vary with the responsibilities of the position and the preparation of the nurse; they range from $1,800 to $9,500 a year. Nursing resembles every other profession in that the more of herself she gives to her work the more she receives. Promotion and honors go to the nurse who prepares herself educationally and serves willingly to the best of her ability. Advancement is limited only by the ability, imagination, and perseverance of the individual.

The people with whom the nurse works add interest to her profession. She will work with many different types including student nurses, graduate nurses, medical doctors, nutritionists, medical technologists, sanitary engineers, research personnel, and so on. She will become a member of the "health team" serving humanity, and she will derive satisfaction from this association.

WILL THERE BE JOBS available for her? The Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor estimated that in 1950 there would be a need for 409,700 nurses. Actually, at the beginning of 1950 there were only 300,533 nurses actively engaged leaving 109,167 positions unfilled. The Women's Bureau estimates that in 1960 there will be positions for 554,200 nurses. The deduction can be made from these figures that there will be positions available for the registered nurse for years to come.

In 1920 there were three types of nursing in which professional nurses might engage after their graduation. These types were private duty (hired by the patient or his family on an individual basis), visiting nursing (employed by visiting nurse associations to care for the poor in their homes), and institutional nursing (employed by hospitals). Most nurses did private duty because the number of positions in the other two fields were limited.

Thirty years have brought a great change in this employment picture. Each decade since 1920 has seen many new areas opened to the registered nurse. The National League of Nursing Education has recently published a chart showing the different types of positions open to nurses today. There are eighty-nine types of positions listed on that chart. The three fields available in 1920 still exist, but they, too, have expanded to include more nurses. Opportunities have OCCASIONALLY there can be found a young woman who has known from early childhood what her career would be. She became interested in a particular field as a child and worked toward that goal. This is not, however, the usual way in which a career is chosen. More frequently the young girl makes a definite decision about a career during her years in high school. Often the decision is delayed until the senior year—sometimes until the last semester in high school.

Two months ago there were approximately six hundred twenty-five thousand young women graduating from the high schools of this country. Many of these young women are still trying to decide among the many careers open to the high school graduate. There are jobs paying good salaries which she may accept immediately. Should she do so or should she seek further education by going to a college, or a university, or a school of nursing? Or should she marry?

Some will marry immediately; others will take a job. There will be a large number who will desire to have further preparation for living. Their problem will be to select the career in which they will be happiest.

What criteria can the young graduate use to help her select a career? There is the "trial and error" method: the girl enters the field, decides she doesn't like it, drops it, and tries another. This wastes time and money. How, then, can a young girl efficiently select a career?

SHE CAN MAKE A LIST of all of the professions and trades which are open to young women. Her list will be long. In making a choice she must be guided by her interests. In which of these professions or trades on her list is developed so rapidly that it has been impossible to educate enough young women to supply the demand. The National Committee on Careers in Nursing reports that 60,000 young women must enroll in schools of nursing this September to help meet the increasing demand for nursing service. There will be many positions available for them when they become registered nurses.

Some skeptic may say, "Yes, but another depression may come. Then, what will happen to the nurse? People won't be able to pay for her services." The nursing profession fared well during the last major depression. In those years the federal and local health agencies employed more nurses than they ever had before to meet the health needs of the people. The prevailing interest of the people in expanding health services presents some evidence that, should another depression occur, health services would be maintained by governmental agencies to a greater extent than ever before. There are no indications that nurses will be forced out of employment.

CAN A NURSE CONTINUE in her profession after marriage? Indeed she can. Statistics for 1949 show that 42 per cent of the nurses employed were married. Nursing has the additional value of being excellent preparation for marriage. The nurse, during her three years in the school of nursing, learns to care for the human body; she studies how to select the proper foods and how best to prepare them. She learns how the body functions, and she learns nursing techniques. She learns how to help keep the body well, but should illness attack her family she knows how to give the necessary nursing care. She learns the principles of cooking and good housekeeping and how to care for children. At the completion of three years in the school of nursing she is prepared to care for a family.

The registered nurse may decide that she wants to devote all of her time to her home and her husband. All may go well in her home for some time, but suddenly disaster may strike—the family income may be stopped because the husband is ill, or for some other reason. The nurse is equipped to secure a job immediately and thus restore the financial welfare of the family. In no other profession can a woman be reinstated in her profession with so little delay or difficulty.

Working conditions, salary, and security of position as found in the nursing profession meet the criteria of a desirable career. There remains for discussion the need for personal satisfaction in the job. Do nurses find satisfaction in their work? Their satisfaction comes from hearing the patient, whom they have just made comfortable, say, "Thank you," or from helping a mother bathe her new baby, or from teaching a crippled child to walk with the aid of his new braces. The satisfactions that the nurse derives from giving service to those who need her cannot be measured in monetary terms.

NURSING is a satisfying career. The 1952 high school graduate who chooses nursing for her career can look forward to an interesting and useful life. Three years from now she will be looking forward to another graduation—a graduation from the school of nursing. She will be asking herself questions like the following which Dorothy Deming lists in her book, Careers for Nurses. What shall it be—nursing in a hospital, a clinic, a school, in homes, in industries, on transportation lines, in the country, in the city, here or abroad? Do I like to be my own boss, to work alone, or do I find it thrilling to be one of a staff of twenty, or a hundred, or five hundred nurses?

Do I want to seek out the unusual jobs like missionary work in Africa, or industrial nursing on a rubber plantation in Brazil, or would I like to be in charge of a ten-bed hospital in Alaska, or teach nursing in China? Or do I like city life and prefer to work in the office of a surgeon, or in a hotel with eight hundred guests, or in a large department store? Or would I like a job as an industrial nurse in a large firm? Or would I like to join the Army Nurse Corps, or the Navy Nurse Corps, or the Veteran's Administration Nursing Service? These and many other opportunities will be open to the registered nurse of 1955.

Nursing is a satisfying, profitable career for young women. High school graduates desiring to learn about nursing education should write to

Resthaven

RESTHAVEN, located at 9904 Winner Road, Independence, Missouri, is a home for elderly ladies. It includes also two or three younger women who are there due to physical handicaps. The guests at Resthaven are those who are physically incapable of caring for themselves. However, Resthaven is maintained as a home, not as a hospital.

The property, consisting of approximately seven acres, was purchased by the church from the widow of Doctor J. Phillip Kanoky on January 12, 1945. Plans are being considered to establish a new home on Truman Road, opposite the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. This home would be occupied by both men and women, and the present home would be vacated.

Preaching services are held every Sunday morning at eleven o'clock in the living room of the main building. Services, often wire recordings, are held Wednesday and Sunday evenings. Book of Mormon study classes are conducted on Thursday evenings following Communion Sundays, and some of the ladies have a Bible Study Class each Wednesday morning.

Approximately 1,800 guests have registered at Resthaven, including representatives from thirty states and twenty-eight countries, including Hawaii, Alaska, Nova Scotia, Canada, and England.

Ministers, Skylarks, Orioles, Scouts, choruses of young men and women have been among visitors. They have brought with them gifts, music, and plays.

Other forms of entertainment at the home have been colored slides, movies, and lectures. Some of the more able residents of Resthaven have helped at the Social Service Center one day a week.

The staff is composed of William A. Timm, financial supervisor; Miss Helen A. Weeks, R.N., superintendent; Miss Alice A. Anson, relief superintendent; Elder William Inman, pastor; Harry B. Sprague, assistant pastor; and Doctors Vance E. Link and Charles Grabske, attending physicians.

VIOLA VELT

Daughter of the Pioneers

The Autobiography of Christiana Stedman Salyards

PART III

Contact With the Reorganization

In 1851 a hopeful word began to circulate among the scattered Saints. In due time the Lord was to call on the seed of Joseph Smith to preside over the high priesthood of the church, the quorums should assemble, the pure in heart should gather, and Zion should be inhabited again. This message came through Jason Briggs. About the same time Zenas Gurley received this revelation: "The successor of Joseph Smith is Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith the prophet. It is his right by lineage, saith the Lord your God."

From the time when word was received that the leadership of the church rightfully belonged to Joseph, the son of the prophet, the church waited for his coming. Not until the winter of 1859 did Joseph decide to accept the office tendered him. In his own writings he relates several spiritual experiences which led to his final decision. In one of them he seemed to be sowing wheat in a field; another man who was harrowing, asked him, "Why not go to Utah?"

As he paused to answer his gaze was attracted upward, and he saw descending upon him a luminous, funnel-shaped cloud that outshone the summer sun. The cloud descended rapidly and settled upon him, completely enveloping him in its radiance, and a voice said, "Because the light in which you stand is greater than theirs." It answered the question why he should not assume leadership of the group in Utah.

The Reorganization

He received further instruction which caused him to open up communication with the Reorganized Church. In 1860 he and his mother attended a General Conference of the church held in Amboy, Illinois, and he was ordained president of the high priesthood, by virtue of which ordination he became the president of the church. Grandfather and Grandmother were present at his ordination and always gave him their loyal confidence and such support as they were able to contribute. They lived at that time in Rochelle, Illinois, a half-day's drive from Amboy by team and wagon.

Father Landers in Maine

I was about three years old when Grandfather expressed to the church his desire to be sent to New Brunswick, where once he had preached the Baptist faith. His request was granted and he set out on the mission with a young elder, George Lindsley, as his fellow-laborer.

Not long after setting out on the journey he had an impressive experience. He became seriously ill when he was about seventy years old. To that time he had been addicted to the use of tobacco—a matter over which I have not ceased to wonder, knowing his devotion to the gospel. In what manner the word of the Lord came to him I do not know, but he was commanded to put away his tobacco and was promised that, if he did, his strength should be renewed and he should return in safety from his mission field. From that time he discontinued the use of tobacco, and his life was extended to the age of ninety-seven.

A quick journey brought the missionaries to Eastport, Maine, where they preached once to a large, attentive congregation and then proceeded to Grand Manan, an island belonging to New Brunswick. There Grandfather found many former acquaintances who seemed greatly pleased to see him. The missionaries at once began to preach, but prejudice was so strong that all the churches except one were closed against them, and soon that also was refused them.

But they preached in the open air, in a sawmill, and in private houses. Twice mobs collected against them, eighteen or twenty in number, with blackened faces, the men armed with clubs and led by two deacons of the Baptist church. Such demonstrations ceased, however, when fines were imposed on the mobbers by the civil authorities. Though the opposition was great, it was not long before six persons were baptized and a small branch was organized.

One of those baptized was the master of a sailing vessel, of whose conversion Elder U. W. Greene has written very interestingly. Having heard of the preachers at work on Grand Manan, he went to the island to hear for himself what they were preaching, for he had heard evil accusations against them. Having been taken to the house where Father Landers was preaching, he entered into a discussion that lasted until time for the morning sermon. At the close of that service, the discussion began again and did not cease until time for the evening meeting, after which it continued until late in the night.

Captain George W. Eaton

In the morning the captain, George W. Eaton, announced, "I am satisfied you have the gospel, and if you think I am a worthy candidate, I should like to be baptized." The ordinance was attended to at once, Elder George Lindsley officiating. Father Landers confirmed Brother Eaton and, under the spirit of inspiration, ordained him an elder, giving him some great promises which caused the captain to wonder. Within himself he said, "That may do for you, old man, but it doesn't do for George Eaton. If God wants George Eaton to preach the gospel, he will have to tell him so."

Though he had been ordained he did no preaching but fasted and prayed much and one day while in prayer his mind was opened in a vision and he saw himself with Father Landers in a small schooner, sailing up the coast of Maine. He saw that from time to time as the course of the vessel changed the wind changed with it, so that they were able to make the whole trip to his brother's home in McGlathery's Island without shifting sail.

He was shown the critical illness of his brother's wife, saw her healed by administration, saw himself perform the ordinance of baptism, heard the words he used, and witnessed the manner in which the rite was performed. The vision passed away and, while he thought it impossible of accomplishment, he also realized that, should it come to pass, he would know he had been called of God to serve.

Early in the winter of 1866 a letter from his brother informed him of the serious illness of his wife and asked him to visit them. He complied, taking with him Father Landers to present the gospel to his people. Knowing the danger of a trip around the coast of Maine in the latter part of December, he related to Father Landers the vision that had been given him. After praying over the matter, they decided to go, trusting divine direction and protection to bear them safely on the perilous voyage.

A Miraculous Voyage

As the ocean spray struck the side of the vessel, the sails and rigging froze in the blocks as hard as ice could make them, but as it became necessary to shift their course from time to time the wind would suddenly change. The promise was fulfilled that the wind and the waves should be at their command. Under the light of a full moon they sailed all night and on the second day, having found a safe harbor under a lee shore, all hands slept in safety. The day following was beautiful, and with wind still fair they reached their destination and cast anchor in the harbor as the Lord had promised.

Upon hearing the gospel and learning of its promises, the sick woman asked for administration and was healed instantly. She arose from her bed, waited on them, and prepared herself for baptism. As Father Landers was then seventy-two years of age, he requested Brother Eaton to officiate in the ordinance. As he stood on the beautiful sand beach and gazed upon the clear water his vision recurred to him, and as he entered the water and performed the rite of baptism he realized by the Spirit of God resting upon him that he had been called by divine power to preach the gospel. It was his happy privilege later to baptize his father, mother, brothers, and sisters into the church.

The narrative by U. W. Greene tells that Captain Eaton was of giant stature and strength, being recognized in his youth as the strongest man in the state of Maine. He was a young man of about thirty-five when he traveled and preached with my grandfather, to whom Brother Greene alludes as the pioneer missionary of Maine.

He relates that not long after the events already recorded Captain Eaton and Father Landers went to Little Deer Isle and began to preach there, the captain entering actively into the work. They encountered great persecution, the people being extremely poor and rough in those days, and only their fear of the great strength of Captain Eaton prevented their driving the aged missionary away.

Another strong man entered in also as a defender of the faith when a mob of determined men collected to put a stop to the preaching of Father Landers. This man was at the head of the mob as its leader, declaring himself to be unafraid of George Eaton or any man who walked the earth.

When the mobbers reached the house where the meeting was held, the service had commenced, and they concluded to wait until the sermon was ended. To their surprise their leader turned to them declaring, "You can't touch that man without walking over my dead body. He is preaching the gospel. I have heard that same message before, and every word of it agrees with the Bible."

The man had been on the Pacific coast for a number of years, and one Sabbath morning a man walked onto the deck of the vessel where he was and asked permission to preach to the assembled crew. The preacher was Joseph Clapp, and the sermon made a profound impression on the man who carried the memory of it across the continent and recognized it when he heard it again as it fell from the lips of the aged servant of Christ, Father Landers. The mob he refused to lead further dispersed quietly, and a few days afterward the man was baptized and remained a firm believer of the gospel to the end of his life.

A Doctor's Determined Wife

Brother Greene told another story of the young giant preacher of Maine and the pioneer missionary who taught him the gospel. They were presenting the gospel in the eastern part of the state and were invited by a certain doctor to hold a series of meetings in his district. He promised them a welcome in his home as well as in the community, saying, "I own everything down there." The place was about fourteen miles from Lubec.

It was midwinter when they made arrangements to act upon the doctor's invitation, and when they reached his home he was out of town and his wife, upon learning they were what she called Mormons, was not disposed to be cordial to them. She not only ordered them from the house but added, "I will see that you do not have a place to stay in this settlement."

Taking their bags, the missionaries left the house and satisfied their hunger on bread and cheese in a grocery store. In the evening they preached in a packed schoolhouse, and at the close of the service explained that they had been invited there by the doctor but had not been received by his wife and were without a place to stay for the night.

As they left the schoolhouse Father Landers said, "Brother George, what are we going to do?"

"Do!" said George. "We are going back to the doctor's house."

"But she turned us out," reminded Father Landers.

"I know that very well," said George, "but if I get my foot through the crack of the door, we will stay in that house for the night."

On approaching the house their footsteps made little noise in the soft snow, and, finding the door unlocked, they entered where the doctor's wife sat by the fire.

Seeing who had entered the room she said sharply, "I thought I told you to get out of my house."

"You did," answered Captain Eaton, "but you have ordered every one in the settlement not to take us in and even have forbidden permission for us to stay in the schoolhouse. We have no place to go; this missionary is an old man and crippled; he will die if compelled to remain out of doors tonight. But don't get excited, for we are not going out of this house until morning."

"When my boys come in I will have them throw you out," she stormed. Then Brother Eaton straightened up and, raising his great hands, said in a loud voice, "Madam, I have power in these hands to squeeze the life out of those boys, and if you set them on me it will be the sorriest day's work you have ever done."

For a moment she looked him steadily in the eye and then, changing her attitude, she asked if they had had supper. When they said they had not, she prepared an excellent meal for them, after which she made a fire in the parlor, prepared a warming pan, and put it in the bed for them. When her boys came in, they were very friendly.

The missionaries had a good night's rest and in the morning, after a good, warm breakfast, they took their bags and set out on the return trip to Lubec.

How Captain Eaton Carried the Missionary

They had gone about three miles when Father Landers' strength gave out, and he said, "George, I can't walk any longer."

Then the young giant took the old man on his back and, with a bag in each hand, carried him the remaining distance to Lubec. He often said in talking of the incident that he must have received supernatural strength, for he was not conscious of the burden, but enjoyed being able to do something for God's servant.

After fourteen months in the mission field of eastern Maine, Grandfather was summoned home by his soldier son, Henry, who desired greatly to see his father as he realized the end of his life was near. When he had been laid to rest, Grandfather resumed the work he had been divinely commissioned to do, preaching repentance to those who would hear. For some time he labored in Will County, in northeastern Illinois, assisted by Brother Nelson Van Fleet.

In one of his letters he told us he preached on Sundays, and on weekdays traveled from house to house, teaching the Scriptures and praying with families. He wrote: "I am abundantly blessed with the spirit of the Lord, which makes glad the heart, and which alone can advance our cause." The parents of Sister Rosa Pitt were among those converted and baptized at that time.

Be Ye Therefore Perfect

By W. Reed Emslie

ANYONE WHO TAKES his religious beliefs seriously sooner or later comes face to face with the problem of attaining perfection. Christianity and perfection seem to go hand in hand.

In New Testament writings about the ministry of Jesus, the disciples have indicated that considerable instruction was given which pertained to the need for becoming perfect. The story, as it has been written, places much of the emphasis on the attainment of perfection in conforming to certain rules of social conduct.

Probably because New Testament writers recorded so many of these social aspects of perfection in Christianity, there has developed an impression that this facet of the subject was the major topic of concern when Christ said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

There can be no doubt that striving for eventual perfection in social conduct is one of the prime goals of the Christian religion. The effectiveness of our religious beliefs can be measured by the success with which we solve our social problems in the establishment of a perfect society.

There are, however, certain aspects and implications in Jesus' philosophy of perfection which are too frequently overlooked. It is necessary to go beyond a consideration of the social factors involved in our associations with each other in order to appreciate the full meaning of his teaching. There are a number of important ways in which our Father in heaven is perfect that must be discovered and emulated in individual thought and action.

A PRIMARY WAY in which our Heavenly Father is perfect is in the realm of impartiality. This point was clearly enunciated by Jesus when he reminded his disciples that God makes the sun to rise on the good and on the evil, and sends the rain on the just and on the unjust. This quality of complete impartiality in the bestowal of all physical blessings upon humanity is undeniably a challenging exemplification of true perfection.

God's impartial consideration of humanity is so completely unbiased that no distinction is made between those who do his will and those who do not as far as the physical elements are concerned.

Any man who is striving to become perfect must seek to develop an impartial, unbiased attitude toward his fellow-men. Probably one of the greatest advancements we have yet to make is the eradication of racial, religious, and economic barriers which prevent us from developing a mutually impartial attitude. Our success in eliminating these barriers will determine how far we progress along the road toward perfection.

A SECOND INDICATION of God's perfection is that of understanding. Church doctrine teaches that God comprehends all things. Surely, if a Divine Being is accepted as the creator of the universe, then it is illogical to assume that he does not understand the means by which the creation is being accomplished. He must of necessity comprehend the forces by which order is brought out of chaos and our universe is brought into being as it exists today.

God comprehends all things. In this respect he is perfect. Man, in his feeble efforts to achieve perfection, must not overlook this important aspect of the Divine Personality. Christ told his followers that if they were to be his disciples, they should know the truth and the truth would make them free. This was an edict, not a promise. It places squarely upon the shoulders of each Christian the task of seeking perfection through comprehension—comprehension of all things even as our Father in heaven comprehends all things.

A THIRD PHASE of perfection demonstrated by the Supreme Being is that of operation by law. Unto all kingdoms has been given a law. All things which operate by law are also governed by law. This is fundamental. If it were not so, God would be an unjust, changeable ruler who operates in a disorderly and unpredictable manner. It would be impossible to have faith in a being of this kind.

Man has learned that God's laws are the basis of operation and that he can depend upon these laws to function the same tomorrow as they have today and yesterday. This is a source of great comfort and enables man to carry on his activities with a reasonable degree of success. What man has not done is to discover and fully understand all of God's laws and apply them to his everyday activities. This is the unfinished task. This is a way in which man has yet to achieve perfection.

The individual Christian's problem of attaining perfection is not an easy one. Success cannot be achieved by simply perfecting one's social attitudes and conduct. Success must be achieved by development in all of the aspects of God's perfection. In addition to social considerations, one is required to regard all men on a basis of equality, to develop and expand intellectual capacity to a comprehension of all things, and to discover and apply God's laws to everyday living.

As these things are accomplished, we will be reaching toward the goal of becoming perfect, even as our Father in heaven is perfect.

First Fruits

By Florence B. Hughes

THE FIRST SUMMER of our marriage I enjoyed helping my husband's grandmother pick her raspberries. She insisted on sharing the first pickings with me, even when I insisted I should wait until she had canned all she needed.

"I always like to share the first fruit; it makes the rest taste better," she said simply.

I've learned the truth of this practice. I have shared fruit, flowers, and vegetables, as well as many of life's good things with the assurance that what was left would be doubly enjoyed because of this sharing.

Neighbors in our country community have learned to depend on getting peonies from our peony border for Memorial Day. This year the peonies blossomed early and, feeling they would not last until the last of May, I cut arm loads of them, taking them to homes where peonies were not grown. Memorial Day approached with most of the blossoms cut or dropping their petals. Early in the morning a farmer and his wife stopped for flowers, and I cut the blossoms for them. By looking closely I found enough for them and another couple to whom I phoned, saying I had their usual bouquet ready. I told my husband as we ate breakfast that I hated to refuse the others who, I felt sure, would come for flowers, but I didn't have any good peonies left. I didn't take into account what sharing can do, for as the other folk came we continued to find fresh flowers to cut until all the additional requests were filled. I was amazed to find there were so many bouquets available. At the close of the day the peony row looked more beautiful to me than it had days earlier when I had thought it was at its height of glory. Again sharing the "first fruits" had made the rest better.

Question Time

Question:

What is the meaning of John 20: 23: "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained"?
Iowa Mrs. M. E. P.

Answer:

Forgiveness is a provision of the gospel obtainable under conditions of obedience to the gospel law. On the basis of this obedience the church and its officers receive into fellowship those who have forsaken the way of the world of sin; and they are accepted, not as sinners but as those called to be saints. The church's acceptance is, in effect, a forgetting or sweeping away of sin, and they are held as righteous ones. This is what the Lord does in heaven for people—he wipes away their sins and welcomes them to his holy communion, thus fulfilling the promise, "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them."

If a member falls back into sin and returns to the world, being unwilling to repent, he is not to be forgiven by the church, nor longer to be held in fellowship, for unrepented sin is unforgivable sin. Neither will he receive forgiveness from heaven. In this is fulfilled the further promise or warning, "Whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." In other words the Lord wants his representative church to do exactly the same thing as he himself would do, and when the church does so, the action is duplicated in heaven. Any action not in accord with the will of God would not be duplicated or confirmed, and the Lord would not be bound by it.

The statement in no wise grants to any minister any arbitrary power to forgive or retain sins.

Question:

By what power do these so-called modern healers of the sick and lame do their healing, especially all those not connected with the Reorganized Church? Can you tell us where Satan enters in, and what is God's part? What did Jesus mean when, in Mark 9: 36, 37, he said, "forbid him not . . ."?
Idaho E. F.

Answer:

To answer this question we must consider it broadly, covering healings, miracles, signs, gifts of the Spirit, and all those supernatural manifestations made possible by Spirit power.

The Scriptures reveal two distinct spiritual forces operating in the world, the divine and the satanic, each manifesting in its own way these signs and wonders. It is for man to learn to distinguish the one from the other.

Those manifestations coming under the Spirit of God spring from Christ, and were and are given of him to operate within his church for purposes relative to the welfare of his people. They are inseparably associated with the gospel plan of salvation, and belong with obedient believers and not with unbelievers, their main purpose being to confirm and strengthen the faith of the children of God, to confirm the truth which they have received, and to reveal the divine personality in such a definite and intimate way that his people may know him. They are never given for the purpose of making believers.

Those manifestations springing from satanic sources, like all his works, are counterfeit, though real, and designed to deceive by imitation and the display of wonders. In counterfeit churches they are designed to confirm them and their erroneous doctrines in an effort to establish the false in the place of the genuine. They often appear without any church connection where their effect is to discredit and destroy the truth and to prevent people from believing.

These signs, whether true or false, must be judged by their inherent qualities, and by the doctrine and organization with which they are associated, the only safe basis being the truth of God. Like a man, they are known by the company they keep.

In Mark 9: 36 Jesus gave no indorsement of the man who was supposedly casting out devils in his name. What he did was to reprove his disciples for forbidding him—a thing they had no right to do. Even today the Lord has commanded his elders to let other churches alone.

Question:

Can you tell me of any true fact where tobacco is used as medicine for sick cattle, as we are told in Doctrine and Covenants that is what it is for?
Michigan Mrs. A. V. S.

Answer:

The statement referred to is in the "Word of Wisdom," Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1, and reads:

Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill.

Tobacco or its derivatives (speaking in general—we cannot give specific cases) have long been used as a medicine for both man and beast. By the courtesy of J. P. Gray, M.D., of the Park-Davis Company, Detroit, we have this in answer to a personal inquiry:

Nicotine has been used in medicine and in veterinary medicine in the past. Also niacin and niacinamide, formerly known as nicotinic acid and nicotinamide, members of the vitamin B-complex, were originally made from nicotine, and therefore from tobacco; but this source is no longer relied upon, other methods having supplemented these.

Dr. Gray also quotes from Merck Index, page 381 as follows, referring to nicotine:

Veterinary medicine: . . . used in 1/2 per cent ointment in sarcoptes and acarus itch; also in not parasitic eczema, favus, herpes, etc.

Nicotine is now made synthetically, and hence tobacco is not so much used for this purpose as formerly. A number of new and potent medicines and external remedies are manufactured using nicotine as a base.

Special Mother's Day Services Held

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA.—Two baptisms and confirmations were performed during the year 1951. Those baptized were Betty Lee Black on March 11, and Theodore Spessard on June 10. Seventy Herbert Lynn and Elder Roy Hewes baptized the candidates, respectively. Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag and Elder Rodney Engel, Elder Roy Hewes and Elder Wayne Hewes performed the confirmations, respectively. The following children were blessed during the year 1951: Douglas Lee, son of Willard and Lavona Davis, was blessed July 15; Christopher Ridgway, son of Frank and Kay Pope, was blessed November 26.

William J. Farley was ordained to the office of priest on December 2, 1951. Bishop David B. Carmichael and Elder Rodney Engel officiated.

Sister Jessie Eunice Shepherd, a member of the Santa Ana Branch, died October 25, 1951.

On Mother's Day, May 11, 1952, corsages were presented in honor of the oldest and the youngest mothers present at the morning service. The oldest mother was Sister Ellen Fuller, visiting from San Bernardino; and the youngest, Sister Betty Best. The corsages were made and presented by Brother and Sister Jordan. As a tribute to the mothers of the branch, a recital was presented during the evening worship hour by the young people of the branch who are studying voice and musical instruments. Those participating were Phillip Morrison, Karen and Barbara Hewes, Susan Williver, Roddy Engel, Althea Farley, Bill Farley, and Betty Black. The recital was under the direction of Brother Warren Tait.

The Southern California District priesthood retreat was held at the YWCA camp near Idyllwild, May 24 and 25. The following attended from Santa Ana: Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag, Bishop David B. Carmichael, Elders James Clark, Rodney Engel, Roy Hewes, Wayne Hewes; Priests James Farley, Bill Farley; Teacher Warren Best; Deacon Henry Johnson; and Dennis Norman.

On May 25, during the absence of the priesthood, the women's department took charge of the morning service. Those officiating were Sisters Hattie Tait, Lola Mitchell, Allie Hewes, Madeline Ostertag, and Lucy Engel.

A pie social was given on May 16 to raise funds for the children's summer camp. Entertainment was furnished by Karen and Barbara Hewes, Susan and Joyce Williver, Phillip Morrison and his puppet, Fern Parsons and daughter Ardith, and Ray Smith. Betty Best led the group in singing. A candy sale was conducted the same evening by the Zion's League to raise additional funds for their needs.

The Zion's League visited the Santa Paula Branch on May 18. Following the morning service a picnic lunch, furnished by the women of Santa Paula, was held. Competing in the afternoon volleyball games were the Santa Paula and Santa Ana Zion's Leagues, with the Santa Ana group taking the lead.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer presented a sermon the evening of May 22. Visiting that evening were Brother and Sister Kemple from Ontario.

On May 25 the Santa Ana choir participated in the Festival of Sacred Music presented by the Choral Conductors' Guild of California. Choirs from twenty-six churches united for this occasion. Conducting for the festival was S. Earle Blakeslee, renowned choral conductor.

On May 28 the women from the Ontario Branch, San Bernardino Branch, Riverside mission, and the Redlands mission visited Santa Ana. A luncheon was prepared and serviced by the women's department of Santa Ana under the direction of Hattie Tait. Sister Gleazer and Sister Van Fleet were the speakers and Sister Betty Best sang.—Reported by BETTY BLACK

Thirty-three Baptized This Year

WICHITA, KANSAS.—The music department presented a spring concert at the church on May 15. The adult, junior, and women's choirs performed both sacred and secular numbers.

Soloists were Nan Bayless, Major Emerson Armstrong, James Mailen (trumpet), Marylyn Robinson (violin), Donna LaPointe (reading), Janice Richards, Gloria Tenney, and Jacqueline Cory (piano trio). Accompanists were Mildred Brose, Annetta Richards, Nan Bayless, Dorothy Shannon, and Mary Robinson.

Mary Robinson, director of music for the branch, was in charge, and Doris Clark directed the junior choir. Elaine Cavin directed the pantomimes. Elder Myron F. LaPointe is pastor.

The first part of the concert was a worship program with Nan Bayless playing "Clair de Lune" by Debussy as the prelude. Elder Myron LaPointe gave the invocation with the response, "Prayer Perfect" sung by Opal Endicott, Betty Dunham, and Doris Peake. Burl Allen read the poem "Compensation" by Edgar A. Guest. The setting for the musical program was a garden scene. All of the performers wore formals.

The ushers were Leo Vickers, Ruth Rhodes, Carol Carlson, Leroy Vickery, Duane Stone, Helen Busch, and Robert Casino. Those participating in the pantomimes were Dorothy and Mark Dodds, "Mighty Lak' a Rose" by Nevin; Dorothy Shannon, "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" by Kern; Robert and Alpha Fowler, "In My Garden" by Fireston.

Following the musical program, open house was held in the main church building and a reception was held in the lower auditorium.

Hostesses were members of the women's department. The musical was presented again at the Masonic home on May 19.

Vacation church school was held June 2-6. The average attendance was seventy-eight. The total enrollment was ninety-three. The general theme was "Treasuring God's Word." Achievement night was held June 8, under the direction of Edna Jennings, children's supervisor.

Graduates from Graceland College are June Martin, formerly of Wichita, Joe Bayless, Glenn Crum, and Laurice Crum.

Thirty-three members have joined the church this year. They are Homer Dean Behymer, Jack Dean Decker, James Richard Decker, Wallace Reed Decker, Martha Alice Newman, Christopher Clifford Padberg, Helen Claudine Tilden, Shirley Mae Cathey, Maxine Headley, Margaret Mae Logen, Elmer Dean McDivitt, Herbert H. Sunday morning the church school boys and girls gave the worship service. During the eleven o'clock hour Elder Cecil Robbins gave the charge to the parents and members of the church, after which the following babies were blessed: William Floyd Zamastil, Susan Kay Koehler, and Deborah Lynn Shade.

The following, previously baptized, were confirmed: Sandra Noble, David Walker, Barbara Fuss, Phyllis Hartling, Gail Jeffcott, Nancy Halbiatt, and Dora Mae Hartling. Elder and Mrs. Duane Couly of Milwaukee worshipped with the branch. Elder Couly assisted in the blessing of the babies and the confirmations.

The annual vacation church school was held every forenoon June 16-21, with achievement night on June 21.

The Sunday night study class is taught by the pastor, Elder Fred Moore. The class studies the Membership Manual.

Twenty women from the branch attended the district women's institute at Milwaukee, May 24-25. Sister Blanche Mesley was the guest speaker. Apostle Mesley gave the eleven o'clock sermon.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Miller returned from Oregon City, Oregon, where they had been visiting the last five months.

A farewell party was given by the branch for Priest Glenn Price of Lincoln, Nebraska, and for Ronald Mortimore of Lamoni, Iowa, at the home of Robert H. Brigham. These two men have been attending the University of Wisconsin for the past three years. During his stay here, Glenn Price has taught in church school, given sermons, and has been church school director. Ronald Mortimore has given solos and has helped direct the singing. Glenn Price was presented with a flexible leather copy of the Holy Scriptures and Ronald Mortimore with the book, O Worship the King.—Reported by LEDA COLBERT

Zion's League Directs Service

MAPLETON, KANSAS.—On Sunday, March 9, Priest James McCollam was ordained to the office of elder by his grandfather Elder Lee Quick with Elder Arthur Dennis assisting. Alpha Jennings was ordained to the office of priest by Elders Leroy Beckham and Raymond Loar.

Most of the Saints gathered for the Easter Sunrise Service April 13, which reviewed the last few hours of Jesus' life. Elder Paul Wellington of Seattle, Washington, gave the closing remarks. He also spoke at the eight o'clock hour that evening. The district president, Elder Calvin French, delivered the sermon at the eleven o'clock hour when 147 were in attendance.

The annual vacation church school was held from May 26 to June 6, with an enrollment of fifty-six children. Most of the staff of fifteen teachers attended the institute for vacation church school workers held at Independence. Almost every morning a member of the priesthood was present to bring some very fine thoughts to the children on the subject for the day. The achievement program was given Sunday night, June 8.

June 8, Beth Clayton, Jimmy Needham and Billy Woods were baptized by Elder Arthur Dennis. The confirmation service was at eleven o'clock with Elder Arthur Dennis in charge. Jimmy Needham was confirmed by Elders Raymond Loar and James McCollam, Billy Woods by Elders Lee Quick and Arthur Dennis, and Beth Clayton by Elders Arthur Dennis and Lee Quick.

The Zion's League gave a farewell party June 9 for their leader, Berdine McCollam who was leaving after her marriage to Charles Moore on June 22. They presented her a picture of "The Last Supper," as a token of appreciation for the leadership she has rendered them the last few years.

A young people's prayer service was held at seven o'clock Sunday morning, June 15, with Elder James McCollam in charge.

A Father's Day service was held on June 15. All the fathers present were presented a white handkerchief.

June 22, the guest speaker at the morning hour was Elder Eldon Kastl, pastor of the branch at Independence, Kansas. That evening the speaker was Elder Leroy Beckham, pastor of the branch at Butler, Missouri.

The Zion's League was in charge of the morning service June 29, using as their theme "The Ordinances of the Church."

Local speakers the past few months have been Priests Joe Wellington, Joe Rei, and Alpha Jennings; Elders Arthur Dennis, James McCollam, Raymond Loar and Lee Quick.—Reported by BERDINE MCCOLLAM MOORE

District Institutes Held

MEDFORD AND GRANT'S PASS, OREGON.—An Oregon District institute was held May 30-31 at Medford and June 1 at Grant's Pass for the members in the southern part of the district.

Friday night the sermon was given by J. L. Verhei, district president. A program followed, directed by Sister James Davidson.

Saturday morning an early morning prayer service was held with Elder J. L. Verhei in charge, assisted by the district missionary, Elder Don Landon.

Classwork began at ten o'clock. At this time Elder Harold Carpenter, district church school director, instructed the priesthood; Elder Don Landon, the young people; and Sister Leona Carpenter, the women.

Following these classes a worship service was held. Sister Effie Verhei taught the women, Sister Leona Carpenter the young people, and Elder Don Landon the priesthood. At the conclusion of this class period lunch was served by the ladies of Medford and Grant's Pass.

The afternoon meetings consisted of a short business meeting, a talk by the district president, and a round table discussion. At six in the evening lunch was served. The evening service consisted of classes. The priesthood was instructed by Elder J. L. Verhei and Elder Don Landon, the women by Sister Effie Verhei.

June 1 the group met at Grant's Pass. The day began with a Communion service. Elder J. L. Verhei was in charge, assisted by Elders Harold Carpenter, Don Landon, James Davidson, Harold Crooker, John Rodley, Milton Petree, and priests—Earl Petree and Harley Davidson.

The church school hour began with a solo, "In the Garden," by one of the junior members, Jack McGiven. After this worship service the group was divided into two classes. The adults were taught by Elder Harold Carpenter and the children by Sister Murphy and Sister Petree.

At the eleven o'clock hour Elder Don Landon preached, assisted by Elders Harold Crooker, James Davidson, John Rodley, and J. Giberson. A solo, "Have Thine Own Way," was given by Margaret Lyon. The junior church was instructed by Sister Effie Verhei.

The concluding service of the institute was a picnic in the park.—Reported by LEONA CARPENTER

New Members Baptized

WRAY, COLORADO.—In September of 1951, Alfred Bullard was ordained to the office of elder.

November 25, five new members were baptized—Wilma (Mrs. Earl) Bullard, her two daughters, Joyce and Erla; and Dallas and Maxine Godsey.

The previous week Apostle D. Blair Jensen and Bishop G. L. DeLapp visited, following the district meetings in Denver. Each preached.

The October women's institute was attended by six women of the branch. The women's department have been meeting twice a month in the homes of the women, and have been studying Book of Mormon Studies, by Thelona Stevens. During the winter months the second meeting is in the evening and the husbands attend.

The Zion's League was responsible for special programs at Christmas and Easter. April 26 and 27 the Leaguers sponsored a retreat for those in this part of the district. Sunday morning there were fifty-four at the early morning prayer service. Several Leaguers attended youth camp.

The young adult class has been studying the Story of the Church, by Inez Smith Davis, and are beginning, Restoration: A Study in Prophecy, by Elbert A. Smith.

Although suffering from a severe illness C. D. Whomble was baptized by Elder Alfred Bullard, his son-in-law, on March 20. Brother Whomble died March 24.

Ten representatives attended the General Conference. Pastor and Mrs. S. F. Bullard were delegates from the Eastern Colorado District.

Upon returning from the Conference, District President Ward A. Hougas ordained Ted Zion to the office of deacon. The same day three babies were blessed—Ruby June, daughter of Roddy and Wanda Klie; Cynthia Lee, daughter of Dwight and Rosalie Wheatley; and John Dennis, son of John and Ethyle Woodruff.

On April 20 Cheryl, the five-year-old daughter of Dallas and Maxine Godsey, who had been a victim of leukemia for about a year and a half, died.

May 17 the priesthood attended an institute in Denver. In their absence the eleven o'clock hour was occupied by the League, which presented the theme, "Finding God Through Church Institutions."

Graduating high school student from the branch was Milda Wheatley. Milda plans to attend Graceland College this fall.

Since Conference Elder R. G. Gabriel has been in the branch holding cottage meetings. Following his sermon of June 8 Howard Eye-stone was baptized by Pastor S. F. Bullard.

On the evening of June 20 the branch had a family night, including a fried chicken dinner, in honor of Brother Ward A. Hougas, who preached at eight o'clock on "The Sunset World."—Reported by LETTIE B. (MRS. TED) ZION

President Smith and Australians Visit

OTTAWA, ONTARIO.—The women's department held a home baking and needlework sale May 31 under the leadership of their president, Mrs. Otto Flegel. Mr. Dan Flegel donated the use of his shop for this occasion. Proceeds from the sale amounted to about sixty dollars.

President Israel A. Smith was guest speaker, June 8. Members came from Montreal, Belleville, Kingston, Cornwall, and surrounding areas for the day's services. Elder J. McDonald of Montreal and Evangelist Swain of Sydney, Australia, took charge of the fellowship service at ten o'clock. President Smith preached at eleven and again in the evening. The topic for his morning sermon was "Witnesses for the Book of Mormon," and for the evening sermon, "Some Facts That Prove Joseph Smith a True Prophet." A symposium was held in the afternoon under the direction of Evangelist Swain with the theme, "These Things I Have Seen." Elder J. McDonald, Elder Don Swain, and President Smith gave short talks on the theme. Meals were served by the women's department in the lower auditorium.

The junior church presented a drama, "Restoration and Reorganization," on Sunday, June 15, at the church school hour. Children who took part were Bobby Smith, Carroll Flegel, Linda Smith, Gary Curtis, Donald Smith, Philip Dae, David Flegel, and Eunice Flegel.—Reported by B. MARIE FARROW

Annual Officers Elected

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.—The annual election of officers was held June 12, with District President Clinton K. Saxton present. Elder Alma M. Coombs was elected pastor; Margaret Robinson, secretary; John Pilling, treasurer; Moroni Heap and John Pilling, church school directors; Sadie Pilling, organist; and Margaret Chesworth, music director and primary department superintendent. Wilfred Brindley and Edward Rogerson are to be auditors for all financial statements.

Edgar Pillsbury has graduated and returned from Graceland College.

An auction has been planned for the fall to benefit the Auditorium fund. John Pilling, Wilfred Brindley, and Margaret Chesworth were appointed to plan finance raising and social activities. The budget for the year was adopted.

The women's department held a picnic June 19 at the home of Sister Grace Pew. The women are working on a summer project.

The church school held its annual picnic June 28 at Kinsey Beach in Lowbanks. Ninety people were present from the Niagara Falls Branch. After races were finished, the Lowbanks church school and Niagara Falls church school competed in a ball game. After this, the women's department served supper.—Reported by AUDREY V. WARE

The Passing of a Missionary

Elder William Bath was a missionary of the old school. He labored in the field in the days when missionaries walked many miles and endured many hardships to preach the gospel and minister to people. He traveled as a missionary in Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, North Dakota, Kentucky, and Tennessee. During his total ministry, which included fifteen years under General Conference appointment and many years as a local minister, he baptized over five hundred persons into the church.

During those long walks he carried the church books and memorized a wealth of Scripture, which he used effectively in his preaching. Sometimes among his friends he was called a "walking Bible." He labored in the days of tent work and street preaching. He entered the missionary field in September, 1916, and was under General Conference appointment until September, 1931.

Released as a missionary during the days of economic stress when the church was in financial difficulties, he made his adjustment and carried on his work as a local minister. Always in his ministry he was assisted by his good companion. His many friends, especially those to whom he taught the gospel, will join with Sister Bath and the family in mourning his departure.

Prayers in a Hospital Ward

By Lillian Pope Cross

WHEN MY DAD was about sixty-five years old, he had a minor nose operation performed in the doctor's office. He came home and cut the grass. I had the same kind of an operation, by the same physician, and what happened to me? I hemorrhaged all over the place and ended up in the hospital with one nostril packed until I looked like a first cousin of Jimmy Durante.

Knowing that my arrival at the hospital would be just after the supper hour, the doctor had made arrangements for a tray to be sent to me. The food looked appetizing and I thought "I'm going to enjoy this," but did I get to eat it? No! As I lifted my fork I suddenly became nauseated. I had been swallowing blood and it was most unpleasant. (There were several repeat performances between then and morning, but my timing was better and I did not miss breakfast.)

After the tray was taken away, a nurse came with two hypodermics, which the doctor had told me to expect. My husband and his sister Birdie kissed me good-by and left.

"One of these will make you drowsy," the nurse said; and it did. I knew I was not dreaming though when I heard a sweet voice reading: "The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?" Then when the Twenty-third Psalm was read, I silently said it along with the reader and felt comforted.

When the curtain was pulled back from my bed, I could see a young woman with a Bible in her hand. She had been reading to an elderly white-haired woman with a cherubic face. Both women smiled at me. The elderly one got out of bed and came over and asked how I was feeling. "I'll pray for you, my dear," she said. "Prayer always helps. I am Granny Baker," she added.

I slept for awhile, and when I awoke she was sitting up in bed and praying aloud—"And may everyone in this room sleep well tonight."

About one in the morning when I had another hypo to coagulate my blood, Granny Baker sat up in bed with her hands clasped and I felt sure she was praying again. Next day I found out she was the Granny Baker to whom a radio announcer says nightly, "Goodnight, Granny Baker. God bless you." It was nice to meet her and talk to her.

NEXT MORNING, which was Thursday, I was feeling "hard done by." My husband's sister from Ponteix, Saskatchewan, was visiting us and on Sunday we were to leave for Banff, Alberta, where we were to be the guests of my husband's brother, Dr. Wallace W. Cross, Minister of Health for the Province of Alberta, and his wife. I knew I would not be able to go on Sunday even though we had our tickets and reservations. My husband would not go without me, and he needed the holiday very much.

Friday morning the doctor removed the packing from my nostril and said to let it bleed; if it got too bad he would come back and pack it again. How I prayed the bleeding would stop, and it did in the afternoon.

Saturday I went home, but the doctor said I could not go to Banff until Tuesday. He gave me packing and applicators "just in case." I enjoyed the scenery through the Canadian Rockies, called "The Glittering Mountains" by the Indians. The town of Banff lies cradled in the mountains 4,625 feet above the level of the sea. The weather was ideal, and Dr. Cross drove us for miles and miles. Everywhere we looked we saw beauty. We drove to the Banff Springs Hotel, called the finest mountain resort in the world,

"rising like a castle in the ancient Valley of the Gods." We saw the Bow River and falls, the fish hatcheries, and with many others went to see the bears come up the mountain to get food which is dumped there. The stores and cafes stay open late in Banff, and it was interesting to mingle with the crowds.

The next day we went to Lake Louise. Its beauty is breath-taking. The lake is bordered by forest-clad mountains, and Victoria Glacier creeps down to the water's edge. Thousands of bright-colored Iceland poppies grow on the grounds of the Chateau Lake Louise, which stands "on top of the world," 5,680 feet above sea level.

On our way to Johnson Canyon the next day we saw some mountain goats. At the canyon we walked up and up, always hearing the roar of the water below. We saw lively chipmunks which seemed quite tame. Under some of the rocks we found many wild forget-me-nots, and the wild strawberries were in blossom. When we reached the falls we felt the long walk had been worth while.

WE HAD NOT BEEN BACK at the cottage long before, without a moment's warning, my nose started to bleed. When it was at its worst, two young deer came down from the mountains into the yard. I could hear the merry voices of the children who had quickly congregated and were feeding them. I could not get out to see them. I had to lie down with my head at an angle so I would not swallow blood.

I was glad my brother-in-law was a doctor and such a kind person. He knew just what to do. I was taken to the doctors' clinic where a doctor from Galway, Ireland, gave me a shot of vitamin K, told me something interesting about the writing of "Galway Bay," and sent me to the hospital.

As I walked up the steps of Banff Mineral Springs Hospital, accompanied by my husband and Dr. Cross, and my ever-present box of Kleenex, I sighed and thought, "Ah, me! Here I go again."

I did not want a private room because it would be lonely, so I was put into a four-bed room, where there was just one patient. She was a pleasant person, sixty-five years old, well educated, and a good conversationalist.

Lying in bed I could look right up a wooded mountain. From the hall window majestic Mount Rundle could be seen. Sometimes beautiful white clouds would appear at the tops of the mountains. I thought of how Christ used to go to a mountain to pray.

THE TOWN OF BANFF is truly cosmopolitan, and so is the hospital. There was a nurse from Australia, one from Norway, and one from Scotland, as well as those from various parts of Canada. The physiotherapist was from England. It was a Catholic hospital, and the sister in charge of our floor was one of the jolliest persons I have ever met. She admired a tiny two-inch bear my husband had bought for me and laughed when I told her I had named him "Hemorrhage."

Came Sunday and the doctor told me that I had to stay in the hospital until just before train time on Tuesday. The church bells rang both morning and evening, and it reminded me of my childhood in London, Ontario.

Late Monday afternoon two very plump women were brought into the room. They were "foreigners," but one spoke English fluently. Her sister, however, who was about twenty years older, did not. They spoke loudly in their own tongue, and every little while the older woman would get out of bed and walk up and down, up and down.

That night in walked a short man and a gray-haired, slightly stooped woman. The two sisters were overjoyed to see them and one said to me, "These are our friends from Biggar, Saskatchewan. Isn't that nice? They came to surprise us!" The four of them talked and talked in their native tongue. I tried not to listen, but I couldn't help thinking of what the youngsters say—"Yackity-yack." I could see the strained look on the face of the other patient who was sitting in the hall. Suddenly I realized that just one person was talking. The man was praying in an earnest voice, and the two women had their heads bowed. The spirit of reverence seemed to fill the room, and I, too, bowed my head and prayed that those people would be blessed. I thought how wonderful it is that no one is a foreigner to God. The man came to the foot of my bed and asked how I was, and as I looked into his eyes I could see they were kind and twinkling like my dad's eyes used to be. He said, "Good-by. God bless you," and his wife came over and said the same thing.

Next morning, after another shot of vitamin K, I was allowed to leave the hospital for the train with a warning to keep very quiet. The younger foreign woman said, "God bless you and keep you from having another hemorrhage on the train."

The trip home was really delightful, and I knew before too long I would be in lower altitude. The Great Divide, with an altitude of 5,380 feet, marks the boundary between Alberta and British Columbia. It is here that a glacier-fed stream, spanned by a rustic bridge, separates into two small brooks. One brook winds to Hudson Bay and on to the Atlantic Ocean. The other flows into the Pacific.

At Kicking Horse Pass the famous Spiral Tunnels bore for more than six thousand feet through rock. Entering Cathedral Mountain from the east, the railway circles down to daylight and through the second tunnel under Mount Ogden, a descent of 104 feet inside the mountains.

Wednesday morning my husband, my little bear, and I, still clutching a box of Kleenex, arrived at the coast, New Westminster, home sweet home!

It was an unusual holiday but in retrospect I find it quite interesting.

Birds

Of all the birds that visit or inhabit the Midwest, the most beautiful may be the cardinal. At least he would be a high-ranking contender for first honors. In the early morning he arrives at a neighboring tree to pay his respects to his friend and companion. He inspects the area, and his crest rises like a helmet. Then he chirps brightly that it is safe for her to come out. She emerges, her colors much quieter, softer, and daintier than his brilliant red. She is a little queen of the bird world, perfect and adorable. . . . One thinks in wonder and awe of the Power and Intelligence responsible for this perfection and beauty. Who could be so dull and foolish as to ascribe the perfection of these little creatures to chance or accident? To the reverent heart, every good thing in nature is a proof of the work of God.

Service on the Home Front

By Virginia Hardy

THE TWO BIG QUESTIONS facing most career-minded high school graduates are what and where. I had known for a long time what I wanted to be—in fact ever since I was four years old. It was then that I had my first experience with hospital life, and I didn't like it. Because I was frightened by the nurse who cared for me before I had my tonsils out, I resolved to be a nurse when I grew up so that I could be kind to little children who were hospitalized. I knew, too, that even though our home was in Oregon, I would come to the Sanitarium for training; so, in September, 1949, I enrolled as a student nurse here. Along with my work at the Sanitarium I studied pediatrics for three months at Mercy Hospital in Kansas City, Missouri, and spent another three months on psychiatric nursing affiliation at the state sanitarium in St. Louis.

The question of where I should serve after graduation has often come to my mind, bringing with it the possibilities of overseas assignments. As I heard of the pathetic need for medical treatment in the South Sea Islands, I wondered if my hands might not minister best where leprosy and elephantiasis claim hundreds of lives yearly. I thought, too, about the war-torn lands where children with bodies weakened by malnutrition become easy victims of tuberculosis. Maybe in Africa, where the church has yet to take the gospel story, I could serve best by

Here Is the Writer . . .

VIRGINIA HARDY, who will be graduated from the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing in September, is a native of Portland, Oregon, where she was baptized in 1939. She is an active member of the Walnut Park Zion's League in Independence, and—when she has time—enjoys playing the piano and singing. Before coming to Independence she attended First Church in Portland.

preparing the way for spiritual help by helping to heal first the physical ills. Or perhaps the best thing to do, I reasoned, would be to work in a doctor's office. There I would contact many people and try to be the kind of representative the church would be pleased to have meet the public. There, too, I would have Sundays free to help at church.

A few weeks ago my speculation ended. In a flash of sudden inspiration I realized that for me the best thing to do is to stay right where I am, because here at the San I can make my religion live each day—Sundays included—for the patients who are in my care. I might not have seen my duty so clearly had it not been for Mr. V.

SHORTLY AFTER LUNCH on May 7, Mr. V and a co-worker were moving steel beams with a large crane. They had done this sort of work often and were confident of their aim as they guided the beams from boxcar to stock pile—but they had failed to notice the high line overhead. When the crane contacted the wire, 33,000 volts of electricity charged down the metal framework and snuffed out the life of the man at the controls. Mr. V. wasn't killed, but second and third degree burns covered 95 per cent of his body. At the Sanitarium he was given all the aid medical science is capable of giving, yet two physicians shook their heads as they left the room saying he wouldn't live till morning. Outside his wife and several relatives looked blankly at the wall and at the future. It had happened so suddenly they weren't quite able to believe that it had happened at all. "He's so young to die," one said. "How can I get along without him?" his wife asked, and nobody answered.

As they sat there, wondering, Chaplain Almer Sheehy asked them if they had ever read the passage in the Bible which tells of God's concern for those who suffer. He read to them: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord." Then he asked if they would like for him to administer to their loved one. They said they would appreciate anything anyone could do to relieve his suffering, so Chaplain Al placed his hands gently on Mr. V's head and asked God's blessing on him.

Three days later the doctors again predicted that death was inevitable. At the end of the sixth day a puzzled physician looked at the chart and wrote, "The patient is still alive!" Eight days passed before Mr. V's seared body gave up the struggle for life. We who kept anxious watch would have liked a happier climax, but we are glad for one thing. The people who eight days before had felt they couldn't face this loss were able to look without bitterness toward the future. "Thanks for all you have done," they said. "The very atmosphere of this hospital is different than any we've ever been in. We are deeply grateful for your help and for your prayers."

It was then that I suddenly realized what opportunities I have to help build Zion here in the Sanitarium. If through genuine concern, conscientious service, and prayer I can bring people a little closer to God as I care for them, then I ask for no greater mission. I am challenged to give the best I have right where I am.

Youth and Christ

By Stanley Leonard

Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

—John 8: 12

"Behold, he sendeth an invitation to all men."¹ The words of Alma ring down to us in the present as a message of hope and strength in this world of doubt, fear, and insecurity. It gives to all of us an opportunity for Christlike living; an opportunity for increased unity and fellowship in the spirit of light and truth. A way has been opened and lies ahead if we will but receive and answer the invitation in our lives.

Young people today are increasingly being put under pressure as they grow into maturity. The words, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God,"² have become, "Seek ye last," as young people are constantly crowded by the demands of society on their time and lives. The complexities of world situations have begun to cast out a universal concept of God in their hearts and minds.

In the time of Christ the known and understood world was much smaller than it is today. The lives and interests of the youth then were centered and developed in the family. Contact and accommodations into society were more gradual and not categorized into set educational periods of development according to the plans of the "modern" world. This problem confronts youth: Where is Christ today? Is he in the period from the first to the eighth grades? Does he begin to exist after graduation from high school or college? Can his influence upon youth continue and grow at every age? The statement, ". . . and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened,"³ presents itself as one of many possible answers to the question, where is Christ today? The influence of Christ is found in those who seek after it; that influence is a sign within them. The signs of strong character, hope, charity, love, and faith are constantly shown by Christlike living throughout life. Youth must find this influence of Jesus today so that preparation for tomorrow will be complete.

Christ is where we find him. We can assist each other in our searches but the ultimate goal has to be found within us as individuals. Nobody can find him for someone else; a seed is planted, but it grows from within. Everyone has the opportunity to find him because he has given an invitation to all men.

THE PROBLEM which arises next is, "Are the young people of the church prepared?" Prepared for what? Are they prepared to receive, understand, and answer this invitation?

In the beginning God was—but not so with man, for he was brought about through careful consideration, planning, and spiritual enlightenment. Young people from the beginning must be taught of the love of Christ in order that an appreciation of the invitation will be developed through a mutual love with Jesus. After the reception of the invitation in the spirit of mutual love, the time for understanding will not present itself as an obstacle to be overcome, but as a goal to be sought after and realized throughout life. As understanding grows, the answer will form in the character of thinking and doing at every age.

As a young person matures his concepts of life change and his character develops. There is one element, however, that is necessarily growing but never changing to the point of its culmination in life—that is his personal relationship with Christ today.

Youth cannot forget Christ. Jesus was conscious of his duty and relationship with his Heavenly Father all of his life. He grew in relationship to God and man. So must young people grow in relation to Christ and their fellow-men. Their love and understanding for each other grows as they come to know each other better.

Young people have the greatest opportunity of all to know and love God and Christ and correlate this love with an understanding of man and the world about them. The thought, "I live in a universe that I consider has personal forces inherent in it; I live through adjustment to this universe,"⁴ must be a conscious reality.

Do young people look for the responsibility of sharing the solution to this problem of adjusting to the universe about them with God's help? The answer to this question again can be answered only by the individual. The responsibility of sharing is ever present. Latter Day revelation says:

Behold, you have not understood; you have supposed that I would give it unto you, when you took no thought, save it were to ask me; but, behold, I say unto you, that you must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me.⁵

AS WE WORK TOGETHER with God we grow in love and comprehension of his works and his personal relationship to us.

An unbalanced relationship between God and ourselves might cause the branches of our life's tree to grow greater than the roots and become top-heavy in the light of our own limited understanding. This opens the way for deterioration and fall, because we have tried to outdo the roots which have supported us in faith and strength—the roots and foundations of the love which God and Christ offer us and their message in the universe. Growth must take place evenly and in balanced proportions as we share the responsibility of building life with God's help.

Ever looming up through the present are the possibilities of the future. Do young people have faith in the future? Has the presence of God and Christ in the lives of young people been realized to an extent where faith will form confidence and assurity in seeking goals for the times which lay ahead?

The greatest aid to the culmination of life's goals and ambitions rests in the moral and religious obligations which we must carry out with a faith in God's universe and the love of Christ before us. It is a source of strength, not of weakness; a light, not a shadow. It is a challenge of great proportions, not an escape for the weak-willed. God wants strong people—strong in mind, strong in spirit, and strong in the faith that his will be done.

The young people of the church must answer to the hour. They must be prepared to share responsibility and have faith in the laws of God, the universe, and their own lives, strengthened by the love of Christ and a mutual understanding of their personal relationship with him.

LEAGUES PRESENT OPERETTA

July 8, 10, 11, and 12 Independence Zion's Leagues united to perform Gilbert and Sullivan's "H.M.S. Pinafore." This third annual operetta was held at the Campus. Leading soloists were Esther Salonimer, Roy Stearns, Bob Sparks, and Mrs. Shirley Petterson. Other cast members were Oliver Houston, Rex Boos, Don Potts, Mary Lou Haskins, Prudy Harper, and Charles Hield. Mrs. Alta G. Seal was responsible for the sets. Franklyn S. Weddle was music director; Stanley Leonard, conductor; Marion Davis and Margaret McKevit, dramatic directors; and Floyd J. Hubble, production manager. Members of the orchestra and chorus were chosen from the city-wide Zion's Leagues.

CORRECTION

In the second paragraph of "News and Notes" in the July 7 issue of the "Herald" it is stated that Apostle Gleazer reported "almost 100 per cent participation in the Southern California District." This was a mistake. Apostle Gleazer reported almost 100 per cent participation at the "priesthood institute" of the Southern California District.

 THE TRIVET

There have been many good reproductions of early American furniture, dishes, silverware, and household things. Among them are the quaint little black iron trivets that our ancestors used to put under hot dishes at the table.

One that we wanted features the American Eagle. He is rather squat, his feathers look heavy, and his beak could have been borrowed from a parrot. However, he is recognizable as an eagle, and that's something. We must remember that he was very young when this picture was made. Since then he has lost his comical look, and has become big, strong, and very stern.

Only one thing troubles us. A trivet means a three-footed thing. But this has four. How can it be a trivet? We could, properly, call it a quadruped, but most people would think of an animal. Any suggestions?

 ANOTHER HEART

It is good to cultivate the Bible. You turn up so many interesting things. I found this one the other day, "God gave him another heart."—1 Samuel 14: 13.

What a boon that would be to a physician specializing in heart trouble! Suppose when the little pump shows signs of wearing out your doctor could say to you, "I think we had better put in a new one. How would a week from Tuesday do?" But such things are reserved for the Lord.

Many people do not know that the Lord can give us another heart. Not the physical one, of course, but a state of soul. We are bound to the old griefs, fears, prejudices, and limitations. If we can open the windows of the heart toward heaven, it can be made new. And a change in the state of our soul may even enable an injured heart to beat many years longer. We had better overlook no chance to keep the little pump going, because we die when it stops.

Is your heart full of bad feeling—old hates, old troubles, old wounds? Do you dislike too many people? Are you worried and afraid? Are you always stirring up wrath wherever you go? Do enemies and opposition arise to block your path whatever way you turn?

Do not trouble God by praying for him to change all of these circumstances. It would do no good, even if he answered your prayers. The trouble is within you. Pray that you may be changed. Pray that God may give you another heart, as he did Saul.

Automobiles caused almost two million casualties in the United States in 1951, the worst year in our history for safety.

Traffic deaths totaled 37,100. You could have been one of the dead. You could have caused one of the deaths.

The injury score was 1,962,600. One of them could have been you. You could have caused one of them.

The record of death and injury from cars impresses upon us the necessity for more thought and care in driving.

Wilbur
Ihde

VERSATILITY is the greatest quality required in the person holding the job of building superintendent at the Auditorium. The possessor of such a trait is Wilbur Ihde, who came to Independence last December to serve in the capacity of superintendent of the huge Auditorium.

Bill has plenty of experience to fulfill the technical requirements of the position. He was in the heating and electrical appliance business in Park Falls, Wisconsin, for a number of years prior to moving to the Center Place. During the war he served as a civilian consultant with the Army Engineers in Alaska.

But it requires more than technical know-how to successfully do a maintenance job at the Auditorium. A good understanding of human nature, cheerful personality, and implicit faith and devotion to the church are equally as important. Bill not only directs a sizeable staff of maintenance workers but is constantly in contact with office personnel and General Church officers whose offices are housed by the Auditorium. Their tasks are made lighter by the genial attitude and spirit of co-operation which seem a very natural part of Bill Ihde's personality.

Bill was baptized in 1944 in Wisconsin, where he was born and reared. He was ordained to the office of priest two years ago and, with his wife (the former Zion Steede) and two children, attends and works in the Liberty Street congregation.

News and Notes

NEWS FROM PRESIDENT SMITH

A letter from President Israel A. Smith written from Copenhagen, Denmark, July 8, has been received by the First Presidency. President Smith writes that he, Apostle Arthur A. Oakman, and Bishop Henry L. Livingston were met by Sister Tinning and husband Orla on their arrival at Copenhagen. The group left for Germany July 10. They arrived in Berlin from Hamburg on July 11, and were greeted very happily by the Saints. Apostle Oakman preached the evening of July 12, and Bishop Livingston and President Smith were the speakers on July 13. The week following their work centered in Hamburg. All three members of the party were deeply impressed with the work of rehabilitation done under extremely adverse conditions, and particularly with the fine record being made by the Saints.

W. W. SMITH ON WEST COAST

President W. Wallace Smith left Lake Doniphan, near Excelsior Springs, Missouri, where the Center Stake reunion is being held, July 13, for the West. He will attend reunions on the Pacific coast for the remainder of the month, with his first objective the Pacific Palisades reunion.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS AT STONE CHURCH

President F. Henry Edwards preached at the Stone Church July 13 at both morning services. The topic of his sermon was "Freedom and Responsibility Under God." During the following week, he was the only remaining member of the First Presidency in Independence. He attended the first week end of the Ozarks reunion at Racine, Missouri, which was held July 19-27.

CHAIRMAN OF CITY PLANNING COMMISSION

Ronald Smith, son of Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, has been appointed chairman of the Pittsburg, Kansas, City Planning Commission. Ronald received his doctor's degree in mathematics from Kansas University in 1930, and since that time he has been an instructor at Pittsburg State Teacher's College, where he is also head of the mathematics department.

RETURNS TO DESK

After a prolonged illness from virus infection, Chris B. Hartshorn, managing editor of the Herald Publishing House, returned to his desk Monday, July 14. He is only able to work part time for the present.

NEBRASKA YOUTH CAMPS HELD

Elder Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, returned to work July 14 after two weeks at youth camps at Fremont, Nebraska, where he served as camp director. Brother Neff reports excellent response at both camps. Other appointees on his staff included Elder Frank Fry, Elder Sylvester Coleman, and Elder Les Gardner.

FIRST CANADIAN YOUTH CAMP HELD

The first Canadian youth camp held at Port Elgin, Ontario, the week of June 29-July 6 was highly successful, according to Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, who served as camp co-ordinator. Seventy-one campers and sixteen leaders attended from the four Ontario districts and unorganized territory.

This Is God's Business

"I must be about my Father's business."

—Jesus to his parents.

HAD YOU EVER THOUGHT of God as a businessman? The idea offers a whole parcel of stimulating possibilities. Some of them may be disturbing. When Jesus said, "I must be about my Father's business," he did not mean shops or factories. It was a business of the redemption of souls.

No human mind has ever been great enough to survey the total business operations of God. His industrial empire is too vast. Let's just say that, among other things, God has a business.

Every Sunday, ministers mount their pulpits to offer advice to the world. Men of business get at least their share of attention. Of course, the advice is not always heeded. To reject advice is an indispensable condition of a free world. We are told to preach the gospel, not to enforce it.

In reciprocation, thoughtful businessmen sometimes offer advice to the church. We could learn some good lessons from business and businessmen. But the advice is not always understood, not always heeded. The same freedom is involved. Nobody should be angry about it. Giving advice, for many people, is a harmless recreation. Avoiding it is a game. "I told him," is a phrase often used by an advisor who was wrong anyway.

In the gospel work, all we can expect is that people consider. "Consider your ways," said the prophet of the Lord to ancient Israel. The gospel contains many admonitions, as well as commandments.

BACK, NOW, to the business of the Lord. A good principle of business is to welcome the customer and make him feel glad that he came.

Has it ever occurred to you that worshipers at church are customers? Customers, shopping around for salvation, for soul comfort, for wisdom, for order and peace and happiness in their lives. They come to see if you have what they want. If they like what you have to offer, they may buy some of it. If they like your establishment very well, they may even take out a life membership and leave a standing order for your services.

A good business and a wise businessman will try to please the customer. Think of that the next time visitors attend your church.

I ONCE WENT into a store. It was well stocked with many things that I wanted. Some I would want that day. Others I would want later—when other pay checks had arrived. It was a good store, but something was lacking—customers. I was the only one.

Then, when the owner came forward, I learned why there were no customers. He had a grieved, angry look. The last visitor had bought nothing. As he looked at me, I knew what he was thinking. He had already decided that I would buy nothing, like the last man. And he was defiant about it. I fooled him. He was a little surprised when I bought something, but not for long.

His mind was already on the next visitor, who wouldn't buy anything. He didn't thank me; he didn't like me. I never went back. Frankly, I have never been in any church so poorly operated as that store. But we could take warning from the example of that man.

The most important thing in a store is customers. The most important thing in a church (physical equipment, I mean) is people. Good business says that we must keep them happy. Good church practice would say that too.

GOD GOES TO CHURCH. Why? To meet his people. Of course it is true that when you go into your church alone you are likely to find that he has preceded you there and has a blessing waiting for you. But do you suppose that he wastes much time waiting around empty churches? Probably not. He has bigger temples in which to find the setting of his life than any we can build. Why was God there in the church waiting for you? He probably knew you were coming. It is in church, among other places, that God transacts his business with his people. The church is a place of business—spiritual business.

Parents and children have business with each other. Children need parents to protect and support them. Parents need children to love and serve: it is a part of the richness and happiness of life. . . . God is our Father, and we have business with him. We need him very much, all the time. Apparently we satisfy some need that exists in his great soul: he needs us to love and serve, or he would never have made us. I am trying to put it reverently and truly. That is the way I believe it is. We have business with God. He has business with us. He is about his business, and has been always. We must be about it too. L.J.L.

Church Broadcasts in Europe

Recent activities of the Radio Department have broadened the scope of our ministry in Europe, particularly in Germany.

Through contacts initiated by Seventy Eugene Theys, we made available several recordings for devotional services to be broadcast to the armed forces in Germany. Those programs were so well received that Chaplain Elvin A. Burgess, who has a place of responsibility in scheduling such services, has provided us a regular spot on the broadcasts heard on the list of stations given below.

These recordings, like others which are available for broadcast anywhere, were made by the radio department. Included in each program recorded are music by the Stone Church choir and organist Bethel Knoche, prayer, Scripture, and a devotional message by Arthur Rock or Evan Fry. The name of the church and the name of the speaker are clearly announced.

Requests are already coming from the citizens of Europe for copies of the talks. One arrived recently from Switzerland.

The following schedule is printed for the convenience of European Saints, and for Americans who may have friends or relatives in Europe to whom they will want to mail such information. Our program can be heard sometime during the week on each of these stations.

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

In a letter received by the Presidency from Major General Ivan L. Bennett, Chief of Chaplains of the United States Army, is a statement which will be of wide interest. General Bennett says:

There is a new concern on the part of commanders which comes to light in many ways. One commanding officer included the following comment in his indorsement of the Chaplain's Monthly Report:

"Apparently I have about 550 men who admit no religious affiliation. I should consider it a very wholesome triumph if these individuals were convinced of the true reason for living."

By those words the Commanding Officer clearly and concisely evidences his sense of command responsibility in the promotion of religion and morality in the Army. He publicly pronounces that he is well aware of the importance of a healthy religious and spiritual environment for his men that will make a strong appeal to their instincts by giving them a "true reason for living."

"Prepare for That Which Is to Come"

Scripture: Doctrine and Covenants
1: 3, 6.

By Gerald Gabriel

THE OPENING SECTION of our book of modern day revelation "sounds off" as with the blast of a trumpet warning men to be "prepared for that which is to come" against the day "when peace shall be taken from the earth." If my recollection of history is correct, the latter has been fulfilled, for since 1861 there has been continuous war or a threat of it in some area of the civilized world. War, like a dreadful contagion, tends to spread instead of diminish, until a means is found by which there can be built up a power to resist.

The Korean war has proved greater than many of us wish to admit. In the first year there was a loss of 3,000 more in death and 12,500 more in casualties than the first year of war with Japan. War, however, is only one of the many things we must be prepared for. This should be a time of rejoicing as well as a time of preparedness—for by these happenings we know that His coming is nigh. If we are prepared, we need have no fear.

Ten Years Ahead

General Marshall has warned us that we must be prepared for at least ten years of tension. As the church of Christ, we must be prepared for this very important ten-year period which shall determine the destiny of the church and, in turn, the destiny of the world. For, as in former times, the leadership of the church is the salt of the earth—a preservative. The governor of Pennsylvania predicted some time ago that only 10 per cent of our civilization would be alive in the next five years. Knowing the destructive power of the atom bomb, we readily agree that it is not impossible. However, when the "anger of the Lord is kindled," it is possible that an atomic explosion (heard and felt only a few miles) will be mere "pop gun" warfare. When Krakatoa erupted in the East Indies the noise was heard 3,000 miles, and ocean waves reached four continents. Red hot debris covered an area the size of Texas, dust fell from the air for a year, and in some areas it was 100 feet deep. Nearly 36,000 people died as a result of it, despite the fact there were no major cities in the immediate vicinity.

Russia?

We must be prepared for whatever Russia plans to do. We are not certain what that will be. Her policy is not one of war, but we know it is not one of peace either. She first weakens a country economically, as she is doing to the United States today, leaving stratification in the society of that country—a few wealthy and many poor. Her second step is to go underground and begin to teach "all things in common," which results in internal strife. (You will note there is a distinct difference in "all things in common" and "all things common" as taught by the church in the Book of Acts. The third step is external pressure directed by Russia—but her active satellites are the tools for this pressure. By just such methods she has brought hundreds of millions of people under her control since the outbreak of World War II.

Morality in the United States

Moral corruption—both in individuals and the government—seems to boil to the surface in periods of war and economic prosperity. Our tendency, now, seems to be toward that of finding a scapegoat. If we can fasten the evil upon some person, party, group, or movement, it helps us to escape our own sense of participation. Finding an adequate scapegoat makes the accuser feel a sense of release and self-righteous justification in his own eyes.

Are we ourselves much superior to those who break laws or live just within the law? Are we honest with the grocer when he gives us too much change? Are we fair with our income tax reports and tithing statements? Have we told little white lies to collect insurance for some damage to your car, home, or other property. The crux of the whole situation is in the moral attitude of the American people toward the government. To many of us the government is fair game, and we have a right to all we can get, honestly or otherwise. Perhaps we do not like to admit it, but we may actually live on several ethical levels at the same time.

As for the level of individual relationships most of us have respect for our friends' and neighbors' property and try to meet the doctor and grocery bill, but when it comes to the level of corporate contacts, are we considerate? Damage to telephone and railroad or other rich corporations we view a little differently. Perhaps we or our sons have at one time or another shot at the glass insulators on the telephone poles. Did we stop to think that they might be someone's property? Our ethical standards take a drop. Our attitude is the same toward insurance. "Get all we can get" is the rule.

We seem to think it not too sinful to hide some income and inflate some exemptions to keep from paying income tax. We drop again in our ethical standards on the level of government contacts. We think it's smart to get by in cheating the government. It is no sin if we can get away with it. The immediate rewards are our goals.

Land of Milk and Honey

Our country is rich in promises (conditional), economic goods, and hopes for the future. At present it is seemingly a paradise as compared with other countries; yet we should remember that Adam and Eve were driven from their paradise because of misuse of those things entrusted to their care.

Pride

We must be prepared for a fall because we are full of pride. A false sense of security is ever present in our nation. In both the 1950 and 1948 General Conferences mention was made of the people of Laodicea. Is our situation comparable to that of the Laodiceans? Do we have pride in our own wealth, possessions, power? Do we take pride in our humility, learning, skill, or in being a "chosen vessel"? The sin of the Samaritans was the worship of idols—pride in the workmanship of their own hands; idols of gods of their own imagination. The golden era recorded in the Book of Mormon was followed by a downfall because the people failed to keep pride from their hearts, during which time all productive capacity was devoted to war—leaving them exposed to famine, pestilences, disease, and other ravages of battle.

Security?

Out of our false sense of security we may think we cannot be invaded. However, some of our experts tell us that about two-thirds of our population is centered in less than seventy-five major industrial cities, which are ideal targets for the atomic or similar bombs. Other experts say that if Russia attacks by plane the best we can expect to do is to stop two or three planes out of every ten—leaving seven or eight to get through.

Does our standard of living give us a false sense of security? Health, sanitation, home comforts, good industrial working conditions, efficient transportation and communication, recreation, entertainment, progressive arts and sciences serving our every need, the partial control of the elements, the social program for the aged, unemployed, the widow, and unfortunates, and the ever-normal granary for storing the fruits of the land—tend to make us feel that all is well and will continue to be well.

Righteousness?

We must be prepared for a fall due to a false sense of self-righteousness. Jesus had a way of making the Pharisees "squirm" in this regard. At its last conference one stake reported thirty-seven marriages and five divorces. We know of other churches whose records compare with this. Not long ago I heard a testimony from one of our members that was on this order: "We are almost righteous enough to have Zion." How do our lives compare with the Christ? Do we like to boast of Reorganized Latter Day Saint accomplishments? "For unto whom much is given, much is required; and he who sins against the greater light shall receive the greater condemnation." Apostle Arthur Oakman once said, "The soul that imagines it is saved is not even safe."

Brethren, What Shall We Do?

This question was once asked of Peter. His answer was,

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying save yourselves from this untoward generation.

Our change must be away from this "untoward generation" and "toward" God. We have attempted almost everything else, and to a measure some attempts have been successful; now it seems that all governments that are not "upon His shoulders" will collapse. Repentance is our only solution.

Fear Only God

The promise has been given that no power shall stay the hand of God in the accomplishment of his purposes among his people; and as the church shall move forward in its great work, the fulfillment of prophecy may cause the Saints to tremble at the exhibition of divine power, yet they shall rejoice in the protection of his grace.—Doctrine and Covenants 135: 3.

It is not an easy matter for people to change their ways unless there is a driving force within, but the conditions of the day in which we live should motivate us if we have any faith at all in the prophets of the past as well as present-day prophets. Children take great pleasure in climbing ladders. In many cases they do very well on the ascent, but the moment they look down and realize their distance from the ground they become fearful and dizzy. Some adults have the same reaction when looking from the window of a tall building. Death is only a few inches from us every day as we travel the highways. If we allow fear to possess us—and it does sometimes happen—sudden destruction is ours. A friend had the habit of throwing up her hands and screaming when in a "tight spot." Her response would probably have been the same had she ever driven a car in downtown traffic. Fear can, and often does, create disaster. The day in which we live calls for self-control.

Know God

We must know God and understand his purposes in us. Paul tells us that God is not the author of confusion, so it seems very important we know more about God. A lawyer says that the best evidence one can obtain is circumstantial. We do not

Every American A Parent

By Milton Lomask

Reprinted from the January, 1952, "Kiwanis Magazine" by permission of the editor.

WHAT happened to a fourteen-year-old boy in Poughkeepsie, New York, last winter happens to boys of all ages all over the country all the time—sometimes with, but more often without, the happy ending. What happened was this:

The boy—call him Jim—went out one evening with some older lads who were drinking. Jim was a Boy Scout. When the bottle came to him, he waved it aside.

"Drink up," he was told, "or you're chicken!"

Apparently Jim hesitated. He knew he shouldn't, but . . . How long can a fourteen-year-old stand up against the taunts of older companions? At length Jim "drank up." He drank a fifth of the stuff, slept it off in a snowbank, and landed in a local hospital, where Dr. Thomas Shannon, making his morning rounds, found him in a critical condition with frozen feet.

That's what happened. Now for the happy ending:

Dr. Shannon happened to be chairman of the special projects committee recently set up by the Poughkeepsie Kiwanis Club to help troubled boys. Acting in this capacity, Dr. Shannon got in touch with two fellow Kiwanians: A. E. Richards, president of the club, and Ralph Waterman, a Boy Scout leader.

Together they dug into Jim's background. They found that he was not associating with the right boys. They switched him to a group that was right for him. They found that he badly needed the companionship of boys who not only knew right from wrong, as he himself did, but who had the courage and poise to live accordingly. They saw to it that such boys visited Jim at the hospital and became his friends.

Thanks to his "sleeping it off" in a snowbank, Jim's feet will give him trouble all his life. Thanks to the special projects committee of the Poughkeepsie club, Jim's feet are on the right path now.

That's the story, ending and all. Now for the moral:

The causes of increasing juvenile delinquency may be as complex as the experts say, but the cure is simple: more action of the Poughkeepsie type.

The presiding justice of the country's second oldest juvenile court expresses it well. "The cure for a good deal of juvenile delinquency," says Judge John J. Connelly of Boston, "is written in such big, simple words that every citizen can read them, understand them—and act on them if he isn't too lazy to do so. We adults have got to give our kids more continuous, personal supervision."

"We adults"—are who? Parents? Yes. Judge Connelly thinks many parents should give their children more supervision than they do. But ours is an intricate civilization. Parents can control only a small portion of their children's environment. They can control absolutely only the home and immediate neighborhood. Beyond the boundaries of these the community must step in and lend a hand. The church must help, the schools, the civic organizations. Today every citizen must help bring up his neighbor's kids. Today every American must be a parent.

In 1947 Governor Earl Warren set up a special crime study commission on juvenile delinquency in California. Two years later the commission handed down its report in a green booklet containing eighty pages of specific recommendations. All eighty pages boiled down to one major point: Today parents cannot go it alone. The community must give them social support. The community must provide the family with an environment favorable to the success of its ideals.

The California commission on delinquency, reported the New York Times, "does not question the idealism of the American family. It is sure of it. It speaks of the American family as having 'an abundance of moral stamina.' But for the family to do its part in an urbanized, complex society, the commission says, it must not be left to itself."

IN THE LAST couple of decades juvenile delinquency has burgeoned in this country behind a smoke screen of misleading statistics. The number of juvenile court cases has fallen by almost fifty per cent. This decrease, however, does not reflect the real situation. Court cases are down because more and more delinquents are being kept out of court and sent instead to child guidance centers, resident training institutions, and the like. Court statistics show, notwithstanding, actual delinquency has increased.

It has also altered its character. Twenty years ago, nine out of ten youthful offenders were from underprivileged neighborhoods. Slum-encircled Billy stole something because he needed it or by way of "getting revenge" on an "unfair fate." Today Billy is very likely to be the son of the local minister or the local banker. More and more second-generation crimes are being committed by children from the "best-regulated homes.

Fifteen-year-old Frederick H. belonged to one of the most respected families in his small Pennsylvania city. Father owned the local dairy. Mother was active in her church guild. Oldest of his four big brothers was a decorated hero of World War II. When people moved into the long-empty house next door, Frederick was delighted to find himself with three new companions of his own age.

He was also delighted with his new friends' big library of comic books. Pretty soon Frederick and his new pals were having adventures comic-book style. One adventure involved kidnapping the five-year-old daughter of a florist, an activity which so annoyed the constabulary that Frederick and Company landed in juvenile court.

FOURTEEN-YEAR-OLD Peter's "life of crime" lasted longer. He, too, had as fine a family as you could ask—except that his parents were a little too busy—papa with his lodge and mamma with her clubs. In the summer of 1950 a hitch occurred in plans to send Peter to camp. Restless and bored, Peter joined a kid gang down the street called the Slap-happys.

The Slap-happys were elaborately organized. One member's older brother was a college fraternity man, so the Slap-happys followed the fraternity system. First Peter had to serve a pledge-ship. Then he took an initiation. As a part of this he was required to demonstrate his skill in shoplifting. Peter came through with flying colors—and five low-value items from a local department store.

His fellow Slap-happys patted him on the back. Peter had done them proud. Naturally Peter liked this admiration from his teen-age friends. He decided to really dazzle them. This time he got caught—behind the wheel of someone else's car!

HUNDREDS OF SUCH STORIES can be culled from juvenile court and child guidance center files. But you get the idea. Mix the incidents in a hat, pick out one or a dozen, and you get the same formula time after time: Boy learns right from wrong at home. Boy, left too much to his own devices, falls in with some organization of bids un-blessed by adult supervision. Boy goes off the track.

Sometimes he leaves the track because of parental neglect. Just as often he leaves it because of community neglect. Either way, the child is the victim of conflicting ideals. At home, at school, at church, in his adult-guided clubs, he is taught that right should be done and wrong avoided. At these places he is also taught that as the citizen of a democracy he should be co-operative and go along with other people.

A sensible adult has no trouble distinguishing between these two ideals, each of which is perfectly sound in its way. An adult knows that doing right is a moral principle, whereas going along with the crowd in a co-operative spirit is merely a social principle. When moral principle clashes with social, the responsible, God-fearing adult knows that the moral principle should prevail.

A kid is likely to be confused. He is likely to follow the social principle—to go along with the crowd, even though the crowd is going the wrong direction.

Religious leaders say the answer is more emphasis on moral principle and less on social. Very few Americans would argue with this. It is sound, but it is not the whole answer. The California delinquency study and a similar national survey, recently undertaken at the instigation of the attorney general, indicate that no matter how much moral training a child receives, he still may go off the track when left to his own devices.

KIDS THEMSELVES are frequently aware of this. Not long ago a seventeen-year-old Key Club governor was asked to address his home-town Kiwanis Club. He gave the assembled Kiwanians a moral hotfoot.

"Gentlemen," he said, "two years ago you set up a Key Club in my school. You did a good job, and I saw a lot of you in those days. Then you vanished. Today is the first time in two years that I've set eyes on any full-grown, living Kiwanian with the exception of one who has to be around because he's the principal of the high school!"

The young man won some chuckles from his audience, but he wasn't trying to be funny. He was speaking, as only a kid can, in dead earnest. He was hoisting an SOS: "Gentlemen, we, the kids, need you, the adults. Come play with us. Come work with us. Come help us find jobs and hobbies and skills. Come teach us how to be good co-operative citizens without abandoning our moral principles. Don't just set up a club and then walk off, congratulating yourselves on having done your good deed for the year. Stick around. Do your good deed all year long. We need your personal attention!"

In his heart, every delinquent or near-delinquent kid in the United States is making that same eloquent plea.

When "we adults" leave children to their own devices, we soon cease to be the major influence in their lives. For the youngsters this creates a social vacuum into which something else must flow. As a rule that "something else" is other kids. Throughout delinquency-haunted America today, kids are exerting too much influence on kids, an influence unrestrained by adult guidance. As an editor of this magazine has it, "delinquency is no longer a problem of misbehavior, but of massbehavior."

TWENTY YEARS AGO almost all juvenile misdeeds were done by individuals. Billy stole a car on his own or with the help of a buddy or two. Mary trod the primrose path in the company of a few girl friends. Today most juvenile delinquency is organized. The kid-gang is its newest and most vicious aspect, a direct result of permitting kids to exert too much influence on each other.

In Brooklyn, New York, a year or so ago, one kid-gang became so powerful that the high school authorities could not put on a dance without using an orchestra recommended by the gang! Members of the Parent-Teachers Association had to go to meetings in a body to avoid serious molestation! One of the finest neighborhoods was terrorized for hours because the member of one gang, a "co-educational" outfit, dated a girl who belonged to a rival organization!

Recently the Brooklyn situation has been eased by the so-called "detached worker" plan of the New York City Youth Board. Under this plan a trained social worker joins some kid-gang, gains the confidence of its leaders, and endeavors to direct its activities into healthy channels.

A similar procedure has worked with considerable success in the industrial suburbs of Chicago. The midwestern scheme was laid out some twenty years ago by Clifford R. Shaw of the Illinois Institute for Juvenile Research. Under Shaw's scheme, social workers are rarely if ever used. Instead, a private citizen, himself often an ex-juvenile delinquent, ingratiates his way into some kid organization and seeks to redirect its activities. In some Chicago suburbs this method has cut delinquency as much as seventy-five per cent.

Tax-supported social workers are doing it in Brooklyn.

Self-sacrificing private citizens are doing it in the Chicago suburbs.

A Kiwanis club is doing it in Poughkeepsie, New York.

Who's doing it in your town?

Who is there to do it? Nobody but you, of course. Okay, Friend, get goin'!

Daughter of the Pioneers

The Autobiography of Christiana Stedman Salyards

PART IV

Childhood Days

While Grandfather was engaged in missionary work I was passing through the successive stages of childhood and early youth. Some fragmentary memories of those days remain with me, and I recall the zest with which I played out in the sunshine with other children—not with elaborate contrivances but with the simple things nature provides, aided by the active and inventive imagination of children.

I remember the visits of uncles and aunts who came to see us in cumbersome lumber wagons. I cried when they went away, because I wanted them with us always, and my unrestrained grief made it hard for the older ones to part. When I reflect upon the intensity of a child's emotions I regard it as a merciful provision of nature that he cannot concentrate for a long period on one thing.

It was fortunate that I could forget when I sat down on a neighbor's peck measure and it went to pieces under me as I played with the children in the barn. Dismayed at the havoc I had wrought, I fled to my home to await the coming of the irate owner of the demolished article, but he did not come and then—I forgot about it! The errors of children are the concomitant of their youth and inexperience, and I can agree with the statement that to punish a child, say of nine years, for his mistakes is to punish him for being nine years old.

It was fortunate for me that my cousin John was a tall lad when I bit him; otherwise it might not have been regarded as a funny incident. It was at a family gathering and I was one of the little ones sprinkled about in the company of grandparents, aunts, uncles, and cousins.

Hemmed in by tall grownups, I saw immediately before me a pair of loosely clasped hands, with one finger standing out suggestively in line with my teeth. Acting on the suggestion, I opened my mouth, took in the inviting finger, and gave it a good, hard bite.

Tall John looked over his shoulder and down on me in amused surprise, and I looked up at him innocently, conscious only of having acted on an urge to bite. I did not understand why the company laughed as they told one another the funny thing "little Annie" had done. But, had it been another child I bit, I probably should have been regarded as innately cruel, and I might have been punished to ease the feelings of the other child's mother. And I should have failed to understand why, even as I did not understand why people laughed when John took my small attack humorously.

School Days

I started to school when I was six years old. Vigorously we students went through our morning setting-up exercises and fervently sang, "I Want To Be an Angel." We printed our lessons on slates with pencils of chalk sharpened by little boys who considered it a privilege to be assigned the task. When the teacher tapped on a small bell we turned in our seats, arose, placed our books on our heads, marched to the rear of the room, ranged in a long line, and lifting up our childish voices read in loud unison, "A prince is a king, the son of a king, or a man who rules a state." But somehow or other we learned.

When I was nine years old father bought a new home for us—one with a large, grassy orchard, with trees to climb and a barn for our horse and cow. I had long rambles through the summer when I went with other children to bring the cows home from the pastures. Those walks through the open pasture and the wooded one beyond with my little friends of those days are pleasant pictures on the pages of memory.

The Conferences

Conference is a long word, but I knew it when I was a small girl, though it did not mean to me then what it means now. Then it meant some mysterious place to which Grandfather and Grandmother were going, or from which they were returning when they came to our home. On those occasions I heard names of places I never heard at other times: Plano, Batavia, Sandwich, Mission Branch; and I heard names of people: Blakeslee, Gurley, Howard, Rogers, Blair, and Dancer—names that meant no more to me than the remote clouds that scudded far above me in the sky.

But Grandfather and Grandmother meant something definite. For one thing they meant family prayer. When they came we all knelt in a circle while Grandfather prayed. Sometimes the prayers were very long, and once one of the boys went to sleep. Parts of the prayers we did not understand, but we could sense something of the sanctity of the hour when we were called into the presence of the Heavenly Father and commended to his care.

We were not assembled in prayer at any other time. Father had been christened when a child in England, but he did not attend any church. Mother taught us little rote prayers, which we said at her knee while we were small, but as we grew older we drifted away from her knee, and I remember distinctly the night when I almost drifted away from the habit of prayer, as if it were a thing that belonged only to the years of childhood.

Missionary Experiences

By Lee Quick

IN THE SEVENTH CHAPTER of John, verses sixteen and seventeen, is this promise: "Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." And in John 17: 3: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

Jesus here gave two outstanding promises, and after fifty-eight years, I can say I know they are true.

We had heard about the Mormons at different times, but like most people, did not give them a second thought. My parents, Cornelius and Hannah Quick, belonged to the Christian Church. My father was a local preacher in that church, and like many Protestants we believed it did not make any difference which church a person belonged to—since all had the same goal.

On November 29, 1892, I was married to Lizzie Lucas by the probate judge in Fort Scott, Kansas. The judge was a retired Methodist preacher and a fine man. We made our first home in a little two-room house on the farm where my father lived. We had always thought that when we were married and settled down we would join some church, but did not know which one.

The Fort Scott, Kansas, Branch of the Reorganized Church, known then as Lebanon Branch, was organized by Apostle James Caffall at a schoolhouse near Marmaton, about seven miles west of Fort Scott, on December 30, 1891. A man named Ezell had moved there some time before. Adam Keck, Emsley Curtis (father of Patriarch J. F. Curtis), and other men had held meetings at different times and a number of families had been baptized. Several of them lived about five or six miles east of us and held meetings in a country schoolhouse. An old schoolmate, Henry Kenning, had married and lived close to the school where the meetings were held. He and his wife were converted and joined the church.

IN THE SPRING of 1893 Brother Kenning moved into our school district, known as the Walnut Hill District, near Uniontown, Kansas. Back in those days when a family of Latter Day Saints moved into a new neighborhood they sent for a preacher to warn their neighbors as directed in Doctrine and Covenants 38: 9

And again I say unto you, I give unto you a commandment, that every man, both elder, priest, teacher, and also member, go to with his might, with the labor of his hands, to prepare and accomplish the things which I have commanded. And let your preaching be the warning voice, every man to his neighbor, in mildness and in meekness.

As soon as they were settled, Brother Kenning began to talk to his neighbors. In August of that same year (1893) Elder F. C. Keck conducted a two-weeks series in the schoolhouse. Notwithstanding it was a busy time of year for the farmers and the threshing machine was in the neighborhood, there was a good crowd each night. Some said he was the smartest preacher that had ever been there. Others were opposed. Every time the machine stopped the men would talk about what he had said at the meeting. One day I said, "That man sure preaches the Bible," and someone asked, "Lee, are you going to join the Mormons?"

That rather slowed me up. I was not thinking of being baptized, because in those days it meant something to join the church. I well remember the first night of the meeting when Brother Keck got up to preach he said, "I have come here to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. I am going to preach the Bible. I wish you people would bring your pencils and paper and jot down the passages I will give you. Then you go home and read them in your own Bibles. If you don't find them there I don't ask you to believe what I say." I thought that was a fair proposition so we went home and looked up the references.

Despite Father's opposition my wife and I were baptized on January 14, 1894, in a small creek; it was so cold the ice had to be broken. We were thoroughly converted. We were baptized in the morning and confirmed in the afternoon. Brother Abner Lloyd, father of Walter Lloyd of Kansas City, in the prayer meeting spoke in tongues and gave the interpretation. A good part was to me. The Spirit said, "If you are faithful, you will preach the gospel and bring hundreds into the church, and many of your relatives will come into the church." At that time I could hardly get up and speak in public. I was just a farm boy, and my father was fighting the church.

He had become angry and wouldn't go hear Brother Keck preach, but that prophecy was literally fulfilled. My father, mother, and all my brothers and sisters came into the church. My father was ordained an elder and was a strong defender of this work until his death in 1933. All our children and their husbands and wives have been baptized except one son-in-law. All our grandchildren and several of their wives belong to the church. Something like two hundred relatives of my wife's and mine have joined.

I WAS ORDAINED a priest on July 8, 1894, and preached my first sermon in the schoolhouse where I went to school. My first baptismal candidate was Brother Sam Crewes. I preached in most of the schoolhouses for miles around, baptized several persons, and married a number of the young people, all while farming for a living. I helped several of the missionaries when they held meetings near by. Brother W. S. Pender held a meeting in Devon, about nine miles from our home. I assisted him by opening the meetings and offering prayers. Brother Pender had me baptize the three candidates at the close of the meeting, a Sister Eastwood and her two daughters.

Once I went with Brother Keck to a schoolhouse ten or twelve miles from our home to hold a two-week series. The first night we had a nice crowd. Brother Keck told the people we would have to stay with them, so after the service a man came up and asked us home with him. The next morning when we got up it was raining. It hardly stopped for two days. There was no meeting the next night, so we stayed another night with these good people, and still it rained. The roads were so muddy we gave up, so after dinner we started to go over where we had left our grips with Brother Loar, a blind man who was living with his daughter. The roads were so muddy we went to a little town and walked on the railroad. It was a nice prairie and the sun was shining; there were no houses near so Brother Keck said, "Brother Quick, here would be a good place to have a season of prayer." We knelt down on the railroad and Brother Keck began to pray. He offered up a wonderful prayer. He was so absorbed in praying he forgot to watch the track, but I was watching. While he was praying I looked up and saw eight or ten section men coming on an old pump car. It was downgrade and coming at quite a speed. I was timid and didn't like to say anything, but I soon saw something had to be done. I grabbed my grip and said to Brother Keck, "There comes the hand car."

Just as we stepped off the men went by. We didn't have time to say, "Amen." I told Brother Keck then that I understood what Jesus meant when he said to watch as well as pray.

IN DECEMBER, 1896, we moved to a farm three miles west of Mapleton, Kansas, in the community where my wife had been reared. Not more than a few weeks after we moved there Elder R. T. Walters wrote to tell us he would come hold meetings if we would secure a schoolhouse close by. Permission was granted to hold a meeting in the Logan schoolhouse, two miles from us, so we asked Brother Walters to come. He answered he would be at a meeting to be held in my father's home, about twelve miles south of us, and if we would be there he would come home with us. We went to meet him and he was there, but informed us he would be unable to hold the meeting we had planned. We had announced the meeting to begin at once and were very much disappointed.

During a prayer service in the afternoon old Brother Goff spoke in prophecy to me. The Spirit said, "Inasmuch as Brother Walters cannot be present, you conduct the meeting yourself and the Lord will be with you, for he has caused you to move in that place to build up the work."

I had never held a series of meetings up to that time, but I went home and proceeded with the services. We had nice crowds for two weeks, and, although no one was baptized, many friends were made for the church.

One night while I was waiting for the fire to start an old Irish gentleman asked me outdoors. He knew I had just moved in. He asked me if I had plenty of corn. I told him I had bought some, but would have to buy some more. He told me to bring my wife and come over Wednesday and take dinner with them and to bring the wagon. After we ate dinner we went over to an old house and he filled the wagon with corn; this came in very handy. I have always believed the Lord directed this man to give us the corn. Money was scarce in those days and the Lord knew our need. A number of years afterward this man's wife was baptized into the church.

We held services and several series in a good many schoolhouses a few people were baptized. I was ordained an elder on January 30, 1898, on my birthday. At the spring Conference in 1900 I received my first General Conference appointment.

IN 1904 Brother W. H. Mannering was appointed to labor with me in eastern Kansas. We had tried to get a place to hold meetings in Mapleton, but had not been successful, so during the summer we gathered up lumber around the farm (we had bought forty acres just across the road from where we first moved) and went to Mapleton to make seats. We made a pulpit out of a few boards and put up some posts for hanging lanterns (there was no electricity in town then), but when time came for our meeting to start no one was on those seats but my wife and our four little children. Brother Mannering and I were in the pulpit we had made. We had no music, and neither of us were great singers, but we did have a lot of faith and I had a strong voice. We did our best, believing the Lord would be with us. When we began to preach there were several standing around in the dark, but it wasn't long until they came up and sat on our homemade seats. We held services two weeks with good crowds. Some drove their rigs close enough to hear. That was about a block and a half from where the church now stands.

In 1908 I was sent to Oklahoma, built up a congregation at the small town of Vera, about twenty miles south of Bartlesville, and erected a nice little church. Over eighty people were baptized. After several moved away, the church was moved to Skiatook, Oklahoma.

In the winter of 1909-10 I came home for Christmas. We had about given up the idea of establishing a mission, and my wife and I had almost decided to move to some good branch, but we did not want to give up until we had tried it once more.

BROTHER GEORGE JENKINS was missionary in the district, so we asked him to come and hold a meeting after Christmas. I preached a week before he came and he preached two Sundays. We had very nice crowds, but Brother Jenkins thought he could stay no longer as he had promised to go to another place. I was disappointed. I wanted to give it a thorough trial this time, and if no more were baptized we would sell out and go where there was a branch. I told Brother Jenkins this, and he suggested that since I was home I should go ahead. I preached two more weeks, making four in all, and I have often wished I had had two more weeks. I believe I was blessed more in these meetings than any others I have ever held. A week after Brother Jenkins left Sister Eunice Spillman (who afterward married Bishop B. J. Scott) gave her name for baptism. Our closest neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Will Ellithorpe, always walked home with us. One night Mr. Ellithorpe went on with their little boy Hubert, while Mrs. Ellithorpe waited to walk with us. When I had covered the fire, put out the lights, and was just closing the door, I said, "Vade, why don't you and Will join the church?"

She burst out crying and said she had been fighting it for a week and if her husband were willing, she was ready to be baptized. My wife and I were so overjoyed we did not sleep much that night. The next day was Sunday and after the eleven o'clock services we went about two miles to the river. There had been a little thaw, and the river had risen, and the ice had floated out on the bank. Then the water had gone down and left ice on the bank. After baptizing those who had given their names, a girl about fifteen years old stepped up to be baptized. Her parents were not there, but someone said to go ahead, it would be all right. That girl is a grandmother now; her husband belongs to the church, and they are good members. The next Sunday her parents were baptized. Others of their family have been baptized. One of her sisters, who was baptized later, married a Catholic who has been baptized and is one of our good deacons.

The past few years there had been a union Sunday school at Rock Ridge schoolhouse. Now since we had a number of members, everyone seemed willing to organize a Reorganized Latter Day Saint Sunday school. We did, and my wife was the first superintendent.

ONE SUNDAY before I returned to my mission field in Oklahoma I went to Hepler, Kansas, and held meetings. When I came home on Monday I found Elder A. C. Anderson had arrived on Saturday from Iowa and had preached for the congregation. On Monday he and Brother Ellithorpe went out to look for a farm, which Brother Anderson bought. Land was cheap, and a number of Saints came from different places to buy. The schoolhouse was soon too small, so we rented an old building in Mapleton, bought chairs, and an organ. We met in that building for four or five years.

In 1914 two lots were purchased for a site for a new church. The church was built the winter of 1916-17, about four blocks from where we held our outdoor meeting in 1904.

Our people are well respected; some are on the school board, and some on the city council.

I am now eighty years old and have been released of all responsibilities. Brother Arthur B. Dennis is our pastor and is getting along well. The people, both in and out of the church, are good to my wife and me. Children love us, and we love them.

This latter day work has been the greatest thing in our lives. My wife has been a good wife for a missionary; she has worked hard, endured much, and her reward is sure.

Christ-centered Lives

by Cecil Robbins

THE YOUNG PEOPLE of today, more than ever before, are in need of some great anchor which will give stability to life and keep them from drifting aimlessly. They need a focal point around which life revolves. They need an authoritative source of reference which gives them direction in every aspect of life. This great foundation is Christ. He is the most authoritative reference to be found; he is God and man; he is the way, the truth, and the light. As young people crown him Lord of their lives, they will find a sound basis for deciding what they should and should not do.

If we plan to become first-class athletes, we would have to discipline ourselves. We could not smoke, drink, or fill up on pastries and sweets. We would have to get proper exercise and rest too. It is the same with those who would become Christians. If we would be real disciples of Christ, we must discipline ourselves by forsaking activities which are un-Christian and by filling our lives with good works.

As Saints, we must make Christ our standard of reference. We could not feature a Christlike person puffing on a cigar, or gliding a "slick chick" around the dance floor, or drinking until he falls stupefied into some gutter. To choose lesser values when we should choose the higher and to participate in questionable activities when we ought to make our lives count for Christ is sin. How can we promote his work if we refuse to open our hearts and lives to him, if we turn him away and do not make his purpose the passion of our souls?

So often we pray, "Deliver us from evil," and then deliberately enter into activities and go places where we are tempted. If we smoke, drink, and dance, we cannot be effective workers and witnesses.

We can do as we please, because we have our agency, but if our lives are Christ-centered and not self-centered, we will choose our activities with discretion and Christian concern.

If we want to smoke, drink, and dance because we like to or want to, then we become self-centered and not Christ-centered. If we want to do these things for God's glory and for the sake of the kingdom, then it is a different matter. But how can these activities glorify God and establish the kingdom?

If we seek only to satisfy the desires of our physical natures, and then are stripped of our bodies at death, we shall stand naked before God. We shall be miserable, and poor. If we spend our time, talents, influence, and resources in inconsequential pursuits that keep us from establishing eternal values in our lives and from promoting the purposes of Christ, then we are unprofitable servants and as such will be cast out. Even if we work in the church to satisfy ourselves rather than to glorify God, we are selfish and need to repent. We are to be good that men may see our good works and glorify God, not glorify us.

LOOK at the results of smoking, drinking, and dancing should convince us of the dangerous nature of these habits. What a blessing it would be if all the money used on these unnecessary activities were used to eliminate suffering, disease, and poverty. What a pity that, because of the unwise use of time and money, there are so many broken homes and broken hearts.

None of us live to ourselves. We are responsible to others. I bear the prints in my body of a serious auto accident caused by a man who believed it was all right to drink. We occasionally hear of young people flirting with death by playing "spider" or "chicken" on the highway. Some students boast of having never cracked a book at college. Not only their grades but their lives show it. The way of a Christ-centered life is not cheap thrills, disobedience to laws, and asserting one's freedom to do as one pleases.

It is facing life squarely; it is using one's time, money, and energy for Christ's purposes.

I HOPE the time will come when we have the will power to live up to our beliefs and convictions. I hope we can be like Moses who chose to suffer afflictions with the people of God rather than to enjoy the pleasures of palace life in a pagan land. I hope we will be like the Hebrew children who faced Nebuchadnezzar's furnace rather than bowing to worship an idol; or like Stephen who testified to the people in the face of death by stoning; or like the Christ who taught and lived the will of God unflinchingly—who "set his face steadfastly" toward Jerusalem, knowing it would mean his rejection and death.

We must be clean in body, mind, and soul if we would bear the vessels of God. We must be holy, for he is holy. Paul's advice is sound: "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity (I Tim. 4: 12).

The Son of God left heaven and gave up the glory he had with the Father to identify himself with us. He bore the burden of humanity on the tree. He sacrificed all for us! Can we not forsake some idle works for him and his cause?

I trust and pray that we will have the courage, faith, and good sense to Christ-center our lives and let them count for Zion, count for God!

"No Room in the Inn"

by Ethyle D. Woodruff

The editorial, "The Stranger Within Thy Gates," aroused me, too, as I saw some similar instances this summer. My husband, children, and I were traveling back from Idaho and, as we were having car trouble, we were sent to the Red Cross to see about some help in getting home. I walked into the office and was received very graciously but was told to wait a while. As I waited I noticed a very neatly dressed Negro man and his expectant wife. The husband was protesting the fact that they could receive no help. Finally the head lady answered, "Well, all right, I'll let you have the money, but I doubt that you can find any where to stay." She called several places saying she was sending a colored couple, but was refused. She turned to them and said, "I'm sorry, but none of the regular hotels here keep colored people."

She left the room and in her absence they told me their story. The husband had served in Korea. He was very discouraged. He said, "We fight against Communism and then come home and find a worse situation. Over there hospitality is extended to all races, but here my wife and I haven't been able to find accommodations since we left the coast and are being forced to call my family to come for us across several states because we can find no place to stay and our car is broken down." I thought of the night Christ was born in a stable because there was no room in the inn.

I breathed a little prayer for the colored family, then I promptly went to the Chamber of Commerce and told of the situation. Realizing that I was a stranger, the people there were rather embarrassed as they admitted that it wasn't right for a Korean veteran to be turned down because of race or color. I never knew how the situation turned out, but I felt that my prayers may have reached out and helped that young couple. Perhaps they were eventually able to find a place to rest.

We are a long way from having the kingdom of God on earth as long as such situations exist and are tolerated. If we would be a chosen people we cannot sit idly by and see our brothers oppressed.

Question Time

Question:

Do Latter Day Saints speak in tongues?
Colorado E.C.D.

Answer:

Yes—and no: No, if you mean, “Do they speak in tongues at their own wish or desire?” Our members do at times speak in the gift of tongues under the power and direction of the will of God. Keep in mind that the gift of tongues (as well as the gift of the interpretation of tongues) is one of the promised gifts as outlined by Christ to follow in the wake of those who believe. The nine spiritual gifts include these two gifts (I Corinthians 12). Unfortunately, the followers of the Pentacostal movement hinge their very existence and belief on the promise of I Corinthians 14: 2. This mistaken and false use of one of the spiritual gifts throws discredit upon the whole church. Not all of our members speak in tongues; and those who do, speak only as God sees the necessity of and wisdom in it.

WARD HOUGAS

Question:

II Nephi 1: 120-125 refers to hell as the Devil’s own kingdom. I had always understood that Christ had the keys to the “prison house,” and that this earth was the realm of the Devil.
Canada

A. C. D.

Answer:

Since Satan and his host were cast down from heaven in the beginning, it would seem that their temporary destination was the earth as suggested in Revelation 12: 12, 13. Satan’s present work is with the people of earth, “Thus he goeth up and down, to and fro in the earth, seeking to destroy the souls of men” (Doctrine and Covenants 3: 3; I Peter 5: 8). He will remain here until the close of the millennium, though during that period he will be bound that he cannot work, and at the judgment will be sent away into the lake of fire.

Men who have wholly surrendered to his temptations, having refused Christ and his gospel, thereby subject themselves to him, losing their power of agency. For such in the spirit world

God has prepared a place, a prison, from the beginning—a place of darkness (spiritual), where the gospel is not preached and the light of God does not penetrate. There they await without hope their resurrection just before the judgment when they will be sent away to the same place as the devils (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 7).

Other wicked people who have not willfully refused Christ, and for whom there is hope, are assigned in the spirit world to a different “prison,” where, through judgment and suffering and repentance, they are reformed. The gospel reaches them, and they come forth in the last resurrection to salvation. The devils are not there and do not rule over either of these realms in the spirit world; but those of the first class, when they are sent away with the Devil and his angels, do become subject to him in his kingdom. (Compare paragraphs four and seven in Doctrine and Covenants 76.) Christ maintains supreme rule over all humanity.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Explain Matthew 18: 18: “Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven.”

Iowa

Mrs. M. E. P.

Answer:

It is a statement of principle previously expressed in Matthew 16: 20, Inspired Version, showing that the official acts of the church of Jesus Christ upon earth, when performed in strict accordance with the law given by him to govern the church, are confirmed in heaven. The law is the law of the kingdom and operates the same in the “church triumphant” and in the church militant, coinciding with the prayer, “Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.”

This principle of co-ordination between the church on earth and the kingdom in heaven was revealed to Alma, as recorded in Mosiah 11: 111-141, relative to the very same point of the church’s dealing with transgressors. The integrity of the church was threatened by sin within, and Alma, who was at the head, did not know how to deal with it. In answer to his prayer for direction, the Lord said among other things:

Go; and whosoever transgresseth against me, him shall ye judge according to the sins which he has committed; and if he confess his sins before thee and me, and repenteth in the sincerity of his heart, him shall ye forgive, and I will forgive him also; yea, and as often as my people repent, will I forgive them their trespasses against me. . . . and whosoever will not repent of his sins, the same shall not be numbered among my people; and this shall be observed from this time forward.—Mosiah 11: 137-141.

No arbitrary action of the church or its officials which conflicts with the divine law can bind the Lord or the kingdom in heaven. Christ will no more approve or condone wrongdoing by the church as a body than that done by a member. Confirmation in heaven follows only when “ye do all things whatsoever I have commanded.”

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Why does Genesis 2: 11 say every tree became “a living soul”?

Answer:

In speaking of man, Doctrine and Covenants declares that “the spirit and the body is the soul of man.” Any living organism which had existed as a spiritual creation prior to its physical being might therefore be so termed. Of the tree, the text states: “It was spiritual in the day that I created it.” The spirit of life therefore animates the physical creation having the characteristics of life. The tree of life itself was one of those planted in the garden of Eden. Life is a deep mystery, whether it be animal or vegetable substance through which it finds expression, and it is evidently of the realm of the spiritual world.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel members signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Importance of Attending Reunion

I didn't think we would be able to attend reunion this year with nobody to take care of the farm chores, but I again find myself making preparations as the time draws near. We can't stay overnight, but we can drive back and forth most every day if the weather permits. A downpour this morning has interfered with the farm work, but we are fortunate—folks in other parts of the country have been hit by tornadoes.

We all need to go and fellowship with each other. I rejoice when, at reunions, I glance around and see so many I have learned to love at such gatherings. Last year at Camp Matigwa lightning struck the building we were holding services in, but even during the storm the still small voice said, "As the Lord saith, I will protect my people." I shall never forget the peace I experienced on that occasion.

We women had to work hard when we got home to catch up with the canning, but a good sister and I were talking about it one day and mentioned that we did not seem to get over-tired because His Spirit was still with us.

Spirits and minds need the refreshment reunion brings. We cannot afford to stay at home.

Letter From Anchorage

Proudly yet humbly I sat as a delegate from Rainier at General Conference. As I listened to Elder Gibbs and Apostle Mesley speak of the mission in Alaska, I wondered what kind of a representative I would be when I went to live there. Now I am a resident of Anchorage, and I find its snow-capped mountains and sunsets quite as beautiful as I had read they were before I came. God seems very near as I look to the mountains, but after the sun is down and the city glows with the lights of taverns and neon advertisements, I wonder if men are conscious of Him at all.

We do have a nice church group, and Pastor William Sterling is a humble, conscientious man. God's Spirit is present at these small meetings even as it was present at Conference. Perhaps the kingdom is like a tree; the tiny tap roots feed the main body and branches. What we do here will have an effect on the church as a whole.

I have rejoiced to see the happiness on a serviceman's face as my husband spoke to him. Already I have gained much inspiration from this group, and I am sure the allowance made by the General Church for a lot here will be money well spent.

While I am here I plan to write Book of Mormon stories for my grandchildren. I miss home and reunion greatly, but perhaps God needs me where I am. Please pray for me.

Note of Thanks

I want to thank everyone who sent letters or visited us while we were living near Pampa, Texas. One of our daughters and her family live in Durant, Oklahoma, now; she is not a member of the church but is interested. If anyone would like to contact her, I shall be glad to send her address.

Overcomes Temptation

I wish to testify that I have returned to the fold. Over two years ago I quit attending church because of disorder in the branch. I passed judgment on people, stayed away from my church associates, and began smoking again. I let my Herald and Daily Bread expire, too, so I really lost contact with the church. I developed a bad cough and suffered both physically and mentally. Then, thank God, I came to my senses. I have quit smoking, and I am renewing my subscriptions. I want to start where I left off and prove that my desire to live right is sincere.

More on the Word of Wisdom

I believe that hot water and hot milk are as much hot drinks as tea and coffee. I believe too that ice-cold drinks are not good. I don't eat meat at home, but if I am invited out by friends and they serve meat I eat it rather than offend them. I get along very well on vegetables and milk and eggs.

The Lord says that barley and other grains are good for mild drinks. The Encyclopedia states that coffee is a "bean," and that tea is a "leaf." Since the Word of Wisdom says we should use grains for drinks instead of beans and leaves, coffee and tea are prohibited.

I certainly believe the Word of Wisdom is divine. My health has proved to me that it is.

A Blessing of Healing

Several months ago a growth came on my neck which the doctor said might be a malignant tumor. I was to have an operation, but I thought, "If I could only be administered to, surgery may not be necessary." I hesitated to call an elder, because the closest one lives eighty-six miles away. Finally I called Elder Joseph Elkins of Eureka, California. He came willingly and administered to me. The growth did not go away immediately, but my family and friends continued to pray for me and gradually it began to diminish. Now it is completely gone.

I have much to be thankful for. God has given me faith and health. I pray I may grow in wisdom and understanding that I may be a good steward in God's vineyard.

The Reward of Study

I've just finished rereading the article, "Study To Show Thyself Approved," by Shirley Howard in the July 7 issue of the Herald. As Mrs. Howard says, it isn't easy to study when youngsters are present wanting to help read and write. However, we can always find time to do what we really want to.

My mother helped me to become interested in the "Leadership Training Curriculum." She told me of the inspiration and self-confidence she had gained through study, and how when discussions on the church arose she was able to explain the gospel better because of her study. If we prepare by doing all we can, then the Holy Spirit will bring back to our memory the things we need to know at a particular time.

I have been working on my first text for two months and am eager to finish it and begin another. Already I feel I have been rewarded for my effort.

I want to thank Mrs. Howard for writing the article, and I suggest that those who haven't read it do so.

(Information regarding the "Christian Education and Leadership Training Curriculum" may be obtained by requesting "Educational Bulletin Number 103" from the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.)

Northwest Iowa Has District Conference

NORTHWEST IOWA.—The semi-annual conference convened at Missouri Valley, Iowa, June 15, 1952, with the theme "Steadfast in Discipleship."

District President Sylvester R. Coleman and his two associates, Guy R. Johnson and Walter Weldon, presided over the conference. District Missionary John Loren was present. Elder Merle Guthrie of Independence, Missouri, was guest speaker. The opening meeting was a prayer service, presided over by district officers.

Elder Merle Guthrie gave the morning sermon on the conference theme. Sister Clausse of Cherokee sang "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked."

A basket dinner was served at the noon hour in the church basement.

Classes were held in the afternoon. The women, meeting in the lower auditorium, were directed by Sister Bessie Shumate, district leader. A general class was held in the upper auditorium with Elder Guthrie as instructor.

District officers were in charge of a short business session. The Cherokee choir sang a special number, "God So Loved the World." At this service Bishop W. R. Adams made a brief report on the finances of the district, showing a balance in the districts of $1,173.85. Tithes and offerings for the first five months were reported to be $16,324.33; the auditorium allotment, $215.75; and conference offering, $79.03.

Ruby Adams, district secretary, reported seventy-three baptisms and forty-five blessings since the first of January, 1952.

Sister Gladys Honz, leader for the Oriole and Skylark girls in the district, gave a report of the work and importance of these organizations.

Elder Coleman announced the appointment of Dona June Wiess of Dow City as district historian.

The following recommendations to the priesthood were presented to the conference: elder, Jay Field of Magnolia and Evan B. Watkins of Sioux City; priest, Howard Seeley of Magnolia and Derrell Ernest Webb of Cherokee; teacher, Roland D. Geith of Magnolia, Elias L. Riley of Little Sioux, and Loren E. Mann of Moorhead; deacon, William Duane Bowman of Onawa, Roy Coffman of Magnolia, and Jack P. Mann and Clyde Calvin Coberly of Moorhead. The conference on proper motion carried the recommendations and made provision for the ordinations.—Reported by RUBY A. ADAMS

Branch Organized

GERING, NEBRASKA.—District President Ward Hougas visited twice during recent months, presenting pictures as well as sermons.

Brother Gene Connell and family of Fort Collins, Colorado, have met with the group the fourth Sunday of each month. Brother Connell preached in the forenoon, and held a round-table discussion following a basket dinner.

Sunday, May 25, the Gering Branch was organized, becoming a part of the Eastern Colorado District. Eldon Burkey and Gary Harsin were ordained priests at this date. Presiding officers were Pastor Orva Croft, High Priest Joseph Hufferd of Denver, Elder Gene Connell of Fort Collins, Elder Gordon Harshman of Chadron, and Evangelist J. Charles May of Independence, Missouri.

Evangelist J. Charles May visited for a week. Gary Harsin, Doris Harsin, and Eldon Burkey received their patriarchal blessings from Brother May.

Brother and Sister Croft have moved from Gering.

Five young people—Gary, Dale, Joyce, and Janet Harsin, and Bill Harshman—attended the youth conference at Palmer Lake, Colorado.—Reported by MARGARET BURKEY

Branch Observes Reunion Day

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—The annual spring luncheon of the women's Idola Club was held on May 10. Mrs. Myron R. Schall presided and presented the officers, speakers, and other special guests. Greetings were extended by the women's department leader, Mrs. Cora Bridges. The district director, Mrs. Edward White, gave the invocation. The principal speaker was Mrs. Arnold Waybur, president of the board of directors of the YWCA. Other local organizations represented were the Sacramento Women's Council, The United Council of Church Women and the YWCA. The luncheon theme was "Japan, the Land of Cherry Blossoms." Embroidered pieces and other articles brought from Japan by Rod Schall were used in the decorations. He also showed a set of slides portraying life in Japan which he made while stationed there as a photographer with the army. A girls' chorus directed by Phillipa Gann and accompanied by Hazel Damron presented two numbers, with Virginia Winsor as soloist. Two piano solos were given by Maxine Schurter.

Elder George A. Njeim was the Mother's Day speaker. Elder E. L. Hamilton, pastor of Yuba City Branch, gave the invocation. Special music was presented by the choir, with a duet by Virginia Winsor and Marjorie Damitz. Corsages were presented to the oldest and youngest mothers.

The women's department held a rummage sale on May 1, 2, and 3. Branch workers attended religious education clinics held in Stockton and San Francisco on May 18 and 25.

The Northern California Graceland Alumni Association presented their traveling talent show on May 23. Rod Schall acted as master of ceremonies, assisted by William Epling of Berkeley. Other out-of-town talent included Robert and Joyce Colville of Stockton and Marilyn Walker of San Leandro. Local talent taking part in the show in other cities include Rod Schall, Dallas Glauner, Ruth Swaney and Claire Jahnigen.

A baptismal service was held on May 25. Robert Edward Niver, Glen Ellen Elam, and Mrs. Blanche Marie Phelps were baptized by Elder Jabez A. Elam. Confirmations were by Bishop E. C. Burdick and Elder Cecil A. Jacks. Pastor Myron R. Schall presented a Memorial Day sermon. In the evening the youth choir, directed by Phillipa Gann, presented a spring musicale. Soloists were Julie Purvis, Marlene Powell and Carol Cline. Two piano and organ duets were played by Hazel Damron and Ella Dawson. Many branch members and friends participated in the work camp held at the Happy Valley reunion grounds during the Memorial Day week end.

Children's Day services began with the baptism of Jo Anne, Barbara Mary, and Dorothy Lynn Elam. Priest Earl Horton officiated. They were confirmed at the evening service. A program was presented by the children at eleven, with a sermonette by the pastor. Music was furnished by the youth, junior, and cherub choirs.

Mrs. Lennie Smith and daughter, Linda Fay, were baptized on June 10 by Elder Dennison H. Smith. They were confirmed at the morning service, June 15, by Elders Lawrence Hendrickson and Cecil A. Jacks. District President L. A. MacDonald gave the sermon. This date having been designated as Reunion Grounds Day, he gave a report on the progress of the work on the grounds and outlined plans under way for further development. He urged all to visit the place and to assist in the work in every way possible, thereby sharing in the spiritual benefits to be derived from such participation. A special offering was received. Many of the young people attended the youth camp held there the week of June 22-29, and others attended the camp for the young adult group the following week. The third week of camp was attended by many juniors and junior high youngsters.—Reported by LENA SWANEY

Annual Reunion Held

CENTRAL AND SOUTHWEST TEXAS.—Central and Southwest Texas District reunion was held June 21-29 on the reunion grounds at Bandera, Texas. There were approximately 400 people camping on the grounds. Many others who lived near by drove in for the services each day.

The ministerial staff was headed by Apostle Charles R. Hield. Seventy A. H. Yale of Central Texas, Elder Charles Kornman of Southwest Texas, and Elder John Darling of the Department of Religious Education completed the staff. All members of the staff shared the preaching responsibilities.

High Priest C. W. Tischer, president of Central Texas District, was in charge of the program, and High Priest J. E. Wilder, president of Southwest Texas District, was in charge of the grounds.

Apostle Hield conducted the general prayer service each morning. He also taught the men's class, assisted by Seventy Yale.

Elder Kornman was in charge of the young people's classes and recreation and directed campfire services each evening. Dorothy Minton led the campfire singing. On Saturday evening about 100 young people participated in a hay ride that ended with refreshments and a campfire up in the mountains.

Elder Darling taught the general class. Sister Darling supervised the music.

The women's class was under the direction of Pauline Arnson of the Department of Women. The women of Texas offered a short devotional each morning before Sister Arnson began the lesson.

Handicraft classes were provided for the women each afternoon under the supervision of Vera Barksdale. She conducted classes in ceramic, leather, and copper work. Sister Barksdale also instructed classes for the young people each morning.

Jessie Banta, Central Texas women's leader, and Florence Berry, Southwest Texas women's leader, with the assistance of many others, planned a reception on Thursday honoring Sisters Arnson, Darling, and Hield. Apostle Hield represented his wife, who could not attend.

The women of the two districts shared the responsibilities of the bazaar, registration, and the cold drink stand. Sister Sassey from the Southwest supervised the bazaar. The Dallas Branch, under the direction of George Logan, took responsibility for the cold drinks. Mabel Dixon, Ethel Judkins, and Phyllis Banta, representing Central Texas, registered the campers and visitors.

Glenn Fordham was responsible for the morning devotionals.

The dining hall was under the direction of Ed Everett. Sister Bill Hall enlisted volunteers to serve during meals.

The children's program was under the supervision of Mary Hall. Dick Ankney and Billy Hall served as junior pastors and were responsible for the children's prayer services each morning. Crete Arnold, Mary Jo Jackel, Chattie Everett, Pearl Scott, Beulah Bobbitt, and Phyllis Banta taught the lesson work. Emma Jackson taught a class in rhythm band. Handicraft workers were Shirley Arnold, Jaunita Peterson, Dorothy Romig, Patricia Duke, Miriam Yale, Eleanor Yale, Sylvia Funk, Lois Lewis, Frances Bratcher, Rosemary Duke, Jessie Waggoner, and Vera Barksdale. Ninety-two children attended classes, and a nursery was provided for the younger ones. Doris Engleharde, R.N., the camp nurse, supervised the nursery and first aid station with the aid of volunteers. Movies were shown each evening for the children during the preaching hour.

The last afternoon of reunion the children presented a program for the parents and friends displaying the work they had done in classes.

The same afternoon the Oriole and Skylark bands from Houston, under the direction of Dorothy Lileaux and Miriam Yale, presented a play depicting the advantages of Skylark and Oriole work to the girls and to the church.

Sally and Carl Wheeler represented Graceland College at the reunion. Under the direction of Sally Gracelanders past, present, and future presented slides and skits depicting life on the campus for Graceland night. The program ended with a campfire.

At services Saturday afternoon twelve persons were baptized. William Bird, Willa Mae Bird, Ronnie Bird, Darrell Jarrell, Davis Jarrell, Kenneth Jarrell, and Bennie Jarrell were baptized by Elder Bob Wakeman. Sue Ann Payne, Laura Jean Jones, Helen Wynette Jones, and Leonard McCormick were baptized by Priest Millard Payne. Noela Joan Banta was baptized by High Priest A. J. Banta.

Sunday morning the following were confirmed: Darrell Jarrell, Davis Jarrell, Kenneth Jarrell, Bennie Jarrell, and Noela Joan Banta.

Communion service was held Sunday morning for all nonresident Saints under the direction of Elder Joe Berry.—Reported by PHYLLIS BANTA

Apostle Davey Visits Stake

FAR WEST STAKE.—A special Far West Stake conference was held May 25 in the Junior College Auditorium at St. Joseph, Missouri. The program began with the ministry of song by the Zion's League.

Stake President Emery E. Jennings presided over the business session. Recommendations for ordination of the following men were approved: Maurice Leroy Hancock, Atchison, Kansas, to the office of elder; Eldon Franklin McKee, St. Joseph, Missouri, to the office of priest; and Donald Lee Sturgis, St. Joseph, to the office of deacon.

The resignation of William Twombly as a member of the stake high council and as director of religious education was accepted. A letter of appreciation was read and a rising vote of thanks was given to Brother Twombly for service he has rendered. Charles Powell was elected to serve as stake director of religious education.

The Celeste Chorus under the direction of Sister Ruth Haden furnished music for the ordination and preaching service. The statement of responsibility was given by Evangelist A. B. Constance. William Twombly was set apart by Apostle Roscoe Davey and Stake President Emery E. Jennings to the office of evangelist. Apostle Roscoe Davey was the morning speaker.

COLLEGE STUDENTS CONFERENCE

Plans for the College Students Conference, to be held on the Graceland College campus, over Labor Day weekend were developed at a two-day meeting at the Blue Water, Michigan, youth camp and at Ann Arbor, Michigan, involving Dr. Lawrence Brockway, Bishop Wayne Updike, and Carl Mesle, members of the steering committee. All college and university students attending schools other than Graceland this fall are urged to make their plans to attend.

SUMMER SERVICES HELD AT DEER PARK

During the summer months, from July 6-August 31, Sunday evening services are being held at Deer Park, a church-owned camp ground located about three miles west of New Hope, Pennsylvania. The general theme for the summer is "The Kingdom of God," and the following interesting sermon topics and speakers are noted: "The Kingdom of God and My Salvation," Seventy W. T. Guthrie; "The Kingdom of God and Our Political Salvation," Elder J. T. Conway; "The Kingdom of God and Our Economic Salvation," Elder E. Leroy Squire; "The Kingdom of God and Our International Salvation," Elder Perce Judd; "The Kingdom of God and Personal Regeneration," Elder Loyd Adams; "The Kingdom of God and the Doctrine of Christ," Elder W. T. Guthrie; "The Kingdom of God and Religious Denominationalism," Elder Thomas Carr; "The Kingdom of God and Joseph's Land," Elder J. T. Conway; and "The Kingdom of God," guest minister from Independence, Missouri.

see electricity, gravity, air, or love with our natural eye, but most certainly we feel and see their effects. Most of us know God through circumstantial evidence; we cannot come to know him of ourselves alone. Even the transformed must believe in him first because of circumstantial evidence, and then diligently seek him. That is not always an easy thing to do. My eight-year-old daughter does not believe in Santa Claus—though she has seen him and even has shaken hands with him. There is so much make believe and fraud in the world, how and what can one believe? If Christ were present we would not recognize him unless we first believed in him. This was true in his home town, Nazareth. His presence in the lives and hearts of people today is not easily recognized by one who does not believe. Through faith we study to know God. We not only study, but think, envision, experience, and testify of our experiences. Through testimony we grow, and as someone aptly said, "We can have a testimony only as we share it with others."

These help us to gain some definite convictions that make us give ourselves to a cause greater than we are. In this unique manner of worshiping we grow to understand more and more about God. In this way, and this way only, we have an ever-growing understanding of God. We begin to know that he is all-powerful; controlling the physical forces about us and all those who believe on him sufficiently to seek Him diligently (an even greater task). In such a state we can enjoy the abundant life, regardless of surrounding conditions. We must be movingly aware of God's purpose in us—which is to build the kingdom, to be an ensign for those who are lost in fears and doubts. This task is beyond our power to accomplish alone, hence the need for acquainting ourselves with God.

By Grace Pennell Tousley

Art in Everyday Life, by Harriet Goldstein and Vetta Goldstein. Third edition. (The Macmillan Company, New York, $6.50.)

ONE OF THE blood-chilling news stories to come out of the late Spanish civil war told of the incarceration of political prisoners in cells painted in wild designs and garish colors. These prisoners rapidly became mentally ill, which result was the fiendish intention of those in power.

Psychologists and phychiatrists have given considerable emphasis in recent years to the mental-health value, inherent in beauty, seen and heard. Mental patients have been subjected to color and music therapies as a part of the treatment of their maladjustments. A New York neuro-psychiatrist recently wrote a magazine article advising women to surround themselves with beauty as one means of securing, or retaining, mental stability.

Since 1925, when the first edition of this book was published, the authors have been helping in a practical way to put beauty—this important factor in health and happiness—into everyday living. This third edition has been revised throughout, with new material being added and with expansions of previously treated subjects.

"But with all of its changes," say the authors, who are connected with the University of Minnesota as associate and assistant professors of art respectively, "the book remains basically what it was when it was first written—a study of the application of the fundamental principles of design and color. Fashions come and go, popular standards change, but 'style' and beauty are lasting. It is concern for an appreciation of these more permanent qualities and the wish to apply them in our surroundings that impels us to seek an understanding of their fundamentals."

THE AUTHORS hasten to correct any misconception the reader might have about the meaning of artistic ability and its functions. "Too often," they write, "it is thought that art is synonymous with drawing and painting and sculpture . . . more and more it is coming to be realized that [artistic] ability is involved not only in the creation of works of art, but in appreciation as well . . . the woman who selects beautiful furnishings for her home or the salesperson who chooses the right suit and hat for a customer has done a piece of work that calls for much the same kind of knowledge as that possessed by a designer or painter. These are all questions of art or design, and the only real difference is in the materials used. This is easily recognized when the meaning of design is clearly defined: 'the selecting and arranging of materials with two aims—order and beauty.'"

The reader is first grounded in the principles of the two kinds of design: structural and decorative. These principles—"measuring sticks against which to judge taste"—are discussed under the chapter headings, (1) harmony, (2) proportion, (3) balance, (4) rhythm, and (5) emphasis. Two chapters on color, how to know and use it, complete the reader's preparation for making efficient use of the remaining chapters.

This portion of the book dealing with the application of the five principles of design and color covers such interesting subjects as dress design and selection, interior decorating and furnishing, flower arrangements, table settings, poster design, hair-dos, lettering, men's dress, and cosmetics—all treated from the viewpoint of the artist.

THE PRACTICAL, lifetime value of such basic knowledge as this book brings to the reader is undeniable. "Think of how much it would mean," say the authors, "to everyone who selects articles of clothing and home furnishings to want to live with these things until they are actually worn out. Homemakers who are planning to furnish their homes or to rearrange those already furnished are anxious to have an art basis for the decisions they must make. Men and women wish to know what colors and lines are becoming; salespeople would like to be able to tell customers with reasons that certain patterns and colors in wallpapers, draperies, or rugs are good, where these colors and patterns are good, and how they should be combined. All such problems call for good taste and can be solved by the application of fundamental art principles to the selection of objects and their use in a particular place."

Although a few people are born with the ability to select automatically the things which are beautiful, the ability can be acquired by anyone, claim the authors, by applying the principles of beauty deliberately until the time is reached when the right thing is done unconsciously.

Experiences In Friendly Visiting

By Mrs. Sam Matney

THREE YEARS AGO I was asked to fill the vacancy when our friendly visitor moved away. I had been a patient in the Sanitarium, but as soon as I returned home I met with a women's group at Chanute. I probably used more strength than I really had to spare for I was anxious to meet with this group of Saints.

Chanute is about twenty miles from Iola, and a women's study group had been organized there by the district women's leader, Sister Tom Bath. There were but six women members in Iola and meetings were held every two weeks, alternating between Chanute and Iola.

After asking me to serve, the women's leader read me some of the sacred duties of the work. I accepted and asked the members to remember me in their prayers that God would give me both physical and spiritual strength. I rejoiced at the confidence they expressed in me. Although I had been isolated many years from church privileges, my heavenly Father had blessed me with his Spirit.

My first thoughts were for my home. I wanted to start there as my husband was not yet a member of the church. I consecrated my life and home to God for I felt I could not encourage others to do the same or tell the gospel story to my friends and neighbors without this. Late one evening I asked my companion to join me in our devotions. He had often seen me worship alone, and this time he consented. My joy was great when soon after he asked for baptism.

The few Saints in this district are scattered, and since I do not drive it has been difficult for me to visit them. I go as often as I can, and in the meantime keep in touch by telephone, cards, and letters; I remember each one of my group in my prayers. I believe that a friendly visitor should pray that she will understand her group, be a good steward, and study church literature. I find it helpful to read Daily Bread in the morning. I visit the inactive as well as active members and friends and neighbors.

Three years ago there was but one member of the priesthood in the two towns, but through earnest prayers being answered, today we have an elder in Chanute and two members of the priesthood in Iola. In these three years all of my family old enough to accept the gospel have been baptized. This numbers seven. They are missionary-minded and have helped to gain six of their friends in Iola. We will need these new members and others for a branch to be organized. My son-in-law, a member of the priesthood, is ever ready to visit the Saints, sometimes taking my place when I phone and find that someone is ill and needs encouragement.

God has given me physical and spiritual strength. Many times I have felt that my health would not permit me to carry on, but each time, through his great love—not for me only, but for his work—I have been strengthened.

To other friendly visitors I would say, you have been asked to do one of the most sacred tasks in the church; if you do it willingly God's Spirit will guide and direct. If you have love for your Heavenly Father you will have love for people; you will visit in their homes and share their joys and sorrows.

Having Eyes To See

By C. J. Lant

On the door arches of an old fort in Cavite, Philippine Islands, I saw inscribed some characters which no doubt contained some Chinese wisdom or philosophy; but, like many other youths, I passed by these ancient landmarks many times, failing to see anything of importance in them and not bothering anyone who might be able to explain their meaning to me.

There were two very fine articles in the Herald of March 10, "God's Way," by Violet Adair, and "Wash Your Heart," by Helen Hester Hintz. All over the world there are many ancient shrines dedicated to the finer, deeper, spiritual life which carry messages like these.

Some years back we read a great deal about "Confucious Say." Another popular Chinese adage is, "It's later than you think." Wang Yang-Ming has said:

One must certainly have experienced pain before he can know what it is. To understand hunger, one must have been hungry. The sage instructs the individual, and moved by none, yet he learns from all. The man, who says in his heart, "I will teach all men and learn from none, will neither teach nor learn."

We have learned that only those who have suffered in their soul yearn to know God. Only those of us who have crossed a desert can appreciate the oasis and will drink deep at its spring.

If I Only Had Money

By Dick Ankney

AS A YOUNG PERSON I many times ran into obstacles that made me exclaim, "If I only had money!" I thought that money was the world's most important item. Often I remarked, "Money isn't everything, but it will buy everything."

In 1942 soon after war had been declared, I was sent by the War Department as a civilian to Egypt, an active war zone. After spending fifty-two days en route, having been attacked by submarines and later by a famed German pocket battleship, and changing convoys and convoy escorts several times, we arrived at our destination.

After several months when the Allies and the German Afrika Corps had fought to a stalemate, I made a trip to the front to visit a group of American fighting men. This unit had been replaced (killed in action) 150 per cent. When they saw an American civilian, they went crazy. I was what each one of them wanted most to be. They fired questions at me a mile a minute. "How are the Dodgers doing?" "What do you hear about the coal strike?" (the U. S. war effort had been crippled by a major coal strike) "Do you know anyone from Texas?"

This went on for hours and then they asked me about parts of my own life story. My stories reminded them of "home sweet home," and they encouraged me to keep talking—which I did for the better part of sixteen hours. In the early morning, I had to sneak back to the base to which I had been assigned.

THERE ARE RULES about the desert. The most important one is that everybody must keep his canteen full of water. I had always thought that rules were made to be broken, so I ignored this.

En route to Cairo my native driver and I came across another American who thought that rules were made for dumb people. He had gone out without water and had car trouble. Then he committed an unpardonable sin in the desert; he tried to take a short cut. He had wandered around in circles for three days; his tongue was swollen four times its normal size and partially coated with sand. We hurried him to the hospital, but we didn't make it in time. The doctor pointed out that if someone had applied a damp cloth to his tongue he might have been able to pull through. (I knew what to do, but I didn't have any water.)

Then my old stand-by flashed through my mind, "If I only had money!" I felt frantically in my pockets. I had been in the desert for six months and with little or nothing to buy, I was loaded. I had enough money to fly this fellow back to New York to the hospital. I had enough money to buy him an arm or a leg. My money could have done so many things for him—but he needed water, and I had only money to give. I hope that I never again get so poor that I have only money to give.

Life is a long lesson in humility.

Foxhole Religion

THERE ARE NO GODLESS MEN in a foxhole. In the front lines, men who have never prayed or gone to church are within speaking distance of God.

Picture yourself at a forward collecting station. It is only a 30-by-15-foot squad tent set next to a dirt road. Outside, the walking wounded are standing around with dazed expressions on their faces. There is an attack going on.

Inside, every available cot and space on the ground is occupied by wounded but there is always room for one more. Some of the men lying there are moaning, some are quiet, some are talking in hushed tones. All wear torn and disarranged fatigues, caked with mud. Dark crimson blood spatters the mud.

A flushed soldier, his head swathed in bandages, is standing up. Sweat muddies the dirt on his face. He is a tanker from Illinois; he tells another man of his experience.

"... Mortars dropped about twenty yards in front of us, so we stopped. Then one came through the hatch. It was hot as fire. The lieutenant and sergeant were blown to bits. Just me and another guy got out. The Reds were coming out of the hills after us, but we ran back to another tank. The blood filled my eyes and I thought I was blind. When I got back to the tank, my buddy was crying he was so happy to see me. I'm driver, and the seat saved my life. My mother would die if she heard about this."

He turns, walks to a cot, sits down and begins praying.

From a radio somewhere in the tent come soft, melodic strains of violins playing "You're Too Glamorous Cherie." There are moans and bubbly coughs.

From
"The Pacific Stars and Stripes"

The chaplain moves from man to man, and those who are able seem eager to talk to him.

The chaplain kneels on one knee next to a man on the ground. The man's eyes are closed.

"How do you feel, son?" he asks. There is no answer at first. Then the man opens his eyes feebly and begins whispering his confession.

A soldier from a little town in Kentucky, limping and hunched, tells how he was wounded.

"They were all over the place. They've got a round trench on top. If you fire in the front, they run to the other side. A Red threw a grenade at me. It hit me on the helmet, and knocked it off. The grenade rolled down the hill and exploded. I'm lucky."

You ask him if he believes in God.

He answers simply, "Yes."

He groans and turns around. His back is peppered with black shrapnel craters.

Chaplains say the percentage of attendance at religious services held on the front lines is over double that in the rear areas.

A chaplain gave his explanation for the strong feeling toward religion on the front. "Our civilization is surrounded by material, rather than spiritual value," he said, "but this is not so on the front. A man in a foxhole realizes the inadequacy of material values and thinks of destiny."

In Korea, many men die with prayers on their lips, some in despair, but whichever it is, the Unseen Power will understand.

A New Angle on Temperance

by Maude D. Anderson

THE APOSTLE PAUL said, "Be temperate in all things." It is very easy to apply the words "be temperate" to those who indulge in cocktails and cigarettes, but we should remember the rest of the admonition, "all things," and then take a look at ourselves and see if we can pass the test.

For example, there is the person who loves to read but knows that too much reading is detrimental to eye comfort. How about it, is he always temperate in his reading? Then there is the temptation to over-indulge in reading of the lighter variety to the neglect of the more serious variety or to the neglect of other work that should be done. And there is the fancywork fan or the person who indulges in one type of household chore to the neglect of another. But above all when it comes to being temperate, there is the matter of food. How many take that extra piece of cake or a snack between meals; that bottle of pop, or a piece of candy just because they haven't the strength of character to resist any more than the person who is offered a cocktail or cigarette?

Equally intemperate are the people who dash madly from one task to another until some kind of breakdown results. They imagine that the world couldn't go on if they didn't take the responsibility of seeing that it did. However, if their intemperance results in heart failure or a stroke, the world seems to continue at just about the same pace that it had been running.

In almost any category there is room for temperance. The next time we feel self-righteous and start accusing someone of intemperance, let's turn the spotlight on ourselves and see how we measure up.

SCHOFIELD.—Melvin James, son of James and Martha Kate Schofield, was born July 1, 1915, in Lamoni, Iowa, and died April 28, 1952, at his home in Lamoni. On February 28, 1936, he was married to Beulah Green; three children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since July 15, 1923; his patience in his own suffering, thoughtfulness of others, and everyday living were the evidence of his beliefs. He had been a salesman for the White Furniture Company the past eleven years, and his death was the result of a fall down a flight of stairs at the store.

He is survived by his wife; three children: Moynes, Sandra, and Douglas; and his parents, all of Lamoni; a sister, Irene St. Jacques of Chicago, Illinois; and two brothers: Harold of New York City and Arthur of Lamoni. Funeral services were held at the Coliseum in Lamoni, Elder Robert Farnham and Bishop Earl T. Higdon officiating. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery.

HOWE.—Mary Irena, daughter of Fred N. and Erma Acker Howe, was born March 29, 1908, at Horton, Michigan, and died June 20, 1952, at the W. A. Foote Memorial Hospital in Jackson, Michigan. For twenty-eight years she was a school teacher. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since May, 1932.

She is survived by her mother; three sisters: Mrs. Winnifred Causie of Concord, Michigan; Mrs. Ione Ebert of Pigeon, Michigan; and Miss Phyllis Howe of Horton; and one brother, William Howe of Horton. Her father died two years ago. Funeral services were conducted at Hanover, Michigan, Elder Jon Luce officiating. Burial was in Horton cemetery.

FRANK.—Albert Dale, son of the late Abe and Mayme Frank, died June 29, 1952, in Niagara Falls, Ontario, at the age of forty-seven. He was active in city affairs, a member of the city council for two years; former president of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, superintendent of the streets' department, and a member of the hospital board. He was also a Mason.

He is survived by his wife, Gertrude, and a brother, Edward. Funeral services were conducted by Elders George Towers and Arnold Ware.

 BOOKS YOU LOVE

Are you one of the earnest souls who periodically fall under the spell of a list of "Great Books" and determine to tidy up the frayed edges of your culture by reading them? You either fall asleep in the middle of page nine of the first one, or decide you need a haircut and the whole thing is forgotten until next time.

The trouble with the lists of "Great Books" is that those who make them put on a tight collar and go stuffy; "ought" is the keynote of such lists rather than "like." "Paradise Lost" is to be read as it was written—with an overpowering surge of moral purpose. I am not always up to it.

Much more significant, it seems, would be a list of "Most Loved Books." The test of whether you love a book or not is, have you read it three times or more? There is no other criterion.

Here are the books that I have read many times: "The Bridge of San Luis Rey" by Thornton Wilder; "Alice in Wonderland"; "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam," Fitzgerald translation; "Out of the Silent Planet," and "The Great Divorce" by C. S. Lewis; "The Great Answer" and "Our Miss Boo" by Margaret Lee Runbeck; "The Gobi Desert" by Mildred Cable and Francesca French; "Lost Horizon" and "Random Harvest" by James Hilton; "The Prophet" by Kahlil Gibran. Yes, I have read thousands of others, but once is enough for most of them.

Milady has fallen in love with "Stillmeadow Seasons" by Gladys Taber. She has read it a number of times for its charming picture of happiness and security in a country home. She has contracted "country fever" from it, and don't be surprised if you hear that we are looking for a few acres out yonder any day now.

I turn to these books as to old friends, to renew in myself some dream, enjoy again a bit of whimsy, or retrace some author's steps through a philosophy of life. Books can bring peace to the soul. They reveal a love of good people and fine things.

Our needs are different. What satisfies one may have no meaning for another. Do not let that surprise you. Books are read for intellectual and spiritual needs. My hunger may be your surfeit. . . . But is there any greater pleasure than introducing a friend to a good book and then having him fall in love with it? . . . I have had many a love affair with a book, and am none the worse for it, I trust. . . . Another one could come along any day now.

IS YOUR FUTURE SECURE?
SAFETY TALK NUMBER 2

More than 13,000 persons were killed and 570,000 injured last year by drivers who were exceeding the speed limit.

Speed kills. If only we could remember that lesson, we could save lives, and one of those lives might be our own.

It is of little practical use to save five minutes on the road if we lose all the rest of our lives on earth.

IF YOUR CONGREGATION is planning to build a new church, do major repair work on the present structure, or purchase a building for church use, one of the key persons available to offer sound counsel is Lewis E. Scott, assistant to the Presiding Bishopric.

Because of the emphasis on building throughout the church, he is one of the most traveled men under appointment. And when he is in the office, you will find him working at the drawing board on sketches and plans for improvement of the church properties which require his attention.

Brother Scott became an appointee at the 1952 General Conference. His experience gained in business over the past several years plus his consecration to the work of the kingdom lead the long list of qualities which equip him for his important task. Prior to church appointment he was a licensed general contractor and building designer in the Los Angeles area. Earlier in his experience, he was in the field of management consulting and industrial engineering. His academic training includes work at Iowa State, University of Southern California, and University of California at Los Angeles.

Born in Fort Pierre, South Dakota, Lewis joined the church in 1933, a year after he was graduated from Graceland College. In 1945 he married the former Anne Thomas of Malad City, Idaho. Their two children are Richard, 4, and Diane, 6 months. He was ordained a priest in 1943 and an elder in 1952.

News and Notes

PRESIDENT EDWARDS AT REUNION

President F. Henry Edwards was at the Ozarks Reunion at Racine, Missouri, July 19 and 20. He had charge of a prayer meeting and preached twice while there. Appointees on the reunion staff included Stephen Black, Evan Fry, John Darling, William Williams, and Ralph Bobbitt.

President Edwards left Independence the week end of July 26 for Chicago, Illinois, and the Blue Water, Michigan, Reunion. He will be at the Kirtland Reunion the next week.

W. W. SMITH AT PACIFIC PALISADES

Word has been received that President and Sister W. Wallace Smith arrived at the Pacific Palisades where the reunion for Southern California District was held. Brother Smith reported that at the time he was writing it appeared that things were lined up for a good reunion. District President John P. Davis was in charge of the reunion. Also on the staff were Bishop David Carmichael, Evangelist L. J. Osterlag, Evangelist William Patterson, Elder Glen Johnson of the Presidents of Seventy, and High Priest Peter Whalley.

APOSTLE IS GUEST SPEAKER

Apostle Charles R. Hield was the speaker at the Campus service July 20. His topic was "The Kingdom of God—Built by People Who Possess the Gifts and Fruits of the Spirit." Previous speakers have been Elder Glaude A. Smith, pastor of the Stone Church, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Sr., and Apostle Roscoe E. Davey.

WAYNE SIMMONS TO RIO GRANDE VALLEY

Seventy Wayne Simmons and family have moved from Independence, Missouri, to the Rio Grande Valley in Texas where he will work with the Spanish-speaking people.

SPEAKS AT WARRENSBURG

Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, preached to the Liberty Street congregation in Independence on July 20 in the morning. That evening he was the speaker at the Warrensburg, Missouri, Branch.

TEACHES WOMEN AT REUNION

Sister Pauline Arnsion, Chairman of the General Department of Women, left Independence July 25, for the Blue Water Reunion for the Flint-Port Huron District which is held at Lexington, Michigan. Sister Arnsion was the teacher for the women's classes and was accompanied on the trip by her husband, Brother S. S. Arnsion.

CENTER STAKE HAS REUNION

The annual reunion for the Center Stake of Zion was held at Lake Doniphan July 12-20, under the leadership of the stake presidency, Charles V. Graham, Fred Davies, and Glaude A. Smith. Other appointee members of the staff were Apostle Roscoe E. Davey, Elder John Darling, Evangelist Arthur E. Stoff, Bishop Harold W. Cackler, O. Kenneth Byrn, and Lee Hart. The average attendance during the week was 600 people, and 800 attended the Sunday services. A baptismal service was held on July 19 at which time four people were baptized.

Going With God

"Enoch walked with God."—Genesis 5: 24.

THERE IS SOMETHING awe-inspiring about Enoch. Few indeed were like him. He chose God as his traveling companion. He was good enough and great enough to qualify to be in the divine presence. And a further observation: he went walking with God; he didn't try to take God along with him. There is a great difference. The thought seems worth further exploration.

When you learn that our great words of farewell had their origin in prayer, you think more of them.

The beautiful Spanish word, adios, is a condensed expression that some persons translate as "Go with God." Similar is the French word, adieu.

IT IS WHEN we come to the English phrase of greeting that we encounter a reverse of thinking. Our "good-by" is a contraction of what was originally, "God be with ye." The stages by which the expression was shortened, and lost its meaning, are easily discernible. Our friends, the French and Spanish, like to go with God. We would like to take God with us. Perhaps that is what is wrong with some of us. We do not give up our ways: we are reluctant to adopt his ways; we want him to go with us, with our destination and purpose unchanged.

To the point here is the familiar story of President Lincoln in the Civil War. A government officer said, "Let us pray that God may be on our side." Lincoln shocked him with the statement that he wasn't concerned to have God on his side. Then he explained that he really wished to be on God's side. With the important issues involved in the Civil War, the difference was very great. With the important issues to be settled in our world today, the difference is still very great.

Are we trying to walk with God in the great highways of eternity? Or are we trying to entice him to come with us down our private little paths leading to selfishness and ruin?

YOU MAY HAVE HEARD the song, "The Glory Train." One may suppose that this, like much other folk music, grew out of the spiritual hunger and hope of a people of humble faith. It is a powerful song that expresses the motive of wishing to travel with God. It has the same basic motive as the greeting, Adios. Listening to the song reverently, you cannot help sharing the feeling of a soul that is trying to find its way through the vast avenues and spaces of eternity to its home.

I was waiting at the street corner for the city bus to come along. A friend pulled up in his car.

"Are you going my way?" he asked cheerily.

"If you're going the right way," I replied. And we both laughed. But we knew that there was something serious beneath it. Isn't there something serious beneath most of our joking? Perhaps there is. Probably there ought to be.

THERE IS a right way, and there are many wrong ways. If we ask God for power to walk with him, that is sure to be right. But if we ask him to go with us, on a way that we have planned without consulting him, it may be all wrong.

I am waiting at a bus stop, I hope, on the highway to eternity. That, at least, is what I want to do. In a sense, I am a hitchhiker, waiting for God to come along. There are others waiting here too. We know the destination. We could not go by ourselves. The eternal journey is too great for human strength and wisdom. But we know that the Heavenly Father is on the way. He will be bringing others with him. We hope there will be places for us. He will not fail us. It is in the promises. "The Lord is good unto them that wait for him."

At some time in our lives we are all strongly tempted by the pressure of what we consider to be our most immediate and urgent needs to try to coax, win, or bribe God to lend his power to our schemes, projects, and purposes. We think we know what is best for us. We do not even open the matter to question with God. We do not consult him as to what he may think is best for us or is in accord with his kingdom.

Try though we will, there are times and places where we cannot take God along. Our "God be with ye" is a prayer that cannot always be answered in the affirmative. We must change our course and "Go with God." There is the example of Enoch to be considered.

You and I are on our way somewhere. Are we going with God?

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From President Israel A. Smith,
Basel, Switzerland, July 21:

Sunday [July 20] was a most notable day at Hannover. Services were held at 10:00, 11:00, and 3:00. I unlocked the door to the mission house at 9:50 a.m., and about two hundred Saints flocked in; half of these were from other areas. Five men were in uniform.

Apostle Arthur Oakman spoke at 10:00, and Bishop Henry Livingston at 3:00; I gave the 11:00 o'clock address. There was mission house inspection at 2:30, and at 2:30 Seventy Eugene Theys baptized four persons. One was a nine-year-old girl from Omaha, the daughter of Brother and Sister Berg. Brothers Eugene Theys and Louis Zonker were in charge, assisted by Brother Oscar Stuve, Patriarch Beil, and Elder Wiegeld of Brownschweig.

We caught the Italian Express at midnight and arrived here a little before noon. We had berths on a Schlofen Waggon, but we could not sleep well because of the bumps.

Stake President Garland E. Tickemyer of Los Angeles, California, wrote his reactions to the recent earthquake while it was still in progress. Here they are:

The earth is still quivering from recurring aftershocks following a major earthquake that nearly knocked us out of bed a few moments ago. I was awakened from sound sleep at about 4:53 a.m. by a violent shaking of the house. The bed seemed to be tossing in every direction, and the house was creaking under a violent motion that reminded me of a giant popcorn shaker. We were the popcorn. The motion did not seem to follow a definite direction, though it had the rising and falling movement distinctive of the rolling type of quake as distinguished from the shock type. Lights were flashing outside. At first I thought it was lightning, but then realized that it was more likely to be broken high tension wires.

There was little time to indulge my initial thoughts of "How severe is this going to get and how long will it last?" for there was a rising crescendo of excitement terminating in hysteria in the house. First I heard Gary ask, "What's happening?" David said something from his bedroom. The house was creaking; windows were rattling; doors slammed; and the door chimes started clanging with an eerie sound. David started screaming and I jumped out of bed to run to him. . . . There's another one as I write—not hard like the first, but it gives me a definite feeling of nausea. It doesn't seem to shake in one direction, just sort of weaves around . . . there it is again. . . .

In the six years that we have lived here we've felt a number of minor tremors. One of any severity is accompanied by a rumbling noise something like the sound of a streetcar. I didn't notice this noise tonight, perhaps because I was asleep until after it hit, and then the noises in the house covered it.

Very strict building regulations require bracing and concrete reinforcement that make most of our buildings in this area earthquake proof. There's little danger, and people here regard them more as a novelty than with apprehension; but this one will give us something to remember.

News bulletins now coming in on the radio report that seismograph records indicate an intensity of 7.5 in Los Angeles, compared with only 6.25 for the disastrous Long Beach quake of 1933 and nearly equal to the 8.25 recorded for the San Francisco quake of 1906. This is evidently the second greatest earthquake in California history.

Elder Franklyn S. Weddle, General Church Director of Music, has called our attention to a report found in The Independence (Missouri) Examiner for Friday, July 11, 1952, reviewing the work of a commission of the Episcopal diocese of central New York concerning wedding music. The report says:

In many cases the choice of wedding music is dictated by members of the wedding party inexperienced in appropriate musical standards and therefore willing to settle for bad precedents.

The report urges churches to avoid background music which "brings in a theatrical tendency and a most unwanted element of showmanship," and continues:

In too many instances music is chosen to be played or sung which glorifies only the romantic attraction of the marriage partners without any attempt to dignify the new relation before God.

"O Promise Me," "Because," and "I Love You Truly" are listed among the offenders.

Even with ceremonies where the sentimental ballads are eliminated, there is present all too frequently music of light or trivial character played before the ceremony, or for the processions themselves.

Music whose purpose is merely to entertain the listener is designated as "not appropriate." As for the Wagner and Mendelssohn wedding marches, they may have become "firmly entrenched" through traditional usage but, according to the commission, "they are both open to question for their secular feeling and origin . . ." They could well be replaced by "many fine pieces of organ music" which could "give new life and meaning to the procession." The commission suggested turning to the hymnal for processional music, such as "Praise My Soul, the King of Heaven" selected by Queen Elizabeth II for her wedding.

The commission concluded that emotional as well as intellectual needs to be filled in a marriage service can be done in a dignified way without maudlin sentimentality.

Repentance and the Fall

By James C. Daugherty

And the word of the Lord came to me by the power of the Holy Ghost, saying, Listen to the words of Christ, your Redeemer, your Lord, and your God.

Behold, I came into the world not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance . . . for repentance is unto them that are under condemnation, and under the curse of a broken law.¹

WHAT IS REPENTANCE? How can I know when I need to repent? How shall I go about it? These are the questions many honest and sincere persons have asked themselves again and again without ever arriving at the right answer.

Most people have the desire to be Christlike, but fail because they do not know how. The prophet Hosea once said to Israel, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge; because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee."²

In our generation we are proud of the knowledge we have acquired. Our achievements have made those of the past generations look insignificant. We parade our strength and accomplishments around the earth and before the universe. Yet our progress has become a great Frankenstein. This giant is on the verge of destroying all of man's dreams, because man has not yet learned to repent.

Medical science has discovered how to apply so many of the laws controlling our biological organism that we ought to be the healthiest generation ever to live on this planet. We know better how to eat, to rest our bodies, to build sound nervous systems, to care for our teeth, to balance our diets, to control our emotions, and to produce healthy minds. Yet millions have poor, sick bodies which could be well if they obeyed these laws. A doctor once told me that a study of the major causes of premature deaths shows that, in spite of our increased knowledge, disobedience to known laws of health is more common than obedience. Therefore, to those who will not act in harmony with this truth, such knowledge is useless.

Let us consider man's first experience with knowledge in which good and evil were involved.

And I, the Lord God, formed man from the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul; the first flesh upon the earth, the first man also; . . . And I, the Lord God, planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there I put the man whom I had formed.

And I, the Lord God, planted the tree of life also, in the midst of the garden; and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil.³

This is a picture of the beginning of man's journey upon the earth. Everything had been provided for his full enjoyment. He lacked nothing as far as his physical appetites were concerned. As yet he was as a child, not knowing good from evil. He was pure and innocent, without moral maturity. For to gain moral maturity it was necessary that both good and evil be presented to him in order that he might exercise agency.

. . . And it must needs be that the Devil should tempt the children of men, or they could not be agents unto themselves, for if they never should have bitter, they could not know the sweet.⁴

. . . It must needs be that there was an opposition; even the forbidden fruit in opposition to the tree of life; the one being sweet and the other bitter; wherefore, the Lord God gave unto man, that he should act for himself. Wherefore, man could not act for himself, save it should be that he was enticed by the one or the other.⁵

I believe there were two ways in which man could have learned the nature of evil: one, by complete and unreserved surrender to the will of God; the other, by asserting his own selfish will above that of his Maker and partaking of the forbidden fruit.

The Fall

The Lord forbade man to partake of the tree of knowledge of good and evil without prolonged discipline and self-control because of what it would do to his will power. The tree of the knowledge of good and evil had the power to impart knowledge of evil to man without discipline or education; therefore it was injurious to him; the penalty was death and separation from God.

It seems to me that had Adam accepted God's discipline and been willing to learn through God's teachings, he would have known the true nature of evil without experiencing it. In order for Adam to gain knowledge this way, he would have been required to surrender his will to that of his Creator. After sufficient discipline of his selfish will, he would have received immortality without the taste of death and its sorrows.

Thus it appears that Adam could have received immortality by eating continually of the tree of life. "And now, lest he put forth his hand, and partake also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever."⁶ However, Adam was disobedient to the Lord's command and was driven from the garden so that he would no longer partake of the tree of life in his sinful state and thus make sin immortal. It was a blessing to man that his Creator was an all-knowing God, a God of perfect love and wisdom, or man would have had to live throughout eternity with his sin. There would have been no repentance and certainly no forgiveness of sin. It was the divine love of God that put man in the Garden of Eden, and it was man's rebellion against this love and God's wisdom that drove him out.

The whole story of the fall is symbolic of every sinner's experience. In the beginning man was conscious of God and saw all things as they affected Him. His affections were pure, and he loved God above everything else, receiving his greatest enjoyment in serving God. Then seeking to be a God-man, he became a slave. In seeking independence, he ceased to be master of himself. After the fall self became predominant above everything else, and in his love of self man was ruled by the appetites and desires of his flesh.

Repentance

There was only one way back for fallen man, and that was to repent. Man had chosen the wrong road, and the safest and quickest way to the right road was to go back. It is always hard to go back and say, "I have sinned," and to plead for forgiveness; but there is nothing progressive about being stubborn and refusing to admit guilt. Adam realized that he had transgressed against God and was unworthy to stand in his presence.

And they heard the voice of the Lord God, as they were walking in the garden, in the cool of the day. And Adam and his wife went to hide themselves from the presence of the Lord God, amongst the trees of the garden. And I, the Lord God, called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where goest thou? And he said, I heard thy voice, in the garden, and I was afraid, because I beheld that I was naked, and I hid myself.⁷

Here was the first step in the experience of repentance. Adam had to admit that he had sinned. But admitting his guilt was only the first step. He had to swallow his pride voluntarily and go back to God.

Experience in sinning does not always help the sinner to recognize his sin. The drunkard does not understand the degrading effect of drink so well as his unfortunate wife and hungry children. When sober, he may hate himself because of what he has done. He may even feel sorry for his family and friends he has injured because of his drinking. Yet, when the occasion presents itself, he may repeat his past performance because his physical appetites dominate his will power. He will never be able to overcome the habit until his will is given over to something stronger than the flesh.

Adam did not repent by calling himself hard names. Self-contempt was not the answer. True repentance does not involve self only; it also involves God. The repentant sinner does not ask, "What will my sin bring to me?" but, "What will my sin mean to God?" A sinner must first recognize that he has caused God distress and sorrow because of his sinning, or there can be no true repentance.

God will never force a sinner to repent. It must be free surrender on the part of the sinner. Man, then, must freely surrender his will to God's will. There is no other way.

Repentance and the Atonement

Repentance has no meaning to a person who feels that he has nothing to repent of. Let me reiterate that a sinner cannot overcome his sin without the help of God. Let us again consider Adam's experience with repentance as recorded in the fourth chapter of Genesis of the Inspired Version:

And after many days, an angel of the Lord appeared unto Adam, saying, Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord. And Adam said unto him, I know not, save the Lord commanded me. And then the angel spake, saying, This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth; wherefore, thou shalt do all that thou doest, in the name of the Son. And thou shalt repent, and call upon God, in the name of the Son for evermore.⁸

This appears to have been a new doctrine to Adam. He knew God because he had walked and talked with him in the Garden of Eden. But the idea of God's becoming flesh in the form of the only Begotten Son and atoning for his sin was a new teaching.

However, if this was a new doctrine to Adam (and I believe it was), it was not a new doctrine to the tempter.

And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying, That Satan whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning; and he came before me saying, Behold I, send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore, give me thine honor. But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me; Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever.

Wherefore, because that Satan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him; and also that I should give unto Him mine own power; by the power of mine Only Begotten I caused that he should be cast down; and he became Satan. Yea, even the devil, the father of all lies, to deceive, and to blind men, and to lead them captive at his will, even as many as would not hearken unto my voice.⁹

I am satisfied that if Adam and Eve had known this, they would have been much slower in asserting their own wills without regard to God's will.

Thus man fell inwardly, before the outward act of eating the fruit. He fell in that one fundamental determination whereby he made supreme choice of self instead of God. This sin of the inmost nature gave rise to sins of the desire, and sins of desire led to outward acts of transgression. Man no longer made God the end of his life, but chose self instead.¹⁰

In choosing self, he became the center of his universe. "Every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god,"¹¹ thus making God subservient to him and his purpose.

This was in harmony with Satan's plan for man. He wanted man to think he could become as God, knowing all things—. . . then your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil."¹² However, neither man nor Satan knew the complete mind and will of God.

Because of his foreknowledge of his creation, God saw this happen and thus made plans for man's redemption. He created man for the express purpose of sharing eternal life with him. But if man, because of his agency and free will, refused eternal life by partaking of the tree of knowledge then another plan would be offered. That was the sending of his only Begotten Son to atone by the shedding of his blood. ("In whom we have redemption through his blood,"¹³ and ". . . without shedding of blood is no remission."¹⁴) The purposes of God for man were not to be frustrated. In the end God's word was to be victorious.

. . . and there is no end to my works, neither to my words; for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man.¹⁵

It would be hard to conceive of a supreme and all-intelligent God who would create in his own likeness a creature possessing intelligence, agency, and free will, but destining the fall regardless of how hard he tried to prevent it. This would have been not only foolish but also a waste of time. However, I can conceive of God's creating the laws of good and evil and letting his creatures choose whom they would serve.

I can also envision a Holy Creator who loved his children so much that even if they did choose evil, he would not let them go and would use every effort to win them back without destroying their agency. God's sense of justice and mercy would not let him do otherwise. Thus, his holiness required the atonement of man's sins, and his love provided for it.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life.¹⁶

Also, in the words of Abinadi:

... I would that ye should understand that God himself shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people; and because he dwelleth in flesh, he shall be called the Son of God.¹⁷

God could not send another to atone and still be a Holy Being. He himself had to become flesh and do it. Therefore, God the Son became flesh and dwelt among men and was crucified on the cross that men's sins might be forgiven.

Our Share in the Fall

The Scriptures teach us that the transgression of our first parents caused their posterity to be sinners. "Through the one man's disobedience, the many were made sinners."¹⁸ So Adam's sin is charged to every member of the race of which he is the head. Having poisoned the fountain, he corrupted the stream. It is because of Adam's sin that we are born subject to transgression and need to repent and be forgiven. "In Adam all die."¹⁹ "So death passed unto all men, for all have sinned."²⁰ Through one man, sin entered into the world. In other words, Adam's sin is responsible for the sin, guilt, and condemnation of all his posterity, because Adam and his posterity are one. Because of their organic unity, the sin of Adam is the sin of the race.

What Christ Did for Us

Notice, however, that this guilt which Christ took upon himself by his union with humanity was not the guilt of personal sin. Such guilt belongs to every adult of the human race; nor did he take upon himself the sin of inherited corruption—such guilt that belongs to infants and to those who have not come to moral consciousness. But Jesus did take upon himself Adam's guilt and sin, which belonged—prior to personal transgression and apart from inherited corruption—to every member of the race who has derived his life from Adam's life. Christ took to himself the shame of humanity (Romans 5: 11) as the mother takes upon herself the daughter's shame, repenting and suffering because of it.

This was the sin that Christ came to atone so that Adam's posterity might be free from the guilt of the original sin.

And our father Adam spake unto the Lord, and said, Why is it that men must repent, and be baptized in water?

And the Lord said unto Adam, Behold, I have forgiven thee thy transgression in the garden of Eden.

Hence came the saying abroad among the people, that the Son of God hath atoned for original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children, for they are whole from the foundation of the world.²¹

In atoning for the original sin, he made it plain that man was also to share in the atonement, through repentance and baptism. There seems to be an inherent law that requires an atonement for every sin that is committed. Paul implied this in writing to Timothy, when he said, "Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after."²² Preaching on the day of Pentecost, Peter was asked by his hearers what they should do. He told them, "Repent, and be baptized . . . in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."²³

Thus repentance not only opens the door but also becomes the motivating power by which sinners obtain "at-onement" with God. It brings about the reconciliation of God and man through Jesus Christ.

Repentance and the New Birth

It was because of the fall that men needed to repent, but the atonement furnished man the power to repent. "The Scriptures teach us that Christ's death put us right with God and gave us a fresh start and that his death washed out the original sin, and that by his dying, Christ disabled death itself and made it possible for us to overcome death."²⁴ Only through Jesus Christ can this be made possible.

When man first departed from God and yielded to the voice of the adversary he became a rebel. In other words, fallen man is not only an imperfect creature who needs improvement, but he is an enemy of God and must lay down his arms and surrender. This surrendering process is called repentance. Repentance isn't fun. It is more than child's play. It is something harder than eating humble pie. It means unlearning all conceit and self-will that has been a part of us for centuries. It means crucifying a part of ourselves and undergoing a kind of death.

It is impossible for us to repent and kill the selfishness that is in us by ourselves. God must help us. And the only way he can is for us to surrender our wills fully to his. If we ask him to take us back any other way we are the same as a thief and a robber. Christ is the door and through him is the only possible way back to God.

God became man in Christ that he might die for us, and the only way he could die was to become man. Our human nature which can suffer and die was fused with the nature of God, and the two became one. He could surrender his will and suffer and die because he was man and could also do it perfectly because he was God. We could not have shared God's dying unless Christ died, and he could not have died unless he became man.

This in a sense is the way he suffered and died for us that our sins might be forgiven, although he was not required to do so. In Christ a new kind of life appeared; and the new kind of life which began in Christ can be put in us by repentance and the new birth.

The purpose of the new birth is to reproduce in us what has always been there but became obscure because of our sinning. We were created in the image and likeness of God. That image became scarred and mutilated as man's selfishness multiplied. Man's vision of Christ became dimmer as man became more selfish, too often the human factor between man and God. Repentance and the new birth change this scene and put Christ where he belongs so that humans see him rather than themselves. Paul says we are "baptized into Jesus Christ,"²⁵ not Christ into us. Our personalities take on the personality of Christ; Christ does not take on ours.

The apostle Paul, in writing to the Galatian saints, reiterates this by saying:

I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me.²⁶

Paul seemed to indicate he had to die of himself before Christ could live in him. It seems to me this is the real meaning of the new birth. The image of Christ had always been there, but it lacked expression because of man's selfishness. It reminds me of a picture we had of my father. Time had almost erased the image. In fact, all that was left for the naked eye to see were a few lines. One day I took it to a studio and asked if anything could be done with it. Photographers put it under a strong microscope and were able to see faint lines of the image I could not detect with my naked eye. I was told that it could be reproduced at a considerable cost. I told them to go ahead, and after months of hard work they reproduced the image almost exactly.

There is no question in my mind that the image of God is in each of us and is only waiting for us to give expression to it.

We have glimpses of Christ expressing himself in the city of Enoch, in the prophets, and in the saints of the first century. Even in our day our hearts have been warmed by the expression of the Holy Spirit. This expression of the Holy Spirit has always become more pronounced in the reborn, and when Christ told Nicodemus about the new birth, it was no idle talk. The only language that Jesus could use to signify the importance of repentance was being born again. The act itself portrayed the mind and will of God because it was the symbol of his death and resurrection. All the yearnings of the past and the hopes of the future are caught up in burying the old man and putting on the new.

And the first-fruits of repentance is baptism; and baptism cometh by faith, unto the fulfilling of the commandments; and the fulfilling the commandments bringeth remission of sins; and remission of sins bringeth meekness, and lowliness of heart; and because of . . . lowliness of heart, cometh the visitation of the Holy Ghost, which Comforter filleth with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer, until the end shall come, when all the saints shall dwell with God.²⁷

Repentance and the Lord's Supper

And behold, I say unto you, that if ye do this, ye shall always rejoice, and be filled with the love of God, and always retain a remission of your sins.²⁸

The Lord realized that after a person was baptized and received remission of his sins, it would be necessary for him to retain that remission. A baptized person does not become perfect overnight. Long years of habit are bound to be so ingrained in his personality and actions that it is almost impossible for him to sin no longer.

From my own experience I know that the habits I had built over a long period of time were still a part of me after I was baptized. I still smoked; I still could remember the dirty stories I heard; my sense of values was virtually the same. The self had not changed much. I had a desire to do better, but often found that, like Paul, "when I would do good, evil is present with me." Even though baptism gave me a new start, I was a long way from my destination. I had to learn good before I could use it to overcome evil. I am sure the Lord had this in mind when he sent forth his disciples to preach his Word.

. . . all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.²⁹

In other words, the power to overcome evil must come from Christ. He is the victor over Satan, who is the father of evil. It is through Christ that we receive our spiritual strength to overcome sin. It is when we take Christ into our hearts that salvation becomes a reality.

And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.

But I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.³⁰

Jesus goes on to say:

Verily, verily I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. . . . For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.³¹

The Lord's Supper then becomes identified with the atonement and baptism. In each factor repentance is a vital principle. Repentance is just as important to the Lord's Supper as it is to baptism. If, in the partaking of the Communion, there is forgiveness of sin, then repentance must precede the act.

And I have given unto you another law and commandment; wherefore teach unto your children, that all men, everywhere, must repent, or they can in no wise inherit the kingdom of God. . . .

Therefore I give unto you a commandment, to teach these things freely unto your children, saying, that by reason of transgression cometh the fall, which fall bringeth death; and inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water and blood, and the spirit, which I have made, and so become of dust a living soul:

Even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of my Only Begotten; that ye may be sanctified from all sin; and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come; even immortal glory.

For, by the water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified; and by the blood ye are sanctified.³²

And as they were eating, Jesus took bread and brake it, and blessed it, and gave to his disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is in remembrance of my body which I give a ransom for you.

And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it. For this is in remembrance of my blood of the new testament, which is shed for as many as shall believe on my name, for the remission of their sins.³³

Thus the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the broken body and shed blood, symbolizes the atoning death upon the cross. It is implied that those who partake of the bread and wine with faith in Christ and repentant hearts will obtain remission of their sins and receive other benefits of his passion.

At the same time the sacrament is not only symbolic of his death but of his resurrection and ascension as well. He does not say, "Do this in remembrance of my death," but "Do this in remembrance of me."

He chose the sacrament of the Lord's Supper to declare his true Divinity. What less than divine can he be, whose death atones for the original sin, gives forgiveness to the reborn, and reconciles the human race to God?

It is very significant that those who partake must do so in humility and with a repentant heart if they are to receive full benefit of God's grace.

In summary, repentance is a voluntary change in the mind of the sinner in which he turns from sin. Being essentially a change in the mind, it involves a change in view, a change of feeling, and a change of purpose.

A repentant sinner does not ask, "What will my sin bring to me?" but "What will my sin mean to God?"

Repentance is real sorrow for sin committed against goodness and justice and God.

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance; for ye were made sorry after a godly manner . . . godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation. . . .³⁴

Repentance is an inward turning from sin and a disposition to seek pardon and cleansing.

Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me.³⁵

Turn ye again now, every one from his evil way, and from the evil of your doings.³⁶

Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ.³⁷

Despise thou the riches of his goodness, and forbearance and long suffering, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeeth thee to repentance?³⁸

Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion: seek not for riches but for wisdom: and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich. . . .

Verily, verily I say unto you, Even as you desire of me, so shall it be unto you; and if you desire, you shall be the means of doing much good in this generation. Say nothing but repentance unto this generation: keep my commandments, and assist to bring forth my work according to my commandments, and you shall be blessed.³⁹

"Let Us Go on Unto Perfection"

By W. J. Haworth

PERFECTION IS THE GOAL of sainthood. But what does perfection mean? It is defined as "the state of being perfect" and perfect means "without blemish, fault, or error." Critical examination of the Scriptures in which the term occurs reveals the fact that Christ gives to the obedient convert a perfect start and leaves him to work out, with the assistance of the Holy Spirit, a perfect end.

Writing of this perfect start, the author of the Hebrew letter indicates, "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified" (Hebrews 10: 14, Inspired Version). The apostle, however, does not leave us in doubt that he refers to the start of the saint toward the goal of perfection.

He amplifies the statement by writing:

Whereof the Holy Ghost is a witness to us; for after that he hath said before, This is the covenant I will make with thee after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now where remission of these [sins] is, there is no more offering for sin.—15-18.

This perfect beginning creates a new being in Christ Jesus:

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted . . . in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection; Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin.—Romans 6: 3-7.

THE HOLY GHOST is God's witness to us of the covenant we have made with him. He writes his laws into our hearts and minds. His witness comforts us in our trials and is ever solicitous of the spiritual progress we are making. He is sorely grieved if he sees us falling from grace. Some saints of all ages have failed to see the necessity of growing into mature spiritual persons.

In the fifth chapter of Hebrews the writer rebukes some saints for their failure to develop spiritually, and says that they have become as babes in Christ capable of assimilating only the milk of the gospel and not able to take "many things" about Jesus which are reserved for saints of fuller growth. In the following chapter he tells them the beginning principles of the doctrine of Christ.

They are not to leave off teaching and practicing these first things about Christ—repentance from dead works, of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, of the laying on of hands, of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. He admonishes them to go on from these principles unto perfection. It seems from the context (Hebrews 6: 3), however, that some will not be permitted to "go on" to full growth in Christ:

And we will go on unto perfection if God permit. For he hath made it impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and been made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to be renewed again unto repentance; seeing they crucify unto themselves the Son of God, and put him to an open shame.—Hebrews 6: 3-6. (Also verses 7 and 8 and chapter 10.)

John, in the early chapters of Revelation, calls upon the saints of the churches of Asia (some were "dead while they lived" and others were lukewarm) to repent, and in some cases to do their first works over again. It is apparent, however, that the purpose of God is not for the saints to reach perfection through doing their first works over and over again.

"Like as a father pitieth his children," so God pities the saint who struggles against sinful desires. The Holy Spirit will speak within such a person through the still small voice of a divinely stimulated conscience; but there is a point at which the Spirit of God will cease to strive with him. To reject the Spirit of Grace, to trample under foot the blood of the covenant through which one was sanctified and count it an unholy thing, is to sin willfully, and incur the judgment of God (Hebrews 10: 28-31).

To avoid this spiritual calamity the Lord has provided help for his saints:

1. The power-giving ministry of the Holy Spirit;
2. The ministry of the Three Standard Books of the church;
3. The ever-solicitous ministry of the various orders of priesthood;
4. Association with a total church membership steadily going on unto perfection.

The Savior promised the obedient "power to become" sons of God (John 1: 12; also Doctrine and Covenants 34: 1; 39: 1). Surely the saint who attains this goal will have reached perfection or full growth!

THE COMING TO MORTAL LIFE of the Savior involved a startling departure from laws relating to the propagation of species. It revealed new and miraculous powers of the Almighty as a procreant. God introduced a "mortal-time" period into the eternal existence of his Son. The Savior told Nicodemus that his Father employs similar powers to bring obedient believers into the divine family. He said: "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3: 3). How the new birth is accomplished was no greater problem to the young ruler than it is to anyone today who fails to "see" the divine procreant at work in the prescribed new birth. As the divine and human were blended in the birth of Jesus, so the Holy Spirit and the earthly element of water are associated in the rebirth of obedient believers: "Except a man be born of water, and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (verse 5).

Frankly we cannot explain the miracle of the new birth. The Savior said: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one who is born of the Spirit" (verse 8). The unexplained mystery of the spiritual birth is quite on a par with the miracle of physical birth. It is scientifically established that the basis of all life is protoplasm. Consider the propagation of life on this basis! Two minute cells of this basic material meet and a miracle in the shape of a man with an immortal soul is wrought. Two other cells meet, and a lily grows. Men accept the miracles of God when he works with protoplasm; yet many fail to recognize the divine Procreant when he works with water and the Spirit!

EARLY IN HIS YOUTH Jesus said, "I do always those things which please my Father." In pursuance of this policy he went to Jordan where John was baptizing and demanded baptism. After the immersion, as Jesus went up out of the water, the heavens were opened to John, and he saw the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove descending and lighting upon the Master. Simultaneously, he heard the Almighty announce, "This is my Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matthew 3: 46, I.V.). Thus, with the approving voice ringing in his ears, the Savior, as the Son of Man, took the first step toward perfection.

"Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him" (Hebrews 5: 8, 9). The perfection to which we are urged to press is closely linked with the efforts of the Master in the same direction. "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings."—Hebrews 2: 10.

"Must I be borne to paradise on flowery beds of ease?" asks a familiar hymn. The whole of it negates the idea of lazy progress toward perfection. If we hope for that perfection in which the saved shall be glorified with Jesus, we must learn that "if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together" (Romans 8: 17). What did Christ suffer that he might be made perfect? First, he suffered leaving heaven to take a mission to earth. Second, he laid off for a time the nature of the Godhead and became a man, suffering many of the things which the Saints must endure today. He did without the things the true Saint denies himself of. He suffered baptism, because it became him to fulfill all righteousness (Matthew 3: 45). He was obedient even unto death on the cross. Sometimes we sing, "The Way of the Cross Leads Home," and that is just it—obedience, the way of the cross leads to perfection.

THE LIFE OF JESUS was not all austerity. Although he fasted in the desert, he also feasted at the marriage in Cana of Galilee. Weary with tramping over the hills of Samaria he found joy in talking to the woman at the well. After climbing a mountain and spending a night there, he came down with the divine message through which twelve apostles were called. While the parables show that in his walks through the fields, he noted the sweat, toils, and disappointments of the sowers of seeds, he also rejoiced with them at harvest time. To his servants who had been sent out without purse or scrip he said, "Consider the lilies of the field, they toil not, neither do they spin, and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

When he witnessed the exultation of the Pharisee who thanked God that he was not like a certain lowly man, Christ prayed in contrast for his lowly disciples, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes" (Matthew 11: 27). The verses following explain that the "babes" are those to whom the Master reveals the truth.

He wept over erring Jerusalem, but rejoiced in the healing of the woman who touched the hem of his garment, and delighted in the poor widow who cast two mites into the treasury. He loved the brook, Kedron, and sought the solitude of the garden of Gethsemane. Triumphant in the final suffering that sealed his perfection, he cried in exultation: "It is finished!" That was no cry of frustration, but the shout of victory!

In Gethsemane he had envisioned it when he prayed: "I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work thou gavest me to do" (John 17: 4). Knowing that his "hour had come," He prayed, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done. And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him" (Luke 22: 42, 43). The "It is finished" of Calvary links up with his "signing off" prayer in Gethsemane. His earthly mission was accomplished. He was going home—but not empty handed. As the Captain of Salvation, he had brought some "sons unto glory." Now in the lonely garden he prayed:

As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word: That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; . . . And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one. . . . —John 17: 18-23.

Unfortunately, there have always been saints who, like those admonished in Hebrews 5 and 6, have marked time after obeying the first principles, instead of marching steadily on the spiritual road to perfection. Writing in somewhat the same vein to the Corinthian saints, Paul expressed the thought:

When that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. When I was a child I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now we see through a glass, darkly, but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.—I Corinthians 13: 10-12.

IT IS APPARENT that perfection, completeness, or the attainment of full growth in saintly living, each connotes the final phase of "becoming sons of God," with concomitant endowment of godly vision and intellectual powers. In the meantime the entire living body of the church should be earnestly endeavoring to take the "old, old path"—that is a daily preparation—for the perfection of sons of God. The Heavenly Father has provided help for all in this spiritual development:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we, in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine—Ephesians 4: 11-14, I.V.

The work of the ministry can be performed lawfully only by those whom God has called and caused to be ordained by men having authority. The Saints can receive great help in their quest for perfection if they will heed the teaching of these God-ordained men. It is good to accept the help of living men as well as reading the instruction of men of the past. Colossians 3 gives details for Christlike living. We can receive great help from the teachings of Alma, Mosiah, and others. And latter-day revelation is prolific in such help:

Listen to the voice of the Lord your God, even Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, whose course is one eternal round, the same today as yesterday and for ever. I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who was crucified for the sins of the world, even as many as believe in my name, that they may become the sons of God, even one in me, as I am in the Father, as the Father is one in me, that we may be one.—Doctrine and Covenants 34: 1.

Hearken and listen to the voice of him who is from eternity to all eternity, the great I AM, even Jesus Christ, the life and light of the world; a light which shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not; the same which came in the meridian of time unto my own, and my own received me not; but to as many as received me, gave I power to become my sons, and even so will I give unto as many as will receive me, power to become my sons.—Doctrine and Covenants 39: 1.

The context indicates that after repentance and baptism by water "cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which showeth all things, and teacheth the peaceable things of the kingdom" (paragraph 2). These are the very things we should seek to know (Also 41: 1, 2).

WITH THE SPIRITUAL ADVICE available to us in the Scriptures and those precious things that may be taught us by the Holy Spirit we should make a success of living the life of the spiritual mind. Unregenerate persons live on the sensory plane and seek constant gratification of the desire for sense pleasures. Such follow the life of the carnal or fleshly minded. The true Saint has crucified the old man of sin and is endeavoring to "go on to perfection" of mind and spirit. We are warned: "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Romans 8: 13, 14).

The manifestation of the sons of God will finalize the "becoming" of the faithful Saints: "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God" (Romans 8: 19). In the meantime, "the heat is on"—the nerve war of the powers of evil. The Savior foretold the trials of the Saints of these times in Mark 13: 20-27. The saints of all ages "the salt of the earth," "the light of the world," "the little leaven that leaveneth the entire lump"—have faced dire persecutions and similar temptations to those which face us. To go on in the face of all these things is to "go on to perfection." But the "salt must not lose its savor," the "light" must never be placed "under a bushel" of near-worldliness; the leaven or yeast of the kingdom must keep on working. After all, we say we love it—the "working"!

WHAT A GLORIOUS GOAL is ours—to share in the perfection or completeness of the era in which our converts, together with ourselves, and the saints of all ages shall be revealed as the sons of God! Heaven joins in the task. The Son of the Highest left the courts above and came to earth to begin the work. An angel chorus sang the inaugural anthem. Men were called and ordained to participate in the task. Jesus taught them the object lesson of living the gospel which he preached, finally offering his peerless life to make it effective in "bringing many sons unto glory."

Conquering death and the grave, he rejoined his disciples for a time, and after forty days ascended to heaven. What a testimony it was to the apostles for him to show himself "alive after his passion by many infallible proofs" and finally, to be witnesses to his ascension! What a drive these experiences must have been to the carrying out of the commission he had given them! After Pentecost, and the bestowal of the Holy Ghost to give power to their message, they threw themselves into the task, in spite of the direst opposition. All of the apostles and multitudes of those who accepted the Christ-evangel died violent deaths. It has never been a popular thing to be a saint—a true follower of the Nazarene—but in spite of all the challenges of evil we are admonished to go on unto perfection, or to a full growth in Christ.

ZION SHALL COME FORTH of all the creations which God has made. Thus the entire family of Jesus will be gathered together in the great day of perfection or completeness, full grown:

And the Lord said unto Enoch, As I live, even so will I come in the last days—in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you, concerning the children of Noah; and the day shall come that the earth shall rest, but before that day, shall the heavens be darkened, and the veil of darkness shall cover the earth, . . . and great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven; and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of my Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men; and righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as a flood, to gather out mine own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12.

Without doubt this is the perfect end which stems from the perfect start Jesus gave us at our initial obedience. Those who attain purity of heart will have reached the perfection that will entitle them to a part in that Holy City, Zion, the New Jerusalem—the city now being prepared at the Center Place and the regions round about. Some of us who live on the periphery of the kingdom may never have a mortal inheritance there, but we surely know that as certainly as we reach the condition of purity of heart we shall be part of Zion. What a glorious end has been prepared by the Master for those who continue to keep on!

And the Lord said unto Enoch, Then shall you and all your city meet them there, and we will receive them into our bosom, and they shall see us, and we will fall upon their necks, and they will fall upon our necks, and we will kiss each other, and there shall be my abode, and it shall be Zion which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made; and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 13.

Trusting in God

By Mrs. Ernest O. Sherman

*Where wilt thou put thy trust?
In a frail form of clay
That to its element of dust
Must soon resolve away?*

WE SING THIS SONG, and often while we sing a deep longing spreads through our beings to completely trust God. But because life and its many problems block our pathway in this world of material things we sometimes lose this important link of trust in God.

In 1929 when material things were rated highly, my husband and I were seated in a reunion prayer service. One of our stake officials arose to bear his testimony. He related an experience in which he had been shown that it was not the eagle on the American dollar that would redeem Zion.

After services we discussed this testimony and decided the eagle stood for the power and might of the dollar and that was not the way Zion would be. Instead it would be by the motto found on coins: "In God We Trust."

Brother Roy Weldon's article "Unforgettable Experiences" in a recent Herald warned: "The handwriting is on the wall; all worldly things in which men trust will be destroyed. Only the Restoration Movement will survive the storms and floods and desolation to come upon Babylon."

Where does that leave us? We must trust in God if we would survive and accomplish our mission.

Our farm paper carried a statement by Walter R. Courtney to the Toledo small business session.

He related the origin of this motto which appears on many of our coins. In 1864 many people became concerned about the disintegrating influences at work in the land. Some of them came to President Lincoln asking him to select a verse of Scripture to be inscribed upon our coins. Mr. Chase, the Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Lincoln, liked the idea, but they asked, "What verse?" An army chaplain suggested the middle verse in the Bible which is Psalm 118, verse 8: "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man."

Said Mr. Chase: "It's too long."

Mr. Lincoln paced thoughtfully back and forth for awhile and then exclaimed, "I'll fix it for you. 'In God We Trust.'"

Mr. Courtney concluded his story by saying, "The coins that jingle in our pockets today contain an abbreviated form of a message from the center of God's revelation to man. Our coins advise us individually to trust God, and it is well that they do, for the only security men can find is spiritual."

When we can say, "In God we trust," and follow him unhesitatingly, we will build the kingdom, and Zion will be a living reality instead of a cherished dream.

Daughter of the Pioneers

The Autobiography of Christiana Stedman Salyards

PART V

To Pray, or Not to Pray?

I may have been ten or twelve years old when I stood that night irresolute at my bedside, debating for the first time whether to go to bed without saying the prayer or to continue it. I settled the matter by deciding to say my evening prayer. Perhaps that decision was a momentous one for me. I continued from that time to say the prayer my mother taught me until my spirit awoke within me sufficiently to voice its own petitions to heaven.

The environment in which I grew up was not a very religious one. Our immediate neighbors, who attended church, were either Lutheran or Catholic, but the majority were not churchgoers. I was nine years old before I went to Sunday school. Then I went with two little German neighbors to the Methodist church, although they were of Lutheran parentage and afterward were baptized and confirmed members of that faith.

If I learned anything at all in Sunday school I do not know now what it was, but I conceived a deep respect and loyal affection for the only Sunday school teacher I ever had. She was a teacher in a rural school—a kind, gentle spinster, with whom I had no contact outside of church. In class we sat on a low bench at her feet, and while she tried to teach us some verses of Scripture that had no meaning for us, I sat and admired her green cashmere dress and the shiny kid gloves that encased her slender hands or lay in her lap.

Though I have no definite recollection of anything I learned in Sunday school, I may have absorbed more of good than I realize. I used to take books home from the library, and I learned religious songs and hymns and imbibed something of the spirit of worship. And if I was not taught religion formally in my home, I learned things there for which I revere the memory of both my parents and for which I shall not cease to honor them.

In all my experience I never have known a woman more gracious toward the poor than my mother; and my father, though a taciturn man, had a heart of kindness for those in need. He did not know the scriptural injunction, "Love ye therefore the stranger . . . for ye know the heart of a stranger," but from stern experience he knew the heartsickness of a stranger in a strange land and was quick to respond to its appeal.

Mercy

One evening as Father and Mother sat on the porch in their chairs, and I, a little girl, sat on a low step at the end of the porch, an elderly man came by carrying a bundle on a stout stick over his shoulder. Addressing my father, he asked permission to sleep in our barn that night. Father was so deliberate in replying that I began to be very anxious, but when he had removed his pipe and had blown away the smoke, he said, "No, I am afraid of fire; I could not let you sleep in my barn; but come into my house and sleep."

Those were merciful words from one who knew the heart of a stranger! They filled me with gladness for the man waiting outside the gate, and Mother arose in all her hospitality and welcomed him, setting before him conveniences for washing himself and giving him food and drink before assigning him his bed for the night. We kept him with us for two weeks, for he was sick with ague. When he recovered he went on his way to his distant destination in the state of New York.

"The Quiet Aisle of Prayer"

My young feet did not often press those quiet aisles, and though I may have missed something the title implies, on the whole I cannot regret it deeply; for when finally I came to the church of the living God, it was with a heart free from religious bias, ready for the impress of the doctrine of his Son.

But once, when still a small girl, by some chance I was in a crowded revival meeting where fervent appeals were being made to those in the congregation to give themselves to Christ. They were singing: "Come to Jesus; come to Jesus; come to Jesus just now!" Many were pressing forward to kneel at the altar, and a little friend and I stepped out into the carpeted aisle and tiptoed to the front of the church.

Timidly following in the wake of older people, we found a place at the rail and knelt there side by side, bowing our heads as we saw others doing. And then Frankie's hat cut an unexpected caper. It slid from her head and rolled away on its stiff brim across the platform to the feet of a row of ministers who sat there. With her little red head bowed in the attitude of prayer, Frankie was filled with confusion, and I was full of sympathetic anxiety over the recovery of the hat.

The next day I went back to school and my lessons and forgot the revival meeting. I was not religiously awake, for the time for that awakening had not arrived.

I did not deliberately plan to quit going to Sunday school, but when I was about thirteen years old I stopped going. Some trivial thing at first that then seemed great was the deterrent influence, and later others that interfered lengthened my absence into months and years. Sunday school was a thing of the past.

My world was enlarging. High school and its work were engaging my attention, and I also had to do a share of the work of our home. Mother worked with us, but the time never came when the burdens that belonged to us children were permitted to fall on her shoulders. The fact that I had increasingly heavy school work did not make me immune to working at home. The content of many a composition was thought out while I plied the dasher of the churn on the back porch. A deep inward satisfaction followed as I acquired the ability to bake the bread for the family table, and the thrills of quiet pleasure I experienced from scrubbing our big kitchen floor spotlessly clean after having swept it have never been surpassed by any ordinary accomplishment.

I rinsed that floor with much clean water, for one of my grandmothers told me sagely I never could have a clean floor with dirty water.

A Use for Sunday

When I was large enough and sufficiently strong, I took my place at one of the tubs on washday and practiced the now almost extinct art of rubbing clothes on the washboard and wringing them dry by hand.

So the days of work passed by quickly and Sunday came, resolving itself naturally into a day of rest and pleasant leisure. In the quiet hour of the morning, when the breakfast work was over and all the house was in order, I found time to read the current news of what was transpiring in the world outside of my narrow sphere. On one of those mornings I read of the invention of the telephone, regarding as a canard the item that stated that music rendered in Chicago had been heard in Peoria, Illinois, a distance of one hundred sixty miles. Today we are more credulous, ready to believe almost anything we hear in the way of the achievements of science. Men walk the beds of the ocean now, hop its wide expanse in a few hours, and soar with incredible speed beyond the clouds that veil them from our sight.

We talk easily half way around the world.

I usually spent Sunday afternoons with a book on my knee, alternately reading and watching the stream of promenaders who passed our home on a much-traveled street. Looking back on those times, I realize that it is possible for us to be in the world and not of it—to live on friendly terms with the people about us without entering into things we do not approve or enjoy.

Bands played on those fair Sunday mornings, and processions of people in gala attire set forth to picnics in the woods; public gardens opened their gates, and theaters, their doors; refined and friendly neighbors occupied their leisure in casino parties—but it was all remote from me, though I was in the midst of it. Early in life there had entered into my heart from some source a reverence for the Sabbath, and even in the years when I did not go to Sunday school or church services I did not desecrate the holy day.

Revival Meetings

At different times in those years I attended revival meetings when churches that ordinarily were but sparsely filled were crowded to the doors. I went home from such meetings in an uncomfortable state of mind, unwilling to make the public profession of faith suggested by those in charge of the meetings and not quite satisfied with myself for what seemed like a renunciation of Christ. I was not willing to go forward but was unhappy in holding back.

When I was eighteen years old I no longer withstood the appeal. I had reached the age of decision and felt myself confronted by the necessity of choosing whether to acknowledge openly that I believed in Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world and desired him to be a personal Savior to me.

It was at the time of a union revival meeting in our city. When we read the published announcement of the contemplated meetings and the name of the evangelist who was to conduct them, Mother recalled that she had known somewhat intimately a family of that name in the same place from which the evangelist hailed.

Secretly, I did not wish to go, dreading the uncomfortable feelings the revival would arouse in me; and I was relieved when the first week went by and every evening something prevented our going to church. On the evening of the second Sunday of the revival, some of our young folks suddenly decided to go; and one came into the room where I sat reading and said, "Come, Anna, we're going to the revival."

I went with them, saying nothing of the reluctance I felt. The church was an inviting place with a spacious, high ceiling and brilliant lights. The singing was led by trained voices, and the evangelist was a man of pleasing personality. When the congregation broke softly into the old hymn:

Just as I am without one plea
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bidst me come to thee,
O Lamb of God, I come, I come, something within me made instant response, and I could have given myself without reservation.

But when the invitation was given to rise and confess faith in Christ, the others of the group I was with sat still, and so did I. In the worldly town in which I lived, to make public profession of being a Christian would have been to incur ridicule, to which most young people are sensitive. But I went to the revival the next night on my own volition. The text the revivalist chose for the theme of his sermon was "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

She Stood Up

When the invitation to accept Christ was given that night, I stood without hesitation, and I attended after that to the end of the revival. Night after night I arose in all earnestness, and from the depths of my young heart I sang the glad new song:

I've reached the land of corn and wine,
And all its riches freely mine,
Here shines undimmed one blissful day,
For all my night has passed away.

But when I was removed from the environment of the revival, when I knelt alone beside my bed and prayed, I was keenly aware that my night had not passed away; and instead of experiencing the joy I had expected, I was deeply troubled. In full faith I had taken to my soul the comforting promise:

Just as I am Thou wilt receive,
Wilt comfort, pardon, cleanse, relieve,
Because thy promise I believe;
O Lamb of God, I come, I come.

But when I prayed in all contrition of spirit and with what faith I was able to summon, no answer came, and I was disappointed.

I had taken literally the promise that I should have the assurance from God that I was accepted by him. Peace had not come to my soul, but a deeply anxious feeling had. I began to fear I must be exceptionally unworthy, because I did not receive the divine assurance I had expected. I was not willing to go on simply believing God heard me and knew my repentance and my desire to be his child. I felt that in so serious a matter I was entitled to know from him.

I went often to my room to pray, not long prayers but very sincere ones. I grew so quiet and preoccupied that my mother observed it and suggested I turn my thoughts to other things. My eleven-year-old sister said roguishly in my hearing, "Nan's been good for two weeks." I was trying—oh, how hard I was trying—to be worthy of acceptance by the Lord. And there came nothing to indicate that he heard my prayers or had any interest in me.

Mother got out the big family Bible and tried to teach me what her Latter Day Saint parents had taught her, and my Methodist grandmother from the corner where she sat sewing joined in with something about the Trinity and the Godhead that only added to the confused condition of my mind; so I worried along until one evening near the close of the revival an opportunity came to disclose my perplexity to the evangelist himself.

"Something Wrong"

My cousin Jennie and I had arrived in the church early, and he came down at once and engaged her in conversation, urging her to rise that night and confess her faith in Christ. She maintained stoutly that she could believe in Christ without rising in a revival meeting. I sat a silent listener as they debated the matter, inwardly longing to unburden my heart to him for relief.

Finally he turned to me, saying, "Let me see; I believe you are one of our converts." I answered eagerly that I was, and then he said, "And you feel better, don't you?" My opportunity had come, and I blurted out appealingly, "No, sir; I think I feel worse." He gave me one cold, surprised stare and turned away, saying, "Well, there is something wrong." Under his unsympathetic tones I shrank back within myself to find my way as best I could through the darkness to light.

There was, indeed, something wrong, and five years later I learned what it was. I found it was not in the girl who was not satisfied with sweet, religious emotionalism but who required something more authoritative than the assurances of men that she was accepted of God.

When the strain of the revival was over I settled down again to my work. I had been graduated from high school soon after my seventeenth birthday and had become a schoolteacher, so I was busy. Though I did not unite with any of the churches of our city, I was conscious of a change in myself. I felt that I was a humble follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, and I made a sincere effort to live a life consistent with what I had expressed publicly.

The Selfishness of Brotherhood

By L. W. Newcombe

A Department for Debatable Topics

The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors.

PROBABLY THE INCENTIVE that moves or actuates men most is that of selfishness. Of course many acts are performed from purely altruistic motives without thought or hope of reward; but even here good returns may be expected, since "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Indeed the greatest joy we can receive may be the product of the act of giving, and it is difficult to state exactly when selfishness entirely disappears—if ever.

When man left the Garden of Eden, he was obliged to earn his food by the sweat of his brow, and apparently he chose to eat rather than die. Incidentally in eating he gained enjoyment, because eating satisfied a craving in his system which gave happiness. There are numerous cravings of the physical body—for air, heat, water, light, exercise, etc. Breathing in the freshness and beauty of nature in the early dawn brings a joy to the senses that is among the greatest satisfactions in living. Our system craves these sensations, and we thrill in contemplation and joyous realization.

The Psalmist has said, "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." Who can doubt that all of these are good, even though somewhat selfish? Man is so made as to be incomplete, his life shallow and futile, until he becomes acquainted with the esthetic and spiritual. For nature and nature's God are the environment of the soul—"in him we live and move and have our being."

Life is valuable only to the extent of our contacts and associations.

There are individuals who seem satisfied with eating three square meals a day and perhaps reading adventure stories. Others enlarge their circle of acquaintance and extend their environment to take in their neighbors. Their enjoyment and life become even fuller as they extend their thinking into the fields of literature, science, political, social and religious life, for "life consisteth not in the abundance of the things a man possesseth," but in the vision of realities, for "without vision the people perish."

Christ has said, "This is eternal life, to know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." This is extending our environment about as far as we can hope to, since we can reach such knowledge of God only by living and working in harmony with his laws as revealed through nature or personal contact. The value of these contacts is sensed by the soul and becomes the incentive of every man's seeking.

PERHAPS MAN AS A CREATURE made in "God's likeness" is so very important that he should spend his energies on himself and the attaining of his own happiness. Was not "man made that he might have joy"? Is it not strange that the words "selfish" and "selfishness" are not found in the Bible, although Paul does say "men shall be lovers of their own selves," as though this could be wrong on occasions. Can man get along without the driving force of selfishness as the spur to effort?

Cain asked God, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Under instruction from God, Noah built an ark to save himself and seven others from the flood. Abraham was guided to a separate country which God agreed to give him, and later the Israelites destroyed ruthlessly the inhabitants of Canaan to regain possession of a land promised them as an inheritance. Indeed they believed themselves to be the chosen people of God, favored above all other—a selfish people whose "God of Israel" continually worked for their good, regardless of the consequences to other peoples. Even in New Testament times the great goal seemed to be personal or individual salvation. "What must I do to be saved?" the jailer asked. Paul rejoiced in the thought, "Henceforth is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." In the eleventh chapter of Hebrews he lists many saints who suffered much to "obtain a better resurrection," and advises his readers to "run with patience the race that is set before them" for the reward, as did Christ, who "for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross and despised the shame."

IT APPEARS, then, that there is plenty of precedent by which modern religion emphasizes personal gain and personal salvation as the prime essential in the game of life. Personal liberty, personal gain, and advancement in today's world are supposed to be the supreme good. What we call "free enterprise" has been tried for centuries. We have explored distant lands and established trading posts and colonies to exploit the people and riches of the earth; as a result we have become rich. We have developed our civilization, our culture, and our industries upon the miseries of others, in the name of free enterprise. While we insisted on the "open door" trade policy with China and the Far East, and while establishing our "benign" authority in Indo-China, Malaya, the Philippines, Hawaii, and Africa, we have allowed our industrialists to exploit their resources yet we call ours a Christian civilization and sooth our consciences by sending missionaries and many Bibles overseas.

Out of our wealth, we spare but a niggardly mite for the millions who go to bed hungry every night, and thus partially satisfy the pangs of a seared conscience and offer again the advantages of so-called free enterprise to appease the revolutionary forces arrayed against us.

As I write, I wonder if the foregoing rightly interprets the teaching of Scripture and if selfishness really is the strongest factor guiding or actuating our motives in life.

MAN, WE HAVE LEARNED, is created in the "likeness of God"—"a little lower than the angels," a creature of infinite possibilities. It is natural we should love, cherish, and serve ourselves as the noblest of all creations. Is there not even an obligation or duty for every man to love himself, since to fail to do so would dishonor God and discredit his plan? We are told to "love our neighbor as ourselves," which means that our love for our neighbor is measured by our love for ourselves. This sets the degree of love that is required of us for others. In other words, if we do love, respect, or live true to ourselves, then we can be expected to treat others in the same manner.

To thine own self be true,
And it must follow as the night the day
Thou canst not then
Be false to any man.

—Shakespeare

I stated earlier that our life is full only as it reaches out to contact other lives, and that it becomes more abundant as our circle of contacts widens. The individual may be able to think, feel, strive, and work by himself, but it is society which gives meaning to life; it is society which provides him with food, clothing, home, tools for work, language, and forms of thought. His life is made possible through the labor and the accomplishments of the many millions who are hidden behind the small word, "society." So man can find meaning in life only through devoting himself to society; through rapid transportation and instant communication, each country, continent, and race become interlocked and inseparable. We live or die together. "God so loved the world"—not the natural wealth or "the cattle upon the thousand hills," but all the peoples of the earth. He demanded all without exception. Man also must learn the same lesson and not be satisfied until he includes in the circle of his love not his neighbors' useless goods and possessions, but his neighbor himself—whether in Korea, China, or Africa; whether black, brown, or yellow—in a greedy, demanding brotherhood. When at that future judgment day all nations shall assemble (Matthew, chapter 25), no other charge will be laid than lovelessness. The words spoken will not question our theology, church, or creed, but our humanity. Did we feed the hungry, clothe the naked, or visit the sick? The degree in which we can learn that lesson of selfishly clasping our neighbor to ourself will determine our own joy and happiness.

We can be satisfied with nothing less than the complete closing of this circle.

BAPTISMS REPORTED

Elder Lyle W. Woodstock reports that at the close of the Nauvoo youth camp which was held July 6-13, three campers were baptized. Appointee Fred Banta and Elder Arnold Ourth, pastor of the Nauvoo Branch, assisted in the baptismal and confirmation services.

A letter from Elder Lee R. Oliver, appointee pastor of the Pensacola, Florida, Branch indicates that six people were baptized in Pensacola during June and July. He also reported that fifteen candidates were baptized at a service held at the Gulf States Reunion which ended July 6.

Elder J. A. Phillips, president of the Southern Missouri District, reports that two persons were baptized July 13 at the close of a three-day reunion for the district held at Kennett, Missouri.

RETREAT PLANS PROGRESSING

Plans for the Center Stake youth retreat to be held at Lake Doniphan during the Labor Day week end are progressing under the leadership of the city-wide Zion's League cabinet. The cabinet is functioning in various committees under the direction of the Center Stake youth leader, Lee Hart.

STORY APPEARS IN BRITISH MAGAZINE

A story by one of the famous authors of the church, Sister Geraldine Wyatt, appeared in the July issue of an English monthly magazine, "Boy's Own Paper," which is published by the British Lutterworth Periodicals of England. The story was illustrated by Frank Bellamy, one of England's foremost illustrators. This story won first place in the Press Women's Juvenile monthly magazine ranking. It was published under the by-line of Gerald Wyatt.

Children's Day at Stone Church

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—June 8, Children's Day was observed at Stone Church with a special preaching service at 8:15 a.m. for adults and a service at 11:00 a.m. for children with reserved seats for each department of the church school.

At the morning service two babies were blessed. Janet Sue, daughter of George and Rae Leigh, and John Robert, son of Edward and Audrey Manley, were blessed by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Charles E. Chapman.

At the 11:00 a.m. service "Light of Life" awards were presented to Janetlou Davidson, Girl Scout, and Joyce Simmons, Oriole Girl; and "God and Country" award was presented to David Kohlman, Boy Scout.

Apostle Reed M. Holmes spoke on "The Church and the Children" at the adult service, and his sermon subject at the children's service was "Small but Mighty." At this service the Scripture reading was the fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, read in unison by the senior high department of the church school. A special hymn, "Little Children Come to Jesus," was sung by the primary department, and "Fairest Lord Jesus" by the junior and junior high departments.

At 4:00 p.m. a Children's Day baptismal service was held in the lower auditorium and thirteen children and two adults were baptized. The names of those baptized were Carol Ann Etzenhouser, Mark Curtis Baker, Dennis Ray Crull, Thomas Charles Dowden, Gail Gene Gouldsmith, Jonatha Gayle Hammer, Dixie Lee Kepley, Gaye Diane Kimball, Dennis Ray Massie, Lynda Lenora Smith, Nancy Sue Smith, John Doniphan Henson and his son John Doniphan Henson, Jr., Mrs. Roberta B. supervisor; and Doris Reppert, children's supervisor.

During the past year, representatives of the General Church who have visited the Coldwater Branch have been President Israel A. Smith, who was the guest speaker at the district conference held in Coldwater, Apostle Arthur Oakman, Apostle C. George Mesley, Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Bishop T. A. Beck, Elder Robert Flanders, District Missionary Clair Weldon, and Seventies Luther S. Troyer and Harry Doty.

The women's department has had a varied program during the year with two nonmember guest speakers—one giving a talk on her trip to Europe and one telling of her experiences when she fled her home in Latvia to escape the Russian occupation. The mother and daughter banquet was well attended with Sister Glada Krinzi of Detroit as guest speaker.

The youth institute of the district was held in Coldwater on June 14 and 15 with Robert Flanders and Clair Weldon as speakers. The Senior Zion's League of Coldwater is sponsoring several money-making projects to buy a sign bearing the church name to be placed on the lawn.

On the evening of June 11, Miss Caroline Reppert was united in marriage with Mr. Robert Biggs.

On June 1, the baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Parker was blessed by Luther S. Troyer assisted by E. J. Grigg; and on June 8 the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Criswell was blessed by Brothers Troyer and Grigg.—Reported by RUBY TROYER

Three Candidates Baptized

EL DORADO, KANSAS.—Mrs. W. H. Caywood, Mrs. Fredia Bailey, and Mrs. J. J. Ingersoll were baptized July 13 by Elder J. J. Wilson after two weeks of cottage meetings held by Missionary Alan Tyree.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Speer have moved to the branch. Brother Speer is a priest and will be a teacher in the public school in the fall.—Reported by MRS. KNOLLENBERG

Branch Has Reunion

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.—The branch held a three-day reunion July 4-6. Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe and Elder H. Fisher, district president of the Prairie Provinces, were in charge of all services.

Sister Renfroe accompanied Brother Renfroe. On July 5, a picnic was held.

The following have been visitors to the branch in the past two months: Elder and Sister Lefevre of Humber, Ontario; Elder W. W. Coombes of Chatham, Ontario; Elder and Sister Charlie Bruder of Independence, Missouri; Sister Madlyn Fisher, High Priest G. Wilson of Toronto, Ontario; Seventy and Sister Z. Z. Renfroe; Elder Howard Fisher of Saskatoon; and Brother and Sister Lester J. Walker of Owen Sound, Ontario.—Reported by N. GLOYNS

Mission Organized Into Branch

TORRINGTON, WYOMING.—Apostle Paul Hanson conducted a series of evening meetings at the branch June 2-7. At two meetings colored slides and lectures on Mexico, and Central and South America were presented.

The branch was organized under the direction of Apostle Hanson. Pastor J. R. Croft, Brother Jack Babcock, and Sister L. O. Mitchell participated in the program. The motion to organize the group into a branch was made by Sister L. O. Mitchell and seconded by Brother George Williams.

The following officers were elected by unanimous vote: Elder J. R. Croft, branch president; Sister Tom Reeves, secretary-treasurer; Beverly Babcock, assistant secretary;

George Williams, church school director; Alice Babcock, women's leader; Ethel Gomez, chorister; J. K. Vandel, bishop's agent; Sister L. O. Mitchell and Sister J. K. Vandel, auditors.

Roll call of members who wished to become charter members are recorded as follows: Elders M. M. Bilyue, J. R. Croft, and L. O. Mitchell; Priests J. R. Babcock, Z. E. Prettiman, and J. K. Vandel; Deacon George Williams, and Mrs. Jack Babcock, Mr. and Mrs. John Babcock, Mrs. M. M. Bilyue, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Gomez, Miss Lula Havelly, Mr. and Mrs. Orval Heidi, LeRoy Heidi, Mrs. William Hughes, Mrs. W. J. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Max Long, Mr. and Mrs. Boyd Martin, Mrs. Lou McConnel, Mrs. L. O. Mitchell, Mrs. Z. E. Prettiman, Mrs. Tom Reeves, Mrs. Norman Richardson, Mrs. Floyd Sleggar, Mrs. J. K. Vandel, Mrs. Bertha Wampler, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wells, Mrs. William Worthen, and Mrs. George Williams.

In conclusion, Brother Hanson spoke on the "Meaning and Purpose of the Branch." A prayer was offered by Brother E. C. Judson, and the benediction was given by Pastor J. R. Croft.—Reported by DOLORES MARTIN

Young Adult Group Organized

CENTRAL BRANCH, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.—A young adult group has been organized, and officers were elected on June 8 at a picnic held at the home of Charles Farley. The following are officers: secretary and treasurer, George and Eleanor Davis; social chairmen, Howard and Frances Vaughan; program chairmen, R. B. and Becky Field; project chairmen, Eldred and Margaret Guthrie; publicity chairmen, Bob and Elaine Taylor; food chairmen, Rahliegh and Helen Louise Wolfe; and nursery, Bob and Bonnie Ballentyn.

Leadership for the group is provided by Glen and Lorena Faler, at whose home the first board meeting was held June 30. It was decided to hold monthly board meetings and monthly social functions at a separate time.—Reported by MRS. R. F. TAYLOR

New District President Introduced

MUSCATINE, IOWA.—Griffith G. Goddard, former president of the branch, and his family have moved to Independence. Elder Philip Wagler was elected as the new president of the branch.

The new district president, High Priest W. Joseph Breshears, was introduced at a special service on June 10 at which he was the speaker. High Priest Lyle Woodstock, former district president who has been transferred to Chicago, introduced Brother Breshears.

On Mother's Day the church school presented corsages of lilies of the valley to all mothers present. These were made by Evelyn Church, Jennie Schmidt, and Grace Freers. On the Friday preceding Father's Day, all fathers were honored at a branch potluck supper. During the same evening, books were presented by the women's department to all high school and junior high graduates. These books were church publications of the student's choice.

On Children's Day the church school classes presented a program to the branch during church service time. Gifts were given by the church school to all children present from the nursery class through the high school class. These gifts consisted of religious picture puzzles for the younger members and religious plastic book markers for the older ones.—Reported by MRS. WILLIAM NORDEEN

Vacation Church School Held

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.—The branch conducted its vacation church school from June 2 to June 13. Forty-seven students and twenty-one teachers and helpers were registered. At the achievement program forty-nine certificates for satisfactory attendance were awarded, twenty-six having perfect attendance.

Gladys Williams was principal with Winifred Foster assisting. Others who helped on the staff were Helen Rogers, Doralynne Dunaway, Mary Lou Deaver, Berniece Blakely, Gladys Patterson, Ilah Kunkle, Ann Williams, Evelyn Maples, Dorothy Wolf, Christine Boxberger, Wilma Higgenbotham, Naomi Senter, and Lucille Sheffer.

Marriage Today

A General Conference Address

PART I

By John F. Sheehy

I WAS SUPPOSED to have met with you women at your institute last fall; I didn't get to, so this is a carry-over from that assignment. I am glad to be here, because in October I didn't think I was going to make it to General Conference.

So far we have had a good week with fine weather, but now when I come to talk to you about marriage, it's stormy and cold. Perhaps this is symbolic of a type of modern home life. There are many early marriages, war marriages, and marriages of members to nonmembers which bring problems to parents and young folks alike. In a few instances I understand that parents have even gone so far as to disown children who have married into another faith.

I do not pretend to know all the answers to marriage problems. And I do not expect all of you to agree with me in what I say this morning, but that doesn't matter. I do hope, though, to stimulate your thinking so that you will be doing something about this all-important subject. I hope that if you haven't thought about some of the things I will say, that you will start now and not only think about them but start teaching where teaching is needed.

There is no formula for a successful and happy marriage. There are many ideas for happy married life, and marriage is so important that the best ideas among the many may help to get two people started on the road to success and happiness.

MARRIAGE IS NOT A PROBLEM. It is a sacrament ordained of God. Married people create problems, but I am not concerned today with them. I shall try to suggest how problems might be avoided by getting people—young or old—properly married. I believe what I shall say is good advice, and I hope it will be heeded.

First—and you may put this down in your notebook and in your heart—people must love each other. There is no substitute for this. It must be first. The word love is joked about, made fun of, and often starts girls to giggling quicker than anything else, but never can it be pushed aside if two persons expect a happy married life. Genuine love is a constant quality. Surely, marriage has its ups and downs, its give and take, but if love is there it will stand any sacrifice, any hardship. Love is the fundamental basis for lasting and happy marriage.

We immediately come to the second important point. I call this the "day of discoveries." Maybe I should say now that marriage is so sacred and important that we should teach it in the home, school, and church. The teaching should start early in the life of the child. The old saying, "A child should be seen and not heard," is far from true. Children should be seen and not hurt.

Successful, happy married life is a matter of early education which should not be neglected. This does not mean the best education will always be heeded. Some young people will not pass the test in this subject, even as they fail in other less important subjects. Marriage is a family problem. Setting up the ideas of a happy, successful marriage should start early in the family education of every child. The most important method of teaching is by example. Husband and wife should be the kind of companions they want their children to be. If you are taking notes, you can mark this down as one of the important things to remember. Husband and wife should be the kind of companions in the presence of their children that they want their children to be when they become husbands or wives. Children should see and live in that kind of a home. Teach or talk about it, but early so that it becomes natural and easy to do so. Even then children do as they please and think they are doing right. Parents should not get discouraged about this, but keep on with the education and especially the example.

The church should not neglect this all-important sacrament. There should be a class—at least one class—at reunion every year, at every young people's convention, at every youth camp, and at least one sermon a year. Maybe one Sunday annually should be set aside, and sermons on this day should not be about Mormon polygamy but on "Marriage as Ordained of God." Early training and guidance by parents, pastors, and educators is bound to be effective in the life of young people.

NOW BACK to the "day of discovery." It has been called the "engagement period." Whatever it is called, it is the time when young people discover each other before marriage, when they find whether it is the good looks or the good things about each other that they really like. Isn't that important? When I talk to a group of single fellows, I suggest to them always that they take their best girls swimming at least once and duck them to see what they look like when they come up. Laugh if you will, but that's good advice, and that's important. They need a time to discover each other. What do they like? How do they know? How can they find out? By having this happy experience called an engagement period—"a discovery period."

Time will tell a lot of things that should be known before marriage, and it is much easier to take off an engagement ring than a wedding ring. That is why we advise a time for exploring. Does one like what the other does not like at all? If so, he or she should be prepared to spend some lonely hours alone after marriage, or there is bound to be disturbances that will end in trouble, the kind of trouble we want to avoid. How long shall this discovery period be? Long enough to make the vital necessary discoveries. I don't think there is anyone wise enough to say exactly how many days, or how many years, but I suggest a period long enough to make the necessary discoveries.

THIRD, WE COME TO FINANCE.

How much money has the husband-to-be saved? That is the question I asked a young couple here in Independence some years ago. The young girl said, "I don't know." Yet he had asked her to marry him and share his life with him. What about sharing the bank account? It is true many young people have married without having more than a dollar between them. They did have, however, the most essential qualification—love. However true that might be, does one want his children to go through the hardships that can come with financial insecurity? A great number of people have married without a dollar, but the marriages did not last long. A couple can be much happier and establish a home quicker with a thousand dollars than with one dollar. If a young man has not saved anything, and has no trade or profession, there is something lacking, and that something may be lacking all his life. I suggest to young people that they should have at least a thousand dollars or its equivalent. The equivalent would be a trade or a profession. Many have worked this problem out together before marriage while talking over their situation with their pastor. Others have solved such a problem after talking with their pastor after marriage. A pastor should talk about finances and give guidance to young people when they consult him about marriage.

RELIGIOUS DIFFERENCES should be talked about before marriage. No pastor should say he will marry a couple on a certain date until he first talks with them together. During that talk, if he knows about differences that exist in their religious beliefs he should ask them what they are going to do about them. Many times young people think nothing at all about this until after marriage and then find themselves in trouble. They should talk about it before the wedding day and come to a very definite understanding as to how and where they will attend church after marriage.

It is best to have religious harmony, and that usually can be assured from the start if both belong to the same church. However, happy married life cannot be assured because both are members of the same church, not even this church. All good men and women are not members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

NOW I WISH TO SAY something which I think ought to have been said a long time ago. I do not believe that people are weak in the faith who marry out of the church. Don't misunderstand me now—mark it down if you will. I do not believe that people are weak in the faith because they marry out of the church. Section 111 of Doctrine and Covenants is not a revelation. I am surprised that so many people do not know this. It is a document approved by the church over one hundred years ago. I am glad it isn't a revelation. I believe that it should be rewritten, because I do not believe that the statement is true. Some are weak in the faith even when they marry members of the church, and soon after their marriage both are lost to the church. Some are strong in the faith that marry non-members and remain true and faithful to the church even though their companions never unite with it. Others have helped to convert their companions, and their companions have become strong in the faith. We do not condemn marrying out of the church, although that statement in Section 111 has caused some young people to turn away from fine young men or women who did not belong to the church and marry those who were members—but that was the only good thing you could say about them. Those young people were "weak in the head."

Parents cannot select companions for their children. I know that. I have five married children, and they didn't let me select their companions. They didn't tell me anything about the persons they were going to marry until they were ready to be engaged. It wouldn't have made any difference, I guess. Some parents have tried to select companions for their children and have been successful. Other parents have told their children that if they married certain individuals they would have to leave home forever because their parents would have nothing to do with them. And I have heard young people say if they did marry the people they loved, their parents would sell their houses and leave town because they would feel disgraced.

Parents should do all that they can to suggest but never threaten. Advise your children; and even though their marriage hurts you, you can find some consolation in the fact that you have done your best to give guidance and understanding. Let children, or young people, select their own companions after you have talked with them about the kind of individuals they should marry. The love of parents for their children should never end, no matter whom they marry. The love that approximates the love that God has for humanity is the love we should retain for children no matter what situation exists. Parents' duty is to help sustain the homes of their children whether they like the individuals their children marry or not.

Without Reservations

By Les Gardner

*I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
Real service is what I desire.
I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord,
But don't ask me to sing in the choir.*

THIS LITTLE VERSE, which I once read in a Zion's League Annual, has kept me thinking for a long time about the problem of the reservations young people (and older people too) make when they decide to be a follower of Christ. There is the person who decides to serve the church in every way he can, but reserves the right to do as he pleases with his spare time, to vent his anger when he is upset, or to be prejudiced. There are young people who say, "I'll pattern my whole life after Christ's," except in the matter of dating. That, they feel, is a matter of personal discrimination. There are those who want to give Christ a whole life but say, "My money is my business. In everything will I obey him, but there is a card on my finances marked, 'Reserved for Me.'" Remembering people like this can be distressing but it is even more distressing sometimes for us to examine our own lives and find that we are guilty of reserving a few questionable habits ourselves. I wonder why we do not want to serve God without reservations?

I KNOW A GIRL who lived her Graceland life pretty selfishly. She was a church member and came to Graceland because it was her church college. She went to church (especially on Communion Sundays) or to fellowship, if she did not have too much else to do. This, she felt, was the limit of her religious obligation. She had reserve cards on her dormitory life, study habits, financial affairs, and many other things. When she fell in love, however, she had to pause and re-evaluate her philosophy, for her fiance was one whose aim in life was to serve God in every way. With help from friends and ministers of the church, she decided to throw away her reservations and to try giving her whole life to Christ. The decision changed her entire personality; she became Christ-centered instead of self-centered. Now she and her husband are working together in building a truly Zion home as they go forward in service to God and his church without reservations.

ONE TRAGEDY of reservations is that they so often reach gigantic proportions. A young person who wants to serve the church but puts a reservation on his habit of smoking often tends to build up a defense for his smoking habit until it becomes to him a matter of choice between smoking and church allegiance. But how much greater significance is the gospel in its fullness than one mere habit like this? If he lets the habit take its rightful place as something small and petty in comparison to the wealth of the gospel, he will usually find that it becomes inconsequential, and he tends to forget all about it. Of course each reservation is important, but not in the same degree of importance as the laws of God. I find as I look around me at those who are finding the abundant life in giving their all to Christ that these people haven't the time to worry about, let alone practice, habits that continue to dismay and upset other young people. They find a wonderful freedom in giving a whole life of service to Christ, without reservation.

JESUS HAS SAID, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." God wants us to live in accordance with his laws revealed in Scripture, but he doesn't give us a choice of two out of three laws. With him it is all or nothing. If we are making a cake by following the directions of a recipe, and we decide to use all but a few ingredients we won't have a very good cake. Likewise, if we decide to leave out of our lives one or two of God's recommendations for the abundant life, we can blame only ourselves if our lives turn out to be failures. The laws of God are there. We must follow them without reservations if we want the good life.

We don't have to deny ourselves anything of worth to live up to these laws. In a Zion's League discussion group we came to the unanimous decision that there is nothing—absolutely nothing—worth while in life that cannot be practiced within the scope of the beliefs of God's church today. Any recreation, amusement, habit, or course of study which doesn't seem to have a clear place in the Christian way of life should be re-evaluated and discarded if it isn't worth while. July is a long way from New Year's, but it's still an excellent time for us to tear up our reservation cards and give God's way a chance in our lives.

NATURAL BARRIERS TO FELLOWSHIP

By MAXINE HARSHMAN POTORFF

WE ARE INCLINED to draw lines and set up barriers between ourselves and others. We are unfriendly to a certain person because he is more poorly dressed than we. We may be cool toward another because we feel he is superior to us intellectually. We are patronizing to another because he is uneducated. Someone else is too old or too young for our warm friendship and consideration.

By baptism we are all born into the same family—the family of God. In making these lines and barriers, and in allowing them to exist, we are limiting our own and others' development. We are limiting our growth by stopping the flow of our personality to others and in return receiving the power of their personalities flowing back to us. Here occurs a cutting or dividing of the body of Christ causing disunity where instead we should all be one in Christ.

We exist in the lives of all the people we have contacted—for good or evil—since our birth. We are told to thrust in our sickles and reap while the day lasts, that we may treasure up everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God. This salvation, to a great extent, consists of the good we have sown in the lives of others and received from them.

In order to receive the greater salvation it will be necessary for us to break down the barriers that so often appear among us. It is the "natural thing" to set up lines and barriers between ourselves and others. However the natural or carnal man is ever an enemy to God, who is no respecter of persons. The spiritual or righteous thing is to love each other. If we do, we shall consider our brothers and sisters in patience, overlooking their faults in kindness.

We all possess talents or abilities which have been given us to help others as well as ourselves until all come to the measure of perfection in Christ Jesus. Every normal person possesses some ability, great or small. It is God's will that his children become whole spiritually, mentally, physically, and socially. Otherwise how could there be equality? We—not God—limit ourselves. In him is all power. "He that keepeth his commandments, receiveth truth and light, until he is glorified in truth, and knoweth all things" (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4).

Each person possesses some capabilities which, when blended together under the law of love, will bring unity and ultimate perfection.

Dave Freeman

This is the first of a series of biographical sketches on young Latter Day Saints who are outstanding in church and school or civic activities. Readers who know of other young members worthy of special recognition are invited to submit material on and pictures of their candidates to the Youth Office, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

FEW YOUNG MEN are ever lucky enough to present an award to the President of the United States, but Dave Freeman of Independence, Missouri (shown above with President Harry Truman), has qualified to make two such presentations. On his way to Boston to take part in the National Forensic League speech contests as a member of the William Chrisman team, Dave presented a pin to President Truman as the outstanding orator produced by William Chrisman High School of Independence. The pin was awarded the president on behalf of the high school's chapter of the National Forensic League. President Truman is a graduate of the high school, class of 1901.

Two years ago, in June, at the National Boy Scout Jamboree at Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, Eagle Scout Dave Freeman was selected by his fellow Scouts from the President's home town to decorate President Truman with the Silver Buffalo, the highest award of Scouting.

Behind these presentations is a story that involves more than luck. Eighteen-year-old Dave was graduated from William Chrisman High School this spring where he had served in his senior year as student body president, one of four student speakers at his graduation exercises, cadet major in the R.O.T.C., a participant in the speech play and one-act play contests, and a member of the rifle team, Spanish Club, National Honor Society, National Thespian Society, National Forensic League, boys' pep club, and the winning debate team representing the state of Missouri in the National Forensic League contest at Boston. Dave played football for awhile until his time schedule forced him to resign from the squad.

Dave's high school years have been full of accomplishments. As a sophomore, he was named best individual soldier in the R.O.T.C.; as a junior, best squad leader; and as a senior, best company commander. In those years he was awarded every medal but one offered by the R.O.T.C., including the McCormick medal for outstanding junior in high school R.O.T.C. in 1951. As a member of the rifle team in his junior year, he was best rifleman on an outstanding squad. Selected as a representative from Independence to Boy's State in '51, he was elected state senator. With all his busy activities, Dave graduated in the top fourth of his class.

He has not permitted his school activities to crowd out his church responsibilities. An active member of the Walnut Park congregation, he has taken part in all the major programs there while assisting his father, Ralph Freeman, local insurance man, who is now serving as pastor in the Sugar Creek congregation. Active in the Walnut Park Scout troop, Dave attained the rank of Eagle and qualified as a senior patrol leader, attending camp with the troop each summer until this year. Active in League drama, he took part in the stake-wide young people's presentation of the "New Moon" on the Campus last summer, and was a member of the West College top play in the stake one-act play contest in 1950. Attending reunion with his family in 1951, Dave was elected president of the Zion's League organized at the Center Stake Reunion. His debate teammate, incidentally, is Miss Dolores Tandy, an active Zion's Leaguer. The other two members of the team representing Missouri High Schools at Boston include Miss Celia Fry, an active Zion's Leaguer, and Douglas Hagan, a fine Independence Baptist boy.

Dave has recently been called to the office of teacher and will attend Graceland College this fall. He has two sisters, Sharon, 9, and Lois, 4. His mother is the former Marion Worden.

A New Book for Children

God Planned It That Way

by Carolyn Edna Mueller

A child's wonderings about God and his world, and the mother's satisfying replies, are expressed in this book in lovely rhythmic lines.

The rain, wind, sunshine, and darkness are explained simply and beautifully as part of God's plan. The child learns how he is a part of the plan, too.

DEATHS

TANNER.—Sadie C., daughter of Holbert and Mary E. Miller, was born October 31, 1879, at Lagonda, Missouri, and died June 9, 1952, at Macon, Missouri. She was married in November, 1917, to Ben S. Tanner in Bevier, Missouri, where they continued to make their home until Mr. Tanner's death four years ago. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1911.

Surviving are two stepdaughters: Margaret of Manhattan, Montana, and Ellen of Des Moines, Iowa; and four brothers: Henry of Macon; John of Washington, D.C.; Tobias of North Kansas City, Missouri; and Charley of Hamilton, Missouri. Funeral services were held at the Stone Church in Bevier, Elders Norman Cox and Iva Surridge officiating. Interment was in Bevier cemetery.

MAY.—Bertha, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joel D. Clark, was born June 12, 1875, near Ashland, Kentucky, and died June 4, 1952, at the St. Elizabeth Hospital in Dayton, Ohio. On June 5, 1892, she was married to Francis M. May; six children were born to them. Her husband and three sons preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1906 and was an active worker as long as her health permitted.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. Verna Donovan of Cleveland, Ohio, and Mrs. Julia M. Davis of Miami, Florida; a son, Joel D. of Dayton, Ohio; two sisters; four brothers; three grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Elder Floyd Rockwell conducted the funeral service. Interment was in Rushtown Cemetery near Portsmouth, Ohio.

WHITE.—Lydia, died June 18 at her home in Bay Minette, Alabama, at the age of eighty-seven. She had lived in Bay Minette fifty-six years and had been a member of the Reorganized Church thirty-five years.

Surviving are four daughters, Mrs. Harley Hathorn and Mrs. Bernice Denser of Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Willie Eubanks and Mrs. Arthur Weatherford of Bay Minette; two sons: Claude of Sabetha, Kansas, and Lloyd of Bay Minette; twelve grandchildren; and ten great-grandchildren. Elder Jack Pray, pastor of Mobile Branch, conducted the funeral service. Burial was in the Bay Minette cemetery.

BURCH.—Sarah Emma, daughter of Thomas D. and Phoebe McMahon McClary, was born December 28, 1869, at Princeton, Missouri, and died at the home of her son, Thomas W. Burch, in Macon, Missouri (date of death not given). She was married to Frank M. Burch on December 23, 1887; three children were born to them. A son and daughter died in infancy, and Mr. Burch preceded her in death in 1931. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church sixty years.

She is survived by her son, Thomas; a brother, Thomas McClary of Harris, Missouri; and one grandchild. Elder Emory Jennings conducted the funeral service.

ALFORD.—Charles William, son of William and Margaret Alford, was born March 2, 1876, near London, England, and was killed April 25, 1952, in a car accident near Schneckstadt, New York. On December 10, 1898, he was married to Jessie Teir, who died January 24, 1951. He had been an active member of the London, Ontario, Branch since his baptism in 1916.

Surviving are four children: William A., Charles Henry, and Margaret Eleanor Boyd, all of London, Ontario; and Marjorie Blodgett of Fitzwilliam, New Hampshire; seven grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Carl Muir and Evangelist John E. MacGregor at the Logan Chapel. Interment was in the family plot at Mt. Pleasant Cemetery in London, Ontario.

NEEDHAM.—Alfred Collins, son of Frank and Dina Lister Needham, was born April 7, 1884, at Newton, Iowa, and died May 24, 1952, at his home in Kansas City, Missouri. He moved to Moline, Illinois, in 1902. He was married on September 18, 1912, to Blanche Cushatt; two sons were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since his youth and served forty years as an elder, helping to establish the branch and build the church in Moline.

He is survived by his wife; two sons: Francis R. of Baxter, Iowa, and Milton J. of Ft. Worth, Texas; a brother, Frank of Montrose, Colorado; a sister, Mrs. Gertrude Parish of Lamoni, Iowa; and four grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Baxter, Evangelist W. W. Richards officiating. Interment was in the Union Cemetery at Newton.

BOOKER.—Doc Charles, was born October 9, 1878, in Monroe County, Alabama, and died July 4, 1952, at his home in Independence, Missouri. In 1902 he moved to Missouri, and in 1909 was married to Fannie Nace in Independence. She died in 1938, and on October 2, 1942, he was married to Mabel Anne Friend. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 11, 1893, and also held membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Independence Lodge.

He is survived by his wife, Mabel, of the home; his mother, Mrs. Harriett Booker of Independence; two sisters: Myra Bailey of Lamoni, Iowa, and Ollie Friend of Independence; also three stepchildren: Orlando and Archie Nace and Mrs. Oattie Bowers, all of Independence. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders James F. Keir and Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

PHILBURN.—Lucille Anna, daughter of Elder John Hall of Lake Orion, was born October 30, 1921, in Detroit, Michigan, and was killed instantly June 30, 1952, when she lost control of her car and struck a utility pole near her home in Byron, Michigan. She was married on January 3, 1942, to Donald Philburn. An active member of the Reorganized Church, she also belonged to Huldah Chapter 212 of the OES, the Anna Ketchum Circle of King's Daughters, 4-H Council of Shiawassee County, and the Byron P.T.A. She was a Cub Scout den mother and treasurer of the Green School District.

She is survived by her husband; two sons: James Lee and Gary; and a daughter, Peggy, all of the home; her father and stepmother; and two sisters: Mrs. Mona Wolf and Mrs. Betty Mitchell, both of Detroit. Funeral services were held at Small's Chapel in Byron, Elders Arthur Slater and A. E. DuRose officiating. Interment was in Eastlawn Cemetery, Lake Orion.

* THE WAYFARER

Somewhere in your reading or your church attendance you may have encountered this story from life. If you haven't, it is one that you ought to know.

Sometime in the night a man passed down the road that runs in front of our house. I did not see him, but I know that he went this way. He threw an empty liquor bottle into the grass at the edge of the road. That is the only thing I know about the man. After hearing this story, I thought about my own experiences.

Across the aisle from me on the bus a well-dressed woman of middle age sat eating bananas. She liked bananas, because she ate several of them, and she threw the skins on the floor. She left them there for the next passenger when she got off. That is all I know about that woman.

Next to me there was an old man who smoked cigarettes and then coughed. He didn't talk, he didn't smile. He just smoked and coughed, smoked and coughed. That is all I know concerning that man. It was enough to know.

When he departed, a woman took his place. She was carrying a bouquet of beautiful peonies that she had raised in her own yard. Their fragrance was lovely, and she appreciated the fact that I enjoyed them. She looked to be sixty, but she said she was eighty-two. She talked to me about her children, her grandchildren, and her great-grandchildren. She said to me, "Every day of my life I learn something new. Some people become too old to learn, but I never have. I learn something from everybody I meet, and from everything I do. It is a good way to enjoy life." And that is all I know about that woman. It was good to learn that much about her.

Behind me was another woman talking to a casual acquaintance, her seatmate. I was not eavesdropping, for her voice was strong and clear. She said, "Since my husband went, I am not sorry that we never had any children. If you rear a child, you will probably have to rear grandchildren too. It happens to so many these days. I think it is enough to have to rear one family. All of my family are gone now, and I am alone. I tried traveling with friends, but I always had to do what they wanted to do. I got tired of that. So I travel alone now, and I don't mind it. I will probably finish my days alone." Would you agree that this was enough to know about that woman?

IS YOUR FUTURE SECURE?
SAFETY TALK NUMBER 3

All right, Mr. Reckless Driver, go ahead and kill yourself, if you insist. But please don't kill other people while you are doing it. They may want to live. And they have a right to live.

How would you like to spend the rest of eternity knowing that you were a killer?

Do you have a basic respect for life and property? If you do, you will feel your responsibility to protect them in your driving.

The Story of Our Workers

IN JANUARY, 1951, a column was started entitled "We'd Like You to Know." Last year fifty stories of institutional workers appeared in this column. So far this year twenty-one additional stories have appeared. From the comments received by readers this column has been well received, and there is some demand that it be continued.

One of the difficulties that editors have is to avoid discrimination. Pictures have been sent in and suggestions made of persons who might appear in this column, but some have failed to recognize the objective of the column. We have at times published columns entitled "Interesting Personalities" or "Men (or) Women in the News" with photographs. We intend to continue these columns as material becomes available.

It is our purpose to acquaint the church with the many people who work behind the scenes at headquarters, in offices, and in church institutions, carrying some definite responsibility. The surprising thing is that we have found seventy qualified people who would permit us to publish their pictures and their stories in the Herald. In some instances we have had to use a little persuasion. Generally speaking, we have had excellent co-operation.

It is quite evident, however, that this source will soon be exhausted. It has occurred to us that before discontinuing the column it might be well to present to the church some of the appointees who are little known except in the areas where they have served recently. We shall, therefore, endeavor to secure pictures and stories of these appointees and present them to Herald readers. We believe that the whole church should know better these front-line workers and General Church representatives. Therefore, as we finish up with the stories of our institutional personalities we will intersperse the appointee group until we have exhausted our possibilities in this field.

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, F. Henry Edwards, W. Wallace Smith ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Associate Editor; Chris B. Hartshorn, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $3.50 per year and $1.75 for six months in advance in the U.S.A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $3.75 per year and $1.90 for six months; other countries, $4.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

PRESIDENT SMITH IN ROME

President Israel A. Smith wrote a letter from Rome on July 24, stating that he was in a hotel on one of the seven hills, and that he had been out with a car and guide all day. President Smith, Apostle Arthur Oakman, and Bishop Livingston left Rome July 25 for Rotterdam and plan to return to England soon.

PREACHES AT ADULT CAMP

President W. Wallace Smith preached at the adult camp held by the Northern California District at Happy Valley Camp Grounds, near Santa Cruz, California, on July 29. Prior to that time he and Sister Smith were in attendance at the Pacific Palisades near Santa Monica, California, where Brother Smith taught a general class and Sister Smith taught the women's class.

PRESIDING BISHOPRIC ISSUES STATISTICS

The office of the Presiding Bishopric is busily engaged mailing official statistics on percentage of membership contributing, percentage of membership filing, and amounts contributed per member to stake and district officials throughout the church. The year 1951, according to these statistics, established another record in church financial achievement.

CENTER WORKERS ATTEND REUNION

About 100 workers at the Social Service Center in Independence attended an annual picnic held at the Odessa, Missouri, Reunion on July 30. Norman Hield, manager of the Social Service Center, and Mrs. Henry Rowland, supervisor of women, made the trip with the other workers. Three busses left Independence in the morning and returned at night. The workers meet at the Center twice a week and do the various jobs such as re-upholstering, weaving rugs, and mending.

APOSTLE HOLMES AT REUNIONS

Apostle Reed M. Holmes has returned from a trip which included attending three reunions. He left Independence June 22, accompanied by his son David, and after attending a Central Missouri Stake Zion's League barn rally they traveled to reunions at Deer Park, Pennsylvania; Brookfield, Maine; and Onset, Massachusetts. They returned to Independence July 25.

TO PRESENT DRAMA

The Walnut Park Zion's League is preparing the presentation of "Green Pastures," by Marc Connelly which will be given August 18 and 19. The musical drama features a cast of approximately forty young people and is being directed by Mrs. A. L. Henson, wife of the young people's leader. Fred O. Davies is pastor of the branch.

Unceasing Revelation

“The Lord revealed himself.”—I Samuel 3: 21.

THOSE who are experienced in the work, and acquainted with the doctrine of the church, need no confirmation for their belief in divine revelation. However, in a world that is predominantly skeptical and materialistic, confirmations of our faith are always of interest and very acceptable. From varied sources these confirmations come, and if we look for them, we will find them in many unexpected places.

An article (unsigned) in the Times Weekly Review (London) for June 5, 1952, contains this statement:

More relevant is to emphasize the duty of the church to keep its mind free and ready to receive from the Spirit in each generation ever renewed guidance in the apprehension and expression of truth.

Many people, of course, accept the idea of divine revelation. They recognize that the Bible contains the Word of God, and they say that Christ was the revelation of God in the flesh. But they reject as fantastic the belief in present-day revelation.

For those whose faith is founded upon the belief in present-day revelation, the statement by the unnamed writer in the Times is significant.

REVELATION from God goes on eternally. What we need to do is to keep our minds and spirits tuned so that we may hear and understand. It is only when we are spiritually and intellectually at our best that we can receive messages from God. It is very important to be alert to this Source sometime every day.

Revelation is unceasing. It is only our hearing that is turned off.

One day we had been waiting to hear a certain program of beautiful music on the radio. Something occupied our attention for a while, and we forgot the hour. When the program was half-finished we remembered and turned the switch. The music came in with rich and wonderful quality. The waves had been filling the room, going through the walls of our house, and even through our bodies, but we could not hear because we were not tuned for it. In like manner revelations of God are going on all the time. It is important to tune in on the divine broadcast.

The church is an instrument designed to tune in God's program and make his will known to us. We must do our part if the church is to perform this instrumental service for our benefit.

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH once wrote in an article on the subject, “It is not for me to dictate how the Lord shall reveal his will.” Then he went on to list a number of ways in which the divine messages might be sent.

Perhaps many of us, by our preconceived notions and set desires, limit the number of ways in which God can reach us with revelations of his truth, love, and wisdom, simply by ruling out and failing to recognize experiences which are definite manifestations of his Spirit. We make up our minds to accept only one or two means of communication. The others we reject or do not understand.

If we listen to only one radio station, we miss some great programs. And if we accept only one spiritual wave length and one medium of communication, we miss some of the divine messages.

I SAT by a window looking out upon a beautiful expanse of lawn dotted with shade trees and shrubs. From that second-story window I could see one perfectly proportioned, symmetrical, exquisite tree. The impression came to me at the time that the tree was one of the many revelations of God that I could see at the moment. His “many mansions” seemed to stand shining just beyond the blue sky above the far horizon. His artistry and love are expressed in a tiny flower, a bit of coral, in the majestic cloud formations of a thunderstorm, and in the vast patterns of the stars in a midnight sky.

It is only when we look and listen that we can receive.

The Psalmist wrote, “The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork.” Is it not our privilege and our duty to read what he has written in them?

AS WE SEARCH the Scriptures, we learn many things that God has revealed. But there is something special about the brief statement quoted from I Samuel at the beginning of this editorial. “The Lord revealed himself.” The Lord revealed himself to Samuel. In reading the revelations, we are grateful and happy to find passages of truth. We are humble when we read the thoughts of God. But there is a greater revelation: that in which God reveals himself. That is the supreme revelation.

To those who love him and seek him, to those who want to know him—when they are ready for it, and as his purpose and wisdom combine with his infinite love—God eventually reveals himself. L. J. L.

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

There has come to our attention, through the kindness of Sister Fannie Smith of the Van Brunt Congregation of Kansas City, Missouri, an interesting report of the reception of a church broadcast in Germany, received by her daughter and family—M/Sgt. and Mrs. Lloyd P. Wing, now stationed near Frankfurt, Germany. She wrote as follows:

We were just finishing dinner tonight and listening to the radio when we really had a surprise. The announcer said the next program originated in Independence, Missouri, World Headquarters of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the speaker would be Evan Fry. We all perked up our ears and sat around the radio and had church. It really was good to hear something so familiar. The choir sang too. Every evening at 6:45 there is a fifteen minute religious service on AFN—Air Forces Network, but I didn't expect to hear our church.

I am so happy we have this means of reaching the servicemen and their families and hope we can keep up the good work.

A few days ago we had occasion to check on the relation between the old-time semiannual conference and the early reunions. At our request Church Historian John Blackmore submitted the following, which we feel will be of interest to Herald readers:

Following the conference of April 12 and 13, 1852, held at Beloit, Wisconsin, it became customary to hold General Conference semiannually. The spring conferences convened April 6, and the fall conferences convened October 6 until 1870, after which they were held in September with one exception in 1876.

At the conference of April, 1882, a resolution was introduced as follows:

Whereas, The holding of two general conferences each year is attended with great expense, and in our judgment is unnecessary; therefore be it

Resolved, That when this Conference adjourns, it does so to meet April 6, 1883.

After discussion a substitute was passed which deferred the decision until the semiannual conference to be held in September, 1882. At that time the following resolution was passed by a vote of 774 in favor and 569 against:

That when this Conference adjourns it does so to meet April 6, 1883, and annually thereafter.

General Conference convened annually on April 6, except for 1899, until 1920. Conferences have been held at various dates since that time.

REUNIONS SUBSTITUTED FOR FALL CONFERENCES

In 1883, the year the General Church ceased to hold semiannual conferences in the fall, a resolution was introduced at the April Conference requesting the authorization of annual reunions. The resolution was as follows:

Whereas, In consequence of the church dispensing with the semiannual conference, the Saints in the western states feel there is a great void, and

Evidences of the Divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon

PART I

By Maurice L. Draper

True or False

Orson Pratt has said:

The Book of Mormon must be either true or false. If true, it is one of the most important messages ever sent from God to man, affecting both the temporal and eternal interests of every people under heaven to the same extent and in the same degree that the message of Noah affected the inhabitants of the Old World. If false, it is one of the most cunning, wicked, bold, deep-laid impositions ever palmed upon the world, calculated to deceive and ruin millions who will sincerely receive it as the Word of God and will suppose themselves securely built upon the rock of truth until they are plunged with their families into hopeless despair.

The nature of the message in the Book of Mormon is such that, if true, no one can possibly be saved and reject it; if false, no one can possibly be saved and receive it.¹

With these sentiments I heartily agree. It becomes, therefore, a matter of great importance to every person to learn whether the book is true or false. Any information leading to a correct conclusion about it should be eagerly received.

A great increase in modern man's knowledge of ancient times in Bible lands has taken place during the last century. The spade of the archaeologist, the discovery of the Rosetta stone, and the pen of the translator of ancient languages have combined to reveal much data about the social and political experiences, personal habits, and cultural and practical achievements of early Palestine, Egypt, Chaldea, Persia, and other parts of the Middle East. Some hitherto unsuspected and unknown conditions have thus come to light. Among them are the early influences of Greek culture throughout the eastern end of the Mediterranean basin, dating as far back as 2000 B. C.² Political conditions involving the relations between Egypt, Palestine, and Babylonia during the time of Jeremiah are more clearly understood as a result of the discovery and translation of historical inscriptions.³ Commercial activities are also described in some of these documents.

By a careful examination of these historical data, we can undertake certain reconstructions of conditions existing in that part of the world in early times. Not all the gaps can be filled in with present knowledge, nor are the details always clearly discernible. But some of the outlines are clear and major points definitely established, and these in sufficient number to provide a basis of comparison with data taken from the Book of Mormon.

THE ALTERNATIVES respecting the origin of the Book of Mormon are

1. It is an authentic record written by historians and observers who wrote what they actually saw and experienced, preserved over the centuries, and translated from the original language(s) into English.

2. It is a work of fiction, either pretending to historical foundations, or wholly imaginative, by some person or persons of the early nineteenth century.

Concerning the latter possibility, it may further be said that if it is wholly imaginative, then any claim to historical authenticity by its author would brand him as a liar. And to attempt to establish a religion claiming Christ as Lord on such a basis would be spiritual misrepresentation of the worst kind.

The fact is that the producer of the English text of the Book of Mormon claims that he was translator only, and that the contents are historically authentic. He does not attempt to claim credit for the text of the book. His report of the manner of the production of the book confirms the alternatives previously given.

It is conceivable that the major theme of the Book of Mormon could be created in the mind of an imaginative person and couched in terms calculated to impress readers who are untrained in the historical situations alluded to. But even a very learned man (which Joseph Smith was not at the time of the preparation of the Book of Mormon) would not be able to produce a work of historical fiction in which all the marks of authenticity of an original record could be included by design. His terminology, grammatical structure, historical inferences, nomenclature and cultural inferences would inevitably trip him up at some point. This would be especially true if he were writing about people in a place and at a time concerning which confirmed facts are extremely scarce. This was true about the eastern Mediterranean culture of 500 B. C. and earlier for a writer of the early nineteenth century.

Butler, Missouri

One of my short trips from home was a visit to the Butler, Missouri, Branch, where Bishop W. N. Johnson and I participated in the first or opening service of a new and very well-appointed church edifice. Elder Leroy Beckham, pastor, was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder Victor Witte, a former pastor; Elder Wilbur Strange; Seventy Donald Kyser; Elder C. A. Burg; Elder Charles Sutton; Bishop Johnson; and myself. Contributing to the music were Sister Bertha Rogers, Sister Lorene Carpenter, and others. City officials and the ministerial alliance were represented; Mr. O. O. Concanon, architect and contractor, was also present.

An account of these services with a picture of the church has appeared in the Herald. The Saints of Butler are to be congratulated on what they have accomplished.

Michigan Reunions

By appointment I attended the first Sunday of the Blue Water Reunion (August 5, 1951), which was ably planned and managed. The list of those who acted as aides to President W. Blair McClain is too long to give here.

I occupied the evening hour in the "log tabernacle" and next day moved over to the Sanford Reunion.

The reunion "plant" at Blue Water is very fine and gives promise of great things. I recently visited these grounds and found a crew of volunteers, under the direction of Bishop Updike, very busy pouring foundations.

At this reunion I met Apostle and Sister Mesley who were compelled to leave soon after my arrival to assist in the work at Sanford.

At Blue Water I also met Elder "Bob" Flanders, missionary, being domiciled with him in one of the cabins. Others assisting were Bishop Updike, Elders R. Melvin Russell, Wallace A. Jackson, Warren H. Chelline, and Evangelists J. J. Ledsworth and George Booth. The organization of this "International Reunion" was evidently quite complete, speaking much for Brother McClain and assistants.

Sanford Reunion

Here I found Apostle Mesley, Bishop T. A. Beck, Elders John Blackstock, G. Everett Berndt, and others in charge. This is called "Liahona Park" Reunion, and the Saints have a very fine property here, too, with some splendid buildings. The printed program shows the reunion committee was composed of Apostle Mesley, Elders John W. Blackstock, G. Everett Berndt, B. H. Doty, Ed Burch, Leon Methner, and Otto Bartlett.

I spoke on Monday night. Very early on Tuesday Bishop Beck took me to Saginaw where I took a train for Painesville, Ohio. Here I deliberately relaxed until Friday when I went to Kirtland.

Kirtland Reunion

I was privileged to attend a rather large assemblage on Friday evening, August 10, when the reunion was organized with Apostle Maurice E. Draper in charge. I was also at the prayer service on Saturday morning, then was forced to move on. My visit to this reunion was not scheduled and was all too short. Here I saw some of our young, promising missionaries in action including Richard Andersen—a grandson of Apostle Peter Andersen, who served so well his day and generation—Elders James Menzies, Loyd Adams, John Darling, William Williams, Merle Howard, and others.

Cash Reunion

Returning to Michigan I contacted Elder William Ferguson at Port Huron, who took me to the Cash Reunion. While there I was domiciled at the home of the Finkbiners in Sandusky.

The Saints here own quite a tract of wooded grounds. I spoke on Wednesday night, and the next day Bishop Beck took me to Saginaw. There I was met by Elder Berndt and taken to Boyne City to attend the Park of the Pines Reunion.

My reference to Cash Reunion is, I regret to say, all too brief; but my reunion program has been misplaced, and memory cannot be depended on to supply what I should like to present.

Park of the Pines

Here again Apostle Mesley was in charge with a large staff of assistants including Elders Byron Doty, his son Harry L. Doty, Roy Newberry, Allen Schreur, Al Pelletier, and R. O. Flanders; also guest speakers Bishop Updike, Evangelists Ben Hewitt and George Booth, and Sister George Mesley was assisting in women's work at all of the Michigan reunions.

I was privileged to address the Saints at a meeting when they paid tribute to Brother Allen Schreur for his long and faithful service as district president. Brother Schreur had lately lost his companion, and all the Saints were deeply sympathetic with the man who had so long been their servant and leader.

I was driven by Brother Doty to Traverse City where I took a train for home, having visited five reunions in the course of about two weeks.

I Learned to Be Quiet

By Mrs. S. C. Bethel

WHEN I WAS A CHILD, it was still believed that children should be seen but not heard. This alone, though, could not have caused me to appreciate the meaning of quietness. I learned that appreciation from my father.

Dad was a fisherman. When he was not on one of his jaunts to Lake Erie to bring home lake perch, he went fishing in the canal near our home. It was then he took me along.

I shall always remember the first time he took me with him. He fished at night mostly, since he found that the fish bite better then.

That first night he had me stand off a way so that I would not get hurt. It was fun watching him twirl the line over his head and then throw it far out across the water. After the last line was cast, he called me to sit beside him on the bank.

He said, "Now be quiet and listen for the tinkle of those tiny bells on the lines. They will tell us when we have a bite."

I sat quietly for several minutes. At the first tinkle I was on my feet, jumping up and down and yelling, "You got a bite! You got a bite!" In my overexcitement I lost my balance and fell into the canal. It wasn't deep along the bank and Dad fished me out and took me home to get out of my wet clothes. That night he went back to fish alone and had no trouble catching fish.

THE NEXT TIME he took me along he said firmly, "Now for goodness sake, sit still, we don't want any repeat performance of last time."

I must have sat there obediently quiet for a long time. Finally Dad decided that he had squelched me too completely. He began talking to me in very low tones. When I started to speak, he would put his finger to his lips to caution me to be quiet. Soon I, too, was speaking in low tones.

At the first tinkle I was about to jump up as before, but Dad placed a restraining hand on my arm. It was hard not to get excited at the least sign of a nibble. But Dad would place his hand lightly over my small one, and we would sense the thrill together quietly.

This second night was beautiful. It was so still that sounds could be heard afar off. Dad called my attention to the night sounds, the sound of wild creatures calling to each other, the whistle of the late express in the distance. He pointed out that even the shrill sounds had a softness about them. After that I enjoyed sitting quietly on the bank listening to the night sounds and letting my imagination run rampant. To this day I love the quietness of night with its cries of the wild things. It brings back memories of Dad and me sitting on the canal bank when conversation was not necessary because a deep peace filled us as we both thrilled to the things we learned to appreciate together.

Because of this experience, one passage of Scripture is full of meaning for me today: "Be still and know that I am God." It is in such quiet moments that I feel a kinship with God.

I HAVE ALWAYS THOUGHT of Christ as being quiet and gentle. It was his quiet demeanor, his gentle personality that drew people to him and made them love him. One of the qualities of good leadership is just such a quiet, gentle bearing.

Perhaps I can appreciate these qualities in Christ better than most people because of an experience I had when I was about twelve years old. I was brought up in one of the popular churches. My parents sent me to Sunday school, but they never went except on special occasions. This worried me a lot because from my lessons I got the impression that there was no hope for them after death. I wondered what it was all about. I wished that I might understand.

One night just after I had gone to bed I seemed to be in a very large room. A long table, covered with a snowy cloth, was spread as for a banquet. A person appeared before me and spoke, "You are a little early. You will have to wait yet awhile." The person left, and Christ appeared before me. He laid his hands on my head and blessed me. The memory of this experience has remained with me through the years, and now that I am a member of his church, I understand and appreciate it even more. I was christened as a baby; but, as I think of it today, to have been blessed under the hands of Christ himself was indeed a privilege. It was his gentleness and tenderness that endeared him to me then.

I noticed his voice especially. It was so low and quietly peaceful that it indeed caused my heart to burn within me.

The lesson I learned on the canal bank beside my father remains with me. I appreciate it as the wife of a priesthood member. There are many things we enjoy discussing together; but when it comes to those matters in his priesthood work that are not to be discussed, I am his silent partner. Conversation isn't always necessary. It is enough for him to know that I am by his side and praying for him.

Daughter of the Pioneers

The Autobiography of Christiana Stedman Salyards

PART VI

My First Contact With the Church

In the years when I was growing up Grandfather and Grandmother Landers often moved about. My father's parents were living with our family at that time, but a little house was built beside ours, and my mother's parents came there to live. Mother was happy to have them where she could give them the care they needed. I was still young enough to read and enjoy the stories written by Perla Wild in the Zion's Hope I found in their home.

I remember vividly an incident that occurred one cold day in winter. Just as the family was being seated at the table at noon Mother handed me a dinner pail partly filled with vegetable soup, saying, "Here, Annie, take this to your grandmother." I took the pail and started out on the run, bareheaded and with sleeves rolled up above the elbows, but just as I rounded the corner of the house, I slipped on a glare of ice and in an instant was extended full length on the walk with the vegetable soup deposited on my outstretched left arm.

Ruefully I gathered myself up and re-entered the house showing Mother the red spot on my arm, but she felt so keenly the loss of the soup she had intended for her mother's table that she wasted little sympathy on me. She refilled the pail and I went more carefully on my errand and delivered the soup to my appreciative grandmother. I realize now, as I did not then, that despite attentions of that kind my grandparents would not have been happy in the environment in which they were placed. They must have had a heart hunger for association with the Saints and for opportunity to talk of the wonderful story of the restoration of the gospel. They were in the midst of a people engrossed with affairs of a lower order, whose minds were unresponsive to great spiritual truths.

They moved about and finally found a home in a small branch of the church in Blue Rapids, Kansas; and their children, who gladly would have cared for them, were forced to accept the situation. They were living there happily when a young cousin and I went to visit them in the summer vacation following the experience in the revival meeting of which I have written.

Our visit took us first to Beatrice, Nebraska, and after spending some time there we went down through the Otoe reservation into Kansas. I had read Indian stories when a little girl until often I was afraid to step out of doors. It was interesting to see Indians on the platforms of some of the stations, most of them quiet, peaceable men in the ordinary garb of farmers.

We went by rail to Marysville, Kansas, and there took a surrey ten miles over the rolling prairies to Blue Rapids. As the day neared its close we skimmed along with the fresh breeze of evening fanning our faces. We were drawing nearer and nearer to Grandfather's house.

We found it down on "the flats," where the Little Blue River made a horse-shoe bend. There the streets presented quite a country-village aspect, with tiny houses bordering on narrow footpaths instead of sidewalks. I went in to reconnoiter the little one pointed out as my grandparents' and found them at their evening meal.

We arrived on Wednesday and after we had refreshed ourselves we went to prayer meeting. We walked the aisles of prayer that night in what was to us a strange little church in marked contrast with the spacious one in which I had avowed my faith in Christ six months before. This building was a small, low structure of one room. The boards of the walls ran up and down and had never been touched by paint so the building was black from weathering. No stretch of liberality could concede anything attractive to this house of prayer.

A Wonderful Experience

But a wonderful thing happened that night in that unpretentious little church. Grandfather was seated in the front row directly facing the rude pulpit, and Grandmother and we girls were across the room from where he sat so I had a direct view of his face as he arose to speak. I observed a pure whiteness over-spread his countenance as he began to speak in a language I had not heard before—a thing that in itself was strange because he knew no other than his native tongue.

When he sat down the people knelt in prayer for the interpretation of what had been said through him, and when they had resumed their seats the man presiding said he was ready to give it. A portion of what he said seemed to be directed at my cousin and me, as we were the only nonmembers present. He said, "And you, my handmaidens, if you will come down in the depths of humility and be baptized . . ." I do not remember the rest.

At home no comment was passed on what had transpired in the meeting, and as we all were weary, we soon retired. But my cousin and I discussed the unusual thing we had heard. As a last word I said, "Well, Grandfather never told us a lie in his life, and he wouldn't act one. I believe he was sincere in what he did, but as for that other man, I don't believe a word he said. They needn't try to 'handmaiden' me." Then we went to sleep.

In a day or so we went on our way to visit other relatives, intending to return and complete our stay with our grandparents later, but I was called home by the illness of my mother and our time was cut short. Poor Grandmother was sad at parting with us, fearing she never would see us again. She faintly broached the subject of our baptism, but we both felt reluctant to be baptized, being quite unprepared for it. We talked aside regretfully, unwilling to grieve her, but we both felt relieved when we got away without having been baptized.

Under a Guiding Hand

In those early years I memorized these lines of poetry:

There is never a life of perfect rest,
And not every cloud has a silver crest.
But there is a Power, unseen and true,
That out of the struggle is leading you;
In patience and faith to the Father cling.
You are the subject, and God is king.

I had come to a crisis in my life, though at that time I did not realize it, and that Power, unseen and true, kept me from entering a path that would have precluded my doing the work in life that has been assigned me, for I probably should never have joined the church. Here I shall follow the advice of the canny Scot who suggests that, while we may confide our inmost thoughts to a bosom crony,

Still keep something to yourself'
Ye hardly tell tae ony.

Question Time

Question:

A friend of mine recently lost her twenty-year-old son. He had a good education, and a brilliant future seemed certain when the Lord took him home. He was a very fine Christian and spent his time in serving others. His mother's grief is great, and it is hard for her to understand why he suffered so much when he had always been such a wonderful person. Won't you please explain why such things happen?
Illinois

MRS. E. M. B.

Answer:

This is more evidence supporting the statements: "While we are in the midst of life, we are in the midst of death" and "God loves a shining mark." Suffering brings a peculiar, distinct, and godly ministry. From a sufferer who was a very fine Christian and spent time serving others comes an undeniable testimony of faith in all that is enduring, such as love, service, and immortality. This young man now provides a permanent love-center in the world beyond for those who mourn. God uses, in the great eternal world by way of heavenly assignments, all age and experience levels of this earth. This makes for complete connections between heaven and earth.

CHAPLAIN A. W. SHEEHY

Question:

In the vision of 1823, the angel Moroni quoted prophecies from the Book of Malachi to Joseph Smith which are quite different from the King James Version. Why is it that these prophecies given by Moroni are not found in the Inspired Version? (Malachi 4: 5, 6; Church History, Volume 1.)
Wisconsin

C.R.S.

Answer:

No doubt this is omitted for the same reason that some other prophecies given that night are not included in the Inspired Version. We can hardly conceive of the angelic messenger confining his language entirely and necessarily to any particular Bible translation, even if it could have been the Inspired Version. His mission was to convey light and truth to the young prophet by the power of God. In other words, I believe it would be safe to state it thus: The angel, by the power of God, uttered prophetic truths that night, revealed long ago by the prophets, which now were "about to be" or "soon to be" fulfilled. The language of these identified them with Malachi, chapters 3 and 4; Isaiah 11; Acts 3: 22, 23; and Joel 2: 28-31. A "little variation from the way it reads" in Malachi 4: 5, 6 brought added light and truth, though perhaps the substance and translation of that chapter as we have it are substantially correct.

HAROLD I. VELT

Question:

On what grounds does the church require one-tenth of our total resources as a beginning of tithing?
England

L. E. A. O.

Answer:

It is on the grounds that the offering of the tenth is the consistent and legitimate application of the law of the tithe as given in the Scriptures. When a person early in youth enters into the gospel covenant and observes the law of tithing year by year as his wealth accumulates, it stands that throughout his life his whole possession has been tithed according to the law; it is the nine-tenths. But when another person defers entering in, or perhaps has not had opportunity to enter and comes in at middle age, having gathered his wealth during his previous years, is he to leave all his increase up to that time, whether much or little, untithed? If so what becomes of the principle of equality? Would not the Lord be partial to require the tithe of all the first man's possessions and only a small part of the second man's? God is impartial in his requirements.

It is sometimes urged that to require a tithe of possessions gained before entering the church is to make the law retroactive. Suppose we apply that idea to the man's sins and argue that it would be making the law of forgiveness retroactive in forgiving him all the sins of his past life? No one would want his sins to be left unforgiven; each desires that God should extend the law of forgiveness back to the beginning. If we, then, expect God to go back of our baptism in order to cover our sins, should we not be willing to go back to fulfill the law of tithes which we have failed to fulfill before?

When the Lord graciously takes away a lifetime of accumulated guilt from a man's soul and opens the door to eternal happiness, an appreciation of such a blessing should inspire that man to respond with alacrity to the law requiring a token offering of one-tenth of his earthly possessions acquired during those years, to make possible the extension of the gospel to others. It is only "a reasonable sacrifice."

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Why do Latter Day Saint ministers try to "steal" members from other churches?
Colorado

E. C. D.

Answer:

We don't! Believing as we do that we are the true church of Christ, offering a complete gospel and dispensing it with the divinely restored authority of the priesthood, we can do nothing but preach this gospel as we believe it. Those who hear the good news and become converted to this doctrine of Jesus Christ ask for baptism into the kingdom of God. It is our responsibility to administer such baptism and to assist these people in adjusting themselves to the work of the kingdom. It makes no difference whether such people have been associated with some other church, or whether they have never joined a church; when they hear the gospel and become converted, they have the right to so associate themselves with God's own organization.

Anger Is Our Enemy

By Leonard J. Lea

Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice.—Ephesians 4: 31.

First of all, let it be understood clearly, this is no lecture from the high place. It is a plea from the foot of the ladder. Anger is our enemy. It makes trouble for us. Now is the time that we should try to free ourselves of it. When the Adversary fails to reach us with any other temptation, he knows that he can always rely on this one. It has never failed him. How recently has he made your life a hell-on-earth with this instrument of torture?

* * *

Someone says: "I cannot control my temper. It gets away from me. I am always sorry afterward, but I can't help it at the time."

That reminds me of something that happened on our school playground when I was a boy.

Bobby was a nice boy, most of the time. But you could always see a glint in his eye to remind you that he carried his bad temper hidden, like a blackjack, in his hip pocket. He could get it out in three seconds. And when he was aroused he was a windmill of fury. We were all afraid of him. His wrath hovered over us like a dark cloud. His parents said they could do nothing with him. Other parents thought so too.

Then John, a new boy, came to school. One day Bobby turned his temper loose on John, just to put him in his place with the rest of us. John was not impressed. John was very calm. He reached out very deliberately and poked Bobby in the nose. Then Bobby did things we had never seen before. He was like a volcano with soda water added. But John just reached out and poked him again. And again. And again.

When it was over, Bobby's temper had cooled off. It never got hot after that, especially when John was around.

Then everybody learned, with vast relief, that Bobby's uncontrollable temper had been controlled.

Unless the victim is insane (needing to be committed to an institution) his temper can be controlled. Just the right punch will do it.

There is an old saying, sometimes attributed to the Greeks, to this effect: "Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." It is not indicated whether anger or insanity was meant. But that makes little difference, because when anger gets out of control it becomes insanity.

A very angry man once lived in our neighborhood. When he was "in high dudgeon" he could be heard for a mile. He had lost many good jobs because of his temper, but he would not give it up. He quarreled with his employers when they came to see him, and finally he moved away from our neighborhood too. Nobody wanted him.

Anger serves no good purpose in the church.

"Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."—Romans 12: 19.

"Whosoever is angry with his brother without cause shall be in danger of the judgment," said Jesus.—Matthew 5: 22.

We had better examine those causes very carefully before we turn anger loose.

Anger causes terrible havoc among congregations. It turns the wolves loose among the flocks, and they are scattered.

Anger serves no good purpose in the home. Oh, the broken hearts, the deep wounds of the spirit, the scars never healed, that are caused by words spoken in anger. We may regret them as soon as we have spoken them. We may know that they are not true even while we are speaking them, but our lips go on saying them anyway. And then we are too proud, or too stupid, to take them back and repent.

When the storm is over, we hope that the angry words will be forgotten. But sometimes the injury becomes too great and cannot be forgotten. A home is broken, and may never be united again.

The immortal bard, Shakespeare, made a study of anger and madness in his tragedy, King Lear. Angry people would do well to study that play carefully and take warning. Lear gave all his property to his two flattering, insincere older daughters. He gave nothing to Cordelia who loved him, but was honest enough not to use his vanity to trick him. In the end, the older daughters turned him out with nothing. As his anger turned to insanity, while he was raving in uncontrolled wrath, he had one lucid moment of mind in which he foresaw the horror that was to mark his end. He cried,

"No, not that way; that way madness lies."

But the storm of his passion swept over him again, and only death brought an end to his grief.

Here are a few rules on "How Never to Be Angry." They work for some people. They could work for you and me.

1. Do not be hurt. Do not resent what people say. It isn't worth the energy it takes.

2. Do not be hurt by what you think people may have in their minds. You are probably wrong.

3. Because somebody else becomes angry, you are not required to do so. Remember the story: It was Bobby who became angry. John wasn't angry at all. He was very quiet. His spirit was not ruffled.

4. Forgive. If you are angry, people have the power to hurt you. If you forgive them, they have no power at all over you. That is your defense. No matter how they may hate you, they can't hurt you if you do not hate them.

5. Take it up with God in prayer. He is always willing to help you to overcome anger, to forgive those who have offended you. Think of your own sins and ask for forgiveness. That will help you to get your mind off what others have done to you.

* * *

"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."
—Proverbs 16: 32.

When you lose your temper you lose control of yourself. You lose control of whatever situation you are in. You lose the respect of others. You lose influence with your friends, and you may lose the friends, too. You lose many fine opportunities in life.

To be free from anger does not mean that you must yield to every effort to impose on you. It does not make you weak and foolish. In fact, when you give up anger, you become stronger because your mind is clear.

One thing can be definitely promised: when you completely overcome anger, you will enter into a greater and a happier life, and you will be loved by many people.

BUILDING BY SACRIFICE

By Richard Price

ZION IS MUCH NEARER today than it was a hundred years ago when the church was reorganized and recommissioned to build the kingdom of God on earth. Yet we are far from the goal. Let us evaluate our progress—what has put us as far along the way as we are, and what has retarded us?

Has the Lord failed us? No! He has moved continuously to uphold the work. Revelation has continued also, even though we have not lived up to that which was already given. The Doctrine and Covenants continues to receive new sections, and at almost every reunion and Conference more light and truth are received from the Lord.

It stands, then, that we must be at fault. In 1833 the Lord said there were already enough Saints to establish Zion. Today there are many more. Our problem is one of quality, not quantity.

There is much difference in quality, in Saints. The children of Israel wandered in the desert for forty years because of their unwillingness to put forth the effort necessary to obtain the promised land; but the two thousand "sons" of Helaman (Book of Mormon), through much suffering and sacrifice, wrought miracles and helped to establish peace and prosperity. The difference in the quality of these two groups was, more than all other things, the difference in their willingness to sacrifice.

THE SCRIPTURES are full of statements which indicate that the Lord expects his chosen people to sacrifice—to "buy the truth" by toil, and sometimes by suffering. Perhaps this is a hard doctrine, but let us consider the statements: "Today is a day of sacrifice"; "Let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me"; "Seek first to bring forth and establish my Zion"; "It is yet day, when all can work. The night will soon come when for many of my people opportunity to assist will have passed." Nearly every prophecy received in the past few decades contains a statement similar to this one: "When my people move forward, my Spirit shall attend, and my purposes shall be fulfilled."

Here is the key to our problem—we must move forward. Ordinary effort just helps us to maintain ourselves. It takes sacrifice to move forward. Few good things come without effort. Zion shall be built by sacrifice; ordinary effort is not enough.

WHAT DOES SACRIFICE MEAN? In one sense it is a romantic word. We thrill when we hear how our forefathers sacrificed to carve a nation out of the wilderness. Yet often we are like a child who is eager to help in the garden—eager until he finds it to be hard work. We want to help build Zion. It is thrilling to think that we can have a part in the greatest thing that could ever happen. But most of us make one reservation: We will help as long as it doesn't hurt—as long as it is fun.

SACRIFICE usually hurts. This is why most of us quit, and why we are falling down on our Zion building. We are only too eager to build Zion if we can do it in our spare time and with the loose change in our pockets. As long as the Lord's work isn't monotonous, tiring, or expensive, we are glad to do it.

Lehi was glad to be the father of a new nation, but he complained when he had to endure the tortures of the desert on the way to the promised land of America. It was fine to have the rewards, but he complained when he had to pay the price.

Though the idea of sacrificing may seem to be a strong doctrine, we find consolation in the fact that the Lord blesses us for each offering we give so that we are more than repaid for our trouble.

King of Kings

By A. J. Corbett

IT TOOK A LONG WHILE for the world to grow up to the charter of liberty expressed in the Constitution of the United States. In Section 98 of the Doctrine and Covenants God says: "Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up for this very purpose." Human freedom from the beginning of history has been determined by the rule or government under which men have lived. Scripture, both ancient and modern, reveals the fact that God's purpose was to rule mankind himself, in his own way, by his own laws and with his own appointees. From Adam to Noah—a period of more than seventeen centuries—there was no monarchy of any kind, but priesthood descent is stated for ten successive generations, from Adam to Noah and "these were all high priests."

The first scriptural mention of monarchy is in Genesis 10: 8-10:

And Cush begat Nimrod: he began to be a mighty one in the earth. He was a mighty hunter before the Lord: wherefore it is said, Even as Nimrod the mighty hunter before the Lord. And the beginning of his kingdom was Babel.

Nimrod was a descendant of Ham, who was cursed of the Lord. The king idea then surely took root, for the fourteenth chapter of Genesis is captioned: "The Battle of the Kings." Years afterward Daniel the prophet wrote his vision of the "Great Image," showing the rise and fall of monarchical rule. His great national image began with Babylon. The margin of the King

James Bible gives Nimrod's Babel as Babylon. It would seem that he began the order of kings, and Daniel's prophecy shows its decline and ultimate destruction. Its Babylonian head of gold is in Asia, and the body of the image lies from there across Europe; the imprint of its ten toes reaches across the English Channel.

THROUGH ABRAHAM God began to set up a nation of his own. For the first 350 years, the Israelites were ruled by judges, from Othniel to Samuel. Their contact with king-ruled nations made them want a king, and they went to Samuel demanding one.

But the thing displeased Samuel, when they said, Give us a king to judge us. And the Lord said unto Samuel, Harken to the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for they have not rejected thee; but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them.—I Samuel 8: 6, 7.

God warned them that king rule would not prove satisfactory. It would mean conscription of their sons and daughters, confiscation of their property, and burdensome taxation. But they would not be advised, and said: "Nay; but we will have a king over us." Their subsequent history fulfilled all the warning they had received. In the days of their fourth king, Rehoboam the son of Solomon, they became a divided nation with ten tribes refusing to submit any longer to the king's demands. From that time Judah and Israel continued as separate kingdoms—Israel till 721 B. C., when the people were carried away captive and have since been "the ten lost tribes," and Judah till the Babylonian captivity about 586 B. C. The last 400 years before Jesus came, they were free from monarchy, and men such as Simon the Just and the Maccabaeus were prominent in national direction. The people were back where they started before they demanded a king to rule over them. Then came their long looked for Messiah who was king, high priest, judge, and ruler all combined—but they rejected him.

THE RULE OF GOD can never be established by a monarchy. Jesus' title, "King of kings," shows definitely where rule and authority is centered. Where and whenever God has controlled the affairs of men, kings have been discarded. This was a "sin and evil," Samuel told his people.

Nay, but a king shall reign over us: when the Lord your God was your king. . . . I will call unto the Lord, and he shall send thunder and rain; that ye may perceive and see that your wickedness is great, which ye have done in the sight of the Lord, in asking you a king. . . . And all the people said unto Samuel, Pray for thy servants unto the Lord thy God, that we die not: for we have added unto all our sins this evil to ask us a king.—I Samuel 12: 12, 17, 19.

When Israel approached Gideon, one of the judges, he said: "I will not rule over you, neither will my son rule over you; the Lord shall rule over you."

God, who is unchangeable, said to Latter Day Israel: "But verily I say unto you, that, in time, ye shall have no king nor ruler, for I will be your king and watch over you." The difference between "rule over" and "watch over" needs no comment.

THE JAREDITES, the first colony in America, were faced with the question of rule. As they began to multiply they desired that one of their sons be appointed a king over them. "This was grievous unto them. But the Brother of Jared said unto them, Surely this thing leadeth into captivity" (Ether 3: 25-27). They appointed a king, and captivity and all the national ills of their history followed till they were finally extinguished 1,600 years later. Then came the Nephites. Said Nephi:

And it came to pass that they would that I should be their king. But I, Nephi, was desirous that they should have no king; nevertheless, I did for them according to that which was in my power (II Nephi 4: 27, 28).

Said Alma to the Nephites:

Even so I desire that ye should stand fast in this liberty wherewith ye have been made free, and that ye trust no man to be a king over you.—Mosiah 11: 14.

The words of Mosiah were surely those of inspiration when he said:

Now I say unto you, that because all men are not just, it is not expedient that ye should have a king or kings to rule over you. . . . Ye cannot dethrone an iniquitous king, save it be through much contention, and the shedding of much blood. . . . He trampleth under his feet the commandments of God; and he enacteth laws, and sendeth them forth among his people; yea, laws after the manner of his own wickedness, and whosoever doth not obey his laws, he causeth to be destroyed; . . . And thus an unrighteous king doth pervert the ways of all righteousness.—Mosiah 13: 21-32.

Nephi, standing upon the land "choice above all other lands," said:

And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles: and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall rise up unto the Gentiles. And I will fortify this land against all other nations; and he that fighteth against Zion shall perish, saith God; for he that raiseth up a king against me shall perish. For I the Lord, the King of heaven, will be their king; and I will be a light unto them forever, that hear my words.—II Nephi 7: 18-20.

THAT "THE KINGDOMS of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ" is a statement of the complete subjugation of all earthly rulers and governments. Until recent times kings and monarchs were despots; they had no parliaments nor governmental advisers. Also there is nothing to choose between a monarchial despot and a totalitarian democrat; neither represents the divine way of life and its freedom and justice. Today, perhaps the Great British Empire is the one remaining example of medieval monarchy. It still displays all the golden elegance of royalty. Vast sums are needed for the upkeep of such a form of rule. This, too, was pointed out by Samuel to Israel. Some of Britain's past monarchs have been despotic, but as years have advanced "the divine right of kings" has been contested, and now that vast empire is ruled by a democratic king. The people of the empire make their own laws in lower and upper chambers of government, and the king merely adds his signature. England has been blessed in recent years with a succession of good kings. Despotism has long since departed, and a democratic way of life and rule have characterized them. Because of these qualities—which are surely Christian—the people mourn their passing, for they sense the loss not only of a ruler but also of a companion. The kingly spirit of ancient times has no reflection whatever in the modern monarch and his democratic way of life.

Then, too, it is a step in the direction of the rule of God that shall be; for his government is called a theocratic democracy. That is why the revelation is made that in time there shall be no king or ruler, but the Lord himself will watch over his people. His way of life is the divine purpose for all men. The rule of man has obtruded itself under Satanic influences into national life, but as the Scripture says: "It is not right that any man should be in bondage to any other man." Neither was it ever right that some man should be born to rule his fellowmen. Jesus, the real king, came to show how life and living should be. "The government shall be upon his shoulder."

God's Sales Force

The art of salesmanship can be stated in five words: believing something and convincing others.

A great deal of happiness and success in life depends upon our ability to sell our ideas and personalities. Personality is the most potent fact and factor in the life of man; it tinges all he touches and is the colored glass through which he views the world.

We, as authorized expeditors and dispatchers of God's word, have a tremendous selling assignment. In order to carry out any selling assignment we must be provided with "sales tools." We have many, but the most effective is personality.

This old Scandinavian proverb recently caught my eye: "Ve get so soon old, and yet so late schmart."

My sales manager recently said at a sales meeting: "Men, Samson was a piker. He killed only a thousand men with the jawbone of an ass. Every hour in the day 10,000 sales are killed with this weapon." How many prospects do we lose because of the lack of co-ordination between jawbone and mind?

We cannot call ourselves salesman until we believe something strong enough to convince others. This is as true in selling the gospel as in selling Duz.

We know our product is good. We know the world needs it. Let us not sell God short

Five New Members Baptized

BERRYVILLE, ARKANSAS.—The Saints are meeting in a large room over Check's Cafe on the Main Square in Berryville. The first meeting held at this location was May 4.

Evangelist Orman Salisbury and wife of St. Joseph, Missouri, were present for a series of meetings May 18-June 1, which Brother Salisbury preached. Twelve members received their patriarchal blessings at this time.

A baptismal service was held June 8, and L. J. Farmer was baptized. A basket dinner by the river was held following the service. Elder L. W. Hunt officiated at the confirmation service held at the church in the evening. Four other members have been baptized this year: Ed Mitchel, baptized January 23 by Priest Clarence Gamet; Glen and Zelma Osburn and son Karrell, baptized by Elder Hunt on Easter Sunday. District President Stephen Black assisted at the confirmation service for the Osburns which was held the following Wednesday evening.

At the Father's Day service Brother Hunt was assisted by his two sons, Teacher Leroy Hunt and Priest Lester W. Hunt, Jr., of Axtel, Nebraska. Elder Hunt blessed his granddaughter Nancy Ann, daughter of Lester, Jr., and Shirley Hunt of Axtel, Nebraska.

The women's department has made progress in the building fund projects.

Seven of the Zion's Leaguers attended the youth retreat held May 10-11 at Racine, Missouri, camp grounds with their leader, Mrs. L. W. Hunt.—Reported by NELLIE SMALLEY

Apostle Hield Guest Speaker

HOUSTON, TEXAS.—Apostle Charles R. Hield visited with the branch and attended a special dinner in the educational building May 9. He was the speaker at the service on Sunday, May 11.

The priesthood dinner for the month of May was given May 15 in honor of Fred Banta who has gone to Nauvoo under General Church appointment. Janet Hall, who was married to Brother Banta on June 19, was also honored at the dinner.

The following were baptized at the branch: Patricia McCormick, Robert L'Roy, William Sanitz, Lonnie Preslar, all of Houston; and Kenneth Vandel and George Vandel of Midwest, Wyoming.

Roy Vandel is the pastor of the branch.—Reported by LUCILLE CROOKER

Young People Sponsor Camper

ST. CHARLES MISSOURI.—The young people of the branch sponsored a program and raised money to send Donald Bushdiecker to the youth camp that was held at Brush Creek, Illinois, June 22-29. He reported a fine camp. Elder James W. Myers is the pastor of the branch.—Reported by FLORENCE HOLLANDER

Upper Auditorium Redecorated

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.—The men's club, whose president is Willis Hern, presented the congregation with red and white carnations in honor of Mother's Day, Sunday, May 11.

The women's department, under the direction of Mrs. Ross Price, held a bake sale Thursday, May 15. The activity netted over forty-seven dollars toward the church branch budget.

An enjoyable and profitable Graceland vaudeville show was presented on Friday evening, May 15, in the newly decorated upper auditorium. Other new additions to the refurbishing of the church include an American flag, and a glass enclosed sign which announces meetings and speaker.

The young adults sponsored a bake sale June 7. The profits were used to purchase paint and materials which were utilized by the group to clean and paint the swimming pool at the district reunion grounds at Happy Valley.

On Children's Day, June 8, three children were baptized. They were Pamela Mandel, Patricia Lawson, and Merle Day. Elder Emery S. Parks performed the ordinance. The other children of the congregation also participated in the program under the direction of Mrs. Zip Zender.—Reported by MRS. CHARLOTTE McCLUSKEY

Missionary Conducts Series

HUMBER BAY, ONTARIO.—At the morning service on Scout Sunday, February 26, Apostle C. George Mesley was the speaker. The Humber Bay Scout Troop was present and Apostle Mesley referred in his sermon to his scouting as a boy.

During the month of February the priesthood of the branch conducted cottage meetings, holding seven a week in seven different homes. This was followed by one week of sermons with a special speaker each night.

On March 23, Reginald Middleton was baptized by Elder Walter Thorpe, and confirmed by Elder James Dadson, assisted by Elder Thorpe.

The following three children were also baptized on Children's Day by Elder Thorpe: Jean Rowett was confirmed by Elder Thorpe, assisted by Elder H. Brown; Frank Hustler was confirmed by Elder Brown, assisted by Elder James Dadson; and Jimmie McLean, by Elder Dadson, assisted by Elder Brown.

A special missionary series was conducted May 4-21 by Missionary Al Pelletier. Much publicity throughout the community preceded this, and the nightly sermons were well attended. At the end of the series, Mrs. Ann Rowett was baptized by Elder Fred LeFeuvre, and confirmed by Elder LeFeuvre, assisted by Elder Pelletier. Also baptized was Eugene Miller by Elder Pelletier, confirmed by Elder Pelletier, assisted by Elder LeFeuvre.

On Saturday, May 20, a social evening was held after a bowling party for Betty and Al Pelletier.

After the final service of the series, a farewell party was given for the Pelletiers, at which time they were presented with a record player, the gift of the branch, and two recordings made by the Toronto district choir, the gift of the young people.

On Sunday, June 1, Aileen Dadson and Dorene Moore returned from the States, after spending one semester at Graceland College. A party was held for them on their return, and the girls were called upon to talk to the branch on their five months at Graceland.

Branch President Is Appointed

HEARNE, TEXAS.—The Saints have had as guest speakers during the past month Bishop Joseph Baldwin, Apostle Charles R. Hield, Seventy A. H. Yale, and District President C. W. Tischer.

The Communion service on July 6 was presided over by District President C. W. Tischer. He was assisted by Elders A. J. Banta and H. M. Hay. A basket lunch was served at noon followed by a women's meeting with Sister A. J. Banta, district supervisor, in charge.

The program of the day was concluded by appointing Elder H. M. Hay as branch president. Approximately twenty visiting Saints from Houston, Bryan, and Waco were present for the service.—Reported by NELLA JUNE DOTSON

Anniversary of Mission Observed

MISSION, CALIFORNIA.—On March 27 the following people were baptized by Elder H. L. Bausell: Laura Fay Hensley, Ruth Cecelia Peters, and Gene Wesley Peters. They were confirmed on April 6 under the hands of Elders George Wixom, Herald Wixom, and H. L. Bausell.

The first anniversary of the mission was observed on April 27 with District Bishop David Carmichael as the speaker. A birthday cake, topped with a miniature church and one candle, was baked and decorated by Mary Lynn Nichol and presented to the pastor, after which a basket dinner was held. Birthday cake was served to all present. The attendance of the mission has doubled in one year. There is now an average attendance of sixty people, compared to the average a year ago of twenty-five and thirty.

Dorothy Ann Person was baptized on June 6 and Barbara Ann Schuler on June 8. They were confirmed by Elders H. L. Bausell and Charles Mottashed.

Velma Jarvis and Bruce Bausell were married on May 16 in Boise, Idaho, and recently visited parents and friends in this community. On July 9 a reception was held in their honor at the home of Violet and George Steels. Forty-five attended and many gifts were received by the honorees.—Reported by ANNA M. CALDWELL

Baby Blessed

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA.—Douglas Lee, son of Roland and Betty Best, was blessed June 3, 1952.

Books Presented to Branch Library

ST. MARYS, OHIO.—On June 29, four children, Michael and Peggy Lee Holdren, Linda Sue Coats, and Vickie Lynn Germann, were blessed by Paul Zellers, counselor to the district president, and Pastor Robert A. Galusha.

Eight people were baptized by the pastor on this same day. They were Mrs. Evalyn Holdren, her daughter Beverly, and son Narval, Lloyd Junior Deitsch, Robert Deitsch, Donald Deitsch, Ramona Faye Wolfe, and Judy Ann Budd.

The women's department, under the direction of Mrs. Nora Hardin, is active in study and financial projects. In June the department entertained the women of the Lima Branch with a tea.

The men and boys of the branch served the women and girls a luncheon for Mother's Day. Slides of General Conference, the new church at Lamoni, and the Student Center were shown. In return, the women and girls served the men and boys a chicken dinner on Father's Day.

Seven young persons of the branch plan to attend youth camp at Kiondashawa at Transfer, Pennsylvania.

During the Easter service, the Zion's League presented the branch library the four volumes of church history and leather bound volumes of the Holy Scriptures and the Book of Mormon. Mrs. Robert A. Galusha is the young people's leader.

A young married people's group has recently been organized.

New front steps and a new coat of paint for the exterior of the church have been provided during the summer.—Reported by MRS. LUCY GALUSHA

Women's Institute Held

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—The women of the stake, which includes thirteen branches, held an institute at Central Church on May 23.

The theme, "The Power of Stewardship," was introduced by a worship period arranged by Sister Gwynn Ish. Classwork and lectures were given by Ora Macrae, Dorothy Niles, Mayme Blakeman, Opal Page, and Millie Johnson. A special feature of the institute was a display of personal hobbies and circle activity ideas. The theme, "Time for Talents," was carried out with displays of hand-painted china, wood fiber, nylon flowers, orchids grown and exhibited by Sisters Opal Page and Helen Brackenbury, a collection of linens and interesting art objects from foreign countries, a display of Japanese clothing, and a collection of linens and books belonging to Marietta Walker and loaned to the institute by her daughter, Sister Frances Davis of Burbank. Yearbooks from the different women's groups were exhibited along with several money-making ideas. Another feature was a film of an Alaskan trip taken and shown by Sister Mae Peterman.

A family dinner was held in the evening followed by two evening lectures. Husbands and all men of the stake were invited to share in the evening meeting. Brother Glenn Holmes, stake religious education director, used as his topic, "Our Young Adults." Brother Donald Harder, senior counselor at the University of California in Los Angeles, spoke to the group on "Counseling and Visiting."

The institute was arranged by Sister Hazel Gregg, stake women's leader, and her counselors, Sisters Audentia Kelley and Dorothy Slater. Sister Kelley with volunteer helpers planned, prepared, and served a ham dinner. Sister Slater supervised the exhibit of hobbies and circle activity ideas.—Reported by OPAL PAGE and DOROTHY SLATER

Church Remodeled and Re-opened

WASHINGTON, INDIANA.—On Sunday, June 29, 1952, the Washington Branch, seven miles north on Highway 57, at the Harbstreit community, had as guests W. Wallace Smith of the First Presidency, Sister W. Wallace Smith, and Saints from the surrounding branches. The occasion was the official re-opening of the church building, following major remodeling and repairs of the old building.

The program for the day consisted of a prayer service, preaching services, and lectures. The sermons were given by Brother Smith, and a lecture to the women was given by Sister Smith. Several of the women cared for the children in the new basement during the prayer service. A basket dinner, buffet style, was served in the basement at noon. A sermon in the evening began a two weeks' series by Missionary J. H. Yager. The music for the day was under the direction of Brother and Sister Glenn Yager of Louisville. The attendance was approximately one hundred sixty persons.

The remodeling of the old church building consisted of adding a twelve-foot extension to the auditorium; digging a new, full basement; re-ceiling and decorating the auditorium; and installing an oil furnace. The church building now measures twenty-six by forty-six feet.

The work of the Restoration in this area began about 1890 through the ministry of Elder D. O. Stites and family. The Saints first worshiped in homes and schoolhouses. The first place of worship owned by the Saints was an old, unused schoolhouse. It was located about three-quarters of a mile north of the present church building. That first building was abandoned about 1912 when Elder D. O. Stites, due to ill health, moved to Washington, Indiana, and other families moved to Missouri. Only three members remained in the area of the church building. They were Mrs. J. D. (Emma) Harbstreit, William A. Harbstreit, and his wife, Elmira. From 1912 to 1928 no missionaries visited the area unless called for in case of sickness.

In March, 1928, Missionary J. O. Dutton came into the Harbstreit settlement to make a survey of the possibilities for re-establishing the church in the community. He preached a two weeks' series of missionary sermons in a hall at Cornettsville. In June and July of the same year Elder Dutton returned to continue the missionary services in the Cornettsville hall. During this visit of the missionary four new members were added to the small group of three—Joe Harbstreit, Jr., Andrew Harbstreit, Esther Harbstreit Petty, and Mary Harbstreit Bush, all children of Mr. and Sister J. D. Harbstreit. Year after year for about eleven years Elder Dutton returned to do missionary work and to build the work up, adding to the number of members from time to time.

The Silver Chalice

In 1934 the group built the present church building on the Harbstreit farm, across the road from the Harbstreit home.

The August, 1935, conference of the Southern Indiana District at Byrnsville authorized the organizing of the Washington, Indiana, group into a branch. December 1 of the same year Apostle M. A. McConley and Elder J. O. Dutton presided over an organization that started the present branch of forty members. There were fourteen of the twenty-one charter members present for the organization meeting, together with a number of friends of the church. Elder Z. M. Harbstreit was chosen pastor and has served in that capacity to the present time.

Since the gospel of the Restoration was established here the following men of the General Church have given of their ministry to the Saints and friends of the community: L. F. Daniels, R. Etzenhauser, J. H. Lake, Ike Baggerly, E. C. Briggs, Leonard Scott, Elder Knox, T. Bell, T. W. Chatburn, Dick Scott, Willie Marshall, George Jenkins, John Zahnd, John Harpe, Charley Harpe, Alma Barmore, John Dowker, L. C. Moore, Heman C. Smith, Willard Smith, Bernie Lampkin, F. A. Smith, D. T. Williams, Paul M. Hanson, M. A. McConley, Charles R. Hield, Percy E. Farrow, W. Wallace Smith, William Anderson, J. O. Dutton, Ed. Robertson, Allen Breckenridge, David Dowker, J. H. Yager, M. L. Draper, and many others.—Reported by Z. M. HARBSTREIT

Evangelist Is Guest Speaker

LAWTON, OKLAHOMA.—The Saints conducted a vesper service at the USO on April 6. Brother Francis Presler gave a short talk on "The Purpose in Life." After the service the women served refreshments.

On Easter Sunday the Saints from Wichita Falls joined the Lawton congregation for a sunrise service at Lake Elmer Thomas. Brother Bunch served Communion to the group, after which a breakfast was held on the shore of the lake. Brother Presler delivered the morning sermon.

On April 23, the group met at the Dettly home for a farewell party for Brother and Sister Francis Presler. Brother Presler completed his school at Fort Sill and returned to Camp Carson, Colorado.

Brother Stuart Wight of Oklahoma City served Communion to the group on May 4 and June 1. Evangelist L. S. Wight of Chicago was the speaker on June 1.

The group motored to Wichita Falls on July 11 to meet with the Saints there. Seventies James Daugherty and Arthur Gibbs were the ministers. On July 3 several of the families drove to Davidson, Oklahoma, for an all-day meeting.

A farewell party was given July 18 for Mrs. John Robertson and Major and Mrs. Marvin Lindmark and sons. Sister Robertson left Lawton to join her husband, Sgt. John Robertson, stationed with the Army in Baumholder, Germany. Brother Lindmark has been transferred to school in Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. Brother and Sister Robert Bunch and Sister Mae Carron of Wichita Falls attended the party.—Reported by MRS. BETTE LINDMARK

First Young Adult Retreat in Colorado

DENVER, COLORADO.—The Eastern Colorado young adults held their first district-wide retreat at Denver, Colorado, June 20-22, 1952. The theme was "Young Adults and the Church."

District Young Adult Leader Glen Rose was in charge of the program, which was highlighted by a stirring call to activity from District President Ward A. Hougas. Others working directly with planning and programming were Thelma McGhee, Phyllis Hester, Don and Mary Cash, Ruth Wilkinson, Barbara Rose, Dave Shupe, Bob and Rosemary Fishburn, Wilburt Richards, Wesley Evans, Jo Ann Fenn, and Grace Crocker.

Plans were laid at the business session for a series of regional retreats within the district, followed by a district-wide retreat this winter. Four regional counselors were chosen to work with the young adult leader—Duane Miller, Pueblo, Colorado; Virginia Goddard, Champion, Nebraska; Esta Rendell, Gering, Nebraska; and Bill Schibner, Cheyenne, Wyoming.

Branches represented at the retreat were Denver, Wray, Colorado Springs, Fort Morgan, Yuma, and La Veta, Colorado; and Champion and Chadron, Nebraska.—Reported by GLEN ROSE

Sault Ste Marie Holds Institute

SAULT STE MARIE, MICHIGAN.—A district priesthood and women's department institute was held at Sault Ste Marie, Michigan, May 17, 18. The theme was "New Horizons for the Restoration." In charge were Apostle C. G. Mesley and Elder Rex Stowe, district president. Apostle Mesley preached and taught men's classes; Elder Stowe assisted in prayer services. Sister Blanche Mesley taught women's classes. District women's leader was Sister Evelyn Backman. Sisters Mesley, Hannah, and Beaudin participated in a panel discussion, "Women's Work and Place in the Local Branch." Oris Flood was in charge of music. The Saints extended their appreciation to the Michigan State College of Mining and Technology for their courtesy in allowing the priesthood to meet there.—Reported by ORVAL G. KING

Guest Speakers at Lennox

LENNOX, CALIFORNIA.—May 4 eight-year-old Linda was baptized by her father, Howard Smith. May 11 Algy Rose, Minnie Mims and daughter, Barbara, were baptized by Elder Ray Webb.

Elders Joseph Nuckles and Ray Webb blessed Gwendolyn Carmack on Easter Sunday and Dennis Pearson on December 30.

For the Good Friday program "The Seven Last Words" was presented by the choir, under the direction of Inez Smith.

Bishop J. S. Kelley spoke on April 26. On May 4 Thomas R. Beil talked on Conference, and on June 8 Apostle Gleazer spoke on "Lack of Concern."

Inez Smith and Nell Galli attended General Conference.

Irby Webb returned home for the summer from Kansas State Teachers' College. Glen Lawson from Missouri visited a few days. Carol McDonald, former Graceland, stopped off at Lennox on her way to Hawaii, where she was married. Frances Holmes, on furlough, is stationed in Washington, D.C., where she is serving in the U. S. Air Force. Benny Owens is back from active duty in Korea.

The following students were graduated from Inglewood High School this year: Glenda Holmes, Barbara Woods, Kenneth Smith, and Glen Stevenson. Barbara and Kenneth plan to attend Graceland College this fall.—Reported by ARLENE PIKE also one great means of spiritual strength taken away from them; and believing as we do, that not only can the Saints be strengthened in their faith and hope, but also that the people of the world will be induced to attend such meetings, as shall be herein after named, and that thereby much good may accrue to the cause of God in general. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That this General Conference does authorize the holding of yearly meetings in the fall of each succeeding year, at such time and place, or times and places, as shall be deemed wisdom in the mind of the Conference, such meetings to be called annual reunion meetings of Latter Day Saints.

After discussion and several attempts to amend, the matter was referred to a committee appointed by the chair. The chair appointed W. W. Blair, Charles Derry, and John Hawley. This committee met and reported back to the Conference as follows:

The committee to whom was committed the papers in respect to reunion meetings by the church beg leave to report that they respectfully recommend that this Conference advise that mission and district authorities arrange for such reunions for religious services, when and where it may be deemed by them best.

The recommendation of the committee was approved.

THE FIRST REUNION

On July 3, 1883, a committee on reunions met at Council Bluffs at which the following districts were represented: Little Sioux, Galland's Grove, Pottawattamie, Fremont, Northern Nebraska, and Central Nebraska. After the district representatives had expressed their wishes and discussed time and place, it was unanimously resolved that the reunion be held at Leland's Grove, Shelby County, Iowa, commencing September 15 and continuing over Sunday, September 23, 1883. It rained all day the first day of this reunion. Then the skies cleared, and the first reunion of the church was a spiritual and social success. The following resolution is indicative of how the Saints who attended that first reunion felt:

Whereas, We, the Saints assembled in this reunion meeting, have received spiritual blessings and favor from God and have enjoyed the fellowship and communion of each other since we assembled together, and believing as we do that great good will accrue to the church generally as well as to us individually, in the continuation of these meetings; therefore be it

Resolved, That we are in favor of holding a reunion meeting annually, and that a committee of three be appointed and empowered to obtain control of the grounds where said meetings shall be held, and to let grounds for provision stands, and that the proceeds from the letting of said stands shall be used to defray the expenses of the meeting, reserving to the owner of land one stand for the sale of provisions.

Following the adoption of this resolution they decided to hold another reunion, commencing on the first Saturday of October, 1884, on the property of Henry Garner, Raglan Township, Harrison County, Iowa.

Marriage Today

A General Conference Address

By John F. Sheehy

PART II

SOME THINK that war creates marriage problems. It isn't war that creates the problems; it is the lack of education by family and church in preparing young people for marriage. One thing war does do most assuredly—it multiplies problems. We have more marriages during war years than we do in times of peace. Often we are led to believe that marriage and war are on the same level. Some children were playing and their mother came along and thought they were fighting. She stopped them and asked what they were fighting about. They said, "We aren't fighting; we're playing papa and mama!"

In World War II a marked quickening of the marriage rate in the United States was registered with the first selective draft law which was passed in 1940. By 1941 marriages had jumped 20 per cent above normal. This was because young men under twenty were being drafted. They had to register at the selective service headquarters, so they registered at the marriage bureau too. Reasons assigned for these many marriages during war are given as the glamour of uniforms, allowances, and allotments. A soldier may never come back, thus he is a good insurance bet.

Study also shows that the divorce rate does not increase during war.

Will you remember that? This is from some of the best vital statistics the government has made possible. I repeat: study also shows that the divorce rate does not increase during war—while separated they can stick it out. The divorce rate does rise rapidly after wars. Allowances and allotments cease then. Persons who married when they were perfect strangers have time to get acquainted, and often they find they do not love each other. Breaks come painfully fast after war. However they can be lessened a great deal by kind parents and thoughtful pastors.

DURING THE CLOSING DAYS of the last war I was living in Toronto. I belonged to a civic organization that met all troop trains and drove soldiers and their brides to their homes. Experiences were varied, and many were tragic. Boys had lied about their home in Canada to the girls in Germany, England, Scotland, and Wales. When the war brides saw their homes, they refused to get out of the car. Some went back to the Red Cross headquarters and from there back to England. Some of the brides came before the soldier husband and found a very cool reception from the new in-laws. Some in-laws tried to make them feel at home, but the brides could not make the necessary adjustment.

There was one couple in Toronto I watched with great interest. A young man came from Australia to finish his training in the air force. He met and fell in love with one of our fine church girls. He did not belong to the church. They did not marry. He went overseas. After the war he went home direct from Europe to Australia. They continued their love affair and the mail man was kept very busy. Then I got busy. I found out who was the pastor of our church in Sidney. I found out also that he was the right kind of a pastor in whom I could confide. I told him about the church girl and asked if he would call on the young man and find out all he could about his home life and if he would want his daughter to be married to such a young man. He visited the young man and found that he was from a fine Christian home; all members of the family belonged to the Methodist church. We felt better. The young lady went to Australia to be married. The pastor met her at the boat and took her to his home, then performed the ceremony in the young man's church. The young man is now a lawyer. He soon joined the church, became director of the church school, and is now an elder.

YOUNG PEOPLE should not be afraid of marriage. It is sacred; it is lovely. The best advice I can give parents is that which I have already given. If a father wants his son to be a good husband, then he must be a good husband in his own home and let the boy see what a good husband is like. If a mother wants her daughter to be a good wife, then she must be a good wife. When young persons have what some people call "puppy love," listen to them because it is impotent. Take time to talk with them and give them guidance right then, for that is the important time of their lives and that is when they need it. May God help us to get our young people happily married, and then we will avoid the many problems that marriage presents.

Parental Delinquency

By Maude D. Anderson

IN a radio address, a well-known attorney made the statement that the greatest problem facing Americans today was not physical disease but parental delinquency and its effect on juveniles. He brought out the fact that even though a child might be stricken with polio, there was still the possibility of his living to become president of his country, but if he were convicted of a felony, such would be impossible, and the stigma would follow him for the rest of his life. Millions of dollars are being spent to combat disease and discover its cause. Millions are also being spent to combat juvenile delinquency, yet little is done to eliminate the cause.

To begin with most people fail to realize the cause of juvenile delinquency. They have the idea that it can be combated by giving youngsters more and more entertainment. Such a theory is like the idea of feeding a sick person solely on cake, pie, and candy. Such a diet could hardly be expected to produce healthy bodies. The real trouble is not a lack of entertainment, in most instances, but a lack of opportunity for constructive expression.

IN DAYS GONE BY, it was necessary for children to make some real contribution to the upkeep of the home, but in our modern way of life there is little for a child to do which can be considered a challenge to his ability. Even his toys require no constructive thinking.

The child who has had plenty of constructive occupations at home—such as the building of models—and has been encouraged by his family in those occupations and projects of organizations like the 4-H Club or the Boy Scouts, seldom presents any problem to the community. However, all too many homes are show places for the parents and their friends, and children are not permitted to clutter up the place. Parents feel that it is the duty of the school to furnish any necessary outlet for the ambitions of their children. Mothers prefer earning money to caring for their children, and little tots are trundled off for some middle-aged or elderly person to care for instead of having the love and supervision of a young mother as nature intended that they should have.

ONE OF THE GREATEST ADVANCES in combating this problem is the adult education program which teaches young mothers and fathers how to train their children. This program provides a nursery for children of preschool age, taught by the young mothers themselves, while the fathers are required to devote a certain number of hours each month to the project. It is under the supervision of experts and is planned in such a way that mothers who work may take advantage of it without neglecting their children. It gives both parents an opportunity to know and appreciate children.

Its greatest value to the community is that it is training children in the right way while they are young enough to profit by that training. It is often said that a child's character is formed by the time he is eight years old; if such is the case, those formative years are the ones deserving attention if teen-age trouble is to be prevented.

Part-time work for mothers, rather than full-time jobs, would solve many of the world's problems, if employers could be induced to cooperate. Many mothers feel compelled to work because of financial conditions. If employers only realized it, they would get more for their money by hiring two women four hours each day than one woman eight hours. Each could inject a lot more enthusiasm into working the shorter period of time, and there would be the added advantage to the community of having the payroll distributed over a wider area.

The Open Door

There was a little girl who had done things all day to exasperate her mother and finally in desperation the mother had put her in her room to think over her sins. Quite a while later she called to her young daughter and asked if she were sorry now and wanted to come out and join the family. She didn't hear any answer but saw the nursery door open. Again she asked if the little one were sorry, but saw only a peeking face around the doorway. "I'm not sorry enough to come out, but I'm sorry enough to have the door open," was the reply.

How much like grownups that child acted. Most of us, doing things against the laws of God and our fellow-men, are not sorry enough to repent completely and return to God's way, but we want the doorway between heaven and earth left open far enough for us to gain some of the benefits of God's plan.

Introduction to Zion

By Ladd Duryea

EVER BEEN TO INDEPENDENCE?

No? Well, now, that's too bad. Everybody should come to Independence for a visit if he can.

Got a moment? Then let me tell you something about the town. I've been here only a few days myself, but maybe you'd like a newcomer's opinion of the town that is to be the center of Zion. I haven't been here long enough to absorb any of the publicity put out by the Chamber of Commerce, so I can give you a picture of the town only as I see it as a relatively new church member.

I drove down to Independence from Nebraska last week end with my wife, Betty. We arrived late Sunday afternoon. The town isn't the biggest in the world, of course, but it's big enough to get lost in.

It happened this way. We followed the same highway about all the way from St. Joseph, and for once in our traveling experience the road went just where we thought our road map said it was supposed to go. We were gaily confident when our highway led by a sign reading, "Welcome to Independence, Home of President Truman." Elated over finding Independence with such little trouble, we determined to stick on our tried-and-true highway until it led us past the Auditorium, the Stone Church, the Temple Lot, the town's business section, and deposited us right in the courtyard of a motel.

OUR CONFIDENCE was high and didn't start to sink until we approached the southern outskirts of the city on the way out of town. "What's wrong?" we asked ourselves. Slowly it came to us: Our old friend, the highway, had deserted us. Rather than leading us where we wanted to go, it had led us through residential districts without even allowing us a short glance at the dome of the Auditorium.

Grudgingly we turned off the highway and set out into what was for us the uncharted wilderness of Independence. Within the next half hour or so we unknowingly encircled most of the main part of town,

Here Is the Writer . . .

LADD DURYEY, a new assistant editor on the "Herald" staff, is a 1952 graduate of the University of Nebraska school of journalism and of the Comstock, Nebraska, high school. He and his wife, the former Betty Petet of Comstock, were baptized in Lincoln early in 1950; and Ladd was ordained a priest on November 15 of the same year.

passed President Truman's home, and met our highway again at the northeast corner of town. Finally, though, we found the business district and a cabin camp.

Armed with a new map of the city, we set out after supper to explore more of Independence and to attend evening services at one of our churches if we could find one in time. We couldn't. Later we discovered that Sunday evening services for all Reorganized Latter Day Saint congregations in Independence are held at the Campus.

The Campus is a rather large vacant area near the Auditorium. It is used by the young people of the church for recreational purposes and by the church for outdoor services.

Monday was quite a day. First we went to the Auditorium. It's a very impressive building, even though it isn't finished. To me it has sort of a friendly look. But maybe that's because of the persons we met inside it.

As soon as we entered the building we were met by a cheerful, rather elderly man who invited us to register, take a tour of the building and help ourselves to free church literature on a table facing the entrance.

We did look through the Auditorium and were impressed by what we saw. We had been in the building only a few minutes before we began to feel what was so clearly apparent in the voice and face of our guide—pride in the church. His pride wasn't the egotistical, vain feeling of self-satisfaction which bothers many; it was tinted strongly with thankfulness. We were proud of the progress made by the church—Christ's church—and mighty thankful that we were fortunate enough to be part of it.

The Auditorium is made largely of stone and steel and is 250 feet wide and 270 feet long. It houses the general offices of the church, as well as classrooms; dining rooms; kitchen facilities; the lower auditorium which can be used to present stage plays or for basketball, volleyball, or other games; and the main auditorium. The main auditorium is an oval-shaped room with a balcony running around it and the floor slanting gradually toward a platform for presiding officers and the choir at one end. Only the ceiling above the balcony is completed permanently, the guide said. The ceiling is dome shaped and is covered with light-colored stone. The center of the ceiling where a large skylight will be built is more than seventy feet from the floor.

I understand the Auditorium seemed pretty big when it was started twenty-six years ago, but it should be bigger now because its 8,000 seating capacity is not enough for General Conference crowds. Sometimes in small branches it seems that not much is happening and that the church isn't getting anywhere very fast. But here things seem to be moving and you can see that the church is growing. There are about 9,800 Saints in Independence, according to President Edwards, and so many of them attend Stone Church that two services must be held on Sunday mornings—one at 8:15, and an identical one at 11:00. The Auditorium is used for classes.

We met Presidents F. Henry Edwards and W. Wallace Smith and Bishops Walter Johnson and G. L. DeLapp at the Auditorium. We saw Chris B. Hartshorn, managing editor, at his home. All are pleasant men. Perhaps you have met some of them.

After everything was arranged for me to work at the Herald Publishing House, we were taken down town to Herald House and introduced to persons who work there. I guess we met about fifty persons, but as usual I remembered only half a dozen names. You know how it is when you meet a lot of people like that in a few minutes. You forget most of the names; but after you have met them all, you are left with sort of a general impression of the persons as a whole. That's the way it was with me.

WE HAD DREADED hunting for an apartment in a strange town, but that's what we had to do after leaving Herald House. The hunt was short and effortless for us, thanks to Bishop Johnson. He said that his mother-in-law was out-of-town for the summer and that we could rent her apartment if we wanted. So we moved in while he moved some of her possessions out. And here we are.

I've said it before, and I'll say it again: I surely wish you could visit Independence. It's not too big—only about 37,000 persons—and it's not too small. It has a lot of nice people. I think you'd like it.

The Borrowed Book

Have you ever thought of the book you borrow as a liability? You will have to return the book itself as you would the principal of a loan. And you will have to pay interest in the form of time invested to read it.

In all respect to good friendship, the lender of a book can be a greater nuisance than the borrower of one. Let a man borrow a book from you, and if he loses it, you will never hear him mention it. He will keep very quiet on the subject. But if you borrow one and lose it, you will never meet that friend without squirming from the thought that he is remembering the loss against you. He may hold it against you forever.

Suppose you come up to the bar at the great last judgment. You have admitted all your sins and confessed your weaknesses as they were read, supported by incontestable evidence, from the books in the hands of the angels. Your penalties have been assessed, and you have made arrangements to pay with sundry days spent in hell or in the various departments of purgatory. It seems that you are about to be dismissed. Then the prosecuting attorney rises and says, "Your Honor, there is one more item against the defendant. On May 27, 1956, he borrowed a book entitled 'The Interrelated Psychotic Tendencies of the Ichthyosaurus,' and our record fails to show that he ever returned it. We wish to inquire, what did he do with that book?"

It could be the last small item that would prevent you from entering one of the more satisfactory glories.

This would be a good principle. Never lend a book. Give it to the man if he needs it, but don't lend it. It would probably never come back anyway. If he ever reads it (a great improbability) and thinks to give it back, you have gained a book; and by giving it, you avoid the risk of losing it. As a corollary, never borrow a book. Let your friend give it to you if he will. Otherwise buy one of your own or get it from the library, and pay your fines like an honest man when you return it late. The advantage is that you can meet the obligation, and there will be no grudge held against you with no hope of redemption.

The man who borrows a book runs another danger. If it is a great book, he says to his wife, "Darling, I think you would like to read this." She, dear soul, agrees, takes the book, puts it under a pile of nylons and bobby pins where she will be sure to find it, and then calls in a houseworker who piles it away in a closet. And then who knows where it is?

Reading is a dangerous practice. Most people learn it unwillingly in the schools and give it up as soon as they are graduated. Books are dangerous. They give you ideas, and ideas may get you into trouble. A man's political enemies or business rivals can strip him of property and honor while he is engaged in the pleasant relaxation of reading a book. Really successful men seldom have time for this mild vice.

Finally, buy a book or rent it, but never borrow it, and you can keep out of a few troubles at least. Handle your books as you do small change: never lend it; give it and forget it when people ask you, and don't expect it back.

Six children were born to them; a son, Norman, preceded him in death in 1918. Brother Vancil had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1904.

Surviving children are Mildred Hudson of Granite City; Mable Myricks of Visalia, California; Paul of Ferguson, Missouri; Clyde of Nokomis, Illinois; and Laverne of Wood River, Illinois. He also leaves two sisters: Mrs. Elizabeth Woods of Willow Springs, Missouri, and Mrs. Catherine Orender of Norwood, Missouri; and eleven grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Mercer Chapel, Elder Prosper Carl officiating. Burial was in St. John Cemetery, Granite City.

GUNLOCK.—William Henry, was born December 9, 1876, in Germany, and died July 25, 1952, in Independence, Missouri, where he had resided the past eight years. He came with his parents to America when he was six years old, settling in New York. Later he lived in Iowa, Illinois, and Tennessee before moving to Missouri. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 6, 1909.

He is survived by his wife, Jennie, to whom he was married on June 20, 1900; four sons: Robert W. of Grand Island, Nebraska; Irwin of Rock Island, Illinois; Edwin of East Moline, Illinois; and Charles of Sioux City, Iowa; three daughters: Mrs. Evelyn Smith of Clio, Michigan; Mrs. Jennie Cady of Bois D'Arc, Missouri; and Mrs. Louise Weathers of Washington, D.C.; twenty grandchildren; and eleven great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Bishop Mark Siegfried at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

THOMAS.—Ephraim Alma, son of Ephraim and Sarah Thomas, was born April 8, 1886, in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and died July 2, 1952, at the Independence Sanitarium after seven years of illness. On August 19, 1908, he was married to Mary Miller; six children were born to them. A son and daughter preceded him in death. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on February 24, 1897, ordained a priest on September 19, 1907, and an elder on September 5, 1920. He served as one of the first group elders in Independence and as president of the First Quorum of Elders for about eighteen years. He particularly enjoyed working with young men of the ministry.

He is survived by his wife; four daughters: Gertrude Tuleen of Kansas City, Missouri; Margaret of the home; Ethel Montgomery and Jean Chandler of Independence; a brother, Heber Thomas of Detroit, Michigan; and seven grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Carson Chapel, Elders C. Ed Miller, John Zion, and Elmer Hart officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HINTON.—Edward Burnam, was born October 19, 1871, at Lower Lake, California, and died July 14, 1952, at Santa Rosa, California. He was married to Louise Enderline on March 10, 1895; eleven children were born to them. Two children preceded him in death. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Patriarch Alexander Smith and was ordained an elder on June 12, 1927. During his ministry he served at Lower Lake, Chico, San Francisco, and Santa Rosa.

He is survived by his wife; five sons: Leland, Herbert, George, Carlton, and Robert; four daughters: Mrs. Gladys Slemmons, Mrs. Edith Roehnkohl, Mrs. Gertrude Rester, and Mrs. Marie Schall; two brothers: Bird and Tolley Hinton; three sisters: Mrs. Violet Fenton, Mrs. Gertrude Earhart, and Mrs. May Gordon; nineteen grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Funeral services were conducted by Evangelist W. H. Dawson at the Reorganized Church in Santa Rosa. Interment was in the Lower Lake cemetery.

Report on Rouge Valley Mission

1951 was a fine year for our mission. However, we lost two families to other groups and were saddened by the death of a sister. 1952 has found us few in number but not discouraged. We have several in our women's department, and they are faithful workers. Our building fund is growing. We have had some very severe sickness in our group, but God is ever mindful of his children. Our blessings are so much greater that they overcome all else. With his continued help we will win our goal. We have gained one family. Our aim is to push onward with the Lord at the helm.

In Appreciation

I was baptized three years ago at Onset, Massachusetts, by Apostle D. O. Chesworth. Previously I had belonged first to the Catholic Church and then the Methodist Church. By prayer the way was opened for me and our younger son, Colin, who was baptized at the same time. It was through the united prayers of the Saints assembled that the cares with which I was heavily burdened when I arrived were lifted. At the Friday morning fellowship service it seemed to me that we were no longer individuals but welded into one body by a protective force. Words are inadequate to express fully my appreciation for those of the priesthood who ministered to me in classwork and sermons. The Christian love evidenced there was a foretaste of Zion.

Since coming home I have enjoyed a serenity that I had never felt before. My husband and older son have not shown the slightest resentment, such as they had before when I attended Conference and the institute at Boston. I was even able to discuss the classwork I had had under Brother E. Y. Hunker, and my husband said he would like to meet him. I believe that this change in attitude is also the result of prayer.

An Added Testimony

After reading J. O. Dutton's letter "Testimony on Anointing With Oil," in the June 2 Herald, I wish to add my testimony.

Being a member of the Quorum of Seventies, I was present at the same priesthood meeting and heard the instruction given the priesthood by President Joseph Smith regarding anointing the sick with oil. In my fifty-four years as an elder I have, along with others, witnessed many wonderful cases of healing where and when the instruction was sacredly followed. 2057 Glencoe Street J. B. WILDERMUTH

"The Prayer of a Righteous Man . . ."

I was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church when I was ten, but during my youth I never seemed to keep my mind on God or the church. On August 16, 1946, I married Erasmo Battencourt, a Mexican. Soon after our marriage he became interested in the church and in July, 1947, asked my father, Elder James Jeffries, to baptize him. He is now a priest. We had two children, and were very happy until one morning we awoke to find that our son had strangled to death during the night. This grieved us much; my husband had been most attached to the boy, and I suffered a serious nervous ailment as a result of the tragedy. Finally I decided my only help was God, so I began to search the Scriptures for comfort. I became better acquainted with the church and found happiness in the service of God.

About eighteen months ago I became very ill. I felt pain throughout my whole body. I was impressed to go to my father's house and ask him to pray for me. When I arrived he began reading from the Scriptures and talking to me. Even before he prayed for me I could feel the pain leaving. As I left he assured me to go home and go to bed and I would be all right. I did, and I was no longer ill. That is why I know "the prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

On August 7, 1951, we were blessed with another child—a daughter. This was the answer to prayer, too. In my patriarchal blessing I am told: "It has been because of my love and power and the things you could do for me and my church that I have prolonged your life."

Since I have married my father has brought seven Mexicans into the church, and my husband has two brothers who are very interested. My testimony is that in this church we can find a happiness that is not attainable else-

 STARTLING BIOGRAPHIES

We are constantly amazed at what the great authors have said about their principal characters. Perhaps they do it more freely because the writers know that their victims cannot answer back. Exposure, ridicule, and innuendo are included in their punishments.

In odd moments of fantasy, we have wondered what kind of biographies the characters, if they were alive, would write about their creators.

Let's shut our eyes for a magic carpet trip around the literary world; step on our imagination, and away we go!

Here, for example, is Alice B. Toklas, writing a book about Gertrude Stein. It is quite simple—to write, that is. She is taking one of the Stein books and unreeling it backwards. It will be just as intelligible as the other way.

Next is Candida, doing a character analysis of George Bernard Shaw. There will be some incisive phrases, and Shaw will be neatly flayed when it is done.

This one will be good. Remember Sinclair Lewis' book about Babbitt? What a character portrait! But now Babbitt is doing one about Lewis, who is being held in a cage in Purgatory, where he will have to read every word of it.

On the kinder side, Tom Sawyer, grown up, is doing an appreciation of Mark Twain. He acknowledges important assistance from Becky Thatcher and Huckleberry Finn. It will be entitled, "Mark Twain on the Mississippi."

Was ever a lovelier portrait of a woman drawn than Shakespeare made of the wise, kind, and beautiful Portia? Surely Portia would do the world's very finest book on Shakespeare. On the other hand, imagine what the biography of the Bard of Avon would be if it were done by Macbeth, or Hamlet, or John Falstaff, or Othello.

Well, that's enough of a start. From there on you can make your own list.

We may have expressed our opinions of other people—real ones—rather freely. Now just suppose that some day, in eternity, we are brought face-to-face with them and all have to listen to their opinions of us. Would it not make us more careful now?

IS YOUR FUTURE SECURE?
SAFETY TALK NUMBER 4

What is America's most popular weapon for killing people? A gun? A rope? Poison? A knife?

What weapon does the murderer most frequently hold in his hand to do his evil deed?

You will be surprised at the answer: The steering wheel of a car!

You would be wise if, every time you start out to drive your car, you would think as follows: "I have a deadly weapon in my hands. It may kill my family. It could kill neighbors and friends. It could kill me. I must be very careful of it."

If a man amounts to anything, he always cares.

We'd Like You To Know . . .

Joseph Earl Baldwin

Bishop Baldwin had no early ambitions for the ministry, though he was born in the church and his father, Fred B., is an elder. As he went through high school he had in mind taking premed courses in college. However, before reaching college a spiritual experience at the Southern Reunion at Brewton, Alabama, changed his mind; he accepted ordination as a priest on July 28, 1935, and that fall entered Graceland. His work at Graceland deepened his desire to serve the church, and upon his graduation in 1937 he accepted a two-year appointment to the Southern Ohio District. At the end of this appointment he had a desire for more training and entered the University of Louisville. It was necessary for him to work his way through college as auditor of a distributing company and later as an accountant in the telephone company. The last year and a half he transferred to the University of Kentucky at Lexington. In 1941 he received a Bachelor of Science Degree in Commerce, majoring in business administration and economics. He showed his stamina and economic judgment by coming out of his four years of college work with only $200.00 indebtedness. In April, 1942, he again entered the missionary field and was appointed to the Southern States.

In June, 1943, he married Lanita Fern Seaton. They have two boys, Charles Stanley, 8, and Kenneth Neal, 4. He was then appointed to the Portland District and became pastor at Portland. From 1944 through 1948 he was District President of the Chicago District, then was ordained a bishop and put in charge of the work of the bishopric in the Province of Ontario. In 1951 he received his present appointment as Bishop of the Southern Mission.

Brother Baldwin feels that the Lord's hand directed and protected him for a work in the church. When he was twelve years old he was in an auto-train crash which killed his older brother. He and another brother were seriously injured.

He has held membership in the University YMCA Group, the Religion Club, and the Commerce Club. His special interest now is in the Zionite program. He has a hobby of color photography and makes missionary slides.

News and Notes

PRESIDENT AND PARTY IN ENGLAND

August 2 and 3, President Israel A. Smith, Apostle Arthur Oakman, and Bishop Henry Livingston were with the English Saints at the reunion in Enfield. Details of the visit as yet have not been received, but large attendance and fine spirit were anticipated.

W. W. SMITH AT SILVER LAKE

President W. Wallace Smith was in attendance at the Silver Lake reunion August 1-10, where he reports there was a large registration and a good spirit from the opening meetings. He planned to spend the following week at the Oregon camp at the Lewis River.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS IN OFFICE

President Henry Edwards is back in the office after being in attendance at Blue Water and Kirtland reunions. Brother Edwards reports fine reunions at both places.

APOSTLE WILLIAMS AT REUNIONS

Apostle D. T. Williams left Independence June 24 and returned August 4 after attending five reunions. The reunions were held at Bethesda, Ohio; Deer Park, Pennsylvania; Brooksville, Maine; Onset, Massachusetts; and Kirtland, Ohio. Brother Williams was in Logan, Iowa, August 9 to preach the funeral sermon of Brother Frank Hanson, brother of Apostle Paul M. Hanson, who died August 6.

PREACHES AT STAKE REUNION

Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, preached at the Kansas City Stake reunion on August 3. The reunion was held at Lake Doniphan, near Excelsior Springs, Missouri.

BISHOP BALDWIN IN INDEPENDENCE

Bishop Joseph Baldwin was in Independence between reunions where he did some special research work in the office of the Presiding Bishopric. He had finished his assignment at the Arkansas-Louisiana reunion and left for the Southern Indiana reunion which was held August 11-17 after his stay in Independence.

COMPLETES REUNION ASSIGNMENT

John R. Darling, Associate Director of the Department of Religious Education, has completed his reunion assignment which included Bandera, Texas; Center Stake of Zion; Ozark; Kansas City Stake. Brother Darling reports an excellent reunion spirit at all four places. He was accompanied at Bandera by Mrs. Darling who was in charge of the music. She also accompanied him at the Center Stake reunion where she taught the women's class.

SPEAKS TO CHATHAM ROTARY CLUB

F. Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, was the guest speaker at the Rotary Club in Chatham, Ontario, on July 30, while attending the Erie Beach reunion. His topic was "Obstacles in the Pathway of Youth." Every year when the reunion is in session, the Rotary features an official of the church as a guest speaker. This tradition has resulted from the outstanding contribution made to the community as well as to the Rotary Club by members of the church. Elder Vernard Pritchard, Sr., is the president of the club.

RALSTON CHILD DIES

Lynne Rae Ralston, six-year-old daughter of Seventy and Mrs. Russell F. Ralston, died August 3 at Mercy Hospital in Kansas City, a victim of bulbar type poliomyelitis. Elder

The Shadow of His Wings

"In the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice."—Psalm 63:7.

HAS ANYONE ever made a satisfactory explanation of the wings of God? This would be a question to ruffle the complacency of almost any good adult class in our church schools. You can imagine the older brother on the back row, with a twinkle in his eyes, asking, "Does God have wings?"

Then there would be argument without Scripture, and finally Scripture to settle the argument, with keen excitement in between. Does your concept of the Heavenly Father include wings? Answer carefully, for you may have to revise your stand.

It is possible that modernists will say, scornfully, "What nonsense!" Or "What difference does it make?" Let them also beware, for it is not nonsense, and it does make a difference.

Whatever we may think, we have this statement from the Psalmist: "In the shadow of thy wings." It is a beautiful, poetic, imaginative phrase. The sixty-third Psalm is a prayer. He who composed it (or perhaps gathered it from older sources and edited it for his collection) thought of the outstretched arms of God as wings. We have found help and inspiration in the thought. Jesus used it in the lament over Jerusalem: "How often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings." Figurative language again, adapted to a very common observation. The ways of hens, like the ways of God, have not changed in millenniums of time. The Son of God clearly intended something about "the shadow of thy wings."

A FAMILY stands at the bedside of some loved member who is dangerously ill and going through an experience of physical pain that amounts to agony. Whether at home or in the hospital, the sick one is under medical care. The doctor has had the aid of laboratory tests and the consultation of specialists. All that medical science can offer has been brought to the relief and protection of the patient.

However, suffering and danger are still present. Death stands at the door, and the victim is in torment. Help is needed now. Human resources have been exhausted. What else is there to do?

Love reaches out, not content to stop there. These people have learned to pray, and in thousands of experiences they have turned to God for help. He has not failed them. Their faith tells them that he will not fail them now. They pray, and they call for the administration of the elders. In so many cases help has been received. It may come now. Some power goes to work that is beyond human control. The patient relaxes as the pain decreases, perhaps goes to sleep, and seems to have better chances to recover.

People who have gone through this experience understand the meaning of "In the shadow of thy wings."

FEW PEOPLE reach the middle years of life without experiencing sorrow and trouble. Burdens are placed upon their shoulders that are beyond their strength to bear. They face problems for which they can find no solutions. They must swim in deep waters. They know that in their own weakness they will be lost, and they have no other help in this world. Then they remember to pray. Something happens. New strength pours into tired bodies. New understanding and clarity comes into confused, distressed minds. The tasks that could not be done are taken up again, and progress is made. New approaches to the old problems are found. Somehow, by many little ways too intangible, too difficult to describe, "things work out." The factor that has made the difference between success and failure is in the realm of the spiritual. People who have been through this experience understand perfectly the phrase of the Psalm, "In the shadow of thy wings."

I WAS ALONE, far from home and loved ones, and worried for their welfare. As I walked I looked up at the stars, taking comfort in the thought that their light was also falling upon my family, and that the Power that made the stars was watching too. Love and hope reached out, but could find nothing practical to do. Still, love seeks a way to express itself, and having only one thing left to do, I sent up a prayer. From somewhere an answer came, relieving my anxiety and giving me the assurance that all was well. Later knowledge proved this true. I felt a presence, and with deep gratitude I was conscious of the meaning of the shadow of those divine wings.

No matter what your circumstances may be, you, too, can know the meaning and the comfort that can come from prayer, and with the Psalmist you will learn to say, "In the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice."

Special Meeting

For some time members of the Presiding Bishopric have felt the need for closer contact with the businessmen of our church and the need to get the benefit of their thinking relative to the economic aspects of our problems in respect to stewardship, the Gathering, and procedures in our Zion program. This has also been a matter of concern for the First Presidency.

Arrangements are now being completed for an institute to be held February 12 to 15, 1953, at Independence. This institute primarily will be for bishops and businessmen, with such other General Church officers as may be designated by the First Presidency. The nucleus of this group will be developed by way of invitation. This should not in any way preclude businessmen who have special interest in this field of church endeavor.

It is hoped that at such a meeting frank and creative suggestions will be received. We believe that this is in harmony with the instructions found in Section 119: 8 and Section 128: 3 of the Doctrine and Covenants.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

A LETTER written by Elder E. A. Theys will be of interest to many Herald readers. Brother and Sister Theys and their two children are returning to the United States after a devoted and successful ministry in Germany. Here is the letter:

Doctrine and Covenants Institute

All members and friends of the church are invited to attend the Doctrine and Covenants Institute September 28 to October 3 in Independence. The Sunday meetings, beginning at eleven o'clock, September 28, will be held in the Auditorium, with the Stone Church housing remaining activities. All congregations in the Center Stake will dismiss regular Sunday meetings to permit members to attend.

Daily programs begin at 8:30 a. m. and close with the 7:30 p. m. service.

One of the high lights of the institute will be the introduction and explanation of the new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants on Wednesday, October 1.

Visitors should assume responsibility of arranging for their housing and meals.

Rotterdam, Holland
August 1, 1952

President Israel Smith and Bishop Henry Livingston stopped off in Rotterdam for a couple of hours last evening on their way to London. They took the boat train to the Hook of Holland at 2000 hours, and will arrive in London this morning at 9:00.

We shipped our trunks to Le Havre, France, yesterday, and will leave Rotterdam on August 12. Our ship, the S.S. "United States," leaves France on the fifteenth and arrives in New York on the nineteenth. We plan to leave New York on the evening of the twenty-first, and should arrive in Independence at 7:15 the following day.

As we look back on our five years in Europe, it seems like only yesterday that we arrived in Rotterdam. We count these years as some of the richest experience of our ministry. We only hope that our service has measured up to the demands. We leave Germany and Holland with heavy hearts, for we have made many friends both in and out of the church. Leaving these good people will be difficult. We look forward to our new assignment, however, and hope that we can serve effectively in it.

FROM APOSTLE MAURICE DRAPER
Honolulu, Hawaii, July 26:

We have just had the thrilling experience of seeing Kilauea crater in eruption on Hawaii. What a sight—lava fountains 300 feet high with incandescent molten rock flowing out to fill the pit to a depth of 160 feet!

We spent a week on the Island of Hawaii visiting, preaching, and seeing the sights. Our church activities included a Zion's League meeting, mission church school at Waikakai, church school and two sermons in Hilo, a branch picnic at Coconut Island, and a fellowship service at Kilauea near the volcano crater. After the Hawaii District Reunion, August 3 to 10, we'll proceed to Sydney on Pan American Airways.

ELDER ALLEN SCHREUR of Gaylord Michigan, is reported to be seriously ill. Brother Schreur is confined to the Gaylord Memorial Hospital, and unless special help is received the doctors expect him to be incapacitated for several weeks.

Brother Schreur has done an outstanding work for the church in the northern Michigan region, continuing this ministry for many years. Those who have attended the Park of the Pines Reunion will remember him for his splendid contributions there. Undoubtedly he and his family will appreciate a place in the prayers of the Saints.

PRAISE FOR THE GERMAN SAINTS is expressed in the following letter from Cpl. Harry I. Ward sent from Ludwigsburg on July 27 to the First Presidency. Cpl. Ward holds the office of priest.

I consider it in accordance with my priesthood office to relay to you and the church my experiences in worshiping with the Saints in Germany during my tour of duty the past year. On frequent occasions I have met with the Stuttgart Saints whom I have learned to love deeply. The sacrifices they have made in order to attend church are worthy of the highest commendation, and the faith they exercise is truly inspiring. I have visited their homes; I have lived with them; and I am challenged by their optimism.

The outstanding event of my stay in this country was the dedication service held in Hannover. Here I had the privilege of meeting President Smith, Apostle Oakman, Bishop Livingston, and Elders Zonker and Theys. I had looked forward with great anticipation to this occasion, and I was not disappointed. Truly God blessed and ministered to his people.

The Need of This Age

By Arthur A. Oakman

of the Council of Twelve

From a lecture to the Seventies, March 31, 1952

IN 1803 Beethoven composed his "Missa Solennis, the Mass in D," while Napoleon was advancing on Vienna. He could just hear the cannonading of the advancing French armies; his poor ears almost had lost their power of catching any sound, but this he faintly heard. When he came to the last chorus, Dona Nobis Pacem (Give Us Peace), he wrote above his score "prayer for inward and outward peace!" Very seldom is man's greatest need so vividly presented to an artist; but always mankind's utmost requirement is for inward and outward peace, even though it is seldom adequately discerned.

Beethoven was a great admirer of Handel. Even on his deathbed, when presented with a bound volume of his complete works, he delightedly exclaimed, "I have long wanted these, for Handel is the greatest, the ablest composer that ever lived. I can still learn from him." When, therefore, he chose a theme for the last chorus of his mass, Beethoven set the words to a fugue on a theme familiar in Handel's Messiah where it goes with the words, "And He shall reign for ever and ever." Just then the master knew what was the one condition of human peace. Peace, inward and outward, is the need of this age. It will be achieved when Jesus Christ reigns on the earth.

Both former and latter day prophecy attests this affirmation. "The desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory."—Haggai 2: 7. Today, all nations desire peace and a Prince who can lead them in the paths of peace beside still waters. The nineteenth century prophet clearly discerned an entire division of the people of the earth. In one camp there would be dissension and strife. In the other would be those of whom it was said, "The Lord shall reign in their midst."

THE WHOLE COURSE of human history may rightly be interpreted as a desire for an Edenic millennium and the search for One who can lead mankind to it. Every false Christ, from Caesar to Hitler, has been successful as he has claimed the power to do this, so deeply ingrained in us is this desire for inward and outward peace. To an age torn with division and strife, to peoples bound inwardly and outwardly by fear, to hearts broken, burdened, and sad with the spirit of heaviness, to men looking for the brighter day and the happier lands, to those meek who mourn—to this age is addressed the ministry of Our Lord through his church. Of him it was said:

The Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord; and the day of vengeance of our God.—Isaiah 61: 1, 2.

God's Spirit likewise will be upon us in the measure of our dedication to this ministry. Can we meet the need? Do we want to? Can we pay the price to meet the need if we want to? How can we pay the price to meet the need of this age? What is the alternative?

OUTWARD STRIFE comes from inward division. Men not at peace within themselves can never minister peace to others, even if they would. Inward order is an indispensable condition of outward peace. But when we yield our strength in the service of incompatible ends or conflicting ideals, our own inner life is unhappy and we are confused and thus taken away from the Christian ministry.

No one can doubt that we are in a period of revolutionary change as drastic in its results, perhaps, as the French Revolution which swept away vested interests and uprooted the ancien régime. One historian called that revolution "the first general outburst of common sense exhibited by man en masse." The revolution going on now will not use the same methods as that in France, but will exhibit results even more profound. It has not been looked for by philosophers, nor predicted altogether by historians, and certainly it was never planned by statesmen.

Two basic urges having their roots in the nature of man are responsible: the urge to freedom and equality. Man is born to be free, but everywhere he is in chains. Man is destined to be on a footing of equality with his fellows but he is unequal. For "it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin." Always men have looked for a millennium. Always it has eluded them. Always they have sought peace, and never more than now. Always it has been denied them. Frustration, division, strife, and insecurity have resulted from our failure as a species to achieve freedom and enjoy equality.

THE FUTURE belongs to the people who are truly free and willingly equal. There is no future for others. These are dogmatic statements, it is true, but I think you will agree.

Because these two human ideals are working in our race, the denial of either of them brings dissatisfaction and trouble. Freedom and equality, liberty and order—these are the problems men face today; and unless our gospel can meet these needs there is no use in our preaching it.

A brief historical survey will aid understanding. At a first glance the fundamental issue of history seems to be a struggle between the two unities we have seen to be the true goal of human life: between liberty and order. It is true that this issue is at stake in a great part of history, and that the main conscious effort of civilization is to achieve both in a harmonious balance.

Man's incapacity to satisfy the cravings of his nature leads him to associations of various kinds; from the beginning the human race is organized in social units. There is no evidence whatever that Rousseau's noble savage ever existed—individual, free, uncorrupt. The first effort of civilization is not to create a social unity, but to find room within the close-knit social unity for any particle of individual freedom. The savage is utterly bound by the conventions of his tribe; probably he has been driven by necessities of self-defense to sink his individuality in the social habits and customs of his people. The savage is not always fierce; he is always intensely conservative. In fact, one may define the savage as one who is hostile to new ideas or new practices as such. In a community of savages, progress is impossible. But even among savages, some conventions will prove their superiority over others by the greater prosperity which comes to those tribes which follow them. These tend to conquer or absorb the less prosperous and to impose their superior conventions. In this way great empires may grow up, which reach an advanced stage in the ordering of life, without ever grasping the idea of progress or even feeling its impulse. Such were the empires of ancient Egypt, of Babylonia, of Persia; such was the empire of China.

The quest of freedom first appears in ancient Greece—the nation which first "used deliberate reflection on past experience to modify future experience." There was still no general principle of progress; Plato himself can only suggest a plainly impossible kind of revolution as the means by which the transition can be made from the actual society of his experience to the ideal society of his argument. But the determination to escape from tyranny is plain, and the purpose to establish something like political liberty for those inhabitants of a city who were fortunate enough to be "citizens."

Watching the course of this purpose we see at once that it follows a curve. So long as there is danger from the foreign enemy—Persia—liberty can be practiced without breaking up the social unity; but as soon as the external pressure is removed by the conquest of the Persian forces on sea and on land the temptations to selfishness which are incident to liberty prove too strong; the last hundred years of Greek independence are a period of endless conflict, city against city, faction against faction. In the great Peloponnesian War some principles and ideals are involved: after that there are none; it is all an affair of "hegemony"; the one motive is the desire for power over others at their expense. At last order is restored at the cost of liberty under the Macedonian conquerors.

Rome exhibits exactly the same curve. The greatness which made possible the Roman Empire was already declining when that empire began to exist; we see it in the early struggles, and above all in the Hannibalic War. But as soon as the pressure of external danger was removed the temptations to selfishness which are incidental to liberty began to be too strong; the last century of the Roman Republic is a period of perpetual civil war, until order is restored at the cost of liberty under the military despotism of the Caesars.

Modern European history tells much the same story, though here a new influence is making itself felt. The same tension between liberty and order is apparent in the early history of the United States of America; and though there a balance in fact was reached, it is doubtful if these could have been accomplished if the new nation had been perfectly safe. As it was, Lincoln's struggle had to follow upon Washington's before the foundations of American civilization could be secure. Judged from the point of view we have been taking, the United States and the British Commonwealth of Nations are no doubt the culmination of human history hitherto; and if they can themselves be associated in a League of Nations which includes all civilized countries and has in itself the secret of permanence, this line of historical development will have reached its conclusion.¹

WHAT FACES THE CHURCH as she must do her work in the world? Arnold Toynbee says:

Thus the problems that have beset and worsted other civilizations have come to a head in our world today. We have invented the atomic weapon in a world partitioned between two supremely great powers; and the United States and the Soviet Union stand respectively for two opposing ideologies whose antithesis is so extreme that, as it stands, it seems irreconcilable. Along what path are we to look for salvation in this parlous plight, in which we hold in our hands the choice of life or death not only for ourselves but for the whole human race? Salvation perhaps lies, as so often, in finding a middle way. In politics, this golden mean would be something that was neither the unrestricted sovereignty of parochial states nor the unrelieved despotism of a centralized world government; in economics it would be something that was neither unrestricted private enterprise nor unmitigated socialism. As one middle-aged middle-class West European observer sees the world today, salvation cometh neither from the East nor from the West.

In A. D. 1947, the United States and the Soviet Union are alternative embodiments of contemporary man's tremendous material power; "their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world," but in the mouths of these loud-speakers one does not hear the still small voice. Our cue may still be given us by the message of Christianity and the other higher religions, and the saving words and deeds may come from unexpected quarters.²

MAN'S DESTINY is fulfilled in the achievement of two unities: unity of individual personality which is freedom, liberty; and unity of universal fellowship, which is equality, order, peace.

But, made for unity, we have chosen division. Our fathers before us did likewise. We inherit division. All are born, not equal but unequal. History manifests the effort of men to achieve individual unity, and the groping of men, sometimes conscious, more often unconscious, toward the liberty and freedom of universal fellowship.

Karl Marx scarcely overstated the dependence of the individual on the environment, but he ignored the creative spark in each man. His sin was that he misconceived the environment, which he said consisted chiefly in institutions and social organizations. He committed a fearsome blunder when he trusted only to organization for reform of character.

Certainly God is part of the environment. Marx ignores him too. And what our Western civilization faces is the gospel of Marx, interpreted by Lenin and applied by his successors.

Surely we can sense the actualization of Haggai's prophecy, "Behold I will shake . . ."

OUR CHURCH and its ministers have to do their work in this present situation, and while the gospel is eternally the same, its emphasis is always different in every age. We must grasp the significance of what is going on, prepare for, and guide this fundamental drive to change to its final end in the kingdom of God. Chanting magic slogans will never be adequate. We need ruthless analysis. No "proving we are right" will do either. Our world is diseased. The law of its being is constantly violated. We need first to preach diagnosis. Analysis of disease by a competent physician is the first step; and in this case, part of the cure depends on the patient's understanding of his malady. His co-operation can be elicited in no other way.

In our own land, apart from the awful uncertainty with respect to the course to be pursued by Gog and Magog, we are beset by the fear of insecurity. All sorts of schemes are propounded in order that men may recover a sense of peace. We begin our lives in the Edenic security of home. This eludes us in the middle years, and frantically we search for what once was ours.

Men live by their routines, and when these are questioned, they lose all power of normal judgment. They become fearful, and a fearful man is afraid to think. Fear breeds revolution. Why? Because men afraid will not make concessions which would mean accommodation. Roosevelt put his finger on the very heart of our problem in 1933. He said, "The only thing we have to fear is fear."

WHAT IS WRONG with men in high places? They have a deep sense that something is wrong; but they have made their bargain with fate. Repeatedly during the administration of Coolidge and Hoover a slump was persistently predicted—as it is predicted now.

Men afraid seek comfort; they reject analysis and criticism. The Liberal Party in England has all but passed out of existence. Why? It refused to recognize the right of working men to an equal and full share of seats in the House of Commons. The Weimar Republic failed to deal resolutely with the Nazi movement in its early days and so the Weimar Republic fell.

Opportunity passes unnoticed to men whose eyes are shrouded with fear. Fear is the parent of madness. The nations are drunk. They stagger. The wine of wrath is distilled from the grapes of fear, and all men drink of it. Fear is born of selfishness. Selfishness is rebellion against God.

The only hope for our world is that fear be replaced by faith, despair by hope, sorrow by joy. Thus to minister was the mission of the Son of Man.

We must declare with insistent conviction the reality of the resurrection of our Lord. After all, is that not the reason truth sprang out of the earth?

Does it matter to politics and economics whether we proclaim this or not? Surely to ask the question is to answer it! If man is destined for life after death, if he is capable of receiving immortality, then he outlives the State, and the State must be subordinated to his eternal significance. It must serve him; it must aid him in obtaining his destiny. But if man is merely an episode in the course of time, then he must serve the state; dictatorship is sensible when immortality is forgotten. Democracy alone serves immortal considerations. The rise of the American Republic can surely be related to a divine immanence. "I the Lord ruleth in the heavens above and among the armies of the earth." And where the Resurrection is preached with significant emphasis, men hear the voice of their Creator calling them. That is the origin of the "still small voice" mentioned by Toynbee as the saving power in this world. Our ministers must preach it out of their own experience with the living Lord. Their efforts cannot be based on hearsay. The Scriptures are to be used only as a guide and a support to living experience. Our ministers must preach neither theories nor philosophies. They must preach Christ because they know him.

If they dedicate their hearts to serve this age, they will find out what ails men, and Christ will hasten to make their efforts count.

MEN NEED ASSURANCE and hope. They will not get it in this life alone. It will be found in Christ.

Man's moral and spiritual life in this world is a baffled and thwarted enterprise; and the scene of our endeavor is slowly becoming uninhabitable, so that even though we labor for a remote posterity, if this life only is permitted us, it will one day make no difference whether we have striven or not for noble causes and lofty ideals. An earth as cold as the moon will revolve about a dying sun. Duty and love will have lost their meaning. The President of the Immortals, if there be either immortals or president, will have finished his sport with man.

A drama which starts in sunshine and ends in gloom has not the same quality in respect of optimism or pessimism as one that starts in gloom and ends in sunshine, though the average tone of the scenes taken separately may be identical; the drama with a descending scale, so to speak, conveys a sense of even deeper gloom than one that is in the bass register throughout. If at the end there is to be nothing but cold dead cosmos—which might as well be chaos—then, though their presence shines like a jewel in the prevailing gloom, yet it were more creditable to the Determiner of Destiny that virtue and love had never bloomed. That they should appear to be discarded makes the ultimate principle of reality more ruthlessly nonmoral than if it had never given birth to them at all. On that hypothesis virtue itself is a blot on the escutcheon of the Ruler of the universe and heroism is his deepest shame. . . .

Every consideration of serious importance intensifies the urgency of the moral demand for at least the possibility of life after the death of the body. Yet there has never been a period in which there was so little positive belief in this, or indeed so widespread an absence of concern for the whole subject. Probably this is due to the forms in which the idea has traditionally been presented rather than to any lack of compelling attraction in the idea of itself or its intrinsic claims upon the attention of mankind; but it is also due to the triumphs of science which have made this world so intensely interesting.³

A series of events has forced upon the intelligent observer the realization that the human story has already come to an end and that Homo sapiens, as he has been pleased to call himself, is in his present form played out. The stars in their courses have turned against him, and he has to give place to some other animal better adapted to face the fate that closes in more and more swiftly upon mankind.

Our universe is not merely bankrupt; there remains no dividend at all; it has not simply liquidated; it is going clean out of existence, leaving not a wrack behind. The attempt to trace a pattern of any sort is absolutely futile.

After all the present writer has no compelling argument to convince the reader that he should not be cruel or mean or cowardly. Such things are also in his own make-up in a large measure, but nonetheless he hates and fights against them with all his strength. He would rather our species ended its story in dignity, kindness, and generosity, and not like drunken cowards in a daze or poisoned rats in a sack. But this is a matter of individual predilection for everyone to decide for himself.⁴

This was Wells' last will and testament. Deep sorrow assailed me as I read it, for one of the finest minds of our age weeps in outer darkness.

DOES OUR GOSPEL OFFER anything to this attitude? Yes, the Book of Mormon tells of the visit of Christ and the multitude "felt his body." That is tangible, substantial. Here is the answer to Wells. The body of Christ exhibits the destiny of the physical universe never more needed than now. For it is not into outer darkness but inward light that the elements are resolved and transformed and the travail of the earth and her sons justified.

Let us again consider Revelation 14: 6—not the bare fact of angelic appearance, but the basic proclamation of his flight. "Fear God, and worship him who made"

"The Gospel is in force from this very hour upon all the world." What gospel? The gospel of Christ—Christ who was free, Christ who was equal with his Father, free to come here, free to love man, free to change the value of their sin so that he used the occasion when the world put forth its greatest effort to destroy him to lay the foundation of the kingdom of God in the course of time. Because he was free, he was made equal with God. In the measure of our freedom we, too, shall be made equal with each other. I cannot too thoroughly urge the proclamation of divine ownership of temporalities.

It is not given for one man to have that which is above another! This does not mean a communistic sharing of property nor dead level equality. It means that a society is in sin that is so constituted that what one man may achieve is by the fact of that achievement made impossible for all others too.

Take the doctrine of surplus. Surely we can see that if men will not use the things of this world in a manner designed of God, they cannot possess the things of this world. Great Britain through sheer necessity as a matter of survival was forced to obey this law. The same is true of the United States. Our fathers failed to replenish the forests plundered years ago, so dust storms forced repentance and conservation on their children. The German generals imported Lenin to foment a revolution in Russia and made possible the destruction of the state they handed to their own children. Great Britain refused to aid the cause of Abyssinia in 1935, the foreign secretary telling Commons that it wasn't worth one drop of British blood. Seven years later in 1942 Abyssinia was redeemed by the blood and treasure so avidly coveted before.

"Thou shalt not covet thine own property." It is a law of life that survival depends on obedience to the gospel.

Evidences of the Divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon

Part II

By Maurice L. Draper

Historical and Cultural Setting for the Nephite Colony

THE OPENING SCENES of the Nephite colony account are laid in the "first year of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah," at Jerusalem.¹ The record declares that its characters were Jews who were familiar with the Egyptian language, which implies also a knowledge of Egyptian culture.²

Reference is made to the turmoil in Jerusalem caused by the warnings of the contemporary prophets, one of whom was Jeremiah, of the impending destruction of Jerusalem.³ Lehi's response to the prophets and his own prophetic experiences led him to depart from Jerusalem. He traveled with his caravan in a southeasterly direction⁴ across the Arabian wilderness,⁵ arriving at the borders of the sea after eight years sojourn in the desert and coastal regions.⁶ The experiences of the colony are described in sufficient detail to permit comparison with data concerning geographical conditions, the caravan life of the times, and family sociology from sources which were not available to Joseph Smith. Much of this has come to light since the publication of the book in 1830.

Nephi, son of the colony's leader, Lehi, wrote concerning their knowledge of Egyptian language, "I make a record in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews and the language of the Egyptians."⁷ In this somewhat ambiguous statement are two possibilities. It is conceivable that the record was written in Egyptian grammar, vocabulary, and script against a background of Jewish religion and experience. Or, it may have been written in Hebrew grammar and vocabulary, but Egyptian script. For a writer who knew the Egyptian language, including vocabulary, grammar, and script, the first possibility would pose no problem. In the latter case, it would be interesting to know if there are other instances of writing one ancient language in the script of another. Such a case is known in which the Aramaic was written in Egyptian demotic characters.⁸

The probability of the upper classes in Palestine (Lehi was wealthy, as indicated in his organizing the caravan, and the efforts to buy the sacred brass plates—I Nephi 1: 29, 87, 88) knowing the Egyptian language at that time is shown by an independent source, "Behold, are not the Ethiopians, Syrians, and all foreigners alike instructed in the language of the Egyptians?"⁹

Egyptian Influences

The use of the "colophon" is said to be characteristic of Egyptian writings.¹⁰ Modern colophons are used as publishers' identifications, sometimes with information about type faces, or special features of composition and layout. Anciently they were the means by which the scribe was identified, he was not necessarily the author, but the person who performed the physical task of setting the record down in written form. Such statements might include the scribe's name, his qualifications, and sometimes an avowal of the exactness of the account or copy, or a curse upon any who undertook to change the text without authority. The first two paragraphs of I Nephi are a colophon. In it Nephi identifies himself as the scribe, qualifies himself in terms of his family background, avows it to be a true record, according to his own knowledge, and tells of the language in which it is written.

One of the striking evidences of Egyptian influence is the number of Egyptian proper names occurring in the record. A list follows:

Nephi—unknown as a personal name among modern peoples in 1830. Recent research reveals that this was an Egyptian name in use during Lehi's time.¹¹

Aha—an Egyptian name meaning "warrior."

Giddonah—in the Egyptian is Djidew-nah and is a form of the name Sidon.

Korihor—is from the Egyptian Heri-hor or Khurhor.

Paanchi—is the Egyptian Paankhi.

Pacumeni—comes from the Egyptian Pakamen and means blind man.

Laish—corresponds to Lesbi in Egyptian.*

Aminadab—is similar to Aminatbab.

Himni—Hmn, may be vocalized Himni, the Egyptian Hawk God.

Zeniff—has several Egyptian similarities, Znb, Snb, or Senepia.

Zemna-ri-hah—is the Egyptian Zmhare.*

Zenoch—is Zenekb in Egyptian.

Zeezrom or Seezoram—is Zezer or Zozer in Egyptian.

Ammon—is Amon in Egyptian. This is the most common name in the Book of Mormon, and also the most common in the Egyptian Empire, according to Hugh S. Nibley.¹²

Pachus—is Paks or Pach-qs in Egyptian.

Pahoran—means the Syrian in the Egyptian form, Pabery. Paberan also occurs in the Egyptian.

Gingimno—is similar to the Egyptian Kenkeme.

Morianton—is similar to the Egyptian Maru Aton.

Sinim—is Sanam in Egyptian.

Ziff—appears as Sepa in Egyptian.

Sam—is not a modern nickname for the Hebrew Samuel, as some have mistakenly supposed, but is the pure Egyptian Sam.

Ezias—is related to both Azesba and Azize in Egyptian.

Kish—comes from Egyptian Kush or Kesh.

Hem—is identical with the Egyptian Hem.

We are indebted for this list of names with Egyptian equivalents and related names to Dr. Hugh S. Nibley, whose material appears in a series of articles to which interested persons are referred for further valuable information about the cultural evidences of Book of Mormon authenticity.¹³

Hebraic Influences

The appearance of many Hebrew names among the persons and places described in the Book of Mormon is to be expected. The people are alleged to be Hebrews, and Joseph Smith had the Hebrew Scriptures available to him. But the appearance of Hebrew grammatical forms as a carry-over from the original text could be expected only in the event that there was actually a translation from an original record written by Hebrews. Among such "carry-overs" is the frequent occurrence of the "construct" relation, usually expressed by "of" in English. The Hebrew Grammar of Davidson and McFayden is quoted in this regard: "The point is that the . . . words together make up one idea."¹⁴ Examples in the Book of Mormon are plates of brass, plates of Nephi, sword of Laban, tent of my father.¹⁵ A common form in Hebrew, this is usually rendered in English as brass plates, Nephi's plates, Laban's sword, and my father's tent. Being unskilled in translation, Joseph, it seems, was influenced in his selection of the English form by the Hebrew construction, as the ideas were given him in the divine gift of translation or interpretation. This may seem to deny the principle which will be developed subsequently on "Translator and Translating," that the terminology is his own. On the contrary, it is further evidence that the literary limitations of the translator are not arbitrarily overcome by divine inspiration. The pattern of thought as intended by the original writer is given in the gift of translation, as will be described later, but when the translator lacks broad experience in the use of his mother tongue, he is even more bound by the original pattern than otherwise.

Another Hebraic influence appears in the stringing out of numerals, a Hebrew habit repeated throughout the book.¹⁶ Again, a number of Hebrew words appear in the native languages of the Book of Mormon peoples in the remnants of ancient American nations.¹⁷ This, together with the large number of Hebrew names in the Book of Mormon ending in "iah" or "ihah," supports the authenticity of the record. It has been demonstrated that names with such endings were popular in Lehi's day in Palestine.¹⁸

The "Land of Jerusalem"

One of the terms once considered by critics as damaging to the claims made for the Book of Mormon has actually been shown to be an incidental evidence of its authenticity. This is the statement that Christ "shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem, which is the land of our forefathers."¹⁹ Reference to the "land of Jerusalem" is noted also in other passages.²⁰ The Book of Mormon prophecy is that Christ should be born at the "land" of Jerusalem. Bethlehem is six miles from the city of Jerusalem and is in the environs of the city which gives its name to the surrounding area, as was the practice in early times.²¹ The "city-state" pattern is familiar to students of ancient political culture. Jerusalem is so described in ancient inscriptions.²² The term "land of Jerusalem" is thus seen to be correctly used in the Book of Mormon, even in reference to the birthplace of Christ.

The use of the terms "up to Jerusalem"²³ and "down to the land of our father's inheritance"²⁴ are significant in relation to the statement that Lehi "dwelt at Jerusalem in all his days."²⁵ From a three days' journey into the wilderness they went "up to the land of Jerusalem."²⁶ After going into the city of Jerusalem, they went "down to the land of our inheritance,"²⁷ which was the home of Lehi who dwelt "at Jerusalem." Therefore it was "up" from the wilderness to the "land" of Jerusalem, and even farther "up" to the city of Jerusalem. Also, it was "down" to the land of inheritance, or the land of Jerusalem, from the city, and even farther "down" to the wilderness. The elevation of Jerusalem is well known. The terminology of the Book of Mormon is natural, consistent with itself and known geographical facts, and with the terminology used by other writers of ancient times in this place.²⁸

In a short time I shall be returning to my home in Independence, bringing with me memories of unforgettable spiritual experiences with the German Saints and their leaders.

Another member in the Army in Germany is Ralph E. Ruckman. He attended the Hannover mission house dedication service which Brother Ward mentioned in his letter. Brother Ruckman wrote from Weisbaden on July 29:

I have been very fortunate to hear two of the church radio programs over AFN. They are very encouraging, and I hope they will continue.

It was a pleasure to be at the dedication of the church in Hannover and to meet the Saints and rejoice with them in their well-deserved house of worship.

I wish to extend my thanks for the opportunity to meet President Smith, Apostle Oakman, and Bishop Livingston.

There were quite a few of us at the dedication service from the armed forces. We all had a wonderful time together and hope that in the future there can be more such opportunities.

I have enjoyed being with Eugene Theys and Louis Zonker and their families on several occasions in Rotterdam and also having the two brothers visit me at my duty station. Brother Zonker was a close friend of mine while I was in the States, where he lived only twenty miles from my home in Bellaire, Ohio. He is from Wellsburg, West Virginia. Both are fine men and are doing a good work for the church here. Chaplain Engstrom is being most helpful, too, by keeping in contact with all of us here in the service. I wish to ask that Sister Engstrom be remembered in your prayers; she has been confined to bed for some time now.

In closing I ask that you also remember me and the other servicemen and women stationed here.

Your mind is a sacred enclosure into which nothing harmful can enter except by your permission.

Healing: Divine and Satanic

By Charles Fry

DIVINE HEALING is one of a group of spiritual gifts, such as faith, knowledge, wisdom, miracles, prophecy, tongues, interpretation of tongues, discerning of spirits, and revelation, which God has placed in his church. These operate according to his will and by the administration of his Spirit. They are accompaniments of the gospel, being a part of it, and are administered only in conjunction with the administrations of other phases of the gospel—that is, they are not exercised without the gospel, nor independently of the church of Jesus Christ, except in very rare instances where appeal is made to Christ by some distressed soul having faith in him and where contact with the church is impossible. In such a case the Spirit might act independently.

These gifts and blessings, constituting a series or group under the gospel, are all equally necessary. Each meets a specific need of the human soul, and where one is operative, all will be operative, for if part be omitted the purpose of the whole is thereby destroyed, the same as where portions of the doctrine are discarded or changed the whole doctrine of Christ is rendered void.

Again, the gifts are not the principal and primary parts of the gospel and church; they are secondary and incidental, yet important and necessary. A study of Christ's teaching shows his emphasis upon the foundational points: "Have faith in God"; "Believe also in me"; "He who believeth on the Son hath everlasting life"; "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." These are the important things that have to do with eternal life. Healing responds to bodily needs more than those of the soul. The gifts are helps in spiritual living.

The ministration of healing is not denied nonmembers. As Jesus healed many who were not his followers, so his authorized servants may minister to those without where faith is manifest.

The Lord said, "To every man [that is, in the church] is given a gift by the Spirit of God. . . . [The Spirit itself is a gift of God given only to his obedient believers, of which Christ said the world cannot receive (John 14: 17)] and unto the bishop of the church, and unto such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church . . . [are] to have it given unto them to discern all those gifts, lest there shall be any among you professing, and yet be not of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 5, 7.

Here is warning of possible false gifts coming from the adversary even to the church to deceive, but from which the church is safeguarded by the gift of discernment given to its officers.

It is further said, "All these gifts cometh from God, for the benefit of the children of God." Through them the Spirit feeds the church—the spiritual blessings and builds it up so that it "groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord," becoming the "habitation of God through the Spirit" (Ephesians 2: 21, 22). It is not the Spirit's mission to build up the institutions of the world by these means. They are promised to the church, never to the world. (See Mark 16: 16-18; Mormon 4: 87, 88; Doctrine and Covenants 58: 15.)

Satan Imitates and Seeks to Substitute

The Scriptures reveal the presence of "magicians" who worked wonders by their occult signs from earliest ages. Satan introduced himself to the children of Adam, saying, "Worship me." Through his emissaries he imitated the sign given by Moses of causing his rod to become a living serpent before Pharaoh; they made their rods to become serpents. The effect of their wonder-working was to cheapen divine gifts and to harden Pharaoh's heart against God. This was just what Satan wanted—and still wants. Clairvoyants, called witches, were present in Israel and contributed to the destroying of the faith of the people and leading them to destruction. They were among the Jews in New Testament times. Magicians and wonder-workers were among all the ancient nations of the Gentiles; they are among the nations today, even in heathen tribes.

Jesus warned of the rising of false christs and false prophets who would show "great signs and wonders," and John saw that there would be "spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole world" (Revelation 16: 14). One deceiver was to make fire come down from heaven.

The Lord Warns Against False Gifts

The Lord has said to this church:

I will give unto you a pattern in all things, that ye may not be deceived; for Satan is abroad in the land, and he goeth forth deceiving the nations; wherefore he that prayeth whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me, if he obey mine ordinances. He that speaketh, whose spirit is contrite, whose language is meek, and edifieth, the same is of God, if he obey mine ordinances. . . . He that is overcome and bringeth not forth fruits, even according to this pattern, is not of me; wherefore by this pattern ye shall know the spirits in all cases under the whole heavens.—Doctrine and Covenants 52: 4, 5.

. . . Doing all things with prayer and thanksgiving, that ye may not be seduced by evil spirits, or doctrines of devils. . . . Wherefore beware, lest ye be deceived, and that ye may not be deceived, seek ye earnestly the best gifts, always remembering for what they are given; for verily I say unto you, They are given for the benefit of those who love me and keep all my commandments, and him that seeketh so to do, that all may be benefited, that seeketh or asketh of me.—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 3, 4.

There are many spirits which are false spirits, which have gone forth in the earth, deceiving the world: and also Satan hath sought to deceive you, that he might overthrow you.—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 1.

Here is the Lord's warning to us today. We are not free from danger, for Satan is still as active as ever. The Lord has said, "The Devil shall have power over his own dominion."

In the early days of our church an elder, Hiram Page, received a revelation through an occult stone, which a number of Saints accepted as divine. This started a movement to undermine the Prophet and depreciate the revelations given through him. But the Lord spoke and sent one of his servants to Hiram Page to tell him,

... those things which he hath written from that stone are not of me, and that Satan deceiveth him; for, behold, these things have not been appointed unto him; neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants.—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 4.

Page's revelation sounded logical—a splendid imitation of one of the Lord's revelations—but it was of the Devil. Satan makes all his works appear good and acceptable, often offering some desirable thing like healing, but under and behind which is hidden a satanic design to destroy faith or turn people away from God. They are like the tasty bit of food which men place upon snares to catch unwary creatures.

How to Distinguish Between Good and Evil Works

Moroni draws a line of distinction between the things that are of God and those that are of Satan. He allows for no mixing of the two and warns against "judging that which is evil to be of God, and that which is good to be of the Devil," for men may err either way. Satan likes for them to do this since he and his agents seek to smear divine truth and goodness to make them appear evil, thus causing people to turn away. On the other hand he varnishes the false and vile things with outward beauty to make them look good and desirable. Christ expressed the same fact regarding "the wolf in sheep's clothing." Satan is adept at this art.

That which is of God inviteth and enticeth to do good continually; wherefore, everything which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God, and serve him, is inspired of God. . . . Whatsoever thing persuadeth men to do evil, and believe not in Christ, and deny him, and serve not God, then ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of the Devil, for after this manner doth the Devil work, for he persuadeth no man to do good, no not one: neither doth his angels; neither they who subject themselves unto him.—Moroni 7: 11, 15, 16.

Such judgment must not be superficial but deep and searching. Samuel saw Eliab the eldest son of Jesse and said, "Surely the Lord's anointed is before me." But the Lord reproved him for judging only by outward appearances, telling him that "the Lord looketh on the heart." By failing to look beneath the surface men are often deceived and suffer loss in temporal things as well as spiritual. Healing of dread disease or painful affliction is highly desirable, but to accept it from treacherous and evil designing sources is to sell the eternal soul for a morsel of earthly relief. Better suffer affliction and even death under divine favor to the gaining of eternal life, than to yield to the deceptive offers which separate man from God. Healing should be sought through the means the Lord has provided, and if for some wise reason it is not granted, then another counsel of God should be observed: "Be patient in affliction" (Doctrine and Covenants 66: 5. Read Doctrine and Covenants 42: 13).

Modern healings performed sometimes under church and sometimes under nonchurch auspices, without proper regard to Christ and his lawful provisions, have the effect of belittling and destroying faith in the true gospel, and in the true church and its works, since they do have the effect of confirming the people in their present attitudes and beliefs though they may be in conflict with the truth. The gifts and signs Christ placed in the church were to confirm the believer in the gospel, but where people have believed a different gospel, any miraculous healing that comes to them only confirms them in that. Here is the great danger.

Healing by the laying on of hands is an ordinance of the gospel, and ordinances are inseparably associated with the church. God established the church as his institution through which all the blessings coming from him may flow. For this reason the Lord cannot dispense his gifts and blessings pertaining to the church and gospel through a number of conflicting institutions and in confirmation of various doctrines and theories of human origin. The Holy Spirit is given "to bear record of the truth . . . to testify of Christ." It is the "Spirit of truth."

The gifts of the Spirit, including healing, are a group, every one of which is necessary to make the whole effectual. Healing alone belongs to the body alone. A people with great knowledge but no wisdom could easily be wrecked. Christ's concern in man is to save the whole man—body and spirit. Search as we may, we find no institution, church or society, apart from the one true church of Christ, where all these gifts are found. Healing is the most popular, and few societies claim anything beyond that. Several make it so prominent that doctrine, organization, and other more major features are incidental to it. This is not Christ's way. Belief must be in the truth and not in mere signs, and faith must be in God rather than in inexplicable wonders.

Faith in and loyalty to the truth may impose upon us a need for patient endurance, but we may be assured that in the end there will be no disappointment. Even affliction has its part to do in the perfecting of the soul. Christ suffered under it, and has counseled us to be patient. Paul has said, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Faith Makes the Difference

... Go ye straightway, and do all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and this shall be my seal and blessing upon you; a faithful and wise steward in the midst of mine house; a ruler in my kingdom—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 8.

THE DESERT SUN burned fiercely, causing perspiration to sting the soldiers' eyes as the dust arose in choking clouds from their marching feet, while all unseen by the natural eye, a man wrestled bravely with the angel whom Jacob met at the ford of Jabbok, crying out in his soul for a blessing.

The cause of his concern stretched before them across the plains, thousands strong, poised and ready for battle. As the general gazed he knew that he and his warriors were few, but they would fight, for he was Judas of the house of Maccabee.

He was a son of Levi, a priest of the Aaronic order, leading an army into battle. Men fight for many reasons. The cause for which Judas strove was not new, except as it comes to each generation as a part of its stewardship before God. Judas fought for his homeland and the right to worship as his conscience directed. His soldiers shared his convictions but when they saw the army coming to meet them, they asked, "How shall we, being few, be able to fight against so great a multitude and so strong, and we are ready to faint with fasting today." Judas replied, "It is an easy matter for many to be shut up in the hands of a few; and there is no difference in the sight of God of Heaven to deliver with a great multitude or with a small company, for the success of war is not in the multitude of the army, but strength cometh from heaven."

Speaking these words, Judas charged suddenly upon the foe. That day Israel returned from battle victorious, having slain seven hundred men and put the opposing army to flight.

THE STORY of Judas and his soldiers is disputed, but the fact of the power of faith manifested in it remains. For such as we, our war is not one of violence. Peace is our aim, and the good news of the kingdom is our message.

It is easy to see the obstacles in our pathway. Faith looks ahead, seeing success. Judas' first questions may well have been, "Am I engaged in a righteous cause? If so, who goes with me into battle?" He was on speaking terms with God, knowing whom he served. When he spoke, his words had the genuine tone of a good coin; they rang true. Authority and experience were interwoven in what he said and did so that when he spoke he was believed.

What servant of God, if he is humble, does not sense his inadequacies? Who, well prepared though he be, could not desire to know more or wish for more efficiency in his field of endeavor? The wise man is humble that he knows so little.

Perhaps some are better qualified to do the Lord's work than we. If these men do not lend their support, shall He lack our help also? The Apostle Paul observed in his day: "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are chosen; for God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."

We know that all are not gifted alike. Within each office exists at least more than one function. Since all are called according to the gifts and blessings of God to them, each of God's ministers should be able to specialize in that thing in his office which he does best. It is possible for earnest men to grow with responsibility. He is a faithful servant who sees a job that needs doing and helps where he is needed. Almost any godly man did nothing to bring more than local attention until he responded to the call of the Master—Elijah, Moses, John the Baptist, Enoch, and Joseph Smith. Their names are remembered in connection with good works throughout the world (unless prejudice exists) because of their efforts to serve God. Others among the world's great automatically take second place. Undoubtedly each of these men had discouragements to meet and objections to make at various times, but each of them knew that faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualified him for the work.

Jesus came into the world to win even the hostile, if possible, to God. He died at the hands of the ignorant and the brutal that even they might be brought back into the presence of God if they would humble themselves and learn of him. Above the confusion of men's murmurings throughout all time has come to the listening ear the voice that commanded tempestuous Galilee, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." We all have the opportunity to prove to ourselves that the service we render is not our ministry alone.

Wherefore, fear not even unto death; for in this world your joy is not full, but in me your joy is full. Therefore, care not for the body, neither the life of the body; but care for the soul, and for the life of the soul, and seek the face of the Lord always, that in patience ye may possess your souls, and ye shall have eternal life.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5.

A Lesson From the Sky

One can take a lesson from the sky. When it is clear, it is pretty; but when there are clouds, its real beauty is seen. Clouds on the horizon at sundown present one of the most beautiful sights in this world. Similarly, the life that has been cloudy with trials is more beautiful because the depth of understanding that shines through one who has met and triumphed over obstacles is like the golden rays of sunshine that manage to show through the clouds.—ALICE EASTWOOD

Question Time

Question:

1. Was it ever published in the Herald that the late President Frederick M. Smith ever uttered he was only President of the Church and not Prophet?

Alberta

T. B.

Answer:

The short answer would be an emphatic "No, not to my knowledge." We may say that the late President F. M. Smith was very careful to preserve the prestige of his office to which he as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator was ordained. If such a statement were published we should like to have the reference.

Question:

2. Could you give the number of factions that go under the name "Mormons" including the Reorganized?

Alberta

T. B.

Answer:

The number of factions branching out of the Restoration Movement are too numerous to mention. The larger divisions now existing are The Reorganized Church, The Church in Salt Lake City, The Church of Christ (Temple Lot), The Church of Jesus Christ (Bickerton Group in Pennsylvania), and other lesser groups. The total number of factions coming out of the early church and of factions from these factions would number approximately twenty or more. I suspect there are some existing of which we do not know.

Question:

3. Does Deuteronomy 14: 23-26 (Inspired Version) seem to be an error? It states that wine and strong drink and whatsoever the soul lusts after are to be enjoyed before God.

Alberta

T. B.

Answer:

Your question in reference to Deuteronomy 14: 23-26 is a practical one. The difficulty arises because your question is a misquotation. Close study of the text (Deuteronomy 14) the whole chapter, indicates the high moral standard set before Israel. Verse 26 cannot be separated from the context and especially from verses 22-25: "Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed . . . and thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall choose . . . the tithe of thy corn [any hard grain], of thy wine [the juice of the grape], and of thine oil." "And if the way be too long . . . then shalt thou turn it into money and bind up the money in thine hand, and shalt go unto the place which the Lord thy God shall choose."

Then comes the ambiguous language of verse 26 which cannot be separated from verse 27. "And thou shalt bestow that money" meaning the money they had gained by the sale of their grain, wine, and other luxuries, and with this money, they were to eat before the Lord not neglecting the Levite, for he had no inheritance. It was to be a rule that they were to sacrifice items of personal indulgence for a tithe (offering) unto the Lord and not to neglect the Levite.

Question:

I Corinthians 15: 50 says: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Does this imply that we will not retain our present form of life in the kingdom of God? Luke 24: 39 leads us to believe Jesus ascended to heaven with his literal body of flesh and bones.

Maryland

J. A. E.

Answer:

The verse does not fully explain itself, leaving room for uncertainty, but taken in the light of Paul's whole argument on the resurrection it is quite clear.

In discussing this subject Paul very definitely affirms a literal resurrection of the body, giving evidence of Christ's resurrection and following with that of all men. He describes changes of corruption to incorruption; mortality to immortality; weakness to strength; a natural body to a spiritual. It will be a glorified body, freed from the taint of evil (that is, for the saved). In another place he says that Christ "shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." (The Greek word translated vile means, by implication, human nature with its frailties and passions; low estate; etc.)

Christ's redeemed and glorified body is the pattern for his people. John says, "We shall be like him," and David, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."

After presenting so strongly the fact of a literal resurrection, Paul could not have meant that flesh and bones could not enter the kingdom. What he did mean was that bodies as they now are with their corruptibility could not dwell there, but that they must be changed and adapted to the new environment. Some have thought that blood will no longer flow in the bodies of men. We do not know, since there is no Scripture upon which to base an opinion.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

Why are the twelve apostles now called the Council of Twelve instead of the Quorum of Twelve?

Missouri

R. P.

Answer:

The Quorum of Twelve took action in their session of September 15, 1949, to be known as the "Council of Twelve," in keeping with Section 141: 3 of the Doctrine and Covenants. The word "council" is a more significant title, while "quorum" has other connotations in common usage.

Daughter of the Pioneers

The Autobiography of Christiana Stedman Salyards

Part VII

First Teaching Position

When I was twenty years old I went to teach school in the little town where my father was superintendent of an extensive ice plant. At the same time an attractive young stranger came to that town and we became interested in each other. But the opposition of the men of our family broke in on the dream of youth, and the young stranger went away.

At the time of his going I was given a significant dream, which I understood only in part. In the dream I seemed to be walking along on the main business street of my home town, and a little behind me in a group of men was the one to whom I have referred. When I reached a certain corner I turned and began the steep ascent of a street that led upward six blocks to the crest of the bluff it climbed. I looked back and saw my friend disappear from my view as he continued in the low path I had been following.

I have walked many years in the way that leads upward, but, as I have already stated, I probably wouldn't have entered it had I not been guided by the Power, unseen and true, that directed my way. I must have been in a very real danger when that guiding power intervened. I had gone upstairs one morning to tack down a carpet in my brothers' room and was on my knees at work when a distinct impression entered my mind to go away at once to my uncle's home, fifty miles distant. I anticipated a protest from my mother because of her health, but she offered no remonstrance to my going; so I packed my bag, dressed for my trip, procured a maid to take my place in the home, and boarded the eastbound train. The next train from Chicago brought in the one I so longed to see. We had passed each other on the way.

I was completing my third year as a teacher in the school I have mentioned, when one day my mother confided to me her anxiety over the separation of her parents from all of their children and her fear for them when winter should come. It flashed across my mind that I could go to them, and after a little conversation, it was decided that I should do so when my school had closed.

The School

This may be the place to write a little about the school to which I had devoted myself for three years. On the morning when first I stepped on the platform there were about forty-five students, but the small town was growing because of the employment afforded by the ice business. The school grew also, so that the average daily attendance during a large part of the second year was ninety-eight.

I still enjoy thinking over those busy years when I learned to bear the yoke of close application to my work. There was plenty of it waiting for me in later life, and those early years were in a way a preparation for what was to come. But often, as I stepped on the platform on the morning of a new day and looked into the upturned faces of a hundred children, I felt a thrill of keen enjoyment, and those young voices, raised in happy song, afforded me a pleasure seldom equaled by more pretentious choruses. I cherish the memories that cluster around that schoolroom.

Going to Blue Rapids

The agreement with my mother was carried out, and when school closed in June, 1884, I set out for Grandfather's home. I left on Mother's birthday, and she stood smiling and waving her hand as we drove away to take the train in Princeton, Illinois. In our family we always celebrated the anniversary of her birth by having strawberries. Her mother had instituted the custom, and we thought the day could not pass without the birthday treat. But that year not a berry was to be had in town, and it seemed that Mother and all the rest of the family were destined to go without. In Princeton, however, I found several boxes of berries and added fine, luscious cherries to fill out a half crate of fruit, which I sent home by Frank, my father's teamster. And here I cannot forbear mentioning an incident, because of the pure neighborliness and good will it manifested. A man who lived across the street from my home brought from a near-by town a couple of boxes of berries for his family, and in the dusk of the evening his wife carried Mother a small serving of the scarce fruit with a large serving of neighborly kindness. Then Frank arrived with my gift of fruit, and I feel confident Mother reciprocated Mrs. Kellogg's generosity.

I did not go directly to Grandfather's home, but visited some relatives on the way. It was then I had a dream which I did not understand at the time. In it I seemed to be standing in the doorway of a building to which a few people were coming in small groups of two or three. I seemed to be unobserved as they passed me and went up a short stairway. One man came alone on crutches. He, too, passed me and began to ascend the stairway, but when he had passed the fourth step he swung his crutches about under his arm and went up well and strong.

I looked after him, wondering what had happened to cause the change in him. I decided to go up the stairway and find out where the people were going and what they were doing. I ascended the stairs and saw a long table spread with a white cloth; the people seated on both sides of it were eating, but I saw no food on the table.

Back of the table at a distance I saw a great mass of people, looking down intently at those eating at the table. I found a place and sat down with those eating. Then the dream closed. I wondered a little over it and then let it pass, but after I had come into the church I understood its meaning. I was near the entrance to the church to which a few people were coming; they took the steps required by the gospel of Christ: faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands, and continued in the way commanded by him. The crippled man was healed in conformity with the promise, "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

The white table at which the people were eating represented the table of the Lord, and there was no visible food on it because they were partaking of spiritual food—the bread from heaven. The great mass of people in the background represented the world. They were not mocking, or ridiculing, or persecuting, but they were watching us very intently.

Experience With the Church

I did not reach Blue Rapids until August 20, 1884. It was Grandfather's ninetieth birthday; Grandmother was then seventy-nine. A thunderstorm the night before had washed the streets clean; the morning was bright and cheery; and the merchants were opening their doors and lowering their awnings for the day. A young woman with me, whom I had met in the latter part of my journey, volunteered the information that the Reorganized Latter Day Saints among whom I was going were just like the Utah Mormons. She called them Mormons and said she knew all about them since she had played with their children and been in their homes.

I answered that my grandparents were people who would not be connected with anything wrong, and that I was acquainted with their church publication, which carried on its first page a quotation from the Book of Mormon: "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife." I added, "I shall go among those people and keep my eyes open and shall find out for myself what kind of people they are." I never saw the young woman again.

I was twenty-three years old at that time. I had come to the humble home of my grandparents for a purpose. I may safely say now what I did not know then—that I had been led to it for a purpose. It is apparent to me now the Lord directed me there to reveal to me the gospel of Jesus Christ so that the joy of it might enter into my life and bless me, and that through me others would also be blessed.

I went to my grandfather's house, knowing I should have to live more frugally than I had been accustomed to. I knew I should have to live in a tiny three-room house without modern conveniences. I knew I should have no young associates—only the companionship of two very old people. I went knowing these things and prepared to be content. I assumed the duties of the small household quietly and happily, feeling as I drank in the peace and quiet of that tranquil home the truth of the words, "Better a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith."—Proverbs 15: 17.

I had decided before going that I would attend the Methodist church and had noted the location of it as I passed. Instead, I became a regular attendant at the Reorganized Latter Day Saint meetings. Grandfather was pastor of the little flock, and one evening when the weather was too damp for him to go to the church, the small group came to our house for prayer meeting.

I was the only one present not of the church, and when he said, "Let every one feel free to speak, whether he belongs to the church or not," I knew he wished I would express myself with regard to the church. After a time I did so. I told the people I knew they were good and kind to my aged grandparents, but I did not know whether their church was what they claimed it to be. I said, "You believe the Book of Mormon, but the world discredits it. You believe Joseph Smith was a prophet, but the world says he was an impostor. I do not know the truth in these matters. If I knew your church to be the true one I would join it, but I do not know, and I wish to be careful and not make a mistake."

When I had finished, one of the group suggested that they offer prayer, and they knelt and prayed that this one who was willing to walk in the light might be led into it. Then the meeting was dismissed, but the man who had offered the prayer lingered to ask me if I knew there is promise in the Bible that we may know individually of the truth of the gospel. I answered that I knew little about the Bible, and he went away without telling me more.

I went at once to Grandfather to ask if there is such a promise in the Bible, and he pointed out to me the words of Jesus in John 7: 17: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." Like one of old I kept the words of that promise in my heart and pondered them.

Decision

I have stated that I arrived at my grandfather's house on the twentieth day of August. On the twenty-seventh day of October, 1884, I was baptized. It has always been a source of pleasure to me to know I opened my heart with ready acceptance to the appeal of truth. Jesus said: "My sheep hear my voice, and they follow me." I had not been able to hear the Shepherd's voice in the church where I confessed my faith in him five years before, and because I could not hear the voice for which I listened I had not followed further with those professors of religion. I was still listening to hear the voice of truth before I would enter the path pointed out by the Reorganized Latter Day Saints.

As I look back to those days I can visualize Grandfather and Grandmother in their rockers side by side, he reading the Herald and she listening intently. When he had finished, he would read from one of the books of the church, or they would rock softly and sing together familiar old hymns or talk over their experiences in the earlier days of the church. Not knowing the value of the information they could have given me, I asked no questions, for it was all foreign to the life I had lived up to that time.

Soon after my arrival in their home one of the missionaries of the church visited the branch and sold their nearest neighbor a copy of The Braden—Kelley Debate, newly published by the church. The neighbor lent the book to Grandfather to read, but the print was too fine for his eyes, and I offered to read it to him. The debate plunged me into questions too ponderous for me to cope with, because of my ignorance of the Scriptures. I said to myself repeatedly, "I can never settle these questions in my own wisdom." As I reached this conclusion again and again the words of Jesus would recur to me, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself."

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Memorial Services for Ina Cockerton, R.N. First "San" Graduate

On Sunday afternoon, July 13, the alumnae of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing held a memorial service for Miss Ina Cockerton, the first graduate of the School of Nursing, who died in the Veteran's Hospital in Oakland, California, on Wednesday, July 9.

She was the only member of her class to complete the course in nursing and was with the hospital in its earliest days. The hospital admitted its first patient in October, 1909, and she entered the school in January, 1910, graduating in 1912. She was known to her professional associates as a most capable nurse, who upheld the ethical standards of her profession.

Former student nurses of the San remember her as a beloved night supervisor, who was always ready to teach them the best way to care for the needs of the patients entrusted to their care. Miss Cockerton enjoyed night duty, and she helped many student nurses to like the responsibilities of caring for the sick during the long night hours. She knew that young girls need relaxing moments too, and she provided some time for such. Breakfast cooked out-of-doors over an open fire was one of the pleasures that she gave to each group of girls at the completion of their assignment on night duty.

Former patients at the San, and their families, remember her as a kindly, efficient nurse who looked after their needs in a most capable manner.

Those of the medical staff remember her as a capable nurse in whose care they could leave their patients, confident that they would be well cared for.

Miss Cockerton gave forty years of her life to service in the nursing profession; for her these were useful, happy years. Her passing is mourned by her friends and by the many whom she served.

Her professional career included service in World War I. She was given a military funeral in Walnut Creek, California, and buried in Oakland Military Cemetery.

The Memorial service was held in the West College Street Church in Independence with Chaplain Almer Sheehy in charge. John Sheehy, who was Chaplain at the San when Miss Cockerton served there, gave the memorial address. He remembered the many times that Miss Cockerton summoned him to the San in the middle of the night to care for the spiritual needs of the sick and their families.

Appropriate vocal music was supplied by Ina Hattey, R.N., and Mrs. Ray Moler, Red Cross Gray Lady, with Mrs. Almer Sheehy at the piano. The vacant chair draped with the red and blue cape and the white nurse's cap symbolized the profession of which Miss Cockerton was a member. The School of Nursing sent a beautiful bouquet of red roses to honor her as their first graduate. Miss Gertrude Copeland, Superintendent of the Hospital, opened the service by telling of Miss Cockerton's hospital work. Mrs. Mary Moats, a devoted friend of Miss Cockerton's, gave a few of the interesting incidents in her life.

Bishop A. Neal Deaver, Assistant Superintendent of the Hospital, offered the benediction. Four of Miss Cockerton's friends, all registered nurses, formed the color guard. They were Mrs. Mary Moats, of Kansas City, Missouri; Miss Faye Franklin; Miss Dru Messenger; and Mrs. E. J. Bivens, all of Independence, Missouri.

The Soft Answer

On two occasions in her life, Jane Addams woke to find a burglar in her room. The first time her small nephew was asleep in the next room, and she thought only of not awakening him. "Don't make any noise," she said to the burglar. Startled, he leaped for the window by which he had entered. "You'll be hurt if you go that way," she said. "Go down by the stairs and let yourself out." He did.

On the second occasion, addressing the housebreaker without embarrassment, she succeeded in putting him at ease. Discovering that he was not a professional but an amateur out of employment, she told him to go away and come back at nine the next morning, when she would see what she could do about getting him a job. He came, and she got him work. —James Weber Linn, Jane Addams (Appleton-Century)

Rock Island Holds District Reunion

The Rock Island District Reunion was held July 19-27 with 200 registrants. Approximately 400 attended each evening, and over 500 on Sundays. Eighteen branches were represented.

Apostle R. E. Davey was minister in charge, assisted by High Priest W. Joseph Breshears, district president. Brother Breshears preached the opening sermon.

On Sunday evening Apostle Davey began his series of sermons on "The Life and Ministry of Jesus." These nightly sermons were illustrated by colored slides of famous paintings. His sermons were followed by illustrated travelogs on Australia.

Music for the Sunday and evening services was furnished by the district choir directed by Elder Jesse W. Cary, accompanied on the piano by Mrs. George Waddell, Sr., and on the violin by Mrs. Kenneth Smith.

Prayer services, directed by District President Breshears, were well attended. A devotion center was set up daily by Mrs. George Shippy.

Elders John Lindburg and L. L. Allen were in charge of administrations.

Bishop T. A. Beck taught the general class each morning.

Mrs. Mary Moats of the General Council of Women taught the women's class each morning which had an average attendance of fifty. Devotions preceding the class period were prepared by Mrs. George Shippy, district leader of women, and presented by local women of the various branches.

High Priest W. J. Breshears taught the men's class, which was well attended.

Seventy Virgil J. Billings directed the young people's activities and sunrise prayer services, and taught their class.

Mrs. Winifred Stiegel directed the children's activities. The following assisted: assistant supervisor, Josephine Scott; nursery, Olivetta Waddell; kindergarten, Dorothy O'Leary, Maude Motejl, and Georgan Harmon; primary, Evelyn McKee, Lois Haxton, Margaret Braun, and Evelyn Breshears; junior, Ellen Roys, Winifred Clark, Florence Brayton, and Mildred Miller; junior high, Gordon Marks, Laurine Clark, and Iris Marks. Gordon Marks supervised the children's evening activities.

Patriarch W. W. Richards conducted experience meetings in the afternoons Tuesday through Friday. Contributions to this service were made by Mrs. Harold Braun, High Priest E. J. Lenox, and Mrs. George Shippy. Patriarch Richards bore his own testimony, gave explanation of the work of the patriarch, and was available for counsel and blessings.

Handcraft for women and girls was carried on each afternoon with demonstrations given by Colleen Perkins, Mary Collins, Nona Dutton, Emma Lindley, Hope Campbell, and a representative of the Boot Hobby Shop of Rock Island.

Each evening a religious education class was conducted under the supervision of Mrs. John Stiegel, and talks were given by Apostle Davey, Bishop Beck, High Priest W. J. Breshears, Seventy Virgil Billings, and Mrs. Mary Moats.

An achievement program, including a display of handcraft, was held Saturday afternoon by the children's division.

The kitchen and dining hall were presided over by Rose Bowen, assisted by Emma Lindly, Jaunita O'Brien, Lucy McKay, and Katherine Bissonnet.

Camp nurses were Mrs. Alberta Boysen and Mrs. Ruth Sharrar.

Elder John C. Stiegel, district treasurer and bishop's agent, was in charge of housing and grounds. Mrs. George Shippy had charge of the girls' dormitory; Brother Billings, the boys' dormitory.

Richard Perkins provided the loud-speaker, record player, and Stone Church records which were used for the meditation periods and general worship services.

Saturday afternoon the local pastors and treasurers and district officers met with Apostle Davey and Bishop Beck to determine ways and means for acquiring a permanent reunion grounds.

Saturday evening Brother Billings preached a missionary sermon, assisted by two young men, Lynn Ourth and Jack Waddell.

On Sunday morning Bishop Beck gave a challenge in the closing sermon of the reunion. —Reported by MRS. GEORGE SHIPPY

Five Candidates Baptized

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON.—Vancouver Branch is planning a remodeling program and expansion of the present church building, which will provide for much needed classrooms, a choir room, a larger foyer, and a mother's room on the main floor. In the lower auditorium there will be a new kitchen, new classrooms, and an enlarged dining hall.

A baptismal service was held June 29 which added five new members to the church. Judy Locke, Diana and Josephine Rancore, David Jones, and Margery Bruno were baptized by Elder Paul Fishel.

The choir has been active throughout the year and, since Easter, has been directed by Shirley Phillips. In September, Shirley will leave to enter Graceland College.

The women's group has begun the study of I Witness for Christ by Blanche Mesley, after completing The Restoration Story. Evalyn Ellithorpe is serving as leader. Ella Waterman is work chairman.

The daily vacation Bible school was held July 7 through July 18. An achievement program was given on July 20. Attendance varied from thirty-four to forty-six with an average of forty. Teachers were Nellie Moreland, Evalyn Ellithorpe, Zella Pritt, Ruth Phillips, Royce Chapman, Zula Fineout, Ella Waterman, and Wanda Taylor. Ruby Fishel was director. Dorothy Covell was a junior assistant.

Recent speakers in the branch have been Elders Roy D. Keiser, Will J. Chapman, F. E. Chapman, Walter Webberley, Harold Carpenter, and Pastor Paul Fishel. High Priest

M. H. Cook, in spite of his advanced age, continues to minister to us from the pulpit. Elder Bob E. Taylor serves as pastor of Scappoose mission on Sunday mornings but attends Vancouver evenings and is supervisor of Zion's League. Duane Benfit is president. The Leaguers continue to lead the church school in attendance and are making progress in their study of the Book of Mormon.—Reported by RUBY FISHEL

District Officers Elected

KENNETT, MISSOURI.—The Southern Missouri District Reunion was held July 10-13. The visiting staff included Missionary W. E. Williams, Nevada, Missouri; Evangelist Orman Salisbury, St. Joseph, Missouri; Mrs. J. Harry Paxton, Independence, Missouri; and Elder Stephen A. Black, Neosho, Missouri. Elder Black taught the general class; Evangelist Salisbury, the men's class; Elder Williams, the young people's class; and Sister Paxton, the women's class. Sister Grace Kelley had charge of the music, assisted by Miss Georgia Trotter. District President J. A. Phillips was assisted by the church appointees in directing the morning prayer services. Evangelist Salisbury gave fifteen patriarchal blessings. Two candidates were baptized on the last day of the reunion.

Election of officers was held in the afternoon on July 13 under the direction of Elder Stephen Black and the district presidency. Fern O. Greenshield of Salem, Missouri, and Edward Battagino were approved for ordination to the office of priest. The following officers were elected: J. A. Phillips, district president; Dr. F. O. Kelley, and W. A. Kuntz, counselors; C. A. Phillips, church school director; Omar L. Nunn, young people's leader; Mrs. Katie Branch, women's leader; Fred Fears, treasurer and sustained bishop's agent; Mrs. Grace Kelley, music director; and Mrs. Sue Smith, secretary.—Reported by J. A. PHILLIPS

Vacation Church School Held

AMHERSTBURG, ONTARIO, CANADA.—The vacation church school for the branch was held July 7-18 under the direction of Mrs. Harvey Jones. Guest storytellers included Mrs. Elizabeth Miller, Mrs. John Squires, Mrs. Harvey Jones, Mr. Harvey Nicholson, Milton Carswell, and Blair McClain. The theme for the school was "Behold the Light of the World." An achievement night was held July 4. There are approximately 100 people in the branch, and the church school had an enrollment of 105 children. Except for guest speakers, all teachers and assistants came from the local congregation. Irving Jones is the pastor of the branch.—Reported by PATRICIA NICHOLSON

President at Conference

HANNOVER, GERMANY.—President Israel A. Smith, Apostle Arthur Oakman, Bishop Henry Livingston, and Seventies Louis Zonker and Gene Theys were present at a conference July 19-24. Chaplain Floyd H. Engstrom was also present at the conference. The new mission house served as the meeting place for the conference. This was the last conference in Europe for Brother Theys and family before they set sail for America.—Reported by HARRY WARD

District Institute Held

ROUGE VALLEY MISSION, MEDFORD, OREGON.—The Southern Oregon District institute was held May 30-31. District officers officiated.

Women In Industry

Part I

UNDER THE DIVINE INSTITUTION of marriage women become the bearer of children. In Genesis we read: "And God blessed them and God said unto them, Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth."

But this privilege carries with it the responsibility of the physical, mental, and spiritual growth of their offspring.

We are primarily concerned with mothers in industry. To all other women who desire to enter the female labor force it is a matter to be decided individually, and frequently in the affirmative. However, that problem affects only the immediate members of the family, but the problem of mothers working may increase the burden of the home, church, and community, and affect the morale of the world. Unless the absence of mothers' presence in the homes is satisfactorily filled, the community will deal with broken homes and delinquent children. This situation is increasing with such rapidity that something must be done.

Children are being born to parents who have no concern for the future. Recently a judge was talking to a young lad concerning a crime for which he was in the courts and he asked "What time do you get in at night?" The little lad answered, "About one o'clock." The judge said, "Isn't that pretty late for a boy of your age to get home?" "Oh, no,

By Jo Zelma Taylor

(Mrs. Arthur B. Taylor)

that's before Mom and Pop get home."

Children are not being taught the fundamental principles of right and wrong, for the parents themselves are by-passing their early religious training; and even though they wish to be good parents they have little faith to pass on to their young. The child who lacks a mother to teach him to pray is a lonely, pitiful child who likely will grow into a neurotic, maladjusted adult. Every child needs to feel the security that comes from the love of both an earthly and a heavenly Parent. Religion and the home must go hand in hand.

We have been remiss in failing to impress upon our young people the seriousness of the responsibility they assume when they marry. Modern magazines and movies discuss sex and romantic love, but we fail to teach them how to build Zionie homes and rear their children in security.

IN THE TERMS of my legal profession, the woman who marries enters into a contract with the man of her choice, and God willing, they reproduce. The primary duty of that husband is to be the provider. In the vernacular he "brings home the bacon." The primary duty of the woman who enters this contract is to cook that bacon, be amazed at the quantity and the quality which he is able to bring, teach the children to eat it with proper manners, and smile and look like an angel in her homemade dress. That is a happy home, a secure home from which they will not wander far, for all members will place the proper emphasis upon their respective responsibilities.

But since marriage, like other contracts, does not always work to a successful conclusion, it is not as youth hopes—always a guarantee of security. It may become a necessity for women to enter industry, or it may be helpful for them to aid their husbands in building a more secure business. Often there is a definite challenge to a woman's ability. The times and standards have changed rapidly. Even so short a time ago as the close of World War II we were urging wives and mothers to return to the home. The increasing rate of divorce and the subsequent delinquency of children were blamed almost entirely upon the mother's entrance into industry. This insecurity has continued, and yet there is a constant demand for an increasing number of women to work outside the home. In many instances this has worked successfully and with benefit to the family.

WOMEN IN INDUSTRY have become a fact, and the resultant problems must be coped with—not alone by the individual but by the community, school, and church. Ten years ago we would have said mothers must not work, but today new problems are here. I desire to state the situation as I feel it now exists, and challenge your thoughts so we may plan the proper pattern of family life that children may be kept off the streets and kept in homes where spiritual guidance and parental love can be given to them.

Let us compare the work of the mother in the pioneer family with family life since mother went to work. My husband likes to tell the story of the unfavorable reaction of women when on a questionnaire he was required to ask, "Does your wife work?" Almost without exception, if the wife were present, she reacted unfavorably. So he changed the question, "Does your wife have a gainful occupation?"

This older mother attracted no attention to the work that she did in the home, nor did she receive money for the products that she made. But now mother has a gainful occupation outside the home. Those early mothers had a gainful occupation, but that gain did not come via a pay check with a W2 form attached showing deduction withheld from salary for income tax purposes. That pay check means money has been earned which will never pass into the woman's hands, and only the remaining part will come into the family fund to be used but from which will be purchased clothing and food.

That early mother had a gainful occupation which produced more immediate and definite gains. She sat by the fireside surrounded by her family while she fashioned the wool into garments. The children under her trained supervision plied a churn filled with home produced cream until they saw that golden miracle of butter rise to the top. Bread was produced, not by the medium of twenty cents from mother's pocket with which the children ran to the corner grocery, but by the mystery of mixing yeast with mill-ground whole-wheat flour to bring forth the staff of life.

When father felt particularly appreciative of these gains of mother's he read for evening prayers from the thirty-first chapter of Proverbs beginning at the tenth verse. This should be read in every home and in every training class for adolescents who are preparing to build a home of their own.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.

The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil.

She will do him good and not evil all the days of her life.

She seeketh wool, and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands.

She is like the merchants' ships; she bringeth her food from afar.

She riseth also while it is yet night and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens.

She considereth a field, and buyeth it: with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms.

She perceiveth that her merchandise is good: her candle goeth not out by night.

She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

She is not afraid of the snow for her household: for all her household are clothed with scarlet.

She maketh herself coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple.

Her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

She maketh fine linen, and selleth it; and delivereth girdles unto the merchant.

Strength and honor are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come.

She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.

Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.

Favor is deceitful, and beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised.

Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates.

WOMEN TODAY must fulfill these same duties to receive like commendation, but the manner of performing their duties has changed. Work produced then in the home is now more efficiently done by the concerted effort of industry. There was no commercial laundry, so mother aided by her children did the washing. But when mechanism was found to perform that labor, help was still needed, and as more women were relieved from home drudgery, they left the home for gainful occupation, and each mother who entered industry had a new problem. What would happen to her children who heretofore had been under her guidance and received her training? Who would take her place? This factory which she had managed so efficiently was suddenly left without management. What would become of the offspring whom she had contracted to train and care for physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually?

The removal of woman's work from home to factory lies at the root of this change. We cannot blame woman for this development of circumstances. Every true wife and mother still desires to do her duty and perform her part of the contract. She may still be fulfilling her mission, but where shall she plant her vineyard? Strength and honor must still be her clothing if she will rejoice and her children will rise up and call her blessed, and her husband shall praise her.

Today's woman must remember, as in the thirtieth verse of Proverbs, "Favor is deceitful and beauty is vain, but a woman who feareth the Lord—she shall be praised and her own works shall praise her in the gates."

The work of the modern woman has changed. It differs in that she neither spins nor weaves, neither does she prepare the major portion of her food. To provide successfully these same goods she may find it necessary to become the "woman in industry," but to fulfill that marriage contract she remains the "woman in the home." How she approaches this is not alone her problem. It has become the concern of the church, the school, and the community, and its solution will affect the morale of the world. As the home goes, so goes civilization.

Detour to Defeat

By Don Savage

The following story is based on fact. It was presented at the closing lesson of the Southern Nebraska Youth Conference in Lincoln, Nebraska, May 31 and June 1.

JOHN SMITH was an A-1 machinist. He had a rare combination of personality and skill that made him a favorite in the tool shop where he worked. Men took their problems to John with the sure knowledge that his sympathetic kindness and excellent skill would somehow find a solution. And they were seldom disappointed.

His tools seemed to have magic forged between their shiny surfaces. Where other men's micrometers would give inaccurate results, under skilled care John's would yield the right reading time after time. Where a milling machine would chatter and fail under another man's hand, under John's guidance it would cut smoothly and swiftly. He was a valuable man both to his employer and himself.

In the business world it is persons like John who go to the top "like cream on milk." John was truly some of the cream. He was soon promoted to a more responsible position of overseeing the efforts of other machinists. With the new position he associated more and more with men of similar capacity and standing.

John felt that maintaining his position required a little more than just skill and personality. He had to be "one of the boys," and this called for frequent "get togethers" and an occasional "sociable drink."

John Smith had not previously used alcohol. And it was with alarm that his wife first observed him under its influence after one of his "business socials."

ALCOHOL LIKE ALL DRUGS is devastating to the human body and mind. Like a dreadful disease it preys first on the weak and then slowly smothers the strong. Though John was powerful physically, he had only average resistance to alcohol, and soon he was no longer a "social drinker." He was an alcoholic.

As he drank more and more, he had increased difficulty in maintaining his position. The skill and kindness that had characterized him earlier were replaced by poor judgment and sullenness. And with the disappearance of those good traits, he lost his job. The very men who taught him to drink now held up their hands against him.

BECAUSE EMPLOYMENT was easy to find, John succeeded in obtaining another job—a good one. Again he worked with his beloved tools as he had in the beginning. But it was not so easy now. His hands shook as he tried to form the metal into finished assemblies. His eyes were no longer clear. Their bleariness fought against reading small gauges and seeing tiny cuts and openings. Where once painstaking craftsmanship had been a pride and pleasure, it was now tedious and nerve racking. There was but one refuge—more whisky.

More and more frequently he was absent from work. Finally Fred Jones, his immediate supervisor, had to warn him that his record must improve or he would be released.

John was desperate. He realized that he must not lose this job, that he had to have work, and that his home and his future were at stake! With these driving realizations he tried harder than ever to regain the things he had had before he began drinking. But staying on the job hour after hour when his throat cried for alcohol was torture. He thought he would die if he did not have a drink. So he began to carry his bottle on the job and steal an occasional bracer.

Such things are never kept secret from fellow employees, and John would have been discharged for this reason alone had not another thing occurred first which caused him to lose his job.

Intoxicated after a long night at a saloon, he started to drive unsteadily home. Police stopped him and attempted to place him under arrest. When drunk John was violent and had to be beaten into insensibility before he could be taken to jail. He was so loathesome that the two young officers refused to have him in the car with them but hauled him in the trunk.

New Horizons

YOUNG PEOPLE, the next time you see liquor propaganda about "Men of Distinction" remember John Smith. Jail, unemployment, a ruined home—this is the kind of distinction drink brought him.

Do not be fooled by advertising. It is neither wise nor necessary for you ever to drink. The dean of the engineering college which I attended told the graduating class something in his final lecture worth remembering. He said, "Young men, you are about to go out into professional fields. You will be required to associate with people from many walks of life. There are certain things that you are meeting and will continue to meet. One of them is drinking. I have been in this profession a long time, as you know. I have seen the days when to drink with men was necessary to obtain certain business advantages. Yet, at those times my glass remained untouched. And as a result I lost many dollars. Today the picture has changed. Thinking employers and leaders realize more and more that drinking is dangerous. Avoid this unnecessary danger. And may you have the best of fortune."

On Drinking and Driving

It is 55 times as dangerous to be drunk and drive as it is to be sober and drive.

It is dangerous to drink and drive because of the nature of beverage alcohol.

Physically an intoxicant reduces the ability of the eye to see. A drinking driver cannot see as far, as clearly, as much, as quickly, or as safely as a non-drinking driver.

His hearing is also impaired, although this impairment may be due in part to the fact that his mind may be inattentive due to drink.

The drinking driver having at last seen and understood what, had he not been drinking, he would have seen sooner, more clearly, safely, and in greater and truer detail, then has to make a mental decision. Shall he stop, dodge, brake, use his clutch, speed up, slow down, swerve to the right or to the left or what?

That requires a mental decision. How has beverage alcohol affected his mind?

In many ways:

1. He thinks he is a better driver than he is.
2. He thinks he can drive safely at a greater speed.
3. His caution is dulled.
4. His sense of responsibility to others is suppressed.
5. His mental processes are slowed down.

So, having seen too late and too little, he slowly makes a decision which tends to be wrong.

Less vision, plus weakened hearing, plus slower reasoning, plus bad judgment, plus slower hand action—plus delayed foot action equal a far greater chance of accident!—METHODIST CLIPSHEET

Young People in the News

Ruth Elser

A FUTURE NURSE, Ruth Irma Elser, is acting as secretary this summer for the University of Kansas Orientation Center in a six weeks' orientation program for forty-three foreign students.

Ruth, the daughter of Brother and Sister George Otto Elser, of Independence, Missouri, and former residents of Elmshorn, Germany, is also living with and acting as counselor for the twelve foreign women students.

This program, a yearly undertaking for Kansas University, is authorized by the State Department. This year a total of nineteen countries, ranging from western Europe and the Far East to Central and South America, will participate.

The program is designed to aid foreign students in improving their English proficiency, to acquaint them with American social customs and ideals, and to familiarize them with an American university. All of these young people are in America on various scholarships and will be attending school somewhere in the United States this fall. Classes, field trips, and personal counseling will be the media of education.

This fall Ruth will continue her education at K.U. as a sophomore in the nursing curriculum. She will live in a scholarship hall, in which residence is determined by a high grade point average, good character, and personality habits.

Ruth was graduated from William Chrisman High School in 1951 as valedictorian of her class and was awarded a $100 American Association of University Women scholarship. She was a junior member of the National Honor Society, as well as vice-president of the chapter.

Also, while in high school, she was a member of the Nursing Club and served on the student council for three semesters. In addition she gave the piano accompaniment for the Mixed Chorus.

Before college days she was study chairman of the Stone Church Teen-Age Zion's League. She also taught a primary church school class, and was junior church pianist. Ruth now holds membership in the West College Street Congregation.

Before entering college Ruth worked part time for four years at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital at the switchboard and in the office. This was in addition to her two years as an Oriole page, during which time she secured a two-hundred-hour service pin. This summer, before beginning her job at the Orientation Center, she again resumed her old job at the Sanitarium.

Last year her rating in curricular and extra-curricular activities, both school and church, was excellent. Her grade point average put her name on the honor roll both semesters. She was publicity chairman for the Nursing Club and secretary-treasurer of the German Club, as well as being fire and safety captain at the dormitory where she lived.

Ruth was a very active missionary, besides being secretary to the college church group in Lawrence. This group planned one Sunday service a month for nonmember friends of branch and college members. Once Ruth brought all of the girls in her corridor to church.

Her success—if any—she says, must be attributed to her fine home life and her wonderful parents. Brother and Sister Elser came to America in 1927, after being converted to the church by a visiting missionary in Germany. Before they journeyed to America they started the Elmshorn Branch, which is still functioning. Brother Elser is now a group elder in the West College Street area.

Ruth's older brother, Dr. Otto Elser, obtained his education at the University of New York and at Harvard. He is now in charge of a department on the medical floor at the University of Kansas Medical Center.

Ruth's natural sweetness and overwhelming goodness make her welcome wherever she goes, and will continue to do so as she encounters further responsibility in church and school activities.

Equality is basic; it is the fruitage of the revelation of Christ.

What is equality? It is fundamentally a sharing of the self with others under God. Our sin is that in coming to know ourselves as selves, we sit up on our own. The acquisition of this knowledge—the knowledge of self as self and of good and evil—is the fall of man. But the self and its values are what each man can offer on the altar of service. It is said that the golden apple of selfhood, thrown among the gods, became an apple of discord because they scrambled for it.

They did not know the first rule of the holy game, which is that every player must by all means touch the ball and then immediately pass it on. To be found with it in your hands is a fault: to cling to it, death.—C. S. Lewis.

Stewardship is the sharing of self, which exists only to be vacated.

Our preaching must set men free—free to do as they ought under God, to use things of this world in the manner he has designed. This is the need of this age.

P.S.

* OWNED BY A DOG

Something like this may have happened to you. At least, it has happened to me. I was alone in town, and taking a walk in the evening to pass the time. Somebody's little dog was out taking a walk, too, for lack of something better to do. He came up and trotted along just ahead of me for several blocks. He was pretending that he was my dog, and that I was his man. I think he forgot for some minutes that it was all make-believe. We went along without saying anything at all, each enjoying the privacy of his own thoughts. That's one of the nice things about a dog: he feels no obligation to speak unless he has something to say. . . . You think a dog doesn't talk? You must be terribly unobservant. What language? Dogsh, of course. It is a speech made up of tail wags, body wiggles, cocking of ears (for questions), assorted barks, whines, howls, growls, and tongue laving. . . . Don't try to tell me dogs don't talk. . . . When we came to the corner, he flicked his tail (much as bus drivers flick their lights as signals) in farewell, and departed. . . . I shall remember that. For a little while, I belonged to a dog.

* HEAT

It was 102 in the shade—and precious little shade where we were standing—on a recent Sunday in Kansas City. On Monday a friend from Alaska reported receiving a copy of his Anchorage paper complaining of a "heat wave" with an average of 62, and a high of 71 for June. Anybody planning a trip to Alaska? We'd like to go along as valet, cook, colporteur, or personal bodyguard—almost anything to get to go. There are higher temperatures than we have in the Middle West, but the high humidity with our heat causes suffocation and collapse.

* THE MIMOSA TREE

We are always glad when some beautiful tree from lands afar accepts our country as its home and decides to bloom. In oriental literature and in the descriptions of the islands of the Pacific we have read of the Mimosa tree and its wonderful display of color when it is in bloom. The slender fernlike leaves of the tree make a good background for the cerise blooms, which are formed like the old-fashioned tassels that grandmother liked so well on her draperies. . . . Surprisingly, the Mimosa is growing to large sizes in Missouri. Somehow, a tree helps us to understand and appreciate the people who have known and loved it for thousands of years. A love of such beauty leads to good will among men.

IS YOUR FUTURE SECURE? SAFETY TALK NUMBER 5

Are you planning on making a widow of a wife? Are you thinking of making orphans of some children?

No, you wouldn't plan it that way. Very few people do. A traffic death is generally an unplanned killing, but the victims are just as dead whether it was planned or not.

When you take the steering wheel of a car in your hands, think of this: "This thing could kill somebody. It could kill me." Last April the total traffic deaths passed the total killed in our armies in all our wars since 1776.

We'd Like You To Know . . .

William E. Timms

William E. Timms, with his wife and two children, Patricia Ethel, 11, and Lloyd William, 9, journeyed from rather a distant land to take his place among the Saints in the Center Place. He is now carrying a position of responsibility at the Auditorium. In July, 1951, Brother Timms and his family left their home in Clay Cross, England, and moved to Independence. In England he had been pastor of the Clay Cross Branch for seven years and a counselor in the presidency of the Midland and Southern England District. His ordination to the eldership took place in 1942.

Now Brother Timms is office manager for the Presiding Bishopric and personnel manager for the Auditorium. His background in England—training at Chesterfield Technical College and the British College of Secretaries—plus his keen interest in mechanized accounting and office procedures, have helped him qualify for his important tasks. At the present time he is spending a great deal of time supervising the installation of I.B.M. machines to serve the statistical and tithepayer's service departments.

Of course, like all devoted church men, he is busy evenings and week ends with local branch work.

News and Notes

PRESIDENT SMITH EN ROUTE HOME

President Israel A. Smith and party sailed from Southhampton, England, for the United States on Wednesday, August 13. They are expected in Independence about August 20. Traveling with President Smith are Apostle Arthur Oakman and Bishop Henry Livingston.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS CARRIES ON

In the absence of the other members of the First Presidency, President F. Henry Edwards has been taking care of the work of the Presidency at headquarters.

W. W. SMITH IN NORTHWEST

President W. Wallace Smith and Sister Smith are expected to return to Independence from the Northwest this week. They have been in attendance at the reunions in the West and Northwest.

MCDOWELLS OBSERVE ANNIVERSARY

Doctor and Sister Floyd M. McDowell observed their fortieth wedding anniversary July 30. They were married in Lamon, Iowa, by Bishop Albert Carmichael in 1910. Two of their daughters, Mrs. J. Arthur Dickson and Mrs. Hulin L. Crowner, and their families were home for the occasion. Mrs. Max Wise, another daughter, and her husband, Dr. Wise, were unable to attend the celebration, but plan to visit with Brother and Sister McDowell in the near future.

BAPTISMS IN LOS ANGELES STAKE

The First Presidency has received the following information from Los Angeles Stake President Garland Tickemyer: "At the close of the recent children's camps seventeen children were baptized. Two other children from the camp were baptized in a local church and there are five others who were ill but expect to be baptized during the month of August." Brother Tickemyer also reported a candidate from Temple City, and stated that Elder Dick Andersen had reported three to be baptized in September. Norwalk has five more candidates ready for baptism.

APOSTLE HOLMES SPEAKS

Apostle Reed M. Holmes was the speaker at the evening campus service and the Zion's League campfire service in the Center Stake on August 10. He was the speaker at the morning preaching service at the elders' retreat the same day at Lake Doniphan. On August 13 he conducted a religious education service at the Far West Stake Reunion held at Stewartville, Missouri.

SEVENTY HOLDS SERIES

Seventy James Renfroe held a series of meetings in Caraway, Arkansas, from July 30-August 10. Three people were baptized at the close of the series. Brother Renfroe also reported seven were baptized at the close of the Arkansas-Louisiana Reunion held at Hot Springs. He began a series at DeKalb, Texas, on August 14 which will continue through August 24.

The Law of Plenty

Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together; and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again.

—Luke 6:38

THIS IS A GOSPEL OF ABUNDANCE, not of scarcity or want. There is want and hunger everywhere in the kingdom of evil, but in the kingdom of God there is plenty. There is scarcity in the kingdom of evil, where people rob and never have enough, and victims lose and can never save what they have. But in the kingdom of God people give gladly of their plenty, wherever the need occurs.

Jesus understood this well. If he needed a precedent, he found it in the words of his Father, given through the prophet Malachi:

Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—3:10.

IN THE LITERARY SUPPLEMENT OF a large Mexico City newspaper there was a print of a painting by the Mexican artist, Jesus Escobedo, showing a warrior, sword in hand, who had cut off his own head, and was continuing his sanguinary way down the road to his own eventual destruction.

You can draw many inferences from that picture, and it is a part of the genius of the artist that he made them possible. It could represent a nation going to war, engaging in internal strife, abandoning reason, turning to mass violence and other things.

One lesson, less dramatic perhaps than the others, is that of the danger or restricting our lives and cutting off our own opportunities. Because we give life so little, we receive so little from it. We invest stingily and our dividends are small. We have not learned the gospel law of abundance and plenty.

IT IS GENERALLY the stupid, lazy, culturally impoverished boy in the class who wants to know, positively and precisely, the absolute minimum that he can read and learn in order to "get by" in the examinations.

It is the girl of limited horizons who inquires petulantly, "Do we need to know that?"

The poor student will insist on keeping as close as possible to the minimums, and all his life will be spent on limited rations, intellectual and spiritual. The good student will always try to give and get the maximum, and his life will be rich, happy, and wonderful. Jesus was talking about minimums and maximums in the lesson above. Scanting Tom and Lazybelle are people who will get out of life only as much as they put into it.

A man or woman worth anything to the world will never ask, "Do we have to know that?" or "Must we do that?" More likely it will be, "Can I learn that?" or "Can I do that?"

IT IS A MATTER OF MARGINS. There is a narrow margin of safety between a bare sufficiency and failure. The person who lives abundantly will want his margins of safety as wide as possible. Some people are content to live with only a dollar between them and want. This has spiritual and intellectual implications too.

We need to change our viewpoint. We think that the ideal of life is to do as little work as possible, to draw as high wages as we can, to rest whenever there is a chance. In some parts of the country whole families spend as much time as possible, when the minimum daily work is done, sitting on the front porch, day-dreaming and watching the world go by. And the world does go by, inviting them to contribute to the work and adventure of life, but leaving them there when they do not respond. You have seen old boxcars and worn-out locomotives sitting in the switchyards and on railway sidings. They never move out on the great trunk lines where the rails are bright with wear and heavy loads are carried. Some people are like that.

WE SEE THIS GOSPEL LAW in operation in many of our churches. We have visited small but active congregations where a number of people have cultivated their talents and dedicated them to service. Musicians, teachers, practical workers in handcrafts, and members of the priesthood all work together for the building of a way of life in the little church community that reflects the spirit of the Master and the purposes of the gospel. Everybody gives some good, and so everybody receives something good. None are impoverished by what they give, but all are enriched by what they get. They pour blessings and good will into the common reservoir, and all who need may receive.

On the other hand there are branches where nobody tries; where it is the custom to decline to serve in any office; where few serve and receive little but verbal support, if that much. But why go on with uninspiring examples?

"Give, and it shall be given unto you," said the prophet. We know it is true. We can see it everywhere. Let us not permit this day to close without some new orientation of our souls pointing our steps toward the kingdom of God. L. J. L.

Doctrine and Covenants Institute

All members and friends of the church are invited to attend the Doctrine and Covenants Institute September 28 to October 3 in Independence. The Sunday meetings, beginning at eleven o'clock, September 28, will be held in the Auditorium, with the Stone Church housing remaining activities. All congregations in the Center Stake will dismiss regular Sunday meetings to permit members to attend.

Daily programs begin at 8:30 a. m. and close with the 7:30 p.m. service.

One of the high lights of the institute will be the introduction and explanation of the new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants on Wednesday, October 1.

Visitors should assume responsibility of arranging for their housing and meals.

New Bishop's Agent, Arkansas-Louisiana District

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Brother Harold Dale Edwards, Box 193, Bald Knob, Arkansas, as bishop's agent of the Arkansas-Louisiana District, succeeding Brother R. L. Morrison, whose resignation has been received. Solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of August and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother Edwards at the above address.

We are most appreciative of the good services of Brother Morrison in the years that he has held the office of bishop's agent. We also have appreciated the support given by the Saints to Brother Morrison, and take this opportunity of commending Brother Edwards to them for their consideration and support.

By F. Henry Edwards

Today nine more souls were brought into the church. This has been accomplished without a "missionary series." Three of our local elders have held cottage meetings over a period of several months. Our financial situation is improving, likewise our attendance. The Master is being very kind to us in the outpouring of his Spirit. On September 14 we have another baptism service scheduled for at least four candidates.

Our desire and our purpose is to spread the Gospel to this part of "all the world."

A COPY of the Canada Gazette for July 17, 1952, has been sent us by Elder E. M. Kennedy, and we note therefrom that Monday, October 13, 1952, has been set apart "as a day of general Thanksgiving to Almighty God for the blessings with which the people of Canada have been favored during this year." We are happy to call attention to this important Canadian festival.

THE PRESIDENCY has received a printed folder which was put out by the businessmen and citizens of Wilburton, Oklahoma, addressed to "The 1952 Reunion (Family Camp) of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Robbers' Cave State Park, Wilburton, Oklahoma."

This is a fine piece of public relations on the part of the community to welcome a group in its midst to hold a week of religious services. The bulletin says in part: "We have enjoyed and appreciated the associations of your workers and campers in the past and are anticipating the same pleasant relationships again this year."

The closing paragraph is not only congenial but wholehearted in its welcome: "We simply say that we welcome you again, and do pray that the goodly hopes and desires which you bring to this gathering shall be fully attained and realized. We stand available for any service that we can give as a community, or individually, to assist you in attaining these realizations."

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

THE MANY FRIENDS of Elder Joseph L. Berry and his wife, Florence, will be saddened to learn of their tragic deaths in a head-on highway collision near Waco, Texas, Sunday, August 3.

After a memorial service at San Antonio, under direction of Elder Charles Kornman, the bodies of Brother and Sister Berry were taken to Cleveland, and funeral services were conducted in Kirtland Temple, Friday, August 8, by Elder Clark Bennett. Bishop J. F. Wildermuth and Elder Harry Black were present at the Temple service, representing the General Church.

Brother and Sister Berry had been in San Antonio since the close of World War II and had won a warm place in the hearts of all the Saints. At the time of his tragic death Brother Berry was president of the Southwest Texas District, as well as pastor of the San Antonio Branch.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY is in receipt of an interesting report from Alma Dungan, pastor of the Belleview Branch near Pensacola, Florida:

In June, 1951, the Belleview Branch started working on the task of establishing a branch missionary program, the basic idea being to make every activity of every department pass this test—"Will this activity tend to draw souls to Christ?" Being a small branch with all the usual handicaps, we started slowly. Every part of our branch program is showing improvement at this time. Using only proved methods and procedure we seek for converts to Christ.

To sum up our work thus far—in October, 1951, two persons were baptized; in February, 1952, five were baptized.

Some Ministerial Experiences

By Elbert A. Smith

A sermon given at Liberty Street Church
Independence Missouri

Tape recorded and typed by Arlene Blakeman and Bessie Kannaman

When I came to take up the task of preaching I ran into some difficulties. The first compliment I ever received on a sermon was when a good old sister, who had known me from childhood, said, "Brother Elbert, I did enjoy hearing you try to preach." Her language was very well chosen. About all I did for some time was to try to preach.

First Appointment

The church headquarters in those days was in Lamoni, Iowa. My first appointment to preach was out in the country about four or five miles. When the time came to fill that appointment there was a raging blizzard. Old Brother Walstrom had a team of horses and the front end of a bobsleigh; he took Sister Smith and me to church in it. We battled the drifts until we arrived, and then found no congregation. I was relieved. I did not have to preach. We came back home. There is a little sequel to that. I had a very severe cough and did not know what ailed me. I had the whooping cough, which I should have attended to when I was a boy. Not only that, I gave it to old Brother Walstrom, who also should have had it when he was a boy. I did not know what I had, and he did not know what I had given him. A week later when I met him, he said, "Brother Smith, I don't know what ails me. I cough and I cough and then I whoop!" I knew then what ailed him and what I had done in return for his kindness.

First Sermon

The next appointment was in the spring, at Davis City, about eight miles from Lamoni. It was over a mud road this time, and a part of the road was known as the Devil's Washboard, up and down hill. Brother Fred Blair and I went in a one horse buggy. We got mired down about two miles out of town and walked the rest of the way in to fill the appointment. I covered the six principles of the gospel and church organization in a twenty-five minute sermon. The "Everlasting Gospel" in twenty-five minutes.

The Davis City Saints apparently were growing tired of having young men sent there to experiment on them—shortly afterward they sent this message to the church authorities in Lamoni: "Please don't send us any more practicing priests." I could not blame them too much. But there is something right here I want to say. When young men are ordained and given the task of preaching, they do not, by virtue of their ordination, become full grown men of power. They have to grow, as I did, and they need patience, prayers, and moral support. It will not hurt anyone to listen to a "practicing priest" occasionally.

Backing Young Men

In my early ministry I preached at one of our reunions. The sermon seemed to please some people. Later I went to my tent. Certain older men gathered on the outside of the tent. They did not know I was inside, and I could not help hearing them. One of them said, "We older men have got to watch out or these young men are going to crowd us right off the map." I felt hurt until I heard Brother James Moler say, "I don't care how many young men get ahead of me. I'll get behind them and push with all my might." That lifted me up. I decided that was what I would do when I grew older, and I have had pleasure in doing just that thing.

Other Obstacles

I had greater obstacles to meet and overcome than blizzards and mud. The greatest of these lay within myself. I had certain inhibitions. Up to the time I had been ordained to the office of priest I had consistently refused to take any part before a public audience, even as a boy in a little country school. I will confess that when my name came before the Lamoni Branch to be approved for ordination to the office of priest I sent a letter of acceptance, to avoid standing up to say I would accept. Having accepted, I knew I had a battle on my hands, and I determined to fight it out for myself.

I think of the many ministers and departmental workers in the church who need to develop; and to acquire confidence in themselves and confidence in God. It is not inconsistent with humility to have a well-balanced judgment of our own ability. We are told in the Book of Covenants that all are called "according to the gifts and callings of God unto them." We need to study our gifts, find out what they are, and how to use them. Then we can gain confidence in using them.

Some people think that all a preacher has to do is to stand up, open his mouth, and God does all the rest. God may do that in an emergency. I had heard Brother Fred A. Smith tell how when he was stationed in Salt Lake City at a time when he was a minister and also in the milling business, one night he was called to preach without any time for preparation. As he stood up to preach he saw a scroll begin to unroll at the back of the church with words on it. He read from the scroll as long as it continued to unroll—and that was his sermon.

Ordinarily I think there is a great deal in the text, "We are workers together with God" which has always been very meaningful to me. God expects us to develop ourselves and the powers within us intelligently, wisely, with courage, and with faith, gaining confidence in ourselves and God.

At Cincinnati Landing

I recall one difficult night down in southern Illinois early in my ministry. I tried to preach at a little schoolhouse at Cincinnati Landing. That sermon was a miserable failure. I went out into the dark on the banks of the Mississippi River; I was desperate, homesick, and wanted to quit. Something like that often happened but the good Lord always said, "Go back and try again," until I began to have confidence in myself and him. I acquired liberty and joy in preaching the gospel, which has been a great blessing and privilege to me.

In the matter of developing confidence in God, I think that, too, is a process of growth. Faith is something we can develop if we think affirmatively and consistently. If we choose to think negatively and to nurture our doubts, probably our faith will diminish and disappear.

Even as Little Children Learn

My confidence in God developed as a matter of experience also. Even as little children learn to love and trust their fathers as they minister to them in little things, so I, as a beginner, learned through small things to go to God with confidence in times of greater need in emergencies in the church.

I shall relate some of these incidents that may seem unimportant, but they helped me to develop confidence in God.

Before I was under Conference appointment I spent one summer in the field, "self supporting." That is, my wife worked and supported the family. I was in southern Illinois, and when the time came to return to Lamoni to my regular employment as book binder I went to Burlington to take the train home. I needed just six dollars to pay my passage to Lamoni. I thought I would borrow that money from some of the Saints in Burlington and pay it back later.

I met John R. Evans, one of our fine old missionaries. I told him my plans and he said, "No, Brother Smith, do not tell any man your need. We'll pray over it." We did pray over it. We spent the day visiting among the Saints. My train would be leaving sometime in the evening. We went to the home of Brother and Sister Otto, good German people. He was hard working and industrious. Sister Otto was general manager and did the talking. We had our supper there, but we had not told anybody about my need.

At the close of the meal as we started out the door Sister Otto called me back and going to the cupboard took down a jar, removed a five dollar bill, and handed it to me saying, "The Lord told me you would need this." I thanked her appreciatively and went out the door. I was almost to the gate when she called me back, gave me a one dollar bill, and said, "I think you need this also." Thus I had exactly the amount of money I needed to get me home.

This was a small matter, but it brought to me increased confidence in the oversight of God. If I could trust him in little things like this, I could trust him in greater affairs that would come later, just as a child learns to trust his father.

First Wedding Ceremony

This next story has its semicomical side. My wife and I went to San Bernardino, California, in 1900. The church was poor in those days, and our family allowance was twenty dollars per month. One morning my wife and I pooled our resources and found we had only eleven pennies. It was some time before a check would come from the bishop. I said, "I wish someone would want to get married before noon." I never knew why I said that; no one had ever asked me to solemnize a marriage—and I never knew why I set the hour at noon. There is an old saying, "Prayer is the heart's sincere desire." That must have been a prayer.

About eleven o'clock a man I had never seen before and never saw after that day drove up to the gate, called me out, and asked me if I could get out to Old San Bernardino, about four miles away, at twelve o'clock to marry him to his seniorita. He was a Spaniard. I told him I would. "What do you charge?" he asked. I replied, "There is no charge; people pay a fee if they wish, or nothing." He took a five dollar gold piece from his pocket and asked if that were enough. Without too much show of reluctance, I took it. It was the first and last "pay in advance" wedding I have ever had.

I went down the street a few blocks to where Brother William Gibson lived. He had a horse and buggy and was just driving out the gate. He said, "Get in and I'll have you out to Old San Bernardino in plenty of time." Was that a coincidence that I should have voiced that particular wish that morning and named the hour of noon? I do not think so.

A Prayer Answered

Some years later when I had been appointed pastor in Burlington, Iowa, I was on the road to Kirtland Temple to attend a reunion. On this occasion I was going by train. I went out on the back platform of the train—which was a mistake. That was the day of coal burning engines, and almost immediately I had a cinder in my eye. A cinder is a very little thing sometimes, but not in one's eye. It began to torment me and stayed with me despite all I did to dislodge it. My eye became inflamed, and I saw that while I had a heavy schedule in Kirtland I would not be able to carry it in that condition. I went to the lavatory and tried to wash out the cinder. I offered prayer, and I really expected that cinder to be removed at once, but it was not.

Somewhat disappointed I went back and sat down in my seat. Then a foreign gentleman seated behind me, whom I had not noticed before, leaned over the back of my chair and said, "My friend, I see you are in trouble. I am an optician from the city of Mexico, and if you will permit I shall remove the cinder." I permitted. He opened his little black bag and took out some instruments, deftly rolled back my eyelid and removed the cinder. Then he poured in a little lotion of some sort and I was at ease. Was that a coincidence—an optician all the way from Mexico to help me just after my prayer for help? I think not. Certainly I went about my work in Kirtland with a great assurance that I was about the Lord's business.

The Story of a Baptismal Font

My first real appointment as a pastor was in Burlington, Iowa. I had not been there long when I noticed there was no baptismal font, so I proposed that we install one. The good sisters of the branch, as they usually do, came to my aid and said, "We will pay the expense if you will do the work or see that it is done." I had a volunteer helper, a man not of the church, who was in regular attendance at our meetings. We moved the pulpit, took up a part of the platform, made an excavation, and placed the font right under the platform.

Very late on Saturday evening I tried to complete that job. It was nearly midnight. When I came to the task of putting hinges on the trap doors that were to close over the baptismal font, I could not find my screwdriver. I searched all through the church for it. It was too late to go to a store. I did not want to go to the neighbors and wake them up to ask them for a screwdriver. Then I thought, God is as much interested in this work as I am. I knelt down to pray, and when I opened my eyes there lay the screwdriver immediately before me. I am just telling what happened—I am not trying to explain it. The tool may have been there all the time and my eyes may have been so tired that I did not see it.

I do not think it is irreverent to see a little humor in the situation. Anyway I could not help it. The pulpit was not yet anchored solidly. Next morning we had our dedication of that font and when I stood up to preach, the pulpit would weave back and forth a bit. That morning the choir chose to sing, "How Firm a Foundation, Ye Saints of the Lord."

When I proposed putting the font in, one of those good sisters said, "What do you want a font for? We have not baptized anyone here for a long time." The first man I baptized in that font was the man who helped to dig the pit. He dug his own grave. I baptized twenty people there before the year closed. I had the great pleasure to baptize five members of one family—a widowed mother, two married daughters and their husbands—formerly Utah Mormons. Over the years other in-laws and children and grandchildren followed until more than forty people were baptized as a result of that one conversion. One of the boys grew to manhood and was pastor of that branch for a long time.

I am a great believer in Paul's philosophy that if Paul plants and Apollos waters, God will give the increase. If the missionary will work and preach the gospel and the pastor will take care of the converts, God will give the increase.

Change in Attitude

Now I want to note some changes that I have observed since I began my missionary work, changes in the public attitude toward this church in particular.

When I went to California in 1900 it was not much like the California of today. I had not been there long until a minister of national reputation, the Reverend Iliff, came to lecture in San Bernardino on "Mormonism." This was in the First Methodist church.

I attended the lecture, young and inexperienced, and for an hour or more I listened to the vilest slander of my family and my church. I am not holding it against the Methodists. I will tell you how they atoned for it later. When Mr. Iliff sat down, I stood up and asked the privilege to say a few words. People shouted, "Put him out." One of my friends, Brother Paulson, jumped to his feet and waved aloft a roll of bills saying, "Here is sixty dollars for the treasury of this church if you will let this young man talk five minutes." They say that money talks, but it didn't talk that day. They shouted again, "Put him out." And that is where I got—out!

That sort of thing happened wherever we had a branch of any size. Soon or late someone would come in with that sort of tirade against us. I sat through numbers of those lectures. Pulpits and the press were closed to us—we had no recourse.

I was back in San Bernardino eleven years later when the ministerial alliance had started a campaign to clean up the city, and it certainly needed it. When the alliance and other civic organizations really got down to the task they elected our pastor, George Wixom, mayor of the city, to do the job of cleaning it up, and he did a pretty good job. There had come that change of sentiment in eleven years.

A Promise

This reminds me of a prediction I heard Brother Joseph, President of the Church, make years ago at a General Conference. He delivered a prophetic utterance, in substance saying, "I want to advise the Saints to gather together in groups here and there and quietly live their religion; if they will do this, God will give them grace and favor in the eyes of the people." I have seen this promise fulfilled.

In the South

In a prayer meeting in my little group on West Walnut Street some years ago a veteran minister of the Seventies, T. C. Kelley, bore his testimony. He said that years before he had been down in the deep south trying to hold missionary meetings. One day he was walking along the highway and a band of armed men waylaid him and warned him to leave the country. When he declined to do so, one of them struck him violently across the mouth. Brother Kelley was more than six feet tall, broad in proportion, and powerful. Immediately his impulse was to return the blow. Then he heard an audible voice say, "When they smite thee upon the one cheek, turn the other cheek also."

He dropped his hand and said to those men, "I'll neither fight nor run away; do what you will." They seemed disconcerted; had he resisted they might have killed him. As it was, they let him go.

Not long ago I was down in that same southern region—in Brewton, Alabama—at our reunion. One of the leading clubs of businessmen in Brewton invited D. T. Williams, Mark Siegfried, Floyd McDowell, and me to a banquet. In the course of the banquet their chairman told us to ask for anything that we might need that they could obtain for us, and they would see that we got it. Another one said, "If all our people were like you Reorganized Latter Day Saints we could tear our jails down."

God had given us grace and favor in the eyes of those people because the Saints down there were living their religion. Today that is one of the most fruitful and promising mission fields we have.

In the North

Some years ago I was in the city of London, Ontario. I spoke in the church there three or four days, and every day I had the finest kind of front page publicity in the daily papers. A professor from the University of Ontario western division came to one of our meetings and made a talk to us. He invited me to visit the university, which I did, in company with Frank Gray. He took me through the buildings and finally we came to the library. I said, "Let me see what you have on Mormonism." There were old books, exposés by Smucker and others. That was all they had. Then he said, "If you will make a list of the books and periodicals that you think we should have, we will buy them and install them." We did better than that. I made the list, and the London Saints paid the bill.

Not so many years before that John Shields and other of our ministry in that region were persecuted, mobbed and haled into court. This honor given to me was not for me individually. It was a tribute to the lives of the Saints in London, where the church has one of the finest congregations in the world. Brother Joseph was right.

In the Midwest

Several years ago we received an invitation at the Auditorium from the Methodists in Ottawa, Kansas. They were having a seminar of religion and had heard representatives of Catholic and Jewish and various Protestant churches; finally they got around to Reorganized Latter Day Saints. They had heard our programs on KMBC and sent a request that we provide a speaker to tell them just what we believe. Then men in the Auditorium began to look at me, and as we sometimes do, I said, "Here am I, Lord, send somebody else. Send Brother Edwards; send Floyd McDowell." But they insisted that I go, so I went.

The pastor of the Methodist church met me at the station, took me to his study, and plied me with questions for about an hour and a half. Then he took me to his home to dine with his family, then to the church, which was filled with people from various congregations. He said, "Now you may have thirty-five minutes."

He introduced me, and I began to preach. I hadn't preached five minutes until I knew that I had won that audience—not I, but the Spirit which goes with the preaching of the Old Jerusalem Gospel. When I had preached thirty-five minutes and started to sit down the pastor said, "Go on as long as you wish. This is very interesting!" When I had finished, someone in the back of the audience stood up and said, "I came here very prejudiced. I am still prejudiced. But I came here prejudiced against these people and now I am prejudiced in their favor. I wish everybody in town had heard that sermon." The Methodist people had atoned for all they did to me years before in San Bernardino. What a change!

When I was preaching under that Spirit I did wish that thousands could hear it. I did not know that my prayer in a way would be answered. The young people of the church took up that sermon and had it published in the tract, "Faith of Our Fathers Living Still." Thousands of copies have gone abroad into many fields.

In Old Nauvoo

A few years ago I was in charge of a memorial service at the graveside of Joseph, Hyrum, and Emma Smith in Nauvoo. There was present in that audience the secretary of the Historical Society of Quincy, Illinois, a man of distinction and wealth. Standing by that grave he said, "I consider Joseph and Hyrum and Emma Smith among the finest citizens that Illinois has ever had." That was a wonderful tribute.

The next day my son Lynn was privileged to go to Carthage where his great grandfather had been slain. The local radio was put at his disposal to tell the listeners what it was that Joseph Smith had wanted to tell the people when they would not listen. All that was a tribute to the character of the Saints in the Nauvoo District who had lived their religion and come to command respect—"grace and favor in the eyes of the people."

In Independence

I think that over the years there has come no greater change anywhere than in Independence. The Saints were driven out in 1833, and in 1838 Governor Boggs issued his infamous "extermination order" that all Latter Day Saints should be driven from Missouri or be "exterminated." The order was carried out. Those who did not get out quickly enough were killed. My grandmother escaped across the Mississippi River on the ice in mid-winter with young Joseph and Alexander. My grandfather Joseph escaped from Liberty Jail and made his way across the river to Illinois.

Exactly one hundred years from the time Governor Boggs issued his extermination order, another Governor of Missouri came to Independence and sat down with us at a banquet in the big banquet hall in the Auditorium. That was Governor Lloyd C. Stark. In the course of his speech he said, "I invite you people to help me make Missouri a better place in which to live." That night, on the invitation of President Frederick M. Smith, Governor Stark struck about the first blow struck against the Pendergast Machine. When it came time to rewrite the constitution of the state of Missouri, President Israel A. Smith was one of the delegates to the convention.

In 1945 the President of the United States was pleased to come to our Auditorium with various state and national celebrities and reporters to speak to us. He had just come from the meeting where the United Nations organization took place.

This change in public feeling, which I have noted, opens up to us many doors that formerly were closed. There are more opportunities. The press is open to use now any time we have news that is worth printing. Pulpits are opened to us in many places. The radio is our servant. Television is available. We have many opportunities that we did not have when I began my missionary endeavor.

Press Forward

While I look back tonight I do not believe we should endeavor to live in the past. Some people make that mistake. I believe in Paul's philosophy, "This one thing I do, I press forward." I am led to believe, and with a great deal of conviction, that this church is on the forward move. I am greatly pleased with the increase in missionary endeavor. I believe that it is much better organized than it was when I started out—much better implemented. It is enlisting a host of young men and women—not alone under Conference appointment, but also local men and women in missionary work.

I am reminded that when Apostle McConley was in Europe the military authorities put on his arm a band bearing the letters V.I.P., which meant, "Very important person." It rather tickled Brother McConley's sense of humor, but he was a very important person before anybody pinned that badge on his sleeve. God had trusted him and called him to be an apostle. If you are busy doing something for God it is very important that you should do it. You, too, may become an important person in church work and in God's favor.

A Boy's Language

IT WAS AT OUR ONSET, Massachusetts, Reunion. A day had been set aside for baptisms. Eight-year-old Frankie Jones wanted to be baptized. His father, pleased by Frankie's desire to become a member of the church, took him aside and asked him some questions about the church and its teachings. The little fellow did not know much about doctrine. "Why do you want to be baptized then?" his father asked.

"To get some of that junk they pass around at the Communion service," said Frankie.

His father was troubled. He had failed to teach his son proper respect for the Lord's Supper. He couldn't let the boy be baptized with that attitude.

He came to me with his problem. "That is no problem!" I said. "Did you tell Frankie he couldn't be baptized?"

"No."

"Fine! You let him be baptized."

"Junk" to the adult mind is not the same thing to the mind of a boy. A boy's pocket is filled with what we would call junk, but it isn't junk to him. He is collecting treasures. Sometimes he is a little confused with adult terminology—as in the case of the Communion emblems.

"Let us go and talk with Frankie," I suggested to the father. We did. Frankie was baptized. We learned that he knew the "junk" was not only bread and wine—to him it was what Jesus gave "on that mean old cross when the soldiers killed him." We both felt that in a few years, after careful teaching, Frankie would recognize that cross as "the emblem of suffering and shame," and the junk would become "sacred emblems of his body and blood." —JOHN F. SHEEHY

Travelogs

Michigan

At a time when our departure for Europe was drawing near, I was importuned by Apostle Mesley to meet with the Saints at Shabbona, Michigan, on Sunday, June 1, for a "re-dedication" of the church there, that shrine having been originally dedicated in June, 1902, by my father. I agreed to go and am glad I did, for it was a memorable occasion.

I was met at Port Huron on Saturday morning by Elders Warren Chel-line and Jacques V. Pement, former pastor at Port Huron, and the second president of the Eastern Michigan District. We visited several local places, and then had a fine fish dinner at St. Clair. En route to Sandusky, we stopped for a visit with Brother and Sister Elmer Davis. This brother is physically afflicted, but his faith is strong and he approaches the future unafraid.

After a good rest at the Pement home in Sandusky we left Sunday morning, Brother and Sister Pement and I, and found a goodly company of the faithful at Shabbona some thirty miles northwest. The church has recently been refloored and painted at a cost in excess of the total original investment. There I found many Saints I had met at other places—the Campbells, Muirs, Harders, Weavers, and others.

The pastor, Elder Arthur Meredith, was in charge, and during the day Brother John Thumm gave a ministry of song that was much appreciated. First was a Communion service with Elder Pement in charge; the service ended with prayer and testimony. The Saints were in a mellow mood, full of memories of former days. Bishop Beck and Elders A. J. Harder and J. C. Rogers took part with many others.

At the next service, when I spoke, all those who had been present on June 29, 1902, were given seats on the rostrum. They were David E. Dowker, Mrs. Charles Mansseau, Mrs. James Cook (formerly Agnes Brown), Margaret Dunlap, nee Parrott, Mrs. John Henry, John A. Henry, Myron A. Carr, Charles Ledsworth, Alma Davis, Alma Campbell, Orion Pangman, George Pangman, Thomas Rawson, Mrs. Royal W. Brown, Mrs. Maude Holcombe, nee Phillips, Silas Parker, Mrs. Wm. Cargill, Walter Cargill, Roy Cargill, Mrs. Mamie Cargill Ramsey, Mrs. Jamima (Darris) Walker; and Frank W. Bailey. Most of them now reside at distant points.

My talk was largely reminiscent, as I had a copy of my father's editorial account of that dedication in 1902, which gave me an opportunity to read it and ask questions of the people. Formality disappeared, and all entered into the spirit of the occasion.

A basket dinner was served in the Maccabees Hall with Evangelist Harold Muir giving the prayer of blessing.

In order to have a rest I returned in the afternoon to Sandusky with Sister Pement, who needed to see after her two fine boys. I took occasion to make notes for my evening sermon at Sandusky. Bishop Beck spoke at Shabbona in the afternoon service.

Others who took part were Brother Harold Muir and Trayton Rich.

In the evening the church at Sandusky was crowded, and the Saints seemed satisfied with my effort. I was pleased to meet so many of them. Quite a number had been at Shabbona during the day.

Afterward Bishop Beck and Elder Pement took me to Flint, about seventy miles away, where I caught a midnight train. I stopped at Chicago between trains on Monday to secure my German visa and arrived in Kansas City by 5 p.m. where my son thoughtfully met me, and I was soon home for a few short days before I had to "take off" again.

Ottawa, Canada

My next visit was made while en route to Quebec where I was to sail on the Cunard Ship "Franconia" for England. Apostle Mesley had requested me to stop over at Ottawa on the eighth of June. This required me to leave on the morning of Friday, June 6.

When I arrived at Ottawa late on the seventh I was met by Doctor Wallace Shute, one of the three medical men of this now renowned family. This brother took me to his home where I spent two nights and had a most interesting visit with Doctor and Mrs. Shute and their two fine children.

I spoke at the morning preaching service, though the first meeting was a prayer or worship service with Evangelist Walter Swain of Australia in charge. Brother Swain, with wife and son Don, had driven up from Montreal for the day. The afternoon meeting was devoted to numerous addresses, with Pastor Alex E. Caldwell in charge. He was also in charge at the evening meeting, when I again spoke.

Lunch at noon and between later meetings was served by the women of the branch.

While at Ottawa, Doctor Shute gave me much time and showed me something of Ottawa, which is truly a beautiful city.

As I write I am aboard the "Franconia," three days out, off Newfoundland, in foggy weather—but perhaps I should get a new start and try my hand at narrative after I, along with Bishop Livingston, get into our European visit which in some respects will be the greatest of all my travels.

ISRAEL A. SMITH

Evidences of the Divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon

Part III

By Maurice L. Draper

Translator and Translating

JOSEPH SMITH was unlettered. His education before the translation of the Book of Mormon consisted of a few terms of several months each in a frontier school. However, his mind was keen and alert, and before his untimely death at thirty-eight years of age he had been trained in many fields of higher education, including ancient languages and history. But that he was unlettered in 1827 seems to be unquestioned.

Accompanying the Book of Mormon plates was an instrument called the Urim and Thummim. This is a Hebrew term meaning "light and perfections."¹ Joseph Smith reports that he used this instrument described by Dummelow² as one of the means by which ancient seers or high priests ascertained the divine will, in the translation.

That the translation was a miracle is beyond question. The claim of the book is that its writers used "reformed Egyptian" characters. The translation of Egyptian records by human knowledge in 1827 was scarcely possible. Egyptian literature and archaeological hieroglyphic writing were secrets to modern man until the discovery of the Rosetta stone and its decipherment. The stone was found in 1799 and transported to England in 1802. Study of the stone, which contained texts in Greek hieroglyphic and demotic Egyptian, revealed the key for Egyptian grammar and vocabulary. The French scholar Champollion published his findings on the translation of the stone in the French work, Lettre a M. Dacier, in 1822. But the first Egyptian grammar was not published until 1836. Not only the comparison of Book of Mormon characters with Egyptian forms but the appearance of many Egyptian names and some literary characteristics supports the claim that the book was written in "reformed Egyptian." If this be true, however, the miraculous nature of the translation is definitely established, for the means of reading Egyptian texts was not available even to learned men until the Egyptian grammar appeared in 1836 (six years after the Book of Mormon was off the press). Unlearned men even today cannot claim ready access to the informational sources by which the Egyptian characteristics of the Book of Mormon can be checked.

THE USE of the Urim and Thummim in the translation was an act of faith. The mere possession of the instrument did not guarantee ability to translate. Actually, when irregularities occurred in which the translator and his scribe, Martin Harris, failed to meet their divinely imposed obligations, the gift of translation, the Urim and Thummim, and even the plates were taken from them.³ Furthermore, the only direct description from the prophet himself about the procedure in translating indicates that the Lord is careful to preserve the agency of man even in so important a function as divine revelation.⁴ He does not impose upon the prophet a nature and resources inconsistent with the function of free will and the powers of selection and discrimination in the prophet. The translator is not a machine that serves merely as the physical instrument (like a typewriter) for getting the message into human words. Like the sunlight which is colored in its passage through a stained glass window, the message of revelation is expressed in the characteristic terms of the prophet.

In translation by human intellect alone, the finished product is a blend of the original author's ideas and terminology, the grammatical forms of the original language, the translator's terminology, and the grammatical forms of the language of translation. In such a translation there are several features which so identify it. Terminology peculiar to the original tongue and usually lacking in the translation tongue is one. Another is the carry-over of grammatical structure from the original language, even though such structure is not popular in the translation tongue. Still another is the appearance of imagery unusual in the cultural setting of the translator. In the case of translations of a current work from one modern language to another, many of these characteristics are less noticeable as the skill of the translator is greater. But when languages concerned are separated by centuries in popular usage, when the cultures concerned are over 1,500 years apart, when the skill of the translator consists of only a fair knowledge of English words and no academic training at all in the original tongue concerned, then the differences become marked.

THE PROCESS of Book of Mormon translation seems to have been that Joseph Smith, through faith expressed in his use of the Urim and Thummim, was given the ideas couched in the record. Testing these ideas was a matter of growing skill with him, so that he could dictate evidently without hesitation after Oliver Cowdery came to write for him in April, 1829. Undoubtedly he had learned to recognize easily the evidences of inspirational confirmation which he had explained in prophecy to Oliver Cowdery,⁵ during the heartbreaking efforts at translation during the one and one-half years previously. He was able to "study it out in his mind" and in the attitude of continuous prayerful concern the correct concepts caused his bosom to burn within him, while the incorrect concepts were blotted out in a stupor of thought. Despite the efforts of other persons close to Joseph to explain the translation in some other way, this seems to be the only reference to the procedure by Joseph himself.

This means that the concepts and ideas of the original writers were suggested to the mind of the translator by the miraculous gift of "the interpretation of tongues" in which the Urim and Thummim served as the instrument for the concentration of attentive faith and expectancy. These ideas were then expressed in the English terminology available to the translator. Here again is the peculiar blend of original intent by the authors, the transfer of concept from one language to another, the probable carry-over of grammatical forms inherent in the original tongue, and the terminology of the translator. God performed a miracle without invading the basic quality of human intellect and conscience—the function of his agency.

We should expect, then, to find evidences as already demonstrated of the original terminology in the translation. This is particularly true of proper names and of the general literary structure of the book. We should expect also to find evidences of Joseph's limitations as a writer of English. Furthermore, since it is probable that the only sacred literature known to Joseph Smith at the time of the translation of the Book of Mormon was the King James Version of the Bible, we should not be surprised—indeed should expect—to find that the English style he used is similar to seventeenth century English.

Question Time

Question:

I have recently heard teachings by various of your members that the Negro race consists of those who have a lineage coming from Canaan, the son of Ham. Certain of your elders also state that Negroes are born into dark-skinned bodies because they were "fence-sitters" during the war in heaven, fighting neither with Satan nor with Michael and his angels. This seems inconsistent with my idea of God. What are the Scriptures to support these teachings?

Missouri

W. S.

Answer:

I have never heard any of our ministers preach or teach that Negroes were pacifists or "fence-sitters" in the spirit world when there was war in heaven. I know of no Scriptures to support the theory. It is one of those highly speculative theories—easy to affirm, impossible to prove, difficult to disprove. The theory may appeal to some white people. They must have been good soldiers for the Lord—at one time. But alas, there are no really white people. That is a figure of speech. We are not white even when our blood count is at its worst. We are a variety of colors and shades—pink, cream, saffron, brown, and brick red—and proud of a deep tan. A man, even though he loves righteousness and hates iniquity, if he works under the bright light of the sun from heaven, will find his skin growing darker by the day. The ancestors of the American Negro dwelt for ages under the fierce rays of the equatorial and South African sun.

In any event Jacob gave timely advice to the Nephites when he told them, in substance, to quit worrying about the dark skins of the Lamanites and their follies, and take to thinking about their own shortcomings (Jacob 2: 58-61).

As to the second theory mentioned, I do not recall having personally heard any of our ministers advocate it. I do remember the old argument of some slaveholders in America, who were of a religious turn and had a desire to justify themselves. They said that the Negro is a descendant of Ham, cursed with a black skin, and doomed to perpetual servitude. At great expense of blood and treasure America repudiated that theory and set the Negro free. He is now a citizen without prejudice of something presumed to have happened more than four thousand years ago.

Suppose we analyze the episode involving the curse placed upon Ham—or rather on one of his sons. In the post flood era Noah planted a vineyard. He made wine, became drunk on it and lay in his tent naked. His son Ham saw him in that disgraceful plight and reported to his two brothers—not a serious crime. The two brothers averted their faces, went into the tent, and covered their father. Noah awoke and was angry at Ham. He pronounced a curse, for some obscure reason, not upon Ham, but upon Ham's youngest son, Canaan, who seems to have been innocent in the whole matter. In fact Noah was himself the one to blame. The curse reads as follows:

And Noah awoke from his wine, and knew what his youngest son had done unto him, and he said, Cursed be Canaan, a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren. And he said, Blessed be the Lord God of Shem, and Canaan shall be his servant, and a veil of darkness shall cover him, that he shall be known among all men.—Genesis 9: 29, 30, Inspired Version.

Suppose we analyze this curse. It was upon Canaan. His posterity were to be servants of servants. The old slaveholders assumed that meant slaves. A "veil of darkness" was to cover them. It does not say a black skin—that is inferred. Scores of times prophets in the Bible and Book of Mormon spoke of darkness covering people without referring to the color of their skin. The Psalmist said, "Surely darkness shall cover me." He was not a Negro. Isaiah spoke of a time when "darkness should cover the earth and gross darkness the people."

Be that as it may, it was not God who cursed Canaan, the son of Ham. It was Noah. There seems to be no evidence that God sanctioned the curse. Noah was a preacher of righteousness, but not when he was intoxicated. He was in anger, just coming out of an alcoholic stupor, and it sounds as if he was blaming a son and cursing a grandson when the fault was his own.

In editions of the King James Version of the Bible each chapter is introduced by brief headlines indicating its content. These were written by editors or publishers. In the lines introducing Genesis 9 is this about Noah: "Is drunken and mocked of his son." This is a meddling attempt to justify Noah's anger.

In the chapter there is no intimation that any person mocked Noah. In the Inspired Version that wording is deleted. It reads: "Noah's folly, the results of it." It was Noah's folly, not his son's fault.

If we hold that the curse upon Canaan is valid and that it applies to the American Negro we still have the problem of proving that the American Negro is descended from Canaan. The burden of proof is upon those who advance the theory. So far as I have read, the proof is against the theory.

Bible maps and Bible dictionaries seem to be agreed generally in locating the ancient "Land of Ham" along the north coast of Africa and in Egypt. Ham had four sons: Cush, Mizraim, Phut, and Canaan. The curse was upon Canaan. The other three had no part in it.

Which one or ones migrated south in Africa and became the progenitors of the African tribes? It seems to be agreed that the descendants of Canaan crossed over into the Land of Palestine, Phoenicia, and adjacent areas.

The New Funk and Wagnalls Encyclopedia places the descendants of Canaan, son of Ham, in Palestine, as "the pre-Israelitish inhabitants of Palestine." In other words, they were the Canaanites whom the Hebrews found in that land. Jewish writers seem to agree with this theory.

The Encyclopedia Americana says, "Canaan became the father of the tribes that principally occupied the territory of Phoenicia and Palestine," and adds that the other three tribes of Ham "traveled southward, and from them chiefly sprang the tribes that peopled the African continent."

The International Standard Encyclopedia says that among the descendants of Ham the sons of Cush were the darkest skinned and the sons of Canaan "the least dark."

With all due regard to those who may differ with me in this matter it would seem to me, first, that the curse Noah pronounced on Canaan is open to grave doubt as to its justice and authority. Second, there appears to be, so far as I know, no proof that the American Negro is a descendant of Ham through his son, Canaan, who was cursed. Rather the proof is to the contrary.

There are two things beyond doubt: by the shedding of blood the American Negro was set free politically, and long since the days of Noah a greater than Noah came and lived and died to set men free from present sins and ancient curses. Let us not check up against people of color who accept the gospel any alleged misdemeanors four thousand years old.

Baptism

Gradually the resolution fixed itself in my mind that sometime I would put that promise to a test. I understood that the next step for me to take would be baptism into the church. I do not know how long I might have procrastinated had it not been that a two days' meeting was held in our branch in October. At the close of that meeting I was baptized.

We went down a little woodland path to a secluded spot on the banks of the Little Blue River. The sumacs were red that morning and the maples were yellow and brown, for it was the beginning of a bright, beautiful day in Indian Summer. We stood on the pebbly shore of the river with its clean, clear waters. On the opposite shore great trees stood like quiet sentinels and witnesses of what was being transacted. Another candidate was baptized before me.

As I stood there in the water, the old cry that had been in my heart five years before arose again. I covered my face with my hands and lifted my heart to God in a wordless appeal. My petition could not find words to express itself and I simply looked up to the Invisible One in earnest desire.

For a moment I stood there with bowed head, oblivious to all else but the one great cry in my heart. Then I uncovered my face and the officiating elder took my clasped hands in his left one as he raised his right hand to heaven and said: "Sister Annie, having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen." Then he laid me under the water and raised me again out of it.

"Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you!" Those were words of great import to be spoken by the farmer who stood with me in the water. When and how had he been commissioned of Jesus Christ to baptize?

In his personal ministry in Palestine, Jesus had sent forth a body of men upon whom he had conferred the authority to baptize. They had acted under that authority and had conferred it upon other men who followed them; but in the dark ages of the history of the church that authority had been withdrawn, because God ceases to recognize a church and to work with it when it no longer keeps his commandments.

It was an important feature of the Restoration that authority to act for God should again be conferred upon the church, so a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light and conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the authority to baptize persons in water for the remission of sins. He said there was another priesthood that had power to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit and that this would be conferred upon them later, which promise was fulfilled. Therefore, after the rite of baptism in water had been performed, we returned to Grandfather's house for the ordinance of the laying on of hands for the baptism of the Holy Spirit; for it is written in the law of the church: "On as many as ye shall baptize with water, ye shall lay your hands, and they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Doctrine and Covenants 39: 6.

Jesus spoke of this baptism when he said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Not only must we be baptized in water, but a new life must enter into us from the Spirit of Christ, and that life must continue in us, preparing us for the kingdom of God.

Wondering

When our guests had departed and quiet had settled down again on our little household, I said wonderingly within myself as I went about my work, "Is this all there is in it?" For I did not yet know what I so earnestly desired to realize. I began at once, on the afternoon of the day of my baptism, to study a book of tracts I had bought from the elders. I was trying to help myself to understand the doctrine of the church. And I went often to my small room and offered brief prayers, always asking the Lord to let me know if the church I had identified myself with was his. I had joined it in faith, trusting the promise that I should know the truth, and for this I prayed steadfastly.

I recall that one evening I went on an errand to the house of a neighbor, and out in the darkness of the night I paused a moment and, with my arm upraised to protect my face, I leaned against the corner of the house and presented the appeal that was constantly in my heart—the prayer for light and knowledge from God.

A Memorable Prayer Meeting

Two weeks passed, and the weather grew colder. On the second Sunday of the month, November 9, there was a light fall of snow, and my grandparents did not go out in the cold to attend the evening service at the church. Only five persons were there that night, and the meeting was changed to a prayer and testimony meeting. I listened eagerly to the evidence offered to the truthfulness of the latter-day work.

It seemed to me I had never been in so satisfying a meeting, and when I had run home through the cold, frosty night I sat on the edge of Grandmother's bed and told her all about it, saying, "O, Grandmother, it was the best meeting I ever was in." Then I went to my little cold room and retired.

Baptism of the Spirit

I was just falling asleep when I was awakened by a power that permeated my whole being until it seemed that every particle of my body felt its searching penetration. It increased in intensity until it seemed that my physical body could receive no more, and I heard myself sigh aloud. At the same time a voice spoke in my heart the familiar words, "His pardoning voice I hear."

Then the power that had filled me began to decrease until I was again in my normal condition, but I was so wide awake that I lay for three hours, thinking over what had occurred and wishing I could go at once and tell my grandparents of it. I knew what had happened to me. I knew that the promise of Jesus had been fulfilled and that now I could say the gospel had come to me not in word only but in power and demonstration of the Spirit. My earnest prayers had been answered, and I knew I had entered the way of truth.

I knew also that there rested on me a new responsibility, and I arose from my bed and knelt before God saying, "Father, you have heard my prayers and have given me to know the gospel is true. Now help me to be always faithful to what I know." After three hours of wakefulness I finally slept. When I told of my experience the next morning as we sat at the breakfast table, my dear old grandfather said gently, "Yes, yes, child, I know what that is. I have felt it more than once, and more than ten times."

Winter in Blue Rapids

My time could not all be given to reading and study. As the cold of winter increased, I had to spend considerable time keeping the little home comfortable. We went into winter quarters in the living room and used the small kitchen we vacated to store wood for our one stove. The extreme frugality we practiced was a revelation to me, and I ought to have written home about it, but I allowed Grandfather and Grandmother to order the affairs of their household as they always had done.

We did not suffer that winter, but my little bedroom became so unbearably cold that I went into the living room to sleep on the day bed. We three lived all winter in that one room, but we were comfortable. We were well, warm, and had plenty to eat. Perhaps my greatest trial was making the morning fires. Someone had delivered to Grandfather wood that was not well seasoned, and it did not burn readily. I spent at least an hour every morning getting the fire started.

The Vision of the Roses

I had not been in the church long when I began to hear dissatisfaction expressed over some who, though enrolled as members, never appeared at services or manifested interest in the work. Some advocated drastic measures, and the steps to be taken were discussed. I felt concerned over what my attitude should be if action in the matter was taken. I felt that I should not be neutral, but the course I should take was not clear to me.

One night as I slept there appeared before me as in a dream a bouquet of beautiful white roses, which I understood was to be carried to the church and placed on the pulpit. As I looked at them, admiring their freshness and purity, I noticed on the right hand edge of the bouquet a small number of black roses. They were not withered or drooping, but were black in color. They stood up as fresh and crisp as the white ones.

Thinking they did not belong with the white roses, I put forth my hand to remove them, when a voice at my left shoulder arrested me: "Let them alone; the white roses will shine in the daytime, and the black ones will shine in the night." I withdrew my hand, though it was not at all clear to me how black roses could shine at night.

Later one of the apparently indifferent members of the branch made a trip into western Kansas. When he came back a young woman, the wife of one of his nephews, came with him to visit relatives. One day she was brought to call at our home, and in the conversation that ensued Grandmother asked the young woman if she belonged to the church. She replied, "No; I never even heard of it until Uncle S--- came out and told us of it."

Instantly the vision of the roses flashed across my mind, and when the callers had gone I said to Grandmother, "I saw one of the black roses shining in the night." Uncle S---, apparently indifferent to the church at home, let his feeble light shine out in the darkness of the benighted world.

John Cairns, Missionary

While I was with my grandparents they received a very comforting message that concerned John Cairns, the only living brother of my grandmother, who had held himself aloof from the church from the time of the Nauvoo debacle. I have already mentioned that he was baptized, confirmed, and ordained an elder in one day in Canada by James A. Blakeslee. That was in 1834 when he was about twenty-five years old and the church was in the fourth year of its organization. A sturdy young Scotsman, John entered the missionary field in Canada laboring in the territory between Kingston and the Bay of Quinte. One he baptized was Jehiel Savage, a successful Methodist minister, who readily received the restored gospel and entered actively into the work of the church.

In the spring of 1842 John Cairns moved with his family to Nauvoo and was there received into the high priests' quorum. When a Presbyterian minister of Quincy, Illinois, challenged Joseph to meet him in debate Joseph replied that he would send some of his boys; Josiah Ells and John Cairns were the ones he selected to go. Josiah defended the church in the debate, and John followed as the speaker in a grove near by. On that occasion Governor Ford of Illinois sat on the platform with the young preacher and commended his effort.

In the summer of that year Reuben Hedlock and John Cairns sailed from New York to Liverpool on a mission to the British Isles. There John was appointed to visit the principal cities of England and Scotland. He spent six months in London, traveled in the north of Ireland, and held two debates with a socialist in Dundee, Scotland. The result of his labors was a revival of interest in the work and many additions to the membership of the church.

He was in Kilmarnock, Scotland, when word came of the tragic death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. He hastened at once to his native city, Glasgow, where a hall had been draped to express the bereavement of the church. There he delivered a memorial sermon to an assembly of about one thousand persons. He continued in his mission field until March, 1845, when he returned to America with a company of Saints. He had been absent about three years and he found conditions much changed in the church at Nauvoo.

Trying Times

There must have been "very disturbed" conditions, as some have written who went through those trying times. Urged to go by those without and counseled to go by designing men within, many set out on a memorable trek across the great western plains, of which heart-rending things have been written. A considerable number went but not the whole church. Scattered abroad were many who never had been in Nauvoo; some who had started out in the trek to the distant west returned and united with the church when it was reorganized. The widow and children of Joseph Smith retained their home in Nauvoo, and there his sons grew to honorable and respected manhood until the time came when they were called to enter actively into the gathering of the scattered flock.

Further Disappointment

Upon his return from Europe in 1845 John Cairns took in the situation in Nauvoo and withdrew from the church. In later years he stated his reasons in a letter: "Becoming satisfied that there had been a vast departure from the faith, and looking on the self-styled authorities as shepherds I could not trust, I quietly removed with my family to St. Louis." Knowing him as I did, I am not so sure he was quiet when he returned from his foreign mission and found the church in the turmoil of those troubled years.

Still a young man he founded a lucrative business and gained a creditable standing in the city, serving for a number of years as a member of the city council and for a time on the board of health. Ever eager in quest of knowledge he availed himself of his opportunities to store his mind with valuable information. I have been told that missionaries of the church, passing through the city found hospitality in his home and were helped on their way financially, but he could not be induced to enter again into the cause in which he had found such deep disappointment.

Perhaps his prosperity and the enjoyment of his civic activities had something to do with his attitude toward the church, but the time came when reverses swept from him all material gain. The year before I went to Kansas he visited in our home, and I look back with appreciation on the benefit I derived from association with him. I never heard him mention his former connection with the church, but every Monday he bought a copy of the Chicago Tribune from the newsboy on the westbound train, and that evening, when others had retired, I read to Mother and him the sermons of prominent pastors of Chicago congregations. This was my first real introduction to the consideration of religious matters.

Four Candidates Baptized at Reunion

NORTHERN PLAINS DISTRICT.—The district reunion was held June 18-22, under the direction of Elders Houston Hobart, Luther Troyer, F. L. Ballantyne, and Apostle Paul M. Hanson. A new feature of the reunion program was the forum discussion group held two afternoons. Sister Lester Anderson conducted the women's classes. The women's department of the Fairview Branch was in charge of meals. Elder Hobart taught the young people's class until the end of the week when, accompanied by six young people, he left for the youth camp at Elliston, Montana. Brother O. R. Wilcox completed the class instruction.

Sister Violet Ballantyne was superintendent of the children's department, assisted by Lena Brown, Donna Hillman, Jo-Allie Holt, Dorothy Eagan, F. L. Ballantyne, Sister Frank Redding, Mrs. Pearl Caudel, and Chester Hillman.

Joan and Arthur Gutschmidt, Neva Flug, and Vandalia Nelson, all of Williston, North Dakota, were baptized. Elders Wilcox and Ballantyne officiated. At the Sunday morning service several ordinances were performed. Shela Breeze was blessed by her grandfather, Elder W. C. Redfield and Elder W. R. Hillman. Priests O. R. Wilcox and Arnold Jorgensen were ordained to the office of elder. The four candidates for baptism were confirmed.

Representatives of the six groups that make up the district as well as isolated members were present. The record attendance was approximately one hundred.—Reported by DONNA HILLMAN

District Conference Held

TABOR, IOWA.—A special Children's Day service was held June 8 at which six candidates were baptized by Elder Morton Birkby. The candidates were Mrs. Geraldine Foster, her two children Larry and Jacquelyn, Leta Mae Reed, Gary Vanatta, and David Dyke. The candidates were confirmed by Elders Charles Fry, Charles Forney, and Morton Birkby. Following a basket dinner, a fellowship service was held with the theme "Experiences With the Holy Spirit."

The Southwest Iowa District conference convened at Tabor on June 22. Charles Putman, Francis Hanson, and Amos Graybill of the district presidency were in charge.

The young people's activities for June included a wiener roast and fellowship service as well as a hayride.

Sherry Jessen and Wendell Dunsdon attended the senior youth camp June 30-July 7. Margaret Utterback, Leta Mae Reed, Charlene Powers, and Mona Maxwell attended the junior youth camp. Charlene and Mona are nonmember friends.—Reported by JAMES BIRKBY

Good Fellowship Day Observed

BOONE, IOWA.—The young people of the Des Moines District met at the church at Boone on June 1 to participate in a Good Fellowship Day. The opening service offered time for meditation as music was furnished by violinists Leta Joy Winans and Nels Gustafson and pianist Alice Winans. The district music director, Shirley Huhn, led the congregation in group singing prior to the Communion service. The young men who directed the Communion service were Priest David Shippy, Ames, Iowa, college student; Wade

Hankins, young people's leader, Oskaloosa, Iowa; Steve Robinson, Zion's League president, Des Moines, Iowa; Marion Pease, young people's leader, Des Moines; William C. Haden, assistant youth leader, Des Moines; A. Paul Winans, Des Moines District youth leader; Howard Braby, Graceland College student; Priest Eugene Crandell, Boone. The theme for the day was "Hear his voice and open the door today." A basket dinner was held, and Priest Jack Ross of Ames led the group in games. Sister Shirley Huhn conducted the closing song service, and Missionary William Haden gave the benediction.—Reported by A. PAUL WINANS

Attends National Girls Camp

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Mrs. Henry Piedt, wife of Pastor Henry Piedt, 3248 Rutledge Street, Victoria, British Columbia, was in Ottawa where she attended the Girl Guide National Camp as field commandant, responsible for a unit of girls.

As district commissioner and area camp advisor for the southern portion of Vancouver Island, Mrs. Piedt came to the national camp as assistant commandant of a contingent of 150 girls and leaders from British Columbia. Over 1,200 girl guides and leaders attended the national camp which was encamped a few miles outside Ottawa for a ten-day period in late July.—Reported by F. CARL MESLE

Officers Elected at Business Meeting

FIRST BRANCH, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—As a result of missionary work by Seventy Wayne Smith during the month of May, three adults were baptized. They were Mrs. Florence Heide, Mr. Oscar Lucas, and Mr. David Vosecky. On June 8, Frances Marcelino, Linda Lindsey, and David Vosecky were baptized by Elder Louis Hancock. Claudia Lee Chandler, Laura Lee Callaci, Mrs. Florence Heide, and Mr. Oscar Lucas were baptized by Elder Elbert W. Chandler. The confirmation service followed the baptisms.

Speakers in the past month have been Elders E. W. Chandler, Louis P. Hancock, J. C. Stuart, Paul Whitman, Seventy G. Wayne

Smith, Elders Paul Goodrich, H. T. McCaig, Sr., and J. W. Pettersson. On June 29 Elder Stuart preached his farewell sermon at First Branch.

Music has been provided each Sunday before the sermon. Solos have been given by Mrs. Louis P. Hancock, Delores Jones, Donald Mee, Mrs. Warren Hinkle, and Priest Wallace Fike; a duet by Mrs. Bernice Delmont and Mrs. Helene Hancock; and a trio by Miss Gladys Forbes, Mrs. Elmer Gelhorn, and Mrs. Ralph Delmont. The women's choir and the mixed choir have also sung special numbers.

During the service on May 18 Barbara Lois, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reed, was blessed by Elders Chandler and L. P. Hancock. The Communion service on June 1 was presided over by Elder Chandler. Alex Donald, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Callaci, was blessed by Elders Pettersson and Chandler. At the morning service of June 29 Stephen Michael, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Platt, was blessed by Elders J. C. Stuart and Elbert W. Chandler. Mrs. Platt is the former June Green.

Leonard Wayman visited the branch June 29. He is the architect working on plans for the new church. The women of the branch held a building fund dinner April 18 at the home of Herbert Jones. Other projects for the building fund are in progress.

On June 20 a father and son banquet was held at the home of Herbert Jones.

The annual business meeting on July 20 was presided over by Elders Chandler, Hancock, and Lyle Woodstock. The following officers were elected: pastor, Elbert W. Chandler; counselors, H. T. McCaig, Sr., and Louis Hancock; director of religious education, Louis Hancock; children's supervisor, Alice Skinner; leader of women, Emerine Gundersen; adult supervisor and business administrator, Robert Brown; music director, Helene Hancock; young people's leader, Paul Goodrich; secretary, Ruth Skinner; auditors, Paul Studtman and John Pettersson; branch solicitor, Hulda Edstrom; Herald correspondent, Velva E. Castins; book steward, Bob Pawley; building committee, Herbert Jones, chairman, Robert Brown, Edward Kohn, Louis Hancock, Athena Striblen, Emerine Gunderson, E. W. Chandler, and Lyle Woodstock; and planning committee, E. W. Chandler, Lyle Woodstock, Emerine Gunderson, H. T. McCaig, Sr., and J. W. Pettersson.

At the close of the business meeting Elder Lyle Woodstock gave a talk and introduced his wife and his family to the congregation. The Saints welcomed the Woodstock family. Elder Paul Goodrich, his wife, and family have also been welcomed to the branch.

Officers for the North Side Circle are president, Mrs. Harry Striblen; vice-president, Mrs. Arthur Swanson; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Rose Oakes; teachers, Mrs. J. Louis Gauthier and Elder Woodstock. Officers for the Ssenippah Guild are Pauline Jones, president; Maxine Schulz and Olive Battersby, vice-presidents; and Bernice Delmont, secretary. The women's leader for the First Church Women's Club is Mrs. Emerine Gunderson. Other officers are Mrs. Rose Oakes, associate leader; Marcella Brown, secretary and treasurer; and Judith McCaig Schmidt, program chairman. Sister Eleanor Chandler was elected district women's leader. She will succeed Sister Lydia Wight who will retire on October 1.—Reported by VELVA E. CASTINS

Blue Water Reunion Held

LEXINGTON, MICHIGAN.—The Blue Water Reunion convened July 26 to August 3. Eight hundred sixty-nine people registered. The reunion opened with a sermon by President F. Henry Edwards who spoke on the theme "Spiritual Growth."

Preaching and teaching personnel from the General Church were as follows: W. Blair McClain, R. Melvin Russell, L. W. Updike, F. E. Butterworth, Warren Chelline, L. O. Brockway, R. B. Flanders, and Roy Cheville. Pauline Arnsen was teacher of the women's classes. Elder Shankland Arnsen of Independence helped in various capacities.

On the first Sunday afternoon a program was presented by a group of college students who told of their plans to be of service to the church through their specialized training. Their theme was "Today's Frontiers."

The reunion has grown in such proportions that last year separate fellowship services were arranged for young people and adults. This year the plan was continued. The junior League also had its own fellowship service. On Wednesday the senior Leaguers met with the adults, and on Thursday the junior Leaguers did so, thus contributing to the spirit of unity. Separate campfires were held for the junior and senior Zion's Leagues, and an evensong was held in the log tabernacle for the adults. The last evening one evensong was held for all.

A large staff of workers was on hand to assist in the work of teaching the children from nursery age on up. There was classwork, handcraft and music instruction from 8:30 to 11:50 each morning. An achievement program was given by the children on Saturday night. Children's group games were conducted each evening from 6:30 to 7:30 with a children's hour following.

Each evening the twilight class was taught by Dr. Cheville with the exception of Monday, when Brother Edwards taught. The evening preaching was conducted by Seventy F. E. Butterworth who used as his theme "The Testimony of Polynesia." The sermons were illustrated with movies and slides.

Morning devotions were presented by Wayne Updike, and the evening devotions by Blair McClain. The music was directed by R. L. Gault. One evening the choir sang "Remember Now Thy Creator," and at the close of the service a recording was heard of the same number sung by the Tahitian Saints.

The Blue Water Olympics were held on Saturday afternoon. Track and field events took up the whole afternoon. Traditionally a queen is selected by the young people, and this year two were selected, the Misses Phoebe and Jeanne Mervin, of Tahiti, visitors at the reunion.

The health of the campers was under the supervision of Elizabeth Jahn, R.N.

Eleven were baptized on the last day of the reunion in Lake Huron.—Reported by R. MELVIN RUSSELL

Zion's League Has Social

SALEM, OREGON.—On July 29 the Salem and Hopewell Zion's Leagues met at the farm home of Edward and Patricia Guy. There were about thirty young people present, including Missionary and Sister Don Landon; Youth Leader Kenneth Slover; League President Pearl King; Doris Hayworth, vice-president; Madeline Hayworth, treasurer; Dean Coburn, news reporter.—Reported by DEAN COBURN

Elder Dan Belcher Elected Pastor

BRENTWOOD, MISSOURI.—Elder Edwin C. Kent resigned as pastor of the Brentwood Branch because of ill health. Elder Dan Belcher was elected pastor at a branch business meeting June 11, which was under the direction of District President Alma C. Andrews. The branch presented Brother Kent with a leather brief case in appreciation of his services. Elder David Cooke acted as spokesman for the congregation. Brother Cooke was the pastor prior to Brother Kent.

A new women's leader was elected at a business meeting held June 22. She is Sister Altha Dayton. Sister Eutha Wise was the former leader.—Reported by MARGE KENT

Smoking and Lung Cancer

Letters

PART OF THE MEDICAL FRATERNITY has become somewhat alarmed at the upward trend in the prevalence of lung cancer. Millions of dollars are being spent in various studies of the cause and cure of cancer. However, while several agents are under suspicion as the contributing factors, it is generally agreed that the actual cause or causes are not definitely known.

Studies being made in recent months in California point to the fact that in most cases where men and women have been victimized by lung cancer, there is a history of smoking tobacco. An article in the Sacramento (California) Bee of February 27, 1952, puts the accusing finger on the smoking habit. We quote from this source:

Heavy smokers, beware—you may be inviting cancer of the lung.

This warning was delivered in plain terms last night before a Town Hall audience by Dr. Junius B. Harris, veteran Sacramento physician and surgeon, a past president of the California Medical Association and a past vice-president of the American Medical Association.

ALARMING INCREASE

Speaking on recent advances in four fields of medicine—polio, cancer, cortisone, and the antibiotic drugs—Dr. Harris stated cancer of the lung is rising at an alarming rate.

"As yet we haven't enough evidence to show conclusively that the chemicals in the tar from cigarette smoke will cause cancer of the lung," he said, "but the mass of evidence against cigarettes is piling up daily."

In 1900, he pointed out, the disease was seventh among cancer types in the number of deaths caused. Today it is first.

"The curve of this increase parallels the curve of increased sales of cigarettes," he said. "Those sales began to boom around the time of World War I. Last year 1,000,000,000 cigarettes were sold in this country—at the rate of six per day for every man, woman, and child in the United States."

AFFECTS AIR PASSAGE

And of the two types of lung cancer, it is the type which occurs in the air passages of the lungs—where smoke goes—which has risen from seventh to first on the list of killing cancers. The other type, which affects the glands, has not increased.

Charles F. Grabske, Church Physician, said he had heard this problem discussed by many of the best medical authorities in the field. They seem to be unanimous in the belief that the increase in the incidence of lung cancer parallels the increase in smoking. He took the trouble to phone for the latest statistics available to the Medical Association. While these figures differ a little with those quoted by Doctor Harris, they do support his position. According to his sources, Mc-Millen and Crane of Philadelphia, "The incidence of broncho-genic carcinoma (lung cancer) is second to that of carcinoma of the stomach in men, and fifth among cancer deaths among women. Only 10 per cent of all cancer deaths are due to broncho-genic carcinoma." Doctor Dorn says, "There has been a 22 per cent increase of lung cancer of the air passages among women and a 78 per cent increase among men in the last ten years."

The case against tobacco using among Reorganized Latter Day Saints does not rest on a fear psychology. Sections 86 and 119 of the Doctrine and Covenants are clear and emphatic. Unfortunately, however, men and women do not start the habit on a rational basis but rather from an emotional and social motivation. After the habit becomes deeply ingrained in one's nervous system, it is too much to hope that reading an article will be sufficient to cause one to desire to throw off the habit, even though his health and relationship to God may be at stake. Our feeling is, however, that an occasional article like this in the Herald might help some parent in advising his children, or it might help some adolescent or adult who might be toying with the idea that "a million users cannot be wrong." If only one person can be spared the remorse of estrangement from God because of violating his explicit counsel, or the ravages of lung cancer, this article will have been quite worth while.

Grateful for the Gospel

I was originally a member of the Church of England, but for years I had put off my confirmation as I had doubts about the doctrine of that church. Then I met a young Mormon girl who told me of her church, but still I doubted. When I moved to Detroit I contacted the council and was directed to the Reorganized Church. I talked with the pastor and decided to attend services there for a while. During this time I had the good fortune of hearing Evangelist Ray Whiting. I asked God if I should join this church, for I still had doubts. Then one day a voice seemed to say, "This is my church, and I am well pleased with it." That was all of the message, but it was sufficient for me. The most memorable day of my life was the first Sunday in June when I was baptized.

I have now found my "pillar of strength" and the peace of mind for which I had so long searched.

Wants To Help

I have received a letter from Sister Jessie Bailey of Sioux Falls, commenting on my letter that appeared in the Herald. I know she is praying for me in my endeavor to help little children find their way to God.

I shall be glad to hear from any who are lonely and wish to correspond with me. I do want to be a friend to all the poor and friendless, sharing the love that God has given me. Of myself I can do nothing, but with his Spirit guiding I hope to help many.

From a Ten-year-old Polio Victim

I am Karen Kay Wakeman, and I am ten years old. I had polio two years ago, and I feel that I need the prayers of the Saints because I can't use my right hand and arm. I have been in the hospital for therapy, and I have been administered to and told that someday I would be all right. I go to church every Sunday; my father is pastor. I go to reunion every year and love to be with the Saints. I wish you would pray for me that I might be blessed with more faith.

Report From Japan

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following letter telling of the activities of church members in Japan should be of interest to many Herald readers having friends or relatives stationed there.)

In May Major Millard Caldwell and W. O. Leonard, passed through Camp Drake on their way to Korea. It was possible for them to have dinner at our home. Elder Crum also was present.

Robert Wehling was in Tokyo on rest and rehabilitation. He and Elder Crum spent the evening in our home. Later he and his buddy had dinner in our home. While on his rest and rehabilitation he also visited the Tice family in Yokohama.

Alvin Stevens has finished his schooling on Eta Jima and will soon be on his way to the States. Recently he stayed overnight in our home while on a three-day pass.

Mrs. Melvin Crum, and daughter, Carol, arrived in Tokyo on June 25 to be with Elder Crum who is working for the government here. He is now living in Honomiya Apartment 303.

Recently we drove out to the camp where Glen Swain was stationed, but we were told that he had gone back to the States.

Gaynor Fox wrote to Elder Crum and informed him that he had finished his training at Johnson Air Base and had been sent back to Niigata.

Robert Anderson wrote to Elder Crum that he was on his way back to the States from Korea.

Elder Crum had a letter from Harold Burr who is now stationed in Osaka in the post office. He had been a patient at the Osaka General Hospital and while there met a nurse by the name of Fitch, who is a member of the church.

John Butterworth passed through Camp Drake on his way to be assigned to the 141st General Hospital.

In July Fred Weddle, who has been flying B-26's in Korea, was here on rest and rehabilitation and spent his time with us. He also met the Crum family while here. In the latter part of July he called me on the phone after flying here from Korea on his way to the States after completing the required number of flying missions.

Robert Baker is stationed at Yokusuka, where he plays in the Navy band.

On a recent Sunday Carl, Melva, and Carol Crum, Thelma Perry, Alvin Stevens, and Ada Sherman met in our home for a picnic luncheon.

If anyone having relatives here or coming over in the near future will tell them to contact Elder Crum at his home (phone 33-5581) or us at Camp Drake (2044) we will be most happy to meet them and try to make their time here as pleasant as possible.

Interesting Personalities

A Steward in His Vocation

The elders of the church were told in 1887, "let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."

The stewardship of a vocation has been evidenced in the life of High Priest Frank Mussell, president of the Wisconsin District. Recently Brother Mussell was appointed vice-president and general sales manager of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Prior to this, he served as manager of the eastern territory of the company until he accepted appointment as director of the agriculture, machinery, and implement section of the National Production Authority, United States Department of Commerce.

He started to work with the Allis-Chalmers Company in 1936 at the company's Des Moines branch of the tractor division. In 1937 he became agricultural sales manager there and in 1941 was named manager of the Mason City, Iowa, branch. He was appointed eastern territory manager in 1942.

Brother Mussell has found time to give much in service to the church. When he lived in Independence, he served as pastor of the Englewood congregation at one time, and of Spring Branch at another. He was the elder for Group 1 at the Stone Church also. Wherever his occupation has taken him, he has found the church and given of himself. This was true when he lived in Des Moines as it is now in Milwaukee.

Brother Mussell has two married daughters who live in Independence: Mrs. Earl Bandlow and Mrs. Blair Wildermuth. His sister is Mrs. John Blackmore, wife of the General Church Historian.

Women In Industry

PART II

TODAY THERE ARE OVER two million women with children under the age of ten who are working in factories, offices, and stores. From my experience and familiarity with the subject, I believe that the decision to work must be made by each mother thoughtfully and prayerfully in the light of her experience and her strength. No decision that a mother ever makes is more important or will react more vitally in the life of the family and in the community.

If you are a mother, take your time and be unselfish in your thoughts. Do not think of how pleasant it will be for you to be away from the routine of home. Wherever you work there will be routine. Do not spend too much time thinking how nice it will be to be dressed up all of the time or to have your hair and nails fixed at the beauty shop. Perhaps your family will love you in your simple dress with your work-worn hands at home, clothed in happiness.

When I returned to our law office, our sons were in high school. My time was my own while they were in school. It was an ideal situation, but one day our older son said, "I don't like to have you at work." "Why, son," I replied, "I am closer to you than I was when I stayed at home. Now I am as close as the telephone. Then I was busy with church, school, and social activities until you returned home from school. I am closer to you now than I was then." "Yes, Mother," he said, "but I love to close my eyes and see you at home."

By Jo Zelma Taylor

(Mrs. Arthur B. Taylor)

IT WOULD BE SIMPLER if no mother with small children would seek employment, but often there is no choice. The social agencies have recognized this and have rephrased the question "Shall mothers work?" to "Which mothers shall work?" So to all women this must be the first consideration: "Is it necessary for me to work?" Let there be no false conception of money earned, not alone what it will buy in dollars and cents, but what it will cost in loss of family unity, in lack of the family spiritual development, and a home built to the honor of God and man.

Will there be an actual money gain? When this is figured it may be wiser for you to remain in the home and find some other way to supplement the income. First deduct your withholding tax. Then deduct the social security that is taken from your salary. There is transportation which must be paid with regularity, and more expensive lunches for yourself and family. There will be an over-all higher cost of food that you will serve your family, for quickly prepared meals require more expensive food. There will be laundry and cleaning for which heretofore you have not had to put out actual cash. There will be additional clothing, for you will not have time to remake and repair. There will be luxury items for your beauty care. There will be that most expensive necessity of all, the baby sitter. I do not like that term, "baby sitter." You will require a mother substitute. When these are all added up as necessary expenses to be deducted from your gross income, what is your net income? Will you be working for crumbs when you had hoped for cake with frosting?

IF THE ANSWER is still that you want or that you have to work for the salary which remains, then the next step is to take it up with your family. This venture will be successful only if the responsibility is shared willingly. Their co-operation may depend upon the reason you have to earn the money. It may be their way of being a part of solving a financial need; if so it will not be the wife and mother who is earning a salary—it will be an entire family who, by releasing mother from certain of her duties and responsibilities, give her time and energy to produce the needed cash. Ask yourself, "Why do I need to work?" Is it to send the children to school? Is it to pay the installment on the house, car, or television set? Is it to buy luxuries or necessities? Only you know why you work, but be very sure that you need to work and that you are not working just to keep up with the Joneses.

Perhaps you are better emotionally adjusted if you can organize your life to include a challenging job. Ask yourself if your children will be happier because you work. If you are an irritable mother when you stay at home with them all day, they may be glad to have a happy substitute mother during such hours as you are gone. Perhaps they will gain security from a more patient caretaker. Simply having children doesn't make mothers. As deeply as we feel that woman's primary duty is motherhood, all are not adapted to that demanding role. It is the one most important job in this world for which we do not think it is necessary to have much training. When the wee child is placed in the young mother's arms we suddenly feel that a halo is raised around her head and she is capable of meeting all problems.

PLACE FIRST THINGS FIRST. Place your child's need first. It may be that you cannot stay at home and take care of the child, but it does mean that you must take care of the child—and I mean YOU, for you, the mother, are the only one to see that your child is cared for. Now this adequate care means a woman who gives love, training, and security while you are away; not just a place to park the kids until you return at some indefinite time. There must be a loving dependable mother substitute. It should be done by individuals. It may need to be done by community and church-sponsored nurseries, but however it is done, there must be an extension of home life.

You never drop the responsibility of motherhood; you simply add more responsibility. Have you the health, the stamina to carry on this double job? Will the children be deprived of childhood security? Children have such pride in their homes, their own sand piles, their mother's cookies, their father's strength, their own pets, their parents' attendance at school affairs. Will they feel unloved, unwanted? Will they lose the desire to report home after school? Will you lose touch with their companions? Will your husband feel less important because he is not the sole breadwinner? Will the community be benefited or harmed by the resulting home conditions by reasons of your absence and your lack of parental care? Will there result a broken home, a delinquent child? Will church attendance be slackened and a family lost in Zion?

YOU HAVE BEEN COMMISSIONED by those who stayed at home to return to them with specific messages, not generalities. When they ask you what was said about "Women in Industry," I want you to say that the speaker placed emphasis on putting first things first.

Here are some questions to be answered by the one who asks, "Shall I work?" Is it necessary? Why do I want to work? Why do I need to work? What will I take from my family? What will I add to the happiness and well being of my family? Who will take my place? Will I be satisfied, healthy, and happy away from my family? Will my husband be secure? Will my children be assured of my love? Will they be trained to accept their responsibilities in the community and in the church? Will they become good wives and good husbands? Will I maintain regular church attendance and interest? Will the community be assured of stable homes and good citizens, not a broken home and delinquent children? Will divorce result? Will my child break the law through lack of my guidance and knowledge of his companions?

The answer to these questions must be met squarely, unselfishly, prayerfully. Your first duty is in the home. Have you enough left over for the second job? Can you be a mother and then a breadwinner?

The future destiny of the child is the work of the mother—the future destiny of civilization is the child of today. We are to blame if these children, for lack of loving care, are physically unkept, morally untrained, and spiritually starved. The home and church must meet this problem by early Christian training.

To the childless women of this church I give a challenge. Would you be a loving, dependable mother substitute for children who need the physical and spiritual care and love which you can give? If you feel that you could answer this in the affirmative, then help the mother in industry to fulfill her contract to keep the children in a home built for the honor and glory of God.

In Psalm 113:9 we read: "He maketh the barren women to keep house, and to be a joyful mother of children. Praise ye the Lord."

Aluminum Cooking Utensils

Ever since Mildred Nelson Smith's article, "Designs Against Aluminum," appeared in the Herald January 21, 1952, we have had occasional protests against the validity of her claims that aluminum utensils were harmless for cooking. We notice that the current issue (July 23, 1952) of Better Business Bureau Bulletin of Kansas City, Missouri, has nearly a full-page article under the heading, "Facts Refute Claim Food Cooked in Aluminum Vessels Is Harmful." The Bureau states that it gets frequent letters or phone calls concerning this subject. It mentions the pamphlet distributed by the Research Publishing Company of Toledo, Ohio, entitled "Early Grave Via the Modern Kitchen," which builds up quite a case against aluminum utensils, declaring that they "may cause cancer, ulcers, and other ailments." According to the bulletin the pamphlet then quotes college professors, naming "William J. Gies of Columbia University, a teacher of biological chemistry, and Dr. Albert P. Mathews of the College of Medicine, University of Cincinnati, a teacher of biochemistry." The Bureau wrote these and others named in the bulletin. Several letters were returned unclaimed and one professor mentioned was dead. Professor Gies stated, "Have never had experiments on toxicity from aluminum cooking vessels. Aluminum cooking utensils have been in daily use in my own home for many years." Professor Mathews replied: "It is true that about 20 or 30 years ago I did give evidence before the Federal Trade Commission that sufficient amounts of aluminum compounds taken in foods were harmful . . . but I said nothing about the use of aluminum vessels in cooking, and I do not believe that such use has any deleterious effects."

It seems strange that this rumor of evil should be so persistent in the light of the flimsy evidence which is generally presented against the use of aluminum vessels. C. B. H.

Going to The College Student Conference?

This article should be of interest to all young people, especially those now attending or planning to attend a college or university other than Graceland.

From college and university campuses all over the United States and Canada church young people will converge upon Lamoni, Iowa, for the annual College Student Conference being held on the Graceland campus from 5:30 p.m. Saturday, August 30, to 3:00 p.m., Monday, September 1.

Called by the First Presidency and conducted by the Committee on Ministry to College People—of which Dr. Lawrence Brockway, University of Michigan, is chairman—the conference is intended to serve all college students and graduates outside of those currently enrolled at Graceland where they may receive this type of ministry year round. The last conference was held at Kirtland, Ohio, a year ago.

Personalities from the professions and General Church who have agreed to attend include President W. Wallace Smith, Bishop Walter

Conference Theme

The conference theme, "Frontiers in Zion's Performance," is expected to challenge the best thinking of both students and leaders. Many students will participate as leaders in discussion, in worship, and in fun, as well as in the roll of speakers. The steering committee has outlined what it believes to be a balanced program. An opening mixer, a community sing, and a campfire program are scheduled to assure relaxation and fellowship. A morning worship period, an afternoon vesper, and two fellowship services are being planned to provide maximum opportunity for rich worship experience. Five major discussion periods, including small group "buzz" sessions, are also provided.

Conference keynote speaker will be Dr. Evan Shute of London, Ontario, on "Restoration Principles in Modern Times." All who know Evan Shute are aware of his keen mind, his deep devotion to the church, and his ability to stir and inspire. His speech will be given Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock, immediately after dinner and the mixer which open the conference. Registration will begin at 4:00 p.m. Saturday, August 30, with dinner scheduled for 5:30 p.m.

Dr. Shute to Set Stage

Dr. Shute's speech will set the stage for the first discussion period Sunday morning, when the entire conference will be divided into small groups and then brought back together to consider, "What Restoration Principles Are Distinctive Today?" The findings of this session will be listed and will form the basis of further discussion periods.

Other major discussion topics now listed include three designed to explore the necessary performance required of college people who hold to the Restoration. They will be on "Frontiers in the Search for Security," "Frontiers in Witnessing" (as demonstrated in the lives of trained individuals), and "Frontiers in Community Living."

New Horizons

On Sunday evening several students are being asked to present their own thinking on the current mission of the church in a symposium of student opinion, entitled "As I See It."

The climax of the general sessions is expected in the open forum, Monday morning, when in something of a "hair down" session, questions submitted either in writing or from the floor will be tossed before a panel of "experts."

Campus Group Leaders to Meet

All discussions will not be in the field of theory. Practical examples and applications will be sought. Among these will be a session for student group leaders and pastors of college town congregations on "Campus Group Organization and Activities."

Two fellowship services are planned to add to the enrichment of worship experiences. The first, Sunday morning, will have as its theme, "Walk in the Light." The second on Monday afternoon will conclude the conference as each individual shares in the theme, "Part of This Is My Job."

Registration

Registrations for the conference should be sent to Dr. L. O. Brockway, Chemistry Department, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan. The registration fee is $2.00. Housing in a dormitory will be $1.00 per night (guests must bring their own linen), and six meals will be served for $4.50 a person. Reservations should be made early to insure a peak religious experience and the best student conference ever.

PROMINENT IN ACTIVITIES, especially athletics, at the new Ontagin Youth Camp held this year for the first time at Port Elgin, Ontario, were two of Canada's foremost junior swimming champions, Shirley and Joan Campbell, daughters of Mrs. Florence Campbell of Fergus, Ontario, and the late Thomas Campbell.

Starting to swim at the age of six, both girls have shown from the beginning outstanding ability in this field. Shirley, now sixteen years old, won the Canadian Junior Championship for the 400-yard free style event, breaking all previous records for this in 1951 with a 5 minute 13 second timing. In 1950 she was also Canadian champion in the one-mile free style for junior women, which she won in competition at the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto. On June 25, 26, and 27, 1952, she competed in the Olympic trials at Hart House, Toronto, placing second in the Canadian Junior Championship final 400-yard free style and in the Canadian Senior Championship 400-yard free style.

Joan, Shirley's fifteen-year-old sister, has also added to the family honors. In 1951 she placed first in the Canadian National Exhibition 100-yard free style, first in the Dominion championship 100-yard free style race for junior women at Vancouver, British Columbia, and second in the Ontario championship. In June, 1952, she placed second in the Ontario championship, and third in the Dominion during the Olympic swimming trials at Hart House, Toronto.

Both girls have been on the Ontario 200-yard swimming relay team since 1946, and on the 400-yard relay team which won the Ontario Championship in 1951, placing first in both the Ontario and second in the Canadian championships in the recent Olympic trials.

Shirley attended Fergus public school and was graduated this June from the commercial department of Fergus High School. She has recently accepted a stenographic position with Beatty Brothers, Ltd., in Fergus, and hopes to save up enough money to attend Graceland College soon.

He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since November 23, 1897, and had served as a priest since October 25, 1903.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: Mrs. Lillian Livingston of Boring, Oregon; Mrs. Florence Roop of Seattle, Washington; and Mrs. Elma Sharp of Kansas City, Missouri; a son, Loyd E. Appleman of Portland, Oregon; a brother, William Appleman of Portland; nine grandchildren; and eleven great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel, Elder Hubert Case officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

POTTS.—Albert C., son of Albert and Lilly Potts, was born August 8, 1891, in England, and died May 17, 1952, in St. Mary's Hospital, Jamaica, Long Island, after a brief illness. He came with his parents to the United States when he was a child, and on October 24, 1909, was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church. From then until his enlistment in the First World War he served Brooklyn Branch as secretary and recorder. On November 23, 1921, he was married to Anna Thuman; two children were born to them.

He is survived by his wife; a daughter, Betty Jean Frisbie; a son, Donald Albert; two sisters: Emma Hartley and Dorothy Pettit; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Perce R. Judd and Evangelist LeRoy Squire at the Walker Chapel in Woodhaven. Interment was in Long Island National Cemetery, Farmingdale, Long Island.

WINSHIP.—Robert H., Sr., was born September 14, 1874, at St. Marys, Pennsylvania, and died May 27, 1952, at his home in North Charleroi, Pennsylvania. He was married on March 8, 1899, to Elizabeth Harris, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 6, 1890, and since November 13, 1910, had served as a priest.

Besides his wife he leaves three sons: Charles H. of Fayette City, Pennsylvania; Clarence I. and Robert H., Jr., of North Charleroi; a brother, Samuel of Fayette City; a sister, Mrs. Mary Givens of Baltimore, Maryland; eleven grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. One son, Henry M., died December 14, 1951. Funeral services were held at the Lock Four Reorganized Church, Elders James F. Menzies and Floyd F. Bradford officiating. Burial was in Belle Vernon Cemetery, Pennsylvania.

LARSEN.—Anne Dorothy, was born March 4, 1862, in Norre Uttrap, Denmark, and died June 29, 1952, at Maywood, Illinois. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1910. Her husband, Jens Larsen, and seven children preceded her in death.

Surviving are two sons: Peter and Carl, both of Council Bluffs, Iowa; a daughter, Mrs. Bertina Lorenzen of Maywood; a sister, Hannah Hansen of Council Bluffs; twelve grandchildren; and twelve great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Senne Chapel in Maywood, Elder Lloyd L. Hadley officiating. Interment was in Mount Emblem Cemetery, Elmhurst.

MURPHY.—James Mervel, son of Mrs. Nellie Hazzard of Wallaceburg, Ontario, was born July 4, 1893, and died June 22, 1952, at Wallaceburg. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since his youth and had held the office of priest since August 1, 1918.

He is survived by his wife, Ada; a son, Jack; a daughter, Helen; and his mother, all of Wallaceburg; and five sisters: Mrs. Maude Booth of Wallaceburg; Mrs. Bertha Evans of Detroit, Michigan; Mrs. Carrie Green of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Della Griffin of Hollywood, Florida; and Mrs. Mae Nette of Holly, Michigan. Funeral services were conducted by Patriarch Robert Brown. Interment was in River View Cemetery, Wallaceburg.

ROBINSON.—James Monroe, son of James Stephenson and Martha Anderson Robinson, was born April 15, 1866, in Grundy County, Illinois, and died July 18, 1952, in Independence, Missouri, after a long illness. He was married on August 7, 1888, to Emma Jane Thomas; ten children were born to them. His wife, Emma, died in 1905. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 4, 1895. He was ordained a priest on October 12, 1902, and an elder on June 18, 1905. He was pastor of the congregation at Wier City, Kansas, for several years, became a member of the First Quorum of Elders in Spring River District in 1912, and in 1913 served as a self-supported missionary. In 1915 he moved to Oswego, Kansas, and although the church has no branch there, he conducted meetings in schoolhouses, and once in the Methodist Church. In 1920 he made his home in Independence where he served as a group elder. Following the death of his first wife he was married to Amanda Caroline Smith on September 18, 1909, who died in 1948. Five children also preceded him in death.

Surviving are three sons: W. C., E. L., and J. H., all of Independence; two daughters: Mrs. George W. Leigh, Sr., of the home and Mrs. Iva Reeves of Torrington, Wyoming; two brothers: Aaron Robinson of San Diego, California, and Frank Robinson of Pittsburg, Kansas; two sisters: Mrs. Martha Jane Bird of Pueblo, Colorado, and Mrs. Patsy May Holler of Pittsburg; twenty-eight grandchildren; and fifty great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Patriarch A. K. Dillee and High Priest Lester Whiting at the Dixon Kepyel Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ROACH.—George Washington, son of William and Sarah Roach, was born December 14, 1861, in Hillsboro, Indiana, and died July 25, 1952, at his home in Independence, Missouri. He was married on February 2, 1884, to Dicy Olive Phillips, who preceded him in death on March 22, 1945. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1896.

He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Ralph M. Barnard of the home; one son, Leland Roach of Anaheim, California; a sister, Mrs. Harriet Austin of Yeoman, Indiana; a brother, Cyrus Baker Roach of Monon, Indiana; and five grandchildren. One daughter preceded him in death. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Hubert Case and Patriarch A. K. Dillee at the Roland Speaks Chapel. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WILEY.—Glen C., son of John and Sarah Wiley, was born March 3, 1874, in Cass County, Michigan, and died May 23, 1952, at his home in Summit City, Michigan. He was married on May 8, 1901, to Alice Walter; three children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 27, 1909, and was active in church work as long as his health permitted.

He is survived by his wife; two sons: Harold of Lansing and John of Mt. Pleasant; a daughter, Edna of the home; two sisters: Mrs. Laura Robinson of Mt. Pleasant and Mrs. Jennie Nesbitt of Traverse City; a brother, Robert, of Miami, Florida; and five grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Kingsley, Elder E. H. Doty officiating. Burial was in Greenwood cemetery.

OMAHA YOUNG PEOPLE VISIT ZION

A group of young people from the Omaha, Nebraska, Branch, under the supervision of Brother and Sister Esmond Crown and Brother and Sister Frank Fry, visited Independence August 9 and 10. The South Crysler and Stone Church women's department provided meals for the group and under the leadership of Brother and Sister Eldron Robison, Stone Church junior pastor and wife, and Barbara Barnhard, entertainment was provided. On Sunday morning the group met with the Stake-Wide Zion's League in an early morning prayer service under the direction of Lee Hart, stake youth leader. Elder Evan Fry gave the theme talk. Assisting in the service were Roy Schaefer and Hal McKain. A breakfast was served to the young people following the service.

KANSAS CITY STAKE NEWS

A new mission has been opened at Prairie Village in the Kansas City Stake at 7746 Wornall Road, under the leadership of Elder Herbert C. Lively.

The Kansas City Stake is also featuring a "campus series" which is being held at the Shawnee Drive Branch. People from the following four branches are attending the series: Central, Malvern Hill, Prairie Village, and Shawnee Drive.

Joan was graduated from Fergus public school this year, and is entering Fergus High School in September. She hasn't decided what to specialize in, but says that youth camp this year has made her Graceland minded.

Both girls were baptized at the age of eight at Eldora, Ontario. With their mother they have attended reunion every year and participated actively in church activities. To Mrs. Campbell goes much of the credit for their success because of her steadfast guidance, continued faith, and perseverance. Shirley is Zion's League pianist and has helped out in junior church work. Joan is an enthusiastic member of both the Zion's League and church school.

Besides church work, these busy and talented girls find time to follow several hobbies. Both like to sew and figure skate.

Those who attended Camp Ontagin were proud to have had the privilege of fellowship with two such fine, devoted young people.

P.S.

* MILLIONAIRE

Add a new word to your vocabulary—"millionaire," spelled with an "n." A nillionaire has no millions at all. The word was invented recently by "Vogue Magazine," and means a person with little money who, by the use of intelligence, personal charm, selection of clothes, and consorting with the right kind of people, has a fair chance of living a gracious, comfortable, and happy existence. "Vogue" will tell her how to do it.

Now if the men's magazines would publish something like this for the rod-and-gun side of the household instead of the trash they usually dish up, we might have better men.

There is a spiritual angle on this, too. Not one of us needs to be poor. Remember the old song:

My Father is rich in houses and lands,
He holdeth the wealth of the world in his hands;

An heir to a mansion . . . still I may sing
With Jesus my Savior, I'm a child of the King.

* APHTHOUS FEVER

The editorial eye goes roving over many things in life, and frequently encounters strange names and words. You never know when you will have use for some of those words, and it pays to give attention. . . . In an agricultural publication there was the term "aphthous fever." Surely there could be no literary use for that term, and we passed by it. But only a few days later we needed it again. . . . What is aphthous fever? It is more widely known under the popular name, "foot-and-mouth disease." Yes, editors get it too, but the symptoms are different. In this case, the editor puts the foot in the mouth. Very embarrassing. Have you ever had an attack of aphthous fever?

* BUT YOU MUSTN'T LAUGH!

Not many people are willing to have others laugh at them. Contempt is cruel, and ridicule is a major offense in any society. People have been killed for laughing at the wrong time and in the wrong way.

Even King David would not endure it. There were times before he came into his power that that he felt the sting of bitter laughter, and it is possible some of his enemies later lost their heads for an indulgence in untimely mirth. In the fortieth Psalm he said this prayer: "Let them be desolate for a reward of their shame that say unto me Aha, aha."

Both civilization and Christianity are founded upon respect for human personality, among other principles. Jesus made a strong statement on the point in the Sermon on the Mount; for in Matthew 5:22 he said, "Whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire." Some people are more hurt to be laughed at than to be sworn at. They can forgive anger, but the cold contempt of critical laughter may rouse them to fighting fury or revenge. It may not be right, but that's the way it is.

This is a phrase, a principle of life, to remember always: "Respect for personality." Tyrannies, dictatorships, and exploiters have scant respect for personality. No organization is fit to endure, nor is it worthy of loyalty and service, unless it observes this principle.

Is your League equipped with the Zion's League Annual Number One? This paper-bound book directs all youth activities for the whole year. It is centered around the theme "Youth Explores the Church."

PRESIDENT SMITH HOME

President Israel A. Smith, Apostle Arthur Oakman, and Bishop Henry Livingston arrived in Independence on August 19 at 9:00 p.m. on the train from New York. They arrived in New York on August 18 on the "Queen Elizabeth" from Europe. President Smith reports that the trip was interesting and proved of value to the men who visited, to the Saints on the Continent, and to the entire church. The group visited in various Continental countries and then attended the Enfield, England, Reunion after which they left Europe and returned home.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS AT LAWRENCE

President F. Henry Edwards was in Lawrence, Kansas, August 16 and 17.

W. W. SMITH IN NORTHWEST

In a letter received from President W. Wallace Smith on August 16, the following is reported: "The Silver Lake Reunion closed on a high note. There was a good attendance and the reunion was a financial success." President and Sister Smith were assisted by a staff composed of Apostle and Sister E. J. Gleazer, George A. Njeim, Ray Vern Webb, Aleah Koury, J. F. Curtis, Marcus Cook, Granville L. Swenson, Monte Lasater, Sam Clark, and Carl Hammil. Brother Smith also wrote, "By the time you get this we will have closed the Oregon work camp reunion. It is certain to be a success." On the staff at this camp were Brother and Sister Smith, George A. Njeim, D. D. Landon, James N. Kemp, Monte Lasater, and J. L. Verhei. Sister Smith instructed the women's classes at both camps.

ATTEND SOUTHERN INDIANA REUNION

Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, accompanied by his wife attended the Southern Indiana Reunion August 11-17 at Riverdale Park, Mitchell, Indiana. He directed the youth activities at the reunion, and Sister Neff taught the women's classes.

DR. McDOWELL WORKING WITH PRIESTHOOD EDUCATION

Dr. F. M. McDowell preached at the Central Missouri Stake Reunion held at Lake Venita, Odessa, Missouri, on the opening Sunday, July 26. On Monday he conducted priesthood and young people's classes. He was one of the instructors at the Center Stake priesthood retreat at Lake Doniphan, August 9 and 10. He spent several days in Lamoni, Iowa, working with members of the new Graceland College Board of Trustees, summarizing studies made during the past year. Dr. McDowell is working with administrative officers in the Center Stake of Zion planning and organizing the year's program of priesthood education.

MELCHISEDEC PRIESTHOOD HOLDS RETREAT

Approximately 140 men of the Melchisedec priesthood of the Center Stake met at Lake Doniphan, August 9 and 10. Under the direction of Fred O. Davies of the stake presidency, the following served as a staff: the three quorum leaders, Wynne Jones, Clyde Baker, and Victor Talcott, Stake President Charles V. Graham, Kenneth Byrn of the stake bishopric, Dr. F. M. McDowell, Elder Arthur Rock, and Apostle Reed M. Holmes. Recreation and a stake review were held on Saturday. A campfire service closed the day's activities. Sunday's services included a prayer and testimony meeting, several classes, and a sermon.

We'd Like You To Know . . .

Audrey Perry Howard

ONE OF MRS. HOWARD'S QUALIFICATIONS for being Herald House office manager came about by being the youngest of a family of seven—and the only girl. When a girl has six brothers and all of them are teases, she learns to be always on her guard. Her mother died when Audrey was only sixteen, and she felt for a time that there was neither God nor justice in the world. But this happened in Chicago before she came in contact with the gospel. Yes, she had united with a church the Sunday following the funeral of her mother, but it was under duress of altar calls and the repeating of the invitation hymn until it became embarrassing.

In 1925 she married Frank H. Howard; three years later his company transferred him to Kansas City, and the family settled in Independence. They have three children: Mrs. Dorothy Eyssell, Mrs. Frances Stewart, and Richard P., who was graduated from Graceland this spring. In 1932 she was left to support her family and was employed at general office work. Her children had been invited to the Stone Church school and liked it. Margaret Wilke had come to board with her, and Audrey attended church occasionally with her. It took the 1938 General Conference Communion service to make that deep spiritual impression which caused her to investigate further. She and her three children were baptized on Children's Day, 1941.

In 1946 she came to Herald House as bookkeeper. Last fall she was promoted to office manager and head of the order and accounting department. She has represented the Publishing House at five reunions in sales capacity. These have been enjoyable experiences because of the many fine contacts made with church members and particularly the reunion leadership. "I have enjoyed my work at the Herald more than anything I ever did," she said, "and I hope that I can continue to please."

Keep Your Standards

"Thus saith the Lord God, . . . I will . . . set up my standard to the people."—Isaiah 49: 22.

WHEREVER YOU GO, you will find great differences in the quality of clothing, machinery, houses, home life, and—not least important—people.

The best things, like the best people, are in the minority. The supply is perennially short. You will have to search for them. And when you look for anything you will be confronted with constant persuasions to accept a substitute less good than what you want, or something inferior at a cheaper price.

In ultimate effect, the substitute will probably be more costly, will suffer more breakage and wear, will require more frequent service and repair, will fail you at a crucial moment, will have a shorter life of usefulness. You will have trouble and disappointment from it.

IN SPITE of your unhappy experience with many cheap and inferior things, and with people that fail and cause trouble, it would be a mistake of the most serious kind to lose faith in life, in the good products afforded in the markets of the world, and in people. Somewhere, if you will search for it and insist on it, you will find what is superior. Somewhere, if you will look for them, you will find the good people—sincere, genuine, and true. Somewhere you will find the originals that the imitators copy. Somewhere you will find the truth that error and falsehood seek to simulate.

A TRIP once led to a part of the country where the public utility furnishes electric current at twenty-five cycles instead of the standard sixty per second. This fact may seem simple and unimportant until you know the greatness of the consequences. (All deviations from the standard are costly.) The lights flicker, and reading is uncomfortable. One is tempted to lay the book aside and quit trying. When people move into that area or out of it, refrigerators must be rewired, and many household appliances must be sacrificed and replaced.

How the situation began, few people now remember, but they are all affected by the consequences of a decision that, at the time, may not have seemed at all momentous. It was a decision to adopt something not standard. The results are not satisfactory. But it would cost the company and its patrons many millions of dollars to change now. Useful equipment would be rendered worthless. The people debate one way and another. If they keep the present system they suffer. If they change, they must pay a heavy price. That was a costly mistake made by somebody in the beginning.

In machinery manufacturing, and especially in automobiles, an effort is being made to standardize many types of bearings, threads, bolts, fittings, and other parts. It will be a great help when many parts of one car can be used on another. In publication, the mills furnish paper in standard sizes, which offer important economies to the buyers.

In higher education great effort has been made, and success has attended, in creating standards that are recognized everywhere. Students can go from one university to another, enhance the value of their study under good instructors, and increase their experience. One difference persists that causes inconvenience and loss to transferring students. Some universities operate on the semester system, with its term of eighteen weeks, and others use the quarter system with a term of twelve weeks. It will be troublesome and costly to attain uniformity, and on one side or the other a large sacrifice would have to be made. It remains to be seen whether the people concerned will make this contribution to progress.

IT IS IN THE FIELD of moral and spiritual life that you will encounter the most inferior things and the strongest temptations to accept what is poor, false, and harmful.

Temptations always appear in an easy, harmless, weak guise. The consequences are cleverly hidden until the bill must be paid. Sin comes in a setting of glamour. This was known in early times, and in the seventh chapter of Proverbs there is a classic description of the "young man void of understanding" who goes "as an ox goeth to the slaughter . . . till a dart strike through his liver." Glamour and death are the accompaniments of low standards in thought and conduct.

It isn't always easy to be good, but righteousness has its happiness and its lasting rewards. The descent to low standards may be easy, but it does not guarantee an easy way of life. The climb upward is difficult, but the higher levels of thinking and living give one a purer air, a distance of vision, and a closeness to the divine that can be obtained in no other way.

Auditorium Progress Report

In the report of the Presiding Bishopric to the General Conference of 1952, we set forth as one of our goals the raising of funds for the completion of the Auditorium. We quote from that report as follows:

We summarize herein again those areas of endeavor which challenge us presently and in the immediate future. . . .

Completing the Auditorium, insofar as possible and commensurate with our ability. We have set our goal for $200,000, by way of special offerings, in each of the years 1952 and 1953, this to be exclusive of any appropriations that may be made.

Throughout the General Conference considerable interest was expressed by many of our people in respect to this particular goal which was set for our accomplishment as a church. Since that time we have been watching with a great deal of interest the reaction of the Saints as evidenced in the contributions received. Up to and including the month of June, the total amount we have received for this purpose was $48,076.37. A small portion represented sums from a few districts that carried over from their quotas of the year 1951, but the substantial portion of this represents the contributions in 1952.

Recently letters were sent to bishops, bishop's agents, district presidents and the members of the Council of Twelve, showing the amounts received in each district for this year in comparison to the quotas assigned. We are sure that each member of the church is interested in the results attained in his particular district, and undoubtedly this information has been passed on to the membership by the officers to whom this information was given.

Our success in attaining this goal is dependent upon every member participating in contributing according to his ability. We prefer that these contributions be given to the local solicitor or bishop's agent and a receipt issued promptly. In situations where a solicitor or bishop's representative is not available, contributions may be sent directly to church headquarters.

As an aid to participation on the part of children and all church school members, small banks have been provided. These are available upon request to the office of the Presiding Bishopric.

We do not feel that we have adequate funds available to justify the starting of construction. The plans for the foyer and the front of the building are about completed. A model of the building is being made, which should give a fine perspective of the building. It is our hope to publish a picture of this model in an early issue of the Herald.

In view of the fact that a little less than 25 per cent of our total quota was raised in the first six months of this year, it leaves 75 per cent for the last six months. We call this to the attention of the members of the church, because we are of the opinion it is their desire that we proceed as quickly as possible with this work which has been so long under way.

Doctrine and Covenants Institute

All members and friends of the church are invited to attend the Doctrine and Covenants Institute September 28 to October 3 in Independence. The Sunday meetings, beginning at eleven o'clock, September 28, will be held in the Auditorium, with the Stone Church housing remaining activities. All congregations in the Center Stake will dismiss regular Sunday meetings to permit members to attend. Daily programs begin at 8:30 a. m. and close with the 7:30 p.m. service.

One of the high lights of the institute will be the introduction and explanation of the new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants on Wednesday, October 1.

Visitors should assume responsibility of arranging for their housing and meals.

Appointment of President for Southwest Texas District

Following the tragic death of Elder Joseph L. Berry, we have asked Elder J. E. Wilder to serve as district president until the next district conference, when an election for this office can be held.

We extend to the Saints of the Southwest Texas District, and particularly those of the San Antonio area, our very deep sympathy in the loss of Brother and Sister Berry.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

A recent report from Elder J. D. Anderson, President of the Kansas City Stake, includes the following paragraph:

You will be interested to know that the new group which was started in the Prairie Village area is making progress in attendance and enthusiasm. At present meetings are held at Seventy-eighth and Wornall Road. We have great hopes for this new group and trust we shall be able to raise funds toward acquiring a church site in the not too distant future.

Jean Hurshman, who is in Guatemala City with her husband Lloyd and their family, and with Brother and Sister George Young, writes that Mr. José Aranda was expected to be baptized Sunday, August 13. Behind this baptism lies some very earnest and persistent work on the part of the Youngs and the Hurshmans and Steve Robinson, son of Bishop Stephen Robinson of Des Moines, Iowa, supported by others who have been interested in the testimony being borne by these young people. This is an important gain for our endeavors in Spanish-speaking countries.

A Conquistador's Testimony

By Paul M. Hanson

Illustrations from photographs by the author.

IN 1528 the Inca Huaya Copac, ruler of the Inca empire, received news of the arrival at Tumbez, on the coast of what is now Ecuador, of Francisco Pizarro and his less than two hundred followers.

After the death of the Inca, serious rivalry developed between two sons, Huascar and Atahualpa, to whom in a will by their father each had been assigned rulership of parts of the empire. Huascar was defeated in battle, and Atahualpa became the ruling Inca. He and some of his troops were sheltered near Cajamarca. To seize him would be to capture the authority of the empire. He accepted an invitation to meet the Spanish commander. At a signal, after reaching the plaza of Cajamarca, the Inca was taken prisoner. "Mere numbers, though great, were of no avail to Atahualpa's cause in the presence of firearms and horses and of the raucous shouts of 'Santiago and at them' which the Christians constantly uttered."¹ Even after the Inca was taken prisoner, "The carnage did not cease; for hundreds of unarmed or lightly armed native warriors were hacked to pieces with swords or trampled into slime by the horses without being able to deliver one effective blow for their lord."²

To obtain his freedom Atahualpa offered to fill with gold and silver the room in which he and his captors were held—probably twenty-two feet long by sixteen feet wide to the height of his extended arm. Upon Pizarro's accepting his offer the Inca gave orders to his subjects throughout his dominion to bring their golden ornaments, silver and precious stones, even from their sacred temples to Cajamarca. His obedient subjects responded until the room was filled with treasure. Much of this came from the famous temple of Pachacamac, about twenty miles south of Lima, a temple antedating the occupation of this region by the Incas. The city of Pachacamac is one of the larger ruins and noted archaeological sites of Peru, reaching into remote pre-

Inca times, and was a celebrated holy city at the time of the Spanish conquest. It was the Mecca of ancient South America to which, like Cholula in Mexico, pilgrims journeyed from distant places to worship at the temple. Widely accepted designations of the Creator-God are Wiracocha and Pachacamac. In going by auto from Lima to Pachacamac one passes sandy hills and plains, fields of cotton, and irrigation ditches; at the time of the Conquest this region is described as one of green fields and groves. In approaching the ruins one sees crowning a high hill ruins of an Inca temple, which likely faced the sea near by. Though the whole area is now largely a mass of shapeless ruins, Pachacamac possesses to the thoughtful visitor much of fascination and interest. Men also journeyed to Cuzco to gather the Inca's ransom, plates of gold and vast vessels of silver. It is said that probably hundreds of millions of dollars in gold, silver, and gems gathered for the ruler's release were hidden when news of his defeat was received. (See illustration 1.)

After the room was filled according to contract, instead of giving the monarch his liberty, the conquerors tried him on charges of alleged crimes and condemned him to death; and, since he was an idolator, he was to die by fire. The priest, Vicente de Valverde, a member of Pizarro's band, offered Atahualpa the comfortless consolation that if he would accept the faith of a merciful Christ and be baptized, he could choose to be garroted instead of burned. The Inca accepted the proposal and was publicly strangled in the main square of Cajamarca.

What a change there would have been in the course of Peruvian civilization if Atahualpa had strangled Pizarro! (See illustration 2.)

FOLLOWING THE EXECUTION of the Inca, Pizarro and his adventurous followers marched down and occupied Cuzco, the ancient and magnificent capital of the Inca empire.

2. Pizarro, in armor, in front of the Cathedral in Lima, Peru

All around them were palaces, temples, fortifications, and all manner of other constructions necessary to the maintenance of a polity whose central idea was service to all classes of its subjects in every form of activity. It is tragically true that this polity was not continued by the conquerors.³ All Spaniards who saw Peru in the first years of the Spanish occupation praised it unless some mean-spirited motive led them to do otherwise. All just men of those there and then present with the invading element united in saying that the Incaic System, as compared with that which came after it, was the better.⁴

Cuzco at this time was a large, beautiful city which, with its suburbs extending to the plains and near mountains, had a population of about 300,000. Contempt was shown by the Spaniards for all that the natives revered. Temples were desecrated, and palaces were converted into private residences, convents, or monasteries; some were used for stables. Most unimpressive, indeed, are the Spanish constructions surmounting the marvelous stone walls and foundations of the Inca edifices. Strikingly illustrative of this is the convent of San Domingo in Cuzco, rising upon the ruins of the famous Inca Temple of the Sun.

Among the parks none possessed so much tradition as the Plaza de Armas; the public life of Cuzco centered within its limits. Here the rich ceremonial festivals of the Incas were celebrated. In this plaza gallows were set up by the Spaniards and executions enacted to which the public congregated. Everything of value was looted.

In many parts of Cuzco walls of Inca origin are still to be seen; some are of great length, and where they appear on the same street opposite each other, one may be sure of gazing upon a street much as it was before the Conquest.

Such destruction was wrought by the invaders that information on some subjects is irretrievably intertwined with archaeology.

The problem of the origin of ancient civilization in America needs further scientific investigation. Some of the ancient people of Peru and Bolivia and their monumental works had so long preceded the Incas that they were lost to all but tradition. Back of the period of the Inca empire is a mysterious past. If only the ancient ruins of Cuzco, Sacsahuaman, Ollantaytambo, Chan Chan, and Tiahuanaco could speak!

A NOTICEABLE FEATURE of the ruins of pre-Columbian times along the western coast of South America, as well as in Mexico and Central America, is of temples and ceremonial centers indicating that religion entered deeply into the life of the people.

Prominent among the Indian traditions found by the first Spaniards was one of a white and bearded man who had appeared to the Indian ancestors, came from the east, exercised miraculous power, and after teaching and ministering to them and promising to return, disappeared mysteriously. After his departure temples were erected to his worship in which statues of him were placed.

In Peru this personage was known and worshiped as Wiracocha.

Dr. Daniel G. Brinton says of his expected return:

As in Mexico, Yucatan and elsewhere, so in the realms of the Incas, the Spaniards found themselves not unexpected guests. . . .

The Quichuas expected the return of Viracocha, not merely as an earthly ruler to govern their nation, but as a god who, by his divine power, would call the dead to life.⁵

According to tradition the fall of the pre-Inca people was definitely associated with the religion of Wiracocha. The purity of the ancient religion became degraded and was abandoned. Disobedience is indicated as the cause of the ruin. On one known occasion there was a notable public movement to reclaim the people to the worship of Wiracocha.⁶

When Atahualpa was about to proceed to Cuzco to be installed as the ruling Inca, a report was brought to him of the coming of "a people with different clothing, and with beards":

The chief of them was believed to be Viracocha, which means the god of these people, and he brought with him many Viracochas, which is as much as to say "gods." They said this of the Governor Don Francisco Pizarro, who had arrived with one hundred eighty men and some horses which they called sheep. . . .

When this became known to Atahualpa he rejoiced greatly, believing it to be Viracocha coming, as he had promised when he departed.⁷

3. A partial view of Sacsahuaman

THE BOOK OF MORMON sets forth that Jesus Christ in person ministered to his people in America soon after his resurrection. If the miracle of the resurrection of Jesus be accepted, the point of view turns to his visit among his people in America as additional to his numerous appearances after his resurrection among his disciples in Palestine. To his apostles he "showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God."⁸ The appearances of Jesus in Palestine and America disclose in part where he was during the "forty days."

It is now over one hundred twenty years since the Book of Mormon with its singular claims was published to the world, at which time little was known of the archaeology of the New World. Since the publication of this book in 1830 there has been a remarkable and widespread development of interest in America's pre-Columbian races, similar to the interest in mankind's past revealed in the excavations, explorations, and discoveries in the Eastern Hemisphere.

4. A section of the lower wall of Sacsahuaman

In comparison with the achievements marking the Inca civilization those of the Spaniards make a sorry showing. The record of the invaders is one of conquest and exploitation of the native peoples.

In caring for the interests of the Holy Catholic faith, the cathedral in Cuzco, located on the east side and dominating the Plaza de Armas, stands on the site once occupied by the temple of the Creator-God, Wiracocha. Nothing of the ancient temple remains except some stones used in building the church. The cathedral is built almost entirely of stones taken from the pre-Spanish fortress, or shrine, of Sacsahuaman, near the top of a hill, dominating and rising in majesty over the city on the north. This ruin consists of three zig-zag stone walls, one behind and over the other, extending one third of a mile or more on the hill, flanked by a deep valley at each end. (See illustration 3.) Looting of stones for building purposes from Sacsahuaman by the Spaniards went on through generations, none being left but what resisted the most unscrupulous vandalism. This ruin, even in its present condition, is regarded as the most imposing monument of its kind in the world; indeed, there are grounds for claiming it ranks with the pyramids of Egypt as an "illustration of human power."

The tragedy of the destruction by the Spanish conquerors is summed up with no uncertain sound in the testimony of

Mancio Serra de Leguisano, the last survivor of the original conquerors, who signed his will at Cuzco on September 18, 1589, with the following preamble:

First, and before I begin my testament, I declare that for many years I have desired to take order for informing the Catholic and Royal Majesty of the King Don Felipe our Lord, seeing how Catholic and most Christian he is, and how zealous for the service of God our Lord, touching what is needed for the health of my soul, seeing that I took a great part in the discovery, conquest, and settlement of these kingdoms, when we drove out those who were the Lord's Incas and who possessed and ruled them as their own. We placed them under the royal crown, and his Catholic Majesty should understand that we found these kingdoms in such order, and the said Incas governed them in such wise that throughout them there was not a thief, nor a vicious man, nor an adulteress, nor was a bad woman admitted among them, nor were there immoral people. The men had honest and useful occupations. The lands, forests, mines, pastures, houses, and all kinds of products were regulated and distributed in such sort that each one knew his property without any other person seizing or occupying it, nor were there law suits respecting it. The operations of war, though they were numerous, never interfered with the interests of commerce nor with agriculture. All things from the greatest to the most minute had their proper place and order. The Incas were feared, obeyed, and respected by their subjects, as men very capable and well versed in the art of government. As in these rulers we found the power and command as well as the resistance, we subjugated them for the service of God our Lord, took away their land, and placed it under the royal crown, and it was necessary to deprive them entirely of power and command, for we had seized their goods by force of arms. By the intervention of our Lord it was possible for us to subdue these kingdoms containing such a multitude of people and such riches, and of their lords we made our servants and subjects.

As is seen, and as I wish your Majesty to understand, the motive which obliges me to make this statement is the discharge of my conscience, as I find myself guilty. For we have destroyed by our evil example, the people who had such a government as was enjoyed by these natives. They were so free from the committal of crimes or excesses, as well men as women, that the Indian who had 100,000 pesos worth of gold and silver in his house left it open merely placing a small stick across the door, as a sign that its master was out. With that, according to their custom, no one could enter nor take anything that was there. When they saw that we put locks and keys on our doors, they supposed that it was from fear of them, that they might not kill us, but not because they believed that any one would steal the property of another. So that when they found that we had thieves amongst us, and men who sought to make their daughters commit sin, they despised us. But now they have come to such a pass, in offence of God, owing to the bad example that we have set them in all things, that these natives from doing no evil, have changed into people who now do no good or very little.

This needs a remedy, and it touches your Majesty for the discharge of your conscience, and I inform you, being unable to do more, I pray to God to pardon me, for I am moved to say this, seeing that I am the last to die of all the conquerors and discoverers, as is well known. Now there is no one but myself in this kingdom or out of it, and with this I do what I can to discharge my conscience.

I had a figure of the sun made of gold, placed by the Incas in the House of the Sun at Cuzco, which is now the convent of San Domingo. I believe it was worth 2,000 pesos, and with what I got at Caxamarca and in Cuzco, my share was worth 12,000 pesos. Yet I die poor and with many children. I beseech your Majesty to have pity on them, and God to have pity on my soul.⁹

Lamoni Church

After some years of planning, in which the Presidency took unusual interest, the new church at Lamoni reached a point where services could be held in it, and accordingly a "first meeting" was set for Sunday, March 2. I was privileged to take with me an old friend and former associate, Bishop James F. Keir, and we found Lamoni covered with new snow to the depth of some eight inches. Storms did not deter, however; Saints from near and far were there and overcrowded the spacious structure. Because it was a general church project, and because Lamoni has been such an important factor in the life of the Reorganized Church, I deem it fitting to leave to local authority to supply an adequate write-up. General authorities present were Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, and myself.

General Conference consumed our attention and energy, in preparation and in session, until the seventh of April. And on the twenty-seventh I went to Lansing, Michigan, where I occupied at the morning hour. Here I was a guest at the home of old friends, Bishop and Sister T. A. Beck, and in the afternoon Brother Beck and I both took part in a dedication service at Charlotte, Michigan, mission. I note that Pastor Francis H. Bowman presided. I spoke generally on altars and shrines; Bishop Beck offered a feeling and appropriate prayer of dedication.

After the service, our party in two cars, the Becks and Elder Garnet Smith and wife of Grand Rapids, escorted me to Battle Creek where I took the train for home.

My stay at home was brief, however, as I had accepted an assignment for Hagerman, Idaho, at a rally planned for the two Idaho districts. I was met at Gooding, Idaho, at noon on Friday, May 2, by Seventies R. F. Ralston and Luther S. Troyer, the latter having just been assigned to that area at the late General Conference. Soon we were in Hagerman where I was taken into the home of Patriarch Silas D. Condit and wife for my stay.

My activities began on Saturday morning when I addressed the priesthood at ten. I spoke again at 8:00 p.m. when the meeting was held in the Legion Hall, I believe. Sunday witnessed the usual run of meetings, and I spoke again at 11:00 a.m. A Communion service followed at 2:00 p.m., when I presided.

Saints were here from Boise and Pocatello and all points of the compass. Elder P. W. Moore was also here.

Elder James Everett planned an evening ride to Salt Lake City and I was invited to go along, which I did. We arrived in that city about midnight, and I was again a guest in the home of Brother and Sister Ralston.

On Monday Elder Everett took me to see James Wardle, Dick Nies, Bob Fredenburg, and others. I had lunch at the restaurant owned and operated by Sister Adah Mueller and husband and took an afternoon train for Denver and home.

En route I stopped over at Lincoln, Nebraska, on a business item, had lunch at my niece's, Sister Rogene Prucha, and then was driven to Omaha for the night at the home of my sister, Audentia Anderson, and her husband Ben. The Prucha children, Claire and Ned, made the trip with us.

One evening is a short time for a family to visit. Early the next morning I was on my way home via the Missouri "Eagle."

I spent Sunday, May 11, at home, and on May 17 I proceeded to Decatur, Illinois, for another "first meeting," again being associated with Apostle Chesworth. I was billeted at the home of the pastor, Elder O. C. Henson, Jr. I was much interested in this household with its four young daughters.

The eighteenth was busy with church activities: first a prayer service at 9:45 a.m., then this 11:00 o'clock service when I addressed the Saints.

At 2:00 p.m. cornerstone laying services were held when with others I assisted in putting into position two stones, one an ordinary stone properly inscribed with the name of the church, etc., and the other a stone of historical interest in that it had been taken from the Nauvoo Temple; it was properly shaped and inscribed to show its origin. The date, 1842 (date the Temple was begun), was included in the inscription.

At this service were some representative men of the city including the Honorable Elbert S. Smith, member of the Illinois State Senate, and the Reverend E. I. Abendroth, Dean of Chapel, Millikin University; both were presented by Pastor Henson and made short addresses. Others who took part were Apostle Chesworth; Arthur Henson, president of Central Illinois District; Elder K. A. Newton; Don Hendricks; and Evangelist O. C. Henson, Sr.

During the day's services others who participated were Elder Frank Shank, pastor at Springfield; William Spicer, and Gilbert Elam.

At the close of the afternoon service I was driven to Joliet for a train to Chicago where I stopped over night before going on home.

The brother who thus helped me was Sanford Vandel, son of my boyhood friend, Brother George Vandel, who lives at Sioux City, Iowa. Sanford, formerly a railroad employee and now a watchmaker, lives at Bloomington, Illinois. I was indeed glad to get acquainted with him.

Pictures were taken at Decatur, and I hope one of them will be used in connection with this account or possibly with a special story which I have asked Pastor Henson to supply for the Herald. Brother Henson

Helping the Underprivileged Peoples of the World

the National Conference on International Economic Excerpts from an address by William O. Douglas to and Social Development, at Washington, D. C.

Introduction

A letter from President F. Henry Edwards to Managing Editor C. B. Hartshorn provides an introduction for the quotations presented here from the address of Mr. Douglas:

Immediately after General Conference I went to Washington, D.C., and attended the International Conference on Social and Economic Problems. . . . It was an instructive and inspiring experience. . . .

I was particularly impressed by the message of Justice Douglas. It was very moving indeed. Since that time I have looked over the releases covering the speeches and the activities of the national conference with the hope that some of the material would fit in to the needs of the Herald. . . .

I think Justice Douglas did two things for us. He helped us to see that a mass approach is inadequate. It is a multiplicity of devoted and purely personal approaches that count. This is tremendously important for the kingdom. And, too, Mr. Douglas helped us to see that any program of human betterment must center in the specific needs of people.

Brother Wilford G. Winholtz of Silver Spring, Maryland, also present at this conference, took the trouble to secure a copy of Mr. Douglas's address for President Edwards.

Hunger in the Karakorams

This summer I was where few Americans have been. I was on the Sinkiang border—up in the Karakorams in an area called Gilgit, Hunza, and Nagir. The habitable portion of the region is about a half mile wide and a hundred to two hundred miles long. The valleys are around 5,000 feet above sea level and the canyon walls go up as high as 28,000 feet. It is a bleak, desolate, terrifying country. Those people, in February and March, have nothing left to eat. It is one of those food deficit areas. They have enough for ten months, and the problem in March and April is to find enough out-croppings of new weeds or flowers to carry them through. Something can be done from the industrial point of view that can help them. An American, John Clark, from St. Charles, Illinois, a geologist, a graduate of Princeton, went in there two years ago. He taught these people simple industrial skills—how to make a pipe, how to turn a lathe. Up to last summer, no wheel had ever been seen in parts of this area. John Clark brought them a few of the rudiments of industrial civilization because they needed exports—something they could trade—a pipe, a piece of cloth—and send over the high passes of the Karakorams and the Himalayas, down to the Punjab in exchange for food. When this self-financed American left that region in November, 1951, he couldn't get on his horse until he had walked six miles because the people were lined up to shake hands with him, and kiss him, and thank him for coming in.

There is no other experience of mine abroad that has been as moving, from the American point of view, except one. And that was when a Negro lawyer from Chicago, Edith Sampson, stood up in New Delhi, India, and defended America on the race issue before a hostile audience.

Danger in Uncontrolled Industrialism

Industrialization is a big problem. In the Gilgit area it means doing the kind of a thing that John Clark did, teaching the people simple skills and how to utilize a few of their resources, not opening up great power projects or mines that some absentee group of stockholders will exploit. I suppose that those of you who have seen Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi, and the other big population centers of India and Asia will appreciate, as I appreciate, the great dangers of quick industrialization. If private capital were turned loose and if the physical potentialities of that part of the world were exploited in the full sense, there would easily develop in a few years the greatest sweat shops in the world. . . .

Problems of Industrialization

Industrialization even on the farms presupposes a lot in the Middle East and Asia. In 1950 I was near Kermanshah in Iran. That's up in the northwest—a big, broad valley that looks very much like the valley that stretches south from San Francisco to Los Angeles, a beautiful valley, rich in bottom land. There is a big landlord there, but not the vicious type of absentee landlord that has placed a curse upon the Middle East and Asia.

He has some model villages near Kermanshah. When I asked him about his American farm machinery that he had imported, there was sadness in his eyes. He had $500,000 worth of it, and it was all broken down; and there was not a mechanic in Persia who could fix it.

This problem of industrialization is very complicated. It includes many aspects. We have oversimplified it in our thinking. It can be done, but it will take many years and must have slow beginnings. When you see the Middle East and Asia, you begin to understand how wise a man Gandhi was and why he started talking about industrialization at the level of the home and the village.

Unjust Distribution of Aids and Benefits

In this part of the world of which I speak, eight out of ten of the babies die before they reach the age of one. We could take the simple public health measures that we know in this country, send a half dozen experts from country to country, and stop those babies from dying. Control the water supply, learn how to vaccinate for dysentery, and so on, and all would be well. But if we stopped there without more, we would be doing nothing but increasing the number of people among whom we would have to ration the poverty. We could send out our agricultural experts and we could increase the production of the land 10, 20, perhaps 50 per cent. In large portions of this part of the world of which I speak, the net return to the man who works the land is between 5 and 10 per cent of the crop; most of the rest goes to the absentee landlords. Most of them live in Paris, Rome, or Beirut. Those people who get the 5 to 10 per cent of the crop have barely enough to live on. They don't have enough to send their children to school. They don't have enough for medical care or hospitals. They don't have enough to provide what we call material civilization, such as bathrooms, water taps, electric fans, radios, rugs on the floor. These people live in dirt and misery. Increase the production of that land 10, 25, or 50 per cent and most of it will go to the man who owns the land. Some of those countries are owned by 200 men for whom 3,500,000 people work. Increase the productivity of that land and you make 200 men wealthier. Why should American taxpayers undertake that kind of a project?

America Must Not Try to Stabilize Feudalism

Those who want to stabilize that situation are the most dangerous people in the world. They are the ones most apt to accelerate the trend of that part of the world to Communism. You can't stabilize feudalism in the world today and expect to survive. . . .

One who is down at the bottom—as you would be if you were a peasant in the Middle East—would have to take desperate measures to escape. The desperate measures are to get rid of the feudalism. I have heard American officials talk about underwriting the status quo in the Middle East and Asia. That means in plain language underwriting the two hundred men in charge of a country—stabilizing the political control of a government of the landlords, by the landlords, and for the landlords. Ladies and gentlemen, it can't be done.

A Revolution

This is a revolution against control by a few men of the destinies of the great masses of the people. I've been among them—I've eaten with them—I've walked with them—I've slept with them. They are wonderful people—as fine as the people in our communities here. . . . Are we for the people or for the landlords? Don't think we can avoid the issue. We'll have to take sides. It can't be avoided. If we help them increase production, the peasants will ask, "For whose benefit is this increased production going to accrue? Is it going to accrue to us, or is it going to accrue to the man who lives in Paris?"

Our Duty to Liberate the Oppressed

I hate to think America will go down in history as the nation that made the first atomic bomb or had the finest bathrooms or the greatest television sets or the fastest motor cars. Surely America should be remembered and measured by things more important than that. What is America? What is this thing in your hearts and souls? I think America is what we put into the Declaration of Independence. It wasn't written just for ourselves. Abraham Lincoln didn't think so. When he was running for some office in Illinois about 1856 he made a wonderful speech in which he said the Declaration of Independence was designed not for Americans alone but was a document that would inspire other people to shake the weight and burdens from their shoulders the world around—the people of all races and all tongues. That's the idea of America we should spread abroad.

The Evitable Cycle

By Ladd Duryea

THROUGHOUT THE HISTORY of man a familiar cycle in his relationship to God has occurred again and again with devastating results. This cycle of four phases is now in the fourth and destructive phase for the world as a whole, but, we hope, it is—and will stay—in the second and prosperous phase for the church.

The four broad phases of this cycle are characterized as follows:

1) Man is repentant and humble and worships God in faith and sincerity.

2) Man continues to worship God and receives abundant blessings—physical, mental, and spiritual—for his righteousness.

3) Pride, greed, and worldliness creep into man's behavior, and he no longer gives credit for his prosperity to the Lord. He even comes to deny his need of God and sometimes his very existence.

4) Great destruction is heaped upon man because of his wickedness. There are "wars and rumors of wars" and often famines and pestilences. In the closing part of this phase sometimes the survivors or a particular society repent, thus going into phase one of another cycle.

This cycle, roughly analogous to the economic cycle, has occurred so often in the societies in man's history that one might wonder if it is inevitable. Perhaps the most outstanding examples of this cycle have taken place in different Nephite groups. Several times nearly all or parts of the Nephites were abundantly blessed and lived in happiness, security, and righteousness for periods ranging up to hundreds of years. But always sooner or later their prosperity went to their heads and hardened their hearts until they suffered hardships, often at the hands of the Lamanites, because of their wickedness.

IN SPITE of the many examples of this cycle found in Book of Mormon as well as biblical and secular history, though, no believer in the kingdom of God can accept this vicious circuit as unavoidable. Expressing a belief that society can never serve God faithfully and enjoy his blessings indefinitely without becoming proud, selfish, and evil is the same as expressing a belief that Jesus did not know what he was talking about. Throughout his message is the conviction that man not only can improve but also can remain in righteousness forever. In fact, it is apparently possible for man to become relatively perfect, for Jesus said, "Ye are therefore commanded to become perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect."—Matthew 5: 50.

Inherent in the church's doctrine and in its reason for being is belief in man's ability—with God's help—to attain and maintain indefinitely a high degree of righteousness. All hope for the kingdom of God on earth has as one of its premises faith in man's ability to become and remain "pure in heart."

There has been one outstanding example of a society which refused to go through the entire cycle of man's relationship to God. That example, of course, is the city of Enoch, which never passed beyond the cycle's second phase. It was so righteous for so long that the Lord "dwelt in the midst of Zion" until the city was taken to God.

But even considering that the four phases of the cycle are avoidable, there is still great danger to every society or organization that it or a portion of it will slip unconsciously into the pride, greed, and worldliness of the third phase. Very few religious institutions have been able to resist the urge to go along with the cycle. The danger is present with the church today and must be combated by every member. Every person who allows material success to boost his pride, financial and physical security to shrink his estimate of his need of God, and worldly popularity to inflate his feelings of self-importance is individually sliding down the curve toward the third and fourth phases of the cycle. In addition he is hindering the establishment of the kingdom of God, thus harming others as well as himself.

ONLY BY CONSTANT DILIGENCE can we remain in the second phase of the cycle. The physical abundance and security in our country tends to lull us into exaggerating our own self-sufficiency and underestimating our need of God. And the minute we begin to view the Lord as a luxury in the church and in our lives rather than as an indispensable necessity, we begin to skid into the third and fourth phases—into destruction and away from the kingdom of God. But the minute we reverse the trend—the minute we begin to become "diligent and humble, and exercise the prayer of faith" (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 13)—we begin to draw closer to the kingdom on earth.

We must make service to God more than a hobby, or the cycle's second phase begins to slip from our grasp. The purposes, hopes, and plans of the church are much too great, too noble, too divine for service to the church to be placed beside stamp collecting, fishing, bird mounting, and poetry-writing as hobbies. Service and devotion to the Lord is too important

Part IV

Book of Mormon Literary Style and Joseph's Education

By Maurice L. Draper

OBJECTIONS have been urged against the Book of Mormon because it carries considerable uniformity of style throughout, despite the fact that it was written by several authors whose lives extended over more than one thousand years of Nephite history and over twenty-six centuries, including the Jaredite record. There are, however, several reasons to expect a great deal of uniformity throughout the book. They are: (1) The entire record was translated by one man. His terminology and literary resources would have a leveling effect upon some of the differences in the original text. (2) A great deal of the record received by the translator was abridged by a single man. This would tend to level differences in the writings of the original authors. (3) The writings of nine of the eleven authors covered a period of only about 400 years, in which basic changes would not be as great as those observable at the extremes of the time interval covered. Most of the book falls in this period. Such changes as did occur would probably not persist markedly through the abridgments and the translation in many instances.

SINCE IT IS ADMITTED that Joseph was unskilled in handling any language at the time of the translation of the Book of Mormon, we would expect to find evidences of this in the style of the Book. And so we do. There are clumsy phrases.¹ There are errors in grammar.² There are repetitions of phraseology.³ Furthermore, since Joseph's experience with sacred literature was largely confined to the King James Version of the Bible, the phraseology abounds with seventeenth century English forms.

On the other hand, there are some reasons to expect a diversity of style in some degree in relation to the construction of the Book. In this case, the education of the translator would not be so apt to make any significant change in the differences inherent in the original account. These reasons are: (1) Part of the record is direct narrative. Part is abridgment. There should be a discernible difference between the two. (2) Part of the record deals with people of Hebraic origin with a historical background in the Middle East up to about 600 B. C. Another part deals with a colony from the Tower of Babel. In this section any references to historical or cultural influences or experiences involving the Israelites or events transpiring after the Babel experience would be highly questionable. Also the account of the Babel colony was abridged by a different man than the one who abridged the greater part of the rest of the record. We would expect to note differences in their literary style. These are differences which the limitations of the translator would not be apt to seriously affect.

THERE ARE SUCH DIFFERENCES. The direct narrative parts of the Book of Mormon are written in the first person.⁴ The abridgments are written in the third person.⁵ The direct narratives contain no editorial comments. The abridgments contain a number of such comments, including some matter introduced by Mormon to explain why he is organizing the material as he does.⁶ The record of the Babel colony is properly clear of any reference to the Israelites and has discernible differences in the style of personal names in comparison with the Nephite colony.⁷ The editorial style of Moroni differs markedly from that of Mormon. In the book of Ether, the Babel colony account, Moroni's editorials are clearly recognizable. In one place he even breaks into the middle of a sentence of historical matter to comment on the idea, continuing his editorial for more than two pages as a spiritual exhortation and personal testimony about the historical event referred to.⁸

IT CAN BE SEEN that Joseph's limited academic and technical skill would on the one hand tend to preserve some differences in style, and yet at the same time would tend to create unity of style in other respects. In each instance, the differences and the unity of style as they occur are consistent with the other facts involved—that is, English phraseology, structure of the book, historical setting, and so forth.

The prophet Isaiah told of the response of two men to the appearance of the "sealed book."⁹ When the words of a part of the book which was not sealed were delivered to a learned man, and he was asked to read the book, he was to say, "Bring hither the book." Then, when told about its miraculous appearance he would say, "I cannot read a sealed book." But when these words were delivered to an unlearned man, he would say, "I am not learned."

The prophecy was fulfilled when Martin Harris took copies of the characters to Professor Anthon for examination. Upon hearing the story of the revelation of the gold plates, the learned man repudiated the whole matter, saying, "I cannot read a sealed book."¹⁰ When the unlearned youth, Joseph Smith, received the book, he was blessed in his faith and humility with the power of God in interpretation. No man, however learned he may have been in 1827, could have fictionally produced a record like the Book of Mormon. No man could have known the facts necessary for historical accuracy. Consistency with facts now revealed about cultural and literary data, not then known, is remarkable in the Book of Mormon. Many facts about civilizations then scarcely known to have existed in pre-Columbian America, but included in the book, were not available from other sources at that time.

Had the Book of Mormon been a work of fiction, it could not stand the examination of its historical, literary, and cultural features. But about the unlearned man, the Lord said, "I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people; yea, a marvelous work and a wonder . . . the deaf shall hear the words of the book; and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness; and the meek also shall increase, and their joy shall be in the Lord; and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel."¹¹

Such a marvelous work and a wonder is the translation of the Book of Mormon through the power of God in one who said, "I am not learned."

NOTES

1. "Yea, I make a record in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews and the language of the Egyptians."—I Nephi 1:1.
2. "For it suffeeth me to say that we are a descendant of Joseph."—I Nephi 2:2.
3. "And it came to pass"—innumerable repetitions.
4. See I Nephi 1:1, 15, 67; 3:155; Jacob 1:2; 2:48; Enos 1:1; Jarom 1:1; Omni 1:1, 6, 11, 13, 18.
5. This point requires careful examination of the book with the idea in mind of observing the "person" in which the abridged sections are written. Examples are Mosiah 1:1; 7:81; Alma 8:18; Helaman 5:2; III Nephi 2:1; Ether 1:6; 1:22; 4:88; 6:91.
6. Words of Mormon, pages 204-206.
7. Differences in Jaredite and Nephite names are noted with respect to endings. Nephite names ending in vowels or vowel sounds more frequently than Jaredite names. Also Nephite names, belonging to a later and more mature culture, are more complex as shown by the syllabic chart:

	1 syllable	2 syllables	3 or more syllables
Jaredite names	21.7%	58.7%	19.6%
Nephite names	2.8%	41.4%	55.8%

8. Ether 1:95-2:5 inclusive is editorial, though the first paragraph of editorial breaks into the middle of a sentence of historical narrative in paragraph 1:94.

Daughter of the Pioneers

The Autobiography of Christiana Stedman Salyards

Part IX

Accepted by the Reorganization

From our home Uncle John went to live with his daughter in Hannibal, Missouri. She was a member of the Reorganized Church, and there he renewed acquaintance with Elder John Taylor, whom he had known in Glasgow, Scotland. Elder Taylor was pastor of Hannibal branch and Uncle John attended its services. He found there the same spiritual power that had attended the church he had joined in his youth in Canada.

He asked to be received into the Reorganized Church, and his letter of application was forwarded to the presidency of the church in Lamoni, Iowa. President Joseph Smith, who as a growing boy in Nauvoo had known him, answered, "Take the man in and ask him no questions." He was received into the church on his original baptism, and that was the good news that came to us while I was with my grandparents in Blue Rapids.

I have seen the picture of a bark stranded on a lonely shore at nightfall; beneath it were the lines:

Each wave that we danced on at morning
ebbs from us
And leaves us at eve on the bleak shore alone.

The pleasures and activities of life were all past for Uncle John, but the shore was not bleak when he found rest and peace in the church he had loved and served in his youth. But the vanished years in which he might have continued his service could not be recalled.

Early Spiritual Experiences

I have been told that the little black church has long since disappeared from the flats in Blue Rapids and that only a hole in the ground marks the spot where stood the tiny house that sheltered my grandparents and me that outstanding winter of my life. The Little Blue River arose at some time in a flood that did a work of devastation, and when a new building was erected it was in the better part of the little city.

As I had sat in that obscure little church in prayer meetings the Spirit had come and burned in my heart, and I sat in silent wonder, not understanding until I read the words of the men with whom Jesus walked to Emmaus: "Did not our heart burn within us while he talked with us by the way." I had other experiences which made me aware that I had entered into a spiritual life.

I was a guest one evening in the home of a family of Saints. They lived in a house that was built partly of logs. Alone in the living room while supper was being prepared, I picked up a small Bible that lay on a stand near me and began to read in the first chapter of the first letter of Peter. In the closing verses I read: "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you."

The words came with such a power that it seemed as if they were spoken directly to me: "This is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." As I read I was able to understand the startling emphasis with which the Spirit spoke in the heart of Martin Luther, "The just shall live by faith"; also in the heart of Joseph Smith, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God."

The whole environment under which I entered the church was calculated to impress upon me the truth so important for a young person to realize—that the beauty and glory of this world are transient and destined to pass away and that lasting beauty and glory are in the realm of spiritual things. The virtues the gospel of Christ would instill into our spirits are those that survive the passing of time. This is the beauty that does not know decay or change, the beauty with which we will adorn ourselves if we are wise.

I was young at this time and enjoyed beautiful things as all normal girls do. Just before leaving home I had bought an expensive silk dress, but I never wore it during my stay in Blue Rapids. When I began to understand the principle of equality the gospel teaches, and when I read that the Lord is not pleased to see some of his people very poorly dressed and others in rich attire, I said I never would buy another silk dress. When silk came into common use I modified my attitude somewhat, but I still think it is better to clothe ourselves in the mantle of generous love for our fellow creatures than to robe ourselves in garments of beauty that adorn only our physical bodies.

"The Spirit surviveth the things of an hour." It lives on in glory and power and makes Christ the one altogether lovely and the chief among ten thousand.

Putting on the Armor

My stay in Kansas came to an abrupt end. I went home with what has been termed "a humble set of values," a realization that "the simple, homely, unpretentious things of life are the most important."

I was called home by telegram. Father was sick. I went in March, and my sudden departure was made easier by the fact that my grandparents were with friends in Clay Center and remained there until the arrival of spring permitted them to go back to their little home.

In my Illinois home, spring budded and bloomed into summer, and June had come before Father was able to take his first drive. It was a great event in our family. We went to bed that night with lighter hearts than we had known in many months. We believed health and strength were coming back to Father and happiness to us all.

But the quiet of the June night was broken suddenly by hoarse cries and shoutings on the streets. We sprang from our beds to see a ruddy glare on the southern sky. Father knew intuitively what it was. It was a catastrophe he had dreaded and had guarded against.

Father's Career Finished

The cry was "Fire! Fire!" and he knew it was at the boatyard. Either the immense icehouse or the steamboat, on which the owner had just spent more than twenty thousand dollars, was burning. He was right. The "Joe Fleming" was ablaze and burned that night to the water's edge, set afire by a youth half crazed with drink.

What did the burning of the "Fleming" mean to us? It meant that the owner of the ice plant decided not to buy another steamboat but to hire his towing done. It meant that one man less would be required in the superintendency of his ice work. Father resigned in favor of my brother.

Father's working days were over. Many a family knows the pathos of the time when "the prop that doth sustain the house" suddenly is removed, when the one to whom the whole family has looked as a source of strength is shorn of power to do, when he who has sturdily borne the burdens of life can bear them no longer.

Those who have had the experience know what readjustments must be made as those burdens are transferred to other shoulders. They know what lessons must be mastered by the young as they learn to be leaned upon and by the old as they learn the equally hard lesson of leaning upon others. We learned those lessons in the days when Father could no longer work.

Question Time

Question:

What is the resurrection that Jesus referred to when he said, "I am the resurrection and the life"?

Washington

Mrs. W. O. S.

Answer:

It is an affirmation of the power of life and death which he held because of his divinity. He had power over his own body "to lay it down, and to take it up again." This power extended to all men also, for he says the Father had "given him power over all flesh," and that "all who are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." The resurrection is universal for all men.

Christ's power went farther than the mere restoring of life. He is not only the resurrection, but the life. He is able to give a far greater life than men now have, which greater life is called eternal life, or everlasting life. However this eternal life will not be attained by all, but only by the righteous. Their eternal status is gauged by their works and character formed in this life. Those who are still under sin in that day cannot enter the kingdom of God, for nothing sinful can dwell there.

CHARLES FRY

Question:

In the history of the beginning of the Restoration Movement we are told that God condemned all creeds. How does it happen that he was so exclusive in putting his ban on all other churches? What is his relationship to them today?

Pennsylvania

W. M. H.

Answer:

The answer hinges on two things: (1) God is consistent and unchangeable in his attitudes toward sin; (2) we must differentiate between the personal righteousness of an individual and that of man-made organizations. Christ's attitude toward the Pharisees, for instance, was one of contempt and at times aggressive attack so far as their organized movement was concerned. This was no doubt because so many truths had been taken from their teachings and so many other ideas entered in place thereof. Yet we do believe now—and Christ believed then—that every man would be judged and rewarded according to his works.

What really was meant in the statement referred to in the question was that the organized movements did not have the sanction of God because they failed to lead men into the fullness of the gospel and had a tendency to cause them to be satisfied with far less than the full gospel. Yet there were good men and women in many of those organizations who, we believe, will be rewarded for their good works.

Christ's relationship to the other churches today must of necessity continue the same. When the disciples found those casting out devils in the Lord's name, he said, "Forbid them not . . . for he that is not against us is on our part." Men and women of any or no church will be rewarded for the good they do in the world, yet the organized movements will tend to keep many good people from accepting the fullness of the gospel. In this regard they are condemned, and the situation can never change except as the creeds of the various organizations come into a unity with the divine plan of the gospel.

Question:

Jesus said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." Is this kingdom of God different from the Zion we are looking for?

Washington

Mrs. W. O. S.

Answer:

The term "kingdom of God" is used in several slightly different relations, sometimes referring to the church, or more specifically to the ideal and goal of the church, and sometimes to the organic kingdom which the church is to produce. In the first instance the church is the kingdom in prospect, holding the "keys" or powers by which the ultimate kingdom is made possible. Its whole work is toward this end, and he who seeks to build up the church, to extend and bring into practice its truth, and to establish the righteousness of God is seeking the kingdom of God and building for Zion. In the second instance it applies to Zion which the Lord says is the kingdom of God (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 9).

The relation of church and kingdom is perhaps best shown in Revelation 12: 7, I.V., in the figure of the woman and her child, the woman being the church, and the man child born of her, the kingdom of God. Of necessity the kingdom must have its first stage of development in the fostering church, and in time reach an independent existence.

The name is more generally applied to the kingdom in heaven which is more nearly perfect than it can ever be on earth. This is sometimes called "The Church Triumphant," while the kingdom on earth is "The Church Militant."

Question:

When Christ was baptized (Matthew 3: 45, Inspired Version) John "saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and lighting on Jesus." Was that the first time Christ received the Holy Ghost, or did he have it before his baptism?

California

Mrs. D. S. B.

Answer:

Upon a later occasion when God's voice had spoken from heaven, Jesus stated, "This voice came not because of me but for your sakes" (John 12: 30). This was no doubt true also of the experience referred to in the preceding question and would seem to have been specially for John's benefit, for it had been promised to him as a sign. (See John 1: 31-33.)

Actually we cannot conceive of Jesus being separated from the Holy Ghost at any time. Jesus was with the Father in the beginning and was and is the Creator of all things. (See John 1: 3, 10; Colossians 1: 16.) The Holy Ghost, being the mind and power of God and Jesus Christ, was with him before the world was. He was conceived by the Holy Ghost when taking upon himself the nature of man. Just as John was "filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb" (Luke 1: 15) so was Jesus, only in greater power.

Stepping Stones for Ezekiel

Part I

JOHN HOBART, a strong, intelligent, young Negro, joined the Northern Army to be with his master, Alexander Hobart. Before they left home Alexander's father, Dr. Ezra Hobart, called John into his study.

"John," he said, "I want you to go with my son as a free man and not as a slave. I want my family to be clean, body and soul, of this infamous traffic. Although Alex may fight against his own kin, I'm proud to have him take a stand against this evil thing. You and he have grown up as close as brothers. Now take this paper to your wife and tell her to guard it carefully for her own sake and your little son. You and your family are free; you are no longer property of mine. None of us know the outcome of this struggle, John, and you do not have to go into this war, unless you feel down in your heart a duty to your people."

The black man struggled with emotion before he could speak, then he said, "May the Lawd bless you, Marster Ezra, for your goodness, but I go with my Marster Alex, where he go, be I free man or slave, and I stay with him so long as he need me."

"Thank you, John," said the Doctor. "Good-by, and God bless you."

DR. EZRA sat alone in his study one dark night, heartsick and weary. The Northern Army had made its way to the extreme southern part of Alabama, and a battle had ensued in the city of Mobile. It had been some time since he had heard anything concerning his son Alex. He was aroused from his gloomy thoughts by an insistent tapping on the windowpane. He put out the light and went to the window, raised it slightly and asked, "Who is there?"

The answer that came from the dark shadows was scarcely above a whisper "Father, it's Alex. Let me come in."

The Doctor quietly found his way to the outside door and opened it cautiously. "Give me your left hand," he said. "Then I will know if you are my son."

The hand that was laid in his own was cold and thin, but the little finger had not changed—it was still crooked, and the Doctor drew his son from out of the darkness into the warmth of the room.

It was hard to recognize the dirty, unshaven man. He was sick and wounded. The Doctor made him comfortable for the night on the couch in the study, but early the next morning took him to the attic where he remained in hiding. Alex had not fully recovered when the glad news came that the war was over and freedom for the black people was won.

WHEN CAPTAIN ALEXANDER HOBART was able to be about, he took his cane and hobbled down to the family burying ground to stand beside a mound where the grass was new and green. He read the words on the crude wooden headboard:

"Erected to the memory of John Hobart, a brave soldier and a Christian gentleman. May his soul rest in peace."

Alex removed his hat and bowed his head. Memories crowded into his mind and brought back the old pain in his heart. His company had been ambushed, and John had stopped the bullet intended for him. He took a pencil from his pocket and wrote another line on the headboard, "He gave his life for the man who called him brother." Not long afterward, a granite stone replaced the wooden marker and the same epitaph, including the Captain's last line, was engraved upon it.

Though the war was over, the aftermath was not pleasant for either side. Families were separated by bitter quarrels, and in many localities food and clothing were scarce. Many colored persons were ignorant, bewildered and helpless against the unscrupulous overseers who hired them for the cotton fields, worked them almost beyond endurance, and then cheated them out of their wages. Malnutrition and sickness were soon rampant.

Alex and some of his sympathizing friends set up a clinic in their own community under the guidance of Dr. Ezra where the poor blacks could come for medicine and advice. But education and religion were slow in coming to Alabama. The first church which was built for the southern Negroes was not erected until 1873, and it was across the Savannah River in Georgia.

A retired schoolteacher offered his services in teaching the children. He said, "Our only hope of making it a lasting benefit is to teach the children; they in turn will help educate their parents."

A large cotton shed was made over into a crude assembly hall and discarded furniture dragged from dust-covered attics. The children of the cotton pickers were eager to come and learn about the funny little marks on the blackboard, because they were sure of milk and corn pone for lunch.

By Mabel Williams Crayne

TO THIS PLACE John Hobart's widow came bringing their six-year-old son, Ezekiel, called Zeke. They learned to read and write together. Mrs. Ezra, the doctor's wife, brought the family Bible and read to them of a God who loved all his creatures and called them his children, regardless of race or color.

A box of books came from friends up north. The gaily colored, illustrated books for children made Zeke more eager to learn how to read.

At fourteen Zeke was strong, broad shouldered, and tall like his father and had learned to ride and care for the doctor's horses. Firefly, a skittish young mare, was not yet safe for driving. Only Zeke had been on her back when the daughter of their neighbor, Colonel Atherton, became so infatuated with the horse that she begged to buy her. The doctor refused to sell the mare so the girl had to be content with bringing her sugar cubes and combing her long, beautiful mane.

One day Zeke heard her say to Alex, "I know that I can ride Firefly. Just see how fond she is of me."

Alex answered with a laugh, "Firefly is only flirting with you, Miss Kathryn. She knows how to get that sugar you have in your pocket. You had better not trust her. She has never had a woman on her back."

Kathryn tossed her pretty head and answered, "I'm not afraid, Captain Alex. I can ride any horse on our plantation. Someday I'll show you that Firefly is really fond of me."

One morning Alex went to Mobile on business. Dr. Ezra was several miles away on a call, and Zeke took the cows to the back pasture, as usual. As he came back by the highway he heard a woman scream and saw a horse rear up, then come running toward him. It took but a moment to realize that it was Firefly with Kathryn on her back. Zeke wheeled his horse about and started him running. When the frightened Firefly came alongside, Zeke reached out and caught her rein near the bit. For more than a mile the horses ran together pounding out a rhythm on the hard roadway. When Zeke finally managed to turn about and stop near Kathryn's home the humiliated girl slid off the mare's back and ran into the house without a word. Zeke walked on home leading the sweating horses.

COLONEL ATHERTON called to apologize for his daughter's behavior. "I am sorry, Doctor," he said, "that my willful daughter takes advantage of our neighbors. She has been reared to think that she has only to speak to get everything that she wants. I am beginning to realize that both my wife and I have neglected the child. You have no doubt spent more time with your colored boy, Zeke, than I have with Kathryn. That was mighty quick thinking for a boy of his age."

"My theory has always been that environment rates 99 per cent in molding the character of a child," answered the Doctor, "and a Negro boy can be taught to think and act for himself, just as well as our white children, if he is given the same consideration."

"You may be right," said the Colonel, "and there may be some truth in that old adage, 'As a twig is bent so the tree will incline,' but I'd like to take Zeke out of this environment and put him on his own—let him follow his own inclinations and see what he makes of himself."

"He is still pretty young to have adult judgment, Colonel," said the Doctor, "but what is your idea?"

"I have a friend up in Harrison County, Iowa," Colonel Atherton replied, "who has a lot of ideas like yours. The blacks and whites all go to the same school there. My friend can keep an eye on the boy without his knowing it, and we'll soon find out how much weight childhood environment carries. I've seen some pretty reckless fellows come out of the finest homes."

"That's true," said the Doctor, "but perhaps the fine homes were all that the parents contributed to their children's welfare. Many a southern woman has turned her job of motherhood over to a colored mammy and reared pretty good citizens, but it was taking a chance. If Zeke and his mother are willing, I will accept your challenge. We'll call Zeke now."

WHEN ZEKE CAME IN the Colonel extended his hand to the boy and said, "I want to thank you for saving my daughter's life. I hope she has learned a lesson."

Zeke had been unaware that he might be saving Kathryn's life. All he had thought of was his beloved Firefly who might have stumbled in her plunging and broken a leg.

"I believe you have the qualifications for making a good man, Zeke," continued the Colonel. "How would you like to go to a school where the black and white pupils study together? You will learn the ways of the North, and the people there will learn much about the South from you. Would you be willing to spend at least three years in a little town in Iowa?"

There is a colored family there where you may have board and room."

Zeke was speechless and could only stare at the speaker.

"We'll give you time to think it over, Zeke," said the Doctor, "but it's a fine opportunity for you. You'll be fifteen next month, and soon after that the fall term of school will begin. Go talk it over with your mother."

Zeke managed to say, "Yes, suh," to the Doctor and "Thank you, suh," to the Colonel. He then hurried from the room. He did not go directly to his mother. Instead he made his way slowly down the road to the burying ground and his father's grave. He and his mother had come here often; she had talked to him of his father and made him seem real to the boy. He knelt down and said, "Pappy, I sho' need you. Please help me be a good soldier like you, and what Dr. Ezra wants me to be. I know you'll understand an' not call me no coward 'cause I'm scared to go way off to that school where white folks' youngins 'll stare at me and whisper 'bout me. I'll miss you and Mammy an' all the folks jest turrible, Pappy." The tears rolled down the boy's cheeks as he continued to kneel in wordless misery. Then he remembered what Mrs. Ezra had read from the Bible just that morning. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God and he will be my son." He wondered if that meant if he could overcome being afraid and trust God, he would learn to be a good soldier. He wiped his tears on his shirt sleeve and went to his mother's cottage to talk things over.

Mrs. Hobart gave Zeke a beautifully bound Bible on his birthday with his name and age written on the flyleaf. His big smile as he stammered his thanks told her that she had touched his heart with her gift.

"Missis Ezra," he said, "could I ask you somethin'?"

"Of course," the gracious lady replied. "What is it, Zeke?"

"It's about the elders, Missis Ezra," said Zeke. "If my Mammy gets bad sick while I'm gone, where you goin' to get the elders?"

"What do you mean, Zeke? What elders?" asked the puzzled woman.

"The elders you read about in the Bible," answered Zeke. "I found it in James 5: 14, 15." He opened the new Bible and turned to the quotation, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord. And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he has committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." Where are those elders, Missis Ezra?"

A slow flush crept over the good woman's face as she answered, "I don't know, Zeke, honest I don't, but I have often wished I did."

When Zeke left for his big adventure, Alex took him to the train and said, "The Colonel insists on paying your room and board, but other than that you are on your own. It is up to you what you do with your time. It may be tough going among strangers, Zeke, but we are counting on you to make good."

WHEN ZEKE got on the train he found one section marked "White" and the other "Black," and for some time he sat all alone in the black section. He tried watching the changing scenery and fitting words to the shrieking train whistle and the rumbling sound of the car wheels, but nothing helped to take away the uneasy feeling in the pit of his stomach.

At school the white pupils didn't bother him; they just ignored him. His size and strong hands may have looked forbidding. The principal and the teachers were all women. They put him in a very low grade where there were several small black children without trying to find out how much he already knew. The children giggled to see such a big fellow in their class. The Colonel's friend must have seen this and reported it, because an explosive letter came to the principal, after which Zeke was given a test and put in a higher grade.

ONE DAY he noticed a sign over a store building that read: "Come, let us tell you of a God who speaks today. Services Sunday afternoon, 2:30; Sunday evening, 7:30." He was never sure that he would be welcome anywhere but decided that he would come back and listen just outside the door. A young man came and seeing Zeke standing there said, "Come on in, Brother. You're welcome." Reassured by his pleasant smile, Zeke entered, but sat on the back seat listening to the young man play on the portable organ. Only six people came. The speaker was an older man who explained that the Gospel of Christ was the same as Christ taught when he was on earth and the church of Christ was organized after the pattern laid down by Christ. In that church were teachers, elders, and apostles. He assured them that the Spirit of God was with those who believed on him and kept his commandments and that angels visit the earth. He told of a boy only fourteen years old who saw and talked with an angel, and of the plates he found that contained a history of a people who had lived in America long before the Indians.

The Library Key, by Zaidee Brown. Seventh edition, revised. (The H. W. Wilson Company, New York, 90c.)

Using Books and Libraries, by Ella V. Aldrich. Third edition. (Prentice-Hall Inc., New York, $1.65.)

FROM THE WORLD'S TYPEWRITERS and presses, drawing boards and paint brushes, recording machines and cameras, rolls daily a white-hot tide of recorded ideas, facts, and emotions, ready for our reading. It is not too difficult to keep abreast of these current records in our fields of interest—we merely subscribe to the periodicals and buy the books devoted to the subjects we want to know about. The real difficulty comes when we need to refer to records which have cooled down and disappeared from sight, inundated by the succeeding output.

To the library-wise that is no problem at all. They have learned to turn to that institution for information, because they know that its chief function, its primary reason for existence, is to provide the world with finger-tip control of the records that man has been making ever since he learned to write.

The homemaker who is intentionally building up the home library to serve the family's group and individual needs often finds that certain books are required only temporarily or are quite beyond her purse. If she is accustomed to using a good public library, her dilemma is solved. She makes use of this community facility—for which she has paid with tax dollars—just as she does of the local bus line or taxi service when the family car is in use by some other member of the household. And if she is fortunate enough to live where there is a great city or county library system she will be served bountifully from its huge collection of materials.

But no matter what the size or range of the community library's resources, she cannot make the most of them unless she is skilled in their use, just as she must be skilled in the use of kitchen equipment and food materials if she is to serve enticing meals out of the market's offerings.

These library-use skills can be learned. But, as in carrying on any other activity, motivation must be strong enough to power the mind and muscles to the accomplishment of the task. Motivation for the homemaker's eager pursuit of the learning of library-use skills will depend upon her understanding (1) of what the library can mean to her in terms of everyday good living, and (2) of her relation and obligation, as a citizen and taxpayer, to this educational institution.

This understanding derives from a knowledge of librarianship, its functions and implementing activities which are carried on by librarians in library buildings. In the space allotted to "The Home Library" column there is room for only a brief overview of the library profession.

LIBRARIANSHIP is no exception to the general rule that followers of all vocations invariably complain, "Nobody understands us." That is literally true. No one but the worker himself has much conception of what a given job demands in educational preparation, manual skills, energy output, physical facilities, and time.

This misconception is especially disastrous when applied to librarianship for three reasons:

(1) The universal need for reliable and quickly available information.

(2) General control of libraries issues from non-librarians who too often share the general public's uninformed and apathetic opinion that the qualitative job requirements of librarianship are the ability to read and write with a little above average skill and the willingness to take direction and a back seat. (Scouting the country, one finds that this is not a highly exaggerated picture of the public's devaluation of librarianship which inevitably has resulted in the appallingly poor library service in many public, school, and small college libraries.)

(3) The fact that the library profession does not carry on an ear-splitting campaign of publicity to educate its boss—that same public—in the profession's functions and needs if it is to discharge those obligations it has assumed. This business of two groups understanding each other is a two-way street, but in this case, one group—the public—is not traveling it, nor is the other—the library profession—hiring a piper; instead, it is trying to drown out the calliopes of a thousand more aggressive groups with only its gentle, well-documented voices.

ONE HAS BUT TO READ the program of action, termed "Four Year Goals" which was developed by the American Library Association, and adopted in January, 1948, to get some idea of what this country vitally needed only four short years ago in widely expanded and greatly improved library service, a program which was to be attained in part, at least, by 1951. (Ask your librarian to let you read the March, 1948, issue of the A. L. A. Bulletin, and see if your community library service measures up.)

Your obligation to the public library in your community is strikingly illustrated by a paragraph from a paper presented at the Joint Meeting of the Public Libraries and Trustees Division of the A. L. A. on January 30, 1948, and reprinted in the A. L. A. Bulletin in the March, 1948, issue.

The author is Robert D. Leigh; the title of the paper is "Public Library Inquiry." In writing of the professional function of the librarian, he says: "The librarian's exercise of his professional judgment is a delegated function. The community library as a public institution is subject to public control of its policy and emphasis. It will and should be checked by the informed lay opinion of the community. And care should be taken in the organization to see that overhead library boards or committees give adequate expression to the community's variety and desire."

IT IS EVIDENT that the library service in your community is no better than the community allows it to be. The Jackson County, Missouri, library system is one evidence of the truth of that statement. Residents of Independence had been talking about a new library for ten years, without result. A few years ago one of the school board members "got tired," he said, "of these years of vain talk about the subject" and decided to get busy and make the community's dream of good library service come true. Soon the drums were being beaten locally for action. Today, Jackson County has an excellent start on a tax-supported county library system under the direction of an alert and experienced librarian. The main library is in an uptown location in Independence; branches and bookmobile service assure county-wide availability of the fast-growing stockpile of informational and recreational materials.

This example of getting and maintaining good local library service shows what one informed and determined person can do to start the community to thinking pointedly on the matter and making its decision a reality. A postcard request to the American Library Association, 50 East Huron Street, Chicago, Illinois, will bring you the Association's catalog of publications about libraries. After reading a few of them you will feel that you are something of an informed person on the library subject, and your appreciation of the library service you now enjoy, or the determination to secure for your community the service it needs, will be immeasurably enhanced.

BASIC EDUCATION for professional librarianship leads to a bachelor's or master's degree in library science; many go on to securing a doctorate. A midwestern state university now offers a program of training which does not lead to a degree in library science, but does enable teacher-librarians to satisfy the requirements of the North Central Association in that respect, and supplies the training needed to operate a small public or school library.

Libraries have a long history, going back to ancient Babylonia and Egypt with their royal, sacerdotal, and commercial records made on tablets of stone and clay, and on papyrus. Of these earliest "books" only the tablets survive, but they refer to coexisting papyrus records.

Today's library holds records in many forms: books, pamphlets, clippings, serials (publications appearing periodically), music, flat pictures, films, filmstrips, slides, microprint, phonograph, wire, and tape recordings, and even three-dimensional objects, such as medals.

THE ACTIVITIES common to all libraries are listed and described in the 75-page American Library Association publication, Descriptive List of Professional and Nonprofessional Duties in Libraries, under thirteen headings: Administration, Personnel Management, Self-Development of Staff, Public Relations, Selection of Material, Acquisition of Material, Cataloging and Classification, Mechanical Preparation of Material, Registration and Circulation, Reference Work, Assistance to Readers, Physical Upkeep of Material, and Care of Shelves and Files.

In the small library all of these duties are performed by the one librarian; in the large organization, the activities are departmentalized.

This book was written not only for the use of the librarian in making job analyses, but has many other values, as it gives an over-all view of what goes on in libraries and is thus indispensable to anyone who has anything to do with making policies in public, school, or special libraries, and in vocational guidance work. The price is $1.50, direct from the Association, which publishes its material on a nonprofit basis.

BY NOW, I hope, you are enthusiastic about learning how to use your community library with competence and are properly weighed down by your sense of responsibility to it. The two publications which I have selected to recommend for your self-propelled schooling in library-use skills and listed at the head of this article are so very inexpensive and individually excellent that the ownership of both could not be considered an extravagance. One of them should be the personal possession of each high school or college student in the family, and the other find a safe place on the home library shelf with the often-used books: dictionary, the atlas, and the Three Standard Books.

A few hours of study will give the serious student a delightful feeling of assurance in using books and libraries anywhere. Let your public library serve as the laboratory of the course. Tell your librarian what you are trying to do, and after she (it is usually a woman) recovers from her amazement she will be glad to help you. I can predict, with assurance, that she would be delighted to conduct classes of earnest students, school age or adult, in using the library. The women's departments of the church might profitably start such classes in their congregations, with one of their members or the local librarian as leader or instructor. I can assure you, speaking as a librarian, that the venture is unbelievably worth while, and the experience an interesting one.

The two books may be purchased from Herald House, Independence, Missouri.

Branch Officers Elected

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA.—At a recent branch business meeting, presided over by District President Chester Metcalf, the following officers were elected: Elder Wayne Smelser, pastor; Laura Belle Bunnell Brown, church school director; Velva Smelser, treasurer; Rebecca Nolan, secretary; Mae Rhodes, women's leader; Priest Robert Creviston, Zion's League leader; Elder Charles Nolan, board of trustees; Elder Robert M. Anderson and Elder John Thompson, auditors; and Priest Leon Pollard, Sherril Dillingier and Deacon Gordon Rhodes, financial committee.

Recently baptized were William Churchill, Charlene Hall, Billy Bunnell, Betty and Mary Lutane, Janice Kay Baxter, and Benjamin Kutscheid.

The remodeling of the church building is progressing rapidly. The new pews and rostrum furniture are in, and the rostrum is carpeted. The stoning of the outside is expected to be completed in September.

Outstanding recent activities have included a crazy hat supper and a mother and daughter tea, sponsored by the women's department.

We have enjoyed the visiting ministry of W. O. Robertson, Louisville, Kentucky; Fred Passwaters, Detroit, Michigan; H. W. Burwell, Louisville, Kentucky; and Chester Metcalf, New Albany, Indiana.—Reported by BETTY ANDERSON

Priesthood Clinics Being Held

CHICO, CALIFORNIA.—On May 4 the branch was visited by Mr. and Mrs. C. Bethel of Lamoni, Iowa. "The Significance of the Cross" was Brother Bethel's topic as guest speaker. He is pastor of the Saints' Home in Lamoni.

Special Mother's Day services were held with Bishop J. Stanley Kelley bringing the message at the eleven o'clock hour. Preceding the worship service the church school gave a Mother's Day program in which the adult and junior choirs sang. Gifts were presented to the oldest and youngest mothers present, and to the mother with the most children.

The Union Choir Festival presented its annual program on the evening of May 11 at the Presbyterian church. Several of the choir members of the branch participated.

Evangelist William Patterson visited and conducted preaching services during May 15 to 30.

Chico Branch welcomes Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jones and daughter of Miami, Oklahoma.

Baptismal services were conducted for Mrs. Arthur Olsen on May 18. Pastor H. D. Hintz performed the baptism with Evangelist Patterson giving the confirmation May 25.

Three new members were added on Children's Day when Deana Glatz, John Copper, and Billye Ruthe Corron entered the waters of baptism, Priest H. M. Brown performed this rite in the natural setting of Chico Creek. Elders Walter J. Menzies and H. D. Hintz conducted confirmation services on July 6.

The junior and adult choirs participated in the Children's Day program presented by the church school, following which the pastor gave a sermonette.

Elder E. L. Hamilton, pastor of Yuba City, was guest speaker June 28. A priesthood clinic is being held alternately between Chico and Yuba City the last Sunday of each month.

Several young people, children, and adults attended the various group camps at Happy Valley Reunion Grounds. Mrs. Ira Sliger was a teacher in the junior department.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. White were honored at a party celebrating their forty-second wedding anniversary at the home of the pastor July 3. Many members and friends were present.

Graduating high school students of the branch were Jack White and Cora June Hintz, who are both planning to attend Graceland this fall.

Marjorie Hintz attended the Northern California District Alumni Association meeting in Berkeley on July 13.

Visitors recently to the branch have been Elder and Mrs. Ralph White and daughter, Edna Mary, of Washington, and District Bishop and Mrs. E. C. Burdick.

Glen Ray, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Drobny; Robin Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fagg; and Lewis Dennis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Smith, were blessed by Elders H. D. Hintz, T. R. White and Walter J. Menzies, respectively.—Reported by HELEN E. HINTZ

Seventy Holds Series

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.—Seventy W. T. Guthrie spent the week of February 10 in special missionary services. His theme for the week was "Building the Kingdom of God."

Ralph Graeson was baptized by A. A. Mehlich, pastor of the branch, on May 9 and confirmed the following Sunday.

A board of trustees has been successful in the purchase of eleven lots instead of the original four which they had been commissioned to buy. They were purchased for practically the original sum of money designated to purchase the four. Plans for the erection of a church building are in the process.

The annual business meeting was held on June 22. A. A. Mehlich was sustained as pastor, A. L. Mehlich as secretary, and John Edwards as treasurer. The following officers were elected: Bob Vitek, church school director; Lilly Vitek, music director; Wonza Simmers, publicity agent; A. H. D. Edwards, Sr., historian; A. L. Mehlich and Paul Edwards, trustees; Hobart M. Rogers and Bob Vitek, financial committee.

The Laurel Club donated $800 to the building fund which was raised by making and selling chenille flowers, bake sales, and gift shop operated during the month of December.

Babies blessed were Linda Joyce Fisher; Sharon Anita Montgomery; Michael Edgar Simmers; Jackson A. Keller; Jennifer Lee Heseltine; John Toy Long; Jan Edwards, who was blessed by her grandfather, Elder A. G. Edwards, Sr., and great-grandfather, Elder A. H. D. Edwards, Sr.; and Linda Marie Edwards; who was blessed by her grandfather, J. C. Edwards, Sr., and great-grandfather, Elder A. H. D. Edwards, Sr.

Three Districts at Reunion

GULF STATES.—The 1952 Gulf States Reunion was held June 28-July 6 at the church property in Brewton, Alabama. For the first time in the history of the reunion three newly organized districts, Mobile, Pensacola, and Alabama Districts sponsored the reunion. Personnel were Elders Percy E. Farrow, of Independence, Missouri; J. A. Pray, president of the Mobile District; Lee Oliver, president of the Pensacola District; Marvin L. Salter, president of the Alabama District; Bishop J. E. Baldwin, of Mobile, Alabama; Evangelist A. D. McCall, of Milton, Florida; and Miss Aleta Runkle, of Independence. Apostle Farrow presided over the morning worship services and occupied the pulpit nightly for the preaching services. Bishop Baldwin taught the general class, and Brothers Pray and Farrow conducted the men's class. Brother Oliver was the instructor for the young people's class and directed all young people's activities. Sister Runkle taught the class for women and assisted Gwynne Odom, of Brewton, with the music arrangements. Radio services were conducted every morning from the local station WEBJ with visiting ministers presenting the worship message. Through the courtesy of the management of radio station WATM of near-by Atmore, Alabama, the entire eleven o'clock service the closing Sunday was broadcast with Apostle Farrow preaching. Sister Irma Tillman, of Bayou La Batre, Alabama, directed the children's department, and about 160 youngsters were in attendance daily. Elder M. L. Salter, of Birmingham, served as junior pastor. Mrs. Ben L. Jernigan, of Brewton, directed the women's activities. Hillary Cook, of Pensacola, Florida, was dining hall administrator and was assisted by Sister Eunice Sellers, of Montgomery, Alabama. The meals were prepared by Elder W. T. Blue, pastor of the Negro Saints in Pensacola, with the assistance of his family. Brother and Sister George Parker, of Mobile, were in charge of the refreshment stand, and Elder Brewton Greene and George Tillman headed the housing committee. Some 300 campers attended daily, and approximately 1,500 attended the week-end services. A record offering of over $1,000 was received at the closing service of the reunion.—Reported by J. A. PRAY

District Reunion Held

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.—The district reunion convened at Pacific Palisades on Sunday, July 20, for a week of classwork, prayer and preaching services. The theme of the Reunion was "Spiritual Growth Through Stewardship."

District President John Davis was in charge, assisted by Elders Herald Wixom and Rodney Engel, Evangelist L. J. Ostertag, Bishop D. B. Carmichael, and Brother Warren Tait, director of music.

Ministers to the reunion included President Wallace Smith, Evangelist William Patterson, Seventy Glen Johnson, and Elder P. S. Whalley. Elder Glen Holmes, director of religious education for the Los Angeles Stake, conducted classes in teacher training. These visiting ministers gave inspirational help in all services and made an outstanding spiritual contribution to the reunion.

Two hundred and fifty saints were registered, but on the last Sunday there were over 400 church members in attendance.

The women of the district, under the direction of their leader, Sister Nelson Van Fleet, gave a reception for the visiting ministers and district officers. Orchids flown in from Honolulu, a gift to the family of Apostle Maurice Draper, decorated the punch table. Sister Rodney Engel and Sister Herald Wixom served punch and cookies. In a daily class held for the women, Sister Rosemond Smith was the teacher.

Brother Tait organized a junior music group, and on Saturday evening the children joined the adult choir for a program of singing. Sister Fern Roberts was responsible for the children's classwork with Mrs. Charles Calkins acting as storyteller each morning. Evangelist L. J. Ostertag acted as children's minister. The reunion committee set aside one afternoon to give the older Saints an opportunity to witness a junior classwork demonstration and to see the handcraft. Assisting Sister Roberts were the following: Edith Ross, Eura Glover, Mary Lou Walton and Sister Walton, Edna Richie, Fern Winegar, Mary Brinkerhoff, Bernice Bonham, and Herald and Dorothy Wixom.

Events that were especially enjoyable included the half hour of group and choir singing held each evening under the direction of Brother Tait with Sister Gladys Hawley as leader; Graceland night, the young people's nightly get-together under the guidance of their leader, Brother Hugh Kensler; and the talks made each night by the book steward, Brother Harry Hampton, who with Sister Hampton, had charge of the book store.

Each evening Brother and Sister Kenneth Arkley, with the help of their son Kent, took charge of a service for the children which included stories, songs, and movies.

Sister John Davis was responsible for the children of nursery age. Sister Rodney Engel, R.N., was in charge of first aid.

Visitors included Sister Bernice Bonham, Sister Anna Belle Peers, and Dr. and Mrs. Charles Grabske and son Robert, all from Independence, Missouri.—Reported by PHYLLIS CARMICHAEL to be placed in a secondary position in anybody's life. The kingdom requires the full heart.

Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land.—Doctrine and Covenants 65: 7.

If we begin to slip over the crest of the curve of this cycle into the third phase, we are slipping away from Zion. If we remain in the second phase—and I believe that with individual exceptions we are—we are making a spiritual incline out of the cycle and climbing closer and closer to the kingdom of God on earth. And as the number of individual exceptions decreases, the faster we shall climb.

The story was new and wonderful to Zeke. He had found "the elders." After the service the men came and spoke to the people but only Zeke's shining eyes showed more than a casual interest. He came again that evening, and there were eight listeners. After the service the speaker came to him and said, "You seem very much interested, my boy. Would you like to learn more about this message brought by an angel?"

"Yes, suh," said Zeke. "I sho' would."

"Good! I'll give you these books, and I hope you'll study them," said the man. "I'll write my name and address in one of them. Tell me, where is your home?"

Zeke was happy to tell him about his southern home and family, and how he came to be in this little Iowa town.

"You have indeed found the elders spoken of in your Bible," assured the man. "Remember, God knows no difference in race or color. When you need him, pray."

The next day the sign was gone from the store building; the witnesses for Christ had moved on hoping for more fertile fields. Zeke spoke to his landlady about them. He wanted to tell her about "the elders" in the Bible, but her answer was, "I guess you mean them Mormon fellers that was here. I wouldn't have no truck with that religion." He said no more, but carefully guarded the books he had been given. He would take them home to show Mammy and Mrs. Hobart.

The Road Goes on Ahead

By Carol Freeman

THAT EARLY SEPTEMBER DAY unfolded a chilly, misty dawn—not a very good beginning for a trip back to school. By the time the station wagon was piled to its roof with suitcases, boxes, tennis rackets, overshoes, and the many other items girls find to carry to college, a drizzling rain was falling. The weather made conditions for our journey far from ideal. Driving was hazardous because of the slippery pavement and blanketing mist. But the open road and world of new experiences were ahead of us. And we were eager to follow and learn.

My companions were Margaret and Helen, the type of friends with whom one enjoys sharing thoughts and experiences. We were leaving Independence to return to Graceland for our sophomore year. The thrill and expectancy of our early return to college kept us chattering idly for the first several miles. Then, as driving became more difficult, we ceased talking and concentrated on the road ahead.

Anyone acquainted with U. S. Highway 69 between Independence and Lamoni knows that it is considered to be a dangerous route. There are just enough straightways to entice the driver into speeding and just enough unexpected hills and curves to throw him off his course. By this time we had each traveled the road enough times to feel assured of our knowledge of the danger zones. However, the rain and mist of that day checked our confidence, and we relied on the alertness of each other for our safety.

AS WE RODE ALONG, I reminisced of the preceding year and remembered the day I had first gone to Graceland. The road ahead had been unfamiliar then. The future had seemed as strange and uncertain as each twist and turn of the highway. I sat on the edge of the car seat and watched every house, barn, and tree go by. Each roadside stopping place beckoned to me. I was aware of every crossroad, and all country lanes held a mystery for me. I half-

Here Is the Writer . . .

CAROL FREEMAN, now of Independence, formerly of Houston, Texas, is a 1952 graduate of Graceland College where she was a member of the Crescent Club, editor in chief of the "Acacia," and a Silver Seal winner in journalism. Her principal hobby is playing the cello, which she has studied at Houston Conservatory, the Conservatory of Music at Kansas City, Kansas University, and Drake University. Since graduation from Graceland she has done advertising and layout for Herald House.

heartedly wished to be detained, but my way was well charted. The road went straight ahead.

On that day of deceptive mist and rain, as we three depended on each other for help, I sensed that among us we had surpassed the road's enticings. One year of living with the highest ideals, standards, and types of people contrasted against lower types of existence had helped us to make our principal decisions, set our goals, and be satisfied while attempting to attain them. For me alone, the trip would have been difficult and dreary. But with the familiarity of past experiences and the oneness between myself and my two companions, the journey was an inspiration.

HELEN, MARGARET, and I mentioned many things that morning. We talked of the friends who had helped us to straighten out the twists in our own roads and taught us why the curves were necessary. We thought of many friends who were facing similar situations as we—as they, too—traveled an open highway.

We voiced our belief in the doctrines of the church, but emphasized points of concern that existed in our own minds. We asserted our faith in the active program and goals of the church, but realized there was much more we could do to make these plans succeed.

We discussed the need of trying more intensely to improve ourselves in the next year through service, participation, and study. We felt ourselves privileged to be in a position to be able to serve others more completely, participate more actively, and study more avidly.

Then we rededicated all the times of our lives to the high ideals of Reorganized Latter Day Saint womanhood and instilled the challenge of better living in the hearts of one another.

As we talked the miles away, the rain disappeared and the sky partially cleared. Through the vanishing mist, the road opened before us, and our way was much easier. The stopping places kept beckoning to us, but we passed them by. We could only heed a more powerful calling. Our goal lay straight ahead. We realized that this ultimate stopping place was challenging the best in our minds and souls, and we were eager to arrive there.

New Horizons

TODAY, as I think back to that time, I can well remember that the main highway didn't turn west on the outskirts of Lamoni and lead up to Graceland's hill. It didn't swerve east, nor did it turn back and retrace its route. The road went on ahead. It went on to new places and more experiences. It led to different danger zones and perhaps more treacherous territory. I realize that the learning involved in making one part of the highway safe to travel will make the next section less difficult.

The reunions, youth retreats, and youth camps I have attended have all been cherished, valuable stops to me. But my travels do not lead to any of these places. The courage, faith, and strong ideals I have gained from all of them have sent me on ahead inspired with new and better convictions to do new and better things. My road is charted with stopping places at future reunions and conferences, but it continues to go ahead.

The places I have stopped to study and learn to develop my talents have also been edifying. I have been stimulated to think past the horizon and to work to build my own road through talks with keen minds and explorations in the printed world of questions and possible answers. But my road doesn't lead to any famous conservatory or illustrious professor's studio. These are only stopping places.

I have stopped for two short years at Graceland. There I have been able to melt all my thoughts and goals into a streamlined, flexible plan for building a Zionics Reorganized Latter Day Saint life. I have spent some time rechecking all the things I learned before these past two years. I have tried to discard all the detrimental things and instill all the beneficial ones more firmly. I have gone ahead of my abilities with my desires, but I have seen and learned the vision of the future.

Highway 69 doesn't end in Lamoni. Nor does my road end there either. I visualize what is in my future. The road goes on ahead.

Delores Tandy

Young People in the News

Celia Fry and Delores Tandy

CELIA FRY AND DELORES TANDY of Independence made an extended tour of the east this summer. With David Freeman, Douglas Hagan, and two William Chrisman High School instructors, they journeyed to Boston for the National Forensic League Tournament which was held June 23-27.

This was the third year that Celia, daughter of Elder and Mrs. Evan A. Fry, had attended the national tournament. Her first trip was to Kenosha, Wisconsin, and the next to Los Angeles. At the Kenosha contest she progressed to the semifinals in original oratory. The next year she won second in the nation for extemporaneous speaking. At Boston this year she again won second place in this same division.

This was the first trip to the national contest for Delores, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Tandy. She and David were entered in debate and progressed two rounds past the preliminaries.

Both girls had entered the Missouri State NFL Contest at St. Louis in the spring and had been declared champions in their respective fields, thus making them eligible to attend the national contest.

Their trip included many other spots of interest besides Boston. They traveled through Washington, D.C., and had an audience with Mr. Truman. From Washington they traveled to Atlantic City, and from there went to New York where they viewed "Everything from the Bowery to the Empire State Building." After the tournament they made one more side trip to Niagara Falls, then returned home via Kirtland Temple.

Both girls have made splendid contributions to school, community, and church life. This past year at school Celia was president of the National Forensic League chapter, a junior member of the National Honor Society, a member of the Spanish Club, and William Chrisman High School Orchestra, and an honorary member of the As You Like It Dramatic Society. Delores was active in student council, being co-chairman of the elections committee, vice-president of the National Forensic League Chapter, chairman of the William Chrisman High School Orchestra, sponsor captain for the annual ROTC ball, a member of the Spanish and Latin Clubs, a junior member of the National Honor Society, and honorary member of the As You Like It Dramatic Society.

At high school graduation this June both were classified as being in the upper 5 per cent of their class. Both gave commencement talks and were designated as co-winners of the Independence Music Club scholarship. Celia was also given an award by the Independence Bar Association for being the outstanding speech student.

In community activities both girls belong to the Independence Music Club and play in the Independence Symphony Orchestra. They also sang in the Messiah Choir last Christmas. For the past three years they have been awarded first ratings at Missouri state contests for their piano playing.

Celia and Delores attend the West College Street Church, and are city-wide Zion's League officers. Celia is vice-president, and Delores is music chairman. Both are members of the worship committee, which plans the 9:30 programs each Sunday morning. In addition, they often play the piano or direct the music for various church services.

As an Oriole, Delores attained First Rank Builder and earned the Light of Life Award. She is now helping her mother with an Oriole circle. Celia taught a church school class of junior boys.

This summer the two girls have been working part time at the Auditorium: Delores in the Department of Religious Education, and Celia in the Stake Youth supervisor's office. They will attend Graceland this fall.

Delores and Celia are close friends, and each is pleased whenever the other adds another achievement to an already long list.

succeeded in getting some favorable advance publicity in the Decatur Review with cuts of Apostle Chesworth and myself. He also wrote words of a song to be used with the tune, "Open My Eyes," as follows:

O Lord, we gather here this day,
Intent to worship in thy name,
We come with humble, contrite hearts;
And with glad voices we do sing,
Our strength is in these walls of thine,
Our joys and sorrows shared by all;
We feel thy eternal purpose now,
We hear thy call.

With willing hands we help to build,
This edifice to fortify
Against the evil of the day,
To bring thy kingdom ever nigh.
Accept our offering, Lord Divine,
We humbly bear thy cross with thee;
O guide us in the path of light
Eternally.

ENGAGEMENTS

Thomason-Hyde

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hyde of Lamoni, Iowa, announce the engagement of their daughter, Janice, to Lt. Myron Thomason, son of Mrs. Vera Thomason of Independence, Missouri. Janice attended Graceland College and is now in nurses' training at the Independence Sanitarium. Myron, a graduate of Graceland and the University of Kansas, has just returned from Korea and will be stationed at Ft. Benning, Georgia.

Jackel-Engelhard

Mr. and Mrs. Louis F. Engelhard of Ellsworth, Michigan, announce the engagement of their daughter, Doris Rae Jean of San Antonio, Texas, to Raymond Tillman Jackel of Corpus Christi, Texas, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus T. Jackel of Edinburg, Texas. Doris is a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing, and Raymond is a graduate of Graceland College. The wedding will take place in October.

WEDDINGS

Coven-Rieske

Glendora Rieske, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Rieske, Sr., of Lewisburg, Ohio, and Glenn R. Coven, son of Eugene R. Coven of North Charleroi, Pennsylvania, were married August 2 at the Reorganized Church in Dayton, Ohio. Elder Rieske, the bride's father, read the double-ring service. Both bride and groom are graduates of Graceland College. They are making their home in North Charleroi where the groom is continuing his studies.

Wright-Nipper

Dorothy Nipper, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Nipper of Buhl, Idaho, and Pfc. William O. Wright of Conception Junction, Missouri, were married August 1 at the Reorganized Church in Hagerman, Idaho. Elder Lyle Gilmore performed the wedding ceremony.

Leslie-Everhard

Janice Everhard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Everhard of Diamond, Missouri, and John T. Leslie, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Leslie of Joplin, Missouri, were married June 6 at the Christian Church in Diamond. Elder James Daugherty performed the wedding ceremony.

Lacy-Bybee

Betty Bybee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Auty Bybee of Joplin, Missouri, and Allen B. Lacy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Lacy of Waco, Missouri, were married at the home of the bride's parents on July 13. Elder Fred Graves officiated.

Williams-Simpson

Maxine Simpson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Simpson, and Rufus Williams of Racine, Missouri, were married on July 11.

BIRTHS

A daughter, Denise Eileen, was born on August 7 to Mr. and Mrs. Vern Rogers of Beloit, Wisconsin. Mrs. Rogers, the former Barbara Jackson, is a graduate of Graceland College.

A son, Brian David, was born on July 25 to Mr. and Mrs. David K. Larmour of Edmonton, Alberta. Mrs. Larmour is the former Gladys Cobb.

DEATHS

HANSON.—Dr. Frank H., son of Frederick and Christina Hanson, was born January 12, 1876, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and died August 6, 1952, at Magnolia, Iowa, following several years of illness. He was graduated from the University of Nebraska Medical College in 1902 and took his postgraduate work at Poli Clinic in Chicago and Northwestern University College of Medicine. He served on the staff of the Lord Lister Hospital in Omaha for many years, was past president of the Harrison County Medical Society, and served as its secretary for twenty-five years. On November 18, 1903, he was married to Jennie E. Scott, who survives him. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 15, 1893.

Besides his wife he leaves a son, Harold, of Logan, Iowa; two brothers: Paul M. Hanson of Thurman, Iowa, and George F. Hanson of Point Arena, California; and two sisters: Mrs. F. F. Wipper of Fresno, California, and Miss Ethel Hanson of Point Arena.

BARRETT.—William Floyd, son of William Adney and Jane Fidler Barrett, was born February 22, 1876, near Adel, Iowa, and died August 2, 1952, in Broward General Hospital in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 10, 1930.

He is survived by his wife, M. Viola; a son, Frank J.; and five grandchildren, all of Ft. Lauderdale. Funeral services were conducted by Lester Tankersley and H. L. Kelly at Fannin Chapel in Ft. Lauderdale. Interment was in Lauderdale Memorial Park.

MOORE.—William Shelton, was born July 31, 1924, in Iola, Kansas, and died July 23, 1952, at St. Francis Hospital in Wichita, Kansas, of injuries received in an automobile accident near Wichita. He was a graduate of Humboldt High School, Chanute Junior College, and Kansas State Teachers' College.

During World War II he served in the European Theater and was a member of the Army Reserves and Veterans of Foreign Wars. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1933. At the time of his death he was an employee of Boeing Aircraft in Wichita.

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Moore; a brother, Chester O. of Iola; a foster brother, Merle Lowe of Fulton, Kansas; and two sisters: Mrs. Roy Trammell and Mrs. Hugh Follman of Humboldt. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Myron LaPointe. Burial was in Mount Hope Cemetery, Humboldt.

BECKER.—Rosa, was born June 29, 1880, at Tecumseh, Texas, and died July 13, 1952, at Fossil, Oregon, while visiting her daughter. She was married on December 18, 1893, to Carl F. Becker. In 1901 they moved to Oregon, and in 1913 to Woodland, Washington, where she was residing at the time of her death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1904.

She is survived by her husband, Carl; five sons: Arthur of Sequim, Washington; Milton of Woodland; Willard of Warrensburg, Missouri; Harry and Roy of Kalama, Washington; four daughters: Marie Garthright of Seattle, Washington; Marguerite Smith of Fossil; Hattie Bowie of Ojai, California; and Mollie Mitchell of Woodland; two brothers; two sisters; twelve grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Funeral services were conducted by Elder J. L. Verhei. Interment was in the Kalama cemetery.

GENSON.—Julia C., daughter of Anthony and Adelaide Ewing, was born March 20, 1861, at Hull's Prairie, Ohio, and died June 15, 1952, at Traverse City, Michigan. She was married on August 4, 1881, to Samuel Genson of Sugar Grove, Michigan, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1896.

Surviving are a son, Warren Genson, and a daughter, Mrs. Blanche Hill, both of Mason County, Michigan; fifteen grandchildren; and thirteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Charles Martin. Interment was in Sugar Grove cemetery.

LOY.—Lorraine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Archie L. Gulembo, died July 11, 1952, in Owosso, Michigan, at the age of twenty-nine. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for eighteen years.

She is survived by her husband, Charles Loy; a son, David; a daughter, Cheryl; her mother, Lillian Gulembo; three sisters; and one brother. Funeral services were held at Stephen's Chapel in Scottville, Elder Charles Martin officiating. Interment was in Sugar Grove cemetery.

* THE CRYSTAL BALL

Sometime you must have heard of the "crystal ball." It is a round piece of glass, mounted on a small pedestal, into which a Hindu mystic looks to see the future, find lost jewelry, or learn something about the dark gentleman who is soon to come into the life of the lady who is inquiring. Some who have used them have confided that there is nothing in the crystal ball that has any power. It is merely a convenience for concentration. A glass of water would do as well. Everything that comes is from the mind of the mystic.

I was amazed recently to read a weekly letter published in the National Capital for businessmen. In the letter a single incident in the administrative offices was interpreted as affecting a dozen or more lines of major industry and high finance, with predictions falling to right and left in copious array. It was all very neat, orderly, and speculative. It was as reliable, and no more reliable, than the swami's crystal ball.

Amazement goes further as one contemplates some of the great weekly news magazines. Not content with reporting what has happened and analyzing it, but eager to keep ahead, they devote much time and space to what is going to happen. It is the crystal ball again.

Of course, we are concerned with what is going to happen. Success or failure in many a business depends upon the ability to look ahead and see what will happen. Yet the effort to predict the future leads to many errors and false leads. The crystal ball is an entertaining device, but not a reliable guide.

* CONVERSATIONS

On a bus it was our fortune recently to sit by a nun. Generally nuns travel in pairs and talk only to each other. We supposed the rules forbade them to speak to strangers and prepared for an interval of silence. But this one spoke, and soon we were engaged in a discussion of the Scriptures, religion, and other things. The charms of this lovely small Mary could not be hidden, nor her good will repressed, even under the voluminous folds of her religious garb. She was a nurse, returning to her hospital after a short vacation—a "retreat"—at one of the convents in the city. "All kinds of people come to a hospital, needing care," she said. "Some are kind and easy to care for. Others make it more difficult for themselves—and us. When the body is sick, the mind often suffers too."

Then she was much interested, as a professional nurse, in an explanation of the Parable of the Good Samaritan as the story of a hospitalization: The traveler, beaten and robbed, was the patient. The Samaritan was a first-aid man. Wine was the antiseptic, oil an unguent. The donkey was the ambulance. The inn was the hospital, and the innkeeper was the nurse and hospital staff. . . . Then we told her of the beautiful tribute to the physician in the Apocrypha—Ecclesiasticus 38, a sketch written many centuries ago by a sensitive and discerning teacher in Jerusalem.

When she left the bus at her destination, she expressed her enjoyment of the visit, shook hands, and said good-by. If more representatives of religion could be as kind, churches would be filled.

F. Edward Butterworth

FEW OF OUR MISSIONARIES have had the experience of being able to organize and train a band outfitted with uniforms to play for the governor of a state or province as did Seventy Edward Butterworth on Christmas Eve of 1949. In the official journal of Tahiti the following day this notice appeared: "Our compliments to Te Ekareisia Sanito for the lovely program of orchestral music. The orchestra appeared in uniforms of blue and gold and was the central attraction of the evening. We shall look forward to more concerts from L'Orchestre Sanito."

Besides being an accomplished musician he is an inspiring missionary preacher. His first appointment was in 1940 in the Northwestern Mission. Perhaps fate took a hand then, for he was appointed as pastor at Oklahoma City, where he became acquainted with Lilly Raye Howard, to whom he was married in 1944. They have three children: Gary Edward, 4; Cheryl Jean, 2, and Janis Kay, 4 months. Brother Butterworth graduated from high school in Independence, Missouri, in 1936 and took university courses at both Oklahoma City and Kansas City Universities. Following his marriage he was ordained a seventy, and he and his wife went to the Tahitian Islands, where he remained until a year ago. His present appointment is Detroit International Stake.

Born in Woodbine, Iowa, in 1918, he came to Independence in his youth and was baptized at the Walnut Park Church, where he was an active worker in young people's activities until the time of his appointment to the field.

While in the Islands he was instrumental in getting some doctrinal and historical literature published in the native tongue.

He is a personal friend of Mr. Bengt Danielsson, one of the members of the Kon-Tiki Expedition who floated to Polynesia on a balsam wood raft from Peru. His lectures with colored slides of Island scenes are always popular.

News and Notes

OAKMAN REPORTS ON TRIP

Apostle Arthur A. Oakman reports that President Israel A. Smith, Bishop Henry Livingston, and he visited ten different European countries while on their recent trip. High points of the trip, according to Brother Oakman, were the priesthood institute at Birmingham, England; the dedication of the new church at Hannover, Germany; and the mission reunion at Enfield, England. He stated, "The three of us are encouraged by the strength of the church in Great Britain where Elder Don Lents has been excellently received. Brother Louis Zonker and family are in Hannover living in the mission house and he is at present touring southern Germany with Brother Oskar Stuve." Apostle Oakman plans to return to Europe at the beginning of the new year.

W. W. SMITH RETURNS HOME

President W. W. Smith and family will leave from the Northwest en route home this week.

PREACHES AT TOPEKA

Elder Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, preached in Topeka, Kansas, August 24, in conjunction with a two-week missionary series which had been conducted by Seventy James Daugherty.

THEYS FAMILY IN STATES

Seventy Gene Theys and family have returned to Independence from Europe. Brother Theys reports that they left Rotterdam August 12, and went to Paris completing passage on the U.S.S. "United States." On August 15 they took a train from Paris to Le Havre. They arrived in New York on August 19 and reached Independence on August 22.

ATTEND AUDIO-VISUAL CONFERENCE

Apostle and Mrs. Reed M. Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. Stele Bryant, Arthur Rock, Mrs. Jeanne Scott Miller, and Kenneth Raveil attended the Ninth Annual International Audio-Visual Workshop at Green Lake, Wisconsin, sponsored by the National Council of Churches. The major emphasis at this year's workshop was placed on visualizing the Bible and the missionary aspect of visual aids, according to Brother Holmes. The workshop convened August 31-September 5.

RALSTONS LEAVE INDEPENDENCE

Seventy and Mrs. Russell Ralston and family left Independence August 27 to return to Salt Lake City, Utah, where Brother Ralston is appointed. They have been in Independence during the illness and death of their young daughter, Lynne Rae, who was fatally stricken with polio.

RAYTOWN GROUP MOVES

Seventy Al Scherer of the Kansas City Stake reports that the Raytown, Missouri, congregation has outgrown its former accommodations and has moved to 6398 Thomas Street. Brother Scherer reports that progress in this group is outstanding and that they have doubled the number of classes in the church school.

"GREEN PASTURES" GIVEN BY LEAGUE

The Walnut Park Zion's League presented "Green Pastures" at the Campus in Independence August 18 and 19. Approximately 1,500 people attended the two performances. The

When Satan Came to Church

"There was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them."
—Job 1: 6

IF YOU WERE PRESENT the day that Satan came to church, you had an experience you will not forget in a long time. We couldn't see him of course; but we could feel him, like the torrid invisible wind moving the branches of the trees, withering the flowers, drying the perspiration on our faces without cooling us and making even our eyes feel hot.

The windows were open, but still the little church felt like an oven. The congregation had made a sacrifice in comfort to dress up in Sunday clothes and come. Anything that could serve as a fan was used, from the funeral cardboard-on-a-stick kind to an open, dog-eared hymn book. As the pastor looked down at his people, the broken rhythm of their moving arms and fans was like a troubled sea, and the gift of insight often accorded to the presiding officer warned him that this Sunday would not be one of the better days at church. Defensively, he sent up a prayer for help, and he would certainly need it before that hour was closed.

PROBABLY it began—few but the pastor were aware of the precise instant that a sinister presence wafted in through the open door on the breath of that hot, dry wind—when Sister Whimper's youngest child, a baby son in arms, started to cry. Having been teased at home by older brothers and sisters, his voice had developed a loud, belligerent quality meant to reach Mother's ears even if she was down at the barn gathering eggs. Mr. Whimper never came to church to help take care of the other four of his progeny, and they were restless and noisy too. Located at the right front of the church, they provided a sound barrier over which it was very difficult for those behind to hear the minister's voice.

AT THE LEFT FRONT another kind of disturbance was going on. Sister McCackle, whose faintest whispers could be heard in the back row, gossiped at (not with) Sister Mild, who hadn't the courage to reprove her. Back of them sat Brother Critical, who was irritated because he could not hear the sermon. He did not go far enough to understand the trouble, and took the easy course of blaming the pastor. "He isn't much of a preacher, anyway," Brother Critical mused. "I don't know why we keep on electing him." And from this moment he let his thoughts go wandering out the window to a field where the thirsty corn, standing with its roots in dry clods, held up wilting leaves to the scorching sun.

Sister Poor was unhappy because she didn't have a new frock, and she couldn't help resenting the fact, especially on this Sunday, that other women were better dressed. Sister Envie criticised Sister Rich's hat. Brother Bulbous, uncomfortable in his fat, had a grievance against the world from which not even the church was exempt.

As you think back to that day and try to analyze the situation, you will remember all these things, and some dozens of other details that made a consistent pattern of the emotional and spiritual condition of the church at that time. Surely, if there is anything at all to the scriptural explanation of the forces of Good and Evil, as you can see it, Satan came to church that day.

FOR SOME MOMENTS—sensing the spiritual condition among his people, feeling the sinister presence that had intruded itself into the hour and the place of worship—the pastor looked down at his congregation with a distressed heart.

He prayed silently while he was preaching—have you ever faced an emergency where you had to divide mind and spirit between your prayer and your sermon? Until you do, you will never realize the spiritual resources that God has given you. But to resume—while he was preaching and praying, the Spirit spoke comfort to him, and he sensed the peace that would come after this trial had passed. As in the case of Job, Satan would make a great effort, would seem to win, but would lose in the end.

THE PASTOR looked down at his congregation again. Understanding came to him, and he apprehended that there were some among the people so spiritually alert that they knew what was happening. He saw lips moving in silent prayer, and he knew they were praying for him and the church. The spiritual strength of his people, aided by that divine Power that comes in great emergencies, were uniting for a purpose. In a little while, the sinister presence had been overcome, and departed invisibly as it had arrived. Another influence replaced it.

Little things happened. The Whimper baby, tired, fell asleep. The other children quieted down, aware of a difference in atmosphere. Those who had gossiped felt ashamed. As the pastor's sermon gained in spiritual power, a blessing was felt by the people. Even Brother Critical reconsidered his severe attitude. He would shake hands with the pastor at the close of the service.

It was quite a day, a memorable day, when Satan came to church. He came; he found little threads of discord he could pick up; he found some hearts he could touch. But he had not reckoned with the Spirit of God, nor with the spiritual resources of the people. He could not keep the things he found. He had to give them up. So he went away. And that closes the account just about the way it should be closed. L. J. L.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

FROM A RECENT REPORT reaching our desk we present some data on church growth in America with comments on its significance to the church.

Nearly three out of every five Americans are members of a church or other religious body—a new high in the history of the nation.

This fact was emphasized in a recent report of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

According to the report, church membership in America in 1951 increased 2 per cent over that of the previous year. Our church record for the same period indicates a 2.11 per cent increase, which means that our missionary effort was on a par—actually a little above—with the average increase for all religions. An interesting factor in this part of the report, however, is the fact that the growth of religion continues to outstrip the nation's growth in population. This has been the case since 1940, but was not true during the previous ten-year period.

"There is statistical evidence," said the report, "that the people of the United States turned to the churches in a period of war, international crisis and the atomic age—1940-1950—to a much greater extent than during either the depression years of the 30's or the relatively prosperous years of the 20's. Church membership has increased throughout the nation's history and during the past 100 years has been steadily upward, but never so rapidly as since 1940. Between 1940 and 1950 church membership increased 34 per cent; population 15 per cent. Church members now constitute 58 per cent of the population, compared with 49 per cent in 1940 and 47 per cent in 1930."

Our members will be interested to know that our growth has not followed the above stated trend. Our increase during the 40's was 14.8 per cent, or less than half the national average. However, those were war years when we were operating with a smaller appointee group. Also, the type missionary work, the methods used, and the fact that we do not practice infant baptism nor count blessed babies as members, are all important factors. Many other churches grow quickly during a period when the birth rate turns sharply upward.

Nina G. Smith Memorial Loan Fund

The Independence Music Club is pleased to announce the applications for loans from the Nina G. Smith Memorial Loan Fund will now be accepted.

The idea of a loan fund was conceived by a group of Sister Smith's friends—all members of the Music Club—who wished to establish a perpetual memorial to the memory of one who was a fine musician and always interested in the musical education and development of young people.

This loan has been established as a trust for the education of worthy young people in musical endeavor. It is hoped the fund will be increased through gifts of individuals and organizations.

The terms of the trust have been approved by the Independence Music Club and also by President Israel A. Smith.

The trust is administered by a board of three trustees: Mrs. Nell Kelley, Mrs. Mark Holman, and Mrs. Pearl Gardner, all of Independence, Missouri.

All applications are to be sent to Mrs. Glen Faler, 608 Porte Cima Place, Kansas City, Missouri.

The Unplumbed Depths

By Ward A. Hougas

From a sermon given at Denver, Colorado, May 18, 1952

I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, those who are out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry. For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

—II Timothy 4: 1-8.

THE STEPS that lead to God are sometimes obscure and difficult to discover. Most of us fail rather miserably in trying to find them. Judged by eternal standards at the end of our lives, we shall find we haven't done very well.

Paul was near the end of his career. He looked back with some measure of assurance and a degree of triumph, realizing somewhat that in spite of what had happened in his life, he had finished on an "up note." Tradition suggests that he spent his final days in a dungeon hewed out of solid stone. A single pillar left in the center of the cell had attached to it a kind of stone table. On this table he wrote his last letter to Timothy, apparently a short time before he was marched out on the Appian Way for his last journey.

In this epistle he poured out his soul, trying to impress upon Timothy—and through him upon us and generations yet unborn—that despite the cost, living for Christ is worth while.

I like the way Moffat, in his translation, writes it: "The last drops of my sacrifice are failing; my time to go has come; I have fought the good fight; I have run my course; I have kept the faith. Now the crown of good life awaits me."

Paul's Great Adventure

For Paul it had been a long journey with many years of pushing out over land and sea. Many times he was in difficulty—shipwrecked, beaten, imprisoned. Nearly everything that could happen to a man happened to him. Often he was discouraged and ill and it seemed to him there wasn't any way he could go on. Yet he was always triumphant, always teaching, always stimulating, always reaching out and lifting somebody up with a love which marked him as different from other men.

What was it that kept him going and led him step by step closer to divinity? What was it that enabled him, after his journey in life was over, to face his closing days with no admittance of fear, gloom, or regret?

To Paul life was a great adventure. Despite his hardships he believed the adventure of life 1,900 years ago was worth while. The picture hasn't changed; as long as man continues to reach out and attempt to approach God, there will continue to be something strange and alluring in this life which enables him to come up face to face with death and still talk about that experience in terms of triumph.

Some years ago when I was living in St. Joseph, Missouri, I was called one afternoon to visit a member who had been in poor health. That afternoon he was sitting in his armchair as usual. I asked him how he was, and he said smilingly, "All right." Then he said, "Brother Hougas, when a man faces death, he wants to talk about the things which have to do with his relationship to his Master." And for more than an hour we talked about death, the resurrection, and what his condition would be in the world to come. Within two hours after he said good-by to me, he was in the Sunset World learning how nearly right I had been in the explanation I had attempted to bring to him. He had faced what he knew was inevitable with no sign of fear or doubt. While he had made mistakes, he had also experienced some triumphs; and as he came to that last hour, he was absolutely unafraid.

Greatness or Oblivion

This statement by John always confronts us: "And whoever wants to save his life shall lose it, and whoever will lose his life for my sake, shall find it." We have the life of the rich young man contrasted with the life of Paul. One refused the call; the other accepted it. The materially rich man returned to his possessions and became poor indeed. We return to our possessions rather continuously too. Our prizing material possessions is evident in practically every move we make. We have money for everything, generally speaking, except the kingdom of God. We have time for everything, generally speaking, except the kingdom. We have energy; but we spend it for everything except the one thing which will take us toward God.

The rich young man who came to Christ is never mentioned again in Scripture. The one who accepted the call has been known down through the centuries; and his strength, support, and encouragement are still lodged in millions of souls. No doubt as long as time shall last his name and the stimulation of his ministry will be spread upon countless pages in many languages. The difference between the two men was one decision.

Follow the footsteps of Paul in the spiritual realm. He began not as Paul the Apostle, but as Saul the persecutor. He moved from that wicked condition to one of the most exalted positions a man could ever reach. Follow his progress in his secular life from a well-trained son of man to a well-trained son of God. Even when the way was bloody he continued to move forward under a radiance which gave him strength and power.

It Is Sacrifice

Much of the suffering and difficulty in the world comes to us through blind tradition, jealousy, prejudice. Sometimes it seems that we have little control over them. I think sometimes that humanity is willfully wicked as well as innocently blind. Between these two positions life at times becomes exceedingly difficult. It is almost impossible to draw a line between ignorance and willful sin, because ignorance can eventually become willful wickedness. Why do we deprive ourselves of the opportunities to live?

We trade our chance to worship for almost anything. We trade our opportunities for fellowship for things that have no eternal value whatsoever. We do not learn because of other things we wish to do. We do not accept the challenge of the kingdom because we think it is a sacrifice. It is.

I talked with a family not long ago about the education of their children. One of the parents said, "It's such a sacrifice to send a child to college." I agreed and then asked, "But did you ever stop to think what a sacrifice it is to send a child out into the world untrained, not ready to face life, unable to meet the challenge of today?"

People say to me, "It's a terrible sacrifice to rear children." It is. If you have reared a family, you know something about it; but did you ever stop to think what a sacrifice it is not to rear children? Did it ever occur to you that these sacrifices are small and insignificant compared to the sacrifices we must make because we shut the very doors of life against ourselves for the years ahead? Life could become rich for many of us, yet we refuse to pay the price. We refuse to sacrifice simple things although by so doing we could make sure that our future life would be rich.

People have talked to me about sacrificing to go into the ministry. They haven't sensed a tenth of the experience when they talk about sacrificing to go into the ministry. True, they would have to give up some things, but think of the things which come to them in return; think of the values received for laying aside simple things.

The Depths of the Spirit

When I closed the doors on my business some twenty years ago, I thought I had made quite a sacrifice. I look back now and realize that the greatest thing God ever did for me was to encourage that decision which enabled me to push aside some things that looked so good, so rich to me, in exchange for values which then I did not possess capacity to understand and appreciate. The people who say that sacrifice for things of eternal value is too great have not reached the point where they understand what comes in return.

Life is worth while. It is a great adventure that becomes rich only as we reach the point where we are willing to exchange some worldly values for spiritual ones. We isolate ourselves from the kingdom, and not solely geographically. We can live right beneath the eaves of the center of operation of the kingdom of God and still isolate ourselves so completely from the kingdom that its values are not ours to enjoy. A person can be isolated anywhere. Some mentally isolate themselves from the movements of the kingdom. Some spiritually close the doors.

Kingdom-building is not a matter of geography; it is primarily a matter of attitude, of whether we will or won't; of whether these simple things that close the doors for us will be allowed to continue to keep them closed. As long as there are sacrifices too great to pay, those doors will be closed, keeping us from true riches of life now and in the future.

It is amazing how particular parents are that their children eat balanced diets and how little interest they have at times concerning their children's spiritual needs. I expect this congregation in one month spends enough on vitamins to make quite a payment on the church debt. Yet the spiritual vitamins are neglected because of certain costs in time and energy.

We say that sin is a measure of the things keeping us from God or that sin is the distance between ourselves and God. It doesn't matter how we say it. What is important is that, as we approach God, we become different. The closer we come to Divinity, the more different our activities become. The man who approaches God is different than when he stood afar off. Even though in approaching he falls back, he never will be exactly the same again.

We need to realize that we have a relationship to people; and if we are to be triumphant in life that relationship must be enriched as the days go by. Each day must see us come closer to the divine standard.

A Picture Haunting the Mind

Saul created quite a disturbance among the Christians because he took a very severe attitude toward them. Then one day he witnessed the stoning of Stephen. Stephen died, but he died triumphantly. He died praying and forgiving. No doubt when that ordeal was over, Paul tried to push the picture of it from his mind and go on about his business. But somehow he just couldn't ignore it. It continued to haunt him until finally he realized that his way of life was wrong. Then came the experience on the Damascus Road—an experience which finally brought him to his knees and caused him to see the light.

I wonder if this light was as bright as we sometimes think it was. As a boy I was given to understand that it was so strong that dandelions curled up and turned over on their side. But maybe that light wasn't so bright. Maybe the big difference was that this man had been so haunted by the things which had crept into his soul that he had begun to move down into the unplumbed depths and became willing to see. When people are willing to see, the light doesn't have to be very bright. Perhaps on that day Saul was willing to see, to understand, to respond.

I think sometimes the big difference between Saul, the persecutor, and some of us lies in that after all he was willing to see. We, in spite of the brightness of the light, at times close our eyes. There is nothing new in this process of Divinity speaking to the human mind. God has always spoken to men and women when they were willing to listen and respond.

Greatness Is Listening to God

The great lives have been lived by men and women who have been willing to see, to listen, and to move out in the light that has come to them. It is an old, old story that a successful man is simply one who is willing to listen to God. In a Longfellow diary we find this: "John Ware of Cambridge preached a good sermon today." Longfellow had written that a number of times in his diary, but this day he wrote five more words which made it important. He said, "I applied it to myself." That is the difference between a great man and a little man, between a godly man and an ungodly man. That is the difference between a man who dies triumphantly and a man who dies squirming and fearful, without faith, without hope.

I wonder how long we will continue to be able to forget the haunting memories of those who look toward us for help—those who are spiritually hungry, discouraged, sad; those who have made mistakes and had moral breakdown; those who have been rather unsuccessful in facing life. It is easy to push them out of the picture, to forget their faces turned toward us for help. We just push them aside and go on our way. Some day there may come to us a realization that we just can't push them aside any longer. It may not be the stoning of another Stephen, but it may be something equally as unforgettable—something which will live with us day and night.

There came to me as a young man a rather definite picture of my life's work, but because of certain ambitions I pushed it aside. Yet through the years that thing remained continually with me. By day and night I could see that haunting picture as it kept coming back to me, and I knew deep in my soul that eventually I must answer the call. I went into the banking business but I didn't like it so I went into the publishing business. But satisfaction never came into my soul until finally I was strong enough to open my eyes. I am not comparing myself to the apostle Paul, but I am saying that the light wasn't very bright for me that day.

Today I am haunted by the thousand tasks which I am seemingly unable to get done. I have been thinking about the isolated families in my territory—which now runs from the New Mexico line to the South Dakota border, out into Kansas, across Colorado, and over into Wyoming. There are thousands of Latter Day Saints and other people who are looking for the ministry of someone—someone who, in many instances I am sure will never see them. There are at least twelve places in this district today where I really needed to be. Such things concern me.

Are We Keeping Faith?

I wonder if we are keeping faith. Are we keeping faith with the children? Are we keeping faith with the older folk whom at times we seem almost to abandon—not because we want to, but because we don't have our program arranged in such a way that we can minister to them as they have a right to expect? Are we keeping faith with the young people who find themselves lost in the process of building homes, rearing babies, buying automobiles? We have lost scores of them from the church. Are we keeping faith with persons who face discouragement, who make mistakes, who haven't been quite able to stand up to the impact of life?

We should help these people. It is our business to go down into the unplumbed depths and there meet God. We must come back from such experiences so filled with the spirit of the Master that we move out and help people in every walk of life up the steps toward God.

Paul said, "I have not been disobedient to the heavenly vision." At some time you must have had a glimpse of the worth-while life which makes the worldly things for which you struggle seem insignificant. Under the impact of that spirit you have said to yourself, "Now these are the things I wish to do." Then came the morrow, and you found yourself again under the usual influences, so you slid right back into the same old groove of life and moved along. That one wonderful glimpse of life as it should be was your heavenly vision. Were you obedient to it?

Choose for your friend him that is wise and good, and secret and just, ingenious and honest, and in those things which have a latitude, use your own liberty.

Central Missouri State College

Doctor G. W. Diemer, president of Central Missouri State College, Warrensburg, Missouri, had invited me to give the Baccalaureate Address at midsummer graduation. I had become acquainted with Doctor Diemer during my attendance at the Missouri Constitutional Convention; for this reason, and because his College has served and is serving so many of our young people, I felt honored by his request. On Sunday evening, July 29, 1951, I was present in the "outdoor theatre" on the Campus at Warrensburg, a most beautiful setting for such an occasion, and addressed quite a large assembly of graduates, their relatives, and friends, my subject being "Lords of Destiny" (this address has been published in the Herald).

I was treated graciously by President and Mrs. Diemer, and also by Reverend Robert Arbaugh who had a part in the program.

After the meeting I met a number of the Saints in a social way before driving home to Independence, and felt well paid for my preparation, the time necessary, and the visit to our neighboring city.

Campus

Sunday evening, August 26, 1951, I occupied at the Campus in Independence. Memory is not too vivid as to my sermon; but I believe Stake President Graham had assigned something related to the why and wherefore of the gathering; I fear I did not cleave to my subject too closely. Bishop Harold W. Cackler presided with his usual urbanity. Elder Sanford Downs prayed, and the Saints sang songs of Zion under the direction of Brother Clayton Wolfe. The weather and summer setting were delightful. Elder Myron Zerr closed the service. The Mount Washington choir presented special music.

I record this Campus event for the reason that I have heretofore hardly carried my share of Campus assignments.

Delegates Meet

Delegates who participated in writing the present constitution of the state of Missouri in 1943 and 1944, desirous of keeping alive associations formed, organized an association and, beginning in 1945, have met annually. When we met in 1950, I was selected president for a year. Thus it was that I took the burden of preparing the program for the delegates when we met on Friday, September 21, 1951, the date being the eighth anniversary of the day we met and organized the convention. I presided at the meeting. I felt complimented to succeed such a man as Judge Thomas C. Hennings, who served the preceding year and who is the father of the junior United States Senator from Missouri. I was well pleased at the end of my tenure to see the presidency go to one of Missouri's greatest citizens, Senator Allen McReynolds of Carthage.

Wood River, Illinois

It was but a short journey from Jefferson City where the delegates met to St. Louis where I was met by Apostle Don O. Chesworth on Sunday morning, September 23. We were taken to Wood River, Illinois, where he and I took part in the dedication of a church at Fifth and Lorena Streets.

Again my memos of this event have been lost or mislaid and I can but record the occasion briefly. It was my first ministry in association with Brother Chesworth since he took his place in the Council of Twelve, and I was well pleased to note the seriousness with which he witnesses for Christ.

The Wood River Branch is "pastored" by Elder Fred Immer, Sr. District President Frank McDonald, who was in charge of the service, took me back to St. Louis by car, and I was home ere midnight bells rang out.

Dedication at Ottumwa

Early in 1951 Apostle D. T. Williams and I were in attendance at the opening services in the new church at Ottumwa, Iowa, and again we were invited to come to that city, this time to take part in dedication services on Sunday, September 30.

Bishop G. L. DeLapp took us by car. We had the unusual pleasure of being accompanied by Independence's first citizen, Mayor Robert P. Weatherford, Jr., who designed the edifice. The branch pastor, Elder Edward Stark, has directed the activities toward this consummation so "devoutly to be wished."

The day was eventful in its activities, and as I fortunately have succeeded in preserving a copy of the program, I can write with assurance. First there was a worship service with Apostle Williams and Pastor Stark in charge. At 11:00 o'clock Bishop DeLapp spoke and at 2:00 p.m. I gave the address at the service of dedication. Mayor Weatherford was presented, also the Honorable Herschel Loveless, Mayor of Ottumwa; both spoke briefly.

District President David J. Williams was present throughout and took an active part. Brother Byron Barker, chairman of the building committee, presented the title deed to Bishop DeLapp, Pastor Stark gave a pledge of safekeeping, and Apostle Williams offered the dedicatory prayer. The choir from Chariton Branch, directed by Dwight Vredenburg, added much to the occasion. Brother Thomas L. Burgin of Burlington was guest soloist.

Elder Myron LaPointe, pastor at Wichita, formerly of Ottumwa and at one time active in the project, was present.

Soon after the closing services, we were on our way home.

Spokane, Seattle, Portland

Through the offices of Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elder J. L. Verhei, president of Oregon District, it was arranged that I should visit the district conference at Portland to begin on Friday, October 19. Also it was agreed I should make stopover visits at Spokane and Seattle. This required me to leave as early as the fourteenth.

I arrived at Spokane late on Tuesday; was domiciled for the night at the home of Brother Ted Beck, son of Bishop and Sister T. A. Back; occupied the pulpit there Wednesday evening with Elder Verne Webb in charge; and left right after the service for Seattle. I met new friends and a number of old ones at Spokane.

At Seattle I was met by Apostle Gleazer and Bishop Monte Lasater on Tuesday morning. Elder Paul Wellington is pastor there, and in order that I could relax betimes, I was put up at a hotel, a provision I sometimes appreciate after strenuous days though, of course, I always enjoy the hospitality of the Saints.

I spoke in the Masonic Temple to almost a capacity crowd that night, and shook hands with many people, some old acquaintances. I trust my ministry was helpful.

In looking over the conference program I note that on Friday night there was a district priesthood-and-wives banquet. Elder F. E. Chapman, a resident of the district for fifty years, was "M.C." An old-time appointee, Elder Marcus H. Cook, offered prayer. Elder P. G. Hager spoke. I was presented and spoke briefly, and Evangelist W. H. Barker closed with benediction.

Business was begun on the next day. I note that I spoke to the young people at 10:00 and addressed the women at 11:00. An elaborate lunch and then business meeting followed. On Sunday I spoke at 11:00 o'clock. District President Verhei, Bishop M. E. Lasater, Elders James N. Kemp, Miles Whiting, Harold Carpenter, Sisters Verhei, Leona Carpenter, Carolyn Larson, Elder Paul Fishel, Evangelists W. H. Barker and Mark Yeoman, and many others took an active part to make it a notable conference.

The next day the Verheis whisked me by auto to an ocean-side place where we rested, ate excellent food prepared by Sister Verhei, and watched the waves beat against the shore and the rain against the house. Late the second day we drove back to Portland. Soon I was en route home via San Francisco.

Whenever it is possible to do so I contact my cousin, Dr. Herbert S. Salisbury. Herbert, a grandson of my great aunt, Katherine Salisbury, is well educated, knows well the history of the church and all about Nauvoo and Carthage, having held various educational and political positions in Illinois and having served as president of Graceland College for a few years. While resident at Lamoni, he courted and married one of my wife's closest friends, Sister Leona Scott. The Salisburys live at San Rafael; one son, Scott, and a daughter live there also. Another son, Winfield, is now on the teaching staff of the University of California.

I was delayed by circumstances, however, from seeing Cousin Herbert immediately, and availed myself of an opportunity to visit some old friends. I caught the train for Carmel-by-the-Sea where I had a very interesting and friendly visit with Samuel Wood and his wife. This good man for a time had not been able to see "eye to eye" with us, but being a man of basic integrity he refuses to give approval to unfair criticism from whatsoever source, and, as I judged from the conversation we had, is simply "standing by." I was interested in learning more about his attitude. He and his good wife have raised some very fine children who are making their mark.

Before I left to go back to San Francisco Sister Wood invited me to dinner, and I was glad to break bread with these splendid people. Since I saw them last October I have had some correspondence with Brother Wood which I feel has been mutually beneficial.

Washington

On the theory that it helps to maintain good public relations, I accepted an invitation from the State Department at Washington to attend meetings by that Department on national and international questions, October 30 to November 2 inclusive, and came to have a much better understanding of what the national government is trying to do toward better international relations. Our church is thus recognized as one of the churches that should be included and should be advised as to public questions.

Coldwater, Michigan

Early in the fall of 1951, Elder Luther Troyer, president of the Northern Indiana District, invited me to attend the fall conference there. I accepted and was met by Brother Troyer at Battle Creek on Saturday, December 1, and taken to Coldwater, Michigan, in time to witness the business session at 3:00 p.m. Brother Troyer had the business well organized, and conducted the meeting with ability and dispatch.

I addressed the Saints at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, 11:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. on Sunday, and was a house guest of Brother and Sister Troyer until he and I left on Monday.

Here I had the pleasure of meeting Sister Scott, widow of a long-time appointee, Seventy S. W. L. Scott, some years deceased. I was pleased to get acquainted with Brother Troyer's counselors, Elders Edward J. Griff of Coldwater and V. Lee Coonfare of St. Joseph, Michigan, pastors and Saints too numerous to mention; and Rolland Dirrim, treasurer; Muriel G. Collins, women's leader; Charles L. Blanchard, church school director; Geneva Swaim, editor of "Gospel Link," and Harriet Schrader, music director.

On Monday Brother Troyer and I visited several towns and cities, meeting certain of the Saints, and that night I occupied at Fort Wayne where G. E. Burt is pastor. The next night (Tuesday), I met with the Saints at Mishawaka, Indiana, where F. E. Myers is pastor, thus ending a very busy schedule and one that I hope was profitable to the Saints.

Brother Troyer got me aboard the train for Cincinnati on Wednesday, en route to the West Virginia District.

West Virginia District Anniversary

Elder Samuel M. Zonker, president of this district, had corresponded with me for some weeks relative to this assignment. Many years ago I had been employed at Parkersburg, West Virginia, and I looked forward with considerable interest to a visit there. The occasion was the sixtieth anniversary of the organization of the district, which took place in 1892 at Goose Creek Church some fifteen to twenty miles from Parkersburg. It began on Saturday, December 8, at this now famous Goose Creek Church. Since an account of the services were written up by the historian, Sister May Griffin, and published in the Herald, I shall not go into details further than to say I was guest in the home of Brother and Sister C. S. Rice. Brother Rice is pastor of the Parkersburg Branch. Here I met Apostle Draper; Seventy James Menzies; Elder Samuel Martin, pastor at Wheeling; Harry B. Smith; Carl Anderson; L. H. Phillips; C. R. Swick, pastor at Clarksburg; John Freiber; Evangelist R. E. Rodgers, Otto Melcher, and others intm (meaning too numerous to mention).

This visit to West Virginia was terminated when Elder Floyd T. Rockwell, president of the Southern Ohio District, and Sister Rockwell took me to their home at Dayton where on Monday night, December 10, I addressed quite a large assembly at our church there. The next day I took the train via Chicago for Independence and home.

Thus closed my travels for 1951.

TEMPTATION

The highway was jammed with Sunday traffic, and the little boy and his dog walking peacefully along the side seemed a strange contrast to the hustle and bustle. Suddenly the dog turned sharply and quick as a flash darted into the heaviest of the traffic. By some kind intervention of fate he crossed the dangerous street and treed a scared cat on the other side.

Brakes squealed, the boy yelled, and drivers swore—but the dog heard none of the clamor until the cat was well out of reach. Then sensing danger close by, he winced at the cars now moving again and tried to find a way back to his master. We lost him to our view, but he had given us food for thought. Temptation, packaged enticingly enough, made this animal forget danger to self. But this was only a dog, without God's great gift of reason and wisdom. People of intelligence also find reason gone if temptation entices with enough glamour and adventure. Fear comes only when deeds are done and results of evil start rushing by.

Stepping Stones for Ezekiel

Part II

IT WAS NOT until the beginning of the last term that Zeke was able to break through the barrier that lay between him and the white pupils of his own age. A large house across the street caught fire, and the wind was fanning the flames toward the school. The teachers hurried the children out of the building and closed the doors to prevent a draft from making it a greater fire hazard. Several of the older pupils ran to the next street to watch the big blaze, but Zeke had an uneasy feeling and stayed with the teachers and their charges. A little white girl near him began crying, "I want my sister. Where's my sister? She didn't come out." Zeke didn't hesitate, "Don't worry, little missy," he said, "I'll find her." As he ran toward the building the onlookers seemed paralyzed for they saw the schoolhouse roof was on fire. As he opened the door the black smoke poured out and blinded him. "Please, God," he prayed, "the elder said if I needed you, just pray. I sho' need you now."

Those who watched did not hear the black boy's humble prayer, but they saw the wind change suddenly and blow the blinding smoke back down the long hallway and hold it there. The fire on the roof began to subside. He found the little girl lying on the floor and, picking her up in his arms, carried her to safety. There was a tense hush for a moment, then someone shouted, "Hurrah for the southern guy!" Zeke hurried away before they had a chance to talk to him, but the next issue of the town newspaper gave him full credit for saving the child. A clipping was forwarded to the colonel by his friend.

After the school roof was repaired and the children returned to their studies, Zeke was almost embarrassed by their friendliness. It seemed a miracle when the older boys asked him to join their ball team, and the principal decided that he should be in that grade with them.

In this new environment Zeke's school work improved greatly. When his three years of probation were ended, he had a good report card to take back to the colonel. Money saved from delivering groceries on Saturdays and during vacations was more than enough to pay his way home and buy little gifts for his mammy and Mrs. Hobart.

SINCE DR. EZRA had found a competent man with the horses, the colonel suggested that Zeke divide his time between them. During the week he was handy man in the colonel's law office and went on many important errands. On Saturdays he helped Dr. Ezra in his clinic and learned about pills and powders. On Sundays he taught a class of little boys and tried to help them see Jesus as he did. Only to his mother and Dr. and Mrs. Hobart did he show his treasured books that told of the angel's message and the plates, but he prayed that someday elders might come and help them to understand better.

It was not long before Zeke's prayer was answered. An epidemic of typhoid broke out in the eastern part of the state, and Dr. Ezra was asked to come and help. He was no longer young and lacked the resistance of youth against long, strenuous hours. Soon after he came home he was stricken and lay delirious, burning with fever. Alex, who had married and lived in Selma, came home to help, but Mrs. Hobart scarcely left her husband's bedside.

When the doctor they had called in said nothing more could be done, Zeke poured out his heart to Alex. He told of the lonely hours at school and the kindness of the elder who had given him the books. "Please, Captain Alex," he said, "can't we send for the elders now? Dr. Ezra's mighty poorly."

"Yes, Zeke," said Alex, "I know he is, but I doubt that you can get anyone here in time to help my father. However, you have my consent to try."

ZEKE LOST NO TIME and had a letter at the mailbox when the carrier came. "Please, God," he prayed, "let it find the elders."

The next day two men came to the door and explained to Alex that they were elders from the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. They gave their names as Elders Gene Overton and John Brownson. Alex was bewildered. How could they have received the message so soon? He invited them in, then asked who had sent them word that they were needed.

"We were in Pensacola," replied Elder Brownson, "and received a letter from one of our elders up north asking us to call at this place and ask for Zeke Hobart. He had met Zeke in Iowa. The Spirit of the Lord urged us to come at once."

"I am glad you have come," said Alex. "Please be seated. I'll tell my mother and find Zeke." He soon returned with both his mother and Zeke.

As Mrs. Hobart came into the room she looked almost too ill to stand on her feet. Elder Overton went to her and said, "We have come to pray for you and your husband, Mrs. Hobart, and with your permission we will anoint your head with consecrated oil and ask God's blessing upon you."

By Mabel Williams Crayne

"Yes, please do," was her reply. "I can't go on much longer, and I am afraid my husband will die. God sent you because we need you so much."

After the anointing Elder Brownson prayed earnestly for both Mrs. Hobart and the doctor, and with his hands still upon her head he spoke by the Spirit. "Be of good cheer, my sister, for God has heard your cries unto him and has granted the desires of your heart. You are precious in his sight, for you have done a good work. You have many years before you, and through you the pure gospel of Jesus Christ will be handed down from generation to generation, and your name shall be recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life."

Mrs. Ezra wiped away her tears and said, "Come with me to my husband's room. He has not recognized me for several days."

They knelt at the doctor's bedside and Elder Overton offered prayer. After the anointing, Elder Brownson with trembling voice spoke by the Spirit, "Oh, God, we pray that you rebuke this disease which lays so heavily upon this, thy child, and raise him up unto health as there is much work for him to do in the building of thy kingdom."

As the elder finished speaking, the doctor opened his eyes and looked about him, then held out his hand to his wife and said, "You've been gone a long time, my dear. Who are these men?"

Elder Overton explained, "We are elders. God sent us here to pray for you, Dr. Hobart. You have been a very sick man."

"I'm glad you have come," said the doctor. Already his face had lost much of its feverish look and he soon fell into a restful sleep.

MRS. HOBART persuaded the elders to stay for a few days and tell more about this wonderful gospel that had brought the Spirit of a living God into their troubled household. After several long talks with the elders, Zeke was baptized. He was confirmed in Dr. Ezra's room at the doctor's request. The Spirit came again to Elder Brownson, and he said, "I say unto thee, Ezekiel, my son, that thou hast a work to do among thine own people, and much will be accomplished by thy right living. God will be with thee, and steppingstones will be laid down for thy feet. Thou must be patient and continue to work, and the time will come when thou shalt see thy people lift up their heads and rejoice. They shall rise to a higher plane of intelligence and right living and be given a share in the good things of life. Be prayerful and keep close to thy God, and the eventide of thy life shall be sweet unto thee."

The next day the elders left for Chattanooga, Tennessee, where they were to hold meetings. They promised to visit Hobart House again on their next trip to the South.

One Sunday morning in church a young mulatto girl stood beside Zeke. While they were singing he noticed how well their voices harmonized and turned to look at her. By the rapt expression on her face he knew she was not conscious of his sudden interest. Her eyes were fixed on the picture of Christ that hung back of the pulpit. He was startled by feeling an arm across his shoulder from the other side, but there was no one there beside him. He heard a voice clearly above the singing, "For you, my son, this girl has been chosen as a help-mate." Zeke hurried out as soon as the service was over without looking her way again. He couldn't understand this new experience that had come to him. "Please, Lord," he prayed, "did you speak to me, or did you let my pappy come back just long enough to help me pick the right girl? Or did I just have a foolish notion in my mind? I know I felt an arm across me. Help me, Lord, to know about the girl."

He and the girl, Juleanne Winters, became close friends and some time later he told her all about the voice that came to him in church. "Juleanne," he said, "do you suppose God did speak to me, and you are to be my girl for keeps?" Juleanne answered, "Yes, Zeke, for keeps." And it was "for keeps" that she became Zeke's wife. For many years they worked together among the sick and the poor of their people, teaching them cleanliness, right living, and faith in a living God.

HOBART HOUSE still stood sturdy and strong, defying time and decay. Its broad acres that once knew the singing of the cotton pickers and most of the spacious grounds about the homestead had been sold; only one acre remained. A modern five-room cottage had replaced the cabin where Ezekiel Hobart was born. His granddaughter, Lucindy, and her husband, Milo Marsh, lived in the cottage with him and were caretakers of Hobart House.

Angela Hobart Marlow, granddaughter of Alex, was the owner. She and her husband, Henry Marlow, and their three children came often to their country place. Its wide verandas, spiral stairway, and sparkling candelabras were reminders of the early days, and the old time hospitality seemed to linger within its walls.

Uncle Zeke was on his front porch daydreaming and letting the sun put warmth into his old bones. Sometimes in his dreaming the present faded away and he was back again with Juleanne. He had seen his people slowly rise above the privations and abuse that prevailed long after the bonds of slavery were broken. The prophecy given when he was confirmed was being fulfilled, and in his old age he saw many of them in positions of importance.

Uncle Zeke's daydreaming was suddenly interrupted by the banging of a screen door, followed by the sound of flying feet and a childish voice, "We're here, Uncle Zeke, we're here, and mother says we can stay and have twilight hour with you."

Phyllis Marlow was the youngest of the family and a vision of pink and white loveliness with long golden curls. For her Uncle Zeke could weave stories of the swamp creatures and the little people of the woodlands. And for her he reverted to the quaint dialect of his mother.

"Bless yo' sweet ha't, little miss," the old man said. "It's sho' good to see you. How be all de folks?"

"Everybody's fine, 'cept my sister Adele," said Phyllis, "and she's awful worried. She drank a lot of carrot juice and made her skin turn yellow."

"Now don't you go a believin' any sech of a nonsense," said Uncle Zeke.

"Well," Phyllis said looking worried, "Grandma Marlow did say it was the Lord chastising her 'cause she goes to church and sings that song, 'Prevent me lest I harbor pride' and then stands before the mirror admiring herself—and on account of her asking God to give her patience and then coming home and getting cross at everybody."

Uncle Zeke scratched his head in deep meditation, then said, "Could be, Little Missy, could be. Some folks asks the Good Lawd fo' patience like it warn't nuthin' but a bag o' gumdrops, but how he know we got patience les' he give us sumpin' to be patient about?"

Uncle Zeke's homely philosophy was getting too profound for Phyllis and she said, "I guess I'll go swing under the magnolia tree." She took a deep breath of the fragrant air, "Oh, Uncle Zeke, it's so heavenward out here. The magnolia blooms look like white pigeons up in the tree and they smell so scrumptious." Then she ran away to the swing.

By the time their evening meal was over in the big house and the dishes stacked in the drier, the sun was a round ball of red and gold, low in the west. Shadows began to creep out and stretch across the grass; finally they blended into that delightful time called twilight.

The family gathered about on Uncle Zeke's porch. Twilight hour was a tradition handed down from the old days when the cotton pickers sat out in the cool of the evening, resting from their labor and giving voice to their joys or their sorrows in melodies that will never die. The Marlows made it their Sunday evening worship service.

After a prayer of thanksgiving to God for the material comforts they enjoyed and for the privilege of walking in the Latter Day light, Henry Marlow read from Paul's message to the Corinthians:

For yourselves know that the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but watch and be sober putting on the breastplate of faith and love and for an helmet, the hope of salvation. Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.

Henry laid aside the Bible. "Now we will have our twilight hymn," he said.

Day is dying in the west,
Heaven is touching earth with rest;
Wait and worship while the night
Sets her evening lamps alight,
Through all the sky. . . .

Twilight hour was over, and with Phyllis shouting a last good-by to Uncle Zeke the Marlow car rolled down the driveway, homeward bound.

"You'd better come in, Grandfather," said Lucindy. "You've had a big day."

"I'll be coming soon, Cindy," said Zeke, "I just want to wait and worship. Could you sing that last line again? Somehow I crave to hear it."

Lucindy sang softly in her rich contralto voice:

When forever from our sight,
Pass the stars, the day, the night,
Lord of Angels, on our eyes
Let Eternal Morning rise . . .

Then she went into the house to talk over the happenings of the day with Milo. After waiting some time for her grandfather to come in, she said, "I guess the old dear has gone sound asleep. I'd better waken him." As she stepped out on the porch the beauty of the night, the stillness, the crescent moon, and the bright stars filled her soul with peace. Lucindy patted her grandfather's shoulder. "Come, it's getting late," she said. "You must come in." There was no response. Ezekiel Hobart had crossed his last steppingstone, and it led to the sunrise of eternal morning.

The End

Spiritual Growth Through Stewardship

An address given at Stone Church during General Conference

By Bishop G. L. DeLapp

I VALUE THIS OPPORTUNITY to talk to the women of the church because I have found in my experience in church work that its success is dependent in large measure on the influence of women in the lives of priesthood and families.

This morning I wish to talk about some phases of God's physical creation that can also be brought into our thinking as it has ever been the desire of the Almighty, our Creator, to bring beauty into everything. As I think of some aspects of temporalities, I have come to know and understand that there is beauty in the temporal law which God has given us. If we can understand just a little bit better and appreciate just a little bit more fully that the temporal law of the church has specific and definite purposes—that it is to bring beauty into the Zion about which we sing—in so doing we take the commonplace out of that which oftentimes we consider only commonplace, and out of it something develops which is beautiful and lovely.

The definition of Zion that I like best is that found in the Doctrine and Covenants: "The Lord called his people Zion because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness, and there was no poor among them." This, I think, has come to be the objective of the church. This represents all that we dream about, all that we hope for, all that we work for. When we conceive of that definition to its full extent, we find that it comprehends life in all of its facets and sets up for us the procedures and the avenues that are available to us through which we can achieve the objectives that are contained therein.

I would like to have you think of the purpose of the temporal law this morning in these terms—that the purpose of the temporal law is to provide opportunity for people to give expression to the spiritual force and power resident within them. It is not to take something away from a person; it is not just to carry on the work of the church in its many departments, in its missionary program, in the whole process of the establishment of the kingdom. The basic and fundamental purpose of the financial law or temporal law as we refer to it, is that through its utilization there may be given to us the opportunity to give some expression to the spiritual force and power which is resident within every person. Thereby it becomes a tremendous force for good. I have wished many times that somehow there would come to me the power to convey to the members of the church the spiritual significance of stewardship.

AS A BOY I sat at the feet of the missionaries of the church, hearing them discuss the subject which is most interesting and has always been the most interesting subject that can be discussed when people get together—the building of the kingdom, the establishment of Zion. I remember in those early years of my life as the occasional missionary would come into our home (we were quite isolated from association with the Saints) sitting and hearing him describe the beauties of Zion. There was the beginning of the yearning within my heart that the time would come when there could be fulfillment and realization of the objectives set forth that this was Zion.

"The Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart." What did this mean to me? Well, little by little it took on new meaning. It meant that there would come a time when people would have a unity of purpose, a unity in their desire to understand God. This would not be just in theory or theology; men and women would understand him in their daily associations. They would be of one heart—a heart which endeavors through love and consideration for one another to work that all may be of one mind, that the mental faculties, the gifts and talents of all may be utilized in the achievement of the eternal purposes of God—not just a few ministers in the church, not just a few people who have been given endowments greater than the average, but all, unifying their efforts to the achievement of the purposes of God. There must come a time when righteousness will prevail—a time when, being of one heart and motivated by love, people will become intellectually co-ordinated in the achievement of this great task. A condition of righteousness must be developed which will exemplify all the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Today we know all of this is not to be achieved unless there is a fulfillment of this other portion of the definition, that "there was no poor among them."

IN JUST A FEW CENTURIES we find unfolded for us the purpose of God, and as we see that unfoldment we give consideration to the part we are to play in this great ongoing movement of the church. We turn to the Scriptures that we might find therein some light that would give us an understanding of our responsibility, our personal responsibility. It is this responsibility—yours and mine—that I wish to discuss.

I remember another thing that happened when I was a boy. I have told my wife the story many times. One never knows how many times he tells his wife the same story. She is patient. She always smiles each time the story is told. I remember that I had broken the mop at home. In those days money was very scarce; there wasn't any inflation. My brother and I were invited to make a little trip. We were going to visit some friends on a farm, and when we got over there in the morning (about seven miles away) it seemed that it would be nice to spend the week on the farm. My brother who was older said to me in the middle of the afternoon, "Come on, Leslie, we are going home. I know the train leaves shortly, and we probably will have a half hour in town." We were both homesick; seven miles in those days was quite a trip. We thought, having been away for such a long time, we would take home some gifts; so I, with a practical turn of mind, bought my mother a mopstick. My brother, not quite so practical, bought her one of these starfish shells. That evening when we got home after our long journey, not even having been away overnight, I gave this mopstick to my mother, and she accepted it with a smile on her face.

Here was one of the beginnings of my appreciation of what temporalities can do in human relations, how one can use them in giving expression to what is in the heart. I have laughed about this incident many times; but I have been more inclined to cry about it, for out of that experience I have come to know something of the real value of those things which mean much in a temporal way.

What is the purpose of the temporal law? It is to build character: it is to provide a means of discipline that the soul of man can be refined through the processes which come through the utilization of things of physical character. With most of us character is developed as we make choices, and many of these choices relate to temporal possessions and their use.

TODAY we are in this building which was erected many years ago through the sacrifices and the devotion of men and women. A part of God's creation was transformed into utilitarian shape, not just that it might be set up as a building to shelter us, to keep away the wind, the rain, storm, and cold, but that it might also provide facilities through the use of which man could worship and come in contact with God. It is true that we could go out into the woods and worship. When we do go out to worship close to nature, we have an appreciation of the greatness of God and his goodness, but the talents which were God-given have enabled men to use all of his great creation for special purposes—this pulpit, these pews, made by man, but created in form first by the Almighty.

Today we are spending billions of dollars for the armaments of war. Someday we are going to learn that all of these things of temporal character can be utilized for the development of the spirit of man. This brings me to the point of responsibility which you and I have in regard to this. It has its very beginning in the home, in family life, and from the home and from family life there comes expression which draws members of the church together in a greater degree.

People have said to me, "My child is only eight years old; why should he pay tithing?" Would you like to have the answer to that question? The reason Johnny should pay tithing is not that there should be imposed upon him a tax, an involuntary contribution, but that he should be taught the fundamentals of stewardship in relation to his responsibility that through this process his soul may grow and expand and he may become conscious of the fact that he is dependent not only upon God but upon those around him. Why is it that we suggest to members compliance with the temporal law of the church? If it doesn't have some other meaning than simply that of financing the church, then I'm not interested in it.

IN 1950 when we were overseas, we came right up against the terrific results of the devastating effects of war. We saw not only great piles of rubble and destroyed cities but something which was even more terrible. We saw the imprint of sin, and suffering, and sorrow on the faces of thousands of people. I remembered that there was given to this church the commission: "Go preach—preach the gospel of Jesus Christ unto all nations." Then I came back to this country. In the city of New York I went down into the subways where I saw other millions of people not doing the will of God. One goes into the slums of the cities—New York, Chicago, and even Independence—and says, "Well, if people would work they could do things; they are just lazy." One does not build the kingdom of God by passing the blame to those who know not the ways of God. It is done through devotion and through supporting a movement which is of God. It is only through the support of such a movement that the sins of the world, of the conditions of war, of the conditions of poverty can be alleviated. The kingdom will be only when men and women arise to a sense of their responsibility and recognize that, this being the church of Jesus Christ, they must move forward in preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. To this we must relate the teachings of the temporal law.

We recognize that there comes a time in the lives of our children and in their experiences when they are going to make their own decisions. We are concerned as they wobble around, trying to become men and women. We pray to God that they

Question:

When was Joseph Smith first publicly accused of having more than one wife? By whom and for what reason?

Did any books written before his death in 1844 accuse him of living in adultery or polygamy? If so, why?
Illinois N. L. A.

Answer:

It would be impossible for anyone to state when Joseph Smith was first accused of practicing or teaching polygamy. Doctrine and Covenants, Section 111, paragraph 4, indicates that as early as 1835 the church had been "reproached with the crime of fornication and polygamy." These rumors were false. However, to refute them, the church in August 17, 1835, adopted by unanimous vote of the assembly, the document on Marriage which declares that "we believe that one man should have but one wife and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again." This document was ordered published in the Doctrine and Covenants of 1835.

Joseph Smith, Jr., was charged with many crimes which charges were proved false. It is quite possible that gossip and rumor accused him falsely of polygamy. The first publication to our knowledge accusing him of advocating polygamy was the Nauvoo Expositor of June 7, 1844, published by the Laws, Higbees, and Fosters at Nauvoo. These charges were officially denied in the Nauvoo Neighbor of Wednesday, June 19, 1844. We do not know of any other publication accusing Joseph Smith of polygamy before his death.

Question:

Do General Church authorities seek to discourage our young people from marrying in the church buildings of other denominations when one of our own is available?

Washington

L. S. R.

Answer:

We know of no general rule nor official action that has ever been taken by the church respecting the use of church buildings of other denominations for marriage ceremonies. Marriage has sacramental values, however, that are most effectively emphasized in the place where the participants are accustomed to worship. Values are also to be obtained from association of the significant experiences of life with the church home. This suggests the advisability of using the home church wherever accommodations are at all suitable.

We are aware, however, that many of our services are held in temporary halls, and that even some of our churches are not adequate in space nor in architectural design to meet the physical requirements for a dignified and beautiful ceremony. Under such circumstances we see no reason why the use of the church building of another denomination would violate any standard of saintly conduct so long as a minister of one's own faith is officiating. We have occasionally resorted to the use of the font of a neighboring church where our own does not have a baptistry. We have also shared the use of churches of other denominations on a rental basis as a temporary measure where hours of service did not conflict.

The final right of choice undoubtedly rests with the bride and her family, but it would be unwise for them to act without prior consultation with the branch president. The important thing is that the wedding should be in a place that will lend dignity to the ceremony. A theatrical atmosphere is to be avoided, and ceremonies performed in airplanes, roller rinks, and other unusual places are frowned upon by the church. The minister, therefore, has the right and the responsibility of deciding whether or not the place and the plans for the wedding conform to standards of good taste, and he may refuse to officiate if in his considered judgment the ceremony could not be performed with credit to the church.

GARLAND E. TICKEMYER

Question:

My neighbor says it is a sin to teach that the soul is immortal. He quotes Ecclesiastes 9: 5, ". . . the dead know not anything . . ." and Psalm 146: 4, ". . . in that very day his thoughts perish." Please explain.

Michigan

MRS. J. G.

Answer:

Denial of the existence of the human spirit was a doctrine of the Sadducees which Jesus condemned. Whenever he spoke of this matter it was always in affirmation of a living spirit in man which continued to live after death. He promised the penitent man on the cross: "Today shalt thou be with me in Paradise." In the parable the rich man and Lazarus were very much alive after they died, and they conversed with Abraham who had been dead nearly 2,000 years. Christ counseled his apostles not to fear men who had power to kill the body "but are not able to kill the soul." Reproving the Sadducees for their attitude he said, "They do err, not understanding the Scriptures." The living spirit of man, whether in the body or apart from the body, is a teaching which runs throughout the Bible, as also the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants.

The statement, "The dead know not anything," should be interpreted in the light of its context. The author was referring to the body and not to the spirit, as plainly appears in Ecclesiastes 8: 8, "There is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death." And again in 12: 7 (concerning death), "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return to God who gave it." Can you believe that the man who wrote these statements did not believe in a human spirit which lives after death?

Psalms 146: 4 and Isaiah 38: 18 must be interpreted in the same way, as referring to the physical man. David wrote in another Psalm, "My flesh also shall rest in hope [of the resurrection], for thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption."

Notice to Members in British Columbia

My son, Ronald Bartlett, and his family moved recently from the Peace River country to Nelson, British Columbia. He is not a member of the church, so I ask the prayers of the Saints that he may become interested in the gospel. If there are members in or near Nelson I shall appreciate their contacting him. His address is:

Note of Thanks

We wish to take this opportunity to thank our many friends and relatives who have been so kind and helpful to us in our time of need. The expressions of sympathy, acts of kindness, prayers, and beautiful floral offerings have meant much.

To all those who also gave gifts of money we wish to say that a memorial fund for our daughter, Lynne Rae, has been set up, and one room in the polio ward at the Independence Sanitarium is being furnished in her name. We thank you for helping us establish this fund. We are grateful to all and happy to know that this fund will help the continuing fight to save lives of those afflicted by this dread disease.

A Blessing of Healing

On June 4 of this year I fell and broke my arm while watering my flowers. It was a bad break, and the skin on my wrist was severed so that my watch was buried in the flesh. My children took me in the house, and a son-in-law, Elder Kenneth Henry, administered to me. Since I am seventy-one years old I knew that it would take a long time to heal unless I received divine help. I prayed that, if I were worthy, I might receive a blessing so that the bones would heal completely and my arm would be straight. At the hospital my arm was packed in ice until the next day when it was set.

I wore a cast for only three weeks and three days. My doctor marveled at the way the bone mended. Now I can use it all the time. I am thankful for this blessing, and I want to live a life worthy of God's goodness to me.

The Need for Religious Education

I think more members would gain a greater knowledge of the gospel if they made an effort to study the religious education program. If they prayed and meditated they could gain understanding and joy beyond all earthly happiness. I have had experiences in my study that I wouldn't exchange for anything the world has to offer.

I was never certain that the Reorganized Church was true until I began studying. Even with the first lesson I gained assurance, and I rejoiced in my new-found knowledge. As God's chosen people, we should be continually thankful that he has been so good to us. My prayer is, as was Paul's, that we forget those things that are behind and reach forth to those before us, pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God.

Interesting Personalities

Harry Barto

A "personal service" is what one receives from Harry Barto of Independence, Missouri, at his grain and coal company. Since 1939 he has had his own business. Previous to this he did wholesale and retail work for twenty-six years with feed and grain companies in the Kansas City, Missouri, area. Besides just plain hard work, he attributes much of his success to practicing his religion in everyday business and keeping the financial law.

He was born August 30, 1895, in Lamoni, Iowa, and was baptized in Independence in June, 1904. He was graduated from Independence High School (William Chrisman) in 1912 and later attended Spaulding's Business College in Kansas City. On May 31, 1919, he married Vivean Weed, who, he affirms, is his best helper. They have two married daughters.

Brother Barto is interested in civic affairs, and is now serving as president of the Knife and Fork Club. He is a member of the Rotary Club, and a past president of the Chamber of Commerce. He is also chaplain of District 5, Missouri Department of the American Legion, and once held the post of state chaplain. In past years he has served as local post commander, finance officer, and trustee. He believes that his associations in civic activities have enabled him, through actually mixing with others, to show them the Zion principles taught by the church.

Church activities come first, however. In 1917 he was ordained a deacon, and on April 8, 1928, an elder. He has served as assistant pastor to John Sheehy at the Stone Church, and as assistant pastor of Zion, supervising forty-six groups. At the Conference of 1932 he was ordained a high priest and a member of the Standing High Council. He was a radio announcer for Stone Church broadcasts for about fifteen years, and for ten years taught a class of teen-age boys at Stone Church. Now he is serving on the General Church Board of Publications, is a member of the Central Development Association, and plans to participate in activities at the Blue Ridge congregation. He maintains that seeking first the kingdom of God does bring the worth-while things that follow after.

Brother Barto is reluctant to dwell on his past activities. "Things of the past only stand as guideposts. Life holds too much in the future to look back."

Defending the Faith

I chose to go to a school in Dixon, Illinois, and I had hardly been enrolled in my classes when I was made conspicuous by my religion. It happened in American colonial history class. I had been asked to recite on the purported revelations of Mrs. Anne Hutchinson. I stood waiting to be excused when the professor asked if I believed Mrs. Hutchinson was inspired. I said I did not believe so, and then, like a bolt from a clear sky, came a question I had not anticipated: "Do you believe any man since the days of Jesus Christ and the apostles has been inspired?"

I have read somewhere that, should a French woman and an English woman come unexpectedly to a mud puddle, the French woman would take in the situation at a glance, skirt the puddle with her twinkling toes, and reach the other side without a trace of mud on her dainty shoes; but the English woman, without hesitation, would plow straight through.

I think I was like the English woman when I was called unexpectedly to answer the question, "Do you believe any man since the days of Christ and the apostles has been inspired?" Without hesitation I answered, "Yes, sir."

Professor Scott looked at me with his keen black eyes and then put his question again, stating it very slowly and distinctly as if to help me to take in its meaning, and again I answered without hesitation, "Yes, sir."

He looked at me a moment more searchingly than before; then he took a step forward, leaned across the intervening space of an empty seat and asked with strong emphasis, "Who, since the days of Christ and the apostles, has been inspired?"

I had been wondering since entering the school if, among so many young people, there was not one Reorganized Latter Day Saint besides myself. Now I took one quick glance over the room to see if I could catch a look of recognition in any face, but there was nothing to encourage me. I saw only the blank look of surprised interest in the dialogue between the professor and me.

I turned back to him and said, "I suppose there is not another person here who thinks as I do, but I believe Joseph Smith, the man whom the world despises today, was a prophet of God."

For a moment he stared at me, and then, recovering himself, he said, "You may be seated." I sat down nervous and quivering from the scrutiny to which I was being subjected.

I was no more than seated when a student on the far side of the room began waving his arm and snapping his fingers to attract attention. He asked, "What was that she said? I did not hear what she said."

I do not know what it was that stung me, but something did, and I came back to my feet to say, "If Mr. B or anybody else wants to know why I believe as I do, let him come and ask me. I think I can assure him it is not through ignorance." I said that because I knew there were those who regarded Latter Day Saints as a body of ignorant fanatics, and I knew their religion to be a challenge to the best intelligence of men.

Professor Scott was making his way across the room to answer the inquiring student. He looked over his shoulder to tell me it was not customary for a member of the class to take the floor without recognition from the teacher, but his manner was very kind and he also said, "I am glad Miss Stedman is in the class, for heretofore we have been at liberty to abuse the Mormons to our hearts' content. With someone to take their side we may learn things we have not known before."

Then it was noon, and the class was dismissed. As I walked down the long halls to my room, I passed groups of students congregated at the door of the dining room, waiting to go in. Word had preceded me; I saw covert looks and heard stage whispers of "What did she say she believes?"

A few days later Professor Scott announced that he would like to have me stop at his desk. When I did so, he asked if I would review an article on Mormonism he would bring me. I answered that I would, and then I put to him the direct question, "Do you know there are two churches, entirely distinct, called by names almost identical, and both known as Mormon?"

When he said he did not know it, I said, "I wish you to understand that the church of which I am a member has no connection with Utah, but has its headquarters in southern Iowa."

"I have heard," he said, "of a people who lived in Plano, Illinois, some years ago who were known as Mormons." I told him they were people of my church, who had removed as a body to southern Iowa and had their headquarters at Lamoni.

I was very late to dinner that day, and so was Professor Scott. We became so interested in our subject that we could hardly end the discussion. Making our way along the halls and down the steps, we halted frequently to give undivided attention to what we were discussing. I was deeply interested in presenting the church in its true light, and he was interested as a teacher of history in following a clue to something he had not known before.

Discussions of the Book of Mormon

I carried him copies of the Herald and other reading matter, and when I went home at vacation time I started back with my mother's Book of Mormon, but in some way it was lost on the journey. However, he followed up the clue he had received from me and informed himself somewhat concerning our church.

As the class in history neared the story of the expulsion of the church from Nauvoo I grew very anxious. I thought of it by day and dreamed of it by night. I had been in the church only about a year and a half, and the greater part of that time I had been an isolated member. My only opportunity to learn had been by reading the Herald and studying the books and tracts published by the church, but my interest was so great that I had applied myself and had gained some information, for which I was thankful in my hour of need.

The Solomon Spaulding Hoax

The day of the discussion arrived, and, as was to be expected, the young people of the class told the stories they had read in encyclopedias and histories pertaining to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and the establishment of the church. One of them told the story of the Manuscript Found, a romance written by Solomon Spaulding, which had disappeared from a printing office to which it had been intrusted, and which was assumed to have been stolen.

It was claimed by some that this manuscript had been made the basis of the Book of Mormon, and witnesses were produced who testified that they recognized certain expressions and proper names peculiar to the Book of Mormon as having been in the story written by Solomon Spaulding. The college students had read these stories and repeated them in the class discussion. They repeated also the assertion they had read that the Book of Mormon teaches the doctrine of polygamy. I was the last to be called upon. Then the professor turned to me saying, "Now, Miss Stedman, what have you to say?"

I arose and told our version of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and the beginning of the latter day work. I explained the Spaulding story by telling the class that within the last year the manuscript of that story had been found most unexpectedly in Honolulu, Hawaii, in the possession of Mr. L. L. Rice. It had come into his possession when he bought out a printing office in Ohio many years before and had removed a large collection of books and manuscripts to Hawaii.

In looking through those old pamphlets and papers Mr. Rice found a faded manuscript which proved to be the "Manuscript Story" of Solomon Spaulding. He deposited it in the library of Oberlin College, Ohio, to be read by anyone who might wish to examine it.

Concerning the manuscript he found Mr. Rice wrote: "Two things are true concerning the manuscript in my possession: First, it is a genuine writing of Solomon Spaulding; second, it is not the original of the Book of Mormon. My opinion is, from all I have seen and learned, that this is the only writing of Spaulding, and there is no foundation for the statement of Deming and others, that Spaulding made another story, more elaborate, of which several copies were written, one of which Rigdon stole from a printing office in Pittsburgh."

I told the class that President Fairchild of Oberlin College had furnished the officials of the Reorganized Church certified copies of the Manuscript Found, that it had been printed and placed on sale that all interested persons might read it and know there is no foundation for the story that it was the origin of the Book of Mormon.

The Question of Polygamy

I cited the class to the teachings of the Book of Mormon on the matter of polygamy, which it plainly denounces.

I told them Joseph Smith had been dead eight years before the Utah church brought forth the document that taught polygamy. I told them also that Joseph Smith's three sons were members of the Reorganized Church.

At the close of an interesting period the professor asked the class to show by uplifted hands how many had learned things they did not know before, and I think every hand went up. He closed the session by giving them a piece of good advice, warning them to make it a rule not to judge a person before having heard his side of a matter—"for," he said, "you might condemn someone as good as yourself, if not better."

Spiritual Growth Through Stewardship

will remember some of our fundamental teachings in their times of need. God is very kind and just; if he has given them greater responsibilities, he has also given them greater opportunities. I have often felt that the good which may lie within our own children arises out of what has been divinely implanted within them and nurtured by good Christian family relations.

DO WE WANT to build the kingdom? Do we want to achieve it? Well, we can, and more than that I think we are achieving it. There is imposed upon women of the church a tremendous responsibility. Many years ago when we held meetings in the lower auditorium of this Stone Church the women brought into the treasury of the church every dollar they could save as a result of work, faith, and sacrifice. Week after week these monies were brought to the bishop to help pay off the church debt. Then one day when a banker said to me, "I don't see how your church ever pulled out of the condition it was in, and when I talked to you at the time I don't believe you knew how it could be done either," I said, "There is just one thing—I knew something about the sacrifices and devotion, particularly of the women of the church. I knew that if we were given time there would be brought into the coffers of the church the monies necessary to pay off our debt, because I know of that underlying purpose and that devotion and spirit of consecration which would bring to the church release from its bondage. I knew that because I knew the people and of their consecration."

I knew people in the little branch where I lived in Minneapolis who would give anything and everything they possessed to save this church. There are people of that caliber in the church today. God has said that there is a way of equitable distribution of funds, and that distribution comes through compliance with the financial law. One is never required to give out of his needs if he complies with the law. He gives a tenth of the increase which has been made possible through the God-given talents to the person; the tithe comes only out of increase, and ultimately surplus, too, arises out of increase.

Even the abilities that man has to create the increase or the surplus are God-given. In and of ourselves we can do nothing, but with these talents which are God-given we can move together in their utilization to build his kingdom.

"The Lord called his people Zion because they were of one heart"—and so we move forward in the spirit of love. "The Lord called his people Zion because they were of one mind"—the mind which directs the will to do and to achieve, the mind which directs the soul in discipline through compliance with the financial law. That's the foundation of the financial law—to discipline one that he may have strength. So we move forward to a condition of righteousness because there are those in the church who recognize the spiritual motivation of compliance with the financial law, who recognize that it is indeed the process by which there can be liberated a spiritual force and power which can change the tide of world history if we choose to take that course.

As we move forward in the accomplishment of all the objectives of the church, which objectives are set forth in that definition, we reach out among our brothers and our sisters to lift them above the levels of poverty. In so doing we accomplish the great and eternal purposes of the church. In the home there is opportunity for teaching, for consecration, for worship, for participation in the stewardship plan. Its purpose is to release humankind from the bondage of sin, war, and destruction. It builds the soul of man and liberates the forces which will make possible the establishment of Zion.

Seven Baptized at Reunion

ARKANSAS-LOUISIANA DISTRICT.—The district reunion was held at Camp Clear Fork near Hot Springs, Arkansas, from July 20 to 27. A congregation of Saints represented the following states: Texas, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Missouri.

A general prayer service was held each morning, and young people's prayer services every other morning prior to the general service. Bishop Joseph Baldwin was the instructor of the general class which was followed by divided classes with the young people under the direction of Seventy James Renfro, the men taught by Evangelist H. I. Velt, and the women taught by Mrs. H. I. Velt. Sister Aleta Runkle instructed a class on music in the afternoons. Recreation was under the direction of Jack Willis and Gillen Emde. Mrs. Hazel Withee conducted choir practice before the evening preaching service which featured Apostle P. E. Farrow as speaker. Sister Runkle was in charge of the evensong.

A baptismal service was held Saturday evening at which seven persons were baptized. A special Communion service was held Sunday so that the isolated members might attend the service.—Reported by BETTY McLAUGHLIN

Choir Presents Concert

RIVER ROUGE, MICHIGAN.—The choir presented a musical program, "With a Song in Our Hearts," on May 22. The funds raised were used to pay for new choir robes and also to help with remodeling the interior of the church. Featured on the program as soloists were Della McIntosh, Beverly Knierim, Barbara McGee, Don McIntosh, Gary Sampson, Richard Gault; women's trio, Myrtle Guy, Della McIntosh, and Lorene Stewart. The choir was directed by Don McIntosh. Choir members included sopranos Mary Chiparo, Myrtle Guy, Beverly Knierim, Barbara McGee, Fayrene McIntosh, Sue Perritt, Alice Shanteau, Lorene Stewart, Elsie Kalamick, Dorothy Lever, Gloria McCarter, Della McIntosh, Dessie Perritt, Janice Collin; tenors Robert McGee, Wayne Shanteau; and bass Gary Sampson.—Reported by DONALD E. Vacation Church School Held NATIONAL CITY, CALIFORNIA.—The National City Mission held vacation church school June 30-July 11.

The enrollment of twenty-five pupils included nine from nonmember homes, not attending any church school; only eight had previously attended. Since then six have been added to the attendance, due to influence of the vacation church school.

The daily program began with songs and prayers by the entire group, after which they divided into two classes for the lesson stories. Then after a short recess and a snack of cookies and fruit drink, the rest of the time was devoted to handicrafts.

The lesson theme was "Embarking in the Service of God and the Building of Zion," so a picture of a ship was used as the "Ship of Church." Each class used a cardboard compass with the arrow to point to the name of which one of the Three Books in which the daily Scripture was found.

The junior class, with Hazel Forqueran as teacher, chose officers of the ship to correspond with the officers of the church. They made large posters with the lesson scriptures and pictures to illustrate each.

Lucille Beach was teacher of the seventeen primary children, who made crepe paper sailor hats to wear during classes and chose a captain to hold the helm. They used a wall frieze on which to print the lesson Scripture and place illustrative pictures and articles. The handicrafts also carried the theme of the lessons. For the lesson of the "Good Shepherd" they covered cardboard lambs with little balls of cotton, sewed on a black button eye and tied a little bell on the neck. The lesson on "Giving of our best to the Master" suggested making "get well" cards, so each child made one and gave them to a little girl who had the measles. The frieze pictures suggested ways to help someone.

The lesson story of Joseph Smith was illustrated by each child's making a crayon drawing of the sacred grove with Joseph kneeling in prayer; one boy added the two personages surrounded by light above the figure of Joseph Smith. For the missionary lesson the children made invitations to church school to give to friends and wove baskets for fishermen's creels.

Each class made washable cloth books with crayon pictures to be donated to a children's hospital. The junior girls made baby jackets to be put in the storehouse for needy. They also made plaques, and bookmarks, and corsages of nylon hose.

The primary class made framed pictures of their handprints, inscribed, "My hands will work for Jesus."

On July 13 the regular church school hour was given to the achievement program.

The opening prayer was given by all the children; then they sang a group of songs. Lucille Beach gave a report of the primary class, followed by a group of action songs by the children.

Hazel Forqueran gave the junior class report. Four junior girls sang "I Want to Be a Christian."

A short talk was given by the pastor, Elder E. M. Shimel, and the closing prayer, by Evelyn Mann, one of the junior pupils.

The display was left in the church until after the Wednesday evening prayer service to enable pastor P. S. Whalley of the San Diego Branch, and Bishop J. Stanley Kelley to see the work the children had done.—Reported by GRACE KELLY

Babies Are Blessed

COFFEYVILLE, KANSAS.—Three babies were blessed in a service on Sunday morning, August 17. They were Deborah Ann, three-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Tesh; Katherine Jane, two months, and Joyce Ann, two years, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Sublette. Elders W. A. Connell and C. L. Anderson assisted the pastor, Myron Cadwell, in the service.

Robert Ralston sang a solo and was accompanied at the piano by his mother, Mrs. Arch Ralston, who had written appropriate words for the number. Mrs. Ralston is the grandmother of Deborah Ann Tesh.

On May 18, 1952, Gary Dallas, infant son of Elder and Mrs. Myron Cadwell, was blessed by his father.

William Bunch was ordained a priest on Sunday, August 3, at Caney, Kansas. He was ordained by Missionary Ralph Bobbitt and Elder Myron Cadwell. Brother Bobbitt was present for the Communion service in Coffeyville that morning and presented the theme talk and a vocal solo.

Three children were baptized on June 15 by Priest Glen Johnson. They were Carol Ann Johnson, Patricia Lou Richardson, and Ronald Leroy Stark.—Reported by MRS. MYRON CADWELL

Four Candidates Baptized

TOLEDO, OHIO.—Brother E. Y. Hunker, President of Seventy, was in the branch during the latter part of May.

On May 24 and 25, the young people from the district met at Toledo under the leadership of Elder Carl Mesle, General Church youth leader.

The women turned in $1,235. The quota was set at $1,200. The leader of the women is Sister Pearl Emahiser.

First Annual Youth Retreat Held

RED RIVER DISTRICT, MINNESOTA.—The first annual Red River youth retreat was held in the 4-H Building at Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, August 9 and 10. The theme for the week end was "Witness for the Restoration." A potluck dinner started the retreat Saturday, followed by an afternoon of volleyball, swimming, and softball. The evening services consisted of two talks, one by Mabel Restimyre on nursing and the other by Elder Charles Young on health. A campfire and fellowship closed the day's activities.

Sunday's services were a prayer meeting, general class, and a sermon by Priest Lloyd Young at the morning hour. His theme was "A Witnessing Youth." Recreation was held in the afternoon. District officers are leader, Druie Black; president, Tom Peterson; vice-president, Mavis Kohler; secretary and treasurer, Beverly Schiebold. Committee heads are recreation, Sally Omans; worship, Lloyd Young; publicity, Warren Schiebold. Priesthood attending the retreat were Elder Charles Young, Priests Lloyd Young and Ted Tester, and Deacon Tom Peterson. Girls' counselor was Ada Carlson and boys' counselor was Elder Ray Sachow. There were thirty-two young people in attendance.—Reported by WARREN SCHIEBOLD

Stake Reunion Held

CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE.—It would be extremely difficult to sum up a reunion in a few words. The experiences are so personal. There is so much one would like to retain for the rest of his life that he might share it with others.

This much I can say briefly and with much assurance: We reached some new heights in spiritual growth at the Central Missouri Stake Reunion held this year from July 26 to August 3. If this is an example of what is being experienced church wide, as I believe it is, then surely the church is on the forward move toward the kingdom of God.

At this reunion, no specific charge is made for meals. People contribute an offering each day for their food. Women of the different congregations, with help from the Zion's Leaguers, work together in the kitchen and dining hall under the supervision of one who has the responsibility of being in charge of the meals for the week. I saw the different groups working together in this capacity, without the best of serving facilities, in unity and harmony.

Each noonday the men who were experienced carpenters and builders donned the garments of their trade and spent the afternoon working on church buildings which were under construction at Kingsville and Richmond. This had been planned by the stake officers as a part of the reunion program.

Then on the closing day of reunion, the men worked taking down the tents and clearing the grounds. In approximately two hours, the large meeting tents, as well as the tent village of 100 tents sheltering about 400 people, were taken down and the evidences of their week's stay largely removed. These work experiences were an enjoyable part of our spiritual growth through stewardships.

The reunion was well attended. The attendance each year continues to increase. The average daily attendance was approximately 500. On the first Sunday there were 1,250 present and on the second Sunday about 1,125.

Surely those who had the responsibility of choosing this year's theme for reunion were divinely inspired in their choice. Our concept of "Stewardships" grew during the week as we participated in classes and prayer services and listened to the fine sermons of each evening. Seventy Philip Moore, stake missionary, was the evening speaker.

Challenged by such prayer meeting themes as "Spiritual Growth Through Being Humble and Teachable," "Spiritual Growth Through Being True to God," "Spiritual Growth Through Love and Service," "Spiritual Growth by Responding Now," and others, we found ourselves asking questions such as these: "Do I want to grow spiritually? Does my life reflect the light of Christ? Am I true to the covenant I made at baptism? Am I honest with God? Do I make good use of my time and talents? Am I willing to give myself at once, without reservations to go where he wants me to go; say what he wants me to say; do what he wants me to do?"

Under the influence of the good spirit, we examined ourselves critically and determined to do our best to retain that good spirit and continue our climb in a steady course toward our goal of Zion.

We saw children and young people responding to this good spirit; some of them experiencing for the first time a real awakening to the call to serve.

One change from the schedule of previous years, which drew a lot of favorable comment, was the fact that on Wednesday evening we had prayer service instead of preaching. The preaching service was held that morning.

In addition to the stake officers present, we were blessed with the ministries of Evangelists Elbert A. Smith, Arthur Stoff, and A. C. Martin, the preaching and teaching of F. M. McDowell, and the teaching in women's work and music of Aleta Runkle.

Yes, it was good to be at reunion. Central Missouri Stake should go forward in the coming months as it has never done before, for each one who attended should be a better person, stronger in spiritual stature because of his experience there. If we can multiply this number by all the people whose lives we touch and influence, surely the results will be evident.—Reported by CARRIE BAIRD

Evangelist J. F. Curtis Visits Branch

JOPLIN, MISSOURI.—An evening service was presented by the Gideon Society on June 15, with Elder Fred Graves in charge. Joseph Dwyer gave the talk explaining the work of the society in putting Bibles and Testaments in schools and other places to encourage people to read the Scriptures. At the close of the service Walter Calvin received the contributions of the congregation.

Eleven young people of the branch attended the youth camp at Wakonda in June. Barbara Tedder, a young girl, was baptized June 29, the Sunday following the close of camp. Two girls, Michele Black and Margo Irvine, sang at the baptismal service. At the Communion service in July, Michele, Margo, and Barbara sang a trio, accompanied by Sister Lorene Carrow at the organ. Several of the families in the branch attended the reunion at Racine July 19-27.

Center Stake President Charles V. Graham was the guest speaker on August 10. He was visiting the branch accompanied by his family. He also preached at the district reunion.

On May 25, Dr. and Mrs. Athol Cochran observed their golden wedding anniversary with forty-five guests, including their five daughters and one son and their families.

Evangelist J. Frank Curtis was with the branch on April 30 for prayer and testimony service. He remained over the next Sunday and baptized his grandson Jack Cochran. He also preached that evening.

Tom Cochran, one of the Zion's Leaguers, received the Elks award for being the outstanding leader among the boys in Missouri.—Reported by RACHEL TROYER ship. The Junior Leagues are asked not to use the regular Zion's League Membership Cards.

The chief purpose of the suggested minimum age is to encourage senior high and college age young people to remain active Leaguers. Their membership sometimes tends to be discouraged by the presence in the League of too many junior high age young people. It is also felt that too many junior highs are exposed to the League program before they are socially and perhaps mentally ready to absorb it with the result that by the time they arrive at the proper age they tend to feel they have had enough and are ready to drop out. We also hope that the junior high age will be encouraged to participate in the programs designed for their ages and that branch leadership will give additional consideration to providing these programs for the recommended age groups.

INVESTITURE SERVICE

SUGGESTED SETTING: A table with two large candles and perhaps the Zion's League shield pinned on the tablecloth so that it hangs in the front. In the center of the table a tray with the membership cards arranged in an attractive manner with purple and gold ribbons or flowers arranged in among them. The service may be held in candlelight if desired.

PARTICIPANTS IN THE SERVICE: The Zion's League officers, leader, and a reader. (The reader is to give the trust at the conclusion of the service. One of the commission chairmen may be used for this.) Prelude to the service might include such hymns as "Give of Your Best to the Master," "Take My Life," and "Just As I Am."

ORDER OF SERVICE

Opening hymn—"I Would Be True"

Invocation—Zion's League leader
President—(comes to the front of the rostrum and gives a speech incorporating the following points) You are to become official members of the Zion's League tonight. A membership card signifying your allegiance to this Zion's League will become yours. This will serve as admittance to Stake (or district) activities, but more than that, it will be a material evidence that you belong to a group of young people who are building better lives, and that you are acquainted with a program which is making a finer person of those who participate in it. Sometimes there are adjustments to make when you meet with a group of people, but your indication of interest in the League has let us know that you want to belong, that you are concerned with its activities, and that you want to make its projects a success. The growth of the League depends upon the degree to which you accept your membership. Our service projects cannot succeed without your enthusiasm and endeavors. Our recreation is no success unless you join the fellowship and fun. Our study accomplishes nothing without your application. Our worship does not exist without your participation. The League is dependent upon you. For you—each one of you—are the League. Your standards are its standards; your goals, its goals; your accomplishments, its accomplishments. As you accept your membership card, may we together build a better Zion's League by becoming better persons.

Quartet—"Now in the Days of Youth," Youth Hymnal, No. 169.

Vice-President—(coming forward to stand beside the President, who remains standing during the quartet) Many of you have come to Zion's League for several years, and, though your membership as Leaguers is recognized, this service is planned to help you recognize the value of your League and your responsibility in its development. In behalf of the officers, may I welcome each of you to a greater degree of service, to a more active League, to grander times together. You are members as indicated by these cards. The League motto is "Youth United in Action for Christ." The Master gave the blueprint for successful living. May you become a living example of the League motto.

The treasurer then presents the cards to the new members and they sign the book, or the secretary enters their names in the book. (The League should have some record of its members.) The leader shakes their hands, and the following trust is read by some member, preferably one of the commission chairmen.

TRUST: This is your League—not just another "good time" but the kind of fun that lasts—clean recreation with clean kids. This is your League—not some "dull program," but an avenue of learning. This is your League—not just another activity, but a growing experience with the Creator. This is your League—not some halfhearted endeavor, but a chance to serve a worthwhile cause, a chance to serve a worth-while cause, a chance to grow, to find a deeper meaning in love for others and understanding of need. This is your League—not a boring evening, but rich, wonderful experiences that enlarge your capacity to love, that build stronger friendships, that make your personality finer. This is your League—it offers you exciting adventures as you learn of brave deeds, great lives, new truths. This is your League—without you, its hopes fall short. Remember that you belong. Cherish your membership; stand for your League's standards. For you set them, and this is your League.

Closing Hymn—"Rise Up, O Men of God."

Suggested Prayer—May the great God of all Zion's Leaguers be with us till we meet again. By his Spirit led, may we forge ahead along the paths that lead to him.

TUSS.—Alfred J., was born June 29, 1909, at Madison, Wisconsin, and died June 17, 1952, of a heart attack at a hospital in St. Paul, Minnesota. On February 14, 1933, he was married to Jeanette Wirth; five children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 13, 1935, and had served as a deacon since November 14, 1943.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Carolyn and Barbara; and three sons: Jack, Russel, and Edward, all of the home in Madison. Funeral services were held at the Fitch-Lawrence Chapel, Elder Myron Curry officiating. Burial was in Forest Hill Cemetery.

LUM.—Maud L., daughter of Elisha J. and Octava Dexter Culver, was born February 10, 1870, at Hartford, Vermont, and died August 13, 1952, at her home in Independence, Missouri. On July 3, 1892, she was married to Sherman Lum, who preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 5, 1900, and since February 25, 1920, had made her home in Independence.

She leaves no immediate survivors. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Arthur E. Stoff and Glaude A. Smith at the Henry Stahl Chapel in Independence. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

RALSTON.—Christian Arthur, was born October 26, 1881, at Lamar, Missouri, and died July 5, 1952, at Delta, Colorado. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 1, 1897, was ordained a teacher on January 23, 1916, and an elder on February 23, 1919. He was a charter member of the Wiley (Colorado) Branch which was eventually moved to Lamar. Here he served as pastor to the end of his life. On November 25, 1906, he was married to Lona Lovell, who survives him.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Jessie Valut of Wray, Colorado; and two sons: Robert and Arthur of Los Angeles, California. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Ward A. Hougas at the church in Delta. Interment was in the Las Animas cemetery.

RALSTON.—Lynne Rae, daughter of Russell F. and Florence M. Ralston, was born February 28, 1946, at Berkeley, California, and died August 3, 1952, at Mercy Hospital in Kansas City, Missouri. She loved her Jesus and spoke of seeing him and feeling his presence with her constantly.

She is survived by her parents; two brothers: Alan Frederick and David Mark; her maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Gamet; and her paternal grandmother, Mrs. Lydia E. Ralston. Funeral services were held at the Speaks chapel in Independence, Elders A. E. Stoff and A. W. Sheehy officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

RUSSELL.—Jennie, daughter of Christian and Eliza Hanson, was born September 7, 1880, at Greenville, Michigan, and died August 2, 1952, at Standish Hospital. In 1900 she was married to Elijah Russell, who survives her. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since she was eight and for thirty-six years was in charge of the music department of Twining Branch.

Besides her husband she leaves a daughter, Arlene Pestruie of Standish, Michigan; three sons: Howard of Flint, Michigan; Jack of Prescott, Michigan; and Robert of Omer, Michigan; two sisters: Anna Jacobs of Tawas City, Michigan, and Emma Wilson of Hood River, Oregon; and eight grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Twining Methodist Church, Elders John Blackstock and Alex Morgan officiating. Burial was in Cedar Valley Cemetery.

STECKEL.—Emma Rebecca, daughter of John R. and Catherine L. Bradley, was born December 21, 1870, at Amber, Iowa, and died August 2, 1952, at Lamoni, Iowa. On February 28, 1894, she was married to David Peter Steckel at Amber; later they lived in Onslow, Bloomington, and Evergreen before making their home in Lamoni. She assisted her husband in managing the Lamoni Telephone Company and was appointed to the office of vital statistics as registrar of Fayette and Bloomington Townships as well as Lamoni. She held this position for twenty-one years before ill health forced her to resign. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since she was nine years old and had served the church at various times during her life as a teacher, chorister, organist, librarian, secretary, and president of programs.

She is survived by two sons: Howard E. of Lamoni and Leon R. of St. Joseph, Missouri; a daughter, Esther L. Simpson of St. Joseph; a brother; a sister; three grandchildren; and several great-grandchildren. Her husband and one daughter preceded her in death. Funeral services were conducted by Elders David W. Gamet and Robert Farnham.

GRAY.—Clyde Earl, son of John and Cynthia Stephenson Gray, was born March 15, 1881, at North Salem, Indiana, and died August 1, 1952, at Danville, Indiana. In 1898 he was married to Anna Elizabeth Nichols; five children were born to them. A son, Cecil Earl, and a daughter, Clara Gray, preceded him in death. His wife, Anna, died on July 23, 1923, after which he married Pearl Simmons Roberts on May 5, 1924. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1926.

He is survived by his wife, Pearl; two daughters: Pearl Shrader of Phoenix, Arizona, and Merle Genkes of Detroit, Michigan; a son, Frank of Columbus, Ohio; a twin sister, Mrs. Ida Terry of Indianapolis, Indiana; twenty grandchildren; fourteen great-grandchildren; and a stepdaughter, Patriarch A. W. Gage conducted the funeral service in Danville. Burial was at North Salem.

KEIM.—Harriet Olive, daughter of Julia and A. J. Moore, was born August 29, 1877, at Willow Creek, Montana, and died August 4, 1952, at Indianapolis, Indiana. She spent her youth in Lamoni, Iowa, and attended Graceland College there. She met and married Francis Keim in Texas; five daughters were born to them. Since 1917 they had made their home in Indiana.

She is survived by her husband; five daughters: Mrs. Harriette Allen of Shelby, Michigan; Mrs. Julia Sutphin and Marjorie Keim of Indianapolis, Indiana; Mrs. Gladys Sargent of Green Bay, Wisconsin; and Mrs. Ruth Campbell of Denver, Colorado; and four grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Wayne Smelser. Burial was in Washington Park Cemetery, Indianapolis.

TILDEN.—Helen Mary, daughter of Frank and Anne Behne, was born November 29, 1891, at St. Joseph, Missouri, and died July 19, 1952, at Springfield, Missouri. She was married to Roy L. Tilden on June 5, 1910; four children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1917.

She is survived by her husband; two daughters: Virginia Waters of Wheatland, Missouri, and Dorothy Swinney of Springfield; two sons: Phillip F. of San Diego, California, and Harold D. of Wichita, Kansas; two sisters: Miss Georgeanna Behne of St. Joseph and Mrs. John Bell of Troy, Kansas; and nine grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at St. Joseph by Elder William Twombly. Burial was in the Ashland Cemetery, St. Joseph.

LASLEY.—Doddie Charles, son of Lura and Charles M. Lasley, was born June 2, 1930, in Roswell, New Mexico, and died August 20, 1952, at Marshall, Missouri. He was blessed in 1932 at El Dorado Springs, Missouri. He was an invalid all his life.

Surviving are his parents and a brother, Gilbert Lasley of the United States Navy, stationed at Orange, Texas. Graveside services were conducted by Priest Herbert Ridge. Burial was at Marshall.

Correction

A typographical error appeared in the Albert Potts obituary (August 25 issue, page 23, first column). Mrs. Potts' maiden name was Anna Truman rather than Anna Thuman.

play was directed by Virginia Henson, with the choir under the leadership of Elmer Sloan. The cast of fifty young people took the play to Fairland, Oklahoma, August 23 and 24. On Saturday night they performed to an audience of 180 people. On Sunday they presented the church school hour which was a group discussion led by High Priest Fred O. Davies, pastor of the Walnut Park congregation. The eleven o'clock service was also presented by the young people. A. L. Henson is the Zion's League leader.

REPORTS PROGRESS IN CANADA

Z. Z. Renfroe, president of Seventy, was in Independence during the week of August 11 after three months in Canada where he conducted several series of meetings, visited in branches, and attended three reunions. He held series at the following places: Weyburn, Saskatchewan; May 10-17, Regina, Saskatchewan, June 24-31; Grassland, Alberta, July 7-14; and Ribstone, Alberta, July 18-28. He attended the Winnipeg and Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, and Sylvan Lake, Alberta, reunions. Associated with Brother Renfroe on the staff were Seventy C. Houston Hobart of Deer Lodge, Montana, and Elder Howard Fisher, newly appointed missionary of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Brother Renfroe reported that eleven candidates were baptized at the close of the reunion at Sylvan Lake.

BISHOP JOHNSON AT REUNION

Bishop Walter N. Johnson returned to the office August 18 after being at the Park of the Pines Reunion where he taught a class. He was accompanied on the trip by his wife and children. Sister Johnson was the teacher for the women's class.

MRS. VOLT TEACHES WOMEN

Mrs. Harold I. Velt represented the General Council of Women at the Eastern Colorado Reunion at Palmer Lake, Colorado, August 16-24. She was the instructor for the women's classes.

TRI-STAKE TOURNAMENT HELD

A Tri-Stake All-Star softball and volleyball tournament was held at the Campus in Independence August 23. Far West Stake and Kansas City Stake challenged the Center Stake of Zion. The activity was under the direction of the Center Stake Zion's League cabinet and Lee Hart, Center Stake youth leader.

IN SERIOUS ACCIDENT

Word has been received that Mrs. Alice Burgess and her daughter, Mrs. Dan Belcher and children, Danielle, Alice, and Samuel, were involved in a serious automobile accident near Mission, South Dakota, August 26. A St. Louis girl, who was with the party as a baby sitter, was killed in the accident, the message from the sheriff at Mission said, Sister Burgess had attended reunions at Hagerman, Idaho, and Deer Lodge, Montana.

 ON SERMON LISTENING

How long can you listen intently to an interesting sermon? The time varies individually, but for most people twenty minutes is a limit. (And sometimes, when the language rolls on and on without making much sense, I wonder if the preacher himself is listening, or just taking a vacation with words.)

After twenty minutes, when the speaker begins to repeat himself, indulges in redundant exhortation, or explains the obvious in pedantic, minute detail, your mind edits the sermon and says to you, "All right, you can skip this." Then your thoughts wander off to greener pastures of contemplation where the forage is not so dry. A conscientious listener will realize with a start that he is not hearing the sermon, and will sit up; swallow his yawn, and try it again. But unless the speaker is doing well, it will be futile.

H. V. Kaltenborn, anticipating some windy nominating speeches at the Chicago convention, quoted a now proverbial saying on sermons: "If the souls of the congregation are not saved in the first twenty minutes, they are likely to remain unredeemed." How true. Too true.

We have discovered that anything the preacher says after twelve on a Sunday morning is lost, because people's appetites are roaring in their ears for food, the seats are becoming hard, and the children are restless. The preacher would best say the benediction and leave the remainder of his message for another time. In fact, if he doesn't quit, people will not only ignore what he is saying—they will forget all that he had said before!

Are you a preacher? Put out your message in twenty minutes. The rest will be mere chin music to the people, and they are easily bored with it.

 THE ESCAPIST

Do you ever look at civilization and wonder how much longer you can stand it? Radio, TV, auto traffic, accidents, divorces, taxes and war—paying more and more for less and less all the time—sinuous radio announcers looking down the back of your neck (figuratively, of course) while you brush your teeth, all the blatancy of advertising and the screaming hysteria of news commentators. And now, finally, the muddiest political campaign since Lincoln's time.

Somewhere in the Southwest there is a peaceful little valley where radio dims out among the high peaks, and TV channels cannot reach. No phones, no streetcars, no subways, no express highways, no crowds. Just peace, quiet, and rest. . . . Come to think of it, nothing else, either. Only rocks and sand. You couldn't grow a parsnip on a thousand acres. Oh, well, we wouldn't like it there either.

 THE UPWARD TURN

If you want to be happy, try to look happy. Don't go around with the corners of your mouth at half-mast. It is no use to buy a gay youthful outfit while you carry around a drab, colorless, unhappy set of ideas in your mind.

JOINT COUNCIL IN SESSION

The Joint Council began sessions on September 8. The Council of Twelve began its session September 2.

W. W. SMITH HOME FROM WEST

President W. Wallace Smith is back at the office, having returned from the West where he and Sister Smith attended reunions for the Southern California, Northern California, Silver Lake, and Portland districts. Brother Smith preached and taught classes at the reunions and Sister Smith taught the women's classes. He was in Detroit for the annual International Stake Conference on September 14.

REPORT FROM APOSTLE HIELD

Apostle Charles R. Hield has received word from Elder and Mrs. George Young and Priest and Mrs. Lloyd Hurshman of the baptism of Jose Aranda who has been most helpful in translating tracts from English into Spanish. Brother Aranda was baptized August 24.

Brother Hield was the apostle at the Arizona Reunion which was held at Mt. Lemmon, Tucson, August 10-17. He reports that the reunion was a third larger in attendance than the year before and that it was on a high spiritual plane. He stopped en route to the reunion and preached at La Junta and Durango, Colorado. On his return home, he stopped at Las Cruces and Albuquerque, New Mexico, where he preached.

He reports that two Spanish-speaking students are enrolled this year at Graceland. They are Susanna Mendiola of Mexico City, Mexico, and Henrietta Almanza of St. Joseph, Missouri.

MESLEYS AT REUNIONS

Apostle and Mrs. C. George Mesley attended three reunions during the summer—Port Elgin, Ontario; Erie Beach, Ontario; and Cash, Michigan. They also made official trips to Ottawa, Ontario; and to New York. Brother Mesley reports that a fine spirit prevailed at all three reunions.

RECORD ATTENDANCE AT REUNION

Apostle Percy E. Farrow reports that approximately 150 people attended the Southern Indiana Reunion held at Mitchell, Indiana, August 11-17. The attendance was increased to 300 on the last Sunday and the offering for the morning reached $500. Brother Farrow noted that this was the best attendance and best response in the history of this particular reunion. Appointee ministry included Apostle Farrow, Bishop J. E. Baldwin, Elder C. D. Neff, and Seventy J. H. Yager. Chester Metcalf is the district president.

Brother Farrow also reports that the Indianapolis, Indiana, Branch has recently put new oak pews in their remodeled church and are now preparing to veneer the exterior of the church with Bedford stone.

EVANGELIST HUNKER IN THE EAST

Evangelist E. Y. Hunker was at four reunions this summer. They were held at Bethesda, Ohio; Brooksville, Maine; Onset, Massachusetts; and Kirtland, Ohio. He left Independence September 5 to return to the eastern mission to begin work at Jonesport, Maine. He will be in the field until Christmas and will hold services at Jonesport, Stonington, and Vinal Haven, Maine; Norwalk, Connecticut; Niagara Falls and Buffalo, New York; Pittsburgh and Scranton, We'd Like You To Know . . .

Ladd LaVerne Duryea

IT IS STRANGE how people get together, and seldom do they travel by the shortest line. Comstock, Nebraska, is not far from Independence, but it took a series of incidents to open the way for Ladd to come to the Center Place. Uncle Sam's military needs played a part as also the illness of the Herald House managing editor. Here is the story.

Ladd did a commendable job in high school and was class valedictorian in 1948. He received the Elks' award and the Regents scholarship and started college training at the University of Nebraska in Lincoln. The Regents award helped him each year to work his way through the University. He majored in journalism and worked a year as part-time reporter on the Lincoln Star. Then the government asked for his services, and he quit his job to start military training. At the last minute he was told he would not be called for another three months; but Herald House needed him, so he came to assist in the editorial department.

Ladd's grandmother (Mrs. John Matheson) and her family, who had belonged to the church many years, kept their homes at Comstock open for meetings. During the latter part of Ladd's high school career he was put in charge of the newly opened church school, though he and his wife (the former Betty June Petit) were not baptized until January, 1950, while attending Lincoln Branch.

In addition to getting his A.B. degree last June, Ladd was graduated "with distinction" in the upper 10 per cent of his class, and in the upper 5 per cent of his journalism class, being named "the outstanding male journalism graduate." He received a gold key for scholarship from the Lincoln newspapers. He is a member of both the professional and honorary journalistic fraternities and Phi Beta Kappa. In November, 1950, he was ordained to the office of priest. The next chapter in his life will start in October. His draft board has notified him his number will be up then.

No Uncertain Sound

"For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?"

—I Corinthians 14: 8.

WE WERE LISTENING to a man who had many years of experience in the newspaper business. He was talking about the essentials of success. "If you are to succeed in the newspaper business," he said, "you must believe in it thoroughly. You must believe that it is an honorable profession, and that it makes a worthy contribution to the life of the community. Moreover, you must believe in your community and in its people. You must know them well, understand them, and like them. Unless you do this, you run a risk of almost certain failure."

This emphasis on the importance of belief has a familiar ring. It had its origin long ago. Jesus was once talking to the disciples and said, "If ye believe not . . . ye shall die in your sins" (John 8: 24).

RATHER SADLY one thinks of the many things that men are called upon to believe, and required to believe if they are merely to win their daily bread from the world: some of them of questionable truth, some of them outright falsehoods, some of such transitory importance and ephemeral character that they are beneath the dignity of the free and mature mind. In sales meetings men are told to believe that such a brand of soap or soup is the very best, the supreme quality of its kind. If they don't believe it, they can't make others believe it. This goes for insurance, cars, clothes, books, oatmeal, aspirin, sedatives, and political ideology. The demand for belief is sometimes an entrance, sometimes an intrusion, sometimes an invasion of the mind and spirit of man.

What a person believes ought to be something of great and permanent importance. It should be something that endures. Nobody likes to believe in something that may go out of business tomorrow.

Some of the things that people say they believe remind us of the woman who said, "I can believe anything if I put my mind to it."

We soon distrust a man if he tells us that he believes one thing on one day and something opposite the next day. However, we respect a man for being willing to learn, to acknowledge an error, or to correct a mistake. A mistake may be made innocently, but if he persists in it against the weight of convincing evidence it becomes a lie.

THIS EMPHASIS ON BELIEF is not something that modern religion has borrowed from business. It is something that modern business has borrowed from ancient religion. It was good two thousand years ago. It is good today. If it did not work, we may be sure that practical business men would discard it with a brusqueness and a lack of sentiment that would cause astonishment.

The promises of the gospel are thickly studded with the word. "Only believe, and she shall be healed." "Believe, and ye shall receive."

If we are confronted with a task and think we can't do it, we will not be able to get it done. But if we believe that we can, we shall probably find a way. There is only one difference: whether we believe or not. That is practical psychology.

ST. PAUL understood this matter very well. He knew that if the trumpeter was afraid, or poorly trained, he would blow a weak note, flutter it, quaver, or split it in half. Put a bold, confident, and courageous man in his place, and he would blow a blast that would pierce the ears of the soldiers, bring them to their feet, and send them charging into the lines of the enemy. The trumpet was an expression of morale. "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?"

Now we are brought, in the manner of all editorials, back to the church. Some people bear testimonies that are strong and sure. Some are faint, weak, and uncertain. What will the people who listen think?

One of our rousing old-time hymns uses these words: "Send the sound, the world around, from the rising to the setting of the sun."

There is no "uncertain sound" in those lines. Perhaps we need to sing that song more frequently. The words carry faith, belief, and conviction.

Sometimes writers and speakers use words of an uncertain sound in their writing and speaking—words like "purported" or "alleged." This is out of a desire, probably, to keep claims on a modest level. The motive is good; the effect is not so good. If we are to tell the gospel story, let us tell it as if we fully believe it. Belief and faith cannot be simulated. Conviction must come from the depths of the soul. That is why Jesus said, "Only believe."

Graceland College Enrollment

Every effort has been made since 1946 to provide for the increasing number of church young people who include two years at Graceland in their educational plans. Additions to the physical plant have included a cottage-type classroom building, central heating plant and headquarters for the department of physical plant, student center building, dormitory for men, and a cottage-type dormitory for women. Notwithstanding these additions, the present plant is fully utilized.

More students applied for admission to Graceland for the 1952 fall semester than could be served by our college facilities. Over fifty applications were received after accommodations were exhausted. It was the judgment of the college administration and the executive committee of the Board of Trustees, meeting in the emergency, that in view of the experience of the past, no more than 585 students could be adequately served by the college during the current year. Graceland, by the way, is one of the few colleges of the country reporting an increase of enrollment.

Although it is deeply regrettable that all students who qualified for admission to Graceland could not be served this year, it appears very advisable to limit enrollment to the number that can be cared for with reasonable adequacy. It is the hope of the college faculty and the Board of Trustees that members of the church will continue to evidence their interest and support and will sympathetically understand the necessity for the measures adopted.

Doctrine and Covenants Institute

All members and friends of the church are invited to attend the Doctrine and Covenants Institute September 28 to October 3 in Independence. The Sunday meetings, beginning at eleven o'clock, September 28, will be held in the Auditorium, with the Stone Church housing remaining activities. All congregations in the Center Stake will dismiss regular Sunday meetings to permit members to attend.

Daily programs begin at 8:30 a. m. and close with the 7:30 p.m. service.

One of the high lights of the institute will be the introduction and explanation of the new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants on Wednesday, October 1.

Visitors should assume responsibility of arranging for their housing and meals.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

THE PRESIDENCY has just received word from St. Louis which is in tribute to the girl mentioned in "News and Notes" column last week.

The tragic accident which took the life of Sandra Langguth of the Brentwood (Missouri) Branch has deeply saddened the hearts of all who knew her and her family. Sandra was returning home from the reunions at Hagerman, Idaho, and Deer Lodge, Montana, when she was killed in an automobile accident. Although she was young in years, just thirteen, she willingly served the church with every talent God had given her. She was pianist in the children's division of the church school and accompanist for the congregation. She was also outstanding in vocal work and dramatic ability. The sweetness of her character and her enthusiasm in the cause of Christ will be a constant inspiration to those she has left.

Her grandfather, Elder Ivor Cooke, was pastor of the Brentwood Branch for many years until his death. Her uncle, Elder David Cooke, was pastor in recent years. Sister LaRue Langguth, her mother, is giving a very fine contribution as children's division superintendent, as junior choir director, and in many other ways. We extend our heartfelt sympathy to the Langguth family and relatives.

From Robert McGraw, Los Angeles, California:

During the past month we were fortunate enough to fall heir to a periodical called Signs of the Times. In this publication was an article entitled "In God We Trust," ably and capably written by Linnie Keith.

As we read through the article we found ourselves starting to think and trying to imagine just how much people in everyday life think they do, but do not succeed completely, in trusting God.

Have you ever stopped to think what would happen if the words, "In God We Trust," were stricken from the currency of the United States of America? Needless to say, a near-panic would result and people would take time off to attend meetings of protest. Why can't we apply the same thing to ourselves? Let's take time off and have meetings of protest when the occasion demands it. When, and if, we stop trusting in God in the right manner, let's sit down and talk it over with ourselves. If we are honest, we will find that in some cases we have been either impatient or expecting miracles.

Let us keep this thought in mind when we are asking God for something and asking him to trust in us: "If it be thy will, dear God, then let it be forthcoming. If it is not, we will then realize that we do not have a true conception of our trust in you."

We have, at times, found our most fervent requests to God remain unanswered. For this there is only one reason. God did not think that they were what we should have or experience. We never need to doubt the efficiency or reliability of God. Learning to trust him we need only to learn to be patient in all our endeavors.

Let's not keep our fingers crossed when we ask for trust in God.

From Elder Don Lents in England:

I have made a complete survey and tour of the Northern District . . . visiting and preaching in every group and branch. Warrington is coming right along. We have received the approval of the Town and Country Planning Commission and the Town Council to erect our new building. We have the money in hand, but the Ecclesiastical Board with the Bishop of Liverpool as Chairman has deferred our license. We are waiting now to hear what the reason is. Eric Howe will go with me, and we shall probably see the Bishop and try to work out some kind of a system or agreement.

The Great Affirmations of Religion

By John Blackmore

A sermon given at Stone Church on July 20, 1952

EVERYONE is born with the inherent right to happiness and reasonable freedom of thought and action. Yet apprehension and fear stalk the lands of the world. In our imagination we hear in the distance the ominous sound of busy armament factories, marching men, and the dread explosion of bombs. Across the horizon we also hear the loud arguments of men in the quest for men's hearts and minds. The strident sounds of brazen international propaganda are heard above the din of conflicting economic theories and philosophies of life.

One of the weaknesses of our civilization today is that we are constantly confused and lost amid the maze of different ideas and of conflicting interests. This "lost" feeling brings us much worry and unhappiness. We are all more or less perturbed. The preacher finds his ministry difficult, for people are not gospel minded. The business man worries whether he shall experience more inflation or a terrific depression. The worker is unhappy about the rising cost of living and skyrocketing taxes. Amid it all the pastor often comes in contact with people who have lost faith in any "churchy" explanation of the realities of life. These numerous folk scoff at the usual religious phrases: "Except a man be born of water and the spirit" or "Saved by grace." These scoffers are often socially good people—not wholly irreligious, not wicked. They are more often disappointed people.

Saints, what would you say if a Negro from darkest Africa, or a Hindu, acquainted with the philosophies of the East, were to ask you, "What does your religion offer?" We can best answer in terms of the great affirmations of religion—those spiritual and practical affirmatives of religion which are universal in their operation and significance.

TRUE RELIGION

True religion in its application and expression is always changing. It can never be static in its mode of expression. He who would keep it static is untrue to its spirit and will fail in its realization. To be sure, the basic fundamental principles of religion must remain stable. But religion in its true form—religion at its best—is larger than all our personal religions put together.

As disciples we are all servants of its ideals—always striving but never attaining to its fullness of possibilities, always studying but never coming to a complete understanding of its full message, always learning more truth and attempting to apply our increased knowledge. Religion is always in the process of refinement.

THE FIRST GREAT AFFIRMATION

Here, my friends, is the first Great Affirmation—God is. True and vital religion affirms God. This affirmation is the first rudimentary principle of all religions—elementary in the fact that it is the first dawning belief of the primitive man; profound in that the enlightened mind may reach to the very limits of the intellectual horizons and yet never in the sweep of enlightenment come to a full knowledge of God. From the prophets of the past, from the seers of the ages, and from the humble millions of common folk past and present comes the same testimony and the same affirmation. From the laboratories of science and from the halls of learning comes the same message, God is. To be sure, their detailed ideas of God may be as wide apart as the poles, but the primary affirmation stands as universally true—God is.

God is above definition, and those who would place him in some particular spot in the heavens have failed to vision that the earth is a globe and people looking into the heavens (celestial sphere) are gazing in all directions. The folk in Australia when they look "up" see the southern constellations of the heavens with its Southern Cross, while the North Americans looking into the sky see the northern constellations, the Big Dipper, and the North Star. The people in Palestine—from which Jesus "rose up"—peer in another direction. The heavens are all around this global earth.

THE SECOND GREAT AFFIRMATION

The second Great Affirmation is that man is—both soul and body, both spirit and matter, both mortal and immortal, created a little lower than the angels.

This affirmation comes to us in many singular ways in many different forms. Sometimes it is in a very primitive manner—like the Indian brave who upon dying enters the happy hunting ground, or like the primitive Chinese who follow the custom of placing food upon the graves of their departed so that they may have nourishment for the great journey and adventure into the future. We find it in the primitive and sinister beliefs of the prewar Japanese that to die fighting for their Emperor (the Son of Heaven) meant a rapid flight to the land of their benighted ancestors.

However, the proclamation of the Christian religion is basic in life and in all religions. "There is a spirit in man and the Spirit of God giveth him understanding." And as Alma (Book of Mormon, page 315) speaks in terms of "immortal memory," he suggests that we shall remember all our guilt: ". . . having . . . a perfect remembrance of all your wickedness." This carries the natural implication that we shall remember all of the religious experiences of life. Without this affirmation of belief life would be without meaning, without motive, without hope.

There are two ways of viewing life. The first is to regard life as probationary—always a preparation for the future. The second is to regard it as a passing experience with no extended future—a life ending in blankness. The first view is that of genuine religion. Present life is always a probation for the unexperienced future, reaching through eternity—and this is eternity. I am postulating the thought that the life of the present is always probationary in its relationship to the life of the future in this world or the hereafter. Satan sinned in heaven and was cast out and that day fell from heaven.

Some look forward to the heaven of peace, of comfort, of ease. But I read that there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against Satan and his angels. If there was war once, there could be war twice and perchance three times. For, while intelligence exists in a variety of personalities, there will always exist the possibility of a rebellion against God's laws. Intelligence in personality presupposes free agency, the right to act on one's own initiative. Our today is built upon our yesterdays, and our today—present—will always be the foundation of our tomorrows throughout eternity.

So the great affirmative of true religion is that man is immortal. The soul of man is spiritual in nature and is the basis of his glory, intelligence, wisdom, his loves, hopes, dreams, and joys.

THE THIRD GREAT AFFIRMATION

The third Great Affirmation is that man, the greatest of God's creations, may commune with his God. Religion affirms that man, the crowning glory of God's boundless creation, may commune with the Omnipotent God. Amid the grandeur of the universe, amid the beauty of the flower gardens, man stands pre-eminent. Man, in the glory of God's creative energy and his exploring intelligence, dares even to enter the presence of God, seeking for the explanation of law and the discovery of truth. He dares to believe that he is made in the very image and likeness of God. Man looks out into the heavens and measures the distance to the stars. He prophesies the course of the planets and weighs the earth on which he stands. He enters the garden and enjoys the beauty of the rose. He enjoys its fragrance and dreams a dream of a more beautiful flower and a more delightful aroma.

He stands on a mountain peak with a sense of awe at the immensity of space. Then descends and builds a plane to fly higher than the highest peak. His thoughts are loftier than the loftiest mountains, and he daringly invades the stratosphere. He measures the speed of sound waves. He notes the flight of birds and builds supersonic wings to travel faster than any bird and faster than sound.

He theorizes, he loves, he hopes, he dreams dreams. It is the immortal spirit within him. He is the offspring of God, son of the Eternal, created in his image and likeness. Man strives to reach the mountain top, and after the climb he feels the pulse of the Infinite.

True religion affirms that the soul or spirit of man may commune with God. To be completely happy, creative man must have communion with his creative God. He must become the companion of the eternal God, for both are immortal. Man in spirit is the emanation of the very God. To reach his greatest degree of happiness, to thoroughly satisfy the longings of his soul, man must voyage occasionally into the great expanse of the infinite. His soul must somehow touch the hem of God's great garment.

THE EVOLUTION OF COMMUNION

Religion affirms with no uncertain voice that man's soul can commune with the great eternal intelligence of God. We may go into the age of the jungle man as he peered into the mysteries of nature with awe and a dim and primitive idea of God. Though his religion was a maze of ill-conceived superstitions, and the horizons of his knowledge were very limited, yet, basically he possessed the belief that somehow there was a direct relationship between himself and his God. So, in his primitive attempts to commune with his God, he offered sacrifices—a babe thrown to the crocodiles, burnt offerings of the best of the flock, offerings of wine and of food. Sometimes the attempt to commune with God was accompanied with strange fanatical tortures inflicted upon his own body.

We slowly travel up the scale of enlightenment and find men praying and listening. The armies of Islam turn toward Mecca and pray to Allah, their God. The followers of Buddha pay homage at the shrine of Buddha and try to attain Nirvana. Man at the highest point of his spiritual culture no longer communes with his God by bloody sacrifices or through idols of gold, stone, or wood. He prays. He communes in thought and in meditation. He listens to the "still, small voice" speaking to his soul. In confidence he says, "Though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, I will fear no evil." Communing with God he exclaims, "Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

As religion affirms that man may commune with his God, so it declares that God may commune with man. "There is a spirit in man and the Spirit of God giveth him understanding."

It is inconceivable that the great Infinite Intelligence, the all-powerful and ever-present God, may, in communing with man, place a thought in his mind that will expand his knowledge to limitless horizons, leading him from the jungle of sin, ignorance, superstitions, and fears to the heights of an elevated peak to which he has not yet attained. Only in dreams do we vision Zion as an ideal, static society. Zion must always be an expanding concept as we attain to greater spiritual maturity. And those of every new generation will create their own Zion as they respond to the inspiration and spiritual vision within them.

DIVINELY PLANTED EMOTION

Not only may God plant an idea, a thought, a truth into the mind of man, but he may also plant an emotion into the heart of man. Love, joy, and peace are all emotions enriched by the soul's communion with God. Man's ways must not only be in harmony with the mind of God but be in harmony with the love feelings of God. For an expansive love of universal dimensions is of God. With God, love knows no limitations; it includes the universe in its scope. Christ in celestial glory was found in hell, preaching to the spirits who needed ministry. Yes, friends, Christ may be found in hell urging souls upward. Then we may rightly understand the Scriptures:

God is love . . .
God is light . . .
God is spirit . . .
The glory of God is intelligence.

That we constantly commune with God in fervent prayer, and that he may ever commune with us through the "still, small voice" is my prayer.

A Nurse's Twenty-third Psalm

An address given by Ida Hart of West London Hospital, Hammersmith, England, on Sanitarium Sunday, April 27, 1952

*The Lord is my shepherd;
I shall not want.*

We all know these words. We have heard them and sung them from childhood; and wherever we spend our lives, they are as applicable as when David the Psalmist wrote them.

Today our thoughts are naturally led into the consideration of life within hospital walls. Since I have witnessed for some years the drama of life and death with its intervening phases of suffering and recovery, I should like to try to tell you my interpretation of our well-known Twenty-third Psalm.

We sing again and again, "The Lord is my Shepherd," but until we think about it, we only dimly realize that the Lord has indeed directed our every movement, and were it not for his guiding hand, none of us could have reached our present position.

During my school days I had no intention of becoming a nurse, but one day I answered an advertisement for probationer nurses and was led into a career which has brought me endless satisfaction and happiness. Many times I was so discouraged and nervous I thought I should never learn. I was afraid to do things with people watching me, and examinations were nightmares. But I was always helped through my difficulties, until the day came when I was addressed as sister. That did not end all my troubles, however; responsibility brought added cares. Fortunately I have always had God's help. There are moments in the hospital when it is difficult to know what to do or say. These are the moments I dread—of giving bad news to a mother, husband, or wife. "Dear Lord, whatever shall I say?" I have prayed; and always some words or actions have been given me, and I have been able to bring some measure of comfort.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters.

As I became more experienced I grew to see that very often sickness was a blessing in disguise. Harassed mothers were grateful for the peace and rest and quietness of hospital beds. In war time weary soldiers were restored to health of mind and body, away from the clamor of the battlefield. Today much bodily sickness is the direct result of mental illness, and our efforts are constantly directed to securing peace and freedom from worry for our patients.

During illness many people have time for reflection such as they have never had before, and they leave the hospital refreshed and ready to face their daily life. Character is often born of suffering, and I marvel constantly at the patient endurance on all sides.

He restoreth my soul.

No doubt we all have our own interpretation of this phrase. To me it means that we have moments when our faith is renewed. We all have times when it is difficult to draw near to God and believe in him. We may even doubt if he is there at all, and we can see no purpose in following the path of righteousness. We remember the words in the story of the creation—"God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him—male and female created he them." But we may not always feel the certainty of these things. Our faith often ebbs in the face of difficulties which surround us.

There are moments in a hospital which I wish I could bring to you with the assurance I have felt myself. There is that moment when a baby is born, and there is a second breathless expectancy before its first cry is heard. There are the times when a very sick man or woman suddenly takes a change for the better. I know no words to describe the thrill of seeing a very ill patient begin to improve. Even incurable disease has some purpose. I do not know the reason for death and suffering, but I have been uplifted countless times by the sweetness of character of the most ill patient in the ward.

He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

How difficult it is to do all the things I should do even when the path does lie straight before me. I hold a great responsibility as I follow my daily work. I am not dealing with inanimate things, but with men, women, and children, and I must remember that Christ said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these—ye have done it unto me." It is not easy when I am busy and Number 24 seems especially tiresome, or Number 11 is full of aches and pains. If I am not watchful I can carry so much power to hurt that it is frightening. I must always strive to remember my call to paths of righteousness and service to others.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

Death is a frequent visitor in the hospital. I have shared the last hours with many men and women. There is always the sadness of separation, but God knows what is best for all of us, and death comes most often as a friend—a release from pain and suffering. About a year ago I read those significant words which can change our whole lives: "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." It will be a wonderful thing when all men hear them. My patients know when I am near them in their last hours, and I have the power and privilege of bringing them wordless comfort. There are no words which can help or make any difference, but God is there with me and with my patient. He helps us over a difficult situation, and if there is nothing to say, He directs me to do small things which will bring assurance of my sympathy.

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

Pain is a bitter enemy which destroys morale and is hard to bear, especially if it is of the chronic kind which drags on for months or years. Fear of the unknown—fear of the untried journey into the operating theater—or even of the unknown trolley which suddenly makes its appearance at the bedside—may unnerve a patient. Pain can be relieved and procedures explained, but it is in the unknown recesses of the mind that the greatest enemy lies.

I haven't time to tell you of the tortured men who return from war with its horrors so keenly etched on their minds that they can find no rest, or of people whose present cares revolve eternally until they are in a maze of despair. I have spent many hours listening to the outpouring of troubled minds, and have seen peace come at last. There has not been anything I could say to ease their burdens, but God hears "our murmurs and our complaints" and many have fought and faced their difficulties without perhaps being aware of his help.

Perhaps I should quote my own experience. Fifteen months ago I was hospitalized. The pain was something I had never experienced before, and I was rebellious. I wanted to nurse—I did not want to lie down and be nursed. But God knew better; there was a decision I had to make. I had been tormented by it for a year or two, struggling to make up my mind about this church. I had never been ill before, and it seemed to me that I was made to take time from my work to study what I should do about being baptized.

Today is my first birthday as a church member. God has indeed led me through a wonderful pattern of life to this present moment. I was directed to become a nurse through his will, and my association with the church began five years ago as I worked with a Reorganized Latter Day Saint nurse. We shared many hours of professional happiness and sorrow. Today we are trying together to tell you of the work the Lord has to be done in the Sanitarium and in all schools of nursing.

What more can we ask? What more can we need?

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow us all the days of our lives; and we WILL dwell in the house of the Lord FOR EVER.

Canadian Girl Guides

A Bit of History

In September, 1909, a number of girls appeared at the first Boy Scout Rally in London, England, desiring to have an organization similar to the one for the boys through the Boy Scout movement founded by Sir Robert Baden-Powell in 1907. He adapted a program to the needs of the girls, and early in 1910, the Girl Guides Association was formed with Miss Agnes Baden-Powell as its first president.

During 1910, companies were formed in Suomi-Finland, Australia, South Africa, and Canada. One of the two companies organized in Canada that year was in Toronto, present headquarters of the Canadian Council of the Girl Guides Association.

The present Girl Guides organization provides program for three ages: Brownies, 7 to 10; Girl Guides, 10 to 16; and Rangers, 14 to 20. Girls of 15 or older may also be Cadets with particular training for leadership.

Question Time

Question:

What is divine love and how can it be attained?
Washington Mrs. W. O. S.

Answer:

If we could take God's justice, his mercy and compassion, his goodness and good will, his impartiality, his condescension, his pity, his forbearance and long-suffering, his liberality and beneficence, his graciousness, and his self-sacrifice and combine them all in one sublime quality—that quality would be love.

"God is love." He is the embodiment of all goodness, and every good thing possible for him to do for man he does. His whole being, his whole activity pertaining to man, is actuated by that infinite quality. It is the perfection of character which shines out in all his creations; without this life would be a misery.

The love of God is manifested in the natural world. The earth with its marvelous resources, answering every human need, was made for man. The mineral deposits, the varieties of stone, the clays and sands, and so forth, have made possible great things by man that enhance the joy of living. The innumerable vegetable creations designed for food, healing, clothing, and building, for beauty, for taste and smell, of which the Lord has said, "It pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man," are provided in profuse abundance. God's gifts in nature are universal for all men, both the "good and the evil," the "just and the unjust."

A greater and deeper manifestation of Divine love has come to the world, not by creation but by revelation. It has come by the Lord's personal visitation to representative men to whom he revealed his person, his character and purpose; by angelic messengers sent by him; and by the Holy Spirit declaring divine truth, by whom also it was confirmed to others who believed. Greater than all was the coming of the Son of God to dwell in human flesh as a man, revealing God in terms of man. The inestimable gifts coming by these means bless mankind not only in this life but in eternity also.

The love of God flows as a continuing stream of blessing to those who believe and obey him. But God's purpose in giving it is realizable only as man applies the gift in his own dealings with his fellow men. It must be put to use, for only in this way can we make the quality our own. Love is exhibited only in activity; if allowed to become passive, it is the same as dead. Divine love imparted to man, if unused, is wasted and results in condemnation rather than blessing. By exercising the gift and making it our own we put on Christ, becoming like him in character. Paul said, "Love is the fulfilling of the law"; John said, "This is the love of God that we keep his commandments." "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us." "Let us not love in word only but in deed."

Question:

How can we account for the great population of the earth at the time of the Tower of Babel if all but Noah and his family were destroyed in the flood? Since there were only four couples saved, this seems quite an accomplishment in just 150 years.
Indiana Mrs. D. Z.

Answer:

With practically no information as to the extent of the population at the time of building the tower of Babel, and with no chronology giving us the number of years since the flood, it is impossible to arrive at a satisfactory estimate of the number in either case. However there is nothing in the account to indicate that the population was larger than the circumstances would lead us to expect.

A check of the genealogy of the period inclines us to estimate the length of time to be longer than the 150 years as mentioned—perhaps 200 years, possibly more.

The rate of increase of population would be much higher than that of modern times, conditions being highly favorable to that end. There was a vigorous stock; healthful environment; longevity with perhaps a longer period of child-bearing than at present; the earth's need for people; choice lands inviting settlement; the divine command twice given to be fruitful and multiply; absence of wars and other devastating forces; and so forth. (Jared who left Babel had twelve children; his brother twenty-two. See Ether 3: 23.)

Through many years before the tower was built various men had led away family groups to plant colonies in surrounding regions, including Assyria, Canaan, and Egypt, and it was this tendency which apparently led to the attempt to hold the people in one concentrated group by building the great tower, a policy directly contrary to God's plan of repopulating the earth as quickly as possible; hence their frustration and dispersion.

Question:

What is the state of immortality, and how do we acquire it?
Washington Mrs. W. O. S.

Answer:

Immortality is the restored life in the flesh which comes by the resurrection. That life is no more subject to physical death, and is no more afflicted with the conditions of disease, sickness, weakness, affliction, deprivation, and the evil consequences which grow out of them. Every soul will have the full powers of body and mind and will be capable of a development not conceived of in this world (See Doctrine and Covenants 76: 2). This is speaking of the righteous.

Distinction should be made between immortality and eternal life, for they are not necessarily the same. All have immortality, but not all have eternal life—which is the gift of Christ to those who receive him and obey his law. The sons of perdition have immortality but with it spiritual death.

Immortality cannot be acquired by human effort alone; it is the gift of Christ, designed to counteract the effects of the sin of Adam, and applies to all men. Eternal life and reward are added because of our works of obedience in this present life, every man being rewarded according to his works.

Daughter of the Pioneers

The Autobiography of Christiana Stedman Salyards

PART XI

Two Catholic Friends

My roommate was a devout Catholic, and through her I became acquainted with two young girls, sisters, who had been left orphans when they were children. They were separated, and one was reared by Catholic people, while the other was cared for by a family belonging to the Methodist Church. The older girl, about eighteen, had begun correspondence with the sister and had proposed that they attend school together, her object being the conversion of her sister to the Catholic faith. In this she had succeeded so far as to have Lucia taking instruction from the parish priest, preparatory to admission into the church.

Lucia told me about this on the first Sunday morning after my arrival at the school. She was sick in bed, and I went in to see her. As we talked I told her of the latter day work and how I had become acquainted with it, not omitting to tell her why a restoration of the gospel was necessary. She listened to me, but before the girls came in from church she said warningly, "Miss Stedman, you may say those things to me, because I have been a Methodist, but don't say them to May."

Lucia completed her course of instruction under the tutelage of the priest, and the day was set for her baptism. Jennie and I were invited to attend the service, and hurried to the church very early one morning, but the rite of baptism had been performed before we reached there.

From the small room where Lucia had been baptized before a private altar we went to the priest's house, where May and Lucia were to have breakfast with him, as they had come fasting to the baptismal service. There we spent a pleasant half-hour while breakfast was being prepared. Noting from my attitude that I was not a Catholic, the priest inquired afterward about me and asked the girls to bring me down to him so that he might talk to me. I agreed to go and was looking forward with interest to the interview, but May and Lucia suddenly left the little room that had been home to them, and I never went to visit Father Green.

Other College Friends

I had in school a friend who had voluntarily sought me out and asked to be enrolled at the table where I sat in the dining room. It seems she had not heard of my religious belief, and one morning we were on our way to the Congregational Church which she attended. When I made a reference to my church and something of our faith she answered very bluntly, "Well, I don't believe it."

We went on in silence after that, speaking only occasionally and with constraint. I was neither angry nor indignant, but regretful that I was misunderstood and reluctant to lose the friendship of a really fine girl. I sensed her disappointment in me, whom she had sought out for a friend, but she had been so abrupt with me that I could not make explanations, and we went to church and returned with repressed feelings, embarrassing to both of us.

My friend remained aloof for some time, and I endured it in quietness, though I felt it deeply. Then to my surprise she informed me one evening at the table that she had brought my mail from the office and had it in her room. It proved to be a package that contained Lucy Smith's history of the life of her son. The surprise I had felt was increased when my friend permitted me to tell her about it and even to read some extracts from the book. After that we saw each other often and it was with genuine regret that I told her good-by when she went away.

I had another pleasant acquaintance at school, whom I met only at the dining table. One day I was preoccupied and ate in silence until he broke in on my thoughts with "What makes you so cross today?"

"I am not cross," I answered, "but we have been discussing the Mormon exodus from Nauvoo, and I am a Reorganized Latter Day Saint."

My statement must have been a shock to him, for he laid down his knife and fork and regarded me fixedly for a moment before he said, "Well, I am surprised that a young woman of your good sense should belong to such a church as that."

"What do you know about my church?" I asked. "Have you ever known any of our people?" He said he never had.

"Have you ever heard any of our elders preach?" I asked, and he said, "No; I never have."

"Have you ever read any of our literature?" I pursued, and he answered, "No; and I don't want to."

Then I said: "Do you think you are a competent judge of my religion? You have never known any of our people; you have never heard any of our ministry preach; you have never read any of our literature."

He looked at me a moment thoughtfully and then said, "I don't know that I am," and we resumed our dinner.

Afterward in one of our conversations I told him I had brought a little booklet from home, intending to give it to Professor Scott to read. (It was The Voice of Warning.) He asked me to let him read it before giving it to Professor Scott, and I agreed to do so. I waited until he asked for it, saying he was waiting to read it.

One Sunday I gave it to him when we met at the table at noon. He took it with a contemptuous "H'm . . . looks like a dime novel!" I assured him he would find it quite unlike a dime novel when he read it. One day he told me how far he had progressed in reading it, and we discussed the subject matter he had covered. He appeared to be growing interested. He kept the booklet so long that I asked him to return it so I might give it to Professor Scott, but he said, "Wouldn't you just as soon give it to me? I should like to have it."

I gave it to him, and a few days later I put a little note under his breakfast plate—"Good-by, Mr. C." I never heard of him again.

Impressions

In my early youth I read these words of Thomas Carlyle: "She who but sweeps a room according to God's law makes that and the action fine." They often have been an inspiration to me to work thoroughly. They embody a truth that lifts work above the plane of drudgery and makes it something worth the doing.

It had been my good fortune in my childhood and youth to pass through the successive grades of a good city school, and I did creditable work at the normal school. Some of the examination papers I handed in came back to me with words of commendation added to the good grades I had made. I prized this highly, feeling that for the only Reorganized Latter Day Saint in the school to make good grades reflected honor on the church.

The good impression I made in that school was deepened when a group of young Reorganized Latter Day Saints of Lamoni, Iowa, went to Highland Park

Normal College in Des Moines and had as one of their instructors, Dr. Clifton Scott, who had formerly taught at the normal school in Dixon, Illinois. Through those young people Professor Scott was able to extend his acquaintance with the church, and twice he made week-end visits to Lamoni, partaking of the fine hospitality of the Mader home. I feel sure he never failed to speak highly of our people so long as he continued to teach, but he died not many years after his acquaintance with the people of Lamoni began.

The story of my experience in Dr. Scott's class had still another sequel. Years later Elder Ammon White was holding a series of meetings at Trenton, Missouri, and one evening at the close of the service a man came from the rear of the tent straight to the speaker's stand to ask if he might see the Book of Mormon.

He explained that when he was a student in the normal school at Dixon he had heard a girl defend her religious faith, which included belief in the Book of Mormon, and it had so impressed him that he had always after that desired to see the Book. This was his first opportunity. He remembered my name and Brother White recognized it, though I had long before changed it by marriage.

Back to Work

At home again I worked in the same department where I had already spent three years, and from which I had resigned to go to my grandparents. I returned with no other anticipation than to devote myself to the work of teaching school and caring for my parents. My reception by the patrons of the school and by the community in general was cordial, but in the group the Congregational Church had organized in my absence there was no place for me, although I indicated my interest by attending services. Then a new pastor came to the little church flock in our town—a man of ability and energy, who worked with his own hands to erect a church building. He also organized three other groups of the Congregational church in near-by localities. He preached good sermons to the people who filled the little church on Sunday evenings. He preached the need of repentance and right living, and his hearers would have been benefitted had they heeded his admonition and yet it was an incomplete version of the glorious gospel he presented.

Differing Philosophies

This pastor invited me to come to Sunday school, and when I went he asked me to work in the primary department, which pleased me well. As one of the teachers I attended the weekly study period for preparation of the Sunday lesson. One evening the lesson text included Peter's statement that Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison. The assistant pastor who was in charge suggested that the dead to whom Christ preached were men in this life, spiritually dead, but I called attention to the fact that some of them had been disobedient in the days of Noah and that Peter clearly referred to such as they when he said: "For this cause was the gospel preached also unto them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live unto God in the spirit."

Not long after, the pastor's wife expressed the conviction that there was no hope for people who heard such preaching as her husband's from week to week and did not receive it.

I tried to show that those who die in their sins go to a place sometimes referred to as the prison house, where they may be disciplined and brought to repentance, and that one phase of the work of Christ was to bring the prisoners and those who sit in darkness out of the prison house.

But she could not immediately see the reasonableness of such a policy or the beauty in love so infinitely patient and all-embracing that it will labor throughout the ages to accomplish ultimately the great redemption of the human race.

Heaven

Mother and I were on our front lawn one afternoon looking at her flowers, and she plucked a faded blossom and threw it away. It landed on the sidewalk directly before a tall Swedish fisherman, who came reeling down the street. With a lurch he bent to retrieve the discarded flower, but Mother exclaimed, "Wait; I will give you a fresh one!" As she spoke she gathered a beautiful pink cluster and gave it to him.

Before placing it in the buttonhole of his rough blouse, he gazed upon it, murmuring: "Beautiful! Beautiful! As I was once."

"Why do you spoil yourself?" I asked, and he answered in one word, "Drink."

Then, turning to my mother, who stood looking on with a kind of smile, he muttered, "When I get to heaven, may I meet you there." And touching his old cap he staggered down the street.

"When I get to heaven!" Many take for granted that our entrance into heaven is sure, regardless of how we live here. Others are sure that people like the poor, besotted, fisherman are destined to be lost eternally. To me it is far more logical to believe that the Great Father, whose Son taught that he is kind even to the unthankful and the unholy, will discipline his children, purging the dross from their souls so that the gold in them may be saved.

First Contact With Lamoni

In 1886 my mother made a wise move that had a bearing on my future. She located my grandparents in Lamoni which had been made the headquarters of the church about five years before. There they had many old acquaintances, and made many new ones so that their last days were spent in pleasant associations. About this time the government granted them a small pension for the loss of their soldier son and they were able to live comfortably and have some necessary household help. Still they had to call on Mother when Grandfather slipped on the ice and wrenched his shoulder badly.

Such was the case one Sunday afternoon when I sat alone reading the letters in "Mothers' Home Column" of the Herald edited by Sister Marietta Walker. As I read I felt a desire to write to her, although I had never met her.

Beginning With a Letter

I acted on the impulse and wrote the letter, seated beside a hard-coal burner with my foot on the fender and a writing pad on my knee. When I finished I crossed the room to a library table and addressed the envelope, enclosed the letter, and stood with it in my hand.

Then a most unexpected thing happened. There descended upon me in a great degree that power of the Spirit which I had first experienced after my baptism into the church. It completely filled me. Not understanding why this had happened I cried out within myself, "What have I done? The Lord does not do such a thing as this without a reason!"

The next morning I mailed my letter, fearing it was destined for Sister Walker's wastebasket, for I had a very humble opinion of my abilities and a high regard for Sister Walker and her position in the church.

A letter soon came in reply. She said: "I have heard of you through your grandparents and your mother and it has been my intention to write to you, but I have been hindered by the press of other things. Now you see how the Spirit of the Lord takes up what we neglect to do or are prevented from accomplishing."

How blind I was not to see even after what she wrote that the Lord had taken up the matter and had moved me to write her, but I did not connect her words with what I had experienced as I stood with the letter I had written to her in my hand. From that time Sister Walker maintained a correspondence with me, from which I gained much encouragement.

Am I Weak in the Faith?

By Orrin R. Wilcox

PROBABLY ALL REORGANIZED LATTER DAY SAINTS at some time have asked themselves: "Am I weak in the faith?" It is a healthy question springing from a desire to know one's standing before God.

The answer to this question depends on many things. It will depend upon our knowledge of the gospel, and most of all upon our understanding of the standards of the church today.

The gospel law is as unchangeable as God. The standards of civilization, as well as those of the church, differ in different ages and nations. In one dispensation of man's progress polygamy was practiced even among the prophets, yet it was never God's standard for a righteous home.

There has been much controversy over Section 111 of the Doctrine and Covenants which deals with Reorganized Latter Day Saints marrying nonmembers. This section on marriage was prepared while the Doctrine and Covenants was being compiled and was read by W. W. Phelps at the General Assembly of the church on August 17, 1835. It was adopted unanimously by that assembly and ordered to be printed in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. (See Doctrine and Covenants 108:13, Church History, Volume I, page 575.)

Here is the wording which causes so much friction:

It is not right to prohibit members of this church from marrying out of the church, if it be their determination so to do, but such persons will be considered weak in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

This article on marriage does not claim to be the revealed word of God, but the fact that it was approved unanimously by the general assembly of the church and has been retained in the Doctrine and Covenants in every edition of the book published by the Reorganization should cause us to consider well its teaching and compare it with all the teachings of Scripture on this important subject.

Come, now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.—Isaiah 1:18.

GOD'S STANDARDS are perfect and eternal. His judgment of his creatures will no doubt be determined by the standard of the church and by each individual's heritage.

In F. Henry Edwards Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants, on page 266 we read:

It is particularly unwise to argue about this matter with those who are about to be married to those not of our faith. The safeguards against marriages of this type are much more fundamental than can be stated in an argument. The first safeguard is to build large branches, etc., where those of marriageable age have opportunities to meet church members of the opposite sex. Another safeguard lies in the provision of ample opportunity for young people to meet together under proper conditions. A young man or young woman living in a small branch and isolated from other church contacts can hardly be expected to refuse all suitors who are not church members.

This is wisdom founded on God's word. These facts envision the gathering of God's people in centers throughout the land where numbers will be sufficient and adequate leadership provided to care for youth activities.

This comment places the responsibility for unfaithfulness upon the parents who persist in living in isolation. Some still disregard the command to prepare for Zion where they now live by providing their families with church literature, establishing the family altar, and living the gospel. If one can't move to Zion he can bring Zion to his home and seek to win his neighbor. "Remember! Oh, remember! No soul is isolated who is in tune with the Divine!"

THE TIME TO TEACH right choices begins at the crib. It is too late to stop a marriage when the wedding bells are ringing in the heart. "Such persons will be considered weak in the faith." This does not say that all such persons are weak in the faith. However, statistics show that in 80 per cent of the marriage of members to nonmembers the church loses the member.

A search of the Scripture will show that God's people in all ages were warned against the danger of entangling alliances with those who worship other gods. A study of other religions—even Christian religions—should convince anyone that the God of the Restoration differs from the gods of the heathen. Our own God is limited by our understanding and knowledge.

When the children of Israel conquered the land of Canaan they failed to keep God's command in regard to marrying members of their own faith.

And the children of Israel dwelt among the Canaanites, Hittites, . . . Amorites, . . . Perizzites, . . . Hivites, . . . and Jebusites, and they took their daughters to be their wives, and gave their daughters to their sons and served their gods. And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and forgot the Lord their God, and served Baalim and the groves.—Judges 3:5-7.

Solomon broke the first command because he married strange wives. "For it came to pass, when Solomon was old, his wives turned away his heart after other gods" (I Kings 11:4.)

One of the chief causes of divorce in our modern world is difference in religion. Many of the wars of history were religious wars. Is it strange that the unanimous opinion of the General Assembly of the church in 1835 was that those who risked such dangerous cause of division in the home, thereby jeopardizing generations yet unborn, would be considered weak in the faith?

GOD'S LAW IS PERFECT and his standards never change. The standards set by the church and followed by each member today should be raised tomorrow, or Zion will never be.

Only 13 per cent of God's people are complying with the financial law as interpreted by the bishop. What of the 87 per cent? God gives us our agency, but his standards remain eternal. "This financial law applies to everyone in the church, rich or poor, young or old. No one is excused from it in any greater degree than he might be excused from keeping the principle of baptism or obeying the moral laws of the church." (Bishop Walter N. Johnson in Youth Stewardship, page 15.)

Do we take the church periodicals? Do we study all good books? It is a command of God.

We are told to preach nothing but repentance to this generation. "My vineyard has become corrupted every whit; and there is none which doeth good save it be a few; and they err in many instances, because of priestcrafts, all having corrupt minds."—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 1 (1830).

We hope the world presents a better picture today, but the tragedy still is that we fail to search our own souls to see where we are weak. When our weaknesses are pointed out to us, we should be glad and seek to profit thereby. But if we harden our hearts and seek to justify and excuse ourselves because of pride, we deny ourselves a service of love and increase our need for repentance.

Even the strong men who sat on the committee which compiled the Doctrine and Covenants had their weaknesses. In Section 90: 6, F. G. Williams of the First Presidency is told:

I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth, but verily I say unto you, my servant Frederick G. Williams, you have continued under this condemnation; you have not taught your children light and truth, according to the commandments, and that wicked one hath power, as yet, over you, and this is the cause of your affliction.

We still have in the church many people who place great emphasis on the word of wisdom, but they may be lax when it comes to other phases of the law. They must first pick out the two-by-six timber which is in their own eyes before they can see to pick out the speck in their brother's eye.

Many of us fail miserably in our attempts to comply with the command of God contained in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9:

Be clean, be frugal, cease to complain of pain and sickness and distress of body; take sleep in the hours set apart by God for the rebuilding and strengthening of the body and mind: for even now there are some, even among the elders, who are suffering in mind and body, who have disregarded the advice of the spirit to retire early and to rise early that vigor of mind and body should be retained.

It is our nature to resent rebuke or criticism even when it is given in love. Our attitude in this regard is a true test of sainthood. Humility is essential to service. "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble, and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

Would that all Saints could take the attitude in regard to their weaknesses as did Hyrum Smith, the beloved Patriarch in the early Restored Church and co-martyr with Joseph Smith. Hyrum's philosophy was well expressed by the Prophet Moroni. On the morning when Hyrum was preparing to go to his death in Carthage Jail he read the words of Mormon, and turned down the leaf upon it (Doctrine and Covenants 113: 5):

And it came to pass that I prayed unto the Lord that he would give unto the Gentiles grace, that they might have charity. And it came to pass that the Lord said unto me, if they have not charity, it mattereth not unto thee, thou hast been faithful; wherefore thy garments shall be made clean. And because thou hast seen thy weakness, thou shalt be made strong, even unto the sitting down in the place which I have prepared in the mansions of my Father.

Lives of Example

ONE OF THE REAL problems in our experience in Christian living is finding the most effective method by which each of us can make our influence felt in everyday associations.

I was quite interested in a recent Herald article, "God's Sales Force," by Don Boos. It is challenging to explore the possibilities of being a salesman for God.

To be sure, God needs a strong sales force—a legion of outspoken leaders, accomplished speakers, and masters of social psychology who will carry his message actively to the world. But too, there is a crying need for another type of salesman—a need that must be filled by the thousands of us in our everyday activities—business and social. The personality requirements are not as stringent, but the job requires an immeasurable amount of devotion to God and consecration to the theme of his kingdom.

This is still a selling job, but the selling is done by example—the example being our actions, our speech, and the conduct of our lives—of deep personal conviction and integrity. Many of us are not endowed with the personality make up to be missionaries or active "molders of men." Our contribution can be through the influence of clean, wholesome, moral lives. Our faith can be exemplified by our actions.

Frontiers in Family Living

By Reta Russell

IN ANY TYPE of frontier activity we must start from where we are. We do not find ourselves suspended by a skyhook and then suddenly dropped into the center of an undeveloped but promising frontier. No, we start from where we are, obtain an inclusive overview of present surroundings, and go from there into frontiers.

So, in thinking of frontiers in family living, we begin with the family life of today. On all sides we have heard comment on our family system. Sociologists have found the family so basic to our social order that they have developed a complete field of study in family living. Carle C. Zimmerman of the sociology department at Harvard University has said, "Our civilization is threatened with internal decay because of a fission of family values."¹ This implies that the rudimentary problems of our family system are not the scandals of family breakdown—divorce and delinquency—but the fundamental factors of culture and value. In other words, our society today needs a reaffirmation of value systems.

And what is the place of the family in Zion? First of all, the Zion family is a unit of value, a total value of more basic importance than any single social, economic, or biological aim of the would-be family reformers of the past. Second, from a community standpoint the family is a social and cultural creation. This makes family activities more than an individual matter, and what happens in a particular family is no longer "nobody's business."

WITH THIS BACKGROUND we shall investigate just a few of the frontiers awaiting families of the church. In order to successfully establish Zion we must have choosing families. Regardless of the pressures of advertising and conspicuous consumption, choosing families have the courage to do as they feel is right whether it is the style or not. One particular family chose to serve without apology spaghetti and meat balls to guests who usually served sirloin steak because the family was contributing to the branch building fund. Choosing families dare to develop their stewardship in spite of the highly conventional society in which they live.

Thinking families are needed to build Zion, for thinking families realize that gadgets, sterling silver, and the newest furnishings do not make a home. Families who think know that the fun of being oneself, the sincerity of genuineness and the joy of comfortableness are catching, and that children thrive in such an environment.² The young mother of a thinking family once said that she considered it more important to teach her son to play ball than to spend the time polishing her house to immaculateness. In thinking families human-centered values are far more important than the possession of mere "things," for it is the socially valuable attributes which lead to the more lasting satisfactions.

ZIONIC FAMILIES are deciding families. They are learning to make decisions democratically. Deciding families take their differences and from them make unity instead of conflict or pettiness. In one such family planning a vacation, Father wanted to travel, Mother thought they should attend the district reunion, and the small daughter hoped she could go to the country to visit her cousin. Through the process of democratic decision-making the family achieved harmony by traveling across several states to attend a distant reunion, taking the little cousin with them. Deciding families discover that it is an exciting experience to learn how to use differences to obtain unity.

In Zion we will find creating families whose chief aim is to "enhance the worth and dignity of each family member."³ Creative families are constantly alert for frontiers in family living that will further their aim. Some Latter Day Saints I know who have only a meager income, yet desire to enhance their individual worth and dignity manage each year to go to see the collections of great art in a nearby metropolis. God is a member in creative families, and they include worship as a part of the celebration of Christmas, Thanksgiving, and the Fourth of July.

Zionic families are standard-setting families. A certain college student who comes from a standard-setting home has no cashmere sweaters; instead she has many records of fine music. Standard-setting families participate in community and civic affairs, but they always are found involved in things that are good. Reasonable standards of family living are attained by peering into the future—a Zionic community—where the ultimate aim of the procedure is found. Standard-setting families stand for things that are worth while.

IN OUR CHURCH we also have frontiers for individuals who are so concerned with the family in a Christian community that they will become real specialists in family living. Pioneers are needed to study the ways of group living in order to understand the present family system as it relates to our social order and from this beginning go on to develop ways of family living which will work in a Zionic order. Yes, we need specialists who, because of their study of family life of the past and present, clearly know what is possible and what is impossible in family systems so that they may go on from there to create aims in the field of the possible which will make the Zionic family a success. Improving practices and standards of living is a function of education and one way that progress takes place in our democratic church.

Individual pioneering still needs to be done in the field of homemaking.

It is a logical fact that competency leads to enhanced respect for one's self and for one's job, thus a woman who knows the fundamentals behind her homemaking tasks has a changed feeling toward her work. Repetitive jobs, often called drudgery, are tolerable and even adventurous when homemaking activities become a science, and the home is regarded as a laboratory in which to experiment with ever-changing products and constantly improved methods of work.

WHEN WE HAVE qualified family specialists in the church, they will be able to suggest institution-type reforms which will re-create the feeling that family living is the way of life. Specific reforms would undoubtedly lie in the areas of adequate housing, security for parents which would eliminate the present fallacy that it is more desirable to have a Buick than a baby, an environment which is good for children, education for family living, and marriage and family counseling.

Our furthest frontier lies in the establishment of a family institute, an organization co-ordinating the work of family specialists as they seek to establish and maintain family living at a higher level. This agency is needed to promote values and reforms in the present family system, pointing the way to the Zion-ic system. A family institute would conduct research into the motivations of family behavior, study systems of values which now integrate good families, and then formulate ways of developing persons capable of producing good families in the future.

Indeed there are frontiers in the area of family living for all of us. Perhaps we can retrace our steps and say that in order to develop family life of the caliber required in the approaching Zion-ic society we must be "in the world, but . . ." ahead of the world.

First Get the Operator

By Marie Gosline

PRAYER WITHOUT FAITH is of no avail, but when we put ourselves in God's care and trust him to do what is best for us, everything comes out all right. Although this sounds like "Pollyanna" stuff, I know it is true. In my own life I have seen it happen many times. He has never failed me, and this gives me reason to believe he never will. I am reminded of the little poem I carry in my Bible:

A thousand times one thousand times
His love has led me safely through
To peaceful waters, calmer skies,
To greener pastures than I knew.
And so I trust him now and keep
My faith alight, my purpose true.

History often seems to repeat itself. I remember when I was growing up in a branch approximately five hundred miles south of where I now live. It was a tough struggle for the few women who started that branch, but it grew until today it has hundreds of members. It grew through sheer grit, determination, and faith. After the church was built, the women decided to buy a piano for fifty dollars. They would have to go into debt for it, but they figured they could pay it off in time. The few men of the branch who were newer at the work than the women greatly opposed them. "Go in debt fifty dollars for a second-hand piano? Never!" But after a few hot meetings, the women won the battle. The piano was purchased and in due time paid for. This was only one of the many struggles those few women had.

Today, in the northern part of the state, a few other women are struggling to keep their mission in existence. Using the same sort of grit, determination, and faith, they are managing to hold together. They do not know why so many obstacles are thrown in their path—obstacles that only God can remove—but perhaps some day there will be a church in Marin County also. Through the faith of these few women, others will come to learn and know of God. Right now the mission is in the struggling stage—everything accomplished is done with a struggle. But if these women continue to get the Operator when they pray, wonders can happen—which brings me back to the little story I was going to tell about getting the Operator.

A few days ago a stonemason and his hod carrier—a tall, lean Negro named Jones—began building an outdoor barbecue and fireplace for us. That first morning the stonemason gave the hod carrier some of his views on religion. "When you die, you're through, Jones. That's all there is to it. I knew three little girls who had cancer. I prayed for them, but they all died. How do you figure that out? Nobody heard my prayers. I had just as well saved all that money I gave the priest."

I watched the expression on Jones' face and could see that the words of the boss were not sitting too well. "Yassir," answered Jones. "You all had jes' as well save dat money you gave the priest. Don' ya' know, Boss, hefa' ya makes a telephone call, ya fust must get de operatah? It's de same way in prayer. Ya fust must get de Operatah!"

That same Operator of Bible days is waiting, if we will but have faith and call in. Whatever crosses we have to bear—and there are none of us without a few—the Operator is waiting for our call. Let's place that call today!

The Gospel on Their Fingertips

"Isn't there something I can do to help the church?" was the question which began the contribution of Sister Myrtle Fortney (pictured above) to sightless members. With a background of training in the Braille Corps of the Denver, Colorado, Chapter of the Red Cross, she came to Apostle Reed Holmes, then minister in charge of the district, at the close of a church meeting and offered her services.

Brother Holmes suggested that she might take some choice quotations from the Book of Mormon and prepare them for the sightless. Sister Fortney's response to this was that she would like to see if arrangements could be made to do the entire book.

She discussed the project with the supervisor of the Braille Corps in Denver, and approval was given to the Book of Mormon Braille as a project of the entire corps. Six members—Carol Cross, Jessie Donaldson, Mary Fleming, Catherine Kirchoff, Katherine Strong, and Sister Fortney—were assigned the task. The transcribing began in February, 1949, and was completed September 18, 1950. The work was proofread by a blind lady who is a member of the Denver Corps. When the book was transcribed, the process of shellacking had to be completed before the pages could be bound. Each page of tiny little dots which speak to the fingers of the sightless had to be shellacked to preserve the paper. By November 27, 1950, the shellacking was completed. Monday was the day the group shellacked, and it took eleven Mondays to complete the job on the 1,700 pages of copy. This particular shellacking project was completed in the shortest length of time in the history of the Denver Corps.

In February, 1951, the finished project, still unbound, was delivered to the Denver Branch where it was picked up by Apostle Reed Holmes on March 11, 1951. Brother Holmes brought the sixteen volumes back to the Herald Publishing House to be bound, and they were on display during General Conference. The books were bound at the expense of the Herald House and are now in the church library for circulation.

Requests to borrow the books come from the sightless members of the church and from missionary contacts. The books are distributed on a one or two volumes basis, and a list of sightless members and friends is being compiled from those who have requested copies of the volumes.

Sister Fortney has prepared some of the church tracts in Braille. These have been bound and are available on the same basis as the volumes of the Book of Mormon. There are several other sightless members of the church who are assisting in the transcribing of tracts. Sister Cecille Bailey of Kansas City, Missouri, has been working on tracts which are specifically for nonmember contacts.

Behind every project of this nature is the devotion of many people. The ministry of the Braille volumes of the Book of Mormon is unlimited. Fingers which shall eagerly trace the story of Christ and his ministry to "other sheep" will be fingers of those who study it out in their minds, and the rightness of it shall cause their "bosoms to burn within them."

Fourteen of the sixteen volumes of the Braille edition compared in size to the one single edition of the Book of Mormon. The two large volumes are tracts which are also in Braille.

Young People Hold Retreat

WEST VIRGINIA.—District President Samuel M. Zonker and Evangelist Robert E. Rodgers made their semiannual visit to the Beckley mission in the southern part of the district May 31-June 1.

A chicken supper was served Saturday evening at Brother and Sister Leonard Pack's home in Shady Springs for all the visiting Saints. The evening services were held in Beckley at Brother and Sister Lawrence Pack's home, and before the services their four-month-old son, Jon Stephen, was blessed by High Priest Samuel Zonker and Elder Leonard Pack. Brother Zonker was the speaker at the evening worship service.

Sunday services were all held at the home of Brother and Sister Bacil Hinkle on Tallery Mountain near True; the theme of the services was centered around "Be thankful in all things unto Christ."

The morning activities began with a sermon by Brother Rodgers, followed by one by Brother Zonker; at eleven o'clock Communion was served with the district counselor, Wayne Wilson, presiding, assisted by Brother Rodgers and Elder Leonard Pack. A picnic dinner was served at the Hinkle home by the ladies of the Beckley mission. Brother Zonker and Brother Rodgers stopped in Parkersburg Friday evening on their way to Beckley and held services there for the Saints.

Special services were held at the Greenwood mission June 8, and visiting Saints included Wayne Wilson and the district youth director, Lawrence H. Phillips. High Priest Guy Hammond and wife of Akron, Ohio, were also present, and Brother Hammond preached in the afternoon.

The services were under the direction of Elder Orval Cottrill. Meetings are usually held in the home of Sister Florence Williams, but because of the number present the services were held in the Community Hall.

Sister Dell Menzies conducted a vacation Bible school at the Parkersburg Branch June 16-27, with an average attendance of fifty-five. Brother Menzies was present each morning to conduct a worship service for the staff and to speak to the children. The achievement program was held June 27. Sister Menzies also conducted a Bible school at the Wellsburg Branch June 2-13, with an average attendance of fifty-nine.

The West Virginia District, together with the Columbus and Southern Ohio Districts, held a reunion at Bethesda, Ohio, June 29-July 6.

A youth retreat was held at the Indian Creek (Harmony) Branch July 19 and 20 under the supervision of the district young people's leader, Elder Lawrence H. Phillips. The theme was "Book of Mormon," and all phases of activity dealt with the theme. Classes were taught by Seventy James Menzies, Evangelist Robert Rodgers, Elder Don Treiber, and Elder Orval Cottrill. Brother Menzies gave an illustrated lecture and taught classes. He and Sister Menzies were in charge of the campfire. Brother Phillips and Brother Menzies directed the fellowship, and both men were speakers on the closing day of the retreat. Discussion leaders at the forum included Brothers Rodgers, Phillips, Menzies, Wilson, and Cottrill, and Bishop's Agent Otto Melcher, and Elder Clyde S. Rice. Young people who helped with the services included Hubert Hinkle, David Johnson, Charles Miracle, Jr., Clyde Swick, Don Treiber, and James Wheat. The pastor of the Harmony Branch is Elder Glenn Givens.

Brother Zonker and his associates continue the policy of visiting a different branch each week end and have met with the following branches: Bellaire, Harmony, Parkersburg, Follansbee, Clarksburg, and Bethesda reunion. They also attended a reunion committee meeting in Dayton and the youth retreat at the Indian Creek Branch, July 19-20.—Reported by MABEL SMITH

Evangelist Higgins Visits Branch

TOPEKA, KANSAS.—The women's department held a class on flower arrangement and corsage making, conducted by Mrs. Frank Wilson, a member of the Topeka Garden Club, on May 13.

The Zion's League presented the evening service on Mother's Day and presented each mother with a corsage.

Patriarch H. A. Higgins and wife of Kansas City, Missouri, spent the week end of May 16 with the congregation. On Friday evening Brother Higgins gave a lecture at the church on "Selection and Use of Meat." Saturday was spent in visiting, and on Sunday morning he was the guest speaker. Brother Higgins also gave patriarchal blessings to Sisters Garnet Alfrey, Doris Landes, Marilyn Cooker, and Myrtle Redinger.

The district women met with the Topeka women's department for their quarterly council meeting at which a luncheon was served, followed by a social period.

District President James C. Daugherty met with the officers and teachers on June 8 to study improvements in branch operation.

On June 27, the branch held a basket dinner at Gage Park and the evening was given to social activities. The Paul Ericksons and Merle Harmons were presented with farewell gifts from the branch. The Ericksons are moving to Wichita and the Harmons to Lawrence.

The Zion's League under the supervision of Sister Nell Ellithorpe conducted a paper drive and sponsored an ice cream social which aided their treasury.

Brother Robert Doan and family from Alamogordo, New Mexico, have been in the Topeka Branch. Brother Doan, an officer in the Air Force, is stationed at Forbes Air Base and has been active in local priesthood work in the branch.

The Kaw Valley District held a retreat at Forest Park Camp on July 26-28, under the direction of District President James C. Daugherty. Elder Almer Sheehy of Independence and District Missionary Alan Tyree assisted Brother Daugherty.

The local priesthood has been meeting at the church each Monday evening for a special priesthood meeting and then visiting.

The following have visited the branch: Patriarch H. A. Higgins of Kansas City, Missouri; Apostle D. Blair Jensen of Independence, Missouri; Elder Donald V. Lents, formerly of Independence, Missouri; Church Historian John Blackmore of Independence, Bishop Howard F. Miller of Kansas City Stake, District Missionary Alan Tyree of Lawrence, Kansas; Church Statistician Merle Guthrie of Independence, and District President James C. Daugherty of Independence.

Among the local priesthood who have preached are Elders Collier Hendricks, pastor; E. Clifford Christenson, Burrel Landes, Priests Robert Doan, Merle Zirkle, Teachers Loyd Martin, Deacons Harry M. Pitchford, and Clifford Alfrey.—Reported by CALLA L. KELLEY

Baptismal Service at Mission

BRENTWOOD, MISSOURI.—On August 10, Julia Ruth Wright was baptized at Sullivan, Missouri. Elder David Cooke officiated with the pastor, Elder Dan Belcher, in charge. The confirmation was at Sullivan in the afternoon with Elder Edwin C. Kent as spokesman, assisted by Elders Belcher and Cooke. This baptism completed the church membership of the Paul Wright family.

Their young son, Robert Marcus Wright, was blessed during the same service with Brother Belcher officiating, assisted by Brother Cooke. The Wrights live in Bourbon, Missouri, and attend the Sullivan mission.

The Sullivan mission is under the supervision of the Brentwood Branch. As yet there is no pastor as the group has no priesthood. Elder Dan Belcher is the pastor of the Brentwood Branch.—Reported by MARGE KENT

Women Active in Community Projects

FORT COLLINS, COLORADO.—High Priest Joseph Hufferd of the district presidency met with the branch July 11 for the annual business meeting. Elder K. S. Gurwell was elected branch president, with Elders K. G. Broliar and W. E. Connell as counselors. Other officers elected were branch secretary and recorder, Clara Anderson; branch treasurer, Marie Hanawalt Gurwell; director of church school, Priest C. C. Cable; women's leader, Lettie Tilton; branch solicitor, Priest Merle Anderson; director of music, Ethel Cable; book steward, Deacon Harold Wheatley; historian, Alta Hildebrand; publicity agent, Ruby Connell.

On March 12, N. Hugh Nelms was ordained a priest and Harold Wheatley a deacon under the hands of High Priests Ward A. Hougas and Joseph Hufferd of the district presidency.

Mrs. Fred Bullard was baptized May 11, and Steven Douglas, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Wall, was blessed.

On June 6, Elsie Gurwell and Hugh Nelms were married at the church, with Elder W. E. Connell officiating.

Janice Lorraine Jacques was baptized on June 15.

Apostle D. Blair Jensen and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp preached at the branch following the district conference in Denver.

The two women's groups have been active. Both groups meet twice a month for study and in addition have sponsored several projects to increase the building fund. At the all-day carnival in May, $130 was cleared and $70 was raised from the rummage sale. Since the church is located near the business district, a series of luncheons is being served for business people. Corrine Banks and Lois Davis participated in the World Day of Prayer sponsored by the United Church Women, and Lois Davis was elected third vice-president of that group for the coming term. Ruby Connell has been invited to speak on a panel for the women's program at the First Presbyterian Church in Fort Collins on September 11.

The fourth Wednesday night of each month is family night with a potluck supper and program.

A children's choir has been organized by Ethel Cable. It has sixteen members. The junior Zion's League continued with the full League program during the summer months.—Reported by RUBY CONNELL

Branch Officers Elected

PORTLAND, OREGON.—Branch election was held July 22 with District President J. L. Verhei in charge. Elder Lester Comer was sustained as pastor. Other officers elected were Margaret Holm, treasurer; Kenneth Randol, secretary; Oral Snively, church school director; Marilyn Trotter, social director; Jessie Bowles, women's leader; Ray Trotter, Zion's League leader; Perry Hunt, music leader; P. G. Hager, auditor; and Tresa Sharp, dramatic leader. Appointive officers are Benarr Taylor, recorder; Elsie Baugh, librarian; Grace Comer, junior department leader; Myra Snively, book steward; Lester Comer, solicitor; Tresa Sharp, historian and publicity agent; and Benarr Taylor, junior church pastor. Financial committee members are Lester Comer, Margaret Holm, Carroll Darr, Albert Sharp, and Elbert Harts-horn.

The women's department sponsored a ham and turkey dinner July 18. The proceeds were divided between the purchase of a new electric organ and the building fund. The choir is sponsoring the purchase of the organ which has already been installed.

The junior department under the leadership of Sister Grace Comer gave a program on Mother's Day and also one on Children's Day. Tribute was given to the fathers on their special day, and each father was presented with a boutonniere. The program was under the supervision of Tresa Sharp and was presented by the junior department.

The leaders of the junior department sponsored a picnic for the children August 5 to culminate their year's activities. Parents, including a large number of nonmembers, were invited.—Reported by TRESA SHARP

Annual Election Held

BLACK GUM, OKLAHOMA.—The annual branch business meeting was held July 27. Victor J. Witte was in charge, and the following officers were elected: Vera Johnson, secretary; Susie Johnson, treasurer; Elton Abbott, church school director; Steven Johnson, young people's leader; Louise Davis, children's supervisor; Lila Simmons, women's leader; Joseph Pack, Herald reporter; Leona Pack, Vera Johnson, Caperice Johnson, auditors; Steven Johnson, Rube Johnson, Elton Abbott, building committee; Lois Johnson, treasurer of building funds; and Lila Simmons, Herald representative.—Reported by JOSEPH PACK

Children Have Activities

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA.—In the children's department there were several outstanding activities during the year. Under the direction of Mrs. Jack Page, a Christmas program was presented on December 23, a talent show on Mother's Day, a valentine party in February, and an Easter program. In March the children were presented a small organ by the women's department. The Baldwin County school gave the nursery and kindergarten department twelve small chairs for their classrooms.

In May Bishop and Mrs. J. E. Baldwin, Elder and Mrs. Wayne Hough, all of Mobile, gave reports on General Conference to the branch.

One of the oldest members of the branch, Mrs. Lydia White, eighty-seven, passed away June 18.

Elder Ed Barlow, his wife Marjorie and their son David, have moved to Bay Minette from the State Teachers College at Troy, Alabama, where Brother Barlow graduated in July. He will teach school at Bay Minette this year.

Two babies were blessed on June 22 by Elders H. H. Jernigan and Brewton Greene. They were Jimmie Len, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Clark, and Sherrie Diane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Goodson.—Reported by NANNIE CLARK

Gracelanders Present Services

BOONE, IOWA.—About thirty-five Graceland students, recent alumni, and prospective students of the Des Moines District met at Boone, Sunday, August 10, for the morning services.

Brother Wayne Williams, with three Graceland assistants, had charge of the worship service at the church school hour.

Brethren Ray Leamon and William Whigham from Independence brought the message of the 11:00 o'clock service. The group held a basket lunch picnic at the Ledges State Park in the afternoon.

The Boone Saints appreciated having the group meet with them, and enjoyed the sermon by the two brethren from Independence.—Reported by ELON G. TUCKER

Branch Officers Elected

WICHITA, KANSAS.—In a branch business meeting held August 1, the following branch officers were elected for the year beginning October 1, 1952: Myron F. J. Charles May Guest Preacher

FREESOIL, MICHIGAN.—Evangelist J. Charles May spent August 3-8 with the Saints. Each evening he showed pictures of his work and scenes in the Society Islands and also preached.

Brother Mildord Fry comes from Cadillac at intervals to preach the Sunday evening sermons.

A group of women from Freesoil attended the women's department institute at Prudenville, while still another group attended the Central Michigan Reunion at Liahona Park in Sanford.

For their summer project, the women's department varnished the church chairs.—Reported by BLANCHE HILL

Branch Has Chinese Supper

AVA, MISSOURI.—Elder and Mrs. R. E. Stowe, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Epps, and Mrs. Eldon Morris attended the institute for members of the priesthood and their wives at Springfield, Missouri, March 14.

Elder Stephen Black, district president, was the speaker at the Ava Branch on March 16. He was accompanied by Mrs. Black. A basket dinner was held, after which the Saints drove to the Elder J. W. Davis home where Jerry Dean Epps was baptized by Elder J. W. Davis and was confirmed by Elders J. W. Davis and R. E. Stowe.

Several members of the Ava Branch attended General Conference.

Pleasant Green mission shared in the Easter Sunday service and the basket dinner which followed.

On Mother's Day the Ava congregation met at Pleasant Green. Brother J. W. Davis was the speaker following a short program. A business session was held under the direction of Elder Prescott Foo, and plans were laid for the new church home.

The annual July 4 picnic was held for the church school at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Burk. The Mansfield group joined the Ava Saints and about eighty people were in attendance. Sandra Marie and Martha Rae, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Rollin Gibson, were baptized by Elder C. B. Freeman and confirmed July 13 by Elders J. W. Davis and C. B. Freeman.

Jacob (Sonny) Davis and Roy Davis, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Davis, Sr., were baptized July 27 at the Davis home by Elder J. W. Davis. They were confirmed by Elders J. W. Davis and L. L. Christensen.

The Chinese supper sponsored by the women's department and Elder Prescott Foo, given in the high school building, netted over $234 for the building fund. Slides were shown by Bishop Howard Miller who directed the program assisted by Hawaiian members from Independence, Missouri. Saints attended from Springfield, Medoc, and Mansfield, and the people of Ava supported the activity well.—Reported by MRS. C. B. FREEMAN

Branch Has Baptisms

FANSHAW, OKLAHOMA.—Baptisms for the months from March through August included Robbie Jean Couch, Bill Cates, Carol McGowen, Jimmy Holderfield, Ellen Goss, and Margaret Harris. It's God's Plan

By Dick Braby

WHAT MAKES ONE PERSON develop into a Joseph Smith, and another into a Hitler? What causes one man to develop humanity, and another to destroy it? What powers direct one man to serve God, and another to serve the Devil?

These are very basic questions to Zion builders, for within them lies the key to the Zion process. Students of psychology and sociology find these problems complex ones. There are, however, a number of key principles which quickly give a general understanding of the destiny-holding problem of personality development.

I look back to the childhood of my brother and myself and see that we had much in common with our friends. All the members of our gang sang, laughed, and played in much the same manner. Gradually as we grew older, basic differences began to develop. Honesty, industriousness, respect, and many other foundational qualities did not always seem to be of the same importance to each of us. If my brother or I didn't pay for a package of gum, our parents hurried us back to the store and we put our nickels on the counter. If we did something that offended one of our pals, we told him we were sorry—for we were taught the importance of settling quarrels. Our friends in many cases did not agree with these beliefs. They thought they gained prestige with the rest of us by being able to lift gum from store counters and irritate someone else. Basic differences in our personalities were being developed.

These varying attitudes grew rapidly. By the time the gang entered high school, they constituted the key factors in our varied personalities. We were having less in common, and the gang began to split. One fellow lined with the "party boys." His goals were status, popularity, hilarious times. Another one became serious about his studies. Everything was sacrificed for greater knowledge. A third fellow became a bully. He wanted to be tough, so he started smoking and drinking early. His rough language and way of life made him lose many of his old friends, but he gained the respect of his selected few.

Here Is the Writer . . .

DICK BRABY, who lives in Mason City, Iowa, was graduated in May from Graceland College where he was a member of the Student Council, a Silver Seal winner for outstanding work as photography editor of the 1952 "Acacia," and a letterman in track for two years. This fall he will enter the University of Ohio as a photography major. He is an accomplished French hornist and enjoys reading, sailing, hunting, and fishing. He has been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood and now holds the office of priest.

In our home we learned to find happiness through wholesome living. We set high standards for family relationships. Talents in music, athletics, and other areas were developed. We were all active in branch work. These were our choices and goals.

IN SOCIOLOGY we learn that environment is a very important factor in personality development. Our home is our first environment, and it continues to play a primary role in the building of our personalities all during our youth. It is the first basic period in personality development.

College days are critical days. As a young person goes from his home to a college or university, he is confronted with a maze of new social values. During his first year, a freshman stands at an intersection of life. Roads lead in all directions and toward all types of destinations. In his choosing a course to follow he seeks a road that will fulfill his basic emotional desires of response, recognition, new experience, and security. The freshman in search for these basics tends to pick a crowd to follow. He shifts his own values so that they more closely match the popularly accepted standards.

One of our gang went to a large school. He drank a little before he went, and there he readily fitted into the pattern of beer boats and night-caps.

Sex drives are strongest during the late teens and early twenties. Since this age group takes in most college students, it is easy to understand that this is an area in which a change of values takes place. It is very simple for a young person to fit into the well-established pattern of sexual promiscuity.

Does God really exist? In many schools God is analyzed, torn apart, and rebuilt to meet the modern specifications of cold science. God cannot be analyzed by the ungodly, and many young people are led toward atheism.

The atmosphere of the campus, the influence of the instructors, and this new freedom of making decisions is a radically different environment. This new situation alters and enlarges upon the key values already built during childhood. It has a marked effect upon the basic reasons for living, the foundation for all that is to follow. Higher education is a second basic period in personality development.

WITH BUILDING ZION as our goal, we must have strong Zion builders—leaders and followers who understand and have within themselves the qualities of healthy and progressive personality. They must know God, and they must know his world and how it works.

Christ, in restoring his church, employed the powers of environment to produce healthy personalities to carry on his work. We have been told to gather and build an environment that will produce a Zion society. The church program emphasizes our two critical periods in personality building—early home life and the time of higher education. Parents are commanded to build homes in which the teachings of God are taught and practiced. The goals and values of Christ can be built into the personality of a child if the home environment is God inspired.

The church was led to build Graceland in order to guide young people at a critical period in their lives. Graceland holds an environment in which they may stabilize their beliefs and values. The popularly accepted values at Graceland are wholesome and inspiring in nature. As the freshman fits himself into the accepted pattern of the students and faculty, he accepts standards that are necessary to Zion building. At Graceland the social pressure is toward right living. This is quite a contrast to other schools where great influence exists toward indulgent living.

At Graceland young people learn about the church. They meet its leaders and sense perhaps more strongly its world-wide mission. They also learn the natural laws that control the universe. Out of this keener insight they begin to sense what the Restoration Movement is all about, where it is going, and how it is moving. They begin to place themselves in this great task as they find a way to serve.

As young people leave Graceland, they are better prepared to challenge the values they find in other colleges and in any other phase of life. They can step into the speed and confusion of modern life and yet not be absorbed by it. Graceland stabilizes them in the church.

ENVIRONMENT is the key factor in personality development. Just as a poorly balanced diet produces inferior cattle so does a poor environment produce people whose personalities are incomplete according to the standards of God. Through the controlled, healthful, and invigorating environment that God commanded us to produce, we will develop humanity builders, not destroyers—Zion builders, not idlers.

What After Graceland?

By Jack Ross

A PROBLEM which faces almost every Graceland graduate and disturbs him quite deeply is the thought of his next few years of education away from the "Hill" and then out into the world. He will be going to a bigger university or town where the Graceland "spirit," to his knowledge, is nonexistent. The idea of going to a "brain factory" is a cold one after the heart-warming experiences of Graceland. Almost every student on graduation day wishes that Graceland were a four-year school so he could go on and finish his education there. It is an empty feeling that he gets when he realizes his two years of Graceland life are over. To the alumnus, Graceland is behind. His years of climbing the "Hill" are over. It seems to him that he will never again experience the fellowship with others that he felt there. Now he is turned loose into the hard, cruel world by himself without a friendly faculty who understands his viewpoint and his background. He will be without a student body that has a cheery "Hi" for everyone on the campus.

It does sound like a big step, but having experienced the fellowship of Graceland, the graduate has a big advantage when he arrives on other campuses. He knows of a stronger source of power. He also knows that young people can share and have close fellowship with each other. The Graceland graduate should not be left alone to the world but should realize that it is his task to take this "spirit" with him to another campus.

Graceland is a training center where students learn how to share with each other. They must follow through after they leave and show others the wonderful thing they have gained. They have learned a great deal of scientific knowledge to be used the rest of their lives. They have also learned a way of life.

I WAS TAKEN TO TASK by a person who is planning to attend Graceland this fall. I mentioned that in my last two years at Iowa State College I had experienced a closer fellowship with the members of the church group there than I had while attending Graceland. I was told that this was impossible because Graceland is "it." This is not so. I wouldn't have been prepared for these experiences if I had not witnessed the Graceland spirit, but Graceland is not the end. It is the beginning of a way of life. It should be used fully to attain new heights.

The number of members with whom the Graceland graduate will be associated will not be as large, yet the bond of fellowship can be as large or larger. He has been taught how to live and has sampled a bit of the kingdom of God. Graceland puts a person on his feet, but that is not accomplishing anything if he does not walk on them.

Teeter on May 27, 1919, at Hastings, Nebraska, and became a member of the Reorganized Church a short time later. She last held membership in the Fresno Branch.

Surviving are her husband, Charles, of Independence; five children: Mrs. Beth Thompson of Madera, California; Paul of Lawrence, Kansas; Willis of Chowchilla, California; Mrs. Mary Hahn of Warrensburg, Missouri; and David of the United States Navy; her father, Frank Granquist of Cheyenne, Wyoming; a brother, Carl, of Ft. Lauderdale, Florida; and six grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at Jay's Mortuary in Madera by Elder Edward Workmon. Interment was in Roselawn Cemetery at Chowchilla.

HARE.—Francis J., was born September 28, 1862, at East Delanin, Wisconsin, and died July 15, 1952, at Little Blue, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 9, 1888, and was later ordained to the office of deacon. On September 21, 1892, he was married to LaStella Burr, who preceded him in death on December 29, 1945.

He is survived by four daughters: Mrs. Myrtle Ballinger of Grain Valley, Missouri, with whom he had made his home the past three years; Mrs. Luella Flores of Aurora, Illinois; Mrs. Josephine Sherman of Sandwich, Illinois; and Mrs. Alta McCollum of Holt, Missouri; a son, Leslie Hare of Plano, Illinois; eleven grandchildren; and ten great-grandchildren. Two sons preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Lawrence Martin and Carlos Smith officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Celebrate Golden Wedding Anniversary

Dr. and Mrs. Athol Cochran of Joplin, Missouri, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on Sunday, May 25. Forty-five guests were present for the anniversary dinner at Wilder's Buffet, and in the afternoon the Cochrans held open house at their home. Their six children were present for the occasion; they are Mrs. Lorene Irvine of Joplin; Mrs. R. H. Nichols of Colton, California; Mrs. W. B. Taylor, Jr., of Moline, Illinois; Mrs. F. A. Nichol of Columbus, Kansas; Mrs. O. L. Williams of Lincoln, Nebraska; and Virgil Cochran of Joplin.

Dr. Cochran practiced medicine for forty-eight years in Pratt, Kansas, before moving to Joplin in 1950.

Pennsylvania; Fort Smith, Virginia; and Lancaster, Ohio. Brother Hunker stated that he had a fine experience meeting with the devoted Saints in the eastern mission. This was the first time he had ever been assigned to that field.

SERIES HELD AT SHREVEPORT

Seventy James Renfro began a series of cottage meetings September 8-21 at Shreveport, Louisiana, which is a new opening under the direction of Brother R. L. Morris who has organized a church school with about twenty-five people in attendance.

NEWS OF THE SOUTHERN DISTRICTS

Apostle Percy E. Farrow reports that High Priest Jack A. Pray, appointee president of the Mobile District in Alabama, is making a trip through the southern part of Florida and will minister to Saints at Jacksonville, Orlando, Tampa, Miami, and Fort Lauderdale.

Brother Farrow has received word from Elder Lee Roy Oliver that there were eleven people baptized at the Belleview Branch in Florida, and five more candidates are to be baptized in the near future. Brother Oliver is the district president of the Pensacola District. Pastor of the Belleview Branch is Elder Alma Dunnegan.

Apostle Farrow also reports that Seventy Joseph Yager is laboring in the Kentucky-Tennessee District and is in charge of the work at Paris, Tennessee.

COLLEGE STUDENTS HOLD CONFERENCE

Approximately 100 college students, graduates, and professional people attended the college student conference held at Graceland August 30-September 1. This was directed by Dr. L. O. Brockway and the committee on ministry to college people. F. Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, reports that the committee feels that the conference was the most successful experience of this nature with the exception of the attendance. Speakers included Dr. Evan Shute, Apostle C. George Mesley, Apostle D. O. Chesworth, and Dr. J. T. Van Biber. The major addresses made at the conference will appear in the "College Student's Bulletin" and the "Saints' Herald."

CENTER STAKE LEAGUE RETREAT

Under the direction of Lee O. Hart, stake youth leader, the annual retreat of the Center Stake Zion's Leagues was held at Lake Doniphan, August 30-September 2. Approximately 300 young people were in attendance. The staff included Stake President Charles V. Graham, Stake Bishop Harold Cackler, Elder Evan Fry, Elder C. D. Neff, and Brother Hart. As is the custom, the Stake Zion's League officers were installed. They are Delmer Gouldsmith, president; Barbara Elledge, vice-president; Arloe Baughman, secretary; and Perce Judd, treasurer.

SKYLARKS HAVE CIRCUS

Approximately 300 young girls and their leaders attended the Skylark circus, an all-day activity held on the Campus in Independence, August 28. Lee Hart, stake youth leader, was the master of ceremonies for the circus which was under the direction of Mrs. Helen Elledge. Almer Sheehy, chaplain of the Sanitarium, was the guest speaker.

CORRECTION

Errors occurred in the "News and Notes" item regarding the anniversary of Dr. and Mrs. F. M. McDowell. Mrs. McDowell has made the following corrections:

Dr. and Mrs. F. M. McDowell observed their fortieth anniversary July 30 with open house to all relatives in Independence and their visiting daughters and their families. They were married in Lamoni, Iowa, by Bishop Albert Carmichael in 1912. Two daughters were here with their families: Mrs. J. A. Dixon and three daughters, Glenna, Fae, and Lynn; and Mrs. W. Max Wise, her husband, Dr. Wise, and their children, Bill and Suzanne. Mrs. H. L. Crownover was unable to attend because of illness. Mrs. McDowell's eighty-eight-year-old mother, Mrs. Carrie Goode, was also present.

Introducing

RETA RUSSELL. The editors are glad to welcome to its columns this young writer who is the daughter of Missionary and Sister R. Melvin Russell of Flint, Michigan. She was born in Omaha while her father was pastor there, graduated from Central High School in St. Joseph in 1949 and from Graceland in 1951. She expects to receive her B.S. degree from Michigan State College next March. Last spring she won the Sarah Hinman Scholarship which she will use in her senior year.

Reta's special interests are home management as it relates to the program of the church. At Graceland she was a member of the Crescents, Student Council, Women's Athletic Association, Student Activities Planning Committee, and Lambda Delta Sigma. Last year she was secretary of the R.L.D.S. Student Fellowship group at the college. Her hobbies are tennis, promoting Graceland, and the Zion program. She is engaged to Richard Lancaster; they are planning to be married next June.

* TO A YOUNG WOMAN, WAITING

There you stand in the sun, healthy and poised, a smile on your lips, tucking back a stray lock that the wind has blown out of place.

What are you waiting for?

Perhaps for the future to come. For something to happen, for someone to look and pause in his swift, resolute passing.

Gracious you are and beautiful, partly nature and partly art, yet strong in mind and body for the experiences that life may bring.

Somewhere in the world there is someone who may unknowingly hold your destiny in his hands. Wherever he goes, he seeks you. And when he passes and sees you something will say to him, "This is the one," and he will know that his search is over. Then your life and his will be changed forever. The sun will shine with a new radiance, the sky will be bluer blue, your minutes will be jewels, and all the common dross of everyday experience will be transmuted into gold. In your love you will be born again into a new life.

There is a purposefulness in you. You are a moral and spiritual power. Behind your lovely face is a soul; behind your friendly eyes, a mind; behind your charm, a heart.

With him who comes seeking you from afar you will build a home. Beauty and happiness, culture and refinement will be there; for you are a lady and a woman too. From that home you will give sons and daughters as an offering to life, and praise to God. They will be as gracious and beautiful as you are. They will be like you and like him who came seeking you. They will be strong and good. And when they are grown, they will await their future, as you are waiting now.

* THE SMILE

She sat at a window where she met the public—hundreds of people—every day. She wasn't very big, and she wasn't beautiful, in the ordinary physical sense of the word. And yet she had beauty of spirit that imparted loveliness to her small person. She liked people, and she had a smile that started way down in the bottom of her heart and grew until it made a change in everything that came near her.

During her working day she must have faced the usual percentage of solemn clams, sour-pusses and misanthropes (misogynists, too), though these are a difficult minority in the great ranks of humanity. But they never spoiled her disposition. She didn't carry a hurt or a grievance from one patron to the next.

The smile wasn't one of those fixed, impersonal, Dresden china shepherdess things given to the world in general and to nobody in particular. She didn't look over your shoulder to see who was next in line while she gave it. She looked you in the eye and smiled like a friend.

Something like that always goes well with people. They appreciate it and come back for more. A business with an employee like that will thrive. Meanwhile, it is wonderful simply to be a person with a smile like that.

WHITE MASQUE BANQUET HELD

The kick-off banquet which opens the activities for the year for the White Masque players of the Center Stake was held September 9, with 120 persons in attendance. Professor Austin Edwards of William Jewel College was the guest speaker. Mrs. Blanche Gault, new president, received the gavel of office from Mrs. Ray Heady, retiring president. Special guests at the banquet were President Israel A. Smith, who greeted the assembly and accepted membership with the group; Charles Graham, stake president, who offered the blessing; and W. Wallace Smith of the First Presidency. The first production of the year will be "Charlie's Aunt," which will be given in October.

APOSTLE CHESWORTH IN ILLINOIS

Apostle D. O. Chesworth attended the Northeastern Illinois District conference September 6 and 7 at Mission, Illinois. Approximately 200 people were present at the morning service on Sunday and 145 attended the business meeting in the afternoon. Brother Chesworth was associated with Seventy Cecil Ettinger at the conference. He attended the Wisconsin District conference at Madison, Wisconsin, on September 13 and 14.

DR. McDOWELL PREPARING MATERIAL

Dr. Floyd M. McDowell was at the Melchisedec priesthood retreat which was held at Lake Doniphan, Missouri, for the members of the priesthood of the Center Stake of Zion, August 9-10. This was under the direction of the stake presidency. Brother McDowell attended and participated in the college student's conference which was held at Lamoni, Iowa, over the Labor Day week end. At present he is busily engaged in helping organize the school for the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods. The school will be held in Independence and will begin in October.

GRACELAND TEACHER HOME FROM DENMARK

Velma Ruch, Graceland English teacher and daughter of Elder V. D. Ruch who is pastor of the Council Bluffs, Iowa, Branch, landed in New York on September 11, from Copenhagen, Denmark. She sailed from Denmark on September 3. She attended the University of Oslo this summer.

ATTENDS SCHOOL OF INSTRUCTION

Naomi Russell

NAOMI RUSSELL began her work with Herald House in 1945 as news editor of the Herald. After serving two years on this job she became assistant to the managing editor, working first with Leonard Lea and then with Chris Hartshorn. Her special interest is "New Horizons," a weekly feature in the Herald designed for young people. Of it she says, "Nothing raises my editorial morale so high as a really good article for my favorite two pages." Occasionally she writes for the column herself. "When that happens," she explains, "it's a hint to my contributors that I need material."

Immediately after graduation from high school at Holden, Missouri, she moved with her parents, Holger and Anna Schwensen, to northern California where she attended Sacramento Junior College. Three years later they returned to Missouri, making their home in Independence. On July 8, 1945, she was married to Orrin Russell at Stone Church. Together they drew plans for and built their home on Waldo Avenue in west Independence. "A paint brush fits my hand almost as well as a blue pencil," she says, "and I thoroughly enjoy being the junior partner in this house-building business."

Naomi has attended Stone Church since she first came to Independence and, for the past six years, has served as pianist and substitute teacher in the junior department.

On November 1 the Russells will begin a long-looked-to vacation south of the border. They will bring George and Billie Young of Guatemala with them when they return to Independence in December.

Enduring Character

"There are three requirements necessary to the establishment of resolute, enduring character: A faith to live by, a self you can live with, and a purpose to live for."

—Dr. John Southerland Bonnell

WE WERE VISITING for the evening, and my friend showed me a copy of Think (June, 1952) a publication of the International Business Machines Corporation. There I found an article by Dr. Bonnell and thought that a single sentence from it would be good to share with Herald readers. It struck me with particular force, since I have had reason to think of such things.

Christianity and civilization have no product of any greater importance than human character. In a fireside discussion at home recently one of our number said, "The supreme product of civilization is the gentleman and the lady. The lady is important for true beauty of mind and spirit reflected in graciousness, charm, and love. The gentleman is important for strength, honor, and integrity." You may or may not agree with that formula. You may wish to amend it. We offer it for your consideration.

IT WAS Sunday morning at Stone Church, and we occupied seats in the east wing where we have sat so many times. Three friends were back of the pulpit, men we have known for years. All have given long service to the church. All of them have sacrificed business and financial opportunities in the course of their ministry. All of them have endured misunderstanding, criticism, and trouble, and have not faltered. The wear and strain of their years of service show in their faces. They have paid a heavy price.

You would not go to them to borrow money, for they have not given much thought to gathering it. They have not pretended to be great scholars, for they have generally been too busy for extensive study, though they have all been good readers of fine literature when they had the time. But if you were deeply concerned with some question of right and wrong, or some troublesome spiritual problem, you would go to them without hesitation and give careful thought to what they would have to say. They are men that people love and trust. They are, above all else in the world, men of character. It occurred to me that these three servants of God aptly fulfill the conditions of Dr. Bonnell's statement.

THIS TRUE STORY concerns a family in which a child came to the parents as a very beautiful baby, but was soon found to be a victim of cerebral palsy. Many doctors consulted gave them no hope, saying that the child would make no mental development. Resisting despair, they continued their quest for help, and at length found a physician who gave them a slight chance and a procedure to follow. Long efforts ensued and they were gratified to find that their child, far from being mentally handicapped, was brilliant; eventually she achieved something like a normal life.

Much is made of what the parents did for their child and of their great sacrifices in her behalf. Only a few will understand what a remarkable growth of mind and spirit came to them, what tenderness and compassion, what greatness of soul was achieved in their own lives. For their work, love, and sacrifice they became greater people than otherwise they could have been. It was a part of the compensation that came to them. If they had listened to the first dozen doctors they consulted they would have committed their unfortunate baby to an institution, paid the bills, and tried to forget. As it was, a second child who was not afflicted shared with them the joy and development of a great task of mercy. This is the supreme flowering of character.

EVERY PERSON has a treasure house of undeveloped possibilities. If life is dull, it is only because he has not had the will and imagination to explore the rich resources God has put into him. Some fail to grow through sheer laziness.

A man may be saying to himself, "I have worked a little, and now I am going to reward myself with a good rest. I have earned it." Following that philosophy, he will soon reach a state where he is willing to rest without having worked. At that point, the disintegration of his character is complete.

I stayed a while in a town where there is a citizen who has never done any useful work. He lives meagerly and contentedly on the beneficence of a successful and hard-working brother who keeps him supplied with the small minimum necessities of his daily life. If the brother were to die tomorrow, he could not take care of himself with any skill or useful occupation for a week.

People pity the brother because he is cheated by this loafer. But who is really cheated? The industrious brother will never be hurt by this giving. The lazy, shiftless, incompetent brother has robbed himself of his own character, has sold his birthright of freedom and manhood for a mess of pottage. Esau's worst sin was against himself, and this drone is an Esau. The real victim is a person who lives on gifts, not the one who makes the gifts.

There is such a thing as character. It is the most precious of all human possessions. Religion and education are meant to develop it for us. God gives us an opportunity, then holds us responsible. L. J. L.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

THE PRESIDENCY has received a July 19 Midland (Michigan) Daily News which devoted a full page of pictures and copy to the combined reunion of the South Central and Central Michigan Districts. The reunion was held on Sanford Lake near Midland, July 13-20. Classes, choir practice, camping chores, swimming, and handcraft projects were among the activities photographed. The news coverage of the event reported the following facts:

The church has purchased several acres of land along the lake on which the members are building a permanent summer reunion grounds. Since the project was started in 1940, the two Michigan districts have erected ten large permanent buildings on the grounds plus four privately owned cottages in which members vacation throughout the summer. With two districts represented . . . some 400 people have lived in the camp during the week with a week-end crowd . . . of about 1,000 coming to witness the religious functions from all over Michigan. . . . A final count showed there were seventy-seven tents on the grounds as well as twenty-eight trailers.

Doctrine and Covenants Institute

All members and friends of the church are invited to attend the Doctrine and Covenants Institute September 28 to October 3 in Independence. The Sunday meetings, beginning at eleven o'clock, September 28, will be held in the Auditorium, with the Stone Church housing remaining activities. All congregations in the Center Stake will dismiss regular Sunday meetings to permit members to attend.

Daily programs begin at 8:30 a. m. and close with the 7:30 p.m. service.

One of the high lights of the institute will be the introduction and explanation of the new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants on Wednesday, October 1.

Visitors should assume responsibility of arranging for their housing and meals.

AMONG THE MOST IMPORTANT business of the recent General Conference was approval of the Rules of Order. Of almost equal importance was authorization granted the Presidency to publish such General Conference Resolutions as have present significance and to omit from this publication resolutions covered in subsequent revelations, or those changed by subsequent enactments, of a temporary nature, the provisions of which have been fulfilled, and those of historical interest only, having become obsolete with the passage of time or changed practice. These actions have permitted the compilation of Rules and Resolutions, which is just off the press.

Rules and Resolutions contains the Rules of Order, the presently pertinent General Conference Resolutions, appendices concerned with the various Articles of Incorporation of the Church and her institutions, an appendix presenting the approved church court procedure, and three sets of indices making cross reference quick and easy. Together these make a book of a little more than two hundred pages, attractively bound and of a size to slip easily into one's coat pocket. The book represents many hours of research and checking and should be an extremely valuable addition to the libraries of administrative officers and others throughout the church.

The Book of Mormon Concordance, the Doctrine and Covenants Concordance, and Rules and Resolutions are fundamentally important ministerial tools. We are very happy indeed that these are now available. When the new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, reversioned for greater usability, is off the press in a few weeks, these books together will make us very much richer in our ministerial resources. Those responsible have done good work on Rules and Resolutions. Members of the Joint Council, to whom it was distributed as it came off the press, were uniformly happy to have it.

Joint Council Meetings

The Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric began their meetings Monday, September 8, and have held two-hour sessions each forenoon and afternoon since. It is too soon to make any announcement of their work, but they feel that the church will be glad to know the meetings are proceeding with a marvelous spirit of light and unity.

No Battlefield Sermons

"I never deliver sermons in the vicinity of the battlefield," Chaplain Morris B. Margolies, now on duty in Korea, reports. "Prayer near the battlefield is in itself a sermon," he says.

To back his opinion, Chaplain Margolies relates the following anecdotes:

"Seven of us were in the tent at the time. The tent was in the valley. The valley was surrounded by mountains in such a fashion as to earn it the name 'Punch Bowl.' Our service was punctuated by a deafening barrage of artillery fire, necessitating an occasional pause for the ears to recapture their capacity for sound.

"And, in due course, we began to read the Twenty-third Psalm.

"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures. He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul, he leadeth me in straight paths, for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil for thou art with me . . . thy . . .

"Hey!" interrupted PFC Letchinger of Chicago, 'that's it! Get it? "The valley of the shadow of death"—the Punch Bowl! Did David write the Psalm for us?"

"Yes," I responded, 'David wrote the Psalm for us.'

"And that was my sermon for the day."

Tomorrow

By Apostle Percy E. Farrow

Text of sermon preached in Southside Church, Independence, Missouri, October, 1951

And Joshua said unto the people, Sanctify yourselves: for tomorrow the Lord will do wonders among you.—Joshua 3:5.

Now after the death of Moses the servant of the Lord, it came to pass, that the Lord spake unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying, Moses my servant is dead; Now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses. From the wilderness and this Lebanon, even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea toward the going down of the sun shall be your coast. There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life: as I was with Moses so I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. Be strong and of good courage; for unto this people shalt thou divide for an inheritance the land, which I swear unto their fathers to give them. Only be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee; turn not from it to the right hand nor to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous and then thou shalt have good success. Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed; for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.—Joshua 1:1-9.

I WISH to take from the text one word for your special attention—"tomorrow." Think of it first as it relates to the future. All of us are concerned about events and conditions to come. We look forward not only to the immediate tomorrow but to the total future that lies before us in which to work out the kind of life and the kind of civilization that is in the divine pattern.

We need to think also of the immediate tomorrow. If we gain nothing today tomorrow will be just another day without any particular significance. Tomorrow ought to be more important than that. The experiences of today can make tomorrow a very significant twenty-four hour period—a full day of experience with the essential things to be built into our lives so that we may become the kind of people we ought to be.

Everywhere I go people talk to me about the present outlook. Young men in school are confronted with the probability of being drafted into the armed forces. Behind them lies a past that, from their point of view, looks rather futile and empty with no bright shining star rising to beckon them on. Many young people are saying, "What hope have we? We look over the past and find we are still confronted with the awfulness of a war that has not been settled yet."

Just recently peace terms were drawn up between Japan and the United Nations. These are not yet made with Germany. Over in Korea another war is being fought. Is the future going to continue to be like this—one calamity after another?

RECENTLY I talked to a young man who is now serving with the armed forces of the United States in Alaska. He was home on a furlough. He said, "I don't know whether what we are doing up there has any significance or not. It would seem to me that the thing for which we are fighting is rather futile. We're caught in the grips of something from which we cannot separate ourselves. There isn't anything we can do about it, so we just have to move along with the tide as it carries us. I'm wondering what it's all about."

So I sat down with that young man for half an hour and talked to him about some of the things that are revealed in the study of history. I talked to him then about the church and its purposes and the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. With this as a background I tried to show him something of what may yet lie before us. I pointed out that while we are in the grips of a world situation from which none of us can separate ourselves, yet there was a time when in this country the thinking of strong men was in the direction of isolationism. We found out that wouldn't work. Pearl Harbor proved that here in America we are just as vulnerable to attack from a military point of view as nations of the Eastern Hemisphere. We cannot be isolationists even if we want to.

So it is with us as individuals. We cannot isolate ourselves from others. We cannot draw an iron curtain between ourselves and the rest of humanity. We cannot isolate ourselves in relation to mankind. We and our neighbors are part of civilization, and we must all feel its responsibilities whatever they happen to be.

Naturally we ask ourselves, "What is it all about? Is there any hope for the future? Is there any significance in what is taking place now? What about tomorrow? Have we any promise, have we any hope that sometime things will be different?" I think we do.

ONE OF THE DIFFICULTIES of our world now is that men who have been strong in leadership and who have stood in strategic positions have had their thinking diverted from the realities of life to illusions. If there was one thing above all others that the Master of men constantly did as he was confronted by the Pharisees and the various groups among the Jews with whom he mingled, it was to expose the illusion that had led them away from the truth, and to point them toward reality. Only truth has in it the power to abide, to endure through the ages.

History reveals a purpose. It shows that no matter what has happened, no matter what men may have done, eventually truth comes to the top and will survive. It cannot be destroyed, for it is written into the very nature of things. Truth is the power of intelligence by which the Almighty moved when the earth was void and without form, when there was "darkness over the face of the deep." It was by the word of truth that God brought out of chaos and confusion the realities of a creation which is so glorious and of which we ourselves are a part.

Only truth has within it the power of endurance to survive. No matter what may be happening in our world today, no matter how many lives will have to be sacrificed upon the battlefields of Korea and Asia and Europe and maybe even America, yet, in this day in which peace has been taken from the earth because men have followed illusions, truth cannot be destroyed. This "day star" shines ever brightly before us.

History also shows something else. It reveals a divine purpose, as eternal as truth itself. That purpose cannot be defeated, no matter how many atomic bombs may be manufactured, no matter how destructive may become the weapons of war. When men first experimented with the atomic bomb they were afraid they would set off a series of cataclysmic explosions that would destroy the earth. But that didn't happen. I grant the Scriptures say that the "elements shall burn with fervent heat," but they also say, "There shall come a day when there shall be a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." It is important that we remember this part of the divine purpose.

HISTORY ALSO REVEALS a pattern. Let's look at it. After forty years of wandering about in the wilderness, the children of Israel came to the time when their prophet Moses died. The day had come for them to cross over Jordan into the promised land. The mantle of prophetic leadership had fallen upon Joshua, and he now was receiving instruction as to how he was to proceed across Jordan. This was no time for grieving.

There is a natural sorrow that goes with death, but death does not end all. Because a hundred million men may yet die on the field of battle is no reason why we should lay down the arms of righteousness. It is no reason why we should forsake the cause of truth. Moses' death was no reason for the children of Israel to turn back to the bondage of Egypt and remain in slavery. For Joshua and the children of Israel this was the hour to move forward. The time had come to cross Jordan and enter the promised land.

The Lord continued to speak to Joshua and give him instruction. Those people had encountered hardships on the march. Except for this divine purpose, which is written into history and has become a part of its pattern, they would never have come to that day. They would have perished in the wilderness and their bones would have bleached in the hot desert sun.

There were times when Almighty God had to feed them with manna from heaven. Do we believe in that kind of God? Is he written in the pattern of our lives? Is that the kind of faith which motivates us to look toward the future and think of the promised land before us? We stand today as a church on the border of a promised land. We are still on the other side of Jordan, and again and again the prophetic cry has come to us to cross over. Let us remember the instruction which the Lord gave to Joshua: "The Book of the Law shall not depart out of thy mouth." How many of us have observed that law?

I SAID that I wanted this day to be significant so far as our tomorrow is concerned. Are we dreaming about the promised land? Is it something vague and unreal to us? So it was to the children of Israel when the Lord commanded Moses to go down into Egypt and lead them out of bondage. Moses said to the Almighty, "When I go down there and tell them that the God of their fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, has sent me unto them, they will say unto me, What is his name? What shall I tell them?" They had forsaken the Law. They had forsaken God. They had apostatized. They had been so influenced by the culture of Egypt that it had formed the pattern of their life. They had turned to idolatry in their years of slavery, and it took centuries to get it out of them. Nearly two millenniums passed before they gave up those idolatrous tendencies. Idolatry came to America with the Lamanites, who were a branch of the children of Israel. Down in Mexico and Central America archaeologists are unearthing idols that the Lamanites and finally the Nephites worshiped.

Not long ago I stood before the beautiful Pyramid of the Sun at Teotihuacan. It's almost 300 feet up steep steps to the top and covers thirteen acres of ground. Centuries before these worshipers of the sun built this temple and perished in idolatry.

The Lord spoke to Moses and said, "Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt." His purpose had been expressed four hundred years earlier to Abraham.

And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward;

And remember the covenant which I make with thee; for it shall be an everlasting covenant; and thou shalt remember the days of Enoch thy father;

For all the land which thou seest, will I give thee, and to thy seed for ever; and I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth; so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, thy seed shall also be numbered.

Again the Lord said, "And in thee and thy seed shall all of the nations of the earth be blessed." About a century later there were twelve men and their father Jacob through whom the promise could be fulfilled, but when he gave the promise to Abraham from the human point of view there was no possibility of its fulfillment at all, for Abraham didn't have a son. Now thirteen men faced with famine in a land of promise were saved by their son and brother Joseph, whom they had sold into Egypt. Four hundred years later the time had come to lead their posterity out of Egypt. When we think of that whole story we see the divine purpose therein and relate it to everything we think and read concerning this group of people.

I COULD GO not only to Scripture but to the history of later nations and point out that time after time, although confronted with the greatest obstacles, the divine purpose has been preserved. In modern times we think of 1940 and when England alone stood in the gap between dictatorship and democracy, when, with all respect to Americans, some were saying, "Let's be isolationists." We learned our lesson at that point.

If Hitler had decided to invade England instead of Russia, what would have been the course of human history? Where would we be today if we had not had England as a base from which to attack continental Europe?

We think of the Pilgrim Fathers who came to America to build in this land homes of liberty, and of the men who drew up the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. A few weak, struggling colonies who had not yet established themselves nationally in the world, set themselves up to defy the might and the power of the empire which was at that time mistress of the seas.

Then America was weak and Britain was strong. What of their positions after 175 years? Surely there is a divine purpose in this pattern that history reveals.

IT WAS IN the divine purpose that the people of this land should be free from the ties of Europe, that here they—being free from the influence of the traditions of that life from which they had come—might work out a democratic government that surpassed anything known anywhere in the world. I love the people and the land from whence I came, but I say without any hesitancy that I would be proud to support a Constitution such as the fathers of America drew up should I become a citizen of the United States. I believe, as Apostle Oakman said when he obtained his citizenship in the United States, it is the greatest instrument of government in the world today.

Beyond that this is Joseph's land, our promised land. It is a land where freedom-loving people from all over the world may come and establish the arsenal of democracy. Written into the pattern of God's purposes is the great Restoration. Just as God told Moses to go down into Egypt and bring the children of Israel out, so he moved through his prophet Joseph Smith to lead the people of Israel of the latter days out of their bondage into the freedom of truth and righteousness in the gospel of Christ.

He has set before us our Jordan and our promised land. It will be through the Restoration Movement and this church of his planting, working under the Constitution of this land, that eventually the nations shall come to receive the blessings that God has for them in the promise he made to Abraham.

TODAY young men don the uniform of the nations that are fighting for freedom. Everything is not well—not 100 per cent ideal yet within these nations. But when they take up the colors, as we say, these men become a significant part of this struggle to maintain liberty and freedom which others would take away. And when we put on the colors of King Immanuel, of the kingdom of God, we enlist in the army of the Lord fighting the battle of righteousness. We are united with it. We are a part of it, and I'm glad that we are. I'm glad that we have this kind of faith in God. I'm glad that God moved and sought me out and by the revelation of his Spirit has caused my eyes to be opened so that I understand the glories of his kingdom and the power of his truth. That the Lord may bless us all is my prayer.

We Must Advertise

A prominent minister of Dallas, Texas, recently came up with this bit of philosophy: "To fill our churches we must advertise more. God was the original advertiser. He hung out the stars to let the heavens declare his glory." We who belong to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints would do well to follow this advice to advertise more. We'll never get Zion built if we fail to tell our associates about the church, its message, and its purpose. We must let people know that our organization is an active, living, growing institution with foresight and courage—an organization which has within its grasp the solution for many of today's perplexing problems. It is our duty to be valiant in testifying for Christ. We must give our neighbors and friends tracts which explain our religion and invite them to attend services, all the while remembering to plan our services so that members and nonmembers alike will wish to attend again. If we do, Zion can become a reality.

Pray for Faith

EVER SINCE Jesus said, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed . . . nothing shall be impossible unto you," and "Thy faith hath made thee whole," people have turned to the way of faith in their extremity. While we may not have much in houses and lands, we may even feel insecure in our employment or crops, yet except in cases of extreme suffering we cling to the hope of life until we have passed the three-score-and-ten mark. Life is sweet and friends are dear. We dread the unknown and uncertain beyond.

The editors received a heart-touching appeal recently from a ten-year-old polio victim. It is straightforward, simple, and trustful. Karen Kay Wakeman says, "I need the prayers of the Saints because I can't use my right hand and arm" (Letter Column, August 25). Just imagine facing life at ten without the use of a right arm.

Peter and John heard the appeal of the impotent man at the Gate Beautiful as they were about to enter Solomon's Temple. They spoke the words of divine grace, "Arise and walk," and lifted him by the right hand. Immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength, and he walked, leaped, and shouted for joy. Since that day countless thousands of sufferers have turned to divine healing as their only hope.

Karen informs her readers that she has been in the hospital for therapy, but she has also been administered to and told that "some-day I would be all right." But two years waiting is a long, long time in the life of a ten-year-old. We don't know why hope is so long deferred, but truly we "are saved by hope." When hope dies the eyes become listless and even the body will wither and die.

The church and its ministry have been challenged to perform miracles and ridiculed for teaching that God's plan for healing the sick is still operative among the believers. We are all conscious that many times hands are laid on the sick in administration (as commanded in James 5: 14, 15) but they are not healed. Paul and the other disciples had this same experience. We wonder, we continue to pray, and we philosophize. The fact remains that many of our sick and our crippled remain impotent. It seems especially sad when children are not healed, for Jesus has told us

"of such is the kingdom of God." We note that Karen's plea is that she might be "blessed with more faith." This seems like such an unselfish and reasonable request that all of us should remember this child and her need. As James has declared, it is "the prayer of faith that shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise them up." What a wonderful experience it would be if, through our interest, God could give this child that gift of faith to be healed. Speaking for myself, I shall be glad to bear this petition to the throne of grace. C. B. HARTSHORN

Keeping the Lord's Day Holy

IN THESE LATTER DAYS when there is so much laxity and difference of opinion about how and when to keep the Lord's day, there arises much discussion and various interpretations of the divine commandment.

We of the Restored gospel have been admonished to cease contention and to observe the first day of the week, commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest and worship (Doctrine and Covenants 19: 7). It is also to be a holy day (Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2).

This Lord's day, which is Sunday on the calendar, celebrates the resurrection of Christ. The day was named for the glory of the sun. Through Christ's triumph over death, we commemorate it as the Lord's day.

The Sabbath of the old covenant celebrated the deliverance of the Hebrews from Egypt. Anyone daring to pick up a stick and build a fire on the Sabbath was stoned to death. How different is ours—a day set apart to serve and worship God. It is hallowed, yet free from the yoke of the Hebrews. The Hebrew word "Sabbath" is not the name of a day; but it means to desist or rest. The present order of names for the days of the week was unknown until after the time of Christ.

How can we keep the "Sabbath" or rest day holy? The keynote to this holiness is preparation. Would we come to worship with a dirty face? No, yet inside of us (where God can see) may lurk a soul smudged with sin.

We cannot take this Sabbath holiness down from a clothes closet shelf, where it was laid away with our Sunday-go-to-meeting accessories the previous Sunday evening when we retired, and drape it around us like a string of pearls. He who expects to don a ready-made, laid-away holiness may find that Satan has committed sabotage during the week. Holiness is not an accessory but a virtue which is an asset through all the week. We can obtain it only by striving for it—a full week's job. It cannot be acquired by opening our Bibles and "cramming" on Sunday morning.

The Sabbath was a wonderful provision for the benefit of men both spiritually and physically. And surely he who worships in spirit and in truth on the day set aside to do so will absorb much of its holiness and carry it with him throughout the week.

If God had not provided for a day of rest would man have rested? No. In his desire to gain the wealth of this world he would have spiritually died a pauper. Let us remember the Lord's day and keep it holy. Let us prepare for it, starting on Monday. Let us try to keep its joy and goodness through all the week.

Who Wrote Upon the Sticks?

By A. W. Lundeen

NEARLY ALL of our missionaries will testify to the presence of God's Spirit when they preach on the Book of Mormon. This has been particularly true when trying to prove the divinity of the Book of Mormon from Isaiah 29 and Ezekiel 37.

I believe that if we carefully analyze the reading of Ezekiel 37: 15-20 we not only prove the Book of Mormon but we also come to the conclusion that the "Stick of Judah" spoken of is the Inspired Version of the Bible and that the man who was commanded to write upon the sticks was the Prophet Joseph Smith.

Let us examine the prophecy carefully and see how it was fulfilled. In many of Ezekiel's prophecies, the term "thou son of man" is used, which would seem to indicate that the Lord was speaking directly to him, but if we examine this prophecy to its fulfillment we note that the Lord is speaking through Ezekiel rather than to him.

The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Moreover, thou son of man [the man who is to write], take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companion: and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand.—Ezekiel 37: 15-17.

THE ONE referred to as the "son of man" is given a commandment to write upon two sticks, one for Judah and one for Joseph. Ezekiel could not have been the man who was to write because he wrote neither the Bible nor the Book of Mormon, nor were the two sticks ever in his hand. We must look for someone else in a day when the sticks would be united. The Bible does not say that Judah would write or that Joseph would write but states that he who was to write was to do it for Judah and for Joseph, which would indicate that it would be for their benefit. The Lord also calls the Book of Mormon the "Stick of Ephraim," which seems to be his official name for it.

In verse 18 the Lord cautions the writer that there would be a question raised about the meaning of verses 16 and 17, so he explained the meaning to the people who are called the "children of thy people." The Lord is now talking to these people through the man who was commanded to do the writing (verse 19):

Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God [this indicates that he is a prophet]; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

This explanation tells an interesting story; but first let us note that in verse 16 the Book of Mormon is called the stick of Ephraim and in verse 19, the stick of Joseph.

SOME BELIEVE that a portion of the Book of Mormon people were Ephraimites because the Book of Mormon is called the stick of Ephraim, but the only known Israelites mentioned in the Book of Mormon are those of Manasseh and Judah.

And Aminadi was a descendant of Nephi, who was the son of Lehi, who came out of the land of Jerusalem, who was a descendant of Manasseh, who was the son of Joseph, who was sold into Egypt by the hands of his brethren.—Alma 8: 3.

And now will ye dispute that Jerusalem was destroyed? Will ye say that the sons of Zedekiah were not slain, all except it were Mulek? Yea, and do ye not behold that the seed of Zedekiah are with us and they were driven out of the land of Jerusalem?—Helaman 3: 56, 57.

Mulek was the son of Zedekiah, and Zedekiah was king of Judah—a Jew (II Chronicles 36: 10). No mention is made of Ephraim's coming to America in either the first or second migration. Doctrine and Covenants 18: 3 also states that the Lamanites were remnants of the Jews. It is obvious that the reason the Lord calls the Book of Mormon the stick of Ephraim is because Ephraim would possess it. "Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim." It was called the stick of Joseph because both Ephraim and Manasseh, Joseph's sons, were involved. It was the descendants of Manasseh—Nephi, Jacob, and others—who wrote the Book of Mormon; but when the Book of Mormon came out of the earth, it was found in Ephraim's hand. This Ephraimite was Joseph Smith, but the prophecy also states ". . . and the tribes of Israel his fellows." This evidently means in the hands of church members with Joseph Smith, many of whom are of Israel, as is often indicated in patriarchal blessings.

The true church is also referred to as Ephraim. This is plainly seen in Doctrine and Covenants:

And they [the people of the North Country] shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim, my servants. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence. And then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim.—108: 6.

Behold the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for, verily, I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, wherefore they shall be plucked out.—64: 7.

This would lead us to believe that the obedient are of Ephraim while the rebellious who are not worthy would be sent away. Here is also a prophecy fulfilled, for the rebellious were sent away in the latter day apostasy and went west where they remain to this day.

THE LORD ALSO GIVES the name, "stick of Ephraim," in Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2:

... and with Moroni, whom I have sent unto you to reveal the Book of Mormon, containing the fullness of my everlasting gospel; to whom I have committed the keys of the record of the stick of Ephraim. . . .

It appears that God calls it the "Stick of Ephraim," rather than the "Stick of Joseph" because Ephraim is the possessor of the book, even though Manasseh was the writer. It is evident that the reason the Lord mentions Moroni as having the keys to the Stick of Ephraim is because of the unrevealed portion of the Book of Mormon, which will come by his authority.

Another witness is found in Hosea (8: 11, 12, Inspired Version):

Because Ephraim hath made many altars to sin, altars shall be unto him to sin. I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing.

Some believe this Scripture refers to the Book of Mormon, as did Joseph Smith. If so, it would be Manasseh who wrote the "great things of my [God's] law," for it states that they were written to Ephraim and not by him. Ephraim possessed what was written to him, and it thus became his property. It would seem that the "great things" of God's law are not limited to the Book of Mormon but could include the Bible or any other Word of God.

Before we further analyze verse 19, let us consider I Nephi 3: 195: "And the words of the Lamb shall be made known in the records of thy seed [Book of Mormon] as well as in the records of the twelve apostles of the Lamb [Bible]." So, if we use the word record instead of stick in verses 19 and 20, they would read thus:

Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the record of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the record of Judah and make them one record, and they shall be one in mine hand [of equal value]. And the records whereon thou writest [translate] shall be in thine hand before their eyes.

It is plain to see that these records were already in existence when the man was commanded to write upon them, so his writing was to translate what already existed into his own language and into manuscript form for the benefit of Joseph's seed and Judah's seed.

THE RECORD OF JUDAH here could be only the Inspired Version, for it was one of the two he was to write, or did write, the King James and other translations having been changed by the "abominable church" (I Nephi 3: 167). The two records came together ("as one in thine hand") long after the prophet Ezekiel was dead; only Joseph Smith fulfilled the prophecy.

God gave the two records by the spirit of revelation, so we can see why he said "in mine hand"—they were his approved Books. Because he gave them to the church for equipment to his priesthood through a living prophet and they were not tampered with by man, they became one "in thine hand," before their eyes—that is, before the eyes of those who possess them, before the eyes of the true church. The manuscript of the Book of Mormon and the Inspired Version are in the possession of the Reorganized Church today as a witness that the prophecy of Ezekiel 37 is true. They are in the handwriting of the scribes as they wrote the words that fell from the lips of the prophet. They are today in the hands of those who were called the children of thy people (prophet's successor). To separate these two books spells apostasy.

It was wisdom in God that the Inspired Version was not printed in the days of Joseph Smith, Jr., for had it been, it would also have been the property of the Mormon church. This was not to be.

Thou shalt ask, and my Scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and peoples.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15.

If the Mormons had the Inspired Version, they could also fulfill this prophecy, but they cannot teach what they do not possess.

IT WAS BUT A SHORT TIME after the Book of Mormon was printed that the Lord made known the coming of the Inspired Version. The Book of Mormon manuscript was taken to the printer in August, 1829, and was all printed by March, 1830 (Church History, Volume 1, page 81). In June, 1830, Section 22 of the Doctrine and Covenants was given. This gives the first information (except that which is written in the Book of Mormon) that there would be a corrected Bible. We quote from verse 24:

And in a day when the children of men shall esteem my words as naught, and take many of them from the book which you shall write, behold I will raise up another like unto you, and they shall be had again among the children of men, even as many as shall believe.

The Inspired Version was begun about June, 1830 (Church History, Volume 1, page 159), three months after the printing of the Book of Mormon. So as Ezekiel said in 37: 19, the Book of Mormon would be first in Ephraim's hand, and into the same hand would come the Inspired Version written by inspiration.

We note that the man who was to translate the words of Moses was to be likened unto Moses, and that which he was to translate would be had among as many as shall believe, who are those of the Reorganized Church.

Section 22 is not in the Utah Doctrine and Covenants, but it does appear in the book, Pearl of Great Price, with a change in wording. Besides saying, "as many as shall believe," the Pearl of Great Price adds "show them not unto any except them that believe, even so, Amen."

NOT ONLY ARE THE BIBLE and the Doctrine and Covenants witnesses to the Inspired Version, but the Book of Mormon speaks of this record also. We read in the Book of Mormon that when the book "proceeded forth from the mouth of a Jew [Bible], it contained the plainness of the gospel of the Lord, of whom the twelve apostles bore record. . . ." But when it went to the gentiles, the great and abominable church, whose founder is the Devil, proceeded to take away many plain and precious parts. (Read I Nephi 3: 161-196.) "Because of these things which are taken away out of the gospel of the Lamb, an exceeding great many do stumble, yea, insomuch that Satan hath great power over them. . . ." (I Nephi 3: 175). But later we find that these plain and precious parts would be restored.

And it came to pass that I beheld the remnant of the seed of my brethren, and also the book of the Lamb of God, which had proceeded forth from the mouth of the Jew, that it came forth from the Gentiles unto the remnant of the seed of my brethren. [King James Version.]

And after it had come forth unto them, I beheld other books which came forth by the power of the Lamb, from the Gentiles unto them unto the convincing of the Gentiles and the remnant of the seed of my brethren, and also the Jews, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth, that the records of the prophets and of the twelve apostles of the Lamb are true.

And the angel spake unto me, saying, These last records which thou hast seen among the Gentiles shall establish the truth of the first [that is, the word of the twelve apostles before the abominable church changed it], which are of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, and shall make known the plain and precious things which have been taken away from them; [Would include the Inspired Version.]

And shall make known to all kindreds, tongues and people [same language as was used in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15], that the Lamb of God is the Son of the Eternal Father, and the Savior of the world; and that all men must come unto him or they cannot be saved;

And they must come according to the words which shall be established by the mouth of the Lamb; [His doctrine]

And the words of the Lamb shall be made known in the records of thy seed [Book of Mormon], as well as the records of the twelve apostles of the Lamb; [Inspired Version]

Wherefore they both shall be established in one [one in mine hand—Ezekiel 37: 19].—I Nephi 3: 190-196.

IT IS DOUBTFUL if the Lord could mean any version of the Bible spoken of in verse 175 as causing Satan to have great power over the people. It is obvious that the Inspired Version and the Book of Mormon are very important to the conversion of men. Very little effect has come upon the Jew toward converting him to Christ by the King James and other versions. But when he shall read from his favorite prophet, Moses, as recorded in the Inspired Version, it will no doubt have a great effect upon him. Here is one quotation from the prophecy of Enoch:

And the Lord said unto Enoch, Look; and he looked, and beheld the Son of Man lifted up on the cross, after the manner of men.—Genesis 7: 62, Inspired Version.

Genesis 50: 31, Inspired Version, also tells of the Book of Mormon and the Inspired Version:

Wherefore the fruit of thy loins shall write [Book of Mormon], and the fruit of the loins of Judah shall write [Bible before it was changed by man]; and that which shall be written by the fruit of thy loins, and also that which shall be written by the fruit of the loins of Judah, shall grow together [become one] unto the confounding of false doctrines, and laying down of contentions, and establishing peace among the fruit of thy loins, and bringing them to a knowledge of their fathers in the latter days; and also to the knowledge of my covenants, saith the Lord.

Joseph's seed and Judah's seed were the writers of these books, but in the latter days another was to bring them together so that they would eventually convert the Lamanites and bring to them the knowledge of their fathers. The book of Judah here could be only the Inspired Version, for we have already learned that the Bible that had been tampered with by the abominable church brought confusion rather than unity, while the book mentioned here with the Book of Mormon would confound false doctrine and restore peace. I believe that only the Inspired Version can be the companion book to the Book of Mormon, a treasure that but few of the church have realized.

There are some in the church who believe that the stick of Ephraim has no reference to the Book of Mormon but that it is a book belonging to Ephraim of the lost tribes of Israel; and they also believe that Orson Pratt is the author of the interpretation that the stick of Ephraim is the Book of Mormon.

As early as April, 1830, the Prophet Joseph Smith remarked that the stick of Joseph in Ephraim's hand was the Book of Mormon. It is very likely that he also believed he was the Ephraimite referred to.

Soon after the occurrence, I returned to Fayette, Seneca County. The Book of Mormon [the stick of Joseph in the hand of Ephraim] has now been published for some time, and as the ancient prophet had predicted of it, "It was accounted as a strange thing"—but it had now come to pass that truth had sprung out of the earth and righteousness had looked down from heaven.—Church History, Volume 1, page 87.

Joseph Smith not only interpreted Ezekiel 37 as the Book of Mormon, but also referred to Hosea 8: 12 and Psalm 85: 11 as biblical evidence.

AMERICA WAS JOSEPH'S LAND, so here we will find his sons: first, Manasseh by Lehi, Nephi, and their seed; and in the latter days, Ephraim by the English-speaking peoples and others.

Orson Pratt was not baptized until September 19, 1830, so could hardly be the author of this interpretation.

Some may say Ezekiel 37 is symbolic, but the statement, "and the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes," was literally fulfilled by Joseph Smith. We know of no other who makes this claim.

Perhaps we could dramatize the events that took place in Ezekiel 37: 19, 20. Let us picture in our minds Joseph Smith as the Ephraimite with the golden plates (stick of Joseph) in his hands. He puts them with the Bible (stick of Judah); both are God's gifts to man, having been written by ancient prophets and apostles.

One book, the stick of Joseph, needs to be translated into manuscript form from an unknown to a known language by divine means; the other book, the stick of Judah, is also to be written by divine means for correction. So the prophet writes (translates) as he was commanded in verse 16. "And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes."

Here is the finished product. The stick of Joseph becomes the Book of Mormon; the stick of Judah, the Inspired Version of the Bible. Together they become the property of the Reorganized Church, which is Christ's own church. God has seen to it that his word has come to his church, pure and undefiled, except for a few human mistakes. We have the Book of Mormon, Inspired Version of the Bible, and the Doctrine and Covenants, all given by modern prophets. We do not have to go to Babylon for God's word.

After the writer in Ezekiel had written as he was instructed, he was told to tell the people, "Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land."

Joseph Smith, by direct revelation as well as angelic ministry, was told of the gathering of Israel that would follow the writing on the sticks, so the prophet spoke as God had said, but only when the set time had come.

We Are Thankful

BY HARRY WHIPPLE

In everything give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.—I Thessalonians 5: 16.

O Lord, we thank thee for this life and all it holds. For the moon and the stars that fill the heavens at night. For the beautiful sunrise and the dew of the morning. We thank thee for food—the crisp red apple, fresh bread, and a glass of cold milk. Thou hast provided a roof over our heads and clothed our bodies. Thou hast made the rose, the larkspur, and the sweet pea to grow by our path. We are thankful for the loyalty and love of family, for all who minister to us, and for our friends. We are thankful for living in a country where freedom and dignity of the individual are foremost, and men may exercise their God-given agency.

Most of all we are thankful for thy Son, who came to redeem us, and for the privilege of a daily walk with him.

O Lord, help us to live lives worthy of these rich blessings and grant us wisdom in our use of them.

Meeting Marietta Walker

On my summer vacation I went out to Lamoni and there met her. She came one Sunday to Grandfather's house to see me, and as there were other callers in the little house we went outside to talk, seating ourselves on the side of a woodpile. There she opened up to me the things she wished to accomplish, most of which were far beyond my comprehension. I listened with interest and willingness to do whatever was in my power, though I had no idea what I could do or where I would fit into her plans.

That summer for the first time I had the pleasant experience of meeting with young people of the church. In Lamoni they had organized The Students' Society that met once a week for study of the Book of Mormon. From that time I spent my vacation in Lamoni. After the first summer I took the place of the postmistress while she was on her vacation. I went home in August in time to attend the teachers' institute of our county.

The Use of the Tracts

Once as I was preparing to go to the institute I was debating whether to take with me a package of tracts the Herald Publishing House had given me. I feared I might not have courage to give out tracts. As I debated there came into my mind a text from which I had heard Elder Henry Stebbins preach a sermon: "Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready, and God shall send thee flax." "Well, I'll take them," I said, and placed the tracts in my bag.

At the boardinghouse I shared a large room with two other teachers. Walking home from town on the first afternoon of the institute, we passed one of the many churches of the city, and the other girls asked each other to what church she belonged. Then they turned to me and asked if I was a member of any church. I replied, "Yes, I am a Latter Day Saint."

An animated conversation followed, the girls asking many questions and I answering as best I could. When we reached home I brought out my tracts and Bible and placed them on our study table, where they could be referred to in the many brief conversations we had.

Our hostess saw them there, and one evening she came up, ostensibly to bring fresh towels but in reality to ask if she might take my Bible down to show it to her husband, who was one of the instructors of the institute.

At the close of the institute the girls who had roomed with me came asking if they might have some of the tracts to take home, and our hostess hurried forward, saying, "Don't give them all away; I want some too." So I gave away all of my tracts without having to solicit anyone to receive them. Then I remembered the text, "Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready, and God shall send thee flax."

The Call to Help

One Saturday morning Mother and I were at work in the kitchen when she said to me, "Annie, Sister Walker says someday you will help in her work." Such a thought had never entered my mind, and I answered, "O Mother, I couldn't do that. Sister Walker thinks I know more than I do." Mother agreed with me saying, "I told Sister Walker you couldn't do it."

Just then the mail train from the west whistled as it went through our village, throwing off the mail sack. I took my hat down from the nail and started for the post office. As I was walking briskly along under the hot summer sun, a voice spoke in my heart. It said clearly, "I have called thee in righteousness and will hold thy hand."

Astonished and not understanding why it should be said to me, I exclaimed within myself, "What is that said to me for?" I did not connect it with what Sister Walker had said to Mother, so far from my mind was the thought that I ever should have work of that kind to do.

Had I understood, it would have been easier for me to decide what to do when Sister Walker began writing to me, asking me to come to Lamoni to teach. As it was, I had a hard struggle within myself in trying to make up my mind what to do.

On the one hand was Lamoni with the many associations that made it attractive to me. On the other was my pleasant home with my aging parents, largely dependent on me. And there were the children of my sister, with whom I played every night. What heartaches I suffered after my frolics with those little ones as I walked home in the dark and thought of leaving them in an environment not favorable to them.

The Decision to Go to Lamoni

Nature itself seemed to conspire to make it hard for me to reach a decision. It seemed to me the hills that enclosed our little valley had never looked so beautiful as they did that autumn. Morning after morning when I awoke I looked upon them from the window of my room and saw the maples and oaks standing out like huge, flaming bouquets of yellow and red against the darker background of foliage. It was very hard to leave, but after praying earnestly I decided to go.

The townspeople held a farewell gathering the night before I left. A revival meeting was in progress in the church, but it was cut short and the people gathered in and filled the room. They gave me gifts and commended me for my work among their children and sent me on my way with their good wishes.

I kissed my father's cheek at the station and boarded the train, a very sad girl, my somber feelings intensified by a cold rain that began to beat upon the windowpane.

I was making a very real sacrifice. I was laying on the altar my best gift, my father and mother and my sister and her little ones. And He who withheld not from us his own Son knew my sorrow and sympathized with me in the pain I suffered; he sent me a word of comfort.

As I gazed on the rainbeaten window, I became aware that something was being said to me in my heart. A still, small voice was speaking there. It had spoken once; it spoke again; and then I turned my head as if to listen more intently, and I heard the voice I was beginning to know. I heard clearly the message it spoke: "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it again."

I recognized the voice and realized that the Lord was seeking to comfort me, and I went on my way cheered and uplifted in spirit. Those comforting words were completely fulfilled in the years that followed. Had I known it, I was but going before those for whom I was grieving in the separation. My heart would have sung for joy could I have known the day I left them what the Lord would bring to pass.

Serving at a Loss

I went to teach in Lamoni at a financial sacrifice, my monthly salary being ten dollars less than I had received in the school I left. I went from a commodious, well-equipped room with adequate janitor service to a room improvised from one end of a lumber office. It was crowded and had few of the conveniences belonging to a schoolroom. The janitor had first to do his work at the main school building and then hurry half a dozen blocks to take care of us. He came in very late one morning, demanding of me rather truculently, "Missus, can you tell me where is de ashes-scoop?" from which I gathered that he thought I was responsible for the care of the coal shovel.

The schoolroom had no vestibule and the children tracked in snow and mud. When it rained hard, muddy water ran across the room to the opposite side. But we were patient with those conditions, for Lamoni was a young, growing town. At that time there was but one sidewalk in town aside from those in the business section—the one that led from the Brick Church to the railroad station, where it connected with those that led uptown.

Living With Marietta Walker

I lived in Sister Walker's home that year. She was carrying a considerable burden of work at that time, furnishing copy for Zion's Hope, the Mothers' Home Column, and Autumn Leaves, a magazine she had inaugurated in the interest of the young people of the church. She also maintained an extensive correspondence that reached all parts of the church.

Typewriters had not then come into general use, and she did all her writing with pen and ink. She allotted me the fourth page of the Hope, and I prepared her copy for the office. Contributions sometimes came in that contained excellent thought but were in writing difficult to decipher; it was my work to make them as legible as possible for the compositors, who worked directly from the original copy.

Day after day, late into the night, and Sunday as well, because she was deaf and could not hear preaching, Sister Walker gave herself with tireless energy and complete consecration to her work. That year she published her book, With the Church in an Early Day. I remember that strong urging was necessary to bring her to have her picture taken for the frontispiece, for, with all her energy and the many projects she initiated, Sister Walker was a modest woman.

Her activities were varied, for she was a homemaker as well as an editor. In her black silk dress she presided with dignity over the Sunday school, and in her blue calico dress she looked well to the ways of her household.

Something important was evolving that year—something that would greatly affect me, though I was not aware of it and went about my own work. Sister Walker had frequent consultations with R. S. Salyards, son-in-law of Brother Joseph, who had recently come from the East and was assistant editor of the Herald.

In the spring of 1891 the General Conference of the church was held in Kirtland, and so deep was Sister Walker's interest in what they had planned that she went to Conference. There Brother Salyards called a meeting over which he presided and the Sunday School Association was formally organized.

The school year came to a close, and I went into post office work for the fourth time. In August I went home to Illinois. While I was still in the office, Brother David Dancer, business manager of the Herald Publishing House, came to the window one day and offered me a position as proofreader, but I told him I had decided to go home.

I had been offered a promotion in school there with a considerable increase in salary, but the financial consideration was not what induced me to go home. It was because of my father's wishes. I could not turn a deaf ear to them; so I went, though my heart remained in Lamoni with the church.

Death of Grandfather Landers

In January, 1892, my grandfather died at the age of ninety-seven. Brother Joseph officiated at his funeral. Grandmother, who for more than sixty-two years had been his inseparable companion, could hardly make up her mind to be left behind. She took to her bed quite determinedly, but finally had to give up and recover sufficiently to remain with us four years longer.

The Herald carried editorial comment on Grandfather's passing. Someone who knew him personally wrote of his early years in the church, giving an account of his "unremitting labors in word and doctrine, and in all good works," and of his having brought many to the knowledge of salvation.

Founding of the Sunday School Association

A General Conference was held in Independence in 1892, and the Sunday School Association held its first annual convention at that time. A motion was introduced to adopt the International Sunday School lessons for use in the church schools, but Elders R. S. Salyards and F. M. Sheehy took strong ground for lessons produced by our own church. Sister Walker was not there, but she was quoted as saying there was a young sister in Illinois who could do the editorial work. Formal action was taken on the publication of lessons setting forth church doctrine.

Sister Walker began writing to me, as did E. A. Blakeslee, who had been elected superintendent of the Sunday School Association with Sister Walker as his assistant. They asked me to write the lessons, and I was forced to decide whether to remain at home and devote myself to my parents or to go to Lamoni and take up work in a new field.

Had I understood the leadings of the Spirit on the occasion of my writing to Sister Walker the first time when it spoke in my heart, "I have called thee," my duty would have been plain, but I did not understand the meaning of what I received, and I was between the school board, asking if I wished to continue teaching, and the officials of the Sunday School Association, asking if I would edit the new quarterlies.

Another Decision to Make

My perplexity was increased by my mother's failing health. Day by day she grew weaker, and I asked myself in despair, "Can the Lord require a girl to leave her sick parents?" I dropped down on a chair beside my mother's couch one morning before I left for school and said, "Mother, I don't know what to do. I must answer these people, and I don't know what to say."

Understandingly she looked at me and said, "I think you ought to go." When I came in from school that evening she had a solution for the problem. I had a brother at work in Chicago whose wife was about to join him. Mother suggested that she should go to Chicago with my sister-in-law and enter a hospital for women. I said at once that I would pay her expenses, and she decided to go.

Taking Up a Life's Work

Mother went to Chicago, and I went to Lamoni. I began my work on the Monday after the Fourth of July, 1892. I felt unequal to making the start alone, and Sister Walker arranged with Brother J. A. Gunsolley, superintendent of Lamoni public schools, to assist me during his summer vacation.

We began to work in Sister Walker's large, pleasant living room, our writing table in the middle of the room. We were supplied with writing materials, a worn Bible dictionary, King James' Version of the Bible, the Inspired Version, and a quarterly I had brought from the Congregational Sunday school to be used as a guide in laying out lessons.

Working very slowly, because the task was so new to us, we completed one lesson and laid it away. We finished a second and were part way through a third when one day Brother Gunsolley failed to return after lunch. I ventured to go on without him. But he did not come the next morning, and Sister Walker said, "If Jerry does not come this afternoon, we will go to see him."

Timely Truths

Part I

By Apostle Paul M. Hanson

THE CHURCH is looking forward to the redemption of Zion, the greatest project that ever challenged the powers of man. This clearly means that the women of the church have an equal privilege and responsibility in executing the great work and are entitled to the same happiness enjoyed by men holding the priesthood or by those who are not in the ministry who are endeavoring to accomplish what the Lord has given the church to do.

It has been said of the creation of woman that she was taken from the side of man—not from the head of Adam, that she should dominate him; not from his feet, that he should trample upon her; but from his side, symbolizing her place of equal importance and worth in the working out of the great purposes of God in the human family.

Jesus said to his disciples: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." This applies in a rich and very peculiar sense to the light of mothers shining in the homes. In public school children do not learn of God and his church, and they do not attend many church services, so it remains for the home to be a unique medium in the bringing forth of the army that is necessary to redeem Zion.

Often in the little things that are said, which are spoken simply because a person is what he or she is, much good is accomplished including conversions to Christ. I have seen a sea gull in Australia pick a periwinkle from the rocks, rise thirty feet or more, then drop it and fly down, reaching the rock about as quickly as the clam. If the clam did not break, the bird would pick it up, rise higher, and drop it again, then eat the meat and pick out another clam. Why does a sea gull do this? One might say instinct, but the best answer I can give is that a gull does what he does because he is a sea gull. Now when one has become a "new creature" in Christ, he is expected to utter helpful things becoming to a new creature in Christ. The far-reaching effect of this in the homes can hardly be measured.

HERE ARE A FEW EXAMPLES of casual remarks: John the Baptist one day stood with two of his disciples, and when Jesus walked by, John said, "Behold the Lamb of God!" Two of John's disciples heard what was said and followed Jesus. As they drew closer, Jesus asked, "What seek ye?" They answered, "Master, where dwellest thou?" And Jesus said to them, "Come and see." They went with him that day—what a marvelous, blessed experience! Then Andrew, one of the disciples, sought his brother, Simon Peter, and said "We have found the Messiah." I do not think John the Baptist thought, "Two of my disciples are here, and now is an opportunity to say something that may have a missionary effect," for the text states the disciples "heard" John speak. The testimony had been given to John that upon him whom he should see the Spirit of God descending and remaining, the same was he who would baptize with the Holy Ghost. Doubtlessly John thought of and was moved by this testimony when he saw Jesus walking and then, lost in wonderment, said, "Behold the Lamb of God!" Thus there resulted from this casual remark the conversion of Peter, a distinguished apostle of the New Testament church.

You remember the story in the book of Kings of Naaman, the captain of the host of the king of Syria. A company of Syrians had gone out and taken captive a little Hebrew maid. She waited on Naaman's wife. Naaman was a leper, and the little maid, seeing on the countenances of those of the household great anxiety, one day said to her mistress, "Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy." Her words were communicated to Naaman, who sent a letter by the king of Syria to the king of Israel. Finally Naaman went with gifts to the prophet Elisha. Naaman was told by the prophet to go and wash in Jordan seven times and he would be healed of his leprosy. After he had complied with the instruction, his flesh came to him as the flesh of a little child, and he was clean—all because of a few words from a little maid. She doubtlessly had heard among her people of the prophet and of God's wonderful dealings among his people. We need Reorganized Latter Day Saints, young and old, who will say things that are wonderfully true, similar to what was said by John the Baptist, and the Hebrew maid.

Talk about sending missionaries abroad; talk about holding cottage meetings, series of meetings, all of which are important—but, oh, the great field that lies only partly developed, the homes of the children of God!

I SHALL RELATE an experience that you can interpret perhaps as well or better than I can. When Elder D. E. Tucker and I began our ministry in New Zealand, that little country of the southern seas about as far on the other side of the equator as we are here north of it, where the warm wind comes from the north and cold from the south, we learned of a young priest in our church who had come from Australia to New Zealand and had developed an interest on the part of a young man who asked for and received baptism. There was no one at that time in New Zealand who had the ministerial right to confirm the young man in the church.

Two or three years went by. When Brother Tucker and I arrived on the scene, we inquired where the young man might be. Some said he might have gone home, which meant England; others replied that he might have gone to Australia; or he might still be in New Zealand. No one knew. Brother Tucker and I took a trip to Invercargill, the most southern city of the dominion, preached a few times along the way, made inquiry for the unconfirmed young man, and finally reached this city of about one hundred thousand. In the evening, upon returning to where we were lodging at the edge of the city, I asked Brother Tucker if he would like to go down into the city and see what was going on. "No," he said, "we have been trudging around a good deal." He was older than I and had become more tired. In the city, through the day, we had inquired at the post office for the address of the young man who had been baptized, and examined the city and the telephone directories; our inquiries brought no favorable result.

Being a young man, I did not care to sit in the house all evening. In walking down the main street, I listened for a few minutes to the Salvation Army. There was a light drizzling rain. I went farther on the street and listened to the Christadelphians, teaching the soul sleeping theory—that one is unconscious after death. As I went along the street, in looking up a side street, I saw a torch flickering about a third of a block away, indicating to me that likely there were worshipers there. Upon reaching them, I found five or six on the pavement, and there was one man standing on the sidewalk back of me, close to a public building, I thought to protect himself from the dampness. I stood by the curbing, and after listening a minute or two, I began to wonder if the man belonged to these people, or if he were just standing where anyone coming along would be more inclined to stop and listen.

I edged over to him and asked, "Who are these people?" He said, "The Plymouth Brethren." I asked, "What do they believe?" He went on to tell me. I said, "I listened to the Salvation Army over on the main street and they taught so and so, and then on down a little farther, to the Christadelphians, and they taught their way; now you say these people teach as you have said. Which one of them is right?" He looked at me and said, "I met some people a few years ago that I believe are right." I asked, "Who?" He said, "The Latter Day Saints." I said, "The Utah Mormons from Salt Lake City?" "No," he said, "there are two bodies of Latter Day Saints." I asked, "Is your name Gale?" "Y-y-yes," he answered. I said, "You were baptized two or three years ago in Kaitangata?" "Yes," he answered. And I said, "You were never confirmed, were you?" He said, "That's right."

There was the man we had been trying to find. He told me that he lived out in the country and was just about ready to leave when I spoke to him. I was not conscious of being spiritually prompted to go down into the city that evening. I just thought, as any young man might think, that I would like to go see how a foreign city looked on a Saturday night; and when I saw the light flickering up on the side street, I was not conscious of any spiritual leading whatever, but thought I would go and learn what was being taught. When I stood there and thought of the man back of me, I thought here may be an opportunity to give the man, whether he was one of the religionists on the street or not, possibly a larger insight into some phase of Christianity. He was later confirmed in the church.

HERE IS AN EXAMPLE of loyalty. When I was on my way home from Australia to America in 1906, a visitor came one day to the home of the family of Saints in Melbourne where I was. I learned that he was from Perth, West Australia. When he learned who I was, he said that he knew some people in West Australia he thought were Latter Day Saints or had some kind of connection with the church. I tried to be polite and listen, but I was not planning to visit that family. I was on my way home, after four years absence, and I was not planning missionary work at that moment. When he said if I would like the name and address, he would give it to me, I took out an envelope and wrote down the address.

After being in Perth two or three weeks while writing one day I saw the address that had been given to me, and I thought, "Oh, well, maybe those folks do not belong to the church anyway." The next day however I inquired where the address was and learned it was out to the edge of Perth, a large city. I concluded at least it would be a nice walk, possibly into the countryside, and so I went. Upon inquiry I was directed to a rather large substantial house.

I went to the door and knocked. A middle-aged woman responded and I told her who I was. I said that her name had been given to me and that her folks probably had some relation to the church. She eyed me from head to foot and then from foot to head, and finally said, "Well, it is like this. I was baptized in England into a church soon after I was eight years of age, and then left with my father almost immediately for Australia and have lived here ever since." I asked, "Do you know whether or not you were baptized by an elder of the Mormon Church in Salt Lake City which believes in polygamy?" She said, "As a child I never heard anything about that and certainly do not believe it." I invited her to our little Communion service on Sunday at the home of an elder.

The day after the service I was to

Question Time

Question:

In view of our exceptional consistency with Scripture and later revelation, how can we explain our refusal to send our men two by two and without "scrip"?
Iowa R. R.

Answer:

A safe rule of scriptural interpretation is to know the conditions under which a statement was made, the person to whom it was made, and the reasons why it was made. Commandments frequently vary according to the conditions and needs of men.

When Jesus instructed the Twelve and Seventy not to take purse or scrip, he was instructing them for a brief journey over a limited area—the area in which he himself was later to minister (Luke 10: 1). They were not to go in the ways of the Gentiles, nor enter into any city of the Samaritans (Matthew 10: 5). They would be traveling in a mild climate among people of the same race and religion, who in the majority of cases would be friendly. The people among whom they labored could be expected to feed them, clothe them, and give them money—hence there was no need for purse, in which to carry money, or "scrip", a leather bag in which to carry food and extra small articles of clothing.

When the disciples were given worldwide commission, this instruction was rescinded (Luke 22: 36). Purse and scrip, and even a sword for defense, were now permitted. It was never intended that men should not carry purse or scrip or shoes or two coats when traveling for long distances, for a long time, among unfriendly people, or in rigorous climates where extra clothing might be necessary. The first command was a test of their faith and of God's power; the rescinding of it a concession to changed conditions.

Doctrine and Covenants 83: 15 repeats the prohibition against taking purse or scrip; but this commandment should be analyzed in the light of other revelations bearing on the same subject. Section 42: 19 commands that priests, teachers, elders, and high priests shall have their stewardship and are to have their families supported out of the property which is consecrated to the bishop . . . or they are to receive a just remuneration for all their services. Section 23: 7 is addressed specifically to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, who are to devote all their time to Zion, and who are to have no strength in temporal labors, which are not their calling (see paragraph 4). When the elders who had attended the first conference in Zion were ready to return to the East, Section 60: 3 commanded Bishop Partridge to supply them with money for the journey. One of the duties of the bishop, according to 72: 3, is to "take an account of the elders . . . and to administer to their wants." If the elders receive enough from the people among whom they labor to repay this money, it should be repaid; if not, the elder's accounting of how the money was spent cancels his debt to the bishop.

In keeping with this law our men do go out without purse or scrip. They receive no regular salary. Their families are provided for at home according to the instruction of 42: 19 and 75: 4, 5. They are fed, clothed, and given money by the people among whom they labor, but they may call on the bishop for help if they do not receive sufficient to meet their obligations, according to the law of Doctrine and Covenants 60: 3 and 72: 3.

The "two by two" rule was enunciated in Mark 6: 7 and Luke 10: 1, and observed by Jesus himself in Mark 11: 1 and Mark 14: 11. A study of the commands to go "two by two" contained in the Doctrine and Covenants seems to indicate that this was not a universal principle but one to be applied under certain conditions. Doctrine and Covenants 42: 2 indicates that this going forth "two by two" was "for a little season." Doctrine and Covenants 52: 3 has specific application to the elders who were traveling through hostile, unsettled wilderness to meet in the first conference in Zion. Doctrine and Covenants 60: 3 and 61: 6 apply specifically to those same elders as they returned from that conference. Doctrine and Covenants 115: 1 seems to imply that the rule shall be followed when elders are sent to foreign nations. When elders, Apostles, or Seventies are working in an area where there are organized branches, both the spirit and the letter of the law are kept when these men work in companionship and co-operation with local ministry, "that they may be a help and support to each other in their ministry." When sending men into new territory, it has been and still is the policy of the church to send them two by two.

Question:

Having come from another church I cannot talk enough about our authoritative priesthood, but I feel that all of us should know more about how our young men go under appointment as I am sure it is not the same with other churches. How do they?

Iowa

R. R.

Answer:

There are approximately 9,000 ordained men in our church, all of whom have presumably been "called of God as was Aaron," that is, through the prophetic voice of the pastor or other presiding officer and then ordained by the laying on of hands by one having authority. Only about 175 of these ordained men, including the major officers of the church, are under General Church appointment.

Calling and ordaining men to priesthood is a matter for revelation. Assigning priesthood to specific tasks and fields of labor is not, however, a matter for revelation, but a matter of administrative procedure, which of course should be carried out under the spirit of wisdom and inspiration. Even the Apostles, who are called by revelation, are assigned to their fields by administrative procedure.

Men are chosen for General Church appointment when they have shown aptitude for some type of church work, when their spiritual, educational, and personality qualifications have been checked and approved, when their health and the health of their family are deemed good enough so that they will not become a liability to the church, and when their financial status is such that they can accept appointment without jeopardizing the payment of their outstanding debts or obligations. In all this the spirit of wisdom should prevail.

The Joint Council—composed of the First Presidency (the spiritual administrators of the church), the Council of Twelve (the missionary administrators), and the Presiding Bishopric (the financial administrators)—considers these qualifications in light of the need for workers and the financial ability of the church to assume further obligations to new appointees. Appointment is then made by this body—often for a probationary or trial period before the appointment becomes permanent. Appointments are subject to the approval of General Conference.

Briefs

Young People Attend Youth Camp

MADISON, WISCONSIN.—On the evening of June 29, the opening of the Chetek Reunion, Brother Frederick S. Moore was ordained a high priest by Apostle D. O. Chesworth, High Priest Frank Mussell, and Bishop Theodore Beck.

From July 27 to August 3, Evangelist Ray Whiting held services and visited in the homes of the Saints.

On August 3 a confirmation service was held for Marie Wirth who was baptized at Chetek Reunion. A charge was given to the candidate and members by Elder Robert H. Brigham. She was confirmed by Evangelist Ray Whiting and the pastor, High Priest Fred Moore.

Elder Deam Ferris and family have moved to Madison from Lamoni, Iowa. Brother Ferris will attend the University of Wisconsin this coming year.

Elder and Mrs. Edwin Browne and family of Lawrence, Kansas, worshiped with the congregation on August 10. Brother Browne gave the morning sermon. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Beck have moved to Madison from Trenton, New Jersey.

An ice cream social was held on the lawn of Sister Zella Allen on July 19 by the Zion's League and the women's department. The proceeds went to the building fund.

Twelve young people from the branch attended the youth camp at Chetek, August 3-10.

The branch business meeting was held August 13. High Priest Fred Moore was elected pastor. He chose for his counselors Elders Robert H. Brigham and Myron M. Curry. Other officers are church school director, Myron Curry; assistant church school director, Mabel Curry; women's leader and primary supervisor, Eva Moore; adult supervisor, Elder Harley Morris; young people's supervisor, Merle Ferris; treasurer, Elder Robert Brigham; music director, Elder Deam Ferris; secretary, Margaret Bender; recorder, Esther Brigham; publicity agent, Leda Colbert; auditing committee, Carl Wirth, Leah Miller, Margaret Bender; building committee, Fred Moore, Robert Brigham, Harley Morris, Myron Curry, Bernie Taylor; librarian, Margaret Morris. Clara Sweeney was elected solicitor, and Leda Colbert was sustained as book steward.—Reported by LEDA COLBERT

Baptisms Held in Group

HULETT, WYOMING.—On July 29, 1951, under the supervision of Seventy E. Y. Hunker, a church school was organized in this community and newly ordained Priest Merlin O'Haver was appointed pastor.

In late September, Brother Hunker visited the group again at which time W. A. Long was baptized and confirmed by him.

Regular meetings of the church school were held each Sunday afternoon throughout the year. They were first held in the home of Sister Gertrude Mahoney and later in a hall rented for this purpose.

During the winter months the group was visited by Elder Dale Larsen and Priest Fred Weddle.

During the latter part of March, Patriarch A. W. Lundeen stopped to visit on his way from his home in Washington en route to General Conference. He was accompanied by his wife. Six members of the group attended the Conference. On April 20, Brother Lundeen visited the group again, and nine candidates were baptized. Brother Lundeen performed the baptisms and in the afternoon he and Elder E. C. Judson of Wheatland, Wyoming, confirmed the candidates. The adults who were baptized were Mr. and Mrs. Dean Jolley, Gale Jolley, and Gloria Neilsen. The five children were Ted and Jerry Waugh, Joan and Darlene Mahoney, and Mary Valora Long.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson visited the group in June. He presided over the reunion at Black Hills July 6-13. Seventy Luther Troyer and Evangelist A. W. Lundeen assisted Brother Hanson. On July 20, two other candidates were baptized. They were George O'Haver, father of the pastor, and Delores Wood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wood. These candidates were baptized by Brother O'Haver and confirmed by Elder Dale Larsen of Deadwood, South Dakota, and Elder George Mefferd of Rapid City, South Dakota.—Reported by W. A. LONG

Children Present Program

BURBANK, CALIFORNIA.—The Zion's League, under the direction of Elder Willard Bettis and his wife, held a candlelight Communion service on Good Friday. Brother Bettis had the tables arranged in the form of a cross. The priesthood sat at the top of the cross and the young people were placed at the bottom. Brother Bettis was the speaker. The Zion's League from Sherman Oaks attended the meeting with the result that one of their girls was baptized the following Sunday.

The annual Restoration dinner was given at the church on April 18. This was sponsored by the women's department.

On May 4, Gregory Dragicevich was baptized by Elder Willard Bettis and confirmed the same day by Brother Bettis and Elder Robert Wilms.

On May 6, a luncheon was held in the home of Sister Gwen Ish and was sponsored by the Foothill's Circle. Guests were the women of the Valley Circle, Sister Frances Davis, Sister Earla Inasley, and Sister Hazel Gregg. All past presidents were honored and given corsages made by Sister Ruth Dunster. Several who have moved away sent regrets that they were unable to attend. These letters were read by Sister Minnette Kirkpatrick. Sister Davis spoke about her mother, Sister Marietta Walker, and showed some of her handwork. Sister Inasley told of her mother, Sister Vida Smith, and Sister Gregg spoke of her grandmother, Sister Emma Burton.

The children presented the Children's Day program. The setting was a flower garden with flowers donated by the Saints. Frances Rowlett was baptized on this day by Elder Robert Wilms. She was confirmed the same day by Elder C. H. Strader and Elder E. E. Spencer.

A men's club was organized June 24 at the home of Elder E. E. Spencer. A birthday card shower was given Brother Spencer who became ill a few days before.

Nine children and three adults from the branch attended the children's camp. Elder Robert Wilms was in charge of the camp. Sister Opal Baird was camp nurse, and Sister Gwen Ish was a counselor and teacher.

Joyce Hill was baptized July 20 by Elder Bettis. She was confirmed by Brother Bettis and Elder C. H. Strader.

A linen shower was given on August 14 for Sister Eleanor Ziech at the home of Sister Minnette Kirkpatrick. There were thirty women from the branch in attendance.—Reported by H. R. ROWLETT

Church Has New Classrooms

FAYETTE CITY, PENNSYLVANIA.—The picture of the baptism of Christ by John was the center of the flower and fern embankment which served as the worship center for the baptism service held June 29 at the morning hour.

Elder Arthur Warner, pastor, and Priest Thomas Morgan officiated. The five candidates baptized were Dale Warner, Richard Wagner, Mrs. Georgia Swearer, Patricia and Ronald Delbarre.

The confirmation service was held July 6 prior to the Communion service. Elders B. F. Warner, Sr., Samuel Winship, and Arthur Warner participated.

These persons were the first to be baptized in the newly installed font which is a part of the new addition of six classrooms which has

President Smith at Reunion

BRITISH ISLES MISSION.—Seldom, if ever, has a reunion in the British Isles been so full of promise and anticipated with such enthusiasm as that held at Enfield August 1-5, 1952, when President Israel A. Smith was present. This was Brother Smith's first visit to England, and his coming brought rich ministry to the Saints and was the source of much joy and encouragement.

President Smith was accompanied by Bishop Henry L. Livingston and Apostle Arthur A. Oakman. Also with the group for the first time in reunion experience was the new mission president, Donald V. Lents, and his family.

In harmony with the General Church, our theme was "We Accept Our Stewardship," and each class period and sermon dealt with some aspect of the theme.

The reunion was opened by Brother Lents on Friday evening at 7:00 p.m. He introduced President Smith, Bishop Livingston, and Apostle Oakman, and each in turn replied with words of encouragement. This was followed by an appreciation of the painting, "Christ and the Rich Young Man," given by Sister Violet Worth, who interpreted the stewardship lesson taught by the Master himself.

On Saturday morning at nine o'clock a prayer and fellowship service was held, and concluded with the affirmation of President Smith to "be more than ever determined, under the blessings of God, to do the best we could." Bishop Livingston taught a general class on the basic qualities required of a good steward. In the evening Brother Lents spoke on "Stewardship of Time, of Work, of Talents, of Self, and of Study."

Sunday services began at 10:00 a.m. with a Communion service, presided over by President Smith, in which the theme was "I Accept My Stewardship." In his remarks, Apostle Oakman said that the Sacrament tells us that God loves men to the utmost. At 3:00 p.m. Bishop Livingston was the speaker. He reminded the Saints that if we will only do the will of God, his kingdom will be inevitable. President Smith gave the address at the evening service and brought to us a realization of the great trust which is ours in the stewardship of the Three Standard Books of the church. He gave some interesting facts on the claims and place of this sacred literature in the program of the church and his testimony of their validity confirmed the faith of many persons.

Monday's activities began with a baptismal service at 8:30 a.m. when Elder T. E. Worth baptized Christine Archer of Liverpool, and Aubrey Evans of Skewen, South Wales. A prayer and fellowship service was held under the leadership of Apostle Oakman, following which Bishop Livingston continued his teaching, emphasizing that character is indispensable to successful stewardship. On Monday evening Apostle Oakman gave an address on "The Stewardship of Self."

Tuesday was the final day of reunion. Bishop Livingston reported on the status and growth of the church institutions in and around the Center Place. A further season of praise and testimony was held, following which President Smith gave the closing address. In it he reminded all of the covenant they had made with the Lord and had so many times re-affirmed and also of the good intentions expressed in the acceptance of their stewardship. He said the best way to demonstrate these intentions is to bring to the altar flowers of service. The Saints moved to the front of the Enfield church for a brief service of dedication when President Smith laid a stone bearing his name and commemorating his visit to England, and Patriarch John W. Worth offered a dedicatory prayer.

Each morning of reunion two classes were provided for the children by Vera Jones and Joyce Taylor, and at the close of each day an evensong was led by Brother Lents for the young people.

In addition to the brethren already mentioned from headquarters present were Evangelist and Sister Swain of Australia, who are en route for home from General Conference, and Sister Poole and her daughter, Valda, who recently graduated from Graceland College and who will sail with the Swains for Australia on September 2.—Reported by VIOLET WORTH

Northwest Reunion Held

SILVER LAKE, WASHINGTON.—About 1,500 Saints and friends from the Seattle-Spokane-British Columbia Districts met at the campgrounds at Silver Lake August 1-10 for the 1952 reunion. The theme, "Spiritual Growth Through Stewardship," was explored and developed by all departments and groups under the leadership of E. J. Gleazer, apostle-in-charge of the Pacific Slopes Mission. Guest speakers were W. Wallace Smith of the First Presidency and Seventy George Njeim, assigned to the Northwest.

Administrative details were handled by Granville Swenson, president of Seattle District, with counsel of Sam Clark, British Columbia district president, and Carl Hammil, Spokane district president. Brother Gleazer directed the spiritual ministry during the entire reunion.

Preaching assignments were filled principally by Brothers Smith, Njeim, and Gleazer, assisted by Brothers Swenson and Koury.

An average attendance of forty-five in the men's class heard President W. W. Smith lead discussions of Evan Fry's specially prepared reunion and institute pamphlet, "Spiritual Growth Through Stewardship."

The women were led in six morning and four afternoon classes in a discussion of the pamphlet, "Women's Stewardship Responsibilities," by Sister Wallace Smith.

The young people were under the guidance of Vern Webb and Ray Sowers. Youth fellowship services were held on Sunday, Tuesday, and Friday mornings.

The senior high classes were led by Vern Webb in discussions of the responsibilities and problems of youth stewardships. Discussions on proving their beliefs in divine revelations and in the Book of Mormon from Bible Scriptures were led by George Njeim.

The junior high under the leadership of Aleah Koury participated in several successful prayer meetings and enjoyed handcraft, such as braiding and woodworking.

Reunion music was developed by Ray Sowers. The choir directed by Grace Nichols provided a background for most of the meetings as did solos and other special numbers. The junior choir made up of the primary choir supervised by Donna Stearns and Betty Stewart and the Harmony Choir directed by Sister Njeim and Ray Sowers provided special music at Friday evensong. The orchestra under the direction of Ray Sowers practiced after dinner for two special numbers given at the Saturday evensong musical period. The band (the orchestral brass section) provided music for several of the evensongs.

Members of Branch Attend Reunion

PONCA CITY, OKLAHOMA.—Four young people attended the youth camp. They were Mary Newman, Helen Miller, Robert Henderson, and Luella Hutchinson. On the Sunday following their return from the camp, the young people presented a program at the eleven o'clock hour. Each one reported on camp activities.

Evangelist H. I. Velt conducted a series of meetings April 27-May 4. His services included visiting all the families and giving several patriarchal blessings.

On January 27 the Zion's League district council met with the Ponca City League and presented the eleven o'clock worship.

On July 29 the mission business meeting was held. District President Victor J. Witte presided. The following officers were elected: Glenn C. Limb, pastor; O. E. Pender and O. E. Adair, counselors; Mrs. Cecil Jackson, secretary; W. T. Bozarth, treasurer and young people's supervisor; Mrs. Graham S. Hart, reporter; Mrs. Glenn C. Limb, children's supervisor and music director; Graham S. Hart, director of religious education and auditor; Paul Storm, second member of auditing committee; Mrs. Robert J. Cavanaugh, women's leader; Robert J. Cavanaugh, M. A. Etzenhouser, W. T. Bozarth, Paul Storm, Mrs. Fred Andrus, finance committee; Mrs. Noah Padget, flower chairman; and M. A. Etzenhouser, appointed recorder. Those sustained were Paul Storm, historian; Robert Cavanaugh, book steward; and Mrs. Graham S. Hart, solicitor. Elder Jess Davis, Skiatook, Oklahoma, district director of religious education, accompanied the presiding officer and assisted by giving the invocation.

The following attended the Oklahoma reunion which was held in August: Mr. and Mrs. Glenn C. Limb, Mrs. John Hutchinson and daughters Luella and Loretta, Mrs. Lula Jackson, Mrs. W. A. Newman, Mr. and Mrs. Noah Padget, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Cavanaugh and children Toni and Bobby, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Storm and children Dorothy, Mildred, and George, and Mr. and Mrs. Graham S. Hart.

Toni Adair was baptized by the pastor and confirmed by Elders O. B. Adair, her grandfather, and Glenn C. Limb, on July 27.

Elder Glenn Limb baptized George Storm on his eighth birthday, August 14, at the Oklahoma reunion.—Reported by MRS. GRAHAM S. HART leave on the steamer for home. She rose in the meeting, tears wetting her cheeks, and said that for forty years she had lived in West Australia and in that time had often prayed that she might hear again the gospel that had appealed to her as a child. She said that she took an active part in one of the churches in the city and had been asked to formally cast her lot with that church, but somehow she felt it was not the thing to do.

After my departure from Australia, I visited England and some other countries on the way. About a month or two after arriving home I received a letter from this sister telling me that her husband had united with the church. It wasn't long before she wrote that some of the sons, and then later grandchildren had been baptized. One of her sons served as pastor of the church at Wallsend, New South Wales, where George Lewis held his membership.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Elder and Mrs. J. D. Curtis of Colorado Springs, Colorado, observed their golden wedding anniversary on June 25 by holding open house at their home from two until four in the afternoon. They were married in Colorado Springs on June 25, 1902, by Evangelist J. F. Curtis. Three of their five children are still living and were able to be present for the anniversary observance; they are Russell Curtis of Colorado Springs, Mrs. Vida Solberg and Mrs. Louise Solberg of Peyton, Colorado. There are seventeen grandchildren also.

Elder Curtis began his ministry at the age of nineteen and served many years in the field as a Seventy. At present he is pastor of the branch in Colorado Springs.

Mission Accomplished

A poignant chapter in modern church history

By Biloine Whiting Young

THE RAIN CLOUDS which had threatened during the morning were gone, and the sun shone with a tropical intensity on the lake. The volcanoes of Guatemala burned against the sky like the white sails of the boat which lingered on the opposite shore of the lake. Seated on a blanket by the edge of the water were the six people who had come to witness the baptism of José Aranda, the first Guatemalan to become a member of Christ's church since the days when Alma led his followers into the same wilderness to baptize them. Born in Spain, educated in the universities of France, a naturalized citizen of Guatemala, José Aranda was led into the waters of Lake Amatitlan by a young man who three years ago had no church, and fifteen years ago was a Roman Catholic.

The baptism of José did not begin at the shore of Lake Amatitlan. To be accurate one should say that it began with the angel who visited Joseph Smith, or with the angel who visited Mary, or the angel who held the coals of fire to the lips of Isaiah. But for the four of us in Guatemala, the baptism of José began with a Communion service July 27. July 27 was the first Sunday since we had begun holding discussions in January that José was not with us. The regularity of his attendance and the perception he showed by his questions had convinced us of his interest. Points of doctrine which had at first seemed strange and unreasonable to him had become clear, and our explanations, along with the extensive reading he had done during the weeks between our meetings, had convinced him of the truth of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint message. Nothing was left for us to do except baptize him. And that we could not do. Twice my husband had visited José to discuss baptism, and though the two men had talked far into the night, the point of making a decision was never reached. Baptism was so close that the words seemed almost upon his lips, but week after week, they were never spoken. And so on Sunday, July 27, the first time that José could not be with us, we decided to hold a Communion service. In a way we felt that we had gone as far as we could go with our discussions, our logic, our intensely reasonable presentations. If José were to be baptized we must have help.

A COMMUNION SERVICE for four people is necessarily simple. While Priest Lloyd Hurshman arranged an altar, Jean and I brought bread and wine for the sacrament. Then the four of us sat down together to select the hymns and outline the order of the service. Lloyd was to offer the opening prayer, George would give the talk, each of them would offer one of the prayers over the emblems, and Lloyd would serve them. A hymn and a prayer by Lloyd would close our service. The order was simple and unpretentious, but it had immensity. It had the immensity of need, and the urgency of the first Communion service we had held in January when we were all so frightened of the work we were soon to begin. As we sat, knee to knee, before our altar, holding the lighted candles to sing the hymns, we no longer felt like four insignificant young people who were presuming too much to try to convince a man of the quality of José. Rather we felt ourselves Saints commissioned of God to do what we felt again to be his will. Our elder, George, sensed the influence which was touching us all, for at the close of Lloyd's prayer, he asked us to stand and clasp hands while he offered a second prayer—a prayer of thankfulness for the blessing and strength we had received so promptly.

IN THE WEEK FOLLOWING the Communion service, we had a visitor. He was Steve Robinson, a priest from Des Moines, Iowa, who was spending his summer vacation in the countries south of the border. Steve met José, immediately shared our feeling about him, and entered into our concern as if he had shared every step since January. While Steve was with us, we decided to hold a prayer service. José had never attended such a service and, perhaps because of him, we entered it with some apprehension. How could five people, never loquacious in prayer and testimony meetings at home, profitably use a whole hour's time? The prayers justified our fears. They were all short and somehow superficial. We were trying, but nothing was happening. We were only people using words without putting meaning behind them. After the five prayers, George rather desperately suggested we offer our testimonies. I was casting around in my mind for an idea upon which to focus my thoughts, and finding absolutely nothing, when Steve broke the silence. He bore a long testimony, telling us of his early years in the church when, although he respected his father's devotion, it wasn't enough to convince him. He told of his determination to test God, and of how he ended up by testing himself. It was the testimony of a sixteen-year-old boy, but it closed on the note of a priest of the church. That testimony changed the meeting. Steve opened the door for all of us, and suddenly, from being empty, we found we had too much to say. Our service lasted for an hour and a half, and then we closed it only to enable José to catch the last bus for his home. Something was happening. The eight months were moving toward a climax—a climax which we could control if we would. Lloyd, George, and Steve walked with José to his bus. On the way back to the house George made the suggestion which, we believe, influenced greatly the baptism of José. He suggested that the three priesthood members meet together for prayer. Lloyd followed up the idea by suggesting they begin right where they were. An empty field lies across the road from the Hurshman home. Without even coming into the house where Jean and I were waiting, the three fellows walked into an open space in the field and began their second prayer service of the evening. George prayed first, naming the two objectives for the prayers—first, was this the time to approach José on the subject of baptism; and second, if so, how were they to do it? When George had finished his prayer Steve prayed. Then Lloyd. At the moment of Lloyd's "amen" the moon, which had been behind the clouds, broke forth and encircled the three young men in a burst of light. For thirty seconds they stood without moving, gazing up at what appeared to be an omen, if not of success, at least of approbation on their efforts.

THE PRAYERS in the field brought them together, as brothers, made them partners in a concerted spiritual effort, but did not give them an answer to their two specific questions. Before leaving the field, they agreed to meet again on the coming Wednesday night.

It was after 8:30 when the three young men shut themselves up in the Hurshman study. Since they had come directly from work they began their session with a discussion to clarify the objectives for the meeting. Were they to see José again about baptism, and if so, how were they to do it? Before offering their prayers, George made a singular comment. "Something is happening to help us," he said. "It isn't here. It's taking place somewhere else."

"A charge to keep I have, a God to glorify." They sang the hymn through, sitting in a semicircle to sing from the same book. Then, still remaining seated, George began to pray. He asked for guidance—for guidance in an intellectual way, but also for spiritual guidance. Reassurance, he said, was needed to fortify them all. Steve prayed next, asking for the ability to sublimate themselves to the spiritual blessing they wanted to receive. Lloyd's prayer followed, again asking that they might be receptive to the will of God.

"Rise up, O men of God, have done with lesser things." The second line of the hymn seemed to have special meaning for them and provided the keynote for the second round of prayers. Before praying, George told the other two that he felt the guidance they were praying for would not come through him, but through one of the others. After George, Steve prayed. Then Lloyd.

During the first five prayers Lloyd had been feeling himself apart from the rest, critical and unresponsive, and in his desire for humility, he knelt by his chair to offer his prayer. The hymn "Consecration" followed, with another prayer by George. Steve, who had been sharing some of Lloyd's feeling of futility, suggested that perhaps he was the one who was the obstructionist, who seemed to be out of tune with the rest. His feeling of frustration was so great that he started to leave the room when Lloyd, who had been sitting apart from the others, stopped him.

"Don't go, Steve, it's not you," he said. "I feel exactly the same way."

Only George was not discouraged. Some of his hope was transferred to the others, for instead of leaving the study, they talked for over an hour, sharing experiences and advice with one another. When they parted after midnight, they agreed to meet again on the following evening. Thursday's meeting opened with a brief statement of their objectives by George. They sang a hymn and offered their opening round of prayers—first George, then Steve, then Lloyd. In the discussion following the prayers, George turned to Lloyd to tell him that he was to be the person through whom their help was to come. Lloyd could only stare back at him in unbelief. His feeling of futility, of uselessness seemed as great as before. His prayers were only words. If he was to be an instrument in God's hands, he was surely unconscious of it. His dismay was shared by Steve to the extent that only George offered a prayer in their next round. Again they sang, and again George prayed, this time followed by Steve. Then Lloyd offered his prayer, asking in particular, that they should be able to use their intelligence to recognize the answer to prayer when it came. That statement, simple though it was, meant something to both George and Steve—especially to George, for that day he had received a letter from Ray Whiting containing a sermon outline. It was the first sermon outline he had ever sent. It listed Old Testament prophecies which had been fulfilled in the church and ended on a definite note of decision. Anyone hearing the sermon would have to say to himself,

Picture by Steve Robinson

"If these things are true, then I must do something about it." After George's telling them of the letter, Lloyd testified to a feeling of assurance that they should visit José. The letter, they decided, would be the method of approach.

THE FOLLOWING SUNDAY at 4:00 they gathered in José's sun parlor. George gave the sermon as a talk, ending with a clear invitation for him to join with them in the work of the church. José was silent for a long time while they waited for his answer. When it came, it was neither a yes or no, but expressed the fears he felt about organizations. Those he had belonged to, he said, had limited his freedom. He looked to George for an answer, but George was lacking. He felt, he said later, completely talked out; he was empty. It was Lloyd who stepped into the silence, assisted by Steve. Lloyd's answer that the important thing was not so much the organization but the functioning of the church which leads men toward more and more freedom seemed to be a completely new idea to José. He seemed extremely impressed. Lloyd said afterward he had never in his life spoken with such conviction and knowledge that what he was saying was reaching into the heart of another person. When he finished José remained silent again. The tension grew in the room as the three young men waited to hear what he would say. José took a breath to speak—and in that moment the door opened, and Mrs. Aranda came in the room to announce tea. The moment was past. There had been no decision. The only indication of José's feelings came when they left. Instead of saying good-by at the door, he walked with them almost ten blocks before he finally returned to his home.

On Tuesday the three went back. George again asked José to join the church. This time there was no silence. In a low voice he said, "I can no longer see a reason why I should not join with you." The decision had been stated negatively, so for a moment they seemed not to understand. Then, impulsively, George grasped José's hand and, in a few words, tried to tell him what this decision would mean in his life. Lloyd followed, and then Steve. The small sun-room with the French prints on the wall seemed crowded with their feelings as they all tried to talk at once and were all saying the same thing. A day was set for the baptism, and they left.

PERHAPS ALL BAPTISMAL SERVICES take the same amount of preparation. We don't know, we had never planned one before. While Lloyd and George were in school, or at Scout meetings, or broadcasting the news, Jean and Steve and I experimented with orders of service. We sang our way through two hymnals hunting for appropriate texts and melodies suitable for five voices. We decided to print programs, and so had to search through the Scriptures for quotations for the cover. George had to buy clothes for the baptism; José must be visited after our 7:30 newscast to be instructed in the mechanics of immersion; and finally, since none of the three men had ever baptized anyone before, they took the Priesthood Manual and their swimming trunks to the university pool to learn.

Sunday, August 24, 1952, dawned grey and cloudy. August in Central America is the middle of the rainy season, and we were apprehensive about the weather. All morning while Lloyd, George, and Steve arranged chairs for the confirmation and Jean and I prepared the food for the dinner, we watched for the rain to come. When it hadn't rained by 1:00 we were encouraged, and when it was still dry at 3:00 when we met for the eighteen-mile drive to the lake, we stopped worrying about the weather. Our driver was Dr. Merrill Hutchins, our friend and pastor of the Union Church of Guatemala. Packing the seven of us into his car, he began the descent to the lake, while we watched the sun grow brighter and brighter until even the rain which had been falling on the mountains around us seemed to evaporate, and the air became as clear as on a night in December. The shore of the lake was green and deserted except for three impassive but friendly Indians who watched us from the top of a hill. Lloyd, who had been wearing trunks under his clothes, waded into the water to test the bottom, while Steve assumed the duties of a deacon and spread the blankets for us to sit on. When everything was ready, and the volcanic rocks, which float on the surface of Amatitlan, had been pushed aside, Jean started the opening hymn.

"How gentle God's command, how kind his precepts are . . ." The air was so still that the hymn seemed to linger over the eight people seated on the blanket.

"His bounty will provide; his Saints securely dwell. That hand which bears creation up will guard his children well."

"You, José, are the first to be baptized into Christ's church in this land since the days of the Book of Mormon." Steve, the sixteen-year-old priest from Iowa gazed solemnly down on José. "The covenant you are about to make with God is an eternal one, and by the symbolism of baptism you are to covenant yourself to a new way of life. You are to enter both death and birth, in a physical symbol and in spiritual reality."

"There's an old, old path, and the sun shines through . . ." The hymn, first heard in Lamoni, Iowa, ushered George and José into the ancient volcanic lake. "'Tis an old, old path, shadowed vales between, yet I fearless walk with the Nazarene . . ."

George's voice was clear over the still water. "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ; I baptize you . . ."

For a moment we on the shore were too overcome by the immensity of what we had witnessed to pick up our cue. Then Jean began to sing.

"It may not be on the mountain's top, or over the stormy sea; it may not be at the battle's front, my Lord will have need of me." Mrs. Aranda leaned forward to touch my arm. "Qué bonitas son estas palabras," she said, pointing to the line, "I'll be what you want me to be."

The closing prayer pointed out that only God knew the real significance of what had just taken place by the lake and re-emphasized the mere instrumentality of men. As Lloyd stood before us pronouncing the benediction, a breeze sprang up, filling the sails of the boat and sweeping it toward us like white wings crossing the lake.

THE HURSHMAN LIVING ROOM held the cool remoteness of a church. The late afternoon sun, filtering through the closed drapes, shed a mellow light over the leather chairs. A single bowl of red roses rested beside a squat Indian figure on the mantle. The spirit of the service was in the room, touching each of us, so without rising from his chair, Lloyd began the confirmation talk.

"I once stood on a high place," he said, "and looked across a broad valley toward a blue lake. The lake was protected by strong volcanoes, symbols of the powerful forces at work in our universe. Sometime later, after meeting the struggles of life, I turned again toward the high place but found the vision blotted out by rolling mists. Yet my soul could see, and I was happy because I knew what lay beyond. Today, José, you stand on a high place of baptism. I testify to you that when the mists of daily life swirl over the high objectives you have glimpsed in this church the Spirit of God will come to you with the assurance that God still is, that he is moving in the lives of men, that he has concern for his church, and that he will be with you until the end of your life."

"Behold our humble brother, Lord, on whom we lay our hands . . ." As Jean and I began the third verse of the hymn, George rose from his seat to lead José to the chair reserved for the confirmation. His white hands rested lightly on the dark wavy hair as he began to pray.

"José Aranda, I place my hands on thy head to confirm thee a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. . . . Thou art capable of contributing more to the work of Christ's church than perhaps any of us. . . . God has led thee to this hour, and if thou wilt but allow him, he will continue to guide and direct and help thee. . . . Dear José, I confirm thee also as a true child of God."

"Rise up, O men of God, have done with lesser things . . ." Lloyd and Jean sang the duet while George and José clasped hands for the first time as brethren in the church of Jesus Christ. "Rise up, O men of God. The church for you doth wait . . ." Mrs. Aranda's eyes were wet, as were those of the Baptist pastor of the Union Church. The eyes of the four of us met in a long moment, seeking assurance from each other that the nights of prayer, the Sundays of fasting, the days when defeat had seemed certain had actually culminated in this scene. We remembered the night we had presented the concept of a social plan of God. José had listened and completely rejected the idea. When, late that night, the fellows left in Lloyd's car to take José to his home, we were afraid he would never come back again. On the way home the car had had a flat tire, and repairing it in the tropical moonlight, they had decided to pray that José would come back to our meetings. Despite the fact that it was after 1:00 a.m. they awakened Jean and me, and the four of us knelt by our bed—we girls in pajamas and the boys in their greasy clothes—to offer four prayers for our prospect. On the following Sunday, José came back to our meetings.

We remembered the services held in Jean's hospital room after the twins were born, the meetings in the dormitory of the American School, the Spanish lessons at José's which had turned into discussions of religion. What was there, we asked ourselves, that made this single baptism among thousands such a tremendous event?

And what of José? What are his thoughts? What does a man of 39—a commercial secretary and translator in the French legation—think of his baptism by an elder of 28, of his being charged of his duties in the church by a priest of 16 and another of 22? What does he feel being the only Latin-American Latter Day Saint from the southern border of Mexico to the Tierra del Fuego at the tip of South America? Walking in his wet clothes from the waters of baptism, José had turned to George. . .

"You have done too much for me," he said. "I am not worthy of the honor of being the first to be baptized in this land. I should have been the hundredth."

 IN PRAISE OF PRACTICALLY EVERYTHING

I like to read the "public relations" books and pamphlets issued by big businesses, institutions, schools, and colleges. They think of such lovely things to say about themselves. You can depend on it that nothing unpleasant will be included. And no tiniest virtue, resource, or advantage will be forgotten. The picture of perfection will not be marred by the mention of a single fault. There is even modesty and humility, a kind of respectability and refinement, in their cultivated exaggerations. Of course, there is meticulous care not to wander beyond the truth; but in the gentle testing of the boundaries of veracity, what literary virtuosity, what deftness in the selection of every word and phrase, are manifested. Approach them in the right spirit, and you will find these books a great source of amusement and entertainment.

 SANITY

I was talking with a psychologist recently. On second thought, it would be more accurate to say that I was listening to him. He was of the opinion that some of the people are sane, some of the time, on a few subjects. Otherwise, he took a rather dim view of the human race. But the situation was not entirely hopeless. He was on the job, ready to save the world from going to ruin, and he had no lack of confidence in himself. I was comforted and reassured that as long as he is here to take care of things, disaster can be averted in our times.

 SHADES OF DAY

We do many things to control the climate in the little bits of earth that we enclose for our homes. We turn on the lights to simulate day when it is night. We draw the shades to simulate night when it is day. Perhaps it is human never to be satisfied with what comes.

Grandfather produced artificial shade by mounting rows of slats on a frame and putting them outside his windows. There the dirt that they collected was blown away by the wind or washed off by the rain, with no particular disturbance to the Victorian furniture in the house. We, the grandchildren, feel obliged to improve things, even if we make them worse, which we often do. So we bring the slats inside, mount them on strings, and call them Venetian blinds. They collect and distribute the dust inside the house, now, and we complain about them, but continue to put up with them. Call them Venetian blinds if you will—but they are still slats. When you think of it, we are funny, aren't we? And can you imagine what great-grandmother would say about our house-keeping if she would visit us now?

 WONDERS

Among all the wonders of creation, I think I am more often impressed, and more deeply influenced, by the thoughts and ideas that come out of people's minds than by anything else I see or hear. Somewhere in Proverbs is the statement, "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord," and many times we see the divine light shining in the eyes and being reflected in the words of his children.

We'd Like You To Know . . .

Barbara Peavy

BY HER OWN CONFESSION, Barbara is in love with her work. "All my life there seems to have been an overruling Providence, and everything has worked out to my best interest. God has been good to me, and I'm just as happy as a girl can be."

She is a native of Mobile, Alabama, born during the Centennial Conference. Her ability to make social adjustments may in part be due to the fact that she is the third of five children.

Her spiritual awakening grew out of her first youth camp experience at Brewton, Alabama, in 1944. She went home and became president of the Zion's League. She has been at work and a leader of some activity ever since.

After graduating from high school in 1947 she went to Graceland. Barbara gives full credit to her associations and training there for her ideals and values of the best things in life. Following Graceland she worked a year in Mobile and a few months in Kansas City at secretarial employment before coming to Herald House.

In addition to being editor of Stepping Stones, she edits the Herald columns "News and Notes" and "Briefs."

Her hobbies are creative writing, drama, and reading. She was a member of Graceland Players, the Crescent Club, Tower reporter, and Pastoral Group Assistant. She is active in the Walnut Park congregation, teaches in the junior department, and was Stake-wide League vice-president last year. Her unhappiest moment is when she has to reject a story sent in for Steps, but joy comes in the morning when she gets a good story from a new writer.

PRESIDENT SMITH RECEIVES WHITMER HEIRLOOMS

President Israel A. Smith has just returned from a visit to Springfield, Illinois, where a great-granddaughter of David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, Mrs. Helen Blankmeyer delivered to him a number of articles of personal property which belonged to Brother Whitmer. These included a small leather-bound trunk in which he kept the manuscript of the Book of Mormon for many years, an early copy of the Book of Mormon, an 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, correspondence, newspaper clippings, etc. All of this will be held in safety pending the establishment of the church museum. "Mrs. Blankmeyer presented these heirlooms on the theory that our organization would be especially interested in these things and she made a present of them to the church, for which we are deeply grateful," stated President Smith.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS IN ILLINOIS

President F. Henry Edwards was at the Centralia, Illinois, homecoming September 13 and 14. On the same trip he also preached at the Flora and Taylorville, Illinois, branches.

W. W. SMITH AT DETROIT CONFERENCE

President W. Wallace Smith was present at the annual conference of the Detroit International Stake September 14. He preached the evening sermon for the stake-wide meeting.

NEFF IN SPRING RIVER AREA

Elder Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, was in the Spring River District September 14. He preached at Joplin, Missouri, in the morning and that evening he was the speaker at the reunion grounds near Racine, Missouri, at a district service. Several of the congregations in the area meet for Sunday evening services at the grounds during the summer.

APOSTLE HOLMES AT STAKE RALLY

Apostle Reed M. Holmes met with the Kansas City Stake in a departmental rally September 14. This rally was a part of the stake conference which was held September 12 and 14, at the Central Church, under the direction of the Kansas City Stake presidency, J. D. Anderson, Herbert Lively, and Donald Graham.

CENTER STAKE YOUNG ADULT RETREAT

Two hundred and seventy young adults and their families of the congregations of the Center Stake of Zion met at Lake Doniphan September 13 and 14 for their second annual retreat. Elder Morris Jacobson, stake young adult leader, directed the retreat. Stake President Charles V. Graham spoke to the group on Saturday evening. Brother Jacobson was in charge of the Sunday morning prayer service at which Elder Vance Link was the speaker. Mrs. Pauline Gross was baptized in the lake by Elder Fred O. Davies of the stake presidency. Seventy Eugene Theys, recently returned from Europe, gave the Sunday morning sermon.

CENTER STAKE BUILDING PROGRAM BOOSTED

Charles V. Graham, Center Stake president, reports that at the September Communion service of the Liberty Street congregation over $900 was raised for their building fund. The Mt. Washington congregation held their annual fall festival and raised between $1,400 and $1,700, which will go to their building fund.

How Faith Can Help You

But Jesus said, "Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole."

—Matthew 9: 22

THE POOR WOMAN was very humble. She had been sick for twelve years, and had spent her resources in vain to obtain a cure from the crude medical practices of the time. She had almost given up hope until she heard of Jesus and how he healed the sick. In all the throng that surrounded him, however, she saw little chance of obtaining his attention, much less a healing for herself. But she had an idea—"If I may but touch the hem of his garment . . ." And she did. Jesus knew it and turned to her, making the beautiful statement, "Thy faith hath made thee whole."

It does not mean that the power of healing lay within the woman herself. It does not mean that faith as an independent principle has the power to heal. In that act of faith her soul reached out to the Son of God for help, and through the divine power she was healed. The power came from God.

WE WERE on a small excursion boat. It cost us $1.50 each for an hour's ride up the river to see the beautiful canyon walls. We started out bravely, but soon we were in the narrows where the great rocks towered awesomely high. It seemed that they could fall over and bury us alive almost any moment. Of course they had stood that way for ages, and there was little danger.

The pilot was guiding the boat full speed ahead toward a sheer rock wall. A crash seemed only a moment away. We could see no passage out, around, or through. At the last moment he turned the rudder, the boat swerved sharply to the right, and we could see a long and beautiful vista ahead. This happened several times during our trip, and we became used to it.

That experience has returned to memory many times when life has become very difficult, and there seemed to be "no way out, around, or through," as H. G. Wells put it shortly before the end of his life. He found no way because he did not have the faith to take the last turn in the river. If you have faith to take that next turn you will find the way to eternal life. It is simply a matter of proceeding on the way even when it seems closed. There is a passage that you cannot see now. It is just beyond the next turn.

YOU KNOW what it is to be worried and sick. You know the pangs of fear clutching at your heart. You have faced losses that seemed irretrievable. You have seen hope ebbing away like a fading light, and you have stood alone in absolute darkness. You searched your soul for strength to stand while pain and disappointment held possession of your mind and body. At the moment you would have sold out your existence for very little, if it had been a part of your philosophy to sell out under any circumstances. It was such a time that some, reared by other philosophies, would have considered ending it all. That was not for you. You waited for the bend in the river rather than for the crash against the rocks of fate. Then you lifted your thoughts in prayer to the Heavenly Father that you had been taught to love and trust. In spite of your trouble, you had not lost faith in him. You needed help, and he would not condemn you for asking for it.

As you prayed in faith the darkness lessened, and you began to see the way ahead by an inward light that was given to you. Your burden was not immediately removed. Your problem was not solved at once. Time and patience would be required. But you were given strength to endure, and the understanding to see a way where none had appeared before.

FAITH as an abstract principle of the gospel is one thing, and it is very important. As a source of personal help it also has great power. It may not have occurred to you that it is a tower of strength to which you can cling in times when you need help.

It is important to see the gospel in collective terms, to work for the building of Zion, and to promote the organization of the church. But there are times when you have individual problems and need personal help.

The gospel is big enough for all needs. It is mighty and strong. It contains everything that you will ever need. It is great enough to carry through the building of the kingdom of God. It is also small enough to meet your littlest need.

The admonition, "Have faith in God," was not spoken idly. It is more than a command. It is an invitation. It is an open door that can lead from the commonplaces of this world to the glories of heaven.

Joint Council Actions

At the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, held from September 9 to September 19 the following appointments and transfers were made: Ralph A. Bobbitt, New York and Philadelphia District, Philadelphia Objective; Allen J. Breckenridge, Kansas City Stake; Anton Compier, Holland and Scandinavia; John T. Conway, New York and Philadelphia District, Washington Objective; Herbert C. Lively, Independence Stake, Walnut Park Objective; H. A. Lynn, Kaw Valley and Kansas Districts; William Patterson, California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Central and Southwest Texas; Jacques V. Pement, Southern New England District; Clinton K. Saxton, Northern California District, San Joaquin Valley Objective; H. I. Velt, Southern Mission and Southwest Central States Mission.

Elder J. D. Anderson, president of the Kansas City Stake, requested an extended leave of absence, and this was granted. An early stake conference will be held to consider the recommendation that Elder Fred O. Davies shall become stake president.

Elder Paul Wellington submitted his resignation from appointment. This was accepted with the thanks of the Council for his work under appointment and appreciation of the fine spirit in which he returns to local ministry.

Howard Sheehy, Seattle District, Seattle Objective, to succeed Brother Wellington.

Other appointments are in process and will be announced as soon as they have been completed.

Doctrine and Covenants Institute

Following is a schedule of activities at the Doctrine and Covenants Institute, Monday through Friday, September 28-October 3. Those who are planning to be in attendance will thus be acquainted with the titles of the topics to be covered, while those not permitted to attend will be able to follow the institute and support it through study and meditation in their homes and branches.

It is with regret that we announce the absence of Church Historian John Blackmore from the institute. Brother Blackmore, now confined to the hospital, was a key worker in this project. He served on the planning committee and was scheduled to carry major responsibility in the program. However, we are appreciative of the willingness of others to respond to the need and assume these important roles.

While every member is urged to be on hand for the institute, we recognize that this will not be possible. To help carry the message to those not present and to provide the persons in attendance with a record of the presentations, printed copies of the major addresses will be made available as soon as possible.

The Kingdom of God

The Hope of the World Tomorrow

By Apostle Roscoe E. Davey

Campus sermon given June 15, 1952

Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh to live after the flesh, for if ye live after the flesh, unto sin, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live unto Christ. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption; whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirits, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may also be glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be named with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. . . . For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.—Romans 8: 12-19, 22.

THIS STATEMENT was made by the apostle Paul as he endeavored to bring to the consciousness of the people to whom he was writing—the saints of Rome—that which was given by Jesus Christ as the keystone of the arch of his message, that which he purposed to achieve through the operation of his gospel and his church among the children of men. He told the people that if they would respond to the leadings of the Spirit of God, and in so doing mortify the deeds of the body, they should live unto Christ. They would then be heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if they suffered with him that they might be glorified together.

There is a significance to this statement I want us to appreciate. We shall be heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if we suffer with him. I rather surmise from this statement that if we want to make an acid test of our Christian discipleship so as to discover whether it is genuine, all we need to do is to ask ourselves frankly and honestly, "What price are we paying? Has it entailed any sacrifice, any self-discipline, any self-denial? Have we suffered at all for the cause of righteousness?" If not, then either something is the matter with our religion or something is sadly lacking in our interpretation and application of it.

After Paul drew the Roman saints' attention to this interesting observation, he said, "The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be named with [or in comparison] the glory which shall be revealed in us, for the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." This is my text for tonight—the manifestation of the sons of God.

THE PRICE we may now be paying—the suffering, self-discipline, or hardships we may be enduring for the cause of Christ—is as nothing compared to the glory which God designs to reveal to us in and through his disciples, for the "earnest expectation of the creature would be waiting for this manifestation of the sons of God."

If we read carefully the observations that are coming to us at the present time from men of thought and understanding, men who are carrying heavy responsibilities in internal and international relationships, we shall discover they are emphasizing in ever-increasing numbers just how true is this observation made by the apostle Paul. We are now living in the day when the "creature" is waiting in anxiety for a great, outstanding revelation of God that shall take place in the "manifestation of the sons of God" when they build the kingdom of God right here on the earth, the great revelation of God's will and way of life for this dispensation of time.

Before mentioning the views of some of these men, I want to read another bit of Scripture that I am sure will help us to appreciate what is in the mind and heart of God. This statement is from the sixty-seventh Psalm:

God be merciful unto us, and bless us, and cause his face to shine upon us; . . . That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. Oh let the nations be glad and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. . . . Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us. God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

WHAT A CLEAR VISION and understanding of the purpose of God in the ideal of his kingdom on earth is given us through Jesus Christ. "God be merciful unto us, and bless us, and cause thy face to shine upon us." But this to no selfish purpose. The author pleads thus not simply that we might enjoy the blessings of God, but rather that as a result of these blessings we individually and corporately may succeed in making manifest so clearly the ways of God that his truth would be known upon earth and his salvation be found in all nations. I rather surmise, as I look at our world today, that we can appreciate as those people before our day never appreciated just how essential it is that the saving health of God should somehow be brought to all nations. Never before have the peoples of the world been filled with such fear and hate of each other; never before have they been so madly endeavoring to outstrip each other in arming and preparing for war.

A number of years ago war did not seem to mean so very much. Men would stand up with their bows and arrows and spears and engage in battle all day long with the loss of a comparatively few men; the general public hardly knew a war was on. Now an atom bomb is dropped on Hiroshima and seventy thousand are wiped out in less time than it takes to tell about it. These days we do things scientifically, especially when it comes to dealing out death and destruction.

Well might Sir Oliver Lodge say, as he did a number of years ago, that he is very fearful that the powers of which mankind is gaining control are far beyond man's capacity to handle rightly, and as a result the very heart of our civilization is threatened. Yes, we are living in untoward days. I do not need to take time in painting this out except to focus our attention and consideration upon what I am endeavoring to bring before us.

HERE IS A JOINT MANIFESTO issued just before World War II by four of the leading educators and scientists of England:

No lover of mankind or of progress, no student of religion, morals, or of economics can regard the present trend of affairs without feelings of great anxiety. Civilization itself seems to be on the wane. The nations are filled with distrust and antipathy for each other. The classes have rarely been so antagonistic toward each other. The relation of individual to individual has seldom been so frankly selfish. The vast destruction by war with the acute sufferings which war created seems to have largely destroyed human sympathy. Never was there such need of all these qualities that make the race human. Never did they appear less manifest. It is becoming increasingly evident that the world has taken a wrong turn which, if persisted in, may lead to the complete destruction of all civilization.

This manifesto was issued over the signatures of Dr. L. P. Jacks, Dr. W. B. Selby, Dr. John Clifford, and Dr. A. E. Garvie, two of whom, I believe, are associated with Oxford University. This manifesto, added to what the casual observer sees, emphasizes the fact that it would be well for us to give serious consideration to what God has purposed in his heart in the ideal of the kingdom as his means of bringing to the world the means of emancipation, deliverance, and salvation. Without the kingdom there is no hope for tomorrow.

If we go to any individual, high or low, educator or laborer, and ask him if he can give us a suggestion as to how our world can extricate itself from its present dilemma, we shall probably get an answer about like Bruce Barton received some few years ago when he approached one of our international bankers and asked him what he thought was going to happen in the world in the near future. The banker replied, "The next time you go to your barbershop to get a hair cut or shave, just ask your barber; he can tell you just as much as I can, for no man knows what even tomorrow will bring."

In the light of this we are extremely thankful to find increasing numbers of thinking men and women coming to understand and appreciate that the answer to the world's needs is found in Christ's command to his disciples in his Sermon on the Mount, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness." Then Jesus added, in effect: All these other things about which you are so much concerned—how you shall be clothed, fed, and sheltered—will fall into their proper places if you will put first things first and build the kingdom.

THE BUILDING OF THE KINGDOM awaits the rising of people who have faith enough in Jesus Christ to believe that he meant what he said. In this challenge Jesus places before us clearly that about which we must be primarily concerned, for out of the kingdom of God on earth shall his glory be revealed so clearly that the nations of the world will hasten to seek it out and yield obedience to what they find.

Just as Jesus came in the flesh—the embodiment and revelation of God so that we might in him be able to understand and know our God—so in the revelation of Zion—the kingdom of God on earth—shall his ways be made plain to the nations of the world.

To make sure we would understand that this kingdom about which he was teaching was a concrete, definite social system built right here on the earth, Christ emphasized it in the model he gave us as to the forming of our prayers. How thoughtlessly we repeat that masterpiece of instruction! "Our Father . . ."—there is something very interesting in this introduction. If the human race could just come to appreciate what is couched in these two words it would make a real difference in this world of ours. Christ said, "Our father," not my father, or your father, or the father of the white race, or the black, brown, or yellow race. If God is our father then we of necessity are brothers; and if we are not brothers in our basic attitudes toward life and each other, then we are not truly his children. "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." Christ definitized the place where the kingdom is to be built—not beyond a lot of etherial stardust, but right here on the face of the earth as a human expression of the corporate endeavor of righteous people living together in righteous relationships.

And this is not solely for their own good or enjoyment. The benefits they shall reap out of such an experience are by-products. Their main concern must be that through them might come the revelation of what happens when people surrender themselves to Jesus Christ and his kingdom—a revelation that the world of today needs most desperately. It is only through such as this that there is any hope of humanity finding the solution to its many threatening problems.

DR. G. B. SMITH, one of the leading educators in the United States, makes this observation in a textbook of his: "The only thing that can prevent our civilization from breaking under the tremendous strains that are being brought to bear upon it is that mankind shall choose to redirect his control over life and nature and direct them toward the ushering in and the building of the kingdom of God on earth." Dr. Smith undoubtedly has read somewhat in the Scriptures, both the Old and the New Testaments, and discovered the emphasis placed upon the kingdom of God; this, plus his knowledge of human affairs, has caused him to come to the foregoing conclusion.

H. G. Wells, the English historian, thinker, and author, wrote a very interesting article a while back that appeared in one of our American magazines. The title of it was "The World Fifty Years From Now." He said, "The success of our civilization depends upon the outcome of the race between education and catastrophe." He then analyzed various situations as far as the world is concerned, including the international relationships then existing. He placed his finger upon some current hot spots, and when he was through with that, the picture did not look bright. (Subsequent developments evidenced that he was quite sound in his thinking.) Then he analyzed the internal conditions existing economically and socially in several of the principle nations. When he was through with that, it did not present a promising picture either, and events that followed proved that he was quite sound in his thinking there, too.

Then he drew a picture of the moral conditions existing in various countries. After he had directed the reader's attention to all of these factors he said, "It looks like a walk-away for catastrophe. The world is headed for disaster, and you and I are as helpless to avert it as a hog in a stockcar bound for the Chicago markets."

I frankly admit that, having previously read some of Mr. Wells' writings, if I had not been sitting down when I read it, his concluding paragraph would have taken me off my feet. Here it is:

I have not yet given up hope for our civilization. There is one possible means by which it can be saved, and that is if some few people shall dare to take the ideals and teachings of Jesus Christ and apply them to the practical problems of human relationships, and build the kingdom of God on earth. In this alone is there any hope for our world.

Dr. Charles Ellwood, an educator and writer in the field of the social sciences, also was well aware of the important place the kingdom of God is to occupy as far as the promise of the future is concerned. He makes this observation:

Science has discovered no way by which the world can be changed from one of war, strife, and hatred to one of peace, fellowship, and good will, except by the leadership of some few people who have caught the vision of a better society, a better world, and then by sacrifice, and if need be by suffering, build this better society. Then all the rest of mankind throughout the world, seeing this superior social demonstration will copy that which they find works to their best advantage. By this means alone can the world be changed.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD is the hope of tomorrow. Where else can we find a solution to our problems? Where else can we find any possible means of deliverance? Our only hope is in the possibilities of the kingdom.

If there are any people at all who should be concerned about building this kingdom, certainly we who profess to be the disciples of Jesus Christ—we who profess to have come to an understanding of him and his message and of the purposes of God revealed through him—should be concerned.

My hope in the possibilities of the kingdom and what it shall bring to the world is not based upon what some of our scientists and educators have concluded. I appreciate their conclusions, but my faith in that which shall be achieved by the building of the kingdom and the actual fact of the kingdom is based upon something far more secure than any human deductions. It is the prophetic word of God.

When I turn to the Scriptures, I find assurances that the kingdom of God shall be, and God shall accomplish his purposes through it. There is an interesting prophecy in the first few verses of the twelfth chapter of the Book of Revelation. In this John relates the vision of the sun-clothed woman with the crown of twelve stars upon her head and the moon under her feet. She travailed in pain and brought forth a man-child. The forces of evil were waiting to destroy this child when it was born, but it was caught up unto God and his throne, for he would not allow the child to perish. And the woman, which represented the early Christian church, fled into the wilderness of apostasy for twelve hundred sixty years.

I am not concerned about the fleeing of the church into the wilderness, but I am concerned about that man-child. The Inspired Version of the Scriptures tell us that the man-child is the kingdom of God and his Christ. The prophecy clearly specifies that this man-child was eventually to rule all nations with a rod of iron. This rod of iron is not force and compulsion, but the righteousness of the Word of God. The church of Jesus Christ brings forth the man-child, the kingdom of God and his Christ; and the Christian idealism of this kingdom shall ultimately bring all the nations of the world into willing subjection to the laws of God. Here we find that to which the educator referred when he said the only way this work could be changed was by a few people catching the vision of a better world and then by sacrifice—and if need be by suffering—build that better world, or social demonstration so that everyone else can copy their example. No wonder Jesus commanded his disciples, “Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness,” and taught them to pray, “Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.”

On the Isle of Patmos, John received the revelation that this man-child would eventually rule all nations. By the righteous example of the disciples made manifest in the kingdom of God which they will establish, there shall be brought to the world such an outstanding social demonstration that all of the nations will be able to see and understand.

THERE IS an interesting item mentioned in the prophecy found in the second chapter of Daniel. King Nebuchadnezzar had a dream in which he saw a great image with a head of gold, breast and arms of silver, belly and thighs of brass, legs of iron, and feet and toes part of iron and part of clay. Then he saw a stone cut out of the mountain without hands which was to smite the image upon the feet when it was all complete, and all sections of the image present at the same time. “Then was the iron, the brass, the silver and the gold broken to pieces together. . . . And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.” The prophecy explains that this stone represents the setting up of the kingdom of God which shall roll forth until it fills the whole earth. It is not at all difficult to realize that when the kingdom is actually built, the nations of the world—torn by war, hatred, and sin—will gladly turn to this outstanding demonstration as their hope of deliverance.

Yes, the prophetic words found in the Scriptures give us a clear understanding of what God purposes to achieve through the church and the ideal of the kingdom that his Son established upon the earth.

In the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Micah 4: 1-3.

THE MOUNTAIN OF THE LORD, the house of the God of Jacob, the kingdom of God in the last days is to be established in the midst of one of the great nations of the world. If the first mountain mentioned is not a literal mountain, but refers to the government of God, then the second mountain is not a literal mountain either, but refers to government, the governments, or one of the governments of the world. This prophecy tells us that in the last days God is going to establish his kingdom in the midst of one of the great governments or nations of the world, and when it has become an established fact, many nations shall say, “Come, let us go up to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways and we will walk in his paths.” Then, and I surmise that not until then, the nations, through the revelation of God’s ways in his kingdom, shall find the better way of life and shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks; war shall end, and there shall come “peace on earth and good will to men.”

LET ME SUGGEST that if we hesitate to answer the challenge of Christ to build the kingdom because it is going to entail sacrifice, self-discipline, and suffering, let us not deceive ourselves into thinking we are going to escape paying a price by side-stepping our task. We will pay a much greater price if we fail to build the kingdom than we will pay to build it. We are paying some of that price right now in blood, tears, and cold cash, and we are going to pay still more. The longer we delay the building of the kingdom that we may indulge our selfishness, the greater price we and the whole world will pay.

Surely we ought to wake up after a while to the truth that it is not within the province or power of man to solve his problems of human relationships and establish peace. He needs help and needs it most desperately. That help must come from God through the kingdom that he has called upon his people to build.

WHAT TREMENDOUS HOPE the kingdom of God brings to us! What a divine possibility is in our hands if we but have the courage, the willingness, the fortitude to rise up and take advantage of that which God is seeking to give us! The kingdom is not going to happen by accident. It is not going to come as a result of prayer alone. A lot of people have done a lot of praying about and for the kingdom, but too often it is like the farmer who prayed for an abundant crop while he let his hoe rust as it stood in a corner unused. When the time comes that we pray most earnestly, and then supplement our prayers by taking out the hoe and going to work, then we will realize the kingdom. It is going to take some real application of the gospel of Christ in our lives individually and collectively. The kingdom will come only as a result of our obedience to all the laws of God.

Why Believe in the Restored Church?

By Nettie Frater

INTEREST IN THE BOOK OF MORMON was my first step toward this church. But I soon saw that if I were to believe in the message of the book, I must also believe in its miraculous translation and in the restoration of God's church with Joseph Smith as his prophet.

That was not so easy. Why should God have chosen this backwoods boy to lead his church? What about all the bishops and archbishops, moderators and ministers in the world? What about my own church which I was proud of and had no desire to leave? Not that I believed it had a monopoly of truth. The saying, "God welcomes his children home by whatever road they come," expressed my feelings, and I was very reluctant to abandon that philosophy.

Then one day it dawned on me that my feelings were of no importance. If God had commanded that he should be worshiped in a certain way I must obey him. The only relevant question was, Had he so commanded? Were the claims of Joseph Smith that God restored his church true? In the end I decided that they were, and I was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WHAT WERE MY REASONS for so believing? The first reason was the internal evidence of the Book of Mormon. President Smith has told of a conversation he had with Governor Harding of Iowa and of how the Governor asked him, "Do you think your grandfather palmed off a spurious record in the Book of Mormon?" And of his own reply, "Governor, at no time in his life was he smart enough to write the Book of Mormon."

The farther I read into the Book of Mormon the more I felt that no man could have been smart enough to correlate the events of a thousand years or to write a history which later knowledge of anthropology and archaeology would combine to prove correct.

That left two alternatives. Joseph Smith must have been diabolically inspired or divinely assisted. But how could the Devil have anything to do with a book in which Christ is enthroned? That leaves only the latter alternative, which is just what Joseph Smith claimed.

The next reason was the testimony of the witnesses who saw the plates. This follows the New Testament pattern where the only proof we have of Christ's resurrection is the testimony of the witnesses in those days. As President Smith said in that same conversation with Governor Harding, it was inconceivable that twelve men could enter a conspiracy and all of them go to their graves without repudiating their testimonies. This applied specially to Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer, who of their own accord reaffirmed their witness in their last days.

ONE THING that impressed me deeply was the attitude of Joseph Smith's own family. Though Joseph had little formal education, it struck me on first reading the Story of the Church, that the Smith household was probably a very lively and intelligent one. Both parents had been teachers at one time, and Joseph was described by a contemporary as having inherited his mother's "intellect." They had evidently brought up their family to know the Bible, and a comprehensive knowledge of the Bible is an education in itself. One of the brothers said in later years, "Until after the angel appeared . . . it was never said that my father's family was lazy, shiftless, or poor."

These were people of integrity, and a son who was perpetrating a hoax would have been an embarrassment to them. But as I read the story I found no signs of embarrassment. Instead, Joseph's people were wholeheartedly behind him, including his elder brother Hyrum, who supported him in life and then died with him. And it is not easy for a man to accept a younger brother as leader and prophet. Laman could not do it, nor could the brothers of Joseph in the Old Testament.

This support from his family soon extended to a circle of close friends. The translation of the Book of Mormon was no hole-and-corner affair. They must all have heard Joseph's voice as he dictated, and the scrape of Oliver Cowdery's pen as he wrote. Others helped with the writing also. They all knew something tremendous was happening.

ANOTHER REASON for my belief was the character of Joseph Smith which unfolded as I read the Story of the Church. There was no previous connection of his name with polygamy in my mind, as I had not heard about him till I heard about the church. I found he showed courage and fortitude under persecution. When the church gained converts by the thousand his actions were statesmanlike, and in the brief period of prosperity at Nauvoo he behaved with dignity. No charlatan could have sustained such nobility of character. As for the suggestion that he was secretly a polygamist, I found the idea laughable. He had faults, but so did everyone in the New Testament except Jesus Christ.

But it was a Herald article, "You Be the Judge," by James F. Keir, that put the seal on my belief.

The Ability to Plod

We found Brother Gunsolley ill with malaria, and he said that, when he did recover from the attack, he would need his vacation time to prepare next year's work in school. There was no alternative; I had to go on alone. I sometimes wonder that I had the temerity to undertake the task. Perhaps one of my qualifications was the ability to plod. I have said sometimes that if I could write a set of beatitudes, one of them would be "Blessed are the plodders, for they shall get there."

But the work I had undertaken required more than the ability to plod. Perhaps few people in the church realize how clearly the hand of the Lord was manifest in the rise of the religious educational movement in the church, in which the Sunday School Association led out. It was not accomplished by human ability alone.

One of my good friends, Brother David Dancer, expressed the opinion that I was making a serious mistake in giving up a good position in school to enter upon an enterprise he fully expected to fail. Sister Walker told me he said, "I am sorry to see that girl give up her school; this will fail and she will be out of work, and her father and mother need her help."

It may be he remembered that eight years before a committee had been appointed to prepare Sunday school lessons. Three persons, apparently well qualified to do the work, had been chosen, but nothing permanent materialized, and now a lone girl's undertaking the task did not look promising.

But Brother Dancer did not know, and perhaps no one else knew clearly, that this time the movement was of the Lord, and that he was pledged to hold the hand of the one chosen for the work, however weak in her own strength she might be.

Good Response to the Quarterlies

The first issues of the quarterlies were finally ready for publication, and Sister Walker said, "We will publish one lesson in the Zion's Hope and invite comment." The result was that immediately we had a subscription list of eight hundred and a request for a lesson for younger children in addition to the senior lesson that had been published. Complying with the request, we published an intermediate lesson with suggestions for primary teachers.

In November, 1892, the first quarterlies made their appearance, and the subscription list grew quickly. Soon we were sending them out by the thousands, and quarterlies took their place as permanent publications of the church.

The Sunday School Association built up its own treasury, asking no financial assistance from the church. In a few years it was able to make contributions to other projects of the church. The only persons who took financial risk in the beginning were Sister Walker, who pledged to the business manager of the Herald Publishing House her property to make good the loss, should the quarterlies fail, and the young editor, who relinquished a lucrative position for what, from a human point of view, was an uncertain venture.

A Family Home in Lamoni

In the midst of the General Conference of 1893 held in Lamoni, I received a letter from my mother which contained a most surprising communication. She wrote that they had an opportunity to sell the home in Illinois and that Father wished to do so and to join me in Lamoni. The surprising thing was this expressed desire of my father, for his life had been spent about the water.

Now he was contemplating leaving all his old associates and coming to a little inland town, Lamoni. The Father's hand was leading him. They came and we built a new home on the lot Grandfather had given me. We brought Grandmother home from Kansas, and our little family was assembled. I was the only able-bodied one of the four, for Grandmother was very old; Father was a semi-invalid; and Mother had never been strong.

When we built the new house, we made a quite common mistake. We exceeded our resources, and I was worried about how to meet the deficit, for it took all my earnings to provide the current expenses of the family. Then a way opened up.

Teaching at Lamoni High School

When school opened in September an assistant was needed in the high school. I made application for the position and obtained it. Then I procured a maid for my mother and went back to teaching. I taught large classes that year, ate a lunch at noon, and reached home about five o'clock in the afternoon. After resting a while and having supper, I got out my writing materials when the kitchen table had been cleared and wrote on my lesson work until ten o'clock.

Sometimes the typesetters would catch up with me. Then I would run by the Herald office on my way to school and hand the foreman of the composing room the copy I had written the night before. Throughout the school year I kept this schedule, writing every night and all day Saturday, but I succeeded in clearing our home of the debt, and a weight was lifted from my mind.

It was not always easy to concentrate on my work, for there were sighs of weariness, and moans of pain, and other distracting things as I sat writing in the midst of household activities. I recall an incident that touched me at the time it occurred, and the pathos of which lingers with me still. Grandmother, who must have missed very sorely Grandfather's daily reading to her, came close to me one day as I bent over my work, saying, "Annie, can't you tell it out loud?" Of course that was an impossibility, but she was very happy when I read to her a newly published story, Titus, a Comrade of the Cross.

Added to the disabilities of the other members of the family, I contracted rheumatism as a result of being caught out in thunderstorms twice within a week. For a time kind friends took me back and forth to school and Mother lifted my right foot into bed at night, for the rheumatism settled in my knee. I remember distinctly how grateful I was when I awoke one morning, having slept through the whole night without having been awakened by pain.

Father's Baptism

Within a year after he came to Lamoni Father was baptized into the church, a thing I never had anticipated. He lived nearly five years after his baptism and many times received relief from suffering through the rite of administration. There were times when administration did not bring relief, but spiritual blessing strengthened him to bear with patience what was not removed. I bought for him copies of the New Testament and the Book of Mormon in large type, and I treasure the memory of Father in his old age bending over their pages gathering in the precious promises written there.

Marriage

In June, 1895, I was married to Richard S. Salyards whose wife had died several years before. Some of my friends thought my public service in the church would come to an end when I married but time proved they were mistaken. My husband was an ardent seeker after knowledge, and his penchant for good reading brought within my reach excellent matter from which I gleaned useful information as my work developed. Even with this I never ceased to call on the Lord for spiritual guidance and understanding, and he remembered his promise, "I will hold thy hand." Neither did he forget the promise he made me when I was leaving home the first time to go to Lamoni, when the voice of the Spirit said to me, "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it again."

Family Joys and Sorrows

My father lived two and a half years after my marriage, and two years after his death my sister in Illinois, having been left a widow, came to Lamoni to live with my mother. With her came three of her children, but the eldest, a daughter, went to live with my younger sister in Des Moines.

The sister who came to Lamoni to live had cherished from childhood the desire to be baptized into the church, and she had consistently refused to become affiliated with any other. Once, when she was a little girl visiting our grandparents, she had cried to be baptized, but Grandmother had not felt at liberty to permit it, since Father was not of the church. When she had been living in Lamoni two years she and the three children with her were baptized, but the eldest, not being with them, was not baptized.

Because of her environment this oldest child became a member of one of the local churches, but on the occasion of her first visit to the family she said, "Aunt Annie, I am not satisfied. I have always wanted to belong to your church."

She came home at intervals to visit us, and finally when she came two hectic spots burned in her cheeks, ominous warnings of what was coming to grieve our hearts. That summer was exceedingly trying to us, as we saw her steadily declining, notwithstanding our efforts in her behalf.

A Third Baptism of the Spirit

One Wednesday evening I was alone in my home after having spent all day with my sick niece, Alice. My husband had gone to the adult prayer meeting, and our young folks to the young people's prayer meeting. I lay down momentarily on a couch, racked with distress over Alice's illness.

The thought occurred to me that I could pray as acceptably at home as in the church, and I slipped to my knees beside the couch and began praying, "O Lord, if I have been praying wrong, and you are going to take Alice, bring her into the church first." I prayed thus, knowing it was her strong desire to be baptized.

As I prayed there descended upon me that great power I have felt only three times in such a marked degree. The first time was in my grandfather's house after my baptism; the second time was when I wrote my first letter to Sister Walker; now it came as I prayed for Alice. I arose from my knees and lay down again on the couch, struggling with my emotions.

When I had gained control I arose and went into the kitchen and attended to my work; then I went down to my sister's. She stood on the porch waiting for me, and I felt intuitively that she had something to tell me. When we had entered the house and seated ourselves, she looked across the room at me and said, "Alice is going to be baptized."

"When did she decide?" I asked, and my sister answered, "About fifteen minutes ago." It was at the time when I felt the Spirit in power as I knelt in prayer for the sick girl.

The next morning she was baptized. That evening, on my way to the church, I stopped in and found her lying down. She said she had a bad pain in her side, but she added fervently, "O Aunt Annie, I am so happy." One week from that day she died.

Have I not reason to love and praise a Heavenly Father so faithful to his promises, so rich in his blessings? My father, my sister, and her children—the ones I was so loathe to leave as I went from my home to enter upon my assigned work in the church—all moved near me and accepted the gospel. Even through the sorrow of losing Alice I could feel the touch of divine love.

An Experience in Public Speaking

In the spring of 1909 I was about as busy as I could be preparing for General Conference when I was requested to appear as one of the speakers on a program under the auspices of the women's department of the church. At first I asked to be excused, but under an impression that I ought to do as requested, I changed my mind and was placed on the program.

Then, about the opening of Conference, my mother became ill with pneumonia, and I slept for two weeks at night on a couch at the door of her room to care for her. Twice I was asked if I would be able to fill my place on the program, and I could only answer that I had not been able up to that time to give attention to it, but I would do it if I could.

Time passed until there remained but two days before the time appointed for the program. Then I found an hour, from eleven o'clock to noon, and I worked on the paper I was to present. The next day I had another free hour and finished my writing. When I had my large Conference family seated at supper about the extended dining table, I dressed myself for the evening.

I was seated with the other speakers on the platform, awaiting time for the meeting to begin when an overwhelming sense of my littleness came over me. This panicky feeling made me desire more than anything else to slip down the back stairway and flee to the seclusion and privacy of my home. The feeling did not pass away but remained with me to the end of the program.

I was the last speaker on the program, and my spirits had reached a very low stage when my turn came. I stumbled awkwardly on to the speakers' stand and looked out over a sea of faces. Although I was acquainted with many of the people present I was so dazed that I recognized but one—a doctor of our town and not a member of the church.

But there was only one thing to do; I had to fulfill my part in the program. I had nearly finished when I looked down, and there at the end of about the fourth row from the front sat my husband with the happy glow of a smile on his face. I completed my address and retired, and in a few minutes the meeting was closed.

Then there was Fred M. Smith, saying nothing but looking at me through solemn black eyes. And there was F. M. Sheehy, bustling down the aisle, saying something complimentary about somebody. I never dreamed he meant me, but he did. I hurried home, changed my dress, and went down to my mother's. Word had preceded me. Some college boys who boarded there had made their appraisal of the evening's program. They rated me high, but I thought they were biased in my favor. The next morning a friend called me and told me of complimentary things her Conference guests were saying about my effort. Then the activities of the General Conference took precedence, and the women's program was a thing of the past.

I feel sure the Lord held my hand in that experience, though I have never understood why I suffered the mental depression I endured. But the happy look on my husband's face has remained with me throughout the years. Richard approved me, and I trusted his judgment. He told me that, as I stood there, so plainly dressed expressing the thoughts I did, he said to himself, "Not very stylish, but she's all there."

The Best Is Tomorrow

By Naomi Russell

WHEN I MAKE a dental appointment I begin worrying about how many fillings and extractions I'll have to suffer through before I ever hang up the phone, and by the time d-day comes I've usually convinced myself I'll have to have upper and lower plates. It's never been that bad, of course, and I usually feel a little foolish as I walk downstairs after one small filling and a cleaning job.

Humanity at large is not much different. Nearly every spring I hear dire predictions of either flood or drought before the summer is over. Sometimes it happens that way, with a few earthquakes and tornadoes thrown in extra, but they don't all happen at the same place or at the same time, and most of the country continues year after year to produce abundantly.

Probably the pessimists' best field for speculation is the fate of mankind in general. Disease, war, and crime offer unlimited opportunities for them to write an early end to the world. "Look at all the cancer and heart trouble and polio," the doom crier points out. "Didn't used to hear much about them, but now you can't pick up a paper without reading about people dying of them." And he's right, but people a hundred years ago were dying of smallpox and tuberculosis and malaria, and before that they died of cholera and black plague and leprosy. An interesting fact is that life expectancy for the average man on the street today is nearly seventy years; a century ago the pioneer fathers had a life expectancy of around forty-five. Naturally there are more obituaries now than then because the population has increased.

"Wars and rumors of wars" has been a popular term ever since it was first used, and there's no indication that it won't continue to be for generations to come. War has been kind of a favorite pastime for humanity since Cain threw a rock at Abel. That was warfare on a very crude basis, of course. As men got smarter they began running swords through each other, and then they started making bullets that could be fired at fifty paces; these were quicker and easier to handle than a rock or sword and more people could be killed in less time. Now the instruments of war have been refined and polished until an entire city can be blasted off the map with one blow. "Look at the wholesale slaughter today," the man behind the barber chair says, "why hundreds can be killed with a single bomb." And he's right, but Cain set a record that has never been equaled yet. With one rock he wiped out 25 per cent of the world's population. Certainly more people are killed in modern warfare, but there are a lot more left to carry on than when the world was young.

CRIME, loose morals, and delinquency offer inexhaustible possibilities for the theory that the world is ripening in iniquity. It is not hard to see why the idea projects itself so vividly upon the public mind. For some morbid reason any shade of misbehavior from soaped windows at Halloween to gangland murder is considered newsworthy. The person who forms his opinion of the world by reading headlines can hold little hope for humanity. If the happy homes of Middletown, U.S.A., were publicized as often as the divorces of Hollywood, modern marriage would look like a better bet. If more editorials dealt with the good neighbors all over America and less with the evils of Washington, fewer people would be convinced that the country is going to pot. If parents could remember—despite the printed accounts of the escapades of the younger generation—that adolescents of their own day tried all the tricks the present teenagers try, they might look less dis-paragingly upon their progeny. There wasn't so much necking in automobiles then, but there was plenty of horse-and-buggy spooning. The equipment changes, but the ideas remain pretty much the same.

YES, THE WORLD is growing worse, but it is growing better, too. Because there are more people each year, there is more evil, and there is more good. Looking to the future I can see more prisons to hold lawbreakers, but I also see more churches to hold the many men and women of integrity yet to be born. The years will bring more delinquent children, but they will also bring more happy, well-adjusted children. There will always be ill health and death, but tomorrow there will be new cures for today's illnesses, new ways to prolong life. There will continue to be floods and droughts, but there will also be better methods of flood control and irrigation, better use of soil, better seed to produce bigger crops.

It is not always easy to see the whole picture. When personal tragedy strikes, it is difficult to look beyond the present hurt at the possibilities of better days to come. It is human to forget blessings while licking wounds.

This tendency toward pessimism is no credit to the God who created man "that he might have joy." There are dark days ahead certainly, but there are more than enough bright ones to compensate. An important part of stewardship is the wise use of time. To waste time worrying about the evils of today and the possible larger evils of tomorrow is as wrong as squandering money and misusing talents. Even with a life expectancy of seventy years, I have too many things to do to sit in a corner and judge the world or speculate on what might happen in the days to be (and that, I pause to remind myself, includes my appointment with the dentist a week from Tuesday). Of this I am sure: Zion will be built by optimists; nobody else has enough faith in the future to do the job.

The Royal Family of the Circus

By G. E. Tickemyer

FEATS OF DARING and skill performed by seven generations of the Clarke family, the Royal Family of the Circus, have thrilled men and women of two continents. One of the greatest artists of this group of trapeze performers was Charles Frederick Clarke, a devoted elder of the church who died at the age of seventy-four in Venice, California, February, 1951.

Charles was born in Cheltenham, Gloucestershire, England, on February 18, 1878, to Catherine Caroline Powell and Charles Clarke. Taken from school at Wallingford, Berkshire, at the age of six to travel with his parents in the circus, he was taught gymnastics, riding, juggling, tumbling, and wire walking. He soon showed a talent for juggling, and later became one of the best ball jugglers of his time, as well as the most proficient catcher of all time on the flying trapeze.

His first public appearance was made with the George Ginnett Circus in Dalstrom, England, when he was seven. How the audience must have thrilled to see this small boy in a trapeze act with his two brothers!

The family traveled to the Continent in 1893 with the Cirque Lenka. The three brothers were practicing the double somersault and pirouette, which they accomplished at Tourcoing in the north of France. Charles was only fifteen years old at that time. He also practiced the triple somersault with his younger brother, Percy, who was restrained by the laws of France from performing it. They were the first to execute it, however, in 1898 at Chalon-sur-Saone.

Bareback riding and juggling fascinated young Charles as much as the lively circus life about him. One of his outstanding acts on horseback was juggling seven balls while standing backwards on a galloping mount. He is the only person who ever performed this feat successfully.

While in Brussels, Belgium, in 1901, the "Royal Family" was seen by James A. Bailey who signed them to appear with the Barnum and Bailey "Greatest Show on Earth" the following season. They opened in Paris and toured France and Switzerland during 1902.

THE CLARKONIANS, as they were known, opened in New York at the old Madison Square Garden in 1903 and stayed with Barnum and Bailey through 1904.

During the winters of 1904-1905 they went to Cuba with the Pubilones Circus and to Mexico with the Orrin Brothers' Circus.

The New York Hippodrome was their next stop, where in the spring of 1905 they appeared in the production, "The Yankee Circus of Mars." During this engagement they were observed by John Ringling and were signed for Ringling's "World's Greatest Show." They were featured for twenty-one years until the opening of the new Madison Square Garden in 1926, which was their last year with that circus.

While with Ringling in 1906, Charles Clarke met a clown, Jules Tounour, who was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Both being of a religious nature, they began to talk of religion. Mr. Tounour loaned Clarke the church books, and he was baptized September 3, 1906.

Miss Adeline Martha Munday, a performer known professionally as Alethea Fitzroy, became his wife in 1908. She, too, was converted to the church and was baptized in 1909 at Somerville, Massachusetts. Four children were born to them, and in 1916 Sister Clarke settled in Madison, Wisconsin, to rear the children while her husband continued his career. Their three daughters joined the troupe in 1930.

IT WAS WHILE they were living in Wisconsin that Brother Clarke was first called to the ministry. He was always very interested in church work and wrote for Autumn Leaves and Vision, having marked talent in art and literature. Besides writing poetry, he kept himself busy in his leisure moments with wood carving, glass etching, and drawing.

In 1943 he retired from the circus for the duration of the war and worked at Terminal Island Shipyards. The Venice, California, congregation was formed during this time. Sister Okie Hatten's home was the place where the first meeting was held in November, 1942, during a blackout. Pastor John Blackmore of Central Church congregation and Brother Clarke were in charge. The latter was appointed pastor and presided over meetings for almost two years. When the group was organized into a mission in 1945, Brother Albert Knowlton was elected pastor, and Brother Clarke returned to the circus. During the winters, however, he was active in church work until his death:

CHARLES CLARKE received many medals and awards for his outstanding performances. Some of the tricks which he and his brothers originated on the trapeze were the double somersault and pirouette, the double forward somersault over the bar, the triple somersault to catch hand-to-hand, the triple somersault from the hocks, the double pirouette in the hands, pirouette and half return to the bar, full twisting somersault to catch, and backward back out of hocks to catch by the feet. Brother Clarke was the only man ever to shower seven balls, and he was also the only one to juggle eight balls, which he crossed while juggling.

With advancing age Brother Clarke was forced to abandon the trapeze, but he continued to delight and entertain the children as a juggling clown. Few of his church friends ever saw him in the arena. They knew him only as "dear old Brother Clarke," the spiritual father to a small group of Saints at Venice. They knew he was somewhere with the circus in the summer and looked forward to his return in the fall. Unassuming, always modest, affirmative, and eager to learn from anyone who could tell him more of the gospel story he loved so well, he found happiness and contentment with the Saints among whom his children and grandchildren continue to serve. These were the friends who grieved most at the news of his passing. Scarcely aware that they had known one of the greatest circus performers of all times, they loved him for those true virtues of life that will endure throughout eternity.

Why Believe in the Restored Church?

(There was no date on the cutting.) In Independence the mob had taken charge and Oliver Cowdery and William McLellin fled from their homes into the woods. Twenty dollars reward was offered to anyone who would deliver them in Independence on a certain Tuesday. On the Monday McLellin slipped down into the Whitmer settlement, and there in the lonely woods he met Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer. Evidently he had been thinking; wondering if the Book of Mormon and the Restored Gospel really were true. If they were not, what was he doing skulking in the woods in fear of his life? He must know. He said to the other two, "Tell me in the fear of God, is that Book of Mormon true?" Oliver Cowdery looked at him solemnly and declared, "Brother William, God sent his holy angel to declare the truth of it to us, and though the mob kill us, we must declare to you its truth." David Whitmer added, "Oliver has told you the solemn truth, for we could not be deceived. I must declare to you its truth!" And William McLellin said, "Brethren, I believe you. I can see no object for you to tell me a falsehood now when our lives are in danger."

Then it came as a shock of surprise to me to realize that all the things I had found so much difficulty in accepting were logical and sensible—and comforting too. If God once had prophets, why should he not have them now? If he once laid out a precise plan for his church, why should that plan have fallen into disuse? If he had once given authority to his priesthood, why should that not still continue?

Many things in the Bible that I had skated over because I could not reconcile them with present-day church practice could now be accepted and believed.

God has restored his gospel to the earth. I found he had restored it to me also.

Letters

Receives Assurance

When I started reading the Book of Mormon I desired to know definitely that it is true, so I prayed for assurance. One night I had either a dream or a vision and saw, high in the heavens, what looked like a tablet with lines running vertically rather than horizontally. The letters were large and seemed to be raised and of gold. Although I tried very hard I could not read it, but I believed it to be an answer to my prayers.

I like to read the testimonies of others, and I shall appreciate receiving letters from those who have read the Book of Mormon. I hope the Saints will remember me in their prayers.

Tribute to an Enthusiastic Worker

While traveling on business in the Northern Plains District this summer I was happy to be able to visit various church school groups and isolated members in that area. On August 10 I met with the Saints at Dunn Center and preached to them on stewardship. Paul Holt and his family of Camdenton, Missouri, had driven down from Sanish, North Dakota; he was ordained to the office of priest at the evening service in Fairview, Montana. Then he returned to Sanish where he is foreman of a construction crew now building the piers for a bridge across the lake to be formed above Garrison Dam.

The following Sunday he preached his first Latter Day Saint sermon at Minot to a large gathering of Saints. Before he accepted the Restored Gospel, he spent a number of years as a Pentecostal minister. He has retained his ability as a revivalist in the fight against sin.

On Sunday, August 24, we visited members in the oil town of Williston, North Dakota, and Brother Holt again spoke to a full house. A picnic dinner was served at Twin Lakes, and an afternoon of exchanging experiences was enjoyed in the H. W. Stockman home. In the evening Brother Holt preached at Fairview to Saints from Andes, Savage, and Sidney as well as the local congregation.

The Holts have now returned to Sanish but will continue to minister to the isolated Saints in this area. Paul Holt, a big man with a big message, has truly taken hold of the work and is serving to the best of his ability.

Note of Thanks

I wish to thank all who remembered my brother, Benjamin T. Wyatt, in prayer. He is recovering nicely and is now able to sit in a wheel chair. He hopes to be walking with crutches soon. We feel that he has been blessed, and are deeply grateful to God for his mercy and our friends for their prayers in his behalf.

Correction

In my letter, "In Appreciation," which appeared in the August 11 issue, the third sentence should read: By prayer the way was opened for me and our younger son, Colin, who was baptized at the same time, to attend reunion.

Question Time

Question:

Is the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church a Protestant church?
Colorado E. C. D.

Answer:

No. This church is a church of the Restoration. The gospel was taken from the earth in the Dark Ages during the apostasy. This is generally recognized by Protestant churches which originated as a result of those who endeavored to reform the doctrines of the prevailing church during the time of the apostasy. The Restoration means the gospel was again restored to the earth. This church claims it is the church of the Restoration.

Question:

Do the Scriptures show that the coming of Christ will be visible to the eye?

Answer:

Several texts state in substance that the coming of Christ will be a visible appearance, a personal coming which shall be seen by man. Of these texts we note the following taken from the Inspired Version:

For behold, he cometh in the clouds with ten thousands of his saints in the kingdom, clothed with the glory of his Father. And every eye shall see him; and they who pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him.—Revelation 1: 7.

Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn. And they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory.—Matthew 24: 37, 38.

Question:

What is meant by atonement?
Washington Mrs. W. O. S.

Answer:

The atonement is Christ's continuing ministry in behalf of man from the fall of Adam to the last great song of the redeemed hosts, when they receive inheritance in his kingdom—that ministry covering all things essential for their salvation both general and individual. It necessitated his coming into the world and taking upon himself man's carnal nature that he might subdue that nature, and by laying it down in death, and by his resurrection taking it up again with all evil banished, his body would become sanctified and glorified, possessing immortality. He brought his body to conform in character to the divine Spirit dwelling within, both becoming one. The atonement was first wrought out in himself.

The atonement has been too much thought of as involving only the death of Christ. That was necessary, but so were his birth, his life, and his resurrection. All these and more were essential acts in the great drama of atonement.

But the atonement requires that these important acts shall be made applicable to men if they are to answer the divine purpose. Christ's ministry must enter into the very souls of men if they are to be redeemed, and this is what the gospel provides. The most important event in human life springing from the gospel is receiving the gift or baptism of the Holy Spirit that Christ gives, in which he is giving himself—"I in you;" "I will come unto you;" and as Paul says, "Christ in you." It is this Spirit of Christ working in man and with man which effects reconciliation with God—the atonement. It cannot be done otherwise. Paul says the saints "are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Man must help in his own atonement.

Question:

Are we abiding in sound doctrine, church law, and government when we believe that all calls to the priesthood in the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church are based on direct calls from God via visions, revelation, prophecy, dreams, or the still small voice? In other words, the call to priesthood of any particular member transcends the agency of the minister presenting the call. Thus the minister would not say, "I am a representative of God. I feel that this person should be called to the priesthood, therefore I will present the call."

Missouri

M. J.

Answer:

No minister should claim that because he represents God, he therefore has the right to present names for priesthood responsibility apart from inspirational direction from God through his Holy Spirit. On the other hand, those in administrative responsibility should not fail to recommend men for ordination because direction has not come through certain specified channels of revelation such as dreams, tongues, prophecy, visions, or audible voice; that is, if spiritual light has come in some other way. These are but a few of the many, many ways through which God reveals his mind and will. Speaking concerning those responsible for calling men to priesthood, the Lord has said, "If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and the glossings of direction."—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14. We need not question that God can and will give light through the proper authorities if in every sense we are upholding them respectfully before God for such blessing and apply wisely the safeguards he has given. (See Doctrine and Covenants 17: 16; 27: 4; 43: 1, 2; and 125: 14.)

Some of the less spectacular of the spiritual gifts such as discernment, knowledge, and wisdom which come with the quickening of spiritual intelligence, and calm assurance are among the gifts of revelation most used of the Lord in the matter of calls to the ministry. This is in harmony with sound doctrine. The functioning of these gifts, however, has sometimes been hindered through lack of understanding. (See Doctrine and Covenants 125: 6.)

Five Baptized on Children's Day

PORTSMOUTH, VIRGINIA.—On Children's Day, five children, ranging in age from nine to fourteen, were baptized. Four of them were children of nonmembers.

Two marriage ceremonies were performed in July and August. Janet Kay Cady of Springfield, Missouri, was united in marriage to Glenn Albert Ramsey of the same city. Mary Lou Davies was united in marriage to Maurice E. Thompson of Evansville, Indiana. The couple will make their home in Evansville.

Ralph Turner was selected as the young missionary for the area. He has brought a tape recorder to services. The recorded sermons can be taken to the sick and the homes of friends as a part of his missionary endeavor.

The young people are active with the boys' and children's classes on Monday and Friday nights.

Sister Hilda Miller of Scranton, Pennsylvania, has been working with the group, as have Brother and Sister Gunsolley, formerly of Independence, Missouri, and Brother and Sister White of Grand Rapids, Michigan. William J. Davies is pastor of the branch.—Reported by VIRGINIA ROBBINS

Zion's League Has Installation Service

CHICO, CALIFORNIA.—At the August 2 Communion service Mesdames Albert and Jerome were present from Independence, Missouri. They were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mills.

On August 14, the Zion's League held installation services for the new officers at the pastor's home. Oren Sprague was the installing officer after which the pastor gave the charge to the members and new officers. Corsages and boutonnieres were presented to the following: Alpha Mae Huebert, president; Ernest Brown, vice-president; Betty Ultican, secretary-treasurer; Marjorie Hintz, worship commission chairman; Joanne Schardt, study commission chairman; Norma Ultican, recreation commission chairman; Lois Ultican, service commission chairman.

The church lower auditorium was the scene of a going away party for two Graceland-bound Leaguers, Jack White and Cora June Hintz. The school colors of blue and gold were used in the decorations. Norma, Lois, and Betty Ultican, together with Ernest Brown, were responsible for the decorations and refreshments. Marjorie Hintz gave a talk on Graceland. Gifts were presented to the honorees who responded with appreciative remarks.

The annual church business meeting was conducted August 27. The following officers were elected: pastor, H. D. Hintz; counselor, H. M. Brown; director of religious education, Leon Ultican; youth leader, John Huebert; women's leader, Bessie Ultican; director of music, Marjorie Hintz; secretary, Helen Hintz; treasurer, Leon Ultican; auditor, J. F. Ferguson. Appointive officers are bishop's solicitor, H. M. Brown; historian, Fern Sliger; book steward, Ellen M. Glatz.

A board of trustees elected were as follows: Clarence Mills, John H. White, John A. Huebert. Elder L. A. MacDonald, Northern California district president, presided at the meeting.—Reported by HELEN E. HINTZ

Branch Officers Elected

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—The annual branch business meeting was held August 24, and the following officers were elected for the coming year: branch president, Elder Everett L. Smith; counselors, Priests Richard M. Reid and Edward R. Ashley; secretary, Angie Ellertorpe; treasurer, Nelson Allen; church school director, Jack Thomas; women's leader, Louise McCaulou; Zion's League director, June Reid; publicity agent, book steward, and librarian, Edward R. Ashley; and historian, Brother Richard M. Reid. District President Floyd T. Rockwell was in charge and following the business meeting he gave a short and inspiring talk.

On August 23 the branch had a wiener roast and campfire at the home of Brother and Sister William Damon, Covington, Kentucky. The Zion's League was in charge of the campfire, and after skits and song, the service reached its climax in a short message by the pastor.

On August 31, Laura Lynn, daughter of T. Kenneth and Shirley Sheffer, was blessed by Elder Smith.

Two young people from the branch entered Graceland this fall. They are Loraine Smith and Gwen Manning.—Reported by EDWARD R. ASHLEY

Ordination Service Held

LOGAN CREEK, MISSOURI.—Elder J. A. Phillips of Kennett, Missouri, the district president, was present for an all-day meeting and basket dinner on August 17. He was the speaker at the morning service, and Evelyn Greenshields sang a solo, "O, Jesus I Have Promised," accompanied at the piano by Ethel Greenshields.

After dinner, Elder W. A. Kuntz gave the charge. Shirley Mae Davis sang a solo, "Living for Jesus," accompanied by Ethel Greenshields. Brother Wilburn Counts led F. O. Greenshields to the rostrum for his ordination as a priest. Elder J. A. Phillips and Elder W. A. Kuntz officiated.—Reported by EVELYN GREENSHIELDS

Active Elder Is Eighty-two

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.—One of the veterans of the church, Elder Adolphus H. Edwards, Sr., of Baltimore, blessed and assisted in the blessing of two of his great grandchildren on July 13. They were Linda Marie, Edwards of Baltimore, and Jan, infant daughter of Donald A. and Rose Marie, infant daughter of Arthur G. and Mickey Edwards of Sparrow's Point. Both Donald and Arthur are graduates of Graceland College. Brother Edwards was assisted in the blessing of Linda Marie by his son, Elder James C. Edwards, the grandfather of the baby. He also assisted Elder Arthur G. Edwards, Sr., in the blessing of his granddaughter Jan.

Elder Adolphus Edwards is nearing his eighty-second birthday and still enjoys good health. He has served in the priesthood for sixty-six years, having been ordained to the office of deacon at the age of sixteen and to the office of elder at the age of eighteen. He was a pioneer in the gospel work in many locations, such as Steubenville, Ohio; Bellaire, Ohio; Washington, D. C.; and Baltimore, Maryland, where he served as pastor for ten years. At the present time he still takes his place in the pulpit, counsels the younger members of the priesthood, and assists in administering to the needs of the Saints.—Reported by WONZA SIMMERS

Reunion Held at Kirtland

KIRTLAND, OHIO.— From July 25 to August 3, the Saints spent a period in reunion activities at historic Kirtland Temple. The theme, "Spiritual Growth Through Stewardship," was the recognized stimulus in all services and classes. Apostle D. T. Williams was the minister in charge. Associated with Brother Williams were Elders Loyd Adams, Harry Black, James Menzies, Bishop Cackler, and Patriarch E. Y. Hunker. Sister Nellie Mottashed, of Belding, Michigan, conducted classes for women; Sister Hattie Bell of Chicago, Illinois, held a clinic for church school workers; Seventy James Menzies and Sister Menzies had charge of the young people; Seventy Loyd

Adams and Sister Adams had charge of the junior high group.

The children's division, which included those from four to eleven years of age, was directed by Sister Etelka White. The children participated in worship and handcraft, and were given instruction from day to day. On Friday afternoon, about 100 of them presented a program in the Temple.

Surrounding the Temple were eighty-five tents and several trailers, inhabited by families attending reunion. Other visitors were housed in homes of Saints and friends. Seven hundred and sixty-three registered, but it is felt that not all registered who attended. The physical needs of these people were supervised by Elder Earl Curry in charge of reunion grounds; Elder Clarence Winship, in charge of cafeteria; Elder Alvin C. Wadsworth, camp pastor.

Each day began with morning devotions broadcast from the Temple. Each devotional consisted of hymns, prayers, and short talks. Prayer services were directed toward making each person aware of his stewardship. There were experience meetings directed by Evangelist E. Y. Hunker; choir practice for the "Elijah"; Sister Bell's class for church school workers; and the clinic in evangelism. The choir, directed by B. Scot Liston, sang the "Elijah" on Saturday evening.—Reported by MARGERY WADSWORTH

Cottage Meetings Held

AURORA, MISSOURI.—District Missionary Elder Ralph Bobbitt held cottage meetings for three weeks during May and June. He also preached at Sunday night services during the series. At the close Brother Bobbitt baptized three. They are Richard, son of Fred and Alma Brosseau; Mrs. Ruth Gamet; and Mrs. Alma Brosseau.

The branch has welcomed Brother and Sister Perry O. Puckett and Brother and Sister Jim Tidmore and their daughters Myrtle Fay and Ellen Elaine, lately of Tulsa, Oklahoma, formerly of Bisbee, Arizona.

Sister Helen Pearcey of Stotts City visited the branch on August 3.—Reported by LOUIZA E. SUMNERS

Five Baptized After Institute

KLAMATH FALLS, OREGON.—On August 28, Missionary James Kemp finished a ten-day series of meetings. At this time Apostle E. J. Gleazer and District President J. L. Verhei were guest speakers.

On June 28 and 29, the Oregon district president, Brother Verhei, Sister Effie Verhei, Elder Harold Carpenter, Sister Carpenter, and Seventy George A. Njeim held an institute. Five candidates were baptized at the home of Blanch Petroff. The church is at the corner of Ninth and Plum Streets.—Reported by GRACE CARROLL

New District President

EDMONTON, ALBERTA.—Elder David Larmour, 9942 84th Avenue, Edmonton, has succeeded Elder Elgin Clark as district president of the Alberta District. Brother Clark served as president of this district for seventeen successive years. There were eight baptisms of adults during the recent reunion.

Reunion Held at Stewartville

FAR WEST STAKE.—The sixtieth Far West Stake Reunion was held August 7-17, at Stewartville, Missouri.

The reunion opened with a drama, "The Hunt Family Goes Zion," given by members of the St. Joseph congregations.

The adult prayer service each morning was under the direction of Stake President Emery E. Jennings, and the Zion's League prayer service was directed by the stake director, Garland Snapp. There were 185 Zion's Leaguers at the reunion.

Apostle Roscoe Davey of Independence was the evening speaker each night. His sermons on "The Life and Ministry of Jesus Christ" were illustrated by colored slides of famous paintings. These were followed by illustrated travelogs on Australia.

The speakers for the Sunday services were Stake President Emery E. Jennings, Stake Bishop Lewis E. Landsberg, Presiding Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp of Independence, and Apostle Roscoe Davey.

The general class for adults each morning was taught by Apostle Davey, Brother Jennings, and Elder Evan Fry.

The women's adult class was taught by Sister Roscoe Davey and two members of the extension service of Missouri University at Columbia, Missouri.

A missionary class was taught each morning by Seventy Donald E. Harvey.

Sister Ruth Haden, stake director of music, directed the stake choir of over 125 voices and the music for the services each night. The Celeste Chorus and the choirs from the various congregations of the stake furnished special numbers each night.

The junior department, which numbered 175, was under the supervision of Sister Virginia Bean.

A nursery was available for children between the ages of six months and three years.

Classes were provided each morning for each age group beginning with children of three years.

The evening junior church services featured religious films and stories.

On Saturday, August 16, the following men were recommended and approved for priesthood: Albert Millard of Osborn, Missouri, to the office of elder; William E. Kinney of Atchison, Kansas, to the office of priest; Darold Keith Hottman of Liberty, Missouri, to the office of priest; Herschel Hawley of Conception Junction, Missouri, to the office of deacon; and Lawrence Sindt of Osborn, Missouri, to the office of deacon.

Saturday afternoon a baptismal service was held at the Stewartville, Missouri, church.

Evangelists Orman Salisbury, A. B. Constance, and William Twombly were present during the entire reunion.

At seven o'clock each evening a variety of programs was enjoyed. The programs emphasized the activities of the different departments of the stake including the missionary, Boy Scouts, Zion's League, music, religious education, and junior church school.

Other activities included handicraft, afternoon recreation for everyone, and campfires for the Zion's Leaguers and juniors each evening after services.

The dining hall served all the meals for the campers. No charges were made but each person contributed an offering toward the cost of the food and expenses of operating the dining hall.—Reported by MARIE AGENSTEIN

New Officers Elected

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.—At the annual business meeting on August 27, the following officers were elected: pastor, Elder Floyd E. Jett; secretary, Mrs. Albert Holder; treasurer, Mrs. Sammy Hay; music leader, Miss Emma Jackson; women's leader, Mrs. Ed Sasse; church school superintendent, Mrs. Hubbard Neely; Zion's League leader, Charles Rouss Eastham.—Reported by MRS. RUTH HARP

Missionary Holds Series

OILTON, OKLAHOMA.—Elder Wallace Jackson, missionary to the Central Oklahoma district, held a two weeks series of services from August 24-September 7. He held cottage meetings for nonmembers on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Baptismal services were conducted by Elder Jackson for Mrs. Melva Sanger and Mrs. Grace Hetherington on September 7, with Elder Bennie Wise assisting him with the confirmation services the following evening.

Michael William Denny and Joseph William Wise were blessed on August 31.—Reported by INEZ SLOVER

The Children We Teach

by Elizabeth S. Whitehouse

Here is child psychology in understandable terms to serve as a guide for parents and church school teachers. The author shows how to let daily experiences guide the child into deeper religious convictions.

Timely Truths

By Apostle Paul M. Hanson

Part II

THERE IS NOW a great exodus of the Jews from all parts of the earth to Palestine; this is greater in some respects than the exodus of the Hebrews from Egypt to Canaan.

When I visited Palestine on my way home from Australia in 1906 the Turks were in control of the country. One day, reclining amid olive trees on the slope of the Mount of Olives and looking out across the valley upon Jerusalem spread out before me, I found my mind overflowed with thoughts. There was the Mosque of Omar, with its large graceful dome, standing where the temple stood in which Jesus was found as a boy.

I had heard ministers of our church preach that the Jews would soon return to Palestine. Some of our hymns contained similar sentiment. I asked myself, when will the Jews return—how can they return; the Turks are in control and will not sell the land, which is of great strategic importance, being where three continents impinge. The Jews are scattered over the earth and linked with their vested interests where they reside. How can they return? And I heard my voice answer, "I do not know, but I believe they will."

In 1914 the great World War broke out. In 1917 an announcement was made by Sir Arthur Balfour, speaking for the British Government, that his majesty's government looked with favor upon the establishing of Palestine as a national home for the Jews and would use its utmost endeavors to facilitate such object.

Now we have the State of Israel. What accounts for this miracle taking place in our day, this great exodus of the Jews from all parts of the earth to the land of their forefathers? What explains it? They were bruised and beaten through centuries, often exiled where it would mean death, or punished as parents for teaching Judaism to their children. Under such circumstances we can envisage a Jewish mother in exile looking around to see that no one could hear, and then looking carefully to make certain no one could see, she would perhaps say to her boys: "Isaac and Jacob, I want to tell you something. We are not always going to be as we are now, without the right of franchise, not allowed in the professions, and forced into ghettos. Someday we are going back to the land of our forefathers. We are going to be a great power, and someday, intellectually and spiritually, a blessing to the whole world. Someday even the Messiah is to come from our lineage. Boys, you belong to a great race."

When a Jew in these latter days arose as a leader, the ground was prepared and the movement was on. Now the Jews have Israel—a country of their own.

AND SOMEDAY Reorganized Latter Day Saints will have Zion. In 1924, the second time I was in Palestine, long before the establishment of the Jewish State, when visiting a fair at Jaffa in the old city of Joppa, in going around viewing the exhibits I came to a health booth. There I saw a young woman in a nurse's uniform. After hearing her speak a word or two, I asked, "How long since you came from the States?" She told me she had come from Tennessee. I asked her why she was in Palestine. She started to explain the ideals of her people; in response to which I assured her I was pretty well acquainted with the ideals of her people and was in sympathy with what they were seeking to achieve. Then she told me she was a trained nurse and had offered herself for whatever she could do to help realize the hope of her people.

On a street of Tel-Aviv I saw some beautiful portraits in a photographic studio window. I thought it was wonderful to see such works of art in the Holy Land. Upon entering, I was approached by a man about forty years of age. I spoke to him, and he answered in broken English. I asked "Why is an artist who can make such portraits as are in the window in Tel-Aviv?" His eyes glistened with the expressed appreciation of his work. He told me, much like the trained nurse, that he had come to Palestine with the hope of making whatever contribution he could in the achievement of the goal of his people.

I saw young women on the road breaking rocks for macadamized roads and singing as they worked. I can now better understand the time when there shall come to Zion the righteous from all nations with songs of everlasting joy.

WHAT IS THE EXPLANATION of the great miracle—the gathering of the Jews that is taking place and the establishment of the State of Israel? Perhaps we get close to bedrock when we consider what the mothers probably also said to their sons: "Boys, to our great and beloved forefather, Abraham, God revealed that this land I have told you about was to be given to him and to his posterity for an everlasting possession, and he would be their God. Abraham told it to Isaac; Isaac declared it to Jacob; Jacob made it known to his children. It has come down to us, and we are sure of it."

What was revealed to Abraham was not for him alone. No blessing from God was ever given just for the moment. The dividing of the Red Sea for the passing of Israel to Canaan was not to provide a momentary spectacular experience. Healing of the sick may be for the breadwinner of the family to survive, or the mother for the sake of the family or the children, or for the sake of the community, or the church, or for the world at large. Blessings from God should be reviewed, analyzed, and magnified. We have memory and intellect to do it. What a wonderful blessing for instance is eyesight. Why not weigh the significance of it? The power to see our loved ones and friends—even the creations of God by night as well as day. As we contemplate our blessings we are lost in wonderment and are at times prompted to say, "It is wonderful, it is wonderful, it is wonderful!"

WHY AM I a Reorganized Latter Day Saint? Why are you a member of the church? I think the real reason why I am in the church goes back to my childhood. When I first became conscious of God, I do not recall any more than I can remember things of my infancy; but I remember as a child, when living at Council Bluffs, Iowa, that my maternal grandparents who lived in the country occasionally drove in. Sometimes they and my parents would gather in the living room and talk over experiences. They did not always know when I was in the next room listening. Children are curious—that is how they learn. The adults did not know that I was listening—they were not talking for me to hear. When a child hears parents and relatives saying things and talking about matters, he knows by their attitude and vibration of voice whether they are telling what they believe to be true or not.

Well, I would hear them talk maybe about the trip of my grandparents coming to America from Denmark when my mother was about seven years old. After hearing elders of the Utah Mormon church preach, they believed certain things they heard about the Restoration of God's work in the latter days, the church, unchangeability of God, and Zion. I heard them talking about getting their covered wagons ready at Florence, a suburb of Omaha, and starting across the plains to Utah. There is adventure. I was interested. My mother, as a girl, walked nearly all the way across the plains, and once the Indians swooped down on the caravan and carried off a woman. Then hurrying out of the reach of the Indians, so as to avoid another attack, they finally reached Salt Lake City. What terrible discouragement and disappointment it was when they heard the proclamation of the doctrine of polygamy reverberating through the valley from nearly every pulpit.

Then what? I can recall grandmother, who lived to a very advanced age, referring to learning in Utah of elders of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, presided over by a son of the Prophet Joseph Smith. My maternal grandparents were baptized at night at Goshen, Utah, into the Reorganized Church.

Suppose when I was listening I had heard them say, "Wasn't that a wild-goose chase, leaving Denmark, relatives, and friends, and going out there to Utah?" Likely I would have decided that it was, going through all of those experiences, crossing the plains, my mother walking nearly all the way, and a sister of my mother being buried somewhere between Florence and the Rocky Mountains. But when I heard Grandma speaking and talking of Zion, rejoicing in having found the church of God she had come from her homeland to be near—as well as what others said—I thought, "The trip was worth it. They had found the kingdom of God."

What an army we would soon have if we could, with other conversions, save all, or nearly all, to the church of the children of Reorganized Latter Day Saint parentage!

I am very happy to have had the privilege of meeting with the women of the church. In closing I wish to say that in study and prayer all may sense the church's triumphal progress to its glorious consummation.

The Home Library

Buying or Building a House, by B. Kenneth Johnstone and Associates. (Whittlesey House, McGraw-Hill Book Company, Inc., New York. $3.50)

This is not a build-your-own-home manual. The five authors, all members of the Department of Architecture of the School of Engineering, Pennsylvania State College, did not intend to make carpenters and masons, plumbers and electricians out of homeseekers who follow other vocations. Instead, their aim was to give to the reader the basic knowledge he will need to solve the problems he must solve before he can turn a happy key in the lock on his own door and shut the world out.

The instructions begin with the financing of the building or buying project, showing how to determine how much one can pay for a home and where to get the money. After that hurdle, the rest of the obstacle course is easy.

Hand in hand with the authors, the reader goes sailing right through such tough problems as site selection, planning the house, plan analysis, judging house construction, cost analysis, working drawings and specifications, relations with architect and contractor, and liabilities of the owner of a house under construction.

The many charts, diagrams, and drawings are unusually clear and easy to understand; the buyer's check list provides a routine for thoroughly and completely examining a house already built which is under consideration for purchase.

Possession of the information given in this book will save prospective homeowners many dollars and many troubles and help them secure a home which is suited to their needs and remarkably like their long-awaited dream house.

Creative Home Decorating, by Hazel Kory Rockow, Ph. D., and Julius Rockow. New, Revised Edition. (H. S. Stuttman Co., New York. $4.95)

"The point of view underlying this book . . . is that home decoration is a creative activity," say the authors in their introduction to Creative Home Decorating. "As such, it is guided by principles and esthetic values common to all creative arts. Furthermore, fifteen years of active classroom and lecture experience has convinced one of the authors that practice not enlightened by a knowledge of principles is on the fringe of the trial and error method. Trial and error is uneconomical of money, time, and effort, and all too often never transcends error. For this reason, the authors have emphasized principles throughout the book, as well as their practical application."

This book contains all that any book on the subject usually contains—and more. Mrs. Rockow has taught home economics for more than fifteen years at Brooklyn College, and Mr. Rockow is actively working at interior decorating, and writing and lecturing on the subject. The combination of the masculine and feminine approaches to the furnishing of a home makes this book of increased value to the home manager who must please both masculine and feminine preferences and needs in home environment.

The authors have a high degree of ability in writing. They have so organized their material that principles and application follow each other logically; their writing style is clear, and their attitude toward the reader is one of friendly co-operation. They have managed to make the development of a beautiful home interior possible in every situation and for every purse.

The volume is rich in charts, drawings, and color photography. It is highly recommended as a companion volume to the book on house building or buying reviewed above, or alone.

These books may be ordered from Herald House, Independence, Mo.

Contents That Count

Seventy Herbert Lynn tells of the housewife who went to her family doctor and complained of great boredom. "It's dishes, beds, and sweeping—dishes, beds, and sweeping, over and over. I'm sick unto death of it all!"

The kindly doctor took three vials, identical in shape and held them up before her. "Look," he said, "each of these vials is the same but in one there is perfume, in one there is life-giving medicine, and in the other there is poison. It's not the vials which are different, but what has been put into them."

All work, even the most interesting, may at time become boring—but the plan of God for Latter Day Saints should help them fill the vials of their lives with something better than boredom.

ALICE ZION BUCKLEY

Opportunity Unlimited

By Louise Scott Wrigley

THE LITTLE WHITE CHURCH sat, forlorn as a neglected old lady, between the big elm tree and the dusty road. The elm tree's long branches whispered against the broken windowpane. Across the road the yellow wheat was pushed and pulled into an undulating, almost-harvest dance as the wind stirred the flexible silken tassels.

The little church had not always known loneliness. Once her doors welcomed the apple-cheeked and the silver-haired. Once her altar offered freedom and peace and light to all worshipful hearts. But that was before the grasping highway slid out across the rolling hills to claim another town; before the city grew, street by street, and telephone pole by telephone pole. It was then that the younger people, starting their new families, built their look-alike houses on look-alike streets and painted the look-alike shutters red or blue to assert their individuality. It was then that the old people found it too strenuous a walk down the country lane in the hot sun, and the golf course beckoned the half-hearted to a stimulating morning of getting their heads blistered and following a little white ball in and out of sand traps.

A clump of sweet William still grew by the door, as if by its persevering beauty it could draw back the wandering feet which had passed by for so long. But the little white church died an almost unnoticed death, there between the elm tree and the dusty road.

OF COURSE, this is a story about a strange church in some other part of the country where we have never been. It couldn't possibly be a story about our branch—could it?

What are we doing to make this a story about another church in another town where we have never been? What are we constructively offering to our pastors, to our congregations, to our God? There are so many avenues of service besides the obvious ones. What about the planning of the week's activities, the worship services, keeping the buildings in order, working for better quarters, friendly visiting, and witnessing with our neighbors over the lawn mower and the snow shovel? What about getting out the bulletins and collecting announcements, organizing new groups, and supporting special events? What about the encouragement and enthusiasm which we can radiate in regard to new ideas which need a boost to catch on. What about being good, solid assets when a change comes about in management or policy instead of being teetery, on-the-fence branch liabilities?

Membership in this church gives us many privileges which we usually employ to their fullest. It also gives us many responsibilities which we too often hide in the closet until they suddenly fall out on us one day. What a sad commentary on all of us that after all these years of God's graciousness to us, we still have the "gimmees." Like small children we hug our blessings to us like toys we have collected, then drop them all to reach for one more that looks bigger.

TOO MANY OF US never give much serious thought to the thousand-and-one little plans and efforts which make each branch, large or small, function as it should. In seeking outlets for our love for our fellow-man, our hope for the future, our need to be needed, we overlook some aspects of service by which we might well lend a helping hand and discover a new peace and satisfaction. How much are we counting for in our branch? Are we content to sit and take from others—their time, their talent, their generosity, their ideas—drawing, drawing all the time? Do we consider this our due because we warm a pew some Sundays and put a dollar in the collection plate once a month? Then we had better about-face and wake up to what we are missing. That isn't the attitude from which happiness springs. We need to be doing for others to know beyond any doubt what living and giving are all about.

Branch service can be the most valuable training ground in the world. Music, speech, leadership training, organization, psychology, art, business administration—the average branch offers opportunities for development in many fields. In addition, where could we learn in kinder surroundings? We know these people. We have lived close to them. We find them helpful about our mistakes, eager to assist us. We should locate the person in the branch with enthusiasm, the person with wisdom, the person with tact and friendliness, and draw from each of these to supplement our own gifts and background. Many of them will give freely of their experienced guidance that we may grow.

We may not always have the opportunity to serve in the branch of our childhood and growing years, where we were loved and understood. So now while the opportunity is here we should gather skill in the principles and practices which contribute toward a branch which has living, growing qualities and an appeal to the outsider looking in. Then, wherever we are, we shall be equipped to add something important to the success of branch projects.

We always get more than we give. This is the plus in branch service. This is the plus in life—the warm-hearted giving. We should never hold back the best part of our personality to lavish on a chosen few, but give of it liberally, time after time, to all activities in which we engage. We shall always have a storehouse of love within us from which to draw as we minister to our brother.

IT IS ALL TOO EASY for young people to carry on fiercely the feuds and personality differences which threaten to split a branch. Before we lend our strength and intelligence to such a situation, we should stand back, take a good look at it, and accept the good which each side is able to offer, remembering to be charitable when people are so caught in their own chains of contention that they have allowed the quality of their service to suffer. Then, because we have considered prayerfully all aspects of the problem, it may be our love and concern which will smooth out the rough places and bring about understanding between others. How much better a contribution this than the addition of more confusion and discord.

Who knows what really caused the little white church to come to its forlorn end? Perhaps the people slipped away into indifference. Perhaps they were driven out—just as surely as by whip and fire—by selfishness and thoughtlessness, by the incompetence and unconcern they experienced at the hands of others.

As we survey our own home branch we may find those who have no knowledge of the satisfaction to be found by participating in branch activities. Perhaps we ourselves have turned our faces another way because of some imperfection or disagreement. Why shrink from this challenge? It's part of our responsibility to help erase the imperfection and resolve the disagreement.

It is not impossible to meet any situation with an adequate solution if we walk only one step of the way at a time. Each wise step we take immediately ahead of us changes the big picture, so why should we unduly concern ourselves with obstacles which may, and often do, disappear before we reach them. If we could more nearly turn our energies to living each day positively, to the very best of our capacities, we would harvest much in happiness and contentment.

GOD IS GOOD TO US. He is instantly at our side to lift us. His love enfolds us in the very physical beauty of our earthly surroundings. His hope for us is that we may respond to his quickening power, to the divinity in us. His way is that we shall, having climbed ourselves, reach back with a strong hand to lift our wavering brother, to so fill him with love and strength that he may in turn outstretch his hand to the faltering one at his side. This chain of human helpfulness and unity in our branch needs us for its strength.

It is inspiring to work under the leadership of someone who is quietly competent and has an air of confidence, deep faith, and joy in what he is doing! If we know such a leader as that, we should observe him at work and incorporate his methods in our own service.

Perhaps we can fill in as someone's assistant. Lots of people care little for "assisting," but therein lies a source of practical knowledge and a chance to try our wings under guidance. Someone can catch our mistakes before they have done any damage. Someone will welcome our ideas and teach us how to develop them on our own.

Perhaps we should step outside our own field of absolute knowledge in quest of a new skill. We were never meant to be lopsided in our learning, so we might well lend a helping hand if we are called on to work in a different capacity. By so doing we may uncover entirely new interests which can broaden our value to the branch.

We should be unswerving in our branch loyalty, sharing with our leadership, outgoing with our concern, receptive to the individual whom timidity or personal problems have prevented from doing a greater work.

And when some phase of branch leadership falls to us we must remember our training and our opportunities, the kindness and understanding shown us when we were growing in service. Then it is our duty to take some other young person to be personally responsible for. We should open our hearts and our fund of experience to him, so that he too may render a more excellent service when his time comes to step forward. We must be alert to the possibilities in every single person around us, for we may find that, after all, our own greatest service to the branch lies in our ability to discover and draw out the best in others.

DEATHS

BURCH.—Sarah Jane, was born March 3, 1878, in Mapleton, Iowa, and died August 28, 1952, at her home in Independence, Missouri. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1912 and since 1915 had resided in Independence. She was a frequent contributor to the Ensign, and her husband, George W. Burch, painted many murals for the Harvest Home Festival which used to be held annually at the Auditorium. Mr. Burch preceded her in death in 1936.

Surviving are four sons: Thomas C., Donald L., and Elisha L., all of Independence, and Clifford K. of Sloan, Iowa; a sister, Esther Willett of Sioux City, Iowa; two brothers: George Keairns of Sioux City and Will Keairns of Huron, South Dakota; eight grandchildren; and sixteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the George Carson Chapel by Elders John Robinson and Warren Haskins. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

EVANS.—Martha Ellen, was born June 29, 1875, at Westaughton, Lancashire, England, and died August 26, 1952, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. T. W. Mathews, in Dallas, Texas. As a child she moved with her parents to Pennsylvania, then to Kansas. At the age of nineteen she was married to James W. Evans, who preceded her in death eight years ago. After that she made her home with a daughter, Mrs. Earl Bain of Chanute, Kansas, for a while, then went to her daughter's home in Texas, where she spent the remainder of her life.

Besides her two daughters she leaves a son, James, of Wheaton, Illinois; two sisters: Mrs. Elizabeth Fredricks of Plains, Kansas, and Mrs. Anna Maloney of Independence, Missouri; and six grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder John Blackmore at the Wilson Johnson Chapel in Chanute. Interment was in Elmwood Cemetery, Chanute.

FELCH.—Esther Cora, daughter of the late Robert and Anna Downing, was born March 25, 1902, at Loraine, Ohio, and died August 25, 1952, at the St. Joseph, Missouri, Methodist Hospital. On October 23, 1921, she was married to Hallard W. Felch, who survives her. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1933; she also belonged to the Eastern Star, Chapter 55.

Besides her husband she leaves a son, Gary Dean, of the home; two daughters: Mrs. Shirley Jean Hough and Shayron Jeanene of the home; a brother, James C. Downing of St. Joseph; and two sisters: Mrs. Archie Behnson of St. Joseph and Mrs. Max Simmons of Kansas City, Missouri. The funeral was held in Clark Chapel, South St. Joseph, Evangelist Orman Salisbury and Seventy Donald Harvey officiating. Interment was in the St. Joseph Memorial Cemetery.

FISHER.—Frederick George Ernest, died August 7, 1952, in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, at the age of sixty-seven. He had farmed in Birsay, Saskatchewan, for thirty-six years, after which he moved to Saskatoon.

He is survived by his wife, Mabel, of Saskatoon; five daughters: Mrs. J. Menzies of Parkersburg, West Virginia; Mrs. F. L. Dickson of Calgary, Alberta; Mrs. J. McNutt of Wichita, Kansas; June of Montreal, Quebec; and Joy of Saskatoon; four sons: Willard and Orval of Birsay; Kenneth and Howard of Saskatoon; three sisters: Mrs. C. R. Bowerman of Edmonton, Alberta; Mrs. D. D. McLean of Independence, Missouri; and Mrs. T. J. Strutz of Jacksonville, Florida; a brother, Henry Fisher of Shellbrook, Saskatchewan; and ten grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Pastor J. A. Gendron. Burial was in Woodlawn Cemetery, Saskatoon.

Introducing

NETTIE FRATER, Drummoyne, Australia (page 9). This daughter of Presbyterian missionaries was born in the New Hebrides of the South Pacific. She went to Glasgow, Scotland, for her education and continued in Melbourne, Australia, then joined her parents as missionary teacher. In 1931 she contracted tropical fever and had to give up her work because of ill-health. She has always been interested in reading and storytelling, and had a story published in the famous British Children's Annual while she was still a girl. Her hobby is gardening. She has made horticulture a study and received a diploma in this field.

She is a sister of High Priest Alan S. Frater, missionary appointee, and was baptized in April, 1951, at Balmain, New South Wales. The Book of Mormon has been especially fascinating to her, and she is especially interested in its possible connection with South Pacific native ancestry.

P.S.

* GIFTS

I met a man who was proud of his gifts, his intellectual capacities, and his brilliance in conversation. It occurred to me that he was making a mistake. It was wrong for him to take personal credit for those gifts. He was simply the receiver of them, not their creator. The Great Giver of all good things should have the credit. . . . Always remember, when you are tempted to be a little proud of yourself, who gave those excellent gifts to you!

* NOTES

Among the names appropriate for professions, consider this one: Near Lexington, Missouri, a man named McGill sells fresh fish.

We were cruising along the highway at what seemed a safe fifty miles per hour. Another car roared around us at a much higher speed. On the back of it was a sign, "Jesus saves." Well, at eighty miles an hour, it is rather difficult, even for Him, to save a man.

It was a clear warm day when we left the house to be gone for a few hours. Surely it would not hurt, we thought, to leave the windows open. If we closed them, the house would be like an oven when we returned. But a cautious streak, and some small inner voice, sent us back to close them anyway. While we were gone a storm swept the city, and an inch of rain fell during a gale. The damage would have been heavy if all that water had been blown in. . . . Even when things look the best, it is often wise to prepare for the worst. A few hours can change everything.

Don't count your friends when you are making money and everything is coming your way. If you would know your true friends, count them when adversity strikes, when trouble and bad fortune are your lot, and when enemies are making war on you. The fair-weather friends will all vanish when you need them most.

If you live in a house long enough, you will find trash and useless things crowding out the really useful ones. Only when you move will you earn how many hundreds of dollars you have spent foolishly on things you didn't need and couldn't use. People are often victims of "bargains." Nothing is a bargain unless you need it.

We drove around the campus of a small but famous college. The buildings were quaint, old, and interesting. But something was missing, and we felt that we were not seeing the college at all. The doors were locked for the summer vacation, the students were away doing the thousands of things students do in vacations, and the faculty members were gone too. The buildings were there, but the college—the "collection" of people who made it—was gone. What is a college or a university? Teachers and students. . . .

It is about the same with a church. What is a church? A building? The building alone is no better than a warehouse. A church is people—congregation, pastor, and assisting priesthood. Never forget the importance of the people.

THE LOVE OF CHILDREN was manifested early in her life. In her adolescent period she established a record by coaxing the babies to come to her, and she cared for them so the mothers could listen to the worship service. Once she was asked to hold a sick three-year-old boy while he was being administered to following a church service because he would "rest contented in her arms." Later this devotion led Lillie to take up the profession of teaching school and editing the children's story paper and quarterlies.

She is a third generation Latter Day Saint. Her grandfather, T. R. Hawkins, came from Nauvoo and was an elder for the Reorganization in Dayton, Nevada. Elder J. C. Clapp baptized her in Tulare, California, at the age of 9. She started teaching in the church school when she was 16. Her mother was well acquainted with Joseph and Emma Burton, and her faithfulness in telling of these pioneer Saints made Lillie vitally interested in the book, Beatrice Witherspoon, and determined to use her talents in the church. She says, "I have sought the Lord's direction and been guided by him all my life."

After being graduated from Tulare High School she took two years work at Fresno State College, then began public school teaching. Later she came to Central Missouri State Teacher's College, Warrensburg, Missouri, and received her B.S. in Education degree in 1943. She spent six years in Hawaii in teaching positions and serving the congregations there.

She began work in the editorial department at Herald House on July 1, 1947, and considers this an extension of her teaching stewardship through the printed word. She is Assistant Editor of Church School Literature, Editor of Zion's Hope, assistant editor of Daily Bread, and joint author of the book on recreation entitled, It Can Be Fun. Her hobbies include music, reading, and travel.

News and Notes

INSTITUTES CONVENES

The opening day of the Doctrine and Covenants Institute was September 28. President Israel A. Smith was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour. In the afternoon President W. Wallace Smith was the speaker, and Apostle Arthur Oakman gave the evening address.

PRESIDENT SMITH SPEAKS

President Israel A. Smith spoke at the Center Stake conference on September 22. On September 21 he was the speaker at the morning service at Walnut Park Church. He told of his recent experiences in Europe.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS IN LAMONI

President F. Henry Edwards was in Lamoni, September 21. He met with the stake high council and preached the evening sermon to a capacity crowd assembled in the new church.

GROUP VISITS INDEPENDENCE

Forty children and parents from St. Joseph, Missouri, visited Independence September 21. They attended morning services at the Stone Church church school and junior church. They were welcomed to the Center Stake by President W. Wallace Smith, and Elder Glaude A. Smith, pastor of the Stone Church, delivered the morning sermon. Leon Steckel of St. Joseph was in charge of the group.

CENTER STAKE CONFERENCE HELD

Approximately 350 people attended the Center Stake conference at the Stone Church September 22. The stake presidency, Elders Charles V. Graham, Glaude A. Smith, and Fred O. Davies, officiated. Lee Hart, stake youth leader, was ordained to the office of elder. The conference approved the names of seventeen men for ordination to the priesthood. Stake Bishop Harold Cackler read a report of finances to the group. The official action of the Joint Council in the appointment of Fred O. Davies to the Kansas City Stake, to be replaced by Elder Herbert Lively in the Center Stake, was also presented to the conference.

APOSTLE GLEAZER IN THE WEST

Following the adult camp at Santa Cruz in the Northern California District, which in many respect resembled a reunion, Apostle E. J. Gleazer attended the Silver Lake Reunion and later ministered in the British Columbia, Seattle, and Oregon Districts, returning for Council of Twelve sessions which were followed by Joint Council. With the completion of Joint Council meetings, Brother Gleazer returned to California where he will minister in southern California, Los Angeles Stake, and northern California.

Apostle Gleazer reports that Seventy Aleah Koury conducted a fifteen-day series in Wenatchee, Washington, the last half of August, at the close of which ten candidates were baptized.

BOY SCOUT RETREAT HELD

The annual Scout and Scouters retreat of the church-sponsored troops was held September 20 and 21 at Lake Doniphan, near Excelsior Springs, Missouri. More than two hundred Scouts and sixty adult Scouters represented the fifteen congregations of the Center Stake which sponsor troops. The theme of the retreat was "The Church Relies on Scouting." Lee Hart, stake youth leader, served as camp director assisted by Charles V. Graham, Roy Thrutchley, Paul Anderson, Marvin Adkins, John F. Hiles, Clyde Brown, Bob Akers, Lilburn Snow, Lawrence Premoe, Ed Mallicoat, and Lee Wilson.

Concerning Our Mission

To everyone, great and small, God gives a mission in life: to some, "Go ye into all the world"; to some, "Feed my sheep."

DEATH takes no holidays—his busiest seasons are when we take ours. New Year's Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, and Christmas are occasions when we make human slaughterhouses of our highways. We kill more citizens here than die in the Korean War. We have made the automobile an instrument of murder and self-destruction, more dangerous than guns. Driving is no longer a recreation. One turns off the highway and parks the car in his own driveway with the feeling that he has once more escaped with his life from a madhouse. The driver plays a game with death, with survival as the prize.

Another sobering thought: Have you observed how often the good and the innocent die, while drunken, evil, and worthless persons escape with scratches, or unscathed? A skeptical friend inquired significantly, "Does the Devil take better care of his friends than the Lord does?" I have an answer for that question, but I am sure there must be a better one than I have at present, and I would like to know it now.

A CHURCH OFFICIAL was killed on the way to enroll his daughter in college. A young man, finishing his studies and ready for church work, lost his life in what seemed like a freak accident. The mother of several children—mere babies—died of an incurable ailment. In a recent accident to a dear friend, a life was lost, a young mother seriously injured. Now we are praying for the recovery of the mother, and for peace and understanding for those who survive.

Our feelings are deeply stirred; our faith is severely shaken by the tragic experience. Our hearts cry out, "Why?" And earth has no answer for our cries. We, too, need a new understanding of the ways of God in the lives of men in order to regain our peace.

God will have his own way of answering our question when he knows we are ready to receive it. But we must remember our limitations. It is as hard for us to understand his ways as it is for little children to understand their parents' ways when the greater problems of life confront them.

What we can know now may be only a very dim view of the clear truth. "Now we see as through a glass darkly"—the crudely fashioned handmade glass symbolic of the limitations of man's nature, not of God's. We search for the means to understand.

NO UNDERSTANDING worthy of the name, no peace of mind, no serenity of spirit can come to us without knowing what we are and why we are here. The earth is the temporary residence of the mortal body. Heaven is the eternal home of the spirit. We are here only on a mission. "We are pilgrims and strangers," in the language of the Hebrew letter. "We look for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God," and we know that the eternal city is not to be found in this world. In other words, our enduring mission does not have this world for its objective. We have a task here for a time. It may be a training ground, a proving field, for eternity.

THIS SUNDAY MORNING dawned on a fair and beautiful world. It is hard to reconcile this pleasant picture with the dark tragedy that has come to our friends, the shadows of a storm dark and dangerous.

But it has happened, this very hour, that a beautiful book, A Man Called Peter, by Catherine Marshall, has come to hand at a time when it could give help. In this biography of Peter Marshall, late Chaplain of the United States Senate, two ideas stand out: the closeness (immanence) of God, and the character of our mission. That book is as helpful now as Answer Without Ceasing, by Margaret Lee Runbeck, was on another occasion.

In the darkness of the ways and experiences through which we must sometimes walk, it may be difficult or impossible to see the shining of the divine light above our clouds; it may seem that no tiniest ray filters down into our gloom: we cannot feel the touch of his hand. But he is with us, working out his great plans for us and for the eternal kingdom, even though events seem tragic. Ours is only a temporary mission on this earth. The great appointment will be to labor in a more worthy and durable place.

Death is not a punishment, not a reprisal. It is not even a deprivation, in the larger sense. What is loss to us, in terms of affectionate companionship, is gain to those who are taken, for they are given something greater than what they lose.

Our ultimate mission is not to this world. The glorious work lies beyond here and now. This life is important, of course, and worthy of our best efforts. But when the call comes for someone to return to the eternal headquarters for a new briefing and reassignment, let us not be without hope.

Bishop Kohlman Appointment in Canada

Due to the fact that the church is incorporating in Canada in the Province of Ontario, and will necessarily have to register in other provinces, notice is hereby given of the appointment of Bishop Leslie W. Kohlman to include all of Canada.

His work will continue to be primarily in the Province of Ontario.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

John Cadwell, Bishop's Counselor in Ontario

Bishop L. W. Kohlman has advised us of the selection of Elder John Alexander Cadwell to serve as counselor in the work of the bishopric in Ontario. We are glad to publish notice of his selection and to give our approval.

We have appreciated very much the service Elder Cadwell has given in years past in the work of the bishopric and commend him to the Saints of Ontario in association with Bishop Kohlman.

Report of Baptisms

The number of baptisms reported to the Department of Statistics in August should cause every member of the church to pause for a careful check of his missionary activity. There were 384 baptisms reported in August, which is 129 less than for last August. To the end of August 2,838 have been recorded. This is 481 less than for the same period last year.

Districts and stakes with the 5 highest baptismal totals recorded in August are Center Stake of Zion—26; Des Moines District—22; Los Angeles Stake—16; Kansas City Stake—15; Spring River District—15.

Branches and missions with the 5 highest baptismal totals recorded are Des Moines, Iowa—15; Woodbine, Iowa—10; Council Bluffs, Iowa—9; Juniata, Michigan—9; San Bernardino, California—8.

"Messiah" Broadcast December 21

The Messiah, our "Christmas Gift to the Nation," will be presented Sunday, December 21. Beginning at 10:30 p.m., CST, the broadcast will be carried by the Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations. As last year, it will originate at the TV Playhouse of Radio Station KMBC in Kansas City, Missouri.

There will be the usual 280 voice Messiah Choir of Independence, guest soloists, and the Kansas City Philharmonic. Also, there will be a "live audience" of invited persons and others who request free tickets until the limit of 2,600 is reached.

Franklyn S. Weddle, Director of Music and of Radio, will again direct The Messiah. He has announced that the initial rehearsal will be held Sunday, October 12, at the Auditorium. Such a session will be held for the chorus on consecutive weeks at four o'clock until the broadcast, with the exception of November 2. Auditions will be held October 12 and 19.

Detailed information concerning advertising, artists, broadcast, and ways you can assist will reach you soon. In the meantime, you can be of great assistance by spreading the news in your congregation and in your neighborhood. Also, call or write your local C.B.S. radio affiliate and ask if this network program will be broadcast on December 21 at the time designated for your area. Your call may be a definite factor in the station's decision to carry the program.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Excerpts from letter dated August 26, 1952, to President W. Wallace Smith from Don V. Lents.

We continue to enjoy new experiences all the time. This morning I returned from Sutton-in-Ashfield. We had a week-end gathering which gave me an opportunity to meet with the Saints in that area to see where and under what conditions they worship. It also gave these people a little opportunity to become better acquainted with me. I have just two more congregations to call on, and I will have made a complete survey and tour of the Mission. As soon as these two congregations are contacted I then plan to begin a program of going into each branch for at least a ten-day contact; this will permit me to visit in the homes and to follow up on prospects.

The egg ration at the present time is one egg a person per week, so of course we have few breakfasts of eggs and bacon. The meat ration was increased 2d this week, which brings the amount of meat up to about 2s/2d or about 30c of meat a week per person. I am amazed how these people get by on their meager income. The average weekly wage seems to be about seven pounds, and a pound right now is $2.80.

The countryside over here is very pretty. Nuneaton is just eight miles from Coventry; about twenty-five miles from Stratford-on-Avon; about twenty miles from Warwick and Kenilworth castles, so it is possible for us to take a little excursion once in awhile on the busses. Last week I was in South Wales, which is also very pretty, however the weather was cold and damp (as usual). Perhaps I shall be able to visit that country one of these days when the weather will cooperate.

Word comes to us from Elder James C. Phillips that the mission at Jackson, Michigan, was organized into a branch on September 11, 1952. Elder J. Cox is the pastor of this newly formed branch. We wish these saints success in their new status.

OCTOBER THEME

The General Church is suggesting the use in preaching and prayer meetings of the theme, "Where Is the Kingdom?"

Seek Ye First the Kingdom of God

By John F. Sheehy

A sermon given August 24, 1952, at the Campus in Independence, Mo.

The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions; then take another stick and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions; and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand. . . . Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand. . . .

And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever. . . .

Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them; and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore. My tabernacle also shall be with them; yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore.—Ezekiel 37: 15-17, 19, 25-28.

IT WAS JUST AFTER ten o'clock on the night of April 14, 1912, that the "Titanic," the largest ship then afloat, crashed in mid-Atlantic into an iceberg and four hours later went to the bottom. Much has been written about all that took place in those four hours. A certain woman, who had been allotted a place in one of the lifeboats, asked if she might run back to her stateroom, and she was given three minutes to go. Money and costly gems littered the floor. In her own stateroom she saw treasures waiting to be picked up. She saw—and took no heed. Grabbing three oranges which she knew to be there, she ran and took her place in the lifeboat. In a few minutes values were transformed. Precious things became worthless. It was life or death. Costly jewels were no longer precious, but life was.

Death is ever-present—in the ships at sea, in the air, on the battlefront. Death stalks the highways and city streets. Death is in the home, and in the office, and in the field.

What are first things? Why not put first things first all the time? It was Jesus who said, "Seek ye to bring forth the kingdom of God" (Luke 12: 34). Let the kingdom of God be the treasure of your heart. Ac-ording to Matthew 6: 38, Jesus said, "Seek not the things of this world but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God." Before we can help to build it up, we must first find it. It is important that we do, for the kingdom of God is the church, and the church is like unto a great ship of Noah's day—a place of salvation.

Roger Williams was pastor of the first Baptist meetinghouse, erected in 1774, only four years, when he withdrew, not only from his official relations, but also ceased any longer to worship with his brethren, having come to the conclusion that there is "no regularly constituted church on earth, nor any person authorized to administer any church ordinance: nor could there be, until new apostles were sent by the great head of the church, for whose coming he was seeking.—Picturesque America, pages 500, 502.

We believe the "new apostles" Roger Williams sought came with the Restoration of the church in 1830.

ONE OF THE CHIEF cornerstones of the Restoration is the Book of Mormon. It contains the fullness of the gospel. It comes as another witness for Christ and supports the

JOHN F. SHEEHY

Bible in Doctrine, ideals, principles, and hopes of the kingdom.

Charles Wesley, another well-known reformer and composer of hymns, long ago wrote:

Almighty God of love,
Set up the attractive sign,
And summon who thou dost approve
For messengers divine.

From favored Abraham's seed
The new apostles choose,
In isle and continents to spread
The soul-reviving news.

Previous to that dreadful day
Which shall thy foes consume,
Jesus to prepare the way,
Let the last prophet come.

It is our teaching and belief that this prayer hymn has been answered. The last prophet and the new apostles have been sent, and the good news of the kingdom is on its way from land to land. The Book of Mormon also contains that good news, which is the gospel of the kingdom.

Let us consider the wording of Isaiah's dramatic prophecy. "The words" of the book are to be delivered to a learned man who is to say, "I cannot read a sealed book."

Martin Harris said he took copies of the strange characters from the plates of gold to Professor Anthon, of New York City, and this learned man of Columbia University said, "I cannot read a sealed book."

Who was this Martin Harris? The Palmyra Freeman, a newspaper published at Palmyra, New York, had this to say on August 31, 1829, about the work of Joseph Smith:

"A few, however, believed the golden story, among them Martin Harris, an honest and industrious farmer of this town."

This honest, industrious, middle-aged farmer, as he was known by his neighbors before he became a member of the church, is the man who took the words of the Book to the learned professor to read, fulfilling that part of the prophecy in the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah. The people of his home town knew him. They also knew that he was looking for someone who might be able to read the strange engravings upon the plates of gold. Very likely Mr. Harris wanted to know more about the claims of Joseph Smith. Whatever the reasons, he was the man who acted out the part that someone would play, according to Isaiah's remarkable prophecy. In the same newspaper, The Palmyra Freeman, June, 1829, we read:

Martin Harris took some of the characters interpreted by Smith and went in search of someone, besides Smith, who was learned enough to English them; but all of whom he applied happened not to be possessed of sufficient knowledge to give satisfaction.

THE STORY of the twelve sons of Jacob always gave Joseph a prominent place. It was Joseph who went down into Egypt and became a man of great power and influence. Men have called him the world's first food administrator. He was elevated to the position of prime minister. When the tribes of Israel were given their inheritance in the land of Palestine, no inheritance was granted to Joseph. The prophets had already said of him, "Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall. The blessings of thy Fathers have prevailed above the blessing of my progenitors unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills" (Genesis 49: 22, 26). Much more could be said about Joseph's not having a small portion of land in Palestine, but a great land in a far-off country. In Deuteronomy 33: 13 we read about the blessings of the prophet: "And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land." It is no wonder that the prophet Ezekiel indicated that God would not only have a "stick of Judah" but a "stick of Joseph" and that the time would come when the writings of Judah and those of Joseph would be joined together in the hand of God for some great purpose.

The Book of Mormon is "the writings of Joseph." The wall or boundary line over which the fruitful bough (Joseph) was to run is the sea, and the land which was to be unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills is America. These are the claims we make for the Book of Mormon—that it is the writings of the descendants of Joseph.

The most important thing about the Book is the Book itself. It is not a substitute for the Bible; it is another Bible or another record containing the word of God.

IN ADDITION to saying that the Book of Mormon contains a history of the inhabitants of the western continent from 2,200 B. C. to A. D. 421, we would say that it contains the religious, political and social history of three distinctly different colonies, which migrated from Asia to America during a period of twenty-six hundred years. It describes—sometimes with considerable detail and at other times with more brevity—their migrations, their political and social conflicts and associations, their religious experiences, their successes and their failures, the building of empires, the final destruction of their political structures, and the descent to savagery by a once powerful and cultured people.

Moroni says that the purpose of the Book of Mormon is to convince the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ who manifests himself unto all nations. The Book of Mormon has a distinct message with a definite purpose for the Lamanite, the Jew, and the Gentile.

Nephi says:

The things which were written, should be kept for the instruction of my people, who should possess the land, and also for other wise purposes, which purposes are known unto the Lord. . . . And it shall also be of worth unto the Gentiles.—1 Nephi 5: 224; 7: 19.

Moroni, the last of the Nephite prophets, says:

God has not ceased to be a god of miracles. Behold, are not the things that God has wrought marvelous in our eyes? Yea, and who can comprehend the marvelous works of God? Who shall say that it was not a miracle, that by his word the heaven and the earth should be; and by the power of his word, man was created of the dust of the earth.—Mormon 4: 76-78.

The creation of the earth and the creation of man, however accounted for, still remains filled with mystery and stands as the greatest of all miracles, as far as man is concerned. For the most learned scientist knows but little more than the humblest Christian about the actual processes of creation in the universe.

Moroni says further:

And if there were miracles wrought, then why has God ceased to be a God of miracles, and yet be an unchangeable being? And behold I say unto you, He changeth not; if so, he would cease to be God. . . . He ceaseth to do miracles among the children of men . . . because . . . they dwindle in unbelief, and depart from the right way, and know not the god in whom they should trust.—Mormon 4: 81-83.

According to Moroni if no miracles are to be found among us, it is not God's fault! When that condition exists, it is time for much prayer.

He continues:

(Those) who deny the revelations of God, and say that they are done away, that there are no revelations, nor prophecies, nor gifts, nor healing, nor speaking with tongues, and the interpretation of tongues. Behold I say unto you, he that denieth these things, knoweth not the gospel of Christ; yea, he has not read the Scriptures; if so, he does not understand them.—Mormon 4: 66, 67.

THE BOOK OF MORMON has been thought by many people—especially by those who have not read it—to be the book that teaches polygamy. A few years ago the editor of one of the leading newspapers in Toronto, Canada, wrote in his editorial that the Book of Mormon taught polygamy. He could not understand how people calling themselves Christians could believe in such a book. The next morning I called on the editor. I knew he was a busy man, and I took along with me a copy of the Book of Mormon in large type so he could read it without any difficulty. After I introduced myself, I told him that I enjoyed reading his editorials, but that yesterday I was a little disappointed about his statement concerning the Book of Mormon. He was surprised. He had taken it for granted that the Book of Mormon taught polygamy. The people in Utah believed it and at one time practiced it. Since they call themselves Mormons, he assumed that the Book of Mormon was their textbook on marriage. I asked him if he had ever read the Book of Mormon, and he replied that he had never seen one. I asked him if he would take just a few minutes of his time to read what the Book of Mormon says about polygamy. I had the book opened at the second chapter of Jacob. He read it. Again his face registered complete surprise. He looked at me and said, "Mr. Sheehy, that not only condemns polygamy but it does so in stronger language than I have ever read. I apologize! My next paper will make the correction." He kept his word.

Let us look at Mosiah 9: 157, 158:

And it came to pass that they began to prosper by degrees in the land, and began to raise grain more abundantly, and flocks, and herds, that they did not suffer with hunger. Now there was a great number of women more than there was of men; therefore King Limhi commanded that every man should impart to the support of the widows and their children, that they might not perish with hunger.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

ONE OF THE REASONS advanced for polygamy is "more women than men." If polygamy was marriage as ordained of God, then why did not King Limhi call upon every man to take more wives when society was faced with the problem of "more women than men"? Many men had been lost in three great battles, and there was great mourning among the people. Then came the days of peace, but with the peace came great problems. One of the problems was what to do with the surplus women. No, it was not solved by a change in marriage ideals. It was considered an economic problem and handled as such. Why not polygamy? Because this had been taught from the beginning:

Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife.—Jacob 2: 33, 36.

And if this was not clear, in the same book, the same chapter, another admonition appeared:

Behold, the Lamanites, your brethren, whom ye hate, because of their filthiness and the cursings which hath come upon their skins, are more righteous than you; for they have not forgotten the commandments of the Lord, which was given unto our father, that they should have, save it were one wife . . . Because of this . . . one day they shall become a blessed people.—Jacob 2: 54-56.

This is in harmony with the teachings of the Bible and comes to us as a strong support of our ideals of marriage as ordained of God. God started the whole creation with one man and one woman. After the flood it was the same—Noah and his wife, their sons and their wives. To this country came Lehi and Sariah, with their sons and daughters—each with one companion.

This other problem—the problem of providing for the needy—is one that we might well consider.

According to the teachings of Jesus to the Jews as found in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, the problem of providing for the just wants and just needs of people will be seriously considered in the day of eternal judgment. In our hope of the kingdom we trust that this problem shall be solved. The world talks about profits, but the kingdom of God talks about surplus. The world talks about special privileges, but the kingdom of God talks about no rich and no poor. The kingdom calls for laborers and no idlers. It calls upon all to give and to share that the worthy naked shall be clothed, the worthy sick shall be hospitalized, the worthy hungry shall be fed. Maybe I am overemphasizing the term "worthy"—perhaps I should just say that anyone in need shall have the hand of mercy extended to him. We have no right to lose sight of the unfortunate man who fell among thieves on his way to Jericho! The Book of Mormon people were taught that their religion included an interest in the welfare of one another.

And again, Alma commanded that the people of the church should impart of their substance, every one according to that which he had; if he had more abundantly, he should impart more abundantly; and he that had but little, but little should be required; and to him that had not should be given. And thus they should impart of their substance, of their own free will and good desires towards God . . . yea, to every needy, naked soul.—Mosiah 9: 60-62.

IN MY OWN MIND I am satisfied that this very important service was not done by hit and miss method, but that the distribution was orderly and through proper church officials. Further teaching of this Christian principle of providing for the poor and needy is found in the Book of Alma:

And they did impart of their substance every man according to that which he had, to the poor, and the needy, and the sick, and the afflicted. . . . And thus they did establish the affairs of the church.—Alma 1: 40, 42.

Very likely this imparting of their substance was in accord with the teachings of the Bible as we have it today, and in accord with the teachings of their fathers. The kingdom of God has always had a method approved by God for looking after the social needs of its people.

The prophet Moroni in closing the record gives an admonition to his people which is good for all people in all ages,

For behold, ye do love money, and your substance, and your fine apparel, and the adorning of your churches, more than ye love the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted.

Why do ye adorn yourselves with that which hath no life, and yet suffer the hungry, and the needy, and the naked, and the sick, and the afflicted to pass by you, and notice them not?

Why do you not think that greater is the value of an endless happiness, than the misery which never dies, because of the praise of the world?—Mormon 4: 50, 54, 53.

This much we know: in the very early days of the restoration of the kingdom, such worthy ideals and principles were far in advance of the religious movements of that day. Surely the record of Joseph, the Book of Mormon, upholds and supports the good news that Jesus heralded when he said, "The poor have the gospel preached unto them" (Matthew 11: 5). Why? The poor shall have more than mere words preached to them, for the social principles of stewardship are summed up in this early revelation given in 1831: "Inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

Missing the Boat

ONCE UPON A TIME there was a king who called one hundred of his brave men into a large room in the castle.

"It is required of you," he told them, "to sit quietly for the next two hours. Do not whisper, shuffle your feet, or otherwise make any noise or confusion; for at a certain time during that period a tiny bell will ring. It will be such a faint sound it cannot be heard unless there is absolute quiet. We are surrounded by our enemies. The bell will mean there is a boat in the canal back of the castle ready to pick you up and carry you to safety.

"At the sound of the bell, quietly leave your seats and make your way as rapidly as possible out the side door and down to the boat. The pilot will take you to a place of safety. The enemy is planning an attack. You have your instructions. Good luck!"

For a while there was absolute quiet in the room. Those hundred men were almost afraid to breathe for fear of not hearing the bell. Minutes passed. Finally an hour had gone by.

Then one of the men leaned close to his neighbor and whispered, "I don't believe the bell is going to ring." The whisper filled the room. At that exact moment the bell rang so faintly it could not be heard above the whisper.

The pilot of the boat hesitated a few moments and then, when the men failed to appear, drifted silently by and disappeared in the shadows.

The men continued to sit quietly in the large room not knowing that the bell had rung and their way of escape had gone.

Suddenly the enemy came upon them with swords and guns and killed them down to the last man. All hundred of those men lost their lives because of the thoughtlessness and selfishness of one man.

* * *

When we come into the house of God, we come to worship him. He does not shout at us to make himself heard above our whispers. He speaks in a still small voice.

The boy or girl, the man or woman, who whispers or otherwise makes a disturbance not only fails to hear God's voice himself but keeps others from hearing. When the evil forces of the world come upon us, unless we are tuned to hear God's slightest whisper we may not hear his instructions. Then we, too, may be destroyed. EDITH BURBRIDGE

And Gladly Teach!

By Roy A. Cheville
Dean of faculty

An address delivered to the Graceland faculty at the close of the workshop preceding the opening of college, 1952

WHAT'S THE WATCHWORD for today?" So inquired the knights as they set forth on a crusade. The word of their lord was expected to set the tone and to give the direction for the day. We are a company of teachers, moving out into the adventure of a new academic year. I am nominating a slogan for us in this endeavor. Each one of us can imagine it engraved on the wall we face in our classrooms. We can suppose it floats before us on a banner as we meet in faculty sessions. We can think of it on a coat of arms by our desks as we consult students, grade papers, and make lesson plans. It is the simple phrase, "And Gladly Teach!"

Out of the Lives of Great Teachers

This phrase has been popularized in recent years by the book of reminiscences of Bliss Perry about his years at a great American university. He, in turn, drew it from Chaucer, who wrote five hundred years ago. The idea was not new even then. Through the centuries it has been in the heart of the great men and women who have made a difference in human affairs through their teaching.

On the roster of those who have lived in the spirit of this watchword are such magnetic teachers as Louis Agassiz, William Rainey Harper, Mark Hopkins, and William Lyon Phelps. These were great souls who found joy and satisfaction in the college classroom and about the campus. These were not cringing men who drew apart in their ivory towers of learning to come forth only occasionally to drop morsels of learning. They did not feel themselves to be savants separated from semiliterate youth by great stretches of erudition. They were not self-pitying professors who visioned what they might have been if they had not placed themselves on the altar of pedagogy. They were not leftover neurotics who couldn't think of anything else to do. No. These were well adjusted persons with a zest for living who were teaching because they wanted to. They were scholars in their field with the ability to relate their scholarship to living. They believed that men could live adequately and happily only as they came to know the riches of culture and utilized this for the common good.

A Requisite: The Desire to Teach

Through the years there have been occasional staff members who came to wonder whether they wanted to teach. Whenever one of these has moved toward the conclusion that he should go into another vocation, I have never sought to persuade him to stay in teaching. Whenever one has continued to look longingly at the green pastures in other occupations, I have never endeavored to hold him to the profession. There is no substitute for the inner want to teach. I believe that one requirement of a teacher is that he find gladness in his work.

A Gladness of Strength and Continuance

This gladness is not the shallow spirit of the hail-fellow-well-met type. It does not bespeak the easy-going quality that stands for little or nothing of consequence. Enduring gladness is deeply rooted. It visions enduring ends. In it inheres strength of character. This happy spirit does more than effervesce at the surface; there are strong pulls at the heart of it. It does not topple over at a gust of wind, nor evaporate in the heat of the day.

Students want this strength in our gladness as we teach. I read quite recently of a young teacher who was tormented by some fourteen-year-olds in a prep school. He was weak in discipline. He was forced to leave in the middle of the year. The boys who had brought on the ouster took up a collection and sent him a gift. Someone asked the lads why they had treated him so, if they liked him so well. Said one of them, "He was a swell fellow. We liked him. But he let us get away with lots of things, and we don't want to be let get away with things." Respected gladness has to have backbone.

And Why Do We Teach?

Whether we are beginners or old-timers in the teaching profession, we shall do well to take a straight-forward look at the motivations that prompt us to teach. We shall need to probe beneath surface idealism. Sometimes we may be tempted by the inflation of ourselves as we tower above immature young people and they admire our intellectual acumen. Sometimes we may glory in the subtle influence that we can exert over others. Sometimes we may find satisfaction in the status those are supposed to enjoy who have degree abbreviations after their names and who are permitted to wear the academic robe and hood.

Teachers of quality go beyond all this. They are concerned with what happens in the lives of those they teach. They vision the kind of persons they set out to develop and then achieve satisfaction as the qualities anticipated in such persons are achieved. Such teachers treasure this growth high above any monetary considerations. When an idea takes hold and strikes fire in the learning disciple, the teacher experiences reward for his effort. Then, indeed, he "teaches gladly."

This consideration of the influence a teacher exerts on the life of a student calls for examination of the moral right to teach. We hear much about the ability to "win friends and influence people." We need to hear also about the moral competency to do so. The teacher must be a prophet and philosopher who sees into enduring purposes and values. Without this he ought not to tamper with other lives in the process of education. And he must live these values.

Teachers' Attitudes Are Contagious

Values and viewpoints are spread by the personality of the teacher. There is something contagious about what he thinks and feels. Veneers will not cover up. If I am cynical, my cynicism will get about in the atmosphere. If I am hopeful about humans, this hope will be radiated. What is in the inner self will sweeten or clabber the milk of human kindness. The kind of gladness at the core of me will get across to those who associate with me. The Master Teacher of Galilee exerted this kind of influence. Under his tutelage ordinary fishermen became extraordinary apostles. In his association exacting publicans became service-minded ministers. We always catch something good from the fine, dynamic spirit of a glad-hearted teacher.

A Constellation of Personal Qualities

In the spiritual teacher the whole man goes to work in his occupation. His whole nature is blessed, that is, happy. In this light we cannot select some one characteristic and proceed as if it covered everything. Rather shall we name several, which taken together will describe the teacher of merit. For this presentation I am naming six basic qualities which are requisite to glad teaching.

1. A sense of the dignity of and joy in creative work

We shall do well to spread the idea that we ought to labor for what we receive, that social parasitism is a sin, and that there are no short cuts to the good life. It is unfortunate that the ancient world transmitted to us the view that labor with the sweat of the brow is a curse. It is healthy that we advocate that Zion is not a society of drones and spongers: the idler shall have no part therein. Let us affirm that the person who frowns on productive toil cannot expect to be happy. Our times need this affirmation. We do need, however, to draw distinction between creative work and depressing drudgery. I am happy in teaching work that affords opportunity for initiative and creativity.

2. The spirit of continuing inquiry

The zest for exploration is inherent in the good teacher. He welcomes the frontier in intellectual pursuits, in social relationships, in laboratory experimentation, in theological analyses. He is honest in admitting he does not have all the answers. This quality is especially significant in a church-related college such as ours. We can interpret the gospel so that we view ourselves as having the fullness of truth done up in a package, or we can vision it as a way of continuing revelation in which we are explorers "together with God."

This spirit of inquiry can keep freshness and a gladsome happiness in our work. Our recent investigations in communication, basic science, agriculture, fine arts for non-music curricula, and our religious institutes have been healthy for us and for our school. It is not enough that we meet requirements for accrediting agencies: we must lead out in educational explorations. Studies in integrating class and extra-class activities, in utilization of the library, in development of a family-life curriculum, in construction of facilities, and in our contribution to the work of the church in our world are with us now.

In this sense we are not encyclopedias whom students consult for final answers. Such a program would be stultifying to both students and teachers. We are companions and guides in a co-operating exploration. We teachers have gone farther in experience, so we ought to have a sense of direction, ability to read the signs along the way, and a soundness of footing that exceeds that of the somewhat less mature young people we are to tutor. There should always be a thrill as we come on new scenes. These discoveries may call for some rethinking about what has gone before. The apple tree we passed a few miles back may not be the only expression of the tree of life, though it may have supplied providential nourishment and hope at that moment.

3. The art of co-operation

Students will not be moved to any degree by an exhortation, "Now let us all co-operate." They will be stirred as they see us practice the arts of co-operation. This involves the want-to and the know-how. A tone of gladness will go along with such co-operation.

Ants work together without choice. Instinct prompts this way of collective existence. We humans, however, have to learn how to live together. I consider our college community as a laboratory in co-operating. We are in the business of learning how to do this artfully. Respect for mutual rights in dormitories, in classrooms, in the library, on the playing field, in social gatherings, in worship services, at the snack shop, in lockers, and about the halls is at the heart of this education in co-operation.

I have often remarked that our Graceland faculty meetings constitute one of the most outstanding expressions of democratic interaction I know. It is evident to all of us that democracy is inherently connected with co-operation. In our gatherings of co-operative democracy, two-way communication is imperative. All have opportunity to express themselves. The main thing we insist on is that all speaking is done with vision of the good of all concerned and in consideration of others. We can differ on issues without derogation of another's personality. We endeavor to achieve consensus through effective interaction. The vote is taken in our legislation in order to record the conclusion in our minutes.

This year we can further this way of co-operation as we examine budgets together, as we make out schedules, as we plan all-school activities, as we evaluate our common and our individual work. In our forums we shall speak out freely. Then when we have reached some method of procedure, we shall go forth in support of one another.

4. A sense of stewardship

Teaching is considered one of the occupations that involve a high degree of social responsibility. Sometimes this irks the beginner. He tends to feel that too many persons are concerned in his business. As we mature we increase this sense of responsibility, but it takes on a different quality. The base of our sense of responsibility broadens. We do not worry so much about the reaction of some person of influence whose son or daughter did not receive an A in our courses. We do not get apprehensive about the opinion of a governmental or ecclesiastical official. We see our mission in larger light. We see the radius expanding. In these days it becomes worldwide. In our loftier moments it becomes universal; it is rooted in God.

You and I will be standing before classes with some sense of personal responsibility. Each opening of college I feel this seriously. Permit me to refer to some teaching in one of my own fields, the classes in introductory religion. Many come with juvenile conceptions inadequate for our modern world. Many come with ex-cathedra answers that have not required thinking on their part. I ask myself whether I should disturb their complacency. Then in awareness of the kind of persons we need to do the world's work, I have no choice but to stir them to thinking on their own for the development of adequate foundations. This sense of stewardship takes into consideration the student, the college, the sponsoring church, the nation, the great society, and the centuries to follow.

5. An overview of life

I am indebted to a great teacher of mine, Sir John Adams, for the phrase, "the Pisgah view." He spoke of the need of climbing the mountain to catch a panoramic view of life, to see relationships, and to sense perspectives. Henry Churchill King had this in mind when he spoke of seeing life whole. Josiah

Royce used to say that to be spiritual is to find the whole of yourself; he implied seeing the totality of things.

Young people need this overview. It has been said that the four urgent questions of the average high school youth are: What was the score? Who is your date? What shall I wear? When do we eat? There is much truth in this. We need also to remember that there are also youth of inquiring mind who want to see the larger world of things. We have both types. Both need our companionship on Mount Pisgah.

Our curricula have been revised to further this general outlook. We want the student to select some field for occupational effectiveness, but we want him to be able to fit this occupation into the social life. We want him to live as well as make a living. The criss-crossings of modern life warn us against departmental isolation.

There are ever so many fields in which I shall never lift myself even to the level of an amateur. My abilities and my training do not lie in these lines. Yet as a teacher I shall develop some appreciation of the nature and possibilities in these areas. As an academic gentleman I am not permitted to frown upon them with disdain or condescension. Each day I see colleagues at work, and I admire them for the skills, the knowledge and the insight that give them competency. The construction of a new building on the campus, the delineation of a formula, the composition of a solo for piano leave me in friendly awe. The breadth of my overview and the range of my appreciations indicate much about the richness of my life.

Our college is fairly well equipped to develop this overview. The cosmopolitan nature of our student body with our face-to-face contacts offers a rare opportunity. We shall do well to respect every man in his own cultural setting. It is not our business to make over everyone into a midwest American. We shall expect Australians to remain Australian and thereby enrich us as we come to see our friends from "down under." We do not seek to make Yankees out of our Canadian youth. We want them to permit us to see Canada through them. This holds for students of diverse callings, occupations, and color.

Our extra-class program is not designed to be mere busywork. It is an essential part of our educational endeavor. Here drama, athletics, music, departmental clubs, and a score of other things serve to expand the social experience of young people. Glance at the assembly programs and you will find that those who attend consistently are exposed to the many interests of the campus. It is regretted that some attend only when their field of specialization is performing. I feel that we are still on the fringe of what we can achieve through extra-class activities.

The teacher who looks out with a Pisgah view stimulates his disciples to see the larger vistas. This is not done by fanatical expostulations or sizzling propaganda. It can be caught from those who live with this larger outlook. The youth who studied literature under Henry Van Dyke lived with the cultural richness of yesterday and with the broad expanse of today's world. This largeness of soul has a contagious quality that has no substitute.

6. A divine expectancy

The dynamic teacher has not surrendered to the ills of fortune. He has not drawn down the curtain on a world that is bent for destruction. He believes that we can still build a better social order. Without this faith there is no place for education. If only doom awaits us, we must be educating persons for competency in self-destruction. Let us rather consider that the message of the educator is a gospel of hope and expectancy.

I have used the word "divine" with a sense of fitness. Expectancy is at the heart of God. If it were not so, he might have thrown up his hands a long time ago and admitted defeat. God's is an enduring expectancy that stays refreshed through the aeons of time. Those who would work with him must partake of this nature.

There is an urgency about this attitude of expectancy. In studies made in Maryland after the first World War, it was observed that the greatest danger in America was the emerging of a generation of apathetic young people who were hopeless, indifferent, and purposeless. This trend has been evident in Europe in recent years. European theology has taken on this viewpoint as it expects little of better times in this life and postpones all this to the hereafter. It lifts its voice here and there in our country.

We need a consistency in our expectancy. I realize that our spirits fluctuate with ups and downs. It is the total trend that matters. If I feel that I am staggering up the college hill on my last legs, that somebody is waiting to give me the ax, and that the poorhouse is open for me, I cannot teach effectively. As the senior members advance in years we shall observe a different pattern of living, but this way need not be considered inferior. Even when retirement comes we need not look upon ourselves as has-beens. Rather shall we see the opportunity to do things our busy schedules have never permitted. Then one day

Question:

In Doctrine and Covenants 83:6, I find the following language: "... which house shall be built unto the Lord in this generation upon the consecrated spot, as I have appointed." Please discuss this statement as to its fulfillment.

Answer:

This brief excerpt needs to be considered in connection with paragraphs 1 and 2 of the same section. Confusion in the interpretation of this section arises from the close juxtaposition of unrelated subjects—the place of the New Jerusalem, the Temple Lot, the building of A temple, and the nature and genealogy of priesthood. Paragraph 1 fixes the place for the New Jerusalem, and for the temple lot and the temple which is to be built there. Paragraph 2 states that this "New Jerusalem" shall be built by the gathering of the Saints, "beginning at this place, even the place of the temple, which temple shall be reared in this generation." This is the promise repeated in 83:6.

"This place" has frequently been held to refer to the place pointed out in paragraph 1 as the place for the "New Jerusalem," but in the light of historical events it seems more probable that it had reference to the place where the revelation was received, that is, Kirtland. Very early in church history, Kirtland was designated as a place of preparation for those desirous of gathering to Zion. It was frequently called "The Gateway to Zion." In Doctrine and Covenants 38:7 the church is commanded to go to the Ohio to receive the law and to be endowed with power from on high. In obedience to this command, nearly all the Saints in New York State, including the Colesville Branch, migrated to Kirtland by canal boat and lake steamer in the early spring of 1831. Doctrine and Covenants 57 designates Independence as the Center Place, and names certain elders who were to be "planted" in Zion, but concludes, "And unto the residue of both elders and members, further directions shall be given hereafter." Doctrine and Covenants 58:9 says, concerning the "residue of the elders of my church," "The time has not yet come, for many years, for them to receive their inheritance in this land [of Zion]." Doctrine and Covenants 63:9 states God's desire for the Saints to assemble upon the land of Zion and designates some in Kirtland who were to plan this move; others were cautioned not to go "until I shall command them." Doctrine and Covenants 64:4 cautions F. G. Williams not to sell his farm in Kirtland, "for I the Lord willeth to retain a stronghold in the land of Kirtland for the space of five years." If more of the Saints had been willing to tarry in Kirtland according to these instructions until they were fully prepared, spiritually and financially, the history of the church in Independence might have been much different.

The Temple was built in Kirtland "in this generation." That it was the temple foretold in Doctrine and Covenants 83:2, 6 is strongly indicated in Joseph Smith's dedicatory prayer:

Thanks be to thy name, O Lord God of Israel . . . thou who hast commanded thy servants to build an house to thy name in this place. And now thou beholdest, O Lord, that so thy servants have done, according to thy commandment.

Elsewhere in his prayer, Joseph pleads that the endowment may come, and other stakes be appointed "so that the gathering may roll on in great power and majesty." This indicates he had in mind the revelation that the New Jerusalem should be built by the gathering of the Saints beginning at this place—Kirtland, the place of the first stake.

The cloud of God's glory did rest upon this house. The ministry received an endowment therein. The sons of Moses and of Aaron did offer an acceptable offering and sacrifice therein, according to the promise of Doctrine and Covenants 102:10 and the instruction of Doctrine and Covenants 85:36ff.

There are indications in Doctrine and Covenants 94:3, 4 and elsewhere that a temple is to be built in Independence in God's due time, but if "this place" is conceded to be Kirtland, there is no promise of a temple in Independence "in this generation." Accepting the Kirtland Temple as the fulfillment of 83:2, 6 would in no wise be to deny that a temple will eventually be built in Independence. The "Official" column of the Saints'

Herald for April 17, 1929, carried this prophetic statement by Elbert A. Smith, then a member of the First Presidency: ". . . when the time shall come, in my way, and in my hour, and in my manner, which is the way of law and of order, I will command you further concerning the building of the temple in Zion."

Question:

How did the Latter Day Saint Church originate?
Colorado

E. C. D.

Answer:

This church came into existence as a result of the great apostasy which occurred in the church as established by Jesus Christ, and organized through him by revelation from his Father. This original church being lost, of necessity must be established again. In harmony with Scripture, it was restored again by the hand of an angel. (See Revelation 14:6, Acts 3:20, 21; Matthew 17:10-13; Daniel 2:44.)

Question:

How do I know there is a God?
Colorado

E. C. D.

Answer:

If you do not know there is a God, it is because you have not sought him. "For every one who seeketh shall find, and every one that desires to know shall know." Christ said, "If you will do his [God's] will, ye shall know."—John 7:17. James says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth liberally" (2:5).

Part XIV

Holding My Hand

For thirty-five years I wrote the senior grade of quarterlies, and for years the intermediate and primary grades. I also maintained a department in the Exponent, a monthly periodical published in the interest of the Sunday school. At one time I wrote three grades of lessons, worked with a committee on a fourth grade, and furnished my copy to the Exponent.

Those were busy years when I was in the prime of my strength. In addition to my editorial work I had other activities and responsibilities. For four years I was superintendent of the Lamoni Sunday school, and for twenty of my happiest years I was in charge of the primary department, where about eighty children were divided into classes.

An incident I love to recall occurred in that department one time when the Easter season coincided with the General Conference of the church. Knowing the teachers would enjoy the session in the upper auditorium that morning, I released them and took the children to their room, seating them in their little red chairs so that they all faced me with the blackboard behind me.

Then I presented a little program I had in mind, weaving together the beautiful Easter stories and songs, and sketching on the board three crosses, one higher than the others, on which Christ died for us all. We closed with the bright resurrection stories.

Some days later, as I waited in a downtown market, a quiet little boy from my class came in. When he saw me, his diffidence vanished, his face lighted up, and he walked straight to me, saying, "You know, the more I heard last Sunday the more I wanted to hear." What a tribute to the power of the stories of Christ to thrill young hearts!

No doubt I was helped in my work many times when I did not realize it, but on several occasions I was distinctly aware of receiving the divine help implied in the promise, "I will hold thy hand," which was spoken in my heart when the voice of the Spirit called me to service in the church.

Production of Quarterlies

One Monday morning early in February, 1902, I sat down at my writing

table to begin work on three grades of quarterlies that had to be completed by the middle of March. General Conference was approaching and I needed to clean house and make other preparations for Conference guests, so I had only six weeks in which to write thirty-nine lessons.

The copy I had just handed in had required three months, and I had only half as much time for the work on which I was entering. Glancing over the text to be covered, the material seemed very difficult and, burdened by the sense of the shortness of time I could allot to it, I bowed my head and sent up a brief petition: "Lord, I cannot accomplish this without your help." Then I set to work to do my utmost to finish the difficult task.

A little mental arithmetic showed me that I must turn off two sets of lessons each week, a senior, an intermediate, and a primary in each set, and I must keep up that stride for six successive weeks.

Fortunately, our lessons at that time were based on the plan of uniformity, and when a senior lesson had been studied out and written, the preparation of the lower grades was a matter of selection of material from what had been gathered and the work of expressing it in language and form suited to each grade.

Working industriously, I was gratified when I turned off two sets of lessons the first week. I did the same the second week and again in the third week. Then I began to suffer from eyestrain and a constant dull pain in the back of my head, which compelled me to relax frequently and rest my eyes.

I wrote with a pen at that time, and one day I turned from my table and lay down on a couch in the room for one of my brief rests. Our little son and a playmate were on the floor, making trains of their building blocks and pushing them around over the carpet. No other persons were in the house.

After a brief rest I went back to work. The sheet I had written last lay where I had left it, and I took it up to read it in order to make a proper connection. To my surprise I did not recognize the contents of that written sheet. The penmanship was undeniably my own, but I did not recall ever having had the thoughts expressed there. In my unremitting effort to accomplish my task I had forgotten the prayer I had sent up to the Lord when I began, and I said in my amazement, "I hope I am not losing my mind."

I went on week after week, working assiduously and laying away my two sets every week. Then there came a time when our district conference convened, and I said to myself, "I do not see how I can do my stint this week," for conference would begin Thursday afternoon, and as a matter of course, I had to go to conference.

I set to work to do the best I could, beginning with the senior lesson as usual. As I neared the close of the lesson I found to my dismay that it was much too long, and my dilemma was that there was not time to rewrite it.

There was enough in what I had written for two lessons, and suddenly that fact dawned upon me in a new light. I had sufficient for the body of two lessons; I had but to find a good stopping place, cut the lesson in two, provide each with a proper heading and introduction and close it with suitable questions.

Answered Prayer

I completed my weekly stint by utilizing every hour outside of the conference meetings. I finished my thirty-nine lessons by the middle of March and put my house in readiness for General Conference in April. When all was done I remembered the brief prayer I had offered on the morning when I began my protracted effort. In my report to the General Sunday School Convention that year I acknowledged the help I had received in time of need.

Turning to the Herald of 1902 to verify some of the statements I have made, I noted that the Association that year donated five hundred dollars toward the payment of the College debt and appropriated another five hundred to the treasury of the General Church. The quarterlies, starting without capital, had maintained themselves and were able to make the contribution that has been specified. Incidentally, I may remark that the church recorder reported to the Conference that 2,325 persons had been baptized that year and the church membership was nearly forty-seven thousand.

I had been writing for ten years, putting a crook in my back from which I now suffer much discomfort. That year Wallace N. Robinson, visiting in my home during General Conference, saw the handicap under which I was working and reported it to the Sunday School Convention with the suggestion that a desk and typewriter be supplied me. The equipment was furnished, though I remember with a wry smile that someone asked if I needed it. Probably few people realize what strenuous application is necessary to produce written lessons.

I do not remember just when I began to teach a Bible class at Graceland College, but it was at the personal request of President F. M. Smith. I began with the creation of the human race, avoiding the plain teaching of Genesis 1 and the findings of archaeology that there had been animal life on the earth before Adam was created.

I avoided Genesis 1 because I could not explain the discrepancy between its teaching that there was life on the earth before the human race was created to occupy it and the teaching in Genesis 2, where the Hebrew account of the creation of man is given. Charles Foster Kent, in his Heroes and Crises of Early Hebrew History, page 35, says an old Sumero-Babylonian tablet agrees with the Hebrew version that man was created before other living things.

One day a boy came into the class, who asked pointed questions on that period of history. The vexing question was awakened again in my mind and continued to trouble me as I pondered upon it. One morning I was making a fire in the kitchen stove to begin the work of the day. My husband was away from home on some business for Lamoni Stake. As I worked I thought about the question.

A Solution for a Perplexing Problem

I was just about to strike a match to the kindling when three words were spoken in my mind clearly and impressively: The Glacial Period. I laid down the unlighted match and hurried to my desk to write down the three words that I might consider their significance later.

Following the clue that had been given me, I studied the conditions that prevailed during that great world-winter when icecaps, forming first at the poles of the earth, spread over large portions of it to the depth of a mile or more and when arctic temperature extended over the unglaciated regions. I read the statement of a leading scientist that whoever would inquire into the origin of the human race must consider the findings of the glacialist.

I considered the statements of foremost men of science that no traces of man are found before the glacial epoch, though they do appear during the closing stages of that world-winter. It seemed to me that the protracted condition of extreme cold had caused the extinction of animal life that had been previously on the earth, and that it had left an empty world for occupancy by the human race and contemporary animals. In my mind there was no longer a discrepancy between the first and second chapters of Genesis.

I suggest that the great Deluge which destroyed all but eight persons after the race of men had been on the earth 1,656 years may have been caused largely by the thawing of some great glaciers that still remained. Not only did it rain for forty days and nights, but "the fountains of the great deep were broken up." The language suggests that some of the icebergs which supply water to the great deep were actually broken up.

Another question often arose in my mind, one for which I could find no answer. The question was, "When the Lord made Adam, why did he not make Eve also?" Why did he not make her directly as he had made Adam instead of forming her from the flesh and blood of Adam?

One hot day in summer I retreated from the kitchen for a brief rest and picked up a book my husband was reading. Something raised the old question in my mind, and with it there came a mental illumination in which the question was answered, and the answer was one I never could have thought out in my own powers of reasoning.

The explanation was that Adam was a type of Christ, and as his side was wounded and his blood was shed to give life to his human bride, so the side of Christ was wounded and his blood was shed to give spiritual life to his church, his spiritual bride, for the church is that body of people who believe in and avail themselves of the atonement, made for them by the death of Jesus Christ.

Death of Loved Ones

In 1910 my sister, who had been living with my mother, died after a lingering illness, and two months after she was laid to rest my mother collapsed. Then, leaving our daughter to take care of things at home, I took my writing table, typewriter, and books down to Mother's house, and kept my lesson work while I took care of her. Mother and I were alone through the day, but the young people came home after their day's work was done.

Nine months passed in this way, and then Mother died. I was then fifty years old and had been mainly in charge of my parents for twenty-five years.

A Portable Office

In the fall of 1914 I went to the home of my niece, who lived on a farm twelve miles from McGregor, Iowa. She was approaching motherhood for the first time, and as she had no mother who could go to her, I packed my books and typewriter and went to be with her. In my spare time I wrote on my lesson work. I was writing a series of lessons on the church in the wilderness and the Reformation. I was handicapped by not having books of reference to supply me with historical data. The husband of my niece sold farm products at the home of a retired lawyer, whom he told of my predicament, and from his library the lawyer sent me a copy of D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation. Equipped with this excellent historical work and the Three Books I was able to prepare my lessons.

At Home in St. Joseph

In 1918 we left Lamoni, the dear old town where we had lived for nearly thirty years and where so many happy memories are centered. My husband had been appointed president of Far West Stake, and it was necessary for us to move to St. Joseph. At the same time our younger son was advised to go to Arizona for his health, and as it was impossible for his wife to accompany him I again packed my books and typewriter and went with him. I had written lessons in the home of my niece, looking out on snow-covered fields; now I wrote in the torrid heat of Phoenix. I spent only four months there; then our son entered a sanitarium in New Mexico, and I came home to St. Joseph.

However, my handicaps were not yet at an end. My husband's mother, who was quite advanced in years, came to live with us, and one night when an electrical storm put out the lights in our apartment, she fell in her room and never walked again. Fortunately, I was able to obtain excellent help for half of each day, but the remainder of the day and night I had the entire care of her, my husband being employed in Independence during the week and coming home only on week ends.

Grandma died in Independence at the close of 1924, and I again turned my attention to writing.

Books

I was free for two years to devote myself to the affairs of my household and to my writing. In the meantime the Sunday School Association had been absorbed by the church school department, and in 1927 its officials asked me to relinquish the editorship of the quarterlies and write a book of lessons on the life of Christ. So I wrote the book, Jesus and His Message. It was well received and sold readily. Almost immediately I began to write by request a series of lessons on the history of Christianity. These lessons were used for church school study. Men Nearest the Master was the next book I wrote. In 1942 I devoted what time I had left from my household duties to writing The Enduring Word. All of these books have been widely read and need no lengthy description here.

And Gladly Teach!

we shall move on into the great school of eternity with expectancy of new adventure.

Academic or Spiritual?

These six qualities of the good teacher have not referred specifically to what we might call academic competence. On second thought you will see that we cannot have these without academic thoroughness. For this thoroughness there is no substitute. Inadequate command of materials, confused organization of courses, slipshod classroom atmosphere, and careless attention to responsibilities will stand in the way of achieving these objectives that inhere so much in the personality of the teacher.

Occasionally we meet those who inquire whether we want to have academic efficiency or spiritual atmosphere at Graceland. We must not make a choice between the two. It is not either-or but both-and. We must have instruction of high quality by teachers of outstanding competency. Pervading this must be the qualities that make Graceland distinctive. These are the ones of which I have been speaking. Sometimes we call this the plus element. Yet this should not be interpreted as something put on as a veneer; it must pervade and inhere in the very teaching experience. On one hand we need more than impersonal analysis and assembling of data. On the other hand we need something more than bedtime Bible stories and heartwarming prayer meetings. We have an exacting role in affording the best in academic pursuits and in integrating and spiritualizing these through teaching ministries that involve these contagious qualities.

From Some Teacher of Ours

If we look back into our own lives we shall probably discover that impulses which stimulated us to enter the teaching field included inspiration from some teachers of ours who "taught gladly." When I first went to a rural school in Central Iowa I said I wanted to become a teacher. I am sure that I caught something from those fine-spirited young women who were teachers. I have never lost that life aim. It has expanded and been refined, but it has carried through my life. My affiliation with the church and my subsequent ordinations to the ministry have strengthened and elevated it. The freshness of the call is still with me. With you, my colleagues, I shall strive this year to build a better learning community here at Graceland and "gladly teach."

Rich Rewards

After about a month of serious planning and study we opened our little white country church to the public for our first vacation church school. The Reorganized Latter Day Saint children who attended school were given posters to hand out inviting their classmates and friends.

The church is located about four miles from the town of Amherstburg. It has only one main auditorium with no basement, water, or facilities. This proved to be our greatest handicap.

With much work and prayer we endeavored to do our best. Stake President W. Blair McClain obtained a tent for us from the Goddard Road Branch. This we used to house the kindergarten. A tarpaulin shelter was also erected to relieve the crowded condition.

We had an enrollment of 105 with an average attendance of 92. Of these 31 were our own members. Every denomination from our little town and surrounding country was represented. The church was packed and the teachers and helpers were thrilled with the results.

The children were all given free transportation by members of the branch. One brother drove a school bus and picked up the children in town, while a good sister used her panel truck to give the country children a ride to church each day. Others used their cars to assist. One cold day, a class was even held on the bus.

Most of the teachers were mothers with small babies, so a sister living next to the church, with other volunteers, took charge of the babies.

The theme, "Behold the Light of The World," was used throughout the two weeks. Many of the youngsters were heard to remark, "Why can't we have Vacation Church School on Saturday and Sunday too?" They seemed to be hungering for the teachings of the Master, and we tried our best to feed them this much-needed bread of life.

The teachers and workers met each morning at 8:30 for a short period of worship and meditation to start the day. This was very inspiring and proved to be one of the high lights of the school. Problems were also discussed here, and, with the help of God, solved.

The older boys were engrossed in woodwork for their handcraft period, making tables and bookends. The older girls worked with leather, skillfully tooling and lacing purses. Their work was exceptionally well done and surely will remind them many times in years to come of their days spent at Vacation Church School.

It was a challenge to the teachers during short seasons of prayer and testimony to see and hear nonmember children stand and express their thanks for the teachers in the little white church. They hoped that next year its doors would be opened to them for another Vacation Church School.

An achievement program was held the last evening of the school in the new Amherstburg Public School auditorium. All parents and friends were invited to attend and hear the children take part in a variety program. They sang songs that they had learned at Vacation School and the crafts on which they had worked were displayed. During the evening, recognition certificates were handed out to seventy-six pupils for perfect attendance.

When the school was over we were exhausted physically, but our experiences had nourished us spiritually and we knew that we had been laborers together with God.

Note of Thanks

I wish to express my thanks to all who responded to my request for prayers for my grandson, Robert Miller, who was injured July 7 in an automobile accident. He is out of the hospital and able to attend high school, although his injuries are not completely healed yet. He was baptized and confirmed a member of the Reorganized Church on September 1. I feel certain that the prayers offered for him were heard and answered, and I ask that he continue to be remembered that he may be obedient to the covenant he has made.

The Gift of a Happy Home

Last summer a number of members from the Flint Branch took a trip to Kirtland. It was a wonderful experience for us to sit in this hallowed building for a prayer meeting and preaching service. I felt my life was deeply enriched because of the spirit that was present with us.

This summer when my fifteen-year-old son accompanied his class on a visit to the Temple I prayed that he too might have a rich experience. He reached home late Sunday evening and gave me an enthusiastic account of his trip, but he made no mention of a spiritual blessing. I went to bed that night rather disappointed, but early the following morning as I was having breakfast before leaving for work, he came in and sat down at the table. Since he was not in the habit of getting up this early I knew he had something he wanted to talk about. After sitting there a moment he said, "Mom, do you know what came to me as I sat in the Temple yesterday?" And then, before I had a chance to ask, he continued, "I thought of our life. I know men who make twice as much as you, yet their families don't have a good car or beautiful home or happy times as we have. And I know the reason for this—it's our stewardship."

We do not live luxuriously, but we do have a comfortable home, and love is there. I am very thankful that God answered my prayer in the way he did, for it is so necessary that young people learn the importance of stewardship.

Because of my many blessings I want to improve daily as a steward for God.

Helped in Time of Need

We were fortunate in being able to attend Park of the Pines Reunion three days. The closeness of God's presence and the fellowship with other Saints gave us an assurance of Zion to come. It also prepared me for a trial which came soon after we returned home. I became very ill and called for the doctor, who said I should go immediately to the hospital. Before going, however, I called for the elders to come and administer to me. I wasn't at all afraid. By noon I was in surgery. I came through wonderfully well considering the fact that I am not young any more. Within a week I was able to return to my home, and although I still have to be in bed most of the time I feel that I have been greatly blessed. (Without my requesting him, one of the best surgeons performed the operation.) Truly we have nothing to fear when God is with us.

I still need the prayers of the Saints, and I also want to request prayers for a young man who is trying to quit smoking. He has used cigarettes since he was a boy and the habit is a hard one to break.

Four Candidates Baptized at Reunion

WESTERN COLORADO DISTRICT.—The annual reunion was held at Delta, Colorado, July 23-27. The district consists of the area west of the Continental Divide with branches in Durango, Grand Junction, and Delta. Many of the members of the district are scattered over this area but are not located near the branches.

Those of the General Church personnel who were present and in charge of classes and other activities were Seventy James Everett, missionary of the Western Colorado District and parts of Utah and Idaho; Seventy Russell F. Ralston, missionary for Salt Lake City, Utah; and Elder Ward A. Hougas, pastor of the Denver, Colorado, Branch.

Also present and assisting in the instruction of classes at the reunion were Mrs. Ward A. Hougas of Denver and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Harshman of Chadron, Nebraska. Elder Harshman is pastor of the branch at Chadron. Other instructors were Mrs. Evelyn Taylor of Grand Junction, district women's leader; Mrs. Mary Towns of Grand Junction, who was in charge of the children's work; and Mrs. Maxine Pottoroff of Delta, music leader.

A Communion service was held on Sunday as well as an ordination service at which Joseph M. Towns of Grand Junction was ordained to the office of priest.

Four persons were baptized on Sunday afternoon. They were Mr. and Mrs. William Darwin Rice of Grand Junction, Joe Bertram, and Gail Doudy of Delta.

Some of the district officers elected for the coming year are Clarence Wallis, pastor of the Durango Branch, district president; Ada Lou Staats of Grand Junction, district secretary; and Cecil C. Lewis of Durango, district treasurer.—Reported by CHARLES J. HOSCHER

Group Organized As Mission

BLOOMINGTON, ILLINOIS.—On the first Sunday of January, 1952, the Saints in Bloomington and Normal, Illinois, met in the home of Brother and Sister O. T. Hayer with the Northeastern Illinois District President, Lloyd E. Cleveland, and the Traveling Pastor, Charles Homuth, in charge. They organized a mission at Bloomington, and a Communion service was held.

Since that time services have been held in The Odd Fellows Temple at 303 East Monroe Street, Bloomington, each Sunday except for district meetings. Church school begins at 10:00 a.m., followed by worship at 11:00 a.m. The meeting place is located three blocks east of Main Street, and the group welcomes visitors.—Reported by SANFORD R. VANDEL

Young People Attend College

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.—Willa and Al Frey returned from Graceland this summer. They are now active in branch work. Brother Frey who is a deacon preached his first sermon on August 10.

Several members of the branch attended the summer camps at the new conference grounds and report wonderful experiences.

Attending local summer schools are Jean Powell, Mary Lee and Kenneth Cline.—Reported by STENA CALDWELL

Church Is Redecorated

SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA.—Missionary Herbert Lynn spent the week of March 16-21 in a series of meetings, illustrating his sermons with slides. There was an attendance of sixty-two on some evenings. On May 4, Evangelist William Patterson spoke at the Communion service. He arrived a couple of days before from attending General Conference. On the evening of May 4, he began a series of meetings which continued for about twelve nights. The wife of Brother Donald Twitchel was baptized by Brother Patterson and confirmed at the Sunday morning service May 11 by Brother Patterson and Elder Hyrum Crownover. The baby daughter of this young couple was blessed at this service.

On Children's Day, June 8, Doris Elaine Whiteley was baptized by the pastor, Brother Crownover, and confirmed by him and Elder Lloyd Cline.

Grandma Mary Rowley celebrated her ninety-second birthday on June 12. She received cards and letters from many friends.

Bishop Edwin C. Burdick of Sacramento visited the branch on June 13 and was the morning speaker.

The church auditorium has been redecorated. The walls and ceilings have been painted and the floor sanded, waxed, and polished. The young married group erected a new sign in front of the church, and the men in the branch worked on the floors.

High Priest Robert L. Bishop and Sister Bishop returned July 9 from a trip to most of the countries of Europe which lasted for over three months. Shortly after their return home, their daughters, Mrs. Marilyn Couzens of Spokane, Washington, and Mrs. Peggy Schall and husband Myron Schall of Seattle, Washington, were in the branch to visit their parents and other relatives.

On July 27, Elder Russell Bessire, wife and daughter of Berkeley, visited the pastor and his family. Brother Bessire was the speaker at the branch on Sunday morning.

Brother David Budworth is with the Navy in the Seabees, and is stationed in the Philippines.

The branch sponsored an outdoor service and picnic lunch at the Maynard and Violet Whiteley ranch near Calistoga on August 24. The Napa and San Rafael groups were invited and attended, making over 135 people present.

The guest speaker for the morning services was Elder Clarke E. (Tommy) Vincent of Berkeley. After the picnic lunch, a baptismal service was held and two children of the Napa group were baptized in the swimming pool by Priest Howard Benton of Napa. The confirmations were by Elder Matt Crownover, Sr., Elder Clarke Vincent, Elder Lloyd E. Cline, and Elder Hyrum Crownover.

A son was born to Elder and Sister Lloyd Cline on August 26.

Elder Emery S. Parks of the San Francisco branch spoke to the congregation on August 30. He was formerly a member of the Santa Rosa group.

The women's department is under the leadership of Sister Lula Rowley and are preparing for the annual bazaar and harvest festival.—Reported by ETTA C. WALKER

Patriarch Visits In July

GLADWIN, MICHIGAN.—Patriarch J. Charles May of Independence, Missouri, made a tour through several cities in Michigan showing slides of his missionary work in the Society Islands and preaching. He served as a missionary there for fifteen years. He spent the week at the Liahona reunion at Sanford, Michigan, then held a series for a week at the Butman Branch. He gave several patriarchal blessings there. He also held services at the Beaverton, West, and Haughton Lake branches. The branch president at Gladwin is Alvin Pendleton of Beaverton.—Reported by EDNA BENMARK

Group Organized As Mission

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA.—On January 28, Apostle Percy E. Farrow stated that the Fort Lauderdale project is officially recognized by the church as a mission and reappointed Lester Tankersley to be in charge of the group and serve as pastor.

Evangelist E. R. Carter visited the mission in March. While visiting the Saints he gave four patriarchal blessings.

Four people have been baptized this year. They are John Lawrence Barnes, baptized by Apostle Farrow on January 28 and confirmed by Edgar A. Chevalier and Harold L. Kelley; James Witteman, Raymond Witteman, and Barbara Barnes, baptized June 12 by Priest Lester Tankersley and confirmed by Elders Edgar A. Chevalier and Harold L. Kelley.

Jack Russel Barnes was blessed by Brother H. P. Kelley of Orlando on May 25. Brother Kelley also presented the morning service.

On May 7, the group moved into a new building at 1515 S. W. 1 Avenue.

On July 20, Brother William Williams and daughter of Orlando visited with the group, and he presented the morning service.—Reported by MRS. LESTER TANKERSLEY

District Council Meets

WEST VIRGINIA DISTRICT.—The reunion of the West Virginia, Columbus, and Southern Ohio districts was held at Bethesda, Ohio, at the Epworth Park grounds June 29-July 6. Apostle D. T. Williams delivered the inaugural address Sunday morning, and also the evening message on Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. Other speakers during the reunion were Evangelist E. Y. Hunker, Elder Calvin French, Elder E. Elwood Smith, and Seventy James S. Menzies. The reunion was presided over by Elder Floyd T. Rockwell, president of the Southern Ohio, District; Elder Elwood Smith, president of the newly organized Columbus, Ohio, District; and High Priest Samuel M. Zonker, president of the West Virginia District.

Classwork began each morning at ten o'clock, and Sister Nelle Swanson instructed the women, Elder Elwood Smith the men, Seventy James Menzies the young people; and at eleven o'clock Evangelist Hunker conducted a class for the entire group. Sister Dell Menzies was the book steward and also had a class for the children from three to ten years of age. The achievement program was given Saturday evening. Those who assisted in class work for the children were Sister Elwood Smith, Sister Van Rice, and Sister Lenora Nixon.

Meals were prepared and served by the department of women of the three districts, under the general supervision of Sister Blanche Martin.

A baptismal service was held Saturday afternoon when eight-year-old Melvin L. Robey, Jr., of the Wellsburg Branch was baptized by Seventy James Menzies.

Brother Samuel Zonker was in charge of the housing committee and was assisted by Sister May R. Griffin and Elder Samuel Martin. Evensong was under the direction of Sister LaVon French each evening following the worship service. Wiener roasts, swimming parties, ball games, and other recreation were planned for the young people.

Action was taken to hold a reunion at this location in 1953, and a reunion association committee was elected with Apostle D. T. Williams, minister in charge, president. Other members are Elder Elwood Smith, Elder Floyd T. Rockwell, High Priest Samuel M. Zonker, Bishop's Agents Enoch Swanson and Otto O. Melcher. Brother Smith will serve as associate to Brother Williams. Sister May R. Griffin was elected secretary and Brother Enoch Swanson treasurer of the committee. The committee met in Dayton, Ohio, on July 19 and 20 at the home of Brother Rockwell for a council meeting.

A council meeting of district officers and branch pastors was held August 9 at Wheeling under the direction of the district president, Samuel Zonker. The meeting convened in the afternoon and opened with prayer by the district counselor, Otto O. Melcher. Opening remarks were made by Brother Zonker, stating the purpose of the meeting. These council meetings were inaugurated during the past year for the district officers, heads of the different departments, and branch pastors to present and discuss their problems. Matters such as a fund for missionary expansion, the George G. Lewis Graceland College fund, and rules of order and debate were discussed.

The district president appointed a committee composed of Elder Clyde S. Rice, Elder W. A. Schoenian, and Bishop's Agent Otto O. Melcher to work out ways to increase the Graceland College fund which is being established this year.

After supper, which was served by women of the Wheeling Branch, the group met again to discuss matters which will be brought up at the fall district conference. Elder W. A. Schoenian of Moundsville was the evening speaker. Services continued through Sunday, with Evangelist Robert E. Rodgers delivering the morning sermon. A Communion service was held at eleven o'clock. In the evening High Priest Samuel M. Zonker presented the message.

Elder Leonard Pack was the guest speaker on that Sunday morning at the Parkersburg Branch. He reported that on August 5 ground was broken and work started on the building of a new church at Beckley. Most of the work is to be done by the Saints there.

Sister Dell Menzies was called to Saskatchewan Province, Canada, on August 6 because of the death of her father, Fred Fisher. Her husband, Seventy James Menzies, accompanied her on the trip.

The district women's leader, Sister Blanche Martin, met with the Parkersburg women's department on August 14. She was accompanied by Sister Ethel Melcher and Sister Helen Dueker. The meeting was held at the home of the local secretary, Sister Laura M. Wilson. A picnic supper was served on the lawn of the Wilson home, and the meeting that followed was conducted there. Sister Martin's message to the women concerned women's stewardship responsibilities.

District President Samuel Zonker and counselors have visited the following branches recently and conducted two-day meetings: August 2-3, Kirtland reunion; August 9-10, council meeting at Wheeling; August 16-17, Glen Easton (Nauvoo) Branch; August 23-24, Morristown; August 30-31, Morgantown. Because of the close contact Brother Zonker keeps with all branches under his jurisdiction, and the co-operation of branch pastors, interest has been increased and the work of the church established much better in all branches.—Reported by MABEL SMITH

Ten Baptized at Close of Series

WENATCHEE, WASHINGTON.—At the annual business meeting on July 27, presided over by Clark Coleman from district headquarters at Seattle, the following were elected or sustained: Elder Ronald C. Smith, pastor; Elder Bryon Buckingham, assistant pastor; Priest Mel Chapman, church school director; Vernon Pratt, secretary-treasurer; Alberta Pratt, music director; Eilene Chapman, women's leader; Priest Marion Smith, bishop's agent; Olive Gilstrap, book steward; Priest Robert Buckingham, Zion's League leader; Vernon Pratt, Marion Smith, Albert Gilstrap, building committee; Bryon Buckingham, auditor.

A vote of appreciation was given to Maggie Tignor for her years of service as women's leader, and to Lizzie Crocker for her years of service as treasurer.

Recent visitors have included Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Lovett from Seattle, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Howell from Hood River, Oregon; Hugh Chapman, Pasco, Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Joe Martin, Independence; Mr. and Mrs. Ed Webberley, Camas, Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Don Carter, Pueblo, Colorado. Alice Webberley and Mary Jane Carter were soloists while they visited.

Brother Martin, assisted by Mrs. Martin, presented a series of sermons illustrated by flannelgraphs, covering the Restoration Story.

Seventy Aleah Koury conducted a series of meetings August 17-31, culminating in ten baptisms in the Columbia River on August 31. Six of the ten were children. The candidates were Donald Gills, Bill Beaty, Carol Ann Gills, Billie Jean Gills, Mary Louise Tibbs, Glenn Woods, Mrs. Vassie Woods, Mrs. Ethel Davis, Mrs. Jeannie Peterson, and George Cook. Confirmations were held at the eleven o'clock service at the church. Elder Lou Johnson from the Bridgeport mission assisted Brother Koury and Elder Ronald Smith. Mrs. Johnson and son, Leonard, accompanied Brother Johnson. They remained for the evening service at which time Brother Johnson preached the sermon on the duties and privileges of new members, admonishing the old members regarding their duties.—Reported by REA M. Leadership Guides Prepared

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—During the summer a new mission was begun in the stake, meeting at Seventy-seventh and Wornall Road in a V.F.W. Hall. The new group, called the Prairie Village mission, was formed by a nucleus of Saints from Central Branch, and Elder Herbert Lively, pastor of Central, is acting as pastor of the mission. The group is looking for a church site in Johnson County, Kansas, South of Prairie Village.

A church site for the Raytown mission was purchased north of Sixty-third Street, about a mile west of Raytown. The group is holding services at the home of Brother and Sister Frank Westwood. Brother Luazon Maxwell is pastor of the group.

The stake departments are preparing mimeographed guides for leaders and teachers. At present new guides have been prepared for senior adult, young adult, women, and children's departments. A men's department guide will be ready for distribution shortly. Wardell Hinderk is the stake promoter of departmental work. The following are promoters of the various departments: Fred Young, adult; Gladys Carter, senior adult; Don Roberts, young adult; Bernice Six, women's department; Edward White, men's department; Kleta

Finley, children's department; and Ray Fisher, youth department.—Reported by J. D. ANDERSON

President W. W. Smith at Reunion

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.—The annual reunion was held at Pacific Palisades, Santa Monica, July 20-27. The first service was a sermon by President W. Wallace Smith. Brother Smith taught one of the men's classes, and his wife taught the women's class. Evangelist William Patterson taught a men's class. The preaching services in the evening were conducted by Brother Patterson and Seventy Glen Johnson.

On Saturday afternoon the children's handwork was put on display. In the evening the Zion's League put on a special program following the preaching service.—Reported by H. L. BAUSELL

Five Children Baptized

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA.—Special services were observed on Children's Day, June 8. At the morning service, one baby was blessed, and five children were baptized. Chris Charles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Davies, was blessed by Bishop David B. Carmichael and High Priest Rodney Engel. Those baptized were Barbara Hewes, baptized by her father, Elder Wayne Hewes; Catherine Benedict, baptized by her grandfather, Elder John Inman; Clayton Woslum, baptized by High Priest Rodney Engel; and Ed Woslum and Douglas Gibson, baptized by Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag. Following the morning baptismal service, a picnic was held at Santiago Park in honor of the children of the branch. Confirmation service was held in the evening by Elders Roy Hewes, Wayne Hewes, John Inman, James Clark, High Priest Rodney Engel, Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag, and Bishop David B. Carmichael. Prior to the Children's Day service, a prebaptismal class was conducted by Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag for a six-week period.

An ice cream social was given by the Zion's League on June 14. Homemade ice cream and cakes were furnished by members of the direction of Elder Wayne Hewes, featured a branch. The program, which was under the quartet including Althea Farley, Shirley Best, and Alice and Selvia Quick and accompanied by Ardith Parsons on her guitar and Fern Parsons on the piano. Solo numbers were sung by Althea Farley, Bill Farley, and Betty Black.

Ten children from the branch attended the children's camp held June 21-28 at Camp Tahquitz.

Kathy Lynn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Ferrel, was blessed by High Priest Rodney Engel and Elder Roy Hewes on June 29.

Seventy Wayne Simmons visited the branch in June. His main objective was introducing missionary endeavor with Spanish-speaking people.

The Zion's League of the branch was host to the Zion's Leagues from Redlands and San Diego on two separate occasions during June. The groups met at the home of Sister Fern Parsons for volleyball games and potluck lunches.

On August 3 Gary Scott, son of Roland and Betty Best, was blessed by Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag and Bishop David B. Carmichael.

On August 10 Lani Lucille, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Warner, was blessed by Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag and High Priest Rodney Engel.

The branch's building fund has been progressing with such projects as a traveling basket, sponsored by a group of the women's department; and an orange juice concession which was maintained by the members of the branch during the Orange County fair. An anonymous gift of $2,500 was offered the branch in August, 1951, along with a challenge to match this amount in individual contributions in a year's time. This feat was accomplished as reported by Brother Lee Casey, branch treasurer.

Four members from the branch attended General Conference.—Reported by BETTY BLACK

Five Family Circles Completed

GRAND VALLEY, ONTARIO.—On August 31, five were baptized by the pastor, Elder R. J. Farthing. They were Murray Ritchie, Vera Taylor, and James McKittrick, from the junior church school; Marjorie Taylor, wife of Lloyd Taylor; and Colleen Richardson, wife of Ronald Richardson. The district president, Gordon Farrow, was present and took part in the confirmations.

Last December Al M. Pelletier baptized Howard Graham, husband of Hazel Graham; Laverne Hodgson, husband of Ruth Hodgson; and Doreen Campbell, wife of Willis Campbell. Thus five family circles have been completed in the branch within the year.—Reported by R. J. FARTHING

Sixtieth Wedding Anniversary

Elder and Mrs. J. J. Oliver of Chicago, Illinois, celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary on September 13. They were married September 13, 1892, in Canada. Mrs. Oliver is the former Ruth Strange. Elder Oliver, who was baptized in 1907 at the old Lang Mission, has served as branch clerk, district church school director, teacher, priest, and elder.

The Olivers have two sons, Cass and Irving, both of Chicago.

HERALD HOUSE

Independence, Missouri

An Anniversary

INTRODUCTION

One year ago—October 8, 1951—marked the beginning of an outstanding experience for many church women when they met in Independence to attend the General Women's Institute. A week of fellowship, instruction, and inspiration was enjoyed. The last session was a dedication service which included sacred music, responsive readings, and high lights of the institute. It was fittingly brought to a close by a charge to the women and a message from Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith.

In this anniversary week may this message bring to remembrance the good resolves made there and challenge church women to continue the work to which they have set their hands.

A CHARGE Mrs. S. S. Arnson

During the past week we have been blessed by sweet fellowship, with the spirit of harmony and with inspiration from God. Through the contributions of our teachers, from the addresses presented by our leaders, and from the examples of the many who have assumed willingly the special tasks necessary to carry on a successful gathering we have been stirred with a desire to evaluate our lives and talents in terms of what we can offer the church. We have sensed the need for more intensive preparation and even for greater service and devotion than we have yet rendered.

Having reached this high point of mountaintop experience, we know the values gained here can become a lasting part of ourselves only if we carry our convictions and inspiration back to our homes and congregations, expressing our gratitude and appreciation to God by service to those who could not be here and who need our help.

I can add little to the challenges which have been ours this week. My words will be forgotten, but the spirit of love, inspiration, and harmony which has graced this gathering can remain with us. Challenges have come down to us throughout the ages and are recorded for our benefit. Nephi speaks to us through the Book of Mormon and reminds us, "If it so be that the children of men keep the commandments of God, he doth nourish them, and strengthen them, and provide means whereby they can accomplish the things which he has commanded them."—1 Nephi 5: 59.

Hear also the words of Jacob, "Look unto God with firmness of mind, and pray unto him with exceeding faith, and he will console you in your afflictions, and he will plead your cause, and send down justice upon those who seek your destruction."—Jacob 2: 49.

Now I give you the testimony of the late Christiana Salyards known and loved by many here. "Though the Lord had entered consciously into my life with the baptism of the Spirit, and though he had promised to hold my hand, it has been necessary for me to study and to work hard to accomplish my assigned task. You know the Lord said to Oliver Cowdery, 'You have supposed that I would give it to you, when you took no thought, save it was to ask me, but behold I say unto you, that you must study it out in your mind.'"

These are the lasting challenges that should guide and strengthen and comfort us. To these we add the words of our prophet, Israel A. Smith, given at General Conference 1950: "Our future is far more important than the past or present, and it will be no greater than our faith and works will make it, supplemented by divine guidance."

Yes, the future is important, and we women can make it great. I charge you to keep alive this counsel, weave the threads of this fellowship, instruction, and inspiration firmly into the fabric of your lives and go forward with steadfast faith.

High Lights of the Institute

Excerpts from Dedication Program

From a Young Wife Mrs. Cedric Evans

This has been one of the finest experiences I have ever had. The spirit of love and unity has been evidenced in the group. It was a little over a year ago, out of the deep concern of the need of my companion for the strengthening of faith and the knowledge of the truth of the Restoration, that I sent up the most fervent prayers I have ever uttered. My husband did receive the blessing; however, I soon became almost overwhelmed with the sense of obligation that such a blessing placed upon me. The institute has come when I needed it very much. I want more than anything else to proceed humbly and intelligently in my role as homemaker and wife that we might build other experiences on this, that our home might be a real instrument in the plan of building Zion.

From a Mother Mrs. Paul Kelsey

I am grateful for this Institute and for the strength it has brought me as a mother. My home, my family and its needs have been in the background of my thinking all through the week, and I have found myself fitting some suggestions into its proper place of usefulness in my daily life. I am in the midst of rearing a family and realize to some extent how precious these years are. Almost before we know it our two boys will be gone from our home. For this reason I am anxious to spend this time wisely. Among the good things this week has brought me are the thoughts that have been presented which will help me make these years count in the lives of my children. Above all, I am deeply grateful for the Spirit of the Master which has been in this room each day. His presence here has given me a fresh testimony of his interest in us as mothers in his church.

From an Older Woman

Mrs. Edward W. Nelson

It has been a rare privilege to be present at this Women's Institute. Thinking over all the wonderful experiences we have shared, the most outstanding to me has been the spirit of love. Although my home is many miles away, I do not feel a stranger. I came thirsty and hungry for what I received; now my cup is full and running over. I desire to be the "big sister" in my branch, to help younger women and girls with their problems and difficulties and do what I can to encourage others to attend the institutes of the future. In this way I desire to follow the example of Alma "that this is my glory, that perhaps I may be an instrument in the hands of God to bring some soul to repentance, and this is my joy."

From a Professional Woman

Margaret L. Christensen

Women's Institutes are generally more concerned with home and family life than with the problems of women in business. This is natural, for the primary concern of women is the home. Why did I, a business woman, come to this Institute? I came because I believe what Brother McDowell said yesterday: "Our thinking is crooked when we separate religion from life." The hours I spend on the job consume a large portion of my time, and I must take my religion to work with me each day. Here I have been taught how to be "a leader, not a boss." I have learned something of morale building as well as public speaking; I have gained a deeper appreciation of the Restoration Movement. A women's institute or any gathering that helps me to be more concerned about the welfare of my fellow men, about the growth of the Restoration Movement, about the betterment of my business relations, about the improvement of my home and personal life, brings added opportunities and responsibilities as I represent my church in the business world.

From a Women's Leader

Mrs. Ed. E. White

From the reception Monday evening on, I have felt a great spiritual strengthening. Being in the Center Place, meeting and hearing our fine leaders, and associating with so many other women who have come for the same purpose as I, has been a wonderful experience. The leadership qualities enumerated, the suggestions for a new leader beginning her work, and ideas on co-ordinating the branch and district programs will help me in my work. As women's leader, I realize it is my responsibility to help church women build well-balanced spiritual homes. The talks on home and family have made me feel the challenge of what is necessary to have a truly good Reorganized Latter Day Saint home. I hope that all of us, upon returning to our home branches, will apply things that we have learned and will see that our homes, our women's departments, our branches, our communities are as fine as we can make them.

A Message

I CONSIDER it a great honor to be privileged to speak to you for a few minutes. As I look down on this fine assembly of women filling the church almost to the rafters, I remember that not many years ago this room housed the General Conference; early in my ministry I met with a General Conference that assembled in the basement of this church for business sessions, and we had plenty of room. The church is growing, and I feel very definitely that it is going forward in every phase of its activities in harmony with the motto on your programs, "Go Forward in Steadfast Faith."

During the past year and a half there have been a number of events that contributed to this forward movement. One was the General Conference of 1950. It was outstanding for its peace, unity, forward-looking, and planning. I think delegates went from that Conference to many parts of the United States, Canada, and abroad with a new spirit of optimism and conviction that inspired people in many parts of the world.

Another occasion was a meeting of the high priests in the Kirtland Temple less than a year ago. Two hundred two high priests met there day after day in worship and prayer, in study and in classwork, very much after the order and in the same spirit that was with the School of the Prophets in that sacred building many years ago; they were directed in their activities by the present president and prophet of the church, Brother Israel, and his counselors. I am sure that the men who responded to this conference went back to their fields with a spirit that brought an uplift to a great many congregations. They did receive an endowment of power from on high.

More recently was the meeting of the standing ministry of the church in Lamoni for conference and study; this, too, was remarkable. And our reunions, I think, during the past few years have reached a higher plane spiritually in most places than has been the case for some years past. Truly a good spirit has gone out abroad from these gatherings.

By Elbert A. Smith

NOW COMES THIS INSTITUTE OF WOMEN, in some ways unprecedented and unique in the history of the church. I am sure you have reconsecrated yourselves and by your study, classwork, lectures, meditation, and prayer, have fitted yourselves to go out with great spiritual power to the various places where you live to take part in this forward movement.

When Apostle McConley was in Europe during the World War, the military authorities pinned on his sleeve an emblem bearing three letters, VIP, meaning a very important person. He had the use of an automobile and chauffeur when he needed it, and that armband gave him the right-of-way to go many places where he needed to go. But, having been called of God to do a certain work, he was a very important person before he wore that armband. Individually, as you go from this assembly to the places where you work, in the eyes of God and in view of the fact he said all are called according to the gifts and call of God unto them, you are very important people.

I HAVE OFTEN COMMENTED on the fact that three times in the great dispensations of the gospel, God trusted everything to a woman. In the beginning of the Mosaic economy when Moses was born, an order had gone out to kill all the male children of the Hebrews, and the young mother of Moses with courage and wisdom and inspiration hid him and nursed him about three months. When she could do that no longer she put him in a bassinet at the water's edge where she knew Pharaoh's daughter would come,

Camp Notes

By Mary Cooper

MY PERSONAL TESTIMONY is that the church is growing both in quantity and quality. This summer I attended a number of church youth camps, and each attendance had increased over the previous year. But the important thing that happened was the strong bond of fellowship which developed to pull campers and staff together in one happy family.

Even bad weather does not spoil the good spirit. I have seen rainy days filled with the light of campers' smiles.

Their eagerness to learn has been inspiring. I'll always remember the feeling of accomplishment when, after a week teaching archery and boating to a class of Orioles, the girls would understand and apply what I had told them. To know that they had learned something useful and that I had had a hand in it, made me feel truly needed.

It was a thrill for me to watch them settle down and work out the solution to their own or others' problems. They did not rely on their own immature judgment alone, but depended on God to work with them in making a decision. One girl from a rather isolated area came to camp realizing that in her associations there she would gain strength and determination to continue on the road of her convictions. She came with a big problem, but, trusting God to help her solve it, she returned home a much happier person.

Young people seldom express so frankly such an earnest desire to obtain spiritual food as they do at camp. One day I overheard two girls talking in the dorm. They were describing their difficulty in getting to come to camp. One said she had planned for this week since last summer when the other Leaguers had come home describing their spiritual experiences at camp. The other girl said that she had never had a spiritual experience, but she thought she was old enough to receive one, and so she had come to camp. I watched those girls the remainder of the week and was particularly impressed with the fact that they continually entered into the spirit of the camp and tried to make their contribution a good one. Both were rewarded.

THE FELLOWSHIPS shall long be a part of my treasured memories. Circumstances were not always favorable. Physical conditions often would seem to have hindered, but they were overlooked in the close communion with God.

One morning when we assembled on the shore of a large northern lake for fellowship, we shared our cove with fishermen and speedboat enthusiasts. The noise could have been most distracting, but the campers were so absorbed in the service that they hardly noticed it.

At a service held the last morning of one camp, three young people were baptized. All during the week their friends remembered them in prayers. Their decision to join was a result of the influence of this and previous youth camps. The service was held in a quiet cove on the Mississippi. The water was shallow near the bank so each of the three young people had to walk quite a ways in the water. The last to be baptized was a young girl. Calmness, assurance, and joy radiated from her being as she slowly walked in the water alone—yet, not alone, for it was evident that she was being guided as she proceeded to the spot where she would make her covenant. The peace and beauty of the moment drew those on shore together, and all were aware of the Spirit of God.

But this is not all of the story. After camp had closed, all the staff members stopped by the caretaker's house for homemade ice cream. Here the caretaker mentioned that he had been blessed with a spiritual experience that morning. He said that when the young girl had begun her journey through the water he had seen angels walk with her to the spot of baptism and then walk back to shore with her. The Spirit of God was there.

ANOTHER memory I cherish is of the friendships made at camp, for such friendships are lasting ones. Here young people meet for the first time, but because of their rich experiences they form deeper friendships in one week than many less

Clyde Workmon

A FRESNO, CALIFORNIA, high school graduate of 1952, Clyde Workmon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Workmon, has been awarded the Elks National Foundation $400 "Most Valuable Student" scholarship for 1952.

Chosen as the outstanding boy of his class and boy of the year in the city of Fresno for 1951-52, Clyde is truly a leader in school, community, and church activities.

His high scholarship rating enabled him to graduate as co-salutatorian of his high school class of 420 students. He had been a member of the California Scholarship Federation for seven semesters. This was also one of the many reasons why he received the State of California $300 scholarship for 1952, fortunate persons form in a lifetime of association. Three girls who came from small towns in the same state had never known each other before, but by sharing confidences, clothes, and responsibility, they became the best of friends.

A fellow and girl were there who met three or four years ago at camp and began going together. Realizing that this would be their last year to come as campers, they both sacrificed to be able to attend. Because of sharing this experience they decided to share the rest of their lives. After Graceland, they say, they are going to be married.

Additional proof that the church is growing was the evidence that older members were eager to help the campers. Saints in the area where each camp was located were constantly giving gifts of food, time, and energy to make the camp a success.

The fullness of these experiences will not only live in the hearts and memories of the campers, but in their daily lives. Truly the church is growing.

and the Bank of America $1,000 Achievement Award in the field of social science.

He plays the violin, piano, bassoon, oboe, trumpet, trombone, and bugle, and was active in the school choir and young men's quartet. While in high school he was also orchestra and choir president. During the Easter vacation of his junior year, he was privileged to play in the Southwestern United States Honor Orchestra in San Diego under the direction of Mr. Rush, director of the University of Southern California orchestra.

He lettered in varsity football and baseball for two years, and also in junior varsity baseball and intramural boxing for two years. He won the Easterns Trophy award for scholarship in baseball and football.

He has been active in student government too, serving as president of Hamilton Junior High School, and student body president of Fresno High School this past year. He was also homeroom president for two semesters, secretary of the Fresno High School senate for two semesters, and president of Purple and Gold, a senior honorary service club.

He has been an active Scouter for five years. He attained the rank of Eagle Scout and became a senior patrol leader and junior assistant Scoutmaster, as well as crew leader chief in Sea Scouts.

Throughout his high school years, Clyde has held after-school and summer jobs ranging from service station attendant, bus boy, and pantryman, to campus representative and clothing salesman for a dry goods store.

His church activities have been outstanding too. He was ordained to the office of priest last summer. So far this year he has baptized eight young people, he has contacted several others, and at present is teaching a missionary class. In addition tion to this responsibility, he is choir director for the Fresno Branch consisting of approximately 250 members. His father is pastor of the branch.

Clyde has been president of the local Zion's League, and is now serving as one of five district commissioners for the young people in northern California. This summer he was able to attend the Happy Valley reunion of Northern California District and termed it a good experience. His ambition is to become an efficient minister for Christ.

This fall he is attending the University of California in Berkeley, having won a scholarship there. He hopes to complete at least four years of college, majoring in psychology and minoring in sociology in preparation for the field of social service.

He is the second child in a family of four sons. His older brother, Gene, age 20, is a Graceland graduate; Nathan, age 14, is a freshman in high school; and Floyd, age 12, is in the eighth grade.

Clyde has been given many talents, and he truly has made good use of them. In the words of Brother C. J. Nephew, assistant pastor of the Fresno Branch, "In my association with Clyde I have found the qualities of leadership, dependability, honesty, and a desire to serve where he is needed most in helping his fellow beings."

MARY COOPER

and she knew that every normal woman falls in love with a baby. When Pharaoh's daughter adopted Moses and needed a nurse for him, there was his mother to be his nurse, and God trusted her. Figuratively speaking, in her arms she held the Mosaic economy, Mt. Sinai, the Ten Commandments, and the books of the Old Testament.

In the Christian dispensation when Christ was born, he was delivered to a mother, Mary, and, figuratively speaking, in her arms she held the Christian religion; she held Gethsemane, Calvary, the Mount of Transfiguration, the Resurrection, and the gospel that was to go to all the world.

In this latter-day dispensation, when the martyrs were slain and the Saints were left confused and scattered far and wide, Emma, the wife of the prophet, was urged to return east to her father's family. She might have said, "I have suffered enough, I will turn my back on the Restoration Movement which has caused me and mine so much suffering." She was asked to go west with Brigham Young. The mob threatened to burn her house over her head if she stayed in Nauvoo. But she said, "I have no place to go but home, and no friend left but God." So she stayed in the old Mansion House in Nauvoo where I was born, and there she reared her sons in the faith of their father.

When God came knocking at her door and said, "Where is Joseph who will preside over my church for fifty-three years?" she said, "Here is Joseph." When God came to that door again and said, "Where is Alexander who will be a member of the twelve apostles and presiding patriarch?" she said, "Here is Alexander." When God came with the last request, "Where is David, who is to be a member of the First Presidency and the writer of hymns to my praise?" Emma replied, "Here is David, my youngest, born after his father's death." God put his trust in that woman, or I would not be here today.

These three women in times of crises kept God's trust, but God has trusted tens of thousands of women in obscure places, in every stake, district, and branch, with some task that he wants done according to the gifts and calling of God unto them. He has trusted you. That his spirit may go with you is my prayer.

Funeral services were held at Liberty Street Church in Independence, Elders Claude Carter and E. Y. Rawlins officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Correction

In the issue of September 8, page 23, column 1, the first obituary should be for Alfred J. Fuss rather than Alfred J. Tuss.

P.S.

* THE KNOT

The other day, while making merry
 By reading in my dictionary,
 Among the "ifs" and "buts" and "whats"
 I saw a piece concerning knots,
 And in that list—
 'Twas most amusing,
 Albeit, I confess, confusing—
 I saw a dozen knots or more:
 The bowline, bend, and stevedore,
 The seaman's, surgeon's, hitch and loop,
 For yawl or dory, yacht or sloop,
 The hangman's (oh, the grisly thought!)
 And thus upon my mind was wrought
 Respect and wonder in great lots
 For men who fashion complex knots.
 But great surprise awaited me
 When in this aristocracy
 Of knotted marvels, I saw—What?
 That common drudge, the Granny Knot!

How came it there, I wondered then—
 This bane of all good workingmen?
 "It's not a knot," you hear some say,
 And others, most emphatic, "Aye."
 "It starts out right; it ends up wrong!"
 "To no good use does it belong!"
 Cut it, break it, or defy it,
 One thing is sure: you can't untie it.
 Of all things made of thread or rope,
 This thing alone is without hope.
 And yet no matter how you try
 To teach your lady how to tie
 A knot of any shape or kind,
 You may despair or lose your mind.
 No matter how she may commence,
 By all authentic evidence,
 It always ends—Have you guessed what,
 Defeated Sir?—a Granny Knot!

* HELP TO REDUCE

Have you tried to cut down the accumulating pounds of fat and found it a discouraging business? Do the scales fail to give the slightest recognition of your self-denial? Do you find a gnawing hunger hour-by-hour and minute-by-minute conspiring to tempt and defeat you? We know how you feel. We have it too.

If so, you should have read the story of Helen Fraley in the "Ladies' Home Journal" for August. She tells how "I Lost 160 Pounds." Her top was 295, and she looked like a circus freak. Now she is at a sleek, svelte, chic 135.

The books tell you about calories and will power, but this is not enough for some of us. She adds another factor: "I believe prayer helps too. Many a time I asked God to give me courage and will power. I also thanked him for what I did accomplish."

Our personal problem was to eat less and exercise more. So we began to include this petition in our prayers: "O Lord, please take away the inordinate desire for food." And he did. We began to win a battle we had been losing. Over twenty pounds have been lost; more are to go; and health is better than in many years. If you can't manage this by yourself, don't hesitate to call for help from a higher power. It isn't silly to want better health, and the factor of morale is very important. That is in God's department.

You To Know . . .

Richard Duane Anderson

FROM INDIAN DANCER to church missionary takes quite a stretch of imagination, but Dick achieved the change in roles in four years. After receiving his Eagle Scout award he attended the International Boy Scout Jamboree at Moisson, France, in the summer of 1947. Out of a competition of 250 boys, Dick was selected as one of the two solo dancers to present the Buffalo Dance and the Dance of the Dying Eagles before the 32,000 Boy Scouts from 39 countries assembled. The ovation he received at the conclusion of this performance was "the thrill of my lifetime." However, he says, "Greater joy has followed in my church experience." In July, 1951, he received his first General Conference missionary appointment.

Undoubtedly a more direct connection between his boyhood activities and his ministry lies in his heritage and training. He is the grandson of Apostle Peter Andersen and the son of Howard P. Andersen of the Standing High Council and the Board of Publication. On his mother's side, the Goulds are descendants of Alpheus Cutler who was on the Standing High Council in Nauvoo and on the building committee of the temple.

Richard was born in Independence in 1929. He was graduated from William Chrisman High School here in 1947 and from Graceland in 1949. He received his bachelor of arts degree from the University of Kansas in 1951. While in high school he was president of the student body and cadet colonel of the R.O.T.C. At Graceland he was a member of the student council, Lambda Delta Sigma, and president of the Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity.

His early ambition was to be a physician, and his Graceland courses were planned accordingly. Later, while attending Deer Park Reunion, he had a spiritual experience which caused him to know that his life work would be in healing men's souls rather than their bodies. His university courses of the previous year had been turned to philosophy, history, and religion. He was ordained a priest in October, 1949, and an elder in December, 1951. His first appointment was in July, 1951, to the Eastern Mission. Six months later he was sent to work in the Southern Ohio District. Since last April he has been assigned to the Los Angeles area.

NEWS OF THE PRESIDENCY

Since the adjournment of Joint Council, the First Presidency has been busily engaged in preparation and participation of the Doctrine and Covenants Institute which was held September 28-October 3. President Israel A. Smith delivered the opening sermon, and President W. Wallace Smith preached in the afternoon. President F. Henry Edwards conducted a class each morning.

APOSTLE IN DES MOINES

Apostle Reed M. Holmes was in Des Moines, Iowa, September 28, for their district conference. He addressed the prayer service with the theme "Thy Kingdom Come," and gave the morning message, "Our Heritage." District President Ralph Wicker was re-elected. In the evening Brother Holmes met with the Zion's League and preached the evening sermon. On September 29, Brother Holmes delivered the evening message at the Doctrine and Covenants Institute at the Stone Church.

APOSTLE CHESWORTH TRAVELS

Apostle D. O. Chesworth was at the Minnesota District conference in Minneapolis, September 20 and 21. He preached three nights at Fort William, Ontario, September 22, 23, and 24. Then on September 27 and 28, he was at the Northern Indiana District conference at Buchanan, Michigan, where he was associated with Elder Clair Weldon who has been elected district president.

MESLE AT GREEN LAKE, WISCONSIN

Carl Mesle, General Church Youth Director, represented the church at the Youth Audio-Visual Production committee meeting held at Green Lake, Wisconsin, October 3, 4, and 5. This is sponsored by the National Council of Churches and concerns the production of visual materials for the training of youth leaders.

MCDOWELL DIRECTING PRIESTHOOD EDUCATION

Priesthood classes began for the Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthoods in the Center Stake on October 6. Dr. Floyd M. McDowell directed the committee which organized and planned the classes. The Melchisedec priesthood met in a special prayer service on October 5 in preparation for the classes. Dr. McDowell's office was also in charge of the worship services which were presented each morning at the Doctrine and Covenants Institute.

STATISTICIAN IN RAYTOWN

Elder Merle Guthrie of the Department of Statistics preached to the Raytown, Missouri, congregation September 21. The group has purchased a lot upon which they plan to start building next spring. At the present time they are meeting in the basement of the Frank Westwood home. Brother Guthrie had as a theme for his sermon, "An Added Witness."

JOHN DARLING IN KANSAS CITY STAKE

John R. Darling, associate director of the Department of Religious Education, was at the Bennington Church in the Kansas City stake, September 21, for their promotion day exercises. Brother Darling commended the branch for their organization and interests in the church school program. He noted that the program showed signs of outstanding training.

Plus or Minus

"There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."—Proverbs 11: 24.

YOU have met people who saved their energy until they were weak and pinched their pennies until they were impoverished. Others who lived generously with their friends and neighbors made so much of life that they never seemed to lack anything and were rich in experience and happiness. Life abundantly illustrates the statement of Jesus that "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it."

A POOR YOUNG MAN stopped for a talk. His poverty was not in money, but in more important things. He was well dressed, had plenty to eat, a good wife, a comfortable place to live, and could afford to attend the university. Many people would not rate him as poor at all. Yet, miserable chap, he was quite impoverished.

His poverty is a condition of the spirit. He has accepted the hard philosophy of the great eastern city from which he came. It has already given him an intensive training and a wrong one, and it is a question if he can change it now. He could probably go to his grave with his present ideas. That makes him an old man in his youth. He is afraid that somebody will ask him for money or take advantage of him in some way. He doesn't like people, and he shows it. He fears that he will put out more than he takes in, so he puts out little. On the whole, his attitude is negative. Briefly, it can be summed up in this: Where he ought to be plus, he is minus.

This is what he confessed: "I am afraid of the time when I will finish my study here and have to go out and ask for a job. It is a humiliating experience. It will put me under another man's power. If he doesn't want me, I will feel that I have degraded myself in asking. I hate it, but I don't know what to do about it. There seems to be no other way."

WOULD YOU CARE to be like that? If a person is minus, it shows up in everything he does and says—the tone of his voice, the look on his face, the lift or droop of his shoulders, his posture when he stands. It would take a psychiatrist to list all of the ways in which some simple attitude shows through everything we are and do.

Here is what he was told: "It doesn't have to be that way. You can change it. The fear can be overcome. Go out and visit men and firms in the business you are to enter. Get acquainted with as many as possible, even when you are not expecting a job. The practice will gradually remove your fear of meeting people. But first you must make a change in yourself. You must like people, and that will give them a better attitude toward you. It will help you to get a job and to keep it."

ISN'T IT STRANGE how some people will resist and object when another tries to help them? Isn't it queer that they will not believe when one tells of something that has helped him? They prefer their misery because they are on familiar ground, and they do not wish to change.

"I think," he replied, "that a businessman hires you for your competence, and not because he likes you. I think personality enters into the situation in a very small way."

Certainly competence is a prime factor. Businessmen like to believe they are hard and practical. They like others to believe it too. But give them two competent men for a choice, one with an attractive personality and the other without—which will they choose? They know that if a man can make them like him, he can make the public like him and his company. He will build business.

The personality factor cannot be ignored. It is the greatest thing today in commerce, industry, international relations, education, and many other fields. Yes, it is the greatest thing in religion too. Does not the whole universe surround one supremely great Person?

NEXT TIME YOU GO TO CHURCH, look over the congregation. It will not take two minutes to pick out the "plus personalities." Another thirty seconds will do to list the "minus personalities." The plus personalities are the leaders, the workers, the thinkers, the planners—the really alive folk in the branch.

Fate does not determine for us to be one kind or another. We can change. Nothing can be hidden from our fellow-men. All the masks, all the hiding places of the soul are transparent to some degree. What is in the thoughts will shine in the face, as the scene in a studio far away shines on a TV screen.

We need not be discouraged. We can change. Within reasonable limits, in time, we can become what we want to be. And there is a great power that can help us—the power of prayer. It can change defeat into victory.

If we are ever to make anything of ourselves, we will need God's help. A plus or minus personality is not a permanent condition. We may not be able to effect the change alone, but if we need help it is available. The change to be wrought is not superficial. It is in the depths of the soul, where the mainsprings of life operate. It is there that God can work for us if we let him in.

Graceland College Day

Throughout the church on Sunday, October 19, friends of Graceland College will participate in the observance of Graceland College Day. This special occasion is an annual affair, designed to give emphasis to the work of the college and to its needs. It is intended that each church member be assisted in the development of added appreciation of the mission of the church college in the program of the kingdom and, as a result of this appreciation, will respond to the invitation to help provide financial support through the Graceland Day offering.

Until a few years ago, Graceland Day offerings were directed into a revolving scholarship loan fund. That fund reached the point where it became self-sustaining from annual repayments on previous loans. Therefore, recent Graceland Day offerings have been used for various expansion and maintenance needs at the college. While much has been done through such offerings to alleviate the pressing needs of a growing institution, the demands are still great. Several projects were listed in the Herald article on Graceland Day in 1950. Some have been completed, some helped, but the majority remain high on the list of major needs yet to be accomplished. A portion of the list is reiterated below in order that you may know, specifically, the project toward which your offering may be directed.

1) Development of a Master Campus Plan for future location of buildings, roads, and other facilities. The campus cannot grow by guess. New parts must relate to an intelligent whole. Recent structures added to the campus have been located in accordance with a preliminary campus plan.

2) Beautification of the campus grounds which have been defaced as a necessary by-product of the construction of buildings on the campus. The campus sorely needs improved landscaping. The preliminary campus plan calls for an outdoor amphitheater in connection with the Memorial Center.

3) Expansion of the library to provide more study space, more room for books, and other library facilities. Books are only one of several items recommended for private study by students in modern library practice.

4) Changes in roads so that no main traveled roadway will cut through the campus. Present-day campus planners recommend the elimination of all through streets from main campus areas for purposes of safety and ease of moving student pedestrian traffic from class to class and from dormitory to class. Sidewalks also need to be constructed to meet needs created by the erection of new buildings.

As indicated above, considerable work has been done in some of these areas. But they are some of the definite projects toward which money may be directed. The Board of Trustees will determine the important needs for the 1952 college day proceeds and will authorize its expenditure.

We urge widespread and generous support of Graceland College Day on October 19.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

by F. Henry Edwards

Across the Desk

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The following letter dated September 19, 1952, came to our desk from Louis Zonker, our appointee in Germany.

For the past year I have had a special privilege of associating with Brother E. A. Theys in connection with the work of the German mission. This time with him has afforded me an excellent opportunity of receiving the benefits of past experiences which are very helpful in the continuation of our work. Now Brother Theys is located in the Center Stake, and I find a challenge here to continue the fine ministry which has been given before.

In the past month, together with our German missionary, Oskar Stuve, I have worshiped with each of our groups. A definite awareness of the presence of the Good Spirit attended our associations. The Saints are receptive and seem to be hungering and thirsting after righteousness. I am happy to be able to report that the promise of God in such conditions is being fulfilled.

At present we are engaged in a series of missionary services in our new church and mission headquarters at Hannover. While we are in the beginning stages now, the response seems to be favorable. In our first service we had eleven non-members present, and this number has increased to twenty-eight in our most recent service. Passers-by are naturally attracted by the sight of the new church. Every day many people stop and gaze at the building, especially at the church seal on the front. We have many occasions to bear witness to our testimony of the Master as we have found him in his church. On the twenty-eighth of this month we anticipate a baptismal service as a part of our missionary series.

Occasionally I have opportunity to visit with our service personnel. I have been impressed over and over again by the quality of our members serving in this capacity in Germany. I try to bring news and ministry to them, but most of the time the effort seems to be reversed. Together with these young men and women we listen faithfully to our church devotional programs over AFN each Tuesday evening. Our members in Germany share this joy and we certainly hope these continue to be made available.

My wife joins me in sending best wishes to you brethren and to our brothers and sisters throughout the world. May God continue to sustain each for the cause of Zion.

From a letter from Anton D. Compier, General Church appointee in Holland,

The church programs on A.F.N. [Radio] are very well received here. We enjoy them very much. I am constantly trying to make more of our people listen to these programs. They undoubtedly are a great help for the work here.

Why Believe in God?

By Ladd Duryea

And God spake unto Moses, saying, Behold I am the Lord God Almighty, and endless is my name, for I am without beginning of days or end of years; and is not this endless? . . . My works are without end, and also my words, for they never cease; . . . no man can behold all my works except he behold all my glory; and no man can behold all my glory, and afterwards remain in the flesh, on the earth. . . .

There is no God beside me; and all things are present with me, for I know them all.

And the Lord God said unto Moses, For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom, and it remaineth in me. And by the word of my power have I created them, which is mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth. And worlds without number have I created, and I also created them for mine own purpose. . . . For behold there are many worlds which have passed away by the word of my power; and there are many also which now stand, and numberless are they unto man; but all things are numbered unto me; for they are mine, and I know them. . . .

The heavens, they are many and they cannot be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine; and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 2-4, 21, and 23.

ONE OF THE MOST universally asked questions of mankind is "Where did all things originate?" Since the beginning of secular history, philosophers and scientists as well as the masses have pondered the question and reached varied conclusions. Even today, in spite of great advances in scientific knowledge, many millions of people still ask, "From where did all existence come?"

One of the most positive answers to that question was given in a revelation to Joseph Smith, Jr., in June, 1830. For giving a glimpse of the glory of God, that revelation is unsurpassed by any other written word known to man. It comprises Section 22 of the Doctrine and Covenants, from which the above Scripture was taken, and also appears on page seven of most copies of the Inspired Version of the Bible. It states positively, firmly, as does Genesis, that all things came to be through the creation of God. No other theory of the origin of being possesses the positiveness and plausibility of the answer given in the Scriptures; yet millions of people in Christian nations today reject the idea of divine creation, preferring to believe "chance" theories of science or publicly ignoring the question.

Baseball has been called the national pastime of the United States. It is, perhaps, the second most popular sport, but there is one game which far outranks baseball in national popularity and number of participants. This game is unique in that it can be played anywhere under nearly any conditions with any number and type of participants. Because of its versatility and lack of rules, and because all participants feel they win, the game has been America's most popular sport for generations.

Although the game has no limits as to where it may be played and how it proceeds, it often is carried on in armchairs, behind pulpits, in newspapers, and at political conventions. It usually starts with one participant saying, "Now, what's really wrong with this country is . . ." The game then proceeds with one or more of the players giving the "real dope" on the plight of American society. Any purported reason for the country's condition is accepted in the game, so reasons offered by participants range widely from claims that Communists have infiltrated the government to complaints that too few parents give Junior a good wallop when he needs it.

I AM GOING TO ENTER this game in about the usual way. I am, though, going to qualify my entry somewhat. Rather than telling what is wrong with this country, I am going to say that one of the things wrong is that too many persons have acquired too much of a skeptical or scientific attitude. Such an attitude is invaluable to the sciences. Because of it, man has doubted previously accepted theories of science, economics, philosophy, and politics; he has investigated, conducted experiments, found the old theories wrong, postulated new ones, and made possible great strides in his physical betterment. But this same attitude causes him to reject faith and is the reason that the theory of divine creation of all things is so widely rejected.

During the past century this scientific attitude has become more and more pronounced among the American people. Science has contributed tremendously to human physical welfare in the last one hundred years. At the same time crises in the political, economic, and religious fields have shaken the very foundations of beliefs held by most early nineteenth century Americans. Two world wars and a global depression proved eighteenth century political and economic theories were inadequate. And the march of science, especially the advancement of Charles Darwin's theory of evolution which seemed for some years after its appearance to contradict diametrically the story of creation told in Genesis, challenged Christianity.

As a result of increasing prestige for science and crises in other fields, the American people on a whole have become skeptical of that which cannot be proved in a laboratory. On the other hand, they seldom question claims of science. Many of them accept science's theories of the origin of the universe and life but reject the idea of divine creation and see the two theories as entirely contradictory. In reality, science has become the absolute authority to them, and God has been relegated to a minor position. An alarming number of persons even deny, or at least question, the existence of God. Science, they say, has replaced old-fashioned ideas of faith and religion with objectivity and the scientific attitude and has made belief in God unnecessary. They ask, "Why believe in God?"

ELBERT A. SMITH has given five answers to the question. He has given five reasons why believing in God is not unnecessary but is reasonable, intelligent, and desirable.

One of the reasons he gives is that it is natural for mankind to believe in God. All races have some native religion, for they worship a type of deity. Primitive peoples throughout the world have some type of belief in superhuman forces and recognize their own subservience to them. They seek to cultivate the favor of the gods by the best methods they know although these methods often seem fantastic, wierd, and cruel to civilized persons. The force they worship may not be called God, but their recognition and worship of deity which is more powerful than man and which can and does play a part in the affairs of humanity indicates that belief in God is not only natural but also instinctive to some extent.

And belief in deity is not confined to primitive societies. In fact, it is more highly developed among more advanced peoples. As the level of civilization of people rises, their belief in God remains strong, their faith and religions become more intelligent, and their perceptions of God become clearer and more exact. It would seem, then, that belief in God in primitive societies is not because of ignorance, as has been charged, but in spite of it.

Disbelief, not belief, in God is unnatural. Widespread disbelief in a society must be learned. Several totalitarian nations in history have tried to stamp out belief in God within their citizens. Long years of intensive propaganda campaigns and force were required to erase the belief from the minds of any sizable proportion of the people, and many refused ever to disbelieve in God.

A SECOND REASON for believing in God is found in the Scriptures—the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. There are prophetic views written in these three books which man alone could not have written. These things reflect wisdom and foresight possessed by no man in history. These prophetic statements have for thousands of years predicted events in the world with superhuman accuracy. Reorganized Latter Day Saints are especially familiar with the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah, which foretells the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and incidents in its translation, and with several sections of Revelation. Great amounts of prophecy from these two books of the Bible, as well as from other parts in all Thee Books, have already been fulfilled, thus convincing many that some divine force revealed the prophecy to its writers. No mortal could have foreseen the future of the world.

A THIRD REASON advanced by Elbert A. Smith for believing in God is also found in his Word. There is too much wisdom, in addition to prophecy, in the Scriptures which could not have been of man alone. In his Word there is revealed a perfect law far superior to any civil, political, or economic systems in effect in the world today. This law, if heeded, would bring to the world the peace it has not had for centuries, the prosperity it has never known, and the love, liberty, equality, and brotherhood which it has only dreamed of.

Since early history man has sought the form of government which would be most advantageous to him. He has tried kings, dictators, limited democracies, representative democracies, and socialistic or communistic types of rule. But none of the different forms have been satisfactory. Some have been far superior to others, but under each there have been discontent and inequality. Political theorists throughout the world continue to search for better types of governments and institutions, but man will search in vain for a perfect law until he delves into the word of God. There he can find outlined a way of life which is perfect and which is more evidence of the existence of God, for what is perfect is not of man.

Though the law is perfect, it would not function successfully in any society on earth today because it requires more righteousness, more pureness of heart, more brotherhood and unselfishness than exists in any contemporary society or nation. But because the law as given in the Word of the Father would not work effectively among today's people does not indicate any weakness in that law. It only indicates all too clearly the failures of the people.

Jesus told the Jews, "Search the Scriptures; for . . . they are they which testify of me." The Scriptures do testify of Christ, and what testifies of him also testifies of his Father.

THE FOURTH REASON for believing in God is supported by nearly everything around us. Observation and knowledge of our world and our universe indicates strongly the existence of a more powerful intelligence than the comparatively puny amount of intellectual ability possessed by man. The synchronization and harmony of all things of nature indicate that these things exist not as a result of chance, but as the result of perfectly planned creation.

The wonders of the universe are stupendous. Man has a rather inflated ego today because of the advances made in science—and they have been great—but his greatest physical accomplishments are as nothing compared to the greatness and the complexity of God's creation. And I use the term "God's creation" because I see no plausible alternative, no other possible explanation of how everything came to be.

Science's current pride and joy is atomic power. Releasing the atom's energy is looked upon as one of man's greatest scientific achievements, but even in discovering the method of using the atom's energy man has found wonders within the atom beyond that of his own creations.

The atom itself is evidence that there is a powerful, all-knowing God who has created all things in his own way. The atom is almost incomprehensibly small, yet several smaller elements have been found within it. And scientists suspect there are yet smaller parts within the small elements within the atom. Each normal atom is practically a minute storage battery with both negative and positive charges of electricity neutralizing each other. And though all solids are composed of atoms, atoms are moving at all times at high rates of speed and are composed largely of nothing with a slight shell around it and a tiny nucleus within it. The nucleus is very small, but very dense. According to physicists, if enough nuclei from atoms could be combined to form a cube about the size of a lump of sugar, the cube would weigh one hundred million tons.

NOT ONLY THE SMALLNESS but also the greatness of things around us point to God. Consider, for example, the universe. In the June, 1830, revelation the Father said, "Worlds without number have I created. . . . And numberless are they unto man." Astronomy now agrees.

Our earth is only a relatively minor member of the sun's system of nine planets; and it is only a fraction of the sun's size. Although in encircling the sun the earth travels thousands of miles per hour, it takes a year to complete the trip. And six of the planets are farther from the sun than is the earth. In spite of the hugeness of the sun and its planets, the system is only a minor part of the galaxy we call the Milky Way—which contains an estimated thirty-six billion planets. This galaxy is so wide that light, traveling at approximately 186,000 miles per second (fast enough to go around the earth at the equator more than seven times in one second), takes 110,000 years to cross the Milky Way. And further, the Milky Way is only one of two hundred million galaxies, or other Milky Ways, which have been counted from the earth. How many are beyond the range of earth's telescopes in the fathomless depths of space cannot be guessed.

As God said, "Worlds without number have I created. . . . And numberless are they unto man." Then he added, ". . . but all things are numbered unto me; for they are mine, and I know them."

David made a point in Psalm 19: 1 which is becoming more and more evident with increasing knowledge of the universe. He said, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork." The heavens in which our earth is only an insignificant speck from the point of view of size do declare the glory of God; and the firmament composed of incomprehensible numbers of atoms indeed shows his handiwork. Nonbelievers in God and many professed Christians hold that the heavens and the firmament came into being by mere chance. Such an explanation of the origin of all things seems ridiculous. I have heard no reasonable explanation of the origin of all things except that God in his own way created them.

These four reasons for believing in God seem to me to be conclusive evidence that there is a divine creator, but many other persons have heard these same reasons, yet refuse to believe, or at least claim they do. They refuse because they lack the desire to believe—and that, the desire to believe in the Father, is the fifth reason for doing so, according to Brother Smith.

Wanting to believe in God is not only normal but logical, and wanting to believe can lead one to do so. Alma advised, "Even if ye can no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you, even until ye believe in a manner that ye can give place for a portion of my words" (Alma 16: 151).

Mere desire, then, can lead one to faith, and faith can lead one to knowledge of the soul that the second verse of the Inspired Version of the Bible is true:

"I am the Beginning and the End; the Almighty God."

Autumn

Yestereve there was a little breeze from the north, not warm like a summer wind, but crisp and cool. It smelled different, felt different, brought a tingling in the blood and a quivering in the nostrils. Today the fields are as dry as straw, the maples are yellow and gold, and the oaks will be turning brown. Bits of copse look like flame sweeping up, and all nature is getting ready for another period of change. In a big field the cattle are lowing. The horses have sniffed the wind, and are racing madly around the fences, their hooves pounding the turf like a drum. Out of the racial past, a wildness rises in my heart too, and I feel like running with them to escape something that is coming, I know not what. Tonight there will be a fire in the inglenook, and there will be the smell of wood smoke to go with juicy apples, the cracking of walnuts—and dreams. Spring is for the garden, and summer belongs to the mountains, the deep woods, and the seashore. But there is something about autumn that turns our hearts and our thoughts homeward. God must have meant it to be so, for it always happens to all kinds of people.

Glory in Humility

By Robert J. Miller

THE GREATEST GLORY that can come to man must come in living a life of eternal quality. The road one must take to such a glory is seldom traveled; indeed it is hardly more than a path—the path of sincere humility.

There is glory in humility. In it the soul finds its highest expression, surmounts the base desires of its natural self, and reaches out to God.

There is little hope of ultimate glory in fulfilling the desires of the natural man, in spite of the fact that by present-day social standards countless men and women are being acclaimed and exalted because of successes they have achieved in satisfying driving demands of their personal ambitions. By eternal standards their glory must fade before their Creator and be discounted as of nought because the foundation of their achievements is not of eternal nature.

In the eyes of God no man can be accounted great who has not been able to master himself, whose personal desires must be satisfied at any cost, yielding to the impulses of greed, prejudice, vanity, envy, or jealousy.

NO MAN IS GREAT who believes himself a god and realizes not that he exists because of powers beyond his ability to control and master, but rather feeds upon his own ego and sacrifices all else to magnify this opinion of himself. In the lives of those who follow this way of life dedicated to personal achievement, there must be terrible conflict. Man is a social being; he does not live alone; his works are not accomplished without social and business intercourse with others. Since many people are equally ambitious conflict is inevitable. But a burning ambition to fulfill a dream will often stop at nothing.

The everyday story of life tells us of the lies, misrepresentations, thievery, embezzlement, drunken parties, broken homes, and even murders which result in this desperate attempt to keep a dream from frustration. The little man-god knows no law but his own; no interest is of consequence except his personal design.

Herein is the cause of most of our court cases, ill will among men, and general strife. The cause of all conflict must eventually be laid at the feet of the individual. For any conflict, regardless of its size, starts with the individual. Someone forgets the God who created him and seeks to be a god in his own right and over others around him.

Man's burning passions and ambitious dreams for power discount generally the rights of others and the laws of God concerning personal behavior. These factors are behind every conflict, big or small, in society.

Such men as Napoleon, Mussolini, and Hitler are extreme cases, but there are countless others who are, in a less violent degree, following the same pattern, knowing not the meaning of humility or the purpose of God in man. Little man-gods are prevalent in the world today.

GOD'S DESIGN FOR US calls for peace and good will based upon his law of love and completely dominated by it. It is a give-and-take program wherein we seek the best for our fellow-men as well as for ourselves. It is a program calling for a generous mind and an unselfish attitude divorced from greed, personal vanity, and all ulterior aims. It is a program of vision with God's plan in mind, a program which recognizes the need of God in all our doings, because we are of God.

Any way of life we choose which leads to ultimate sorrow, grief, and frustration has left God out, and the man-god has sought to take his place. Because this is so, no great or lasting glory can be derived from it.

The path of sincere humility is the way to immortal glory. Humility may be incorrectly defined by some as a backward step and a sign of weakness, but it is really a condition growing out of knowledge and an honest heart. It is an evidence of courage, for real courage is needed if we face ourselves, recognize truth, and accept it.

The application of humility in religion is the process of getting a proper focus upon truth and a proper relation to it. Therein we envision our own dependence upon God, who is majestic and all-powerful yet loving, merciful, and generous to his children.

Respect for, adoration of, and obedience to God are sure signs of real humility. And only in this atmosphere will the soul blossom forth in all its beauty, drawing strength and life from the source of its creation.

In humility we find our proper place, assay our real worth, and recognize how great a place God should have in our daily lives. In real humility we find the grace to yield our wills to his, and thus become sons of God by adoption through Jesus Christ. We surrender our desires to be little gods and rejoice in the new-found fellowship with God as his children.

In finding our proper place in the divine scheme of things, we become humble, and peace is born in our hearts; no conflict inflames or disrupts our minds. A humble man is a soul at peace.

John F. Sheehy 1888 - 1952

ON OCTOBER 1, 1952, death claimed a life which had been devoted for more than forty years to full-time service to the church. John French Sheehy became a church appointee in April, 1911, and served two-thirds of his life in church missionary and pastoral assignments throughout the United States and Canada. From 1907 to 1911 he was pastor on part-time basis at Little Compton, Maine.

Among the more important assignments he held were president of Kansas City Stake, 1938 to 1940; pastor of Stone Church, the church's largest congregation, 1926 to 1936; counselor to the president of the high priests' quorum, starting in April, 1932; and pro tem president of the high priests' quorum, 1938 to 1942. He was chosen, not ordained, for the last position. In addition he served for several years as radio minister for the church on the Morning Devotions broadcast over Station KMBC.

For the first nine years of his appointment, Brother Sheehy acted as a missionary in the Maritime Provinces, the Eastern Mission, and Maine. He went to Brooklyn, New York, and accepted his first pastorate in 1920; from that date most of his positions were pastoral. In addition to the previously mentioned locations, he also served in Massachusetts, Far West Stake, the Bay Cities in California, Cleveland, Ohio, and Toronto, Ontario. In 1950 he was assigned to Chicago, but this was canceled because of poor health. After a few weeks rest his health seemed to be enough improved that he was appointed to labor in Maine, and in November was elected district president. Shortly thereafter his health failed again, and he returned home and served in the Independence area from then until his death. He preached two sermons in the summer series at the Campus in Independence only a few weeks before his last illness. He also wrote frequently for church publications.

Born December 17, 1888, in Lisbon Falls, Maine, John Sheehy was baptized March 6, 1904, at Providence, Rhode Island. He was never privileged to attend high school, but was a special student at Missouri Wesleyan College for three years later in life. He has always been a strong advocate for higher education and his five children are college graduates. He was ordained a priest on October 13, 1907, at Somerville, Massachusetts; an elder on October 2, 1910, at New Bedford, Massachusetts; and a seventy on April 16, 1916, at Independence. U. W. Greene officiated in all three ordinations. On April 19, 1925, Brother Sheehy was ordained a high priest by E. J. Gleazer and F. Henry Edwards.

He married Elizabeth Baldwin on March 21, 1911, less than a month before accepting church appointment. They had five children: Almer, Howard, Vera (Mrs. Steve Allen), Margery (Mrs. Daniel Boon), and David. One of Brother Sheehy's greatest sources of joy, and perhaps one of the finest tributes to him, is that all three of his sons are active priesthood members. Two of them are church appointees: Almer, Chaplain of the Independence Sanitarium, and Howard, recently appointed pastor of the Seattle, Washington, Branch.

A strong family bond was nurtured through the years in the Sheehy household. Plans for evenings together were carried out while the children were growing up, and as they became older father and boys took hikes and trips together.

BROTHER JOHN had a strong social nature and was a good conversationalist. He was the life of any gathering and was jovial with his friends wherever he met them; he had a host of friends all over the United States and Canada where he labored.

It was just a few years ago that he led the congregational singing at Conferences and other large gatherings, and for a few years he sang duets at the Conferences with Arthur Koehler. Yet until he was 17, he often said, he was not able to carry a tune, but feeling the urge to become a missionary, he felt that he should be able to lead the hymns so he decided to join the choir. However, he was advised that it would be necessary for him to take some voice lessons. He sought the best teacher in the town who gave him a tryout and told him he was wasting his money, but he said, "I must learn to sing." When asked why, his reply was, "Because I want to be a missionary for my church." The teacher promised to help him if he would try very hard. He used to say that he did his part, and the Lord helped him.

John loved to preach and had a wealth of illustrations based upon his spiritual experiences in the ministry. For the same reason he was an excellent teacher and conducted classwork at reunions and institutes which many of those who attended considered outstanding experiences.

John F. Sheehy was a great soul, and it seems that his passing at this time, when he still had so much to offer, is a tragedy to the church as well as his family. However, there is much we do not understand, and we know that the God he loved and served can use such a soul whether in the flesh or in the spirit world.

Daughter of the Pioneers

The Autobiography of Christiana Stedman Salyards

Part XV

A Gentleman in Color

On one of my trips to Lamoni, when my home was still in Illinois, an incident occurred which I take great pleasure in remembering. I was transferring from the Rock Island line to the Burlington at a place where the earth's formation was such that the Rock Island train could pass below and the Burlington above it. One building served to accommodate the stations of the two roads, one on the first floor and the other on the second with a long staircase extending between them.

On a very warm day in June I was toiling up that long stairway, carrying some heavy baggage. Men passed me, all intent on their own affairs, when someone came up behind, and a hand reached out and took my heavy luggage. It was a black hand. The man who relieved me of my burden stood waiting for me when I reached the upper floor. This gentleman was coal black, but his features were good and he had the general appearance of a man of culture. I noted in particular the fine texture of his suit and the glint of a gold watch chain.

I thanked him for the help he had rendered me and we went our different ways, but the brief meeting with that man and the friendly spirit of it have been one of the pleasant incidents that my memory retains.

A German Immigrant

On another occasion in midwinter I was making the same journey. I was going to Lamoni because word had come to me that Grandfather was near death. Mother was already with him but she was almost worn out; so I had been excused from school for two weeks and was going to be with them.

I transferred that time to the Burlington Road in Rock Island, and as I sat waiting for my train I noticed a young man passing in and out. From his general appearance and manner, I thought him to be a foreigner. When I had taken my seat in the train he entered and sat down two seats ahead of me.

The conductor came in, glanced down the car, and saw he would have to work quickly. He took the young foreigner's ticket and handed it back, saying, "You're on the wrong train; get off at the next station." He spoke very rapidly and went on.

Perplexed, the young man tugged at his coat, asking "I gotta go oud?"

"Of course you gotta go oud," snapped the conductor, without looking around, but vigorously punching tickets.

The young man subsided, the conductor went on, and I closed my eyes in reverie over my own cares. I was aroused by the sound of voices and opened my eyes to see that the young man had gone across the aisle and had awakened a sleepy man who, with his family, occupied two seats turned together. The half-awakened man knew no German and the young foreigner knew little English, and so they made no headway in solving the young man's predicament.

Again he subsided and again I closed my eyes, but I could not rest; for I knew what the trouble was, and I knew I could tell the young man, though not in very precise language, for I did not know the German word for station, which was not in my vocabulary. But after a little time I stood up and reached across a vacant seat to touch the young man in the back.

He turned quickly and I told him what the conductor had said, that he must get off at the next station. Snatching at the hope that he had found a friend who might be a guide to him, he inquired eagerly, "Und vo kommst du?" I answered him that I would remain with the train. In a few minutes he left to find his way amid the complexities of our American life and language.

I have always been glad that I was able to speak a helpful word to that stranger in a strange land.

Church Personalities

On my first visit to the little town of Lamoni Brother Joseph was absent on one of the many journeys he was called to make in those active years. I thought he was old then, but from my present viewpoint he was young—only fifty-five. I met him unexpectedly one morning in the Herald office, and there were no misgivings on my part, for he was friendly, cheerful, and unassuming.

Many years afterward, as I was going to my mother's in the thick, soft darkness of a summer night, a bulky form loomed up before me in the road. It was Brother Joseph, striding home to Liberty Hall. He probably never knew he passed me, but I was distinctly conscious that I had been momentarily in a pure presence.

When he had given up Liberty Hall in preparation for moving to Independence, he lived for a time in the house next door to ours. One evening, as I was starting out for my mother's home, I saw Brother Joseph as he sat reading in his brightly lighted living room. The shades were not drawn, and I stood for a moment to admire the fine picture he made.

A unique place among those I remember and honor is held by a woman who came to Lamoni at a time when I was in Illinois. On my return I was attracted by her bright face and cheerful demeanor, and I inquired who she was. I was told she was Mrs. David H. Smith, affectionately known as "Aunt Clara" throughout the Smith family. When I knew the story of the cloud that had overshadowed her early married life, I felt a deep respect for the courage with which she had surmounted it.

Elbert A. Smith and his mother had come to Lamoni. When finally he was called to a place in the First Presidency of the church, I had the same feeling I experienced when I met Brother Joseph. I had not thought of Elbert in that office, but when I heard of the appointment a quiet assurance made me know that it was right.

When I lived with Sister Walker we sometimes went down the railroad track to her farm, now an adjunct of Graceland College. As we walked she would point out the spot where she hoped to see a college built. It was then a cornfield, but in time her wish was fulfilled.

Memories of Early Lamoni

I first visited Lamoni in the summer of 1887. When we arrived at Bethany Junction and looked out on a rather bleak prospect, I remarked that it surely must be the jumping-off place. After a wait of some length we boarded a passenger coach, attached to a freight train, and so reached our destination.

Following to its termination Lamoni's one sidewalk, except those in the business section, we came to the Brick Church, which I capitalize here because all the life and activities of the community were centered in it and what it stood for. Grandfather's little house was next to it by the generosity of a good sister, who permitted it to be built on one end of the lot on which stood her own modest dwelling.

Fred and Israel Smith as Boys

Looking out the doorway one afternoon I saw three boys loitering about the church. Two of them wore campaign hats (it was an election year). These two boys were Fred and Israel Smith, and I think they were feeling very patriotic as I challenged the closest one, saying, "Who comes here? A young Republican?" He answered me very stiffly, as if I had knocked a chip from his shoulder.

One Sunday after prayer meeting a friend and I were invited to go home with Carrie Smith, Brother Joseph's daughter. It was a hot day, and Brother Joseph and his wife, Bertha, were out on the lawn in their rockers with little Lucy in a low chair at her mother's side. Across the pasture fence were Fred, Israel, and Hale, beating about in the tall grass as if looking for something. A little later Fred came with a flower in his hand, which he respectfully presented to his sister, Carrie. The memory of this courteous gesture lingers in my mind among my first impressions of Lamoni.

Dream of a City

While I was still living with my father and mother in Illinois I had a very encouraging experience one night. As in a dream I seemed to be borne through the dining room and living room into the open. Then I was lifted from the earth and saw far away in the east a city, high and lifted up.

I had read of that city, but when I saw it there before my eyes, I exclaimed, "There is a city." Then a voice behind me spoke, as it spoke to the apostle who, with nearer and clearer vision than mine, looked upon that heavenly city. To John the voice said, "Write." To me it said, "Sister Annie, I have known you and loved you; I shall take you there."

Thinking it meant I was to be separated from my parents, I began to cry, thinking, "They can't live without me."

The voice behind me spoke again, assuring me my father and mother would be cared for, and repeating, "I shall take you there." Then the dream closed.

I was far from the holy city at that time, both in point of time and in preparedness to enter it. I am nearer by many years, but how well prepared to enter there only He knows who is merciful to our weakness and just in all his rewards. It is written: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter through the gates into the city."

The crucial questions with me, as with all are: "How well am I keeping the commandments? How fully am I entering into the spirit of the heavenly life?"

The spirit of that heavenly kingdom was impressed upon me in one of the most uplifting experiences I have ever been privileged to receive.

Heavenly Music

Whether asleep or awake I cannot say, but one night I heard a chorus of angel voices singing. At first they were far away, but they grew more and more distinct as they came nearer. Finally they seemed to be in the room, at the ceiling above me. Then I could distinguish what they were singing:

Sweet bonds that unite all the children of peace,
And thrice precious Jesus, whose love cannot cease.

When I had heard, the voices grew fainter and fainter until they had died away, and I said to Richard, who awoke at that moment, "I have just had the most beautiful dream of my life!"

Love is the theme in the music of heaven—the pure love that binds together all the children of peace.

There was a sequel to the dream that confirmed it as a divine presentation of this fundamental truth. Meditating upon the dream, I was impressed that, should I relate it in prayer meeting the next Sunday, the congregation would afterward sing the hymn I had heard the angels singing.

But on Sunday I sat silent in the meeting and did not tell my beautiful dream. When the time arrived to close the meeting, the pastor, J. A. Gunsolley, arose and said: "We will close our meeting by singing the second stanza of Hymn 711 (S. H. 107), and the congregation stood and sang:

Sweet bonds that unite all the children of
peace,
And thrice precious Jesus, whose love cannot cease.

Richard and I turned and looked at each other. I had failed to do my part, but the pastor and the people were doing theirs.

Callie B. Stebbins

I have read the statement, "He is rich who has many true friends," but I can say that he is rich who has one such wise, understanding, sympathetic friend as I had during the thirty years I lived in Lamoni. Interwoven through all the memories of the activities of the old Brick Church is that of my friend, Callie B. Stebbins, a most intelligent and diligent worker.

She would not have me enumerate her virtues or her accomplishments, but I shall relate what I can remember of a meeting in which she and I and several others sat down in the primary room of the church to adjust a matter in which some feelings had been injured, and from which bitterness might easily have grown. I remember her attitude of friendly forbearance, and at the close of the meeting Brother Garver remarked that he felt as if he had been in a prayer meeting.

The old Brick Church has gone, but the spirit of it and the memories it calls up are immortal. I say of its passing, as I said of the little old church on the flats of the Blue River in Kansas:

O the outward hath gone, but in glory and power,
The Spirit surviveth the things of an hour.

Conclusion

A body of ministers, about to separate and go to various fields of labor, were given the excellent suggestion that they should not seek to exhibit their own intellectual attainments in their preaching but to speak a simple word for Jesus Christ.

There is a poem that offers the thought that it may be glorious to write for the few great minds, who are like the distant stars that come in sight once in a century, but it is better to write an earnest line which may lack the impress of culture but will reach into untaught hearts and cause a clear faith to shine there.

The narrative I have been writing is now completed. It goes out with no claim for literary merit, but as a simple word for the goodness and power of God I have felt in my own life. It testifies that God lives and works now as in ages past and that he, who in olden times spoke through the prophets and in the meridian of time through his own Son, speaks in these latter days to all who are willing to hear. "God is, not was; he speaks, not spake."

(The End)

(Note: Sister Salyards was occupied with literary interests and activities, especially relating to the church, as long as health and strength permitted. In her long life she gave a distinguished service to the church. Following the death of her husband, R. S. Salyards, Sr., in 1944, she continued for a time in her home in Independence. As her health declined, she consented to take up her residence at Resthaven, a church home, where she spent her last days. She passed away on April 16, 1951.—THE EDITORS.)

Question Time

Question:

In Genesis 3:4 Satan seemed to have his agency before being cast down. Does man have his agency in the spirit world before coming to earth, and if so, in what capacity was it used? R. W. Y. Iowa

Answer:

Satan in the beginning was Lucifer, an angel in authority with God (D. and C. 76:3). He fell as the result of selfish and willful rebellion, and a third of the hosts of heaven fell with him (D. and C. 28:10). The spirits of men existed from eternity (see D. and C. 90:5, and Joseph Smith in Millennial Star, page 311). The spiritual creation of man as described in Genesis 1 and 2 and emphasized in Genesis 2:4, I.V., was perhaps the "forming, molding, fashioning, endowing with new powers, inspiring with new will and upright aspiration, and giving a new sphere." (See Joseph Smith III, Herald, Volume 35, page 210.) Little, if any, is given as to the agency of man before physical creation. The statement, "Wherefore, because that Satan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord, had given him" (Gen. 3:4, I.V.), could refer to agency already given, but not necessarily so, for many times in Scriptures the past tense is used of things to come, as for instance, "But he was wounded for our transgressions." We know of nothing to indicate that the spirits of men were in the same category as the angels who fell with Satan. Apparently, also, there was no need of the redemption of man before his fall in the garden of Eden, yet it was concerning the subject of man's redemption that Satan proposed to destroy his agency. The Scriptures do not say he sought to destroy the agency of the angels of heaven. He influenced them to use wrongfully their agency. "Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning" (D. and C. 90:6). This would seem to indicate freedom from jealousy and rebellion and possibly knowledge without agency, but whether the term "in the beginning" refers to the state of the spirits of men before their spiritual creation or after is not entirely clear. Presumably it was both. The Lord said to Moses, "But only an account of this world and the inhabitants thereof give I unto you" (D. and C. 22:21). It has been well said, "The revealed things belong to us, but the unrevealed things belong to God."

Question:

Why isn't "The Song of Solomon" in the Inspired Version? Mrs. J. O. C. Alabama

Answer:

In the original manuscript of the Inspired Version of the Scriptures, when Joseph Smith, Jr., came to this section he merely wrote, "The Song of Solomon is not inspired writing." This is sufficient reason for its omission from the Inspired Version. For many years in the religious world the book was accepted as a type of allegorical Scripture. However, this traditional viewpoint is being abandoned by many modern scholars who consider the "Song" a description of human love written by Solomon without divine inspiration.

It is evident that Joseph Smith, Jr., was correct in his inspired appraisal of the book—"The Song of Solomon is not inspired writing." Therefore it was omitted when the Inspired Version was published.

JOHN BLACKMORE

Question:

Did the people of the Bible use musical instruments before the time of Moses?

Answer:

The first instance of this kind which we know is referred to in Genesis 4:21 (I. V., 5:31) which tells us that Jubal was the father of those who "handle the harp and organ." Jubal was the seventh from Adam through the lineage of Cain. After the flood the tabret and harp were in use among the servants of Laban at the time of Jacob's visit to them. The timbrel, harp, and organ were also familiar to Job and the people of his time (Job 21:12). According to Hebrew tradition Job lived in the time of the patriarchs, probably several centuries before the Mosaic period.

Question:

Which years comprise what is generally known as the Dark Ages, and who is responsible for the preservation of the Bible during this period? MRS. D. W. Illinois

Answer:

Various historians differ as to the exact period of the so-called "Dark Ages." No exact date can be accurately stated. It commenced with the barbarian invasion of the Roman Empire about the fifth century. The barbarians were the uncivilized tribes of northern Europe and western Asia outside of the Roman Empire. The "Dark Ages" constituted a decline into ignorance of books and writings. It was a progressive decline following each successive invasion of the Empire of Rome. The rise out of the "Dark Ages" was also gradual, covering several centuries. Some authors assert that it continued until the eleventh century. It began to end in western Europe with the reign of Charlemagne in the eighth century. Any reliable history of medieval Europe will give the historic information.

For information regarding the preservation of the Bible (Scriptures) during this period, it will be essential to study the processes of Bible translations from the Greek into the Latin, and the formation of the canon of Scripture and the translation into English. Such a thesis would be too involved for this column. Again, we hesitate to name any particular book, for there are many available. In 1924 the Church published a book, Helps to Bible Study, which in part covered the field of the formation of the canon of Scripture. The Bible from the Beginning by Simms is good, and The Ancestry of the English Bible by Price also covers the field. Most librarians will have books by other authors which will give the information. It is a subject that involves much study and reading.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. The answers are the opinions and interpretations of the panel members signing them, and do not commit the Herald nor the church.

Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. We Had the Most Fun!

By Sadi Moon Nagel

LUNDY, the primary supervisor, came up to me the day following Slover Park congregation's Halloween party and said, "I want to tell you what a wonderful time I had. I don't think I've laughed so much in ten years as I did over that silly game where we looked for the beans."

That made me happy, because it's always gratifying when people enjoy themselves. She went on, "You know, I wondered how having such a riotous time last night would affect the little prayer service we had for the primaries this morning. But you know, the service was just wonderful, and this whole day has been perfect. I've felt so good inside, and I think part of it really was the good time we had last night."

I got to wondering after she talked to me if there might be something particularly enriching about playing together—something that might have an uplifting effect on our spiritual life—and by play I don't mean any namby-pamby sitting around tables and worrying about scores. But play—getting worn out and red-faced from exercise and laughing so hard.

Every year our congregation has a good old-fashioned Halloween party. Saturday night when I arrived on the scene—the basement of the church—I found the pastor, rigged up in overalls and a plaid shirt, hanging the last pieces of orange and black crepe paper. Soon in came some of the food committee with the sweet cider and doughnuts. And then the guests began to arrive. Some came in street clothes—among them our newcomers from England. The Nortons said, "We didn't know exactly what to expect of your American Halloween parties." Others let their hair down. Soon the ghosts, gremlins, and other horrors began to arrive. Talk about ice-breakers! It didn't take long until we were all roaring and screaming at the weird costumes that some of our brothers and sisters rigged themselves in, and some were "unguessable." Until they unmasked we never could think who they were.

When people became recognizable again, we found ourselves laughing now and then, when we had time, at Lucien and his blacked-out teeth and bowler hat; at Melva, the junior department supervisor, looking like a lean white zombie; at Louis, whose scraggly beard seemed to be stuck on for keeps; at Merle, who still looked a little like a goblin.

WE PLAYED SOME GAMES that are too good to keep. Here's one called "Zoo." Hidden about the room were beans or nuts of three different varieties. The party was divided into three groups. Some were goats; some cats; and some cows. Each group had three "herdsmen." At the signal, all the animals began to look for food, each species looking for one designated kind—for example, the goats looked for beans. When an animal found a bean, he couldn't pick it up but had to stand there "baa-ing" like the goat he was, until one of his herdsman came to pick it up. The party sounded like feeding time at the wild animal cages.

One of the rowdiest and noisiest games was "making circles." The group marched round and round in a big circle. At a whistle they stopped and a leader called, "Make circles of . . ." and then called an arbitrary number, like four or five or three. Any who were not in circles of that number by the time the leader called "Stop" were eliminated from the game.

Another game that is as old as Methuselah and is fun yet is, "Upset the Fruit Basket." Four to six fruits are chosen and each player in the circle is named for one of these fruits so there is an approximately equal number. Players are seated in a chair, and "It" stands in the center. He calls the name of a fruit—say oranges—then all those named "orange" must exchange seats, with "It" trying to get one of the empty chairs. Whoever is left without a seat is "It" and calls the next round. The game gets to be real fun when, for a change, the leader calls, "Upset the fruit basket," and everybody must change chairs.

OUR CONGREGATION, besides its noisy, rip-roaring parties, has other quieter occasions, "just for fun." One of our customs, which has held since our congregation was organized seven years ago, is our annual Thanksgiving Dinner.

Many of us feel that we are almost reliving the first Pilgrim Thanksgiving when we join with the family of Slover Park Saints in this event. Last year over one hundred people filled the tables, and three big turkeys were roasted in ovens of people like the Gadberrys. In the morning, of course, we all gather for a 10:00 o'clock prayer meeting. Last year we also gave a thanks offering at that time for our new church auditorium which was in construction. At noon, each family brought what it would have served at home except the turkey, stuffing, and gravy, and the family was expanded for the Thanksgiving feast. In the afternoon we enjoyed a couple hours of home talent. Last year, among other things, the Zion's League presented their play which was given at the Center Stake drama festival the following week. At this program Grandma speaks a piece and some of the youngsters "favor us" with music of one kind or another, besides there being some good "specially made" events just for the day.

I know we are not the only congregation of people who have found that it's good to play. I only hope that every group has had the unifying experiences we have had through it. None of us even felt like laughing the other night when the Halloween party drew to a close and we stood about—in costume and out—singing "Blest Be the Tie That Binds." And when Fred, our pastor, thanked God for a good evening, we felt that we all loved each other more than ever before. It's grand to laugh with one another. It makes our praying together and working together more effective.

Eternity

One of the difficulties we encounter in understanding the scope of God's power is our inability to comprehend fully terms of infinity such as eternity. We have chopped our allotted time up into minutes, hours, years, etc., and any time not reckoned on the basis of these divisions is beyond the grasp of our mortal understanding. One of the most vivid descriptions of eternity in terms man can comprehend has been given by Hendrick Van Loon.

"High up in the north," he says, "there stands a rock. It is one hundred miles high and one hundred miles wide. Once every thousand years a little bird comes to this rock to sharpen its beak. When this rock has been worn away, then a single day of eternity will have gone by."

Three Ordained to Stake High Council

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL STAKE.—The annual stake conference was held Wednesday, September 10, and Sunday, September 14. President W. Wallace Smith was the speaker the evening of September 14. The following were ordained: John Moses, elder, by R. W. Moore and William Garnier; Athol Packer, elder, by C. O. Carlson and B. E. Brown; Asa Jones, high priest, by George Booth and Alma Grant; Paul Crinzi, high priest, by W. W. Smith and Herbert Voltmann; R. P. Arnold, high priest, by L. Wayne Updike and Randall Hulse; W. G. Oatsvall, high priest, by W. B. McClain and J. E. Lancaster; Rigby Leighton, high priest, by L. O. Brockway and D. E. Dowker; S. C. Sharer, high priest, by E. V. Osborn and C. T. Heaviland. High Priests Paul Crinzi, Rigby Leighton, and S. C. Sharer were also ordained members of the stake high council.

District President Holds Series

PEORIA, ILLINOIS.—The first fellowship supper of the fall was held September 7 at the church rooms. A ham supper was served by the men. Sister Lillian Smith, former supervisor of women, presented to Pastor Herbert Dutton a check for $1,000 to be added to the branch building fund. Brother H. J. Dutton thanked the women and praised their loyalty, devotion and industry.

District President W. J. Breshears, held a series of lectures September 7-12. His subject on Sunday evening was "The Life of Christ and His Ministry." During the week he spoke on "Jesus Christ in Ancient America," and "Joseph's Land." His colored slides of ancient ruins found in Mexico, Central and South America together with quotations from historians and passages from the Bible supported the claims made for the Book of Mormon.

Elder and Mrs. William H. A. Norris and their daughter have just returned from an extensive vacation trip through Mexico. He, too, is much interested in the various ruins of a former civilization, and he took many pictures from which he expects to make slides to be used in illustration of lectures he expects to give at home and elsewhere.

On August 24, Elders Raymond Wrigley and William Shotton blessed John Herbert, the baby son of Brother and Sister William Peters. —Reported by GLADYS L. HEGWOOD

District Institute Held

KLAMATH FALLS, OREGON.—An institute was held in Klamath Falls, Oregon, June 28 and 29 for the Saints in the southern part of the district.

The opening service of the institute was a sermon by the new seventy in the district, Elder George Njeim. The pastor of Klamath Falls Mission, Elder Harold Crooker, was in charge of the service, assisted by Priest Richard Petree of Bend. Following the sermon a program was given. Those taking part were Richard, Lucille, and Bobbie Petree, Brother and Sister J. L. Verhei, Brother Njeim, Waldo and Lila Lasley, Sam and Irene Morris, Kenneth and Mary Moye, Harold and June Crooker, Robert Henderson, Elsie Opalgard, Phylis Meyer, Clarabelle Morris, Harold Mallory, and Harold Carpenter.

The Sunday activities began with an early morning prayer service. District President J. L. Verhei was in charge, assisted by Elders Harold Carpenter and Sam Morris.

The district church school director, Elder Harold Carpenter, was in charge of church school assisted by the local church school director, Elder Sam Morris. The teachers for this period were Sister Effie Verhei, the women; Elder Harold Carpenter, the men; Sister Leona Carpenter, the young people; Sister Elsie Opalgard, the children.

Elder George Njeim delivered the eleven o'clock message with Elder Verhei in charge, assisted by Elder Don Williams of Bend. The solo was by Charles Morris.

Sunday afternoon a baptismal service was held with Elder George Njeim in charge. Elder George Dyer, pastor at Bend, baptized his grandson, Thomas James Abernathy. Elder J. L. Verhei baptized George Crane, and Pastor Harold Crooker baptized Christine Mallory, George Crane, Jr., and Walter Schmidt.

Confirmation service immediately followed the baptismal service and was directed by Brother Verhei. A trio consisting of Clarabelle, Judith, and Patricia Morris, sang, "I Heard an Old Refrain." George Crane was confirmed by Harold Carpenter, assisted by George Dyer; George Crane, Jr., by Harold Crooker, assisted by Don Williams; Thomas J. Abernathy by George Dyer, assisted by James Davidson; Walter Schmidt by Milton Petree, assisted by Sam Morris; and Christine Mallory by J. L. Verhei, assisted by Harold Carpenter.

The concluding service of the institute was the annual business meeting presided over by the district president assisted by the district church school director and the Klamath Falls pastor. The minutes were read by the secretary, Sister Shaw. With the approval of the people, the district president appointed Elder Harold Crooker as pastor and the director of religious education appointed Brother Waldo Lasley as church school director. The following officers were elected: Sister Carroll, secretary; Harold Mallory, treasurer and young people's leader; Brother Carroll, auditor; June Crooker, women's leader; Clarabelle Morris, music leader; Lucile Crane, dramatic leader; Irene Morris, social leader; Sister Shaw, publicity and librarian. The finance committee is George Crane, Sam Morris, and Irene McNab, associated with the pastor and the treasurer.

There were over one hundred persons at the institute. The following pastors attended: Elder James Davidson of Medford, Elder Elder James Davidson of Medford, Elder Milton Petree of Grants Pass, Elder George Dyer of Bend, and Robert Henderson of Lakeview.

These services were held in the newly purchased church.—Reported by LEONA CARPENTER

Branch Presents Radio Program

LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS.—Ten members of the junior class attended the Kansas City Stake Reunion at Lake Doniphan with their teacher and his wife. Other members attended the Stewartville and the Colorado Springs reunions. James Madden presented the church with a projector to help in the local missionary effort. The Leavenworth Council of Churches invited the branch to sponsor a radio program the week of August 11. Many favorable comments and inquiries were received. The programs were wire recordings obtained from the General Church. The annual business meeting was held on September 12 and the following officers were elected: president, Clyde Johnson; secretary, Marilee Johnson; music director, Louise Zuber; treasurer, Linly Dorsey; church school director and publicity, Mildred Dorsey; women's leader, Jean Jackson; Zion's League, Ted Fowler; and auditor, Don Vredenber.—Reported by MILDRED DORSEY

Plans for Expansion Made

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—The final week of camp at Happy Valley which ended with district conference July 26 and 27 was attended by many from the branch.

The annual branch picnic and swimming party was held at Davis on July 12. On August 8 a picnic for the adult group was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Winslow, and a workers' conference with a picnic supper met on August 16 at the home of Elder and Mrs. R. L. Nephew. The Zion's League sponsored a skating party on August 11.

At the Communion service on August 3, Patrick Raymond and Pamela Ruth, twin children of Mr. and Mrs. Archie Raymond McCarty of Portland, Oregon, were blessed by Evangelist W. H. Dawson assisted by Elder John B. Dawson. They are grandchildren of Sister Elva Wright. At the evening service Keith George Scott was baptized by Elder Cecil A. Jacks and confirmed by Elder John B. Dawson assisted by Elder Jacks.

On August 10 Linda Rae, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harley Decker, was blessed by Elder Myron R. Schall assisted by Elder Robert L. Nephew. Mrs. Decker is the former Colleen Nelson. Elders Schall and Nephew also officiated at the blessing of Cheri Ferol Ellis on August 31. Arthur Frank Shipley was baptized on August 17 by Priest Lawrence R. Schall and confirmed by Elders Myron R. Schall and Robert L. Nephew. Priest L. R. Schall spoke at the evening service using audio-visual aids.

At a special business meeting on August 13 the branch voted to purchase property adjoining the church, and plans for future expansion were discussed. The branch sponsored a lunch counter at the State Fair under the management of the Idola Club. This is an annual undertaking and has become one of the big projects of the year.

For some months Elizabeth Schall, wife of the pastor, has suffered from a condition that has necessitated a long period of rest and treatment. She had made sufficient recovery to be able to attend the Communion service on September 7. The Communion service was presided over by the pastor. Visiting Seventy Glenn Johnson gave the Communion talk. Elder Johnson will conduct a series of meetings during the month of September.

A son, Roger Laurence, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Albert V. Burdick on August 30.—Reported by LENA SWANEY

Three Candidates Baptized

TORRINGTON, WYOMING.—Three young people were baptized on August 31 by Elder L. O. Mitchell. The candidates were Mrs. Maxine Mitchell, Brother Mitchell's daughter-in-law, of Wheatland, Wyoming, Jeanne Neville, and Patricia Neville.

The confirmation service was held immediately following by Elders M. M. Bilyue, C. R. Croft, and L. O. Mitchell. The Neville girls attend the Sherman Oaks Branch in southern California.—Reported by DOLORES MARTIN

Officers Re-elected

HOUSTON, TEXAS.—The branch held its annual business meeting in September and re-elected their pastor, Elder Roy Vandel. Brother B. B. Root was re-elected treasurer. Former Gracelanders Elsie Hegwood and Dick Davies were elected secretary and church school director respectively. A newcomer to Houston, Fred Olson, who graduated from Missouri University in June with straight "A's" in chemical engineering, was elected young people's leader. He now works for the Shell Oil Company in the research department. Fred and his wife, Barbara, have been welcomed to the branch.

Secretary Elsie Hegwood is a senior in the Houston University School of Nursing while church school director Dick Davies has finished his work on a law degree and is now preparing to take the bar exams.—Reported by DICK ANKNEY

Priesthood Meeting Held

DE KALB, TEXAS.—Seventy James Renfroe held a series of meetings August 14-24. Seven new members were baptized. They are young people and young adults.

On September 7 the group met with the Texarkana Saints for a priesthood meeting. Brother Renfroe, Brother R. L. Morrison, Brother T. B. Sharp, and Apostle Percy Farrow were present. Brother Renfroe was also present at the branch on September 17 for branch election.—Reported by WILMA FRANCES NICKS

Baby Blessed

KEY WEST, FLORIDA.—On September 7, Deborah Joan, three-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Merritt of New Orleans, Louisiana, was blessed by her grandfather, Elder Gilbert W. Hambleton.

Services are held at 147 B Peary Court, on Sunday evenings.—Reported by GILBERT W. HAMBLETON

District Reunion Held

SASKATCHEWAN DISTRICT, CANADA.—North and South Saskatchewan districts were amalgamated last year and met as one district in Saskatoon, July 13-20. The visiting ministers were Elders Z. Z. Renfroe, Independence, Missouri; Houston Hobart, Deer Lodge, Montana; and Howard Fisher, new appointee who is residing in Saskatoon. They were in charge of the prayer services each day and taught the various classes.

Evening song services were followed by preaching services by Brother Hobart. He chose his subjects from "The Epitome of Faith."

Evensong closed the services of the day. Brother Hobart directed this period, assisted by the Leaguers.

The children had a full morning each day, commencing with prayer service, music appreciation, flannelgraph stories, study classes, and handcraft.

Brother Renfroe was in charge of the Saturday business meeting. The following calls for ordination were placed before the group, voted on, and approved: Priest Peter Harder and Priest Myron Cornish to the office of elder; Deacon Glen Harper to the office of priest; and Dale Cooper and Billy Cornish to the office of deacon.

The following officers were elected: district president, Peter Harder; counselors, Art Bergerson, E. L. Bowerman; secretary, Florence Gendron; treasurer, Grace Beckman; church school director, Charles Nelson; nonresident pastor, Elder Will Cornish; women's leader, Dora Carter; Zion's League leader, Orval Fisher; music director, Joy Fisher; publicity agent, Roderick Thompson; corresponding secretary, Amy Powell.

On Sunday morning, Elder Howard Fisher baptized three candidates.

Brother Renfroe, assisted by Brothers Hobart and Bowerman, were in charge of the Communion service. The emblems were served by Priests Charles Jenkins, Myron Cornish, Pete Harder, Noble Harper, Blake McLean, and Clifford Olson.

Brother Hobart delivered the morning sermon, and in the afternoon the ordinance of blessing of a baby was observed. Linda Elizabeth, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Rascher of Turtleford, Saskatchewan, was blessed by Elders Will Cornish and Arthur Gendron. Earlier in the week, Cheryl Beatrice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chev. Chvala of North Battleford, was blessed by Elders Hobart and Renfroe.

The brethren who were baptized earlier in the morning were confirmed at this service. They were as follows: Alex Johnson of Saskatoon, confirmed by Elders Will Cornish and Art Bergerson; Cecil Hodgins of Craik, confirmed by Elders Art Bergerson and Merlin Olson; and Howard Rascher of Turtleford, confirmed by Elders Merlin Olson and Art Bergerson.

Priests P. Harder and Myron Cornish were ordained to the office of elder by Elders Howard Fisher and Art Gendron, Roy Bowerman and Will Cornish.

Brother Fisher gave the closing sermon of the reunion. Sister Diggle was in charge of the music for the week with Sister Iva Steeves as organist.—Reported by AMY POWELL

New District President at Meeting

ST. THOMAS, ONTARIO.—The annual election of officers and branch business meeting was held September 14. Elder J. C. Stuart, the new president of the London District, presided. The following officers were elected: branch president, High Priest Frank H. Gray; church school director, Priest Stanley Moore; women's leader, Myrtle Cosan; League leader, Teacher Jack Graves; music director, Sister Margaret Ford; treasurer, Elder Miles Rock; recording secretary and book steward, Hazel Ford; auditors, Hazel Johnston and Ruth Millard; building committee, Elder Frank Gray, Stanley Moore, and Jack Graves. Sister N. Kelley was sustained as branch solicitor.—Reported by HAZEL FORD

District Officers Visit Branch

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—The following branch officers were elected: John Treiber, pastor; John Stinoski, church school director; Lenora Nixon, chorister and women's leader; Leona Hanes, recorder and clerk; Delores Staffilino, publicity agent and historian; Helen Phillips, organist; Otto Melcher, Helen Treiber, Melvin Robey, auditing committees; Campbell Staffilino, Otto Melcher, Williard Melcher, William Nixon, Ethel Melcher, John Stinoski, and Mary Allen, building committee. Other officers are to be elected at the next branch business session.

The adult class has donated an automatic hot-water heater as their contribution to the partially finished new addition. The "Live Wire Class" has donated over five hundred dollars above their required quota. The Zion's League will conduct a nursery for children attending the services with their parents in order to establish more reverence.

The women's group is making flowers of discarded nylons which will be sold at the annual bazaar to be held in November in conjunction with a branch supper.

On September 6 and 7 district officers met with the branch. On Saturday evening, District President S. M. Zonker preached. Following the church school hour on Sunday, a Communion service was held. Evangelist Rodgers conducted a class on the Book of Mormon in the afternoon, and Elder Otto Melcher spoke in the evening. The junior choir sang at church school, and Neil Nixon was the soloist in the evening.—Reported by LEONA HANES

Eight Baptized on Children's Day

NEBRASKA CITY, NEBRASKA.—The business meeting of the branch was held September 10, with Brother Harry Niehaus of Lincoln in charge. The new officers elected were Robert Beckett, pastor; Melvin Baker, treasurer; George Kreglo, recorder and church school director; Ellen Goff, music director; Blanche Preston, pianist; Dora Smith, women's leader; George and Charlene Kreglo, young people's supervisors, Blanche Preston, junior supervisor; Janet and Judy Preston, church school pianists; Corlas Bebant, church school secretary; Rees Preston, auditing committee; Darrel Kreglo, historian; Melvin Baker, solicitor and bishop's agent; Dora Smith, publicity agent.

Brother George Kreglo was elected to serve on the nominating committee for the district conference. Eight people were baptized on Children's Day and were confirmed by Elders Harry Niehaus, Clarence Williams, and Luther Smoyer. Each church school class had a picnic this summer to promote attendance.—Reported by MRS. GEORGE KREGLO

Work on New Church Progressing

JACKSON, MICHIGAN.—The annual business meeting was held September 11 at the new church at 123 Marshall Street. District President James Phillips was in charge, assisted by Elder John R. Cox and Priest Ellis Monroe. The mission was organized as a branch and the following officers were elected: pastor, John R. Cox; counselors, Elder Sydney Price and Priest Ellis Monroe; secretary, Coral E. Cox; treasurer, Ellis Monroe; music director, Sister Sydney Price; church school director, Priest Edward Cotton; building committee, Ellis Monroe, Edward Reel, and Edward Cotton; auditing committee, Sydney Price, Edward Cotton, Ira Blosser, Sister Edward Cotton; librarian and reporter, Nancy Turner; women's leader, Margaret Case. Brother Phillips gave a short talk.

The past year there have been two marriages, one death, one birth, and one baptism in the branch. On August 24, Craig Price, son of Elder and Sister Sydney Price, was baptized by Lee Lazarus. The confirmation service was held in the evening at the church.

Work is progressing on the new church. The women's department contributed $304.90 to the building fund in the past year. Their class study is "I Witness for Christ."—Reported by NANCY TURNER

Seventy Holds Series

WESTERN OKLAHOMA.—Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs held a series at the Calumet Branch August 21-September 11. He also held cottage meetings in different homes.

A baptismal service was held September 10. Linda Boren, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Boren, Cleo Critchfield and son Herbie, Joy Burch and wife Marie were baptized.

Jimmie and Melvin Burch, small sons of Mr. and Mrs. Joy Burch, were blessed during the confirmation service.—Reported by AUGUSTA H. POWELL

New Committee Appointed

CHETEK, WISCONSIN.—The branch business meeting was held September 7, with High Priest Wesley Elvin in charge. Elder Ira

Tribute to John Sheehy

I want to pay tribute to the most friendly person I have ever known.

Perhaps because of the years we were together in the New England states as young missionaries, I can see Johnny Sheehy in a better prospectus than any man of our ministerial force.

It was at Jonesport, Maine, where we teamed up to sing our duets, that I saw the greatest expression of his friendliness as we walked down the streets, for no one passed by who did not try to reciprocate in a wholesome manner.

It was at Jonesport that Phillip Lord of the National Broadcasting Company informed the nation of the wholesomeness and friendliness of the people "way down East." I am only expressing the feelings of many when I say that this friendliness was accentuated appreciably by Johnny Sheehy.

It was my good fortune this summer to return to the places of our missionary endeavor, and in every place the folks inside and outside of the church would ask about Johnny, wanting to know when they would see him.

I am sure we shall long remember John Sheehy, the friendliest person I have ever known.

Church Broadcasts in Germany

I have just heard another radio address by Arthur Rock and am writing to let the church know that we in southern Germany enjoy listening to these services. I was really surprised—and a little homesick—when I heard the first one several months ago. I have heard Evan Fry several times too.

I am stationed at a little town named Bad Kreuznach and pick up the broadcasts through the station in Frankfurt. With the encouragement I get from these services and my mother (Mrs. Bessie Dickerson of Chillicothe, Ohio) I feel that I am better able to live a Christian life.

From a Member in Ireland

I am forty years old, married, and have three sons—three, six, and ten years old. I am a wholesale bookseller in my spare time and a postman by employment. I work two different shifts every two weeks. It is not a bad job considering there are over forty thousand unemployed here in Ulster. The house we live in was given us six months ago by the local housing authority because I am an ex-serviceman and have the necessary points. Before that we lived in a prefabricated bungalow, and before that in a house with seventeen other people. I was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1935 by Priest Thomas Taylor. I must admit I have not been a very good member and resumed contact only recently. I enjoy writing and would like to correspond with three or four American families.

A New Book for Children

God Planned It That Way

by Carolyn Edna Mueller

A child's wonderings about God and his world, and the mother's satisfying replies, are expressed in this book in lovely rhythmic lines.

The rain, wind, sunshine, and darkness are explained simply and beautifully as part of God's plan. The child learns how he is a part of the plan, too.

The Supporting Role of the Minister's Wife Part I

An address given at the Women's Institute

By Dr. F. M. McDowell
Director of Priesthood Education

FIRST OF ALL I want to congratulate those responsible for arranging the program of this institute upon their courage in providing for a frontal attack on a most vital problem. It indicates an appreciation of the importance of the work of the ministry; a recognition of the responsibility of the wife in such ministry; and the willingness to listen, do a bit of painful self-analysis, and perhaps repenting.

It should be made clear that we are here concerned with the role of the wife, not of the husband. We are not here to "work the husband over." No doubt he needs it, but we must reserve that pleasure for another time. We are here not to entertain, but to talk frankly and perhaps pointedly to wives and potential wives. Anyway, you asked for it (or Sister Arnson did), and here it is.

The Role of the Wife

The role of the wife varies greatly in thinking and practice from age to age and nation to nation. Our history book reads something like this:

The wife has almost always been a worker. In Bible times she was valued for her industry and usefulness. In most European society and in the Orient she labored side by side with her man in common family work. In pioneer America she was valued for her industry rather than her charms.

With the Industrial Revolution she lost much of her independence. The family was separated; the man away from home; the woman ceased to be a producer; the support of the wife and family was thrown upon the husband.

Then she developed a new psychology. Marriage came to be regarded as a means of livelihood. Dependent upon man, she developed a technique for the control of him—coyness, charm, modesty, ornamentation, and so on. She changed from a personality to a satellite, from a creative worker to a lady (the Victorian ideal).

But this passive role came to be resented; trivialities proved boring. These tendencies were reversed and she went into industry, became economically independent, self-supporting, and self-respecting. Again the marriage relationship must and will change.

A new day for marriage and family life is dawning; we can neither maintain the status quo nor go back to the "good old times." An increasing percentage of marriages will be free, voluntary unions of equals. The way is forward, and we shall be led by the light revealed both by science and by revelation. We are not permitted here to pursue these considerations further.

Three vastly different word pictures will, I trust, prove stimulating and helpful. The first comes from China.

An old friend of mine, the daughter of a clergyman, married to a highly placed Norwegian official in China, told me some years ago how this phenomenon had always aroused her profound astonishment, when, for instance, she watched Chinese family life on the rivers from her bungalow in the evening. Junk after junk glides slowly down the broad, silent stream, carrying cargo, and usually steered by the woman standing aft. One child clings to her skirts, two more are playing on deck, she carries the fourth on her back, the fifth is at her breast, the sixth evidently on the way; with calm confidence she steers the boat safely through a mass of craft and other obstacles. What a picture of feminine bondage and degradation! But why does she laugh all over her face, showing her strong sound teeth? Why do her eyes beam when she turns them on her husband, sprawling lazily under the awning? Why is she wild with delight every time he condescends to give her a glance of approbation? My Norwegian friend had questioned the Chinese women, just as the Japanese doctor questioned me, and she had never been given any answer but this: "Is there anything more delightful than to have a husband? Ought I not to be glad to have a husband at all, and ought I not to do all I can to keep him pleased with me?"—The Family, by Reuter and Runner, pages 468, 469.

The second is a composite picture provided by the pens of certain literary women of the last century.

We find this type arising in the last century; the literary woman who uses her pen to bewail woman's hard lot in life. Made of higher and finer stuff, unsurpassable in purity of thought and delicacy of feeling, good and wise, tender and sympathetic, altogether beyond the comprehension of man's low intelligence and stunted emotional life, she drags out her holy existence by the side of some bandit or idiot, whom she was once foolish or angelic enough to trust. And it is not only her literary heroines that have such a bad time; no, it is woman's universal lot to suffer, to drudge at home in everlasting monotony, to bear a monstrous number of children. But, God be praised, the hour is approaching for the complete dethronement of the former lord of creation. Bit by bit she has wrung from him his prerogatives in every social, economic, and legal sphere: economic freedom and independence, married or unmarried; the franchise; the right of election; professions and offices of almost every kind; the principle of equal wages—in fact, the only things now lacking are complete parental authority over the children born in wedlock (she has always had it over those born outside it) and admission to the priesthood and to commissions in the army; then man's power will be broken everywhere, and then—ah! then the sweet hour of vengeance will strike.—From The Family, by Reuter and Runner, pages 466, 467.

The third is selected from our own church literature—Elbert A. Smith writes this in his Marriage and Home Building:

My grandfather, Joseph Smith, married a New York girl, Emma Hale. Their union was broken only when he was assassinated. When she had come to him in an hour of extreme danger and persecution in 1842 he paid her a great tribute, and that after fifteen years of married life:

"With what unspeakable delight, and what transports of joy swelled my bosom, when I took by the hand, on that night, my beloved Emma—she that was my wife, even the wife of my youth, and the choice of my heart. Many were the revibrations of my mind when I contemplated for a moment the many scenes we had been called to pass through, the fatigues and the toils, the sorrows and sufferings, and the joys and consolations, from time to time, which had strewed our paths and crowned our board! Oh what a commingling of thought filled my mind for the moment, again she is here, even in the seventh trouble—undaunted, firm, and unwavering—unchangeable, affectionate Emma.—Church History, volume 1, page 120.

The Significance of the Place and Work of Priesthood in the Church

The vital importance of the "supporting role," to which we here refer, has its source in the significance of the work of the priesthood in the church. Priesthood, as we are coming to understand and appreciate it, represents God's method of achieving his purpose for mankind. It is God's way of building his kingdom and redeeming the world. No words of mine can therefore add to or detract from the importance of the work of your husbands, fathers, brothers, or sweethearts as ministers. Such simply cannot be overemphasized.

Most of you have some such relationship with a man of the local ministry somewhere in the church. These men, constituting a large majority of the ordained men of the church, must for decades to come give of the surplus of their time and energy, aside from daily toils and cares, in the arduous task of ministering to the souls of men. If they fail, branches will decay and die, homes and families will be broken, the Saints will be scattered and lost. If they fail, the work of evangelism will be postponed, if not completely thwarted, and the work of "bringing and establishing the cause of Zion" continuously delayed.

Let me speak with utmost plainness. Unless your mates are free to enter upon the work of their ministry with increasing efficiency, the church in our generation will languish and in many localities die. We consider here no mere academic question, since what you say, and do, and are as mates of the men of the ministry may make or break that ministry. Perhaps we should pause here long enough for each to pray that she may not fail in this divinely ordered stewardship, that of being a companion and mate to a man of the ministry.

The Minister's Wife Provides a Supporting Personality

A wife supports or fails to support her husband by what she is and does as a person. The healthier, happier, the more mature (emotionally) she is, the greater her supporting role. If she fails him here, she may fail him entirely.

The importance of knowledge, skill, and Christian character is readily recognized. Not so, perhaps, is the need that one possess emotional maturity. Success in marriage, whatever the vocation of the husband, requires frankness, the ability to give and take, to face life realistically. It requires growing out of the "cry-baby"—"going home to mamma" stage which so frequently shatters the early years of married life.

Hundreds of husbands were asked to list their grievances. The ten most frequently mentioned were: My wife—

Nags me, is not affectionate, is selfish, is inconsiderate, complains too much, interferes with hobbies, is slovenly in appearance, is quick-tempered, is conceited, is insincere, and has her feelings easily hurt.

Clearly, what the wife is as a person has much to do with a man's happiness and well-being as a minister. Certainly a man will be greatly handicapped if not utterly thwarted in his ministry by having a wife who is touchy, selfish, and self-pitying—an "ever indulging in pet peeves," "always quitting" sort of person. Certainly he will find support in a wife who is so emotionally mature that she forgets self in her tasks, knows where she is going and how to get there, controls personal feelings, accepts criticism without resentment, faces tragedy, disappointment and failure with courage, and evidences the ability to give and take. Such a companion backs up her husband just by being the kind of person she is.

The Minister's Wife Provides a Sustaining Partnership

She supports her husband by what she is and does as a mate. This requires that she give herself without reservation to all that her share of the marriage contract requires.

Our marriage covenant reads: "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition, that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other and wholly from all others during your lives." Note the words "wholly for" and "wholly from." Success in marriage requires the complete blending of all physical, mental, and spiritual aspects of life. Marriage is lifelong and life wide in its obligations and privileges. It requires faithfulness "to" and "from." Faithlessness of the wife may well completely destroy a man's effectiveness as a minister.

I know men whose marriage, home, family, and work in the church have been pretty well wrecked by ignorance, fear, morbidity, warped thinking, and a certain pernicious, so-called religious philosophy regarding sex on the part of their companions.

The marriage relationships of the minister, as all other relationships, must be brought out into the clear sunlight of scientific knowledge and Christian thinking. They must be viewed with intelligence, frankness, temperance, self-control, and mutuality. Too much of our thinking and practice here has been quite un-Christian and unscientific. Such is often the source of personality breakdowns, the severing of marriage bonds, and the nullifying of a man's ministry.

The Minister's Wife Builds a Supporting Home and Family Life

The minister's wife supports her husband in his ministry through the kind of home and family life she sustains and directs.

The normal man needs and has a right to expect certain sources of strength and encouragement in his home. Among these are security, serenity, relaxation, and comfort.

He should find in his home that quality of affection which assures him that he is wanted, loved, belongs—an affection which provides him a sense of worth. Such are the fundamental needs or drives of human nature. Everyone desires to "be wanted," "to be loved," "to belong," "to be respected as of worth." These are human needs and drives, and your husband is human.

When the husband is called upon to give ministry in other homes, it is imperative that he be backed by a quality of family life that may be pointed to as a worthy example. No minister can serve or save effectively when he knows that the family being visited and just about everybody else knows that his own family life is a mess.

The supporting role of the minister's family is conditioned largely by what is happening to his children. The Mid-Century White House Conference had this to say about children in the home:

There is no more satisfying, important, soul-stirring job than parenthood.

It is in the living of the home pattern that honesty and integrity are fostered.

Delinquent behavior is only a reflection of what the child has received from his parents and society—but, we refuse to accept the responsibility.

Love is as vital as calories for the growing child.

The child is the hope of the world—if he don't have to live with (imperfect) adults.

Certainly no minister's wife can claim a genuinely supporting role in his ministry unless she does all within her power to see that their children are clean, healthy, happy, well-disciplined, obedient, and courteous. If the minister's home fails him here, his endeavors to serve, however able, will in the long run avail little.

Supporting the Husband in His Occupational and Vocational Pursuits

An overwhelming majority of our priesthood members are employed in secular pursuits. Success or failure there bears a direct relationship to their effectiveness as ministers. What can the wife do here?

The wife can be his confidant, sympathizer, encourager. She can be a good listener, always with unfeigned interest, affording him the opportunity to think out loud. She can thus share in his interests and problems and perhaps discover what role he desires her to play. This serving as a sounding board or screen—letting him "get it off his chest"—is often the best kind of help as in all good counseling.

The wife can share her husband's vocational life in more direct and specific ways:

She can make and cultivate social contacts with colleagues, clients, customers; she can act as his private secretary—type manuscripts, write letters, keep files. She can, in fact, become his ex officio partner.

Much depends, of course, upon the nature of his work, skills required, the peculiar talents of the wife. But the point is, if she wants to she can find ways to help him to be happy and efficient in his vocation. (To be continued.)

Occupation Teacher

By Sally Harding

AT THE MOMENT I feel as green as June grass, and my knees are dissolving into water. But the water is no longer lukewarm—it's boiling. It's been four years reaching 212°, but it has arrived.

Several years ago my father told me that the teaching profession is one of the highest callings for a woman. I was skeptical, because at the time I was in the throes of my high school education where it is considered cricket to resolve never to become a teacher. A few growing pains later a couple of the exemplary teachers on the Graceland staff took me aside to ditto my father's comment. Still I was dubious.

Then, somewhere along the line, it happened—rather like having a pimple begin to fester, come to a head, and finally rupture.

AS MY SOPHOMORE YEAR at Graceland drew to a close I found myself teetering on the tight rope between the cold, cruel world and the university. When I stumbled toward the latter I somehow got caught in the tide of the School of Education, still maintaining a foothold in the College of Literature, Science, and Arts.

"If you're going to major in English," my academic counselor advised, "you'd better get a teaching certificate." "Quit shoving," I thought, but I signed my jon henri on the application blank for same.

"Journalism," I wrote in big, bold letters beside the square marked

"minor." This would be my road block. At this point the pimple began to fester.

The university calendar said twenty-one hours would have to be spent in the School of Education. "Minimum hours," I consoled myself. But they might as well have been maximum, because it was in this department that the thing began to come to a head.

Here Is the Writer . . .

Sally, a native of Council Bluffs, Iowa, is a graduate of Graceland College ('50) and the University of Michigan ('52). At present she is teaching high school English and history at the Waterford Township High School in Pontiac, Michigan. Outside of teaching, her main interests, she says, are reading, writing, (definitely not arithmetic) music, golf, bowling, and young people. In past years she has served on the staff of church youth camps in Nebraska and Michigan.

"Compulsory," said the post card which invaded my mail in the spring of '52 to tell me about registration for placement with the teaching division of the placement bureau. I clung awkwardly to my road block. The time for decision was at hand.

"What are the openings in journalism?" I asked the department chairman, trying to conceal the note of expediency in my question. The immediate opportunities in that field as we discussed them offered a real challenge to my free agency.

THEN ONE DAY I received a call from a superintendent of schools at a far corner of the state. The head of the pimple grew tender. Soon the first sprinkle of vacancy notices was followed by an intermittent rain and then a deluge. I felt almost professional as I donned hat and gloves and drove a borrowed car for a series of personal interviews.

"Your educational philosophy," my first interviewer asked, "what is it?" I swallowed hard and blinked a couple of times. I wondered momentarily if I had such a concept, then I discovered it as I began to talk: "The responsibility of education is to help young men and women equip themselves to achieve the ultimate purpose for which they are created." The pimple ruptured.

So now I'm signing "teacher" on forms which inquire about profession. But I'm not actually that yet. Although I'm on the "other" side of the desk now, I'm still in training, as all beginning Reorganized Latter Day Saint teachers are, to help young people to help themselves to help Christ build the kingdom of God on earth.

Fair-sharing

Seventy Herbert Lynn tells the story of the man who was glad to live in the United States, accepting its favors and enjoying its benefits without ever taking the time or trouble to become a full-fledged citizen and accept the responsibilities of citizenship. Then there was another man who even took out citizenship papers and became nominally a citizen who coasted along and never accepted his fair share of democratic responsibilities.

The church has folks like these. Some of our best friends attend and worship with us each Sunday but never see the real need of accepting membership. Others, having been baptized, fail to take on their fair share of the work of the kingdom.

ALICE ZION BUCKLEY

Young People in the News

This is another in the series of biographical sketches on young Latter Day Saints who are outstanding in church and school or civic activities. Readers who know of other young members worthy of special recognition are invited to submit material on and pictures of their candidates to the Youth Office, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

the Pennington Brothers

THE PENNINGTONS of Teaneck, New Jersey, are Scouters through and through. In June the three Pennington boys—John, Bill, and Dick—all received awards at the Teaneck Boy Scout court of honors ceremonies.

John, 16, was awarded the Eagle Scout award; Bill, 13, was presented his Life Scout award; and Dick, 11, became a Tenderfoot.

John has acquired the 21 merit badges required for Eagle rank. Bill has 17 merit badges, and has hopes of being an Eagle Scout by the end of this year. Dickie has just begun work on requirements for Second Class Scout.

Both John and Bill have been Boy Scout patrol leaders and den chiefs in Cub Scouting. John belongs to the Explorer Unit of Troop 90, which is for boys 14 and older. With their leader directing, they participate in activities which appeal to that age group.

The two boys are working on their God and Country award. They have just recently completed the third award in the program. Dick will soon begin working toward this award also.

These boys, sons of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Pennington, are really excellent examples of church young people who are members of a small branch. At present they attend the Newark Branch, which meets in the Masonic Temple in Lyndhurst and has only church school and church services each week. Prayer services are held in cottages on Wednesday evenings, but because of the scattered condition of the Saints and the problem of transportation, regular attendance is hard to attain.

John and Bill help at the branch in any way possible. They are often responsible for assisting in the opening services of church school, helping with special music, making announcements, taking up the offering, distributing, collecting, and packing song books and bulletins, putting up tables, and carrying dishes for any special womens' or branch activities such as bazaars or dinners.

They also have provided some leadership in junior church, as they are the oldest members of that group. These activities and others have aided the boys in obtaining their first three awards for God and Country.

The family will soon move to Washington, D.C., where Mr. Pennington has been transferred. He is employed by the government in the immigration and naturalization service. The Washington, D. C., Branch will afford more association with other church young people.

Bill and John attended Deer Park youth camp last year and would have gone this year if family plans had not been so indefinite. They also attended the Boy Scout camp, "No-Be-Bo-Sco," at Blairstown, New Jersey, in 1949, 1950, and 1951.

Dick, John, and Bill

In school activities they are particularly interested in music, and all three play in the orchestra or band. Athletics interest them too. John was on the winning basketball intramural team when in the seventh grade and again this year. He won a cup this year labeled "Championship—1951-1952, tenth grade Recreation Basket Ball League." He was also a member of the soccer team in school. John has served as president of his class's bowling league for the past two years. Bill and Dick go out mostly for baseball with the Teaneck Recreation Department. All three enjoy bicycle riding, and each has an English-made bike which they bought with their own money.

It is satisfying and encouraging to note that a family can promote and urge boys to participate wholeheartedly in such activities as Boy Scout work. This same interest and willingness to serve seem evident in their school and church activities. Such enthusiasm and sincere effort will be appreciated no matter where the Penningtons make their home.

DEATHS

JONES.—Carleen Marie, daughter of Chester Carl and Ardhith Kiser Jones, was born August 7, 1948, at Keokuk, Iowa, and was killed in a car accident in front of her home in Keokuk on September 13, 1952. She was a member of the primary class at church school in Keokuk. Funeral services were held at the church with Elder W. H. Gunn officiating.

CANINE.—Elizabeth Eileen, daughter of Major Chester E. Canine of the Army and Mayday Presley Canine, was born February 4, 1947, at Oakland, California, and died August 19, 1952, at Walter Reed Hospital in Washington, D.C. She was blessed at the Berkeley (California) Branch in 1947 and during the past two years attended church school in Washington, D. C.

She is survived by her parents; her maternal grandmother, Mrs. Nellie Young Presley; and her paternal grandparents: Mr. and Mrs. James E. Canine, of Oakland, California. Funeral services were held at Fort Myer Chapel, Elder A. W. Powell officiating. Interment was in Arlington National Cemetery.

McKINDSEY.—Alphene, daughter of Ansel and Sophia Corkins, was born January 13, 1872, in Martinsville, Michigan, and died August 26, 1952, at Harper Hospital in Detroit, Michigan. Her husband, William McKindsey, preceded her in death in 1948. They made their home in Independence, Missouri, from 1920 to 1933, attending Liberty Street and Second Church while there. She had been a member for forty-four years.

Surviving are one daughter, Mrs. Leonard Roberts; one grandchild; and three great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder W. Blair McClain in Detroit and Elder Vincent Harrison at the graveside in Milan, Michigan.

PARKER.—John W., son of Richard J. and Mary Etta Owens Parker, died July 19, 1952, at the age of eighty-three. On June 25, 1899, he was married to Dora Skinner at Maysville, Arkansas, where for years he worked as a pharmacist for a drug company. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1908 and ordained a deacon in 1909. He also belonged to the Odd Fellows Lodge, the Modern Woodman Lodge, and was a member of the Maysville Brass Band.

He is survived by his wife; three children: Troy, Iral, and Valeria Parker Pim; four grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church, Elders James Daugherty and Raymond Carson officiating.

SHERMAN.—Clare Arthur, son of Charles and Mary Sherman, was born November 22, 1890, at Belding, Michigan, and died June 30, 1952, at General Hospital in Kansas City, Missouri. As a young man he desired to be an artist and a doctor. At the age of fifteen he attended the art academy in Chicago and became a portrait painter. Using the money he made from his paintings, he studied medicine, receiving his doctor's degree from the Chicago Medical College. In 1913 he moved to Kansas City, where he made his home for many years and practiced medicine. During World War I he served as a first lieutenant in the medical corps, and in 1937 he served with the Red Cross during the flood in Arkansas. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since April 16, 1899.

He is survived by his wife, Gertrude, of the home in Kansas City; three daughters: Mrs. Shirley Adair, Mrs. Mary Burden, and Mrs. Myrtle Masters, all of Kansas City; four grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren. One daughter, Camille Ardis, was killed in a car accident at the age of six. Funeral services were held at Wagner Chapel, Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Forest Hill Cemetery.

WIDRIG.—Daniel Elmer, son of William and Sarah Widrig, was born December 25, 1897, at Bendon, Michigan, and died September 1, 1952, at Munson Hospital in Traverse City, Michigan, of injuries received in an automobile accident. In 1920 he was married to Anna May Myers, who survives him. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1905, was ordained to the office of elder, and served as counselor to the pastor of Gaylord Branch and president of Northern Michigan District. He was also very active in civic affairs.

Besides his wife he leaves four daughters: Mrs. Marjorie Christian and Mrs. Dorothy Bartlett of Detroit, Michigan; Mrs. Virginia Wiggins of Saginaw, Michigan; and Miss Anna Widrig of Gaylord; his father, William Widrig of Gaylord; three sisters; a brother; and five grandchildren.

CULMER.—Evyline, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Fisher, was born December 8, 1886, at Sandwich, Illinois, and died August 28, 1952, at Sandwich. On September 8, 1909, she was married to Lawrence J. Culmer, who preceded her in death on April 16, 1923. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1930.

She is survived by a brother, Walter Fisher of Sycamore, Illinois, and a sister, Mrs. Rose Sova of Kansas City, Missouri. Funeral services were held at the Burkhart Chapel in Sandwich, Elder Lloyd L. Hadley officiating. Interment was in the Oak Ridge Cemetery at Sandwich.

SHAFFER.—Grace, was born November 8, 1885, in Lowbanks, Ontario, and died September 15, 1952, in Buffalo, New York. She was an active member of Buffalo Branch and served for many years in the choir and women's department. She was the wife of Elder George Shafer and the mother of Mrs. Ruth Ensmenger and Dr. Albert Shafer. Funeral services were held at the Ulbrick Chapel in Buffalo. Seventy Stan Johnson officiated.

ROBERTS.—Cora L., was born October 27, 1883, in Arkansas and died September 21, 1952, at Sacramento, California, after a long illness. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since November 22, 1925.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Ruby Toon and Mrs. Myrtle Witt of Rio Linda, California, and Mrs. Zola Perkins of Sacramento; a son, Lloyd Roberts of Sacramento; three brothers: B. R. Yochem of Illinois; A. J. Yochem of Arizona; and Melton Yochem of Sacramento; a sister, Mrs. Minnie Tanniehill of Del Paso Heights, California; eighteen grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Chapel of the Flowers in Sacramento, Evangelist W. H. Dawson officiating. Interment was in East Lawn Cemetery, Sacramento.

 WEEK-END VACATION

If fate denies you a really big vacation in the Rockies or on the Pacific Coast, you may still have a wonderful time on a week end nearer home. This year it was necessary for us to settle for a little jaunt to Missouri's Lake of the Ozarks. One of our great thrills was provided while at dinner in a lofty dining hall near Bagnell Dam, recommended by Duncan Hines. It was nearing sunset, and for an hour, over the best of food, we watched the changing colors of day fading into night over an expanse of lake equaled only in beauty by the view of the Potomac from Mount Vernon. There was a boat excursion by moonlight, and pretty homes in the woods along the winding shore. It was fun to wander through the gift shops in the town and to compare native craftsmanship with the imports. Finally, there was the comforting gift of dreamless sleep in a shining new cabin on a hill high above the lake. In the morning there was a river of fog pouring wraith-like from the water, over the dam, and down into the valley below.

For worship that Sunday morning the nineteenth Psalm was read, beginning, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork." Prayer could hardly express enough gratitude for the beauty and happiness of that experience. We breakfasted at a picturesque hotel in Camdenton, crossed some beautiful bridges, and had dinner in Jefferson City surrounded by national and state officials and their families. So much was packed into the two-day trip that it seemed like a week. Now we're home again with a new supply of sparkle and verve for work.

 WHEN DISASTER STRIKES

When disaster strikes, our faith is most severely tested. We think that we have been faithful to our responsibilities. We have been as good as we knew how to be. We have tried to serve at all times. We have prayed for protection. Why, we wonder, does God permit accidents to happen to us?

But we must remember the conditions of our tenure on the earth. We are here not only to "replenish the earth," which is as far as some people fulfill the great human commission. We are also to "subdue it," which is a great responsibility. That makes it necessary for us to look out for ourselves. God's intervention in our affairs seems generally (some people testify to exceptions) to be confined to the realm of the spirit. He advises us and warns by the still small voice. We must learn to recognize and obey these "leadings." We must be alert to catch and understand them.

But the physical part—yes, and the intellectual part—of our protection is in our own hands. Our minds must know what to do in emergencies. Our hands must remove the inflammables that destroy life and property. We must regulate the overheated stoves that cause fires. In driving cars, we must know how to disengage the clutch—the moment to step on the brake or turn off the ignition switch.

Most of our disasters come from "accidents of life," not from the will of heaven. A part of our having "dominion" (Genesis 1:23) is to learn to take care of ourselves. God has tried to protect us not by moving our hands or taking charge of us, but by giving us minds that he intended us to use.

Rules and Resolutions

Cecil Ray Ettinger

CECIL WAS BAPTIZED in 1930, but it took a world war and seventy-two combat missions over Europe as a P-47 fighter pilot to make him really enthusiastic about the church. When he entered the service as an aviation cadet in October, 1942, he had what he calls "less than a nominal interest" in religion. But during those seventy-two missions over Europe "a number of things happened that could not be explained by ordinary means," he says, so when he returned he "wanted to know what God would have me do."

It didn't take long to find out at least part of what God had in mind for him. In November, 1945, he was ordained a priest; in June, 1947, an elder; and in April, 1950, a seventy. He went under full-time church appointment in February, 1948. His first assignment was to Nauvoo, and he is now missionary in the Chicago and Northeast Illinois Districts.

During his three years in the service Cecil served as an instructor for some time, and for his performance in Europe he was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal with nine clusters, the Presidential Citation with one cluster, the ETO Ribbon with four stars, and the Victory Ribbon.

He was born in Taylorville, Illinois, on July 26, 1922, six months after his father had been killed, and was "reared in the traditions of the church by a devoted mother," he says. He was graduated from high school there in 1940. He attended Graceland then, being graduated just before going into the service, and again in 1946 while waiting to attend a university. During his second session there he met Betty Jean Russell, whom he married in August, 1946. He attended the University of Iowa where he received his B.A. degree in February, 1948, the same month he received church appointment. He majored in mathematics and minored in religion.

While in high school he worked part time as a bookkeeper and clerk in a local store and later did similar work in three different states before becoming a church appointee. He earned distinction as a bassoon soloist in the high school concert band and with the Springfield, Illinois, Symphony; he was chosen to play in the Illinois All-State Orchestra and the national solo contest for two years.

Cecil and his wife have two children, Cecil Ray III, 5, and Stephanie Lynn, 2.

The radio performance will be given the night of December 21.

CENTER STAKE PRIESTHOOD CLASSES

The opening priesthood classes for the Center Stake were held October 6 at the Stone Church. The enrollment for the Melchisedec classes was 160, and approximately 300 members of the Aaronic priesthood registered. The Aaronic priesthood is being instructed by Evan Fry, and the Melchisedec classes are under the direction of Dr. Floyd M. McDowell.

NEW PASTOR AT WALNUT PARK

On October 8, the Walnut Park congregation of the Center Stake of Zion voted to approve Elder Herbert Lively as their new pastor as assigned by the Joint Council. The former pastor, Elder Fred O. Davies, has been assigned as president of the Kansas City Stake. Brother Lively is the former pastor of the Central Church in Kansas City, Missouri. The Davies family was honored at a family night on October 7 given by the Walnut Park congregation.

SPEAKS TO WOMEN

Mrs. Pauline Arnson, General Church director of women, was the guest speaker at the Eden Heights women's meeting in the Center Stake on October 8.

WEDDLE AT HOT SPRINGS

Franklyn S. Weddle, radio director and music director of the General Church, was a delegate to the district convention of Kiwanis International held at Hot Springs, Arkansas, October 5, 6, and 7.

"Ye Gave the Nazarites Wine to Drink"

THE FIRST SUNDAY in November is widely observed as "World Temperance Sunday." We might well share in this observance.

Among the many who might speak to us in this connection and at this time, I call to mind most particularly Amos, the shepherd prophet of Tekoa, who ministered in Israel during a period of widespread prosperity. Amos is noteworthy for his insistence that sound morality is of far greater importance in the sight of God than power, or possessions, or ease, or any of the many things to which men tend to give priority in periods of affluence.

Amos was capable of flaming moral indignation. It seems to me that nowhere is this more clearly revealed than in his denunciation of the people of Israel:

I raised up of your sons for prophets, and of your young men for Nazarites. Is it not even thus, O ye children of Israel? saith the Lord. But ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink; and commanded the prophets, saying, Prophecy not.—Amos 2: 11, 12.

The distinctive thing about the Nazarites was their vow to "separate themselves unto the Lord" (Numbers 6: 2). This vow was made because of their keen awareness of the great calling of Israel and of their personal responsibility in light of this national calling. And, since abstinence from the use of wine was both a sign of the Nazarite vow and a means of its performance, it is small wonder that Amos became indignant at those who "gave the Nazarites wine to drink," even as he did at those who "commanded the prophets, saying, Prophecy not." To give the Nazarites wine to drink was to distract them from their high and holy calling in a period of Israel's peculiar time of opportunity and need. It was completely without moral defense.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC offers no good thing to men of destiny in our day, even as it offered no good thing to the Israelites in the time of Amos. Men who promote the sale of intoxicants conspire to steal the strength and resolution of young men whom God intended to serve their generation. They help nullify the vows of nobility and good citizenship which many of these young men have taken. Their influence goes far to make impossible the fulfillment of the vision of the prophets.

If the people of our day were as well versed in the Scriptures as their fathers, it might be possible to say to the liquor advertisers and salesmen, "Ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink," and to say this in such fashion as to make it one of the ultimate expressions of contempt. It could come to be a standard indictment charging treason against the spirit of freedom and the high purpose of our generation, as well as a judgment against all who share in liquor's dethronement of reason and its blunting of all fine sensitivity. It could express for us our justifiable scorn for men who put profits of the liquor traffic above regard for those who by nature and calling should be "separated unto the work of God."

F. H. E.

IF YOU ABSTAIN

1. You will have more money in your pocket. Few people who drink and serve liquors realize how much money they are spending on this indulgence. A fifth of "good" liquor usually costs more than $5.00. By the end of the year, the casual drinks and the money spent on liquor entertainment mount up to a formidable sum which could be used to improve home facilities or the security of the family.

2. You will feel better if you don't drink. One reason so many people become "dependent" upon liquor is that they find they must use alcohol in order to get temporary relief from the depression and physical discomfort caused by their previous drinking. There are no vitamins in liquor.

3. Your family will be better off if you don't drink. So often drinking is responsible for little flurries of bickering in family circles—nothing serious, but certainly nothing helpful.

4. You will be a better worker. When you spend an evening drinking with friends, you may make a sub-par effort at the office the next day. The probability is that you will flounder along until three o'clock in the afternoon and then go out for a drink, because you "just have to get something done."

5. You will have greater self-respect and self-confidence. Day in and day out, you will feel that you are just about living up to your responsibilities, giving everything that can be expected of you to your job and your family relations.

It is better not to drink and it is not nearly so hard to abstain as some people think. A few years ago, there was a good deal of pressure to drink, but among intelligent and well-bred people today, such pressure is notably absent. On social occasions there is always an alternative, a soft drink, perhaps, or even, more and more frequently, a cup of coffee or tea. People are more and more assuming the attitude that if you don't drink, it's your business, not theirs.

Report to the Church

WE HAVE JUST CONCLUDED the Institute on the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the first of the three major gatherings of the inter-conference period. The Institute was planned by Elders Charles D. Neff, Evan A. Fry, and John Blackmore, in collaboration with the First Presidency, and the sessions were blessed by the evident presence of the Spirit of light and truth. The meetings were well attended, interest building toward an inspiring climax, and those responsible for the gathering felt well repaid for their efforts.

The Institute was primarily concerned with the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and the revelations contained therein. The services of Sunday, September 28, were held in the Auditorium and were devoted to consideration of the "Principle of Revelation," the "Continuity of Revelation" and the "Function of the Prophet." The activities of each day during the week were introduced by a period of worship of an unusually high order. In daily classes consideration was given to the Book of Commandments, the first and un-availing attempt to publish the revelations in book form, and the later and successful publication in the various editions of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. The remainder of each morning was given to consideration of the history and background of the revelations, with specific concern to the conditions under which divine guidance has been received and most fully appreciated.

The afternoon panel discussions brought a somewhat different but very helpful approach to the consideration of the revelations under such titles as "The Prophetic Content of the Doctrine and Covenants," the "Social and Economic Content of the Doctrine and Covenants," the "Doctrinal Content of the Doctrine and Covenants," the "Doctrine and Covenants in Relation to Health, and Related Subjects," and "The Doctrine and Covenants in the Church of Tomorrow."

There was a rich note of testimony in the evening presentation of "The Centrality of Jesus," "The Manifestations of the Holy Spirit," "The Levels, Usages, Types, Sources, Processes, and Tests of Revelation," and in the "Review and Summary" and question periods.

As the services of the week progressed, conversation among those participating showed a growing awareness of the distinctively personal aspect of divine revelation: that such light is the fruitage of a man's personal relation to God, a relationship which draws on all that he is but whose foundation is moral earnestness. At the same time there seemed to be quickened awareness of the fact that the revelations received by the church have involved a high type of social experience. In seeking the mind and will of God the prophet is not alone, but represents the people and is strengthened and emboldened by their faith and confidence and by awareness of their deep and urgent needs.

AS WAS HOPED and expected, the discussion of the revelations threw light on the operation of the principle of revelation so as to include all who are used by our Heavenly Father as his prophetic ministers. We were made aware of the roots of revelation in the un-availing love of God and in the response of men quickened by that love. We saw more clearly the relation between the principle of divine revelation and our need for salvation in the kingdom of God. We saw that revelation is always purposeful, meeting both specific and fundamental needs; that it is timely, adjusted to human capacity; and that it is wise, unifying the believers on a higher level than before.

We sincerely trust that those who participated in the Institute will bear their testimony in the stakes and districts and branches from which they came, and that this testimony will be accompanied by a rich outpouring of the Spirit similar to that experienced while we were together.

A compilation of summaries and outlines of the discussion will be published as soon as circumstances permit, and we trust that these will be widely used and, again, that their use will be accompanied by the same Spirit of light and understanding. We are convinced that the divine guidance which we need so urgently will be received by the church as a whole and in the various areas and divisions in which the church functions, as the Saints are faithful and expectant, and as their forward march creates situations in which further light is needed.

"Messiah" Broadcast on C.B.S. Radio Stations December 21

The church will again present the annual Messiah broadcast over the C.B.S. Network on the Sunday preceding Christmas. The Columbia Network radio stations are listed on page 22 for convenience in locating the C.B.S. station nearest you. The 136 stations that carried last year's broadcast are indicated with an asterisk. You are urged to write your nearest station, thanking those in charge for carrying the broadcast last year and urging them to carry it again this year. The program will originate from radio Station KMBC at 10:30 until 12:00 p.m., Central Standard Time, Sunday, December 21, 1952.

Local leaders are urged to follow the suggestions and helps found on page ten of the 1952-53 Pastor's Handbook.

Where Your Treasure Is

A sermon by George E. Armeson

Bishop's Agent of Southern
New England District

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal. But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.—Matthew 6: 19-21.

TREASURE! GOLD! There are words for you. Ever since the dawn of time precious woods, metals, and stones have taken a high position in man's estimation. Treasure has always lured men on. Consider what deeds have been performed for the possession of it. Men have lied, cheated, murdered, sailed the seas, and climbed the most difficult mountains for it.

It is no different today. The quest continues, though in different forms. Today, under the cloak of respectability, men spend eight billion dollars in the quest for treasure each year, hoping to strike it rich—eight billion to the dog tracks, horse races, and other forms of trying to get something for nothing, or for the minimum of effort.

In still another way the quest goes on. Men of highly respectable affairs buy stock hoping that in the near future their holdings will go up enough in price to make a handsome profit. Some more modest folks seek treasure in the purchase of a good investment that will provide a profitable rate of return.

Before the cautious person buys, he looks over the balance sheet of the prospective company to determine its assets and liabilities. The Wall Street financial reports in 1950 had a list of good stocks in which one might invest with comparative safety. There was a block of stocks that yielded better than 7 per cent and had done so for fifteen years. But the reports did not mention the years back of that—the years before 1935. Anyone who looks at the record will find why those years were skipped.

NOW I DO NOT SUGGEST you go into the market and have yourself a buying orgy, but here are the financial returns on five stable investments. Over a period of the past fifteen years, Company A has made a return of 6.6 per cent. Not bad, especially in contrast to savings bank returns. Company B paid a return of 7.3 per cent, which is still better. The best buy, however, is Company C which has paid 8 per cent over the period. Company C has returned 7 per cent to its stockholders, while Company D and E have paid 7.7 and 7 per cent respectively. Here I believe you will have to admit is an imposing list of stocks which for fifteen years have paid dividends of more than 7 per cent.

This is a dividend you can measure in dollars and cents in direct proportion to your investment. You put in so much; you receive so much. There are brokers on State Street in Boston who can give you advice on this. The prospect is good, but, of course, this picture is only fifteen years old. Your broker will not project this picture into the future except on a guess. He will show you the records of the past; this is all he has—and it is imposing, I will admit. It looks safe enough, and, like other seekers for treasure, you might logically decide to put your money into such an investment.

Into this rosy picture comes a troublesome fellow, Jesus Christ, who says, "Lay not up for yourselves treasure upon earth." Does he mean you should not invest your money? He does not say so; in fact, he commends good stewardship. What, then, does he mean? He means that you should not allow your money to become your treasure. Your money should be your stewardship, and your stewardship should be your treasure.

The servants of God can invite your response to the financial law of the church; they cannot compel it. They invite your response because they hold out to you some plain and precious promises, great benefits, great blessings. In financial language, they present an attractive prospectus.

WE LATTER DAY SAINTS are about the "singiest" people in America. We love to sing about Jesus, Zion, and heaven. When it comes to effort in singing, we should go to the head of the class. The only defect is in what we sing and how we relate it to our religious experience. In hymn 204 we sing, "Awake! ye Saints of God, awake! Call on the Lord in mighty prayer that he will Zion's bondage break!" We want God to break the bondage of Zion when we are the ones who have it bound.

"Awake to union and be one, or saith the Lord, Ye are not mine." Saints, we can put this down as a veritable truth: if we are not one, we are not his, and we must stop thinking that all we have to do is to sing about being at oneness with each other and keeping his laws. Many of us have the idea that God did not mean what he said about blessing us if we keep our stewardship. If we please, we observe the financial law just about as we please—not in the way he has divinely instructed his priesthood. When I say what God wants from us financially, it is not I who speaks; it is God who uses my voice.

We Saints love to sing Brother W. W. Phelps' song, "Glorious things are sung of Zion." We sing, in the last verse, "When the Lord returns with Zion, and we hear the watchman cry, then we'll surely be united, and we'll all see eye to eye." Why do we delay the day when we will see eye to eye? Are any of us naïve enough to believe that God is waiting until the consummation of time to cram Zion down our unwilling throats? I sincerely hope not. I have heard some people say, "Well, we can't see eye to eye on everything, you know." Perhaps we can't, but I refuse to accept the proposition that we must everlastingly postpone seeing eye to eye even on a majority of things. Our refusal to see eye to eye on the financial law of the church is one of the major reasons why Zion is yet in bondage. Only 10 per cent of our people are willing to constitute a partnership with God and make a stewardship of their lives.

WE HAVE ALL SORTS of interpretations of what God wants. Malachi 3: 8-10 asks the rhetorical question, "Will a man rob God?" I am by profession a lawyer. This question amuses me and arrests my attention. Will a man rob God? The idea is preposterous, even stupid, isn't it, Saints? For my part I will tell you this about robbery.

Suppose you are in a courtroom full of spectators with a judge on the bench, a jury in the box, and lawyers working feverishly. A lawyer questions a witness as follows: "Who was it that robbed you?" and this person points to you and says, "He is the man!" You are in trouble—serious trouble. If the accusation is proved, you will probably go to prison.

Looking about me this morning, I know I am safe in saying that not one of you would rob any person in this building. It would not enter your minds. Yet to the church, to those comprising in their day what you comprise in this day, thunders the words of God through Malachi, "Yet ye have robbed me!" When they asked how, the reply came, "In tithes and offerings." The prophet continues the word of the Lord and says, "Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation." What a frightful indictment! They were cursed, and so are we every day that Zion remains unrealized. But the Lord continues again and says, "Bring ye all the tithes . . . and prove me now herewith . . . if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

SAINTS, this dividend has been provided for those who have made the investment of stewardship of their lives not only for the past fifteen years, as with the stocks I mentioned, but since the dawn of the promise, since ages past. As a servant of God, I can issue to you the following prospectus: you will receive this dividend for all time to come if you place your fortune in God's hands in stewardship; your stewardship will become your treasure, and your heart will be there also. In 1929 thieves broke through and stole the treasure of the stocks on the financial board, but, Saints, no one will break through and steal your treasure if it is with God.

You might say, "All right, Brother Armeson, what more is there to your prospectus? What blessings can you promise?" This I can promise. You will see healing of your sick, preaching of the gospel to the poor, rescue of defeated lives, cleansing of the sinful, and the kingdom of God on earth becoming more than something we sing about. To a confused and benighted world you can bring light and blessing.

I have no doubt that if you were asked, "Would you assist the financing of the apostolic mission of James, Peter, John, and the others?" you and millions of others would gladly reply in the affirmative and pour out your wealth in the cause.

You need not be so visionary, for verily the Restoration has just such a program. God's divinely constituted apostolic council is here upon the face of the earth. It was the Master who said, "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country and among his own people." If our apostles are limited, it is because, in the main, we limit them.

You can take part in a cause that will establish Zion, a situation and place where men will love each other. You can participate in the storehouse. Your investment in the affairs of man and of finance will bring you limited and uncertain returns. Your investment in the affairs of God will make possible the dividend of eternal life. No other investment can offer you such sweeping and satisfying returns. Take this law of stewardship to yourself and prove it for yourself, and great will be your blessings therein.

INTERMISSION

Religious notice in Southern newspaper one hundred years ago: "The Reverend Mr. Blaney will preach next Sunday in Dempsey's Grove at 10 o'clock A.M., and at 4 o'clock P.M., Providence permitting. Between sermons, the preacher will run his sorrel mare, Julia, against any nag that can be trotted out in this region for a purse of $100."—Charles Coleman Sellers, Lorenzo Dow.

What's the Next Step at Graceland?

By W. S. Gould

Director of Admissions
Graceland College

The material and suggestions presented in this article represent my personal opinion. The questions raised have not been answered. The official answers will come after careful study by the Board of Trustees of the college, the college administration, the officers of the General Church, and the general church membership. The answers are needed urgently and soon. I hope that the data and suggestions offered here may be helpful in arriving at the best solution.

FOR YEARS the consistent theme of Graceland College Day has been the familiar and hopeful slogan—"A Greater Graceland." In 1952 we are facing the practical problem of the next step. The "Greater Graceland" cannot continue to beckon us on unless some rather important decisions are made. Can Graceland's enrollment be permitted to grow unless a program of total expansion of plant and personnel is initiated? Already Graceland is crowded. The quality of work at any college is related closely to the conditions under which the students live and study. Should we permit our enrollment to grow? Will it jeopardize the quality of our work?

The large 1952 enrollment at Graceland was something of a surprise, since it had been generally predicted that college enrollment in the United States would decline this year. Consequently, the college faced an emergency late in the summer when it was apparent to us on the Student Selection Committee that we must provide housing and instruction for at least seventy-five more students than we had planned for. The painful necessity of rejecting some candidates for admission prompted us to look to the future with anxious eyes. What does the future hold for Graceland?

Enrollment Pressure Will Grow!

Examination of the data relating to enrollment indicates that unless it is limited, enrollment will continue to climb. Factors to be considered in making this prediction include the national birth rate during the last thirty-five years, church membership over the same period, recent educational trends, and the consistent pattern of growth at Graceland during the past twenty years.

Students entering college this fall were born in 1934 and 1935. Since that time the national birth rate has increased sharply. The very slight decrease in Graceland's student body last year reflected the low point in a five-year decline in births from 1930 to 1935. Since that time the yearly birth rate increased from 2,155,105 in 1935 to 3,581,000 in 1949—an increase of 60 per cent. This means there will be 60 per cent more young people of college age in 1965 than there are today.

At the same time numbers of young people are increasing, the percentage of that group who attend college is also growing. The trend is illustrated in the following figures:

In 1910, 4 per cent attended college.

In 1920, 8 per cent attended college.

In 1930, 12 per cent attended college.

In 1940, almost 16 per cent attended college.

Later figures are not available, but the growing pressure on young people to get college training in order to qualify for the more desirable jobs certainly indicates a continuation of the trend.

Another important factor influencing the size of Graceland is church membership. Increased missionary endeavor has resulted in a steady growth in the church since 1933 when we numbered 108,276. In 1950 we had grown to 141,433. There is every good reason to believe that this trend of growth will continue or accelerate.

Finally, what has been the enrollment pattern at Graceland in recent years? Beginning in 1933 when Graceland was at the bottom of the great depression slump, her enrollment has grown steadily with the exception of two war years when there were fewer than twenty-five men on the campus. In 1933 we had 173 students. In 1952 we have 585. During 1946-47 there was a large enrollment because of the flood of veterans returning to college, but excluding the veterans, Graceland has maintained a steady growth among the nonveteran students.

We do not have figures available to determine the percentage of church young people who attend Graceland each year. However, we can figure the percentage of the total church membership who attend. That ratio has also risen steadily since 1933. The following comparative table shows the year and number of Graceland students per 1,000 church members.

1934	1.8	1943	war year
1935	2.1	1944	war year
1936	2.1	1945	3.1
1937	2.3	1946	4.8*
1938	2.3	1947	5.*
1939	2.6	1948	4.3
1940	2.5	1949	4.3
1941	2.8	1950	4.

*Veterans included

In only fifteen years the number of Graceland students per 1,000 church members has increased 2½ times.

The pattern of growth in the nation, the church, and the college is shown in the graph. Although the numbers for each category vary tremendously, the rate of increase is proportional in each case. It is significant that if one levels out the extreme low period in 1943-44 caused by the war, and also levels the high peak caused by the returning veterans from 1946-49, the normal growth pattern shows a remarkable consistent increase of about twenty students a year. Graceland's present student body is 3½ times that of 1932. The slight decrease in 1951 reflected a drop in birth rate in 1933-35 and the uncertainty caused by the war in Korea.

What Is the Right Size?

What is the optimum number of students for Graceland? At present there are dormitory accommodations for about 236 women and 230 men. Married students and Lamoni students will swell the number to about 500 students who can be well housed. At the present time the faculty is large enough to care for about 500 students also. During the emergency push in the past two years, the faculty members have been carrying an overload, and while they have responded in a fine spirit of cooperation, it is not fair nor wise to expect them to carry such a schedule indefinitely. It is to the advantage of both church and college to create teaching conditions which are as favorable as possible. I believe that with our present facilities and staff our educational optimum is not more than 500 students.

Which Way Shall We Go?

Now we are faced squarely by the great dilemma. Shall Graceland's enrollment be frozen at about 500 students? If so, the physical plant would be reasonably adequate with the one or two additions already planned. However, serious adjustments would be required in the operating budget. The overload of students at Graceland for the past two years has helped to balance the budget in the face of rapidly rising operational costs and comparatively fixed overhead. Since this has been, very frankly, a period of emergency and stress, a more normal solution should be sought as quickly as possible. The small increase in tuition this year helped, but was insufficient. It is likely that the continuing rise in all operational costs will force fees upward again. However, Graceland will continue to offer the best in education at the lowest possible price—a price which will continue to compare favorably with the costs at other colleges.

These adjustments are recommended if we limit enrollment to about 500. Should we do so? Or should Graceland grow as the church grows? This would mean a regular increase in operating budget as the faculty grows and a continued building program lasting from ten to twenty years. Beyond that time, who can tell? If we can believe the evidence from birth rate, church growth, and Graceland growth, we can expect a minimum increase of 30 per cent in our enrollment by 1965—if we permit it to climb. What the maximum might be no one can guess. Shall we lift our sights to a Graceland of 800 students? Or shall we hold enrollment to approximately 500? As I see it, we are in between now, and our present size is neither comfortable nor economical.

Another question which many members throughout the church are asking in increasing numbers is, "When will Graceland become a four-year school?" The answer to this question must come from the people of the church rather than the college. The college can make that change any year the people want it enough to finance it. It would be expensive. It would increase the enrollment problem. It would bring new problems, but it would also bring many advantages. Thus far we have not been able to afford the change, for no one is willing to sacrifice quality for size or variety. With free junior college education available in several states already and the movement in this direction growing, will we need eventually to offer four years of work? Is this the direction we should take?

Who Shall Come?

It is very likely that next summer the question, "Who shall come?" will give headaches to the members of Graceland's Student Selection Committee. At present each candidate for admission to Graceland is considered by a faculty committee. His high school record, his family and church background, his work experience or service record, his vocational plans, his ability to meet a practical financial plan, his reasons for wanting to attend Graceland, and any other pertinent data are all reviewed. When it is necessary to limit enrollment, the following factors are among the more important in determining who shall be admitted: the date of application, scholarship record, reasons for wanting to attend, ability to meet financial obligations. No formula covers all applicants. Each case is considered in detail by the committee.

It is most urgent that church young people realize the importance of a good scholarship record in high school. Graceland must observe certain entrance requirements in order to maintain accreditation. We dare not lower requirements, or the quality of our work will suffer. If that were permitted, all Gracelanders, past, present, and future, would be the losers. Many young people plan for years to attend Graceland. It will be a shocking disappointment if they are denied that privilege because of adolescent negligence during high school. While it is true that we talk of the "plus element" at Graceland to indicate her superiority over other colleges, her first function is that of being a quality, accredited, college.

A Church of the Future

In the Atomic City of the West

AT HANFORD the industry of the future is making the desert of eastern Washington blossom with towns. In Richland the church of the future is revealing how Christians can work together effectively, yet without cutting themselves off from their religious heritage. The Hanford Works produces plutonium, one of the elements by whose fission atomic energy is released.

Richland is a spacious new community filling the neck of land where the Columbia and Yakima rivers meet. It had 208 residents in 1940; it has approximately 27,000 today. Its 8,000 homes are small but comfortable and neatly spaced.

By law the Atomic Energy Commission of the United States is responsible for everything that goes on in the 600,000-acre Hanford reservation and in Richland. To operate the plant and to provide a full range of community services, the AEC has engaged as "prime contractor" the General Electric Company. Power has been the business of General Electric for a long time—power generation, transmission, distribution, and use being the company's stock in trade, it accepted the opportunity to help develop a great new source of energy here. This function has continually expanded since it was started in 1943, and construction still continues at a rate of over one hundred million dollars a year.

To construct a plant of such gigantic proportions it became necessary to erect a huge construction camp. The camp was made up of all nationalities and types of people. It was a common rumor in those days that anybody could secure employment at the huge government works in Washington. To this sprawling, sin-sick construction city Apostle Clyde F. Ellis and Priest J. G. Juergens came in the latter part of 1943 to contact the Saints who had been attracted to the construction work, and to investigate what could be accomplished in the way of ministering to those who were so much in need of fellowship with God. Through the efforts of these men and the few Saints who could be found, an organizational meeting was held in what was then the small but growing city of Richland, in the home of Brother and Sister M. J. McDermott. Meetings were continued in the homes of various members until March 7, 1945, when the group was organized into a mission by Apostle D. T. Williams. Shortly thereafter services were held in the Marcus Whitman School, which continued to be the meeting place until the members started to build their own church. On November 29, 1948, they were organized into a branch by Apostle George Mesley, Bishop Monte E. Lasater, Seventy Philip Moore, and Elder A. F. Gibbs. A few months later Apostle Mesley and Bishop DeLapp journeyed to Richland, and at a priesthood meeting and dinner ideas for the new church were discussed. Brother L. A. Vosmer drew the plans. After purchasing one of the large construction barracks from the Nettleton Sound Company the Richland Saints began work in earnest, and from there the building was erected almost entirely by donated labor.

The church is located on a small hill well terraced and overlooking the city. The exterior is finished in white shingles and the window and door eaves are finished in deep brown. Upon completion there will be a thirty-foot tower above the entrance way. The interior consists of 6,125 square feet of floor space; the main auditorium seats 150 and the rostrum 20. Under the choir section is the baptismal font. The floor in the main auditorium is covered with rich brown tile. A junior auditorium seats 125; and there are four well-arranged classrooms. A beautiful narthex designed by George Mesley separates the two auditoriums. The ladies lounge is also located on the main floor. The basement contains a large assembly room with a connecting kitchen, the nursery, and heating plant.

At present there is an enrollment of 163, and 18 members of the priesthood serve under the able leadership of Pastor Lloyd A. Whiting. Thirty-seven people have been baptized in the church font. Richland Saints are proud to be a part of this great discovery that will some day be used for the welfare of mankind. They are exceedingly blessed in that they have the privilege of telling the gospel story to people from all parts of the United States who have come to work in the Hanford plant. Here Reorganized Latter Day Saintism is firmly planted in the affections of a new community and will remain because it is helping young parents to rear their children as Christians as well as pioneers.

What Is Written in the Law

By Edith Barwise

IF A REVELATION were given telling us the time had come for a movement toward Zion, how many of us would be ready to go forward or know how to start? There seems to be a wide range of ideas regarding Zion—more perhaps, than any other teaching of the church. Much prayerful study is needed, for the subject of Zion is too important to be left to conjecture.

A lawyer once asked Jesus a question. Before answering, Jesus himself asked his questioner, "What is written in the law? How readest thou?" If we were to meet Jesus today and ask him how to build Zion, I think he would say, as he did to the lawyer, "What is written in the law? How readest thou?"

We already have the necessary directions, for the Lord has told us (Doctrine and Covenants 140: 5) "All movements toward [1] Zion and [2] the gathering and [3] temporalities connected therewith are within my law." We have these things, but do we know what is written? How do we read the law?

The Basic Law

In January, 1831, the Saints were told to go to the Ohio and promised that there they would be given God's law. Going to the Ohio was quite a trip in those days. It was not an easy journey, but the Saints made it in order to obtain the law. Now we have only to go to our bookshelf for it.

The promise, "Ye shall receive my law," is repeated in Section 41, showing they had not yet received it; but in Section 43 the elders are commanded to instruct each other so that they themselves would know how to act and could direct the church members how to act upon the points of "my law and commandments which I have given." Since Section 42 is the only one between the promise, "Ye shall receive" of 41, and the statement "I have given" in 43, we must conclude that 42 is law. In our study we can use it as a text. Here we find various things mentioned, some of which are enlarged upon and clarified in later revelations.

Paragraphs one to five are for the elders, but the rest of the section is directed to the church—to all of us. Murder, stealing, and many other harmful actions are forbidden, while some positive things are commanded. We are not to be content with mere negative goodness. All the law is worth study, but in this article I shall limit myself to those parts that have to do with Christ's economic law—a wise and just plan dealing with the distribution of property.

The Consecration

We find in the Bible a story about a certain rich man who planned to rebuild his barns making them large enough to hold the abundant crops in his fields. He was going to hoard his wealth and take life easy. God was angry and called him a fool. Since he had more than he needed he should have shared the extra with the poor. In this story lies the germ of the Zion law. This unjust hoarding of wealth has brought capitalism into some disfavor. It is also one thing that gives communism its power to gain followers.

There are three economic classes of people: those who have enough, those who have less than enough, and those who have more than enough. All these people must love the Lord, keep his commandments, and serve him (not themselves). Prompted by our love for him, we will consecrate of our properties to the poor (42: 8)—that is, to him. Notice the law does not say "thy property," meaning all we have; it says "of thy properties," and further that it is to be what we have "to impart." Impart means "to give a share," so we are to consecrate of our properties that part we have to share.

This consecration calls for a covenant and a deed, a good deed, one that will hold in the courts of the land. These deeds and any written contracts made in connection with the covenant are to be turned over to the bishop. Afterward, property so consecrated and deeded cannot be taken from the church (or the steward managing it) and returned to the former owners or their heirs (42: 11).

It is only common sense that this consecration should be made, and that it should come first. Without it there is no way for men to become equal in temporal things as commanded in Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3. As long as one man has more possessions than another there will be pride, envy, greed, and covetousness. We are told that, because of this inequality of wealth, the world lies in sin. We who do not wish to lie in sin also—we who love our Lord, will consecrate whatever part of our properties is left after our needs and legitimate wants are met. This extra—this surplus which we do not need—should be consecrated to the poor (42: 8).

All Things Common

Because the wording of the Bible (Inspired Version, Acts 2) is not quite clear, some are confused. They think the statement, "All that believed were together, and had all things common," means that these former-day Saints did not own any property as individuals. I believe this view is mistaken. All things "common" and all things "in common" are two quite different ideas—different things—not two different ways of saying the same thing. God wishes us to grow, and owning things in common is not suited to human development. It makes the industrious and thrifty a prey to the idle and the extravagant. Finally the workers become discouraged, and they become idle also.

Church History (volume 1, page 152) tells of a group of people who started out to have all things in common. Then they heard the gospel preached and joined the church. Joseph Smith visited and taught them. He says of them (ibid., page 169) "The plan of common stock was readily abandoned for the more perfect law of the Lord." This shows that the law of the Lord is better than owning things jointly or in common.

Such expressions as "the common lot" and "the common fate of all" refer to something in which all men are equal, as in death. Common denominator also means sameness or quality of size.

The Book of Mormon is clearer than the Bible on this point; of the church it says (IV Nephi 1:4), "And they had all things common among them, therefore, there were not rich and poor, bond and free." This was shortly after Jesus visited them. About two hundred years later (page 684:27, 28) "There began to be among them those who were lifted up in pride . . . and from that time forth they did have their goods no more common among them, and they began to be divided into classes." We notice that at first, since they were all equal in temporal things, they were neither rich nor poor nor had any kind of class divisions; inequality came after they stopped having all things common.

The basic law (42:9) also upholds my understanding of this subject, for it speaks of man's being "a steward over his own property." We read of "that portion that is deeded to him" (51:1). Both these passages show individual ownership of property. How could a man be made a steward over his own property or held accountable for it, if it is owned in common? The Lord in speaking to Enoch (81:4) refers to their "several stewardships," which also denotes individual ownership.

The Group Treasury

There is something, however, which the whole group has in common—the group storehouse. In fact, there are to be two storehouses or treasuries (101:11, 12). One was to be consecrated to the Lord. In Enoch's day there seems to have been only one. Perhaps today we would say the General Church treasury; one of its duties, as our bishop once explained, could be as a clearing house for the several group treasuries. This treasury should contain sacred things and the avails of sacred things.

There was another treasury, which I take to be a group treasury. It is mentioned in 42:10, 51:2, and 101:12. The money put into it was no longer the property of the contributor, and no part of it could be taken out except by the common consent of the group. This consent was to be given in case of need. The need could be for repairs or replacement of worn-out machines; or it could be a need caused by disaster, as fire, flood, or sickness. The need of a young couple could be considered. When the book says, "that every man may be amply supplied," no doubt it refers to members of the group. Perhaps they had deeded part of their property to the church, and they, or their parents, had been contributing to this treasury. Usually, under the blessing of God, they were able to provide for their own needs and had a surplus each month or year to put into the treasury. The fund in the treasuries was common property, in one case the General Church, and in the other of the group contributing to it. In this way the whole group stood back of any man who met disaster. This was a more excellent way than the one we now have where each man must, if possible, provide for his own security against reverses. The Lord's way is, in effect, a joint bank account.

All contribute to it as they are able, and each has claim on it in case of need unless he is judged unworthy to belong to the church.

Stewardships

The Psalmist says truly, "The law of the Lord is perfect," but sometimes our knowledge of it is imperfect; then we see only in part. We often hear it said that we are already stewards whether we wish to be or not. Our time, our abilities, whatever we have and are come from the Father who created us, and we are accountable for them. While this is true there is yet a stewardship which we do not have naturally. The basic law speaks of a man being "made accountable," a steward over his own property (42:9). Now if a man is already a steward, why or how make him one? No one is made a captain in the army if he is one already. Here evidently is an action that has to do with making a man a steward in a different sense than the stewardship he was born into.

The Organization

This action of making men stewards, I believe, has to do with an organization to be established within or as an outgrowth of the church. It is the "man child" of Revelation 12:3-7, "the kingdom of God and his Christ," to which the woman church is to give birth (Sections 44:2; 51:1; 81:4, 5; 101:2; and 101:10). This organization is in the form of a united order (101:1), which the Lord commanded to be organized and established both for the benefit of the church and the salvation of man.

Doctrine and Covenants 102:2 gives as one reason for the afflictions of the church in 1833 the fact that the members were not "united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom . . . and the church must needs be chastened until they learned obedience." It must travail and be pained till the kingdom child is born.

Sermon on the Mount

BLESSED ARE THEY that . . ." attend their district reunion, who know they can hardly afford it, and at the same time realize they cannot afford to miss it.

Such was our financial and spiritual standing when my husband, Luther, and I packed some of our belongings into our car and took the highway from Fresno to Happy Valley Reunion grounds near Santa Cruz, California. We left the care of home affairs to good relatives and breathed a sigh of relief as we moved toward our destination.

At last we were going to have a much needed vacation. For our slightly "over-plus" age we had had heavy responsibilities for the past twelve years and had been carrying on our church activities at considerable physical cost. And we often had the feeling that the few minutes of time we snatched here and there for reading and study were all but stolen from pending obligations. We longed for a chance to relax physically and turn our thoughts to the church and its message—to try to find out how and where we could best fit into its program. Now we were going to be able to spend several days in worship and classwork. Our anticipations ran high as we drove along.

"Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness . . ."

The sermons were wonderful and the classes inspiring. The association with old and new friends was a happy experience. The mountains' invigorating breezes and the natural scenes about were a source of comfort and restfulness.

WE HAD SEEN the recently purchased reunion grounds only once before. Since that time there have been a lot of improvements made, and we spent part of the first two days looking around. After we had peeked into practically every corner, we decided to investigate the lay of the land, though we'd have to climb a mountain to do so. I'm not a very good climber, and before I had gone very high I had to rest. I made another effort and still another before I had to give up. Luther suggested that I sit down and rest while he climbed still further. Reluctantly I took his advice. I had been told that higher up there is a natural amphitheatre where young people of the district plan to establish a place of worship some time in the future. I was disappointed that I could not reach that height, but I derived some satisfaction from the thought that I had climbed as high as I could.

Hardly had the sound of Luther's footsteps died away when I was moved by a great desire to worship. The scene around me was beautiful, and the little sounds of nature were a pleasant variation from the usual noises of everyday duties. In this peaceful atmosphere my soul seemed suddenly to expand. Perhaps what I felt is best expressed in this verse of a favorite hymn:

Sounds among the vales and hills,
In the woods and by the rills,
Of the breeze and of the bird,
Of the gentle murmur stirred
Sacred songs, beneath, above,
Have one chorus, God is love.

Reverently I bowed, and as I poured out my heart to God in prayer for the young people, the children, the infants, and every person yet to be born who should set foot on these grounds, I realized that the freedom with which I spoke, the beautiful phrasing and composition, were beyond my intellectual ability, and I felt that the blessings of God were indeed far-reaching.

Soon I heard Luther's footsteps and I arose; together we made the descent.

I kept pondering this experience in my heart, hardly believing it really had happened to me. I guess I was hugging it tightly to myself, reluctant to tell anyone lest the human touch I would give it would lessen the extreme joy of the delicate touch of divinity with which I had received it. I just kept asking myself, "Why should I receive this individual blessing?" I couldn't understand.

A FEW DAYS LATER I was asked to help with the children. I wasn't unwilling to do so, but I was disappointed that I could not continue to attend the other services, because I felt that I needed them so.

Since we could attend only the last eight days we missed those who ministered during the first part of the reunion. But while we were there we enjoyed the ministry of Patriarch William A. Dawson, District President Lawrence McDonald, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, President Wallace Smith and his wife, Missionaries George Njeim, Herbert Lynn, and Glen Johnson; Bishop J. Stanley Kelley, Brothers Thomas Beil, Rod Schall, and many others both of the priesthood and members.

Then reunion was over, the closing hymn sung, the benediction pronounced, the last good-by said, and we were on our way home. Then with voice unsteady with emotion Luther began to tell me of the closing service. I thought within my heart, "I would have to miss that!" He continued to talk, relating some of the things Brother Johnson had said in the closing sermon. I felt as though I'd been cheated. But just as I began to feel really sorry for myself, the Holy Spirit seemed to brush gently against my reasoning, much as a loving friend would tap me on the shoulder to remind me of some worth-while occurrence he could see I had forgotten. I remembered that afternoon on the mountain when I had received such a wonderful blessing—a blessing shared by no one else—and I fairly jumped out of my despondency.

Luther was expressing regret that I had not been permitted to share in that particular service. I turned to him and said, "Now, I understand!" and with a voice as unsteady as his own I related to him the thing that, until then, I had not trusted myself to share with him.

With hearts filled to overflowing with love and gratitude to our Heavenly Father, we continued to add mile on mile between us and the place where we had had a wonderful spiritual feast—the place where we had been made to realize to a fuller degree the meaning of the words of our Lord, "And blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost."

Question Time

Question:

Are the three Nephites who were to tarry still on the earth?

Oregon MRS. V. B.

Answer:

Yes, and they will remain until the coming of our Lord. They will be among the Jews and others of scattered Israel, and Gentiles, but will not be known by them. They have power to show themselves, upon asking for that privilege, but evidently exercise influence and power, though unseen and unknown, toward winning souls to Christ and bringing about God's purposes (pages 676-678, III Nephi 13:18-44). They certainly have ministered to and probably have been seen at times by some in our age according to testimonies given.

Question:

If God knew Joseph Smith would be killed, why wasn't there another prepared to take his place immediately?

Oregon MRS. V. B.

Answer:

Probably for good and wise reasons. "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord."—Isaiah 55:8. God does the best for people that their obedience will allow him. He took Moses and the holy priesthood from the Israelites because they were not worthy (see Doctrine and Covenants 83:4c). In latter days unworthiness was doubtlessly a consideration also. In a letter to Isaac Sheen dated October 23, 1859. William Marks, who prior to and at the death of Joseph Smith was president of Nauvoo Stake, wrote: "I was wrapped in vision, and it was given me by the Spirit that the top or branches had overcome the root in sin and wickedness, and the only way to cleanse and purify it was to disorganize it, and in due time the Lord would reorganize it again" (see Church History, Volume 2, page 733, note 4). This is not out of harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 64:7; 98:1-4, and 102:2. It could have been otherwise had the church been more obedient, but we may be sure that we shall someday know that God's way was best under the circumstances.

HAROLD I. VELT

Question:

In what way is the Reorganized Church different from others?

Colorado E. C. D.

Answer:

The church we represent is different from other churches in a number of ways. We believe in divine revelation. We believe that God will continue to reveal himself to his church. We believe that the canon of Scripture is not full. We believe that man must be called of God and ordained by the laying on of hands of those who are in authority in order to represent God. (See Hebrews 5:4-10.) We believe in the building of the kingdom of heaven or the establishment of Zion. Jesus said, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

WARD HOUGAS

Question:

Christ didn't have any church. Why do you?

Colorado E. C. D.

Answer:

Consider the testimony. Christ said, "I will build my church."—Matthew 16:18. Note that he did not say to Peter, "You shall," but "I will." This He did. He first chose twelve apostles (Matthew 10:1-4). Later as the membership grew he chose the seventy, men who were to prepare the way for the advancement of the missionary work. Christ said, "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached and every man [who seeketh truth] presseth into it."—Luke 16:16.

WARD HOUGAS

Question:

Was it the religious world, or his disciples, that Jesus prayed might be "one"?

Answer:

This prayer was uttered by Jesus just before he entered the garden where he was betrayed by Judas. The prayer did not include the religious world in general, for he explained (John 17:9, 11): "I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me . . . that they may be one, as we are." Afterward in his prayer he included those who should believe through the testimony of his disciples:

"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word."—John 17:20.

Evidently, then, Jesus prayed for the unity of all Christian believers. It was through this unified discipleship that the world would be induced to believe on him (verse 21), and it is an admitted fact that the disunity of Christians has been one of the chief obstacles to the conversion of the world.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Question:

Some members are objecting to our church school superintendent's plan of inducting the officers with a candlelighting service. Is this all right? Some of the members say it looks Catholic.

Idaho

J. C. F.

Answer:

This is not a question of ethics, for there is no way of telling whether it is right or wrong in God's sight. It would seem to us, however, that the decision should largely rest with the administrative authorities of the branch to determine whether the carrying out of this symbolic type of service would do more harm than good.

Harm can be done by moving too rapidly in the direction of innovations of the type of worship service held in a branch. Perhaps in another year or two the objectors might see the matter in a different light and the results would justify the waiting.

Personally we think there is much beauty and spiritual significance in adding to the volume of light as each person accepts his responsibility at the installation service and signifies this by lighting an additional candle. However, we realize that some who have associated the candles with the Catholic type of service and have been taught to hate Catholicism cannot see this beauty, and we should be tolerant.

Teach the Little Ones to Pray

By Wonza Simmers

IN THE DAY of Christ, little children were brought to him for a blessing and, as often happens today, the people in charge desired that these little ones should be kept in the background. But Jesus was the type of person who stood up for the weak and the lowly, the sick and the oppressed. Therefore he said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." These must have been small children, for he took them up in his arms.

I wonder if these little ones remembered in their later years being held in the Master's arms. I imagine Jesus must have enjoyed that moment when he could relax for a time among those who returned his love instead of seeking to destroy him.

A little child in the family is indeed a great source of pleasure and wonder to those about him. Each phase of growth is interesting, and we are caused to marvel at the magnificence of the gift of life. For children each day is filled with the beauty of keener understanding and accomplishment. It is important that we, as parents, be fully aware of our God-given responsibility to train their religious thinking as well as their physical and educational needs. We have been cautioned to "train up a child in the way he should go, and he will not depart when he is old." In Isaiah we are told that the children shall be "taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children."

There is no better time to start than when they begin to speak and to understand. At night, as our little one is placed in his crib we thrill to hear him at prayer, sounding the same number of syllables with occasional distinct words audible to the ear. Our hearts are warmed as we realize the love of Jesus is growing in his soul.

A CHILD will learn his prayers faster than he learns the nursery rhymes, for he prays nightly, whereas he will seldom repeat the same rhyme constantly. He soon learns that God is a loving Heavenly Father who is everywhere, protecting and keeping him safe from harm.

Psychologists say that the first three years are most important in a child's life, therefore the foundation of spirituality should be started as soon as possible. The child's capacity for love is boundless, and the love of God should not be excluded. It is gratifying to see a youngster of three bow his head in reverence, though unbidden to do so.

THIS IS THE MILK of religion which will prepare him for the meat of doctrine which shall come later. We know that little children are redeemed from the foundation of the world and cannot sin until, at the age of eight, they are held accountable. However it is well to realize that this would be a late date to begin religious education; for the pattern is already established at this time. We are commissioned in the Doctrine and Covenants to teach our children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord, or the sin will be on our heads. This is a grave responsibility, and we should not regard it lightly. Let us determine that our training shall be for the glory of God, that our children may stand with us and say, as did the poet of old, "I will praise thee, Oh Lord, with my whole heart; I will shew forth thy marvelous works. I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, Oh thou most high."

What's the Next Step at Graceland?

The Fond Dream

For years it has been the fond dream that every young Reorganized Latter Day Saint who qualified might want to attend Graceland. Our pastors, our General Church leaders, and our alumni have told the dream and worked to make it come true. The fine quality of the young people who responded in increasing numbers has made possible a quality of Zionite fellowship on the Graceland campus which is most inspiring to those of us who share it. Now we have reached the day when we must either work harder to keep up with the dream, or change the dream. On the basis of the data presented, I venture to predict that unless Graceland expand, there will be growing numbers of those who want to come and cannot. If we expand, in what direction—toward what goal? With sincere concern we present the question to the people of the church, "What do you want of us?" What's the next step at Graceland?

Missionary Holds Series

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA.—The first Sunday in May the Haileyville Saints met with the Saints of Wilburton for church school, Communion service, and a picnic lunch. On May 18, the Saints from the Black Gum mission visited for church school, preaching service, and a picnic.

The Saints have welcomed into the branch Brother and Sister Wallace A. Jackson and their daughters Donna Kay and Charlette. He is the missionary for the Central Oklahoma District. He held a two weeks' series in July.

District President Victor Witte and Pastor Orville Dollins presided over the annual business meeting July 20. Those elected were Orville Dollins, pastor; Leonard DeHart and Bill J. Dollins, counselors; Sam Bussell, church school director; Rebecca Guest, director of music; Angie Dollins, treasurer and historian; Mickey Montana, women's leader and branch secretary; Petie Dollins, book steward; Bill Dollins, young people's leader; Jake Wallace and Leonard DeHart, auditors. Leonard was appointed solicitor.

The Oklahoma Reunion was held from August 10-17. Approximately 650 people were registered, with a larger attendance on the week ends. Preaching and teaching personnel from the General Church were Apostle D. Blair Jensen, Norman Hield, Wallace A. Jackson, Harold I. Velt, Arthur Gibbs, and Victor Witte. Sister Harold I. Velt instructed the women's classes. Evangelists were Henry Castings, Richard Jones, Roland Scott, and Harold I. Velt. The evening preaching was conducted by Brother Jensen with Brother Gibbs preaching on the last Saturday night.

Brother and Sister J. A. Roe of Wilburton, Oklahoma, celebrated their Golden Wedding anniversary on July 28. Their two daughters, Mrs. Edith Ryan and Mrs. Eva Allen, and two grandsons, Jimmie and Wayne Roe, were home for the occasion. They have been members of the church for forty-one years.—Reported by MICKEY MONTANA

Special Service for Blessing of Babies Held

FORT WAYNE, INDIANA.—Branch election was held September 10. Elder C. E. Burt was sustained as pastor with Elders Nichols and Blanchard as counselors. The following are officers: Bertha Trim, secretary and children's supervisor; Charles Blanchard, treasurer; Marion Blanchard, church school director; Eudora Blanchard, women's leader; Gladys Nichols, adult supervisor; Dale Wismer, young people's supervisor; Rachel Holubetz, music director and program chairman; Ned Tarney, auditor; Dixie Tarney, librarian; Gladys Nichols, publicity agent; Violet Houser, book steward. Ned Tarney was sustained as solicitor.

Six children were blessed at a special service on July 20. They were Dennis, Jimmy, and Sandra, children of Mr. and Mrs. Art Shuler; Linda Lou, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harley Waikel; and Alice Mae and Phyllis Kay, twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Art Saylor. The children were blessed by the pastor and his counselors.

Under the direction of Rachel Holubetz there have been some inspiring programs presented on special occasions.

The women's department has sponsored family nights at various times in the past few months.

District Missionary Clair Weldon and his wife, Jessie, are making their home in Fort Wayne. Brother Weldon was ill for some time, but has been steadily improving.

Brother Dave Shippy of Davenport, Iowa, was in the branch for three months while he continued his studies at General Electric in the engineering division.

Brother John Neff has returned to Fort Wayne, Indiana. His contributions in the field of music are much appreciated.

Sue Laman was married to Corporal Ted Erick on April 15, and Carol Coyle was married on September 7 to Boland Cole.

Recent speakers have been Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Bishop T. A. Beck, and Elder Jack Pray.—Reported by GLADYS NICHOLS

GRAYLING, MICHIGAN.—The annual branch business meeting was held following a fellowship supper at the home of Norval Stephan on July 21. The meeting was under the direction of the pastor, Elder Roy Newberry, assisted by Elder Harry Doty, district president. The following are officers for the coming year: pastor, Elder Roy Newberry; secretary, Grace Newberry; treasurer and branch solicitor, Dan Babbitt; church school director, Norval Stephan; music director, Flora VandenBerg; woman's leader, Lillian Turner; youth superintendent, Helen Jensen; auditor chairman, Kenneth Ashton; chairman of building committee, Earl Mathewson; publicity chairman, Leta Babbitt.

The woman's department under the leadership of President Lillian Turner held their election on September 8. Mollie Olson is the assistant. Other officers are Tressa Stephan, secretary; Helene Mathewson, treasurer; Leta Babbitt, teacher. Through various activities the past twelve years this department of women has helped with the purchasing of the house of worship which will be erected on the two new lots the branch recently purchased.

As many as forty baptisms are reported during our re-organizing program. Half of these have become members in the past three years. The success of this growth is due to outstanding leadership. Much credit is due to the Gaylord Branch. Our missionaries have been Paul Frisbie, Ernest Ledsworth, Patriarch John R. Grice, Elder George Locke, Seventy Virgil Billings, District President Harry L. Doty, and the pastor, Elder Roy Newberry. Elder Allen Schreur, Elder Elmer Parks, and late Elder Elmer Widrig. The Gaylord Branch reorganized the church school on October 6, 1940.—Reported by LETA BABBITT

Plans for New Building Progress

WALLA WALLA, WASHINGTON.—In January of 1952, a business meeting was held with Bishop M. E. Lasater and District President Carl Hammel present. Elder Matt D. Crownover was in charge and the mission made arrangements to purchase a church building at the corner of Howard and Locust Streets.

In May, Seventy R. V. Webb held a missionary series. Other visiting ministers have included Priests Melvin Crownover, Harold Hight, Harold Klusman, James Lorenzen, Elders A. J. Crownover, Warren L. Farber, O. M. Croft, Earl Wilcox, Wayne Rogers, and J. W. Strange. The elder in charge of the group is Matt D. Crownover of Richland. Election of officers was held July 28 and the following were elected: John L. Fletcher, mission pastor; Crystal Henley, secretary and treasurer; Vida Fletcher, music director; Lauree Miller, women's leader; Leota Hill, reporter.

The mission pastor preached the morning sermon on August 10, followed by a basket dinner at the park. A baptismal service was held in the afternoon. Elder J. W. Strange of Butler, Missouri, officiated at the service and the candidates were Carolyn Sue, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Allison, Jr., of the Taborville Branch in the Rich Hill District, Butler, Missouri, and Earl Henley of the mission.

Elder Wayne Rogers of Pasco, Washington, preached the morning sermon on August 24. Confirmation service was held in the afternoon and Brother Henley was confirmed by Elders Wayne Rogers and Matt D. Crownover. The following babies were blessed: Melissa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Henley; Rena Rea, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rogers;

Five Baptized in June

PERRY, IOWA.—Thirty-three is the average attendance of the branch. Three births have been announced: Marsha Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Morgan of Minburn, born November 4; Dea Jean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Baker of Woodward; Ronda Rae, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Brown of Jamaica. There were five baptisms in the month of June.

The women's department meets the second Wednesday in each month to study "Tapping Spiritual Resources" and "Developing Spiritual Strength." Priesthood classes have been held by the six priesthood members of the branch. The floor of the church building has been sanded and re-varnished. Byron Weems has been admitted to Graceland College for the coming year.—Reported by ALFREDA SMITH

Meetings Held in New Building

CRESTON, IOWA.—On March 23, David E. Blair, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Blair, was ordained to the office of priest. David is now a student at Graceland. He graduated with honors from high school in the spring.

The junior department presented a Children's Day service in June. The theme was "The Master's Garden." The stage was arranged to represent a garden with a picket fence and swinging gate. The Scripture, "And Jesus grew in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and Man," was developed by the children with the assistance of the junior choir. A large picture of Christ in a garden was the chief focal point.

After an extensive building project the first meeting was held in the new church, which is not yet complete, on August 10.

The annual branch business meeting was held August 27 under the direction of Stake President Robert L. Farnum. The following officers were elected: O. Harry Propst, pastor; A. D. Blair and Floyd Hirst, counselors; Floyd Hirst, church school supervisor; R. Jack Mercer, assistant church school supervisor; Mr. and Mrs. Dick Outhouse, Zions' League leaders; Mrs. M. B. Grover, women's leader; Wandeen Hirst, music director; Henry T. Strand, bishop's solicitor; Mrs. Henry T. Strand, publicity director; Mrs. Charles Kellogg, librarian; Mrs. Rhoda Savage, historian; Cecil Noftsgar, book steward; Dick Outhouse, Jr., and Lee Propst, deacon's assistants. R. Jack Mercer who has been called to the office of priest was voted on and accepted by the branch at this meeting.

Missionary services are being conducted by Seventy Virgil E. Billings for a period of six weeks with meetings each night at the homes of Afton and Creston Saints and Sunday nights in the church. Brother Billings is giving illustrated talks on the "Life and Ministry of Christ." This series will be followed by a two weeks' series by Apostle Roscoe E. Davey.

Following the service on the evening of September 14, the congregation met in the lower auditorium to honor the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Blair. Refreshments were served, and a gift was presented to the couple. After a song led by Wandeen Hirst, the evening was completed.

Several new families have moved into the branch. A welcome is extended to all visitors. The church is located on the corner of Elm and Prairie Streets.—Reported by ANNE FINE

Seventy Holds Series

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—The members of the branch for the most part took their vacations at the district reunion grounds at Onset. The fall branch business meeting has been held, and the church school and choir have been organized and staffed to give impetus to the new year's activities. Seventy William Guthrie held a series from September 28 to October 5. Representatives from various branches in the district were present for the opening of the series and for a farewell party for District President Clinton Saxton and family. Brother Saxton has been assigned to California because of the health of his small son. The Saxtons were presented with a chest of silver plate and a purse of money.—Reported by FLORENCE FISHER

Annual Institute Held

BEND, OREGON.—An institute was held August 30-September 1. A buffet supper was served at Brother and Sister Dyer's home to open the institute. Following this, District President J. L. Verhei preached. Services were held at the Norway Hall. After the sermon a short program was presented with all members of the mission participating. On Sunday morning a prayer and fellowship service was held at the Allen School Auditorium, followed by classes and a sermon by Bishop Monte E. Lasater. At noon a basket lunch was served in Pioneer Park.

A baptismal service was held in the afternoon in the Deschutes River near Tumalo. Billy LaVerne Sahlberg was baptized by his uncle, Henry Watt. He was confirmed by Elders Milton Petrie and Ephriam Barnhart.

Classes were held in the evening in the Allen School Auditorium, followed by a sermon by Missionary James Kemp.

On Monday morning a breakfast was served at Shevlin Park followed by a prayer and fellowship service. The young people also had a prayer service.

This institute is held annually over the Labor Day week end. Attendance this year was about 250.—Reported by LUCILLE PETRIE

Young Swimming Champions Honored

ELORA, ONTARIO.—Anniversary services were held in the church on August 24. Al Pelletier, missionary in Ontario, spoke at the morning and afternoon services.

On September 21, Mary Jean Mortimer and Gordon Tarzwell were baptized at the Guelph church and confirmed at a special confirmation service held September 21 at the Elora church.

The branch was host to a bus load of Saints from the Toronto Branch on September 21. The group presented Shirley and Joan Campbell with a gift of money. Shirley recently became the women's professional swimming champion at the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto.

Officers elected for the coming year are Arthur Dunn, pastor; Lucette Heseltine, secretary; G. H. Towers, treasurer and music director; Leonard Clark, church school director; Evelyn Couling, children's supervisor; Margaret MacGruthers, Zions' League leader; Marjorie Towers, publicity agent and book steward; James Tarzwell and Leonard Clark, auditors; Shirley Campbell, assistant secretary.—Reported by MARJORIE TOWERS

Branch Has Rally Day

VENICE, CALIFORNIA.—The annual business meeting and election of officers was held September 10. The following were elected: pastor, William Meador; associate pastor, Walter Bullard; secretary, Percyna Hatten; treasurer, Margaret Sensensy; church school director, Hazel Condra; junior church school pastor, Orlin Haggeman; Zion's League leader, Russell Brownrigg; adult leader, John Sweet; book steward, Harry West; women's leader, Pearl Mathewson; publicity agent, Etta Brownrigg; custodian, Edward Hattess. Brother Meador was in charge of the meeting.

On September 28 the congregation held a rally day. The church school presented the program which was followed by a basket dinner. The new officers were installed.

Frame work is up on the new church, and progress is noted in the building.—Reported by ETTA BROWNRIGG

Baptismal Service Held

NOEL, MISSOURI.—Notwithstanding that some of the members of the mission live twelve miles from the Saratoga schoolhouse where services are held, all services were held during the winter months.

Tommy Shockley was baptized by the pastor, L. V. Aldridge, and confirmed at the district conference.

The following ministered to the group: Brother A. S. Johnson and wife from Lawton, Oklahoma; Elder Arthur Dixon and family of Miami, Oklahoma; Elder and Mrs. A. M. Hogan of Carthage; Priest Ted Linder and family of Joplin; and Elder Seth Spangler and wife of Galena, Kansas.

The pastor held a series of special services in August. At the close of the series, Russell Mann and wife were baptized and confirmed by the pastor assisted by Elder Arthur Dixon.

On September 7, members from Neosho, Missouri, visited the mission and a basket lunch was served, after which the pastor of the Noel group spoke.

The members plan a pie supper to assist the young people of the mission to raise their quota for the work on a pool at the reunion grounds.

Five New Members in Branch

LOCK CITY BRANCH, MICHIGAN.—

The annual business meeting was held August 28, and the following were elected: Orval G. King, pastor, publicity agent, and book steward; Alma King, music director and adult church school teacher; Carl McKiddie, church school director and adult supervisor; Donna Tomlinson, church school secretary; Beulah McKiddie, branch secretary; John Tomlinson, treasurer and branch deacon; and Blanche Howard, young people and children's supervisor.

On August 29 and 30, Evelyn Backman, district women's leader, met with the women of the branch. A family night was held at the church on the Saturday night, and Sister Backman showed slides taken on a trip to the west coast.

Five new members have been added to the group. They were all baptized by the pastor at the Park of the Pines Reunion and are as follows: Vernard Howard and his two sons, Jack and Allen; and Wayne and Darrell Eagle.—Reported by ORVAL KING

Branch Has Membership Drive

AKRON, OHIO.—The branch held a business meeting September 23 to discuss the progress in the branch. Under the leadership of the pastor, William H. Mitchell, the following conclusions were reached: (1) out of three hundred members, there are only fifty-six active members participating in church school and worship services; (2) the congregation and priesthood are not friendly enough toward strangers and visitors; (3) only about 40 per cent of the priesthood is active; (4) the priesthood is not large enough. These faults were discussed and several remedies for each were drawn up. A plan was set up for recruiting individuals to do certain jobs and the duties of class presidents and deacons were more clearly defined.

Mrs. Edith Brockway, religious education director, suggested a teacher's training class. This class will be taught by Brother Ed Mayer. It was decided that business meetings of this type will be held once a month to further discuss the membership program.—Reported by RANKIN DAVIS

PENNIES, DIMES, DOLLARS FOR AUDITORIUM FUND

Completion of the Auditorium is a task requiring the assistance of every member of the church. Accordingly, it has been made possible for every member—even children of pre-baptismal age—to contribute whatever he can toward the accomplishment of this important goal. Attractive "I'm Helping" banks are available for free distribution throughout the church. There is space on the back for name and address, so that proper credit can be received. Your pastor or bishop's agent can order (from the Presiding Bishopric) any quantity needed for your congregation. If you are isolated, write for as many as are needed for your family. Above, Elder John Darling, Associate Director of Religious Education, is reminding church school directors and workers that they should get behind this drive in the church schools. "Finish the Job" is the challenge to every member.

The Supporting Role of the Minister's Wife Part II

An address given at the Women's Institute

By Dr. F. M. McDowell

Director of Priesthood Education

Let the Men Speak for Themselves

How may a wife support her husband in the work of his ministry? Why not let the men speak for themselves? They should know.

I sent a letter and questionnaire to a number of men of experience in church work, representing every quorum of the priesthood in widely separated areas of the church. In it were the following questions:

Based upon your observation and experience in the ministry, answer the following—

1. What does the minister's wife do and say that proves to be genuinely helpful to him in his ministry?

2. What does she do and say that hinders his work or tends to prevent him from being effective in his ministry?

3. My wife supports me and my ministry in the following ways—

Here are a few of the many pertinent replies I received. (The replies are numbered to correspond with the questions.) A high priest of thirty-three years experience in the ministry writes:

1. Friendly, makes it a point to meet strangers. Agreeable, does not argue with others about trifles. Pleasant, smiles even when she is sad. Helpful, helps with some of the details of his office. Understanding, realizes the importance of priesthood ministry. And above all, does not desire to be informed about things which are more or less personal from an administrative standpoint.

2. Meddling in personal affairs of members. Holding herself aloof from those to whom he desires to give ministry. Being so busy with outside activities that his time is also limited in the carrying out of his duties.

Another high priest with seventeen years experience writes:

1. She encourages her husband by telling him she is in favor of his going out to serve. She makes the whole family feel and know she is behind him. She leads her children in right attitudes toward their father's serving. She is reserved and refuses to know anything about her husband's work that may be of a personal nature. She prays for him, keeps the home neat, and provides meals on time. She stays in the background and takes no sides on any question or between people.

2. She gossips and tells others her immediate family problems. She is always quick to hear rumors and get information. When people call for her husband when he is out, she tries to find out the details of the call and tries to answer questions. She isn't all out for his ministry. She wants him to stay at home. She insists on bits of information about his visits. She pouts if she thinks he does too much church work. She nags. She is quick to criticize.

3. She always has put my ministry first. She never wants the car or insists on my taking her out when she knows I have ministry to perform. She keeps a clean, neat home and provides good, wholesome meals. She is patient and kind with me. She is always willing to sacrifice personal pleasure with me for the sake of others.

Another high priest bases his reply on forty-seven years of service in the local and general ministry for the church.

1. She is friendly to everyone she meets, not personal friends only. She makes herself helpful in homes she visits with the pastor. She offers him helpful criticism in kindness. She never makes other people feel embarrassed by any attitude. If she dislikes people, she never speaks of it to others. She exemplifies her love for church work that others might follow. She is patient with the apparent inconsistencies of others. She is as faithful as he, if possible, in attending services.

2. She talks unkindly of others whose opinions differ. Her home is untidy or unclean so he cannot preach cleanliness effectively. She is late or seldom attends services, it discounts his efforts. She is extravagant in spending so he cannot preach frugality with effect. She talks too freely and harms his influence. She is too reserved and others consider her proud. Her special friendships will often hinder his work.

3. My wife supports me by her love for the church, and sacrifices for its influence. She is faithful in attending services and meeting newcomers. She is a good housekeeper and cook. She is helpful to the needy, works with two women's groups, and teaches in the church school.

Our files contain many similar replies. Time does not permit the reading of these. Those quoted should serve to indicate the trend of the thinking of the men themselves.

How May the Wife and Mother Prepare the Home and Family to Receive and Respond to the Visiting Minister?

Let's be even more specific at one point at least. How may the wife and mother prepare the home and family to receive and respond to the visiting minister? This topic was suggested by a wife and mother, who wrote in part as follows:

If the minister doesn't ask to have prayer, is it the family's place? Should a woman just keep still when she knows the husband isn't capable of directing along spiritual channels? If she always takes the lead, how can the husband begin? How can families and individuals learn to ask advice in financial, worship, social problems, and keep from losing self-respect or feeling incapable of solving their own problems? Is it all right to serve light refreshments, or is it time wasted from the spiritual purpose of the visit?

These and other questions of a similar nature were submitted to a seminar composed of several members of the local ministry in Independence. Notes covering some of these questions and a few of the replies contain the following:

Query: What preparation should be made in the home in anticipation of a priesthood visit?

Replies: It is normal, of course, to have the home in order, children clean, and so forth, as for any guest.

a. A word of caution should be noted: over-preparedness, such as extra caution and stern warnings to children to keep still, might be a practice of deceit, a bad example, especially for children.

b. Actual helps noted by those experienced in visiting are:

1. Have all members of the family together.

2. If there are pets (dogs and cats) it is best to put them in another room for this occasion unless they are well-mannered and know their place.

3. A front porch light is sometimes helpful. Some areas may have dirt walks, it could be muddy, and so on. Visiting ministers may not be thoroughly familiar with the location.

4. If telephone calls are expected, it would be helpful to have them deferred; if unexpected calls are received it would be quite in order to explain the situation and suggest that a return call be made later.

5. Radio and television should be turned off. Actual experiences show that in some cases visiting ministers have been forced to talk with radio and television programs going on in the same room.

Query: How may I make my children feel that priesthood visits are important to them too?

Replies: This is best accomplished over a long time.

a. Conversation at home should be kept on a positive note, with parents never panning or running down priesthood members in the presence of children (or anyone else). Actual experience shows clearly that children reflect the thoughts and actions presented by their parents and other adults they come in contact with.

b. The act of putting the house in good order shows respect due an important guest. In addition to a clean house, prayer and even fasting lend importance and command respect beyond the ordinary guest or visitor.

c. It is well to be visited by appointment. This gives the wife a chance to prepare and lends more importance to the visit.

d. Children should be encouraged to act natural, to feel free to ask questions, to be frank, open, and aboveboard. It may be of some help to prepare some questions they may ask in advance.

e. In some cases children may have questions they would not feel free to ask in family council. It might be arranged to leave children alone with the visiting ministers for a while.

f. Periodic or frequent visits with priesthood members should be encouraged. Children should be introduced to members of the priesthood when occasions permit, with proper reference given to their office. Children should know the reason for priesthood visits.

Query: If the minister doesn't ask to have prayer, is it the family's place?

Reply: The minister should take the responsibility. If members of the family feel the need they may be sure the ministers will join with them. On some occasions the ministers may not feel free to suggest prayer; usually the reverse of this is true.

Query: Should a woman keep still when she knows her husband isn't capable of directing along spiritual channels?

Reply: If it is the common practice for the woman to do most of the talking and leading in the home, it would not seem out of place here. She could certainly invite and include her husband in the conversation and discussion by such statements and questions as would call for a direct answer from him.

Query: Is it all right to serve light refreshments?

Reply: Generally no; however, in some cases where the social ties are close and the time and occasion permit, it is an evidence of good feeling and something of a compliment.

Query: Who of the group should promote thinking and discussion?

Reply: The members of the family should feel free to ask questions, or even lead out in discussion. But the visiting priesthood member is representing Deity and is surely the one most responsible for leading in discussion. Many times he is led by inspiration to make a particular kind of visit.

Query: How much general talk should there be?

Reply: Individual cases differ. Sometimes general talk is all that is accomplished. Other occasions require none at all. Usually after a few comments general conversation can be pointed toward the specific thought or subject of the visit. In some cases the needed ministry to the family is made evident by some general conversation.

Reply: There is very little the family can do without giving offense. Parents

Query: What should be done when the priesthood visit is prolonged? may suggest it's time for the children to retire, and request a season of prayer, or they could comment that they have to arise early. The closing time could even be arranged in advance.

Query: How can a mother and children receive this ministry when the father is a nonmember and opposed to the church?

Reply: The minister should remove this opposition by making friends with the husband. He should be contacted outside of the home and met on grounds of his own interests. Social functions at which priesthood members can be in attendance are helpful. The husband may receive some ministry through normal church functions and attendance.

Conclusion

Our discussion of the supporting role of the minister's wife runs something like this:

The church is indispensable to the work of the kingdom.

Ministry is indispensable to the effective functioning of the church.

A man's ministry may be greatly enhanced or thwarted by the attitude and conduct of his companion.

Men of many years experience in the ministry bear eloquent testimonies to the truth of this.

The minister's wife supports or fails her husband by what she is and does as a person, by what she is and does as a mate, by the quality of family life she maintains, and through a sustaining partnership in his vocational pursuits.

The wife and mother in the home can do far more than she has yet realized to prepare the home and family for the ministry of the visiting priesthood, and such is a form of ministry which ranks second to none in assuring the welfare of the family and of the church.

The Foolishness of Hickory Sticks

Graceland Convocation Address, 1952

By President E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

AS A COMPANY OF LEARNERS we are here this morning to give formal expression to the primary purpose of our presence on this college campus—the purpose of learning. The cap and gown, with their age-old significance, the academic hoods representing disciplines of learning and also the major universities of this country, the words of the hymns we sing together, all contribute to a corporate focusing of Graceland College of 1952-53 on what shall be proposed as a dominant theme for our work. What shall be our keynote for this new academic year?

As is our frequent custom we turn to the world of literature for words of stimulation. The text this morning is from a poem known to all of you.

School days, school days,

Dear old golden rule days.

Readin' and writin' and 'rith-me-tic

Taught to the tune of a hick'ry stick.

You were my queen in calico,

I was your bashful barefoot beau,

You wrote on my slate, "I love you, Joe,"

When we were a couple of kids.

Today I would like to talk to you about the tune of the hickory stick and its foolishness and fallacy as a basis for the educational process. It is immediately apparent, to the singer of the song and to the one who dares to reminisce fearlessly and honestly, that there was much more interest in the writing of sentiments of sweet affection on the slate than in scrawling two plus two equal four. She could write, "I love you." In this there was the want to express herself—to communicate—to be understood. Here was a resource of motivation far in excess of any to be generated by the blows of a hickory stick—the motivation to spell I to denote herself; you to specifically indicate the person for whom she had this significant feeling; and love, an expression of affection. Here was motivation to spell, to write, that there might be communication.

The poet, whoever he might have been, has with the insight of a philosopher neatly phrased and described the fallacy of education to the tune of a hickory stick. Here is learning based upon the now—present needs of the student, current interests—with no need for the endless appeal of teachers and parents, "You will be sorry if you don't learn this, for you will need it when you grow up," or "If you don't learn this, you'll get an F; you won't be graduated; you will disgrace us all."

CAN WE HERE on this campus in the enlightened year of 1952 for once and for all put to rest the idea of education to the tune of a hickory stick—education that resorts to coercion, threats, promises, artificial motivations of grades, credits, the preparation for living concept, preparation for problems of middle age which have not yet appeared to the student? Can we in our life here on the campus, learn for now? For if learning is not for now, there is a reasonable chance that it will be for never.

We are saying just as emphatically as we can that the learning process begins with us where we are. When a pebble is dropped into a pond of water the ripples move away from the center in ever-expanding concentric circles. It is from this center—the person himself with his present interests, wants, needs, questions—that the learning process gets its gradually expanding movement.

WE ARE SAYING that we cannot solve problems which we do not have and that the learning process, if it is to be effective, will have connection with present needs, present goals, present questions, present opportunities for using that which is to be learned. We all are aware of the phenomenon by which hard-won facts are often held in suspension until after an examination and then precipitated to become an amorphous, ambiguous, useless residue.

"Well," you might very well ask—and I know the faculty will—"what is our business here if it is not to expose ourselves to the joys of quantitative analysis, biology 71-72, and basic musicianship?" Now be not mistaken; there is a place for subject matter, but subject matter learnings may well be considered secondary learnings, for the really important thing for us is to be something—for us to become what we are meant to be. Subject matter may be compared, at least in a limited way, with the summer jobs taken by the athlete. He carries ice, digs ditches, works with a threshing crew; these are necessary activities—this work needs to be done—but it is not the work that is being done which is his primary concern, but that he is becoming strong, developing endurance, muscular tone, resiliency, conditioning himself for his share in the games to be played by the team. The work which he is giving himself to is important, but more important is the kind of person he is becoming because of the work. And one of the almost criminal tendencies of our day is that the supreme expectation is that a student complete his course work—his subject matter—and receive a grade for it, a diploma, regardless of what kind of a person he has become in that process.

WHAT, THEN, are the real learnings possible at this college? What are areas of present need that can motivate? What shall we write on the slate?

First, we honestly accept the fact that we must learn for ourselves. Education is ineffective unless it grows out of the initiative of the person himself. We cross our fingers when parents make all arrangements for their sons and daughters to come here, for we have learned in the crucible of experience that learning must be self-initiated. We must honestly accept the fact that we must learn for ourselves. This is a hard pill to swallow. It would be such a contribution to culture if some inventive Yankee could devise a way of piping skills, appreciations, and attitudes into human mind and muscle.

I often thought as I talked with John W. Rushton in the later years of his life that it was one of the world's tragedies that his artistry of the English language would pass with him. If there were but a way to convey it in all its ripeness of the mature and mellow years to someone young and strong of body and ready to serve. The wisdom of an Einstein, the genius of a Schweitzer, the inventive ability of Ford and Edison, the musical skill of Beethoven and Caruso—oh, that some way might be found to convey to the succeeding generations the richness of these treasures! But our wish is vain. The organism which is the human body must undergo the persistent, ceaseless, sometimes painful adaption of itself to the environment in which its directing mind places it. We choose the kind of environment to which we shall subject ourselves. As a result of the kinds of activities in which we must engage to deal with the demands of that environment—responding to its demands—is the learning process.

The learning process starts with us where we are and can be initiated only by us. We must learn for ourselves. But here, then, is a skill for a lifetime—the skill of self-management; this is one not noted in the life of the labor leader or industrialist who loses his temper so that bargaining must cease, or in the diplomat who walks out of the United Nations meeting, or the social drinker who cannot say no to another glass, or the man who never has time for community service, or the housewife who mortgages the family's future through installment buying, or the citizen who thinks like the last person he talked to. This is a skill to be learned now and assimilated into the very fiber of the body; the person who here can manage his time, his associations, his money, his energies, his influence, will have learnings that will remain long after he has forgotten how to take square root of a number or the French word for window.

SECONDLY, we can know now that nature forms us for living within human relationships and that the power formed through mastering our nearest relationships is the source of our capacity to master the more remote. We have the opportunity on this campus as we participate in the social interaction of our community life to become the kind of person who can be a co-operating citizen, now and later, a responsible individual, now and later, capable of productive and harmonious relationships in an interdependent society, now and later. This is learning of the first magnitude. You have heard it emphasized time and again that the most pressing problem of our day is that a person learn to live effectively with others. That means here and now if it is to mean internationally. The assignments of the classroom provide opportunities for group life. In this group life, as we respond to its invitations, assume its obligations, adjust to its disciplines, and enjoy its benefits, is the resource for one of the most important learnings of all—becoming a contributing member in the life of a community.

AND FOR THE THIRD great learning, let us take another look at that pebble dropped into the water. In ever-expanding circles its waves move out from the center. Just so there will be persons here this year who, initiating learning themselves—learning the skills of self-management, becoming contributing members to this community—will push out from the campus community to areas beyond in space and time. They will have time for contemplation with the great personalities whose lives and thoughts are recorded in the library, to ponder with some on the past and its lessons, to join with the prophets in keen anticipation of the future.

This year there will be set in motion a wave of interest and attention that throughout life will continue its movement; life will become for some a frontier experience, activity on the growing edge, exploration beyond the territory settled and staid. As the cultures of many lands meet here there can be stirred up those waves of motion that will not only expand men's minds and souls but may touch far distant lands to cleanse the beaches of the debris of war—to thunder the sound and reveal the power of ideas that can heal and build.

Why did you come to Graceland? Can you honestly say, "I came to learn"? Did you come to be coerced by the hickory stick or its sophisticated substitutes? Or rather, can you declare this morning:

I came to learn.

I must learn for myself.

I shall learn by being a contributing member to this present community.

I shall, with the help of God, set in action an expanding movement which shall broaden my horizons, lift my sights, and carry to areas beyond this campus the benefits of my experience here.

Introducing

WONZA INEZ SIMMERS, Baltimore, Maryland (page 14), says: "I have always desired to write. This is the first religious writing that I have ever attempted, but it was so easy that I am sure God must have been with me." Sister Simmers was baptized about a year ago and is branch publicity agent. She is taking a Bible course by correspondence. She was married to Edgar F. Simmers in 1936. They have four boys: David 15, Robert 11, Michael 3, and Daniel 2. Her hobbies are sewing, crocheting, and gardening.

ALICE E. (MULLINGS) HARRELL, Fresno, California (page 12), had a strong youthful ambition to be a writer, but for lack of educational opportunities took up the hobby of flower gardening instead. She is a native of Texas; was baptized in El Reno, Oklahoma, in 1923; and is interested in children, flowers, and music. She was married to Syrus Luther Harrell in 1919. She says, "Sometimes I write poems and short articles to amuse myself and my husband, but I just put them into a drawer and refer to them now and then just for my own satisfaction."

EDITH E. (VAN TUYL) BARWISE, Kansas City, Missouri (page 10), considers the greatest honor which has come to her has been the title occasionally given her, "a mother in Zion." She was married in 1911 to Burton Barwise. They have three sons and three daughters. Sister Barwise is a native of Iowa and was baptized in Centerville, New Mexico, in 1915. She was graduated from Iowa State Teacher's College in 1904. Her hobbies are gardening and fancywork. She is a practical nurse and has been employed in a California rest home, in a hospital neurological department, and on private cases. She has a deep interest in the Zion law, poetry, and psychology.

 LIFE

Our frail human vessel may be guided to the distant port of its destination by logic, but it sails on a sea of feeling. We think we are intelligent, but intelligence came very late in the endowments received from a kindly Creator. Millenniums before, we knew the fears and hopes, the loves and hates, the pleasure and anger by which we survived or perished. It is more difficult to give up old things and old ways than it is to acquire new ones. Intelligence is a new tool, but lately come into our hands, and we hardly know how to use it yet. But in all the emergencies of life—yes, and in its ordinary ways too—the chief activity of our minds is not thought, but feeling. If we know this, we will have a better understanding of people and get along with them more happily.

 READING THE DIRECTIONS

The world is moving so fast in our day that if we stop to read the road signs or directions the thundering herd runs over us and tramples us into the dust.

Standard procedure for modern people in taking medicine is to give the bottle one shake, take a big swallow and read the directions while the stuff is going down. If it was meant to go on the feet instead of in the stomach, it is just too bad—and too late.

Our presumption that we already know everything important keeps us from learning many things that would keep us out of trouble, promote longevity, and increase happiness.

Can you read a four-letter word—like "slow" or "stop"? Most car-drivers cannot, or do not. A bridge was out, and the highway department had erected warning signs for half a mile on each side, with blinker lights, detour notices and all the rest. A driver passed all of them, crashed through a barricade and went down into the chasm. They picked him, still alive, out of the wreck of his car. "Didn't you see the signs?" officers asked him. "I never bother to read 'em," the young man replied. Probably just another fellow with an unreasonable contempt for his native language which he had picked up at home and on the school playground.

How many people have you met that hate knowledge and would rather rely on power? A traveling soldier was reading a book. It was one of those illustrated things about a superwoman dressed in a star-spangled bathing suit, stopping a locomotive with her bare hands. Worship of power! If the lady had been smart, she would not be out there in that gaudy outfit. It would have been much more intelligent simply to stop the engineer, which she could easily have done.

Two great political conventions have made clear the fact that the world is on its way somewhere but doesn't know where it is going. There are directions to be read in history and Sacred Writ, but few are bothering to look at them. That is why, despite all warnings, most people are headed in the wrong direction.

Whoever pauses to read the directions before he takes the medicine or chooses a road will be in the minority. The thundering herd, taking the wrong turn, will pass by him and perhaps leave him behind. But he will have a better chance to survive.

James Albert Everett

BROTHER EVERETT got an early start in his ministry in Utah. He was ordained a priest and became pastor of the Provo Branch when he was only seventeen. Now at twenty-four he is one of the church's youngest Seventies. Before being ordained a Seventy on April 3 of this year, he had already served about two years in the Utah District under church appointment, been ordained an elder in September, 1949, and served as president and youth supervisor of the Utah District and as Ogden Branch pastor. Now he is missionary in Utah and western Colorado. He was baptized in 1938.

Jim was born in Alton, Illinois, but has lived in Utah since he was two. The past three years have been rather unusual for him, he says, because he has been serving in the same area and with the same people among whom he grew up. "It has been a challenge to gain maturity," he claims, "amid those who judged me as the fair-haired boy of Zion's League or as the mean little brat that I have been at times."

He has specialized in studying the Restoration with some emphasis on the social and religious life of the Mormons in Utah. He feels he has an understanding of Mormonism that is rather unique in the church. "However, it has always been my fear that I would become classed as a 'Mormon hater' or even an expert in one field with no opportunity to expand into others," he says, "so I have tried to extend myself in other areas as well."

He was graduated from the Pleasant Grove, Utah, High School in 1946 where he was editor of the school paper. He then attended Graceland for two years, where he was a member Lambda Delta Sigma, scholastic honorary society. Then he went to the University of Utah at Salt Lake City for two quarters before transferring to Brigham Young University at Provo, Utah, where he received a B.S. degree in 1950. He had intended to enter medicine, but accepted full-time church appointment instead.

He has a large personal library and has always liked to study. "But I haven't had much time for that lately," he says. "In fact, the past three years have been so busy that many pastimes such as skiing, chess, and camping have had to go by the board, but mind you, with no regrets. The work of the Master has been very rewarding to me."

The latest development in Jim's life is the former Ardis Briggs of Des Moines, Iowa. She became Mrs. Everett on August 17 this year.

News and Notes

PRESIDENT SMITH AT QUINDARO

President Israel A. Smith preached at Quindaro in Kansas City, Kansas, October 12. On October 19, he preached the Graceland College Day sermon at the Walnut Park Church in the Center Stake of Zion.

NEW STAKE PRESIDENT INSTALLED

President F. Henry Edwards was in Stewartsville, Missouri, for their home-coming the morning of October 12. In the afternoon he joined President W. Wallace Smith in Kansas City, Missouri, for the installation of Fred O. Davies, new stake president, successor to J. D. Anderson. Brother Edwards reports that a fine spirit of unity was noted. At the close of the service which was held at Central Church, a reception was held and suitable gifts were given to Brother and Sister Anderson.

NEFF IN OKLAHOMA

Charles Neff, assistant to the First Presidency, was in Miami, Oklahoma, on October 12 for their rally day. He delivered the morning address and was also the evening speaker.

APOSTLE HOLMES IN TEXAS

Apostle Reed M. Holmes was in Houston, Texas, October 3, 4, and 5; at the Rio Grande Valley area at Mercedes, Texas, October 7-9; and at San Antonio, Texas, October 10, 11, 12. He was attending religious education institutes and reports a fine response.

APOSTLE WILLIAMS IN THE EAST

Apostle D. T. Williams attended conferences at the following places: September 27-28, Parkersburg, West Virginia, for the West Virginia District; October 4 and 5, Columbus, Ohio, for the Columbus District; and October 11 and 12, Fayette City, Pennsylvania, for the Pittsburgh District.

JENSEN AND DAUGHERTY IN NEBRASKA

Apostle D. Blair Jensen visited the districts in Nebraska the first of October, accompanied by Seventy James C. Daugherty. At a district conference at Bonesteel, South Dakota, in the Central Nebraska District, October 5, Brother Daugherty was elected district president. Brother Daugherty spent three weeks visiting all groups and branches of the three Nebraska districts. Apostle Jensen was at Omaha October 12 for the district conference of the Northeastern District, and Brother Daugherty was present at the Southern Nebraska District conference at Lincoln on the same date.

APOSTLE IN GULF STATES

Apostle Percy E. Farrow has returned from the Gulf States where he attended three district conferences, which finalized the organization of the Alabama, Pensacola, and Mobile districts. Brother Farrow reports capacity attendance at each conference. The Alabama conference was held in the new church at McKenzie, September 26-28; the Pensacola conference in the new church at Pensacola, October 3-5; and the Mobile conference in the church at Mobile, October 10-12. Bishop Joseph Baldwin accompanied Brother Farrow to each conference. While in the area, Brother Farrow preached at Robertsedale, Vancleave, and Pascagoula in the Mobile District. In addition to this, he is planning a series of meetings to be held at Paris, Tennessee; Escatawpa, Mississippi; and Bayou LaBatre, Alabama.

BROTHER BLACKMORE IMPROVING

The condition of General Church Historian John Blackmore is steadily improving according to the latest reports. Brother Blackmore has been confined to the hospital for the past five weeks. (Continued on page 17.)

A Reputation for Service

"My sons, be not now negligent: for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before him, to serve him."

—II Chronicles 29: 11

PEOPLE WHO DO THINGS WELL are respected. Those who are willing to serve in good causes are honored.

This incident made me proud of our people. We were in a large social group. Two women, with whom we were not acquainted, were talking. One said, "I have a problem with those boys. I must get someone to tell me what to do." The other replied, "I know a Scoutmaster who will help you. He belongs to the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church." This brother has a splendid reputation for service in youth work, particularly with the Boy Scouts. He has become known beyond our own ranks for his good works. We are all happy to hear good things said about our friends. In this case the credit reflected on the church too. Above all, I was proud of the fact that the lady knew that this man would go outside of the needs of our organization to help others. It is good for the church and the city to have such men.

THIS MEMORY comes to me from prayer meeting long ago. One of the very active women of the congregation was bearing her testimony. She quoted a statement of which I have never learned the source. Perhaps it is one of the bits of wisdom that many people know. She said, "Service is the rent we pay for the space we occupy."

Have you paid your rent lately?

Space costs money. There was a time when you could buy a house, or have one built, and the architect could tell you within a few cents what it would cost per cubic foot. In the 'thirties you could build one for less than forty cents a cubic foot.

Costs have gone much higher now. Or you can calculate your cost according to the number of square feet of floor space. Business buildings are leased that way. In other words, every square foot of habitable earth is kept habitable at a cost, and somebody must pay the bill. If you do not pay your share, you are pushing the load upon the shoulders of others, and you are a parasite. The space you occupy costs money. You can't keep it forever. In one way or another, you can really only rent it. Try refusing to pay your taxes, and see how long you own your property. The government will take it away from you. After all, you are merely a renter. . . . Have you paid your rent?

Service in the church is the rent we pay for the space we occupy. When some fall behind, others must make it up. A good accountant could figure the annual cost of a seat at church. Perhaps it would be a good thing if we knew the figure. So much to build, so much to furnish, to paint, to heat, to clean, and more for the general expenses and overhead that go to provide the services and the leadership. Have you ever looked over a congregation and wondered if the members there are paying the rent for the space they occupy?

WE WERE in another town, and asked a friend to give us the name of a good, honest auto mechanic. He gave the name and said, "He's the best in town. Of course, he's very religious and may try to convert you. But he will do good work."

Certainly religion, if it is the right kind, should help a man to be a better auto mechanic. A good religion is an asset, a source of inspiration and power. Whatever men and women do will be done better if they go to God for strength and accept his ideals as their guiding principles in life and work. A great many of our people have found it so.

THOSE WHO WORK in the field of religion know that thousands of words are spoken for every little bit of work that is accomplished. Of course this is also true in other fields. Across the street two men are painting a building. The paint is applied at a desultory pace. Some of it gets on the wood; some of it misses the mark. The workmen do not worry: somebody else pays. But all the while a very animated conversation is taking place. A brush may serve as an elongated finger, gesticulating in the air. This wastes time and paint, and it is not what the men are paid for. But they do it anyway. Well, you can make your own religious applications of that point. You have seen church people at work, and you may even have looked in the mirror at yourself sometimes.

TURNING BACK to the original point: wouldn't it be a wonderful thing if our people were to become known as a people who serve? That woman with the boy problem had probably gone over the whole list of men that she knew in her own church. If she had been able to find one man to help her need, it is unlikely that she would have mentioned it to her friend. There was none in her church. . . . Take it a step further. If the other woman could have recommended a member of her faith, she would have done so. But she couldn't. Then she remembered a man who belonged to neither of their churches. She paid him a high tribute. She paid the church a tribute in the way she spoke of it. Of course I had done nothing to earn it, but I was proud when she mentioned his name. Do you blame me? L. J. L.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Thirty years ago, at the General Conference of 1922, Elders Gomer T. Griffiths, Ulysses W. Greene, Cornelius A. Butterworth, and Robert C. Russell were released from further responsibility in the Council of Twelve. After some years of further service all these brethren have now gone to their reward. At the same time Elder Floyd M. McDowell became a member of the First Presidency, and Elders Clyde F. Ellis, John F. Garver, Daniel T. Williams, F. Henry Edwards, Edmund J. Gleazer, and Roy S. Budd were ordained to the apostleship. Of these Elders Williams and Gleazer are the only present members of the Twelve, and they have now completed thirty years of service in that quorum. Apostle Hanson (ordained in April, 1913) is their only senior. The Presidency has written Brother Williams and Brother Gleazer as follows:

Apostle D. T. Williams
Office

Dear Brother:

I am advised that today (October 13) is the anniversary of your ordination to the office of apostle.

Thirty years is a long period of time, still longer when they have been filled with activities connected with the promotion of the gospel.

Kindly accept my congratulations and best wishes. I hope that you will have many more years of active ministry.

The church is under great obligation to you for doing so much to advance the Great Cause.

Israel A. Smith
President.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Sr.
3512 Victory Avenue,
Oakland 19, California

Dear Brother:

The church owes much to the faithful ministry of yourself and others in your Council. I understand today, (October 13) marks the end of thirty years of your service as an apostle.

That is a long time, and the years have been fruitful in many ways.

With congratulations and appreciation, may you be continued many years yet to magnify your calling.

Israel A. Smith,
President.

Official

Good Government in Missouri

A long-established policy which we have followed closely—perhaps too rigidly—has been to refrain from attempting to influence the way our members vote in public elections. The reason for this rule ought to be obvious to those who know our church history. On issues such as prohibition, we have felt impelled to take a stand and have advised our members accordingly. We have at times of state and national elections urged Reorganized Latter Day Saints to become informed on the qualifications of candidates so they may vote intelligently, and then to vote for good and trustworthy men as directed in Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2, "Honest men and wise men should be sought for diligently, and good men and wise men ye should observe to uphold."

We therefore believe it will not be a violation of our policy nor a breach of ethics in any way for us to speak a word by way of information to our members in Missouri who will vote on November 4. One of our own members, Howard Elliott of St. Louis, is a candidate for governor of Missouri. His father, Elder T. J. Elliott, was a missionary for the church. We have known Howard for many years and believe him to be a man of intellectual honesty and integrity. His public service for the state has already commended him to us.

However, we prefer not to speak further respecting him or his record and ability, but are glad to reprint with permission what a great metropolitan paper, The Kansas City Star for October 14, an independent in politics, has to say about this candidate.

FOR ACTIVE STATE LEADERSHIP

Missouri is fortunate in having two capable and trustworthy candidates for governor, Phil Donnelly and Howard Elliott. The Star cited the qualifications of both in their primary campaigns.

Now the state comes to the question of final choice. We favor Elliott as the younger man who offers a genuinely progressive program. To a large extent a state's progress depends on aggressive leadership from the governor's office. We have rocked along fairly well in recent years, but we doubt that any stu-

Spiritual Gifts

By Elbert A. Smith

Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. . . . But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues; but all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.—I Corinthians 12: 1, 7-11.

Unique Beliefs

In the beginning of the Restoration Movement our belief was absolutely unique in regard to many of these gifts. Since that day some denominations have taken up the matter of healing and, professedly, the gift of unknown tongues. But I think in the beginning of the Restoration Movement, the churches were practically united in saying that these gifts had been done away with. They never denied the need of faith, wisdom, and knowledge, but from there on they rejected the gifts.

However, the more miraculous gifts (so called) were experienced in the very beginning of the Restoration Movement. The day that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery baptized each other by divine commandment, they prophesied many things "concerning the rise of the church." On the day that the church was organized there was a similar experience.

The belief in those things entered into our early hymns, for example:

The Spirit of God like a fire is burning,

The latter day glory begins to come forth,

The visions and blessings of old are returning,

The angels are coming to visit the earth.

Current Beliefs in 1833

As a confirming witness concerning the attitude of people when this church came forth, we have or did have in the church library a book published by the Methodists in 1833 called Theological Institutes, for the use of those who were studying for the ministry. I was interested in their statement concerning the gifts because that was just shortly after this church was organized. The book had this comment: "The gift of prophecy has passed away with all the other miracles of the first age of Christianity." That idea, I suppose, represented the beliefs of all Protestant churches.

Blasphemy in 1833

When we were driven out of Independence in 1833 the mobbers thought it best to issue a statement of their reasons. This was one of them:

They openly blaspheme the most high God and cast contempt on his holy religion by pretending to receive revelations direct from heaven, by pretending to speak in unknown tongues by direct inspiration, and by divers pretenses derogatory to God and religion, and to the utter subservience of human reason.—Church History, Volume 1, page 314.

In the year of our Lord 33 the gifts of revelation, prophecy, and unknown tongues were common in the church. In 1833 it had become blasphemous to claim such blessings. That is, it seemed blasphemous to the enemies of the church.

The Book of Mormon says that the gifts shall never be done away so long as the world stands, except because of unbelief. In harmony with that John Wesley in one of his sermons said that these gifts had not been done away with because they were not needed but because Christians had turned heathen and no longer believed in them (Sermon 94).

ELBERT A. SMITH

Wisdom

The first gift named is wisdom. We must never lose sight of that. It is the balance wheel that controls and directs the proper use of the other gifts. Sometimes they are used unwisely, and people rejoice because they are used but fail to notice that they are not used wisely. They may go away from a meeting in which the gift of wisdom has been marked and say that the gifts were not enjoyed, when in fact the greatest of the gifts was there if they had only taken notice.

We give gifts to our children when we know that they must learn how to use them; we know that they may make mistakes. God gives us gifts and expects us to make some blunders as we learn to cultivate wisdom.

I think if we read between the lines in that Corinthian letter we will find that the Corinthian saints had fallen into some errors. Paul was constrained to admonish them on some points, and he would not have done so had it not been necessary. For example, he said in addressing the Corinthian saints:

How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying. If any man speak in another tongue, let it be by two or at the most, by three, and that by course.—I Corinthians 14: 26, 27.

Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge. If anything be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace. For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted. And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets. For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints.—I Corinthians 14: 29-33.

Remember, God is not the author of confusion but of order, and the spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets. In some modern denominations that have taken up the gift of tongues, for example, there is the utmost confusion. From two to a half dozen will speak, shout, sing, pray, and roll on the floor all at once. The Corinthian saints may not have been that disorderly but they needed to be reminded that they should speak one at a time, that God's house was a house of order and not of confusion, and that the spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets.

A prophet is not just a machine. He is supposed to use wisdom as to how and when and where he shall deliver his message.

A Remarkable Conversion

There is a time and a place for these gifts, including prophecy and tongues. When conditions are right, as they often are at reunions and as they were on the day of Pentecost when the people came together with one accord in one place, there is a "time of refreshing from on high." I will tell you about one of those experiences.

In the old days of the Lamoni reunions in the "south woods," we had a big reunion with two to three hundred small tents, and a big tent for the services. The daily forenoon prayer meeting was the important service of the day. The gifts were poured out wonderfully under the spirit of wisdom, with quiet dignity and power. One weekday morning when we were in the midst of that sort of an experience I noticed Mr. Partridge, pastor of the Methodist church in Lamoni, seated in the middle of the audience. I wondered how he would react to that atmosphere. I had not long to wait for presently he rose and said, "Brethren, I have felt a power here that I did not know was any longer on earth, and I feel that if I kept silent the very rocks would cry out."

It takes something to break the hard shell of prejudice. The next morning the Reverend Partridge visited me in the editorial rooms at the Herald Office (the church headquarters were at Lamoni at the time) and said in substance, "Mr. Smith, I little thought that I, a dyed-in-the-wool Methodist preacher, would ever come to ask advice from a Mormon elder.

I've already heard that I am liable to be moved out of town because of what I said yesterday, but I meant just what I said. I did feel a power that I did not know was on earth any longer. I do not know what to do. If I resign my pastorate, I will have to go to work; while if I continue my ministry it will not be many years now until I can retire on a pension. I do not know what to do."

I said, "Reverend Partridge, this is a problem you will have to decide for yourself. We cannot promise you a salary or an ordination, but we do know that Christ told about the man who found the pearl of great price, and when he found it he sold all that he had and bought it. Christ said that was the way with the kingdom of heaven. We think we have the pearl of great price. If you feel that we have, take your time and investigate it thoroughly."

The Reverend Partridge resigned his pastorate and went to work for Brother Orman Salisbury. He took two years to study the history and the beliefs of this church thoroughly from every angle. He did not want to be converted on a single experience. He spent two years of study and then was baptized and later was ordained an elder. There was a power at that prayer meeting, and it changed his whole life. His wife also was baptized.

Healing

For a long time after I went into the mission field we were scoffed at everywhere by people of all sorts of denominations because we believed in the admonition in the Bible:

Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.—James 5: 14, 15.

We were told that those things were done away with. Now many of the prominent churches have taken up the thought of divine healing.

One of my earliest experiences with healing occurred in my youth when I was a boy on a farm in Iowa. I had an uncle, my mother's brother, Frederick Hartshorn, who had in a way taken the place of a father to me. He was a bachelor, and I had supposed that he always would be, but one day I noticed that a strange change had come over him. He seemed to be illuminated as though somebody had turned on an electric light inside him. He had fallen in love. That is what happens when a good man falls in love with a good woman. He is illuminated inside; he is lighted up; he is a better man. He feels that he is not worthy of the woman, but he intends to try to be.

Well, my uncle was married to my Aunt Anna, and two children were born to them. Then I noticed that the "light" seemed to go out of my uncle. His wife had developed a cancer on her breast. It was three times burned out with caustic, as was the practice in those days, but it always came back. Then they thought of their faith and went to the little branch in Cherokee, Iowa. That little branch had fasting and prayer. Brother Crippen and, I believe, Brother Sheldon administered to my aunt, and that night the cancer dropped away. The wound healed, and she lived to old age rearing her children in the faith. They and her grandchildren are still church members.

For reasons that we do not know those results do not always follow. If we knew why they do not, we would be as wise as God. When it does not follow and tragedy comes, we say, "Why, why did that happen?" Jesus could not understand always. He said, "Let this cup pass from me," but he recovered himself and said, "Nevertheless, not my will but thine be done." On the cross his spirit failed and he said, "My God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Then he recovered himself and commended his spirit to God. He could not always understand why his prayer was not granted, and neither can we. But often it is answered gloriously in the affirmative.

A Recent Case of Healing

A few years ago I went to a doctor in Independence, one of the best physicians in town. There I saw Brother P. A. Sherman, pastor of one of our churches, who was just leaving. He looked so sick and broken that I questioned the doctor. Because of my official position, I suppose, the doctor told me more than he would have told somebody else. He said that Brother Sherman seemed to have developed a cancer of the bone in his arm. The prognosis was that the arm would have to be removed or a section of bone taken out and the arm shortened.

That was sad news. I liked Brother Sherman; I respected and trusted him. I was out of town for quite a while and, upon returning, went out to Brother Sherman's home southeast of town. To my surprise, I found him at work. I asked him what had happened, and he told me. He said that he got worse and worse, until they sent him to Bell Memorial Hospital where X rays were taken of the bone. Several specialists studied the X rays and confirmed the previous diagnosis. The operation was to take place in the Independence Sanitarium. He said that as he lay on his bed in his home at Gudgell Park, or near there, the least jar made the pain intolerable.

Then in the little church at Gudgell Park the congregation fasted and prayed for him. Brother Dillee, another elder, and a number of others came to his house, and the elders administered to him. He said that while their hands were on his head every pain left him and never returned. Soon he was back at work.

I went to the doctor, and he confirmed the report. He said that Brother Sherman did go to Bell Memorial Hospital and have X rays taken which confirmed the diagnosis. Brother Sherman has told me that story three times at least. His son said to me, "I had read of those things in the Bible, but that happened in my own home to my own father; I was there and saw it."

A Personal Experience

Now a little personal experience. In 1930 I went to the Battle Creek Sanitarium on advice of church physicians. Treatments were available there that we did not have in our Sanitarium at the time. I had an operation that came very close to my vocal chords—so close that it troubled the surgeon as I found out afterward. When it was over my voice was sort of a cross between a whisper and a groan. One day a member of the staff was giving me a treatment as I lay on a cot. He asked, "You are a preacher?" I nodded my head. Then he asked, "What are you going to do from now on?" As well as I could I replied, "I expect to do as I always have done." "You can never expect to preach again."

That was a hard blow, and I shut my eyes for a moment. Then I had a vision—not an "open vision" but a mental vision—and I saw myself preaching to thousands of people, as I did later at the campus in the summertime and in the Auditorium. Then I opened my eyes and as well as I could I said, "I will preach, and they will hear me!" He shook his head—but I was right, thank God! I am like John Rushton, who said he was in love with his profession of preaching.

Prophecy and Tongues

Paul seemed to rate the gift of prophecy much higher than the gift of tongues. At least he said, "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophecy" (I Corinthians 14: 1). Then he added, "In the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding . . . than ten thousand words in another tongue" (I Corinthians 14: 19). You will notice he said, "in the church." I imagine perhaps out in the mission field he would not have made just that statement. It seems to me that the gift of tongues was primarily intended to help preach the gospel in the mission field to those who knew it not. I would not be surprised if the gift of tongues should have its part in helping the missionary to learn foreign languages.

At any rate Paul thought prophecy more desirable in the church than the gift of tongues. I am not depreciating any of these gifts; they are all important, or God would not have given them. I am quoting Paul who regarded prophecy as superior to the gift of tongues.

Functions of Prophecy

What do you think of first when we talk about prophecy? You think of the prediction of future events, do you not? This is not the most important function of prophecy—at least not in my judgment. I have classified the functions of prophecy, perhaps quite inadequately, under four headings. First, it is to reveal God. I think that is primary. That was the chief function of the prophet Moses—to reveal God, the great I AM. To a great degree that was the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, to reveal God to a people who thought that He had ceased working long ago. Second, the function of prophecy is to interpret the character of God; third, to declare the will of God; and fourth, to testify of Jesus. We are told in Revelation 19: 10 "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."

When the young man, Joseph Smith, went into the woods that spring day to pray he may not have had any premonition that from that day on he would be numbered with the prophets and share the fate of some of the others. But as he prayed the heavens were opened and two personages appeared in marvelous light. The one pointing to the other said, "This is my beloved Son, hear him."

Joseph Smith went out of the grove with that testimony—the very spirit of prophecy. And he was never a greater prophet than when he said, as recorded in Section 76 of the Doctrine and Covenants, "After the many testimonies that have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, that we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him even on the right hand of God; and heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father."

Such a prophetic testimony as that had not been borne since the apostles and prophets of old passed off the scene. John the Baptist, as far as I recall, did not foretell events but Jesus said he was one of the greatest prophets born of woman. John did say, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." That was his prophetic mission and message.

Nevertheless it is one of the functions of prophecy to foretell events. Joseph Smith predicted the Civil War. I have the Pearl of Great Price, an original copy, in which that prophecy appeared nine years before the war broke out. It told where the war would begin and the course it would run. The first chapter in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants predicted the time when "peace would be taken from the earth." There have been minor prophets from time to time who have given similar warnings. At the beginning of World War I we had an evangelist by the name of James Baty living in England; he was trusted, loved, and respected. Brother Baty had a disability; he was stone deaf in one ear, and sometimes when he went to bed, to shut off noises and be sure of a good night's sleep, he would bury the good ear in his pillow. One night he went to bed and buried his good ear in the pillow, yet in spite of that precaution he heard a voice calling his name. He sat up in bed and there was a personage who said to him, "The time is near at hand when Section I of the Doctrine and Covenants shall be vindicated, and peace shall be taken from the earth." It was only a short time until the German army came down through Belgium, and peace was taken from the earth. It never has returned.

Pearl Harbor

On Pearl Harbor Day many of us went to Communion service, as it was Sunday. In Omaha, Roland Scott, now an evangelist, went to the Communion service and prophesied that America would very soon be at war. Afterward when he went home he was almost frightened to think that he had made such a statement. But soon Elder Glaude Smith, then pastor in Omaha and now of the Stone Church, called him on the telephone and said, "Brother Scott, your prophecy is being fulfilled much sooner than you thought. The Japanese are dropping bombs on Pearl Harbor."

When such prophecies are given and vindicated, it strengthens our faith. We see that God is not taken by surprise. He is working to a pattern, and he has given us a glimpse of the pattern unfolding. Though we may feel confused, we know that God is not.

First Spiritual Experience

My first experience with this gift of prophecy occurred when I was a small boy about six years old living in northern Iowa. I had lost my father, David H. Smith, and I was out on the prairie one day in the spring when suddenly the Spirit rested upon me, giving me to know that when I grew up I would carry on the work that my father had laid down.

I was too young to understand what all that meant, but I never forgot it, and it gave direction to all my life. The time came when I found myself in the mission field preaching where my father had preached—preaching the same Gospel, using the same books. A little later I found myself seated at the editorial desk as associate editor, editing the Saints' Herald, as he had done in Plano. And a little later I found myself in the First Presidency, counselor to Brother Joseph, where my father had been thirty-five years before.

I remember the first night I sat by the side of that venerable prophet in council meeting. He reached out his hand and put it on my knee as though to reassure himself that the son of his beloved younger brother was there—or perhaps to reassure me, I never knew which.

An Experience With President F. M. Smith

I want to bear a little testimony now about Frederick M. Smith. The Conference of 1925 was a troubled one and toward its close the delegates adopted a resolution urging President Frederick M. Smith to go to the Lord and seek his word of counsel. Brother Fred M. was reluctant. I never could understand why the president was reluctant to bring the word of God to the church, until I myself was asked to do it. Then I knew what the prophet of old meant when he spoke about the "burden of the word of the Lord."

Brother Fred M. went to his home, in Kansas City at that time, in seclusion, while President Floyd McDowell and I carried on with the Conference. Soon we had a telephone call from Fred M. to come and receive the message for the Conference.

Accompanied by Apostles John Garver and F. Henry Edwards, and I believe also Bishop Becker, Brother Floyd and I drove over to Fred M.'s house. Floyd and I went to the door and stood in the hall as the president came down stairs with the document in his hand. Brother Floyd and I immediately noticed his countenance. I do not think he said a word. I do not believe that we did. His countenance was white; it was illuminated; it was almost transparent. I have seldom seen such a look on the face of a human being. We knew that we were receiving a document from a man who had been with God. Whatever you may have thought about Brother Fred M., he was a prophet, and as Brother Floyd and I went out of that home we turned to each other and said as with one voice, "Did you see that man's face?" Brother Floyd will confirm this testimony.

Two More Personal Experiences

I will close with two more personal experiences. One occurred at the time of the death of President Frederick M. Smith in 1946. On the sixth day of March, one month before Conference was to convene, we had word that Brother Fred M. was indisposed and would not be at the morning meeting of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. He had been there regularly, but it was obvious to some of us that he was in distress. That morning Brother Israel Smith and I had an impulse to drive out together to his home. We found him in his little cabin back of the main house lying on a couch. We didn't know how ill he was. He made no complaint—he seldom did. We talked about some church affairs and then went back to the Auditorium.

I went up to my room, which is on the fifth floor in the Auditorium, and engaged in prayer. An inner voice, as clear as an audible voice would have been, said to me, "The ministry of Frederick M. Smith has come to a full end." That afternoon he was taken to the Independence Sanitarium.

I was asked to pray for his recovery in the council meetings, and I could only pray that he might be spared suffering. Beyond that I could not go, neither, as I observed, could any member of the council. It was not to be.

On the day he died, in the very hours preceding his passing, I was again in my office in prayer, and again the Spirit rested upon me and gave me counsel to bring to the church regarding the choice of the successor, and other testimonies. I reached the Sanitarium just as Brother Fred's spirit departed.

A few days later a committee of three came from the Quorum of Twelve Apostles—and told me that the Quorum of Twelve, by unanimous vote, had asked me, as Presiding Patriarch, to bring counsel to the General Conference. I knew then what it meant to bear "the burden of the word of the Lord."

In Kirtland Temple

I have one more testimony—this time concerning an experience at the Conference of High Priests in Kirtland Temple in October, 1950. That was a wonderful experience—over two hundred high priests meeting in the Kirtland Temple, eating together in the cafeteria, being together all day long in the temple in worship and prayer, in classwork, listening to lectures and sermons as was done in the old "School of the Prophets" and under the same Spirit.

It was my lot to help preside over the prayer meetings, with President Israel A. Smith and Apostle Arthur Oakman. Those were fine services, but it became obvious as the week wore on that the men expected something—something outstanding. I knew some were looking to me, and I was empty. I did not have a thing, such as they needed. It was a task far beyond my power.

Then Brother Israel appointed a fast on Friday. Early Saturday morning I awoke with the words of the beginning of the message already in my mind. They had been given to me, not after any pattern that I had anticipated, in part as follows: "I am he who was born of the Virgin Mary. I am he who was crucified on Calvary's cross, but I ascended up on high, and behold I am alive forever more." The message unfolded itself, and from then on I was left to use my own language, mostly, and at considerable length.

I arose and dressed. I could not rest. I knew how Jeremiah felt when he said the word of the Lord was like a fire shut up in his bones and he could not rest. I went to the Temple and there met President Israel A. Smith coming down the aisle. He took me to one side, and I told him what had happened. He then said that he awoke that morning early and felt a degree of responsibility; but he was told that the word would come through the Patriarch of the church. That meeting of minds confirmed and comforted us both. I marveled at the message as much as anyone. It was nothing I could have brought. It was the word of God, not to the General Church, but to the men present there in that conference, and for that reason it has never been printed and distributed.

Closing Blessing

I trust I have not wearied you with too long a sermon. Will you bow your heads in prayer? Our heavenly Father, under the devout Spirit that we have felt this evening I look to thee for a prayer of blessing upon this congregation. Wilt thou bless all those who are here who are desirous that they should receive a blessing. Bless them in their church fellowship; increase their faith; give them light and testimony themselves. Bless them especially in their homes that they may be Zion's homes—homes of peace and love where Christ can dwell—not homes of contention. May they not be a people given to contention, but peacemakers. Bless them in the places where they work, which sometimes may be very difficult places in which to work, that sometimes in the midst of the most untoward conditions they may by their conversation and their lives and their habits bear such a testimony that it cannot be denied. So, Lord, I invoke thy Fatherly blessing upon these people assembled here and their families and those who would wish to be here but are not. I ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

Good Government in Missouri

dent of Missouri government would suggest that the state has risen to many of its opportunities. It needs an active pushing state administration.

Elliott has demonstrated his leadership in two terms as speaker of the House of Representatives. His peak performance came in the big 1945-46 session that had the tremendous job of rewriting a large share of Missouri laws to conform to the new state constitution. His leadership was exerted on the side of conforming to the spirit as well as the letter of the progressive, new constitution.

Among other things the constitution and new laws provided for a virtually complete reorganization of state government which Elliott has called "the greatest opportunity for any state governor in modern times." We believe he is justified in saying that neither Governor Donnelly nor Governor Smith seized the full opportunity. A great deal depends on an individual governor's enthusiasm for reorganization. There is a big difference between accepting a pattern and making full use of it. Elliott has a concrete plan of action.

Missouri's reforestation program is one of the opportunities offered by the new constitution. It illustrates Elliott's state-wide approach to saving Missouri's wealth in the soil. He visualized a million submarginal acres returned to trees and pushed the necessary legislation. He sees the program as the chance to save a large part of the state's soil by returning it to the use that nature intended. He is quite ready to say the disappointingly spotty results probably are due in part to a defect in the law. If elected governor he intends to urge any necessary legal changes and to push the program on the administrative side.

He proposes to use the same principle to foster a permanent pasture program for other large areas of the state. This is basic to Missouri's bid for a greatly increased dairy industry. For areas that cannot be saved by grass and trees he proposes a state program to push all-around soil conservation. We agree with him that these things are fundamental to effective flood control.

Along with saving Missouri's heritage of soil he promises an active rural health program that includes hospitals and doctors for many counties that have little health protection today.

As speaker, Elliott took an active lead for better schools. His charge against present laws is the failure of the state's scores of millions of dollars to produce the kind of pay that gets good teachers.

He plans to work for a minimum salary scale set up by state law.

If Elliott is elected we believe that he will be an active builder of roads, highways, and routes through cities. In the last session he proposed the appointment of a special committee to iron out highway differences. Governor Smith appointed such a committee and it produced important results, but not enough to satisfy Elliott. He is convinced that Missouri can regain its reputation as a highway building state. Win, lose, or draw, we would like to see him make the effort.

Here we can only touch a few issues to show the direction of Howard Elliott's thinking, and they are basic. He has proved himself the kind of leader who can put his ideas across. He is anything but a reckless spender. Capable leadership can produce much better results with the millions the state is collecting today.

Books

Building Church Membership Through Evangelism, by Dawson C. Bryan, Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1952. Price $2.

Mr. Bryan has rendered an exceptional service to Protestant churches by providing this guide to evangelism. The fundamental statement of Mr. Bryan's concern and techniques was given previously in A Handbook of Evangelism for Laymen. In this new book the principles and techniques of visitation evangelism have been further developed.

Perhaps the most significant value of the book is in its emphasis upon evangelism through personal contact. Mr. Bryan sees this means as the technique followed by Jesus and the early disciples who carried their courageous and contagious witness to friends and strangers. As Mr. Bryan states it, "To them the love of God was so real that they were captured by the urgency to invite others to know him. And so his disciples of the twentieth century are following the same basic principle in their personal witness of the way of Christ."

This book can be of value to us in its fundamental insistence that witnessing is not alone an activity for professional evangelists but that it is fundamentally the business of every follower of Christ. Mr. Bryan simply endeavors to implement the simplest of persuasive procedures, conversation, between friends in the home environment. We are often inclined to think of church work as being confined to holding specific offices and having specified responsibilities within Donnelly's record as governor we know—good but not spectacular. There is an excellent chance that Elliott would be one of the few great governors of Missouri.

Boundary Changes

By action of the recent Joint Council of the First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, Marshall County, Kansas, has been transferred from the Southern Nebraska District to the Kaw Valley District, and the western half of Nemaha County, Kansas (previously unorganized), has been added to the Far West Stake.

departments. We would do well to recognize that witnessing is the mutual joy and responsibility of every member of the church. When engaged in with fullness of heart and with courtesy born of love, personal evangelism does something for the evangelist as well as the evangelized. There are few thrills in life to match that of knowing that something we have done or said has led someone to follow Christ. The knowledge that each of us can be useful to God through the process of evangelism is one of life's greatest discoveries, and it is this discovery which Mr. Bryan encourages every reader to gain.

One of the most helpful chapters, "Where Are the People?" serves to open our eyes to possibilities. Another helpful chapter is entitled, "The Steps to Effective Visiting." I was particularly impressed by the author's suggestions of utilizing local forces in missionary series through prior visitation programs, and so forth.

The book does have some marked disadvantages; since it has been written for the wide audience of Protestantism it tends to be a bit anemic so far as doctrinal content and background are concerned. Evangelism for us means a great deal more than it does for others and must of necessity involve some procedures and teaching processes that Protestant churches by their very nature can overlook. Any Reorganized Latter Day Saint who reads the book should be conscious of this major deficiency.

Restoration Comprehension

By J. A. Koehler

Line upon line, precept upon precept. . . .

The light groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day.—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3 and 50: 6.

Our Creed: All Truth

This is what men said even when they knew little more than nothing about it. Here and there throughout the ages, men have believed that, in their religious thinking, they had “arrived”—they had comprehended even God. They had the truth, all the truth there was to be had. They said, “Nothing can be added to it nor anything taken from it.” And some said it that other men might fear them.

Hierarchs of the apostate church were like that. Their theology was static. They said in effect that if any man would “add unto” or “take from” their religious decrees, the judgments of God would be visited upon him. So they made Galileo sign. And they did worse than that to Bruno and others.

Infallibility and Finality

“Our creed: all truth” presupposes the infallibility and finality of “the voice of divine inspiration.” And that ne plus ultra idea is in opposition to the Restoration doctrine of continuous revelation. For the voice of Restoration said, “These commandments . . . were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding . . .” (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5). There is no assumption of inspirational infallibility and finality in “whether that which has come to me will bring relief to the situation, I know not . . .” (Doctrine and Covenants 128, introduction) and much else.

God Said

Many people like to say respecting ideas which they conceive, even if they do not understand them, “God said so.” I asked one of these people, “How do you know God said so?” And he answered, “There it is, right there in the book!” I said, “I know it is in the book, but what I want to know is, how do you know that what is in the book is what God said?” His reply was the question, “Don’t you believe the book?”

So I gave up, for what can one do with people who, in what they call argumentation, only beg the question—who do not even know what reasoning is—whose present need is an understanding of what they talk about?

Remember Leonarda da Vinci: “Whoever in argument adduces authority uses not reason but memory.”

The Horse’s Mouth

Great as he was (and he was one of the greatest men that ever lived) Aristotle, whom we do not remember for his mistakes, went into consultation with himself; and having consulted himself said that there were so many teeth in the mouth of a horse.

Galileo came along and said, “I don’t believe it.” “What,” said the church fathers, “you don’t believe it when Aristotle said so?” “No,” said Galileo, “I don’t believe it no matter who said so. I think I shall look into the mouth of the horse and see.” “What,” said the fathers, “look into the mouth of a horse when Aristotle has written it in a book?” “Yes,” said Galileo, “that I will do.”

And he did. He did what Aristotle should have done. And having consulted the horse, Galileo presented to the church fathers the proof that what Aristotle had written in his book was not what was written in the mouth of the horse. To that the fathers replied: “That does not signify; for if the horse does not agree with Aristotle, the horse is wrong!” And I have heard just that from men in this church.

An Invitation

The Restoration is an invitation to look into “the mouth of the horse.” You may read that invitation in Doctrine and Covenants 50: 4, 6 and 85: 21. And the prophet of Restoration did not say, as the hierarchs of apostasy have said, that the horse is wrong. He said, in effect, “When we see man comprehendingly, we see God. Man himself is the proof of what God said. Through contemplation of man we see God.” That, I think, is in part the meaning of Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21. “Any man who hath seen any or the least of these [kingdoms of the universe], hath seen God . . .” (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12). This is Restoration’s invitation to look into “the mouth of the horse.”

The Dark Ages

The Dark Ages were issues of “religion’s” refusal to accept that invitation, which is implicit in “The heavens declare the glory of God” (Psalm 19). As the church cemented itself on the foundation of its adduced authority, the light of reason became dim; then it vanished, and gross darkness covered the people (Isaiah 62: 2). Profane learning, scientific investigation, was stigmatized as an insult to God.

“As a result Europe was a cesspool that reeked with contagion,” and plague after plague claimed its victims by thousands—victims who died horribly while the name of “God” was mumbled in their ears.

How could there have been a restoration—even a partial restoration—if that self-constituted religious authority of the Dark Ages could have maintained its supremacy by adducing itself? If its “God says” were the end of all controversy? If men had not dared to look into “the mouth of the horse” that they might “see” or comprehend?

An Unfolding Idea

That the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the “God says” of the prophet of Restoration, represents an unfolding idea or vision of the shape of things to come, we must believe if we believe that the light it reflects “groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day”; if we believe that line is to be added to line, and precept to precept; if we believe (as the doctrine of continuous revelation implies) that contributions are to be made to religious thinking in the future that are as valid as any made in the past.

The Prophet’s Avowal

The belief in Restoration as an unfolding of an idea or concept of the shape of things to come is to be seen in Doctrine and Covenants:

1: 5, “that they might come to understanding”; or “receive knowledge from time to time.”

6: 3, “the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you.”

8: 3, “Ask that you may know the mysteries of God.”

9: 3, “Behold, you have not understood. . . .”

10: 8, “Wait . . . until you shall have my word . . . that you may know of a surety my doctrine.”

10: 10, "First seek to obtain my word."
31: 1, "Pray always that I may unfold them to your understanding."

35: 1, ". . . my spirit, . . . which shall teach you. . . ."

38: 5, "Teach one another. . . ."

41: 1, "Assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word."

42: 17, "Thou shalt receive revelation upon revelation, knowledge upon knowledge," . . . "in mine own due time."

43: 3, "Ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know. . . ."

45: 2, "I will show unto you my strong reasoning."

45: 4, "A light shall break forth" as a fig tree develops (45: 5).

50: 4, "Let us reason together, that ye may understand."

50: 6, "That light groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day."

50: 8, "Ye must grow . . . in the knowledge of the truth."

58: 2, "Ye cannot behold with your natural eyes, for the present time, the design of your God. . . ."

85: 12, "Unto what shall I liken these [things], that ye may understand?"

85: 21, "Teach one another . . ." things that are "expedient for you to understand."

85: 36, "seek learning even by study, and also by faith."

87: 5, "receive revelations to unfold the mysteries of the kingdom."

90: 12, "Obtain a knowledge of . . . laws of God and man."

94: 3, "that they may be perfected in the understanding of their ministry."

98: 8, "I will show unto you wisdom . . . inasmuch as they are willing to be guided in the right and proper way."

There is more testimony, all of which agrees with the testimony of the Bible—"I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come he will guide you into the truth" and much else. And it agrees with "the horse's mouth," or the facts of human life.

Theory and Fact

The theory of an unfolding Restoration idea is validated by the fact that the concept of Zion—which is to be established through a communal application of the principle of stewardship—has been and still is in process of maturation; the fact that ideas change now as they did then—as when, for example, something extraordinary was done (Acts 10) to enable the best men of the apostolic church to apprehend the meaning of that which they said, "God said": "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark 16: 15).

In 1890 (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 2) we said, "A branch may be presided over by a high priest, [or] an elder, [or] a priest, [or] a teacher, [or] a deacon." And we said that was a "God said." But did we understand what we said?

The fact says we did not, for we elected a presiding elder and a presiding priest and a presiding teacher and a presiding deacon.

We do not do that now because we have a better understanding of what we said then. The facts of our church life validate what the prophet said about comprehending Restoration.

The Meaning

The meaning of all this, you may say the implication, is:

(a) The voice of Restoration did not say in the beginning all there is to say; the whole truth is not revealed in one inspirational experience, in one passage in Doctrine and Covenants.

(b) That which was revealed from time to time was that which was "deemed sufficient for the time . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8), not sufficient for all time.

(c) What is to be said in the future is as valid as what was said in the past.

(d) Future "God said" may supersede "God said" of the past, for the reason that (as respects practicality, but not the moral order of the universe) "The conditions surrounding the work" (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1) may change, the degree and manner of growth of the church, the changing circumstances of its people, may make some provisions for the past impracticable in the present.

(e) The old is to be interpreted in the light of the new—Section 42, for example, in the light of Section 101, and Section 128 and other "revelations" which were made after Section 42 was given. We assume here, of course, that what each following passage says is what "God said."

(f) Particular Zion concepts are to be understood in the light of the concept of Zion as a whole—the over-all concept; the general view. For it is the whole that gives the parts their meanings.

And some of what the voice of Restoration said means that we, personally, may set the stage for our inspirational experiences.

Zionist Frustration

I believe it is our mistaken ideas respecting revelation, inspiration, and comprehension that have prevented us from attaining the Zionist objects of Restoration. I have seen Section 42: 9 of Doctrine and Covenants represented as meaning simply ". . . every man shall be made accountable unto me a steward"—no elipse after "steward," for comprehension did not go further.

I have heard people say this and that about "deeds" and "inheritances" and other matters that I am sure they would not have said if they had comprehended the voice of divine inspiration, if they had understood what they said "God said." I am sure that what has been and still is said about the truth that is not true is part of the cause (you may say, one of the causes) of Zionist frustration. And that is the reason for this article.

Afterthought

There is involved here the whole question of "ideas and thinking" about which philosophers—prophetic and not prophetic—have said so much.

There is involved the question of whether "the voice of Divine inspiration" is to be demonstrated by reason. There is involved the question of the constitution of the mind of man, his psychical constitution, the question of how he gets his ideas and such like—questions about which "the last word" has not been said.

The prophet said to the church in 1834, "Wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion . . . that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more perfectly . . . the things which I require at their hands . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 3).

This is 1952. Have we waited that "little season"? Have we had experience? Do we "know" that which "God said"? If not, isn't our task cut out for us? Do we not have some real thinking, some problem solving, some reasoning about Restoration to do?

Show Me the Way

Part I

IN EVERY AGE there are miracles. Some of them come about so quietly and naturally that they pass before our eyes unnoticed. But the greatest of these are the human lives transformed by a chain of circumstances that seem ordinary to any but those, who, within themselves, have felt the moving power of God's Holy Spirit. Such a one was Al. He never knew exactly when it began to happen. Maybe it was when he came home from the war full of turbulence and a rebellious kind of toughness.

His dad noticed it right away and cautioned his mother about trying to push Al into anything. "Just leave him alone," he said, "he'll work it all out himself." But the lines of anxiety in his face told her more than the words.

She tried hard, but it wasn't easy. This new Al was so different from the Al who had gone away—the one with the little boy frankness and youthful, undaunted eagerness. What had happened to him? Where? How? He smoked too much—all the time in fact. Every time she wanted to protest, Dad shook his head warningly. Al caught some of those warning glances and chose to ignore them. One day he was amused. "What's the matter, Mom, can't you stand to see me smoke?"

His mother smiled weakly, "It's just that it isn't good for you, Al. You're so nervous and restless."

Al grinned and put his arm around her shoulders. "Look, Mom, I'm a big boy now. You can stop worrying about me. I'm O.K."

He looked over at his dad and winked. His dad returned his smile and spoke to his mother comfortingly. "Don't worry, Helen, he'll give it up himself one of these days." And then musingly, "You know smoking is something like a baby sucking his thumb. Something to lean on, something to outgrow."

Al never forgot that. He knew his dad wasn't taking any punches at him. He was too honest, too straightforward.

By Ruby Tinkham

It had just slipped out. Every time he held that shiny lighter up in front of his face he saw Al Crawford, a little boy, sticking his thumb in his mouth for comfort. It spoiled the cigarette, but he was too stubborn to admit it.

AL NEVER QUARRELED with his parents. His mother and dad loved and respected one another, and they knew the meaning of companionship. There were no arguments, because his parents had discovered long ago how to deal with their problems on the basis of personal understanding. Al knew that all homes were not like his, and it had shocked him and aroused his pity when he realized there were other boys who had missed what he had always taken for granted.

He had tried to explain this to his parents, but they just smiled at each other and gave God all the credit. There it was—that was it—they gave God the credit for everything! If Dad sold more insurance than any other salesman, it wasn't because he worked harder or studied his prospects, it was because God blessed him. If Mother did anything, no matter how small, and it turned out well, God had helped! How could they be so naïve? When he tried to reason with them, they just looked at him with pity. It was almost impossible to believe that two intelligent people could swallow such tripe. It was all right two thousand years ago when people needed something like miracles to cling to, before science had hatched her eggs, but this was 1950—the age of realism. He only hoped they'd never have to see the slaughter and carnage this God of theirs had permitted on the other side of the world.

And yet his parents had a sense of values that Al had to respect, if they just wouldn't put so much emphasis on unimportant things. His dad could really go places if he didn't take his eldership so seriously and waste so much time on people who really didn't matter. His mother could become a real leader if she would just push herself a little and quit worrying about offending somebody. Church, church, church, give God the credit for this, give him the credit for that, pray and live self-disciplined lives that would make a monk stand back in bewildered awe—why?

NOT THAT AL WAS FORCED to pattern his life after theirs. They believed in example, not coercion. He had followed them willingly as a child. It had seemed right, and he could look back now and see that he had enjoyed it. His grandfather had baptized him when he was eight. Grandfather was one of the old-type evangelists. When he preached he could be heard a mile down the road in any direction from the church. He could also talk just as well in a pool-room or a stable or whatever happened to be handy. Al had to smile at Grandpa's little mannerisms and habits now. How he loved that great old man. Grandpa would always lay his big gold pocket watch out on the pulpit and then promptly forget all about time. He just preached until the kids fell asleep, then said he had to talk until they woke up so their parents could take them home.

Somehow Al felt that Grandpa would understand him better now than anybody, but Grandpa wasn't here any more to talk to. Grandpa had given Al his patriarchal blessing and he had promised Al some wonderful things, but Al had always thought that Grandpa was just a little prejudiced where he—an only grandchild and namesake—was concerned. Al had to grin at that name business. Can you imagine calling a boy Alma? Grandpa said it was a wonderful name, something to live up to, but for Al it had meant trouble right from the start. Alma was an effeminate name if he'd ever heard one! Well, he had won that battle. Black eyes, bloody noses, and torn clothes had fixed that. It was Al now, and it was going to stay Al.

AL DIDN'T HATE CHURCH—he was just indifferent. If it pleased his dad he'd go along with him. In fact he did most of the driving now since his dad had a tendency toward night blindness. He couldn't hate God when his own dad thought so much of him, but still Al had no faith in a Supreme Being. He never felt any obligation to fast and pray as his father did over even the slightest difficulty. That was plain foolish—why not do something about it yourself? Why all this reliance on God when everyone knew it was making friends and influencing people in this world that got you through life with a bank account.

His dad would get up out of bed on a cold winter night and drive clear across town just to pray for people who were sick. If they got better, they said God did it anyway; so why did they bother his dad? There was a peculiar radiance about his parents that he had never been able to understand. Trouble and adversity seemed to bring out something special in them, something he could feel—but what was it really? Al's dad would say it was the Spirit of God. Like that Sunday night coming home from an all-day meeting when a newly appointed missionary had talked about the Spirit of God. Al knew his dad was impressed, and he felt a little ashamed. "Dad wishes I were like that," he thought, "eager and full of zeal, working for God. Why can't I be like him? Why do I always have to feel as if I were standing offside watching and waiting, weighing everything, searching for errors? Why can't I just swallow this thing whole and be happy about it like other people?"

RESENTMENT tinged his voice as he turned to his dad, "Look, Dad, I'm like one of those people Paul found, and when he asked them if they had ever received the Holy Ghost, they replied, 'We never as much as even heard that there is a Holy Ghost.'"

His father smiled patiently, "How can you be so sure, Al?"

Al was surprised. He twisted slightly in his seat so he could see his father's face. "Well, you know how it is, the gifts of the Spirit and all that—isn't it evident if you have the Spirit of God?"

His father grinned. "Not always; many people are concealing it most effectively." Then seriously, "Al, tell me something, do you believe in the forces of good and evil?"

"Of course, but what has that to do with the Spirit of God?"

"Just this, in what way do you believe the force of good to be motivated in and through human beings? God created good. It's the most valuable commodity he has. You might say he keeps tab on his investment by constant supervision."

Al broke in hastily, "But look, Dad, in that case you're saying the greater amount of good found in a person, the greater amount of the Spirit of God. In other words you're making an equation out of it—good equals spirit: spirit equals good."

His father smiled. "Is that so difficult to believe, Al? You might even substitute love for that word good. Can you imagine God cheating any of his children out of his companionship if they should show even the slightest inclination to seek it? We seek that companionship by actively doing good."

"But look, Dad, I've always thought of the Spirit of God as something magnificent and wonderful—something like exceeding bright lights and cloven tongues of fire," here he raised his voice dramatically, "miraculous healings, prophecy, and that sort of things. You're including everybody." There was a note of exasperation in his voice as he added, "You're saying that I possess the Spirit of God just the same as that guy down there today who poured out his heart and soul."

"No, Al, I'm not saying it that way. How much you may possess the Spirit of God depends on you. Could you have taken his place today? Would the audience have noticed any difference? Would your eagerness and enthusiasm for God's purposes allow you to 'pour out your heart and soul' for him?"

AL JERKED THE WHEEL of the car and persisted stubbornly, "Then you're not saying I don't possess the Spirit of God, but you are saying that I don't possess the same amount, is that it?"

His father sighed patiently, "Al, I'm not saying it, you are."

Al bit his lip and mumbled under his breath, "I'll bet Grandpa would see it differently."

His dad gazed straight ahead, his jaw set with tension. He opened his mouth and then clamped it shut. He shook his head and then turned determinedly, his voice charged with suppressed emotion, "Yes, your grandfather would have looked at it differently. He'd probably pace the floor and wave his arms and shout until he was red in the face. He'd call you a little punk and give you hell. I can hear him now, 'Why aren't you in there fighting where you belong. We need all the red-blooded men we can get. You think you just won a war. You licked Germany and Japan, didn't you? Well, nobody's ever licked the Devil yet. You ought to be ashamed dabbling around in this and that—business you call it. Always it's business nowadays. There is no business but the Lord's! Competition you want, well, you'll get it. In my day any man with a Bible could pick up a crowd from any little one-horse town because there wasn't any place else to go to but church. You try it now, see how hard it is, and make it stick! You're always yelling about discipline and how the Army makes a man out of you. Try actually keeping the Ten Commandments for a change, and when you've mastered them, take a shot at the Sermon on the Mount. You're soft, that's what. You don't really want to fight. You're lazy too, never heard of that word discipline with self in front of it, did you?' Then he'd turn and shake his finger under my nose and start in again. 'You did this, John, you and Helen, you gave that boy everything but backbone. When I had him he knew what the score was. I'd have made him the best rip-snortin' missionary in forty-eight states,' then he'd stop and catch his breath and yell, 'Canada, too, and Australia.'"

AL GRINNED in spite of himself. It sounded just like Grandpa, and suddenly he felt soft and mellow, lost in childhood memories of when Grandpa came to the house on one of his unexpected visits. He turned to his Dad and said softly, "You know, Dad, I really didn't mean anything. I know how much all this means to you and Mom. I wouldn't take sides against you for anything."

His dad caught the look and cleared his throat. "No, Al, I know you wouldn't, but sometimes I almost wish you would. Then I could prove some things to you, maybe make you see. But this lukewarm indifference," he sighed, "almost anything would be better than that. As Grandpa would say, 'Get off the fence, get out of the middle of the road, either be hot or cold, take a side even if it's wrong, but fight for it!'"

Al smiled, "But, Dad, I believe in God, you know that."

His dad shook his head. "Sure you believe in him, so do the devils. That's no feat of logic. It's easy to say that, just like looking at a cloudy sky and saying, 'I believe it will rain today.' You don't have any real faith in God; you just have an opinion about him."

Al fought the anger that rose unbidden in his throat. "O.K., so I don't have any faith in God. It's true! I don't! What do you want me to do about it, prove to you that I'm right?"

"No, Al, I want you to prove it to yourself that you're right. I want you to dig up every bit of reason and logic you can to support yourself. Just don't believe in a thing of this importance without the best proof possible. Make yourself safe. Get well acquainted with all the atheists and agnostics you can find. See how you like their company."

"O.K., I will. It'll probably take a little time, but I'll be the happiest agnostic you ever saw."

"No, Al, you won't be happy. You may be clever like the editorials that rip and slash at the slow progress of decent people, or you may gain a following like the soapbox orator who shouts down honest questions with more eloquent phrasings of the same old baloney, but you won't be happy. You will find all the happy people on my side. The joyful singing, the testimonies of praise, the rare fellowship—these are the signs that follow those who believe. There are no eager, enthusiastic, happy atheists."

Faith for Today

By Maude D. Anderson

WHEN THE WOMAN touched the hem of Jesus' garment and was healed of an affliction, the Master said, "Thy faith hath made thee whole."

Today the world is ill. This fact is made manifest not only in the political life of the nations but is reflected in the life of the most humble citizen. Psychology has become a substitute in the home for religion, while vast sums are expended on hospitals for the mentally ill. Even the music, art, and literature of the day reflect the astigmatic thinking of the multitudes.

The illness of the world has not come about suddenly. As we look back across the years we can understand how this nation, which was founded by a God-fearing people and should be as a light to the world, has gradually drifted until we now find civilization almost at the breaking point. In many ways the popular churches have made their contribution to this drift away from God. They have tried to cling to the outmoded thinking of the Victorian era, which regarded Christianity as a sort of phantasy rather than as something tangible. Their chief concern was with abstract theology and its interpretation rather than in teaching people how to live as Christians. During that smug era church men developed the idea that it was not how much they could do for the people of the world that determined the measure of their success, but rather how much they could do people for. Beautiful clothes, rather than beautiful characters, were the qualifications of a good church member. The top crust of society was made up of those who robbed the poor and then pacified them by returning a small portion of their offerings in the form of impressive church edifices or art galleries.

IF THERE WAS EVER a time when the people of the world needed to exercise the faith exhibited by the woman who touched the hem of Jesus' garment, it is today. Many have been brought to the realization that these are the days of the antichrist. His hold has come about gradually, but, true to the nature of the serpent, has gained a strangle hold on the world. Just as the boa constrictor crushes its victims before they are aware of what is happening, so it has been with the forces wriggling their way into the life of our nation.

In recent months there has been a great impetus toward a spiritual awakening of the Christian world. We are being aroused from our lethargy and realize that we are faced by a crisis; we must either seek that peace which comes from God and become a Christian nation in the real sense or quit claiming to be such while serving the opposite forces.

We sometimes wonder what would be the effect if those people everywhere who profess to be followers of Christ were suddenly to begin to use that latent power within their reach, as did that woman in Jesus' day, to cleanse and purify their lives and their nation. Surely there would be such a magnitude of power made manifest that the whole world would tremble. We would no longer have to worry about the atom bomb, but our very souls would shout with joy at the glad tidings of peace. The armies would be forgotten, and the implements of war could be turned to peaceful pursuits.

IF THERE WAS EVER a time when the people of the world needed to seek the guidance of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, it is today. "Give me" prayers are not enough. We should pray for wisdom and for the courage and strength to carry out what wisdom dictates. We should pray that we might have love in our hearts—a love strong enough to subdue individual personalities and shortcomings.

We know that the foundation stone of the Christian religion is love. Love is as intangible as the human soul, yet more forceful than the atom bomb. It cannot be seen, nor can it be measured. Without it, the world is as an armed camp; with it the world could become a paradise.

In this year of great problems, we need to pray that we may be inspired by love rather than hate, and that in these coming days as we choose our leaders we should pray that a sufficient number of people might be inspired and influenced by divine will to choose those leaders most capable of guiding our country into the avenues leading to God's kingdom, even though we in our human weakness may not be able to discern who they are.

THE VERY PURPOSE of a parable is to teach a lesson in terms that can be easily understood. When Jesus told the parable of a net cast into the sea, those who listened were quite familiar with the setting of the story. Many of Jesus' followers were fishermen by trade. Such things as nets, fish, boats, and the sea were in their everyday experience.

The Sea of Galilee was the fishing ground of Palestine with at least twenty edible kinds of fish in its waters. The dragnet used by the fishermen had floats on the top and weights on the bottom. The net not only brought in fish of every sort, but whatever creatures of the sea, rocks, driftwood, and seaweed that happened to be enclosed within its mesh. When the net was pulled in to shore the fisherman sorted out the good fish and discarded everything else not worthy to be kept.

When the kingdom net is cast into the sea of human life it not only surrounds men and women but their ideals and conceptions. Being in the net does not guarantee the fine quality of the catch. Character alone determines that! Such things as brotherly love, unselfishness, devotion to God, and high Christian ideals are qualities that make kingdom-building material. Indifferent Christians who harbor what is mean and base will not escape its haul any more than the sincere and earnest believers.

Whether a fish is good or bad, the fisherman must work with it at least long enough to determine its value. Kingdom builders likewise must work with people of all kinds. We who have been engulfed in the kingdom net are not the ones to determine who is to be rejected or kept. Only the Master Fisherman can make these decisions. However, those of us within the net have many obligations which are important and far-reaching in their significance. As kingdom builders we must strive earnestly to develop our talents and potentialities.

It is also our duty to help increase the value of our associates within the kingdom net. There is much good imbedded in every person. By proper culture and direction many seemingly worthless souls can become valuable.

The task of every Christian is apparent. The need for increasing the value of the catch is so urgent that we cannot afford to relax our efforts toward building the kingdom. May God bless us as we work for the Zion he would have us build.

Women Raise Money for Building Fund

BAYOU LA BATRE, ALABAMA.—The Saints served barbecue and gumbo plates for the noon and evening meals July 4 in an effort to raise money to cover the branch budget. This annual affair has become a custom in the town, and a profit of $720 was raised.

High Priest Franklin Steiner, Elder Jack Pray, and Priest A. V. Peavy were guest speakers in July and August.

A silver tea was held on the church grounds on August 31 as a farewell party for Deacon Willard Pendarvis who is attending Graceland. Punch and cookies were served and the silver gifts amounted to approximately $35.

The women's club held their annual business session August 19 at the home of the women's leader, Winona Gazzier. Officers were sustained and a yearbook committee appointed to make a tentative cover to be on display at the next meeting. A committee was appointed to select a women's leader to be submitted for approval to the branch business session held September 10.

A Stanley Home Products demonstration was given by Irma Tillman at her home on August 14. The commission received from this party was $52.17. This money will be applied to the district sanitation fund for the improvement of facilities at the Gulf States reunion grounds at Brewton, Alabama. The branch quota was $65.—Reported by Mrs. HARVEY A. NELSON

District Reunion Held

NAUVOO DISTRICT.—The Nauvoo Reunion was held August 2-10. Those assigned to serve as speakers on Sundays and at evening services were Apostle D. O. Chesworth, Seventy Cecil R. Ettinger, Elder D. L. Kyser, and D. J. Williams. Two general classes were conducted; one at 11:00 a.m. by Brother Chesworth on "The Power of Stewardship," and an evening class at 7:00 p.m. by Brother Ettinger on "Missionary Endeavor." Brother Kyser taught the men's class in "Spiritual Growth Through Stewardship," and Sister Kyser taught the women in "Women's Stewardship Responsibilities." The young people were under the direction of Brother and Sister Fred Banta. The children and junior groups were supervised by Sister Verda E. Bryant, assisted by Thelma Francis. Edward McKiernan and Harold Smith served in the recreation and pastoral work of the children. Elder Melvin Francis and wife cared for the children in the Nauvoo House during the evening services at the Pavilion.

The music of the reunion was under the direction of the district chorister, Sister Dorothy Bromann Burgin. "The Everlasting Light," by Jenkins and Gillette, was presented on the last Sunday afternoon of the reunion, followed by an address by Evangelist E. Y. Hunker.—Reported by D. J. WILLIAMS
