measuring sticks of progress for the church. One of the most interesting pages in the history of a humble, consecrated people is the description of the semiannual conference in 1859. It was held in the grain barn on the farm of Israel L. Rogers in Kendall County, Illinois. The entire conference was housed and fed by Brother and Sister Rogers. Contrast this story with the one written at the Conference in 1950 which described the overflow throngs seeking seating in the 7,000 capacity Auditorium.

The history describes the impressiveness of the Amboy, Illinois, Conference of 1860. On April 6 of that year Joseph Smith III was ordained President of the High Priesthood. That sacred service, in a most humble setting, provided a page in the history that has had its counterpart on

GENERAL CONFERENCE

In establishing the program of having General Conference biannually, it was part of the plan to have the Conference include the date of the church's founding, April 6. Occasionally it will happen, as it will in 1952, that the Conference could either start on that date or end on that date. For that reason some are inquiring as to the actual date of the Conference next spring.

The dates fixed last General Conference as the time it would be held are March 30 to April 6. We call this to the attention of our readers so that delegates and others concerned may plan accordingly. C.B.H.

JOINT COUNCIL

The First Presidency, Council of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric were in Joint Council September 17 to 26. Considerable business of major importance was transacted.

Elder Oskar E. F. Stuve of Hamburg, Germany, was appointed and assigned to Germany.

Other appointments will be announced later.

Richard D. Andersen was transferred from the Eastern States Mission to the Southern Ohio District.

Lloyd R. Adams' assignment was changed from the state of Ohio to the Northwest Ohio and Kirtland Districts.

Donald L. Kyser was transferred from the Rich Hill District to the Southeastern Illinois District.

Calvin V. French was assigned to the Rich Hill District.

John T. Puckett was assigned to the Missouri Missionary Development Area with Norman E. Cox, Jr., as associate.

As of January 1, 1952, Eric Rowe will labor in the northern district of England and Thomas E. Worth in the Midland and Southern England District.

Clifford A. Cole was granted a leave for a year for service at Grace-land College.

Sylvester R. Coleman was transferred from the Southeastern Illinois District to the Northwestern Iowa District.

Ralph A. Bobbitt was assigned to the Spring River District as missionary.

At his own request Elder Avon Yap of the Hawaiian District was released from appointment to pursue his education. Brother Yap has given good service in his home district, and he leaves the field with the thanks and good wishes of the general officers who have worked with him.

The ordinations of Elders Stephen A. Black and Charles D. Neff to the High Priesthood were recommended; these later received the approval of the Standing High Council. The ordinations have been referred to the apostles in the field and will take place at an early date.

District boundaries were adjusted as follows:

Missionary Development Area consists of the following counties in Missouri: Clark, Scotland, Schuyler, Putnam, Grundy, Sullivan, Adair, Knox, Lewis, Marion, Shelby, Macon, Linn, Livingston, Chariton, Randolph, Monroe, Ralls, Pike, Audrian, Boone, Howard, Calloway, Cooper, Moniteau, Cole, Osage, Morgan, Miller, Maries, Phelps, Pulaski, and Benton County south of the Lake of the Ozarks.

Apostle D. O. Chesworth is to have apostolic supervision of this Missionary Area. St. Louis District: Osage and Maries Counties in Missouri transferred to the Missouri Missionary Development Area.

South Missouri District: Phelps and Pulaski Counties in Missouri transferred to the Missouri Missionary Development Area.

Spring River District: Dade County, Missouri, transferred from Unorganized Territory to the Spring River District.

Rich Hill District: Polk and Dallas Counties in Missouri transferred from Unorganized Territory to the Rich Hill District.

Eastern Montana District name officially changed to "The Northern Plains District."

Eastern Colorado District: Scotts Bluff, Banner, and Kimball Counties, Nebraska, transferred from Unorganized Territory to the Eastern Colorado District.

Eastern Colorado District and Western Colorado District: Routt, Eagle, Lake, Chaffee, Saguache, Rio Grande, Alamosa, Costilla, and Conejos Counties of the Western Colorado District transferred to the Eastern Colorado District.

At the close of the Council the Presidency announced that Apostle Reed M. Holmes will be relieved of field responsibility until General Conference to enable him to give all of his time to supervision of the Department of Religious Education; that Apostle D. B. Jensen will be assigned to Eastern Colorado and Oklahoma, in addition to his continued supervision of the European fields; and that President W. Wallace Smith will visit Hawaii early in the new year, returning in time for the preconference Council meetings.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY
By F. Henry Edwards

From Apostle D. O. Chesworth:

I thought you might be interested in hearing of my procedure in securing Herald subscriptions.

Yesterday at the district conference at the end of the business meeting, I asked for ten volunteers who would pledge themselves to the securing of five Herald subscriptions each from now until December. I had them raise their hands and the secretary made a notation. Instead of ten volunteers there were eighteen. If all are successful, there will be ninety more Herald subscribers in the Spring River District. I will follow through with the list personally or through the district secretary to see what our achievement is.

A Living Church

PART I

A LIVING CHURCH! Every organization seeks to define itself in its own terms. It sorts out of the language certain words for certain values. Yet words, by frequent use, may lose color and caste. They can become mouth fillers only. It is the purpose of language to convey meaning, and words which cease to convey it are not fully alive. It is the problem of a dynamic religion to keep its terminology alive.

What is a living church? So soon the flaming sword of God becomes a museum piece! So soon flame turns to ash, and meaning becomes the lettered outline of a printed word, and spirit, law! The flowing Spirit of the living God men cool to stone and hew into images to fit their dull perception. Jesus becomes a figurehead, and the cross a fetish for pagan worship. Men distort the heavenly imagery, and so disconsole themselves, perceiving only the shadowed statuary of their own minds in the eternal galleries.

Such is the universal tendency of man. No man, no body of men, is entirely exempt from guilt. For had not the spirit of living inspiration been frozen to the dull perception of man in every age, it would long ago have transformed the world. Yet the limitations of men to perceive the truth cannot lightly be pushed aside as a nonessential of the truth itself. Humanity cannot be summarily dismissed from a cloistered ivory tower of eternal verities; for truth in the abstract serves no function. The gospel of Jesus, as a vehicle for conveying truth to the human heart and giving it incarnation in matter, was designed for man. It cannot be impersonalized in a shrine of holiness, untouched and untouchable by the common worshiper. To teach, the teacher must descend to the level of understanding of the pupil. To lift, the gospel must start at the level of men where they are. The danger is that men's concepts of it are so often petrified there.

By Ruth McNickle Kirby

A LIVING CHURCH! The words are our raw material for building a moving thought into a living fact. As such, they are important. But as patterned letters of a crusted creed they can mean exactly nothing. A living church? The claim has been made by various groups of men, made in the midst of a hundred fossilized doctrines and ossified ideals, in the stale air from the lungs of other generations—air venerated as holy only for the fact that it was once breathed by the fathers; made in a passion of ancestor worship hallowed by the rattling of bones.

Against such a background Mr. Emerson draws, by contrast, his ideal of a living religion.

The foregoing generations beheld God and nature face to face; we, through their eyes. Why should we not also enjoy an original relation to the universe? Why should we not also have a poetry and philosophy of insight, and not of tradition, and a religion of revelation to us, and not a history of theirs? Embosomed for a season in nature, whose floods of life stream around us and through us, and invite us, by the powers they supply, to action proportioned to nature, why should we grope among the dry bones of the past, or put the living generation into masquerade out of its faded wardrobe.—Ralph Waldo Emerson, The Complete Essays and Other Writings, The Modern Library, New York, p. 3.

A LIVING CHURCH! It was a claim made by a new religion geared to the standards of a new world, laying aside the decadent doctrines of Europe, daring to live its own spiritual life and breathe its own spiritual air. It was a momentous effort, this new-old religion, which claimed a return to the original teachings of Jesus unsullied by the orthodox interpretations of the clerics—a return to the teachings of Jesus himself, teachings which rested on the living rock of a direct personal revelation in “an original relation to the universe,” and not upon the dead traditions of the Pharisees. It was a momentous effort, this new religion, to shake off the shackles of tradition and free men to think and feel with new freshness of mind and heart. It was a practical effort, too, dealing with the prosaic fact of men as they are, yet seeking to lift them to the heights of poetic truth seen by men like Emerson and Whitman. But, as in days of old, even when the flame of God burned brightest, it was scarcely understood. After its initial successes and failures, the ideal of the new religion grew slowly. It is still in its dawning, while the night presses close, beckoning the children of the Day to rest after the manner of the old traditions, in the valley of bones.

A LIVING CHURCH! The words were never intended to be trite. They sum, to every age, the thought behind a new ideal. They symbolize a fresh approach to God. But like the words of many other familiar phrases, they may be applied to a meaning wholly antithetical to their original intent, or they may be taken for granted without question or analysis. Yet in a day when religion is being considered by many thinkers as outmoded, because it has frozen in a thought pattern of another day, there was never greater need of a keen awareness of a religion which is not frozen, but fluid; which is not creed, but spirit. In a day when sociologists and anthropolo­gists, despairing at the spectacle of the great organized religions of the world, seek salvation for the race in a *scientific humanism*¹ where the hope of man is relegated to the province of his own petty theories, and humanity is left to the dubious salvation of lifting itself by its own boot straps, there is need, possibly as never before, of a working religion which can give life meaning today and which can interpret and solve the problems of the contemporary world. For with his awakening mind, man needs more than ever the link of living Fatherhood to give him a sense of home in his widening estate. A living religion is God's answer to the pitiful spectacle of the struggle, past creeds outgrown into a science it is not big enough to comprehend, of the orphaned soul of man.

For although science is a great collector of facts, in religion alone is found the co-ordination of being to interpret those facts into an overall picture of life. Science, by its own creed, bogs down there, incapable of a spiritual focus to put its facts in order. By its own definition of itself, it can never supplant religion. It is too self-limiting. In the extremity of its logic it is illogical; for skeptical of all else, it has unquestioningly accepted the materialistic limits of its own "scientific method." Yet in a world of superstitious gullibility science has rendered a great service by its unemotional scrutiny of facts, by its debunking of many of the ancient mental and social stumbling-blocks. But skepticism can go too far—so far, indeed, that it becomes itself a form of gullibility. Science without God is as pitiable and irrational as religion without science.

IT IS THE PROVINCE of a living church, in a scientific age, to furnish the sound emotional raw materials out of which intelligent ideas can be wrought; for regardless of how coldly we think, in actuality we think from what we feel about life. We perceive facts, but we interpret facts in our thought processes by the emotional and spiritual colorings of the soul—hence the need of the emotional and spiritual security of a sense of living Fatherhood behind our lives.

The significance of a living religion is that it works in those elemental deeps of emotion which lie at the basis of thought. Our love of God, which is reflected in a love of good inseparable from God, is the emotional foundation for our perception of all that is true. There is no "pure" thought untouched by the personality of God. God is the emotional foundation for all the qualities of a more abundant life. He is the foundation of a living church, a foundation so firm and so strong that the height and breadth of the reasoned superstructure can be infinite.

A living church needs no set walls of creed. The static creeds of mediocrity and a living concept of God do not walk side by side. A people alive to a living God will always be "a peculiar people," a unique people, a pioneering people. The American fluidity of concept has been a fitting background for such a religious expression.

Yet the warning remains: "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." The horny-handed traditions of the ages have reaching fingers. Freedom is forever in jeopardy. Yet it is endangered most, not from enemies without who can kill only the body, but from enemies within who can deaden the flames in the living soul. Without its soul, the name of freedom is a travesty. Civil freedom will always be measured by the deeper freedom of the soul, and American freedom will finally be saved or lost on the strength or weakness of its spiritual acuity. If the freedom of the gospel of Jesus fails in America, the freedom of America must also surely fail.
